House of Commons Debates

FOURTH SESSION—TENTH PARLIAMENT

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, April 6, 1908.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

MEAT AND CANNED FOODS ACT AMENDMENT.

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 149) to amend the Meat and Canned Foods Act. He said : This is a Bill to make some small amendments in the Meat and Canned Foods Act of last session. The amendments are slight and are intended to make the Act more workable. I do not think it worth while to go into details now.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

INSPECTION AND SALE ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. FISHER moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 148) to amend the Inspection and Sale Act. He said : This is to make some slight amendments in the Fruit Marks Act and also with regard to the Dairy Acts, which under the revised statutes are now incorporated under the Inspection and Sale Act. I think it better to leave the details until the House has the printed Bill.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

CANNED GOODS ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. FISHER moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 147) to repeal the Canned Goods Act. He said : This is an old Act which has become obsolete and which is never acted upon. The Meat and Canned Foods Act provides for everything that is covered in this Canned Goods Act but there are a few details in which the two appear to conflict. Therefore, after consultation with the Justice Department, it was decided that the best course was to repeal the old Act.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 150) to amend the Yukon Placer Mining Act.—Mr. Oliver.

MANITOBA BOUNDARY EXTENSION.

On the orders of the day being called.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Before the orders of the day are called, I would ask the government when we may expect the Bill to provide for the extension of the boundaries of the province of Manitoba ?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). The matter is engaging the attention of the government, but in the absence of the Prime Minister I would not like to make a definite statement.

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS AND REPORTS.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. When may we expect the returns respecting drill sheds asked for on December 11 ?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Publis Works). I shall make inquiry and let my hon. friend know, probably to-morrow. I may say that all returns moved for are in course of preparation and are being prepared as rapidly as possible.

Mr. BERGERON. I would ask if the report of the Civil Service Commission is being translated into French and being printed concurrently with the English edition ?

Mr. FIELDING. The clerk of the House informs me that the translation does not take place until after the printing is done. I take it for granted the usual course will be pursued, as with all other public documents.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the number it is proposed to print? I noticed in a paper an intimation that 2,000 had been ordered by the Printing Committee; that would scarcely give half a dozen each. Every man's life will be made miserable if he does not get more than that. I would suggest that the Printing Committee see that a good supply is printed.

Mr. FIELDING. I have no doubt the attention of the Printing Committee will be drawn to my hon. friend's question. It is not a matter in which the government presume to give any directions. Attention was drawn to the same point on Friday, and I presume it is engaging the attention of the Printing Committee.

Mr. HAGGART. I would ask the Minister of Finance, who is leading the government, when we may expect the printed report on the Quebec bridge? It is about time.

Mr. FIELDING. Does my hon. friend mean the printing of the report?

Mr. HAGGART. The printed report, I believe, is not down.

Mr. FIELDING. The clerk of the House informs me that the usual orders were given, and he will make inquiry.

Mr. GRAHAM. As a matter of fact, a portion of that report was laid on the table I think Thursday or Friday. The appendices are very numerous, they are now at the sixteenth.

Mr. HAGGART. That is only the photographs; I mean the printed report.

Mr. GRAHAM. Not the photographs at all. Appendix 16 is a long typewritten document.

Mr. FOSTER. Is the minister going to have the photographs reproduced for us?

Mr. GRAHAM. My hon. friend means the drawings.

Mr. HAGGART. I mean the photographs.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I would ask the Minister of Public Works when I may expect a return with regard to the Bayfield, Grand Père and St. Joseph piers. Also I asked for a return from the Minister of Agriculture in connection with the cattle embargo; and one on February 10 and one on March 9, respecting the inspectors of packing houses.

Mr. FISHER. The last-mentioned return has been on the table of the House for several days; three others were laid on the table to-day.

Mr. PUGSLEY. With regard to returns belonging to my department, while some of them may be short, he must bear in mind that many of the returns asked for are very lengthy, and I have not felt justified in allowing the clerks in the department for extra time in making them up. Therefore they are doing the work in the ordinary office hours. We have no provision for extra clerks. My hon. friend must be patient with me.

PRIVATE BILLS.

FORT WILLIAM TERMINAL RAILWAY AND BRIDGE COMPANY.

House in committee on Bill (No. 101) respecting the Fort William Terminal Railway and Bridge Company.—Mr. Macpherson.

Mr. BERGERON. What are the amendments to the previous Bill?

Mr. FIELDING.

Mr. MACPHERSON. The amendments are found in sections 2, 3 and 4. The first amendment is to bring this railway company under the jurisdiction of the Railway Commission; the original Bill did not do that. The next amendment gives the city of Fort William power to acquire or to abolish the tolls. The fourth amendment is a question of the expenditure of money.

Mr. HAGGART. Will the hon. gentleman explain the reason of bringing it under the jurisdiction of the Dominion government, a small road like this?

Mr. MACPHERSON. The original Act left it practically in the hands of the Railway Department, and the committee thought it wise to place it under the jurisdiction of the Railway Commission. There was an arbitration as to where they should place the line, and some people who were fighting the Bill thought it better to place in the hands of the Railway Commission the power to say where the line should be located.

Mr. FOSTER. Between what points does the line run?

Mr. MACPHERSON. It is an electric railway operating between some islands in the Kaministiquia river and Fort William. I may say this Bill was up for some weeks before the Railway Committee, and the promoters of the Bill and the city of Fort Willian had a long fight over it. Eventually they came together and drew up the Bill in this form. It is a railway and bridge Bill. This company has power to erect bridges over the Kaministiquia river and operate on some of the islands. I fancy it is some gentlemen interested in real estate on those islands who are really promoting the Bill.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend (Mr. Haggart) asked what was the reason this Bill should be brought into the Dominion parliament at all. It is a very short line, which I understand is to operate between the two towns of Fort William and Port Arthur.

Mr. MACPHERSON. No. I understand it does not run to Port Arthur. It crosses a navigable stream, and it is desired on that account to bring it under the jurisdiction of the Dominion parliament and the Railway Commission.

Mr. FOSTER. That would only make it necessary to get permission from the Dominion parliament to build a bridge across the navigable stream.

Mr. MACPHERSON. This is the renewal of a charter. I do not know what the original idea was in asking for Dominion legislation.

Mr. FOSTER. Does my hon. friend know why it was called a terminal railway? It does not seem to have much chance either to begin or to end. It is only six or seven miles long.

Mr. MACPHERSON. I was not at the christening, and I could not tell the hon. gentleman why.

Mr. GALLIHER. It connects the Canadian Northern and the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. J. D. REID. Is this entirely in the province of Ontario?

Mr. GALLIHER. Yes. The Fort William terminal is on an island in the Kaministiquia river, right in front of the town of Fort William.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

QUEBEC AND NEW BRUNSWICK RAILWAY COMPANY.

House in committee on Bill (No. 128) respecting the Quebec and New Brunswick Railway Company.—Mr. Michaud.

Mr. J. D. REID. Has anything been done on this railway ? I see that the charter was granted originally in 1900 and that it has been renewed several times.

Mr. MICHAUD. There have been about three miles of work done on this road and the reason why the work was not continued since two or three years ago was that it was expected that the Transcontinental Railway would take over part of this line. When the line was surveyed it was found that the Transcontinental Railway would only take a short distance of it. After the line of the Transcontinental Railway was surveyed we had to make an application to parliament to have the time extended. It is the intention of the company to start the work as soon as possible.

Mr. J. D. REID. The company should have started the work in 1900 when they got the charter.

Mr. BERGERON. What will be the length of the road altogether ?

Mr. MICHAUD. 130 miles.

Mr. BERGERON. And there are three miles built ?

Mr. MICHAUD. There are three miles built. The claims for the right of way have been settled with the farmers and we are ready to go on with the work.

Mr. BERGERON. Has there been a subsidy from the government given or promised ?

Mr. MICHAUD. There were some subsidies, but I do not know whether there will be any in future or not.

Mr. J. D. REID. The company have done nothing up to the present time except grade three miles of road. Is not that practically all that has been done ?

Mr. MICHAUD. It is the intention of the company to go on with the work as soon as possible.

Mr. LENNOX. When were the three miles graded ?

Mr. MICHAUD. Between three and four years ago.

Mr. LENNOX. Before or since the last renewal ?

Mr. MICHAUD. It was since the last renewal.

Mr. BERGERON. Is that one of the lines that the Minister of Railways and Canals intends to take over as part of the Intercolonial Railway later on ?

Mr. MICHAUD. I am not aware of anything of that kind.

Mr. BERGERON. There is a scheme, I understand, in the province of New Brunswick by which the Intercolonial Railway takes over all these branch lines. Is that understood ?

Mr. MICHAUD. Not that I know of.

Mr. J. D. REID. Where does this road run to ?

Mr. MICHAUD. It runs from Connor's to Chaudière Junction.

Mr. J. D. REID. Is it going to parallel the Grand Trunk Pacific ?

Mr. MICHAUD. Only for a short distance.

Mr. J. D. REID. In what part will that be ?

Mr. MICHAUD. It will run parallel for probably three or four miles and then it branches off and runs in a different direction.

Mr. EMMERSON. It serves an entirely different country.

On section 5—agreements with other companies.

Mr. MICHAUD. I move that after the words 'railway company' the following words be added : 'or the Atlantic, Quebec and Western Railway or the International Railway Company of New Brunswick.'

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What will then be the effect of section 5 ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have had occasion to look into the matter. This is a section which provides that the company may enter into a contract or agreement of amalgamation with certain companies and this only adds two companies to those with whom, with the consent of the Governor in Council, they may enter into an amalgamation agreement.

Mr. LENNOX. We have given them power to amalgamate with the Grand Trunk Pacific and now the hon. gentleman proposes that they shall have power to amalgamate with two more.

Mr. CROCKET. I would like to ask the promoter of this Bill what the object of the amalgamation of this railway with the International would be?

Mr. PUGSLEY. If my hon. friend who is promoting the Bill, will allow me, I may say that I understand that certain negotiations have been going on between the Atlantic, Quebec and Western and the International. The Atlantic, Quebec and Western are in some way interested in this charter, as I understand, and, having power to amalgamate with the Atlantic, Quebec and Western, may also think it advisable to have power to amalgamate with the International so as to get their line up to Quebec.

Mr. CROCKET. Have the Quebec and New Brunswick any power in this Bill to extend their line into the state of Maine?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Only to the boundary.

Mr. CROCKET. To make connection there with a railway in the state of Maine?

Mr. PUGSLEY. That apparently has been struck out in the Railway Committee.

Mr. CROCKET. I hope the effect of this Bill will not be to divert the traffic from the northern part of New Brunswick to the state of Maine.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It could not do that.

Mr. HAGGART. What is the use of these powers unless other railways are authorized to amalgamate too? The Bill does not give you power to amalgamate with them.

Mr. MICHAUD. We will be prepared to amalgamate when they are ready.

Section as amended agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

PACIFIC COAST FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY.

House in committee on Bill (No. 40) respecting the Pacific Coast Fire Insurance Company.—Mr. Macpherson.

On section 1,

Mr. J. D. REID. Speaking generally in regard to these private Bills, I notice that a good many of them are passed on Friday nights when many of the members are not present. I notice also that some of these companies are taking the names of long established companies in the old country. For instance, on Friday night a Bill was passed giving the title to a company of the London and Lancashire Guarantee and Accident Company of Canada. Now, the London and Lancashire Company has been established in Canada for perhaps 80 years and this company takes the same title with the exception that the words 'of Canada' are added. The government have already licensed the London and Lancashire Company to do business in Canada and this similarity of title is liable to lead to confusion and perhaps to deceive people. Of course if the Canadian company is as strong as the other it would be all right, but this might easily not be the case. I wish to draw the attention of the Finance Minister to the matter.

Mr. FIELDING. This question of the similarity of names of companies frequently engages the attention of the department and of the Committee on Banking and Commerce, and while discouraging the use of names of existing British or foreign companies doing business here, it has not been thought well that we should refuse such a name in every case as it would amount practically to a monopoly. We had that question under discussion recently with regard to an American company, and it was pointed out that a Canadian company going to the United States would not be allowed a monopoly of its own name there, but an American Company taking a Canadian name might readily be established in the United States. As a general rule, it is well to avoid a duplication of names. In the case States. As a general rule, it is well to glad to know that the London and Lancashire people are the promoters of the legislation and that it is practically that company which is doing business under a Canadian charter.

Mr. J. D. REID. I am glad to hear that; nevertheless I think it well to call the attention of the minister to the matter.

Mr. FIELDING. We are continually watching that.

Mr. HAGGART. Are the powers given under this Bill supplementary to some other powers which the company possesses under a provincial charter, or is this an entirely new charter?

Mr. FIELDING. It is a provincial company which is now being converted into a Dominion company.

Mr. HAGGART. Yes, but are the powers given in this Bill supplemental to those which they have under their provincial charter?

Mr. FIELDING. The purpose of this Bill is to create a company which will take over the provincial company and then have power to extend its business throughout the Dominion.

Mr. HAGGART. Yes, but we may be confirming powers which this company has in its provincial charter and which we would not give them in a Dominion charter.

Mr. MACPHERSON. At present this company cannot operate outside of British Columbia under its charter. It wishes to extend its business in other parts of Canada and it seeks for a Dominion charter. This Bill contains the model charter and they are getting no extraordinary powers from the Dominion parliament in any shape or form.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. This Bill appears to create an entirely new corporation with certain new powers. I do not observe in the Bill any provision that the new company shall have all the powers now possessed by the old company, but it seems to be the scheme of the Bill that the new company shall have only such powers as are conferred by this Act. All the assets of the old company are turned over to the new company which will assume all the liabilities of the old company.

Mr. HAGGART. If it is an entirely new charter that meets the point I have raised.

On section 5—liability of new company,

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The proviso is rather peculiar. I do not know exactly how the abandonment there referred to can be created.

Mr. FIELDING. The Superintendent of Insurance advises me that this follows the language of other charters of a similar character. I suppose it means that a man is not to be liable to both companies.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I understand the object of it perfectly. The object is this : if you propose to come upon shareholders for an amount still due upon their shares in respect of any liability of the company—in other words, if you attempt to enforce a liability of the company by proceeding against the shareholders, you shall not proceed against the shareholders of the new company, unless you abandon any claim against them as shareholders of the old company. But just take a concrete case : some person may have a claim against the new company and is unable to collect that claim; he desires to proceed against the shareholders in respect of their unpaid liability upon their shares ; the very first thing that would confront a counsel would be the necessity of abandoning in some way his client's right against the shareholders of the old company, and it seems to me it is rather difficult to know how to do that effectually.

Mr. FIELDING. This appears to follow the language of the old statutes, and I do not know that we can make it any clearer.

On section 12,

Mr. HAGGART. The provincial Act, under which this company seems to have had its charter, may provide certain limitations or restrictions. You are now taking the insured from one insurance company and putting them under another. Does that remove these restrictions?

Mr. FIELDING. It is intended that they shall become subject entirely to the provisions of the Dominion legislation.

Mr. HAGGART. But there may be contracts under the provincial Act. How are you to protect those who have contracts with the company under its provincial charter?

Mr. FIELDING. I should think that a policy under a Dominion charter would be as good as one under a provincial charter.

Mr. LENNOX. That is not the point. The point is does the company get rid of obligations that may arise under the provincial charter?

Mr. FIELDING. Sections 4 and 5 guard against that. The new company has to carry out all the contracts and liabilities of the old one.

Mr. LENNOX. Is it the policy of the government to give to insurance companies, under provincial charter, a Dominion charter when these companies wish to do business throughout the Dominion?

Mr. FIELDING. I do not think we could offer any objection. If a provincial company desires a Dominion charter, it would not be our policy to offer any objection. There has been no objection to such a course in the past.

Mr. MACPHERSON. How about section 5 to which the leader of the opposition referred?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would think it might be put in a much more satisfactory form perhaps:

Provided, however, that any person who recovers under section 150 of the Company's Act in respect of any shares in the new company shall be held to have abandoned, pro tanto, his right to recover in respect of the corresponding shares in the old company.

Mr. FIELDING. That is his own Act shall constitute an abandonment in respect of the old company without his having to make any formal abandonment.

Mr. MACPHERSON. He automatically abandons it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Yes.

Mr. FIELDING. I see no objection to that, and the section might be amended accordingly.

Section as amended agreed to.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would move to insert after the word 'company' on the fifteenth line, section 5, the words 'and its shareholders.'

Mr. FIELDING. I do not see any objection to that.

Mr. MACPHERSON. It should read, first against the new company and its shareholders and then against the old company and its shareholders.

Section as amended agreed to.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I would call the attention of the Minister of Finance to section 18, by which the bringing into force of this Act is made to depend on a vote of the shareholders. As the bringing into force of the Act might be a matter of importance I would suggest that when the vote of the shareholders has been taken, the Secretary of State should be informed and he should publish a proclamation which would bring the Bill into force and avoid the objection.

Mr. FIELDING. This was under consideration in the committee. Of course it is not desirable that the bringing into force of an Act should depend on the vote of certain shareholders and not on a proclamation. We were met, however, by the fact that this was the form used in several Acts and it seems to have worked satisfactorily; therefore it was allowed to stand. The same thought presented itself to me as has presented itself to the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley), but it was decided that, in view of the circumstances I have mentioned, it was not necessary to change it.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

DOMINION GUARANTEE COMPANY, LIMITED.

House in committee on Bill (No. 127) respecting the Dominion Guarantee Company, Limited.—Mr. Pringle.

Mr. LENNOX. Is the Minister of Finance satisfied about the agreement referred and confirmed in this Bill ?

Mr. FIELDING. It is an ordinary mortgage agreement and has been examined by the officials of the department.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MACPHERSON.

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (for Minister of Militia and Defence). The matter is under consideration.

NATIONAL TRANSCONTINENTAL RAILWAY—QUESTIONS IN DISPUTE.

Mr. BARKER—by Mr. Blain—asked :

1. Are there any matters in dispute or question between the Grand Trunk Railway Company and the government, or the National Transcontinental Railway Commission, respecting the route or the right of way or the works of construction, or cost thereof, upon the eastern division of the National Transcontinental Railway?

THE COASTING TRADE.

Mr. STANFIELD asked :

1. Under existing legislation can Norwegian ships which are British built change their flags and engage in coastwise trade in Canada?
2. After January 1, 1909, is there any existing legislation which will prevent Norwegian ships, which are British built, changing their flags and engaging in coastwise trade in Canadian waters?
3. Under existing legislation can foreign-built ships which are British-owned engage in coastwise trade in Canadian waters, by obtaining a license from the Minister of Customs without reference to the Governor in Council?
4. After January 1, 1909, is there any existing legislation which will prevent foreign-built ships British-owned from obtaining a license from the Minister of Customs without reference to the Governor in Council, permitting such ships engaging in coastwise trade in Canadian waters?

Hon. WM. PATERSON (Minister of Customs) :

1 and 2. Under existing legislation Norwegian ships which are British built may become British registered ships and may then engage in coastwise trade in Canada, both prior to and after 1st January, 1909.

3 and 4. Under the law respecting the coasting trade of Canada, foreign built ships which have been British registered since 1st September, 1902, are required to pay 25 per cent duty before obtaining a license to engage in the coasting trade. Such license may be issued by the Minister of Customs under authority of statute without order in council. There is no legislation changing these provisions as to payment of duty and issue of license after 1st January, 1909.

COUNCIL OF SIX NATIONS.

Mr. LAKE asked :

1. Has the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs refused an interview to a deputation of the chiefs of the council of the Six Nations? If so, on what grounds has this refusal been based?

2. Has the government refused to the Six Nations an inspection of or a copy of certain petitions or memorials from an association known as the Indian Rights Association or Warriors' Association?

3. What are the matters in negotiation or difference between the council of the Six Nations and the Department of Indian Affairs?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior) :

1. The Superintendent General has not refused to receive a deputation of the chiefs of the council of the Six Nations, but has signified his willingness to receive them at any time it might suit them to come to Ottawa.

2. The department did not refuse to send the Six Nations council a copy of the petition or memorial from the Indian Rights Association ; it refused to send a copy of the names of the subscribers, as these were very numerous and it was not understood that there would be any use in doing so.

(b) Investigations. They are not satisfied with the present system of holding investigations, especially as regards the cost of witnesses.

(c) Hereditary council. Some of the chiefs are in favour of simply improving present council, but others favour elective system.

(d) Independence of council. They think their liberties restricted by the department.

(e) Provincial grants. They derive no benefit from either the Dominion or provincial grants to the county of Brant.

4. As stated in answer to question No. 2, the department did not refuse to send a copy of a certain petition from the Indian Rights Association, but said that it did not see any use in sending a list of the subscribers. This list is 13 feet, 7 inches long, and contains some 380 names.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY—TRAIN SERVICE.

Mr. J. D. REID (Grenville)—by Mr. Foster—moved for:

Return showing the number of hours late arriving, and explanation of the District Superintendent in each case, of express trains Nos. 33 and 34 between Halifax and Montreal, and Nos. 19, 20, 85 and 86 between Halifax and Sydney, for the months of October, November and December, 1907, on the Intercolonial Railway.

Mr. GRAHAM. I agreed with the hon. member for Grenville to let some of those motions go through without discussion, and some I said I would ask to stand. In his absence I do not know which are to stand.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. member for Grenville thought perhaps I might persuade the Minister of Railways to let them all through.

Mr. GRAHAM. Let this motion stand.

Mr. FOSTER. We will have to drop it and serve notice that before the estimates go through we will ask for the information.

Mr. GRAHAM. It has been asked for in an indirect way in other places.

Motion dropped.

THE CIVIL SERVICE SYSTEM.

On the notice of motion:

That the Civil Service System of Canada should be based on merit and character alone, and the appointments thereto should be made only from candidates whose competency has been established through open competitive examinations, conducted under a non-partisan Civil Service Commission.

Mr. FOSTER. I propose to drop this, inasmuch as the report of the Civil Service Commission has not yet been printed; but I will bring it up in a different way.

Motion dropped.

On the notice of motion:

That in the interests of political morality and good government it is desirable that party patronage should be eliminated from the administration of all federal departments in Canada.

Mr. FOSTER. The same remark that I have made with reference to the other resolution applies to this.

Motion dropped.

GOVERNMENT RAILWAYS.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES (Kings, P.E.I.) moved:

That in the opinion of this House the names 'Intercolonial Railway' and 'Prince Edward Island Railway' should be dropped, and the name 'Interprovincial Railway' substituted therefor.

That the government system of railways should be considered as one entity in the keeping of accounts and in all other respects.

That the ferry service across the Straits of Northumberland should be owned and managed by the railway department, winter and summer, as the ferry service across the Straits of Canso is now, and as the ferry service across the Gulf of Georgia between Vancouver and Victoria is owned and managed by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the resolution practically explains itself to those who know the objects I have in view and are acquainted with the local conditions; but as you, Mr. Speaker, are not familiar with those conditions, I think a few explanations will be in order.

The first paragraph relates to the name of the government railway. While it is not very important by what name a thing shall be known so long as the name is fairly descriptive of the thing, and so long as there is no danger of confounding it with something else that is similar, yet I think everybody will admit that the name Intercolonial applied to a railway that extends across three provinces, and will, if it is built, of which there is some probability, to the great lakes, and perhaps finally reach the Pacific ocean, is certainly not a suitable name. We are no longer a group of colonies; we are a federation of provinces, and the name of our one government railway should not, I think, be a misnomer that belies our actual status. Whether Interprovincial would be a better name or not I do not know. Perhaps Canadian Government Railway would be the correct name. There is a real business reason why the present name should be changed. The fact that the initials are the same as those of the Illinois Central Railway has resulted in cars going astray and being used by other railways, and thus becoming lost to the government of Canada. In consequence of that I think the department is at present making some change in the lettering of the cars. This goes to show that there is a necessity for a change of name.

If the other two paragraphs of the resolution, which are of more importance from my point of view, should commend themselves to the House and the government, it would be more important still that the name should be changed. Since Prince Edward Island joined the confederation and became a part of the Dominion of Canada, it has been customary to consider the two railways, the Prince Edward Island Railway and the Intercolonial Railway, not only as two separate systems, but as antagonistic systems in some respects. I do not think that is a proper condition of affairs. In my judgment the Prince Edward Island Railway ought to be an integral portion, a branch, a feeder, of the Intercolonial Railway, and not be considered in any respect a foreign road. This works to the disadvantage of the Island railway. There has grown up in the public mind for some years the opinion that the Intercolonial Railway should at least pay operating expenses. This opinion has been given voice to in parliament, in the press, and throughout the country, and I have no doubt that it has impressed itself upon the management of that road. At the same time, there appears to be an idea that the Prince Edward Island Railway never did pay, never was expected to pay, and never will pay its operating expenses. The result of that is, so far as I can ascertain, that the management has diverted traffic that would naturally go to the Island railway, to the Intercolonial at the expense of the Island railway. I do not know whether that is the reason this discrimination takes place; but that there is real discrimination I think I can prove to the House. Freight originating on the Intercolonial Railway at Lévis and at Montreal to come over the Intercolonial Railway, and destined for Prince Edward Island, is hauled to Pictou for the same rate that it is hauled to Point du Chêne, although the distance to Pictou is 160 miles greater. There might be some reason for that from a railway point of view, because Pictou is a distributing point, and railway men make very little extra charge for a considerably greater distance so long as the freight is loaded on the cars, and other cars are going in the same direction. For all points on the Prince Edward Island Railway, if the freight crossed at Poine du Chêne and Summerside, the haulage would be very considerably less. But owing to the freight going by Pictou, the Intercolonial gets nearly all the hauling, the Prince Edward Island Railway very little. Consequently the earnings of the Island railway are smaller than they otherwise would be. I have the figures here, and I will submit just a few. The rates from Lévis and Montreal to Charlottetown via Pictou are exactly the same as they are to Summerside via Point du Chêne; but freight for Charlottetown going by way of Point du Chêne is charged considerably more. The rates from Montreal to Charlottetown via Point du Chêne are: First class, 64 cents per 100 lbs.; second class, 56 cents ; third class, 45 cents; fourth class, 34 cents; fifth class, 30 cents; sixth class, 28 cents. The same goods going by Pictou pay: First class, 56 cents; second class, 49 cents; third class, 39 cents; fourth class, 29 cents; fifth class, 26 cents; sixth class, 24 cents per 100 pounds. The difference would be on the first class 8 cents; second class, 7 cents; third class, 6 cents; fourth class, 5 cents; fifth class, 4 cents; sixth class, 4 cents, although the distance is 112 miles less.

From points west of Montreal, for instance, from Toronto, the discrimination would be still greater. From Toronto to Charlottetown via Point Deschênes and Summerside, the rates are on first class 86 cents ; second class 75 cents ; third class 64 cents ; fourth class 54 cents ; fifth class 44 cents ; sixth class 42 cents ; seventh class 33 cents ; eighth class 33 cents. And from Toronto to Charlottetown via Pictou, first class 74 cents ; second class 64 cents ; third class 55 cents ; fourth class 46 cents ; fifth class 38 cents ; sixth class 36 cents ; seventh class 28 cents ; and eighth class 28 cents. The difference against the Island road is therefore on first class goods 12 cents ; second class 11 cents ; third class 9 cents ; fourth class 8 cents ; fifth class 6 cents ; sixth class 6 cents ; seventh class 5 cents ; and eighth class 5 cents.

It may be said by railway and business men that freight destined for Charlottetown going via Pictou would save one handling and that if it went by Summerside it would have to be loaded on the cars, which would have to be taken into consideration. But that would not account for the large difference in the rates I have pointed out. Take freight destined for other points where the handling is just the same. On freight destined for Georgetown and Souris there is still a large discrimination although the handling is exactly the same. Let me just quote the figures. From Toronto to Georgetown via Point Deschênes and Summerside, on first class 92 cents ; second class 80 cents ; third class 69 cents ; fourth class 57 cents ; fifth class 47 cents ; sixth class 44 cents ; seventh class 35 cents ; and eighth class 36 cents. From Toronto to Georgetown via Pictou and Charlottetown, on first class 86 cents ; second class 75 cents ; third class 64 cents ; fourth class 54 cents ; fifth class 44 cents ; sixth class 42 cents ; seventh class 33 cents ; and eighth class 33 cents ; per 100 pounds. Or a difference against the Prince Edward Island Railway, with the same handling and labour, as follows : First class 6 cents ; second class 5 cents ; third class 5 cents ; fourth class 3 cents ; fifth class 3 cents ; sixth class 2 cents ; seventh class 2 cents ; eighth class 3 cents, while the distance from Toronto to Georgetown via Point Deschênes and Summerside is 122 miles less than via Pictou. And the difference to Souris is from one to two cents per 100 pounds greater still.

The only reason I can see for routing freight in such cases via Pictou is to give the Intercolonial Railway practically all the earnings and to give the Island road as little as possible. That is not fair to the Island road. While it makes no difference to the public purse, it certainly tells against the Island road since the accounts are kept separate, so that when we come to the government and ask for any concessions we are met, in one form or another, by this deficit on the Island railway. It may not be brought up in all cases but you have to face it. In speaking to ministers, and very often to private members of the House this deficit is a thing of which all complain, and I would rather explain it in this general way than try to explain it to every member of the House or minister. This is one of the reasons why I think the Prince Edward Island Railway ought to be an integral portion of the government system both in the keeping of accounts and in all other respects. That would relieve the Intercolonial Railway officials from the necessity of making this discrimination, and I presume it must take some of their time and attention to make these changes in the routing of freight. But while the accounts are kept separate, this discrimination is absolutely unfair to the Island railway.

Mr. BERGERON. I understand by the hon. gentleman's motion that he would change the letters which to-day designate the Intercolonial Railway. Instead of Intercolonial Railway he would call it interprovincial or some other name.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. Or the Canadian government railway.

Mr. BERGERON. Has my hon. friend ever examined what would be the cost of making that change?

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. I have not, but I understand that the department are under the necessity of making some change in order that the Intercolonial cars may not get mixed up with the cars of the Illinois Central Railway. I understand they are making some change now, and perhaps the loss of a few cars would be sufficient to pay for the change. The next paragraph in the resolution I propose reads in this way :

That the ferry service across the Straits of Northumberland should be owned and managed by the Railway Department, winter and summer, as the ferry service across the Straits of Canso is now, and as the ferry service across the Gulf of Georgia between Vancouver and Victoria is owned and managed by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company.

We have a rather peculiar system of transportation to and from Prince Edward Island. I do not think such an anomalous system would be established if we had to establish it to-day. It grew up little by little from the time of confederation. The Railway Department owns and operates some 1,500 miles of railway on one side of the Straits, on the mainland and some 270 miles on the other side on the Island. The Marine and Fisheries Department own and operate a ferry service during the winter season, when the service is most difficult and least profitable. The steam navigation company owns and operates a ferry service during the summer when it is least expensive and most profitable and does the work well. Two departments of the government and a private company are called in to do this work ; it is a tripartite system. If we were about to establish a system I am sure that we would not adopt that plan to-day. No board of business men having to control and operate a railway on both sides of the straits and having to maintain the ferry—because that is in the terms of confederation—would continue the present system any longer than they could possibly avoid it. If the Canadian Pacific Railway or the Grand Trunk Railway or the Canadian Northern were placed in such a position and had to maintain the ferry service according to their charter, I am quite satisfied that if they maintained and operated it in the winter, they would also maintain and operate it in the summer, and the reasons which would lead a railway corporation to do that would certainly, in my judgment, be sufficient to cause the government to do it.

Another reason is that the Marine and Fisheries Department is not, and never will be a carrying or transportation department ; that is not its business. On the other hand the Railway Department was established for that very purpose, is pre-eminently a carrying department and is in a better position to carry on that business than any other department of the government service. If one department of the government service maintained and operated this ferry service throughout the year, it would simplify matters greatly. For instance, the captains and crews could be transferred immediately from one set of boats to the other, there would be no interregnum and no delay. As it is now the Marine Department has to keep its captains and principal officers on hand while the boats of the Steam Navigation Company are in service, in order to have them when its boats resume, and the Steam Navigation Company has also to maintain its staff during the winter. This necessarily means increased cost which the country or the business men in the end have to pay.

Again there is the very serious disadvantage that it is now practically impossible in shipping between the mainland and Prince Edward Island points to obtain through bills of lading from the point of origin to the point of destination, and to know in advance exactly what the freight will be. There are nearly always more or less back charges and that hampers business and is very annoying. Again it is almost impossible in case of loss or damage to goods in transit, to fix responsibility upon either department or upon the company, as they throw the blame one upon the other so that business men who have had experience, having found it nearly impossible to obtain redress, would rather not take up a claim, unless it is a large one, owing to the difficulty and delay in securing an adjustment. If one department of the government service had charge of the whole transportation system there, this serious difficulty would be obviated and we would like to see this under the Railway Department.

Freight rates are much higher to and from the island than they are in other sections of the country, sometimes more than double, and under present conditions we find it very difficult to compete with more favoured shippers. We feel that simply because we are an island we should not be treated in that way. We contribute our share towards the upbuilding of the transportation facilities of the whole country, towards the upbuilding of the great ocean ports on the Atlantic and on the Pacific and yet when we come to use these transportation facilities and ports we have to pay more than any other persons in the Dominion of Canada. As a matter of fact the business men of the maritime provinces, of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, who know the conditions, when they have come together and considered this matter, have expressed as strong views on it as we do on the island. Perhaps I could not do better than read the resolution of the maritime board of trade, passed at its thirteenth meeting in the city of St. John last summer in regard to this matter. As I have said, these are men who know the conditions exactly and who certainly have no reason, beyond the desire to see fair-play to all Canadians, to express an opinion. The resolution is as follows:

Whereas the trade of Prince Edward Island has been seriously handicapped for many years past, owing to the difficulties of navigation and the excessive freight rates demanded by reason of three short-haul freight rates between points on Prince Edward Island and points on the mainland;

And whereas, the freight rates prevailing to and from Prince Edward Island are altogether disproportionate with those prevailing from Montreal eastward, as will be seen from the following:

From Montreal to St. John, 9 cents per 100 pounds, plus 1½ cents for elevation; distance, 735 miles.

From Montreal to Halifax, 9 cents per 100 pounds, plus 1½ cents; distance, 832 miles.

From Montreal to Sydney, 16½ cents per 100 pounds: distance, 977 miles.

Regulation rates on grain in carloads from Tignish to St. John, 26 cents per 100 pounds; distance, 428 miles.

From Tignish to Halifax, 23 cents per 100 pounds; distance, 309 miles.

From Tignish to Sydney, 26 per 100 pounds; distance, 380 miles.

And whereas, the province of Prince Edward Island, being a part of the Dominion of Canada, has to contribute its full share of the cost of maintenance of all government-owned and subsidized railways and steamers, should, therefore, be entitled to equal privileges, mile per mile, with the upper provinces, over all such railways and steamers, due allowance being made for extra handling of freight from cars to and from steamers;

Resolved, that in the opinion of this board, the government be and is hereby requested to so equalize the three short-hauls system of transportation of Prince Edward Island with the continuous haul of the other provinces, with which it is in competition;

And further resolved, that Prince Edward Island be placed on the same basis as to import and export rates to and from ports outside of Canada as are accorded to the other provinces of the Dominion.

That is all we ask for, Mr. Speaker, and what we ask for appears to us to be a fair deal, and it appears to the businessmen of the maritime provinces to be a fair deal. I do not think it is too much to ask. I do not know why the Intercolonial should not maintain the ferries and these highways. Perhaps there would be a deficit. The earnings might not be so great as they are now if the rates were reduced; and again they might be, because in all probability a greater amount of freight would go over the Island Railway and over the Intercolonial. But even if there were not a greater amount of freight, I do not think we should be placed at a disadvantage. Cape Breton is an island also, and it has exactly the same rates, mile for mile, as they have on the mainland. Of course the straits of Canso are not as wide as the straits of Northumberland, but I presume that should not make any difference. But if it does, I find that the island of Vancouver, separated from the mainland by the gulf of Georgia, is placed on exactly the same footing as the mainland in regard to transportation rates, and that is done by the Canadian Pacific Railway, said to be a soulless corporation. It is said that corporations are not doing business for fun, so it must appear to them to be fair, and I suppose they do it from a business point of view. Now if the Canadian Pacific Railway Company gives people living on the island of Vancouver the same passenger and freight rates as they do to people on the mainland east of the Rocky Mountains, as far east as Winnipeg at all events, I can see no good reason why the government operating a transportation line on Prince Edward Island and on the mainland, should not place Prince Edward Island on an equality with the mainland.

Now, Sir, I have given my reasons why I think a change of name of the road would be advantageous. We are no longer, I repeat, a mere colony, we are a confederation of provinces, and our government railway should not by its name belie our actual, our geographical and our historical existence. I have given reasons why I think there should not be a separate accounting for the Prince Edward Island Railway and the Intercolonial; at all events, if there is to be a separate accounting there should not be discrimination. All freight destined for points on Prince Edward Island should go over the island road, and the island road should have all the earnings that are coming to it. when the distance by the island road is shorter than by the Intercolonial via Pictou. Further, I say that we should have one branch of the government service owning, operating and maintaining the ferry service on the straits of Northumberland. For the reasons I have pointed out, it would simplify matters and reduce the cost. I am satisfied that a board of business men considering this matter would recommend it, and would bring it into operation just as soon as it could be done.

Mr. A. MARTIN (Queen's, P.E.I.) I am sorry there is not a fuller House on this occasion when my hon. friend from Kings, Prince Edward Island (Mr. Hughes) has brought up this important question. I am sorry that so few ministers are in their places ; I am sorry the Minister of Marine and Fisheries is not here, and that the Prime Minister is absent. This is a question of great importance, both to Prince Edward Island and to the whole of Canada. I have no criticism to make of the manner in which the hon. gentleman has treated the subject, but I doubt if the resolution he has proposed would have the desired effect, or would carry out the tenor of his speech. I do not see why changing the name of the Intercolonial would cheapen the rates down to Prince Edward Island. I suppose this government has lots of money to spend, and I think on mature consideration it would involve an expenditure of a quarter of a million dollars to change the name on all the cars from the Intercolonial to the Interprovincial Railway. Even when they had accomplished that great feat of calling the Intercolonial the Interprovincial Railway, I wonder what effect it would have on those exhorbitant freight rates which I am proud to see my hon. friend now realizes. It took him a long time to see them. I never heard him say a word of criticism on the government in keeping these freights up, but now he has obtained new light. He has always been very quiet in this House, and I am proud that he is now waking up. I do not think he has overdrawn the picture, in fact I do not think he has drawn it quite so dark as it is. I have some figures before me similar to those the hon. gentleman has quoted. I have a letter here written a year or two ago which I will read :

Office of the General Traffic Manager,
Moncton, New Brunswick, May 15, 1906.

D. Pottinger, Esq.,
General Manager, Moncton, New Brunswick.

Dear Sir,—Referring to your letter under date of May 12, asking for some information called for by the House:

I inclose you herewith freight tariffs of the Prince Edward Island Railway, one the maximum general freight tariff in effect prior to January 1, 1906, and the other the maximum freight mileage tariff applicable after January 1, 1906. I also give you the rates on grain for export last winter.

The House is rather thin, but I am sure there are some hon. members here who will appreciate these figures and who will see the position in which the province is placed with regard to freight rates. This is the statement that was sent to Mr. Pottinger by Mr. Tiffin :

From Montreal to St. John, 9 cents per 100 pounds, plus 1½ cents per 100 pounds for elevation; distance 735 miles.

That is, you could take 100 pounds from Montreal to St. John, a distance of 735 miles, for 9 cents.

From Montreal to Halifax, 9 cents per 100 pounds, plus 1½ cents per 100 pounds for elevation; distance 832 miles.

From Montreal to Sydney, 16½ cents per 100 pounds; distance 977 miles.

I might add, however, that there would be no grain for export via Sydney.

In very sharp contrast to that, this letter quotes the rates in my province :

Regular rates on grain in carloads from Tignish to St. John, 26 cents per 100 pounds; distance 432 miles.

Regular rates on grain in carloads from Tignish to Halifax, 23 cents per 100 pounds; distance 309 miles.

Regular rates on grain in carloads from Tignish to Sydney, 26 cents per 100 pounds; distance 380 miles.

I want the Minister of Railways to take note of this. You can take from Montreal to St. John, 735 miles, 100 pounds for 9 cents, but from my province, from Tignish to St. John, only half the distance, you charge 26 cents per 100 pounds. Those are your railway rates. Do you suppose that the people of that province do not feel the injustice under which they labour in having to pay these very exorbitant rates? They are not only excessive; they are exorbitant, and I do not think the Minister of Railways, a gentleman for whom we have great respect and who is new in his position, would like to tyrannize over that small province the way it has been tyrannized over for years. I think it behooves him to do something to remove that great injustice. From Tignish to Halifax, a distance of 309 miles, the rate is 23 cents. How fair is that to the island province? You pay 23 cents for 309 miles when you only pay 9 cents for over 800 miles on the Intercolonial Railway. From Tignish to Sydney it is 26 cents for 380 miles. I do not think that this condition exists for want of bringing it to the attention of the government. Time and time again it has been brought to the attention of the government by the representatives in parliament, by the boards of trade in Prince Edward Island and by the maritime board of trade which meets in Halifax, but no remedy has been provided. It would be useless to quote figures at any greater length here, because if these figures which I have quoted are not sufficient to convince any hon. member or any member of the government I think I might as well give it up. I asked some questions in regard to this matter in the early part of the session and they told me it was under consideration. Well, it has been under consideration for ten years, perhaps twenty years, and we want to know how long that consideration is going to last. Give some decision. I am glad to see that my colleagues are here. I did not know that the question was to be brought up for discussion to-day. I have piles of figures, but I do not think it is necessary to go any further because I have proved my case up to the hilt and I hope at last, now that the hon. member for Kings, P.E.I., (Mr. Hughes) has wakened up that he will impress this matter upon the government and do what he can to assist us in securing the removal of this injustice.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN (Queens, P.E.I.). Like my colleague I did not know that this matter was coming up this afternoon, and I am therefore quite unprepared to discuss it. It is a matter that has engaged the attention of every farmer and of every business man not only of Prince Edward Island, but of the maritime provinces. It is a matter which has engaged the attention of the people of Prince Edward Island and those who deal with them. My colleague (Mr. A. Martin) has stated that the hon. member for Kings (Mr. Hughes) had wakened up to the fact that this was a matter of some importance, because every time that the matter of transportation has been brought up in the House he has either ridiculed members on this side of the House coming from that province or he has pointed out to the government that it was simply a grievance they were using for political purposes. Now, he has come out of his shell and he sees, with the rest of the province, that it is a very important matter and one which should receive the immediate attention of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Graham) and of the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur). Last year a commission including, I think, the deputy Minister of Railways and Canals, the deputy Minister of Marine and Fisheries and certain other gentlemen, visited Prince Edward Island, and when they went to meet the board of trade and other business men in the city of Charlottetown, they promised that the matter would receive the immediate attention of the government. But nothing has been done. I want to direct the attention of the Minister of Railways and Canals to an answer which was given to me by himself a few days ago in this House, and I would ask him to compare the rates for transportation in force on the rest of the Intercolonial Railway, because I take it that the Prince Edward Island Railway is still a part of the Intercolonial Railway, with those charged on freight shipped from Prince Edward Island. A return was brought down a few days ago showing that it costs 11 cents to take 100 pounds of freight from Charlottetown to Pictou, and in the summer time it costs from Halifax to Pictou 20 cents. But when the summer boats went off the Intercolonial Railway increased the tariff to 24 cents per 100 pounds. Why is this? Why are the people of Prince Edward Island asked to pay 4 cents per 100 pounds more in the winter than in the summer? To-day if you wish to take 100 pounds of freight from Charlottetown to Halifax, you pay 35 cents for it when you can ship from Montreal to St. John 100 pounds for 9 cents.

Just imagine that it costs for less than 120 miles from Charlottetown to Halifax 35 cents per 100 pounds and for the 735 miles from Montreal to St. John it costs only 9 cents per 100 pounds. Here is a matter which the Minister of Railways, although he is new to his office, should take under his immediate consideration. According to this return which the minister brought down the first class summer and winter rate from Truro to Pictou is 16 cents and Truro is distant about 50 miles from Pictou and about 100 miles from Charlottetown. But for the distance between Truro and Charlottetown you pay 27 cents per 100 pounds. Then, from Amherst the rate is the same both summer and winter. In summer the business for the Island via Moncton goes entirely by way of Pointe du Chêne and when the Pointe du Chêne route is closed it goes by Pictou. The summer rate from Moncton to Charlottetown by way of Pointe du Chêne is 32 cents, and the rate from Moncton to Charlottetown by way of Pictou in the winter time, 197 miles, is enormously high. When navigation closes at Pointe du Chêne the cost by way of Georgetown is 52 cents per 100 pounds to Charlottetown. Just imagine at this date in the history of transportation paying 52 cents for 100 pounds of freight from Moncton to Charlottetown when you can bring that same 100 pounds of freight from Montreal to Sydney, a distance of 977 miles for 16½ cents. Is that a condition of affairs which should exist? Is it any wonder that the population of the maritime provinces is being depleted? Is it any wonder that our population is leaving us when the greater portion almost, of the profit which the farmers of Prince Edward Island should have in their pockets for their products, goes either into the government railways or the government steamboats. This resolution states that the government transportation system down there should be under the control of one department. To-day it is under the control jointly of the Department of Marine and Fisheries and the Department of Railways, but would it make any difference who controls it when they charge 41 cents for 100 pounds of freight for 147 miles from Moncton to Pictou and 11 cents from Pictou to Charlottetown, making 52 cents in all? Is there any use in changing the name of the Intercolonial if these rates are allowed to continue in force? What benefit would it be to the people to change the name and still charge these high rates? There is not the slightest doubt that the Intercolonial is to-day charging more for freight that goes to Prince Edward Island, than any other railway in Canada. You can take goods for almost one-fourth less from Montreal to Sydney over the Canadian Pacific Railway than you can take them from Moncton, N.B., to Charlottetown, P.E.I. Here is a matter which should receive the immediate attention of the government. The hon. gentleman who introduced the resolution states that the government system of railways should be considered as one entity in the keeping of accounts and all other respects. He does not say what the 'all other respects' are. Perhaps it might be beneficial to the government of Canada to have the railway under one system for the keeping of accounts, but what benefit would that be to the people of the province which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Hughes) represents? In my opinion there is only one way in which this grievance can be remedied and that is by the government giving their immediate attention to the building of a tunnel between Cape Tormentine, N.B., and Cape Traverse, P.E.I. Then we would have the fulfilment of the terms of the union and we would have one continuous haul, one entity as the member for Kings calls it. We would then have one railway, and you may call it the Interprovincial or the Intercolonial, or anything you like so long as the people of my province receive fair treatment at the hands of the government of Canada. We may be told now that the tunnel question has been brought up here from time to time for a number of years and that justice was not done by previous governments, but the time has come now to do something. If the people did not press for a settlement of this grievance long ago it was their own fault, and as a matter of fact the question of excessive freight rates has never been prominently brought before the government until within the last three or four years. And since it has been brought to their attention I understand that the officials who went to the Island are treating the Board of Trade and the other gentlemen who are pressing this matter in the province, with almost contempt. Resolutions were passed by the board of trade and were brought before these commissioners who went down there last summer, and notwithstanding the fact that there was a shorthand report of what was said at that meeting by the members of the board of trade and by the commissioners, still a contention exists as to what was said, and also as to what the resolutions were. But we have these resolutions here and they were read in the House not only by the member for Kings but by Mr. Martin, the member for Queens, and they were plain and distinct, and the government have received copies of these resolutions because it was directed that copies should be sent to the government. But in this case as in almost every other case that has come before them, the government are neglecting this question. I hope the present Minister of Railways will do his duty a little better than his predecessors did, and that he will at once take this matter into his consideration. I do not see the Minister of Marine and Fisheries in the House just now, but I know that when his deputy was down in Charlottetown a year ago with reference to this matter, he gave great promises that he would place the matter before the minister and before the government. But nothing has been done. The people of Prince Edward Island are under this great handicap which no free people should endure any longer. I think we have endured this grievance long enough, and it is high time that the Minister of Railways and Canals and the Minister of Marine and Fisheries and the government should give this matter their immediate attention. They are attending to the wants of the great west, they are looking after the building of the Transcontinental Railway, but they are neglecting the descendants of the men who settled in eastern Canada many years ago and hewed homes for themselves out of the forest, and they are sending every young man in the east who grows up to manhood away to gain his livelihood in the United States or in the great west where this government is spending millions and millions of dollars to develop. I say it and I say it advisedly that the east is neglected by this government. Not only is that the opinion of men who live in the east, but one of the ablest journalists in western Canada has endorsed that view, and has stated that the government is neglecting the wants and requirements of Eastern Canada. And when the people of Eastern Canada come here and ask the government plainly and distinctly to meet their wants, they are turned down and the transportation question in Prince Edward Island and the maritime provinces has no attention paid to it by the government. So far as the proposal to change the name of the Intercolonial Railway is concerned, I have very little sympathy with it. I think the government can do this without changing the name. If it is not done in a very short time, the same feeling which exists in British Columbia to-day with reference to certain matters engaging the attention of this government may assert itself more forcibly than they think in the east.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD (Pictou): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with a good deal of interest to our hon. friends from Prince Edward Island who have discussed the questions involved in this motion. While careful attention should be paid to the adjustment of rates on the Intercolonial Railway, our hon. friends seem to overlook the natural conditions arising from the fact that the province of Prince Edward Island is an island, and that its communication with the mainland must necessarily be maintained by water service, winter and summer, and as a consequence higher rates must be paid for transportation across the Northumberland Straits than are paid on the mainland. It is of very little advantage, in arguing this question, for our hon. friends to compare the rates charged from Montreal to St. John or Halifax, on all-rail routes, with the rates charged on transportation that involves, first a rail haul, then a steamer haul, not under the control of the Railway Department, and then another rail haul. I am glad to hear our hon. friends speak of the rates being somewhat high, because one of the theories sometimes put forward in this House in support of government operation of railways is that people get the advantage of low rates, particularly those who live along the line of the Intercolonial which is not enjoyed by people living along the lines of company railways. I ventured to make the statement in this House not long ago that usually a low rate was charged by the Intercolonial Railway on long hauls of certain staple products, while it did not give its patrons any advantage in regard to short hauls; and I pointed out that our hon. friends who live in the province of Ontario are sometimes inclined to argue that the government administration of the Intercolonial Railway is a poor one, because it is purely for the benefit of the people who live in the provinces through which the railway runs.

Mr. BLAIN. The Hon. Mr. Blair stated that the freight rates on the Intercolonial Railway were 50 per cent lower than those of any other railway in Canada.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. If Mr. Blair ever said that, my hon. friend and his friends on the other side of the House have frequently made the same statement. One of their arguments used in the province of Ontario is that this government has administered the Intercolonial Railway purely and solely for the benefit of the people who live along the line of the railway and for political purposes, giving them low rates; and I say that I am very glad that our hon. friends from Prince Edward Island have shown to-day that no such condition of affairs exists. They have proven that certain staple products of the western portion of Canada are hauled to the maritime provinces at low rates, the Intercolonial Railway thus serving the interchange of products between the different provinces at the extremes of the railway. But when some of our hon. friends speak in this way, they overlook the difference in the rates charged on long hauls and on short hauls. We have the same difference in various portions of the maritime provinces. The percentage charged on certain classifications of goods for hauling them fifty miles is very much higher than it is for hauling the same goods 200 or 300 miles. These differences are bound to exist.

Mr. A. A. LEFURGEY. How about the case I cited a short time ago, in which the rate for a long haul from Prince Edward Island to a few miles east of Toronto was four or five times the rate charged from Montreal to Halifax or Sydney, and that was a long haul rate? It does not work both ways apparently.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. My hon. friend has forgotten to take into consideration the fact that that freight had to be delivered in Montreal to some other railway, which, under the arbitrary division of freight earnings, no doubt made the extra charge. This question of freight earnings is one of the most complicated known in railway administration. I do not think our hon. friends will seriously assert that there is any intention on the part of the government or of the Railway Department to discriminate against the province of Prince Edward Island.

Mr. LEFURGEY. The proof of the pudding is in the eating.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. All over the maritime provinces we have the same condition in regard to freight charges on goods from points west of Montreal, with other railways sharing in the transportation. In regard to my hon. friend's motion for the change of name, there does not seem to be any particular objection to the Intercolonial Railway being called, as it should be, the Interprovincial Railway, except the fact that after some thirty years of operation, and after all the rolling stock has been provided, such a change would be attended with a great deal of expense and difficulty. That is a matter which should not be overlooked by any responsible department in considering the question. In this connection I want to refer to a remark made by my hon. friend from Kings (Mr. J. J. Hughes) to the effect that the Railway Department had been criticised for charging the same rates on goods consigned to Prince Edward Island, whether they went via Pictou or Pointe du Chêne.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

The House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. Referring to the second clause of my hon. friend's resolution, in which he proposes that the government system of railways should be considered as one entity in the keeping of accounts and all other respects, my hon. friend seemed to consider it a grievance that the same rates were charged on the Intercolonial Railway for goods going to Prince Edward Island via Pointe du Chêne as via Pictou, although Pictou was 100 miles or so further away from the point of shipment than Pointe du Chêne might be. I do not think my hon. friend had any good grounds for his argument. This arrangement as to similarity of charges between these two points was made purely on behalf of the people of Prince Edward Island. The whole of the eastern portion of that island, from Charlottetown to Souris, receive their freight by the Intercolonial Railway through the port of Pictou. If all these people, who import these goods, were compelled to pay an additional impost because of the extra mileage betwen Moncton and Pictou, that would only mean that the people of Prince Edward Island would have to pay so much more for their goods. But a great deal of my hon. friends' complaint would be relieved if they would join with me in urging on the Railway Department the necessity and advantage of treating the port of Pictou as entitled to the same low rates as are granted the ports of St. John and Halifax. Pictou is a point of distribution which covers the whole of the Gulf of St. Lawrence. Not only are there steamers from there plying to Charlottetown and Murray Harbour, which is an important point of the island, being the terminus of the new branch of railway constructed a few years ago, and in addition continuous steam communication with Georgetown, which is the capital of Kings county, and Souris, an important mercantile point on the extreme east of the island, but in addition it is a distributing point for the Magdalen islands and the greater portion of the eastern part of Cape Breton. Yet I was surprised to find, not long ago, when inquiring regarding certain products which came to Nova Scotia from the west, that the ports of St. John and Halifax were the only ones which received the advantage of what is called an export rate. If the port of Pictou were given the same favourable treatment as these other ports, my hon. friends in the island would be able to receive their imports at much lower rates of freight than at present; but that is a difficulty which cannot be urged by my hon. friends as one peculiar to Prince Edward Island, because those who live in the eastern portion of Nova Scotia experience that same difficulty as do all the other points which are served from the port of Pictou. So far as I am concerned I am particularly anxious to support any proposition to obtain for the island the cheapest possible rates of freight, but they should bear in mind that in consequence of only St. John and Halifax enjoying the advantage of the export rate, we in the eastern portion of Nova Scotia are practically in the same condition as our hon. friends on the island, with this exception that they have the Straits of Northumberland to cross and the additional impost which will always result where you break bulk and have to use different methods of transportation. There is this trouble in obtaining this export rate, and that is the difficulty in adjusting rates with the Grand Trunk Railway or Canadian Pacific Railway, where either controls the export. To a very large degree the railway which produces the freight controls this matter, and I understand from the Intercolonial Railway officials that the difficulty to which I am referring is very largely due to freight which originates with either of these two companies and to the fact that they control the situation. But so far as the difference in rates is concerned, the answer which the Minister of Railways (Mr. Graham) gave the other day to a question put by my hon. friend from Queens (Mr. Martin) shows that the charges of which these gentlemen complain do not arise in many respects on account of the charges made on the Intercolonial Railway. Thus out of a freight rate of 52 cents paid from Moncton to Charlottetown, 28 cents is only paid to the Intercolonial Railway, 10 cents is paid for transportation across the straits and 14 cents to the Island Railway. So that while the Prince Edward Island Railway has the advantage of having the 14 cents earning upon these products, the party who imports has to pay that rate on account of the rule which obtains with regard to transportation everywhere namely that where you have a short haul, the short haul must pay. To say therefore that the difficulties suggested by my hon. friend and his colleague would disappear if the government were to consider the Prince Edward Island Railway and the Intercolonial Railway as one entity in the keeping of accounts and in all other respects, is to say what the facts do not bear out. To call a railway by another name or to keep the one set of books for the two railways will not do away with the necessity of making such charges as have to be made in order to meet the cost of transportation ; and where you have goods placed at the point of shipment so as to cross the straits at the lowest possible rate, you get a condition which is the best you can hope for because you will always have to contend with the cost of transportation by steamer across the straits.

The last part of my hon. friend's resolution proposes that the ferry service should be owned and managed by the Railway Department in summer as well as in winter. This much is well known, that the company which transports freight and passengers across the straits during the summer months has been a great dividend payer and is owned and controlled entirely by men from the island. Every cent of stock in that company is owned by men on the island, and the company have been earning handsome returns—so handsome that they are rather reticent about telling us how much they do earn. They do not seem public spirited as they might be, but the fact that they have earned dividends is one which should be taken into consideration when considering the feasibility of the proposal of my hon. friend. On the other hand the cost of transportation in winter must necessarily be very great and it could hardly be expected that products can ever be transported across the straits except at a loss. At the same time I think the Railway Department should deal with the whole question, and that the management of the steamers across the straits, summer and winter, should be in the hands of that department. It would not, of course, add to the surplus of my hon. friend the Minister of Railways, and possibly our friends opposite would sometimes complain because the surplus was not as large as it might otherwise have been; yet notwithstanding that fact I think that the Intercolonial Railway or the Interprovincial Railway, should have charge of the transportation of freight across the Straits of Northumberland, and that any loss which might be occasioned by this service would be willingly borne by the people of Canada, as it would be simply carrying out the terms of confederation under which Prince Edward Island entered the Dominion. This step would, of course, involve a large expenditure in taking over the steamers of the company now operating there in summer and also in assuming the management of the government steamers employed in the winter service. This portion of the resolution I regard as well worth the consideration of the government and a step which, if carried into effect, would greatly improve the means of transportation of freight to and from the island province.

Mr. A. A. WRIGHT. Is all the transportation in summer done by a private corporation?

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. Yes.

Mr. A. A. WRIGHT. And in the winter when the loss is heavy is it all done by the government?

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. Yes.

Mr. A. A. WRIGHT. A nice state of affairs, is it not?

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. As my hon. friend is one of those gentlemen who are perfectly willing to build a tunnel that will be operated all the year around at a heavy cost, I presume he will not object to this. We must always remember that the maintaining of this service both in summer and in winter by the Dominion is one of the terms of confederation, and whether the loss is small or great the service must be carried on by the government. The only point under discussion is whether the management of that service should be under the Railway or the Marine Department. It seems to me that it would be very much more satisfactory to have the whole system of transportation there under the management of one department. There would, of course, be difficulties but it would appear that the greatest difficulties complained of would be overcome by the step proposed. Owing to the division of authority between the two departments claims cannot be readily adjusted, but I would point out to my hon. friends from the island that the difficulty of securing the adjustment of claims by business men is not confined to Prince Edward Island, but is common to the entire Intercolonial system, as it must be from the nature of the case where you have government ownership of railways, and it is not possible to recover damages for torts against the railway but have to proceed by the tortuous process of application for petition of right and trial in the Exchequer Court. If a cow is injured in transportation or a box is broken open then this tortuous process must be resorted to in order to secure redress and this is a cause of serious inconvenience and complaint among business men throughout the maritime provinces. I hope that the minister will look into this question of claims so that the business men of the maritime provinces may have some safe, sure and ready method by which to have their claims adjusted. I do not know whether under any system of government operation the difficulty could be obviated ; under such a system it must always exist in some degree, but I hope that the minister will rearrange the claims department of the Intercolonial Railway so as to afford more prompt readjustment of claims. My hon. friend's remarks on this subject deserve as much attention from the minister as any other portion of the resolution. The portion of the resolution which involves the placing of the service across the Straits of Northumberland under the control of the Railway Department receives my strongest support.

Mr. A. A. LEFURGEY (Prince, P.E.I.). I am very pleased to note the change that is coming over the spirit of the dreams of the hon. gentlemen opposite—for they have been dreaming for a long time—in regard to the resolution before us. For the past seven or eight years members on this side of the House have time and again brought up the important matter of transportation across the Straits of Northumberland and the excessive rates under which we suffer. Members on the other side of the House have had ample opportunity to put forth their views, and some of them, I am glad to find, are waking up and telling us what they think. The mover of this resolution has had several occasions during the present session to bring up this question of freight rates, for instance, when the Railway Commission was being discussed and when the tunnel resolution of my hon. friend from Queens (Mr. A. Martin) was before the House, but upon those occasions he took the opportunity to apologize for the government. Now, however, I am glad to see that he has awakened from his dream, and sees at last that the government have not used all the means in their power to endeavour to overcome the wrongs under which the people of my province have been suffering for a great number of years. But after all, Mr. Speaker, the solution of this whole question is to be found in giving us an up to date means of transportation, such as was promised to us thirty odd years ago, and which we have been fighting for ever since in this House. We have urged upon the government to go forward and fulfil the promise that the leader of this House made when he was in opposition, and give the people of the island a tunnel. That is after all the only solution that will end our complaints. The hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) said that we must not overlook natural conditions. Well, that is why we are discussing this question in the House, it is because the government have been overlooking natural conditions. We realized these natural conditions when we came into confederation, and it was the realization of these natural conditions that brought Prince Edward Island into the confederation, with a promise from the Dominion that they would be overcome. And how were they to be overcome? By bringing the island system of railways into connection with the mainland system. Now, that is the whole solution of this excessive rate question. The hon. member for Pictou says we have got to overcome these natural conditions. That was the promise made at confederation, and in the meantime, while the government is not using the means at hand to overcome them, is not prepared to put before this House surveys and estimates for a tunnel, our shippers to and from the island should not be put under the obligation to pay the piper on these short hauls, but the loss should be made up to them by the government by equalization of rates. Instead of that we find from an answer made the other day to my hon. friend from Queens (Mr.

McLean) that the government instead of equalizing the summer rate with the winter rate, have increased the winter rate and during the period when they have control of the whole service. Now, I want to say that the government have certainly broken their pledge and are continually breaking their pledge to the people of Prince Edward Island and are perpetrating a gross injustice in increasing the winter rate between Prince Edward Island and the mainland. It is all under the control of the government, and the people have to pay higher rates in winter than they do in summer when a private company is operating. As regards overlooking natural conditions, we still have the natural conditions, and successive governments have not used bona fides with the people of Prince Edward Island in attempting to overcome them. The clause in the terms of confederation required the Dominion to give us this connecting link, and it does not matter to us whether they fulfil that promise in one way or the other so long as the government justify themselves by using every effort to overcome these difficulties.

Now, the hon. member for Pictou has also referred to the long and short hauls, and he has been the apologist of the government for the fact that the long haul is not as reasonable to the province of Prince Edward Island on goods going to the west as it is on goods coming from the west. As has been pointed out by hon. members on this side of the House, rates from Montreal to Halifax, St. John and Sydney are only about one-third of the rates between Tignish and Sydney, Halifax or St. John ; while the distance in the former case is from two to three miles as great. Now, I want to call the attention of the hon. member for Pictou to the difference in the long haul rate from Prince Edward Island to a point called Myrtle, about 400 miles east of Toronto, and which is only 300 odd miles further than from Montreal to Halifax. The rate from Montreal to Halifax is 9 cents per hundred pounds, while the rate over this long haul from Prince Edward Island to Myrtle is 40 cents per hundred pounds. So there must be something radically wrong in a situation where you can get a long haul rate going from the east to the west of 40 cents per hundred pounds, and a long haul rate coming from Montreal to our ports, into competition with our natural markets, of 9 cents per hundred pounds. The hon. gentleman says you cannot get over a lot of these troubles with a government-owned road. But we have offered a solution of them several times on this side of the House, we have proposed to put the Intercolonial under a commission, and then possibly we could get some justice in the adjustment of these rates. We have asked several times during this session that the government road should be put under the control of the Board of Railway Commissioners. That seems to many members on this side of the House to be a condition under which these rates could be adjusted, in conjunction with the rates on all the other lines that are under the control of this board.

Now, when I take up the resolution of the hon. member for Kings (Mr. Hughes) I find, as I said, that there is nothing new in the gist of the resolution at all; nothing but what we have been advocating year after year before this House, and nothing more than what the boards of trade all over the maritime provinces have been petitioning the government for by sending up resolutions. With regard to the first part of it, that the name of the Intercolonial and Prince Edward Island Railway should be changed to the Interprovincial Railway, I do not see that is going to help the people of Prince Edward Island; I do not see how that is going to adjust our freight rates, or how it is going to do away with the grievance under which we have been suffering for many years. As regards the system of keeping accounts, it seems to me that makes no difference at all. If the Prince Edward Island Railway were put into physical connection by a tunnel with the mainland, the Prince Edward Island portion would not suffer by comparison with any part of the Intercolonial, because she would be the greatest feeder to the Intercolonial. Products from all points of the island would converge to a centre, the rolling stock of the Prince Edward Island Railway would be constantly in use, and it would be distributed from the central point on the main line to the Intercolonial. Prince Edward Island would be an immense feeder; she would have a very long service in the additional amount of work that would be borne over the line and the Intercolonial would benefit immensely by such a programme being carried out. So as regards the system of accounting between the Intercolonial and the Prince Edward Island Railway, I do not think we need be at loggerheads on that point.

The last question, and the most important part of the hon. gentleman's resolution, that the ferry service across the Northumberland straits should be put under the control of the Railway Department, is a good idea, but not a new idea. Year after year we have advocated that. We have known of the bungling of the different departments, the Marine and Fisheries Department, the Railway Department and the Post Office Department. It has been a byword in this House and throughout that province for the last fifteen or twenty years. There is nothing new in it. We have advocated and asked for it. The answer which the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries gave to a little question that I put the other day, shows how this subject is looked after by the department. I asked the minister if he knew that the Summerside harbour was practically open and that the steamer 'Stanley' could readily go in there and open up transportation between Summerside and Cape Tormentine instead of letting her run between Georgetown and Pictou involving the transportation of our stuff from Tignish to Georgetown on the Prince Edward Island side and a haul of a couple of hundred miles on the Intercolonial Railway on the mainland side, whereas, with a little attention and foresight on the part of the department you could go almost straight across. The answer of the minister was that the control of these boats and the discretion as to their movements were left entirely in the hands of the captains. Is not that a nice state of affairs? It is no wonder that you have such a report brought in by the Civil Service Commission when you have such a haphazard way of doing the business of the country as leaving this most important feature of the work of the department entirely at the discretion of the captains. We have a marine agent in Charlottetown who represents the Department of Marine and Fisheries. Why is he not made the responsible party and why is he not given authority to report the conditions which exist there? The idea of leaving it to the two captains of the boats who are away from the western end of the island and who know nothing about the conditions to be found in different parts of the island because they are crossing from Georgetown to Pictou, is something that would not occur to the mind of any one who desired to carry on the affairs of the department in a businesslike way. It is high time that the responsibility for the transportation facilities between Prince Edward Island and the mainland was put upon one department to which we could carry our grievances and which would be responstible for the service. The Department of Marine and Fisheries puts the blame for the unsatisfactory condition of the mail and passenger service upon the Department of Railways and Canals. The Department of Railways and Canals attributes the fault to the Post Office Department and the Post Office Department throws it back again to the Department of Railways and Canals, and that is the sort of humbugging and nonsense that have been going on year after year. I think there is some merit in the last part of the hon. gentleman's resolution, but from our experience in the past I do not have any hope that this government will take any active measures to attempt to remedy the unsatisfactory conditions which exist at the present time. If they have not given it a trial before this or if they have not realized the position of this service I have very little faith in them doing anything except that they may try to drag a red herring across the trail because elections may be coming on next fall. However, there is some merit in this part of the resolution and I hope at any rate that the ministry will get together and put the service under the control of the Department of Railways and Canals so that we will have some department responsible for the whole service.

Mr. TAYLOR. I would like to inquire of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Graham) what it would cost to carry into effect the first part of this resolution. Has he any idea of what it would cost?

Mr. EMMERSON. I think it is very unfortunate that a resolution of this character should be discussed——

Mr. TAYLOR. I was making an inquiry of the minister.

Mr. EMMERSON. I assume that the minister will perhaps later on say something in answer to your inquiry.

Mr. TAYLOR. I intended to say something more when I got an answer to my inquiry.

Mr. GRAHAM. I have never made any estimate of what it would cost. If it were going to be done I imagine it would be very much cheaper to do it gradually than to do it all at once. It would cost a good deal of money.

Mr. TAYLOR. How much?

Mr. GRAHAM. I would not like to give an estimate.

Mr. TAYLOR. I am of opinion that it would cost $100,000 or $200,000 to make the change. You would have to change all your books and stamps in connection with the whole system besides repainting and lettering all your cars.

Mr. EMMERSON. You are very moderate in your estimate.

Mr. TAYLOR. I think it could be done for that. I think that if the change were brought about at all the simplest method would be to change the Prince Edward Island system and make it part of the Intercolonial Railway. That would not cost so very much. Then, all the book-keeping could be done at one headquarters. It would cut off a good deal of expense and I think that would be the business way of doing it. I think, with my hon. friend from Prince Edward Island (Mr. Lefurgey), that you should have the system, including the steamboat service, under one management instead of having two or three different bodies controlling the Prince Edward Island, the Intercolonial Railway, the mail service and the ferry. That would give you an opportunity of conducting it in a business manner. But, to change the whole system, unless the government have $100,000 or $200,000 to throw away, would do no good. The Intercolonial Railway is now known the world over and if you changed it to the Interprovincial Railway it would take people years to understand what it meant. I think it would be a great mistake.

Mr. EMMERSON. I was about to say that it was very unfortunate that a resolution of this character could not be discussed from other than a petty partisan standpoint. My hon. friend from Prince (Mr. Lefurgey), who is one of the modern Jeremiahs from the island, has spoken in a complaining way as usual, setting forth the grievances which he has repeated year after year. He speaks very indefinitely with respect to the call which has been made upon the government for a number of years. He seemingly forgets the fact that Prince Edward Island entered this confederation in the early seventies, that it entered it under the government of Sir John Macdonald, that the conditions which exist to-day, existed then, and that from 1878, when Sir John Macdonald resumed the helm of state in Canada, down in 1896, the conditions of which he complains to-day existed. He points to the present Minister of Marine and Fisheries as a sinner with respect to the management of the boats. He points to the present Minister of Railways and Canals and to his predecessors since 1896 as guilty sinners, forgetting perhaps that there were Ministers of Railways and Ministers of Marine during the period between 1878 and 1896. These conditions existed then and they exist to-day. It is a problem not easy of solution. As to changing the name of the government railway system we must remember that when the Intercolonial was established under a clause of the British North America Act to connect the city of Halifax with the city of Quebec, it was given its present designation which has become so to speak historic, and I would protest in the strongest possible way against changing the name and calling it the Interprovincial Railway. It must also be borne in mind that the Prince Edward Island Railway is a narrow gauge, and that as such it can never form part of a great railway system. Whether you have a tunnel or whether you have a modern ferry service such as we have at Canso, the Prince Edward Island Railway can never be part of a great railway system while it continues to be narrow gauge, and if you had a tunnel or a transfer car service the very first thing you would have to do would be to widen the gauge of that railway. Now, there could be no improvement by transferring the present steamboat service from one department to the other because that would not in itself lessen the rates. Anyway, it would be absurd to call it a ferry service because a ferry service such as you have at Canso would mean that the cars would be taken on to the ferry at the mainland, transferred to the island, and then they would be supposed to run over the Prince Edward Island Railway, but the moment they touched the shores of the island they are met by a narrow gauge system.

My hon. friend from Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) has referred to claims against the Intercolonial Railway and he has asked that there should be a reorganization of the claims department. In my opinion no reorganization of that department will improve the conditions in favour of claimants against the railway. It must be borne in mind that claimants have always two strings to their bow, and even if you give them the widest latitude to appeal to the courts of the country, having failed to obtain there what they thought was their due, they would still turn to their representatives in parliament and political influence would be sought. If there is a reorganization of the claims department it can only be properly conducted when the Intercolonial is placed under a commission. My own experience is that where claims have been presented against the railway, after full inquiry by the claims department and after it had been determined by the Department of Justice that there was no liability, and when the Auditor General would not pay the claim even if the department were willing, notwithstanding all that a claim never dies. It rises phoenix-like from year to year and the ghost of its former self appears sometimes increased in amount and sometimes intensified in details so far as the grievance is concerned. How this difficulty in connection with a government railway could be removed I cannot see, unless it were that the railway were put under a commission. In my opinion until the Intercolonial is placed in such a position that it is not directly managed by the Crown there can be no reorganization of the claims department such as has been suggested by my hon. friend from Pictou. It has been stated that the summer service between Prince Edward Island and the mainland is under the control of a private corporation which has paid very large dividends; a corporation so strong that when a few years ago it was proposed in this parliament to have a ferry system by which the cars could be transferrd, and there could be a crossing two or three times a day during the greater part of the year and during most of the winter months, that proposition was opposed by the gentlemen from Prince Edward Island. And at whose instance? At the instance of this very strong corporation which now and for the last 40 years has controlled the navigation of the straits during the summer season. They are not in a position and do not place themselves in a position to do the winter business. What is the result? The government are obliged to take these steamers, a part of the marine fleet, and pursuant to the terms of confederation utilize them for providing winter crossing. To place them under the Department of Railways and Canals will not improve the situation. It will not, in any way alter the conditions which exist to-day and which have existed for many years. There is no clause in this resolution which I can support.

Mr. J. D. REID (Grenville). Mr. Speaker, I estimate that it would cost nearly a quarter of a million dollars to make the necessary changes involved in carrying out the first part of this resolution. I am not opposed to anything that would be in the interests of the province of Prince Edward Island; but I think it is well to keep the accounts of the two railways separate, as they are now. I do not think any one on either side of the House makes any complaint even if this railway shows a loss in its operation. With no connections with any other railway, it is pretty hard to expect it to make a profit. I do not see that changing the name to Interprovincial would make any material difference. The name Intercolonial has been well known since confederation, and I am in favour of retaining it. To change the name would be simply to incur an unnecessary expenditure of $200,000 or $300,000. It would necessitate changing the whole book-keeping system of the railway. As to the ferry service between the island and the mainland, I think this government should do everything possible to make it efficient. I for one am in favour of doing everything necessary to provide the best possible communication between the island and the mainland. For many years I have heard members from the island on both sides of the House urging the government to build a tunnel. I would like to see an estimate of what such a work would cost laid on the table of the House. With the latest improvements in making tunnels, I think it might possibly be shown that it would cost less to build this tunnel than it now costs to maintain and operate the steamers between the island and the mainland. I suppose it is impossible to obtain such an estimate this session, but I hope it will be obtained and laid on the table of the House at the earliest possible moment. I believe the time will come when that tunnel will be built. The people of this country are in favour of providing the best possible communication between the mainland and Prince Edward Island, and there is certainly nothing that would give such a complete and satisfactory connection as a tunnel. At the present time, with the facilities that exist a tunnel could be built for perhaps one-half of what it could twenty or twenty-five years ago. I for one hope that an estimate of the cost of a tunnel will be laid before the House at no distant date, so that the matter may be thoroughly settled once and for all. In the meantime, unless the Minister of Railways can advance some good reason why the name should be changed, I think that the first part of the resolution should be dropped. The other parts of the resolution I would support.

Mr. HAUGHTON LENNOX (South Simcoe). I am entirely opposed to the proposal to change the name of the railway. We have not always had the most satisfactory conditions in the operation of the Intercolonial Railway, but it has been recognized as a great public work, and I hope the time will come when it will be operated on a more satisfactory basis than it has been in the past. With reference to the loss of cars, it would be easy to prevent that by having the word 'Canada' painted on each car. I do not experience the same difficulty that some hon. gentlemen do from the fact that we are referred to as colonists or Canada as a colony; and the term Intercolonial is quite satisfactory to me. However, I did not rise for the purpose of discussing that question so much as to submit a matter of very much more importance, and that is the question of the tunnel between Prince Edward Island and the mainland. I think the time has come when the government should take some definite and serious step to ascertain whether that scheme is feasible or not. I am not at all afraid of the expense provided it is gone into in a fair and businesslike way. In my opinion we ought not to treat this matter any longer, as it has been, as a perennial joke, but should treat it as one that ought to receive the most serious consideration.

An hon. MEMBER. What about the cost?

Mr. LENNOX. I do not know how much it would cost, but I would not be inclined to plunge into the scheme, as we did into the transcontinental project, without having the fullest preliminary investigation. What we require to do is to find out what it will cost and whether the project is a feasible one or not. As one of the members representing Ontario, I am fully prepared to take the responsibility of advocating a reasonable expenditure for the purpose of finding out whether we can remedy the present condition of Prince Edward Island by constructing a tunnel between the mainland and the island. I am not in favour of going into it at any cost, but I am inclined to think that the work can be carried out on terms beneficial to the Dominion, and I am disposed to advocate a proper investigation with the view of ascertaining whether it would not be in the interests of Canada as a whole, as well as of Prince Edward Island, to have this work carried out within a reasonable time.

Mr. A. A. WRIGHT (South Renfrew). You may think that a person coming from the province of Ontario has no interest directly with the people of the maritime provinces. Will you allow me to give you one instance out of many which have come under my own notice? For example, for a great many years we bought a large quantity of potatoes from Prince Edward Island, but gradually difficulties arose so that we could not get them there because we could not get transportation the year around. The consequence was we had to go to New Brunswick for our potatoes, and will you allow me to tell you that to-day and the whole year round, there are hundreds of carloads going from New Brunswick to Toronto which are sold there every day for 10 cents a bushel more than the potatoes grown right around Toronto.

Mr. EMMERSON. They are worth it.

Mr. A. A. WRIGHT. Certainly; if not, we would not give 10 cents a bushel more for them. I do not know whether they have better facilities or give greater care, but they give us better potatoes and all of one quality. If you want to get a carload of any one kind, you can go to New Brunswick and get them. We cannot get them from the island because they have not the facilities for shipping them. I need only give you that one instance to show you that we are directly connected with the maritime provinces. I have listened many years to the complaints made by our friends from the island, and it seems to me that the Dominion government has done everything it could under the circumstances to carry out the compact made with the provinces. The difficulties to be contended with in going across the straits in winter are simply enormous, and no human skill apparently can overcome them. I am willing to bear my share, as far as Ontario is concerned, in giving these people every facility winter and summer to get to the outside world. I have thoroughly considered this tunnel question. One hon. gentleman, when he spoke to me with reference to my advocating the building of the tunnel some time ago, said I did not know what I was talking about and had no business to say anything on the subject. Well, I consider it a national question and I have as good a right to speak on it as any other person in the country. I believe that this government has been doing everything it could; but if our friends in the island are in difficulty and we can relieve them, I do not see why we should not do it. When Prince Edward Island came into confederation and took her seat around our national fireside, she became part of our national family, and if she is in distress it is our business to come to her relief. When a fire took place in Hull we gave liberally to help the sufferers; and this year, when our friends in the western provinces were in trouble about seed grain, we voted $2,000,000 to help them. If then the people in Prince Edward Island are in difficulty why should we not help them in like manner? It may be that the building of this tunnel is not written in the bond, but I care not. If it is necessary, why should we not build it? And I do not think the cost would be prohibitive. Take the cost of the Simplon tunnel under the Alps, where they encountered a lake of hot water. Nevertheless they built it and without enormous cost, and I am satisfied that with modern appliances this tunnel can be built without very much expenditure of money. If it can be built for $10,000,000, I am prepared to pay my share of the amount, but I am thoroughly convinced it will never cost anything like that. The only way is to face the difficulty like men. Let us see what the tunnel will cost; and if not too much, we should grapple with it at once and put an end to all this clatter we hear every year. I am sick and tired of it, and if anything can be done to relieve the House of it I for one am satisfied to do it.

Mr. J. BARR (Dufferin). I cannot agree with my hon. friend when he says that this government has done all it can to relieve the situation of Prince Edward Island and carry out the compact of confederation. On looking through the record, I cannot find anything substantial that they have done. I cannot find any reliable report in connection with this tunnel. Having agreed to give Prince Edward Island continuous communication with the mainland in return for her joining confederation, it was the duty of this government and of preceding governments to have had a thorough investigation into the matter and have laid before the House plans and specifications so that the country might know exactly what it would cost to carry out the compact of confederation. It seems to me that Prince Edward Island has just reason to complain that an honest effort has not been made by either this or previous governments to carry out the terms of confederation. It is true that steps along that line were taken by the late government and an estimate was prepared. That estimate I think was about $10,000,000. If it cost twice that amount, it would be worth it to the Dominion and particularly to Prince Edward Island. As a people, as a nation, we should fulfil our obligations to the different provinces. As the last speaker said, it is not a provincial but a national question and one which this House and this country must solve if it is practicable. We have not before us the data to enable us to say whether it is practicable or not, but we can say that it is the duty of the government to secure estimates and all possible information from the best engineers obtainable.

I do not think any relief will come from changing the name of the Intercolonial Railway. From all we can gather it would seem that there has been discrimination and I hope the new Minister of Railways will see that even if the tunnel is not built the service will be improved and rendered as efficient as possible. Such a policy will meet with general approval and so I think would the building of a tunnel as soon as that is practicable.

Hon. G. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals). The discussion on the resolution of my hon. friend (Mr. J. J. Hughes) has not only been interesting, but has produced considerable information on tunnel building as well as on other points. I submit that the discussion of the tunnel is a little beside the spirit of the resolution, but this information is, of course, always welcome, even if it be in this instance 30 years behind the times. The hon. gentleman from Grenville (Mr. J. D. Reid) made a suggestion that the building of tunnels was getting cheaper. To that extent it has paid us to wait and the longer we wait perhaps the cheaper the building of tunnels may become.

Mr. J. D. REID. If we do not wait too long.

Mr. GRAHAM. My hon. friend of course does not like to have the argument extended. However, it is a question of serious importance not only to Prince Edward Island, but to all Canada. It is not a matter for the people of any one portion of the Dominion, because I decline to discuss these matters on that basis; that is not the best way to bring about the results or to bring about that unity of citizenship which we desire. I do not for a moment admit that the people of any portion of the Dominion have been ill-used by the others ; I do not admit that the people on any part of the government railway system have been discriminated against by this or the previous government. The question of freight rates is an intricate one and the making of these traffic sheets and running arrangements has become a science. Although I have devoted some study to it, I admit frankly that I am not in a position to discuss it in detail and to give the reasons for making rates in one part of the country along certain lines and in another along certain other lines. There has been no discrimination in the making of rates against Prince Edward Island; there has been no desire to give one part of the people undue advantage in rates on the government railway. Speaking in a broad sense I may say that the framers of confederation had no desire whatever to discriminate whatever against any section of Canada. They did come to an arrangement at the time Prince Edward Island entered confederation by which it was agreed that the Dominion government would give continuous steam communication between Prince Edward Island and the mainland. That has been the understanding, no person has ever attempted to deny that part of the contract. The advisability of constructing a tunnel is a question that has arisen only during the last few years.

Sir, has the government kept that part of the compact of confederation? I think that reasonably speaking it has. My hon. friend has suggested the running of a ferry from year end to year end under government control or government management. Possibly that is worth considering, but at the present moment has the compact of confederation been kept? I say it has, perhaps not with the result that hon. gentlemen would desire or that the framers of confederation would have desired had they lived at the present time and seen the state of affairs to-day, but under existing conditions I have no hesitation in saying that the governments of Canada have endeavoured to carry out the terms of confederation from the east of Canada to the west, regardless of the part of the country affected. Steam communication between Prince Edward Island and the mainland did not of necessity mean a railway. I believe I can go further and say it did not mean a railway at all; that the framers of confederation had not an idea of a tunnel in their minds. Then we have the question of communication by steamer. Has that been kept ? It has, and it has been kept too at a great cost to the Dominion of Canada. The other evening I had occasion to refer to the cost—I am not complaining, of the maintaining of a government system of railways on Prince Edward Island. Last year I think, approximately speaking, we paid something like $60,000 over and above the income. It was perfectly right for the government of Canada to do that, but it shows that Prince Edward Island has not been neglected. Then take the part of the compact which relates to maintaining communication between Prince Edward Island and the mainland. You would think to hear the hon. member for Prince and the hon. member for Queens that the government of Canada had done nothing, was doing nothing, had never done anything and that the island had been greatly neglected in this respect. I do not for a moment admit that. It has cost the Dominion of Canada an annual subsidy of $84,000 to keep up communication between Prince Edward Island and the mainland. As I understand our communication last year cost $100,000 and the revenue from that service was $16,000, leaving an annual charge of $84,000 a year to run a ferry between Prince Edward Island and the mainland during the winter. It is proper to make that expenditure, but the fact remains that the expenditure has been made.

Coming to the question of complaints, I would say that so long as the government owns and operates a railway so long will it have a greater number of complaints than if a company owned and operated the railway. I think I am safe in making that statement. I think I can go further and say that it is easier for a company to settle complaints or claims than for a government to settle complaints arising from various causes. The hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Emmerson) explained the position clearly. A government railway is the property of the people; the representatives of the people are looked upon by those who own the railway as the medium through which to bring before the powers that be their complaints, and naturally so, and every representative of the people thinks it his duty to his constituents to urge the claims made to him. Now the hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Emmerson) stated correctly that there are claims made to the Department of Railways and Canals that it has no power to settle, even if the minister and every member of the government wanted to settle them. The question is : Are we liable under the Act governing the running of the government railway? And if we are not, and it is referred to the Justice Department, as it must be, then the Justice Department must, under the Act, say that we have no right to pay; and if all these conditions were waived, the Auditor General would not let us pay. The members of this House, if they understood this thoroughly, would not have so many grievances against the Department of Railways and Canals as to the non-settlement of claims, which in many cases the department has no possible power to settle, no matter how willing it might be. During the present session an amendment has been made to the law by which the government railway is brought so far as possible under the provisions of the ordinary Railway Act as to the settlement of claims. Perhaps this will reduce the difficulty to a certain extent, but I imagine these claims will still have to go before the Exchequer Court as they do to-day, although the causes of complaint will be easier to be got at in a way. When cattle are killed on the track, for instance, the owners of them will find a settlement easier on account of the fact that the law is so changed that the conditions under which cattle may not go on the track are not the same as they were previously. I agree without hesitation that that is a weakness. I do not mean a weakness in the manning of the branch at all, but in existing conditions under the law, and under the Act governing government owned railways, it has been impossible to do even what the minister might want to do in the way of settling claims. I am in hopes that the new condition of affairs will remove some of the difficulties, because I want to say to the members of the House that so far as the department is concerned it has no desire whatever to shirk responsibility in paying claims that ought to be paid, even if, under the Act as it has been constituted, there might be no legal liability. There are cases that have come under my attention when I would gladly have made a settlement, cases of bodily injury where death has ensued, but there has been no legal liability; and the House need not be startled if I ask them before this session closes to vote money to pay some of these claims for which there is no legal liability, but which I think as matter of equity and of humanity ought to receive recognition at the hands of this parliament. Now, taking up the resolution and the statement:

That in the opinion of this House the names 'Intercolonial Railway' and 'Prince Edward Island Railway' should be dropped, and the name 'Interprovincial Railway' substituted therefor.

Without going into the question of the cost of transferring the rolling stock from Intercolonial to Interprovincial, let me say this, that there may not seem to be much in names, but if you take any business in the Dominion of Canada or elsewhere, the name of the company or the name of the firm is considered one of the most valuable assets in that business. It is a trade mark, it is the name which stands for certain things; and long years after the men who first formed the company or the partnership are gone, their names are still retained in the business in order that the standing the business had may be kept up under the original name. It is so with the Intercolonial. This is a government-owned railway, the world knows the Canadian government railway under the name of the Intercolonial. Wherever you go and discuss with railway men, they know that Canada owns a railway, they know the name of it, it stands for something. Leaving out the consideration of the cost, I would hesitate very much before I would consent to allow the name of the Intercolonial to be removed from the rolling stock of the government railway and be replaced by any other name, modern or otherwise. I believe we had better retain the name Intercolonial for what it stands for and what it has stood for. I may say in passing that I think hon. gentlemen will agree with we that the Intercolonial at present stands for a good roadbed, and a good service at minimum cost. We do not want to change the name, we do not want to change these conditions, but to make them better if possible. Take the next section:

That the government system of railways should be considered as one entity in the keeping of accounts and in all other respects.

On the face of it that looks very easy, but under present conditions the Department of Railways and Canals requires every railway in the Dominion of Canada to make a return along certain conditions. You have to give the number of cars, what they cost, the mileage, what it cost to build, you have to go along certain lines in making out the original cost, the expenses, and all that kind of thing. It would be impossible for a narrow gauge road and a standard gauge road to unite in this return to parliament. So long as the road on Prince Edward Island is maintained as a narrow gauge road, so long the railway itself must be considered as an entity by itself, and it cannot be reported upon in connection with a standard gauge railway. Then there is another thing I will point out. The Intercolonial has a certain business, it runs to certain points, it does not connect in any way with the Prince Edward Island road at present. Business on the Prince Edward Island Railway is kept by itself, and we do not begrudge the loss. But it would not be fair to the Intercolonial that is doing its through business, making connection with every railroad on this continent, either by itself or through other roads, that it should have the Prince Edward Island Railway attached to it. It must be run on different lines, run on different standards, run at a different cost. I do not think the change would be advisable, I think it would not be practical and would not attain any good result; particularly as the people of Canada are willing to pay a certain amount each year to provide the people of Prince Edward Island with railway facilities, and they can be accommodated as thoroughly with a narrow gauge railway as with a wider gauge railway.

That the ferry service across the Straits of Northumberland should be owned and managed by the Railway Department, winter and summer.

I take that as complimentary to the Railways and Canals Department. I know that my hon. friend from Queens and my hon. friend from Prince will not again say anything about the Railways and Canals Department being badly managed, because here they come and ask, in order that the service may be benefited, in order that the island may be better served, in order that the transportation between the mainland and the island may be carried on properly, that it be placed under the management of the Railways and Canals Department. I thank my hon. friends for the compliment. Now, should the Railways and Canals Department assume this responsibility? That is a question that is debatable, I say at once. If it is thought by parliament and by the country that we ought to make it part of the transportation problem from the west clear to the island, then that is a debatable point and one that should be discussed with a good deal of attention. I am not going to condemn it, but I am going to say that I do not think for a moment that running merely a winter service by the Railway Department would have any advantage over running the winter service by the Marine and Fisheries Department. The government, in order to carry out the compact of confederation, spends $84,000 a year over and above its receipts in order to keep up winter communication.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. Is not that $84,000 a portion of the expenditure on the boat while engaged in the summer service ? You have not yet eliminated the expenditure of the summer from the winter, and how can you tell that the expenditure of $84,000 in winter was over and above what was expended in summer ?

Mr. GRAHAM. Is it not only in winter that the government undertakes the service ?

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. Yes, but in the summer time the government spend large sums of money, last year some thousands of dollars, in running that boat for the fishery protection service and they gave the Governor General a trip which cost $10,000 or $12,000.

Mr. GRAHAM. My hon. friend is getting away from the point. The Marine Department have given me the figures. My hon. friend can reduce them by $10,000 if he likes but it makes no difference to my argument.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. The figures are incorrect.

Mr. GRAHAM. The hon. gentleman may reduce the amount by $10,000 if he likes.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. They should be reduced by $30,000.

Mr. GRAHAM. My hon. friend is extravagant in that as in other things, but we will let that go. We come back to this question of the ferry service. It is a matter for serious consideration whether the ferry service should not be made part of the transportation system. Possibly it is a service which ought to be placed under the control of the Department of Railways and Canals which deals with the transportation problems of the country, but I would not like to undertake the winter service if the summer service should not be placed under the same management. If we proposed to go exclusively into a ferry service winter and summer we would be confronted by the hon. gentlemen who are urging the construction of a tunnel, if it would be wise at the present time, that the government should incur another large expenditure in securing steamers while perhaps in a few years they would have to be discarded for the construction of a tunnel ? It opens up the question as to the advisability of making a thorough investigation with reference to the matter. I had hoped before this session is over, and I still hope, to lay upon the table of the House a report in connection with it. I am not prepared to say how much information it contains. I have had a considerable amount of discussion on this question with the chief engineer of the department, Mr. Butler, and as I stated in a previous debate, he promised to send down some information with reference to the construction of a tunnel. I had hoped to have had it on the table of the House, or in my hands, before this debate came on, but in that I have been disappointed. There is another question involved in this and it is the question of a car ferry. Sometimes it is suggested that the whole difficulty can be solved by the construction of a ferry service across the straits that will carry cars as they are carried at Detroit. Of course the distance is much greater but that would not make any difference except that the cost of transportation would be greater and the capital involved would be locked up during the longer time that it took to carry cars across the strait. That would involve the necessity of changing the gauge of the Prince Edward Island Railway from a narrow gauge to a standard gauge and it would involve the changing of the rolling stock from narrow to standard gauge and the expenditure would be very heavy. In connection with that it will at once be perceived that the project would be increased in cost to the extent of changing the Prince Edward Island Railway from a narrow gauge to a standard gauge. The connection cannot be made by rail without always taking into consideration the question of the different gauges of the Intercolonial Railway and the Prince Edward Island Railway. The two roads must be made one, that is the Prince Edward Island Railway must be brought up to the standard and in figuring up the cost of making the connection, either by a ferry or a tunnel, this must always be taken into consideration. I am not prepared to say that the government ought to plunge into this without giving it the most serious consideration. The connection between the Canadian Pacific Railway at Vancouver and at Victoria has been referred to. But, the conditions there are altogether different. The Canadian Pacific Railroad boats leave Vancouver outward bound and call at Victoria ; on the inward passage they call at Victoria and then proceed to Vancouver. These are two ocean ports, more to be compared with St. John and Halifax, although they are scarcely in that position, at which the Canadian Pacific Railway steamers stop. The Canadian Pacific Railway have worked out that part of their transportation problem and it is not probable that they will make any change in it. But, if we were confronted by a transportation problem of smaller magnitude such as we have down at Prince Edward Island, I think that the management, even of the Canadian Pacific Railway, would possibly charge as high a price for that accommodation. I am willing to make a comparison between the Intercolonial Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway rates, having reference to the accommodation afforded, at any place on the continent. This is not a question to be brushed aside lightly as being of no importance. I do not look upon it, as an hon. gentleman has suggested, as a joke ; I look upon it seriously. I do not know of anything having been done or said to affect elections. It is a matter of business and not of politics. It is in the interest of Canada, looking to the compact of confederation, looking to the interest of the people of Prince Edward Island as being part of the Dominion of Canada, that we should endeavour to provide good transportation facilities and better connection between the island and the mainland. I think, however, that it is the duty of the government, or any other government, even though this question has stood on the Order Paper for years, to look into the matter, and I feel assured that no government has any idea of treating this matter lightly, but, believing that this is a matter for serious consideration, I would suggest to my hon. friend, that, having secured the object of his motion in bringing this matter to the attention of the House and having had it discussed and ventilated, he should withdraw it for the present, leaving it in the hands of the government to make further inquiry.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I desire to say a word or two. The Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Graham) has referred to the very great advantage which has accrued to the country from the delay in constructing the tunnel. The tunnel, he says, can be constructed now much more cheaply than if it had been undertaken ten, or twelve or fifteen years ago. I suppose that if my hon. friend carried that argument to its legitimate conclusion he would point out that in the course of time, by geological changes, Prince Edward Island would be joined to the mainland and that the otherwise large expenditure involved in constructing the tunnel would be saved to the country altogether. I do not think that an argument of that kind would be very satisfactory to the people of Prince Edward Island and perhaps the noteworthy inaction of the government in regard to the tunnel may possibly lead to the delay to which I have just now alluded.

The minister referred to the large amount that has been expended by the government, the sum of $84,000, in maintaining one of these steamers in commission, during the winter, but as I understand it that amount would include the cost of maintaining the steamer in commission not only during the winter service but during the summer as well. And if one looks at the record of that expenditure on these steamers one finds, for example, that the 'Montcalm' is charged with an expenditure of $93,741.56 gross, or $85,110.88 net, although that steamer was not engaged in the winter service between the island and the mainland at all.

After all it does not matter very much whether it was $84,000 or $54,000. The government have made an effort to carry on this service so far as it can be carried on by steamboat, but that effort during portions of the time at least has not been very successful. It remains to be considered in the end that the country is pledged, under the terms of confederation, to an efficient steam service winter and summer between the island and the mainland. It may be that the framers of confederation did not have a tunnel in their mind when they used the language quoted by the Minister of Railways, but it is the meaning of the words which they used and not the intention which was in their minds that eventually controls. If the intention that was in the minds of the framers of confederation had governed, there is not much doubt but that Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island would be entitled to-day to the same representation in this House which they had when they entered confederation. However, in the judgment of the court, the language of the statute did not bear that meaning, and, therefore, the representation of these provinces has been reduced. To take the converse, although it may not have been in the minds of the framers of confederation that a tunnel should be built for the carrying out of this service, nevertheless if the words actually used could be made to include that meaning upon a reasonable interpretation we are not to go back and consider what was in the minds of men who used these words ; we are confined to a consideration of what the meaning of these words is when construed from a reasonable standpoint.

There is just one other consideration that it does not seem to me the Minister of Railways and Canals has had sufficiently in mind. When I visited Prince Edward Island some years ago I found one grievance to which I have repeatedly referred in the House and which it seemed to me it would be easy to remedy. That was the grievance that the Post Office Department, the Department of Railways and Canals and the Department of Marine and Fisheries have different offices and different work and different responsibility in connection with the winter service between Prince Edward Island and the mainland. I have repeatedly pointed out to the House during the last two or three sessions that it would seem a comparatively simple matter to place the management of that winter service under the control of some one department, so that we would not have the unnecessary and irritating delays which have taken place in the transmission of mails and passengers. I have never been able to imagine any particular reason why we should have the Intercolonial Railway service on the mainland and on the island under the control of the Railway Department and that the connecting steamship link between these two railways should be under the control of another department. It does not seem to me there is any necessity for that. Although the steamship service between the island and mainland may not be a ferry in the same sense as the service at the straits at Canso, nevertheless it is a ferry in one sense and it is a part of the transportation system between the two railways. It would be a step in the right direction if the views expressed by my hon. friends from Prince Edward Island were given effect to and the entire system placed under the control of one department of government. If you had united management and united action it would tend to a great degree towards the avoidance of these delays which are so irritating and exasperating to the people of Prince Edward Island. Something of that kind should be done in the meantime until the tunnel is built, or at least until the government, after the lapse we hope of a few more months which will bring the total delay up to about twelve years, shall have placed upon the table of the House that information upon this subject which ought to have been afforded to us long ago.

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). In reply to the remarks of the leader of the opposition I may say that in my opinion it is advisable that the winter steamboat service should be under the control of the Department of Marine on the general principle that all government steamers should be under the one department because it requires special organization and special management. Although there are some exceptions I believe that generally speaking that is the proper principle to follow, and that in the public interest it will be better to have all our steamers under the one department.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The hon. gentleman would not suggest that the ferry at the straits at Canso should be put under his department?

Mr. BRODEUR. That is purely a railway ferry service which is directly connected with the railway and which transfers the cars from the mainland to Cape Breton.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is true, but even when that ferry did not transfer the cars, but merely transferred the passengers and baggage—it was then analogous to the service to Prince Edward Island—it was under the control of the Railway Department.

Mr. BRODEUR. It must be remembered that the steamers which ply between Prince Edward Island and the mainland are only used in that service during the winter months and that in summer both the 'Stanley' and the 'Minto' are used for lighthouse and buoy service and for carrying supplies.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. But my hon. friend, I understand, is charging all this up against Prince Edward Island.

Mr. BRODEUR. Oh, no. My hon. friend mentioned the 'Montcalm.' I suppose he made a mistake in the name. The 'Montcalm' is not used in the Prince Edward Island service.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I said it was not.

Mr. BRODEUR. The boats used in that service are the 'Stanley' and the 'Minto.' The expenditures for the 'Minto' are set out at page P—20 of the Auditor General's Report. The total expenditure for the year ending 31st March, 1907, is $60,118.90. Of this $52,483.90 was taken from the vote for Dominion steamers, $2,635 from the vote for winter mail service and $5,000 from the vote for construction of lights. It is fair to deduct from that the expenditure, which is detailed there, amounting to $5,939.66.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN (Queen's). Does the minister deduct from that the expenditure for the Governor General's tour?

Mr. BRODEUR. That is what I am deducting. This leaves a balance to be charged to the winter service of a little over $54,000. For the 'Stanley' the expenditure is to be found at page P—27. This amounts to $45,504, making a total of $100,000 outside of the expenditure made for the Governor General's tour. These are the figures which have been given by my colleague, the Minister of Railways and Canals. The receipts are to be found at page 201: the 'Minto' gave a revenue of $9,075.23 and the 'Stanley' $7,793.65, making a total of nearly $17,000. So that the figures given by the Minister of Railways and Canals are absolutely correct.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN (Queens). Do you not credit something for the use of the steamers in the summer season by the government of Canada?

Mr. BRODEUR. The service that is rendered by the 'Minto' during the summer is detailed under the Governor General's tour.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN (Queen's). The 'Stanley' was engaged in that work too.

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not remember that the 'Stanley' was so engaged; I think she was undergoing repairs, though I may be mistaken in that. There is no doubt that the amount expended on the winter service is far in excess of the amount of the receipts. It is suggested by my hon. friend that the government should also take the summer service. I cannot accede to that proposition, because I think the service now given by the company engaged in it is giving general satisfaction. Moreover, the government is so often criticised for the winter service that I am afraid we could not give as good a service as that given by the company. It is well known that public utilities are better administered by private companies than by governments. It is suggested by my hon. friend from Prince that we should adopt a different policy with regard to the use of these boats. The principle adopted by the department is this: When the summer service of the private company is ended, it is taken up by the government between Charlottetown and Pictou. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Lefurgey) proposes that the boats shall go first to Summerside, then to Charlottetown and then to Georgetown. I am not in favour of changing ports so often; I think it is in the interest of the island that the service should be as much as possible concentrated at one place. Summerside is not so central as Charlottetown, and I think it is in the interest of the whole island for the boats to begin running from Charlottetown to Pictou, and that any change should be made on the advice of the captains, who are very efficient and cautious men, and whose judgment in that respect can be relied upon. I know that they have sometimes been accused of not being as bold as they should be; but it must be borne in mind that they have to assume a serious responsibility, and so far they have not got their vessels into any serious dfficulty. Instead of condemning their action, I think we should commend it. It is the policy of the department, in all cases, so far as a change of route is concerned, to base our action on the advice of the captains; and in that respect I am sure that we shall be sustained by the public opinion of the island. But the idea of changing about—one day at one place and another day at another—is not a practical one, and I do not at all agree with my hon. friend from Prince. I do not want to offer any more criticisms on the proposition which has been made. As far as the Department of Marine and Fisheries is concerned, we have given this year a very good service, and it is our intention to have an ice breaker built which will be strong enough to cope with the situation.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. The discussion on the resolution I have submitted has taken a wider range than I expected, most of which had reference to the transportation question, and I am very pleased that it has taken such a range. As I had to leave the chamber shortly after the close of my remarks, I regret that I had not the advantage of hearing what fell from the hon. the senior member for Queens (Mr. Martin) and the junior member for that county (Mr. A. A. McLean). I heard, however, all that my hon. friend from Prince (Mr. Lefurgey) said. It is much to be regretted that our friends from the island do not seem able to discuss any question affecting it except from a partisan standpoint. I am sorry they cannot discuss such matters as they are debated by our friends from the other provinces. If they would, much better results would be obtained than by this proceeding of bringing up party politics on every possible occasion. My hon. friend the senior member from Queens (Mr. Martin) was a little facetious regarding my remarks. He did not see how a change of name could reduce the freight rates. In that I agree with him, but I suggested nothing of the kind. My hon. friend from Prince said that this resolution was not original on my part. Well, I did not claim it was. I dare say that Columbus when he started out to discover America got many of his ideas from my hon. friend, because nothing has yet ever been taken up which he did not, in his mind, consider at some time or other. As regards the tunnel, although that does not properly come under this resolution at all, I was much pleased to hear the Minister of Railways (Mr. Graham) say that very shortly he hoped to be able to lay on the table the report made by his deputy minister, and when that report is brought down the tunnel question can be more intelligently discussed. I have taken the ground for many years that the government should proceed as quickly as possible with a thorough investigation into the question of constructing a tunnel. Let us know as nearly as possible what it will cost so that it need not be kept before the people of Prince Edward Island and Canada continually. If its construction be found practicable, let it be taken up and disposed of in a business way. If it be not practicable, let us take up the next best method. But in any event it will take several years to construct the tunnel and some time to obtain the preliminary information, and in the meantime we must improve the methods we have. My hon. friend from Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) said that the fact that the routing of freight via Pictou did not cost any more than by Pointe du Chêne and Summerside was no injury to the people of the island. I am aware of that, but it is to the detriment of the Prince Edward Island Railway and to the advantage of the Intercolonial Railway, because by that means the deficit on the Prince Edward Island Railway is larger than it ought to be. The putting of the service across the straits under the Railway Department appeals to me from a business standpoint, as it would simplify matters very much. It would reduce the cost, although I believe that the estimate of the cost given by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries is too large. He did not give credit enough to the winter service. You must take into account the fact that the government is compelled practically to find some use for the winter boats in the summer and has to retain in its service during the summer season the staff employed on the winter boats. We have no fault to find with the government on this account, because they must necessarily retain the whole year around the officials whom they are bound to employ on the winter service. I do not know that these are the most suitable steamers for taking the Governor General and his party on excursion trips. They are very expensive for that purpose ; they are large consumers of coal and every time they are used for this purpose alterations and repairs have to be made to them ; the staterooms have to be changed and bathrooms put in just for these trips, and when the steamers are put in their regular service this has all to be changed again. This expense was not deducted by the Minister of Marine.

Mr. BRODEUR. Oh, yes.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. It is not given in the report of the Governor General's trip at page 20 of the Auditor General's Report, only the actual provisions consumed are given, all the rest are charged to the winter service. These steamers may be suitable for lighthouse service along the Labrador, lower Quebec and Newfoundland coasts, but I am not sure that they are the best boats even for that purpose. As I suggested this afternoon, if these boats were kept for the winter service entirely and were put out of commission during the summer, the crews of the winter and summer steamers being interchanged, there would be a material saving.

We have no special fault to find with the management of these boats by the Marine Department except, as I have stated, that that department was not established as a carrying or transportation department, and should not have control of work of that kind, while the Railway Department was established for that purpose and is conversant with all details of transportation questions. I have already suggested that a railway corporation situated as the government is situated here, with portions of its railway on the island and on the mainland would also control the connecting link.

Inasmuch as my object in making this motion has been attained by this discussion and the minister has suggested that it be withdrawn for the present and that it would be taken under consideration by the government, I see no reason for not acceding to his wishes. I am glad to see the matter has been fully discussed by the Minister of Railways, the leader of the opposition, the Minister of Marine and others and I am sure good will come of this discussion. I have pointed out the serious handicap under which the people of my province rest in the shipping of their products in competition with the people of the other provinces of Canada. That is the real point I had in view in bringing up this motion. We should be on an equality with our neighbours on the mainland, with the rest of the people of the Dominion, in regard to freight and passenger rates, or at least we should have a nearer approach to equality than we have now. This matter deserves the immediate consideration of the government, and I am convinced that if it were all under one department we would be nearer an equalization of rates with the rest of Canada, than will be possible with the service under two departments. So long as the existing conditions continue, we will not have attained the object we had in view in entering confederation. Mr. Speaker, under these conditions I will agree to withdraw the motion for the present.

Motion withdrawn.

ADJOURNMENT—BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. FIELDING. I understand that the next motion in order is one which, if entered upon, will lead to a protracted debate. It has been suggested that we do not enter upon it to-night and I would move the adjournment of the House.

Mr. TAYLOR. When will the correspondence between the Prime Minister and Mr. Justice Cassels, promised for to-day, be brought down ?

Mr. FIELDING. If the Prime Minister is not here to-morrow I shall make inquiry for it. I have no doubt it will be brought down to-morrow.

Mr. TAYLOR. What business will be taken up to-morrow ?

Mr. FIELDING. A motion for Supply will be made. I understand the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Knowles) desires to discuss the Hudson's Bay Railway and this motion for Supply will be made to afford an opportunity to discuss that subject as well as to go into Supply later.

Motion (Mr. Fielding) agreed to and House adjourned at 10.25 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, April 7, 1908.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 151) respecting the Grand Trunk Pacific Branch Lines Company.—Mr. Crawford.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER moved:

That from this date to the end of the session, government orders have precedence on Mondays immediately after questions to be put by members.

Mr. SPROULE. As there are some sixty-five orders on the Order Paper, Public Bills and Orders, and as this will preclude the possibility of dealing with any of these without the consent of the government, I would ask if I could not have an opportunity of passing the motion which I ineffectually endeavoured to have passed some time ago, when the First Minister moved the adjournment of the debate. I submit that the motion is a reasonable one ; a similar motion was moved on a previous occasion in this House without opposition and I hold the printed copy of it here. This motion really goes farther than my motion. As the matter is of importance not only to myself but to both parties as the return would do no injustice I would ask the First Minister to consent to the passing of my motion.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). I am sorry to say that there are several members who have motions or Bills which they would like to have an opportunity to bring to the attention of the House. However, we have come to the period of the session when this motion taking Monday for government business is usually passed. If my hon. friend will allow the matter to stand, perhaps he and I can settle it.

Motion (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) agreed to.

THOMAS D'ARCY McGEE.

Mr. THOMAS CHISHOLM. As this is the 40th anniversary of the death of Thomas D'Arcy McGee, I would like to know what steps the government are likely to take in regard to the fulfilment of a promise made by the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) on the 25th April last year in respect to the erection of a monument to his memory?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). The matter will receive the consideration of the government in connection with the coming estimates.

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. When may I expect the return for which I moved in connection with the cost to date and the estimated future cost of the eastern division of the National Transcontinental Railway?

Hon. G. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals). I asked my department to rush that return and also directed them to comply with the request of my hon. friend to include in the return anything that was embraced in the question which he withdrew.

Mr. PORTER. When may I expect the return ordered on January 15, with reference to royal commissions appointed by the government since 1896 ?

Mr. CROCKET. When may I expect a return moved for on December 18 for a statement showing the post office services in the different counties of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick?

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Postmaster General). I have the returns for several counties ready and expect that the remainder will be ready in a few days. Probably next week I shall be able to lay the papers on the table of the House.

Mr. MONK. I beg to renew a notice which I gave some time last month that on the first opportunity when the House should be moved into Committee of Supply, I would move an amendment having for its object the abolition of the bonus system.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). If my hon. friend will agree with me I will arrange a date privately with him if he wants to have an opportunity of discussing this matter.

Mr. MONK. There would be no difficulty in so far as I am personally concerned, but knowing that the House was going to be moved into Committee of Supply to-day I informed a number of hon. members who wish to speak upon this subject that the discussion would take place to-day. It seems to be an inconvenient custom to introduce into this House that supporters of the government, without giving notice, should be able to arrange for a discussion, presumably of an amicable character, just at the stage when the House is moved into Committee of Supply. It is the proper moment, as I understand it, to air grievances, and it is for that reason that I would be rather disposed to insist upon what appears to be my right.

Mr. FIELDING. I think there have been several motions for Supply since my hon. friend gave that intimation, if I am not mistaken.

Mr. MONK. I beg my hon. friend's pardon. I think there was only one motion to go into Supply which was made in order to vote a certain amount of Supply to meet the pressing needs of the fiscal year ending on the 31st March.

Mr. FIELDING. I have not turned up the dates and I cannot contradict my hon. friend, but my impression is that there have been several motions to go into Supply. Therefore, the hon. gentleman has had an opportunity to bring this matter up. In regard to the motion to-day all that happened was what very often happens; if an hon. gentleman desires to deal with any given question he asks when the House is going to be moved into Committee of Supply and he intimates that he will bring the matter up. This question was mentioned last night in connection with the business of the House. I would suggest that unless the hon. gentleman wishes to speak on this question he can bring forward his motion after the earlier discussion has taken place.

Mr. MONK. I do not think that any motion to go into Committee of Supply has been moved since I gave this notice except the one to which I have just referred.

Mr. FIELDING. I have not looked up the dates, but I am under that impression. However, my hon. friend may be right.

Mr. MONK. My hon. friend here beside me informs me that the hon. gentleman who intends to discuss this question has a notice of motion on the paper.

Mr. FIELDING. In his absence yesterday another hon. gentleman struck it off at his request in order that he might be able to bring it up on the motion to go into Supply.

Mr. SPROULE. And before it was struck off the paper my hon. friend who has just taken his seat (Mr. Monk) gave notice that the first time the House was moved into Committee of Supply he would bring his motion forward.

Mr. FIELDING. No.

Mr. SPROULE. That is my understanding.

Mr. FIELDING. The hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) did not say the first time that the House was moved into Committee of Supply; he said that upon a future occasion when the House was moved into Committee of Supply he would bring the matter up. He simply intimated an intention to bring forward his motion but he did not say that he would do so on the first motion to go into committee.

Mr. MONK. I have just been looking over 'Hansard' and I cannot find it, but my recollection is that I gave notice that the first time the House was moved into Committee of Supply, if I could conveniently present this motion, I would do so.

Mr. FIELDING. Yes.

Mr. MONK. My impression is that the motion to go into Supply has only been made on one occasion.

Mr. FIELDING. I do not attach enough importance to it to look it up, but I remember that the hon. gentleman gave notice that if the House was going to be moved into Supply on a particular evening he preferred not to go on.

Mr. MONK. But it was not moved.

Mr. FIELDING. If the House should be moved into Supply on that evening.

Mr. MONK. It was not moved into Supply on that occasion. I think it is a very inconvenient custom which does not exist in England to arrange for the discussion, at the moment when the House is moved into Committee of Supply, of some question chosen by a supporter of the government upon which there is some extente cordiale. It removes from members on the opposition side of the House the opportunity of engaging in the discussion of grievances.

Mr. FIELDING. I can only say that in so far as an arrangement being made with an hon. gentleman supporting the government is concerned, it is a common occurrence for an hon. gentleman on either side of this House to come to a minister and ask when the motion for Supply will next be made, as he desires to avail himself of the opportunity to call attention to a particular subject. I have had such suggestions made to me frequently and I have said that on such and such a day Supply would be moved; as to the rest it was in the judgment of the House.

SUPPLY—RAILWAY TO HUDSON BAY.

Mr. FIELDING moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. W. E. KNOWLES (West Assiniboia). Mr. Speaker, as has been said by an hon. gentleman opposite this afternoon the notice of this motion has been on the Order Paper since the commencement of this session asking that the government should take into their serious consideration the question of transportation in reference to the Canadian west and especially in regard to the construction in the very near future of the Hudson Bay Railway. It had been my purpose to go on with that motion on the first available opportunity, and I have been watching for such an opportunity for weeks, but upon any occasion upon which I have been present it has not presented itself. Yesterday it was dropped that I might have the privilege which is open to every hon. member of this House of presenting views upon this and similar subjects on the occasion of our going into Committee of Supply.

The proposition which I desire to bring before the House is one which my hon. friend from Saskatchewan (Mr. McCraney) seconded last year and one which I believe he will still endorse. Over a year ago I brought to the attention of this House this same problem. On that occasion I had a very strong case to make before the House in view of the very congested condition of the transportation facilities in the west. The House will recall that a year ago there was a very much more serious congestion than there is during this present year. Happily this year we have not had the vicissitudes in regard to weather conditions to cause a repetition of the very serious condition of affairs which prevailed a year ago, but I am sorry to have to say again this session that notwithstanding the condition of the season, the favourable weather we have had and the unfortunately small crop, there has still been a great deal of congestion. I have seen at different points in the elevator towns in the Northwest a condition of affairs where men were not able to ship the grain which they had raised for weeks this last fall because of the repetition of this congested condition of affairs, and I must say that I cannot too forcibly impress upon the members of this House the seriousness of a condition of that kind. When we find that men have worked their farms through the summer to the end that they may have the product of the soil to sell, and when we find that when they have that product ready for market they are not able to move it, they are not able to find a purchaser for their grain, it is indeed a most serious condition of affairs. I myself have stood at many elevator points along the different railway lines and I have seen farmers standing with their hands in their pockets looking up at the elevators and entirely helpless to raise one dollar upon their grain.

However, the condition of affairs this season was not nearly so serious as in the season before. But that does not in any way make me hesitate in my desire to bring this question again before the House during the present session, for I think it would be the utmost folly if we were to say that because last year we had something of a failure in our crop, and because this winter has been so favourable in weather conditions there has not been the congestion that otherwise would prevail and therefore, we have considered the transportation problem solved. That would be a most foolish policy. I desire on the contrary to say that under these circumstances, while they ensure against a repetition this year of the serious condition of affairs that we had a year ago, at the same time instead of making us less anxious they should make us more anxious, because it is no exaggeration to say that as each succeeding year comes upon us there will always be a greater problem to solve than there was in the year before. The country is filling up by leaps and bounds, and unless there is something undertaken by the government of Canada in the very near future I am at a loss to know how we will solve this great problem of transportation. We have had during the last few seasons an abnormal increase of our population by immigration. During the year 1906 there came into our country from Great Britain, 97,757 immigrants; from the United States, 63,782 immigrants and from continental Europe, 54,373; making a total of immigrants in 1906 of 215,912. In the year 1907 we had a total immigration of 277,376, a very material increase over the number of immigrants in 1906. And, I am happy to say that the class of immigrants which we have been receiving in recent years belong to the very best class of people we could expect to bring to this country. I might cite as an instance of this that the settlers from the United States in 1906 brought with them settlers, effects to the value of 49 million dollars, and in 1907 they brought with them settlers, effects to the value of 52 million dollars. And, I may say to those gentlemen who are prone to talk about the balance of trade being against us, that if they consider such an item as this in their calculations it would go a long way to explain how it is that our imports are greater than our exports. If we take 52 million dollars worth of settlers effects brought from the United States alone, it will give us an average per capita for each immigrant of over $800. We are all aware that the immigration during the present year has been larger than it was last year, and that during January and February of this year (1908) there has been an increase of 61 per cent over the immigration in January and February of the year 1907.

It is reliably figured that the lands in the provinces of Manitoba, Alberta and Saskatchewan which are not yet tilled, will when brought under cultivation result in the reaping of the harvest of almost inconceivable magnitude; that if we take the grain land which as yet is not settled and if we figure that on the basis of it producing only one half of what the present cultivated acreage does, even on that basis there will be 2,000,000,000 bushels of grain raised in the three new west provinces. It is therefore no exaggeration to say that the outlook in that country is very bright, and that for the moment we are justified in passing on to this very urgent matter of attempting to solve the great transportation problem in preference to taking up the subject which the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) wished to discuss this afternoon. I might also remind my hon. friends on both sides of the House that the facilities for handling the grain in the way of transportation accommodation are very little better than they were twenty-three years ago when the last spike was driven on the Canadian Pacific Railway. I fail to see how any hon. gentlemen on either side of the House can say that the government is going too fast, as they sometimes say when they talk about the construction of the Grand Trunk Pacific. These hon. gentlemen may express themselves similarly with regard to this proposition that I have the honour to bring before the House this afternoon, and they may say that Canada can afford to go slowly, but I say that in view of the fact that we have very little more facilities for transportation than we had twenty-five years ago, the criticism is, in all fairness and justice, not properly advanced that the government of Canada has gone too fast in making provision along the line of transportation facilities. It comes to this, that with regard to the production of grain just as with regard to the production of any other staple you may have for the world's market, if you cannot find a reasonable and convenient market for the thing you are producing the rules of trade and commerce very soon cause the production to cease. You cannot for ever expect farmers in the Northwest to be producing grain they cannot sell. You cannot expect they will go on producing that for which they cannot find a ready market any more than you can expect the man who runs a factory to keep on producing goods when he is not able to find a convenient market for the product of his factory. And with regard to the Northwest Territories, Providence has cast our lot along agricultural lines just as in Ontario, to a very large extent, the lot of that province is cast along manufacturing lines. The wealth of Ontario is largely bound up in the great cities where the manufacturing industries are centralized, while just as truly are our lines cast for us along agricultural pursuits. That is so ordained by nature and it is only by developing our resources along that natural line that we will be able to attain the true destiny for which the great fertile prairies were created. After all, without the slightest comparison that may be odious, I leave it to any hon. gentleman present if it is not a fair proposition to make, that if there must be any industry encouraged first in the Dominion of Canada, we first should encourage the agricultural industry. I recall reading in a recent life of Peel that he said: We would no doubt rather have corn fields than cotton factories; we no doubt would rather have an agricultural population than a population engaged in manufacturing industries, but Providence has decreed otherwise and statesmen are powerless to prevail against it. So I may say with regard to the Northwest Territories, that it is always going to be for the blessing of Canada that Providence has ordained that that country shall be a great agricultural country and the supporter of a great agricultural population which in morals, in intelligence, in industry, and in every desirable feature you like to speak of, is always recognized throughout the world as the best and most desirable population that any nation may aspire to possess. And, when we speak about solving the problem of the agricultural community the words can scarcely be out of our mouth before we learn that it is the transportation problem we have to solve, and that when we talk about agricultural problems in that country of great distance it amounts to the same thing as referring to the transportation problem. I must remark here that I read, very carefully the platform of the leader of the opposition announced in the city of Halifax, and it was with regret I found that for us in the west he had no utterance to make with regard to how we were going to solve that great problem. I should have been very pleased had he on that occasion taken hold of the great national question of the Hudson Bay Railway, or the great national question of transportation for the movement of our grain in the west, and if he had presented to us in definite words that we could have understood some solution by which he thought we could address ourselves to the carrying out of this great task which lies upon us as a nation. I say it was with regret, that in the platform of the leader of the opposition announced in the city of Halifax, I was not able to find any treatment of this important subject.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would ask my hon. friend whether he has found out what the government platform is on the question ?

Mr. KNOWLES. I am trying to find that out this afternoon. However, since the Hudson Bay Railway became a great national question, the government as far as I am aware has not undertaken to consolidate and present their policy in the clear and well defined words which we find for example in the Halifax platform.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Hear, hear.

Mr. KNOWLES. I have not said that I am altogether satisfied with the way in which the government have addressed themselves to the transportation problem of the west : I would like to have seen them move a little more quickly.

Coming to the specific matter about which I wish to speak this afternoon, I wish again briefly to give the distances from various settled points in the Northwest by way of the proposed Hudson Bay Railway, in order that the figures may be again placed on 'Hansard.' Generally speaking, the use of the Hudson Bay Railway will save about the distance from Fort William to the sea ; that is to say, the distance from the centre of the wheat country to Fort Churchill is about the same as the distance from the centre of the wheat country to Fort William, and the distance from Fort Churchill to Liverpool is about the same as the distance from Montreal to Liverpool, which means that the distance from Fort William to Montreal will be saved. The various distances are as follows :

From	To Montreal.	To Fort Churchill.	Difference
	Miles.	Miles.	Miles.
Winnipeg.....	1,422	945	477
Brandon	1,555	940	615
Moosejaw.....	1,823	817	1,006
Medicine Hat.....	2,082	1,076	1,006

The distance from Fort Churchill to Liverpool is 2,946 miles and the distance from Montreal to Liverpool is 2,927 miles, being practically the same. The distance from New York to Liverpool by the northern route is 3,079 miles. Thus there will be, generally speaking, a saving of distance by the Hudson Bay route, as proposed between 950 and 1,000 miles. This saving in distance will be of course a great advantage in every direction. It will mean a saving in time and in charges, while the route will afford, what is very important, another outlet for the products of the west. The number of miles of railway that will require to be constructed is at present only 470 or 475 miles, just about one and a half the distance from Toronto to Montreal. That seems a small matter when we consider the importance of moving the wheat harvested in the western country every year. With regard to the saving of charges, I wish to refer to the treatise on the subject compiled by Mr. J. A. McKenna under instructions of the hon. Minister of the Interior, and published by the Department of the Interior. This treatise is regarded as an authority on the subject. At page 51, Mr. McKenna says, with regard to the saving on wheat :

The freight upon grain from the wheat belt to Hudson bay would approximate ten cents a bushel, the same as to Port Arthur; the additional 15 cents from there to the Atlantic sea-board would be saved to the farmer, and this, of itself, represents a fair profit to the wheat-grower. Assuming an export trade of 20,000,000 of bushels, which can easily be handled in two months of the season by the proposed railway the saving of 15 cents a bushel, being the difference in cost of freight from Port Arthur to the Atlantic sea-board, would amount to $3,000,000.

That is with regard to wheat alone. Now let me read what Mr. McKenna has to say with regard to the saving and profit in the transportation of cattle :

A very important feature in connection with a railway which secures quick access to the sea is with relation to the shipping of cattle to the European markets; this great industry is at present seriously handicapped in consequence of the long journey to be endured under present conditions. It is admitted as a well recognized fact, that cattle shipped to the Atlantic coast arrive at the shipping port in poor condition, emaciated by long days of rail travel. It is also admitted that on the sea journey they gain rather than lose in flesh, if put on board in good condition. Experience proves that after three days of rail travel cattle will deteriorate; that three days is about the limit of the time during which they can travel and maintain the condition in which they are placed on board. This being so, cattle could be transported to Fort Churchill without loss in flesh, and the voyage to Liverpool would improve this condition rather than the contrary. Therefore, this great industry alone would find in the Fort Churchill route a solution of the difficulty under which those engaged in the business of cattle shipping now labour.

Mr. F. W. Peters, assistant freight traffic manager of the Canadian Pacific at Winnipeg, states that up to the end of October over 72,000 head of cattle had been shipped to Liverpool from western Canada, and he expected a further 10,000 head to be shipped that season. The freight rate on these cattle would be about 60 cents a hundred pounds in car lots from Winnipeg to Montreal. The rate from Calgary to Fort Churchill would be about the same as to Winnipeg, and the distance about equal, so that this 60 cents a hundred pounds could be saved to the shipper if he could put the cattle on board at Hudson bay, and he would also prevent the shrinkage which would otherwise occur, by reason of the additional rail journey from Winnipeg to Montreal.

Upon the 82,000 head of cattle shipped to Montreal from the west during the past season, the saving in freight alone, $6 a head, or in round figures $650,000, would be equal to about 20 per cent of the selling price.

That has reference to the saving in freight charges alone; and it is said by experienced cattlemen that to these you can add $2 a head for the saving of shrinkage in the cattle from making the rail journey so much shorter.

We now come to the question of the land through which this railway will have to pass. In my speech of last session I went into this subject more fully than I propose to do to-day, because the character of the land is not something that has now to be proved, but is generally accepted. We have had expert evidence given on this subject before different committees of the House during this session and last session, and I think that not only to hon. members of this House but to the whole country it is no longer a debatable question whether or not the country through which it is proposed to build this railway is of such a nature that the railway is feasible. It is recognized to be a country through which the building of a railway would not be difficult. A great deal of the country is of limestone formation, which is the ideal kind of land upon which to lay rails. There is sufficient timber to furnish ties in abundance. And there are resources which would bring a great deal of profitable traffic to the railway. Besides the short distance over which a railway has to be constructed, 470 miles, surely justifies me in saying that the construction is from every point of view, feasible, and one which would bring such profit to the farmers of the Northwest Territories that there can be no excuse for delaying the work any longer.

I beg to refer to a document published by the Senate entitled 'Our Fertile North Lands.' On page 89 you will find particulars regarding the nature of the country. I have had the pleasure of discussing this question with different engineers who have been over that territory, and they tell me—especially Mr. Thibaudeau, an engineer who has recently been out there—that in every way it is an ideal country for railway building. There are great stretches in it of first-class agricultural land. For an extent of 200 miles north and south and an indefinite distance east and west there are great resources which would yield profitable traffic. There are timber, mineral and agricultural lands, and when we get to the bay itself we find good fisheries such as cod, salmon and lake trout. As regards Fort Churchill, it is one of the best natural harbours in the world. It is deep, well sheltered, easily kept open during nine months of the year, and there would be very little cost in fitting it up beyond the building of elevators and wharfs. On pages 45 and 46 of this book to which I have referred, I find that the writer, Mr. McKenna, quoting from Mr. Thibaudeau, thus describes some of the advantages of Fort Churchill harbour:

It can be kept open all the year by the employment of ice-breakers. Last year, 1906, the harbour closed between December 5 and December 10. The conditions in January, 1907, were as follows: In the bay at Fort Churchill the ice was 11 inches thick. It extended for a third of a mile from the shore into the bay. Ice was much thinner in the bay than in the harbour. There was some floating ice about a quarter of a mile from the edge of the bay ice. This is sent in by a northerly wind; should the prevailing winds blow from any other direction, there would be no floating ice. Beyond this floating ice there was clear open water straight away into the bay and beyond. This was the general condition up to and including January 2, 1907. An ice-breaker similar to either the north or south now in use between Quebec and Levis would, by making two trips a week, keep the harbour open the year round.

The entrance to the harbour is about 2,000 feet wide, with a minimum depth of water of ten fathoms. Vessels drawing 36 feet draft could enter the harbour and anchor within 200 yards of the west division, to a point 3,500 feet south of Fort Prince of Wales. The bay outside the harbour also affords good anchorage; there is ample depth of water.

A vessel drawing 24 feet of water can come within 150 yards of the east side of the harbour, from its mouth to a point 150 yards south of Battery beacon. There is also good anchorage south of the point east alluded to (150 yards south of Battery beacon) for 2,000 feet by 800 feet in width for vessels drawing 24 feet of water. Opposite Battery beacon for a distance of 2,500 feet across the harbour there is a minimum depth of 24 feet of water.

He then goes on to speak of other places in and outside the harbour where there is splendid anchorage. The great question, of course, occurs to us at this point, and that is the navigability of the straits. This is also dealt with in the treatise to which I have referred. I shall not take up time by going into the details, but there seems to be no doubt that the straits are safely navigable at least four months in the year. A great many of the old Hudson bay navigators put a much longer period of time during which the straits are open to shipping. We have data on this subject dating back about one hundred and fifty years, for ships have gone into the bay as many and even more years back. And when we reflect that in this present age we have our ice-breakers, our modern steamships which can break the ice themselves, and with the aids to navigation such as telegraph stations, lighthouses and other facilities, there does not seem the slightest doubt that the Hudson bay straits could easily be open for shipping at least four months in the year. My own opinion is that they may be kept open much longer.

So far I have discussed the question from the view point of the west. Let me point out that it would also be profitable for the eastern provinces. In the territories, in the next fifteen or twenty or a hundred years, we shall require great quantities of steel. This is called the steel age, and in the construction of our buildings and bridges and other works of development, including railways, we shall require no doubt immense quantities of that product. Is it not very advisable, therefore, that ships should come direct from the steel plants in Sydney, laden with their products, and discharge in Fort Churchill, which is but a few hundred miles away from the centre of the Northwest Territories? Not only does this apply to steel but to all those other products which are placed upon the market by our fellow citizens in Nova Scotia, Cape Breton or even Prince Edward Island. Take, for instance, fish and other products raised in these provinces, they could be laid down at Fort Churchill very cheaply and in that way help not only the west but the east.

I now come to deal for a few minutes with the question of who should pay for the Hudson Bay Railway. My hon. friend from Brandon (Mr. Sifton) seemed to lay it down as a foregone conclusion, that the money should not come out of the exchequer of Canada. I wish to be the last to raise the question of the east against the west or the west against the east. There is no profit in that kind of discussion, but I would be wanting in my duty to my constituents, if I did not say very frankly that, in my humble opinion, the people of the west are contributing very much to the exchequer of the Dominion and are not receiving one scintilla of profit in return except what they get back in the shape of expended revenue. It would not be unreasonable therefore to ask our friends in the east to seriously consider this question, whether it would not, in some way, tend to equalize the burdens of this nation we are trying together to build up if a return were made to the west by undertaking some great national enterprise such as this. It is very seldom that this matter is touched upon in this House, but this afternoon I am going to speak for a moment or two frankly along that line. When I spoke last session on the subject of the Hudson Bay Railway, I said that we of the west were willing to pay a certain amount of revenue and, incidentally—as there is no use denying—a certain amount of protection, that we might help our sister provinces of Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia and the rest to develop their resources and build up their industries to the end that we might, together, eventually make a great nation in Canada. But I wish to recall what this House does not often hear, and that is that we are agriculturists, and while there are many agriculturists in Ontario and Quebec and the other older provinces, yet our people do not profit from the building up of manufacturing centres as do the agricultrists in the eastern provinces. The agriculturist in Ontario may find the burden of the tariff bear somewhat heavily upon him as a consumer, but he always has the consoling thought that he is building up at his very doors, a great market—in Toronto it may be, London, or Hamilton, or Halifax, or Sydney, or Quebec or Montreal—building up a great market to which he may bring his produce. But there is no such consolation for us, there is no such compensation for us. We have to find our market on Liverpool prices, and anything that we contribute for the building up of Canada—I want to say here and I say it without fear of contradiction—we are paying for the purpose of building up the nation and there is no selfish advantage whatever. In view of that fact, would it be a very unreasonable principle to lay down, that, in the administration of the affairs of this country, the west should be more generously dealt with than she is, and that in the administration of the affairs of the country there should be a freer hand in dealing with the west because she has no such compensation as that of which I have spoken in the case of the people who live in the east? Of course this is not necessarily to be applied toward the building of the Hudson Bay Railway, but I contend that it is not an unreasonable principle to lay down.

My hon. friend from Brandon (Mr. Sifton) suggests—and I confess that I have nearly made up my mind that there is something in the idea—that the Hudson Bay Railway is not to be built out of the exchequer of Canada. The hon. gentleman suggests an arrangement which he outlined. He said: Let us keep one-tenth of the lands and wait until they are worth $10 and $12 an acre, and then sell them and reimburse the exchequer of Canada for the cost of building the road. To me it is a very unwelcome task to differ from such an eminent and hon. gentleman as the member from Brandon; still, in my humble way, I do differ from the position he laid down, and I will tell you why. For one thing, I am against tying up ten per cent of the land. We have had such a curse upon us from tying up lands for the Canadian Pacific Railway that not ten per cent, or even one per cent, would I favour tying up for the days to come. I can show you school districts, Mr. Speaker, that have to close the doors of their schools and could not educate their children because of the tying up the lands of the Canadian Pacific Railway as these lands could not be taxed. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Sifton) went further, and took advantage of the opportunity to say that, in his opinion, the odd-numbered sections which had been tied up as being in the railway belt, should be thrown open for settlement without the preemption. I do not agree with the hon. gentleman in his expression of opinion on that point either. The governmnet has already announced itself—the announcement having been made last session that it was in favour of the pre-emption clause in the Consolidated Land Bill which was brought down, and I have no reason to believe that the government has changed on that point. For my part, I was a supporter of that feature, and am still in favour of it. That Bill provides that the present settler in the Northwest shall be given opportunity to become possessed of a farm of not only 160 acres but 320 acres. Let me give, very briefly, my reasons for favouring this plan. In the first place, we must admit that the best land, speaking generally, is gone. Of course, there is a great deal of good land left, and not homesteaded? I am not trying to give a black eye to the land not taken up—but there is no denying that, generally speaking, the choice land has been taken, as is only natural. Therefore, it is to be considered whether there is not an arrangement to be made by which a man, if he cannot get as good land as the homesteader of the past got, many receive more of the land that is not so valuable. And we say that it is to be given on residence duties as proposed, with the payment of $3 an acre, that removes any objection that may be raised that the land is going to the speculator. As I am on that subject, I wish to say what my opinion is in reference to the pre-emption clause. My hon. friend from Brandon brought this subject up. I have no hesitation in saying, as a western man, and one in touch with western conditions, that the opposition to this provision of the measure comes from the great land speculators of the west. Let me read an article from the Regina 'Standard,' which hon. gentlemen opposite, no doubt, will listen to with great respect—and, on the point referred to I think the 'Standard' is right. I read from the issue of March 5:

Hon. Frank Oliver's new land measure, which was mentioned in the Speech from the Throne in the House of Commons——

I am not sure they are right about that.

—and which is shortly to be up for consideration, was the subject of discussion, it is learned, at a meeting of a number of business men at the city hall yesterday afternoon, at which John Ridington, formerly of the Winnipeg 'Free Press,' but now representing the corporations interested, and attached to the staff of the Pearson Land Company, dealt with the pre-emption provisions of the Bill and endeavoured to work up a feeling against these pre-emption clauses with a view to having pressure brought to bear on Mr. Oliver, through letters to Sir Wilfrid Laurier, to break the determination of the Minister of the Interior to have the pre-emption clauses inserted. Mr. Ridington's mission was not crowned with much success, apparently, for the meeting broke up without any action being taken and the whole question was referred to the business men's committee of the board of trade.

It is gathered that Mr. Ridington's main objection was to the pre-emption clauses of the Oliver Land Bill.

I could read you other reports and items from the public press which go to show that this opposition comes from the great land speculators. I myself was waited upon by a gentleman, who, I think, is the largest land dealer in Winnipeg, and he asked me to give my opposition to these Bills. He said: With all our thousands and tens of thousands of acres of land, if the Dominion government is going to throw open the odd-numbered sections to enable men to get their quarter-section by means of pre-emption, it would ruin our market. I remember his saying to me: If the government must give the settler another 160 acres, don't talk about $3 an acre; we want $15 an acre for our land, and when you talk about $3 an acre it makes people say our price is ridiculous. I could cite many cases of men identified with the land interest in the west, having taken a similar view to that of my hon. friend from Brandon, that the pre-emption feature should not be carried out, but that the land should be kept only for the individual homesteader. There is this also to be remembered that previously when homesteaders went into that country they had the privilege of purchasing another quarter-section in addition to their homestead from the railway company or the Hudson Bay Company. That privilege is now gone. The railway lands are nearly all sold, the Hudson Bay lands are virtually all sold, so I have no hesitation in saying, speaking only for myself, that for these reasons, the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton) to the contrary notwithstanding, the pre-emption clause should stand.

Mr. SPROULE. That is the pre-emption clause of $3 an acre?

Mr. KNOWLES. Yes, with settlement duties in connection. I am in favour of that and wish to be judged accordingly. In the administration of lands in the Northwest the government, I think, should not be too afraid of exercising generosity to the settlers. It is a matter of pride to me personally, without wishing to bring politics into this discussion that this government has never given away an acre of land to a railway company, or any other company except in the case of that bargain, which in my opinion was a good bargain, with the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company, under which that company undertook to settle lands that before that time had been barren. Apart from that they have sold no land to any land company or for that matter have sold no land at all.

Mr. SPROULE. What about the land they gave to ranching companies at a dollar an acre, one-fifth of all their holdings?

Mr. KNOWLES. My hon. friend is mistaken. No land was sold to a ranching company at $1 an acre.

Mr. SPROULE. If it was not, the information given to the House was incorrect. Three companies had the option of taking one-fifth of their holdings at $1 an acre and they bought over 10,000 acres at this price.

Mr. KNOWLES. My hon. friend no doubt is quite sincere in what he says, but he is altogether mistaken.

Mr. SPROULE. If there is any mistake it comes from the government because they gave the information to the House.

Mr. KNOWLES. I wish to get along with my speech.

Mr. FOSTER. Will he say that McGregor & Hitchcock did not buy 9,450 acres, one-tenth of their holdings of grazing lands at $1 an acre and pay for it?

Mr. KNOWLES. That is two against one, anybody else? My hon. friend will have to admit that, I am right when I say that these people did not go on the market and buy land at $1 an acre. I will admit that under the grazing lease the holder can buy a small amount of land for home and corral purposes, but that is different from going on the market and buying outright. I am glad my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) spoke with reference to that McGregor & Hitchcock lease. The hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) spoke of the Robbins Irrigation Company.

Mr. SPROULE. No, I spoke of the cattle ranching company.

Mr. KNOWLES. I will therefore qualify my remarks by saying that the government has sold semi-arid lands under the Irrigation Act at $3 an acre, $2 to be spent in improving the land. This is quite different from saying that it is sold at $1 an acre.

Mr. FOSTER. That is not the land I spoke of.

Mr. KNOWLES. No, the hon. member refers to lands sold under the home and corral provisions of the grazing regulations.

Mr. FOSTER. But not for corral purposes?

Mr. KNOWLES. Doctors differ.

Mr. FOSTER. It does not take 9,000 acres to make a corral.

Mr. KNOWLES. I am of the opinion that any land sold in that way was sold under that clause, but I am sure that the hon. gentleman is not right in his figures about the 9,000 acres.

Mr. SPROULE. Will the hon. gentleman admit that under the terms of the leases of these three companies they are entitled to purchase, if they have not already purchased, 35,000 acres for $1 an acre, that is one-tenth of their holdings? Is that not in accordance with the terms of the lease?

Mr. KNOWLES. I am not aware that it is, no I do not think so,——

Mr. SPROULE. It would be well for the hon. member to inform himself.

Mr. KNOWLES. Unless it is under regulations that were in force long before I became familiar with the regulations. If there were such regulations they were made by the Conservative government. I never knew of such regulations, and am confident that no such regulations have been in force since I have had anything to do with parliament. I think the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) and the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) are both mistaken.

Mr. FOSTER. Not at all, your leader is there within a few feet of you, ask him.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes, my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) is all wrong.

Mr. KNOWLES. The hon. member will at least have to listen to me when I say that this government stands in a very favourable light compared with the previous government in regard to the alienation of land?

Mr. FOSTER. In what way ?

Mr. KNOWLES. In every way.

Mr. FOSTER. If my hon. friend will substantiate that there is a fine chance for him.

Mr. KNOWLES. I have made a great many statements this afternoon and I can give the book for every statement. I have heard the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) make a great many statements which I could have stopped by asking him to substantiate them, but we are so used to him and his statements that we do not question him.

Mr. FOSTER. Would the hon. member substantiate this one? It is his own assertion.

Mr. KNOWLES. I would have to take about half of all the 'Hansard' of this session.

Mr. FOSTER. We will give you all you want so that you substantiate it.

Mr. KNOWLES. Because my hon. friend has undoubtedly occupied a great deal more than his share of the time of the House.

Mr. FOSTER. That does not touch the question; will the hon. gentleman substantiate his statement?

Mr. KNOWLES. It is too much to go over all my hon. friend's speeches, you must remember that he spoke five hours and twenty minutes a few days ago and I do not know that he said anything worth listening to.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend does not substantiate his statement.

Mr. KNOWLES. At any rate if this government has sold and is selling land in large quantities I wish to say that they have not my support in that.

Mr. FOSTER. That is plain enough.

Mr. KNOWLES. But I am quite sure my hon. friend is away out in the number of acres he has given. We need only look at the records to see that the previous government sold and gave away millions of acres of land. This government has certainly not alienated any such quantity of land as that. Since I am speaking in regard to the alienation of land by pre-emption, I wish to emphasize what I am saying when I was interrupted that there is every need for the government to exercise a policy of generosity towards the settler. He is going into that country to stay, to raise his family; and if there is to be an error made on any side, let it be made on the side of giving him a few acres too many rather than restricting him unduly. Any one familiar with the lands which have not already been taken up will agree that 160 acres are not sufficient for a man to make his home on permanently. Even if 320 acres should be a small number of acres more than he requires, I say it is wise to err on that side, for as time goes on and his family grows up he will want to expand his farm, he will want land on which to put his sons. If you tied him down to a very limited number of acres you will cause the separation of his family which we should avoid as long as possible.

I remember on the occasion of the inauguration of the new provinces, when His Excellency and the Prime Minister and other ministers of the Crown were in Edmonton, the hon. Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) made a speech which was extremely popular. Before him were lined up wagon after wagon filled with little children. On each of these wagons there was a motto, 'they will grow.' The Minister of Customs took that motto as the text of his address, and he spoke of the manner in which all through that country growth was manifest on every hand. He spoke of the way the country had grown in the past and was going to expand in the future and as that voice of his carried out over the prairie and across the Saskatchewan river, the people enjoyed his speech extremely and almost forgave him for the very large amount of money he takes from them in customs year after year. I say that the same motto may be applied to our families in regard to making provision for them by giving them a generous supply of land. If you are going to tie men down to 160 acres of land, not the best kind of land even, you should make provision for the development of that country and for the growth of their families. I wish to place myself on record not as holding the views of the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton), but rather as holding the views which were embodied in the Bill of the government last session.

There are one or two objections that have been raised against the Hudson Bay Railway that I wish to refer to. The objection is raised that the equipment of this railway will be used only three or four months, or, at the most, five months in the year. I do not think that is correct. I think, Mr. Speaker, that there will be the hauling of wheat to the elevators at Fort Churchill month after month and then, taking it at its very worst, whatever railway company operates the Hudson Bay Railway, the Canadian Northern, the Canadian Pacific Railway, or the Grand Trunk Pacific, it will in twenty-four hours, at any time, be able to take its rolling stock off that new railway and place it on its main line. Therefore, I say it is impossible for people to contend that the equipment would lie idle during seven or eight months in the year. We have also to remember that even at this present day they are carrying to Fort William and Port Arthur many million bushels of grain; there is storage accommodation at the head of the lakes for about 15,000,000 bushels. Why should not the same be done at Fort Churchill?

So, Mr. Speaker, without desiring to detain the House further, I wish simply to close by saying that the people of the west, of my own constituency, and I think I can speak for the residents of the province of Saskatchewan, are desirous that this government should take into its immediate consideration the solution of this problem by which they may have readier access to the markets, and by which they will be afforded relief from that great inconvenience which has lain upon them like a burden for the last few years. They ask that the government will come to their assistance by providing greater facilities for the transportation of their grain. I have endeavoured to point out that the scheme which is embodied in this proposition is feasible, that a demand has come from the farmers of the west for a solution of this problem, that it is nothing which will stagger this government, that the west has great claims upon the Dominion government because of the great contribution it is making towards the development of the natural industries of Canada, and I trust that these considerations will weigh with the government and with hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House, so that this question may receive the favourable consideration of the House and of the government.

Mr. F. L. SCHAFFNER (Souris). Mr. Speaker, I would ask the indulgence of the House for a short time this afternoon while I place myself on record on this important question that so much affects our western country. During the twenty-five years that I have been a resident of that western country we have had very many questions which have occupied the attention of government, both federal and provincial. We have had the question of education, and it has not been without its difficulties, we have had the question of immigration, we have had the question of the administration of justice over so vast an area, we have had the question of the autonomy of the various provinces that go to make up that great country the last west, but in my opinion we have had no question which has caused so much anxiety or which has engaged the attention of the people more than this question of the transportation of the products which that country is capable of producing to the markets of the world. The transportation of our wheat, of our cattle, of our hogs and of many other of the products of that country, has, as I have said, engaged the attention of the very best statesmen and financiers. Yet to-day this House and the country will have to admit that the transportation question is not solved. It is still in a very unsatisfactory condition. As everybody knows, and as our experience shows, our annual blockades are continually increasing in intensity. Although the transportation question is not solved I am prepared to admit perhaps that the railways that already exist in the country have made a fair effort to meet the demands which have been made upon them. I may have something to say about that a little later. However, this fact absolutely faces us to-day that the transportation question is not solved. If we look in the light of the present day at the opposition that is manifested against any improvement in the transportation facilities of that country we wonder why there should be this opposition and ignorance existing. I am prepared to admit that those who have opposed the extension of the railway facilities in that country may have been honest in their opposition, but I believe that the opposition was one that came from those who were absolutely ignorant of the actual conditions. I do not refer to this matter for any political purpose at all because as far as anything I have to say this afternoon is concerned I hope it will be absolutely free from party politics. The opposition that was offered to the Canadian Pacific Railway when the railway first went into that country was put up by men like Mr. Blake and in fact by the Liberal party of that day and I believe it was made because of their ignorance of the actual condition of affairs. Let us look for a moment at the transportation facilities we have in the west. We have the Canadian Pacific Railway and I am not prepared to say to-day that that road has done all it should have done considering the very large amount of money it received from this country. Neither am I here to say that it has not made a fairly honest effort to meet the demands of transportation in that country. As I said a few days ago, speaking on this question, two years ago the Canadian Pacific Railway and all other railways were up against an exceedingly hard proposition. With the storms and snow which existed in that country it was absolutely impossible for any railway company to meet the demands, and the agitation which has been going on for a long time against the railways reached its climax that year. So much for the Canadian Pacific Railway. Now, we have the Canadian Northern, and although some of our friends on the other side of the House have manifested a great deal of opposition to the Canadian Northern Railway, I do not know but what I am prepared to say to-day that this is the first railway that gave us competition. A great deal has been said against the Roblin government, but one of the best things that ever happened the Canadian Northwest was when the Roblin government made the contract they did with the Canadian Northern Railway. We know very well that other governments had been offered a million dollars for a ten cent rate from Winnipeg to Port Arthur and we know that this road has given us the competition, that it has given us a ten cent rate to Port Arthur without costing the country one farthing. We claim that this is a very great benefit to the coutnry. We will soon have, and we cannot have too soon to please me, the Grand Trunk Pacific.

Whatever may be our opinions, political or otherwise, as to how that railroad should have been built, and while a great many feel to-day that a mistake has been made in the manner of its building and would prefer that the Intercolonial should be extended to the great lakes, still the fact is that the contracts are let for the construction of the Grand Trunk Pacific, and I for one hope that in a very short time that road will be carrying our wheat and other products out of the country. Besides these three railroads I have mentioned, we have coming from the south the Great Northern, which has already tapped Manitoba at three places crossing the boundary line, and has gone so far north as Brandon, Portage la Prairie and into the town of Morden. The agriculturists and all classes of people in that country hail with delight the coming of these roads to the Territory, and why? Perhaps some of our people in the east who are engaged in industries in their own part of the country think that we in the west have all the transportation that we need. But the best way to convince the House and the country that such is not the case is to give an idea of the extent of the natural products which that country is capable of producing. We have often heard, and perhaps some members of the House may be tired of hearing of that great country and what its possibilities are, but I think it is generally admitted to-day that as Canada becomes a great nation its greatness will in no small part be attributed to what the western country is and what it should be. That being the case, we should take into consideration everything that will tend to the progress and development of the west. Let us for a moment consider how much of that country is under cultivation and how much of the land it is estimated can be cultivated. In 1906 Manitoba had in grain 4,700,000 acres, and her land area was estimated at 41,169,089 acres, and it is believed that 20,000,000 acres of this 41,000,000 acres is suitable for cultivation. The land surface of Saskatchewan is 244,960 square miles or about 116,774,400 acres. Granting the one-half of this land is suitable for cultivation, we have, therefore, 58,387,700 acres of land in Saskatchewan which will produce wheat or other grain. In 1905 there was under crop in Saskatchewan 1,639,563 acres. Alberta, I am told, has more land than has Saskatchewan, but take it as being the same and take half of it as being fit for cultivation, here again in Alberta we have 58,387,700 acres of land fit for the production of grain and less than 1,000,000 acres of it under cultivation to-day. We have, therefore, in the three provinces at least 136,775,400 acres of land suitable for cultivation with only 8,000,000 acres as yet utilized, or, in other words, only about one-seventeenth of the productive area of that country is now cultivated. And although there is only one-seventeenth of this area under cultivation, and although we have the existing railways there and the others which will soon be brought into operation, I still contend that the transportation facilities are not sufficient to cope with the production of that country. A great deal has been said in the west about the existing railways not being properly equipped, but in my opinion you can equip the Canadian Pacific Railway, the Canadian Northern Railway, the Grand Trunk Pacific and the Great Northern with the very best possible equipment imaginable and still they will be absolutely inadequate to solve this great transportation question. I have only taken into my calculation so far the three provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, but it is now a well established fact that the great Peace river country is capable of producing millions of bushels of wheat. And already at Fort Providence, away up on the Mackenzie river, they have grown splendid wheat which took only 90 days from the day it was sown until it matured, that result being brought about by the long hours of daylight which they have in that northern country. We, therefore, find that these provinces are capable of producing as much wheat as the whole world produces to-day, The wheat crop of the world in 1905 was 3,337,400,000 bushels, and I have shown that our own western territory is capable of producing 3,200,000,000 bushels of wheat and grain.

So far I have only referred to the transportation of wheat practically, but in addition to that we find that in 1906, 130,0000 head of cattle were sent to market from that country. I claim that the railroads running east and west, no matter how well they may be equipped, are absolutely insufficient to carry the products of that great country to the markets of the world. The question then comes: What are we to do; what is the most reasonable and the most successful way of increasing our transportation facilities in the west? I say: Utilize the road to the Hudson bay and provide steamers on Hudson strait and Hudson bay; build elevators at Fort Churchill, which is said to be one of the best harbours in the world, and it seems to me that you will have solved the problem beyond any doubt. I might remark here that it would be well were these elevators owned and operated by some government. We have heard a good deal during the last week about grain matters in the west and there have been representatives here from the different interests in conference, and the result of these deliberations will be perhaps more far reaching than we have now any idea of. We had the grain growers who came with their grievances, and the representatives of the grain association of that western country meeting here to consider what was in their interest and in the interest of the trade generally. There seemed to be something wrong in connection with the industry and apparently from their own statements they have at least come to a conclusion as to where the difficulty lies. We had the grain growers, and the grain buyers, and the elevator men, and the representatives of the grain exchange of Winnipeg who complained that they had been badly used, assembled in the office of the Minister of Trade and Commerce. The seats in that exchange, which brought $4,000 before the Manitoba government legislated in regard to it, are to-day bringing only about $2,500; hence the members think they have a tremendous grievance. I saw a cartoon yesterday showing grass growing on the streets of Winnipeg nearly as high as the Union Bank, which is fourteen stories high. This was represented as the result of bringing to time the Winnipeg grain exchange. I think hon. members will agree with me that the evidence produced in that committee showed that the producers were not receiving their fair share for the work they were doing. I have an extract here which may seem rather forcible, but I may be excused for reading it. It is from the 'Eye Opener,' an interesting paper published in the great and thriving town of Calgary. Here is what it says about the grain interests:

> We confess pretty dense ignorance on this subject, but we have always been impressed with the fact that there was something rotten about the game when we observe the men who sell wheat always wearing diamonds, driving fast horses and living at swell clubs; and the men who produce the grain always struggling like the devil to stand off the banks. When a man takes the long end of a government offer which bets him 160 acres of homestead land against $10 that he can't stay on it three years necessary to prove up and get title, and then makes good and raises a crop of grain, it would seem that he ought to get a fair share of the proceeds of his work.

Mr. A. A. WRIGHT. Does the hon. gentleman consider that a reputable authority?

Mr. SCHAFFNER. The hon. gentleman can judge of that for himself. I am not vouching for the authority ; but it probably tells a good deal of truth sometimes. I lay it down that the character of that western country to-day demands the building of the Hudson Bay Railway. I believe that the opening of the Hudson Bay route, while it may not accomplish all that is desired, will go a very long way in solving the great transportation problem. I go further. A great deal of the opposition to this project has come from eastern Canada, largely from the great corporations ; but I say that the east would be more than compensated for any apparent loss it would sustain by the building of this road. I claim that the trade that would be created by that route is one which the St. Lawrence route could not handle in any case. I do not think it has ever been suggested that the opening of Galveston as an ocean port in the south-west worked any injury to the eastern states, while on the other hand it certainly aided very materially the manufacturing interests of the eastern states. We have heard a great deal of the proposed canalization of the Mississippi and its connection with Chicago. While the difficulties and the initial cost of that project are so much greater than those of the Hudson Bay Railway, we should remember this fact, that after you canalize the Mississippi and connect it with Chicago, the products carried by the canal to the sea-board would be 1,000 miles further from the markets of the world than they were when they started, whereas the products carried by the Hudson Bay Railway will be brought 1,000 miles nearer to the markets of the world. This is a fact that is worthy of consideration. The opening of the Hudson Bay route is a matter of great importance not only to the west, but also to the east. Eastern Canada has for a long time opposed the building of this road, just as some people in the United States opposed the building of the Panama canal. If the great corporations and others in eastern Canada oppose the building of the Hudson Bay Railway, the result will be that the responsibility of building it will fall upon the people of the west. Such a narrow, sectional feeling is contrary to the best interests of eastern Canada. The discussion on this question, in this House and out of it, is no very new thing. There has been sermonizing, by various governments and individuals, on the building of the Hudson Bay Railway nearly as long as I can remember. The same excuses have been put forward from time to time by those opposed to the project, and we have not the road yet. In 1884 the government sent out the 'Alert,' with Lieutenant Bordon in command, to explore the waters of Hudson bay and straits. For some reasons, it took him a very long time to make a report. When it was made it was none too favourable; we believe for none too unselfish motives. Those who favoured the building of the Hudson Bay Railway at that time believed the report was purposely adverse. We must remember that the Canadian Pacific Railway was at that time being built, which was probably a greater undertaking for the Dominion of Canada then than it would be to-day. There is no doubt that there was a fear upon the part of governments and financiers that the building of this road would be simply an excuse for another demand on the treasury of Canada ; and so the report of the 'Alert's' expedition was unfavourable to the building of the road and to the navigation of Hudson bay and Hudson straits. In 1897 the 'Diana' was sent out. It appears only to have cruised about the straits during the summer, and returned. The report of that cruise was also adverse, and for similar reasons. But a great many years have passed since that time, and we believe the time has come when the proposition is entitled to receive the serious consideration of the government. I am no great Calvinist or believer in predestination ; but I ask the members of this House to look at the map of North America, with that great inland sea extending so far into the country, and ask whether they do not believe that it was placed there for an all-wise purpose. I do

I believe that that great inland sea was purposely placed where it is in order that it might be utilized in the interests of that great western country. There we have a great bay, with its 2,000 miles of sea coast, one half the size of the Mediterranean, in what may be said to be a fairly temperate climate; and all the indications are that before many years the shores of this bay will be peopled with prosperous communities and its harbours will contain large elevators. Hudson bay is geographically to this continent what the Baltic sea is to Europe. Its length is 1,000 miles north to south and 600 miles east to west, having an area of 580,000 square miles. Perhaps the best idea I can give of its dimensions is to ask you to bear in mind that the length of the bay is as great as the distance from Winnipeg to the Rocky mountains and nearly six times the size of the great lakes separating Canada from the United States.

I want to call attention in this connection to some reports of temperatures. People seem to think that the weather is extremely cold out there, but the more one studies the subject the more one is convinced that after all the country around Hudson bay is almost a banana belt. Here is what Dr. Bell says, and in giving you these quotations I do so that you may have some idea of the climate and of the feasibility of navigating the straits. If it can be shown that the building of this road is practicable, as I believe it is, then we ought to proceed with it. If not, we should let the matter drop. Dr. Bell says :

Both the bay and the straits are remarkably free from rocks and shoals, which might interfere with her free navigation. The groups of islands near the east side of the bay are surrounded by deep water, and a wide channel leads up the centre of James bay. Fortunately the main body of the bay, which is the portion likely to be hereafter frequented by shipping is entirely without shoals, reefs or islands. The depth is very uniform over most of the bay, and nowhere does it present any great irregularities. It averages about 70 fathoms throughout, deepening to 100 and upwards in approaching the outlet of Hudson straits; while in the strait itself the soundings along the centre vary from about 150 to upwards of 300 fathoms. The bottom appears to consist almost everywhere of boulder clay and mud. Near the shores a stiff clay, affording good holding ground for anchors is almost invariably met with on both sides.

As regards the climate, Mr. O'Sullivan says :

The ordinary half-breeds are more easily coaxed to eat than to swim any day. No matter how often you propose lunch they are always ready, but it is not so often you get them to strip and wash themselves. This day, however, I succeeded in getting them all to take a plunge and we enjoyed it immensely. The water was in excellent condition, reminding one of Old Orchard Beach or Chester bay. I have never found the water as warm in any part of the St. Lawrence or in Bay des Chaleurs as we found it on the east main coast in the end of August and beginning of September——

I would like hon. members for the east to take note of this statement :

—and I have no doubt that if easy communication could be had by rail, the most northern limit of our province would prove an attractive scene for tourists and health seekers.

Let me give you some information regarding temperatures because there seems to be the idea that the climate is an arctic one. Here is what Dr. Bell says on that point:

I took the temperature of the sea upwards of 20 times during our voyage which extended over the greater part of July, August and September, and I found it to average 53 degrees of Fahrenheit. I also noted the temperature of the rivers which we visited and found the average of five of them to be 61 degrees Fahrenheit. We bathed in the salt water almost daily and found the temperature agreeable.

He winds up by saying :

The average temperature of the air between July 11 and September 21, from the above observations, would appear to be 62½ degrees.

That is better than we have in the Northwest. If we had in September or August such temperature as that, we would not be troubled with frozen wheat.

As most of these observations were taken in the morning or the evening and as the nights were generally warm owing to the prevalence of southerly winds this is perhaps not far from the true mean temperature and it is above the average of the main temperature for these months of ten principal stations from Halifax, Nova Scotia, to Fort Simpson, on the Mackenzie river. About two-thirds of the bay in the south might be included in this classification with regard to summer temperature.

Now the climate of this vast territory compares very favourably with that of the western territories :

The temperature of the waters in Hudson bay is several degrees higher than that in Lake Superior and Lieutenant Gordon declared that the bay might be regarded as a vast basin of comparatively warm water, a fact which must help to mitigate the severity of the winter in the surrounding country.

My good friend opposite (Mr. Knowles) spoke of the ice being easily kept clear by means of ice breaking vessels. But, as a matter of fact, the bay freezes very little and is besides remarkably free from storms and fogs :

The waters are deep and uniform and the soundings of 480 feet at many points indicate that its bed is a level plateau. Now as to the opening and closing date of the harbour of Fort Churchill since 1825 can be given.

I am not going to give all the temperatures for fifty years, but I shall give you a few taken at random between the dates I have mentioned. I may say that since I started to make this address, I have heard men saying what is the good of Hudson bay, it is only open two months in the year. Well, I am going to furnish proof that these gentlemen are altogether mistaken:

1824, open June 12, closed November 18—five months, six days.
1827, open June 24, closed November 13—four months and twenty days.
1834, open June 21, closed November 15—four months and twenty-five days.
1844, open June 24, closed November 23—five months.
1848, open June 19, closed November 6—four months, eighteen days.
1852, open June 13, closed November 28—five months, fifteen days.
1862, open June 7, closed November 5—four months, twenty-nine days.
1863, open June 5, closed November 11—five months, six days.
1892, open June 19, closed November 11—four months, twenty-three days.

1894, open June 6, closed November 19—five months, thirteen days.

What do we find the average to be? The average is from June 19th to November 8th, five months. I have not asked anybody to say off-hand how long the St. Lawrence is open, but I suppose it is not open more than six months. The longest season for Hudson bay and straits was in 1846, five months and eighteen days; the shortest season was from June 14 to November 8. Now this period extended over seventy years and is taken from the Hudson bay officials. And I find no evidence against it, that harbours in Hudson bay and the mouth of the rivers are open about five months of the year.

It is wonderful what great men will do. I have a great deal of respect for the Deputy Minister of Railways and Canals, Mr. Butler, as a man of ability, but he is a little narrow on this point. They say every one is narrow on some point, and this is the point on which Mr. Butler is narrow. He made an address before the May Court Club in this city not long ago—about the time my hon. friend from North Renfrew (Mr. White) was talking about the Georgian Bay canal, and seemed anxious that the Georgian Bay canal should be built. I don't stand here to say a word against the building of the Georgian Bay canal, let us have it by all means. But I don't want the Georgian Bay canal or any other canal to be built at the expense of the Hudson Bay Railway which we must have. Mr. Butler, is thus reported :

Transportation, a subject of intense practical interest to all Canadians, was the item last night of a brilliant address before the May Court Club by Mr. M. J. Butler, Deputy Minister of Railways and Canals. In the course of his remarks Mr. Butler said that the Georgian Bay canal was the solution of Canada's transportation problem.

I say, it is only one of the solutions. The great solution, so far as we in the west are concerned, is to build the Hudson Bay Railway and use Hudson bay and Hudson strait for carrying our products to the markets of the world. Mr. Butler says the Hudson Bay road is 'in the talkative stage.' Well, how long is a thing to stay in that stage ? The Hudson Bay Railway has been in the 'talkative stage' as long as I can remember, and I am no kid. It seems to me that when a man like the deputy Minister of Railways and Canals, with all his ability—for which I give him credit—and with all his experience, says that the Hudson Bay Railway is only 'in the talkative stage' he needs a little educating, and I am trying to give it to him right now.

So far, we have talked about Hudson bay ; we have shown its extent and shown that it is free from shoals and fogs. And, on that point, I would like to make reference to another remark made by Mr. Butler, He says that insurance was an argument against the building of this road and utilizing Hudson bay and strait. Perhaps it is. But what is the experience ? In the course of a century and a half the Hudson Bay Company sent out 750 vessels through Hudson strait and bay. There were vessels running from 70-gun ships down to ships of ten tons burden. No one will say that these vessels were strongly built. They were rudely built and small. But the records of the Hudson Bay Company show that, out of 750 vessels, sent through, only two were lost. That does not look as though navigation of these waters was very dangerous. We must remember also that these vessels had none of the advantages of the aids to navigation—lighthouses and all the rest, that are provided on every well-travelled route to-day. Well, I have spoken of Hudson bay. What do they say of Hudson strait ?

Markham says :

I have in my possession an official record of the voyages out and home of the Hudson Bay Company's ship 'Prince Rupert' for a period of eleven consecutive years, namely from 1835 to 1846 inclusive. I find that the average time of getting through the straits in the outward voyages during this period 'and it must not be forgotten that the strait is 500 miles in length' was 16 days. The longest time was 31 days, when there was probably an exceptionally bad ice year. The shortest time was 8 days. But the delays in getting through the strait were caused by calms and adverse winds—

Something that will be absolutely overcome by the navigation of to-day.

—and not by the ice. On the homeward passage no difficulties were met with from ice in the strait, and the vessel usually reached London in about five weeks after leaving York Factory. . . . The 'Prince Rupert' was 38 days on the passage to London; so that it is impossible she could have had any serious detention from ice in the strait.

And Gordon says :

As to the length of season for practical navigation, if we regard the presence of field ice as the only barrier, the information which we have got would point to the months of July, August, September and October as being the months in which the straits are passable. As a rule, in July there will be delays, not to vessels strengthened and sheeted, there would be no danger in making the passage.

Mr. Low says :

The period of safe navigation for ordinary iron steamships through Hudson Bay strait and across Hudson bay to the Port of Churchill may be stated to extend from the 20th of July to the 1st of November. The period might be increased without much risk by a week in the beginning of the season, and by perhaps two weeks at the close.

In my report last year, I described the ice as consisting of three kinds, viz.: icebergs, heavy arctic ice and ordinary field ice. The icebergs are stated to have come from Fox channel. This conclusion was based on the report of No. 3 station made on the homeward voyage of the 'Neptune' that the icebergs passed the bluff from west towards east. This report was made on the strength of the few observations which the party had been able to make in the interval between the two calls of the 'Neptune' at the inlet. Further and more perfect observations show conclusively that the current sets in the opposite direction and that the icebergs move from east to west.

This is a very important fact.

If further proof of the existence of this set were necessary we have it in the drift of the 'Alert' when fast in the ice off Ashe inlet and invariably carried to the westward.

It has been said a good many times that much of our grain would have to be stored at Fort Churchill. That is true enough but it is also true that a large per cent is now stored at Port Arthur and Fort William for the winter. With regard to ice in the straits, we have a good deal of information in the blue-books. Dr. Ferguson, in the Senate, describes four kinds of ice to be found; first the young or harbour ice, never regarded as serious; second the rafted ice which has drifted by the wind, one flake piled upon another until it assumes very formidable proportions. All authorities agree that no icebergs are found in Hudson bay or in the waters that flow into Hudson bay. Those that have been encountered by navigators have always been found within 100 miles of the Atlantic, and it seems now to be settled that they are icebergs that have been formed up about Greenland, have been carried into Hudson strait by the current, and, after going a short distance into Hudson strait, are met by another current and returned to the Atlantic ocean. They are formidable enemies to navigation and are treated by sailors with great respect. There is another class called 'growlers.' These are icebergs broken up. They are low in the water and do not appear on the surface. And, like all enemies that we cannot see, they are more to be dreaded than enemies we can see. It is said that most of the losses in the north are caused by coming into contact with these 'growlers,' but these are seldom found in Hudson straits. The most reliable explorers who have travelled these straits for twenty years for the sole purpose of investigation, now believe that Hudson bay and straits are now open for safe navigation for at least four and a half months in the year so far as ice is concerned. And, considering that the ship course from Churchill to Liverpool is free from rocks and shoals and that these four and a half months are when the days are very long in the northern region, the sun shining for twenty hours a day, these facts will enhance the rapid navigation to and from the sea. Fort Churchill communicates with the open sea as directly as Halifax. Comparing Montreal and Churchill, the latter is not hampered with the long St. Lawrence navigation.

My good friend on the other side (Mr. Knowles) put on 'Hansard' some distances. To make my story complete, even at the risk of repeating some of his statements, I also wish to place on 'Hansard' some distances because after all when it has been proven beyond doubt that the straits and bay are navigable and the great obstacle of the ice is removed from our calculations, the great remaining question is that of distance for our prime object is to place our products upon the markets of the world in the shortest possible time. The following tables of distances will be found of interest:

I have referred to the transportation of products, but there is another way in which the building of that road would be of great benefit to that western country and for that matter eastern Canada as well, that is in relation to immigration. This government and all governments have spent a great deal of money in promoting immigration, in bringing people from Europe and the British Isles to settle in the great Northwest. These people have left their homes to seek fortune in that great country, which was happily described by the Earl of Dufferin as a country of indeterminate possibilities. Every member of this House is aware that many of the immigrants who have been induced to come to Canada have drifted into the United States. This was only natural owing to the influences to which they were subjected on the existing routes of transportation. Canada has lost incalculably in population and in money owing to this fact, and if we had this route these people would not be subjected to the influences of which I have spoken. The tide of immigration to this country continues and we all rejoice at that fact provided some restrictions are placed on the classes that come in. During the last century the United States always had a northwest, the energetic people of the eastern states, the young men and the men of energy were going west and occupying the land in that country that was still unsettled. That condition I am told and believe does not exist to-day, so that these people from the other side are flocking into western Canada. they are crossing the border. Previously they were settling in Manitoba, Alberta and Saskatchewan, but Sir, they are to-day beginning to go forward, they are settling in a great country extending from 70 miles east of Winnipeg to the Rocky mountains, and from the International boundary up to the western shores of Hudson bay. I have no doubt and my opinion is borne out by the information furnished us in the Agricultural Committee that we have not yet begun to know the possibilities of the northern portions of that country which we previously thought was a frozen region, absolutely useless for agricultural industry. We find these people going up there and undoubtedly that country will be thickly settled. We find in Russia a province whose southern boundary is 100 miles farther north than Edmonton, with a population of one and a half million people, producing 65,000,000 bushels of wheat, and 100,000,000 bushels of oats. I think we have reason to believe that our north country will be just as productive and will be almost as thickly settled as this Russian province. Personally I have not the slightest doubt on this point.

I am sure that three-quarters of the members of this House believe that the country through which this railway will pass is nothing but barren rock and almost impassable from, say, the Saskatchewan river to Hudson bay. The facts do not at all accord with this idea. One engineer, Mr. Adrian Nelson, writing to the directors of the Canadian Northern Railway says :

> I beg to submit the following report on the feasibility and construction of the proposed railway to Hudson bay. The country that the railway passes through is of such description as to offer but few engineering difficulties in the construction of it. The whole of the country partakes of the nature of a flat plain. The first half being practically level and the remainder with a slight exception having a gradual and almost interceptible slope to the Hudson bay. There is very little rock work and the country far from being drowned is well drained by a system of rivers and lakes. Besides this there is an abundance of timber and stone.

Mr. W. W. Kirkpatrick, another of the engineers who made an exploratory survey of the line to the Hudson bay, says :

> There is no difficulty in building a railway through this country; there are no heavy grades or cuttings and very little rock work. Timber and ballast are plentiful in the vicinity while nearly all streams crossed appear to have timber suitable for bridging.
> The country is fairly level and about equally divided as to prairie and timber sections and considerably cut up by lakes and hay marshes. The soil on the average appears good, and I believe will prove a favourable country for settlement.

The American people, Sir, are alive to the great importance of this route. Senator Davis, of the Senate of Washington, drew the attention of the House to the fact that if the Hudson bay route was opened up the trade of the northwestern states would be diverted to it and the Canadians would thereby reap the benefits of the large carrying trade from the states adjacent to Manitoba and the Northwest Territories and to check this he advised the enlargement of the Sault Ste. Marie canal. But the United States may enlarge their canals and improve their shipping facilities, but it will be all of no avail. They cannot keep the trade of these states within their own boundaries because they are working against nature. Hudson bay is the natural outlet of the European market to the whole northwest portion of this continent, and just as soon as this route is opened up the large export trade of Minnesota, Dakota and Montana will go through Hudson bay.

I want to give a short history of the legislation which has been going on in connection with the building of the Hudson bay railway. The first measure for provincial aid was introduced by the late Mr. Norquay, in 1885 in the shape of an Act pledging the province to give a bonus of one million dollars to the enterprise on the completion of the road within five years from that time. The expectation was that with such an endorsement the promotors would be enabled to float their scheme on the English money market, but they failed, and in the season of 1886 sought from the province a more liberal bonus in the shape of a guarantee of interest on the bonds of the company to the extent of four and a half millions of dollars for twenty-five years at the rate of 4 per cent per annum — a provincial bonus, in effect, of one hundred and eight thousand a year for twenty-five years.

Mr. Norquay appeared unwilling at first to grant this measure and he proposed the appointment of a committee to inquire into the matter, a proposition which was met by a motion on the part of Messrs. Thomas Greenway and Joseph Martin to ask the House to vote the guarantee applied for.

This Mr. Norquay allowed and the Act of 1885 was passed authorizing the government to give such a guarantee for twenty-five years on the completion of the road. Again the promoters of the road were unable to float their scheme on the financial market and in 1887 they once more sought to extend this guarantee.

As before Mr. Norquay hesitated and was unwilling to go as far as his opponents in meeting the demands of the promoters, but a decided declaration of the intention of Messrs. Greenway and Martin to go further than this brought the premier once more to time and the Act of 1887 was passed authorizing the guarantee of four and a half millions of dollars to be given but on more liberal terms than those of the Act of 1887. The scheme was taken up in the succeeding year by Messrs. Onderdonk & Ross, the well known railway contractors, and they proposed to proceed at once with the enterprise. It was at this stage that the new Greenway government declared its unwillingness to give the guarantee authorized by the Act notwithstanding the premier's pledge when in opposition. The ministers rested their objections largely on the view that while the province had, for the sake of procuring a line of railway to compete with the Canadian Pacific Railway proposed to give a bonus equal to $180,000 a year for twenty-five years, it had since that time in the shape of aid granted the Northern Pacific and Manitoba Road, pledging its credit for about $80,000. In return for which it had secured competition.

For that reason the government contended that the government could not now afford or be expected to give more than $100,000 a year at the most to the Hudson Bay Railway, that being the interest at 4 per cent on two million five hundred thousand dollars. Although the promoters state they had obtained means in London to go on with the road if their terms were accepted their negotiations evidently came to nothing.

The Aid Act of 1887 was repealed. However, in 1899, a resolution was passed by the House on motion of Mr. Greenway offering aid to the road to the extent of $2,000 a mile within the province, not exceeding 300 miles; in other words offering at this time aid to the extent of $600,000 to the enterprise. In 1890 the government introduced a Bill which was passed authorizing aid to the extent of $3,000 per mile for 250 miles of line equal to $750,000. Neither of these propositions, however, seems to have been of much service in floating the scheme.

During the season of 1891 another Act was passed not simply containing an offer of assistance but undertaking on the part of the province by formal contract to grant a bonus for one and a half millions of dollars to the company on the completion of the road within five years.

It came to be generally considered that the necessary means could hardly be raised in the English or foreign markets without an additional bonus from the Dominion government. The hopes of the people in this direction were all greatly encouraged, however, by the scheme of financial aid to the company introduced and carried by the Dominion government in the 1891 session of the federal parliament.

The general opinion throughout the province at that time was that a complete railway to Hudson bay was practically secured. In reality the assistance pledged was not very great, no sum was absolutely granted by way of bonus and the proposed railway was only to extend so far as Saskatchewan. The aid pledged by the Dominion government was simply an undertaking in advance that the government for public service would pay the company a certain specific yearly sum for a definite number of years after the road should have been built. The sum announced was $80,000 a year and it was to be given for twenty years.

The value of this promise in advance was the help it might be to the promoters in raising money to build the road. None of these schemes or legislative enactments has so far come to anything. Now, I have taken up far more time than I expected but I could not very well have taken up very much less and done justice to the subject. I could speak for another hour if I wanted to. I quite understand that our eastern friends do not like to hear very much about the Hudson bay route. My good friend on the other side said that he was sad and sorry because my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) had not put something in his platform in connection with the building of the Hudson Bay Railway. He has had this motion on the notice paper for four or five months, and I suppose he has been waiting to see what policy his government would adopt in connection with this question. After waiting for all that time he concluded to introduce his motion advocating the building of this railway. I tell the government from the bottom of my heart that the very best enterprise in the interest of Canada in which they could engage is to take hold, and at once, of the building of this road, and I tell the government further that if they want to have the honour of building this road they had better get busy because after the next election my hon. friend the leader of the opposition will be most decidedly the man to build the road. Nineteen hundred and ten will be the tercentenary of the death of that great sailor Henry Hudson, who gave his name to that great inland sea and that beautiful river that flows through the state of New York to the Atlantic ocean. I believe that by 1910, the tercentenary year of that great man we will see a railroad built to the Hudson bay, we will see the shores of the Hudson bay peopled by prosperous communities, we will see elevators built at ports on the Hudson bay, we will see docks there, and splendid system of steam vessels carrying the products of that great country to the markets of the world. I believe in making that prophesy, I prophesy for the prosperity not only of the west, but for the east.

Mr. GEO. E. McCRANEY (Saskatchewan). Ever since we have had an agricultural population in the west we have had a transportation problem upon our hands, and our people have been agitating for the building of a railroad to Hudson bay and the establishment of a port there from which to ship their products to European markets. When this proposal was first mooted some twenty-five or thirty years ago the conditions were then much different from what they are to-day, and at the present time we are able to discuss the question altogether in a more favourable light than we could then and with much better knowledge of the conditions. At that time our only outlet was by the Canadian Pacific Railway which was the original Canadian transcontinental line and which had few branches. To-day we have the Canadian Northern a second road across the prairies and which promises in the future to extend to the Pacific coast; we have the Grand Trunk Pacific under construction, and we have the Great Northern road which is likely to become an important Canadian railway in the near future. Twenty five years ago the proposal to build a railway to the Hudson bay meant the building of a road from the nearest point at which there was railway communication, namely from Winnipeg to Fort Churchill which is the best harbour on the Hudson bay, by way of Erwood and Le Pas, a distance of 945 miles. To-day in discussing the scheme, we reduce that distance by one-half and there remains to be constructed only a railway from Le Pas, 474 miles to the Hudson bay. In addition to having a much shorter route, we have a considerable fund of information with regard to Hudson bay and the country through which the railway would pass, and which was not available at that time. My hon. friend from Souris (Mr. Schaffner) has mentioned the expedition of Commander Gordon in 1884 and 1885, of Commander Wakeham in 1897, and I will include the expedition of Mr. A. P. Low in the 'Neptune' of 1904 and 1905, and the later expedition of Captain Bernier in the 'Arctic,' all of which go to prove that the Hudson straits are open for at least three and a half months in the year. From the figures which my hon. friend from Souris has given it is quite evident that this would be probably the shortest period of open navigation in any one year, and that there are many years in which the navigation period would be much longer. The information we have now at hand has also established that Fort Churchill is one of the best and safest harbours on the north American continent. In addition to our information gathered in this way with respect to Hudson bay and straits we have also information acquired by railway surveyors who have gone through the country, and the valuable data obtained by the staff of our own Geological Survey. These reports all tend to show that there are natural resources to be found in that country which would of themselves justify the building of a railroad there, without any reference whatever to the solution of the transportation problem. There are great quantities of timber and pulp wood in the country, the rivers and lakes abound in commercial fish and there are signs of minerals which would justify the hope that considerable mineral development will take place, and there are also very considerable quantities of land which is fit for agriculture. Before the Agricultural Committee the other day Mr. McInnes, of the Geological Survey staff, told us of a clay belt through which the proposed Hudson bay line would pass. He said it was evidently in the bed of a glacial lake, situated in the neighbourhood of the Burntwood river and has an area of some 10,000 square miles. There is a larger view also in this question, not only with reference to the country which is in the immediate proximity to the proposed route of the railway, but we are getting more information all the time as to the available lands of the Northwest. In a speech delivered by the Hon. R. P. Roblin last summer he estimated that there were 180,000,000 acres of agricultural land in the west from which he believed that in a very short time at least 1,000,000,000 bushels of wheat would be produced. From statements made in this House by the Minister of the Interior last session, and recently before a committee of the Senate, there is every reason to believe that such an estimate is quite conservative. The Minister of the Interior told us that south of latitude 52 in Manitoba and of latitude 55 in Saskatchewan and Alberta there were lands available to the extent of 175,000,000 acres. Before the Senate committee, Mr. Bredin, a member of the Alberta legislature made a statement that north of latitude 55 in the province of Alberta there were available about 100,000,000 acres for agricultural purposes, and Mr. Conroy a member of the staff of the Department of the Interior, though he does not commit himself to figures says, that he believes that there is north of the 55th parallel of latitude a quantity of agricultural land which is equal in extent to the agricultural land west of Winnipeg. The other day in the Committee on Agriculture we had the evidence of Mr. R. E. Young, that there was under crop last year 8,600,000 acres of land of which 5,000,000 acres were in wheat and which produced approximately 100,000,000 bushels. So that when we consider the vast amount of land which is available and the very small proportion which is now under cultivation, it is no stretch of the imagination to see that there will be in the future a volume of production which to-day we can hardly estimate. Immigration is coming into the country; we want to bring in the agricultural people as fast as we can, and the larger the number who come, the more productive will our country be.

Ever since there has been any considerable immigration into the west there have been great blockades, and the call of the western provinces is for more railroads. But while our call is for more roads to relieve the present situation, the roads which we are getting are colonization roads; and while to some extent they may relieve the congestion of traffic, they are themselves contributing to settle up the country for probably fifty miles on each side. I think the conclusion must be that until our lands are all settled we shall always have the transportation question on our hands, and grain blockades will take place every year. These considerations make us feel that we must not only increase the handling power of our present roads, but provide new outlets. Consequently our people have been looking to the Hudson Bay route. One objection put forward has been that if we make use of Hudson bay, which is open for a period of only four or five months of the year, there will have to be a great amount of grain kept in store for a considerable period each year. To one who has had any experience of western conditions the fact that grain must remain in store for five, or six or seven months of the year is not a formidable objection. Most of the crop of 1906, which was a very large one, was marketed in my own town in May, 1907. It would be no hardship to our farmers to have to wait a month or two longer, and perhaps the increased facilities would relieve them so that they might secure a better price for the portion of the crop shipped by way of Lake Superior. No question has been more agitated by the people of the prairie provinces than the Hudson Bay route, because they look to it as a means of shipping out their grain and their cattle. We think that the building of the road would be justified not only on transportation grounds, but in the results which it would produce in the settlement of the country immediately adjoining the road and also in developing and attracting attention to our northern country. We feel that this is a most opportune time to bring the matter to the attention of the government, because, while there may be some differences of opinion as to how the road should be constructed, we are in a position at least to discuss the question as to whether the road should or should not be built out of lands in the west now owned by the Dominion government. I beg to move in amendment to the motion that you do now leave the chair:

That all the words after 'that' be struck out and the following be substituted therefor: In the opinion of this House the government should, on account of the rapid development of western Canada and the continued inadequacy of existing transportation facilities, take early action towards the construction of a railway to Fort Churchill on Hudson bay.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY (Calgary). Mr. Speaker, it is not very surprising to me to find another resolution introduced by one of the Liberal members from the west in regard to the Hudson Bay question, a question that has been before the House for many years, and before the government almost every year since they came into power. I venture to say that if the pages of 'Hansard' containing the speeches that have been made by hon. gentlemen opposite on the Hudson Bay question were taken, they would almost reach from the Pas to Fort Churchill. If hon. gentlemen on the opposite side of the House are really sincere in their professed desire to have this road built, it appears to me that they should bring pressure to bear on the present administration. The road is not going to be built by men coming down here year after year and introducing motions and having them discussed in this House, and letting the matter end at that. The hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Knowles) who first spoke on this question this afternoon, criticised the hon. leader of the opposition for not having put in his Halifax platform an article dealing with this great question. This question was discussed somewhat last session, and we had hon. gentlemen getting up and bowing their acknowledgments to the hon. gentleman who has made the motion this afternoon, indicating that some speedy action would be taken by the government in the matter. The reason for the delay apparently is that there is not unanimity of opinion on the other side of the House as to which is the proper outlet for the prairie products. Last session there appeared on the Order Paper a notice of motion by the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Knowles), and side by side with it another by the hon. member for Vancouver (Mr. Macpherson), and I propose to put these notices of motion in 'Hansard.' The first was as follows:

Mr. Knowles—Proposed resolution—That in the opinion of this House the interests of the Dominion of Canada urgently require that every possible effort be made by the government to effect some suitable arrangemnt for the speedy construction of a railway to the shores of Hudson bay.

Practically the same as the motion brought up to-day by the hon. member for West Assiniboia; the only difference is that the motion of to-day mentions Fort Churchill as the desirable port. The notice of motion of the hon. member for Vancouver was as follows:

Mr. Macpherson—Proposed resolution—That in the opinion of this House it is advisable for the Canadian government to take active steps towards the establishing of terminal elevators at the port of Vancouver, for the better handling of the grain crops of Alberta and other western provinces, whose natural outlet is the Pacific coast.

So it is quite apparent that there is not unanimity of opinion amongst hon. gentlemen opposite as to which is the natural outlet for prairie products. Nor is there probably unanimity of opinion in the country on this subject. But in rising to speak to the amendment, I have not the slightest hesitation in saying that I am in favour of the government undertaking this work with the least possible delay. I have listened to the reasons advanced for and against the construction of the road to Hudson bay. Those in its favour appeal to me, and I propose to support the project to the best of my ability, believing that in so doing I represent the views of the majority of my constituents. If there were no other reasons in its favour, I would support it for this one. This road would furnish a safety valve at a time when there is apt to be congestion of freight and when there is great delay and difficulty in moving our crop. It would thus relieve any hardship suffered by the people in the west who desire to get their grain to market as speedily as possible. One of the reasons I have heard urged against the building of this road is that we have a short haul to Fort William which suits the greater part of the territories, and another argument used is that we should rather look to opening a market in the orient. It is claimed that in Vancouver we have a port which is open 365 days in the year, and which is frequented by tramp steamers, and that those tramp steamers keep down the freight rates. And it is further argued that none of this class of steamers can go to Hudson bay, because that bay has to be navigated by boats specially built for that purpose. But the great reason which appeals to me in favour of this project is that it would save a haul of about 1,500 miles from the majority of places from which grain is shipped in the prairie section and that it would also relieve the congestion of freight at a time when it is most desirable we should have speedy shipment. There is also this argument in its favour that it would be a much more suitable route both for cattle and grain. But while I am in favour of the construction of this road, I am not in favour of the wording of the amendment to the motion to go into Supply. I think that this notice of motion should rather censure the government for its delay. Although my hon. friend from West Assiniboia (Mr. Knowles) went as close as he safely could to censuring the government, the only fault he had to find was that the present railway facilities are not adequate. If he had followed out the history of this question a little closer, he would have found ample justification for censuring the government because the fact stands out perfectly clear that the government have taken hold of the land grant set aside for the construction of a railway to Hudson bay and given it for the construction of railways which for the most part go away from the bay. They have permitted railway companies to duplicate their lines and have given them out of this land grant subsidies for the construction of railways in very erratic courses and in many instances running in an opposite direction to Hudson bay. For ahat reason I think the government are deserving of censure. They are deserving of censure for what I might term their wilful waste of aid to railways by giving them land grants which were intended to aid in the building of a road to Hudson bay. At the same time I wish to point out that I am not objecting to the aid granted these railways, as they were no doubt built in sections of the country which require railway construction, but what I want to note particularly is that hon. members opposite claim that the Laurier administration have never granted an acre of land in aid of railways, whereas they have on the contrary given large grants but have tried to conceal these grants behind an old Hudson bay charter. Just trace back this question of the construction of a railway to Hudson bay. Some years ago we find that a charter was given to the Winnipeg and Great Northern Railway Company and that company was given the choice of two routes to Hudson bay, either of which it could select. One of these routes ran east of Lake Manitoba and the other ran west of Lake Manitoba to Lake Dauphin. Both joined at Waterhorn lake and then proceeded northerly to Grand Rapids.

The original line of this railway is laid out in a report of the Committee of the Privy Council approved by His Excellency on the 8th April, 1882. Here is the line of location as described in this order in council :

The chief engineer of railways reports that the line of location, as marked out, starts from the city of Winnipeg,' thence northerly to the east of Shoal lake, thence crossing the narrows between Lake Manitoba and Lake St. Martin, thence to the outlet of Cedar lake at the Grand rapids, thence following the shore of Lake Winnipeg, crossing Ross island, a short distance above Play Gren lake and Sea falls, thence following the general direction of the shore of Lake Winnipegosis to beyond the falls, thence in a direct line to its terminus on the Nelson river, a short distance below the Limestone falls.

That was the line originally intended. A short time after that the Winnipeg and Great Northern got the choice of two lines.

Some years after a land grant was given to the Hudson Bay Railway. That company was to obtain 6,400 acres per mile in Manitoba and 12,800 acres per mile in the territories. All these lines became finally a part of the Canadian Northern. I have tried to trace out what has been done with that land grant since the date of that order in council in April, 1882.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. When you left the chair, Mr. Speaker, I was endeavouring to point out how the present administration had exhausted the land grant originally set aside for the construction of a railway to Hudson bay and had applied that land grant, in many instances, to branch lines running in a direction away from Hudson bay . I was also proceeding to trace the history of some of the old charters authorizing the construction of this Hudson bay road. There was first the Winnipeg and Hudson Bay Railway Company. Then there was a charter to the Nelson Valley Railway and Transportation Company. These two charters, some years after, were merged. Later on, the company was known as the Winnipeg and Great Northern Railway Company. This road, as I pointed out before you left the chair, had two alternative routes. One runs east of Lake Manitoba, the other west of Lake Manitoba, touching Lake Dauphin. Both join at Waterhern lake and then go north to Grand Rapids. There was also the Lake Manitoba Railway and Canal Company. Their charter, as I understand it, provides for the construction of a line from Portage la Prairie or Gladstone to a point on the Saskatchewan river. All these charters have come into the possession of the Canadian Northern Railway Company, and, in the discussion of the matter they can all be treated as belonging to that company. What I suggested before you left the chair was that the government has simply been playing with this question. The question has been before them every year since 1896, as a perusal of the orders in council will show. Applications have been made to them to extend land grants, to extend the time of construction, or to extend the time within which the companies would be entitled to land grants set aside for the construction of the railway. They have not shown in this matter the haste which they have displayed in other matters. Only a couple of years ago the Grand Trunk Pacific was being mooted. An agitation was created in that country with the idea of persuading the people that there must be increased transportation facilities. Time, the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) told us, would not wait. 'Heaven grant that it may not be too late,' he said. But in connection with this matter of the Hudson bay road, he has not shown the same activity that he exercised in order to have the construction of the Grand Trunk Pacific undertaken and gone ahead without delay.

Mr. SPROULE. It was Cox who could not wait.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. An hon. gentleman remarks that Senator Cox could not wait. It may be of assistance to hon. members from the west to point out that Senator Cox is greatly interested in that western country, having extensive investments there. Possibly if they could secure his influence to hurry on the building of this road, it might be of some assistance.

I also criticised the government, suggesting that they are not only responsible for the delay but also for wilfully wasting the aid in the handling of the grants, that is assuming that the object in view was a road to Hudson bay. I repeat that the government have practically exhausted the land grant set aside for this purpose, and that they have applied it to branch lines running towards Prince Albert, or in many cases to lines in a direction away from Hudson bay. Not only have they done that, but they have permitted these branch lines to take a very erratic course. If any person interested will look at the map, one moment will be enough to satisfy him that, if the land grant is being applied, it is not being applied to construct a railway to Hudson bay, and that to call this a grant for a railway to Hudson bay is simply a misnomer. The location of the line shows that there are a great many subsidy curves, if I may so call them. If you look back into the order in council, you find these people who had the right to construct a railway under these charters are entitled to a land grant of 6,480 acres a mile in Manitoba and 12,800 acres a mile in the Northwest. If you figure out the value of that grant on the basis of a reasonable figure per acre, say $6 per acre net at the time the road was constructed, you will realize the significance of the term 'subsidy curves,' and be able to see the reason of the erratic course the road pursues and realize why it is that it wobbles over the country in this way. Now, to be more specific, looking at the map for a moment—not at the map in the Canadian Northern folder, because the line of railway indicated on that map is a line that goes almost as the crow flies. There may be a jog of thirty miles to the west and another of forty-seven miles to the west, but one look at the line in the folder would infer that the line goes practically straight. But look at the map issued by the government and you will observe the jogs in the line and can follow the erratic course of the location of the line throughout. To show the House just what these people have got for the construction of the different branches under these Hudson bay charters, I want to refer for a moment to an extract from the report of the Committee of the Privy Council, approved of August 10, 1903 :

The order in council continues :

The minister further states that the chief engineer of government railways reports that the mileage of the Canadian Northern Railway Company constructed and placed in running order is :

From Beaver to Gladstone, 18·37 miles.

From Gladstone to Winnipegosis, 124·75 miles.

From Sifton Junction to Mafeking, 125 miles.

From Mafeking to the provincial boundary, 28·33 miles, all in Manitoba.

And from the provincial boundary to Erwood in the Northwest Territories 22·16 miles, which entitles the company to a total land grant of 2,180,928 acres for the construction of 320 miles of railway.

We have often heard in this House, we read it in the subsidized organs of the Liberal party and in their campaign literature, and we hear from their speakers on the platform, that the present administration have never given away an acre of land to aid in the construction of a railway. I have just pointed to one instance where 2,180,920 acres of land were granted for the construction of this railway between the points I have mentioned.

If any person will look at the map and observe the locality where this line of railway is constructed and point out to me wherein it is a railway being built to connect with Hudson bay, I would be very glad to be enlightened on that point. No person could seriously take that position. The present administration were under absolutely no obligation to revive these land grants if they did not want to do so, and they cannot say that they have never given an acre of land to aid in the construction of railways, by trying to hide behind the fence of an old Hudson bay charter. For the construction of 320 miles of railway from Gladstone to Erwood, they have received this immense land grant but at Erwood you are not closer to the Hudson bay by more than 150 miles than you are at Gladstone. That would indicate that the 'subsidy curves' or the jogs in the line enabled the company to get a land grant on 170 miles of railway which was an utter waste of aid in so far as connecting with Hudson bay is concerned. On this 170 miles they received a land grant of 12,800 acres per mile for 22½ miles, and 6,400 acres a mile for 147½ miles, or a total of 1,229,824 acres of land over and above what was required if the object of the railway was to get to Hudson bay. If the Pas was the objective point why should not the line have gone from Sifton Junction to the Pas direct? I am given to understand by people who are familiar with the locality that there are no physical features to prevent that. I am not opposed to aiding the construction of railways in these localities, but I wish to point out the hypocrisy of hon. gentlemen opposite when they claim that they have never given away an acre of land to assist in the construction of railways. From Sifton Junction to Winnipegosis there is a little branch line 21 miles in length which surely could not be said to have been aided in order to get to Hudson bay. If they were going to Hudson bay in that direction it was not necessary to give a land grant from Sifton Junction to Erwood and from Sifton Junction to Winnipegosis as it is simply duplicating the line, you have a fork, one line running from Sifton Junction to Winnipegosis for 21 miles and the other from Sifton Junction in a northwesterly direction. If the object was to get to Hudson bay, why was it necessary to swing west in township 35 for 30 miles from Cowan to Swan River, and why was it necessary to swing west again from Baden to Erwood for 42 miles? I am not opposed to aiding these lines, but do they run towards Hudson bay? The answer is simply that when people are getting a land grant of 12,800 acres per mile for some parts of their road, an erratic course pays.

Mr. BURROWS. The reason they ran that line was to avoid the mountain in both places, first the Duck mountain and then the Porcupine mountain. There was no possibility of running the railway over the mountains.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. The hon. gentleman will have an opportunity to answer me. I am told by people in the locality that there is no reason why the road should not have run from Sifton Junction to the Pas, but it would seem as if the company looked the country over in order to find mountains to get an excuse to run around them, and get 12,800 acres of land per mile.

I might point to another 'subsidy curve.' The Lake Manitoba Railway and Canal Company so far as I have been able to trace their rights when they obtained their charter, were to run a line from Portage la Prairie or from Gladstone to a point on the Saskatchewan river, but I find from the orders in council and memorandum which I have read that a portion of this land grant is applied for the construction of the line from Gladstone to Beaver, about 18 miles of railway running in a southeasterly direction from Gladstone. If any one will figure up this waste of mileage, taking as I have said a land grant of 12,800 acres a mile, and place on it a valuation of $6 per acre, which I take to be a moderate estimate, it will be seen what an enormous amount these people were getting for the construction of these branch lines, in some cases $78,000 per mile if the land netted $6 per acre. When this land grant was originally given, there were certain limitations on the area out of which they were entitled to select, but when the present administration came into power they allowed them to extend this area and they chose their lands all over Saskatchewan, right up to the 4th meridian. They are selecting lands to satisfy these old grants north of Swift Current and they have not selected 9 per cent of the lands out of the area originally set aside for selection. It is difficult to understand how this influential corporation can come down and secure an extension of the time within which they should construct these railways, and have the areas of the lands from which they can select enlarged running their line wherever they see fit, selecting lands at their own sweet will. It will be seen that they have received from the present administration as favourable treatment as any company ever got in this country and it does not lie in the mouths of hon. gentlemen opposite to say that the present administration has not given away one acre of land to assist in the construction of railways in the west. If you will take the figures mentioned in the order in council it will be found that from Sifton Junction to Erwood 1,300,000 acres of land have been given to this company for the purpose of assisting in the construction of that part of the road—I say 'assisting'; it would more than pay for the whole construction. In connection with the question which was raised by the hon. member for West Assiniboia that no land has been given away, let me point out to him that if he would read through the orders in council he would find that there is hardly a year during the last ten years in which the time for the construction of the road, or the earning of the land grant has not been extended. For example, let me read the following :

> Extract from a report of the committee of the hon. the Privy Council, approved by His Excellency on the 19th October, 1899.
> The minister further states that the Canadian Northern Railway Company has applied to him for an extension of time for the completion of its lines of railway, for the purposes of its land grant, the period for the completion of such lines, for that purpose, having only been extended until the 31st December, 1899, by the order in council of 22nd October, 1898.
> The minister therefore recommends that the time fixed by the order in council of 22nd October, 1898, for the completion of the lines of railway hereinbefore referred to be extended to the 10th July, 1904.

Again, on the 20th February, 1900, the following order in council was passed :

> The minister, therefore, recommends that as the time for the completion of the company's lines of railway north of the Saskatchewan river was extended by the Act, chapter 57 of the statutes of 1899, 62-63 Victoria, to the 10th July, 1906, the time fixed for the completion of such lines for the purposes of the company's land grant therefor, as provided by the orders in council hereinbefore referred to including the order of the 22nd October, 1898, be extended to the 10th July, 1906. This order in council also shifts the line westerly to the Swan river district.

And so, all the way down the line. That is not the treatment which has been meted out to other holders of charters in the country. I remember that about three years ago an application was made by the Red Deer Valley Company for an extension of time. They also wanted to have the time in which they could construct their road extended and also the privilege of taking advantage of the land grant. That was not conceded to them. They apparently had not the influence with the present administration to secure the same consideration that the Canadian Northern have had for the last eight or nine years. The hon. member for West Assiniboia said that he was opposed to the scheme suggested by the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton), that it would tie up so many acres of land in the country. He said that the curse of the country had been so many acres of land had been tied up from time to time and that it was depriving the people of the opportunity of having proper schools and, of course, as he usually does, he blamed all this on the Conservative administration and on the Canadian Pacific Railway. Let me point out to him that since his friends have come into power there have been no less than 8,750,000 acres of land set apart out of which this company were to make their selection, and that the privilege has been extended from time to time during a great many years. In conclusion, I repeat what I have said that the whole history of this case shows that the government have only been playing with this question and that instead of this land grant having been used for the purpose of establishing railway conection with Hudson bay the orders in council show that the government have been guilty of wilful waste of the aid in connection with this whole matter.

Mr. E. L. CASH (Mackenzie). Mr. Speaker, in undertaking to take part in this debate, I must confess that I do it with a great deal of diffidence, because I realize probably as fully as any person the importance of what we are undertaking, and the serious consequences that may result if we fail to properly impress not alone this House and the government, but the people of the Dominion as to the necessity, the feasibility, and the advantages to be derived from this undertaking, not alone for the western provinces, but for the whole of the Dominion.

I shall, therefore, undertake to describe as nearly as possible the condition of the agriculturists in Saskatchewan, and as they are there, so they are in the other western provinces, and I feel that if I can do this properly, and can then show the feasibility and the advantages to be derived from this proposition, there would not be one member in this House who would oppose our proposition as such, whatever differences might exist as to the means of its accomplishment.

For instance, I personally believe that the government should undertake this as a national project, and that it might not prove a burden to this country, there is plenty of land in the west on which the scheme could be financed. They should build a line from the main line of the Canadian Northern to Churchill, and this should be built with the idea that it would eventually be double tracked. By making provision for double tracking this line at the time of construction great expense might be saved as soon as it became necessary to put in the extra track, as I can assure you it will not be many years before this will be absolutely necessary. Extensive terminal facilities at both ends of the line, prepared to take cars from all roads and carry them to their destination and return, large storage facilities at Churchill in the shape of elevators and so forth, a line of suitable boats from Churchill to Liverpool, and extensive elevators in Liverpool, would best serve the interests of that part of the country which we are endeavouring to promote.

I, however, am willing to support any feasible measure which has for its object, the building of this line, whether it be by the government or by a private corporation for the route is the one essential thing, and of much greater importance than the manner of its construction.

There is no question in the mind of any thinking man in this Dominion as to the importance of agriculture. It is the foundation of our whole prosperity and, I might almost say, of our existence, and by doing what we can to strengthen this foundation, we thereby are enabled not alone to raise a larger, but a safer superstructure. If we are to become the great nation which we aspire to become, it is well that our foundation be well laid, and in this way we will avoid many of the disasters which have overtaken nations, causing them in time of distress or financial difficulties to topple, and, in some instances, to fall, because their foundation was not broad enough and based upon the earth, from which all our riches primarily come.

The agriculturists in Saskatchewan have not the diversified means of prospering that farmers have in Ontario and the States. They are consumers of tomatoes, and not producers on which there is an extravagant protection. They are consumers of tobacco and not producers, and so I could go on and mention quite a number of other protected products for which our people pay extravagant prices, and, I am pleased to say, usually without a murmur. But they produce staple farm products, such as wheat, oats, barley, flax and so forth, and raise horses, cattle, sheep and hogs, and bitterly complain about having to produce grain which has to compete with all comers in the market of the world by the use of machinery upon which they have to pay a tariff.

I do not imagine that there is one member in the House who does not appreciate what the importance and value of the development of the west is to the whole Dominion, to the manufacturers of the east, to the fruit growers of the east, to the carrying trade, new boats on the lakes, new lines of railways; all these can trace their prosperity, and, in a great many instances, their origin, entirely to the development of the west, and I think that this is the place where we should pause for a moment to say, without any political bias, that this, in a large measure, has been brought about by the wise and energetic immigration policy inaugurated and carried out by the present government.

Now, we, who live in the west, know that even with the utmost straining and most earnest endeavour on the part of the railway companies, that they are not able to take care of in reasonable time, the freight which is offered them by our people which was plainly demonstrated in the fall of 1906 when there was such a demand for more cars from nearly all parts of the west. In my own town of Yorkton, there were over 250 names waiting at one time upon the car order list at the station waiting for their turn to be supplied with cars which they had ordered, and the elevators all filled to the roof. To illustrate the growth that has taken place in the west I would call the attention of the House to the district I represent. I took up my residence there in 1897, and until 1901, I think I am safe in saying that it was emphatically a ranching country. About that time, or shortly after, we began to raise grain—the country began to fill up, and while, prior to the time mentioned, we had no grain to ship out, yet, in the season of 1906, we raised:

Grain.	Bushels.	Acres.
Wheat	2,143,223	84,357
Oats	4,316,731	97,500
Barley	224,847	8,264

Area under cultivation 275,000 acres 'estimated.'

Elevator capacity 931,000 bushels.

Shipments of cattle 2,361.

I refer to those things in order to give hon. gentlemen some idea of the progress that has taken place during the last few years. The following extract from the Toronto 'Globe' of April 15 of last year, written by their special correspondent from Regina, will show the area under cultivation:

Regina, April 15.—While the farmers are waiting for opportunities to scatter the seed for the crop of 1907 the probable extensions of the grain growing area are receiving consideration. The mathematicians who make calculations in Winnipeg have usually considered that an increase of 10 per cent in the acreage under wheat was sufficient as an average for the whole west, but this will not do for Saskatchewan. The total under wheat in Saskatchewan in 1906, according to the figures of the Department of Agriculture, was 1,730,586 acres, as compared with 1,130,084 in 1905, an increase of 53.10 per cent. The total under all crops was 2,501,247 acres, as compared with 1,639,563 in 1905, an increase of .56 per cent. These large increases are sufficient in themselves to show the rapid development of the grain-producing industry, and the record which is constituted by them is difficult to maintain. For instance, another increase of 53 per cent in the acreage under wheat would bring the total in this province to over 2,600,000, and the amount looks very large at this writing. It will probably look normal six months hence, and there are those who say that it may even be exceeded.

I have here an extract from the Department of Agriculture's Report on the grain crops of Saskatchewan for the year 1907 which shows that there were in 1907 produced in the province :

Grain.	Bushels.	Acreage.
Wheat	28,042,106	1,847,708
Oats	29,167,964	772,770
Barley	1,903,072	60,261
Flax	921,043	85,209
Total	60,034,185	2,765,948

There was also shipped out of Saskatchewan :

Cattle	27,271
Horses	3,499
Hogs	4,716

This is a very good showing, when the climatic conditions which prevailed over such a large area of our province are taken into consideration. There was a much larger area prepared for crop, some of which was not put in, and thousands of acres that were not cut, and a great deal that was cut was not threshed.

I bring these things to the attention of the House that you may have some idea of the progress that we are making. I may also refer to the report of the Department of Trade and Commerce which establishes what I have already stated, that similar progress is being made in Manitoba and Alberta as I claim for Saskatchewan. These are the figures :

Total grain weighed, Manitoba inspection division.

	Bushels.
1906-07, 9 months	97,041,653
1905-06 "	130,547,955
1904-05 "	77,371,533
1902-03 "	39,442,575

With this growth of the trade of the country, the House will readily understand why our people are demanding from the government a better condition of affairs as regards transportation. We have all heard of the great railway tie-up we had in 1906, I will read a couple of letters that will emphasize this matter and will then undertake by railway statistics to show that we are liable to be up against a similar condition at any time when the crop in the west is of ordinary proportions to the amount of land under cultivation. I do not wish to find undue fault with any railway company for I realize they are making an effort to supply the country with reasonable facilities for the transportation of grain, but I wish to emphasize that notwithstanding their efforts they have been unable to cope with the situation and they certainly will not be able to if the country continues to progress as it has in the past. I shall read the following letters, most of which I received last year, bearing on this question :

Rokeby, Saskatchewan, February 23, 1907.

E. L. Cash, M.P.,
House of Commons, Ottawa.

Dear Sir,—In reply to your favour of 19th instant, I may say that the amount of grain at Rokeby is as follows (grown 1906):

	Bushels.
Amount sold up to February 1, 1907	210,000
Amount in farmers' hands	190,000
Amount shipped up to above date	130,000
Amount yet to ship out	270,000
Total amount for Rokeby market	400,000
Increase over last season	100,000

Yours truly,
R. A. BLACK.

Mr. Black has charge of the Northern elevator at Rokeby. This is another letter sent to me :

Yorkton District Board of Trade.
Incorporated 1900.

Yorkton, Saskatchewan, March 19, 1907.

E. L. Cash, Esq., M.P.,
House of Commons, Ottawa, Ontario.

Dear Sir,—Shipments of grain from Yorkton are as follows:

	Bushels.
From September 1, 1906, to March 18, 1907	951,295
In store in elevators	224,180
Stored in sheds and warehouses about town	75,000
Grain held by farmers	1,000,000
Total	2,250,475

In addition to above there has been milled 70,000 bushels of wheat, making a total of 2,320,475 bushels of grain, the crop product of the Yorkton district, 35 per cent of this amount represents wheat, balance oats. A very large amount of grain has yet to be threshed. The supply of cars is very small and business is at a standstill. In regard to the Hudson bay road, the general opinion here is that the road would prove of immense advantage to this country for the timber, mineral and fish products which would be carried over it even if no grain could be taken out by the Hudson bay straits.

Yours truly,

M. A. EBY,

President Board of Trade.

The Hon. Mr. Motherwell wrote to me as follows:

Executive Council, Saskatchewan,
Regina, February 28, 1907.

Dr. E. L. Cash, M.P.,
House of Commons, Ottawa.

Sir,—The inclosed crop statistics and summaries of condition and amount of last season's crop yet in the farmers' hands will doubtless be of interest to you in pressing for better equipment of our present lines and the immediate construction of the Hudson Bay Railway, which questions are now before the federal House.

Yours faithfully,

W. R. MOTHERWELL,

Commissioner of Agriculture.

Crop, 1906.	Shipped.	In Elevators.	In Farmers' Hands.
28,089,475	9,874,295	6,362,190	8,135,000

To show that there is still complaint I will read the following letter received by me last month:

Peaker Brothers, grain merchants,

Yorkton, Saskatchewan, March 19, 1908.

My Dear Cash,—We are getting stuck for want of cars at Rokeby. Do you think you could help us by a timely word to the Canadian Pacific Railway or its representatives at Ottawa?

Yours very truly,

PEAKER BROTHERS.

This correspondence plainly shows that last year the railways at that time were certainly not supplying the needs of the country, and that there are complaints even at present. This will be evident from the following railway statistics:

Number of freight cars in Canada—

1907.. 105,540
Increase, 82 per cent.

Mileage of railway—

1897.. 16,550
1907.. 22,452
Increase, 35 per cent.

Tons of freight carried—

1897.. 25,300,331
1907.. 63,866,135
Increase, 152 per cent.

Traffic per car—

Tons.

1907.. 605
Increase, 37 per cent.

Mr. CASH.

The growth of traffic in connection with Canadian railways is a natural sequence to the immense increase in the trade of the country during the past ten years. Following are the figures:

1907 (9 months).... 465,063,204

As this latter is for only 9 months, it will be better represented by stating that it is $600,000,000, instead of $465,000,000 for the year. This would mean an increase of about 300 per cent, while the number of freight cars has only increased 82 per cent.

I will give a few figures in regard to the equipment of the different railroads:

The Canadian Pacific Railway had on June 30 last 1,296 locomotives and 40,405 freight cars. With a total mileage of 8,921, this would represent 145 locomotives and 4,529 freight cars per 1,000 miles.

The Grand Trunk Railway had 868 locomotives and 28,662 freight cars, representing, on a mileage of 3,117 miles, 278 locomotives and 9,195 freight cars per 1,000 miles.

The Canadian Northern Railway, with a mileage of 2,585 miles, had 323 locomotives owned and leased, and 6,551 freight cars. This would be equal to 125 locomotives and 2,534 freight cars per 1,000 miles.

On the basis of 22,452 miles of railway for the whole Dominion, there were on June 30 last 156 locomotives and 5,218 freight cars per 1,000 miles.

For the whole of the United States in 1906 there were 232 locomotives and 8,266 freight cars per 1,000 miles.

As a summary of this matter I will quote from the railway statistics of the Dominion of Canada for the year ended June 30, 1907, what the compiler of statistics has to say on this subject. He says:

Last year 16,949 freight cars were added to the total supply in Canada. But it must not be assumed that the congestion of traffic was relieved to that extent. In the first place, cars wear out and are destroyed. The Master Car Builders' Association years ago fixed a depreciation of six per cent on wooden cars down to forty per cent of their first cost, which would establish the life of a car at somewhere about 20 years. Placing it at 25 years, however, and fitting that figure to the 96,565 freight cars in service in Canada in 1906, it will be seen that 3,862 new cars would have been required in 1907 to replace those which had passed out of commission. But that is not all. There were 1,099 miles of new railway put into operation during the year, and on the basis indicated in the preceding paragraph, and applied to 1906, this additional mileage would call for an equipment of 4,523 freight cars. These two sums make up 8,385. Allowing for a service of 594 tons per car, the 5,899,422 tons of additional freight handled in 1907 would require 9,932 new cars. Adding together the three sums indicated, we have a required addition of 18,317 freight cars in order to maintain normal conditions, or 1,368 more than were actually brought into use during the year.

I need not comment on these figures; they speak for themselves, and indicate very plainly that, with the normal growth of the country, we shall have to face a similar proposition in every season in which an average crop is produced.

I have no doubt that every member of this House, coming from a western grain growing section, will endorse what I say, and it is this: that the present railway systems cannot keep pace with the growth and demands of that country, and, on the other hand, the farmers cannot afford to pay the demands made upon them to get their products into the hands of the consumer. They have heard of the Hudson Bay route, have read with eagerness and interest everything they could find in the public press on the subject, also the bulletin lately issued by the Interior Department, and are now demanding to know if the government considers the route feasible, and, if so, that it be built with as little delay as possible.

The answer to this is that as far as the railway is concerned, from all the information I can get from engineers and others who have been over the line from the Pas to Churchill, there are no serious obstacles in the way, and that the road can be constructed without any serious engineering difficulties to be overcome, and that it would not be attended by any very great or unusual expense; also, that there is a large area about one hundred miles square, of good clay land, through which such a road would pass, and that it is rich in pulp wood and minerals of various kinds. With regard to the navigation of the Hudson bay and Hudson strait, I will read extracts from a recent report by Mr. A. P. Low, Director of the Geological Survey of Canada. This gentleman's observations carry the weight which attaches to the utterances of a responsible government officer, and have the additional advantage of being based upon personal knowledge and experience while in command of the 'Neptune,' a vessel fitted out by the federal government to determine the feasibility of the navigation of Hudson straits and bay. The first conclusion arrived at by Mr. Low is that Hudson bay is navigable by ordinary boats for four months, from the 15th July, to the 15th November, and that for reinforced vessels (those constructed to encounter ice) navigation may be prolonged another month. Mr. Low then says that the distance from Regina to Fort Churchill is equal to that from Regina to Fort William, while the distance from Fort Churchill to Liverpool is practically the same as from Quebec to Liverpool; consequently, the Hudson Bay route saves to the Northwest the transportation charges over a distance equal to that between Fort William and Quebec. He was confidently of the opinion that the grain crops of the Northwest could be easily transported from Churchill to Liverpool. This eminent gentleman demonstrates that Liverpool is approximately 1,000 miles nearer the wheat fields of the west by way of Fort Churchill than by way of Quebec. He demonstrates that the route via Fort Churchill is navigable for four months at least during the year, being a sufficient period to move the crops. He demonstrates, also that the vicinity of Hudson bay is rich in mineral, copper being on the west and iron on the east side of the bay. Speaking generally of the surrounding district Mr. Low says: 'It is undoubtedly contains much and varied stores of mineral wealth.'

Mr. Low holds that given a good harbour such as that of Churchill, and an adequate number of tramp steamships there will be no difficulty in removing during the season of safe navigation all the grain and other supplies that can be drawn by a single line of rails. The route is divided naturally into two sections, each about 500 miles long, that in the bay itself, and that in the strait leading to the North Atlantic ocean.

The first presents no serious natural difficulties. The water is deep, varying from 50 to 200 fathoms, the approach to the low shores being indicated by a gradually lessening depth, giving ample warning to the navigator. Only a few beacons would be required as guides to Churchill where a deep river gives safe room for ships to load and unload.

The causes of the short season of navigation are found in the strait. It is deep, with no shoals, and there is little danger of stranding on the bold shores of either side or on the few islands that bound the channel. At the main eastern end the strait has a practicable channel thirty-five miles wide. At its narrowest part the channel is thirty miles wide. The difficulties are due to its geographical situation. It lies north of latitude 62.30. The main stream of the Arctic current from Baffin bay loaded with ice passes across its mouth, and in November or early December closes the eastern entrance. This ice stream is sometimes fifty miles in width. It blocks the coast of Labrador during the winter, and in March is off Newfoundland, bearing with it the seal herd that gives the islander so much welcome wealth. It is an obstruction to the St. Lawrence navigation, as some of it finds its way into the strait of Belle Isle and closes that route to ships until late in the summer. The rest disappears in the warmer water of the Atlantic.

Early in October ice begins to form in the strait itself, and by the end of the month the northern harbours are frozen over. The southern ones do not close for a month later. The bay does not freeze over. The ice generally extends from the shores outward for a distance of five miles, though James bay at the south becomes completely covered. Specially constructed ships, of the 'Ermack' type, might navigate the bay all winter and the strait also.

The adverse reports rendered by earlier

expeditions dispatched to investigate the possibilities of Hudson bay were possibly coloured by political consideration or the decision influenced by the vested railroad interest affected by the proposal. We, however, know that the Hudson Bay Company's boats have traversed these seas for a couple of hundred years, and I have also read in the 'Gentlemen's Magazine,' an English publication, vol. 52, page 547, of date October 29, 1782, a quotation from the Paris 'Gazette' of an expedition to Hudson bay by a small French squadron under the command of Admiral De La Perouse. This squadron consisted of the 'Sceptre,' 74 guns, and two frigates 'L'Astree' and 'L'Engagente' under the command of Chevalier Langle and the Sieur Joillie, having on board a detachment of 250 land forces with two 8-in. mortars, 300 shells, and four field pieces, that they sailed from Cape Francois on May 31, 1782, and on July 17, 1782, they arrived at the mouth of the strait, that they had neither charts nor pilots, but that they entered the bay, captured Fort Prince of Wales and Fort York, which is at the mouth of Nelson's river and after looting the several forts they sailed away having captured valuables to the amount of twelve millions of livres, which would represent about five hundred thousand pounds sterling.

The fact that a vessel of this class, a sailing vessel of course, of 74 guns could go into the bay in 1782 at that time of the year, accomplish what it did, and get out safely, would convince any ordinary man that both the straits and the bays are navigable for vessels of a larger draught. It convinces me that ordinary steamboats with proper appliances could navigate those waters much earlier than the dates mentioned.

It is twenty-two years since the route was first officially examined, and the long delay in coming to a favourable conclusion affords another proof of the false perspective in which suggestions of transportation alterations are seen.

Last year several hon. gentlemen on both sides spoke favourably of this matter.

Quoting from 'Hansard,' page 901, on March 30, 1906, I find the hon. member from Souris (Mr. Schaffner) used these words:

> I do not see how any one can look at that inland sea and not come to the opinion that Providence had a very wise thing in his mind when he put Hudson bay there. It was to carry out the products, not only of Manitoba and the Northwest Territories, but also of the Northern United States.

The hon. member for East Assiniboia, as reported in 'Hansard,' page 908, March 30, 1906, expressed the hope that a railroad to Hudson bay would shortly be built and that such road would receive substantial aid from the Dominion government. The hon. member for East Assiniboia agreed with the hon. gentleman from Souris that such a railroad was a necessity, and would be a valuable additional route for the whole of the western country.

Hon. Walter Scott in his address to the electors of Saskatchewan, in his last campaign said:

> We have been obeying the direction of the Saskatchewan Liberal convention to urge the Hudson bay road project on the federal authorities, and not without success. I have now received assurance that the Dominion Government admit this project to be a national undertaking, and that they will not deny their responsibility. In other words, the Dominion Government will take measures to procure the construction of a railway from a point in Saskatchewan to the Hudson bay.

The policy of recognizing the Hudson bay route has actually received the endorsement of this government, and the people of the west have been officially informed of this fact by the gentleman who occupies the position of Premier of Saskatchewan.

Referring to this announcement as made by Hon. Mr. Scott, the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake) reported in 'Hansard,' page 909, March 30, 1906, said in the House that he hailed this statement by Mr. Scott with infinite delight and that he regarded the pledge made by the Dominion government to undertake the work as one which would satisfy all the people of the west.

Dealing with the subject from a practical standpoint, one only has to quote from a speech delivered in the Senate, on March 16 last, by Hon. Mr. Perley, a practical farmer in the Northwest.

After alluding to the difficulty and loss occasioned to the wheat grower by reason of the long and expensive haul from the wheat fields to the sea, the honourable senator said: 'Freight from Wolseley, Saskatchewan to Fort William is 10 cents a bushel, from Wolseley to North Bay it is 22 cents'; concluding his remarks the hon. gentleman said 'export from the Atlantic sea-board by rail is entirely out of the question.'

The freight rate upon grain from the belt to Hudson bay would approximate 10 cents a bushel; this is a freight the farmer could afford to pay, but the additional 15 cents necessary to get the grain to the Atlantic sea-board is prohibitive and of itself represents a fair profit to the wheat grower.

The saving in freight to the western farmer by reason of an outlet at Hudson bay, is represented by appalling figures. Assuming an export of 20,000,000 bushels of wheat to European markets via Hudson bay, the saving at 15 cents, being about the difference in cost of freight from Winnipeg to the sea-board which would thus be obviated, amounts to no less than $3,000,000.

When one pursues these figures and calculates the legitimate measure in foreign demand for Canadian wheat, the amount saved to the western farmer who has the facilities of shipping via Hudson bay reaches a colossal sum.

I contend that the people of the west, having been invited by the government of Canada to settle in and cultivate that important territory, are entitled to facilities whereby easy access to a shipping port may be secured, without being compelled to surrender a large proportion of the results of their industry in payment of freight charges for unnecessary long hauls.

Are the advantages gained through the efforts of the Immigration Department, with their accompanying vast expenditures of money to be made, nugatory by failure to appreciate a proposition that is self-evident? When one reflects upon Canada's great western heritage, with its vast natural resources, its inexhaustible vitality, its great areas, its millions of acres of grazing lands, the industrial and commercial genius of its enterprising and aggressive people, the conclusion reached cannot be that all these should go for nought, or be in any manner compelled to fall short of their greatest realization by the mere incident of neglect with respect to providing intelligent transportation.

It is a principle of political economy that legitimate demands of commerce for an outlet at the point of least resistance, cannot be long delayed, and never ultimately frustrated. If the products of the west can be brought 1,000 miles nearer a European market via Hudson bay, then that point becomes, as a matter of course, the natural outlet.

The question may be asked, are not the people of the west entitled to their natural transportation advantages? I believe they are, and I regard it as the paramount duty of the government to recognize this principle.

An outlet at Hudson bay for the products of the west will annihilate a quarter of the distance from western Canada to Europe, bring uncounted millions of acres in the wheat belt a thousand miles nearer to market, and cut in half the annual transportation cost of 50,000,000 bushels of grain.

A very important feature in connection with a railway which secures quick access to the sea is with relation to the shipping of cattle to all the European markets ; this great industry is at present seriously handicapped in consequence of the long journey to be endured under present conditions. It is admitted as a well recognized fact, that cattle shipped to the Atlantic coast arrive at the shipping port in poor condition, bruised and emaciated by long days of rail travel. It is also admitted that on the sea journey they gain rather than lose flesh, if put on board in good condition. Experience proves that after three days of rail travel cattle will deteriorate ; that three days is about the limit of the time during which they can travel and maintain the condition in which they are placed on board. This being so, cattle could be transported to Fort Churchill without loss of flesh, and the voyage to Liverpool would improve this condition rather than the contrary. Therefore, this great industry alone would find in the Fort Churchill route a solution of the difficulty under which those engaged in the business of cattle shipping now labour.

Mr. F. W. Peters, assistant freight traffic manager of the Canadian Pacific at Winnipeg, states that up to the end of October over 72,000 head of cattle had been shipped to Liverpool from western Canada, and he expected a further 10,000 head to be shipped that season. The freight rate on these cattle would be about 60 cents a hundred pounds in car lots from Winnipeg to Montreal. The rate from Calgary to Fort Churchill would be about the same as to Winnipeg, and the distance about equal, so that this 60 cents a hundred pounds could be saved to the shippers if he could put the cattle on board at Hudson bay, and he would also prevent the shrinkage which otherwise occur, by reason of the additional rail journey from Winnipeg to Montreal.

Upon the 82,000 head of cattle shipped to Montreal from the west during the past season, the saving in freight alone, $6 a head, or in round figures, $650,000, would be equal to about 20 per cent of the selling price.

Now, let us for a moment consider what amount of railway service will be required to handle 50,000,000 bushels of wheat and 82,000 head of cattle, which certainly is rather under than above the present output of that country, and we are not taking into consideration the handling of coarser grains, and, in my section of the country, as I have already stated, our oat crop is more than double that of the wheat. In order to move fifty million bushels of grain it would require 50,000 cars, loaded with 1,000 bushels to the car ; and with fifteen cars to the train, it would require 3,333 trains. For eighty-two thousand head of cattle, 5,125 cars, and, figuring on fifteen cars to the train, we would have 341 train loads. And if we stop to consider that the total area surveyed in the three provinces is about one hundred and twenty million acres, that it was stated before a committee of the Senate last year that there were one hundred million acres of land suitable for settlement north of the surveyed area, and that out of this gross amount there has been selected by railway companies and by homesteaders about thirty-six million acres, which we can state with a great degree of certainty is all arable land, and that out of this there are about eight million six hundred thousand acres under cultivation, we can see that with a continued increase in the development of the country, which I think will be more rapid in the future than it has been in the past, it will be utterly impossible for any three railways to handle the grain and the products of that country. Therefore, I think that this parliament and this government are in duty bound to give the question their immediate and most earnest attention.

A revolution in traffic routes through Canada is bound to come, and the objective point for the west, is without doubt, Hudson bay. The citizens of Canada have not realized the transportation advantages of their country in the extraordinary rapidity with which they are being developed ; but the people of the west, those more nearly affected and most directly interested and having a knowledge of the conditions are clamouring for the immediate building of the Hudson bay route, because it will eliminate a long rail haul and save rehandling of freight.

Instead of this prejudicing existing transcontinental routes, I think they will be vastly benefited by the opening of the Hudson Bay route and by the improvement of the river and lake waterways of Canada. The possibility of direct communication with Europe through the very centre of the American continent and at a saving of a thousand miles over the route through the great lakes, affords the greatest opportunity of all times to bring Western Canada a thousand miles nearer Europe and to place the farmers who cultivate millions of acres of land in control of the grain markets of the world, by making possible a fifty per cent reduction in the cost of transportation.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). Mr. Speaker, considering the great fund of information which those who have addressed the House have afforded hon. members on this important question, it is not with any idea that I can add anything of a very original character to the debate that I rise to address the House. I wish to take exception to the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Knowles) reflecting, as he did in his opening remarks, on the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) for wishing to introduce on going into Supply his resolution referring to the immigration question, of which he gave notice some days ago. The hon. member for West Assiniboia claimed that this question paled into insignificance in comparison with the question of a railway line to Hudson bay which, he said, was a question of extreme urgency. I could not help thinking that, if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Knowles) was sincere in making that statement, he did not by his actions show that he was any too urgent in bringing this question before the House. When I turn to the notice of his resolution on the order paper I find that it was given on December 8, 1907—just four months ago. The hon. gentleman waited until the last private member's day, then had the resolution dropped, and, to-day, he arises and introduces what I thought was going to be a merely academic discussion. So far as the hon. gentleman was concerned, it certainly looked as if it would be no more than that, for he sat down without even moving his resolution. It seems to have been an after thought on the part of his colleagues to have another hon. gentleman from the Northwest move the resolution of which the hon. member for West Assiniboia gave notice four months ago.

We must admit that this is a question of very great importance, more especially to the people of western Canada, but of importance as well to the people of Canada generally. For some years this question of a line to Hudson bay has been engaging the attention of the people of the west especially. The provincial government of Manitoba had taken steps many years ago, by way of statute in the form of money grants and guarantee of bonds, to ensure the completion of that road. Boards of trade, Farmers' Institutes, Grain Growers' Associations, have all passed resolutions in favour of the enterprise. And, in spite of many difficulties and many disappointments, the people's hopes have been many times buoyed up by indications that the road would soon be an accomplished fact. Rumours have been rife on more than one occasion that capitalists from Europe were ready to invest money in the enterprise, that steamship companies were about to place a line of properly constructed vessels on the route to carry our products across the Atlantic by the best and shortest route to the markets of the world. Those hopes have been, on every occasion, disappointed. But, in spite of disappointments, the people cling tenaciously to the belief in the enterprise, its practicability and its necessity. If the propaganda in favour of this enterprise has not been carried on during the past decade with the extreme vigour which characterized it some time before, it is not because the people believe that it is not necessary, nor is it that they are not in favour of it. The change is simply due to the fact that, during that time, our transportation facilities have very largely extended in other directions, and have, to a certain extent, relieved the grievances of the people during the past ten years. For instance, in days gone by, the Canadian Pacific Railway had practically a monopoly of the carrying trade in that country. That company was not better probably, and no worse certainly, than any other corporation similarly situated in a new country. However, the people felt that they were paying such high freight rates that they set up an agitation for what they believed would be the shortest route to market and one that would save a great deal in freight rates and make farming operations more profitable. However, in the meantime the Canadian Pacific Railway has largely extended its system. Let any hon. member take up the map of Manitoba and he will see that it is a network of railways. Farmers in that country have to carry their grain a comparatively short distance to the nearest market. Railway development has been so wonderful during these years by reason of provincial assistance, and Dominion assistance as well that now every farmer has a railway within a few miles of his door. The Canadian Northern Railway has an almost equal mileage in the province of Manitoba to the Canadian Pacific Railway. There are over 3,000 miles of railway in Manitoba alone and both these systems have been developing in the new provinces of the west, the Hill system to the south has tapped the prairie provinces of Manitoba, Alberta and Saskatchewan, and extends as far north as the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway. The Grand Trunk Pacific has been before the people of this country for some years, and, while not in operation yet, combined with other roads has allayed to a certain extent the agitation in favour of the immediate construction of the Hudson bay road. But it is felt that, notwithstanding this great and wonderful development in our transportation facilities, the local traffic as created by these roads will supply more than sufficient for the carrying power of the roads and that, by the time this Hudson Bay Railway can be constructed, there will be sufficient and more than sufficient to afford traffic for that line also.

In the past political parties have vied with each other in the west in trying to impress on the people that each was more favourable and more earnest in its effort to secure the construction of this road than the other. This shows that if it were allowed to become a party question it would be a very keenly contested one. It is true also that in years gone by, especially in eastern Canada, whenever this project was brought up it met with serious opposition, I will not say from disinterested sources or from unselfish motives; the opposition came largely from interested transportation companies and they invariably started to 'knock' the enterprise. Newspapers were engaged in order to decry especially the feasibility of the route. Then too, business men in the east, who looked on the west almost as their own preserve, and who, to use their own expression, after having employed their money in developing the west felt that any advantages that would accrue from carrying the products of the west to the markets of the world should be realized by the people of the east, also opposed to it. I am glad to say, however, that a great deal of this former opposition to the enterprise has been done away with and this skepticism and doubt as to the feasibility of the route has been dispelled. Now a more enlightened public opinion appreciates the enormous potentialities of the west, and the fact that by reason of the large immigration and the larger acreage being brought under cultivation all these transportation lines will have more than enough traffic to tax their resources in the very near future. I am aware that while the people of the west are anxious to have the line constructed, there may be and undoubtedly is a difference of opinion as to the best method of construction. It has not been made a party measure and one political party in the west may differ as to the method of construction. For instance, the Liberals assembled in convention in Alberta showed their preference for a road that should be undertaken by the four western provincial governments, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia these governments joining together and making it a purely western enterprise. In convention assembled in the province of Alberta, they pased this resolution:

> Resolved, that, inasmuch as the provinces westward of the Great Lakes are peculiarly interested in the establishment of a new route to the sea-board alternative to that afforded by railways to the Atlantic coast, and inasmuch as the creation of two new provinces out of the Northwest Territories gives the first opportunity for co-operation with this end in view; therefore this convention is of the opinion that the earliest possible steps should be taken to secure joint action by the governments of Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia, in order to ascertain definitely and finally the feasibility of the Hudson Bay route as an outlet for our commodities, and to decide upon the best means of constructing a railway by that route to tide water, whereby the long land haul may be divided by one-half and the ocean voyage to European ports also materially decreased.

The Liberals of Saskatchewan also met in convention and adopted a somewhat different course. They passed a resolution in the following words:

> That in the opinion of this convention the early construction of a railway to Hudson bay is essential to the full development and progress of western Canada, including the province of Saskatchewan, and that the building of the road should be arranged for as a federal work in the general interests of Canada as a whole; and
> Be it further resolved, that it shall be the immediate duty of the provincial authorities to press upon the Dominion government for the early completion of the project.

It will thus be seen that the same party in the two provinces differed materially as to the method of constructing the road. As to Manitoba, both political parties have been pledged to the construction of the road, both of them have placed money and guaranteed assistance in the statute-book of that province many years ago, so that while there may be a difference of opinion in regard to the method of construction, there is no difference of opinion in the west in regard to the necessity of the road.

I know that objections have been offered, such as have been referred to by my colleagues in the House to-day. These objections have been offered by those who do not seem to greatly favour the enterprise. These are such objections as that the route could never be navigable by reason of fogs and floating ice. Another strongly urged alleged reason is that the season of navigation would not be long enough to make it a profitable commercial enterprise. As to the question of fogs we have only to look up the history of the steamers that have already gone up there for the express purpose of testing the practicability of that route, and in every case it will be found that the captains of these steamers report that they were not as greatly troubled with fogs on that route as they would be off the coast of Newfoundland; they report that the St. Lawrence route is in some respects more dangerous than the Hudson Bay route would be. We all know to-day that there are people who, not from disinterested motives, try to decry our own St. Lawrence route, but still what would Canada be to-day without that route? It has been decried by rival enterprises and we have often heard complaints of discrimination by insurance companies against the St. Lawrence route on the ground of its being more dangerous than the New York route. These are objections that can all be dispelled, and as far as the navigability of Hudson straits is concerned, the steamers there have reported that there is four to five months of open navigation. We all know that in years gone by even our own great west was belittled. It was claimed not only by outsiders but even by those resident in our own country that it was only fit for the home of Indians and buffalo, and that no railway through it would ever pay as a commercial enterprise. Recently I came across a clipping from a Montreal newspaper of many years ago, and I shall read a short extract from it in order to show the opinion of our great Northwest as an agricultural country held in the east at that time. It will emphasize the great change of opinion that has taken place in this respect. This is from the Montreal 'Transcript' of 1856:

> The Red river is an oasis in the midst of a desert, a vast, treeless prairie on which scarcely a shrub is to be seen. The climate is unfavourable to the growth of grain; the summer though warm enough is too short in duration, so that even the few fertile spots could with difficulty mature a potato or a cabbage.

That is the opinion of an eastern newspaper of 1856, of what I and the members of this House regard as the future granary of the British empire. All these fertile plains with their miles of waving grain, have been opened up, and I wish to give due credit to the transportation company that has opened up that great country. Had it not been for its efforts we would not to-day require the Hudson Bay route. Just as experience has demonstrated the fallacy of this opinion of the Montreal 'Transcript' in regard to the fertility of the Northwest so we will be able to remove the prejudice and ignorance as to the Hudson Bay route. I feel that in less than a quarter of a century public opinion in regard to it will have very materially changed.

It has been stated that the Hudson Bay Company's vessels have been going in and out of the bay for 250 years, and the hon. member from Souris (Mr. Schaffner) who has been very industrious in looking up statistics, quoted to the House to-day the statement that out of 750 vessels going in and out of the bay in the course of that time, only two vessels have been lost. If that route were equipped with modern aids to navigation it would be even less dangerous than it has been in the past.

In Mr. Low's report I ran across two or three expressions in regard first to the necessity of the route and secondly to its navigability. Mr. Low says:

> The question of Hudson bay and Hudson strait has been before the Canadian public for a period extending back almost to the time of confederation.

The deputy Minister of Railways and Canals states that it is only at the present time in its talkative stage and here Mr. Low truly states that it has been engaging public attention almost since confederation.

> An answer to this question has become more and more pressing, as the latent wealth of the grain fields of the Northwest has been proved, and as the present means of transport of this great volume of grain to the eastward become yearly less capable of handling it expeditiously and cheaply.
> Within the past few years the yield of Northwest grain has increased enormously, and a second line of rails is being laid across the continent to aid in the rapid transport of this wealth to the sea-board. If the increase in the area of land opened annually to cultivation continues as at present, a few years will show such a volume of grain to be transported that the new outlets will be unable to give free exit to it, and a new lane by which it can be taken to the European markets must be found.
> The route by rail to the port of Churchill, on the western side of Hudson bay, and from thence to Europe in ships, is the shortest, and is likely to prove the best, of all those outside the present routes by rail to the head waters of the St. Lawrence navigation.
> Ships go wherever cargoes can be obtained, and all that is needed to open Hudson bay for ordinary commercial navigation is a line of rails to carry freight to one of its ports.

Evidently, Mr. Low, who has been up there during more than one season, and who has had an opportunity of making observations on behalf of the government, has no doubt, with respect to this enterprise as evidenced by these statements which I have just read to the House. Apparently he has no doubt whatever as far as the navigability of Hudson bay is concerned, nor does he consider that there is any question as to the navigability of Hudson strait in so far as the strait freezing over is concerned; the only danger is in the frozen ice that comes down from the north. As to the period of navigation which has been referred to by previous speakers, Mr. Low has something to say. The bugaboo is raised by some hon. gentlemen that because you cannot haul the grain out during the same season, in which it is raised the route will be commercially unprofitable. I am not sure that Mr. Low is correct in his estimate of the quantity of grain exported during the same season, but this is what he says on that point:

The question of the storage of the grain until the season following the harvest, is at first sight a serious one, but when it is known that not 20 per cent of the grain at present reaches the sea-board before the opening of navigation of the year following that in which it is harvested this objection practically disappears, but the grain may be as well stored on the shores of Hudson bay as in the elevators on the plains, or at Fort William. The question of storage is reduced to the length of time between the opening of navigation of Hudson strait, and the time required to transport grain from Fort William to Montreal after the opening of navigation on the great lakes, and this difference in time may be measured by days.

So that, if Mr. Low is an authority on that point, there is no great difficulty to be overcome in regard to the question of the storage of the grain. It might just as well be stored there as at Fort William or in the interior elevators. It has been said that 1,000 miles of rail haul will be saved. That is very true. To-day we have a ten cent rate between Winnipeg and Fort William, a distance of 425 miles. If it is six cents a bushel for 425 miles, it would be 12 cents, that would be saved per bushel for 1,000 miles, but it would be really more than that.

Mr. SPROULE. I thought it was ten cents from Brandon.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. No, from Winnipeg. As a matter of fact the rate east of Fort William, by rail, is higher, so that probably 12 or 15 cents per bushel would be saved. If the statement of the last speaker is correct that there would be an export of 20,000,000 bushels by this route, it would mean a saving of upwards of $3,000,000 per annum. That $3,000,000 might just as well be put into the hands of the farmers of the Northwest as into the hands of the transportation companies. Certainly nobody is more deserving of it than those whose products are being marketed and they do not wish to enter into a partnership with the carrying companies and pay an excessive rate of freight, I think they have a right to benefit in the saving which the construction of this railway would bring about.

The question of the land grant has been referred to. I am not going to go extensively into this because my hon. friend from Calgary (Mr. McCarthy) has referred to it, nor would I refer to it were it not for the fact that the hon. member for West Assiniboia, during the discussion of this question, treated the subject from a party standpoint. He tried to make a little capital against my hon. friend the leader of the opposition for not having incorporated in his Halifax platform anything in regard to the Hudson Bay route. But, we noticed that the hon. gentleman who introduced this resolution also introduced it last year, that he brought it forward on going into Supply and that there was a discussion upon it. What became of that motion we do not know. It was never withdrawn or voted upon and there is no record to show what became of it. Certainly it has not been acted upon, and although the Prime Minister declared that the question was engaging the attention of the government and that he would declare his policy no statement was made by the right hon. gentleman up to the end of last session. Still, the hon. member for West Assiniboia does not take his leader to task because of his non-fulfilment of his pledge, and although five months of this session have passed we are still without any statement from his leader. So, the hon. gentleman had better obtain a statement of the position and policy of his own leader before he undertakes to reflect upon the leader of the opposition party in regard to his policy upon this question. My hon. friend from Calgary has already stated that when the Liberals claim that they have not tied up one acre of land for railway purposes since they came into power they are saying something which they cannot substantiate. We know how they made the welkin ring on the western hustings when the elections were on as to how they had carried out their platform with regard to the granting of lands for railway construction, and we know they announced that when a particular railway charter which had expired since the government came in, that of the Red Deer Valley Railway Company, the land grant of necessity expired as well. They stated that the government, when they were asked to renew the charter, refused to renew the land grant showing that not an acre of land would be alienated for the purpose of building our railways. We are not condemning the voting of land or saying that we are not in a position to defend the voting of land in the past for the purpose of securing railway systems. We could not have had our railway systems built were it not for the grants of land which were made. But, Sir, when these hon. gentlemen say that they have not given an acre of land for the purpose of building railways they have done so in regard to this very road, ostensibly for the purpose of building a line ostensibly to Hudson bay when really a portion of it was given not to build a road in the direction of Hudson bay but to build a road in the direction of Prince Albert. This charter has expired on more than one occasion. Did they drop their land grant when they renewed their charter? Did they do as they did in the case of the Red Deer Valley Railway Company? Not at all. Prior to 1896, there was placed on the statute-books a subsidy of $80,000 per annum for transport and mail service over this road. That was placed on the statute-book by the Conservative administration. That was changed by order in council on May 7, 1896 into $40,000 per annum to the Lake Manitoba Railway Company for a line from Portage La Prairie or Gladstone to a point on the Saskatchewan river, and the time was extended for the construction of the road until December 31, 1898. That was the position of affairs when the Liberals came into power. Of course, they had a land grant and it would expire on that date, less these two years, after this administration came into power. By an order in council of October 22, 1898, they authorized the deflection of the line from the mouth of the Saskatchewan river to the Swan river country, they also extended the time to December 31, 1899, for 125 miles, and there was further an extension of the land grant which was practically a renewal of the land grant although these hon. gentlemen claimed that they gave no land grant to the Red Deer Valley Railway Company. They gave 6,400 acres per mile within the province of Manitoba and 12,800 acres per mile without the boundaries of that province. Then again an order in council was passed on October 19, 1899, granting a further extension of time until July 10, 1904. That was extension number two. Then, again, on the 20th of February, 1900, they granted a further extension of time to the 10th of July, 1906. Again a land grant renewed. An order in council was passed on the 5th of January, 1907, for 125 miles from Sifton Junction, and this was approved of for subsidy purposes. An order in council was also passed on the 9th of October, 1900, and the engineer reported 250 miles completed and entitled to the land grant of 1,598,400 acres. That is what they had earned up to that time and of which they had selected 2,835. Another order in council was passed on the 5th of June, 1901, under which they had selected and had been granted 89,115:59 acres. Another order in council followed on the 11th September, 1901, under which 168,262 acres were selected and transferred to the company. Another order in council passed on the 10th of August, 1903, and it was reported that at this time the Canadian Northern had in running order from Beaver to Gladstone, 18 miles, Gladstone to Winnipegosis, 124 miles, Sifton Junction to Mafeking, 125 miles, Mafeking to the boundary, 28 miles, the boundary to Irwood, 22 miles, total 318 miles. Now, as the member for Calgary (Mr. M. S. McCarthy) has truly said, of that 320 miles there was subsidized the most of it to the extent of 6,400 acres per mile, some of it at 12,800 acres per mile, and when you get to the termination of the the 320 miles you are only within 150 miles or 170 miles nearer to Hudson bay than when you started. By reason of allowing the deflection westward and getting away from the bay, they drew that large land grant, and yet at the end of 320 miles they were no nearer than 150 or 170 miles to the bay than they were at Gladstone where they commenced. Now, on this 320 miles they were entitled to a land grant of 2,180,928 acres. But they claimed that some of these lands set apart for selection were not fairly fit for settlement and the government then allowed them a great number of concessions, amongst others: they enlarged their area of selection to include the territory reserved for the Manitoba and Northwestern, that is, after the Manitoba and Northwestern had selected their lands in a particular area, this company were allowed to go in and select the surplus of lands, and of the surplus of lands they were to select 100,000 acres out of the area of 124,330. They were also allowed to select from the reserve set apart for the Qu'Appelle, Long Lake and Saskatchewan, and the time for completion of selection was extended to the 31st December, 1905. An order in council was passed on the 27th January, 1904, under which they selected this 100,000 acres from the Manitoba and Northern reserve, another order in council was passed on the 1st October, 1904, under which the land grant they had earned on lines south of the Saskatchewan was extended to June the 25th, 1908. Another extension of time and another revival of the land grant. Now, an order in council was also passed on the 29th December, 1904, under which the survey fee was reduced from 10 cents an acre to 5 cents an acre. Up to this time they had been paying ten cents an acre for the survey, but the government made a concession to them reducing it one-half. There was also some land that they had to surrender for Doukhobor reserve, the Riding Mountain forest reserve in which they had selected west of the Duck mountains, and a certain amount along the Prince Albert branch. The lands necessary to complete their selection were to be selected from 55 townships west of the area set apart for the Qu'Appelle, Long

Lake and Saskatchewan. Not only were they allowed to go into the Manitoba and Northern reserve, not only were they allowed to go into the reserve set apart for the Qu'Appelle, Long Lake and Saskatchewan, but they were allowed to go into the 55 townships west of the Qu'Appelle, Long Lake and Saskatchewan reserve and where are situated some of the very best lands they have in the province of Saskatchewan. From these 55 townships, which have an area, by the way, of 580,000 acres, they had to select in round numbers some 250,000 acres. By an order in council passed on the 25th of June, 1906, the Canadian Northern Railway selected 557,000 acres within the reserve of the Qu'Appelle, Long Lake and Saskatchewan. I may say just here that the latter company protested very strenuously to the government for allowing this company to go in and select from their lands prior to the time they themselves had made their selection, because the order in council passed allowing the Canadian Northern Railway to have the privilege of selecting from the area set apart for the Qu'Appelle, Long Lake and Saskatchewan contained a provision stating that they were only to select the surplus lands. That is to say, after the grant of Qu'Appelle, Long Lake and Saskatchewan had been satisfied. After that was done the Canadian Northern had the privilege of coming in as they had in the Manitoba and Northwestern area and making their selection, but they went in and made their selection of some 250,000 acres prior to the Qu'Appelle, Long Lake and Saskatchewan having completed selection and quite naturally the Qu'Appelle, Long Lake and Saskatchewan protested to the government. The matter was reported to the Minister of Justice by the Minister of the Interior and the Minister of Justice reported that what the Minister of the Interior did was illegal ; that he had done an illegal act by allowing the Canadian Northern to go into this area and make their selection prior to the time when the Qu'Appelle, Long Lake and Saskatchewan land grant had been satisfied. But notwithstanding that and in the face of the opinion of the Minister of Justice, the Minister of the Interior allowed the Canadian Northern Railway to make their selection. An order in council was passed on the 23rd of July, 1906, which allows them to select their lands which they had surrendered for the Duck mountain forest reserve, 213,640 acres, and for the Lake Manitoba forest reserve 70,000 acres, and they accepted in lieu thereof 33,367 acres of the surplus lands of the Manitoba and Northwestern and 250,000 acres in the 55 townships west of the area of the Qu'Appelle, Long Lake and Saskatchewan. Again an order in Council was passed on May 8, 1907, granting a further extension of time—and this is the last order in council I have any note of—to July 20, 1910, and this is an extension both of the land grant and of the charter. In face of that some hon. gentleman on the other side of the House claim that this government has not alienated an acre of land for the construction of any railway. I have cited no less than five extensions since they have been in power with reference to the construction of this road. I am citing this to disabuse the minds of the people of the idea that the Liberals were really in earnest ; or at least if they were in earnest they are certainly making, through inadvertence or ignorance, a statement which cannot be substantiated. I am not quoting this with any idea of stating that we on this side of the House object to granting assistance to any of these railway enterprises. In fact the Conservative party showed their faith in the country and showed their faith in the enterprise by placing the land grant originally upon the statute-books. Now, it is not necessary for me to occupy the attention of the House further ; I merely desire to add my voice to that of my colleagues in favour of this enterprise. This railway is a work that we need very greatly. By the time it is constructed there will be plenty of products to supply all of our transportation companies. The productiveness of that country is so enormous and the immigration going in, now that the tide has set in that direction, is so great that I am confident that there will soon be sufficient traffic for the Hudson Bay Railway route in addition to those we have at present. The people of eastern Canada are especialy interested in the supplies that the people of the west will require. Anything that assists us in the west will assist the people in the east. This enterprise is one that we should look upon as a national enterprise in which as Canadians we should all join. I hope that before this discussion ends, the Prime Minister will announce a policy on the subject on behalf of the government, and I trust that whatever pledge he may make will be implemented by legislation in a practical manner, and that the enterprise which hon. gentlemen say is today only in the talkative stage, may soon be an accomplished fact.

Mr. T. A. BURROWS (Dauphin). Mr. Speaker, I have listened with a great deal of pleasure to the various speeches which have been delivered this afternoon and this evening on this very important question. Some of the gentlemen on both sides of the House who have spoken, have given the history of the different steps that have been taken from time to time by the western people to secure an outlet by way of Hudson bay. The subject has been pretty well covered by previous speakers, and were it not that I represent a constituency which is the farthest north in Manitoba and therefore the nearest Hudson to bay, and in which the first 200 miles of the Hudson Bay Railway have been built and operated, and feel a special interest in seeing a road to the bay completed, I do not think I would have risen to address the House. The hon. gentleman who has just sat down (Mr. W. J. Roche) seems to have risen more for the purpose of making a complaint against this government for the action they have taken in assisting in railway construction than with the object of advocating the construction of a railway to Hudsons bay. He objected to the extensions granted to the Canadian Northern Railway from time to time since 1896 by the Liberal government, but he forgot altogether——

Mr. SPROULE. He did not object at all.

Mr. BURROWS. Well, he criticised the government very severely; but he forgot that the original charter authorizing the construction of this railway was granted in the year 1880, and that from that time until 1896, when the government he supported so strenuously went out of power, there was not a single mile of that railway built, although the charter and the land grant were extended from time to time. What took place after this government came into power? In 1896, their first year, the first 100 miles of the Canadian Northern Railway were built. That was the portion from Gladstone to Sifton Junction, which was built under the charter of the Lake Manitoba Railway and Canal Company. In the following year they built the extension to Winnipegosis, which was the total mileage they had power to build under that charter. The hon. gentleman knows that by virtue of that charter they earned a land grant of 6,400 acres per mile from Gladstone to Winnipegosis. The hon. member for Calgary (Mr. M. S. McCarthy) made a great complaint of the fact that there was a land grant for that portion of the road from Sifton Junction to Winnipegosis.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. I did not make any great complaint of the land grant given for the line from Sifton Junction to Winnipegosis. I asked what was the necessity of giving that, and also giving a land grant for a line running in a northeasterly direction. Both could not be going to Hudson bay.

Mr. BURROWS. The necessity for giving the land grant for the portion from Sifton to Winnipegosis was that it was authorized by an Act passed by the Conservative government before the Liberals came into power. Before leaving that part of the subject, I might refer to the extensions granted from time to time. There have been various extensions granted by the present government to the Canadian Northern; but it must be borne in mind that the Canadian Northern built 100 miles of railway in 1896 and another 100 miles in 1897, and have continued to add to their mileage year by year; so that there was some reason for their asking for extensions of time when they showed their bona fides by going on and constructing the road. That was an altogether different state of things from what existed from 1880 to 1896, when not a single mile was built. With regard to a railway to Hudson bay, I may repeat what has been said by the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat, that ever since Manitoba entered the confederation, indeed, ever since there was a settlement in any portion of that western country, there has been an agitation for the construction of a railway to Hudson bay. Probably this originated from the fact that the first settlers in the Red River settlement went into that country via Hudson bay, and therefore looked on the Hudson bay route as the natural trade route of the country, and looked forward to the time when they would not have to spend a month or six weeks on the journey to Fort Churchill, portaging around rapids, but would have railway connection with that seaport. Any person who looks at the map and observes the position of Hudson bay will easily recognize what an important factor it may yet become in the trade of the western country. It is an inland sea 1,000 miles long and 600 miles wide, and its principal port, Fort Churchill, is so situated that it is farther from the Atlantic coast than it is from the Pacific ocean. So that if you can once establish proper navigation to Fort Churchill, you will have an ocean port in the centre of the country 600 miles from the prairie, and bringing the prairie country closer to the sea-board than some parts of the province of Ontario. If you draw a line due north from St. Paul or St. Louis, it will pass 250 miles east of Fort Churchill. What the White Sea is to Russia, what the Baltic is to Germany and Sweden, what the Gulf of St. Lawrence is to eastern Canada, the Hudson bay is bound to become to Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta. In 1880 the first charters were granted to two companies giving them power to build railways to Hudson bay. They vied with each other to get the land grant. Three years afterwards an Act of parliament was passed amalgamating the two companies, and from that time on the promoters of the Winnipeg and Hudson Bay Railway Company endeavoured to raise money by various means.

They went to the local government and got assistance from time to time. They tried first to float their bonds in the markets of the world, but in those days it was impossible to raise money to build a railway to the bay. By and by, in addition to the land grant the Dominion government gave them a further subvention of $80,000 a year for twenty years, but even then they were not able to raise sufficient money to build the road. It was not until after 1896, when Mackenzie & Mann & Company, obtained the charter, that any work was done in the construction of this railway. It will be seen that the parliament of Canada from 1880 on, under the direction of both governments, has from time to time recognized the importance of a railway to Hudson bay. It has done this by various enactments, by giving them a charter to build and a land grant. In 1884 an Act was passed authorizing the granting a land subsidy of 6,400 acres per mile for the mileage inside the province and 12,800 acres per mile for the mileage outside the province. In 1996 construction began and a year and a half ago the last 90 miles were built to the Pass. A year ago the company finished the last link connecting the southern prairie country with the Saskatchewan river, so that to-day we have a railway built as far as the Saskatchewan and the proposition now is to build a link which will connect the Pass with Hudson bay.

When the charter was first granted giving power to build this railway, we did not know much of that northern country, but during the last twenty-five years a great many surveying parties were sent out. The government sent out members of the geological survey and others and we have learned from them a great deal of information. We have found that instead of that country being full of rocks and swamps and not fit for settlement there is along the projected line of this road a great deal of territory valuable for agriculture. Commencing at the Pass there is for 150 miles a country containing a very large amount of pulp wood. Mr. Thibeaudeau, who made a survey for the government last year, reports that pulp wood can be obtained along that route for the first distance of 150 miles. After that the reports from many men who have explored that territory, indicate that there is in it a large area of agricultural land, and the lakes and rivers are teeming with valuable food fish. Mr. Tyrrell reports an area of country there of 10,000 square miles as good as the ordinary land in Manitoba. North of that the country is sot so good. Within 100 miles of the bay the reports indicate that the land is not very fit for settlement, but it seems to me that a country having 10,000 square miles of good land is a country through which we ought to have a railway. When you consider that in Manitoba, where we have a very large wheat yield, there were not more than 5,000,000 acres under crop last year, you can see what possibilities there are along this line of railroad, which will surely open up 6,000,000 acres to agriculture. There are besides natural resources such as mineral wealth which are very promising. Mr. Tyrrell and other geologists say that the formation is very similar to that of the western part of Ontario where we have discovered much valuable mineral. The railway will run along the Nelson river a distance of 50 to 75 miles, and the Nelson is one of the greatest rivers in point of volume of water, we have in the whole continent. It is 400 miles long and drains a very large area. In these 400 miles there are 300 miles from the upper to the lower rapids, and between those there is a fall of 850 feet, so that the water power which may be generated is tremendous, and if it should become expedient to run the road by electricity, the water power is there at hand. Churchill harbour is reported to be one of the best in America. There are therefore several grounds on which the construction of this road can be justified. In the first place it will be a colonization road. In the second place, it will be the final link connecting the prairies with Hudson bay ; and in the third place, it will open up a route to connect the western prairies with the markets of Europe. Some objection has been taken to the grants for building the portions of the line already completed. No doubt the grants seems to be large. In addition to the land grant, this railway draws a subsidy of $80,000 a year for twenty years. But when we look at what has been accomplished by its construction, we will see that the expenditure has been well repaid. The whole country through which this railway runs was not settled and would never have become settled had it not been for that line. That line has opened up an important fishing industry at lake Winnipegosis and very large lumber industries in the northern part of the province, so that although it has cost a great deal in money and land, it has developed that northern country in a marvelous manner.

There is a very large area around Hudson bay which we know contains natural resources, which it would be very important to develop, and the development of which can only be accomplished by means of a railway to that bay. Then at present the Canadian government is undertaking to administer that country. It has established mounted police stations around the bay. But if this government wants to communicate with these police stations, that will take a long time at present. The building of a railway, however, would facilitate the administration of that whole locality by the government. Then when the railway is built to the bay, stores will be established at various points from where prospectors can get their supplies. It will be easy for prospectors to get to the bay, and they will then use Fort Churchill as the point from which to start their exploring work. In two or three years after that railway is built to Hudson bay, you will see great development in the line of minerals, for we have as good reason to anticipate great mineral development in that country as we had to expect mineral development at Cobalt six years ago or in the Yukon fifteen years ago. The reports of Dr. Bell, Professor Tyrrell and other geologists indicate that there is gold, silver, lead, iron, copper——

Mr. LALOR. Any timber ?

Mr. BURROWS. Lots of timber can be found around the shores of the bay. With regard to the land through which this road would pass, I would like to read an extract from the report of the men who explored that country. Mr. McInnes, a member of the Geological Survey, was sent out to make an exploratory trip from the Pas to Hudson bay and he gives this as his opinion regarding the country in his evidence before the committee of the Senate a year ago :

The witness passed through this country, went by the Burntwood river and came back by part of the Grassy river, and made a number of excursions inland between these two rivers. After leaving Split lake, ascending the river, this clay-covered country shows absolutely no boulders and no gravel. Even the shores of the lakes, until you reach a height of about 800 feet, show no gravel bars at all.

There is absolutely nothing to interfere with the cultivation of the soil there. It is a country that has been burnt over. Witness assumed that the Burntwood river got its name that way. It has been subject to repeated burns. At the present time it is covered by a very open forest. Grasses grow fairly luxuriantly. There are two species of this, blue joint grass and a wild rye, that are the prevailing grasses. He understood, though he is not very familiar with those grasses himself, from Professor Macoun, that these are very excellent meadow grasses and make excellent fodder.

Mr. McInnes left Norway House in the second week of June and made the circuit and came out at the Pas on September 6, so it was June, July and August he was there. He saw grass growing from eighteen inches to two feet high.

The witness computed the area of this country at about 10,000 square miles. He does not mean to say that all of that ten thousand square miles is good land, but the basin characterized by this deposit of clay has an area of about ten thousand square miles.

Referring to what is grown in the country, he says :

Upon the Nelson river wheat has been grown successfully at Norway House, and also at Cross lake. Of course, he could see that they grow no grain at any of their posts nowadays. In the old days they grew it and ground it in hand mills. Witness saw potatoes that were grown about 50 miles north of the Pas. There were quite showy potatoes, great large fellows like those you see exhibited in fairs.

There are no settlers in the Nelson district. The Indians, however, grow potatoes at several points, even in the northern part of it, as far north as Nelson House, about latitude 55. On July 11, when the witness arrived at Nelson House, the Indian potatoes had vines about eleven inches high, and were almost ready to flower. When he got out on September 6 to the Saskatchewan, at the Hudson bay post there, at the Pas, Indian corn was very well headed out, with very large fine ears quite ready for table use, and there was no frost until September 29. He knew that because he stayed there until then.

With eighteen hours of the daylight, and no frost in the summer, vegetation is rapid. In a country where you can ripen Indian corn you can grow practically anything.

Mr. Tyrrell passed through that country some years ago, and this is the evidence he gave to the Senate Committee:

North of Lake Winnipeg there is another magnificent area of from five to ten thousand square miles of as fine country as there is in Manitoba or anywhere else.

That is on the proposed line of the Hudson bay railway. When the witness came out of there a number of years ago, after spending a summer there, and said there was a rich agricultural country north of Lake Winnipeg, the Hudson bay men and the people in the southern country pooh-poohed the idea. They said they had been up at the head of the lake and knew there was not a foot of good land there. But there is a magnificent stretch of country there, and it extends westward along the Churchill. These lands north of Lake Winnipeg are clay lands, an extension of the same basin as the Manitoba clays.

The hon. member for Souris (Mr. Schaffner) this afternoon, spent a good deal of time in setting forth the fact concerning the navigability of Hudson straits. I think the hon. member is to be commended for the diligence he has shown in hunting up the history of this northern country and the waters thereof. I do not see how anybody can assume that Hudson bay is not navigable, when you take into consideration the fact that it has been navigated since 1610. Since 1660, vessels have gone in and out of the bay once every year except two years. The Hudson Bay Company keep regular vessels on the route. For the last sixty or seventy years whalers from the Atlantic coast have been making periodical trips in pursuit of their calling. We have the record of trips made into the bay by all kinds of vessels. In the service of the Hudson Bay Company 750 vessels, ranging from seventy gun ships to ten ton pinnaces, have crossed the ocean and passed through the straits and sailed into Hudson bay and only two of them were lost. We have the record of men-of-war going into Hudson bay in 1782. La Perouse, with three French war vessels sailed into Hudson bay, took Fort Churchill, dismantled it, took Fort Nelson, looted the supplies and sailed out successfully in 1697. Commandant d'Iberville sailed into Hudson bay, fought an engagement with English battleships and got out quite safe again. From time to time during the wars between France and England, it was necessary for the Hudson Bay Company when their ships sailed into Hudson bay to have a convoy, and it was quite a common thing for a British warship to go with a trading vessel into and out of Hudson bay. If it was possible to carry on this navigation with the vessels of a couple of hundred years ago, when they did not have the advantages of navigation of to-day, when they had no steam vessels and none of the aids to navigation such as lighthouses the route must have been a pretty easy one to navigate or we should have heard of more disasters. Our own government has sent in several parties to make investigations. Dr. Robert Bell travelled in and out from 1880 to 1897, making nine complete trips. He gives this as his experience :

The bay is open all the year round and there does not seem to be much evidence that the strait is closed at any season. The great width and depth of the straits with the tides, probably keep it open. He thought it navigable for four months each year, or from the middle of June to the end of October.

And Commander Low says:

Really prepared steamers could navigate Hudson bay and Hudson strait longer than the period he had mentioned; you could navigate the straits all winter if you had a specially prepared vessel, but it would be a long voyage. . . . Altogether, the witness considered the Hudson bay route, when it was clear, as even a clearer one than via the St. Lawrence. There is at least two months when there is no trouble from the ice at all, and when you do meet loose ice in the summer time there would be no trouble. There would have to be several lights established. There would have to be lights at Nottingham island and probably at Cape Diggs. Charlatan island would probably have to be lit at both ends, because it is practically in the middle of the channel and then there would have to be lights at Cape Chigney and on Resolution island. Lights would also have to be placed at the mouth of Churchill harbour.

I think we have ample evidence to show that the navigability of this strait is sufficient to warrant the government coming to the conclusion that, for a certain period of the year, this route will afford a means of transportation of the greatest benefit to the western country. In addition to the benefit to be derived from the improved transportation facilities afforded by the construction of this road, it will mean the development of a portion of our northern country which we never could have developed without a railway. Immigration to the west during the last 11 years has given us our prosperity in that country. According to the returns, nearly 1,200,000 people have been brought in by the Immigration Department during that period. The impetus to trade given by the influx of that number of people and the amount of money spent in railway construction has produced our good times in the west. To stop immigration would be to decrease the volume of our business, and the only way to keep up the stream of immigration is to develop the northern country where we have land on which to put our settlers. Until the present government undertook to build the Grand Trunk Pacific, no determined effort had been made to develop our hinterlands. At the time they launched their scheme many people objected on the ground that the country through which the road was to be built was not fit for settlement. Even to-day, in talking to a a Conservative member of this House, he expressed the opinion that it was a great mistake to build north of the height of land in Ontario and Quebec, because the country was not fit for settlement, and it was said that the Grand Trunk Pacific would be a great mistake. I think the majority of the people of Canada have only one opinion on that subject: that is that we have a great big country to develop and we never can develop it unless we get railway construction to the most remote parts.

With regard to the method of construction, I believe the road should be built and owned by the government, and inasmuch as there is in eastern Canada considerable objection to voting sufficient money to build a road of that kind at the present time, I believe that it will have to be constructed by obtaining money from the sale of lands in the west. The people of the west are a unit in regard to the construction of this road, and I do not think any objection will be raised to the government of Canada using the proceeds of the sale of land to create a fund for the building of this railway. The expenditure on the road itself will not be very large, but the incidental expenditures for the building of docks at Fort Churchill, for terminals, for lighting the straits and probably giving a subsidy to a steamship line, will be considerable in addition to the actual cost of construction of the railway. The road will be an easy one to build and when built to operate. There is a gentle downgrade from the Pas to Hudson bay and a fall in 450 miles of about 1,000 feet. It will be down grade in the way the traffic will go so that trains loaded with grain will be going down-hill on their way to the harbour. I think it is very important that this road should be built at once. Any one familiar with the western country knows that two years ago we had a very large crop of wheat, about 200,000,000 bushels of grain ; and before the commencement of the snow blockade to which the railways attributed all their difficulties, there was a complete tie-up of the railway systems, a complete grain blockade. At that time we had in that country some 800,000 people. If 800,000 people can grow enough grain to blockade two complete railway systems, what will occur when the population increases in that country as it is bound to increase ? To-day in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, we have about 1,000,000 people and I do not think I am over-sanguine when I express the belief that within the next four years that population will be doubled. In 1901 the population was a little over 400,000. In 1906 it was over 800,000, and, judging from the way immigration is going in there, it is safe to say that in four years we will have 2,000,000 people west of the Great Lakes. When that time comes, probably we will have another railway, the Grand Trunk Pacific; but by the time the Grand Trunk Pacific is built we will find that the trade has so increased that it will tax the powers of the three great railway systems to haul out the grain. The road should undoubtedly be built at once. If the government were to undertake the construction of this road at once, it would be four years before they could expect to have it built to the bay and it will be urgently needed before that time. If the government were to build the road they could easily entrust its construction to the present Transcontinental Railway Commission; they have the machinery at hand for looking after work of that kind and could superintend the building of the Hudson bay railway without very much extra general expense. If this road is built it will facilitate the opening of the country; that country has to be surveyed and this will require some time, and the building of the road will facilitate the surveying, exploration and development of the country. I do not think the government could get any railway company to undertake the construction of that road unless they gave a bonus equal to the cost of building it. I do not think the people of Canada would favour giving any bonus of that kind. The day of large bonuses or land grants is past, and it is the fixed policy of this government not to give a land grant to any railway. I am therefore strongly of opinion that the government should at once address itself to the question of finding some means by which this railway could be built, and I am in favour of the policy which was enunciated by the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton), that is to set apart certain lands in the Northwest, two sections or so in each township, preserve them until they become of sufficient value, and then sell them just as the school lands are sold at the present time to create a fund to pay the cost of construction of this road. The government could borrow money by the issue of bonds and by the time the bonds fall due the proceeds of the sales of these lands could be applied to paying them off. If you sold the lands to-day you would not get nearly what they will be worth in a few years. Objection has been raised to that scheme on the ground that reserving land is a detriment to settlement. However the amount reserved, two sections in each township, would not be sufficient to affect the people in the district. You do not find that the present school reserves affect the people. However, whatever scheme is devised, whether the road is financed by means of a land grant reserve or by charging a fee of $3 for preemption, it is a question of policy which the government has to decide upon and so far as I am concerned the building of the road is so urgent that I feel it should be constructed and constructed at once.

The public feeling in regard to the constuction of this railway has been so strong in the west that if the provinces of Manitoba and Saskatchewan had owned land of their own they would not have hesitated to have given it towards the construction of this railway. I have no hesitation in saying that if Manitoba had owned land for the last twenty years the same as Ontario and Quebec do this road would have been built long ago. The little province of Manitoba did not have the resources to devote to a project of this kind. We have been coming year after year to Ottawa asking the Dominion government to undertake its construction. As soon as this road is built I expect there will be considerable development in the way of manufacturing along the Hudson bay route. The water-powers along the Nelson and Churchill rivers will become developed. There is a possibility of a great pulp industry being established along the Nelson and Churchill rivers. Pulp wood and water-powers are available and as soon as this road is built industries of that kind will crop up that are not thought of at the prestent time.

I do not know that I have anything further to say on this subject except that I think that the construction of the Hudson Bay Railway is one of the most important projects which the government have before them at the present time. By the construction of this road they will not only give us a new outlet for the products of the western country but they will be establishing another port which will in time become one of the chief ports of the Dominion of Canada, and they will be turning the trade to our own ports instead of allowing it to go, as a great deal of it goes now, through American ports. I trust therefore that the government will see their way clear to adopting some policy this session which will result in the construction of this road and that they will go on and build the railway to Hudson bay as quickly as possible.

Mr. R. S. LAKE (Qu'Appelle). Mr. Speaker, I have no intention of detaining the House at any great length at this somewhat late hour of the evening, but I desire to make a few remarks on this most important question. First of all I would like to offer a word or two in regard to the remarks which were made by the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Knowles) to the effect that the present government has never given away an acre of land to a railway company. I consider that a somewhat unnecessary remark in view of the fact that the hon. gentleman had stated that he intended to make a speech of a non-partisan character. But, as he has raised the question, I think I may say a word or two in regard to the matter. My hon. friend from Calgary (Mr. McCarthy) has pointed out to the House, and his contention has not been refuted, that great land grants have been given by the present government and given unnecessarily. He has pointed out that out of the land grant on account of the construction of 320 miles which has been given to the Canadian Northern Railway only 150 miles of that was justified, and that a land grant has been given to that company with respect to 170 miles of railway under the pretext that they were building a railway to Hudson bay, when, as a matter of fact, that railway did not bring them a mile nearer to Hudson bay. Taking the figures which were given by the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton) as to the value at which he would hold the land which he suggested should be reserved for the building of this railway, namely, $10 or $12 per acre, you will readily see that the million and a quarter acres of land which have been given away unnecessarily would represent a value of between $12,000,000 and $15,000,000 which would go a long way towards the building of this road. The equivalent of this sum of money has been squandered by the present administration and not one mile have we got nearer to Hudson bay. The hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Burrows), when he rose to speak, undertook to explain how it was that the land grant was given for twenty-one miles of railway from Sifton Junction to Winnipegosis. My hon. friend stated that it was in accordance with the grant which has been promised by the Conservative government of which rumour says he was a supporter at the time. But he did not go on to explain what must have been in the mind of everybody present, how it was that when that railway commenced to build again from Sifton Junction they received an additional land grant for the additional and unnecessary twenty-one miles which were being built on the way to the bay. Of late years we have come to understand the true value of the land in the Northwest, and I suppose that at the present time there is no one who would dream of giving the land grants to railway companies which were given in the days gone by. Therefore, Sir, I consider that during recent years there has not been one shadow of excuse for giving these land grants which have been given to the Canadian Northern Railway outside of the road to Hudson bay of something like one and a quarter million acres of land—land to be chosen, not contiguous to the railway which they were building, but to be chosen from the very best parts of the province of Sackatchewan. It was a different matter in the early days. The people did not appreciate the value of the land in that western country, and in the granting of land to the railways which were being constructed at that time the Liberals were just as much to blame, if blame was to be attached, as the Conservatives were. It has been pointed out already this evening that the Liberals were prepared to give away more than twice the land grant for the building of a railway across the continent that the Conservatives gave away when they had a line constructed. I am going to call the attention of the House to the fact that two hon. gentlemen who are now sitting on the other side of the House, when they were members of the legislative council of the Northwest Territories, were themselves in favour of giving land grants for the construction of branch railways. I refer to the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) and to the hon. member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff). The following resolution was moved in the Northwest legislative council by the hon. member for East Assiniboia on the 24th July, 1884:

Moved by Mr. Turriff, and seconded by Mr. McDowell, that a liberal policy on the part of the government towards railways in the way of making grants of land would most conduce to the opening up and development of the country, and would therefore recommend that the grants of land already made, or which may be made in the future for railway purposes in the Northwest Territories, at one dollar per acre, be made free grants.

They did not want the government even to take that one dollar per acre but they desired that the land grants should be made free. The hon. Minister of the Interior was in the council at that time and according to the minutes it is recorded that the resolution passed unanimously. So, I think it is time to drop all this talk about the iniquities of previous governments in giving away great grants of land and to admit frankly and truly as every one must admit that in the light of those days it was necessary to give those land grants in order to have railways constructed.

Now, let us pass from that to the business which we have in hand. After the very able presentation of the case which has been made before us this evening for the construction of the Hudson Bay Railway, showing the necessity for and feasibility of this route, I think it is unnecessary for me to use any further arguments along that line. I consider, Sir, that both in the Senate and in this House the case has been proved for the construction of this railway. Indeed, Sir, that necessity was admitted by the Prime Minister himself last year when, on the 27th of February, 1907, he stated in this House that the time had come for the construction of this railway, and went on to say that he expected the government would be in a position to make a statement in connection with the matter in a very short time. We have waited long for that statement, and it has not come yet, but we trust we shall have something definite about it in the near future. I am very glad the Prime Minister has been converted to seeing the necessity for building this railway. If he will remember, about 12 years ago, just before the election which returned him to power, the policy of the leaders of the Conservative party of that day was in favour of the building of a railway to Hudson bay and definite pledges were given by them to the people of this country that this railway should be constructed. Sir Charles Tupper, then Prime Minister of Canada, speaking at Winnipeg on the 8th of May, as reported in the Manitoba 'Free Press,' said:

One of the great factors in the future development of Western Canada would be an outlet to Hudson bay, the natural pathway from the prairies of the great west to Great Britain, and it was his firm conviction that the prosperity of the west and of the whole Dominion called for the speedy construction of a road to the bay. The Liberal party had persistently though most inconsistently opposed this great national undertaking at every stage since the question of its construction was first mooted. The Conservative party had given to Canada the Intercolonial railway and the Canadian Pacific railway and he could now assure the people of Manitoba and the Northwest that that same party would give them the Hudson bay railway. The government was a unit on the policy of a road to the bay. They are publicly committed to that policy and he could assure them arrangements had been made which enabled him to state that the first link of that railway from Saskatchewan river would be built before the close of 1898.

Further on the Manitoba 'Free Press' in an article states:

Speaking in the evening at an immense mass meeting in the Brydon rink the Premier returned to the subject and after challenging any man living to bring him face to face with a pledge he had ever broken he again declared in unequivocal terms that it would be the policy of his government to give the Northwest an outlet to Europe via the Hudson bay.

They go on to state:

Of the friendly intentions of Sir Charles and his colleagues there can be no doubt and after these explicit declarations the people of the country may reasonably expect to get the Hudson bay railway within the next three or four years.

Now, Sir, the statement made by Sir Charles Tupper and his bona fides were called in question by the Liberal candidates in the campaign, and in order to give an assurance of the bona fides of the statement, the Hon. Hugh John Macdonald, then Minister of the Interior, put himself on record before the people of Manitoba and in a speech delivered on the 18th of June, 1896, as reported in the Manitoba 'Free Press,' said:

His breath was almost taken away at the first joint meeting when Mr. Martin said this promise of Sir Charles Tupper's was merely an election dodge. He could not understand how a man like Mr. Martin, who was once a member of the provincial government, could think that his leader would deliberately deceive his followers. However he remembered a trial here in Winnipeg when it came out that Mr. Martin had called Mr. Greenway a colossal liar. He might tell them that if these promises were not carried out he would resign at once from the cabinet. Some think that he should not resign from the cabinet, but rather stay there and fight it out. This could not be done under our system of government, if, as a member of the cabinet, he could not introduce a measure of this kind without the consent of his leader. If he should decide to introduce it, he would have to leave the cabinet and step down to the floor of the House, and this is the course he would follow in the event of Sir Charles breaking his promise. If he were forced to do this, do you think that there would be found a single man from the Northwest mean enough to accept his vacated seat in the cabinet, and even if one were found to do this, did they think any constituency in the west would return such a man?

Now, Sir, it will be seen that this is an old policy. It is a policy which was formally and definitely announced by the Conservative government in the year 1896 and which no doubt would have been carried into effect long before this had they been returned to power at that election. I am glad that after 11 years of power the Prime Minister of Canada has finally come to the conclusion that the Hudson Bay Railway ought to be built, although he has not given us a statement as to when and how he intends to build it. I have no hesitation in saying, and it has been already said this evening, that in the near future the products of the Northwest will be such that all the existing lines of railway will not be able to handle the business. As a matter of fact the railways cannot cope with the situation now and so a new outlet must be found. As has been pointed out this route will result in enormous economy in transportation and consequently enhanced value to the producers of cattle, grain, and other commodities in the Northwest. As has also been pointed out it will save a double transhipment, and a thousand miles of lake and rail transport from the principal grain centres to the markets of the world. Further than that it has been shown that the Hudson Bay Railway will in itself prove a very profitable trade route, convenient as it will be not only to our own Northwest but to a large portion of the northwestern states of the union. Keeping along the northern lines of latitude, it will be an extremely short route across the continent, and it will be the most economic route that can be found between the western countries of Europe and the far eastern countries which are now coming into prominence. Let me also say that which I think has not been called attention to this evening, viz., this route will be most useful from a military standpoint. Should unhappily we ever be in a state of war in Canada such a line of railway would be most invaluable to Canada and to the empire, and it would also be invaluable as affording a safer trade route than any now existing for the food supplies of the mother country. Even if we look at it from a selfish point of view it would give us an immense advantage over any rivals we may have in the furnishing of that food supply because there can be no doubt that the northerly route would be the safest for the transport of food products to the United Kingdom. It would afford a short route also, the shortest of all routes by which imperial troops could be quickly and expeditiously and safely conveyed to the far east. This has all been gone over time and again and I do not think I need dwell further on it to-night. I believe, however, that it is time that we should stop playing with this question and if we are agreed as we all seem to be agreed that the route is necessary we should undertake its construction promptly. It is no use to go skating around it and saying for instance we will create a fund by the sale of pre-emptions or by reserving lands in the Northwest for the purpose. This is only postponing the fulfilment. Even if we start now, the need will be urgent before the railway is completed. The Finance Minister told us in his budget speech that this is a time for caution, and that large new enterprises may be laid aside for a while. I do not think, Sir, that caution ought to apply to the building of the Hudson Bay Railway. We do not look upon that as an enterprise in the ordinary acceptation of the term; we look upon it as an absolute necessity to the continued development of our great provinces in the Northwest. I am firmly convinced that unless it is provided that development will be checked in the near future.

In conclusion, I wish to say that I think this road of all others should be owned by the government. The hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Burrows) has taken the same position; but he has not gone so far as I go. I say that it should be not only owned but operated by the government. This Hudson Bay Railway will offer a route to the bay to three great competing lines of railway—the Canadian Pacific Railway, the Canadian Northern Railway and the Grand Trunk Pacific, and I do not see how it will be possible to have that road operated by a private company in a way that will be fair to all these great roads. Therefore I think that this of all others should be operated by the government. It will also be absolutely necessary for the Dominion government to provide the great terminal elevators which will be required for the storage of the grain of the Northwest for considerable periods when navigation is not freely open. I hope and trust that the government, even at this late moment, will come down with a definite policy during the present session and provide money for the commencement of this great undertaking.

Mr. J. G. TURRIFF (East Assiniboia). Mr. Speaker, at this late hour of the evening, after this question has been so ably discussed by members on both sides of the House, I do not intend to take up more than a very few minutes. My principal object in saying anything at all on this subject is to state most emphatically as a representative of a western constituency that I believe that the Hudson Bay route in not only feasible, but is to-day a prime necessity of the west. I have heard it stated here during the present discussion that there had been a certain amount of opposition to that road from the east. I think that was the case some years ago, but at present we do not hear of any opposition whatever from the east to anything that will promote the development of the western country. All the people of Canada now realize that the success of Canada is as much dependent on the west as on the east, and that anything that promotes the development of the western country must of necessity tend to the prosperity of the eastern part of Canada as well. Therefore I do not look for any opposition whatever at the present time from eastern Canada to the opening up of the Hudson Bay route. If that is not opened up, I think there is no doubt that the first year in which we shall have a large crop, there will be the biggest blockade that has ever taken place in the western country. We have heard it stated that the cause of the blockade two years ago was the heavy winter—the cold weather and the deep snow. That may have had something to do with the difficulties of the railroads in handling the traffic; but the blockade of wheat was not caused by the storms. It took place long before we had snow storms, at least a month before the severe winter set in. On some of the roads there was no blockade at all. The line from Portal to Moosejaw was not blockaded during the whole winter. Wherever the railway authorities were in a position to look after their roads and take precautions to have them in order they were not blockaded. What would be the result of a blockade such as we had two years ago, with almost double the acreage, and this increasing rapidly? During the past year some 270,000 immigrants have been brought into the country, and the statement has been made by one of the speakers to-day that during the first two months of this year the immigration has been 60 per cent greater than that of the first two months of last year. I am satisfied that the immigration is going not only to keep up, but to go on increasing, and that in all probability for the next five or ten years from 300,000 to 500,000 people a year will be going into that country. Where can we put all these people? We cannot for many more years put them in those parts of the country which are now opened up by railroads. They will have to be put in the northern part of the country, and a great many can be settled on the lands that will be opened up by the Hudson Bay Railway. It has been pointed out that the surveyors who went over that country last year, reported that in the Burnt River district there is an area of 10,000 square miles which is suitable for agriculture. That is about 6,000,000 acres, which is almost as much as we have under cultivation to-day in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta producing something like 200,000,000 bushels of grain. If that large area can be opened up for settlement and be made tributary to the railway to Hudson bay for a distance of 475 miles, is there not sufficient justification in the government coming to the point at once and taking hold of this work as a government undertaking and carrying it to a successful issue in the shortest possible time? The development taking place in that western country is greater than the three existing roads can handle, and therefore, another outlet is necessary. I was rather amused to hear my hon. friend from Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake) make the statement that if the late government had remained in power, the Hudson Bay Railway would have been an accomplished fact long before this. Well, I went to that country a good many years before the hon. gentleman. I went in 1878, and from 1878 to 1896, at every general election, the building of the Hudson Bay Railway was promised by the late government just as emphatically as it was promised by Sir Charles Tupper in 1896. In no case did any results follow. It was simply an election dodge all through, and had the late government been returned to power again in 1896, we would not be any further ahead to-day than we were eighteen years before that. I quite agree, however, that there is no use harking back to these old matters. Conditions have changed very much. The railroad is needed, and it is now up to the present government to take hold of its construction and build it at the earliest possible moment.

Some reference was made by my hon. friend from Calgary (Mr. McCarthy) to the land grant. He said that we on this side could no longer make the statement that the present government have not given any land for railway construction. My hon. friend is altogether wrong. I make the statement, without fear of successful contradiction, that this government has not given one acre in the west for the construction of railways. It is quite true that they carried out the undertakings which were entered into by their predecessors. Does any one suggest that they should not? Does any one suggest that when the extending time for the construction of what is now called the Canadian Northern for two years, the Liberal government should have cancelled that order in council? You might as well say that they should have cancelled all the contract for the construction of canals in this part of the country. The Canadian Northern Railway Company in 1896, during the life of that order in council, built over 100 miles of railway, and then came at the end of the two years and asked for a further extension of time. That further extension was granted them simply because they were living up to their contract and carrying out the work they had undertaken. But from 1880, when the charter was granted, to 1896, when our friends opposite were in power, they granted a renewal every year or so although not a mile of the road was being built. When, however, this government took office, they undertook to see that the company went on to construct the line. So that we are perfectly right when we say that this government has not given one acre of land for the construction of railways in the west or any place else. And yet, during the eleven years they have been in office, there has been double the railway mileage constructed in the west that there was in the previous eighteen years, and save in the cases of roads to which land grants had been promised by the late government, these roads were constructed without land grants at all. In a good many cases they were built for a cash subsidy and in some cases without any subsidy at all.

The hon. member for Calgary (Mr. McCarthy) also said that this Hudson bay land grant had been diverted from its destination and used for the building of roads going away from Hudson bay. That is not a correct statement in any sense. The government, under the present Dominion Land Act, had the authority to give a grant of 6,400 acres per mile within Manitoba and 12,800 acres outside Manitoba to secure the construction of a railway to Hudson bay, and they passed an order in council setting apart a land grant for the construction of that railway, the charter for which had been acquired by the Canadian Northern. The land grant which was set apart for the construction of that portion of the road between the Pass on the Saskatchewan and Fort Churchill provided that all that land should be north of the Saskatchewan river, and not one acre has ever been given to any other railway company or to the Canadian Northern for the construction of any other road, so that the statement of the hon. gentleman is altogether misleading. I would point that the government has power, under a clause in the Lands Act, to set apart a land grant of 12,800 acres per mile for the construction of a road from the Pas to Fort Churchill. It is altogether a matter of policy whether they should do that or not. It might possibly be the best way to secure the construction of that road. I do not know that it would be, but it is open for the government to do that if they think it advisable. But nothing has been done in the past towards giving away the lands set apart at one time for the construction of that road to any other road or to the same company for building any other branch lines.

Mr. J. D. REID. Were there special lands set apart for this?

Mr. TURRIFF. There was a large block north of the Saskatchewan river set apart by order in council, within which this company, if they built the road, could select their land. But the company did not build the road and the land grant lapsed and the government did not renew it. Under the Dominion Lands Act, however, the government have the authority to set apart 12,800 acres per mile in any part of the territory for the construction of that road. The clause in the Dominion Lands Act does not define where the lands should be taken. The old order in council did define it but that went out of existence by the fluxion of time.

Mr. J. D. REID. The government can take any lands not disposed of.

Mr. TURRIFF. Yes. The hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake) spoke about the building and operating of the road as a government road because he did not think that the traffic of the three different roads in that part of the country could be accommodated over this line provided it was built by a company.

Mr. LAKE. I consider it would be very much better to have it operated by the government.

Mr. TURRIFF. I would like to point out that my hon. friend took a different view a few years ago when the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway proposition was before this House and when his leader proposed, as an alternative plan, a patch work railway, one part of his scheme being the leasing of the Canadian Pacific Railway from Fort William to Winnipeg and giving other companies running powers over it.

Mr. LAKE. The hon. gentleman is wrong. I advocated government operation at that time, and do still.

Mr. TURRIFF. In that case, I withdraw my statement. But the great majority of members on the other side of the House endorsed the plan of their leader, which was to lease the road from Fort William to Winnipeg to the Canadian Pacific Railway, assist in having it double tracked and allow all companies running powers over it. If that were feasible in that case, it would be as feasible to have traffic running arrangement over the road to Hudson bay though that road was owned by one company.

Mr. LAKE. May I ask a question? Would the hon. gentleman have the road to Hudson bay owned by a company or by the government?

Mr. TURRIFF. I think it most important that we should get the road. And I would be perfectly satisfied to have the government build and lease the road giving all other companies running powers over it, or make arrangements with one of the companies to build the road and make provision, by placing the road under the Railway Commission, that every company should have running powers. But I have not seen anything in Canada, so far, to make me very much disposed to continue in the future in the line of government built and government operated railways.

I think the road should be built as a main line, as another outlet and inlet for the trade of the country. I think one good result of its operation would be to bring us into closer communication with the mother country. I think it would do a good deal to increase and foster the business between Canada and Great Britain, for it would furnish a short and direct route the western terminus of which would be right in the heart of the great western country. I believe also that it will pay for itself as a colonization road. Let me just point out the change that has taken place in a few years. I can remember very well—and it is not so many years ago—when none of us thought that great country north of the Saskatchewan river right up to near Edmonton was of any value. But the more we explore that country and the more we learn concerning it, the more we come to the conclusion that in that country which at one time, was thought of little value, we have vast stretches of rich agricultural land. The construction of this Hudson bay road would not only develop 475 miles of a colonization road, but you must remember that the sea line on the west side of Hudson bay will be made tributary to the railway which would assist in the development of that whole country and assist very materially in having it thoroughly prospected. And I think there is no doubt that when it is prospected you will find it a country rich in minerals. I believe that until you go away beyond where it is possible to grow anything in the far northern country, there is no part of this Canada of ours where, if you build a road for 500 miles, it will not of itself produce traffic enough to make that road a paying business. In every other part of the country we find we have vast resources not only of agricultural lands but of timber and minerals. We have a very good example of that in New Ontario, a country which, at one time, people thought was too rough to be any good, but as soon as they built a railway into it they found it was all right, making the railway a paying concern from the start.

At this late hour, it is neither desirable nor necessary for me to speak longer. I trust the government will take this important matter of the Hudson Bay Railway at once and will give us some definite pronouncement on the subject. I do not very much care how the road is built. I do not care very much whether the land is sold on pre-emption for $3 per acre or a certain quantity of land set apart to build the road. We are not concerned very much about the details; what we want is to have the road started. For it will take three or four years to build the railway, as we can work with advantage, probably, only from one end. The sooner it is begun the sooner it will be completed. I am satisfied that, before it is completed, every one of the roads now existing will be taxed to its uttermost. Though, by the Hudson Bay route, we may not be able to get out a great deal of wheat the same fall it is grown, we shall be able to get out many millions of bushels, and, for the rest, it is only a matter of storing it a month or so longer than it is stored at Fort William. And, as a route for cattle, there is no comparison between this and any other. It is so much cooler and the land haul is so much shorter that the cattle can be landed in better shape than if sent by the St. Lawrence, by New York or by any of the Atlantic ports. So, in conclusion, I trust that the government will give us some assurance at an early day that this matter will be taken hold of at once and carried to a successful completion in the course of the next few years.

Mr. W. D. STAPLES (Macdonald). I understand how unkind it would be on my part if I were to inflict a long speech on the House at this late hour. But I feel that I should not be doing my duty to the constituency I represent in this House, or to the province from which I come, if I did not at least say a word or two to show that I am most desirous that this road should be constructed at an early day. We have listened to many good speeches this afternoon. Some of the speakers have introduced some new thoughts; others have resurrected a great deal of old thought, but while it is old it is good, and upon a question of this kind we do not lose anything by refreshing our minds with what is already in 'Hansard.' The feasibility and the practicability of this road, as well as its great necessity, have been thoroughly established by what has been said to-day. Therefore, I shall not deal with that phase of the question. It has now come down to a matter of policy—it resolves itself into this: where are we going to get the money to construct this road? We heard the policy of the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton) when he made a speech in this House a few days ago. I listened to that speech, and I want to ask hon. members what is there in it after all? What was there in that speech more than has been presented to this House time and time again? That speech was published in the daily papers throughout Canada and in the United States and even abroad—for what purpose I am not at this moment going to say. I believe it was all prearranged. And as to what it cost to get this great publicity through the press of the world, I shall not say anything at this moment. But I will say that if one of the new members of the House, or one of the members who are not in the habit of speaking often had made the same speech that the hon. member for Brandon made, it would simply have been thrown in the waste basket.

As I listened to the policies enunciated by the hon. gentleman who preceded me this afternoon, I thought that, after all, there was another policy by which this government could very easily save the money necessary to build the Hudson Bay Railway. If they would only exercise a little more economy in the various departments, it would not be necessary for us to set aside any of our lands to provide for the construction of this road.

Take for example the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company deal. If the people of this country had received value for that land for which the recipients received $1,750,000 that would have gone a considerable distance in constructing the Hudson Bay Railway. If the government had pared down the unnecessary and gorgeous expenditure in equipping the 'Montcalm,' if those on that boat had drunk out of a ten cent cup instead of a $12 cup and that money had been used for the construction of this railway it would have built a few miles. It has been proved over and over again in this House and in the Public Accounts Committee that the government have been building wharfs throughout this country where there were no people, where there was no water and where there was no business. If they had used this money to construct the Hudson Bay Railroad they would have found lots of produce and many people there, and the money would not be lying idle as it is when used in the construction of such wharfs. If they had even used the $400,000 expended on the North Atlantic Trading Company for which the people received no value, it would have been some assistance. They might have used the money that has gone to the middleman in the Moncton land deal, or the large sums that have been made out of the Robbins Irrigation Company. Mr. Knowles stated this afternoon that the government had not sold any of the people's land for $1 an acre, but if he investigates he will find that 9,450 acres were sold for $1 an acre. 380,000 acres were sold on long credit to other irrigation companies, and in this case alone the middleman got $1,145,000. Why should that not be taken for the Hudson Bay Railway? We have also the Galway Horse and Cattle Company deal. Here the people of Canada received only $600, but the man who got the land turned it over within a few days for $20,000. That would build at least a mile of the Hudson Bay route. Take the Blairmore townsite for which the people of Canada received only $480, but the persons who got the townsite to-day value it at over $200,000. That would have built 10 miles of the Hudson Bay Railway. We find that the Militia Department is to-day spending $6,000,000 for a service that used to be carried on for $1,000,000. I would suggest to the hon. the Prime Minister that we should have a little less war and a few more miles of Hudson Bay Railway. I am one of the eleven who voted against the appropriation of $300,000 to get in the thin end of the wedge committing this country to $6,000,000 or $7,000,000 for the reclaiming of the Plains of Abraham. If they had taken even that $300,000 and used it in the construction of the Hudson Bay Railway instead of blowing it up in fire-crackers, as some of my hon. friends say, the people of the western provinces at least would have been very much more pleased. Then we come to the Marine Department. If you took some of the money you have been paying to those Americans who have been coming here at $75 a day and used it to build the Hudson Bay Railway, the people would have been much better satisfied and the government might have used a portion of it to pay Canadians who could very well show the Minister of Marine and his officials how to change a single entry system of bookkeeping to a double entry system. It is only a few nights since we had in the House a vote for a ten-year subsidy of $200,000 per year for a steamship line running to France. For what purpose? As far as I can ascertain from the French treaty, we as Canadians, especially we farmers, get no great value for that $200,000 a year. It will simply be paid into the coffers of the company operating the service, and this for the purpose of assisting France to place her goods on the Canadian markets. If this had been used for the construction of the Hudson Bay Railway, it would have been of much more benefit to the farmers of the west.

Hon. gentlemen say we have not given away any of our lands. What have we been doing with our timber? Where has it gone? Imagine yourself taking a train at Halifax and riding to the city of Vancouver, a distance of 3,000 miles and seeing on one side of the track for a distance of half a mile, a belt of timber and you will have some idea of the quantity of timber owned and controlled by the hon. member for Dauphin and the Imperial Pulp Company, the president of which is the Lieutenant Governor of the province of Manitoba. But they are not satisfied with giving away the land and timber, take our fisheries for example. If you can imagine yourself riding from Halifax to Vancouver, and viewing for that distance a lake twelve miles wide, you will have some idea of what has been given away to a few persons for a mere pittance. If these national assets had been so dealt with that the people received a fair value for them instead of their being given away, we would have more than enough money for the construction of the Hudson Bay Railway. The policy that I would suggest to the government for the raising of the necessary funds for the construction of the railway would be to cut out the middlemen, do away with the graft system and give the people value for the money collected from them in taxes.

Mr. JOHN CRAWFORD (Portage la Prairie). No question is of more interest to the people of the whole country to-day than transportation. That question is at the bottom of practically all the agitation there is, particularly in the western country to-day. It affects not only the movement of our crops but every other line of business. It not only affects the farmers and the labourers on the farms, but it affects every line of business throughout the whole country. I consider this is a more important proposition at the present time than anything we have to consider. I do not wish to speak at any length but I think it is only right that I should at least make some correction with respect to some of the remarks which have been made by previous speakers. I noticed that the hon member for Calgary (Mr. McCarthy) and the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake) tried to misrepresent the conditions which surround this undertaking with reference to the acts of the present government. One hon. gentleman undertook to say that the mileage was increased more than it ought to have been owing to the route which was taken in the direction of Hudson bay, or owing to Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann not trying to get to Hudson bay. I notice that it was suggested in the order in council of 1882 that the proposed road would be about 800 miles long and if you will look at the route of the Canadian Northern Railway you will find that, in reaching Hudson bay, it covers a distance of about 800 miles. I have just one complaint to make. In all the business which has been done in connection with the matter they seem to have lost sight of the fact that when the land grant was originally given in connection with this road it was given for the sole purpose of getting a completed road. The orders in council one after another bear that out. The complaint I have to make is that no provision has been made in that direction. The present government may not be so much to blame as their predecessors in that regard owing to the fact that the arrangement provided that so much of the land grants should be handed over as every twenty miles were constructed. Whenever twenty miles were built a proportionate amount of the land grant was handed over but there was no provision made for the completion of the road. Messrs. Mann and Mackenzie or the Canadian Northern people should go on and complete the road. They have had sufficient to do it and I think it has been a great mistake that proper and sufficient provisions were not made surrounding the contract. In 1885 an order in council was passed providing that this road could be built practically anywhere the company chose to locate it. They could start anywhere and tap the Canadian Pacific Railway. The order in council provided that in so far as that portion of it in Manitoba was concerned, the builders of the road were entitled to 6,400 acres per mile and that they should also receive 12,800 acres per mile in the Northwest Territories. The land grant would not have been along the line of railway if it had run in the direction that hon. gentlemen opposite have been talking about to-night. Throughout the different orders in council they make provision for the giving of the land grant to be selected not particularly along the line of railway, but the order in council passed in 1885 provides that in so far as the location of the land is concerned it is entirely at the disposal of the Minister of the Interior. Then having regard to the fact that they could start anywhere, build anywhere that would be advantageous to the company and that they could get into the Northwest Territories and select the land grant anywhere they pleased, goes to prove that the argument of my hon. friend's opposite, in so far as land grants are concerned, are not in keeping with the facts.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. What is the date of that order in council?

Mr. CRAWFORD. May 11, 1885. The order provides that they can build from any point and in any direction that may be considered advantageous to the company and that the minister is to be sole judge as to the selection of the land.

Now, I will leave that feature of the situation. This proposed railway is the foundation of practically everything in connection with the business of the west at the present time. Its construction not only affects the moving of our grain but it affects the marketing of it as well. During a discussion which took place in connection with the working of the Grain Inspection Act the other day the bankers of the country took the position that owing to the condition of transportation they were not prepared to make advances and they gave that as a reason for cutting off credits to the grain dealers. The grainmen stated that before my hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) made his announcement at the beginning of the session with reference to the assistance which the government had given to the banks the whole grain trade of the country was practically tied up because the grain dealers who were buying grain throughout the country could not get a dollar from the banks on account of their inability to get the grain which they had purchased and stored in interior elevators moved. When the announcement was made by the Finance Minister that he had made certain arrangements to assist the banking institutions to provide funds for the removing of the grain it relieved the situation immediately. Anything that is going to bring about better transportation facilities is of the greatest importance to the people of the country. As to the question of what advantage we may derive from the construction of this road it does not appeal to me from the point of view of dollars and cents quite so much as it may to other hon. gentlemen. It may present itself to them in that light owing to the parts of the country from which they come. I cannot see that we are going to derive an advantage even of 10 or 15 cents a bushel in connection with the shipping of our crop. I speak of the Manitoba part of the situation.

To the more western part of the country it would be of greater benefit but taking it on the whole I do not think the project would result in as large a gain in the matter of reducing freight rates as has been represented by some hon. gentlemen. The fact is that at certain periods grain is being taken from Winnipeg to Liverpool for about fifteen cents a bushel and it is not at all probable that it can be carried much cheaper than that by the Hudson Bay route. It is far more probable that when the Grand Trunk Pacific is in operation the result will be that the eastbound freight rates will be lower than they are to-day. I see that the rate quoted from Chicago to New York, a 900 mile haul, is sometimes as low as ten cents a hundred pounds when navigation is open, and there is water competition, and fourteen cents per hundred during the winter months which is about the highest rate charged for that 900 miles of railway transit. If they can haul wheat from Chicago to New York at a rate of about 8·40 cents a bushel it would seem that the railway rates in wheat in this country should be lower than they are to-day. When we remember that the Grand Trunk Pacific will have practically a level grade, especially going eastward, there is no doubt that the cost of transportation will be reduced, and it is therefore not likely that the construction of the Hudson Bay route will give us the advantage in the reduction of of about 8·40 cents a bushel it would seem to anticipate. At the same time the construction of this railway will be of great advantage to us, for it would give us more facilities for moving our crops and that is a most important feature. It would seem to me that if the road were constructed from Calgary to Edmonton or any other point in the west to Churchill, the grades obtained would be such that the cost of operation would be extremely light, and the freight rates would be as low as you could possibly expect in any railway haul. No doubt there are certain seasons when the navigation on Hudson bay will not be as favourable as in others, but undoubtedly in some seasons the weather will be so open as to allow our moving the greater portion of the season's crop by this route. I believe the undertaking to be feasible and that the country need have no hesitation in assuming the responsibility for it. In fact the whole western country demands it and the people will not be satisfied until it is carried out. As to providing the means for constructing the railway, the idea suggested last year by the Minister of the Interior when he was discussing his land Bill is nearer to my view than the scheme suggested by the ex-Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton). I am not in favour of tying up the lands in this country from settlement in any form, and in my opinion the sooner we get settlers on the land the better. If there is one thing more than another which in former years retarded the progress of the west it was the fact that the Conservatives adopted the policy of reserving the odd sections for these railway grants, thus necessitating sparse settlement and driving out many of the early settlers who would otherwise have remained in the country. I am inclined to favour the policy of the Minister of the Interior under which the sale of lands at so much per acre would create a fund to build this railway; I would certainly prefer that to reserving large tracts of lands for railways for any length of time. Then I am of opinion that the government should construct the railway and own it. However, I am not in favour of government operation and I think the line should be leased and running powers reserved so that it may be kept practically as a highway for the people of Canada. As to the terminals at Fort Churchill, I think they should be built and maintained by the railway companies who interest themselves in the trade there. I would remark that the conditions in western Canada have a direct effect upon the conditions in all other parts of the country. The manufacturers of the east suffer if the farmers in the west are depressed, as we could see last year when the little damage caused to the crops was so exaggerated as to bring about financial stringency in the country. The fact is that there was more money made out of the crop in the west last year than any other year's crop we ever had. There was more money made to the acre than was ever made before, but the slight damage done to the crop was made use of to the detriment of the whole country. There are no hard times in the west to-day, and if you consult the loan companies there they will tell you that they never had their interest paid as well as it was paid last year. I have a statement taken from a Winnipeg paper to the effect that two or three loan companies collected 90 per cent of their interest before the first of March this year much better than they did last year. When I was in the west a short time ago I was told by some of the bank managers that their accounts had never been in as good shape as they are at the present time. There is no danger for the future, conditions vary so much in different sections it is hardly possible to expect any reverse affecting the whole country. I think the future of the country is assured, and we cannot too soon meet the necessity of providing for that future. It is coming faster than we can provide for it, and nothing that we can do will go further to serve the people than increasing the means of transportation.

Mr. J. HERRON (Alberta). Mr. Speaker, I had contemplated speaking at some length on this important question; but owing to the lateness of the hour I will not occupy more than a minute or two merely to place myself on record as being in favour of the project. But before sitting down I wish to refer to a remark made by the last speaker (Mr. Crawford) with regard to the odd numbered sections. He asserted that the late Conservative government had been largely responsible for keeping back settlement, and otherwise retarding the progress of the country by failing to throw the odd-numbered sections open to homesteading or disposing of them in some other way. I think that statement comes with very bad grace from a supporter of the present government, which, although they have been in power for twelve years, during which they have had full power to deal with that question, have taken no steps towards throwing the odd-numbered sections open to settlement, or dealing with them in any way. With regard to the Hudson Bay Railway, I do not think that at this late hour of the night it is necessary for me to urge the importance of that great work. The subject has been very ably presented to the House by several gentlemen on both sides of the House, particularly by the hon. member for Souris (Mr. Schaffner) and the hon. member for Calgary (Mr. M. S. McCarthy). I would like, however, to say that one phase of the Hudson Bay route which especially commends it to the favour of the people of southern Alberta, lies in the advantage that it will offer in connection with the shipment of cattle from that range country. Our wild stock raised on the prairies do not take kindly to transportation by rail. It is the long railway journey from Alberta to the seacoast that takes practically the cream off the business of cattle raising on the western plains; and if we had a railroad to Hudson bay, it would give us the advantage of a shorter railway journey by 1,000 miles. For that reason alone the people of southern Alberta are specially interested in the building of that railroad. I would be glad to see the government take up the question in a practical way and carry it to a termination, instead of simply using it for political purposes from year to year, and letting it end at that. With these remarks I merely wish to state that I will support the resolution.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON (Selkirk). Mr. Speaker, on this very important question, that of the Hudson Bay Railway, I desire to occupy the attention of the House for a very short time. In the session of 1880 chapter 69 of the Statutes of Canada shows that a charter was passed for the Winnipeg and Hudson Bay Railway. After this charter was passed the promoters made application to the Manitoba government for assistance to the road. After several years of negotiations, finally in the year 1886 the legislature passed a Bill guaranteeing the bonds of the road for the first forty miles from Winnipeg at the rate of $6,400 per mile, taking the land grant as a security. I might say here that the Dominion government had given a land grant to the company providing that for that portion of the line which was in the province of Manitoba, about 200 miles, the company were to get 6,400 acres per mile, while for that portion outside of the province of Manitoba, about 500 miles, 12,800 acres would be granted to provide for extra difficulties supposed to exist in the construction of the road. The company went on and built the first forty miles. They did the grading, laid the ties and rails, but put on no ballast, and never operated any portion of this section. The ties rotted on the ground, the culverts and bridges were destroyed by fire and weather, the rails lay along the dump, and the only use made of them for about fifteen years was by the farmers along the line who occasionally hitched on to one and used it as a weed killer on their summer fallow. This forty miles remained from 1886 to about the year 1900 in the condition I have just mentioned. About that time Mackenzie and Mann got possession of the charter and started to reorganize and complete the line, already graded. They also added about twenty miles, taking the line to Oakpoint, a settlement on the east shore of Lake Manitoba which is now the terminus of the Hudson Bay Railway in Manitoba.

Mr. Speaker, in my opinion, and I think I speak for a very large number of the people of the province of Manitoba, the present location of the Hudson bay road from a point on the Canadian Northern Railway Prince Albert branch, to the Pas on the Saskatchewan river, will never be a satisfactory route for the province of Manitoba. This line starts about thirty miles west of the western boundary of Manitoba, and if completed to Churchill on the Hudson bay would have its terminus to the east of the eastern boundary of the province. In other words, taking Portage la Prairie as the centre of the province our grain and other exports would have to go 170 miles west to this point and then come back east to Fort Churchill, about 300 miles, an extra haul for the province on all its exports and imports of 235 miles. If Manitoba is to get any benefit from a Hudson Bay Railway a line will have to be built from Winnipeg north between Lakes Winnipeg and Manitoba or the east side of Lake Winnipeg which is the best route of all for Manitoba as well as being 200 miles shorter than any other route. In addition either of these two routes would open up a large extent of new and unoccupied territory which is capable of carrying a large population when the land is cleared. Most of this territory is covered with bush which would help the farmers to clear up the land by enabling them to take out pulp wood and ship it by this railway.

There has never been any doubt in the minds of the Manitoba people as to the benefits of a Hudson Bay Railway to that province but the difficulty in the past has been the owning of the charter by people who could not convince the capitalists of the feasibility and profit of putting money into this railway.

My hon. friend the leader of the opposition seems to doubt that any pronouncement has been made by any member of the government on the question. Let me refer him to what the hon. Minister of the Interior said during last session when introducing his Lands Act:

The government is fully convinced of the propriety of giving the Northwest an additional railway outlet by way of Hudson bay at the earliest possible date. The government believes that with the increase in production of the west now in progress, such an additional outlet will be urgently needed as soon as the railway can be built, even if it were commenced at once. At the same time it realizes that public opinion throughout Canada could scarcely be expected at the moment, in view of the great obligations already incurred in connection with railway enterprise, to sanction the additional obligation that would be incurred by the construction of a railway to Hudson bay, unless special provision were made to meet that obligation. It believes however, that there will be no objection from any quarter if the funds acruing from the disposal of preemptions in the three prairie provinces, under the terms of the proposed land Bill, shall be considered as a provision in place of the land grant stated in the Act to meet the burden upon the credit of the Dominion as a whole that must be assumed at an early date—if not immediately—if a railway is to be in operation to Hudson bay in time to meet the urgent need which is now in plain sight for an additional and shorter railway route from the prairies to tide water.

Now, if this should be agreed to by the government, there is nothing to hinder surveys being made during the coming summer and operations commenced and contracts made in the spring of 1909. This road could be finished in two years as there are no special difficulties along the route. This would help the situation a good deal as it will most likely be five years before the Grand Trunk Pacific is finished. While the line is being built, I would suggest that the government put up elevators with a capacity of say twenty millions so that when the line is finished it would at once become useful in relieving a situation which must become acute every fall until relief is furnished in this way. In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, even after this line and the Grand Trunk Pacific are finished, there will be enough business to keep all the roads busy for twelve months in every year.

I might say further that my idea would be to give every railroad in the west running rights (under the Railway Commission) over this road from some fixed point, to which they would have to build as soon as this is done, and not before, will the relief for which the west is looking be provided. I would point out another fact, Mr. Macoun of the Department of Agriculture, in giving evidence before the Committee on Agriculture, a few days ago, told us of a belt of good land north of the province of Manitoba, through which the Hudson Bay Railway must run on its way to Churchill, of about 100 miles square or 6,400,000 acres. This belt will support 20,000 farmers giving each 320 acres. A few years ago 20,000 farmers in Manitoba raised 50,000,000 bushels of wheat, so it is easily seen what this belt when settled will do for the Hudson Bay Railway. As the government are likely to appeal to the people in the near future, I would like to see a plank for the building of this road along the lines I suggest, put in their platform, and from what I know of the people of the county of Selkirk, my majority instead of 500 as at the last election, would, I am sure, reach 1,500. At this late hour, Mr. Speaker, I will not at any further length discuss the subject under consideration.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN (Queens). It really seems to me in looking at the map that every man east of the Bay des Chaleurs ought to hold up his hand for the construction of a railway to Fort Churchill, provided they are convinced of the navigability of Hudson straits for even five months in the year. The industrial communities of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island would thereby secure easy access to the northern part of this continent for their manufactured products by securing direct water shipment and avoiding the heavy tolls charged on the different railways, while so far as regards the agricultural interests of Prince Edward Island and Cape Breton, contiguous to the route, there is every reason to suppose that they would be able to find a ready market among our own people for all they have to sell. Take for instance this present year, the parliament of Canada has voted over $2,000,000 to supply seed for the west and the only difficulty that came to public notice in the way of securing oats from Prince Edward Island, was as to the procuring of freight rates. If the people of Prince Edward Island were convinced that they could supply even a proportion of the needs of the west, they would be perfectly willing to pay their quota towards the construction of a railway to Hudson bay, provided always that the people of the west would be wiling to pay their quota of the cost of a tunnel under the straits of Northumberland and thereby securing a complete circle of inter-communication between the Island province and Central Canada.

Mr. WILBERT McINTYRE (Strathcona). At this very late hour, I do not propose to take up time discussing this question at any length. I had intended giving some statistics, but former speakers have used most of them, and I do not intend to repeat them to the House which must be somewhat weary of listening to statistics to-day. The question of transportation is one of the most important questions with which the western country has to deal. For the last five or six years we have had every year to suffer to a greater or less degree from what is knows as the transportation blockade. The acuteness of that blockade was not so great this season for various obvious reasons, but it does not require any prophet to foretell that the first abundant harvest will again bring on this transportation blockade in a much more acute form than we have ever experienced it in the past. The conditions this year were very favourable to the railway. The crop in some part was injured, the prices were very materially lowered, and consequently the export of the grain was not great. But I say again that it does not require any great reflection on the part of anybody to see that, with our present conditions of producing grain, we shall have another transportation blockade just as soon as any very great quantity is prepared for export.

Now, another feature that we have to reckon with in the west is this : whereas we have already had these blockades, we have only begun, one might say, the occupation of raising grain in that country. We have alienated from the government somewhere in the neighbourhood of 80,000,000 acres of land, and we had in cultivation in 1906 8,000,000 acres. We have over 40,000,000 acres of land occupied by settlers. With these facts before him, any one on a moment's reflection will see that an enormous output must necessarily follow when we begin operations seriously.

Now, as to the method of building this road, I am not going to go into that in detail. But I believe we have had amply proven here to-day the feasibility of building the road, the suitability of the country through which it is to run, the availability of the port which it reaches, the possibility of storing the grain there, and the feasibility of the water route from that point to the European market for a reasonable number of months in the year. I believe that these facts in the main are plain to every member of the House. It is the duty of this government to see to it that that road is constructed and that the government has absolute control over it. I could go very much into detail in this matter, but all I wish to do is to add my expression to that of others and to statements that I hope the government at the earliest opportunity, will have this road constructed.

Mr. GEO. W. FOWLER (Kings and Albert). Mr. Speaker, I must congratulate the House upon the very lively interest they seem to take in this very important question—I think it would require some stretch of imagination on your part to see a quorum in the House at this moment. That is regrettable. This is a question of great importance not only to the west but to the east as well. And notwithstanding the insinuation made by the hon. member that the east does not take the interest it should in western questions, I must say that the eastern part of Canada has in every case shown a very great interest in the west and all that pertains to the west. Sacrifices have been made; they were not deemed sacrifices because of the overpowering interest which the east had in the west. From the very foundation of our confederation, the eastern provinces of Canada have been interested in the west. We in the maritime provinces do not fix the western boundary of Canada at the St. Lawrence river, nor do the older provinces as a whole fix their boundary at the great lakes. We extend our boundary to the Pacific ocean. It was the dream of that great statesman, Sir John Macdonald, and of the statesmen who surrounded him, as soon as confederation was formed, that the Pacific ocean should be the western boundary and the Arctic ocean the northern boundary of this great Dominion of ours. I say that we of the east are and ought to be interested in the questions of the west. And the question of the Hudson Bay Railway is a very important question to the people of the east and the west. There can be no doubt that the time is not far distant when the means for carrying the products of that great country will be found insufficient, even with the new Transcontinental road which is now under construction. And I do not believe that a more feasible route for a new transportation line can be found than by way of Hudson bay. For my part, though coming from the extreme east, I am very strongly in favour of the construction of this road, and the opening of another outlet for the products of our country. The government that was in power in 1881 had the same idea—I believe it was in 1881 that the first order in council was passed in respect to this matter. Then there was to be an alternative route, as has been pointed out.

Mr. W. McINTYRE.

Changes have been made which have altogether changed the idea of the men who passed that first order in council. As has already been pointed out by the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. S. J. Jackson) the route that is adopted at the present time going to Erwood and thence by Le Pas towards Churchill is not the shortest route to Hudson bay. The first route intended by the order in council, the route that obliges them to pass east of Lake Manitoba, would be, as I understand it, the shortest route between Portage la Prairie and Churchill. I was somewhat amused at the statement made by the hon. member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Crawford) that, as far back as 1885, by order in council, the Minister of the Interior was given power to place this land grant where he pleased. I can understand how hon. gentlemen opposite after the assertions we have already made with respect to the conduct of this government regarding land grants for railways, would make very strenuous efforts to get out of the hole in which they were placed by the conduct of this government toward this particular railway proposition. They have stated again and again that not an acre has been given by this government as land grant. But they are met with the statement that the government revived a land grant, which was the same as giving it originally, because the grant had expired, and they were not obliged to renew it. And not only had the grant expired, but the object for which it was given had expired, the object being a railway to Hudson bay and they had changed the route so that the object no more existed than did the grant itself. They revived the land grant for another purpose. Not only did they revive the grant, but they increased tremendously the area from which it was to be selected, so as to allow the company to choose land not necessarily more fertile, but infinitely more valuable by reason of the large settlement that had already taken place in the vicinity. My hon. friend from Portage la Prairie says they were authorized to do this by reason of the order in council which was passed by the Conservative government in 1885. Now the only section which gives the Minister of the Interior any discretion with respect to where these lands should be located is section 7. I have a certified copy of the order in council before me. The sections preceding sections 7 state in detail where these lands shall be taken from; section 7 goes on to say:

> And any deficiency in the area of the land which the company may be entitled to receive arising on account of any portion of land hereinbefore described being occupied by actual settlers——

Mark the condition:

> —establishing legal rights thereto or which might be set apart by the government for Indians under any treaty, or arising from any other cause, of which the Minister of the Interior shall be the sole judge, shall be made up from such lands as the Minister of the Interior may from time to time designate.

That is the deficiency shall be made up. But there are some eight and three-quarter million acres of land from which the selection shall be made, provided for by the preceding sections. We find that instead of confining themselves to the lands originally set aside for the purpose of selection they go over 200 miles west of that to the extreme western boundary of the province of Saskatchewan. I have here a map which shows that and you will observe, Mr. Speaker, just how far they have gone from the area originally set apart. This was done not because there was not sufficient land of good quality, 'fairly fit for settlement,' in the terms of the order in council, but because settlement had already taken place in this particular district and those lands were very much more valuable and much more saleable on that account. So gentlemen who had this railway to build were able to get 6,400 acres of the best land in the country in districts in which there already was settlement in sections not set apart. $6 an acre would be a fair value for this land and on 6,400 acres this would make a very acceptable subsidy indeed, in addition to the $40,000 a year for 20 years which was also guaranteed for the construction of this road. Such a good thing was this, so valuable were these concessions to the Canadian Northern Railway, that they were not particular whether they observed the desire to cover the distance between the two points in the most direct way; they did not care how much the line varied from the straight because the variation would simply increase the amount they were to receive. I have here a map which shows the line, and you will observe how it is constructed. Did anybody ever see such a wobbly straight line as that? Every wave in that line cost this country from $250,000 to $500,000. Those were expensive wobbles, but you see the longer the distance the more land they get. In Manitoba they got 6,400 acres a mile and outside of that province 12,800 acres a mile. The actual distance they made in the journey to Hudson bay would be only 150 miles, but they had journeyed 320 miles in order to make that 150 miles. This was done because they were getting 6,400 acres per mile and were allowed to select that from the very best lands in the provinces of Manitoba and Saskatchewan. Taking the 12,400 acres allowed in Saskatchewan at $6 per acre, they would receive $75,000 a mile for building this road. It seems to me that this is a matter for which this government deserves the censure of the people of Canada. They have taken from the public lands, the public domain of this country, land to aid a company in the construction of what is simply a local line. Then they have the nerve to stand up here and say they have never alienated one acre of the public lands of this country. My hon. friend from Macdonald (Mr. Staples) might have added one or two other items to the list he gave of savings which the government could have made to procure funds for the building of this road to Hudson bay. He might have suggested that the government could have used the $5,000,000 or $6,000,000 that to-day lie at the bottom of the St. Lawrence river in the ill-fated Quebec bridge. If this had been devoted to the Hudson bay road it would have fairly well built the line from Le Pas to Hudson bay. It would have been much better for the country if it had been used for that purpose.

While this discussion has been mostly carried on by western members, it seems to me that at least one eastern man should state to the House that so far as he was entitled to speak for the east the east was in favour of anything which would make to the betterment of conditions in the western country.

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). Mr. Speaker, before the question is put I wish to congratulate the House, the west and the country at large on the unanimous expression of approval of this project in which we are all, especially in the west, so deeply interested. It is very fortunate, I am sure, that after some four months of a strenuous session it is possible to hold a discussion on such an important question in the House and not have any division of opinion as to the merits of the main question. This is fortunate for the project and for the country. I do not propose to discuss the question myself as it has been discussed at such length and so ably during the day. I might, however, refer to one point suggested by Mr. Fowler, that the road had been lengthened very greatly from what was first intended. I shall not dispute that, but I would point out that the decision of the question whether the road has really been lengthened, depends on the points taken. If the initial point is to be Portage la Prairie or some point in the older part of the province of Manitoba and the usefulness of the road is to be confined to that district, then the road has been lengthened by being taken west of Lake Manitoba instead of between Lake Manitoba and Lake Winnipeg. But if the road is intended to serve the western country generally, then this change in the route has very greatly shortened the road. That is to say the route has taken a shortened distance between the centre of the wheat fields and Fort Churchill as compared with the route which would go direct from Portage la Prairie to Fort Churchill. Last year, when this question was up for consideration, the premier informed the House that the government had the matter then under consideration and that he hoped to be able to make an announcement with regard to it before the close of the session. Unfortunately he was called away and did not return before the close of the session; therefore the government was not able to reach any conclusion on the subject and he was not able to make any announcement. I am at liberty to say that the question is now under the consideration of the government and that a conclusion has not been reached is not because of any dilatoriness in regard to the question at the hands of the government. I think it will be agreed that the subject of transportation has been dealt with and is being dealt with very energetically on the part of the government and very satisfactorily to the country at large, and if no conclusion has yet been reached in regard to this question of the immediate construction of a railway to Hudson bay it is not because of any lack of sympathy with the project or any lack of intent on the part of the government to deal with the question, but because other matters have hitherto been more pressing. However, it is again hoped that before the end of the session it will be possible for the government to make an announcement upon this question.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Carleton). Mr. Speaker, I would like to say just one or two words before the discussion closes. I am very glad indeed to hear that the subject is once more under the consideration of the government. It was very much under the consideration of the government last year and it remains up to the present time exactly where it was then and exactly where it was twelve years ago when they came into power. I have no doubt that my hon. friend (Mr. Knowles) who introduced this subject to-day, regards that as being so entirely satisfactory as to merit his approval and commendation. I think I may assure the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) on behalf of the hon. member for West Assiniboia that as long as it remains under consideration the hon. member for West Assiniboia will be absolutely satisfied and will continue to give to the government in future that steady support which he has always been ready to accord it in the past.

The hon. member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff) made a very interesting speech in which he referred to what he was pleased to term the patchwork policy propounded by the leader of the opposition in regard to the Grand Trunk Railway project some years ago. If my hon. friend had not got weary of this discussion and retired from the Chamber, I would have been inclined to tell him if he really wants an example of patchwork he had better search the areas in the western part of Canada that have been practically filched from the people under his administration as land commissioner.

In regard to the general question, the subject is one of intense interest to the people of the west. That is perfectly apparent to any gentleman who has gone to the west and who knows how thoroughly the people of Manitoba and the two other provinces are convinced that the Hudson bay route will give to them an outlet which is absolutely necessary to the full and complete development of their country. It is only a question of the requisite information and we are informed that the government have in their possession at the present time information which justifies them in coming to the conclusion that the Hudson Bay route is a reasonably practicable and feasible route for a reasonable number of months in the year as the hon. member for Strathcona (Mr. McIntyre) very well put it to-night. If that is the case why have they not effectively dealt with the matter during the last twelve years ? Why is it that they did not take some steps to give a practical illustration of the sympathy which was dwelt upon so much here to-night by my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) ? Sympathy is a very desirable quality, but action is a much more desirable quality on the part of the government in regard to a great transportation question of this kind. Let me point out to the minister one illustration of that. In 1904, four years ago, there was the same unanimity in this House in regard to the application of the British preference only to goods which entered Canada by Canadian ports. There were the same delightful expressions from even greater statesmen than the Minister of the Interior, from the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) and from the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) and we know very well that in so far as the application of that principle is concerned the matter is exactly in the same position as it was when that motion was passed by the House. If that is a fair omen of what the people of the west may expect from this resolution, I do not know that they have any very great cause for satisfaction after what has taken place. There was on that occasion in 1904, a unanimous resolution of the House and yet the government have paid absolutely no attention to it, except that the terms of that resolution have been incorporated in the statutes of this country to be brought into operation at some indefinite and unknown time in the future, described by the Prime Minister as dependent upon the completion of the National Transcontinental Railway. Four years have elapsed, we do not know how many more will lapse before effect will be given to that resolution, now four years old, and if the people of the west are to wait for a similar length of time before any action is taken by the government in regard to this railway, it does not seem that the hon. member for West Assiniboia has made quite so important or great a stride towards the goal on the present occasion as some hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House seem to imagine.

The subject recalls the discussion on the tunnel between Prince Edward Island and the mainland which was alluded to by one of my hon. friend from the island; it is simply a question of getting the requisite information as to whether or not this is a feasible route. This government have been in power for twelve years and assuming the worst default that you are entitled to assume in regard to their predecessors, I think that they long ago should have acted upon the information which has been available. Now, we are assured by the Minister of the Interior that the government have it under consideration, and I suppose that we must content ourselves with that unless some other gentleman of the treasury benches is inclined to go a little further than the Minister of the Interior has done.

Motion as amended, agreed to.

1. Is the government aware that the lessees of the waters north of lake Winnipeg, including Playgreen lake, have not made the expenditure called for under such lease?
2. Is it the intention of the government to cancel the lease?

1. How many of the crew of the government steamer 'Lady of the Lake' are under pay during the winter, who are they, and what positions do they hold on said boat?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries) :

1. Three : Alex. Vance, master ; Wm. Simpson, mate; Robert Rennie, engineer.
2. Summer salaries ; master, $100 per month; mate, $65 per month; engineer, $85 per month.

Winter salaries; master, $50 per month; mate, $32.50 per month; engineer, $42.50 per month.

Duties in summer comprise all the work they are called upon to perform in their respective positions.

In winter such officers are held under half pay subject to the call of the department for duty at any moment.

COLD STORAGE SHIPMENTS.

Mr. ARMSTRONG asked :

What was the total number of boxes of cheese, butter, eggs, bacon, apples in boxes and barrels, respectively, shipped in cold storage, the number in cooled air chambers, and the number shipped in ordinary storage in twelve months previous to March 1, 1908?

Mr. STAPLES.

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture). The trade and navigation returns do not show separately the products carried in cold storage, cooled air or ordinary stowage.

The following figures have been compiled from the reports of the cargo inspectors employed by the Department of Agriculture during the period of navigation at Montreal and Quebec, for the season of 1907 :

—	In cold storage.	In cooled Air.	In ordinary stowage.
Cheese, boxes	.....	290,076	1,721,569
Butter, packages	66,896	52	.....
Meats, boxes, Canadian	2,858	29,071	25,982
" " U. S. A.	33,707	11,615	127,119
Beef, quarters, U. S. A.	4,991	.....	.....
Lard, packages, Canadian	.....	.....	1,040
" " U. S. A.	19,635	6,711	403,489
Apples, bbls., Canadian	6,131	1,729	634,780
" boxes, "	500	3,232	25,240
" bbls., U. S. A.	.....	.....	24,701
" boxes, "	.....	796	.....
Tender fruits, boxes, Canadian.	754	.....	87
" " U. S. A.	11,118	.....	.....
Eggs, cases, Canadian	.....	938	24,249
" U. S. A.	1,436	.....	.....

The proportion of products carried in cooled air was really much larger than what is shown in these figures, because only those shipments on which the extra freight was paid are included. Many shipments were carried in cooled air at ordinary rates, but in such cases they are shown on the ship's papers as ordinary cargo.

There are no figures available to show the proportion of the various products carried in cold storage, cooled air and ordinary stowage since the close of navigation in the St. Lawrence, but it may be stated that practically everything is carried in ordinary stowage during the winter months.

MAIL ROUTE TENDERS.

Mr. ARMSTRONG asked :

1. Are all mail routes let by tender? If not, why not?
2. Were tenders called for the carrying of mail on the route between Brewster post office, in South Huron, and Park Hill, in North Middlesex?
3. If tenders were called for on above route, what was the date of last tender, and when will said tender expire?
4. What was the date of the previous tender, and to whom were the tenders sent?
5. What was the amount of each contract, the names of each tenderer, and the amount in each case?

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Postmaster General) :

1. Tenders are invited for all services costing more than $200 per annum. The Postmaster General has power under the provisions of the Postal Act to enter into contracts for amounts less than $200 without calling for tenders. When the price was reasonable and it was in the public interest to do so this has sometimes been done, but even in these cases tenders are called for unless it is shown to the department that the price at which it is offered to perform the service is reasonable and reason exists in the public interests why the contract should be arranged without delay. Expiring contracts, the prices of which have been determined by public tender, are also open to renewal if as a result of the inspector's report the Postmaster General is satisfied that the amounts at which the services are being performed are reasonable and as low as would likely be secured if tenders were called for, and that the services of the contractors have been satisfactory.

2. Yes, tenders were invited in June, 1900. Only one tender was received that of Maxim Gratton at $500. This was considered by the department excessive and the inspector at London was instructed to secure lower offers, with the result that a contract was awarded to John Ravelle at $300 per annum from the 1st October, 1900. This contract has since, in view of the satisfactory manner in which it was performed, and in view of the fact that the contract price represented $200 less than the offer secured by public tender, been renewed for four years on the 1st of July, 1904, and also from the 1st of July, 1908. In both cases the inspector reported to the Postmaster General that the service was being satisfactorily performed, and that the price was reasonable.

3. Answered by No. 2.

4. Notices inviting tenders were posted in all the post offices on the route, and in the principal places of business in the district served.

5. Answered by No. 2.

POST OFFICE RETURNS.

Mr. ARMSTRONG asked :

How many returns have been asked for since the opening of parliament requiring an answer from the Post Office Department?

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Postmaster General). Eleven returns have so far been asked of this department since the opening of parliament. Of this number eight have already been answered.

MILITIA SUPPLIES.

Mr. WORTHINGTON asked :

1. Has a contract been made for groceries and provisions for the active militia at Halifax for the current year? If so, were tenders called for?

2. Who were the tenderers for bacon, what were their offers, what is the price in the current contract, and with whom has this contract been made?

3. Who got the contract last year and the year before?

4. At what price did he agree to supply breakfast bacon?

5. Has the department received information that the bacon furnished was not breakfast bacon, but shoulder or roll bacon?

6. If so, was any action taken to ascertain the truth of that statement?

7. Had the department an offer to supply roll bacon for the current year? If so, from whom and at what price?

Hon. Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia and Defence) :

1. (a). Yes. (b). Tenders were called by newspaper advertisement.

2. No tenders for bacon separately were called for. The custom of the department is to make a contract for groceries and vegetables, including bacon. Only one tender was received for groceries and vegetables, that of Mr. J. F. Outhit. His prices were : for breakfast bacon, 13¼ cents per pound ; green bacon 7 cents yer pound.

Messrs. Davis and Fraser submitted a tender for bacon and lard only, on the form of tender for groceries and vegetables ; the prices being, for breakfast bacon, 12 7-8 ; for green bacon, 11¾. To their tender was attached a letter quoting 10⅝ cents per pound for shoulder, or rolled bacon, smoked; and 10 cents per pound for shoulder or rolled bacon, green.

The contract for groceries and vegetables, including bacon, was made with Mr. J. F. Outhit ; the prices for bacon being those specified in his tender, as above.

3. Mr. J. F. Outhit.

4. In 1906, 14 cents, in 1907, 13¾ cents.

5. In letters received from Messrs. Davis and Fraser, rival dealers, the opinion was expressed that rolled bacon was being supplied, instead of English breakfast bacon.

6. No action was necessary as no complaint from the supply officer was received by the department.

7. (a). Yes. (b). See answer No. 2.

GOVERNMENT OFFICIALS IN POLITICS.

Mr. CROCKET asked :

1. Has the Minister of Customs received any communication complaining of the active participation of Mr. P. G. Veniot, collector of customs at Bathurst, in the late provincial election in Gloucester county, New Brunswick?

2. If so, in what manner and to what extent was it complained that Mr. Veniot engaged in said election?

3. What action has the minister taken, or what action does he propose to take, in the matter?

4. What is the salary of the said collector?

Hon. WM. PATERSON (Minister of Customs). Complaint has been received against

Mr. P. J. Veniot, collector of customs at Bathurst, as to active participation in the recent provincial election in Gloucester, N. B. Mr. Veniot has been advised of the complaint, and his explanation requested. His salary is $1,100 a year.

DREDGING AT WIARTON.

Mr. BENNETT asked :

1. Who were the parties who tendered for dredging done at Wiarton in 1907?
2. What proportions or quantities of clay, sand, and boulders were in the estimates for which $25,026 was paid to Mr. Bowman at Wiarton in 1907?
3. Was the request of the council of Wiarton for said work verbal or in writing?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works) :

1. A. F. Bowman and C. S. Boone.
2. Clay, 115,800 cubic yards ; clay and sand, 5,800 ; clay and boulders, 2,200 ; boulders, 400, ; total, 124,200 cubic yards.
3. In writing.

THE SOULANGES CANAL.

Mr. BERGERON—by Mr. Sproule—asked:

1. Was an investigation held on the Soulanges canal? If so, when, where, and for what reason?
2. Who was the commissioner?
3. How many witnesses were examined?
4. What is the cost of the investigation?
5. What is the report, if any?

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Postmaster General) :

1. Yes, at Vaudreuil, on account of certain charges made against the overseer.
2. Mr. Louis Boyer, advocate of Montreal, was appointed commissioner, by order in council, dated 5th March, 1908.
3. No report has yet been received from the commissioner.

THE 'LABOUR GAZETTE.'

Mr. BERGERON—by Mr. Sproule—asked :

1. Where has the 'Labour Gazette' been printed in English and French since its existence?
2. What is the cost of such printing?
3. What is the cost of the 'Labour Gazette' altogether?

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Postmaster General) :

1. The 'Labour Gazette' from the date of its establishment has been printed in Englisn and French by the Printing Bureau or by arrangements made by the Printing Bureau. From April, 1906, the 'Labour Gazette' has been printed at the office of the Ottawa 'Free Press.'
2. Cost of printing and paper.

	English.	French.
1901-2..	$6,564 87	$3,058 47

1907-8 (Dec., 1907)	8,576 12	3,673 56

3. There are at the present time forty-eight correspondents of the 'Labour Gazette' representing the various industrial centres of Canada who send monthly reports relating to the industrial conditions of their respective districts, the state of the labour market, changes in wages and hours, and other matters of particular interest to the industrial world generally ; these correspondents receive $100 each per annum. There is one legal correspondent who reports each month the judicial decisions, relating to labour matters, and who receives a salary of $300 per annum. A translator receives $1,200. These sums are to be added to the figures representing the cost of printing and paper. It is difficult to state, precisely the cost of production under other heads, namely, editorial services, mailing, proof reading, typewriting, &c., this work being performed by various officials of the department in conjunction with their other duties.

CANADA-FRANCE STEAMSHIP SERVICE.

Bill (No. 145) to amend the Act relating to Ocean Steamship Subsidies—Mr. Brodeur—read the second time, and the House went into committee thereon.

Mr. SPROULE. Is it to be paid $100,000 or $200,000 ?

Mr. BRODEUR. We will undertake to pay $100,000 for eighteen trips, being at the rate of $5,555 per trip. If it makes other trips. the company is to be paid at the same ratio for the increased number, but the total payment is not to exceed $200,000.

Mr. SPROULE. What regulations will be put in the contract regarding freight rates and cold storage?

Mr. BRODEUR. This subsidy is based on a contract passed some years ago. The government proposes to require that cold storage facilities be established on this line. That is also provided by the contract about to expire. As regards freight rates, we intend proposing that they should be under the control of the government. I do not know whether the company will agree to that, but it is the intention of the government to try to get that clause put into the contract. It is proposed, however, that the freight rates shall not be higher between a Canadian and a French port than between an American and a French port. The government intend exacting this clause, and in that respect the contract will be a departure from the others, because there is no such provision in any contract made so far with any company subsidized by the government.

Mr. SPROULE. What about the rate of speed?

Mr. BRODEUR. I think in the old contract no rate of speed was provided and it is not in this.

Mr. SPROULE. Practically we have no definite information. We are told that there will be cold storage, but we are not told what kind or how much. When we ask about freight rates, we are told that they will not be higher than the rates between France and Boston. That is very indefinite. The rate of speed, we are told, is something to be agreed on later. In fact, we are not given any information at all.

Mr. BRODEUR. The cold storage facilities are to be absolutely under the control of the government and to be provided as required by the Department of Trade and Commerce. That was the provision in the old contract, and I do not anticipate any difficulty on that score. All shipping companies are interested in having cold storage facilities on their steamers. This line will have to carry butter and cheese and there is no reason why it should not furnish proper cold storage facilities. As regards the rate of speed, it is provided in the contract what time shall be taken on each voyage. I think it is eleven or twelve days.

Mr. MONK. When this question came up the other day, I was not opposed to the principle of our having direct communication with France. Does my hon. friend not remember that?

Mr. BRODEUR. My hon. friend said he was not opposed to the subsidy, but he proposed an amendment to provide that the freight rates should be under the control of the government.

Mr. MONK. I am glad to have this admission of the hon. minister because a statement was made in his Montreal organ——

Mr. BRODEUR. Have I an organ?

Mr. MONK. I believe so. The statement was made in it that Col. Hughes and Dr. Sproule with Mr. Monk opposed altogether the idea of having direct communication by steamship with France. I am glad to take note of the minister's admission that there was no opposition offered to the principle of having such communication. What ground has he for anticipating that we will do a good business with France in butter and cheese? The French export a great deal of butter, and my hon. friend knows that there is no market there for the cheese we make here.

Mr. BRODEUR. With regard to cheese, I was told, when in France in connection with the negotiation of the treaty, that quantities of cheese were consumed in France supposed to have been produced in Canada. This cheese was sent to England, warehoused there and afterwards sent to France. This was the statement made to me several times, and those who gave me the information led me to believe that it was absolutely correct, and I had every reason to believe that they were well informed. As to butter, my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) knows that this line of steamers will run not only between Canada and France, but to England as well. Last year, considerable quantities of butter and cheese were exported by this line, especially butter to London. And I do not see why this should not be done.

Mr. MONK. There is no doubt that the line may be used to export butter to England; but I understood the minister (Mr. Brodeur) to say that he wanted to insist on cold storage because there was to be an export of butter from Canada to France. The exporters of butter in Montreal will tell the minister, that, under the present conditions, there is no probability of our exporting butter to France.

Mr. BRODEUR. There may be some trade in salt butter.

Mr. MONK. There may be a little, but not much. I do not question his statement that he received the information as to cheese of which he has told us. But I do not think he will be able to substantiate the statement that our cheese, which is exported to England in large quantities, finds its way to France. I would like to ask why the hon. minister intends making it a condition that the freight rates on this line shall be subject to the American rates. Can he give us any idea what the rates are between American ports and Le Havre?

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not think there is any fixed rule; the rates vary according to the circumstances and the time of year. But I understand that those who engaged in negotiations with the government on this subject were willing to undertake that the freight rates should not be higher between Canada and France than between the United States ports and France.

Mr. SPROULE. Which reminds one of the Irishman, who, when asked his age, said he was the same age as his brother Mike—both were born in the same month. It has always been understood that those taking advantage of the cold storage were charged so much above the regular freight rates, and thus one could judge pretty accurately whether the exporter would be inclined to ship in cold storage. So, the two elements must be taken into account, first, whether the cold storage is adequate in every respect and kept in proper condition, and, second, whether the rates are so low that the method of shipment will be used. The information given to the House by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) in answer to a question went to show that, in shipping apples to England, only a few thousand barrels were sent in cold storage while a great many thousand barrels were sent by the ordinary means. And so with eggs and butter. It must be, therefore, that either the cold storage is not adequate or not kept in proper condition, or the rates must be too high for the ordinary shipper to use the cold storage system. Without information on these points, we cannot very well know what return we are likely to get for this subsidy. We are granting $5,000 for each trip. What for? Not merely for the purpose of establishing a steamship line between here and France but to develop trade. But trade can only be developed by providing suitable transportation at reasonable figures. I think the government should have been in a position to give the House the information we are asking, so that we might be able to judge whether or not we are likely to get any substantial return from this expenditure. Up to the present time we have failed to get any information, as far as I can see.

Mr. HENDERSON. I find, from the trade and navigation returns that neither butter nor cheese is exported from Canada direct to France. It is possible that cheese may have been sent to the United States or to England and thence to France, but in that case, Canada would not get credit for it.

Mr. BRODEUR. My information is that the cheese was exported to Britain and thence to France.

Mr. HENDERSON. However, nothing in these lines seems to have been exported direct to France. Now, I would like to ask what advantage will imports into Canada have if brought in by this subsidized line? We understand, from the discussion we had the other evening, that Canadian goods, to secure the advantage of the minimum tariff to France must be exported directly, or if they go, for instance, through England to France, they must go direct by the vessel and in unbroken bulk from the British port. Will goods imported from France into Canada have to come the same way? Suppose they were sent through England, or through the United States, will they get the benefit of Canada's intermediate tariff? Or will the government, in that case, insist upon the general tariff?

Mr. BRODEUR. If the goods are imported from France direct, of course, there will be no doubt about it. If the goods are imported through England to Canada, the rates will be the same—that is, the rate under the treaty will apply. Suppose that goods are sent from France to some British port, Liverpool for example, and thence from Liverpool to Canada. These will be subject to the duty provided in the treaty. If, under the treaty, they enjoy the benefit of the intermediate tariff, they will be dutiable under the intermediate tariff. If they belong to the class coming under the most reduced rates, what we call schedule C, they will be liable to the duty mentioned in that schedule.

Mr. HENDERSON. Assuming that silk goods, for example, are exported from France to London, are repacked by a London dealer, and the Canadian purchases them through the London dealer. The goods come from France to London, they are packed and sent to Canada, what would be the tariff under which they would come into Canada? Would it be the intermediate tariff?

Mr. FIELDING. They would come under the treaty, provided satisfactory proof of origin was furnished. If they could prove that these goods, although sent from Great Britain, were French goods and of the class mentioned in the treaty, they would be entitled to the benefits of the tariff when shipped from Great Britain.

Mr. BRODEUR. The goods will have to be imported direct, whether from France or from a country enjoying the benefits of the preferential tariff. I think those are the words of the treaty.

Mr. MONK. Then we are in this position, that we give a great advantage to France.

Mr. FIELDING. In what respect?

Mr. MONK. In this respect, that we cannot ship from England to France at all after transhipment, whereas the French can ship here through London. In the case of silks, goods can be transhipped, repacked, and after an interval sent to Canada, and get the benefit of the special list under the treaty, and no article that we ship to France through Liverpool, even if transhipment takes place on our part, can benefit by the treaty. Surely that is not possible.

Mr. FIELDING. That is quite possible, but we thought it desirable that French goods coming here by way of Great Britain should receive the benefits of the treaty.

Mr. MONK. Why not give us the same advantage?

Mr. FIELDING. Because the French government, by their national law, will not do so. They have the right by their law of imposing the surtax, and all we, in our wisis to put in a proviso that if we, in our wisdom, wish to impose the surtax we can do so. We have not deemed it advisable to do so. If we want to put ourselves on even terms with our French friends, we may do so by imposing a surtax, because we have put this proviso in the treaty:

> Provided, however, that nothing in this article shall exempt the products of either country from any surtaxe d'entrepôt that is now, or hereafter may be, imposed on products imported indirectly.

The French authorities impose a surtax; if we wanted to be on even terms with them we can impose a surtax. Up to the present we have not thought it advisable to do so.

Mr. MONK. The Minister of Finance is always telling us what the French law is. We have a law too, and we have broken that law when we made the treaty; we have altered our law in order to make the treaty with France. Why did not my hon. friend tell them that we never impose a surtax, that we raised our taxation in an entirely different manner, and that we could not easily resort to that form of taxation. When nations meet together in order to conclude treaties, those treaties are supposed to supersede the law ; favours are granted mutually and the law is changed to that extent. In this case I did not think that the French could send their goods to London or any port in England, and then those goods might come out here at any time on proof of origin and get the benefit of that treaty. We are bound down ; we cannot transhipp through England in any way, and we have to subsidize a steamship line in consequence. I did not think, when there was such a demonstration in honour of the Minister of Finance, and a still larger demonstration in honour of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, that things were as bad as that.

Mr. FIELDING. I cannot agree with my hon. friend when he says that the law has been broken. There has been no law broken.

Mr. MONK. We have changed our tariff law.

Mr. FIELDING. We have not broken any law. A proposal was made to amend the law in precisely the same way as we propose to amend any other law, and when the Senate and Commons of Canada decide to amend the tariff law as proposed, then and not till then will this take effect. Therefore there is no breaking of the law. That is the first point. The second point was, that we should have told the French authorities that we did not impose anything like a surtax. Well, we could not tell the French authorities that, because the statement would be untrue. We do impose surtaxes in Canada, but my hon. friend I suppose forgot that at the moment. Now, the only difference between the position of the two countries is this, that it suits the purpose of the national law of France to establish a surtax under the conditions which have been spoken of ; it does not suit Canada to impose a surtax under those circumstances. But we have reserved the right to impose that surtax if we want to do it. If we think it will do us any good to require those goods to come direct from a French port to Montreal or any other Canadian port, rather than by way of Great Britain, all we have to do is to exercise the right that we have reserved to ourselves in this treaty and impose the surtax. If the surtax is not imposed in Canada, it is not because we have given up the right to impose it, but because, in our judgment, from a Canadian point of view, it has not so far seemed desirable. So I fail to see the point of my hon. friend's observations. If we want to put ourselves on exactly even terms with France, the parliament of Canada has the right to do so.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It seems to me the observations of the Minister of Finance are not to answer to the remarks of my hon friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk). The real point of the argument made by my hon. friend has not been met at all. It is this : All treaties of this kind are designed to effect a certain change in the fiscal laws of both countries, that is the object in view when you begin negotiations for a treaty. Therefore, it is not an answer to my hon. friend for the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to say that the French law is so and so. Our law was of the same character until we made this treaty, and proposed to sanction that treaty by Act of this parliament. Therefore it is merely begging the question to say that the French law is so and so. Our law would equally have prevented this entry if it remained as it was. The whole point of the observations and arguments of my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier is this : The treaty is designed to encourage commerce from Canada to France and from France to Canada ; it is designed to assist France by giving her a certain market for certain of her products in Canada; it is designed to assist Canada by giving her a market for certain of her products in France. The question as to whether these improved markets will be found in either country depends largely on the question of transportation. As the matter has been left by this treaty, France enjoys the privilege and advantage of sending her goods by the numerous steamship lines which ply between Great Britain and Canada, whereas Canada does not enjoy the advantage of sending her goods to France by the same steamship lines. That is the whole matter, as it seems to me, in a nutshell. Under the terms of this treaty, a decided advantage is left on the side of France in that respect.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend is entirely wrong. The government, by the terms of this treaty, have done nothing of the sort, on the contrary the government, by the terms of this treaty, have specifically the right to impose a surtax if we want to impose it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Are you going to impose it ?

Mr. FIELDING. I have no hesitation in saying that that is a question for the future and that is a matter in the judgment of parliament. If we should in the future impose the surtax on goods coming from France by way of Great Britain then the two things would be equal. If we do not impose the surtax on goods coming from Great Britain it is not because we have not the right to do it, it is not because we are under any obligation to the French government not to do it, but it is because we do not think it expedient to do it. But, since the French government say that it is part of their national law which they cannot change, we take the precaution to say that if at any time in the future we want to make it a part of our national law we shall have the right to do so, and that the treaty shall not be a barrier to it. It seems to me very simple.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It is very simple indeed, and the simplicity amounts to this that while France will be enjoying the benefit and advantage of a dozen steamship lines by which she can send her goods to this country we shall get the advantage of only one steamship line—the one contemplated by this Act—and all the consolation that our shippers and producers can enjoy will be the knowledge that this government has the right to impose the surtax which my hon. friend the Minister of Finance admits he has absolutely no intention of imposing at any time in the immediate future. What is the policy of the government in regard to this surtax? Have they any policy at all in regard to it? If they intend to exercise that right in future under what conditions and upon what grounds and for what reasons will they do so? If the Minister of Finance declares, as he does declare, that this country enjoys some advantage by the reservation of that right, under the terms of the treaty, under what conditions do they propose to exercise it? My hon. friend argues that he has secured this right. Then under what conditions does he propose to exercise it? I do not think my hon. friend will desire this question to be put to him by the shippers and producers of Canada.

Mr. FIELDING. I do desire it. I do not think the question has any appropriateness at all. In the first place, may I suggest, that we are not discussing the treaty and if it were such a vital and important point as my hon. friend has suddenly conceived it to be might it not have been his duty to have raised that question when the treaty was before parliament? However, I do not attach any importance to that.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It was raised.

Mr. FIELDING. I say again that if my hon. friend thinks it is the part of wisdom for us to shut out English goods, or French goods coming by way of England, we have the power to do it. My hon. friend asks what is the policy of the government in this matter. If the government had a proposal to make on the subject it would be their duty to expound and proclaim it. As they have no proposal to make they are not called upon to expound or proclaim any thing about it. However, I will answer my hon. friend. He wants to know what the policy is. The policy at the present time is not to impose any surtax. Is that clear? It is a little late for my hon. friend to wake up to the importance of this question. He allows the treaty to go through and now he comes to something in it that he never heard of before. I do not think my hon. friend is so dense on the subject as he appears to be.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I hope I am not as dense as the Minister of Finance seems to be. As a matter of fact the surtax was discussed in the debate of the French treaty. I do not think the hon. gentleman is accurate when he says that it was not discussed. It may not have been gone into exactly on the same line but it certainly was discussed if my recollection is correct. The hon. gentleman has very frankly declared his policy; it is that he has reserved a right, which he regards as sufficient compensation for the certain right that he has given to France, and that having reserved that right he has no policy with regard to its exercise.

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, he has.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is it?

Mr. FIELDING. It is for the present not to exercise it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is what I say.

Mr. FIELDING. No, that is not what the hon. gentleman said.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Well, let us take it at that then. He has reserved the right as compensation for certain advantages which he has given France and it is his policy not to exercise the right which he has so reserved as compensation. I am very much obliged to the hon. gentleman for the statement.

Mr. FIELDING. The hon. gentleman is quite welcome to it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It may be a consoling circumstance to the shippers and producers of this country to know that having given France a certain advantage and having reserved a certain power as compensation for that advantage the policy of the government is not to exercise it.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend is very much alarmed about the shippers of this country but it may surprise him to know that no shipper has raised a question such as that to which he alludes. I do not know of a shipper in this country who will regard it as any advantage that we should impose the surtax and shut off importation from England.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am not talking about shutting off importation from England at all. I am talking about the right which should have been obtained of sending goods to France by the steamship lines which bring goods to this country. We will have a dozen steamship lines bringing goods from France to this country but we will have only one line taking goods to France.

Mr. FIELDING. If we do not want a dozen steamship lines bringing goods to this country this parliament has the right or power to cut off eleven of them at any time that we think it wise to do so.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. But this parliament could not get the other eleven steamship lines to carry the goods of our shippers and producers to France.

Mr. FIELDING. When my hon. friend talks about insisting upon making arrangements which are at variance with the well known laws of France, and which they will not change, the hon. gentleman ought to know that he is talking very absurdly. This question of the surtax is part of the national law of France. If we do not wish to make a treaty under those conditions we need not do so but we must make our treaty with France with a recognition of the fact that they are attached to that principle and that they will not change it.

Mr. MONK. Of course the imposition of a surtax by Canada at the present moment, when we have just concluded a treaty with France, is such a preposterous and ridiculous idea that I quite understand the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) declaring the policy of the government to be that they will not do it. In what position do we find this question ? In the first place I would remind the Minister of Finance that when the treaty was discussed these matters were gone into. The question of shipment through England at that time was discussed and although objection was taken to it I must confess that I never understood that French shippers had such an immense advantage over us. What is the position as I find it now ? We went to France and we insisted on direct shipment. There is no question about that ; it was admitted the other day. We insisted that in order to benefit by the treaty goods should be shipped direct from one country to the other and then, without asking for any assistance from France, we took the responsibility of the payment of $200,000 a year to help that direct shipment without having the advantage of shipment through England or of the lines of steamers that come from England to Canada. The result is that our own shippers are met by a formidable question of monopoly. Without competition we are bound to ship direct to France. One would suppose from what the Minister of Finance says that the surtax law of France forms part of the constitution of the country. It is like our own laws; we changed our law in order to include this treaty and they changed theirs.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No, they changed their constitution, but not their commercial law.

Mr. MONK. They did not change their constitution but they changed their tariff law as against ourselves. The law with respect to the surtax is not in the constitution of the French Republic. That law, like another, simply applies to shipments through European ports and the object of it is to protect France from undue competition from European shipping. Why cannot they allow us to ship through England since we allow them to ship through England, why cannot they modify their law to that extent. On the question of shipments, it seems to irritate the Minister of Finance that the Canadian plenipotentiaries have been outdone, and I am not surprised that Mr. Pichon speaking in the French Chamber seemed to speak like a man who had triumphed over our negotiators.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend must have had in mind the negotiators of the earlier treaty which permitted just the condition which he has attributed to this treaty. Under the old treaty our goods could only be sent direct to France just as under the present treaty. There is no new condition in that. The present treaty as respects shipments of goods to France is precisely the same as the former treaty which my hon. friend admired so much. But now in this treaty we have made it reciprocal. It was one sided under the old condition of affairs and now it is made reciprocal. Under the former treaty we were obliged to send our goods direct and they now can only send their goods direct from France, or by way of England so long as we see fit to allow it. They cannot send via the United States. There the principle of the non-European country comes in. I point out again that as respects the shipment of Canadian goods to France there is substantially no change. The law which has been in force for the last fifteen years is the law which continues in this treaty, but as respects the other side of the question we say that as whereas formerly they would have the right to send goods out here through any country and get the benefit of the treaty, they must now send them either direct or by way of Great Britain, and if we want to put a limitation as respects Great Britain we have the right to do it. My hon. friend will therefore see that the one-sidedness which he speaks of existed in the old treaty but is not to be found in the new one.

Mr. HENDERSON. I do not understand the Minister of Finance when he says that goods from France cannot be shipped through the United States. I am not aware of any such restriction so far as I can read the treaty. They may ship through Hamburg, through London, through Liverpool, or through Hong Kong, or through the United States if they think fit.

Mr. BRODEUR. If goods were shipped from Germany would my hon. friend say they will enjoy the benefit of the intermediate tariff ?

Mr. HENDERSON. I am not discussing that feature of it at all. I am discussing the feature of the treaty which gives to the public of France all the privileges and gives us comparatively none. In that way I think the French negotiators have got the best of the deal. Now, in order to get the advantage of the minimum tariff with France we are called upon to provide direct connection between France and Canada, and on the other hand France is not obliged to export directly to Canada. Should the Minister of Marine and Fisheries go to a steamship company and say: I want to make an arrangement with you to give you a subsidy to carry goods direct from Canada to France in order that they will get the advantage of the minimum tariff, it would be very natural for that steamship company to ask: What return cargo will we get? and the minister would have to answer: We cannot guarantee you any return cargo because we failed to insist that the French republic should send their goods direct to Canada; they may send them via the United States, they may send them by Great Britain or any other route they may think fit. Had we insisted upon direct shipments coming to Canada the same as respects goods going from Canada to France it would have been a very important matter when we come to arrange for the subsidy which we are obliged to arrange for in order to get this direct exportation. To my mind that is where we are going to sustain the greatest loss. I fear we will have to grant a larger subsidy to convey our goods directly to France to get the advantage of the minimum tariff simply because we cannot assure the steamship company that under the treaty they will get any return cargo whatever. However, there is no use discussing it now; it is all signed, sealed and delivered, it was all completed before ever it came before the House. All we can do now is to criticise the acts of the ministers who negotiated the treaty in the hope that if they ever have to negotiate another we may be able to give them some light as to how they can get better advantages for Canada, and not allow the other country to get all the advantages. We do not expect we are going to make the treaty any better now, we are simply pointing out what we regard as oversights on the part of the negotiators and to show that in negotiating this treaty they have not got all the advantages we think ought to reasonably accrue to Canada.

Mr. FIELDING. The desire of my hon. friend (Mr. Henderson) to divert attention from the inequalities of the old treaty——

Mr. HENDERSON. Excuse me, I made no reference to the old treaty whatever. I see no advantage in discussing the merits or demerits of the old treaty because it is a thing of the past and we are repealing it. If the negotiators of the old treaty made a mistake the present negotiators should have taken a lesson from it and made a much better treaty. For them to say they have got something just as good as we had before, is no argument whatever.

Mr. FIELDING. The hon. gentleman is a veteran member of the House and he was here no doubt in 1893 and 1894 and gave enthusiastic support to that old treaty. I do not see why he should now have a disposition to repudiate it and say he is not responsible. So far as direct shipments of Canadian products to France go the provisions in this treaty are just the same as they were in the old treaty. The only change that is made is that that which was one sided before is now reciprocal and that the French products which formerly could come to Canada through any channel in the wide world must now come either direct from France to Canada or by way of Great Britain. We are willing to have them come by way of Great Britain and if hon. gentlemen opposite think that is a mistake we disagree with them. But if at any future time, for any reason, the parliament of Canada should desire to change its policy in that respect, then we take the precaution that the treaty should not stand in the way, and that we should put in the reservation that if at any time in the future it might be deemed expedient to impose the surtax on the goods coming by way of Great Britain we have the right to do so and the treaty will not stand in the way. The only difference between the old treaty and the new on the question of direct shipment is that while the provision in the old treaty was unequal and one-sided and against Canada, it is now reciprocal and as fair to Canada as it is to France. But there is another and broader question involved in this with regard to these negotiators having been over-reached. The least we could ask from my hon. friends is that they should have some regard for the very able negotiators who conducted the previous treaty, and what do we find they provide ? They provided that a certain limited list of Canadian products—some of them important, some of them trifling—should be entitled to the French market. Then they provided that as respects that limited list—canned meats, condensed foods, eels, fish, lobsters, &c.—if as respects the items on that limited list France should at any time grant concessions to other countries, like concessions should come to Canada. That is the application of the favoured nation principle, but it is applied only to the limited list of articles mentioned in the treaty. France gives Canada the right to send these articles in, and if it should at any time grant to any other country the right to send these articles in on better terms, Canada shall likewise have that right. So far so good. Then turn to the other side. You talk of one-sided agreements and of the negotiators being over-reached. Read the article of the old treaty :

Any commercial advantage granted by Canada to any third power, especially in tariff matters, shall be enjoyed fully by France, Algeria and the French colonies.

Canada was only to get favoured-nation treatment on a small list of articles ; but when you turn to the other side, you find that Canada was bound to give France favoured-nation treatment in any commercial or tariff matter whatever. Not making the conditions reciprocal by limiting them to a number of articles in each case, you were placed in this position, that you were assured of favoured-nation treatment in France only on a small list of articles, while you agreed to give favoured-nation treatment to France, not on a limited list, but on every article that entered into the commerce of Canada. By the new treaty, Canada gives to France favoured-nation treatment as respects a list of articles mentioned in the treaty, and France gives to Canada favoured-nation treatment as respects a list of articles mentioned in the treaty. The treatment is reciprocal ; the one-sided condition which existed before is swept away.

Mr. HENDERSON. I had expected that the hon. Minister of Finance would have replied to my criticism with regard to our inability to secure the best treatment from a steamship company to convey our goods to France, from the fact that we were not in a position to offer any return cargo because of the benefits obtained from this treaty. I thought that was what the hon. minister would reply to ; but instead of that he has followed the old custom of beating around the bush and getting a thousand miles away from the point in order to draw a red herring across the trail. I congratulate the hon. gentleman upon his adroitness ; perhaps he has no equal in this House in meeting an argument in that way. But I would like to know whether the Minister of Marine, when he negotiates with a steamship company, will be likely to obtain accommodation on as favourable terms as he would have done had the treaty compelled France to send her goods to Canada in the same direct way as we are compelled to send our goods to France. That was where I thought the negotiators were somewhat lame. I repeat that if they saw errors in the old treaty, if after some thirteen or fourteen years they found some things that had been overlooked, they would have been perfectly right in taking advantage of that, and we might reasonably have expected that a much better treaty would be negotiated now. Perhaps France, having had a small taste of the advantage of reciprocity with Canada, would have been willing to concede something that she did not concede before. I notice that the Minister of Finance was very particular to say that for the present there was no intention of Canada imposing a surtax, although Canada had reserved the right to do so. Why did he use the words for the present ? Was it because he had in contemplation the imposition of a surtax at some time in the future ? I am not going to say that he would make a mistake, because I do not feel that I would be justified in making such a suggestion to him with his large experience. On our goods going into France we get the advantage of the minimum tariff, but we only get it on a restricted list, and to get it we have to send our goods direct and pay a large sum of money to get them in ; or, if we send them via England, we can only do so under special restrictions. The minister may have it in contemplation to say to the French people, we will impose a surtax unless you remove these restrictions or unless you remove your surtaxe d'entrepôt.

Mr. SPROULE. It seems to me that the treaty stands in this position. We want some advantages in the French market ; the French people want some advantages in our market. They say to us, you can have the same advantage in our market that we have in yours, providing you pay a subsidy to get your goods sent to France ; but there is no obligation resting on us to pay any consideration in order to get the advantages of your market. The arrangement seems to be jug-handled in its nature all through. France has the single advantage of a monopoly. We have to pay for the advantage of getting into their market, whereas they do not pay for the advantage of getting into ours.

Mr. MONK. Is it not possible that the French, in shipping to Canada, having the advantage of ten or twelve competing lines to England, which we have not, may obtain such reductions of freight on this direct line through that competition, and may recoup themselves completely for the sacrifices they have made by the tariff concessions in the treaty itself.

Mr. BRODEUR. If France has several lines of steamships, it is because the French government spend a good deal more money than we do in the way of subsidies. It has been suggested several times that this is going to entail an expenditure of $200,000 and that besides we are going to lose $400,000 of revenue. I thought this $400,000 was going to be a reduction of taxation to the people of this country, so that instead of losing, we are going to gain $200,000.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If that is a fair way of looking at it, the minister could secure the country still greater advantages by removing the taxes from all goods entering into Canada from France; that would be the logical conclusion of his argument. The observations made by gentlemen on this side of the House point strongly to the necessity of having some proper control of the rates. The rates on goods coming from France to Canada will be regulated by the competition of a dozen steamship lines. It is not correct, as the minister says, that this treaty provides that goods shipped from France via Great Britain shall come to Canada without any surtax. The provision is simply that goods may come via any country enjoying the intermediate or preferential tariff; there is no direct reference to Great Britain. If Italy, or Germany, or Norway or any other country were granted the advantages of the intermediate tariff, the same advantages in the way of shipment would accrue to that country as accrue at the present time to Great Britain. It is not strictly accurate therefore to put it in the way the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) did just now. But if you have a dozen lines from the British Isles to Canada competing with the one direct line now subsidized, that must affect the freight rates from France to Canada. If on the other hand you have only one direct line from Canada to France which can carry goods enjoying the benefit of the minimum tariff, you will not have that competition, and the result might be that shippers from France to Canada would enjoy lower freight rates on this line than shippers from Canada to France. That seems to emphasize the necessity for some control over the rates, and I trust the Minister of Marine and Fisheries or the Minister of Trade and Commerce, or whoever has to do with this contract, will bear that in mind.

Mr. BRODEUR. There is no doubt very good reason why we should try and get some control over the rates and it is the intention of the government to ask for it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The government are not in the same position with regard to this as the Minister of Finance says they were in with regard to France. They have the control of the situation pretty well in their own hands because they are not obliged to enter into any contract without reserving that right. There is no provision in this Bill for bringing the contract down and placing it on the table. There should be a provision that all these subsidy contracts should be laid on the table immediately after the opening of the following session.

Mr. BRODEUR. The contracts are always brought down in the departmental report. At page 113 of the report of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, in the supplement, there is the contract with the Allan Line concerning this same service.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I accept the statement that these contracts have been brought down in recent years, but I do not think that practice has always prevailed, because I have had to move for them.

Mr. BRODEUR. My hon. friend is correct. It is only in the last three or four years that such contracts are brought down.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If we have the minister's assurance that that is to be the invariable practice of the department in future, I would not insist on our making a general provision to that effect.

Mr. BRODEUR. I am informed by the Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce that it is the intention to give synopses of contracts in all the departmental reports as is done in the last report.

Mr. MONK. To give effect to this treaty, it would be absolutely necessary for us to have adequate commercial representation in France. We are competing with other nations, particularly the Americans, and the Americans have in France a consular staff which gives them an immense advantage over us. Our representation in that respect is not at all what it should be, but I shall defer what I have to say on that subject until we come to consider the remuneration of our agents in France at present.

Mr. FIELDING. We have at present in France a commercial agent, who is a most excellent and able officer. If this treaty realizes the hopes many of us have for an extension of trade, it would be probably desirable that our agency should be strengthened. Mr. Poindron, I have found very capable and energetic. He is our only commercial agent. We have gentlemen representing us connected with other branches.

Mr. MONK. I do not wish to refer to the gentleman we have had as our representative in France many years because I do not suppose he is much concerned with our commercial relations, nor have I any special complaint against Mr. Poindron, who is a diligent man. But I think the time has arrived when we should have Canadians, men who had a commercial training in this country, who have much experience, and would be better able to represent us than men like Mr. Poindron, who have not been brought up in this country. Mr. Poindron is a very intelligent man and no doubt has brought a good deal of diligence to bear on his work, but he is a Frenchman, who has only sojourned in our country a little time, and even with the best natural ability it is impossible that he should be able to advance our interests as much as if he had been brought up and trained in this country. Besides alone he is not able, with all the skill one is prepared to give him, to do the work that has to be done there. Take our American neighbours, I suppose they have in France at least 200 consuls, and their consular service is pretty effective all over the world. Those men are busy year in and year out pushing American commerce. We have just concluded a treaty from which we may expect some results. We are going to subsidize a direct line to France, we shall have to compete with other nations, and we shall be handicapped in having only one agent and he a native born Frenchman, who probably has other occupations.

Mr. BRODEUR. No, he devotes all his time to this.

Mr. MONK. I do not think that the struggle, under those circumstances, is at all equal. We shall have to organize something better if we expect to obtain satisfactory results. However I do not want to detain the committee longer just now on this point as a better opportunity will occur later.

Mr. FIELDING. I do not dissent from the idea that, after concluding a treaty, we should make some vigorous efforts to develop trade, and I rather expect that such effort will be necessary. But as regards employing Canadians to do business for us in France, while one's first thought is to approve of that suggestion and give preference to our own, on the other hand if a Canadian goes to a strange country, without knowledge of it, he may find himself at a disadvantage. While as a rule we shall find it advantageous to appoint Canadians, I should imagine that the fact that Mr. Poindron combines a certain amount of knowledge of Canada, having resided here some years, with his knowledge of France as a native of that country and his consequent familiarity with French affairs and conditions, would indicate that he is rather better fitted to do our work in that country than one whose chief quality is that he is a native Canadian. I think that if we could find the happy combination of a native Canadian, who, at the same time, has a knowledge of the country in which he is to work, that would be best. However, I accept in the spirit in which it is given the suggestion made that we need a vigorous and energetic representation in France, and that, so far as the trade of the world is concerned, we should have in view the appointment of vigorous agents wherever trade can be obtained.

Mr. BERGERON. What is Mr. Poindron's salary ?

Mr. BRODEUR. It is $3,000.

Mr. SPROULE. The man who understands the lines to be introduced has an advantage over a native of the country into which they are to be introduced. Look at the example of the manufacturing concerns of this country ; the Massey-Harris concern, for instance, sends to Europe a native Canadian as its representative. This is a man familiar with the goods and the conditions of manufacture. He establishes agencies in France, Germany, Russia and other countries without difficulty. The Noxon firm does the same. They sent a young man from Canada who established agencies in France, Germany, England, Scotland and many other countries, and was regarded as a much more suitable agent for this purpose than any native of the countries to which he went. If individual manufacturers can make a success of this policy, why could not the country do the same ?

Mr. BRODEUR. As to Mr. Poindron, he was appointed when he was in Canada. He resided in Canada for some years and was engaged in the development of trade between Canada and France. I think he endeavoured to have a line of steamships put on the route between Canada and France. I do not know whether he was successful or not—I think probably he was not successful, for, as I explained the other night, the establishment of this steamship line at that time was a very difficult proposition. In the course of his work he became well acquainted with the requirements of trade in France and the opportunities there for the sale of Canadian goods. There was no man in Canada, probably, who knew better the trade between the two countries than did Mr. Poindron when he was appointed. I do not know whether he became a British subject or not, but I know he lived in Canada for several years and was appointed to his present position from here. I think it not unlikely that he is and always has been a French citizen.

Mr. SPROULE. The knowledge of the trade acquired by one resident here would be greater——

Mr. FIELDING. Mr. Poindron was a resident of Canada for several years.

Mr. SPROULE. —and more valuable in the development of trade in the various lines of manufacture than that of one familiar with the conditions of commerce in the country in which he is to work. If he has a knowledge of trade conditions in th's country, it will be much more easy for him to learn the trade conditions in the country with which we are to trade than it would be for one from that country, by residing in Canada for a time, to learn the conditions here.

Mr. BERGERON. I know Mr. Poindron very well, and, if we are to choose a man who is not a Canadian, I do not think the government could have a better man in this position. He is a very industrious man, and, as he resided in Canada for some years, he acquired, I believe, as good a knowledge of Canadian affairs as any native Canadians possess. He acted for the government of France in many parts of the world before coming to Canada. I believe he was in China, in Japan, and in many European countries. I am not sure that, with the salary afforded him, Mr. Poindron could be expected to do the work. I do not suppose that he stays in his office. I would like to believe that he goes about, finds out where there are opportunities for Canadian trade and seeks to establish that trade. Unless his expenses are paid, or unless he has an account for contingencies, I do not see how he could do much good. You could not find a better man, but he must have opportunities to do his work properly. Otherwise, no matter who may be our agent the money is simply thrown away. I suppose the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) and the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) saw Mr. Poindron when in Paris. I take it that Mr. Poindron has an office and a staff, or at least has help so that, in case he finds it in the interest of the service to travel, he may be free to do so. If due opportunity is not given to our agent to do the work for which he is appointed, I would be opposed to the whole thing.

Mr. BRODEUR. The salary as I have stated, is $3,000 a year, which is a fair salary considering the expense of living in that country. Mr. Poindron's office is provided with an office by the Department of Trade and Commerce, and he has a clerk who is paid by the department. For travelling expenses, he is allowed $50 a month. On the whole, I think the salary paid is a very good one.

Mr. MONK. As the newspapers, particularly in Montreal, and more particularly the organ of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur), are liable to make erroneous reports, I would not like to say anything that could be interpreted as against Mr. Poindron, for I know him and know that he is a competent man. But look at the difference. The American government has in every important city in France, one of its own men, a wideawake, active man of business, as consul, who pushes for business for all he is worth. There are very few instances in the countries of Europe—and I travelled there a good deal in former years—in which the American government is represented by one who is not an American citizen. On the contrary Canada has in France one man, Mr. Poindron. On principle, as he is our only agent, I think there is grave reason why we should have a better representative in a man who is of our own nation and our own allegiance, a man who, in case of any doubt, would naturally incline to take the part of his own country rather than that of the country to which he is a native and to which he owes allegiance. What is our whole representation in France? We have Mr. Poindron. Then we have as our immigration agent Mr. Wiallard, at a small salary. And, latterly, we have sent a young lawyer, Mr. Geoffrion, a very estimable young man, who I suppose, also represents the Immigration Department. And this is all we have. And this at the conclusion of a treaty from which it is said we are to expect great results, and when we are to have a direct line of steamships which is to cost us a great deal of money. This development of trade is a question which deserves our best attention, and, when we come to look into it at a later day, I hope to have some observations to make.

Mr. FIELDING. I may say to my hon. friend that I sympathize heartily with his views with regard to the position of our representatives in Paris. What struck me, and my colleague also, when we were over there was that our offices, while well located perhaps for some purposes, were not as well placed as they might be, and we devoted some time in trying to obtain a building on one of the more public avenues, even though it should cost considerable money. We had negotiations with a view of taking a lease of a building in a commanding position where the offices of our French representatives might be consolidated. At present Mr. Fabre and those associated with him are in one part of the city, while Mr. Poindron's office is in the commercial centre, near the Bourse. We thought it desirable to consolidate these offices and we wished to get a more prominent place, though it should cost us a little more money. We thought we had satisfactory negotiations to that end on one of the grand boulevards. Unfortunately, a rival concern cropped up, and notwithstanding all we were disposed to do, they outbid us and we lost the opportunity. We afterwards instructed our representatives to try and look for a more satisfactory site, but up to the present moment we have not been successful. I think that Paris is one of the great show places of the world, and if the offices of Canada were located in a more central place it would probably bring us an indirect return and would be well worth while spending a little more money. I agree that we need to make a more vigorous and energetic campaign for Canada in France.

Mr. BERGERON. Since my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) has mentioned the name of Mr. Geoffrion, what is Mr. Geoffrion's occupation in Paris, what is his salary, and what department does he belong to?

Mr. OLIVER. He belongs to the Interior Department; I cannot say at the moment what his salary is.

Mr. BRODEUR. I think it is $2,000.

Mr. BERGERON. Will my hon. friend find out and let us know later on? My information is that he is getting $4,000 a year.

Mr. OLIVER. His salary cannot be more than $2,500, if it is that.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

IMMIGRATION ACT—AMENDMENT.

Bill (No. 135) to amend the Immigration Act—Mr. Oliver—read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. We have not had much explanation with regard to the object of this proposed legislation. Perhaps the minister will take this opportunity of giving it.

Mr. OLIVER. The purpose of this amendment is to make further provision in regard to the exclusion of immigrants. The Act as it stands contains provisions for the protection of immigrants and also for the exclusion and deportation of immigrants. An immigrant arriving at a Canadian port, if considered to be undesirable according to the terms of our immigration law, may be excluded at that port, and if excluded under the terms of the law the transportation company which brought him to the Canadian port must take him back to the port from which he sailed, and the country in which that port is situated must receive him back, because until he has officially landed in Canada he is still to all intents and purposes a resident of the country from which he sails. If an undesirable comes into Canada and it becomes necessary or desirable to deport him, we call upon the steamship company which brought him to Canada to take him back to the port from which he sailed. But if he is not a citizen of the country in which that port is situated, that country does not need to receive him back, and it is not possible for the steamship company to carry out our order of deportation. We were, therefore, in the position of having possibly to deal with numbers of people whom it might be desirable to deport, and yet because of their not having sailed from the country of their citizenship, or not having come from that country by a ticket upon which we could hold the transportation company responsible to take them back to the country of their citizenship, we were not in a position to deport them. In order then that the intent of the immigration law might be carried out and made effective in regard to the exclusion of undesirables, it was provided by a regulation passed on the 8th of January last that immigrants arriving from a country other than that of their citizenship might under certain circumstances be excluded. This regulation was put in force and was applied to the arrivals of Asiatics on the Pacific coast, in one instance, to Japanese coming from the Sandwich islands, and in another case to Hindus coming from Hong Kong. There is a large Japanese population in the Sandwich islands who, for industrial or commercial reasons, are looking for another field of settlement. These people, having left the country of their citizenship, having become residents of the Sandwich islands, which are dependencies of the United States, and then having decided to come to Canada, were not under the jurisdiction of the country of their citizenship. If we had reason to order their deportation and to order the steamship company to take them back into the Sandwich islands, the United States government could refuse to receive them. They were then in the position in which they were when they came from the Sandwich islands and we practically hand to let them land. The same condition prevailed in regard to the movement from Hong Kong. Large numbers of Hindus who have left India and settled in Hong Kong, for one reason or another desired to settle in Canada. The question, in fact, came up in the first place, because of our finding it desirable to deport a number of these Hindus who had landed in Vancouver. They were subject to the deportation clauses of the Immigration Act, but when we undertook to deport them the government of Hong Kong refused to receive them because they were not citizens of that dependency and they were simply left on our hands. The regulation of the 8th of January, passed to meet that case, was put in force and was applied to the arrivals from the Sandwich islands and from other regions in the Pacific. It was in March that the large arrivals of Hindus from Hong Kong took place. The regulation was applied to these people, legal proceedings were taken by the transportation company to set aside the regulation, and it was set aside by the courts of British Columbia as not having been in proper form. The point taken was that while the Governor in Council had the right to exclude, he had not the right to delegate that power of exclusion to the Minister of the Interior as had been done by the terms of the regulation; therefore, the regulation was declared to be of non-effect and these people had to be permitted to land. We passed the regulation again so as to conform with the decision of the court and it is now in force, but we believe that this question is of such importance in the administration of our immigration law that it should be embodied in the law itself, and should not be dependent upon a regulation. Therefore the section which is contained in the Bill was drafted and is brought before the House for its approval. I might say that since the Bill was drafted some exception has been taken to the use of a certain word in the latter part of the clause and it has been thought advisable to redraft the latter part of the section. I have an amendment here which I desire to propose and which has been approved by the Department of Justice. I would move :

That all the words after the word 'who' in the fourth line be struck out and that the following be inserted in lieu thereof: 'have come to Canada otherwise than by continuous journey from the country of which they are natives or citizens and upon through tickets purchased in such country.'

Mr. HAGGART. The object of the Bill is to extradite Hindus whose case is not otherwise covered by the regulations from British Columbia to the place of their origin. These Hindus, as the hon. gentleman has mentioned, are British subjects coming from either India or Hong Kong. Have we the power to extradite them for any other reason than for quarantine purposes ?

Mr. OLIVER. This provision is for the purpose of saving us the trouble of extraditing them. It is to enable us to exclude them under certain conditions.

Mr. HAGGART. Can you for any other purpose than that of quarantine exclude a British subject from coming into the country ?

Mr. OLIVER. That is a matter that I am hardly in a position to answer, but inasmuch as the immigration law has been on the statute-book since the session of 1906 and has been applied to a very large number of cases not only in excluding, or deporting, or extraditing, which is the word that my hon. friend uses, and has never been called in question, I presume that we have the necessary authority.

Mr. HAGGART. I doubt it.

Mr. OLIVER. My hon. friend suggested that this provision was made especially to apply to Hindus. That is incorrect. It applies to all people. I instanced the case of the Hindus as being one in which it was necessary and desirable to apply the provision.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not quite understand the necessity of the legislation. The law as it stands at present is as follows :

The Governor in Council may, by proclamation or order, whenever he considers it necessary or expedient, prohibit the landing in Canada of any specified class of immigrants of which due notice shall be given to the transportation company.

The Governor in council, by order made on the 8th of January, 1908, undertook to delegate to the Minister of the Interior the power which was conferred on the Governor in Council by the statute which I have just read. The operative words of the order in council are as follows :

The Governor in Council is pleased to order, and it is hereby ordered, that whenever, in the opinion of the Minister of the Interior, the condition of the labour market in Canada is such as to make the application of section 20 of the Immigration Act desirable, or, whenever, in the opinion of the Minister of the Interior, other conditions exist which, in a special degree render necessary the application of sections 26 to 30 inclusive of the said Act, immigrants may be prohibited from landing or coming into Canada unless they come from the country of their birth or citizenship by a continuous journey and on through tickets purchased before leaving the country of their birth or citizenship.

Then the matter came before Mr. Justice Clements, of British Columbia, upon proceedings in habeas corpus, and Mr. Justice Clements did not set aside the order in council —of course he could not do that—but he declared that the order in council was not valid inasmuch as the Privy Council had seen fit to delegate to the Minister of the Interior a power which could only be exercised by the Governor in Council himself. And so the men, as I understand, were released on habeas corpus. I do not observe, nor have I heard from the Minister of the Interior that there has been any difficulty of such a character as would render this legislation necessary. If it is necessary well and good, but I have not so far been able to ascertain what the necessity is. The necessity could only arise if the words, 'any specified class of immigrants,' do not include the conditions which are provided for in this Bill. No such argument has been made so far as I am aware, and no such decision has been given, and therefore I am not yet able to understand the necessity for the legislation. In other words there would have been no difficulty at all in the court, so far as we know, if the Governor in Council had made the order in the proper way instead of delegating the subject to the Minister of the Interior. At the present time the Governor in Council has passed the necessary order and the matter seems to be provided for in that way. Why is it then that we are asked to pass this legislation ? I am not speaking by way of criticism, but entirely for the purpose of information.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The reason for the legislation as I understand it is this : under the Immigration Act we have power to exclude and to deport certain immigrants who do not come up to a certain standard either physically, intellectually or morally, and whom we deem to be unworthy of Canadian citizenship. We have power to deport Hindus or any one else if we are of opinion that they come within any of the classes I have referred to. But suppose a Hindu who was physically or morally unfit came from Hong Kong but not from India, we could exclude him or deport him. We can send him back on the steamship which has brought him and the steamer would take him to Hong Kong but the Hong Kong authorities would say: That man does not belong to us and we will not receive him. It is to obviate this that the law makes it another cause of exclusion if the man does not come direct from the land of his origin on a through ticket. We are creating another cause of exclusion in addition to the causes I have just mentioned, and this being made a cause of exclusion the transportation company understands it and they bring such a man here at their own risk and we will have the power to compel the company to take that man back.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not see how it will assist the situation if that is the real object of the statute.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That is the object as I understand it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Suppose an idiot or a person afflicted with a loathsome disease is taken on board at Hong Kong, you can now refuse him permission to land without this proposed statute. This Bill merely provides another reason on account of which he cannot land and you send him back in this case just as you did before. What is the advantage of it ?

Mr. OLIVER. As long as we are aware that he is subject to the exclusion conditions of the Act at the port of landing we can exclude him as matters stand at present and there is no difficulty. But suppose we are not aware of this and we allow him to actually land and afterwards we find he is physically or mentally tainted, or financially unable to provide for his own support, any of these are causes for exclusion or deportation. For instance, a perfectly healthy Hindu leaves India, he comes to Hong Kong, finds matters do not suit him there, and he decides to come to British Columbia. He lands in British Columbia a perfectly healthy man mentally and physically, and we permit him to land but conditions are such that he has no money, that he cannot get any work, and he becomes a public charge; he is subject to deportation under the terms of our immigration law, but if we undertake to deport him, under the terms of the law we arrest him, we compel the steamship company to take him on board, the steamship company takes him to Hong Kong and the Hong Kong government says: He does not belong to us, we will not admit him to our country and we will not allow him to land in Hong Kong. The only recourse in that case is that he must be brought back to Canada and allowed to remain in Canada. Under such circumstances we cannot enforce our own law in regard to our own country.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Does the minister mean that this statute is intended to apply to persons who have landed in Canada ?

Mr. OLIVER. People who will land in Canada after the statute is passed.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is not the reading of the statute at all. The reading of the statute is this: The Governor in Council may prohibit the landing in Canada. It does not deal with persons who having landed in Canada are found to be subject to such disabilities as would make it advisable to deport him. This statute is intended to prohibit certain persons from landing in Canada. I am sincerely trying to find out what good purpose the statute is intended to serve.

Mr. OLIVER. I am trying to explain it. I try to tell my hon. friend how the case arises which makes it necessary for us to adopt the principle contained in the Bill. I have shown that under the terms of our Act as it stands to-day we are not able to protect ourselves as it was intended that we should protect ourselves. If this Act is passed, the man who goes on board a ship at Hong Kong, with a ticket bought at Hong Kong, if he is not a citizen of Hong Kong, can be prevented from landing in Canada.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The man who goes on board the steamer at Hong Kong may belong to one of two classes—he may be a perfectly good citizen, unexceptionable in every way, or he may be a person who is impecunious or idiotic or suffering from some disease on account of which we should exclude him. Is this intended to apply to one or to both of these classes. If only to one, to which one?

Mr. OLIVER. It is intended to apply to all classes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Why is it intended to apply to a man who would be a perfectly good citizen of this country?

Mr. OLIVER. Because we want to be in a position to protect ourselves against the man who will not be a good citizen of the country—not necessarily because of any inherent defect in himself, but because of conditions which may exist, and which do not admit of his being able to make a living in Canada.

Mr. SPROULE. Within the last couple of weeks a German went on board a vessel at New Zealand and went to Vancouver; but he was not allowed to land because he did not come from the country of his origin. There was no contention that he was not a good citizen; but he was excluded, and was forced to go to the United States.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. Is it the intention by this Bill to exclude from this country every person who does not come from the country of his origin? If so, it seems to me that you will get into a lot of trouble. Another thing: I notice that by the regulation people coming from Europe must come by way of Portland or direct to a Canadian port.

Mr. OLIVER. No, they may come through any port. Cases of hardship have arisen under the application of the regulation, because our officers have not thoroughly understood how we desired to apply it. But there is no difficulty whatever in regard to people who are coming to Canada through another country or by various lines of conveyance. It is quite customary for a man, say at a point in Central Europe, to buy a through ticket from that point to Canada. It matters not through how many countries he passes, we receive him. As he has a ticket from the country of his citizenship, we can compel the transportation company to take him back there, which we could not do if he had not that ticket.

Mr. SPROULE. The man I refer to was not a naturalized citizen of New Zealand, but he was a German who had lived there for several years. He was excluded because he did not come direct from Germany.

Mr. MACPHERSON. I think the object of the amendment brought in by the minister is quite plain.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. To exclude Hindus, that is all.

Mr. MACPHERSON. Yes, to exclude Hindus and all kinds of Asiatics, and all kinds of undesirable people.

Mr. SPROULE. Will it not exclude desirable classes as well?

Mr. MACPHERSON. Possibly if we gain in one respect we may suffer in another. In the case the hon. gentleman speaks of, I fancy the good sense of the immigration officer would allow the German to come in.

Mr. FOWLER. That is giving a good deal of latitude to the immigration officer.

Mr. MACPHERSON. If I or my hon. friend were an immigration officer, we would use the good sense the Lord has given us. We thought we had the positive power to exclude Orientals coming from India via Hong Kong.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. What about the Japanese?

Mr. MACPHERSON. The arrangement entered into between Japan and Canada is working very well; we have no more Japanese coming into the country. That matter has been satisfactorily arranged—perhaps not as radically as some of us would have liked to have had it arranged, but it is working well. Just as the Japanese were making Hawaii a bridge, so the Hindus have been making Hong Kong a bridge. There are a considerable number of Hindu policemen in Hong Kong; and these men, while a good looking lot, are the most objectionable class of people we can get into our country. A good many of them while in Hong Kong lived on prostitution. The prostitutes of Hong Kong, the greatest shipping port in the world, stood in with them, and divided up their profits with them.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. There must have been a large body of police.

Mr. MACPHERSON. Yes.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. How many thousands?

Mr. MACPHERSON. I speak of the first people who came. They are a most objectionable and undesirable class. The Hindus themselves do not want them. This clause will absolutely prohibit this class of people coming to our shores. It is purely and simply a restriction on Asiatics. The Japanese cannot come in by the Sandwich Islands or by Mexico. There has been a good deal of talk about these men having been British soldiers and wearing medals on their breasts. The men who managed to get over the order in council and furnish them with tickets purporting that they came from Calcutta, would be able to get silver medals for them without any trouble. I know very well that nine-tenths of them never saw any active service in India for the British empire. I think this clause is absolutely necessary if we are going to succeed in keeping these very undesirable people out of the country.

Mr. FOWLER. I would like to ask the minister if it is not a fact that a great deal of so-called American immigration consists of men from Scandinavia who remain a few years in the United States and then cross over to Canada?

Mr. WILBERT McINTYRE. They became citizens.

Mr. FOWLER. Not necessarily, unless they took the oath of allegiance.

Mr. WILBERT McINTYRE. They generally do.

Mr. FOWLER. I venture to say that a good many do not.

Mr. MONK. To return to the point raised a few moments ago by the leader of the opposition, what is the object of this legislation? Is it to add to the cases of exclusion those who come from somewhere else than their native country? At present we have a certain list of cases of exclusion and probably this Bill is intended to add to them. The Bill provides that:

30. The Governor in Council may, by proclamation or order, whenever he considers it necessary or expedient, prohibit the landing in Canada of any specified class of immigrants or of any immigrants who being natives or citizens of any specified country have come to Canada otherwise than by a continuous journey from that country on through tickets purchased there.

As I understand the present law, the fact that an English immigrant comes here from France is not a cause of exclusion, but it may be a cause for exclusion under this Bill. All that is required is a proclamation of the Governor in Council.

Mr. GALLIHER. As I understand it the difference is this: Take a Hindu coming from Hong Kong to Vancouver, he may be Vancouver he will be allowed to land at all. The steamship company will have to take him back. But if he is a desirable immigrant and comes direct from India to Vancouver he will be allowed to land though he may be deported later should he become one of the class subject to deportation. Then you can compel the steamship company to take him back to his own country and his own country is bound to receive him. You are consequently not in the position you would be in when deporting the same man who came from Hong Kong to Vancouver, because Hong Kong not being his native country, it would not be bound to take him back.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. We may be going much further than the government intend. I am not going to discuss the question of Hindus or Japanese for the moment. It will be possible under this to have Hindus, British subjects from Hong Kong, deported or not permitted to land, and Japanese direct from Japan permitted to land. That is what it means if it means anything. It may be most desirable, and no doubt it is, to limit the immigration of certain classes, but it is necessary to see that we are not going too far. One hon. gentleman suggests that the enforcement or non-enforcement shall be left to the discretion of the immigration officers. I do not think that is very desirable.

Mr. MACPHERSON. I do not think I suggested that.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I accept my hon. friend's assurance in that regard. But if such a suggestion has been made, I would be prepared to repudiate it. You cannot make laws and then invite your own officers to wilfully and knowingly break them. If this law is to be enacted, we must see that it is enforced in every part of Canada. What then will be the result? I agree with my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) that it distinctly proposes to add an additional cause of exclusion at the discretion of the Governor in Council. That is to say, any citizen coming from any country other than that of his birth or citizenship shall not be allowed to land, although he may be in every other possible respect a most desirable citizen. You are aiming at a certain object, but you are accomplishing a good deal more than you aim at. Suppose Scandinavians go into the United States and do not become American citizens, and then propose to come and settle in this country, they are excluded by this order in council apparently because they do not come direct from the land of their birth or citizenship. Suppose these men have lived in the British isles a number of years and then come to Canada, they cannot be permitted to land under this order in council for the same reason. Germans coming here from the British islands or the United States would be exactly in the same category. Therefore, you are proposing a very drastic, comprehensive and far reaching amendment to our immigration laws. Your amendment may accomplish a certain purpose which you have in mind, but it may also accomplish some others you have not in mind.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. This is evidently intended to get at the transportation companies.

An hon. MEMBER. No.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Take the case of a Hindu who comes here from Hong Kong, you may send him back on the steamer and he will not be allowed to land at Hong Kong. I do not think this will help the matter. Why does the hon. minister not bring in a law covering that aspect of the case? This will exclude any man coming from any country other than that of his birth or adoption. Personally I would much prefer a Hindu who has served the empire in the armies of Great Britain to a galvanized Yankee who has been an anarchist in his own land and has come to the United States where he has done his best to disrupt that republic, and who, if he crosses over to Canada, seeks in many instances to disrupt the established laws of the Dominion. I must say that a Hindu who has served in the British army and has had the discipline of a soldier is much more likely to make a good citizen of Canada, much more likely to upbuild the welfare, morality and dignity of this country than many of the class of animals who are imported——

An hon. MEMBER. Order.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. No 'order' about it. Many of these are not worthy the name of human beings. But these people are admitted, while soldiers who have served in the British army are excluded, not allowed to land and turned adrift. I move in amendment the following:—

Always excepting such immigrants as have served in the regular or auxiliary forces of the empire under the British flag.

Mr. HAGGART. I have not yet had a clear explanation from the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) or the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) as to the effect of this proposed law. I may be wrong in my law, but I stated—and I have seen no reason yet to change my opinion—that this parliament cannot deprive a British subject of his allegiance or of his right to land in this country except for certain causes. He must not be excluded under the quarantine laws—that is he must not be diseased, idiotic or subject to lunacy: Nor must he be a criminal. Nor must he be an indigent person—our right in this case is similar to that exercised under the poor law of Great Britain of removing people from one parish to another. As I understand the Prime Minister, the law applies only to these classes, but, according to the Minister of the Interior, it goes further. Under the principle stated by the Minister of the Interior, this parliament could exclude any one. It is proposed that the Hindus shall be excluded, not because they are Hindus; their crime consists in not coming direct from Hindustan, but in landing in a British colony on the way. I may have old-fashioned ideas as to the power of this country to deprive a British subject of his allegiance or of his rights as a British subject. I do not think that this parliament can do either.

Mr. MACPHERSON. How about Australia?

Mr. HAGGART. I do not care about Australia. I do not know about the Australian law, though it may be such as the hon. gentleman (Mr. Macpherson) says. But my ground is that we cannot deprive a British subject of his allegiance or of his right as a British subject, provided he is not a criminal, is not physically or mentally diseased and has money to pay his way.

Mr. MACPHERSON. Does not the hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) think that the Canadian parliament is paramount in these matters? Has it not the highest possible powers within its jurisdiction?

Mr. HAGGART. That is the very ground I take—that the power is not vested in this parliament, but that this is one of the reserve powers under the British North America Act. I may be wrong in my law. But, suppose we had the power that is claimed, is it judicious or right for us to legislate against British subjects in any other part of the empire? Is it in the interest of this country or of the empire as a whole? While it is right that we should protect ourselves against immigration that is detrimental to the interests of the country, when a man is a good subject of the empire in one part of it, he has the right to all the privileges as a subject of the empire on landing in this country.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I think on reflection, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart)) will agree with me that he has carried a principle which is very good in itself a little too far. He says that we have not the power to close the door of this country against a British subject except for purposes of quarantine. Now we have as much power over British subjects coming from across the sea as we have over those in this country. At the present time, if a man is insane, even though a British subject, we have the right to put him in confinement.

Mr. HAGGART. I admitted that principle—that idiots, lunatics, criminals and paupers might be excluded. I said that the common law of England provided for that.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. My hon. friend stated that we had no power to exclude men except for purpose of quarantine.

Mr. HAGGART. I went further.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The hon. gentleman will see that we have the power to exclude those who are physically tainted, section 28 of the Immigration Act provides:

> No person shall be permitted to land in Canada who is a pauper, or destitute, a professional beggar, or vagrant, or who is likely to become a public charge——

I think the hon. gentleman will agree to prevent the landing of persons of these classes. Very well. The Act goes on to say:

> —and any person landed in Canada who, within two years thereafter, has become a charge upon the public funds, whether municipal, provincial or federal, or an inmate of, or a charge upon, any charitable institution, may be deported and returned to the port or place whence he came or sailed for Canada.

Does the hon. gentleman admit that we have that power?

Mr. HAGGART. Yes.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The hon. gentleman admits that we can exclude paupers, criminals, and those physically tainted or mentally unsound, whether they be British subjects or not. Well, if we exercise this power, why do we exercise it? For our protection. The object of this Bill, as it has been stated, and as I tried to state it, is to create another cause of exclusion as recognized by the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) and the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk). The Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) has given the reason for creating this new clause of exclusion. What is it? He says: The power vested in me is to prevent the entry of persons who are physically tainted, mentally unsound, criminals or paupers, and to send them back whence they come; but the power given me is nugatory unless the transportation company that brings such a person to this country can take him to the place from which he came. The transportation company has taken this immigrant on at Hong Kong. But, when he is returned, the authorities at Hong Kong refuse to receive him, and he is left between the two places like Mahomet's coffin hanging between heaven and earth. So, the Minister of the Interior seeks power to make effective the power that is given him. So far we understand each other. There is another question which the leader of the opposition has suggested, and that is whether we might not be going too far in this legislation, and whether we might not exclude another class of immigrants who ought to be admitted. That is a serious consideration. I do not know whether the Minister of the Interior has given his attention to it, but at all events it is a point worthy of consideration.

Mr. GALLIHER. Touching the last point referred to by the Prime Minister, I will state the situation. As we all know, British Columbia is the province that has suffered most by the influx of Oriental immigrants. It is not desirable in the interest of British Columbia or in the interest of Canada that a class of people who cannot assimilate with any part of our own inhabitants should be permitted to come in without restriction. That I think ought to be admitted by every Canadian. Now what was the case in British Columbia before the order in council was passed ? We found Japanese agents on the one hand and Hindu agents on the other, practically starting a syndicate for the purpose of flooding British Columbia with Orientals—because our province was the objective point of all the immigrants who came from those countries. We find on the one hand the government of Japan saying that if Japanese leave their country and go to Honolulu or any other point, they are beyond the jurisdiction of the Japanese government, it has no control over them. On the other hand, we find the Hindu coming in, not from India but from another point between his native country and British Columbia. Now that had to be got over. I say it was in the interest, not only of British Columbia but of all of Canada, that some measure should be taken by which that immigration should be stopped. Now I want to say that I have not been satisfied with what has been done, and I would have raised my voice time and again in this House if some means had not been taken to stop this wholesale influx. I do not care if the Hindu is a British subject. He may be a British subject, and have fought the battles of Great Britain on many occasions. He is a soldier and a good soldier, I admit all that ; and I have as much respect for a British subject as any other man in this House, and I think I am as good a British subject, too. But I do not think this is imposing a hardship on those British subjects coming straight from their native country to Canada, and if they do come direct and are desirable in every other respect, they would be allowed to land and become citizens of our country. But these men have been coming from Hong Kong, and why do they come ? They come simply at the instigation of these immigration agents who hold every man up who comes in, and levy upon him for bringing him into British Columbia. These men have inaugurated and are carrying out the profession of bringing immigrants into Canada, and reaping a benefit out of them in consequence. I say in all fairness, without wishing to reflect upon the Hindus, that they are not suitable citizens for British Columbia or for any other part of Canada ; they are not suited to the climate or to the work they are called upon to perform.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Won't they find that out ?

Mr. GALLIHER. We dont want thousands of them parading our streets trying to find that out. That is the position we take in British Columbia, and that is the position we will maintain.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. And yet you will import Yankee hoodlums who are not even American citizens.

Mr. GALLIHER. I am afraid my hon. friend must have suffered severe treatment from a Yankee hoodlum at some time. A point was made by the leader of the opposition and answered by the Prime Minister, that this Act might be made to apply to other classes of immigrants than Orientals. I do not think we need have any serious cause for fear that any considerable number of people will be excluded who come from other countries, under the operation of this Act if it becomes law. I think that is looking ahead for trouble which is not likely to happen. I have looked into the matter carefully, and I do not think that we in Canada need have any great fear that there will be any appreciable number of citizens of the United States, or Germany, or France, or any other country who wish to come in here, and who will be excluded under the provisions of this law. I know of no other way by which we can keep out these undesirable Orientals, and I have thought the matter over a good deal, unless you are going to discriminate against one or more nations. But if you put a provision of this kind in the law, all nations are then treated alike ; and all we ask of any nation, whether they be British subjects, or Frenchmen, or Germans, or any one else, is that they come direct from their own country to Canada. This Act will stop the machine work that has been going on in the case of the Japanese and Hindus, and those are the people we want to stop. As a British Columbian I say, and I maintain, that whether they are British subjects or not—and I give them every credit they deserve as British subjects—British Columbia nor any other part of Canada is not a suitable country for Hindus, and it is not in the interest of British Columbia that they should come in in unrestricted numbers.

Mr. FOWLER. It seems to me that if we have a right to exclude British subjects for any reason whatever, either for mental or physical unsoundness, we have the absolute right to exclude them altogether. It is only a question whether it is judicious or not. For my part I sympathize with the evident desire of the Minister of the Interior to work out the problem that confronts him in this matter of immigration to British Columbia. I think it is very important that both sides of the House should address themselves to this matter, and endeavour to work out some way whereby this can be done without doing injustice to persons coming from other countries who may be desirable immigrants for Canada.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. From the observations that I have been able to make, and from what I have heard living in a province adjoining British Columbia, I agree with the hon. member for Kootenay that the Hindus are not a desirable class of immigrants, and from what we have been able to learn up to the present time that class of immigration should not be encouraged. But I rose to my feet chiefly to refer to a remark of the hon. member for Vancouver (Mr. Macpherson) who has said that certain Japanese settlements have been satisfactory. I must apologise for introducing this matter in a discussion of this Bill, but I do it because the Minister of Labour is in his seat. I observe in a despatch from Edmonton, dated March 20, in which it is stated that fifty Japanese families will arrive in Calgary in a few days. I see another paragraph in the same paper, under the heading 'Jap farmers may not come this season, Strong feeling against Asiatics makes promoter hesitate.' Now as I understood the statement in this House of the Minister of Labour on a previous occasion, an arrangement had been come to with the Japanese government under which only students, travellers, and those who came over to Canada to visit their relatives, were to be admitted into this country. I simply mention this for the purpose of ascertaining whether it has come to the attention of the Minister of Labour. I desire to know if there have been 10,000 acres of land sold to Japanese in Southern Alberta, if these families are about to arrive and if there has been that satisfactory settlement to which he referred some months ago how is it that these people are allowed to come in?

Mr. GALLIHER.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I am aware that fifty Japanese families have been advertised to come to Canada shortly. All I know is that an understanding has been arrived at with the Japanese authorities, that the Japanese authorities have lived up to it until the present time, and I feel sure that the arrangement which has been made will be carried out conscentiously by both sides. From the reports I have received from British Columbia, from the evidence that I receive every day from the representatives of that province in the House, the question seems to be settled, and there is now no influx of Japanese labourers into British Columbia. I have reason to believe that from this day on we will never hear of any such influx as that which took place last fall.

Mr. MACPHERSON. I think it will take a little more than the subtle remarks of the hon. member for Calgary (Mr. McCarthy) to galvanize into life that Japanese corpse. I do not think we will have the Japanese question as a factor in western Canada from this time on; that is, if Japan lives up to its agreement. I do not want to say anything that my hon. friend takes exception to, but I think that his little attempt to galvanize into life that Japanese corpse, because, as I said, I believe it is a corpse, will fail. I want to take exception to what the hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton (Mr. Hughes) has said. He speaks of the Yankee hoodlums who come over here. I know that the Americans who come to this country make a most desirable class of citizens, and I know that the Hindus or any other class of Asiatics are not wanted in Canada. That line of cleavage is well marked and I think upon that line we can proceed; that is if we are going to keep Canada a white country.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Do you not want to keep it more than a white country? Do you not want to keep it a decent country?

Mr. MACPHERSON. Yes, I do not think my hon. friend and I will quarrel about keeping it a decent country.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I would rather have a black gentleman than a white anarchist.

Mr. MACPHERSON. I would too; I am not talking against black gentlemen.

Mr. LEMIEUX. There is a provision in the law against anarchists.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. It is not enforced.

Mr. MACPHERSON. It would be applied to Americans as well as other people.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I had reference to the galvanized Americans, the riff-raff who live for a short time in the United States and then come into Canada.

Mr. MACPHERSON. A man who has been guilty of moral turpitude or of any crime is kept out of Canada. We know very well that it is only the lowest possible caste that leave India and come to our shores. We do not get the Maharajas or the big people of India; they do not leave India on account of their caste.

An hon. MEMBER. We do not get any nabobs.

Mr. MACPHERSON. We do not get any nabobs. Some of them may have been soldiers. A man may be a first-class man and be a soldier and he may not be a first class man and be a soldier. Because a man has been a soldier it is no reason why we should admit him. There is no difficulty in getting a man to be a soldier in India because a Hindu would rather swell around in brass buttons than work. He does not like to work. Even if you are a British subject many times over and wear stripes and be a soldier that does not fit you to become a Canadian citizen of a type such as that to which we believe Canadian citizens should conform. I think we can never expect to maintain a high standard of nationality unless we keep the strain white. The white man may not be just exactly the kind of man that you would like to invite into your parlour; he may not talk the language or understand it, but his boys and girls are going to school, they are given education along the required lines and they are singing 'God save the King' and 'Rule Britannia' within six months after they come here.

Mr. HAGGART. Are you not in danger if you draw the colour line ?

Mr. MACPHERSON. I would rather draw the colour line now than draw it fifty years later. If you read the history of the United States you will find that when they were flooding the southern states with Africans the same arguments were being used then, and it took years of fighting and bloodshed and millions of money to settle that question and it is not settled yet. It is far better for us to settle it now in the way in which we are attempting to settle it.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. I do not propose that the hon. member for Vancouver (Mr. Macpherson) will get away with the insinuation that he has made that I am trying to resurrect the discussion on the Japanese question. That is not my intention. On the public Bills and orders there is a resolution of the hon. member for Nanaimo (Mr. Smith) and if I had any desire to discuss the question further I would reserve my remarks until then. I simply pointed out to the hon. Minister of Labour that there appeared in a western paper a report that fifty Japanese proposed to land in Calgary within the next few days, and that 10,000 acres of land had been acquired by these people, together with the further statement that they might not come this season because there was a strong feeling against the promoters of this enterprise and they hesitated to bring them along. If there had been a report that these people were coming to Vancouver instead of to Calgary the hon. member for Vancouver would have been the first man to get up in the House and try to find out if the report were true or not.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Since the hon. member for Calgary (Mr. McCarthy) has referred again to the number of Japanese who wish to settle near Calgary as agriculturists, I may say, in order to show that the Japanese authorities are living up to their agreement with Canada, that a few days ago the Canadian Pacific Railway Company applied to the Dominion government in order to ascertain if something like 300 Japanese would be allowed to enter the Dominion and take up land in the Northwest. The Canadian Pacific Railway authorities pointed out that the Japanese government would not object to issuing passports to the intending Japanese immigrants, but the Japanese government had stated that they could not issue passports unless the Dominion government would agree to it. That shows plainly that the Japanese authorities are living up to the agreement arrived at during the month of December last.

Mr. LENNOX. I want to call the government's attention to another matter in connection with the wording of this section. We have been dealing so far with the meaning of the last part of the clause which says:

> Any immigrants who come to Canada otherwise than by continuous journey from the country of which they are natives or citizens and upon through tickets purchased in such country.

As the leader of the opposition has pointed out that appears to provide for the exclusion of a class that was not provided for until now. But the first part of the section provides for something distinct from that, and it says:

> The Governor in Council may, by proclamation or order, whenever he considers it necessary or expedient, prohibit the landing in Canada of any specified class of immigrants.

Will the government explain what they expect that part of the clause to cover?

Mr. OLIVER. That is subsection 1 of the Act as it exists at present.

Mr. LENNOX. I know.

Mr. OLIVER. We are merely repeating that subsection in the new Act and adding to it the provision which is under discussion. The provision referred to has never been applied so far and the fact that we are including it in this amendment does not indicate any immediate intention of applying it. There are very serious objections under ordinary circumstances to the application of an exclusion law against any class of people, and yet there may be occasions arising when it is desirable that such a power should exist. From the time the Act was first passed we have never seen fit to exercise it, but we think it desirable that the power should still remain. It would only be exercised as a last resort.

Mr. LENNOX. We are giving the Governor in Council pretty extensive powers by that provision, although it may or may not be exercised. If you take it in the ordinary sense the provision would cover quite as large a class of persons as are provided for in the concluding words of the section. It is true the section was contained in the former Act, but these words were in addition:

Of which due notice shall be given to the transportation companies.

These words are now omitted. Then we had a subsection in the previous Act which we are now repealing and it is worth while remembering that. Subsection 2 provided that the Governor in Council might make such regulations as are necessary to prohibit the entry into Canada of any greater number of persons from any foreign country than the laws of such country permitted to emigrate to Canada.

Mr. OLIVER. It is not intended to repeal that.

Mr. LENNOX. Under the provision that the Governor in Council may prevent from landing any specified class of immigrants, could the Governor in Council issue a proclamation that Japanese shall not land in Canada?

Mr. OLIVER. That subsection was considered last year, and in consultation with the Justice Department we were advised that it was not a proper interpretation to put upon the word 'class,' to apply it to a nationality.

Mr. LENNOX. I am not prepared to argue that there is not some ground for that limitation or qualification, but at the same time I do not think it is any too clear. If the Governor in Council could make an order preventing the landing of Japanese it would be in direct conflict with the treaty with them. But it certainly would apply to the Governor in Council making a proclamation precluding carpenters or artisans or any specific class. The Minister of the Interior says yes. Then if that is so it would enable you to exclude Japanese artisans, and as I understand it we have not reserved the right in the treaty to exclude any class of Japanese from this country. If that be so we ought not to enact legislation which is inconsistent with the treaty with Japan. It is not that I want to circumscribe or hamper the efforts of the government in any way to preserve British Columbia as a white man's country, for I think that is one of the most desirable things we could aim at, but I am merely calling the attention of the government to legislation from that point of view.

Mr. OLIVER.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I can reassure my hon. friend that by the agreement arrived at in the month of December with the Japanese authorities, all labour, skilled and unskilled is excluded. That is to say, they will be allowed to come into Canada only if the Canadian government accede to the request made by them to land in Canada, but they are excluded by the terms of the arrangement. I stated so when the question came up before.

Mr. LENNOX. I referred to Japanese labourers or artisans merely for illustration. But suppose for instance under this power to exclude a specified class it should be proposed to exclude Japanese students?

Mr. LEMIEUX. No.

Mr. LENNOX. If it means anything at all it means that the Governor in Council may exclude a limited class coming from any country, and in that way it could be made to include a class which would bring it in conflict with the treaty relations at present existing between Canada and Japan.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The answer to the point of my hon. friend, which was well taken in one sense, is this. Under this order in council the minister can exclude any class. For instance, suppose capitalists should be excluded, how would that work? It could not exclude Japanese capitalists, because they could invoke the treaty, which is superior to a statute of this House, as was decided by the British Columbia court in the case under the Natal Act. It was provided in that Act that any person coming to British Columbia should be subjected to an educational test. Under that provision some Japanese were arrested and convicted; but upon habeas corpus they were released, upon the ground alone that the legislation could not apply to Japanese, because they were protected by the treaty. The court did not go beyond that point, and I think this answers the point raised by my hon. friend.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Does not that place the government in another difficulty with regard to the words just now proposed to be added to the clause? The Prime Minister has stated accurately the effect of that decision, which amounted to this. Although the Natal Act might possibly apply to other nationalities, it could not apply to Japanese, not so much on account of the treaty, but on account of the Act of this parliament confirming the treaty, because provincial legislation with regard to immigration is always subject to legislation enacted by this parliament, and if it is repugnant to legislation enacted by this parliament, it has no effect. Does not the same objection apply to the words proposed to be added? You propose to give the Governor in Council power 'to prohibit the landing in Canada of any specified class of immigrants or of any immigrants who being natives or citizens of any specified country have come to Canada otherwise than by a continuous journey from that country on through tickets purchased there.' I would be inclined to think that any order in council issued under the authority of this statute would be inoperative so far as Japanese subjects are concerned, for the very reason now given by the Prime Minister. Under the treaty subjects of the Empire of Japan have exactly the same right to enter, travel and reside in Canada as citizens of Canada have. Then you issue an order in council providing that persons coming under the conditions mentioned may be prohibited. That order in council may be very good as to all the nationalities of the world except the Japanese, but would it not be inoperative so far as they are concerned? Is that the way it is understood by the government?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. There is something in the point of my hon. friend. Though I think it might be met in another way, it is sufficient to observe at the present time that the Japanese authorities are aware that we attempt to exclude Japanese coming from Honolulu. They do not object to that. The Japanese authorities want their people to be treated in the same way as the people of any other civilized country, and any law which we pass applying to all nations they do not object to.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The difficulty appears to have been overlooked by the Prime Minister and by the Minister of Labour, who spoke as if an arrangement with Japan would have the same effect as a treaty. The difficulty is that a Japanese subject coming to Vancouver and Victoria and being confronted by the order in council will simply take the same course as was taken not long ago—apply to a solicitor and procure writ of habeas corpus, and the court will decide that the order in council has no application to him, and he therefore cannot be deported. It will not be a question between the government of Japan and the government of this country, but a question of the individual rights of the Japanese coming to this country, and invoking the statute of this parliament confirming the treaty.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. If the legal interpretation given of the effect of the Japanese treaty is correct, then Japanese immigrants to Canada have a privilege which no British subject has. If it is true that no legislation of this House can supersede the terms of the treaty, then there is absolutely no control over the immigration of Japanese, and what is the good of an agreement with Japan? If that is the true legal position, the only alternative is to cancel the treaty. The spirit of the people of British Columbia is entirely against the immigration of Orientals. This legislation is no doubt extreme, but it is to remove an extreme evil; but if the legal opinion stated is correct that we cannot, by any regulations, orders in council or even legislation of this parliament, restrict or regulate the immigration of Orientals against the provisions of the treaty, then Canada has no control at all of immigration in the face of that treaty. I am not a lawyer, but that seems to me to be the situation, and the only proper conclusion is to cancel the treaty.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would like to make myself plain to the hon. member for Nanaimo. Canada has, as I understand, very complete control of immigration by the very words of the British North America Act, which give us power to legislate in regard to it. We did legislate in regard to immigration from Japan when we passed an Act confirming the treaty made between Great Britain and Japan with respect to Canada. We could repeal that Act tomorrow. If we did repeal it, of course there would be an end of the treaty, because Japan would very properly take offence at that. We have agreed to confirm the treaty, and, having confirmed it, we could not, upon the principles of international usage, now pass an Act repealing the confirming Act of a year ago. We have now before us this statute, the terms of which might in their broadest signification be regarded as inconsistent with the Act of a year ago, especially with reference to Japan. They would not be held to be inconsistent, because in the Act of a year ago we were dealing with a specific subject, namely our relation to Japan, and this Act would not be held as repealing that Act because it deals with the whole subject of immigration. Therefore it seems to me that any order in council issued under this Act would be held, so far as Japan is concerned, to be subject to the Act of a year ago. That is all I intended to express.

Mr. LENNOX. I agree with the position taken by the First Minister that we can pass this statute, but that where it conflicts with the treaty, the treaty will have force and this will not have force. But what I was calling the First Minister's attention more particularly to was this. After passing an Act confirming a treaty, which prevents us from dealing with the Japanese question in this broad way, the question is whether it is wise for us to pass this Act without qualification. The First Minister says we are in effect tied hand and foot as regards Japan. I admit that. We cannot pass such broad legislation as this as regards Japan. I admit that. The hon. member for Nanaimo (Mr. Ralph Smith) says that we cannot make laws upon this question. That being the case, is it wise that we should pass this without qualification, without reference to the position in which we stand in relation to Japan? As the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) says, a Japanese subject coming here, if arrested, goes into the court, and pleads his right. He does not plead that right on the basis of the understanding between the Minister of Labour (Mr. Lemieux) and the Japanese government—we cannot set up that implied or verbal understanding—but what we are confronted with is the Japanese treaty, which over-rides the Act that we pass here, supersedes it, controls it and determines the rights of this Japanese subject. And he is released; that is the effect of it. Is it wise to enact legislation that, on the face of it, goes actually beyond what we have the power to enact? I directed my remarks in the beginning to the first part of this clause, but they apply equally to the second part, though I did not wish to deal with that, as it has been so fully discussed. Nevertheless, I thought it well to call the attention of the government to the unfortunate position in which we are.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. I agree with my hon. friend, so far as I am able to understand the legal point that this is in conflict with the Japanese treaty and cannot be enforced against the Japanese. Of course, I am not a lawyer and cannot say whether that is the legal effect of the position or not. But I understand it as the hon. member for Nanaimo (Mr. Ralph Smith) stated it—that we have lost control so far as Japanese immigration is concerned and that this Act would be futile in that respect. Now, I wish to call attention to another point. It would appear, upon the face of this clause that, when the government pass an order in council, a certain thing may be done. What I would like to know from the minister is this: Will this order in council become operative at once, or is notice to be given to the countries concerned? Suppose the order were passed to-morrow, but that a week ago, several shiploads of immigrants started for Canada from different countries which might be affected by this order. These people lawfully embarked, and the transportation companies lawfully undertook to transport them to Canada. If this order becomes operative at once, great injustice will be done to transportation companies and to immigrants who have spent their money for tickets only to find on their arrival here that an order in council has been passed under which they are to be sent back to the countries from which they came. Is due notice to be given, and, if so, what length of notice, to the steamship companies and immigrants, before such a change in the law goes into operation?

Mr. OLIVER. In the first place, I am bound to say that this proposed legislation is to go into effect, not by being passed by the House, but by proclamation of the Governor in Council, and that it is the custom to give due notice before the passage of such an order in council.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Would the order in council be general or specific?

Mr. OLIVER. In any case, the order in council would affect the transportation companies and immigrants, and it is only right and reasonable that there should be notice. And notice has been given in the past and will be in the future. My hon. friend from South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) mentioned that in the Act as it stands there is a provision that due notice shall be given, and that these words are not contained in the measure as it stands now before the House. The reason for leaving out these words is that when they are placed in the statute, there is the question as to what 'due notice' is, and this might lead to very serious complications. Therefore, we believe it is better that the government should be trusted to give due notice rather than that words should be put in the statute that would be difficult of interpretation, and might render of none effect the intent of parliament and the action of the government.

In regard to the point which has been under discussion, raised by my hon. friend from South Simcoe—concerning which, perhaps, I have not the same license as members of the legal profession—I must say that the matter does not strike me as they have presented it to the House. It seems to me elementary that the parliament of Canada is supreme within Canada; that whatever parliament has done parliament can undo, that, if, last year, we passed an Act which gave certain privileges to certain people, we can, this year, pass as Act which does not give these privileges to these people, and that Act is valid so far as the courts of Canada are concerned and so far as it affects the people within the boundaries of Canada.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is this intended as being pro tanto a repeal of the Act of last year confirming the treaty with Japan?

Mr. OLIVER. No. I am maintaining, as concerning the Bill before the House, that it does not repeal the Act of last session.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is what I contended also.

Mr. LENNOX. That is what we all contend.

Mr. OLIVER. But our friends pretend that the intent is to repeal——

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. No, I did not.

Mr. LENNOX. On the contrary, I agreed with the First Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) when he said the treaty would be more powerful than this, that the treaty would prevail against this Act.

Mr. OLIVER. I have not been able to get my point understood yet. As I understand our friends opposite, they maintain that the Act of last session regarding the Japanese treaty stood effective against this Act which we propose to pass this session.

Mr. LENNOX. That is right.

Mr. OLIVER. Well, I say that the matter does not appeal to me in that way. As I said before, the parliament of Canada is supreme within the limits of Canada. The parliament of Canada passed an Act last session with regard to the Japanese treaty. So far as the people of Canada are concerned within the limits of Canada, an Act passed by the parliament of Canada at this session is effective and binding upon the courts of Canada, whether it is or is not contrary to the legislation passed.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is what I asked—was this statute intended to repeal the Act of last session in that respect, and the hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) said, 'no.'

Mr. OLIVER. I said, in my estimation. All these matters must be matters of opinion. In my estimation this does not purport to repeal ; but if it did, then I maintain that if this parliament passed it, it would repeal.

Mr. LENNOX. If appropriate words were used, it certainly would repeal, but appropriate words are not used.

Mr. OLIVER. I have rather missed the point of our friends argument or they have missed mine. My understanding is that if this legislation is passed, it will be effective. It will have effect in law and be binding upon the courts as it is expressed, without regard to the terms of the treaty passed last session.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. My hon. friend has said exactly the contrary. He has declared that this Act is not intended to repeal or affect in any way the Act of last year and therefore the order in council proposed to be passed must be subject to the treaty of last year. That is an absolute logical conclusion. You cannot get away from it. This Bill is not intended to repeal the Act of last year.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Because it is not necessary. The Japanese government have come to an understanding which makes it absolutely unnecessary.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am surprised that my hon. friend the Minister of Labour would repeat that twice. Does he not know that any Japanese coming to British Columbia can avail himself of that treaty, absolutely in disregard of any informal arrangement made between this government and the government of Japan? I did not think I would have to explain that even to any member who does not belong to the legal profession. There is a treaty between the two nations, which treaty is confirmed by the parliament of Canada. That treaty derives its force in this country altogether from the legislation of this parliament last year, and to suggest that the Minister of Labour and the Japanese Minister of Foreign Affairs can repeal, by an understanding between them, the legislation confirming this treaty is so utterly absurd, that I would not think any one would for one moment entertain such a suggestion.

Mr. LEMIEUX. There is a treaty binding upon this country and Japan, but we know that no Japanese subject can leave a port of Japan without the express authority of the Japanese government, and he cannot come to this country against that authority.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. My hon. friend has not been paying attention or he would know that that is not the point. I am speaking of Japanese coming from Hawaii. These are the men to whom the statute would apply and not those who come from Japan. I might point out what is absolutely obvious. These men coming from Hawaii to British Columbia could invoke that treaty with an absolute disregard of any arrangement made by the Minister of Labour and the Minister of Foreign Affairs of Japan. The treaty between the Empire of Japan and this country has been confirmed by the parliament of Canada. It is the legislation affirming that treaty which binds Canada, and not any arrangement such as is spoken of by the Minister of Labour. How ridiculous would it not be for any counsel in a British Columbia court to argue, in opposition to a motion for the release of these men that the treaty which gives every Japanese subject the absolute right to enter, travel and reside in Canada has been repealed by an arrangement between the Minister of Labour of Canada and the Minister of Foreign Affairs of Japan, and therefore these men must be deported. Even a one year's law student, who valued his reputation, would not make such an argument as that.

Mr. MACPHERSON. Who suggested that ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I understood the Minister of Labour to suggest it. I do not know what he did suggest, if he did not intend that. When the legislation was invoked, my hon. friend put forward the operative force of an arrangement made himself with the Minister of Foreign Affairs of Japan.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Not its operative force before our courts. What I say is that the necessity for such deportation will not arise, and consequently there will be no case before our courts and no necessity for invoking this treaty as against the arrangement with Japan. My hon. friend contends that the treaty may be availed of by any Japanese subject before our courts. But what I reply is that such a possibility is a very remote one indeed. True there is the treaty, but there is also the understanding—not a verbal understanding, as suggested by my hon. friend from Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) but a written one—with the Japanese government, under which no immigration can take place except in compliance with that arrangement. No Japanese will be allowed to leave Japan without a passport. My hon. friend suggests that a Japanese might come from the Sandwich Islands and not direct from Japan and might invoke the treaty before our courts. But he is still a Japanese subject, and if he came in contravention of the arrangement between Japan and Canada, he would be acting against the laws of his own country, and the Canadian government would be in a position to deport him.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That suggestion would be very valuable indeed if the laws of Japan were in force in Canada, but unfortunately they are not. It is the laws of this parliament which are in force in Canada. Therefore a Japanese subject coming from Hawaii can depend on the terms of the treaty because that treaty has been affirmed by an Act of this parliament. It would be absolutely idle to suggest that any arrangement, whether verbal or written, whether under seal or not, made between our Minister of Labour and the Foreign Minister of Japan, could have the slightest effect on the legal status of that man entering this country from Hawaii. It is absolute nonsense to suppose that such would be the case. Therefore the question comes back to the point from which we started a moment ago. The Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) admits, and properly admits, that this proposed legislation cannot and does not purport to repeal our statute of last year confirming the treaty between Canada and Japan.

Mr. OLIVER. What I meant to say was that it does not purport to repeal that treaty but it could if we wanted it to.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Certainly this parliament can repeal the Act of last year but we are not doing it, and it is idle to discuss the effect of something we are not doing. Let us discuss what we are doing. We are simply leaving the Japanese treaty where it was when we passed that Act confirming it. Therefore any order in council put forth under the terms of this proposed legislation could not in the slightest degree affect the provisions of the Japanese treaty confirmed by an Act of this parliament.

Mr. MACPHERSON. It has been done in British Columbia by the courts there. Two Japanese were deported to the United States under that order in council.

Mr. LEMIEUX.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am referring to the decision of the courts of British Columbia alluded to by the right hon. gentleman. We have arrived at the point where we are all agreed that this proposed legislation does not touch the Act of last year. There is but one point to be considered, a point mentioned by the right hon. gentleman, whether an order in council providing that persons not coming in by a continuous journey or on a through ticket, should be deported, would apply to citizens of Japan. The decision of the British Columbia courts indicates that such an order in council would be subject to the Act of last year, and that the operation of the Act of last year would exempt citizens of Japan from the operation of such an order.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It is now six o'clock, and I have only this to say, that according to international law I think no treaty prevents one of the contracting parties from exercising the power vested in it to pass municipal regulations necessary for its own protection. For instance, though we have a treaty here, I am quite sure we can exclude a Japanese who is mentally or physically diseased, and if we can do that, we have power to do by legislation all that is necessary to carry out this provision of municipal law, and that is what we intend to do.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. A moment ago, the right hon. gentleman nodded his assent to the proposition of the hon. member for King's that because we have a qualified power to restrict these persons coming from the British isles, therefore we have power of absolute restriction—if he should attempt to apply this argument in the case of Japan, he would be confronted by the treaty.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. We have power to enforce our own municipal regulations for our own protection. At all events, that is the position we have taken on this question, and we believe it to be legal. I move the previous question.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would have liked an opportunity to discuss this matter further.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I would like very much to send this Bill to the Senate so that they may act upon it before they adjourn, the Senate adjourns to-morrow. This is very important legislation for British Columbia.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I want to say a few words more.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I am giving the reasons why I wish to pass this Bill now, it is in order that it may be sent to the Senate, and may be sanctioned to-morrow, and come immediately into force.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The Prime Minister has not shown any necessity for the legislation.

Mr. MACPHERSON. I think there is need of immediate legislation, in the best interest of British Columbia. I trust the House will see fit to meet the Prime Minister's wishes so that this Bill may go to the Senate and become operative at once. There is a crying necessity for it. Is the hon. gentleman prepared to accept the responsibility of delaying legislation which will prevent these yellow people from coming into our province? What did the leader of the opposition say in British Columbia? He stood for a white man's country.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. If the hon. gentleman is going to make a stump speech here, he is taking the best means of holding up this Bill. As a matter of fact I object to this Bill going through at the present time. The hon. gentleman was not taking a manly part in British Columbia on this question. We were standing here on this question. We were standing here in defence of a better citizenship.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman cannot make a speech.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. If the House is not willing to consent to pass this measure now, we have nothing to do but to adjourn.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I want to put myself on record that I am in favour of a white man's country, and also in favour of a decent country.

Progress reported.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What legislation will be taken up to-morrow?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The Bill of the Minister of Inland Revenue and the two Bills of the Minister of Railways.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Will this matter be taken up again to-morrow?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes.

House adjourned at six o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, April 9, 1908.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

SIGNAL DUES AT HALIFAX.

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 152) respecting signal dues at Halifax.

Mr. HENDERSON. Explain.

Mr. BRODEUR. The object of the Bill is to permit vessels having a tonnage of less than 150 tons to come into the harbour at Halifax without being obliged to pay what we call signal dues. There is a signal station at Halifax for the purpose of signalling vessels, but only those having a larger tonnage than 150 tons are signalled. We think that under these circumstances all vessels which are not signalled when they come into the harbour should not be obliged to pay the dues. The object of the Bill is for the purpose of abolishing dues in so far as these vessels are concerned.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS.

GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC RAILWAY—CONTRACTS.

Mr. FOSTER asked:

1. What contracts and for what mileage, and the price at which each have been let, upon the eastern and western sections of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway?
2. What is the date of each contract, and the period set for completion?
3. What is the estimated cost of the unlet portions?

Hon. G. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals). It will take some weeks to give a reply to that.

Mr. FOSTER. Do you not get it from the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Commission?

Mr. GRAHAM. We are getting it as rapidly as possible, but it is not available here, and we have to try to get the information from different sources.

Mr. FOSTER. I thought the tenders at least were all submitted to the Transcontinental Railway Commission.

Mr. GRAHAM. Those having reference to the Transcontinental Railway part of it are.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like you to bring everything down.

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes, I can get it. But the question seems to cover contracts belonging to the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company and we may have some difficulty in getting that information.

Mr. FOSTER. That is right.

Question allowed to stand.

Mr. LAKE—by Mr. Taylor—asked:

1. What was the last annual deficiency, if any, due by the Qu'Appelle, Long Lake and Saskatchewan Railway and Steamship Company to the government, under their agreement, dated 5th August, 1889?
2. What was the total sum due on account of deficits according to the last annual adjustment of accounts?

EXPORTATION OF CATTLE TO AND IMPORTATION FROM GREAT BRITAIN.

Mr. CHRISTIE—by Mr. Taylor—asked:

1. What number of cattle were exported from Canada to Great Britain during the years 1904, 1905, 1906, 1907, respectively?
2. What number of cattle were imported from Great Britain to Canada during the years 1904, 1905, 1906, 1907, respectively?

Hon. WM. PATERSON (Minister of Customs). The imports into Canada from Great Britain and the exports to Great Britain from Canada of cattle during the twelve months ended June 30, 1904, 1905, 1906, 1907 respectively, have been as follows:—

Years.	Imports.		Exports.
	Horned cattle, dutiable.	Cattle for improvement of stock.
	Number.	Number	Number.
1904	94	161	148,345
1905	72	60	159,078
1906	.....	119	163,994
1907	12	231	170,164

THE ALL-RED LINE.

Mr. MONK asked:

1. What tenders or proposals have been received to date by the government in connection with the All-Red Line, or a faster steamship service across the Atlantic, between Canada and Great Britain?
2. Has any correspondence or have any despatches been exchanged between the Canadian and the imperial government since the 1st of September, 1907, upon the proposed All-Red Line?
3. Is it the intention of the government to table the documents, if any exist, referred to in preceding paragraphs, before the House is asked to vote further subsidies to steamship lines?

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). There is no correspondence of any kind upon the subject.

POSTAL ARRANGEMENTS REGARDING NEWSPAPERS.

Mr. ARMSTRONG asked:

Has the government received a resolution passed at a meeting of the Canadian Press Association asking that weekly papers be placed on the same basis in regard to carriage in the United States as the dailies? If so, what is the wording of said resolution?

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Postmaster General):

Yes. That the weekly section of the Canadian Press Association believes their publications are being discriminated against by the postal arrangements with the United States and that our executive in conjunction with the general executive be asked to urge such modifications as would place them on the same basis with the daily papers in regard to United States publications. I may add, with the leave of the House, that I received this morning a communication from the Weekly Section of the Canadian Press Association, and they are perfectly satisfied with the answer given.

PAYMENTS TO ECLIPSE COMPANY OF OTTAWA.

Mr. BENNETT asked :

What amount has been paid since 1896 to the Eclipse Company, of Ottawa, for supplies to every department of the government, by departments and years?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works). A return containing this information was presented to the House on the 27th of February last.

WINFIELD BASIN DREDGING.

Mr. BENNETT asked :

1. Was any dredging done at Winfield basin in the season of 1907? If so, who were the contractors, and what amount was paid therefor?

2. What was the nature of the material, and the quantities and price paid therefor per yard?

3. How many tenders were received for work, if tenders were asked?

4. Who was the inspector on behalf of the government, and upon whose recommendation was he appointed?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works) :

1. (a) Yes. (b) C. S. Boone. (c) No payment has been made on account of this work.

2. (a) Rock, hardpan, clay, gravel and boulders. (b) Returns not completed. (c) Contract prices : $4 for rock, 65 cents for all other materials.

3. Tenders were called for by public advertisement ; one tender received.

4. W. Matheson. The appointment was made on the responsibility of the minister.

ILLEGITIMATE POSTERS.

Mr. BARR asked :

1. What officer of customs in the several ports of the Dominion is charged with the duty of carrying out item 1210 of the tariff, which prohibits the importation of posters and handbills depicting scenes of crime or violence?

2. Is the government aware that during the past few weeks posters of this character are said to have appeared upon many of the billboards of Ottawa?

3. Does the government know that posters of this description are at the present time said to be posted on boards on some of the leading streets of the capital?

4. What steps does the government propose to take to see that this provision in the tariff is strictly enforced?

Hon. WM. PATERSON (Minister of Customs) :

1. It is the duty of the appraisers at the several ports of the Dominion, when examining importations, to aid in carrying out item 1210 of the Customs Tariff, 1907, which prohibits the importation of posters and handbills depicting scenes of crime or violence. The duties of appraisers devolve on collectors at ports where there are no appraisers.

2 and 3. The local authorities are considered to have supervision over the character of posters appearing on bill boards at Ottawa, so that customs officers do not look after posters when exhibited on bill boards, unless their assistance is requested by the local authorities.

4. Customs officers are authorized and instructed to enforce the provisions of the customs laws concerning these posters, as far as practicable, and to co-operate with the local authorities in suppressing exhibits of posters which are prohibited from importation under the law.

The attention of customs officers at the port of Ottawa has been directed to this inquiry and the reply thereto.

RIVIERE DU LOUP WHARF

Mr. MORIN asked :

1. What is the total amount expended to date by the government in connection with the wharf at Rivière du Loup, province of Quebec?

2. What is the total amount expended to date on dredging and harbour improvements at Fraserville and Rivière du Loup, province of Quebec, since the 1st of May, 1898?

3. How many steamers have stopped and tied up to the wharf at said Rivière du Loup each year, during the last four years?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works) :

1. The total amount expended prior to confederation was $170,129,35 ; the total amount expended since confederation to 1st April, 1908, construction and repairs was, $112,996.08 ; grand total, $283,125.43.

2. No dredging has been done since 1st May, 1898.

3. The wharf was transferred in 1891 to the Department of Marine and Fisheries. I have no information as to this question.

Mr. TAYLOR. Better let the question stand until the Department of Marine and Fisheries completes the answer.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I was informed that there was no information in the Marine Department as to the number of steamers. However, that part of the question may stand if the hon. gentleman desires.

Part 3 of question allowed to stand.

WHITE HEAD WHARF.

Mr. GANONG asked :

1. Has the government engineer made any report of the estimated cost of building a suitable wharf at White Head, Grand Manan, New Brunswick? If so, what was the estimated cost?

2. Is it the intention of the government to include an amount in the supplementary estimates to build this wharf?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works) :

1. Yes ; estimated cost, $6,680.

2. The matter is under consideration.

SEAL COVE DREDGING.

Mr. GANONG asked :

1. Has the government engineer made a report of the estimated cost of dredging necessary to give access to the cove or harbour at Seal Cove, Grand Manan, New Brunswick? If so, what is the estimated cost of this work?

2. Is it the intention of the government to include an amount in the supplementary estimates to do this work?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works) :

1. The government engineer has made a report on the improvement of Seal Cove harbour. He suggests that the requirements would be best met by the construction of a breakwater rather than by dredging.

2. The matter is under consideration.

LEONARDVILLE WHARF.

Mr. GANONG asked :

1. Has the government engineer made a report of the estimated cost of building a public wharf at Leonardville, Deer island, New Brunswick? If so, what is the estimated cost of this wharf?

2. Is it the intention of the government to include an amount in the supplementary estimates to build this wharf?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works) :

1. Yes ; to rebuild and extend the existing wharf. The estimated cost is $8,800, including dredging.

2. The matter is under consideration.

GRAND MANAN TELEGRAPH.

Mr. GANONG asked :

1. Has an application been made to the government by any person, persons or company to take over the telegraph, cable or cables giving telegraphic connection between the Island of Grand Manan, New Brunswick, and the mainland? If so, who were the parties making the application?

2. Is it the intention of the government to consider any such proposition?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works) :

1. (a) Yes ; (b) The Grand Manan Telephone Company.

2. The matter is under consideration.

Mr. PUGSLEY.

EASTER ADJOURNMENT.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER moved :

That when this House adjourns on Wednesday, the 15th instant, it stand adjourned to Tuesday, the 21st instant.

Mr. EMMERSON. I would ask the First Minister if it would not be possible to make that Wednesday, the 22nd instead of Tuesday, the 21st ?

Mr. FOSTER. Why ?

Mr. EMMERSON. A great many of those living in remote sections in the east will find it impossible to be here in time for Tuesday unless they leave their homes on Saturday.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I may say to my hon. friend that I have followed the practice which has been invariable in such cases.

Motion agreed to.

CORRESPONDENCE WITH MR. JUSTICE CASSELS.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I beg to lay on the table of the House further correspondence with Mr. Justice Cassels.

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS.

Mr. TAYLOR. I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Public Works if he has yet completed the return in reference to Petit Rocher ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. On making an inquiry of my deputy, I find that the answer given contained exactly the information which was asked for, that is, matters detailed on a certain page of the Auditor General's Report. If my hon. friend desires further information, and will be good enough to put another question, I shall be glad to give him the further information.

Mr. TAYLOR. It was not a question at all, but a motion for a return.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It was for a return as to matters detailed on a certain page of the Auditor General's Report, and that return has been made and is complete.

Mr. J. D. REID. I wish to ask the Minister of the Interior when the return I asked for, in reference to Kananaski Falls on the Bow River west of Calgary will be brought down ?

Mr. OLIVER. I fancy it would be ready in a very short time.

Mr. FOSTER. That return with reference to the Yukon finances made by Mr. Beddoe has not yet been brought down.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. My hon. friend will admit that I have been diligent. As far as I am concerned, I have brought down everything he wanted.

Mr. FOSTER. As far as the hon. gentleman's own department is concerned, I believe he has a clear slate.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I see on the paper an order for a return showing the amount of blankets purchased since 1895. I understood that the Minister of Agriculture asked for a change of the wording and that the order was passed with that change. I should like to have the return.

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture). The hon. gentleman must have misunderstood. When the motion was made, the Minister of Militia was not present, but he had said on a former occasion that he wanted some change made and therefore the order did not pass. The hon. gentleman is mistaken in thinking that it passed as a notice of motion.

ALLEGED IMMIGRATION IRREGULARITIES AT HALIFAX.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I wish to ask the Minister of Interior whether any investigation is going on in reference to alleged irregularities in connection with immigration at Halifax, and if so, what information he has to give to the House on the subject?

Mr. OLIVER. There is an investigation going on at the present time. Mr. Blake Robertson, assistant supperintendent of immigration has been in Halifax. I am not sure that he has returned yet. We intend to follow the matter up, but I think it would be as well not to press for details until we have reached some conclusion.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The information will be brought down when the investigation has been concluded?

Mr. OLIVER. Certainly.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is there any further information with regard to the frauds which were mentioned in the House some time ago? The hon. minister will remember that one of the officers in Halifax, I think, was dismissed.

Mr. OLIVER. That is what I am alluding to. We have been investigating that matter. The assistant superintendent of immigration went to Halifax last week, and we hope to follow the matter to a conclusion. I think it would be well not to press for details until we can lay a conclusion before the House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am not pressing for information before the time the minister thinks it advisable to bring it down. What I was alluding to was a press report respecting an interpreter by the name of Bernstein.

Mr. OLIVER. With regard to that, Mr. Blake Robertson went to Halifax. He is dealing with both matters while there.

THE CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION.

Mr. FOSTER. Might I ask when Judge Cassells will commence his investigation, and if he is to be appointed commissioner to investigate those cases in which intimations of wrong-doing were given by the commission, but no names mentioned? I would ask whether previous to that there is to be a departmental investigation into that same matter?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I understand that the commission of Judge Cassells has been issued ; I cannot say when he will commence his investigation. I would suppose immediately.

Mr. FOSTER. And as to the second question I put ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I cannot say.

INLAND REVENUE ACT—AMENDMENT.

Bill (No. 143) to amend the Inland Revenue Act—Mr. Templeman—read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

On section 4,

4. Section 141 of the said Act is repealed and the following is substituted therefor:

141. The department may, under regulations made for that purpose, allow on the exportation of goods manufactured from, or a product or result of the process of manufacture of, articles subject to a duty of excise, and on which such duty of excise has been paid, a drawback equal to the duty so paid, with such deduction therefrom as is provided in such regulations and subject to the direction of the Governor in Council.

2. The said section 141 shall be construed as if it had been originally enacted as herein amended.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. This has reference to the rebate given on cuttings. We began giving that rebate in 1901 under clause 141 of the Act. The Auditor General called attention to the fact that clause 141 as it now stands does not authorize the department to give this rebate. We submitted the question to the Minister of Justice and he confirmed the view of the Auditor General. This section 4 of this Bill is to provide for this case. Subsection 2 of this section is new, and, as my hon. friend will see, it is put in to legalize the repayments that have been made on cuttings. The necessity for section 141 will remain only so long as the present law is in force, as, after that, there will be no rebate on cuttings. But we have to legalize what has been done as well as what is to be done.

On section 5,—annual gauging of vessels in distillery.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The only change in this is the first line, where 'April' is substituted for 'July.' This is in consequence of the change in the fiscal year.

On section 6,—quarterly account of stock in bonded manufactories.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. This also is necessitated by change in the fiscal year.

On section 7,

7. Section 266 of the said Act is amended by adding the following subsection thereto:

2. Every person who uses methyl alcohol, or spirits containing methyl alcohol in any form, in any pharmaceutical, medicinal or other preparation intended for external use shall affix to the vessel containing the said preparation a label stating, in black letters not less than one-fourth of an inch in height, the presence of methyl alcohol therein; and every person violating the provisions of this subsection shall incur a penalty not less than fifty dollars and not exceeding two hundred dollars.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The present prohibition of methyl alcohol is confined to articles intended for internal use. We add subsection 2 to section 206, and we do this in consequence of the large number of fatalities that have occurred throughout the country by the use, ignorantly no doubt, of methyl alcohol. We have taken the opportunity of this amendment of the Inland Revenue Act to make this change. We purpose—and I think there is a clause later on—to provide that the manufacturers of wood alcohol shall be licensed. This is done for the purpose of bringing them under the jurisdiction and control of the Department of Inland Revenue. We will charge the mere nominal fee of $1 for a license and will require them to label the barrels and receptacles in which wood alcohol is placed with the word 'Poison.' We think this is in the interest of the public and that it will safeguard the people from the use, ignorantly or otherwise, of wood alcohol.

Mr. FOSTER. What steps, if any, has the minister taken looking to remedy the complaint that has been made concerning the excessive cost of this alcohol which is the basis of so many preparations? I think we had a discussion in the House a year or two ago with reference to it, and the general idea was that the price of this material was very high compared with the price in the United States, where they have, by improved processes and by changes in the law, greatly reduced the cost of alcohol. I think the minister stated that he was making experiments in the same direction. I have letters in my hand setting forth the disability under which the druggists labour on this account. I would like the minister, if he can, to give a brief statement of what he is doing in that respect.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The question of providing denatured alcohol, as it is sometimes called, or methylated spirits, at cheap rates has been engaging the attention of the Department of Inland Revenue for a year or two. The department makes methylated spirits. It has kept this manufacture in its control for years for the purpose of safeguarding the revenue. The methylated spirits placed upon the market of Canada for many years, has been mostly of two grades, one being 50 per cent wood alcohol and 50 per cent grain alcohol, and the other being 25 per cent wood alcohol and 75 per cent grain alcohol. The cost of the grain alcohol as purchased by the department from distillers has been about 41 or 42 cents per gallon, at the strength used for methylated spirits. Up to the present time the cost of wood alcohol to the department has been $1.29 per gallon. We have put these two grades of methylated spirits on the market for a number of years at $1.10 per gallon and $1.25, the latter being the price of alcohol containing 50 per cent wood alcohol. During the past year we have reduced these prices until at the present time we sell No. 1 grade at 70 cents and No. 2 grade at 80 cents. We have been experimenting in the laboratory with spirits to see if we could not properly safeguard the revenue by using a smaller percentage of wood alcohol, and the consequence is that we have put on the market an alcohol at 65 cents per gallon. Now I have said that the price of wood alcohol up to the period of the termination of the last contract was $1.29 per bulk gallon. During the last year the price of wood alcohol, particularly in the United States, has decreased very materially. In the United States, my hon. friend must remember, until one year ago, the manufacturers had to use wood alcohol pure and simple, or if they used ethyl alcohol they had to pay the duty. Canada has been far in advance of the United States for many years in this respect; but two years ago the United States Congress passed a law authorizing licenses to distillers and others to take alcohol out of bond and denature it. They have done so, and they are placing on the market to-day a denatured alcohol of which about 90 per cent is grain alcohol and 10 per cent wood alcohol, and they are selling it at 40 cents a wine gallon, which, being one-fifth or one-sixth less in bulk than the imperial gallon, is after all not as cheap as one would imagine. At the price at which the department will be able henceforth to purchase wood alcohol, the market price in Canada to-day being, I think, something like 50 cents and upward, acording to grade, the reduction the department will make in the present price will be very material; and I think that, even with the disadvantages under which we labour in Canada of making cheap grain alcohol as compared with the distillers of the United States, we will be able to put on the market before long a denatured alcohol at prices very little above those in the United States. Of the two grades of methylated spirits placed upon the market by the department for a long time, No. 1, with 75 per cent of grain alcohol, has been sold to manufacturers and others who enter into a bond that it shall be used only in their business and not be sold or transferred to others The other grade, No. 2, was sold to the public at large without any restriction whatever, the department feeling confident that an alcohol containing 50 per cent of wood alcohol was a perfectly safe article to place on the market so far as the revenue was concerned. This, Mr. Chairman, is the situation at the present time. We hope in the future to make considerable progress in reducing the price of methylated spirits. Up to the time that we could procure a cheap wood alcohol, after the termination of our contract, no effort has been made to remove the cost of denaturing, which I think is quite feasible. The wood alcohol now mixed by the department is all brought to Ottawa, upon which freight has to be paid, and I think it will be possible considerably to reduce the cost of denaturing before long.

Mr. FOSTER. Where does the minister get his wood alcohol? Is any of it made in Canada?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. It is all made in Canada.

Mr. FOSTER. I mean is any of it made in Canada that is not made under the supervision of the department?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. There is no supervision, we are taking that power now. Wood alcohol, as a substance by itself, is made by the manufacturers of charcoal and others; it is free to any person to make it and place it on the market. We have no restriction over its manufacture. We now propose to take control over the manufacture of alcohol simply for the purpose of safeguarding the lives of people by compelling the manufacturers to put labels on every vessel to show that the contents are wood alcohol, because it is very often taken for something else.

Mr. FOSTER. Is the disability under which Canada rests as regards the superfluity of grain, the only disability that makes the comparison so much against us as regards the United States?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I think the disability as compared with the alcohol produced in certain districts of the United States is considerable. In the first place, I think the corn imported into Canada comes directly from the corn producing belt and has to pay freight. There is, I think, a small tax, something like seven and a half cents per bushel, on corn used in the production of alcohol. The distillers in the United States are located in districts where corn is grown in large quantities, and where coal for fuel is practically at their very door. It is a question whether, if we attempted to produce a cheap denatured alcohol, we would be able to remove that disability, so far as concerns alcohol used for denaturing purposes. That might be practicable without at all affecting the revenue or changing the taxes. There are many disabilities but these are probably the principal ones. The price of coal is another. When I asked distillers why they could not sell alcohol as cheaply as it is sold in the United States, they said that in southern Illinois, I think Peoria is the centre, they are near the corn fields and the coal fields and have facilities for producing alcohol at a very low price.

Mr. CLEMENTS. What is the difference in the cost at the present time?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I cannot give that information exactly. We are at present very much handicapped by reason of the excessive price of wood alcohol. I look forward hopefully to the possibility of placing denatured alcohol on the market in Canada at a considerably reduced price. At the same time the great object the people have in mind is a denatured alcohol that may be used for fuel, light or motive purposes. I give no opinion as to the possibility of that. The use of alcohol in competing with gasoline or petroleum is not likely to become general in Canada for some time to come. While it may be possible to produce alcohol in Canada much more cheaply than at present, it would have to be produced at one-half the price of to-day before it could be sold in competition with gasoline and petroleum.

Mr. FOSTER. What struck me was the possibility of people generally manufacturing their own alcohol and thus getting an extremely cheap motive power. I read some articles with reference to this in the United States and they seemed to have overcome the difficulty in regard to revenue and were able to produce a wonderfully cheap article for motive power and other industrial uses. I would like the minister to state whether this has been successfully carried out in the United States, and if so, why Canada could not do the same thing. My recollection is that they proposed to make the alcohol out of farm refuse of different kinds which is now practically wasted, but which is claimed under proper education could be converted into alcohol by farmers themselves.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The officials of the department have been in communication with the officials of the department in Washington with respect to the operation of their law, and their information is that it has not been successful in regard to the distillation of alcohol by farmers. All the denatured alcohol put on the market in the United States in the last twelve months has been from the grain distillers. It was expected that there would be such a thing as agricultural distilleries, that any farmer might have a license, might have a small still, and under the supervision of excise officers distil his own alcohol from corn stalks or other similar waste products of the farm. However, this has not been accomplished in the United States. Our department have watched it with interest; we would very much like to have them work out this problem successfully before venturing along a line in which there is serious danger to the revenue unless the work is carried out under the closest supervision.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think I recollect a speech by the hon. member for East Kent (Mr. Gordon) on this subject some two or three years ago, and I was rather impressed with what he said with respect to the progress which Germany has made in the production of this article for purposes such as the hon. member has alluded to.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Germany is always pointed to as the country that has succeeded in producing denatured alcohol for fuel purposes, for driving motors, &c. A year ago, when the question was before the House, I read some of the reports in regard to the success of this alcohol in Germany, including the report prepared by a commission of the imperial parliament to investigate this question in regard to the effect of tax-paying alcohol on the industries of Great Britain as compared with the freer alcohol of Germany. I learned then, and I believe it is the fact, that Germany encourages by a subsidy the production of alcohol on the farm. Germany also imposes a tax upon petroleum. It encourages the production of alcohol by farmers to the extent of 6 cents or 7 cents a gallon. I do not think that policy would be acceptable in Canada. Then Germany has very cheap labour. The inauguration of the alcohol industry in Germany was due to agrarian politics. There were very large areas of poor land and many poor people, and they were encouraged to go on these lands to grow potatoes and manufacture alcohol. It was not altogether a question of producing cheap fuel, it had something to do with the settlement of poor lands in Saxony and other provinces of Germany. A large quantity of alcohol is used in Germany for fuel and light purposes, which is made from potatoes. I do not think we desire conditions in this country which would enable us to obtain the same measure of cheap alcohol; I understand that unless our farmers are prepared to grow potatoes at a price of about 10 cents or 12 cents a bushel they will not be able to produce alcohol to compete with the present price of petroleum and gasoline in Canada.

Mr. FOSTER. I wish to call attention to the situation that is created in that way. Perhaps I might bring that out by reading an extract from a letter received by myself. It is as follows:

> There is a matter of very considerable interest to ourselves——

These people are chemists and druggists.

> —as well as to the drug trade generally that has already or will in the very near future be brought to the attention of the House . . . . and that is the question of the exorbitant prices we are obliged to pay for alcohol for use in the arts. The manufacturers are obliged to keep this article in stock for three years in order to comply with the regulations. We consider this absolutely unnecessary when the alcohol is used for manufacturing purposes, and this fact adds practically 50 per cent to the actual cost of the spirit, without, of course, considering the question of government duty.

That is an assertion which is worthy of some consideration. They make the flat statement that it is not necessary to keep this alcohol for three years maturing in order to prepare it for use in the manufactures. If it is a fact that it need not be kept so long there should be a great reduction in price. Whether that is practicable or not is a question which remains for the minister to consider.

> A denatured alcohol is manufactured and sold in the United States at 39 cents per gallon which illustrates the fact that a spirit can be manufactured and sold, if there were no duty to pay and it had not to be kept for three years, at from 40 to 50 cents per gallon, imperial measure, with a very good profit. Of course, the government duty is placed high enough so as to prevent any spirit being imported.

In the general policy of the country, which is to aid and enlarge manufacturing interests as greatly as possible, here is one manufacturing interest which, upon such a statement of the case, seems to be placed at a disadvantage in its competition with respect to articles coming from other countries and the manufacturers of which have a cheaper basic article to commence with. Has the minister looked into the point as to whether it is necessary to keep alcohol maturing so long for this purpose? If it is not, of course, there may be some cheapening in that respect. It does seem as though they state, prima facie, a case which is worthy of consideration. The department gets out a great many bulletins, some of which are not very interesting. It would really be interesting if the officers of the department would look into the processes which have been started in other countries and for which great claims have been made, and once in a while summarizing the results of these experiments in other countries. For instance, it would be very interesting if they would summarize in a short bulletin the results of the experiments which have been made in this line and show the relative progress as between ourselves and other countries which may set the people thinking, and which may be a spur to inventive genius outside of the Department of Inland Revenue as to the ways and means by which some similar effects may be produced in this country. But, I would ask the minister in reference to these two points that are referred to here, first, as to the cost of alcohol for manufacturing purposes.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I think my hon. friend is probably mixing up two things. Denatured alcohol or methylated spirits is used for manufacturing purposes. It may be used if we can get it cheaply enough, for fuel and light, for driving motors and things of that kind. But what my hon. friend refers to is pure grain alcohol——

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, that is right.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN —for chemical purposes. An order in council was passed years ago permitting the use of grain alcohol by paying fifteen cents a gallon for the manufacture of anything in the process of manufacture of which the alcohol was destroyed or was so changed that it could not be recovered. That is the law to-day. When the motion of my hon. friend from Winnipeg (Mr. Bole) was up for discussion the other day, the question arose as to whether we could not permit the manufacture of several other articles, chloroform being one, and I submitted the proposition to the chemist of the department. I am advised that he has made a report in which he says that some of the articles that it is proposed to manufacture in Canada might be permitted to be manufactured with perfect safety to the revenue, but that there are several others that my hon. friend from Winnipeg thought that we might manufacture with perfect safety to the revenue that I am advised could not be so manufactured. We cannot permit grain alcohol to go into the possession of the manufacturing druggists of the country to be manufactured, unless in the process of manufacture the alcohol is either destroyed or so changed that it is worthless and cannot be recovered. To that extent only can we encourage manufactures that require alcohol. So long as they change the alcohol and so long as it cannot be restored to its original character as being a potable article, the department will permit the use of alcohol for paying fifteen cents a gallon.

Mr. FOSTER. That might be extended beyond what it has been.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Yes, I am advised that it might be extended to several important articles. But, the complaint made by the writer of the letter to my hon. friend that grain alcohol has to be kept for three years in the warehouse without being sold under this clause is entirely wrong.

Mr. FOSTER. Under that clause probably it is.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. It is quite possible under this clause for any manufacturer to get alcohol out of the warehouse the day after it is manufactured. There is no need of maturing it for three years. Possibly the writer of the letter only takes alcohol that has been three years maturing and for which he pays $1.90 a gallon as many of the druggists throughout the country do.

On section 8,—application for license to manufacture tobacco.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. There is no change in this clause, except that the three last lines of the present Act are dropped.

On section 9—New section 275—fee for license——

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Under the law as it is now there are three different licenses, with fees of $50, $65 and $75 respectively. It is proposed that in future there shall be but one license, with a fee of $50.

On section 10—New section 278—notices to be posted up in tobacco manufactories—

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The change in the notice is due to the fact that there will be but one license, as there will be no question whether the tobacco is imported or Canadian.

On section 11—New section 279—duties of excise on tobacco.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. This clause provides for the changes made in the duties. On manufactured tobaccos and snuffs, the duty is to be 5 cents a pound. At present the duty on snuff is 25 cents a pound.

Mr. CLEMENTS. Does the duty of 5 cents a pound apply to the ordinary twist which the tobacco grower sells to the manufacturer ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Yes.

Mr. CLEMENTS. In the province of Quebec, there has been no tax on twist.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. There has always been a tax. There is no change in that respect.

Mr. CLARKE. There is no duty on the tobacco that a man grows for his own use.

Mr. FOSTER. Do I understand that a man is not liable for duty on what he manufactures for his own use ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The law for years has provided in section 325 that a man may manufacture for the use of himself and his family to the extent of thirty pounds in a year, without paying duty.

Mr. FOSTER. Is the department able to keep track of that fairly well ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I think so. As far as my knowledge goes there has been no abuse of that provision.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the minister ever find some abnormally large families ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Occasionally, especially in the province of Quebec.

On subsection (g)—duty on cigarettes—

Mr. BLAIN. Is there any change in this?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The duty is changed from $3 to $2.40 per thousand.

Mr. BLAIN. I would like to ask the minister, now that he is changing the regulations regarding the manufacture of tobacco, cigars and cigarettes, what the policy of the government is in respect to the cigarette question. I think this would be a favourable opportunity for the government to state their position, in view of the fact that the House some time ago adopted a resolution in favour of prohibiting the manufacture, importation and sale of cigarettes in any part of Canada. I have been waiting for the government to make some pronouncement, and I expected, when this Bill was introduced the government would be prepared to announce their policy. I am quite anxious to know how far the government will disregard the votes of the people's representatives on this question, more especially in view of the fact that some members of the cabinet expressed themselves in the House in favour of it. I am quite sure that the hon. minister, in the preparation of this Bill, gave some consideration to this question and has not disregarded entirely the wishes of the people as expressed in this House.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. This Bill is simply for the purpose of changing slightly the method of collecting duties on tobacco and cigars, and therefore is not one on which we can properly discuss the policy of prohibiting the use of cigarettes.

Mr. SPROULE. You could introduce a clause in this Bill providing that in future no cigarettes may be manufactured or sold.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I am rather sympathetic with regard to the discouragement of the use of cigarettes by our youth, and I believe that something ought to be done on that line by means of an amendment to the Criminal Code. I am not quite prepared to admit that the prohibition of the manufacture and sale of cigarettes would be the proper course. At any rate this is not a Bill on which we can discuss that question.

Mr. BLAIN. That is a very nice statement from my hon. friend the minister, but the people would rather have the minister do something practical to carry out their wishes than merely express sympathy. I would draw his attention to a letter complimenting the government for granting rather special favours to the cigarette manufacturers in Canada rather than carry out the wishes of the people's representatives. As a result of the discussion in the House a short time ago, a cigarette manufacturer in Montreal sent his compliments to each member of the House with a box of cigarettes and a letter.

Mr. BRODEUR. I did not get any.

Mr. FOSTER. That is another grievance for you.

Mr. BLAIN. The letter is as follows :

Montreal, Canada, March 17, 1908.

J. W. Daniel, Esq., M.P.,
Ottawa, Ontario.

Dear Sir,—We take the liberty of transmitting to you to-day a sample of our cigarettes. We have factories established at London, England; Cairo, Egypt, and New York. This sample is from our new Canadian factory in this city and which we are enabled to operate satisfactorily, due alone to this legislation of your honourable House which abolished the sale contract system of the Tobacco Trust. While the tobacco trade do not as yet altogether realize the freedom of trading you have extended by your Act, and while a certain detrimental fear still exists, due to the past and present conduct of the monopoly, a better state of trading prevails and an independent house can operate in this market.

We wish to acknowledge the fact to-day, with thanks.

Respectfully yours,
PHILIP MORRIS & COMPANY,
Limited,
Henry Miles, President.

Mr. CLARKE. That is not the result of this legislation.

Mr. BLAIN. I am not saying it is, but I am trying to find out whether the government are going to make any statement. I placed a resolution on the Order Paper in the early part of the session. In 1903 a resolution was passed binding the majority of the House to stand by the government in the abolition of the importation, manufacture and sale of cigarettes. From time to time, action was postponed and we are still waiting for the happy day when the government will feel strong enough to carry out the wishes of the people. A resolution was discussed some few weeks ago in this House but not put to vote as some supporters of the government talked it out. I thought that was a favourable opportunity for the government to express itself. It seemed to be apropo then, but the government did not take advantage of that resolution and were not prepared to make a statement. It will not do for my hon. friend to confine himself to saying he is in sympathy with the movement. Such sympathy does not go very far. What we want is that the minister should give expression to that sympathy in the form of legislation. Possiby the First Minister, who received the large deputation on this question which filled one of our committee rooms may be able to enlighten us. It is my duty to ask the government what their policy is and what answer they propose to give to the hundred thousand petitioners who have been asking for some special legislation on this line. Whether the government have forgotten their pledge it is not for me to say, but I want to draw the attention of the minister who has charge of this Bill and of the right hon. gentleman to the large number of people who, from year to year, have been asking the government for legislation in conformity with the resolution. I would like the government to make a statement to-day or to declare when they will be prepared to state their policy on this great moral question. It is useless for me to point to the evil effects as these have been discussed in the press and in this House. What the people want to know is the policy of the government.

Mr. BRODEUR. I think that on this question of cigarette smoking, we all sympathize with the idea expressed by my hon. friend (Mr. Blain) so far as the youth of our land are concerned. It is very unfortunate that young people are induced to smoke cigarettes. I think some legislation should be passed for the purpose of doing away with this evil as far as possible, and I would agree with my hon. friend in supporting any legislation wisely designed to that end. The Bill now before us is not for the purpose of legislating in that way, but has to do with the raising of the public revenue. In some respects, the duty on cigarettes has been increased, which, I take it, is a step in the direction that my hon. friend wishes. I sympathize strongly with the idea that we should have legislation to prohibit young people from smoking cigarettes, and merchants and dealers from selling cigarettes to such people.

Mr. FOSTER. Was this increase in the duty made with the idea of mitigating the evil?

Mr. BRODEUR. I say the duty was increased, and this would tend to decrease the consumption.

Mr. FOSTER. Was that the purpose in the mind of the government when the duty was decreased?

Mr. BRODEUR. The main purpose was to equalize the revenue.

Mr. FOSTER. I thought that from what the minister said—and I do not see why he should say it unless it had that bearing—that the government had the idea of mitigating to some extent this bad practice of using cigarettes when it increased the duty. It appears, however, that this was merely a word that escaped the minister's lips, and that it did not express an idea which was in the mind of the government or of the Minister of Inland Revenue when the duties were increased. It might be better if we did not make these assertions unless we meant them, as they might be interpreted by those outside in a wrong way. I am sure my hon. friend (Mr. Brodeur) would be the last man in this House to put it in that way to get the benefit of a wrong interpretation of the object in view in fixing this duty. I think we ought to have more from the government on this subject than we have had. It seems that we have no other opportunity. I was not present when the resolution of my hon. friend from Peel (Mr. Blain) was moved and debated. Had I been here I would have supported him as I did on a former occasion. While there was a sympathetic reception of that resolution on both sides of the House, the resolution seems to have been side-tracked by one of the devices well known to parliamentary practice and now stands where it is impossible, as I understand it, to recover it during the present session. I think my hon. friend from Peel is quite within his rights, when a chance opportunity comes in the form of legislation on this very subject, to ask the government to say what they would have said if this discussion had been allowed its course and had come to a conclusion either by a vote or by a statement made by the government and withdrawal of the motion if the statement were satisfactory. Really, this matter does merit consideration on our part. I do not suppose that you could find a single educationalist in the country who would not tell you that there is scarcely any more deleterious agent at work in depreciating and weakening the intellect of the youth of our country than this insidious habit of cigarette smoking. I think that educationalists will agree with that and that they are more and more pressing forward this idea. I do not suppose you will find a reputable physician who will stake his reputation on the statement that cigarette smoking is beneficial to the health of the young—or of anybody, though the grown person, with fibres set and full growth attained, might smoke cigarettes without receiving any very great injury. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Brodeur) will know that the highest military authorities in Germany and Great Britain have sounded a note of warning concerning the effect of cigarette smoking upon the morale and upon the physicial fibre of the militia and soldiery of their respective countries. In fact, cigarette smoking cannot be proven to be beneficial in any way, and, from all these sources of which I have spoken, we have warnings as to its deleterious effects. Now we spend a lot of money to bring desirable immigrants to this country in order that we may increase the population of Canada. It seems to me we ought to very seriously consider whether we can keep those that are born in our country and grow them up to the best stature of manhood and womanhood by removing deleterious agencies such as the cigarette is acknowledged to be. Why should we, on the one hand, spend money to bring in foreign adults to add to our population, and, on the other hand, allow an influence of this kind to neutralize our efforts by injuring those born in our midst? The matter of revenue is something, but revenue cannot be compared in importance for a moment with the health and well-being of the people. The Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) knows, from the deputations that have waited upon him—and also, no doubt, a great deal of correspondence has reached him—that there is a very widespread interest in this matter throughout the country. I think it may be stated that the best people of Canada are in favour of mitigating as far as possible, and, if possible, prohibiting, this practice in our country. It would be a great help if the Prime Minister could translate his sympathies and that of his friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) into words that would be hopeful and helpful to the important section of the population which is trying to minimize these evils. I think this is a golden opportunity for a word of sympathy if nothing further can be had.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I will approach this question upon the very lines stated by the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) himself. But, I may preface what I have to say on this occasion by stating that in this matter I am absolutely disinterested. I do not use tobacco in any form. If I were to follow my own inclination, I would have no hesitation in prohibiting cigarettes, cigars, smoking tobacco and chewing tobacco as well. But that would be going further perhaps, than would be acceptable to the great majority of this people. Coming to the observations of my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) he has stated that this is a golden opportunity for the government to state their policy on the question brought before the House by my hon. friend from Peel (Mr. Blain) in his resolution to prohibit the importation, manufacture and sale of cigarettes throughout the length and breadth of the land. This is no opportunity at all, I may say, by the way. This Bill is for the purpose of readjusting the excise duties upon tobacco, and has absolutely no connection with the question that has now been brought before the House, the question that was discussed a few days ago on the motion of the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain).

The hon. gentleman asked what opinion I entertained on the subject. When the debate took place some time ago I stated my own view, and I have stated it before. I agree with the hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Foster) that the use of cigarettes by boys is injurious, that is admitted, and seems to be beyond doubt. He has stated also that the use of tobacco or cigarettes by mature men is innoxious. Now if this form of tobacco is injurious to the mature youth but is not noxious to the mature man, would my hon. friend conclude that we should prohibit the use of tobacco to the mature man as well as to the youth? I do not think that would be logical. If the use of cigarettes or tobacco in any form is innoxious to the mature man what reason can there be for depriving him of that comfort? Tobacco as has been very often said, is the luxury of the poor man. Does the hon. gentleman contend that under such circumstances we should deprive him from the use of tobacco, that we should stop its use not only to the person whom it injures but also the person whom it does not injure? I think the remedy suggested by my hon. friend from Peel (Mr. Blain) is too radical, it goes too far, because he wants to prohibit the use of tobacco to a class of people whom it does not injure.

Mr. BLAIN. Keep in view the fact that it is only cigarettes, not tobacco or cigars, that I propose to prohibit.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Exactly, and I take the view of the hon. member for Toronto, that cigarettes, while they are injurious to the mature youth, are absolutely innoxious to the mature man.

Mr. FOSTER. My right hon. friend has misunderstood me. I did not say, at least I did not mean to say that the smoking of cigarettes was innoxious to the mature man; my own opinion is that it is noxious instead of being innoxious. What I said was that it had less effect upon the mature man than upon a younger person. But I do not subscribe to the idea that the smoking of cigarettes is altogether innoxious to the mature man; in fact my citing the opinions of military men as to the harmful effects of cigarettes upon soldiers, was proof that I took the ground that they were noxious and harmful to men.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Perhaps I misunderstood my hon. friend, but I gathered that much from the way he emphasized the fact that the use of the cigarette was not so harmful to a man whose muscles were knit and set as it was to a mature youth, and I thought he had come to the conclusion that it was innoxious to the mature man. At all events, so far as I am concerned, I cannot see how tobacco in one form can be more injurious than in another form. I have never heard any reasoning that convinced me that tobacco used in a paper envelope is more noxious than tobacco used without any wrapper at all, for instance, when used in a pipe. The great mischief which I see in the cigarette is its cheapness. When I was a youngster, if a boy had five cents he invested it in candy; but in these days when a boy has five cents he goes and buys a package of cigarettes. This is the great mischief in the use of tobacco. Does the hon. gentleman think that tobacco itself, which is certainly injurious to the mature youth, whether in the form of cigarettes, cigars or pipe tobacco, should not be allowed to the mature man ? For my part I believe that tobacco in any form is dangerous to the mature boy and should not be allowed. But does my hon. friend believe that there is more danger in the use of tobacco in the shape of a cigarette than in any other form ?

Mr. FOSTER. To the boy, yes.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Why to the boy than to the man? Does the hon. gentleman believe that if a boy smokes a cigar the effect will not be the same as when he smokes a cigarette?

Mr. FOSTER. He will not be so prone to smoke a pipe.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Exactly. As I said the peculiar danger of the cigarette was its cheapness. I must say—I have said it elsewhere to a deputation of ladies who came to interview me upon the subject—that it grates upon my feelings when walking the streets of a city to see a boy with a cigarette in his mouth, and I am tempted, like my hon. friend from Halton (Mr. Henderson), to take the cigarette away and to say : My boy, you should not do that. In fact a few months ago, in the city of Quebec, I met a little lad with a cigarette in his mouth, and I took it away from him and said : My little fellow, you should not do that.

Mr. BERGERON. What did the boy say?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I am sorry to say that the boy was rebellious to my good advice. But I repeat the cigarette is a form of tobacco which is undoubtedly injurious to the boy, but which is perfectly innoxious to the man. My hon. friend from Toronto will not say that a cigarette is any more injurious to a man than a pipe, and he wants to take away from the man the privilege of smoking cigarettes in order that he may preserve the boy from smoking them. That seems to be going too far. I believe there is legislation in every province forbidding or prohibiting the sale of cigarettes to boys; there is legislation in every province preventing boys from indulging in that most mischievous pastime or recreation of smoking cigarettes. It seems to me therefore that we already have sufficient legislation in that regard without asking this parliament to interfere. The proposition seems to me absolutely illogical, I say this with all due deference to my hon. friend, because it seems to me we are going further even than the premises of my hon. friend would logically carry him. I believe moreover that in this matter more can be done by domestic education than by legislation and that the way to treat a boy who has a cigarette in his mouth is to give him a good spanking.

Mr. SPROULE. I think the right hon. gentleman has overlooked one important factor in connection with the danger of cigarettes and tobacco. If I understand him correctly, he holds the opinion that the boy who smokes cigarettes is not more injuriously affected than if he smoked a cigar.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That is my view.

Mr. SPROULE. If the tobacco were treated in both cases absolutely the same, I would say that that view might perhaps be correct. But the fact is that tobacco which is manufactured into cigarettes is treated with other narcotic poisons as well as nicotine, while tobacco made into a cigar is not so treated. For instance the tobacco used for the cigarette is often steeped in a solution of opium so that it has the same effect on the boy as the smoking of opium has on the Chinaman, or a solution of belladona, which is an injurious narcotic poison. That is why, I believe, cigarettes are generally regarded as more injurious than tobacco or cigars. Whether the attention of the Prime Minister has been called to it or not that fact should not be left out of consideration. The hon. Minister of Inland Revenue (Mr. Templeman) and the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) express strong sympathy for the people who desire to prevent the manufacture of cigarettes. Their position reminds me of the story of the man who had no milk or food for his cat and felt so sorry for it that he petted it and sympathized with it and stroked it a great deal. The result was that the cat died, it needed milk, not sympathy. In the same way I feel it will be a long time before these reformers derive any benefit from the sympathy of these two ministers.

I have always understood that a unanimous expression of opinion by this House was practically a command to the government to enact legislation. A similar motion to that of my hon. friend from Peel (Mr. Blain) was adopted two years ago and I believed that the government are in duty bound to take note of it. What are the government going to do ? As to whether or not this is an opportune time for the enactment of this legislation, the Minister of Inland Revenue says that this is only a Bill to change the Inland Revenue duty and it is not an opportune time to prohibit the manufacture of cigarettes. Could we not just as easily say by a clause of this Bill that cigarettes shall not be manufactured or sold as that the rate of duty on certain articles shall be charged. Did we not say that certain articles such as oleomargarine should not be manufactured in the country? By the same parity of reasoning this would be an opportune time to absolutely prohibit the sale of cigarettes as well as to change the rate of taxation on them. If the government do not desire to go that far surely it is not too much to ask them to state to the House what their policy is.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. My hon. friend has advanced a reason in support of this proposal which, if it is true, throws a flood of light upon this question. He has explained why the use of cigarettes is so deleterious, not only to boys but necessarily to mature men also. The reason is that it has been found in the army in Germany and in England that the use of cigarettes was deleterious. This is easily understood if it be true that in the preparation of cigarettes there is introduced not only tobacco but also such deleterious poisons as opium and belladonna. If it be true that there is placed upon the market and offered to the public for consumption a preparation containing opium and belladonna, then we know the cause of the evil and it is not difficult to apply the remedy, and the remedy should be to make a criminal offence to introduce certain deleterious substances into cigarettes or any form of tobacco. If it is true it is certainly a consideration which we should not overlook, this practice should be made an offence.

Mr. SPROULE. I have only to say that in the country of the right hon. minister's origin, it is stated in the medical works that it is an absolute fact and has been the custom for a long time.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. In respect to the statement that cigarettes are adulterated by the introduction of poisons to strengthen the tobacco, within recent months complaints were made to the Inland Revenue Department to the effect that certain cigarettes were doctored up by the use of narcotics of some kind. A collection of cigarettes was made, they were thoroughly analysed by Mr. McGill the chief analyst, and his report was made that there was nothing in the cigarettes save tobacco, he could find no other deleterious substance whatever.

Mr. SPROULE. That may be true with regard to the Canadian manufactured article, but of course I am not speaking as to that, I am speaking of the imported article.

Mr. BARR. Did he examine the paper ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. It must be remembered that there are ten times as many Canadian cigarettes as imported cigarettes on the Canadian market. However, I shall have a further collection of cigarettes made and a very close examination conducted. I have often heard that the paper is so prepared that it is obnoxious. Possibly that is so and it may be that some cigarettes do contain a narcotic ; I know myself that they certainly have a different flavour.

Mr. BLAIN. The right hon. the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) has stated that my position on this question is rather illogical. He states that the resolution which I had the honour of proposing, if carried by the House and legislation enacted embodying its principles, would prohibit altogether the use of cigarettes by all people in Canada. The right hon. gentleman himself forgot the point that a large portion of the cigarettes, the portion which we complain about, is used by boys under sixteen years of age. I believe that the grown up people of Canada, who wish to smoke their pipe or cigar and possibly some of them their cigarette, would be quite willing to forego any desire to smoke cigarettes in order to abolish this evil from the land in the interest of the rising generation. The government have been taking one position in the House and another position in the country. Those of us who are interested in this question are confronted, on the one hand with the statement of some minister, and on the other hand, with the statement of some other minister in the country when they are engaged in elections. Let me give a reference to what the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) stated when this question was up in the House last session. In the discussion page 4077 of 'Hansard' that hon. gentleman said:

> It may be that the reason that these provincial and local laws are ineffective is that the provinces have not sufficient power to control the evil and that it is necessary, in order to control the evil that the law should be passed by the supreme authority of the land, and should be equally effective and equally enforced and equally drastic all over the country. For this reason I would be tempted to support a resolution and a law on the lines herein indicated. I feel, however, that perhaps there has not been that fair effort on the part of the inferior powers in this country to accomplish the end.

Further on, when the discussion was closing, the Minister of Agriculture stated (page 4079 of Hansard) :

> If my hon. friend should propose this motion in the early days of next session, before Christmas. I should be glad to do all I could to put through a measure which would prevent the use of cigarettes by young people. Therefore, unless my hon. friend should amend this motion so as to make it read next session instead of this, I cannot support it. I hope a Bill of this kind will be brought in next session and passed unless we can find other means more effective than those now in force to lessen this evil.

The Minister of Agriculture was speaking for the government as I understood him. He said, in order to get rid of the resolution for the time being, that he would be very glad next session to support a resolution along the lines of the resolution that I had up for discussion at that time and which was again debated in this House a few weeks ago. I regard this as an important question. It is all very well for ministers of the Crown to stand up and say that they sympathize with this movement but the people of the country expected the government to face this question and to legislate upon it. It is either right or wrong that the young people of Canada should smoke cigarettes and if the right hon. gentleman had the power to take the cigarette from a boy and chastise him upon the street in the city of Quebec, he would not fail in the greater duty which confronts him and his government. The right hon. gentleman must remember some of his ministers have stated that they are in favour of legislation of this kind, they have the power to put upon the statute-book legislation that will drive out this evil and protect the youth of Canada and I think it is the duty of the government to do that this session. We have been waiting for it since 1903. Long prior to 1903, when the Liberal-Conservative party were in power, all through the province of Ontario, the Women's Christian Temperance Union held meetings, passed resolutions, requested some candidates for parliament to make a pronouncement upon this question and gave expression to their belief that when the Liberal party came into power they would drive out all these evils which were such a burden on the hearts of the members of the Women's Christian Temperance Union particularly in the province of Ontario. It was the same way with regard to the liquor question — another moral question. The right hon. gentleman when in the city of Winnipeg, promised the people prohibition if the people voted for it and every province except Quebec voted in favour of it. Yet, the right hon. gentleman pushed it aside. Nothing has been heard of it since. They were going to abolish the bar in the House of Commons, and the hon. Minister of Agriculture the other day, in one of the provinces, stated that he never knew a bar was open in the House of Commons.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. BLAIN. It was the Bar of Justice, I suppose, that he was referring to. We had this government coming into power, trying to carry out the pledges that they gave to the people on moral questions, and they suggested moving the bar from the House of Commons over to the Senate. Everybody knows that there is a bar in the House of Commons where you can get liquor. I am told they put a door keeper on the bar the other day to keep messengers out and let members of parliament have more room I suppose. As to whether that is right or wrong, Mr. Chairman, I have nothing to say, and I only touch upon this question as it affects the great moral questions upon which pledges were given by the Liberal party when they were out of office and seeking the votes of the people. Now, they have been in office since 1896. In 1903 a resolution was introduced by a supporter of their own calling for the abolition of the manufacture and sale of cigarettes. That resolution was carried by a handsome majority. The Women's Christian Temperance Union and the supporters if this great moral movement went away perfectly satisfied. They said : Of course, possibly the government will not have an opportunity at this moment to carry the resolution into effect by legislation, but at the next session of parliament it will be done. From 1903 down to this moment we have had nothing except resolutions discussed and statements from one minister or another to the effect that at the next session of parliament they will be glad to assist in placing upon the statute-book legislation prohibiting the manufacture and sale of cigarettes.

Now, when a minister of the Crown has a Bill touching this very question the government say : We are not ready to give any promise ; we have no policy, and they really have no policy except that stated by the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) who informs us that they have decided to put up the duty a little higher. The hon. gentleman suggests that possibly that will satisfy those who are in favour of legislation upon this subject. We expected an announcement to-day, and I may say that the right hon. gentleman will not satisfy his own friends, hundreds and thousands in number in every province, who believe that this is a great evil and that the time of parliament could not be better taken up than in discussing and placing on the statute-book something to drive out the evil. I pointed out in this House a few weeks ago that during the nine months ended March 31, 1907, there were 275,000,000 cigarettes consumed by the people of Canada. In so far as those were consumed by grown up people I have not very much to say. All I can say is that I believe that grown up people some of whom smoke cigarettes, would be quite willing to join hands with the government and to say that in the interest of their boys and girls and in the interest of the future of Canada they would be prepared to set that aside and confine themselves to the smoking of pipes and cigars. This is a golden opportunity which I expect the government to take advantage of in order to make a statement as to their policy upon this question. I do not suggest that they should legislate on it in connection with the Bill before the House, but what I do say is that they should make a statement to the people of Canada and the members of the cabinet who pledged their support to this proposition should see that the government do something on the question. The people of Canada will not be satisfied with promises made occasionally in the House or on the hustings when a by-election is going on. But in view of the fact that a majority of this House in the session of 1903 voted in favour of the proposition and that a majority of the people of Canada are in favour of legislation on the question, it is the duty of the government to make plain to the people of Canada at this session what their policy is—whether it is in favour of legislation or is opposed to legislation. Then the people of this country will know what the position of the government is.

Mr. FOSTER. If I understand this legislation, its object is to do away with all distinctions, so that the purchaser will not know whether he is buying the product of the foreign leaf or the Canadian leaf.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The object of the legislation is to permit foreign tobacco and Canadian tobacco to be used together in the one factory and the one package, and there will be only one stamp which will indicate the tax paid.

Mr. FOSTER. Your imported raw leaf and Canadian leaf go into the same package, and you cannot tell by the label whether the package contains mixed tobacco or foreign tobacco only or Canadian leaf only.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. That is the effect.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the object?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Its object is to permit the use of Canadian tobacco in all packages. One of the handicaps of Canadian tobacco has been the rebate of the duty when cuttings of foreign tobacco were exported. The factories using foreign tobacco could not use Canadian tobacco because we could not allow a rebate on the cuttings of Canadian tobacco. That was a great handicap on the use of Canadian tobacco. Another handicap was the stigma attached to the reputation of Canadian tobacco, which formerly was not so good as the imported, and the use of a distinguishing label kept up that stigma. But Canadian tobacco is greatly improved to-day and is susceptible of greater improvement, so that I do not think this handicap should be continued as it would be by our continuing the use of a special label. The great object is to have Canadian tobacco used in common with the tobacco of any other country in the same factory.

Mr. FOSTER. The minister says the object is to remove the handicap on Canadian tobacco. Would he have been equally as correct if he had said that the object is to remove the distinction between tobacco imported in the raw leaf and made in Canada and tobacco made from the Canadian raw leaf? Would not that be equally specific and true? The minister admits that the opinion so far has been that the imported raw leaf is superior to the Canadian? By this legislation he is not only endeavouring to take away the handicap from the Canadian raw leaf but to give it the advantage in so far as that preference has to be considered?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I claim that Canadian tobacco has suffered serious disadvantage, and I want to remove that disadvantage.

Mr. FOSTER. I am not an authority on tobacco; but if any one is, it ought to be the minister. Is it his opinion that the Canadian is equally as good as the imported tobacco?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I would not claim that speaking generally, but I do claim that there is grown in Canada a considerable quantity of tobacco as good as any imported into Canada except the finer grades of Cuban tobacco. We know that there are great possibilities in Canada for the growth of good tobacco. The great question in the production of first-class tobacco is the harvesting of the crop and the curing of the weed. These are things concerning which our farmers have much yet to learn, but all the tobacco imported into Canada, whether in the manufactured state or in the raw leaf, is not good tobacco. There are many inferior cigars imported, and many of the Canadian cigars are better than even some of the imported cigars from Cuba.

Mr. FOSTER. Of course we must compare equal grades. What I gather from the hon. gentleman is that in his opinion Canadian tobacco is not better than the imported. I am not personally interested, but I know it is an objection to this legislation that you are obliterating the difference which absolutely exists and are trying to give an advantage to the Canadian product which it does not intrinsically possess. I am willing to go a fair distance in giving the Canadian product an advantage, but that may be carried a little too far. Has my hon. friend squared himself with the cigar manufacturers on the question of this one label? Have they not protested? I have a protest under my hand.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. This legislation has been talked about for some time, and at first there was considerable opposition from the cigar manufacturers. That was largely due to the fear that the change in the colour of the labels would, in some way or other, affect their particular trade. They considered the label as indicating a particular brand, whereas all it proved is that the duty has been paid. But they have recently realized that their fears in that respect were groundless. We had delegations here representing the Hamilton and London Cigarmakers. Representatives of these firms stated that, if we did not by this legislation increase the duties paid, they had no objection to the adoption of one label. The manufacturers, generally, I think, take that view. To some extent, the cigarmakers—the workmen—have objected.

Mr. FOSTER. Have they withdrawn that objection ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. No, I cannot say so. That objection has come principally from the city of London. I have not heard much of it from Montreal or from cities west of London. These men say that by the use of Canadian tobacco, which, they say, is cheaper and inferior, a lower grade of cigars may be made that will be sold at prices less than the cigars they are making, and consequently the wages paid the cigarmaker will be smaller than those now paid. I must say I do not fear anything of that kind. Smokers choose cigars on their merits and not on the label.

Mr. FOSTER. I received this from one union :

We, the cigarmakers of Union 27, Toronto, strongly protest against the alteration of stamps on cigars as being inimical to our interests as cigarmakers.

That is a sample of many that I have received. My object was to find out whether the minister had talked this matter over, and whether the union makers of cigars were fairly well pleased and had accepted their programme.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I think that some of the union men in London and probably Toronto and other places have the view that the change to one label will affect the making of cigars. I think that many cigarmakers are quite satisfied, but the telegram read by the hon. member from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) shows that some are not.

Mr. BEATTIE. I believe the change in the stamps is going to affect the cigar trade very much. The minister hardly puts it fairly. He knows that with the change to only one stamp any man who goes into a store who is not a good judge will have no idea of what he is buying. He cannot tell whether it is Canadian or partly or wholly foreign leaf.

Mr. BRODEUR. It is the same to-day. The buyer of a cigar with a black stamp which would be supposed to be manufactured with foreign leaf may contain Canadian leaf.

Mr. BEATTIE. There is a special stamp for the foreign.

Mr. BRODEUR. No.

Mr. BEATTIE. That is my understanding. There is a black stamp for the foreign cigar.

Mr. BRODEUR. The cigar that bears the black stamp may be made of Canadian tobacco provided they pay on the Canadian tobacco the same duty as would be paid on the foreign leaf. So the black stamp does not convey the assurance that it is a foreign leaf cigar.

Mr. BEATTIE. I thought that the stamp showed which was the foreign leaf cigar.

Mr. BRODEUR. Only the blue stamp.

Mr. BEATTIE. Very well. But that blue stamp is to be done away with. Consequently, if I go into a store to buy a cigar I have to depend altogether on the merchant —I have to take his word. I am not a heavy smoker of cigars, though I smoke a little, and do not pretend to judge by the appearance of a cigar, but depend upon the stamp. Why do we in sending our apples abroad stamp them according to the grade, No. 1, No. 2, or No. 3? Is it not to protect the consumer? Our apples are to go to a foreign market, but the cigars we consume ourselves. I think the change is simply made for the purpose of forcing the Canadian consumer to smoke Canadian tobacco without giving them the means of knowing what it is they are buying. I have sympathy with everything Canadian and would be glad to assist in putting the Canadian leaf on the market, but at the same time if a man wants a foreign cigar he has a right to get it and to know what he is buying. London is a very important place for the production of cigars. I believe it is the second largest in Canada. The hon. minister knows that what I say is correct.

Mr. DUBEAU. Referring to section 13 of the Bill, I would like to know if the manufacturer, upon the payment of the rates and duties mentioned in the section, shall have the option of placing on said tobacco and cigars when offered for sale the uniform stamp?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I think not.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. I have sympathy with the remarks made by the hon. member for London (Mr. Beattie). It seems to me that the attempt in this Bill is to facilitate the sale of Canadian leaf as foreign leaf. If we are to encourage the use of Canadian leaf—and with that I am thoroughly in sympathy—I think it should be done openly and above board, and no advantage taken by a shuffling of the stamps which will confuse the consumer. I think the hon. member for London is right in saying that purchasers of cigars, as a rule, are guided by the stamp on the cigar, which stamps are supposed to indicate whether the cigars are of foreign or of domestic leaf. If the government wish—and I presume they do —to encourage the use of Canadian leaf, in my opinion the proper way is to do it openly by increasing the duty on imported leaf, thus giving an advantage to the home-grown leaf in a proper and straightforward way. But that is not being done under this Bill as I understand it.

The hon. member for London (Mr. Beattie) has stated that many men cannot judge at sight whether cigars are of foreign leaf or home leaf. It is too late, after a man has smoked a cigar, for him to say: Well, that was Canadian leaf and I bought it believing it was foreign leaf. He has smoked the cigar and found it was not up to the quality he expected, and makes his complaint afterwards. There should have been a proposition made by the government, in my opinion that would have covered the case a little better than that, a proposition that would have been at the same time open and above-board. My suggestion would be that instead of raising the excise it should be left at 25 cents, and that the duty on the foreign leaf should be increased to 10 cents. That would make in all 35 cents, and would have given the home product an advantage in the duty which would have brought about I think an increased consumption in Canada of the home grown leaf. I am convinced that would be a right policy to pursue, and the government should not have endeavoured to bring it about by a shuffling of stamps so as to deceive the purchasing public. The public should understand what they are getting, but they cannot understand unless there is something on the box to indicate whether it is home or foreign leaf, or partly home and partly foreign. No change that will deceive the consumer is justifiable by the department. The government should increase the duty on the imported foreign leaf. That might increase the revenue also, and would place the article on its own merits before the people, and it would be left for them to say whether they were prepared to pay the higher price for the foreign leaf or to take the home grown at a lesser price. I believe that the view expressed by the hon. member for London will be the view of the large majority of cigar manufacturers in Canada, and I trust that the government will reconsider their proposition.

Mr. CLEMENTS. In my opinion the customs duty should have been raised and the excise should have been lowered. I never took the ground in the past, and never believed, that the use of one stamp only would benefit the grower to any extent; at the same time I cannot see where it is going to affect him in any way. So far as I am concerned I am prepared to buy cigars on their merits. So far as I know, I do not think any other country in the world brands their cigars as we have been doing.

Mr. MONK. We who represent counties where tobacco is grown do not look upon this measure as one intended to improve the growing of native tobacco, but as the removal of a grievance. I know of no other article which is stamped, as in this case, with stamps of different colours. Our view was that the government, by putting a different coloured stamp upon the Canadian tobacco, encouraged the prejudice which for many years existed against that article. There is no doubt that for many years there was not much improvement in the cultivation, the curing and the preparation of Canadian tobacco, on account of the prejudice existing against it. It was then probably that the different coloured stamps were invented; and now that the cultivation of Canadian tobacco has so greatly improved, we consider that the use of these different coloured stamps is a grievance. I do not think the government was wrong in removing that grievance. It seems to me that the government is not called upon to indicate to the purchaser the kind of tobacco that he is buying. The object is to collect revenue upon a specific article; it is not the duty of the government to indicate to the purchaser that he is buying Canadian or foreign tobacco, it is for the purchaser to assure himself of the quality. I think the customs duty on foreign tobacco at the present time is high enough. The manufacturers or cigar unions who have protested against this measure, when they come to realize the object of the demands that have been made for a uniformity of stamps, will either withdraw, or at any rate diminish the force of their protest. I think it proper to make this statement, because this is a grievance which we have sought to have removed for more than fifteen years. I do not see that any valid reason has been given why we should brand, so to speak, the Canadian product with a specially coloured stamp which, under the circumstances I have indicated, is harmful to the industry.

Mr. GALLIHER. I am glad to see that the Minister of Inland Revenue has taken this course with regard to these stamps. I brought that matter before the House in 1903. A portion of the district I then represented, namely, the neighbourhood of Kelowna in the Okanagan district, grew a very excellent quality of tobacco, I think if not the best, at all events one of the best qualities of tobacco grown in Canada. The soil there is particularly well adapted to the growing of good tobacco, and after the removal of this discrimination against Canadian tobacco as proposed by this Bill, I think that industry will flourish and become important. I agree with the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) that the branding of Canadian tobacco with a green stamp, with the prejudice that existed against it, was a discrimination and a notice to all the world that it was an inferior tobacco that was being manufactured into cigars. After all, a man will smoke the cigar that he likes, whatever be the colour of the stamp. I am a smoker myself, and I think a fairly good judge of cigars, and I have found many imported cigars that I considered of inferior quality, and they are not improving in late years ; although there are some cigars that are keeping up to the standard of their brands pretty well. I am glad to see that the Minister of Inland Revenue is proposing to abolish the discriminating and distinguishing stamp which I complained of in 1903.

Mr. GANONG. Is it not a fact that in the United States they have a distinguishing stamp for imported cigars?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. So far as we know, they have but one stamp.

Mr. DUGAS. As bearing upon this question, I would like to read an article which I find in the Canadian Cigar and Tobacco 'Journal' :

The only other demand is that the present regulations requiring separate factories for the production of this class of goods and separate, distinctive stamps for Canadian, combination and foreign leaf products be abolished, and the regulations so simplified with a single stamp and single license, as to permit the manufacturer to use Canadian tobacco in any desired manner.

It has been contended in the past that these regulations were necessary to prevent the public from being deceived as to what leaf was contained in the particular brand they purchased, and it is contended by the farmer that the practical result is to close the doors of nearly every factory in Canada to his leaf, and by the green and pink stamp to also put a badge of inferiority on his tobacco when it is offered to the prejudiced public.

Looking into the subject one is first confronted by the fact that no country in the world so stamps its own produce, and in the United States, to which we are always prone to turn for illustration, all tobacco products, whether made from American leaf, solely from foreign leaf, or from both in combination, one factory only is necessary, and only one revenue stamp is issued. Why, as a matter of plain common sense, should a manufacturer have to go to the enormous expense of equipping a separate factory and organization before he will be permitted to manufacture the product of his own country? To an impartial observer having no personal interest involved, the proposition seems as absurd as it is unjust. Every one in the trade knows only too well that this law has prevented the experimental use of Canadian tobacco in cigar factories and has effectively closed the doors of 235 cigar factories to the farmer who searches for a market for his crop. Little wonder then that no cigar leaf is grown in Canada to-day, when the factory door is closed to its use. There must necessarily be demand before there can be supply, and the market must be opened before this type of leaf will ever be grown in commercial quantity.

The other contention as to the necessity of green, pink and black stamps for the protection of the public seems equally hypocritical and absurd. Is Canadian tobacco more injurious to health that the public must be protected? One would almost think it was a poisonous article that must be labelled so that the public could discriminate and purchase a non-poisonous article. Do we protect the public by a yellow stamp against the cigar made in a mold, and sold. by inference at least, as hand-made goods? Do we, or should we, place a purple stamp on the clear Havana cigar to show its superiority over the seed and Havana product? Do we place a white stamp on the cigar made from American leaf, and which also reaches the public as a presumably Havana filled cigar? This solicitous interest in protecting the public cannot but bring a cynical smile to all familiar with the trade, and the time is ripe for us to discard such a hypocritical cloak. The consumer has an absolute protection in every cigar and every piece of tobacco he purchases, and that protection lies in the trade mark or brand under which it is sold. If the quality suits his palate, he purchases again, and factory regulations and separate stamps are quite unnecessary for his protection. Canadian tobacco will die out just as soon as it does not satisfy the public taste and it will increase in consumption just so far as it pleases the consumer. It is but fair that all handicaps should be removed from it, and it be given a clear field, free from triple factory obstruction and with reasonable protection to prove its worth. This freedom and this protection must necessarily precede and not succeed the demonstration of its worth. The law of supply and demand is arbitrary. The demand must precede the supply, and the conditions must be made favourable before the demand can be created.

Mr. BEATTIE. You stated in that article that in the United States they do not designate the cigars made in that country by different stamps. As a matter of fact the stamps are entirely different both in colour and in shape on an imported cigar and a domestic cigar.

Mr. CLARKE. It is not a different stamp on tobacco manufactured there.

Mr. BEATTIE. Entirely different in colour and shape on a domestic and a foreign cigar.

Mr. CLARKE. You are referring to stamps on cigars manufactured in the United States and cigars imported.

Mr. BEATTIE. The stamp on cigars manufactured in the United States is entirely different from that on imported cigars.

Mr. CLARKE. That is entirely different from this.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. F. O. DUGAS (Montcalm). (Translation.) Mr. Chairman, just before recess at six o'clock, I was quoting the opinion of a paper which is considered as an authority on the subject, and the protests of the hon. member for London (Mr. Beattie) seem to me to have been unwarranted. That paper is known to voice the interests of all tobacco manufacturers in Canada, not only of those being the Canadian leaves, but also of those working foreign tobaccos. The hon. gentleman will admit that his friends, whose opinions he claims to expound here, have on other occasions, shown greater faith in that paper than he, for one, exhibits to-day. Thus, I find that the friends of the member for London, are only too glad to advertise their goods through the medium of that publication. Messrs. Line, McDonald & Co., of London. Ont., consider that there is no better means to insure the sale of their products. They are large cigar manufacturers. In the number for September, 1905, the firm of Line, McDonald & Co., have the following advertisement :

This label is no new one to you, Mr. Retailer. It distinguishes that box in your show case from which you sell more cigars in a day than from any other box in your store. That is, if you are one of those dealers who handle the El Cielo. If you are not one of them, you are one of a very small minority. It will pay you to join the majority of Canadian tobacconists and get your share of the trade in those exceptionally fine 10 cent cigars.

In the same issue, I find some correspondence from London wherein the quality of the tobacco manufactured by Line, McDonald & Co. is extolled :

Mr. R. D. McDonald, of Line, McDonald & Company, returned this week from Great Britain and Europe, whither he went ten weeks ago a member of the Canadian Manufacturers' touring party. That the pleasureable, no less than the business side of the extended journeying, appealed to the well-known cigar manufacturer one need but to see his ample form, to which he added, while away, some 25 pounds. Mr. McDonald is fully convinced of the proud place Canada holds in the heart of the motherland.

And further on, in the same correspondence, Tuckett & Co. are put in evidence :

Tuckett & Company's employees and their friends, to the number of four hundred, spent a day together at Port Stanley last Saturday week. It was their annual picnic, and the day passed in games and boating, with an inspection of lunch baskets at regular intervals of the hill.

And further on :

The Jap cigar is meeting with enormous favour throughout the west. The war has brought the name of the plucky Jap to the top, and at the same time has made the choice Jap cigar to be noted from end to end of the Dominion. There is talk in the air of a large increase to the factory here.

In another issue of the same paper attention is given more particularly to London tobacco manufacturers :

As for the fair itself, it was an excellent exhibition. In the main building Tuckett & Company showed the art of making Marguerites to the thousands of visitors. How their package goods are put up are also demonstrated, ten or twelve experts being engaged. The exhibit created so much interest, the aisles were often impassable.

Almost every number of that paper contains correspondence from London, Ont.

The extracts which I have previously quoted show conclusively that there is no reason to retain any longer the three distinct brands on tobaccos manufactured in Canada. However, it may be well to quote a few more extracts from the same paper :

The prejudice of the public with reference to the imported and domestic products of every class is well-known to be deep-rooted. Our population is mostly alien, and from other shores. They have been educated to the goods of their home country, and in their eyes this foreign article is necessarily the best. We must strip each article of all foreign marks and compel the consumer to distinguish the best article solely on merit instead of by prejudice. The 'Journal' frankly admits that for years it has opposed Canadian tobacco, and its opinions have changed solely by force of fact and evidence that it cannot dispute. The tariff of 1896 was thought absurd. We now see its wisdom and deem it in the best interests of every cigar and tobacco manufacturer in this country that we now take a further progressive step.

There is just one more phase of the question that we cannot refrain from touching on before closing. For years Canada stood still, and our best blood crossed the line to become citizens of another country. Quite recently a new era has opened. Canada is waking up as a nation; population is migrating to our shores; capital is looking favourably to our vast undeveloped resources; new railways are being pushed across our continent and a general national spirit is awakening. We have never known such prosperity and progress in Canada as we have to-day. Have we, then, whose lot has been cast in the cigar and tobacco industry, not a duty to perform to that industry—and to our country? If we can contribute our little mite to the upbuilding of Canada by assisting in the creation and development of a leaf tobacco industry within our Dominion, that will supply the greater proportion of the tobacco requirements of our people and give that much more wealth to our farmer and our nation, is not our duty clear?

The hon. member for London possibly found the views of that paper more in accordance with his own, in 1897, when he was opposing the enactment of a duty of 10 cents per lb. on foreign leaf, but the tobacco manufacturers whose interests are voiced by this paper, have come to understand what great benefits would accrue to those engaged in the growing and manufacturing of tobacco from the use of a uniform brand and insist on its being adopted in place of the three distinctive brands. I will go further. The prejudices which existed at the time as regards Canadian tobacco are fast disappearing; and the proposal now before the committee, if adopted, will likely have the effect of gradually doing away with them.

What has been the trend of events since 1897, when a duty of 10 cents per pound was enacted on imports of foreign tobacco ? Considerable progress has resulted therefrom. In 1897, tobacco manufacturers consumed only a half million pounds of Canadian tobacco, while to-day the quantity has enormously increased, six million pounds of Canadian tobacco being utilized by our manufacturers, a fact which never occurred heretofore.

Improvement is noticeable not only as regards quantity, but also as regards quality. In 1901, the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) with a view to developing the exports of Canadian tobacco towards foreign markets, instructed Mr. Labelle, of Saint-Jacques, in the county of Montcalm, to prepare and forward to Belgium samples of Canadian tobacco. These samples were examined by the most competent experts, and these experts have prepared a report setting forth the results of their investigation. Extracts from that report I propose quoting here.

But before proceeding any further, I may say that the samples of tobacco sent to Belgium had not been properly put up. The Department of Agriculture had decided to forward these samples of Canadian tobacco in the manner in which they were then put on the market, that is to say, without any special care. Nevertheless, the Belgian experts found that the quality was good, and that our product was such as to find a market in their country.

I shall now quote the opinion of Messrs. Nyssens Brothers, of Antwerp, Belgium. The samples then forwarded had been put up in separate cases each bearing a distinctive number :

No. 7. The Granville Yellow is the best grade of everything. This tobaco although somewhat wild and nondescript has been well cured and has retained a nice sweet flavour and it will be very well for a cutter. The sorting is defective, though, still such sort of tobacco will sell easily.

Our general impression after we have given this tobacco all our attention and a thorough test, is that some good tobacco can be raised in Canada, but your people lack experience and ought to be educated to produce a good leafy sound tobacco, for cutting and chewing.

If your people will simply look at what is done in Virginia and in the west, they will very soon come to the conclusion that almost all the tobaccos are re-dried as they come out of the farmer's hands, and in this way they retain their natural colour and they acquire this sweet honey flavour which is so much liked now-a-days by all the smokers.

Such was the estimate made in 1901 of our tobaccos forwarded to Belgium under very unfavourable conditions.

In 1903, the government resolved to send further samples of Canadian tobacco to Belgium, and even to London, England. On that occasion, the hon. Minister of Agriculture instructed Mr. J. Blaise Dugas, of St. Jacques, a tobacco planter of wide experience, to go to Europe and obtain from merchants there statements as regards the quality of our tobacco. Mr. Dugas returned to Canada a few months later, with numerous statements obtained from experts in Belgium, London and Liverpool. I shall quote once more from the report of Mr. Edward Nyssens, of Nyssens Brothers, of Antwerp, Belgium, president of the Board of Trade (tobacco section), and president of the Belgium tobacco syndicate :

Case No. 1, lot 1. Fair quality is a heavy type, will make good cuttings' for pipe tobacco being pretty leafy. Would advise growers who have suitable soil to cultivate this type which can only be used here for smoking, as manufacturers of chewing tobacco use a cheaper article sweetened and prepared to sell cheap.

Case No. 2, lot 1. More care should be taken in sorting. There are very good leaves in this lot. The quality should be uniform throughout and not mixed.

Case No. 3, lot 1. I believe these two crops are about the best in the lot of eight first cases. It would make cigars. It has a good appearance generally for a mixed lot and it is in very good condition.

Case No. 4, lot 2. Good for Canadian tobacco. I would recommend you to grow seed leaves for cigar manufacture.

Case No. 6, lot 2. This is a good Canadian type. It has body and to its grower's credit it has been well taken care of. Would also encourage the culture of this type when soil is suitable. It is my experience as a tobacco grower that the soil has a great deal to do with the quality and general appearance of the product.

Case No. 8, lot 2. This is a fair lot, has good aroma. It might make cigars as I remarked before I would advise you to plant seed leaf when soil is suitable. Be careful not to break or tear a leaf while harvesting your crop. Torn, spotted or ragged leaves lower the value of the good causing it to be graded as No. 2 or lower.

I shall now quote the opinion of Mr. Oscar Visser, importer of leaf tobacco, of Antwerp, Belgium, who also examined these same samples of tobacco, by himself, all these experts acting separately when making their inspection of our tobaccos :

Case No. 5, lot 1. After testing some leaves consider it burns well but has been handled too dry and consequently is somewhat broken. Know comparatively nothing of culture but let your growers try the cigar types and improve their methods of preparation. There is not a great difference between Connecticut and Havanas.

Case No. 7, lot 4. This is the best of the four lots. It burns well and has good aroma. Would suggest you doing as I am told they do in Wisconsin and other states i.e., have the crops well selected. Cigar tobaccos sell for good prices, the balance for 'cutters' at any price obtainable.

Case No. 8 lot 2. With care in selection of types, Canadian growers can produce an article very suitable for this market. They should learn to prepare the tobacco properly.

Another Belgium expert thus expressed himself :

Case No. 2, lot 1. Canadian tobaccos are of good quality. It burns well, the ashes are white and this is a good point in its favour.

Mr. Henry Pauwels, of Antwerp, ex-president of the Board of Trade, stated, after examining these same samples :

Case No. 2, lot 1. If well attended to Canadian growers should make more money in seed leaf. The competition is much greater in cutting types as there is a much larger quantity of it produced. We buy cutters from the United States of America for four and five cents per pound, and can get all we want of it at this price. In the lot you are showing there is more seed leaf than cutters and it could be wonderfully improved by sorting. Sixty pounds of good sound tobacco is worth more money than seventy-five or eighty pounds of mixed.

Mr. MONK. (Translation.) Will the hon. member allow me to put him a question? Are those extracts from the report of Mr. Mireau ?

Mr. DUGAS. (Translation.) No, from that of Mr. Blaise Dugas.

Mr. MONK. (Translation.) What is the date ?

Mr. DUGAS. (Translation.) 1903.

Case No. 4, lot 1. Fair colour and very suitable for cigars. The leaves shrink in fermenting and become darker, but care should be taken not to ferment tobacco too much as it is likely to injure it.

Case No. 5, lot 1. Good for fillers only. Contains some good leaves. Havana and Connecticut are seed leaves. This lot smells well and would make good cutter. It is much easier to find 'cutters' than cigar tobacco and consequently the former is much cheaper. Once again I tell your growers can do well in tobacco if they only have the desire to do it.

Case No. 6, lot 1. This tobacco is considered too good for chewing here. Chewing tobacco must be cheap. It is a good 'cutter' and contains some good cigar leaves but nobody will sort it for you. It all sells as 'cutters' when not sorted.

Case No. 6, lot 2. Good brown colour, burns well and is similar to lot one. A brown, glossy, thin leaf that has body which does not tear in handling is the best. The size of the hands makes little difference.

Case No. 8, lot 1. Fair average quality, has good large leaves and burns well. I honestly believe Canadians can produce an article which would be very suitable for the Belgian market.

Case No. 8, lot 2. Good seed leaf. Had this lot been fermented it would have been a shade darker and would have been better liked. It is one of the best lots.

After obtaining the statements of opinion which I have just mentioned, Mr. Blaise Dugas proceeded to London, and Liverpool, England. There also he submitted to the inspection of experts the samples of tobacco which he had taken along with him. I shall quote herewith some of the evidence thus obtained. The statement of Mr. Muller, of Messrs. W. O. Muller & Co., of London, is as follows :

The samples you are showing here are much better and would sell now if it was stripped, for London market, all tobacco must be sorted and stem taken out, sorted as to colour and size of leaves, 20 or 22 inches is considered good. No objections to larger leaves, colour brown, texture fine and strong appearance glossy and silky, packed when fermented and dry. In cases of 250 or 300.

In order to give your tobacco industry a footing, it needs some organization controlled by planters or others. I heard that in New South Wales and other States of Australia, the governor has interested himself. Can not say exactly in what way. Once a start made, it would be easier matter. Do careful preparation both in sorting and fermenting and ere long buyers and exporters will come to you.

As your tobacco is now, it is not ready for London market. Might be on the continent, Liverpool or Bristol markets. Have no doubts that with more attention to the sorting and fermenting you may do good on English markets. In all cases, manufacturers will not handle unstemmed or unfermented tobacco.

It was several years before Wisconsin tobacco was as good as now. We pay it 25 cents per pound binder.

I am of opinion that with proper knowledge, Canadians can produce a tobacco very acceptable for this market as I remark in your samples some very good leaves.

Should your government desire more information regarding the exportation of tobacco to London we would be pleased to correspond with them. Our references are The Chartered British North Borneo Company and our bankers are Cline, Mills, Currie & Co., bankers.

It may have been noticed that exporters are instructed to take the stem of the tobacco leaf. The reason is that there is a duty of three shillings per pound levied on tobacco. The stems being of no use, it is clearly advisable to do away with them and thus avoid paying duty uselessly. Hence the request.

The opinion of Mr. John K. Gilliat, of the firm of J. K. Gilliat & Co., of Liverpool, is as follows :

We have never seen Canadian tobacco before.

And further on :

We should be pleased to receive a sample case of your tobaccos, 100 pounds, in hands assorted and tied as suggested above.

Your tobaccos would undoubtedly look better if they were put up properly for export. We prefer large heavy leaves in cutters and a few holes in the leaves does not impair the value very much.

I quote herewith the opinion of Mr. C. S. Clark, of the firm of William Clark & Sons, of Liverpool :

We buy most of our stock from Henderson Company, Kentucky. Most of the tobacco used by us has the peculiar wood smoke smell remarked in Bulgium. Yellow briar is mostly used by us, we prefer good sound heavy tobacco which goes into cutting and cigarette mixture. We do not want heavy types fermented, but seed leaf should be. Selected as to colour and size of leaf.

Canadian growers should send for experienced hands from there or send some one to learn their methods of drying and curing. Tobacco is put on market after being inspected in co-operative warehouses and sold on guarantee samples from inspectors.

As to seed leaf, we favour Wisconsin and Pennsylvania, it pays better and is of easier sale than heavy cutting types. You may learn from them something to your advantage. We buy in Janesville, Wisconsin. We would like to hear from Canadian growers again. There is an increasing demand for cheap brands of tobacco all over England, and should they be disposed to sell at prices others do, they can certainly have their share of the exportation business. They should make the coarse types as heavy as they can and assort and form the seed leaf.

The statement of Mr. Frank Goodwin, of the firm of Edwards & Goodwin, of Liverpool, is as follows :

Heavy tobaccos need not be fermented, but should be stemmed for our market.

The samples we see are quite acceptable, but they should be made heavier, it would pay the growers better; they cannot be too coarse as long as they burn well. We deal in Kentucky. Tennessee and Ohio cutting types, Kentucky, Tennessee and Ohio cutting types, unstripped and stripped. Your tobaccos should be sorted into cutting and cigar leaf, as they are we cannot quote it at over 4½ in Some of your samples we recognize as seed leaf and almost too good for cutting purposes, but we have no demand for cigar tobaccos. To make cutters, let it be as heavy as possible.

Another British expert, Mr. Bransome, of Liverpool, says :

The smell of hickory wood is much liked in tobacco for cutters. This smell is obtained by burning the wood in slow fire whilst drying the tobacco, but cannot give full information as to how it is done. You must not expect to jump to the first rank as exporters because there are a good many things to be learned from experience by you. You should adopt the American methods of curing and sorting. The hands should comprise from 10 to 15 leaves tied close to end of stem, and for sample put up in a package of about four pounds tied with good twine at five or six inches in the butt end, attach a tag to each sample of four pounds describing the type as the case may be. Seed leaf make good cutters, but are not heavy and cannot pay growers as well as when fermented and prepared for cigars.

From the above I draw the conclusion that there is no reason to maintain the distinction made heretofore between Canadian tobaccos and foreign tobaccos in the matter of brands.

The paper from which I have quoted before recess makes the following further remarks, in an editorial dated October, 1905 :

Taking the primary query as to whether Canadian tobacco has proven its claim as a marketable commodity, we can turn to no more conclusive evidence than statistics. In 1896, the fiscal year prior to the 10 cent tax on foreign leaf, we find that the manufacture of Canadian leaf amounted to only 590,283 pounds, and on referring to the returns for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905, we see that 4,986,565 pounds of Canadian and combination tobacco have been made and sold. Comment is unnecessary, the figures completely answering the questions.

Admitting then that the slight protection granted in 1897 has resulted in this wonderful development and expansion of the Canadian tobacco consumption, the wisdom of the government's policy in imposing that tax in the interest of agriculture must be frankly admitted, despite the views held by practically all the trade at the time the tax was imposed. This trade opinion is now undergoing a complete change, in the face of the evidence steadily forcing itself upon all.

The question as to whether Canadian tobacco is improving in quality, and can undergo sufficient further improvement as to warrant prospects of still further increase in consumption in future and its ultimate use for cigar purposes, is a matter having important bearing on the issue, and is a speculative subject that can be reasoned only by deduction. It is evident to all who have had an opportunity of inspecting and following the successive crops of tobaccos in western Ontario and Quebec, that they have improved materially in quality. This is due solely to the better knowledge gained by the farmer through practical experience in planting, cultivating, curing and handling his crop, and in view of the tobacco history of the world, it seems only fair to assume that this progress will continue and texture and quality of leaf be ultimately grown that will compare favourably with such types of foreign leaf as those with which they are intended to compete.

The history of almost every type of leaf now popular in cigar and tobacco manufacture is practically the history that Canadian tobacco is now making. Sumatra was once a coarse, heavy, rank tobacco. Wisconsin was once inferior to the present Canadian cigar leaf. Connecticut is a story of complete evolution to its present fine texture and quality. Shade-grown Florida Sumatra has within the past three years passed from rank failure to marketable perfection. In the face of these facts, combined with proofs staring us in the face of what Canadian tobacco has already accomplished under the encouragement of a very meagre protection, can we any longer, as fair minded business men and loyal Canadians, decry the product of our own soil?

Is further protection now desirable and opportune? The farmer echoes an emphatic yes. It is for the trade to say whether the interests of our own business will be damaged by giving our agriculture the free hand and open door it desires to go on with the work, of gathering from our own soil, some of the leaf for which we now send abroad, and keep within our own country, for the benefit of Canadians, the immense capital now paid to the farmers of the United States. Does it really matter to us whether the duty on cigars and tobacco be levied on the raw leaf or on the finished product in bond, so long as the total taxation is not increased? If it will benefit the farmer and keep a dollar in our own country where it remains in constant circulation, is not the policy sound and wise? Wherein does it make the slightest practical difference to the manufacturer or dealer in cigars and tobaccos?

I have, I think, amply proved that Canadian tobacco can replace most foreign tobacco in our factories. From positive information in my possession, I do not hesitate to say that the Canadian products in their present condition, will compare favourably with the average foreign article on our markets. I do not contend that our tobacco is better than any tobacco produced in the United States. Tobacco requires special soil and climate. Each state of the American Union has its specialty. It is the same in Canada. In the province of Ontario the climate is better adapted to specialty of tobacco that is not grown in the province of Quebec. I allude to the 'Burley' tobacco which is very long and of heavy texture, suitable to the manufacture of chewing tobacco. So far, our chief tobacco industry has been the manufacture of chewing tobacco, and the Ontario planters have, in consequence, been more favoured than those of Quebec. Manufacturers buy all they need in Ontario, and when they can find no more in that province they go to Quebec. In the province of Quebec the tobacco grown is a light tobacco, suitable to the manufacture of cigars, and according to the opinion of Belgian and London and Liverpool experts, Quebec tobacco, properly cured, would produce excellent cigars.

Not long ago, planters from Ontario and Quebec gave valuable information before the Agriculture Committee of this House. They proved beyond cavil that we produce tobacco quite suitable to our own market and also to foreign markets, if the curing is properly done.

The marvellous results I have just pointed out are altogether due to the customs duty of 10 cents a pound put, in 1897, on the manufacture of foreign tobacco.

I have no doubt that the changes now made will have a still more favourable effect upon this industry. According to the proposed legislation, American tobacco, before being delivered to the manufacturer, will pay a duty of 25 cents instead of 10 cents per pound, being a total duty of 27 cents on the American article, before it is manufactured, whereas Canadian tobacco will enter the factory free and pay a duty of 5 cents only after it has been manufactured. The result will be the establishment of an intermediate industry such as exists in the United States. In that country, between the planter and the manufacturer, is found the packer or rehandler. The latter buys the tobacco from the planter when it is ready to be cut from the stem and, in his own warehouse, classifies and sorts it. When tobacco is suited to the manufacture of cigars, it is subjected to the test of fermentation. If the leaf is suitable for pipe use or for chewing purposes it is treated in a different manner. The need of such intermediate industry is now being felt in this country.

The hon. the Minister of Marine (Mr. Brodeur) replying to an objection raised by a member of the opposition, remarked that to-day any one smoking a cigar apparently manufactured from foreign leaf, could not be sure that no domestic leaf entered into its composition. My information on this point enables me to state positively that not 90 per cent of the manufacturers now professing to make cigars from foreign leaf use Canadian tobacco in the manufacture of their product, but without saying so.

I remember having met a considerable number of cigar manufacturers, when the Tariff Commission was sitting in Montreal; I was in attendance with a delegation of Canadian tobacco planters from the county of Montcalm. The views of my friends did not agree with those of the manufacturers, and in the course of a rather lively debate, several manufacturers of foreign leaf cigars admitted that they put into their goods a considerable proportion of Canadian tobacco.

I may state that Mr. Cusson, of Montreal, a manufacturer of imported leaf cigars, is ready to undertake the intermediate industry of which I have spoken, and to establish a packing warehouse in the county of Montcalm for the selection and preparation of tobacco. I am also aware that Mr. Payne, of Granby, who accompanied a deputation here last winter, is likewise anxious to enter into the same business.

Last year Mr. Cusson, expecting that the present Bill would come before parliament last session, purchased in the county of Montcalm over half a million pounds of tobacco suitable for cigar making, and he engaged an expert from Connecticut who submitted it to the proper curing process for that purpose. A couple of weeks ago Mr. Charland, an expert brought over from France by the government to disseminate information in the growing and treatment of our tobacco, laid before the Agriculture Committee cigars made by Mr. Cusson exclusively from Canadian leaf; the members of the committee smoked and enjoyed them. These cigars were unanimously declared to be of excellent quality and to compare favourably with the so-called foreign leaf cigars.

I remember that a manufacturer of American leaf cigars, who attended the sitting of the committee, smoked some of these cigars and found them so good that he was ready to wager that they were not made from Canadian leaf. This is the best proof that can be given in favour of our national product.

When Mr. Bas Dugas returned from his trip to Belgium and England, bringing with him the expert reports of which I have spoken, he was sent to Wisconsin, with Mr. Denis, of Rouville, to study in the field, the cultivation and curing of tobacco. He brought with him samples of tobacco grown in the county of Montcalm ; these he exhibited to experts in different establishments asking for an opinion. From what Mr. Dugas says, these experts would not believe that this was a Canadian product, but supposed it had been procured from one of the local drying sheds.

I will now quote an article printed in the 'Journal of Agriculture' of the province of Quebec. It must be remembered, as Mr. Labelle stated before the Committee of Agriculture two weeks ago, that tobacco is an artificial rather than a natural product. It must go from the planter to the packer and sorter who alone is able to prepare it for the market. This intermediary sorts and selects the natural product and prepares it for consumption. This is what we find in the 'Journal of Agriculture' of August last :

Dried and fermented tobaccos. Dried tobacco which has not yet been subjected to fermentation no more deserves the name of smoking tobacco than unfermented grape juice deserves the name of wine.

In dried tobacco, the nicotine forms part of the organic composition of the plant, it becomes disengaged during combustion and emits strong and acrid fumes often of a disagreeable and repulsive odour.

On being subjected to fermentation, the dried tobacco undergoes important and radical changes which give it its full value.

Fermentation improves its tecture, colour, and flavour, makes it easier of combustion, and rids it of its acrid and biting flavour, its aroma becomes more marked but softer and finer. At the same time, the nicotine is partially eliminated and what remains is disengaged from the organic matter, so that fermented tobacco while more fragrant and perfumed, is really not so strong, and is pleasanter and healthier than dried tobacco.

Most agricultural products have to undergo fermentation before being fit for consumption : wheat flour, for instance, must be fermented with yeast before yielding good bread ; cheese is the product of fermented curds ; flax yarn is the product of flax fiber rotted that is to say fermented, &c., &c. Smoking tobacco worthy of that name, forms no exception to the rule, and we propose, in this study, to describe a rational method of fermentation employed in the United States and which deserves the best attention of our northern tobacco growers.

Our tobacco must therefore be put to the test of the curing, as the paper I have quoted explains. As may be seen, the intrinsic value of the product does not depend so much upon the cultivation of the plant as upon the subsequent preparation it must undergo.

I am pleased to be able to state that thanks to the measure now before the House, this industry will be considerably improved. It well deserves the attention of the government, for the tobacco growing industry is one of our important industries.

Before the Agriculture Committee, inquiry was made as to the total production of tobacco in Canada. Certain witnesses have stated that in their opinion it reached ten million pounds per annum. I have reason to suppose that their estimate is below the mark. In support of this view I will take up the census returns of 1901. We find there that in four of the counties of the judicial district of Joliette, the figures go beyond five million pounds, divided as follows :

	Pounds.
Montcalm	2,589,446
Berthier	246,016
Joliette	1,098,158
L'Assomption	1,615,075
	5,548,695

I should add that part of the crop was already sold.

As everybody admits, tobacco culture is one of the most lucrative in agriculture. No crop in this country gives so good a return. Consequently the government is right in heping those who are engaged in it.

Before closing, I would like to reply to a remark made by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk). When the resolutions upon which this Bill is based were introduced, the hon. gentleman gives his full approval to the government measure, I am pleased to say. But he goes further and expresses some regret that the Bill was not introduced sooner. I agree with him in that, and indeed the counties of Montcalm and Joliette have long been asking for this legislation. I am inclined to believe that if the government did not act sooner, the cause may be found to a certain extent, if put in the attitude of the member for Jacques Cartier, at least in that of the Conservative party to which he belongs. If we examine the policy of the Conservative party before 1897, and later on, on that question, we find that a great change for the better has taken place in their attitude. Let us hasten to the remarks made by Sir Charles Tupper, then the leader of the opposition, with respect to an item of $2,000 asked for by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) for the purpose of experimenting in the cultivation and the curing of tobacco. The amount asked for was quite small.

This is what he said :

I do not myself know much of the subject, but I am convinced that the Hon. Minister, after the debate which has taken place, must have come to the conclusion that it would not be very wise to press for the adoption of this item. After such varied expressions of opinion, I do not think it is necessary to know much about tobacco culture to come to that conclusion. I would respectfully suggest the withdrawal of the item.

The present hon. leader of the opposition also has shown himself hostile to the commendable dispositions of the government with respect to the improvement of tobacco culture. I will quote part of his speech from the 'Hansard' of 1901, page 1469 :

Well, I will give the hon. gentleman a suggestion with respect to the taxes. Let us look at what the taxes on the people are. In the first place, there is a tax on tobacco, which is very large, and which has been increased by hon. gentlemen opposite. I find that we take out of the people, in taxes on tobacco, in customs, $486,000, and in excise $3,281,000. I would suggest to the hon. gentleman that possibly the duty of tobacco, which was increased by them might be reduced to the former amount.

In 1903, the 17th of April, the leader of the Opposition again referred to the subject :

There is another consideration which I would like to present to the House. If, as members of the government claim, the present tariff is a revenue tariff, why is the taxation continued at so abnormal a figure? Why does the government take from the people, for example, $1,000,000 more in excise duties on tobacco and $500,000 more in customs duties on sugar than would have been taken under the tariff before 1896 ? And why does the Minister of Finance retain the duty on breadstuffs which he regarded as so unjust and oppressive that while premier of Nova Scotia he moved the following resolution with regard to it.

Why is it necessary that they should have surpluses to boast of—surpluses of from $14,000,000 to $16,000,000 ? They could get clear of a large portion by extending the reduction of duties from molasses to sugar. They could also make a reduction in the duty on tobacco, which would prove an immense boon to almost every man who contributes to taxation.

Such has been the stand taken by the Conservative party every time the government has wished to do anything in the interest of the tobacco growers. I have no reason to doubt the government's firmness nor to question their good intentions with respect to this important industry, but it is fair to suppose that the government might have acted more prominently, had the hon. gentlemen sitting on your left, shown themselves as well disposed as they are to-day.

I might refer to another fact in this connection; at the time of the general elections of 1904, as is the custom, both contending parties sought to influence public opinion by means of campaign literature. One Conservative campaign pamphlet contained the following :

Put this in your pipe and smoke it.

Under Liberal rule and as a consequence of that rule, every consumer of tobacco in Canada pay $4.75 more in the shape of taxes.

How is the consumer of tobacco, under Liberal rule, affected by the taxing of this article ?

Let us compare the taxes on tobacco collected under the present government and those collected under Conservative rule.

Liberal rule. Taxes on tobacco 1897-1902.
Excise	$23,485,642
Customs	2,661,875
	$26,147,517
Conservative rule. Taxes on tobacco 1891-1896.
Excise	$17,875,401
Customs	1,709,958
	$19,585,359

Increased taxation on tobacco under Liberal rule, during a period of six years, $6,562,158.

The male population of Canada is 2,571,708.

If fifty per cent of the male population of Canada makes use of tobacco, how does the increased duty on tobacco affect each consumer?

Under Liberal rule, each consumer of tobacco has to pay in taxes on tobacco $19.

Under Conservative rule, he had to pay only $14.25.

Under Liberal rule each smoker paid in taxes on tobacco $4.75 more than he did under Conservative rule.

This increased taxation of tobacco does not in any way diminish the consumption, it is quite useless in this respect, as government statistics themselves prove.

Last year the government boasted of a surplus of $14,000,000. That is to say, they took from the ratepayers and from the pockets of the people $14,000,000 more than the public service required.

The budget receipts showing a surplus over the senseless expenditure of the Liberal government, why should they, over and above that, tax tobacco consumers to the extent of $6,562,158 since their accession to power ?

Think over this as you quietly smoke your pipe by the fireside.

The Conservatives paid for their faults in 1896.

The Liberals cannot escape from the punishment of crimes far more serious than those of their predecessors, and as for the government that succeeds them, it must be judged by its works. In short, let the people condemn any government until it is proclaimed to the world that public conscience in Canada is awakened.

I have given these quotations simply to explain the stand taken by the opposition and to show to what extent they have carried their hostility towards tobacco planters and the tobacco industry.

In spite of the contention of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier that the government should have introduced this measure sooner, I may say, speaking here as the representative of the county of Montcalm, which takes credit for being the cradle of the tobacco growing industry in Canada, and whose population is directly interested in the industry, that the government have done about all that could be expected of them in this matter and that the county of Montcalm owe them a debt of gratitude in that respect.

Before submitting such a measure as is now placed before us, the government required information on the present conditions of the cultivation of tobacco and the tobacco industry, as well as on the best methods to be adopted, with a view to securing the full development of that industry.

Those who have studied this matter know that when the government framed the tariff of 1897, imposing a customs duty of 10 cents a pound on foreign tobacco, the foreign tobacco manufacturers protested against that duty, and said to the government: You must pay no attention to Canadian tobacco; it is a product unfit for consumption and which cannot be improved. In support of this statement I need refer to no other authority than that of the 'Canadian Cigar and Tobacco Journal.' Referring to the increase of 10 cents in the duty on American tobacco, that journal declared that the government had committed itself to an absurdity. This meant that the paper representing the interests of the tobacco manufacturers had no confidence in the quality of our Canadian product. The government was therefore bound to seek information before making a move in that direction.

Let us recapitulate: In 1898, the Hon. the Minister of Agriculture, in spite of Sir Charles Tupper's opposition, obtained $2,000 for experimental purposes. In 1901, samples of tobacco were sent to Belgium. In 1903, other samples were submitted to Belgian and English experts. In 1901, the government appointed a commission, presided over by hon. Justice McTavish, to inquire into certain difficulties in connection with the tobacco industry. At that time, a powerful company, the American Tobacco Company, threatened to control the whole Canadian trade. Judge McTavish's report established that the methods of that company were detrimental to the Canadian tobacco trade. He states, however, that the conduct of the company was not illegal, and that there was nothing in our statutes to restrain it. It will be remembered that this company entered into contracts with merchants, the latter undertaking to sell no other articles but those supplied by the company, failing which, the company would refuse to sell them its products.

The following are the conclusions of Judge McTavish's report:

Your commissioner finds, as the result of the inquiry:

1. That the contract system complained of by the petitioners does in fact exist and is in general use in the cigarette and tobacco trade in Canada.

2. That the provisions of the contracts in question are not illegal, either under the common law or under any statutory law heretofore enacted by the parliament of Canada.

3. That the manufacturers of cigarettes and of Canadian tobacco other than the American and Empire Tobacco Companies are at a disadvantage in the distribution of their goods, and in the prosecution of their business generally, by reason of such contract system.

The extent to which legislative control over the freedom of contract should be exercised, and how far the rules of the trade can be interfered with by statutory enactments, without injury to the public interest, are, in the opinion of your commissioner, questions of policy for the consideration of parliament.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

In 1904, the Hon. the Minister of Marine (Mr. Brodeur), who was at that time Minister of Inland Revenue, carried through a measure which put an end to these contracts.

In 1904, the government sent a commission composed of planters to Wisconsin to study the tobacco industry in that state.

Mr. MONK. (Translation.) Did that commission ever make a written report, and was such report ever placed before the House?

Mr. DUGAS. (Translation.) I do not know.

Mr. MONK. (Translation.) Was that report ever brought down and printed?

Mr. DUGAS. (Translation.) All I know is that I have a copy of it. At all events, the delegates came back with this information, that our tobacco was as good as that of Wisconsin, and the only thing missing to it was the proper curing to make it suitable for the manufacture of cigars.

Later on, in 1905, being encouraged by his reports on the superior quality of our product, this government caused Mr. Charlan to come from France, where he had been an officer of the French government in an establishment affected, preparation of tobacco. Mr. Charlan has approved himself a man of absolutely practical knowledge. Since his arrival in this country he has been through the different planting districts. He has given very practical instructions on the way of producing and curing Canadian tobacco, and more particularly on the selection of varieties suitable to our soil.

In 1906, Mr. Charlan having reported that tobacco grown in the province of Quebec was of good enough quality to make cigars with, this government empowered him to purchase twenty thousand pounds of tobacco in the counties of Montcalm, L'Assomption, Joliette, Berthier and Rouville in order to make it undergo the necessary fermentation.

An arrangement was made between Mr. Charlan and a Montreal firm, the Dominion Tobacco Company, the principal shareholders of which are Messrs. Goldstein, who undertook to have that tobacco submitted to the fermentation test. These gentlemen being confident in the result of the experiment Mr. Charlan wanted to make. It was understood that after the fermentation experiment that the tobacco would be bought by Messrs. Goldstein who took upon themselves to supply all necessary hand labour. The agreement was that if the tobacco was depreciated as a result of fermentation, then the government would cover the difference in the cost of that tobacco. Far from being depreciated, the tobacco was better, and the Goldsteins have been fully satisfied with the result and have kept the tobacco.

From the consumer's point of view, the government policy has been altogether favourable. Before 1897, there were consumed in Canada 18,000 pounds of tobacco, half a million pounds only being produced in this country, whereas to-day 6,000 pounds of Canadian leaf are used in manufacture.

What has been the effect of that evolution in the industry? The most important result is this: in 1897, when American tobacco was the only one on the market, the average price the consumer was obliged to pay for tobacco was a dollar a pound; but, since the Canadian leaf has been introduced in the manufacture, the Canadian leaf has taken the place of that much of the foreign product and the price of tobacco has gone down to an average of fifty cents per pound. So it is that where the consumer formerly used to get one pound of tobacco for a dollar, he now gets two pounds. He therefore pays fifty per cent cheaper than before.

Under these circumstances I am glad to see this House is almost unanimous in approving this measure of the government. I am quite sure the country will be highly satisfied with the policy of the government in this matter. I am also of opinion that this measure will be ranked amongst the best—and they are many—this government has adopted in the interest of the citizens of Canada.

Mr. M. MARTIN (Montreal, St. Mary's). (Translation.) Mr. Chairman, I did not intend to speak on the Bill now before the House, but my hon. friend from Montcalm (Mr. Dugas) has made the statement a while ago that the Montreal cigar manufacturers, most of them at least, were using Canadian tobacco in their factories. I may say that the hon. member is misinformed. I do not believe there are more than one or two cigar manufacturers licensed for the manufacture of imported tobacco who make any use of Canadian leaf. A moment ago Mr. Cusson's name was mentioned. At all events, if two or three manufacturers are using Canadian grown tobacco for making cigars, it is without the knowledge of the cigar-makers' union which would surely not allow them to use its label. The deputy minister being present, I would ask him to let me know how many licensed imported tobacco manufacturers do substitute Canadian tobacco to the imported leaf. The deputy minister beckons he does not know if there is any. For the information of this House, I may say there are not more than one or two of them.

My opinion has always been that Canadian tobacco is the best in the world for smoking and chewing, but without having any intention of basing my judgment on my twenty-three years' experience, I may venture the statement with the two hundred other cigar manufacturers in Canada that Canadian tobacco is unfit for the manufacture of cigars. In 1897, when the government placed a ten cents duty upon foreign tobacco, the effect of that measure was to cause the establishment of new factories such as the American Tobacco Company and the Dominion Tobacco Company, but not of cigar factories.

From our own experience of it, we know that we have never been and will never be able to produce anything like Havana, Sumatra, Brazilian and Hyara tobaccos for cigar making, and these are the leaves that are mostly used in that branch of manufacture. Let us see what happened in the United States. In spite of the McKinley Bill raising to $1.85 per pound the duty on the Sumatra leaf, there were imported into that country last year 40,000 bales of Sumatra tobacco representing 7,000,000 pounds, although the price of tobacco had been raised to about $5 a pound. All this was intended to encourage the production and consumption of American tobacco; however, Wisconsin and Connecticut leaves are still sold a great deal cheaper than before the adoption of that $1.85 duty, which goes to prove that in the United States they cannot do so without certain varieties of foreign tobacco in the manufacture of cigars. And what happened there will happen just the same in this country.

True that in the United States large quantities of cigars are made with domestic tobaccos, but it is equally true that those cigars have no value whatever and are sold at between eight and twelve dollars a thousand.

I do not see why I should be against this measure if I thought it was a good one. If Canadian grown tobacco was suitable to cigar making, as a manufacturer I would save twenty-three cents on every pound manufactured. This goes to show that like all the other cigar manufacturers in Canada I am satisfied that we will never be able to substitute Canadian tobacco to the Havana or other imported leaves used in the manufacture of high priced cigars.

All this agitation is due to two or three Montreal manufacturers having in stock between 1,000,000 and 1,500,000 pounds of tobacco, and who are already boasting that, thanks to this very change, they will realize enormous profits as soon as the new law is adopted. By the imposition of this 28 cents duty, a good many manufacturers having in stock one or two millions of cigars will see themselves obliged to suspend their operations because they will have to pay a double rate of duty on account of their being obliged to pay 28 cents before the manufacturing process and $6 per thousand on their stock in excise bond, according to the old law. Therefore, I say the manufacturers will be compelled to suspend their operations while they get rid of the stock they usually keep on hand. That is what I shall have to do myself.

Canadian tobacco is good for pipe smoking and chewing, but as regards the manufacture, it will never be able, as I said before, to replace the Havana and Sumatra leaves. The appearance of a cigar is not the only thing to be cared for; there are also the taste and the flavour of it. One day, as I was passing in Montreal, I met an hon. member who offered me a cigar. I told him that was one of our good ten cent cigars. He then replied to me that I was smoking a cigar exclusively made with Canadian leaf. Being unable to ascertain myself what kind of tobacco that cigar was made of, whereas I had smoked about the whole of it, I decided to come back to Ottawa the following day in order to appear before the Committee on Agriculture. There and then I asked Mr. Charlan, the government expert in this matter, if he would kindly give me four or five cigars like the ones that had been distributed to the members of the House the previous day. That gentleman answered me that he had none in the committee room, but that if I was willing to go to his room he would let me have four or five; and this he did effectively when he handed me a box of 'Capitol' cigars. Moreover, I asked him to give me one half of the same tobacco contained in the cigar tendered to me; this he did also. Then I said to him: 'You are sure the tobacco you are giving to me is the same as the one contained in these cigars.' He immediately answered no, because the leaf in the cigar was not as long. I should say so, for the leaf in the cigar in those cigars was not more than five or six inches long, it was the 'Havana' leaf, while the tobacco he was handing to me was the 'Columbia' leaf, the length of which is usually between twelve and fifteen inches.

I have unpacked those cigars in the smoking room in the presence of five or six hon. members, and I then stated before them that I was prepared to give my affidavit that those cigars were made with 'Havana' leaf. I am still ready to swear the same thing. True there was before the Committee of Agriculture a box of cigars exclusively made with Canadian tobacco, with the exception of the coating that was made with Sumatra leaf, but it was not at all the same cigars as had been distributed to hon. members of the House the day before. I have myself manufactured some thirty cigars with the tobacco Mr. Charlan had handed to me, but the cigars so manufactured are far from having the taste, flavour and strength of those made with imported leaf like the ones he had given to hon. members the day before.

As a conclusion, Mr. Chairman, let me venture the hope that I am mistaken in the few remarks I have just offered, but time will tell.

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier). (Translation.) Mr. Chairman, I have only a few words to say. The hon. member for St. Mary's (Mr. Martin) has just been, as it were, the instrument of Providence, and this goes to prove the existence of an immanent justice that cannot be escaped.

The hon. member for Montcalm (Mr. Dugas), who represents a population deeply interested in the growing of tobacco, was not content with giving us very valuable information which, for my part, I have listened to with the most unremitting attention; he has thought fit to go further and spoil his speech in making an attack against the Conservative party which, I think, since 1896, has always given its effective support to every measure proposed by this government for the improvement of this industry. And at the very moment the hon. member for Montcalm has just been so upbraiding the opposition, the hon. gentleman who sits beside him and belongs to the same political faith declares himself against the measure, while all the hon. members on this side of the House, who represent counties interested in the culture, have given their support to the government.

I may be allowed to point out some of the remarks offered by my hon. friend from Montcalm. He has told us that Mr. Blaise Dugas had been sent to Europe in 1903. This gentleman has made a report, some extracts of which my hon. friend has given us. That report shows that we have in England, in Belgium, Holland and other European countries an unlimited market for our tobacco provided it is properly prepared and packed up as it should be. What has become of that report made five years ago? Mr. Blaise Dugas, I think, has found it very difficult indeed to get the reimbursement of his travelling expenses. Even after five years, the government has taken no action whatever on that report.

All those who have some knowledge of the question know that what we need first of all is a market for that product. We are in a position to produce every year a great deal more than the five or six million pounds of tobacco now sufficient for home consumption. If we have no foreign market, the price goes down and the growers as well as all those interested in that industry are affected and discouraged.

Mr. Blaise Dugas' suggestions should have been put into practice without delay, that is shipments of tobacco should have been made to Europe in such conditions as pointed out by people he has conferred with. Yet nothing has been done since 1903. The report has remained buried in the records where it had been thrown aside, and none of the suggestions therein contained has ever been put into practice.

Does my hon. friend from Montcalm (Mr. Dugas) consider that any useful steps have been taken for the improvement of that industry? He has told us of the shipment made to Wisconsin the year after. We have no report, no printed report of that shipment. These gentlemen, we are told, have reported that our tobacco is worth that of Wisconsin, which finds in Europe an easy and profitable market, and, according to my hon. friend, is an excellent tobacco. Ours was wanting fermentation. What has been done since in order to give our tobacco the required curing, so that it might compete with the Wisconsin leaf on the European markets? Nothing that I know of.

Unfortunately, my hon. friend (Mr. Dugas) has deemed it expedient to introduce politics in what was a most interesting lecture on this question. Ever since I occupied a seat in this House—even before the hon. member came here—we have year after year asked for the abolition of the distinction between stamps. We asked that from the hon. Minister of Marine (Mr. Brodeur) when he had charge of the Department of Inland Revenue. Twelve years have passed without anything being done. The hon. member for Montcalm thinks the measure now under consideration, putting an end to such distinction, is a just and fair measure. Why then have they waited twelve years to introduce it? Was it delayed by the opposition? No, it is these gentlemen who, like the hon. member for St. Mary's, were opposing that measure and have prevented the accomplishment of an act of justice. It is due to their influence if, during all that time, justice has been delayed in its course, and to-day, when elections are near at hand, it is at last felt necessary to do justice to those who have been asking for it in vain for twelve years.

The hon. member for Montcalm then indulged in reflections upon Sir Charles Tupper, who thought the amount of $2,000 asked for by the government was going to be frittered away in making experiments. For my part, I have no doubt that those $2,000 have been of great use. When Mr. Blaise Dugas and the delegates to Wisconsin came back that amount should have been spent in putting their suggestions into practice.

This government, it must be admitted, oftentimes appoints commissioners. When they report favourably, they are lauded to the skies, when they denounce wrongdoing, the report is pigeonholed in the department. As an illustration, I can mention the report of the Transportation Commission, which is completely left in oblivion. What will happen with that of the Civil Service Commission?

Does the hon. gentleman from Montcalm know what was said by Hon. Rodolphe Laflamme, then Minister of Justice in the Mackenzie administration, and at the same time member for Jacques Cartier, where tobacco is grown. He said, to use his own words, that there was nothing in that industry, that Canadian tobacco was a stinky stuff and that the industry could never succeed in this country.

Such was the opinion expressed by one of the leaders of the hon. member for Montcalm. And this afternoon, was the hon. gentleman in this House when the right hon. leader of the government, answering the remarks of the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain) relating to the prohibition of cigarettes, stated that he was not a smoker, and, speaking for himself, he would feel disposed to prohibit absolutely the use of tobacco in this country? Canada is perhaps afflicted with a prime minister too near to perfection. If he even did so much as to indulge in a smoke with a pipe or a cigar, we might have had that remedy sooner.

The hon. member for Montcalm this afternoon has found fault with the hon. leader of the opposition, because in 1901 and 1903 he protested against the heavy increase in the burden of taxation, giving as an illustration the duty on tobacco. Where does my hon. friend find in those statements of the hon. leader of the opposition that he was opposed to a measure protecting the production of Canadian tobacco. If in 1901 and 1903, the hon. leader of the opposition complained of the increased taxation generally and of the duties on tobacco in particular, the only conclusion to be drawn from those statements is that a reduction of those duties would have fostered the industry which, according to the hon. member for Montcalm, is of such an import for this country.

My hon. friend (Mr. Dugas) has alluded to the experiment conducted by Mr. Goldstein, of Montreal. What has been the result? We do not know. The only thing we know is that Mr. Goldstein is a staunch Liberal and from what was said by my hon. friend, I suppose that he has been given charge of 20,000 pounds of tobacco, and said that he was quite satisfied.

What has been said by the hon. gentleman about Mr. Blaise Dugas' trip in Europe establishes the merit of the suggestions made in this House since 1896, asking for the employment of experts from Connecticut to teach our farmers how to cure our tobacco for the European markets.

The verbal report—it has never been printed—of the agents sent in Wisconsin by the government was never followed with any practical result, and has been totally ignored.

I have congratulated the hon. Minister of Agriculture for having secured the services of Mr. Charlan, who has furnished valuable information on that industry. But, as I have said the other day, until we become experts in the way of packing, curing and shipping tobacco, we cannot expect to have a profitable market for this product.

If five or six million pounds of tobacco will answer the demand for home consumption, it is quite obvious that if our production reaches fifty million pounds we must find an outlet for the surplus, and up to this date the government has done nothing in that direction.

Therefore, it ill becomes the hon. member for Montcalm when hon. gentlemen on this side of the House are opposing this measure to find fault with those who for many years before him had been advocating the interests of this industry.

On the question : Shall the preamble be adopted ?

Mr. BLAIN. May I ask the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) what he would think of a proposal to prohibit the importation of cigarettes into Canada ? If the government are not prepared to make a statement on the main question as to the total abolition of the manufacture and sale of cigarettes, what would my hon. friend think of a proposition to prohibit the importation into Canada of cigarettes ?

Mr. FIELDING. I am afraid the proposition is hardly involved in the Bill before the committee and I would not care to offer an opinion on the subject in this manner.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 135) to amend the Immigration Act.—Mr. Oliver.

LAND TITLES ACT.

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior) moved the second reading of Bill (No. 113) to amend the Land Titles Act.

Mr. LENNOX. Perhaps the hon. gentleman would briefly explain the objects of the Bill.

Mr. OLIVER. The object of this Bill is to provide for the holding of land in the interest of church organizations in the Northwest, or in that part of the country where the administration of the rights in regard to land is in the hands of this parliament. At the present time there is no provision for the holding of church rights by any organized body in that territory ; so that, it is desirable that there should be legalized the holding of church rights which must be especially legalized by Act of parliament in all that part of the territory which is outside of the Yukon, and by special Act of the Yukon legislature within the Yukon Territory. The circumstances are such that it would be right and proper that a general provision should be made that would apply to all cases and that would govern the holding of church property according to the terms of this Bill. It has no application except in what is called the Northwest Territory and the Yukon Territory.

Motion agreed to, and House went into committee on the Bill.

On section 1—lands belonging to churches and congregations—

Mr. SPROULE. In the case of a church that has a bishop, would this enable trustees or a congregation to hold lands, or would it be incumbent upon them to pass it over to the bishop?

Mr. OLIVER. According to the wording of this section there is an alternative right. The bishop may hold the church property, the congregation may appoint trustees to hold it.

Mr. SPROULE. Suppose that according to the rules of the church the bishop only can hold the property and the congregation desire it to be held by trustees, whose authority would then prevail?

Mr. OLIVER. If it is the rule of the church that the property should be held by the bishop and not by trustees, the Act would give the bishop the necessary legal authority to hold it. The Act also provides that in the case of those churches which have no bishop, the property may be held by the congregation or by the trustees of the congregation.

Mr. SPROULE. Does the Land Titles Act apply to the different provinces of the Northwest or only to the Northwest Territories outside of the organized provinces?

Mr. OLIVER. To the territory which is called the Northwest Territory, which is outside of the organized provinces, but including the Territory of the Yukon.

Mr. SPROULE. But it does not apply to Saskatchewan and Alberta?

Mr. OLIVER. No. Those provinces pass their own laws with regard to land titles.

Mr. SPROULE. But you handle the land, and when you sell or homestead it don't you give a title to that land?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, but as soon as the land passes into the hands of private owners all further transactions with regard to it are subject to legislation of the provinces under their jurisdiction over property and civil rights.

Mr. SPROULE. When you sell or give away the land, don't you give a title to it under the Land Titles Act ?

Mr. OLIVER. We give a title, but that title has to be registered under the Land Titles Act of the province for use in future transactions.

Mr. SPROULE. Do you not give a deed of the land under the Land Titles Act which we are dealing with here? Is there one Land Titles Act for the Northwest Territories and the Yukon and different ones for Saskatchewan and Alberta ?

Mr. BARKER. If I understand this Bill, its purpose is to provide that in the territories outside of any province, where a bishop already holds land on behalf of his church, or where trustees of a congregation hold land on behalf of their church, upon their ceasing to hold office or dying, instead of the property going to their heirs or being in the clouds, it goes exofficio to the next bishop or to the trustees appointed in succession to the previous trustees without any conveyance.

Mr. SPROULE. I was asking if the same rule applied to the new provinces.

Mr. GALLIHER. When the Crown gives a patent to a piece of land that patent is taken by the party to whom it is given to register it under the Land Titles Act of the province.

Mr. LENNOX. The Land Titles Act, as it is in the revised statutes, is, I presume, intended to apply to all Dominion lands wherever they are.

Mr. OLIVER. It will apply to all Dominion lands until they pass from the Crown. There is no title to those lands until they have passed from the Crown. This Bill is to apply to lands which have passed from the Crown in the Territories which have no local government handling the Land Titles Act.

Mr. LENNOX. This Act applied to Saskatchewan and Albert until they were set apart as provinces.

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. LENNOX. The difficulty I find is that there is no application defined in the Act. It is simply called a Land Titles Act, and we must conclude that when it was passed it applied to all lands over which the government had control and could not apply to any lands belonging to any of the provinces. This is an amendment to the Land Titles Act, and I presume could not apply to any property which has been acquired from the Dominion government in any territory which has become organized by the establishment of the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan. Any land already vested in any church in those provinces is not controlled by this amendment.

Mr. SPROULE. There is one point I would like explained. The amendment says :

123a. The bishop of any church, or any trustees for any church, or any congregation of any church, holding land for the purpose of such church or congregation shall respectively, with regard to such land and any dealings therewith, be deemed to be a body corporate and politic——

That is the first statement. Then it goes on to say:

—and land so held shall devolve respectively upon the successors in office of such bishop or upon the successors in office of such trustees duly appointed in manner by law or by such church or congregation prescribed.

It repeats that the land shall be held by the successor in office of such bishop or by the successors in office of such trustees. but it does not refer in any way to any congregation or church.

Mr. OLIVER. I am advised that the congregation does not cease to exist as do trustees or as does a bishop. The congregation continues without intermission, and therefore there is no need to provide that there shall be successors to the congregation.

Mr. LENNOX. The congregation being a continuous body is a reason why there is no provision as to their successors in office ; but there being no provision in this amendment for the devolution of property from a congregation, why mention the congregation at all ?

Mr. BARKER. Whoever drew this Bill wanted to provide for the case where there were no trustees. If the property was vested in the members of a congregation as such, and some of them died, the estate might pass to the heirs at law. This Bill purports to make them a body corporate and politic, so that when a member of the congregation dies or retires, and his successor comes in, the title at once passes to his successor.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

BILLS OF EXCHANGE ACT—AMENDMENT.

Bill (No. 142) to amend the Bills of Exchange Act.—Mr. Aylesworth—read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

On section 1,

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH (Minister of Justice). The object of this section is to correct what, I apprehend, has been simply a printer's error in the Bills of Exchange Act as it appears in the present revised statutes. It has been the law for many years, as this statute, when first passed declared, that any holder of a promissory note or bill of exchange who endorses it, by the act of endorsing it, precludes himself from disputing certain things with regard to the bill or note—precludes himself, for instance, from denying the genuineness of the bill or the regularity of its drawing and the genuineness of the signatures that were upon it when he so endorsed it. But it was not as against the wide world that he, by endorsing, precluded himself from making these denials ; it was only as against men to whom that negotiable paper might subsequently pass. That is to say a man who endorsed a bill of exchange or promissory note by his act of so endorsing it closed his own mouth against the possibility of ever afterward saying that that bill was not a genuine bill so far as the men who took it from him or relying upon his signature were concerned. Accordingly the provision of the Bills of Exchange Act previous to the revised statutes, was that the endorser of a bill by endorsing it is precluded from denying to his immediate or a subsequent endorsee that the bill was, at the time of his endorsement, a valid and subsisting bill and that he had a good title thereto. By some error the word 'endorsee' is printed 'endorser'—the final 'e' is made an 'r,' and, accordingly, the law for the last fourteen months has been that a man by endorsing a bill of exchange precluded himself from denying, not to those who came after him, but to his immediate or subsequent endorser—if one can understand what that phrase means—that the bill was genuine and that he had a good title to it. It is a pure misprint, so far as I can understand. No one had thought of changing the law that has been the established law for many years, and it is to restore it to what it was prior to this revision of the statutes that I am proposing to change the word from 'endorser' to 'endorsee,' which it was as the Bill was passed fifteen years ago.

Mr. SPROULE. If there was anything irregular, the redress would be against the original maker, I suppose ?

Mr. BARKER. I understand clearly that this Bill does not in the least change the law as to bills of exchange as the law has been held by the courts in the past. The object is merely to get rid of a printer's error. We all know that there have been most intricate questions about this doctrine as to how far a man adopts signatures on bills of exchange, and it would be very dangerous if any attempt were made in an Act of parliament, without very grave consideration, to alter the law as it has been interpreted by the courts in the past. I understand the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) to say that there is no intention to alter what the courts have held in the past on this subject, but merely to make the statute conform to the former holdings of the courts.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. My hon. friend (Mr. Barker) understands the situation exactly. This Bill is not to change the law at all, but to restore what has been the law, always I may say, this amendment being necessary because the law was inadvertently changed in the revision of the statutes by a printer's error.

Mr. LENNOX. Do I understand the minister to say that he knows, as a matter of fact, that the statute from which this was revised was as it is now proposed to make the law read ? I recollect the law as being the same as the minister says it was, but I also assume that the minister has looked back to see that the statute from which the revision was taken was in the form which he suggests now—that the word was 'endorsee,' not 'endorser.'

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I am restoring the condition that existed prior to the revision. When my attention was called to this error, I at once went back to the original Bills of Exchange Act and found that the word there was 'endorsee,' and had always remained 'endorsee' until the new revised statutes were struck off, when it was printed 'endorser'—I imagine purely by a printer's error.

Mr. SPROULE. I asked the Minister of Justice a question. I do not know whether he thought it worth while to deign to reply to it or not, but I would like an answer before the Bill passes.

Mr. MACDONALD. Perhaps the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) would state the question again.

Mr. SPROULE. The question is this : Suppose that the original maker did not pay the bill and the endorser was obliged to pay it because of his endorsation, and suppose that the contention was set up that the bill was an illegal one, could the endorser, having paid it, have recourse against the original maker and the people who collected it ?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. This section does not touch that question at all. This merely relates to the effect of a man endorsing. The effect is to close that man's mouth against disputing the genuineness of the bill which he has endorsed—it closes that man's mouth so far as those who come after him, and whose title, therefore, depends upon his signature, are concerned, but not as to other people. It does not affect one way or the other the principle of law which has been referred to, that the endorser may fall back upon the maker, just as one endorser may fall back on those who have gone before himself.

Mr. SPROULE. I asked the other question because I presumed the Minister of Justice would be a competent authority to give us the status of the endorser.

Mr. MACDONALD. I understand my hon. friend's question is as to whether this amendment will affect the rights to which the endorser of the Bill would have to proceed against the original maker. I understand the Minister of Justice states that this Bill does not affect these rights in any way; it only deals with the status of the endorser and the subsequent party into whose hands the Bill may come.

Mr. SPROULE. I asked in addition the question what rights the endorser would have to collect from the original maker, I am asking what the law would be.

Mr. MACDONALD. The Minister of Justice suggests to me that the law remains as it always was in that respect, and that the man who puts his name on the back of a bill as an endorser or the party who eventually pays the bill to any person who may be the holder, always has recourse against the original maker, and that right is not affected.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

WINDING-UP ACT—AMENDMENT.

Bill (No. 144) to amend the Winding-up Act—Mr. Aylesworth—read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

Mr. LENNOX. I have been looking at the amendment and at the original Act, and I am not able to discover much difference. The word 'taking' is put for the word 'making,' otherwise they seem to be the same.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. The object of the Bill is to make clear beyond peradventure what the law is. This legislation is suggested by the Chief Justice of the Court of Appeal of Manitoba, who, notwithstanding the interchange of one or two letters on the subject between himself and the Department of Justice, continues to feel, as he says, considerable doubt. This Bill is not intended to make the slightest change in the law, but to make the law perfectly clear. It has been for many years the law under the Winding-up Act that the beginning of the winding-up of a company supersedes any execution which may be outstanding against the company, unless that execution has been completely carried out by the payment of the money over to the execution creditor. That being the law, when this section came to be re-enactetd in the revised statutes it was divided into two subsections, and provided, just as the Bill now under consideration provides, first, for the case of an execution placed in the hands of the sheriff against the real or personal property of the company, and next for the case where the property of the company is seized by way of an attachment, or by the registering of a memorial, or by making a garnishee order. The section as printed in the revised statutes is divided into two subsections, and making the first subsection as it were an independent provision by itself, possibly not depending as it was of course intended to depend, upon whether or not the execution has been completely carried out by payment of the money, but apparently an absolute declaration that no charge on the property should be created by delivery to the sheriff of any execution, or by seizure or levy by the sheriff upon the property of the company. So it makes, as it were, a distinct enactment that under the Winding-up Act you could not create a lien upon the property of a company by issuing an execution and the sheriff seizing. The true interpretation of the section, as it stands in the revised statutes to-day, is, I think, that it is only where there is a winding-up, and the winding-up actually begun before the levying under execution is completed, that the law declares the issuing of the writ should not create a lien or charge upon the property. But the possibility that doubt might arise as to the interpretation of the section is the reason for seeking to make the law abundantly clear. As I say, one learned judge at any rate tells me that he finds great difficulty about it, that it seems like an absolute declaration of the law, as it stands in the revised statutes, that the issuing of an execution against the property of the company does not create any lien or privilege upon that property in favour of the creditor. The section in the amended Bill now under consideration has simply been recast in such a manner as to make it abundantly plain that what the law is declaring is that no lien or privilege is created by putting an execution against a company into the sheriff's hands unless, before the winding-up begins, that execution is completely carried out and the money paid over.

Mr. LENNOX. I think I understand the object now. But there is another point I call attention to. In the revised statutes we have the words 'or by the issue or making of any attachment or garnishee order or other process,' and in the new statute we have the word taking' instead of the word 'making,' 'or by the issue or taking of any attachment.' Is the word 'taking' intended to be used or is it a mere accidental change?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I think the word has been changed to 'taking' advisedly. In the revised statutes it was declared that no lien or privilege should be created upon the property of the company by the issue or making of any atachment or garnishee order. The word 'making' is now changed to 'taking,' I think advisedly, as I find the word 'taken' at the end of the subsection. The phrase might be changed by putting in the word 'out' after 'taking.'

Mr. LENNOX. That would be an improvement.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I have no objection.

Section, as amended, agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. FIELDING moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What business will be taken up to-morrow?

Mr. FIELDING. The motion will be made for Supply. I understand the Prime Minister arranged that this motion should be made to afford the member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) an opportunity to discuss the immigration question.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That was for Tuesday.

Mr. FIELDING. The motion will be made for Supply in any event, and the estimates of the Minister of Public Works will be taken up.

Mr. MONK. The understanding I had with the Prime Minister is that the motion on immigration would be taken up on Monday.

Mr. FIELDING. The motion for Supply will be made anyway.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 10.35 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, April 10, 1908.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 153) to incorporate the Saskatchewan Power Company.—Mr. McCraney.

Bill (No. 154) respecting the Board of the Presbyterian College, Halifax.—Mr. Law.

Bill (No. 155) respecting the Pontiac Central Railway Company.—Mr. Brown.

Bill (No. 156) respecting the Northern Bank and Crown Bank of Canada.—Mr. Guthrie.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day are called, I rise to a question of privilege. I am informed by a telegram from British Columbia that the Victoria 'Times' has reported me as having opposed in a recent debate in this House legislation for the protection of white labour in British Columbia against Asiatic labour. I desire to say that that statement is absolutely and utterly untrue.

DEPARTMENT OF MARINE AND FISHERIES.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would like to ask the Minister of Finance in the absence of the Prime Minister whether or not there is a departmental investigation proceeding in the Department of Marine and Fisheries. and whether that investigation is being carried on by the examination of witnesses under oath. The question was put the right hon. the First Minister yesterday who replied that he was unable to say. I venture to suggest that this matter is one on which the government should have some information and of which information the House should be possessed.

Mr. FIELDING. My right hon. colleague the First Minister left the House a moment ago to attend His Excellency in the Senate Chamber. In his absence I could not make any definite answer but my hon. friend will have his answer later.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Will the hon. gentleman be good enough to bring the matter to the attention of the First Minister ?

Mr. FIELDING. Certainly.

THE ROYAL ASSENT.

Mr. SPEAKER. I have the honour to inform the House that I have received from the secretary of His Excellency the Governor General the following communication:—

Ottawa, April 10, 1908.

Sir,—I have the honour to inform you that His Excellency the Administrator, will proceed to the Senate Chamber this afternoon at 3.15 o'clock, for the purpose of assenting to such Bills as have passed the Senate and the House of Commons.

I have the honour to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,
J. HANBURY WILLIAMS,
Colonel,
Governor General's Secretary.

The Hon.
The Speaker of the House of Commons.

A message was received from His Excellency the Administrator by the gentleman Usher of the Black Rod as follows:—

Mr. Speaker,—His Excellency the Administrator desires the immediate attendance of your honourable House in the Chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly Mr. Speaker, with the House went up to the Senate Chamber.

And having returned.

Mr. SPEAKER informed the House that his honour the deputy of His Excellency the Governor General had been pleased to give in His Majesty's name, the Royal Assent to the following Bills :—

An Act respecting the Atlantic, Quebec and Western Railway Company.
An Act to incorporate the London and Lancashire Guarantee and Accident Company of Canada.
An Act to amend the Inland Revenue Act.
An Act to amend the Immigration Act.
An Act to amend the Act relating to Ocean Steamship Subsidies.
An Act to amend the Bills of Exchange Act.

SUPPLY—THE BUDGET.

Mr. FIELDING moved that the House go in Committee of Supply.

Mr. H. S. CLEMENTS (West Kent). Before you leave the chair, Sir, I desire to make a few remarks which I had not the opportunity of making the other day on the budget debate. I consider that I should take advantage of the present occasion, as otherwise I would not be doing justice to the constituency I have the honour to represent and a large section of our people in the district of Ontario. The tariff question, to which I propose to address myself, is one of the most important pertaining to this country, and I am sure it is one regarding which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) found himself in a difficult position this year. Unless we have a proper tariff revision, the people are not getting justice, and I wish to point out that, under the present tariff, a large section of our people, especially in the western portion of our country, are not getting that justice to which they are entitled.

When the tariff changes were brought down by the Minister of Finance a year ago, I expected, as one representing the farmers of this country that the farmers would be given an equal share of protection with the manufacturers and corporations. I believe in protection so long as it is proper protection ; and I believe that, on the average, in a general way, our manufacturing concerns and corporations are fairly well protected. But I have contended in the past that the farmers have practically no protection whatever, and, even though I may be alone in this, I state unhesitatingly that if I had the framing of the tariff I would put prohibitive duties on all agricultural products that compete with our own. In this I have in mind particularly the nation to the south of us, because they are our greatest competitors so far as farm products are concerned. Being a farmer myself and having an interest in farm land, why should I say we should have a prohibitory duty on farm products? For the reason that we in Canada are exporters of practically every article on our list of farm products. Why, then, should we have to contend with the importation of millions of dollars worth of American farm products right here in our own markets ? I remember how the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) before he became Prime Minister used to declare in every district where he spoke that if he and his party came into power they would cut across the border, and with their sunny ways, would make an arrangement by which we should get a mutual exchange with our American neighbours, not only of agricultural products but of other products as well. But these sunny ways have not fulfilled their promise ; on the contrary the changes have been rather to our detriment than in our favour since this government came into power. I will not take up time quoting in detail the difference between the Canadian and American duties. It will be enough to say generally, as I have stated in the past, that the American duties are about two and a quarter times as high as our duties against them. They have practically prohibitory duties against Canadian farm products entering their market. If this is to continue, then, as Canadian farmers, we should have the same protection against their products coming into this market. In other words, the Canadian farmers should be given the home market in his line just as, generally speaking, the Canadian manufacturer is given the home market in his line. The tariff as arranged a year ago seemed to me a tariff arranged to bleed the people for revenue. The necessaries of life are unduly taxed to the disadvantage of every mechanic and labourer in Canada. And what is the position of the farmer, especially in the section I have the honour to represent ? Before the great Northwest was opened we were able to grow wheat and coarse grains and make money on them. Of late years we have found it imposible to grow these things to advantage in competition with the west. So, we are compelled to grow those products that are especially suited to the climatic conditions of that section. We grow corn, beans, tobacco and similar farm products. On the first occasion when I had the honour of addressing this House, I protested that we had not fair protection on beans. When the tariff changes came down last session, while it was found that friends of the government in the manufacturing interest were protected, especially members who sit on the government side of the House and their friends—a point with which I hope to deal more fully later on—the interests of the farmer were practically altogether neglected. Only two changes were made for the benefit of the farmer, so far as I can see. The duty on beans was raised from fifteen cents a bushel to twenty-five a bushel. The American duty against our beans is forty-five cents a bushel. I have contended, and still contend, that, instead of fifteen cents a bushel against American beans, we should have at least sixty cents a bushel to offset their conditions and the freight rates against our beans going into their country. Had the government taken the interest of our farmers into consideration, instead of twenty-five cents a bushel they would have given us at least fifty cents a bushel protection on our beans. The other item was potatoes. We had a protection of fifteen cents a bushel as against twenty-five cents against us on our potatoes going into the United States. The government gave us an equal duty upon our potatoes.

I have always protested, even in the first session I was in this House, against having the bonding privileges on American pork coming into this Dominion. The Minister of Agriculture saw fit to annul the bonding privilege, which, I say, is a step in the right direction. I have contended that, instead of two cents a pound duty on American pork, we should have a duty of five cents per pound which is the rate of duty which they impose on our pork going into their market.

I was glad to hear the Minister of Finance state in his budget speech that a large deputation of farmers waited on the government the day previous, asking for more protection against American pork coming into this country, and I remember he stated that there might be some consideration given to them. I want to say that if that consideration is given the Canadian farmer, it will only be carrying out the ideas I advocated the first day I entered this House, and which I advocate now. I say that if the Canadian farmer were given an equal protection with the American farmer in this respect, you would be placing him on the right footing and you would be giving him the justice which he deserves. Take for instance tobacco. I have advocated more protection on tobacco with a persistency which possibly has sometimes wearied this House; and I am glad to think that while the legislation which passed this House last night was not drawn in the manner I would like it to have been, still it was in the right direction, although it does not give the Canadian tobacco growers in this country the benefit which they should have. Some hon. gentlemen who may not be acquainted with the situation of the tobacco industry may think that prior to this legislation we had ample protection upon tobacco. Now, I want to say, and it has been proven before the Agricultural Committee and in various ways, that in the provinces of Ontario and Quebec we grow tobacco equal to any that is imported from the other side, and the reason it was not used more generally was owing to prejudice, and nothing else. I regret the government have not seen fit to place the same customs duty upon American raw leaf tobacco that the Americans place upon ours. Had this government done so, I am sure it would not have been any detriment to the consumer in this country, and it would have been a great advantage to that growing industry, which if properly fostered, would become one of the most prosperous industries in my section of the country at least.

Then take the corn question. When this government allowed, as they are allowing today, 15,000,000 to 18,000,000 bushels of corn to be dumped into this market free of duty while we are not allowed a reciprocal privilege, I say that that quantity of corn takes the place in our market of the coarse grains which the farmers of this Dominion are well able to raise profitably. If our government had said to the American government: If you will give us a fair exchange in certain natural products, if you will give our farmers your market for beans and barley in return for the market we give to your corn, that would have been a fair exchange. You may call it free trade if you like; if that is free trade then I am a free trader in regard to some of the natural produtcs of Canada and the United States. I would give 100 per cent for 100 per cent, I would not give 200 per cent for 50 per cent, as our government are practicaly doing to-day under existing conditions. I must say that if some further protection is not given to the Canadian farmer, if the price of the goods he has to buy is not lessened to some extent, then I say as a farmer myself that I do not know what is going to become of the farmers in the section of the country I have the honour to represent. I will say this, I am prepared to make the statement on the floor of this House, that I do not believe there are two farmers out of every 100 in the province of Ontario to-day who, if they took an inventory of the cost of their farms and the cost of the machinery they have to buy to run it, and if they allowed themselves a salary of $300 a year—certainly not a princely salary as compared with salaries drawn in corporations and manufacturing concerns —I say that if he allowed himself $300 a year, besides what he has to pay to meet his ordinary expenses, there are not two farmers out of every one hundred who are clearing 3 per cent on their investment, and I know whereof I speak. Take for instance the pork packing concerns of this country, If it is fair that they should make 100 per cent profit, as they do in some cases, or 50 and 60 per cent profit in other cases ; that some of the manufacturing concerns, the farmer should be placed in a position where they can make 8, 10 or 12 per cent upon their investments—is it fair, I say, to place

There is another grievance that we in Ontario complain of, particularly the manufacturers, and that is that we have to pay so heavy a duty upon our coal. Our manufacturing concerns, especially in the province of Ontario, where no coal fields have been opened up, are obliged to compete with manufacturers in districts where coal is plentiful. I should like to see, in the interest of the manufacturing industries of Ontario at least, coal placed on the free list, so as to enable these manufacturers to produce cheaper than they can at the present time. Such a change would not only be in the interest of the manufacturers themselves, but it would mean that the consumer, the farmer, the labourer and the mechanic would get the articles which he required at a lower rate. Take the case of gas companies, for instance; the gas companies of this Dominion import yearly 170,000 tons of coal annually, upon which they have to pay a duty of 53 cents per ton. In the interest of the gas companies, to say nothing of the farmers and the manufacturing concerns, it would be an advantage if we had free coal, because it will enable them to supply the consumer with a cheaper article.

The hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) is held up to us as being a farmer himself and as having a personal knowledge of the needs and interests of the farmers. I have nothing personal to say against the Minister of Agriculture only I think that he is deserving of censure because I do not think that, as the minister representing the great body of agriculturists in Canada, he has not held out for their interests as he should have. I think the ministers in charge of other departments have rather outwitted him in that they have been able to get more money voted to be expended in their departments than the Minister of Agriculture has been able to secure to be expended in the interests of the farmers. Last year $5,500,000 were spent on the public works of the Dominion, whereas upon the great agricultural class, which represents the most important interest in this Dominion, $500,000 was all that was spent. If the Minister of Agriculture would take into consideration the speech that was delivered by my hon. friend from Dundas (Mr. Broder) the other night, it would be well for the farming community, because if he followed the advice of my hon. friend from Dundas, he would do justice to the farmers. It will be remembered that the hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) made the retort, during the course of my hon. friend's speech, that there was a difference between farmers, that one was a farmer and the other was an agriculturist. I would apply the term 'agriculturist' to the Minister of Agriculture, and if there is any one individual in this Dominion who has 'done' the farmers properly I believe it is the Minister of Agriculture who has so completely failed to look after their interests. The hon. member for South Wellington was in no sense justified in applying that term to my hon. friend from Dundas, because, as everyone in this House knows, my hon. friend from Dundas is an actual farmer. There is a large piping concern in the city of Guelph and I understand that the member for South Wellington has an interest in it. In this respect he has been playing the part of 'agriculturalist' in so far as he has been 'doing' the farmers of this Dominion. Lapwelded piping is largely used throughout the Dominion, especially by the farmers, and there is no lapwelded piping made in this country. Two years ago I gave expression to the belief that under these conditions lapwelded piping should come into the Canadian market free of duty so that it could be supplied to the farmers at the lowest cost. When any article is not manufactured in Canada, I care not what it is, it should come in practically duty free so that it can be given to the consumer at the very lowest cost. When any article is not manufactured in Canada, I care not what it is it should come in practically duty free, so that it can be given to the consumer at the very lowest price. When any set of manufacturers come to the Canadian government and show them that they are prepared to invest enough capital to manufacture an article in sufficient quantity to supply the Canadian demand, I should always be Canadian enough to favour giving them a proper amount of protection to enable them to make a success of the industry. In the large piping concern to which I have already referred, they make nothing but butt-welded pipe, which is not suitable to the requirements of farmers and others and which will not stand the test as well as lapwelded pipe. Under these circumstances, I claim that instead of raising the duty from 17 per cent to 35 per cent, it should have been allowed to come in free until some of our manufacturers give evidence that they want to go into the manufacture of that article, and show the government that they are prepared to make it in sufficient quantity to supply the Canadian market. If the Minister of Agriculture wants to properly represent the great agricultural class, instead of adopting legislation which in many cases has been a great detriment to the farmers, he should look after their interests with respect to the questions with which they are especially concerned and see that they receive that consideration from the government to which they are entitled. Upon two occasions in this House I offered the suggestion that there should be a rigid inspection of wire fencing. Our farmers in the west, in Ontario, in Quebec, and especially in the older provinces, purchase yearly hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of wire fencing. While I believe that all the wire fencing, as far as the wire itself is concerned, is about of the same quality, I can show you in the district from which I come fencing which was purchased by farmers twenty years ago which is good fencing to-day and which has proved a good investment to the farmers who bought that fencing. I can show you hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of fencing that was bought two or three years ago which is practically useless to-day from rust, and one of the reasons for this condition is that it has not been subjected to that rigid government inspection which should be insisted upon by the Minister of Agriculture in order to protect the farmer and which has been undertaken in other instances.

The farmers are in this position simply because the manufacturers are not using the proper galvanizing for the fencing. It is the duty of the Minister of Agriculture to see that a proper inspection is made so that every rod of fencing should be stamped and the farmers in buying it would know that they were purchasing a proper article. The minister should afford such protection as this to the farmers instead of pretending to protect them as he has done, for instance, in the pork regulations. If these pork regulations had been carried out to the letter in the section from which I come, not one farmer in ten now raising pork would be raising it. When the regulations were introduced, the pork manufacturers took advantage of them to beat down the farmers and then we have a protection against American pork of only 2 cents a pound, so that every farmer in Canada to-day, especially in the pork raising sections, has been compelled to sell his pork at a price from $1 to $1.50 a hundred less than he can possibly raise it for. There is not a farmer in Ontario to-day who, if put upon his oath, could say that he has sold 100 pounds of pork this year at a profit. I know whereof I speak, I know something of the raising of pork, I have been careful in feeding but this year had I sold the grain which I fed to swine and given the hogs away, I would have been $500 better off than I am. As I have said, the farmers are placed in this position first by the pork regulations, and second by the insufficient protection against the inroads of American pork upon this market. It should be absolutely prohibited instead of being permitted to usurp the Canadian market.

I have protested against the policy of the government in regard to cold storage. In my section the climatic conditions are such that fruit ripens practically two weeks before it does in any other part of the Dominion, and in such a section the government could well afford to establish several large cold storage plants to demonstrate what it is possible to do by means of a proper cold storage system. Such an example would force others to go into it and that would be accomplishing something for the farmers. I believe that such a government cold storage plant could be run at a profit to the government as well as to the very great advantage of the farmers of that section of the country. Last year parliament voted $1,000,000 to assist in the establishing of cold storage throughout Canada. Thirty per cent of the cost of the plants was to be given as government aid. In my section no advantage has been taken of that provision to any extent. It shows that the business men do not consider it a fair business proposition ; they do not care to invest 70 per cent of the cost and have the government control their establishment. As I have said, if the government bore the whole expense they could well afford to build several large cold storage establishments in sections of the country where they are most needed. They would be an advantage to the farmers, to the canners and to manufacturers generally. Mr. Guthrie in replying to the hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Armstrong) who had compared certain Russian markets with the Canadian markets, spoke in strong condemnation of the Russians. He is one of those who support a government who pay $5 and $10 apiece for every Doukhobor entering this country as an immigrant from Russia. I have strongly protested against that class of immigration coming into Canada and against the bonusing of any immigrants. With our great natural resources, developed and undeveloped, there is ample inducement to attract immigrants to Canada if those advantages are properly set forth by the high salaried officials whom this government employ. The bonus system is entirely wrong and no good reasons can be advanced in support of it. Under it the slick-tongued gentlemen who receive the bonuses from the government do not care what class of people they induce to come, so long as they get their $5 or $10 bonus. If we had efficient salaried officials throughout foreign lands to induce proper immigration to come into Canada, who would devote their entire time solely to that service, we would get better immigrants than are now coming to our shore. I strongly censure the government for their policy in this respect. The local agents throughout the province of Ontario have made many misrepresentations, and immigrants have been induced to come into this country to their own detriment and to that of the Dominion at large. In my district we require a certain number of the proper class of farm labour. Owing to the attractions of the Northwest, many of our young men have gone there, leaving only the older men on the farms, possibly the fathers, and therefore we are compelled to employ a certain amount of farm labour.

I have every sympathy for any immigrant who comes to this country to seek a home; but the government are deserving of censure for having dumped into the city of Chatham an unnecessary lot of immigrants. They were told before they left the old country that they could get plenty of work in that district at good wages, and could practically pick up money on the streets. The city of Chatham and the surrounding district have taken care of those people during the whole winter, and we hope to treat them with every courtesy and consideration. But what were the conditions? So far as I have been able to discover, there were five English families, making thirty-five in all, for whom this country had paid $5 a head, deported from the city of Chatham back to the old country, without any reason being given. In one case the head of the family was a bricklayer, who was taken from his work by an officer of the government and bundled off with his family in half a day. I have a question on the Order Paper asking the Minister of the Interior for the name or names of the person or persons who gave the information on which these families were deported. That number of immigrants should never have been induced to come to the city of Chatham, because there was not room there for so many of that class; but after they were brought there they should not have been deported without some reason being given to the citizens of Chatham and the people of the district why they were deported. One evening in this House, I think while the estimates of the Minister of the Interior were under consideration, I made some remarks in regard to the character of the local agents representing the government throughout the province of Ontario, especially in the riding which I have the honour to represent, and I asked the minister if he knew the reputation of these people. I meant no offence, but I felt there was something wrong in that district, I intended to probe it to the bottom, and I asked for a return. I am going to take the time to place that return on 'Hansard.' I refer to one Mr. Waugh, a local agent of this government. I do not blame him so much for his little conniving at getting $500 or $600 which did not belong to him, because, as has been proved in the Public Accounts Committee, grafting has been going on in various departments of this government, and it was only natural for these local agents to try to get a little of it for themselves. I want to show where this local agent did get some graft for himself. I am going to read a letter which this gentleman wrote to the Minister of the Interior regarding myself. It is as follows:—

Immigration Branch, Department of the Interior, Canada.

Chatham, December 20, 1907.

Hon. F. Oliver, Ottawa.

Dear Sir,—Pardon me for writing this letter to you, as I know you are a busy man, but my attention has been drawn to a statement said to have been made in the House by Mr. Clements when speaking on the immigration question that 50 per cent of those that I had placed upon farms had left; 25 per cent has not remained in the riding and for a grand wind-up that you could not have known me or you would not have made the appointment.

As to his first statement it is as false as he has proven himself to be, and as to the latter I have written him to know if it is correct, and if so to be kind enough to make it again elsewhere than on the floor of the House.

As to the immigrants whom I have distributed during the year, I may say that I have kept in close touch with them and they seem to be very grateful for any small favour they may receive, and as a whole are getting along wonderfully well, just one instance being a man and family who came out here last June who, when a farmer asked him if he could milk said no, that he had never seen a cow, but to-day is engaged with the best farmer in the county for another year as a first-class man.

The farmers are all well pleased with the help they are getting, and resent so much petty political interference with the work, and may just here say that of the number who applied for men during the season I have not been able to supply scarcely one-half the demand, and the outlook this coming year will be greater still.

Yours truly,

(Sgd.) JAS. S. WAUGH.

That was the position I was placed in, after having made the statement that there was a great deal more money paid out to that local agent than there were immigrants received in that riding. My only course was to ask for another return ; and this is the return that I asked for and that was granted by this House :

Return to an order of the House of Commons dated the 20th January, 1908, for copy of certificates by farmers resident in the riding of West Kent, and returned to the Department of Immigration agents for the said riding, and on certificates such agents were paid for placing immigrants with each farmer, giving the names of each immigrant and of each farmer such were placed with, giving the total amount received by each agent up to the present time.

I do not wish to censure the Minister of the Interior, who has been protecting his department to the best of his ability ; but after having asked for this return once or twice a week for the last two months, I succeeded in having it brought down, with the following statement :—

James S. Waugh, of Chatham, has received to date $1,256, has an unpaid account of $26, and has been asked for a refund of $558 paid to him as commission on immigrants claimed by him to have been placed at farm work or domestic service, but whom the department has reason to believe did not engage at those occupations with the parties whose names were given as their employers.

That is a sample of what is going on throughout this country. I want to be fair enough to say this, that while I have a return giving the total number of immigrant agents appointed in Ontario, a great many have been honest enough in their dealings with the government and the public where they live. I purpose to place this return upon 'Hansard.' I may say that when I asked for this return, the Immigration Department sent a circular letter to every farmer with which this agent claimed he had placed immigrants, asking if these immigrants gave satisfaction. Here is the circular letter which was sent out :

It has been reported to me that an immigrant who arrived in Canada some time ago, engaged with you as a farm labourer. I would be pleased if you would let me know if such is the case, stating if he is still with you, what kind of satisfaction he is giving, and what wages he is receiving. I desire this information in order to form a fair opinion as to the satisfaction immigrants are giving to Ontario farmers. Please reply on space underneath and use inclosed envelope, upon whch no postage is required, in mailing your answer to me.

Your obedient servant,
W. D. SCOTT,
Superintendent of Immigration.

While a great many replies came back to the department, there are many farmers who did not reply. Possibly I should have known better myself but I never supposed, nor did any of the farmers and residents of the county of Kent, that the bonus of $2 was allowed not only on heads of families, but on every man, woman and child that came into that riding during the last season. Here is the return : Here is the list :

I want to apologize for taking up so much of the time of the House, but as certain insinuations have been made in this House and as this agent and the department are shown up in connection with this matter, I propose reading some of the letters which were received by the Superintendent of Immigration from farmers in the neighbourhood of Chatham. In the first place, I have a letter written by Robert Gray with reference of Arthur Dungate, an immigrant who was placed with Mr. Gray. Mr. Gray says :

Fairly good man, still with us.

Underneath there is stamped upon the letter 'claim deducted.' My reason for reading this return is that this agent placed farm labourers with manufacturers and other concerns and was therefore not entitled to the bonuses that he received. There is another letter from Mr. James Cornhill as follows :

We have seven Englishmen working for us in our brickyards here, but no one by the name of G. Head. You inquire about some of the men coming out recently. I find them to be good workers and very sober and industrious fellows.

Yours truly,
(Sgd.) JAMES CORNHILL,
Brick manufacturer.

Claim deducted.

The next has reference to E. R. Leach, wife and three children.

Fairly good man while with us; not here now.

(Sgd.) ROBERT GRAY.

Claim deducted.

Mr. Gray is a carriage manufacturer in the city of Chatham. There is a leter from L. English, Chatham, as follows :

Dear Sir,—We have received several notices from you in reference to immigrants engaged with us. We only had one man, a Mr. Docherty, wife and four children. We engaged him at 75 cents per day, free house, wood and milk. They just stayed four days, as he said he did not care to be so far from the city, which was only two miles. I don't know why our names was sent to you. We certainly was disgusted with the one we did have. Beer seems to be the greatest trouble with these people. Pardon for not answering your other correspondence.

Yours truly,
(Sgd.) LESLIE ENGLISH,

Claim deducted.

The next has reference to William Sault, wife and two children :

No good; worked a week.

(Sgd.) ROBERT GRAY.

Claim deducted.

The next is from Robert Millinn another carriage manufacturer in the city of Chatham. It has reference to Joseph Gumbrell, wife and one child. This claim was also deducted.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Why were the claims deducted?

Mr. CLEMENTS. When I asked for this return the department undertook to trace up the operations of this agent and when they found that, instead of placing these people with farmers, he had placed them with manufacturers the claim for compensation was deducted.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. The money has never been returned?

Mr. CLEMENTS. No, the money has never been returned.

Mr. FOWLER. What do you mean by 'claim deducted'?

Mr. CLEMENTS. The department have deducted these claims, but they have not received the money back from the agent. He still holds the money. He was paid for them all.

Mr. FOWLER. And paid for them as farm labourers ?

Mr. CLEMENTS. Yes, paid for them as farm labourers. The next letter is from Eliakim Newcombe and has reference to Edward Merry and wife. The letter is as follows :

Dear Sir,—I have never heard tell of such a man as you speak of. I had one of my neighbour's boys working for me last year.

Yours truly,
(Sgd.) ELIAKIM NEWCOMBE.

Claim deducted.

There is another from Thomas Anderton referring to Richard J. Paget :

Sir,—I did engage Richard J. Paget who worked for me at $12 per month for the first month and $20 for the following month if he gave me satisfaction. This man had his supper with me on Saturday night and three meals on Sunday and one more meal on Monday morning and I have never seen or heard of Mr. Paget since then, but I think he went back to Chatham. I told him as he was going if every one used him as well in Canada as I did he would be lucky. He never did anything for me not even feed a chicken.

Yours truly,
THOMAS ANDERTON.

Claim deducted.

He is a farmer. Here is a letter from B. Jordan regarding Joseph Cook. He says:

Jos. Cook was a good fair man, worked five months, $10 a week. He left to work in beet fields.

Geo. Degard was a very good man, worked about three months.

Jos. J. Pope worked about four months. He left to work for Blight & Fielder.

F. Mumford was a very good man, worked five months, $10 a week. He left to go to work in Wallaceburg Sugar Factory.

These are all very good men.

Victor Story I did not know. He didn't work for me.

Victor Storey is reported by the agent to be with this man Jordan.

There is a letter from J. Storm regarding Alexander Martin, wife and child, on whom there would be a bonus of $6. It reads :

I wrote for a man and I didn't get one. If you sent a man and his wife, he didn't come to me. He has dropped off at some other place.

J. Jinks supposed to be a farmer, writes regarding T. Salter wife and child, on whom there would be bonuses of $6 :

Please excuse me for not answering your first notice on the grounds that I never had an immigrant and took no notice of your notice. I sent in an application last spring, also to the local agent in Chatham, J. S. Waugh. Both were for single men. So information is a little short here.

Yours truly,
(Sgd.) JOHN JINKS.

There is one here from C. Terry as follows :

Mr. CLEMENTS.

W. D. Scott, Esq.

Received this letter. As I am not a farmer, nor do I know of a C. Terry, either a farmer, or any other occupation, nor of a Mr. Butler.

Yours,
(Sgd.) CHARLES TERRY,
Cab driver.

Mr. Terry is a cab driver in Chatham, and the only Terry of that name living there. He was reported to have an immigrant and the agent received two dollars on his name.

There is a letter here from David Martin, brick manufacturer, in Thamesville, who said :

This man only worked about four weeks. He would rather drink than work.

There is a letter with regard to A. H. Dunkin, which reads :

I never knew of a man of above name. You must have been mistaken with regard to him.

J. LONGMORE.

He is the only farmer of the name in that district.

There is a letter from R. B. Gardiner, Chatham, with reference to Jonathan Ward, which reads :

In reply to yours of the 9th instant, I did not engage the man Jonathan Ward, nor have not seen him.

James Smythe, of Kent Centre, writes :

You have been misinformed about my having an immigrant employed. I have none. Geo. Smyth and Joseph Smyth, Kent Centre, have married men employed. They can no doubt give you the information you desire.

R. Tipping writes with reference to J. J. Early and wife as follows :

In answer to the above, he engaged with me as a plasterer, but left this town for Windsor, August 12, where he is still following that occupation, the wages being 40 cents per hour. Trusting this will be a satisfactory answer.

W. A. McGeachy writes with regard to Fred Steers, wife and child :

I am sorry to say that the above never made their appearance, consequently cannot report.

George Hitchcock writes with regard to E. Lusk as follows :

I received your letter in regard to E. Lusk. I did not receive him. I got one from the agent, Hon. Mr. Waugh. The man I got is giving good satisfaction, earning $12 per month.

John P. Cormode writes respecting F. Wilks, as follows :

I have not employed any immigrants this season and don't know anything of the one you inquire about.

Ray H. King writes with reference to William H. Hanley, wife and one child as follows :

Yours of the 28th instant at hand and note what you say about Mr. Hanley and family. I do not know anything about same as I never had an immigrant engaged in any way. I am told that your Mr. Waugh, I think that is his name, your immigrant agent in Chatham, sent in a good many names of men who have not even asked for a man. I am told that he got $2 per head for every immigrant he got work for and therefore sent for them when there was not even work for the Canadians who were here at that time. Therefore these immigrants came to our city and found no work, no home, and not likely to be any for some time. If it was not for the churches and the city council many of these poor people would have starved or frozen to death. I think this man should be put behind the bars if this is so.

D. Jordin writes regarding Henry T. Smith, as follows :

We had J. Cook and one named Mumford. They were both very good men to work. We paid them $10 per week. They are not with us now, nor do we know where they are employed.

These are all we had; we do not know anything about the following names, they were never in our employ: Henry T. Smith, Chas. Lee, Victor Story, Samuel Heather.

W. B. Lancaster, of Port Alma, writes with respect to Harry Angier :

Mr. Harry Angier has not engaged with me, neither do I know of such a man being in the neighbourhood. I have not had an immigrant engaged this summer.

N. A. McGeachy writes in reference to James Cardwallardes as follows :

In reply would say, he engaged the above person to work on our farm, but he failed to fulfil engagement, as he did not come for one week. In the meantime we engaged another man and did not need his services. We have not heard or seen anything of him since.

J. C. Pullen writes regarding G. H. Warner, wife and family :

There is no Mr. Warner working for me.

N. Driver writes regarding George Dudney, wife and four children as follows :

You have been wrongly informed. I have not any immigrant in my employment and don't want any. I never saw or heard of the family named above.

Arthur Johnston writes in regard to W. T. Day, wife and two children, as follows :

As Mr. Bond has never had Mr. Day as a labourer, but a Mr. Driver, he worked a month for him, then came to me, but has had very bad luck as he took sick with typhoid fever and I am just bringing him home from the hospital to-day after four and a half weeks' illness, so it will be a time before he can resume work, and then I do not expect he will be with me, as houses are scarce and it is too far to come to his work. He is a good man to work as far as I have seen yet, that is only about five weeks. He has been receiving $18 per month from me. His wife and family have had to have help from the township during his illness.

Mr. R. Huxley writes :

About the beginning of last July I brought four young men to Chatham. My neighbours took them, as Dr. Macfarland took Percy Westbrook; James Payne took young Shipley; Wm. Chapple took Geo. Swingler, and I kept Harry Gosling. The wages were $10 first month with a raise after. My men stopped with me six weeks. The others are all at the same places and all gave good satisfaction.

This is marked : 'claim deducted.'

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Will the hon. gentleman be good enough to explain how the claim was deducted ? If they were paid, how could they be deducted?

Mr. CLEMENTS. It is the claim they had against the agent. It is doubtful if they have ever received it.

Mr. FOWLER. Is this agent still in Canada?

Mr. CLEMENTS. Yes, I presume he is in Chatham. F. Dalsen, of Chatham, writes :

I don't know Jas. Gray; he never worked for me.

FRED. A. DALSEN.

This is marked : 'claim deducted.' Richard Steen, whom I know very well, writes :

There has been no immigrant placed with me for the past ten years.

R. STEEN.

Marked : 'claim deducted.' J. Blondie who owns a planing mills in the city of Chatham, writes in regard to T. J. Harding and wife :

You must be mistaken in the name, as there is no immigrant by such name working for me or any other Blondie I know of. There are, however, some unmarried immigrants in the neighbourhood who are giving good satisfaction, while others again are worthless. Hoping this will be of some use to you,

I am, yours truly,
J. H. BLONDIE.

Also marked : 'claim deducted.' Robert Gray, of Chatham, writes :

Fred Cheese is not engaged here as a farm labourer, but is working in our paint department. His foreman stated that he is giving good satisfaction, and his rate of wages will be from $1.75 to $2 per day, working on a piece-work basis.

THE WM. GRAY & SONS, COMPANY, Limited.

This is also marked : 'claim deducted.' David Martin, brick manufacturer, writes :

Mr. Buxton has worked for me since July the 18th, and is still working for three or four weeks yet in my brick and tile yard. He is a good steady man, just the kind of men we want in this country. I am paying him $1.60 per day of ten hours.

Another from David Martin about the same man. Both of these marked : 'claim deducted.' J. Carnhill, another brick manufacturer, of the city of Chatham, writes :

Chas. Newton has worked for us in our brick works, and he has proven very satisfactory, is sober and industrious. Up to now he has been drawing $1.50 per day.

Geo. Jordan another brick manufacturer, writes regarding J. Fitzgerald and son :

We did not engage any immigrant whatever. Would like to know who gave you such information. I think they are a nuisance in the country. A great many are working for their board.

Here is one from Jas. Brady, of Buxton, regarding John A. Playford and wife :

Having received your letter I write to tell you that I never had any immigrants, so I cannot inform you as to the wages or anything about them.

JAS. BRADY.

There is a case where $10 was paid as commission, and it is marked, 'claim deducted.' Here is one from Langstaff Bros., Wallaceburg :

Mr. Goodall is not with us; in fact, I never heard tell of the man; he never applied to us for a situation.

S. S. White, Charing Cross, writes :

I must say I never engaged this man Jos. Plant, nor do I know any man around Charing Cross that did; it must be the wrong place. I do not know the man.

I know S. S. White, the only man of that name living in Charing Cross. Here is a letter from E. Blondie :

Re Arthur Steers. I might say he has been working for us for the last two months, employed as a bricklayer, and has given very fair satisfaction.

This is marked, 'claim deducted.' F. Blondie, of Chatham, writes regarding Alfred Perkins, wife and five children :

You have been misinformed in the name. F. Blondie is not farming; he is a mason by trade. There is no Blondie engaging any farm hands around this part of the country, as I am personally acquainted with all the Blondies.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that I have given evidence enough from this return amply to show to this House what has been going on in the Immigration Department regarding immigration agents who do not act honestly in that capacity. I do not blame the agents so very much ; I blame the system under which the government have allowed these agents to act. I say they should not have been given a free hand, as this agent was, to pay out money which belonged to the people of this country. I want to censure the Immigration Department for having paid out money in the reckless manner shown by this return, and then been compelled to ask the agent to return $600 which does not belong to him. If he were a brother of mine, I would say that this agent ought to be prosecuted.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Hasn't he been arrested yet ?

Mr. CLEMENTS.

Mr. CLEMENTS. He is running at large so far as I know, and I suppose this will only be a step to his getting promotion, as a great many others of the same class have been promoted by this government in other departments. I am looking forward to this gentleman getting promotion rather than prosecution. I hope that the government will see that that money is returned, because it belongs to the people of this country, and does not belong to the government or to any agent of the government. But the government evidently do not prosecute for fraud. I suppose we might give hundreds of cases of agents who acted in the same manner as this agent has done, and who have been promoted. I do not expect that in this case the government will attempt to collect a dollar. I want to say that there are many worthy immigrants in that district. Many of those English immigrants are willing to work and to accept what they can get, and will, I believe, make good Canadian citizens so long as they get a fair show.

They were all dumped into that riding, they came there in such numbers that there was not enough work for them, and they had to be placed on the hands of the public. That is one of the greatest detriments to this Dominion, because it is only natural that such people would write home to their friends, and possibly many who would make excellent immigrants and citizens would be discouraged in coming out. That is why I say the whole system carried on by this government is wrong, and I hope the government will see fit to cancel this bonus for the bringing of immigrants into this country. I think there is encouragement enough in the country itself to cause immigrants to flow in without this additional incentive, and I believe immigration will continue to come in without our paying out a million dollars a year in bonuses to agents for bringing it. I believe that we could even take the step which the American union has taken and get a revenue for our immigration instead of paying out a million dollars in bonuses. I have spoken in what I consider the interests of the agriculturists. I want now to look at the question from the manufacturing standpoint. It was a great mistake when this government by their revision of the tariff, practically wiped out the woollen industry. They thus practically destroyed many millions of dollars which were invested in woollen mills. Look around this Dominion and you will only find a few woollen mills running to-day. That certainly is no credit to this government. In a few remarks I delivered in this House a year and a half ago. I pointed out that a vast amount of shoddy goods were allowed into our market under the low tariff and that these goods were a detriment to every mechanic and labourer who purchased them. Besides that importation was the cause of depriving of work thousands of mechanics who were formerly employed in our woollen mills. That policy was thus detrimental, from every point of view, to our mechanics and labourers. In 1890, when we had a tariff sufficient to protect the industries of this country, we imported $11,000,000 worth of woollen goods on which we collected $3,157,000 in duties. But in 1904, under the low tariff, we imported $15,159,000 worth and only collected $3,953,000 revenue. In other words, inside of five years there was $5,000,000 of low class goods imported which took the place of goods manufactured by Canadian labour and we only got the same amount of revenue. And I will say this, that I believe no woollen goods were made anywhere equal in quality to the woollens manufactured in this country. It is not to the credit of this government that they undertook to wipe out that great industry which had done so much for the people, both from the manufacturing standpoint and from the standpoint of furnishing our consumers with a better quality of goods. I sincerely trust that the government will reconsider their policy in the interests of both our agriculturists and manufacturers and give us a home market for our agricultural products and at the same time a superior home made article for our consumers.

Mr. W. S. LOGGIE (Northumberland, N.B.) I have listened with considerable pleasure to the hon. gentleman's remarks and congratulate him on the lengthy statement he has given the House. The burden of his complaint was that the farmers are not receiving enough protection for their pork products and that the woollen industry does not enjoy a sufficiently high tariff to be placed on a stable foundation. Then he went on to cite instances in which he claimed the government have not managed the immigration carefully and prudently and have paid out money which they should not have paid. But to my mind the very fact that the government have discovered that money has been paid out wrongfully and have endeavoured to get it refunded is evidence of the care the department is taking in the management of its immigration business, and I think it has been very well established that the immigration or the bonusing policy of the government is : Pay your money for value received ; when the goods are delivered, the money is paid ; until they are delivered no money is paid.

Mr. CLEMENTS. The government would never have discovered that money was wrongfully paid if I had not made a protest. It was only when I protested that this government found that out.

Mr. LOGGIE. I am glad the hon. gentleman has been such a useful member and that those in charge of the department were wide enough awake to take advantage of the information as soon as it was brought to their notice. That is all any business man can do. The hon. gentleman tells us that a considerable quantity of pork is imported, and he has the audacity to claim that our farmers are suffering because a class of pork is imported which Canadians do not raise.

As a matter of fact, I know from personal experience, a large proportion of the pork that is imported into Canada from the United States is a class that is not produced in this country to any great extent. It is known in the trade as 'fat back' or clear fat pork. As a matter of fact, the farmers and packers of Canada do not produce in any large quantity this class of pork and cannot supply the demand for it. Now, if this statement of mine regarding this class of pork is true, and if this pork is used largely in fishing camps and lumber camps, is it fair or reasonable that you should heavily tax the people who consume it with the expectation that some one is benefited by it who produces a lighter class of pork in Canada? We have an example of the same kind of policy in the United States. In portions of Maine there are blueberry barrens, and the people there are so given up to the idea of protection that, for the sake of these few blueberry barrens in the state of Maine, they put a duty of 70 per cent on the canned article. But does that stop the canned article, packed in Canada, from finding its way into the United States? It does not, it simply enhances the price to the consumer. If any hon. gentleman wants this verified, let him go to Messrs. H. N. Bate & Sons in this city, and ask the price of canned blueberries for the wholesale trade. He will find that they are sold at 75 cents a dozen. Then let him write to Messrs. Francis H. Leggatt & Company, of New York, and he will find that they sell the same goods at $1.15 or $1.20 a dozen. So, to protect these blueberry barrens in the state of Maine, the whole consuming public of the United States is paying this extra duty. Is it wise to increase the duty on barrelled pork as suggested by my hon. friend (Mr. Clements) especially the class of pork referred to by me as being used by our fishermen and lumbermen.

Mr. CLEMENTS. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Loggie) will permit me, I would like to ask a question. So far as the statement he makes regarding American pork is concerned, which pork he claims, the fishermen require, no doubt he refers to the heavy, fat salt pork.

Mr. LOGGIE. Yes.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I can tell the hon. gentleman that in the section of the province of Ontario from which I come we produce any amount of that class of pork and we cannot get sale for it. The Minister of Agriculture accused the farmers in my district of raising too much of that class of pork, and we are compelled——

Mr. LOGGIE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Clements) does not know it all. I am interested in a corporation that uses a large quantity of that class of pork, and I know that when we apply to the Park-Blackwell people or the William Davis people and houses of that class, they are not able to supply that class of pork. I note what the hon. gentleman says about the Minister of Agriculture, and the Minister of Agriculture is right. That is not the class of pork that we are adapted to raise in this country. This class of hogs is raised mainly in Iowa and is fed largely on corn. The people there raise a heavier class of hogs than we do. It is unreasonable for the hon. gentleman to ask an increase of duty. The duty is already 2 cents per pound, and I suppose that if he had his way it would be 3½ cents. Well, it would only mean that the fishermen and farmers who use that class of pork would have to pay that much more.

Mr. BLAIN. What about the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Loggie) own friends, who made up a deputation that went to ask for an increase in the duty?

Mr. LOGGIE. I am glad the hon. gentleman mentioned that. I congratulate the government that they did not entertain any such proposition.

The hon. gentleman (Mr. Clements) has referred to the woollen industry. To my mind, if an industry cannot survive at a reasonable protection in a country like this, it would be better for our people to bend their energies in some other direction. With a protection—or revenue, if you like to put it that way, because all revenue tariffs afford incidental protection and industry suited to our conditions should prosper. My hon. friend from West Kent (Mr. Clements) has the audacity to tell the people of this country forsooth, that because we are not paying a higher rate of duty than 30 per cent on woollens the woollen industry cannot survive. Well, I know something of the woollen industry, and I can tell the hon. gentleman that that is not at all my opinion of that industry. But I shall have something to say about that later on and do not wish to discuss it at this moment. I think that the hon. gentleman, in stating his case, has made out a very bad case—certainly, I would expect better from him.

Now, as the motion before us is one on which we can chose our subjects of discussion, I would like to say a word with regard to the fiscal and financial policy of the government. I congratulate the country and the Finance Minister upon the wonderfully prosperous condition of our finances at the present time. We find that for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1907, we expended on capital account $11,327,791. And, while we were able to do all that, we reduced the net public debt by $3,375,117. Then, again, the fiscal year that ended on March 31 last shows the very satisfactory surplus of something like $19,000,000—not counting, of course, the special expenditure for the Transcontinental Railway, on which, during that year, we spent no less than $17,750,000. But, though we put this large sum into the Transcontinental Railway we increased the public debt by only $12,000,000. So, were it not for the extraordinary expenditure on the transcontinental, we should have had a surplus over all expenditures of nearly $6,000,000. It seems to me that wiser or more statesmanlike words could not have been spoken than those of the Minister of Finance when he said that the present is a time for caution, but—a rider to that, for I think the wise man, under the circumstances would not close his 'caution'—it was a time for courage. The showing that the hon. gentleman has made has done much, perhaps more than any one thing to maintain the high financial standing that Canada enjoys to-day and has enjoyed for a number of years past.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I wish to deal with a few of the allegations made by the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster). First of all, he alleged that the Liberal party were not true to the pledges they made in 1893 at the Ottawa convention. I want to say that it was my privilege and pleasure to be present at that convention, and I know somewhat whereof I speak; and if there was one thing at that convention that impressed me more than another it was this, that in future the tariff was to be based on the revenue principle rather than the protective principle that is in most cases, perhaps not every case. I must admit that I am a little bit tinged with the idea that our friends the farmers do have a little protection to the extent of 2 cents a pound on pork; but practically speaking, we removed from the tariff the principle of protection.

Mr. HENDERSON. How far?

Mr. LOGGIE. I would invite the hon. gentleman to turn to the Trade and Commerce report, page 14, and I think he will be able to follow the figures I am going to quote. He will find that the average customs duty on all imports for the decade from 1887 to 1896, the last ten years of the Conservative regime, was 19·64 per cent. Then he will find that for the following decade, from 1897 to 1906, the average rate of duty on all customs imports was 16·88. The decrease in the ten years was 2·76. During the last ten years I refer to we find that total customs imports was $1,932,262,271, which sum applied to the 2·76 shows a reduction in taxation of $53,330,438. It would be fair perhaps to deduct from this saving in taxation the amount of bounty paid during the ten years, which, according to the blue-books, amounted to $9,501,385. That sum deducted from the sum I have already mentioned, $53,330,438, makes the reduction, or the saving that my hon. friend wanted to know about, of the appreciable amount of $43,829,053. And yet the hon. gentleman from North Toronto in addressing the House used these words:

So I say in actuality the duty for protection has not been diminished to any appreciable extent.

As a matter of fact, it is beyond dispute that we had an actual saving to the country in the ten years, in the way of duty, of money that remained in the pockets of the people, after deducting the amounts paid for bounties, a sum no less than $43,000,000. These figures are beyond dispute. The books are there, and I challenge any hon. gentleman to prove me in error. Now, Mr. Speaker, we would not have so nice a story to tell if the prediction of hon. gentlemen of the opposition came to pass, when they said that if the Liberals got into power and reduced the rate of duty, our industries would be closed up, we would not have any home industries to speak of, because the reduction in duty would take place at the sacrifice of the industries. Sir, we have proved many times that that has not been the case. We can prove as a matter of fact that although we have increased our imports we have at the same time increased our manufactures, perhaps in quite as great a ratio as our imports have increased.

Mr. PATERSON. While the hon. gentleman is referring to the speech of the hon. member for North Toronto, has he thought of adding the bonuses to the taxation? The bonuses that we paid on iron were paid out of revenue derived at the rate of 19·93. On the same principle you might say that all the moneys expended on public works and everything else were all paid out of revenue.

Mr. LOGGIE. Of course that makes my argument all the stronger. I gave the hon. member for North Toronto credit for that, because he thought it was fair to deduct that. Now, Mr. Speaker, I have pointed out that this government have materially reduced the rate of customs duties on goods imported into Canada, and have thus enabled our people to live on less money than they would otherwise require; if by so doing they have sacrificed Canadian manufacturing industries then their policy would be a fair subject for criticism; if we reduced our rate of duty and saved the money for our people, on our imported goods, thus our people can live on less than they could otherwise, if we had thereby made the sacrifice of our home industries, that might be a question of policy. But let us see if the prediction of the opposition has been realized. Have our mills closed? have our industries deprecated? have our employees been dismissed?

Mr. CLEMENTS. I pointed to the woollen industry.

Mr. LOGGIE. Let us see. I think there is no better test or index of the progress of the manufacturing industry of this country than the manufactures of cotton. Now I have taken the liberty to take from the blue-books a table to prove what I say with regard especially to our textile industries. I do not take wool, I take cotton, because cotton enters into a greater number of textiles than wool. The imports of raw cotton for the last five years of the Conservative government were as follows:

1892	$3,389,232
1893	3,201,452
1894	2,610,538
1895	2,853,987
1896	2,845,371
Total	$14,900,580

or in round numbers there was an importation of $15,000,000 worth of raw cotton in five years.

Mr. FOWLER. Have you the price per pound?

Mr. LOGGIE. No, that is the total value.

Mr. FOWLER. You should have the price per pound.

Mr. LOGGIE. We will get that after if you will have a little patience. This makes a yearly average of $2,980,116, or during the last five years of the Conservative regime, there was raw cotton imported amounting, on the average, to a little less than $3,000,000 a year. Let us compare the imports of raw cotton during the last two years with the imports during the period that I have mentioned. We find by turning up the blue-books, and these figures are beyond dispute, that in 1896 we imported no less than $7,626,625 worth of raw cotton, that for the nine months of 1907 for which we have returns we imported $6,631,489, and if the imports during the remaining three months, for which we have no statistics, were in the same ratio, we would have imported raw cotton to the amount of $8,842,995, which, I would ask the House and the country to note, is a threefold advance over the average importation of raw cotton during the last five years of the Conservative regime. I know of no better index than statistics of this kind of the progress and onward march of our home industries. I would like to congratulate the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) for a thought that he suggested in his speech the other day which I think is well worthy of the consideration of the government. He said that we lacked Canadian statistics showing the progress of our home industries, that we had no reliable information to refer to or to get at. For that reason I have taken this information about raw cotton from the blue-books, and I believe that it is the best index that we can have of the marked expansion of the textile industry of Canada.

Mr. FOWLER. You have not compared the prices per pound yet?

Mr. LOGGIE. No, I think we shall leave that until some other time.

Mr. FOWLER. I think you should.

Mr. LOGGIE. My hon. friend is very anxious to compare prices. I know that the price of raw cotton has somewhat advanced, but perhaps my hon. friend was thinking too much about the price to notice that there was an importation of raw cotton threefold greater than it was before. I have some other statistics that go to prove that the home industries of this country are in a very prosperous condition. Let me give you a few items. I find that in 1905 the capital invested in our home industries, cotton mills, woollen mills, knitting mills had greatly increased. Let me point out that I believe that the knitting and woollen mills are in a prosperous condition. Of course, I cannot prove what I am saying, but I understand that the Penmans, the largest knitting people in Canada, are in a very satisfactory condition.

Mr. FOWLER. You had better ask my hon. friend from Colchester (Mr. Stanfield) ?

Mr. LOGGIE. If I were to refer to my hon. friend (Mr. Stanfield) I think he would say that the knitting industry is in a fairly prosperous condition even in the maritime provinces. I have no desire to pry into his private business, but I am sure he would tell me that.

Mr. STANFIELD. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Loggie) how many woollen mills closed down in the province of New Brunswick during the last ten years ?

Mr. LOGGIE. I do not know. I have not the details of that. I will give you what I have. I have a few figures here showing the wonderful expansion which has taken place in the industrial life of Canada during the five year period ended 1905 :

—	1905,	1900.	Increase.
Capital.....	833,916,155	446,916,487	386,999,668
Employees..	383,920	339,173	44,747
Salaries and wages....	162,175,578	113,249,350	48,926,228
Value of products.....	706,446,578	481,053,375	225,393,203

It seems that this is another evidence of the wonderful prosperity of the country during the past decade. It is an answer to the prediction of hon. gentlemen on the Conservative side of the House that the manufacturing interests of Canada, when a Liberal administration had an opportunity of framing the tariff, would go to the wall. I think it is an answer that cannot be disputed. This table shows, to my mind, and I am sure it shows to the House and the country, a remarkable expansion, there being in the aggregate, an increase of $45,000,000 in salaries and wages and $225,000,000 in production within the short term of five years. We find also that the output of our Canadian industries increased approximately 50 per cent from 1901 to 1906 which is a somewhat greater ratio of increase than occurred in the foreign trade of Canada. In 1906 home consumption had approximately increased to $972,930,286, of which Canadian manufacturers supplied $595,830,253. This figure may not be accurate because there may be some articles which are entered twice in the trade tables. For instance, leather is put in and when it is made into boots and shoes it is included in the statement again and in that sense perhaps it may not be accurate.

In order to show this more fully I have prepared the following table showing the increases by groups of industries.

PRODUCTION BY GROUPS OF INDUSTRIES.

Groups of Industries.	1905.	1900.	Increase.
Food products	172,017,002	125,202,620	46,814,382
Textiles	84,370,099	67,724,839	16,645,260
Iron and steel products	52,587,051	34,878,402	17,708,649
Timber and lumber and their remanufactures	109,500,970	80,341,204	29,159,766
Leather and its products	41,201,872	34,720,513	6,481,359
Papers and printing	32,773,880	20,653,028	12,120,852
Liquors and beverages	13,928,701	9,191,700	4,737,001
Chemicals and allied products	15,290,822	11,437,300	3,853,522
Clay, glass and stone products	13,558,921	7,318,582	6,240,339
Metals and products other than steel	50,068,669	19,561,261	30,507,408
Tobacco and its manufactures	15,189,720	11,802,112	3,387,608
Cars, carriages, wagons, &c	36,911,124	19,971,605	16,939,517
Vessels for water transportation	1,892,253	2,043,668	151,415
Hand trades	1,433,753	599,329	834,424
Miscellaneous industries	65,721,741	35,607,212	30,114,529
	706,446,578	481,053,375	225,393,203

Under 'Miscellaneous industries' I have included the value of our fisheries which in 1905 was approximately $30,000,000.

These figures show that our industrial production has kept pace with the increase in our population.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS.

GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC BRANCH LINES.

Mr. CRAWFORD moved second reading of Bill (No. 151) respecting the Grand Trunk Pacific Branch Lines Company.

Mr. HENDERSON. Would the hon. gentleman be good enough to tell us the nature of this Bill? We have no copy of it yet before us.

Mr. CRAWFORD. It is simply to grant an extension of time for the construction of the branch lines.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

SUPPLY—THE BUDGET.

Mr. LOGGIE. Mr. Speaker, when the House rose at six o'clock I had practically finished what I had to say in regard to the taxation of the country during the past decade as well as during the preceding one, and had also made a few remarks regarding the industrial condition of Canada as we find it to-day, and I think I substantiated by figures that the home industries of this country are in a very satisfactory condition—that they are keeping pace with the increased population of Canada, as well as the export trade of Canada. Now I wish to make a few remarks regarding the expenditures of the country during the past decade as well as during the few years preceding the same. It is well known to hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House that the expenditures of this country are divided into two classes—namely, certain recurring expenditures which are charged to consolidated account, and expenditures which are not recurrent but are rather of a permanent character which are charged to capital account. In this connection I wish to refer to some remarks of the hon. ex-Minister of Finance, the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster). On page 5349 of 'Hansard,' referring to the expenditures made by the present administration, he said:

> Some unthinking person says they have given it all back to the people. Not at all, every dollar of that money that is put in fixed works, such as buildings and works of that kind, which return nothing to the people except use, and the money invested in hundreds of thousands of different constructions into which the people's money is put, is effectually barred out from the currency and from the money power of the country. It is as if it were hoarded. Much employment has been given for the time being but so far as returning any value is concerned, its usefulness has absolutely ceased. It is fixed in these constructions which are of use but return nothing in a financial way to the people of the country.

I wonder at the hon. member for North Toronto making these disparaging remarks in regard to the expenditures of the country during the last ten years; but I wonder more when I read his further remarks, as follows:

> The Conservatives in their last years of office preferred to incur a debt of $31,000,000 and leave that extra taxation which they would have had to take from the people of the country with the people who needed it, and to do with that $31,000,000 of debt, what was necessary in the way of capital expenditure to be used and to be enjoyed not only by the people of those years but by the future generations. That is the proper way of financing.

The hon. gentleman has the audacity to tell us that for ordinary small public works the proper way to finance is to go into debt. Now, let us see what the hon. gentleman did during the last five years that he was Finance Minister of this country. The figures I give you can find in the blue-books. In 1892 we find charged to capital account $2,164,456, but in the same year he went into debt to the amount of $3,322,403; that is to say, he had not sufficient money from current account to pay the ordinary expenditure chargeable to consolidated account, but actually had to borrow money for that purpose. In 1893 he charged to capital account $3,088,317 and borrowed $549,605. In 1894 he charged to capital account $3,862,969 and borrowed $4,501,989. In 1895 he charged to capital account $3,030,490 and in that same year he added to the net debt of the country no less a sum than $6,891,897. In 1896 he charged to capital account $3,781,311 and borrowed no less a sum than $5,422,508. These figures, when added together, prove to us that the Conservative party, during the last five years of their regime, expended on capital account $15,927,743 and borrowed no less a sum than $20,688,402. That is to say they borrowed $4,761,659 more than they paid out during the entire five years on capital account. In other words they borrowed $5,000,000 to pay for ordinary expenditure, and yet hon. gentlemen opposite have the audacity to tell us that as they expended $31,000,000 and that they thought it was a wise thing to borrow this $31,000,000. What other way had they of paying for it? They did not have the money in the treasury, they did not have it in the revenue, and they used their only recourse which was to borrow the money. And the expenditures were small. They were not sepcial expenditures to meet which would be the proper thing to borrow.

During the last five years of the Conservative regime, we find that they expended in round numbers $16,000,000 on capital account. Now let us see what was done by the present administration in the following ten years. I find that they expended on capital account no less a sum than $89,000,000, viz., on canals, on the Canadian Pacific Railway, on debts allowed to provinces, on Dominion land, on new public works, and during the same period although they expended $89,000,000, they added only $5,000,000 to the net public debt. Compare that with the last five years of the Conservative administration when we find that they expended only $16,000,000 and borrowed $21,000,000 and added to the net debt $21,000,000. Then spent $16,000,000 on capital account and $5,000,000 on ordinary consolidated account.

Carrying the comparison still further, we find that the parties in power from 1868 to 1896, twenty-nine years — twenty-five of which were under Conservative regime—expended on capital account $204,000,000 and increased the net debt of the country $182,000,000. Compare that with the capital expenditure, during the decade I have already referred to, of $89,000,000 and yet with only $5,000,000 added to the debt, whereas the other expenditure on capital account was $204,000,000 and $182,000,000 added to the net debt. It seems to me that this comparison speaks golden words for the present administration.

Mr. BENNETT. How does it compare with the Robinson administration?

Mr. LOGGIE. I have no doubt it can stand the comparison.

Mr. MORIN. Is not my hon. friend giving the House wrong figures? The debt of the country in 1896 was $258,000,000. At the time of confederation it was $75,500,000. When Mr. Mackenzie was in power he added $19,600,000 to the debt. Make a calculation on those figures, and you will not get $189,000,000.

Mr. LOGGIE. That would make it practically correct. It included Mr. Mackenzie's administration. I said twenty-nine years, twenty-five of which were under Conservative regime, and I gave the figures for the whole twenty-nine years, so that they are quite correct.

Mr. MORIN. $75,500,000 and $19,000,000 would make at once $96,000,000. Deduct $96,000,000 from $258,000,000 and that will not work out your result.

Mr. LOGGIE. That works it out exactly correct. I told you that I included the $19,000,000 in the $182,000,000 which makes it exactly correct. We expended on capital account from 1897 to 1907, $84,000,000 and did not add practically one cent to the net debt. Here is the point I want hon. gentlemen particularly to note. During this period, we reduced the rate of customs duty 13·86 per cent and the per capita debt 15·7 per cent. I think that the country deserves to be congratulated on this very favourable showing to a decade to which I have referred. It shows that the words of my honoured leader, which were quoted by the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster), have been fulfilled. These words were :

> We shall be in power before long, and when in power I promise you such an era of prosperity that it will not require statisticians to prove it. You will have it in your pocket.

It seems to me that the fact that this large amount of money could have been expended on necessary public works without our adding to the debt of the country to any appreciable amount, is an evidence of this great prosperity which the right hon. the First Minister promised.

I have pointed out to you that the Conservative party, during the last five years they were in power, went in debt to the extent of 33⅓ per cent or thereabouts more than they paid out on capital account altogether. If the expenditures which the present administration have overtaken had been overtaken by the Conservative government in the same ratio, they would have added to the debt no less a sum than $112,000,000. That is, we have expended $84,000,000 on capital account without borrowing money, and, if you add one-third to that, you get $112,000,000. So, had they made the same expenditures with the same proportion of revenue, they would have had to spend all their revenues and borrow $112,000,000 besides. If it were necessary, as I say it was—and there has not been any question about the necessity of expenditures on capital account—to spend this large sum of money and run the country into debt to the amount of $112,000,000 besides, should we feel like going into debt for another $100,000,000 to build the Transcontinental Railway ? I think the credit of the country would not have stood as high as it does if such had been the case. But we echo the words of the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) when he said that we glory in the fact that we had this money to make these expenditures without adding to the debt. Thus we are in a position to go on with this great and laudable undertaking, the building of the Transcontinental Railway. I believe that when we are spending so large a sum of money on an undertaking like the Transcontinental, the proper businesslike way is to borrow money on the credit of the country instead of endeavouring to meet so large and such an expenditure out of ordinary revenue.

Now, let me deal for a moment with the net debt. My hon. friend from Dorchester (Mr. Morin) tells us that in 1896 the debt was $258,000,000, which is right enough, In 1906 the net debt was $267,000,000. In 1907 it was reduced to $263,000,000. So, we find that the net debt has been increased by nearly $5,000,000 over 1896. But we must not forget that a considerable sum of money has been expended on the Transcontinental Railway. As a result of the operations of the year just ended, we shall probably have increased our net debt by $17,000,000 as compared with 1896. But, as an offset to that, we find that we have expended no less than $26,000,000 on the Transcontinental. And this is an undertaking that we think is a valuable asset to the country. We know as a matter of fact that, after a certain number of years, we are to receive a rental equal to 3 per cent of the cost of the railway.

Mr. MORIN. After seven years.

Mr. LOGGIE. Yes, after seven years. And we shall have expended probably $100,000,000 on this great undertaking. And certainly the country is to be congratulated that its credit is in so favourable a condition that we are able to go on with such an undertaking. Not only shall we receive benefit in the way of transportation by the construction of this road, but we believe there will be opened up large areas of land fit for settlement and agriculture, settlement which will add to our strength and help to increase our home industries. My hon. friend from Colchester (Mr. Stanfield), for instance, will find that his goods will find their way into the northern part of Ontario and Quebec.

Mr. STANFIELD. They do now.

Mr. LOGGIE. I congratulate my hon. friend on having goods that commend themselves over such a large territory. Now, I have referred to a few items that are charged to capital account comparing the last five years of the Conservative regime with ten years of Liberal rule. I would like to refer also to certain items charged to consolidated account. In 1896, the expenditure on consolidated fund account was $36,0000,000 but, under the Liberal administration, in 1906, the expenditure was $67,000,000—an increase of nearly 100 per cent. All this has been paid out of the ordinary revenue of the country. Had these revenues not been available, either the necessary public works could not have been overtaken, or we should have had to borrow money to provide them. The following figures will give a comparison of the expenditure under Conservative and Liberal rule :—

	1896.	1906.
Fisheries	$427,250	$968,702
Agriculture	210,877	603,812
Immigration	120,199	842,668
Quarantine	95,247	624,758
Lighthouse and coast service	466,057	2,530,307
Ship subsidies	534,916	1,227,560
Ocean and river service	181,451	1,013,682
Mounted Police	533,014	1,004,079
Militia	1,136,713	4,294,124
Post Office	3,665,011	4,921,577
Railways	3,826,225	8,779,677
Public Works	1,229,768	7,484,715
Provinces	4,235,664	6,726,372
Inspection of staples	2,921	109,939
Trade and Commerce	9,462	63,625

I have not given all the figures for the $67,000,000 of expenditure, but this group represents a total of about $41,000,000 as spent by the Liberal administration as against about $16,000,000 spent by the Conservative administration. This table I think indicates growth and prosperity during the past decade, each department of the public service requiring—now note the word 'requiring' because of the prosperity of the country—requiring an expenditure on consolidated account, no borrowing. I have indicated to you that $5,000,000 had to be borrowed to pay on consolidated account during the last five years of the Conservative administration. Here in the group I have named, there was $41,000,000 spent, and not a dollar borrowed. Surely the government and the country are to be congratulated. We find, in referring to this matter again, that on the fisheries service we have expended $550,000 more in 1906 than the Conservatives did. You will understand that that means the fostering and care of our fisheries, and I think the country is to be congratulated in that we had the money and were able to take care of those services that devolved upon us. Then again in agriculture, we have expended $400,000 more than they did ten years ago, and we know as a matter of fact that agricultural interests have prospered wonderfully. Then again on immigration, we find that $750,000 more has been expended in 1906 than in 1896. We all know the wonderful development that has taken place in that regard, 300,000 immigrants or thereabouts coming into Canada during the past year. Then we find that on lighthouses and coast service we expended in 1906, $2,000,000 more than they did ten years previously. What benefit have we received from that? We know, as a matter of fact, that our coast line has improved lighthouses, that our buoy service is improved. In place of the old fashioned service we have gas lighted buoys, as a rule, and the fog alarm service has been very much improved.

Then ship subsidies is another matter worth noting. We are now spending $700,000 a year more than the Conservatives spent ten years ago. This is a very important service. We know that our transportation service and mail service are indispensible and have been greatly improved. We have now a direct service to South Africa, to Mexico and other ports, and these aids to our industries will enable them to reach new markets. And last, but not least, we have a direct through service to France, which we think will largely aid in the development of Canadian industries. Then we have another item ; we find that for ocean and river service $800,000 more is expended in 1906 than in 1896, and what does that mean ? You know, Mr. Speaker, that we have a long coast line, and we find that railways and aids to steamboat companies afford transportation facilities to localities that would have no other means of bringing their products to market. Then we have the mounted police. We have expended $500,000 more on that service, and I am sure we can only speak in terms of laudation of the work performed by our mounted police. Then we have $3,100,000 extra expended on the militia. We know that this is a very important service. Of course, it is much more expensive because we have taken over the permanent force, and we have had to add to the expenditure some $5,000,000. We must expect to spend more money on our militia if we are to become a great country. We are only in our youth yet, and if we are to broaden out and take our place amongst the nations of the world we must spend more money on that department.

Then we have the Post Office Department, and I am sure we can only speak in words of praise of the hon. gentleman who presides over that department and of his predecessors as well. In 1906 we expended $1,300,000 more than the Conservatives did in 1896, and with what result? We find that during the interim we have reduced the postal rate about 50 per cent. We have done more than that ; we have turned deficits into surpluses, and surely we can congratulate the country over the management of the Post Office Department. Then as to the Railway Department. We find that in 1906 we expended $5,000,000 more than the Conservatives did in 1896. We find that during this time the railway earnings have more than doubled. Railway earnings have increased in a greater ratio than has capital account. Not only have earnings increased more than capital account, but the mileage has increased more than capital account as well. So we find this department in a very satisfactory condition. We find that we have spent $6,000,000 on Public Works. I mean the ordinary small recurring public works ; this is $3,000,000 more than in 1906 than in 1896. And who will say that a town here and a town there with 2,000, 3,000 and 4,000 inhabitants, does not need a new post office? Would the hon. gentleman tell me that this money is not wisely spent? A man that is in business must erect his store. The money is locked up in it, it is true, but it is decidedly in the interest of the business, and it is just as much in the interest of this great country that its population should have proper public buildings in every town where there is sufficient population.

Mr. LOGGIE.

Then we have another large expenditure which, to my mind, marks an epoch in the history of Canada. I refer to the $2,500,000 additional subsidies to the provinces. It was deemed by the present administration to be equitable that from our customs duties we should increase the provincial subsidies. Now, to summarize, in 1906 we spent $41,000,000 on the group of services I have indicated. Not only does this expenditure show advancement, but I think it has been a great incidental advantage to the country. The material interests of Canada have developed in a much greater ratio than has the expenditure, because I have shown that while we have reduced the rate of customs taxation nearly 14 per cent, we have reduced the per capita expenditure 15·7 per cent.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I think the facts I have given show that the Minister of Customs was quite right when he said that we had the money to execute these great works in the interest of this young and rising nation. And the glory of it, to my mind, is that all this has been overtaken without increasing, but rather decreasing, the per capita debt of the country, while at the same time reducing by about 14 per cent the customs taxation.

Now, having spoken thus on the expenditure I wish to say a word on the progress of the country. I indicated before dinner that the progress of the country in its industrial interests was going on at a very marked and rapid rate. But, there are other departments as well that are making progress at as marked a rate and to my mind this fact indicates the prosperity of the country at large. We find that the deposits in the savings banks increased as follows :

1896..	61,259,152
1906..	90,264,229

Paid up capital of the chartered banks.

1886..	$ 61,841,395
1896..	62,198,413
1907..	96,362,130

An increase of 54 per cent. Could you have any better evidence of the fulfilment of the policy of the Prime Minister as enunciated in the words that I referred to a few moments ago than to find that the capital of the chartered banks had increased 54 per cent in the last ten years, whereas, in the ten previous years, it had increased but one per cent ? We find that the bank reserves in 1906 was $71,500,000.

Note circulation.

1886..	$ 45,497,080
1896..	50,709,059
1907..	133,826,934

An increase of 180 per cent during the past ten years as compared with an increase of 11 per cent during the preceding ten years.

Deposits in chartered banks.

1886..	$147,532,690
1896..	245,029,144
1907..	679,724,118

or an increase of 177 per cent during the last decade as compared with an increase of 69 per cent from 1886 to 1896. Bank assets, during the last ten years of the Conservative regime increased 39 per cent while in the last ten years, under Liberal administration, they increased 202 per cent. These figures are certainly most gratifying, indicating the great natural wealth of the Dominion and the activity and enterprise of the whole Canadian people. Then, let us look at our foreign trade:

	Imports.	Exports.
1896..	$118,000,000	$121,000,000
1901..	190,000,000	195,000,000
1905..	261,000,,000	203,000,000
1906..	294,000,000	256,000,000

These figures indicate, I think, that the import trade is growing in proportion to the population and in proportion to the expansion of our home industries as well. It is apparent that commercial enterprises generally have proved profitable and that all classes have shared in the prevailing prosperity which is indicated by the enormously increased deposits in the banks.

Another item indicating the progress of the country is the gross earnings of the railways.

Railway earnings.

1896..	$ 50,000,000
1906..	125,000,000

Increase, 150 per cent.

I think we may fairly say that these figures indicate the prosperity of the country, but the prosperity of a country is very well judged of, I would say, by the contentment of the people and by their earning power. Another indication of the earning power of the people is the growth of their savings. I have indicated that by the figures which I have just read. The growth of a country's savings is assisted by the prosperity of the country and the expansion of its industries. Before dinner I pointed out that the industries of this country have expanded in a marked degree during the past decade and this is an index of the prosperity of the country. Then, another important item is the development of transportation and we know how it has developed during the past decade. These conditions mark this decade as an epoch of progress the greatest in the history of Canada and unprecedented perhaps in the history of any country. As I have already indicated I think that the statement of the Minister of Finance has done perhaps as much as anything else to enable us to retain our high standing in the financial centres of the world. Now, I have spoken of the taxation, the industries, the expenditure and the progress of the country.

I want to say a few words on a matter that perhaps comes a little nearer home. I wish to say a word as to how things are going on in the maritime provinces, the home of a number of us in this side of the House as well as on the other.

Mr. BOYCE. What about New Brunswick?

Mr. LOGGIE. Well, we will talk about New Brunswick too. In the province of Nova Scotia, as compared with five years ago, there is an increase of $5,500,000 in the produce of the smelting works. Then, I think we can very well refer to the increase in the value of the fisheries as well as to the increase in the value of our timber exportation. It would be fair and reasonable to refer to the growth and prosperity of the export trade through the maritime ports. I refer particularly to the port of St. John, and as far as that shipping port is concerned we know that during the last decade it has bounded from nothing until to-day it is a very important shipping centre outwards for the trade of the prairie fields of Canada. While I am on my feet I want to say a word in reference to my own province. Not only are we going ahead in the lumbering and fishing industries, but we have recently discovered that we have a country rich in minerals. In the county represented by my hon. friend (Mr. Turgeon) there has recently been discovered one of the most valuable iron deposits perhaps in Canada. This has been purchased by the Drummonds, these mines will be developed and will, I think, add much to the material wealth of our province.

I wish to refer briefly to the transportation question as it affects the maritime provinces, particularly the Intercolonial. This question of transportation is a burning one all over the country. Hon. gentlemen will remember that a few years ago complaints were made that the Canadian Pacific Railway were not building branches fast enough in the west and that the farmers were obliged to haul grain twenty or thirty miles. It was considered a great hardship that it should cost 10 or 15 cents a bushel to haul grain to a station to ship it. I sympathize with these farmers; I realize that it is a hardship to be so situated. But we ought not to forget that the older provinces are enduring the very same hardship to-day. We must realize that if the Intercolonial Railway is to be a common carrier for the people of the maritime provinces, that railway owes a duty to the territory adjacent to that trunk line. It must not be forgotten that practically every branch line which serves as a feeder to the Grand Trunk Railway or the Canadian Pacific Railway has been taken over by these great corporations and made a part of the system, thus feeding the trunk line and aiding the industries situated along the branch lines. It is not possible to manage these branch lines as profitably independent of the trunk line. The Intercolonial Railway with its trunk line between Rivière du Loup and Moncton has practically a monopoly of that whole country and it is not fair to leave the adjacent territory without proper facilities nor is it fair to expect private corporations to build branch lines, because the branch lines could not live, the population is not sufficiently large to make them paying ventures, they would not receive a sufficient return on their short haul on freight which they would have to hand over to the Intercolonial Railway which would have the long haul. It is the duty of the government and of the people of Canada, the owners of the Intercolonial Railway, to see that the territory adjacent to the Intercolonial Railway has proper railway facilities and that the industries of that locality are not retarded because of want of transportation. Simply as an illustration, I would point out that even in my own county there is a section of country between Indian town, where the railway terminates, and Red Bank, a large and thriving village, without any railway facilities, practically without any transportation facilities whatever. We are trying to have a steamboat service inaugurated there but in order to do that we shall require some assistance. That section between these two places should have a railway in the interest of the country and I would ask that this matter should receive the favourable attention of the Minister of Railways and of the government. We have also a large and rich section along the Miramichi between Newcastle and Tabusintac that deserves the consideration of the people of Canada, the owners of the trunk line of the Intercolonial Railway because they have a monopoly of transportation there and it is their duty to see that the people there do not suffer. They are suffering to-day because of lack of transportation facilities to enable them to send their commodities to the markets of the world on as advantageous terms as other sections of Canada. The maritime provinces are an old section and deserve the attention of the government even as much as the western provinces, and I ask on behalf of the maritime provinces, and particularly the sections I have indicated where the Intercolonial Railway is the only means of transportation, that branch lines should be constructed as a part of the Intercolonial Railway system. Where there is another railway, the situation is not so bad, as one railway will compete with another; but where there is only the one line and that owned by the government, it is the duty of the government to provide efficient transportation facilities. We in the maritime provinces never say a word about the cost of the canal system in Ontario and Quebec; that is provided in the interest of the country at large. The Intercolonial Railway is a part of the great scheme of confederation, it is a link in the chain that binds us together, and as such, if it is to perform its mission, it ought to provide for the maintenance of branch lines. As a matter of fact a portion of one branch line has been lying all winter unoperated and to-day, although there is hardly any snow on the ground, carload after carload of freight has to be teamed. Yet there is a railway there and the blockade exists simply because the railway has not the necessary equipment. All that is required is equipment, with proper equipment there would be no trouble in keeping the rail open all winter. It is not fair and I bespeak in the interests of the maritime provinces the favourable consideration of this matter by the government.

I was deeply interested in an important subject which was referred to in the House the other day, the All-Red line, an imperial means of transportation. When the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton) was speaking, I was impressed with the difficulty of dealing with the present investments, in transportation, that is to say what is to be done with the transportation interests now operating. It occurred to me that if the great ocean lines or the corporations owning the ocean lines, could combine and form one great corporation to perform this all-red service, all infringement on existing vested interests would be obviated. The question of hauling the traffic on Canadian soil would also require consideration. Possibly some arrangement might be made between the transcontinental railways so that the traffic would be handled by the Intercolonial Railway between Halifax and the nearest point on a transcontinental railway. The Intercolonial Railway, I presume, would be double-tracked between Moncton and Halifax. For instance, at Moncton they would hand over to the Grand Trunk Pacific its share of the traffic; at St. John they would hand over to the Canadian Pacific Railway its share, and they would hand over to the Canadian Northern its share wherever its nearest point would be; and if one road got more than its share according to its mileage, there might be a division made. In that way, if we could get our capitalists of the Canadian Pacific Railway, the Allan line and the Dominion line to form one great corporation, we might have its financial interests largely in Canada, and thus make Canada the centre of this great project. These are matters which ran through my mind while the hon. member for Brandon was presenting his case.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to close with a word or two of congratulation to the country, particularly on the fact that we have at the head of affairs a gentleman of the statesmanlike qualities of the Prime Minister. It was his duty, as well as his pleasure, I am sure, to represent this country on a recent occasion at a conference in London. We all followed with interest his remarks on that occasion. Bearing them in mind, we can see him as it were with the main sheet of the ship in his hand rounding a big boulder at the entrance to the conference, while inside we see dropped in the placid waters of the conference the anchor bearing the title "Imperial Conference." We certainly should feel proud that we have at the head of this young and rising nation a gentleman of the capacity of the Prime Minister. Then we gave him a royal welcome back to his own country. He is not long back, however, when we hear a flurry out on the western coast—the Japanese are overflowing our country! Listen to the prudent words of the leader of this young nation when he says : 'Patience; we must respect treaty rights ; the rights of the western provinces will be conserved, but we must not jeopardize the interests of our country as a whole.' I do not quote the exact words, but they were words to that effect ; and we know what a happy issue they had. To-day we have practically what the Prime Minister said would come—the rights of the Pacific province have been conserved and yet the integrity of the treaty has been maintained. Then we find him at the neighbouring industrial center of Canada, Toronto, and what does he say there of the proposed All-Red line? He said he would not dictate to the mother of parliaments, perhaps that would not be becoming but he would remind the Imperial authorities that they had subsidized a service, very much like the proposed fast Atlantic service, from the motherland to a foreign port, and perhaps it would not be too much to ask them to do the same for their own kith and kin. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that these were the words of a statesman, and we all congratulate ourselves and the country at large that at the head of the affairs of this young and thriving country we have an hon. gentleman who can thus wisely guide the ship of state, so that we realize in our own pockets the fulfilment of what he said down in Halifax, as quoted by the hon. member for North Toronto. I thank you, Mr. Speaker, and hon. gentlemen, for the attention given to me in my first attempt to say a word on the financial conditions of the country.

Mr. P. H. McKENZIE (South Bruce). Mr. Speaker, in rising on this occasion I must express my reluctance, at this late hour of the night, and at this late stage of this very important debate, at trespassing on the time of the House. I would not have done so had it not been that I do not speak very often in the House; and that on this occasion it behooves those who take an interest in the welfare of their country, and I think we all on both sides of the House do that, to have something to say at this, as we may call it, stock-taking time for the Dominion of Canada. I would preface my remarks by complimenting, as others have done, the Finance Minister on the splendid statement he has been able to present to this House and this country in his annual budget. When we consider that this country has been eleven years under the present tariff with very little change, and when we consider the success that has been achieved by this country under it, we are led to inquire what are the special features of that tariff, as inaugurated by the present government, and specially by the present Finance Minister. The Fielding tariff, as it is commonly called, has been a very great success. It appears to be a distinctive tariff, a tariff different from almost every other tariff in existence at the present time in constitutionally governed countries. There has been a good deal of discussion as to whether it is a protective tariff or a revenue tariff. If I were to express my honest conviction, I would say that it is part of both. Its basic principle is that of a tariff for revenue ; but incidentally it affords protection for the industries of the country consistent with the requirements of the whole country. That was a plank in the platform adopted previous to the introduction of this tariff, and I think that has been lived up to. While this tariff affords a certain amount of protection, it does not decrease trade, but increases trade, and at the same time produces an abounding revenue. This seems to be a remarkable feature of this tariff. I would also refer to the preferential feature of the tariff. A preference to Great Britain had been discussed for some years previous to the introduction of this feature in the tariff, but the idea had always been that if Canada should give the mother country a preference, it would expect something in return. So when the government gave the preference to Great Britain, our friends on the opposition side found fault with them for not getting an equivalent from the British government. I might read you statements here but it would take too much time to show how public opinion stood on that matter in Great Britain at that period and also, that it has not changed since. Had the government stood on their dignity, as members of the opposition advise, and said to Great Britain: We will give you a preference in our market when you give us one in yours, Great Britain would not have had that preference to-day. But this government conceded the preference without asking any thing in return. I claim however that the preference has been just as great to Canada from Great Britain—that is, the indirect preference, not so much the preference described in figures. There has been from the British people an indirect preference which has been of very great benefit to Canada.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. In what way has it been a benefit to Canada?

Mr. McKENZIE. In this way. It drew attention to Canada and Canada's products were asked for. Previous to 1896 many Canadian products entered the British market as American products and were sold as such in that market. Canada was to a large extent unknown in the British market on that account. But the day this preference was given, we touched the great heart of the British people, they began to inquire among themselves, what can we do for Canada which has done so much for us? In that way we gained the good will of the English people and that amounts to a great deal in the matter of trade.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Will my hon. friend be good enough to tell us whether Canadian goods are sold in the British market out of sympathy for Canada or whether it is not because of the quality of the goods?

Mr. McKENZIE. I would answer that question in this way. At the beginning of the increase of our trade with Great Britain, it was largely due to a sentiment, but now it is due both to sentiment and quality. Through the efforts of the Minister of Agriculture very largely, the status of our products that enter into immediate consumption in Great Britain has become so improved that they are now asked for on their merits, but the sentiment in our favour still exists and our market is extending, in consequence of that sentiment to a great extent, in other products. That is undeniable, and I am astonished that members on the other side, such as the hon. member for Lambton, should endeavour to combat that idea. The figures are there and they show that since we gave that preference, our exports began to increase and our trade to expand.

Let me now say a word on the intermediate feature introduced into our tariff. That is practically a new idea, and I notice that the Americans are studying our tariff with the idea of incorporating this very feature into it. It stands to the credit of this government that they introduced this feature, it is a tribute to their inventive genius, and by means of it they have been able to negotiate the French treaty. My hon. friend from Lambton (Mr. Armstrong) is very anxious to have the markets of the German empire opened to Canadian products. Well, if we are to obtain any advantage in that market, we will get it under the intermediate tariff.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Then why do you not get it?

Mr. McKENZIE. I think that events are moving in that direction. The Germans are gradually coming to their knees and you will soon find them ready to negotiate with this government. When we look at the revenue and find what surpluses we have to our credit, when we find that we have a surplus of $19,000,000 this year over actual outlay, that is something we ought to congratulate ourselves upon. Our post office surplus is considerably over $1,000,000, which is very gratifying. I have a quotation here from an English authority, which I shall read to the House. Commenting on our preferential tariff, Mr. Asquith said:

> The United Kingdom could not adopt any form of preference involving the taxation of corn, meat or raw materials. The colonists on their part could give no form of preference which would admit the British manufacturer on level terms into competition with their own protected industries. That was the principle upon which the Canadian, the best of all colonial tariffs, was based. It was a principle still more conspicuous in the new Australian tariff. If the government left office to-morrow he would wish them to be judged as to whether they had not justified the confidence of the nation in their colonial administration.

That is the testimony of an eminent authority in Great Britain regarding our tariff. Let us take ten years as a comparison in the matter of imports and exports between Conservative and Liberal regime. Take the total imports of 1896, they amounted to $118,011,508. In 1897 they had risen to $359,793,278. Our total exports from Canada in 1896 were $121,013,852. In 1907 they had risen to $258,171,674. Or the total trade in 1896 was $239,025,360, and in 1907 $617,964,952. I wish to give the figures here to show the increase of our trade with Great Britain. Our trade with Great Britain in 1896 amounted to $99,513,758, including coin and bullion. In 1906 it amounted to $202,276,456, so that we have the gratifying fact that our trade with Great Britain increased $102,762,729 from 1896 to 1906.

Look at the tariff from another standpoint. The debt of Canada was $50.09 per head in 1896. In 1906 it was reduced to $42.84 per head. Under Conservative rule our population in eighteen years increased 4 per cent whereas during the last eleven years of Liberal rule it increased 25 per cent. Our foreign trade in the eighteen years of Conservative rule increased about 16 per cent, whereas in the last eleven years of Liberal rule it increased 158 per cent. The trade in 1896 was $42 per head and in 1907 $93 per head. If we turn to the rates of duty, we find that in 1889 the rate was 31·86 per $100 worth of dutiable goods imported into Canada; in 1891 it was 31·38, and in 1896 29·97, showing that under the present tariff, while the duty has been decreasing the revenue has been increasing. From 1896 there has been a gradual reduction until the rate reached the lowest point, 26·33, or a difference of 3·63 per $100 in favour of Liberal administration.

Now we come to the expenditure. And a great deal has been said by the opposition members concerning the increase of expenditure. The amount expended on capital account during eleven years of Conservative rule amounted, in round figures, to $80,000,000. Of this, as has been stated by previous speakers, the Conservative government borrowed $62,000,000—they added that much of their expenditure to the public debt. During eleven years of Liberal rule, $127,000,000 has been spent on capital account of which only $5,000,000 was borrowed. And I may say in passing that of the $127,000,000 spent on capital account by the Liberals during the last eleven years, $90,000,000 has been spent in improving the transportation facilities of the country.

Now, I am free to say that I am not in favour of extravagant expenditure either in public or in private affairs. But I realize that no private individual and no government can afford, in a young country like this, to hoard money for the sake of what it will bring by hoarding. Canada is much in the position of a farmer or business man. If a man has a farm that requires improving—as many of our Canadian farms do, and progress in this line in Canada is steady—if he has the money to improve his farm, he is foolish if he does not spend the money in the necessary improvements. A man must pay attention to his business and improve his facilities—to stand still is to go back. And the same is true of a business man engaged in a store, factory or office. A man cannot afford to stand still. He must progress, his business must grow, or others will go ahead and he will fall behind. The same is true of the country. We want economical and wise expenditure, but we do not want the affairs of the country to stand still—'progress' must be the word. Members of the opposition have been pretty constantly talking about expenditure, and, I have no doubt, will continue to talk about it when, in the country, they speak of the actions of this government. But when they do so, I would like them to notice what members their own side propose that the government should embark in. They all have their proposals involving expenditure of money. The leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) would consider the advisability of government ownership of public utilities, an idea that would involve millions upon millions for this country. My hon. friend from East Lambton (Mr. Armstrong) has an idea in the shape of free rural mail delivery, on which he has given us a great deal of information.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. May I ask the hon. gentleman, is he opposed to adopting it in his riding?

Mr. McKENZIE. At the present time, yes. I hope that the time may come when I can say: 'No.' But that time has not come yet. I wish to be perfectly candid in the matter. I do not think the people of my riding would thank me for advising this government to embark upon such an extravagant expenditure as that at the present stage of our history. However desirable it might be, it would add some millions to our expenditure. Then the hon. member for Wentworth (Mr. E. D. Smith) has been complaining a great deal about the Department of Agriculture. He wants more fruit inspectors, he wants better cold storage facilities. And hon. members on both sides of the House, including a large number on the opposition side, are in favour of the construction of the Georgian bay canal, which would probably cost $130,000,000. And our friends from Prince Edward Island want a tunnel. When men so strongly advocate economy of expenditure, it is rather surprising that they should even allude to such enormous expenditures as they propose to be added to what the country must spend in other directions.

Mr. LEFURGEY. We believe that these would be economies in some cases.

Mr. McKENZIE. I am not disputing it, but it would involve a large expenditure. I hope the time will come when the Dominion can give to Prince Edward Island better means of communication than are now provided. But Prince Edward Island is not disposed to wait, they want the tunnel now. According to their view, no matter what stands, this cannot stand. I would say to hon. members of the opposition that the problem we are up against in Canada is not so much to cut down the expenditure as to make the expenditure in the right direction. There is no doubt that in Canada the transportation problem is a very expensive one and one that must be met by the government. There was a time in Canada when we were pretty well content with the Welland canal, the Canadian Pacific Railway, and other existing railway connections. But the time has come when we need improved facilities. The Welland canal is too shallow, too narrow, too roundabout. The cry is for a direct route and the proposal is made to build the Georgian bay canal. The cry is for a better railway across the continent with better grades and easier curves. This demand the government is trying to meet with the Transcontinental Railway. The time may come when we shall decide that it is necessary to build the Georgian bay canal. Canada is progressing. Canada has begun the development of her great west; the great north is being discovered. Canada cannot afford to stand still, and I do not believe that the people, when the matter is properly laid before them, will wish to stand still. I would advise the government to go on courageously with any wise expenditures. But let the money be spent on a system. If the Georgian bay canal is to be built, for instance, do not touch it until we can build it with a depth of 25 feet. If we must build this canal, let us build it so as to meet the requirements of the future. Vessels are constantly getting larger and of deeper draft, and canals allowing only a shallow draft will soon be out of date. But no mistake should be made by the government in taking up new schemes. They should wait until they are ready to build the thing right, keeping in mind the future of Canada.

A good deal of criticism has been levelled at the Department of Agriculture. Being speaking of agriculture, I cannot resist the temptation to look back to the period before 1896 in the history of our farmers. I can well remember those dark days; I can well remember that times were hard for the farmers previous to 1896. The population of Canada was leaving us by hundreds of thousands, Canada was not growing and even our natural increase was not remaining with us. No change could have been more marked than that which has taken place. I was surprised to hear the hon. member for Kent (Mr. Clements) this afternoon whining about the poor farmer of his county. I felt that he was not doing justice to his county. I cannot see for my part why such a whine should go up from that splendid county of Kent, and by their own member in this House. I do not think there is another member in this House who would rise up in his place and say the same regarding his county. I am sure my hon. friend from South Ontario (Mr. P. Christie) would not do it, and I am sure my hon. friend from East Huron (Mr. Chisholm) would not do it. I do not think it was fair to the county of Kent that such a statement should be made regarding it. I know they have had their troubles in Kent. I know they have had hog disease that has injured the farming industry, and perhaps they have had some other drawbacks. But I do not think the government should be blamed for that. The Department of Agriculture has done their best for the people of Kent to help them over these difficulties, both in past years and in the present year. I do not see why so much fault should be found with the government for the condition of the farmers in Kent, if they are in that condition, but I very much doubt it.

Now I wish to refer to a remark made by one of the previous speakers, I think the hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt). He spoke of the fact that Canada was going back in her exports as shown by the balance of trade, and instanced butter as one of the articles which showed a falling off. Now let us look at that matter for a moment. In the ten years between 1877 and 1886, the total exports of butter were $22,706,360; in the next ten years, from 1887 to 1896, the total exports had fallen to $8,252,088, showing a decrease of $14,456,272 during Conservative rule. Now in sharp contrast to that we find that in ten years under the Liberal government from 1897 to 1906, butter exports amounted to $46,599,782. The items of bacon and hams show a like result. The total exports of bacon and hams for the ten years ending June 30, 1896, were $17,671,000, as against $115,000,000 during the ten years ending June 30, 1906. The hon. member for Brantford blamed the governmen in regard to the item of butter. We all know that Ontario had a dry season last year, that the quantity of milk fell off and consequently the production of butter. We exported largely in the early part of the year and that left us short in the latter part of the year, with the result that we had to import butter again from the British markets for our own consumption. But this was only an isolated case, and may not occur in Canada again for many a day to come. I regard the agricultural interests of Canada as so important that they should receive careful consideration from any government that may be in power. We find that at the present time there is invested in agriculture in Canada $2,200,000,000. The value of farm products exported and consumed at home was last year $450,000,000. Compare agriculture with manufactures. In 1896, the money invested in manufacture was $200,000,000, and in 1906, it was $600,000,000 a sum still far below the investment in agriculture. Therefore I think that agriculture may safely be called the basic industry of Canada at the present time, and will remain so for many years to come.

Some members of the opposition have recently criticised the Minister of Agriculture severely. I think that one hon. gentleman in particular has criticised him and given him little or no credit for having done anything in the interest of agriculture. Let me refer to one of his late acts to show what he has done for this industry. It was called to my attention recently at a meeting I attended, by the Minister of Agriculture for the province of Saskatchewan. We are all sorry to know that last year the west was struck by a bad frost, with the result that the grain was damaged. No sooner had the Department of Agriculture here in Ottawa learned of the damage, or supposed damage, by frost, than orders were sent at once to the Ministers of Agriculture in the west, and through them to other correspondents throughout the western provinces, to send as soon as possible samples of their grain down to the department at Ottawa that it might be tested to see to what extent damage had been done. That was done as soon as the grain was threshed and got dry enough. Mr. A. H. Clark, the chief commissioner at the head of that department at once set to work experimenting with this grain, and he found the most astonishing result that but a very small portion of the oats was fit for seed, that the vitality of that grain for seed purposes had been practically destroyed.

This information was communicated to the western provinces in a bulletin; and Mr. Motherwell told me that on his way down to Ottawa, when he came to Winnipeg, the great cry was: Have you seen A. H. Clark's bulletin? This was in everybody's mouth, the information seemed to be so incredible that people were looking at one another in blank amazement. Is it possible that the immense crop of oats in those western provinces is going to be of no use for seed? Mr. Motherwell stated at a meeting in the Normal School Hall here in Ottawa, that the work done by the department in reference to that seed grain had saved the west from a total failure in respect to oats and barley, and partly in respect to wheat. He said that the prompt action of the government in testing the seeds had saved the western provinces from a great loss. Let me tell the House that Mr. Motherwell stated that his own crop of oats looked so well and weighed so heavy that he would have sold them without any compunction for seed oats, had he not known that from the experiments made in Ottawa their vitality was destroyed. The result, he said, was a saving of millions of dollars to the west. Now that is one thing that the Minister of Agriculture has done for this country, he did it last year. Now I would like to show what Mr. Clark says about this matter.

Prior to governmental operations in the matter of guaranteeing seed supply in unfortunate districts in western Canada, wholesale business interests were sceptical as to the ability of farmers within those districts to meet present and future payments on goods—farm implements, &c., &c. In consequence the farmers and all retail business interests within those districts found it difficult to obtain credit on reasonable basis from wholesale merchants, from banks or loan companies.

The very action of the government in procuring seed grain, served as a guarantee of a crop so far as seed supply is concerned and at once restored confidence on the part of business men and financial institutions that the prospective crop output for 1908 would be equal to present and future liabilities. Then and not till then were farmers in general able to procure reasonable credit to enable them to purchase supplies of seed grain on their own account. Many farmers needed more seed grain than the governments undertook to supply—namely, 200 bushels wheat, 200 bushels oats and 100 bushels barley. Many thought perhaps they could get it cheaper and were encouraged in that thought by numerous unfavourable newspaper comments Such newspaper comments also may have induced many to take the risk of sowing their frozen grain, but the fact remains that not until action was taken by the government were they able to get the financial accommodation they needed to help themselves.

This action of the government has had a very beneficial effect and Mr. Clarke has told me, immediately on his return to Ottawa, that the information that a certain district was to be supplied with seed had a most astonishing effect. Business men and others who had refused to give credit at once loosened up, the banks and financial institutions began to lend money, and every one took a more hopeful view of the situation.

Another matter that was criticised very severely by the hon. member for Wentworth was the action of the Department of Agriculture with reference to cold storage facilities on sea-going vessels. It was stated that a very small quantity of goods were being shipped in cold storage as compared with the quantity that was expected to be shipped. I have a return showing the number of packages that were shipped in cold storage this year and this applies to early apples and perishable fruits such as peaches and pears. There were in all thirty-one shippers who shipped by cold storage 3,847 barrels of apples as well as 94 packages of smaller fruits. The fact has been alluded to that a quantity of fruit was sent across the equator to South Africa in cold storage and landed in good condition. That fact is likewise stated here. But we have also the fact that 12,017 packages of California fruit came through Canada, sent through the Canadian cold storage in preference to their own, and this, I think we will all admit, is a tribute to the character of the accommodation which is being furnished by the ships on the Canadian route.

Again, in regard to the Fruit Marks Act, it has been very severely criticised. I should say that this year the conditions surrounding the trade in fruit have been exceptional. Fruit in the country was not up to the average, and at the commencement of the barrelling season it was thought that apples were going to advance in price. A great many people went into the business and prices went high in the orchard. After it was known that the supply was abundant, the price was decreased and a number of dealers packed a good deal of inferior fruit with the object of trying to come out even. I have here an American opinion of the Fruit Marks Act of Canada which I will read :

Comparison of American and Canadian apples by United States Vice-Consul Albert S. Phillips. Writing with reference to American and Canadian apples in Great Britain, he says:

The Canadian government has regulated these grades as to quality and size of fruit, and if packers deviate therefrom they are liable to a fine. This government control inspires dealers with confidence, and the fact of there being only three grades simplifies the trade, making it possible for dealers to have a perfect knowledge of what they are purchasing. These conditions do not obtain, however, in the United States; on the contrary, marks run from 1x to 25x, and the sizes of the boxes and barrels differ in every state, thus, according to the dealers here, rendering the trade most complicated. I have been shown large numbers of barrels (American apples) where the packing was very uneven, consisting of small green apples on the top and bottom, with decayed fruit in the middle. It has also been pointed out to me—and judging from the fruit I have seen on the Cardiff market I am forced to admit it—that Canadian apples receive more care in gathering and packing than the American fruit.

Quoted from 'California Fruit Grower,' December 28, 1907.

That is American testimony to our Canadian Fruit Marks Act and its results. I do not say that the hon. member for Wentworth decried the Fruit Marks Act; he criticised it, but he did not decry it. He said it was a good Act, but that it did not go far enough, and that the government should appoint more inspectors and institute a separate branch for fruit. That is a matter of expense. I think myself from my knowledge of matters in connection with the Department of Agriculture that it would be to our advantage to have a separate branch in the Department of Agriculture devoted to the fruit interests, but it means a considerable addition to the expense of the department. I think also with the hon. member for Wentworth that it would be well to appoint more inspectors, that seems to be a necessity, and that fruit should be inspected at the point of shipment as much as possible. I think these are changes that could be beneficially made, but I would say on behalf of the department that they did make an honest endeavour to carry out the Fruit Marks Act this year. We have a return showing that last year there were 30 prosecutions under the Act whereas this year they have run to 100 already and they may run to 150.

I would like to say a word before I leave this subject in regard to the recent investigation into the tobacco industry in Canada. As chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Colonization I take an interest in this matter, and the facts justify me in saying that the Minister of Agriculture has been beforehand in this matter of the growth of tobacco in Canada. Some years ago he appointed an expert to give directions as to the cultivation of tobacco. The investigation we have just gone through before the Committee on Agriculture has shown us that there is no necessity for Canada importing tobacco. It has shown us that we can grow leaf equal to the American leaf or to the leaf imported from other foreign countries, and it has also shown us that with the changes that the Department of Inland Revenue has just made in the Act it is reasonable to believe, in fact, it is almost a certainty, that when the rehandling business is in the hands of men who have capital to provide rehandling buildings in which to properly cure the tobacco we can export tobacco very profitably to England and Belgium. If this is true, and I believe it is—I am quite satisfied that from hearing the experts who have been examined—we will add another industry to the agricultural industries of Canada. I am not a tobacco user and some one might say that I have no right to speak in this way, but I feel that tobacco has come into general use to stay; we are sending out a large amount of money for imported leaf and if we can produce it in Canada we are no worse off in the matter of the consumption of tobacco than we would be if continued to import it, but on the other hand, we will have another industry added to the industries that our farmers can engage in. These are matters that we would like to talk on, but there are other matters. Before going into them I might say a word on immigration. I had almost forgotten to say anything upon that subject. The immigration branch has been severely criticised for the conditions prevailing at the present time in the matter of immigration.

Speaking of present conditions in Canada, members of the opposition have taken advantage of the exceptional conditions to criticise the general immigration policy of the government. We hear a great deal about the adverse balance of trade in Canada. As we might expect, different views have been advanced during this discussion as to whether a country can be prosperous under an adverse balance of trade. For my part I think that it is not at all surprising that we should have an adverse balance of trade in Canada to-day. A close examination of the returns will disclose that the excess of imports is largely due to the importation of raw materials on account of the great progress Canada is making in manufacturing and the building of great railway works, particularly the National Transcontinental Railway. We heard to-day from the hon. member for New Brunswick (Mr. Loggie) of the enormous amount spent for the importation of raw cotton, while we as farmers import a large quantity of corn, our raw material. A great quantity of settlers' effects are also imported and these things together would make up the difference between the exports and imports. My solution for the difficulty would be to pump in the immigrants. That was Kipling's solution of the Japanese problem; I do not know whether it was as true in his case as it is in mine, but I am satisfied that mine is correct, we should have no diminution of the stream of immigration to Canada if it is of the right class. I wish to be distinct on that point, we want the class that will go on our lands, or will go on public works presently and afterwards on the land. We cannot get too many people of this class. It is true that during the last months of last year we had an excess of immigrants, many of whom have stayed around the towns and have been a burden in a sense on some towns in Ontario. A great deal has been said about the conditions in shack-town in Toronto. When that is mentioned it recalls to our minds the conditions previous to 1896 when all over Canada soup kitchens had to be opened to feed not immigrants but Canadian born citizens, and men and women who have been in Canada for many years. We do not find that to-day and the conditions in those cities are entirely due to this excess of immigration, in the latter months of last year, of people without means who could not get work, and this, of course, was partly due to the stringency of money which restricted the labour market. That condition could not be foreseen or avoided and naturally there was some little congestion in centres like Toronto where these people congregated. So I do not think we need be alarmed about conditions in Canada. These people are moving out of Toronto as quickly as may be to public works in progress throughout the country and will very soon be earning their own livings and will no longer be a charge on the charity of the city or province.

I have here an interesting statement showing the immigration into Canada from different countries for the nine months of the fiscal year up to December 31, 1907. It is as follows :—

Source.	Number of immigrants.
British Isles..	111,238
Continental Europe	77,165
United States..	46,925

From 1903 down to the present time British immigration has taken the lead and every year has shown an increase while the immigration from continental Europe has shown a decrease in comparison. That fact I wish to note particularly. It is a condition which we are all very glad to see. It is true that there are many countries in northern Europe from which we welcome immigration. There are countries in the south from which we do not want it. Our Immigration Department cannot be too particular to discourage immigration from these southern countries of Europe altogether. It must be remembered that unless we prohibit these people from entering the country, a certain number of them will come. While we can keep out a certain number it is very difficult to shut the doors against immigrants coming from Europe, and the government cannot be blamed if a certain number from southern Europe do come in ; but we would blame them if they encourage that class of immigration. Immigration from northern Europe is very desirable. If we go to the western provinces, into the settlements of immigrants from northern Europe, while individual members may decry that immigration and discount it as compared with the British immigration, I say that these people are filling a need that we cannot fill from British sources ; we cannot get the number of people from the British Isles, from the older provinces of Canada or from the United States we require. We have an immense country to fill. It is true that we should fill it if possible with the very best class possible, and the government must exert themselves to secure immigrants from the countries I have indicated. I would favour particularly German immigration. I have noticed that German immigrants, no matter from what country they come, whether Germany, Russia, or any other country, if they are of German extraction and belong to the German race, are desirable settlers. They came into Ontario from the United States and from the old country as well. I have them in my county and there is no better class of farmers, no better class of citizens in the country and no class that is doing its duty to the country in the way of increasing population and wealth in a greater degree than the Germans.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Why not get into their market ?

Mr. McKENZIE. We will get there, I will help you, friend Armstrong, if I can. It is significant that we are confronted. with no great question of policy in Canada to-day. It is remarkable, that we have got away from matters of policy altogether. The policy of this government seems to have been such a success, so much above successful criticism, that the opposition, in order to get something wherewith to influence the electors, have left the weightier matters, the matters of greatest importance, and have resorted to cries discreditable to Canada, cries of graft, graft, graft, scandal, nothing but scandal, the government of this country not worthy of the least consideration. It is true that the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) received from the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) a little consideration. That hon. gentleman said that Providence might be seen walking with him, but certainly not with any other member of the government. That is strange language for a leading politician in Canada to utter. It is almost a slur on Providence. I wonder who gave us the success we had as disclosed at our stock-taking time in this particular budget. It was not the other fellow I am sure, we do not look for blessings from him, so I think the hon. member from North Toronto must have been very hard up for an argument when he made the statement that Providence would not be seen walking with the Minister of Finance. He was with him all the time.

Now we are forced to speak of the matter of scandal. We have heard a great deal of it for several sessions. This session we are getting a surfeit of it ; but I notice that the scandals of past sessions have been getting stale, and are not now so often alluded to. There was one scandal which I had something to do with personally, having been chairman of the committee that investigated it; that is the scandal in regard to the North Atlantic Trading Company. I am going to state as briefly as I can to the House how that appeared to me, as I sat listening to the evidence day after day. The Conservative government had been in the habit of getting immigrants from Europe by means of correspondence with booking agents, corresponding with over a hundred of them. When Mr. Sifton came into power, he saw that if he could get these people united into some sort of a company and conduct the correspondence with their representatives, it would be a great improvement. Such a company was formed, and a contract was made with it, along with an agreement that the names of the members of the company would be kept secret, otherwise they could not live in the country; they would be ostracised and perhaps imprisoned for inducing emigration from the country. The government pledged their faith that the names would be kept secret, and in pledging their faith, they pledged the faith of the people of Canada whose representatives they were. Time went on and this investigation took place, the names of the company were called for day after day. Frequently the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) who was leading the attack, would appeal to the committee to have the matter referred to the House. I often remonstrated with the hon. member for Jacques Cartier, saying, 'Why not wait until we report the whole matter to the House, and then we will discuss it fully.' But, no, he wanted to get the matter referred to the House before the investigation was ended. I thought the object was to stampede the country before the truth came out. Finally the Prime Minister sent for the names, brought them to this House in a sealed envelope, rose in his place in the House, and offered the leader of the opposition to go with him into a room and open the envelope and satisfy him who the members of that company were—that there were in it no members of the government or friends of the government, or if there were he would know it. Before the leader of the opposition could say any thing in reply, his supporters shouted 'No, no'. The leader of the government turned and said: 'If you have not enough confidence in your leader to allow him to go into a room with me and open this envelope, I would suggest that you appoint three or four of his friends to go with him, and we will appoint three or four of our friends, and we will all go together into a room and open the envelope.' That likewise was refused. What reasonable man could come to any other conclusion than that it was not the names the opposition wanted, but an attempt to stampede the country with a cry that there was nothing in. I had recently occasion to address a public meeting. Before the meeting a leading Conservative came to me and said: 'Do you know anything about the North Atlantic Trading Company?' I said, 'I know a little.' He said: 'Is it true that Sir Wilfrid offered to go into a room with three or four members from each side and give the names of the members of the company?' I said: 'Yes, that is true.' He said, 'Will you speak of that to-night?' I said: 'I will if you like, but this matter is getting old; now it is teaspoons and teacups and pemmican and other little matters that are engaging the attention of the opposition, while the North Atlantic Trading Company is relegated to the past.' 'Well,' he said, 'that is a matter I want you to bring up, because if what you say is true, it means a good many votes for your candidate.' I spoke of it and tried to show that the government was justified in keeping faith with those men, and that everything was done to enable the opposition to see the names consistent with the honour of the country.

Mr. SPROULE. Does the hon. gentleman think that it would be satisfactory to the representatives of the people for a few of them to get the names without being able to go into an inquiry as to who those men were, whether they were fulfilling their agreement or were capable of doing so, or using their names in many other ways, as they would be obliged to do in following out the inquiry?

Mr. McKENZIE. I know perfectly well that that is the position the hon. member for East Grey takes; I have heard him ask the same question of other speakers. If the hon. member or any other member of the opposition had been desirous of getting at the facts of the case, they would have gone that far at least. It could have done no harm, and the fact that the Premier's offer was not acceded to showed me most clearly that it was not the names they wanted. I think the opposition in this House have some interest in the honour of this country when the word of its representatives is pledged as well as members on the other side, and they should have shown that on that occasion. I think the people of the country will take my version of the case, as they did on the occasion I have alluded to.

Mr. SPROULE. When a member of this House stood up and held up what was declared to be an Act of incorporation of a company incorporated in Amsterdam, and the opposition accepted that declaration as correct, and when they found out in the inquiry that that was an absolute perjury, what would they have done in this case if they had not been able to follow up the inquiry?

Mr. FIELDING. What difference was it where the company was incorporated ?

Mr. SPROULE. Did it not make a great difference in the statement of a public man on his honour that the company was incorporated, and professing to produce the Act of incorporation, when in reality there was no such incorporation ?

Mr. FIELDING. What difference would it be whether the company was incorporated or not, for all substantial purposes ?

Mr. SPROULE. It made this difference, that they deluded the public with the idea it was a respectable company when there was no such company.

Mr. FIELDING. Incorporation does not create respectability.

Mr. SPROULE. Forgery does not create respectability. People guilty of it generally get behind the bars.

Mr. McKENZIE. The important point in the whole matter was whether any member of the government derived any pecuniary benefit from that contract. Another important point was, were we getting value for our money ? I say we were. I was astonished to hear the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) state that we had paid $400,000 of the money of Canada under this contract, and had not derived one cent of benefit from it. I say that we derived benefit from every dollar that we spent, and it was the cheapest immigration propaganda that we were carrying on. Our immigration propaganda in the British Islands cost a great deal more ; it was perhaps worth more, but about two-thirds of the immigration coming in cost us nothing. We could put a great deal more to our credit than the $400,000 that we spent on that company, as we only paid the bonus for agricultural immigrants and domestic servants. So that I think all the talk of scandal in this matter falls to the ground. The transaction was quite legitimate, and I am prepared to justify it anywhere before the farmers of this country.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. If it was such a good contract, why did the minister cancel it ?

Mr. McKENZIE. For the simple reason that the company was not living up to the contract in regard to immigration from the northern countries of Europe. They were going to countries further south where they could get immigrants at less expense and with less effort instead of going to Scandinavia where they would have to spend more and take more trouble. Previous to that being done, I had a talk over the matter with the Minister of the Interior. He gave me this idea of it and I commend him for the course he has taken. I did so as chairman of the Colonization Committee.

There is another matter in which the public have taken a good deal of interest and that is what is called the Saskatchewan valley land deal. That transaction, which is well known to hon. members, has been characterized by the opposition as a gigantic swindle. But a short history of this transaction will show that it was nothing of the kind. We all know that Osler, Hammond & Nanton built two lines of railway, one from Calgary to Edmonton and the other from Regina to Prince Albert. The company got a grant of 1,000,000 acres of land and were given a large area from which to make their selection. They found that the land was not good enough. They selected a small portion and then wanted to throw the land back on the hands of the government. I need not go at length into the transaction but I would point this out. The company were willing to take as low as $1 an acre for the land if the government would take it off their hands and give them a money grant instead. They even went so far as to institute a suit to compel the government to take back the land and give them money in its place. While this dispute was going on, a certain American firm, Davidson & McCrea, who had just closed out a land transaction in Minnesota, heard about this block of land and came up to look over it. They heard the company's proposition, and they bought from the company 1,000,000 acres at $1.75. They brought up with them to look at this land men engaged in farming in the dry states, and who were engaged in farming on a pretty large scale. They brought up three or four of these men, and three of these are still farming in that country. These men, after looking over the land, after testing the soil and comparing it with their own dry states, made this offer to Davidson & McCrea : If you can get us the even numbered sections in a certain area in this territory from the government so that we can start farms on a large scale, we will make the experiment. Davidson & McCrea were not willing to go into the matter by bringing in individual settlers because they were afraid that individual settlers might not adapt themselves to the style of farming required in that country and the experiment might prove unprofitable, so they accepted the proposition of these men. And they proposed to the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) that they would like to get a certain quantity of even-numbered sections so that they might establish large farms and experiment with this land in that way. The transaction was closed for 250,000 acres of land at $1 an acre, subject to settlement conditions. These conditions were that the company would put twenty settlers on twenty even-numbered sections and twelve settlers on other sections or 32 in all on each township. Just look at the transaction from a financial standpoint.

The government would have given away the land for nothing in any event, but instead they got in cash $250,000 and had 32 settlers in each township as well. Look at it from the standpoint of settlement, and you have an influx of immigration of the most desirable character. You have 32 settlers established in each township and a system of farming introduced specially adapted to that Saskatchewan valley. I have been there and in almost every part of the west and I know something of the various systems of farming adapted to the different portions of the west. With regard to the soil in the Saskatchewan valley, I can say that it requires a system of farming entirely different from that required by the sections around Portage la Prairie or the Red River valley. The soil of the Saskatchewan valley is hard and solid and requires deeper ploughing and more thorough pulverization. Unless that is done, you cannot have a crop grown successfully on it. I have seen crops on the soil there, which was deeply ploughed and thoroughly pulverized, and crops growing on the soil lightly ploughed as in the country further south, and while the first was a great success the latter was a complete failure. Those three men whom the company sent out there to examine the land have their farms there still. They have most beautiful farms and are growing wheat successfully. The settlers around them are following the same system of farming, a system adapted to that section, and farming there could not be made a success following any other system. This is one of the greatest advantages derived from that transaction, namely, the fact that this particular system of farming was introduced and developed there and demonstrated to be the proper system for that country. What has been the result? There has been a flow of immigration into that Saskatchewan valley since and we have several large towns, including Saskatoon, there to-day, whereas before that transaction took place the railway was running 60 miles without a settler and 100 miles with only three settlers. And the Americans are still flowing in there. The year before last and last year a Minnesota company ran their own trains right up into that country and delivered immigrants at points right along the line every two weeks. These immigrants they had collected at Minneapolis and St. Paul and ran them right through. That is the system which the Americans have adopted and that has been applied to that country in consequence of the Saskatchewan valley land deal. And that flow of immigration is going to be large again this year, and that valley, which at one time was considered a semi-arid region, not fit for the growing of wheat, is going to yield millions of bushels. I cannot see why any one should condemn the Saskatchewan valley land transaction from any standpoint. If the men who took up that contract did make some money from the rise in values, they were entitled to it, and the country has gained a great deal more than they did, and they got considerably less prices than the property has since been sold for, because these lands are appreciating in value all the time.

I would like to say something about the 'Arctic' and the 'Montcalm' scandals, but these have been dealt with already very fully. I might just mention one matter with regard to the 'Arctic' which has been made a great deal of. I see the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson) looking at me very hard.

Mr. HENDERSON. I am wondering what you can have to say in defence of the 'Arctic' scandal.

Mr. McKENZIE. I shall just make reference to one item and that is the item of pemmican. The firm of Davis & Company offered to supply pemmican at 35 cents a pound. I have taken the trouble to find out what kind of pemmican that would be.

Mr. BLAIN. How much did the government pay ?

Mr. McKENZIE. $1.25 per pound, but the pemmican that could be bought at 35 cents a pound would not last on ship board on such an expedition three months. It would not keep, whereas the pemmican taken aboard the 'Artic' when she went on her first expedition, and for which $1.25 per pound was paid, is fit for use to-day and as good as ever. So, we see there is pemmican and pemmican. I do not deny that you can buy pemmican at 35 cents per pound. But there is a special method adopted in making pemmican that will keep long enough for the use of these expeditions to northern latitudes and that is what was bought for the 'Arctic.' I do not see why the two sides of the case should not be given. I am surprised at the use that has been made of the affidavit in the matter of this pemmican. Had the other and cheaper pemmican been taken, the chances are that the stuff would have become so rank long before the three years' cruise was over that the men could not use it, or, if they did use it, the result would be sickness and death.

Mr. BLAIN. What did the affidavit say?

Mr. McKENZIE. It was read in the House.

Mr. BLAIN. It stated—if the hon. gentleman will permit me—that the manager of Wm. Davis Company had examined the pemmican and would agree to supply them in quantities at 35 cents per pound, what the government were paying $1.25 per pound for.

Mr. McKENZIE. If that is the wording of the affidavit, I will accept the hon. gentleman's word for it. At the same time, I do not believe it could be done, for I have gone into this matter to some extent. The process is so elaborate and so difficult, and the quantity is so reduced, that, taking meat at the ordinary prices and prepare it for long keeping as I have stated, the price is increased.

Mr. BLAIN. If the hon. member (Mr. McKenzie) will permit me—I do not wish to interrupt him—I will read a portion of the affidavit:

I have examined a sample of the pemmican so-called, furnished for the 'Arctic' expedition, and the firm with which I am connected would be pleased to furnish to the government or any institution or individual an article similar and equal in quality, in lots of 1,000 pounds or over, packed in 10-pound tins, boxed, strapped and shipped to any point in Canada, for 35 cents a pound.

This was signed by the manager of the Wm. Davies Company.

Mr. McKENZIE. Where doctor's differ, it is hard for us to decide. The affidavit seems straight enough, but I have satisfied myself that they cannot do it at the figure. He could produce pemmican, but it would not keep for the length of time required for such an expedition. Now, I wish to say a word about transportation. A good deal has been said about the Hudson Bay Railway. Looking to the future of Canada, I must say I am very much in favour of something being done to provide a road to Hudson bay. I think the country will require an outlet for the northern part of the west, not immediately perhaps, but within five or six years. I have heard a good deal and read a good deal about the northern part of Canada, and am very much of opinion that a great part of our country there is adapted for agriculture, that it has greater resources in the way of valuable minerals and otherwise than we are now aware of. I am likewise of opinion that our northern country is improving in climate. From what I can read, the low temperature is passing away from northern Canada and is travelling eastward over Greenland and towards Siberia, and that, as years roll on, our west and northwest will grow milder in climate and we shall have a great asset for the production of agricultural products in that north country. The Hudson bay road is not a very long stretch, only 500 miles. And, seeing that lands in that part of the country have never been alienated from the government, I think it would be wise for the government to look towards building that road with the proceeds of sales of lands in that northern country. I would not say that the general revenue of the country should not be finally taxed for this purpose. The country might have to advance some money in the initial stages of the enterprise, but I think it should be so financed that, eventually, the land would pay for the road. I think this is a proposition for the near future. With regard to the Georgian bay canal, I do not look forward to the building of it in the near future or until the Transcontinental Railway is completed, and until we see what it is going to do for us with its improved grades, its straight lines, its capacity for carrying heavy loads and its cheap rates. Until this is known, I think we should not rush on with large expenditures for other transportation lines. I think that, possibly, the Intercolonial should be extended to the centres of Ontario, and, perhaps, to the Georgian bay. I believe also that branch lines in the eastern provinces should be considered by the government with a view to strengthening the system. These things, I think, are in the interests of Canada and the government should look in this direction.

I have read the statement by a learned English professor that, within a generation, Canada would be the centre of the empire. I confess that I cannot take so sanguine a view as that. What may come to pass in three generations or more we cannot say. But, of one thing I have no doubt, and that is that a great future is before Canada. I believe Canada has the most valuable part of the North American continent. I believe that we shall have on this northern part of the continent, a population strong and progressive—this must be the result of our climatic conditions. I see no reason why any Canadian should be pessimistic as to the future of his country or why Canadians, when a slight stringency occurs—a stringency that is far greater in other countries—should howl poverty and disaster for Canada. Our credit has stood the strain well. We find that there is a great inpouring of capital from Great Britain into Canada to-day, and here I would like to read to the House a statement of the bond issue of Canada for 1907.

The total Canadian bonds issued in 1907 was approximately $82,635,740. This compares with:

1906	$ 53,987,008
1905	134,874,531
1904	34,529,247

1907

Corporation	$58,931,200
Municipal	14,430,540
Provincial	9,274,000
Total	$ 82,635,000

Corporation issues then nearly doubled and municipal issues increased nearly fifty per cent. Throughout 1906, financing was withheld in the expectation of lower interest rates. Bonds were issued in 1907 partly through immediate necessity and partly because the expectation was given up of a quick return to lower interest rates. It is an indication of the excellent standing of Canadian securities that during the time of such stress the market took Canadian bonds in such large quantities.

The distribution of Canadian bonds issued in 1907 was as follows:

Canada has taken..	$14,761,683
Great Britain has taken.. ..	63,095,057
United States has taken.. ..	4,779,000
Total..	$82,635,740

The most interesting thing about this comparison is that Great Britain took during 1907 nearly two and one half times as many Canadian bonds as in 1906, and came well up towards the $85,621,395 taken in 1905, the year of the Grand Trunk Pacific and other large issues. This is especially gratifying as an indication of the continued increasing interest of British investors in Canadian securities.

We welcome this capital, we get it cheap, use is here and make a good deal more than the interest we have to pay upon it. The future of Canada depends largely upon getting population of the right class. I would say to the government: Do not relax the efforts to secure immigration, but bring in the people and settle them in the west. The prosperity of the west will build up the prosperity of the east. We have only to look at the result to-day of a partial failure in the west to see how one part of the country depends upon the other. Western Canada, for years to come, with ordinary success and fairly good crops, will tax the manufacturing industries of the east to their utmost capacity. How ? By the increase of its population. Not only do these people, going on the land, increase their own products, but the supplying of their needs in many lines of manufacture means prosperity for the whole country. I thank the House for the consideration shown me, in this almost my maiden speech.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). There is one thing the hon. member for South Bruce (Mr. McKenzie) said that I can agree with, and that is that the outlook of Canada may well be optimistic. There is no substantial ground for pessimism if, as he says, the flow of immigration continues, and we get the right sort. Every one will agree with that. But the question naturally suggests itself: We have the flow of immigration, is it of the right sort? Who is responsible if it is not the right sort ? Why, it is the government. Every one admits that a large percentage of what we are getting is not of the right sort, and yet the government are spending the money of Canada to bring in the wrong sort and fill up the country with what is entirely unsuitable. The hon. gentleman dealt with several subjects, but I have not time to do more than touch upon them. He told us one thing we did not know before with regard to the North Atlantic Trading Company. He told us that Mr. Sifton asked them to form such a company. That is new information. So I presume after this, if the hon. member from South Bruce is reliable, we may fairly hold the member for Brandon responsible for the formation of that company, and whatever odium may attach to that company he is largely entitled to, because he, it seems, was one of the originators of the company, and his man Preston carried it out. The hon. member for South Bruce justifies the action of that company, he justifies the expenditure, he justifies the secrecy surrounding the expenditure, and surrounding the so-called company, and he justifies the denial of the right to the representatives of the people in parliament to ascertain who got the $300,000 or $400,000 of Canada's money for immigrants that was paid out to this company, a large percentage of whom were entirely unsuitable for Canada. The hon. member for South Bruce holds that the secrecy was justifiable, that it was ample for parliament to be told : If you send one or two men into a room with me I will show you the names of the individuals who form that North Atlantic Trading Company, provided you never mention them outside. I would like to ask him if he thinks his constituents would be satisfied with that. I would like to ask him if the farmers of South Bruce would be satisfied if he told them : I went into a room, I saw three or four German names and one or two English names, I do not know whether they were paupers or millionaires, whether they were in the immigration business or not, how much of Canada's money they got, whether Canada got any return for it or not; we were not allowed to go on with the inquiry because we were told that those names were to be kept absolutely secret. I ask the hon. member if he thinks his constituents would be satisfied with an explanation such as that. We were assured in this House that the expenditure of this money was all right, that it was expended by a very wealthy corporation of responsible and respectable men, a body corporate and politic, and the letters of incorporation were shown in this House as representing that respectable corporation that was incorporated in Amsterdam, with the seal on it, showing it to be a wealthy corporation, to be an honest corporation. These letters of incorporation were held up before the eyes of the people's representatives as evidence that the money had been spent by these respectable men, and we had to accept the assurance. But afterwards, when we were endeavouring to ascertain who composed that corporation, we found there was no such company in existence, that an absolute deception had been practised upon the people's representatives—I say, to the eternal shame of the man who stood up and defended it. And the hon. member for South Bruce was satisfied with all that, and would have been satisfied to this day, and would have gone out no doubt and told the electors of South

Bruce that this money was spent with a wealthy incorporated company of respectable men, had the opposition in parliament not gone on and made inquiry and ascertained that no such company existed, that no such corporation had ever been formed, or were in existence at that time. The whole thing was an absolute forgery and deception. How discreditable, how disgraceful it was, and I ask the hon. member for South Bruce : Are his constituents satisfied with that ? Will they justify the government and their supporters in endeavouring to burke an inquiry with regard to that large expenditure of money on the North Atlantic Trading Company ?

Mr. BENNETT. Why did the government cancel the contract ?

Mr. SPROULE. That question has been asked. If we were getting such satisfactory results, why did the government cancel the contract ? Can the hon. member for South Bruce answer that ? Does he forget that Lord Strathcona said that we would get as many good immigrants if we never spent a dollar on that North Atlantic Trading Company ? Is he aware of the fact that since the contract was cancelled we are getting immigrants equally as good, in as large numbers, increasing numbers every year ? Yet that contract was cancelled, all expenditures were stopped, as regards that North Atlantic Trading Company, it is not operating any longer. So far as we know, Canada has not suffered in any respect by the cancellation of that contract and we are saving hundreds of thousands of dollars that we were paying out before.

Mr. McKENZIE. The hon. gentleman has quoted Lord Strathcona. Did not Lord Strathcona justify keeping the names secret ?

Mr. SPROULE. I don't remember that he did, but I think he said he saw no reason why the names should not be given.

Mr. McKENZIE. I do not think so.

Mr. SPROULE. But he did not agree that we should ever enter into such a contract as that. He says in his letter that it was against his views, but because he believed it was the policy of the party in Ottawa, and because the deputy minister came from Ottawa and associated himself with Mr. Preston and went into the organization of that company, he did not feel like going against their views, knowing also that it was the view of the Minister of the Interior, whose representatives were over there. But his judgment was that it was wrong and improper, and we would get no substantial return for it.

Mr. PATERSON. Did you not say we were paying nothing now ?

Mr. SPROULE. I said to the North Atlantic Trading Company.

Mr. PATERSON. No, you said we had been spending this money.

Mr. SPROULE. The Minister of Customs is too respectable a man to try to make me say something I did not say. I said we were not spending a dollar with that North Atlantic Trading Company for that purpose.

Mr. PATERSON. You said we were saving the money, I think.

Mr. SPROULE. The money that we paid to the North Atlantic Trading Company.

Mr. PATERSON. But you are paying it to some one else.

Mr. SPROULE. We are paying it to people that we know, we are paying nothing to that company. Now with regard to the class of immigrants. The hon. member said : If we were getting the right class. Are we getting the right class ? Have we got the right class, and how are they placed ? Then we are paying $5 a head to bring men here who are presumably farmers.

Mr. PATERSON. How are you saving it then ?

Mr. SPROULE. We have paid $5 to bring them out and $2 to locate them and this agent mentioned by the hon. member for Kent was paid $1,200 altogether when it was shown that there was not $600 earned.

Mr. PATERSON. That is poor saving.

Mr. SPROULE. It is poor saving. How has the other $600 been taken out of the country ? Unfortunately, improperly, stolen! Who has prosecuted the man who did it? What has been done by the Minister of the Interior or the Minister of Agriculture ? Nothing has been done. This was going on all year until finally it was brought to the attention of the House. These men who were brought out to this country and were declared by the Department of Agriculture to be farmers and agricultural labourers were planted out among the farmers when they had never spent a day on the farm but had come from the cities and towns of England and other European countries. As farmers and agricultural labourers $5 a head was paid for them, $2 a head was paid to the agent to locate them and in many cases no immigrant was ever located. Letters from farmers were read by my hon. friend from Kent (Mr. Clements) in the House today showing that this agent never earned the money which was paid to him, in one case $10, in another $12, in another $8, in many cases $5, $4 or $2 and in many of these cases no immigrant had been placed at all. And no prosecution ! This is the country's money, is it not ? Who is responsible for the stealing of this money out of the public treasury ? The government.

Who was this agent? The government's agent. The government, although they have a guilty knowledge, although they are responsible, in so far as we know, have not raised hand or foot to punish the individual who did this. Is that what the country expects from a moral government, from an honest government, a good meaning government, a government of business men? I say it is a disgrace to any civilized country in the world. What does their own agent say in regard to many of these people coming out to Canada? What does Mr. Bruce Walker say? In a pamphlet which he has issued he tells us that the East End Emigration Fund has sent out 6,096 immigrants and the Central Emigration body 2,842. What do the members of the government say about that? We have been told that they are bringing out nothing but the very best, that the government are exercising supervision over those that come; that they are examined there and they are examined when they land here, both at the point of embarkation and the point of debarkation, that those who are unsuitable for Canada are sent back. But, what does Mr. Walker say?

The Central Emigration Board, an executive body, not at all of a philanthropic or charitable character, was brought into existence for the purpose of providing a machine for booking and emigrating the products of the provincial distress committees. The latter have not taken kindly to the organization, inasmuch as provincial distress committees object to overlooking the claims of local booking agents, probably ratepayers in their community——

To whom we pay $5 as well.

—in order to deal with the Central Emigration Board in London, from whom they receive no return, and no special consideration. Consequently, therefore, notwithstanding the inauguration of this body, with considerable press display, and not a little prestige from important and influential persons on the directorate, it has not done a great deal of business. During the year it sent to Canada 228 persons.

Then he says:

In inclosing you in tabulated form the totals of persons emigrated by such philanthropic societies as I have dealt with in this report, I beg to offer, in the most respectful way, the suggestion for submission to the minister, that if this emigration is not to be discouraged in toto, some means must be devised at once for its proper supervision and control.

Thereby admitting that there is no proper supervision and control over the immigrants that come here.

Mr. PATTERSON. You are in favour of that, are you not?

Mr. SPROULE. In favour of what?

Mr. PATERSON. What he suggests?

Mr. SPROULE. The government have been telling the country for five years that they are doing all they can and their immigration agents says they are not. That is what I want to bring to the attention of the government and of the country. What they have been declaring they were doing they are not doing at all, and it must be done if the country is not to suffer.

In my opinion, it will be an unfortunate condition of affairs if such organizations are permitted, unrestricted and unrestrained, to pour upon the shores of Canada large numbers of persons, few of whom are morally and physically quite fitted.

That is the class that are coming in.

Mr. PATERSON. No, we will not allow them to come.

Mr. SPROULE. Will not allow them to come? They are coming in thousands, they are filling our charitable institutions in Toronto and Montreal and, what is worse, they are filling our hospitals.

It might be well to institute a regulation that the same permission should be obtained for the emigration of such persons as is obtained for the emigration of persons from workhouses, and it might also be permissible to insist that such organizations in England must have a complement organization in Canada.

To distribute them.

Here is what one of the judges of the country said in regard to this matter in addressing the grand jury of the county of Carleton:

In addressing the grand jury at the opening of the high court assizes yesterday Judge MacMahon referred to the injurious results of immigrants coming into Canada who were not mentally sound. He read statements of Dr. C. K. Clarke, superintendent of the Toronto asylum, to the effect that of the 362 admissions to that institution last year 136 were foreign born. The majority were recent arrivals. Of these most were deported but there were about 40 that the province would never get rid of, and each patient that is retained would cost the province $6,000.

That is only speaking of one of the cities of Canada.

The Provincial Secretary's Department has deported thirty since January last. Of these weak-minded foreigners, sixty-five per cent were afflicted with dimentia præcox, the same form of insanity accredited to Harry K. Thaw.

And this is a class for which we are paying $5 a head when we should be filling up the country with desirable citizens. These were the most undesirable classes of lunatics and were likely to live a great many years. In other words they were the failures sent from the old country by immigration companies to try and make good in Canada if possible. The judge explained that this disease was usually contracted in early life, and in 60 per cent of the cases becomes evident before the age of twenty-five years.

And that is the class we are bringing in in such large numbers. Mr. Bruce Walker also speaks of this class and condemns the policy that had been carried out for the last five years during which time the Minister of the Interior, the Minister of Customs and the Minister of Agriculture have been telling Canada that the government were exercising the greatest care in the selection of immigrants.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend said that we paid $5 a head for these.

Mr. SPROULE. I said for some of these.

Mr. FIELDING. The mere fact that these people came in does not prove that we paid $5 a head.

Mr. SPROULE. I reached that conclusion because they are taken right to the farms in the country and come out as farm labourers. I know that they are brought out as farm labourers and were booked as such, because they said they were advised to put themselves down as farm labourers, although they had never worked a day on the farm. I have had four or five in my own employ and I do not think that they had worked on a farm before.

Mr. PATERSON. Were they crazy?

Mr. SPROULE. Some of them were, not the ones I had, however, and we raised money and sent them to Toronto. They were imbeciles.

Mr. PATERSON. Did the Ontario government bring them out; did not they place the men on the farms?

Mr. SPROULE. I made application at Toronto and I think the application was forwarded here and they were sent on to me as soon as they landed by the immigration agent for the Dominion. Three of them were sent on. As far as I know, they were sent from the immigrants brought in by the Dominion. They told me that they were instructed to book themselves as going on farms, although they had never worked on farms.

Mr. PATERSON. You had better mention that to Mr. Whitney.

Mr. SPROULE. I mention it to the people responsible, to the people who did it, who spent the people's money ; I mention it to the guilty parties.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Was their information reliable if they were crazy?

Mr. SPROULE. I did not say that the men I had were crazy ; I said the men who were brought into our locality and put among the farmers were in some cases crazy and some were sent to Toronto.

Mr. PATERSON. Were they the ones you were talking to.

Mr. SPROULE. No. I think the hon. member for Ottawa will have to put an insurance policy on this man or he will explode again. At the meeting of the Associated Charities in Toronto it was said that the medical inspection was 'farcical.' This was stated by Dr. Hodgetts, I believe. Mr. Samuel Arnold, secretary of the Associated Charities, at the same meeting gave a statement of the position of the allied societies. This was in September last, really before the season of the year when distress is felt in the cities. The statement was as follows:

St. Andrew's Society, he said, had not one family to provide for. The Society of St. Vincent de Paul suggested that men with families should have enough funds to support them for six months. St. George's Society assisted persons 681 times——

Mr. LEMIEUX. What city is that?

Mr. SPROULE. Toronto, last September.

—sent nine to the hospital, and had seven funerals in the past year. On the register of the British Welcome League there were 5,293 names. Of these, 606 were without money, 347 with less than $2, 310 with over $2 but less than $5, 185 married couples with 352 children, wthout cash, 348 couples with 865 children with less than $5 a family.

They had been landed down in Canada and at once became practically paupers on the country. These were the desirable immigrants that the government were bringing out to the country.

During the past year 300 persons applied for work at the office of the Associated Charities, and of these over 200 were recent arrivals. At the city hall 216 persons asked for relief and 44 for hospital treatment. All had lived less than three months in the country.

And that is the class we are paying so much money to bring into Canada.

Mr. PATERSON. Does it say the Ontario government brought them out?

Mr. SPROULE. What is the million dollars being spent for by this government? To bring them out and to pay bonuses.

Mr. PATERSON. I am asking you——

Mr. SPROULE. —to pay bonuses to the booking companies and many of these were brought out as desirable settlers.

Out of 200 families aided by the House of Industry, 150 were immigrants.

Rev. Canon Welsh appealed for quality, not quantity, in immigration, and said immigrants should have definite employment guaranteed them before they left home.

Mr. Rufus S. Hudson showed that on paper the rules of the Dominion government for the medical inspection of immigrants were excellent, but in practice they were execrable.

The discussion was continued by Dr. Pepler, Mr. W. F. Sexton, Mr. J. C. Bayliss, Mr. C. W. Mogridge, Mr. H. M. Mowat, K.C., and Mr. G. F. Harman.

Dr. Hodgetts said that the medical examination of the immigrants was farcical, as a physician was not allowed time sufficient to properly examine all who passed through his hands. Cases of heart and lung diseases and even of imbecility frequently escaped their notice.

That is the class of men who are being brought to the country and we are expected to applaud the government because they are bringing them to Canada. What is the result to-day ? It is that there are over 2,000 people in Toronto out of employment. I saw in a paper no longer ago than yesterday that two or three of these men had been offered $25 a month and their board to work on farms near Toronto, and refused because they could not get $26 a month. These men are lying about the towns and cities of Canada and are absolutely useless to go on farms. They have no sense of honour and no regard for a bargain, whether it is written or oral. Large numbers of them come from London, and they tell us they never worked on a farm; yet they are sent out as farmers. I employed one on a farm, and I saw him walk around a field three times to learn how to put in a plough, and he could not manage it properly if he got a million dollars. I was to pay him $20 a month, with board and washing.

Mr. PATERSON. The Ontario government brought him out. You should mention the matter to Whitney.

Mr. SPROULE. He told me he was booked at the Dominion government agency in London. I have had three more of them since. I had one who left only last week, who had been paid $20 a month, with board and washing, all winter, although I do not think he was worth half that. He went away on Saturday night, and never came back, and he is now looking for work. Another remained three days ; another remained nine days. This is the kind of immigration the hon. member eulogized. Some years ago in the Committee on Agriculture the hon. member moved a resolution recommending the government to try to get the embargo taken off cattle, and he stood up with the greatest simplicity and innocence and assurances to tell the Committee that the government of England was going to change shortly, he believed, and a reform government was going to come in and would take the embargo off cattle. That reform government came in. Has it taken off the embargo yet ? How many times has the Minister of Agriculture applied to it, but he has not succeeded. Have we heard anything about it since? Not a word lately. If the hon gentleman is a prophet, I am afraid he is one of the false prophets. He talked a great deal about the cold storage provided by the Minister of Agriculture and told us what beneficial results we had from it. He said that practically all our products, including cheese and butter and eggs, were sent in cold storage and were therefore sold at a higher price in the British market than before. Am I correct in that my understanding of his contention ?

Mr. McKENZIE. I spoke more particularly of early apples and small fruits during the months of August and September.

Mr. SPROULE. I thought he mentioned cheese, butter and egggs.

Mr. McKENZIE. In reply to Mr. E. D. Smith. Of course, I accept the statement of the hon. gentleman as the truth.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman accepts my statement as correct. Then what did the Minister of Agriculture say in this House in answer to a question by Mr. Armstrong ? This is the question :

What was the total number of boxes of cheese, butter, eggs, bacon, apples, in boxes and barrels respectively, shipped in cold storage, the number in cooled air chambers, and the number shipped in ordinary storage in twelve months previous to March 1, 1908?

What was the answer to that ? Here is what the Minister of Agriculture said :

Of the cheese sent over in cold storage, there was not a single box in the twelve months; in cooled air chambers, 290,076 boxes; but in ordinary storage, 1,721,000 boxes.

Mr. McKENZIE. I would like to ask the hon. member if he expects cheese to be shipped in cold storage. You can ship butter in cold storage, but you destroy cheese if you ship it too cold.

Mr. SPROULE. Did not the hon. member state the benefit that the farmers were receiving from it, and did he not admit that what I stated practically represented his sentiment ? How much butter went over in cold storage ? 66,896 boxes. I take meats; how many boxes went in cold storage ? 2,858. How many in cooled air chambers ? 29,000. How many in ordinary storage ? 25,900. Take lard—how much went in cold storage ? Not a single pound. How much in ordinary storage ? 1,000 packages. Then I take apples, which the hon. member says cold storage is for ; how many went over in cold storage ? 6,131 barrels. How many in cooled air chambers, 1,720 barrels. How many in ordinary storage ? 634,000 barrels. There is what the farmers got from this splendid system of cold storage.

Mr. McKENZIE. Surely the hon. gentleman does not expect the whole trade of Canada to go in cold storage. Surely he must know as well as I that during the latter part of the summer, when our winter apples are going forward, there is no necessity for cold storage. That is required for the earlier apples and perishable fruit.

Mr. SPROULE. Then why did the hon. gentleman misrepresent the facts by saying that practically it all went by cold storage? He said that nearly all the apples went in cold storage, but I have shown him that by far the greater proportion went without cold storage. When the farmers of South Bruce read what he said and then compare his statement with the facts, what credit will he receive from them? Of the tender fruit, how much went in cold storage? None at all. How many eggs went in cool air chambers? 934 boxes. How many in the ordinary way, without cold storage at all? 24,249 boxes. And the farmers are expected to bow down and be grateful to the Minister of Agriculture. I see that the hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Miller) is here. What did he say on that question? He also eulogized the Minister of Agriculture for the wonderful things he had accomplished by his cold storage, and he went on to say that practically all that the farmers sent now was sent in cold storage, and their products were consequently laid down in splendid condition in the markets of the world. The hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Armstrong) put to him this question: Do I understand the hon. gentleman to say that all these articles he has mentioned were exported in cold storage? And the hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Miller) replied: That is my understanding and my opinion. But I have given the facts to show how utterly absurd his opinion was. Then the hon. member for South Grey went on to give a list of figures, showing the quantity of eggs and butter and cheese and bacon and hams exported, and he left the inference to be drawn that all these went in cold storage. The hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Armstrong) again asked him if these were all exported in cold storage, and the hon. gentleman replied: That is my understanding. But we find that exactly the contrary is the case. What has the hon. member for South Grey to say, in the face of the figures given by the Minister of Agriculture to-day? If the farmers of South Grey only heard the one side, they might believe the hon. gentleman, but if the facts are put before them what will they think of him? They will conclude that either he is absolutely ignorant or dishonest—that he either does not know the facts or is dishonest enough to give figures which the facts do not bear out for the purpose of making some political advantage for himself and party and his wonderful Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. PATERSON. Cold storage is a good thing, is it not? Whether they ship by cold storage or not, is it not a good thing? Or are you opposed to it?

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. minister from Brant (Mr. Paterson) is very fond of putting —I was going to say silly—but I will say irrelevant questions. I do not like to be offensive but I cannot see the sense of his putting the questions he does. We have had held up to us the action of the government in furnishing seed as a great boon to the farmers of the west. Well, a great many of the farmers do not approve of the system the government have adopted. It would have been far better if the government had made some arrangement by which the farmers, whose crops were a failure, could have been furnished with the money with which to buy seed from their neighbours, whose crops were not frost bitten and who consequently had seed for sale. Take one section where the grain was destroyed by the frost and adjoining that you will find another where the grain was first-class and where those farmers, whose crops had failed, could get all the seed they required if they had the money to pay for it. But instead of doing this the government are providing the seed themselves and taking security for payment from the farmers, and the government are giving a bonus of 3 cents a bushel in the way of a higher price for it to those who will turn in pure seed. Who is getting that bonus? A good many of the friends of the government are getting it and those who are not friends are not getting it. That discrimination is wrong. In any event the price of seed grain is raised 3 cents a bushel and the farmer who requires it has to pay that. His neighbour who has equally good grain cannot sell it to him because he has not the money to pay for it, and he is compelled to take the government grain and pay 3 cents a bushel more. I am not giving this as an argument of my own. I had it from a man in Saskatchewan who is farming there. He has in his granery as fine wheat as you could wish to see yet he cannot sell to the farmers, who are in want of seed, because they have not the money to pay for it. Those farmers are obliged to give the government security and have to pay from 3 cents to 5 cents more per bushel for grain which is no better or cleaner than they could get from adjoining farms. I am not blaming the government so much because I think that was not what they intended. I believe they were doing their best, but when we are doing our best, it does not always work out exactly right. This man said to me that if the government had provided some means whereby the farmers could get money enough to buy from their neighbours, they could buy equally as good grain and very much cheaper. But to-day they have either to do without the grain or give security and buy from the government at a much higher price.

Mr. PATERSON. Was it known that the grain you speak of was all right? Was it tested?

Mr. SPROULE. It was wheat which no man with an eye in his head and who was a farmer could doubt was first-class wheat.

Mr. PATERSON. They say the oats that were blighted looked just as well.

Mr. SPROULE. You could be deceived easily in oats but not in wheat.

Mr. N. F. WILSON. Is the hon. gentleman aware that the people appreciate the fact that they can get outside grain and prefer to pay 3 cents more per bushel for it.

Mr. SPROULE. The government can get as good grain in the country.

Mr. N. F. WILSON. They do not want to get it from their neighbours but want to change the seed.

Mr. SPROULE. That is largely moonshine. Besides most of the wheat is not imported at all but bought in the country there. I wish now to refer to the discussion which took place this afternoon. My hon. friend from West Kent (Mr. Clements) was dealing with a very important subject, and during most of the time he spoke there was but one minister present. I do not know whether the ministers have entirely abandoned their functions as such, but the House sat with only one minister present and he a subordinate one, although at the moment the government were being charged with dereliction of duty and improper conduct. The benches were empty nearly the whole afternoon and but one minister present.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to ask him a question? While he was speaking it struck me very forcibly—would it not be well to refer to the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) for his absence? This country is paying that hon. gentleman a good salary and he has been in his place very little within the last month.

Mr. SPROULE. It is not against the leader of the opposition that charges are made, but against the Department of Agriculture and the Department of Immigration, and the hon. gentleman (Mr. R. L. Borden) is not responsible for these.

Mr. FIELDING. Did the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clements) give notice to the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) of any such charge to be made?

Mr. SPROULE. Some time ago.

Mr. FIELDING. That is not very definite.

Mr. SPROULE. I heard him in his place give notice to the House that it was his intention——

Mr. FIELDING. That is not the kind of notice that is due to a minister. He should get notice of the time when the matter is to be brought up.

Mr. SPROULE. That is the kind of notice that any member should give and it is all the government should ask or expect.

Mr. FIELDING. I do not agree with the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule).

Mr. SPROULE. I am speaking from a knowledge of some years which is worth as much to me as the experience of the minister (Mr. Fielding) is to him. Here are charges made against the Department of Immigration, not merely of mismanagement but of absolute fraud in the expenditure of public money. Yet we do not learn of any effort made to compel restitution, or to punish the parties. The hon. member (Mr. Clements) read case after case, seven hundred in all, of people for whom the agent had received a commission of $2 a head. And when letters were addressed to the individuals who were supposed to have taken these employees, half of them declared that they had never had these men. Yet this agent got $1,200 for locating these people, half of whom were never located at all;—pure dishonesty. And, that charge being brought to the attention of the government, they have not a word of reply, but sit as dumb as oysters. They do not try to punish the individual, or get back the money, or offer any excuse. But is it any wonder that this individual should act in this way? I do not think so. He knows what is going on in the departments of the government. Everybody who deals with the government expects to get a rake-off or to steal some of the public money. And the man who gets only a small portion feels that he is hardly doing himself justice because somebody else is more astute than he and gets a larger amount. Now, not only was $2 a head paid for locating these people in this country, but $5 a head was paid for bringing them here, and this was done on the plea that they were farm labourers. Yet what do these lettters show that were read by the hon. member (Mr. Clements)? One man had never worked as a farmer, but was a plasterer by trade; another had been a mechanic; another stayed a few days and then went and got work in Detroit. And these were the people that were sent out as farm hands, labourers, $5 per head being paid to bring them here and $2 a head to locate them, though many were not located at all. And yet the government has not a word to say. Was this not a fraud? It would appear that somebody buncoed the government, but no attempt seems to be made to punish the parties. What percentage of these people belong to the agricultural class? Not half of them. In fact, half of them were not located at all, so that probably not more than one-quarter of these people were agriculturists. This shows the slipshod methods employed by the department, which are also illustrated in the examining of immigrants at the port of debarkation.

The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) is said to be a practical farmer, a man whose ambition it is to do something for the farmers of this country. He often tells what a wonderful thing he did in getting the United States regulations changed so as to enable us to get our cattle sent into that country, and this is how it works out at the present time. If the hon. gentleman disbelieve me, my hon. friend from Russell (Mr. N. F. Wilson), whom I saw at the gathering of livestock men the other day, will verify what I say. Here for instance is the regulation with regard to horses—it provides how these horses may be brought into Canada :

A proper pedigree referring to the English or American stud-book to be given by the breeder in his certificate, but in the case of such blood horses whose pedigree is not entered in the stud-book an authenticated certificate of purity of blood and identification will be sufficient, provided the animal is found on inspection to have the properties and qualifications essential to improvement of breed.

Then, as to short-horn cattle :

The breeders' certificate shall embody a correct pedigree, referring to a recognized short-horn herd book.

These regulations were made in November, 1887, before the present government came into power. And yet, they have been telling the farmers of the wonderful things the Minister of Agriculture accomplished by going to Washington and arranging with the Secretary of Agriculture for an exchange of pure-bred cattle between Canada and the United States. I find in the 'Farmers' Advocate' of Manitoba announcement of a sale of pure-bred cattle at Wetaskiwin, on March 31. And where are the cattle from? They are from the United States. They are consigned to a Canadian who sells them in his own name. These are advertised as pure-bred cattle, and the farmer who buys them thinks he is getting cattle that can be registered here in the herd-book of Canada. He goes on and buys them and what does he find? He buys them as pure-bred cattle, and he finds that they won't register here at all. They have four registration herd books over there, they belong to joint stock companies who make money out of the business. Therefore they are lax in it, and we would not admit their registration at all. But the cattle they are bringing in and pretending to be pure-bred cattle as we know and understand the term, are cattle that cannot be registered in Canada. Will the Americans allow us to do that with our cattle? We are sending cattle over there and what do they compel us to do? They compel us to register our cattle before they get in, and it costs $100 a head to register. But we allow them to bring theirs in here free, and they sell their cattle in Canada as pure-bred, and we find that they are only grades when wet get them. So the Canadian farmer is deceived and imposed upon, a fraud is perpetrated upon him, and our beautiful Minister of Agriculture is letting it go on.

Mr. BENNETT. Does he know about it ?

Mr. SPROULE. Yes, he was at the meeting, and they brought it to his attention, and they asked for a remedy. I asked the question the other day : Are the government taking any steps to regulate this, and under what regulations are the cattle coming in now ? The Minister of Agriculture did not answer, but the Minister of Customs answered, and said they were coming in under the same regulations as in 1887. Yet the Minister of Agriculture told the farmers of this country in the meantime, I fancy a hundred times: What a blessing it is that you have me as Minister of Agriculture, because he went down to Washington and had one consultation with the Minister of Agriculture there, and arranged everything on a fair basis so that there was a free interchange between the two countries in thoroughbred stock, and grade stock as well, to the advantage of farmers in Canada. Now they bring in horses, what are they worth when they bring them in ? I am told they are no good, the horses cannot register here. I say that also is a fraud perpetrated upon the farmers of Canada, and it becomes a tax placed on our good cattle. Our farmers are paying three prices for them. One case is cited of a man who paid $2,100 for a horse that the party who referred to it declared on his judgment was not worth $500. Yet these horses come in under the regulations, the Minister of Agriculture knows it, and he is making no effort to change it, and the farmers are suffering in consequence. Yet we are told by the hon. member for South Bruce and others that we ought to be profoundly thankful because we have a practical farmer at the head of the department.

Mr. N. F. WILSON. Does the hon. member mean to state that all thoroughbred cattle going over to the States to be sold come under this hundred dollar regulation ?

Mr. SPROULE. The man that was trying to ship them was told that he could not take them in unless he paid $100, he had either to give it then, or to pay it beforehand.

Mr. N. F. WILSON. The cattle that pay this $100 registration fee in order to be sold in the States are cattle of recent importation. I know the cattle we have bred and sold in the States have been registered before this clause was adopted requiring a hundred dollars to be paid, and we don't pay anything extra in order to sell in the States.

Mr. SPROULE. When was that clause enacted ?

Mr. N. F. WILSON. Two years ago. Up to the time of our national registration we registered all our cattle in the American Shorthorn herd book.

Mr. SPROULE. If they are registered there, of course you could take them there. But now they have to be taken in by an American, and they have to be registered as well—so I am informed, and if am not correct I want to be set right. That is the regulation, and I complain because the Minister of Agriculture allows American cattle to come in under such a regulation on their side, while we are deprived of the benefit of their market, and the Minister of Agriculture sits by and allows Canadian farmers to suffer.

Now as we are practically discussing the budget, I wish to say a few words about the speech of the hon. member for Brandon. I was amused to see how highly the reform press eulogized that speech. You would think it was one of the most wonderful deliverances ever heard in the House of Commons. It was original, it was new, it was practical, it was valuable, and if it was carried out, what wonderful benefits would result to Canada. Well, if all this is true, is it not a condemnation of the government who waited all these years for the hon. member for Brandon to tell them what they should do? In proportion as his deliverances were wise and his recommendations valuable, in the same proportion did he condemn his late colleagues because they have not been doing what he says they should do. His whole speech is a rebuke to the government. He says that several reforms are urgently demanded, and not one of them was mentioned in the speech from the Throne or in the budget speech. Not a word in the speech from the Throne about building the Hudson Bay railway, not a word about his other propositions, except something about the all-red line in the budget speech. Now is there any justification for the fulsome eulogies of that speech by the Reform press? Were these suggestions new? Not one of them was new, they had been discussed in this House over and over again. What are they? Reforming the Department of Trade and Commerce by the appointment of commercial agents to increase our trade. What were we told by the Minister of Trade and Commerce? They were going to establish commercial agencies all over the world, who would collect statistical data that would be of great value, they were going to increase immensely our foreign trade; and that the Department of Trade and Commerce was going to do wonderful things that had never been done before. But the member for Brandon says it wants to be reorganized; it is out of date. We have paid sufficient money to enable the government to get it up to date. We have 32 or 33 agents appointed in England, South Africa, Japan, Australia, New Zealand and other countries and yet the hon. member from Brandon tells us they are no use. We want it reorganized and that is what the country needs to-day. If it has not got it who is to be condemned? The government told us when they organized the department and agreed to pay $7,000 a year to the head of it that they were going to have wonderful results from it, but the hon. member for Brandon tells us: We never had any wonderful results. Is that not a condemnation of the government? Certainly it is, and they must be responsible for it. The next question referred to by the hon. gentleman was that of civil service reform. We have had civil service reform discussed over and over again since I came into this House thirty years ago. Every year some one is going to reform the civil service. Before the Conservative government went out they appointed a commission and they were prepared to reform the service and woud have done so if they had not gone out of power.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend is mistaken. They did not go out of power for nearly four years after that. The commission was appointed in 1891 and made its report in 1892. They made no reform at all.

Mr. SPROULE. On account of going out of power.

Mr. FIELDING. They had all the time they needed but they did not do it.

Mr. SPROULE. I am not going to debate that now. The present government have been in office for twelve years. They have had two civil service commissions and they have not reformed the civil service. Yet, the hon. member for Brandon says that it should be reformed. Is that not a condemnation of his own friends? On the contrary, they have deformed it. They have been in office for twelve years and there is no result as yet.

Mr. FIELDING. We have had the report of the commission for three weeks and the late government had the report of their commission for four years and did nothing.

Mr. SPROULE. But you had a commission before this.

Mr. FIELDING. Never.

Mr. SPROULE. Yes, they reported long ago and you introduced two measures in consequence of it.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend is mistaken; there was no commission.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. What was it?

Mr. FIELDING. There was no commission. I do not know what my hon. friend is referring to.

Mr. SPROULE. There was the inquiry upon which you based your Superannuation and Pension Fund Bills.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend has made a statement and he is questioning about some other things. He has said that we have had two commissions. I say that he is mistaken. There has been no commission but the one that was recently appointed and which has reported.

Mr. SPROULE. I will give my hon. friend the facts later.

Mr. LEMIEUX. When Sir Wm. Mulock introduced the Superannuation Bill there was no commission.

Mr. FOWLER. There was an inquiry.

Mr. FIELDING. By whom ?

Mr. FOWLER. By the government, I suppose.

Mr. FIELDING. Every Bill is the subject of inquiry.

Mr. SPROULE. The next question that came up was the fast Atlantic service. When the present government came into power there was a provisional abstract made for a fast Atlantic service which called for an annual payment of $750,000, but the present government declared that they could provide a service for $500,000 a year, and that they would not pay $750,000. Man after man got up and said that we did not want a fast Atlantic service, that we required something to carry freight and it did not matter whether it was carried rapidly so long as it was carried cheaply. They took two grounds, first, that we did not need it, and, second, that we were paying too much for it. Now, we are told by this wonderful Daniel-come-to-judgment that it is the most pressing need of the times and that it would be cheap for Canada to give $1,226,000 for it, the only difference being that it will extend across the Pacific as well as the Atlantic. This wonderful thing is something new, something great. They are all talking about it now. The press have eulogized the deliverance of the hon. member for Brandon for advocating something that was practically ready to be realized some twelve years ago but which the government, with its want of foresight and good judgment, prevented from being accomplished. The government refused to ratify the contract which was made by their predecessors, they declared the service was not needed and now we are told that it is one of the most pressing needs of the country. The next was the building of the Hudson Bay Railway. I listened to members from the Northwest the other day saying how much they wanted it. I believe they do want it. When I was in Winnipeg five years ago I was asked by the 'Free Press' if I would give them an interview on what the country needed and I said that one of the most urgent needs of the time was the Hudson Bay Railway. I was taken to task very severely by a good many people on both sides of politics for saying so. That was my opinion then and it is my opinion still. Now the hon. member for Brandon comes forward as an advocate of this project forgetting that the only effort that was ever made to build that road was by the late government. If they had remained in power the whole of the road would undoubtedly have been built long ago but because they went out the present government have allowed the men who held the subsidy and charter to dilly-dally with it. They have renewed the subsidy and kept it alive but the railway is not built and it never will be built so long as the laxity of the present government continues.

Mr. SINCLAIR. Is the hon. gentleman not aware that the Hudson Bay Railway is being built and that it is already built for a considerable distance ?

Mr. SPROULE. I am aware that a portion of road which is used for other purposes is being built as part of a line going to the Pacific coast. Can the hon. gentleman tell me how much is built and how much they got to build it ? I do not think he knows anything about it. He has heard some one tell him. What a wonderful inspiration it was that came from the superlative cranium of the hon. member for Brandon when he said that the road might be built by setting aside a portion of the land ! Practically the late government were carrying out the same principle in giving alternate sections of land for the purpose of building it. What is the difference ? The member for Brandon says hold the land for, say ten years, until it becomes valuable. If you hold the land for ten years it may become valuable but there is the interest accruing on the money in the meantime. The only practical effort that was made to build the road was made by the Conservative party. These are the wonderful deliverances of the hon. member for Brandon. The last was that the government should buy back the lands from the railways and throw them open for settlement. We have discussed that in the House a dozen times and a dozen years ago. Every one of these old subjects has been revived and revamped, and the utterances of the hon. gentleman with regard to them are considered to be a wonderful deliverance as if he were an oracle from Heaven. Every Liberal paper praises the hon. gentleman and in proportion as it praises him it condemns its own friends.

Mr. FIELDING. But the Tory papers praised him.

Mr. SPROULE. Yes, and I said they were slobbering over nothing. I have heard it discussed so often. There was not a suggestion made in the speech that was not debated over and over again in this House, and the fact that they are not fulfilled to-day is in several instances due entirely to the present government who had it in their power to carry them out. The late government were prepared to carry out the suggestions had they remained in power, and would have carried them out long before this. If the people do not to-day enjoy these advantages it is because of the men—I was going to say the incompetents—who have occupied the treasury benches for the past eleven years. I would not have spoken upon this question had it not been that the government have not dared to utter one word in defence or justification of this, or to say what they are going to do with regard to the stealing of the money of the country, the dishonest conduct of their own employees.

Mr. JOHN H. SINCLAIR (Guysboro). This debate, Mr. Speaker, has taken a very wide range. Hon. gentlemen opposite have gone back into ancient history and have made many gloomy predictions as to the future; but not one of them, to my mind, has made any fair attempt to meet the splendid statement made in the budget speech of the hon. the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding).

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Is this the budget debate?

Mr. FIELDING. You might ask the hon. member for Kent (Mr. Clements) who said that he was cut out on the budget debate and was now cutting in.

Mr. SINCLAIR. The story which the hon. the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) had to tell was heard with delight by every patriotic Canadian. It was a story of increasing trade, increasing prosperity, increasing deposits in the savings banks, improved transportation facilities, a surplus on the Intercolonial Railway, a surplus in the post office and a surplus in the general revenue of the country, the largest in the history of Canada. With all these evidences of prosperity before them my hon. friends have made more blue-ruin speeches than it has ever before been my misfortune to listen to. The hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) went pretty far; he saw all kinds of bogies across his path, but the past master as a blue-ruin prophet was the hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt). There was nothing too doleful for that hon. gentleman. The lamentations of Jeremiah were cheerful reading compared to that hon. gentleman's remarks in this debate. If there is one thing more than another characteristic of the Canadian people it is that they are hopeful, that they look forward with great courage and hope to the future, and that they have no use for the pessimist, for the man who sees nothing but blue ruin ahead of the country. My hon. friend from Northumberland (Mr. Loggie) to-night made a very eloquent reference to the ship of state. Let me tell these hon. gentlemen that the people of Canada will never commit the care of the ship of state to a lot of Jonahs, a number of whom mutinied the last time they had charge of her, who are always afraid to get outside the harbour and always see breakers ahead, whereas in fact the sky is clear, and the wind fair and the ship is sailing along on her triumphant course, steered by a pilot who has weathered many a storm, who still has a steady hand on the tiller and in whom the people of Canada, the owners of the ship, have implicit confidence. I sympathize with hon. gentlemen opposite in the fact that the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) has left them nothing to talk about, that he has exhausted the whole subject. He went over every thing that a man could possibly discuss in connection with the budget debate, leaving nothing at all for the men who sit to his right and left.

Mr. FOWLER. I rise to a point of order. The hon. gentleman is referring to a previous debate.

Mr. FIELDING. The hon. gentleman who preceded him (Mr. Sproule) did nothing but refer to a previous debate and why should not my hon. friend enjoy the same privilege?

Mr. FOWLER. It was open to my hon. friend to take the point. I will answer the question of the Minister of Finance. It is now twelve o'clock at night and I do not think the members are desirous of listening to a written essay such as is being given by the hon. member for Guysboro, who is reading his speech. For that reason I rise to the point of order in order that we may not have such a speech.

Mr. FIELDING. The hon. member for West Kent (Mr. Clements) was permitted to enter upon the budget debate; every one who has spoken to-night has done so and I submit that it is now too late to object.

Mr. FOWLER. I have the right to raise the point whenever I see fit.

Mr. SINCLAIR. I intend dealing with questions discussed by the last speaker (Mr. Sproule). That gentleman referred at great length to the question of immigration and endeavoured to condemn the policy of the government in regard to the paying of bonuses on immigrants. I understood from him—I do not know whether he intended to convey that idea to the House—that he was under the impression that the government were paying bonuses on all immigrants coming into Canada.

Mr. SPROULE. No.

Mr. SINCLAIR. He may not have thought so, but listening to him I received that impression because he spoke of all the insane men among the immigrants or men who could not work and repeatedly asserted that these were the men on whom the government had paid bonuses.

Mr. SPROULE. Was I not speaking most of the time of farmers and farm labourers on whom they do pay bonuses ?

Mr. SINCLAIR. He said they represented themselves as farmers and farm labourers, and found their way into this country in that way. He said that the government had paid bonuses on these people. Would he be surprised to find that the government had paid bonuses on only a small proportion of the immigrants who have come into Canada in the last eleven years ? I find from the record that from 1897 to 31st December, 1907 we received in Canada from northern Europe 359,575 immigrants, and paid bonuses on only 27 per cent of that number.

Mr. SPROULE. Did that include the North Atlantic Trading Company ?

Mr. SINCLAIR. That included all the immigrants we received from Northern Europe, not including the British Islands, during that period. My hon. friend will also note that a great many people came into Canada from other parts of Europe on whom the government did not pay any bonus. Hon. gentlemen opposite appear to think the government have been paying bonuses on people coming from southern Europe, whereas they have never at any period paid bonuses on such immigrants.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Would the hon. member explain what he means by southern Europe ?

Mr. SINCLAIR. I mean the countries of southern Europe, such as Italy and Greece.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. What about Roumania, Bulgaria and Transylvania?

Mr. SINCLAIR. I stated that the government never paid bonuses on any immigrants coming from countries of southern Europe. For every man on whom the government paid a bonus they got a settler on the western lands. They have placed more homesteaders on the lands of the west than the number of men on whom they have paid bonuses. If hon. gentlemen will examine the records of the Interior Department, they will find that while bonuses were paid on 27 per cent of the immigrants from northern Europe, 28 per cent of these immigrants settled on the lands of the west. When hon. gentlemen opposite were in power, they paid out a great deal of money to bring people to this country, but got almost no settlers, so that after eighteen years the western prairies were still a wilderness, while we have this splendid record, that for every man from northern Europe on whom a bonus was paid we have settled a man on the western prairie. So we have not lost one dollar of the bonuses we have paid. My hon. friend from Victoria (Mr. Sam. Hughes) wishes to know the countries from which the people come on whom bonuses are paid. Under the present arrangement the government pays bonuses on three classes of immigrants—farmers, railway navvies and female domestic servants coming from the following countries : Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Holland, France, Belgium, Germany and Finland in northern Europe, and also from the British isles. My hon. friend from East Lambton (Mr. Armstrong), in his speech the other day, informed the House that we ought to be paying bonuses on people coming from Germany. I was surprised to find the hon. gentleman, who is supposed to be an authority on German questions, making a statement like that. I do not know whether there are any Germans in his constituency but I suppose there are, and his speeches must be for them.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I might take the liberty of informing the hon. gentleman that the hon. member for East Lambton has no Germans in his riding. He talks on the basis of principle. I know it is a surprise to the hon. gentleman to find him doing so.

Mr. SINCLAIR. I accept the hon. gentleman's statement, but I would like to have some explanation of the deep interest the hon. member for Lambton takes in the Germans. This is what he said in regard to immigration :

> Then, Sir, on account of the present regulations of this government, within the last eleven years the immigration into Canada from Germany has been little or nothing, and I am sure there is not a man in this House but who realizes the importance of a German community in any country such as Canada. Instead of us assisting immigrants to come from southern parts of Europe it would be better for us to get into better relations with Germany——

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, I wish to raise the point of order again. The hon. gentleman is referring to a previous debate. I would like to have your ruling on that.

Mr. SPEAKER. Of course, the rule is well understood, that there cannot be any reference to a past debate. But this afternoon and this evening it seems to have been accepted by the House, commencing with the hon. member for West Kent (Mr. Clements) that the budget debate should be practically continued, and I have been assuming up to this point that that was the disposition of the House. If the point of order is pressed, I shall of course have to rule that there cannot be any reference to a past debate.

Mr. CLEMENTS. If I may be permitted, the hon. Minister of Finance and I think the Speaker rather misquoted me in saying that I referred to the budget debate. I did not treat on it to any extent.

Mr. FIELDING. I was obliged to leave the House to receive an important deputation, and as I left I distinctly heard the hon. gentleman state that he had some observations to make in the budget debate, which he now wished to continue. I admit that the hon. gentleman cannot make the quotation. We have been on the budget debate the whole afternoon.

Mr. SINCLAIR. I was pointing out that the hon. member for East Lambton condemned the government for paying bonuses on immigrants from southern Europe.

Mr. FOWLER. The hon. gentleman is doing the same thing again. If he proposes to do that, I propose each time to raise the question of order.

Mr. SPEAKER. If the hon. member refers to a past debate and the point of order is pressed, I shall have to rule that he cannot do so.

Mr. SINCLAIR. I am simply discussing the question which the hon. member for East Grey discussed. If any hon. gentleman asserts that the government has been paying bonuses on immigrants coming from southern Europe, he is mistaken. There has never been such a policy. If any hon. gentleman is under the impression that the government is not now bonusing immigrants from Germany as well as from other countries of northern Europe, he ought to try and inform himself on that question, and when an hon. gentleman gets up in the House and tells us what we ought to do, when it happens to be the very thing we are now doing we are surprised.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Has this government an agent in Germany?

Mr. SINCLAIR. I understand that the policy of the government is to pay bonuses to booking agents in Germany or anywhere else in northern Europe—that since the contract with the North Atlantic Trading Company has been cancelled, any booking agent in northern Europe who sends an immigrant to Canada, and succeeds in settling that immigrant on the lands of Canada, is entitled, after the immigrant has become a citizen of Canada, but not before, to the $5 for securing the immigrant, provided the immigrant is a farmer, a railway navvy or a domestic servant.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Is $5 the bonus today ?

Mr. SINCLAIR. I understand that it is.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Has it not been doubled ?

Mr. SINCLAIR. I think the hon. gentleman will find that is the bonus.

Mr. FIELDING. The hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) says so.

Mr. SPROULE. I was informed it was that some time ago. It is a little more now.

Mr. CLEMENTS.

Mr. SINCLAIR. I am afraid there is a good deal of misapprehension, not only among hon. gentlemen opposite but in the country with regard to this question of immigration. I was very much suprised the other day to see an article in the Toronto 'Globe,' on the front page of that paper, framed in a pretty way and headed with large letters 'The Goth is at our gates' and giving the name of some Italian who had murdered some other Italian somewhere in the province of Ontario and suggesting that the government should not pay bonuses on immigrants from southern Europe. I was surprised to find that such a well informed paper should haye been led astray, but the reason is hon. gentlemen opposite from day to day make these statements in this House and the Conservative press repeat them, and the result is that they deceive the very elect, and the people run away with the idea that our immigration policy is altogether different than what it really is. I have pointed out to the House that out of all the immigrants we have received from northern Europe, we have only paid bonuses on the 27 per cent who have settled on our lands. The hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain) asked some questions a few days ago and got a reply, and since then the matter has not been referred to by my hon. friend, but the question he asked was such an interesting one and the answer was so interesting that I wish to place both on record :

Mr. BLAIN asked:

1. How many immigrants of every kind arrived in Canada each year since 1896?

2. On how many immigrants has a bonus of any kind been paid in each year since 1896?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior):

	Total No. arriving.	Total No. on which bonuses were paid.
1. 1896	16,835	4,484
1897	21,716	2,432
1898	31,900	8,664
1899	44,543	4,588
1900 to June 30	23,895	19,700
1900-1	49,149	16,309
1901-2	67,379	15,294
1902-3	128,364	27,945
1903-4	130,331	47,973
1904-5	146,266	32,604
1905-6	189,064	33,680
1906-7 (9 months)	124,667	14,070
1907-8 (9 months)	235,328	20,516
	1,209,437	248,249

So that it appears that out of 1,209,437 who reached our shores since 1896, we only paid on 248,249.

Mr. SPROULE. Are the immigrants from the United States included in that ?

Mr. SINCLAIR. I think so.

Mr. SPROULE. What calculation was made with regard to the bonuses on these immigrants? The government pay $3 a head on what they get from the States, but I suppose they are not included in that as bonus paid immigrants.

Mr. SINCLAIR. I am endeavouring to expose the fallacy that we have paid bonuses on all the immigrants who have come in. I do not wish the hon. gentleman to run away with the idea that when he finds a crazy man in some part of Ontario who happens to be a newcomer, we have paid a bonus on that man. Some of the crazy men he discovers in parts of Ontario are most likely men on whom we did not pay a bonus at all.

Mr. SPROULE. Is there a calculation showing that we have paid a bonus on the Americans or not? My understanding is that we paid $3 a head to the agent who gets them. If that is not a bonus, I do not know what is.

Mr. SINCLAIR. True we are paying a bonus of so much a head but only on certain classes and we have only paid on a very small proportion of the whole. What does the hon. gentleman want? Does he want to build a stone wall around the country and keep out these immigrants. The Department of the Interior is taking great care in the selection of immigrants. I have watched them arrive at the port of Quebec. Every man was examined by a doctor. I heard the questions asked as they went through the turnstile, and none were allowed to pass unless fit to pass examination. A large number were sent back and the greatest care was exercised by the officers of the department. What is the policy of my hon. friends opposite regarding immigrants or have they any policy at all? Do they condemn the policy of paying a small bonus of $5 on a farmer who will settle on our western land and help to defray the burden of taxation ? Do they remember that the debt of this country per head has been reduced by the fact that the policy of the Interior Department has been so vigorous. When they were in power the debt per head was $50, but because so many immigrants have come into the country, the debt per head to-day is only $42. Do my hon. friends remember that ? What is their policy I would like to know ? They have condemned the government, but I do not think they are justified in condemning the government for paying a small bonus of $5 for farmers who settle on the western land. Farmers are necessary out west to till the soil and so are navvies to build our railways. Then there is a great demand for female domestic servants. Our fellow citizens in British Columbia paid $400,000 into the revenue of the country to introduce Chinamen to do the domestic work of that province during the past year. That is the condition throughout Canada.

I do not think that my hon. friends, if they face this question squarely, will condemn the government for their present policy. The hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) said we did not get the right kind of immigrants. Well, we are paying $5 a head for every respectable farmer from Ireland who comes to this country. Are they the right class of immigrants ? I have heard it said that my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) claims to be of Irish descent. Does he object to immigrants coming from Ireland ? Are there no good men there ? Or what does he mean by condemning the payment of $5 a head for farmers from Ireland ?

Mr. SPROULE. I did not object to that. The hon. member (Mr. Sinclair) is merely setting up an argument of his own to answer it in his own way.

Mr. SINCLAIR. Is not the farmer from England all right ? The hon. gentleman dilated for a long time on the class of immigrants from London. Well, are we going to shut out a man from this country because he happened to be born in London ? The hon. gentleman says that we ought to be condemned for letting men come here from the cities. Well, if a man is so unfortunate as to be born in a city is he to be kept outside the borders of Canada ? Surely the hon. gentleman is not so narrow as that. But, what do these hon. gentlemen mean. I have listened to their speeches, but I fail to find out what their policy is. We are paying for immigrants from Germany. Does the hon. member for East Lambton (Mr. Armstrong) condemn that ? I think that if the question is looked at fairly, hon. gentlemen will change their minds concerning it.

Some hon. gentlemen opposite have spoken of the rural delivery of mail. I do not think that we in Canada are ready to adopt that policy. I am inclined to think that it would be too expensive. We have too many other things to do. Our people are very anxious to have transportation facilities, they are in need of railways, public works, of canals—of many things that are more important to them than receiving their letters and newspapers at their own door. This appears to be the policy of hon. gentlemen opposite, but it will be a very extravagant policy. They lecture us day after day on economy. But, if we introduce rural mail delivery, we must spend a great deal of money. It is estimated, I believe that it cost $30,000,000 in the United States. I do not think it could be done for anything less in a sparsely settled country like Canada. At any rate it will cost a great deal of money—perhaps $20,000,000. I do not think we can afford to spend $20,000,000 in the carrying of our mails. Of course, like everybody else, I am proud of the record our post office has made. When the Liberals came into power, as everybody will remember, the post office service was in a very backward condition. Like all the other departments, it had become a kind of political machine. Mail contracts were given to favourites of the late government. When Sir William Mulock took charge of the post office as a member of this government, hon. gentlemen will remember there was a deficit of $781,000. One of the first acts he performed was to cancel a large number of improvident mail contracts—perhaps I should use a stronger term than 'improvident.' However, he cancelled them and put the contracts up to tender, the result being that he saved on these contracts the sum of $103,000 a year. If you consider that these contracts run for four years you will see that he saved no less than $412,000. It will be remembered, as it was drawn to the attention of the House this winter, that a proposition was laid before the late government to reduce the postage from 3 cents to 2 cents. But Sir Adolphe Caron, then Postmaster General, said it would be impossible to do so. Here are his words :

> The government has no intention of reducing the rate of postage on letters. The loss of revenue would be $700,000.

It was only about three years after that that Sir Wm. Mulock took this step that was said to be impossible and made the reduction proposed. And we all know what the result was. He had deficits for the first two or three years and then he began to have surpluses. And if we look over the record for the last eleven years, every man must be proud of that record.

(1) Postal facilities have been provided for the Yukon and for a large number of new settlements in the west at very great cost.

(2) The number of letters increased from 116,028,000 in 1896 to 364,095,000 in 1907, an increase of 248,000,000. Of course there was also a large increase in the staff of the employees to handle all these letters.

(3) The annual mileage or travel of the mail has been increased by 12,254,211.

(4) New post offices to the number of 2,186 have been established.

(5) 7,941 money order and postal offices have been established.

(6) 298 new savings banks have been started.

(7) The increase in the amount of money transmitted by money orders and postal notes aggregated the enormous sum of $34,847,440.

(8) The number of savings bank depositors has doubled.

(9) The salaries of postmasters of smaller places have been increased from $12 to $35, and, of course, in the larger post offices large additions to the service have been made and paid for. Notwithstanding all this, last year, instead of a deficit of $781,000 as in 1896, we had a surplus of $1,011,965 for nine months. Estimating at the rate for the whole year, we should have a surplus of $1,349,020 But, to make a comparison, with 1896, we should add the old deficit, and this gives us a financial betterment of no less than $2,130,172. But even that is not all. By the reduction of the English postage from 5 cents to 2 cents, and the Canadian postage from 3 cents to 2 cents, we have saved another $1,000,000 which is in the pockets of the people of Canada. I say this is a record of which every Canadian ought to be proud, I do not care on which side of the house he is. There is one thing I want to suggest and I am glad that the Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux) is here, and that is that the surplus should be spent in improving the system. We cannot afford rural delivery of mails, but we can afford a great many more daily mails than we have at present.

Speaking for my own province, and in looking over the post office returns there are 96 post offices in the province of Nova Scotia that have only a weekly service. Now in this 20th century I think there should be no people in this country receiving a mail only once a week. There are a good many who receive only two mails a week, and a good many others who receive only three mails. As much as possible I think we ought to give to the people in the country districts a better mail service. My idea would be to spend the whole of the surplus in improving the service, in increasing the number of daily mails. That would be doing the greatest good to the greatest number. Our farmers and farmers' sons would be more content to live on the land if they were brought into closer touch with civilization by getting a mail every day. I trust therefore that the Postmaster General will take that matter into consideration, and that instead of piling up surpluses he will, as the member for North Toronto says, 'open the floodgates,' and let us have a larger number of daily mails throughout the country.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I am open to conviction.

Mr. SINCLAIR. While I am talking about the financial state of the country, I wish to refer to the fact that the Intercolonial has shown such a good year, I would not be properly representing the people of Nova Scotia if I did not show an interest in the success of that great railway. That Intercolonial Railway, like the post office during the time of the Conservative regime was also a political machine. In 1896 it had been allowed to depreciate, the rails were worn out the roadbed was bad, the rolling stock was bad, it was a second-class affair all round. It had no western terminus, it ended in a field opposite the city of Quebec. It could not be expected to get business. But this government pushed it forward to the great city of Montreal, to the centre of commercial life in this country, and they did it against the determined opposition of hon. gentlemen opposite. Hon. gentlemen opposite opposed that project, as they opposed every other progressive movement we have in this country for the last eleven years. They were not only opposed to that railway, but they were opposed to the railway through the Crow's Nest Pass, which has done a great deal for the development of the west. They were opposed to the Grand Trunk Pacific, which has broadened the habitable belt of this country and opened up an enormous district in the west. Nearly everybody in Canada is in favour of the Grand Trunk Pacific to-day. But the record of these gentlemen is that they were not only opposed to the Intercolonial coming to Montreal, but they have been opposed to every progressive movement to improve transportation which has been made by this government for the last eleven years. Now I was pointing out that this road had no western terminus. But this government provided one, the old 56-pound rails were taken up and replaced by 80 pound rails; better roadbed was made, new rolling stock was obtained, fine large engines were purchased, bridges were made and strengthened and built of steel, and we have now a splendid railway running down through the maritime provinces. We have some of the best trains you will find on the American continent; I do not think there is a better train anywhere on this continent than the Maritime Express. Not only in the passenger service but in every service a great improvement has been made. Under the old system that existed in those lonesome eighteen years that we all deplore, when you shipped freight on board the Intercolonial you did not know when it would reach Montreal. Sometimes it was for weeks on the way. At present, we have a schedule train called the fast freight, that leaves Halifax and Sidney at a certain hour in the day, and arrives in Montreal under schedule time. It takes about 60 hours I think from Halifax to Montreal. But you are sure when you put your freight aboard that train that it will reach its destination in fair time. That train has done a great deal for the development of the industries of Eastern Canada; it has done a great deal for the fishing industry, because we are now certain that when we put a crate of fresh fish on board that train it will get through in proper time, whereas we could not be certain under the old system. Improvements of that kind have been made, and the Intercolonial to-day is a credit to the people of Canada.

But the Intercolonial is not perfect any more than the post office, and I have this criticism to make, that it has not done enough to develop traffic and to reach the outlying districts along the route, that it has not done enough to work up traffic by acquiring branch lines, and by building branch lines to places where traffic can be secured. The Intercolonial is a great artery passing through the country but has no veins to feed it. No government that has existed so far have adopted the policy of building branch lines. You would scarcely believe it, that in the province of Nova Scotia, one of the oldest provinces in Canada, there is a district lying east of the city of Halifax, about 150 miles in length and forty miles in width, with about 40,000 of a population, with great resources of timber, a good agricultural country, a mining country, with large fishing resources, and that for thirty years this Intercolonial Railway has been skirting the northern border of that district, and I do not think they have ever sent an engineer into that district to explore it, and to see if it were possible to work up a traffic by building a branch into it. That was the policy of the Intercolonial under the past government and so far it is the policy under this government. So far we have not squarely faced the question of building branch lines. I trust that we will, I know that everything cannot be done at once. My hon. friends opposite are on the wrong side of that question also; because a few days ago my hon. friend from South Lanark (Mr. Haggart), who is the railway authority that hon. gentlemen opposite follow, said that the capital expenditure on the Intercolonial must stop. Now, Sir, I presume that is the policy of hon. gentlemen opposite, that they are following their leader in that as in other matters, and that if they were in power they would not spend another dollar on capital expenditure for the Intercolonial Railway. That means that we can never acquire any of the existing branch lines, that we can never build branch lines, for we cannot build them out of ordinary revenue as everybody knows. That seems to be the policy of hon. gentlemen opposite, and is the same kind of policy that I have described in regard to the other railway and transportation proposals in this country. They are on the wrong side of that question as they have been on the wrong side of all the other progressive movements that have been made. I trust, however, that the government will take that matter up, that they will look at it carefully, and see where there are places that traffic could be worked up and where branch lines could properly and successfully be built, so that they may make of the Intercolonial, not only in name but in reality, the road of the people of Canada.

My hon. friends opposite have been condemning us for the expenditure. Now, Sir, it is true that we have spent a good deal of money during the the past eleven years. That question has been settled by the people on two or three different occasions. You will remember, Sir, that in the election of 1900 we were condemned for this expenditure and we were returned by a very large majority when the people had pronounced their verdict. In the election of 1904 hon. gentlemen opposite, with the defeated candidates, who are so numerous among their friends, spoke in every hall and school house and from every platform in Canada condemning this government for their large expenditure, but when the people marked their ballots you know what the verdict was. My judgment is that the people want expenditure, that they are anxious to have it and hon. gentlemen opposite, with the propositions they make from day to day, such as rural mail delivery, the building of tunnels and the building of this and that, although they condemn the government for doing these things, in their moments of weakness they seem to be in favour of large expenditure themselves. At all events, they have voted for most of these expenditures and they are now condemning the government for them. Not only are the people satisfied with these expenditures, but they are proud of the fact that this government has been able to expend so much money without putting the country in debt. The people are very much impressed with the fact that while the government have spent a large amount of money on capital account they have been able to do this out of ordinary revenue.

Mr. BOYCE. The Grand Trunk Pacific, for instance.

Mr. SINCLAIR. As my hon. friend has reminded me of the Grand Trunk Pacific, I would like to speak of that for a moment. We are proposing to spend this year $30,000,000 on the Grand Trunk Pacific. We are proposing to borrow only $12,000,000 of that amount. Do my hon. friends think that is a very bad record? When we went into the building of the Grand Trunk Pacific we expected to borrow the whole of the money. We were not aware that we would have a surplus with which to build any part of the road, but instead of borrowing this money we are going to be able to build a large portion of this road out of ordinary revenue. We are going to be able to invest $18,000,000 out of the ordinary revenue of the country in a permanent investment—not a debt at all—but an investment of our money that will bring the people 3 per cent for all time to come. Are my hon. friends not satisfied with that? Three per cent on $18,000,000 will bring over $500,000. We are making an investment that will put half a million dollars each year into the treasury of Canada for all time to come. When the youngest man opposite has reached his hundredth year, if he lives to be a hundred, the sum of half a million dollars will be paid into the treasury of Canada for the ordinary revenue of the country on account of the investment that we are making this year. Surely they ought to be satisfied with an expenditure of $30,000,000 and a borrowing of only $12,000,000. Yet they cry out about the terrible thing that we are doing. We expect to have a fair return from that investment, not only a return in interest, but a larger return in the development of the country. I am surprised that hon. gentlemen do not get converted on that question. I could say a good deal, if I had the time, about the question of expenditure. I could point out that certain services of the country were very much neglected in the time of hon. gentlemen opposite, for example, public works on the coast of Nova Scotia. There was very little attention paid to that class of expenditures in the time of hon. gentlemen opposite. The hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) laid down the policy of hon. gentlemen opposite in regard to that question when he said that these little places on the coast of Nova Scotia should not receive any consideration at the hands of the government, but that we ought to expend our money in the larger places, in the big places like Toronto. Those were the places where the Dominion government ought to spend their money and they should allow the people who live in the little places to go without such public works, or construct them at their own expense.

Mr. FOWLER. I would like to ask my hon. friend when and where the hon. member for North Toronto ever said that?

Mr. SINCLAIR. In a speech on the 6th day of July, 1905, which my hon. friend will find in 'Hansard,' page 8926. The hon. member for North Toronto, in discussing these expenditures, said:

> I never knew that it would be possible to find in the province of Nova Scotia, for instance, the names of so many places where wharfs and breakwaters and piers could possibly be built, as I find in the estimate which has been placed before us this year. All geography needs to be revised, all knowledge by the most liberal-minded and best travelled has to be extended in order to grasp the almost infinite number of little places in the province of Nova Scotia where large expenditures are made, and I am bound to say, out of nine-tenths of which no corresponding revenue at all comes to this country.

Then, a little further on he makes this statement:

> The expenditure is going up millions and millions every year, this government usurping enterprises which ought to be carried out by individuals, by corporations, by municipalities and by provinces. It is a nice thing for the provinces, but it is a demoralizing thing to the country as a whole.

Mr. FOWLER. It does not bear out the statement that the hon. gentleman made.

Mr. SINCLAIR. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that it does.

Mr. FOWLER. Absolutely, no. There is not a word about Toronto in connection with it.

Mr. SINCLAIR. My hon. friend was talking about the construction of wharfs and public works on the coast of Nova Scotia and he made the statement in effect that the government should not undertake these works at all in the little places, but that they should be built by the municipalities and provinces, meaning that if the fishermen in these places along the coast of Nova Scotia wanted public wharfs or breakwaters built, they must tax themselves for them, while the larger places like the city of Toronto are to get all the money that is to be spent for public works by this government. While the hon. gentleman was condemning the expenditure on the coast of Nova Scotia there was before the House at that very time a very large expenditure for a public work in the city of Toronto and he did not raise his voice against it. That was allowed to go through; but if it is proposed to build a little wharf for the protection of fishermen and for the use of the fishing industry on the coast of Nova Scotia he condemns it. What does he mean, when he refers to an infinite number of little places? Does he mean that those little places should have these wharfs or does he mean that they should not have them? I think if the hon. member for King's (Mr. Fowler) will analyze that speech of his leader from North Toronto, he will find that he is opposed to these expenditures for wharfs and breakwaters on the coast of his own province as well as on the coast of Nova Scotia. That seems to be the policy of the hon. gentlemen opposite, but it is not the policy that will be acceptable to the people of the country. The people of Canada are prepared to develop not only the west but the older provinces as well. We have a good country in the east, we are doing to-day everything in our power to develop the industries and the resources that we have in the east as well as in the west, and if hon. gentlemen opposite would take an enlightened view of this question, if they would look at it as we look at it on this side, they would support us in these expenditures instead of condemning us year after year. I could continue this argument at greater length if the hon. gentleman desires me to do so, but I think I have satisfied him that his party have been on the wrong side of this question, as they have been on the wrong side of the transportation question.

Mr. BOYCE. On the wrong side of the House.

Mr. FIELDING. That is what keeps them there.

Mr. SINCLAIR. I do not care to make invidious comparisons between expenditures in one place and in another but when the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) stated that the little places on the coast of Nova Scotia, where this government is building public works, should not receive these benefits.

Mr. BOYCE. The hon. member never made that statement.

Mr. SINCLAIR. He condemned the building of these wharfs and breakwaters on the coast of Nova Scotia—I do not think that is putting it too strongly. I had the curiosity to look up what he did in this respect when he was a minister himself. I selected for comparison the public works in the city of Toronto and on the coast of Nova Scotia, and I find that the expenditures by the late government for the years from 1885 to 1894 inclusive, were as follows:

	Harbours and rivers Nova Scotia.	Toronto Public Works.
1885..	$ 14,050	$ 21,328
1886..	95,400	23,400
1887..	208,162	66,850
1888..	60,450	117,575

This shows that when my hon. friend was a minister he spent nearly as much in public works in that one city as he did for wharfs, breakwaters and improvements on the whole coast of Nova Scotia. It will be noticed in this list that the large expenditures are in 1887 and 1891. Perhaps my hon. friend from Hamilton will know why the expenditures in Nova Scotia were so large in those particular years? Perhaps he will tell us? In 1887 the comparatively large amount of $208,162 was spent on the coast of Nova Scotia; whereas in 1885, two years before, only $14,050 was spent, showing that during the year of the election in 1887, my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) increased the expenditure by 1,500 per cent above what it was two years before, and in the year 1891, he increased it 200 per cent above what it was in 1889. What does that mean? My hon. friend is always very fond of percentages, and it is an extraordinary circumstance that in the year of the election 1887, he should have increased the expenditure on the coast of Nova Scotia by 1,500 per cent compared with what it was two years before. This is the hon. gentleman who lectures us, who day after day turns up the whites of his eyes and lectures the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance on buying the people of Canada with their own money. I could hardly believe that when he was Minister of Finance he would open the flood gates in that way during the election years. Surely it was not done in the public interest? He is always asking if these expenditures by this government were made in the public interest. Was it in the public interest to increase the expenditure by 1,500 per cent in the year of the election, or was it done in a moment of weakness?

Mr. BOYCE. Would the hon. member point to any expenditure made at that time which was not in the public interest?

Mr. SINCLAIR. Certainly not. I think they were in the public interest ; the trouble was there were not enough of them.

Mr. FIELDING. If there had not been an occasional election we would never have got anything.

Mr. SINCLAIR. Even the election in the county I represent did not bring any money because we had a habit of sending members here to support the Liberal opposition and during fourteen out of the eighteen years there was no money at all spent in my county. Expenditures were made in certain other portions of Nova Scotia ; lighthouses, breakwaters and improvements of that kind were required in Guysborough but no expenditures were made although eloquent appeals were made by Mr. Fraser and Mr. Kirk, my predecessors. No money was granted and we were told by a minister of the Crown who visited us on one occasion that if we wanted any money we must vote for the government. We were told very plainly by a late Minister of Public Works that that was the only way we could get any money for expenditures in Guysborough. But we chose to support the Liberal opposition and continued to do so during the whole period. We are there still at the old stand, and will continue to support the same party in the next election.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. SINCLAIR. My hon. friends are cheering. I tell them it is a fact, that it would be very difficult to return even one Conservative in Nova Scotia if the elections were to come on now. The hon. member for Colchester (Mr. Stanfield) looks a little alarmed at that, but I think that even the people of Colchester will be of the same opinion as ourselves and will say that the present government is good enough for Nova Scotia.

Mr. BLAIN. New Brunswick is down in the east.

Motion agreed to and House went into Committee of Supply.

Progress reported.

Mr. FIELDING moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. BLAIN. What business will be taken up on Monday ?

Mr. FIELDING. I understand there was an agreement between the Prime Minister and the hon. member for Jacques Cartier, that a motion which my hon. friends of the opposition will make will come up then. In supply, the estimates of the Minister of Public Works will be considered.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 1.05 a.m. Saturday.

Mr. BOYCE.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, April 13, 1908.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

TREATY WITH UNITED STATES RE BOUNDARY AND FISHERIES.

Mr. SPROULE. I would call the attention of the right hon. the First Minister to the following paragraph which appears in this morning's 'Citizen' :

Washington, April 11.—Secretary of State Root and British Ambassador Bryce to-day signed two treaties negotiated recently between the United States and Great Britain One provides for a commission to determine the boundary between the United States and Canada and the other regulates fishing in the great lakes and contiguous streams. The boundary commission will be charged with the work of resurveying certain sections of boundary line and determining disputed questions in that connection. It is said that the fishery question also is placed in the hands of a commission by the terms of the treaty.

Are the government in a position to give the House information ? Have they any control over the appointment of the commissioners or over their selection, especially on behalf of Canada?

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). I have just received a telegram stating that these two treaties have been signed. One refers to the boundary. It is not contemplated to establish new boundaries but simply mark again the boundaries and describe them on maps. The second deals with the fisheries. In the contiguous waters, we have had difficulties for many years owing to there being a close season on our side and none on the American side. By the treaty all contiguous waters will be put under a commission which will make regulations for the fisheries. The appointments on the British side exclusively belong to the government of Canada.

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier). I would like to ask the government if it will lay upon the table the two agreements which have been concluded between Great Britain and the United States and the correspondence connected therewith. I see in this morning's Montreal 'Gazette' a reproduction of a despatch to the New York 'Herald' making a rather long reference, which I will not read, to Canada's attitude. This despatch is from London to the New York 'Herald' and dated about 12th April. There must be considerable correspondence, and there are also the two agreements. May we expect that these will be laid on the table ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It goes as a matter of course that, as soon as the ratifications of the treaties have been exchanged and we have received them, they will be communicated to the House, as well as the correspondence. I have not seen the articles to which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk) refers, but I have seen articles in the American press to the effect that there are some other questions as to which negotiations are pending. Of course, this correspondence cannot be brought down until the matter is concluded.

MARINE AND FISHERIES DEPARTMENT.

Mr. FOWLER. I wish to draw the attention of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) to the alleged misconduct of one of the officers——

Mr. SPEAKER. It is not proper to introduce matter for discussion at this point.

DREDGING CONTRACTS.

Mr. W. H. BENNETT (East Simcoe). May I ask the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) if the appropriation to be voted this year at Midland and Tiffin harbours for improvements—which I take it is dredging—amount $75,000, and Victoria harbour, $75,000, has been given to two companies known as the Canadian Construction Company and the Owen Sound Dredging Company, without tenders being asked for?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works). Certain dredging work, which would form part of these improvements, was let last year by public tender, and by the terms of the contract the time for the completion of the work is to be fixed by the minister. The question of giving until the close of the present season for the doing of the work is under consideration. The matter will be decided in a few days.

Mr. BENNETT. Are any tenders to be called for the work to be done at either point during the coming season, or are those companies to proceed at the commencement of navigation with the work to be done there ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. If I exercise the power which is contained in the contract of fixing the time during the present season, either at the close of navigation, or earlier, new tenders will not be called for and the prices will be determined by the tenders called for in the early part of last season.

Mr. BENNETT. Has an order in council been passed to this effect ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. An order has been passed authorizing the Minister of Public Works to fix the time if he sees fit to do so.

Mr. BENNETT. Will the hon. gentleman lay a copy of the order on the table tomorrow, as I propose to make some remarks on going into Supply ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I will be glad to do so.

Mr. SPROULE. Is it the intention to give dredging at other places without calling for tenders and for the same schedule prices as last year ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The matter is under consideration. I have had a very strong report made by the chief engineer of my department, stating that, in quite a number of cases, where the prices were obtained fixed by competition after public advertisement, and in which he certifies that they are reasonable and that the contractors are equipped with complete plants for doing the work, it would be in the public interest to fix a period during the coming season for the completion of the work. The matter is under consideration with regard to a number of cases.

Mr. BOYCE. Are there any other cases mentioned in the order in council besides the two spoken of by the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The order in council will speak for itself when it comes down.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I have a letter from a dredging firm wanting to know if works in Lake Ontario will be let by tender as well. Is the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) in a position to give any information on that point at the present time ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think I can only repeat the statement that the order in council when it comes down, will show.

Mr. BENNETT. In this connection, will the minister be good enough to bring down the report of the chief engineer, as well as the order in council ?

DISTRIBUTION OF SEED GRAIN.

Mr. HAUGHTON LENNOX (South Simcoe). I desire to call the attention of the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) to an item that appeared in the Toronto 'Globe' of Saturday last.

Mr. SPEAKER. Is this with the intention of asking a question ?

Mr. LENNOX. Yes. The item reads as follows :

An order in council has been passed relating to the distribution of seed grain in the Northwest by permitting advances to be made to settlers who have sown no grain in the season of 1907?

I would like to ask the minister if such an order in council has been passed as is here referred to and, if so, under what authority it was made ?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). There was an order in council of the nature of which my hon. friend (Mr. Lennox) speaks. It was passed under the same authority as the regulations providing for the distribution of seed grain which were brought before parliament and discussed here, as the House will remember. At that time the view was very generally expressed that it was not desirable that the distribution should be restricted in this particular as it was restricted in the regulations as they were brought before the House. I explained at that time that it was thought desirable that we should not then expand them, but that, if circumstances afterwards, should seem to justify it, we might do so. Finding that the requirements were not as large as we had anticipated, finding that our purchases were sufficient to cover such requirements as might be made, such as are mentioned in this order in council, we thought we should be acting in the public interest, and, as well, carrying out the views of parliament, by passing the order in question.

Mr. LENNOX. If I may be permitted, I would ask leave to call the attention of the minister to the fact—as I remember—that he refused, at that time, to expand the resolution, and the statute was founded on the resolution as originally introduced without alteration, that is, without providing for these cases now arising.

Mr. OLIVER. Precisely. The statute, of course, provided a certain amount of money. Had the requirements been of a greater amount of money than the statute provided the case would have been different. But as the statute provided that the seed should be distributed according to the regulations passed by the government, and agreed to by the provinces ; and, within the terms of that statute, we believed, this order could be passed.

Mr. LENNOX. And the order provided to whom it would go——

Mr. SPEAKER. I would call again the attention of the House to this custom of reading newspapers and from questions drifting into discussion. This is a clear violation of the rules of the House, and I shall have to rule much more strictly if this is continued.

Mr. A. C. BOYCE. Has application been received by the department for assistance to people in northwestern Ontario—Algoma for instance ? And, if so, is it the intention of the minister, or is it under consideration, to give assistance to people in that section similar to that to be extended people in the Northwest provinces ?

Mr. OLIVER. My memory is that I did receive a communication from some part of northwestern Ontario on the subject of seed grain. My reply was that the conditions were not similar to those existing in the western country, as, in the first place, so far as homesteaders were concerned, the Dominion government had no obligation in regard to the homesteaders in Ontario as it had in regard to the homesteaders in the three western provinces, and, in regard to those who were not homesteaders, as our action in the western provinces was in co-operation with the provincial governments, and, as there was no co-operation with the government of Ontario, the cases were not similar.

CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION REPORT.

Mr. J. G. H. BERGERON (Beauharnois). I desire to ask the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) with regard to a matter which, so far as I know, has not been fully answered. Last Thursday, the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) asked if Judge Cassels would soon commence his investigation, and if he was appointed to investigate any wrong-doing in any of the departments. To this the right hon. gentleman answered that Judge Cassels had been appointed, but he did not know when the judge would commence his investigations. Another question was asked whether a departmental investigation was going on in the meantime, to which he replied that he could not say. The same question was put the next day, Friday, at a time when the right hon. Prime Minister was not in the House, but the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) said he would call the attention of the right hon. gentleman to the matter when he came in. I cannot find any record showing that the matter was called to his attention or that he answered the question. Is any departmental investigation, under oath, going on in the Department of Marine and Fisheries ?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). I stated that I was investigating certain matters brought to my attention, but, of course, the investigation cannot be under oath because I have no authority to swear witnesses. I am making the investigation for my own satisfaction.

Mr. BERGERON. But there is an investigation going on ?

Mr. BRODEUR. I am investigating for my own satisfaction, the facts which come to my knowledge every day.

4. Have proceedings, fines or penalties of any kind been taken against or imposed upon certain persons found in possession of adulterated syrup or sugar?

CONCRETE PIPE FOR INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY.

Mr. ARMSTRONG asked :

Are tenders for concrete pipe asked for on the Intercolonial Railway at Moncton? If so, what are the dates of the last two tenders, to whom were they granted, the amount of goods purchased, and the cost of same?

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals) :

1. Yes. June 6, 1907, and March 6, 1908. The first contract was given to the Dominion Concrete Company of Kemptville, Ontario, for the following quantities and the price set opposite each :

NATIONAL TRANSCONTINENTAL RAILWAY—PROTESTS RE LANDS.

Mr. BARKER asked:

1. Has either the government or the National Transcontinental Railway Commission received from the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company or the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada, or from any person on behalf of either such company, any protests or objections respecting the acquisition of lands for the eastern division of the National Transcontinental Railway, or as to the cost thereof, or respecting any works of construction upon the said division, or as to the cost thereof?

2. What was the nature of such protests or objections, if any?

3. Have all such protests or objections, if any, been finally disposed of and settled?

4. If not disposed of and settled, has any and what arrangement been made to postpone or suspend the matters involved?

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals). As to the first part of the question, no; or as to the cost thereof, no. As to the third part of the question no dispute has arisen as to any work of construction. Mr. H. A. Woods, assistant chief engineer of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway, by a letter dated October 7, 1907, objected to the classification, as to grading material on certain portions of the work in district 'B.' The matter was investigated by the chief engineer of the commissioners, who gave his ruling as to the interpretation of the clauses of the specifications relating to the classification; and Mr. Woods' objections were found not to be correct. Nothing further has been heard by the commissioners of such objections.

WRECK OF TUG 'CASTLE.'

Mr. BENNETT asked:

1. Were tenders invited for the removal of the wreck of the tug 'Castle,' sunk in the Detroit River?
2. If invited, how many were received, and what were the figures of each?
3. If more than one tender, was the lowest accepted?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries):

1. Yes.
2. Two. The Midland Towing and Wrecking Company, Midland, Ontario, $1,750; Eug. Lamontagne, Quebec, $8,750.
3. Yes.

PIERS IN ST. FRANCIS RIVER, RICHMOND.

Mr. BLAIN asked:

1. What was the total cost of the building of piers in the St. Francis river below the town of Richmond?
2. What was the total cost of piers above the town?
3. What was the cost of repairing the piers below the town in 1907?
4. What was the cost of blasting rock and repairs to piers during the present year?
5. Was the work so done let by contract or by public tender?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works). Questions 10 and 11 relate to the same work. I am getting the information, and I will have it to-morrow. I would call my hon. friend's attention to the fifth part of question 11: 'Was the work so done let by contract or by public tender?' I am not quite sure what he means. Does he mean by days work or by public tender?

Mr. BLAIN. That is a misprint.

Mr. PUGSLEY. What should it be?

Mr. BLAIN. Was the work so done let after public tender.

POSTMASTER AT RUSAGORNIS.

Mr. WILMOT asked:

1. Does the government know that it is stated Mr. Albry Brass, postmaster at Rusagornis, Sunbury county, New Brunswick, was an active political partisan in the Dominion election, 1904, also in the late provincial election in New Brunswick; that he was a nominee of one of the candidates at the latter election, and that the post office is used for political meetings?
2. If upon investigation it is found the above inquiries are substantiated, will the present incumbent be retained in office?
3. What is the government policy in regard to postmasters engaging in the active work of political contests?

Hon. R. LEMIEUX (Postmaster General):

1. No.
2. If charges are made against the postmaster, they will be investigated and a decision come to on the facts.
3. The government discourages postmasters engaging in active work of political contests; if they do so, they are aware they do so at their own risk.

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND RAILWAY—STATION AT ALMA.

Mr. LEFURGEY—by Mr. Blain—asked:

Has any petition been received for the building of a station at Alma, on the Prince Edward Island Railway? If so, when, and what is the intention of the government in regard thereto?

Hon. G. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals). Yes, a petition was received by the Department of Railways in February last. The matter is now under consideration.

JAPANESE IMMIGRATION.

Mr. RALPH SMITH asked:

1. What number of provincial Acts in all the provinces have been disallowed by the Dominion government since January, 1904, to January, 1908, and in what provinces, respectively?
2. What was the title and date of each enactment of each Bill?
3. What were the reasons given for such disallowance?
4. What number of petitions have been received from British Columbia for or against the disallowance of provincial Bills enacted by the above legislature, and by whom were such petitions presented?

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH (Minister of Justice):

1. Five; all Acts of British Columbia.

2.

Act.	Chapter.	Title.
3 and 4 Edw. VII.....	26.....	An Act to regulate immigration into British Columbia.
5 Edw. VII...	67 or 28...	An Act to regulate immigration into British Columbia.
	81 or 30...	An Act relating to the employment on work carried on under franchises granted by Private Acts.
	85 or 36...	An Act further to amend the Coal Mines Regulation Act ....
	18...	An Act further to amend the Supreme Court Act..

3. The first four statutes were re-enactments of statutes which had been previously disallowed and were allowed for the same reasons as had been given for previous disallowances. See Reports on Legislation for years 1899-1900, pp. 135 and 144, Reports on Legislation, 1901-1903, pp. 80 and 88, and Reports on Legislation, 1904-1906, pp. 130 and 137.

The Act to amend the Supreme Court Act was disallowed because it purported to limit the scope for the selection of judges appointed by His Excellency the Governor General.

4. Two petitions in connection with the disallowance of provincial Acts were received from British Columbia within the time stated; one from the Esquimalt and Nanaimo Railway Company and one from the city of Vancouver. (Vide Reports on Provincial Legislation 1904-1906 pp. 120 and 126).

NATIONAL TRANSCONTINENTAL RAILWAY.

Mr. MONK asked:

1. How many miles of the National Transcontinental Railway, Winnipeg to Moncton division, have been actually completed within the limits of the province of Quebec?
2. Where are the said completed sections situated?
3. How much has been expended to date on said completed sections?
4. Are there any parts of said completed sections in actual operation?
5. Are there any parts of said National Transcontinental Railway, Winnipeg to Moncton division, within the limits of the province of Quebec, under contract for construction? If so, what parts?

Hon. G. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals):

1, 2, 3 and 4. No portion of the Transcontinental Railway, within the limits of the province of Quebec has been actually completed.

5. That portion of the entire line within the limits of the province of Quebec, from a point known as Weymontachene, about 196·33 miles west of the Quebec bridge, easterly to the boundary between the province of Quebec and New Brunswick, is under contract.

REGULATIONS CONCERNING THE LOBSTER FISHERY.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN—by Mr. Blain—asked:

1. Has the government received any communication from the Fishermen's Union of Nova Scotia, or from Mr. Bernard Cummings, Secretary of that union, containing suggestions or requests as to alterations in the regulations concerning the lobster fishery?
2. What is the nature and purport of such requests or suggestions, and when were they received?
3. Has the government given any reply or come to any conclusion in respect to the suggestions or requests?
4. What is the policy of the government in respect to the matters referred to in the above-mentioned communications?
5. Will the government lay copies of all the papers upon the table of the House?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries):

1. Yes.
2. That the size limit for lobsters in Cape Breton be reduced, Mr. Cummings' letter is dated March 12, 1908.
3. A reply was sent to Mr. Cummings on March 18.
4. The whole question of the lobster fishery regulations is under consideration.
5. Yes.

STATUTES OF THE PROVINCE OF SASKATCHEWAN.

Mr. LAVERGNE asked: (Translation).

1. Is the government aware that Chapters 2 and 25 of the Statutes of the province of Saskatchewan, 1907, respectively, "An Act for raising money on the credit of General Revenue Fund of Saskatchewan", and "An Act to provide for the organization and maintenance of Secondary Educational Institutions", contain provisions contrary to the Educational Clause of the Act establishing the province of Saskatchewan, 1907.
2. Is the government aware that the delay for the disallowance of these Acts expires on the 22nd April next?
3. Does the government intend disallowing these Acts?

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH (Minister of Justice):

1. No.
2. Yes.
3. No.

PURCHASES OF LEE-ENFIELD RIFLES.

Mr. WORTHINGTON asked:

1. How many Lee-Enfield rifles has the government?

2. What are the dates of purchase of these rifles by this or any other government, and in what lots or from whom were they bought?

3. What prices were paid?

4. What was the cost of the bayonets for the Lee-Enfield rifle?

5. In what lots were they bought, from whom, and on what dates?

Hon. Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia and Defence) :

1. About 37,000. The South African contingents were allowed to retain their rifles, thus accounting for the difference between this and the original number purchased.

2. On March 4, 1896, 40,000 magazine Lee-Enfield rifles, Mark I, complete, were purchased by the Canadian government from the War Office. They were supplied as follows :

(a) From Royal Small Arms Factories, 18,850.

(b) From Birmingham Small Arms and Metal Company, 13,000.

(c) From London Small Arms Company, 8,150.

Nothing is known of the purchase of rifles by any other government than the Canadian government.

3. The net prices, at the factories, including a charge for War Office departmental expenses, were:

(a) For rifle complete, from Royal Small Arms Factories, £3 1s. 9d.

(b) For rifle complete from the trade, £4 4s. 5d.

The cost of each rifle complete, laid down in Canada, exclusive of duty, was:

(a) For rifles supplied from Royal Small Arms Factories, $15.75.

(b) For rifles supplied by the trade, $21.25.

The English War Office list price for the present magazine Lee-Enfield rifle is £4 5s. net, making the cost laid down in Canada, $27 for each rifle.

4. The net prices at the factories, including a charge for War Office departmental expenses, were:

(a) For bayonets with scabbards, complete from Royal Small Arms Factories, 10s. 3d.

(b) For bayonets with scabbards complete, from trade, 13s. 11d.

The cost, laid down in Canada, exclusive of duty, was :

(a) For those supplied from Royal Small Arms Factories, $2.60.

(b) For those supplied by the trade, $3.53.

The present War Office list price for bayonets with scabbards complete, is 13s. 6½d., net, at the factories; making the cost laid down in Canada, $4.10 each, as against $2.60 in 1896. These War Office prices do not include trade charges or profit.

5. On March 4, 1896, 40,000 bayonets complete were purchased from the War Office. They were supplied as follows:

(a) From Royal Small Arms Factories, bayonets, complete, 20,000.

(b) From Saunderson Bros. & Co., bayonets, 20,000.

(c) From Allan Cooper, scabbards, 20,000.

6. Col. Lake, who made these purchases on behalf of the Canadian government, reported, in regard to the arms purchased by the War Office from the trade, as follows:

'The War Office took into consideration this large order when concluding its contracts, just then under revision, with the trade, for the manufacture of magazine rifles; and as a consequence of this revision of contracts, the prices of those stores were very much lower than the list prices upon which my estimates had been based.

The prices for the arms manufactured in the government factories were also unusually low in consideration of a part payment having been made in advance.

The prices obtained were thus much lower than usual, principally owing to the accident of the order having been received by the War Office when the War Office contracts with the trade were being revised. This revision was found necessary because the former price had included some provision for the payment of the contractors' initial expenditures for plant, machinery, etc.; and it was considered that this initial expenditure had by that time been paid for.

CONSTRUCTION OF FORTIFICATIONS.

Mr. WORTHINGTON asked :

1. Are any fortifications in course of construction at or near Quebec or Lévis?

2. What is the nature of these fortifications?

3. Are they being constructed by the British or Canadian government?

4. What is the estimated cost to be, and when will they be completed?

5. Is the construction being done by contract or by day labour?

6. If by contract, to whom has such contract been let?

7. Who is in charge of construction?

8. With what guns is it intended to arm these fortifications?

9. What is the date of their purchase, their manufacture, their calibre, and their range?

10. When were these guns bought?

11. Did any one act as purchasing agent for the government in the purchase of these? If so, who?

Hon. Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia and Defence). I hope this question will be dropped. It is not a question, I think, that would ever be put in any parliament in any country, certainly not in England or in the United States. If the leader of the opposition desires information as to the construction of fortifications that information will be given to him at any time.

Mr. SPEAKER. Dropped.

MEDICAL OFFICER AT CANSO.

Mr. STANFIELD asked :

Has the Port of Canso a special medical officer to look after infectious diseases? If so, who is the officer, when was he appointed, and what is his salary?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (for Minister of Agriculture). The Department of Agriculture, which has care of infectious diseases, states that there is no such officer at Canso.

SUPPLY—STATUTES OF THE PROVINCE OF SASKATCHEWAN.

Mr. FIELDING moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. A. LAVERGNE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to give notice to the government that upon the next day upon which the motion is made for the House to resolve itself into Committee of Supply I shall discuss the legislation of the province of Saskatchewan about which I have put a question to-day.

INTERFERENCE IN ELECTIONS.

Mr. G. W. FOWLER (Kings, N.B.). Mr. Speaker, I wish to call the attention of the government to the fact that some of their officers in the city of Halifax are taking undue and improper interest in an election to the neglect of the duties for which they are appointed and for which they are being paid by this country. It seems that at the present time there is a civic election going on in Halifax and that Dr. A. C. Hawkins is a candidate for mayor. This Dr. A. C. Hawkins is also the health officer at the port of Halifax, for which he receives a salary of $1,000 a year, together with a couple of very nice uniforms covered with gold lace, an overcoat and two or three hats and caps. He has also called to his assistance in this civic campaign a number of other officers of the government, notably one E. M. Wilson, foreman of the car cleaners at the North street station, and one Albert Tobin, of the round house staff at Richmond. I would call the attention of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Graham) to this fact. There is also one Wm. Merlin, of the Department of Marine and Fisheries.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Merwin ?

Mr. FOWLER. Not Merwin, but Merlin, the enchanter. There is also one Geo. McNamara, of the Department of Marine and Fisheries. These people are taking a very active interest in the election, and I believe that so intense is the devotion of Dr. Hawkins to his campaign that a ship with a thousand immigrants has been held at quarantine—delayed—because this gentleman is canvassing for the position of mayor of the city of Halifax rather than attending to the duty for which he is paid. I think this is a matter of very great importance, and in view of the declarations that have been made by the various ministers in regard to public officials taking part in elections some severe examples should be made of these gentlemen.

Mr. SPROULE. We should have some explanation from the Minister of Railways, particularly as a similar matter has been brought to his attention two or three times this session already. Surely the minister is going to take some action. Is he going to treat with contempt the circular which was issued by Mr. Pottinger and which said that employees of the Intercolonial Railway should not as a general thing run for municipal office.

Mr. EMMERSON. That is different.

Mr. SPROULE. In what respect?

Mr. GRAHAM. There is no suggestion in this case that an Intercolonial Railway official is running for office.

Mr. SPROULE. I understand that some of these are Intercolonial Railway employees.

Mr. GRAHAM. No. It is merely stated that he is calling to his aid some men to help him. These men are citizens and I suppose they have the right to vote.

Mr. SPROULE. They are employees of the Intercolonial Railway who are doing partisan work in connection with municipal affairs .

Mr. FIELDING. What is there partisan about it?

Mr. SPROULE. There is this : An employee of the Intercolonial Railway goes into the shops and threatens the men if they do not vote so and so. That is partisan work.

Mr. GRAHAM. That never was suggested.

Mr. FIELDING. Who says that ?

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. member who took his seat.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. SPROULE. In my opinion he has a letter in his hand which specifies that.

Mr. FIELDING. He may, but he did not say so.

Mr. SPROULE. Is this quarantine doctor to be allowed to employ his time, for which he is paid by the country, in canvassing for the position of mayor and leave a vessel detained outside the harbour with 1,000 immigrants and no one to attend to them. Has the Prime Minister nothing to say about that ? The Minister of Railways laughs as though it were an amusing thing.

Mr. GRAHAM. It is, very.

Mr. SPROULE. What is there amusing about it ?

Mr. GRAHAM. The amusement is that my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) is lecturing me while he is discussing the acts of an official who does not belong to my department at all.

Mr. SPROULE. I was speaking about employees of the Intercolonial.

Mr. GRAHAM. They are not candidates.

Mr. SPROULE. They are canvassers, and partisan canvassers at that, and they are deliberately violating the rule laid down by the Prime Minister a few years ago.

Mr. EMMERSON. Is this doctor a Grit or a Tory.

Mr. SPROULE. I never inquired, and I don't know anything about his politics. Recently I was told when I called attention to a similar case with regard to employees on the Intercolonial that I was pitching into a Tory. I don't care a straw about that, because if it is wrong in a Grit it is wrong in a Tory, and I have no standard by which I draw a distinction between the two in these matters. No matter what party an official belongs to I say it is wrong.

Mr. STANFIELD. I understand the Minister of Railways to say that no charge has been made against officials of the Intercolonial taking part in elections, but I have a letter with regard to the same matter. Let me read this passage from the 'Gazette':

> Not only did this terrible delay mean that the passengers were kept in confinement and without food for a day, but everything at the immigration station during the doctor's absence was at a standstill. Four trains were delayed for six hours, and all the other immigration officials and the railway men were kept idle.

I think that should be looked into.

Mr. GRAHAM. That does not at all refer to any member of the Intercolonial staff being a candidate or being absent from his employment.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. It is the medical officer.

Mr. GRAHAM. It does not follow at all from the statements read by the hon. member that any employee of the Intercolonial Railway is a candidate in an election. Now, as to the general question and so far as the employees of the Intercolonial Railway are concerned, I may say that this matter is probably more strictly considered on that railway than on any other railway in Canada. In my own town the employees of the Grand Trunk are not only candidates themselves but they take an active part in municipal elections. Are you going to say to a brakesman or to any other employee of a railway: You are to be disfranchised, you must not say a word to your neighbour about municipal politics; you must not take any interest whatever in municipal affairs. Well, I believe the peop'e of Canada do not want that kind of thing.

Mr. SPROULE. The Grank Trunk is not a government railway.

Mr. GRAHAM. This is a thing that has to be considered from the point of view of common ordinary horse sense. I say that an employee of the Intercolonial Railway should not be offensive, and it is better he should not be a municipal candidate unless there is some exceptional consideration, but to say that he must not take any part in the municipal government for which he is taxed is going to the length of absurdity, even if the railway is owned by the government.

Mr. FIELDING. There is only one point in the observations of hon. gentlemen opposite which really deserves consideration, and that is that a steamship with a large number of immigrants has been detained unduly by reason of the neglect of the medical officer. That is a matter which certainly well deserves consideration. But hon. gentlemen will see that the mere publication of a statement in a newspaper, and a newspaper which is not supposed to be entirely beyond the suspicion of political bias, is hardly sufficient ground for the government to take action against the officer. If any hon. gentleman who has knowledge himself will send a statement to the proper minister that any officer of his department has neglected his business in the manner described, that would be a proper matter for investigation. Now as to the partisan side of it. My hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) says he does not know whether this candidate is a Grit or a Tory. I accept his statement, but if he does not know whether the man is a Grit or a Tory how does he bring the partisan element into the question at all?

Mr. SPROULE. The partisan element is that he threatened employees they would be dismissed if they did not do so and so.

Mr. FIELDING. We have had no such statement made to the House. My hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) has imported that into the discussion. The hon. gentleman from King's and Albert did not make that statement, and it would appear that the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) is giving away more of the game than was intended. However that may be, the only point worthy of consideration is as to whether this officer in Halifax has neglected his duty. There is a distinction between a municipal and a Dominion or provincial election. We were asked earlier in the session to lay down some rule with regard to municipal elections elsewhere, and it is a very difficult matter to do so. A rule may be laid down with respect to a Dominion election and probably with respect to a provincial election also, but it may be a question as to whether you would be justified, in the case of a man who happens to be a citizen of a municipality and a Dominion official at the same time, in refusing him the right to take part in a municipal election. But if in doing so he should neglect his public duties, then unquestionably that would be a proper matter for investigation, and I am sure that the minister in whose department such an officer is employed would feel it his duty to investgate any representations to that effect which might be properly made.

Mr. J. E. ARMSTRONG. (East Lambton). Mr. Speaker, after listening to the remarks of the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Graham) and the replies of gentlemen on this side of the House, I wish to call attention to the fact that Mr. Hawkins is receiving money from the government. He is medical officer at the port of Halifax under the Interior Department. I shall read an article in the Ottawa 'Journal' of to-day, which gives a full description of the occurrences at Halifax. The article is as follows:

Halifax, Nova Scotia, April 13.—The immigration department at Halifax have furnished another subject for government investigation. Formal complaint has been made to the Ottawa government of what amounts to inhuman treatment of a large number of the 1,100 passengers who came by the Allan steamer 'Tunisian' from Liverpool.

The official who is charged in this complaint is Dr. A. C. Hawkins, the chief medical officer, without whose certificate no passenger can leave the detention room at the immigration sheds. The passengers had breakfast on board the steamer, and many of them were kept without food till 11.30 that night, when the last of the crowd was passed.

Dr. Hawkins began his examination at 3 o'clock in the afternoon, the people then tired out with the long waiting. He worked for three hours and stopped at six, then leaving the building not to return till 9.45 p.m., when the task was resumed on an almost famished assemblage of angry people. He got through shortly before midnight.

Not only did this terrible delay mean that the passengers were kept in confinement and without food for a day, but everything at the immigration station during the doctor's absence was at a standstill. Four trains were delayed for six hours, and all the other immigration officials and the railway men were kept idle. The half-starving passengers, as well as those who had got through and were waiting to get off, naturally made a great outcry and vowed vengeance.

The doctor is conducting an active election canvass, which may account for his absence, but this did not mitigate the condition of the hundreds of passengers, who were practical prisoners without food.

Under the circumstances I feel that members on this side of the House are thoroughly justified in bringing forward this question and demanding from the Minister of the Interior some explanation in regard to it.

Mr. A. JOHNSTON (Cape Breton). Mr. Speaker, I agree with those who have gone before me that when any formal complaint is made to the Minister of the Interior with regard to the conduct of any of his officers, the minister should take formal notice of it. The very worst construction which my hon. friend (Mr. Armstrong) can place on the article he has read is that the fact of Dr. Hawkins being a candidate for the mayoralty may have accounted for his being absent from his duty in examining the ship. Is that not so?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I read the article, which I think is a sufficient explanation.

Mr. JOHNSTON. In fact, the worst he can say is that this may have been the cause of the action complained of; the hon. gentleman is not in a position to make a definite statement of fact.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I was addressing the Minister of the Interior. I cannot understand how the hon. gentleman comes in.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I am addressing my hon. friend and pointing out to the House the absurd position in which he places himself, a position of which he should be ashamed, if he has any regard for the dignity of the House.

Mr. SPEAKER. Both hon. gentlemen will recollect that they must address the Chair.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Through you, Mr. Speaker, I addressed my hon. friend, and I was pointing out to him, through you, the very absurd position he occupies before the House and before you. If a charge is brought against this officer of the Department of the Interior I have no doubt the Minister of the Interior will look carefully into the matter. I am sure every hon. member on this side of the House will agree that this course should be taken.

However, we have here a question of much greater importance than the question of whether a certain official in Halifax is a candidate for the municipal elections. On the general question of the relation of government officials to municipal politics I hold the view that acceptance of office by any citizen of this country should not debar him from participating in municipal matters in the community in which he lives. I hope every member on this side will take the same view, and I wish the position taken by the hon. Minister of Railways (Mr. Graham) to-day to be distinctly understood not only in this House, but in the country at large. Hon. gentlemen opposite have laid down a position which I am sure when it is understood by the people of Canada will not meet with their approval. It is that if a man accepts office at the hands of the Dominion government, no matter how small or how great that office may be, from that time forward he is to take no part whatever in municipal matters in the town or city in which he resides. It means that government employees abandon all claims of citizenship where they reside. That is the position taken by the hon. member for Grey (Mr. Sproule), who is leading the opposition at the moment, and who speaks as the leader of his party and lays down the policy of his party in this matter. It is to the effect that henceforth men occupying positions on any part of the Intercolonial Railway must not take any part in municipal matters. It is well for the people of the country generally to realize the position taken by these hon. gentlemen. I hold, as I have always held, the view expressed by the Minister of Railways this afternoon, that men employed on the Intercolonial Railway have a perfect right to assert themselves in municipal matters in the towns or villages in which they reside. I shall do all in my power to maintain that right for them. They are residents of the municipality; they pay taxes, and why should they not participate in civic matters? Why should they not with me have the right to determine who is and who is not a fit person to represent them on a municipal board? Our hon. friends opposite will deny that right. We on this side are content to have our policy on this matter go to the country side by side with that of our friends opposite, who assert this afternoon that henceforth their policy is to be to deprive these men of all rights as citizens.

Hon. H. R. EMMERSON (Westmoreland). I do not wish to prolong this debate, but I entirely endorse every word uttered by the hon. member for Sydney (Mr. Johnston). If the government undertake to control the officials of the Interior Department or any government official with respect to the exercise of their civic rights, they might just as well undertake to say what fraternal societies their officials should join and what churches they should attend. It seems to me that the doctrine laid down by the present leader of the opposition (Mr. Sproule) is entirely too absurd and will not be accepted by the citizenship of this country in any province.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES (Victoria and Haliburton). I am sure the House and the country will feel themselves deserving of congratulation on the permission that has been extended to the leader of the government by the hon. member for Sydney (Mr. Johnston) to exercise his functions in allowing these gentlemen to take part in elections. The Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) and the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Graham) should feel complimented at the benediction pronounced by that hon. gentleman and the authority he has given them to exercise their functions in the premises. I must congratulate the hon. gentleman himself on his promotion from the somewhat menial position he had a few years ago to the position of dictator of the party. I must also congratulate the ex-Minister of Railways (Mr. Emmerson) on the stand he has taken. I would like to have an explanation of the circular which I find dated 23rd of December, 1907. I forget whether or not he was at the time Minister of Railways. Possibly he had vacated the office at that time and was not responsible, or he will have to account for this circular to the present Minister of Railways. I would ask the present minister whether he repudiates the circular issued by him and his own general manager and which is directly at variance with the statements made by the hon. member for Cape Breton (Mr. Johnston) and the ex-Minister of Railways. That circular is as follows:—

Office of the General Manager, Moncton, New Brunswick, December 23, 1907.

Circular No. 381.
To employees—
The Minister of Railways——

Not the ex-minister and not the hon. member for Cape Breton, but the Minister of Railways.

—having been requested to allow employees of the railway to offer themselves for candidates and to accept municipal offices, has carefully considered the matter——

Mr. HENDERSON. That is quite a different thing.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES (reading):

—and his conclusion is that it is not in the interest of the railway that this should be allowed and that only in such very exceptional cases as the minister may determine——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES (reading):

—as the minister may determine the public interest can be served without the interest of the railway being prejudicially affected, shall employees be permitted to offer for and accept such office.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES (reading):

This decision is based upon the usual policy of railways in such matters, such policy being considered on the whole as best adapted to serve the respective interests most concerned.

D. POTTINGER,
General Manager.

Mr. TALBOT. Where is the contradiction?

Mr. SAM HUGHES. Through you Mr. Speaker, I am addressing the Minister of Railways and Canals. And this circular is in the face of the statement made by the Minister of Railways a short time ago. However the matter is not worth discussing

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. They can take whichever horn of the dilemma they choose. I am very much surprised that the present Minister of Railways should take a reprimand from the ex-Minister of Railways and the hon. member for Cape Breton (Mr. Johnston). It is quite evident these two have placed their ban on the present Minister of Railways and he has had to bow down and collapse.

Mr. GRAHAM. The circular read absolutely confirms what I said a few moments ago.

TRANSCONTINENTAL RAILWAY—ACCIDENTS ON CONSTRUCTION.

Mr. R. BLAIN (Peel). I wish to draw the attention of the Minister of Railways to a despatch which appeared in the Winnipeg 'Telegram' dated April 1st, 1908:

Fearful death record in work on National Railway.

In a period of one year from March 29, 1907, to March 31, 1908, the lives of fifty men have been sacrificed through negligence or carelessness on a hundred mile stretch of the National Transcontinental Railway between the Manitoba boundary and the east end of Canyon lake, a distance of a hundred miles. This does not include those who have been killed on the section east of Vermillion, nor does it take note of the scores of poor fellows who have lost eyes or limbs on those sections of the National Transcontinental.

Further the article says:

It is a weekly, often daily, affair to hear of the horrible deaths which men meet with, to say nothing of the hundreds who are brought to the hospital here mangled, maimed and dying, either to linger on through countless hours of agony, or to recover and go through life with the loss of a limb, an eye, or sometimes of both.

Further on the writer adds:

Jury asked for safeguards.

When death's harvest first began, some two years ago, a coroner's jury memorialized the Department of Railways to take some action to safeguard the lives of the workers. How much notice was taken of the memorial may be judged by the fact that the act of that jury had to be repeated by another, only a fortnight ago, and still Ottawa is silent.

And further on:

Over a man a mile.

It is freely stated in Kenora that on a section of Dutton & McArthur's work, stretching ten miles east of the Winnipeg river, the toll of human life expended was over a man a mile. Perhaps the fifteen miles on the south side of Canyon lake, north of Vermillion, will mark the deathbeds of more men than any other on the hundred mile stretch already alluded to and depicted on the accompanying map.

This newspaper gives the names of forty-eight who have been killed on this line of railway. It would take too long to read the list, but I am quite sure the attention of the minister has been directed to this and other articles referring to the same question. Two causes are given. One is criminal negligence in the use of low grade explosives, and the second is inexperienced workmen. These two points should receive special attention from the Minister of Railways. The minister should not permit his contractors to use cheap explosives or he must expect to have a heavy death rate. I am much surprised that after the grand jury had directed attention to this some time ago, it was necessary for another grand jury to make a second reference to it. We cannot afford, as a Canadian people, in the construction of our railways, to have hundreds of lives taken by carelessness, either on the part of the government or the contractors.

Mr. GRAHAM. The question raised is one of considerable seriousness. The construction of the government portion of the Transcontinental is in the hands of a commission. That commission is responsible to the government and to parliament and has absolute control of the details. Accidents have taken place under the contractors; my hon. friends say there are two causes, namely, carelessness and low grade explosives. I am not in a position to dispute this statement nor do I suppose he is in a position to confirm it. There may be low grade explosives and there may not. That is a statement made by a newspaper. And possibly neither he nor I know if it be true. One thing is certain and that is that the death rate caused by accidents is of sufficient seriousness to attract attention and investigation. It has not escaped my attention altogether. I have had several interviews with the chairman of the Transcontinental Commission. It is pointed out to me that men using explosives become so accustomed to their work that they become oblivious of the danger and it is to their own carelessness largely that these accidents are due. That may be partially the case or may not, but my hon. friend will remember that this is one of the difficulties in getting at the truth of these matters. The legal way to locate the blame is through a coroner's inquest. The holding of an inquest is supposed to be the modus operandi by which the Crown or the public will get at the cause of the accident and will ascertain whether there has been criminal negligence in the case. A few years ago, the Ontario legislature, not being satisfied with the results of coroners' investigations in cases of accident in the construction of great works, passed an amendment to the Act making it more stringent. One of the clauses provided, if I remember correctly—and I am speaking from memory,—that no coroner could hold an investigation who was the medical attendant upon the men for the railway companies, and that no coroner could take part in such an investigation who had an interest directly or indirectly in a contract with the company. There were other provisions, if I remember well, by which the Attorney General took special steps to see that the investigation was carried on properly. I have asked this question recently of the chairman of the commission and expect to have an answer in a few days as to some of the particulars, if the spirit as well as the letter of the provincial law was being carried out in the holding of these inquests. If it be, there will be no difficulty in arriving at a conclusion as to the direct cause of these accidents. If carelessness on the part of the workmen be the cause the coroner and the representative of the Attorney General should be able to ascertain the facts. If the contractors are using low-grade explosives, there should be no difficulty in the coroner arriving at that fact.

Mr. BLAIN. Why could not the government, through their commission, put a stipulation in the contract that no class of explosives could be used other than high-class explosives ? If that were done, it would settle the matter.

Mr. GRAHAM. I think that if my hon. friend (Mr. Blain) were a practical railway contractor, perhaps, he would not express himself in that way. It is a difficult thing to arrive at, for the examination of explosives might be a more difficult thing than was anticipated.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. If the minister's officers cannot ascertain these matters, how can he expect a country jury to ascertain them ? Does he expect them to take a crack at the explosive with a hammer ?

Mr. GRAHAM. My hon. friend (Mr. Sam. Hughes) is a great joker. But this is too serious a matter to talk about lightly. My hon. friend will see that a coroner's jury empanelled under the law, with the coroner taking evidence under oath, can summon the contractor, the manufacturer of the explosive, the seller of it, the men who have used some of the same explosives, and every body else who can give information. They have every facility under the law to arrive at a conclusion.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Who pays the cost of all these witnesses ?

Mr. GRAHAM. The hon. gentleman knows that every province has now the machinery for these cases, including providing for costs. The question of provincial rights would be raised at once if we attempted to interfere with the duties of the provinces in this respect. The law of this province and every other province provides machinery to find where the blame rests. But I am making inquiry along these lines and will be able to make a statement, if I can get the information, which will clear the air. I agree that this is a very serious matter, one well worthy the attention of the department. I agree that the government should inquire into the reasons for these accidents in order to learn how this loss of life is to be prevented or reduced.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN (South York). A somewhat similar condition existed in connection with the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway so far as the hospital provision for the labourers on that railway were concerned. A very bad condition of affairs was shown to exist. Some kind of action was taken by the government and the abuses were corrected.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. That was on the Crows Nest Pass ?

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Yes. I am glad the minister says that he will intervene in this matter, because it is necessary that some high authority should intervene on behalf of these men. The contractors do not care for human life,—or that is too strong a way to put it ; I mean they have no financial interest other than burying these men who are killed. It would be a humane act on the part of the government to see to it that these men are surrounded with the necessary protection. If there is a reckless loss of life, the government should interfere and prevent it as far as possible.

Hon. DAVID TISDALE (Norfolk). If there is any truth in this report—and I apprehend there is, because this is not the first case of the kind of which we have read —it is quite evident that something is wrong. There are other public works going on, on the Canadian Pacific Railway and on the Grand Trunk, under Larsen and Foley, where explosives are much more extensively used and in which such a state of facts does not exist and cannot exist. The Minister of Railways speaks of the protection afforded by the coroner's inquest as a means of making known the facts in these cases, but it is evident that this machinery is deficient, because this loss of life goes on continually and increasingly, according to what we have heard to-day. I must say I had no idea of it before, and I do not believe the people of the country had any idea of it either, but it is an intolerable condition. We have the Minister of Railways and also the Railway Commission, and these are the people most blameworthy for allowing this condition to continue. I am glad to hear that the Minister of Railways has stirred up the commission, but apparently he has not stirred them up enough. But we have another department that boasts of what it has done, and that is peculiarly in charge of the interest of the working people. I refer to the Labour Department. I have not heard that the Minister of Labour (Mr. Lemieux) and his department has taken any interest in this question. Yet the settlement of it is a simple matter. In the first place, only proper explosives should be used ; and, in the second place, they should be handled only by experienced people. No contractor should employ an inexperienced man for the handling of explosives, and no government should allow such a thing to be done. There is no need for using poor explosives, because there are so many excellent kinds that I cannot believe the contractor would purchase the inferior. But the fact remains that we have two departments and a railway commission directly interested and directly responsible and yet this terrible loss of life seems to go on and to increase. I think it is time that parliament said something about it and that the minister—both ministers—should move in the matter. It is well enough to speak of coroner's inquests, but where do the jurors in these inquests come from? They are probably interested, or prejudiced or indifferent. I would not insinuate that these men would wilfully render improper verdicts, but if these inquests are held in places where there are no people except the workmen of the contractors, with the boss over them, that is enough reason for saying that an examination should be made by one of these departments to find out whether there is negligence in these cases. It ought to have been done before this time and it cannot be gone about too soon.

Mr. JAMES CONMEE (Thunder Bay and Rainy River). I think that the writer of the newspaper article which has been quoted here is not well posted as to how these accidents may possibly occur. They do not occur through the use of poor or bad explosives. I have had some experience in railway construction, and I am free to say that that has not been my experience. Speaking generally, it is admitted by all who have knowledge of the subject that the higher the explosive the more danger there is. Section B of the Canadian Pacific Railway parallels largely the portion of the Transcontinental Railway now under construction in the west for nearly 200 miles. In the construction of that section of the Canadian Pacific Railway glycerine oil was used, not dynamite, and accidents were more numerous. So when you come to add 80 or 90 per cent of glycerine oil in dynamite, the danger is increased. Accidents occur under the most strict regulations, and there are two or three causes for them. Carelessness is one great cause. But it is not always the inexperienced man who meets with an accident, it is very frequently the man of long experience who makes a mistake, notwithstanding that he ought to know better, and does know better, and ought to use more caution. But experienced men do make these mistakes. I think the history of railway construction will show that to be the case. I have had correspondence on this subject, having my attention lately drawn to it, and I took pains to make inquiry. I have written to a number of contractors whom I know and have received some letters in reply. The hon. member for York (Mr. Maclean) stated that the contractors didn't care. I do not think that statement was warranted, it is very much out of place. I think the contractors do care. I think perhaps they have just as much honour and just as much feeling as other people have. Besides, they are deeply interested; accidents cause great loss to the contractors. Most of the contractors insure their men. I think you will find on inquiry that all the men under Mr. McArthur, or any prominent contractor I know of, are insured. Such contractors take precaution to have their men insured, by means of a small subscription monthly from the men themselves, which is supplemented by the contractor himself. So he is more or less interested. It is not quite fair to assume that he is not deeply interested or does not take all the precautions possible to be taken. I know of cases where the most strict regulations were in force, where notices were up in all the camps instructing men how to use dynamite in winter, telling them of the proper method of thawing it, as provided in water jacket cans. Notwithstanding that these strict regulations were in force, enforced as thoroughly as it was possible for the contractor to enforce them, and notifying every foreman and walking boss that if the rules were not enforced he would lose his position—notwithstanding all that, accidents have occurred, for the reason that men disobey these rules, and sometimes they get careless. Now the hon. member who spoke last said there were not as many accidents on the Foley contract as on the Transcontinental. I think he is mistaken. The work is not of the same magnitude. There have been a great many accidents on that work. I know of two young men residents of Port Arthur who met death upon that particular work only a few months ago. The cause in that case was that the charge did not go off, and the men went back, as men sometimes do, to recharge, and the accident occurred. That is a cause of a good many accidents. Men become a little careless when the charge does not go off. These men I refer to were not labourers, they were contractors themselves; they did not send their workmen to run the risk, but they went themselves and took the risk. So it is a very hard matter to determine where responsibility lies. I quite agree with the hon. member that anything that can be done should be done to lessen the number of accidents. But it is a mistake to assume that the article in the newspaper is altogether warranted. The hon. gentleman spoke about the form of contract. I have run my eye over the present form of contract drawn up by the Transcontinental Railway Commission, and it does place all responsibility upon the contractor. He is bound to employ only competent men. The engineer in charge has power to dismiss any men on the works who are not competent for the duty entrusted to them. There is a very strict condition in the contract under which the work is done in regard to hospital accommodation. The contractor is bound to furnish hospital accommodation and medical attendance for the employees. So far as these matters can be provided for by the ordinary form of contract, they are provided for in this case. I am not taking the ground that something more should not be done. I do not know whether that could be done best by the Minister of Railways, or some official in his department, or whether it could be done best by the provincial authorities. But if anything can be done, certainly an effort should be made to minimize as far as possible the number of these unfortunate accidents.

Mr. W. F. COCKSHUTT (Brantford). The loss of life in the construction of the Transcontinental Railway, so far as it has gone, has become a very serious matter. I think the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain) has done a public duty in calling attention to it. The item he has read shows that 50 lives have been lost on one stretch of a hundred miles, or one on every two miles of that road, and it is not completed yet. I read a few weeks ago that eight men were killed by one explosion and several others injured upon that same stretch. We see that five men are dead and many others are mutilated for life by reason of these explosions that have taken place. They may have been premature, they may have been accidental, or they may have been the result of criminal carelessness. If the accidents were the result of any of these causes, certainly some one should be responsible. The country looks upon this railway, whether rightly or wrongly, as a government enterprise, a government work; the government are putting up the money to build the road, and the people look upon it as a government work. These contractors under the Transcontinental Railway Commission are certainly responsible to some one, and it should be the duty of the minister in the very near future to ascertain whether any precautions are being taken to preserve the lives of the men engaged on that arduous undertaking. We are too apt to say, Oh, they are only Italians, they are only navvies, they are no concern of ours. The ordinary feelings of humanity seem to be almost non-existent these days, because we read in almost every paper about the death of several workmen on some great work. Take the 'Evening Journal' that has been quoted to-day, turn to page 7, there you will find a very sensible letter from an experienced contractor on this very point. I do not know who the writer is, I do not presume that he knew this question was coming up in the House to-day, or had anything to do with it. But he refers, not only to the death of these men in the west upon this rock construction work, but also to the deaths that occurred on another branch of this Transcontinental Railway, that is the Quebec bridge. He makes the statement in that report that if ordinary precautions had been taken, if anybody with any experience had been on the spot, every life that was lost in the Quebec bridge accident could easily have been saved. He says that no man was justified in being on that work at least two or three days before the bridge fell and there was no one to warn the men on the bridge of the danger. There is another section which is responsible for the death of from 80 to 90 persons—I forget the exact number, but it is not less than 80 and not more than 90. Up to this time the loss of life on this Transcontinental Railway has baffled all description in comparison with any other great work that has ever been undertaken in Canada. What is the reason of it? There must be some special reason. This article says that inexperienced men are employed. It said that in the old days when nitro-glycerine or dynamite was being used an experienced man was at the head of every gang and he was responsible. The writer says that they paid these men $4 or $5 a day as bosses of these small gangs and every man acted like a soldier under the direction of the foreman in charge of the gang. A similar precaution should be taken in a case of this kind. Surely the government will not allow men to be sacrificed unnecessarily. We know that accidents will happen, we know that some lives will be lost in a great enterprise of this kind, but is it not unreasonable that fifty lives should be lost in the construction of 100 miles of rock road and that road is not completed yet. It certainly is out of proportion of the work done and if you take the Transcontinental Railway, 4,000 in length, I presume there will be 1,000 miles of hazardous work out of this 4,000. If they go on in the way that my hon. friend from Peel (Mr. Blain) has pointed out on that 1,000 miles you will have a loss of 1,000 or 2,000 lives before the road is completed, altogether too much of a sacrifice and not at all necessary. Where lives are lost and no one can prevent it we must view it as an act of Providence, but where men are ruthlessly slaughtered, as they are being to-day, we in this House have no right to keep silence on a point of that kind, and it is the duty of the government to see to it that the Transcontinental Railway Commission, or whoever are responsible, immediately do their duty and see that ordinary precautions are taken to preserve the lives of the workmen of Canada who are hazarding their lives in the building of this great national work. I trust that prompt action will be taken and that we will see a very large diminution in the future in the loss of life that we believe is unnecessarily taking place.

IMMIGRATION.

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier). Mr. Speaker, before the motion that you have put for the House to go into Committee of Supply is adopted, I desire to move an amendment on the lines that I announced some days ago, seconded by my hon. friend from Lennox (Mr. Uriah Wilson). The motion I have just placed in your hands, Mr. Speaker, is in the following terms:

While recognizing the importance of legitimate, well directed efforts to encourage desirable immigration, this House declares that it is time to cease paying a bounty at so much per head to agents for immigrants coming to Canada.

The total population of Canada, according to the last completed census, from information which I procured a day or two ago from the chief officer of statistics, Mr. Blue, is 5,371,315 souls. We are, therefore, Sir, considering the vast extent of our territory, a small community numerically and our country could, no doubt and will, support a far greater number of people. There is no congestion in Canada and all will and do, I am sure, agree that an increase of population in Canada is desirable. All must also readily agree that if an increase of population in this country is to accrue to us through immigration from other countries it is essential also that none but desirable persons should be admitted to Canadian citizenship and to the Canadian family. There is no immediate or urgent necessity for filling up the country. A few years more or less in the history of a young nation like ours are of very little account. In building up a nation and especially in merging large masses of foreign people, or even of elements not Canadian born, into the home population, I think that all of us will agree that too much precaution cannot be taken to secure the best elements, morally, mentally and physically to the end that what is imported into the nation will always be of the best, will readily conform to our customs and manners, and will arrive and be disseminated among our own people in such suitable proportions only as you can readily and without undue friction absorb. All this implies selection and the most careful selection, I think, we must admit. Face to face with the tendency to invade America, which is apparent to-day on all sides, from Europe, where an overcrowded population looks eagerly to this western hemisphere, as an Eldorado and a refuge, from the east, where a wave of Mongolians is beginning to surge towards our continent, the figures I will give will show that we will soon be overrun by an immigration which must become an element of large importance in our midst. If that element is not sound, if it does not conform to our recognized and well defined conditions our young nation will suffer great prejudice, and our advancement must be retarded by the arduous problems which will be thrust upon us through our indifference and thoughtlessness.

The question is not a new one; it is a burning question in the United States. We know that about twenty years ago it reached an acute stage in that country. Its immigration reports for the last few years show the truth of what I have just stated, that the question of immigration there presents to the people and to the consideration of the government one of the most formidable problems they have to deal with. It seems to me that in many respects the Americans have dealt with this question as a great nation face to face with this problem. Any one who reads the four last annual official reports of the United States on immigration will very well realize the truth of what I have just stated: That they have allowed the tide of immigration to rise unduly and dangerously in their midst they themselves generally admit and it cannot be denied. They are seeking earnestly to-day to meet as best they can the serious national problems which this has brought upon them. They have endeavoured to check and dam in a certain measure the rush of immigration to their shores. They have increased from time to time the head tax—a tax which is collected from each individual immigrant arriving in the country—they have forbidden for many years all and every aid to immigration in whatever shape, and they have set down restrictive conditions upon entry to their country. The federal government which, in the United States, is charged with the control of immigration, has decided this year to send to Europe a commission, under section 39 of the law which was approved on February 20, 1907, still further restricting immigration. Nine of the most competent men to be found in the United States have been sent to travel in European countries whence immigration comes, and to acquire there all the information necessary for the United States to provide proper legislation with a view towards a solution of the problem which this question presents.

The motion of which I have given notice has been pending for some days and I have in the meantime collected from the official publications of the United States government some figures which may interest the House. These figures I have procured with some trouble, and they are I believe absolutely reliable. I quote the following figures from the official report of the superintendent of immigration in the United States, showing the progress of the wave of immigration into that country:

Total immigration to United States for years mentioned.

Year ending June 30—
1904	812,870
1905	1,026,499
1906	1,100,735
1907	1,285,349
Total for four years	4,225,453

In spite of the growing restrictive measures, and in spite of the increased head tax on immigrants it will be seen that the immigration into the United States is increasing each successive year. The commissioner for immigration in the United States writes as follows in his last report for the year 1907, page 3, and which is the last report we have at hand :

An army of 1,285,349 souls that have come, drawn hither by the free institutions and the marvellous prosperity of our country; the chance here afforded for every honest toiler to gain a livelihood by the sweat of his brow or the exercise of his intelligence, surpassing in numbers the record of all preceding years. In the light of the past who can prophesy the future. The world can but view with wonder and awakening concern the facility with which we have absorbed the surplus millions of Europe and are now beginning to draw upon the reserve stock of some of these countries, and are even attempting to merge into our population some of the countless hordes of Asia.

I may say en passant that the United States immigration reports are far more ample and more detailed than are the Canadian reports. It is impossible to go through any one of the United States reports for any given year without learning a multitude of very interesting facts, for which we look in vain in the Canadian reports; not only as to the increase in the number of immigrants, but what is far more important, as to their disposal when they reach the shores of the United States. I think our Department of Immigration could very well follow the example of the Immigration Department of the United States in the preparation of its immigration reports. And Sir, let me add that the 4,000,000 immigrants who came to the United States during the years 1904, 1905, 1906 and 1907, were brought to the United States without a single cent of expenditure by the American government, except that expense with regard to which there is no economy in the United States namely, the expense for inspection of immigrants and for the protection of the American people. There is inspection of the most minute character of all arriving in the United States and every precaution is taken to protect the nation from the influx of undesirables. So far as I have been able to find not only from the official reports of the United States but from personal information sought by me in Montreal and in the United States itself, their inspection laws at present are well nigh perfect. Let me say also that this immigration has come to the United States in spite of the head tax upon the incoming immigrants which has produced in these four years the following results :

United States head tax on immigrants.

Head tax collected on immigrants entering the United States—
1904	$1,599,472 25
1905	2,082,873 50
1906	2,290,901 56
1907	2,782,103 68
Total collected for four years	8,755,350 94

This sum was more than ample to provide a perfect service of inspection and to leave a large balance at the end of each year to the credit of the American government. Now, as I have said, the law in the United States debarring immigrants is very strict and I may mention that the total number of debarred immigrants from the year 1892 to the year 1904, was 47,768. For the four years for which I have already given statistics the number of immigrants debarred from entering the United States was as follows :

Immigrants debarred from entering the United States.
1904	7,994
1905	11,879
1906	12,432
1907	13,034

These figures are taken from the official reports published by the United States Department of Commerce and Labour. Another feature of the question to which I would call the attention of the House and which is of deep interest to us at the present time, and which must daily become of greater moment, is that feature of the American law which obliges each immigrant landing in the United States to be in possession of a certain sum of money. They consider it a safe provision to absolutely oblige the immigrants to be provided with sufficient funds to maintain themselves and their families upon their arrival in the Republic. Let us see the effect of this law or regulation in the four years for which I have given the figures. Under the operation of this resolution, the following amounts of money were brought into the United States by immigrants, as certified by the officers of inspection.

1905	25,159,012
1906	25,109,413
1907	25,599,893

That is, in those four years something like $100,000,000 of cash, apart from goods and effects, have been brought by immigrants into that country. This is an item of some importance because I feel that in this respect our law is not sufficient. It is true that under the stress from which we have suffered lately we have temporarily required that immigrants must have with them a certain sum of money, $50 I think during the winter, reduced on April 1, to $25 or entirely discontinued. It is evident that we must amend our regulations more in accordance with the American system if we are to secure in Canada a larger number of people than we are now securing who are able to support themselves after reaching our shores, so that we shall avoid the experience of last winter.

I have deemed it important to place these figures before the House and their preparation has required some care and research. I shall now come to matters more directly affecting our own country. In the American reports we find valuable information as to the immigrants who have reached the United States from Europe through Canada.

In 1904, 30,374 immigrants entered the United States in this way. In that year 2,100 who attempted to enter the United States through Canada from Europe were debarred on account of the laws and regulations of the United States and therefore had to remain in Canada. Of these 762 were paupers, 582 were suffering from loathsome disease, and 293 were prostitutes.

In 1905 the total immigration to the United States through Canada amounted to 44,264, an increase of more than 14,000 over that of the preceding year. The United States, in 1905, finding that the immigrants coming through Canada were very numerous, and finding also, as appears by the four reports to which I have referred, that our own laws in respect to immigration were extremely defective, incomplete and lacking in regard to causes of exclusion and their application, adopted regulations providing the immigrants arriving in the United States through Canada into more than one class. Thus, in that year, we find the 44,264 arriving in the United States through Canada divided into three classes.

(a) Those destined to the United States landed at Canadian ports.

(b) Those arriving in Canada from Europe and proceeding to the United States within a year, and

(c) Those destined for Canada who after the expiry of a year proceeded to the United States.

Of those arriving at Canadian ports with the avowed and declared intention of going to the United States there were 12,663 and 183 were debarred. What became of them when they were debarred at our Canadian ports I do not know, it is impossible to find any trace of their disposition. Were they sent back to Europe in the vessels in which they came to Canada? I doubt it very much. If, on the contrary, they did land and proceeded without examination to one of the examining stations on the Canadian frontier and were there debarred, I doubt very much if they were deported back to Europe.

The second class are those destined to Canada and who have gone to the United States within a year after their arrival in this country. They have to submit to examination at one of the numerous examining stations which the United States government have established along the border, on the ground that we admitted a great many undesirables who found their way into the United States. After having made representations to the Canadian government on that subject which to a large extent the American Commissioners admit have been carried out, still they have found it necessary to establish these posts of examination. In the second class of immigrants we find 8517 and 589 were debarred. I shall not go into the details of the causes of their exclusion from the United States, many were refused admission for those causes which were causes of exclusion from Canada and how they succeeded in entering Canada I do not know. Nor do I know what became of them when they were refused admission to the United States. It is impossible to trace the matter any further, but my own view is that they remained in Canada, and that we have to-day in Canada these immigrants who were deemed undesirables under the American law for pronounced and stated causes.

We have to-day in Canada these immigrants who are deemed undesirable under the American law and pronounced so from causes which no doubt really existed, judging by the thorough examination made by American officers. These undesirables we have in Canada. My hon. friend from Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) asks if we paid a bonus on these immigrants. No doubt we did. No doubt they came within the classes, so very extensive and comprehensive, upon which we pay bonuses. Where these people are to-day I do not know, but they were found absolutely unfit for admission into the United States. 8,000 of them were not refused entry into the United States. On these no doubt the government paid a bonus. Why should they not? If these people were booked from England or any other country in which we grant a bonus to immigrants of certain classes—very comprehensive classes—the booking agent got his bonus on them, when they came here, and they afterwards went to the United States. There is a third class and that is those who were destined to Canada and who went to the United States after the expiry of a year. Here we have a still more doubtful case. After the year expired—how long after we do not know—they went to the United States. That is a very large class indeed. They numbered in 1905, according to the official report, 19,308, of which were debarred 749; and the remarks I made in connection with the second class apply with still greater force to this class.

I wish to anticipate an objection which will probably be made by my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver). After it became evident that a very large number of these immigrants went off to the United States within the year or after the year had expired, the Department of the Interior, through the initiative of the American officers—that was when we were under the unfortunate and mysterious regime of the North Atlantic Trading Company—arranged with the head office of the American Immigration and Inspection Department in Montreal, where all the returns from these border stations along the Canadian frontier are made before they are forwarded to Washington, to have returns made to the Department of the Interior of those immigrants who, after having come to Canada, went off to the United States. I presume the object of that—I think that was shown by one of the officers of the department under examination in the Committee on Agriculture and Colonization—was to find out what percentage of these continental immigrants, upon whom we paid these very large sums as a bonus to the North Atlantic Trading Company, went to the United States. What resulted from that I do not know. I remember examining at some length an officer of the department in the committee, and he there said that these reports were sent to the Department of the Interior, and that before the accounts were settled with the North Atlantic Trading Company they had some means of tracing these immigrants forwarded through the instrumentality of that company and striking off those who went to the United States. Whether that was ever done I do not know. Whether that arrangement is continued to this day I do not know. Probably the Minister of the Interior can tell us, but I do not think it has been kept up, and I do not think we are in a position to say exactly what becomes of our bonused immigrants after they reach here and what proportion go to the United States. I do not think we have a system of proper check, and there must be an immense leakage, because the temptation of the immigrant is very great to go to the United States once he arrives here. And although the government, in face of the continued increasing tide of immigration, has improved the law or at least carried out more carefully the inspection, there is no doubt whatever that in Europe the impression prevails among booking agents and others interested and the migratory population in general, that it is much easier to get into Canada than into the United States. Therefore those who are objectionable are generally attracted towards Canada. If the House desired to go further into the question, I could quote extensively from the very able report of Inspector Braun, who was sent from the United States in 1903 to survey the whole field of immigration, and he gives, in regard to that tendency, very valuable information to his government. He says there are people from some of the easterly countries of Europe, doubtful, objectionable people, who are directed to the great ports of embarkation, and who are given signals which they carry with them, indicating that they are not likely to obtain entry into the United States and therefore are to be directed to Canada. That existed to a very large extent until we made our laws more severe, but at the time Inspector Braun made his report, this abuse was very extensive.

Turning again to immigration, in 1905, 800 were debarred as likely to become public charges. I think they remained in Canada. I see no way whatever by which they could have been reconveyed, having been once admitted, to the sea-board and deported to Europe. Out of these 800 there were 492 who were debarred as suffering from trachoma. I have already had occasion to refer to that very dangerous disease which exists in a chronic state in the southern and eastern parts of Europe. It is, at certain stages, incurable and extremely infectious. Two or three years before there were 600 debarred from entering the United States through Canada on account of trachoma, and these have remained in Canada as well as the 492 first mentioned. The last time I spoke on this subject I spoke of the able report of one of our Montreal specialists, in which he gave the proof that trachoma had been treated at the Montreal General Hospital. The House knows we have a trachoma hospital at Quebec to which immigrants are taken who suffer from that disease. Too much care cannot be taken because once this disease has taken firm hold it will be practically impossible to eradicate it.

Let me give a few figures of the total immigration in 1906. The total emigration from Canada to the United States was 43,997. We have no detailed report as to the three classes to which I have referred. There were 486 debarred of which 331 are likely to become public charges.

In 1907 we have again an increase of immigration through Canada to the United States :

By Atlantic ports..	18,671
Through border station....	20,882
Pacific ports....	1,414
Total..	48,967

Out of which were debarred 2,273.

It is impossible to find in our own reports anything to even remotely indicate an answer to that very interesting question as to what becomes of these numerous people who were debarred from entering the United States after having come to Canada. In the American reports you will find answers to all these questions. You will find absolutely reliable information as to the number of people who leave the United States within the year. They give us comprehensive statements as to the immigration to the United States.

It must be evident that we require that information. We require to know particularly who are the people going out. What about the large numbers of people who come to our country and then go to the United States ? The question was put to my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior, and he was asked why we had not that information. He answered because that concerned emigration and not immigration. It must be evident that our information regarding immigration is incomplete, in view of the bonuses and the money we spend on immigration. Our data are not sufficient unless we have what is given in the United States, and that is the amount of people who leave Canada after coming there.

The total number for the year 1907 of the immigrants to United States through Canada was 48,967. Besides these 2,273 were debarred from entering the United States.

Mr. BERGERON. They may be in Canada.

Mr. MONK. No doubt. There are no tables in the general report beyond those from which I have culled the information which I have just given the House, but the Canadian Commissioner for the United States, a very able man who was in charge of that branch and administered the whole Canadian service connected with immigration through Canada to the United States, says at page 85 of the United States Immigration Report for 1907:

The tables above mentioned however contain other data however, upon which I am prompted to feel the bureau will not look with such satisfaction reference being had to the unusual increase of the number of aliens who originally giving Canadian destinations proceeded to the United States within one year from date of arrival in Canada. From 9,724 during fiscal year ended June 30, 1906, this class has increased to 15,677 for the year just closed. This remarkable increase is partially explained by the fact that while less than ·60 per cent of these manifested to the United States at time of embarkation are excluded more than 10·06 per cent of the year in Canada class, find it impossible to meet the requirements of our laws when examined.

Only ·60 per cent of those manifested to the United States were excluded, but when we come to those who pass into the United States after being manifested through Canada, you find an immense increase in the proportion exclude namely 10·06 per cent. That strengthens the conviction that the immigrants are shipped, even to-day, to Canada direct when there is some doubt of their admissibility into the United States. I deemed it important to give these data to the House because the question of immigration is one which demands our immediate attention.

I have stated enough respecting the American immigration features which concern us, let me refer now to our own system. What are the causes of exclusion from Canada? They are to be found in chapter 93 of the Revised Statutes of Canada. These are the immigrants prohibited, under the provisions of this law, as it has since been amended, and amended a great deal on the representations made from time to time by the American authorities.

Mr. MONK.

1. Feeble-minded, idiotic, paralytic and insane persons. Deaf, dumb, blind or infirm persons, unless accompanied by family or persons to take care of them. This is under the amendment of the law made by 6 Edward VII., chapter 19.

2. Immigrants afflicted with loathsome contagious or infectious diseases which may be dangerous to public health or widely disseminated, unless curable within a reasonably short time.

3. Paupers, vagrants, beggars or those likely to become a public charge may be deported if they become a public charge within two years of their arrival.

4. Criminals, prostitutes and procurers.

There are boards of inquiry who hear appeals made from the decision of the inspector. This, I think, has been the case only since the law of last year or the year before. I think these boards of inquiry, which sit very frequently in the United States have not been called upon to act here very often. I say that subject to correction by my hon. friend. There is also a final appeal to the minister. There is one provision of the law that may usefully be pointed out and that is not generally known. It is that the immigrant who has been convicted of crime or has become a public charge within two years of his arrival here, may, upon a certificate notifying the minister to that effect from the clerk of the municipality where he has become a public charge or been convicted, may be ordered by the minister to deportation. I say that that clause is not familiar to the people of this country, for, within the last seven or eight months undoubtedly, a great many immigrants have become public charges in the municipalities of Canada. I can speak with certainty concerning the case of Montreal.

Mr. BERGERON. How about the Doukhobors?

Mr. MONK. That law would not apply to them now, because when the Doukhobors came in this provision did not exist. But look at the number of immigrants who have been convicted of offences, both petty and extremely grave, within the limits of Montreal alone and within the past year. They would come under this provision of the law as well as if they had become public charges on the fact being certified to the Minister of the Interior that he has power to deport them.

Mr. BERGERON. At whose expense?

Mr. MONK. That is a question I desire to refer to briefly. Suppose that an immigrant has reached the west, and is to be deported. He must be brought to the port of embarkation at the country's expense. He must be sent, and a man with him, at the expense of the country, and traces of these expenditures are found in our public accounts. He is taken to the port of embarkation, and only there is he handed over to the steamship company. And I find records of moneys paid to steamship companies in connection with deportation—I do not know under what circumstances. But, under the law, the steamship company is obliged to take the immigrant back.

It would be very interesting—to come more close to the subject of the motion I have placed in your hands—to find out how the system of paying so much per head for immigrants first started in this country. It was started very long ago. I believe that inquiry would unquestionably reveal the fact that this singular, this almost unheard-of, mode of recruiting for our national family was invented and urged upon the government by transportation companies, booking agents and employees connected with the department. It is impossible for me to think that a man having at heart the interests of the country, and totally dissociated from the interests to which I have referred—great, powerful and influential interests—could ever have believed that a scheme of paying so much a head per immigrant, was a suitable, feasible and wise method for a country to follow that was desirous of increasing the national family by the addition of good, suitable and carefully selected subjects.

Mr. BERGERON. It is only within eleven years, is it not?

Mr. MONK. I think this system dates further back than that. Of course, when our immigrants were very few, when we spent from $20,000 to $100,000 on immigration, though the bonusing system may have existed, it amounted to a negligible quantity. But to-day, when we spend over $1,000,000 on immigration, a large portion of it in bonuses, it becomes an important question to find out who invented this method. If you wanted to increase a valuable herd of cattle, you would not adopt the sole principle of paying so much per head. When it is a question of the national family, and adding to it in the immense proportions which will appear in a moment, that principle seems to me a very bad one. Certain it is that it has existed for many years, but as I have stated, it has only been of large and alarming proportions since 1898, since which time it has become a subject of study. As I stated before, I do not think anybody would adopt such a principle even in an effort to increase a herd of animals. Remember, the party earning the bonus is bound by no strict rule. The rule that binds him is only that he gets his immigrant through the cursory examination that takes place upon the arrival of the immigrants here. If his immigrant is deported —though it is not so stated in any of the regulations I have seen—the presumption is he would not earn his bonus. But no code of stringent rules has been laid down for him. With respect to this, I may quote from a report brought down at the instance of the hon. member for Lennox (Mr. Uriah Wilson) by the Minister of the Interior on Thursday, February 13, 1908, in which is to be found very valuable information in regard to this and other points. The agent is not called upon, for instance, to make any special examination. He is not called upon to make any special selection. He knows upon what immigrants we pay bonuses, and there is nothing in any of the regulations I have seen that obliges them to exercise careful, prudent discretion in the selection of immigrants. He is not bound to see who this gentleman is whose destination is Canada, and to be added to the Canadian national family. No duty is imposed upon him to look into the man's record. He may be a criminal. Of course if he is a convicted criminal, that is found out, but it is very difficult to find it out, but when found out it may prevent his landing. There is no duty imposed upon the booking agent, or the man who earns the bonus, to look into the history of the incoming immigrant. He is not called upon to procure any certificate to show that this man is not a scoundrel or a loafer, a class that every nation in Europe is anxious to get rid of. There is nothing in the regulations which binds the booking agent to guarantee that this man is an honest or a suitable man to be admitted to Canada.

An hon. MEMBER. The American law.

Mr. MONK. Under the American law there is no bonus, there is no immigration agent, and never has been. They would not think of such a thing as paying a bonus on immigrants. I am pointing out the situation of this agent over in Europe who earns the bonus, and showing that he is not in any way responsible for the character of the immigrant. He has to pay no fine when he ships over to this country, as he often does, unsuitable and undesirable men. He is subject to no penalty, though the immigrant that he sends out here may be debarred as a pauper, a criminal, or likely to become a burden. As a matter of fact, this agent who earns the bonus can not be reached by us because he is not under our jurisdiction. I know as a matter of fact that the booking agents in Europe, and even in England, I know it from reliable information, frequently know nothing about Canada except what they may have picked up from circulars. Half of them do not know about the conditions of labour here. I am speaking of the booking agent, the man who gets the money. Let any man go to Europe and interview these men, and he will find that they know nothing about Canada, and as a matter of fact they care nothing about Canada, and have no interest in this country. They simply tell the immigrant, All you have to say, if you want to get into Canada, is that you are a farm hand or a railway navvy. Many times the immigrant does not know the language of the country, either French or English, but he is carefully taught to say 'farm hand' or 'railway hand' when met by the inspecting officer. Frequently these people arrive in great numbers in port, and when an inspector has to pass a thousand of them, what is he going to do? Look into the mouth of every one of them? Examine his conscience? He has to pass a thousand in an hour or two, the train is under steam waiting to take them west, and everybody is in a rush. Let any man go down and witness the arrival of these immigrants. Probably they could not understand you if you spoke to them in French or English. Now I have made a rather hazardous assertion, Mr. Speaker, and that is that this extraordinary policy of giving so much per head to immigrants, under the circumstances to which I have referred, has been initiated by the transportation companies.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. When?

Mr. MONK. In the origin, probably. What my right hon. friend wishes me to say is that it was originated under the Conservative government.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I do not care about that.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. Would that be a reason for us to change it?

Mr. MONK. It would be a reason for us to change it, though I do not consider that the sins of the fathers should be visited upon the sons beyond the third and fourth generation. But I find no trace of its origin anywhere else. You have the transportation companies pressing upon the government, and they are very influential, to adopt this scheme. It is to their interest. You have the booking agent who makes representations to our immigration staff, and the immigration staff itself, as has been proved in relation to the North Atlantic Trading Company, was at one time at least deeply interested in immigration. But to-day you have, in addition, the influence of these large land owners in the Northwest who are greatly interested in increasing population. So you have three distinct interests. You have the interest of the transportation companies, which is immense. Let the House consider for a moment how a large transportation company makes money out of the immigrant, from the moment they get hold of him. The immigrant as a rule pays $27 to the company to take him across the Atlantic. I suppose 25 cents per day pays for his food and the space he occupies on board the steamer. The food is simple and bought in large quantities, and the immigrant is often seasick. At any rate, an investigation will establish that 15 or 20 cents a day will pay for his food, and 25 cents a day will pay for all the cost in bringing him across the Atlantic. He has paid the company $27. The moment he lands here the transportation company conveys him to the west. He arrives in the west, and gives value to the land owned by these transportation companies. Sometimes he buys the land, at any rate, his mere arrival adds value to the land. Then on everything he buys in order to live, the transportation companies reap a profit; that is to say, the boots he wears, and the clothes on his back, and the food he eats are all freighted to the Northwest by these transportation companies.

I say that, with the immense profits this immigration gives to these companies, they are immensely interested in the maintenance of the status quo in regard to our law respecting immigration. Now Sir, in confirmation of that, let me say that it must strike the House as a rather singular fact that, after the disappearance of the North Atlantic Trading Company in 1906, by order in council of the 19th February, 1907, the bonus was fixed at ten shillings per adult and six shillings for children. That was on the 19th February, 1907, at a time when we had ceased to do business with the North Atlantic Trading Company, and it had been found absolutely necessary, I may say, in response to public opinion, to cancel that contract. On the 6th January, 1908, less than a year afterwards, the government increase and double that bonus. Why is the bonus on the territory covered by the North Atlantic Trading Company increased and doubled? It is impossible to understand why the order in council of this year doubling the continental bonus was passed. There is a pretext alleged in the order and it is that the bonus is found inadequate to induce immigration. That is the textual reason given in the order. Let us see if there is any foundation for that allegation which was the basis of that new order in council doubling the amount of the bonus. In the year ending the 30th June, 1906, we had 189,064 immigrants. In the year ending the 30th June, 1907, we had 252,038 immigrants. In the year in which we have 252,038 immigrants, with a very large increase in continental immigration, we increase and double the continental bonus. Let me give the precise amount of that increased continental immigration. For nine months to the 30th March, 1906, the number of continental immigration was 19,216. For the nine months to the 30th March, 1907, it was 34,217, an increase of 15,001, and in the following three months the increase was greater still. I see see no reason here for increasing and doubling the continental bonus. Although the North Atlantic Trading Company as such has disappeared, has dropped out of existence, I think that anybody who carefully examines our system of immigration and the way the propaganda is carried on at present will conclude that there exists several North Atlantic Trading Companies, combinations, I mean, of booking agents, of people interested in immigration and in getting the bonuses. There is not only one. It has been a fecund institution, it was very prosperous and it produced numerous offspring. Let us look for a moment at the conditions which have surrounded our increase of population by immigration since 1898. After a careful examination of this tabulated statement, compiled from absolutely reliable official sources, controlled by the officers of the department, the House will see clearly and exactly the trend of the wave of immigration since 1898.

I may say that a large proportion of the bonuses for continental immigrants went to the North Atlantic Trading Company.

One word now to make clear what the present regime as to bonusing is under the regulations or orders in council at this moment in force. The bonuses paid at the present time are as follows:

United States.—Since 1897 a bonus has been paid to sub-agents of $3 on each man, $2 on each woman and $1 on each child, of the farming class from the United States. In a few cases the commission is $2, $1 and 50 cents on men, women and children of specified classes.

British.—£1 sterling on adults, 10 shillings on those between 1 and 18 years of age who come to Canada to engage in farm work, railway work or, in the case of females, domestic service, who are British subjects by birth or naturalization and who have had at least one year's experience as farmers, farm labourers, gardeners, stablemen, carters, railway surfacemen, navvies or miners.

Iceland.—A bonus of £1 on full tickets and 10 shillings on half tickets is allowed to steamship companies on immigrants from Iceland, through an arrangement with the steamship companies that the rate or passage to immigrants is decreased by that amount.

Continental.—A bonus of £1 on adults and 10 shillings on those between 1 and 18 years of age is paid to certain selected booking agents in Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Holland, Germany, Finland, France and Belgium on immigrants from those countries who come to Canada to engage in farm work and who, before coming to Canada, had at least one year's experience in one of the prescribed occupations. These are the same as in the case of the British immigrants.

In fact, after the description I have given to the House as to how the immigration is started on the other side by the agent, and how the immigrant is received here, I think it is evident that almost anybody can get in under these regulations, because we have no way of verifying the statement made by the immigrant to the inspector here. The immigrant is not required to produce any proof of any statement he may make, and he is allowed to pass into the country on his assertion that he is a farm hand, a railway navvy, a gardener or a stableman. And, to those who have witnessed large numbers of immigrants on their arrival here passing before the inspector it is impossible not to say that a great number of these immigrants have it written on their faces that they have never been farmers or railway navvies. The agent can do nothing to prevent them under the circumstances I have narrated; he has to take their statements. Under the order in council of January last (1908) the bonus was doubled from that which it was under the order in council of February, 1907, and that was done without any reason that I can see, the pretext given that there was a falling off in the immigration being absolutely unfounded as shown by the statistics I have given to the House. It is not out of place to remark that according to the answer given by the Minister of the Interior and reported in 'Hansard' of the 16th of March last, we have spent to date on immigrant hospitals a total sum of $208,420.63. I quote this in connection with the statement which is sometimes made that immigration to this country is not assisted. I will refer to that later on, but in the meantime I will point out that we have spent over $200,000 in providing hospitals which are simply for immigrants only.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

Mr. MONK.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. MONK. Mr. Speaker, I had no idea when I began that the observations I had to make would take up so much time. Perhaps my right hon. friend the Prime Minister is not wholly free from a responsibility for this, as when I first gave notice of this motion I expected to bring it up at an early date and since that notice was given, a great many people in my own province particularly, who take a deep interest in this question have sent me much of the information I am now giving to the House. I had determined to sift and prune that information as much as possible, but I found when proceeding with the expurgatorial work that it was more difficult than I had at first imagined. Most of these data I think are important in the examination of this or any other question connected with immigration.

When you left the chair at six o'clock I was stating that it was a question of very great interest whether or not we in Canada got the benefit of this bounty or bonus expenditure. Do we not pay for immigrants who come to Canada and within a year or after a year proceed to the United States? I expressed very serious doubts as to that and these doubts will be confirmed by what I am about to say to the House. Bonuses, as I understand, are paid monthly and once paid I doubt if we ever get them back. Is there any instance of a bonus, after once being paid, having been recovered because the immigrant, either within the year or after the year left for the United States or because he was deported after a certain time by reason of becoming a public charge? I do not think the minister can give any example of a refund having been made by the bonused agent of the bonus he has received. I do not think we would have any right to that refund. Once the immigrant has entered Canada and been accepted by the inspecting authorities, the bonus appears to me, by what I have seen of the regulations, to have been earned. The agent is entitled to it and it is impossible to recover it from him, whatever circumstances may afterwards supervene.

I find in one of our Quebec papers, the Richmond 'Guardian,' an article which I feel bound to give to the House, which affords ground for seriously doubting whether all this vast mass of immigration comes to Canada, whether they really go to people the Northwest or to improve our own population in the older provinces. This article appears in the Richmond 'Guardian' of February 21, 1908, and reads as follows:

The Interior Department gives out glowing reports of increased immigration. These statements are clearly false. About half the settlers reported can never be found afterward. This is proved by the Northwest census of 1906, which shows the population of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta to be as follows:

1906..	808,863
1901..	419,512
Increase..	389,351

Returns of births and deaths make the natural increase of the population of 1901 41,951, leaving 347,400 to be supplied from outside, and by the natural increase of these immigrants. Now the number of homestead settlers in the Northwest from other provinces in the five years is represented by the department to be 27,625. The department counts two and a half persons for each homesteader, making 69,312 inhabitants from this source.

A much larger number from the older provinces settled on lands which they purchased, or in towns and villages, or were employed in the various works and industries of the country. This would leave less than 200,000 to be supplied by immigrants and their children.

Note now the number of immigrant settlers reported by the department as having located in Manitoba, Alberta and Saskatchewan in the five years preceding the June, 1906:

1901-2.. ..	61,129	see Interior report, page 99.
1902-3.. ..	109,986	see Interior report, page 95.
1903-4.. ..	75,308	'Hansard,' 1906-7, page 1053.
1904-5.. ..	74,676	'Hansard,' 1906-7, page 1053.
1905-6.. ..	90,652	'Hansard,' 1906-7, page 1053.

Here are more than twice as many immigrants reported to have settled in the west as could be found there by the census enumerators. The number of immigrant settlers reported from 1901 to 1906 is 22,301 more than the total increase of population from all sources.

What has become of the 200,000 or 250,000 lost people? This includes the 22,301 mentioned above, also the total natural increase of the oldest settlers, and of the immigrants, themselves, together with all that arrived from the older provinces and their descendants. Either these 200,000 never came or they came and went away. On how many of these imaginary immigrants did the country pay a bonus of $4 and $5 per head? On how many did the mysterious North Atlantic Trading Company draw $5 for each imaginary head? How many of them were travellers coming into the country and going out by another or the same gate? How many were Canadian travellers coming home? How many were picnickers from across the borders? How many were mere dead figures stuffed into the books to make glory for the Immigration Department, gain for the immigration contractors, and excuse for an annual immigration expenditure which has jumped from $120,000 to $950,000 since the change of government?

But, Sir, there are other figures that go to show that our Northwest lands, which we are so desirous of seeing settled by real bona fide farmers are not being settled in the way the immigration returns would lead us to expect. Let me give briefly a statement showing what proportion of our immigrants go upon the free lands of the Northwest, the increase in the number of homestead entries, the total immigration and the percentage of the homestead increase to the total immigration for each year from 1896 until the present.

STATEMENT SHOWING WHAT PROPORTION OF OUR IMMIGRANTS GO UPON THE FREE LANDS OF THE NORTHWEST.

There is therefore grave reason to doubt that we are really getting in our Northwest Territories the benefit of all this bonus expenditure.

One word as to the incompleteness of the immigration report. There is nothing in it to show the movement through Canada into the United States of the immigrants either on arrival or within the year or after the year. The reason given for that omission by the Minister of the Interior on the 16th of March last was that this exodus was emigration and not immigration. Nevertheless although the United States do not bonus immigrants or aid immigration in any way, they give information in their report which shows the exodus of people from the United States, so that in this connection our report, as compared with the American report, is scanty to a degree.

I find that the reports from seaports in the British isles are no fuller, since the tide of immigration has increased, than they were before. The report from our Belgium agent is always couched in the same terms. It is almost identically the same every year. And from the continent we get no report at all. We get, of course, from the Superintendent General of Immigration some very general observations, but no details. That is a serious fault which the minister ought to try and remedy. In the United States we maintain agencies which cost us from $2,000 to $6,000 a year and even more. How is it that we do not find in the last report of the Department of the Interior any statement whatever from these agents? Surely when we pay them so much money, we ought to be informed in detail what each of these immigration agents is doing and what bonuses are paid them so that we may know that they are earning their money.

Before you left the Chair, Sir, I was pointing out that this immigration business is an extremely profitable one for the transportation companies, the booking agents, and those individuals and companies who are interested in large tracts of land in the Northwest. The transportation companies not only make a large profit out of the fares, not only do they afterwards draw profit from the immigrant when he lands, but they undergo no expense in putting the immigrant on board or in landing him. An immigrant is not like ordinary freight. He goes on board of his own accord, there is no machinery or labour required to put him on board, and when he reaches his destination there is no expense in putting him ashore, and he is then taken charge of by the government. Although it is said that we do not assist immigration, we have gone to great expense in building sheds and hospitals, in taking charge of the quarantine, in paying all the expenses of inspection, and in providing every description of necessaries for the immigrant when he lands. We feed him, we see to his safe transference in his destination, and incur considerable expense in that work. Moreever, we do the advertising for these transportation companies. We spend immense sums every year to advertise this country and to induce immigrants to come here. In fact, the transportation companies have no expense in connection with this branch of their business, though in every other they must incur large expenses.

One word as to the bonused agent himself. This agent receives a commission from the transportation company on the ticket he sells to the immigrant. That commission varies. As the immigrant must practically always go to some inland place away from the port of debarkation, the agent receives a further commission for his transportation. He probably gets a commission from parties who employ the immigrant on his coming to this country. I take it that the amount he makes on each immigrant, including the $5 of bonus which we give him, must amount to $10 or $12 at the very least. If he handles any considerable number of immigrants, his profits must be even abnormally large. Even if he were deprived of the bonus given by the Dominion government, the commissions to which I have referred and the salary he gets as booking agent would show a considerable profit for each immigrant he handles. As a rule the booking agents in the British islands and even elsewhere, are engaged in some general business, as dealing in coal or some other occupation. The agent, as a rule, is not well versed in the country to which he is sending immigrants. That explains why so many immigrants have been left to public support during last winter. The agent will tell the immigrant, for instance, that he knows that farm-hands in Canada earn from $45 to $60 a month. That is not absolutely untrue, for I am told that in the west, during harvest time—and even in other provinces—large salaries are paid to good farm hands. But their employment at these rates lasts for only a short time. The immigrants, however, are not informed of that; and, frequently, when they arrive in Montreal, where many of them are stranded, they will not work except for a considerable salary, for they have been told not to accept work unless paid at about the rate I have stated.

In regard to the class of immigrants who arrive here, let me give to the House what Lord Strathcona says in this year's report of the Department of the Interior:

> Another serious matter to which I have drawn the attention of the imperial authorities is that magistrates and others have repeatedly deferred passing judgment on transgressors against the law, on the condition of their being sent to Canada.
> I have, from time to time, had direct correspondence with recorders, chairmen of sessions, and others, whenever a particular case of the kind came under my notice, formally and emphatically condemning such action. Attention has also been widely drawn to the views of your department on the matter in the press of this country, and I hoped, as a consequence, no further causes of complaint would arise.
> In view, however, of the two further cases which you recently brought to my attention, I felt compelled to make official representations to His Majesty's government on the subject. These negotiations are still pending, but I hope they may lead to steps being taken which will put a stop altogether to countenance being given by magistrates and others concerned to the sending of persons convicted of crime to Canada.

I think that abuse has not ceased. And, to be perfectly frank, the general impression which exists in the British islands is that the people there do us a favour by sending out the unemployed and those who cannot get on in the old country. I do not speak against immigrants as a whole, for some are excellent and are a great acquisition. But the impression that I have spoken of exists in the British islands and they do not hesitate to state it. There is an impression that this is a country of enormous resources, immense areas of fertile lands that are given away, and that it is an advantage to pour out population into this country and that there will always be found something for newcomers to do; even though they may have been found incapable of getting on in the older countries. I am told that an eminent writer, recently in Canada, Mr. Rudyard Kipling, has written that we must pump the Britishers into this country. We are glad to receive Britishers in Canada, for many of them make excellent immigrants. But we ought to accept only the best class, and there are undesirable classes in England as elsewhere. As a matter of fact, I think the magistrates of Montreal will bear me out when I say that, during the past seven or eight months, most of those who have been brought before our courts of justice for serious offences are not men of this country, but immigrants who have slipped in in one way or other. Judges who preside at our assizes, I think, would report to the government, if questioned, and the magistrates have repeatedly told me, that this is the condition of affairs in Montreal. As a matter of fact, to-day, it is almost impossible for our country people without danger to follow the custom which, for all time, has existed among them, of coming to the Montreal market during the night. Up to within two years ago, farmers—and not farmers only but their wives and even their children—would come on their carts during the night to Montreal to be on the market early in the morning, without any thought of danger on the public highway leading into the city. In Montreal we preserve the peace with a very small proportion of police protection, but this has become impossible because of outrages committed on the public roads leading to Montreal. People have been held up, assaulted, wounded and left to die on the public highway. And there is no doubt in the mind of anybody that these outrages have not been committed by our own people; they are committed by immigrants who are stranded in Montreal. Cases of that kind have been discovered and the perpetrators belong to the foreign criminal classes undoubtedly. Let me read a paragraph from the last report of the inspector of hospitals for the province of Ontario:

There is marked evidence that public attention should be called to the large number of undesirable and unsuitable immigrants that are being induced to seek a shelter in Ontario. This has been found nowhere more noticeable than in the city of Toronto, where more than half of the indigent casuals, who have had to be provided for, belong to the immigrant class. In many instances, however, they prove quite incapable and, when winter comes on, they drift into the cities and are not slow to find the location of the charitable institutions. The whole fault for this condition must be placed where it belongs, namely, in the system that permits and encourages immigration without a proper discrimination. The present policy of Canadian emigration agents in Europe would seem to be to secure the number and pay no heed to the quality of persons urged to seek a haven in this country. The system of the Dominion government of bonusing agents to send out in an apparently indiscriminate maner a class of people totally unfit to provide a livelihood for themselves is deplorable. During the past year it has cost the hospitals and public charities of Ontario thousands of dollars to provide for these people, who are homeless and friendless and quite incapable of earning a living in this country. More precautions are needed. 'Quality, not quantity,' should be a rule from which there should be no deviation. More than ever before Ontario has been made, during the past year, the dumping ground of a most undesirable class. Charity may suffer long and be kind, but this province cannot afford to permit the bonused and designing agent abroad to continue as he has been doing during the past year, and the manner in which some of our charities have been imposed upon fully justifies this protest.

This is true also of my own province. Then I find that on March 18, before the Irish Protestant Benevolent Society's banquet at Toronto, Lieutenant Governor Clark said this:

Our province is in a crucial stage at present. Influx of new population, of people who have had strange ideas about liberty and religion, is endangering our state. These people come here believing that liberty means license and as such are a menace to our institutions.

A class of people come here who call themselves English or Irish or Scotch. True, they are British born, but they are not British at heart. They are children of foreign parents, who came to the British Islands years before. The babies were born in the British Islands, but they were partakers of foreign dispositions. They are not bred to principles we know of and might at the ballot-box seriously injure us.

It is a most serious question with which we must grapple. The United States, our neighbours to the south, have had, no doubt, the same troubles, and have to some extent assimilated this objectionable element in their population. But you must have noticed how crime is on the increase in Canada—crime of an abominable character. Evil deeds are rife in this land which we never knew before. Our nation was a better one before these people came. I am glad, and we should all be glad, that our questions of state and our institutions have been so largely settled before these people came.

I find here a resolution which is rather long, and I will not trouble the House with reading it, exactly in the same sense, passed by the Associated Charities of Toronto. This condition of affairs in Toronto is exactly repeated in the province of Quebec. I see that the eminent authority I have just quoted speaks of the possibility of assimilation. Now in this connection let me say this: The population of the United States numbered 50,000,000 souls before immigration into that country reached 300,000 per annum. We have in this country about 6,000,000, and we received last year over 250,000 immigrants. Now to meet the proportion between the number of immigrants that came this year into the United States and its present population of 80,000,000, we would have to have 20,000,000. Those who visit the United States, men of the very highest authority in sociology, like Mr. H. J. Wels, Viscount D'Avenel who has a European reputation, and Mr. Doumer, a French publicist, all agree that this immigration constitutes a grave peril to the United States. President Roosevelt himself said that this immigration is leading the nation to disaster. This year he has named, as I have already said, a commission of nine of the ablest experts to visit Europe and see what can be done to check the outflow of immigration to the United States. Other writers I have quoted say, and have made calculations to show, that in twenty-five years, at the present rate of immigration, we will have a population of 30,000,000, not 10,000,000 of which will be Canadian born. Now under these circumstances how can one explain the indifference that has existed in Canada up to at least the last six months, with regard to the immigration policy of this government? I think it is difficult to explain. If these figures are correct, we will find ourselves in a few years in this position, that the destinies of this country, its march towards the future, will be decided, not by ourselves who are the descendants of those who have settled the country and have built it up, but it will be settled by an alien population who have invaded the country.

One word now in connection with the care we must take respecting immigrants. During the past year we have had a large influx of Italian immigrants, many of whom have settled down in our cities. The question of the influence of this tide upon labour I will leave to others to treat, because the labour element is well represented in this House. As a matter of fact, in my own constituency, I know a large industry which has during the last year dismissed a great many Canadian employees and replaced them by Italians, because they work cheaper, and can live on wages that Canadians cannot live on. We all know how these Italian labourers live. They live in masses, they are able to work at much lower wages than our own people can live on, and consequently they become very dangerous competitors to our own labouring men. I find that during the year ending June 30, 1907, we had 12,771 Italian immigrants admitted into Canada. Were any of them bonused? I do not know. Certain it is that under our present system it is possible they were bonused. I do not see any difficulty in Italians reaching certain European countries which are under the bonus system, and getting tickets from the agent to come to Canada, and in one way or another the agent gets the bonus. I see no obstacle to that, and I would be glad to hear the Minister of the Interior declare that it is impossible, or tell us how they get here. But that class is not a dangerous class. I have lived in Montreal, and I know the Italians. There are excellent Italians, and there are some that are not so desirable. Let me quote to the House a high Italian authority who is thus reported in the Montreal 'Star' of February 28, with regard to Italian immigration:

I know for a fact that over sixty per cent of the Italians that come to this country are convicted criminals. When a man gets into trouble in Italy and is convicted, he generally leaves the country after having served his sentence, as he finds that he is not wanted at home. For years Canada has been the dumping ground of these criminals. It used to be the United States, but owing to the enforcement of stricter laws the United States are not so popular with my countrymen as they used to be. Canada is now their goal because it is so easy of access. No questions are asked, no certificates are necessary. If you are in good health you can land in Canada without any money, regardless of the fact that you may be a hardened criminal.

And believe me, the majority of the Italians do not come out here without good reason. Their own country has grown too warm for them and Canada offers ample shelter. If the Canadian government knew its business it would have immigration agents in Italy whose duty it would be to inquire into the characters of intending emigrants.

The American authorities have done that.

Until some action of this kind is taken, the trouble that the respectable citizens of the city and the Dominion are now suffering from will never be eradicated. Almost without exception the men Italians found carrying arms are criminals and ex-convicts, who don't feel safe without a gun or stiletto. They come out here because they are too well known in their own country. Their actions here cast discredit upon the land of their birth.

I have no doubt that everybody here labours under the impression that in Italy every man goes about armed and that murders and stabbing cases are of hourly occurrence. Let me tell you that this is far from being the case. When a man is found carrying concealed weapons in Italy he does not get the chance of paying a fine. Instead he gets a long term of imprisonment. They don't believe in fines for that sort of thing over there. But as a matter of fact the people there are not in the habit of going about armed with revolvers and razors and such like things. They are for the most part respectable, law-abiding citizens, who are particularly fortunate in that their criminals leave them in peace and emigrate to Canada, or some other country.

Murders are no more frequent in Italy than in any other country. There is more crime committed in Montreal in a week——

I presume he is speaking of last winter:

——than there is in a month in an Italian city. The Italians here—I mean the most of them—are desperate men and the law will require to be strengthened in order to deal with them.

I just wish to revert, in connection with the wholesale manner in which we are getting immigrants out here, to the kind of contract that is made with the prospective emigrant to Canada. I will quote an agreement that has been invariably used by the James A. Smart Company Limited and from this agreement and the conclusion which I draw from it the House will be able to see how it is that we have been obliged, in our large cities, to do very much, during the past winter particularly, for the immigrant classes who have been left on our hands for support and help. The James A. Smart Company is a company that was founded, I presume,—in fact I have no doubt,—by Mr. Smart who was formerly deputy Minister of the Interior, who was subsequently connected with the North Atlantic Trading Company and finally became the agent of that company. When that company disappeared I suppose he founded this company. The agreement is as follows:

Received on account:

Agreement.

In consideration of the promise of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company, hereinafter called the company, to give or procure for me employment on the construction of its railway line, and for which I shall be paid at the rate of at least $2 per day (eight shillings and four pence) and to furnish board at a rate not to exceed $4.50 per week (eighteen shillings and nine pence) I hereby agree as follows:

I will work as a labourer for the company, or for any contractor or sub-contractor with whom the company secure work for me for a period of at least six months, or for such period as the company or the contractors or the sub-contractors may require my services or until I am discharged by the company or contractors or sub-contractors, in which latter case I shall simply be entitled to wages earned up to the time of my discharge. My service shall be as a labourer or in any other capacity my employers may desire at the same rate of wages as is paid to other persons similarly employed.

My employment, and the relation of master and servant between the company and me, is to commence immediately upon my signing this agreement and I am to be subject to the orders and commands of the company from time to time thereafter but wages are to be paid me from the time only when I begin work on the construction of the railway and not during transportation.

The company reserve the right to discharge me at any time without notice in case I shall fail to perform my duties to the satisfaction of the company or the foreman in charge of the work.

In further consideration of the advance to me of transportation from the seaport from which I embark, or other place, to the point in Canada where I am to be employed, or to the railway station from which men are transported for work, for medical examination, premium for insurance, and advance made under this agreement, and for incidental expenses connected with this agreement amounting in all to $, I solemnly acknowledge as a just and legal debt for which I have received full value and for the repayment of which I regard myself as legally and in honour bound to repay, I hereby assign and transfer to James Smart the whole of the balance which may become due to me or wages from time to time, from the said company or other contractor or sub-contractor for whom I may be working on their contract, after deducting the charge for board as above, and the medical fee usually charged workmen in such cases, as security for the repayment of the said. (. . . . .); and I hereby irrevocably appoint the said James Allan Smart my true and lawful attorney to receive all my said wages which may from time to time be earned by me in respect of the said employment, and I hereby authorize the said Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company and every contractor or sub-contractor or other person by whom I may be employed upon the said work or other work, to deduct the said amount from my first earnings on the said work, less board and medical fee as above and to pay over such amounts as may become due me from time to time to the said James Allan Smart, until the said sum of $ ( ) has been completely repaid.

I further agree to pay the charge of not exceeding $4.50 per week for board and also medical attendance or any other reasonable charge which the company, contractors or sub-contractors may be put to while I am in his or their employ, and such amount to be deducted from any wage due me.

tering the field of immigration than I would have in the booking agents to whom I have already referred, from all the information I have regarding the natural and easily understood inclination and interest of the booking agents. The Salvation Army, in particular, does excellent work. I am speaking generally and outside of that phase of its work which has to do with immigration. It has done an immense amount of good in England and it is doing a great deal of good in this country. I am always happy if I can assist this work, because, as was very properly said by Cardinal Manning, speaking in London, the Salvation Army reaches a class of unfortunates that no other organized religion can possibly reach. That is true and it is doing a great deal of good, but still, when you consider it as entering the field of immigration and receiving a bonus you are obliged to consider the classes among which it works. Many of this class are reclaimed, are redeemed and many, I have no doubt, make good immigrants. We are dealing with conscientious men when we are dealing with the soldiers of the Salvation Army, the Church Army, the East End Church Army and these religious organizations. But let us be perfectly frank and say that the immigrants they recruit—not all, but a good many—are recruited among people who are dependent in England upon public charity. They are men who have not succeeded in life, who have been assistant painters or assistant plumbers, who have not been able to succeed in their trades, who have large families, who are on the poor rates and it has been the habit of the guardians of the poor to confide a large number of these people to the Salvation Army, giving them a certain amount to take charge of these poor people, and they have all the necessary machinery to ship them to Canada. These are not in all cases the immigrants who are desired and I think it would be necessary for us, before paying bonuses in such cases, if we are to continue the bonusing system at all, to exercise the very greatest surveillance and to see that the unfortunate classes among whom these organizations work are not the classes that are sent out here.

There is an impression in England that all these undesirable people may be safely sent out here because they believe this to be a land flowing with milk and honey where there is always something to do even for the least qualified. It is the same in Calabria and the Neapolitan districts whence the most dangerous class of immigrants come, they find it cheaper to pay for the transportation of these dangerous and criminal classes from Naples to America than to keep them in jail, and that is why so many of these sinister malefactors from Italy land in Canada. Therefore, with regard to the immigration by religious societies we cannot be too careful. Many of these undesirable people, as was stated by the Italian whom I have quoted come from the United States. Indeed we should be very careful in granting bonuses on immigrants who come from the United States and who are not of that excellent farming class in the western states who settle on our cheaper and better land. The immigrants who come from the New England States, particularly the aliens, are dangerous. In support of that view I quote a letter received in Montreal by a friend of mine, from a very reliable authority, who says:

An estimate based on information from several sources places the number of unemployed men in this city (New York) at 40 per cent of the total; the wages of many still employed are being reduced. The employment bureaus are crowded as they have not been for years. The savings banks are being drawn upon heavily. The beneficial and insurance societies are feeling the effects of the times by lapsed membership and heavy borrowings on policies. Public charities are besieged for help. Our city magistrates states that their courts and prisons are crowded with men who have committeed no crime, but who have come to the extremity of their resources.

In view of such conditions in the United States I would warn the government that next summer we may expect a large influx of such people to Canada, and we cannot be too careful. I stated this afternoon that such had been the prosperity attendant on the operation of that mysterious Northern Atlantic Trading Company, the names of whose directors the Prime Minister was careful not to divulge on account of the danger of their committing suicide—that company made a great deal of money, and following their example, a great many other such combinations have been formed for the purpose of reaping profit out of this bonus system. In the city of Montreal we have a society called 'La Societé de placement et d'immigration,' which is composed, if I am well informed, of many influential members of the Liberal party who expect to get a bonus on immigrants from France. They have received a bonus of $2,000 from the provincial government, and the Minister of the Interior will correct me if I am wrong when I say, they have received or are going to receive, $5,000 from the Dominion government. I was told in reply to a question put by me in the House the other day, that they had not yet received any money, but my information is that they are to receive $5,000 from the Dominion government. Judging by their advertisement they have made arrangements to bring out farm hands and domestic servants. They will get a bonus from those with whom they make arrangements to bring out these people, and furthermore they are entitled to the large bonus which is paid on English immigrants. I think there is a danger in this. Societies of this kind are started without any capital and they rely on the bonus for their income and for their profit, and I think there is a danger in that. The truth is that we can obtain excellent immigrants from France, but in regard to France as well as in regard to every other country we should apply the rule that we must select the immigrants and be careful in the selection. Last year 17,000 French emigration from the Basque provinces went to the Argentine Republic. They are excellent settlers, and they left France from Bordeaux, Acachon and surrounding ports. But when immigrants get to the Argentine Republic they want to know who they are and they exact a certificate from each one of them, and in France every man carries a livret which gives his full record and which states whether he is really a farm hand, what has been his business, what reputation he enjoyed in his own country, what is his record. We should impose a condition on all immigrants coming to Canada that they should have their livret which would show us their record.

Now, there is another matter to which I wish to call the attention of the government. Sometimes on these steamers from continental European ports there are as many as 2,000 immigrants and taking into account the crew and other passengers there sometimes are 2,400 persons on one of these steamers which will carry only perhaps 30 boats. That of course, would be impossible from a British port, but in the case of a vessel sailing from a continental European port the number of life boats is inadequate to save the passengers should the vessel meet with an accident which would necessitate those on board taking to the boats. I would suggest to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries that he should take this matter into his consideration, for should any frightful loss of life occur under such circumstances the government would be held responsible because of its failure to provide safeguarding legislation.

Now, Sir, as a practical conclusion I would say this: We should first and foremost have the examination of immigrants conducted on the other side before they leave for Canada. This is done largely by the United States authorities and we should follow the example. When a man and his family arrive here it is very difficult to deport the mother or the father or some of the children and let the others remain here. Very often a family of immigrants has sold all their belongings in the country whence they came, and it might be cruel to deport them except in very extreme cases indeed. We are the masters as to whom we shall admit to Canada, and it ought be possible for us to provide on the other side for an examination into the physical, mental, and moral condition of the immigrants, and to admit nobody into the Canadian family who is not thought fit to form part of it. The bonus system should be abolished altogther. I think I have stated enough with regard to the bonus to show that it is time there should be an end put to that antiquated form of encouraging immigration. I venture to predict that if it is abolished we will receive the same number of immigrants, and we will most assuredly get a better class. But if we must have a bonus system I submit to the consideration of the House and the government that we should give the bonus to the immigrants themselves. Once we have found a man courageous enough to come with his family to this country, to give up his home in the old country, to settle down here and become a respectable and a valuable citizen, why not give the bonus to that man so that it may help him on his new career in this country. Under these circumstances, if we are to give some encouragement we could not give it in any better shape than a payment to the immigrant himself. I know my own opinions on the question of immigration are advanced. My own belief is that before long we will be obliged to adopt sterner measures, we will have to adopt the head tax. We know that in the United States they began with a head tax of $1, then they raised that by degrees to $4, and unquestionably they will still further increase the head tax in the United States. If we had a reasonable head tax we would immediately cover all this vast expense of over $1,000,000, we would secure better immigrants and we would receive as many as we are now receiving. Strange as it may appear, I am sure that if we had a head tax we would not diminish the number of immigrants. It has not diminished it in the United States. We would cover the whole $1,000,000 by means of the head tax and would provide a perfect system of inspection so that the immigrants would be in better shape than they are at present, and the $1,000,000 which is absolutely lost to us under the present conditions, could be devoted to more useful purposes.

I feel that in talking to the Minister of the Interior, who is charged more particularly with the Department of Immigration, I am, in a sense, speaking to a convert. My hon. friend the Minister of the Interior when he was an ordinary member of this House, gave to the House the benefit of his experience as a long resident in the North west. He has expressed to this House in far stronger and more eloquent words than I could, exactly the opinions which I expressed this afternoon. Time and again I have heard my hon. friend before he reached the high position which he occupies today, explain and uphold the views I have expressed. I shall not quote at length, because he never varied in his opinions until the change which took him from the seat he occupied then, which was the seat of sincerity and truthfulness, to the ministerial position in which his views underwent, I regret to say, a very serious change. In 1899 the minister among other things said at page 8523 of 'Hansard':

It is said: Look at the example of the United States. There is a country which has grown great by reason of opening its doors wide to the world. Well, let us see. The United States had a population of over 30,000,000 before the general influx of European population began. We, in Canada, have a population of possibly 5,000,000. There was no possibility of the original population of the United States being overwhelmed by the influx of foreigners from Europe. But there is every possibility of the population of northwestern Canada being overwhelmed. We must not forget the difference in out situations; and we must not forget that, after an experience of many years of the open door to the world-wide immigration, the United States years ago saw their mistake, and to a very great extent, shut the door. Now, if the example of the United States was good at one time, why is it not good now? Surely, the more mature judgment of the United States is as valuable to us as the less mature. If a nation of sixty or seventy millions finds it necessary to shut the door to indiscriminate immigration, is it not more necessary for a country of five millions, especially when the part of the country affected, in which these people will have almost sovereign powers, numbers only half a million, or scarcely that.

Elsewhere my hon. friend said:

I give you the actual facts which speak for themselves. People have left their places because the Galicians came in and settled near them. These other people are the pioneers and not the Galicians. The latter came in and had the advantage of the experience of the others, and they settled in places which would be considered desirable for settlement by other people were it not for the fact that these Galicians came there. It is not necessary that they should occupy every quarter-section in order to keep other people out, because they have taken up a tract of country about 25 miles in length and there no other settlers will go, although the Galicians have not occupied every other quarter-section. On the face of it, it is plain that this is a very serious question. While we have not suffered any very serious loss so far, I would not be doing justice to the district I represent were I not to place before this House and government the fact that there is danger, very serious, to the settlement of the Northwest, and particularly that part of the country, from the influence of these Galicians.

Further on he said:

You ask where are we to get people to fill up the Northwest? I looked over the United States census a few minutes ago and I found that in 1896 there were in the United States 980,938 natives born Canadians. Of these 678,442 were English and 302,496 French. There were of Canadian descent in the United States at that time 1,700,943 people. If it is true that there were in 1890 about 1,000,000 native born Canadians in the United States, if my calculation is good for anything, it means that there has been an overflow of population from Canada to the United States of not less than 30,000 people a year for 30 years. Where, then, can we find a better field for immigration to the Northwest than right in Canada itself, right in the older provinces? I know that that was contrary to the policy of the late government, as it is the policy of the present government, but is it not worth trying to get some of that 30,000 a year to go to the Northwest?

I cordially endorse, Mr. Speaker, these and many other statements made at that time by my hon. friend when he was completely independent. Let us reflect for a moment that the Doukhobors about whom we have heard a great deal lately, cost us to bring out here according to an answer given to a question in this House about $7.07 each. We expended over $40,000 at that time and they have cost us a great deal since then by reason of their being undesirable. Would not this House agree that the sum of $100,000 almost that we have spent on this class of people, clearly not the best, clearly not what we want in this country, could have been far better spent in the repatriation of this million and more of our fellow citizens in the United States, many of whom are anxious to get back to Canada, many of whom have never taken the oath of allegiance to the United States? There is a valuable asset lying ready to return to this country and could we not better have spent all our money on these people, than on adding an undesirable element to our population? The Minister of the Interior expressed these and far stronger views at the time. I have only given the House a sample of them. How changed he is today. What is it that has brought about this change? The contact with the gentlemen whom he met when he entered the cabinet? When he was a private member of this House the Minister of the Interior was the knight errant of what I would call the noble and proper principle for Canadian immigration; but bold knights yanish very quickly under such influences as seem to have been brought to bear on him since he entered the cabinet.

I feel confident that the time has arrived when we must not only look most carefully into this subject but must study the whole subject of immigration, and I venture to say that our whole system will have to be completely remodelled. We are a young country, we are at present the cynosure of the eyes of all Europe and the world generally. Canada is an immense country, a young country, full of resources, and the trend of the tide of immigration from all over the world is towards these shores. This is the hour for us to bring to bear all necessary precautions, a certain pride, a certain prudence, which should be our characteristic as a young nation; we should see that only the very best elements enter this country and we, the older men, the descendants of those who were the pioneers of this country, who settled it, should make it our principal solicitude to have in Canada only those who are fit to be associated with us in the grand work of building up here a great commonwealth.

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). With a great deal of what my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) has placed before the House I can most cordially and heartily agree. He has not said one word too much with regard to the importance of immigration and its character. But I am sorry that he has moved a resolution in amendment to the motion to go into Supply in the terms he did and that in supporting that motion he took the ground and made the speech he did. He declares in his resolution that an aggressive immigration policy is desirable, but in his speech declares that the methods by which our immigration policy has been made successful are undesirable. My hon. friend is in the position of a successful business man who has achieved success by following certain methods and who then having achieved success decides to discard the methods which brought about that success. He admits that we have been successful in our immigration efforts, but regarding one very important part of that effort the bonusing of booking agents he has said everything he could to disparage it. While admitting that our immigration policy has been successful he has said everything he could to disparage every effort put forth by the government to encourage immigration and has been particularly desirous of discrediting this particular form of effort. I cannot follow him—and I do not think that that would be desirable or in the interests of debate—in all the positions he has taken.

In the beginning of his remarks he spoke of Canada as a country of five and a half million people with a very large territory to develop and very great opportunities and responsibilities. He then spoke of the United States a country of 80,0000 people, and of the splendid development which has there taken place. And he undertook to draw a parallel with regard to immigration policies between the two countries. He undertook to show that because a certain line of action was particularly desirable in the United States, a country of 80,000,000, that same line of action was equally desirable in Canada, a country of five and a half million people, but with an area equal to that of the United States. I have only to state the position to show how absurd his contention is. My hon. friend did not remind the House that 125 years ago, at the time the United States became an independent country, it had about the population which the Dominion of Canada has to-day. The United States has been 125 years from that date arriving at the position it now occupies. Yet my hon. friend undertakes to say that the policy of Canada should be the same as that of the United States after 125 years successful effort. That is sufficient to show how unwarranted were my hon. friend's comparisons. I do not wish to make any reflections upon his remarks; but I notice that although no one in this House has greater ability in expressing himself correctly and concisely and in transferring his thoughts to the pages of 'Hansard' without special assistance, he was careful to-day not to trust to his memory or the inspiration of the moment, but to read carefully his matured conclusions with regard to this important subject. I assume that the importance of the question was part of the warrant for this unnecessary and unusual caution on his part. I assume that another reason was the importance of the position he occupies on this subject. I take it for granted that he voices the opinion of his party on this question, that his leader left this charge upon him when he left the House, and I have every confidence that he discharged his duty as well as his leader could have done or perhaps better. But it seemed to me that there was something more than all this in the necessity for the special care he took in the expressions that were to be used. It seemed to me that my hon. friend had one eye on the effect of his remarks upon those who are particularly interested against an overplus of labour in this country, while he had another eye just as wide open to the possible effect of his remarks on the financial manufacturing and transportation interests of this country. He was evidently travelling on a very narrow road and it was necessary he should not step off it on either side. Every one will admit that if immigration is a good thing, if it is a necessity for this country in its present condition—and I have my hon. friend's word that it is—it must be upheld by methods of business of one kind or another. Something must be done if the good result aimed at is to be achieved; and when my hon. friend had been at such pains, as he was to-day, to discredit this important feature of the government's immigration policy and as far as he could, discredit all its methods, he must be satisfied to rank himself and his party against the principle of immigration to this country or against the principle of active effort on behalf of immigration. If that is the position of my hon. friend and his policy, we are very glad to take issue with him. We believe that in a country of the limited population and the vast area of Canada to-day, immigration is necessary to its progress, prosperity and general well-being. We believe that a great part of the prosperity and success which Canada enjoys to-day is due to the success of its immigration policy. My hon. friend read a great many figures which have more or less bearing on the question at issue, but he did not make what I think would have been a very illuminating statement. That would be a parallel between the flow of immigration and the increase of trade and general prosperity in Canada. He will find that the flow of immigration and the increase in the volume of trade and general prosperity of the country absolutely march together from year to year.

My hon. friend has heard, or knows, that there are people out of employment in Canada—they were out of employment during the past winter. Did he ever hear, or does he remember, whether there were people out of employment in 1896 or the years preceding? He has heard of crime in Canada within the last few months. Was Canada free from crime previous to 1896? Is it a fact that there are fewer people out of employment than there were in 1896? It is a fact and my hon. friend knows that it is a fact. Notwithstanding the vast flow of immigration in the years between, notwithstanding the sudden change in financial conditions, only a few months ago, it is a fact to-day, that there are a less number of people out of employment in this Dominion of Canada than there were eleven years ago. That means, and can only mean, that Canada needed the people who came in the intervening years—that Canada needed these people, that these people have found a place in the well-being of Canada and that we have had the benefit of their coming. My hon. friend was eloquent on the desirability of keeping Canada for the Canadians, for those of us who were born here. Well, we want Canada for ourselves. But we cannot have something and at the same time give it away; we cannot keep Canada for ourselves without keeping it to work in for ourselves. If we are going to have other people in this country to help to develop the country and make money for us, we have to give them their share in the country. We could keep Canada for ourselves—our hon. friends opposite kept Canada for us very well, they were most successful in that policy. But I do not believe that even they themselves were satisfied with it; at any rate, the country was not. If we are to have that success in the development of the country that we look forward to, that we expect, that we plan for and work for, we can only have it by an increase in the number of workers in the country; and we can get that increase in the number of workers by bringing people from other countries to help us develop this country.

In regard to this particular question of bonus, I think it is just as well that we should deal with that matter at some length. I am glad my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) dealt with it, because I believe there is a very widespread wrong impression in regard to it. And, just in passing, I must thank my hon. friend for having read to this House the remarks which I made some years ago. I would like to say to him that what I said then seemed to me just as good as it seemed to him, and it seems to me just as good to-day as it did then, and expresses my opinion and my policy—so far as I may speak of my policy—to-day, as it did then. I will not remind the House, however, that when I gave expression to these views, I had not a solitary endorser on that side of the House.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Pardon me——

Mr. OLIVER. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will give me the name of one.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. These gentlemen had not votes at that time—possibly that is the reason.

Mr. OLIVER. I do not know what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sam. Hughes) is alluding to, and I do not know whether he knows himself or not. I repeat that the views I expressed in regard to indiscriminate immigration I hold to-day as strongly as I held then. The policy of the government to-day is to carry out these views—let there be no mistake on that point. And the system of bonuses, as it is at present administered, is distinctly a system of selected immigration —so intended, so carried out, and successful in being carried out. Because bonuses are given, it does not follow that they are an inducement to indiscriminate immigration. Advertising may be necessary in carrying on a certain business, but the advertising may be one kind or it may be of another kind. Your canvasser may put forward one kind of argument or he may put forward another. So the system of offering bonuses may be put forward in one way or it may be put forward in another way. And to-day the matter does not admit of question that the system of bonuses as now administered is distinctly and specially a system looking toward selected, not toward indiscriminate, immigration.

My hon. friend was very much perturbed about the possibility of our paying bonuses on people, who, having come to Canada, pass on to the United States. He did not know how we avoid paying these bonuses, or how, if we paid them, we could possibly get the money back. I am afraid he did not study his own remarks before he made them as well as he should have done. He told the House that the United States keeps a most careful check upon all immigrants passing from Canada into the United States. He told the House what this check at the hands of the United States government rereveal to him, He had every faith that it was a complete check, that it was absolute and correct. He must know that, if this information was abialable to him, it is just as available to the officers of the Canadian Immigration Department, and that, by co-operation with the officials of the United States immigration service, it is possible for us to have the same advantage of an absolute check upon the immigrants passing through Canada to the United States—check in which the hon. gentleman reposes the most implicit confidence. Therefore, we do know, as a matter of fact, from the returns of the United States government, exactly how many, and exactly who, of the immigrants who have come to Canada have passed to the United States ; and if, upon any of these, bonus has been paid, that amount is deducted from the next amount due that booking agent on bonus account. Nothing could be simpler, nothing could be easier, and nothing could be more satisfactory it seems to me.

Mr. MONK. Why have we no report of that?

Mr. OLIVER. My hon. friend will agree with me that there are more things in heaven and earth than are covered by the reports made to this House. It seems to me that the reports made to the House, not excluding the numerous returns asked for from time to time, receive very little attention from the House or country, judging from the discussions that take place on this floor. However, if this has not been reported before, I hope the hon. gentleman will consider that it has been reported now, and that he is aware how this payment of bonus is checked by the Canadian Immigration Department.

My hon. friend (Mr. Monk) enlarged greatly upon the enormous amount that had been paid in bonuses, and the stupendous danger of paying money upon undesirables. He spoke of our receiving 100,000 immigrants from European countries and suggested to the House, so that it might be reported to the country, that there was a probability, a reasonable probability, that bonus had been paid on every one of these immigrants. Now, he knew perfectly well that there was no foundation for that statement—pardon me, I should not say that; but the figures in his hand which he read to the House showed that there was no foundation for the statement. Just to recall some of those figures, he gave the House something like this: From the United States there was an immigration in a certain year of 30,000 or 40,000 people, and on that immigration there was some $3,000 paid in bonuses. In regard to general immigration there was in 1904-5, 146,266 immigrants arriving, and bonuses were paid on 28,836, or a little less than one in five of all those that arrived in that year. In 1905-6, 189,000 arrived, and a bonus was paid on 33,608. In 1906-7, nine months, 124,667 arrived, and a bonus was paid on 14,094; that is about one in nine. In 1907-8, nine months, 235,328 immigrants arrived and a bonus was paid on 20,492, that is about one in twelve.

Mr. MONK. There are still unsettled accounts.

Mr. OLIVER. I have given my hon. friend four years ; so while it is quite true that some accounts are yet unsettled, I think they will balance each other. At any rate, we are not paying on a greater proportion of the total arrivals than I have just indicated. Now what do these figures show ? They show first that we are not paying a bonus on all immigrants who arrive ; they show that the number on which we are paying is from one in five to one in twelve of all those who arrive. That shows that our officers are exercising due diligence in carrying out our regulations and that they are exercising proper care in the payment of bonuses that my hon. friend was very careful not to give them credit for in his remarks. He gave the idea to the House that there was collusion between the officers of the department and these immigration companies. If there was collusion, certainly the moderation of these people is wonderful. If there is an improper agreement between these companies and the officers of the government, and if having that free hand my hon. friend has suggested, they only paid bonuses on one in five or one in twelve that came over, certainly they are a very moderate minded people. But in point of fact, the hon. gentleman's figures disprove his contention ; they prove absolutely that the regulations regarding the payment of bonuses are effective, and that they are honestly administered. Now, if they are effective and honestly administered, and if the bonus figures are as I have just stated them, the conclusion is irresistible that the bonuses are paid with discrimination, and are not paid indiscriminately. If we pay on only one in five, or one in ten, or one in twelve, we must pay on that small percentage for some reason, there must be some basis on which we make the payment. Now why did we pay on that small number ? Because they are the classes of people that are satisfactory to us, the kind of people that my hon. friend himself will not dare to say should not be admitted to this country, or should not even be encouraged to come here. The figures I repeat are proof absolute that the policy of the government is a policy of discrimination in regard to immigration, and that the payment of bonuses made in pursuance of that policy is effective in carrying out the policy.

My hon. friend was worried about the North Atlantic Trading Company, and he thought the North Atlantic Trading Company had numerous successors who, I suppose, he wished us to understand were even worse than the North Atlantic Trading Company, more secretive and more ravenous. He knows that the agreement with the North Atlantic Trading Company was terminated on the 30th of November, 1906. From that time forward no bonuses were paid on continental immigrants until the order in council that was passed in 1907, and then a bonus of ten shillings was paid on adults to selected booking agents in certain European countries. Under that system, during the months from March, 1907, to February, 1908, bonus was paid to these selected booking agents for immigrants of the classes described coming from certain countries of Europe, to the number of 1,211 men, 390 women, 555 children, or £930 in all. That is all the bonuses paid on continental immigrants under the system which the hon. gentleman has been pleased to term a system of indiscriminate bonusing of immigrants coming from the continent of Europe. He has been good enough to say that in all probability the bonus has been paid on Italians, and he seems to have a very strong objection to such a thing. Now for good or bad reasons the government has not paid any bonuses on people coming from Italy since some time I think in 1902. Italy was one of the countries where a bonus was paid on immigrants to the North Atlantic Trading Company, I think in the first year of its operation. But the bonus was withdrawn as regards Italy and several other southern European countries, and since then no bonus has been paid on immigrants from Italy. The total number of immigrants coming from Italy on whom bonuses were paid, were I think in all 72, and that was five or six years ago. So that whatever may be charged against the bonus system, certainly the objections which my hon. friend has expressed to the Italian residents of this country are not chargeable to that system. In order to make it perfectly plain that the policy of the government is one of discrimination, it is only necessary to read the provisions of the immigration law, to which my hon. friend gave his assent in the session of 1906. Let me remind him and others of my hon. friends on the other side that their assent was not by any means a cordial assent to the provisions of the Act. They had a great deal of fault to find with a good many of its provisions, nearly as much fault as they have to find with the provisions of the regulations regarding bonuses. But, remember that Act was passed and it is in force and it is being enforced. Nothing can be plainer than the intent of the government and of parliament at that time was that while there should be an active and energetic effort made to secure a good and desirable class of immigrants for this country it should be a part of that policy, a very necessary part of it, that there should be accompanying these aggressive measures to bring immigrants, parallel energetic and effective measures to exclude undesirable immigrants. That was the mandate of parliament expressed in the session of 1906, embodied in the provisions of the Immigration Act and has been the policy that the government has carried out ever since. My hon. friend has been pathetic as to the woes of the municipalities, especially in Ontario and Quebec brought about by reason of the presence of undesirable immigrants. The city of Montreal, it seems, has been plagued with them, and the city of Toronto has been plagued with them. I do not know but that a great many other places may have been plagued with them. I notice that the city of Montreal is very glad to publish from time to time the statement, blazoned as largely as possible, that the population of Montreal has increased over a previous period and that the city of Toronto is doing likewise. These municipalities are glad to announce that their population has increased, but you cannot have an increase of population without having an increase of people and if you have an increase of people you can hardly have it without having an increase of the disabilities and disadvantages that go with ordinary people in this country. If the city of Montreal, or the city of Toronto, or any other municipality has suffered in the way my hon. friend has said then it is the fault of Montreal, the fault of Toronto, the fault of the other municipality and not the fault of this government or of its Act or its administration. Section 32 of the Immigration law says :

All railway or transportation companies or other persons bringing immigrants from any country into Canada shall, on the demand of the Superintendent of Immigration, deport to the country whence he was brought, any immigrant prohibited by this Act, or by any order in council or regulation made thereunder, from being landed in Canada, who was brought by such railway, transportation company or other person into Canada within a period of two years prior to the date of such demand.

Section 33 says :

Whenever in Canada an immigrant has, within two years of his landing in Canada, committed a crime involving moral turpitude, or become an inmate of a gaol or hospital or other charitable institution, it shall be the duty of the clerk or secretary of the municipality to forthwith notify the minister thereof, giving full particulars.

2. On receipt of such information the minister may, on investigating the facts, order the deportation of such immigrant at the cost and charges of such immigrant if he is able to pay, and if not then at the cost of the municipality wherein he has last been regularly resident, if so ordered by the minister, and if he is a vagrant or tramp, or there is no such municipality, then at the cost of the Department of the Interior.

That is the law. That was the law passed by parliament. That is the law under which the government is working and I say that under the provisions of that law, if any municipality complains as my hon. friend says they complain, it has no ground to complain of the Immigration Department or of this Liberal government, because in every case, where representations were made by a municipality deportation has been carried out.

Mr. A. LAVERGNE. Do I understand that deportation can take place at the cost of the municipality ?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, but it can also be made at the cost of the government, but the point I wish to emphasise is that if a municipality wants an immigrant deported the provisions of the law are there and under these provisions he can be deported. If he is not deported it is not the flault of the law and it is not the fault of this government. I agree with what my hon. friend has said that it is a tremendous hardship to deport people. It is a most unfortunate thing when deportation has to be carried out. I quite appreciate the consideration of the municipalities in not asking for deportation of unfortunates who are within their limits. It is to the credit of the municipalities that they should have such a large feeling of charity, but there is the law and if they do not want to take advantage of its provisions I submit that they have no right to complain of the government which does not carry out the law except upon their demand, and especially there is no cause of complaint from our hon. friends opposite who are a party as much as we are to the provisions of this law. My. hon. friend also found fault with us because we allowed the people to get into the country that should be kept out. He said that the hurry and rush of landing passengers made it impossible to preserve an absolute check upon them on their arrival. Admitting the truth of that there is still the provision for the deportation of any undesirable who comes in. If he is discovered within two years he may be sent out. But in regard to the actual conduct of the examination at the port of landing, it is not the mere formal affair that the hon. gentleman suggests. It is true that a large number of people have to be landed in a very short time, but it is also true that on the slightest suspicion that anything is wrong with any of these people they may be taken aside from the general rush and held for examination. That is done and there is a very large number checked at the port of landing and returned from that port. He says that the provisions of the United States at these ports of landing are more efficient than ours. Possibly they are, but I would call my hon. friend's attention to the fact that to-day in the House and in the papers of this country there was blazoned abroad a complaint that the medical officer of the Immigration Department at the port of Halifax had delayed unduly a steamship load of immigrants. The same gentlemen who are demanding greater delay in the landing of immigrants, who are demanding that there shall be more particular examination, which means certainly either a very much greater expense to this country or a much greater delay to passengers, are complaining because they say that a load of passengers was unduly delayed.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Was not the complaint that the officer at Halifax was not at his business, that he was up town canvassing and that he allowed the passengers to remain on the ship ?

Mr. OLIVER. No, the complaint as stated on the floor of the House is as my hon. friend (Mr. Sam. Hughes) has stated it, but the complaint as read from the newspaper was distinctly not as my hon. friend has stated it. The newspapers did not say that the doctor was canvassing when he should be attending to his duties.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. He did not come until three o(clock in the afternoon.

Mr. OLIVER. The newspaper was careful not to say that he was not attending to his duties as he should, but it said there was a delay of the passengers and I submit that the hours mentioned did not show there was an undue delay, but quite the contrary. It shows that this statement was sent broadcast through the country just as a thousand other slanders have been sent broadcast through the country, and with just as little justification. The United States is at present pursuing a policy of exclusion of immigrants; it has no policy of bringing in immigrants. If we are to take the policy of the United States then we know exactly what to do and we can do as they are doing. I hope that if we ever have to undertake such a policy we will be more successful than they are, because, with their efforts at exclusion they received last year over one million immigrants and of that one million from 45 per cent to 50 per cent were of the very class which our friends on the other side of the House consider as being undesirable for Canada. The immigration situation in the United States differs materially from our situation. Their climatic and other conditions are attractive to a certain class of people that our country is not attractive to. Certain phases of the immigration question loom large to them where they loom small to us because of different conditions. Their attitude is one specially of exclusion but ours is not an attitude of exclusion. My hon. friend (Mr. Monk) did not dare—I use the word without offence—did not dare to put upon the records of parliament a motion declaring for an exclusion policy; he did not dare to say that he was against a policy of active immigration. And as long as this country is to have a policy of attraction for immigrants it cannot handle its immigrants as they come at the ports of landing as would a country which has a distinctly exclusion policy. We must give facilities for our immigrants to land with the least possible discomfort. We must so conduct our business at the ports that we shall not exclude those whom we desire to come here. In the United States they can exclude everybody, that is their law, that is their policy, that is their business. But it is not ours, and we cannot carry on our business at our ports as they carry on their business at theirs. I am bound to say that after all, although we do not have nearly as large a staff at our ports as they have at theirs, although we do not take up nearly as much time as they do, in the last result we have just about as effective inspection of immigrants as they have. They have, by agreement with the Canadian government, an inspection of immigrants bound for the United States, at Halifax, Montreal, Quebec and St. John, where they handle their immigrants just the same as if they were landing at United States ports. My hon. friend (Mr. Monk) was terribly worried about what became of immigrants excluded at Canadian ports by United States officials. I can tell him what becomes of them. If a passenger ticketed for the United States is excluded by a United States official at a Canadian port he goes back on the steamship he came on. The same rule prevails at New York; if an immigrant arrives at New York ticketed for Canada and if our officer there says he is to be excluded the United States authorities see that he goes back on the steamer he came on.

Mr. MONK. Have we an examining officer at Ellis Island?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. MONK. Who is he?

Mr. OLIVER. Doctor Elliot.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The minister said that the newspaper did not state that this doctor at Halifax was not charged with being absent from his post.

Mr. OLIVER. I said that the newspaper did not charge he was canvassing when he should be at his post.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I don't care whether he was canvassing or anything else, he was not attending to his business, and I will read what the newspaper says if the minister will permit me.

Mr. OLIVER. I don't think that has anything to do with the question I am dealing with now.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The newspaper says the doctor did not come there from early morning till three o'clock in the afternoon.

Mr. OLIVER. We are inquiring into the matter, and I hope to be able to lay before the House a statement with regard to it. I can assure the House that if the doctor at Halifax was not attending to his duties when he should have been, we will probably be able to get along without his valuable services. This question of dealing with immigrants on their arrival is a serious question, it is a difficult question, it is an important question. I beg to assure my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) that the government appreciates just as highly as he does the importance of excluding undesirables from this country and has taken all active measures that can be taken to achieve that end. But it is one thing to take the position that we are there simply for the purpose of excluding, and another thing to take the position that we are there principally for the purpose of bringing into our country those whom we desire to assist us in building our country up. That is the difficulty that confronts the Dominion government in dealing with this question of immigration, and we certainly think we are entitled to a fair consideration from our friends on the other side of the House in our efforts to deal with that question, rather than that we should be met by what I consider to be unfair criticism of details of the policy in regard to difficulties which cannot be avoided and which are inseparable from the carrying out of the dual policy of aggressive immigration effort on the one hand and exclusion of undesirables on the other. That I take it is the policy of this government. Let there be no mistake about it. And, one part of it is just as important as the other. It is just as important that we should use our efforts and spend our money to bring desirable immigrants to Canada as it is that we should keep out undesirable immigrants. Our friends opposite have during several sessions assumed, and their press throughout the country has assumed, that the government's policy was a policy of indiscriminate immigration, and yet there was a law on the statute-book and there was enforcement of the law at every port. My hon. friends opposite have no warrant for the position they took, and if they had ever a warrant for that position they have no warrant from this time onward. It is not long ago since in an effort to make it possible to carry out our understanding and to compel the fulfilment of our obligations, there was before the House a little amendment to the Immigration Act; a trifling little matter of some four or five lines. It was an absolute necessity to the intelligent and effective enforcement of certain provisions of the law. We have to face an immigration question on the Pacific as well as on the Atlantic. It is different on the Pacific from what it is on the Atlantic. The immigration differs at every point of the compass. It was necessary to adopt a restrictive policy on the Pacific coast. Different measures were suggested in regard to that restrictive policy but it was thought well in the interest of the country, in the interest of the empire, that a conciliatory rather than an aggressive policy should be adopted in connection with the immigration from one country at any rate. In pursuance of that idea an amicable arrangement was arrived at with that country, and it is hoped that a similar arrangement can be arrived at with another country that is in a somewhat similar position in regard to immigration. But an agreement with Japan as to the restriction of immigrants from Japan to Canada, or an agreement with the government of India as to the restriction of immigrants from India to Canada was of no value without the provision we asked this House to pass the other night. It was absolutely of no effect.

Mr. A. LAVERGNE.. Did the minister say that the regulations passed by the House were above the treaty ?

Mr. OLIVER. No I did not say anything about the treaty. The gentleman who should be my hon. friend's leader took occasion to state his opinion to the House on that subject, but I do not think he maintained it, I think he was very glad to drop it before he got very far. However, my hon. friend will have an opportunity to maintain that same position at a later stage of this debate. My statement was that the agreement we arrived at with Japan and the agreement we hoped to arrive at with the government of India, agreements which are absolutely necessary in pursuance of our immigration policy and our trade policy on the Pacific coast, did not receive enthusiastic endorsation from our friends on the other side. I was surprised to see that. After the question had been threshed out for an hour, and the amendment had been twisted in every direction, when it was explained to our hon. friends that it was a matter of urgency to have this little amendment to the immigration law passed that evening, the Prime Minister was refused that courtesy, he was told it could not be passed, although our friends opposite had been informed that the date of its going into effect might be deferred for three or four weeks, and that as a consequence very serious complications might have arisen. I was glad to see when the House met the next day that our friends had experienced a change of heart; there was nothing wrong with the little amendment to the Immigration Act and it went through without change.

Mr. SPROULE. I think the minister should be fair enough to admit that it was the amendment of my hon. friend (Mr. Sam. Hughes) that prevented it going through the first night. He was not here the next night and in his absence it went through; that was the only cause of delay the first night.

Mr. OLIVER. My hon. friend from Victoria (Mr. Hughes) has a great deal to answer for on that side of the House, but I do not think he was entirely responsible in this case.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Yes, I was wholly and entirely responsible for holding back the Bill, and if it had been held back for ten minutes longer the next evening it would have been delayed still more.

Mr. OLIVER. I am not here to argue. I merely state the facts. I instance this to show that the government's policy is well defined, that it is a continuous policy, and that it does not receive that support from our friends on the other side that their remarks from time to time would indicate it should receive at their hands. We have not only the provisions of this Immigration Act which I have already mentioned to the House, but have found it necessary on account of the changed conditions in this country during the last few months to make certain changes in the administration of the law such as we are empowered to make by the provisions of the Act; because my friends will notice that while the Immigration Act contains certain very definite provisions, it also recognizes that new conditions may arise at any time and that it is necessary that the government should have the power to meet these new conditions as they arise. Provision is made in the Act for the passing of regulations by order in council to meet such conditions as may arise from time to time. Taking advantage of that provision in the Act, last fall when there was a change in the condition of the country that seemed to make it very desirable, we provided that there should be a money qualification in certain circumstances on the part of immigrants arriving in this country. That I hope my hon. friends will consider is not an indication of a policy of unrestricted immigration. On representations made by our agent in Great Britain, Mr. Bruce Walker who was then assistant superintendent of Immigration in London, in regard to the work of the charitable associations in Great Britain and its effect upon the immigration situation in Canada, we passed on the 25th of February another regulation which provided that persons coming to Canada by assisted passage could be excluded unless they were approved before they left their homes by our agent in that country. This is surely not an indication of a policy of unrestricted immigration. Surely these regulations bear out my statement that the avowed policy of this government is a policy of selected immigration, is a policy of restricted immigration if you like, while at the same time, it is a policy of aggressive immigration.

In order that there may be no mistake about the attitude the government assumes the government aware of its responsibilities, aware of the requirements of the country and carrying out its policy of selected immigration makes announcement in large type on the first page of its latest publications, the following :

IMPORTANT.

Farmers, farm labourers, railway construction men and female domestic servants are the only people the Canadian Immigration Department advise to emigrate to Canada. All others should get definite assurance of employment in Canada before leaving home and have money enough to support them for a time in case of disappointment.

That is an expression of the immigration policy of the government of Canada to-day as set out in the printed representations they make to the people whom they desire to come to the country. How, in the face of that, can my hon. friend suggest that our policy is a policy of unrestricted or indiscriminate immigration ? We cannot be held responsible for the efforts of charitable associations. We cannot be held responsible for the movement of free citizens of other countries who choose to come to this country. We can only be held responsible for the efforts we make, and we make those efforts only to secure the classes of people that I mention. No one in this House, even at this time, will suggest that this is not desirable, that it is not in the best interests of the Dominion of Canada that reasonable efforts should be made to induce these classes of people to come to this country.

What was the condition a year ago in Canada? At that time, from one end of Canada to the other, there was a demand for unskilled labour. The demand was loud and insistent from every part of the country. It was proclaimed in the newspapers that railway construction was being held back because there were not sufficient people to work on the railway; that the factories could not fill their orders because they could not get operatives; that the farmers could not work their land because they could not get the farm help they required. And at the same time the broad fields in the Northwest were waiting settlement. What policy, in such circumstances, could be suggested for a progressive government but a policy of aggressive immigration? It is not so very long since we had a session of parliament here. The intervals between sessions seem to be getting shorter as the country gets older. It is just about a year ago to-day, or a little over, that we had a discussion in this House on the question of immigration, and some of our friends opposite then relieved their minds on this question. At that time there seemed to have been a rather strong sentiment in favour of immigration. My hon. friend from Montmagny (Mr. Lavergne) had some thing to say. I fancy he will follow the lead of my hon. friends on the other side and declare against immigration to-day. A year ago my hon. friend from Montmagny said:

> There is another feature of the immigration policy of this government which I desire to call to the attention of this House and the country in general. It is the most unjust way in which French immigration and the province of Quebec has been treated.

Mr. OLIVER

Mr. A. LAVERGNE. I did not say that. The hon. gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. OLIVER. He did not say it ?

Mr. A. LAVERGNE. I did not mean it either.

Mr. OLIVER. He did not say anything in the whole course of his remarks.

Mr. A. LAVERGNE. Why then this reference?

Mr. OLIVER. In my opinion he did not say anything, but this is as near as he came to saying anything, and what I gather from it was that he was dissatisfied because the government had not used greater endeavours in order to secure more people for the province of Quebec.

Mr. A. LAVERGNE. The hon. gentleman is again mistaken, but no doubt that is as near as he can come to understanding what I said.

Mr. OLIVER. My hon. friend is absolutely correct. That is as near as I can claim to an understanding of his remarks. I submit them, as they appear in 'Hansard' to the House for special consideration. He said further :

> I could also give figures to show that the French immigrant has cost less to this country than the British, and I only mention this to show that if the Department of the Interior were not so savagely opposed to it, it would be easy to bring French emigrants to this country.

We had an hon. member in this House at that time, who, we are pleased to see, is not among us now. I refer to the hon. member for Labelle.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. OLIVER. He discussed the question of immigration. He said:

> My views are these. Because the fathers of confederation decided, and decided wisely, that this should be a dual country—French in its origin, British by assimilation, taking from both races and both civilizations its best moral, social and political characteristics—I maintain that the equilibrium between the two should be maintained, and it is in the interests of all British citizens in Canada that French-speaking population should be developed.

Mr. A. LAVERGNE. Hear, hear.

Mr. OLIVER. My hon. friend to-day is in favour of more immigration.

Mr. A. LAVERGNE. Hear, hear. The hon. gentleman ought to remember too that we favoured interior immigration from one province to another which the government opposed then and opposes still.

Mr. OLIVER. I shall have something to say on that later on. Our friend from Labelle (Mr. Bourassa)—after a considerable amount of remarks which I think were as difficult to bring to a conclusion as the remarks of my hon. friend from Montmagny (Mr. Lavergne)—also said:

But I claim that you can get from Scotland from Ireland, from England, from Belgium, from the north end of France, from Brittany, from Auvergne, from Franche Comté a most desirable class of immigrants. You can get from these mountains a hardy race of men who would come to our eastern provinces and take up small farms because any of them have a small capital at their disposal of $1,000, $2,000, $5,000 and as much as $10,000, who will go into the older provinces as some of them have done without any inducement whatever from the government without any literature being distributed amongst them, having come of their own will because they happened to learn something about Canada. . . . I claim that we have room for a large number—perhaps not for hundreds of thousands.

I think the House will admit that the then hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) was advocating an increase of French immigration to Quebec, and my hon. friend from Montmagny will not say that that occasion was the only one, in the course of his parliamentary experience, on which, when my hon. friend from Labelle said 'yes' that my hon. friend from Montmagny did not say: 'Me too.'

Mr. A. LAVERGNE. Does the hon. gentleman want an answer ?

Mr. OLIVER. No, I am satisfied. But my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) also had something to say on that occasion. He was rather strongly in favour of immigration at that time. He did not have so many faults to find with the policy of the government. He said:

Let us look at the present situation in France, and let us ask what the Canadian government has done to induce French settlers to come to Canada. . . . Nothing has been done by the government to induce such people to settle in Canada. . .

There are at present in France perhaps, ten millions of people who would be prepared if, in the proper way, the advantages of this country were shown to them, to consider emigration to Canada, large numbers of whom would come to this country—eligible people who would make excellent settlers and would quickly become accustomed not only to our political institutions but to our national life in every sense.

To-night he has found serious fault with this government because it has spread its efforts in regard to immigration to the extent of paying a bonus to booking agents on settlers coming from France, and because having offered that bonus and continued it for the year at ten shillings, they increased it to $5 per head at the beginning of this year. He has experienced a change of heart or else he would not have found fault with the government for using reasonable endeavours to secure a desirable class of immigrants from France to Canada.

Mr. MONK. Because you are not taking the proper means.

Mr. OLIVER. My hon. friend said that we should not give bonuses to booking agents, but that we ought possibly to pay bonuses to the immigrants themselves. Well, that policy was adopted by his friends when they were in power and it was a failure. It was found not desirable and was abandoned by them. This government has not seen fit to revive it. Such a policy would be the policy of assisted immigration, and assisted immigration is distinctly contrary to the immigration policy of this government. Let that be distinctly understood.

Mr. MONK. You assisted a great deal too much I think.

Mr. OLIVER. Except in the case of the Icelanders, in which a bonus is paid the shipping company, thus reducing the fare to that extent—and no one will question the propriety of using reasonable endeavours to get Icelandic immigration—with that exception this government has not spent any money in assisting immigration or with regard to assisted immigration. And I want to impress on the House that we have taken the position that assisted immigration is not desirable as a rule. We have taken power to absolutely exclude it unless it is first approved by our own officers in the country from which it starts. That makes our position on the subject of assisted immigration perfectly and absolutely clear.

Mr. MONK. You assisted the Doukhobor —paid $50,000 for that purpose.

Mr. OLIVER. We did assist the Doukhobors. I think that what was done in regard to these people was that some concession was made, the same that was made in the case of the Icelanders—the bonus was used as a part payment on the transportation. There was some exception made—I am not now clear exactly what it was—to the rule in the case of the Doukhobors. But, as I had occasion to say to the House a little while ago, when this question was up before, what was done in regard to the Doukhobors was not done in the dark, but in the full light of day, and, with one or two exceptions, on which I need not dwell, the action of the government received the absolute assent of this House and of the press and the people of Canada. I say it is too late in the day to call in question the policy of the government in regard to the Doukhobors.

Mr. MONK. I do not like to interrupt the hon. gentleman; but what does he say regarding a trachomatous immigrant who is kept for six months in the hospital?

Mr. OLIVER. A trachoma patient is required to pay his own expenses in the hospital, and, if he does not pay, the steamship company must pay or he goes back—that is all there is in regard to that. I want to make it perfectly clear that the hospital treatment of trachoma is at the cost of the immigrant or of the shipping company. The immigrant arrives suffering from a disease which renders him undersirable. But it is a curable disease. Under our law, he is liable to exclusion and to be sent back on the steamship, and unless the steamship company is willing to pay the charges necessary to bring about his cure, back he goes and that is all there is about it.

Mr. MONK. That is not the law.

Mr. OLIVER. Well, it is the practice. And if there is no law for it, I hope he will not be one to raise a question as to the system under which we are acting. It seems a reasonable and proper system and one that exactly meets the views he expresses. So far as the Pacific coast is concerned we have there, in view of our present attitude in regard to immigration, ceased to give treatment in these hospitals; so, when a trachoma patient arrives on the Pacific coast, he is sent back on the ship on which he came. Another hon. member of the House had something to say on the occasion of that debate :

This shows that the policy of the Immigration Department is to direct these immigrants to the western lands——

That was the ground of complaint.

—and if, perchance, the agent of any farmer would like to offer one of these immigrants employment—and we have farms in the vicinity of the city of Quebec where the immigrants would find a welcome and an opportunity to work for an honest wage—the making of such an offer specially forbidden.

Another gentleman on that side of the House on that occasion said:

But I have also another complaint to make with regard to our immigration methods. It appears that the whole effort of the government is directed toward procuring settlers for the northwest. But there are other parts of Canada beside Saskatchewan, Alberta and the territories.

And my hon. friend from Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) said :

I am not so much complaining that our people go to the northwest as I am that our farmers cannot get the help they require.

And the hon. member for Grenville (Mr. J. D. Reid) who, I regret, is not now in his place, said :

So far as Ontario is concerned, it is short of help.

Another hon. member who is not now in his place, the hon. member for East Elgin (Mr. Marshall) said :

A good deal has been said about farm labourers, but nothing about women. Would it not be well to encourage to come into Canada, good strong women and girls? Manufacturers in this country are handicapped very much by shortness of female help, particularly the canners. I would like the minister to consider whether it would not be well to encourage women to come over, and give a bonus on bringing them as well as the men.

And another hon. gentleman on that side, whom I see in his place, said :

I will ask the government to make a more intelligent and more active propaganda in France where we have but two agencies. I should think that our efforts should be directed especially towards securing emigrants in provinces.

And so on. A year ago, our friends on the other side were just as anxious for immigration as we were. This year, because there has been a change in the conditions, they are prepared to take a stand against immigration, while, saving themselves by the terms of the resolution they put before the House.

There is a feature of this immigration question that I think should be discussed and considered very carefully. My hon. friend (Mr. Monk) did me the honour to read to the House some remarks I made some years ago in which I spoke of the number of Canadians then in the United States. According to the theories I have heard advanced in the House this session in regard to this immigration question, Canada should have been in a very much more prosperous condition, or, at any rate, the working people of Canada should have been in a very much more prosperous condition, because of that large movement of Canadians to the United States. If our working people are at a disadvantage because we bring in people from other countries, or because people come in from other countries, surely there must have been an advantage because our own people went out of our own country. Was Canada prosperous and were our working people advantaged because of the fact that one million Canadians found their homes in the United States previous to 1890? Were the conditions in any part of Canada better because of that movement of our people away from our country? Is it not a fact that the loss of that population to Canada was the greatest loss she ever suffered? Was it not that loss of population more than any other cause that prevented the progress of Canada during these years? And what class in Canada benefited by that exodus which was deplored at that time, but which, I supopse our friends opposite should congratule themselves upon now? It is not the fact that increased population decreases employment, nor is it the fact that decrease of population increases employment. The contrary is the fact. It is a fact that never in Canada were wages so high or so much work available as there has been during the past two or three years when we have been getting more people in one year than we got in twenty years before; when, I say,—very much better than that—our own people, instead of going to the United States have been remaining in Canada.

Mr. SPROULE. Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) say that they are not going to the United States yet?

Mr. OLIVER. I say there is not one of our native Canadian population going to the United States for ten that went fifteen years ago.

Mr. SPROULE. The United States report of last year says that in 1907, there were 19,918 Canadians went to the United States.

Mr. MONK. It is the same as ever—there is no change.

Mr. OLIVER. I can only say that my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) has more faith in the United States returns than I have. I think I can produce evidence that is better than any return. Previous to 1896, there was in some of the New England cities an absolute preponderance of French Canadians. At the same time there was not in the Canadian Northwest any appreciable increase of Canadian population. These facts are within the knowledge of every man in this House, and they do not need to be supported by reports of immigration officers or by census returns. That there are a million and more of Canadians in the States, any person who travels in the States will know. Go to any of the large cities in the United States and you will find a Canadian club ; go into any legislature of the western States and you will find Canadians occupying positions of more or less prominence. In every part of the United States are our people to be found. They went there instead of going to populate our own country, but to-day our country is being populated by our own people. We are getting people from other countries, it is true, but the most satisfactory feature about it is that our own people are going to our own Canadian Northwest, so that notwithstanding the inrush of people from Europe and the United States, to-day Canadians are the dominating influence through the four western provinces. That result has been achieved under the present immigration policy that my hon. friend deplores as one likely to de-Canadianize this country. It was the policy of hon. gentlemen opposite that de-Canadianized Canada, and that Canadianized every one of the northern States. This country cannot stand still, it must either go forward or backward. The immigration policy of this government is a policy of going forward ; the policy of my hon. friends when they were in office was a policy of going backward. To-day the hon. gentleman, seeing a little change in the financial condition of the country, thinks he sees an opportunity to secure a party advantage at the expense of the country, and he proceeds to take it, and no doubt will have able assistance from hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House. We have confidence in the intelligence of the Canadian people and their ability to understand the situation. We deny absolutely the accusation that the policy of this country is one of indiscriminate immigration. It is a policy of discriminating immigration, a policy that only looks to getting the best and excluding those that are not the best, so far as that is possible. On that line we are working and on the results achieved we desire to be judged.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE (Montmagny). I think I can congratulate the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) in having deserved the compliments of the Minister of the Interior. The hon. member for Jacques Cartier has been able to speak of French immigration without being accused by the Minister of the Interior of raising racial prejudices, and creed questions in this House. Last year when the debate on immigration took place, to which the minister referred, my hon. friend stated that I had the honour of occupying a unique position in this House. I am sure he has found out to-night that I do not occupy a unique position in this House, and if he goes out into the country he will find that I do not occupy a unique position. Evidently the hon. gentleman has kept in his mind the debate of last year, but he has not answered the arguments made by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier to-day, or the arguments made last year by Mr. Bourassa and myself. For instance, we stated last year that although the government had cancelled its agreement with the North Atlantic Trading Company, they were still paying bonuses to booking agents ; the minister has not contradicted that. We stated last year that the policy of the North Atlantic Trading Company had been a failure, and the minister has not contradicted that to-night, nor did he last year. We stated last year that the system of paying bonuses to bring immigrants into this country had the effect of bringing people into this country of an undesirable character, and the minister has not contradicted that. We stated last year that the system of bonuses was still in existence ; the minister contradicted that last year, but he did not contradict it to-night. We stated last year that they were bringing all kinds of people to this country under the present system ; the hon. member for Jacques Cartier stated that to-night, and the minister has not dared to contradict it.

Mr. OLIVER. If I did not deny it before, I certainly take the opportunity of denying it now. But with my limited knowledge of English, I am under the impression that I did deny it.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. I am glad the hon. gentleman denies it now. I will prove that the present immigration policy of the government is a dangerous one, and will have the result of breaking up confederation ; I will prove it by the words of the minister himself when he had no portfolio to safeguard. Take the commonsense point of view. Is there an hon. member in this House, including the minister himself, who will say that the paying of bonuses to booking agents who have nothing in common with this country, who do not know any thing about this country, has not the result of bringing to Canada a mass of immigrants without any regard to quality ? As the hon. member for Jacques Cartier stated this afternoon, there is no man in this country who would adopt the same policy for a herd of animals ; there is no man who would pay a bonus to an agent in Europe to send him a number of animals without paying any regard to their quality. But let us see what the minister said himself when he was plain Frank Oliver. In 1902 he used these words :

Let me say further that it appears to me to have been a mistake in the past to have spent so much money as we have in paying bonuses to steamship companies for the conveyance of immigrants, and for this reason: We made the steamship companies by that means our immigration agencies——

Where is the difference this year ? If we are not making the steamship companies our immigration agents, we are making the men who sell tickets on those ships our booking agents.

—and it did not make any difference to the steamship companies what the character of the immigrant was, or where he was from so long as they got the bonus. It seems to me, from my point of view, that this is a most undesirable system and a most undesirable expense, and I would ask that it be not continued. . . . To depend on the steamship companies is to put a premium upon the worst rather than upon the better.

That is what I said a year ago, and what the hon. member for Jacques Cartier said to-night. The minister spoke thus also:

I would like to say still further and to urge upon the House at large, upon hon. members who come from all parts of this Dominion, that the immigrant who is of the most benefit to this country in every way is the man of our own blood, namely, the native born Canadian, who, finding it necessary to shift his ground, must go either to the United States or to the Canadian Northwest.

I will prove that this government has been directing immigration from other countries, and opposing the movement from our own east to the west. But the minister, when he was still plain Frank Oliver, in 1903, said this :

Something has been said, I understand, about the paying of bounties or commissions to induce immigration. To my mind, if ever there was need for that system, that need has passed.

The payment of bounties and commissions has a tendency to bring the less desirable rather than the more desirable class of people. The work of introducing immigration is carried on in many different ways. Some are better than others; and I would take the liberty of suggesting to the House that there is a certain system being carried on to day which is in every way desirable, a system which is producing the best possible results and which may very well be enlarged so as to continue these results.

But the hon. minister, before he accepted a portfolio, said that the payment of bounties had the result of bringing a less desirable class of immigrants into the country. I could go on and quote statements of the minister extending over a series of years. Even since he has been a minister he has expressed himself on this subject and notably when the North Atlantic Trading Company contract was announced. The reason given by the minister for the contract was because the government did not want to pay bounties and bonuses to individual booking agents. This is what the minister said in scoring a point against the Conservatives:

Now, to whom did our hon. friends on the other side pay the bonuses? They paid them to individual booking agents—so their letters show. To whom did this government pay in the years preceding the contract with the North Atlantic Trading Company? They paid to individual booking agents.

To whom do they pay now? Not to any individual booking agents but to the North Atlantic Trading Company, a collective interest of booking agents. And do they get value for their payments? Judged by the standard laid down in the letter of Sir Charles Tupper they do. And any man of common sense, not wrapped by political bias, will agree that that is the main question.

Since the contract has been denounced I want to ask the minister if the government pay bonuses to individual booking agents. The reason given for entering into the contract with the North Atlantic Trading Company was a false reason, or, if it were not false, how is it that the government has denounced this contract and has gone back to the system of paying bounties and bonuses to individual booking agents? The minister has been meditating on this question for twelve years and he has not given us an answer yet.

We heard this afternoon from the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) that, with the class of people we are getting, assimilation would not be possible. The minister says that in the Northwest there is everywhere the stamp of Canadian civilization. Let us open the report of the Department of the Interior and read a list of the immigrants arriving for one month. It is as follows:

African, south; Australian, Austrian, N.E. S.; Bohemian, Buckowinian, Croatian, Galician, Hungarian, N.E.S.; Slovak, Belgian, Bulgarian, Chinese, Dutch, French, German, N.

E.S.; Alsace-Lorraine, Prussian, English, Welsh, Scotch, Irish, West Indian, Jamaican, Greek, Hebrew, N.E.S.; Hebrew, Russian; Hebrew, Polish; Hebrew, Austrian; Hebrew, German; Italian, Japanese, Newfoundland, New Zealand, Portuguese, Poles, N.E.S.; Poles, Austrian; Poles, German; Poles Russian; Persian, Roumanian, Russian, N.E.S.; Finns, Spanish, Swiss, Servian, Danish, Icelandic, Swedish, Norwegian, Turks, Armenians, Egyptians, Syrians, Arabians, U.S.A. Citizens, India.

This is the stamp of Canadian civilization that is being put upon the Northwest. We find in a total of 109,000 immigrants, no less than 9,000 returned Canadians. Let us go a little further. My hon. friend from Jacques Cartier pointed out this afternoon that there had been a movement started in the United States against immigration, but let us see the proportion of immigrants who come into this country and the proportion of immigrants who go to the United States. Let me point out to this House, that a man who knows something about immigration, an economist of world-wide celebrity, P. Leroy-Beaulieu, says that the immigration is greater than the natural increase of the Canadian born population. What was the population of the United States when they were receiving about the same proportion of immigrants that we are now receiving? As my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier says then they had fifty million of a population. To-day the Americans, with a population of eighty-seven million cannot assimilate one million immigrants a year; that is 115 immigrants for every 10,000 of the population. Canada, with a population of only six million received 215,000 immigrants in 1905-6. Last year we received about 300,000, or 360 to every 10,000 of the population and next year it will probably increase to 400,000 or 500,000. We have received in six years 736,000 immigrants. I see by 'Hansard' that the unit of representation was, in 1903, 25,736. We have received enough people to supply 29 new counties in Canada. In four years at that rate we will have received enough to make 60 new counties, or 5 less than there are in Quebec, and still we are giving to the Northwest the stamp of Canadian civilization and we are assimilating this new population. The immigration which comes from the British isles has been proved to be the least desirable class in the Northwest, and this is attributable to the bonus system because it has prevented us from getting the best immigration which we could receive and that is immigration from the British isles. I am reluctant to weary the House with figures, but I desire to make a comparison between the position of the United States and that of Canada with respect to immigration. The following table will show the proportion of immigration to population of the United States from 1790 onward:

Year.	Population.	Periods.	Total immigration.
1790.....	3,929,214	1790-1800	about 75,000
1800.....	5,308,423	1800-1810	75,000
1810.....	7,239,881	1810-1820	75,000
1820.....	9,638,453	1820-1830	151,824
1830.....	12,866.020	1830-1840	599,125
1840.....	17,069,453	1840-1850	1,713,251
1850.....	23,191,876	1850-1860	2,598,210

The United States never received immigration exceeding 11 per cent of the population, while according to the figures of the Department of the Interior in Canada, from 1901 to 1911, Canada will receive foreign-born immigrants to the extent of 37 per cent of the population. When the United States had fifty million of a population they did not receive more than 300,000 immigrants per year. President Roosevelt and the scientists and economists of that country are alarmed and are doing what they can to exclude immigrants. I could quote more figures to show the House that since 1850 in the United States the foreign-born population was never more than 15 per cent of the total population. In Canada the foreign-born population is 12·7 per cent of the total population. The total population of Canada was at the last census, I believe, 5,371,315, and the foreign-born population is a little more than 684,000. In four years, according to the estimate of the Department of the Interior, the total population of Canada will probably be about eight million and the foreign-born population will be about two and a half million; that is 30 per cent of foreign-born population. But, as to this assimilation, let us hear a voice from the west; let us hear a man who ought to know something about assimilation of population in the Northwest, and here is what was said by Mr. Roblin, Premier of Manitoba, speaking at Pictou on June the 10th, 1907:

To show that I am not mistaken in my conclusions upon this point, allow me to point out this fact—that in the last ten years, according to the figures compiled by the Immigration Department of the Dominion, there have come into Canada, in round figures, 900,000 souls. Of these, only 350,000 were British born, the balance (550,000) are either Americans—citizens of the United States to the South of us—or people from continental Europe. I may say that, according to the same authority, a larger proportion of those who came to us who were not British born, covering this period, came from the United States, than came from Europe.

Now, it is only a logical conclusion to say that the same ratio at least will be maintained in the future as has obtained in the past. It is a reasonable statement, therefore, to say that a country of eighty millions of people immediately adjoining, who have no more free lands to offer to their people, will naturally, by virtue of the natural increase of population, continue in much larger percentage to emigrate to our 'last west,' as it is called. The same with continental Europe. They have 400,000,000 of people to draw from, and they are coming from every nation, while we have only about 40,000,000 to draw from in so far as the United Kingdom is concerned.

Foreigners will control.

Without any doubt whatever, it is only a matter of five, certainly not more than ten, years with the same ratio of immigration that has characterized the last five years, when the foreign-born citizens of western Canada can, if they choose, take all matters of government absolutely into their own hands.

That speech was published in the press all over the Dominion; it was read by the people of the west and I am told that the popularity of the Premier of Manitoba has not suffered thereby. Even the Minister of the Interior himself speaking of the North Atlantic Trading Company said that this system of paying bonuses to individual booking agents cannot be checked. More than that, we have in the old country, hypnotized immigrants to come to Canada and I do not want any better proof of that than the statement of Mr. Bruce Walker contained at page 66 of the report of the Department of the Interior for 1907, where he says:

Since I have been in charge of the propaganda here, under your Lordship, I have sought to impose a higher standard upon those classes of emigrants over which we have control particularly, and over all emigrants generally. I disapprove strongly of efforts to paint Canada as a 'land flowing with milk and honey,' or a place providing an easy existence for those who readily tired of work. The greatest attraction of our country is the ready results that follow energy, ambition and determination.

Here, according to the report of an officer of the department, Canada has been represented as a land flowing with milk and honey. We have been told by the Minister of the Interior that we do not pay bonuses for immigrants to come to this country, and that the bonus to the booking agent is simply for advertising Canada. Does the minister pretend that the advertising of Canada in the old country is read only by farm labourers or railway navvies and those of the classes we desire to bring here? Does he not know that the advertising of Canada reaches every class of the population there and that it brings to our country the disabled and degenerate. Such representation have even a more decided effect on a population of destitutes. I say that the immigration agents have brought immigrants to this country under false pretenses and I further say that when the government paid these bonuses they had no proof that they were paid on account of farm labourers or navvies, or those whom the regulations prescribed it should be paid on. I want no better evidence of that than that which is given by Mr. Scott, superintendent of immigration, before the Committee on Colonization and Agriculture, and which I quote:

By Dr. Sproule:

Q. As I understand it you merely ask immigrants whether they contemplate following agricultural pursuits when they come here?—A. We do at the ocean ports.

Q. That is all the information you have as to the classes to which they belong?—A. Yes, they are questioned as to their age and occupation.

Q. What occupation they have been following?—A. What occupation they have been following in the old country and the manifest is prepared by the purser of the ship who is not a government officer and certified to by the master of the vessel.

Therefore, the certificate of the occupation of the man who comes to this country is prepared by the very people who have an interest in bringing him here and receiving the bonus, as is proven by the evidence of an officer of the department. I quote further from the evidence of Mr. Scott:

I should have thought a government officer would look after that work and see that nobody but certain classes were sent out?—A. Anybody who has the money can buy a ticket.

Q. But if he has the money will he get the bonus?—A. No, but I say any one can buy a ticket in the old country.

Q. The reason I ask is because I know of several men who came out here; I was told they were farm labourers and had come out to follow farming and I took the trouble to inquire and in the case of six or seven there was not a single man who was on a farm in his life?—A. That might be quite true.

Here is the superintendent of immigration saying that bonuses might be paid on men who were brought out as farm labourers and who never had worked on a farm in their lives. The examination of Mr. Scott continued:

Q. And yet they were sent out and called farm hands?—A. No, not called farm hands. They were sent out here to follow agricultural pursuits and on an English farm the labourer receives as good money as he receives here and in addition he gets work all the year round instead of only seven or eight months.

Q. It seems to me that is not the question; it is whether we were misled or not in reference to the class of people coming out?—A. I do not think so. The manifest shows the evidence.

Q. What manifest?—A. The manifest signed by the purser of the ship.

Q. Do you not pay the booking agent?—A. Only if they are agriculturists or intend to follow that occupation in this country.

Therefore a man can buy his ticket from a booking agent and the booking agent does not care about Canada, he cares only about the bonus he is going to get and the commission on the ticket and he says to the man: Just say that you are a farm labourer or that you want to work on a railway and you will get into Canada. The examination of Mr. Scott continued:

By Mr. Wilson:
Q. If they say they intend it ?—A. Yes.
By Mr. Ross:
Q. Do I understand they make a declaration to that effect?—A. They answer questions at the port.
Q. With reference to the Salvation Army do you insist upon the same class that you pay the bonus on?—A. The same class.
Q. Or do you pay the bonus on all they bring?—A. No, on the same class.
Q. What was the percentage they bring?—A. I think possibly their percentage has been a little higher than some of the others.

I want the House to remember well what has been said about the Salvation Army because when we come to consider the ports of Canada we will see the acts of the Salvation Army.

Q. Has the arrangement been completed with reference to the land they get in the Northwest?—A. I know nothing about the land.
Q. Will that not come under your office to some extent?—A. No, we have nothing to do with the land in the west.
Q. You have nothing to do with where they shall be sent?—A. No.
Q. Who does that?—A. The land branch, I suppose.

Here is the Superintendent of Immigration who does not know where the immigrant goes in this country.

Mr. SPROULE. Hear, hear.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. But we are told by the Minister of the Interior that the bonus is paid on the immigrant, not to the immigrant. As I have said we have been advertising Canada as a patent medicine is advertised and what has been the result ? The result has been, as with any patent medicine, that the diseased have been coming to this country. I care not what kind of disease they are suffering from, mental, physical or moral, it is certain that they have been coming to Canada. As the minister himself said when he was a plain member of this House, the best advertisement we can have for this country is a contented settler and as the minister has proven to-night by trying to show that we do not pay a bonus on the greater part of the immigrants we receive. Stopping the bonus will not stop immigration coming to this country but we will have the quality instead of having the quantity sent to us by different booking agents to secure the bonus paid by our country. To-night, as last year when the immigration question was threshed out in this House, the minister tried to prove that we were not paying bonuses on many of these immigrants sent out by organizations but later when the subsidies came down it was seen that the immigration agents of the government, such as the Church Army, were asking in England for such immigrants as these, tramps, loafers, ex-convicts, drunkards hooligans. That is the kind of immigration we have been receiving in this country, and these immigrants have been canvassed by the very agents of this government. Has this government disallowed the Church Army? I have searched in every record of the government, in every record of the Department of the Interior, and I have not seen that the Church Army has been disallowed, except that this year a certain number of their immigrants were sent back. Why? Because last year we denounced this policy of the government and were called little Canadians by that broad, that immense Canadian, the present Minister of the Interior.

The Salvation Army is still an immigration agent of this department and what have we seen in Quebec? I have no hesitation in saying and I dare the minister to contradict me, that nine-tenths of the immigration which has been sent out by the Salvation Army is bad, and I want no other evidence than that of the doctors who receive the immigrants at the port of Quebec. And I say this too, that there has been some collusion between the Salvation Army and the officers at Quebec.

Mr. OLIVER. My hon. friend has asked me to deny a statement he has made and I do not want his statement to go on record without my denial.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. Then I defy the minister to have an inquiry into the Salvation Army and the immigrants it has brought into Quebec, and to ask the doctors at Quebec to give their evidence; but I hope this time the government will not stop the mouths of the witnesses who give evidence. There has been collusion between the officers at Quebec and the Salvation Army, and I have it from the very officers who receive the immigrants at Quebec that before they pass the medical examination of the officers of his department the immigrants of the Salvation Army go to the barracks and get the password of the Salvation Army at Quebec and then go back and answer the doctor. The minister cannot contradict that if he looks at the correspondence produced.

Mr. OLIVER. The hon. member is making a great many statements which he puts forward as statements of fact. The statement he has made just now that members of the Salvation Army or immigrants coming out under the auspices of the Salvation Army are treated any differently from any other immigrants who come out, so far as my knowledge goes, is absolutely incorrect; and if I can by any means demonstrate that it is the fact we will have a change in the immigration service at Quebec immediately.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. I accept the personal denial of the minister but you will notice that it is not an official denial and I repeat it officially——

Mr. OLIVER. We will make this as official as we can. If my hon. friend will give me name, place and date, I will make it official inside of twenty-four hours.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. All last summer, the immigrants brought out by the Salvation Army were sent to the barracks and there they got the password from the Salvation Army officers to answer the doctors of the Immigration Department. Not only that but a report was made to the Interior Department here and after that report was made, it was understood by Mr. Doyle and the immigration doctors at Quebec, I think Dr. Nadeau and Dr. Potvin, that if there were one hundred Salvation Army immigrants they would pass before the doctor first but if less they would go to the barracks first. That is the statement I have to make and on it I would like the department to throw more light.

Mr. OLIVER. I will guarantee all the light that is possible and if the statement is true I will consider myself under very serious obligations to my hon. friend for making it.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. I knew the minister would be under obligations. Last year we made statements and he made changes, and this year he will make more. If he will have an investigation of the methods at Quebec he will learn many things that will enlighten him and he will be still more grateful to me.

But the minister has told us that if the immigrant was not satisfactory he would be deported. If he came here in transit through Canada to the United States he would be deported, and was generally deported, and no immigrant who was brought into this country and was found undesirable was not deported. Let us look at the statement. First of all we see no report of the immigrants refused by the United States who have been deported by this government and more than that we see that the very immigrants coming to this country who should have been deported have not always been deported. We have had to-night the first declaration of the minister on this subject. We see certainly that some have been deported at the port of entry for certain reasons, but there are some in Montreal who come under section 33 of the Immigration Act who have not been deported. The minister says that no complaint has been made. I understand that quite well. Suppose a city like Montreal or Toronto would make a complaint, do you know what the minister would answer? Yes, they will be deported, but you pay the cost. That is the regulation of the Immigration Department. I say that with the number of immigrants coming to this country it would be impossible for a city to do this, it would ruin the budget of any city to have to deport the immigrants received who are not desirable.

Mr. OLIVER. It may be that my hon. friend is not anxious to adhere strictly to the facts but he should get a little closer to them. The Act says that the immigrant is to be deported at the cost of the transportation company bringing him.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. Or those making the complaint.

Mr. OLIVER. No.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. I asked the minister and he said yes.

Mr. OLIVER. If the transportation company is not known then at the cost of the person making the complaint.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. Have we not seen that the transportation company is not known? We have seen from the evidence of Mr. Scott that they do not know the immigrants or where they are, and how would it be possible to know what transportation company brought them? Therefore, you would fall back on a city like Montreal or Toronto. And what do we see in those cities in the provinces of Quebec and Ontario which have received those immigrants? We see that criminality there has increased to such an extent that the public press of this country deem it advisable to publish articles on its alarming increase. Let the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) ask any judge of the assizes in Montreal or any other city, or any police magistrate, if nine-tenths of those who are convicted before them are not foreigners brought to this country at so much per head, or, if no bonus was paid on them, brought by the false pretenses of immigration agents who paint Canada as a land of promise with a view of getting the bonus on a certain number. And because of these glowing descriptions, you will always find that a good many of the abandoned and destitute in the old world will be tempted to seek better fortune in the new. There is something else. In Montreal already we have had to face the social question which until to-day was there practically unknown. Last year we had a socialistic parade and we are to have another this year. I knew the Minister of the Interior was a Liberal, but I could not know, he was a Liberal to such an extent that he wanted the red flag raised in the city of Montreal.

Mr. MEDRIC MARTIN (St. Mary, Montreal). My hon. friend states that last year there was an anarchists parade ; I may say that three-fourths of those people were from New York, and were visiting in Montreal for the occasion. One or two women were among the paraders. The demonstration was stopped by the civic authorities and it will be stopped again this year.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. My hon. friend (Mr. Mederic Martin) says that last year the parade was stopped and will be stopped again this year and that most of those who took part in it came from the United States. But if the hon. gentlemen on this side of the House are true Liberals, it seems to me that, having brought out those immigrants under false pretenses, the least they could do, if they have brought out socialists, is to let them parade. You must respect the opinion of the immigrants who enter this country. And I must say also—even if I have to contradict my hon. friend from St. Marys (Mr. Mederic Martin) for whom I have the greatest respect—that while the parade may have been composed to a certain extent of a certain foreign element, it was composed mainly of a foreign population brought to this country through the immigration policy of the government. Is it not true that in Toronto last winter there were about 15,000 people without work and that 500 poor little children of immigrants died of starvation in that city? If that be the result of the bonus which the government pays, are we not justified in denouncing it? And if the Minister of the Interior will go to Vancouver, he will find there racial riots, which though they may not be the result of bonused immigration, are the result of throwing the door open to all kinds of immigrants. There is this exception, namely, the government put a head tax on the Chinese. But they do not put it on the Japanese. I would like the Minister of the Interior to explain the difference, from a racial or national point of view, between the Chinese and the Japanese. If there is a yellow peril, it is just as yellow with the Japanese as with the Chinese. There is this difference between the two that you will not find the Chinese despising every other nation as do the Japanese and the immigration regulations passed by the department are not above the Japanese treaty.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. Would you keep a man out of this country because he declares himself a socialist ?

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. Certainly not, but what I say is that the socialistic movement is found among the destitute of the old world and previous to these destitutes coming out here we had not any socialists in this country.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. Perfect nonsense.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. That is very easy to say, but if you go to the old country you will find two classes of people fighting against organized society and these are the socialists and one degree further down the anarchists.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. You will find socialists in the House of Commons in England.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. I am sure of one thing and that is that if my hon. friend were in the House of Commons in England, where his talents ought to bring him, he would not be sitting on the socialist side.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. I would not exclude a man because he declared himself a socialist.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. I never said I would either; but what I say is that the propaganda of the government has had the result of penetrating to the socialistic centres and bringing out the destitute to this country. If socialism means anything, it means an appeal to the destitute and the poor on the ground that they should have their share in the wealth of those who are rich.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. Good doctrine.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. But there is one doctrine superior to socialism, and my hon. friend has heard about it, I am sure, and that is the Christian doctrine. If you look into the report of the Department of the Interior—and here I crave your indulgence because I am going to start on dangerous ground, I am going to speak of the Belgian and French immigration. And I tell the minister of the Interior that I am going to raise all the racial appeal and appeals to prejudice that I raised last year, and will add another argument to which he may find an answer. If we look at the report of the Interior Department, we find that his immigration agents, the Church Army, were eager to bring to this country hooligans, scamps, ex-convicts, loafers and drunkards, but were not very eager to bring in Belgians or Frenchmen.

Mr. OLIVER. Would the hon. gentleman define hooligans?

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. Let the hon. minister look for the definition in his own department because it is his department that are bringing them out. As the old French proverb says:

> Dis—moi qui tu hantes,
> Je te dirai qui tu es.

Tell me whom you go with and I will tell you who you are.

Mr. OLIVER. Does the hon. gentleman say that the Department of the Interior directly or indirectly suggested the immigration of people such as he described?

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. Certainly, and I am going to prove it. Is the Church Army or is it not an immigration agent of the government.

Mr. OLIVER. Certainly not.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. My hon. friend has not looked into his own report, because he will find in it a whole page about the Church Army.

Mr. OLIVER. That does not prove that the Church Army is an agent of the government or that the government is in any way responsible.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. Is the Church Army not carrying on a propaganda ? Has it ever been disallowed by the government ? Is there a fine against such propaganda? Every police magistrate in England is an immigration agent for this country.

Mr. OLIVER. I am not responsible.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. Certainly, and in this way. The government has opened the door to that kind of immigration, and I am not quite sure that their agents have not said to the Salvation Army to send out more. More than that, the Salvation Army is paid a special bonus by this government. Is that true or is it not.

Mr. OLIVER. It is.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. Therefore there is no use in the hon. minister contradicting it. Take what Mr. Speers says, in the report of the Department of the Interior, about the Belgian immigration:

The great majority of the French and Belgian immigrants are farmers and have taken up land. Most of the Belgians and French Canadian immigrants and settlers have gone to Lake Monroe, Jack Fish, Moosejaw, Trampink lake, and southwest of Moosejaw in Saskatchewan and in Manitoba some have gone east of Lake Manitoba, to Toulon and to Makinak. In Alberta these settlers have gone to the districts east of Stetler Daysland and on the Battle river, and a number have settled east and west of Red Deer and north of Morimbille. Indications will show that possibly 150 families will be located north and east of Wood Mountain on the Canadian Pacific railway during this season.

And he says that these settlers are very successful and thrifty. And that, no doubt, is why we have just one immigration agent in Belgium. But there is more than that: when the famous North Atlantic Trading Company were in operation, when its members not known and were not in danger of being sent to prison or of being driven to suicide, why was it that this company did not operate in France or Belgium ? We were told then that the French government had the greatest objection to canvassing for emigrants and the French laws forbade it, and also that the Belgian government was very much opposed to canvassing for emigrants within that kingdom. We were told that, I think, by the minister himself.

Mr. OLIVER. If the hon. gentleman will allow me, my memory is, that the reasons given were the direct opposite.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. Oh, no, no——

Mr. OLIVER. Well, I have expressed the opinion and I may explain. The North Atlantic Trading Company did not cover France and Belgium in its operations, because it was considered that in those countries it was possible to carry on an open propaganda for emigration, and so it was being carried on by a resident and duly accredited country agent in both countries. It was in other European countries that the North Atlantic Company operated because in those countries it was not possible to carry on an open propaganda.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. I expected that answer from the Minister of the Interior, but he is caught there. Why is it that the North Atlantic Trading Company was operating in all the rest of continental Europe while there was no immigration agency or propaganda going on in France or Belguim ?

Mr. OLIVER. The only reason is that there was a propaganda going on in France and Belgium.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. There was one man who used to be a professor of elocution in this country, M. Wiallard, and another man who was lame, M. Foursin Escandre. That was the propaganda. And we were told by the minister—I remember it well—that the French government would not permit any more active propaganda, Well, perhaps he would say that as the propaganda went on, some men would be driven to suicide or would be sent to prison because the French laws would not permit an active propaganda.

Mr. OLIVER. Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Armand Lavergne) deny that the laws of France do not permit an active propaganda ?

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. I do deny it.

Mr. OLIVER. Then I am afraid the hon. gentleman is not well acquainted with the laws of France.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. I have the law of France here and I will read it.

Mr. MEDERIC MARTIN. From a newspaper.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. Yes. I do not believe in newspapers very much, perhaps, but I believe that this is a correct reprint of the law of France. Here is the title: 'Loi Francaise sur l'emigration.'

Mr. MEDERIC MARTIN. What date ?

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. '18 juillet, 1860.' It has not been changed since.

Mr. BUREAU. What paper ?

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. The best paper in Canada—'Le Nationaliste. Here is what the law says.

Article 1. Nul ne peut entreprendre les operations d'engagement ou de transport des émigrants sans l'autorisation du ministre de l'agriculture, du commerce et des travaux publics.

That is the whole and sole prohibition in the French law of an emigration propaganda. I will translate it for the benefit of the Minister of the Interior.

No person shall undertake the operation of engaging or transporting emigrants without the authorization of the Minister of Agriculture, Commerce and Public Works.

And why is this ? It is explained in the rest of the statute—it is to safeguard the emigrants from suffering during transportation. And that is the whole and sole law in France prohibiting a propaganda in favour of emigration. I suppose the minister will be satisfied with this. Now, let us turn to the case of Belgium. In Belgium, not only does the government not prohibit canvassing for emigrants, but there is no emigration that the government of that country favours so much as emigration to Canada. Belgium is a very prosperous country. But it has too large a population for its superfices, and, as it has no colonies, it likes to send its surplus population to Canada. Thus, there was not only no prohibition, but there is actually encouragement in Belgium for emigration to Canada. But there was no active propaganda to encourage emigration. More than that, there was only one emigration agent, M. Treau de Coeli, who might do much better work if he had better help. And, at the same time, this emigration, as shown by this very report of the Department of the Interior, is the best that can come to this country, as these people are farmers and succeed very well. And not only that, but, as I stated last year, when the Belgian exposition was held at Liege all the propaganda that was made for the older provinces amongst the Belgians in the form of pamphlets to encourage the Belgians to come to this country and these pamplets, by order of the commissioner of this government, were put in the cellar of the Canadian pavilion and ordered to be left there until the exposition should be over.

Mr. OLIVER. Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Armand Lavergne) object to the payment of a bonus to Belgian booking agents?

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. I object to paying a bonus to booking agents in any country. My position is clear, if the minister did not understand it last year, I hope he will understand it this year. He has put enough questions to ascertain it, but he may put as many as he likes and I shall be glad to answer them. I object to bonuses to booking agents in any country—France, Belgium, Germany, England, Scotland, Ireland or even the Russian countries that are the greatest friends of the Department of the Interior. As I have said before,—I cannot give it in the eloquent language of the hon. minister, though it is practically the same idea—the result of the bonus system is quantity not quality and it tends to bring the undesirable instead of the desirable. This is the opinion that was expressed by the minister himself.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. He was not minister then.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. No,—he was a Little Canadian. We are told that the French do not emigrate—we have been told that many times. Certainly the French do not emigrate to this country as the British people do or as those of other continental countries do. But there is good reason for that. In France and Belgium the same propaganda is not carried on as is carried on in other countries. But I want to contradict the general statement. The French do emigrate. One proof is that there are 100,000 Frenchmen in the Argentine Republic. There are 50,000 French people in the United States.

Mr. MEDERIC MARTIN. What is the population of the United States ?

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. My recollection is that it is about 80,000,000.

Mr. MEDERIC MARTIN. The French immigration is not a large proportion.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. Perhaps not, but it is enough to prove that the French do emigrate. If you look up the report of the Department of the Interior of France, for the year before last, you will find that 92,000 people left France in that year. I may be contradicted by some figures published in this country but the figures given by the French government are good enough evidence for me. I say that this bonusing of immigration can have two excuses—I will not say that it can have any justification. The excuse is either that the government wants to see the land speculators in the Northwest sell their lands or, as Mr. Smart, one of the government agents, said in Liverpool—and the Minister of the Interior cannot contradict me—to prevent this country from being Frenchified. The Minister of the Interior knows that Mr. Smart said that in Liverpool.

Mr. OLIVER. I do not know that, he may have said it.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. I will read it to him again, I read it last year.

The 'Northern Express,' Liverpool,, February 10, 1902.—British blood is needed.

The Hon. J. A. Smart, Deputy Minister of the Interior of Canada, and Mr. W. T. R. Preston, immigration agent general for the Dominion, arrived in Liverpool to-day from London and Glasgow to arrange a gigantic system of British immigration to Canada.

Mr. Smart said this :

More British blood is also needed to be infused if the views of the Dominion of Canada is not to be Frenchified by the rapid growth of the French population.

Is that the reason of the present immigration policy of this government, to prevent this country from being Frenchified? I thought the spirit of this country was that we should cease talking about these questions. I am glad to take the same view that the member for Strathcona (Mr. McIntyre) did last year. I do not think I am raising any racial question, or any creed question, when I say that I see no reason why the deputy minister of this country should go to England and tell the people that they must prevent Canada from being Frenchified.

Mr. OLIVER. I do not know that Mr. Smart said that.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. I have just read what he said.

Mr. OLIVER. I know what the hon. gentleman has read, but I do not believe that Mr. Smart ever said it.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. Well, I believe that Mr. Smart did say it, not only do I believe it, but I am sure of it. I read it last year, and I asked the Minister of the Interior to contradict it. If he could have contradicted it he would have done so, but he has not contradicted it. The Minister of the Interior knows that the province of Quebec counts for something in the majority of this House, and that these words of Mr. Smart will not help the government in the next election; therefore he would have contradicted these words if he could. Mr. Smart has not contradicted them, and he cannot contradict them. The minister said that the best immigration we could have into this country was not people from foreign countries, but our own Canadians, and that the best immigration policy was to prevent Canadians going to the United States, and send them to the Northwest. But what do we see? We see that it costs less to bring an immigrant from the continent of Europe to the Northwest, than it does to take a man from the province of Quebec to the Northwest. This cannot be contradicted. If the government wants an immigration policy, why dont they adopt the policy of sending people from the older provinces to settle in the Northwest? That is not what is being done, that is not what this government is encouraging, but that is what this government is opposing.

Mr. WILBERT McINTYRE. I understood the hon. gentleman to say, or to intimate, a short time ago that too many foreigners were being infused into the population of Montreal and the province of Quebec. Now he puts forward the idea that the government is making no effort whatever to settle the older provinces.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. I did not say that, I said that the bonus system of immigration adopted by this government had the result of bringing to this country, not farm labourers, but men who are criminals in their own country, according to the declaration of the Italian consul in Montreal, men who come to this country under false pretenses, and who are swarming into our cities because they do not know how to work. If you abandon the bonus system you will improve the quality of immigrants a hundred per cent, because they will not be attracted to this country by the false representations of booking agents, but by the contented settlers who have preceded them in this country. The new comers will settle in the older provinces instead of going to the Northwest. I have asked this government why it was that under the present system, a young man of the older provinces had to pay more for a transportation ticket to go to the Northwest than the foreign born European or the citizen of the British Isles. That is what I complain of.

Mr. WILBERT McINTYRE. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman if he thinks it should form any part of our immigration policy to move population from one part of Canada to the other.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. I do think so, because that is the way that western Canada has been settled. If the hon. gentleman will study the history of our country he will see that the people of the old provinces have been gradually spreading out west, and the settlers that go from eastern Canada are no worse than those who come from foreign countries; I think they are much better, because they are Canadians. That is my policy; but the policy of this government seems to be to bring in masses of people without regard to quality, to fill up the western country and help speculators sell their lands in the west. They are trying to get every kind of immigration except French speaking immigration. Every right is denied to the French speaking element except the right of paying. But the Doukhobors can run around naked from place to place. Sir, I think the policy of this government will lead to the political murder of our country. As has been well said by many economists, we are laying the foundation for a mongrel nation in Canada. According to the report of the Department of the Interior itself, we are laying the foundations of a mongrel nation. I say that is political murder, and I say that from a French Canadian point of view it is not only political murder but it is suicide, as it has been well pointed out by one of the greatest economists in the world, Mr. Louis Arnould, in 'La Revue des Deux Mondes.' Some hon. members of this House may have no objection to committing suicide, but I have, and I will never be an accomplice to a policy which will have only the result of diminishing the influence of the French speaking element in this country. Not that I think this country should be more French than English, or more British than French, but because I think the French Canadians have a right to live and to exist in this country. A policy which has for its object, according to Mr. Smart, to prevent this country from being Frenchified, will never have my support, neither in this House or in this country. I know well that the majority of the English speaking members of this House as well as the English population of this country, will not share the views of Mr. Smart. I had the proof of that not more than two weeks ago, when I went into the province of Ontario, and before an English speaking audience I expressed the views I am expressing in this House to-night. I think that the majority of this assembly share my views, and I know that the French Canadians have no other idea or desire than to work in harmony with their English speaking fellow Canadians.

From the broader point of view, from the broadest Canadian point of view, what is the result? You secure the immigrant in the old country, you bring him to this country, you embark him on a train at Quebec or Halifax, he goes through the province of Quebec or through the province of Ontario, he sees the old provinces from the windows of his train and then he goes to the Northwest where the foreign population will be almost, if it is not to-day, as numerous as the Canadian-born population, and you will try to assimilate him. Is that not a good reason for placing the immigrant in the older provinces, let him there become assimilated and send the young men from the older provinces to settle in the Northwest. If we go on with this policy, in ten or twenty years—and this is not my opinion only—there will be a majority of foreign-born people in the Northwest, they will think that they can sell their products better in Chicago and a feeling will grow up in favour of annexation. You must remember that there is only an imaginary line separating the Northwest from the United States, that the commercial interests of the Northwest are more closely allied with the Northwest than with Canada, and that the east and west of Canada are separated by greater geographical obstacles than separate the Canadian Northwest from the United States. Therefore, Sir, you will have a foreign-born population separated from the older provinces which will have a natural tendency towards the south and towards the market of the United States, and with the American population which is coming into the Northwest very rapidly the history of Texas will repeat itself. You remember well that Americans settled in Texas, saying that they would be good Mexicans, and that not very long after they wanted to be annexed to the United States. What happened? A war ensued and the United States took Texas from Mexico.

I am sorry that I have taken up so much of the time of the House, but I thought, Mr. Speaker, that it was my duty to protest against a policy of this kind. I thought it was my duty to protest against a policy which can have no other result than to make of our country a universal lunatic asylum, or to make of our country a penitentiary colony, or to make of our country a world-wide general hospital. That is the result that will inevitably follow the continuance of the present policy. If you go to the penitentiaries of this country you will find that we not only have to pay a bonus to bring these people here, but will find that we have to pay to keep them in prison so that they will not stab or kill or rob the Canadian-born population. If you go through our lunatic asylums—and this is not my statement, but it is the report of every grand jury—you will see that we have not only paid bonuses to bring these people to our country but that we are paying immense sums all over the country to keep them in lunatic asylums so that they will not run amuck in our streets and shoot people as one of them, the other day in Montreal did shoot three policemen, one of whom has since died. If you go to the immigration hospital at Quebec you will see that we are paying to maintain people who are suffering from trachoma, if they are not suffering from other diseases that I would not like to name in this House. I also desire to say to a broad, large Canadian like the Minister of the Interior that, while I may be a Little Canadian on this question, I believe that in our country there is room for every man who wants to be a true Canadian, but there is no room for the hooligans, exconvicts and immigrants brought out by the church army. There is but one Canada, and that is for the Canadian. I will tell him also that it may be well to think of the prosperity of our country, and I would remind him of what I said not long ago in the province of Ontario that there are three kinds of prosperity, moral, mental and intellectual, and that we are sacrificing the moral and intellectual prosperity of the country, and not only that, but we are endangering the material prosperity of our country as well. Let us compare the prosperity of our country with that of another British colony—the colony of Australia, a colony which has no bonused immigration policy, which has a narrow immigration policy and yet, we see that the imports into Australia were, in round figures, about £52,000,000, and that the exports were £72,000,000. In this country, with our strenuous immigration policy, which, according to the Minister of the Interior has so much to do with our prosperity, the exports are not so much above the imports. I think, as a matter of fact, they are a little below—far below. The prosperity they bring is that of crime, disease and idiocy. Therefore, if this is all the prosperity that these immigrants bring in to our country we have no need for prosperity of that kind, and the minister ought to remember that prosperity does not mean the bringing about of a greater amount of criminality or an increase in the number of lunatics in our country. If we compare our prosperity with that of the United States we must come to the conclusion that the United States has to-day the worst immigration problem of any country in the world to face. To-day they have a restrictive policy. They have to face the whole question, and it will be remembered that one president of the United States has been assassinated by anarchists. If that is the future prosperity that immigrants are going to bring to our country, we may well expect in the very near future that the Canadian-born population will be at the mercy of the foreign-born population and will become an insignificant minority. Therefore, for these considerations, if I have to take a stand against my political party on this question, it is because I place above party the future of my country and if, on this question as on many others, I have to choose between my party and the future happiness of my country, I choose my country.

On motion of Mr. Verville, the debate was adjourned.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. SPROULE. Does this debate go on to-morrow?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. This debate will go on.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 11.50 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, April 14, 1908.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

TREATY WITH UNITED STATES RE BOUNDARY AND FISHERIES.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). Before the orders of the day are called, I would like to read the following newspaper item :—

Washington, D.C., April 13.—President Roosevelt to-day transmitted to the Senate treaties with Great Britain in relation to the fisheries on the great lakes as between the United States and Canada.

And I would ask, in view of these treaties having been presented to the United States whether the Prime Minister is prepared to bring down information to the parliament of Canada the representatives of the other side interested, which, I should think, would be the natural and constitutional course.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). We have not yet received the ratification. As soon as we receive them, they will be communicated to the House. I should think that, as they have been communicated to the United States Senate, we ought to have them here.

ENGLISH AND FRENCH ORDER PAPERS.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). I wish to direct your attention to something that I have noticed several times of late and that, it seems to me, ought to be made right. Comparing the English version of the orders of the day with the French version, I find that the items are not the same on the two papers. For instance, take the items under the headings 'Public Bills, and Orders' in the Order Paper of to-day, I find, in the English version, item 21 as follows :—

No. 21.

February 12—House again in Committee on Bill No. 2, An Act to amend the Canada Shipping Act.—Mr. Lancaster.

But, in the French version, item 21 is Bill (No. 18). But Bill (No. 18) is item No. 22 in the English Order Paper, being the second item under the heading 'Public Bills and Orders.' Then in the French version, I find that the fourth order under 'Public Bills and Orders,' being item No. 24, is Bill (No. 43). But, in the English version, this is the third order under this head or item 23. I find that item No. 30 of the English orders appears as item No. 22 in the French orders. It seems to me, as well as I can judge, that the French version is correct. Rule 28 provides :—

Bills reported after second reading from any standing or select committee, shall be placed on the orders of the day following the reception of the report, for reference to a Committee of the Whole House, in their proper order next after Bills reported from Committees of the Whole House.

According to that the second order under 'Public Bills and Orders' in the English Order Paper ought to be the first, for it is 'House in committee on Bill (No. 18) to amend the Railway Act (reported as amended).' As I understand it, Bills reported from committee as amended must come first on the Order Paper and the Bills reported without amendment second. But they are reversed here. I have noticed these differences several times and have wondered how they arise. It seems to me that both versions ought to be the same, for, in that way, you avoid any danger of doing injustice.

Mr. SPEAKER. The matter will be looked into.

DREDGING CONTRACTS.

Mr. W. H. BENNETT (East Simcoe). The Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) was to lay two documents on the table to-day. Might I ask if they are ready ?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works). I thought it better to have copies made. Of course, I will produce the originals if the hon. gentleman desires it, but if copies are presented they can be used——

Mr. BENNETT. Well, may I have one now ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have given directions to have the copies made. But there are quite a number of dredging contracts in the order in council and a separate report of the chief engineer as to each one. They are being copied, but I cannot promise them before to-morrow. I would ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett) if it would not be convenient for him to discuss the matter in committee, as each item will be in the estimates. I will have the copies desired by to-morrow.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Speaker, I move for leave to discuss a question of urgent importance, the question of dredging contracts at Midland, Tiffin and Victoria harbour.

Leave being granted.

Mr. BENNETT. The Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) stated yesterday, in answer to a question from myself that he was proceeding, during the coming season, to expend moneys for dredging at Midland. Tiffin—which is a point adjoining Midland —and Victoria harbour, without asking for tenders for the work for which the money is to be expended, but proceeding upon the prices that prevailed last year. Therefore I know, having seen the tenders of last year, what prices are to be paid for that work, without the report of the minister being brought down, which I expected to see to-day. Now, Mr. Speaker, in that somewhat well known document called the report of the Civil Service Commission, upon page 42, will be found a very pertinent and very strong reference to the millions upon millions of dollars that are being expended in different parts of the Dominion on dredging ; and I will call the attention of the House to the reference in that respect.

In certain cases there may be over-payments of wages such as the notorious instance which was brought to light about a year ago, when a clerk of works appointed by political influence was found to have sublet his work to another person at a much lower rate. Your commissioners consider that some steps should be taken to organize the large army of employees in connection with this department, many of whom have served their entire lifetime in its employ, and bring them under definite regulations so that their employment may be considered fixed and stable.

And furthermore, in volume II of the evidence of the Civil Service Commission, the following appears upon page 1100 :

The Chairman:

Q. You have a chief superintendent at St. John?—A. Yes, for the maritime provinces.

Q. And you have also dredging done by contract?—A. Yes.

Q. In connection with the dredging done by contract you have inspectors?—A. Yes.

Q. There was a statement made in the House of Commons during the last session, I think, by Mr. Bennett, that one of these inspectors of dredging to whom you paid so much a day, farmed it out to another man at half price?—A. Less than half. He was getting $3 a day, and he paid out $1.25.

Q. How are these inspectors of dredging appointed?—A. This year, when we ask for a recommendation for local men we state that they must be men of good standing and reputation, and furthermore they are invited to make a declaration to the effect that they are not in any way connected with companies or individuals who are performing dredging. We are trying to avoid the fact of relatives of contractors being employed to superintend them, and we are going to exercise the closest possible supervision so as to see that every inspector is on his work all the time that the work lasts.

By Mr. Fyshe :

Q. Why not hold the local government engineers responsible for that?—A. The local government engineer has perhaps forty works to look after. He cannot be at one work the whole time.

Q. He can get one of his subordinates to be there?—A. He cannot do it for all the works; he would require an immense staff. One man has to have charge of half a dozen works. The Toronto engineer, for instance, runs as far as Manitoulin islands, and he has to go around the shores of Lake Ontario, and he has perforce to trust somebody for some of the works.

Q. Could not the government so manage that a government official connected with the department could exercise an oversight?—A. We do. Our engineer or the superintendent of dredging visits the places at times, but they are not there all the time, and while they are not there, it is like when the cat is away.

By the Chairman:

Q. It would be in the interest of the contractor to connive at irregularities in inspection?—A. Very few would do anything of that kind, according to my experience, but it could be done. The remedy I have always favoured for a state of things of that kind is a permanent staff of inspectors, appointed by the government as the engineers are appointed. I would have the inspectors entirely under the control of the department and with no local interests. They would act without fear or favour, while the local man who owes his position to local influence, is more or less influenced by that local power.

Now, Mr. Speaker, consider that within the past few years the firm of Bowman & Company have been paid the enormous sum of $2,000,000 in round figures for dredging —$2,000,000, let there be no mistake in the figures, because they are according to the returns brought down in this House; and that the firm known as the Great Lakes Dredging Company, which is composed of Mr. James Bowman, member of provincial parliament for North Bruce in the Ontario Legislature, A. F. Bowman, his brother, and Mr. James Whelan, of Port Arthur, son-in-law of the hon. member for Rainy River (Mr. Conmee), have been paid $1,350,000 within a few years; that a concern known as the Owen Sound Dredging Company, which is composed of the Hon. A. G. Mackay, leader of the Liberal opposition in the Ontario legislature, who is half owner of the whole concern, the other half being owned by a Mrs. E. H. Horsey, have been paid upwards of $350,000 to $400,000. Now I will confine my remarks to these three firms, because these three particular firms have had their dealings exposed before the Public Accounts Committee of this Dominion—and there will be more of that in the future. Now what is the position of affairs with regard to these dredging companies? We are blandly told to-day by the Minister of Public Works that despite the fact that there are appropriations which will run, I assume, over half a million dollars, that the Minister of Public Works has gone to his colleagues and his colleagues have said: There is no necessity for calling for tenders for this large amount of work, whatever it may amount to; and I think the figures will show that at the points indicated by the hon. gentleman, the dredging will cost half a million dollars. The hon. gentleman told the House yesterday that with the consent and concurrence of his colleagues he had obtained an order in council by which no tenders are to be called for this year for the expenditure of that vast sum of money, that very considerable sum of money, at all events. Now we have to-day lying in this House, in the custody of the proper officer in that behalf, the chairman of the Public Accounts Committee, the original tenders which the hon. gentleman is going to accept, the figures that have not been discussed yet before the Public Accounts Committee, but will be discussed in the next few months. And what do those figures show? I would ask, and I think it is within the rights of this House, that these contracts should now be laid on the table, because they particularly refer to this work where the large amount of from $100,000 to $150,000 will be spent the coming season. Those are tenders for the work to be done at Midland and at Tiffin, and the production of those documents will show this fact, that there are, or supposed to be, two rival companies competing for the work. Two tenders have been put in, one by what is known as the Midland Dredging Company, of which Mr. F. W. Grant is the secretary treasurer, and the other by what is known as the Penetanguishene Company, of which Dr. Spohn is the secretary treasurer. Now, both these tenders are in the handwriting of F. W. Grant; and I challenge the Minister of Public Works now to send to the office of the clerk of the Public Accounts Committee and produce those tenders and lay them on the table, because they will prove to the hilt, what I have stated. Is not this an odd state of affairs? The criminal law of this country says that you can send to the penitentiary a man who interferes and causes the withdrawal of a tender; yet though I brought this matter specially to the notice of the Prime Minister ten days ago in the House, and made the same allegation, I have never yet heard the matter mooted by the department. On the contrary, I have heard the Minister of Public Works stand up here yesterday and say that an order in council has been passed to give these very people who have been tendering and have defrauded the people of Canada, a contract without a tender being called for. Now I think it is high time that these tenders should be brought down, and I will ask the Premier if he will have a messenger sent for those tenders so that they may be laid on the table and may be inspected by members. I do not think I am asking any thing beyond what is in the interest of the government of this country, when exposure has been made along those lines. Now, what did these tenders show? These tenders showed that the Midland Company, called the Great Lakes Construction Company—that is the corporate name—tendered on the Midland work at 53 cents a yard and that the Penetanguishene Company tendered on the Midland work at 57 cents a yard, that on another work at Waubaushene, the Midland Company tendered at 18 cents a yard and the Spohn Company, or the Penetanguishene Company, tendered at 16 cents a yard.

Mr. SPROULE. What kind of material?

Mr. BENNETT. All kinds of material except rock which is especially provided for. Under these figures the Penetanguishene Company would have received the Waubaushene work and the Midland company would have received the Midland work. But, these gentlemen evidently were not aware of the fact that a third party was going to tender and although the tender of the Midland company, or the Grant Company, was 53 cents a yard for the work at Midland and the tender of the Penetanguishene company was 57 cents a yard a third tender came in from the Stewart Company of Ottawa and the Stewart Company tendered at 30 cents a yard.

Mr. PUGSLEY. For which work was that ?

Mr. BENNETT. For the work at Midland. The hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) was acting at that time as Minister of Public Works. I would ask the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) to direct that these tenders be brought down from the committee room. It only requires a direction on the part of any Minister to have them brought here so that hon. gentlemen may pass them from hand to hand to see them in all their nakedness and their fraud because there is fraud on the face of them.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. BENNETT. Yes, there is fraud on the face of them.

Mr. JOHNSTON. On whose face ?

Mr. BENNETT. If I said on the face of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Johnston) I think every one would assent to it. I say it is a serious matter and, what is more, these tenders have been seen by many hon. gentlemen on this side of the House.

Mr. PUGSLEY. There has never been any attempt to keep them secret at all. They were produced openly before the Committee on Public Accounts.

Mr. BENNETT. However, they are there now and if they were to be removed a number of gentlemen have seen them as a matter of proof and if it were not so it would be a most unfortunate thing perhaps for all parties concerned. But, they are there now and I challenge any minister to lay these papers on the table because they will prove that the tenders of the two companies are written in one and the same handwriting, that of F. W. Grant.

Mr. BERGERON. Who is Mr. Grant ?

Mr. BENNETT. Brother of the hon. member for North Ontario. What next happened ? There were tenders called for at a number of different points and this so-called Dominion Dredging Company of which Mr. Gordon Stewart is the secretary treasurer, put in a tender for a number of works. Some hon. gentleman asks : Who is Mr. Stewart ? He is the son of the hon. the senior member for Ottawa. The Stewart Company tendered for a large number of works and the Stewart Company, not having the plant to perform the work did, as I am informed and believe, go to other dredging concerns and offer to sub-let. But, there was so much clamour made over the matter that the Minister of Justice, then acting as Minister of Public Works, did what ?—did not, as I am informed, call for public tenders and ask publicly for competition, but permitted these tenderers to put in new tenders among themselves. If there was no fraud in the case of these two companies that I have mentioned there is proof positive and conclusive that the so-called Grant Company tendered on the Midland work, that their tender was 53 cents per yard for all material outside of rock and that when the second arrangement was made, they only got 26 cents a yard for that work.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Do you blame the department for that ? Do you find fault with the minister for letting it at 26 cents ?

Mr. BENNETT. No, but what I do find fault with the minister for is dealing with people who are attempting to put up a fraud on the government. That is the reason that my complaint is made now. I say that the minister should go into the open market and ask for tenders. When the Spohn Company and the Grant Company thought there were no other parties who would intervene their tenders were respectively : Grant, 53 cents, and the Penetanguishene Company, 57 cents, but when the Stewart Company could not undertake the work by reason of the insufficiency of their plant, the acting minister made a new arrangement, not by calling for public tenders. I regret that the Minister of Justice cannot hear what I am saying in this respect so that he might be in a position to acquiesce in my statement or deny it. When the matter came up again the Grant Company got the contract at 26 cents a yard. There was some work to be done at a point called Tiffin below Midland and that work, without any competition at all, as I am informed, was handed over to the McKay Company at 27 cents a yard. Now, I am going to ask the hon. gentleman what can be thought of this transaction in the face of the statement that one of these supposedly rival companies, through its secretary, writes out the tenders of both companies ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Would the hon. gentleman excuse me for a moment ? Did I understand him to say that there were no tenders called for the work at Tiffin and that the work was let without any call for public tenders ?

Mr. BENNETT. That is what I am informed.

Mr. PUGSLEY. By whom ?

Mr. BENNETT. Well, I have private information on that score. In support of that I will prove something by the records which lie up in the office of the Public Accounts Committee and which the minister, so far, has not brought down. I am surprised that the right hon. First Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) does not ask that these records should be brought down here in the face of an accusation of this kind. It can be rebutted if it is not true.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I understand that these records are in the hands of the Public Accounts Committee ?

Mr. BENNETT. Yes.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I have no control over them.

Mr. BENNETT. They are lying in the closet of the Public Accounts Committee, and, as was done with the timber leases, they can be brought down here, handed to the clerk of the House and the clerk of the House can hand them back to the committee.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The timber leases were brought from the Department of the Interior. If these records are in the possession of the Public Accounts Committee the Public Accounts Committee has control over them and not the members of the government.

Mr. BENNETT. They are in the custody of the clerk of the committee and surely parliament is big enough and strong enough to direct the clerk of the committee to come to the door of parliament, hand them to the clerk of the House and order that they shall be laid on the table so that they may be inspected and returned.

Mr. TAYLOR. Any member of the committee can go up and examine them.

Mr. BENNETT. Any member of the committee can go up and see them and if any member of the committee can see them there surely parliament can order that they be brought down.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Any member of this House would have just as much authority to order them from the custody of the Public Accounts Committee as I would have or as the Prime Minister would have.

Mr. BENNETT. If the Prime Minister wishes it, I will ask if I have the concurrence of the House in sending a page to the clerk of the committee to bring them down and lay them on the table and if there will be any objection to that being done.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is a matter for the Public Accounts Committee entirely.

Mr. BENNETT. What position is this matter in? There was a tenderer bold enough to write not only the tender of his own company but the tender of a supposedly rival company. There is no question about it. The handwriting is as a like as two peas, and to show there was connivance and fraud between these two tenderers when the so-called Grant Company tendered in supposed competition their figure on the work is 53 cents a yard, but when the government found that Stewart could not take the work at 30 cents they were afraid to give the contract to the Grant Company at 53 cents, and for some reason or other the work is allotted to them at 26 cents a yard. The Minister of Public Works asked me where I got my information and I will tell him where I got part of my information. Attached to these tenders and in the committee room at this moment is to be found a schedule showing the names of the different contractors with the figures at which they had tendered opposite their names and a circle is placed around the name of the lowest tenderer. Underwritten on that schedule is, the McKay Company for the work at Tiffin, and no tenders are asked for the work at Tiffin at all, and the minister cannot find in all that file a single tender for the work at Tiffin, and there under the signature of Mr. Aylesworth, the acting minister, not in his handwriting but in the writing of some person, on that file appears 'Tiffin, Owen Sound Dredging Company, at 27 cents a yard.' Will the Minister of Public Works say there were tenders called ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I would say to the hon. gentleman that the report of the chief engineer in my department is, that in respect to all the works with regard to which he has recommended the fixing of the time during the present season for the completion of the work, in every one of these he reports to me that public tenders were called by public advertisement. And I may say further that I would not think of extending the time except in cases where tenders have been publicly called for.

Mr. BENNETT. Let the general public understand what this dredging operation is. Everything hinges on the one question whether or not these scows are filled, and I say that the country is paying for scows which are presumably filled and which are never filled. I say that the country is paying inspectors to inspect the work who are never there. The evidence of Mr. Gobeil which I have quoted proves conclusively that the inspector on the Spohn dredge was not there at all. Has that man been prosecuted for the fraud he practised on the government ? Not at all. Has the other inspector who connived at the theft been prosecuted ? Not at all. What do these dredging operations mean to the people of this country ? Let me take the case of the Grant Company. You can see from the papers before the Public Accounts Committee that in one month alone that dredge was paid over $11,000, and when it is considered that these dredges work over eight months in the year that means that the dredges would aggregate about $90,000 in the season. And it was sworn in the committee the other day by the owner and the representative of the McKay dredge that the inspector was not there to inspect the work.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I thought you were speaking of the Grant Company. You go from one to the other. Which are you speaking of: the Grant Company or the McKay Company?

Mr. BENNETT. I should have said that the McKay Company had the Grant dredge under lease last year.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is certainly very inconvenient, and if I know anything about the rules of parliament it is very objectionable for a member from his place in the House to refer to what is occurring before a committee of the House.

Mr. BENNETT. There is no inquiry at all about it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The House cannot know what is taking place before a committee until that committee reports to the House. This matter is still under investigation before the Public Accounts Committee, and I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett) will see that it would be very much better that these matters should be threshed out in the Public Accounts Committee, and then when the committee reports to the House it will be properly before the House for discussion. I take that point, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SPROULE. You cannot get a report from this committee.

Mr. BENNETT. The Minister of Public Works is mistaken. The inquiry in the Public Accounts Committee is about dredging at Fesserton in connection with the Spohn Company, and there is no question at all about the McKay Company at Midland. The papers have been moved for and brought down and in due course it will be investigated, but so far I am simply speaking from documents that have been laid on the table.

Mr. PARDEE. Is it not a fact that Mr. Wilkinson was here but a very little while ago in connection with the McKay Company dredging and that the matter was gone into by the Public Accounts Committee?

Mr. BENNETT. Since my hon. friend does not recollect the circumstances I do not want to detail them all.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I ask your ruling, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SPEAKER. If the matter is before the committee under investigation and has not been reported upon to the House, the rule is explicit and plain that no reference to it can be made in the House until the report is received by the House.

Mr. HAGGART. But there is a denial that the matter is before the committee.

Mr. SPEAKER. That is another point.

Mr. BENNETT. It is the question of the Fesserton dredging which is before the committee.

Mr. EMMERSON. What are the papers before the committee for?

Mr. BENNETT. To be dealt with in due course of time.

Mr. EMMERSON. Then it is before the committee.

Mr. SPEAKER. The question is: Has this matter been before the Public Accounts Committee under investigation and has a report been made to the House? If it has been before the committee for investigation and if no report has yet been made the rule is plain that no reference can be made to it in the House until there is a report from the committee.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My information is that the matter is before the committee. All these documents are still before the committee, the tenders, the contracts and all the papers, and no report has yet been made to the House.

Mr. BENNETT. I have in my desk a copy of the evidence as printed so far, and that document states that the inquiry before the committee is in reference to the dredging at Matchedash bay. There is no reference in the printed evidence to the dredging at Midland and there is no inquiry into it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Will the hon. gentleman deny that at the request of the Public Accounts Committee these papers have been produced from my department and submitted to the committee and are now in the custody of the committee and have been there for weeks, and that the matter has not yet been disposed of?

Mr. BENNETT. It is quite right to say that the papers have been brought to the committee and they will be dealt with in due course, but there has as yet been no inquiry at all into the Midland business.

Mr. SPEAKER. Of course, that is a point to be cleared up. I have not been in the committee and I have not had an opportunity of ascertaining what the committee has been doing. The whole question is: Has this matter been before the committee under investigation, and if so, and if it has not been reported upon of course it is improper to discuss it in the House. I would like to be clear on that point before making a definite ruling.

Mr. LENNOX. Your ruling is quite clear, Sir, that if there is an inquiry in the committee, until the report is made a discussion cannot take place in this House. But, I presume, that the information which an hon. gentleman gets otherwise than from what has taken place in the committee he can use. What I understand the hon. membr to state is that he has obtained this information from the examination of documents which lie in the Public Accounts Committee, but that no investigation has been had as to the matter to which he refers. Surely ,Mr. Speaker, in that case any hon. member can use the records of parliament or the records of the department for the purpose of obtaining information and can bring that information before this House. You have said, Mr. Speaker, that there has been some discussion as to what the facts are on which this matter is based, but in that regard we have the statement of the hon. member, who is the only person who actually knows the facts in that regard, and surely we may take his statement that he is not stating what has been elicited by any examination before the Public Accounts Committee, but what he has obtained from records which are accessible not only to the members of the Public Accounts Committee, but to every hon. member of this House who likes to go and examine them. If the investigation had commenced, then I think it would be clear that the hon. member could not discuss it; but no investigation, as the hon. member has said, has taken place, and, therefore, he having ascertained the facts which he proposes to deal with by an investigation of his own and from public documents which are of record, I submit that he has a right to discuss them.

Mr. BENNETT. In confirmation, let me give what is stated in the printed proof which I hold in my hand. After stating that the committee met on February 28, it says 'further consideration of the payment to the Penetanguishene Dredging Company. That is a matter that is not under discussion.

Mr. SPEAKER. There seems to be a difference of opinion as to what has taken place before the committee. I think I must assume that the documents which are before the Public Accounts Committee have been taken there for some purpose. They are now in the possession of the committee, and the proper and usual course if an investigation as to same is pending would be to have them transferred here for the purposes of discussion otherwise as they have not been reported to the House. I shall have to rule that the discussion is out of order.

Mr. TAYLOR. I moved for some papers early in the session. The papers were brought down ; I got the information I required from those papers and sent them back to the Auditor General's Department. Do you rule that I cannot make use of the information I got from those papers because they are before the Public Accounts Committee?

Mr. SPEAKER. Not at all. In that case the documents were sent back to the department, and no further action would be taken on those documents until they were returned to the Public Accounts Committee. I assume that if the documents are in the possession of the Public Accounts Committee they are there for some purpose of the committee. Where an investigation allowed them is pending until the committee disposes of them by returning them to the place from which they came or by reporting them to the House, I do not see how I can rule otherwise than I have ruled, that the discussion upon them is out of order.

Mr. LAKE. Mr. Speaker, I would ask whether your ruling means that no member can discuss any payment made by the Auditor General because the papers regarding it are before the Public Accounts Committee, because in that case all inquiry on any subject could be blocked by members on the government side of the House having the papers brought before that committee.

Mr. BENNETT. Well, Mr. Speaker, I will attempt to avoid any matter of a controversial nature by simply referring to what is to be seen in the papers and not at all to the question of what the evidence has been. The very certificates that give this company this colossal sum in one month, or thousands and thousands of dollars in a season——

Mr. SPEAKER. I think I should do the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake) the courtesy of answering his question. I would not at all press the ruling so far as the hon. member suggests. This matter comes before the House in this shape. An hon. member rises to discuss it and states that the documents show that so-and-so has occurred. After some discussion another hon. member rises and takes the point that this matter is still before the Committee on Public Accounts under investigation and that the documents are still before that committe. On that state of facts I am bound to assume, and I do assume, that the committee is still seized of the documents, and until the committee reports either in the shape of forwarding the documents or reporting to the House with reference to the investigation that has been made, discussion is out of order. That is as far as I go as to the proceedings before the committee.

Mr. HAGGART. The reference to the Public Accounts Committee is the reference of all the public accounts of the year and of the Auditor General's Report. Do you rule, Mr. Speaker, that we cannot discuss any account that is in the public accounts or in the Auditor General's Report because they have been referred to the Public Accounts Committee? Our argument is that an order from the Public Accounts Committee to produce the documents before that committee or a reference to the House does not in the slightest degree preclude any hon. member of this House from discussing any paper on any item that has been discussed before the committee. The Public Accounts Committee is not a special committee to which this House has referred any particular item on which to report. It is one of the ordinary committees of the House, and the fact that it takes cognizance of a matter does not remove it from the jurisdiction of the House.

Mr. SPEAKER. I am in this position, that on the one side reference is made to documents which are before the Public Accounts Committee, and on the other side the point is taken that the matter is still pending before the committee. It is quite impossible for the Speaker to decide as between two adverse views based upon two different statements of the facts, and under these circumstances the only position and the proper position for the Speaker to take, it seems to me, is the well known one, both in England and here, that 'until a committee report it is irregular to refer to its proceedings in debate in the House.' In view of the assertion that these documents are still before the Public Accounts Committee and under investigation, I cannot decide otherwise than I am doing.

Mr. HAGGART. Do you hold, Mr. Speaker, that the Public Accounts Committee is a special committee, or a committee of the House that comes under the rule to which a matter has been referred for the purpose of reporting?

Mr. SPEAKER. The statement is made that the Public Accounts Committee is seized of the documents for investigation, and that the investigation is pending. Then the term 'proceeding' which is laid down in the practice applies, and until a report upon the matter has been made to the House or the documents have been ordered to be laid before the House, it will be impossible to have a discussion upon them here.

Mr. BENNETT. I think on the question of order——

Mr. SPEAKER. I am quite prepared now to allow discussion on that question and after that discussion I shall rule one way or the other; but I cannot make a ruling and have discussion later on about it. The point of order is now open for discussion and after it has been discussed I shall rule finally on the question.

Mr. W. B. NORTHRUP (East Hastings). Would not a consideration of the actual practice in the Public Accounts Committee enable us to determine whether or not certain documents are under consideration in that committee? At the beginning of the session and throughout the session the members of the opposition find in the Auditor General's Report items such as in their opinion call for inquiry. Very seldom does the opposition member when moving for papers, know that the papers will produce tangible result; but from information that he may have received from private sources he moves for papers that he may investigate them and, as a matter of fact, no one but himself investigates them. In fact the papers are not laid before the committee; they are brought over from the department to the clerk of the committee and are by him put in the proper pigeon holes and are never seen, in all probability, except by the member who moved for them. When papers are brought down there are probably a hundred different matters on which the papers are before the committee.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Are not the papers brought before the committee by order of the committee?

Mr. NORTHRUP. The papers are brought from the department by the order of the committee, there is no question of that; but as a matter of fact they are not laid before the committee until some one moves to examine witnesses and when he examines the witnesses the papers are brought before the committee. Let me show to my hon. friend the absurdity of his position. Of the papers brought before the committee probably not one-twentieth are investigated by the hearing of evidence. If the rule is to be that the moment papers are brought down before the Public Accounts Committee, then the subjects with which they are concerned are excluded from discussion in this House until the committee reports, there will be on an average eighty cases each session that never come before the committee, and the committee cannot make a report because there is no subject before them.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think it is quite unnecessary to discuss a ruling which has not been made or suggested, that is that every paper before the committee is to be ruled out of discussion here.

Mr. NORTHRUP. The Minister of Public Works takes that view.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I beg your pardon, I said nothing of the kind.

Mr. NORTHRUP. Then what does it come to? It has been contended that the moment papers are brought down to the Public Accounts Committee the House is debarred from discussion upon them until the committee reports. I point out that there cannot be a report until something further has been done in the committee than the mere examination of papers by a member. The hon. member for Simcoe says that this matter was never before the committee. His word must be sufficient for the committee in that respect.

Mr. BENNETT. The printed records show that.

Mr. NORTHRUP. Apart from the proof he brings, the hon. member's word is sufficient for this House, but when he brings the record and shows that it is another dredging matter altogether, it practically comes to this that the Minister of Public Works wishes to prevent discussion on dredging contract 'A' because dredging contract 'B' is being investigated before the committee.

Mr. F. F. PARDEE (West Lambton). In so far as the dredging goes, the question of dredging stands by itself. Ever since the Public Accounts Committee commenced the hon. member for Simcoe has been examining witnesses in regard to dredging. His first motion was in regard to one certain payment and several times, whilst the committee has been in session, he has branched off from that payment altogether and gone on to other matters not pertinent to it at all. His attention was called to it——

Mr. SPEAKER. That will be entering upon a discussion of what occurred before the committee, which I could not permit.

Mr. PARDEE. This has gone on and I wish to say further that I asked the hon. gentleman only on Friday last, to close the inquiry and bring a report to the House regarding dredging. He refused saying that he had other witnesses to examine.

Mr. BENNETT. Certainly, and I am going to examine witnesses about this matter. Do not go away with the idea that this will not be further investigated before the committee.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). If the ruling just given is correct it is a rule that has been more honoured in the breach than in the observance, because every session there are questions before the Public Accounts Committee, some of which will be investigated and some will not; during the time these papers are before the Public Accounts Committee, we go into a Committee of Supply here and we proceed to vote money for similar items, we take up the Auditor General's Report with these items that are before the Public Accounts Committee for consideration and we ask all kinds of questions about them. I think, if my memory is correct, we have sometimes brought down the original papers from that committee for the convenience of the House when we were inquiring into the expenditure of public money in connection with some of these items. At the present time there are several items regarding timber limits that are before the committee. I moved for some papers there as well in reference to some timber limits. I looked into those papers, I got all the information I required, and therefore it was unnecessary either to call witnesses or to bring the departmental officers before the committee. I obtained the information and I left the papers there. Would it be said that I had no right to use the information or to discuss those items in this House because the papers were before the Public Accounts Committee, when the Public Accounts Committee will not deal with them during the whole session, will make no report whatever? If I understand, it is only questions with which the Puplic Accounts Committee deal and upon which they report, according to the terms of the order of reference, 'their findings, suggestions or observations,' that we may not discuss. Take the case with which the hon. member has dealt. It is true that one item of dredging that has been before the Public Accounts Committee has been inquired into.

Mr. PUGSLEY. What is that?

Mr. BENNETT. The Fesserton case.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That cannot be so because the hon. member said that the Penetanguishene matter is before the committee.

Mr. BENNETT. It is the Fesserton case of the Penetanguishene Dredging Company.

Mr. PUGSLEY. And Owen Sound?

Mr. BENNETT. Nothing about Owen Sound.

Mr. SPROULE. I think the minister confuses the two names, the dredging company in Penetanguishene and the dredging company at Fesserton. The hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) is discussing an item that the Public Accounts Committee have not considered at all and that item may not be considered by the Public Accounts Committee. Would it be held that because these papers are before the committee for examination by any private member of this House, but have never been brought up and examined and investigated by calling as witnesses under oath, we had no right to speak of them in this House? We have always dealt with these questions when in Committee of Supply, we would discuss items belonging to the same locality or to the same public work, for which we were voting money. We discussed them ad libitum, and there is no objection notwithstanding that they are before the Public Accounts Committee. I hold, if I understand the rule, that we have a perfect right to discuss any matter unless it is a question being examined by the Public Accounts Committee as a Public Accounts Committee and not by a private member, a matter on which evidence is being taken either from the departmental officers or some one interested in the contract or some one who can give additional information that the committee desires to have before making its report, with its observations, conclusions or suggestions to this House. It is only with regard to these things, I think, that we are debarred from speaking in this House, and not the others.

Mr. SPEAKER. The ruling which the Chair makes in the matter is this: If the matter is really before the Public Accounts Committee, after the papers have been sent from one of the departments, and has not been dealt with by the committee, reference can be made to it in this House. The question comes down to one of fact—whether there are proceedings in connection with this matter pending before the committee or not. The statement is made on one side that there are such proceedings; the statement is made on the other side that there are no such proceedings. The hon. member (Mr. Bennett) who initiated the discussion was certainly quoting from proceedings before the Public Accounts Committee which had not been reported to the House, and so was clearly out of order. Of course, I did not wish to interfere unnecessarily, but when the point was taken, it was clear to my mind that the hon. gentleman was quoting proceedings before the Public Accounts Committee not yet reported to the House. So, my ruling would be, if there are proceedings pending before the Public Accounts Committee on this matter, until the matter is reported to the House, it would be out of order to discuss those here. If the hon. member will conduct his discussion on the line of not referring to or quoting proceedings that are still before the committee, he will have a perfect right to proceed.

Mr. BENNETT. I take it, Mr. Speaker, that your ruling is that I must not make a reference to any evidence that has been given before the committee.

Mr. SPEAKER. Or to any documents which are the subject of a pending reference.

Mr. BENNETT. I do not wish to transgress your ruling. Then, I understand that, having moved for certain documents——

Mr. SPEAKER. If the documents are there and are not being investigated, you have a perfect right to discuss them.

Mr. BENNETT. Very well. Now, early in the session I moved that certain documents should be laid before the Public Accounts Committee referring to the dredging at Midland. I have seen those documents, together with the tenders for the work, and I will quote from these. I repeat that the tenders for the work at Midland are of the Penetanguishene Company and the Grant Company and both are written in the handwriting of Mr. F. W. Grant, the brother of the hon. member for North Ontario—there is not the slightest doubt about that.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member says he is referring to documents before the committee. The whole point is, have these documents been before the committee for investigation.

Mr. PARDEE. Yes, certainly.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. No evidence was taken.

Mr. BENNETT. I am astounded that——

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett) has announced within the last twenty minutes that he intends to do so and so before the committee proceeds 'further' with the investigation; and he says that he intends to call 'other' witnesses.

Mr. BENNETT. I intend to bring these matters up before the committee at some future day. Surely no hon. gentleman on the other side who is a member of the committee will make the statement that the authenticity of these two tenders has been brought up or evidence adduced. Mr. Grant has not been a witness before the committee. Hon. gentlemen opposite are mistaken. Now, in the first instance, the Grant tender for the work at Midland was for 53 cents a yard. I believe I am right in the assertion that tenders were not publicly advertised for, but the work was subsequently given to that company at 26 cents a yard. That is surely an astounding thing—that a company, within a short space of time, probably a few weeks, would offer to do work at 26 cents which so short a time before they had asked 53 cents for. But that is on the record. I said there were no tenders for the work at Tiffin. There can be no question that, in the original asking for tenders, none were asked for the work at that point, —or, if they were, they are not filed on record in the department.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Of course, I will look into it. Tiffin is part of Midland, is it not?

Mr. BENNETT. It adjoins.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Are not they the same?

Mr. BENNETT. Yes.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It may be there were no separate tenders for Tiffin as distinguished from Midland.

Mr. BENNETT. The hon. minister (Mr. Pugsley) cannot understand this matter thoroughly because he was not in charge of the department at the time, and, as he has not recently looked at the schedule, it will not be fresh in his memory. There is a schedule prepared by the department showing where all these different works have been performed, with figures placed opposite the name of the respective tenderers, and by the acting Minister of Public Works—the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth)—a circle around the name of the contractor who has secured the job. There is also a lead pencil memo. which shows that the Tiffin work goes to the Owen Sound Dredging Company at 27 cents a yard.

Now, let us take these records and see what they mean to the country. In one month this company draws $11,089. It must be remembered that this work is certified to in these returns as paid for at the rate of $2 a yard. The scows are large scows carrying perhaps not 200 yards at a load but certainly over 100 yards. Therefore, if this material is not rock but clay, though paid for at the rate of rock, it means that they receive at least $200 for a load instead of $34, the amount they ought to receive. Another question that presents itself is whether or not the inspector inspects in this case. There are certificates lying there—more than one and more than several—on which this company has been paid large amounts which bear no signature to show that the inspector had anything to do with it. That is a serious statement, but the minister can verify it by bringing down the documents from the Public Accounts Committee.

Now, let us follow these figures a little. This company is paid $11,089 for one month. Working eight months, they would receive about $90,000 for the season. Now, these dredges are not expensive concerns to work; —probably $25 to $40 would pay for the wages of the men and the coal. That being so, you can see that there is colossal profit. It is no wonder that the stockholders in these dredging companies—there are scores of such stockholders—make their boast in the streets of Midland that they are receiving from 75 per cent to 100 per cent dividend. Why, it is the easiest thing in the world to do this when you have an inspector who cheerfully certifies that these dredges are working fifteen hours a day even on into the month of December when it is utterly impossible for them to work for that length of time, and when you have a manager of a dredge, who, with equal cheerfulness, will certify to the same thing.

Let us take another case, the case of the MacKay Company, the owners of dredge No. 9. I asked a question as to the amount per day this dredge was making and I find that it is earning $210 a day, if she is working twelve hours a day. Now, contrast that with the figure at which this same dredge was previously hired by the department, which was $80 per day. Is that not enough to put the government and the Minister of Public Works on his guard with the people he is dealing with? Look at the Auditor General's Report of a few years ago, and you will find this dredge of MacKay, Horsey & Company, working at $8 an hour, and there are figures that prove conclusively that she is earning $200 a day—not earning it but she is paid that much.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Does the hon. gentleman know whether the company that got paid for the dredging, paid for the coal and all that ?

Mr. BENNETT. In both cases the company paid for operating.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Paid the coal bills themselves ?

Mr. BENNETT. No question about that. There are facilities afforded for fraud in these matters, owing to the fact pointed out by the commissioners, the appointment of these local inspectors. Take the case dealt with a year or two ago in the committee. A man named Eastwood was appointed, and he cherfully tells the committee that he drew $3 a day and never went near the work ; as Mr. Gobeil says, he retained $1.75 a day out of the season's wages, and gave the other man $1.25. But the dishonesty of that man was nothing compared to the dishonesty of other government inspectors, because the other government inspectors had been in the employ of the country for some years. Now the figures prove what I have stated, that these dredges which cost about $100,000, or are given out to cost that much, are paid $80,000 to $100,000 in a season, less the wages, which are not a large item. Is it not a suspicious circumstance that the secretary treasurer of one company is actually writing out tenders for both companies ? And yet the minister says that these are the people to deal with. How ? By not allowing them to be subjected to competition. Why ? Because he thinks the prices are fair and reasonable. The minister in that respect is going directly contrary to law. What right has the government to spend an amount running in all probability —I cannot tell the amount, because the minister promised to bring down that schedule to show where the work is to be done. May I ask the minister now : Is the large work at Port Arthur to be done under a similar arrangement, and that at Fort William ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, that does not come under this, that is a different contract.

Mr. BENNETT. Is that a contract that has been let by tender this year ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No. The hon. gentleman must be aware that the contract for the work at Port Arthur, upon the Mission and Kamanistiqua rivers, was let some time ago, and this work, extending over several years, was provided for in the original contract.

Mr. BENNETT. Then may I ask the minister this question : Will the Collingwood work come under this order in council ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am not sure whether the Collingwood work is included in this order.

Mr. BENNETT. And Little Current ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, Little Current is not in this order.

Mr. BENNETT. Well, Mr. Speaker, I think I have shown the government that this is a case where they should be on suspicion.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I may say that we are always on suspicion, and always watchful.

Mr. BENNETT. Well, I compliment the Minister of Public Works on this fact, that he has done for the first time during the past ten or twelve years, what must be done for the future, and what the public will insist upon, namely, that every one of these inspectors shall make himself amenable to the criminal law by making sworn declarations as to the returns. These matters attract public attention, as they must necessarily do. Take the case of MacKay & Company. It is only a few years ago since Dr. Walsh and Mr. MacKay started in this dredging business, with an old dredge named No. 9 that they were anxious to rent to the government at $8 an hour. To-day they are owners of two dredges that are openly discussed by people who know their cost, and are stated by these gentlemen themselves, to have cost with their scows, over $100,000 each. Talk about where the money comes from !

Mr. PUGSLEY. Dredges cost $100,000 to $200,000. Dredging plants are very expensive.

Mr. BENNETT. I have been informed by the manager of this concern that these dredges cost over $100,000 a piece, with the scows. These gentlemen had no extrinsic business.

Mr. PUGSLEY. You can hardly be sure of that. I know many a dredge that is not paid for yet.

Mr. BENNETT. These gentlemen had no extrinsic business out of which they could make money to become the owners of these dredges. I say now that as these facts are disclosed in the Public Accounts Committee by documents that are lying there, the fraud perpetrated by the Grant and Spohn companies, or by Spohn's company, in the face of the fact that their original tender was for 53 cents a yard, and that afterwards they accepted the work at 26 cents a yard, in the face of the fact that the certificates of the inspector up there show that he has not in certain cases certified to them——

Mr. PUGSLEY. In how many cases ?

Mr. BENNETT. I did not charge my memory with them, but I think, in looking them over, I say more than three. In face of the evidence, which the hon. gentleman can read when it is printed, given by the man representing these dredges, as to whether or not the inspector was there when the work was done, and having regard to the enormous amount of money that is being expended———

Mr. PUGSLEY. If it would be right to refer to the evidence, I might ask the hon. gentleman if the inspector was not dismissed the moment it came to the knowledge of the department ?

Mr. BENNETT. The hon. gentleman is confounding this case with another. This is a case where a huge expenditure is to be made. The minister cannot tell me what works will come under the purview of this order in council, but the Victoria harbour work, the Tiffin work, the Midland work, and perhaps the Collingwood work will come within it, and I assume the expenditure will be upwards of half a million dollars. The government knows all this, the government knows what this dredging is costing. I say the public will not be satisfied, and is not satisfied. Irrespective of politics, the public do not believe, from Owen Sound to Collingwood and Midland, that the government has ever got value for the money that is being disbursed. I submit that instead of allowing this order in council to be acted on, tenders should be called forthwith for this work. Let it be put up to public competition, and let there be no more of these suspicious circumtances allowed to exist.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am not at all sorry that the hon. gentleman has brought this question before the House. I recognize that the matter of dredging, and the question of having the work honestly, efficiently and satisfactorily done, is one of great importance. It is becoming yearly of more importance, because there is a rapidly increasing demand in all sections of the country, both upon the Atlantic and the Pacific, upon the rivers and the great lakes, for dredging to be performed for the purpose of giving accommodation to steamships which are every year becoming larger, therefore, the cost of dredging must increase year after year. I am sorry to have to say that the Dominion is not properly equipped, in my judgment, with dredging plant. We have no adequate dredging plant upon the great lakes. We have, in the maritime provinces, for use there and in the Baie des Chaleurs, only a comparatively few dredges—I think some nine or ten altogether. The dredging plant owned by the government is not at all in my judgment, what it ought to be for a maritime country such as Canada is. There is an enormous demand for dredging on the Pacific coast, on the Atlantic coast, on the St. Lawrence, and other rivers, the Baie des Chaleurs and the great lakes. Therefore, the department has felt obliged to ask for tenders for a great deal of the dredging work in the past and has necessarily done that work by contract.

Now, I quite agree that one of the most important things to be attended to is the matter of inspection. Of course, there are some cases where the engineers of the department can measure up the work in situ and determine with a considerable degree of accuracy the quality of material to be dredged, but in a great many cases—I think I am safe in saying in the majority of cases —this work cannot be accurately performed without very great expense, without having a large staff of engineers going to an expense which probably the department would not be justified in incurring. Therefore, it has been found in most cases that the department were only able to let contracts and to pay for the dredging work on the basis of scow measurement. In order that the government may be properly protected it is necesary to have inspectors examine each scow load as it is taken away from the dredge with the view of making a proper report to the department. Therefore, a great deal depends upon the honesty of the inspectors and upon the faithfulness with which they do the work. I recognize that. The Minister of Public Works, the chief engineer of the department and even the resident engineer, who has a considerable territory to look after, cannot guard the public with respect to the quanity of material which is taken out of the scows and therefore, as I have already said, we must depend to a very large degree upon the honesty and upon the faithfulness of the inspectors who are appointed for that purpose.

Mr. BENNETT. But the department has imposed the further check that the owner or manager of the dredge also certifies as to the number of yards in these scows.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, that is true. There have been some cases that have come to the notice of the department in which inspectors have not done their duty. There has been one case which probably was the case that the hon. gentleman had in mind where a man who was entrusted with the duty of inspecting scow loads had farmed the work out to another party. He was getting, I think, $3 a day and he employed another person at $1.50 a day to do his work. That was a most improper thing to do. The department did not engage or rely upon the man whom he appointed, but the department relied upon himself and the department had a right to expect him to perform his duty.

Mr. BENNETT. But both of those men were appointees of the government.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That may be, but still the man who was appointed as inspector was the man to whom the department had a right to look, and he was the man that the department appointed to perform this duty. When the matter came to the notice of the department that officer was dismissed. There was another case that occurred upon the great lakes.

Mr. FOWLER. Did you make him pay back the money ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. There was no evidence that there was any intention to commit a fraud. It was simply, on the part of this man, a misconception as to his duty.

Mr. BENNETT. That man actually got $30 for the use of the boat under his wifes maiden name, which boat was never used.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am not aware of that case.

Mr. BENNETT. That is the same case.

Mr. BERGERON. He charged and was paid overtime.

Mr. PUGSLEY. There was another case that occurred in connection with dredging at one of the ports of the great lakes, where a man who was appointed inspector was employing another party who was inspector upon a dredge which was working in the same locality to do his work. That was an improper thing to do, and when this matter came to the notice of the department the services of both of them were dispensed with.

I have a good deal of faith in human honesty, and I believe that the great majority of the people who are appointed to attend to these public duties do endeavour to perform their duties honestly, and I have no reason to suppose but what the great majority, if not all of the inspectors who are in the employ of the department, are men who can be relied upon. The minister and his officials are not accustomed to take the recommendation of local people as the hon. gentlemen suggests, but they make inquiry in regard to a man's character, in regard to his antecedents, in regard to his efficiency as an inspector of dredging and they appoint him after all these inquiries are made, believing that he will do his duty faithfully. I thought it desirable—perhaps I am taking undue precautions—to avoid in so far as could possibly be done any opportunity for fraud occurring as far as the inspectors are concerned. I have adopted a rule which has met with the hearty approval of the officers of the department, that the inspector must, with his returns, send in a statutory declaration to the effect not only that the quantity as certified by him is correct but, that he has personally seen and has had an opportunity of determining as to the measurement of every scow load of material to which he certifies. That is, I think, a pretty good check put upon the inspectors, because, when an inspectors knows that he has to make a statutory declaration which has all the force of an oath as to his personal supervision of the work and as to his personal knowledge of every scow load, I do not think that he will neglect his duties or certify with respect to scow loads he has not seen and as to which he has no personal knowledge. I have also caused a circular to be sent out to all the inspectors in the employ of the department calling their attention to this important duty which rests upon them, and informing them that any omission to perform their duty will be a ground for instant dismissal. No excuse will be taken for failure to perform their duty in this regard. Therefore, it seems to me that in so far as the department or the minister could reasonably do so we have taken every precaution to guard against any difficulties of this kind as far as future work is concerned. I may say to my hon. friend who is not disposed to be over-warm in his praise, either of the Department of Public Works or any other department and who, I am almost inclined to think, may fairly be subject to the criticism of being unduly harsh in his judgments and making statements very often which have no foundation in fact but which really rest very largely upon his own imagination and upon his desire to make a point against the government——

Mr. BENNETT. Will the hon. gentleman allow me ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. If the hon. gentleman will pardon me I am going to pay him a compliment.

Mr. BENNETT. The hon. minister cannot mention one statement I have made for which I have not given the proof.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am glad that my hon. friend has shown that spirit which only can animate the members of this House in that he has given me, as the present minister, credit for having framed regulations which are of a most reasonable character and which are well calculated to protect the public in so far as dredging is concerned. The hon. gentleman has attempted to convince the House that it is wrong to fix the time during the present season for the completion of the work of Tiffin, Midland and Victoria harbours, and he says—if I understand his criticism, that is the only ground upon which he bases it—that the two companies who tendered for this work put in tenders which were written by the same person and which were for a larger amount than the contract was ultimately let for. I think I am stating the matter as the hon. gentleman put it to the House. Now, I am not aware that it is a ground for charging two men with fraud that they should be aware of the tenders which each respectively put in for a public work. If as a private individual I were to invite tenders for a dwelling house and there were a dozen tenders put in, and the tenderers got together and Mr. Brown said to Mr. Jones : You tender at $20,000 and I will tender at $25,000 knowing that a good many other tenders would be put in. I am not quite prepared to say that these two men could be charged with fraud or conspiracy because they did that.

Mr. BENNETT. The case is very different where there are two different works one of which would fall to each of the different tenderers.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Until the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett) spoke in the House I never heard the point raised that tenderers could be charged with fraud simply because they had done what I have described. It would be a very different matter if there were any collusion between them and the minister or an official of the department with regard to these tenders. If the hon. gentleman had been able to show that one of these tenderers had information from the minister or the chief engineer or the deputy minister so that the lowest tenderer might have been allowed to withdraw his tender, then he would have made an exceedingly strong point against the department because that would show collusion and conspiracy. But that is not the case at all here. Tenders were put in for different works and I suppose they were hoping that among them all both companies might be awarded contracts for certain dredging, but I am not aware that that constituted any fraudulent act upon their part.

Mr. LAKE. Does the minister approve of that in connection with public works ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am not called upon to express my approval or disapproval. As minister I would much prefer, even where a large number of tenders for different works are called for, that one tenderer should not know the figure which the other tenderer is putting in. But where tenders are called for half a dozen different buildings and the contractors arrange to put in different figures in the hope that Mr. A. may get the contract for two or three different buildings and that Mr. B. may get the contract for two or three more, I am not aware that it is a fradulent act on their part unless it can be shown that a trusted employee of the man who is giving the contracts was a party to some conspiracy or collusion with the contractors. However, nothing of that kind has been suggested in this case. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett) insinuates that there must be something wrong because the company which tendered to do a part of this work at 57 cents a yard ultimately took the contract at 27 cents. But if I were to express any opinion on that I would say that it shows that these tenderers found they could not get the work at a higher figure than the officers of the department said that work was reasonably worth, and that the Minister of Justice who was then acting Minister of Public Works insisted in the public interest that the work should be taken at the smaller figure which the chief engineer reported was reasonable. If that shows anything at all it shows that the acting minister was safeguarding the interests of the people.

Mr. BENNETT. Is it not fair to assume that the acting minister consulted the chief engineer on the matter ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I should think he did.

Mr. BENNETT. When I tell the minister that dredging had been done in Midland previously at 15 cents and 16 cents a yard, it is no wonder he looked surprised when they asked 56 cents.

Mr. PUGSLEY. There is a very great difference in the cost of dredging. It all depends upon the material to be dredged. In the city of St. John there are places where dredging can be done at 50 cents a yard at a profit, but there are other places where the contractors claim there is no profit in it at 90 cents a yard, and one of them insisted not long ago that he should be paid $1.25 a yard. Everything depends upon the nature of the material to be dredged.

Mr. BENNETT. What explanation can the minister give of their dropping from 57 cents to 27 cents ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It may very well be that upon further enquiry they found the work could be done for less ; or, that they found they could not get contracts in other directions where they might profitably employ their dredges, or, that on account of excessive competition they were willing to take the smaller profit and come down to the figure which the acting minister insisted on ; there may be very many reasons. Or, the work may have been of a different character, as my hon. friend behind me suggests.

Mr. BENNETT. The minister knows that the work was identically the same work and he cannot get away from the question in that manner.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The other day the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett) professed to have a knowledge of carpentry work beyond that which an ordinary man of his profession and mine enjoys, but let me tell him that it often happens that the most reputable and experienced builders differ to an extraordinary degree in the tenders which they put in for a particular work. Not long ago it came under my own observation that in respect to buildings to be erected in one of the western provinces there was over $100,000 difference between the various tenderers.

Mr. BENNETT. What was the size of the contract ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. About $280,000.

Mr. BENNETT. And there was a difference of $100,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes. That variation in tenders comes within my knowledge almost every day. It is remarkable how widely contractors of experience and good judgment will differ as to the probable cost of a work. When the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett) was criticising the action of the government in allowing me to exercise my judgment in fixing the time during the present season for the completion of the work, he did not call attention to the fact that this same Owen Sound Company is only getting 8 cents per cubic yard for the dredging which it has at Victoria, so that although they are getting 27 cents per cubic yard at Tiffin they are only receiving 8 cents at Victoria.

Mr. BENNETT. If the minister is fair he will explain to the House what the nature of the work at each place is.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That just illustrates what I said a moment ago, that everything depends upon the quality of the material to be dredged. When the Owen Sound Dredging Company proposed to do the work at Tiffin at the same price as was provided by the contract, which was awarded to them after public competition, for dredging work at Midland, of which Tiffin forms a part, I said that I would not extend the time for the dredging work at Tiffin unless they would also agree to do the work at Victoria Harbour at the rate of 8 cents per cubic yard, and it was only when the company agreed to do the work at 27 cents and 8 cents per cubic yard respectively that I agreed to recommend the extension of time to my colleagues. The hon. gentleman apparently could not forbear to make reference to the fact that Mr. Stewart happens to be a son of the member for Ottawa. Hs says that his company tendered at 30 cents per cubic yard. Well, there could not surely be any objection to that, as it was the lowest tender obtained, after public tenders were called for. See, Mr. Speaker, how careful the department was in regard to that contract. When the Dominion Dredging Company declined to go on with the work, while the acting minister might have been justified in letting the contract to another party at the same price, he declined to do so, but only gave it to them on their consenting to reduce the price to 26 cents per cubic yard. So we have the work at Midland at 26 cents per cubic yard, the work at Tiffin, which is a part of Midland, at 27 cents per cubic yard, and the work at Victoria Harbour at only 8 cents per cubic yard. The hon. gentleman has a further criticism: He says that this work being an important work, I ought not to extend the time for its completion without again asking for public tenders. Now, there are reasons which I think are cogent reasons, and which might very well operate upon the mind of the minister in inducing him to extend the time for the completion of this work. I may say that these are not the only dredging contracts in respect to which a recommendation was made to council. To begin with, I had to consider the character of the work that was going on at Midland and at Victoria harbour. The Grand Trunk Pacific are creating a new port at Tiffin, and are laying out their plans upon a most comprehensive scale, with a view to conveying across the great lakes from Fort William the vast traffic which is to be developed in the Northwest in the next few years. They are immediately planning for elevator accommodation there to the extent of 2,000,000 bushels, and their plans include accommodation for 10,000,000 bushels of grain at Tiffin. They are working with all possible rapidity. They are pushing their road through the western country at such a rate that they expect by this fall to be hauling grain from Edmonton to the great lakes, and they expect by the 1st of October to have their elevator at Tiffin completed and to have their rail connections there, so as to be in a position this fall to handle the grain traffic which they expect from the lakes; and they have strongly urged me in the public interest, in the interest of transportation, to have this work so far completed by the 1st of October of the present year that large lake vessels will be able to steam up to their elevator and unload the grain into it and so they may transport it eastward.

Mr. BENNETT. What is the date of the order in council?

Mr. PUGSLEY. A week or ten days ago. This company, it is reported to me, have performed their work in a most satisfactory manner. They have a thoroughly up-to-date dredging plant; they know the ground; they have been working there during the past season, and they are prepared to do this work in time for the Grand Trunk Pacific so that the dredging and the elevator will both be completed by the 1st of October. Now, Sir, I thought that it would be wise in the public interest to do everything that was reasonable to have this dredging work done by next fall, so that steamers might use the elevator of the Grand Trunk Pacific. My chief engineer reports that the price is fair and reasonable. I do not believe, if we asked for new tenders, that we would get the work done for less than 26 cents per cubic yard in one case, and 27 cents in the other case, considering the nature of the material. So far as Victoria Harbour is concerned, the Canadian Pacific Railway are pressing the matter in the same way. They too are adopting a new policy of transportation. They have made up their minds that the wheat of the Northwest, instead of going to Buffalo and seeking an outlet by American ports on the Atlantic ocean should pass through Canadian channels, and they are spending an enormous sum of money improving their line of railway. They are building a new line to Victoria harbour, and are spending, I believe, about $60,000 a mile to obtain a grade of three-tenths of one per cent, practically a level line, over which their large locomotives will be able to haul a train of sixty cars at a time, thus greatly reducing the cost of transporting the grain. They too have urged me to push on this dredging work and have it completed if possible this season, so that they can bring the grain over the lakes to Victoria harbour, and then transport it eastward. Seeing that this company were equipped with a magnificent plant, one of the best in Canada, knowing the satisfactory work they performed during the past season, and having the certificate of my chief engineer that these prices were reasonable, and getting the work done at Victoria harbour at the ridiculously low price of 8 cents per yard——

Mr. BENNETT. Does the minister say that the same company is doing the work at Tiffin and Victoria harbour?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think so—the Owen Sound Company.

Mr. BENNETT. That is not my information.

Mr. PUGSLEY. What is the hon. gentleman's information?

Mr. BENNETT. The information I have from Midland is that the Owen Sound Company have the Tiffin work and the Grant Company, the Victoria harbour work.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The Owen Sound Company, I am sure, have the dredging both at Tiffin and at Victoria harbour.

Mr. BENNETT. Has the Grand Trunk any work?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not to my knowledge.

Mr. BENNETT. That is the company that is called the Canadian Construction Company.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not know as to that. I may be wrong, but I am quite sure that the Owen Sound Dredging Company have the contract both at Tiffin and at Victoria harbour. Being able to get the work done at Victoria harbour at the ridiculously low price of 8 cents per cubic yard and at Tiffin at what my engineer informs me is a low price considering the nature of the material, 26 cents per cubic yard, was it unreasonable that I should say to this company: If you are willing to do both of these pieces of work at the figures of last year, I shall extend the time for you for the purpose of providing the necessary accommodation for these great railway companies, so that they may be able to handle the grain traffic during the coming season?

Mr. SPROULE. Section 36 of the Public Works Act says:

Whenever any works are to be executed under the direction of any department of the government, the minister having charge of such department shall invite tenders by public advertisement for the execution of such works, except in cases:

(a) of pressing emergency in which delay would be injurious to the public interest; or
(b) in which from the nature of the work it can be more expeditiously and economically executed by the officers and servants of the department; or
(c) where the estimated cost of the work is less than five thousand dollars and it appears to the minister, in view of the nature of the work, that it is not advisable to invite tenders.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is exactly what I have done. We have complied with the law in every particular.

Mr. SPROULE. What item of the estimates is to pay for this when it is done ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. In the main estimates of the current year there is an amount for improvements at Midland and also at Victoria harbour.

Mr. SPROULE. Which are not voted yet ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Which are not voted yet. A sum was voted last year also but of course under the contract the department will not be obliged to pay if there is no appropriation or when the appropriation is exhausted and the contractor takes that risk.

Mr. SPROULE. At the end of the year the appropriation lapses ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, and the moment the appropriation lapses the payments to the contractor must stop.

Mr. BLAIN. Was there some dredging at Victoria last year ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. BLAIN. At the same place ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. At the same place and the same price. Public tenders were called for both at Victoria harbour and at Midland. My hon. friend must not get into his head the idea as the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) has, even although he lives at Midland, that Tiffin is a different place from Midland. Tiffin is a part of Midland harbour. Last year public tenders were invited for dredging at Victoria and Midland and after public competition—

Mr. BLAIN. Is the minister sure tenders were called for in Victoria harbour ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. There is no question about it. I told the chief engineer of my department I would not extend the time except where public tenders were called for and the contract let to the lowest tenderer. The contract is for dredging works required at Victoria and at Midland and in it it is provided that the contractor shall finish the work at the close of the season of 1907 or at such further date as the minister may fix and determine. The contract therefore gives to the minister the power to fix a time later than the close of last season for the completion of this work. Therefore I am not letting a contract without tender, I am simply exercising the power with the approval of the Governor General in Council, given me by the contract, of fixing the close of the present season as the time when the work should be completed. As the Grand Trunk Railway and Canadian Pacific Railway required the work it could not be wholly completed last season. The hon. gentleman speaks of the money these dredging companies have made. He speaks of one dredge earning $200 a day. Let me tell him that not many years ago the city of St. John had occasion to hire a dredge. The hon. member for St. John (Mr. Daniel), who I think was then mayor of the city, will remember that they hired a dredge from Portland, Maine, and paid a rental of either $350 or $400 per day for it.

Mr. BENNETT. I made the statement that this same dredge that earns $210 a day had been hired by the department for $8 an hour.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That might very well be, but does not the hon. gentleman know that in that case the government would have to pay for her whether she broke down or not ? If she broke down during dredging we would have to pay the $8 an hour.

Mr. BENNETT. Nonsense.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Clearly we would, because she was there at the disposal of the government.

Mr. BENNETT. They were only paid when they worked.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Some dredging companies make money and others do not. Not many years ago, a prominent contractor had some dredging work in St. John. I suppose he thought he was getting a fair price but he did not continue in the business, he sold out when he got through with the work, and went out of the dredging business. He is a man of large experience and I presume that if there was a certainty of earning great money in that business he would have continued in it. Dredging, as I understand, is a risky business. To begin with the plant is very expensive ; it soon wears out, after a very few years a dredging plant becomes old and worn out so that if the man continues in his business he has to renew his machinery. That matter would have to be taken into consideration by the contractor. Dredging machinery is very apt to break down. Not long ago in connection with one of the dredges working upon the Atlantic coast one of the spuds broke and they had to send to British Columbia to get a large spud to take its place. Very often dredges will be under repairs perhaps for weeks at a time. There are all these risks to be taken. I recognize that if a man is lucky to have skilled foremen in charge of his plant he may make money ; if on the other hand he has not a proper man handling this expensive machinery he may very soon lose a vast deal of money and therefore I would advise my hon. friend not to take too much stock in those rumors which he hears from time to time of the enormous dividends which these dredging companies are making, because there are losses which have to be sustained also.

Mr. BENNETT. We see the results. When gentlemen build $20,000 houses who formerly lived in tenements, it is pretty plain what is going on.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I wish simply to refer to one matter to prevent any misapprehension on the part of the hon. gentleman as to the position in which I, as minister, stand with reference to extending the time for the completion of this contract. I said that the matter was under consideration and also that an order in council had been passed authorizing me to extend the time That order of course necessarily would be passed upon my recommendation and ordinarily I would be supposed to follow it up and fix the time for the completion of the work. I may say, however, that for some little time past I have been urged by quite large transportation interests and also by the Boards of Trade of Winnipeg and Port Arthur to consider the question of dredging the harbours upon the Great lakes to a greater depth than 22 feet. These contracts provide for 22 feet but my attention had been called to the fact that the new lock which is to be built by the American government at the Sault is to have a depth of water over the mitre sill of 24 feet and it has been urged upon me to dredge the harbours both on the western and eastern shores of the great lakes to 25 feet. During the last few days, since this order in council was passed, this view has been very strongly urged upon my consideration.

I am now making inquiries in the matter, consulting with the chief engineer. I am not sure whether or not I will recommend to my colleagues that authority be given me to make a change in the contract so as to go to a greater depth. Hon. gentlemen can see that the question is a very important one and one which will involve some considerable additional expense. At the same time, I realize that in dredging these great harbours, both upon the eastern shores of Georgian bay and Lake Huron and also at Port Arthur and Fort William, we ought to look to the future. The lake steamers are becoming larger and are requiring a greater depth of water, and we ought to do what we can to keep the grain traffic of the west in Canadian channels and prevent it going to American ports. The chief engineer of the department tells me that, even taking the depth of water which the new American lock will have, 24 feet, and comparing it with the data of our work both at Victoria and Tiffin and at Port Arthur and Fort William, it is not unlikely that, owing to the difference between the two data, the 22 feet depth proposed under the contracts will be sufficient. The matter is under consideration, and that is why I have not acted on the order in council and actually given the extension. For, if it is decided to dredge to a depth of 25 feet, it will require some arrangement to be made with the contractors that the work may go on and that we may not be compelled, having dredged 22 feet, to dredge to a depth of 25 feet. I am a thorough believer in the idea that, if it can be avoided, we must not allow these big ships which now transport the grain to Buffalo and other American ports to have an advantage in going to those ports, but we must make our harbours of sufficient depth to accommodate the largest vessel which in the future will navigate the great lakes. And, of course, the depth of the harbours on the western shore of Lake Superior must be the measure of the depth of the harbours on the eastern shore of Lake Huron and Georgian bay. Because if the big ships can enter Port Arthur and Fort William drawing 24 feet of water and cannot enter the harbours on Georgian bay or Lake Huron, they must of necessity take the traffic down to Buffalo and other American ports. This, of course, is a very important question as connected with our transportation problem, and I am sure the House will say that I am only exercising reasonable prudence in not acting immediately upon the authority of the order in council, and in taking a short time to consider the matter with the officers of my department, getting all the information possible before deciding what is the best course to pursue. I make this explanation because otherwise my hon. friend might feel that I had not been entirely frank in saying that the order in council was passed, but the matter was under consideration.

Hon. JOHN HAGGART (South Lanark). Just a few words in reference to the question of how dredging contracts should be let. I think the first thing is to have a proper staff of engineers and to make a profile of the locality to be dredged. That, the hon. minister says, is rather difficult engineering work. It is no more difficult than any other engineering work on a railway or anything else. The proper plan is to have a profile, and to know the quantities and the material to be dredged before you put a dredge in at all. Then when you let the contract and the parties are at work it may be inconvenient to measure prism quantities and pay on prism quantities. It may be necessary to pay on monthly estimates, these, perhaps, to be founded on scow quantities or measurements of the material taken out. But in every case these estimates should be corrected at the end of two or three months, or, at the very least, at the end of the season. In no case should the party dredging have any other payment than for the actual prism quantities he takes out. That is the practice in England and in most of the states of the American union and in practically every other country where the dredging is done. But what are the facts here? A couple of parties collude together to get a contract, and, according to the new morals brought up from St. John, N.B., that is all right. They have influence enough with this government to get their nominee appointed to measure the work. He even farms it out in some cases. And on this party's certificate the contractors are paid. And that is the only certificate—no prism quantities, no profile, no correction of the work. In no other country in the world is such a thing permitted as is permitted by our Public Works Department. And why? It is no harm, according to the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) where there are practically only two parties competing for a contract, for these parties to sit down and arrange prices for which they will bid. Why, that is nothing——

Mr. PUGSLEY. Will my hon. friend (Mr. Haggart) pardon me; I was speaking in reference to this particular work. In this case there were a large number of tenderers besides these companies.

Mr. BENNETT. Only one other.

Mr. HAGGART. I paid particular attention to the statement of my hon. friend (Mr. Bennett) and that statement was that the two parties who colluded were two-thirds of those who tendered.

Mr. BENNETT. No doubt about that.

Mr. HAGGART. And there is nothing wrong in that according to the Minister of Public Works—nothing immoral, nothing illegal. Why, in my reading of the statutes lately I have found that if a couple of parties attending a sale collude together, one saying to the other: 'You bid only so much for this and I will bid only so much for that,' and if that transaction comes before the court it is set aside on the ground of fraud and collusion. Why, there can be no greater collusion than for two to get together to arrange for high prices for such a contract as this. But, according to the new code of morals, this is all right—and, at least we can say that it is comparatively venial when we consider some of the other things done by those now in power. The Minister of Public Works seems not to take into account at all the statute quoted by my hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) which provides that every work involving an expenditure of $5,000 or over must be let by contract. And the hon. gentleman ignores this statute notwithstanding the report of the Royal Commission to investigate the civil service and its recommedation on this subject.

Mr. HAGGART.

Mr. PUGSLEY. How did I ignore it?

Mr. HAGGART. By letting a contract, or extending a contract which already existed, without tender, for works which may amount to $150,000 or $200,000 during the current year. There are estimates of $75,000 for one of the works and $75,000 for the other. And the hon. minister recommends to the Governor in Council to give him power to extend a contract for these works which contract was obtained by collusion.

Mr. PUGSLEY. But it was not obtained by collusion.

Mr. HAGGART. It is a fraud, it is a violation of the law which the Royal Commission appointed by the hon. gentleman himself, has drawn attention to. There is a similar Act in England. How do they do there? As I have stated before in this House, they do not buy even a paint brush or a pound of nails without tender and contract. They do not do any piece of work, unless in the government workshops or navy yards, except by contract. The attention of the minister was forcibly drawn to it by the commission. They say to him: Look to England, there was a case in England where it was thought that for the purpose of keeping secret the construction of a gun of a particular pattern, it was in the public interest that the work should be done in secret; but the Public Accounts Committee in England said: That is not a sufficient reason to set aside the statute, that is not a sufficient reason to set aside the well known principle which has been adopted in reference to public works in England. No, they say, let every foreign government in the world know what the secret is, rather than that we should set aside the well known principle of letting public works by tender. But these gentlemen here in Canada—laws do not bind them, morals do not bind them. We had a set of morals brought up here the other day in reference to collusion. No effect at all upon hon. gentlemen. Statutory enactments are not of the least use. Wherever they think it is in the interest of their friends to let them a contract without tender, no statute, no law binds them. One would think that with the report of the Royal Commission before them showing violations of the law and making a comparison with the British system, they would at least have a little care. But the minister gets up boldly in the House and justifies the course he is pursuing. He says he thinks it is rather to be commended. Commended for what? Getting an order in council passed and not putting it into effect. For what reason? Because the amount to be excavated by the dredges may be largely in excess of the present estimate. He says that he has in contemplation the deepening of the harbour at Port Arthur and Victoria, and Midland to the depth of the new lock which is to be constructed at Sault Ste. Marie by the Americans. It is true that the Americans contemplate a depth of 24 feet on the mitre sill of the new lock. But the new lake dredging will not be done, it will not be in use for seven or eight years more. It will take that time at least to complete the dredging, and they will have to build a new lock I suppose in order to give the same facilities as at present, and when they do that we will have to export by Midland and other harbours, because we must be able to use vessels of the largest draft that navigate Sault Ste. Marie.

I only rose for the purpose of showing how the chance of committing fraud with reference to dredging could be removed, if these gentlemen who have the administration of public affairs in charge adopted ordinary reasonable means for the purpose of doing it, and had a proper system of estimating the work that is to be done, and would follow the law in reference to the construction of public works. Never mind about morals, never mind about collusion; although the most damaging thing that could ever happen to a minister or a government is the exercise of nepotism, appointing their friends or relatives to public positions and helping them to secure contracts. No government can last long which does that. The strongest man that ever occupied the woolsack in England, on account of the appointment of a few relatives of his to positions under the government, was driven into private life. What has become of the public sentiment of this country if the statements of my hon. friend from East Simcoe are correct, that friends of members of the government, sons and relatives of members of parliament, are receiving large contracts from the government? It would be better that the commerce of the country should be stopped than that such things should be allowed to occur. Honour and integrity among public men are far above any wealth that can be acquired by such means, and hon. gentlemen will find out that the people of this country are awakening at last to these methods. I only rose for the purpose of making a few remarks with reference to what I considered the proper way of letting these contracts. It is simple, it is legal, there is no collusion about it. Above all things, let us keep the government and the people's representatives free from suspicion. For goodness sake, let us adopt the practice that, even when you wish to buy a pound of nails or a box of matches, you do it by open and public tender, by competition, and thus remove entirely temptation from the government.

Mr. R. BLAIN (Peel). I wish to express my disapproval of the policy laid down by the Minister of Public Works in respect to letting contracts without public competition. If any member of this House will take the trouble to look over the 'Hansard' of the last three or four years and read the discussions that have taken place in connection with tenders for dredging, they will arrive at the conclusion that something is wrong. For example here are two companies. My hon. friend from East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) has from time to time been pointing out that some men were shareholders in both, that relatives were in both of them, and that in some cases there was collusion, there was a joining of hands in order to deceive the government in the tenders they put in for dredging. For instance, when these two companies, the Great Lakes Dredging Company and Mr. A. F. Bowman, were tendering for work to be done in Port Arthur, one of them, the Great Lakes Dredging Company, put in a tender for 9 cents a yard and A. F. Bowman put in a tender for 18 cents a yard, and A. F. Bowman is a member of the Great Lakes Dredging Company. If there had been no other tenders between the two, everybody knows what would have happened. The one for 9 cents would have been withdrawn, and the government would have been compelled to give the tender for 18 cents per yard.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Can the hon. gentleman point out any case in which a Minister of Public Works has allowed such a thing to be done?

Mr. BLAIN. I do not propose to enter into a detailed discussion of all these matters.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Then why does the hon. gentleman assume that it would have been done when it never has been done?

Mr. BLAIN. I am expressing my condemnation of the policy. I would like the minister to understand that when he comes forward, as he does this afternoon, and states that there shall be no public competition for the dredging that is to take place at these two points for the coming year, then I say the people of this country will not approve of such a policy. Speaking for myself, I wish to express my condemnation of the new policy laid down by the minister. Not only is the minister guilty himself but he has, in the order in council, received the endorsation of the cabinet and we have therefore every member of the government setting aside a statute of this country as read by my hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) and as cited by my hon. friend from Lanark (Mr. Haggart). In reference to this statute we have a government, whose duty it is to carry out the statutes, coming forward his afternoon, and, through one of its representatives, saying that they will set aside this statute and that during this season dredging work shall be done without public competition at the prices they paid last year whether those prices were just or unjust. I see that the Auditor General has expressed himself upon this subject. Here is a letter:

Several cases came up during the season of 1906, where no public competition was invited, but where a price for 1906 dredging was agreed upon between some official of your department and the contractor who had been dredging at the same place in the season of 1905.

In each of these instances the application for payment was accompanied by a type-written slip-form, stating that 'as the case was one of pressing emergency, in which delay would have been injurious to the public interest, the minister directed that the work should be executed without a call for tenders.'

It would generally be feasible for the engineering staff of one season to calculate what work remains to be done for the next year; and for the department to arrange its future policy in the early part of the winter. There would then be ample time to allow for public advertisement and tender, before dredging becomes possible in April or May.

Whatever difficulties have been caused in the past, by the late dates at which the votes of parliament were determined, will disappear under the new arrangement by which the fiscal year begins on April 1.

The money will now be voted several weeks or months before the opening of navigation; and there will always be sufficient time to invite tenders and award contracts, with the deliberation which is essential to such an important subject.

Here, the Auditor General, over his own signature, in the last Auditor General's Report (V—300) points out to the minister that this policy is a very bad one and he says that it ought to be discontinued. May I direct for a moment the attention of the right hon. First Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) to a statement that he made some years ago with respect to the way in which public works should be carried on under his government when it came into power ?

It is an honest minister who makes a competent engineer. Sir, when we have a Liberal party administration at Ottawa, we shall not have such a system as that, we shall not have these errors which have been occurring, because the minister will then say to the engineer:

'My government wants a plan of a bridge, or a plan of a block of buildings, prepare your plans, but mind, if the contract which is given is not filled exactly as it is wanted or one cent has to be paid, off goes your head at once.'

From such men, to-day in the ranks of the Liberal party, can be produced such a Minister of Railways, Minister of Public Works, that there will be no disgrace upon the brow of any Canadian.

This was the policy laid down by the right hon. gentleman before he came into power in 1896. Now, we have ministers of the Crown setting aside the statutes. Now, after we have adopted a policy approved by the people of Canada which declares that there shall be public competition, we have that policy set aside and the right hon. gentleman and the members of his government adopt an order in council endorsing a brand new policy brought up from eastern Canada by the Minister of Public Works. I want to call the attention of the hon. Minister of Public Works to something that took place at a meeting of the board of trade at Collingwood

The regular Board of Trade meeting was held in the court room on Tuesday night last, and it was largely attended.

The principal question was the harbour. The president wanted to get at the actual condition of affairs. It was generally understood that we had a depth of twenty feet of water in the channel at low water, but facts did not bear out this supposition. He wanted to know who was responsible for the incomplete and unsatisfactory condition of the channel.

Mr. Hughes, the inspector, produced a chart of the soundings showing bumps and lumps dotted all over the channel, which was explanation enough of the trouble.

The board will take energetic steps to have the channel cleared up as the contractors are evidently digging out the soft spots where it pays the best, and the engineer is either indifferent or ignorant of what is going on. Mr. Hughes only does as he is told, and has no discretionary powers on the work.

That is the condition up at Collingwood, as presented to this House in 1907. Here was a contractor dredging out the soft spots in order to make money. There are other instances if I were to take up the time of the House but I want to direct the minister's attention to the fact that if any department in this government requires to ask for public tenders surely it is the department of my hon. friend. The amounts involved are large. There may be a difference of opinion as to whether an item of $2,000 or $3,000 should be made the subject of competition and tender but there surely can be no question that the competitive system is advisable when such large amounts are involved as are expended for dredging. I read from the last report of the Minister of Public Works that at Port Arthur :

The total amount dredged from July 1 to end of the season of 1906, was 443,175 cubic yards, scow measurements, and the expenditure for the nine months ending March 31 last was $67,990.91.

My hon. friend from East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) has pointed out that the dredging companies that are under discussion have received more than $1,000,000——

Mr. BENNETT. Two million.

Mr. BLAIN—two million during the last few years for dredging. The newspapers have been pointing out that there is something wrong. My hon. friend from East Simcoe, in particular, has been directing the attention of the House to this condition of things. Here are two dredging companies, one assisting the other and both making an effort, of course, to make all the money possible. We find that tenders are ranging between these companies and other companies from 57 cents to 27 cents, to 9 cents and to 18 cents. Surely that fact is sufficient to warn the hon. gentleman who is the controller of this department against allowing any man or any company to come to him and say : I will do this work at the same price as that which was paid last year. That is not the policy that the people of Canada want to pursue in the year 1908. That is a policy that was discarded years ago. That is a policy that no municipal council in any province of Canada would permit for a moment and yet my hon. friend who is supposed to lead in this respect, to point out how the public works of the country should be constructed and to see that every care is taken to protect the public interest, has assented to a proposal of this kind and has introduced a brand new policy with regard to this dredging work. What will these dredging companies think about it ? They will say: We have a friendly minister. Two tenders may go in for the one work and the same two contractors may tender for another work and they can decide with the approval of the minister which of them shall take one contract and which shall take the other. That is the condition of things in the Department of Public Works now. Are we to understand from the minister that these contracts are let for a term of years and that the government has no power to cancel them ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Which contracts ?

Mr. BLAIN. The contracts for dredging in different parts of Canada.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I thought I had explained to my hon. friend that these contracts at Midland, Tiffin and Victoria harbours were let to the lowest tenderers after public competition of the widest character, and in the contract it is provided that they shall do this work during the season of 1907 or by such further later date as the Minister of Public Works may determine. Therefore, this is not letting work without competition at all. This is the case with regard to quite a number of contracts. This is nothing new with regard to contracts in the Public Works Department, and it is not at all a new thing for the minister to have to fix a later date for the completion of a work. It has been done ever since confederation I suppose ; done by the late government as well as by this government. The hon. gentleman is entirely wrong in suggesting that I am letting this work be done without public competition. I am simply doing what the contract provides may be done. With regard to the dredging at Fort William and Port Arthur which the hon. gentleman included in his figures, in that case I am informed that in the call for tenders for the work at Fort William it was expressly stated that the work was to extend over a number of years.

Mr. BLAIN. May I ask whether the government has the power to cancel a contract which extends over a number of years ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have not the contract with me, but if the hon. gentleman moves for it it will be brought down.

Mr. BLAIN. The hon. gentleman corrects me when I say that this dredging is to be done without tender?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Certainly.

Mr. BLAIN. I made no such statement in the sense that the Minister of Public Works seems to take out of it. I know full well that last year or the previous year tenders were invited, and I suppose the lowest tenderer was granted the work, but that is not the point under discussion. What I am calling attention to is the work to be done this year, and I state now in the presence of the minister that he has continued this work for 1908 without public competition. That is my statement. Is it correct or is it not?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It does seem to me that it is entirely wrong, because the contract was let by public competition. The prices were obtained by public competition and the contract itself specifies that the work is to be completed either at the close of 1907 or at such later date as the minister may determine. Therefore, the hon. gentleman is entirely wrong in saying that the work is being let without competition. All I am doing is exercising the power which the contract confers upon me to fix a date for the termination of the work.

Mr. BLAIN. What is the need of an order in council ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I felt that I could do it without an order in council, but I also felt that in important matters like this it is desirable that I should go to my colleagues for their approval.

Mr. BLAIN. At page 5985 'Hansard,' 1907, there is a discussion on the question of dredging which I quote :

Mr. BENNETT. Do I understand that contracts have been entered into with Weddell at one place and the Great Lakes Company at another that will run for six years or about $190,000 a year for the two?

Mr. FISHER (Acting Minister). The contract is terminable at any time at the wish of the government. The plan was made for the whole work and the contracts were let for the whole, expecting to occupy about seven years.

Mr. SPROULE. The contract was let on estimated quantities?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. How could the government let a contract covering work for six or seven years when the money has not been voted?

Mr. FISHER. The contract can be terminated at any time.

Mr. SPROULE. But if the contract is let and the money is not voted I take it the contractor would have reasonable ground for claiming damages.

Mr. FISHER. The contract is let subject to the voting of the money in parliament.

Mr. BLAIN. In the session of 1904 a Bill was introduced by the then Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Préfontaine) relating to these two harbours, and I desired information on that subject and the minister at that time is reported in 'Hansard' as follows:

We are therefore to understand from this citation that the government has power to cancel this contract at any time and the very fact that the minister now asks for an order in council to continue the work for next year is the proof. I say it is wrong for the minister to do any such thing. I believe it will not receive the endorsation of the hon. gentleman's own supporters in the House. The people of Canada will not approve of it, and particularly where the dredging in this department is surrounded by suspicion on every hand. Suspicion is created, for instance, by the fact stated by my hon. friend from East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) that one of the inspectors on one of these dredges never went near the dredge at all.

Mr. BENNETT. He swore to that himself.

Mr. BLAIN. The inspector swore to that himself in the Public Accounts Committee; he swore that he had let the work to another and that he stood in the position of a middleman and took the profits and put them in his pockets. Then we have other suspicious things about the dredging, and I therefore repeat that the policy the minister has adopted in allowing the dredging at these points to go on for the summer of 1908 without public competition is a policy that the people of Canada will not endorse. In the face of all these scandals in connection with the expenditure of public money, the people of Canada will be surprised that the Minister of Public Works should say that hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of work should be done without public competition.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). I wish to say a few words on this question, because I think we have embarked on a very dangerous principle. I remember some years ago bringing up the question in this House in connection with the expenditure of public money under the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. I drew attention to what I regarded as an innovation that would lead to very great abuses and probably great dishonesty if it were continued. The answer I received was that we had a new minister who was adopting a new and up-to-date method. I will ask any one who has given attention to the history of that department and to the report of the commissioners who were appointed to inquire into the civil service if I was not justified in the position I then took. For many years abuses were constantly creeping in, in connection with the expenditure of public money, and parliament in its wisdom thought well to embody what it regarded as the correct principle in a statute, with the view of controlling every minister in the expenditure of public moneys. What does that statute say?

Whenever any works are to be executed under the direction of any department of the government, the minister having charge of such department shall invite tenders by public advertisement for the execution of such works.

That was the correct principle. That was crystallized in a statute for the purpose of controlling ministers of the Crown as well as their subordinates. There were some exceptions provided for; what were they? The first was: 'pressing emergency in which delay would be injurious to the public interest. Has the minister shown us that in these particular cases there was any pressing emergency? Why, the very order in council was passed before navigation was opened. Had he not time to call for tenders for these works? What kind of cases were intended to be provided for by that exception? Perhaps the breaking of a lock of a canal or the breaking down of some bridge, when there was not time to call for public tenders, and when it would be justifiable to do the work otherwise. Does the minister pretend that there was any pressing emergency in these cases? He tells us what the Grand Trunk is going to do in hauling grain, and what the boats are prepared to do when the locks at Sault Ste. Marie will be deepened. But the hon. member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart) tells us that these locks could not be deepened for six or seven years. Then what is the great emergency for dredging at Tiffin or Midland or Victoria harbour for the purpose of allowing large vessels drawing 24 or 25 feet of water to come down through the canal? Is there any necessity? Not at all.

Mr. PUGSLEY. If you build your wharfs and your revetment walls upon land which is dredged to a depth of 22 feet, how can you afterwards dredge to a depth of 25 feet without undermining your works?

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman is not so young or so innocent as to think he can put that theory before this House. He knows that he does not require to do that. He presumes on the gullibility of this House to an extent for which I would not give him credit.

Mr. CONMEE. Not at all.

Mr. SPROULE. Now one of the dredgers is to the fore.

Mr. CONMEE. The very thing the minister mentions occurred at the wharf of the Canadian Pacific Railway at Fort William, and they had to rip-rap it to strengthen it according to the increased depth of the channel. The same thing has to be done to the elevator at Victoria harbour constructed only two years ago.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman is confounding two things—dredging and the building of wharfs.

Mr. CONMEE. Not at all. The wharfs at Fort William were built some years ago, the river was afterwards deepened to twenty-two feet, and on account of the extra depth the reinforcement had to take place.

Mr. SPROULE. The work was done before it was contemplated that they would require a greater depth. Dredging is not to build a foundation for a wharf or an elevator.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Must you not dredge for your foundation ?

Mr. SPROULE. The minister has the knowledge in his possession, and if he has to dredge the channel deeper he will have to put the public work to that depth, but in doing that he does not require to do the dredging this year. There is no urgency in that, so that this work does not come under that first exception. What is the next ? 'A work which, from the nature of the work, can be more expeditiously and economically executed by the officers and servants of the department.' In this case, are the officers and servants of the department doing the work ? Not at all. So it does not come under that. What is the last exception ? 'When the established cost of the work is less than $5,000.' These are the three exceptions, and I draw attention to them, because this case does not come under any one of the three. The minister chooses to ignore that statement. He is a new minister, and he is adopting new methods like the late Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and if he continues them, we shall find in a short time that they will lead to abuses which will be among the greatest scandals ever brought to light, and I am satisfied that the hon. minister knows it. He is not doing this innocently ; he is too old at the business. His history in the province which he has left is the strongest reason we have for reaching the conclusion that he knows what he is doing, and what it is likely to lead to. When the hon. minister is asked, what do you depend on for the faithfulness of your inspectors, he says, we depend on the government making inquiry in regard to their character and capability. But it was said in the House last session that when the government were told by one of their own supporters that a certain individual was satisfactory with regard to character, capability or anything else the minister is bound to accept it. The Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) shakes his head. I will show him from 'Hansard' that that was the reply. What did that lead to ? The inspector is appointed and we are told that he goes to the works about eight or nine o'clock in the morning. But the dredge commences work at five o'clock and the inspector, according to the sworn testimony, reported so many cubic yards of stuff dredged out of the harbour, and that is all the government had to depend on. He said that the engineer of the dredge told him the quantity. I drew attention to the fact that they had an inspector going around the hotels, puffing away at twenty-five cent cigars, hour after hour, while the dredge was working, but the certificates came in and the dredge was paid on the strength of this man's certificates. The money of the government has been dishonestly spent in that way without the department having any proper or intelligent knowledge of the work done.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Who told the hon. gentleman that ?

Mr. SPROULE. I have it from a man living right in the locality. Some one raises an ironical laugh.

Mr. JOHNSTON. You do not blame them.

Mr. SPROULE. This man is just as honest and just as truthful, and I think a little more so, than the man who raised that laugh. He stands as well in the locality where he has resided for thirty years as the hon. member does in his locality.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Is he dead ?

Mr. SPROULE. More than that it can be verified by not one but many people. I brought it to the notice of the government some years ago and they paid no attention to it.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. SPROULE. When you left the chair at six o'clock, Mr. Speaker, I was dealing with a phase of this question which I had about concluded. I have a question to ask the minister, how many contracts that were let last year or the year before are to be extended under the principle that he has explained ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am sorry that I have not a copy of the order ready to-night. As I said to the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) I will lay it on the table to-morrow. But I should say, speaking from memory, some ten or twelve, possibly more.

Mr. BENNETT. All in Ontario ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No. They are all cases in which public tenders were called for and the prices fixed by competition.

Mr. HENDERSON. Last year ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. If each of these represents any considerable sum, the aggregate must be a large amount of money. In view of the facts brought out with regard to these tenders—presents to my mind perfectly conclusive—that there was collusion between the tenderers, the attitude which the minister——

Mr. PUGSLEY. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) permit me? I do not admit that there was collusion between all the tenderers or any of them. There is no evidence of anything of this kind. It is not contended that there was any collusion with the Dominion Dredging Company which was the lowest tenderer at 30 cents. Another fact which I should mention, but which was not brought out this afternoon is that when the Dominion Dredging Company informed the minister that they could not take the contract at the price of 30 cents the tenderers were invited again to tender on the work and it was reduced to 27 cents.

Mr. BENNETT. Were there public calls for tenders in the newspapers?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, the tenderers were invited to tender again.

Mr. SPROULE. Did it look as if there was something wrong when one tenderer put in a bid at 56 cents and another at 27 cents and then would not take the contract?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It was one tendering at 30 cents who could not take it.

Mr. SPROULE. I suppose, in the meantime he had been interviewed by the others and he had come to the conclusion that they could get a good thing if they had an understanding.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think that is a very unworthy suspicion.

Mr. BENNETT. No tenders were called for.

Mr. SPROULE. Unworthy of what? Of a public man?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. Did not the circumstances justify suspicion?

Mr. PUGSLEY. There was not a fact to justify suspicion. There is not a tittle of evidence on which any suggestion could be based that the Dominion Dredging Company did not make their tender bona fide. But, in consequence of having other work they could not take this contract. It has not even been suggested that they were in collusion with the others.

Mr. SPROULE. Did they make their deposit when putting in their tender?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I cannot say at the moment.

Mr. SPROULE. The minister knows that that is one of the conditions of tendering, that with a tender there must go the deposit. The minister, therefore, had them under his control and could have compelled them to carry out the contract. But he allows them to throw it up for some reason best known to himself, and divide it up with——

Mr. PUGSLEY. And we get it done at 3 cents a yard less.

Mr. SPROULE. I want to tell the minister that I have been too long in this House not to know something about how contracts are given in many lines. I remember a case, some years ago, when three corporations tendered for something in connection with the work of the Department of Justice. The tenders were collusive, but they were all different, and each was accompanied with the required deposit. But when the tender was to be awarded, the lowest tenderer, to whom the contract was to be given, represented that he had made a mistake in his calculations and that he stood to lose a great deal of money if he were compelled to carry out the contract. That is one of the common ways of getting out of these things. The result was that when they came to sign the contract the successful tenderer was in London and the unsuccessful tenderer in Ottawa. When the man in London was notified to sign the contract, he wired back to let so and so sign it—his supposed competitor—that all three were in it together and it did not matter who got it. I had this statement of the facts from the Minister of Justice of that time. He was confronted with this evidence of collusion. And I believe that this had been carried on for two or three times in succession in the same way. It has been shown over and over again in this House that there is collusion amongst tenderers in connection with public works. In the face of that fact I think there is not only suspicion but more than suspicion in this case. It is not enough to say that, because the contract was given at 3 cents a yard less than the original lowest tender, that we are justified in running on that line for several years.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Before the hon. gentleman passes away from that point, will he allow me to ask: Does he suggest that these prices are not as the chief engineer certifies, fair and reasonable?

Mr. SPROULE. That is a question that the minister could not reasonably expect me to answer. But I may tell him, from what I know about the business that it would depend upon the material to be taken out. If it were ordinary sand, gravel or clay, the prices are very big prices. I speak from the knowledge of a man in the business for years, who told me over and over again that in any moderately well-sheltered place, he could take out clay, gravel or sand at 10 cents a yard and make big profits. And the price in this case is 26 cents. I know of offers over and over again to do this work for less than ten cents, for less than 9 cents, even as low as 8 cents, if the government would give the work.

Mr. PUGSLEY. They always have a chance to tender.

Mr. SPROULE. If the stuff is ordinary clay, gravel or sand, as I assume it to be, these parties have a cinch in a contract at 26 cents a yard. It is not enough to say that the engineer certified the price as fair and just. We who have been in the House for any length of time have found, over and over again, that prices which were really two or three prices were certified as fair and just. For instance, we know that teacups were bought for the icebreaker 'Montcalm' at $1.04 apiece, and this price was certified as just and reasonable. Then in the case of the contract of M. P. Davis, on the Cornwall canal, the same certificate was given concerning prices. The Auditor General refused to pay and held up the accounts for over six months. And they took off the difference between $52,000 and $29,000 for the work of that year, and with this reduction the contractor was satisfied to accept payment. The government's own engineer was satisfied that $52,000 for what was done that year was a fair and just price, when the contractor himself accepted $29,000 and was satisfied. So it is not enough to say that because a price is recommended as fair and just, you ought to be satisfied with it. There are other ways of ascertaining what is fair and just. The minister says the contract is a continuous one, and they have a right to expect it to continue. How does he make that out? Let him bring down the contract.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The copy will be down at the next sitting of the House.

Mr. SPROULE. After this debate is over?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I regret I could not get the copy in time for this afternoons debate. I will say to my hon. friend that the items in regard to this very work will all appear, in fact are already in the main estimates, and the matter can be discussed in Committee of Supply.

Mr. SPROULE. That does not make any difference, it is a question of fact. Is it or is it not a continuous contract?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I will tell the hon. gentleman what the words of the contract are, as near as I can remember. They are that the contractor shall do the dredging work required at such a place, say at Victoria harbour, and shall complete the work by the close of the season of 1907, or at such later date as may be fixed by the minister.

Mr. SPROULE. Which is at the end of the fiscal year?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, at the close of the season of 1907, or at such later date as may be fixed by the minister.

Mr. SPROULE. Then it lies with the minister to decide whether the contract ends at the end of the fiscal year or not. Does the minister contend that the contract would not end with the end of the fiscal year?

Mr. PUGSLEY. You have to take it as it is.

Mr. SPROULE. I say that the contract closes with the end of the fiscal year. When the fiscal year expires and the money voted has lapsed, that contract closes.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman does not seem to understand me. I did not say that the contract closed with the fiscal year, it is the close of the season of 1907 or at such later date as may be fixed by the minister. Those are the words.

Mr. SPROULE. Practically it means the close of the fiscal year, because after winter sets in they cannot do any dredging. Is the minister aware of this fact?

Mr. PUGSLEY. What does the hon. gentleman say is meant by the words 'or at such later date as may be fixed by the minister'?

Mr. SPROULE. That is a sliding clause the minister has put in, I do not think it binds any one. But I will tell him that I have an indistinct remembrance of some such contract let years ago, and because the government saw fit to take that work from the party and put it up for tender again, the contractor held that he had a right to collect damages because the government refused to continue the contract. The contractor asked permission to go into the Exchequer Court to establish the fact that he had a right to have his contract renewed. The government granted him permission, and the Exchequer Court decided that he had not the right, that the contract closed with the close of the fiscal year, and when the money that was voted for the year had lapsed, he had no right to a continuance of that contract. What does the minister say about that?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Will the hon. gentleman tell me what were the words of the contract upon which the contractor relied as entitling him to a continuance? Those words would be extremely important.

Mr. SPROULE. My remembrance is that it was a contract on schedule prices until the work was done. Now they could not do the work all in one year, and he claimed they could not do it in two years, I think he claimed it would take two years to do it, and he was entitled to continue that work until it was done. Therefore I hold his case was quite as strong as the case under consideration at the present time.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Any lawyer knows that everything depends, as to the rights of the contractor, upon the words of the contract; and if the contract was just as the hon. gentleman seems to put it, that the contractor was to do the whole of this work at schedule prices, then I would say as a lawyer without hesitation that he would have a right to do the whole work and be paid for it. But there must have been something in the contract which has escaped the attention of my hon. friend. Perhaps it was provided in the contract that if the appropriation became exhausted the contract might be put an end to. But that would be a very different case from the one we are now discussing.

Mr. SPROULE. I claim that when the appropriation is exhausted this contract ends. Parliament might change its mind, parliament might take up some other work, parliament might change the work altogether, and parliament has a right to end the contracts at the end of the fiscal year, whether the contractor likes it or dislikes it. Therefore the case is on all fours with this one. Now let me draw attention to another feature. Some think we are on the verge of hard times. The price of labour may go down, the price of everything may go down. Suppose that this contract continues. I saw a statement in one of the papers that it would take about six years to finish the work at Port Arthur and the work is being done there on schedule prices. If I understand the Minister of Public Works correctly, it was to the effect that this work would continue under the same contractors from year to year until it was done, at the prices at which they have taken the contract for the last year.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman entirely misunderstood me. I cannot see how I could have been so unintelligible. I stated this afternoon that in so far as this work at Fort William is concerned it is not a contract from year to year, but it is a contract for the whole work extending over a number of years.

Mr. SPROULE. For the whole work extending over a number of years ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, expressly mentioned in the contract.

Mr. SPROULE. Was there any time mentioned during which it was supposed the work was to continue ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, it was supposed that it would continue for six years and that was the statement made by the acting Minister of Public Works, the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher).

Mr. SPROULE. In what year was that statement made?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think it was the year before last; it was either last year or the year before.

Mr. SPROULE. I suppose the hon. gentleman does not know the price at which the contract was let.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, the price is quite low.

Mr. SPROULE. How much?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The price at Fort William is 9 cents per cubic yard with an additional allowance of 2 cents per cubic yard based upon the distance at which the mud is carried out beyond a certain limit.

Mr. SPROULE. That contract was made at 9 cents per cubic yard and this one is 26 cents per cubic yard.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is very low.

Mr. SPROULE. I think it is reasonable.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The one at Victoria harbour is 8 cents.

Mr. SPROULE. Victoria harbour is 8 cents and the other is 26 cents for the same kind of work.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not for the same kind of work.

Mr. SPROULE. I take the Port Arthur contract to be on all fours with the case in which it was held by the Exchequer Court that a contract ended at the end of the fiscal year and that the contract could be abandoned by the government at that time. Let us look at the unwisdom and improvidence of entering into such a contract as this one. This contract is taken at 26 cents a yard. The minister was asked if there was any estimate made as to how much work was to be done there and his reply was that he thought not. Therefore, we do not know how long this work is likely to last. But, suppose it lasts for four, five, six or seven years——

Mr. PUGSLEY. It will not last that long.

Mr. SPROULE. Well, it will last a few years. Suppose that it was taken at a time when wages were very high, suppose that we were right on the verge of hard times when wages would drop 15, 20 or 30 per cent when the cost of supplies and everything else would drop and when work of this kind could be done for perhaps 75 or 80 per cent less than the price which would yield a good profit when the contract was made, in what position would the government find themselves with a contract of this kind on their hands? I will wait until I can get the minister's attention. I want to ask him whether, if I treated him in that way, he would regard it as an act of courtesy? I say that if he had the instincts of a gentleman he would not treat me in this way.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman must withdraw that remark.

Mr. SPROULE. Well, I will withdraw those words but I wish that I had some other words that would convey my meaning.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I trust that the hon. gentleman will not again make an exhibition of himself in the manner that he has done this evening.

Mr. SPROULE. I will make such an exhibition as in my judgment seems proper until the hon. gentleman sees fit to treat me with that courtesy which is due from a minister of the Crown to any member of this House who is exercising the right which he has of dealing with these public accounts of a minister.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I would like your ruling upon the question as to whether, if a member does not choose all the time to look at the hon. gentleman who is addressing the House, he may be characterized as wanting in courtesy. I heard what the hon. gentleman said although for a moment I turned to speak to my hon. friend on my right (Mr. Carvell). But, that should not justify the hon. gentleman in saying what he did say to me.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think it is hardly a point of order. It is a question of taste, I suppose.

Mr. SPROULE. I was saying that provided prices and wages fell the government would find themselves with a contract on their hands that represented hundreds of thousands and even millions of dollars, whereas, had they an opportunity of calling for tenders, they could save a lot of money to the country. I say it is an improvident and unwise contract, and that it will just as surely as we are here to-night lead to improper conduct on the part of somebody. This is one of the devices that the minister has in his own hands which enable him to improperly use public money, and to pay it out to his own favourites in such a way that the government does not get full return for it. The minister is a new man, he has adopted this new system, and I predict that we will live to remind him of what it has led to. The system, in my judgment, is a very bad one. The money which has been spent in a few years with three of these firms reaches the total of $3,700,000. That is a large amount of money.

Mr. PUGSLEY. What is this new system that the hon. gentleman speaks about as having been inaugurated by me? It is not a new system. This has been done before in the case of contracts like the present.

Mr. SPROULE. I have not knowledge of it being done since the Act was passed to compel the government to do these works by tender and contract.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, this was put up for tender.

Mr. SPROULE. This was a departure from the statutory law. This sum of $3,700,000 has been paid out to these three firms one of which is doing dredging at 8 cents a yard.

Mr. BENNETT. They are now being paid 9 cents and the contract has been varied from 20, 30 and 40 cents a cubic yard.

Mr. SPROULE. Yes, they were getting 30 and 40 cents for the same work that they are doing now for 9 cents. On account of the constant attention that has been given to this question in this House, especially by my hon. friend from East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) for sheer shame they were obliged to put this work up to public competition and the contract was given and they are now doing the work for 9 cents a yard for which they were previously getting 23 cents. I will say that the work for which they are getting 26 cents a yard would have been done this year, if tenders had been invited, for 8 cents a yard the same as they are doing it for Victoria harbour.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is not the same kind of work.

Mr. SPROULE. And yet the government have denied themselves the opportunity of saving the money of the country. They have paid $3,700,000 in a few years for one class of work and they would go on and pay out that money. Nothwithstanding the fact that many of these contracts may be let at a price three times as great as they should be let at they will allow them to go on from year to year and pay the price regardless of whether the country is getting any return for the outlay or not so long as it happens to suit their convenience. It is wrong, it is improper, it should not be continued and if the minister continues it, just as sure as he is here to-night, we will have an opportunity of reminding him in the future of the abuses that have developed under his administration, we will bring to light transactions similar to those which have been disclosed to-day, we will meet the minister with the argument that is presented to him to-night, and we will show him how improper and illegal is his conduct in making contracts and carrying on public work in this manner.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR (Leeds). I want to ask the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) to take a few notes as he has promised us that when his estimates come down he will be able to give us all the information that we want in respect to these contracts. I am informed that last year the department called for tenders for dredging in the province of Quebec. Tenders were invited for dredging at Blanche Shoals and the Stewart Company were the lowest, but they were full of work and could not take the job and it was handed over to Messrs.

T. F. Moore and Company of Montreal, who are a sort of manufacturers agents, something like Merwin and are dealing very largely with the government. The contract was awarded to Moore and Company.

Mr. PUGSLEY. At what price ?

Mr. TAYLOR. It is for you to get me that information when the estimates are up.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Were they the lowest tenderers ?

Mr. TAYLOR. Stewart and Company were the lowest but they did not take the job and it was given to Moore and Company.

Mr. SPROULE. What became of their deposits.

Mr. TAYLOR. The Stewart Company were the lowest tenderers for the dredging at Dorion but they had to throw up the job and it was given to L. Cohen & Sons. L. Cohen & Sons are a firm of Jews in Montreal who run the jew vote in the interest of the friends of the government.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am not aware that that is any disgrace.

Mr. TAYLOR. It is not, but they are not dredging men.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Were they the lowest tenderers ?

Mr. TAYLOR. Stewart and Company were the lowest in every case but they were so full of other jobs that they could not take these.

Mr. PUGSLEY. What price did Cohen get.

Mr. TAYLOR. It will be for the minister to get that information. At Maskinongé Stewart and Company were the lowest but they were unable to carry out the contract and it was handed over to L. Cohen & Son.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Was it at the same price?

Mr. TAYLOR. I know nothing about the price, I want the minister to get that information.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I will be very glad to.

Mr. TAYLOR. At Point Cavagnole the Stewart Company was the lowest but it was handed over to Cohen & Sons. At Racquette river the Stewart Company was the lowest tenderer but having their hands full of other jobs the work was handed over to Cohen & Sons.

Mr. PUGSLEY. If there was so much money in it one would suppose they would try to carry out the contract.

Mr. TAYLOR. I think there was something in it for somebody but we will deal with that later.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Who got that contract ?

Mr. TAYLOR. Cohen & Sons, this firm of Jews at Montreal.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Why do you call them a firm of Jews. Can't Jews do dredging work ?

Mr. TAYLOR. Certainly they can, but they are in a mercantile business and they are not the kind of men that should be given dredging contracts.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am told they have done the dredging work very satisfactorily indeed.

Mr. TAYLOR. At St. Placide, Stewart and Company tendered lowest but the work was handed over to Cohen & Sons. I want to know from the minister what he did with all these deposits of Stewart and Company and why the contracts were allowed to be handed over to other parties. Another piece of information I want from the minister is : Has the contract for the Quebec harbour improvements to Messrs. Dussault & Lemieux been renewed for this year. Has a new contract been entered into with this firm at the same prices as last year's work ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Perhaps the hon. gentleman would put that in the form of a question and I will get the answer in the ordinary way.

Mr. TAYLOR. I thought you could answer that now.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I cannot keep all these things in my head.

Mr. TAYLOR. If the minister has not extended the contract this year I ask him in the interest of the country not to do so and for this reason. Some of his predecessors in office entered into a contract with Dussault & Lemieux in 1903 or 1904 for harbour improvements at Quebec. The contract given them was number 4163. They did that year $183,000 worth of work. That is what they charged for it, and I want to refer the minister for a moment to some of the charges that were made and will be made this year if this contract is extended. That contract was extended by order in council for 1904-1905 and no new tenders were called for and the government paid that year $224,000. The next contract was 5011 and that was extended by order in council for another year and at the same prices and they earned that year $107,609. Another contract was entered into with them, for the next year (1906-1907) by order in council, and they earned $98,937.40.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I must confess I am somewhat unfamiliar with the rules of this House, but I would ask you, whether, when a gentleman asks permission to move the adjournment for the purpose of discussing a particular matter, is it open to another hon. member to discuss something entirely foreign to the question. The permission to move the adjournment was given simply to discuss the question of dredging.

Mr. TAYLOR. This is dredging.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Pardon me it is not. This is wharf building. I addressed myself to the question raised by the hon. member (Mr. Bennett) as to the dredging contracts at Victoria and at Tiffin and now the hon. member (Mr. Taylor) is dealing with wharf building at Quebec.

Mr. TAYLOR. I wish to say, Mr. Speaker, that the motion of my hon. friend (Mr. Bennett) was as to renewing contracts without tender. Because the minister had informed him yesterday that several contracts were to be renewed. I see in the Dussault contract an item of 18,000 yards of dredging at 75 cents a yard. That contract has been renewed year after year at 75 cents a yard and the person that the contract was given to had no dredge, and he farmed it out at 15 cents a yard and this government is paying year after year 75 cents a yard for it.

Mr. SPEAKER. I see by the terms of the notice given, that it is to discuss tenders for dredging at Midland, Tiffin, Victoria harbour and other points; so that under this notice I can hardly restrict the hon. member.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not object to the hon. gentleman speaking of dredging any where but what he has been speaking of is wharf building at Quebec.

Mr. TAYLOR. I do not wonder at the minister wanting to knock me out because this is a delicate question.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not at all. I am prepared to discuss the question at any proper time, but I have no notice of this and cannot answer my hon. friend to-night.

Mr. TAYLOR. You will have an opportunity when the estimates come down and I want all this information then. These people were paid on a contract that was continued from 1903-1904 and since then they have been paid $614,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. For dredging ?

Mr. TAYLOR. For dredging and works in connection with dredging.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman knows that the great bulk of that was for wharf building.

Mr. TAYLOR. Harbour improvements include dredging. They were paid 75 cents a yard for dredging, and they used the materials dredged for wharf filling, for which they got 32 cents a yard, that is $1.07 a yard for work which they got done for 15 cents a yard. In connection with that work there were 105,000 pounds of iron driftbolts at 7 cents per pound.

Mr. SPEAKER. That obviously does not refer to tenders for dredging. I think the discussion is drifting away from the motion.

Mr. TAYLOR. Well, I notify the government that if this tender has not been renewed, and if there is more work to be done there, they should immediately call for public tenders. On that dredging they have been paying 75 cents a yard for the last four years, when they could have got it done for 15 cents, because the party is now doing it for the contractors for that price.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Who is the sub-contractor who is doing it for 15 cents?

Mr. TAYLOR. I want the hon. gentleman to give that information when I ask the question. He knows who it is, or his department knows.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am not aware of it, and I presume the department is not.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. minister is paying 75 cents a yard for mud dredging at Quebec when he is getting it done at other places for 15 cents. The thing on its face shows that there is something wrong.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Does my hon. friend know that there is a vast difference between dredging in the St. Lawrence, where the tides rise and fall, and dredging on the lakes?

Mr. TAYLOR. Yes, there is some difference, but as the motion for adjournment is made simply to discuss dredging, I will take another opportunity to discuss the prices the government have been paying for supplies. Every time they renewed this contract they might have saved from 50 to 100 per cent on the prices.

Mr. F. B. CARVELL (Carleton, N. B.). Mr. Speaker, when this matter came up I was somewhat at a loss to understand the object the hon. member for East Simcoe had, and I am not entirely clear about it yet. I may say that there have been a number of dredging contracts discussed in the Public Accounts Committee and evidence has been given in some of these cases, but, as I am not allowed under the rules of the House to discuss them, I will not transgress by attempting to state what the evidence shows. Suffice it to say, that in my humble opinion the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) has gained very little satisfaction from the evidence that has been adduced in that committee, and it seems to me that he is now attempting to get before the country certain matters before they are brought out under oath in the Public Accounts Committee. If we can believe the statements we have heard this afternoon on both sides of the House, we must come to the conclusion that had the hon. member for East Simcoe had his way, and stated everything he wanted to state, his story would have been very different from what the story actually is. We were led this afternoon to believe that a new contract had been entered into by the Minister of Public Works for dredging at Midland, Tiffin and Victoria harbour. Now, the facts are, that something like a year ago tenders were called by the then acting Minister of Public Works for dredging at these three places. The hon. member for East Simcoe has attempted to show that a great wrong has been done to the country because two of the tenders put in by presumably rival firms where in the handwriting of a gentleman who has the misfortune to be a relative of a member of parliament on this side of the House, and the hon. member for East Simcoe, with characteristic audacity, draws the inference that there must be something crooked in the transaction, but my hon. friend did not tell the House what he might have known from an examination of the documents—what he did know. My hon. friend, in the first place, went through a lot of cheap gymnastics in daring the government to bring down the papers and lay them on the table of the House in order that the members might have a chance to examine them. Does he not know that he and every member of the Public Accounts Committee and every member of this House has had a chance to examine those papers during the last two months? I think I am not trespassing on the rules of debate when I say that the hon. gentleman made that statement with the deliberate intention of making the people of this country believe that this government were trying to conceal from the public something which they had a right to see, although he knew that there was no attempt to conceal anything. He was asking the government to do something which they could not do. He knows that these papers are in the custody of the Public Accounts Committee. This House, which places those papers in the custody of the Public Accounts Committee, has the power to take them from the custody of that committee, if a motion is made to that effect, but what right has the Minister of Public Works any more than the hon. member for East Simcoe to say to the clerk of the committee, you will bring these papers down here and hand them over to a messenger and have them laid on the table of this House? It is simply a cheap way of insinuating that the government has been trying to keep from the House and the country certain papers which they were entitled to have. If those papers had been examined by the Public Accounts Committee and evidence had been adduced, then I am forced to the conclusion from what I have learned here this afternoon that the hon. member for East Simcoe himself knows that he would not have got from them anything like the evidence that he has attempted to place on the records of the House this afternoon. What would those papers show? I gather, from the statements made by the minister, who has not had an opportunity of examining the papers, and from the admissions of the hon. member for East Simcoe and other members on the other side of the House, that they would show that about a year ago tenders were called for this work; and I hope hon. members of this House and the people of this country will not forget that those tenders were open to the whole world. They were not confined to two or three dredging firms that happened to be in Owen Sound, and I have a very shrewd suspicion that perhaps one of the objects of the hon. member for East Simcoe is to get a rap at a gentleman who lives in Owen Sound and is a member of one of those dredging companies. There is an election coming on in the province of Ontario before very long, and a certain gentleman who lives near Owen Sound may play a prominent part in those elections, and I think the hon. member for East Simcoe had that fact in mind. However, tenders were put in by two rival companies at 53 cents and 57 cents respectively, and my hon. friend wants the people of this country to believe that because those tenders were in the same handwriting there was collusion. He says, what greater evidence of fraud do you want than that? Now, I am willing to admit that if those tenders were not open to the public, and those two firms alone had been invited to tender and had put their heads together to keep up the price, that would be evidence of fraud. But when the work is open to the whole world, I fail to see evidence of an offence against either moral law or the legal rights of any one in the fact that those two firms put their heads together to get as good a price as possible. The best proof of that statement is what took place in this very case. These two companies put in their tenders, and they were pretty high tenders, I should imagine. At the same time a third man came in and tendered at a little more than one half the price, 30 cents. The very fact that the third man came in and cut the price down shows that there is no harm in the action of the other two, because they were liable to have another tenderer come in. The Dominion Dredging Company received the contract at 30 cents, but found that they were not able to do the work. It was hinted this afternoon by the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) that there must have been a nigger in the wood pile somewhere. Why these hon. gentlemen can see graft in everything that takes place.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear, that is about right.

Mr. CARVELL. I sometimes wonder if they are going back in their minds to what took place when they were in power. I cannot imagine people seeing something crooked in everything that takes place unless they were of a crooked mind. They must have been used to crooked transactions when they were running the government and therefore think that every one else does the same. I am afraid that this will be the case if ever this country should be so unfortunate as to again have them in control of the government. The hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) says : I have been at this business so long that I know how these things are being done. Yes, he does, there is not a man on the front bench of the opposition who does not know how such things are done, they can go back in their minds to the old Connolly and McGreevy transactions. They are pastmasters in the art of manipulating tenders and contracts. There is nothing they cannot tell about in that line, and they have an idea that no matter what takes place on a government contract, whether by private contract or by public tender, there must be something crooked about it. The insinuation was thrown out this afternoon that because the Dominion Dredging Company were unable to carry out their contract at 30 cents and threw it up, there was graft in that somewhere and a scheme put up between these people by which the country was to lose money. What are the facts? The government did not go to the next lowest tenderer and offer the work at 53 cents but according to the statement of the minister this afternoon they sent out telegrams to every one who had tendered: these people came in and the country gets the work done at 27 cents instead of 30 cents. Is there anything wrong in that ?

Mr. TAYLOR. It is worth 9 cents.

Mr. CARVELL. My hon. friend says it is worth 9 cents. That is why I say it is absolutely unfair, worse than unfair to bring up a discussion of this kind under the present circumstances. The hon. member from Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) brings this up before we have had a chance to examine witnesses or to ascertain the character of the work, whether it is worth 8 cents as the work at Victoria Harbour, or 26 cents or 27 cents here. In view of that I am forced to the conclusion that the hon. member for East Simcoe brought this matter up in order to spread these statements broadcast over the country before witnesses could be examined on the case, and I believe if my hon. friend had been allowed to have these statements go to the country unanswered, you would never have heard of a witness being called before the Public Accounts Committee to get at the exact facts of the case. Now I presume they will have to go on with it.

These contracts were let at 26 and 27 cents instead of 30 cents, and in every move of the Public Works Department in this case the public interests were safeguarded and the price has been constantly lowered. My hon. friend, in the next place, raised the cry that the Minister of Public Works has let this contract without tender and that it is a new contract. The member for East Simcoe had no hesitation in saying that this is a new contract. The member for Peel (Mr. Blain) this afternoon would not take the word of the Minister of Public Works when he told him over and over again that it was not a new contract. I do not think the member for Peel (Mr. Blain) is so obtuse that he could not understand the Minister of Public Works. I give him credit for having ordinary abilities, his hearing is good so far as I know, and I am satisfied he must have understood the Minister of Public Works. Yet he would not take his statement and went on declaring it was a new contract. The member for Grey (Mr. Sproule) this afternoon took the same course and when driven into a corner he dragged up from his memory some old contract when he and his friends were in power and tried to argue that it was a parallel case. The Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) has told this House repeatedly this afternoon that contracts were let last year for the work at Victoria harbour, at Midland and at Tiffin, and that there was a clause in these contracts providing that they were to be completed before the end of navigation in 1907 or at such later date as the minister should decide. All the minister has done in this case is to carry out the terms of this contract. All he has done is by an order in council to provide another date when this work shall be completed, and, Sir, I would like to ask the hon. gentleman who brought up this matter if they can see any reasons why the government should hope to get a lower tender for this particular class of work if they had put it up this year than they were able to secure last year.

There is another thing. When this work is well under way and the firm have their dredges and scows and plant at the location, surely they can go on and do the work cheaper than it could have been done if they were driven out, new tenders called for, and a new contract given to a new firm. I submit that under these conditions you would not get a new firm to go in there and do the work as cheaply as it is being done at the present time, certainly not cheaper. For these reasons it seems to me that the Minister of Public Works is amply justified in taking the course he has taken. I am satisfied the House and the country will justify the ministers in that course, and that the member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) will not be able to make the people of Canada believe that a new contract has been let by the Minister of Public Works without tender; they will realize that it was simply a continuation of the contract let last year and simply carrying out the terms of that contract, that under the conditions of the contract the public are getting this work done as cheaply as it could possibly be done and that not only the terms but the letter of the law and the contract have been carried out to the full.

Mr. JAMES CONMEE (Rainy River). It will, I think, be generally admitted that it is quite the proper thing for the opposition to criticise public expenditures. I for one have never any objection to anything like a fair criticism, but I submit that such criticism as has been offered this afternoon, is entirely unfair and unjustified and I do not think that any good purpose can be served by gross misrepresentations—if I may use the word slander. I believe that a great deal of the discussion this afternoon is largely composed of misrepresentations and slander. As I understand the situation it is not a question of new contract, it is a question of properly dealing with a contract that had been let under special conditions. What were the conditions ? That a certain class of work should be done within a certain time and that it might be done within this time or at such later time as the minister would fix for the completion. I submit that any contractor taking the work would base his tender upon that clause of the contract and say: If it is not possible for me to do it with all reasonable effort within the time specified in the contract, I am in the hands of the minister of the Crown, and I expect such treatment as a subject ought to expect from the Crown, no undue advantage will be taken of me but I will be given a reasonable opportunity to carry that work to completion.

The hon. member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart) this afternoon stated that this work was done on a very different basis from dredging anywhere else in America, that scow measurement was something that ought not to be tolerated, and this work was being done without proper measurement and on the mere certificate of the inspector who watched the loading of the scow where the dredge was operated. I am surprised at the hon. member making that statement because he has been Minister of Railways. He made the further statement that the measurement of dredging excavation was a matter that could be measured just as a railway contract could be measured and that it was always measured in place in every other country but Canada. The hon. gentleman is entirely mistaken. I venture to say that, generally speaking, dredging in the United States is done by scow measurement, and done in that way after the government of that country had had experience in place measurement. And why ? Because a greater amount of mismeasurement—or, if you like a stronger word, of fraud,—existed under that system than under the present system. And that is why they adopted the scow measurement. All the dredging done in this country, so far as I know, is done upon plans and cross sections showing the depth of water, the area to be dredged, and the class of material, so far as the engineers can test it by borings and otherwise. And what does the contractor tender for ? He tenders to do a certain amount of dredging for a certain price within a limited time within the area shown by the plans. And usually, it is by scow measurement. Why ? A good deal of work can be done by place measurement, solid rock for instance, or excavation that is above or near the surface can be done by place measurement. But the case is altogether different if the work is at the bottom of a harbour. To get the measurements you have to send down divers, and the contractor has to send down divers to see that he gets fair play. And you cannot leave the work for more than two weeks or a month because there is a constant washing in of material. Prices would be one-half or one-third higher if the measurements were not taken as the excavation is made. I do not suppose there is a harbour being dredged in this country where there is not material of a more or less silty nature. In many places it partakes of the nature of quicksand or clay that will fill in in twenty-four hours and take away one quarter of the measurement that the contractor might fairly claim. I do not say that that appertains generally but it does appertain in some cases. Therefore, it is easy to see the enormous difficulty that surrounds this question of fair measurement and why frequent measurements would be necessary if full measurement is to be given for the actual quantity taken out. If you are measuring in place, everything depends on who holds the tape. And it is the diver who holds it. You cannot estimate the amount of dredging in any other way. That is the reason for favouring scow measurement both from the point of view of the government and from the point of view of the contractor. The best evidence of this is that if you take the work done by railway companies and harbour companies, where they pay not out of government funds but out of their own funds, they usually do it in that way. It is not a practical thing to do it otherwise. I need not dwell upon that feature of the case, because any one who will consider the difficulties of the case will see the reasonableness of scow measurement. Is there any great chance for fraud in scow measurement ? I am bound to say that there are cases where work is done by place measurement. I know of a case on the American side near the Soo, where a large quantity of dredging had to be done. But why was place measurement adopted ? Because it was a new channel, and nearly the whole area was through where the water was to run for the first time and the work was practically in plain sight. There is no contractor who would not prefer place measurement in excavating if he could get it. A contractor never gets better fair play than when he has the work where he has an opportunity to see by his own assistants that he gets paid for what he does actually move. The hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) says this is a new policy which comes to us from the east. Well, the wise men are said to have come from the east. But I must say, at the same time, this is not a new policy. The same criticism was levelled by the hon. member for East Simcoe and some other hon. members on that side in 1904 against the Minister of Public Works of that time and on pretty much the same ground, concerning work at Port Arthur and Fort William what they alleged was let without tender upon much the same ground as in this case. The minister of that time decided that as the work had been let under terms of competition in the first instance, and as the work was in part for bringing the harbour down to a certain depth and making slips in new places to the harbour line where elevators and other constructions had gone up in the meantime, this was a class of work for which he could not well get a tender. The work was done, not at the price of 33 cents, as the hon. member said, nor at 23 cents. But the basis of the contract as a whole was 15 cents, not 33 cents. The hon. member for East Grey must have a very short memory, because within the last year I went over this whole matter in detail. I had before me the return brought down to this House and I gave the facts in the case, and they were these : that fully 75 per cent of the entire yardage was on the basis of the contract price, 15 cents, and that the only case in which higher prices were paid was in the case I referred to—where there was the removing of an old structure such as a dock, and the making of certain slips into the harbour line, in order to facilitate the transportation of grain from that particular harbour. Now it is not fair to revive these statements which are without foundation in fact, which have been over and over again contradicted. The hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) made these statements this afternoon. He has no facts, he never did have facts, and cannot produce a single fact to warrant that statement. I think perhaps the hon. gentleman should not have made that statement.

Now, let me say a word with regard to the question that has been raised this afternoon, that of deepening the harbour. The hon. member for Grey says that there is no emergency, no hurry, no occasion for the government to move to deepen the harbour. I would recommend the hon. member to inform himself. Let him inquire from his own friends, I will give him the name of one of his own friends in the town of Port Arthur, a good Conservative, Mr. J. J. O'Connor. He is shipping agent for the elevators at that point, and he told me only a short time ago that for many years they have been under a great disability in the harbours of Port Hope, Port Arthur and Fort William, for the reason that they could not get the same charter prices that the shipper from Duluth got, and that even last year they were at a disadvantage of from one-eighth to one-quarter of a cent per bushel ; they had to pay that much more than the man at Duluth would have to pay for shipping his grain to Buffalo or New York.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. member entirely misunderstood me. I did not speak of Port Arthur at all, I was speaking of Victoria or Midland, and showing that there was no great urgency to give a contract now to provide for ships that would draw a much greater draught of water than they do now, because they could not get through the Sault Ste. Marie canal until it was deepened there, and that would take some years.

Mr. COMMEE. He did say that, and he said more. Let me inform the hon. gentleman that I am advised on good authority that the Sault Ste. Marie canal will have a depth of 24½ feet and will be completed inside of two years. It is only a few months ago that I was discussing that question with an engineer employed on that canal, and he told me that he had prepared plans and submitted them, to deepen the water to 25 feet, and he felt quite confident that the canal when it was completed would have a depth of 25 feet. But I am pointing out what our difficulty has been for the last four or five years. I am sure he will find that all our Canadian shippers of grain find that all our Canadian shippers of grain through Canadian channels have been placed at a disadvantage of a quarter of a a cent a bushel up to last year. There was some slight decrease within the last few years because of the further improvement of the harbours of Port Arthur and Fort William. But we are still at a great disadvantage. You cannot charter a vessel and get the same prices as the American shipper. There is another disadvantage which militates against the Canadian shipper of grain which is mostly as bad, and it is this : If he wires for a charter for a cargo his offer will not be taken if the vessel owner can get a cargo from either Superior or Duluth. The American boat will go to the port where they have 25 feet of water today, and where they have had it for some time. The Americans have spent $5,000,000 on the harbour at Duluth. The minister has told us here to-day, and I am glad to hear it, that if Canadian shippers of grain are to be put upon equal footing with the American shippers of grain or other products they should have the same facilities, the same advantages in our harbour that the Americans have on their side of the line. Now I submit that we cannot have all these things at once. Even if the hon. member's statement was true that the American canal would not be completed for four or five years, that would not diminish the urgency or change the responsibility of the government to relieve the Canadian shipper of the disadvantages under which he is placed to-day. There is a little more than the question of the depth of water in the new American lock. On our side to-day we have 21 feet of water on the mitre sill. Our harbours ought to be put in a state to enable us to enjoy the advantages of our own canal at the Soo, but they are not. Now, hon. gentleman will find when they discuss the subject with captains or gentlemen acquainted with navigation, that they cannot navigate a vessel drawing 21 feet of water in either one of those harbours. They can get her through with a tug, and that is a consideration. But she cannot go under her own steam into those harbours if she is drawing 21 feet of water, because that class of vessel must have more than one foot of water under her keel in order to steer her own machinery. She could not lay at anchor in our harbours, even if she did get into them as she would pound on the bottom. She cannot take part of her cargo at one elevator and the rest at another, as is often done, to take a certain grade of wheat. It has to be taken from a certain class of grain and from more than one elevator. They have frequently to go to more elevators to finish their load. Now in the harbour of Superior or Duluth they can go drawing two feet, perhaps more, of water, and they do not need to trim, and that makes a great difference in the cost. So all these things militate against the Canadian shipper and place him at a disadvantage from which this government should relieve him at the very earliest possible moment. It is important that the government should take the ground that all work from this date should be done on the new basis. The hon. gentleman knows that to cut out two or three feet from the bottom will be a very costly undertaking. The prices will be very much higher, and if we are to be ready within two, or three, or four years to meet the traffic up and down on the same footing as the American shipper, why. Sir, we ought to get to work at the earliest possible moment. There ought to be no hesitation in undertaking a work so meritorious in the public interest.

I am not going to discuss the resolution itself, that has been done by others. But I will point out that there are cases where it is in the public interest that contracts of this nature should be treated just as this contract has been treated. Let me say here that it is a mistaken policy to undertake to ask tenders for this class of work every year. It is a policy that entails largely increased cost. Let me give a case in point.

Mr. CONMEE.

In 1904, the Minister of Railway and Canals asked for tenders, to be closed on April 15. The hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) raised some objection. He thought that it was going to be an advantage to some dredging company on account of navigation being closed and he asked that the time be extended. I have heard the statement and I have seen it in the Conservative press that the minister resisted the request for an extension of time. It is not true. The minister did not resist an extension of time. He said very plainly that no objection had been made, he consented at once to make a change and he did make the change. The hon. member for East Simcoe and, I think, the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) this evening said that the price of dredging had been brought down by reason of this action. I took occasion last year to make some remarks on this subject and these will be found in 'Hansard.' I went into the matter fully in detail and explained how this reduction in the cost of dredging occurred. Hon. gentlemen opposite have claimed that it was due to the extension of the time from April 15 to first of May. I want to ask if any hon. gentleman thinks than any condition of ice in the harbour of Fort William or Port Arthur between these dates would make any difference to a contractor. The contractor does not tender because there is ice in the horbour or because there is no ice in the harbour. He tenders upon the estimates, plans and representations as to the character of the work and specifications of the engineer, which he submitted to him in that regard. The hon. member for East Simcoe in a speech last year stated that the opposition kept hammering away at the minister and that the result was that the new companies came to the front and that the Weddell Dredging Company brought down the price. I heard the hon. gentleman make the assertion that he had never made a statement in connection with dredging that was not founded on fact. That assertion is absolutely wrong. There was not a word of truth in his statement as to the cause that had brought down the price of dredging. The Weddell Dredging Company did not tender in that year in which the extension of time was asked for. I could go on and show that of the statements which this hon. gentleman made 90 or 95 per cent were absolutely without any foundation whatever. To use the words of the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) they were reeking with falsehood. But, I am not going to dwell upon this subject. If you strip it of the misrepresentation and slander which has been levelled at the government in connection with these contracts there will be nothing to find fault with. The work which was done in 1904 was open to public competition. The prices in 1904 were actually higher on the average than in 1903. What did bring down the price? I have made that matter plain. I will make a statement again because I think it might very well be impressed upon the minds of hon. gentlemen opposite and I hope they will retain it in their memory this time. The work that was being done in 1903-4 was redredging, in a very large measure, a portion of the harbour that had been dredged years before, bringing it down to a uniform level, including some widening, which, of course, would be fairly good excavating. It involved a haul of over twelve miles in some cases and would any reasonable man say that class of work could be done for the same figure that you could do work in a heavy cutting where there was a face twenty or more feet or even twelve feet in extent and where there was not half the distance to haul ? That was the condition at Fort William. The work that is being done there now is being done altogether in another harbour, you may say. The river divides itself into three branches about two miles from the point where it empties into the bay. On the west branch is the Canadian Pacific Railway terminal, on the mission or southern branch is the Grand Trunk Pacific terminal. This is the harbour in which the work is being done for 9 cents a yard and it is a different class of work altogether. That is one of the cases that brought down the price. It is dredging largely in sand, silt, boulders and clay. I will give hon. gentlemen some further reasons for the reduction in the price.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Nine cents does not include boulders.

Mr. CONMEE. I think there is a higher price for boulders and solid rock. The contract provides that solid rock shall be paid for by measurement in situ. There is some solid rock in the harbour I do not know that any of it has been excavated. I will just refer for a moment to what really brought down this price, or influenced it very greatly. In 1904, tenders were asked for and the hon. member for East Simcoe claims that his objection and action caused the extension of time that resulted in bringing down the price and I am going to give a stronger reason. In discussing this question in 1904, the then Minister of Public Works said that :

The tenders that are invited are simply for the present season's work.

I recognize that there is a very large amount of work to be done at Port Arthur. I hope that the officers of the department will be able to make a thorough survey of the whole work there, allowing time to advertise for tenders for work extending over two or three years, in which case there is no doubt that the cost of the work could be materially decreased for the reason that proper and up to date plant could then be supplied. At the present time the plants that are being used are not of the latest type of dredging plants. The dredging that has been called for is for the present season's work, but I understand that before we reach another season the department will ask for tenders for a more extensive work and giving sufficient length of time to enable those tendering for the work to provide plant to do it at the least possible cost.

That is the measure that brought down the price. Let me point out that to successfully compete for work of this kind involving many millions would necessitate the securing of a plant of very large dimensions costing in the neighbourhood of half a million dollars. Is it reasonable to suppose that any contractor would undertake to make that expenditure for a single season's work of five and a half months and run the risk of being cut out at the end of the season. The present method of letting a contract for a period of years covering a certain area within this harbour is the reason that the price has been brought down, and the reason is not that which hon. gentlemen opposite have undertaken to assign to it. When I was listening this afternoon to the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Haggart) telling us that there should be no nepotism and no favouritism, and that public matters should be transacted above suspicion, I must say that I quite agree with him, but what surprised me was that such professions should come from a member of the late Conservative government which was not only corrupt speaking generally, and which not only had a number of grafters around it, but was rotten at the very head. We have the word of one of its own members that it was a nest of traitors, and the hon. member (Mr. Haggart) was one of the nest. He was one of the gentlemen who condoned all the wrong-doing of the late government previous to 1896, when the people of Canada turned them from power. And yet he gets up this afternoon and administers to this side of the House a lecture on political morality. Well, we are justified in taking that kind of criticism with a regard to the source whence it comes. Now, Sir, we have the member for Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) who very frequently brings up this subject and I see he is not in his seat just now. But let me remind the House that last year when he thought he was attacked he retorted on those who accused him that they should remember that he had those who were near and dear to him. Does the member extend this principle to others, does he regard the feelings of others ?

Mr. LAKE. Mr. Speaker, is this matter germane to the question under discussion ?

Mr. SPEAKER. I am inclined to think it is not. I do not think this is pertinent to the question before the House.

Mr. CONMEE. What is the point of order ?

Mr. SPEAKER. The point of order is that the remarks the hon. gentleman is making are not relevant to the question before the House.

Mr. CONMEE. The hon. gentlemen opposite have been all the afternoon violating the rules of this House, and I don't propose to violate any rule of the House.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member is making a statement that is hardly a fact, when he says that hon. members have been violating the rules of the House all this afternoon.

Mr. CONMEE. Well I will put it this way: In my judgment these hon. gentlemen have been violating the rules of the House in a much greater measure than will any words that shall fall from me. I wish to express my wonder that this hon. gentleman above all others should deal with subjects of this kind. If there is an hon. member of this House who should be silent when there is a question of integrity or a question of the general character of the administration of public affairs to be considered it is that hon. member. Why, Sir, that hon. member comes here stamped by the courts of this country as a slanderer. I think his measure has been fairly well taken here but I think the people of this country have a right to know what is the character of the man who made the charge this afternoon. He has accused the minister of using the public funds for his friends. That is not a statement which should be made by any member of this House without any evidence whatever. Not only has this gentleman been stamped by the courts of this country as a slanderer of his fellow man, but, Sir, he is a self-confessed briber; here are his words: I know you Wilson, I bought your vote before and I can do it again.

Mr. LENNOX. Mr. Speaker, is this to the point?

Mr. SPEAKER. If the hon. member is using this as an illustration as to why the statements of the member for Simcoe are to be considered by the House in a particular way I suppose I can hardly interfere. In the first instance when the point of order was taken against the hon. member he was not directing his remarks in that way, but more recently he has been doing so. I do not think I can interfere in that.

Mr. LAKE. Is 'slanderer' a parliamentary expression?

Mr. SPEAKER. It is not. The term 'slanderer' is not a term that can be used in parliament towards an hon. member.

Mr. CONMEE. The people of the country will realize the character of the man who brings up these charges, and so far as I know he has never been able to adduce a solitary piece of evidence in support of them. All he has to rely on is the mere fact that one officer misunderstood his duties and did absolutely wrong in employing somebody else to take up his work for him. Then the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain) who is usually fairer and from whom I would expect something better, both he and the hon. member for Grey characterized the transaction in language which they should not have used. The minister told us this afternoon that that one individual was dismissed as soon as his offence was discovered, and why should the minister and why should a public department, and why should all the inspectors from one end of the Dominion to the other be placed under suspicion because of that one man's failure. That is not fair criticism. It is surprising to me that hon. members with the record of those gentlemen opposite should be quite so flippant with these charges. I know that two wrongs don't make a right. I know that if the Conservative government did things wrong we are not justified in following their example. But I do say that the gentlemen who composed that government and who surrounded it with their support and who endorsed its wrongdoing and maladministration are not the men to lecture us on political morality. There was a provision in these contracts that the minister should have power to extend the time for their completion if in his judgment that should be done, and that is all the Minister of Public Works has done in this case. It is perfectly legitimate and perfectly fair for the minister to do that. But what did these gentlemen opposite do in connection with section 16, the Whitehead contract, or in connection with the Soo contract. I think the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Haggart) was then a member of the government, or if not he was very close to them, and what did they do. The records of the House show that to hold his contract Whitehead had to give Mr. Mackintosh then a supporter of the Conservative government some $28,000. That was boodling, and hon. gentlemen opposite have not got over it yet. They know they were wrong and they know they did that sort of thing. I have heard them ask what punishment was meted out to the dredge inspector. Well what punishment was meted out to Mr. Mackintosh. Why, he was honoured, he was made lieutenant governor of the Northwest Territorities by our Conservative friends. And what did they do at Sault Ste. Marie. Well, they did a great deal more than to extend the contract by order in council, they gave the contract at a price $150,000 more than the second tender; and they increased the price by half a million dollars by order in council on the grounds of emergency. They wanted it done quick, and their friends got an enhanced price for doing it, as it was claimed, within shorter period. If I wanted to take up the time of the House I could show that there was more than half a million dollars graft or whatever you like to call it. I do not call it so, but if gentlemen on the opposite side of the House call that sort of thing graft, then more than half a million dollars went to the contractors more than ought to have gone to them in that particular case. And these are the gentlemen who are criticising the government in a most extreme way this afternoon and such language is used as: Favourites here and favourites there, and public money used for friends of the government; and without any evidence at all to back it up. I know that these gentlemen opposite may say that they are not responsible for what the previous government did, but I would like to know if they imagine that the people of this country believe that their honesty during the past ten years is because of their repentance. Not a bit of it. It is because they did not have the opportunity. They lost the key in 1896 and they have had no opportunity since. I don't think the people of this country are going to put back into power gentlemen with the record of the front benchers of the opposition. I do not refer to all the front benchers but to certain of them. I must say, Mr. Speaker, that in my opinion the people of this country are too intelligent, and I believe when they come to understand the misrepresentations that have been made and the gentlemen from whom they have come, the party now in power need not fear the issue whenever it comes.

Mr. ROBERT STEWART (Ottawa). I desire to say a word or two before this debate closes because of some statements which were made by the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) and in the course of which I am sorry to say he endeavoured wilfully to mislead the House. The hon. gentleman held in his hand a statement from which he purported to read a list of tenders for dredging contracts during the last year and he repeatedly called out the name of the Stewart Company. There is no such company as the Stewart Company and nobody knows that better than the member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) and the member for Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) who also used the expression. But, it would appear that these hon. gentlemen wished to endeavour by insinuation or by any other means to cause it to be believed that supporters of the government are endeavouring to make money wrongfully. As the hon. member for East Simcoe has been good enough to use my name repeatedly in this connection, I want to say to the members of this House that I have no interest whatever in the Dominion Dredging Company, that I never had any interest in the Dominion Dredging Company to the extent of one farthing, that my influence as a member of parliament has never been used on behalf of the Dominion Dredging Company, that I have never spoken to the Minister of Public Works or to any other minister or to an official of the Public Works Department, or to any official of any other department regarding the business or the tenders of the Dominion Dredging Company. I want to make that statement clear so that hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House may have no wrong impression about the matter. I am afraid that some members on the opposite side are too apt to measure others by what they would likely do themselves if they were placed in similar circumstances, when no doubt their influence would be exercised on behalf of those in whom they might be interested. I do not know that I need say any more on this question. I do not know that it is any crime that the Dominion Dredging Company should tender in competition with other firms for work under this government or any other government. I happen to have a son who is a member of that company, and I do not know that that is any crime either. My son in that firm is only one of a number of honourable men in connection with it; men just as honourable, if not more so than those gentlemen on the opposite side of the House who have thought fit to refer to this matter on several occasions. Further I have nothing to say.

But I would like to ask while on my feet why it is that when a number of companies containing some very active friends of the opposition in this House are tendering every year for similar work, only those composed of men who are suspected of being supporters of this government are singled out for attack in this way. There are other dredging contractors, one of them a Conservative candidate for this House. Why is it that we never hear these men accused of doing anything dishonest in securing contracts, or attempting to secure them at higher prices than they should get? It seems strange to me, sitting in this House and listening to the speeches of hon. gentlemen opposite, that two or three companies should be singled out and referred to as if they were dishonest. I want to ask these hon. gentlemen who have mentioned the name of the Dominion Dredging Company, to state where that company ever got a contract from this government or from any other government that was not put up to public competition. I know very little about the business of that company. I happened to be in England last year when they received their contract, so that it cannot be said that I used my influence in that case on their behalf. It cannot be said truthfully that I ever used my influence on behalf of that company. Is it fair for hon. gentlemen opposite to be continually attacking a company because a son of a member of this House happens to be a member of it? I challenge hon. gentlemen opposite to point to any dishonest act ever committed by that company, or to any contract they ever received for which their price was not the lowest. That company have never received any favour at the hands of the Minister of Public Works. I make this statement to show how little ground there is for the assertions continually made by hon. gentlemen opposite in this regard. Perhaps I should not be surprised at the statements of the hon. member for East Simcoe, because we all know his record ; but I remember several years ago, when I was a young member of this House, and questions of this kind were being discussed, the hon. member for East Simcoe contended very strongly that the policy of the Minister of Public Works in asking for tenders was wrong. That policy was that Canadians should do work for Canadians, and that no tender would be received from any tenderer who had not a dredge registered in this country previous to the calling for tenders. The idea expressed by the hon. member for East Simcoe at that time was that in order that there should be the fullest competition tenders should be invited from our neighbours to the south. I can imagine what an outcry would be made by the hon. member for Leeds and the hon. member for East Simcoe if any hon. gentleman on this side of the House made such a suggestion as that. If the hon. member for East Simcoe was correct on that occasion, it ill becomes him, in this House and on public platforms in this city, to make attacks upon myself and upon members of the Dominion Dredging Company. I have nothing further to say. I desired simply to put myself right before the members of this House. I have been slow to speak on this question. I am anxious to retain the good will and the good feeling of members of both sides of the House, but when I hear hon. gentlemen speaking as the hon. member for Leeds and the hon. member for East Simcoe both spoke this afternoon repeatedly about the Stewart Company when they knew perfectly well that there was no such company as the Stewart Company, I felt it my duty to make this explanation.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Might I have the permission of hon. gentleman leading the opposition and of the House to refer very briefly to the question of the cost of dredging ?

Mr. BERGERON. It can be brought up in Supply.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I shall be very brief.

Mr. SPEAKER. It can only be with the permission of the House.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Only with the permission of the House. The hon. gentleman who is leading the opposition will remember that when I asked him whether 8 cents at Victoria harbour, 26 cents at Tiffin and 27 cents at Midland were not reasonable prices, he stated that in his judgment 26 cents was very excessive. I want to point to the figures given on pages 194 and 195 of the report of the Minister of Public Works for the year 1907, of the actual cost of operation of dredges which are owned by the government, and which figures do not include anything for interest upon the cost of the dredges or any allowance for depreciation, but represents simply the cost of operation, wages, fuel and the ordinary cost of repairs. Taking the whole period from 1872 down to 1906, the lowest figure is 18·31 cents per cubic yard and the highest is 35 cents per cubic yard. The average is 25·41 cents per cubic yard, and that, as I have said, does not include any allowance for interest or depreciation or renewals. From 1895 the prices of dredging by the government owned dredges were as follows :

Dredge.	Per cubic yard.
'St. Lawrence'	25·35
'Canada'	31·34
'New Dominion'	17:47
'Prince Edward'	26·53
'(Old) Cape Breton	25·99
'Geo. McKenzie'	41·66
'Cape Breton'	16·58
'New Brunswick'	21·82
'W. S. Fielding'	19·12
'Montague'	.....

Mr. SPROULE. I was speaking of clay, gravel and sand. This covers a great many other materials as well.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is true, but in a great many of these cases it is material such as this. I have here a statement of work done in my own province, on the St. John river, where there is very little rise and fall of the tide and where the material is, I should suppose, very similar to that in these harbours on the Georgian bay. The cost there ran up to something like 40 cents and at Evendale it ran up to 51·72 cents. That shows that I was quite justified in taking the opinions of the chief engineer of my department that these prices of 26 cents, 27 cents and 8 cents per cubic yard were fair and reasonable prices.

Mr. SPROULE. We will have an opportunity again of going into that.

Motion (Mr. Bennett) to adjourn, negatived.

SUPPLY—IMMIGRATION.

House resumed adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Fielding : 'That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair for the House to go into Committee of Supply,' and the proposed amendment of Mr. Monk thereto.

Mr. ALPHONSE VERVILLE (Maisonneuve). Mr. Speaker, I expected to commence the discussion of this question at the opening of the sitting this afternoon and it seems to me that when a member intends to bring up any other matter than the subject before the House, as has been done to-day, common courtesy towards the other members would prompt him to notify those who expect to participate in the discussion of the subject set down for debate. This was not done this afternoon, and after the hot air we have heard to-day I shall try to talk business. I wish to deal with this question of immigration not as a party question but as a business proposition and to show why I and those whom I represent are opposed to the bonus system. I do not blame the government for having granted bonuses at the outset, as it may have been necessary at the time the law came into force to induce immigrants of the farming class to go to the Northwest. I admit that something had to be done to encourage this class of immigration. But the bonuses have been diverted to other classes and I am sorry to say that the system has opened the door to speculation. It would seem that there is ground enough for speculating without speculating in human flesh as has been done in many instances. During a previous discussion it was shown that misrepresentations have been made for the purpose of securing the bonuses on immigrants. The bonus system has opened the door and permitted the Canadian Manufacturers Association to flood the labour market. It has been the means of furnishing to unscrupulous agents the opportunity to take advantage of the laws and has brought to our cities more sufferers and more beggars. It has also enabled land speculators to realize large profits. It has even induced charitable institutions, church societies and the Salvation Army to step in and organize on a solid basis, all for one sole aim and object, the making of money no matter how. I am willing to grant the right to any one to make all he can but I do not grant the right to speculate on the good will of the poorer classes of people who are ready at the slightest suggestion to go anywhere in order to better their position, but who do not desire to replace their fellow workmen, so as to force them to starve or become undesirable citizens.

It would seem that the time has arrived when the flow of population to Canada is so numerous and Canada is so well known that bonuses are no longer necessary. While by that system we have induced a large number of farm hands to come to the western provinces, we have also succeeded in overflowing the labour market in all large cities of Canada. Has any one derived any benefit from this overflow? Some one will say yes, the merchants have, the industries as a whole. The manufacturers may have added for a time to their output and their profits, believing as usual that the temporary increase will be permanent and believing also that such an influx of population would be the means of crushing down labour as I have heard some eminent men say. Such men declare that they are friends of labour and of society. Are those who through the bonus system have thus brought these people to Canada ready to support the whole or part of the army of men who are crying for bread throughout the country? Of course not. Why? Because it is a business proposition for them, it is a money making affair and why should we any longer pay to induce men to come to our country? We may have to pay as much as we have paid in bonuses to return certain classes to the countries from which they came.

But it may be said, we have amended the law with respect to immigration. So we have, we have spread literature throughout England and the old country calculated to prevent skilled labour and mechanics from coming to Canada. I acknowledge that the government have done this but other powerful bodies have taken upon themselves to do the unjustified work that some of the government agents were doing some time ago. It may be said that we have good booking agents and their instructions are to be very severe so as to prevent others than those specified in the law as being subjects for bonuses from coming to Canada. Under our present system it is impossible to prevent any one who chooses to bring out undesirable immigrants from doing so. We may have to pay $5 a head on classes of people whom we do not desire. Is it possible to prevent any one from saying: I am going to Canada to work on a farm or in such other work as would bring me under the bonus system? It has been done, and is done every day, but it is wrong. They know that some men living on the other side—and we heard this last night—have only to say: I am going to Canada to work on a farm. I also asked some of these men who came there what they had to respond and they told me that they had been advised, that, if asked, all they had to do was to reply that they were coming to work on a farm in Canada. Are we to believe the booking agents on the other side are not up to date? Are we to believe that they are not looking for a dollar? Do we not know that the institutions I have mentioned are open for business the same as anybody else?

But we are asked: What about the construction of our great railways which must be built and for which we must have hands? I acknowledge that we must have men for these railways. But the work on railway construction generally lasts about seven to seven and a half months, as the work is paralyzed by the weather during the rest of the year. Well, are these men supposed to earn enough during the summer to keep them all winter? Will any hon. gentleman who happens to be a railway contractor say that that is the case? Of course, there is always the same answer—they can find work in the cities. Well, have they found any this winter? Have not we seen in the newspapers that in all the large cities hundreds and thousands of men are walking the streets or waiting at the doors of the city halls begging for bread? Would it not be better to have our railway contractors put to some little disadvantage and expense in which this work lasts for but seven and a half months per year rather than have the army of labour suffer during the winter? The suffering endured during the past winter is apt to be lightly thought of. But if we were to ask the merchants and landlords probably we should have a better idea of what that suffering has been, because these classes have suffered through the poverty of so many others. We may also be asked: How about our prairie country? Where are we to procure the 25,000 men that are said to be needed to assist the wheat growers and the railway companies that are building through that country? We know that these men are needed. But, admitting everything that can be said in favour of that claim, the principle remains that it is not right to pay a bonus on any one who may get work for only five or six weeks in the year. Why do not the wheat growers keep more men in their employ? They could do it if they were ready to make some small sacrifices. If for a season many of them, instead of going abroad to have a good time —though that, of course, is perfectly legitimate—would stay at home during the winter and keep employed some of the men whom they have in the fall, they would do more than give these people employment, because these men, being accustomed to the life and the climate, would go on the land and would make the very best citizens and settlers. But a different policy is followed. Almost every year a great public call is made for men for the wheat fields, and men flock in from all directions. And what kind of men do the wheat growers secure by that means? They are what we call 'floaters,' men who are on the move all the time, though often taken as examples of the labouring classes. But the wheat growers, by sounding a trumpet in a call for labour, according to our present system, can afford to pay these men even $5 a day for the short time they are employed, and can leave them then to drift back to the cities to become a public charge. It is said that we must do something for the west. It seems to me that we are always doing something for the west. With all due respect, I think that quite enough of the time of this House is taken up with the west—I think that if it were figured up it would be found that fully two-thirds of our time is so occupied. With all due respect to their demands and the members who represent that portion of the country, it seems to me that a little more attention should be paid to the east and to our large cities. We know that those interested in the west are constantly demanding more and more immigration, it does not seem to matter of what kind. But I have reason to believe that if the question were left to the members of this House to be decided itself and on its merits, a large majority would be opposed to bonusing immigrants. We must also consider the effect of this bonus system upon a very important class, our organized workers. Have they criticised the policy of the government or objected to the expenditure on immigration? Such a thing is not to be found. But when this policy becomes a detriment to the country at large they protest and urge upon the government to abolish this system of bonused immigration. We may change the immigration laws year after year, but we shall never succeed in making them what they ought to be until we get at the root of the evil, which is the bonus. The Minister of the Interior has told us that with a large population the times are better than with a smaller population. I agree with him on that point, if the population is of the right kind. But the people must have the necessary purchasing power or they become a burden on the community.

Now, I know that it may be said that the bonus system is nothing new. Why, if you go back to the early days of the United States you find that some states granted a bonus to female help to induce them to come and work in the manufactories which were being established as a result of the invention of new machines. But when the supply of labour was sufficient, the system was abolished. It seems to me that the tide of immigration has been enough towards our west to justify the abolition of the bonus system. The opinion of organized labour is running strongly against the bonus system. The best immigration agent we can have is the satisfied settler. Instead of paying a certain amount of money in bonuses, I think the government would do better, if it must have agents, to send over to England some of the men who have already settled in the west and become prosperous, and these could tell their friends and relatives the advantages offered by this new country. I think such agencies would bring over bona fide settlers, with moral and physical qualities fitting them to become good citizens. Last night some hon. members mentioned that if we want to keep our people here we must provide industries for them. That, Sir, is the key of the whole situation. We will keep our own people at home if we provide industries for them. I have here a copy of 'Le Canada,' the French Liberal paper published in Montreal, and it has an article under the heading 'Rich Immigration.' It goes on to say that 39,000 American immigrants crossed the line last year and were supposed to have brought into the country with them $43,000,000. It shows that these men sold their farms in the western states and bought new farms in western Canada. Now, if this government only paid out $4,000 in bonuses last year for American immigrants, who brought in $43,000,000 into Canada, surely that was money well spent. But it would appear that bonuses do not have much effect so far as the United States is concerned. I have here the names of the cities in Canada which have sent in protests against the bonus system. I will not mention the names, because it might put some members of this House in an awkward position, which I would not like to do. At the same time, I may say that from cities in British Columbia and from all the important cities of Canada, organizations have sent in strongly-worded protests against the government granting any more bonuses. The labour organizations are not opposed to immigration by any means; we believe that this country should be thrown open to the entry of all men who will make good citizens. We believe also that there is no harm in spreading reliable literature, but we think the people should be left to follow their own will as to whether they will come or not. We are aware that a good deal of misrepresentation has been made in England to induce immigrants to come to Canada, and this parliament two sessions ago had to pass a law to check that misrepresentation, and a law was also passed in England last year to the same effect. We see at present that there is a large steamship line subsidized by this government. I have some posters circulated by this company in England which have been sent to me by our agent, Mr. Trotter, whom we have maintained in England for five or six months. We are paying him a fair wage, and at the same time he is giving us a good deal of information of what is going on in England, and he is giving the English people a good deal of information concerning the labour market in Canada. Now, I have no objection of course to any steamship company spreading large and finely decorated posters in Great Britain to induce people to come to Canada. The government claim that they only pay bonuses on domestic servants and farm labourers. Well, I have no objection to them. But this poster goes on to say that the following classes of persons are wanted in Canada: 'Masons, carpenters, bricklayers, brickmakers and labourers.' Now, can any hon. member say that we are in need of men of any of these classes at the present time in Canada, or are we likely to need them in the future? But this is the kind of posters that the Dominion line is putting up all over England to induce immigrants to come here, and by this means working people are caught. The steamship companies have an interest in inducing immigration, no matter whether the immigrants will leave Canada or will remain to crush Canadian labour. I have here a report of an interview with Lord Strathcona which appeared in some of the London papers. It is headed 'Skilled workmen in Canada, people who are not wanted.' The article says :

Lord Strathcona, High Commissioner for Canada, granted an interview to a representative of the Press Association yesterday afternoon with reference to Mr. Trotter's address. 'Mr. Trotter's statement that the only persons whose emigration is encouraged by the Canadian government are agriculturists, is quite correct,' said Lord Strathcona. 'Only those who intend to devote themselves to the land in one form or another are advised to settle in the Dominion. The one exception is the case of female domestic servants, who have little difficulty in obtaining situations.'

I might read further, but the rest is merely a corroboration of the statement of Mr. Trotter made in one of his addresses. Another agency which is doing a good deal to bring out English immigrants is the Salvation Army. They are spreading a great deal of literature on the other side, and are bringing out a great many people. I want to show to the House what they are doing. Although I grant that their statements are made in good faith, at the same time they are drawing a bonus on the immigrants they send over here. Let me give you a sample of some of the literature they are circulating. This is a letter sent to a friend by Colonel David C. Lamb, of the Salvation Army ?

You were recently inquiring about the party we are at present organizing for British Columbia, 'the garden of Canada,' and I thought it would interest you to know that hundreds have already booked their passages, and that there is every prospect of our having a very nice party.

You will probably have seen or heard something of the reports recently in the newspapers about Canada, and the inclosed leaflet will therefore interest you.

It will be a convenience to me if you can give me some idea of your intentions, and for that purpose I inclose a card which you might return in a few days.

If there is any point upon which you desire further information, I will be glad to do my best to furnish the same on hearing from you.

Then there is a statement on 'Unemployment in Canada and United States of America,' and the Salvation Army authorities go on to say :

In any case, we are still ready to guarantee work to all whom we advise to emigrate, and who are prepared to comply with our conditions and follow our advice. Our labour bureau on board our special sailings enables passengers to secure work before reaching the port of landing, where experienced officers welcome and direct new arrivals.

Well, so far so good. Now, I say that they are really the chief agents in England bringing over immigrants. This letter or circular goes on to say :

N.B.—We are the only people in this country who control an organization in Canada and the States. For reliable and up to date advice we have no equal. Passengers will do well to purchase their tickets through our agency.

That is the way it goes—purchasing tickets through their agency. But, we have this little booklet which only left England two weeks ago : 'Canada wants five millions of Britain's overflowing population. It says :

Land settlement and cultivation is the way to prosperity in Canada. As the land is cultivated, so the demand for mechanics and skilled tradesmen of an active and enterprising turn of mind will increase.

They are advising people to come and they are holding out inducements to mechanics and skilled tradesmen. It has been said that that is not the class of people that we are trying to induce to immigrate. I will acknowledge that the effort of the government is not directed to bringing about the immigration of skilled mechanics but still this organization holds out inducements to skilled mechanics in literature of this kind. I also have a little booklet entitled 'Canada in a Nutshell.' This has been circulated all over Great Britain and on the back of it is pasted a little piece of paper on which is printed:

The Salvation Army emigration office in London is specially recognized by the government of the Dominion of Canada.

On the lower part of the title page it is stated that it is 'Issued by the authority of the Minister of the Interior, Ottawa, Canada.' That is a sample of the literature that is being circulated to induce people to come to Canada. It is impossible, whether it be the Salvation Army or anybody else, when it is made a matter of business, to entirely disassociate this movement from the monetary consideration. If I were in England and if I were placed in the same position I have not doubt that I would do the same thing. I would look upon every man who left for Canada in the light of the $5 that would go into my pocket and the Salvation Army and every other organization of this kind are doing the same thing.

There is also another feature of this question which I desire to bring before the House and which may have come to the notice of some hon. members. It will be remembered that there was a strike in the coal mines in the province of Nova Scotia. That has nothing to do with what I have just mentioned, but it emphasizes the claim which I make that misrepresentation is resorted to by people in Great Britain for the sake of the bonus. Here is a letter that was sent to Mr. W. Stanlake, 39 Russell street, Exeter, England :

181 Bellefair avenue, Toronto,
February 10, 1908.

Mr. W. Stanlake,
39 Russell street, Exeter, England.

Dear Sir,—In reply to your letter, we beg to state that our Mr. Smith is now in England booking up and despatching the men to their work.

We can offer you and friend position as loaders (underground) if you are prepared to sail at an early date. The mines are very busy and there is no fear of slackness, the men being required at once. In Nova Scotia —in which province the mines are situated—living is very cheap, a single man being able to live for $3 per week (12s. 6d.).

If prepared to sail at an early date, send on £1 each deposit on your ocean passage to our Mr. Smith, 93 Warwick road, Birmingham, and he will keep a position open for you and book you through at the cheapest rate.

Wishing you every success,
Yours truly,
THE BRITISH EMPLOYMENT AGENCY OF CANADA,
(Sgd.) H. Oswald Ellis, Manager.

That shows that while the coal mines in Nova Scotia were far from wanting men, representations of this kind were made in order to obtain the bonus, and it also shows that the government, while paying this bonus, has no control over the class of immigrants which are induced to come to Canada through agencies of this kind. We may say, as it was said yesterday, that the policy of the government is not to grant aid to immigration, but if it does not do it directly it does it in an indirect way. It gives the money to one to give to another which is exactly the same thing in the end as far as I can see. It goes to a third party instead of going direct to the immigrant himself. The immigrant does not get it but he is induced to come here by the money granted by way of bonus. I have some documents here that have a special bearing on the subject and which are of late date, but at this hour I shall not trouble the House by reading them all. I should like, however, while discussing this question of misrepresentation to direct the attention of the House to a resolution passed by the Montreal District Council of the United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America. It is as follows:

Montreal, January 27, 1908.

Resolution presented by Messrs. J. Hibbins and J. Gauthier, and adopted:

Whereas, the present condition of the labour market is most deplorable, owing to its being continually augmented by unscrupulous builders' exchanges, manufacturers' associations, private companies and individuals, or their agents, who take every means in their power to obtain the country's money, and therewith negotiate with church homes, self-help societies, and more especially with the members of the Salvation Army to bring to this country at so much per head, anybody without regard to their fitness or the country's good, the main object being of course, for the profit obtained, which quite often results in adding to the ranks of the incompetents, and also to the criminal classes, thereby lowering the standard of both living and the active population.

We note particularly that which is carried on under assumed religious auspices as being the most pernicious and misleading. And, furthermore, that not within the writer's knowledge has there ever been a real scarcity of labour, but many depressions, especially during the winter months, which make the present conditions most reprehensible. And, while we do not propose to discuss who is the most to blame, as the guilty parties everywhere are now doing, the results which must fall so heavy on all labour, make us resolve that we immediately withdraw both our support and influence from any and every member, of the federal or provincial parliament, or member of any municipal body, who does not immediately seek every means to stop one cent more of the country's money being subscribed in any form or manner for assisted immigration purposes, the whole of which is unnecessary and unwarranted.

Therefore, be it resolved, that the vote of this District Council of Carpenters be sent to our labour member, and also to the Minister of Labour, without delay, in order that a repetition of such a state of affairs will not be.

I will conclude by stating that instead of paying bonuses, instead of opening the door to speculation and encouraging the operations of unscrupulous agents, it would be of greater benefit to the country if we simply allowed our successful settlers in the west to act as our immigration agents. I claim that as long as we continue to pay these bonuses we will not achieve satisfactory results and we will not get the class of people in this country that we desire. I do not wish it to be understood that I am opposed to immigration, but I am opposed to the government offering inducements to bring to Canada an undesirable class. The country is well known, it is the promised land, everybody is looking to Canada and everybody will come. The 75,000, or 2,000,000 people who are walking the streets in England will be only too glad to come over to Canada without the payment of this $5 bonus. This is my position, and I may say that this is the expression of the views of organized labour not only in the city of Montreal but throughout Canada from Victoria to Halifax. I speak here to-night not merely as the member for my own riding, but I speak as representing the organized labour of Canada from ocean to ocean.

Mr. H. H. MILLER (South Grey). The hon. member (Mr. Monk) by whom this resolution was presented to the House, made many comparisons as between the present immigration policy of Canada and the present immigration policy of the United States. Lord Strathcona in a letter of date November 15, 1900, written to the Hon. Clifford Sifton, then Minister of the Interior, gave an illustration of the differences that exist between the conditions in the United States and the conditions in Canada, and he set forth many important reasons why it is necessary for us in Canada to make more strenuous efforts to obtain immigration than is the case with regard to the United States. Lord Strathcona wrote :

On the other hand the United States have been working for many years on the continent and had the advantage of direct steamship communication which we did not and do not now enjoy to any great extent, and in consequence they were able to attract a larger population which yearly drew more and more people to it. There is no immigration agent so potent as the successful emigrant; besides they secured the great bulk of their people before we were in a position to offer prairie land to any extent to immigrants to Canada and in times that were less prosperous than those of recent years.

It seems to me that with hundreds of thousands of acres of fertile land in our Canadian west that are to-day unoccupied, untilled and unproductive, we do require a large number of immigrants. We require immigrants to till that soil and to make it produce so as to add to the wealth of this Canada of ours. And not only to add to the wealth of our country directly by making that fertile soil produce crops that will give us wealth, but indirectly that it may give to the manufacturers of eastern Canada, as immigration to the west has done in recent years, added markets for the output of their factories. I think, Sir, that in connection with our immigration we may direct our energy with great profit to bringing to this country desirable immigrants for the cultivation of that western land, and we cannot bring desirable immigrants for that purpose in any too great numbers. On the other hand I think we may direct our energy to keeping out of this country any immigrants who would not make good Canadian citizens. I do not think it is desirable to bring to Canada, at least at present, immigrants who shall enter into competition with the labouring men and mechanics of our cities and towns, and I am pleased to say that it has not been the policy of the present government to induce to come to this country such immigrants as will compete with Canadian workingmen and artisans. I quite realize too that in bringing to this country an immigrant who is physically diseased or who is mentally unsound or who is a moral pervert, we may do more harm than the good we will do by bringing here a dozen men who are physically, mentally and morally sound. I have risen tonight, however, not so much to dicuss the question of immigration in a general way as to direct the attention of the House and of the people of this country to the important part that has been played and is being played to-day in the development of Canada by the German-Canadian settler.

If I occupy a few moments of the time of the House in discussing the importance to Canada of the German-Canadian, I think I shall be occupying the time of parliament in a manner in which it has not been occupied before in the history of Canada. When I speak of the German settler in Canada, I speak of him as I have met him and known him in my own province of Ontario. I know that the German settler in Canada has not played the very important part in the discovery of the country and in the laying of the foundations of the country that has been played by our French Canadian friends ; yet I do contend that the German settler in Canada has taken, is taking and is likely to take a much greater part in the development and progress of Canada than most of our Canadian people who have not come into immediate contact with our German Canadian citizens have any idea of. The earliest settlement of German people in the province of Ontario was, I think, in the Niagara peninsula, and there are to-day considerable settlements of German people in the counties of Norfolk, Lincoln and Essex. But the German settlements that have thrived most and that seem to have taken the deepest root in Ontario are the settlements originally formed in the county of Waterloo and that have extended into the neighbouring counties. In the year 1800 two Germans named Joseph Sherk and Samuel Betzner, came to the present county of Waterloo and settled near the present village of Doon on the Grand river. They were the first German settlers, and the first prominent white settlers in the county of Waterloo. In the following year, 1801, they were followed by a number of other German families—Bechtels, Kinseys, Rosenburgers, Biehns and other families of German names and German nationality. These people came from the State of Pennsylvania to what is now the township of Waterloo. The distance from that part of the State of Pennsylvania in which they had their homes to the county of Waterloo was about five hundred miles, which they travelled, not by railway train, for in those days there were no railways, but by horses and wagons, coming over the Alleghany mountains, through swamps and forests, over roads that were bad, and through much country where there were no roads at all. The ingenuity of the German, the manner in which he adapts himself to his circumstances, may be shown by one little instance, that of Joseph Sherk, to whom I have already referred. The first table used in the county of Waterloo was in the house of Joseph Sherk. It consisted of a pine stump some five feet in diameter, around which this German pioneer built his first rude settler's cabin. The township of Wilmot in the county of Waterloo was settled by a society of non-conformists under the leadership of one Christian Naffsiger, who was a Hollander. He left his home in Amsterdam and went to New Orleans. From New Orleans he journeyed northward to Lancaster County in the State of Pennsylvania. Acting on information and advice given by German friends in Pennsylvania he made his way northwestwardly to the township of Waterloo, to the little German settlement there. Looking about for a tract of land on which to settle German friends he intended to bring to the country, he arranged with the then local government to obtain on easy terms what is now the township of Wilmot. Having concluded his bargain with the local government, he proceeded to Britain where he interviewed George IV, and by the British government the bargain he made with the local government was confirmed. That was in 1822. The township of Woolwich, in the county of Waterloo, was settled in the first place by German people about the year 1810, and German pioneers settled in the township of Wellesley in Waterloo county in 1832. These fertile tracts in Waterloo county, in those early days settled by German people are occupied by German people to-day, and there is no tract of agricultural land more productive, no matter where it is, within the bounds of Canada, than those German townships of Waterloo county, an no people engaged in agricultural pursuits in Canada that man for man are possessed of greater wealth or have met with greater success than the German people who occupy and cultivate them. The German settlements in Waterloo county extended in later years to the adjoining counties, so that we now have very considerable German settlements in the counties of Perth, Wellington, Huron, Oxford, Bruce and Grey, and there are no men in the Dominion of Canada who have made better settlers than these German people, whose names are rarely found on the lists of our courts and are seldom or never seen in any of our police records. The German as we find him in Canada is naturally a religious man, and the German citizens of Canada are probably the most faithful church attendants of any of our Canadian citizens. In Germany the people were for the most part members of either the Roman Catholic or the Lutheran Church ; but in Canada we have German people belonging to the Roman Catholic Church, the Lutheran Church, the Evangelical Association, whose people are commonly known as German Methodists, the Baptist Church, the Mennonite Church and some to the Presbyterian Church. The German is a man of domestic habits, fond of his home and of his home life ; and while the German families are not usually so large as those of our French Canadian friends, yet the head of a German household usually rules over a nest in which there are many younglings to be clothed and fed. The German people whatever may be their position in life, whatever may be their possessions or their financial standing, teach their children that honest toil, whether of muscle or brain, is no disgrace. The German people are brought up to work, and they all work, and are characteristically industrious. It is supposed by a great many people who do not know them so well as I do that the German, as we have him in Canada, is addicted to the excessive use of strong drink. This is an erroneous idea ; in fact, the very reverse is the case. He is usually a sober man. Perhaps a very small percentage of the German population would be in favour of a prohibitory liquor law ; not a very large percentage of them may be classed as total abstainers ; many of them drink moderately of their liquors of lighter brew ; yet they are a sober people, and the German communities in Canada will be found to contain a much smaller number of men who are addicted to the the immoderate use of strong drink than will be found in a community of Irish Canadians or Scotch Canadians, or English Canadians.

I will not say that the German farmer is the best farmer we have in Canada. If I should say that my friend behind me (Mr. McKenzie) the chairman of the Agricultural Committee would perhaps call my attention to the Scotch farmers in this country and there are other members who would point out the excellencies of the English farmer and the Irish Canadian farmer. While it would not be correct to say that the German in Canada is the best farmer we have, I may correctly and truthfully say that we have no better farmers in Canada than the Germans. One characteristic of the German farmer is that he will not settle upon poor soil. He may settle upon a farm that is out of order, that will require a great deal of labour to make it a comfortable home, but he will see to it that he will settle on a soil that by his own hard work he can convert into a good, productive farm. The German will prefer to settle on a piece of good land and struggle to pay off a large mortgage to taking a piece of poor and unproductive land without the debt. As I have said, the German, whether upon a farm or wherever else he may be found, is industrious, thrifty and economical and usually succeeds.

But if our German Canadian succeeds as a farmer he succeeds in no less degree as a manufacturer. It seems to me that the German is naturally a man of mechanical ingenuity, that he is naturally a mechanic and, therefore, in that tract of Ontario through which more than a century ago the German pioneers either followed or created a blazed trail to guide them in their way through the Canadian forest, they now have large busy, thriving, manufacturing centres. The chief of these German manufacturing centres in Ontario is the busy town of Berlin in the county of Waterloo. A directory published in 1846 described Berlin as being a village of 400 people, principally Germans. Now the town of Berlin, in place of a population of 400, has a population of 12,000 people ; but as they were in 1846 so they are in 1908, principally Germans. In that busy German town that to-day prefers to be the largest town rather than the smallest and youngest city in Canada, you will find a greater variety of manufacturing industries than in any other town of similar size in Canada. They manufacture every thing from a button to a piano, a traction engine or a threshing machine. A peculiar thing about these German manufacturing industries is that they were not established by the aid or assistance of large municipal grants. They were not established by men who went into these German manufacturing towns with large capital, but are rather the outgrowth of the business of men who began in a very small way. As an instance of that, I may say that there is to-day in Berlin a large and successful boot and shoe factory, and the man who to-day controls that successful boot and shoe manufacturing business began his career as a boot and shoe manufacturer in Berlin by making slippers by hand, and the market for his slippers was found by his good wife who sold them on the streets of the town from a basket which she carried on her arm. Very close to Berlin is the other German manufacturing town of Waterloo, with a population about half that of Berlin. As an evidence of the success of the manufacturing industries of the town of Waterloo, I may say that I do not think there is any other town of its size in Ontario that pays such a large annual revenue into the treasury of Canada by its excise and customs duties. In the county of Waterloo there are also the thriving manufacturing towns of Preston, Hespeler and Elmira. In my own county of Grey, we have the busy, live German manufacturing towns of Hanover, Neustadt and Ayton. In Hanover we have the German names of Knechtel, Peppler and Messinger among our manufacturers. Our town is supported almost entirely by manufactories and they are almost altogether in the control of German citizens or men who have learned their trade and acquired their business knoweldge in the offices and factories of German Canadians. As another instance of the manner in which German manufacturing industries are built up, let me say that there stands to-day in Hanover an inconspicuous frame dwelling, one and a half storeys high, of small size, that in the beginning of his manufacturing career, was the combined residence and manufacturing establishment of Mr. Daniel Knechtel, who is now the president and chief shareholder of the Knechtel Furniture Company, one of the largest furniture manufacturing companies in Canada having a very large factory in Hanover, another in Walkerton and another in Southampton.

In the adjoining county of Bruce, there are the busy manufacturing towns of Chesley, Walkerton and Southampton. These towns have all been for years towns of more or less importance, but they have never been busy and progressive towns until in recent years German people have gone into them and established manufacturing industries. I may particularly point out the case of the town of Southampton on Lake Huron, that only a few years ago was a sleepy, quiet fishing village and summer resort ; but now by manufacturing industries in the hands entirely of German people, has become a busy thriving progressive town. In connection with these comparatively small manufacturing German towns let me say they are principally engaged in the manufacture of furniture, and that the furniture manufacturing business of Canada to-day is very largely in the hands of our German people.

One reason why our German manufacturers are so successful is because of their mechanical skill, their enterprise, their economy, their thrift, and their general business ability. But there is another reason why the German manufacturer succeeds as he does and that is because of the high character of the German workmen whom he employs. There is no better workman engaged, anywhere, than we have in our factories, where the workmen are principally Germans. Amongst them we have no trouble from unions, strikes, or lockouts, and this is largely because the German employee of to-day feels that he is likely to be the employer of to-morrow; or if he is himself not in the immediate future an employer of labour, that at least his sons will be employers, rather than on the payrolls of other taskmasters. Another peculiarity of the German workmen is that the majority of them live in attractive homes of which they are themselves the owners. In connection with these attractive homes of the German workmen, you will almost always find a very neat, well cultivated, carefully tilled fruit and vegetable garden. The German in Canada does not hold quite so tenaciously, it may be, to the use of the language of his fathers as do our French Canadian friends, and yet our German people are fond of the language that is spoken in the Fatherland.

They keep up the use of their language by holding their church services in the tongue of the old land, oftentimes when it would be quite as convenient to hold those services in English. They also perpetuate the use of the German tongue by forming local associations for the study of that language and also by establishing in various parts of Ontario and the Canadian west newspapers printed in German. Let me say that the various German settlements in Canada are being constantly added to by new arrivals from Germany. And it is astonishing, and very much to the credit of the German people, the readiness with which they acquire at least a speaking knowledge of the English language. The German, too, is fond of music and skilled in it. As an evidence of that musical talent and skill let me say, there are no church choirs anywhere in Canada that are, perhaps, equal to the choirs of the German churches whatever their denomination. Their bands and orchestras, too, are the best we have in the country. Any one desiring to enjoy a great musical treat cannot do better than attend at Berlin one of the many Sangerfests that are held in that town. As an evidence of the musical skill of the German, let me read a short extract from the April number of the 'Busy Man's Magazine,' published in Toronto. This is an article upon Dr. Augustus Stefan Vogt, the now famous leader of the Mendelssohn Choir of Toronto, who was born in the village of Elmira, in the county of Waterloo, and is the son of a German organ builder:

Will Dr. Augustus Stefan Vogt, the brillant leader of the famous Mendelssohn Choir, have the honour of knighthood conferred upon him when birthday honours are distributed by His Majesty on Victoria Day next? Dr. Vogt richly deserves such distinction. He has accomplished more than many a Canadian who has been decorated with a K.C.M.G., and it will not surprise his thousands of friends and admirers if he is soon known as Sir Augustus Vogt. A Canadian who realizes the value of an ideal, he is prepared to make any sacrifices for its accomplishment. All fellow countrymen are proud of him. He has done more in perfecting choral art than any other person, and has made Canada in this respect envied of all nations.

As financiers, our German Canadian friends excel, and, as an evidence of this, I may say that the towns of Berlin and Waterloo, in the province of Ontario, are the homes of very progressive, popular and successful life insurance and fire insurance companies, the shareholders, directors and managers of which are almost exclusively German people. Let me call the attention of the House also to the fact that the German Canadian excels also as a sport and athlete. We have all heard in recent weeks of Tommy Burns, the world's champion heavy-weight pugilist, who has been chumming with Lord Alverstone in England. Tommy Burns' real name is Noah Brusso. He was born and brought up in my own riding of South Grey and in my own town of Hanover, and is the son of Frederic Brusso, who was a workman in the factory of the Knechtel Furniture Company of that town.

Leaving the field of sport and going to the higher ground of science, the German in Canada is noted as a scientist, as is the German in his own land. And in evidence of this, it is only necessary for me to call attention to one man, Dr. Otto Klotz, who has been for many years in the employ of this government and is now at the head of its astronomical work. Our German Canadian friends, too, are adapted to public life and have taken an interest in public affairs in Canada. One of the best wardens that my own county ever had was the late Victor Lang, a German Canadian. In the provincial legislature to-day, we have Dr. Lackmer, member for one of the ridings of Waterloo, Mr. C. M. Bowman, the popular member for North Bruce, whose father, Mr. J. E. Bowman, was at one time a member of this House, and also Hon. Adam Beck, who has achieved considerable notoriety and celebrity in Ontario because of the power scheme he has advocated. And, in this House, the German Canadian is well represented. We have the very popular and always industrious member for West Hamilton, Mr. Adam Zimmerman, the very popular and deservedly popular representative of South Waterloo, Mr. G. A. Clare, and also the equally popular representative of North Middlesex, Mr. Valentine Ratz, all of German descent. In the field of law, the German Canadian has held his own and taken a leading part. When I speak of the lawyers in Canada of German descent, I will mention but one, Mr. A. B. Klein, who is one of the county court judges of Bruce. Mr. Klien, who is of German descent, was one of the ablest and most popular lawyers having a country practice in Canada and is not less popular on the bench as one of our Canadian judges. And he showed his loyalty to Canada by the interest he took in the affairs of our militia, having retired from the 32nd Battalion of Bruce with the rank and title of major.

We have large German settlements in every city in Canada. For instance, there is a large settlement of this nationality in Toronto, and in that city many of our most prominent men are of German extraction, like the Breithaupts and the Heintzmans, who are well known in the business world. There is a large German settlement in Ottawa, and also in Hamilton. There are many Germans in Montreal and also in Winnipeg. We have Germans engaged in agricultural pursuits in considerable numbers in the county of Russell, Ont., and in part of the province of Quebec and also in Nova Scotia. In fact, there is not a province in Canada in which we have not a considerable number of German settlers.

It will be said that many of these German people came into Canada of their own accord and not as the result of any immigration policy of this government. That is true so far as eastern Canada is concerned. But we have a very large number of German settlers in western Canada who have come to that western country as a direct result of the efforts made by our immigration agencies and our Department of the Interior. The German settlers in the northwestern Canada will make, no doubt, quite as good settlers as did the Germans in the province of Ontario. Had it cost the government of Canada, not $5, or $20, but $10,000 apiece to bring to Canada some of the German people whose names I have mentioned, the investment would have been a good one and one by which we should have very largely profited.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. They came for nothing.

Mr. MILLER. We have a very large number of Canadian German settlers who came as a direct result, as I have said, of the work of the Department of the Interior and because of the immigration policy of the government of the day. I am very glad that the Department of the Interior has always, under the present government of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, shown its appreciation of the value of immigration from Germany. And, in evidence of what the Department of the Interior of the present Liberal government has thought of German immigration and in evidence of its appreciation of the German settler, I want to read a sentence from a letter from Mr. Smart, then Deputy Minister of the Interior to Mr. W. T. R. Preston, dated July 18, 1900. He says: 'We are especially anxious to bring persons of German origin.' And, in another letter from Ottawa to Mr. Preston, dated August 26, 1901, Mr. Smart, then deputy minister, acting under instructions from the Minister of the Interior, said:

> I will be glad if you will let me know what has been the result of the efforts of the North Atlantic Trading Company in so far as its work in Germany is concerned. I may say that after two years the department is a little disappointed in not seeing greater results from the efforts of the company in Germany and also in Scandinavia. There is no class of people that Canadians are so willing to welcome as German settlers, and it seems too bad that some good commencement cannot be made in connection with the people of this nationality. I may add that Mr. Landy, whom I met in Winnipeg, told me a few days ago that it was confidently expected a good many Germans would come to this country, but in order to have authentic information on the subject, I would be pleased if you would communicate with the syndicate which is doing the work.

I was pleased when the present Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) stated to me that there are no settlers that his department welcomes more heartily and considers more satisfactory than the German settlers. I trust that no legitimate effort will be spared, whatever direction that effort may take, to continue the immigration to this country of the German people. I may say that in every respect we have no better people than the German residents of Canada, they make very loyal and in every way very satisfactory Canadians. The German settler as we have him in Canada, when he looks back to the history and traditions of the land from which he came, sings with great enthusiasm that national song of which he is so proud, Die Wacht Am Rhein. And when he looks around upon his home in Canada, and which he expects to be the home of his children, he sings with equal zeal and equal fervour, and with still greater interest, and with true loyalty, 'The Maple Leaf' and 'God Save the King.'

Mr. THOMAS CHISHOLM (East Huron). The question of immigration which we are now discussing lies at the very foundation of our national prosperity and greatness, and no more important question could engage our attention. I must say that I think it is much more important than the question which we had intruded here this afternoon. Although I stand on the opposition side of the House, I desire to say right here that I have no sympathy at all with the intrusion into this debate of the question of a little bit of dredging. The character of the immigration that is coming to our country means everything to the future of our country. The subject was brought up in this House by one of the ablest men in it, a man who never speaks on any subject unless he has something of importance to say, a man who can handle a subject properly, and it is much to be regretted that the discussion was interrupted by the break that was made this afternoon. The future and greatness of the country depend on the people who inhabit it. Look at Scotland. Scotland is not a large country, but what other country in the world exercises so great an influence over the world, according to its size and its population, as Scotland? Germany is a wonderful country, and our good friend who has just spoken (Mr. Miller) has told us that the Germans are a wonderful people. They are, and they are exerting a wonderful influence all over the world. Now then what we want to do is to get people of the right kind to come to this country, and so long as they are of the right kind, the country will go on and prosper. I believe that this country will become in due time one of the great nations of the world. Cheap labour, as has been well said by an hon. member this afternoon, is not everything. You may get in cheap labour, but that will not make the country great. The Americans got in cheap labour in their negro population, but that did not make the country great, and it has been the occasion of the great civil war and the expenditure of millions of money. In the neighbouring republic they have that labour question on their hands, and it is complicated with the race problem, which is one of the most difficult problems that any country could have to face. In the same way we look to British Columbia, and some say that the bringing in of cheap labour from Asia will be a great help to Canada. But I think we can scarcely afford to allow immigration of that sort. These people will not assimilate with our western type of civilization, they will not assimilate with Canadians, and if they did, it would only be to lower the tone of our civilization. At the same time we have nothing against the Japanese, we admire the Japanese, but we don't wish them as immigrants because we cannot assimilate with them. Now then speaking of immigration, it seems to me that too much attention has been paid to settling up the west to the neglect of eastern Canada. It seems to me that the east has been forgotten. Of course we have a great country in the west, and there is no danger but that it will be filled up in time. On the one side, only four or five days journey distant, we have the teeming millions of Europe; and on the other side, only eight or ten days journey distant, we have the hundreds of millions of China and Japan; while to the south of us we have eighty millions of people. If we have got a good country the great trouble will be to keep people out of it whom we do not want to come here. For instance, the Doukhobors are occupying land in the west that we ought to keep for our children and our children's children. To get these people into this country our government have paid $7 a head, besides affording them assistance after they reach here. They occupy the best land in our western country; and I can say now that if they had never set foot in this country that land would now be occupied by good Canadians. On the 7th of June last year I was in the city of Prince Albert, and there were a number of Doukhobor homesteads, discarded homesteads, that the Doukhobors would not have, that were to be opened on that day. These homesteads had been held for the Doukhobors for seven years by the government. They had lived in their villages, and had made no improvements on the land for seven years, and still the homesteads were held for them. If a Canadian boy goes up there to get a homestead, if he is not on hand the very minute he should be, he loses his right, but the Doukhobor can hold it for seven years. One of my own Wingham boys went up there, and understanding that, according to the regulations, the first man who was on hand the next morning would get the choice of these five homesteads, he went into the office the night before and made some inquiries, and when the time came to close the office, he was requested to leave. He walked out, but he kept his hand on the door knob all night. I went up the next morning, it was raining, but still the poor fellow had his hand on the door knob. There were four or five hundred people surging around him, his hat was trampled into the mud, the rain was running off his hair, but still he stood there with his hand on the door knob. I was proud of him as a Wingham boy. The result was that he got the first homestead. Now here were 500 good Canadians ready to take these homesteads, and if the Doukhobors had never gone there those 500 Canadians would have taken up those homesteads. These homesteads were held for these Doukhobors for seven years, but a poor boy went up there last year from my riding. You know that we had a very late spring. He went up into Saskatchewan, he got into a half built hut and he took cold, inflammation of the lungs and pleurisy. His father had to go and bring him home, and he was brought to my riding. I went to the land office a little while ago to make some inquiry to see if they would hold his homestead open. He had his side opened three times and a tube put in. I was present at one of the operations and the Liberal doctor who is attending him in Brussels sent a letter down to the department and said that the boy had still a tube in his side, and that matter was running out of his side and we asked the time to be extended until after the first of May. What was the reply that we got from the land office?—'they are not holding homesteads open after the first of May.' This poor fellow is expected to go back and he must go or he will lose his homestead and, of course, if he goes, he may lose his life. How does it come that these Doukhobors could have homesteads held for seven years and a poor boy in my riding cannot have a homestead held for a few months although he has a tube in his side.

The farmers of Ontario particularly are neglected under our immigration policy. They are very hard up for help. There is a famine of farm labourers in our country; everything is being done for the west and it is draining the east. We have harvest excursions at cheap rates taking away 20,000 of our young men to the west at a time when we need them most. When we get in the so-called farm help we find that the bonus system is bringing in the wrong class of settlers. They do not bring in men from the heather mills whence my own father came nor from the vine clad valley of Germany and France. They bring in men who have been brought up in the cities and no matter how foolish you may think a farmer to be when he goes to the city, no matter how many mistakes he may make, they are nothing to the mistakes which will be made by the city man who goes upon the farm. He is far more out of place. It is no use for a man like that to go to one of our farmers and tell him that he has been brought up on a farm in the old country. The farmer will very soon know where he comes from. I heard a little story the other day about a man who came from Glasgow and who hired out as a farm labourer. The farmer said: Now, Sandy, there is a farmer across the road and he and I are exceedingly good friends. We have an arrangement that if he in any way spoils any of his farm implements he is to have a loan of anything that I have and if we happen to break any of our implements we can go over and get his. If that man comes over and asks for the loan of any farm implements when I am not here, you must give it to him. One day the farmer was away and the neighbour came across and said: 'Sandy, man, have you a plough? I have broken my plough and I wish to finish my ploughing.' 'Och,' said Sandy, 'Ye can ha the pleu. The boss said ye cud ha onything aboot the place bit I dinna ken whaur the pleu is and I dinna ken whether I waud ken a pleu gin I saw ane, but there is the wagon and maybe ye can pleu wi' it till the boss comes hame.'

Then I heard another one about a man who came out to this country who was taken out to the bush to assist a farmer to get out some logs. The farmer said to him: 'John, will you go and get a cant-hook? John went home and soon brought back a mooly cow because he thought she could not hook because she had no horns and that therefore she must be a cant-hook. I believe that if an effort were made this difficulty would be solved if the minister would give attention to this matter and I am sure he has tried to do the best he could, but he does not understand the situation. The farmers have solved the difficulty of the cheese and bacon question, and I believe that the farm labour question might be solved by going about it in the right way. There is a great difficulty not only in regard to the scarcity of labour, but, since automobiles have been placed upon the highways, the farmers' daughters and wives cannot go to town and to market. They cannot drive the horses because farmers' horses, being more isolated, are more easily frightened. I have seen farmers in my county with 200 acres of land who would have to leave the farm work and drive to town on account of the automobiles. We must get into our country a class of men about whose history we know something. about whose life history we know something. A farmer must take his hired help right into the bosom of his family, to be the companion of his sons, his wife and his daugters. We must have the life history of such people. We cannot take every man that you pick up in Whitechapel, or Glasgow, or Dublin. These men may or may not be suitable associates for a farmer's family. We must know them and have their life histories. I propose that the province of Ontario should be divided into districts and that the farmers who wish help should be invited to assemble at some central point during the slack time in the winter. They would give in a list of the labour that they required. One man wants a man with a family because he has bought out his neighbour, he has 200 acres of land and he has acquired a nice brick house with it. There is some man away off in Europe, in Germany, or England or Ireland or Scotland living in a cottage with his family and if that man must come and occupy that house he would think that he was in a palace and the farmer, with 200 acres of land, might give him five or six acres to work for himself and his family. In this way the farmer could get the kind of help that he requires. Another man needs a boy. Each farmer would designate exactly the kind of help that he required and all these requirements would be written down. Then the farmers assembled together would elect one of themselves to go to the old country, hire the help and bring it to Canada. That man would go to the old country and he would say: Here is John Jones; he has a large family and he could occupy that house and cultivate a piece of land in connection with it. The man who would actually engage the help in the old country would see the man who had been delegated to go over there and ascertain from him exactly the kind of help that would suit him. If the man who was delegated to do this work did not do it properly the farmers would next year elect another representative. Let the government pay the expenses of these men who would be selected to go over to the old country and engage help. It is not my place to suggest how it should be done.

There is another thing that I desire to say and that is that as a result of the way in which our tariff is regulated the manufacturers enjoy rates so much in excess of those which the farmers enjoy on their products that it is impossible to keep farm labourers on the farm. They drift into the cities because they get work and the farmers are not able to pay them high wages because their products are not protected to the same extent as the products of the manufacturers are.

I regret that many of the immigrants we are getting in this country are not such as are desirable, or as are calculated to build up and strengthen our nation. On the contrary, far too many of them are subjects of charity and are filling our hospitals and our charitable institutions, and still worse, in some cases they are filling our jails and penitentiaries. I quote from the St. Thomas 'Evening Journal' of the 11th of April, a good Liberal paper, the following:

Dumped in Ontario is Hon. Mr. Hanna's claim.

Toronto, April 11.—Hon. Mr. Hanna called the attention of the legislature last night to the effect of immigration in the last year or two upon the inmates of the principal institutions. He had just received a telegram from Port Arthur, as follows:

'Fort William police magistrate has committed ten male Doukhobors to Central Prison; nine females to the Mercer Reformatory. They are in jail here. We have no room for them. Fifty-three other prisoners here now. There are fifty-seven other Doukhobors at Fort William to be sent to the Central and the Mercer. They have burned their clothes and are naked.

'ALEX. W. THOMPSON,
'Sheriff.'

This was not only a matter of so many more inmates of the jails, but indicated a condition of affairs that must be dealt with, and the responsibility for which placed where it belongs.

Although 80 per cent were native born in the province, the inmates of the ayslums were 30 per cent foreign born.

During 1907 there were 1,162 patients admitted to asylums of the province of whom 346 were foreign born. During the past five years the percentage of foreigners admitted to these institutions had increased from 20 to 30 per cent, while Canadian born patients had decreased from 80 to 70 per cent, in the same period, from 1903 to 1907, the cost of maintenance of foreign born patients had increased from $24,613.20 to $51,744.30. While the foreign born of the entire adult population were only 20 per cent, the total admission to asylums from that class was 30 per cent.

The figures showed the necessity of effective methods to prevent the dumping on the province of undesirables by friends, and others aided by charitable associations with no other object than to get rid of the responsibility of providing for them. Taking into consideration the probable length of life of these patients, the cost of maintaining those admitted in 1907 alone amount to $1,487,058.80 without including any proportion for capital expenditure.

Of the estimated total population of the province, over 16 years of age, 1,209,308 were Canadians, and 291,675 were foreigners, or 20 per cent of the whole. At the same time, of the commitments to jail, 38 per cent were of foreign birth, and the cost of providing for them amounted to $21,724.65.

Now, that is quite a large sum of money for the province of Ontario to be mulcted in by reason of this undesirable immigration. We should take care that the immigrants who are brought into this country are physically and morally fit to build up our country, and that they are not such as will deteriorate the character of the people with whom they mingle.

The hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Miller) spoke very kindly and very correctly about our German people, and I may be pardoned for following his example and saying a few words about them myself. The German settlers in this country have in every case made model citizens. In southwest Ontario, in Wellington, in Grey, in Bruce, in Huron, in Perth, in Oxford, and in Waterloo we have large German communities, and in these districts the farms are not only clean and well kept, but they are thoroughly and effectively tilled. The homes of the German Canadians are comfortable and commodious and the people honest, moral, respectable and in many cases wealthy. The Germans very easily assimilate with us Canadians because they are practically of our own race. We know that the Saxons of England came originally from Germany, and as a German would say: 'Die Deutche spreche ist die mutter der Engleschen'—the German language is the mother of the English language. The grammar and construction of the German and English languages are so much alike that even old persons who know the one soon learn the other, which in my opinion accounts in a great measure for the ease with which our German settlers have been able to adapt themselves to the language and customs of this country. Our German settlers are not only industrious and frugal and law-abiding, but in every case they are thoroughly loyal to our King and our country. It appears to be no trouble to them to yield allegiance to the uncle of their emperor, especially when they know that his father, the late lamented Prince Albert, was a German and that his mother, the good Queen Victoria, was a descendant of the House of Brunswick and of German George I. Things are made still more easy for them in this respect when they know that many of the United Empire Loyalists who made great sacrifices when they came to Canada from the United States at the close of the revolutionary war were of Dutch or German origin.

It does not need any bonusing to induce German immigrants to come to this country, because the German people are so thrifty that they always have money to meet their own wants. In my opinion, Sir, we should encourage German immigrants to come to Canada. We should not only give the German people the glad hand, but we should strive in some friendly way to remove from our tariff that odious surtax which the Canadian government is levying against goods coming from the fatherland. I believe that the German people resent this tax and feel it very strange that their country should be singled out by us for such treatment. I notice here by a report of the Trade and Commerce Department that, while we have trade commissioners in Australia, China, Japan, Corea, France and Mexico, in the German empire, that great manufacturing and food consuming country, there is not a single trade commissioner. Our German friends are scarcely to blame if they feel that the Canadian government is not treating their country with that consideration which I believe it deserves from us.

Now, let me say a few words about the North Atlantic Trading Company, and in that connection I want to refer to the statement frequently made that the Prime Minister offered to give to the leader of the opposition the names of the members of the North Atlantic Trading Company. Let me quote from 'Hansard,' 1906, page 4472, what the Prime Minister said in reference to that:

> But, sir, I have in my hands at this moment the names of those gentlemen with whom Mr. Preston, Mr. Smart and the government dealt in 1890. and I am willing confidentially to put those papers——
> Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.
> Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I am willing confidentiallv to put those papers into the hands of the hon. leader of the opposition or of any hon. gentleman he will select.

What names were they? The names of the gentleman with whom Mr. Preston, Mr. Smart and the government dealt in 1899. According to what I see here, the North Atlantic Trading Company was not in existence at that time, so that it could not have possibly been the members of that company whose names were to be given. Now I quote from a letter contained in the report of the Public Accounts Committee of 1906, written by Lord Strathcona to Mr. Smart, in which letter he says:

> Inclosed with this letter you will find a copy of the certificate of registration of the North Atlantic Trading Company, Limited, dated at Greffe, Guernsey, the 14th day of June, 1905, together with a copy of the memorandum and articles of association of the same company, dated the 3rd June, 1905.

Now, how can any person make out that an effort was made to give the names of the members of the North Atlantic Trading Company five years before such a company existed? Another point is this: I notice in 'Hansard' of the 2nd of April of the present year that a member stated:

> Lord Strathcona sent a man by the name of Charles A. Allen to Amsterdam to get these names. He felt that there was great demand in the public mind of Canada to know those names, and so he sent a special messenger over there for the purpose. And this is what he sent back to Lord Strathcona, dated June 5, 1906:
> Just received letter from company, as follows: begins, very utmost we are able to do is to allow Mr. Preston to show names to Premier, Hon. Mr. Fielding, and if absolutely necessary also to only one Liberal and only one Conservative member of confidential committee, on condition that they each give a sworn declaration in writing never to mention names either verbally or in any other way and on condition that Premier takes full responsibility that these sworn declarations are kept, as disclosing names would result in some prominent members committing suicide.

Now, suppose our leader had been given those names—not, mind you, the names of the members of the North Atlantic Trading Company, but those of the gentlemen with whom these other gentlemen had dealt five or six years before—he would have been sworn to secrecy. He dare not tell us that he had been trapped and misled, and we would have all been sitting here like boobies behind him, knowing nothing about it. I deny that the names of the members of the North Atlantic Trading Company were ever offered to the leader of the opposition, If they were, I do not understand the English language as I read it in 'Hansard'. Another thing: These men mentioned as having done business with Mr. Smart and Mr. Preston and the government in 1899, Mr. Smart himself, in his evidence, stated positively were only in business a few months. Therefore they were out of business for five years before the North Atlantic Trading Company came into existence at all; so that I either misunderstand the English language very much or there is some great mistake.

Mr. G. H. McINTYRE (South Perth). Mr. Speaker, this debate has travelled over considerable time, yet its continuity is very much broken. The hour is late, and there are a number of members who would yet like to speak. Perhaps the House will allow me to move the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

THE EASTER ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. FIELDING. The House on Thursday last passed a resolution that when the House should adjourn on Wednesday, the 15th, it should stand adjourned until the following Tuesday. If we followed that resolution, the House would sit to-morrow, and at the close of sitting, the Easter recess would begin. But during to-day's sitting several hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House have expressed a desire that we should not meet to-morrow, which is a short day, as a good many desire to go by the early trains so that at the best we would have a slim House and a short day. Anticipating that in responding to that suggestion we shall meet the wishes on both sides of the House, I would now move :

That the resolution of Thursday, April 9, respecting the adjournment of the House on Wednesday the 15th be rescinded.

Mr. SPEAKER. I understand that this is being presented with the unanimous consent of the House.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. FIELDING. I would now move :

That when the House adjourns this day, it stands adjourned until Tuesday the 21st instant.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. FIELDING moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. SPROULE. What business will be taken up on the day the House resumes ?

Mr. FIELDING. It was anticipated that we would proceed immediately with this debate ; but an intimation has been given by hon. gentlemen opposite that it may suit the convenience of the House that on Tuesday, when the House resumes, we take up some routine business and let the debate stand over to the following day. In the absence of the Prime Minister I would not wish to make any definite arrangement ; but we hope to arrange accordingly.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 11.58 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, April 21, 1908.

The DEPUTY SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. RALPH SMITH moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 157) to amend the Railway Act.

Mr. G. H McINTYRE.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Explain.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. The object of this Bill is to provide for an 8 hour day for despatchers and operators on the railways of Canada. This matter was put into my hands by the parliamentary representative of the railway men. but too late for anything to be done this session, as I informed them. This class of railway men in this country are prompted to seek legislation of this kind for the reason that the United States Congress has passed a law which came into force on the 1st day of this month, providing a 9 hour day for despatchers and telegraphers. They regard this legislation as important to secure the safety of employees and travellers upon railways by limiting the hours of service of employees. I am strongly in favour of this legislation and am sorry it cannot be passed this session.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

THE NATIONAL TRANSCONTINENTAL RAILWAY.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. On the orders of the day being called, I would like to ask the government whether their attention has been directed to a statement in the public press that Major Hodgins, formerly engineer on the eastern division of the National Transcontinental Railway, has charged the making of improper classifications on that division, and whether the government propose to make any investigation of the matter in detail ?

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). Upon reading this morning the correspondence to which my hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) has just alluded I at once telephoned to the chairman of the commission, Mr. Parent, to ascertain if he had read it also ; but, I was told that Mr. Parent was out of the city to-day. I shall communicate with him as soon as he comes back.

ANGLO-AMERICAN TREATY.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would like to inquire also when it may be expected that the treaty which has been communicated, as I understand, to the Senate of the United States of America will be laid on the table of parliament.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I must inform my hon. friend that up to the present time we have not received that treaty which, I presume, has been communicated to the American Senate in conformity with the constitution of the United States for the concurrence of the Senate with the consent of the president. I may say to my hon. friend that I caused a telegram to be sent this morning to the British embassy to have this treaty forwarded as soon as possible.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY—CIVIC ELECTIONS IN HALIFAX.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Graham) whether any intimation has been given by the officers of his department directly or indirectly to the employees of the Intercolonial Railway at Halifax as to how they should vote at the approaching civic elections. The statement has come to me that certain officers of the government are giving directions to the employees. I desire to know whether it is or is not the policy of the government that the employees of that road should be permitted to vote exactly as they desire to vote without any intimidation or influence whatever by the officers of the railway or of the government.

Mr. GRAHAM. That is the first intimamation that I have had that the employees of the Intercolonial Railway were being interfered with in any way or by any person on behalf of any candidate. The position of the government is that every employee of the Intercolonial Railway shall exercise his rights of citizenship without interference from anybody.

INVESTIGATION OF DEPARTMENT OF MARINE AND FISHERIES.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would like also to inquire whether counsel have been appointed, as stated in the public press, in connection with the investigation which is to be carried on by Mr. Justice Cassels, who are the counsel, whom do they represent and whether any counsel are to be appointed for the purpose of representing Messrs. Courtney, Fyshe and Bazin, whose report seems to be under review by the investigation now proposed by the government.

Mr. BRODEUR. I may say, in answer to my hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden), that Mr. Geo. Watson, K.C., and Mr. J. L. Perron, K.C., have been appointed to assist Mr. Justice Cassels in the investigation. I had an interview some time ago with Mr. Justice Cassels, and he expressed a desire that some lawyers should assist him to carry out the investigation.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Have they been appointed at the request of Mr. Justice Cassels ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes, he intimated to me that it was desirable that counsel should be there.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. These particular gentlemen were not suggested ?

Mr. BRODEUR. No, no particular names were suggested to me. I do not know but that perhaps the name of Mr. Watson was suggested.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The minister did not answer a part of my question which was as to the appointment of counsel to represent Messrs. Courtney, Fyshe and Bazin as their report seems to be under review in this proposed investigation.

Mr. BRODEUR. No, I do not think that their report is under review in this case or that their report will have to be particularly investigated except that they have made some representations in their report and the investigation will be based upon those representations.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Possibly I may have misread the order in council. I will take it up again at a time when it can be discussed.

MARINE AND FISHERIES DEPARTMENT—OFFICERS SUSPENDED.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would like to inquire also what is the present status of the three officers of the Department of Marine and Fisheries who have been suspended. Are they still under suspension and is their fate dependent upon the investigation which is to be made by Mr. Justice Cassels, or is it dependent upon some investigation which is being made by the minister himself, or, if not dependent upon either one or the other of these tribunals or investigations, what is the attitude of the government in regard to the matter ?

Mr. BRODEUR. The order of suspension respecting one of them has been removed.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Which one ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Mr. Owen, who was suspended long before the report of the Civil Service Commission was brought down. The two others are under suspension for the reason given the other day.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The minister has not answered my question as to whether or not their fate is to be determined by the investigation before Mr. Justice Cassels or is it to be determined by the investigation, which I understand, is being made by the minister himself.

Mr. BRODEUR. I have not come to any decision in regard to that yet.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is still open ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is the investigation to be made by Mr. Justice Cassels to be an investigation with open doors or closed doors ? Is it to be a public investigation ?

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not know. It is a matter for the judge to decide. I have not discussed this question with him.

Mr. BERGERON. The Minister of Marine has answered that Mr. Owen was relieved on suspension. Are we to understand by that, that he has been discharged, or that he has been granted his pension, or, that he has been taken back to the department. What is the meaning of that answer?

Mr. BRODEUR. He has applied for leave of absence.

Mr. BERGERON. What does that mean?

Mr. BRODEUR. He has applied for leave of absence and he is not coming to the department now.

Mr. BERGERON. Does that mean that he is going to be discharged, or superannuated, or taken back to the department when his leave of absence expires ?

Mr. BRODEUR. He has applied for leave of absence and has asked for his superannuation.

Mr. J. D. REID. Is it not a fact that an order in council has already been passed granting his superannuation ?

Mr. BRODEUR. No.

Mr. BENNETT. Has a recommendation been made ?

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would like to call the attention of the government to certain returns which I moved for some time ago and which have not yet been brought down. They are as follows :

Moved for.	Votes and Proceedings, page.
Quebec bridge, December 12.. ..	56
Naval station at Esquimalt, January 13..	94
Wharfs, &c., January 13..	94
Public buildings, January 13.. ..	95
Metlakatla and Songhees Indian Reserves, March 23..	350

I would like to have the returns expedited.

DOUKHOBOR PRISONERS AT FORT WILLIAM.

Mr. R. S. LAKE (Qu'Appelle). Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the government a question with regard to an intimation in the Montreal 'Gazette' of this morning in connection with the Doukhobors at Fort William, which is as follows :—

Magistrate Palling, of Fort William, who passed the Central Prison sentence upon the nineteen who are now in jail, received a telegram from A. Power, Deputy Minister of Justice at Ottawa, asking him to recommend a pardon preparatory to their being taken back to Saskatchewan. Mr. Palling will agree to whatever arrangements are made by the Ontario or Ottawa governments and will recommend the pardon. The following are the telegrams which were received by the magistrate, the second being received before he had time to answer the first:

The Minister of Justice requests that you will be good enough to send immediately report upon case of ten male and nine female Doukhobors committed by you to Port Arthur jail.

Please report pardon for Doukhobors now in Port Arthur jail preparatory to their being shipped back to Saskatchewan, where they came from.

I would like to ask whether the statement regarding the telegrams is substantially correct and whether it is true that the government have pardoned or contemplate pardoning these male and female prisoners who have been sentenced for a grave offence against public decency. If it is true that they intend to pardon these prisoners——

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman can merely put a question ; that is all.

Mr. LAKE. I thought I was putting a question.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. No argument must take place.

Mr. LAKE. Is it true that they contemplate sending these people to the province of Saskatchewan ; if so, on what grounds, under what authority and at whose expense will they be sent ? Will they undertake the responsibility for the good behaviour of these people in the province of Saskatchewan if they send them there, and all expenses in connection with them should they again misbehave?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. This is rather an involved question, and my hon. friend had better give notice in the regular way. As to giving bonds for the good behaviour of these people, I am afraid that is more than we can undertake to do.

Mr. LAKE. Can I ask one question; Under what authority do the government propose to send these people back to the province of Saskatchewan?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. If my hon. friend puts his question in due course I shall give him the answer also in due course.

MR. WATSON, K.C.

Mr. W. B. NORTHRUP (East Hastings). May I ask if Mr. Watson, K.C., who has been appointed to assist Mr. Justice Cassels in the Marine Department investigation, is the same Mr. Watson who a few years ago acted as counsel before a commission appointed to investigate a provincial election in the riding of West Elgin in the province of Ontario?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). I do not know anything about that.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. You never heard about it?

Mr. NORTHRUP. The Minister of Marine is the one man in the Dominion who does not know about it.

BRITISH COLUMBIA FISHERIES.

Mr. RALPH SMITH (Nanaimo). Before the orders of the day are called I draw the attention of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to an item in this morning's issue of the 'Citizen,' and I wish to ask the minister if he has any information to give in connection with it. The item is as follows:

Province takes charge—Legal clash imminent between British Columbia and Ottawa.

Vancouver, British Columbia, April 20.—Attorney General Bowser announces that the conferences with Mr. Bastedo, sent here by the Dominion government to adjust the fishery differences with the province, have proved fruitless. The provincial government, therefore, will take charge of the fisheries under the decision of the Privy Council and a legal clash with the Dominion is immediately expected. The Dominion government proposed, a short time ago, that the province should relinquish its interests in the fisheries to the Dominion, the latter to pass all regulations and not pay the alleged share of the province in the revenue under the agreement made seven years ago, the Dominion to recoup the province for its expenditures in the hatcheries, &c.

Mr. Bowser declined to agree to this and insisted that before a settlement could be considered, payment should be made of the alleged share of the revenue due to the province. Mr. Bowser also wanted a local joint administrative board appointed, with one provincial nominee, and, third, that more consideration be given to halibut.

The Victoria government will immediately enforce its jurisdiction by issuance of licenses to fishermen, five dollars to each boat, good to the entire province.

The present Dominion regulations provided licenses of $11 per boat and good only on the river on which it is issued, the open season on the Fraser to be July 9 to August 5, with closed season August 5 to September 15.

Mr. Bowser says the salmon industry is in great danger of depletion. In the last nine years there has been a steady depletion in the salmon run, ranging from 22 to 59 per cent. Mr. Bowser added: 'Of course, from now on the modus vivendi hitherto existing between the Dominion government and ourselves will be terminated, and we expect that the moneys collected from the source of license fees will hardly be sufficient for the work we propose to do in the way of properly maintaining our fisheries.

Can the minister inform us if the facts are as represented here?

Mr. BRODEUR. Mr. Bastedo arrived in Ottawa this morning and he has reported orally the result of the different conferences with the representatives of the British Columbia government. He has discussed with me some claims which have been made by the British Columbia government, and these are now receiving the consideration of the government.

GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC CONSTRUCTION—ACCIDENTS.

Mr. O. E. TALBOT (Bellechasse). I wish to draw the attention of the government to a great disaster which has taken place in my county in connection with the construction of the Grand Trunk Transcontinental Railway, and by which nine men have been killed and three seriously injured. Is it the intention of the government to give instructions to the commission in charge of the construction of the Transcontinental Railway that measures should be taken to prevent further disasters of that kind?

Hon. G. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals). This matter was discussed in the House the other day, and I have asked for certain information. I have been told that taking into consideration the number of yards of rock being excavated the accidents on the Transcontinental Railway are less than on any other road ever constructed on this continent.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The number of yards of rock that have been taken out or that are to be taken out. The minister's statement is equivocal.

Mr. GRAHAM. It is not equivocal to any one who does not wish to make it so. What I stated was, that taking the number of yards of rock already excavated the number of accidents have been less than on any road on this continent. I look upon this as a very serious matter and as well worthy the close attention of the government, and I am seeking further information. As I understand it, the accident referred to by my hon. friend (Mr. Talbot) was caused by a premature explosion. In discussing this matter with railway men and others of experience I find that their conclusion is that these accidents are largely due to the carelessness of the men who become so accustomed to that class of work that they neglect to take precautions. The difficulty about this sort of accident is that the witnesses from whom we might get evidence as to the cause of the accident are unfortunately killed. The matter is a serious one, and it is not being overlooked.

ENGLISH AND FRENCH ORDER PAPERS.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). Some time ago I drew attention to certain irregularities which appeared on the Order Paper, and Mr. Speaker in a casual way said it would be looked into and that the Order Paper would be made right and kept right. I see that exactly the same blunders are repeated in the Order Paper of to-day. I notice under the public Bills and orders, that the French version follows rule 28 and puts the items down in the natural order, but according to the English version the first order (No. 26) should really be the third order, the second order (No. 22) should really be the first order, and order (No. 30) away down on the order paper, should be the second order. The rule appears to me to be plain enough to get it right. The first order should be: House in committee on Bill (No. 18) An Act to amend the Railway Act (reported as amended). That should be the first order because it is House in committee on an Act to amend the Railway Act as amended. When Bills are amended they should come first after Bills set down for third reading, and sometimes they come first on some order papers and in others they come second, and in others they come third. They ought to be in their regular order as they are taken up by the House. As I say, the second order should be the first because it is House in committee on Bill (No. 18) to amend the Railway Act (reported as amended). Then take the second order should be: House in committee on Bill (No. 4) An Act to amend the Railway Act (reported as amended). On the present order paper these Bills come after Bills which really should be after them. I notice that these errors are happening right along. I take up several of the order papers. In the Order Paper of March 6 I find this item :

Third reading of Bill No. 25, an Act respecting the Hamilton Radial Electric Railway Company.

The fact is that the Bill did not stand for the third reading, but there was an amendment moved by Mr. Clarke which should have been on the Order Paper, but does not appear there at all. If any one thinks that is not correct, all he has to do is to look at page 4690 of the unrevised 'Hansard', there he will find that a question arose as to whether it was the third reading of the Bill that was before the House or an amendment that had not been disposed of. The question was raised by Mr. Henderson. Mr. Graham said :

I think the discussion now is on an amendment proposed by the member for Toronto (Mr. Macdonell).

Further on, Mr. Brodeur said :

I see that on the 3rd of March it was proposed:

That the Bill (No. 25) an Act respecting the Hamilton Radial Electric Railway Company, be now read the third time.

Mr. Macdonell moved in amendment thereto, that the said Bill be not now read the third time, but that it be re-committed to a Committee of the Whole for the purpose of amending section 2 of the said Bill, as follows:

Giving the amendment:

And a debate arising thereon, and the hour devoted to private Bills under rule 25 having expired.

The House went into committee.

Mr. SPROULE

Although that amendment was not disposed of, the Bill was put down on the Order Paper as standing for a third reading. This is not regular and ought not to occur. There ought to be some conference, so that members would not be misled as they frequently are by the Order Paper. Again, I take up the Order Paper of March 9, and I see there this item under private Bills :

House in committee on Bill (No. 32) an Act to incorporate the Bank of Vancouver (reported as amended).

This Bill was not reported as amended, but it was reported as amalgamated with another Bill. Then I take up the Order Paper of March 19, and I find a government notice of motion appearing in this way :

In Committee of Ways and Means—the following proposed resolution.

A resolution to be considered in Committee of Ways and Means is never printed on the Order Paper, as it is considered only after the House goes into committee ; but in this case the resolution is printed in the Order Paper as an ordinary notice of motion. That is not in accordance with the rules at all, and is misleading to the House. Then I take up the Order Paper of April 9, and I find the following as item No. 3 :

House again in committee on Bill 135, an Act to amend the Immigration Act.

That should be the fourth order, and the fourth order should be the third order. In the Order Paper of Friday, April 10, I find exactly the same error as occurs in the Order Paper of to-day. It seems to me the Order Paper should be made in accordance with a fair interpretation of the rules, and not in a way to mislead the House and to cause our business to be carried on in an unseemly and improper way.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. My hon. friend called the attention of the House to this matter a few days ago. I cannot speak as to past errors, but so far as to-day's order is concerned, I understand that there is a variation between the French Order Paper and the English Order Paper.

Mr. SPROULE. Yes.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. For my part I am glad to know—and perhaps my hon. friend will share the pleasure—that it is the English Order Paper that is wrong and the French Order Paper that is right.

Mr. SPROULE. That is the case.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The proper officer will no doubt try to have the matter regulated properly for the future, and I shall be glad to second my hon. friend's efforts in seeing that the French have their rights respected in this House.

Mr. BERGERON. Mr. Speaker, the same matter was brought before the House by myself about four months ago, and the very same answer was made by my right hon. friend. When the question was brought up again the other day, my right hon. friend answered, I understand, that the matter was in the hands of the officers of the House, and the speaker said that he would see to it. There is only one way to have the Order Paper made correct, that is, to bring together the French officer in charge of the French paper and the English officer in charge of the English paper, and have them understand that one copy must be as correct as the other. In this case I understand that the French Order Paper is correct and the English Order Paper is not correct. The English paper could be made correct if it had to be translated from the French. I may say that some of the papers in the country took a very extraordinary view of the position taken by my hon. friend from East Gray (Mr. Sproule), chaffing him for appearing to be defending the French orders of the day. I need not say that he is defending not the French orders of the day, but the rules of the House, though he said with impartiality that the French Order Paper appeared to be right.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. We have no authority over this matter, but it is for Mr. Speaker to see that the proper officer attends to it.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN.

Mr. BENNETT. On the 13th inst., the Minister of Public Works promised to lay on the table on the following day, the 14th, the order in council and the report of the chief engineer relative to some contracts for dredging. It was not laid on the table on the 14th, but the minister promised to lay it on the table the next day. As however the House adjourned the next day, there was no opportunity for him to do so. I would ask him now if the report shall be placed on the table to-day together with the order in council or a copy.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I said I would lay the order on the table preparatory to a discussion which the hon. gentleman desired to undertake with regard to dredging. He went on with the discussion, however, without waiting until a copy was made. The hon. gentleman will also remember that I said that the question of extending the time for the completion of certain dredging works was under consideration. I said the order in council had been passed authorizing me to extend the time, if I so decided, but that I had not decided. Without waiting until I had announced my decision, the hon. gentleman precipitated a discussion. Since then I have decided not to extend the time for the completion of the works mentioned by the hon. gentleman and by myself, but have decided to ask for new tenders. Therefore it will not be necessary to submit the order in council. That order in council has in fact been rescinded.

Mr. BENNETT. How many works were to be embraced under that order in council ? I have some information by correspondence from various quarters since then, and I am advised that not only Victoria harbour and Midland but a dozen other works were embraced under this order in council.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The matter is entirely immaterial because the order has been rescinded.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not agree that it is immaterial, and as the minister has promised to bring the order down, he is bound to do so, and it will be wise for him to do so.

Mr. BENNETT. I have this to add——

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I cannot allow any debate on this question.

PROVINCE OF SASKATCHEWAN SCHOOL STATUTES.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE (Montmagny) I wish to move the adjournment of the House to discuss a question of great urgency. I refer to the Statutes of the province of Saskatchewan, 1907, Chapters 2 and 25, concerning which I put certain questions to the Minister of Justice on the 13th April and received certain replies.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. Lavergne) has put a statement in my hands, in compliance with rule 37 of our Rules and Orders. Section 4 of that rule provides that a member who desires to make a motion to adjourn for the purpose of discussing a matter of urgent public importance must hand a written statement to the Speaker who, if he thinks it in order, reads it out and asks whether the member has the leave of the House. I have some doubts as to whether this is a question of urgent public importance, and I would like the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lavergne) to state his reasons.

Mr. SAM HUGHES. What is the written statement he gave you ?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The written statement which the hon. gentleman put in my hands is as follows :

That it is urgent the adjournment of the House should be moved in order that the House may consider chapters 2 and 25 of the Saskatchewan statutes, 1907, and a certain declaration regarding the same made by the hon. the Minister of Justice on April 13 last.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. The Minister of Justice said that he would not have disallowed the statutes had they been brought to his notice, and the delay for disallowing expire to-morrow. There can therefore be no clearer case of urgency.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). I have very serious doubts that the matter is urgent since the House has been in session for four months and it could have been brought to our attention at any time. However I shall not press the point.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Has the hon. gentleman leave to move the adjournment of the House ? Those in favour will please rise.

And more than twenty having risen, the Speaker notified Mr. Lavergne to proceed.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. I am sorry to take up the time of the House at this stage of the session, but I shall be as brief as possible. I am sorry also that the government did not see fit to consent to a discussion of the question without any reservation. On the 13th of this month, I put the following questions to the government :

1. Is the government informed that chapters 2 and 25 of the statutes of the province of Saskatchewan, 1907, intituled, respectively, 'An Act for raising money on the credit of general revenue fund of Saskatchewan,' and 'An Act to provide for the organization and maintenance of secondary educational institutions,' contain provisions contrary to the educational clause of the law of Autonomy for the province of Saskatchewan, 1907?
2. Does the government know that the delay for the disavowal of these laws expires the 22nd April next?
3. Will the government disallow these statutes?

To this the hon. the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) replied as follows :

To question 1, no ; to question 2, yes ; to question 3, no.

I do not think that the Minister of Justice, in the whole course of his political career, was ever so clear or so brief. If I analyse these replies, I find that the government, in the first place, did not know whether these statutes were illegal or not, and, in the second place, would not in either event disallow them. These statutes might be ultra vires or intra vires, the province of Saskatchewan might have the right to pass them or not, this government would not take the trouble to inform itself and had no intention of disallowing them.

Mr. BERGERON. They did not care.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. That is what it amounts to practically. We have had the right hon. the first Minister of Justice telling us that these statutes had been passed a considerable time ago and had never been brought to the attention of parliament and that consequently there was no urgency. Well, I am not the Minister of Justice—and at times I am sorry for the minority in the House and the country—but the moment the matter was brought to my notice I took the trouble to look up the statutes and find out whether they were illegal or not. It seems to me rather strange that when a member of the Catholic minority, which comprises about 41 per cent of the total population of the Dominion, puts a question concerning the most sacred interests of that minority and even the rights of this parliament, which passed the law giving the province of Saskatchewan its autonomy, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) does not take the trouble to consider whether the statutes passed by that province are in contravention of that autonomy law and consequently should be disallowed. But on the other hand, if a province in the west thinks fit by statute to exclude from its own limits Asiatic immigration and determines to remain a white man's country, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) has no hesitation in disallowing any such law without waiting for any one to put him a question regarding it in parliament. More than that, the correspondence brought down with reference to the Japanese treaty shows that the government promised the Japanese consul that they would disallow the laws of British Columbia even before they were passed, when they had simply been mentioned in the speech from the Throne. Thus, the situation is that it has come to pass that 40 per cent of the Canadian nation are less in the estimation of the government than a few Japanese yellow citizens who are coming to this country against the will of a whole province.

Were these statutes ultra vires? Of course it is not my place to answer and I shall not attempt to give a definite answer; it would be for the Minister of Justice to state whether they were or not. He did not think it expedient to answer the question or necessary to examine the statutes; he was prepared to disallow them without even knowing what they contained. He will find that in this case a report has been made to the government of Saskatchewan more than six months ago and it appears that he reported to that government without even knowing what was contained in the statutes. As I have said I do not know, and I would not express a legal opinion as to whether these statutes are or are not illegal. I do know that when the statutes were passed and certain taxes were raised in Saskatchewan, a certain portion of the population, the Roman Catholic taxpayers, refused to pay the taxes imposed under chapter 2 and chapter 25 of the statutes of Saskatchewan. Cases were entered before the courts. The courts did not decide the cases, I think the election of the Attorney General of Saskatchewan took place before the cases were concluded and they were not pushed to a conclusion, somebody paying the fine which was asked from the Catholic taxpayers. Whether the fine was paid by the taxpayers or by friends of the government or by friends of the opposition I do not know and shall not say.

It is certain that, judging from what has taken place, the minority in Saskatchewan felt that these statutes were infringing on the rights granted to them by the constitution of 1907. If we look at the debate of 1905 on the Autonomy Bill of the Northwest in this House we will find at page 5984, May 15, 1905, the then Minister of Justice (Sir Charles Fitzpatrick) described the privileges left to the minority in the Northwest in this way:

1. Right of separation—by the ordinance—common to Protestants and Roman Catholics alike;
2. Half-hour religious instruction—by ordinance—to Protestants and Roman Catholics alike; common to public and separate schools.

He then goes on to describe the rights which are left to the separate schools and says :

4. Right to elect trustees, who choose the teacher—by ordinance; common to all schools.

It may be objected that the statutes passed by the Saskatchewan legislature concern especially secondary and not primary schools; but I have carefully examined the British North America Act and the statutes of interpretation and find nothing making a difference between schools for primary and for secondary education. By chapter 2 of the statutes it is provided that the population may be taxed for permanent public improvements authorized by the legislature, after the first day of September, 1905, and by chapter 25 of the statutes of Saskatchewan, we find among these improvements, high schools. The law at first sight appears to permit the high schools to be established without any separation and we see nothing there granting separation to the minority if it wishes it in a public district. You will see also that they have the right to choose all text books, which is contrary to the law of the Dominion passed in 1907. They have also the right to choose trustees and it is enacted that the population may be taxed for the maintenance of their high schools, even if they want to have a separate school of some other kind, and that no municipality can exempt them from those taxes.

Therefore I shall not say that the statutes are unconstitutional, but I may say that they have a strong flavour of being unconstitutional and contrary to the educational clause of the Act passed by this parliament in 1907. The least we should expect from the Minister of Justice was that before stating that he would not disallow these statutes he would have looked into them, would have had a report made upon them and have had the opinion of his officers as to their constitutionality. He said before the House that he would not disallow them even without looking at them; so it has come to this that in this country the Catholic minority is considered by the Department of Justice and this federal government to be less important than the yellow allies who come from the extreme orient. If this is the spirit which is to be maintained in our confederation, I may say that our confederation has seen its best days. It is time that the rights of the minority should be a little more respected and also that when there is some doubt about the rights of the minority or when those rights are placed in jeopardy, the Minister of Justice who is the natural guardian of the rights of minorities should take the trouble to glance over the country and see whether or not the laws of any province are against the rights of the minority, I care not if it is the Catholic minority of the other provinces, or the Protestant minority of the province of Quebec. A thorough examination of these statutes would be only common courtesy on the part of the government towards 41 per cent of the population of Canada. But it is more than that; it is a matter of the future prosperity of our country, because while it may not be the opinion of the entire province of Quebec now, it is the opinion of the entire youth of that province, of the men who are in the colleges and universities and who will come out from them to-morrow or the day after to-morrow. If the confederation is to go on in this way with a superior race and an inferior race, a superior religion and an inferior religion, confederation has seen its best days. The youth of our province are loyal to our confederation but they want it to be remembered in this parliament and in the country that they are a part of the confederation in the terms of equal partnership.

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH (Minister of Justice). I have to express my regret that my hon. friend who has just spoken (Mr. A. Lavergne) should have found in the answer which I gave last week to the question he put, anything of discourtesy or of too brief a nature in the circumstance that I answered in monosyllables. My hon. friend's question was propounded in the French language, and he translates it as inquiring whether or no the government is informed that the chapters of the statutes of the province of Saskatchewan to which he refers are contrary to the provisions of the Constitutional Act known as the Autonomy Bill. I cannot pretend to be acquainted with the niceties of the French language, or to be able to appreciate exactly the meaning of the French phrase in which the question is couched. I certainly understood it to be somewhat the equivalent of the English phrase, Is the government aware. I did not for a moment understand it as meaning, Has the government taken pains to inform itself. If the question had been put in the latter form, if the question had the meaning, Has the government endeavoured to ascertain, or, Has the government taken any means to find out or to inquire, I can assure my hon. friend that the answer would have been the very reverse of the monosyllable. No. Understanding the question to be, Does the government consider, or, Is the government aware that the statutes of the province to which reference was made, are ultra vires of the provincial legislature, or are contrary to the provisions of the Autonomy Bill, I answered, No, meaning exactly what I said, that the government was not aware that anything appearing in the provisions of the provincial statutes in question was in any way opposed to the provisions of the constitutional Act of the province. I disclaim therefore any sort of intention to give a short or curt answer to the very important question which my hon. friend propounded.

I can assure my hon. friend, and assure this House, regretting, Sir, that it should be necessary to do so, that the most careful consideration was given to both of the statutes to which he has now especially referred. So far from it being the fact that the government, or the Minister of Justice, disdained taking the trouble to inquire whether these statutes contained in them anything ultra vires of the legislature of the province, or anything contradictory to the constitution of that province, I can assure my hon. friend that the whole subject was one of anxious consideration. The report of the Minister of Justice upon the constitutionality of the statutes of the province of Saskatchewan was prepared and was adopted by His Excellency in Council some six months since. These statutes were received by the Secretary of State on the 22nd of April, 1907; the time for consideration of the question of disallowance or non-interference counts from the date of their receipt. To-day is, I take it, the very last day upon which action could be taken in the way of disallowance by His Excellency, if he were to be so advised. From the time when these statutes were received twelve months ago, knowing that any quesion of interference with the legislation of a provincial legislature was one of delicacy, was one of importance, these matters were under careful consideration. In October a conclusion was come to, and in October a report was made, no special reference appearing in that report one way or the other to the two particular chapters my hon. friend has singled out as possible objectionable.

Now when these statutes come themselves to be examined what do we find? My hon. friend has examined them from his standpoint, no doubt with the most anxious care. My hon. friend is himself an advocate, a professional man of distinction. He represents in this House the minority of which he is a member, and looking at these statutes with the critical eye which in these circumstances we must anticipate, he tells us to-day that he cannot say there is anything illegal in them, that the most he can say is that he considers they have a decided flavour of illegality about them. Well, Sir, I need not say to my hon. friend as a legal gentleman that statutes are not to be disallowed for a flavour, that statutes are not to be disallowed unless there is an actual illegality. Nay, speaking for myself, and entertaining the views I personally entertain upon the question of interference with provincial legislation by His Excellency in Council, I would almost go the length of saying that unless it could be clearly seen that in legislating upon a particular subject a provincial legislature had overstepped the limits of the jurisdiction which is conferred by section 92 of the British North America Act upon provincial legislatures, there ought not to be interference with their legislation by His Excellency in Council. It is perhaps not in accordance with precedents, it very probably is not in accordance with the views expressed by the fathers of confederation in their discussion of this question of disallowance, that there should not be any supervision over the Acts of provincial legislatures at the hands of the government of the Dominion in the way of considering 'the advisability, the propriety, or even if you like, the inherent justice or injustice of a particular measure. But, however that may be, certainly, considering statutes of the charter to which reference is made to-day, the only inquiry, I take it, for His Majestys' legal advisers to make is whether or not the province, in what its legislature has done, has overstepped its constitutional limits, or has legislated about a matter in regard to which the province has no authority to legislate at all. Now in that respect I can again assure my hon. friend that the most anxious consideration was given, not merely to the particular chapters of the volume of legislation from the legislature of Saskatchewan to which he has referred, but to every chapter and to every clause contained within the two covers of the bound book in which those statutes appear. That is of necessity, that is the very purpose for which a period of one year from the receipt of these statutes is given by the British North America Act, in which their validity falls to be considered by the advisers of the Crown in Canada. But in these cases I have simply to say that I reached precisely the same conclusion that my hon. friend has expressed when he said that he cannot say that there is any illegality about them. I cannot go with my hon. friend in the remainder of the opinion he has expressed, where he tells us that he thinks there is some flavour of illegality about them. I cannot detect even the flavour that he thinks he finds somewhere lurking about the provisions of these statutes. He has not explained wherein that flavour consists, and speaking for myself I certainly am not able to find its presence.

It perhaps is not advisable or desirable that there should be a discussion of those provisions in the circumstances which exist here to-day. It could serve no practical end that I am able to perceive. My hon. friend has, however, referred to chapter 2 of the statutes, an act for the taxation of every individual within the province, and because there is no express provision in that legislation with regard to the separate schools of the province, my hon. friend thinks, or if I understand him, inclines to the opinion, that there is some flavour of illegality about the measure. Surely it is not to be said that in every possible Act which the legislature of Saskatchewan or Alberta may pass there must always be a careful expression of the rights which are secured to the minority in these provinces in educational matters by the provisions of the Autonomy Bills. If I understand my hon. friend correctly he would think that no legislation which could be passed by the legislature of either of these provinces could have effect or could escape disallowance unless there was some special exception or provision made in it in regard to the educational clauses of the Autonomy Bill. These pieces of legislation must be read together. Effect is to be given to any legislation of the Dominion or of a province if effect can properly be given to it, if a meaning can properly be assigned to the language which has been used by the legislature, which meaning is not in conflict with the provisions of the law under which the power to legislate is conferred, and if this statute is susceptible of a meaning which will give full operation to its provisions without there being, of necessity, any conflict with the constitutional Act under which the legislature is passing the law, then the statute ought not to be disallowed and ought not to have any interference with it. It was in these views that the report was made which I have already alluded to and which, making no special reference to either of the two enactments which have been referred to, recommends that the statutes of the province shall be left to their legal operation.

Now, my hon. friend finds something wrong on the part of the Minister of Justice and of this government in what he assumes to have been the attitude of the government in regard to legislation of the legislature of British Columbia upon a most important question, and he said that promises had been given that it should be disallowed and that there had been undue haste in the disallowance of it, if I understood his observations correctly. Surely my hon. friend is entirely, for the moment, forgetting the fact that there has been no disallowance of the British Columbia legislation to which he refers, that it has been, by the courts of the province itself, declared to be beyond the power of the legislature of British Columbia and that it has not been interfered with in any way by His Excellency in Council.

Mr. A. LAVERGNE. Does my hon. friend say that no statute of British Columbia has been disallowed?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. It is, Mr. Speaker, upon the minutes, upon 'Hansard,' upon the records there, in answer to a question put by my hon. friend from Nanaimo (Mr. Smith), that in the course of the last ten or twelve years there have been no less than five statutes of the province of British Columbia disallowed, but I am answering to my hon. friend that there has been no disallowance of the statute to which he refers, a statute passed by the legislature of British Columbia within the last few months. On the contrary, that statute was the subject of proceedings in the courts of British Columbia and within the course of a few weeks after it had been assented to was held by the courts of British Columbia to be ultra vires the legislature which had passed it. Under these circumstances the illustration which my hon. friend has selected as the means of showing that there has not been, in his judgment, due attention paid to the interests of the highly important minority for which he purports to speak is, I think, an unfortunate illustration and is certainly one that has no application in so far as I am able to see.

My hon. friend accuses me, and I regret that he should think that there was any cause for the accusation, of some feeling, if I understood him correctly, of illiberality towards that ancient faith to which he gives adherence. Let me remind him that it is only a few days ago, that, across the floor of this House, as I saw next day by 'Hansard,' although I did not hear it at the time, I was accused, as if it were a reproach, that I too had been called a Roman Catholic. I think, under these circumstances, my hon. friend might have spared me the attack which he has made upon me personally and in respect to which I certainly am not aware that I have given to him or to any one the slightest cause.

Mr. J. G. H. BERGERON (Beauharnois). Mr. Speaker, I never thought that the position taken by some of us with regard to the Autonomy Bill a couple of years ago would be vindicated so soon. When the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) brought down the measure to grant autonomy to the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan there was, in the first instance, incorporated in that measure clause 16 which was in accordance with what we thought to be the constitution of the Northwest Territories as embodied in the statute of 1875, and which gave to the minority of these provinces entire autonomy and the rights and privileges to which they were entitled. But, for reasons best known to himself and which were disclosed to this House by the retirement of one minister and by the protest of another the right hon. gentleman brought down clause 16, No. 2, which was vague and which could produce no other result than that which we have before us now. There were some other hon. gentlemen who, taking a different position from the one that the right hon. gentleman took, or who did not entirely share his opinion, said that it was better to leave these new provinces free to do whatever they desired to do in the future. They were willing to grant these provinces autonomy, having entire confidence in the judgment which they should exercise in time to come. We, myself and others, who were of my opinion, and who were afraid to leave this question in the hands of the new generations coming into the west, expressed the opinion that it was dangerous and stuck more than ever to clause 16, No. 1, which was a repetition of the statute of 1875. Now, we have proof that the position which we took was the correct one. These things are done with a great deal of cuteness. This is the opening of the door to what will happen later on. The hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) knows very well that it is not a question as to whether it is legal or not. It is a question whether the legislatures of these provinces are acting in the spirit in which this parliament granted autonomy to them. Did we mean to say that the minority in these provinces should be entirely at the mercy of the majority? Did we mean to say that the minority in these provinces should have no power, no rights and no privileges? If we did the law passed by the legislature of Saskatchewan is legal, but it is not according to the spirit of the Autonomy Bill as expressed at the time by the majority in this House. Now, the ministers or the government who do act in that way have a very cunning way of going about it. When my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) and myself happened to be in the west the Liberal organs in the province of Quebec, which are not at all in partnership with truth, said that we had gone to Prince Albert for the sake of influencing the election at a time when the Attorney General of Saskatchewan was seeking election in that part of the province, I being a French Canadian and a Roman Catholic. It was known to those who wanted to know the truth, that there was nothing in that statement. It had been decided weeks and weeks before it was known that there was to be an election that we should have a meeting at Prince Albert on Saturday night. In the meantime the election was announced. The election was on the very same day we were to have our meeting and our friends, without our knowledge, decided that it would be better to have the meeting the night before so as not to interfere with the election taking place next day. Instead of holding a meeting at Prince Albert on Saturday night we held the Prince Albert meeting on Friday night, and held a meeting at Rosthern on Saturday night. And, Sir, the man who at that time was defending what my hon. friend from Montmagny condemns to-day—and which I think is an act of infamy and a lack of good faith on the part of the Saskatchewan government towards the minority of that province—the man the Saskatchewan government had to defend that measure was a Roman Catholic and a French Canadian. Had we wanted to take any part in that election we could have done so, but we chose not to mention a word about the local election for we were there to discuss federal affairs and we spoke about nothing else but federal affairs. The election of Mr. Turgeon took place the next day. I saw a good many French Canadians on the evening of the meeting who were in favour of Mr. Turgeon because he was a Roman Catholic and a French Canadian. Men I knew intimately said to me: How can we vote against a man of our race and our religion; it is true he is championing what we are opposed to; we do not believe in Prime Minister Scott forcing the Roman Catholics of this province to contribute towards the support of schools to which we shall not be allowed to send our children, but how can we vote against one of ourselves, a Roman Catholic and a French Canadian? I neither answered yes nor no to that because had I spoken my own mind I certainly would have said something that would not please them. And, Sir, this is but the commencement of what is going to happen in Saskatchewan. When this government granted autonomy to the Northwest provinces they knew that thirty years before the minority in these provinces had been promised justice, and promised that they would have respected their rights and privileges in the matter of education. But to-day we have the Minister of Justice approving of a provincial law which will force the minority to pay taxes for schools to which they will not send their children. Is that what the right hon. Prime Minister had in his mind when he changed the first clause, No. 16, for the second clause, No. 16. That was what was probably in the mind of the member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton) and in the mind of the Minister of Finance, but surely the Prime Minister did not contemplate that. And when the delegate who represents the highest authority of the church accepted the second clause 16 was he told that before a year the government of Saskatchewan was going to give the lie to all the promises which had been made to him, and the minority would be forced to contribute towards the building of schools which their children would not be allowed to attend?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Are we to understand from the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bergeron) that the amended clause No. 16 had to be submitted to the delegate of Rome before it could be passed by the Canadian government?

Mr. BERGERON. I will tell my hon. friend this, and with his usual intelligence he can draw his own conclusions; I can tell him that when it was decided to substitute the present clause 16 for the original clause 16 it was explained to the delegate. My hon. friend (Mr. Hughes) can draw all the conclusions he wants from that. My hon. friend from Montmagny (Mr. Lavergne) appears to be surprised at all this but I can tell him that I am not a bit surprised. The party which prevented the minority in Manitoba from having their legal rights and privileges could not be expected to give justice to the provinces of the west. It is a most extraordinary thing that when the Manitoba Remedial Bill was before parliament the right hon. gentleman and all his followers from Quebec except seven of them, voted to prevent the Manitoba minority from getting their rights—I am not speaking about privileges now but their legal constitutional rights. And when the question was before the Manitoba legislature and when Mr. Roblin, the present premier of Manitoba, voted against the member for Lisgar (Mr. Greenway) who was then Prime Minister, and the member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton) and Mr. Joseph Martin who were taking away from the Manitoba minority their rights and privileges as Roman Catholics and abolishing the use of the French language; when Mr. Roblin told these men that they were stealing from the Manitoba Catholics to act in such a way; when Mr. Roblin, a Protestant, took that course, nearly all the Roman Catholics in the legislature were against him and supported Mr. Greenway. It was a most extraordinary state of things and I direct the attention of my hon. friend from Montmagny to it. It was history repeating itself. It was like the settlement of the New Brunswick school question, when men were fighting there for their very existence and when high dignitaries of the church were accepting the half measure of Mr. Mackenzie. I will tell my hon. friend (Mr. Armand Lavergne) more than that: In Manitoba today, where the Prime Minister of that province, a Conservative, is trying to be as kind as he can to the minority without transgressing the law, does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lavergne) know that it is Roman Catholics of Winnipeg who go over to the Manitoba 'Free Press' and say: Why don't you write against Roblin because he is transgressing the law and allowing the Roman Catholics more privileges than they should have? It is French Canadians and Roman Catholics who are acting like that today. It is a most extraordinary state of things and I direct the attention of my hon. friend from Montmagny to it. The hon. gentleman is astonished but he will see a great deal more than that probably before very long. I want to say one word more. I want to tell the right hon. gentleman that this kind of thing has gone on for some time and that it may go on for some time longer but it will not go on for ever. Just fancy what occurred in this House in 1895 and 1896 in connection with the Manitoba Remedial Bill when a majority of Protestants and Orangemen in this parliament were voting to give their rights to the Catholic minority in Manitoba, and when the Roman Catholics in this House were voting against that measure. That kind of thing cannot last very long. A time will come when these people will discover the insincerity of those men who go to them and say: We are your friends, we think like you, don't you think we will do more for you than will the people over there who are Protestants and Orangemen. A time will come when there will be a stop put to that, and then I fear for the result. I am very glad that my hon. friend from Montmagny has brought this question before the House. It is a matter to which the attention of the public should be called, but the hon. gentleman will find that he will not get much thanks from certain quarters.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It is not the first time in this House or out of it that I have seen a Roman Catholic trying to be more Catholic than the Pope, and we have just had an instance of that from my hon. friend from Beauharnois. It is not the first time he has raised discussions of this kind, and that he has availed of every convenient opportunity to say something calculated to spread the very sentiments which he attributes to others. The hon. gentleman tells us that he was in Prince Albert during a certain election and for a certain purpose, and that a meeting which he was to address along with the leader of the opposition and which was to come off on the day of the election at which Mr. Turgeon was running as attorney general for the province, was postponed; not, mind you, till the day after that election but to the day before the election. Of course, the meeting could not take place on the very day of the election, and so it was transferred to the day before election, because it might interfere with polling, which would have been completed two hours before the meeting was held, and so it was transferred to the day before the elections. It could not be postponed till the day after the election, and so in order not to arouse those Roman Catholic prejudicies which he deprecates, or those Protestant prejudicies which he also deprecates, he had his meeting put off till the day before the election. If my hon. friend thinks this is not too thin, he is very much mistaken. He says that co-religionists of his and of mine told him that they could not vote against Mr. Turgeon because he was a Roman Catholic, but they deprecated the legislation now under review. I take his word, but will my hon. friend permit me to tell him that if there were Roman Catholics in Prince Albert who entertained such sentiments as he now attributes to them, which he says were expressed by them to him, how is it that they proffered their complaint to him who could not do anything in the matter, while the government never heard a word of complaint from them ? My hon. friend says this legislation is a tyrannical invasion of the very rights which have been conferred by this parliament on the minority. That is his complaint. I have to say this to my hon. friend, that from the day this legislation was passed to the present time there has never come from the province of Saskatchewan to this government a single word of complaint against it. With all due deference to the great confidence which the minority repose in my hon. friend, I venture to believe that if they had been so oppressed as he says they were by that legislation, they would have thought proper to proffer that complaint, not to him, but to us. We are asked to disallow this legislation. If there were any substantial minority in the province of Saskatchewan to find fault with that legislation, I suppose they would have done what was done by the minority in Manitoba in 1891, in 1892, in 1893, in 1894, in 1895, when the party supported by my hon. friend was in office. That minority complained to the government and asked for disallowance. The minority in the province of Manitoba had a grievance, and they brought that grievance before the parties who could remedy it. But the minority in Saskatchewan have not asked for the disallowance of this legislation. Under these circumstances I think that these men who went to my hon. friend and shed a tear on his bosom were very poorly advised. They could have done better than that on their own behalf if they had a grievance, a thing of which I have my own doubts. But my hon. friend tells us that this is the result of the measure we gave to the minority in 1905. My hon. friend remembers the legislation that we passed at that time. He knows that it was passed with his concurrence to a certain extent, but not with the concurrence of those who sit beside him. He knows that such questions are always involved in a great deal of difficulty. He knows that the Manitoba question, of which he spoke a few moments ago, was for five years before the government which he supported, and that they never dared in that time to come to a conclusion upon it, and he knows that when they undertook to give the minority a remedy, it was an illusory remedy. He knows that it is impossible to legislate on questions of this kind without arousing the prejudices, the honest prejudices, of either one section or the other. We did the best we could under the circumstances. We thought we gave the minority the legislation to which they were entitled. If I could have done more I would have done it, but I know this, that little as my hon. friend says we did, the minority in the province of Saskatchewan were duly thankful, and no one knows it better than the representatives of that province who sit in this House. Now, it is charged that the legislature of Saskatchewan has already violated the disposition of the statute which we then passed. If such be the feeling of the minority, which I do not believe, what would have taken place ? Before we could proceed on the lines my hon. friend suggests, we would have to consider this question : Is this legislation legal or illegal ? Is it an invasion of the rights of the minority or is it not ? Is it a violation of the dispositions contained in the Act of Saskatchewan or is it not ? Upon this question we have a division of authority. My hon. friend from Montmagny, who has looked into the question, says he cannot tell us whether the law is legal or illegal, whether it is intra vires or ultra vires of the legislature of Saskatchewan. My hon. friend the Minister of Justice, who is an authority on these questions, tells us that he has looked into this matter and he cannot find that the legislation is an invasion of the rights of the minority, and under such circumstances he would not advise disallowance. My hon. friend from Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron), who is more of a champion of the rights of the minority in these later days than he was in former day, tells us that we should disallow the Act, though the Minister of Justice expresses the opinion that there is no violation of the law. I would expect that the members from the province of Quebec would be chary, and very chary, about advising the government to disallow any Act as to the validity of which there may be even a doubt. We have taken the position, in the province of Quebec and in the province of Ontario, that disallowance is a power to be exercised very sparingly, and unless it can be shown that the Act is absolutely illegal, it should be left to the courts to determine, because the subject is too sacred a one to be lightly treated.

Mr. BERGERON. Mr. Speaker, may I be allowed to say a word.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. With the indulgence of the House.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Spoke.

Mr. BERGERON. I ask only with the permission of the House, but I shall have another chance of doing it, and I will do it better.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. If the hon. Minister of Justice had answered my question, which was put as plainly in French as I could make it, and had made only one-half the statement he has made this afternoon, probably this debate would not have taken place. What we might have expected from the Minister of Justice was that he would have said that the government were informed that the statutes were legal, and the debate would have ended there; or that the government were informed that the statutes were illegal and that he would look into the matter. It would have been less curt and less brutal to the minority. The minister knows that I am making no personal attack against him. I have simply taken his answer as he gave it, and it is not the first time he has answered my questions in that way. So long as the curtness of his replies merely reflected on my own personality, or indicated lack of personal regard for myself, I paid no heed to that fact, but when interests more important than my personal feelings are involved, I think it my duty to protest. The hon. minister has accused me of mis-statement when I said that this government had shown no scruple in disallowing statutes regarding immigration passed by the province of British Columbia, and he added that it was not the government but the courts that had disallowed the British Columbia statutes. Well, on the very same day I find this question put by the hon. member for Nanaimo (Mr. Ralph Smith):

What number of provincial Acts in all the provinces have been disallowed by the Dominion government since January, 1904, to January, 1908, and in what provinces respectively?

To this question the Minister of Justice replied:

Five; all Acts of British Columbia.

Two of these statutes were to regulate immigration into British Columbia, and these two statutes, with two others following relating to other matters, were re-enactments of statutes which had been previously disallowed and were disallowed again for the same reasons. The minister must admit therefore that I made no mis-statement of fact, and it is evident this government has been more anxious to disallow provincial statutes passed by a province which wanted to exclude undesirable immigration than disallow statutes which take away the rights of the minority. I would just say a word in reply to my hon. friend from Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron). I know that in this parliament we need not expect that any statute passed by any province will be disallowed out of respect for the rights of the minority. We have seen no such disallowance in the past, I care not under what government, and I do not expect any change in the future. I know therefore that my protest is useless. And as I am not Minister of Justice, I know that my opinion is not worth mentioning, but that opinion nevertheless is that these statutes of the province of Saskatchewan have a strong flavour of illegality, and if not disallowed, the government of that province will be able to tax the minority for schools in which they do not believe and make them pay for schools to which they will not send their children. That is likely to be the result of the autonomy law which was passed in 1907. It seemed to me that that law did protect the minority in that respect but it may not. I was in favour of clause 16, not as it was drafted by the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton), but as it was drafted by the then Minister of Justice (Sir Charles Fitzpatrick). Unfortunately however when the hon. member for Brandon resigned from the government on that question, the government took fright and allowed him to redraft the clause. I stood with six other members of this House in favour of the clause as first drawn, but the law as it now stands is an accomplished fact and we cannot undo it. My words therefore are useless, but nevertheless I thought it my duty to take the stand I have done, and I hope I can leave my case in safety in the hands of the English speaking majority of this House and country.

Motion to adjourn negatived.

CANNED GOODS ACT AMENDMENT.

Bill (No. 147) to repeal the Canned Goods Act.—Mr. Fisher—read the second time and House went into committee thereon.

On section 1,

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture). This is an old statute, passed twenty years ago, which has never been put into effect. It applies to all canned goods, whether sold in the province or not, whereas the Act we passed last year only applies to foreign and interprovincial trade. When we passed the Act of last year, we decided that it would be better to leave the local trade in the hands of the provincial authorities. As last year's Act deals with the matter, there is no reason why the previous Act should remain in our statutes.

Mr. BERGERON. But suppose the local authorities do not do their duty, you will expose the whole province to the danger of having canned goods sold, which are injurious to health.

Mr. FISHER. That point was thoroughly discussed last year, and parliament in its wisdom decided that it would be better for the Dominion not to undertake to deal with purely local trade. My hon. friend seems to intimate that we ought to hold the power to act in case the provincial or municipal authorities will not do so.

Mr. BERGERON. Yes.

Mr. FISHER. I am not disposed to agree with my hon. friend because if we hold the power the municipal or provincial authorities may take that as a reason for not themselves acting; whereas if we relieve ourselves of that duty, then the municipal and provincial authorities will have to act. It is almost impossible for a department of this government to deal with these purely local affairs and it is contrary to the general spirit of our constitution. There is no doubt as to the authority of municipal and provincial authorities to deal with these matters of public health and sanitary affairs, while eminent authorities have expressed doubt as to our power to do so. Unless it is absolutely necessary for us to undertake that work, I believe it will be better to leave it in the entire control of those as to whose authority there is no doubt. If we retain the power here to deal with these matters it affords the local and provincial authorities an excuse for their remissness, whereas if we have not the power it is clearly incumbent upon them to take action and the public will hold them responsible if they are remiss.

Mr. BERGERON. Have the provinces the organization and legislation necessary to carry on the work?

Mr. FISHER. They have the machinery in their health officers, market inspectors, &c. I cannot at the moment quote the exact scope of the provincial statutes, but they can, at any time, add to their statutes whatever provisions are required. The provisions of the Act concerning export and interprovincial trade are covered by the Canned Goods Act of last year and therefore there is no necessity for the existence of this Act, especially as the penalties imposed in it are much less than those under the Act of last year and some people maintain that they should be prosecuted under this Act and not under the Act of last year.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Why, for instance, is it necessary to repeal the section of this old statute requiring that every package of canned goods for local consumption must be stamped with the name and address of the packer?

Mr. FISHER. I have explained to my hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron) the reasons for doing this, that it was thought better to allow these matters of purely local trade to be left to the local authorities.

Mr. J. D. REID. After this Act is passed, exports will be subject to inspection?

Mr. FISHER. By the Act of last session.

Mr. J. D. REID. According to the Act of last year there was an inspection for interprovincial trade. Now under this Act is that inspection abandoned for local trade or interprovincial trade?

Mr. FISHER. No.

Mr. J. D. REID. For instance, goods manufactured in the province of Quebec and sold to a Montreal wholesale merchant, can they be distributed into other provinces?

Mr. FISHER. Subject to the Act of last session.

Mr. J. D. REID. As I understand it, if they are manufactured in that particular province they would not be subject to inspection?

Mr. FISHER. They are subject to inspection if they go out of the province.

Mr. J. D. REID. Therefore, local trade throughout the Dominion is practically without inspection?

Mr. FISHER. So far as we are concerned, yes.

Mr. J. D. REID. So far as the Dominion government is concerned. I do not see how the provincial governments can carry an inspection into force. For instance, to-day a person can ship an animal from the province of Ontario to the province of Quebec without inspection, and that animal may be diseased. Even if it is a dead animal they can ship it without inspection. For instance, any person in my own county can purchase dead hogs and ship them to Montreal without any inspection whatever.

Mr. FISHER. No, by the Act of last session that has been forbidden up to the present time. If it is not shipped to a packing house which has been declared to be under the operation of that law, it is forbidden.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not see anything in the other Act with regard to false marking the quantity or weight of the package.

Mr. FISHER. Section 17, subsection 3.

Mr. SPROULE. This all applies to exportations.

Mr. FISHER. The whole Act applies to exported articles.

Mr. SPROULE. Then the other would apply either to products for home consumption or to exports.

Mr. FISHER. If the hon. gentleman will read the Act 134, he will find that clause 3 says 'every package of canned goods, &c., in Canada for consumption therein.' It does not apply to exports.

Mr. SPROULE. Then it would apply to a product used for home consumption but not exported. Then if I understand it, chapter 27 does not provide any remedy for false marking the quantity of goods in any package when they are to be used for home consumption. That ought to be provided for also.

Mr. FISHER. I have already explained that so far as the local consumption is concerned, that would come within the purview of provincial or municipal authorities to deal with.

Mr. SPROULE. Don't you do it with regard to butter and cheese? We passed a law here some years ago concerning markings on cheese.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It seems to me the proposal of the minister is a departure from the policy which has been in force in this country for the last twenty years. This Act was obviously passed for the purpose of protecting public health, among other things. You find it in the revised statutes immediately following the statute which forbids adulteration. You might as well say that the Act respecting adulteration should only apply to articles for export. The minister shakes his head, but that does not settle the matter by any means. Now, why is it that the parliament of Canada, having jurisdiction over public health, should by this statute permit any person throughout the country, so far as this parliament can permit, to put up packages on which the date or the weight, or the quantity may be falsely stated? What particular inconvenience or detriment was the country suffering from the enforcement of this Act for the past twenty years?

Mr. FISHER. It has never been enforced.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That might be a very good reason for enforcing it, but it is not a very good reason for repealing it.

Mr. FISHER. I have explained it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The minister has explained it, but he has not explained it very satisfactorily to my mind. He says that this is a matter that might be dealt with by the provinces and that it had better be dealt with by the provincial or municipal authorities under provincial laws.

Mr. FISHER. For local purposes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. For local purposes. Is there any particular reason why this parliament, having jurisdiction over public health, should not enforce the provisions of this Act all over Canada? What is the particular reason against it?

Mr. FISHER. I am not quite sure that this parliament has jurisdiction over public health. That is a moot question.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Well, if it had no jurisdiction over the subject dealt with by this statute it has surely no jurisdiction as to the adulteration of food.

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What provision of the British North America Act would support the statute in regard to adulteration of food and would not support this?

Mr. FISHER. I cannot say offhand that there is any particular section defining it, but I can only reiterate the argument which was made here last year when the Act was passed that it was unwise for us to undertake local business which was clearly within the purview of the provincial or municipal authorities and which might not be within our powers. I can only say that it is possible that it is not within our powers. It may be within our powers. I am not altogether sure upon that point. There is a question as to whether it is within our powers whereas there is no question as to its being within the local powers. I therefore thought it was better not to undertake to enter upon a work that is clearly and definitely local and in regard to which possibly we might find ourselves without due authority, especially when, as I consider, it is better not to have a mixed authority in regard to any subject. It is better where a subject is clearly and definitely within the purview of one authority that the doubtful authority should not enter into that field.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What brings it definitely within provincial authority?

Mr. FISHER. There is no question about the provincial authorities being able to deal with market inspection, meat inspection and things of that kind in connection with the sale of foods. We all know perfectly well that every considerable municipality provides for the protection of the public health, that municipal authorities, under the provincial laws, have local health boards everywhere. There is a law in the various provinces giving authority to municipalities to provide for the inspection of foods sold within their respective limits.

Mr. SPROULE. But they have no power to analyse.

Mr. FISHER. They can analyse for the purpose of enforcing the law.

Mr. SPROULE. They certainly have no staff for that purpose. The Department of Inland Revenue makes an analysis of food in connection with the enforcement of the Adulteration of Foods Act.

Mr. FISHER. I know that in Montreal there is an analyst who is employed by the board of health of that city and whose special business it is to analyse foods sold there. He is regularly employed, I am inclined to think, on salary, but if not on salary, on fees. I used to know a gentleman who was engaged in that work. Dr. Girdwood was employed for years for that purpose. I know there is an analyst in the city of Toronto, although I cannot give his name.

Mr. SPROULE. That might apply to large cities, but it does not apply to rural districts generally. Under the Inspection of Foods Act, which was passed years ago, the country was divided into districts, and each district had its analyst to whom samples of food might be sent for analysis. The local authorities do not provide for the analysis of food as far as I know. We have here the weights and measures branch of the Department of Inland Revenue, so that the question of weights and measures must be controlled by us and the inspection must be made by the federal authorities. The Department of Inland Revenue make an analysis of food under the Adulteration of Foods Act to ascertain whether they are adulterated or not. The work in that respect is not duplicated by the provinces in so far as I know. It has always heretofore been understood that the adulteration of food was attended to by the Inland Revenue Department, that it looked after the adulteration of molasses, honey, butter and everything of that kind, and if you drop it here I am quite sure the provinces are not likely to take it up. They have not the machinery that we have to do it, and they are not likely to do it to the extent that the interest of the people requires.

Mr. FISHER. I have not been able to find any instance of the enforcement of this Act during the twenty years it has been on the statute-book. This matter has been attended to by the provinces.

Mr. LENNOX. How does this question arise at this time? We passed the law of last year dealing with the subject and I would like to know whether there have been any protests or representations from any of the local governments. This statute, as I understand it, has been in force for twenty years, and unless there have been some protests from some of the local governments it seems rather peculiar that this question should now arise at all.

Mr. FISHER. The way in which the question arose was that when we were undertaking to enforce the new Act there was some question as to whether the penalties provided by this Act or the penalties under the new Act of last year should apply. A question was raised as to the legality of the prosecution under the new Act. As we did not see that the old Act was of any benefit we thought it better to repeal it.

Mr. LENNOX. The question arose as to the legality of the new Act?

Mr. FISHER. Not as to the legality—I should not say that—but as to which Act the prosecution ought to be taken under.

Mr. SPROULE. Suppose that you had the Act under which you were attempting to prosecute, would you not lay the complaint under that statute? I would think that you would lay it under the statute that you were undertaking to enforce.

Mr. LANCASTER. In my opinion the very reasons given by the minister for repealing this Act would be the very best reasons for repealing, or improving the Act of last session and making it apply to the whole trade. Last session I had the temerity to say that the Bill ought to apply to the food that Canadians eat as well as to the food that is shipped out of the country for other people to eat. I have been confirmed in that opinion after having conversed with my constituents and with people in various parts of the country since then and I am bound to warn the minister here, in so far as my humble opinion may be regarded as any warning, that if it is a wise thing, notwithstanding what he says about mixed jurisdictions, for this government to interfere, I think it should interfere in regard to all food and not limit it to the food consumed by a certain class of people. While my hon. friend's inspectors, under the Act of last year are doing their work, while they are seeing that these marks are upon packages of food which are intended for the export trade and while they are condemning food that they find not up to the standard for export, why should this Act not provide that the condemned food shall not be eaten by Canadians? What province is going to create a civil war because the Dominion government should undertake to protect the lives and the health of the people of that province? I believe the Dominion government should do all within its power to guarantee the purity of the food we eat, but, if the Minister of Agriculture is going to say that food for export shall be pure and shall be condemned if it is not pure, why should he be afraid of offending any province by saying that the food which is eaten locally shall also be pure? I have not even a remote idea that any province would raise a question of provincial rights under such circumstances as that. If the Act is not applicable to the conditions it is intended to remedy it ought to be repealed, but if by repealing it you are going to remove the only protection we have to the lives and health of Canadians, then I would certainly be against its repeal. In my opinion the provisions of this measure should apply to the province in which the goods are produced as well as to other provinces or to foreign countries.

Mr. J. D. REID. It is a new thing for the Minister of Agriculture to be so anxious about provincial rights, and I am rather surprised at his anxiety in this case. This is a most important measure and this parliament should do all it can to improve the food products of this country. The minister has not yet been able to show that any provincial government has complained because the federal government is applying this law to all the provinces, and until there is such a complaint I think we should assume that we have power to take measures for the protection of the health and the lives of our people. Under existing circumstances hogs can be shipped for export to Montreal and if an animal is found diseased his export is prevented, but it can be disposed of locally and given as food to the working people of that city. In the same way the unhealthy organs of an animal are taken out and while the meat would not be allowed to be exported, it can be shipped to Montreal, Toronto and other centres and disposed of there. The Minister of Agriculture knows that in repealing this law he is taking a retrograde step, and I am surprised he should propose to parliament any such measure. The hon. gentleman tells us that a judge cannot tell under which Act he is to impose a penalty, but if there is any doubt as to the jurisdiction of the court it would be a sensible thing for the minister to propose an amendment to the law which would make it plain.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. While the government seems to have one policy with regard to canned food they have an entirely different policy with regard to drugs, because Bill 146, which has been introduced by the Minister of Inland Revenue, contains provisions of exactly the same character as those which the present Bill proposes to repeal. Section 4 of the Inland Revenue Bill says:

All proprietary or patent medicines shall be put up in packages and bottles and every one of them intended for sale or distribution in Canada shall have placed upon it in conspicuous characters forming an inseparable part of the general label the name and number under which the medicine is registered and also the manufacturer's name and address.

Section 7 says:

No proprietary or patent medicine can be manufactured, imported, exposed, sold or offered for sale when it contains any drug which is included under schedule A of this Act and the name of which is not conspicuously printed on the label.

I cannot see any distinction in principle between the provisions now proposed to be repealed and the provisions in chapter 134, Revised Statutes of Canada, 1906. The minister says there is some doubt as to our power to legislate as to public health. Wherein is the power contained which enables us to legislate with regard to the adulteration of food; wherein is the power to be found which enables us to legislate respecting proprietary and patent medicines?

Mr. FISHER. I will explain, in answer to the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster) I may say, that last session we fully discussed the application of the Bill not only to local but to export matters. I want to take straight issue with my hon. friend (Mr. Lancaster) upon one point. I am sorry he is not in the House, he said what he had to say and then goes away evidently not taking enough interest in the discussion to follow it up.

Mr. LENNOX. He may have a reason for leaving the chamber.

Mr. FISHER. He may be back. I do not think it is the duty of this parliament to supplement or implement the duties of another legislature. I grant that if it is the duty of this parliament to look after the public health, we ought to perform that duty; but I do not think this parliament is called on to do or ought to do what it is the duty of the local legislatures to do; and if the local legislatures are remiss in the performance of their duties, that is not a reason why this parliament should step in and perform those duties. I take direct issue with the hon. gentleman on that point. This parliament would be committing a wrong if it overstepped the bounds of its duty and did what the local legislatures ought to do and are remiss in doing. The local legislatures are simply shirking the question, and the people should hold them to their duty and not call upon another legislature to do that which is no part of its duty. Last session it was clearly understood and discussed, and I think unanimously decided by parliament, that as the provincial legislatures, through their municipal Acts and their health Acts, had full power to deal with these subjects so far as they related to trade within the province, this parliament would not legislate upon them in that respect.

Mr. CROCKET. I would like to ask the minister if he holds that this parliament has not the power to pass such legislation?

Mr. FISHER. No, I do not hold it. I have said, however, that a doubt has been raised on that point.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Who has raised it?

Mr. FISHER. A number of lawyers.

Mr. CROCKET. Has the opinion of the Minister of Justice been sought on this matter?

Mr. FISHER. The Minister of Justice said he was not prepared to say positively that we had not the power, but he said that there was a doubt as to our power.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If there is a doubt about it, it seems to me that there is a similar doubt about the Adulteration Act.

Mr. FISHER. I do not think so, because that Act applies to commerce all over the country, both that Act and the Act respecting proprietary medicines. These relate to subjects of general commerce in the country, which are not subject to local restrictions or police regulations.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The minister is entirely mistaken, as I will show him in a moment.

Mr. FISHER. I would like to point out what I think is the difference. The restrictions in the Adulteration of Foods Act and the Patent Medicines Act are not confined to any particular locality, but apply to general trade in the country everywhere. The Act passed last session applies to all trade which is not within a province—to interprovincial trade and to export trade; because the provincial and local authorities could not deal with these. But the provincial and local authorities can deal with transactions which are entirely within one province or one locality, therefore it is not necessary for this parliament to deal with them, and I think it is better that we should not do so. Where the provincial legislature can deal with the inspection and sale of food in a locality or within the bounds of the province, I contend that it is the duty of the provincial legislature to deal with it, and if it is their duty, it is not wise for us to step in and do what the provincial legislature is called on by the constitution of the country to do.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The minister has absolutely convinced me that there is not the slightest ground in anything he has said for the repeal of this Act.

Mr. FISHER. I was not discussing that now.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I admit that the minister has confused two things; he has confused the jurisdiction to pass the Act with the expediency or the necessity of continuing it. I will deal in the first place with the question of jurisdiction, which he has explained not to my satisfaction, but in a way absolutely contrary to the position he has taken. He justifies the jurisdiction of parliament to pass the Adulteration Act and the Act respecting Patent Medicines on the ground that these extend to trade and commerce all over Canada. The Act which he is repealing does precisely the same thing, and therefore he has argued most convincingly that this parliament has absolute power to pass the Act respecting Canned Goods. Therefore his suggestion that parliament has not jurisdiction to pass it falls completely to the ground.

Mr. FISHER. My hon. friend has not understood me at all.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think I have understood the hon. gentleman a little too well. Let us take up the other argument. Let us not confuse two things; jurisdiction is one thing, the advisability or expediency of passing a statute is another. I find no words in the British North America Act which enables parliament to pass the Adulteration Act or the Act respecting Patent Medicines which would not also enable parliament to pass the Act respecting Canned Goods. Let us now come to the question of expediency. The minister says parliament has no duty in respect of this particular matter because it can be dealt with better by the provinces who will enable the particular municipalities to pass by-laws regarding it. In that connection let me point out that the words in section 92 of the British North America Act 'Municipal institutions,' do not go quite so far probably in the direction the hon. minister suggests as he may imagine. There have been pronouncements of the Privy Council on the construction of those particular works. I find, in the Adulteration of Food Act, that you may not offer milk for sale if a certain quantity of water has been added or certain constituents taken therefrom. How is it that milk is less a matter of local consumption than canned goods or why is it more the duty of parliament to legislate with regard to milk than canned goods? I can see no distinction. If any distinction be made, milk might be regarded as more of a local article than canned goods. So far as expediency is concerned, I can see no reason for eliminating the Act respecting canned goods from our statutes and leaving the Act respecting the adulteration of milk.

Mr. FISHER. The Act of last session covers everything except the local trade and it is only a question of the previous Act remaining on the statutes for the purposes of the local trade. Under the Act of last session we are required to have inspectors wherever the goods to which that Act applies are produced in Canada and sent out from one province to another or to foreign countries.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is the difference between that Act and the Adulteration Act or the Act regarding Patent Medicines?

Mr. FISHER. The difference is this. The Act we passed last session regarding canned meats and canned goods requires that we should have inspectors wherever the goods to which the Act applies are produced in Canada and sent from one province to another or outside the country. The adulteration of Foods Act and the Patent medicines Act do not require a complete system of inspection. They are a good deal like the Fruit Marks Act in that respect.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is the hon. gentleman dealing with the question of jurisdiction or expediency?

Mr. FISHER. Expediency. The matter was dealt with last session from that standpoint. If we were required to undertake a very complete inspection of all canned meat goods, for local as well as interprovincial and export trade, we would be asking something practically impossible for a department of the Dominion government to do effectively.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Leaving the Act on the statute-book does not bring about any such results.

Mr. FISHER. If it remains, it is in direct conflict with the principle on which the Act of last session is intended to be administered.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not see how.

Mr. FISHER. To this extent The clear intent of the Act of last session is that the local trade is not to be dealt with.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The result of leaving the first Act on the statute-book is simply this. So far as the articles for interprovincial trade or export are concerned, you must have inspection. So far as concerns the articles for local consumption in the province, you would still have prohibition of false labels or statements.

Mr. FISHER. That Act has been on the statute-book some twenty years and has never been enforced, but when we began to enforce the new Act there seemed to be a clash or doubt, because the provisions of the new Act are different for the same kind of offence from those of the old Act. I do not think it matters very much whether it remains on the statutes or not, but it has never been enforced.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It ought to be.

Mr. FISHER. It provides no machinery for its enforcement. It would have to be amended and machinery created for its enforcement, and it would be impossible, unless the Dominion inspectors are to be increased infinitely, for them to undertake to do work which is purely local.

Mr. SPROULE. Then what need was there for clause 10 of the Adulteration of Foods Act which provides for the appointment by the Inland Revenue Department of local inspectors to examine articles of food in any city, township, county or other municipality, after they have passed an examination showing their competence to act as inspectors, on the nomination of the municipality? That is purely local and purely for the safety of health. The Adulteration of Foods Act defines clearly what shall be considered as adulteration.

Mr. FISHER. That is a question of adulteration, not of public health.

Mr. SPROULE. It is an Act respecting the adulteration of foods and other articles, it defines adulteration and provides for these inspectors all over the country. They are local inspectors, but that service is administered by the Inland Revenue Department.

Mr. FISHER. That is not for public health only but for trade and commerce, because they are deceiving the public in pretending to sell something which they are not selling.

Mr. SPROULE. But it is for public health, because it provides for the case of articles injurious to public health; it deals not with export trade but with public health. What does it mean by saying that vinegar shall be considered as adulterated if any mineral acid or vegetable salt having copper or lead as its base has been added thereto? That is adulteration because it is injurious to health.

Mr. FISHER. Partly.

Mr. SPROULE. That is the reason we take it up, we do not say anything about commerce.

Mr. FISHER. Oh, yes.

Mr. SPROULE. No, this is for public health. It is the same with regard to alcohol and milk. Milk to which water is added becomes adulterated.

Mr. FISHER. That is not health.

Mr. SPROULE. It is for the benefit of health.

Mr. FISHER. That is because you are being cheated.

Mr. SPROULE. If you are feeding children on milk represented to be pure which is not pure and you are destroying the health of the infant, because the milk is of less value——

Mr. FISHER. That is it, because it is of less value.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. So with canned goods improperly dated, the consumer is getting less value.

Mr. FISHER. No, it is a matter of trade and commerce.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. LAKE. The discussion on this Bill has included the Meat and Canned Foods Act passed last year. Before this Bill passes I wish to ask the Minister of Agriculture if he has made any special provision for such parts of the world as the northwestern provinces.

Mr. FISHER. As soon as this Bill passes I will ask the committee to take up the next Bill which deals with the Meat and Canned Foods Act. I will suggest that my hon. friend wait until that Bill comes up.

Mr. LENNOX. I think that if we are repealing this Act because we have not jurisdiction to deal with it in this parliament, we must repeal a great many other Acts standing in practically the same position. I understood the minister to say that one of the main reasons, if not the reason, for this Act is that a doubt had been expressed as to the jurisdiction of this parliament, and that the suggestion had been made that this was a matter which should be left within the exclusive control of provincial legislatures, so far as this Act that we now propose to repeal chapter 123 is concerned. I understand the minister to say that this Act had not been enforced as a matter of law, but that it was practically a dead letter. As to that I do not know ; I take it that the Minister of Agriculture has ascertained that to be a fact. But assuming that to be a fact, we must not shut our eyes to this other fact, that as soon as we repeal this Act there will be an intimation to all parties who have found this Act embarrassing, that they are no longer controlled by it as they were before. So we may expect that the evils that sections 3, 4, 5 and 6 were aimed at will probably prevail. I am not innocent enough to believe that the minister has not some reason for wanting to promote this legislation, and I am almost suspicious enough to believe that there are some motives for promoting this legislation that the minister has not seen fit, for reasons of state or otherwise, to divulge to the House.

Mr. FISHER. I have given all my reasons.

Mr. LENNOX. At all events, there is this peculiarity, that we find the minister, who is an astute and clever debater, resorting to arguments which, so far as I can see and as appears to many other members on this side of the House, are not borne out by the facts before us. I commend the minister on the position he has taken, and I suppose he stands alone in the cabinet in that regard, in realizing to some extent the proper limits of provincial rights. I would be glad if other members of the government were more pressed by the desirability of keeping strictly within the limits of our own jurisdiction. I agree with the minister when he says that the failure of a provincial legislature to exercise jurisdiction is no reason why we should usurp it and attempt to legislate. I am with the minister in another respect, that I think we have too much legislation. I am bound to say that the minister who is promoting this legislation is not the least guilty of the ministers in that regard. I often think that if there is anything in which he has conspicuously erred it is in having tried to spoon feed the farmers, and in interfering too much with private and domestic concerns, trying to legislate where no legislation is required. So in this view I am not at all sorry that he is repealing this Act, and I would be glad if he would sweep away a lot of other legislation that he has put upon the statute book recently. But this statute is an old statute of some twenty years standing, and while I agree with him that we are interfering far too much with provincial rights, yet when we have a statute in existence for some twenty years we ought to hesitate very much before repealing it. As regards the difference between this statute and others, such as the Adulteration of Foods Act, I am entirely unable to follow the minister in his reasoning. The Act chapter 144 is, so far as it goes, an Act that relates to every package of canned goods that is put up for consumption in Canada, not in any particular province or locality, or by any particular class of men. Misrepresentations relate to all misrepresentations in Canada. The Act is as general and as broad as Canada itself. When I turn to the statute immediately preceding that, the Adulteration of Foods Act, I find that it is also general in its character relating to questions of health and also relating to questions of trade and commerce. I quite agree with the minister when he says that not only does this Adulteration of Foods Act deal with questions of public health, but it also deals with questions of trade and commerce, with dealings between man and man and that it aims, in addition to protecting public health, at securing honest dealing between parties. So, we have this provision in section 23 :

> Milk from which the cream has been removed by skimming, or by a separator or creamer, may be sold as skim milk, if contained in cans bearing upon their exterior the word 'skimmed' in letters of not less than two inches in length.

Can the Minister of Agriculture point out how that provision is broader or more general in its nature than sections 3, 4, 5 and 6 of the statute which he proposes to repeal ? I am not at all opposed to simplifying legislation and I would not be sorry if we could eliminate some of the provisions of law that the minister has from time to time introduced. I am delighted to find that he is, for the time being, a convert to the principle of provincial rights. The sin of ignoring provincial rights is becoming more prevalent every day and I take this as an intimation that we will have a better state of things soon. Maybe to-night we will have a question of provincial rights before us in another form. I notice that the Adulteration of Foods Act has been held to be intra vires of this parliament in the case of the Queen vs. Stone, so that if we have the power to pass the Adulteration of Foods Act we had certainly the right to pass the other Act. We have legislation with regard to the subject of adulterating maple syrup and sugar which contains a provision that if these articles are not pure there shall be a statement on the can or receptacle that they are adulterated or mixed. I see that the law is observed to some extent at all events and that is exactly upon the line of the statute that we propose to repeal.

Mr. SPROULE. I understood from the minister that one reason why he proposes to repeal this law is that there was some confusion, when prosecutions took place, as to which Act would apply, having regard to the penalties imposed. Could he give any instance of such a prosecution taking place ?

Mr. FISHER. I cannot give an instance. The deputy minister drew my attention to the fact and told me that that was the case but I could not give an instance.

Mr. SPROULE. When you draw an indictment against an individual do you do it under a certain statute and under a certain clause of that statute? The violation of that clause must have some penalty attached to it in the statute and I cannot understand how there will be any confusion in prosecuting under such a statute as to which penalty shall apply. The penalties in the statute should be the penalties that would apply to a case taken under the statute.

Mr. FISHER. I confess I cannot exactly explain what the difficulty was that arose but I know there was such a difficulty.

Mr. J. D. REID. The Act that the minister proposes to repeal and which deals with canned goods applies to Canada as a whole. Section 12 of the Act of 1907 provides that :

All articles prepared for food in any establishment and packed in cans or similar receptacles, or in any package whatever, shall be subject to inspection during the whole course of preparation and packing; and all such packages shall be marked with—
(a) The initials of the Christian names, the full surname, and the address, or, in the case of a firm or corporation, the firm or corporate name and address, of the packer;
(b) A true and correct description of the contents of the package.

Now this is the provision that I suppose conflicts :

Provided, however, that if it be established to the satisfaction of the Governor in Council that such marking would hinder the sale of any of said articles in the British or foreign markets, he may exempt such articles from the provisions of this section.

That implies that the Act has reference entirely to the export trade. Is there any reason why the minister should not embody in this Bill a clause that would cover the whole of Canada ? There is no objection, as I understand, from any of the provincial governments. It strikes me that there is some other motive than that of simply desiring to repeal the Act, that there has been some influence brought to bear on the government to secure the repeal of the Act.

Mr. FISHER. You are altogether too suspicious.

Mr. J. D. REID. I have reasons to be suspicious.

Mr. FISHER. No, you have not.

Mr. J. D. REID. The Act of 1907 applies entirely to goods that are exported. If a person were brought up for violating the law, as I understand it, no judge would convict him under this Act, because it simply applies to export goods, but a conviction could be secured if the Act which has been in existence for twenty years were retained upon the statute-book. If there has been no complaint from the provincial governments why should not that Act be allowed to stand or else amend the Act of last year in such a way that it will apply to goods consumed in Canada as well as to export goods ? I want the Act to apply to the whole of Canada.

Mr. FISHER. I think my hon. friend had this question pretty thoroughly explained to him this afternoon. I do not think I could explain it any more clearly. I do not know why my hon. friend does not understand it. The imputation of the hon. gentleman that there is anything behind what I said is absolutely without foundation or justification. I have given my reasons and I want the hon. gentleman and his friends to understand that there are no other reasons in my thoughts. It is therefore not right for them to say that I am hiding ideas or reasons. My hon. friend should accept that statement, and it is true. I state frankly to the hon. gentleman that the parliament of Canada decided last year that a clause should not be inserted making this Act apply to local trade within the province.

Mr. J. D. REID. That is because we had an Act that did apply to it.

Mr. FISHER. No, it was not. The hon. gentleman did not know that Act was there.

Mr. J. D. REID. I knew it.

Mr. FISHER. It was not referred to during the whole discussion. The hon. gentleman himself I believe urged that the Act of 1907 should apply to local trade.

Mr. J. D. REID. Why should it not?

Mr. FISHER. Because parliament decided that the Act of 1907 should not apply to local trade and it is not feasible that it should apply to it. The only reason for repealing this Act is that it provides for somewhat the same offences, different penalties and different provisions from the Act of 1907 covering practically the same thing. As a matter of fact, section 134, R.S.C., has been on the statute-books for over 20 years, and it has been practically a dead letter ever since. The Act of 1907 deals with interprovincial and export trade and it is well known that the provincial authorities can deal with the trade within the provinces.

Mr. J. D. REID. There is no reason why both these Acts should not be incorporated into one. The necessity for protecting our Canadian market was discussed last year, and the Minister of Agriculture preferred to have chapter 134 apply to local conditions, and so long as we had that Act it was satisfactory, although I would like to have the whole thing included in the meat and Canned Foods Act. My idea is to protect our own Canadian people as well as foreigners, but the repeal of this Act leaves our people without protection. Even if the provincial governments have laws bearing on the subject, there are unorganized territories under federal jurisdiction, and if for no other reason this Act should be left on the statute-books so that they might be protected.

Mr. FISHER. Is that the only reason the hon. gentleman has?

Mr. J. D. REID. Have I not given other reasons?

Mr. FISHER. So far as that particular reason is concerned, the only unorganized territories are Mackenzie, Keewatin, and as there are not going to be any canned goods put up in these territories for a number of years to come, they are protected by the Act of 1907 the moment canned goods are shipped to them from any of the provinces.

Mr. SPROULE. I understood the minister to say that certain clauses of chapter 134, which it is proposed to repeal, are practically repeated in the Meat and Canned Goods Act. Section 17 of chapter 134 provides a penalty for falsely representing the weight in the package or falsely representing the date, and that applies to canned goods for home consumption as well as for export. But if chapter 134 is repealed then the corresponding provision in the other Act would only apply to export goods that are to be sent out of a province.

Mr. FISHER. That is quite right.

Mr. SPROULE. Don't you think it is a very salutary provision to guarantee the date of canning and the quantity in the package? If you repeal chapter 134 there is no enactment to prevent false marking of goods put up for consumption within a province.

Mr. FISHER. My hon. friend is quite right in saying that so far as the Dominion law is concerned, there would not be any such provision if this Act is repealed.

Mr. SPROULE. They have been depending on the federal law all along.

Mr. FISHER. Although they have been depending on the federal law, it does not provide any machinery for the enforcement of its provisions, and the consequence is that anything that is done under it can only be done by the authority of inspectors provided by provincial Acts for provincial organizations. The Act of 1907 does provide full machinery for the enforcement of its provisions, but it does not provide machinery for the enforcement of the provisions of chapter 134.

Mr. SPROULE. Clause 7 of chapter 134 provides for lodging a complaint before a justice of the peace. That is all the machinery that is required to put the law in motion and to secure the infliction of a penalty. It is the same as many other laws in that respect. Although there may never have been a conviction under the Act, I am far from reaching the conclusion that it is of no value. We know that many laws which provide penalties for doing wrong are the very things which prevent people from doing wrong—they fear the danger of the penalty. How can we tell how many thousands of people have been prevented from falsely marking goods by fear of the penalty provided by this law. The fact that no prosecutions have taken place under it may be only because people knowing that the law was in existence were deterred from violating it to the extent that would bring them under the ban of the law. If this law has been instrumental in preventing people committing these offences, though no prosecution has taken place under it, it would be valuable nevertheless.

Mr. FISHER. My hon. friend perhaps did not understand what I meant when I said that there was no machinery provided for enforcing this Act. I grant that there is a penalty provided, but there is no machinery for inspection. It was only because the Act of 1907 provided machinery for the enforcement of that Act that anybody found that this Act was in existence, though it was absolutely ignored.

Mr. SPROULE. Under the provisions of this Act inspectors are not so much required, because any one dealing in the article can lodge a complaint before a justice of the peace. If this Act is repealed, I think we ought to go further and amend the Meat and Canned Foods Inspection Act, and make clause 7 of chapter 134, both as to quantity and weight and false marks, apply to goods manufactured for consumption in the country as well as to goods for export. If the minister would amend the other Acts in that respect, I do not think there would be any objection to the repeal of this Act.

Mr. FISHER. No, I would not do that.

Mr. SPROULE. Then I do not think the hon. gentleman is justified in repealing this Act, and I do not think he would do so if pressure of some kind had not been brought to bear upon him.

Mr. FISHER. Nothing of the kind. The hon. gentleman has no right to impute motives.

Mr. SPROULE. I am saying nothing that I have no right to say, and I will repeat it if the hon. gentleman desires. From what I have heard I have reason to believe that some representations were made from sources that might be interested to have this Act repealed. That is the information I have; whether it is correct or not I do not know.

Mr. FISHER. I would like the hon. gentleman to state what sources they are and from whom the representations were made.

Mr. SPROULE. It may be from the very parties who have not disclosed their aim, and who, because of dread of the enforcement of this Act, dare not embark on the lines which they contemplate doing, and which they will be likely to do when this Act is repealed.

Mr. J. D. REID. Why did the hon. minister not repeal this Act last session?

Mr. FISHER. Because the matter was not then brought to my attention.

Mr. KEMP. In regard to the Canned Meats and Inspection Acts passed last session, has the minister had representations made to him by wholesale grocers in regard to private brands?

Mr. FISHER. As soon as this Bill is passed, I am going to take up an amendment to the other Act, when that whole question will come up.

Mr. KEMP. But the hon. gentleman has had representations made to him from reputable wholesale merchants?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, and I intend to bring up amendments to that Act.

Mr. J. D. REID. I would like to ask the minister if any representations have been made to him in regard to chapter 134 by any of the parties who put up canned meats or foods for the local market?

Mr. FISHER. Representations were made that the trade did not know which Act to follow in regard to the marks on the cans.

Mr. J. D. REID. Have these representations been made by people putting up canned meats or foods?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, the people who come under the provisions of the Act.

Mr. J. D. REID. By those engaged in the export trade or those engaged in the local trade?

Mr. FISHER. Both.

Mr. J. D. REID. These are the people who have made representations to the minister and have asked that this Act be repealed.

Mr. FISHER. They simply wanted to know what they should do—which Act they should follow. I could not see any advantage in having the two Acts, and I thought the simplest way was to repeal this Act and leave the other in force, and thus avoid confusion.

Mr. J. D. REID. If everything they put up that way is entirely for export, how could this interfere with it?

Mr. FISHER. The two Acts provide for two different markings, and they say they do not know what Act to follow when putting labels on their goods.

Mr. J. D. REID. Why not then have amended the old Act by simply making the markings the same?

Mr. FISHER. No doubt, that would have met that particular point. But there is no object in keeping the Act on the statutes, and I thought the simplest way was to repeal it.

Mr. SPROULE. The Act passed last year applied only to goods manufactured for export or inter-provincial trade and not to products put up for local consumption. If you repeal the first Act, you will have no law to control the goods put up for local consumption.

Mr. J. D. REID. The whole trouble was simply in the marking, and if the minister had simply amended the old Act so as to make the markings exactly the same for the local market as for export and inter-provincial trade, there would be no difficulty. Instead of doing that, he repeals the old Act entirely and leaves the people helpless in those provinces where there is no law now to protect them against the putting up of goods for local consumption unfit to be used. If that is the stand the minister and the government take, I make my protest, but so long as the people understand it, we have done our best.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

MEAT AND CANNED FOODS ACT—AMENDMENT.

Bill (No. 149) to amend the Meat and Canned Foods Act—Mr. Fisher—read the second time and House went into committee thereon.

Mr. LAKE. In the province of Saskatchewan, a number of hogs are slaughtered and sent by the carload to Winnipeg. That has been the custom in years past, but this year, under the regulations of the department, this export business has been knocked on the head, and the farmers have to practically ship the animals alive and take what prices they can get from what is supposed to be a combine in the Winnipeg market. Has the minister considered the possibility of providing some means by which farmers may be able to slaughter at home and have the animals inspected right on the spot and shipped in the old way? Winnipeg is the only large market they have to which they can ship these products. I am told the regulations have been a source of considerable inconvenience and actual loss to them?

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture). I do not remember having received any representations from the province of Saskatchewan, but the same question has come up in various parts of the country. The difficulty is one for which I have not yet found an adequate remedy. The inspection of the packing of meat is required to secure a reputation for our Canadian meat and canned meats. We know how important the export and the interprovincial trade is in bacon. Our export trade in bacon depends on the enforcement of just such regulations as are provided by the Act of 1907. Without such inspection as is required under that Act, we would in a short time be shut out to a considerable extent, if not entirely, from the English market. We require therefore such an examination of the carcasses as will enable the veterinary officers to declare honestly that the meat packed or put into the cans is healthy. The expert veterinary authorities universally agree that they cannot judge the health of a carcass unless the organs—especially the heart, liver and lungs—are open to their inspection, so that dressed hogs, or hogs shipped without those attachments, cannot be declared honestly by the inspectors free from disease. It is very difficult, if not impossible, to provide machinery by which the trade in carcasses can be safely carried on. I do not say that where those goods are being shipped to a factory not declared to be under the operation of certain clauses of this Act, those clauses would out apply. That meant that only factories dealing in the export trade would be brought under the operation of those clauses of the Act.

Mr. LAKE. Does the Act proscribe the export from one province to another of carcasses which are not intended to be packed, but simply intended for local sale?

Mr. FISHER. The Act does, but the regulations provide that it is only when the carcasses are shipped to a factory which is declared to be under the operation of those sections of the Act that the shipment is forbidden. We found great difficulty because there are more factories in what is called the export trade than we supposed before the passage of the Act, and the result is the change I am now proposing, requiring the exemption of certain factories from the operation of the Act instead of declaring certain factories to come under it. That will make the condition of affairs my hon. friend describes a little more acute, because heretofore farmers in Saskatchewan could ship dressed carcasses of hogs to a packer or to the market in Winnipeg, except to a few factories in Winnipeg declared to be under the operation of the Act. In future they cannot legally ship to any factory unless it has been declared exempt from the operation of those sections. But the farmers may ship to any place that is not a factory, to the local butcher or the market without being interfered with by the operation of those sections. Section 5 of the Act of last session provided for these shipments by farmers.

Mr. BLAIN. They could ship out of the province equally well under that provision?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. In Prince Edward Island there is no factory under the Act. Farmers, knowing that, slaughtered their hogs without meeting the requirements of the Act. When the buyers came down from Montreal last fall as usual to buy hogs, they could not buy them for their factories, they had to return without purchasing, and consequently there was virtually a monopoly among the few buyers on the island, and the price of pork went down with consequent loss to the farmers. There is something wrong in the Act when such a condition could exist under it. The minister should frame an amendment to avoid such a condition. The farmers lost money last year through its operation and the neglect of the government to inform them of the provisions of the law. In fact very little is known in the country of what the law really is. It is possible to find out from the department I suppose, but almost impossible to find out from the statute itself.

Mr. FISHER. When this difficulty in the island was brought to our attention we provided that hogs there could be inspected locally and shipped. It was unfortunate that the farmers there killed their hogs before the Quebec buyers came, as killing in that way they did not comply with the regulations which would have permitted them to ship to factories under the operation of the Act. My hon. friend is speaking a little harshly in saying that we created a monopoly. There was no monopoly ; it happened that certain buyers were not able to buy the hogs for shipment, but others were able to buy them for the local markets.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. Is that not a monopoly ?

Mr. FISHER. It prevents outside competition by other buyers, but there is no monopoly in itself. The difficulty was overcome before the end of the season; we arranged to have them inspected locally and shipped. As soon as the situation was presented to us we hastened to meet the difficulty and overcame it in that way.

Mr. LAKE. It is a pity that information was not more widely circulated among the farmers in order to provide against such a contingency. I am also sorry the minister does not seem to be able to improve the conditions in Saskatchewan.

Mr. FISHER. I am quite ready to do what I can.

Mr. LAKE. Could not an arrangement similar to that in the island by which there might be local inspection? I do not know how many inspectors there are in Saskatchewan, but it might be possible, by giving notice to the farmers in a particular district, to arrange for them to slaughter at the one time so that inspection would be possible and the carcasses could be shipped to these factories.

Mr. FISHER. My hon. friend will remember that there are two considerations in respect to Prince Edward Island which are peculiar. The first is that the buyers go to the island and buy, the formers ship only after the animals have been bought, and they, therefore, know the destination, they know that the carcasses are going to a factory which is under the operation of the Act. Then there are in the island practically only two shipping points through which trade passes to the places where factories are in operation. Consequently it is a very easy thing for us to make an arrangement for inspection at the point of shipment from the island, instead of on arrival at the factory. But my hon. friend seems to overlook the fact that it is only when the hogs are sent to a packing factory that they come under the operation of the Act. If a farmer is shipping a carload of hogs to the Winnipeg market, the Act will not operate on him at all. It will be difficult, if not impossible, to arrange to have inspectors at all the shipping points in the province of Saskatchewan so that the cargo may be inspected locally before it is shipped.

Mr. LAKE. How many inspectors are there?

Mr. FISHER. We only have inspectors at the factories. In the case I speak of in Prince Edward Island last fall, an extra man was sent there specially. I think the hogs were all shipped from Charlottetown, and the inspector saw them before they were shipped.

Mr. LAKE. It would be a great convenience to the farmers in Saskatchewan if they could be made aware of the extraordinary position in which they are placed. It will be impossible for them to ship carcasses—

Mr. FISHER. I am not taking that position.

Mr. LAKE. The organs have to be left in them if they are to be shipped to a factory. I think some provision should be made by which the carcasses may be shipped, as in the past; and further, that an intimation should be given to the farmers throughout those parts of the Northwest where hogs are raised for shipment. It ought to be a comparatively simple matter to spread the information so that the farmer who exports hogs will know all the conditions he has to comply with.

Mr. FISHER. My officers made a resumé of the provisions of this Act, which was sent to every newspaper in Saskatchewan, and throughout the whole of Canada.

Mr. KEMP. Will the minister explain the sections of this Act as they will affect the use of private brands? I understand some wholesale merchants who have been selling canned goods for many years, reputable merchants, work up and advertise a private brand. They object that they have to put the name of the packer on their can, and contend that their own guarantee in many cases is better than the guarantee of the packer, and that it destroys the value of their private brand when they have to put on the name of the packer. That complaint is made in certain parts of the country. I would like to know what position the minister is going to take in regard to that matter.

Mr. MACPHERSON. That point has been the subject of discussion between the wholesale merchants and the canners of Vancouver. It was brought before the minister, and he suggested when the Bill came before the House that an amendment might be moved to clause 12. Clause 12 of the Meat and Canned Foods Act reads:

> The initials of the Christian name, the full surname and address, or in the case of a firm or corporation, the firm or corporate name and address of the packer.

The point the hon. gentleman brings up is this, that a wholesale firm has been buying for some years the output of a factory. They place upon the can their label, Smith, Jones & Brown. The wholesale firm buy from Robinson; Robinson does not appear at all, but Smith, Jones & Brown are a first class reputable firm, and they have sold under their brand for years. Further, in the province of British Columbia nearly all the wholesale merchants purchase the output of some small cannery that is packing salmon. They will buy from one man this year his output, say he packs 4,000 cases, and they will put their own label upon it. Next year this man may have a small pack, he may be holding his salmon for a higher price. By this Act they would not be allowed to go into the market and buy from another small canner. That is the point that was brought up by the wholesale merchants of Vancouver. They wrote to me, and I suggested an amendment which I will make to section 12.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I had better read section 1 first.

Mr. J. D. REID. That does not touch the point I want to refer to. I want to ask the minister a question about that Saskatchewan matter. I understand that the farmers of Saskatchewan are in this position: The Winnipeg packers can go to them and say, We cannot give you the full price of these hogs because there is not a demand for them in the home market, and therefore for the export trade we pay you a less price. Is that the position that the Saskatchewan farmers are in now? I also want to ask the minister if the packers of this country are allowed to bring in hogs in bond from the United States, pack them and ship them out again?

Mr. FISHER. That is a customs matter, but I think not. The question of bonding does not enter into this at all.

Mr. J. D. REID. The minister knows that other manufacturing establishments have that privilege and if pork packing establishments have that privilege, it certainly would be a very serious thing for the farmers in Saskatchewan.

Mr. FISHER. I do not think that any factory in Canada is a bonded warehouse under the Customs Act.

Mr. J. D. REID. If the pork packing establishments in Winnipeg can force the farmers to take a less price than their product is worth by representing that there is an overproduction on the home market it would place the farmers of Saskatchewan in a very unfortunate position.

Mr. FISHER. I do not think the farmers are in that position.

Mr. J. D. REID. Does the minister not think that the very fact of them being subject to inspection puts them in that position ?

Mr. FISHER. I do not think it allows any person to force the farmers in any respect.

Mr. J. D. REID. Well, I disagree with the minister in that respect.

Mr. SPROULE. You repeal clauses 3 and 4 of this Act ?

Mr. FISHER. Up to the present time section 11 only applies to such factories as are declared by the minister to be under the operation of sections 3 and 4 and 6 to 10. We repeal that section and substitute this section which says that the Governor in Council may, upon application of the owner thereof, exempt any establishment from the operations of this Act. That is to say that the active operation in dealing with it is for the purpose of exemption. Before, the active operation in dealing with it was for the purpose of putting it under the Act.

Mr. SPROULE. A great many hogs are killed in our part of the country, they are shipped in carcasses to Toronto and sold to Park, Blackwell & Co., or Harris or anyone else. How does the individual who sells these carcasses know whether they are intended for export or not ? Do these carcasses come under this clause of the Act or do they not ?

Mr. FISHER. If they are bought to be taken to a factory that is under the operation of the Act, of course, they do. If they are bought and not brought into such a factory they do not.

Mr. SPROULE. They may be bought by any wholesale butcher who sells them again.

Mr. FISHER. Suppose that a wholesale butcher buys them from the farmer——

Mr. SPROULE. No, he buys them generally from a merchant.

Mr. FISHER. Well, supposing the merchant buys from the farmer, he can do that without this Act affecting him in any way whatever, but if the merchant sells a carcass to go to a factory which is under the operation of the Act he cannot do it unless the carcass has been inspected.

Mr. SPROULE. A merchant, for instance, in the town in which I live, purchases a number of hogs. A buyer comes from Park, Blackwell & Co. or Harris, and he purchases them ; is it the duty of the seller to ascertain whether these carcasses are going to be shipped to that factory for export, or what disposition is to be made of them ?

Mr. FISHER. No.

Mr. SPROULE. Surely it is not the duty of the seller and yet if they were going to a factory I take it that they would come under the operation of the Act.

Mr. FISHER. Before they went into the factory they would have to be inspected and the inspector would reject them if they had not complied with the provisions of the Act.

Mr. SPROULE. Who would be responsible for the inspection, the buyer or the seller ?

Mr. FISHER. That is something I cannot tell you ; it depends on the bargain between them. If I sell to a man who does not ask for a guarantee that the law had been complied with he is responsible. If I sell to him and say that these carcasses have been inspected and are all right to go into the factory he would hold me responsible. It is a matter of private arrangement.

Mr. SPROULE. If there is no understanding reached between them the seller would be exempt from any liability with regard to the inspection ?

Mr. FISHER. As far as I can tell.

Mr. LAKE. It seems to me that it is not absolutely clear in regard to this matter of export. The interpretation clause says that 'export' means out of Canada or out of the province in which the establishment is situated. I imagine that the matter of exporting from one province to the other must have got mixed up with transactions in regard to carcasses which are bought simply for the local market. I do not think that is clear. In section 5 there is a clause which apparently makes it possible for a farmer to slaughter at home for the home market only, but I understand from the minister now that it is perfectly clear that the farmer may slaughter at home for the home market and he may export into another province provided the carcass does not go to an establishment that is packing for export.

Mr. FISHER. That is clear.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. Is the minister quite clear in his own mind upon that point ?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. Absolutely and perfectly clear ? The reason I ask is that in the 5th section it is stated 'unless the minister otherwise orders.' What does that mean ? Have any regulations been made by the minister under the 5th section ? I have heard two different versions of the matter. It is said that hogs which are exported out of a province are liable to inspection under this 5th section, unless the minister otherwise orders. Has the minister made any order or are there any orders in council in force ?

Mr. FISHER. If carcasses are sold from one province to another by a farmer who has slaughtered them, or if they are sold on the ordinary markets or sold to a dealer and they do not go to a packing house for export they are not under the operation of the Act at the present time. If they are being sold to go to a factory which is under the operation of the Act then they have to comply with the regulations.

Mr. LAKE. That is to say that the organs have to accompany the carcass or else the animals have to be shipped alive.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. As a matter of fact, any person who ships hogs will have to comply with the regulations to be safe.

Mr. FISHER. If he is not pretty sure it is going into local consumption.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. As far as my province is concerned the regulations under this Act are not approved by anybody, because of the uncertainty of the market, the uncertainty of the inspection, and for many other reasons. I have condemnatory letters of all kinds.

Mr. FISHER. The arrangements which were made at the end of the season with regard to Prince Edward Island and which we expect to be able to continue will I think remove the difficulty my hon. friend mentions.

Mr. SPROULE. What were these arrangements ?

Mr. FISHER. In the case of Prince Edward Island the carcasses would be inspected and allowed to go forward and to be received by the factory they were shipped to.

Mr. J. D. REID. If an inspector would inspect a carload of hogs at Saskatchewan could they go to a packing house and be afterwards exported?

Mr. FISHER. Our inspectors are usually at the packing houses. If an inspector inspected carcasses in Saskatchewan which had the organs attached, and marked them as inspected they could go to the factory.

Mr. J. D. REID. Is it necessary that the carcasses should contain all the organs when they are inspected ?

Mr. FISHER. The veterinary experts inform me that any inspection without the organs attached to the carcasses is futile.

Mr. J. D. REID. I do not see that provided for in the law.

Mr. FISHER. That is a regulation.

Mr. SPROULE. When animals are purchased is there an understanding between the buyer and the seller that they are to be subject to inspection before the buyer pays for them ?

Mr. FISHER. That is a matter between the buyer and seller.

Mr. SPROULE. Suppose a carload is consigned to, say Harris, of Toronto, and they are to be paid for when delivered, but on inspection at Toronto it is found that some are diseased, could the buyer charge the loss to the seller ?

Mr. FISHER. That is not a matter for the department, whose duty is simply to see that no diseased hog is taken to the factory.

Mr. SPROULE. Supposing no understanding existed between the buyer and the seller, the buyer could not charge the loss back to the seller ?

Mr. FISHER. That would be a question for the courts to decide.

Mr. SPROULE. What establishments are at present under the operation of this Act ?

Mr. FISHER. I am told there are nearly thirty.

Mr. SPROULE. These will now be exempt ?

Mr. FISHER. No. Those already under the operation of the Act will remain under it and if the amendment is passed all other factories would come under the operation of the Act until an order in council exempted them.

On section 12,

Mr. MACPHERSON. I beg to move that the Bill be amended by adding thereto the following section :

Paragraph (a) of section 12 is amended by adding thereto after the word 'packer' the words:
Or of the first dealer obtaining it direct from the packer who sells or offers the same for sale. Such dealer shall upon the request of the inspector appointed under this Act give the name of the packer of such articles.

That will meet the wishes of the wholesale man who sells under his own brand the goods which he buys from the packer.

Mr. FISHER. I understand this amendment to be for the purpose of allowing the first purchaser from the packer, who has made arrangements with different packing houses, to put his name on the package instead of the original packer, he being then responsible for the character of the goods. I know that this is an amendment which the wholesale trade of Canada generally are very much in favour of. I think it is safeguarded by the second clause which requires, in case of a suit, that the name of the original packer shall be given to the inspector and therefore I would not object to the incorporation of this amendment in the present Bill. The object of the whole Act is to secure that the public shall be safeguarded by the name of a responsible person on the package, so that when a consumer buys the article he can know where it comes from. Originally the intention and idea of the Act was that he should know the actual packer; but representations have been made, reinforced by a considerable number of good names, that the name of the wholesaler is frequently as good a guarantee as the name of the original packer. As the law requires that in case of any suit or action arising out of an infraction of the Act the name of the original packer shall be given, which under this amendment shall be done, I think the general intent and principle of the Act is observed to a sufficient extent to justify this facility to the wholesale trade being granted.

Amendment agreed to, and section as amended, agreed to.

Mr. J. D. REID. In the month of January I asked a question in regard to an article that appeared in one of the English papers on the subject of the importation of frozen meats into England. I would like to ask the minister if this Act will affect the export trade of frozen meats in boxes during the winter months.

Mr. FISHER. As I gathered the tenor of the article to which my hon. friend refers, the fact that we have this Act will preclude our meats being objected to in the English market, although we have not any official declaration to that effect. The English are no doubt jealous of imported food stuffs, and one of our objects in passing this Act last session was to throw all possible safeguards around our trade with England in those articles. My hon. friend will notice that in the article Canada is not mentioned as a country from which dangerous food of that character might come, which I think is attributable to the fact that we have this Act.

Mr. J. D. REID. I suppose any Act they might have would apply to all countries.

Mr. FISHER. That would depend, of course, on the provisions of any such Act; but we have the assurance from the authorities in England that compliance with the provisions of this Act will be sufficient to justify them in not applying any such exclusion to Canada.

Bill reported, and amendments read the first and the second time, and agreed to.

On the question, when shall the Bill be read the third time:

Mr. W. JACKSON. With reference to the clause ignoring the manufacturers' label with the name on the can, I would ask that this Bill do not receive its third reading now, as I wish to communicate with some of the canners in London in reference to it.

Bill reported.

INSPECTION AND SALE ACT—AMENDMENT.

Mr. FISHER moved second reading of Bill (No. 148) to amend the Inspection and Sale Act.

Mr. BERGERON. This Bill has not yet been translated into French. However, I do not object to going on with it.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

Mr. FISHER. The Inspection and Sale Act, chapter 85 of the revised statutes, is a consolidation of a large number of Acts affecting different commercial products. That Act is divided into ten parts. Part 1 does not apply to grain, but is not otherwise limited. Part 2 applies exclusively to grain, part 3 to flour and meal, part 4 to beef and pork, part 5 to leather and raw hides, part 6 to pot ashes and pearl ashes, part 7 to fish and fish oils, part 8 to dairy products, part 9 to fruit and fruit marks, and part 10 to certain staple commodities. Under the Department of Agriculture's legislation, partly since I have been in office and partly before, there were a number of special Acts passed applying to dairy products and to fruits, and it is only to those parts of the Act which apply to dairy products and fruits that this Bill relates. I may say that the Act passed by this parliament a few years ago now forms part 9 of the Inspection and Sale Act. Part 1 of the Inspection and Sale Act does not apply to grain but is otherwise not limited in its application, and I want to exclude from it dairy products, fruits or fruit marks.

Mr. SPROULE. A number of the members interested in dairy products and farming generally are absent, and I think it would be better if the minister would take up some other Bill so as to give them an opportunity of discussing this one.

Mr. FISHER. We might go over some of the amendments and get them passed and then let the committee rise and report progress, and get leave to sit again.

On section 2,

Mr. FISHER. This section repeals certain provisions of the Inspection and Sale Act which are practically obsolete. They were taken from the old General Inspection Act and have been replaced by a special Dairy Act passed some nine or ten years ago.

On section 3—adulterated cheese,

Mr. FISHER. This is to prevent any inferior curd being incorporated in the new cheese during the process of its manufacture and also to prevent the placing of any foreign substance in the cheese. There has been a little difficulty lately through careless cheese makers incorporating sour or inferior curd in their cheese.

Mr. BERGERON. Is there no Act to prevent this already ?

Mr. FISHER. The Justice Department say there is not. Then some foolish people have taken it into their head to put bottles and little cans into their cheese with their name or something of that kind in them. That is complained of seriously by the trade. It is a fraud because people are getting what they did not buy, and besides the quality of the cheese around the foreign substance is apt to deteriorate.

Mr. SPROULE. I am afraid the hon. gentleman is not a gallant or he would hesitate before doing what may be a great injustice. I remember reading not long ago of some young lady putting in a cheese a small bottle with a paper inside it, giving her name and address, and shortly afterwards she got an offer of marriage from the lucky purchaser of the cheese. It would be strange for a bachelor to make such an amendment to the law as would prevent the possibility of this occurring in the future. I would think he would be more chivalrous than to attempt to do so. Besides he might get a wife himself in that way.

Mr. HENDERSON. Would colouring matter be regarded as a foreign substance?

Mr. FISHER. I do not think so; I think that is part of the process of making the cheese and would not come under the section.

Mr. LENNOX. In the case mentioned by the minister, of a person innocently putting in a small bottle containing an advertisement it seems harsh to provide a penalty of as much as $500. It may be said that there is a graded system and that the fine may not exceed $25, but there is the possibility of it being $500. The difficulty in these cases always is that you group these offences and provide penalties which are not excessive in some cases but are in others. The case of colouring referred to by my hon. friend also occurred to me. If colouring was a necessary ingredient, it probably would not be considered a foreign substance, but in many cases it might be considered both foreign and injurious and $500 in such a case is a severe penalty.

Mr. FISHER. Of course the insertion of any such thing in the cheese must be deliberate, it cannot be an accident. There has been very serious complaint on the part of those engaged in the trade and it was thought necessary to stop the practice. I do not think a magistrate would impose the extreme penalty unless there were strong reasons, and $25 is not too high a penalty if it is desired to deter people from doing such acts.

Mr. HENDERSON. I would suggest that the minister might use some more definite form of expression which would include the cases he has mentioned but would not be broad enough to include colouring matter.

Mr. FISHER. This clause was submitted to the Minister of Justice, but as the Bill has to go back into committee I shall ask the Department of Justice whether colouring matter would come under it, and if so, we will see that it is provided against. I would not wish for a moment that colouring matter should be included under this section.

On section 5—making of regulations by Governor in Council.

Mr. FISHER. These two sections were in the special Act, but in the consolidation of the statutes, in consequence of the other sections that we are now repealing having been left in, these two were omitted. It is now necessary to reinsert them to enable us to appoint inspectors and make regulations.

Mr. LENNOX. These referred principally to milk?

Mr. FISHER. To dairy products.

Mr. SPROULE. Is it not rather irregular to give authority to the Governor in Council to make regulations and to impose such large penalties for contravention of them?

Mr. FISHER. That has been in all the agricultural Acts.

Mr. HENDERSON. That is not a very good reason.

Mr. FISHER. And it has worked well.

Mr. HENDERSON. We are empowering the Governor in Council to authorize penalties of $50 for infringements of regulations of which we know nothing. They may be innocent and unimportant or they may be very important, and yet we are fixing a penalty of $50 for what may be a very trifling offence. Could not the minister so frame this as to afford better protection to all parties?

Mr. FISHER. The regulations must necessarily be in accordance with the provisions of the Act; you cannot make regulations contrary to the provisions of an Act. I do not think the penalty herein referred to is too high for infractions of regulations in consonance with the Act.

Mr. HENDERSON. I do not think the provisions of the Act control the regulations to any extent. We have not the slightest idea of these regulations or what crime the government may formulate by them.

Mr. FISHER. The regulations cannot enlarge the operation of the Act, they can only be consistent with it.

Mr. HENDERSON. When such an expression as this is used 'The Governor in Council may make such regulations as he considers necessary.'

Mr. FISHER. In accordance with the Act.

Mr. HENDERSON. I do not see that it is limited in any other way.

In order to secure the efficient enforcement and operation of this Act, and may by such regulations impose penalties not exceeding $50.

I fail to perceive that the Act limits the power to make regulations at all.

Mr. FISHER. Yes, that is well understood in legislation.

Mr. LENNOX. The Governor in Council may make regulations for the efficient carrying out of the Act, and they have to relate to the subject matter of the Act. He makes a regulation, we will say, that certain facilities are to be afforded to the inspectors, and he may make other regulations as to other matters, some of them may be very trivial. For the non-observance of some of these regulations a penalty of $1 might be ample, and $5 might be an outrage. Now we are here making the law, and we are delegating to the Governor in Council, without knowing anything about the nature of the regulations, unlimited power to impose such penalties as they see fit up to $50, and they come into force by the mere fact of publication. The minister said a moment ago that this was merely a re-enactment of the sections that were left out when the revision was made. Perhaps he will tell us where we can find the statute as it was originally.

Mr. FISHER. I think 56 Vic. chapter 37, is the original Act. My hon. friend has pointed out that infractions of the different regulations would require different penalties. Now this clause empowers the Governor in Council to make regulations and to apply penalties suitable to the gravity of the infraction. It does not say that to every offence a fine of $50 may be applied; the Governor in Council is empowered to go as high as $50 when the offence is a serious one, but if it is a trivial one a smaller penalty would be applied. It would be impossible for the Act to fix penalties to be applied to regulations that are not in existence when the Act is passed. You have to leave it to the discretion of the Governor in Council when they make the regulations to attach a proper penalty for the infraction of a particular regulation.

Mr. SPROULE. Give us some idea of what the regulations are likely to be.

Mr. FISHER. We have regulations fixing the duties of inspectors, but we have not found occasion to make any regulations for offences. The penalties for offences provided in the Act itself apparently have been found insufficient. We have not had a great deal to do to enforce this Act, the Act is well known, and the dairymen have been living up to it pretty thoroughly. Once in a while we have had some serious cases, and we have dealt with them and imposed a penalty, but I think in every case where the offences were serious, the penalties provided for under a special clause of the Act were found sufficient.

Mr. SPROULE. The minister says they have found no need for regulations up to the present, then why propose to amend the Act?

Mr. FISHER. Because the need may arise at any moment. But we are not amending the Act, we are reinstating clauses that were in the Dairy Act which were taken out of it when the consolidation of the statutes was made last year; because there were some old clauses which seemed to apply to the Dairy Act as well as to other parts of the Inspection Act.

Mr. SPROULE. The revisers could not have done their duty properly.

Mr. FISHER. It was supposed that the general provisions under this Sale and Inspection Act would cover it, but that has not been found satisfactory.

Mr. SPROULE. The minister stated that the dairymen had been living up to the Act. It would seem almost a waste of time to make enactments when there is no need of them.

Mr. FISHER. My hon. friend has misunderstood me or has not grasped the situation. There are clauses in the Act providing for certain offences and penalties. We have enforced these clauses without any difficulty. Only the other day in Quebec we had a man fined $300 and not long ago we had a Montreal man fined $200 and costs under this Act. There have been occasions when, if we had been fully convinced that we had the authority to proceed, we might have proceeded, but since the revised statutes have been in force we have not had that assurance; consequently, we have hesitated to proceed, and we want to be in a position to enforce the Act should occasion arise.

Mr. SPROULE. That is a different explanation now. If authority is needed it should be provided.

On section 6—'Culls' defined.

Mr. FISHER. We found it necessary to define culls.

Mr. HENDERSON. Is this an entirely new definition ?

Mr. FISHER. Entirely new. It is the best we could work out.

On section 7, false marking.

Mr. FISHER. The only difference here from the original Act is that we put in the words 'no culls.' If my hon. friend looks at the last part of the clause he will see that it provides that No. 2 quality shall contain 'not less than eighty per cent free from worm holes and such other defects as cause material waste.' We found that people were interpreting that to mean that the other twenty per cent might be pure culls. That was not the idea of the Act and now we say that this quality includes no culls.

On section 8, penalties respecting marking.

Mr. FISHER. This section increases the penalties under the Fruit Marks Act. We have found that the penalties were so small that people engaged in the trade seemed practically to ignore them. We took all the trouble and expense of prosecuting and upon securing the conviction of a man who shipped 100 or 1,000 barrels might be fined $3 or $4. We have had 168 convictions during the last season and I remember seeing not long ago the list of penalties imposed. Hardly any of them exceeded $10 and it seemed perfectly ridiculous.

Mr. BRODER. You raise the minimum ?

Mr. FISHER. We raise the minimum and maximum and make the penalties so severe that the people will be deterred from breaking the Act.

Mr. BRODER. In a case where a man sells a certain kind of apple and then ships other than the kind or quality sold a penalty should be provided.

Mr. FISHER. That is the intention of the Act.

Mr. BRODER. I know, and the law has been broken.

Mr. FISHER. Yes, we have taken out prosecutions to try and put a stop to that. It is false marking. But if a man takes an order for one kind of apple, ships another and marks the barrels with the name of what is in them we cannot deal with that.

Mr. BRODER. Of course, he is breaking his contract.

Mr. FISHER. Yes, but that is not a matter that we can deal with. It is only when he breaks the law that we can deal with him.

Mr. BRODER. Yes.

Mr. HENDERSON. Before leaving section 7 I desire to point out to the minister that it defines No. 2 quality as having not less than 80 per cent free from worm holes. My impression is that No. 1 quality must have 90 or 95 per cent free from worm holes.

Mr. FISHER. Ninety per cent.

Mr. HENDERSON. I notice you are not amending that clause. Consequently the same difficulty that the minister referred to before might occur with regard to culls ; the balance of the barrel might be made up with culls as well as in the case of No. 2 quality, and I was wondering why the minister had not amended that section as well as 321.

Mr. FISHER. We have not found such infractions in the case of No. 1. I suppose they might possibly occur and I would not object to amending the section by putting in the same words. It hardly seemed worth while for the packer to put in 10 per cent of culls in No. 1 quality, but when it came to 20 per cent he would do so.

Mr. HENDERSON. Ten per cent is a good profit.

Mr. FISHER. I do not see any objection to putting that into No 1. I will consider that before the Bill is finally taken out of committee.

On section 9, penalty for tampering with marks.

Mr. FISHER. Section 329 provides a penalty for defacing or changing the marks on a closed package. It is a deliberate fraud and we wish to increase the penalty. The penalty under the original section was $40 fine and we are making it $100 for the first offence and $200 for each subsequent offence. That seems to be a very deliberate crime and I think it ought to be severely punished.

On section 10, penalties respecting apples and berries.

Mr. SPROULE. Some time ago I called the attention of the Minister of Agriculture to some of his inspectors in Nova Scotia whom it was thought were not in a position to deal fairly with the public because of their interference in municipal politics. The minister then did not seem to pay much attention to the matter but I would now ask him if he has decided to appoint inspectors under this Act who are not mixed up in public affairs. It was thought these inspectors could not be impartial owing to their environment and the minister was asked if he did not think it wise that such inspectors should refrain from taking part in such contests. Even supposing these men were doing their duty fairly it is in my opinion not desirable that the action they take in the direction I have indicated should lead to suspicion that they might treat those who support them with greater partiality than those who do not support them.

Mr. FISHER. I would say quite frankly to my hon. friend that if a complaint were made and proven that any inspector in consequence of any action of his in a municipal contest was guilty of discrimination, I would not hesitate at all to dismiss such an inspector. If an inspector made use of his position, by reason of personal spite in connection with any contest, whether municipal, political or personal, to discriminate between individuals I would look upon such an one as unworthy to be an inspector. But I do not think I would be justified in taking action on the mere supposition that an inspector might possibly do a thing of that kind. The particular inspector in this case is not engaged by the year, he only acts as such for six or seven months in the year and at the time of the municipal contest I am not sure that he was engaged as inspector.

Mr. SPROULE. My information is that he was.

Mr. FISHER. That may be, but at all events he is not a permanent officer on salary. I know of no complaint which has ever been made about him. The correspondence referred to by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) did not say that he had been guilty but simply that he might possibly be guilty. I do not think it would be fair for me to say to that gentleman that he should not take any part in municipal affairs because for a portion of the year he is inspector under the Act. While it is possible that a man might do something wrong under certain circumstances, I think my hon. friend will agree with me that just because of such a possibility it would be harsh and unfair on my part to interfere with him. If it were shown he had acted unfairly or had discriminated it would certainly be my duty to remove him from the opportunity of making such discrimination. Since I spoke last on the matter in the House I have no indication that this inspector has done anything unjust or unfair and if he had I think the information would have reached me by this time. I therefore think I was quite right in not taking any steps to remove him.

Mr. SPROULE. Does not the minister think it is desirable that in such a case even the possibility of suspicion should be removed from the public mind. Suppose a man who is engaged as a public weigher should himself be a purchaser of cattle and that he was called on to weigh his own cattle along with those of others, would there not be a feeling in the public mind that there was danger of his acting with partiality towards himself? I have a letter before me written to Mr. A. L. Davidson, of Nova Scotia, which says :

I have to acknowledge receipt of your letter of October 22, and note what you say in regard to Mr. Freeman Fitch and his duties under the Fruit Marks Act. Your statements require careful consideration which I shall certainly give them. I cannot say, however, speaking from memory and without investigation, that there is any law or rule in the public service that debars members from taking part in municipal affairs. I will see what the practice is in regard to such things and will act accordingly.

I do not know whether the minister has since communicated with this gentleman, but the letter upon which that was based is as follows :

I beg leave to call your attention to the following: Freeman Fitch, of Clarence, in the county of Annapolis, is at present employed by your department as inspector of fruit under the provisions of the Fruit Marks Act.

As such inspector his duties are to inspect apples packed by growers and dealers thereof and to ascertain if they are packed in accordance with the provisions of the said Act.

If, as such inspector, he finds apples fraudulently packed he is required to mark the package in which such apples are contained with the words 'falsely marked.' It is also a part of his duty to prosecute parties for violating the provisions of the said Act.

From the quasijudicial nature of the office of inspector it is possible for the occupant of the said office, to discriminate between those toward whom he is friendly disposed and those toward whom he is unfriendly disposed.

The ratepayers of polling district No. 3, in the county of Annapolis, are nearly all engaged in the pursuit of raising apples for sale, and it is a part of the duty of the said Freeman Fitch as said fruit inspector to inspect the apples as packed by the different ratepayers of the said polling district No. 3, in the said county of Annapolis.

The said Freeman Fitch is at present a candidate for the office of municipal councillor to represent the said polling district No. 3 in the municipal council of the municipality of the county of Annapolis. The election for the said office will be held upon the 19th day of November, 1907, when the ratepayers of the said polling district will elect their councillor by ballot.

As a candidate at such election the said Freeman Fitch is peculiarly open to the temptation of showing favouritism as an inspector to those of the said ratepayers of polling district No. 3 as may support the said Freeman Fitch at the said election and discrimination against such of said ratepayers as do not support him at said election. If elected as a councillor the said Freeman Fitch will be peculiarly tempted to refrain from enforcing the law against his supporters for the fear of estranging their support, and his usefulness as an inspector will in the nature of things be seriously impaired.

The time spent by the said Freeman Fitch in canvassing the said polling district as a candidate as aforesaid, coming as it does at the season of the year when his official duties are the most pressing, cannot but interfere with the proper discharge of his duties as an inspector as aforesaid, as will also his duties as a councillor should he be elected to that office.

All of which facts are respectfully submitted.

This is dated October 22, about the time the fruit is being put up, and therefore I take it that he was engaged in inspecting then.

Mr. FISHER. Yes, I think he was in that case.

Mr. SPROULE. It is apparent that he is running for municipal councillor at the very time his inspection must be done, and that he must of necessity have friends on one side and those who are not his friends on the other side, and he is inspecting for both alike. Would there not be an impression left in the minds of those carrying on a vigorous contest against him that they would hardly get hot justice, or at best more than very cold justice, whereas those canvassing and working for him would be more likely to get fair play ? Does the minister not think it would be a proper thing to ask his inspectors to refrain from running for such offices or to appoint others to these positions ?

Mr. FISHER. I think it is quite necessary that the people should feel that they are getting fair play ; but I have had no representations except that one letter to show that there was any feeling in regard to this gentleman. I have had no complaint that the inspector has shown any partiality or discrimination of any kind whatever, and I do not think it would be fair to judge him on the suspicion of one correspondent that he might possibly act unfairly. As to public officials taking part in municipal affairs, there is no law or rule against it, and I think it is a matter of judgment how far it should be allowed. I do not think public officials should take part in municipal affairs to an extent that would interfere with their official duties ; and if it could be shown that Mr. Fitch was not attending properly to his duties as an inspector because he was at the same time a municipal councillor, I would have no hesitation in saying to him that the two things were incompatible. But that is not suggested in this letter. The only suggestion is that if he happens to be a candidate for the municipal council, it is possible that he will exercise his powers as an inspector in favour of those who vote for him and against those who vote against him. Under these circumstances, I do not think it would be proper for me to say that Mr. Fitch should not be an inspector.

Mr. SPROULE. You think he could at the same time carry on an election and properly attend to his duties as an inspector ?

Mr. FISHER. It might be a little hard to do it.

Mr. SPROULE. The minister does not see any objection to his official doing the two things at the same time ?

Mr. FISHER. If the one interfered with the other, there would be.

Mr. SPROULE. It is plain to me that it is sufficient to destroy that confidence in the public mind which ought to exist, and in my judgment it would justify the minister in notifying his inspectors that they could not be regarded as eligible for that position if they were at the same time running for election either as municipal councillors or in any other capacity that would practically divide the public into two portions, one of whom would be friendly and the other unfriendly. It is not human nature for people to feel that they are likely to get fair play under such circumstances, and to my mind it is a good deal to have the people satisfied that they are getting fair play, whether they do or not.

Mr. FISHER. I again repeat that there is nothing whatever to indicate that anybody has the feeling expressed in that letter. This gentleman says they may have that feeling. He does not say that anybody has been hurt or feels that way.

Mr. SPROULE. If they had no suspicion would they write the letter ?

Mr. FISHER. Only one man wrote the letter.

Mr. SPROULE. The whole community is made up of units and one man has an equal right to another and an equal claim to have an abuse remedied.

Mr. FISHER. If only one man has a suspicion and writes a letter, I am not to take it for granted that he represents the whole community.

Mr. SPROULE. But you take it for granted that he misrepresents the facts and is not worthy of consideration because he is only one man. But this one man gives the circumstances which justify suspicion and cause public dissatisfaction, and the minister in his reply said that he would give the matter careful consideration. Has he given it any consideration?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, and I have explained the result of my consideration. I have said that I did not consider the statement of one individual that certain improper things might happen, which he does not say have happened, or that certain people might have a suspicion, which he does not say they have—I did not consider such vague statements required any action on my part.

Mr. SPROULE. Why then did this man write the letter he did instead of making a direct charge?

Mr. FISHER. Why did he not make a direct charge?

Mr. SPROULE. A good many know of wrong doing, but do not make direct charges ?

Mr. FISHER. Then I do not bother about them. If a man has not the courage to make a direct charge, I do not take any account of his suspicions.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman had better tell the apple raisers of that county that that is the way he uses the farmers.

Mr. FISHER. That is how I use that man.

Mr. HENDERSON. I would suggest the substitution of some other word for the word 'foreign.' I would suggest the word 'nonedible.'

Mr. FISHER. I would not like to see an oyster in the middle of a cheese.

Progress reported.

CONSTRUCTION OF DRY DOCKS.

Bill (No. 119) to encourage the construction of dry docks—Mr. Fielding—read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

Mr. FIELDING. This Bill is founded on a resolution which was fully discussed and explained some time ago, and which I think commended itself to the general consideration of the House. This amendment is destined to adapt the machinery of the Act, which was put on the statute-book some years ago, to some difficulties which have been met in its administration. Under this general legislation a dry dock had been constructed at Halifax and another at Collingwood and an agreement was entered into for the construction of one at Vancouver. The latter, however, has not yet been constructed. The essential difference between the present law and the amendment touches two points. The limitation of the amount in the law is 3 per cent on $1,000,000, but in view of the increased size of steamers and the need of larger docks, it is proposed to increase the amount to $1,500,000, which, at 3 per cent, represents $45,000. The second point of importance is with respect to the method of payments. Under the Act payments are to be made for twenty years, subject to the condition that the dock shall be at all times kept in successful operation. Capitalists, however, take exception to that. They say that the men who advance the money might reasonably ask for a definite fixed assurance of payment and the government should provide other means for insuring the operation of the dock. The proposal now submitted provides that the twenty years' payment of the subsidy shall be fixed and definite and that, in the event of the company failing to operate the dock, the government shall take possession of it.

Mr. SPROULE. Is it intended to grant an additional subsidy to the Collingwood dry dock?

Mr. FIELDING. No, that dock was constructed under the present Act and that transaction is closed. Of course the dock might be enlarged, but we have no such proposal before us.

Mr. LENNOX. Would this cover the case of the enlargement of a dry dock and how would the basis be arrived at in the case of enlargement? Take the Collingwood dry dock. Suppose the company should spend an additional sum in order to enlarge it, on what would you base your additional subsidy?

Mr. FIELDING. If they propose to enlarge the dock, they would be entitled to an additional subsidy, but would have to come under the condition with respect to non-operation. Under the existing contract they are only entitled to a subsidy so long as the dock continues in operation. Under the new Act, the government would have the right to take over the dock. Should they extend the dock, they would come under the new Act both for the extension and the portion already built. You could not separate the two.

Mr. SPROULE. If for instance, the Collingwood Company desired to enlarge their dock and applied for an additional subsidy under this would the government then take over that dock ?

Mr. FIELDING. Only in the event of failure to operate.

Mr. SPROULE. Suppose that after enlarging they proposed to operate the same as before, on what basis would you then grant an additional subsidy ?

Mr. FIELDING. They would have to receive an additional subsidy under the terms of this Act. They would get a subsidy for twenty years on the additional amount and that would be a fixed and definite subsidy under the provisions of this Act. In order to avail themselves of that subsidy, they would be obliged to give the government the right to take over not the new work alone but the whole dock, because there could not be any distinction between the two.

Mr. SPROULE. But if they desired to continue to own the dock ?

Mr. FIELDING. Then under the present law we do not interfere with them. Even if the government took it over they would not own it but would only operate it temporarily.

Mr. SPROULE. Would you base the additional subsidy on the cost of the extension or upon the valuation of your engineer of the works, including the site ?

Mr. FIELDING. The cost would have to have reference entirely to the proposed new work. The work of the past is disposed of. I understand the company to have received all the subsidy to which they are entitled. If they proposed additional work then only the cost of the additional work would be considered.

Mr. SPROULE. And that would be upon the basis of the valuation of the government's own engineer ?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, the engineer would have to examine and report in order to fix the subsidy.

On section 2—interpretation,

Mr. FIELDING. I beg to move to amend this section by adding the words :

And 'dry dock' includes floating dock.

I do not think this is absolutely necessary but it is well to remove possible doubts. Marine docks are now being constructed largely under the system of floating docks, and we want to make it clear that if it is thought well to build a floating dock it will be included under the Act. It has been so interpreted now, but we want to make it clear beyond all doubt.

On section 3—basis of subsidy.

Mr. SPROULE. There seems to be no time limit. Suppose you make annual payments——

Mr. FIELDING. It is twenty years, the same as the old Act.

Mr. SPROULE. What do they receive for the Collingwood dry dock per annum ?

Mr. FIELDING. The figures were given in a previous discussion.

Mr. LENNOX. I think it is $15,000 a year.

Mr. FIELDING. I shall be pleased to get the figures before the Bill is disposed of.

Mr. SPROULE. It does not seem necessary for the parties who are enlarging to show any data as to the cost, it is all left to the judgment of the engineer.

Mr. FIELDING. Necessarily the engineer will have to receive the representations made by the company, with their plans, &c.; this would have to be submitted to the examination and inquiry of the engineer. I fancy it would require the co-operation of the company and the engineer.

Mr. SPROULE. The actual cost and an estimate are different things.

Mr. FIELDING. The actual cost could only be determined when the work is completed ; but in order to fix the cost for subsidy purposes it is necessary to come as near to it as possible in advance and that is the provision of the Bill.

Mr. SPROULE. Would that be changed in the light of experience ?

Mr. FIELDING. No, the engineer in his report would have to be careful not to place the estimate too high, because you give a guarantee to the financial people of a certain amount at certain times. Difficulty arises from the necessity of fixing the subsidy in advance.

Mr. SPROULE. That would be the case if a company is investing money but with a few individuals building it on the strength of preliminary arrangements made with the government on the basis of a valuation with a condition that they be paid three per cent on the cost of it, then after the completion of the dock the actual cost could be obtained from data furnished during the construction and the payment could be made on that.

Mr. FIELDING. The very essence of this is that you shall be able to give financial people absolute certainty of so much money at certain times. If the government were to allow that payment to be fixed on an excessive valuation that would be improper; that would realize the danger which my hon. friend suggests. We would have to see that the report of the engineer was carefully made, and did not value the property in excess of its real value.

Mr. LENNOX. This does not seem to go on the same principle as the last Act. Reading subsection 2 of section 4, the basis of the subsidy would appear to be as the minister suggests, that the chief engineer of the department shall make a careful estimate, before the work is executed, as to the probable expense, and upon that the government shall base a subsidy that shall be final. That would appear to be in accordance with the wording of the section. But I know as a matter of fact that under the old Act, after the work had been executed the government sent an engineer to value the work, and by the valuation of the engineer and by the examination of the accounts, the government ascertained what was the actual cost. I do not know whether there is any reason for changing the system. Take the case of Collingwood. After all the work was executed, Mr. Coste, I think it was, examined the work and determined that a certain amount must necessarily have been expended. Also certain accountants went into the matter and went over the books and papers so far as they could be obtained for the purpose of ascertaining where the money had been actually expended. I think that was in accordance with the old Act. Is there any reason for departing from that principle? Is not that a better principle than this merely preliminary estimate before the work is executed?

Mr. FIELDING. I rather think that the old system was the better one. But the difficulty has been that it leaves an element of uncertainty as to the payment of the subsidy. Although that did not avail against the Collingwood dock, it has been found to avail against other schemes of docks. The Collingwood people were willing to construct a dock under these terms. There was some discussion last year over the Collingwood dock. I am not familiar with the details, but I know that the essence of the old arrangement was that the cost was determined by a report of the engineer at the time of completion, and on that the subsidy was paid. Now it has been found that financial people who have been asked to assist another dock scheme, particularly the one at St. John, N.B., people who were disposed to put money into it, said, Well, we are financial people but we are not dock operators, and we do not want to be called upon to take the risk of this dock being operated to the satisfaction of the government; we think the government should make some arrangement for the operation of the dock. It is to meet that difficulty that this change has been made. Therefore we propose to have a report made by the engineer at the beginning, and in view of the facts suggested by hon. gentlemen opposite, we shall satisfy ourselves that the report is a very conservative report, and thereupon a valuation shall be fixed. Then we shall say to the financial people, We have satisfied ourselves that this dock will cost say a million dollars, and we will agree to give you 3 per cent upon that million dollars for twenty years, and we undertake by another method to look after the operation of the dock. It is to meet that condition that the change was made.

On section 6,

Mr. BICKERDIKE. I think the minister has made the time limit rather short when the purpose is to get new docks. I can understand that docks already in operation would take advantage of the time for enlarging them, but is there a sufficient inducement for capital to take hold of a new dock in a guarantee of twenty year bonds at 3 per cent? Unless the minister may have some information I have not got, I think it will be difficult to find capitalists willing to build docks with such a limited guarantee as twenty years.

Mr. FIELDING. I should not like to make the conditions too hard, because the object is to secure the construction of docks at appropriate places. On the other hand, I would not like to make the conditions so easy that people would be tempted to go into the enterprise as a pure speculation. It is well that people should look at the matter carefully, and be content with a moderate guarantee such as the government gives them, and look for a balance out of the operation of the dock itself. The subsidy originally allowed was only 2 per cent, we increased that some years ago to 3 per cent. A twenty-year subsidy of 3 per cent is a fairly strong inducement for people to put money into an enterprise where there is a commercial basis for it. They would have to look for the development of trade for their compensation over and above this twenty years. But unless there is that condition of trade which gives promise of some revenue to the dock, then it is not desirable that the dock should be constructed. We do not want to make it so easy for docks to be constructed that the construction shall be undertaken at numerous places where there is not really business for them.

Mr. SPROULE. And especially in view of the fact that the tendency of money is always downwards. Three per cent is not a bad interest on money, it is all the interest that banks will allow. Three per cent for twenty years would indemnify a company for going into the enterprise.

Mr. FIELDING. I think it is a fair inducement.

On section 13.—The Dry Docks Subsidies Act, chapter 116 of the Revised Statutes, 1906, is repealed.

Mr. LENNOX. If you repeal the Act how do you deal with those docks that are now in existence ?

Mr. FIELDING. I would think that the agreement that we have made, for example, with the Collingwood dock under the Act existing at the time would continue. But, if there is any doubt about the matter I would be glad to take the hon. gentleman's suggestion into consideration. We have no desire to prevent payment to existing docks. If my hon. friend really thinks that it is open to doubt I will let the Bill stand in committee. It is one of those questions with regard to which we should make assurance doubly sure and I should be very glad to let the Bill stand and ask the Department of Justice to look into it.

Mr. LENNOX. The agreement depends upon the statute and usually in repealing a statute you substitute something in its place.

Mr. FIELDING. I am obliged to my hon. friend for the suggestion and I will have it considered.

Mr. SPROULE. It does not seem to me that clause 9 provides that you should be paid for any outlay besides operating expenses and maintenance. Suppose you have an initial outlay of $10,000 or $20,000 to put a dock in condition after you take it over; then you can only pay for the advances which have been made out of operating expenses and maintenance.

Mr. FIELDING. Read the last portion of section 9. It says that the government shall apply the balance first in repayment of the advances made under the next preceding section and secondly in payment of accrued interest on bonds. But the working expenses must be the first charge. In order to have the cow give milk, the cow must live. You must have working expenses in the first place and anything over and above that is applied to two things, first, to the payment of government advances and, next, to the payment of interest on bonds, if there are any outstanding.

Progress reported.

ADJOURNMENT—BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. FIELDING moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What business will be taken up to-morrow ?

Mr. FIELDING. We will proceed with the adjourned debate on the motion for Supply and the amendment of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk).

Mr. SPROULE. I wish before the House adjourns to call attention to one fact. It seems to be unusual that the government should go on with any other work when a motion of want of confidence is still undisposed of. I think it is unheard of in the British parliament that any minister should attempt to carry on any work except to dispose of a motion of want of confidence so as to show parliament and the country that the government retained the confidence of the majority of the members of the House.

Mr. FIELDING. That only shows what a very obliging and accommodating government we have in Canada. When we proposed on the last sitting day to take up to-day the adjourned debate, the whip of the Conservative party, and who at that time was leading the opposition, asked the government as a special consideration not to proceed with the debate to-day because a number of hon. members on that side of the House could not find it convenient to be here and he asked that we should proceed with the Bills and let the debate stand over until to-morrow. I hope we did not create any violent convulsion to the constitution, and if we have done so it has been on account of our desire to accommodate hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. SPROULE. It is in keeping with the government's management of the House generally.

Mr. FIELDING. We had better not be so obliging.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 11.20 p.m.

IMMIGRANTS DEPORTED.

Mr. CLEMENTS asked:

Upon whose authority or complaint from the city of Chatham, did the government take action in deporting five families recently from the city of Chatham?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). Attention was drawn to these cases in a general way by Mr. F. J. Naftel, manager of the Bank of Montreal, Chatham, on behalf of the charity associations of that city. Immigration officer Robert Boston was then sent to investigate and the department acted on his report in each case.

3. What was the date of the appointment of the new agent, and of his assistants, and what are their qualifications?

4. What are the respective salaries of each?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior):

1. It is proposed to superannuate Mr. Doyle on the 15th instant, on account of age, and consequent inability to discharge properly the duties of his office.

DUTIES ON COAL, ETC.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN asked:

1. Why is coke, which is a manufactured article, imported free, while coal from which coke is manufactured, and which is a raw material, is heavily taxed?

2. Does the government intend to refund to Canadian manufacturers of coke the duty on the coal from which it is made?

3. Why are makers of binder twine allowed to import coal free, while the same privilege is refused to producers of gas.

4. Why is coal tar, which is a manufactured article, imported free, while coal which is used by the Canadian manufacturer of coal tar, is subject to a heavy duty?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). With reference to these three questions all of which are asked by the hon. member for Hamilton, I desire to say that it is necessary to consider the tariff as a whole and it would be obviously inconvenient to discuss isolated items. My hon. friend will see that these are rather difficult questions to answer, dealing with isolated items alone.

QUEBEC BRIDGE COMMISSION REPORT.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. When may we expect the report of the Quebec Bridge Commission in printed form? It is a long time since it was first presented to the House.

Hon. G. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals). I am afraid it will be quite a long time yet. It was only yesterday that I presented to the House the last appendix to that report. It is a very elaborate report, there are a great many drawings attached and we are trying to include all in the report so that it will be complete.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. May I ask whether a report which can be presented by itself could not be printed by itself and placed upon the table of the House.

Mr. GRAHAM. I will make inquiry as to that. The report is not only of importance to the House but judging from the correspondence and the inquiries I have received it will be of vast importance to the engineering world and we are anxious to make it as complete as possible so that in connection with the catastrophe those interested in the scientific aspect may get what lessons there are to be derived from it. I will make inquiry to see whether a portion of the report, or the main report possibly cannot be procured for the information of the House.

THE TRENT CANAL.

Mr. LENNOX. When may we expect the report of the engineer who surveyed the line of the Trent canal from Kempenfeldt bay? I think the survey was made last year It will be remembered that there were two propositions as to the outlet of the canal, one by way of the Severn river and the other from Kempenfeldt bay which is part of Lake Simcoe, through, by way of the Nottawasaga river to the Georgian bay. The survey has been made and I would like to know when we may expect the report.

Mr. GRAHAM. I will look into it.

THE NATIONAL TRANSCONTINENTAL RAILWAY—MAJOR HODGINS.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Might I renew the question which I addressed yesterday to the Prime Minister as to the intentions of the government respecting the letter of Major Hodgins respecting the construction of the National Transcontinental Railway?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. This morning I again telephoned to ascertain whether Mr. Parent, the chairman of the commission, had returned. I was informed that he had not yet returned, but that he was expected to return to-day. If my hon. friend will renew his question to-morrow I shall be in a position to give him an answer.

THE CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION.

Mr. BERGERON. I wish to ask the government if the translation of the report and evidence of the Royal Commission on the Civil Service is proceeding, and if instructions have been given to have it translated as soon as possible?

Mr. FIELDING. No instructions have been given. It was presumed that the usual course would be followed of translating all public documents promptly. I am not aware of any difficulty in the way, but it was not a matter about which we thought it necessary to give any instructions.

Mr. BERGERON. In case the work of translation is not going on, will my hon. friend be kind enough to see that it is proceeded with as soon as possible?

Mr. FIELDING. Now that the hon. gentleman has called attention to the matter, I have no doubt that the officers of the House will attend to it.

Mr. BRODEUR. I was informed the other day by one of the officers of the House that the translation was being proceeded with.

ANGLO-AMERICAN TREATY.

Mr. MONK. I would like to ask the government if any draft of the convention signed at Washington between the British government and the United States government was submitted to this government before it was signed?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes. The correspondence will be brought down as soon as we are in a position to bring it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Might I ask the Prime Minister whether he has received any reply to the telegram which was dispatched yesterday to the British embassy at Washington?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I have received no answer yet.

CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION—JUSTICE CASSELS.

Mr. NORTHRUP. Before the orders of the day are called, I wish to inquire if the Mr. Perron who has been appointed a counsel to appear before Mr. Justice Cassels in the investigation of the Department of Marine and Fisheries is the Mr. Perron who is a partner in the firm of Préfontaine, Archer, Perron & Taschereau, of which the late Mr. Préfontaine, Minister of Marine and Fisheries, was the head ?

Mr. BRODEUR. I understand that Mr. Perron was for a very short time in partnership with Mr. Préfontaine several years ago, before he became a minister.

Mr. NORTHRUP. Might I inquire if it has come under the consideration of the government that it might be advisable that some counsel should be appointed to appear before the commission on behalf of the people of Canada?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I will take that into consideration, Mr. Speaker.

DREDGING CONTRACTS.

Mr. BENNETT. I wish to ask the Minister of Public Works if he will to-day lay on the table of the House the order in council he referred to about a week ago in reference to dredging contracts and also the report of the chief engineer which he also promised on that occasion to bring down?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I gave my hon. friend the information as to this yesterday. I stated that when the matter was previously before the House, I had said that the question of extending the time for the completion of certain contracts was under consideration. I also said that since the matter had come before the House I had come to the conclusion not to extend the time, but to ask for new tenders, and under these circumstances I did not think it was proper or at all material to lay on the table of the House an order in council which had been cancelled.

Mr. BENNETT. On that point I would appeal to the Speaker as to whether it is not clearly laid down in the rules of the House that, the minister having stated that there was an order in council and having based an argument upon it, that order in council must be laid on the table. The rule will be found at page 461 of Bourinot.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think that rule should have been invoked at the time the discussion took place.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The rule was not quoted, but it was invoked, because the minister was asked in accordance with it to bring down the order in council.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I may say that I will consider the matter. I did not think yesterday and do not think now that it is of any consequence to bring down this order or any other order that has been rescinded. But I will consider the matter until to-morrow.

Mr. SPEAKER. The rule of course is plain. If a minister refers to a public document it should be laid on the table of the House. I do not now recall that the rule was invoked at the time of the discussion. If it had been, I would of course have stated that that was the effect of it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. All I said about it was in answer to a question put by the hon. gentleman. He asked if an order in council had been passed, and I gave an explanation in answer to his question.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. As a matter of fact, the minister made a distinct promise to bring the order in council down. If he refers to 'Hansard' he will find that I am absolutely correct in that statement.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman is quite right. But the discussion went on without waiting for the order in council, and since that time the order has been rescinded.

SUPPLY—IMMIGRATION.

House resumed adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Fielding: That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair for the House to go into Committee of Supply, and the proposed amendment of Mr. Monk thereto.

Mr. G. H. McINTYRE (South Perth). Mr. Speaker, the debate on the question before the House has been so interrupted and broken by other matters intervening and by the Easter holidays that it may be appropriate to read the amendment which has been moved by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk). It is as follows:

> While recognizing the importance of legitimate, well directed efforts to encourage desirable immigration, this House declares that it is time to cease paying a bounty at so much per head to agents for immigrants coming to Canada.

It will be noticed, Sir, that the hon. member for Jacques Cartier favours immigration while desiring it to be of a good class. That is a very natural desire in a new country. It is a desire that has been shown in Canada at all times under all governments. We cannot expect any new country to make headway and prosper if it simply depends upon a natural increase. I can quite sympathize with the hon. member for Jacques Cartier in his desire that the immigrants to this country should be of a desirable class. With many of the arguments that he advanced I agree; with many of the desires he expressed I have the very strongest sympathy. With some of the statements made I do not find myself in agreement, and I will take the liberty of criticising them as I proceed. It is true, Sir, that we have a fine field to offer for immigration in this country. Probably no finer field exists throughout the world than Canada offers at the present time. In addition to that we have made an excellent start in this country, and if, with the fine field and the excellent start, we could gather from the world and bring into this country the strong, the clean, the moral, the intellectual, the active, there is no telling how fine a country we might make. There is every necessary feature in the circumstances to allow us to almost reach Utopia. What is it then that we may not accomplish? I think the real fact is this, that these choicest spirits whom we would like to bring into this country are not easily obtained. They are a class of fruit that does not grow on every tree, even in Canada. They are not particularly numerous in other lands and not easy to obtain, because in the countries where they exist they are too useful to be easily spared. Therefore when we view the matter in that way, we realize that we can only do the best we can under the circumstances and not expect to secure the very finest people of all countries. We must realize that we have either to depend upon our natural increase or be satisfied with the best available material in other lands to help us to develop our own. Members of this House will agree on consideration, that in bringing immigration into Canada we are not likely immediately to improve the character of Canadian citizenship. We must face that as something to be accepted. If we have made progress, if we have improved on our original stock, if our environment, laws and customs have improved that stock, we are not going to immediately improve it still more by bringing in people from other countries, so that, granting the necessity of immigration, we have to accept it on the understanding that the newcomers are not going immediately to improve the character of our citizenship. I have often felt in favour of exclusiveness myself. One gets to like his own people. We feel that we have grown up with the country, that we belong to it and it to us, and we are inclined to resent the intrusion of others whose point of view is not exactly our own. But when we look at the circumstances, when we realize that the country requires immigrants, when we realize that every settler in our Northwest requires a neighbour to assist him in making roads, building schools, paying taxes, and increasing the value of property, when we recognize that every settler had a tacit agreement or understanding with this government when he took up land, that this government would do everything to provide him with neighbours, we are bound to admit that no effort should be spared to fill up the country. Every transportation company wants immigrants, so does every manufacturing establishment and wholesale merchant. All these combined influences are so naturally strong that they are almost, if not entirely, irresistible. I know that necessity does not make for quality. It is left perhaps for a few idealists, such as my hon. friends from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) and Montmagny (Mr. Lavergne), to raise the cry for quality rather than quantity; but if my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) were Minister of the Interior, he would no more be able to resist the cry for immigrants and for the filling up of our new country than is the present Minister of the Interior. But we ought all to welcome every plea made for the improvement of the class of immigrants coming to our country.

My hon. friend from Jacques Cartier has chosen as his point of attack on the government the question of bonuses. The Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) says that the bonus is not given to assist immigrants to come to this country but as a means of advertising this country and as a stimulus to the booking agents to forward a good class of settlers. I notice also that there is a difference between the amendment moved this session by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) and that moved last session by my hon. friend from Montmagny (Mr. Lavergne). The present amendment simply declares that the time has come when we should cease paying a bounty to agents for immigrants coming to Canada. No reason is given why these bounties should cease, but last session my hon. friend from Montmagny (Mr. Lavergne) gave specific reasons why they should be discontinued. But though any specific reason is absent on the present occasion, the same reason which the hon. member for Montmagny urged last session appears all through the line of argument of my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk). So that we may take it for granted that the same reason exists this year in the mind of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) as existed last year in the mind of the hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. Lavergne). There is, however, a change of form, and sometimes a change from one season to another in the form of an amendment may indicate a change of mind. It may indicate that those who favour the cessation of the bounty system realize that the point of attack made last session was not effective. But while the argument of the mover of the amendment was along the same lines, I felt, as I listened to it, that the bounty itself, much as it occupied his time, does not represent the real strong reason for the position he took. It seemed to me that running through his argument there was an expression of doubt or fear with regard to our whole immigration policy. The bonus is simply one part of that policy, and I would not consider it a vital or essential part. It is only one feature and it may have its weaknesses. The real strong features of our immigration policy are the advertising of the country, the spreading of information, the offer of land to the immigrant, and the giving of that land on easy terms. These are the strong features of an immigration policy and the bonus, though important in a way, is merely incidental. It was shown last year how an immigration policy could really adapt itself to the necessities of the time and the varying circumstances in different countries. We had last year an effective speech from the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver), and after listening to his argument and that of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) I was forced to the conclusion that the attack on our immigration policy, because of its bonusing feature, was not at all conclusive.

If you take the actual number of immigrants on whom bonuses were paid, you will find that in 1896 the total number of immigrants was 16,835 and that bonuses were paid on 4,384. The amount has gradually grown until in 1907-8, out of 235,328, bonuses were paid on 20,516. It will be seen that the bonus was paid on about one in every twelve immigrants. On the face of it then, the bonus is not really so important a feature in our immigration policy as to demand more especially the attack of our opponents. It does not appear to me to be the vulnerable point in our immigration policy and I cannot understand why my hon. friend should have directed his attack on that particular feature.

If you look at the whole series of years in which 1,209,000 immigrants arrived and bonuses were paid to the amount of $1,248,000, you will see that we paid on only about one in five of these immigrants. The percentage since then has been decreasing, as, last year, we paid on only one in twelve. Now, if that circumstance were really widely known and understood by our people, I think there would be quite a change in their attitude, quite a changed feeling towards the immigration policy. That it is not widely known is perhaps partly our fault. I do not know how widely our friends of the opposition have endeavoured to disseminate such a thought, but I know that, in the ordinary political warfare, while a man of ability may be trusted to present his own side of the case in a favourable light, it is not always possible for him to present the opposing side in a light that will satisfy that side. Therefore, I have felt that the presentation in many of the newspaper articles has not quite done us justice. And I have heard many speakers tell of very striking cases of immigrants who were evidently undesirable, and, after dwelling on that subject for some time, with a wave of the hand declare that this is the class of people on whom we pay bonuses. The oratorical effect was there. But, as a matter of statistics, would it not be more accurate to say that on one of twelve of these we paid bonuses ? Yet my hon. friends did not take the trouble to do that. It is left for us to point out what the exact facts are.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. May I point out to my hon. friend (Mr. G. H. McIntyre) that the information to which he refers was elicited in response to a question put by the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain) on the 19th of March last.

Mr. G. H. McINTYRE. To that extent, we are indebted to the hon. member for Peel.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. And to no one else.

Mr. G. H. McINTYRE. Yes, and, perhaps, somewhat unconsciously, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blain) has benefited us to that extent. Whether he did it intentionally or otherwise, we should thank him for eliciting that information. For the nine months ending December 31, 1907, we received 235,328 immigrants. We paid bonuses upon 20,516. It will be seen that this, again, is about one in twelve. Now, I have pointed out that, in the minds of the people, and in the speeches by most of the members on this subject, especially those who oppose the government there is a quiet assumption that the bonus is paid on all immigrants.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. No.

Mr. G. H. McINTYRE. My hon. friend from Montmagny (Mr. Armand Lavergne) does not agree. I do not charge it as a specific attempt to mislead the people or misstate the position, but the case as stated is : There are the immigrants and on immigrants of this class a bonus is paid.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. If my hon. friend (Mr. G. H. McIntyre) will allow me : I think we tried to make it clear that the bonus was paid to booking agents for advertising purposes, and that the advertising attracted a variety of people, but especially the more destitute—that is where the danger lies

Mr. G. H. McINTYRE. But, proceeding along the line on which I was going, my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) who, I regret, is not in his place, is one of the fairest minded men in the House. He has spoken on this matter. I have a quotation or two from his address, which, to my mind, shows that he has rather failed to reach to that point of perfection where one places his opponent's arguments in a way that would strike that opponent as fair and just. The hon. gentleman was dealing with a case in which 8,500 immigrants who came into Canada within one year passed into the United States. He pointed out that of this number some 500 were rejected for various causes, this argument being used to show that the restrictions upon immigrants in the United States were more severe than in Canada and that we had allowed undesirable immigrants to come in. And, with regard to these 500 immigrants that were rejected, he said that we had these immigrants in Canada at the present time. But he accepted his information on the subject from the American returns. Who these 8,500 immigrants were he did not know, by what ships they came he did not know. He did not know in what part of Canada they had settled. And yet, when he is asked by the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) whether we paid a bonus on these 500 immigrants that were rejected, his answer is 'No doubt we did. No doubt they came within the classes, so very extensive and comprehensive, upon which we pay bonuses.' Now, will he not, upon a little consideration, think that language rather strong ? If you gathered all the immigrants who came into Canada last year in one place, only one in twelve of them could be pointed out as immigrants for whom bonuses had been paid. If you choose out a single immigrant, the only thing you can say is that the chances are eleven to one that no bonus was paid for him—the chances are against a bonus having been paid upon any particular person. Now, can the hon. member (Mr. Monk) say that 'no doubt' we paid a bonus on these 500 and more who were rejected? Nor does the hon. member stop there. Speaking of the 8,000 who were refused entry into the United States, but passed into that country, he said :

On these no doubt the government paid a bonus. Why should they not? If these people were booked from England or any other country in which we grant a bonus to immigrants of certain classes—very comprehensive classes—the booking agent got his bonus on them when they came here, and they afterwards went to the United States.

There is an entire assumption that the bonus was paid on every one of these 8,000 immigrants. I can read it in no other way. I cannot concede this as a fair statement of the case, nor is it putting our own statement in the light in which we think it should be placed. Again, touching on the same point —the presentation of our case (if I may call it our case) in the light in which we think it should be viewed—let me point out that the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) in dealing with the matter of bonuses said :

When we spent from $20,000 to $100,000 on immigration, though the bonusing system may have existed, but it amounted to a negligible quantity. But to-day, when we spend over $1,000,000 on immigration, a large portion of it in bonuses, it becomes an important question.

'A large portion of it in bonuses.' Now, my hon. friend knows the use of English words. Now, what is the impression given by 'a large portion' of $1,000,000. Let me give the hon. gentleman's own figures as to what was paid. The table quoted by the hon. gentleman shows that for the nine months of 1907-8, the bonus paid on British immigrants was $84,495, on continental immigrants $34,619 and on United States immigrants $3,963, making a total of $123,077. Can that be said to be, under the circumstances, and using the argument as my hon. friend did, 'a large portion' of $1,000,000 ?

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. Does that include payments to the North Atlantic Trading Company ?

Mr. G. H. McINTYRE. These are the figures given by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier showing the amount of bonuses paid on immigrants for the period stated. I give the figures just as the hon. gentleman gave them.

Now, Sir, I realize that even these lapses —so I call them—from the class of statement we think would fairly present our case, are not as strong or as striking as we have sometimes heard. But we do not measure my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier by ordinary standards ; we give a special standard to a man of that class. I would tell the hon. gentleman that we give him a very high standard indeed and I believe that if he simply held to his own standard we would find in the revised version of 'Hansard,' a modification of some of these statements.

Again, Sir, touching on that same question, upon the presentation of your opponent's case in the light in which you think it ought to be viewed, I will take a statement of the hon. minister's which I find headed in large letters in the 'Hansard' :

Statement showing what proportion of our immigrants go upon the free lands of the Northwest.

Notice the heading, 'Statement showing what proportion of our immigrants go upon the free lands of the Northwest.' Evidencing his intent the sentence preceding it begins :

Let me give briefly a statement showing what proportion of our immigrants go upon the free lands of the Northwest, the increase in the number of homestead entries, the total immigration and the percentage of the homestead increase to the total immigration for each year from 1896 until the present.

How does the hon. gentleman ascertain that proportion or percentage? He has taken the total number of homestead entries in a year and the total number of immigrants and ascertained the percentage of the homesteads to the immigrants. Thus he shows in his last year's statement 25,281 homestead entries, 235,328 immigrants, percentage 11. Then by the heading of his statement we have 11 per cent of our immigrants of last year go upon the free lands of the Northwest. That is the statement my hon. friend has sent abroad through 'Hansard.' Is that, I ask my hon. friend, a really correct statement of the facts? Have only 11 per cent of our immigrants gone upon the free lands of the Northwest? Is it not a well known rule that a married man may take a homestead but that his wife or his children may not? Is it not a well known rule that you must count at least two and a half people on the land for every homestead? Does not the farmer's son, not yet of age to take a homestead, go upon the lands? I am inclined to believe that he feels he is very mush on the land, as he sweats in the eye of Phœbus and sleeps in Elysium. I think that far more have gone upon the lands than the figures of the hon. gentleman would indicate. I would eliminate the introductory sentence, I would eliminate from that statement the heading in large letters:

Statement showing what proportion of our immigrants go upon the free lands of the Northwest.

I think I would wipe out the whole statement, because for the purpose in view, the figures are altogether misleading. Thus I think that in this case my hon. friend has scarcely done the minister that justice which the Minister of the Interior would have been able to do himself.

Touching on that question of the 8,500 immigrants who passed from Canada within a year to the United States I would like to present one thought. We have been told that the restrictions on immigration into the United States are more stringent than those on immigration into Canada. I may say that has been my own impression, but I know that the mere technical reading of a restriction does not decide the matter; it is the actual working out of the system that decides. However, if you grant that the restrictions into the United States are a little more stringent than ours, let us see how it has worked out in connection with these emigrants who went to the United States through Canada. The hon. member says that 8,500 passed in. Who were they? My hon. friend does not know. Who were they likely to be? Are the best immigrants who come into this land lying around idle. The best of them are at work. Is it not a fair inference that the 8,500 were not the best who came to this country? If, within a year, these 8,500 did not settle in this country, did not find work and do well, if they were of the class of people who could not fit in, we may fairly claim, without any straining of the argument, that they were of the less desirable of those who came in. And yet of these less desirables, facing the more stringent regulations of the United States if you will, 8,500 passed in without any question apparently, and only 500 of this class were rejected. I hold, in view of the possibility or the probability that these were the least desirable of our immigrants, that we may fairly congratulate the Minister of the Interior on the evidence shown by this that he has been fairly successful in getting us a good class of immigrants.

My hon. friend from Montmagny (Mr. A. Lavergne) has dwelt very strongly, more strongly possibly than my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk), upon the fact that the bonus stimulates the undesirable rather than the desirable to come to this country. The bonus does stimulate the undesirables; it is unavoidable that in the very process of stimulating the desirable you will stimulate the undesirable. Every step you take to advertise your country stimulates the undesirable as well as the desirable to come here.

Mr. A. LAVERGNE. Hear, hear.

Mr. G. H. McINTYRE. You cannot give publicity without doing it, you cannot let your country be known without reaching the undesirable and stimulating him to come to you. It has been frequently said that the best immigration agent is the successful settler, but the successful settler stimulates the undesirable as well as the desirable. It is inevitable, the news cannot be concealed from the undesirable, he knows the advantage of Canada and everything that stimulates the desirable will attract the attention of the undesirable and stimulate him as well. That is a condition which we have to face, and there is where I think my hon. friends have failed to see the real danger in immigration, the real point to be safeguarded. If I were inclined to suggest that the thought in the mind of my hon. friend who is moving this amendment (Mr. Monk) is political gain, then his suggestion that the bonus is paid to everybody would perhaps be good politics, but I do not think that any one who carefully and calmly examines the question will find that the bonus is the serious matter, the serious matter is the restriction at the port of entry into Canada, the sieve through which you pass the immigrants, the test you make. You must expect that the undesirable in other lands will hear of this good land as rapidly as the desirable. Dealing with the bounty system and the effect of the bonus in stimulating the undesirable rather than the desirable, let me read to my hon. friend the opinion of a very hon. gentleman in this House who spoke on the matter. I may say that I agree entirely with the views expressed. The words are:

> It does not seem to me that the payment of bonuses in itself has any tendency to bring in a less rather than a more desirable class of people into this country; that would depend altogether upon the way you worked it out.

Mr. EMMERSON. Who was that?

Mr. G. H. McINTYRE. The name is R. L. Borden. I know. Sir, that I cannot claim that the hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. A. Lavergne) should obey that hon. gentleman and I know further that my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) in speaking in that way had not had the benefit of the argument of my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk). Neither at that time nor on this occasion did he hear that argument and he will be at liberty to act as he at present thinks right. But, I can tell my hon. friend from Montmagny that he had the opportunity to convince the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) and in that case he failed. I agree entirely with the views expressed in a portion of his speech by the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden). I think those views were absolutely sound. Again, taking up that very matter of the payment of bonuses and applying it more strictly to the amendment here, I wish to point out that on that occasion the hon. leader of the opposition had not been converted—whether he is now or not I do not know—it is for him to say—to the view that the bonus system should not be used. The words that he used on that occasion were these:

In a word, I would be inclined to restrict our efforts so far as the system of bonusing is concerned to the people of the British Isles.

But, the hon. member for Jacques Cartier does not restrict it in that way. I am sorry that the hon. leader of the opposition has not had the benefit of his argument, but we will be able to see later on whether my hon. friend, as he will have the right to, and as he has had a year to think over the matter, has changed his views. But, I will say in regard to the amendment of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier that the time will come when all this House will agree with it. I believe the time will come when we will no longer have reason to pay bonuses to secure immigration. The question is: Has that time come now?

Mr. A. LAVERGNE. That is the opinion of the Minister of the Interior.

Mr. G. H. McINTYRE. That is virtually the question at the present time and it is a question of judgment. The bonus is not a vital and essential part; it has been a very valuable part, and it has done its work, and in many ways good work. But while I have no particular prejudice for or against a bonus, except in so far as it aids our chances to do good work in the majority of cases, rather than take my hon. friend's view in favour of abolishing the bonus I think that we should improve the character of the immigration, that we should endeavour to get the finest of other lands to come to us and in order to do that I would not only retain the bonus but I would double and treble it. What are the results to-day? Have we suffered very much from the present system of immigration? While it is true that there have been cases of immigrants not behaving well, while there have been cases of suffering largely through people not understanding our country, perhaps coming out in the autumn when they should come in the spring, we are not really suffering in Ontario, Quebec or the maritime provinces. If I look then to what is the actual condition of affairs in the west, if I take the figures that were given us in 1906, in Alberta I find that it then had a population of 185,412. Of that 185,412, which was the beginning of the province, there were British born people to the number of 111,138. It was a matter of surprise to me when I first ascertained these figures. I could hardly think them correct. It had struck me that with the influx of population from all countries the proportion of British born would not have been so great as 111,138. In addition to that, of United States immigrants, there were 43,000, making a total of 154,138. The balance from all other countries numbered 31,274. That can only be considered as an excellent start for any province. It by no means gives cause for anxiety. If we take the figures which have in the past been given us in regard to the increase of population in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, taking the years 1901 to 1906, in which year a census was taken, we find that there was an increase of 389,351. Of that increase British born people numbered 239,044, or 62 per cent of the whole increase were British born. Of the remainder, 71,000 came from the United States, or 18 per cent, leaving only 20 per cent of an increase altogether from all other sources combined. There again, sir, I feel that there is no cause for anxiety.

Mr. A. LAVERGNE. Will my hon. friend allow me to read him this? The sentences were pronounced at the assizes in the city of Montreal yesterday, and I see by the Montreal 'Gazette' to-day that about four-fifths of those who were condemned were immigrants. I will read the names if my hon. friend desires me to do so.

Mr. G. H. McINTYRE. I will accept my hon. friend's word without his naming them. There can be no doubt that in the immigration which is coming to this country there will be found many undesirables, but my hon. friend must bear this in mind that at the present moment we are not so entirely considering the character of all the immigrants who come in as the effect of the bonusing system upon immigration.

Mr. A. LAVERGNE. Railway labouring men are bonused, most of them are Italians, and most of the immigrants condemned are Italians; therefore, I must say that the immigrants who are condemned are the bonused ones.

Mr. G. H. McINTYRE. In so far as Italian immigration is concerned we are paying no bonus on Italian immigrants as settlers. We are paying no bonus whatever on them, but from the very necessities of the case, in as much as we must open up our country and prepare means of transportation, we must get somebody to do that work. We apparently cannot get railway navvies from any other country than Italy. There was a time when railway companies were able to get railway navvies elsewhere, but that appears to be no longer possible. While my hon. friend may be perfectly correct in saying that in a particular lot of Italian railway navvies we will find they have been bonused; that is one of the exceptions to our rules, and it is because of the necessity that we are under of building railways. We do not expect these people to become settlers but the necessity of building railways makes it necessary that we shall make an exception in this case. We must bonus incomers of that kind to build our roads and to open up our country. We realize in doing that that we may be bringing in many who are not so desirable, but these people will not likely become permanent settlers in our country.

Mr. OLIVER. May I just correct my hon. friend on that point? I wish to say, in order to clear the point up, that the bonus is paid on farmers, farm labourers and railway labourers, who are citizens of certain countries and who are of certain occupations in these countries. Italy is not one of these countries for whose citizens bonuses are paid.

Mr. A. LAVERGNE. I never said that these Italians came from Italy; they came from the slums of Liverpool and London.

Mr. BERGERON. Certainly.

Mr. G. H. McINTYRE. While many of our friends on the opposition side of the House can find instances in which immigrants have not behaved well, I feel satisfied that a fair examination of the conditions in Canada to-day does not show that the immigration population has been of such a character that this proposed change needs essentially to be adopted. Neither does it give cause to any one to make much of it, but unfortunately a case of this kind is likely to be much more prominent than that of the man who quietly settles down to work. But, up to the present time I repeat that we have no cause for anxiety. What are the probabilities for the future? My hon. friends have dealt strongly with that, and I suppose one man's guess may be as good as another's. It is a matter of conjecture. The danger will not come from the quantity, but the danger will come from the quality and the grouping and locating of these people. I would not in the least endeavour to belittle any words of warning in regard to the quality of the immigration that we are getting or of the danger that might come from the bringing in of undesirables. I accept all these words of warning, and I would treat them not with scorn, but with great care. Words of warning are frequently valuable. Taking the figures we find though that for the full calendar year 1907, Canada received 277,376 immigrants, and from Great Britain we received 132,060, or about 50 per cent of the whole amount of the immigration that came to Canada in the calendar year 1907. From the United States there came 56,690, leaving—and I am grouping it in that way for certain reasons which I think not unfair—leaving 88,000 from all other countries combined. Here again it will be seen, that there is not necessarily, from these figures, any fear that we are inundating our country with nationalities that may not be properly assimilated. I do not see that there is any danger of making of our country what my hon. friend from Montmagny (Mr. A. Lavergne) called a 'mongrel nation.' It is true that among the immigrants there are some we may have some doubt about. I myself in looking over the list and noticing there were 14,626 from Galicia, wondered whether these would make good citizens or not. In my reading on this matter I have found, however, that a very fair character has been given these people by the leader of the opposition, and I am willing to receive his recommendation. He has stated that the children of these people will probably prove the equal of the children of other nationalities. I have found among the number coming in 1907, 6,206 Russian Jews, and again I feel that these are perhaps not the class of people I would like to see coming in great numbers. I have found there were 13,076 Italians, and if among them there are a great number of railroad navvies as I suppose there are, they are doing a very necessary work even if some of them are not very desirable. I have found there came in 7,808 Japanese, and this I understand is an immigration that is not likely to continue to any marked extent. I have noticed that the German immigration that year was about 2,500. I regret indeed that the number is not larger, and I hope it may be possible to obtain more German immigrants. The general result is that of the various nationalities that came to this country in 1907, Britain sent 50 per cent, the United States the proportion I have mentioned already, and consequently I have not been able to feel that alarm which some of my friends feel at the existing condition of affairs. But the fear is expressed, that with the incoming tide we will not be able to assimilate these new people. I do not belittle that fear. There is a fear expressed that the incoming tide will weaken our Canadian character or our Canadian institutions or our aspirations or our point of view. It may be fair to ask: What do my hon. friends mean by assimilation in such a case? I presume that the phrase will mean different things for different people. And what is the Canadian character or temperament of which we speak and which we fear may be injured? I think, Sir, that when our ancestors, the early immigrants came to this country, Englishmen and Frenchmen, and took up their work here 100 years or two ago, they were not Canadians in any sense that we may term them. They were simply Englishmen and Frenchmen transplanted from their natural home. That is all. In the process of time, however, living here, influenced I would judge by further immigration, influenced by their work, by their climate, by their environment, they did gather some characteristics which they transmitted to us, and this we call the Canadian temperament. I fancy that is what we mean when we speak of the Canadian character. If we have been able to acquire such a character, temperament, disposition, traits, it is the result mostly of our environment. Do we think that environment properly applied may not have a similar effect upon other immigrants who come here? I think we may fairly expect that it shall. The results up to the present time have been fairly satisfactory in the character of our people. I do not undervalue the desire on the part of any one to retain a certain identity of character, although we must recognize that nations like individuals must grow, and from time to time change. But, Sir, we are far from being a homogeneous people. My hon. friend from Montmagny (Mr. Armand Lavergne), and I probably look upon matters in a different light. We naturally speak a different language, although I must congratulate my hon. friend on having the language of the two nationalities as has also my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk).

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. So have you.

Mr. G. H. McINTYRE. To a limited extent. But if I were to say to my French Canadian compatriot : You are not a Canadian, you do not speak the language I do, your point of view is different, you cannot be assimilated; I think he would laugh at me and say: If there is a Canadian at all I am he; I am Canadian and Canadian only. I have no other land but Canada to look to: This is my own, my native land.

And, just in the same way my hon. friend might say to me: You are not entirely Canadian because you do not speak the language I do. But, is either of us not assimilated, are we not both Canadians, is the matter of language or of a certain difference in our point of view, in any way to be considered; are we not assimilated as Canadians ? Take again the races whence the British people have sprung—is Britain a thoroughly assimilated and homogeneous nation? Why, the British people are as complex as anything well could be; they are partly Saxon, partly Danish, partly Norman, and in many parts of the old country you find the old Celtic. The Scotchman from the North of Scotland is as different from the Englishman from the South of England as anything well could be, and the Irishman is different again. Will the Englishman say to the Scotchman: You are not assimilated because your language is somewhat different, your characteristics are different, your point of view is different from mine? The British nation is complex, it is made up of many races, but, notwithstanding, the people of Britain have the one national idea in many respects. They have certain ideas in common on the line of matters of government, on the line of individual liberty, but in other respects they are complex. Let me take also as an illustration one that has come very much under my own eye, when we speak of assimilation. We have in Western Ontario a large grouping of German settlers in a number of counties : in Waterloo, in Perth, in the Greys. There is no finer class of people in Western Ontario than the German people who went in there and there have been no more useful citizens. The same wisdom that led them to choose out the best land when they came to settle here in the early days has characterized them in all their work, and they have shown aptitude along commercial lines as well as along agricultural lines If any one goes to the town of Berlin he will be amazed at the growth of that town, and its multiplicity of manufacturing institutions, and it is essentially a German town. The same may be said of Preston, the same may be said of Hamburg, of Tavistock, of Hanover. In many ways the Germans have been the finest settlers we have had in the country, and I sincerely wish the Minister of the Interior could persuade more of them to come here. Shall I say to my German friend : You are not assimilated because you still cling largely to your own language, because your point of view on some questions is different from mine ? No, I would be ashamed to. It is association with the various nationalities which make up our country that makes me feel it is narrow and small in any man to think that Canada must be made up of his own particular stock and his own particular race. I do not fear in the least when I examine into matters of that kind and realize what we have achieved in the past. I feel that a man is really assimilated for all proper purposes in this country if he gains the lessons that come from our institutions, if he gains that self-reliance that our land will give him, if he gains self respect, if he becomes an honest, industrious and prosperous citizen, if he realizes the liberties that we have given him. And, Sir, if he feels all that and is loyal to this land, we may trust to it that no man can enjoy the liberties and privileges of Canada and enjoy the success which industry here will bring to him, without being contented with his lot and without being loyal to Canada to the core. There is no fear that his children when they grow up will be the least different from ours. Indeed, in many respects the descendants of these immigrants may be an improvement on ourselves. Every nationality who brings in its particular colouring here will bring in some virtue with it. There may be vices to check and there may be weaknesses to restrain, but you may depend upon it that the good sense of our people, the freedom of our laws, and the respect for the rights of the individual will cure the defects and that the virtues which these nationalities possess will be perpetuated and will be helpful to us all. I realize, Sir, that all immigrants will not be satisfactory, but I regret when I hear the sharpness of the criticism which is directed in many cases against the immigrants who come to this land and, who in my opinion should be received by us with a sympathetic spirit. When I listen to that sharp criticism which we sometimes hear I am inclined to ask the question: Who are we? Are we not the sons or the grandsons or the great grandsons of immigrants? I think we are. Who has come to this land because he had plenty of money and thought it a picnic to come to Canada ? Did not every one of our forefathers come here to better his condition? If we could with the eyes of to-day look back and see our forefathers who landed in Canada, say a hundred years ago, would we, with our more fastidious taste, be impressed with their appearance? If we could see them—tradesmen, mechanics, clerks—labouring with the unaccustomed axe to cut down the forests, wouldn't we almost laugh at what we would regard as their feeble efforts?

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. Does my hon. friend think that our forefathers ever looked like the Doukhobors?

Mr. G. H. McINTYRE. My hon. friend has, I think, made a mistake. He has shown a narrowness of view that I think is rather unfortunate in a young man of his parts and his acquirements. I will not follow the argument further. To seek out a very striking and unusual exception, and endeavour to lay down a general rule upon it is very unwise. My hon. friend himself perhaps had forefathers who were immigrants to this country, and no matter how fortunate or favourable may have been their circumstances, I think he will realize the force of the argument I was endeavouring to make. that our forefathers who came to this country did not come because they were doing well in the old land. They came, in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred because there was pressure behind them to send them here; and when they came they did not or could not the moment they landed make the kind of immigrants we would like to have. We must have patience with these immigrants; for, while we may not make a really good citizen out of every immigrant who comes to this country, you may depend upon it that his children will make good citizens. There are immigrant children running around the streets of this country to-day any one of whom may worthily fill the seat now occupied by my hon. friend from Montmagny. This has been shown time and again. There is not such a radical difference between the nations of Europe as to prevent such things coming about. Take the young children, bring them up properly, give them education, and class distinctions will disappear, and those of ability are bound to come to the front. The children of immigrants, who are now running around the streets, will yet share in the government of a prosperous country and be a credit to it. In regard also to the filling up of the Northwest, we should not forget that the really vital point there is to get in a sufficient number of native Canadians from the older provinces to give the colour, the example, the impetus, to the incoming tide of immigration. That we have most successfully done; and there is very little doubt that when you get a happy and contented people on the land, you will have a safe people.

I would like to refer to an example taken by way of illustration, by my hon. friend from Montmagny from the history of the United States. As he put it, it was not put unfairly; and if you look at it simply from the point of view he did, and accept the figures he gave, you might have some cause for anxiety and alarm. He stated that the United States had a population of fifty millions before it received as large a flow of immigration as ours of last year, that is, 300,000; and then he used the argument that on account of the incoming immigration the United States had become alarmed—that with its 80,000,000 people it was now receiving 1,000,000 immigrants a year, and was restricting its immigration; and he used the argument that with our population of 6,000,000 we could not afford to let 300,000 people annually come in. On the face of it that argument has some force and it should be carefully considered; but if you examine it, you will find that there are some very marked points which my hon. friend has either overlooked or has not emphasized. The United States have in the first place the unassimilated millions on millions of negro population. This makes for them a question intensely vital and extremely difficult. We have no such question to face. With them it is a most troublesome question, and the outcome of it no man can tell. Take again another feature. My hon. friend, in his figures of immigrants coming to Canada, spoke of so many thousands of them being foreign born. Now, the term foreign-born is correctly used; but does it mean for us what it means to the United States? There is a very marked difference indeed. Of the million immigrants who flow into the United States how many speak the same language as the predominant language of the country, the English? Comparatively few. The most of them are people who speak an alien language, who are unaccustomed to the individual liberties given to the people of the United States and who are unused to the form of government prevailing there. Does that condition compare at all with the condition in this country? Take our Canadian immigration of 300,000. The great bulk of these people speak the language of the majority in this country; we have not to assimilate them in that respect. Every British immigrant who comes to Canada is accustomed to parliamentary government; the mother of parliaments was created in the land from which he comes. Every immigrant who comes from the United States speaks the language of the majority in this country, and is trained in a form of government almost identical with our own. The term foreign-born does not mean in Canada, in any respect, what it does in the United States. And so. while I feel that the argument my hon. friend used is somewhat plausible as he used it, it requires only a little examination to show that it does not at all apply to the matter in hand. An Englishman who came to Canada a year ago is not foreign-born in any true sense of the term; he is a part of the British empire in any case; he speaks one of our two languages; he has been trained to our system of government; and he has a sense of individual liberty and responsibility.

Again, there is this great difference in the immigration that comes to these two countries. In the United States, with their lands exhausted, there is a tendency on the part of immigrants to gather together in groups in large cities, speaking only their own language, and ruled by their own organizations. It is a very striking fact that in Greater New York there is to-day the largest Jewish community in the world. No such thing is possible in Canada. The more we send the immigrants to the free lands of the west, the less danger there will be, if they are settled, not in groups by themselves, but among others. I have no doubt of the result as long as proper care is taken.

While I have spoken in that way, and while I feel that the really bad immigrants are not numerous, although given great prominence, I do not in any way belittle the arguments used in favour of a good class of immigrants in this country. I desire it with all the force of my hon. friends who have spoken on this subject, and I feel that a very great responsibility is thrown on the Minister of the Interior. My hon. friend has received very hard knocks and much sharp criticism in this House, and I cannot say that he returns the soft answer; I think he invites the combat.

At the same time my hon. friend may be assured he has won the respect and confidence of both sides of the House in his good intent and sincerity, and that will prove to him a great assistance indeed in facing his work. No doubt he realizes the very great responsibility that is attached to his work. In this House at times we have to face conditions that are irrevocable, that we cannot change. Our immigration policy is not one of these. We could at any moment change that policy and put up the bars to stop immigration and it is my hon. friend who has the responsibility. He stands at the gate, he forms our immigration policy, and just as he devises and plans so he gives a colouring to the new nation. He, more than any other man in this House or country, is building up the nation, and I would earnestly impress on him the desirability of every effort to bring in the very finest class of immigrants and give us the best chance possible to make the Canadian nation of the best quality possible. The responsibility lies with him, and while I wish to impress on him more and more the sense of that great responsibility, at the same time, while the circumstances may give rise to some anxiety and concern, there is not at present any real necessity for alarm.

Mr. E. PAQUET (L'Islet). (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, I wish to congratulate the hon. member for South Perth (Mr. McIntyre) for the magnificent speech he has just delivered, and which is worthy of the attention of this House. I must also congratulate him for his unceasing efforts in mastering our language and his endeavours in getting better acquainted with the character and spirit of the French race in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, while the attention of the old impoverished nations of Europe is fastened upon the solution of the problem of emigration, the stronger and more valorous races of the new world are anxiously seeking to settle the social problem of immigration. In 1907, the United States got amended to a considerable extent its immigration legislation and appointed a commission to investigate the whole question. At that time, the first ministers of the British colonies were giving their attention to that question while in conference in London. The Canadian parliament also discussed in a remarkable manner the Asiatic immigration, that from the United States, from the British Isles and from continental Europe. The legislators in the House of Commons are to-day endeavouring to perform their duty toward the community in devoting a few hours to the discussion of this most important subject. In the course of my remarks I shall ask the government to abolish the bonus system, while at the same time extending a substantial and effective aid to desirable immigration. According to an economist, Canada with its wealth of agricultural, forest and mineral resources is man's last reserve, his furthermost boundary. Thanks to the two great races that live in this country, we are building up a vast national structure wherein people from the United States and Europe come to seek liberty and plenty.

The Canadian people must have common aspirations, but in order to reach that worthy object, we must exercise a special supervision over the class of immigrants coming into Canada. These should feel like us that they are bound to work for the material and moral welfare of Canada, and this object should be their bequest to their children in this new and hospitable land. In our task of selecting immigrants, we should live up to our great traditions; we must allow ourselves to be prompted by the teachings of our history: we must recall a glorious past and call to memory the lessons taught to posterity by the founders of Canada. Fustel de Coulanges has the following to say:

> There is no such a thing as a dead past for man. He may forget it, but it still lives in him. For, such as he may be at different periods of his life, he is the product and a diminutive of all former mental evolutions. If he goes down into his soul, he may trace back and distinguish those various periods by what each of them left within him.

These principles we must apply to our history and cast a retrospective look upon our traditions. Immigrants for New France were selected with the most minute care. Our forefathers were of the most noble and most generous blood of France. Our ancestors came from the old provinces of Normandy, of Anjon, of Picardie, of Britany, those chivalrous and highly moral pioneers of the church, of freedom and of France. Those men who at the time of Louis the Great were governing the mother country, were actuated by the desire of creating a new France beyond the seas, something like an expanse of their native land. And they were very strict in the selection of the settlers. French Canada is the work of great patriots and able legislators. French Canada is the offspring of the best French peasantry; of men gifted with the highest moral and physical qualities and civic virtue; enterprising, industrious, brave and upright men. Historical documents are there to show how very scrupulously were selected the French women which were sent to New France by Richelieu, Colbert, Talon and de Laval. The most rigid moralists are forced to admire the work of the emigrated girls of the seventeenth century.

Historians as a whole are agreed upon the distinguished origin of the French Canadians. And they were able to grow, to prosper and to spread despite all their trials, and to devote the whole power of their national spirit, the whole strength of their powerful moral and physical organization to the development of Canada. Mr. Claudio Jannet wrote thus of the moral pre-eminence of the various elements which established the Canadian colony:

> Fom the time of Champlain down to the last day of the French domination, the different governments which ruled the colony have always made it a point to exclude from the country individuals of a doubtful moral character.

And an orator said:

> The reason of our glory and strength to-day is not simply because we are of French stock, but because we sprang from France at a time in her history when she was at the apex of glory and when the hand that rocked our cradle was still amenable to the word of God.

After the cession of Canada to England, the Anglo-Saxon race grew side by side with us. At the close of the war of American independence, in 1783, the United Empire Loyalists, who remained true to the British Crown during the rebellion, and who sustained the persecution of their revolted brethren, came by thousands to the Canadian province. According to an author: 'The United Empire Loyalists brought forth to Canada the richest blood that was up to then the pride of the thirteen American colonies.' These emigrants were the founders of the new British empire in America. Since then they have progressed steadily and they are worthy of admiration.

We also are proud of their success. Mr. Hall, in his work entitled 'Immigration,' says: 'We must not forget that New England's first settlers were selected with the utmost care.' We may say it is only a fancy, but I will answer No, it is our history, our glorious past. And when those records are filled with heroic deeds they should be placed before the people of this country.

I recognize, Mr. Speaker, the importance, the necessity for the government and parliament, to endeavour to develop a desirable class of immigration. There is no doubt but that the better suited classes to develop Canada's resources are the descendants of France and the descendants of Loyalists, or better, the Canadians. In order to follow up our great traditions, we must above all encourage farmers to come to Canada. Every province of this country has thousands upon thousands of acres of available agricultural lands which will eventually be the great purveyors of Europe as well as the east owing to their great producing power. We need settlers to develop our unoccupied lands in order to increase the production and the national wealth. We could get a great many desirable farmers in more than one country, and these will be able in the noble pursuits of agriculture to enhance the development of this country.

The provincial authorities of Quebec have adopted a very commendable policy on immigration. I will acquaint the House of it by reading a letter from Mr. René Dupont, which is addressed to the editors of newspapers in Canada, and which reads thus:

> Quebec, January 8, 1908.
> Mr. Editor,—In order to give an impetus to immigration in the province of Quebec, the Interior Department has just authorized the organization of an information bureau, relating to farm land under cultivation, and available, so as to inform all intended purchasers of such farms.
>
> So far such information were lacking altogether, although we had often received demands for the sale of settled farms. This branch of the department will be available to every one intending to acquire a farm in any part of the country, or to whoever wishes to sell his farm for some purpose or other.
>
> I include for your information a blank form which we send to all who intend disposing of their farm, and I would be very much pleased if you could give a word of encouragement to our countrymen about this new scheme in your valuable paper.
>
> Thanking you beforehand for the interest you display towards colonization, and for services which you are always ready to render to that cause, I have the honour to beg you to believe in the most distinguished sentiments of
>
> Your faithful servant,
>
> RENE DUPONT,
> Colonization agent.

A statement and classification of all available farms may have good results, especially in those localities where emigration of our countrymen to the United States has caused untold injury to the farm industry. This policy may have a helpful effect in bringing back our citizens to Canada.

Farm hands and domestic servants are also a desirable class of immigration if only we take the trouble of selecting them. Allow me to quote the words of my colleague in the legislature, they are the expression of my own opinion:

'Agriculture suffers from a shortage of help on the farms. It is very difficult to get farm labourers and domestics, notwithstanding the high wages which are offered. It is a state of things which is an impediment to the cultivation of our farms and tends to discourage the agriculturists. The time has really come for the government to organize a movement to bring into Canada farm labourers, which could be easily found in France and Belgium if serious and persistent efforts were made. It is a very serious question. It exists in a very acute state in certain localities.'

In the province of Ontario the Minister of the Interior has under control a great many agents whose duties are to find employment for farm labourers. I was reading in 'La Patrie,' of the 9th of March.

Ottawa, March 9, 1908.

Special to 'La Patrie.'—As 'La Patrie' said a few days ago, that the Hon. Mr. Oliver, at the request of the French-speaking members of the cabinet, has decided to appoint in each county of the province of Quebec, one agent whose duty will be to find, free of charge, employment as farm labourers or domestics for the immigrants wishing to settle in the province. This decision will be of very great advantage to the farmers and to the emigration agents, who will be in position to communicate with the provincial agents and get exactly the class of immigrants which is necessary. Following that decision, the Minister of the Interior has just appointed twenty agents in the province of Quebec, and other denominations will soon follow.

Since that date, new agents have been appointed. There is a lack of the farm labourers in the province of Quebec. The president of the colonization and repatriation of Montreal stated in January, 1908: 'The decision which we have taken has had the good result of aiding the farmers in getting help and to secure servants for a good number of families. Our employment bureau have in this way found employment for a good many hundreds of farm labourers and servants and besides that, they have been the means by which individuals and industrials have been able to get the same advantage.'

In some localities our labourers will fear the competition of farm labourers coming from the outside. One of the most distinguished citizens of the county which I have the honour to represent was writing me last week: 'The hon. Mr. Oliver has decided to appoint in each county of the province of Quebec an agent whose duty will be to recruit farm labourers and servants so as to help our farmers. Would the result of this movement, whose object is noble, be to increase the exodus of our fellow-countrymen towards the cities and industrial centers of the United States? Would it not be the means of introducing in our parishes socialists and anti-clericals? Is there no danger of bringing in our country elements which will brake harmony between the clergy and the people?'

I put this letter before this House believing that it contains opinions worthy of consideration. The government must be very careful in selecting and appointing the agents. They should be allowed to introduce in the midst of our moral populations only emigrants whose character is well known.

On the 15th of April, 1907, I was urging upon the government to make the strongest and most generous efforts to bring in this country desirable French and Belgium immigrants. The government has adopted a more active policy towards France. Three new immigration agents have been appointed. It seems as if measures have been taken for a larger distribution of literature and information. The Minister of the Interior has secured the active co-operation of many French immigration agencies. These agencies will get commission on the immigrants belonging to certain classes which they will send to Canada.

In the past the government has thought that it was its duty to pay bonuses in order to aid and encourage immigration. Bonuses were offered to booking agents to encourage them to send immigrants from Great Britain. At that time New Zealand, Australia and Argentine Republic were spending very large amounts in assisting immigration by way of bonuses. But the booking agents have, unfortunately, no interests in looking to the character and the morality of the immigrants. They have no other care naturally than to send the greatest number possible of immigrants to Canada so as to get more premiums. What do they care about the character? What do they care about the morality of our population? I am almost sure of it the government will soon abandon this policy. There is a fear that during this financial and commercial stringency, the suspension of payments of bonuses on immigrants would bring a crisis, but I think the last commercial crisis has had the effect of consolidating our credit in the world.

During the fiscal year 1906-7, 34,647 immigrants came into the country from the United States. The premiums paid in the United States amounted to $4,743, and these American immigrants brought with them values amounting to some forty millions of dollars. During the nine months of the fiscal year 1906-7, 235,328 immigrants came into Canada, on 20,492 of which a bonus was paid. Excellent results might be obtained in the United States, in Great Britain and in continental Europe without resorting to the bonus system. Indeed, economic conditions in Canada are changing for the better. The country is growing marvellously and becoming known among civilized nations. In several of these, the name of Canada may be said to be famous, and will soon attract emigrants, as does now that of the United States.

In every country with which we entertain agricultural, commercial or industrial relations, we should have emigration and commercial agents understanding our wants and our aims. Such agents might deliver lectures and give information to all classes. They should be educated men and well informed as to our laws, resources and economic conditions. They should be honest, progressive and capable of helping to develop social, commercial and industrial relations. A journalist remarked with great truth, on the 7th April last: 'A commission composed of men conversant with our commercial situation and making a study of the markets of the world with a view of finding an outlet for our manufactured articles and information for our importers, would help the rapid and profitable development of our foreign trade, which has shown of late years such prodigious powers of expansion. It would create a demand for our goods abroad, and by spreading the knowledge of the natural wealth we possess, would bring to us, in a continual and abundant stream, new capital and very desirable immigration.'

Special delegates might also be sent abroad—emigrants who have been successful here. They would speak of their success on their native soil and become the very best of emigrant agents. We should also invite here, more frequently than we do, members of the foreign press and of the Boards of Trade of the United States and of Europe. These distinguished visitors would admire and speak of our natural wealth, thus promoting desirable emigration.

The people of Britain and of the United States are pretty well acquainted with our resources and economic conditions. Yesterday, the Canadian press foreshadowed a great immigration movement to Canada from the American republic. Most American immigrants are farmers enjoying a certain amount of wealth. Among them may be found a certain number of Canadians. Canadians from Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota and Dakota are being attracted here by our agricultural development and progress.

French Canadians have crossed to the States seeking that intense industrial life which the country affords. The province of Quebec, thanks to technical education, to the development of its agricultural, forest and mining wealth, is bound to become a great industrial centre. The development of our industries will be exceedingly favourable to the work of repatriation. In the midst of the human throng massed in great American cities, in that great crucible where races are mixed, expatriated French Canadians have preserved the distinctive character of our national genius. Their ideas, feeling and ideals are not very far away from those which we ourselves entertain. Repatriated French Canadians are among our best immigrants.

Mr. BERGERON. (Translation.) Very good, very good.

Mr. PAQUET. (Translation.) English economists have made some very true remarks with respect to emigrants coming here from the British Isles. According to Gerald Adams, our emigration agents do not make any very serious effort in the rural districts of England. It is there that we should reach the English farmer. The exhibition of our products in rural districts produces very good results. The Franco-Canadian treaty will favour French emigration to a certain extent, if we take proper advantage of the conditions of that agreement. 'It is the duty of France to help her far off sons.'

The small birth rate of France may prevent her from sending many emigrants here, and the economic conditions obtaining in that country may render unnecessary the departure of her sons, but France should send us capital in order to develop transactions with France, especially in the province of Quebec.

We should have a consul or a commissioner in Belgium where agricultural emigrants of the best class may be recruited. This suggestion may perhaps appeal to the government.

Most classes in Belgium have as yet no knowledge of our resources. In that country which may be called a French land, we might secure good agricultural emigrants, excellent farm hands and intelligent and skilled workmen. This system might be expensive, but the solution of a national problem is here involved. The social question is more important than the financial. Remaining faithful to our traditions, I am ready to vote the necessary funds to advertise our wealth abroad.

Mr. Leroy Beaulieu finds that of all countries Canada is to-day the one offering the best inducements to emigrants and being the most rapidly developed, especially as regards agriculture.

After the exhibition of Liege, I read in 'La revue économique internationale':

The Canadian exhibit reveals to us or reminds us that there lies to the north of the vast American continent, territories of abundant natural wealth, inhabited by a population small in numbers, but energetic, enterprising and resolved to develop, with foreign help, the treasures of the soil. Overpopulated countries will find there an extensive field for emigration, the more worthy of attention that the climate is healthy and temperate. Strangers are astonished at the actual condition and future prospects of Canada.

We can point out to them our progress in matters of transportation, construction of railways, telegraph and telephone lines, in the improvement of waterways, in thrift, in agricultural, forest and mining industries.

Our vast and fertile agricultural lands, our wealth in forest and minerals, in iron and coal especially, 'the muscle and blood of modern industry,' our developed industries. the religious and political liberty we enjoy, the advantages of Christian teaching, our satisfactory economic and social conditions; the harmony existing between Church and State, Capital and Labour, employer and employee, are all of a character to attract emigration to our shores.

The Canadian Emigration Act is sometimes biterly criticised. If it be properly applied, the Act would appear to answer to the economic and social requirements of the nation. It contains provisions for getting rid of bad emigrants. The medical examination has become more serious, at least at Quebec. According to Mr. Bryce's report (page 120) '1,422 emigrants were detained at the Quebec hospital in 1904-5; in 1906-7, 523 only were detained at that hospital. The examination in European ports is also more serious and this is to our advantage. The United States government fines Steamship Companies $100 for every person shipped without sufficient inspection or suffering from tuberculosis, epilepsy or any contageous disease. It is sometimes difficult to discover the true physical and mental condition of an emigrant at the time of his examination. But we can deport those who prove undesirable.

You will allow me to make a few remarks concerning the medical inspection of emigrants at Quebec. Dr. J. D. Pagé took charge of the emigrant hospital there in 1904. Before that there was no system of scientific medical inspection. Two inspecting physicians were appointed, but there was no place for sick emigrants or emigrants under observation. The government understood the necessity of efficient medical organization. Dr. Pagé was in consequence appointed, in addition to his hospital duties, medical officer of the port of Quebec. He has thoroughly organized the system of medical inspection at that place. I am in a position to state that the medical inspection of emigrants at Quebec, is in no wise inferior to that of any American port. Our emigration Act says: 'No weak minded, epileptic or insane emigrant shall be allowed to land in Canada.' Those having any experience in the practice of medicine know how difficult it sometimes is, to discover the symptoms of epilepsy. Certain patients are quite intelligent and the attacks infrequent. It is also known to be very difficult to locate tuberculosis in the first period. The physician is obliged to make long and repeated examinations and sometimes resort to a bacteriological test. As to madness and crime, all jurists know how difficult it is, in a criminal case, to clearly establish the mental state of the accused.

It would doubtless be more prudent to forbid access to this country of all emigrants whose antecedents cannot be discovered. Any person wishing to come here should be compelled to produce a certificate stating that he is guilty of no moral crime. Such a certificate might be delivered by a reputable magistrate, the clerk of a court of justice or a clergyman. But cases of personation might here be possible.

American laws restrictive of emigration are very often highly praised. It appears to me that the economic conditions of the two countries cannot be compared. Our emigration, as to character and morality, does not seem inferior to that of America. Formerly the strong and robust northern peoples emigrated in great numbers to the United States. Since 1890, things have changed and the northern emigrant, the most easily assimilated, no longer occupies the first place in American emigration statistics. People from southern and eastern Europe are flooding the States since 1890. As Leroy-Beaulieu says:

'The enormous increase of immigrants tends to introduce in this country elements far more heterogenous; more difficult to assimilate, poorer, less educated and at all points of view less progressive.' In 1907 the United States received:

From Italy	238,000
From Russia..	258,443
From Austria-Hungary..	338,452

We must notice that in 1907 the United States received only 56,637 immigrants from England. This is a very serious question, says Leroy Beaulieu. However, these new elements coming in since a few years have not yet had time to exert any sensible influence on the American people, and its population is now so numerous that the new comers will not have a very great effect upon its character in the future.

Our immigrants are coming in great numbers from the United States, Germany, France, Belgium and British Islands.

I do not wish to criticise too severely the immigrants from Russia, Italy, Hungary, Austria and Roumania, but in my humble opinion our immigration is more monogeneous than the one of our neighbours.

The problem of assimilating the races in our immense territory is of the greatest national importance. The Slavs, oriental and meridional, are slow to understand our institutions and aspirations, but the immigrants from the United States, British Islands, France and Belgium, having in their own country the representative institutions, understand rapidly our political system. The English and French immigrants find here the old beloved language. They hear it in the churches, in the courts and in parliament.

In the great work of immigration, I fear the desire of making money, the passion of graft. Some speculators, who would like to make a fortune rapidly, naturally want the gates of Canada to be widely opened to every nation. These men exert in our country a nefarious influence. We do not want here those people who will not help to the progress of the country. I read the following lines in 'La Patrie,' of the 18th March, 1908:

The department of immigration at Ottawa has established a new rule by which, after the 15th of April next, the immigrants sent from England by the philanthropic societies will be immediately sent back if they have not with them a certificate from the Canadian office of immigration in London, stating that they are fit to become useful citizens.

If properly put in force these regulations might have the effect of preventing undesirable immigrants to enter in our country. The government must act wisely in this case. You have heard a few weeks ago, Mr. Speaker, the Lieutenant Governor of the province of Quebec saying: 'The increase of criminals in certain parts of the province, principally those parts where the immigrants come in greater numbers, has been the subject of serious consideration by my cabinet who is firmly decided to neglect no means possible to protect the lives and property of the people.' These alarming words, pronounced by a man of wide experience, by an old magistrate, should awake our attention.

Canada has immense resources. The sons of the soil and the immigrants having good morals, good health, and being able of supporting themselves can take advantage of our national wealth.

The new generations of immigrants growing stronger and more numerous will perhaps one day be masters of Canada. If our immigrants are Christians, we might be treated with justice. We deserve respect from those who come to settle into our country. As a matter of fact, we have always shown great generosity towards the new comers. In 1831, the legislative assembly of Lower Canada granted full rights of citizenship to the Jews, putting them on the same footing as the Canadians.

In 1847, thousands and thousands of Irish emigrants, leaving their country where there was starvation came to Canada. Illness brought many deaths. Our people gave to these Irish all the necessary care. They sacrificed their own lives to save them. We should entertain the same good sentiments, the same sympathy towards immigrants of good character. I wish to repeat it, I am in favour of giving our aid, small but generous, to help a desirable immigration, but I believe we have come to a sufficient degree of development that we can dispense of paying premiums on immigrants.

I welcome desirable immigrants; I welcome in our country all those people whose liberties have been abolished, whose rights have been violated and prayers ignored.

But, in the interest of our civilization, in the interest of Canada, we ask from this government to make a proper choice of the immigrants who want to become part of the Canadian family.

Mr. WILBERT McINTYRE (Strathcona). Mr. Speaker, I would ask the indulgence of the House for a few minutes while I make some brief remarks on the motion moved by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk). I think that hon. gentleman is to be congratulated on the presentation of the question, for it was a careful presentation and, in the course of it, the hon. gentleman put forward arguments that are agreed to by both sides of the House. That we require immigrants and require a desirable class of immigrants, it is a foregone conclusion. The hon. gentleman puts forward his views in the beginning of his speech in this way—I quote from page 6877 of unrevised 'Hansard':

We are, therefore, Sir, considering the vast extent of our territory, a small community numerically and our country could no doubt well support a far greater number of people. There is no congestion in Canada and all will and do, I am sure, agree that an increase of population in Canada is desirable. All must also readily agree that if an increase of population in this country is to accrue to us through immigration from other countries it is essential also that none but desirable persons should be admitted to Canadian citizenship and to the Canadian family.

With these sentiments we are in accord. But, in the course of his address, the hon. gentleman puts forward some rather peculiar arguments and draws some more peculiar conclusions. I have read the hon. gentleman's speech very carefully, and I find running through it two or three main ideas. One may be thus expressed: Cease operations of a selective nature and you will procure immigrants of a more select class. I cannot agree with any such deduction from any such premises. Another may be thus stated: Cease operations and the desirable classes of immigrants will increase. Which, applied to business, I take it, might be stated in this form: Do not endeavour to do business and you will do more business; do not earnestly desire to attain a certain object and you will attain it all the more surely and speedily. That seems to be absured on the face of it. Another idea in the hon. gentleman's speech may be thus expressed: Undesirable classes come here because a number of agencies are at work other than the bonus system, but, because these undesirable classes—or, more accurately, these undesirable persons—come here, there can be only one reason why they come here, and that is the bonus system. That is the hon. gentleman's whole argument. As pointed out by my hon. friend from South Perth (Mr. G. H. McIntyre), that is the only point of the immigration policy that he aims at. Yet the bonus system exists purely and simply because it is of an essentially selective character. Now, what bonuses do we pay ? As I understand it, the first bonus that we paid in this country was begun in 1867, a bonus to certain charitable institutions for bringing our children of a certain class. Those children, it was understood, must not be institutional children—that is children who had been in a penitentiary or a home—in other words, they must be carefully-reared children. That bonus to these institutions is in existence to-day. The second bonus that I would speak about is the bonus on immigrants from the United States. At certain eligible points in the United States we have agents who are paid $3 for every man, $2 for every woman and $1 for every child who, through their influence, settles in Canada. These bonuses are paid for giving directions, for advertising, for getting location points and railway rates and issuing certificates in order that these immigrants may get a reduced rate to certain points of our country. There are more favourable points at which the bonus paid is only $2 per head for men, $1 for women and 50 cents for children. We have still another bonus, the bonus paid on British immigrants. This bonus is paid as specified in the order in council to certain agents at £1 per adult and 10 shillings for each person between 18 years and 1 year, for farmers, farm labourers, stablemen, gardeners, carters. railway service men, navvies, and domestic servants of one year's experience in each occupation. This bonus is applied to the continent of Europe for exactly the same classes, but is only applicable to these countries: Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Holland, France, Belgium, Germany, Switzerland and Austria-Hungary. I would point out to my hon. friend from Montmagny (Mr. Armand Lavergne) that Italy is excluded from the countries in which bonuses are paid for farm labourers or other classes.

Now, if there is one impression which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk) would like to convey without stating it, it is that a bonus has hitherto been paid upon all classes and upon every one who comes here as an immigrant. That impression has been conveyed to the country. I believe such an idea was put forward in the days of the North Atlantic Trading Company, when our friends opposite declared that every man, woman and child cost the country $5. There never was a time when the North Atlantic Trading Company or all the companies operating, received bonuses on more than 30 per cent of the people from any country. A few figures will show how the commission operates at the present time. In the nine months of 1906-7, the total immigration from the United States was 36,659 and we paid bonuses on 2,561. That is, we paid bonuses on 7·04 per cent of the immigrants of that year. In the year 1907-8, we had 46,925. American immigrants, and paid bonuses on 2,425 or 5 per cent of our American immigrants. In Great Britain the operation of the bonus is slightly different from what it is in the United States. The question why we paid a bonus on British immigrants might well be taken up. You are well aware that the people to whom we pay the bonus are the booking agents. Their occupation is not solely as Canadian agents. They engage in some other occupation that takes them through the country and brings them in touch with other people and enables them to carry on a propaganda in advertising, just as if they were paid agents of the government. That is, the bonus paid on British and continental immigrants is simply a means of advertising.

These booking agents are not booking agents for Canadian ports alone ; they are booking agents for Australia, New Zealand, the Argentine Republic and other countries much farther away than Canada. It is important to remember that they receive a commission from the steamship companies and that that commission is a percentage on the amount of the ticket. Therefore, it would naturally follow that every booking agent would want every one purchasing a ticket from him to go to the most distant ports. Here is where the bonus operates: Our Immigration Department steps in and says: For certain classes of immigrants we will pay you $5 a head extra. You cannot imagine any more selective scheme. The person who is undesirable from our standpoint, who does not belong to the agricultural or labouring classes, as we have them specified here, will naturally be induced to go to other countries, whereas the farm labourer, the domestic servant and the farmer will be induced, owing to the bonus, to come to Canada. This must necessarily be the result.

There is a suspicion, and it was expressed here some time ago, that when a man goes to a booking agent he simply says he is a farmer and that is all there is about it, that no further certificate than his word is required. This is not the case. In the first place he has to sign a written statement of where he comes from, where he served and what experience he has had. That statement is kept by the booking agent. Now, as to the second check——

Mr. MONK. How does my hon. friend know that and since when did that rule exist?

Mr. WILBERT McINTYRE. My informant is the Commissioner of Immigration. When the farmer lands in this country he himself need have no knowledge of whether that booking agent is receiving a bonus or not. When he comes to the Canadian side of the water he is received by the inspector who asks him whether he is a farmer or a farm labourer, and if he comes under these classes a different certificate is made out. These certificates of inspectors are preserved and are forwarded to the head office. The returns of the booking agents are also forwarded to the head office.

Mr. MONK. Does the hon. gentleman say that the examining officer makes out another certificate here?

Mr. WILBERT McINTYRE. He makes out another certificate.

Mr. MONK. I deny that; he never does.

Mr. WILBERT McINTYRE. All I can say is that the person who has stated that to me is the Commissioner of Immigration.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is the information in writing or oral?

Mr. WILBERT McINTYRE. The information submitted to the head office is in the return.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is the information from the Commissioner of Immigration to the hon. gentleman in writing or oral?

Mr. WILBERT McINTYRE. It is not in writing.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Simply an oral conversation?

Mr. WILBERT McINTYRE. Quite so.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is there anything in the published reports which substantiates that?

Mr. W. McINTYRE. I am not aware of that.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It is remarkable that the hon. gentleman should have information that no other hon. gentleman has.

Mr. W. McINTYRE. My method of securing the information was simply to ask the question, because it was stated here that there was no check and I was exceedingly anxious to ascertain if that was true.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not wish my hon. friend to misunderstand me. I was not criticising him. His action shows very great diligence and earnestness as a member of the House, but it would seem that if information of that kind is available and is valuable it should be in the possession of every member of this House in the shape of a report.

Mr. W. McINTYRE. As I understand, the report that is made out by the booking agent is sent in to the head office. He claims a bonus on the people so specified. There is no continuity of record so far as the immigrant is concerned, a different report is made out by the immigration officer at the receiving point and that record is forwarded to the head office here. When the booking agent applies to the commissioner here for a bonus on certain individuals, his report must tally with that of the inspector at the receiving port. Thus there are two checks on the individual, there is the check of the booking agent and the check of the receiving officer. I asked Mr. Scott, the commissioner, if any requests preferred by the booking agents were ever refused, and he assured me they were, because the report of the receiving officer did not agree with the report from the booking agent.

Mr. A. LAVERGNE. I thought Mr. Scott, the superintendent of immigration, said that they accepted the list from the purser of the steamer ?

Mr. W. McINTYRE. My hon. friend may be right there. My information is simply as I stated, that the inspecting officer at Halifax or other receiving ports makes out a list using a separate form for the farmers, farm labourers and domestic servants, those who come under the bonus system.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. How does the inspecting officer at Halifax know that these domestic servants or farmers or whatever they may be fulfil what is expected of them ? Are they followed to their employment as farm labourers or domestic servants ?

Mr. W. McINTYRE. I know of no system; I am not aware that such a system is in vogue of following the individual, but the authorities are perfectly conversant with all those who go on the farms.

Mr. MONK. Is it not a matter of fact that the inspector makes no list, but has a duplicate or triplicate of the ship's manifest and he checks the crowd as they go past him and then sends the manifest to Ottawa ?

Mr. W. McINTYRE. My information is quite different. My information is that it is the duty of the inspector to find out if the man is subject to bonus. and if so to make out a separate certificate and have that forwarded to the head office.

Mr. MONK. We will see it all in the committee before long.

Mr. W. McINTYRE. As to the claim that the bonus is necessarily the cause of all the undesirable immigrants coming to this country you must remember that there are certain charitable institutions in Great Britain who consider it their duty to pick up certain people who wish to be placed in different environments, supply them with means and have them brought as independent travellers to Canada. You will also recognize that certain governments, such as the Ontario government, from whom, by the way, we have received a good deal of abuse in reference to this matter, give bonuses annually to these charities. The hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) read the report of the inspector of public charities for Ontario, and if I remember the inspector's words correctly he said: Let us put the trouble at the door where it belongs, the Dominion immigration authorities. Sir, I have in my hands this year's estimates of the Ontario government and I find that for colonization and immigration the government of Ontario have subscribed $58,000 this year. From the public accounts of last year I find that they gave somewhere in the neighbourhood of $38,000. Is there any retraction on their part? I find last year they gave $7,000 to aid the Salvation Army and this year they have increased that amount to $10,000. The people who are operating in this way are very desirable people, those who wish to place a man in a different environment, to change the whole tenor of his life and give him a fair chance, must be lauded for so doing. But with these various indigent agencies at work is my hon. friend quite fair when he says that the undesirable people are brought here by the bonus system? Is the inspector for public charities for Ontario fair when he says: Let us put the blame at the door where it belongs. Had he not better take into account the system of immigration carried on in Ontario? Had he not better take into account certain charitable institutions? These people are dealing with people who have no independence, who have come down to the particular status where they have to throw themselves upon public charity and when they come to this country and the circumstances are a little adverse they naturally go back to their old surroundings the population centres, and to those population centres they say: We deserve your care. I do not think the evil is as great as it has been represented by many members of this House but if it be as great do not lay all the blame on the bonus system, but rather think how very largely these public charities that send these people to this country may be responsible for the whole trouble. The government in the past have not interfered with people who came to this country. To a man who came independently, to a man who was not a criminal and who was physically capable the government have said: We will put no restriction upon you; but, this evil has worked to such an extent in our population centres that now the government have found it necessary to inquire of these public charities and ask that immigrants coming through them even must be examined to ascertain if they are capable of carrying on such work as may fall to their lot in this country. As I reflect upon this particular phase of the question I cannot help but think of how often we find our friends on the other side of the House getting up and reading the remarks of my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior when he was a private member of this House.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Hear, hear.

Mr. WILBERT McINTYRE. 'Hear, hear says the hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton. They reiterate it and reiterate it. When the hon. minister was a private member of this House he was opposed to indiscriminate immigration and when he took the position of Minister of the Interior he proceeded to crystallize into legislation the ideas that he had put on 'Hansard' in those days. If you will examine the restrictions that the minister has placed upon immigration you will find the justification in every particular of what the minister said in those days. There seems to be a difference of opinion on this question. Some say that the west and the east differ, some say that the west wants a great deal of immigration and I am perfectly willing to admit that, but before proceeding further let me give you some statistics as to how the system works out in Great Britain and on the continent. In nine months of the year 1907-8 we received 55,781 British immigrants and we paid bonus on 8,861, or 15·8 per cent. In 1907-8 we received 111,238 British immigrants and we paid bonus on 14,710 or 13·02 per cent. Now, it is frequently argued—and the whole question came up some time ago—that we pay bonus on the undesirable and that we get only the undesirable with that bonus. Let us examine into the figures for a moment. We paid bonus on 14,710 immigrants from Great Britain and we had 5,208 homestead entries from English, Irish and Scotch alone. The average family of the homesteader consists of 2·5 persons. In that way we placed on the land 13,020 persons and this is only one of the designated classes on which we were paying bonuses. Of continental immigration we paid a bonus on 2,093 in 1907-8 and we had homestead entries to the number of 4,609, or a total by the same computation, of 11,517 persons who were placed on farms. We paid bonus on 2,093 to secure eight selected classes and we received of one class alone five times as much as we paid for all classes.

There is another idea in the minds of a great many people and that is that all the people who come over on the ships are classified as immigrants. I might give you some figures in that particular. On the steamers landing in Canada from foreign ports during nine months in 1906-7 there were 148,818 passengers. Of these 124,669 were immigrants, 9,293 were returned Canadians, 2,414 were tourists and 12,444 were saloon passengers. During the year 1907-8, there were 266,317 passengers of whom 235,- 328 were immigrants, 14,094 returned Canadians, 4,688 tourists and 12,207 saloon passengers. This is the result of a most careful examination of the statistics. Statistics are compiled to designate exactly who are immigrants and who are not. With regard to continental bonused immigration our statistics are even better than they are from Great Britain or the United States. During nine months of 1906-7 the total immigration from continental countries was 34,217 and we paid bonus on 1,198 or 3·5 per cent. In the year 1907-8 we paid bonus on 2,093 out of a total immigration of 77,165 or 2·71 per cent. I would sum the matter up in this way: Last year we paid bonus on 13·02 per cent of the British immigration, on 5 per cent of the American immigration and on 2·71 per cent of the continental immigration. It seems to me that I have fairly well satisfied the House regarding the question of whether we pay bonus on all the people coming in. We pay the bonus for a definite purpose and I think I may say that we have fulfilled that purpose. We pay the bonus to get certain desirable classes and while we pay a bonus to receive eight different classes we have received in one class more people than we paid a bonus for in all classes. Our only absolutely incontestable statistics regarding these immigrants are the homestead entries during the time of making which the officers find the birth places of the immigrants. There can be no doubt of any kind that these figures give an absolute record that we pay a bonus on certain classes of individuals and that we get more of that class than we pay a bonus on. Yet, our friends on the other side of the House would try to leave the impression that the people that we pay the bonus on are the undesirable class. If we were to discontinue the bonus system we have just two other ways in which we can operate in so far as I can see. One is to pay agents to do the work that is being done by the bonused agents to-day. We have paid agents in a certain peculiar way to do a peculiar work and I have given the statistics to show that that work has been well done. Now, if we are to pay agents it is a self evident fact that we cannot have any inspection or any method whereby to tell that the peculiar classes we desire are coming to this country. The other alternative would be to cease immigration operations altogether and that is not even suggested by my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) who moved the resolution. But I would go further than that and I would say that not only is immigration desirable but that we should use every legitimate means within our power to secure a desirable class of immigrants.

I would ask the House to reflect for a few moments on what we have to do in this country and the field that lies before us if we are to pay any reasonable regard to the development of our resources. According to the census of 1906 we have only 8,407,927 acres of land under cultivation in the three prairie provinces and 30,502,927 acres were occupied by farms and ranches. There was a surveyed area at that time of 120,488,455 acres. Do we need people to till the soil ; do we need immigrants in view of the fact that only a mere fraction of the fertile lands in that country is at present under cultivation ? If you examine the statistics you will find that in the same census of 1906 we have 357,016,788 acres of land in these three provinces, and that only 8,000,000 acres are cultivated, leaving 350,000,000 acres uncultivated. Now, certain hon. gentlemen who oppose immigration say : You have brought in great numbers of people, you have had the lands tilled, you have built up villages and towns, you have done very well, now stop. But, Mr. Speaker, we are only beginning. As I have said, we have only 8,000,000 acres out of 120,000,000 acres of surveyed land under cultivation. Let us remember that only those portions that are reasonably adjacent to a railway are surveyed, and that it is only on application to the department that certain townships are surveyed. Therefore, the great mass of the land in these new provinces is still unsurveyed and it is only a few favoured persons who know of its enormous natural resources. Why, the other day I saw a photograph of a crude asphalt deposit that was 250 feet high and that would cover 10,000 acres. That asphalt was the ooze of immense oil deposits underneath. A photograph was also submitted of a bubbling salt well where the salt was crystallized to a height of 20 feet. Those of us who are familiar with the northern country know that the soil is underlaid with lignite coal, that bituminous coal is to be found in great quantities, and that practically all the streams are gold bearing. Are we going to stop immigration and allow these vast natural resources to remain dormant ? We can support a farming population alone equal to the total population of the United States, and in addition to our wealth of farming land look at the immense natural resources we have and the vast industrial operations that will ensue on the development of these resources because of their proximity to fuel and the possession of other facilities for their development. According to authentic statistics we have 100,000,000 acres of land north and west of the Athabaska river and lake, and I need only mention that the nearest point of the Athabaska river is 100 miles distant from the city of Edmonton. I may also point out that in that 100,000,000 acres of good agricultural land there is practically not any part of it that has been surveyed. There are of course two or three isolated spots where the Hudson Bay Company have built their posts, but I am correct in my general statement that no part of that vast area is surveyed to any appreciable extent. I have confined my remarks to the new provinces and I have not referred to that great province of British Columbia which is known to contain enormous mineral, agricultural and forest wealth. We have vast untold resources ; we have vast areas of the most fertile land, and if we can only get transportation facilities and if we can only get people to develop them there is indeed a great future in store for the west. We have had in recent years an opportunity to get more people than formerly and what has been the effect of that on eastern Canada ? You can explain the immense industrial expansion in eastern Canada and you can explain the tremenduous increase in the wealth there in no other way than by pointing to the development of the west. You can talk about the budget and you can talk about your tariffs, but the solution of no problem is so important to us to-day as the development of the great natural resources of the west.

Let me now speak for a moment on the financial side of the immigration question. A considerable sum of money has been spent on immigration and we have had the North Atlantic Trading Company and the fact that it received upwards of half a million dollars dragged before the House time and again. It would seem indeed that certain members cannot rise to discuss any subject without talking of the money that this government has paid to the North Atlantic Trading Company and other companies which were organized for the attraction of immigrants to Canada.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Does the hon. member commend the North Atlantic Trading Company?

Mr. W. McINTYRE. I can tell the hon. gentleman that the North Atlantic Trading Company had its place in the development of the country.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. What was that place?

Mr. W. McINTYRE. I can tell the hon. gentleman that it succeeded in bringing in more immigration than any other organization.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Nothing of the kind; it did not bring in a man.

Mr. W. McINTYRE. I cannot help the hon. gentleman forming any opinion he pleases.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I will prove it.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. He will prove it to his own satisfaction, no doubt.

Mr. W. McINTYRE. It was shown during the course of another debate that the immigrants into the west this year had brought in settler's effects alone to the value of $52,000,000. There is another unestimated asset that comes into that country which we have no similar means of ascertaining, because the settlers' effects all pass through the customs and we can get the statistics concerning them. But remember that our American friends who come to the west are generally farmers who sell their farms at from $50 to $100 an acre, and there is no method of determining what any particular immigrant has at his credit in the bank or is carrying with him when he reaches the western country. But there were 46,925 immigrants from the United States. Among these there were probably 10,000 farmers. They sold their farms at an average, we will say of $50 an acre. Taking each farm at 100 acres, these 10,000 farmers would realize for their farms $8,000 each, or a total of $80,000,000. That added to $52,000,000 makes $132,000,000. But there is another side to the question. The average homesteader has a family of 2·5 This would represent 25,000 souls of the immigration, and we have still 21,925 left to be accounted for otherwise. Suppose these had an average of $100 each, that would enrich us by $2,192,500. By the whole immigration from Britain, continental Europe and the United States, on the basis given above, we are enriched by $86,903,575 ; and we have not allowed one dollar for settlers' effects. Some hon. gentlemen during the budget debate were puzzling regarding the excess of imports over exports, or the balance of trade. Here is an estimate which on its face shows that we have had brought into this country about $90,000,000 of which no account is taken. I believe that the greatest asset we have received directly in the way of ready money is that money which the settler brings into the country.

The hon. member for Jacques Cartier said that we are bringing more people into the country than we can assimilate. The same statement was made by my hon. friend from Montmagny (Mr. Armand Lavergne). My hon. friend from Montmagny is always afraid that we are getting in too many people of a certain class. In that respect he was exceedingly moderate in this debate as compared with the debate of last year. I think the hon. member for Montmagny is learning a very wholesome lesson, and the day may come when he will find that it is an unhealthy thing to stand up in this House and appeal to race and creed. The hon. gentleman has no business to stand up in this House of mixed races and drag in the question of whether we are Frenchified or not.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege. I did not drag in that question. It was dragged in by the officials of the government, Mr. Smart, the deputy minister, and Mr. Preston, the government immigration agent, who said that the government did not want the country to be Frenchified.

Mr. WILBERT McINTYRE. Then it would have been policy on the part of the hon. gentleman to have left the remark to the men who made it, and not drag it into this debate and revivify it.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. Mr. Speaker, I rise again to a question of privilege. Those who are responsible for the words uttered by Mr. Preston and Mr. Smart are the government, and as they have never disavowed them, they are responsible for what these gentlemen say.

Mr. WILBERT McINTYRE. The hon. gentleman is not aware, any more than from a newspaper report, that the officers of the government did say that. It was brought in before, and it is brought in again. It is brought in with the very evident intention of stirring up race feeling. As long as we are a people made up of different races and different religions, it does not become any man to stand up here as the champion of any particular race, whether French or German or otherwise. What we want in this country is good, loyal Canadians. I tell the hon. gentleman that the men he has been attacking as hooligans and ex-convicts are building up a nation west of the great lakes that will have a national sentiment and that will not stand for the kind of thing he brings forward in this House so frequently.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. Mr. Speaker, I again rise to a question of privilege. I never called those men hooligans or drunkards. but the report of the Department of the Interior called them that.

Mr. WILBERT McINTYRE. These are the hon. gentleman's words:

> If we look at the report of the Interior Department we find that his immigration agents, the Church Army, were eager to bring to this country hooligans, scamps, ex-convicts, loafers and drunkards, but were not very eager to bring in Belgians or Frenchmen.

I asked the hon. gentleman on that occasion to define hooligan. He did not seem to be conversant with that kind of person, and asked to have the term defined by the Minister of the Interior. I would warn the hon. gentleman that when he stands up and talks in that way against a number of people, the greater portion of whom go to the western provinces, he can have only one object, and that is to insult those people.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. Mr. Speaked, I rise again to a question of privilege. The hon. gentleman is again putting words in my mouth which I never uttered. I read the report of Mr. Bruce Walker, of the Department of the Interior, saying this:

> This organization is of a many-sided character, embracing the reclamation of the drunkard, the reception of the discharged prisoner, the shelter and food of the homeless and an asylum for the unemployed.

I read then the advertisement of the Church Army, asking for drunkards and hooligans. I do not know if there are drunkards and hooligans in the west, although the government has done its best to bring them there.

Mr. WILBERT McINTYRE. There is no doubt what the hon. gentleman's intention was, whatever he said. He has not been as frank on this occasion with regard to what he means as he has been on other occasions. He is a great deal more frank when he talks in the country about the class of people who are going to the west. I want to tell him that we have a people there who are not concerned about the kind of religion a man professes or the tongue he speaks. We are all glad to have these people speak English. I consider it an honour and a privilege to speak the English language. I would like to be able to speak the language of the hon. member for Montmagny as fluently as he does; there is no object I would aim at more readily than that; but at the same time I cannot see why that is any qualification for citizenship in this country. The hon. gentleman simply drags this matter in, in order that he may use it as a catch-ball in his own province. I have no quarrel with that province. I know that the men who come from it to this House are as liberal as I am. But I am very much afraid that my hon. friend is not dealing with men who are as broad-minded or as well informed as the members of this House, and he thinks that by dint of making certain statements he can convince them that certain ideas are well founded. Well, in my opinion, it ill becomes any member of this House to stand up in his place and give utterance to such ideas. When I spoke to the hon. gentleman regarding the British immigrants who came to this country, he said they were the worst people who came to our shores.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. I did not say that.

Mr. WILBERT McINTYRE. That is not in 'Hansard,' but I leave it to a dozen hon. members who heard him whether he did not say so.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. I never said anything of the kind. What I did say was that the immigration policy of this government had the effect of making what ought to be the best immigration, the British immigration, the worst that comes to us. Any one who knows anything about it, or who reads the papers, knows that what I say is the case.

Mr. WILBERT McINTYRE. So far as we are concerned in the west, we are not dealing with race questions and raising race difficulties.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. We saw that in the school question.

Mr. WILBERT McINTYRE. The hon. gentleman seems to have that question troubling him even yet.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. Yes.

Mr. WILBERT McINTYRE. Now we have the statement made that the immigration which we are bringing in is alien in ideas and is changing the sentiment of the people of this country. We are confronted with the statement that these people whom we are bringing in are lowering the moral tone of this country. We are told that we are bringing in too many people who have been accustomed to different institutions and who naturally favour the institutions to which they have been accustomed. Well, I listened to some of the statistics given us by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk), and I was pleased to notice that, as compared with the United States, we occupy in this respect a very advantageous position. Let us compare the percentage of foreign population in this country as compared with that in the United States. For that purpose I have chosen three groups, the eastern, western and central states, and selected five states out of each group. Here are the statistics which I have been able to obtain of the proportion of foreign born population to the native born population in each group :

Foreign born.

Eastern group—	1890.	1900.
Massachusetts	29·4	30·2
Rhode Island	30·8	31·4
Connecticut	24·6	26·2
New Jersey	22·8	22·9
New York	26·2	26·1
Of the central division the five following show :
Minnesota	35·7	28·9
Wisconsin	30·7	24·9
North Dakota	42·7	35·4
South Dakota	26·1	22·0
Michigan	26·	22·4
Of the five western states :
Utah	25·2	19·4
Washington	25·2	21·5
California	30·2	24·7
Nevada	31·1	23·8
Montana	30·2	27·4

And of the whole United States I find that in 1890 the foreign born population was 14·8 of the whole population and in 1900 it was 13·7 of the whole population.

Now, as to western Canada, where our population is increasing most rapidly and the new comers go in largest numbers. Take the province of Alberta. I have the census of 1906, and I have added to it the report of 1907, and I find the percentage of foreign population——

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. You are not counting the British as foreign ?

Mr. WILBERT McINTYRE. No, nor even the United States, because they have the same language and the same aspirations.

Mr. BERGERON. Are you counting the French as foreign ?

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. Certainly.

Mr. WILBERT McINTYRE. The French are counted as foreign. All born outside the British dominions are counted as foreign.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. What about the United States? Are they in the British dominions?

Mr. WILBERT McINTYRE. My hon. friend (Mr. Lavergne) attempted to give statistics of the foreign born immigration, and he went so far as to call the British immigration foreign.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. Certainly.

Mr. WILBERT McINTYRE. And when I challenged his statement he said the British was the worst class of immigrants we received.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. I deny that again.

Mr. WILBERT McINTYRE. I find by the census of 1906, added to the distribution of population of 1907, that the percentage of foreign population necessary to assimilate—excluding the United States immigration—is as follows :

	Per cent.
Alberta, foreign born population	15
Saskatchewan	20·6
Manitoba	12·3
Average of foreign population in the three provinces	18·7

I have not the statistics of the province of British Columbia, but from the census of 1901 I have selected the foreign population percentages for the five eastern provinces, and I find as follows :

	Per cent.
Ontario	3·4
Quebec	2·5
New Brunswick	2
Nova Scotia	1·4
Prince Edward Island	0·7

In the whole Dominion of Canada the percentage of foreign born population in 1901 was only 5·5 per cent as compared with 13·7 per cent in the United States in the year 1900. It seems to me, therefore, that, as regards the percentage of foreign born population, our position compares very favourably with that of the United States.

The argument is also put forward—I think it was put forward by the hon. member for East Huron (Mr. Chisholm) that we should keep our lands for our natural increase in population. He said, Leave that land there for our children and our children's children. Well, the hon. gentleman must imagine that our people are very much against competition. Any one who talks like that must claim that competition is a bad thing for the people, because the question must naturally arise as to whether we would prefer to have our country cultivated, its conditions improved, its schools and railroads and other public utilities increased rather than have our broad plains remain unpeopled or sparsely populated and in many places an unprofitable waste. To talk of the possibility of populating Canada by natural increase within any reasonable period is to talk of something practically unattainable. Take the increase of population as shown by our census returns. From 1891 to 1901 the increase was 538,076, of which 223,321 was foreign born. That is to say, the natural increase was 315,753. You can go back, and you will find practically the same natural increase every decade of about one-third of a million. I have attempted to show that we can support a population in our western provinces equal to that of the United States or 80,000,000. We have at present about 800,000 people up there, and we have under cultivation only 8,000,000 acres of land. Thus we have one man to every ten acres, and we are cultivating per capita far out of proportion compared with the older provinces. If we had the 120,000,000 acres that are surveyed alone under cultivation, that would support 12,000,000 people on the present average of one man to each 10 acres. Then if we take into consideration the natural industries that must necessarily grow up as the result of our natural resources being cultivated, we could support a very much greater population per acre. But with a natural increase at the rate of one-third of a million in ten years, it would take us centuries to increase our population to such an extent that we could develop as they ought to be developed the natural resources of that country. Why, we in that country are handicapped in every way, we are held back in every way for lack of help. Within 150 miles of Edmonton we have one of the largest bituminous coal fields of the west—coal that is equal, by assay, to that found in southern Alberta or in the Pittsburg region. And yet the Canadian Northern to-day is drawing its bituminous coal all the way from Pittsburg to Edmonton to supply its engines. Why? Because our resources have not been developed; we have not gone ahead fast enough.

A great deal has been said about the enormous annual expenditure of this country. In my opinion, when this government, or any other government, ceases to spend liberally for the development of the natural resources of this country, it should no longer have the support of loyal Canadians. For we have enormous resources, and we must have large expenditures in order that those resources may be developed. The money that we spend in immigration, according to the figures I have given, is shown to be wisely spent by the one fact of the great amount of money brought into the country by immigrants. It is the duty of this government or any other government to use every means within its power to bring the people in. We have the fertile fields by the millions of acres, and all that is required is cultivation in order that they may produce and the country develop. We have begun to produce, we have brought immense wealth to eastern Canada by our production resulting from the cultivation of these wide acres. One part of Canada cannot develop without another part. We are all the same family; we are practically all the same workshop. When we have a failure of crop in the west, nobody feels it more acutely—not even the homesteader—than the eastern manufacturer and the labour depending upon him. I say, then, it is our duty to fill up that country—to bring in desirable classes, it is true.

I know I shall be accused of somewhat representing the western idea. Well, now, let me read a short quotation that will show you the mandate of the west—though 'mandate' may not be just the word to use. I have here a resolution submitted to the Liberal convention of the province of Alberta, assembled in the city of Calgary. These people in Alberta should know, if anybody in Canada knows, how this immigration policy is operating. I do not care to take as a criterion of Canadian sentiment the view of the crowded cities of the east, where you have brought in farm labourers for the surrounding counties and these people have filtered back into the cities. Those cities naturally object to this surplus labour. But our people in the west, who are dealing with these immigrants, who are homesteading with them, who are living and working with them—these people should know whether this policy is wise or not. We had delegates at that convention from every part of the province, from 700 miles north of Edmonton to the international boundary, and from the summit of the Rocky Mountains to the fourth meridian, which is our boundary on the east. And the sentiment of every part of that great province of Alberta, is expressed in this resolution which was received as heartily as any resolution could be:

> Resolved, that this provincial Liberal convention expresses its approval of the wise and progressive immigration policy of the Laurier government.

That is the mandate of the west; that is the estimate that the people out west have; and I may tell you that the Liberals in western Canada, if there are evils, are not at all backward in exposing them. By this resolution the immigration policy of the government received the unanimous endorsation of that convention.

But in the east it is a different matter. When the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden)—and I am sorry he is not in his place at the moment—was on his campaign tour he spoke in the east, and, of course, learned the sentiment there. And when he visited my hon. friend from Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) in his county, the sentiments attributed to him by the Montreal 'Gazette' of September 2, were the following:

The immigration question he considered of extreme importance, as it constituted one of the most potent influences in moulding the destiny of the country. We were beginning to develop a great national spirit, he said, but this development was rendered difficult because the population of Canada was made up of scattered communities, heterogeneous in race and creed. Between the east and west there was a vast stretch of territory that could not be peopled and there was danger of the two sections of the country becoming antagonistic to each other. Under these circumstances, he thought it most unwise to crowd into the west, as the government was doing, a class of undesirable immigrants—Galicians, Bohemians, Doukhobors, &c.—who did not understand our customs and did not readily assimilate either with the French or English elements of Canada.

That was spoken in the province of Quebec. But, when the hon. gentleman (Mr. R. L. Borden) reached the western country, the opinion of his friends up there had its influence upon him. It would almost appear as if the hon. gentleman had been cautioned that it would be unwise to give expression to any such sentiments in that country. This is what he said:

While I am in the west, I wish to say that in respect to the question of immigration, the report which represents me as referring to certain nationalities as undesirable is quite inaccurate. I have never made any such references during my present tour. In the House of Commons I have frequently referred to the Galicians as desirable settlers, basing my opinion on what I saw of the west during my tour of 1902.

There is the one side and there is the other; which are you going to accept? Is it 'while I am in the west' or 'while I am in the east'? Is it the sentiment of Quebec or is it the sentiment of the west?

Mr. BERGERON. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wilbert McIntyre) will allow me—that is not fair. What the leader of the opposition said in the west is the best answer to what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wilbert McIntyre) read. It is not a case of Mr. Borden in the west against Mr. Borden in the east. It is Mr. Borden speaking personally against the report in the newspaper which is a different thing entirely. He should take the version of Mr. Borden himself instead of a newspaper report that Mr. Borden has declared to be inaccurate.

Mr. WILBERT McINTYRE. My hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron) chooses to champion the leader of the opposition along these lines. But I happen to know from certain reports I read, that the hon. member for Beauharnois, when in Quebec, expresses some such sentiments as these. I want to tell the hon. member (Mr. Bergeron) that when he was in the west he gave expression to no such sentiment.

Mr. BERGERON. I want to tell my hon. friend that the member for Beauharnois always uses the same language whether he is in the west or in the east. The hon. gentleman can take the career of the member of Beauharnois during the last 30 years and he will find that such is the case.

Mr. W. McINTYRE. I will say this: that in looking through the reports of the hon. member's speeches throughout the west, I found he was absolutely silent on the immigration policy of the government. It is a very easy matter to talk in a certain vein in one part of the country and then talk vehemently in the very opposite vein in another part, but the hon. gentleman was absolutely silent on this question in the West. He said nothing.

Mr. BERGERON. I must have great talent if I spoke for an hour and a half without saying anything.

Mr. W. McINTYRE. Well, it was pretty nearly that.

Mr. BERGERON. The hon. gentleman did not hear me, because if he did he would not say what he is saying now.

Mr. W. McINTYRE. The hon. gentleman used the time of the people in the west and he used his own time entertaining them about the 'Arctic' and about the 'Montcalm' and other such matters as to which they had no opportunity of obtaining the real facts. But in that storm center of the immigration question he was absolutely silent because the people knew that the sentiments he commonly expressed in Quebec on that question were not the sentiments of the west.

Now, this immigration question largely resolves itself into a business question, and in looking at it from a business point of view we should consider what other countries similarly situated to ours have been doing to secure population. My hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) took the comparison of the United States with Canada, but he must know that most of the natural resources and fertile land of the great American republic have already been exploited with their eighty millions of population. If to-day we had 80,000,000 people in Canada I would hold up both my hands for the resolution of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. MONK. Why?

Mr. W. McINTYRE. Because our natural resources are undeveloped and we must use every legitimate means to develop them.

Mr. MONK. Is it a proper way to bring in the wrong people?

Mr. W. McINTYRE. The hon. gentleman has not proved to the slightest degree that this method of bonusing brought in the wrong people, but on the contrary, I have endeavoured to show that it brought in the right people.

Mr. MONK. You must have all the good people in the west because we have a bad lot in Montreal.

Mr. W. McINTYRE. Let us see how other colonies, situated as we are have endeavoured to get population. I find that Australia very materially assists immigration.

Mr. BERGERON. Any North Atlantic Trading Company there?

Mr. W. McINTYRE. If the hon. gentleman will permit me we will see. I quote from the London Times of January 31st, 1907:

Sydney, New South Wales.—In consequence of the general prosperity of the country and the scarcity of labour the premier has recently extended the immigration regulations. The government is using every endeavour to secure a good flow of the right type of rural settlers and now invites artisans, general labourers and domestic servants of a desirable class to come to the country. Agricultural labourers and general servants may travel from London to Sydney at a nominal cost. Liberal railway concessions will be made to agricultural immigrants and capital qualifications are abolished.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. Is there any bonus?

Mr. W. McINTYRE. If my hon. friend has patience I will show him what they do in Australia. I quote from the London Times of February 11th, 1907:

Brisbane.—Mr. Kitson, the new premier of Queensland, in making a declaration of policy said that the government had an agreement with a steamship company to bring immigrants from Great Britain. The government would pay a portion of the passage money, the immigrants paying only £3 to £5. Free grants of lands of 160 acres would be given to these to pay their own passage and free passages would be given to agricultural labourers.

My hon. friend asks me whether there is a bonus or not, but here you have the case of direct assisted immigration which the policy of this government has repudiated. The Minister of the Interior has asked that only certain desirable classes be brought into this country, and unless the agents discriminate they cannot get the bonus. As a matter of fact the agents are only a means of advertising the resources of the country and for the purpose of selecting a certain desirable class of immigration. I am afraid, Mr. Speaker, I have taken up too much of the time of the House discussing this question, but my object has been to get a few facts together to show that it would be most undesirable that we should in any way relax our efforts to bring people to this country. With the enormous undeveloped natural resources in the west we must keep pushing forward. I am at one with the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) in the demand for the selection of immigrants and if I were not in favour of the selection of immigrants I would do as he has suggested, simply open the door and let them come as they choose, giving no special inducements for bringing any special class —for really that is all I can read into his argument. He says: If we stop this system, we will increase our immigration. I cannot see but that is one point in his argument that he has not proven or attempted to prove; that to relax your efforts means a greater influx seems to me to be paradoxical. I am deeply interested in the immigration policy for it affects us in this western country largely, and I as a young Canadian would have desirable settlers enter the country in great numbers; as to their loyalty, as to their becoming good Canadians, if any hon. gentleman in this House will take the trouble to visit Western Canada during the coming summer, he will find there as loyal, as industrious, and as good a class of citizens as can be found in any other part of this great Dominion.

Mr. L. ROBITAILLE (Quebec County). I have listened with intense interest to the able remarks of the hon. member for Strathcona (Mr. W. McIntyre). He seems, however, to be under a false impression in trying to make this House believe that we are against the development of the west. Such an idea would be far from our minds. We are delighted at the magnificent figures which have been given to show the development of the west, not only from a financial standpoint, but from the standpoint of national development as well. What we are against is the bringing to Canada by a system of bonus premiums of people who are undesirable not only for the west but for the east or any portion of Canada where they may establish themselves. The figures of development which he has just given to the House are not the basic argument upon which he should rely to prove the advisability of the bonus system, because from my observation during certain trips I have made to the west, we have there a large number of American citizens who have sold their lands in their own country and have come to Canada from the two Dakotas and Minnesota, bringing their children and their money and have planted themselves in the west, making in my estimation as high class citizens as any immigrants we could get by a bonus system. No bonus has been paid by the goverment on these immigrants and still we are glad to include in the statistics of our western development the magnificent result of their enterprise and skill.

The hon. member was very paternal in some remarks he made concerning my friend (Mr. Armand Lavergne), trying to teach him what broadmindedness was. It is very well to offer suggestions, but I think the best thing for the hon. member for Strathcona (Mr. W. McIntyre) and others to remember is that they should be broad-minded first and that the west is not the only portion of the Dominion to be considered. Personally, I think if that broadmindedness in theory of which he spoke had been put into practice last year we would not have had the position we have had of the promulgation of the English statute before the promulgation of the French statute. There are many other instances which I could cite in political history where that same broadmindedness has not been shown.

We demand the abolition of the bonus system because it is one of the most potent causes of the introduction into Canada of the undesirable element which it is generally admitted we have in Canada. Perhaps my words may not have much weight with the House, so I shall quote a statement given in 1902 by the present Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) who said:

> We have made an error in the past in paying large sums of money as premiums to navigation companies for the transportation of immigrants, because we transform there and then the navigation companies into immigration agents, and the character of the immigrant, as well as his origin, is of no account so long as they obtain the premium. This system seems to me very undesirable and I would demand its abolition. Leaving to navigation companies the task of inciting immigrants, means that a premium is given on the bad quality of immigrants rather than on the good.

That is exactly what we are asking. We claim that the system of premiums to-day, far from inducing the good and desirable class, forces on us the undesirable immigrant. Further on in 1903, the same gentleman stated :

> Reference has been made, I believe, to the premium as a means of inducing immigration In my opinion, if ever that system has been necessary it is no longer necessary. The payment of premiums or commission tends to bring to us a class of people not the most desirable.

Mr. BENNETT. Was he minister then ?

Mr. ROBITAILLE. No, he had no ministerial function. That probably is the reason why he could speak his own opinion.

The chief argument which has been advanced in favour of the bonus system is that we need farm labourers and that the bonus was paid practically on farm labourers. The hon. member for Strathcona even stated that he had inside information from the Superintendent of Immigration that this system was, as far as possible followed, but I think I have as much information from the Superintendent of Immigration in his testimony made in 1907, before the committee. He was examined by Dr. Sproule as follows :

> Q. If I understand correctly you simply ask the immigrants if they propose to be farm labourers in coming here?—A. That is what we do when they disembark.
> Q. Is that all the information that you have as to the class to which they belong?—A. Yes, we ask their age and their occupation.
>
> Q. What occupation they have followed before coming to Canada?—A. What occupation they were in in the old country. The manifest, I believe, is prepared by the purser of the steamer, who is in no way an official of the government, and is certified by the captain.
>
> Q. I would have thought that an officer of the government would have occupied himself with this work and would have seen that only certain classes of immigrants were sent to us? —A. Whoever has the money can buy a ticket.
>
> Q. But if he has the money will he get the premium?—A. No, but I say that anybody may buy a ticket in the old country.
>
> Q. If I ask you that it is because I know several immigrants like that. It was said that they were farm labourers and had come here to take up farming. I took the trouble to inquire and I discovered that out of six or seven there was not one who had worked one hour on a farm.—A. That may be very true.
> Q. And nevertheless they are sent to us as farm labourers?—A. No, they are not so called. They are sent to us as intending to take up agriculture. In England the day labourer receives on the farm as high a wage as in Canada.

The point that the hon. member for Strathcona was trying to make a few minutes ago was that it was only on farm hands that the premium was paid and that a statement is simply exacted from the newcomer to the effect that he intends to come as a farm labourer. In the present debate the hon. member for Maisonneuve (Mr. Verville) read a letter from the Salvation Army which points out that the premium should be paid only on farm labourers and suggests that a certain party, not a farm labourer, but a skilled mechanic, should accept a position on a farm for the first six months, at the expiration of which time an opportunity might be offered for work in his own trade. That is where the difficulty lies. What opportunity has the government of discriminating between the farm labourer and the skilled mechanic or other person when he arrives at the port of landing especially in view of the suggestion which is contained in this letter that a man should at the outset represent himself to be a farm labourer? It is on people of this class that $5 per capita is paid. If the theory, as advanced by several hon. members of this House were correct, that this bonus is going to be paid to secure desirable immigrants, I would be the first one to support it, but I say that there is not a man in this Dominion that can put this system into practical operation and apply it to the right people. The fact is that many people who come to this country as farm labourers are not in reality farm labourers, and we have to pay out our good money without getting the results which we have in view. The object attained may be good in some respects, but it is not the desired one. It seems to me that there are other directions in which the money of this country can be more profitably expended than by devoting it to this purpose. Another answer which was given by Mr. Scott was this :

The agricultural population of Great Britain is but a very small percentage and you must naturally address yourself to working men and day labourers. Besides whoever has the wherewithal to pay his passage may come to this country.

There is a long deposition that I shall not continue to read because it might weary the House. I think that I have quoted sufficiently upon this subject to establish my point. It being six o'clock, Mr. Speaker, I desire to move the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

At six o'clock the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, April 23, 1908.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

OFFICIAL REPORT OF THE DEBATES.

Mr. HONORE GERVAIS (St. James, Montreal) presented the second report of the select standing committee appointed to supervise the official reports of the debates of this House during the present session, as follows:

That the salary of $2,000 per annum, at present paid to each member of the staff of official reporters of the debates, be increased to $2,500.

That the salary of $1,200 per annum, now paid Mr. C. W. Boyce, assistant to the chief reporter, be increased to $1,500.

That the above mentioned increases date from the 15th May, 1906.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

(Sgd.) HONORE GERVAIS,
Chairman.

Mr. HONORE GERVAIS (St. James, Montreal) presented the third report of the select standing committee appointed to supervise the official reports of the debates of this House during the present session, as follows :

Your committee have had under consideration the question of the improvement of the system which has prevailed with respect to what is considered an unnecessary delay or interval of from eight to ten days between the date of publication of the daily (unrevised) and the issue of the French edition of the official report of the debates due to the system in vogue of publishing a revised English edition which, upon examination, has been found to contain such extensive changes, in the majority of cases are alterations, not corrections, that it cannot be considered an accurate record of what has really transpired in the House.

Your committee with a view of remedying the existing deficiencies recommend that hereafter the debates be translated into French from the daily (unrevised) edition, and that members in revising their speeches be limited to the correction of clerical errors only which may appear therein.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

(Sgd.) HONORE GERVAIS,
Chairman.

Hon. WM. PATERSON (Minister of Customs). This is rather a long question to answer, but I suppose there is now no opportunity for a notice of motion. I would ask that the question stand. There is no objection to it. I will have the information prepared ; it will take a little time ; perhaps I shall be allowed to hand it to 'Hansard.'

5. Were there no senior officials in the Edmonton or other land offices fully qualified for the appointment of agent there?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior) :

1. Yes.
2. He was in business in Edmonton. He had been mayor of the city and before that principal of the High School.
3. The practice is to take the best men that can be got at the time and place.
4. Political opinions do not debar an official from promotion.
5. In the opinion of the minister. No.

DISTRIBUTION OF SEED GRAIN.

Mr. LENNOX asked :

2. Do the amended regulations apply to Alberta and Saskatchewan?
3. On what authority does the Governor in Council purport to divert the appropriation for said grain from the purpose for which it was voted?

5. Will the government bring down and lay upon the table of the House the order in council above referred to?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior) :

1. Yes.
2. Yes.
3. The appropriation has not been diverted from the purpose for which it was voted.
4. Yes, to the extent provided for by the order in council of the 17th March, 1908.
5 Copy of order in council of the 17th March, 1908, herewith.

Certified copy of a report of the Committee of the Privy Council, approved by His Excellency the Governor General on the 17th March, 1908.

The Committee of the Privy Council have had under consideration a report, dated 14th March, 1908, from the Minister of the Interior stating that under clause 15 of the regulations approved by order in council of the 6th of February, 1908, respecting the purchase, sale and distribution of grain to homestead settlers in the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan, it is provided that no seed grain shall be supplied to homestead settlers who had sown no crop in the season of 1907. According to the reports received from the officers of the Department of the Interior who have been at work in the west in connection with the distribution, it would appear that the number of applications that are being received for advances of seed grain under the provisions of the regulations is not as large as had been anticipated, and that in consequence that appropriation lately made by parliament to cover this expenditure is likely to be in excess of the requirements.

The minister recommends, inasmuch as numerous applications have been received from farmers in the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan who, although they had sown no crop in 1907, are urgently in need of seed grain during the coming season, and as the machinery for the purchase, distribution and taking of security for advances of seed grain now in operation is well fitted and sufficient to deal with such applications and as the seed grain needed as above stated, is not available in the provinces mentioned, and therefore cannot well be secured by the individual action of those who require it, that clause 15 of the regulations, approved by order in council of the 6th February, 1908, be amended so as to permit of advances to be made to settlers who had sown no crop in the season of 1907, under the same terms and conditions as set forth in such regulations.

The Committee submit the same for approval.

(Sgd.) RODOLPHE BOUDREAU,
Clerk of the Privy Council.

Appointed Commissioner of Lights by order in council of the 31st October, 1903 and in November, 1903 his salary was raised to $2,000.

Mr. ROBITAILLE asked:

1. When will the last volume of the French version of the Revised Statutes of 1906 be printed for distribution?

2. Is the government aware that French-speaking lawyers of Montreal and Quebec are said to be handicapped by their English colleagues in facility of indexing, &c.?

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH (Minister of Justice):

2. No intimation of this character has been made to the government.

3. The requirement of the constitution is that both languages be used in the Records and Journals of both Houses of parliament.

PARDON OF DOUKHOBORS.

Mr. LAKE asked:

1. Have the following telegrams been sent by the Department of Justice to Magistrate Palling, of Fort William:

'The Minister of Justice requests that you will be good enough to send immediately report upon case of ten male and nine female Doukhobors committed by you to Port Arthur jail.'

'Please report pardon for Doukhobors now in Port Arthur jail preparatory to their being shipped back to Saskatchewan, where they came from.'

2. Is it true that the government have pardoned or contemplate pardoning these Doukhobors committed to prison for an aggravatetd offence against public decency?

3. Is it true that they contemplate sending these people to the province of Saskatchewan? If so, on what grounds, under what authority and at whose expense?

4. Will they undertake the responsibility for the good behaviour of these people by guaranteeing the province of Saskatchewan against any expenses that may be incurred should they commit the same offence?

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH (Minister of Justice):

1. On 14th April inst., the Inspector of Prisons and Public Charities for the province of Ontario and the Inspector of Hospitals and Public Charities for the same province saw me, bringing a letter from the Deputy Attorney General of the province which stated that a number of Doukhobors had come from Saskatoon to Port Arthur, Ontario, and that some of them had been sentenced, for indecent exposure, to the Central Prison and Mercer Reformatory repectively. The letter added that there was no room, either at the Central Prison or in the jail at Port Arthur, and that it was thought the best course would be to have these persons pardoned and let them be removed to the part of the country from which they came where they would be amongst their own people.

The inspectors stated that there were nineteen Doukhobors detained in the jail at Port Arthur and over fifty others living in Fort William—that all of them, both those at large and those in jail, desired to return to their homes in Saskatchewan, or were willing to do so, but that those who were at large would not go leaving behind those who were in jail, and in these circumstances the inspectors asked that those in jail should be pardoned at once.

I stated that it would be necessary to inquire the views of the convicting magistrate. The inspectors asked me to do so by telegraph and I directed that to be done.

A telegram was accordingly sent in the words following:

April 14, 1908.

Mr. Police Magistrate Palling,
Fort William.

The Minister of Justice requests you will be good enough to send immediately report upon cases of ten male and nine female Doukhobors committed to you to Port Arthur jail.

A. POWER,
For Deputy Minister of Justice.

No other telegram or message of any kind relating to the matter was sent by or from the Department of Justice to Mr. Magistrate Palling, or to anybody. I have no knowledge whatever of the other telegram which is quoted in the question put by the hon. gentleman. The newspaper statements that it was sent by me, or from Mr. Power, or any one in the Department of Justice, are entirely without foundation.

The report of the convicting magistrate was received by mail on the 16th April instant, and the case was submitted to His Excellency the Administrator of the government on the 18th instant.

2. The release of the prisoners has been directed.

3. It is not true that the government has, or has had, it in contemplation to send these people to the province of Saskatchewan, or to any other place, or to take any step whatever in the matter except to release the nineteen prisoners and leave them at liberty to come or go where they will, as any other residents of the country might, if the laws of the country are observed.

4. The government does not undertake, or recognize, any responsibility in the premises except for the recommendation to release the prisoners. If a Doukhobor offends against any law, he is in exactly the same position as any other resident of the country who may so offend, and the administration of justice in the province is matter wholly for the authorities of such province.

THE NATIONAL TRANSCONTINENTAL RAILWAY.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Mr. Speaker, with reference to the question that was asked yesterday and the day before yesterday by my hon. friend the leader of the opposition concerning certain charges made by Major Hodgins as to the manner in which the work of construction of the Transcontinental Railway is carried on, I had this morning an interview with Mr. Parent. I should say that the correspondence which led to the dismissal of Major Hodgins as an engineer of the Transcontinental Railway has been before the public five or six weeks. With reference to the charges of Major Hodgins affecting the manner in which the construction of the Transcontinental Railway is carried on, I have asked Mr. Parent for, and he has promised me, a statement which I intend to place on the table of the House as soon as it is received. I do not expect that I can have it in time to lay it before the House to-day, but hope to have it to-morrow, when I shall give a further statement regarding any action to be taken thereupon should any be needed.

TREATY BETWEEN GREAT BRITAIN AND THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Has the right hon. gentleman any further news with regard to the proposed treaty between Great Britain and the United States ?
