POETRY.

The Half-Way House.

I have entered the door of the half-way house,
That stands betwixt life and death,
And its walls are black with the terrible blight,
Of pain's corroding breath.

Its halls are narrow, and low, and long,
And ghostly phantoms fly,
At the sound of many a shuddering sob,
And many a quivering sigh.

There is never a window to let in light,
And never a gleam of sun,
For when we enter its low, sad door,
The days and nights are one.

The days go by in a frenzied stream,
The nights in a wild despair,
And the only angel that enters here,
Is the pitiful one of prayer.

On the wings of prayer my feeble hands,
Will batter the thick walls down,
'Till often above the weight of the cross
I catch the gleam of a crown.

But again with a rush the friends of pain
Will drag me back to earth,
While a helpless prisoner I am bound,
In the thralls of their heartless mirth.

As they torture, and scourge, and burn me o'er,
'Till I cry in a sad unrest
For the blessed calm of the welcome day,
When they fold my hands on my breast.

I know not how I shall leave this house,
By the door that I entered in,
Or the lower door that swings without,
From a world of sorrow and sin.

But how'er it be, oh, lift me up;
Thou angel of peace and prayer,
And teach me anew the way to endure
The sorrows I have to bear!

SELECT STORY.

Mag's Children.

"Is it?" said Mag slowly. "Read it, Bob."

Bob repeated it reverently.
"Isn't it nice here, Mag? So quiet."
"Yes," said Mag, absently, then suddenly remembering. "Oh Bob, Miss Lucy has given us three tickets for you and Sammy and Jude to go for a sail on the lake."

"But Mag, you should go."
"No I shouldn't, I have been often and often and I always get sick. Now you go and tell the others and I'll stay here and get cool."

Mag was left alone to gaze through the bars at the graves. It was so quiet and the grass was so green. An elm tree cast a soft shade over the grass. Mag with his face pressed against the bars, repeated "Suffer little children to come unto Me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven." Her eyes filled with tears.

It would be a good place to sleep on the grass in the shade of the elm tree. The cathedral chiming began to play. 1, 2, 3. The quick bells seemed to be chasing each other. 1, 2, 3, 4; 1, 2, 3, 4 and again 1, 2, 3, 4. Then the great bell struck low and deep. Mag counted the strokes as they fell. Five, she counted five, and springing up, ran away to sell papers.

The next morning great preparations were going on in a house in the suburbs. Miss Lucy lived here and a private picnic was coming off that day. On a verandah at the back of the house was Miss Lucy on her knees before a hamper packing away provisions. A maid was handing her the different parcels, and endeavoring at the same time to keep an eye on Master Jack and Miss Mabel, Miss Lucy's nephew and niece. A few minutes before they had coaxed Aunt Lucy to give them some cake. Now they were chasing the cat, who took refuge in the top of an apple tree. A moment's quiet then from a distant part of the garden came in a shrill treble:

"Aunt Lucy, is Mr Carr coming this afternoon?"
"Yes, Mabel."
"Aren't you glad, Aunt Lucy?"
"Mabel, when you wish to speak to me you should come near me and speak gently, and not shout like that."
"In a wonderfully short space of time the question was repeated breathlessly by her side."

"Are you glad, Aunt Lucy?"
"I am pleased Mabel that Mr Carr will see our beautiful lake."
"Hasn't he ever seen the lake Aunt Lucy?"
"Yes, but he has never been on it yet. Now run away. I must get this packing done."
Mr Carr met them later on board the steamer. Mabel looked at him wisely from her aunt's side. Their seat was far up in the bow. The boat starts, the blue waves dance and the paddle wheels dash them into foam. A cool breeze is blowing from the lake and brings the color into Bobby's pale cheeks. The children are sitting in the stern. Peter and Mag waved good bye from the wharf, and now every turn of the paddle wheels brought a new delight—a white cloud floating far above them and casting a shadow on the steamer's deck, a gull swooping down to the water, or a tug ploughing its way through the waves. They reached the park. Then there was a rush over the gangway and over the wharf to the green meadows. How delightful it was racing down the hollows or playing hide-and-go-seek among the trees.

In the city Peter and Mag have separated long ago after coming from the wharf, and have met again a dozen times in the streets. Peter fancies that Mag is quiet and wonders what she is thinking about.

The afternoon seems long to Mag, who is tired. When she buys the evening papers she smiles to herself, thinking that the children will be at tea. She is crossing the street when suddenly she hears a shout and then a dreadful crash. She wonders at it. Sees a face, recognizes one of her customers, and holds out a paper with a smile, then falls in a little huddled heap at his feet. Some one takes her into a drug store to wait for the ambulance. When they reach the hospital she is carried in gently. Over the door she notices the words "I was sick and ye visited me." In some dim way Mag connects them with another verse, and the house doctor bending over her hears her murmur "Suffer little children to come unto Me."

Mag opening her eyes finds herself in bed in a quiet ward. Opposite are great windows looking up to the sky. The afternoon sun sends long rays of light into the room. A cool breeze comes in at the open windows and blows softly on her face. The stillness is broken only by the footfall of the nurse as she passes from bed to bed. Mag watches her until the nurse, looking up, comes quickly to her.

"Do you know where you are, my dear?"
"In the hospital."
"You are not frightened are you?"
"Oh no, not when you are here, what time is it?"
"Almost six. What is it dear?" she added, noticing the tears in Mag's eyes.

"My children. What will become of my children?"
"Tell me about them." And kneeling beside the bed the nurse, half lifted Mag in her arms.

"At five o'clock the children went to Miss Lucy, who was talking to a gentleman. Bob thought that he looked like his father."
"This is a brother and sister of one of my Sunday School scholars, Mr Carr—and this little boy is—"

But before she could say Bob's name he sprang forward. "Uncle, uncle, don't you know me?"
Mr Carr looked at Bob's eager face, then caught him in his arms. "My dear boy, where have you been?"
Bob poured out his story, while Miss Lucy listened in silent astonishment. When Bob had finished Mr Carr turned to Miss Lucy.

"This is my nephew, who was lost last winter. He will be your nephew, too, he added in a whisper. Miss Lucy blushed and bent down to kiss Bob. What a feast they had! What a friendship Jack and Mabel struck up with the children! Then came the sail home when the sun was going down, Peter was waiting at the wharf. He took hold of the children as soon as they crossed the gangway. Mr Carr said:

"I will help you wish the children, Peter."
Bob had told him who it was.
"No, Mag's hurt. I am going to take care of the children for Mag. Don't cry, I'll take care of you."
"Did you say Mag was hurt?" cried Miss Lucy. Peter nodded. After he told them what had happened it was decided that Mr Carr would take the children to see Mag, while Miss Lucy went home with Jack and Mabel.

"It will be better Lucy, then you can come and see Mag afterwards."

Mag was lying quiet, when looking up she saw Mr Carr and the children standing at the door. The nurse met them.

"I am glad that you have come, sir, with the children. I have seen you with Miss Passmer," she added.
"Yes, I am Bob's uncle."
"Are you, indeed, sir? Mag will be so pleased."
Mag held out her arms with a smile as they came up the ward. The children stood beside the bed in the red glow of the sunset and heard her voice, as in a dream, telling them that was going away.

"I was sorry at first, but God will take care of you, and children be good, be good always, and keep together. Take care of Sammy and Jule, Peter, and be kind to Jule, Sammy."
She kissed them good-bye, then the nurse led them away. Mr Carr took Mag's hand in both of his. "I want to thank you Mag for being so kind to Bob. Miss Lucy is going to be my wife and we promise to take care of the children for your sake, Mag."

"Thank you, sir," she said, simply. "Give my love to Miss Lucy. Good-bye."
When the nurse came back, Mag was looking steadily at the beautiful sky. A fitful breeze stirred the tree tops. The evening star was shining alone. The nurse sat down beside her bed. Before long another star came out. Mag drew a long breath.

"It had shone so long along, and it looked so kind. Won't you lift me up in your arms the way you did before. Don't go away again."
"No, dear."
Mag sighed contentedly and the lines of pain in her forehead relaxed. The nurse began to repeat verses from the Bible in a low voice. "Though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death I will fear no evil, for thou art with me."
"That is Jesus who will be with me?"
"Yes, dear."
"Now say, Suffer little children—"

Presently she fell asleep and the nurse laid her down on the pillow. She woke up with a start. "He is waiting for me, don't you see, good-bye." She lifted her arms with a cry of joy.

There was no sound in the room; but the wind, that had for the last hour been still, suddenly swept through the trees. The great silent heavens were set thick with stars, and through the open windows came the distant music of the cathedral bells. —Majority Ma-Murphy.

Uses of Moss.

In the hundreds of varieties of mosses which are known to botanists, there are many which are so exquisitely beautiful in themselves so delicate in tint and texture, and so soft and warm in effect that we transfer them to our homes for the uses of decoration.

The mosses, however, perform a part in the work of the world, which is more important than that of decoration. In their nature often makes a beautiful beginning toward clothing utterly waste places with a soil upon which plants and trees may live, and which become capable of supporting human life.

Upon the rock surface of a ledge in spots where the force of the sun is least strong, and where most moisture is found, we see thin mosses forming. Gradually they grow thicker and stronger. The patches that they have made extend and meet each other until a considerable surface is covered over.

As they develop their growths they decay and a rich dark mold is formed beneath. The seeds of other plants lodge in the mosses which hold them fast, and makes them sprout and grow, sending their roots a long the layer of mold. A beginning has been made for a vegetation upon the rocks.

Gradually the mosses are driven out by stronger plants, which run their roots into the crevices of the rock; but the moss by its death makes the life of the herbage that follows it possible. It actually dies for other plants.

The grass grows where the moss made its soft, feeble beginning. The decay of the grass thickens the turf from year to year, and thus makes a soil at last upon which beasts may graze or which may be cultivated.

Or if, as is more likely, the surroundings tend to make a forest on the spot rather than a grassy slope the tiny shrubs yield to larger bushes, and the bushes make way for the trees, which, sending their roots among the rocks, often rend them asunder.

Perhaps the newest, and in many ways the strongest use of moss is that to which the quinine planters have found it may be put. In taking the bark from the chincona tree, from which quinine is obtained, strips of untouched bark are left, in order that the tree may not be killed.

It has been found that if moss be applied to the spaces on the trees which have been stripped of their bark, a new bark forms, and this new bark is actually richer in quinine than the original portions.

Two Girls.

There is a girl, and I love to think of her and talk of her, who comes in late when there is company, who wears a pretty air of mingled responsibility and anxiety with her youth, whom the others seem to depend upon and look to for many comforts. She is the girl who helps mother.

In her own home, she is a blessed little saint and comforter. She takes unfinished tasks from the tired, stiff fingers that falter at their work; her strong young fingers are a staff upon which the gray-haired, white-faced mother leans and is rested. She helps her mother with the spring sewing, with the week's mending, with a cheerful conversation and congenial companionship that some girls do not think worth while wasting on only mother.

And when there comes a day when she must bend over the old worn-out body of mother lying unheeded in her coffin, the rough hands folded, her long disquiet merged in rest, something very sweet will be mingled with her loss, and the girl who helped her mother will find a benediction of peace upon her head and in her heart.

The girl who works, God bless her, is another girl whom I know. She is brave and active. She is not too proud to earn her own living or ashamed to be caught at her daily task. She is studious and painstaking and patient. She smiles on you from behind counter or desk. There is a memory of her seen into each gown. She is a beautiful mountaineer already far up the hill, and the sight of her should be a fine inspiration for us all. It is an honor to know this girl—to be worthy of her regard. Her hand may be stained by factory grease or printer's ink, but it is an honest hand and a helping hand. It stays misfortune from many homes; it is the one shield that protects many a forlorn little family from the alms house and asylum.

A Laugh-producing Plant.

Palgrave in his work on Central and Eastern Arabia, mentions a plant in the work of the world, which is more important than that of decoration. In their nature often makes a beautiful beginning toward clothing utterly waste places with a soil upon which plants and trees may live, and which become capable of supporting human life.

Upon the rock surface of a ledge in spots where the force of the sun is least strong, and where most moisture is found, we see thin mosses forming. Gradually they grow thicker and stronger. The patches that they have made extend and meet each other until a considerable surface is covered over.

As they develop their growths they decay and a rich dark mold is formed beneath. The seeds of other plants lodge in the mosses which hold them fast, and makes them sprout and grow, sending their roots a long the layer of mold. A beginning has been made for a vegetation upon the rocks.

Gradually the mosses are driven out by stronger plants, which run their roots into the crevices of the rock; but the moss by its death makes the life of the herbage that follows it possible. It actually dies for other plants.

The grass grows where the moss made its soft, feeble beginning. The

The Czar's Family.

The Empress of Russia has daughters much with her, and has not even a so-called governess for them. Her own personal attendant and her lady of honor serve also for them. In part this springs from the emperor's love for simplicity of life, but in part also, that they try to surround themselves with as few people as possible, so that as little as may be concerning their private life should transpire to the outer world, of whom they are, and not without good reason, much afraid.

The empress superintends in person the education of the two little grand-daughters, Xenia and Olga, aged respectively 11 and 6. The emperor in his leisure moments tries to do the same for his boys. Especially he loves to give them music and dancing lessons for he thinks himself a great musician, and has a predilection for the cornet-piston.

DRIFT OF THE TIMES.—Mrs Mary Lanthrop recently addressed an immense audience at Portland, Maine, in her usual stirring sensible manner. She said very truly that: The drinking classes were never so far from the churches as to-day. We must bring politics into our religion and religion into politics before we can solve the liquor problem. It is a National question and we must look to government for its settlement, because moral suasion unaided has proved inadequate. Men are bought and sold in the shambles of the liquor traffic, which has its hand in murderous assault on the throat of the Republic.

THE ACADIAN

WOLFVILLE, N. S., JULY 4, 1890.

The Observance of Dominion Day.

There is a close connection between the observance of national days and national feeling. The return of the day reminds the people that they have a country and that their citizenship is a thing of value.

The Lieutenant-Governor Dead.

The news of the death of Nova Scotia's Governor has been received with universal sorrow. On Thursday morning, the 26th June, shortly before ten o'clock, after quite a long illness, the Lieutenant-Governor passed away at the Government House.

FRUIT.—The Canadian Horticulturist

says the present indications are that Ontario will have the largest fruit crop ever harvested provided no untoward circumstances arise in the meantime.

Terminal City.

A company of Boston capitalists has been quietly developing the foundations of a seaport at the east end of the straits of Canso, and if expectations are realized it will have a most important bearing upon future communications between Europe and America.

Central Baptist Association.

The Central Baptist Association met in Falmouth, Hants county, on June 26th at 2 p. m. Rev. J. W. Manning, Moderator, called the meeting to order. After a short time spent in devotional exercises the following officers were elected for the ensuing year: Colin W. Roscoe, Moderator; Rev. Joseph Murray, Secretary; L. D. Morse, Assistant Secretary; W. O. Taylor, Treasurer.

Middleton's Celebration.

The Middleton celebration was witnessed by over five thousand people. The Nova Scotia Centennial 1000. The Windsor and Annapolis areas were packed from east and west and hundreds of teams came from the surrounding country.

A National Reputation.

Sir John Thompson's holiday to England has been well earned. Besides being in most ways the ablest, he is the hardest working of the ministers, and brings to his duties a painstaking industry possessed by comparatively few.

Harl Harlee Fishing.

THE HUMORIST TELLS A TRUE FISH STORY—THE FIRST, HE THINKS, THAT HAS EVER BEEN TOLD.

Writing up a fish story was something I never would do. It seemed to me that it could not be done without exaggeration, so I kept from it. But lately I have been thinking that a true one might be written, and that I was the one to do it.

I thought I would go fishing before I wrote about it. So arrangements were made. Our party numbered seven and consisted of a man and his wife and a boy that took after his father for telling things and his mother for keeping secrets.

Our drive to the lakes was delightful. Perhaps no part of Nova Scotia can present scenery grander, or more picturesque than that amid which Acadia Mines reposes. Sometimes we would stop and get our glasses out to get a better view of the grandeur just outside our carriages.

A high wind had preceded us, and when we reached the lakes we found it hovering over the water as if sent on purpose to protect the fish. And it did protect them. It blew them all away but five, and we got them. I hired a resident fisherman to go to a quieter lake and fish for me.

About three o'clock the ladies called us to lunch. Next to the ministry there is nothing I would sooner be called to. The hour spent over the bountiful repast of pies, cakes, etc., was one of the pleasantest of the day.
