NEWCASTLE, N. B., WEDNESDAY, JULY 21 1915

NO. 30

Appointment of Truant Officer by Town Council

Duties Will be Filled by Day Policeman--Teachers to Report Absences of Pupils to Officer

Newcastle Town Council met in regular monthly session on the 15th, Mayor Stothart in the chair, and all the Board present but Ald. Hayward.

The following, from the Assistant Censor at the Wireless, who was sent a tax bill for $16.70, is of importance as a test case re the Town's right to tax certain individuals:

With reference to the attached bill, I wish to draw to the attention of the Town Councilors of Newcastle, N. B., the fact that, as a member of the Naval Service department of Canada, acting as assistant to the censor at this Post and serving in that capacity on account of the War, and the period of the war only, also liable to be detailed for duty in any other part of the Dominion at a moment's notice, and virtually on active service, I therefore do not consider myself liable to local taxation.

I have made enquiries and am informed on good authority that the officers and men of the 73rd regiment at this Post are exempt from local taxation while in the service of their King and country; I am taking the same risks, and in a similar capacity serving my King and country, and therefore do not consider myself any more liable to local taxation than all the officers and men of the 73rd regiment.

I point out the above facts for the information of the Councilors, as it does not appear to me that these facts were considered at the time of assessment.

If, as a member of the Naval Service department, I am liable to local taxation while in the service of my King and country during war-time, I respectfully request that this matter be referred back to Petitions Com. with a recommendation to consult the assessors and bring more information. This amendment was carried.

Following Bills were passed:

Finance	$12.00
Union Advocate	14.75
N. S. Leader	14.75
Public Works	281.91
P. H. Hennessy	888.08
D. & J. Ritchie	281.91
Police	551.52
Stothart Merc. Co.	551.52

Ald. Stuart moved, seconded by Ald. Creaghan, that the matter be referred back to Petitions Com. with a recommendation to consult the assessors and bring more information. This amendment was carried.

WORKERS IN ADVOCATE VOTING CONTEST WILL REAP RICH REWARDS ON AUGUST 26

Prizes Selected to Please Feminine Hearts--Beauty and Usefulness Characterize Each and Every Article to be Awarded--Quality and Value Beyond Question

Opportunity of Life Time Knocks at The Door--Every Worker Sure of Suitable Reward

Five weeks from tomorrow $700 in prizes of the highest quality will be distributed among the ladies taking part in the Advocate Voting Campaign.

It has been the purpose of the campaign management to select prizes which would be not only useful, but which would make a strong appeal to the love of the beautiful and artistic, which is inherent in the heart of almost every woman.

The first prize, as announced in last week's paper, will be a beautiful $400 Lonsdale piano, which is fully guaranteed by the manufacturers, The Lonsdale Piano Co., of Toronto, and the winner of this prize will have the satisfaction of knowing that she has come into possession of an instrument which will always afford her the highest pleasure, in itself, and which will also be the source of considerable pride in its possession.

The second prize will be perhaps the most beautiful cabinet of fine flat silverware ever shown in Newcastle. This silverware is the famous genuine Rogers brand, which for decades has served as the standard of value and merit in table silverware, and the winning of this prize can not fail to make some lady extremely happy.

The third prize will be a handsome oak case, richly lined, and contains more than a hundred pieces of the very finest plated silverware. It is possible to procure anywhere. Every piece is sectional plates, which affords extra and adequate protection against wear at the most used parts, thus assuring uniform wear of each piece, and greatly more service than can be obtained from silverware plated in the ordinary style.

In point of value, usefulness and beauty, there will not be a great difference between the second and third prizes. The letter will consist of an exceptionally attractive silver tea service of five pieces, mounted with genuine ebony. The pieces will be: Tea urn, coffee pot with stand, sugar bowl, cream pitcher and tray. Each and every one of these articles also bear the famous Rogers trademark, which is an absolute guarantee of quality, so that the winner of this prize will not have to content herself in believing, but will know that she has won a prize of surpassing beauty and usefulness, whose value can not for a moment be questioned. Not only during her life time, but for generations thereafter this tea service can be used and exhibited with perfect knowledge of its worth, and pride in the possession of a collection of most beautiful table ware.

The Mayor ruled that it lay on the table till next regular meeting. Following Park & Fire bill passed: J. S. Forrest $74.58

The Light & Water Committee recommended as follows:

"With regard to the laying of pipe to carry the Brook through Mr. Clifford Allison's property the committee would recommend that the town take no part, at the present time, in converting Willow Brook into an enclosed sewer, but if at a future time such action should be deemed advisable by the Town we would recommend that when such action is taken Mr. Allison be reimbursed to the extent of $75, as requested."

Ald. Mackay moved adoption of this report and Ald. McGrath seconded.

Ald. Stuart thought that the using of Willow Brook as a sewer was a menace to health unless it were closed in. He favored reimbursing Mr. Allison for part of his expense and also the enclosing of the lower part of the Brook to accommodate the residents near. Either that or the Brook should not be allowed to receive sewerage at all. The request of Mr. Allison had been referred to the committee for the latter's favorable consideration.

Contributions Towards Purchase of Guns

The Newcastle Board of Trade Have Opened Subscription List For Contributions

The Newcastle Board of Trade are receiving contributions for a machine gun, costing $750, to be presented to the N. B. & P. E. 1. 55th Battalion.

Appeal to Province For Machine Guns

An Appeal From the 55th Battalion for This Weapon of War--Equal to Fire of 60 Men

To the people of New Brunswick as a whole, and in particular to the Mayors and Aldermen of each and every city and town; to the warden and members of each and every municipal council and to interested and influential citizens of the province:

I take this opportunity of expressing to the people of New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island my hearty appreciation for their sympathy and co-operation in the recruiting campaign.

The main object of this communication is to draw the attention of the people of New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island to the value of the machine gun in war.

Its numerous advantages cannot be enumerated here for want of space, but the reports from the front testify to its importance and to the terrible and deadly results achieved by troops well supported by machine guns.

The British have one for each company--four per battalion. Therefore the British have a superiority of four times the number of machine guns as the Germans.

Some of the advantages of a machine gun are, that while equal to that of sixty men it occupies only about a yard of space and owing to its size it is readily concealed; it can be easily and rapidly moved from one position to another by a few men. It can be and has been handled with deadly effect by two men; it is capable of firing from 350 to 600 rounds per minute and an object on which a machine gun is successfully trained cannot fail to be totally annihilated in a very short time.

Now since the fire of one machine gun is equal to that of about sixty men note the enormous and significant advantage the Germans have over the British in having four times as many machine guns; four per battalion with the British, sixteen per battalion with the Germans.

Intent Was to Murder All On Board of Lusitania

Finding of Court of Inquiry in London Announced--Disaster Caused by German Submarine--Captain and Steamer Owners Blameless

London, July 17--"Torpedoes fired by a submarine of German nationality," caused the loss of the steamship Lusitania and 116 passengers, according to the findings of a court of inquiry appointed to investigate the disaster.

The court held that no blame attached either to Captain Turner, commander of the vessel, or the Cunard line, the owners.

"After having carefully inquired into the circumstances of the disaster," says the formal report, "the court finds the loss of said ship and lives was due to damage caused the ship by torpedoes fired by a submarine of German nationality.

"In the opinion of the court, the act was done not merely with the intention of sinking the ship, but also with the intention of destroying the lives of the people aboard."

A DOLLAR TALKS

Warns its Owner Against Sending It Away--Pleads to be Kept at Home

"I am a Dollar! A little ageworn, perhaps, but still in circulation. I am proud of myself for being in circulation. I am no tomato-can dollar--not I. This town is only my adopted-home, but I like it and hope to remain permanently. When I came out of the mint I was adopted into a town like this in another province. But, after a time, I was sent off to a big city, many miles away. I turned up in a mail-order house. For several years I stayed in that city. Millionaires bought cigars with me. I didn't like that, for I believe in the plain people. Finally a travelling man brought me to this town and left me here. I was so glad to get back to a smaller town that I was determined to make a desperate effort to stay.

"One day a citizen of this town was about to send me back to that big city. I caught him looking over a mail-order catalogue. Suddenly I found my voice and said to him: 'Look here, if you'll let me stay in this town I'll circulate around and do you a lot of good. You buy a big beefsteak with me, and the butcher will buy groceries, and the grocer will buy hardware, and the hardware man will pay his doctor bill with me, and the doctor will spend me with a farmer for oats to feed his horse with, and the farmer will buy some fresh meat from the butcher, who will come around to the dentist to get his tooth mended. In the long run, as you see, I'll be more useful to you here at home than if you send me away forever.'

"The man said it was a mighty stiff argument. He hadn't looked at it in that light before, so he went and bought the beefsteak, and I began to circulate around home again."

The above article from "Country Life in Canada," for June, illustrates in a striking manner the argument for home town buying. The argument applies quite as strongly in the matter of "Made-in-Canada" purchasing. The best results for all concerned are secured by spending the dollar in one's own community. First, giving the preference, where possible, to articles made in the community, second, to "Made-in-Canada" articles, and third, where "Made-in-Canada" articles cannot be secured, preference should be

THE COMRADE IN WHITE

(By Michael Whelan.)
From the far-flung front of the Western Line, Showing the love of the Lord divine For the wretched victims of brutal war, Comes this strange, sweet tale of that scene afar, To a simple soldier by Him revealed.

The White Robed Friend of the Battlefield,
With hands upraised and an inward groan He cried, "Alas! if the world had known, But now it is hidden far from its eyes, And the Son of Man in His children dies."

"The hearts of men are to ice congealed," Cried the White Robed Friend of the Battlefield, Alone and wounded the soldier lay When the Vision came at the close of day, All hope for help from his comrades vain, He lay and writhed in his bitter pain.

To the Wounded Heart his sadness appealed, To the White Robed Friend of the Battlefield,
The wounded man in His arms He took And bore him away to a babbling brook, Where his wounds He washed and bound, As he lay on the death-stricken battleground.

"Now rest you here, from the foe concealed," Said the White Robed Friend of the Battlefield,
The soldier's soul was with joy replete Till he saw the Wounds in His Hands and Feet, And he cried, "Dear Friend, you are wounded too! Is there aught on earth I can do for you?"

"These wounds are old, they are yet unhealed," Said the White Robed Friend of the Battlefield,
"Who is this person?" the critics say, Who can it be but the Lord on high? Who for all men on Mount Calvary died And again by this war is crucified,

Who in the heavens all power wields, The White Robed Friend of the Battlefield,
Dear Lord, come down from Your home on high Hear Thy poor war-worn children's cry, Hear our poor prayer, great Prince of Peace And bid this cruel warfare cease.

In this awful strife be our sword and shield, Thou White Robed Christ of the Battlefield, Renous River, N. B.
* A tale of the present war. Air: "Bury Me Not on the Lone Prairie."

EMPLOYMENT AND WAGES

"Made-in-Canada" Provides Work For Working People

The "Made-in-Canada" movement today means more than business or profit for the Canadian manufacturer. It means employment for Canadian workpeople, who will spend their wages over the counters of Canadian stores to the advantage of Canadian merchants and Canadian business generally. It means traffic, both freight and passenger, for our railways, which again contributes to increased activity in all fields of Canadian commercial enterprise. It means a home market with good prices for what the farmer has to sell to the Canadian workman and his family. Ask the farmers around Winnipeg or Toronto, or Montreal, or Brantford what they think about this splendid market right at their doors.

Dr. Samuel Johnson defined patriotism as "the last refuge of a scoundrel." The man who gets his income from this country in a time of war and spends a good share of it in another is the last kind of scoundrel that could be considered a patriot.

I fell from a building and received what the doctor called a very bad sprained ankle, and told me I must not walk on it for three weeks. I got MINARD'S LINIMENT and in six days I was out to work again. I think it the best Liniment made.

How the Injured Are Cared For

How the Nurses and Doctors Are Caring for Our Wounded Soldiers

The following letter from D. J. Morrison, now serving in France, to Mrs. Nathaniel Jordan, will be of interest to our readers:

Dear Cousin Annie,
You asked me some time ago for a letter you could give to the press. I will try this time and oblige you. Our work here varies every day, just as the need arises. The wounded arrive at any hour or all hours, and our work at the time must give way to the care of our brave warriors.

As they are transferred from train to the hospital, or the admittance department, and then to the different wards, we must see to the bathing of those who are able to walk, and those who are not are bathed or washed in bed and clean clothes are put on, and a cup of cocoa is given to each one, or something to refresh them.

Then the sisters take charge and here I must say that part of it is performed with kindness and skill. To see them bandaging head, arms, hands, and mending up the broken bones of this one and lighting the cigarette of another, speaking words of comfort and cheer to a third, moving noiselessly from one bed to another night and day, and with every action there accompanies a tender solicitude for the sufferer.

I say all honour to the British doctors, but the Canadian officers leave their regimental dignities at the door of the ward to the pleasure, delight and companionship of Tommy. The sister and doctor go from bed to bed arranging, setting, ordering this one and the other to be sent to the operating theatre, when a leg or arm must be amputated at once to save life. The sufferer is carefully lifted or a stretcher by two orderlies, and carried to a room where the doctor awaits their coming, and sets to work with an aptitude that shows that such operations are of every day occurrence in such hospitals.

To see the wounded coming in from the trenches and passing through the several departments, and see them lying in bed without a murmur or complaint, sets the heart aglow with admiration for our brave men. To see all sorts of cases and the courage and endurance of all pain displayed by the stricken is truly heroic.

On arrival of the mail the other day, one of the orderlies carried a letter from P. O. to a very sick patient. As he was entering the ward the sister raised her hand for silence, the orderly understood, and the letter sent from some far away loved one in some distant village arrived when the hero was giving up his last breath, that liberty might live, and perhaps recalling memories of a home in some glen or far away hillside that he will never see again.

Such is some of the work that goes on day after day, wounded arrive, are healed and depart, and the vacant beds are filled again and again with new sufferers, admiration and sadness mingle together, and doctors, sisters, orderlies and all, deserves praise for their unselfish manner in which they are doing their share in the great struggle. Your cousin,

D. J. MORRISON.

That main source of our strength, the farm, was never more promising. Every day improves the prospects for a record crop.

MOTHER OF SCHOOL GIRL

Tells How Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Restored Her Daughter's Health.

Plover, Iowa.--"From a small child my 13 year old daughter had female weakness. I spoke to three doctors about it and they did not help her any. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound had been of great benefit to me, so I decided to have her give it a trial. She has taken five bottles of the Vegetable Compound according to directions on the bottle and she is cured of this trouble. She was all run down when she started taking the Compound and her periods did not come right. She was so poorly and weak that I often had to help her dress herself, but now she is regular and is growing strong and healthy."--Mrs. MARTIN HEALING, Plover, Iowa.

Hundreds of such letters expressing gratitude for the good Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has accomplished are constantly being received, proving the reliability of this grand old remedy.

If you are ill do not drag along and continue to suffer day in and day out but at once take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, a woman's remedy for women's ills.

If you want special advice write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential) Lynn, Mass. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman and held in strict confidence.

London, July 17--It is announced that the Swedish steamer Texas, from Galveston and Newport News for Christiana and Gothenburg, which arrived at Kirkwall July 10, has discharged certain items of her cotton cargo for the prize court.

Amsterdam, July 17--During the shelling of Ypres it was impossible to have all the treasures and valuable objects of art removed from the churches, convents and public buildings. However, some days ago Col. Wombley, with Adjutant Darnot, succeeded in digging out of the ruins a quantity of valuables. Up to the present more than 15 wagon loads of treasures of all kinds have been conveyed to France.

THE KAISER NOW REALIZES PERIL

The German Emperor is Reported as Saying that He Staked all on Success

London, July 15--The Evening Star's Petrograd correspondent today cabled that the German Kaiser, in addressing Landstrum regiments leaving Frankfurt for the Russian battlefield, declared: "We have staked our all. If the enemy is victorious, Germany will no longer exist. Perhaps the war is a mistake on our part, but the present is not the moment to say it. We must have our country."

"The Kaiser," the correspondent says, "appeared agod, nervous and gray."

Presumably Frankfurt-on-the-Main was meant. The Star's correspondent did not indicate how the Kaiser's words reached him in Petrograd.

Germany is perfectly ready to continue that Lusitania joint debate with the United States if it takes all summer.

Production and retrenchment are the urgent needs of today. Our resources must be saved for the strain of war.

Far too much information is appearing in Canadian papers regarding shipping on the St. Lawrence route. It is folly to court disaster.

The war poisoners have adopted a more deadly gas. They will effectually cure the world of its deluded admiration for Germany and all its works.

THE GERMAN REPLY

If the mighty issues of life and death were not involved, the reply of the Imperial German Government to the protest of the Washington Government relative to the sinking of the Lusitania, and other German outrages against neutrals, would rank as a pretty fair example of Gilbertian humor. But taken for what it is—a diplomatic communication from one great country to another—it is what all Germany's communications to other powers have been since July 1914, a sly and futile insult. There is something surpassingly imbecile in the lack of conscience and the indifference to consequences that shows in all the outrageous acts, and the preposterous defences thereof, that have emanated from Berlin.

Here is a nation driven from the seas, and hemmed in by armed opponents as a direct result of its own deliberate crimes and follies; a nation whose navy has shown itself unable even to cope with Russia's Baltic fleet; whose active sea arm is represented only by a fleet of submarines that avoid encounters with armed vessels, and seek the piratical destruction of commerce and the lives of non-combatants. Yet this encompassed and infirm nation has the insolence to assume the role of law giver of the seas; to dictate the comings and goings and the business relations of a neutral nation of one hundred million inhabitants. What a colossal farce!

The attempted justification and defence of the piracy which preceded the proposals in which the German Empire assumed the position of controller of American business men and American travellers, was obviously written for home consumption. Surely the Kaiser and his subordinates entertained no such idea as that it would go down with outsiders? But why did it take over a month to compose such nonsense? Only the gods that have made the German nation mad, can answer that question.

SIR ROBERT BORDEN IN ENGLAND

The visit of the Prime Minister of Canada, Sir Robert Borden, to England at the present time, is of unusual interest and importance to the Dominion. Few men are more welcome in the capital of the empire than is Canada's Premier. Events have more than justified his naval aid policy, and have proven the far-seeing statesmanship of his attitude towards Imperial affairs both in opposition, and later as leader of the Government. British statesmen were quick to appreciate the change which the fall of the Laurier Government meant to the destinies of the Empire. The change itself was exemplified in the measure of naval aid which the Borden Government proposed, and which Canada would have given, but for the misuse of Sir Wilfrid Laurier of his majority in the Senate.

The presence of Premier Borden at a meeting of the British Cabinet a few days ago, is an incident unique in the history of British Government. Prior to that date, no person not a member of the Cabinet had ever been permitted to be presented at its councils. But British statesmen know that they can discuss Imperial matters with Sir Robert Borden without reserve, and they are ready to enlist his co-operation. The conduct of Sir Wilfrid Laurier at the various Imperial conferences when Imperial co-operation in one form or another was under discussion, did not encourage an absolutely free communication in regard to matters of highest Imperial importance. Sir Wilfrid let it be plainly known that Canada had her own interests to look after, and had no wish to be mixed up with Imperial policies at all.

Fortunately the Dominion is now represented by a man of quite another type. The word and principle of co-operation have replaced the word autonomy, while the principle of autonomy continues to be sacred and well protected as it ever was. The unwillingness of Laurier finds no place in the attitude of Premier Borden, who is in England as the real leader of the Canadian people, able and ready to express truthfully and clearly their aims and aspirations, able by reason of his great ability to contribute their aims and suggestions of real value to a discussion of Imperial affairs.

With Sir Robert Borden the British ministers know they can speak freely and fully on all subjects of Imperial moment. It is good for Canada that there is at the head of Canadian affairs, a man who has never forfeited his right to speak for all Canada, and to expect the fullest share of confidence in Imperial deliberations.

PREPARING FOR THE TRAFFIC

With far sighted statesmanship, the Hon. Frank Cochrane, Minister of Railways, has made adequate preparation for the Government railways to help to transport the western grain crop this fall. The Grand Trunk Pacific branch line from Fort William to Graham has been leased, in order to provide an outlet to the Great Lakes. For equipment, the Government will utilize the surplus rolling stock of the Intercolonial, and in addition, Hon. Mr. Cochrane has placed orders with Canadian firms for twenty locomotives and a thousand box cars. The Government has therefore secured an outlet to the lakes and provided the necessary rolling stock. When navigation closes, the arrangement calls for a winter service from Winnipeg to St. John, whereby millions of bushels of wheat can be transported.

TOWN COUNCIL

quite a while at first until he has an effect on the habits of the people. Teachers would report absences of pupils to the officer and latter would have to look him up. The appointment of Day Police might be a good move at the start. It could be changed if necessary.

Ald. Creaghan thought the Day Policeman would fill the bill.

On motion recommendation was adopted.

Ald. Ritchie—How long is the appointment for?
Ald. McGrath—From year to year, I suppose.

W. O. Chamberlain's C. T. A. report showed 4 cases in June—3 fines for first offence and one case dismissed. Collected fines $150, magistrate's costs $12; constable's fees, $8.25. One fine of $50 for supplying liquor to Indians. Police Court—25 cases for drunkenness, amount of fines paid $42.

Ald. Stables—Were the two fines against the Miramichi Hotel against the same or different persons.
Mayor—I do not know anything about it.

Ald. Stables and Mackay moved that report be adopted.

Ald. Stuart wanted to know why there were only first offences.

Ald. Doyle explained that there was an understanding with the new P. M. that, to avoid any trouble about proving cases of the old P. M.'s, they would start anew and proceed regularly from first to second and third.

Ald. Stables—Yes, that is it.
Ald. Stuart—That is satisfactory. The report of Police Magistrate Connors of Chatham, showed two convictions for C. T. A. in June on Newcastle account. Adopted.

Ald. Doyle called attention to Bye-Law No. 19 sec. 9: "All bridges, platforms or approaches leading from any public street, and over any public drain or gutter, which shall connect with private property adjacent thereto, must be constructed in such a manner and of such material as shall be approved by the street commissioner, subject, however, in case of an appeal from the decision of the said commissioner, to the authority and direction of the Public Works Committee."

Recently the road machine had been put on a street and people had filled in gutters opposite their houses, instead of properly bridging it. The Public Works Committee intended to see that this was stopped.
Ald. McGrath said that people had done the same when he was chairman of the Public Works Committee.
Ald. Doyle said that the P. W. committee had met the automobile association, and would have something to say later about improving the road between Mill Cove and Morrisay bridge. The auto association had promised to help.
Here, Ald. Doyle was excused.
Ald. Creaghan gave notice that at next regular meeting he would move that Sub-section 1 of Section 2 of Bye Law No. 10 (Relating to Peddlers, Travelling Canvasers, etc.) be changed as follows: starting with the words "one dollar a day," to the last word of the byelaw be omitted and the following be substituted in its stead, "forty dollars a calendar year."

The byelaw as it stands now imposes a license of $1 per day, $4 per week, $5 per month, $15 per six months, and $25 per year upon certain classes of salesmen, $2 per day, $10 per week, $25 per month, and $50 per year on others; and $1 to $2 per day, $5 to $15 per week, $10 to $20 per month and $20 to $50 per year for the rest.

A discussion introduced by Ald. Stables followed re. repair of the steam fire engine.

Ald. Stables said it should be tested once a month and an engineer placed in special care of it. There was a man in view—a fireman.

The Mayor said the caretaker must be a man ready for any call. The hand engine should also be put in shape. The engine should be paid by the town.

Ald. Creaghan agreed. It paid the town to send the engine out to neighboring places, for their interests were bound up with Newcastle's.

Ald. McGrath said we should not let the little fire engine go out of our hands. The town beyond the police and fire limits had claims up on us.

Ald. Ritchie said that at Anderson's fire, Hickson's mill had been saved by the engine.

Ald. McGrath moved, seconded by Ald. Ritchie, that the P. W. & Fire committee be authorized to attend to the repair and care of the engine and employ a competent engineer to run and look after the same when required.

Ald. Mackay said that the engine had been repaired last year. New suction hose, etc. had been bought for about $100. It would not cost much more to put it in good shape.

Motion carried.
Adjourned.

J. Mitchell Falconer, son of Ex-Ald. Falconer, who several years ago, went west with his family, has joined the mantions workers in England. Mrs. Falconer has returned to the Miramichi and is visiting friends in Chatham.

Attempt to Torpedo Cunard Liner Orduna

Liner Carried 227 Passengers, Including 22 Americans--Were All Asleep.

New York, July 18.—The Cunard liner Orduna, bound from Liverpool to New York with 227 passengers including twenty-two Americans, was attacked without warning, it was learned on her arrival here Saturday, by a German submarine on the morning of July 9.

Twenty miles from the graveyard of the Lusitania off Old Head of Kinsale, the Orduna escaped the Lusitania's fate by one-half a second or time, or ten feet of space, the German torpedo churning the water that distance behind the liner's rudder. Then the Orduna sped away. She was followed by the submarine which rose to the surface, trained a gun on her deck and shell the fleeing steamer.

The attack was timed at ten minutes to six o'clock in the morning, when all but a few of her passengers lay sleeping in their berths.

Protest was made to the American Government by at least one citizen of the United States, and possibly others. William O. Thompson, of Chicago, counsel to the Federal Industrial Relations Commission, who went abroad in his official capacity last March and was returning to complete his mission by making a report, is the passenger who said today that he would make a vigorous protest to the American Government.

Captain Taylor's official report of the attack follows:
"At 5.50 a. m., July 9th, a lookout man on the after-bridge ran the telegraph, at the same time pointing his hand downward, and out on the port beam. The third officer was immediately sent aft to inquire what was seen.

"He returned quickly and reported both men had seen a torpedo pass across the stern from port to starboard (within ten feet) clear of the rudder.
"In the meantime both the chief officer and myself distinctly saw the

$700 WORTH OF PRIZES TO THE LADIES OF NEWCASTLE AND SURROUNDING DISTRICT

Every Lady in Newcastle and in the Circulation Zone of The Union Advocate is eligible to share in this Great Prize Distribution

1st PRIZE--$400 LONSDALE PIANO

Three Other Prizes Totaling $300 or more

Costs Nothing to Enter. Every Worker is Sure of Winning
Not a Game of Chance but a Test of Merit and Popularity

THURSDAY, JULY 15th

The Union Advocate formally institutes its Great Voting Contest, in which $700 worth or more of beautiful and highly Useful Prizes will be given away absolutely Free to those Ladies who take part in it.

The first prize will be a beautiful Lonsdale Piano, which sells regularly throughout Canada for $400. This instrument will constitute a truly magnificent prize and the lady who wins it will have just cause to congratulate herself on her success. The Lonsdale Piano is one of the finest instruments manufactured in Canada; and it has achieved a most enviable reputation among people of cultured musical tastes who know piano values, on account of its thoroughly high class construction and tonal qualities. The winner of the Advocate voting contest will, therefore, have the satisfaction of becoming the owner of an absolutely dependable, high-grade piano which she will be proud to use and exhibit in her home. At least three other prizes will be awarded to ladies who take part in the contest. The value of these will be not less than $99 and may exceed that sum.

How the Prizes are to be Won

The Voting Contest will be primarily a subscription campaign in the interests of the Advocate and Every Woman's World, each of which publications sell at $1 a year. Any lady living within the circulation zone of the Advocate may enter the contest, whether she is or is not a subscriber to either publication, and may secure subscriptions to either or both publications from anyone, anywhere, for any length of time. For each and every subscription obtained by contestants, votes will be credited according to the advertised vote schedules, and the contestant securing the highest number of votes during the campaign, which will extend from July 15th to August 26th, 1915, will be awarded first prize, and the other prizes will be awarded in the order of standing, respectively, to those contestants who secure the next highest number of votes. Complimentary ballots will be issued during the campaign, and published in each issue of the Advocate, and these, too, will be added to the votes secured by each contestant on subscription business. At the close of the contest, three prominent citizens of unquestionable integrity will act as judges for the purpose of reviewing the conduct of the contest, and deciding the winners. Neither the publishers of the Advocate nor the Every Woman's World will have anything to do with deciding the winners of the Contest. The names of the judges will be announced in an early issue of the Advocate.

Two Periods of the Contest

The contest will be divided into two periods, the first period, extending from Thursday, July 15th, to Thursday, August 5th, and the second period extending from the latter date until the close of the contest on Thursday August 26th. The vote schedule in the first period of the contest will be that published elsewhere on this page, and the vote schedule for the second period will be twenty per cent. less. The distinction between the vote values of subscriptions is made for the purpose of encouraging contestants to bestir themselves early in the campaign, and rewarding those who do good work in the early part of the contest. This arrangement will undoubtedly work out to the advantage of those who enter the contest without delay, and that is exactly what it is intended to do. It is simply a modified application of the old proverb that "the early bird catches the worm," and is designed to help the early bird to catch the worm. However the contest is open to every lady in the circulation zone of the Advocate and as one contestant has the same opportunity as another of getting an early start the arrangement is absolutely fair to everybody, and no one can have cause to complain thereat.

10 per cent. Cash Commission to Non Prize-winners	GUARANTEED REWARD FOR EVERY CONTESTANT Every worker in the Advocate Voting Contest will be a sure winner. We do not want any contestant to work for nothing, and to make sure that every lady who takes an active part in the contest will receive at least fair compensation for her efforts it has been decided to pay every contestant who continues actively in the contest until the end, ten per cent. cash commission on all the money she collects during the contest, in the event that she does not win a prize. Thus every element is removed from the contest, and every contestant is absolutely assured of a suitable reward for her efforts. With the assurance of certain reward in any event, no lady who desires to share the prizes to be distributed by the Advocate should allow anything to prevent her from entering the contest at once and starting to work without delay. No cash commissions will be paid to prize winners.	10 per cent. Cash Commission to Non Prize-winners

The subscription price of the Advocate and Every Woman's World is $1 a year each in Canada and Great Britain. The subscription price of the Advocate to the United States is $1.25 a year, and Every Woman's World $1.25 a year.

Votes cannot be transferred from one contestant to another under any circumstances whatever.

Any subscription paid at the Advocate office of paying the subscriber's request, at the time of paying the subscription, but not thereafter, that votes therefore be credited to a contestant; and complimentary ballots handed to the Campaign Director, with the request that the votes therefore be credited to a contestant, will, in either, or both cases, be credited as requested; provided, the contestant to whom it is requested that votes be credited shall within the first period of the campaign, collect and pay to the Campaign Department not less than Twenty-five Dollars for subscriptions, in accordance with the rules of the campaign. In case any contestant shall not collect and pay to the Campaign Department as much as Twenty-five Dollars for subscriptions within the first period of the campaign, she shall not be entitled to receive credit for any subscription paid to the Advocate office, nor for complimentary ballots handed in to the Campaign Director at any time during the campaign. This rule shall be construed to mean that subscriptions or complimentary ballots sent by mail to the office, or to the Campaign Director, by anyone other than a contestant, shall be counted as having been paid or handed in at the Advocate office, or to the Campaign Director in person.

TRENCH WARFARE— THE FIRING TRENCH

The close contact of the enormous forces engaged in this war, equipped, as they are, with the most destructive weapons known, is possible only by the highly developed modern trench.

Each side can completely cover the ground before it for several miles at least, and effectually prevent the open advance of any considerable number of the enemy. Because of the powerful search-lights, rockets, star-lights, and other illuminants, it is equally true at night. So the contending armies have for the most part, in the western field, resorted to sapping. The engineers will select a sheltered spot such as the leeward side of a hill, or a gully or ravine. They then start a trench leading toward the enemy line. It will continue directly toward the enemy line until it reaches a point where it would be exposed. Here it makes a turn to prevent exposure. From such first turn it zig-zags toward the enemy, the continual change of direction affording complete protection to every portion of the trench. From this leading in trench, branches are lead off, like the fingers of the hand, but are directed in zig-zag, toward the enemy's battle line. At the end of each of these is a firing trench parallel with the enemy's front. These firing trenches are about five feet deep and wide enough for the men to move about in. It is from these exposed trenches that the enemy's attacks are repulsed by rifle fire, and from them that the last dash at the enemy takes place. They are too exposed for a force to remain in them longer than necessary. A very short distance in the rear of them is the first line of cover trenches. These are deeper and act simply as passage ways connecting a series of underground bomb proof rooms or chambers. In these, the trench guard waits. At the first word, they rush from their shelter to man the firing trench.

east end, gives an encouraging report of the work in hand at the Evangelia Settlement.

The use of the land is given gratis and many of the churches contribute the seeds for planting. The officials are careful to see that no undue advantage is taken of the opportunities offered, and permit each individual applicant to have the use of a specified piece of ground.

Many prominent citizens are interested themselves in the work, and promising results are looked for within a short time.

Among others, the Rotary Club has gone into vacant lot gardening on a large scale. F. E. Robins, chairman of the committee, stated recently that they had over 500,000 square feet already under cultivation.

"We prepare the land, which is loaned to us for cultivation," said Mr. Robins. "We plow and harrow it. It is then divided into gardens of about 30 by 130 feet. An arrangement of seeds is given to each applicant, who works under the direction of the superintendent. It is purely a philanthropic movement, as all the produce grown becomes the property of the men to whom the lot is loaned."

The club proposes to offer valuable prizes for the best best lots and for the greatest and best production of vegetables. E. Hopkins, 88 Bay street, is acting for the Rotary Club.

CONSTANTINOPLE MUST BE TAKEN

No other "canards" let loose for circulation in the present war are less worthy of serious attention than those purporting to announce the possibility of peace being established between Turkey and the Allies especially Russia. The doom of Constantinople, if not of the Turkish Empire, was sealed when Enver Bey brought about the alliance between Turkey and Germany, and put the former under the tutelage of the latter. Such a political crime, the outcome of misdirected personal ambition, will meet its fitting reward when the arch intriguer has to face a people too weak to withstand powerful enemies, but strong enough to bowstring an unsuccessful revolutionary leader.

It is absolutely essential that Russia should enjoy the perennial advantage of an ice-free trade route from the Black Sea to the Mediterranean for the purpose of sending her surplus grain to feed the people of those countries that have to import food. Just now Russia needs the freedom of the same route to enable her to import munitions of war, for the manufacture of which she has made large contracts in the United States. Great Britain and France have sacrificed both ships and soldiers in the attempt to force a way through from the Mediterranean Sea, and they will certainly not abandon the enterprise till they take Constantinople and hand it over to the control of Russia during what remains of the war. What will become of the city afterwards will depend on the terms of the final settlement after the war is over.

So far as the siege of Constantinople is concerned, it matters little now whether Bulgaria comes into the war or stays out of it, for the Turkish defenders of the Dardanelles are rapidly becoming demoralized, while the Allies are correspondingly elated. Meanwhile, Russia is preparing to take possession of a strip of territory along the south shore of the Black Sea, which will become a Russian lake. With Constantinople will pass into Russia's hands what remains of Turkish territory in Europe, and Bulgaria and Roumania will both depend on the goodwill of Russia for the freedom of the Bosphorus-Dardanelles traffic route. It will certainly be to Russia's interest, and it will probably commend itself to her judgment, to throw that route open freely to all foreign nations, including the two above mentioned.

The area directly in front of each firing trench is, of course, mined with all possible obstacles and entanglements. The favorite of these is barbed-wire, spread, entangled and twisted as much as possible. When cut, it simply curls up and makes more entanglements. It is when the enemy's charge is caught in these entanglements and checked, that the rifle fire from the trenches is most deadly.

VACANT LOT CULTIVATION

The back-to-the-land movement is showing good results right in Toronto.

The vacant lots in the environs of Toronto are being utilized for the growing of vegetables of all kinds. From the information that can be obtained, the system employed for utilizing the unused ground around the city is similar to that which has been adopted in many American cities.

The city is divided into nine sections or charitable districts, each of which has a superintendent to carry on the work of their respective districts. Miss Howe, secretary of the Social Service Committee for the

A New Questions and Answers Department of Interest to Shooters

Readers are reminded that this column is open to questions which should be sent to me in care of the Sporting Editor, and to discussions by the readers on anything connected with hunting or target shooting.—A. P. L.

G. M. T., Selma, Ala.

I have a .22 Remington rifle and while camping some one spilled salt on the barrel which took the blue enamel off in several places. Kindly advise me if there is any way to re-enamel these places?

Ans. The most satisfactory way would be for you to have the barrel re-browned at the factory. This would cost in the neighborhood of $1.50.

P. L. H., Waterville, Maine
1 Do you think the Colt Army Special, 6 inch barrel, .38 cal. would do good work at the target and for general use?

Ans. Yes.

2. I am informed that the trigger pull of the arm in question is 4 lbs. Is not this pull too heavy for good target shooting?

Ans. Four pounds is the regulation military trigger pull and is right for the Army Special.

3. Could I reload the .38 Special shell, black and smokeless with satisfactory results?

Ans. Yes, but I think you will find that the trouble and time hardly make it worth while. Of course reloading is rather a dangerous procedure as I have seen men who have done reloading for years make mistakes in loading powders which came near resulting disastrously.

4. In reloading the above mentioned shell, would the shell expand so as to interfere with its free action in the arm? I believe such a shell as the .38 cannot be resized.

Ans. Not for the first four or five times, i. e., if reduced loads are used. If full charge loads are used, the shells will not last as long.

5. Would reduced loads in the same shell black and smokeless charges and lighter bullets give accurate results?

Ans. Proper reduced loads give excellent results.

6. What reloading tools would you recommend?

Ans. All of the tools now made give satisfactory results when properly used. Please understand, while I say reloading can be done satisfactorily, it is a risky job, and I do not wish to go on record as favoring it.

7. I have a .35 cal. Model 1895 box magazine rifle. Do you think this rifle would be too heavy for deer and black bear?

Ans. No.

J. B. W., U. S. N.

Could you please publish in your column the rear sight elevations in minutes, seconds and fraction, of the Savage 250-3000 rifle and if possible, the H. sec., velocity at 100, 200, 300, 400 and 500 yd. ranges? The Savage people tell me that their rear sight is an arbitrary one, fitted to all their rifles of different calibres and only targeted for 100 yds. in each calibre. I intend to fit a rear sight to the rifle at the ranges mentioned, using your figures and then proving at the range.

Ans. I am sure I cannot tell you if the manufacturers themselves cannot. A change of a minute of angle is a change on the target at 100 yds. of 1.047 inches, which is usually used in figuring as 1 inch. To determine the minutes of angle given by the sight now on your rifle, (or the sight you propose to put on your rifle) the figure can be determined by proportion, using the distance between sights, the movement of the rear sight measured by a micrometer, and the distance from the back sight to the target. If 100 yds is assumed in the equation, the result will be given in minutes of angle. The proportion is—distance from back sight to target is to the distance from back sight to front sight as X is to change in elevation of the rear sight for one step. If, as stated above, 100 yds. is used in this equation, the result is, practically speaking, minutes of angle.

With regard to ballistics, as I cannot obtain reliable figures on this cartridge, I will have to pass this question up, at least for the present. Jno. L. W., Cornish, Me.

1. Are the .22 long cartridges, carrying No. 12 shot, sufficiently powerful in a pistol with 3 1/2 inch barrel, to kill rats at eight or ten feet? About what is the limit of their killing power on animals?

Ans. This is certainly a rather ineffective weapon. .22 shot cartridges are weak enough even in a regular smooth bore barrel of 18 to 24 inch and they will hardly be very dangerous in a pistol with a barrel as long as you mention. If you mean a revolver, I should certainly not use them. A pistol might possibly kill a rat at the distance you mention, but I doubt it. What is the object of using such an unusual combination? Why not use regular .22 calibre cartridges? You will obtain better practice, as it will require more skill, and be much more of a sporting proposition, or else obtain a smooth bore miniature shotgun.

2. Does it harm a .25 Col. rim fire Marlin rifle to shoot the .25 cal. rim fire shot?

Ans. This is the old question of shooting short cartridges in a long chamber, and applies equally to .25 rim fire and to the .22 rim fire. Generally speaking, I certainly do not recommend the use of short cartridges in a long chamber.

HIS LEGAL WIFE

BY MARY E. BRYAN

"Yes, I pity Miss de Vasco from my heart. Mrs. Child. I am sorry I had any hand in bringing about this distressing complication. I have something to propose to her tomorrow. It may be that things can be arranged more hopefully than she thinks possible."

"Do you think so? Well, it is best you should stay here—and appear as her husband—until the matter is settled, if ever it is settled. I am sure I don't see how it can be without oceans of scandal. Oh, my poor, willful, impulsive girl, what unhappiness she has brought on herself!"

Lee did not look particularly happy himself as he followed the trust-worthy James up the winding stairs to the suite of rooms that had been assigned to him. They were luxuriously furnished. Evidently they had been newly put in order for an expected divorcee. An arm-chair was drawn up before a bright fire in the pretty sitting-room, and fresh roses filled a big crystal bowl on a table of carved olive wood and silver, perfuming the soft warm air of the room.

Lee threw himself into the arm-chair, and lighting a cigar, smoked slowly while he reflected upon the situation.

Nina's trouble appealed to him strongly. He somehow felt guilty of having helped to bring about this unhappy tangle in her life. He must now help to straighten it. His sympathy and his sense of honor alike prompted him to do this. But it involved a hard sacrifice. He must allow his good name to be sacrificed by a divorcee court. He must give up his hope of saving Lucille, and of giving a home and a life of comfort to her and to his old father. For he would give back Miss de Vasco's money. He drew his checks out of his pocket, and smoothing the important slips of paper on his knee, he looked at the figures upon them, and thought of the castles of hope he had built upon the sum they represented.

Lucille's radiant face—as it had beamed upon him when he told her of his newly acquired fortune—seemed to smile upon him through the wreaths of smoke that rose from his chair, and then to change and frown in anger and derision—and grew hard and defiant, with a desperate resolve.

He sighed heavily. The path of duty and honor was beset with thorns—and yet, before he laid his head on the pillow, he had resolved to tread it.

CHAPTER VII

At nine o'clock next morning, breakfast was served to Lee in the pretty dining room that was one of the suite of apartments.

He dined alone, waited upon by James, who had appeared at his bedside that morning, and offered his services as valet and general waiting-man, and had proceeded to open his new master's wardrobe and assist him to make an elegant morning toilet.

Lee was getting up from the table, when a servant came in bringing a message from Nina. She was waiting to see him.

He went down at once. He found her with Mrs. Child in the library. She was standing in the alcove window, at the end of the room, nervously snipping off the leaves from an overgrown geranium. She turned around as he entered. The rich light from the stained glass window streamed over her graceful figure, habited in a princess dress of dark heliotrope shading into soft, pink.

The colored light imparted a delicate tint to her face, pale as some cameo carved of ivory. Her eyes showed traces of tears and sleeplessness, but her manner was wonderfully self-controlled.

She came forward to meet Lee, holding in her hand some papers he had given her the evening before as credentials of his respectability. They were letters of introduction and recommendation, addressed to prominent business firms in the city, and bearing the signatures of the president of the college at which he had graduated, of a well-known minister, and of a somewhat distinguished public man.

"I have looked over these," she said, as she put the papers into his hand. "They assure me that you stand well with your friends. I am sure you deserve a better fate, Mr. Lee, than to be the legal husband of a woman who must all her life bear the burden of remorse for having brought you and herself into such a position."

"You need not bear the burden all your life, Miss de Vasco," he said. "She noticed that he gave her the name she had legally exchanged for his own. "The mistake that makes you so unhappy may be retrieved—in part at least. The marriage can be annulled by a decree of court."

"A divorce court! Heaven forbid!" cried Mrs. Child, clasping her hands dramatically.

"Go on, Mr. Lee. How can the decree be obtained?"

"There is only one ground for divorce in this State," he went on. "I could not consent that a suit should be brought founded upon that ground, or upon any other that would disgrace or dishonor me. But I am deeply sorry for you, Miss de Vasco. I am sorry for the part I have taken, unknowingly, in bringing this trouble upon you; and I am willing that you should free yourself from me on any plea that is not absolutely dishonoring. In several of the other states the divorce laws are less stringent than in this. A marriage can be broken on a plea of incompatibility of temper, absence for a year without being heard from and other charges. You will need to go and take up your residence in a state for awhile before you are privileged to apply for a divorce. I would respectfully suggest that you do this. I give you now my solemn promise not to oppose your getting the divorce, and not to intrude upon you after this interview; also, to regard the contract between us as null. Here are the papers relating to it, the copy you gave me of the agreement we signed yesterday, and the two checks for the sum named in the agreement."

He placed the papers on the table before her, and stood awaiting her reply.

She looked at him without saying a word. A tumult of conflicting thoughts and feelings possessed her. She felt a thrill of gratitude and admiration for Henry Lee. She recalled what Grafton had said about him last night:

"He has married you for your money, Nina. Offer him a sum to let you free yourself from him. He will set his price high, because he has you in his power. But no matter, if it takes all your fortune, my darling, you will be left to me."

She had half believed the slur against the man she had paid to marry her; but now she saw this man offering her her freedom without price, and returning her the money she had given him.

There was another under-current in the tide of feeling that swept over her. She would not have been a woman if she had felt no pique at being thus willingly given up by her legal husband. She knew that she was young and beautiful, and that her social position was far above his. She had a right to feel surprised that a man of refined tastes and full of masculine vitality should be so willing to break the bond that united him to her.

She did not know that his faith was sworn to another woman, and his heart was filled with that woman's image.

Mingled with these feelings, and dominant over them, was joy at the prospect held out to her of being free—free to give herself to the beloved one whom—so she felt—she had deeply wronged.

"I thank you," she said at last. "You are generous, Mr. Lee. But," she went on, "I could not at once enter a suit for divorce. I must have to reside in another state for some time, you said."

"A year or two. In some of the territories only a few months. That will not matter. You are young, Miss de Vasco. You can afford to wait before making a true marriage. It is possible you may find a man more worthy of you than—he stopped and hesitated, then continued—"than any you have yet known."

She noted the turn of his last sentence, and understood what he had first meant to say. But she did not resent it. She knew Grafton was far from faultless; but she loved him, and his faults were as notes in the sunshiny day of her love.

She sat down and rested her elbow on the table, leaning her cheek upon her hand.

Lee's matter-of-fact way of stating how she might free herself of her legal husband had not the highest opinion of her handsome, fascinating lover.

"Have you ever known Mr. Grafton?" she asked, coldly.

"I never met him until last night."

The answer seemed not quite satisfactory to her, but she said nothing.

Presently, Lee rose to his feet.

"I will not intrude upon you any longer," he said. "I think I understand your wishes, and I will try to carry them out. What will you have me do today? Are you going out?"

"No, but today, Thursday, is my 'at-home day,' as we say. From four to six in the afternoon, and again from eight to ten in the evening, I have been accustomed to receive visitors. Of course, a good many more than the usual number will call today, more from curiosity than friendship, perhaps. But that doesn't matter. In society one takes what glitters for gold, or seems to take it. What I was going to say is, that you will need to be here as early as five o'clock. The ordeal must be gone through. You must help me to receive the visitors, and must be presented to them, and receive their congratulations on your marriage, and try to appear like a happy bridegroom. And mind, you must remember not to call me Miss de Vasco. It must be Mrs. Lee, or—with a smile and a blush—"Nina."

"I will remember," he answered, smiling back. Then he bowed and went away.

CHAPTER VIII

Nina looked after him until the door closed upon him, then turning to Mrs. Child:

"He does very well," she said. The chaperon sniffed significantly. "He is better looking to my mind than some others I know, and better bred, if he hasn't their languid grace and subtle way of flattering."

Miss de Vasco smiled dreamily. "There is no man like Floyd," she said, dwelling tenderly on the name. She fell into a little fit of musing, her eyes cast down upon her hands, lying loosely clasped on her knees. Suddenly rousing, she rose to her feet.

"Floyd will be here presently," she said. "I must tell him how I came to make this marriage. Oh, how I hate to tell him! How weak, how mad he will think I have been."

"Let him blame himself," returned Mrs. Child. "I can't see yet that he was not to blame. Why did he get angry with you for a trifle, and refuse to answer your letter when you wrote and begged him to forgive you? He is the one that ought to have asked for forgiveness. And he must have paid attention to that other young woman the rich grandmother's heiress, or it would never have been published that he was to be married to her."

"Mrs. Child," cried Nina, who had turned quite pale, "you must not insinuate that Floyd has been false to me. He has explained everything. He was out of town, and did not get my letters. He hardly knew the young woman. Her grandmother was a friend of his dead mother, and he called on them for her sake. He was not responsible for the thing the papers said. I know he is true to me. I only have been to blame."

"Maybe so. I don't pretend to understand the true inwardness of your affairs, my dear Nina. I confess your present complication horrifies me. Here you are, bound to one man, and legally his wife, and expecting to marry another as soon as you can be freed by a divorce. Really, I think it was noble in Mr. Lee to consent to your getting the divorce. It will injure him, of course."

"Injure him! You forget that it is not to be obtained on any plea that will injure him."

"That can't be, my dear. There is no plea you could found a suit upon that would not injure him. Do you think to have it proved that he had neglected or deserted or misused his wife would be very helpful to a man's reputation?"

"Oh, it is not certain that the man has any reputation to be troubled about," Nina said, scornfully, but in her heart she felt that the insinuation was not just. Henry Lee's grave, clear eyes came up before her accusingly.

"Yes, I have brought trouble on him, as I have brought it on Floyd—on everybody connected with me," she said to herself. "I have spoiled his life."

A few minutes later her elastic spirits rebounded. Floyd Grafton was with her. He held her hands in his, and his beautiful, troubled eyes were bent upon her.

"My lost love! My lost love!" he murmured, passionately.

"Not lost, it may be," she whispered.

Then she made him sit by her, while she nerved herself to tell him the story of her marriage, and that it was no true marriage, and she had hopes of freeing herself in a little while.

He stopped before the entrance to the bank. It was the same high-class establishment in which he had yesterday cashed the small check given him by Miss de Vasco. Mr. Purcell had gone with him, and introduced him to the bank officials, though the lawyer knew nothing of the romance attached to the check.

It was with a slight feeling of embarrassment that Harry stepped inside the massive stone portal of the bank, and going to the depositors' window, presented the two large checks, with the request that twenty thousand dollars should be deposited in the bank in his name, and the remaining twenty thousand be paid to him in five hundred dollar bills.

The clerk gave him a quick, keen look, and then, bowing politely, said:

"Excuse me a moment, Mr. Lee," and stepped into a back room with the checks in his hand.

Harry could see his approach one of the two gray-haired, dignified personages who sat in the room in high-backed chairs before massive desks, and leaning over, show him the checks and speak to him in an undertone. Then the important personage came forward himself, and approaching Harry, bowed with the polished courtesy of the old school business man, and said, with a scrutinizing look:

"You were introduced to us yesterday, I believe, Mr. Lee?"

"Yes," answered Harry. "I was introduced to you by Mr. Purcell."

"We then cashed a check for you—from Miss de Vasco, whom we know very well. I see these checks are signed by her with the name 'Nina de Vasco Lee.' I suppose that is her married name. I saw a notice of her marriage. May I ask you are her husband, Mr. Lee?"

"I am," replied Harry, blushing in spite of his efforts to appear unembarrassed, and feeling a queer sensation upon acknowledging himself to be the husband of a woman whose hand he had never touched—except once—at the altar.

The bank superintendent gave another glance—quiet, but keen—at the handsome, flushed face before him, and then, seemingly satisfied, he said, cordially:

"We are glad to have you among our patrons, Mr. Lee. The clerk will make out a certificate of deposit for twenty thousand dollars, and the teller will pay you the balance."

In a few moments Lee received from the polite clerk a leather-covered book, recording the amount of his deposit, and then another clerk counted out to him forty crisp bills, calling for five hundred dollars each.

He had an immediate use for sixteen of those handsome banknotes. He determined to redeem his old home before the day was an hour older, that he might carry the good news at once to his father and Lucille.

The man who held the mortgage resided in the city. Though he felt obliged to close it, he had kindly acceded to Harry's request that the place might be redeemed by him, any time within six months, by paying the amount of the mortgage debt with interest. This agreement had been put in writing, and signed by Mr. Mangrum in the presence of witnesses.

The time specified had nearly expired, and no doubt, Mr. Mangrum believed, and was glad to believe that the money to redeem the property would not be forthcoming. For these six months had seen an important change in the value and the destiny of Green Valley, and the pretty village on the outskirts of which it was located.

A railroad, connecting it with the city, had penetrated this quiet region, and an enterprising syndicate, seeing in its picturesque scenery, its twin lakes and mineral springs, the possibilities of a grand summer resort, had bought up all the lands they could purchase.

They were wild to get possession of the Lee estate, the most beautiful and finely situated of all the Green Valley lands. They wanted to build a grand hotel on the bluff overlooking the twin lakes. They had offered Mr. Mangrum thirty-five thousand dollars for the tract of seventy acres and that gentleman was feverishly counting the hours until the time when his agreement with Lee should expire.

In five days the time of grace given in the contract would be at an end. But now Harry was on his way to redeem his home. The money—eight thousand dollars—was in his pocket, and nothing less than a return of the title deeds would satisfy him.

It was his knowledge of the enhanced value of the property which had made him willing to accept the money from his legal wife. He knew that by selling only a portion of the land he could pay back the loan.

He would reserve the house, the orchards and vineyards, and the rambling gardens that surrounded it. The rest of the land he would sell, or divide into lots, and build cottages and a summer hotel on the wooded heights that sloped down to Sunset Lake.

He could soon treble the little fortune that fate had so strangely dropped into his hands, and by the time he was free to take Lucille to his heart, he could make his pretty darling rich enough for all purposes of comfort and happiness.

"And then, Floyd," she went on, "can you overlook that wild, mad act, remembering it was love for you that caused it, and renew the broken bond between us? Can you wait until I am free to give myself to you?"

"I would wait for you to the end of life, my beloved!" he answered passionately.

The doubt that had oppressed her was at an end.

"But why should the waiting time be so long, dearest?" he asked. "Why is it necessary to go and reside in another State? Why not bring the suit here at once?"

"Mr. Lee would not consent to it. There is but one ground for divorce in this State, and that is—dishonoring."

"Indeed? I fancy my gentleman would not care so much for the damage to his honor if he were promised a plaster in the shape of a big bank-bill."

"The jingling of the guinea helps to hurt that honor, feels."

You made a great mistake, my dear Nina, in giving him all that money right away. You have made him too independent. You should have given it out in small installments, and kept him in your power."

"I think you do him injustice—I am sure you do!" exclaimed Nina. "When he offered to give me a divorce, he gave back the checks I had given him, and I was obliged to say that the money was merely a loan, which I would look for him to repay, before he would receive it again."

"And don't see through all that fine disinterestedness? It was all for effect. The fellow was shrewd enough to read your generous, trusting nature, and he played upon it. But since you wish to spare his feelings in the divorce, go at once to some State or Territory where you can get free from him at a smaller sacrifice of his honor."

"I will go in a little while. I have had so much excitement it has made me nervous and weak. I want to rest here in my own home, awhile, where I can see you."

"But in the meantime, I am afraid you can not keep this man at a distance. He will presume on the right the law has given him."

"No, no. I will stake my life on his keeping his compact honorably."

"You have a high opinion of a man you never saw until yesterday."

Floyd said, with a scornful intonation, and a curl of his handsome mouth, which Nina de Vasco would have resented in any other man. Now a wave of color rose to her forehead, but she only said:

"Something impelled me to trust him."

"I hope your trust will be well founded, my darling," he answered, his face softening, and his eyes growing dark with passion, as he drew her to him.

"There's that tiresome dragon of yours!" he exclaimed, presently. "I saw her push the door ajar and look in. She is on watch. She has never liked me overmuch. I am afraid she will not champion the child. She is as good as gold, and she will like you for my sake. She is waiting to signal to me to come and dress. It will soon be time for visitors to arrive. You will call this evening. I don't wish me joy with the rest. We must try to be self-possessed. Sharp eyes will be watching us. We will have to endure the ordeal."

"It will be a worse trial for me to see you claimed by another man, and congratulated as his wife. I don't see how I am to stand it. Nina, I could not if I did not love you so dearly. You have put me to a hard test, my dearest."

"I know it. It hurts me to the heart to think about it, but I will make it up to you some day," she answered, forgetting, in the humility of her devotion, that he was primarily to blame for all, and that the trial was harder on her than on himself.

While this interview between the lovers was going on, the legal husband was striding along the streets that were bright with sunshine and alive with busy pedestrians. But he heeded them not. He was as alone in spirit as if he once more trod the wilds of his California ranch.

He still felt as if he were in a dream. The events of the past twenty-four hours were more like the fantastic whirlwind happenings of a dream than like the incidents of real life.

And now there was another turn of the whirlwind. He was soon to be severed from this beautiful, strange woman to whom he had just legally been bound. Marriage at a moment's warning, then, presto, divorce.

He frowned as the thought of divorce came into his mind. It was not pleasant to contemplate figuring in a divorce court. Few emerge unscathed from that temple of scandal. But then a divorce would give him back his freedom, it would give him back Lucille.

He had not breathed a word to Lucille or to his father about his marriage. In the first place, he was not at all sure that the marriage would really take place. He would fulfil his part of that night's strange bargain, he thought; but he did not believe Miss de Vasco would fulfil hers. She had been dominated by strong excitement, and her undisciplined nature had yielded to a sudden wild impulse.

"She will regret her mad contract when she thinks it over coolly, and she will recall it in time," he thought.

She had not recalled it, the marriage was now an accomplished fact, and he had last night determined to tell his father and Lucille. He feared the shock to her would be terrible, and she might not be able to believe that it was for her sake he had married the handsome heiress.

Within the last few hours, however, a thought, a temptation, perhaps it was, had come to him. Why should he tell Lucille what had happened? What need to wound her and shake her trust in him? The probability was that she would never find it out. The marriage was only temporary; the bond would soon be broken; Miss de Vasco would soon be going away to reside in another State, that she might enter suit for the divorce.

He felt sure that not one of his acquaintances, who might have chanced to read the notice of Miss de Vasco's marriage had recognized him—plain Harry Leigh—or Lee, as his name was most frequently spelled, in the high-falootin description of the distinguished-looking bridegroom, Mr. Warrington Leigh, a scion of a noble English family. Not counting two or three business acquaintances, and his father and Lucille, he had only two friends in the city. One of these was Ada Glynn, that same "heiress of the rich grandmother," to whom, according to the report of "Town Talk," Floyd Grafton had transferred his allegiance from Miss de Vasco. Ada Glynn was Harry Lee's cousin three degrees removed. She had lived at Green Valley with her step-father, and she and Harry had been school fellows and sweethearts. Then his father married Lucille's beautiful mother, and Harry, vexed at seeing another take the place of the dearly remembered dead, had gone off to California, to seek his fortune. This was before he was eighteen, and Lucille was a pretty, curly-headed child of twelve.

When he returned at his father's summons, five years later, he found many changes. Ada's step-father was dead; her rich, eccentric old grandmother had paid an unexpected visit to Green Valley, had adopted her before neglected granddaughter, and taken her to her gloomy, stately old home in the city. Harry went to see his boyhood sweetheart, but unluckily he offended the high tempered old lady by warning her against a spiritualistic adventuress who he believed had designs on her purse. She forbade him to come into her house again, or to think of Ada as a wife. She need not have any fears on the last score, for Harry was already deeply in love with Lucille. The first night of his return home he had been captivated by the beauty and winsome grace of the fair, dainty girl whom he found blooming like a rose in the shadow of his childhood's home.

Harry Lee's only other friend in the city was the family lawyer, Mr. Purcell, who had honestly tried to straighten out the financial tangle in which Doctor Lee, ignorant of business and anxious to please his wife, had managed to involve his affairs. He had added a modern wig and a handsome conservatory to the old mansion, and he had put his name as security to a note given by his wife's brother. The note fell upon him to pay, and in order to meet this debt and others, he had mortgaged his estate. His wife died, he lost all hope, and finding himself on the verge of ruin, he telegraphed to his son, Harry, to come home, and hurriedly threw his young energy and his small means into the breach. In vain, however; all was lost but honor. The debts were paid, but Green Valley was given up, and the young man brought his broken-hearted old father and the petted Lucille to the city, hoping to find employment there.

The week after their arrival in the strange city, Doctor Lee broke down utterly, and lay for two months ill with a low fever, and constantly nursed by his son, who could do nothing but try to keep alive the spark of vitality in his father's breast.

The money they had brought melted away, and when at last, Harry, worn and pale from the long ordeal, went out to seek something to do, all doors seemed closed against him. It was days before he found even an inferior position that would at least bring enough to pay for food and cheap lodgings.

He had a grave heart, and he worked cheerfully, hoping for better things, though it grieved him to know that he could not keep the burden of household tasks from Lucille's fair shoulders. It saddened him to see that his gentle, uncomplaining father was pining in these dim, cramped lodgings, for the country home, with its big rooms and broad piazzas, and the groves and orchards he had planted. He had kept up heart, however, until Lucille's bitter discontent with her lot culminated in her declaring her intention to fly from it and join a traveling variety company, which she had just secured.

"Thank Heaven! I have saved her from that—no matter what befalls me," thought Harry, as he strode in the direction of the bank. "How glad she and my poor father will be to get back to our own old home! How good the trees will look, and the lovely lake, and the green hedges!"

He stopped before the entrance to the bank. It was the same high-class establishment in which he had yesterday cashed the small check given him by Miss de Vasco. Mr. Purcell had gone with him, and introduced him to the bank officials, though the lawyer knew nothing of the romance attached to the check.

It was with a slight feeling of embarrassment that Harry stepped inside the massive stone portal of the bank, and going to the depositors' window, presented the two large checks, with the request that twenty thousand dollars should be deposited in the bank in his name, and the remaining twenty thousand be paid to him in five hundred dollar bills.

The clerk gave him a quick, keen look, and then, bowing politely, said:

"Excuse me a moment, Mr. Lee," and stepped into a back room with the checks in his hand.

Harry could see his approach one of the two gray-haired, dignified personages who sat in the room in high-backed chairs before massive desks, and leaning over, show him the checks and speak to him in an undertone. Then the important personage came forward himself, and approaching Harry, bowed with the polished courtesy of the old school business man, and said, with a scrutinizing look:

"You were introduced to us yesterday, I believe, Mr. Lee?"

"Yes," answered Harry. "I was introduced to you by Mr. Purcell."

"We then cashed a check for you—from Miss de Vasco, whom we know very well. I see these checks are signed by her with the name 'Nina de Vasco Lee.' I suppose that is her married name. I saw a notice of her marriage. May I ask you are her husband, Mr. Lee?"

"I am," replied Harry, blushing in spite of his efforts to appear unembarrassed, and feeling a queer sensation upon acknowledging himself to be the husband of a woman whose hand he had never touched—except once—at the altar.

The bank superintendent gave another glance—quiet, but keen—at the handsome, flushed face before him, and then, seemingly satisfied, he said, cordially:

"We are glad to have you among our patrons, Mr. Lee. The clerk will make out a certificate of deposit for twenty thousand dollars, and the teller will pay you the balance."

In a few moments Lee received from the polite clerk a leather-covered book, recording the amount of his deposit, and then another clerk counted out to him forty crisp bills, calling for five hundred dollars each.

He had an immediate use for sixteen of those handsome banknotes. He determined to redeem his old home before the day was an hour older, that he might carry the good news at once to his father and Lucille.

The man who held the mortgage resided in the city. Though he felt obliged to close it, he had kindly acceded to Harry's request that the place might be redeemed by him, any time within six months, by paying the amount of the mortgage debt with interest. This agreement had been put in writing, and signed by Mr. Mangrum in the presence of witnesses.

The time specified had nearly expired, and no doubt, Mr. Mangrum believed, and was glad to believe that the money to redeem the property would not be forthcoming. For these six months had seen an important change in the value and the destiny of Green Valley, and the pretty village on the outskirts of which it was located.

A railroad, connecting it with the city, had penetrated this quiet region, and an enterprising syndicate, seeing in its picturesque scenery, its twin lakes and mineral springs, the possibilities of a grand summer resort, had bought up all the lands they could purchase.

They were wild to get possession of the Lee estate, the most beautiful and finely situated of all the Green Valley lands. They wanted to build a grand hotel on the bluff overlooking the twin lakes. They had offered Mr. Mangrum thirty-five thousand dollars for the tract of seventy acres and that gentleman was feverishly counting the hours until the time when his agreement with Lee should expire.

In five days the time of grace given in the contract would be at an end. But now Harry was on his way to redeem his home. The money—eight thousand dollars—was in his pocket, and nothing less than a return of the title deeds would satisfy him.

It was his knowledge of the enhanced value of the property which had made him willing to accept the money from his legal wife. He knew that by selling only a portion of the land he could pay back the loan.

He would reserve the house, the orchards and vineyards, and the rambling gardens that surrounded it. The rest of the land he would sell, or divide into lots, and build cottages and a summer hotel on the wooded heights that sloped down to Sunset Lake.

He could soon treble the little fortune that fate had so strangely dropped into his hands, and by the time he was free to take Lucille to his heart, he could make his pretty darling rich enough for all purposes of comfort and happiness.

Mill at Chatham Destroyed by Fire

Chatham's Monument of Industry Wiped Out by The Flames

The property in Chatham known as the Miramichi pulp and paper mill, which has been an eyesore to that town for the past fifteen years for reasons too well known to be rehearsed, was almost totally destroyed by fire Monday evening, the fire probably catching from one of the burners of the near-by mills.

The mill, now the property of the Dominion Pulp Co., was pretty well stripped of the best of the machinery, but much valuable machinery was still in the buildings and will be a heavy loss to the company.

The fire started about five o'clock in the wood-room, and had gained considerable headway before being noticed. The alarm was soon rung in and the firemen on the scene, but their main efforts were put to saving the near-by houses that were threatened.

From the wood room the fire spread to the digester room, thence to the paper room, screen room, towers, acid plant and sulphur shed, and in a very short time the whole was a seething mass of flames. The buildings on St. Andrew's street were on fire many times, but fortunately the fires were extinguished before any damage had been done.

The most spectacular feature of the fire was the falling of the big towers, which were about 175 feet high. Many of the spectators who had arrived early on the scene remained superfluous, awaiting the towers to topple over. The firemen kept the water playing on the north side of the towers so as to have them fall into the yard in the rear, and succeeding in their efforts, prevented damage to the office building.

The day watchman, Arthur Spry, with Manager Stevens, were in the building only a short time before the fire broke out, but noticed no signs of fire. The property was insured.

Miramichi Citizen Contributes Gun

Mr. Ernest Hutchinson Contributes Machine Gun to Battalion

While other towns and cities throughout the Maritime Provinces are showing their patriotic spirit in the way of supplying machine guns to the Militia Department, similar contributions are being made right here from the Miramichi, as will be seen by a telegram, published elsewhere in this issue, from our most worthy public spirited citizen, Mr. E. Hutchinson, of Douglastown. Mr. Hutchinson has informed Major Cuthbert Donald, of the 55th N. B. and P. E. I. Battalion that he can count on him for one machine gun, and suggests that the towns of Newcastle and Chatham also help. His gift to the Empire will no doubt be followed by similar gifts from other public spirited citizens of the Miramichi.
