What the leading Medical Journal of the world has to say about FERROL.

After making a thorough test of FERROL in its own laboratory the London (England) Lancet published an article from which the following is taken :-

"This is a successful combination of the wellknown valuable remedies, Cod Liver Oil; Iron' and Phosphorus. The formula is no secret, and our analysis showed the presence and amount of constituents as described. The preparation is a good one and of distinct therapeutic value. The association of an easily assimilable oil, in a fine state of division, with a phosphatic salt of iron which does not disturb the digestive functions and which is easily tolerated, determines its success as a food and tonic in wasting

What the London Lancet recommends as a food and a tonic in all wasting diseases must have very special qualities.

No higher endorsation is possible. The results following the use of FERROL for the past ten years have proved that this endorsation is well deserved.

PERROL is not a patent mystery. The formula is freely published. It is prescribed by the best Physicians. It is endorsed by the most eminent Medical Journals. It is used in prominent Hospitals, Sanitariums, etc.

"Yes, Iris. That often happened in the old days. It is different now. Moreover. I have not told you the extent of my calamitles. But on March 25 the Bahadur was wink in the Mersey during a fog. and three days later the Jemadar turned turtle on the James and Mary sheal in the Hooghly. Happily there were no lives lost in either of these cases."

Iris was appalled by this list of casualties, yet she gave no thought to the serious financial effect of such a string years, given ordinary trading luck, he of entestrophes. Robert, of course, appreciated this side of the business, especially in view of the shipowner's re-mark about the insurance. But Sir went down, satisfing his company with Arthur Deaue's stiff upper lip deceived an absolute less of nearly £800,000 and bim. Oddly enough, the baronet did not seek to discuss with them the legal looking document affixed near the cave. It claimed all rights in the island in their joint names, and this was a topic he wished to avoid. For the time, therefore, the younger man had no opportunity of taking him into his conadence, and Iris held faithfully to her promise of silence.

The girl's ragged raiment, sou'wester and strong boots were already packed away on board. She now rescued the Bible, the battered tin cup, her revolver and the rifle which had "scared" the Dyaks when they nearly caught Anstruther and Mtr Jan napping. Robert. also gathered for her an assortment of Dyak hats, belts and arms, including Taung S'Ali's parang and a sumpitan. These were her trophies, the spoils of the campaign.

His concluding act was to pack two of the empty oil tins with all the valuable lumps of auriferous quartz he could find where he shot the rubbish from the cave beneath the trees. On top of these he placed some antimony ore, and Mir Jan, wondering why the sahib wanted the stuff, carried the consignment to the waiting boat. Lieutenant Playdon, in command of the last party of sailors to quit the island, evidently expected Mir Jan to accompany them, but Austruther explained that the man would await his return some

"Rebert," said the girl devoutly, "God has been very good to us. De you remember this hour yesterday?" she murmured. "How we suffered from thirst; how the Dyaks began their secend attack from the ridge; how you elimbed down the ladder and I followed you? Ob, father, darling," she went on impulsively, tightening her grasp, "you will never know how brave he was; how enduring; how he risked all for me and cheeres me to the end," stand now," answered the shipowner,

"the few timbers you have shown me averting his eyes lest Iris should see here are the remaining assets out of the tears in them. Their Calvary was ended, they thought. Was it for him "Was she not insured?" inquired to lead them again through the serrowful way? It was a heartrending task "No-that is. I have recently adopted that lay before him, a task from which a scheme of mutual self insurance, and his soul revolted. He rafused even to attempt it.

The explanation of the shipowner's position was painfully simple. Being a daring yet shrewd financier, he per ecived in the troubled condition of the far east a magnificent opportunity to consolidate the trading influence of his company. He negotiated two big loans, one of a semiprivate nature to equip docks and railways in the chief maritime province of China, the other of a more public character with the government of Japan. All his own resources, together with those of his principal directors and shareholders, were devoted to these objects. Contemporaneously he determined to stop paying heavy insurance premiums on his fleet and make it self supporting on the well known mutual principle. His vessels were well equipped, well manaed, replete with every modern improvement and managed with great commercial skill. In three or four must have doubled his own fortune. No scoper were all his arrangements

It was like who decided.

But there was a bargain. If Iris lived she must become the Countess of Ventnor. His lordship was weary of peripatetic lovemaking. It was high time he settled down in life, took an interest in the legislature and achieved a position in the world of affairs. He had a chance now. The certain success of his friend's project, the fortunate completion of his own diplomatic undertaking, marriage with a beautiful and charming woman—these items would consolidate his career. His heart was set on Iris. He seized the first opportunity that presented itself to make Sir Arthur Deane acquainted with a decision already dreaded by the unfortunate shipowner. Iris must either abandon her infatuation for Angtruther or bring about the ruin of her father. There

This brutal argument rather evershot the mark. The shipowner's face flushed with anger, and Lord Ventuer hastened to retrieve a false step. "I didn't exactly mean to put it that way, Deane, but my temper is a little short these days. My position on board this ship is intalerable. As a matter of fair dealing to me you should put a stop to your daughter's attitude to ward Anstruther on the ground that her engagement is neither approved of by you nor desirable under any consid-

"That appears to be the result, no matter how you may endeavor to disguise it." "I thought the days were gone when a man would wish to marry a woman against her will." "Nensense! What does she about it? The glamor of this island romance will soon wear off. It would be different if Anstruther were able to maintain her even decently. He is an absolute beggar, I tell you. Didn't he ship on your vessel as a steward? Take my tip, Deane. "It concerns Iris and myself," continued Anstruther. "I gathered from your words when we met ou the island that both you and Lord Ventner re-garded Iris as his lerdship's promised bride. From your point of view the arrangement was perhaps natural and equitable, but since your daughter left Hongkong it happens that she and I have fallen in love with each other. It must be remembered that Robert knew nothing whatever of the older man's predicament, while the baronet, fuil of his own troubles, was in no mood to take a reasonable view of Anstruther's position. Thus, for a little while, these two were driven apart, and Austruther disdained to urge the plea that not many weeks would elapse before he would be a richer man than his rival The chief sufferer was Sir Arthur Deane Had Iris guessed how her father was tormented she would not have remained on the bridge, radiant and mirthful, while the gray haired baronet gazed with stony eyed despair at some memeranda which he extracted from his pa-

"Not a great sum for the millionaire financier, Sie Arthur Denne, to raise on his note of hand. A few months ago men offered me one hundred times the amount on no better security. And now to think that a set of jabbering foois in Landon should se destroy my credit and their own; that not a bank will discount our paper unless they are assured Lord Ventnor has joined the board! Fancy me, of all men, be ing willing to barter my child for a few pieces of gold." The thought was madden little while he yielded to utter despond ency. It was quite true that a compar atively small amount of money would restore the stability of his firm. Even without it, were his credit unimpaired, he could easily tide over the period of depression until the first fruits of his enterprise were garnered. Then all Wearily turning over his papers, he suddenly came across the last letter written to him by Iris' mother. How she doted on their only child! He recalled one night shortly before his wife died when the little Iris was brought into her room to kiss her and lisp her infantlie prayers. She had devised a formula of her own: "God bless father! God bless mother God bless me, their little girl!" And what was it she cried to him from the beach?

else, his daughter's love. The engines dropped to half speed. They were entering the harbor of Singapore. In a few hours the worst would be over. If Ventnor telegraphed to London his withdrawal from the board nothing short of a cabled draft for £10,000 would prevent certain erediters from filing a bankruptcy petition. In the local banks the baronet had about a thousand to his credit. Surely among the rich merchants of the port, men who knew the potentialities of his scheme, he would be able to raise the money needed. He would try hard. Already he felt braver. The old fire had returned to his blood. The very

"When we are on shore, Robert, I will explain matters to you more fully. Just now I wish only to tell you that where Iris has given her heart, I will not refuse her hand."
