INFLUENCE.

Far in the distant years some deed of beauty

Hath struck the key-note of a bold refrain,

And many a noble act and high-souled duty

Lead on the lofty strain.

Far in the distant years some thought came gleaming

Along the history of this world's great life,

And quivering down from heart to heart its meaning—

With glory still its rife.

Oh, blest the power such deeds of heavenly meetings

To pour down the track of coming days,

And blest the thoughts that fall in living sweetness

Upon life's common ways.

And glad the gathering when our time is ended,

Of all the influence that one life hath cast;

The souls that through such earnest words have tended

Upward to heaven at last.

—Longfellow.

TO THE SETTING SUN.

Adieu! adieu! thou all-representing sun;

Adieu! thou radiant father of the day;

Thy course of heavenly glory now is run,

For thou the will of God must e'er obey.

Thou sinkest now behind the western hills

And rests the day-cleans its reluctant flight;

And now the glorious earth with darkness fills,

And rests upon the lap of blissful night.

The crimson landscape on the vapors grey

Framed by the glory of thy dying beams,

Fades with thy sinking orb as fades the day

When wanes the glory of thy setting gleams.

How often, oh! thou father of all days,

Hast thou the ethereal walls of heaven climbed;

And oh! how long have thy refulgent rays

The days of earth and blissful heaven timed.

Oh, time, what changes have thy circling years

Brought forth on man and on his earthly home!

How many thousands who have shed their tears

Of woe, now rest within the narrow tomb!

But thou, thy face is radiant as when

Time's ever circling years began to flow;

And glorious are thy lovely rays as then,

Cast on the smiling face of earth below.

Interesting Story.

NATHALIE.

(CONCLUDED.)

She stood up at last by the low garden fence, her arm laid along the narrow iron ledge and her forehead upon it. A very different picture this, from that other one of the girl in cheery ribbons and dainty worked apron, with her lover by her side! Such a different picture!

"My little love! my little love!" The words haunted her thoughts still, not comforting now but mocking, taunting her with the recollection of all she had lost. Has it come to this—that I am caring for another woman's husband? she severely asked herself. "I must never see him again if it can be avoided—for my own honor and my soul's peace I dare not. And yet—have I strength enough for this? Have I? God help me! I doubt, I doubt! Oh, mother! what have you done? Oh, me! I think the angels must have pined her! so desolate as she was, with no help in heaven or earth.

She lifted her face at last—the weariest face you ever saw, but with a desperate resolve hardening and darkening in it. "If I were only out of this! Anywhere from this place!—anywhere out of the world!" A point of light struck suddenly upon something bright at her feet. Mechanically she stooped and picked it up. It was a pocket knife, Roy's she knew, and the long, narrow, pointed blade was open. A strange thought came across her—and she made no effort to drive it back again. Just a little incision in her white arm; so easy to make, and in half an hour she would be beyond all this trouble and misery and temptation.

Was it a suggestion of the Evil one? the arch enemy who is always lying in wait for souls. She did not know. She hardly cared, I think. She unfastened her sleeve at the wrist, pushing it above the elbow, and sliding her fingers over the smooth surface in search of some proper spot to strike. Doing it, you understand in a kind of mockery—but which had a vein of earnestness running in it. If Mrs. Bruner had only known, or her brother Roy, laughing and talking so merrily indoors, that Nathalie was feeling she would like to go home, there, to her death.

Are there many of us, I wonder—many of us women, I mean—who know what it is to stand face to face with death, even only as this girl was doing? Death of her own seeking. The bravest may well hold their breath when thinking of it. There she stood; the knife open and passing her fingers over her arm. Suddenly the knife was taken from her. "Do you remember the old saying, that 'It's dangerous playing with edged tools'?"

Roy's hand, and Roy's voice. He had been named Leroy, after his father. But the word is a difficult one for English lips, and they had converted it into Roy, of Roy.

Did he understand what the blade and barbed arm meant? It was not easy to say. He had his mother's eyes—eyes that told nothing save what their owner chose to reveal—and his tone was careless enough. The worst of course he did not fear, but he divined that she was strangely unhappy.

"So you have got back, Nathalie? I was thinking of going down to meet you. I thought you might feel lonely as it is so late."

Nathalie did not look at him or speak, and he stood there a moment drumming on the fence with his fingers—a boyish habit he sometimes had. Younger than Nathalie, he was yet tall and old for his years, a fine young man, with some strength of will. Mrs. Bruner was always suspecting he would not long be tractable as he had been.

"Are you sick, Nathalie?" he asked, looking at her earnestly.

"No, not sick, Roy?"

"Tired, then. Come indoors and rest."

"Yes. Here are some books and papers I brought over from the post."

"Thank you, dear. Come along. Mr. and Mrs. Taylor are here. They drove over from Ludlow this afternoon. Where do you think they are going, Nathalie?"

"To California!" she echoed. "What for?"

"Oh, —Taylor has property out there. He means to take out more, settle there and make his fortune. By his account it must be El Dorado. If it were not for all the land at home here, I might be tempted to go with them myself," he concluded, laughing.

Nathalie hardly heard his last words. She was thinking. To California! Why, that was at the other side of the world; and the next best thing to getting out of it all together. Like a flash the thought came. She would go to California; would go with them if they would take her. She went into the parlor with her brother.

"Roy! Tell me you are going to California," she observed, almost abruptly, after greeting Mr. and Mrs. Taylor.

"And so we are, Miss Nathalie. In less than a month's time."

"I should like to go with you. Will you take me as a fellow-passenger?"

They treated the request as one of jest, and jestingly answered, "Oh, yes, of course they would—and take good care of her."

"But, my dear," said Mrs. Taylor, "what would you do when you got there?"

"Live with my aunt," replied Nathalie. "You know, I think, that I have an aunt in San Francisco—my father's sister. She has lost her daughter, and has often said in her letters she would give the world to have me."

Mrs. Bruner looked at Nathalie. There was a steadiness in the tone that almost seemed to indicate the wild words were true.

"Don't be absurd, Nathalie," she cried. "One might suppose you were in earnest."

"And if I am, mamma?"

"If you are!" scornfully repeated the mother—"if you were capable of being so mad, I should trust you as an infant, and lay my interdict upon you."

No more was said then. It was not the time for it—as Nathalie saw. Nay, she knew if this project were to be carried out, it would have to be concealed from Mrs. Bruner until the day of starting.

In a day or two Nathalie got Roy to drive her to Ludlow in their little carriage. He had business there connected with the home-farm. While he transacted it, she was at Mrs. Taylor's talking earnestly to that lady and her husband. After that, she visited certain shops and places in Ludlow, and gave sundry orders.

The weeks passed quickly away; the month was nearly at its end. Nathalie had seen George Vandeware but twice during that time. Once when, riding past the house, he had lifted his hat to her, regardless of Mrs. Bruner's stony stare, who stood by her at the gate. And once again when meeting her suddenly in the road one evening he had come up to her with outstretched hands and that look in his eyes that she was most of all afraid of, and she had glided away from him like a spirit, leaving him to wonder if Nathalie had really grown afraid of him. Well, it was hard, only Heaven above knew how hard, for her to avoid him in that way. And all the while she was longing with a sick hunger; a hunger that was almost like death, for one sight of his face, one touch of his lips. Ah! weak heart! so weak, yet strong enough to renounce all.

Another day or two went by quickly, and all preparations were completed. Nothing now remained but to tell them of her purpose. She broke it to Roy first. And though the boy stormed at once; ay, and cried; Nathalie somehow won him over. He saw that she was resolved; and he knew he had no power to retain her.

Mrs. Bruner's turn came next. She listened in cool incredulity.

"You must be an utter fool, Nathalie, to fancy, for a moment, I should allow anything of the kind. Don't you remember what I said that night Mr. and Mrs. Taylor were here?"

"I remember, mother. But I am going. All things have been made ready. We start from Mr. and Mrs. Taylor's house to-night. Our cabins are taken in the good clipper ship."

Quiet words quietly spoken—but they struck Mrs. Bruner dumb for an instant. It was something new for her authority to be set aside in this way, and the underlying hardness of her nature came into her face.

"I forbid it, Nathalie. I am your mother, your rightful guardian. I shall prevent you from taking this impudent step."

"No one can prevent me, mother. I am my own mistress."

Too true. Perhaps Mrs. Bruner had forgotten it. She was of age; she had the control of her own little fortune. They looked steadily into each other's faces, those two women; Nathalie's so grave and impassive, the mother's working a little. Mrs. Bruner was silent, seeing at last how useless all opposition must be. Nathalie was surely going, and it was out of her power to prevent it. It may be the thought came to her then how lonely the house would be when she was gone—the only daughter who had been with her always.

As for Roy, he had kept silence. Perhaps he remembered that night when he had found Nathalie in the garden with his own knife in her hand, and that desperate look on her face, and remembering, was not so much surprised now. I believe too, that he guessed more of the truth than Mrs. Bruner, with all her woman's intuition, had discovered.

Nathalie turned to him. "You will drive me to Ludlow, Roy?"

"I must speak to you first," he answered, with a sob of pain. "Come out here."

Drawing her beyond the range of Mrs. Bruner's keen eyes and hearing, he made her sit down in the warm sunlight. He was shaking all over, as he took her hand between his hands and bent down and kissed her. He had never done it since they were children.

"Little sister, it is best to go to the other side of the world in this way?"

What was it she saw in his glance that made her draw her arm up over his shoulder with a quick, fond movement?

"I must go, Roy."

"To leave us all? To leave your home? To leave me?"

"Don't make the pain worse for me, Roy. Heaven alone knows what I have to bear. I must go. I shall love you and remember you always, Roy: my one good, dear brother."

"Oh, stay! Nathalie, stay."

"If I could have stayed, Roy, I should never have wished to go."

The afternoon came on. Yes, her departure was all too sure. Nathalie was in her room putting her things on, and Roy was making ready for the drive, when Mrs. Bruner came in. For the space of five minutes there was utter silence. It was broken at last by Mrs. Bruner.

"It is all so strange and sudden."

"Not to me, Mother. I have been preparing for weeks past."

"And did not tell me!"

"I knew you would oppose. And it was easier to work without opposition."

"Nathalie, will you tell me why you are going?"

She was kneeling on the floor, turning the key in the lock of a small trunk that would go with her. The rest of the luggage was at Ludlow. When it was done she stood up, and in all her life Mrs. Bruner had never looked upon a whiter face than Nathalie's was then.

"No, mother, I cannot tell you why I am going."

A horse's hoofs were heard outside, and they mechanically turned to the window—a low window that stood open. It was George Vandeware. A small valise was strapped behind him as if he were going on a journey. He lifted his hat courteously.

Mrs. Bruner looked from one to the other. From the fine looking horse man with his valise to Nathalie in her travelling dress. A strange suspicion flashed into her mind; an unpardonable thought.

"Nathalie! is George Vandeware going to California?"

Surely none would have asked it but Mrs. Bruner; and yet she did not mean to hurt her daughter so cruelly. She was half desperate herself, and did not pause to think. But Mrs. Bruner never forgot to her dying day the expression on Nathalie's face when she heard it. Not pale, for she could not be whiter than she was before—no, red, for the insult, had gone too deep for that,—but the stricken look of one "wounded unto death."

"No one but you, mother, would have asked me that question. George Vandeware is not going to California. I am going because I cannot forget that I once hoped to be his wife. No anger or impatience in her tone, only that weary quiet.

I think Mrs. Bruner saw then the work she had wrought, as she saw it in the light of the judgment day.

The carriage was at the gate then, and Roy stood by it. Mr. Vandeware had reined in and was talking to him. Nathalie felt that Roy was telling of her departure. Mrs. Bruner saw it too.

"My time is up, mother." What was there for these two but to say good-bye, and part? One to stay, keeping the memory of what she had done with her for company; the other to wander afar, bereft of all bright hopes and aims, praying only that she might never again look upon the house she was leaving behind.

Nathalie went down, and Mrs. Bruner followed. The trunk was in: the horse was impatient. George Vandeware had alighted, and was waiting for her. As she went forward, he approached, as if to stop her. At Mrs. Bruner he never once looked; Mrs. Bruner who stood there unconscious of a desperate hope that the man might have influence enough over Nathalie to prevent her going, at this, the eleventh hour.

Royal glanced round quickly. But, if he were fearing some kind of scene, his fears were soon set at rest. George Vandeware's six-and-thirty years had taught him self-control; and besides—what could he do with the best of wishes? He had married another, and so put power, in regard to Nathalie, out of his own hands.

The hand that she held out to him did not tremble. His own closed over it like a vice, and the strong, masterful face was full of the keenest remorse as he bent down to her, whispering hoarsely in her ear.

"Child, child! I never meant to do anything like this. You shall stay, and I will go."

She looked up at him wearily.

"No. You have your ties. And I—I want to get away from here—away from—"

"From yourself and me! I know. You are afraid of me. And yet I would not harm a hair of your head, my little Nathalie."

If at any time she had doubted the necessity of the step she was about to take, she doubted it no longer, for she felt in every surging pulse the power this man still had over her. He would not help her. They would none of them help her. She must fight the battle unaided, by herself far away from them all.

"Remember me to your wife, Mr. Vandeware; we were friends once. And—good-by. Good-by, mother."

There were no tears or kisses at this strange parting; not much of

NEW VESSELS.—Churchill's new barque was not launched last week as was expected, but will be on or about the 28th inst. Her dimensions are: 202 feet keel, 24 feet hold, 43 feet beam, and will register about 1650 tons. A barquentine is also rapidly nearing completion of which the measurements are: 132 feet keel, 34 feet beam and 17 feet depth of hold, and will register about 550 tons. A steamer of about 80 tons register, to ply on the main and river, is also near completion by the same firm. J. B. North will have his new barque ready for launching in about three weeks time. Capt. L. Porter, formerly of the Annapolis, will command her.

BIG ONIONS.—The largest onions we have yet seen we saw last week in the garden of Mr. John W. DeWolf of this place. We measured two and found them to be 14 and 14 1/2 inches, respectively; and these were only a sample of a large field.

OATS.—150 Bus. for sale at BURFEE WITTER'S.

RESIGNED.—We omitted mentioning before a change that has recently been made in the primary department of the public school of this place. On account of ill-health Miss McKean has been compelled to resign her position, and it is now occupied by Miss Aggie Godfrey. During the period that Miss McKean has been a teacher in our schools she has won the esteem of all connected there, with, and pupils and parents alike regret deeply that she has been compelled to resign. We hope she may soon recover her accustomed good health.

BARRELS.—J. D. Martin wishes to inform his patrons that apple barrels can be obtained in Wolfville, from Edward Paice who is acting as his agent in this place.

DEAR ACADIAN.—At a meeting of the King's Co. Temperance Alliance, held at Coldbrook on Monday the 13th inst. the following resolution was unanimously adopted:—

Whereas since our last meeting God in his providence has removed from earth our late friend and brother, Matthew Fisher, of Somerset, therefore resolved "That this Alliance do here record its high esteem of our departed brother, remembering his consistent christian life, his wise courageous earnest manner in every movement in which this Alliance has been engaged, and feel that this Alliance has lost a very valuable member and the county a citizen whose place may not soon be filled. R. R. DUNCAN, Secy'.

Having recently imported a "Perfection Shear Sharpener." I am prepared to sharpen and put in first-class order shears and scissors of every description. Perfect satisfaction guaranteed. J. M. SHAW, 35

A Grand Pre correspondent says:—"It is in order now for 'Father Leblanc' to write a little piece thanking F. W. Curry, who is certainly entitled to half the honor, as he did fully half the work and took his share of the dust like a man. Capt. A. R. Curry and C. F. Rathbun also lent three hands that did valuable work. Mr. Johnson was in frequently and didn't hinder the work, and behind, or before, all these were a number of hands, some soft and white, others hard and brown, that were willingly lifted in the good cause. I think the improvement in our church is thanks enough for all of us who go there. Can we not have the outside painted now, and a new fence, for the benefit of those who do not go inside?"

One case St. Croix Gingham, fine quality, at 10c per yard at BURFEE WITTER'S.

MONSTROSITIES.—This has been a great season for wonderful things. Plum and cherry-trees have been yielding their second growth of fruit, and apples have been growing by the half-dozen on the tip-end of branches. In fact for the past few weeks our office has been literally swarmed with people carrying curiosities in fruit and vegetables. The last is a potato, two potatoes, from Mr. George Prat, which have been acting outrageously on his hands. The one, a large, healthy-looking last year's potato, was found on being taken from the cellar to have grown from it two others nearly equally large. The other was still more curious. Having been cut by the fork in digging a potato had started from the centre of it and was growing out. Since it has been in our office another one has grown from the same potato.

The Sabbath School Association of King's Co., held its first annual meeting in Presbyterian church, Kentville, on 21st inst. Reports were received from 52 schools, having an attendance of 2800; several schools had not reported. Dr. Woodworth was elected President and Rev. Mr. Dawson, Secretary. Papers were read by J. W. Bars, Esq., Rev. David Freeman and Mr. Randall Illey. Among those who took part in the discussions were Rev. S. B. Kempton, Rev. Dr. Archibald, Rev. S. McC. Black, Rev. J. B. Hemmeon, Rev. R. D. Ross, Rev. Mr. Day, A. T. Baker, Esq. Wolfville was represented by Prof. Jones Ph. D., Rev. Messrs Ross, Hemmeon and Day,

J. W. Bars, J. W. Caldwell, G. H. Wallace. A committee consisting of J. W. Caldwell, A. A. Pines and A. T. Baker, was appointed to visit the Sunday-schools in the county and report. The next meeting is to be at Wolfville.

THE ENGLISH APPLE TRADE.—The following circular letter has been sent to fruit growers by C. H. R. Starr:—

DEAR SIR,—My official duties at the Colonial and Indian exhibition in connection with the fruit interests of the Dominion, will probably detain me here for some weeks, hence I shall be unable to call upon you before the beginning of the apple shipping season as had been my intention. The apple market here, this season, are likely to prove more satisfactory than the last two, but long prices must not be expected because of the general depression in all branches of trade. All parties in the fruit trade, agree that greater care in the selection of fruit and tight packing in strong barrels is imperative, in the majority of shipments, to secure the best results. I am making a careful study of the fruit trade in this country, and am of the opinion it can be very largely extended. I am also more than ever convinced that the interests of all shippers, are best served by the salesman who supply buyers at private sale. Having visited many of the principal cities of the kingdom with a view to extending the Canadian apple trade, I hope to be able in a few days to put you in communication with respectable firms with whom I trust you may find it to your advantage to do some business. In the meantime 'tis with great confidence that I recommend you to send your London consignments to Messrs Northard & Lowe, 20 Tooley street, S. E. C. H. R. STARR.
