THE BUDGET

REPORT ON NEGOTIATIONS WITH PROVINCES CONCERNING SALES TAX—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to introduce a motion dealing with a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

In order to avoid the existing confusion about the final decision of Ottawa towards the Quebec position on the sales tax, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle):

That the Prime Minister make a statement in the House this afternoon to report on the negotiations with the Quebec government and specify his position concerning the possible reopening of the case with other provinces making such a request.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The House has heard the hon. member's motion. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there such consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REPORTED MURDER OF FORMER ITALIAN PREMIER ALDO MORO—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, I have never moved a motion under Standing Order 43 in this parliament. I do so today because of the importance of this matter. I must also admit to the House that I have taken the liberty of speaking to the government House leader about the matter.

My motion concerns the reported execution of one of NATO's foremost statesmen, former Italian premier Aldo Moro. I am sure that every member of this House shares my shock and horror on hearing of the murder of one of the architects of the post-war era of European democracy by a despicable act of terrorism perpetrated by terrorists who used the fact of a free society which this man himself helped to create to pursue their own repellent aims. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro):

That this House expresses its condolences to the family of Mr. Aldo Moro and the people of Italy generally on the reported death of this statesman at the hands of a group of international murderers, whom all sensible people should strictly and utterly condemn, and calls upon this government and the governments of all free nations to take joint action immediately toward the elimination of the acts of international terrorists who threaten the security of innocent people and the democratic way of life.

● (1412)

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am sure every one of us shares the sentiments which have been expressed by the hon. gentleman in respect of Mr. Moro, but I do suggest that until current reports are authenticated it might be better to defer putting the motion to the House. It could be considered later, but we may have information which, happily, may turn out to be otherwise.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. As I understand the situation, it is not that the motion be put; it is whether or not there is unanimous consent to having the motion put. There is nothing that would call for us to agree, necessarily, with the hon. member's point. The question now is whether or not the question should be put. In its terms, it deals with the reported assassination of this man by terrorists, and in that sense I do not see any reason why unanimous consent should or should not be given.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There is no machinery whereby we can argue the merits of either giving or withholding unanimous consent or putting or not putting the motion. The floor is open to hon. members at this period every day. They can put questions pursuant to Standing Order 43, which of course requires unanimous consent. The basis of this motion is a report. Whether the report at this time is authenticated or not is a motivation which might lead to the withholding of consent to debating the motion or to its deferral to some other time. That can be done by simply withholding consent. The hon. member for Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Lawrence) would require the unanimous consent of the House if this motion were to be put for discussion at this time. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

An hon. Member: Did the Prime Minister say no?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

INDIAN AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR REINSTATEMENT OF TRAINING PROGRAM—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a motion of urgent and pressing necessity. The Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development last week eliminated the entire budget of the Indian guidance councillor training program administered by the Federated Saskatchewan Indian College. This valuable program until last week employed 90 native councillors who were active at the reserve level counselling persons with alcohol, youth and family problems. The entire budget was eliminated with only two days' notice. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow):

That this House instruct the government to immediately reinstate this valuable and necessary program for the Indian people of Saskatchewan.

Mr. Speaker: The presentation of such a motion for discussion at this time, pursuant to Standing Order 43, would require unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Before beginning the oral question period, I should like to say that I fervently hope, once again, that we will return to the great discipline which governed us until a few days ago, requiring short questions and short answers.

TRADE

UNCERTAINTY REGARDING GATT NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of Privy Council in his capacity as the minister responsible for GATT negotiations. I am sure the minister needs no reminding of the concern that exists in the country about the secrecy and uncertainty regarding GATT negotiations. That has been added to by statements in briefing notes that were made available as a result of some of the sectoral consultations. One of those notes with regard to the textile industry reads:

The indicated policy for this sector—

That is, the textile industry.

—is the gradual reduction of the work force in the industry behind temporary measures of protection.

Is it, in fact, the instruction of the Government of Canada to its negotiators at GATT in Geneva that our long-range policy should be to lose more jobs for Canadians now employed or looking for employment in the textile industry?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): No, Mr. Speaker.

● (1417)

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, since the minister has now denied the statement which was made in one of his documents, let me ask him about the veracity of another statement put forward in the briefing document by the Government of Canada in relation to the position taken by this government at GATT.

In relation to the shipbuilding industry, the same document reads as follows:

Here again, the indicated policy is to seek increased consolidation and specialization which would have the effect of progressively shrinking the employment base and the amount of subsidization required.

That means cutting down the jobs available to Canadians in the shipbuilding industry and the strength of the shipbuilding industry. Is the government's document an accurate statement of the position the Government of Canada is taking in the GATT negotiations?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I wish to repeat what I said yesterday, namely, that the period of hard decision-making will arise probably late in May or early June. Up to that time it will be impossible to be certain about the outcome, certainly with respect to both textiles and shipbuilding. It is not the intention of the government, nor is it its policy, to enter into the GATT negotiations to shrink employment.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Your Honour will understand the difficulty that Canadian industry has, faced with the fact that documents circulated by this government indicate that precisely the policy we are taking into these negotiations is one which will result in a loss of jobs in the textile industry and a loss of jobs in the shipbuilding industry.

The document goes on to indicate it is expected by the negotiators going into GATT on behalf of Canada that there will be "particularly acute impacts on regional employment, notably in Quebec". Thus, we seem to have a situation where the Government of Canada is setting forth the positions Canada takes to GATT. These are not positions two or three months hence, but positions we have already taken to GATT in the early rounds.

The position of the Government of Canada is to lose jobs in the textile industry, lose jobs in the shipbuilding industry and lose jobs particularly in the province of Quebec. If that is not the policy of the Government of Canada, why is that spelled out in the document circulated by the Government of Canada?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I think the conclusions the hon. Leader of the Opposition has drawn are totally absurd. Whatever background document he is using may be a background for circulation but it does not represent the negotiating position of the Government of Canada—by no means.

GATT BRIEFING NOTES—SUGGESTED PROGRESSIVE REDUCTION OF EMPLOYMENT BASE

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary and is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Like it or not, these were briefing notes prepared by a government department, endorsed by the deputy ministers concerned with trade and industrial policy. The government cannot dissociate itself from the thrust which is contained in the document.

The document reads, "Some industries will, however, remain the focus for industrial adjustment". These include textiles, clothing, footwear, furniture and some electronics industries. Given the fact that in these industries the aim will be to reduce progressively the employment base behind the minimum of transitional protection, I should like to ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many jobs the government intends to phase out by progressively reducing the employment base as the document indicates. What is meant by "transitional protection"?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, once again the hon. member asking the question has quoted from a document which has not been clearly identified to me and which is put forward as the negotiating position of the Government of Canada. I want to make it clear that it does not represent the negotiating position of the Government of Canada. Only a member with a very lurid imagination would regard it as such.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, it takes very little imagination to deal with the positions this government puts forward. For the information of the Deputy Prime Minister, the document is headed "Briefing Notes for Consultative Task Forces". Since the document indicates that 244,000 people are currently employed in the leather, textiles, clothing, furniture and shipbuilding industries and predicts that a substantially lower number of workers would be affected by the government's adjustment process—that is, the phasing out of their jobs—would the Deputy Prime Minister give the government's estimate on lost jobs, based on the prediction it is making?

• (1422)

In view of the hardship that that kind of policy will cause for some people in textiles communities, will the government reconsider its position at GATT and exempt textiles from the current round of GATT negotiations?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I dealt with the question of textiles yesterday in reply to a question from the hon. member from St. John's. I informed the House that at the present time there is a disposition amongst all the negotiating partners at Geneva that textiles would be one of the industries that would not experience deep cuts. That is the present atmosphere at the negotiations because there are a number of countries, including Canada, which are very concerned about the effect of any rapid reduction in protection.

The hon. member ought to realize, as well, that a very important part of the negotiating strategy, especially that of the European Community, is the view that any cuts on industrial products in particular should be extended over a long period—possibly over a period of ten years. At the end of the first five years, it is suggested that the matter be reviewed to assess the impact that the preceding five years might have had.

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, would the Deputy Prime Minister explain just how deep are the shallow cuts that he is referring to?

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

REMOVAL OF CERTAIN BENEFITS—INCREASE IN WELFARE COSTS TO PROVINCES

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the Prime Minister. Two changes in the unemployment insurance regulations in the fall led to a saving of some $135 million to the federal treasury. Since these changes have resulted, first, in the removal of unemployment insurance benefits for thousands of Canadians, and this in turn has now produced an increase in welfare costs of millions of dollars for the provinces and the municipalities, I would ask the Prime Minister: Will he now commit the federal government to reimbursing the provinces and the cities who must rely on increased property taxes to pay for this additional burden?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I would suggest to the hon. leader of the New Democratic Party that he read the reports put out about the impact of the changes that were made in the bill with respect to welfare. These figures were exaggerated tremendously by the Leader of the Opposition when he suggested that when 40,000 people went off UI payments, 40,000 people automatically went on welfare each month. In point of fact, the figures were not that high for the entire year. We also pumped into all of these regions, in a very weighted way, millions of dollars to counteract that impact.

Another complaint that has come from some of the provinces is to the effect that while people are waiting for their UI benefits, they are coming in for welfare payments. We have indicated that we are prepared to enter into agreements with the provinces so that this can be taken care of in the form of a charge against the unemployment insurance payments that they would eventually receive. It is a slight exaggeration by the hon. Leader of the NDP when he quotes the statistics in that particular way.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I wish the minister would listen to the question instead of giving us the answer which has been prepared for him by his officials. I gave the minister no statistics in my question other than the one that has come out of his own department, that the saving through the UIC changes amounts to $135 million. That is the only precise figure I gave the minister.

I would ask him, because we from Ontario now know from a newspaper report and on the basis of our own checking with some of the provinces involved—for example, in the province of New Brunswick the situation has deteriorated even more than it has in the province of Ontario—if he would commit the government to fully reimbursing the provinces so that the burden of this unemployment is not put on the property tax base which so badly and unfairly affects the average home owner.

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, here again the hon. member says he uses one statistic, but he uses it in a very political and simplistic way, ignoring all the benefits that have been derived. There is, for example, the developmental use of unemployment insurance funds where we put that money into work-sharing. Incidentally, his party voted against that measure. Hundreds of people would not be working today if we had passed the amendments moved by his party.

We have moved to the economic growth component factor of the unemployment insurance program to see if we can create more permanent jobs rather than temporary jobs or band-aid measures, as the hon. member's party sometimes calls these programs. I think we have made good use of any savings from unemployment insurance. It was not so much a question of saving money but, rather, redirecting it through different channels so that it would be more, not less, beneficial to the unemployed.

To suggest that there is a $135 million cut and that it should be given to the provinces is a simplistic use of the statistics which were obviously prepared by his people.

Mr. Broadbent: A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The minister suggested that the government has used funds to create jobs and make certain changes in retraining programs for the unemployed. No one disputes that. No one says that ought not to have been done. The point is that, particularly in the have-not provinces which all just a week ago experienced major increases in unemployment levels, they are still stuck with an immense burden.

[Mr. Cullen.]

If the additional funds they have lost are compared with what the minister says they are gaining by the new changes, they are still in a deficit position. I repeat a variant of the question. Is the minister now saying that the federal government will do nothing more to ease the burden of unemployment, particularly in the regionally deprived provinces?

Mr. Cullen: No, Mr. Speaker, I am not saying that. I am suggesting that millions of dollars have been made available for direct job creation and for training through the developmental use of these funds. We are now negotiating with the four Atlantic provinces to deal with a reforestation project they have to cope with, the spruce budworm disease. We think this is a better use of the money. If any money is being saved from unemployment insurance, it will be put into areas where it is really needed. That is precisely what we have been doing with the money.

SUGGESTED BENEFITS FOR PERSONS 65 AND OVER—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Considering that the validity of the UIC decision concerning the refusal to give unemployment insurance benefits to persons aged 65 or more has never been fully established, considering that this decision is therefore contrary to Bill C-52, can the minister tell the House whether he intends to comply with the requests of those 18,000 retired persons which are getting increasingly urgent in view of the rising cost of living and of the alarmingly low purchasing power of that category of citizens?

[English]

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, at the urging and on the representations of my colleague, the hon. member for Montmorency, I looked into this particular situation. With passage of the bill which removed benefits in respect of persons 65 years of age and over, and as a result of a court decision, we took several actions to help people caught up in that particular situation. We were very generous in the application of the law. We did everything we could in a humanitarian way to accommodate the people caught at this time. But I do not foresee changing the bill back.

ESTIMATES

ITEMS RESPECTING INDIAN RESERVES

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I raised a question with the President of the Treasury Board with respect to the very severe hardship being created for native groups across the country as a result of expenditure cutbacks by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Upon close examination, there seems to be a pattern evolving in a number of departments where there has been a significant cutback in programs and services, particularly to disadvantaged peoples, while there has been an increase in departmental administration costs. In one department, for instance—the Department of Regional Economic Expansion—there is an over-all decrease in the budget for the department, an increase in operating expenditures and a significant decrease in contributions and loans for developmental purposes.

Can the minister indicate whether any policy was evolved prior to the preparation of this year's estimates which in effect cut back services and programs to people while increasing the internal administration costs of the federal government?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, there was no policy with that intent or that desire. That was not, in fact, anticipated.

REDUCTIONS IN GRANTS TO CERTAIN ORGANIZATIONS

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I should direct this question to the Prime Minister, as the leader of the government. With respect to the services provided by a number of departments there has been considerable public protest. A month or two ago I raised a question with the Secretary of State concerning the cutback in grants to performing art groups. There has been a significant increase—some 77 per cent in one case—in departmental administration costs. A similar effect has occurred with respect to DREE, Indian Affairs and Northern Development, and quite likely other departments.

● (1432)

Can the Prime Minister indicate what steps were taken in the preparation of this year's estimates to prevent the phenomenon of seeing a reduction in services to people by either stabilization or an increase in the internal administration costs of the government?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am assured by the President of the Treasury Board that the facts as stated by the hon. member are not correct. Generally, the answer to his question is that we reduced the growth of the public service this year, as well as last year, very near to zero. Those are the steps we are taking to make sure the public service is not increased in size.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I know that the Prime Minister is a busy man and perhaps he has not had an opportunity to look specifically at the thousands of letters and criticisms which have been received with respect to a number of departmental budgets where there have been significant cuts in programs. As recently as this week, the National Indian Brotherhood raised serious questions about basic services, fire protection services, education, hot lunch programs.

What steps are being taken to authorize a review of the procedures followed with respect to the preparation of this year's estimates which have had the effect of cutting important services to people, particularly those in disadvantaged groups or regions, while protecting—and in some cases enhancing—the amount of money made available to the federal bureaucracy?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, in times when the federal government is attempting to restrain the rate of growth of its bureaucracy and when federal budgetary expenditures are being restrained, it is obvious that in some areas of Canada the public will not have services growing at the rate they would like. This has to be accepted by the hon. member. His own party has been preaching—

An hon. Member: Deal with the question.

Mr. Trudeau: —government restraint. Obviously, government restraint means restraining government expenditures toward some people. In so far as the detail of each departmental expenditure is concerned, Mr. Speaker, the blue book is before the House; it can be discussed in standing committees of the House. That is why we adjusted the rules respecting that responsibility—

An hon. Member: When?

Mr. Trudeau: The hon. member opposite asks when it will be discussed. The government House leader will be happy to discuss with House leaders opposite when they want these estimates to go to the standing committee.

Mr. Clark: You don't understand that either.

IMMIGRATION

GOVERNMENT ACTION TO PREVENT MARRIAGES OF CONVENIENCE

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. An internal, departmental memo originating in the Toronto immigration offices indicates that marriages of convenience are an ever-increasing concern to departmental officials, in that they only have the time and resources to investigate approximately 5 per cent of the total number of suspected marriages of convenience. The report goes on to say, and I quote, "that their work is largely an exercise in futility".

I would ask the minister if he is aware of this report and, more important, what steps has he taken to investigate this matter which, again in the words of the report, indicates that Canada's immigrants are largely being chosen by methods which involve extortion, blackmail, threat of physical violence and prostitution?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member says, I am much more concerned about marriages of convenience. This is something which presents extreme difficulty. Our immigration officers have to make what amounts to a subjective test before suggesting that in one case there has been a marriage of convenience specifically for the purpose of defeating the provisions of the Immigration Act, and that in another there has not.

We are looking at this matter, endeavouring to take the more obvious cases and pursuing them. I suspect there are many case where people are getting married for compensation, and subsequently those marriages are annulled or appropriate action is taken. Within the limits of our ability we must try to determine which are marriages of convenience, using evidence we have or evidence we can secure.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, in view of the minister's answer, namely, that this is of growing concern to his department, I ask the minister if he or his officials have been in contact with York county officials or York county judges who have expressed concern that the number of divorce actions before them indicates that this trend is increasing very rapidly. Has the minister in fact had such discussions?

Could the minister indicate whether manpower will be increased or whether manpower will be shifted into those areas where we might avoid as much as possible marriages of convenience? At the present time it is creating a backlash for the bona fide immigrants coming to this country who are making a valid contribution. I am sure no member of this House wants to see the problem develop any further.

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, obviously any marriage of convenience causes a backlash which works to the detriment of bona fide marriages that take place. Personally, I have not had representations from the judges, as the hon. member suggests. I would think that the officers who are doing this kind of investigation, where they have some suspicion would be doing a follow-up and culling the records to determine just what is taking place and whether the same name, for example, appears on more than one occasion. If that specific action is not being taken, I have heard the hon. member's representation and I will make it to my officers.

INDUSTRY

CANADA-U.S. AUTO PACT—MEASURES TO ENSURE CANADA RECEIVES FULL BENEFITS

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister about the Canada-U.S. auto pact because that treaty was originally signed by the then prime minister and the president of the United States. In that treaty it states that early achievement was sought, and I quote briefly, for "the development of conditions in which market forces may operate effectively to attain the most economic pattern of investment production and trade".

The two countries agreed, further, that "it shall be the policy of each government to avoid actions that would frustrate" the achievement of this and the other objectives of the agreement. Therefore, the bidding contest which the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce said is going on in the United States, in which cities and states there are offering excessive incentives to get automotive plants to locate in them rather than in Canada, appears to be contrary to that agreement.

Therefore, will the government move immediately to have the United States government bring this conduct in that country into line with the agreement; and will the Canadian government, if necessary, take appropriate measures which are open to it to deal with this situation, as well as generally, to ensure that Canada gets and keeps its fair share of automotive employment, investment and production?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member will remember that at the first ministers' conference the federal government took the position that certain initiatives were being taken in order to bring about an expansion of the automotive industry in some of Canada's provinces. That, indeed, was registered in the memorandum of agreement at that conference.

In so far as specific representations made to the United States administration are concerned, I would have to take notice of the question and perhaps refer to my colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, or to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. I am not aware of any recent developments in the negotiations.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SOUTHERN LEBANON—CANADIAN PARTICIPATION IN PEACEKEEPING FORCE

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. The government has now committed Canada to providing a communications network for a peacekeeping force in southern Lebanon. Despite the fact that the UN mandate fails to satisfy five of the eight criteria set out by the former secretary of state for external affairs, is the Prime Minister satisfied with the wisdom of committing Canadian forces when the majority of the criteria and safeguards have not been met?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, obviously, we have certain concerns about the operation of UNIFIL and that is why the Secretary of State for External Affairs flew to New York to discuss the military and political situation and the conditions under which the communications unit would be supplied by the Canadian government.

We are satisfied that we are doing this in the service of peace in the Middle East. I would be astonished if we did not have the support of the opposition, because the hon. member will recall that his own leader moved a motion in this House, even before these guarantees were obtained, that we should indeed participate in this peacekeeping operation.

Mr. McKinnon: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister knows very well that when the Leader of the Opposition moved that motion, we assumed those safeguards would be in place. It now transpires they are not in place.

My second question is to the Minister of National Defence. The second part of the UN mandate directs peacekeeping forces to assist the government of Lebanon in ensuring the return of its effective authority in southern Lebanon. This, in fact, interposes the peacekeeping force into a civil war which has been going on for over a year. It expects them to install last year's losers as the authority in the area. Is the minister satisfied with putting our forces in that position?

● (1442)

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I wish the Conservative party would get together in their approach to this. Certainly, we have our act together.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Danson: The conditions necessary in the present situation have been met as a result of the visit of the Secretary of State for External Affairs to the United Nations along with senior military officers. There is an element of risk involved, but we are satisfied our troops are playing a vital role in the area so that the situation can be stabilized and the people who should normally be in control can eventually be in control.

Mr. McKinnon: One of the criteria upon which Canada has always insisted is that the peacekeeping endeavour—I am quoting now—should be linked to a political settlement or at least to a reasonable expectation of a negotiated settlement. Is the hon. gentleman satisfied that such a condition exists in that area?

Mr. Danson: Mr. Speaker, they are certainly moving toward such an agreement and understanding. There is not perfection when these operations begin, but we are attempting to do our very best in contributing to bring stability to that area.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

REMOVAL OF CERTAIN BENEFITS—INCREASE IN WELFARE COSTS TO PROVINCES

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. As a result of this government's incompetence in managing the economy, we now see the full weight of this incompetence borne on the backs of the municipalities in the sense that taxpayers will now have to bear the cost of the increased run on welfare. One of the problems—the minister himself mentioned this—is that there has been undue delay between application for and receipt of the first unemployment insurance payment. In the meantime, applicants turn to welfare.

I ask the hon. gentleman whether any specific steps are being undertaken now to advise UIC offices to expedite the processing of applications. Surely this is an issue which the minister can face promptly and with some sense of responsibility.

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I hardly need say once again that I do not altogether agree with the preamble to the hon. member's question. The studies we carried out in two previous years showed that two thirds of the people who had exhausted their benefit found jobs within a very short time and only about 4 per cent of them ended up on welfare rolls. The hon. member is drawing conclusions, but the people who were studying this subject indicated we needed more time to see just what the impact is.

In so far as efficiency is concerned, we have indicated there is a two-week waiting period. We have indicated to the provinces that if there is some concern about the claim on welfare because people are waiting an undue length of time for cheques, we are prepared to enter into an agreement with them. We will, in fact, make money available to them. Then, at least, when the UIC cheques are ready they can be assigned to the welfare offices to help out in that regard. I believe the efficiency rating of the officials who deal with this problem is very good throughout the country—though, of course, it can be improved.

Mr. Alexander: I do not accept the answer the minister has just given, and I would ask him to contact Paul Vezina, the social assistance director for the Peel region, who has stated that a major factor pushing up the welfare rolls is the number of people seeking welfare to tide them over the long wait for their first unemployment insurance benefits. That is for the edification of the minister.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

PROGRAMS TO ALLEVIATE UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. Two or three weeks ago the hon. gentleman expressed concern about the problems Ontario is facing at the present time, once again as a result of this government having destroyed the viability of the country. He told us he would be travelling through Ontario in order to determine how best his department could help. I would remind him once again of the situation: St. Catharines has an unemployment rate of 13 per cent; Sudbury, 13 per cent; Windsor, Kitchener—I could go on and on.

Since the minister's department is now involved with Montreal in the area of economic expansion, I ask what specific steps are being taken to bring relief to these cities of Ontario which are really the industrial base of one of the best provinces in this country. Surely he must have an answer by this time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Lessard (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, some time last week—in fact exactly 10 days ago—I made a trip in Ontario, as I had told the hon. member I would, more specifically to the Sudbury area where my department has officially opened an office. On that occasion I met the local authorities. I took advantage of this opportunity to announce that my department would contribute financially to the extension of a foundry in the Sudbury area, which should help increase the number of jobs available and reduce the unemployment rate in that area. I hope I shall have within the next few weeks the opportunity to visit other Ontario areas, including that of St. Catharines which the hon. member would apparently like me to visit, and I shall see what my department can possibly do to improve the economic situation of the province of Ontario.

YOUNG CANADA WORKS

REQUEST FOR FUNDS FOR PROGRAM IN NOVA SCOTIA

Mr. Andy Hogan (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I want to address my question to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Has the minister been able to use his influence with Treasury Board with regard to obtaining supplementary funds for the Young Canada Works program, because while it may have been termed a band-aid approach by others—as the minister said to me in the House on one occasion—I have at no time referred to it in such terms. I can assure the minister that in Nova Scotia there is a desperate need for funds. I sent him the results of a survey I had made in my riding on March 4 and have had no reply from his office since.

Are any more funds likely to be forthcoming, so that the equality of opportunity about which the Prime Minister has spoken so often will become a reality for the low income regions of his country, because unless there is supplementation of these programs young people will not be able to go to universities and technical schools?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, once again I thank the hon. member for his support of the Canada Works and the Young Canada Works programs, because they are indeed meeting a need in many regions of Canada. The hon. member for Gander-Twillingate has time and again been hammering at me to increase the amount of funding which is available. I have put that particular representation into the area from which we receive funding, but I must tell the hon. member that when we constantly get comments to the effect that these programs are band-aid solutions and that people do not want temporary jobs, it is very difficult to justify them to the rest of the Canadian taxpayers.

Mr. Hogan: The minister knows that is a totally inadequate answer. I am very disappointed. There are young people in these areas. I urge him to go to Newfoundland, to Cape Breton, and so on. We are happy about the $265 million which is to be put into the coal industry, to which the cabinet has agreed in principle. That will be made a reality. But right now we have young people who need to go to universities to receive higher education, and unless there is additional funding they will not be able to go. I plead with the minister to ask Treasury Board to please make additional funds available in high unemployment areas so that these people will be able, and I again quote the Prime Minister—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Simcoe North.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

PLEA FOR VISUAL AIDS ON TV TO ASSIST PERSONS AFFLICTED WITH DEAFNESS

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the Minister of Communications on a humanitarian matter. Approximately two million Canadians are handicapped by varying degrees of deafness and to date they have been given very little representation, political or otherwise, as a result of which they are becoming less and less visible.

Because of the pressure of other issues, nothing has been done to rectify their inability to communicate, and I would like to ask the minister why captions or even sign language could not be added to certain programs produced by the CBC. I refer to such things as news broadcasts, documentaries, political programs and even the proceedings of the House of Commons.

Hon. Jeanne Sauvé (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, several months ago the department issued a proposal for public comment in the Canada Gazette concerning the standardization of television signals which are carried through the television station. Some of these services are broadcast-related and they would include a hidden captioning which could be seen only by those viewers who have special decoders. So when we get comments on this proposal, we will be in a position to determine the position of the department in this respect.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

FRENCH LANGUAGE EDUCATION IN ONTARIO

Mr. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Secretary of State. In view of the keen wish continuously being expressed by English-speaking parents in Ontario to have their children learn French, and in view of reports from Ontario that the teaching of French in Ontario's public schools is far from meeting parents' expectations, despite the fact that between 1971 and 1977 the federal government paid to the government of Ontario $32.5 million for French language training for grades 1 to 13, could the Secretary of State inform this House what action he will take to ensure that the government of Ontario will at last do what it has long been expected to do and give Ontarians the quality of French language education they desire for their children?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member indicated, we have been providing financial assistance not only to Ontario but to all of the provinces to support the extension of second language and minority language education in their school systems. I have been reviewing and negotiating these arrangements with the provinces for the past year in an attempt to make sure that these financial resources are used more effectively to achieve the objectives which we have in promoting second language and minority language education. I expect to continue these discussions with the provinces shortly, and a new agreement should be concluded some time before the spring of 1979.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON RHODESIAN SETTLEMENT

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In light of the declaration by terrorist factions with respect to the Rhodesian settlement to the effect that they are not interested in a multiracial regime in Rhodesia, is the minister now prepared to modify the stand he has held until now and make a statement in favour of those forces which have negotiated the settlement?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I would not be prepared at this time to make any further comment beyond what I have said, certainly not until I have received a report, which I expect within the next day or so, from the meetings that have been held this week which involved, among others, Foreign Minister Owen of the United Kingdom and Secretary of State Vance. What we have been receiving so far are news reports. I would like to have an official report.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I take it from the minister's comments that Canada has no role whatsoever to play except to follow in this particular instance. I wonder if the minister is prepared to withdraw the financial support which is now being accorded from Canadian public funds to those forces which are supporting terrorist activities whether in Africa or via Cuba?

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, concerning the assumption that preceded the question, obviously we are not taking what might be described as a placid or a reactive role. I think it is only reasonable to expect that we would ask for and get from Mr. Owen and Mr. Vance a detailed report on what has been happening.

On the second part of the question, if I understood it correctly, I believe the hon. member used the word "forces" in reference to Canadian contributions. I think I said in the House last week that there are no such contributions and that they are very much of a humanitarian nature aimed primarily at looking after refugees. If the hon. member really is saying that we should take away, for example, food and educational and related assistance from the thousands of young people who are refugees—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Jamieson: I say, if he is asking that, but because he dismissed—

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): You are twisting my question.

Mr. Jamieson: Then perhaps I had better let the hon. member, with Your Honour's permission, ask a supplementary so I can get it clearer. I have no wish to twist the hon. member's question.

Mr. Clark: It was very clear to everyone else.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): I would like to ask a final supplementary. It is quite obvious that the minister is twisting the question I have been putting.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Jamieson: Ask it.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, is the minister prepared to support the Cuban regime which, by virtue of the assistance it is getting from Canada, is assisting the forces of terror, murder and kidnapping in Africa?

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, without becoming in the least argumentative, I suggest that when the record is available it will show a question quite different from the one the hon. member asked earlier. Certainly, the second time around he included references to Cuba which were not included the first time.

An hon. Member: Yes, they were.

Mr. Jamieson: Then, frankly, I am sorry; I did not understand that. In so far as that answer is concerned, I indicated to the hon. member in the House or in committee the other day that we have no ongoing activities in terms of foreign aid or the like with regard to Cuba, other than certain programs which now are being wound up or phased down, and that we have no new initiatives in place.

On the premise, presumably, of the question, let me repeat what I said in the committee—we deplore unequivocally the presence of Cuban forces in Africa or anywhere else where there are troubles of that kind, and we have been making all manner of representations to them in the hope of getting them to withdraw.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Wash your hands.

GUN CONTROL LEGISLATION

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Justice: it concerns the lack of definition of the term "bona fide gun collector" which has never been defined by the legislation, Bill C-51, or by regulation. My question is twofold. Is the minister aware that there is a vacuum created by the law for bona fide firearms collectors who are required to obtain certain certificates by law in order to legalize their collections of firearms, and is he aware that the commissioner says he is powerless under the law to approve those certificates?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Calgary North will recall the discussion on this matter in committee where, on the advice of draftsmen, it appeared that that was the best possible definition or wording which could be arrived at in the circumstances of that bill, and that it was virtually impossible to spell out a more definitive definition than "bona fide".

The hon. member will also recall that the representatives of the RCMP who administer that part of the Criminal Code spelled out in committee their view of what a bona fide gun collector was and what the ingredients of "bona fide" were or would be. Therefore, it seems to me that it is a section which can be interpreted. Whether or not the commissioner has expressed some difficulty with this, I am unaware because he would have reported that to the Solicitor General. I will take notice of that particular aspect of the question.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I point out to the Minister of Justice that I hold in my hand a letter dated February 27, 1978, to the New Glasgow detachment of the RCMP. The letter is signed by J. H. Hodgins, superintendent, officer in charge of "B" branch, identification services. The letter says:

The commissioner has now received legal advice from the Department of Justice which holds that he lacks legal competence to process applications—

The Department of Justice is the minister's own department. The minister's officials have told the commissioner that he has no right to grant applications. In light of the fact that the minister is not running again, and that he will not be Minister of Justice, will he accept his responsibility today, stop waffling and set out the guidelines in reference to this matter in order to end frustration across this country?

[Mr. Jamieson.]

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, I already indicated to the hon. member that I would take notice of the question and see that it is answered.

POST OFFICE

VALIDITY OF INCREASES IN POSTAL RATES

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Postmaster General. In light of the fourth report of the Joint Standing Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments which I have discussed with the hon. gentleman, a unanimous report from this House and the other place, which for the second time in a year takes exception to the method of raising postal rates by order in council and regulation on the ground that they are of doubtful legal validity and offend principles laid down by parliament, will the hon. gentleman review his position in this matter, reject the advice given by his principal civil servants and, rather, accept the opinions tendered by parliament and come to parliament to secure legal and proper authority to raise postal rates?

[Translation]

Hon. J.-Gilles Lamontagne (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I must say that the postal rates have been increased legally, as I have already indicated to the House, and we have no intention of changing our present way of doing things.

INTERNATIONAL LABOUR ORGANIZATION

DOCUMENTS RESPECTING CANADIAN POSITION

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) I ask for permission to table, in both official languages, documents pertaining to the Canadian position with respect to the conventions and recommendations adopted at the 59th and 60th sessions of the International Labour Conference in Geneva in June of 1974 and June of 1975.

POINTS OF ORDER

MR. MCGRATH—PROCEEDINGS IN STANDING COMMITTEE ON HEALTH, WELFARE AND SOCIAL AFFAIRS

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to raise a point of order arising out of the deliberations this morning of the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs. The committee met this morning at 9.30 a.m. to pursue the examination of the estimates of the Ministry of State for Urban Affairs. As has been the unfortunate custom of committees of the House, especially in dealing with the estimates, there was not a quorum present and consequently the matter could not be raised in committee in the form of either a point of order or an appeal against the ruling of the chairman. In any event, notwithstanding that fact, I believe the matter is substantive and important enough to be brought to your attention and to be raised on the floor of the House.

One of the reasons that, under our new rules, the estimates are referred to committees is in order to give members of the House a better opportunity to examine more closely the spending estimates of agencies other than those for which a department is directly responsible. Consequently, we are able to examine the estimates of various Crown corporations, unfortunately not all Crown corporations but certainly the current estimates, for example, of the CBC, notwithstanding the fact that they come under the blanket of the estimates of the Department of the Secretary of State. Indeed, if we were to raise questions in the House on matters relating to the CBC, we would be told by the minister responsible, the Secretary of State in this case, that he was not answerable for the day to day operations of the CBC, and he would take the matter up with the Crown corporation. That is an acceptable practice. But when it comes to committees, quite obviously and for practical purposes the practice is quite different, especially in regard to the examination of estimates. You can examine the standing committees of the House and you will find, for example, that under the estimates of the Department of Transport we are able to examine the spending estimates of the Canadian National Railways and question officials of CNR. The same applies to the CBC when the estimates of the Secretary of State are before the committee.

This morning I attempted to direct questions to the president of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation arising out of Vote 10, which was properly before the committee, that is, the vote dealing with the operating expenditures of CMHC. The president of the corporation was present. In fact he was introduced by the chairman of the committee as one of the minister's officials present in connection with the main estimates of the Ministry of State for Urban Affairs.

At that point I was informed by the chairman of the committee, the hon. member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), that I could not direct questions to the president of CMHC, that only the minister was answerable for CMHC. I submit to you, sir, that that is a major departure from the practices of the House. Ministers are not answerable for the day to day operations of Crown corporations. When we are in committee we are entitled, indeed we have an obligation, to examine the spending estimates on a day to day basis of Crown corporations that come under the umbrella of the various ministers who answer for them in the House.

I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that I was unable to appeal the chairman's ruling because there was not a quorum present, as I have indicated, and I was not able to raise a point of order, again for lack of a quorum.

Given the fact that we are operating under the very limited constraints of the standing orders and the block system by which committees are able to examine estimates, we have very limited time, even if this parliament is to continue beyond the end of the time frame given in the standing orders by which estimates are deemed to have been reported back to the House, and I think the guillotine date is the end of May. So I have no choice but to bring this matter to your attention.

This has been raised in the House before on a number of occasions and Your Honour has said that you are not responsible for the day to day operations of committees and that you are not accountable for the rulings of committee chairmen. Under the circumstances of the various questions that have been raised, this was a ruling that was readily acceptable to the House. But I submit to you that we have a different situation here. We have the situation whereby a Crown corporation which comes under the umbrella of the estimates of the Ministry of State for Urban Affairs comes before the committee. We are told at the outset by the chairman of the committee that one of the votes that we have before us is Vote 10 dealing with the operating expenses of CMHC, and yet we are told we cannot direct questions to the president of CMHC who is sitting at the table. How then are we to examine the estimates of CMHC?

Obviously the minister cannot be accountable for the day to day operations of a Crown corporation, and rightly so because Crown corporations are autonomous organizations established under their own statutes and answerable to the House for their spending estimates through the various committees of the House.

I understand why the hon. member for Ottawa-Vanier, the chairman of the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs, did not wish to permit me to direct my line of questioning to the president of CMHC because it had to do with a rather scandalous practice that has arisen whereby this very important Crown corporation is being used by the government, and specifically by the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Ouellet), for partisan political purposes.

The matter has been raised in the House whereby we questioned the right of Liberal members of parliament to present cheques on behalf of CMHC to various municipalities across the country. That practice has been raised in the House and has been called into question. Indeed we know, by virtue of a Canadian Press story in the form of a memorandum from the president of CMHC to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs, that the corporation itself has very strong reservations about this practice because of the danger of the corporation being used in a partisan way under the operations of the government.

Point of Order—Mr. McGrath

Notwithstanding the sensitivity of the chairman, the fact is that I, and other members of the committee, this morning were denied the right to examine the president of this corporation in connection with a vote which was properly before the committee. If I cannot bring this appeal in the form of a point of order to Your Honour as the protector and custodian of our rights and privileges, then where do I take it? Obviously the chairman of the committee will carry on in this way with the advice and consent of the Minister of State for Urban Affairs because it is in the best interests of the minister and, as I have established, in the best interests of the chairman of the committee not to have this question raised because the broader question that we were getting at in committee this morning—which I am sure was not lost on the minister—was the relationship between this Crown corporation and the Ministry of State for Urban Affairs.

● (1512)

Without amendment, and without coming to the House with a bill, the government has taken this Crown corporation and used it as part of a line department. Without the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, the Minister of State for Urban Affairs has the ongoing responsibility of co-ordinating activities in the fields of housing and urban affairs. By the Government Organization Act, it was never intended to be a line department.

I appeal to Your Honour to rule on whether I, as a member of the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs, have a right to direct questions to the president of CMHC in connection with the votes of that Crown corporation which are now properly before the committee.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, as chairman of that committee I should like to make some comment on the remarks which have been put forward by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath). I take very seriously the allegations of partisanship which have just been made. I resent that. I do not think they were well intended. I hope the hon. member was not reflecting in any way on my chairmanship of that committee. His allegations were completely false.

The chairman of the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs operates according to a set schedule, set by the steering committee and arrived at by consensus of all members of the House represented on the steering committee. We agreed to a certain series of witnesses, commencing with the hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin), followed by the hon. Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Allmand), and the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) this morning. By agreement the witness called was the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. Whether the minister comes alone or with his officials is not a matter for the chairman to decide.

I agree with the hon. member that a quorum was not present, and therefore, it was very difficult for us to entertain a motion of debate on the question as to whether he could address the president of CMHC through me.

I have reviewed the documentation regarding the tradition of committees. As far as I know, the normal procedure is that questions are put through the chairman to the witness, who in this case was the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. At that time I could not entertain any other procedure or any change of procedure, first because there was no quorum, and second, because it was not raised.

I understand the sensitivity of the hon. member. His question reflects on members of all parties. He is attempting to get information from Crown corporations or from witnesses. In my ruling this morning I stood by the decision of the steering committee. The witness this morning was the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. If he wanted to ask his officials to answer questions, he could do so. That is what I said, but at no time did I prevent the hon. member for St. John's East from asking questions. He had his ten minutes. He used it for his purposes. As far as I am concerned, it was a fair and just decision.

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) has put the case very well in terms of the facts, as I investigated them. In the course of dealing with this matter, perhaps Your Honour will want to defer a decision with respect to it.

Your Honour should look at the Votes and Proceedings of yesterday, when we dealt in committee with vote No. 10, as was indicated by the hon. member for St. John's East. Vote No. 10 was in respect to the estimates for the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. For some reason or other, the only person who is listed as a witness is the hon. Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Ouellet), whereas in every other case, such as the Standing Committee on Regional Development and the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry, the hon. Minister of Fisheries and the Environment (Mr. LeBlanc) appears in one case and the hon. Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Lessard) appears in the other case, as well as officials of the Cape Breton Development Corporation. This tells me that someone indicated to the committees branch and the committees branch has assumed, notwithstanding the fact that the president of CMHC was accompanying the minister, as he has done before, that the minister would be examined, before the chairman of the committee even had an opportunity to rule on the matter whatsoever.

It follows from that, to the casual observer in any event, there is at least a possibility of a concerted attempt to keep the president of CMHC out of the line of questioning. That was done successfully. Nonetheless, the man was there and he was introduced by the chairman of the committee. Then the Chairman took the unusual step of deciding who would be examined.

Mr. Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): A question of privilege, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) has the floor.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): There are two matters at issue. First is the question of a committee chairman assigning to a minister the responsibility for answering detailed questions concerning a Crown corporation. That is exactly the reverse of the situation in the House of Commons, and it raises a question by itself, the right of the chairman to do that in those circumstances. The second question, which concerns me very much, is whether anything raised in committee should be settled in committee, and that members of parliament under no circumstances have recourse to the House. I hope to argue the precedents on the question of parliamentary practice. The proprieties in this case are just too shaky, to say the least.

The hon. member for St. John's East has dealt with the first question very well. Mr. Speaker has some responsibility and some authority here, moral authority and direct authority.

Committees are creatures of the House of Commons. The references which they receive are references from the House of Commons. The reference they received in this case was the estimates containing Vote 10, involving the Central Morgage and Housing Corporation. The facilities are provided by the House, the staff is provided by the House, and they are supposed to govern themselves in accordance with the rules of the House of Commons. The hon. member for St. John's East indicated that raised at least a prima facie case, and I suggest he has gone further than that.

If we hold to the view that the only recourse for aggrieved members of a committee is the report of the committee to the House of Commons, then really we have embraced the undemocratic notion that the majority can find redress in the House by reporting, but the minority cannot do so. I do not think that is the intent of the rules with respect to the matter. Really, then, there is no appeal to some impartial authority.

Much has been made on the principle that the matter should be settled in committee. Often it has been cited in the House of Commons, but the foundation for it has not been examined very carefully. I respectfully suggest that the foundation for that principle is shaky, and much more has been built on that foundation than it can or ought to support. Citation 295 in Beauchesne's states in part:

No Standing Order provides for an appeal from the Chairman of a Standing or select committee; but it has sometimes happened in standing and select committees that appeals were taken from the chairman's decisions to the committee and even to the House itself. On July 24, 1956, an appeal was taken to the House from the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, and the Speaker ruled that the chairman's ruling should be settled in the Committee and not reported to the House. The House cannot be guided in a matter of this kind by precedents from the United Kingdom House of Commons where appeals are unknown. An appeal from a decision given by the Speaker or a Chairman is not a postulate of British parliamentary law, but has been established in Canada by a Standing Order which does not apply to select or standing committees. It seems therefore that a reversal by the committee, of the chairman's ruling, would be ineffective.

There is an ambiguity in this citation, Mr. Speaker, for it appears to concede the point that appeals were once accepted and were then halted by a ruling which said, very much after the fact, that they were not in accordance with British practice.

I am sure my hon. friend, the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen), will join with me in finding this rejection of our own procedures in favour of British ones to be most objectionable indeed. It should be realized, first, that it is incorrect to state that appeals from committee rulings were unknown in the British House, and secondly, that the allusion to British practice ignored the differences in the committee system between the parliament at Westminster and the parliament here and ignored the procedures in existence there which have the same effect as appeals in bringing neutral and informed consideration to bear on committee disputes.

I would respectfully invite you, Mr. Speaker, to examine the ruling made on July 24, 1956, cited by Beauchesne. The Speaker was about to rule on the committee appeal when the Clerk convinced him that the practice was without precedent and not in keeping with British practice. I suggest that the Clerk's advise was at best incomplete in that instance, and I would draw your attention to page 638 in the current edition of May.

A situation occurred in 1863 in which the chairman of a select committee resigned suddenly so as to be able to vote, throwing the committee into confusion. It states:

The committee decided to refer the matter to the Speaker for an opinion. The Speaker gave it as his opinion that the chairman, having been elected into the chair, and having accepted the post with a full knowledge of its duties and liabilities, ought to go through with the duties. Reasons of a personal nature, failing health, or a feeling that he was unequal to the task, might afford sufficient reasons for wishing to be released. But after having exercised all the power and influence which belonged to the chair, then to vacate it in order to have the privilege of giving a vote, and altering the balance of opinions, seemed to him (The Speaker) contrary to the spirit of parliamentary proceedings. Mr. Horsfall went back to the committee room and took the chair.

Those are important words, "contrary to the spirit of parliamentary proceedings".

This case is important in a number of ways. First, the form the appeal took is unclear, but as I said, attention should be paid to the words "contrary to the spirit of parliamentary proceedings." In some way we must allow you, Mr. Speaker, to comment on that sort of situation. The second thing is that a comparison of our committee system to the British system is difficult, since we have one type of committee where they have two. I have already shown that appeals are not entirely unknown in British select committees. In their standing or legislative committees the appeal procedure, or a workable substitute, is built in.

The standing committees there are chaired by MPs from a panel of chairmen who are experienced members and who have the same standing committees as the Speaker does in the House. Of this panel, May states at page 616:

The Chairmen's Panel, of whom three are a quorum, consider points of procedure which are not covered by the rules of the House, and are empowered to report to the House from time to time any resolutions they may come to on matters of procedure relating to standing committees. Certain resolutions relating to standing committee procedure are reported each session.

In other words, Mr. Speaker, the Speaker and the chairmen of standing committees regularly meet to iron out procedural difficulties arising in the committees.

We have no neutral panel in this House, and more than that, we have no appeal in this House. Yet, the committee structure is adjunct to, feeds upon, and lives as a result of the reference and the facilities of the House of Commons. Quite frankly, it is contrary to our parliamentary traditions and to "the spirit of parliamentary proceedings" when committees have new duties loaded on them every day and there has been no corresponding elevation of the committees to a position of neutrality. I feel that we ought to consider very carefully the precedents that we have relied upon to establish the principle that "what happens in committee is the committee's business and there is no appeal to the House of Commons."

I think that the principles and precedents that we have relied on over the years ought to be examined carefully to see whether or not they can support the principle which we have always held that they do. I invite you to do so, Mr. Speaker, in this particular case because, as the member for St. John's East very simply stated, in the circumstances in which he finds himself, he is virtually without recourse. He is the captive of the majority. There is no way if a chairman acts contrary to the principles that have been established—in this particular case with respect to the relationship of a Crown corporation to a minister of the Crown—unlike the majority members of the committee—in which he has any recourse whatsoever, unless that recourse is to you, Mr. Speaker.

That is the question on the point of order raised by my colleague, and that is why I invite you, Mr. Speaker, to examine those precedents and determine whether or not they support the principle to which we have given lip service over the years.

[Translation]

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say very briefly that the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) reported the facts to us, and the House leader of the official opposition attempted to talk about the procedure which applies in this case.

It seems to me that the evidence is obvious, Mr. Speaker: a committee controls its procedure, that is the recognized rule. And when the House leader of the opposition in the House quoted citation 295 from Beauchesne, I think he gave the answer to the false problem he is submitting to us. It is clear that there are only two standing orders concerning the decisions of the Speaker or of the chairmen of committees which may or may not be appealed, namely Standing Orders 12 and 55(4).

Standing Order 12, Mr. Speaker, is about a decision from the Speaker of the House of Commons, and Standing Order 59(4) concerns a decision from the chairman of the committee of the whole. Now, the reasoning in Beauchesne and behind the previous decisions made by the Speaker is to the effect that if in the rules of the House there is a provision for precise cases, consequently the cases which have been omitted are not subject to appeal before the House. Now, as the Standing Orders of the House say nothing about the rulings of the chairmen of special and standing committees, it was not intended that their decisions should be subject to appeal to the House, hence the generally recognized principle that the committees are exclusive masters of their own procedure.

Mr. Speaker, I can only refer you to Beauchesne, 4th Edition, where, on pages 240 and 241, citation 295 defines very specifically the rights or procedure in such a case as resulted from the facts reported by the hon. member for St. John's East. It is obvious that the ruling of the chairman of the committee in question can absolutely not be the subject of an appeal to you. The only thing the hon. members of the opposition are seeking by bringing up this point of order is obviously to appeal the ruling and that our Standing Orders do not allow. Our tradition would not have you rule on this type of dispute. If that is so, Mr. Speaker, in the case of the decision of the chairman of a standing committee when there is quorum, when discussions have been held by the committee, well, a fortiori it is even more so when there is not a quorum at the time of the decision concerned. This leads me to say in closing that the purpose of the interventions of the hon. member of the opposition in this regard smacks more of politics than of a wish to see that the Standing Orders of this House are observed.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There are three specific areas that have been touched in the point of order raised by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath). The first which relates to the ruling of the chairman of the committee and the obvious wisdom in the precedents which indicate that the Speaker ought not to be involved in these decisions, is verified in the circumstances. The hon. member for St. John's East put forward his argument in respect to his right to put questions, and the chairman has stood in his place in this House and put forward his reasons for refusing the request of the hon. member. Any action taken by me at this time would clearly place me in the position of not only being in appeal on that decision but being in appeal on that decision in a disadvantaged circumstance, which verifies the wisdom of those precedents.

I do not have the benefit of knowing the circumstances in the committee. I do not have the benefit of all the arguments, all of the evidence put forward, and the kind of question that was there and things of that sort. It is therefore with great wisdom that the Chair has always avoided sitting in appeal directly on this kind of conflict. To attempt to resolve this particular problem formally would be to invite the proliferation of arguments that occur in committees on procedural matters, to come into this House every day for my decision, in some sort of appeal forum, which is very imperfect at the best of times. I therefore want to make it perfectly clear that I have nothing to do with that procedure and will not have anything to do with it for those obvious reasons.

Two other matters are raised, however. The second one was whether the hon. member, feeling aggrieved by a decision in committee, on procedural grounds has any other remedy. I cannot accept the argument that he has other remedy and that the report of the committee only serves the majority. Indeed, when a committee report is tabled in the House—if in fact it is tabled in the House—there is an opportunity at that time for the hon. member to raise questions either by way of concurrence or by debate upon concurrence in a particular report. I recognize some limitations in respect to estimates which are deemed to be reported by a certain date if in fact they are not reported. There is that right, however, at least in theory.

The third point touched upon by the hon. member is the general right of a member to put questions not to the minister but to the minister's officials. That raises a procedure which, in conformity with our practices up to this time, certainly has been that it is the minister who has responsibility to parliament and questions are put to him. That is an area which I am prepared to examine, however, to see whether there is any substance in the argument that a member of the House of Commons, putting questions in the process of the examination of estimates, ought not to be confined to putting questions to the minister but ought to be able to put questions to the officials in the presence of the minister. That is not a matter on which I can lay down directions, but it is certainly one which I can examine to see if I can be of help to the House. I certainly undertake to do that on the general proposition.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, with respect, you used the words "and his officials," which might involve the question of the minister with respect to a public servant in the ordinary course of events. I want to make sure it is understood that this is a Crown corporation, in which there may be a different relationship.

Mr. Speaker: I understand.

MR. DINSDALE—MINISTERS' PRESS CONFERENCE

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I should like to raise a point of order relating to a matter which occurred in this House yesterday. Bill C-45 was considered and passed expeditiously. In fact the discussion only occupies about two inches of space in the official Hansard report.

Immediately following consideration of that item of business, the Postmaster General (Mr. Lamontagne) and the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) proceeded to a press conference at which they announced the government would be conducting a special investigation into the advisability of setting up a committee to pursue a study of a Crown corporation organization for the Post Office.

I know that complaints are made from time to time about the responsibility of ministers to make such announcements in the House of Commons, particularly when they relate to controversial issues. The Postmaster General is new to the job and perhaps does not understand this long established tradition, but certainly the Minister of Labour has been here long enough to know that on a matter of such substance an opportunity should be provided for hon. members to hear the statement and make a suitable response.

This is particularly true when members of the opposition for a long time now and on many occasions, have made precisely the same suggestion, that the Post Office Department be converted into a Crown corporation in order to deal with the growing malaise in the postal service which is all too evident. Furthermore, this is a matter which has been considered by various studies, going back to 1969. The latest of these, the Hay report, which we discussed in this House only last week, specifically recommends that a study of this kind be pursued.

Under the circumstances we must conclude that both Bill C-45 and the announcement made outside the House are not designed to deal with the fundamental causes of trouble in the Post Office Department, causes such as deteriorating service, decreasing business, increasing rates, growing confrontation between management and labour, and so forth. Obviously these things are being done as an election posture and I do not think this is in the best interests of resolving the problems in the Post Office. In fact, the decision seems to have been made so hurriedly and without planning that I had difficulty obtaining the press release which was issued yesterday. A copy has only now come into my hands, after having sought it all morning. A note on the bottom of it reads, "This amends the previous release of today." So even after the initial press statement was made there was a change of mind by the government.

I raise the issue because the matter of reliable and efficient postal service has become of great concern to a growing number of people in Canada. I do not think it is good enough to avoid the responsibility of discussion in the House of Commons, and I do not think it is good enough to posture for election purposes. This sort of cynicism will only aggravate the problem rather than resolve it.

Mr. Alan Martin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order, it seems to me that rather than members being concerned about the manner in which this announcement was made, they should recognize it as a response to something that has been sought, not only by members of the opposition but by members on this side, including myself, on numerous occasions.

Bill C-45 was not intended to deal with that particular matter so it seems appropriate to me that the two ministers should come together quickly after the passage of the bill and announce the wishes of parliament were being adhered to and that a formal study of the matter of converting the Post Office into a Crown corporation would be undertaken immediately. I hope the results of that study will be made available to members of parliament when parliament reconvenes in the fall.

Order Paper Questions

Mr. Speaker: An interesting point has been raised on both sides, but this is not a point of order.

MR. CROUSE—REPLY BY SECRETARY OF STATE FOR EXTERNAL AFFAIRS DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order which is related to the response given to the House earlier this afternoon by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Jamieson) to a question posed by the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro).

If my memory serves me correctly, at that time the minister implied that we have no ongoing aid to Cuba policy at the present time. This is a direct contradiction of information made available within the last few days in committee when we were informed that we have an ongoing policy of aid to Cuba effective from 1972 to the present time.

This is a very important point, because international newpapers report that at the present time there are some 23,000 Cuban troops in Angola, some 12,000 Cuban troops in Ethiopia, and 5,000 or more Cuban troops in some 14 other African nations. This, of course, raises the question of whether Canadians should be supporting with their tax dollars foreign aggression by the Cubans in Africa.

The question I raise, sir, is designed to seek clarification of Canada's foreign policy. I endeavoured to do this when the minister gave his response, but unfortunately I could not catch the Speaker's eye. In the light of statements that a third world war may not start in the Middle East, but that the catalyst could be the Cuban troops in Angola and elsewhere in Africa, this matter should be clarified for the benefit of the House of Commons and the Canadian people.

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed from Friday, April 14, consideration of the motion by Mr. Chrétien that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the government, and the amendment of Mr. Stevens (p. 4439).

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, in this debate I had been dealing previously with the problems of foreign ownership. I want to return to that subject briefly in terms of its relationship to the budget we are now examining.

I had pointed out that in considering the decline of the dollar one should look at the same time at the amount of interest and dividends which has been hemorrhaging out of this country for a long time to the absentee landlords. We have a surplus in our manufacturing sector. We continue to outsell our competitors abroad, but our problem lies in what we pay for the capital which we keep introducing into Canada. We keep looking at a very significant figure. The deficit in our service account for interest and dividends is almost double that of our trade surplus. That is where the hemorrhage has been.

The idea that Canadians are not efficient or cannot compete, or that they do not have the education or the skills to compete in the western world, is simply not true. It will not bear serious examination when one looks at the balance of payments account.

We have been merrily encouraging capital of every kind and description, without discrimination, to come to Canada, since I arrived in this place in 1972. We started with a foreign investment review agency—a wonderful thing and a far better term than a welcome wagon. Look at its operation in 1976-77. Out of 235 applications, 19 were disallowed. The turn-down rate is something like 10 per cent. Of those persons applying to acquire Canadian businesses already in operation, the rejection rate is only 10 per cent. We have not merely been encouraging the setting up of new operations, but we have been encouraging a foreign takeover at a rapid rate. In terms of operating new businesses, out of 207 applications 14 were disallowed, which is a 7 per cent turn down rate in that area.

This portfolio was previously under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien). The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner), that famous progressive liberal from Alberta is now operating and managing the Foreign Investment Review Agency. Talk about putting a fox among the chickens! There it is. If hon. members thought the previous minister tried to stream foreign investment into productive areas, hon. members can bet this one will not touch it with a 10-foot pole. He does not care where the money comes from and he does not care for what purpose it is used. In any kind of long-term industrial strategy, problems of unemployment and of the declining Canadian dollar will not be solved as long as this massive hemorrhage of Canadian funds abroad continues. Canada has a branch plant economy. Until Canada leans to grow up and mature as an economy, as long as this country continues to be a branch plant economy, Canadians will be the first fired and the last hired.

Now we come to the question of research and development. Here we have a budget which is moving to a 150 per cent write-off for research and development for corporations. This is an admission that we are not doing enough research and development in Canada. All these changes in the budget will have no effect whatsoever unless it is understood that research and development are done at the head offices of multinational corporations. They could not care less how much research and development is done in a branch plant. The reason is obvious. They do not want the branch plant competing with the head office in sales anywhere in the world.

The major multinational oil companies are the spoiled brats of the corporate sector. They always have their hands out. This time they are getting a special oil depletion allowance of an extra 50 per cent, I think—I would have to check the figures. In any event there will be no money going into research and development. The research and development for the oil companies are done in Los Angeles, San Francisco. They are not interested. In an industry which is 99 per cent owned abroad, they are not interested in employing Canadians in research and development unless it is in the United States.

These multinationals pick our brightest graduates from our engineering schools; our best scientists are constantly encouraged and recruited to leave this country. Our best people leave Canada because Canadian politicians have never had the foresight or the guts to understand that until we own and control our own economy, Canada will not grow up providing employment to our better skilled and more intelligent people. They will continue to be attracted abroad, and they will continue to make contributions in technology in countries like the United States. That same technology then comes north to compete with our struggling industry here.

So there is 150 per cent write-off on research and development. In school I did not understand what 150 per cent was. I thought one went to 100 per cent and wondered how you get the other 50 per cent. The reality is this: if you happen to be in the manufacturing industry you could write off the whole cost of research and development now. What the government has said is, "Take another 50 per cent." It could have been done another way. It could have said, "Here is a handout, folks." The corporations not only get 100 per cent but all those taxpayers out there, like you and me, have to reach into their pockets and pay money back. That is a good old deficit position. Remember the corporate welfare bums? Just add it to the list, brother. There they are. There's another 50 per cent, and there's the hand in my pocket again. They have some record. The manufacturing sector in this country is spending .7 per cent of its sales returns in research and development. That is a miniscule amount. Mr. Speaker, if we want research and development the heights of this economy must be controlled by Canadians and owned by Canadians. Those decisions have to be taken by Canadians, not abroad.

We are in the glue all right. We have an $11 billion deficit and I agree there is not a lot of manouvering room. The gnomes of Zurich have looked at it and said, "These guys cannot run a peanut stand, we don't have any confidence in their operation." And as is the case when any operation is in the glue that deep, they have started to speculate against the Canadian dollar. Even if ministers had wished, they probably could not have done much in terms of providing public employment unless they had been willing to reorder their priorities and hurt their friends for the first time. And they were not prepared to do that before an election—it is a little dangerous to play around with the upper middle class in Canada because they all vote. They are very careful, when going to the polls, to make sure they have a government which will continue to give them the kind of subsidized upper class housing, subsidized retirement savings programs, and all these wonderful things of which the upper middle class has taken such tremendous advantage. The government is not about to produce a budget which would reorient that situation.

Let me tell you briefly what should have been done in the budget, Mr. Speaker. One and a half billion dollars—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired. He may continue, however, if he has the unanimous consent of the House.

An hon. Member: No.

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in opening my speech I would like to join all those who preceded me in congratulating the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) who presented what I would call a responsible budget.

No doubt that when the Minister of Finance decided to present a budget to the Canadian people, he did so essentially and exclusively in view of economic considerations. I listened to the hon. member who spoke before me and who tried to play politics with the general aims of the budget. I want to say to him immediately that the views and goals which the Minister of Finance set for himself in presenting the budget were essentially to encourage economic recovery and the rate of industrial development, and any hint of an election ploy the hon. member wants to see in that budget is unfounded. Undoubtedly, Mr. Speaker, had the Minister of Finance of Canada wanted to come up with an election budget, he would have filled it with many more concessions to Canadians, Canadian companies, and all groups of society. The budget would have provided for much more reductions of all kinds to the various groups of Canadian society. But the Minister of Finance of Canada consciously and courageously decided to present a well balanced and reasonable budget knowing full well that in the following days some hon. members of the opposition would try to use that budget as a political weapon.

He even took a risk which, in my opinion, is a precedent in the history of the preparation of budgets in Canada—close consultation with his provincial counterparts, the ministers of finance of the various provinces, in order to make them a part of the decision making process, to the extent that economic issues were concerned, before preparing his budget. However, shortly before the Easter recess when the Minister of Finance decided to introduce that budget, he had several alternatives among which to choose. One of them, of course, was to cut down the income tax rate. He did not do so and decided to reduce selected taxes because he understood and recognized that a cut in the income tax rate would not be equally favourable to all categories of Canadians.

When one considers that a sizeable number of Canadians do not pay any income tax or live on a fixed pension, or fixed income, one readily understands that an income tax cut is highly illusory for them. So he chose to follow the route suggested by several very well-advised authorities in the economic field, whether it be the Economic Council of Canada, the Canadian Chamber of Commerce or distinguished Canadian economists who had advocated and favoured a tax cut. Now, what did the Minister of Finance do? He consulted all provincial ministers of finance and, for three weeks, intensive consultations were held with all the provinces of Canada.

I think that Canadians can appreciate and understand how important the Minister of Finance felt it was to consult the provincial authorities before taking that decision. As everyone knows, it is the provinces' responsibility to set and apply the retail sales tax. The Government of Canada has never wanted or tried to intrude directly and unilaterally in that particular field of provincial jurisdiction. The federal government has offered to share the cost of a provincial sales tax cut without any discrimination with regard to the products. Several provinces—

Mr. Crosbie: Nonsense!

Mr. Ouellet: The hon. member for Newfoundland feels it is nonsense to have reduced by 3 per cent the sales tax in the provinces of Newfoundland. Well, to my mind he is the one who will not make sense when he says such things to people in his province, for they have accepted that reduction as a very wise and proper decision which, besides, has been recognized and accepted by the provincial government of his province.

An hon. Member: That he didn't know!

Mr. Ouellet: What is a little special about the government's decision to prepare a budget in close co-operation with the provinces is the fact that the Quebec government has decided recently to put forth a proposal which differs from that of the Minister of Finance of Canada (Mr. Chrétien).

Now, it is quite all right for the Quebec government to hold different views on sales tax but what is unacceptable is the fact that the Quebec finance minister, Mr. Parizeau, has remained silent throughout the three weeks of negotiations and made no comment to the Minister of Finance of Canada. That is unacceptable and shows at the very least a lack of good faith on the part of the provincial minister of finance. What strikes me most is that the Quebec premier should recently state on television that Ottawa has fooled around with the most intimate parts of the Quebec government. Well, Mr. Speaker, if the Quebec finance minister stood silently by and let his federal counterpart to mess around with his government's most intimate parts, I say it was gross ignorance on his part or perverse enjoyment.

Playing the offended virgin and hollering rape when pawing has been going on for three weeks is, I think, overreacting to the real situation. I suggest the serious point in this whole issue is that two provinces—British Columbia and Saskatchewan—have indeed proposed a number of changes during these discussions with the Minister of Finance of Canada. These proposals were presented to all provinces during the discussions and consultations the Minister of Finance had with them and they were accepted.

It is obvious that, had Quebec finance minister Parizeau made some proposals before the introduction of the federal budget, they would have been taken much more seriously and considered by the federal minister and his provincial counterparts before the finalization and the public introduction of the federal budget.

The reaction of the Quebec minister of finance came only two days after the federal budget and now it would be inequitable and unfair for the Canadian government to accept Mr. Parizeau's proposal without offering the same to other provinces. And there are some particularly dangerous aspects to this proposal. I am thinking of the following aspects I would like to mention this afternoon because it seems to me that they could lead us down a dangerous slope.

In fact a sudden and selective cut in the sales tax is discriminatory for Quebec producers and retailers because it will help some and penalize others. Besides, the selectivity in favour of Quebec products means in fact the establishment of a tariff on imports from other provinces and this in itself is a very dangerous and inappropriate method.

In a way, that measure is fully anti-Canadian, and it is a protectionist move within a Canadian province. It is a dangerous balkanization of the trade sector in Canada, particularly in our present economic situation and at this time of our history. Third, I think that, technically, Quebec's decision is particularly most counter-productive because it will encourage tax avoidance in some sectors and it will certainly be very expensive to collect.

Looking at the way most developed countries operate, one can see that there are no differences in sales tax rates, that all items are either taxed at the same rate or not taxed at all. Some products are taxed, others are not, but you very hardly and seldom find differences in tax rates among products, with variations ranging from 2, 4, 5 or 8 to 10 per cent, depending on the items. No developed country in the world has ever established that kind of differences in sale tax rates and, in any case, it seems to me most illusory and most dangerous to implement that kind of system in the province of Quebec or in other Canadian provinces. So it appears to me in light of what happened these past few days that the government of Quebec acted in bad faith because had Quebec finance minister Parizeau really wanted to protect in some way selected Quebec products he should have said so before the federal budget was made public. He should have indicated well in advance of the federal budget his preferences and hopes as to an agreement between Ottawa and Quebec on the sales tax, something which had indeed been done by British Columbia and Saskatchewan and which could very certainly have been done had Mr. Parizeau said so before.

It is obvious in this case that the Quebec government is in a position where it wants to favour certain Quebec manufactured products. This as such is in no way opposed by the government of Canada. On the contrary, if the government of Quebec wants to take the sales tax off certain products manufactured in Quebec, we have no objection. On the contrary, we congratulate the government of Quebec for finally taking its responsibilities and being prepared to take specific action to support the economy of the province of Quebec instead of passing exclusively linguistic measures which are causing irreparable damage instead of really helping the Quebec economy.

I should remind hon. members that the offer of the federal government is valid for six months and is still on the table. Indeed, the Canadian government indicated that it is ready to consider that the provincial contribution of 1 per cent not be required on every product to benefit from the federal contribution of 2 per cent and that the provincial government could reallocate its contribution on certain products only. In other words, the Minister of Finance of Canada (Mr. Chrétien) already indicated to Mr. Parizeau that there is a way out, that within the budget of the government of Quebec there is a way of rearranging those decisions he has to make as Quebec minister of finance to fully take advantage of the Canadian government's offer.

I wish to reassert that the Canadian government will always be ready in the next six months to consider, in consultation with the other provinces concerned—not only on the sly with the Quebec government, but in consultation with all the other Canadian provinces any other proposals that the Quebec government may have for the sales tax which will not be equivalent to using federal funds to break up the Canadian market.

However, it must be clearly understood that this arrangement will be available to the other provinces and that the federal government will not accept that its contribution be used to break the Canadian common market and to cause additional distortions in interprovincial trade. What I want to say this afternoon during the budget debate, Mr. Speaker, is that the generous offer of the Canadian government to reduce the sales tax for all products sold in the province of Quebec still holds.

And if the Quebec government so wishes, at any time during the next six months, and we hope it will be as soon as possible, it will still be able to reduce by at least 2 per cent immediately or as soon as it desires the sales tax on all products sold in the province of Quebec. This loss of 2 per cent in the revenue of Quebec will then be compensated by the federal government. As for the other 1 per cent, if the Quebec government decides to apply its effort for reducing taxes exclusively in other areas, it is free to do so, it has sole responsibility in this regard and we shall not be the judges of decisions made by the Quebec government in this matter.

However, it seems clear that in the interest of all Quebec consumers the provincial government must now face the Canadian reality as soon as possible because, finally, this controversy, this move of independence or this little crisis of the Quebec finance minister is motivated only by separatist sentiments and not at all by good intentions towards the population that the provincial government should serve.

If the Quebec government wants to abolish entirely the sales tax on clothes, fair enough, we have no objection. On the contrary, we will congratulate it for this action. As a matter of fact, one of my colleagues reminds me that in the first budget after its victory the Parti Québécois itself increased the sales tax on footwear and children clothing. If they realize now it was not such a good measure, let them remove it and we will congratulate them for it. But they should not do it with the Canadian government's money, they should not do it by trying to jeopardize the free common market that we enjoy in this country, they should not do it either to enhance their separatist option, because they have been elected not to bring Quebec to independence, but to give the people of Quebec a good administration. I think that this mini-crisis has been provoked exclusively by the Quebec government and by Mr. Parizeau. The Canadian government is not to blame if we are in this situation; the blame rests squarely on Mr. Parizeau. In my opinion, this small crisis will disappear in a few weeks.

I am basing myself on an experience we had some months ago. Mr. Speaker, you will remember that a few months ago, following a conference of energy ministers, namely the Canadian Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie) and the ten provincial ministers, it was agreed that the two levels of governments, federal and provincial, would strive to conserve energy in Canada and to introduce at both levels a series of measures designed to make the people aware if the need to conserve energy, to consider energy as a valuable asset that should not be wasted. Now, you will remember that following this federal-provincial conference where the federal Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and the ten provincial energy ministers had agreed on a series of measures at the federal and provincial levels, the home insulation program also caused a minor identity crisis in the province of Quebec. You will remember that the Quebec government had reneged on the commitment made at the federal-provincial conference by his energy minister and was no longer ready to co-operate with the Canadian government in setting up a Canadian home insulation program throughout the country.

Of course, because of the step forward and the two steps backwards taken by the Quebec government, this program was not implemented within the province of Quebec at the same time as in the other provinces, and on that occasion, Quebec found a rather special allied in the province of Alberta which had special problems it wanted to solve before joining the national energy conservation program. So, for some months, we had a home insulation program offered by the Canadian government to all citizens of all provinces, a program which was quickly and heartily endorsed by almost all the provinces, but was turned down by the PQ government in Quebec because it felt once again that the Canadian government was forcing its hand in a field which it nevertheless acknowledged as being very important. Now, it took federal officials a few weeks, a great deal of patience and goodwill in order to reach positive conclusions and finally an agreement with the Quebec government, so that the people in Quebec could benefit from this program just as all other Canadian citizens.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that the same thing will happen in the case of the sales tax which now is a ticklish problem in Quebec. In a few weeks from now, a solution will be found by the officials sent by the Quebec Minister of Finance in co-operation with the Canadian government officials, which will enable the minister, Mr. Parizeau, to save face, just like it was possible, a few weeks ago to enable the Quebec Minister of Energy, Mr. Joron, to save face because he had turned down a program that was capital for all Canadians, whatever their province of residence. I believe it is essential, in the course of my contribution to this debate on the budget, that I refer briefly to the programs and measures the Canadian government has undertaken in the last few months, I would even say the last few years, in order to provide all Canadians with adequate housing at reasonable prices.

I think that objectively we can recognize that opportunities for Canadians to find comfortable housing at a reasonable price are better today than ever before. Through a series of government programs in 1976 we offered on the market a great many new housing units. In fact we have built in Canada some 265,000 housing units. It represents a significant number of homes that are offered to the Canadian people and that meet the needs of the majority of Canadians. And this housing production is not made at random but within a program launched two years ago by the Government of Canada to build one million new housing units for the Canadian people over the next four years. If we consider our performance we realize now that we have even exceeded our objectives and we will certainly reach that target of one million new housing units in Canada.

Obviously I do not think that a high number of housing starts is in itself the magic answer to our housing problems. However we must produce annually more housing in Canada if we want to meet the needs of the Canadian people and particularly a group of citizens, the senior citizens and low wage corners. It is absolutely necessary for the Canadian government and provincial governments to do better and more in that field. In fact, in 1976 we have financed only 12,000 units under federal-provincial shared cost public housing programs. I think that 12,000 units is not enough. The target I submitted to my provincial colleagues is 30,000 housing units a year over the next five years and the reason I submitted—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. minister but I wish to inform him that his allotted time has expired. However he may continue with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): There is not unanimous consent.

[English]

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, before I come to the main point of my address which is going to deal with the remarks of the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Ouellet), whose remarks illustrate the insufferable arrogance of this government, the fantastic damage it is doing to federal-provincial relations and to the cause of national unity, let me just say this first: the theme of this budget was stated by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) to be one of responsibility. That is what he said. His theme has been complete irresponsibility and complete oppression and destruction of a healthy sense of federal-provincial relationships. That is what has happened, Mr. Speaker.

Just before getting into my main remarks, I wanted to say this: before confederation we had an anti-confederation song so-called, which went something like this:

"Hurray for our own native isle, Newfoundland,
Not a stranger shall touch one inch of her strand;
With her face turned to Britain, her back to the Gulf;
Come hear at your peril, Canadian wolf."

That was our anti-confederation song, Mr. Speaker, which has been defused by the last 28 years of confederation.

I just mention that because I want to recommend to hon. members, who have been very supportive of Newfoundland in the seal fishery controversy, a book which has just come out, called "Haulin' Rope & Gaff", of songs and poetry in the history of the Newfoundland seal fishery, by one Shannon Ryan and by one Larry Small of the Breakwater Press in St. John's, Newfoundland, an enterprising press. This volume will show you, Mr. Speaker, why we are so defensive; why we defend the seal hunt and the importance it has in Newfoundland history and culture. It is 168 pages of poems and songs about the seal fishery and the part it occupies in Newfoundland life. So, before getting into my main remarks, I want to thank hon. members who supported us in the seal fishery and recommend this to them.

Mr. Darling: What is the cost?

Mr. Crosbie: Then they will see why it is so important to Newfoundland.

Mr. Darling: What is the cost?

Mr. Crosbie: I do not know what it costs. I was sent a free copy, but it would not be very much. It depends on how far the dollar falls.

[The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier).]

I want also to pay tribute—it may be my last time speaking in the House, if the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) can screw up his courage, until the next parliament is called, and hopefully if the Prime Minister can screw up his courage, we may have an election called this week—

An hon. Member: He has screwed up everything else; he may as well screw up his courage.

Mr. Crosbie: He has screwed up everything else; he may as well screw up his courage. Is that what the hon. gentleman said?

Mr. Dinsdale: That is right.

Mr. Crosbie: So, it may be my last chance in this parliament, and I wanted to say this—

Mr. Collenette: It is your last chance, period.

Mr. Crosbie: —that it was an honour to have served with the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Stanfield), the former leader of the opposition. I am very sorry to see he is not running again. He made a great contribution to Canadian political life.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: I am glad I had 18 months to see him in action and listen to his advice in our caucus. I also want to say a parting word to the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas), who had a great career, Mr. Speaker, in Canadian political life, in Saskatchewan and nationally.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: I have a great admiration for that gentleman. I am sorry he has had some medical problems lately and he is not here, but I certainly wish him well in his retirement. He is one of the outstanding political figures in Canadian history, and I do not think anyone could gainsay that. There are other members—I cannot mention them all—we are going to miss on this side. The hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Gillies) is not running again, for reasons I can well understand. He wants to get back to his former life in academia and business. Politics is a tough life, Mr. Speaker. You have got to have a thick hide. After ten years in Newfoundland politics, my hide is thick enough to last at least 50 years here, if the electorate keeps returning me.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance is also a very fine fellow. I like the Minister of Finance. He is engaging and he is refreshing. He is a great Canadian, but by golly, I have to say this also: he is a disastrous Minister of Finance. He should be somewhere else. It does not excuse him that he is costing this country tens of millions, if not hundreds of millions of dollars, because he does not understand that as Minister of Finance every word he utters is watched by people in the financial and industrial circles around the world; that a loose word from him can cost tens of millions of dollars of losses to us in foreign exchange, and waves of speculation; that he has to be very careful with every word that he utters. He does not realize that.

If his colleague, the hon. Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner) is properly called "loose lips"—and he has been very loose with his lips; if I get a chance, I will expand on that—the Minister of Finance is being "flip lips". He is too flippant. He is too flip with his lips. Every time he flips his lips, he can cost us tens of millions in foreign exchange. He is not careful enough. He is not thinking out the remarks he makes enough. There is too much confusion. We already have a government in which no one has confidence, in the business and industrial community, in any event. Now we have a Minister of Finance who says one thing about the dollar, and we have the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce who says the direct opposite. This is costing this country dearly, Mr. Speaker, but I will come back to that later.

This budget was not a boost to the economy. It could be described mainly as a goose to the economy. There is going to be a little jump up, but that jump is going to subside very quickly. It is going to come down very quickly. It is a rubber duck budget. If you want to run out and buy your rubber duck tomorrow, you will save three cents. This is all this budget amounts to. It was a rubber duck that sprung a lot of leaks before it was brought down, and has sprung a lot of leaks since, Mr. Speaker.

All the Minister of Finance did in this budget was thumb his nose at the Canadian economy. There is nothing else he could do. His hands were tied behind his back. He already had a deficit of $11.5 billion. He could not really spend very much. So, all he could do was thumb his nose without using his hands, and the Minister of Finance is a marvel at that.

The most serious deficiency in his budget is the subject which was addressed by the Minister of State for Urban Affairs this afternoon, and that is the situation with respect to the sales tax.

I make this prophecy: if by some mischance the kind of attitude represented by the Prime Minister, the Minister of State for Urban Affairs and the Minister of Finance, gets them re-elected to operate the government of this country again for another four or five years, then I give national unity very little chance to be accomplished, and see nothing but a disaster for federal-provincial relations.

Mr. Dinsdale: Heaven forbid!

Mr. Crosbie: Now, the kind of federal-provincial thinking which goes on in this government is illustrated by the minister of intergovernmental affairs, the hon. Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations (Mr. Lalonde). I do not remember his district. There was an article on him in Maclean's magazine a few weeks ago. There have been nothing but articles on Liberals in that magazine in the last few months. And I notice they just got a $1 million advertising contract from the government to advertise to tell Canadians they should travel at home. I do not know if there is any connection. Maclean's is a Liberal house organ, and that is all it is. But in this article here on the Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations there was one astute thing said, and I quote at page 32 c:

● (1632)

Lalonde reflects what seems to some people pretty much the basic problem today with all federal Liberals. They don't argue their cause, they take it for granted. Positions are declared ex cathedra and then Canadians are lectured on them.

That is what is happening today on the sales tax. There is a federal sales tax, Mr. Speaker. I think it is something like 10 per cent, and if the federal government wanted to reduce sales tax, they could reduce their own sales tax. They have their sales tax. They have an excise tax. But they wanted to reduce a retail sales tax, and direct taxation is specifically an area of provincial responsibility, and most of the provinces, except Alberta, have a retail sales tax, a direct retail sales tax. The minister wanted to have a reduction in the retail sales tax across Canada, so he suggested to the other provinces that he would make money available.

In the case of the four Atlantic provinces, he said that if they reduced their sales taxes 3 per cent he would reimburse them for all of the amount that they lost as a result of that. And they accepted; naturally they accepted. Who can expect independence from the four Atlantic provinces when they are economically inextremis, when in Newfoundland we have an 11 per cent sales tax—not by choice but because of cruel economic circumstances? When someone comes along and says, "You reduce that tax to 8 per cent, and we will reimburse you that 3 per cent you lost," naturally you accept it, whether or not it is an interference in federal-provincial affairs. You have no choice.

This offer that was made by the Minister of Finance was a mafia offer. It was an offer that you could not refuse, just like in "The Godfather." Godfather Chrétien made an offer that most provinces could not refuse and did not refuse, with the exception of Quebec, which has a long history—whether Liberal governments have ruled or Union Nationale, and now the Parti Québécois of refusing to accept these kinds of offers from the Government of Canada. Time after time they have done that, and the Parti Québécois is following in that tradition. And Mr. Claude Ryan has said himself—it is obvious from his remarks—that he would be taking the same kind of position they have taken. I quote from The Globe and Mail of Monday where Mr. Ryan says:

"The tax is quite evidently one that belongs to the sovereign authority of the provincial Parliament to impose, to withdraw or to change," he told the press conference.

Next quote:

"It is surely not desirable that measures be taken which seem to want to impose, under financial penalties, changes which come under the jurisdiction of the provinces."

That is a support for the position taken by Quebec because it summarizes what has happened.

Well, what has happened? Alberta received no assistance. They are a special case, they have no sales tax. B.C. and Saskatchewan, there was a special case made for them. They wanted to remove the sales tax for 9 months and reduce it by 2 per cent, and that was agreed to by the Minister of Finance and by the Prime Minister. That was a special case.

If we look at the sales taxes across Canada, there are all kinds of exemptions. Newfoundland already exempts clothing, it exempts footwear, it exempts now the sales of electricity. P.E.I. does the same. What is exempted differs in every province. The 11 per cent in Newfoundland did not apply to clothing and footwear in the first place. So, there are special cases. All across Canada we have got special cases, different exemptions. We have got different rates. The rates vary, Mr. Speaker, from 5 per cent to 11 per cent in Newfoundland. So, the rates are different all across Canada.

The reduction that was implemented as a result of the minister's budget is discriminatory because in one province it will save the consumer 27 per cent, and in other provinces varying percentages depending on how high their sales tax was in the first place. So, it is different. There are special cases in every province. It means a 25 per cent reduction for Quebeckers if they had reduced it 3 per cent—27 per cent it meant in Newfoundland from the burden on consumers; 29 per cent in Ontario and British Columbia because their tax rate was less; 37 per cent reduction in the Maritimes, and 40 per cent in Manitoba and Saskatchewan, if the federal proposal was accepted. So, it differs in all provinces anyway. Consumers were being treated differently in every province by this proposal.

But Quebec came back and said that they did not want to do it in that manner, that they want to assist not only their consumers but certain Quebec industries. So, they want to reduce and take the 8 per cent off furniture, footwear, clothing, and what was the fourth—textiles. So, that is what they wanted to do. The federal government said to them, "There is $226 million that it will cost in Quebec if you reduce your sales tax over-all 3 per cent for six months. We are going to give you two thirds of that, and you have to come up with the other third if you do what we ask you to do." That is $184 million from the federal government, and they would have to put up $42 million if they did this. If they accepted federal dictation, this is what they would get from the federal government.

Well, they have come back and said no, they want to take 8 per cent off four specific areas. It does not make them any different from Newfoundland. Newfoundland does not tax clothing now, does not tax footwear, but it will help their consumers who will buy clothing and textiles and footwear, and furniture; and it will help the Quebec manufacturing sector which is heavy in that area. Now, what is wrong with that proposal, Mr. Speaker? What is wrong with it? It is a provincial tax. Surely to God, cannot members opposite see that this is a fantastic intrusion into provincial rights and jurisdictions to try to force this over on a province that says it does not want it.

[Mr. Crosbie.]

You noticed today in question period when our leader, (Mr. Clark) and the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) referred to this "Briefing Notes for Consultative Task Forces" put out by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce—I got it from them this morning.

When we look at page 19 of that report, the section on industrial adjustment, we see that it says at page 18:

> A review of industrial prospects indicates that, even in a buoyant economy, particularly difficult problems of industry adjustment involving significant contraction in employment are anticipated in such sectors as leather industries, textiles and clothing, furniture and shipbuilding. These industries together employ around 244,000 workers . . .

And then it goes on to say below:

> The regional pattern of industrial activity makes the question of adjustment more problematic. The sectors listed above with severe adjustment problems are generally concentrated in Quebec.

The government's own study shows this. It warns that there is going to be significant contraction in leather, textiles, clothing, and furniture, and says that the severe problems are generally concentrated in Quebec. And when the Quebec government comes forward to try to utilize this federal offer to assist in those areas, the federal government says no, and then tries to pretend it is some kind of criminal action, a separatist action by the Parti Québécois that they have made this other suggestion.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there can be no satisfactory, no smooth federal-provincial relationship with this government while that kind of attitude is exhibited by the government that operates in Ottawa. This is a perfect illustration of why the Prime Minister is the last man in Canada who can ever come near to solving our unity problem with Quebec. He is too stiff necked about it; he is too inflexible. He will not budge. He has got his own fixed ideas, and it does not matter what the provinces think or what the province of Quebec thinks, or what the people in the province of Quebec think. He is going to force his way on them. That is his attitude.

How can Canada survive if that is the kind of attitude that stays in office in Ottawa? In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, it will not survive. This action of the government was exemplified here today by the minister for urban affairs with his stupid argument that he put forward today, exemplified by the Minister of Finance, exemplified by the Prime Minister on Friday, who by a cheap tactic tried to imply that anyone who thought their policy was unwise was a separatist. By God, Canada is on the road to ruination if the majority of the Canadian people will buy that kind of dangerous guff. What did the minister of urban affairs have today to justify their attitude? And, by the way, I have not got time to go into it, but we all know that the four western premiers have come out and said this is an intrusion in federal-provincial affairs, a shocking way to run things, and flippant remarks of the Prime Minister could prejudice ongoing discussions in national unity. We are all familiar with what they have said and how right they are. And they are upset with this federal interference, although they all accepted what was offered because, as I say, politically unless you were in Quebec it was an offer you could hardly refuse.

What did the minister say to justify this kind of club held over the people of Quebec? He said it was on the grounds that they have got a separatist government. This is an attempt to make the people of Quebec suffer, by the federal government to bludgeon them into thinking that they are suffering because they have got a Parti Québécois government. That kind of tactic is never going to keep this country together. What justification was given for it? He said there were negotiations for three weeks. Nonsense! The four western premiers put the lie to that. They said there was no such thing. There was some consultation, but in the last couple of days they could not talk to each other because they were told it was budget secrecy. So that is a figment of the imagination.

He said the minister of finance in Quebec said nothing when these matters were discussed with him. Why should he have said anything? It was his jurisdiction. It was his sales tax. Why should he have to speak to the Minister of Finance of Canada when the Minister of Finance of Canada comes in with a bludgeon to try to tell him what to do with his sales tax in Quebec. So, if Parizeau said nothing, I say I agree with him—Parizeau did not have to say anything.

Then he went on to say there were four or five other points, that if Quebec does this, they have to offer it to the other provinces. Fine! Good! If they agree, as they should, that Quebec can do this, then they should offer it to the other provinces. There is nothing stopping them.

The minister said that if this went ahead it would aid some people and penalize others by selective cuts. So what? I have explained that every sales tax in every province in Canada has got penalties for some and selective cuts for others. Some exempt clothing altogether, like Newfoundland, and then they tax other things. It is different in every province. That is no argument.

Second, he said it was a measure of protectionism and was going to lead to balkanization of Canadian commerce. What absolute tripe! We have got ten provinces now, all with their own sales taxes. We have got that now. There is no leading to balkanization in that. In a certain manner we have got balkanization in Canada under our present system. We have got protectionism. The real kind of protection is where a provincial government says that you have got to be located in the province to get any work there, that there is a 10 per cent differential in your favour if you bid and if you are from within the province, but not if you are from without. That is where the real balkanization is, not in these sales tax proposals.

Third, the minister said it was going to cost a lot, and it would lead to tax evasion. I do not know how he arrived at that conclusion. One did not follow from the other. The rates now vary in every province, as I have explained.

Fourth, he said the Quebec government acted in bad faith. They should have spoken to them earlier and told them what they proposed. Why? I have already dealt with that. Where is the bad faith? The bad faith is in the federal government that will use its fiscal powers to try to bludgeon the provinces into doing what it, the federal government, wants them to do, whether they think it is best for them or not.

Fifth, the minister said the "feds" would agree to Quebec reallocating their own one per cent contribution. Now, Mr. Speaker, that reveals an attitude. The minister said the great federal government, the great Trudeau federal government, would agree that Quebec could use its one per cent of the cost, the one per cent it was putting up, the $46 million—they would agree to Quebec using that selectively, but their 2 per cent contribution would have to come off all items.

Imagine the federal government saying to Quebec, "You can do what you like with your own money." Isn't that a great concession from the federal government? Imagine the minister having the gall to get up in this House and tell us, pretend to us, they are making a great concession. It is arrogance unparalleled. By God, we have got to get that across to the Canadian people. We have got disaster staring us in the face if this kind of man gets back into the Government of Canada with this kind of attitude. It will be a federal system no longer, it will be a unitary system if this crew ever gets back in. God knows what will ever happen to the country. Big deal! They are going to allow them to do what they like with their one per cent.

The minister said it was a small crisis provoked by Quebec. How was it provoked by Quebec? It was provoked by the government that brought the budget in last Monday—a week ago Monday, not by Quebec. Quebec provoked nothing. Quebec has come in and said, "This is our sales tax, this is what we want to do with the offer you are making", and the federal government is attempting to crush them down in an exhibition of raw fear and force in federal-provincial relations. I, for, one hope that Mr. Parizeau sticks to his guns.

I had six years of coming up to federal-provincial conferences and seeing the hon. crowd opposite throw their weight around and try to crush all opposition with their financial strength and the fiscal strength they have. I say this is the greatest example we have had yet of the attitude of the Trudeau administration to federal-provincial relationships in Canada. It is a centralist, arrogant, strong-arm, Kung Fu—you do what they like or you get their fiscal foot right in the face—government, a government that somersaults all over Canada putting its fiscal foot right in your mouth if you are not careful, if you do not agree, if you do not do what they say. It is the Godfather. It is the Liberal mafia making offers you cannot refuse across Canada. Let us get the old movie "The Godfather" on and you will see that just what happened in "The Godfather" is what is happening here.

If we are going to have unity in Canada, Mr. Speaker, it has got to be unity in diversity. If Quebec wants to do things in a certain way in its own jurisdiction, it has got to be allowed to do it, and the same in Ontario or Newfoundland or wherever. We have not got a unitary government. The PC party does not believe in a unitary government. We believe in a co-operative federalism. Our leader and the people who serve with him are not going to take this kind of approach in federal-provincial relationships. Not on your life! We are going to hold Canada together by allowing for diversity, by allowing for conciliation and discussion and compromise. That is the only way this can be treated if we do not want Quebec separating, or other parts of this country getting fed up and attempting the same thing. The Prime Minister cannot do that. We have seen it time and time again, and this is the latest illustration of that situation. There cannot be a serious approach to national unity while this is allowed to continue.

It is a political approach that this government has taken. They know in six months' time the provinces are going to be blamed when taxes go back up again. How are the people of Newfoundland going to feel about the Newfoundland government when in October, as winter comes on, the sales tax goes back up from 8 to 11 per cent? The same thing will happen here in Ontario, or in nine months time in Saskatchewan and in British Columbia. All that odium is going to go on the provincial governments, not on the government that caused the whole situation with its band-aid approach, its cheap political approach. Politics are interfering with everything. Even Canadian national unity is only a matter of attempting political gain for the government opposite. What a way to approach trying to save our country. It is enough to upset one.

This budget, Mr. Speaker—I will leave that topic now. I wish I had a couple of hours to cover the ground properly.

Unemployment. Here we are in Canada—raging unemployment—16.5 per cent in Newfoundland, and 19.4 per cent is the actual rate down there. Even in mighty Ontario, St. Catharines, it is 13.2 per cent; Sudbury, 13 per cent; Kitchener, 10.8 per cent; Windsor, 11.2 per cent. I am starting to feel sorry for the mainlanders, Mr. Speaker. Central Canada, the industrial heartland of Canada, with these tremendous rates of unemployment—where is Canada headed with her manufacturing industry operating at 80 per cent capacity? The Science Council of Canada says we are approaching deindustrialization. Negotiations are going on over at Geneva and the minister is unable to answer properly any questions we ask about what is happening.

Canadian industry is on the threshold of hari-kari—the hari-kari being carried out by this government. We are used to unemployment in Newfoundland but they are not used to it in Ontario. My heart bleeds for them. St. John's, Newfoundland, 15.8 per cent urban unemployment; Chicoutimi, 20.4 per cent. There are no new steps taken in the budget to relieve unemployment. It is the opposite. Because of the hash of our economic affairs they have made, the Canadian dollar is trembling. It is like a floating kidney. The floating Canadian dollar does not show health, Mr. Speaker. It shows there is something wrong. When your kidney starts to float around it shows there is something wrong with your health, and when the Canadian dollar starts floating around it shows there is something wrong with our economic health. It shows how the people in the rest of the world regard us. They know we are sick.

Poor Jack Horner! "Loose lips" and "Flip lips"! When the two of them get through with the dollar we will be lucky if there is anything left of it.

[Mr. Crosbie.]

What is there for the unemployed, the over one million? I mentioned the farce last night that we had at the first ministers' con-job conference. What has been done in Newfoundland? We have Canada Works down in Newfoundland and they pay the lowest wages anywhere in Canada in Newfoundland on the Canada Works projects—a maximum of $115 per week. The unemployed in Newfoundland were shown a vision that Gull Island was going to start this year and they were going to get 11,000 jobs. They learned later on that it was just another study.

There was a suggestion a year ago that we should have a project where 400 loggers would be employed for three years clearing the reservoir for the lower Churchill hydro development—to provide work for 400 men for three years. There are a lot of unemployed loggers there. The federal government makes a niggardly offer after a year that it will pay $10,000 per job. They know the project will cost $25,000,000 and will result in lasting value because the reservoir must be cleared, even though we do not know for sure exactly when the project is going to go ahead. So the federal government is not assisting there.

We have an oil refinery at Come-By-Chance in my district. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie) could care less. He has not done a thing. He has not flicked a toe or finger to get that Come-By-Chance oil refinery going again to help our unemployed.

The Minister of DREE—I got a fatuous silly letter from him yesterday about the National Sea Products Fish Plant proposal in Arnold's Cove, Placentia Bay, in the area of the worst unemployment down there. They applied last October. They were going to expand their fish plant, at a cost for an additional $4 million. They requested a loan of $1,104 million and a grant of $335,000. It is going to create 67 new all-year round jobs down there. They employ 18 now full-time during the year, and 32 part-time. They applied to DREE. That was in October. It is an area of fantastic unemployment, perhaps 40 or 50 per cent unemployment, and the minister has not given his O.K. yet. The federal Department of Fisheries and the Environment said in January that it was all right from the fisheries point of view. I had a silly letter from the minister yesterday saying they had to consider the 200-mile limit, to consider the fish stocks. I say he has to get the lead out of his drawers and help us put these people to work.

What kind of a government is it? The Prime Minister said in May, 1972, that we can be obsessed with unemployment. He was laughing off unemployment. He said we can be obsessed with unemployment, on March 11, 1972, as reported in the Montreal Star. I say "Yes, Mr. Speaker, we damn well can". There are one million people obsessed with it. Any government that is not led by a man obsessed with unemployment in Canada today should resign and get out and let people take over who are obsessed with unemployment. I am obsessed with it, the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) is, and all the members on this side are obsessed with it.

We do not want a government that is going to sit on its duff and do nothing. We do not want governments with ministers who say the fat times are over, who attempted to blame it all on the Canadian people when they were speaking their baloney out in "Kelowney" British Columbia, last summer. I have the clipping here which came out of the paper. The fat times are over. Everyone is to blame but the Canadian government. The Canadian people are to blame for everything, not the Canadian government.

Investment intentions are down. Businessmen are not investing. We are falling behind in investment. We have a Prime Minister who said a couple of years ago that the government had to regulate everything. He is now cosying up to the businessmen himself, but the Minister of Public Works and Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Buchanan) was criticizing businessmen just the other day. They have not got any hustle, he said. The Minister of Public Works and Minister of State for Science and Technology said that while ITC officials, and I quote, "bust their behinds" to get export orders, Canadian businessmen take it easy. He said he reported this to the Prime Minister who stated, and I quote, "Judd, Amen; that's the story I get on all the trips I have taken. We Canadians seems to lack the entrepreneurial spirit, lack that hustle". That is what the Prime Minister said. That is the output.

They want us to encourage businessmen to invest and do more. They are saying that their civil servants and themselves have more hustle than Canadian businessmen. Well, by golly, if that is the case, Canadian businessmen should all go and jump in Lake Ontario tomorrow. If they have not got more hustle than the hon. crowd that I have seen opposite for the last 18 months, they are in dire straits indeed. It is no wonder they are not investing. They are not going to invest until they get a government in which they can have some confidence. It must be near the close of my time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I regret to inform the hon. member that his allotted time has expired.

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to follow the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie), the great Pagliacci of the Conservative party. I was delighted to hear his valedictory address. He is entertaining and persuasive, if one does not stop to think about it. I must say that I agree with the hon. member's tribute paid to the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Stanfield). He is a great member of this House, a great leader of his party and a great Canadian who will be missed very much. I have said those things in other places at other times about the hon. gentleman.

"Fat lips" referred to "flip lips" across the way here. I do not know quite to whom he was referring, but he kept on speaking about the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) and unsound policies, which is the way to shake confidence in the dollar, in the economy, and in the hearts of the Canadian people. He disparages the dollar, which is a competitive dollar. I do not know what the hon. member's policy would be. I do not know what his party's policy would be, and I do not know what the policy would be of any of their finance critics relating to the dollar. Would they let it float, would they peg it, would they intervene and, if they intervened, to what extent would they intervene? Do they think a competitive dollar at honest levels is a proper thing, or not? I say it is an opportunity dollar which allows us to be competitive in the world today, if we take advantage of it and if our own confidence is not shaken and the confidence of others who invest in this country is not shaken by the type of words we have been hearing from across the way.

I think the hon. member misses the point on the sales tax issue. He has been very flippant on the question of who is right. Of course there was a co-ordinated effort among the provinces and the federal government. There were discussions with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) and the finance ministers of the provinces. It is the first time as far as I know that this has happened in the history of this country. That is co-operative federalism. That is putting your money where your mouth is. It is this type of consultation which will get us further.

We do not need to continue to score debating points in a pre-electoral period. We are in the midst of a serious debate on the budget. We need rational and constructive comments and criticism; a real assessment of the situation.

In my view, and in the view of many other responsible Canadians, we are on the verge of the greatest strategic industrial development in the history of our nation. We cannot lose confidence in ourselves, and we cannot allow those criers of doom and gloom to get us down. Then there are those people who suggest we are going bankrupt, as I heard the hon. member for St. John's West say last night, and those people who say we are winding down.

However, I would like to quote from the Globe and Mail of April 15, 1978, part of an address made to the Empire Club of Canada in Toronto. It reads:

> We must set aside the unworthy and unfounded notion that this country is winding down. We are sharing in the problems of the rest of the world, but we are also sharing in its opportunities.

The address goes on to say:

> In terms of average growth, our economy has outpaced the United States and the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development total economies, since 1973.

The same speaker said:

> Again during this most recent four-year period, real output grew almost twice as fast as in the United States (6.1 per cent compared to 3.1 per cent). Manufacturing employment in Canada is up slightly, while manufacturing jobs in the United States have declined by 2.3 per cent.

The address continues:

> Before looking ahead, we should appreciate that the ground we hold is good, and that an extreme assault, from either the right or the left, on our existing economic and governmental structures is not justified and would only get in the way of feasible and sensible initiatives.

Reading further along in the address:

> The big levers of fiscal policy will sustain moderate growth. Furthermore, federal monetary policy is now on the right course to restraining inflation.

And reading again from the address, I quote:

> ... but nevertheless, a far-reaching and genuine enterprise strategy was hammered out at the recent First Ministers' Conference. A consensus has been reached on vital issues including the need to set goals, to improve investment and the business environment, and to deal head-on with sectoral problems.

It is a very hopeful speech given by a responsible Canadian, a responsible minister of finance, the Hon. Darcy McKeough, Ontario Treasurer.

In spite of our partisanship, particularly in a pre-electoral period and before we lose the hon. member for St. John's West, no matter what party we belong to we should look honestly at the country today, and this budget in relation to it.

It is a responsible budget. It is a budget of concern, and I think concern is required. World economic conditions are difficult. We share those, and we have some of our own. It is a competent budget. It looks forward to growth. It shows cohesion in the relationship between provinces and the federal government. It shows innovation with the 150 per cent tax write-off for research, development and design. This is very important with the opportunities which are opening up. It is a signal, not only of a tax credit to make it worth-while for companies large and small to be innovative and entrepreneurial, but it is an indication that this government believes in the private sector, it believes in the entrepreneurs, and it believes in those who are prepared to do the research, development and design, to innovate and to fight for those markets. It is appropriately stimulative in present conditions.

It is very difficult to balance between inflation and growth and creation of jobs. It is the right amount of stimulation according to most economic observers that I have read, and certainly according to responsible finance ministers. It is not going to change or get dramatically better overnight. We are going to see slow, steady progress—perhaps not steady, but progress, anyway—over the next few years.

Anyone who suggests simplistic answers or magic answers is either a liar or a fool. They do not exist. Simplistic criticism is not adequate in a situation like this. What we need is the sense of responsibility the minister has shown, and the determination to overcome short-range problems while looking at medium and long term prospects. We are not going down the drain. We are not going bankrupt. That sort of talk withers the spirit of Canadians who want to get on and do their jobs.

There are just as many opportunities in Canada today as there were when I was a young man growing up, for anyone who is willing to go out and grab them. They are not handed out on a silver platter. They were not handed to me on a silver platter. You had to go out and fight for them and work for them. I am convinced the young people in Canada today are prepared to do this. The opportunities are great.

I heard the hon. member for St. John's West speaking last night about the various developments which are planned or which are under way. I enjoy listening to him for light entertainment, now that Archie Bunker is off the TV.

Look across the country and note the tremendous development in the Foothills pipeline, for example—some $10 billion. Think of the number of jobs which will be created during its construction, and the effect of the line on our balance of payments once it is completed. Consider the Beaufort Sea development. There is an indication that this is one of the greatest natural gas finds in the world and its exploitation might require further pipeline development—I do not know at this time.

Investment in the Alberta tar sands project with Syncrude III coming along amounts to $2.5 billion—I get these billions mixed up, there is so much development going on by people who have so much confidence in our country. I believe Imperial Oil is putting some $4 billion into oil sands development. I understand, after speaking to one of the directors recently, that the technology is coming into place in connection with the Polar Gas undertaking in the Arctic islands. Eventually that gas will be brought down to eastern Canada.

Massive investment is also being made in the Gull Island development, which again will lead to a great deal of employment. These things do not happen overnight. And there is the Bay of Fundy project. Look at a map and imagine how much power could be generated from the Fundy tides. Billions of dollars would be required for such an investment, but think of the number of jobs which would be created.

One can hold various opinions about nuclear power, but we are a nation which possesses perhaps the safest and most advanced nuclear power plants, and we are fortunate enough to have a stable supply of uranium within our borders. All this means we are possibly the only country in the western industrial world which will be self-sufficient in energy. It will not be cheap energy, but it will not be any more expensive than it is anywhere else.

I think we should be grateful to the OPEC nations in a way, because their action in raising energy prices has forced us to exploit our own resources, and the cost of doing so is finally economic. This has attracted investment in Canada and assures our future, as well as doing some excellent things for our balance of payments account. I have some figures here showing that the cost of our imports from abroad is presently $3.4 billion a year—I am speaking of oil imports alone—so self-sufficiency in energy is terribly important. Also, it will bring us a stability which no other country in the world enjoys.

There are other advantages which we possess and which are of immense importance—I am thinking of the industrial sector. I think of Bombardier-Montreal Locomotive Worthington in Montreal, with its development in light, rapid and comfortable transportation, all of which are leading to major orders from around the world, one recently from Venezuela. I think of Canadair with its Challenger, a world leading executive aircraft—some 125 are already on order, cash on the barrelhead, firm orders in a highly competitive market. I think of de Havilland in Toronto, a world leader in short take-off and landing aircraft, doubling its production, I understand; a oubling of the production of Buffalo aircraft, with the Twin)tter still a world seller, and the Dash 7 finding an ever more romising place in world markets. I think of Bristol Aircraft ut in Winnipeg and of a number of contractors for my lepartment in Nova Scotia and the Atlantic provinces engaged in high and medium technology industry of a kind which is blossoming all over the country.

When we assess ourselves, Mr. Speaker, I believe we should also assess our social advantages, because we cannot just talk about our country in economic terms, even though the economic and the social are very much intertwined. We should consider the advantages which we have in place and which other nations do not—developments which have largely taken place in the last ten years under this government.

I remember particularly the first time I ran for parliament in 1968 going from door to door in my constituency of York North, knocking at doors and being greeted sometimes by little children, and sometimes by grandmothers or grandfathers who looked sort of cowed and beaten, who had to live with their daughters and sons or sons-in-law or daughters-in-law—we all know the tensions this can create. Grandchildren are wonderful for a couple of hours, so they tell me, but to be there all the time may not be so enjoyable, and having to be a guest in the home of the children of one's family, in a garret or basement, can be soul-destroying. It destroys one's dignity, one's self-respect. I do not say we have gone far enough, but we have gone further in the last ten years than in all previous history. That is pretty good, and I hope we go further.

I ran a seminar for senior citizens in my constituency. I run these seminars for various groups—for businessmen, for youth. On one day I ran a seminar in the morning for youth and in the afternoon for senior citizens. We offered transportation to the senior citizens because mine is a large riding for an urban constituency. It is located to the north of Toronto and takes in many small communities. I do not think we had a single call to our offer of transportation, although there might have been just one or two. But the people came in their own cars or those of their friends and jammed the hall. That would not have happened ten years ago. The people were well dressed; they were well fed. They were happy and they had dignity, self-respect, and I was tremendously moved to see that difference which had taken place in just ten years.

It is my belief that you can judge the quality of a society more by the way it treats its senior citizens than by any other measure. I include along with senior citizens other people in society who may not be capable of looking after themselves.

I do not think we need to worry much about the young or about the middle aged. We can take our knocks and do our thing. It does not hurt us. It helps us. It is a sort of crucible of life. And it is the spirit which built this country. But I think we should know that the society in which we live will allow us the dignity of security and independence in our senior years. I put a very high priority on that, perhaps for very selfish reasons, because one day I will be a senior citizen myself, that is, if I am lucky.

When one is in the productive years one can change jobs, go back to school, start a business, or even do something as ridiculous as going into politics. But one has that flexibility and you have the time. But senior citizens have neither the flexibility nor the time. I would not want to start judging what a senior citizen is. I do not believe 65 is a magic age—I have seen some very dynamic people who were in their mid-eighties and nineties. And I have seen others who had been in a tough production job on a line for 20 years, and who were really senior citizens much younger. But what is important to me is that we have removed the fear and restored dignity to those people.

Another thing which is important to people in those years, Mr. Speaker, is that they have seen under Liberal governments medical insurance plans built up, which means that a family is no longer devastated by the occurrence of an illness or an operation. We forget about that. We take these things for granted. It is true that they are costly, and we probably now have to worry about the cost of the delivery of health services, but I would much rather worry about that than their availability. I do not want to have to worry about people losing their life savings, their homes or their businesses. Losses like that absolutely destroy families, but that was part of every-day life in our society not many years ago. We have this as a base to our society in Canada, and I think that is particularly important.

Then there are those things of the spirit, and I mention this particularly because when the Minister of Finance was minister of Indian affairs and northern development he established more areas for national parks in Canada than had ever been established in the whole history of our country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Danson: That is a very special heritage for which we Canadians can be grateful. I come from Toronto, and I think of Algonquin Park, which is just 150 miles north of Toronto. I have often wondered who the politicians and civil servants were who set this preserve aside. It was about 100 years ago. It was just as remote—or perhaps more so—from populated centres then as the new national parks are now.

Mr. Darling: Don't forget it is in the paradise riding, my riding of Parry Sound-Muskoka.

Mr. Danson: That makes it even more beautiful. It joins Muskoka and Parry Sound. It is a beautiful place to which thousands and thousands of Canadians go weekly for recreation. There is a game preserve there. We are properly and carefully cropping the lumber there without destroying the natural environment. Some day, perhaps 100 years from now, I hope someone will stand up in this House and speak about Jean Chrétien. I have done some research on the Ontario public servants of that time under Sir Oliver Mowat, the premier at that time—obviously a Liberal premier—who had such foresight and sensitivity.

In addition,—and this is in the provincial field largely, but in the post-secondary school field it is certainly largely federal initiative—we have developed an education network. Perhaps there are several levels of government, but there is only one level of taxpayers. The schools we have now which we did not have ten or 15 years ago are quite incredible. I will not deal with the quality of education or the nature of it at this time, but the physical infrastructure is there. In addition, community colleges have been established. The CEGEPs in Quebec have given another dimension and another opportunity for our young people to obtain relevant educations. Rather than having Ph.D.s driving taxicabs, people can now learn skilled trades and become semi-professionals. Those people are extremely valuable.

There are community centres across the country which were started largely under our winter works programs. There is a quality of life in our large and small communities across the country. I know that every principal community in my constituency has an arena, a community centre, which got off the ground because of federal funds. Those are the social assets we have which we do not want to underrate. They are much better than they are in almost any other country in the world.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Danson: In the society we are developing, young people are growing up today, swelling our labour force and causing us temporary problems, even though we are creating more jobs than at any time in history. We are creating jobs at a rate higher than the rate in any other industrialized nation. Because of the baby boom—and we love them—people are having difficulty adjusting, but they are adjusting, and adjusting well. In my experience, both in my portfolio and in other work through the Katimavik program, I have seen young men and women who want challenge which is relevant to them. They are prepared to dig in and work hard. They are not much concerned about economic return. I do not mean they are unconcerned, but that is secondary to being busy and doing something relevant, to them. That is happening at this time.

I mentioned the industrial capacity which is developing and the innovation which is developing. In my department there are tremendous programs going. We are now spending more on capital equipment for defence than at any time previously in our history. We have the largest peace-time programs which have ever been engaged in by a federal government.

We are spending over $1 billion on long-range patrol aircraft, about a quarter of a billion dollars on armoured personnel carriers which are being built totally in London, Ontario, almost $200 million on Leopard tanks, about $2.3 billion on the new fighter aircraft which we are assessing at the present time and $1.6 billion for the first six ships under our new ship program. These are tremendous expenditures, but I think what Canadians realize all too little is that while we buy some of this equipment abroad, we also sell a great deal abroad. We are not in the business of producing heavy armaments, but we are involved in more sophisticated and important technology which we sell to other countries.

We buy from other countries, and other countries buy from us under defence-sharing agreements. I do not have precise figures with me, but we are very much in balance. Amounts vary from month to month and year to year. Sometimes we are ahead, and sometimes we are behind, but we drive very hard bargains.

I am more interested in the qualitative aspects of industrial benefits than I am in quantity. We are hopefully going to buy 150 aircraft. If one Canadian company turns out 150 sets of wings, when the contract ends, the plant closes down, its workers are out of work, and a community is perhaps decimated. I do not say we do not want that type of business, but we should either have it for the whole series of that aircraft or have something which we do better than anyone else, and competitively, rather than things for which we perhaps have to pay a premium, although premiums are sometimes well worth paying. Things we do which spin off far beyond our defence capability have a structural effect in our economy. That is why these billions of dollars which I am responsible for spending will be used strategically as leverage to get the type of industry which spins off in other than defence fields as well as defence fields.

The difficulty with defence-dependent industry is that defence expenditures rise and fall, and those industries rise and fall with them. That also often prevents the Minister of National Defence from making the best military decisions. Sometimes he has to make a decision to keep a plant going rather than to buy the best equipment. That has happened in our history before. The opportunities for innovation and for development which come from these programs are great indeed. This is enhanced by our competitive dollar, the opportunity dollar which we have now.

I think the level of our dollar is a real reflection of its value. I sometimes wish it was not called the dollar. I wish it was called a beaver or a maple leaf or something like that because it has a value, and we cannot pretend it does not. It reflects, primarily, our productive worth. Sometimes we price ourselves out of certain markets for various reasons. The present level of the dollar will price us back into certain markets, where we belong. Where should it settle? That does not really matter. I am not an economist. I think it should settle where it should settle, and intervention should take place only to keep an orderly market and to keep psychological considerations from impinging on our dollar. The lower level of our dollar creates job opportunities and encourages innovation, entrepreneurship, and competitiveness.

There are many other government support programs like the enterprise development programs, the Federal Business Development Bank, and the research and development incentives the Minister of Finance just introduced. There is the Export Development Corporation. All these programs back up the businessman and the entrepreneur who will create jobs in this country for those young people who want to get started.

Instead of the soul destroying gloom and doom we get from hon. members opposite, and the constant carping which makes Canadians lose confidence in themselves and which makes others outside Canada lose confidence in us, we should remember that we are one of the richest and strongest countries in the world. This irresponsible flip-lipping we get here and outside this place from day to day is what is destroying confidence in our dollar more than anything else. I think it is time for responsibility. Our Minister of Finance has demonstrated that with a very even-handed approach. He is interesting and charming, and he has a great deal of charisma. I happen to think he is one of the great Canadians, and so do most Canadians.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Danson: Now more than ever we need to build on the strengths we have. There are opportunities for the future, and we have to look at them with our heads up. We must keep our eyes on the horizon rather than looking down with our boots in the muck which is being raked up by hon. members opposite all the time.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

● (1722)

Mr. Danson: We need enthusiasm, which we as Canadians and Liberals have; we need determination, which we as Canadians and Liberals have. We must not be spooked by the doom sayers and soothsayers across the way or those who do not know where they are going, do not know what to do, and just sit there wringing their hands.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Danson: We need sound fiscal policies with our potential energy self-sufficiency and with a good industrial base, that is being strengthened, with a highly educated, sophisticated and skilled work force, with innovation, of which we need a great deal more and which this government is encouraging. We have a strong social base and we have freedom which is as great as that in any country in the world and greater than in most others. These are precious freedoms which we want preserved: freedom of the press, freedom of religion, freedom of speech, freedom in our courts, freedom in our political system. Nobody tampers with those. Try and tamper with any one of those, and anyone of us here would be prepared to lay down our lives for it. These we take for granted.

We live in a country of unparalleled beauty, diversity, and richness. Rather than be depressed in these times, I like to look for the opportunities which exist. Businessmen and young people know they exist, and I suspect even members of the opposition know they exist but do not want to admit it. They are so intent on trying to score political points each time they get up, each time they face a microphone or a camera, that we might destroy ourselves, our spirit, and lose our energy and enthusiasm for this great and beautiful country of ours.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, it is certainly a delight to follow the optimistic and enthusiastic Minister of National Defence (Mr. Danson) and I commend him on his remarks. We are all optimistic about the future of Canada and we have every confidence in it. It is because we are an optimistic people and we have so much going for us that even the present government cannot destroy the country, although it has done its best to do so during the past ten years. The minister stated that we are on the eve of one of the greatest upsurges ever. Certainly that is a true statement, because the upsurge will begin the day following the next federal election when a new government will be formed and the illustrious group opposite will find itself on this side of the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Darling: I would like to pay a special tribute to some members of parliament who will not be standing for re-election, such as our former leader, the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Stanfield), the former leader of the NDP, the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas), and other outstanding members who, for different reasons, are retiring or moving into other fields of endeavour. It might be a good idea at this time to say goodbye to a good many other members, especially on the opposite side of the House, who are not aware at present of the fact that they will not be back here. Many of them are really nice guys and gals, but in order to defeat this Trudeau government there are many nice members of parliament on the government side who will have to go. Therefore, we will wave a fond farewell to them at this time.

Again I want to commend the Minister of National Defence for bringing in new equipment for our armed forces, equipment which is now on order and will be delivered shortly, but none too soon because much of the stuff was hanging together with bailing wire, and so on. So, more power to him, but it should have been done before. I say this having had the privilege of serving as a member on the committee to which the minister answers.

I should like to quote another statistic, and again I am delighted the minister is still here. He gave us a glowing account of what is coming, and I am not disputing it, but I would have liked to have placed on the record at this time a glowing account of the number of personnel in the armed forces, which at present stands at around 80,000. Back in 1968 when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) took office, the number stood at 102,000. We live in precarious times and, with unemployment as high as it is, it seems to me that the number should be closer to 100,000. I believe that serious consideration should be given to increasing the number of our armed forces personnel.

It appears that there have been glowing reports about the wonderful Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien). I agree that he is a great guy and a fine man who has contributed greatly, but he is in a tough position as Minister of Finance. He can be the most engaging person in the world and he can be most charming. I have had the privilege of sitting on the committee which questioned him when he was minister of Indian affairs and northern development, and I give him full marks for his performance. But now he is in the big league as Minister of Finance and, as has been said time and time again, if he coughs or sneezes in the wrong way, it can cost us a lot of money. He holds a very important position. I see that his chair is vacant at present, but I am glad to see that his parliamentary secretary is coming into the House now. I ask him: if his minister is such a great guy, why are we in such a heck of a financial mess?

It appears that the minister is not so fast on the skateboard as he would like to be because, in spite of his budget statement a week ago on Monday, he is pursued by inflation and unemployment. The latest increases, which followed closely on the heels of the minister's latest attempt to restore a measure of confidence in this country, are a source of great concern and worry to everyone across this country. The continued decline in the dollar is cause for alarm. All Canadians should be reminded of the fact that even when the government tries to zero in and put all its resources behind one problem, the results are far from encouraging.

The latest inflation statistics will surely drive home the fact that Canadians all across the country will have to face a lower standard of living. With wage increases limited to 6 per cent, prices will continue to rise rather than wages.

I was pleased to see the reduction in the sales taxes and I hope this will provide a spur to consumer spending which the economy needs. However, I am disappointed that the reduction is only a temporary one. Six months are not a long enough time to provide a strong and lasting stimulus to the economy. Moreover, the reduction will end at one of the most economically difficult times of the year when unemployment is reaching a crest and the approaching winter will force the cost of living upwards, as happens pretty well every year.

The reduction in the sales tax and the new options available under the registered retirement savings plan will not help the lower income groups in any significant way as these people are not likely to be able to afford to rush out and buy high price items which will be most affected by the tax reduction. It is also true that the benefit of the sales tax reduction will be swept away quickly by the continuing high inflation in most provinces. When the sales tax cuts end in either six or nine months, prices will jump up again. The truth is that the effect of sales tax cuts on inflation will be temporary. Even with the cuts, inflation will still average at least 7 per cent in 1978.

Rising inflation has forced all of us to re-evaluate the worth of the dollar in relation to consumer goods, but the continued decline has made us take an even more serious look at the value of the Canadian dollar. In 1971 terms, our dollar is now worth only 59 cents.

In 1968 when the present Prime Minister assumed the reins of government, our dollar bought twice as much as it buys on our present market. Perhaps I should not say "government", considering the disgraceful record of departed ministers. In the past ten years the purchasing power of our dollar has declined while the government has allowed unemployment and inflation to rise almost unchecked. On the same topic of the dollar, I find it particularly distressing that investor confidence in Canada is so low. Why is that so? The present government has created an economic climate that investors are wary of and that even Canadians worry about. We have all seen the increasing number of newspaper and magazine reports about the growing numbers of Canadians who have taken their money and flown south or at least across the border where they feel it is safer. The political and economic climate of Canada is not conducive to investor confidence right now. That must be changed, and it must be changed quickly before it gets worse. The government must adopt an economic strategy for Canada, instead of the series of half measures and patch-up jobs which have been handed to us. At the very least, Canadians deserve that.

The estimates of the amount of money going to the United States are astronomical. When I was out west with the housing committee two or three years ago, because of red tape and the many other obstacles, real estate men and companies were saying that as much as $1.4 billion had been committed to building apartments, housing, etc. in the United States. I have mentioned before that investors could go across to the United States, and with a minimum amount of red tape they could start a subdivision or an apartment building in a matter of months, whereas in this country holdups because of planning and other things can last as long as six or seven years. I am not even considering other investments, such as in the state of Florida which has been so attractive to Canadians. We have heard the suggestion that Canadian Francophones have decided that Florida is a much better climate for their money, and millions of dollars have been poured into that state, much to the detriment of the Canadian economy.

It is not surprising that the budget failed to predict the unemployment rate for the rest of the year. It did not dare to, in light of the most recent statistics: 38,000 more unemployed in the month of March alone, making a grand total of 1,045,000. The seasonally adjusted rate of unemployed rose to 8.6 per cent, up from 8.3 per cent. I am certainly skeptical, as I am sure many other people are, about the actual number of jobs which will result from the proposals set forth in the budget of the Minister of Finance. It is regrettable indeed that the budget did virtually nothing to zero in on what is certainly the most serious problem facing this country today. It is singularly disappointing that the government saw fit to formulate proposals to aid the economy without raising any levers to alleviate the very unacceptable level of unemployment we are now faced with. The government has acted irresponsibly in choosing not to deal directly with this problem.

To pass off crisis unemployment levels as partly due to the increased numbers of women and young people on the labour market is merely an attempt to avoid the root of such a serious problem. The government knows full well that the reason there are more women working now than ever before is that they have to supplement the incomes of their husbands in an effort to keep pace with the spiralling cost of living. The problem of youth unemployment is especially crucial, yet these people who more than any other group are affected by high unemployment levels were left out of the picture a week ago Monday night. Unemployment is the most crucial economic and social problem confronting us today, and yet this government does not seem to realize that.

Consumer spending is still weak. Canadians save more money per capita than anyone else. Surely that is an indication of the perception that Canadians have of their economic future. Perhaps hon. members on the other side of the House will say that I am spreading doom and gloom, as the hon. Minister of National Defence said. We on this side of the House are telling it as it is. There is no purpose served in glossing things over and saying the rainbow is just over the mountain. That is quite true, but how high is the mountain, and how far away is it? We on this side of the House are telling it as it is and being accused of spreading doom and gloom. I am far from being a pessimist, but if this government remains in power much longer, Canada will be certainly heading down the drain.

During his statement the Minister of Finance noted that the economic growth potential will not be achieved in 1978. This means Canada will have failed to achieve its growth potential for five straight years. This should not be the case, not in a country such as Canada, where the sheer magnitude of our resources and people demand that we should be one of the leading nations of the world.

It is my belief the government's wasteful and exorbitant spending habits have dragged this country into the economic abyss we now find ourselves in. The federal government now overspends per Canadian as much as they spent per Canadian in 1968. The Minister of Finance has predicted a $10.9 billion budgetary deficit for the fiscal year 1979. Hon. members who sit on the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs realize that that amount is always added to by supplementary estimates which come in because of over-expenditures that have accumulated during the final part of the fiscal year. That $10.9 billion amounts to an incredible $462 for every Canadian. In the fiscal year 1968 total budgetary spending per Canadian was only $488.

I was particularly impressed with the Minister of Finance's confession of wrongdoing on the part of the government. It is a true statement that confession is good for the soul. I should like to refer to a short excerpt from that confession which reads as follows:

> We all came to expect too much of the economy. Governments increased their spending too quickly.

Those final words are fascinating, but what I find even more remarkable is that while the government painfully admits this, there is almost nothing in the budget to make a significant reduction in government spending. If there are no changes in personal or corporate income taxes, or in the federal sales tax imposed at the manufacturing level and built into many prices, it is because of the government's record spending and its reluctance or inability to curb such practice.

Confidence in Canada has sunk slowly in the past ten years. It must be revived. I suppose that is the revival the hon. Minister of National Defence spoke about for the future, which of course will follow the next election. I doubt that can be done by those who sit across the floor. How can they accomplish that when it is their deplorable spending habits which have compounded greatly the economic problems of the country? Their spending habits have increased the estimates for 1978-79 to four times the amount of the estimates of 1968-69, just ten years ago.

This country, Mr. Speaker, is in dire need of new policies and practices. This country needs a little spring cleaning. Possibly, a June spring cleaning is what we can look forward to. We need a little fresh air. Only then will the economy begin to recover.

The minister is talking about hot air. I am going to tell hon. members that the Liberal government has had this very problem over the past ten years, and even more so in recent years. This government has plunged this country into debt, and that cannot be excused. Canada's debt to the rest of the world stood at $106 billion at the end of 1977, up 10.4 per cent from a year earlier. It is important to remember that the service to the debt must be paid by taxes which amount to $894 per person employed during 1977, up from $792 in 1976. The government budget tabled this spring indicates another increase of more than 10 per cent during 1978.

This government has had their chance to give this country what it needs, a budget to restore confidence. Instead we have half measures with an election twist. A budget should seek to reassure. What we have witnessed is a government that has exhausted itself and can no longer provide solutions to the country's economic ills.

I was pleased to hear, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) speaking earlier today. I had the privilege, and have had the privilege for a number of years, of serving on the urban affairs committee. In fact, the committee met this morning to discuss the estimates of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. During the discussion, I was very interested to quiz the minister to find out how successful the CHIP program, the insulation program for the other eight provinces in Canada, was, and I was able to get the following information which may be of great interest to my colleagues on all sides of the House.

As most members are aware, Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia have had a plan in effect for approximately a year and a half up to the present time. This plan was much more generous in that it was not taxable. The grant under the plan goes as high as $500, and these are the figures and the applications that have been received by the ministry: In Prince Edward Island, of the 20,000 applications received 16,000 grants have been approved and the amount of $5.5 million has been paid out. In Nova Scotia there have been 97,000 applications received of which 55,000 were approved and $19.5 million paid out. In the eight other provinces there has been a total of only 20,435 applications received, of which 15,000 were approved and only $3.3 million paid out.

I will concede, Mr. Speaker, that that program has been in effect only since September, but it has not been as successful as the ministry expected because it has not been as generous. If I may repeat, in the other eight provinces the grant is added to income, and those who are in the middle income tax brackets, and so on, find that it is of very little use. The other thing is that that $500 pays only up to two thirds the cost of the material. Of course, a good many smaller homes which might be able to insulate will get only $333. I suggested to the minister that if $500 is spent for insulation there should be no percentage deduction.

On Friday the hon. member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mrs. Pigott), who is our critic on housing, mentioned how important housing is to the people of Canada. Certainly, that is an understatement, if anything. We on this side of the House are very, very concerned about the many Canadians who do not have proper and adequate housing, or even affordable housing, although we know that there are a great many homes available for sale if you have the money. That is the catch. It is most important that housing be made available for those in lower income brackets. Again, I recommended, as I have for years, that tax on tax is unfair, that real estate taxes on a home should be deductible from income tax up to a certain amount. At the time I suggested $500. That could probably go as high as $700 or $800 today. Once again I repeated it and recommended that the minister submit it to cabinet.

Another thing that this party has recommended is that mortgage interest payments should be deductible, as they are in the United States. A great many people are finding that the cost of carrying a home mortgage is crippling, and they are just not able to make ends meet.

It has been a privilege, Mr. Speaker, to add a few comments on this, the last budget of the Trudeau government before they go down to defeat in the next federal election, which, I presume, we will hear about in the immediate future.

Hon. A. C. Abbott (Minister of State (Small Business)): I want to say, Mr. Speaker, what a privilege and pleasure it is to rise this afternoon and to follow my hon. friend from Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling), who gave us some interesting if defective comments. He reflected on some opinions that I am afraid his normal good sense waived in favour of repeating some of the points that we have heard these last days on the budget debate by the variety of financial critics that the Tory party possess. As the days go by, however, more and more of their number have chosen to stand down from the fray. Many of them, as has been said earlier, will be missed, but I can think of some who might go and not be missed.

The other day I was up in Parry Sound-Muskoka, and a very beautiful part of the world it is. I had the pleasure of meeting with a number of small businessmen and a number of Liberals, an ever-growing number of Liberals up there.

Mr. Darling: Not growing fast enough.

Mr. Abbott: No, there is not enough of them yet, but I have every expectation that by election day there will be a good many more. While I do not suppose there is a more popular member here in the House than the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka, I am afraid, from the enthusiastic warmth that I received there, that he is going to be enjoying more of that beautiful country than he is able to today.

The problem that we have seen over the last few days, both in question period and in the House on the budget debate, has been a worrying, depressing attempt by the opposition, desperate and hungry as they are for political power, to debase this budget. Languishing in opposition, as the Canadian people have justifiably seen fit to let them for so many years, they have exhibited those tendencies that people tend to develop in desperation and have tended to look at the Canadian economy not as loyal, patriotic, positive thinking people who should know better, but as opposition critics who are seizing every opportunity in an attempt to denigrate the accomplishments not simply of this government, but, in the eyes of the world, the accomplishments of the Canadian economy, the Canadian worker and the Canadian people.

The opposition have attempted by every method that they can develop to lower the esteem in which this country is held. I am not suggesting that all our problems are occasioned by opposition criticism, but it is very clear that they render no service to this country and no service to their own party when they attempt to mislead parliament and the Canadian people about the kind of shape the economy has been in over the ten years of this government.

I think it is essential, if anybody is to speak in this budget debate in order to counter this kind of inflammatory, libellous and false accusation that the opposition has been marshalling in the last few days, to refer to the period from 1964 to 1975. It will be seen that our rate of economic growth was exceeded only by Japan. Our job creation in a country with one of the world's fastest growing labour markets was the best of all industrialized countries.

Between 1967 and 1976, Canada's gross national product in constant dollars grew by 53 per cent, just double the 26 per cent U.S. growth in g.n.p. Our real disposable income rose by 73 per cent versus 33 per cent in the United States, while our inflation rate stayed steady with theirs. Without belabouring statistics, I should add that in the eight short years from 1967-75, Canadian productivity in our goods producing industries increased from 65 per cent to 85 per cent of U.S. productivity levels. For durable goods, the productivity gap narrowed all the way from 30 per cent to 2 per cent.

There is no question that in Canada we faltered economically in the past two years. In part, as the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) told the Economic Club of New York recently, it was because we became the victims of our own real income, and therein, as all of us know, lies the psychology of inflation. We tended to forget about that still remaining productivity gap, demanding and granting wage settlements that were harmful to our exports and made imported goods more attractive. By 1975, wage settlements averaged 22 per cent. Average Canadian hourly earnings in manufacturing exceeded the U.S. average by 7 per cent at that time.

We had to take drastic medicine, and did in late 1975 with an anti-inflation program of price and income control. The controls, now coming off, are accompanied by strong federal efforts to reduce government spending and intervention in the affairs of the private sector. It is a gradual road back. But now our rates of wage and cost increases have subsided to reasonable and competitive levels. Our record of productive time lost through industrial disputes has shifted from one of the worst in the industrialized world in 1975 to one of the best in 1977. Unemployment remains unacceptably high, but jobs are once again being created very rapidly—more than 280,000 new jobs between February 1977 and February 1978. Our historical average is 250,000 jobs each year.

The outlook for investment is improving. As the Conference Board in Canada has noted, new orders for machinery and equipment are just one sign that the base for industrial capital investment in Canada is firming up. We look to 5 per cent real growth this year and a rate of inflation declining by year end to 6 per cent. The recent annual report of the Bank of Canada commented as follows:

> Wage and salary increases have declined sharply from the 'extraordinary levels' of two to three years ago, and 'there is today evidence in many quarters of more realistic attitudes towards increases in money incomes'.

I have taken these few moments to state what I hope is a straightforward message, Mr. Speaker, and, I think, a fair one. It underlines the comments of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) which I think are testimony to the responsible nature of his budget. The opposition can say what they like. They can draw conclusions from their own statistics and paint a picture of gloom and doom. But the fact is that this country has had ten years not simply of good government, but ten years of real prosperity.

I have not much time left and there are a number of things I want to speak about, particularly the budget brought down on April 10 by the Minister of Finance. I think it is also important to take not simply that budget when talking about the area I want to spend some time on—that is, small business and the importance of taxation to small business—but to take the preceding budget and the taxation apparatus that Canadians enjoy today. I suggest that hon. members who wish to consult those who are knowledgeable in this area. I could cite names such as John Bulloch of the Canadian Federation of Independent Business and other experts. They will find that no country in the world has a better taxation system or one that gives greater advantage to small businessmen.

I want to take a few moments after dinner to go through certain of these items in some detail. Before I get on to this section of my remarks, I wonder if I could call it six o'clock and return after dinner to discuss this important area.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed we call it six o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair until 8 p.m.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

● (2002)

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. At six o'clock the Minister of State (Small Businesses) had the floor.

Mr. Abbott: Mr. Speaker, before the dinner hour I made a few comments which I hope will correct some misunderstandings and misapprehensions which exist. I can see some hon. members opposite are still in doubt; some of them take a little longer to understand the facts than others. I attempted on authoritative grounds to show that ten years of Liberal government since 1968, far from being the kind of dismal years that have been reflected upon by the opposition, have indeed been years of great growth, great prosperity and great creation of job opportunities.

Unlike the Tory opposition desperately craving power at the risk of distorting the facts, I have been citing factual evidence to support my proposition. I suggest it is an ill-service to the country for the opposition to take the kind of tack they have been taking. I also said, and again I suggest authoritatively, on the basis of any knowledgeable, fair-minded observer, including those in the small business community that have reason to know, such as Mr. John Bulloch of the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, that there is no country in the world today which has better tax incentives for small business than Canada.

An hon. Member: What about the United States?

Mr. Abbott: I include in that the United States.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. The hon. Minister of State has the floor and I suggest we all listen.

Mr. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Your judgments are always good but I strongly recommend that one.

In order to supplement this statement of fact I would like to spend a few moments relating some of these tax incentives, not simply those of the recent budget but those of the more recent past.

Of course, the most important of these is the low rate of corporate tax and the dividend gross-up and credit. As hon. members are aware, the small incorporated businessman with income below $150,000 per year or retained earnings of up to $750,000 pays some 20 to 21 percentage points below that of the larger business.

In addition, under the new system of the dividend gross-up and credit an individual who is the recipient of earnings from an incorporated small business, under the small business tax rate, enjoys a substantially lower marginal income tax rate than that of wage earner, salary earner or person earning dividends from a larger business. For instance, a taxpayer with $30,000 of income pays only 26 per cent on additional income received from a small incorporated business. A wage or salary or unincorporated business income would bear a 46 per cent marginal tax rate. The high income taxpayers also enjoy a significant tax deferral on their income from incorporated small businesses. As long as the income is retained in a corporation it bears the low corporation rate of 25 per cent. It is only upon the eventual distribution that the taxpayer pays; then in the case of the high income earner it would be substantially above those at the corporate level. So that there is a distinct saving for those choosing to invest in small businesses in this form.

In addition, in the 1977 budget there was permitted employee stock option liberalization. This provides that employees of a small business can receive options, and it is only when they sell their stock that they pay tax and then it is at the capital gains rate rather than at the higher rate of tax they would pay if it was in the form of earnings.

Family farms, both incorporated and unincorporated, may now be transferred to other members of the family free from tax, whereas in the past this has not been the case. Again, this is a measure most beneficial to those who have an interest in family farms and I believe hon. members opposite who take an interest in agriculture are gratified by this measure.

An hon. Member: We shall take the credit.

Mr. Abbott: Take the credit if you will but at least acknowledge the benefit.

Another great benefit which is available under this beneficent regime which has been so widely criticized is in the area of income splitting among family members in corporations. Family members can now be employed in an incorporated business and receive incomes. Anyone familiar with this situation will know that members of a family who own or share in an enterprise can now receive income from it at substantially lower tax rates than they would pay if they were receiving it as one income from the business, as is the case with an unincorporated business.

There are a number of other benefits, such as the elimination of federal sales taxes for small producers of handicrafts; the deferral of capital gains on voluntary sales of fixed assets, thereby allowing firms to relocate without the penalty of taxation; the option offered to venture capital investors to choose whether to be taxed on a capital gains basis or on the basis of ordinary income. An amendment to Part IV dealing with refundable tax removes the hindrance imposed on corporate investors taking a minority interest in other businesses. There is assistance with respect to metric conversion by tradesmen and retailers. There is a 3 per cent inventory allowance, and a provision for making expenditures on research and development admissible for tax credit. An increase in the dividend tax credit has been made and in the field of capital gains the present $1,000 exemption has been extended.

I have not covered all the ground, Mr. Speaker, but I have listed examples which go a long way to back up the proposition I have advanced, namely that far from having suffered from a system which is inferior to that in other countries the small businessman in Canada, as is acknowledged by small businessmen and experts in this field, enjoys tax benefits superior to those in any other country in the world.

In my opinion, the Minister of Finance has added to these various incentives by the most direct and positive measure which could be carried out in the circumstances facing him by applying a direct reduction in the sales tax of 3 per cent. The obvious benefit of this is that it places purchasing power directly in the hands of the consumer, thereby creating an incentive for the consumer to spend money at the local retail level. So far from describing the tax system of this country as detrimental to small business, far from regarding the budget as having done nothing for small business, the combination of this budget and the budget of March, 1977, together with the tax apparatus which has been set up in the past, goes a long way to adding to incentives for small business people to set up business.

Nobody, least of all myself, suggests there is not or will not be room in the future for further improvements. I think all of us could, in inventive moments, think of areas in which improvements in the tax system could take place. Perhaps modifications in the capital gains tax division, the possible creation of small business investment companies which could take advantage of the tax system and draw capital for investment in small business are good examples. There is the Bank Act which the hon. member opposite speaks of.

Mr. Whiteway: When it comes.

Mr. Abbott: Well, when it is brought in I am sure hon. members will find that it, too, contains measures which will be beneficial to the country and beneficial to the small business community and to new entries in the banking field.

We who are working very hard in this area of small business need not stop, however, at describing the benefits under the tax system, happy and progressive though it is. There have been a number of other improvements which have done a great deal to give heart to the small business community. One of the most important concerns the Small Businesses Loans Act.

Mr. Darling: Oh!

Mr. Abbott: The hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling) says "Oh!" I can assure him that when I was up in his constituency the other day businessmen in Bracebridge were delighted to hear about the improvement in that act.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Abbott: The legislation was amended in the spring to raise the limit to $75,000. Recently the interest rate was amended. Small businessmen are now encouraged to find they will be able to borrow money under the act to expand their businesses, and these amendments will really do a great deal. I have spoken to representatives of the chartered banks and they have assured me that this act has hitherto not been an inducement. Yet last year, despite the fact they claimed they lost money, they lent as much as $80 million. So I believe that with the improvements in the legislation we shall now see a real volume of business being done to help the small business community.

I turn to the activities of the Federal Business Development Bank. Here is an institution which has served the Canadian businessman well. It now has nearly $2 billion in loans outstanding, having lent over $300 million last year. Its affairs are being conducted by an aggressive new management with new ideas, and I believe that this bank, too, will prove of even greater assistance to the small business community than it has in the past.

We also have the CASE program under the direction of the Federal Business Development Bank. Here is an important program which is being offered to the small business community. Almost 2,000 consultants drawn mainly from retired business people are advising at low or nominal fees and showing small businessmen how to improve their management techniques. Dun and Bradstreet, a firm specializing in bankruptcies, indicates that 90 per cent of bankruptcies are caused by poor management. Failure among small businessmen is all too frequently brought about by a lack of understanding of management techniques. The Government of Canada, through the CASE program, is bringing assistance to them which is unavailable in any other form at the price.

In addition, we have taken an important new initiative in moving toward the reduction of the paper burden by the creation of an office in government whose purpose is to reduce the paper burden on small business.

Mr. Whiteway: Hurrah for that!

Mr. Abbott: I am glad to hear that expression of enthusiastic support. I suggest that progress will be made, that we shall shortly see some demonstrable results from this program and that there will be far fewer forms to be filled in by business people and a great deal less government interference with their daily work.

I am sorry there is so little time available to me in which to give a fuller resumé of all the things this government has tried to do for the small businessman. Recently we opened a small business centre in the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce staffed by a knowledgeable group of people who are there when visiting businessmen come to Ottawa. They will not only tell them where to go; they will help them with their problems, assist them in making appointments and give them advice with regard to government programs.

In addition, this small business centre has a "hot line" which anybody in Canada can call. The number is Zenith 03200. Anybody can call and get an answer which does not pass the buck but which really gives a response. I urge the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka to call that number when he gets home, to see if I am right.

While many other governments would sit back and ask who could do more, this government is not prepared to rest on its laurels, deserving as it may be. It is not prepared simply to acknowledge that in the last ten years Canada has enjoyed a growth and prosperity unequalled by any other country in the world with the exception of Japan.

We are now looking at a number of positive incentives such as the one I mentioned, the creation of small business investment companies and the setting up of venture development centres to help small businessmen who want to get into business find people with money.

The other day I sent a couple of officials up to Whitehorse, where they spent three days because we are very concerned that not just the great corporations which are making steel pipe or making valves, etc., receive the benefits of the pipeline. We are interested in seeing that the small business community also enjoys the benefits. When those officials returned they advised me that there is a great deal of enthusiasm in that community, and I believe we can do much to help them.

In addition to these positive, beneficial and progressive ideas and programs, responsible programs were enunciated in the budget by the Minister of Finance who, notwithstanding difficult times, accepted his responsibility, delivered a sober, constructive and responsible budget, and yet offered Canadians incentives.

What are we getting from the desperate crowd of power-hungry politicians opposite, who crave above all else to sit on this side of the House, probably by their desperation and irresponsibility permanently denying themselves that privilege forever?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Abbott: What we get from the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) are reckless suggestions that they would cut taxes by up to $3 billion. They would restrain government spending and do a lot of other things at the same time.

Mr. Whiteway: You are right.

Mr. Abbott: The hon. member says I am right. He is the only one who believes it because the Canadian people are not going to buy that kind of rubbish. The Canadian people will listen to that kind of irresponsibility and ask themselves whether they are satisfied to hear "Joe Who?"—the Leader of the Opposition—enunciate what he is going to do for the economy when he cannot even secure a seat in his own home town. Canadians will ask themselves whether they should listen to a man who is trying to urge upon his colleagues that same sense of irresponsibility. His colleagues are a feeble army of financial critics who are, to serve their own ends, attempting to foster in the minds of the Canadian people an apprehension that this country is going down the drain.

No, Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the people of this country will consider the responsible statements of the Minister of Finance. They will see where this country stands after ten years of Liberal government, and I suggest they will reject the gloom and doom we hear from the opposition and once again demonstrate at the polls just where they think the Tory party should reside.

Mr. Frank Hamilton (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the minister's assurance that our banking system will now use the new Small Businesses Loans Act, because in the past it and the Farm Credit Act have been major stumbling blocks. Our banking system has been hesitant to use those two acts.

If I understood the minister correctly, he said that last year some $80 million was lent under the Small Businesses Loans Act. At the maximum rate of $75,000 per businessman, that amounts only to just over 1,000 loans, so I think that is not a record to be proud of.

It seems obvious that this parliament is winding down. The sooner we go to the country, the better, because this government has almost overwhelmed Canada with its permissiveness, disunity and economic incompetence in the past decade. The budget indicates no basic change in the philosophy of this government. Generally speaking, if you tax something, you get less of it; if you subsidize something, you tend to get more of it. The approach of this government is still the same. It continues to tax work, growth, investment, employment, savings and productivity and to subsidize no work, consumption and debt. Ten years is enough!

Ten years ago we were a nation proud of our heritage, confident in our capabilities and purpose and sure of our direction and destiny in world affairs. It was this confidence and purpose which held together our widely scattered provinces and racial groups. Today, however, this spirit of national unity and purpose has given way to doubts, fears and uncertainties in every province.

Even ten short years ago there were few Canadians who were not convinced that Canada had the capacity, resources and will to survive as a strong and independent North American nation. Any suggestions of separation or of joining with the United States would have been ridiculed. Indeed, we assumed that the rest of the world envied the strength of our judicial structure, the soundness of our banking system and economic policies and the integrity and reputation of our police forces. Our stability, respect for law and order and educational standards were all matters of great pride.

However, in the span of only a few years much of this solid structure has crumbled, and we now find ourselves groping and wondering just what has happened so suddenly. Canadians are weary of inflation, bureaucracy, political scandals and the false promises of our leaders. They are tired of the shopworn government we have which no longer commands respect. People generally are sick of the new morality which seems to have something in it to offend everyone.

[Mr. Abbott.]

What are the answers, and is a cure possible? If we continue this downhill slide while at the same time having resources of all kinds, we are certainly headed for an ultimate bust if we do not learn a few simple lessons. The picture may be bleak, but it is not hopeless.

Canada is one of the wealthiest nations on earth, yet we look with envy on the Arabs. We over-react to the significance of their energy wealth. Certainly they have oil, and lots of it, but they are lacking in many resources, particularly the human resources which we have in Canada.

In Canada we, too, have oil and natural gas. We also have tremendous forests, agricultural reserves, coal, iron ore, nickel, lead, uranium; you name it. And probably the greatest wealth of all, not often thought about, is our water. Imagine what the Middle East would give for an ample supply of fresh water. The Arabian countries have lots of oil, but they are short of welders, electricians, carpenters, engineers, chemists and pipe fitters. We have them in abundance, and it is this great Canadian resource of skilled people that we have to take advantage of.

The Japanese have virtually no resources. All they really have going for them are about 90 million workers who have some incentive to work. Imagine what our agricultural producers and small business people could do if they could just have a tax-free kitty to put a few dollars into in good years, to be drawn upon in poor years.

We have to upgrade the resources which leave this country. The natural gas which goes south to the United States comes back in the form of plastic. Wood from our forests goes south and across the Pacific and comes back as furniture or plywood. Our coal and iron ore which go to Japan come back as Toyotas. Probably half of the goods purchased by our overtaxed workers is made elsewhere, from coal, oil, natural gas, wood or other materials, extracted from this country.

In order to upgrade our raw materials we must have a climate to encourage investment in Canadian manufacturing. Since the end of the World War II we have visibly lost strength and status among the world's more powerful industrial nations. We have tended to concentrate on redistributing the wealth we have rather than creating new wealth.

We may well look at Germany's economic miracle after World War II. They proceeded on the basis that it was easier to give everyone a larger slice out of a bigger cake than to gain anything by fighting over the division of a smaller cake. The German government did three things: the first was to abolish state planning and end price controls; second, they established freedom for the consumer to buy what he likes and recognize his freedom to work with or without union membership as a basic right of every citizen; third, they encouraged greater productivity of goods to help bring down prices. They established a 48-hour work week and overtime wages were made tax free.

We cannot find a solution in Canada by still more spending and more borrowing for social services and less individual incentive. We cannot serve long term unemployment through more welfare because it will only bring another generation into being as wards of the Crown. Our problems will not be solved outside this country. The job is internal and the unity of our country will never be secured with a sick economy.

So is it any wonder that our people are bitter when we see American TV ads for automobiles which are $2,000 cheaper than our automobiles? It is particularly irritating when a good number of people realize that the automobile in question was manufactured in Canada. Home appliances are offered at substantially lower prices in the United States. Many U.S. models are identical to Canadian models built in Canada by the same company with headquarters in the U.S. Housing prices are much higher in Canada. Also, mortgage interest rates at time are more than double here, and they are not tax deductible as they are in the U.S. Higher and higher personal income taxes required to pay for social programs all add to this frustration.

One of our real problems in Canada has been the failure of our federal government to bargain properly with the public sector. Salary scales have gone completely out of control, putting undue pressure on the private sector to equal the wage gains of government employees.

However, I believe the attitude in Canada is changing and that we are going to recognize that a restoration of the incentive system is really the only way to bring about prosperity. We should be using our energy surplus and our great natural resources to negotiate bilateral trade agreements with the United States in particular, with Japan and the European Economic Community, to promote substantial growth in the manufacturing sector in this country.

It does not seem unreasonable, if we agree to export several hundred million cubic feet of natural gas to the United States to assist in their gas shortage situation, if we ask that some of the export be in the form of manufactured products derived from Canadian natural gas. Indications are the United States is willing to discuss such an agreement. The United States being our principal trading partner, this is the logical place to start.

One of the fictions we have been living under for the past decade, and it is a most insidious one, is that our political rights guarantee equality in all things. This has come to mean equality not only at the starting line but at the finish line as well. Well, I just do not believe it. We should all have equality, not only at the starting line, but while the race is on. The guarantee should be freedom—freedom to achieve or to fail, freedom to make the most of every talent and ability we have, and freedom to run the race as best we can. Finally, we should have freedom to receive the rewards of that effort. We need a change in policy, attitudes and outlook, a new Canada with a new government.

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have this opportunity to speak out and express my opinion on the budget, especially in these hard times. Mr. Speaker, this budget must be considered in light of the present economic and political situation. No budget can be made in a vacuum, without regard for the reality of the day. I would like to consider some blatant examples of the way the government persists in giving everything to the rich and nothing to the poor.

But first I would like to comment on the 2 per cent provincial sales tax rebate that the government has proposed. Once again it is the low income earner who will foot the bill because the government will have to take this money somewhere or else transfer it to the already heavy debt. Furthermore, the government should have offered solutions that come under its jurisdiction and not act on behalf of the provinces. I am not against federal aid in a sense, but that should only occur after certain other measures are taken such as lowering the federal tax, increasing the basic exemption from $2,700 to at least $4,000, the government should also have increased the excise tax on products we could easily produce ourselves here in Canada. With regard to the controversy that opposes the Quebec government to that in Ottawa, to my mind, having a protectionist policy is not turning everything upside down. I feel the proposal of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) was not adapted to the needs in Quebec. Hardly any automobiles are manufactured there and a 2 per cent reduction on that product would not have helped the province. The last budget proves that this government is unable to apply measures that take into consideration the particular needs of the provinces generally.

I should now like to discuss the amounts earmarked for research and development. The new tax credits the government proposes for R & D are another example of inadequate solutions to current problems. The government wants to allow companies to deduct 50 per cent of their additional expenditures on R & D. Applied research especially is involved here, as new technologies are wanted to improve existing products. However, those new tax credits favour big business which already enjoys the benefit of other government measures. But nothing is being done to help independent researchers. The situation of the researcher in Canada is unacceptable. Allow me to quote a paragraph from the article by Margaret Munro, published in the Ottawa Citizen on April 10, 1978, on the lack of efficient government assistance to research, and I quote:

[English]

This sort of unexpected oscillation is not only destroying Canada's medical research community but it's costing the taxpayer millions of dollars. A researcher spends six months setting up his lab and the next thing you know he loses his grant, he says.

It is truly unbelievable, Mr. Speaker, that a researcher should have to live in financial and material poverty in Canada. It is also unbelievable that in his budget the Minister of Finance did not provide concrete measures to help research and development in hospitals and universities.

I would like to quote some questions submitted by Dr. John Kucharczyk, executive secretary of scientific policies of the Canadian Federation of Biological Societies, to my colleague the hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Laprise):

[English]

Is the Canadian neglect of scientific research more serious in some sectors, i.e. universities, than in others? Is the neglect concentrated in particular areas, i.e. social sciences and natural sciences?

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, we of the Social Credit Party of Canada say that the measures put forward in the budgets last year and this year do not meet the real needs of Canadians. These measures tend to favour research and development through tax deductions. This is effective for the government in office because it attracts favours and election funds from large companies. This explains the cuts which were made to the funds allocated to medical research at the university level. Given the shortsightedness of Liberal members, the government hastens to tell the people that funds earmarked for pure research done mainly in universities should be cut to increase the funds allocated to applied or industrial research.

Another question read as follows, and I quote:

● (2042)

[English]

Your party is on record as favouring an increase in R & D investment in the public and private sector from the current level of less than 1 per cent of the gross national product to 2.5 per cent of the GNP. What effect do you believe that an increase in Canadian R & D would have on the nation's economy?

We reply that the most obvious effect of research is the greater technological and consequently economic independence from neighbouring countries, especially the United States. Research is the only way to make our industries more competitive on the international market. Moreover, this will promote the hiring of more employees in research laboratories. From a medical point of view, it is a known fact that research improves the health of the population who can then have more productive activities.

Finally, only research and its effects can bring a final solution to the great problems of our times, such as unemployment, inflation, control over Canada's 200 mile zone and the protection of our environment. If the minister has understood what we have just said, he will agree that research and development can bring solutions to our economic problems, whether in the area of agriculture, of pulp and paper or elsewhere.

I would now like to say a few words about our debt. Another one of the false solutions proposed by the minister in his budget is the debt. We must wonder if the minister is aware of the definiton of debt. The Larousse dictionary gives one and it is not necessary to be Minister of Finance to understand it. At page 313 of the Larousse dictionary, we find the following definition: Something owed, an obligation. Mr. Speaker, we have an obligation of more than $11 billion. The debt for each Canadian worker amounts to $10,600. Every newborn in Canada owes this amount from the date of his birth.

Last Thursday, during question period, there was reference to the sales tax quarrel between Quebec and Ottawa. My colleague from Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) asked the Minister of Finance if he could use the Bank of Canada to create new credits to increase the money supply. The minister replied that he had looked into the social credit theories as early as 1963 and that he was convinced that he was right to oppose them. But, Mr. Speaker, if the Minister of Finance is really serious, he should start to learn social credit philosophy and he would find out that if foreign investors consider Canadian bonds as valuable guarantees for their loans to the Government of Canada, our own bank, the Bank of Canada, could accept the same guarantees from the same government.

When foreign investors lend money to this country, they know that the wealth and labour of Canadians are good guarantees to buy Canadian bonds. So why should those who have been elected by Canadians not take their own responsibilities? And instead of maintaining a debt system, let us have a credit system so that Canadians may get rid of this debt system and perform as a sovereign people. Those same guarantees accepted by foreigners should also be accepted by the Bank of Canada and thus it would be able to monetize the credit of Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, how can the minister understand our philosophy when he does not even know what a debt is? Since the minister does not understand the basis of the economy, how can he put forward a sound budget? Current issues which can destroy Canada are not explained by the nature of this country but by the way it is governed. So, Mr. Speaker, there is only one solution and that is to elect a Social Credit government at next election.

[English]

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, in the budget debate there are always a number of matters a person would like to refer to, given the latitude one is able to exercise in debate, but tonight I want to deal with the major fiscal proposal which appeared in the budget, in fact the only fiscal proposal of any significance, and this is the proposed reduction in provincial sales tax.

But to do that, Mr. Speaker, we must enter the world of Alice in Wonderland, where words mean what the federal government chooses them to mean; where a hasty round of telephone calls becomes full consultation; where a proposal which was mentioned briefly in October, revived suddenly at the end of March, and then firmed up after six provincial budgets came down, is said to have undergone extensive negotiation; a world where Claude Ryan becomes a separatist and Allan Blakeney a closet Tory. That is the Alice in Wonderland world which characterizes the government's tax cut proposal.

Nevertheless, let us proceed. We begin with a proposal clearly and solely in the field of provincial jurisdiction, one obviously requiring full partnership between the federal and provincial governments to ensure its success. Not only was the opportunity to forge such a partnership in budget making missed, but it was missed because no serious effort was made by the federal government to achieve it. Yet the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) said the following:

> . . . for the first time in Canadian history we have achieved a certain level of co-ordination of fiscal policy between the federal and the provincial governments.

As we look back at this past week, all we can say is: some level, some achievement. Meanwhile in his remarks on the budget, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Jamieson) referred to the tremendous progress made by the government in the area of federal-provincial co-operation. He stated that after the tax cut period there may be the following:

> . . . other new, imaginative and creative ideas flowing from this unique process which was introduced by the Prime Minister, and reinforced in these last few days by the Minister of Finance.

Let us take a closer look at this "unique process" which the minister extols. I will tell hon. members what is unique about the government's process of federal-provincial relations. At a time when most other forces in the country are aiming for consolidation, co-operation and compromise in the interests of unity, the federal government stands uniquely alone in its tactics of divide and conquer. If the government is doing anything imaginatively and creatively, it is fostering division rather than unity, resentment rather than accommodation. The manner in which the sales tax cut was put into place is just the latest in a long list of divisive federal government actions.

What is almost amusing about the sales tax issue is the fact that, while government members applaud what they perceive as a step forward in federal-provincial relations, or as an outstanding example of federal-provincial fiscal co-ordination, they seem to be the only ones applauding. Certainly the four western premiers have stated that the budget move contradicted the spirit of federal-provincial co-operation and consultation, and they said it could be prejudicial to ongoing discussions on national unity.

The reaction of the province of Quebec to this step forward in federal-provincial relations has been anything but ecstatic. All political parties in that province, the new leader of the Liberal party in the province of Quebec, and Quebec newspapers both English and French, have been unanimous in their criticism of the federal government's handling of the sales tax cut.

We have five of the ten provinces dissatisfied with the federal government's latest effort at federal-provincial co-operation. When one considers that, of the remaining five provinces, four do not have to make any financial contribution to the plan and the fifth was the originator of the idea, one can readily conclude that there is little reason to applaud the government's federal-provincial diplomacy.

It has long been my contention that the process of conducting federal-provincial relations requires as much sensitivity and consideration as do the substantive measures involved. Here, sir, in the government's sales tax proposal we have a concrete example of where their lack of sensitivity toward the process of federal-provincial relations has diminished the potential good in the substantive issue.

We on this side of the House have no quarrel with the sales tax cut in itself. We have said it is a good idea, and we have said that here in the House. We have, rather, argued that it will not be in effect long enough and that it will come to an end just when the winter unemployment season is beginning. It is not the measure in itself but how the measure was taken that invites the criticism, not just of the opposition, but of the House and of the provincial premiers, the very ones whose goodwill is essential to maintaining the plan or putting it into effect.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has made much of the proposed success of the recent first ministers' economic summit conference which he billed as the beginning of a new era in federal-provincial relations. He and his ministers have exaggerated beyond belief the degree of agreement that was reached by all the premiers on this detail or on that detail. They were supposed to have discussed all the urgent matters of joint concern at that conference. It was the logical place to do so.

But now what do we find? We find that in the two months following that conference the federal government brings in two major initiatives, the referendum bill and the sales tax proposal, both of which are of great concern to the provinces and neither of which we find was discussed or even mentioned at that much-vaunted economic summit conference. The renewed sense of partnership that the Prime Minister sought and thought he had in the first ministers' conference does not exist. It was all a façade and sham, an exercise in public relations designed to brush up on appearances, but to accomplish little of substance. How else can we explain the failure of consultation in regard to both the referendum bill and the budget proposal?

The main point of discussion here today is the sales tax cut. But, sir, it is not the only recent deviation from that conference high in February. Another breakdown in federal-provincial relations is that complete lack of consultation with the provinces on the referendum legislation. A process to which so much importance should be attached is abandoned by the federal government whenever it is convenient for them to do so.

The minister in charge of federal-provincial relations, when questioned in the House about consultation with the premiers, stated that the referendum legislation covered only issues under federal jurisdiction, knowing full well, of course, that the referendum legislation addresses itself to any question relating to the constitution of Canada. He did admit at a press conference that it could be used in the case of failure to reach agreement with a province on constitutional matters, yet he has either the naivety or audacity to suggest that all constitutional questions automatically fall within federal jurisdiction.

When the federal government is defining matters that fall within federal jurisdiction and providing the questions to be posed, how long would it be, given the record of this government, before the people of Canada were faced with national referenda on matters of joint jurisdiction such as authority over agricultural marketing boards, and then move on to subjects of disputed jurisdiction such as resources taxation, or even to subjects of strictly provincial jurisdiction such as post-secondary education?

We all need to be wary of the government's perspective of matters that fall within federal jurisdiction, but given their preoccupation with their own importance the federal government continues to be blind to the needs, the aspirations and to the wishes of the provinces, the other partners of confederation. More than that, the federal government is oblivious to their own blindness in this respect. When criticized about the failure to consult with the provinces on the budget proposals, the Prime Minister and his Minister of Finance state: Oh, but we did consult with the provinces.

We all remember that phrase "profitable federalism". The federal government has their own version of that phrase. They were eager, indeed they were anxious, to have the provincial premiers at their side to endorse the generalities of their medium or midterm economic proposals. But when they had specific initiatives in mind, initiatives which would directly and immediately impact on the provinces, those proposals conveniently fell outside the boundaries of what could profitably be discussed at the first ministers' conference, even though the timing of the economic summit had been carefully chosen to give the first ministers the information they needed to adjust their budget planning in the light of the new proposals jointly agreed to at the time. The much vaunted mood of partnership that the Prime Minister spoke of, it now becomes clear, was taken seriously by the federal government only in so far as it served their own interests.

As I recall, looking back to that economic summit conference the general consensus at the close of the conference was that the federal government was the only government not to put forward a proposal. Now we know the reason why. It was not that they did not have proposals to make; it was just that they did not want to subject them to that forum. The Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance argue that the sales tax proposal had extensive discussion and that there was intensive co-operation over a period of six months. But when pushed, they reluctantly admit that it was raised briefly some six months ago and not by the federal government. Then it was allowed to lapse and only proceeded with a few weeks prior to the bringing down of the federal budget, after a flurry of telephone calls between the Minister of Finance and the provincial ministers on a one-to-one basis. At no time were the provinces able to discuss the matter among themselves, as would have been the case had the matter been properly brought up at the first ministers' conference in February. This is the place where it ought to have been discussed.

This kind of dealing is not consultation, and, further, bringing in a proposal which seriously affects provincial budgets after six provincial budgets have already been brought down is not co-operation. It was in some respects more akin to a lottery in which those provinces which bring down their budgets in April have a clear advantage over those which do so in March. The fact that four provinces were able to take the sales tax cuts into consideration in the budgets, with two provinces actually changing the dates and forms of their budgets—as the Prime Minister admitted yesterday—while six were not able to do so, give them a kind of special status and breeds resentment among the provinces. In no way does this exercise in federal bungling add up to partnership.

If you add to this, Mr. Speaker, the heavy-handed manner in which the government rejected the counter-proposal of Quebec, then the bungling becomes a fiasco. The handling of the sales tax with regard to the province of Quebec has been a disgrace, and when opposition members criticized the Prime Minister and his Minister of Finance for their inept handling of this matter, what was the government's response? They lashed out and called all their critics separatists. That is their stock response to criticism of any stance regarding Quebec. To disagree with the Prime Minister is to want to break up the country.

So desperate was the Prime Minister in assailing his critics that he was able to perceive what had escaped everyone else—that Allan Blakeney was a closet supporter of the federal Progressive Conservative party. That was the claim he made. All of this might fit very well with the Prime Minister's image of himself as the saviour of the country, but it does not fit at all well with reality.

The Minister of Finance was proud of his sales tax proposal and the way in which it took into consideration certain regional realities. It has been flexible enough to give special consideration to the Atlantic provinces with full compensation and to allow two other provinces to opt for a smaller cut over a longer time. Yet when it comes to the province of Quebec, which has an even higher unemployment rate than two Atlantic provinces, the government took on the attitude of inflexiblity. All three political parties in the national assembly in the province of Quebec, the newly elected leader of the Liberal party in that province, and both the English and the French press, all came out in support of Quebec's position; but the federal government remained rigid in its stand.

In a move of apparent accommodation, the federal government then turned around and offered Quebec a supposedly new deal, which was in reality a new twist to its rigid position. Meanwhile, the federal money sits there as a reminder to the province of Quebec that there is only one set of rules by which to play the federal-provincial game, and those rules are set in Ottawa. Is it any wonder, Mr. Speaker, that faced with such domineering rigidity, the province of Quebec hurls accusations of paternalism and federal domination? Is it any wonder that in the space of ten years of such domineering rigidity, this country has a national unity problem that is fostered right here in Ottawa? Does the Minister of Finance not realize that by his actions he lends credibility to the Parti Québécois with allegations that Ottawa is paternalistic and domineering, or did he deliberately pick this fight? Did the minister deliberately pick this fight to shore up his government's sagging support in the rest of the country?

If this was his intent, his cynical manoeuvre served the tragic purpose of renewing fading support for a separatist government in the province of Quebec which he purports to oppose. The lesson to be learned here is that even a good idea badly executed works against itself.

It was with amazement yesterday that I listened to the Prime Minister express his puzzlement at the reaction of the western premiers. He said that they were upset, not about the content of the federal proposal, but about the form of its negotiation. That is precisely the point: given the blindness that I have already referred to on the part of this government, the Prime Minister will go on being puzzled as to why the western premiers are upset. The government has consistently overlooked the importance of the process through which negotiations are carried on, and in so doing has often jeopardized the substance of those proposals.

In federal-provincial relations as in most other areas of life, means and ends cannot be separated. Bad form on the golf course produces only a slice or a hook, but bad form in federal-provincial negotiations endangers the unity of our country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: More than any other aspect, it is the form of federal-provincial relations that must change, and it cannot change so long as there exists an insensitive and remote federal government that does not respect the needs and wishes of the provinces. I am not a champion of the provinces against the federal government. The provinces must appreciate and respect the essential roles and powers of the federal government. But they would demonstrate that respect more readily if it were reciprocated or, even better, initiated by the federal government.

I would like to quote from the Conservative party's Kingston communiqué, which was a joint statement made by our leader and the then four Progressive Conservative premiers after their meeting last September in Kingston. In that document the Conservative party's view of the process of federal-provincial relations was clearly set out. It said:

> The federal government must be strong enough financially to influence the economy, bring about equalization of opportunity and stimulate under-developed sectors of the economy. But those national objectives can be attained without the federal government arbitrarily using its spending power, as it has so often in recent years, to force its way into areas of provincial responsibility. We are agreed that the federal spending power must be brought within constitutional bounds so that it never again is used by Ottawa to force action in areas not granted to Ottawa by the constitution.

Well, Mr. Speaker, the attitude of this government is one of take it or leave it. It is one of fiscal manipulation. If you take it you must do such and such. This attitude will not beget a sense of partnership, no matter how much money or how good the idea. Federal-provincial co-operation must be a two-way street; there must be input from the provinces, not just output from Ottawa.

Regional diversity is a fact of life in this country. Economically, politically and socially, the regions have different attitudes, different needs, different aspirations. It is essential that these attitudes, needs and aspirations find expression in federal decision-making. This budget was an opportunity for making that kind of accommodation for regional diversity in national policy. It should have demonstrated that such accommodation is possible. Instead, the episode has aggravated old tensions, reinforced old fears and put up hurdles which it will be difficult to clear if such a measure is attempted again.

The concept of a budget founded on federal-provincial co-operation, a concept which held out and still holds out so much promise, has been made into a travesty by what has gone on in the past several days. That travesty could have been avoided if only the Prime Minister had taken the premiers into his confidence by broaching this concept at the economic summit in February. He chose not to do so. The curtain on this tragedy of errors is now about to fall, but the consequences for the federal system have yet to make their presence felt on the stage. The Minister of Finance cannot escape the authorship of this budget; he and the Prime Minister must also accept the responsibility for the damage that has needlessly resulted from it.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I have listened to and read some of the speeches made on the budget on both sides of the House. Coming as I do from an area that is diversified and probably has a little bit of all Canada, the constituency of Essex-Windsor which I represent—one of the most southerly parts of Canada and a very productive part—I sometimes wonder if I am in dreamland or if I live in Canada.

An hon. Member: You are on cloud nine.

Mr. Whelan: I have had the opportunity to represent this country as a member of parliament and as Minister of Agriculture at world meetings, and I can say there is no other country in the world that is envied as is Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whelan: We are envied for the freedom that we take for granted and for the things in which Canada has given world leadership. We are a northern hemisphere country, a country that many people refer to as the land of ice and snow. I am a representative of my constituency first and foremost. I know, Mr. Speaker, that I could not be Minister of Agriculture in our democratic society in Canada if I had not been elected in my own constituency of Essex-Windsor. Having had the opportunity to represent the people of Canada at many world meetings as Minister of Agriculture, it is hard for me to accept the tremendous admiration that people express for Canada without realizing what Canada is all about.

I wonder if some people in this country know what Canada is all about or why Canada even exists today. They should go back in history and find out why this country was created, why we created this confederation called Canada and how it came about. It is one of the most fragile confederations in the whole world, created mainly by two founding nations, the French and the English. Had it not been for those two groups working together, then—and some people may scoff at this—I would probably be the secretary of agriculture for North America! But those two founding nations together said they wanted to be different, that they wanted to be a country called Canada.

When I attend these world meetings I am proud that Canada has given leadership in food aid long before it became a "sexy" thing to be involved in and before other countries entered this sphere. My Department of Agriculture was in the forefront of providing help to developing countries and to the poor and underprivileged of this world. Other departments became more involved as time went on because food aid became a "sexy" thing to be involved in.

We have gained a respect that no other nation in the world has, whether it be the United States or the U.S.S.R. Of the 132 nations that attend the World Food Conference meetings, none has the respect that Canada commands. We aid our fellowman no matter where he may be in the world. We help on the basis of need, not because of their political philosophy or whether they are going to join our military alliance or whatever. That is why we are the envy of the world and the jewel of the world.

Sometimes when I sit here listening to dull speeches from the opposition about what a terrible country Canada has turned out to be I cannot believe I am in one of the most democratic parliaments in the world, the Canadian parliament. I can hardly believe I am the peasant child who grew up in Essex county, who was elected to one of the highest positions in the land and then appointed Minister of Agriculture. This is a country that offers a tremendous opportunity to anyone who wants to take it.

I listen to the opposition speak of gloom and doom in this great country that offers more opportunity than any other nation in the world at the present time, knowing that no other nation offers as much. There have been more inquiries from foreign corporations about investment in this country this year than ever before in our history. Does that say that this country is so bad? No, it does not say it is so bad. It says it offers more opportunity for investment than any other country.

We hear talk about the dollar. I see members here who are knowledgeable about agriculture but who say nothing about what the dollar has meant to them. I see people associated with the cattle industry, but they have not said that the dollar has brought the boom days back again to the cattle industry. We do not have an influx of cattle from the United States because our dollar is higher than theirs and they are not shipping cattle to us.

We are paying our debts in Canadian dollars to our banks, to our mortgage holders, to our trust companies and so on, and this has been beneficial to us. Whether it be in world trade, with cereal grains, oil seeds or whatever you like, this is one of the most beneficial things that has ever happened to us.

Today I heard a member of the opposition criticize the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner) for something he said about the dollar's value. If the opposition were honest, they would admit that this has been one of the most beneficial things that has happened, because we have been able to compete in the export of agricultural and industrial products.

We hear talk of gloom and doom in regard to development in our country. Mr. Speaker, when I was elected to this House in 1962 unemployment in my area—the great agricultural, productive area of Essex county within which is the great industrial city of Windsor—stood at 22 per cent. I was raised on a farm but I worked in factories. I know what life in an auto factory or a chemical plant is like because I worked in different occupations. I hear talk today about this great economic depression in this country. I wonder how honest some politicians are when they compare today to the dirty thirties and say this is the greatest economic depression we have seen. I was not in the work force in the 1930's but my older brothers were. I can remember those days and so can others. People were lucky if they worked for board in those days. They dared not take sick as there was no hospitalization, no medicare, no social services.

Let me talk about what is going on in my humble constituency of Essex-Windsor and the area where I live. Last year we had never before issued so many building permits, not only in volume but also in dollar value. In my area at the present time expansion is going on in the industrial sectors. In the agricultural business, which is still very important in that area, the Maple Leaf company is expanding by building a tremendous vegetable oil processing complex which will cost in excess of $50 million. The United Co-operative Company is building a large agricultural complex with an elevator system which will be the most efficient elevator system in Canada and will cost in excess of $22 million. The Redpath company and Labatt's brewery are going into a corn sweetener plant costing approximately $75 million, or maybe $100 million by the time it is finished. All of these things, plus many others, have taken place in that great economically depressed area of southwestern Ontario.

It does me good to go outside Canada and listen to what people say about this country. When I come back I realize how lucky we are to live in this country. All I can say is: "Thank God that we live in Canada".

To come back to my constituency, General Motors Corporation is expanding production facilities which will include 1,500 new jobs by 1980. Chrysler Corporation will be expanding their facilities and increasing manpower in that area. Do these people who will invest millions and billions of dollars in the auto industry in Canada and the United States of America not have confidence in what will take place in the economic makeup of North America? We have those people who print doom and gloom about the auto pact. All I can say, Mr. Speaker, is: "Thank God for the auto pact and thank God for those politicians of the past." Some of them are still very active, such as our High Commissioner in Great Britain, the Hon. Paul Martin, who was one of the leaders in the auto pact and who realized the importance of having agreement that a certain portion of the North American auto market belonged to us.

Let us compare that situation to the farm machinery industry where there is no free trade and no such agreement. The hon. member from Winnipeg who is making a lot of noise over there and who will win his election on a hate campaign in Manitoba, should face the fact that maybe there would be a healthier farm machinery industry in western Canada if we did not have the completely free trade program. Maybe it is not so free trade because they are always great defenders when I criticize the U.S. ambassador to Canada as not so liberal in free trade.

Farm machinery parts can be brought into Canada duty free, but a machinery part manufactured in the hon. member's constituency could not be exported to the U.S. duty free, there would be 7 per cent duty. Agricultural chemicals come into Canada duty-free, but going into the United States there is about 14 per cent duty. We need more pacts like the auto pact, not less. We can improve upon them as time goes on and as we gain experience. They are not as bad as hon. members try to make them out to be.

The hon. member from Newfoundland pointed out today that my city had some of the most outlandish unemployment figures. He mentioned some figures about St. Catharines and the city of Windsor, but he did not point out the figures from the area where the hon. member for Perth-Wilmot (Mr. Jarvis) lives. The hon. member for Perth-Wilmot is not in the House tonight; he probably has some other obligations elsewhere and we will excuse him for not being here tonight. But I want to say that there is less than 2 per cent unemployment in the Perth-Wilmot constituency. Maybe that is why he figures it is not necessary for him to participate in the budget debate; he has nothing to worry about in Perth-Wilmot because of the government's actions. That hon. member's constituency has the least unemployment among young people—

An hon. Member: Why?

Mr. Whelan: Why? Because of government policy. The constituency which the hon. member represents probably has some of the highest incomes per farm family in Ontario and the area has possibly the highest farm incomes in Canada. Fifty-four per cent of the constituents have an income of $25,000 plus. This is the result of the healthy agricultural society which we have in Canada.

I am so tired of listening to politicians and even some farm leaders who talk about farm income going down. I received a letter from a so-called farm leader from British Columbia pointing out that farmers' incomes had dropped 9 per cent. Mr. Speaker, do you know how much farm income went up in 1975? At that time it had an increase of 187 per cent.

Some hon. Members: Shame, shame!

Mr. Whelan: From 1971 to 1975 there was an increase of 187 per cent.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. The hon. Minister of Agriculture has the floor.

Mr. Whelan: From 1971 to 1975 there was an increase of 187 per cent. Some people talk about it going down 9 per cent and 11 per cent. It has a long way to go down to equal the 187 per cent it went up. Figures are being used out of context. In British Columbia last year net income did not increase the way we would all like to see it, but it was not down, it was up. It increased three points on net income in British Columbia. I can go on and point out other farm production entities in Canada which have looked after themselves and are not doing all that badly. Some members on the other side of the House do not like to admit it.

The Canadian Horticultural Society gave an award this year to a person who had done more than anyone before in the history of the Canadian Horticultural Society.

An hon. Member: Who received that award?

Mr. Whelan: That award was to the Minister of Agriculture.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whelan: If all these people from the Canadian Horticultural Society were Liberals, I could understand that, but I do not think the majority of them are Liberals in that organization. They are honest enough to recognize what this government has done for their organization.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whelan: There is not one member of the horticultural industry producing those crops who has not benefitted from the action of this government. There is not one that is an efficient producer that does not have a net income that I know of. In addition, we have used stablization programs more since this government has been in power and since I have been Minister of Agriculture than ever before to assist those people in time of need, when they have experienced depressed markets.

I am so tired of hearing talk about farmers who have lost their net income. I wonder how many are honest enough to admit why farm land is higher in value in Canada than it is in the United States. The answer should be plain and simple to them. It is because farm income is generally better in Canada and because farmers, if they are efficient producers, are provided more security in this country than they are in any other nation in the world. None of our programs provide any kind of income for an inefficient producer who is lazy and does not want to work. He or she must work or they will not get that kind of living or that kind of net income I have just talked about.

I have heard a lot of members talk about the dairy industry. A number of members who are listening to me tonight were in the House when I presented the new dairy program for 1978-79, but they did not even listen to what I was saying. I am sure a great many of them have not even read the informative briefs we gave them at the time. But I say there is no other country in the whole nation called the world—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, whether we want to recognize it or not, we are citizens of the world, or of a nation called the world. The hon. member is laughing. It is too bad he does not widen his horizons a little because we are citizens of the world whether you want to call it a nation or a lithosphere. We are citizens of that great globe. Some of the members opposite, by their attitude, probably do not want to recognize it is round.

An hon. Member: Back to the budget debate.

Mr. Whelan: Someone says "back to the budget debate". I do not know what the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) said in the budget debate. I did not read his speech in the media anywhere. If he said anything at all it was probably about some kind of information scheme he was dreaming up which would put money in other people's pockets. He is talking about things in a democracy which have about as much to do with security of a family income as a snowball in hell. I have not received many letters from him lately about anything in his constituency, though in that constituency up in Peace River country even Peter's heritage fund could do a bit more by way of looking after the people there. The province of Alberta has so many billions to spare that they are piling them up. The hon. member for Peace River talks a great deal about Canadianism. If he can say that this heritage fund has created fairness in Canada I should like him some day to explain it to me as a peasant so that I can understand it.

The budget has done much more than most people realize to assist the farm community. Take the part in the budget having to do with research. It means that the private sector engaged in agricultural research can write off 50 per cent of the cost. That is what we want. We want more involvement in agricultural research in the private sector. This is the opportunity for those who have been saying they want to do more in the private sector. They have been given the chance.

I can see the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Hargrave) agreeing with me even before I make this statement because I know he has the welfare of the average Canadian corporate farm at heart. I do not know whether the hon. member's farm is a corporate farm, but if it is he will now be able to pass it on to his son or daughter free of tax.

Mr. Hargrave: That was one of my ideas.

Mr. Whelan: Yes, and I give credit to the hon. member for Medicine Hat, along with a lot of members on this side who made the same kind of recommendation as he did. We wanted to keep all those experienced people in agriculture and not oblige them to buy their farm twice. I want to tell the hon. member something. In many ways he is a great defender of the country to the south of us, though not all the time. Let me ask him whether farmers can do that in the United States of America. He knows they cannot do that in the United States. Even when a former minister of finance permitted the transfer of family farms without taxation to sons or daughters, Mr. Butt, the secretary of agriculture for the United States, said: "You must be out of your cotton-picking minds; we would never do that in the United States".

We have problems in Canadian agriculture but they are not of the magnitude of those experienced in the United States. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) has shown his sincerity by listening to the wishes of members of this democratic institution called the House of Commons. He has shown his sincerity by reacting in a receptive way to the demands which have been made for this kind of provision. I know of no other country which would allow this to take place.

Canada, we must remember, was built by farmers. It was built by people who had not been given the opportunity to own land in their country of origin, whether it was the United Kingdom, Scotland, Ireland, France or another of the European countries. Their chance of owning land and building up new democratic institutions was pretty well nil, maybe even minus nil as far as that goes.

Mr. Whelan: I recently saw figures for Scotland which showed there are less than a thousand landowners in Scotland, most of them share croppers. That is why agricultural production in Canada is held in such tremendous admiration around the world. Such northern hemisphere countries as Russia, China and so on cannot understand how we are so productive, not only cereals but in dairy products, livestock, poultry and so on. No country is as efficient as we have become. And there is no nation in the world which lets its farmers run its business as we do.

The hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) was talking about federal-provincial co-operation. I challenge anyone to look at any federal state and tell me where there is more co-operation between the various departments of agriculture in the field of food production than there is here in Canada. On the other hand, there is no other minister of agriculture in the world who has to deal as I do with such powerful provinces which are concerned with agricultural production.

Do hon. members think the secretary of agriculture of the United States has to call up 52 directors of agriculture in that country before he can make a decision? Not on your bottom dollar. They have authority federally. But we on this side believe in federal-provincial co-operation. We even have a separatist government in Quebec signing agreements with us on such matters as national broiler marketing boards. They recognize this is good for agriculture. They recognize the constitution as it is, because it says agriculture should, first and foremost, be a federal responsibility. It is, and we are fulfilling that responsibility. This is why we are so productive. There is no other group in society which has increased productivity by 300 per cent in the last 25 years. Agriculture has done it. The farmers have accepted every form of automation and scientific break-through. But the incentive to create was there and was provided by government for the last 25 years.

Mr. Jarvis: The income of those farmers is going down.

Mr. Whelan: I have dealt with the hon. member's constituency. He even told me himself he had one of the richest, with one of the lowest rates of unemployment. As humble as the hon. member is, he certainly would not want to take credit for that.

● (2142)

Mr. Jarvis: I hope you don't either.

Mr. Whelan: The budget debate could go on for several days, in which case the hon. member for Perth-Wilmot would have an opportunity to take part in it. I am sure he would want to, and if he wants to put the facts on the record, he will tell us how wonderfully the farmers in Perth county are doing. He will tell us all about those things.

I want to say a couple of things about the Minister of Finance. I met Jean Chrétien when he first came to Ottawa.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Whelan: I meant the Minister of Finance. I cannot get used to the formality of not being able to call a person by his first name in parliament, because in our rural communities we always do that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whelan: I have been to the Mother of Parliaments. Sometimes I think our parliament has detoured away from the instinct of democratic parliament. I do not want this to be a lesson to you, Mr. Speaker, but recently I visited the House of Commons in the United Kingdom. The members there put their feet up on the Speaker's table. They laid on the benches and nearly went to sleep. I said to one minister afterwards, "Mr. Minister, if we did that in the parliament of Canada, which is on television, we would be run out of the place". That minister brought me down to the ground pretty quickly. He said to me, "Mr. Minister, this is the house of commoners, and it must always have the image of a place for commoners". I sometimes think we detour away from that here.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Dean Whiteway (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) has once again demonstrated to the country his ability to speak without notes and without facts.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whiteway: He takes pride in the fact that he is born of a humble background. I was born the son of a cobbler from Nova Scotia.

An hon. Member: The son of a what?

Mr. Whiteway: The son of a cobbler from Nova Scotia. Down there the fishermen have a little adage about which the Minister of Agriculture might be aware: Even fish would not find themselves on the hook if they kept their mouths shut.

We are going to be quoting the minister's speech tonight to every farmer in this country, because there will not be a farmer who will not want to hear about the prosperity he has missed for years. We will quote the minister's every word to every farmer, and we will see how the minister's words stand up when and if the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) dares to issue the writ.

Hon. members opposite speak firmly and boldly, yet it is April 18 and there is no writ of election. Where is the Prime Minister tonight? I expect that he will walk down that aisle opposite with a writ in hand, and when he does, we will see about this decade of progress about which the Minister of Agriculture talks, the Trudeau decade. The Minister of Agriculture is shaking his head. Well, let him go behind the curtain, have a caucus with his leader and see if he has the guts to issue the writ tonight.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but it being 9.45 p.m. it is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 60(7), to interrupt the proceedings and put forthwith the amendment now before the House.

The question is on the amendment in the name of the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said amendment?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

The Budget—Mr. Whiteway

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the members.

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. Stevens) which was negatived on the following division:

VETERANS AFFAIRS

REQUEST WAR DISABILITY PENSIONS ADHERE TO 1973 FORMULA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. The urgency of my motion is related to the uncertainty of the length of this parliament, and its pressing nature is related to the deplorable inflation rate which this government's failure in the economic area has permitted to become one of our nation's major concerns. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling):

That this government bring forward without delay legislation restoring the basic amount of the war disability pension in accordance with the 1973 formula and for according prorated pensions to widows of veterans where the veteran's pension is less than 48 per cent.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for debate requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

ANNUAL INCREASE FOR EMPLOYEES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity pursuant to Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that the possibility of a federal election call increases daily, in view of the fact that employees of the House of Commons are now three weeks late in receiving notice of their annual April 1 increase, and in view of the fact that the April 1, 1977, increases were in the order of 3 per cent below the cost of living increase for that year, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters):

That this House instruct its commissioners of internal economy to immediately table salary increases for House of Commons personnel equivalent to no less than the cost of living increase since April 1, 1977.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for discussion requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

RAILWAYS

EXTENSION OF BRITISH COLUMBIA RAILWAYS' LINE TO YUKON—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity and ask for unanimous consent of the House to a motion which seeks to end the uncertainty and the concern of all residents of north-eastern British Columbia over the fact that a vital section of the British Columbia Railway may be abandoned.

Having regard to the fact that the entire industrial base supporting the town of Fort Nelson as well as the general area of northern British Columbia relies almost exclusively on the railway for its survival, and considering that the abandonment of this railway from Fort St. John to Fort Nelson would place in jeopardy several hundreds of jobs, and further considering the importance of that section of the BCR in the context of the northwestern rail authority as recommended by Mr. Justice Hall, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Clarke):

That the government enter into discussions with the province of British Columbia immediately with the view of applying the resources and jurisdiction of the federal government not only to prevent the abandonment of the British Columbia Railways' northern line but to plan, jointly with the provinces of Alberta and British Columbia, the extension of this rail line to the Yukon and the establishment of certain interchange connections with other northwestern railways, in order to accommodate such industrial development schemes as the Alaska Highway pipeline which are already committed for the area.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for debate requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

BANK OF CANADA ACT

COST OF LOANS TO GOVERNMENT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to introduce a motion dealing with an important matter of pressing necessity.

In view of the fact that current public financing is likely to debit the present and future generations of Canadians towards foreign financiers at the daily rate of $31 million guaranteed by Canadian bonds; considering also that the primary aim of the Bank of Canada is to control credit in the interests of the economic life of Canadians and since the policy of that organization is dictated by the Canadian Parliament, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert):

That the House direct the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) to take all necessary steps as soon as possible to have the Bank of Canada Act amended to enable it to grant to the federal government long-term loans guaranteed by Canadian bonds at interest rates based on administrative costs which could help stimulate the Canadian economy.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there such consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

FAMILY IN U.S.S.R. PREVENTED FROM EMIGRATING TO ISRAEL—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. My motion concerns the detention of a family in the Soviet Union. In 1970, Vladimir Slepak applied to Soviet authorities to emigrate to Israel. He was refused permission on the grounds that he had been involved in secret work. Since then, Mr. Slepak has been harassed, refused employment and imprisoned. His wife, who is a qualified radiologist, also has been refused employment. One of their sons has gone into hiding in order to avoid being drafted into the army; another son has fled the country altogether. In view of this totally inhumane treatment, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Portage (Mr. Masniuk):

That this House direct the Secretary of State for External Affairs to discuss with Soviet authorities the possibility of the Slepak family being allowed to leave the Soviet Union and take up residence in Israel.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for discussion can be done only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

[Mr. Speaker.]

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

EFFECT OF SALES TAX PROPOSALS ON QUEBEC INDUSTRY

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. As a result of the first ministers' conference in February it was decided to set up some 22 consultative task forces on Canadian manufacturing with representation from the provinces, business and the federal government. The government prepared a document for them setting out their policies, objectives and comments on the manufacturing sector. I refer to page 11 of that document, which reads as follows:

In the Quebec manufacturing sector the overriding issue is one of adjustment to competitive pressures on the traditional sectors—textiles, clothing, footwear and furniture.

Also, it states that average manufacturing employment in Canada dropped by 34,000 last year, with 30,000 of those a net loss in Quebec in those sectors. My question to the Prime Minister is: In view of these findings by the government as expressed in the government's own official documents, why is the government opposing the suggestion of the province of Quebec that the sales tax be eliminated in the areas of textiles, clothing, footwear and furniture, which would therefore help Quebec consumers in those areas to spend more and encourage those manufacturing sectors and manufacturing employment in Quebec? Why does the government continue to oppose this?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has misunderstood the government's position. We have not opposed this; on the contrary, I have said repeatedly that we understood the Quebec government taking these steps to bolster its own particular industry. Therefore, we are not opposing it. Obviously, this is a tax within provincial jurisdiction. They are free to cut those taxes, as indeed other provinces have increased and cut taxes in other areas. We know of one province which has no sales tax at all. This is entirely within the jurisdiction of the provinces.

Not only do we not oppose it, but we supported it in other ways: we have brought in quotas; there are tariffs which exist; there are many measures of direct support from the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce which have been made to these sectors so that jobs could be created and retained in that area. It is a misunderstanding to say we are opposed to it. What we do say is that if the province wants to do that by its own budget, with its own tax resources, we applaud it. If it wants to co-operate with the federal government in a series of tax measures that will help the whole country and not only industries in one province, then this is what we proposed on budget night.

● (1417)

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, this is federalism so rigid that it is rigor mortis federalism. In this same document the federal government makes the finding that there are particularly difficult problems in respect of textiles, clothing, leather, furniture and shipbuilding concentrated in Quebec; and the government made special arrangements with British Columbia and Saskatchewan to meet their suggestions. The government is using $800 million of the taxpayers' money across Canada to assist in lowering these provincial sales taxes, but the government is refusing to assist Quebec in lowering its sales tax on these items. Now, how—

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, my question for the Prime Minister is the following, and I know the hon. gentleman does not like this: How can the Prime Minister justify a special deal for B.C. and a special deal for Saskatchewan, and how can he justify special protection in Newfoundland in respect of clothing and footwear when he refuses to assist in Quebec where manufacturing industries are very hard hit and where, in spite of the federal government's measures, employment has been lost? How can he justify that?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Surely the hon. member realizes that he is putting forward an argument in that question and not searching for information.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, my question to the Prime Minister is this: Apparently the federal government's policy to assist in maintaining employment in those four industries in Quebec has been a failure and further assistance is needed because 30,000 jobs have been lost.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Crosbie: If the government will not assist Quebec in the way they have suggested, what other measure of assistance will it give for that sector in that province if it will not agree to flexible federalism in this area?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, of course, I do not agree with the premise. When we talk about flexible federalism, as the hon. member refers to it, we mean federalism in which the federal government and the provincial governments get together—as we did in February—to try to chart a course for the economic future. That is exactly what was done by our Minister of Finance when during a period of three weeks he met with the finance ministers of every province and his officials met with the officials of the finance departments of every province.

That is our position. We believe in co-operation and we have practised it. The other day I offered to put before the House and the hon. member the dates and times during which this subject was discussed with the provinces individually and collectively. In so far as helping these particular industries, Mr. Speaker, I just indicated to the hon. member that we have taken several measures, the most recent one in the area of establishing quotas, to protect those very industries.

I would like to hear clearly from the hon. member, on behalf of his party, or perhaps even from the Leader of the Opposition, that they are saying they support the Quebec measure, one which tends to discriminate against the industries of other provinces. I have not heard that yet.

SALES TAX PROPOSAL OF QUEBEC

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I would also like to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister on that subject. In view of the fact that at a press conference last week the Prime Minister stated that the aim of Quebec's proposal was to undermine federalism, in light also of the large scale support given to the Quebec government for its proposal, both in the National Assembly and by the general public and even by people outside Quebec, would the Prime Minister be willing to reiterate today that all those who believe that the Quebec proposal meets Quebec's special needs, who support that proposal, also want to break up the country?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): That may be the hon. member's opinion, Mr. Speaker, but not mine. I do not say that those people intend to break up the country.

● (1422)

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary.

I was referring to a statement made by the Prime Minister who said that the Quebec proposal was of a separatist nature, as the Minister of Finance states in a document which he presented only to his colleagues and which he did not make public. In any case, in the circumstances we admit that the proposal made by the federal government has been accepted by some provinces through special arrangements. How can the Prime Minister refuse to make a special arrangement for a province he knows well, with the problems he is aware of, when he accepted—and we are proud about it—special arrangements with other provinces.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is exactly a repetition of the question asked by the hon. member for St. John's East.

ELECTIONS

REQUEST FOR PUBLIC DEBATE ON TV DURING NEXT ELECTION CAMPAIGN

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Considering that a public debate on television would be the single best means, in a modern democracy, for the parties and their leaders to convey their positions to the electorate in an election, I would ask the Prime Minister if he would end the vacillation of his party on this question and accept in principle the offer that has been made jointly by the CBC and the CTV for a public debate in the coming election campaign?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the leader of the New Democratic Party tends to forget that this government for three years attempted to get television into the House of Commons, and finally got the support of the other side of the House. We are having debates on television every day that parliament sits and we are going to continue to have these debates in front of the television cameras.

As to what happens during the election campaign, perhaps the hon. member can come around and talk about that when we have decided to have an election campaign.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the master of the half-truth strikes again. The Prime Minister knows very well that it was this party that first proposed televising debates in the House, and that it was his party that took ten years to implement it. I would like to ask him, instead of vacillating on the question, why does he not say now, in advance, than when the election is called—whether it is next week or the week after; whenever—he, as leader of his party, will commit himself in principle to taking part in a public debate on television?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, for a party that has been wanting to have television for so long—

Mr. Broadbent: Why don't you answer the question?

Mr. Trudeau: Why did the hon. member make a preamble if he does not wish me to comment on it?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: I have not noticed that any of the provincial governments which are headed by the NDP have introduced television into their Houses. Is there some fear there?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: I repeat, if the hon. member wishes to make plans for the coming election, he can make plans if he wants. As far as we are concerned, we have an order paper, we have bills to pass, and we will discuss the election when the election is called.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Broadbent: The Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker, is as coy as ever. Considering the fact that the senior officials in his party know that if the election is to take place in late June or early July, they must know within a matter of days, in terms of their scheduling, whether they can arrange such a debate, does the Prime Minister not recognize that his backing away from such a debate makes it quite conceivable that it will not take place in the future?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Bellechasse.

ANNIVERSARIES

REQUEST MUNICIPALITIES CELEBRATING TRICENTENNIALS BENEFIT FROM FESTIVAL CANADA

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the hon. Secretary of State.

Considering that several municipalities will celebrate their tricentennial in June or early July, which is an uncommon event in the life of a municipality, and that the program Festival Canada is under his jurisdiction, could he tell the House whether he has made plans to enable these municipalities to benefit from Festival Canada?

[English]

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): Of course, Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the Festival Canada program is to celebrate Canada's birthday, not particularly those of municipalities. In view of the hon. member's representations, however, I will look into the matter and examine any cases that he brings to my attention.

TRADE

GATT NEGOTIATIONS RESPECTING AGRICULTURE

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Deputy Prime Minister who I believe is in charge of answering questions in the House in connection with GATT negotiations. We on this side are concerned that during the GATT negotiations the government may sell out Canadian agriculture.

● (1427)

Since a number of very serious problems are still outstanding, one being the Japanese non-tariff barriers which, while reduced to manufacturing, are still very high with respect to Canadian agricultural products, specifically livestock and processed oilseed products, what position is the government taking to get the non-tariff barriers removed on trade with Japan?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, in a general way the question of non-tariff barriers and their elimination is featuring more prominently in this GATT negotiation than any previous negotiations. It is one of the objectives to achieve a reduction of these non-tariff barriers on all products that are impeded by these devices.

Mr. Murta: Mr. Speaker, that was no answer at all. We all know that one of the reasons for this round of talks is to try to reduce non-tariff barriers. I am speaking specifically about agriculture. Many people in this country are concerned about it. If the minister does not know the answer, I wish he would tell the House. Another area we are very concerned about is greater access to the European Common Market for grains, dairy products and oilseed products. Can the minister inform the House what position our negotiators are taking on the question of access to those markets?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, Canada has already tabled its requests and its offers in the field of agriculture before its partners at Geneva, and other participants in the negotiations have done likewise. As I indicated in a reply to a question asked two days ago, at the present time participants in the negotiations are examining these proposals and counter-offers, seeking improvements or adjustments. It is not possible to make these offers public, however, because in accordance with the practice they are confidential to the negotiators.

Mr. Murta: Mr. Speaker, a final supplementary question. I am really asking the Deputy Prime Minister if he will inform the House in a general way, taking Japan and the European Common Market as two instances, how we are moving toward the lowering of non-tariff barriers. Is this something we are firmly committed to as a government?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, our objective is greater access for Canadian agricultural products to other markets and securing that access whether in the form of removal of tariffs or non-tariff barriers. Certainly, one of our objectives is greater access to the agricultural markets of the world.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

BUDGET PROPOSALS RESPECTING SALES TAX

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, in absence of the Minister of Finance, who I understand is taking a sabbatical in the west, I will direct my question to the Prime Minister. It centres on the manufacturing sales tax at the federal level that the government has left in place notwithstanding the budget brought in on April 10.

Would the Prime Minister indicate if consideration has been given by the government to reducing the 12 per cent federal manufacturing sales tax in Canada, bearing in mind that 12 per cent means that next to Pakistan we have the highest such tax of any country in the world?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised that the hon. member does not know that the Minister of Finance is in Vancouver to attend meetings of the Inter-American Development Bank. These meetings are attended by ranking bankers of the world, and he has been elected chairman of that meeting. It is a pity that the economic critic for the opposition does not understand the importance of international developments on economic affairs in Canada.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Prime Minister. I might add it is a pity his Minister of Finance does not understand the consequences of our economy in Canada.

With respect to the manufacturing sales tax, is any consideration being given to reducing this tax, which at 12 per cent means that we are tied with Tanzania and Ghana as far as our tax level is concerned, bearing in mind it is regressive? In short, you would not get tangled in the meat-grinder as you are with the provinces if you had chosen to reduce that tax as opposed to the provincial sales tax approach which you took.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is making comparisons with other countries, and he knows how misleading that can be. He knows that many other countries have turnover taxes and rollover taxes. They do not have this same kind of federal sales tax, but they have the equivalent and it is much higher in other countries. I am surprised the hon. member is not informed of that.

An hon. Member: It is not true.

Mr. Trudeau: In so far as why we chose the sales tax rather than the federal tax, it was for a very simple reason, Mr. Speaker. One reason which should be convincing to the hon. member is that this is the form which was judged best by the treasurer of Ontario, and it was supported by every other provincial finance minister. That is a good enough reason.

Mr. Stevens: Including Parizeau?

An hon. Member: Talk to Darcy.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, my final supplementary question is to the Prime Minister. Is the Prime Minister aware that with the sales tax level in Canada being approximately 20 per cent higher than that in the United States, it results in a Canadian having to earn, say, $44,000 to have the same take-home pay that an American has at $27,000 after tax? If he is aware of that, is any consideration being given to removing some of the double-taxation that exists in this country among the federal, provincial and municipal levels?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, it is quite obvious that these are arguments that the hon. member has just thought about. If he had thought about them, he could have made these points during the budget debate.

An hon. Member: What is your answer?

Mr. Trudeau: He has lost his chance of speaking now and he is trying to crowd in a new part of the debate. These are arguments, Mr. Speaker. We have been debating the budget, and we will continue to speak about it for the next two days—

Mr. Stevens: When are you going to speak?

An hon. Member: You haven't spoken yet.

Mr. Trudeau: If the hon. member has good suggestions and he can get some of his colleagues to believe they are as good he thinks they are, maybe he can crowd them into some of their speeches; but I doubt it.

HIGH LEVEL OF INFLATION

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: Just wait, boys; here it comes. As inflation is just below 9 per cent and has been going up steadily, giving every indication that it will continue to rise, and as this parliament gives the indication it is about to end with a general election to be held, would the Prime Minister undertake to give this House one last exciting demonstration of how he wrestles inflation to the ground?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

POLLUTION OF OTTAWA RIVER—FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL STUDY

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr.Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of State (Environment). Recent press reports concerning pollution levels in the Ottawa River indicate that a federal-provincial study by the Ontario, Quebec and federal governments has found very high levels of phosphorous and mercury in the Ottawa River system.

Considering that this report has not been made public as yet, and that there are serious health implications for all communities depending for their water supply on this river system, can the minister tell the House if he has received such a report and, if the answer is in the affirmative, when does he intend to make it public so that it can help speed up the provision of better pollution control of the Ottawa River?

Hon. Len Marchand (Minister of State (Environment)): Mr. Speaker, I am aware of this particular report. We are consulting with the minister of environment for the province of Quebec about certain aspects of the report. He made some comments about the accuracy of some of its contents. I expect to be hearing from him again very soon. We will be making the report public.

CIRCULATION OF DRAFT BILL ON INFLATION MONITORING AGENCY

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I hope my question will illustrate the tenacity required to get an answer from the Minister of Justice. Eight weeks ago I asked the minister about the act to establish an inflation monitoring agency. At that time he said he would have to find out the answer. Two weeks ago he said, after notice, that he had undertaken to get the information and that he would get it immediately and supply it. Last week his office said—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the hon. member has a question, will he put it.

Mr. Clarke: I want to ask him again, who instructed Mr. D. Maurais to draft this bill and who authorized its release across the country?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I am amazed at the hon. member's tenacity about trivial points. This, of course, is characteristic of his record in his riding—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: At least he is going to run again.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Basford: The draft bill to which the hon. member refers was drawn up by an officer of my department on the instruction of officers of the Department of Finance. It reflected, in part—I emphasize, in part—a cabinet decision that we obviously had to prepare various proposals dealing with withdrawal from the control program. The instructions issued to the drafting officer went beyond the cabinet decision. It was a draft supplied to the Department of Finance whose officers discussed it, in the new climate of federal-provincial relations that exists in this country, with provincial finance officials.

Obviously, the draft bill to which the hon. member refers does not reflect government policy in terms that we have introduced other legislation, and as a result of close federal-provincial co-operation and discussion we have arrived at different agreements for the post-control period.

Mr. Clarke: Mr. Speaker, I am shocked that the minister thinks that draft bills floating around the country are such trivial issues. Is the minister telling the House that the Minister of Finance lied to the committee when he said that he did not know anything about this bill, and the Minister of Justice now says that it came out of the Ministry of Finance?

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, I do not know my colleague's statement in the finance committee. It is conceivable, as far as

I know, that the draft bill to which the hon. member refers was never reviewed by ministers because, as I say, it never represented government policy.

RECOMMENDATION LEGISLATION COVERING RAPE BE AMENDED

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. It concerns the report of the federal Advisory Council on the Status of Women which recommended that the subject of rape be dealt with in the Criminal Code by being placed in a different category from sexual offences, to emphasize the violent nature of the offence rather than the sexual nature of the offence.

Can the minister advise the House what action he proposes to take with regard to that particular recommendation? Could he also advise whether the Law Reform Commission made a similar recommendation to him?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Over the past two years since the last amendment to the Criminal Code with regard to rape which represented a considerable advance in the law, we have been receiving representations and doing studies as to changes in the law. When those changes are proposed, they will be made public.

Mr. Leggatt: Mr. Speaker, we have had a substantial increase in reported rapes and we continue to have a low conviction rate for that particular crime. The Law Reform Commission have recommended a change in terms of cross-examination techniques for the victim. There is still a continuing problem that the exploratory nature of those cross-examinations is making the complainant the victim rather than the person who committed the offence.

Given the fact that there are recommendations from both the federal Advisory Council on the Status of Women and the Law Reform Commission to de-emphasize the sexual nature of rape, and also that rape crisis centres continue to be inadequately funded, can the minister advise whether there will be additional funding for rape crisis centres in view of this problem? Can he give us a time schedule as to when we can expect legislation with regard to these very worth-while recommendations that have come before him?

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, with regard to the hon. member's remarks about there being a higher complaint rate, I think part of the reason for that is attributable to the amendments we made in the last session easing the burden of cross-examination of the complainant and the amendments which were made to encourage complainants to come forward and lay a complaint and have a charge prosecuted.

With regard to rape centres, I appreciate the immensely valuable work they are doing. However, with regard to their funding I can make no commitment because essentially the funding of those centres is a provincial responsibility for the provincial attorneys general. With regard to a time schedule as to changes, I am not in a position to give that information at this time. We have been carefully studying and analysing the proposals we have received from the Status of Women committee, the rape crisis centres and the Law Reform Commission. When we are ready to propose changes in the law, as I indicated, they will be made public.

TOURISM

ADVERTISING TO PROMOTE TOURISM IN CANADA

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. It relates to the tourist insert in Reader's Digest entitled, "Canada . . . it'll never cease to amaze you", a publication designed to promote tourism in Canada, keep the Canadian dollar at home and support national unity. Inasmuch as the eastern edition neglects the west and the western edition neglects the east, will the minister advise why his department, the tourist and publicity branch, reinforces east and west balkanization in this way?

Hon. Jack H. Horner (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, a number of editions of various magazines are put out across Canada. The whole idea is to make Canadians more aware of this great country. There may have been incidents, as the hon. member has suggested, but in other papers there has been a complete mix of both parts of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Dinsdale: Did budget cutbacks after the project was well under way force drastic changes in the text of the booklet that contained the errors and omissions pointed out recently by the hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte, whereby Fundy national park was placed in Nova Scotia, rather than New Brunswick—errors and ommissions that are detrimental rather than helpful to tourist promotion? What is the minister doing to correct this situation?

Mr. Horner: There are a number of typographical errors in the book, which we regret. One was pointed out by the hon. member for Moncton. There is one that has not yet been pointed out by any member opposite, but which I noticed. We are making an attempt to have these corrected.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NEGOTIATIONS ON PROPOSED FLOODING OF SKAGIT VALLEY, B.C.

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. As the minister knows, for some years there has been a debate over the flooding of the Skagit Valley, British Columbia, by Seattle City Light. I understand the minister has received a communication from the association opposing that flooding, suggesting that because the American northwestern United States now need our power and we have a surplus of electric power, this could be a lever to use against Seattle City Light in the sense of encouraging them to make a settlement with the province of British Columbia so that that valley will not be flooded. Can the minister report to the House what he is prepared to do and what the situation is in this regard?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for bringing it to my attention, and tell him quite frankly that I have not yet seen those reports personally. They may be in my office or in the department. I will undertake to make inquiries and respond to him as quickly as possible.

SOCIAL SECURITY

GUARANTEED ANNUAL INCOME—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Louis Duclos (Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Can the minister tell the House how the negotiations with the provinces are faring with regard to the implementation of a guaranteed annual income which would, in particular, ensure an adequate income to Canadians of 60 to 65 years of age who can no longer work for health reasons but who, on the other hand, are not yet eligible for the old age security pension?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the solution which had been outlined and suggested to the provinces to meet the needs of the elderly of preretirement age had indeed been a guaranteed annual income. But if the hon. member wants to know about the negotiations with the provinces in that regard, I must unfortunately advise the House that the result is negative. Since the provinces rejected our proposal for a guaranteed annual income over six months ago, we are now proceeding to that end through another mechanism, which they indicated they favoured, namely income tax.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

WITHHOLDING OF FUNDS FROM NATIONAL INDIAN BROTHERHOOD

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. In light of the fact that the minister is withholding $1.7 million from the National Indian Brotherhood and $28 million is being held back while the Beaver report is before Treasury Board, is the rationale for these actions due to the fact that the National Indian Brotherhood has withdrawn from the cabinet consultative committee, or is it because his own department's administration is in chaos, with a 17 per cent increase in the cost of administration and a multimillion dollar deficit in his budget for the province of Saskatchewan?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, that question demonstrates that the hon. member is totally confused. The only way I can reasonably deal with his problem is to talk with him privately.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Brisco: In light of the minister's answer, it is obvious he is trying to hide the fact that his department is in a chaotic state. If the minister is in serious difficulty with the National Indian Brotherhood over the lack of auditing controls within his own department, and the multimillion dollar deficit in Saskatchewan, is that the reason he is not prepared to bring his estimates before the standing committee and let us look at the can of worms he is afraid of?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Surely that question is argumentative.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

INVESTIGATION INTO SALE OF MILITARY EQUIPMENT TO IRAN

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Solicitor General. Some time ago an RCMP investigation was started into a rather strange series of transactions sponsored by the Department of Supply and Services, called Project Iran. My understanding is that it involved the sale of certain military supplies to the royal imperial government of Iran, and that the RCMP investigation related to the payment of certain agency fees and commissions involved in that sale. Has that RCMP investigation been completed?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I am not familiar with the allegation the hon. member is advancing. I will look into the matter and report to him further.

Mr. Lawrence: If the minister refreshes his memory about this matter, he will see that some members on this side of the House have been aware of certain matters relating to this transaction for some time. We have been unwilling to speak about it publicly because we did not want the allegation made that we were in any way impeding a police investigation into the matter. It should not take the minister very long to find out if the police investigation is still proceeding. Can he undertake to let us know within a day or so whether that investigation is still proceeding?

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, I was not aware that hon. gentlemen were aware, because the hon. gentleman opposite did not previously make any of the allegations which have been advanced publicly known to me privately. I have not been very far away from the hon. gentleman and if he was serious about keeping this matter private for the purposes of investigation he could have made a previous effort to apprise me of the allegations.

Hon. J.-Gilles Lamontagne (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I have already answered that question repeatedly. EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR PROGRESS REPORT ON LAW OF THE SEA CONFERENCE

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. The Law of the Sea conference convened in Geneva on March 28 and it is scheduled to adjourn, I believe, one month from today.

In view of the importance of this conference to the people of Canada, especially those living in Atlantic Canada, I ask the minister whether any progress has been made on a number of substantive issues which are before the conference, such as a nickel production ceiling on seabed mining, a definition of the outer edge of the continental margin and the related matter of revenue-sharing in respect of seabed resources between the 200-mile limit and the edge of the margin, as well as establishing a regime for the prevention of marine pollution within the 12-mile territorial sea and the 200-mile economic zone, a problem which I am sure the minister is well aware has been highlighted recently by the Amoco Cadiz oil spill off the coast of Brittany.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I regret very much to tell the House and the hon. member that the current session of the Law of the Sea conference had produced very little up until at least the past few days, primarily because of a procedural dispute between the various groups of the more than 100 countries involved with regard to the matter of the role of the secretary general: I believe that this is his official title. In any event, much of the time to date has been preoccupied with this particular issue, with the result that not very much by way of substantive discussion has taken place on all of the matters to which the hon. member refers.

I can tell him, however, that in informal discussions and intercessional meetings of various groups a number of proposals are shaping up. They are tentative and therefore I am still hopeful, now that the matter of the role of the secretary general has been clarified, that they can make progress rather quickly in the weeks which are left. However, it is a matter of record and, I repeat, of regret that up until the present time not very much has been done. As a result, I am personally worried, and the government, and I am sure hon. members are worried, about the fate of the conference.

CANADA PENSION PLAN

DELAY IN PROCESSING APPLICATIONS FOR DISABILITY PENSIONS

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare: it relates to the growing concern of many members of parliament about long delays in processing applications for disability pensions under the Canada Pension Plan.

Can the minister confirm to the House that there is a serious backlog in the processing of disability pensions, and can she explain how it happened that an individual with lung cancer in both lungs had his file sent to Ottawa marked "Terminal" last November, had urgent representations made on his behalf by the regional office and could have died on February 9 with no answer from Ottawa?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I gather that this question arises from the printing of an article two or three weeks ago in the weekend press—

Mr. Beatty: No.

Miss Bégin: —to the effect that the CPP was not functioning properly. I looked into that immediately. A few doctors who were assessing handicap cases and various other problems left the department almost at the same time. We are in the process of recruiting other doctors and I would like to apologize to the public for the delays. However, I consider the matter under control.

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, my concern did not arise from a newspaper article; it arose from the fact that in recent days four of my constituents have suffered through serious backlogs because this government cannot administratively solve problems regarding applications for Canada Pension Plan disability pensions.

Can the minister confirm to the House that the branch of her department which processes disability pension applications has been seriously understaffed for a year and a half? Also, can she tell the House what advice should be given to applicants for disability pensions who have run into problems because their unemployment insurance disability benefits run out after 15 weeks and they are left waiting longer than three months before the government processes their applications for disability pensions?

Miss Bégin: Mr. Speaker, in the circumstances I think the best answer I could give would be to ask all hon. members or members of the public who know of any cases, to let me know. People will work overtime as much as is needed to solve the problem of the backlog which has arisen in some regions of the country.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

WELFARE COSTS—REQUEST GOVERNMENT FINANCIALLY ASSIST PROVINCES

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of reports yesterday that the number of employables on welfare in cities such as Hamilton, London, Sudbury and Peterborough has increased by 40 per cent to 50 per cent in the last year, and in view of the difficulties this will cause the people concerned and the cities in which they live, will the minister discuss with the Minister of Finance the possibility of the federal government's re-establishing a program of special grants to cities to help them meet these extra costs which are brought about for reasons over which they have no control?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I do not think the question should be addressed to me. Welfare is a provincial responsibility and questions of policy should be put to Mr. Keith Norton. Mr. Norton has not raised this problem with me. If the hon. member wants me to answer questions on the general state of the economy, he is playing a game.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, the problem of employables who are on welfare is not a problem solely in Ontario, as I am sure the minister knows. The problem regarding employables on welfare is caused to a large extent by the failure of the federal government to do something about creating employment. I think the minister cares about people, so I am asking her to discuss with the Minister of Finance whether Ottawa should not be sharing the increased cost of welfare in cities.

[Mr. Beatty.]

Miss Bégin: Mr. Speaker, we have just reached quite a significant agreement regarding financial arrangements with the provinces. The money involved is Canadian taxpayers' money. Under the agreement the provinces can set up whatever programs they think appropriate to cope with regional and local problems. Some provinces, such as New Brunswick, have developed programs which integrate manpower possibilities, services and welfare so that people on welfare rolls can be employed. It is not my fault if the government of Ontario decided not to go that route.

SALES TAX PROPOSALS—DISCUSSIONS WITH QUEBEC ON FORMULA

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Prime Minister. I hesitate to interrupt his conversation. I wonder if the Prime Minister is in a position now to tell the House of Commons whether the Government of Canada has initiated or is involved in any discussions at the moment with the government of Quebec regarding any changes in formula with respect to the sales tax measure introduced in the budget which might ensure the full impact of that provision upon the province of Quebec.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member knows we always hoped that the full impact would be felt in the province of Quebec, and we have indicated that we are prepared to discuss that. As a matter of fact, we discussed it for three weeks before the federal budget. It is possible that the Quebec government may want to suggest something further. I am not aware of any further proposition which the government of Quebec has made.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, once again the Prime Minister did not answer the question. I would like to try him on another matter of economic policy which has particular impact in the province of Quebec. In debate the other night, the Minister of Finance indicated that the drafting of Bank Act revisions has been completed and the only problem is translation. In other words, the policy is set. Is it the policy of the Government of Canada to include in the Bank Act caisses populaires and credit unions?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, of course, these two institutions would be included in the Bank Act. I presume the Leader of the Opposition would like to know what is said about that. The usual practice would be for him to see the bill at first reading.

Mr. Grafftey: Preferably after the election.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. FAULKNER—APPEARANCE BEFORE STANDING COMMITTEE

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. During the course of the question period the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Brisco) misled the House; I will not say that he did so intentionally. He repeated the assertion he had made outside the House that I had refused to appear before the parliamentary committee dealing with my estimates.

The facts are these. My estimates have been before that committee since March 1. The committee has not met and it has not issued an invitation to me. I would have appeared before the committee had I been asked.

JUSTICE AND LEGAL AFFAIRS

CONCURRENCE IN THIRD REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East) moved:

That the Third Report of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, presented to the House on Wednesday, March 22, 1978, be concurred in.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is not our intention to debate this motion. Indeed, we would like to see it receive speedy concurrence by the House. It has been on the order paper now for almost one month, since March 22. We have been waiting for the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) to be ready to proceed with the debate, and we feel that he has now been given sufficient time to make a statement or else that there has been sufficient time to allow the House to express itself on the recommendations in this unanimous report, the third report of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

May I say, by way of historical background, that the report arises out of an order of reference of the House dated November 18, 1977, by which the House referred the subject matter of the following private members' bills: C-206, C-207, C-239, C-241, C-318, C-325, C-348, C-399, C-400 and C-402. All these bills deal with the question of pornography and suggest amendments to the Criminal Code to provide a more precise definition of pornography or obscenity and to provide for stricter penalties.

Very briefly, the committee held a number of hearings and heard witnesses.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) has the floor.

Mr. McGrath: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was saying that the committee held a number of hearings, heard witnesses from all across the country, chiefs of police from the major cities of Canada, representatives of the churches, and representatives of the scientific and academic communities, and as a result of the evidence and of examining some of the more blatant forms of hard pornography that are in fact being smuggled into the country as part of the underworld system of distribution of this kind of trash, the committee came to the unanimous conclusion in the form of its recommendations that there should be major changes in the Criminal Code. It recommended also a new definition to deal with the subject of pornography and, more particularly, the exploitation of children in this manner.

I want to pay tribute to the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. MacGuigan), the chairman of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: He is an outstanding parliamentarian and has demonstrated that he is able to preside over a committee with fairness and impartiality. I wish some of his colleagues opposite would emulate that kind of performance.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: I can assure my colleagues opposite, such as the hon. member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), that if they were to take a page out of the book of the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville, we would get much more work done in committees, and committees of the House would become much more productive.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: I commend this unanimous report to the House and I hope that the House will give it speedy concurrence. We expect that if the House does concur in the unanimous recommendations of the committee, ultimately the Minister of Justice will do his duty and bring in a bill reflecting the recommendations of the standing committee.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, may I reply briefly to the hon. member's remarks in moving concurrence of this report. Without in any way getting into a contretemps, may I say that I had hoped I might have more notice that this report would be called at three o'clock today. However, I want to second the hon. member's remarks regarding the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. MacGuigan), the chairman of the committee, and I want to compliment both that hon. member and all members of the committee on the work that they did in committee on the subject of pornography, which has concerned all members of the House and which certainly has been of great concern to myself and to my officials as well as to officials of the Department of National Revenue who are responsible for policing of the Customs Act. Also, it has been of great concern to provincial attorneys general with whom I have discussed this subject on a number of occasions, and to local police forces who are responsible for the enforcement of laws at the local level.

The committee has done a great deal of work and its report is a valuable document. Therefore, we on this side will be supporting the hon. member's motion. However, in doing so I want to place several caveats on the record. As the committee has been advised, and as I have been advised by a formal communication from the provincial attorneys general, they would not like to see this subject legislated without having the opportunity to make further representations. We discussed this matter at the federal-provincial meeting of attorneys general last fall. The provincial attorneys general had a further discussion on the subject and they indicated to me that they wanted some changes made but that they would forward to me their concrete proposals.

During the course of the committee's hearings and proceedings I received a communication from the provincial attorneys general to the effect that they wanted to discuss changes in the law relating to pornography, first, at the federal-provincial conference of attorneys general to be held in July and, second, at the meeting of the commissioners of uniformity which will be held in August. Ever since I have been Minister of Justice I have introduced amendments to the Criminal Code only after consultation with provincial attorneys general who, after all, are responsible for the enforcement of the laws that we write here.

There are two recommendations of the committee that give me some concern. I do not have the committee's report in front of me, but one recommendation relates to the fact that the provincial attorneys general may be empowered under the Criminal Code to order that a person accused of producing, manufacturing or distributing pornography be subject to trial by judge and jury only. That is to say, a provincial attorney general, in spite of the election of the accused to be tried by a judge, may order that he be tried by judge and jury.

The second area deals with the calling of expert witnesses in a pornography trial. In such a trial, expert witnesses as to what community standards are will not be allowed to testify. I have some real grave reservations about that. It is one matter which I am considering and thinking about a great deal. It is a matter on which I want to consult the provincial attorneys general. There is a question as to whether that recommendation, if enacted in the Criminal Code, would not be contrary to the Bill of Rights, which provides that people are entitled to due process and a full and fair defence. I know this matter troubled the committee a great deal, and I know its recommendations have been made in very good conscience. On both sides of that committee, very good lawyers are represented.

What has been fundamental to our system of law is that an accused person is entitled to put to the court, or to the court and the jury, the fullest possible defence. It is up to a jury to weigh whether that defence is any good or not, and then make its judgment. At this point, without further consideration and study I am very hesitant about adopting the proposal that the accused is not entitled to call experts. I have some concern and fear that in fact it is contrary to the Bill of Rights.

I agree with the concern expressed by the committee in the substance of the report. In a statement to the committee, I indicated my concern about the issue. I hope to be able to introduce amendments to the Criminal Code very shortly, as I indicated to the committee. These amendments would deal with the recommendations of the committee's report, deal with the question of the definition of pornography, deal with the question of the use of children in the manufacturing and portrayal of pornography, and the banning of certain explicit acts by children in the production of pornography. I hope to introduce amendments which would increase the penalties applicable to both the manufacturing and distribution of pornography. In fact, I hope to introduce those amendments very shortly. In reacting to my concern about the issue of pornography, the concern of provincial attorneys general, and the concern expressed in the committee's unanimous report, I hope to introduce those amendments shortly.

Generally we on this side of the house would support the hon. member's motion, but I wanted to make those two caveats. I am not privy as to how long this parliament will be sitting, but I hope to have an opportunity to introduce the amendments of which I speak. I look forward to hearing the reactions of provincial attorneys general to the specific amendments I am proposing, which would result in the Criminal Code being amended to deal more effectively with the question of pornography. I indicated that in my statement before the committee, and it was indicated in the report of the committee.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I was very happy to hear the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) indicate that he would second the motion of concurrence in this report, which was the unanimous report of all parties. As has been stated by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), we have attended many meetings and we have heard many witnesses.

It was refreshing to see the Minister of Justice displaying this afternoon that flexibility he can exercise on many occasions. When he came before us and gave his first statement, he was of the opinion that the definition of pornography under the Criminal Code was adequate. If we check the precedents in reference to that definition, we will find that was the greatest part of the inadequacy in reference to our study of this report. When one is dealing with community standards, one must remember that community standards differ from one place to another. I was most happy to see that now we have a Minister of Justice, even if he is leaving us, who is flexible enough during the short period of time between now and the election. He has changed his mind and now believes the report is correct, that we require a new definition of pornography.

In reference to the two reservations which were mentioned under the caveat he was filing, I emphasize the report recommended that only expert witnesses would not be able to testify in reference to community standards. We in this party believe the jury system is fundamental to the freedom and liberty of the subject. If we are to use the words "community standards" in any definition, then it should be a decision made by juries without confusion from various experts. On the other hand, the report was most silent in reference to calling expert witnesses regarding other definitions or matters referring to pornography.

In reference to the question of trial by judge and jury, I am sure the Minister of Justice, with his wisdom, knowledge and expertise, as well as that of people within his department, is well aware that an indictable offence of this nature falling under the proper part of the Criminal Code, after some teeth have been put into the act, would mean that anyone could be tried by judge and jury throughout the country. Election by judge alone would not be legal under the Criminal Code as it stands now. Thus, there would be no real fundamental change.

The only province which would experience a change is the province of Alberta, from whence I come. That is the only province in Canada that can eliminate the jury, even on a serious murder trial. The reason for that is no one has ever amended the Northwest Territories Act which is incorporated in the Criminal Code. It was incorporated there because at the time the Northwest Territories Act was drafted there were not enough people in Alberta to gather together 12 good men and women to form a jury. The population of Calgary now is growing at the rate of 3,000 per month, so it is obvious that problem has been overcome.

I am happy to see the Minister of Justice has endorsed the report, has changed his opinion, has been very flexible, and is ready now, as he has done, to second this report, which was a unanimous study by all members of the House. I believe this report will be accepted across the land as a step in the right direction to stop the filth factory of material which is being imported from the United States into Canada.

It was shown in committee that $20 million was made in the maritimes alone from the sale of periodicals, magazines and other types of equipment which were studied by members of the committee. Perhaps the minister is straddling the line when he agrees and votes for the report, and files these caveats. I hope he does not straddle it too far, but stays with the unanimous recommendations of the report. We do not want half a piece of pie; the committee recommended that we get the whole pie and eat it.

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I was a member of this particular committee and I have no hesitation in supporting the bald recommendations on changes to the Criminal Code. However, I have severe hesitation in accepting some of the rhetoric which went into the report and which is not relevant to the actual changes recommended by the committee.

I should like to review the specific changes recommended by the committee so that we do not mislead the press; the press is easily confused on this particular subject. The specific changes in the report dealt with the creation of a new section on child pornography. My party supports that change. It did not ban the testimony of expert witnesses entirely, but that testimony was banned in a limited sense. It dealt with the evidence that could be put forward to a jury regarding current community standards, which continue to be the criteria for cases of this nature. There is no ban in this report, as the press unfortunately has reported frequently, on the calling of any expert witnesses on the subject. What the committee decided was that to determine community standards a jury is a better forum than to allow someone from a university, who may not be as familiar with those community standards, to make a report with regard to them.

The private members' bills that were submitted to this committee represented a great case of overkill. In fact, if those private members' bills had been allowed to pass we probably would have wound up banning the bible since it specifically describes acts which would clearly have come within the changes that were contemplated by several members of this House in terms of the Criminal Code.

To show how dangerous this particular subject can be, when we look at the question of what we can control and what we cannot control, the decision of the Ontario censorship board in which it banned a movie called "Pretty Baby" is a classic case—

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): And rightly so.

Mr. Leggatt: This is a movie that has tremendous literary merit, a movie that the people of Ontario will no doubt see by simply crossing the river to Hull, making a lot of money for some people in Quebec. I am not against that, but that same censorship board approved a movie called "Taxi Driver" and that movie dealt almost exclusively with violence, sex and teenage prostitution. The movie the board banned dealt with the subject of a child who in her early years matured in a house of prostitution but was able somehow to come out of that grime and have a successful life. There is an interesting story in the Louis Malle movie.

This is the difficulty when members of parliament start sitting in judgment on matters that have great artistic merit. There is always an agony in this business in determining whether there really is sexual exploitation, or whether there is literary merit in what happens.

Therefore, I support the bald recommendations of the committee, but I stand here warning the committee and the minister that when it comes to changes in the Criminal Code which deal with censorship we should not ban those things which have classic literary merit, and that judgment is always going to be a discretionary judgment. It is not going to work if you apply the standards of some small community to the whole province in respect of what the people can or cannot see.

We are not opposed, of course, to increasing the penalties that are involved, but we are opposed to a present law, the Customs Act, that allows a customs officer, with no experience whatsoever as to what has literary merit, to decide on his own that a certain publication is unworthy for the eyes of Canadians. When you look at the junk that is allowed presently into this country, junk that is full of exploitation, junk that has no literary merit and junk that is shown in every film theatre across Canada—

Mr. Woolliams: Which side are you on?

Mr. Leggatt: Eldon wants to know which side I am on. He is always confused in this place. When you make this kind of decision the matter should not be considered in the simplistic way in which private members have advanced, that somehow all you have to do is ban the description of the sexual act and that will solve all our problems in respect of pornography. That will not happen. There has to be a judgment decision. Otherwise works of literary merit in this country and in our heritage would all be banned, and the great art of history would be banned. That is what will happen if you paint this subject with a broad brush.

If I can go back to the narrow question of the specific recommendations that were made by the committee, they are largely supportive of the position taken by the province of British Columbia which left the question of undue exploitation to the decision of a judge and jury. In this case it would now be left to the jury. I agree with that recommendation. There must be some kind of subjective decision in respect of what is or is not pornography.

It is pointed out that child pornography is a very special matter, and that the abuse of children is something that should be placed under control. We support that recommendation. We support the recommendations about increasing the penalty. However, there is a good deal of rhetoric, and if this were taken to its logical conclusion—and I am not talking about changes to the Criminal Code which the committee recommended and which are sound and wise—we would be banning anything that offends someone. As a result we would find that the cultural heritage of this country would become a pretty thin thing indeed. That will happen if we overreact on this subject.

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to delay the giving of concurrence in this motion, and I sense that, following the lead of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford), the House will shortly be ready to do that. However, I do think it appropriate that I make a few comments.

I begin by thanking those hon. members who have made comments of personal commendation. Personally, I feel that the lion's share of credit should go to the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) and those other members on all sides of the House who put forward the bills which enabled the committee to deal with the problem that is the subject matter of this report.

I want to say a few words because this is a subject in respect of which rhetoric is of some importance. I agree with the comment of the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt) that one must not confuse the recommendations and the rhetoric either of the report or of any other speaker in this House. Nevertheless, I think it is very important to observe that the committee, in making its recommendations, on the one hand is not greatly extending the law that exists in radically new directions, but on the other hand is considerably deepening the law, if I may put it that way, in respect of the rights of two target groups who have not always been considered in our legislation. Those two groups are women and children.

Having regard to children, the recommendations of the committee are obviously there for all to see; they are to protect children from exposure to the material and also to protect them from being exploited by being involved in its production.

Having regard to women, I think the point has been missed by some of those in the media who have criticised our report. It is important to realize that the changes in the law and in the definition of the law which we have suggested, other than those aimed at protecting children, are particularly aimed at bringing the woman's point of view into our law in this area for the first time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacGuigan: That was our purpose in introducing the concept of the degradation of the human person, which expressed the views of women witnesses who appeared before us and who wrote us from across the country.

It was also the purpose behind broadening the definition through severing the link which previously had to be found between violence and sex, and the other categories and sex, and to say that even if sex were not involved, these other categories of crime and horror and violence could in themselves be considered to be obscenity when there is undue exploitation. The purpose the committee had in mind was to give protection in this branch of the law, for the first time, to the sensibilities of women, as the principal target group of most pornography.

If I may say so, I believe the people of Canada have a much more basic understanding of this issue than those who have written, accusing us of all kinds of intellectual and moral sins, comparing us to Cromwell, Mao Tse-Tung and others in history who perhaps are often thought of as having less savoury reputations. The people, as my own constituents have manifested, support such legislation very strongly, and I am sure that the members of this House who were involved in this study have received a great deal of support for the recommendations which we have made.

It is with a sense of pride that all of us who were involved with this subject can stand before the House and present this report and vote its concurrence.

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, as the seconder of the motion for concurrence, I would like to say a few words with respect to this matter. Much has been said of the leadership given in this field by my colleague from St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) and the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. MacGuigan). All of the laudatory comments that have been made with respect to them are certainly deserved.

The record and the country ought to know who were the other members involved in this matter, and it is extremely important that it be understood that this was an all-party committee.

It was expressing a concern felt in every part of Canada with respect to what is occurring and what is seen on the newsstands and what is available to people of tender years, for example—the exploitation, as the member has said, of women, and a whole host of other areas. I would like to say to the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville, to my friend, the hon. member for St. John's East, and others on the committee that not only was the work of the committee supported in the letters and mail from one's constituency, particularly with reference to the members of the committee who received mail but it was supported from all over and from my own constituency as well. I can report to the hon. member that with respect to the official opposition the work of the committee was supported throughout.

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, I think it is important that we identify the members who served on that committee, and, indeed, who were the sponsors of the bills which were the subject matter of the reference to the committee. The hon. member for York South (Mrs. Appolloni), the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid) the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Friesen), the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Whiteway), the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp), the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Lawrence), the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale) and the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt) also concurred in this report.

I want to make this clear in view of what occurred just a few moments ago when the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) was tempted to ask the hon. member for New Westminster where he stood with respect to the report. It is important to note, as the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville has said, that the rhetoric—a word sometimes used in a pejorative way—and the sentiments and feelings expressed in that rhetoric, has been expressed by most people throughout the country.

If there is a standing vote today with respect to this report, I hope that the hon. member for New Westminster and his party will support it.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The answer is "Yes, we will."

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I think it is extremely important that there be an expression from this parliament that is more than merely deep concern with respect to what we see, hear and read, and in regard to the exploitation that occurs, but that it goes against Canadian society. This parliament will not be fooled into thinking that the people of Canada are not extremely concerned about it.

I was not a member of the committte, nor did I sponsor a bill, but I supported the idea and I am pleased to be able to second this motion. I hope that if a vote is called it will have the support of all members of this House.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for St. John's East, seconded by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton, moves:

That the Third Report of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, presented to the House on Wednesday, March 22, 1978, be concurred in.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Carried.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Are there yeas and nays on this vote?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I asked the House if the motion was carried and the House concurred.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, is there—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I heard no negative voices at all.

Mr. Woolliams: I did not hear you say "Are you all in favour?" Just because it was a unanimous report does not mean that the yeas and nays should not be called.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I put the question, and the question was carried. I did not hear any negative voices. If I had heard a negative voice I would have asked for the yeas and nays, but I did not.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

REGULATIONS AND OTHER STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS

CONCURRENCE IN HOUSE REPORT OF STANDING JOINT COMMITTEE

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), I would like to move concurrence in the fourth report of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments. This report was tabled, and it is recorded in Votes and Proceedings for April 13. It deals with the rights of parliament, and I would think that, as happened in the case of the previous report, in which we had unanimous concurrence, it will receive the same treatment on behalf of the members of the House.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The motion stands in the name of the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), and in order to safeguard our procedures I would want to know that the hon. member for Peace River has given his consent that the matter be moved on his behalf.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I wish to inform this House that the hon. member for Peace River has given his consent, and so it is quite in order from that point of view for the hon. member for Brandon-Souris to move the motion. I spoke to him directly.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That being the case, does the House consent that the matter be moved in this way at this time?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Dinsdale (for Mr. Baldwin) moved:

That the fourth report of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments, presented to the House on Thursday, April 13, 1978, be concurred in.

He said: I do not wish to delay the proceedings of the House because I know that we all want to get on with the budget debate. I would merely like to reinforce the unanimity presented in the committee. The committee is chaired by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) and co-chaired by Senator Forsey; thus it had all-party support in the joint committee.

The subject has been discussed in this House on many occasions, and without further comment on my part I would ask for the unanimous consent of the House.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The House has heard the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

HAZARDOUS PRODUCTS ACT

Question No. 995—Mr. Howie:

Since January 1, 1977, has the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs banned or recommended against the use of (a) clothing because of its flammability (b) medicine containers because of danger to small children?

[Mr. Dinsdale.]

Mr. Alan G. Martin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): (a) November 2, 1971, all textile fibre products for consumer use that are hazardously flammable were banned from advertisement, sale or importation into Canada under the Hazardous Products Act. At the same time, a separate more stringent minimum flammability level was established for children's sleepwear and on April 1, 1972, articles of bedding (blankets, sheets, bedspreads, etc.) were similarly regulated at the more stringent level. Approximately five clothing products were seized in 1977. (b) As medicines come within the purview of the Food and Drugs Act, the packaging of such products falls within the jurisdiction of the Department of National Health and Welfare Canada. CCA did, however, amend the Hazardous Products (Hazardous Substances) Regs. on July 21, 1977 so that household products containing toxic amounts of petroleum distillates, turpentine, methyl alcohol and pine oil be packaged in child-resistant containers. The amendment specifies that as of October 1, 1978, affected products packaged on or after July 15, 1977 must be packaged in child-resistant containers. Prior to the above amendment, the Hazardous Products (Hazardous Substances) Regulations required child-resistant containers on certain corrosive drain cleaners, cyanoacrylate adhesives and certain liquid wood furniture polishes.

PARKS CANADA

1. With reference to the answer to Question No. 835, what are the details of (a) summer student employment amounting to $330,000 (b) park awareness of $140,000 and what are the names of the projects and/or particular programs?

2. What are the details for the $1,000,000 to accelerate reconstruction of Highway 430 within the boundaries of Gros Morne National Park?

Mr. Ross Milne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. (a) Details of summer student employment are given below by region. 1. (a) How many persons have been hired to date, in Ottawa, under the Federal Labour Intensive Programme (FLIP) allotment to the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources Office of Energy Conservation (b) how many have been hired through Canada Manpower or the Public Service Commission?

2. How many relatives of employees in the Office of Energy Conservation have been hired by the Office, including those under FLIP, in the last year?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): The Department of Energy, Mines and Resources reports as follows: 1. (a) 124 persons. (b) 110 through the Canada Manpower Centres, 14 through the Public Service Commission.

2. Seven.

CBC-TV PROGRAM GUIDES

Question No. 1,321—Mr. Scott:

1. Does CBC mail copies of its French language TV program guides to the newspapers and, if so (a) to how many newspapers (b) under whose authority (c) what class of mail is used and for what reason (d) what is the annual cost?

2. How long has the practice of sending out the guides been followed by CBC and/or Radio Canada?

3. Are TV program guides sent out in the English language and, if not, for what reason?

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows: 1. Yes. (a) 283 French and English dailies and weeklies throughout Canada. (b) By a decision of CBC management under the Broadcasting Act. (c) First class, for reasons of speed. (d) Thirty cents per piece, totalling $4,414.80 per year.

2. Since La Semaine à Radio-Canada began publication in 1952.

3. Not in the same format as the French services division publication, which serves as a source of information for its subscribers as well as for newspapers, but extensive typed program notes and listings are distributed to all newspapers by the English services division.

CBC—TV STATION AT SEPT-ILES

Question No. 1,330—Mr. Blouin:

1. During the past five years, did CBC carry out any studies with a view to setting up a television station in Sept-Isles, Quebec and, if so, at what cost?

2. Will such a facility be constructed and, if so, on what date?

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows: 1. At a public hearing of the CRTC on May 17, 1972, CBC officially announced its intention of establishing its own French television production facilities in Sept-Iles. However, long and difficult negotiations over the purchase of a site necessitated the choice of an alternative site and, as a consequence, the revision of construction plans and specifications. Meanwhile a transmitter at Sept-Iles has relayed the program service of the Matane station since late 1973. Studies carried out in this regard were part of the CBC's over-all operations and were not costed separately.

2. At a CRTC hearing on October 18, 1977, the CBC reiterated its intention of carrying out the Sept-Iles project and has stated that it expects to be operating a production centre there by the fall of 1980.

CAPITAL BUDGET OF PETRO-CANADA

Question No. 1,358—Mr. Haidasz:

What is the budget for Petro-Canada for the fiscal year 1977-78 and what amounts were allocated to (a) exploration of various sources of energy (b) research of energy supplies?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Petro-Canada reports as follows: See Order in Council P.C. 1977-3594 of December 22, 1977, for the capital budget of Petro-Canada for the financial year 1978. (a) 1978, $140 million; (b) 1978, $2.5 million.

CANADA STUDENT LOANS PROGRAM

Question No. 1,423—Mr. Elzinga:

1. Since 1964, what was the total amount that the government allocated to the Canada Student Loans Programme?

2. How much of the loan money owing to the government (a) has been repaid by the recipients (b) is still outstanding?

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): 1. The total value of loans authorized under the program from 1964 to June 30, 1977, was $1,093.7 million.

2. As of June 30, 1977. (a) $485.5 million had been repaid to banks. (b) $608.2 million was outstanding at banks. This figure includes $342.7 million for which students have not yet become liable to repay because they are still enrolled.

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed, from Tuesday, April 18, consideration of the motion by Mr. Chrétien that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the government.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, we are now back to the main budget motion. What I am going to do today is put forward what I think are the good features of the budget and some of the features which are not so good.

First, the good news. I want to thank the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) for putting into the budget amendments to the registered retirement savings plan provisions to make them more flexible and thereby attract more savings. When I spoke on this matter two years ago and made the proposal to the then minister of finance, the Hon. Donald Macdonald, he said he would put the matter before the committee that served him in the Department of Finance and get their judgment on it. I was very pleased to see it in the budget two years later.

To give an idea of the importance of this matter, it should be remembered that just seven years ago about 360,000 Canadians invested in registered retirement savings plans. In his budget address the minister said there are now nearly two million, a six-fold increase in seven years. With these amendments I think that over the next five or ten years we can look forward not only to a 20 per cent increase but to as high as 40 or 50 per cent. This not only helps the individual to save for his later years in addition to the universal programs that are in place, but it provides the nation with more capital with which to finance the heavy capital intensive programs we face in the next two or three decades.

The other advantage is that the more people who put money into this type of program, the greater the stabilizing effect on the economy. I think it is clear that the advantage finally rests with the person who puts money into this type of savings.

In particular, I should like to commend the minister on the addition not only of the set number of years mentioned in the budget of up to 20 or more that a person can have as a flexible alternative at age 60 to 71 to take the money out, but also the alternative where he puts the funds into a registered retirement investment fund. This would allow those people who are capable of looking after their own funds to even increase them during the period of pay-out.

The point I am concerned about is that it is not clear from reading the budget speech or the ways and means motion that the alternative of taking out a single payment has been retained for those who want it. It will be remembered by those who know the technique of the RRSP that at one time you could just take it out in a life annuity. Then it was amended in section 146 of the Income Tax Act so that you could take it out as a single payment. Those were the two alternatives.

In 1976, I asked the minister if he would consider more alternatives to give greater flexibility so that people would not be locked into limited choices but could get the money out in a way that suited them. The minister has kept the life annuity system which many people like—you can buy it from life insurance companies as you do now—and he had added two new ideas which are good. Now you are allowed to take a number of set payments. The third choice of the RRSP, namely the RRIF, is better for those who feel able to look after their finances from age 60 to 71 and into the future.

I am concerned, however, that he may have taken out, inadvertently, the alternative of the single payment. Some people may want the freedom of taking out the money and paying the full tax. If we are to encourage people to save, I think we must do everything we can to make the plan as flexible as possible and give them a choice. I think this would bring more people into the plan. The primary aim is no longer just saving for the future but saving for the health of the nation.

I should like to commend these proposals to the government. I am sure that after the next election they will be added to the plan. I cannot take away from the government, however, that they have done as I asked two years ago and I should like to thank them for that.

There are other proposals which I made in my speech in 1976 and one which was made by the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Friesen). He suggested that when a person came to the age where he could take money out of the RRSP, if he wanted to he be allowed to add a church, some sort of university or any form of charitable institution to share the money instead of just a spouse. That would still give the individual the choice and the money would go some place where it would do some good under the tax law and help the country out as well. I think that should be added to the list of proposals I made two years ago.

There is another choice that the government should consider as well as the one advanced by the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock. Banks, credit unions, trust companies and the like could hold the money, and then let the individual take it out at his convenience and pay tax on it. This would give maximum freedom to the individual. Some people feel uncertain about the future at age 60 to 71 and might like to postpone payment, or take smaller payments in the earlier years and larger ones as they get older when the costs of medical care are likely to arise. Individuals who have worked hard all their lives and done without recreation and holidays might like to spend a lot of money in the first years, on the other hand, and have less in later years. We should not be concerned about what the individual does with his money. He should have the choice as long as he pays income tax on what he receives. I think these additional proposals should be considered by the committee that works under the Minister of Finance when drafting future budgets.

I conclude these remarks by saying to the government once again that, as a member of parliament and as a Canadian, I appreciate the willingness of the Department of Finance to accept the positive ideas that bring improvements about.

Now I come to the bad news, Mr. Speaker. As I have said many times before in this House, I have watched ministers of finance take on the job with enthusiasm for the recognition and the great honour that the prime minister of the day has placed in them by giving them this onerous task. I have seen minister of finance after minister of finance go down the drain by being handed a budget to deliver in this House which in essence destroyed that minister. I saw it happen back in 1956. The Liberal minister of finance of that year disappeared without a trace because of the unhappy budget of 1956. I have seen this happen to minister after minister. I have recited their names and what happened on previous occasions.

I asked this new minister, having great faith in his background, coming as he does from a small town where common sense is supposed to prevail, to try and avoid this type of fate for himself. Obviously he had the confidence of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). He had the confidence of this House because he was well liked and is well liked. But yet he had to bring in a budget the like of which we heard on April 10. Why this budget is bad is simple to explain. Essentially it is the same as the last four budgets, those of 1974, 1975, 1976 and 1977. The budgets of the last five years have been neutral budgets. They have tried not to go one way too far or the other way too far because of a particular mythology which is held like an article of faith by the financial advisers of the government. These advisers believe that there is a relationship which is contradictory—having unemployment on the one hand, and inflation on the other. The name for this mythology is the Philips curve. In using the Philips curve one tries to help the unemployed by doing things to make more jobs available but it increases inflation.

On the other hand, in trying to do things to reduce inflation it adds to the unemployed. This idea that one works against the other has been analysed and analysed over the last 20 or 30 years. Without any exception, to my knowledge, every analysis shows that by quantitative analysis this theory of the Philips curve is wrong.

Instead of simply ending my comments when I spoke to the minister on his mini-budget last fall, I put forward a sample idea of how the minister could fight both unemployment and inflation in the same move. I labelled that proposal "potential budgeting". I pointed out the precedent of 1964 that exists in the United States. At that time the situation there was very similar to the situation we have in Canada today. It was not as serious, but it was similar with much unemployment and rising inflation. They also had a budget deficit as we have now. The president at that time, President Kennedy, accepted the advice of his new adviser, Mr. Heller, and deliberately reduced taxes to the extent of $10 billion. This caused one tremendous uproar across the United States. But because those tax reductions were at a time when there was unemployment and unused plant capacity it precipitated a rush of work, thus giving people jobs. When the year was over the big gainer by $19 billion was the government of the United States. In other words, there was a situation which could only be described as taking advantage of the potential.

If one uses the theory of potential budgeting it must be recognized that it can only be used at a time when there is unused plant capacity and when there is available a labour supply. In providing tax reductions they must be aimed at those things which the country and the people need and which are not presently available. There is no use trying to encourage people to build more plant capacity when there is already more plant capacity than needed. There is no lasting benefit in providing temporary jobs. That solves nothing. If tax incentives are put forward to produce things that people do not have and need, people will buy them.

I gave the minister one or two examples in that speech last November. He asked me then if I would present these ideas to him in written form. I did this in the form of a letter. In that letter I pointed out that these were not the end of all his problems but these ideas primarily were an example of where I thought we could provide $1 billion, a new year of production and consumption, and where the multiplier effect of two or three times would bring back to the various governments in Canada more money than the tax reduction had amounted to. When a tax reduction is given on items which people are not using and no longer making, there is no loss to the balance of ways and means. One simply says that if one does these things, there will be no tax or that the tax will be reduced so much. Therefore, it would not hurt the balance of ways and means, which the minister could not afford at this time with a big deficit.

However, it would provide these incentives to people to buy goods and have them produced and there would be a net gain. This net gain would show up not only in the wages of the people employed but also in the reduction of the social costs of unemployment insurance and social welfare. As these goods go through the system, the multiplier effect takes place and the various governments along the way would probably end up with $2 billion in extra revenue.

I think the minister was most impressed by my discussions with him but he had to take the matter up with his advisers. I will not quote his whole letter to the House, but I will quote two sentences because they say it all:

> Your proposal would represent a major departure from the general policy of only permitting deductions with respect to assets used for the purpose of gaining or producing income. In my view, allowing deductions for such personal expenditures would create a dangerous precedent and might seriously erode the tax base.

I knew the minute I received that letter, which is dated March 2, 1978, that the minister had signed a letter written by his advisers who had turned down my proposal. In essence, my proposal was simply that on the 17 things I had listed which were needed and wanted by the people and the country and which were not being produced he should allow an individual in Canada to buy those items and then be allowed an exemption against income tax for the amount spent.

For example, if a person is asked to buy a heat pump to extract the heat out of the ground, out of water, out of the air, or even from a pile of rocks so as to heat his house, that person would have to spend in the neighbourhood of $1,000 to $3,000, depending on the type of equipment, size of his house, and so on. That means that by spending that amount of money, that person would eliminate the need to purchase oil and gas. He would be able to eliminate monthly and annual fuel expenses. His monthly charge would be replaced once and for all by a capital payment. If that man and his family were in business, every expense like this would be looked at under the Income Tax Act as the expenditure of money to make money, as the minister points out. I suggested that the same privilege which is given to businesses to encourage them to spend money to make money be given to the individual homeowner or the man who owned a high-rise, or who owned a business establishment or any other form of business which could reduce the money spent on forms of energy which are becoming short in supply and more costly. You replace a monthly bill with a once and for all capital expense good for 20 or 30 years.

This proposal is not necessary for businesses because it is already in the tax law. However, there are four million, five million or six million homes in Canada that would immediately benefit if the minister had accepted that proposal. There are any number of high-rises where businessmen who own them could take advantage of it.

In any case, my point is simple. The minister signed a letter turning down this proposal, even though he himself personally liked it, on the ground that it would create a dangerous new precedent. Imagine treating an individual in Canada fairly, like you treat a business, being a dangerous precedent according to the financial advisers of the government! In effect, these very sincere individuals who know all the precedents have unwittingly destroyed that minister. Now he cannot go out and face the people of Canada, or even the people of his constituency, and say "I gave the individuals in this country the same treatment as we give to business. If a business goes out to save money by putting in new equipment, it can get a reduction; but if you as an individual do it, you cannot because I yielded to my financial advisers."

That is the key issue in all of our western democracies. Our governments have become so complex—governments are into everything today—that we have had to develop these huge advisory groups, in a simple word called a bureaucracy, who go on year after year and develop these great pyramids within the system. They are so used to funneling advice to ministers that they, in effect, become the decision makers.

The test today in our western governments of a minister, particularly the Minister of Finance who carries the can finally, is that the elected representatives of the people who go into the executive or the cabinet exert some control over this solidly entrenched bureaucracy.

On the basis of the principles I have put forward, I doubt whether 5 per cent of the people of Canada would object to that type of proposal. I know the minister did not object. He thought it was a good proposal. However, his advisers say it is a new precedent. When a business puts money into assets, that is a deduction. When an individual does it, that is a dangerous precedent.

I know the reason the advisers say that. They agree we will not lose any taxes on these 17 different items I listed, but they feel that somebody may come along and name another item that will save the individual money and people will ask for that same privilege to be applied to that item. I can accept the logic of that. However, I still say why not apply it?

I can accept that in the national interest we have to save more money. People are doing that with RRSP's. It is not the only way, but it is one way that we do it. We not only have to save money out of our income, but we save money by looking after our affairs in such a way that our costs are less. To get at the root of this cost-push type of inflation we are suffering from, the government should not only encourage business to reduce costs, for which they give them incentives, but also it should give that inducement to individuals. This was the push of my proposal. This was the suggestion that I made, in a constructive way, I hope. The minister accepted it.

When the minister came in with the budget, and when he came in with that letter a month before the budget, I knew that the public servants were still in charge of the writing of the speech for the minister. Therefore, my heart, and I hope the heart of every politician, goes out to a very fine gentleman, the Minister of Finance, who really took it on the chin on April 10.

The minister knew that economically this country was in a bad way. He knew this country was not strong. He knew the people of this country were worried. Every time they picked up a newspaper, listened to the radio or television, they heard all the bad news.

The current thing is the shaky state of the dollar. The minister is not wrong when he says that he wants the dollar to float. That is a sound policy. However, once you let the dollar float, then inflation is purely a national matter, not an international matter. When you have a pegged dollar, inflation can be exported or imported, but not when you have a floating dollar.

The minute the minister came out with a policy of a floating dollar and allowed the public servants to sneak in and monkey around on the excuse they were stabilizing the ups and downs of the market, they helped destroy that minister. They created a state of uncertainty among those who invest or speculate in the currencies of various countries. They knew there was a possibility of making money on speculation.

If the dollar is floating freely, one speculator fights another speculator. The one who made the wrong guess would take a beating. That would stabilize it. However, when the Bank of Canada monkeys around and puts in blocks to slow the slide of the dollar, you create a situation of great uncertainty as to what the policy is which gives maximum opportunity for the speculators to raid the dollar.

The minister was forced to bring in a neutral budget. The only thing he did in trying to get at the question of costs was reduce the sales tax temporarily in order to get by the election. It will not have any more effect than the mini-budget of last fall or the budget of a year ago. When the facts come out and inflation, prices and unemployment continue to rise, the Minister of Finance will take the blame.

For five years we have had these neutral budgets because the public servant does not know what to do. He will not accept these new theories of potential budgeting. He will not accept any new precedents. The only thing he knows is what the precedents are.

This situation is not new. I happened to be minister of a government for five years or more and I saw the same things. We knew the advice we were getting from our financial advisers was wrong, but how does a group of ordinary MPs who have become cabinet ministers do anything about it? All you have is this one type of advice. Therefore, we proposed the setting up of an Economic Council of Canada where we could have people from the business world, labour and the academics sitting as a separate institution with their experts, looking at the economy from a completely unbiased point of view and yet representing the people who have to do the work to make this country run.

The Economic Council of Canada really did not get started until 1964. It has produced over a dozen reports. For years they have asked the government to consider potential budgeting. It is so bad that when the committee was meeting in the House three or four years ago, one of the public servants got up and in that committee meeting attacked the Economic Council of Canada for the colossal gall of advocating a new theory, even though that theory had been used in the United States in 1964 and 1965.

The head of the Economic Council of Canada disappeared. They moved in new ones more tame and amenable to the view of the Prime Minister. Today we witness the Economic Council of Canada, which was designed to give at least a second point of view to the government, being allowed to die. The bureaucracy is opposed to it. It attacks the heads of the Economic Council publicly, and it knows that the government is opposed to them too. Therefore, we see this fine institution, composed of volunteers, so to speak, from the business world, the labour world and the academic world, having its advice ignored by the government. The government goes the opposite way. The evidence of what I am saying about its dying is the fact that if we look at the number of people sitting on that council—there should be about 26 or 27—it is down to half that number now, and the government is just waiting for it to die and disappear entirely.

In conclusion, the tragedy of this budget debate is not that the country will not survive; we will change governments eventually. The tragedy is to see a human being for no good cause destroyed by having to accept advice which is wrong and which has been wrong for the last 30 years. That will be the issue upon which we will fight.

Hon. Jack H. Horner (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, before rising to participate in this budget debate I read some of the speeches. I have been unavoidably away for some of the debate, but I would like to deal with the budget and the economy of the country in the context of where we are in the manufacturing world, what some of our problems are and how we are attempting to solve them.

It has been said that one of the characteristics of Canadians is to downplay our achievements, to emphasize the negative and to exaggerate the problems. Certainly all three of those things have been pretty evident in this debate. We have seen an abundance of this recently, not only in this debate but in many other places across Canada. I suppose in a way I will be attempting in this speech to redress the balance. It seems to me that it is of extreme importance that we as Canadians look at the whole picture, because without doing so nothing can really be achieved.

[Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain).]

In common with the industrial world, Canada certainly has problems, but many of our problems have been exaggerated almost beyond recognition. As Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce I must be concerned, above everything else, about our international competitive position. Canada's prosperity clearly depends on our ability to sell our products in world markets. Whenever our costs and prices get seriously out of line with those of our trading partners, the nation as a whole is in trouble, and we were beginning to have problems on this score by the end of 1975 as far as our United States markets were concerned.

For several years before, the average increase in Canada's unit labour costs in manufacturing had actually been somewhat better than those of the United States. From 1967 to 1974, for instance, our labour costs in manufacturing increased by about 35 per cent. Those in the United States increased by about 43 per cent. This was offset, I suppose, to some extent by the rise in the value of the Canadian dollar during that period, so that by 1974 Canada's labour unit cost picture in United States dollars was slightly worse than the U.S. manufacturing picture.

The big disparities, however, really emerged in 1975. In that year unit labour costs in manufacturing rose by 16.4 per cent in Canada compared with 7.8 per cent in the United States, a sharp reversal of the picture between 1967 and 1974.

It was against this background that the program of prices and incomes controls was launched. Steadily, the growth of wage costs in manufacturing has been brought into line with that of the United States. In 1975, new wage settlements in manufacturing increased by 18 per cent in Canada compared with 10 per cent in the United States. These were in the first year of contracts. In 1977—and this is the point I want to make—new wage settlements for the first year of contracts were down to 7.6 per cent in Canada compared with 8.4 per cent in the United States. Surely, this is a remarkable achievement. I only hope that that trend continues, certainly now after April 14 when we began to remove wage and price controls.

Average hourly wage rates in manufacturing, however, continued to rise somewhat faster than in the United States in 1977, 10.8 per cent in Canada and 8.5 per cent in the United States. But what is even more important is that Canadian productivity in manufacturing increased by 4 per cent in 1977 compared with 2.2 per cent in the United States. That gives us some indication that our productivity is catching up in relation to productivity in the United States.

Even before adjusting for the exchange rate, our unit labour costs in manufacturing increased by somewhat less than they did in the United States, that is, by 5.7 per cent compared with 6.5 per cent. The depreciation of the Canadian dollar has had the useful effect of offsetting the extent to which our costs went out of line in relation to those in the United States in 1975 and 1976. By the end of 1978 we should be back in the position we were in in 1970 and 1971 with regard to manufacturing costs compared with those in the United States. The reason I am making this comparison with the United States is that Canada as a nation sells between 66 per cent and 70 per cent of what it sells in the American market.

It is clear that our manufacturing performance has recovered. Our productivity performance in 1977 was in line with our performance in the last 25 years. In that period of time manufacturing productivity in Canada increased by 158 per cent compared with 86 per cent in the United States. In other words, year by year the margin of productivity between Canadian and United States industries has been reduced, although some difficulties still remain.

There is another aspect of our competitive position which is widely ignored, and that is the steady improvement in our competitive position vis-à-vis industrial countries other than the United States. The point is that in general while our productivity has not increased as fast as it has in western Europe and Japan, our unit labour cost position has improved because inflation has been lower in Canada. Moreover, our competitive position in western Europe and Japan has improved further because of the rise in the value of their currencies vis-à-vis the Canadian dollar and the United States dollar.

The next major question about which I am concerned is the question of confidence in the business community, confidence in the consumer and confidence in the country as a whole. There is no doubt that in the last couple of years there has been a weakening of confidence throughout, I suppose, the whole industrial world. This can be seen by the advent of third world countries now acquiring tremendous wealth and becoming industrialized to some extent. People have become more uncertain about what the future holds for Canada, and there has been concern about the existence of Canada itself which has caused a great deal of apprehension and instability.

Perhaps it is natural that we should have periods in which the future looks bright and periods in which the future becomes cloudy and we become uncertain. I suppose it is inevitable that we have these periods in our country.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the minister would permit a question, or would he prefer that I wait until the end of his speech?

Mr. Horner: The hon. member can ask his question now, if he likes.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, I have been listening with interest to the statistics the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner) has been quoting. They conform quite closely with the statistics I received two days ago from the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Jamieson) which were from the Department of Finance. They show that productivity rose very strongly in Canada during the period from 1968 to 1977. It rose almost 40 per cent during that decade, a growth which was 20 per cent better than that in the United States, which is somewhat in line with what the minister has been saying.

● (1622)

As I read those statistics, I remembered the statement the Prime Minister (Mr.Trudeau) made on October 19, 1977, as reported at page 32 of Hansard.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member will be able to make his speech in due time. If he has a question, would he please put it.

Mr. Friesen: I am coming to it, Mr. Speaker. The Prime Minister said:

> We are only 80 per cent as efficient as the United States in our manufacturing sector . . . We are 80 per cent as productive—

I wonder which statement the minister would like us to believe.

Mr. Horner: If the hon. member has difficulty believing both of them, I could give him a lengthy explanation. Both are quite plausible. We have been considerably behind the United States in productivity for a number of years. We are gaining ground in productivity and making substantive gains because of the greater capitalization within our industry and our increasing ability to enter larger markets.

As I was saying, clearly we are entering a period when our confidence is increasing. There are a number of reasons for this. First, there is a renewed growth in the economy. In the last year, from the fourth quarter of 1976 to the fourth quarter of 1977 our economy grew at an average rate of 4 per cent. This is still less than is required to reduce unemployment, but it marks the beginning of a recovery. We expect a continued growth in 1978 amounting to about 5 per cent, as the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) has stated on a number of occasions. Obviously business confidence has also been improved by the restoration of our competitive position and by the strength of our export performance, with commodity exports in 1977 22 per cent higher in volume than in 1975. I, as well as the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), have put these figures on the record on a number of occasions. We had a surplus in commodity exports of about $2.9 billion in 1977, which was a substantial increase over the 1976 and 1975 figures.

Business confidence is also improving because the business corporate profit position is moving back to more normal levels, with an increase of 19 per cent in 1977 in corporate profits after tax. Moreover, the corporate profits available for investment, that is after taxes and the payment of dividends, increased by 26 per cent in 1977. It is true that the business profit position is not yet back to what is required, but very significant gains were made last year.

I think that confidence is improving also because of the growth in employment. We hear a great deal about unemployment but, as the Minister of Finance has stated on a number of occasions, there has been a substantial growth in employment. It is true that unemployment continues to be much higher than I and many other members of the House would like to see, but we have brought about an increase in new jobs in the last year by 287,000, amounting to 1,391,000 in the last five years. In my view that is a substantial growth in a country with a population as small as Canada's.

One should look at the participation factor in our economy. It has never been higher than it is now. I would like to relate back to the war years, back to 1944 when Canadians had a common goal and a common enemy and everybody was making gigantic efforts to go out into the labour force and work. More women than ever joined the labour force and worked in factories and young people sought jobs. In 1944, the participation factor was 57.5 per cent. Today the Minister of Finance stated that it is 62.4 per cent. That gives us some indication of the number of people who are now participating in our economy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Horner: In my view this is a very significant factor which should be taken into account when one considers unemployment and the creation of jobs.

There are also indications of an improvement in consumer confidence. The Conference Board's surveys, for instance, have shown that consumers tend to increase their purchases over what they had intended earlier. With the additional stimulus provided by the budget, we would expect an increase in real terms of close to 5 per cent in consumer expenditures for 1978 as compared to only 2.8 per cent in 1977.

I mentioned earlier the improvement in corporate profits which lays the ground for a renewed growth in business investment. This should begin in 1978, but will certainly strengthen in 1979. However, it must be pointed out that the current level of business investment is, in fact, relatively high. Business non-residential investment in 1977 amounted to 13.7 per cent of the gross national product, about the same as in earlier years. The average from 1965 to 1975 was 13.8 per cent, and from 1970 to 1975 13.6 per cent.

Now let us take a look at the future of this country. Canada, as a major trading nation in the world, is dependent on the health of the economies of other countries and principally the United States economy. Therefore, the expectation that strong growth will continue in 1978 in the United States is reassuring. Moreover, it is to be hoped that there will be stronger growth in western Europe in 1978 than occurred in 1977. Inflation continues to be a major international problem, but Canada is faring far better than many other countries.

Now I would like to take a look at some of the charges that have been made, particularly by the media, that the province of Alberta did not benefit from the budget which was recently announced. It was said that since Alberta does not have a sales tax, they could not be compensated by the federal government for reducing it. Many newsmen asked me about this. I say that I find the budget to be tremendously helpful to the province of Alberta.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: How?

Mr. Horner: I like to think that I contributed a lot of thought and effort to the budget announcement.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: It certainly showed.

Mr. Horner: Thank you. I hope it was evident to many Albertans as well as to people in British Columbia.

I have worked for four or five years to convince the Department of Finance that farmers owning family farms which are incorporated should have the privilege of passing their farms on to their sons, daughters and grandchildren without being burdened by the capital gains tax. This was finally understood and accepted and I was pleased to see it announced in the budget. I know that many farmers and ranchers in the province of Alberta are very pleased at this measure as well.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): You did that when you were on this side.

Mr. Horner: The hon. member is quite right. I did that for every farm except those which are incorporated. Now I have succeeded in doing what I could not do on the other side.

I should like to say a few words now about the Hall report on railroads in western Canada. Mr. Justice Hall said in his report that 2,100 miles of railway track should be upgraded to what he termed the year 2000 standards. How do you get the railroads to get to work and invest in the upgrading of that trackage? The major track through the northern part of the constituency of Crowfoot has always been a concern of mine. I presented a brief to the Hall commission when it was studying the railway situation in the west urging them to retain that line, which they did. They recommended that it be upgraded. I was particularly pleased to hear the minister announce it in his budget address. It will be tremendously beneficial not only to the constituency of Crowfoot but to the whole of western Canada, because it will encourage railroads to reinvest and they will have an increased cost allowance in the upgrading of the railway system there. This should speed up the whole rationalization of the railway trackage in the prairies. Naturally I think also of the $100 million which the federal government in investing directly in railroads to improve the trackage and thus western Canada's ability to get its products to market.

● (1632)

The government has committed itself to $75 million direct investment, over the next five years, to improve railway trackage in western Canada.

Also there have been measures to encourage investment in the development of heavy oils in northeastern Alberta and Saskatchewan. There are three distinct measures in the budget which would encourage a third tar sands plant in Fort McMurray. The increased depletion allowance from 25 per cent to 30 per cent will encourage the building of a heavy oil refinery in Cold Lake. That project is being proposed by Imperial Oil. It will be a $3 billion to $4 billion expenditure.

Pacific Petroleum is proposing another one in and around the neighbourhood of Hardisty, Alberta. That happens to be in the northern part of Crowfoot. I was pleased to have some input in encouraging the Minister of Finance to take into consideration speeding up the development of our heavy oils.

There is a third one on the drawing board by Husky Oil in the province of Saskatchewan. There is a royalty question regarding that one which has to be ironed out with that province. Husky Oil hopes to spend $600 million in the province of Saskatchewan for its heavy oil refinery. Pacific Petroleum expects to spend in the neighbourhood of $600 million, and Imperial Oil expects to spend $3 billion to $4 billion on its refinery. If we can get these projects moving along and if the decision can be made, they are tremendous projects which will encourage employment all across Canada in the building of these refineries.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Horner: The current level of the Canadian dollar will stimulate significantly our exports, as well as encourage Canadian industry to supply more of the domestic market. In other words, Canada should look at the opportunities for improvement in our trade position which is affected by the present exchange rate. I like to look ahead with considerable confidence. It would be foolish to ignore current problems. The country as a whole has faced up to the problems in the past few years. On the average, Canadians are richer today than they were in past years, despite heavy and high unemployment.

As Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, I should outline some of the things we are attempting to do in my department. These things will benefit Canadian industry, our trade picture and small independent businessmen.

Much has been said about the textile industry in the province of Quebec, and whether or not the government has assisted that industry. Not only has this been said about the province of Quebec, but it has been said about other provinces as well. In the early part of April, an article appeared in the Financial Post. I should like to refer to that article to prove beyond a shadow of a doubt that the import controls on textiles assisted the textile industry. Investments in the first quarter of 1977 were up substantially in that industry. In part, the article reads:

> Gemini Fashions of Canada, Ltd., a Winnipeg outerwear producer, is projecting a 35 per cent upswing in sales, spearheaded by a nearly 50 per cent increase in its exports to 17 countries.

That is a substantive improvement in the textile industry. The article continues:

> Style Guild Ltd., a Montreal shirt manufacturer, reports a 25 per cent increase in fall bookings. Spring orders were so good it will be entering its fall season later than usual. Employment, though still below 1975 levels, has increased . . .

It continues:

> Majdell Manufacturing Co., a children's sportswear producer in Montreal, has had its best spring ever and is projecting a 50 per cent increase in sales over 1977.

I could continue to quote from that article, but I put these examples on the record because of the representations some people have made that the federal government has not helped the textile industry right across Canada with its import controls and the encouragement of investment within that industry. My department has helped substantially in many other ways. We are prepared to help them further.

I have been involved in negotiations with the opposition in order to pass the bill quickly through all stages. There is a great mood for passing legislation now. I should like the Export Development Corporation bill to pass through the House quickly. That corporation is practically out of financing to ensure and guarantee loans to customers who buy Canadian manufactured goods. The Export Development Corporation began in 1969. One can look at its accelerated guaranteeing of loans, which has been tremendous. One can compare it to the export of manufactured goods and see that the Export Development Corporation has created markets for Canadian manufactured goods, and in that way created employment.

In my negotiations with Ontario members of the opposition, I cannot understand why they are reluctant to assist me in the passing of that piece of legislation. In doing so, they know their action is very, very detrimental to the employment picture in the province of Ontario. What can one expect from the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens)? On March 14, 1978, the hon. member and I were talking about de Havilland in the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. I indicated to him that de Havilland was a going concern which employed 3,700 workers. Also I indicated that de Havilland had on order 37 Twin Otters, 17 Buffalo aircraft, eight Dash-7 aircraft and so on.

The hon. member for York-Simcoe indicated that de Havilland was one of those Crown corporations which he would put out of business, if he ever got at the reins of government. He callously disregarded de Havilland, and would throw them out of the door with one sweep of his hand. When hon. members opposite rise in the House and concern themselves with unemployment, sometimes I think they are really not serious, especially when I hear them make remarks such as that in committee. These remarks by the hon. member for York-Simcoe affected labourers and workers relatively close to home. De Havilland operates in the city of Toronto, and the hon. member's riding is somewhat north of Toronto.

I should like to refer to what my department is doing with regard to the Enterprise Development Board. Individual boards have been set up in each province. These boards have the power to guarantee loans of up to $200,000 at chartered banks. If necessary, we are prepared to increase that to $300,000. The guaranteeing of loans over and above that amount must come before the national board. Under the Enterprise Development Board, approximately $101 million of guaranteed loans to Canadian industries have been approved. Direct grants of $19 million have been made to Canadian industries for increased productivity initiatives and new products to meet Canadian demand.

Much has been said about the Federal Business Development Bank. Continually we are attempting to encourage it to become more venturesome with risk capital. The number of authorizations for the last fiscal year was 9,800, which is more than a 5 per cent increase over the previous year. The amount of dollars authorized by the Federal Business Development Bank in the last fiscal year increased 10 per cent over the previous one. That is some indication of what is being done within my department to encourage Canadian investment and to encourage Canadian industry to meet Canadian demands.

Much has been said about the operation of the Foreign Investment Review Agency. What about foreign investment coming into the country? If one looks at foreign direct investment in Canada one will see that in 1976 we had a deficit picture of minus $295 million. That was caused by a number of huge withdrawals, and I think particularly of Atlantic Richfield selling out and taking its money back across the line, as well as a number of other large companies doing the same. In 1977 we saw that situation reversed and we had an increase in direct foreign investment in Canada to plus $175 million. To me this is encouraging, and I am certain that in 1978 the trend which started in 1977 will continue.

The number of applications under the Foreign Investment Review Act has increased substantially. In each case we demand that before an application is approved the applicant prove to us that he will offer a significant advantage to Canada in the field of employment, a significant advantage to Canada in the field of investment and a significant advantage to Canadians in their right to participation in any takeover or new company coming into Canada.

We are doing a great deal within the department to encourage confidence in the Canadian industrial and manufacturing sectors. I want to deal briefly with the 22 sector studies we have set up within the department. For the first time we have brought business, labour and the federal and provincial governments together acting as a catalyst in a secretariat. They are studying the 22 major sectors within our economy to ascertain what stage they are at now, how large a market we can expect to gain in each of those sectors, and how we can obtain those gains. We are looking closely to see whether we can remove some of the duplication of tax structures that exist between federal and provincial governments, and we are looking closely to see whether—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. minister but his allotted time has expired. He may continue with unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

[Mr. Horner.]

Mr. Horner: May I just complete my remarks?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): As far as I am concerned, yes.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): I definitely heard a "no" when I asked for unanimous consent.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to begin my remarks for today by confirming that I am a member of the opposition in this House of Commons and I do not like the government we have across the way. In fact, I do not believe that Canada can stand that outfit much longer. My reason for saying that is that in a good deal of what I am going to say this afternoon I shall be remarking favourably about statements made by one of the members of the present cabinet. I am not referring to the minister who has just taken his seat. He would not want a kiss of death like that. I am referring, rather, to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin).

As she well knows, I referred in the Standing Committee on Health Welfare and Social Affairs, on Tuesday, April 4, to a speech she made on Monday, March 13, to the Sherbrooke Federal Liberal Association. The speech was entitled "The Myths of Social Policy". I told her in the committee that I have not been so excited when reading a document since the day many years ago when I first read Edward Bellamy's "Looking Backward". She is so young I do not think she knew what I was referring to, but the fact of the matter is, for a chart of what we ought to be doing in social policy in Canada today, that speech of the minister's on Monday, March 13, was indeed outstanding. I was able to persuade the committee that day to append it in its entirety to the Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence of the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs. It can be found as an appendix to issue No. 6 dated Tuesday, April 4, 1978.

I want to refer to a few things the minister said on that occasion, but before doing so may I say two other things. First, I think it should be required reading for every member of the Liberal party in this House of Commons and for every Liberal candidate who takes part in the forthcoming election, and, in particular, it should be required reading for every member of the present cabinet.

The other day the same minister made a speech during this budget debate which is to be found in Hansard for Friday, April 14, beginning at page 4528. Again, I wish to tell her that she made a very interesting and a very important speech, and I hope members of the Liberal party will read it. Indeed, I hope she is, by those speeches and the stand she is taking on social policy, causing at least a little bit of thought in the Liberal party so far as this whole field is concerned.

I shall paraphrase a few of her most important words rather than read them directly, because she did relate them to a specific item. I think the Minister of National Health and Welfare indicated the tone of both of those speeches, the one in Sherbrooke on March 13 and the one in the House of Commons on April 14, when she said words to the effect that when one has a progressive concept it should not be lost in times of economic uncertainty. She went on to urge that people not panic and question the universality of some of our programs or their indexation to the cost of living or some other measure of monetary depreciation. I thoroughly agree with that sentiment and support it as strongly as I can. Just because the government says we are in difficult times or in times of restraint is no reason for saying that this practice of restraint has to be taken out in respect of our social programs or on the people in this country who benefit from those programs.

The theme I got from both those speeches by the minister, and it ran all through them, was that instead of talking curtailment of our social programs we should be expanding them. The speech that was made to the Sherbrooke Federal Liberal Association emphasized this point when the minister said that not only can we afford more equality, we must afford it.

I stand here today in full support of what this new Minister of National Health and Welfare is saying. I deplore as strongly as I can those who argue that there should be a falling away from the universality of some of our programs or that there should be cutbacks affecting old age pensions or family allowances or medicare programs. On the contrary, I agree with the sense of pride with which the minister referred to those programs that have been developed in the last few decades as some of the best programs that we have in Canada today.

The Prime Minister, whether it was in jest or something else, referred to my friend, the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas), and myself as leftovers from the depression, but he certainly cannot say that about the Minister of National Health and Welfare. She is far too young to have any memory of the depression. She knows about it only from reading about it in the history books. However, she is aware, as a person who is alive today, of the fact that unless our society continues to exercise compassion and concern for all our people we are not worth the name "civilization" or anything else.

I shall now refer to that speech that the minister made at Sherbrooke, Quebec, on March 13. She started it quite openly by noting that in recent times there seems to have been a drift to the right. She noted the fall of certain social democratic parties in countries in Europe, and she also noted that the New Democratic Party had lost two governments in western provinces in the last two years. As I say, this was the theme of her speech: There is a move to the right and we had better face it. She goes on to say:

> But there is a danger in all this too—a danger of which I have to be aware as Minister of National Health and Welfare, of which all of us should be aware as decent human beings.

What she is saying is that the danger of which we have to be aware is the drift to the right, particularly when that drift starts to attack social programs. She goes on:

> That danger is that in the current swing of the political pendulum we will overlook the needs of millions of Canadians who are far less fortunate than we are. It is after all, very easy to turn our backs on poverty, on the struggles of a deserted welfare mother with three or four children or of a young blind person or of the 55-year-old single man crippled by accident or disease, unable to work but not old enough to receive an Old Age Pension. It is all very convenient to turn our backs on the nearly 600,000 families in Canada who are poor in spite of the fact that they do work, many of them very hard indeed.

I emphasize the next sentence:

> If we turn our backs on them we can hardly claim to be a society that believes in social justice or in the worth of dignity of humanity.

Later on, as she is going through that speech seeking to dispel all the various myths about social policy in these times, she dealt with a particular one in these words:

> Another of the cherished myths to which Canadians hold—the fourth one on my list—is that the distribution of income in Canada is already too equal and that this is destroying the incentive to work.

I am not reading from some speech, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands or I made back in the 1930's. I am reading from a speech made this year by the present Minister of National Health and Welfare. Continuing:

> To really believe that, one has to be quite blind to reality so please consider the actual figures. In 1977 the poorest 20 per cent of Canadian families received less than 6 per cent of total Canadian family income while the richest 20 per cent of Canadian families received 40 per cent of all the income. These figures are, unfortunately, very stable. The share of income going to our poor families has scarcely changed since the end of the second world war. It rises a bit in good economic times and falls in the bad, indicating that more affluent Canadians, whatever their good intentions, do make a habit of riding out recessions on the backs of the poor, but in general, the last 30 years have not seen significant redistribution of income.

This is not a speech left over from the depression, nor is it some street corner attack; this is a speech by the present minister speaking, out of her study and perception, on the problems facing many Canadians today. My hope is that this speech will be read by every member of the Liberal party in this House, and in particular by every member of the cabinet.

I have a few more lines that I would like to read from this Sherbrooke speech:

> What this means is that Canada's poor families are getting along on an average of one-seventh of the income of families on the upper one-fifth of our population. You—

I gather that the "You" referred to the Liberals who were in the audience she was addressing in Sherbrooke.

> You are likely all in that upper one-fifth. Divide your family income by seven and try to imagine what it would be like living on that one-seventh.

She goes on and refers to further statistics that are highly sophisticated and technical, but which show that Canada and the United States are twice as bad as the next worst country, Britain, and are far worse than Germany, Norway, Denmark or Sweden. She is referring to the way our income is distributed and how wealthy the wealthy are and how poor the poor are. Then she says:

> Yet we happily go along punishing the poor while we cherish the comforting myth that we cannot afford any more equality.

I am still quoting the hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare, and I emphasize the next word and the words that follow. She says:

Nonsense. Not only can we afford more equality, if we look at how well some of the more equal countries have done economically we could argue that not only can we afford it, we must afford it.

I have no qualifications to make in my praise of that speech made by the minister at Sherbrooke, Quebec, on March 13. It is a stirring call for all of us to realize that we have built up in this country over the last few decades measures of social policy that are good—and I am going to quote something she said in the House that underlines that point. But I realize that that minister is afraid that, because of the swing to the right and because of the calls for restraint, her own cabinet colleagues will yield to the pressure to cut back on those social programs. I am sure that she expresses the view, and I certainly express mine, that the answer to calls for restraint in times like these is to fight those calls with the call that really matters; namely, for more equality and for programs that will really get to and help all of the people of this country.

Not only was there that speech by the minister in Sherbrooke, Quebec, on March 13, but there is also the speech she made in this House on April 14 when she went over the programs we have developed and said:

Of course, numerous social programs which have been set up during the last decade or in the last fifteen years do not only benefit Canadians who are poor. Indeed, those social programs improve the quality of life of the vast majority of Canadians, which explains their being so popular.

Later she talks about another phase of the matter and says:

We are all richer for the fact that our society is compassionate enough to care for those of our people who need services like day care, rehabilitation, counselling or nursing home care. Even more directly, we are all made richer by the provision of universal access to complete medical care via programs instituted by federal governments over the last three decades.

I am so pleased with such statements that I do my level best to forget what the Liberals in this House were saying during the years we were fighting for improved social programs, fighting for hospitalization and fighting for medical care. I cannot really forget their opposition and the decades it took to persuade the Liberals to go through with the things they committed themselves to in 1919. Because we have this minister now saying that much of what is good for society is measured by the extent to which we have established income support programs, health programs, day care programs and programs that enable people to have a richer quality of life, I commend her and I am pleased to draw attention, as I am doing, to these two speeches of the minister, the one made in Sherbrooke on March 13 and the one made in the House of Commons on April 14.

I think it is clear that she means one should not lose a good concept in times of economic uncertainty and that people should not panic because there are attacks on programs of universality, and so on. I think we should be doing the very opposite and doing it in this House. That is why I am doing it today. The time has come to say, as some of us have been saying every chance we get, that what is needed today are improvements in the programs we have.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

The Ontario Royal Commission on Pensions is meeting in this province. I know it is a provincial commission and thus not the responsibility of this government or this parliament, but I think we all ought to be interested in the briefs presented as it travels from city to city. The press has reported most of those briefs. I hope hon. members are aware that a number of themes run through the briefs, whether they come from the Canadian Labour Congress, pensions associations, individuals, or whatever. To a considerable extent the theme is that with all we have done to establish the universal old age pension, guaranteed income supplement, Canada Pension Plan and so on, there are still many thousands of older people having a difficult time getting by and that we ought to be increasing the basic amount of old age security.

The government must not give us the line that indexing by the consumer price index every three months keeps old people in a position that they can keep up with things. The amount of the pension is always behind and the amount it is based on was inadequate to begin with. The fact is that a substantial increase is needed and practically all the briefs presented to the Ontario royal commission, or all that I have noted, have said this.

They have also made a particular point of another matter which is a real concern of mine, the fact that older women seem to have a tougher time even than older men. Women in the 60 to 65 age bracket are finding things very tough, particularly with the spouse's allowance that does not do anything for those of single status. It is also true that women between age 65 and 75 seem to suffer the discrimination that women have suffered all their lives.

I do not accept the contention that because this is a time of restraint we should not be saying these things. In a time of restraint there should be more of an attempt to divide what we have. We should not be riding on the backs of the poor or of older people to try to get our economy going. I believe attention should be paid to these appeals that are being made, so I take my stand again in these so-called times of restraint for a substantial increase in the basic amount of old age security.

I contend that we should also do something right away about the position of persons between ages 60 and 65. The spouse's allowance helps a few, but very few. It is still based on the proposition that a woman can get a pension if she is in that bracket, provided she has a man. The fact that she may have a need or some other entitlement does not help her. It is wrong in every respect.

I think on some basis we should be getting the pension at age 60. The minister comes back at times and says persons between age 50 and 65 are in trouble. I am prepared to listen to some other ways of providing pensions for people in that bracket who need them, but let us not put it on a marital basis. Most of the people in that age bracket who are in need are women. It can be said that the spouse's allowance is an equal pension because it works either way, but most who get it are women. To the extent that we do not do something for the age bracket, whether 60 to 65 or 50 or 55 to 65, we are carrying forward into later years the discrimination that women seem to have suffered all their lives.

I can mention plans like the railway pension, pensions of retired civil servants and those pensions that have not been escalated although others have—all those things should receive attention. We should also be doing something right away for our veterans. I was pleased to see that someone else has taken up the motions that my friend Jack Marshall used to move. We had one today from one of my friends to my right, calling for an increase in the basic rate of the war disability pension and the correction of the 48 per cent rule as it affects widows. I am sorry that someone on the government side said no to that motion. These things ought to be adjusted now. Let us not have the line that there is restraint. That was not the argument when these people joined up to serve the country, so let us not have that argument now.

Another thing I should like to refer to is the question of reciprocity in terms of agreements between this country and others. For a long time we expressed concern, particularly about United Kingdom pensioners in this country who do not get any escalation. We were told it was because there was no agreement and there was no legislative basis for such agreement. Last year we passed a bill which provides the legislative basis for an agreement between Canada and other countries with plans similar to ours. We are told that negotiations are still going on, but the people who are waiting for their pensions to be escalated are in many cases dying while they wait.

Medicare is one of the highlights of the social programs in this country. It is under considerable attack in this province at the moment because of the increase in fees that the government at Queen's Park is proposing. One hopes the discussions that are going on there and the minority situation in which the government finds itself may result in a resolution. It is not enough to keep and maintain medicare as it is. There are problems in terms of home care. Some of the provinces have moved way ahead in this field and there are provinces which are way behind. Surely we have reached the day where we can recognize the truth of the minister's statement which she made the other day. I shall read it again. It says:

We are all richer for the fact that our society is compassionate enough to care for those of our people who need services like day care, rehabilitation, counselling or nursing home care.

This is not a call for us to spend money or a call for us to be extravagant; this is a call for us to be a decent and compassionate society. That call is just as important in times of restraint as it is in times of affluence. That is why I was so appreciative of the speech which the minister made in Sherbrooke a month or so ago and again of the speech which she made in this House last Friday afternoon.

The other angle, of course, that is facing us is the question of a guaranteed annual income. I have been so nice to the minister up to this point that maybe I can still be her friend if I express a disappointment. It really annoys me to witness the number of times that she gets up and blames the provinces because we have not made any progress in terms of a guaranteed annual income. The leadership for these things should come from here. I regard this as just an excuse to say that the provinces are not willing. As a matter of fact, when there were three New Democratic Party provincial governments in this country at least there were three provinces which agreed.

Just before the 1974 election I remember being telephoned and asked by one of the officials in the Department of National Health and Welfare whether we would mind if the negotiations went on during the election so that progress could be made no matter which party came into power after the election. I certainly gave my approval to that idea. But all of the things this minister has been saying about our society being good for what it does for our people, about our society being good because it is a compassionate society, that it is a society which believes in justice, hinge upon what she said at Sherbrooke, that to increase the amount of equality and to increase the availability of a good, rich life to all our people we will have to crown our social legislation, our pensions, old age security, Canada Pension Plan, family allowance, medicare, housing programs and so on with a guaranteed annual income program. Because, as she says, the hundreds of thousands of people who are at work still do not have enough to enjoy life as the upper echelons in this country enjoy it. In my view, this is what a budget should have been all about, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his allotted time has expired. He may continue with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): May I just say again that I hope hon. members of the Liberal party will read their minister's speech.

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to participate in this important debate on the budget tabled last week by my colleague the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien). First I would like to congratulate him, because I think it is a remarkable budget, not only on the economic level, but also on many other aspects. I rise today in this debate to talk about a subject especially dear to my heart—federal-provincial relations. I would also like to correct the distortions and glaring misconceptions which the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) took the liberty of spreading yesterday with remarkable impudence concerning the federal-provincial perspective of the budget presented on April 10 by my colleague the Minister of Finance.

As many speakers before me have said, it is a budget which satisfies the short and medium term needs of the Canadian economy as they appear now, a responsible budget which aims to spur consumption, and hence production, while slowing down inflation, an innovative budget which, notwithstanding the comments of the spokesman for the official opposition, represents a step towards closer federal-provincial consultation on budget matters.

In this regard, I would have more faith and confidence in the views expressed by Ontario finance minister Darcy McKeough than in those of the Conservative opposition in the House, which in the last week has endeavoured to find faults in all the federal-provincial aspects of this budget. And contrary to the Conservative members in this House, here is what the finance minister of the Ontario Conservative government had to say before the provincial legislature on April 10. Dealing with the budget introduced by the Hon. Jean Chrétien, Mr. McKeough said, and I quote:

[English]

It contains a major new federal-provincial initiative to stimulate the Canadian economy and improve confidence across the country. This short-term and shared-cost action represents a significant first in fiscal policy co-ordination in Canada. Ontario has played an important role in the design, development and implementation of this proposal.

That is the view expressed by the Conservative minister of finance for Ontario. I would hope that the Conservative opposition in this House would take the trouble to listen. If they do not want to listen to us. I would ask that they listen to a man of experience and knowledge, and to good politicians too who are at the provincial level in their party but not in this House.

An hon. Member: Give some consideration to the outbacks.

[Translation]

Mr. Lalonde: A budget which is not only innovative, Mr. Speaker, but at last a budget whose overall thrust is consistent with the positions unanimously endorsed and proclaimed by the right hon. Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau) and his provincial colleagues at the end of last February's economic conference. I should say unanimously minus one, since the premier of Quebec had chosen by then to act as a sulky child, to back out at the last minute and not to endorse the final communiqué of the conference.

The reason for that unreasonable gesture is quite transparent. Chances were the conference would have shown the people of Quebec and of the other provinces that Canadian federalism can function harmoniously and lead to co-ordinated federal and provincial policies, provided all governments show good will and good faith. Now, there is nothing insulting to the Quebec government in saying it is a separatist government. It is therefore in its interest to block systematically every federal-provincial agreement or consensus in the hope that it can thus convince Quebecers that federalism does not work and never will.

Therefore, Mr. Lévesque, at that first ministers' conference, left the conference room, slamming the door. Again it was to promote the cause of separatism, as I shall show shortly, that the present finance minister refused for three weeks to say whether or not he was in favour of reducing the sales tax accross-the-board as a step to give new impetus to our economy. For three weeks, Mr. Speaker, he was unable to give an answer, unable to decide whether such a step should be taken or not. His silence had but one purpose, at least the only logical one I can imagine, and that was to allow Mr. Lévesque to commit another of his flights of language, through which he tries to stay in the public eye if not to keep his popularity with the electors, and to scream rape and prostitution and put forward a counter-proposal which tries to create the illusion that Canadian federalism cannot work. Once again his manoeuver is obvious, transparent. Obstacles are put in the way to keep the Quebec cart from going forward, and then right and left there are cries saying it got bogged down in the federal ruts. And, as usual, hon. members opposite swallowed it all, hook, line and sinker.

That is why, as the right hon. Prime Minister pointed out recently, the position stand they chose to adopt on the matter is wrong. We do not doubt their sincerity, but we have good reason to doubt their political acumen. In that regard, the unbelievable speech committed yesterday by the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) quite astonished me.

● (1722)

As usual when she deals with federal-provincial relations, the hon. member peered at the sales tax issue through her bifocals. The big bad federal government was cast by her in the darkest, most sinister perception. The poor little provinces were seen through the rosiest of rose-coloured glasses.

One heard the hon. member refer to Alice in Wonderland although she added two new characters to Lewis Carroll's famous fairy tale, the big black federal bobcat and the big provincial flamingos. The hon. member seems to think the provinces can do what they want, when they want and how they want without any obligation whatsoever to consult with the federal government even in areas such as budgetary planning, which has obvious implications for both our orders of government. Thus ten provincial budgets were recently tabled without provincial treasurers bothering to consult with the Department of Finance, even in general terms, on the budgetary options open to them and their respective economic implications for the Canadian economy as a whole. I have not heard the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) complain about that.

On the other hand, it often appears that the sensitivity and consideration which the hon. member would want the federal government to apply to federal-provincial relations would prevent that government from doing anything, even in areas under its exclusive jurisdiction, unless all provinces had previously signed a formal agreement on the dotted line.

Such is the tale we were served yesterday by the official opposition. It can only be dismissed by anyone the least bit familiar with the political realities of federal-provincial relations as electoral posturing. In fact, I am tempted to paraphrase Lewis Carroll and call it "Flora in Postureland". Why posturing? Because the hon. member purports to agree with the government's approach to federal-provincial relations and then distorts and misrepresents the facts on the sales tax issue in her fruitless attempts to show that we do not practice what we preach.

The hon. member says that federal-provincial co-operation must be a two-way street. We agree. We have said that many times and we have practised it. She says there should be an input from the provinces in federal decision-making. We agree, although we would like her to add in order to be consistent with the statement to which I have just referred that there should also be a federal input in at least some provincial decision-making.

The hon. member says that in areas of shared interest or joint jurisdiction the federal government should not adopt a take-it-or-leave-it attitude. Again, we agree. She says that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) should have taken his cues for the budget from the February first ministers' conference. The government fully agreed with that and the Minister of Finance did so.

What is all the fuss about? The fuss is about the Tories clutching at every straw in the wind to avoid being blown away in the next federal election.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: I do not have to clutch at straws to show that, in the matter of sales tax, not only were the provinces consulted, but their views had a decisive influence on the substance of the budget tabled on April 10 by the Minister of Finance.

The notion that the reduction in sales tax could well be the most effective stimulus in the country at this juncture did not come out of the blue. It has been the object of public discussion in Canada for over a year. It was broached by my colleague the Minister of Finance at a meeting with his provincial counterparts last October. It was raised again by some provincial representatives at the December federal-provincial conference of finance ministers preparatory to the first ministers' economic conference. The arguments in favour of this measure have been vigorously and publicly rehearsed through these months by prominent members of the business community and the treasurer of Ontario, among others.

No attempt was made at the first ministers' conference to deal with, or come to agreement on, the specifics of budgetary planning. Government leaders rather sought agreement on broad principles which would guide and harmonize their action in the medium and long term. One such agreement was on the need to ensure that—and I quote from the final communiqué of the conference:

—the trend of government expenditure growth should be held, on average, to less than the trend growth in the value of the g.n.p. or gross provincial product.

As a result, the Minister of Finance announced in his budget speech that the expenditure ceiling previously set by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Andras) for fiscal year 1978-79 had been lowered by $350 million. Most provincial budgets similarly reflected this federal-provincial agreement on expenditure restraint.

The tax concessions proposed by the Minister of Finance for research and development expenditures, oil recovery systems, upgrading plants and earned depletion for non-conventional projects also reflected concerns expressed by the provinces at the first ministers' conference. As for the tax advantage extended to railways, it responded to concerns privately expressed by provincial representatives, both at the first ministers' conference and at meetings preparatory to it.

But the first ministers also agreed at their February meeting that—and I quote again from the conference's final communiqué:

—the general instruments of monetary and fiscal policy should be used to encourage the growth of demand which would bring the desired growth of output and employment, at declining rates of inflation.

It was from this agreement that my colleague the Minister of Finance took his cue in proposing to the provinces a jointly-financed reduction in sales tax. It soon appeared that this fiscal instrument was by and large the most appropriate one to achieve both accelerated growth in demand and lower inflation rates.

Having tentatively reached this conclusion, the Minister of Finance and his officials initiated what are probably the most extensive pre-budget federal-provincial consultations ever in our financial history.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: They did that not only by telephone, although I cannot understand the excitement, worry and concern of the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands about using the telephone as a system of communication. In any event, it was not only through telephone calls, as the hon. member suggested yesterday, but also through a series of meetings with provincial counterparts.

• (1732)

So that everyone will know, particularly opposition members, I would like to put on the record the chronology of these consultations. On Thursday, March 23, the Minister of Finance discussed the sales tax proposals by telephone with Mr. McKeough of Ontario and Mr. Parizeau of Quebec.

On Friday, March 24, the minister was in contact with Mr. Parizeau to discuss the sales tax proposal and other issues.

On Monday, March 27, the Monday right after Easter, the deputy minister of finance got in touch with all his provincial counterparts, with the exception of Mr. Collins of Alberta, where there is no sales tax, as hon. members know. The proposal was elaborated upon and discussed by finance officials on Monday afternoon, and a series of meetings was arranged for Wednesday.

On Tuesday, March 28, arrangements were completed for meetings with provincial officials on Wednesday. By this time the Minister of Finance had tried to contact all provincial ministers of finance and had spoken with all of them, with the exception of those for Nova Scotia and New Brunswick.

On Wednesday, March 29, the minister travelled to western Canada for discussions with his counterparts in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and British Columbia and with their officials. The minister telephoned Mr. Leitch, the minister of finance of Alberta. Finance officials met with the four deputy ministers of finance of the Atlantic provinces in Halifax and with the Quebec deputy minister of finance in Quebec City. Ontario officials met with the federal deputy minister of finance in Ottawa, and the latter also spoke with the deputy minister of finance of Alberta.

Then on Thursday, March 30, the federal Minister of Finance met with Mr. McKeough and Mr. Parizeau in Montreal. Mr. Parizeau was to call back on Friday, March 31.

On March 31 the minister tried to contact Mr. Parizeau, but was told that he could not be reached.

On Saturday, April 1 and Sunday, April 2, officials confirmed a meeting of officials on Monday in Ottawa, and work proceeded in the department on the preparation of material for the meeting. The minister of finance of British Columbia, in discussion with the federal Minister of Finance, stated that instead of adding one point for six months to the two points to be financed by the federal government, British Columbia would prefer to add two points for a further three months.

On Monday, April 3, a meeting was held in Ottawa with representatives of all provinces to discuss the proposal further. A consensus emerged from the meeting that alcoholic beverages for home consumption should not be included. It was also recognized that in all provinces, with the exception of Newfoundland, tobacco products are taxed under separate legislation and should therefore be excluded. In Ontario amusements are taxed under the retail sales tax act, and Ontario officials indicated that they would prefer to exclude amusement taxes from the arrangements.

From Tuesday, April 4, to Friday, April 7, the Minister of Finance discussed the matter with Mr. Lyon, premier of Manitoba, who was in Ottawa. New Brunswick delivered its budget on Tuesday. During this period the minister was constantly in contact with provincial ministers and spoke with some of them on several occasions. He advised them that it would be desirable if they would be ready to respond to his offer should he decide to present a budget. This enabled both Manitoba and British Columbia to take the proposal into account in their budgets and to present them on the same date as the federal budget.

The deadline for completing budget preparations was Thursday evening. By this time all provinces, with the exception of Quebec, had agreed to the proposal.

On Monday, April 10—budget day—the minister telephoned all provincial ministers before delivery of the budget to confirm his proposal and officially seek their responses. Only Mr. Parizeau indicated that he would disclose his answer within a few days. All the others gave a positive response.

Is this lack of consultation? Is this a take-it-or-leave-it attitude? How can the opposition seriously talk about lack of federal-provincial consultation? How can hon. members opposite talk about paternalism and take-it-or-leave-it attitudes? Never in the history of this country has there been a federal budget in which there has been more honest, clear and precise consultation with the provinces.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: The hon. member for Kingston and the Islands likes to refer to press articles. I suggest to her that she refer to an editorial in the Ottawa Journal of April 14 which I think summarizes the situation extremely well. It says:

> Mr. Lévesque and his finance minister aside, the country should be applauding the co-operation between Finance Minister Jean Chrétien and his provincial colleagues. As the proportion of tax dollars controlled by Ottawa continues to shrink (it is now down to 40 per cent), so does the ability of the federal government to influence the course of the economy. Intelligent, non-partisan collaboration is required in these times.
> Mr. Chrétien believes that the good spirit developed at the so-called economic summit was the reason he was able to achieve such general agreement on the sales tax idea. That encounter certainly helped. The country is fortunate that provincial leadership, Quebec excepted, is now probably in the hands of more reasonable, moderate men than at any time in Canadian history.
> Mr. Chrétien sought and received help, and all Canadians should applaud that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: I am sorry that only the opposition in this House seems to be unable to applaud such a development.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, there was never any rigidity nor any paternalism in our relations with the provinces on that subject. The consultation that has taken place was more than just a series of quick phone calls. The meetings I have indicated in the file and which cover an 18-day period should satisfy any honest person that extremely comprehensive consultation has taken place during the whole period between the Minister of Finance and his counterparts of the various provinces.

This is certainly not a question of taking it or leaving it since, like all other provinces, Quebec had 18 days to suggest changes. In fact, Saskatchewan and British Columbia did so and the Minister of Finance accepted them and took them into consideration in his budget. Only the Quebec finance minister was unable to come to a decision even insofar as accepting or refusing a proposal as simple and as elementary as this one. I should note that had Quebec said no at any time during these discussions, the Minister of Finance would certainly have re-examined his proposal and reconsidered the whole issue.

But how can there be normal federal-provincial relations when a government like that of Quebec simply seems to play hide-and-seek and tries to prevent the system from working? If at times we reach a stalemate in this area, the blame does not rest with the federal government but with the Quebec government which is doing everything it can to prevent federalism from working.

Mr. Speaker, the federal government has never suggested and is not suggesting now that the retail sales tax is its responsibility. Provincial authorities set and administer this sales tax, they are the ones who must decide what type of sales tax they want to collect, whether they want to increase them, reduce them, or increase them across the board or selectively.

In this budget, we have offered to share the cost of reducing the sales tax in the various provinces without any product discrimination, and all the provinces except Quebec have accepted this offer. Like I said earlier, even after three weeks of consultation the Quebec government was unable to make up its mind before the presentation of the federal budget on April 10. Since then it has come to the conclusion which we all know and which prevents Quebec from being eligible for the total sum that we have provided in our budget in this regard.

Mr. Speaker, the offer of the Government of Canada remains on the table and we do not intend to withdraw it. Since the Quebec finance minister took his decision, the federal government has already indicated its willingness to consider some changes to this formula if necessary. For example, we would be prepared to consider that the provincial contribution of 1 per cent not be required on each and every item or product which could benefit from the federal contribution of 2 per cent, and that the provincial government might reallocate as it pleases its contribution to restrict it to some products only.

Mr. Speaker, I shall add that the government is still prepared to consider, after consulting the other provinces concerned since Quebec is not the only province involved in this matter, any other sales tax arrangement the government of Quebec could propose provided it does not have the effect of using federal funds to break up the Canadian common market.

Mr. Speaker, I shall add that as federal government we shall make every possible effort to prevent the people of Quebec from being penalized in comparison with the people of Canada as a whole, because of the lack of co-operation on the part of the Quebec government with the federal government and with the other provinces. The people of Quebec are affected enough by the negative effects of the separatist options of the government which has been in power for two years in that province.

Mr. Speaker, my time is almost up. I would simply like to stress once again that in this matter the federal government took all the action that could be expected to come to an agreement with all provinces. For the reasons I indicated the Quebec government did not want to co-operate in the time frame available. Nonetheless, I repeat, we are still willing to continue to co-operate and to try to invent solutions which will be fair for the population of Quebec and for Canadians as a whole. But that requires that the other side have something else in mind than preventing the federal system from working.

[English]

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to speak on the budget which was presented on April 10. It is a budget which will not bring any great change in Canada's economy or in the rate of unemployment. How can anyone take seriously the budget presented by this government which is spending $1 billion more a month than it takes in? The facts speak for themselves. It is ridiculous, and it shows what an irresponsible group of individuals they are who would allow such a situation to come about. They are telling us that this budget will create a miracle with temporary sales tax reductions. We will see absolutely no improvement in the record of unemployment or in the economy of this country.

I will be checking very closely the remarks made by the Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations (Mr. Lalonde) who gave his version of the consultations with the premiers, and I will be checking it out with the premier of Manitoba.

I have to laugh at the comment made by the minister that we do not practise what we preach. The most classic example of the government not practising what they preach is contained in a document that has been printed recently entitled "A Legacy of Spending". The author is Edward Murphy of CJOR, a radio station in Vancouver. He has the government's ten year dismal record here. It shows how the Canadian taxpayer has been taken to the cleaners like no other taxpayer. Mr. Murphy states on the first page:

> On Wednesday, August 13, 1969, Prime Minister Pierre Elliott Trudeau went on national television in a major press conference to talk to the Canadian people about inflation and the country's financial future. He said this: "We would be on the way to financial disaster if nothing were done to bring spending under control. To spend vast sums on welfare, education and other programs while allowing inflation to continue would merely place hundreds of thousands of Canadians on a treadmill they could not escape."
> The Prime Minister also committed his government to a substantial cut in the federal civil service. What has happened since August 13, 1969 . . .
> Government spending increased by . . .
> It increased by 410 per cent, or over $35 billion.
> Federal civil service increased by . . . 45 per cent.

How could anyone take this government seriously? Their word means absolutely nothing. The whole history is in here. I cannot read it all, but one thing that really annoys Canadians no end is the ridiculous Canada Council grants. I would like to read one classic one: $170,000 to study air breathing fish of the Amazon river. How ridiculous can you get? How can anyone take this government seriously? Another grant of $17,700 was given to carry out a dialectological survey of the French language spoken in eastern Canada. Here is another one: $7,605 to study the economic basis of Machiavelli's political thought. Good heavens! How could we take this budget seriously? What kind of an elected official would hand out taxpayers' money like that?

There are other examples of grants to different publishing companies. I would not dare read out in this House the words which are written out in these poems that have been compiled and paid for with taxpayers' money. Here is one in language which can be read out in the House:

Mix Mix Tom Mix
Mix Mix Tom Mix
Mix Mix Tom Mix

This goes on for about 25 paragraphs. Canadian taxpayers paid money to someone who does not want to work to compile this ridiculous nonsense.

There are many concerned Canadians who are putting out publications. Here is one on the cover of which is written: "Pierre Elliott Trudeau . . . You have failed . . . miserably! The Trudeau Record, 1968-1978". In the opening pages the author, Michel Robert, states:

● (1752)

Who am I to write this book? A nobody! Just an ordinary but concerned citizen. But it is high time the nobodies of Canada speak out loud and clear.

The government will be hearing more from the nobodies because they are fed up. In fact, they are so fed up that they are willing to spend their own money to publish documents such as the one by Michel Robert.

The book continues:

As a matter of fact, there are many Canadians that think that Pierre Trudeau is deliberately creating economic chaos in Canada to prove that the system does not work and to gain sympathy for his socialist cause.

That is a very devastating and strong statement. We must look at the record unemployment, debt borrowing and uncontrolled spending. Those records do not indicate good management of the country. The facts speak for themselves.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) commented upon the government and politicians turning their backs on the blind, crippled and underprivileged. I want to assure the hon. member that no one in the Conservative party will turn his back on the blind, the handicapped or the poor. We made this perfectly clear during the 1974 election campaign. We pointed out in our prices and incomes program that over five million Canadians were below the poverty line, and that it was important to bring inflation under control in order to help these people. They are still below the poverty line and still suffering under the same government which has been in power for the last 15 years.

I was amused by the Liberal speeches yesterday which praised the government for the budget and indicated how wonderful the last ten years have been. I do not know how such statements could be made. Our standard of living dropped from second position down to tenth. How can the government indicate that it has done a good job? The evidence indicates a good job has not been done. It is unbelievable what has been accomplished by the government.

Many Canadians are leaving this country, and much investment money is leaving as well. I should like to deal with that in some detail. Canada is no longer an attractive country to invest money in. If the government was good and managed its affairs properly, investment money would be attracted and investors and their money would remain here. That is not the case. This government is helping out an economy; it is assisting the American economy. The government is the best friend the United States has ever had. There is a real boom in Florida and California, and Kentucky is now calling itself the eleventh province because so many Canadians and Canadian firms are moving to that state. I did not hear any of the Liberals mentioning those facts yesterday. Neither did I hear any of them say how they propose to stop this outflow of capital and attempt to keep Canadian businesses here. The government's make-work projects such as Flip will not make up for this.

Mr. Lumley: What do you want to do?

Mr. McKenzie: The parliamentary secretary thinks it is a big joke.

Mr. Lumley: We have not heard your policy yet.

Mr. McKenzie: If the parliamentary secretary allows me to continue, he will hear my policy in a minute. The government should adopt a policy which does not harass, regulate and tax business to death. Everything should be done to encourage business. It is a matter of philosophy, not a matter of policy.

Mr. Lumley: What is your philosophy?

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Stop interrupting.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie) has the floor.

Mr. McKenzie: Another thing which is driving business out of Canada is the 3,300 orders in council which were implemented last year. The government has caused much uncertainty in the country. These problems did not exist before. Liberal members talked about the last ten years and praised the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), who has the most disgraceful record of any politician in Canada. In April 1968 there were 375,000 unemployed. Today there are well over a million. The unemployment rate in 1968 was 4.5 per cent. Today it is around 8.3 per cent.

Youth unemployment is another real problem in Canada. In 1968 the rate was 7.4 per cent, and today it has doubled to 14.8 per cent.

The record in Quebec is very dismal. In 1968 unemployment in the province of Quebec was 5.9 per cent. Today it is 10.9 per cent. Under the aegis of the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), total unemployment has practically tripled. Approximately ten years ago Canada had an unemployment problem in only a few areas, but today it has spread right across the country.

I should like to refer to some statistics regarding the differences between Canada and the United States. Over the past ten years, our deficit has increased 11.5 per cent. In the United States, where some control and some sound management is being exercised, it is only 2.7 per cent. In Canada expenditures have increased 3.9 per cent, and in the United States 2.4 per cent. The deficit expenditure rate in Canada rose from 7.3 per cent to 22 per cent, which is indicative of complete and total mismanagement of the nation's economy and the taxpayers' dollars. The deficit expenditure rate in the United States fell from 16.5 per cent to 14.6 per cent. The Americans are attempting to control government spending. This is necessary if inflation is to be cured.

Returning to the matter of investment leaving Canada, in 1976 this question was raised, first by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert). At that time he pointed out that it was becoming a very serious problem. Also he indicated a very serious political climate was being created, and this trend of investment and business leaving the country was commencing. I received some documents from an investment councillor in Winnipeg, Mr. Peter Henry Jerch. Mr. Jerch is working on behalf of 64 Canadian companies that are planning to move out of Canada and expand their facilities in the United States. This is a clear indication that the business community has no faith in the government or the country. There is no way any of the government's short-term projects will counter the mass movement of business investment money which is occurring.

May I call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. It being six o'clock, this House stands adjourned until 2 p.m. tomorrow.

At six o'clock the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

POST OFFICE ACT

AMENDMENT TO LEGALIZE INCREASE IN POSTAL RATES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of great urgency and pressing necessity. Yesterday the House of Commons unanimously concurred in the fourth report of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments, declaring that the raising of postal rates other than by amendments to the Post Office Act is invalid. Inasmuch as the joint committee is the watchdog of the rights of parliament, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale):

That the House direct the Postmaster General to obey the will of parliament by introducing amendments to the Post Office Act to legalize the arbitrary action taken in raising postal rates on April 1, and table the judicial decision on which he says his decision is based.

An hon. Member: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the hon. member's motion. Pursuant to Standing Order 43, presentation of such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

REQUESTED INCREASE IN FUNDS FOR FAMILY PLANNING—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity pursuant to Standing Order 43. Given the fact that funding for family planning in Canada has been frozen for the past five years, and that live births to teenage girls in the last year that statistics are available for increased by approximately 30 per cent to 12,956, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That this House direct the Minister of National Health and Welfare to increase the amount of funds allocated for family planning by at least the amount of inflation for the five-year period in which their grant was frozen.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for debate requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

CULTURAL AFFAIRS

DONATION OF S.S. "BRADBURY" TO SELKIRK MARINE MUSEUM—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dean Whiteway (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to move a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the fact that the Selkirk marine museum is a voluntary, non-profit, community effort, and in view of letters from the Department of Supply and Services threatening the removal and sale of the S.S. Bradbury, which is now an integral part of the marine museum, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Portage (Mr. Masniuk):

That the Minister of Supply and Services, as a symbol of the cultural heritage of the people of Selkirk, donate the S.S. Bradbury to the museum or, alternatively, send a fleet of warships up the Red River to lay siege to this apparently invaluable Government of Canada asset.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for debate can be done only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE BUDGET

SALES TAX—SUGGESTION QUEBEC DECIDE DISTRIBUTION FORMULA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. C. A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to introduce a motion dealing with an urgent matter.

S.O. 43

Considering the federal proposal for a 2 per cent refund on the 3 per cent reduction of the retail sales tax, a decision which the Quebec government has found quite questionable at the economic level and repugnant as far as provincial autonomy is concerned; and considering the second federal proposal for a 2 per cent refund of the retail sales tax levied on all products not affected by the withdrawal of the 8 per cent tax, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Beaudoin):

That the Minister of Finance seriously consider the following suggestion: Maintain its compensation proposal under the form of an aggregate budgetary cover for each province, leaving them entirely free to apportion those $260 million granted to Quebec thus enabling the federal government to respect the autonomy of the provinces and leaving them free to determine their priorities within their jurisdiction.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there such consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

DREE LOANS AND GRANTS TO NATIONAL SEA PRODUCTS LTD., NEWFOUNDLAND—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that National Sea Products Limited, operators of a small fish plant at Arnold's Cove, Placentia Bay, Newfoundland, processing fresh fillets, herring and fresh lobsters and employing 18 people on a full year basis, with an additional 32 people during the spring and summer groundfish seasons and during the winter herring season, during October, 1977, applied to DREE for assistance in constructing an extension to their fish plant at Arnold's Cove, with a major investment by themselves, with the result that if approved there would be required some 67 additional men and women to be employed each year with a market for all fish that can be caught by fishermen in that area, and in view of the fact that there is very heavy unemployment in the Arnold's Cove area, particularly due to the closing down of the oil refinery at Come-By-Chance, Newfoundland, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Ritchie):

That the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion approve immediately the application from National Sea Products and authorize DREE loans and grants for the extension of the fish plant at Arnold's Cove with no further delay in approving this application, bogged down now for six months in the bureaucratic jungle in Ottawa, when approval should have been given in time for construction to commence early in 1978 for the 1978 fishing season.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the presentation of such a motion?

[Mr. Gauthier (Roberval).]

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

NATIONAL REVENUE

PROTEST AGAINST TAXING OF FREE TRANSPORTATION PASSES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Leonard C. Jones (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Whereas senior officials of the Department of National Revenue are studying the possibility of taxing free transportation passes to employees and their families in transportation companies, and whereas such transportation passes are not abused and create little, if any, additional costs to the transportation companies, and whereas every employer has from time immemorial given certain privileges and fringe benefits to employees as a part of the free enterprise system to encourage production, initiative and loyalty for the benefit of both employer and employee, and whereas any interference with the giving of such privileges is likely to cause great confusion and inconvenience, I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert):

That this House requests the Minister of National Revenue to instruct his staff to halt any further study of the possibility of taxing free transportation passes, and that this House strongly objects to taxing fringe benefits such as transportation passes.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

ELECTIONS

DISTRIBUTION OF CAMPAIGN LITERATURE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to move a motion of urgent and pressing necessity. Whereas Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition and their leader have tried to portray themselves as protectors of public morality, and whereas their publication the official newsletter of the PC Party of Canada contains such headlines as "PC candidates go to finishing school", "campaign notes", "PC caucus very much alive" and was distributed across the country in House of Commons' envelopes—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Friesen).

TOURISM

PER CAPITA BASIS GRANTS FOR ALL PROVINCES TO PROMOTE TOURISM—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Recently, the minister for DREE—which now stands for "department for re-election expenses"—announced a $45 million grant to help the Quebec tourist industry. In the interests of equity and national unity, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary (Mr. Whittaker):

That equal grants on a per capita basis be extended to British Columbia and all the other provinces to aid tourism all across Canada, and that the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, who has allowed the $45 million to be administered totally by the province of Quebec, be instructed to maintain a federal presence in the use of those funds and that the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, who is responsible for tourism, be instructed that all facilities that benefit from the use of those funds conform to federal bilingual regulations.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion can be made only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INQUIRY WHY BUDGET DID NOT CONTAIN MEASURES TO ASSIST THE POOR

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. It is based on a report released today by the C. D. Howe Institute which states:

The empirical evidence demonstrates that the federal government has not improved the economic position of the poor relative to the highest income families.

And further:

—that federal measures did not in any way substantially alter the distribution of income.

What an indictment, Mr. Speaker, of a government that came to power ten years ago to this day with the promise of a just society!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

● (1417)

Mr. McGrath: I ask the Prime Minister, since it was ten years ago today that he promised us a just society, why did the budget brought down by his colleague a few days ago not address itself to the problems of the poor in this country, a situation that is extremely aggravated by the fact that 1.6 million Canadians are unemployed and do not benefit from the reduction in the sales tax since a large proportion of their income is spent on food?

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order please. In view of the fact that we are engaged today in the sixth day of a budget debate, I wonder if the hon. member might want to put a question rather than make an argument on the budget.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is quoting a report of one institute. I have not had the benefit of seeing that, but I have quoted in this House statistics from Statistics Canada. I can repeat them for the benefit of the hon. member. In 1968, some 19.5 per cent of Canadians were beneath the poverty line. When you adjust that poverty line to take into account the increase in the cost of living, ten years later only 10.5 per cent of Canadians are beneath the poverty line.

Mr. McGrath: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. It is obvious from the answer of the Prime Minister that the government's statistics are badly outdated. I would remind the Prime Minister that the chairman of the Senate committee on poverty revised his estimates of the poverty line in Canada to mean a family of four earning less than $12,000 per year. This independent study by the C.D. Howe Institute would indicate that 20 per cent of the population of this country are beneath the poverty line—a disgraceful situation in a country like Canada.

I ask the Prime Minister, on this his tenth anniversary—the tenth anniversary of the just society—in the absence of the budget of his colleague addressing itself to the problems of the poor in this country, what measures we can expect from this government in its dying days to redress this great injustice to Canadian society.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, it seems to me this is a repetition of the previous question; therefore, I will repeat my previous answer. The hon. member may not agree with the figures of Statistics Canada. He may argue, as he seems to be saying, that poverty is a relative question and the standard of poverty is changing over the years. If that is the case, he is really saying Canada as a whole has become richer. I see that the hon. lady laughs, because she would not understand it—

Mr. Clark: The "hon. member".

Mr. Trudeau: The Leader of the Opposition corrects me; he says I should say "hon. member." We often say "hon. gentleman", and maybe that is an abuse when we address the other side. If we can say "hon. gentleman", I do not understand why we could not say "hon. lady" without the hon. gentleman taking offence.

Mr. Clark: You would not understand.

Mr. Trudeau: All I am saying is that if you adjust the poverty line as defined by the Economic Council of Canada in the early 1960s, and if you take that poverty line as it was in 1968 and move it upward to take into account the increase in the cost of living, 10 per cent of Canadians are below that line now as opposed to some 20 per cent ten years ago.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, my final supplementary question to the Prime Minister is more in sadness than in anger, because I can assure him that to the five million Canadians beneath the poverty line this question is more than relative; it is a daily problem for them.

In view of the fact that the statistics the government is using have been brought into question by an independent and respected authority and by the Senate committee, will the Prime Minister at least accede to the request we have made on a number of occasions from this side of the House and introduce a poor persons' index, so that we will at least have a proper measurement of exactly what this government's economic policies are doing for the poor of this country?

Mr. Trudeau: The hon. gentleman is quoting what one professor said, and he says this dismantles the statistics of Statistics Canada. I say each person can have his own definition of poverty. Of course, it is a varying concept and the poor in a poor society are apparently less to be blamed than the poor in a richer society who have a similar standard, because of comparative figures.

An hon. Member: Who is blaming the poor?

Mr. Trudeau: This is possible. I am just answering the hon. gentleman's challenge that in the past ten years there has been no progress. I am telling him that if he takes the concept of poverty as it was defined in the sixties and adjusts it for the increased cost of living, he will find the percentage of Canadians below the poverty line has been halved. I say that is progress in ten years.

LEGISLATION RESPECTING SPOUSE'S ALLOWANCE

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Unfortunately, all too many people in this country understand the meaning of poverty and it is a sad commentary on the government that the Prime Minister does not.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Mr. Trudeau.]

Miss MacDonald: I would like to ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare a question relating to the fact that two recent reports, first the report on Women and Pensions and now the report on Women and Aging, have vividly shown that the financial plight of elderly women is a very severe one. When will the minister correct the iniquitous legislation introduced by her predecessor which cuts off the spouse's allowance after the death of the elder partner in marriage?

In addition, is the minister aware of the very real hardship that this measure causes annually to some 2,500 Canadians, mostly women, and that the government is saving the $400,000 involved on the backs of what one of these reports called "the poorest of the poor"?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the hon. person opposite and myself were elected—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Did you hear that, Pierre? Someone understands.

Miss Bégin: —to this place 5½ years ago. In my maiden speech I said—and the hon. member probably said the same thing—that this is a major hardship group in Canadian society. Because of the age group structure, older women constitute the majority of the poorest of the poor. That is word for word what I said on the government side at that time, and that statement has been repeated by several of my colleagues.

To cope with the problem of a couple used to a full salary going to a single pension, a few years ago this House voted for the spouse's allowance which gives to the partner who is not yet at the pensionable age, a second income-tested pension when in need. Usually these are women. They are cut off from that pension at the death of the spouse. This proposal was made as a first step toward a guaranteed annual income which the provinces rejected.

Since then we have been trying to work out, through a tax-related program, a mechanism that takes into account the hardships experienced by all needy people between the age of 60 and 65. However, the hon. member for Athabasca, for instance—the health critic for the official opposition—keeps saying he is opposed to any additional expenditures on social security.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: That is not true, and you know it.

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, the legislation in question has nothing to do with a guaranteed annual income or with the provinces.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: The legislation is federal legislation. I am asking the minister a question with regard to a piece of federal legislation which involves women in the age category of 60 to 65 whose spouse's allowance is cut off at the death of the marriage partner. I am asking the minister, who seems to understand that problem, if she will reconsider the decision with regard to the spouse's allowance, in view of the fact that it would involve no new expenditure on the part of the federal government: these funds are already allocated and they are withdrawn by the federal government. That is what I am asking her to reconsider.

Miss Bégin: Mr. Speaker, I wish the hon. member were minister of finance. With that kind of reasoning—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

● (1427)

Miss Bégin: —maybe she should be president of the treasury board. However, we would all go bankrupt. With regard to the spouse's allowance, the hon. member should read the Speech from the Throne where it was announced, and the Prime Minister's speeches which indicate very clearly the spouse's allowance would be a first step toward a guaranteed annual income. I repeat, that proposal was rejected by the provinces: in my opinion, wrongly. There are new expenditures involved in new programs or extensions of existing programs such as spouse's allowance. I repeat that I am looking into mechanisms to help older people in need, especially those between the age of 60 and 65. If the hon. member's party would stop travelling around the country mouthing clichés against social policy, we would be further ahead.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Paproski: Back to national revenue.

Mr. Hees: I just saw Pierre put a line through a name.

REQUEST FOR LEGISLATION TO ATTACK PROBLEMS OF POVERTY

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address my question, as well, to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. It is likewise based on the report released yesterday by W. Irwin Gillespie. Even more so, it is based on the excellent speech that the minister made in Sherbrooke, Quebec, on March 13. The Gillespie report is the one the others have been talking about, the one commissioned by the C. D. Howe Research Institute.

In view of the fact that unless the Prime Minister gets a dissolution today, we probably have another three weeks in this session, will the minister seriously discuss with the Deputy Prime Minister, as government House leader, the possibility of bringing in legislation before we dissolve to make an attack somewhere on the problem of poverty, whether it is in relation to the first step toward a guaranteed annual income or something to improve the position of older women? Does the minister not wish to do something in this area before this parliament ends? In view of the fact we have three weeks to do it, will she discuss the matter seriously with the government House leader?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, it will be a pleasure for me to talk with the government House leader.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Paproski: Watch out, Allan.

Mr. Hees: You are blushing.

Miss Bégin: On a more serious note, since I have been in this parliament I have witnessed constant progress in the field of social policy to cover the most economically vulnerable Canadians. Contrary to tradition, the C.D. Howe Research Institute did not send us a copy ahead of time; therefore, I have not read it. I will, of course, read it. From the way it is described in the media, the thrust of it speaks of the proportion of national wealth, incomes and revenues in Canada and the way they are distributed. It states that although everyone in Canada is richer than a few years ago, distribution of revenues in this country has remained the same. While 20 per cent of Canadians at the top of the economic scale receive 40 per cent of the income revenues, the bottom 20 per cent still receive between 4 and 6 per cent.

I would like hon. members to note that and to stop trying to misuse the Prime Minister's statistics which indicate a decrease in poverty in Canada by approximately 50 per cent, no matter which measure you use, and try not to oppose those in the government who have made progress in easing poverty.

● (1432)

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): In view of the minister's statement in the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs that poverty is a black mark on this country, whether it is relative or absolute, and in view of her own expressed concern to do something about reducing poverty in Canada, I repeat my earlier question: will she not now take advantage of the extra three weeks which have been given to this parliament to make an attack on poverty, either by doing something for those below standard income levels or for that seriously disadvantaged group in our society, our older women?

Miss Bégin: I repeat, that as soon as we are ready to proceed with measures to help these most vulnerable groups—as I have identified them in the past, including the one to which the hon. member referred—I shall, of course, proceed.

SMALL BUSINESS

INQUIRY WHETHER CRITERIA ESTABLISHED TO ASSIST SMALL BUSINESS

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, we can see that today is the day of small people in the House of Commons; I mean people whose income is below the poverty line.

Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Small Business. Given the fact that several months ago the minister told us that standards and criteria would be set to help small businesses which would request it, could he very seriously tell the House today whether those standards and regulations are established and whether we might know them in order to enlighten the very numerous small businesses in Canada, particularly in Quebec and most of all in the Bellechasse riding, so that they might take advantage of that legislation as quickly as possible?

[English]

Hon. A. C. Abbott (Minister of State (Small Business)): Mr. Speaker, I would refer the hon. gentleman to the speech I made Tuesday night. I think he will find there a wonderful resumé of all the progressive measures we have taken with respect to small business. I will send him a copy of a letter I recently sent to my Liberal colleagues outlining some of the things we have been able to achieve and forecasting certain measures which we intend to carry out in the future.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, is the minister feeling he is a minister only for his Liberal colleagues or for all Canada? I ask him the following question: would he also undertake, as I have already requested several months ago, to send his release to all members in the House so that we might serve adequately all Canadians regardless of their political affiliation or that of the minister?

[English]

Mr. Abbott: I can assure the hon. member that I am attempting to serve all Canadians and all Canadian small businessmen. Again, I would encourage the hon. member to read my speech of the other night. If he does so, he will see that much of the criticism which has been directed against the record of this government over the past ten years is manifestly false. He will also find that many of the measures we have carried out have been of particular benefit to Quebec and to small businessmen in his area.

POST OFFICE

AMENDMENT TO LEGALIZE INCREASE IN POSTAL RATES

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Postmaster General. In light of unanimous approval by this House yesterday of the fourth report of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments which, as my hon. friend from Parry Sound-Muskoka has indicated, is the watchdog of the rights of parliament, expressing grave doubts as to the validity of relying on the general power in section 13 of the Financial Administration Act to set postal rates—a position which was supported by all the hon. gentleman's predecessors—will the Postmaster General now respect the will of parliament and the advice of his predecessors by bringing in amendments to the Post Office Act legalizing what he did illegally on April 1?

[Translation]

Hon. J.-Gilles Lamontagne (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I read carefully the report of the Joint Standing Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments. I think the opinion of the committee must be seen as the expression of an opinion. Of course, when it comes to legal advice, there are as many views as there are lawyers, but I feel, in that regard, that the Post Office has always acted legally on the advice of the Department of Justice. Mr. Speaker, I must also point out that we acted under the terms of one of the sections of the Financial Administration Act, namely section 13, on several occasions in 1976-77, and the opposition never questioned the legality of those measures. We did the same thing in 1978, feeling that the advice we got was what we should follow. If there are any other possibilities from the legal point of view, I shall consult the Department of Justice on the matter.

[English]

Mr. Dinsdale: The Postmaster General seems to be unaware of the significance of unanimous concurrence in a report of the House and of the other place condemning the hon. gentleman for what he has done. In view of this continued defiance of the traditional rights of parliament on this issue, and the minister's refusal, by his failure to bring down amendments to the Post Office Act, to allow parliamentary discussion of the drastic deterioration in postal affairs, will the Postmaster General make a statement in the House explaining his defiance of the will of parliament, and will he also table the judicial decision upon which he bases this defiance? Otherwise, I see no alternative but for the minister to resign.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lamontagne: I have no intention of resigning, because pretty soon—I hope—there will be an election, after which I think I will come back here. I have defied no one. I did not defy the House. We increased postal rates in the same way as was done previously. I very much respect the opinions of the committee and of the House, but I have nothing further to say and no documents to table unless I am advised to do so by the Department of Justice.

ALLEGATION INCREASE IN POSTAL RATES ILLEGAL

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): In view of the fact that parliament has not empowered the Govenor-in-Council or anyone else for that matter to increase postal rates, is the Postmaster General aware that by going beyond his legal authority he has made himself personally liable for the millions of dollars he has collected from the public by overcharging them for stamps and other postal services?

Hon. J.-Gilles Lamontagne (Postmaster General): Everything which has been done by the Postmaster General has been done on the assumption that it was legal, on legal advice. It was done in the interest of Canadians, too, because we had a deficit of $600 million and we collected from the users of the postal services $125 million through increased rates, thus achieving a much better balance between the users and the taxpayers generally. I think the questions put to me today may be intended to put a smokescreen over the Ritchie report which was not approved by the opposition. This report, as one reads it, is very violent against the worker. Mr. Ritchie himself recommended that increases in postal rates be imposed by a board and not by the House.

Mr. Darling: A final supplementary. Will the Postmaster General confirm that the real cost of mailing a first-class letter in Canada today is 28 cents, 14 cents of which is presently being borne by the heavily overburdened taxpayer?

● (1442)

Mr. Lamontagne: Mr. Speaker, we could discuss for a long, long time the cost of mailing a letter. I know that we charge 14 cents for first-class mail and other rates for other classes of mail, and that we have a deficit of about $500 million. Such a deficit could warrant charging 28 cents. I think we should put to ourselves the more serious question of trying to have more efficient delivery of mail everywhere, instead of wasting our time arguing if the rates are legal or not.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

REQUEST LEGALITY OF RATE INCREASES BE REFERRED TO SUPREME COURT OF CANADA

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Postmaster General. The Postmaster General just put his mouth where his mind is. He does not really care whether matters are legal or illegal; that is what he said. On the assumption he has made that the charge is legal—that is what he said in his earlier answer—he has assumed, and the government, and the Postmaster General's department has worked on an assumption.

It is time the issue was settled, since the House of Commons has concurred unanimously in the report of the joint standing committee. I ask him, so that we do not deal with this matter from the point of view of assumptions, whether he will arrange to have this matter referred to the Supreme Court of Canada for a decision, so that the question of the legal priority of this whole issue and, indeed, the minister's position, can be settled?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: "Here come the judge".

An hon. Member: The godfather.

Mr. Basford: The question relating to a reference to the Supreme Court of Canada properly falls within the purview of my responsibility, and therefore is for me to answer. With regard to the substance of the question, the present and past postmasters general have acted on the advice of the Department of Justice that the use of section 13 of the Financial Administration Act is a proper and valid use of that section. Whether it is an unusual or unexpected use of it, as reported by the committee, of course does not affect its legality. In any event, in relation to the hon. member's question, the validity and legality of the use of section 13 of the Financial Administration act is currently before the courts, who will, of course, decide whether or not it is valid.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, whether the Minister of Justice knows it or not, parliament yesterday concurred in the report unanimously—and that includes the Minister of Justice. How can the Minister of Justice sit there in his capacity and call himself Minister of Justice and Attorney General when he has such a flagrant, almost unconscionable view of the law? If he is prepared to rely on that opinion of his officers—it is his right if he so wishes—is he prepared to submit the issue immediately to the courts by way of motion to the Federal Court of Canada, or by way of reference to the Supreme Court of Canada, so that the matter can be settled once and for all and so we are not interminably delayed by a private law suit?

Mr. Basford: The hon. member, by his previous question, obviously acknowledges that the committee's report, whether or not it was concurred in by parliament, does not determine by itself—

Mr. Clark: Parliament means nothing and the law means nothing to you.

Mr. Basford: —the legality or illegality of the action. The hon. member acknowledges that by asking that the question be referred to the Supreme Court of Canada.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Then refer it.

Mr. Basford: I am saying that the question of section 13, its legality and its use, is presently before the courts and therefore there is no need for a reference at this time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Oral Questions

AIR TRANSPORT

NORTHERN ONTARIO—CALL FOR INQUIRY INTO AIR SAFETY

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. The Association of Treaty Indians, located in Timmins, Ontario, have compiled a rather lengthy document on air transportation problems in northern Ontario, particularly air safety. They have presented this document to the Prime Minister and to myself. They are calling for an inquiry into air safety irregularities in northern Ontario. They have listed eight fatal accidents and point out that pilots are flying without mandatory inspections, they are falsifying records and planes are overloaded. I ask the minister if he is aware of this submission and will he be taking action and calling for an inquiry into air safety problems in the north?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of that particular submission. There has been a good deal of action with regard to aviation safety in the north. I must say I am not aware of that particular report and I would be glad if the hon. member would let me have a copy of it, because most often his references are to matters which have taken place in the nineteenth century.

Mr. McKenzie: This report happens to be dated March 21, 1978, which is in this century. The minister's department does not agree that action is being taken. I have here a letter from an employee of MOT who says:

The recent crash of a Pacific Western Airlines aircraft—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the hon. member has a question, would he put it forthwith.

Mr. McKenzie: He is challenging irregularities with regard to that plane crash and he has provided me with an internal document which points out:

During the past year in the Atlantic region alone more than 600 instances are on record—

He is referring to aircraft landing and taking off when the officially reported weather at the airport was worse than that required. I will present these documents to the minister. Will he inform the House whether he will start a full-scale public inquiry into all these charges regarding air safety irregularities?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I referred to the hon. member using old material because certainly the last time he engaged in this sort of question he continually switched back and forth to things that had happened, two, three or four years before, even though there had since been a very careful investigation and a very sharp report had emerged from it to put to rest any fears he might have had about the facts. It was an investigation carried out by some of our own people who, after all, are pretty good. As a result of that report, we acted upon the recommendations and have added to the number of inspectors and improved their techniques in line with the recommendations.

[Mr. Basford.]

Obviously, one expects to see improvements in safety take place. I would emphasize, however, that by and large the smaller carriers in this country adopt very high standards indeed, and I would not like to see them smeared in this way. Generally, we try to work in a co-operative way with them, because it is not a matter of their having to be forced to do something. They want to be helped to do the things that make aviation safe. They are generally that sort of person, and no comments of the hon. member should lead to the contrary conclusion.

ILLEGAL ACTIVITIES OF RCMP—APPLICATION OF RULE OF LAW

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice: it concerns the evidence given over the last two days by assistant commissioner Thomas Venner, head of the criminal investigation department of the RCMP. That evidence indicates that more than 400 break-ins have taken place without warrant. I should quote briefly from the evidence. Mr. Venner said:

If a policeman did not have enough evidence to obtain a search warrant from a judge, a warrantless search could be in the public interest because it could help detect crime.

That was the evidence given before the McDonald inquiry. Can the minister advise, in view of his responsibility as the chief law enforcement officer, whether any directives have gone out from his office or from the Solicitor General's office pointing out that this kind of conduct will not be countenanced by either the Minister of Justice or the Solicitor General and that the rule of law will be upheld for everyone in this country?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, we have been saying for many years, certainly since the conduct of the RCMP was brought into question or the conduct of some members of the RCMP was questioned, that the mandate of the RCMP, its members and officers, was clearly to live within the law and under the rule of law. The McDonald commission is inquiring into incidents where the law might not have been followed; that is the purpose of the inquiry. I do not think that as a result of each day's revelations it would be useful for me or the Solicitor General to send them a new directive to live within the law: it has been made very clear that that is the government's instruction to members of the force.

Mr. Leggatt: I take it from the answer that there has been no specific direction by either the minister or his counterpart. My question is this: In view of the fact that there has now been sufficient admission, not merely in the Venner evidence but in the evidence of many other senior officers in the RCMP, that a prima facie criminal act has taken place, and in view of the minister's responsibility as the chief law enforcement officer of Canada, why has he not moved to lay charges against those persons who have admittedly broken the criminal law, since evidence is available to him? Is this not a breach of the minister's duty to the country?

● (1452)

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, we are following the practice which has been followed in inquiries of a similar nature in the past, such as the Norris royal commission and others. As a result of completing their work, or at any time before, when commissioners have before them evidence which they think should be referred to an attorney general for action, they will do so. That is the practice we are following in this inquiry. In the case of the Norris inquiry, for example, there were allegations each day of criminality or alleged criminality. At the conclusion of the Norris inquiry, that evidence was referred by the law officers of the Crown to the appropriate provincial attorneys general for action.

SOCIAL SECURITY

LEGISLATION RESPECTING SPOUSE'S ALLOWANCE

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare, who I think has now been briefed by her predecessor on the matter which my colleague, the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands, questioned her about and regarding which she was misinformed in her answers.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Miss Bégin: It was a different matter.

Mr. Clark: Now the minister will know that the federal policy regarding the spouse's allowance means that for 2,500 of the poorest people in the country, when their spouses die their pensions will stop. It would cost the Government of Canada approximately $400,000 to stop this injustice. That amount already has been allocated and it is approximately half of what the Minister of Transport spends to fly himself around.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: My question for the minister is very clear and it is as follows: Why does the government continue to take money away from these underprivileged Canadians?

Mrs. Campagnolo: It is financial logic.

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the question the hon. person just asked me is based upon false economic assumptions which I should like to correct. Otherwise, it is extremely easy for the hon. member to make representations without knowing what he is talking about.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Bégin: Probably because of the time lag, a misunderstanding or bad mail—I do not know—today he read the Le Devoir editorial of Madame Lise Bissonnette from approximately a month and a half ago.

Miss MacDonald: Who? I have never heard of her.

Miss Bégin: She made a mistake which I indicated to her. She spoke of $400,000, when we were talking of a few million dollars. I am not accustomed to receiving questions from the hon. Leader of the Opposition because he does not talk about social policy too much.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Bégin: How can he make representations like that, or the members of his party, when we voted for the spouse's allowance bill in the House?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, hon. members opposite will continue to shout because they are trying to protect their minister.

An hon. Member: She does not need protection.

Mr. Clark: The fact is that the minister talks a great deal about social policy—

Miss MacDonald: But does nothing.

Mr. Clark: Faced with the obvious injustice affecting 2,500 people in the country, the minister is prepared to do nothing at all. She knows the present federal policy is taking money away from spouses whose husbands or, in a few cases, whose wives die.

Why is the Government of Canada continuing this heartless policy? When the money is already allocated and no new expenditure would be involved, why does the government not act now to ensure there will not be a double blow dealt Canadians who lose their spouse and then the Government of Canada comes in to take away their pension right after the funeral?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Bégin: Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition excels in melodrama. If he really wants to help Canadians who are in need, and the aged in particular, he should quote accurate figures. First, we looked into the practical problems of needy persons and couples. To give them greater assistance, more than higher expenses alone must be taken into account, because no money has been set aside for that. I'm hanged if I know what economic principles he applies. No funds have been set aside in government expenditures, which would be contrary to the law voted by this parliament since the latter stipulates that the pension must be cancelled when the spouse dies. To remedy that situation, I am very happy to see that the hon. gentleman is discovering the mysteries of life and becoming interested in the needy among the old. But we must not forget all the other needy persons who do not have the luck to have husband. That means $600 million. I am especially happy to see that we have the unanimous support of the House and that they will no longer be able to criticize the government deficit.

[English]

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, the minister is aware that this party proposed and her government opposed an amendment which would have resolved this situation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: She knows that. As much as the minister and her colleagues might want to blame Le Devoir for whatever problems are facing the country, they should know the figure of $400,000 did not come from Madame Lise Bissonnette but from the minister's departmental officials. If she does not know that, perhaps her predecessor can brief her on that matter as well. My question is simple. It has to do with social justice, very clearly. It would not cost any more than would be saved by grounding the Minister of Transport. My minister is this—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, my minister would be considerably more competent than this government's ministers.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Why does this minister, who travels around the country talking about compassion—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Clark: —continue to refuse to help 2,500 of the poorest people in Canada who are in urgent need of help right now?

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): She is a hypocrite.

Miss Bégin: Mr. Speaker, she does that in order to see the day when hon. members of the Tory opposition have a motion of non-confidence on a budget which proposes to bring into force exactly what he is asking in oral questions.

Miss MacDonald: Right now.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Bring it on.

INDUSTRY

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY—DECISION RESPECTING THIRD COUNTRY REMISSION ORDER

Hon. Martin O'Connell (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the importance of the auto parts industry to employment, and in light of the $3 billion Canadian deficit in auto parts, has the government come to a decision with respect to the third country remission order? If so, when will it be announced? Furthermore, what response is the government giving to the request of the auto parts industry for a special investment fund within the enterprise development program to assist this industry in Canada to retool and re-equip so that it can play a full part in the manufacture of parts for the new generation of automobiles?

Hon. Jack H. Horner (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, with regard to third country remission orders, we have agreed to go ahead with them. We are proceeding one company at a time in order to work out exact agreements with each company as to how the remission order will apply. With regard to the second part of the hon. member's question concerning the auto investment corporation, that matter is being given a great deal of consideration within the department.

I might add that the Enterprise Development Corporation has and will continue to guarantee a number of loans for auto parts manufacturers. One that comes to mind is Anaconda. Recently, we went out on a limb to quite a large extent with a Canadian company to buy Anaconda. Anaconda is a manufacturer of radiators and contributes a great deal to the auto parts business. I assure the hon. member that we are considering the setting up of an auto investment corporation which would greatly benefit auto parts manufacturing as well.

TRANSPORT

RAIL LINE ABANDONMENT—DETRIMENTAL EFFECT ON GRAIN PRODUCERS

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board: it has to do with rail line abandonment, specifically the line from Euston Junction to Colonsay. In view of the fact that the Prairie Rail Action Committee made a recommendation to abandon a portion of the line from Liberty to Dilke, contrary to the wishes of the grain producers—many of whom will have to haul grain more than 20 miles—contrary to the wishes of the elevator companies and the railways involved, and without any hearings, and in view of the fact that the committee refuses to give any reasons for their recommendations, will the minister personally intervene and direct that hearings be held to reconsider the decision? Or, alternatively, will he undertake to reject the recommendation of the PRAC and direct that the operation of the line continue?

● (1502)

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. member knows that the Hall commission left in doubt the long-term future of the Amazon to Dilke line. They left it in doubt because they said its future should be determined between now and 1990. Also there was some construction between Amazon and Watrous, and for that to the done, it was important to determine the future of the line.

The Prairie Rail Action Committee has made very positive recommendations that we go ahead with the several million dollars of construction on the link and with the several million dollars of construction on the line as far as Liberty is concerned. I am prepared to recommend both those steps to my colleagues and, therefore, fully expect the transfer to the basic rail network of that stretch of line as far as Liberty.

The Prairie Rail Action Committee recommended that the stretch between that point and Dilke should have a time limit put upon it, and then be prepared for abandonment. That, of course, is a decision which can only be made by the Canadian Transport Commission. In the ordinary course, long before that happens, the parties in question—the farmers in the area—will have an opportunity before the Canadian Transport Commission, or a new western arm of the Canadian Transport Commission which is envisaged, to make their views known about whether the line should be maintained further.

I hope the hon. member will not only emphasize the difficult part of these decisions but will emphasize the very positive point of the $4 million or $5 million in investment in that area in branch lines.

Mr. Neil: Mr. Speaker, it would seem to me that the people involved should at least have the opportunity of making representations to the Prairie Rail Action Committee. I am wondering if it is within the terms of reference of the PRAC that they do not receive representations. If this is the situation, would the minister change those terms of reference so that in future any decisions they make will be based on hearings and recommendations that they receive from concerned parties as well as the railways?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, the Hall commission, of course, heard a great many representations and the Prairie Rail Action Committee still has these available to them. I hope the hon. member is not suggesting that we should not have gone forward, as a government, in firming up the future of the line as far as Liberty is concerned and making that permanent. I thought that was very useful to the people of that area.

As far as the other part of the line is concerned, apparently the hon. member missed the point I was making to him, which was that the Canadian Transport Commission, under current law, only has the power to decide whether the balance of the line should be abandoned. I hope that before that date in 1983 there will be an opportunity for hearings, not just by the Canadian Transport Commission but by a western arm of the commission which the government hopes to set up in the next session.

PRIVILEGE

MR. DIONNE (NORTHUMBERLAND-MIRAMICHI)—DISTRIBUTION OF ELECTION CAMPAIGN LITERATURE

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege which arises from an action of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark), and which appears to be an abuse of the franking privileges of the members of this House.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): This paper called "Bulletin", which describes itself as the official newsletter of the Progressive Conservative Party of Canada, and which has such partisan political headlines as "P.C. Candidates Go To Finishing School", "Campaign Notes", "P.C. Caucus Very Much Alive—

An hon. Member: Which is very much in doubt.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): —was distributed in a House of Commons envelope, marked "first class," and bearing the postmark of the House of Commons and the frank of the Leader of the Opposition.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that that represents an electoral benefit to the Tory party which should amount to several thousands of dollars. Not only does it appear to be a violation of the franking privileges of the members—while they are very good at throwing bricks, they are not very good at catching them.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Throw a brick.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, this is the paper if they wish to see it, and this is the envelope.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Where are your nephews, Huey, Dewey and Louie?

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): And phooey yonder.

It would also appear, Mr. Speaker, to be a violation of the spirit of the Election Expenses Act because it provides that party with a clear electoral advantage. Therefore, it seems to me that the Leader of the Opposition and the P.C. party should be prevented from that parasitic practice, and, to quote the Leader of the Opposition, "should come clean with the Canadian people" and reimburse the public treasury for the benefits they have received.

If you find, Mr. Speaker, that this is indeed an abuse of the privileges of the House, I am prepared to move the appropriate motion of reference.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The matter was raised just recently in an opposite context, but it had to do with fund raising and the use of the frank. The House is aware that the frank replaces the postage stamp for members of the House of Commons, and the same privilege extends to the public in communicating with their elected members. Where the public is concerned, however, it is not necessary to affix postage. That privilege simply replaces the ordinary postage stamp. It is not within the authority of the Chair on procedural grounds to intervene in that mail, which is considered as private, as if it had a stamp. Thus, the sanction, as we have discovered in the past, it not one of a procedural nature but rather one of propriety in the general sense, to be judged by the public, which is the way this instance shall also be judged.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, it is Thursday, and I wonder if the government House leader could inform us as to what the House will be about next week.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, today the House will conclude the budget debate. Tomorrow, I would like to call Bill C-39, the currency and exchange amendments—which I understand will be sent to committee rather quickly—followed by Bill C-36, the Export Development Act; C-10, the Comptroller General; S-8, the fugitive offenders; C-42 the language of trial; S-9 tax conventions, and C-4, aeronautics. I may vary that order, but for Friday the first two I have suggested, currency and exchange, and the export development measure, will be called. I would like to designate Tuesday, April 25, as an allotted day.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Will the government House leader inform the House when it is the intention of this government to bring forward the Bank Act for first reading, because we understand from the answers of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) that the Bank Act includes references to the caisses populaires and to credit unions. Will he undertake to put that bill down on his order paper at the earliest possible opportunity so we can determine, before we go to the country, the intentions of the government with respect to the revisions to the Bank Act, particularly as it relates to those two institutions?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I will discuss the matter with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) and advise the hon. member. I am not quite sure of the stage at which the bill rests at the moment, but I shall check.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. A news report last night indicated that the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen) filed notice of a number of bills that have not yet seen the light of day. I gather he must have filed notice rather late last night because they do not appear on the notice paper today. Could the minister tell us whether there are several new bills, and whether they are substantial?

My other question grows out of an exchange during the question period. In view of the fact that there seems to have been a change in plans, which means we may be here for another two or three weeks, will the government House leader have serious talks with the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) and the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald) concerning the possibility of legislation attacking poverty or doing something for our veterans which, as the minister knows, the House would attend to very quickly?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of any news report about bringing forward new bills. I do recall I was asked what bills I would call in the ordinary course. I think I referred to a number of bills that I have enumerated today. I do not know the basis of a special report about a series of new bills. Additional bills will be brought forward, and some of them will be substantial. I must say I am at a loss to understand why the hon. member refers to a change of plans. There has been no such change to my knowledge.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my friend, the Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council, in his pristine purity is probably the only member of the House who does not know that there were plans for an election to be announced today. I ask him again, will he give serious consideration to discussions with the two ministers I named to see if something can be done in the field of poverty? There is also reason to believe that the Minister of Veterans Affairs is anxious to bring on a bill that would either upgrade the basic rate of the war disability pension or do something about the 48 per cent rule as it applies to widows. Why not deal with these kinds of legislation in whatever time we have left?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to debate with the hon. member about who knows what is going on, but I can assure him he has been mistaken in his assessment of the situation. The Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald) and the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) have been considering these questions with members of the government. It may be possible in whatever time is available—the hon. member says a short time, and that is his opinion—to deal with some of these matters.

CROWN'S FINANCIAL INTEREST—BELT RAILWAY COMPANY OF CHICAGO

Question No. 1,187—Mr. Andre:

1. What is the Crown's precise financial interest in The Belt Railway Company of Chicago as administered by the Department of Transport through Canadian National Railways and on what date was such interest acquired, at what cost and for what reason?

2. What was the book value of the Crown's equity on the date of acquisition and what is its latest estimated book value?

4. In what manner is the Crown's interest represented (a) on the Board of Directors (b) in its senior management?

5. Did the government make a policy decision in regard to the future disposition of its interest?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): The Management of Canadian National Railways advises as follows: 1. (a) Financial interest in Belt Railway: 7.69 per cent of the outstanding capital stock is owned by Grand Trunk Western Railroad Company. G.T.W. is a wholly owned subsidiary of Grand Trunk Corporation which itself is a wholly owned subsidiary of Canadian National Railway Company. (b) Date of acquisition, November 22, 1882. CROWN'S FINANCIAL INTEREST IN THE GRAND TRUNK-MILWAUKEE CAR FERRY COMPANY

Question No. 1,189—Mr. Andre:

1. What is the Crown's precise financial interest in the Grand Trunk-Milwaukee Car Ferry Company as administered by the Department of Transport through Canadian National Railways and on what date was such interest acquired, at what cost and for what reason?

4. In what manner is the Crown's interest represented (a) on the Board of Directors (b) in its senior management?

5. Did the government make a policy decision in regard to the future disposition of its interest?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): The Management of Canadian National Railways advises as follows: 1. (a) Financial interest in G.T.M. Car Ferry Company. The $200,000 capital stock of the Grand Trunk-Milwaukee Car Ferry Company is owned by Grand Trunk Western Railroad Company. G.T.W. is a wholly owned subsidiary of Grand Trunk Corporation which itself is a wholly owned subsidiary of Canadian National Railway Company. (b) Date of acquisition, November 9, 1905. (c) Cost, $200,000. (d) Reason, to carry on the transportation of cars between Grand Haven, Michigan and Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

2. The book value of the acquisition to CN system was not less than $200,000. At December 31, 1977, there was a deficit of $64,722. It should be noted that under Grand Trunk Western Consolidation Agreement dated May 9, 1928, and as authorized by I.C.C. Order of November 8, 1929, the Grand Trunk-Milwaukee Car Ferry Company sold and assigned all its physical and other assets to the Grand Trunk Western Railroad Company as at January 1, 1929.

3. At December 31, 1977, the Grand Trunk-Milwaukee Car Ferry Company had assets of $73,700 and liabilitie of $138,422. This deficit of $64,722 covers the period 1937 to 1954. Financial statements prior to 1937 are not available. Since 1954, revenues and expenses have been combined with those of Grand Trunk Western and separate income statements have not been made.

4. The board of directors of the company is made up of officers from the holding company Grand Trunk Western and one outside director. Senior management is also made up of G.T.W. officers.

5. Not applicable.

TRAVEL TO VANCOUVER BY STAFF OF MINISTER OF ENERGY, MINES AND RESOURCES

Question No. 1,254—Mr. MacKay:

During the first week of December 1977, did any members from the office of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources travel to Vancouver and, if so (a) what was the purpose of their trip (b) how many made the trip (c) what were their names and positions (d) did any of them attend, as voting delegates, the nominating meeting of the Quadra Liberal Association in Vancouver on December 5, 1977?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources reports as follows: see Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, citation 171(dd).

SCRAPIE DISEASE IN SHEEP

Question No. 1,323—Mr. Mazankowski:

1. Since 1951 to date, were outbreaks of scrapie recorded in Canada and, if so (a) how many (b) in what breeds was the disease actually diagnosed, not including contact sheep?

2. Was the policy of slaughtering only the infected sheep and their progeny changed to one of slaughtering the whole flock and any other breed that might have been in contact with the diseased sheep and, if so, for what reason?

3. From 1951 to date, what was the full amount of compensation paid for sheep that were slaughtered?

4. From 1951 to date, what was the cost for the administration of the scrapie policy?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): 1. Prior to 1956, records on scrapie do not differentiate between actual outbreaks of the disease and contact flocks. However, from 1956 to date, the following is available: (a) 39. (b) Suffolk.

2. When the scrapie program was first introduced the infected flock, sales from that flock, and progeny of diseased sheep were slaughtered. In 1963, research on scrapie indicated that the disease was mainly hereditary. Therefore, the program was modified and only the progeny of the suspect sheep were slaughtered. However, in 1976-77 the causal agent of scrapie was isolated and classed as a virus which indicates that the disease is spread by contact, although certain herds, families and blood lines may be more susceptible to the disease than others. Consequently, the program has been amended and, effective May, 1978, the infected flock, sales from the infected flock, and certain progeny will be slaughtered.

3. $757,686.50 (from 1956).

4. $850,000 (from 1956).

MR. COSSITT—DELAY IN ANSWERING QUESTIONS NOS. 30 TO 54

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I have risen a similar type of question at least four or five times before to ask the Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) what has happened to the answers to questions Nos. 30 to 54, many of which have been on the order paper for two years. A week or ten days ago I asked for an assurance that these questions would be answered before the House was dissolved for an election.

When I look at the questions I feel that probably the answers would be extremely embarrassing to the government, and that may be the reason for the hesitation. Nevertheless, in fairness to the people of Canada I think they are entitled to have the information I have asked for and that other members have asked for here in the House of Commons. We should have the right to have the questions answered, in spite of what the hon. member for Northumberland-Miramichi (Mr. Dionne) said a few moments ago.

I specifically draw attention to question No. 43 which involves the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) and his use of his frank—I have asked questions about this before and they are unanswered—to send letters to all Liberal members of parliament telling them how to explain to other Liberals why he spent three quarters of a million dollars of taxpayers' money travelling on public aircraft. That question has been on the order paper for over a year, so it is taking a long time to be answered. I think those members on the other side in glass houses, who have been throwing stones this afternoon, might take a lesson from the Minister of Transport who committed the same offence.

Can the parliamentary secretary give an assurance to the House that questions Nos. 30 to 54 will be answered before the House is dissolved for a general election campaign? I do not want to hear explanations like, "We have been good to you and have answered a lot of your questions." I am referring to questions Nos. 30 to 54.

MR. JONES—DELAY IN ANSWERING QUESTIONS NOS. 143 AND 145

Mr. Leonard C. Jones (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I have brought this up several times. Starred question No. 145, which was on the previous order paper, still has not been answered. I brought this to the attention of the parliamentary secretary several times and asked that he use some type of boxing glove to get some of those fellows out of the corner. This information should be easily available, likewise with respect to question No. 143.

[Translation]

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Yes, as far as the previous statement is concerned, Mr. Speaker, I see that question No. 1,293 which has been made an order for return today is very substantial, and in that sense the hon. has an answer. As to his question indicated by an asterisk, I shall check, and I hope the hon. member will be able to abtain an answer as soon as possible. As for the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Cossitt), if I am not mistaken, I think that in the previous session we answered 264 of his 281 questions on the order paper—94 per cent of his questions, Mr. Speaker. I happen to know that in this present session a great number of his questions have been answered. I simply ask him to be a little patient. In spite of what he says, I can assure him that parliament has always been good to him, and that we shall continue to be so.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed, from Wednesday, April 19, consideration of the motion of Mr. Chrétien that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the government.

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, last evening I referred to a document put out by Peter Henry Jerch and Associates of Winnipeg, a financial consulting firm, which assists Canadian businesses to move out of Canada. At the present time they are acting on behalf of 64 businesses that are planning to move due to the political climate created by the Liberal government over the last ten years. In a document he sent to me, Mr. Jerch writes as follows:

> Countries or for that matter provinces which have nationalistic, leftist or extremely strong bureaucratic tendencies make striving and successful entrepreneurs feel uncomfortable.

They do not feel comfortable in Canada. That is why Canada is the greatest boost to the United States economy today. States are fighting among themselves as to which one will be called the eleventh province. Kentucky was first to ask that they become the eleventh province. In today's paper the State of Florida says that they are the eleventh province. These states will have to get in line, Mr. Speaker. Kentucky claimed first that they were the eleventh province, and Florida will have to become the twelfth province.

Mr. Jerch points out that, through the loss of investment, jobs are lost. He gives incidents here of the number of firms which moved out of Manitoba and states that this cost 4,000 jobs in that province. In a second document supplied to me by Mr. Jerch he points out that, of the 42 firms he is dealing with, the amount of investment which is moving out of the country will cost Canada up to 13,000 jobs. These are small and medium-size businesses. Mr. Jerch is just one investment counsellor. It would be interesting to get statistics from all investment counsellors and lawyers across Canada in regard to the exact amount of money leaving Canada, together with the number of businesses which are leaving also.

Since I spoke yesterday there are more articles in today's newspapers regarding this mass exodus of capital and business leaving Canada. As I pointed out yesterday, this budget is doing nothing to keep anybody here. It is a useless document. This particular article I am looking at is headed "Florida's Sunshine Is Canada's Rain In Construction Industry". The article states:

> Several Ottawa firms are among a growing number of Canadian developers providing employment for Florida construction workers.
> This is occurring at a time when 166,000 Canadian construction workers, about 23 per cent of building trades work force, collect unemployment insurance.
> But it's unlikely the Canadian worker would be any better off if those firms stopped their foreign projects.
> "If a company deals from the heart and ends up bankrupt in five years, staying home is a worse decision" than moving to Florida, William Nevins, chief economist for the Canadian Construction Assoc., said Wednesday.
> Construction companies heading south, he said, reflects a weakness in the Canadian economy. In the corporate supermarket, there are 10 times as many items in the U.S. as there are in Canada and profits are better.

This article appeared in the Ottawa Citizen, today.

As I pointed out yesterday, the Liberal members who have spoken on this budget so far have made absolutely no mention of the mass exodus of capital and business.

There is nothing in the budget. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner) contributed absolutely nothing when he spoke yesterday in this regard. He told us investment is on the increase in Canada. It is the exact opposite. Canada is no longer an attractive country in which to invest. We cannot even hold businesses or money here, never mind trying to attract additional investment funds.

When the Minister of State (Small Business) (Mr. Abbott) spoke on this subject, all we got was a lot of smart alec cracks in his speech. He made no contribution at all on what the government will do regarding this serious problem. I have compiled considerable statistics concerning this matter over the past year.

There is another article which appeared in today's Globe and Mail. It is a report from Washington. We get more statistics on the outflow of investment from the United States than we do from Canada. The article is headed "Canadian Investments In U.S. Show A Dramatic Move Upward". The article says:

A dramatic rise in Canadian investment in the United States is indicated by figures just published by the U.S. Commerce Department.

Maybe a lot of Canadians do not understand how this affects them. It is also one of the reasons we have such record high unemployment and why unemployment is costing Canadians $8 billion a year. This amount will increase yearly, and it is because of the policies of this government and the political climate which the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and his cohorts have created in this country over the last ten years. Many people, when they see the opinion polls and they see there is a chance that this government will be returned, will accelerate this movement of business and capital out of Canada. This is evidenced by the articles appearing daily in newspapers.

As well, the CTV television network sent a film crew to the southern United States recently, and interviewed Canadians who are moving there with their businesses and money. These people were asked why they left Canada. They answered that they left Canada because of the political uncertainty here. They put the blame on the Prime Minister. If he is returned to office in the next election, this trend will continue.

I guarantee that if this government is returned to office, Mr. Speaker, it will bring in exchange controls. Heaven help us if this government is returned to office. Canada is a country with the greatest potential in the world, and it is being destroyed by this socialistic government and its bureaucratic tendencies. This was pointed out by the investment counsellors who are assisting businesses to move out of the country. I see the hon. member for Pontiac (Mr. Lefebvre) is getting a chuckle out of that.

The United States commerce department statistics show Canadian direct investment in United States companies jumped by more than $500 million in 1976 to $5.9 billion. This accounts for about 10 per cent of all foreign direct investment in the United States. Only the Netherlands has a larger stake in American industry. Canadian companies and individuals had $10.67 billion invested abroad at the end of 1975. In addition to the United States, other big recipients are Brazil and Australia.

In Florida alone, Canadian property ownership is in excess of $450 million state wide, and Canadian development consortiums plan to spend in excess of $1.3 billion more in the next 15 years.

Here is an article from the Miami Herald. It states:

"The Canadian dollar is buying up Florida in an escalating and often frenzied scramble to find a haven from political and economical uncertainty at home . . .

If we have this political uncertainty now, we will certainly have it if this government is returned again after the next election. The article goes on to say:

. . . Canada's largest financial and development corps alike are exporting their savings and surplus capital in a classic flight to find sanctuary."

—from this government.

In 1977 B.C. Forest Products Ltd. spent $70 million to take over a Minnesota paper company plant. Alcan Aluminum spent $140 million to take over Revere Copper and Brass in Alabama. It is too bad we could not get them to expand here and take something over in Canada.

Although statistics are hard to come by, California financial experts agree Canadian capital is flowing south in unusual volume, continuing a two-year trend that shows no sign of slackening.

The chief economist of the Royal Bank of Canada, Mr. Ralph Sultan, stated:

We have to get our house in order and make it more attractive for private capital, or else Canada will become a sleeping backwater. Capital lacks loyalty and there's not much government can do.

There is lots that the government can do. Mr. Sultan goes on to say:

Capital goes where returns are most attractive.

They are most attractive in the United States at the present time. Mr. Frank Augsbury of the St. Lawrence County Economic Council (New York), who is in Canada assisting Canadian business moving south of the border, stated:

We aren't trying to raid Canada, but if they're moving out we'll welcome them with open arms . . .

When Olympia and York Developments Ltd. of Toronto laid out $350 million in April, 1977, to buy nine skyscrapers in New York city, it became overnight the largest Canadian investor in American real estate. In addition, 26 per cent of the assets of the Trizec Corporation of Montreal ($192 million) are invested in U.S. real estate. Cadillac Fairview has invested approximately $100 million in U.S. real estate.

In Texas, and maybe that state will be the thirteenth province, a Dallas broker estimates that a quarter of a billion Canadian dollars are invested in Texas alone. In 1976, for example, the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce paid $25 million for an apartment complex in Houston. Moreover, Canadian life insurance companies have acquired a half billion dollars worth of U.S. property in the last five years in Atlanta, Chicago, Denver, Los Angeles, and Philadelphia.

The governor of Louisiana was in Toronto yesterday speaking to Canadian businessmen, encouraging them to move to Louisiana. He pointed out that about $7 million or $8 million of a $2.3 billion investment in Louisiana recently came from Canada directly, and maybe $100 million indirectly. The greatest portion by far went into oil and gas ventures, he said, and most of the rest into chemical plant developments.

Next week representatives from Tennessee will be in Toronto, speaking to Canadian businessmen, assisting and encouraging them to go to the United States. The Memphis area chamber of commerce will be in Toronto next week to speak to businessmen to encourage them to move out of Canada.

I have another recent article entitled "Western Canadians Buying Into Texas, Colorado". It can easily be seen how widespread this is. We are on a disaster course in this country, but all we get is this ridiculous budget. There is absolutely nothing in it about how they are going to tackle this very serious problem and trend. Where will it end? The way we are going, all that will be left here will be the working people, the peasants and the Liberal government. The article states that they are going to Texas and Colorado as a result of political uncertainties. That is the reason behind the money exodus. All we have had in the last ten years is a lot of uncertainty in this country through the total and complete mismanagement of the nation's business by this government.

Here is another reason why many of the businesses are leaving this country:

> Related to the preceding point is the problem of too much government. The ever-increasing size of the federal public service and the problems created by such expansion are factors which hinder business activity. Businessmen are forever hassled by federal regulatory agencies, boards, departments, bureaus, offices and councils with their myriad of rules, regulations, laws, edicts, orders, decrees and statements. In short, they are inundated with paper work. Moreover, should a businessman disagree with a ruling, it is extremely difficult to appeal to these bodies and the time and effort involved usually preclude an appeal anyway.

That is not the way they operate in the United States. That is why they are clearing out of Canada. In the February 28 edition of the Ottawa Citizen, Neil Wood, president of Cadillac Fairview Ltd., is quoted as saying:

> We're not selling out Canadian assets, nor turning our back on good Canadian opportunties, but they are few and far between. Government delays in getting approvals continue to frustrate us in Canada compared with U.S. where development is welcome.

This matter has been raised a number of times. The Prime Minister, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, and the Minister of Finance were questioned about what action they were going to take to encourage business and investment to stay in Canada. We did not get cut answers. They will not even sit down and talk to these people to encourage them to stay here. They bring in a meaningless budget, thinking that will be the answer.

Government involvement in the economy has increased to the point where 42 per cent of our gross national product, the sum of all goods and services produced in Canada, is produced by the government. If present trends by provincial and federal governments continue, 88 per cent of all goods and services produced in Canada by 1990 will be under the state, and only 12 per cent will be left for private enterprise. In policy making, the only thing the Trudeau government can think of is socialism. For example, if oil prices rise, they set up a national petroleum corporation. The solution to the problem is to reduce the size of government slowly, not through mass layoffs of dedicated civil servants, but by attrition. In addition, wasteful make-work projets could be eliminated. If governments want to make work, the best way to do it is through proper incentives to private industry. That is something this government does not want to do.

It is very strange when we question the Prime Minister and others on this. What are their motives that they do not want to deal with this problem or talk about it? When they bring in a budget, there is nothing in it to indicate how they intend to deal with this very serious trend.

With regard to our very serious inflation which has been caused by this government, Milton Friedman, Nobel Prize Laureate in Economics, stated:

> There is only one place where inflation is made in Canada and that is Ottawa. The unions don't make inflation for a very simple reason; the unions do not own a printing press on which they can turn out those multi-coloured pieces of paper called money. The reason you have inflation is because the government has been printing too much and spending too much.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Lessard (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): At this early stage of my intervention, Mr. Speaker, I should like to deal briefly with some of the remarks which the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie) has just made, for he is well known in the House for his severe criticisms of the government generally, but more specifically of the right hon. Prime Minister. I suggest that his repeated attacks against our Prime Minister form a personal vendetta against him; for this reason, I do not think he will gain much support from the Canadian public because politicians seeking revenge are not likely to convince a great many people.

If I have a piece of advice for the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre, it is to limit his criticisms to the course of action people take and not to the people themselves, because behaving the way he does now will not improve his position.

Mr. Speaker, we are going into the last day of the debate on the budget brought down on April 10 last by the Hon. Jean Chrétien, an occasion on which I should like to congratulate our colleague for his first budget, which we all recognize as having been difficult to prepare. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, few Canadians expected to receive great gifts; aware as they are of the economic situation of their country, Canadians expected the Minister of Finance to be responsible and present them with adjustments to the fiscal situation as it stands; they did not expect him to make any great concessions, neither in the field of taxes nor in that of new programs requiring additional government expenditures. That, Mr. Speaker, because Canadians realize that in years past the Canadian government made considerable effort to increase expenditures to give new impetus to our economy, and those substantial expenditures, added to tax cuts, personal and corporate, resulted in the growth of our national debt.

For the year just ended we have incurred a deficit of more than $8 billion. For the year which begins, with the new budget brought forward and the few concessions made, the deficit of Canada will probably exceed the $11.5 billion mark. It is obvious that with so little elbow room the Minister of Finance could not, and the Canadian people recognized this, give substantial income tax cuts to Canadian consumers in particular nor could he increase substantially the expenditures in the areas which could have contributed to reduce unemployment. He did so, however, by rearranging some existing measures in order to increase their impact on the development of our economy.

This budget, Mr. Speaker, was well received and perceived by responsible people both in the press and in industry as a whole. It was well perceived because it has been seen as the result of both an in-depth study by officials from the Department of Finance and of an objective decision from the minister and the government in the face of our responsibilities. Even though an election will probably be called soon, we did not want either to take measures which could have been interpreted as a step aimed at gaining the electorate's favour, because it would have increased our deficit. We are aware that Canadian voters recognize the work that has been done by this government and we are sure that they will make the right judgement when the election is called. I am personally aware of it and so are my colleagues. And as even the previous speaker said, the polls that have been taken indicate beyond any doubt that the Liberal party and Pierre Elliott Trudeau's government will be returned to office.

Mr. Speaker, we can say about this budget that, in spite of the financial limits the minister was facing, he succeeded in proposing measures likely to increase the general demand of our economy. On one hand, federal participation in the sales tax cut would increase consumption and benefit all Canadian consumers. On the other hand, other measures such as those related to research and development, to energy development activities, to investments in the railway system would represent incentives to the general industrial growth of Canada. Finally, maintaining for another year the tariff reductions established in 1973 on a wide range of consumer goods would avoid the higher retail prices those goods would otherwise have shown, and therefore would benefit all Canadian consumers.

Following the discussions held during the recent meetings between federal and provincial governments, meetings which, as you are aware, were held in December and January and have culminated in a federal-provincial conference of first ministers in February, it became apparent that the involvement and co-operation of all sectors were a necessity in a number of areas.

The budget introduced on April 10 represents an important step toward sharing responsibilities between the two levels of government in so far as the stabilization policy and, more particularly at this time, the stimulation of the economy are concerned. Of course, measures like those related to research and development activities as well as the development of energy can potentially benefit all parts of Canada and might possibly benefit some provinces more than others. However, it is through more specific action, and I am thinking here of the grants for the retail sales tax cut, that the federal government, despite financial constraints and the need to boost the economy in general, has shown its concern with the importance of regional problems. On the one hand, this action is indeed very favourable to the Atlantic provinces, which will have nothing to pay for the sales tax cut and will therefore not bear any additional tax burden. On the other hand, this action will also be greatly beneficial not only to Quebec consumers but also to the producers of that province where a high percentage of Canadian manufactured goods are produced.

I hope, Mr. Speaker, that during the current negotiations, the Quebec government will recognize the usefulness of the proposal put forth by the federal government and the Minister of Finance, and that it will agree to take part, with the other Canadian provinces, in the effort to reduce the impact on consumers of the provincial retail sales tax. And I do think that the fact that this proposal was accepted, and the Quebec decision to cut even more the sales tax on certain products, is a direct recognition of the negative impact the rentail sales tax has on the general economy. When one considers that first analyses on the potential impact of that tax cut, and indications are that in Quebec more than 10,000 jobs would be created rapidly following those sales tax reductions, one realizes, Mr. Speaker, the impact the role of the provinces has on the development of the federal and provincial economies, the responsibility as a result of the tax tool they have to influence the creation of jobs in Canada and on their territories. They have proven, Mr. Speaker, that they have a role to play in fighting unemployment and that it is not only the responsibility of the federal government to come up with measures to create jobs and get the economy going again.

I think it is obvious that provincial governments through their budgets, their tax measures, their expenditures and their actions, also have a role to play and a very important responsibility in the performance of our economy and the rate of unemployment which is now afflicting Canada and which we here in Ottawa denounce. But the means of intervention at the federal level also have their limitations, and we want to indicate to Canadians that we are prepared to recognized and take our responsibilities and to take the necessary means to counter unemployment; but that responsibility is not incumbent only upon the federal government and must be recognized and shared by the provinces which are ever more anxious to see the federal government decentralize and give the provinces greater powers and greater revenues.

It is quite obvious that if the provinces are given greater powers and greater revenues, they will have to recognize more fully the responsibilities they have with respect to the conduct of the economy and the creation of jobs to fight unemployment. They will not be able to get more powers and then continue to believe that only the Government of Canada will be responsible for the problems and they will get the credit for the accomplishments.

The minister of finance of Quebec has just tabled his budget, and as was noticed, he anticipates in the budget that the federal government's contribution through tax transfers from the federal treasury to Quebec will exceed $3.3 billion. That is a contribution of over 25 per cent to the provincial budget, Mr. Speaker, not to mention other transfer payments from the federal government to the province of Quebec and its residents. We can be sure, Mr. Speaker, that, as some hon. members, some colleagues in the House have said before, if we compare Quebec's contribution to the Canadian economy and to the federal budget with the federal government contribution to the Quebec economy and Quebecers, I feel that, generally speaking, they are the winners. As recently as last night, when speaking to a group of citizens of Quebec, I said that when an agreement is concluded—and recently I have signed auxiliary and joint agreements with the government of Quebec—our provincial colleagues from Quebec remind us that it it a fair return of all taxes paid by Quebecers to the federal government.

I would like to take this opportunity to recall that we are at the end of April and that, as Canadian citizens, we must fill our income tax returns. As I have noted myself once again a few days ago, we all know that we pay more income tax to the Quebec government than to the federal government. And I do not know of any contribution by Quebec to federal government expenditures. Quite the opposite. Rather I note very large contributions from the federal government to the expenses of the province of Quebec and transfer payments to Quebec residents, and I pay more income tax to Quebec than I do to the federal government. And when I sign an agreement with Quebec, under all DREE programs, the minimum federal contribution is always at least 60 per cent, Mr. Speaker.

Contributions from the federal government amount to 60 per cent while those of the province are only 40 per cent. This is proof that we are pouring back more money into Quebec under our tax programs and shared cost programs than we are collecting from it. Mr. Speaker, in the October 1977 budget the finance minister also included an investment tax credit aimed at increasing the stimulating effect in DREE designated areas. The 5 per cent credit which was already in force then and which was to expire on June 30 has been extended for three years. That credit has been raised to 7.5 per cent in certain provinces, such as Saskatchewan, Manitoba, northern Ontario and the designated areas of Quebec. In the Gaspé peninsula and the Maritime provinces their credit has been brought up to 10 per cent. Furthermore, the finance minister once again has listened to certain recommendations which we from DREE make regarding the regions. Last January he announced an employment tax credit program which is higher in DREE designated areas. In his budget, when he says that the Atlantic provinces will not have to pay back that temporary cutback of the retail sales tax, he recognizes once again the contribution of DREE toward designated areas and I think that in the name of these areas, I must thank the minister for having paid attention to the recommendations which we made to him in favour of designated areas, the areas in need of help.

Despite the financial constraints which face the government, my department has continued to undertake significant regional development initiatives. In the last fiscal year, for example, 13 new subagreements were signed, representing federal commitments of more than $377 million, and a number of amendments were made to existing subagreements. Fourteen of them increased the funding under those agreements. These amendments represent additional federal commitments of $362 million. If you add both amounts you will find that in 1977-78, under the general development agreements signed with the ten provinces, more than $739 million was committed in federal funds.

Included in the above agreements are: a new subagreement on tourism in Newfoundland; on forestry, and tourism with Sysco in Nova Scotia; an agreement to provide for further development in northeastern New Brunswick, and a second agreement on the development of agriculture in that province; major amendments to existing agreements with Quebec on agriculture, key highway networks, forest development, industrial infrastructure, and a substantial new agreement for sewage treatment facilities in Montreal; a new agreement with Alberta respecting the development of the northlands in that province; and important new agreements on industrial development, agriculture, and rural development with British Columbia.

Recently, in the current fiscal year, I signed a significant new agreement on tourism with Quebec, and other new initiatives are under discussion with various provinces at present. In fact we signed agreements with practically all the provinces. Tomorrow we will be signing an agreement with the province of Manitoba. This is the kind of collaboration and support DREE is prepared to give to provincial governments to help develop their economies.

Mr. Speaker, the department is committed in each one of the areas. Our department allocates its budgets depending on the needs of the region. It cannot of course cover everything, but in addition to giving more to the provinces which need more, one must also consider the fact that within the framework of these agreements, we are also contributing to an extent which varies, for instance, when we commit $50 million in a province and that this amount represents 90 per cent of the expenditures, the federal effort in this province is clearly superior to what it does in another province where it also spends $50 million, but where this sum represents only 60 per cent of the expenditures, as is the case for Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, I am saying this because we sometimes hear criticism from the opposition and outside the House to the effect that the departments do not allocate funds objectively in accordance with the needs of the various regions. They are forgetting that two factors are involved: the total amount allocated and also the proportion that this represents of the total expenditures of both governments under these agreements. I believe that when we consider this factor, we can better appreciate the substantial effort made in the areas which have greater disparities than others.

Since the time at our disposal is limited, I shall unfortunately have to limit my comments because I would have liked to talk about many other factors. We spent a substantial part of our budget in the Atlantic provinces, but this is because this area has much more obvious needs than other areas of Canada. I recognize that other parts of Canada also have needs, but in co-operation with the provinces, we are at least able to take care of the major priorities.

I would like to come back to Quebec in particular, Mr. Speaker, because two attitudes prevail from time to time in the House and elsewhere. Some say that the federal government is doing nothing to help Quebec fight against unemployment, to develop its economy, that we are content to observe Quebec fighting against its difficulties and that we are even pleased when we see a government like that of the Parti Québécois have problems and that we are not in the least sympathetic to the problems and the proposals that are made.

On the other hand, when we help certain regions—and I shall prove that we do help them—others blame us and say that all federal government funds go to the province of Quebec. Mr. Speaker, those two positions are wrong. They are wrong because on the one hand we help the province of Quebec, this is true, but on the other hand we do everything in our power with the money at our disposal to help the government of Quebec and Quebecers particularly to get out of their present difficulties, especially as concerns unemployment.

Mr. Speaker, since I have been responsible for DREE, I have looked at what we have done in the province of Quebec. If we consider the agreements with the province of Quebec alone, on March 29, 1976 I signed four agreements with Quebec; if you sum up the share of each government they amount to a total of $162,700,000. The share of DREE or of the federal government, was $97,428,000. Those are long-term commitments. On April 21, 1976 we signed another agreement in Quebec for the development of a pulp and paper mill and the federal government has committed $30 million for that project, an investment amounting to about $300 million. On June 16 another agreement was signed, this time in Mirabel for the development of the industrial park called Spicam, another $13 million commitment from the two government levels, including $8 million from the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. On June 27, 1977, under the PQ government, both government levels earmarked $440 million for three agreements concerning highways, agriculture and forestry. The DREE contribution was $200,880,000.

On January 24, 1978, $77,600,000 for the industrial infrastructure, including $46 million from DREE. Recently Montreal has received $150 million for three projects. On April 6 we signed an agreement on tourism development at a cost of $76 million, including $46 million from the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. So when I hear remarks to the effect that we do nothing for the province of Quebec or that we give everything to the province of Quebec, believe me, Mr. Speaker, that lack of understanding on both sides puzzles me—

Mr. Paproski: May I ask the minister a question?

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: An hon. member is asking if the minister would allow him a question.

[English]

Mr. Paproski: I would like to ask the minister whether the figures which he has just given for the different projects in Canada are for one fiscal year or are they for continuous programs? I did not get it, because my translation was not on.

Mr. Lessard: All those amounts were committed during the fiscal year, but the spending of the cash flow is being spread, depending on the agreement signed, over a period of one to five years.

[Translation]

In addition to those agreements, Mr. Speaker, everyone knows there is the special area of Montreal where it has been acknowledged that there was a specific situation in the sense that over half of the Quebec unemployed are concentrated there. The cabinet has recognized that under the circumstances, in addition to the activities of other departments, my department could intervene. We have done so and to this day we have assisted more than 80 companies, new ones or older ones seeking help to expand or modernize. We are not ashamed of it, first because we are contributing to economic development and second because we are fighting against unemployment. It is part of our responsibility, but we are not the only ones involved. There is a provincial government which should play its part. Right now, I really wonder if they do so.

I see, Mr. Speaker, that the time allotted to me is slipping by and I would like to deal with other areas and not only with Quebec. In western Canada, we have signed agreements with each province. In the three prairie provinces, we have programs regularly in place to develop local infrastructures, for example in some forty communities through the prairie provinces, because we want to strengthen the structure of those communities to become growth centres through the prairies in order to hold back the population and provide services to them for the benefit of the farm industry first of all, which is very important, because when a farmer must drive 50, 60 or 100 miles to get a little service he gets discouraged and we often have seen farms deserted because of that situation. That is why the agreement on the development of local infrastructure in the prairies is a very valuable one which was signed in 1972, amended in 1975 and is presently going on. As I said, we have concluded five agreements in British Columbia during the last fiscal year and negotiations are still going on with that government. We have also concluded some agreements in Ontario as we also did in the maritimes. Before concluding, Mr. Speaker, I would like to talk about a corporation which is under my responsibility as a minister, the Cape Breton Development Corporation.

I would be remiss if I did not mention the valuable contribution to regional development made by the Cape Breton Development Corporation. Devco took over mines which were in terrible condition in 1968. It was felt then that the only future was humane phasing out of coal mining in Cape Breton. We in the government are proud of the creative and flexible mechanism which we created. I think it is fair to say that we all owe a debt of gratitude to the present Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) who ensured that Devco would be a flexible tool. How flexible has Devco been?

Devco was able to react very quickly to changes in the world energy market, able to change policy from a phase-out of worn mines to stabilizing coal production, able to seize an opportunity to sell metallurgical coal, and able to move toward coal industry expansion to meet strong future thermal and metallurgical coal markets.

Instead of closing mines, Devco will further rehabilitate No. 26 mine and develop a major new mine over the next five years, if final feasibility and viability studies are positive. The total cost of these and related developments will be close to $265 million. The new Donkin mine will add about 1,200 jobs in industrial Cape Breton. Instead of the extremely poor condition of the mines prior to Devco, while we are not without problems, this government is proud that Devco miners and management have developed the Lingan mine into one of the most efficient, perhaps the most efficient, long wall coal mine in the world.

In an age when it is claimed people do not want to work, Devco management and miners volunteered by the hundreds to go down five miles of tunnels out under the ocean to fight a fire in No. 26 mine several years ago. Why? Because they wanted to save their mine and their jobs.

What began as a welfare operation is transforming itself into a viable, proud industry. That is a result of the regional development policies of this government. There is work still to be done before the caterpillar becomes a butterfly, but we on this side know it will succeed. We know Cape Bretoners can do it, and we will support their efforts.

We stand now on the brink of over $265 million worth of new development in the coal industry. We got here not because someone said you should do this and that, but because DREE, working hand in hand with the province of Nova Scotia and Devco, found the coal reserves to make a new mine and to make the rehabilitation of No. 26 mine possible. These accomplishments are not accidents. They are the result of foresight, planning, hard work, co-operation within the federal government, and co-operation with the province of Nova Scotia. This government delivers. Also I refer to Devco's bed and breakfast program in tourism, Devco's revitalizing of sheep farming operations, Devco's oyster farming development, Devco's trout development, and many other things in which it has been engaged. Devco has a new president, Mr. Bob Matheson. Personally I have full confidence in him. He is competent, and I am sure he will lead Devco to more successes.

Mr. Paproski: Which constituency is he running in?

[Translation]

Mr. Lessard: Mr. Speaker, I think that Mr. Matheson is not in the race. He heads Devco. He comes from Cape Breton. He is the son of a miner who has made a career as a lawyer, just as my hon. colleague of the opposition, and who wants to take up the challenge of contributing to revive the economy of the area where he was born and where he grew up. Mr. Speaker, I could go on, but I see that you are about to interrupt me so I will close by saying that the budget presented by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) is an excellent one, that it has been well received by the general public and that it will certainly win the support of the majority of members of the House when the question will be put for the last time, and I wish to thank him.

[English]

Mr. Bert Hargrave (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I have not participated in too many budget debates in the past, but I am privileged to do so on this occasion. The single item in this budget rated by most people as being the most important was the provincial governments' involvement in their provincial sales tax reductions. Certainly it has provided most of the after-budget news commentary and comments in this parliament.

However, the single item which appealed to me was the inclusion of an amendment to the capital gains tax law that provides for the deferral of capital gains in intergenerational transfers of family farms and partnerships. I am sure hon. members on both sides of this chamber will recall that I was somewhat enthusiastic over this specific item in the budget. Perhaps they will recall also that this same item provoked the greatest spontaneous applause in the House over any other budget item. It marked the successful culmination of over five years of persistent, personal effort, commencing in 1973 with Mr. Turner, followed by Mr. Macdonald, and finally by the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien).

In retrospect, this change in the capital gains tax laws had to come, or we would have seen the end of our family farm and ranch way of life due to the ravages of seven years of galloping land inflation and the availability of foreign capital. In any event, I thank the hon. Minister of Finance and his policy advisers for this particular budget item. I know of many long-established family cattle ranch units which would join me in expressing this appreciation to the minister. I hope that his parliamentary secretary will convey that personal message to the minister. I am sure that the minister and his parliamentary secretary will understand when I suggest quite seriously that I feel that I can take considerable credit for this tax change in this budget.

I would like now to make some remarks about various energy aspects of the budget, in particular respecting remarks made by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie) in this debate on April 13. The minister was speaking about a Canadian strategy to establish an energy policy, and he had pointed out that it had three basic elements. The third element was of interest to me, which "was to develop our own indigenous supplies of oil, particularly the non-conventional sources—the tar sands and the heavy oils of western Canada." I mention this reference to draw attention to a new source of heavy crude that exists now in my Medicine Hat constituency, and that is on the Suffield military reserve.

I am sure members are aware that there is now substantial production of natural gas from this field. It is being produced by the Alberta Energy Company that is owned almost totally by the people of Alberta. This Suffield gas production will increase steadily as the present drilling program continues. What is not generally known is that heavy crude is also being produced in modest quantities in that same Suffield area, and there are now about 30 heavy crude wells in various stages of drilling and production.

Heavy crude oil, of course, is more expensive to produce and is priced below conventional oils. Thus there is a very valid reason for that extra world price provision provided for in Bill C-19, which is the Petroleum Administration Act that was passed last Monday night.

At the end of that debate I made a short intervention in support of the inclusion of these Suffield heavy crudes in the group of heavy crudes that will enjoy these higher world prices. The Minister of Finance has recognized the need for heavy crude production in this budget by extending the manufacturing and processing tax incentive to upgrade heavy oil. This does not include plants established in relation to bituminous sand mining projects. This incentive in the budget should apply to the Suffield heavy crudes.

The economics of producing both gas and oil at the shallow Suffield depth can be appreciated from a comparison of average drilling costs in western Canada to offshore costs based on 1976 figures. These comparisons were recently published in the bulletin entitled "Energy Update 1977" which was put out by the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources. I wish to give a few quotations from pages 13 and 14 of that bulletin. On page 13 it says:

> The combination of higher well-head prices and provincial drilling incentives resulted in a dramatic increase in exploration spending in western Canada. This drilling activity paid off in a significant expansion of our gas reserves as 80 per cent of the record 6,300 wells drilled were for natural gas exploration and development.
> Additions to our natural gas reserves from shallow producing horizons such as those found in the Suffield Block in southeastern Alberta have been well ahead of the annual consumption rate. These drilling successes have spurred additional programs across the prairies.

I should point out, Mr. Speaker, that this very positive comment is mainly due to Alberta's excellent incentive policies.

There is an interesting table of costs listed in this same bulletin on page 14, which is headed "Average Drilling Costs in Western Canada and Offshore, 1976" and gives the costs of four locations, Alberta; other western provinces; Northwest Territories, Yukon and the Arctic, and the fourth one, east coast offshore. I would like to quote two costs. One is the cost per total foot and the other is the cost per total well. First of all, the cost per total foot: Alberta $33.98; other western provinces $57.16; Northwest Territories, Yukon and the Arctic $770.70, and east coast offshore, $243.14.

Going to cost per total well, we get into the big money: in Alberta again, $108,129; other western provinces $283,482; in the Northwest Territories, Yukon, and Arctic $7,848,444. And on the east cost offshore, $4,818,200. It should be noted that these are actual total costs per producing well and do not include development and exploratory costs, which are usually much higher.

It will surprise no one in this chamber that I want to make a few comments about our Canadian cattle industry. I want to make a brief review of the financial side of our total Canadian beef cattle industry, and I want to say quickly that that side is certainly not the panacea that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) suggested in his budget speech a couple of days ago. In my opinion, the last three years—1975, 1976 and 1977—have been the most difficult years in the modern history of our cattle industry, and that includes the 1930's. This is about a 40-year period.

The single worst year was 1976. This is in relevant terms, of course, in relating market prices to production costs. Probably the most factual record and research in this critical three year phase of Canada's cattle industry is contained in a recent publication entitled "Economic Research Report", and it goes on in the title with a little more detail, "An Analysis of the Costs and Returns in the Canadian Beef Industry, 1970-

1977". This report was put out by a firm named Broadwith, Hughes and Associates Ltd. of Guelph, Ontario, and was dated September, 1977. This report was completed at the request of the Canadian Cattlemen's Association.

One of the authors, Mr. David Hughes, was a former senior staff officer of the Food Prices Review Board. I would like to give some very significant quotations from the chapter entitled "Summary and Conclusions":

—aggregate net income in Canadian feedlot operations showed generally increasing returns between 1970 and 1973 with 1971 and 1973 being exceptionally good years. A dramatic reversal of fortunes occurred in 1974 when net income fell from plus $77 million in 1973 to minus $46 million in 1974. A partial recovery was experienced in 1975 but a further dramatic fall in net income occurred in 1976 from a position of plus $19 million in 1975 to minus $84 million in 1976 . . .

Western cattle feeders appear to have had a comparative advantage in feeding cattle over their eastern counterparts during the 1970 to 1973 period. However, relatively greater increases in feed costs in the west in 1974 and 1975 completely eroded this advantage in those years.

It goes on as follows:

Net income returns to Canadian cow/calf operations showed a similar increasing aggregate net income picture to the feedlot sector over the period 1970 to 1973 but experienced an equally dramatic change in fortunes in 1974 when the net income level fell well below those achieved between 1970 and 1973. The decline in aggregate net income in the cow/calf sector has been sustained through 1975 and 1976. Net income has moved from a positive of plus $390 million or plus $78 per cow in 1973 to a position of minus $246 million or minus $40 per cow in 1976. It is interesting to note that the full impact of depressed prices for slaughter cattle were not felt until 1975 or 1976 in the cow/calf sector and that the size of the Canadian beef cow herd was still increasing in 1975.

On the next page appears the following short sentence:

In summary the dramatic change in fortunes in the beef industry in 1974 resulted from a coincidental sharp decline in slaughter cattle prices and a sharp increase in feed costs.

Later there occurs this sentence:

The most startling revelation of the analysis is the dramatic changes in net income returns from quarter to quarter and from period to period in the feedlot sector and to a certain extent the cow/calf sector.

Later on the report states:

As an adjunct to this it seems incongruous to us that the beef cow herd in Canada was still increasing in 1975, given that industry signals of impending losses in the industry were apparent in early 1974.

I remind hon. members that the decline in the cattle herd actually started in September, 1975. Mr. Speaker, that concludes the quotations from that interesting analysis of the difficult period from which we have just emerged.

The report clearly identifies a total Canadian industry loss in equity over the last three and one-half years of over $400 million. What this very factual report does not comment on or identify are the deep scars that are now apparent in our cattle industry. Many cattle producers, particularly young cattlemen, and perhaps some of those who got into the exotic side of the industry, are no longer with us. In the United States it is estimated that 200,000 cattlemen are no longer in the industry—that is 13 per cent of their producers. There are no comparable figures that I am aware of for Canada. At the usual ratio of 1 to 10, however, we could have 20,000 less cattle producers in Canada today.

[Mr. Hargrave.]

In addition to these scars, there are other significant changes in our cattle and beef industry and in beef consumer preferences. It was the liquidation phase of the cattle cycle beginning in September, 1975, that saw a 15 per cent drop in cow numbers in both Canada and United States; it was this liquidation phase that spawned the present hamburger craze. In 1977, 54 per cent of beef eaten in the United States was in the form of hamburger. The Canadian figure is probably just a little lower. Now that the big cow selldown is over in both countries, consumers will probably not want to return to the much higher percentage of choice steaks and roasts of former years because our society has become accustomed to and is satisfied with the fast food service so readily available on the North American continent. This is a logical and progressive development in our beef eating habits which should bring fed cattle prices and non-fed cattle prices, that is, cows and grass cattle, closer together. Fed cattle prices would come down and non-fed cattle prices would probably move up. This would be good for both the cattle industry and for consumers.

Most important of all, however, in the industry's recovery process from those three years of disaster, is the deep concern of cattlemen that our industry will have the opportunity to recoup that $400 million odd equity loss through the market place.

Over the last two months our North American cattle and beef markets have clearly strengthened, and strengthened rather quickly. Our industry can recover through the market place if the government allows our market system to function without political interference. It is only common cow sense that the good market price years have to carry the bad years.

Two days ago, during the rambling remarks of the Minister of Agriculture in this budget debate, he conveniently stuck to vague generalities instead of making at least a few specific comments about such things as his beef import law that we used to hear about. It now seems obvious that the great competition between this minister and the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner) about who would sponsor this new legislation has been called off completely and replaced by that very deliberately vague joint statement on March 30, indicating that the Export and Import Permits Act would continue to set quotas, but only for the next three years. These quotas, they pointed out, are to be based upon the base period of 1971-1975.

There was a very interesting phrase in that statement of March 30 which referred to those quotas. The phrase "adjusted for changes in domestic beef consumption since this base period" referred to the quotas that could be set under the Export and Import Permits Act. Canadian beef consumption for the base period 1971-75 was approximately 94 pounds per capita; last year we probably ate about 113 pounds per capita, and the estimate for 1979 is 95 pounds per capita. There are indications that our Canadian cow numbers are already too low to produce the ideal domestic supply of between 90 and 100 pounds per capita. We know, for example, that the next cattle cycle will peak approximately in 1985. Today, our industry has already determined the beef supply, that is, our domestic beef supply for 1980 and 1981. It is here now, on the ground.

Our producer concern is, quite bluntly, that this vague phrase "adjusted for changes in domestic beef consumption since this base period" could be interpreted by the two ministers as an appropriate excuse to increase those offshore beef quotas—perhaps even this year but certainly over the next three years. Surely our Minister of Agriculture would not stoop so low, but it is a matter of concern. This is the reason cattlemen will continue to insist on a Canadian beef import law that would establish the rules by legislation and not be subject to change by this minister, future ministers of agriculture, or orders in council.

Another specific item that the Minister of Agriculture might have remarked upon—perhaps it was deliberately omitted—is the matter of a possible fed cattle payout for the first quarter of 1977. Both the minister and his staff have deliberately teased us with hints that there may be one, depending on what percentage figure, 90 or 95 per cent, is to be used. Now, almost 13 months after that period has ended with no final statement being made, we can only assume that this payout depends not on the stabilization legislation but on how much money the minister can get from Treasury and the political advantage he can get from a late announcement just before the election.

I must say I find it regrettable that the minister's original concept of stabilization with its stop loss approach seems to have all but disappeared. It has disappeared in favour of a cost of production index approach which is never explained or divulged, and the minister's power of discretion in varying that percentage figure used. We have already seen a percentage figure of 90, 95, 100; and in one instance up to 105 per cent.

There are some very obvious lessons which all of us, cattlemen and politicians, should have learned from this critical three- to four-year crisis from which our Canadian cattle industry has just emerged.

First of all it is appropriate to point out that in 1972 our Canadian Cattleman's Association in a beef seminar warned of an over-supply situation from a too rapid cow build-up, which continued to its peak in 1975. As a producers' organization we warned back in 1972 that that situation would surely develop, and it came about just as we predicted. However, no one, especially governments, listened to us at that time.

Today, when we are on the up side of the market price cycle, I want to remind all concerned that the Canadian Cattleman's Association has initiated a new "Beef Watch" policy to try to anticipate the cattle and beef cycle and then to project trends and advise accordingly. Some encouragement and attention to this new approach by cattle producers themselves are surely warranted, especially by consumers and governments.

Finally, there is no question that our Canadian cattle industry has survived perhaps the most difficult price-cost phase in our history, but at a cost which we do not yet really know. That $400 million figure which I pointed out is the actual cash cost as near as anyone can find, but there is much more of a cost than that.

In the west the drought, and the severe winter which is only now just over, have added to that cost, especially across southern Alberta and southwestern Saskatchewan. Hopefully we, as producers, and particularly politicians, will learn from this experience. I sincerely hope so.

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, it is always a pleasure to follow the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Hargrave). Debates in this House are improved when we hear from him and from the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) on a significant part of the agricultural community. It is a little unfair from the standpoint of the Minister of Agriculture because he has to cover the whole spectrum of agriculture in Canada and could not deal in a specific way with all of the items which the member for Medicine Hat suggests. I know that his speech will be very carefully read by the minister and he will call out that which should be taken.

In addition to being Minister of Employment and Immigration for Canada, it is also my privilege to be the member of parliament for Sarnia-Lambton. On behalf of my constituents I want to say to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) that the budget was very well received in my region of the country. I listened to a radio broadcast from Ottawa on that particular night, I believe it was radio station CKOY, and its business consultant said that the senior citizens of Canada should stand up and cheer at the announcement made by the Minister of Finance in connection with the registered retirement savings plans, the options which are available to senior citizens, and the Registered Retirement Investment Fund referred to in the budget.

I think it is an appropriate move made by the minister so that senior citizens will now have a better opportunity to deal with the money which they have saved over the years, and still maintain the basic principle of the RRSP, which is, after all, meant to be retirement income.

The large concession made regarding research and development will sit well with the petrochemical industry in my area.

The sales tax cuts have won unanimous approval from citizens across the country, not only in my riding. We have heard some criticism of the fact that this was an invasion of provincial rights, or that it was not the appropriate way to deal with it. When one looks at the number of meetings and the number of times which the Minister of Finance travelled across Canada and met with the ministers of finance of the various provinces, on a multilateral and bilateral basis always bearing in mind the concern about secrecy respecting the budget, as there should be, I think we have to adopt a little bit more of a practical approach. In the final analysis the decision taken was adopted by nine out of the ten provinces of this country.

Certainly it is right that maybe we should be looking at other avenues of approach such as specific types of sales tax, and in this particular way we can work in conjunction with the provinces. But most assuredly we must applaud the Minister of Finance for being able to meet with his provincial counterparts and come up with a program which is acceptable to nine out of the ten provinces.

In Lambton County, my riding, which was the former historic riding of Lambton West, there is a large rural element. All of us who have concern for people in that particular region, and I have some knowledge of that having spent some 12 years as solicitor for the County of Lambton, welcome the fact that the Minister of Finance saw fit to deal with incorporated farms and allow them to move from one generation to another without penalty of taxation. I think that move was appropriate. Obviously there was concern by the Minister of Finance that it might set some kind of precedent for other small businesses and the like. He took this step forward and I think it was an appropriate one, given the contribution that the primary producer makes to the people of Canada. Whoever deserves the credit, Mr. Speaker, in the final analysis the time must be chosen and the amount of money must be found so that this particular move can be made. It was a very grave move considering all of the other pressures that were being brought to bear at that particular time.

There is a genuine, legitimate concern by all members of this House, whatever their political persuasion, about the level of unemployment in Canada. Fortunately this government's employment measures, carried out on a significant scale, are geared to stimulating the economy without rekindling inflation and, most important, are targeted to groups in areas of the country particularly hard hit by unemployment. This is especially so, of course, in the case of direct job creation.

Over the past ten years, the Canadian labour force has increased by almost three million people, some 37 per cent. In total, some 2.3 million more people were employed in 1977 than ten years ago. But the continuing population growth and the continued influx of new entrants into the labour force have contributed to the present high levels of unemployment.

Unfortunately for the Canadian public, and in dealing with the problem of unemployment, the opposition parties' response has been poorly researched, sometimes reprehensible and on most occasions it will not work, at least it will not work as claimed by the opposition parties.

The misrepresentations and distortions perpetuated by a number of members of the opposition have contributed to a serious misunderstanding not only of the nature of the unemployment in Canada but also of the scope and the rationale of the government's programs to combat unemployment.

The comments of the members of the NDP have been singularly inaccurate. Their spokesman even has a hard time reading statistics correctly. It is a fact that Statistics Canada, and they use Statistics Canada, has estimated the actual numbers of unemployed in March, 1978, to have averaged one million. Admittedly, this number is higher than any of us would like to see, and the matter is of great concern. Nonetheless, the NDP insists on distorting these figures arbitrarily by adding over 600,000 individuals and referring to the over 1.6 million unemployed Canadians, an exaggeration of some 60 per cent. Furthermore, it attempts to rationalize these irresponsible statements by alleging that the difference of 600,000 is made up of discouraged workers, when the facts produced by Statistics Canada indicate that only 64,000 individuals in March could legitimately be classified as such. Even after making allowances for this, one can readily see that the NDP exaggerates the unemployment rate by some 50 per cent over the true figure. It is a very small example of the loose way in which that party bandies statistics around to suit its own purposes.

The trumped-up analysis of the opposition does not stop with misstatements about the labour market. It also includes concoctions with respect to the impact of recent changes in the unemployment insurance program on the labour market. A number of municipalities have recently experienced increases in their social assistance case loads. This situation has led to a number of unfounded allegations about the extent to which recent legislative changes to the unemployment insurance program have been responsible for those increases.

These allegations have been based upon data deliberately selected out of context, and this has left a misleading impression as to the potential impact of unemployment insurance on social assistance case loads. The allegations have been based on data from a few municipalities relating to only a small portion of social welfare recipients who are defined as "employable". In fact, no consistent data or definitions of types of persons on welfare exist across provinces, and the statistical evidence cited to support these allegations is totally misleading.

In fact, those increases in social assistance which have occured are primarily the result of slack economic conditions. In these circumstances many Canadians are having difficulty in finding or maintaining jobs. This has resulted in large and continuing increases in unemployment insurance benefit expenditures. However, it has never been intended that the unemployment insurance program should act as a total and eternal security blanket for all Canadian workers. Responsibility for income maintenance is divided among a variety of programs and jurisdictions.

I suspect, Mr. Speaker, that the opposition knows all too well the real facts about the employment picture, but that it is to their advantage either to distort them or ignore them altogether. In doing so, they deliberately rob people of hope. Let me put before you the true employment picture.

From 1970 to 1976, the latest period for which international comparisons are available, the number of Canadian jobs actually increased by 21 per cent, double that of the United States, which recorded the next largest increase of 11 per cent in the same period. France and Japan experienced a growth of only 5 per cent and 4 per cent respectively, and Germany's work force actually declined by 2.5 per cent. No other country has been as successful in meeting the challenge of providing additional employment opportunities for such a rapidly growing labour force.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cullen: Regardless of these facts, the opposition still speaks of unemployment as if we were back in the thirties. Although the unemployment rate is high and, indeed, too high, it can no longer be regarded in the same light as that of a generation ago when the unemployment rate was rising due to numbers of jobs decreasing rather than numbers of workers increasing. A case in point: over the past 12 months, although the Canadian economy created some 330,000 jobs, some 432,000 workers entered the labour force.

This is a phenomenal increase in the number of people actually working in the course of a year. The fact that we have something like 62.4 per cent of people in the labour force as compared to 50 per cent many years ago, in the sixties and thirties, indicates where our problem is.

In any job creation we attempt, we cannot keep up with the numbers of people entering the work force. For instance, it has resulted in a situation in which there is a significant number of families with multiple earners. In fact, almost two thirds of the unemployed are in families with at least one other wage earner, so that the families are not altogether without income. I would not want to suggest that these additional sources of income are unimportant, or not required. But I do suggest that unemployment no longer means what it used to mean: a complete loss of all family income with resultant hardship and despair.

The Minister of Agriculture stated in his address the other night that to make a comparison with the thirties is absolutely ludicrous, considering at that time there was no unemployment insurance, no mobility grants, no training allowance and, in fact, no medicare. To compare unemployment and the unemployed person today with the thirties is not kosher, which is as charitable a word as I can think of.

There is no doubt that this still adds up to a situation where unemployment is at a level considerably higher than we would like it to be, and the Government of Canada shares the responsibility with the provinces and with the private sector to move to alleviate this problem. To some members of the opposition parties, the solution is simple, "spend our way out of it". Let us turn for a moment to some of the official opposition's proposals.

Personally, I looked forward with some expectation to the results of the three-member task force of the official opposition, about how they would cope with the unemployment situation. To be as charitable as I can, Mr. Speaker, I found the report pathetic. Someone referred to it as so much warmed over soup. The Conservative opposition sent three hand-wringers across the country and, after a great press release, much hyperbole, obviously altogether too much rhetoric, the pusillanimous result has been embarrassing to the official opposition, to the extent that they hoped that any press comment on it would be buried on page ten. One of their more ridiculous proposals tells how they would solve the problem of university graduates by putting them into debt or further into debt by lending them unemployment insurance benefits for a period of time, which benefits would have to be, of course, paid back later and so, I assume, would the premiums. Hardly adequate, Mr. Speaker. One might equally argue that fire insurance can be purchased after the fire! I very much doubt that those employees and employers who are currently paying premiums and who share the risk of benefit costs would accept this proposal to create a special class of citizens who would be exempt from the rules which apply to everyone else.

The NDP proposed measures to prevent unemployment would involve the launching of programs whose impact is highly questionable. In particular, I refer to the NDP proposal to launch $400 million for a municipal capital works program, on the misguided assumption that it would create some 60,000 new jobs. Indeed, one common and irresponsible feature of the NDP employment proposals is the completely unrealistic and inflated estimates of the number of additional jobs they would create. Note, Mr. Speaker, I said additional jobs.

Our experience with a capital works program in the municipalities in 1971 convinced us that this was not the most effective way of creating additional employment. That was a Liberal party program. If we thought it had done the job suggested for it by the NDP, we would have implemented it at the present time. We would have been great heroes with all the municipalities. We would have been perpetrating a fraud by suggesting to those who want to work that this program would creat 60,000 new jobs when we knew, after studying what we had done, that that program just does not work in that way. Having said that, we say there are other programs. The NDP will not lend us one iota of support for any innovative approach that we suggest.

The irony of it all, and one has only to pick up Hansard on any day this House is sitting for proof of what I am saying, is that the opposition is continuously assaulting this government. The fact of the matter is that whenever this government does come up with new and innovative approaches, the opposition's attitude has constantly been to shoot them down on sight and dismiss them out of hand. Let me point out one instance, Mr. Speaker, when the government has been able to overcome the critics of the opposition and implement, after countless hours of arguing and debating, what may well turn out to be the innovation of the decade in changing conditions in our labour market. I am talking about the developmental use of unemployment insurance funds, which was bitterly opposed by members of the opposition during consideration of Bill C-27.

Work sharing was the subject of particular opposition attack. This is what the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez), had to say in the House of Commons on June 23, 1977, about the developmental use of unemployment insurance funds for work sharing:

> One of the so-called progressive ideas offered in this bill is work-sharing. That was very prevalent in the days of the depression. It is not a creative approach to employment, and the government knows it.

For his part, the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald) concluded, and I quote:

> —organized labour and indeed the industrial community do not look with any great amount of favour or interest upon this proposal. It is somewhat useless for the government to say this is a part of a new employment strategy, if in fact there is little interest or co-operation on the horizon from these significant groups.

However, even now, before we have envisaged embarking on pilot projects, initiatives have been and are being taken by workers and employers to establish work-sharing arrangements. As a result, we have already launched 14 work-sharing agreements in which approximately 1,900 workers have participated or are participating in. To date, the lay-offs of nearly 770 individuals have been averted. Companies, supported fully by their employees, have approached us in such numbers that the pilot phase of the program is very heavily booked. Whatever the results of these pilot programs, they will certainly not fail from lack of interest on the part of employers or employees. If we had listened to the members of the opposition, these, and undoubtedly other individuals in the future, would be on our unemployment rolls instead of actively working.

Again, if we had heeded the NDP, we would not have pressed forward with the developmental use of UI funds for training. But, by introducing this feature, we managed to free up some $42 million in 1978/79 to provide full-time training for an additional 17,500 Canadians in areas and occupations where unemployment needs can be identified. The total number of Canadians in full-time training will now be approximately 234,000 in 1978/79.

The government's employment measures are vigorous ones. While the government has moved to stimulate the economy, it has had to recognize that the serious danger of inflation remains with us and that expansionary measures must take account of this reality. Consequently, we have adopted a series of specific programs and activities designed to alleviate or reduce unemployment. However, it seems that whenever I speak of my department's programs, like Canada Works and Young Canada Works, the opposition quickly dismisses them as insignificant and trivial. Let the opposition tell this to the more than 185,000 individuals who got a job in 1977/78 because of employment measures brought in by this government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cullen: The following are among the government's recent measures designed to stimulate the economy and alleviate unemployment—some $1.2 billion dollars have been allocated for the two fiscal years ending in 1979. These include $458 million for the employment strategy for the fiscal years 1977/78 and 1978/79, including $50 million allocated to the new economic growth component of Canada Works to stimulate growth in the private sector; $150 million for the federal labour intensive program; $200 million allocated to the new employment tax credit program for this year and next. It is expected that this will result in 100,000 new jobs. In addition, there are the clear employment-creating effects of the recent budget in the area of sales tax reductions which it is expected will directly yield 25,000 new jobs.

Given the magnitude and complexity of our unemployment problems and our budgetary constraints, there are limits to the extent to which we can allocate additional financial resources to our labour market programs. In these circumstances, we simply cannot afford the option of buying our way out of difficulties. Government spending on job creation must be kept in careful balance, in order not to increase inflationary pressure which would eventually result in even higher levels of unemployment. Prime Minister James Callaghan of Great Britain expressed what I consider a tremendously logical view of this problem. Remember, he is a member of the Labour Party—in this country he might be in the NDP. The only difference is that he happens to be in power and that he happens to accept responsibility for fiscal measures. This is what he said:

We used to think that you could spend your way out of recession and increase employment by cutting taxes and boosting government spending. I tell you, in all candor, that that option no longer exists and that insofar as it ever did exist, it only worked by injecting bigger doses of inflation into the economy followed by higher levels of unemployment as the next stop.

Mr. McGrath: Then why did they reduce taxes by two billion pounds?

Mr. Cullen: I would never in my wildest dreams try to determine what the Labour Party might do in Britain. But here is a Labour Prime Minister who has stated that that policy does not work.

The measures introduced by the Minister of Finance in his budget are designed to stimulate the economy in such a manner that we will achieve our projected targets of real growth while, at the same time, have a minimum effect in stimulating inflation. Economic growth is, of course, in the long run the answer to our problems in the labour market. These problems are not going to be fully resolved this month or this year. But those who predict nothing but doom and gloom are not facing the facts. As I have said, our major cause of unemployment is not our inability to create jobs—during the past 12 months the economy generated no less than 330,000 new jobs. Our problem is that the labour force has grown with such great speed, and for so long a period.

But that growth is unlikely to continue into the indefinite future. A few years from now, it is entirely likely that growth rates will be far less than our present 21 per cent, and new entrants to the labour force will have far less difficulty in finding jobs. What we have to do now—and I submit what we are doing now—is to maintain a reasonable pattern of steady economic growth, backed up by a sound program of job creation and training. Supplemented by an effective placement service and supported by a comprehensive income-maintenance program, we will remain one of the most prosperous and economically healthy countries of the western world.

Mr. McGrath: Would the hon. minister permit a question?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Does the minister accept a question?

Mr. Cullen: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. McGrath: I listened with great interest to what the minister had to say. He seems to be suffering from amnesia or, at least, his reading was selective. I am sure he did not intend to mislead the House deliberately with regard to the recommendations made in our report to the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark). We recommended that in dealing with the serious level of youth unemployment—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order. I suggest the hon. member get to the point of his question—fast.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I will get to my question if you give me time. I will raise it as a point of order, if you like.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): The hon. member asked if he might put a question to the minister and I permitted him to do so. So I ask him to get to the point of his question.

Mr. McGrath: I rise on a point of order, then, in order to correct the record. I said the minister misled the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): That is not a point of order. That is a point of debate. I gave the hon. member the floor for the purpose of asking a question of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Cullen). Now, would he get to the question?

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, with the greatest respect, I am allowed to rise on a point of order and I think you have to hear my point of order first before you rule on it. I want to correct a deliberate misrepresentation by the minister. The minister said we recommended that graduating students be given unemployment insurance for six months and that afterwards they would have to pay it back. That is not true, and the minister knows it. He did not refer to our principal recommendation which was to scrap the discredited Canada Works and Young Canada Works programs and pay prevailing rates, and work through the municipalities, which would be much more productive.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order. I suggest to the hon. member that that is a point of debate.

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, throughout the minister's peroration I wondered what it reminded me of. It was Trevor Roper's tale about the last days of Hitler—about Hitler moving around imaginary armies from his bunker in Berlin. The minister is moving around imaginary jobs he thinks he has created, but the fact remains there are more than a million Canadians who cannot find those jobs.

It is nice to be able to rise in this chamber today. A few days ago we thought we might be away from Parliament Hill at this time, taking our case to the people. That is what seemed likely after the Prime Minister's performance last Monday when he stamped out of the House in a well acted fit of pique which followed a familiar pattern. When the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) cannot answer a question, he aggravates the opposition into heckling him and then, when he is heckled, he claims he cannot be heard because of the heckling and he walks out. He did it again last Monday. Last Monday's petulance was of a kind most often found in youngsters. Anyway, the question of when an election will be called is getting to be a bore. I think the Prime Minister has wrung all the media attention out of it that he can.

Mr. Cullen: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) raised a point of order with regard to a statement I made concerning the recommendations contained in a report to the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark). So that there might be no doubt as to the words which were used, I will read the recommendation, which is as follows:

> A special unemployment benefit should be established for university students entering the labour force in areas where the unemployment rate exceeds the national average. During a three year trial period, new workers would be able to receive benefits equalling the average benefit of their province for up to six months. The premiums necessary to establish a benefit period would be paid after employment had been found.

That is a reimbursement of the premiums, as I have indicated. They are moving students into further areas of debts, and this is inconsistent with the universality of the program and inconsistent with the people who are already contributing.

Mr. McKinnon: Mr. Speaker, it is not often that we have an example, which the minister has demonstrated, of the arrogance of this government. The minister seems to feel justified in interrupting other members' speeches to go back to previous speeches.

Right now what we are concerned about is Canada's situation. I should like to read a few words from the New York Times of Sunday, April 16, in the days following our budget. It is headed "Canada and Britain Unveil Budgets". It reads:

> Significant steps to faster growth in two of the world's weakest economies were taken last week as Canada and Britain announced their budgets for the coming year.

How does it feel after ten years to be one of the world's weakest economies? Are you members opposite proud of your record? The article goes on to read:

> Of the two, Canada's program is more stimulative, reflecting the more serious economic problems facing that country.

I guess that makes us the worst in the world. The article goes on to read:

> The budget of the Canadian government calls for record spending of $46.9 billion in the fiscal year that began April 1, with a deficit of $11.5 billion—by far the largest in Canada's history . . . Judging from first reactions, however, the Canadian public is skeptical as to whether all this can do much to combat their nation's persistent unemployment—

Which is, incidentally, the responsibility of the department of the minister who has just spoken. The article goes on to read:

—now at a post-depression high of 9.7 per cent. S. F. Hughes, executive director of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, was wary lest temporary treatment be followed by new headaches.

You will recall that Mr. Hughes, at least in the five years that I have been listening to these budgets, has approved of every one of them, to my recollection. He always thinks they are good budgets that will improve things. If any member opposite can tell me of any budget in the last six years that has put the economy at the time of the next budget in a better state than it was in, I would like to hear it.

The article goes on to read:

The budget proposals, he said, "may only serve to encourage consumer spending in the shorter term, at the expense of 1979".

But by then, I guess, the election will be over. The article goes on to read:

Worse, many observers fear that Canada's budgetary stimulus, combined with the imminent lifting of the strict wage and price controls imposed at the end of 1975, could lead to a new wave of inflation. As if in anticipation, the value of the Canadian dollar slipped to a 45 year low of 87 U.S. cents after the budget was announced. Only 18 months ago the Canadian was worth $1.03 in American currency.

In Britain, the mood is far more optimistic.

That is as close as we can get to an objective viewpoint of our economy if we go to other countries and read what their papers, which have no axe to grind, have to say about it.

It seems to me that the question is one of tax rates and of tax revenue. I have been reading an interesting book which deals with a system of a university professor in California, Professor Laffer. Professor Laffer is a very intelligent man. There are two rates of taxation at which the revenue is zero. If you charge zero tax, then the revenue will be zero; if you charge 100 per cent tax, the revenue will also be zero because nobody will produce anything. There is a variable point at which revenues and production are at their maximum. If you can find that point, then you will have an economy that is high in production and high in revenue. The location depends largely, strangely enough, on the wishes of the people, a point which is often missed by politicians and by governments which seem more interested in maximum revenues.

During wars, for example, taxes can be very high, without losing productivity, and revenues will be high. When the war ends, the people no longer want massive government interference or provision of arms and services. They want to be taxed at a lower rate. History shows that the results of lowering taxes can increase revenues. This is the point that the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) was making in his speech on the budget.

I will give you a few historic examples. In the United States there was a recession in 1919 to 1920 when they were operating under the philosophy that wartime taxes should be left high, ostensibly to pay off the massive debts they had incurred during World War I. Warren Harding, who was not the world's greatest president, was elected in a landslide on a "return to normalcy" platform, and the subsequent cut in taxes led to the prosperity of the 1920's.

After World War II the Americans, who had learned the lesson from World War I, reduced taxes immediately and had a prosperous transition to the post-war period. Japan and Germany left their taxes high for the first few years, and stagnated. In 1948 Ludwig Erhard lowered taxes and the German recovery began. In 1950 Japan reduced taxes, and her economic recovery is now history. Reduced taxes increased their productivity and revenues.

I should like to read a short quote from The Public Interest about taxes, revenues and the "Laffer curve". It reads:

Andrew Mellon became a national hero for engineering the rate reductions of the 1920's, and was called "the greatest treasury secretary since Alexander Hamilton". The financial policies of Ludwig Erhard were responsible for what was hailed as "an economic miracle"—the post-war recovery of Germany. Throughout history, however, it has been the exception rather than the rule that politicians, by accident or design, have sought to increase revenues by lowering rates.

Finally, we should note that in 1962-1964 under John F. Kennedy, the U.S. cut taxes sharply and the U.S. economy promptly expanded and produced more revenues. What I am saying is that the recommendations, spelled out by the Leader of the Opposition earlier in this debate, for important tax cuts have a sound basis and have been proven successful in many countries in the modern era. Income tax directly affects the incentive to work.

I have one more quote out of The Public Interest. It reads:

The idea behind the "Laffer curve" is no doubt as old as civilization, but unfortunately politicians have always had trouble grasping it. In his essay, Of Taxes, written in 1756, David Hume pondered the problem:

"Exorbitant taxes, like extreme necessity, destroy industry by producing despair; and even before they reach this pitch, they raise the wages of the labourer and manufacturer, and heighten the price of all commodities.

David Hume knew that in 1756, but this government does not know it yet.

Now I would like to go to the second part of my speech which is on defence, the area for which I am responsible to the Leader of the Opposition. I would like to point out that if defence is ever to be discussed or spoken of in the House, it is up to the opposition to do it. The Minister of National Defence (Mr. Danson) is following what is getting to be a short tradition, established by his predecessor, of practically never speaking on defence in the House of Commons. We have had the new minister for a year and a half, during which time he has not spoken to the House on defence, except in answer to questions. It is a government that will not speak publicly about defence, and it falls upon us in the opposition to do the job for them. This is a sorry state of affairs in itself.

What is the state of Canadian defence? What is the state of our alliances? Alliances constitute the framework of Canada's defence policy, that is, NATO and NORAD. Let me turn first to our problems with our NATO policy. Recently the Minister of National Defence woke up to the difficulties inherent in our reinforcement roles to the northern flank of NATO, that is, Norway. We have had this commitment since 1968, but neither he nor his predecessor noticed the problem before, despite the fact we were constantly reminding him of it. We understand now that the minister on his trip to Norway was talking over the reinforcement of the northern flank to which we were committed, and he found he had to ask for Norwegian naval assistance to convoy our troops.

Let no one be surprised that we have had to ask for help. In the last eight years we have managed to raise federal spending from $16 billion to $46 billion without finding enough money to lay down the keel of one new ship. No new ship in the equipment replacement program will be ready for service before 1985 at the earliest. If we start moving right now to get those six frigates for the Canadian navy, they will not be here until 1985 at the earliest, and by then our fleet will be composed of venerable antiques.

The new program will produce six frigates by 1989. At that time there will be only four ships under 25 years of age, plus the six frigates, for a total of ten ships. At the present time we have 23 ships. This is the type of hard knocks one receives because of the program the government has followed for so many years. The government has not given any increases in the capital budget of the Department of National Defence.

I should like to refer to the age of Canadian ships. We have heard about the program of the Minister of National Defence via press releases. In answer to questions he indicated that six frigates would be built, and that they will be completed by 1989. At that time we will have our four DDH 280s. They will be 16, 17, 17, and 17 years of age. By 1989 they will be getting fairly well on. Most countries think 20 years is the optimum life of a ship in the navy.

If one takes the life span of a ship and stretches it to 25 years, Canada will have two ships in the Annapolis class. They will be the Annapolis and the Nipigon, both 25 years of age.

In the Mackenzie class, we will have the Mackenzie at age 27, the Qu'Appelle at age 26, the Saskatchewan at age 26, and the Yukon at age 26. All the ships in the Restigouche class are in reserve already, but by 1989 the Chaudiere will be age 30, the Columbia will be age 30 and the St. Croix will be age 31. In the improved Restigouche class, there will be three ships: the Gatineau at age 30, the Kootenay at age 30, the Restigouche at age 31 and the Terra Nova at age 30.

Next is the St. Laurent class, which is the oldest of them all. Sometimes I feel parliament needs a new St. Laurent, speaking in a political sense. In the St. Laurent class there will be the Saguenay at age 33, the Skeena at age 32, the Ottawa at age 33, the Margaree at age 32, the Fraser at age 32 and the Assiniboine at age 33. There is no secret about this. The fact is that the government did nothing about the replacement of ships, and is now moving slowly to replace them. By the time the first six are built, we will have only four that will be less than 25 years of age, and those are the DDH 280s.

I do not have a great deal to say with regard to the army situation. The army procurement for this summer will be a Leopard I tank. As I mentioned before in the House, it would have been preferable to continue renting the Leopard I, which we are renting at the present time from Germany, for another year or so, and then purchase the Leopard II, which will be improved vastly over the Leopard I. At the time I propounded the idea in the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence, I was told we would have to wait until well into the 1980's for the Leopard II, but my information is that the Leopard II will be in use by the German forces in 1980.

I should like to refer to the main differences between the Leopard I and the Leopard II. The Leopard II is armed with a 120 millimetre gun, instead of a 105 millimetre gun, and it has Chobham type armour. Thus, it will have a new gun and new armour. Unfortunately, Canada is purchasing a Leopard I with the old gun and the old armour. I suspect they will be the last models off the assembly line, thus we will have a tank which is not the newest within a year after purchase.

Now I should like to deal with our air force. We have a NATO and a NORAD commitment. We require new aircraft for both of them. The importance of the role in determining what aircraft should be purchased must be stressed. In no way am I satisfied that this is understood by the government. NORAD is the difficult aspect of this problem. The Voodoos, or the CF 101s, obviously need replacement, yet their role is not as clear as when they were acquired.

I should like to refer to a new book which was written by Dr. Cuthbertson. It is entitled, "Canadian Military Independence in the Age of the Superpowers." Those who are interested in Canada's military future might be well advised to read it. One does not have to accept Dr. Cuthbertson's recommendations, but certainly it is a well-researched book. Page 86 refers to NORAD and what the Americans are doing about it. It reads as follows:

> The United States plans to reduce its present 405 interceptors to 212 F-106s by mid-1980 . . .
> A principal reason why NORAD was renewed in 1973 without amendment for only two years was United States uncertainty about the relevancy of anti-bomber defence to its strategic requirements. Once anti-bomber defence was declared strategically redundant, the United States moved as rapidly to reduce and re-organize its air defence system as it had previously moved to establish it.

Against this very uncertain background, Canada is moving forward to purchase $2.3 billion worth of new fighter aircraft. The planes fall into two price classes: over $20 million each or under $20 million each. In the over $20 million, one will find the Toronado, which is made by the Panavia consortium of Britain, Italy and Germany; the F-14 and the F-15, which are two American planes. The F-14 and the F-15 are worth over $20 million each. Generally they are said to be multi-role fighters, they can shoot anything out of the skies, they have long ranges and very, very sophisticated equipment. In the under $20 million, one will find the F-16, F-18A and F-18L, which are American planes. The F-16 is a single-seater and has a single engine, compared to the others which are two and two.

I find it easy to support an immediate purchase for the NATO role, which is a ground support role for our troops in Germany. The role is there. It must be supported. We know what the troops and the planes are doing. It is quite a different role than the NORAD role. Perhaps a good case could be made in favour of the purchase of the more exotic fighters such as the F-14 and the F-15 for the NORAD role, or the Toronado; but the need for such a plane for this anti-bomber role has not been proven to me, nor to the public.

The Americans consider the anti-bomber role to be declining. In fact our second last minister of national defence said that it was declining. Approximately 20 years ago ministers of national defence indicated that the anti-bomber role was becoming less important. Yet this role is put forward as a reason for acquiring new aircraft in support of NORAD. The forces would be wiser to point out the need of aircraft to see-off intruders. We require sovereignty of our air space. When one refers to the scenario concerning the manned bombers which will come over Canada and bomb our cities, one soon runs into difficulties attempting to carry through that scenario to its illogical conclusion.

There are other problems regarding NORAD, such as the AWACS, which is the Airborne Warning and Control System plane. It is particularly with reference to North American Air Defence. Where does the government stand in this? For months we have been asking what Canada intends to do with the AWACS. Are we going to participate or not? We have heard from one source that we will spend $180 million, and from other sources we have heard that it will be $300 million. The price of these planes has risen astronomically in the last while. The cost which will be entailed is almost beyond belief. We have not planned to get into it, but we might.

A year ago last January we heard a very interesting presentation by the then vice-chief of the defence staff, Admiral Falls. At the present time he is the Chief of the Defence Staff. When he was speaking to the Conference of Defence Associations he presented a very interesting chart which showed where and when the money was to be spent. The tank was budgeted for first and then the long range patrol aircraft. The long range patrol aircraft were to be purchased at the same time as the tanks, which has been the case. That was to be followed by the new fighter aicraft, and then the ship replacement program. You could see from the chart that that was going to happen. However, when you consider the cost of the AWACS that might well be thrown in there, it changes the picture.

Quoting from the New York Times, April 14, 1978:

West Germany and the United States would bear the largest part of the cost if NATO decides to acquire the AWACS,—

That is the airborne warning and control system. The secretary for defence in the United States is quoted:

—Mr. Brown said. As now conceived, acquisition would involve 12 aircraft at a total cost of $2 billion—

You may recall that we thought that the cost of long range patrol aircraft was high at $1 billion for 18, but this is $2 billion for 12 aircraft.

—The price for each aircraft would be more than $120 million at present prices with support cost included, Mr. Brown said.

[Mr. McKinnon.]

The charts of Admiral Falls showed us at the time three things of particular importance to be noted, and they should be recognized at this time. First, there is no provision for the airborne warning and control system, so if we get into AWACS more money would be needed. Secondly, the amount of money is based on an annual increase of 12 per cent in real terms in the capital budget. This was an introduction that was brought in by the former minister of national defence before he quit his portfolio in October, 1976. He had managed, however, to wring out of the cabinet an agreement that he would be allowed to increase the capital budget of the Department of National Defence by 12 per cent per annum on a real basis, that is, they would add the inflation costs in and then add 12 per cent to the capital budget.

The third thing to be remembered is that this acquisition plan of the Admiral was drawn up bearing that in mind, and at the present time no allowance has been made for the devaluation of the dollar. If we follow our plans at the present rate, even if our dollar stayed exactly where it is now, we would need an additional $125 million to make up the extra money to buy the more expensive American currency or German deutschmark.

I come now to the most disturbing news of all, to those interested in national defence in Canada. The government has broken its promise concerning the 12 per cent real growth in the capital budget. This year's estimates call for only an additional 2.8 per cent in real terms. Strangely enough, the Minister of National Defence cannot accept this. He hates to leave that wonderful speech where he said there would be 12 per cent each year. On March 21, 1978, in an External Affairs and National Defence Committee meeting, I asked Mr. Davies, who is the associate deputy minister of finance for DND:

Could Mr. Davis tell us exactly how much the percentage increased, the real growth percentage increased, in the capital budget this year after you had deducted the $60 million?

This $60 million offered by the Minister of National Defence to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Andras) as an Easter present or something.

MR. DAVIES: Mr. Chairman, I believe that worked out—

MR. MCKINNON: What did it leave?

MR. DAVIES: —to 2.8 per cent.

MR. MCKINNON: I see. What a comedown from the 12 per cent that everybody expected. So it was actually the inflation rate plus 2.8 per cent.

MR. DAVIES: That is the way it worked out, sir.

MR. MCKINNON: Thank you very much, Mr. Davies. It is nice to talk to an objective person.

Strangely enough—there may be some logical answer for it, but it has certainly escaped me so far—on April 18 the Minister of National Defence was speaking at the committee meeting, and I quote from those minutes:

Well, first of all, the increase is one that was committed of 12 per cent increase per year plus the escalating factor on capital equipment.

This indicates that there is a bare-faced difference between what the associate deputy minister of finance for DND said and what the Minister of National Defence said at that time. I presume that the minister will correct it at the first opportunity.

Perhaps the most blatant of the broken promises of the government as far as defence is concerned is this failure to provide funds for the formula announced by both this minister and his predecessor, that 12 per cent real growth in the capital budget. Let me say once again that the real growth for 1978-79 is only 2.8 per cent. This is going to have an exaggerated effect down the pipe a little bit because next year we will not only be missing the $60 million we are missing this year but we will be missing the inflation rate, plus the $60 million, plus the 12 per cent that $60 million would have accounted for in next year's budget. Over the four year program the total difference that $60 million will make amounts to a quarter of a billion dollars. The failure to provide these funds calls into question the whole viability of the re-equipment program.

If the capital budget does not get the funds to grow in the early years of the five year program, then there will be insufficient money to buy either the new fighters or the new ships for the navy. The minister a year ago said, when he was talking about this 12 per cent and it was in the estimates that we were discussing, that by careful housekeeping he expected he would be able to get through the year with only a 12 per cent increase. Well, he does not have 12 per cent, he only has 2.8 per cent, and obviously something is going to be cut short, particularly if we go for the more expensive airborne warning and control system and we continue to have exchange problems that eat up part of the budget. It makes the statement made by the minister about spending between $3 and $10 billion on new ships over the next 15 to 20 years appear completely ludicrous. If he cannot keep a program on course for the second year of its five year life, how can anyone be expected to take his remarks seriously for the longer term?

In closing, there are a couple of other items I feel I would be remiss if I did not mention. One is the advent of such modern weapons as the neutron bomb and the cruise missile. If the cruise missile is accepted by the various nations in the world, particularly our nation, then one has to consider a defence against the cruise missile, which the Warsaw Pact nations will have in a very short space of time. The same thing applies to the neutron bomb. However, there is no room in our acquisition plans to have a defence against the cruise missile. It might be a good reason, if the services are looking for a reason that makes more sense than the manned bomber, to have fighter aircraft that could be used against cruise missiles brought in by bombers but fired from offshore, which they are quite capable of doing. It is called stand-off firing.

The neutron bomb, which the minister likes to refer to as enhanced radiation and reduced blast, is a very, very dirty weapon. It kills people by radiation, and any advantage it might have we will lose in a couple of years. We cannot expect to stay ahead of the U.S.S.R. for very long on neutron bombs. France has claimed to have exploded one just yesterday, and someone—probably someone from the media—said that that put them ten years ahead of the Russians.

This reminds me of the attitude just before Russia put the first Sputnik around the earth. Everybody thought that the Americans were ahead of Russia only to find that, indeed, they were a little bit behind. I would be very surprised if we were more than two years ahead of the Soviet Union in the neutron bomb area. From what I know about the neutron bomb, it is not difficult to make, and I am sure if the western allies were to accept this weapon they would not hold the advantage for very long.

I personally hope that President Carter will keep up his stand on it. His allies have told him to prepare it and build it and then give it away as a negotiating item. That may make some sense, but arming ourselves with it is not something I would like to see Canadian troops do. We have been opposed to nuclear weapon armament for quite some time now, and I do not think that the neutron bomb is worth losing our reputation over.

I would like now to say a few words about the peackeeping force which has gone to the Middle East. It was sent off by the government, and I expect it is filling a desperate need there as a communications unit. Canadians are very, very skilled in this area of providing administrative troops.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his allotted time has expired.

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, my remarks will be relatively brief as I want to cover only two topics. The first is the provisions regarding family farm corporations and the second concerns registered retirement savings plans.

Under the rules that exist at the present time, there is provision for a roll-over on the death of a farmer of land to his child or children and also an inter vivos roll-over during the lifetime of the farmer provided the property was used, immediately before the transfer, by his spouse or any of his children in the business of farming.

The budget that was presented on April 10 provides for a roll-over in the case of family farm corporations. This is a welcome provision and one which members on this side of the House have sought for several years. On the prairies there are many, many family farm corporations. They take different forms and were set up for various purposes. What the budget does is provide for the transfer of shares in family farm corporations either on death or during the lifetime of the farmer to a son or daughter or, of course, any child, which includes grandchildren. This is a welcome amendment.

One thing which gives me and members of the accounting and legal professions some concern, as well as members of family farm corporations, is the uncertainty of the interpretation of this change. There is no problem where the family farm corporation owns the land, but there is a problem where the corporation, which is owned, say, by the father and one or more of his children simply rents the land from the father or a member or members of the corporation.

This is a fairly common situation in corporate set-ups, particularly within the province of Saskatchewan. Because of capital gains tax and other features, in many instances it is deemed wise that the father retain ownership of the land and rent it to the corporation. Where the grey area exists is in the interpretation. What is the position if the father and his sons are members of the corporation and that corporation is farming rented land, is the property in question immediately before death or transfer being used by the farmer, his spouse or his children as a farming operation?

This situation has caused a great deal of concern since the budget was introduced. From the interpretation made by some top tax experts, I understand their feeling is that the way the budget reads and the ways and means motion reads, in instances where the land is being rented by a corporation then there can be no tax-free roll-over.

I would ask the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) and the government to give this matter careful thought with the idea of clarifying the situation. It places the farmer in a situation where, if he is renting land and wants to dispose of it, he has no alternative but to cancel the lease with the corporation. He or his child or children would then operate it for one year and at that point would effect the roll-over. It seems ridiculous to have to go that route but that is the situation. I would urge the minister to take steps to see that the matter is clarified and, if necessary, changes are made to provide that the regulations will be equitable.

I should like to say a few words now about registered retirement savings plans, Mr. Speaker. Many individuals throughout Canada who have an RRSP appreciate the changes proposed in the budget which would provide more flexibility than there has been in the past. They allow for an annuity to be purchased till age 90 rather than a life annuity to be purchased at age 71. They also provide for some flexibility with respect to the type of RRSP that an individual can have.

A number of people have expressed concern to me about being tied to this age 90 annuity or the life annuity at age 71. They say, in many instances, that they have been saving all their lives anticipating that when they retire they will be able to take a trip with some of the money they have saved. Many people do travel at age 70 to 75 when their health is still good. They want to know why it is not possible to have flexibility in the plan that would enable them, when they reach age 70, to draw larger amounts out of the plan for, say, the first three or four years in order that they could take a few trips and enjoy their retirement.

It cannot be said that the government would lose any tax as a result of a flexible program such as this. If the moneys were withdrawn from time to time they would be taxable. If the government is concerned that the individual who withdraws the money might not pay the tax or might spend the money and have none with which to pay tax, they could deduct, say, 15 per cent of the amount withdrawn in each of the years and the company could remit that amount to the tax department.

These people are concerned because in many cases they have saved all their lives in anticipation of getting some enjoyment out of their twilight years. I suggest that the Minister of Finance look carefully at the regulations to see if he can make some arrangements for greater flexibility to allow these people to determine the amount they can withdraw from the program, at least in the first three or four years after reaching age 71.

Hon. Iona Campagnolo (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that there is a request for royal assent at 5.45 p.m., I wonder if I might ask for unanimous consent to call it six o'clock at this time?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Is it agreed that we call it 5.45 p.m. rather than 6 p.m., since we have royal assent at 5.45?

• (1742)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I have been advised that the gentleman from the other place will be here at about 5.55 p.m. I would suggest that the hon. minister carries on with her speech.

Mrs. Campagnolo: Mr. Speaker, I had hoped that it would be possible for me to give my speech all at one time. However, I am certainly willing to commence and use the remaining three minutes.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): You have 13.

Mrs. Campagnolo: In this particular budget there are certain items of interest to people in British Columbia. I think the item most in demand is the one concerning board and lodging benefits and tax-free benefits for all employees at remote work sites. Remote work sites are sites where people cannot be expected to build or maintain a home in the ordinarily considered way. People live on these sites and as well they have homes in various parts of the country. They maintain their families and they put their children in school and then go off to the remote site. This particular provision has made it possible for employees in these remote areas to receive tax-free benefits.

Of course, there were other items in the budget to stimulate the economy and assist the recovery of this country. Because of this industrial growth will be increased. To strengthen consumer buying, to get goods moving and to create more jobs is really what everyone is seeking in a budget in an admittedly difficult time. To do this it would be advisable to cut taxes, and cutting taxes is a popular art especially just before an election. There are those who cynically believe that one would do just about anything before an election in order to have a favourable result. I think that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) has put that to rest in a very outstanding way by gaining the co-operation of the provinces, even if it has been made into a somewhat politicized issue.

I feel that my colleagues and indeed many Canadians are willing to congratulate the Minister of Finance for his responsibility and clear-sightedness in preparing this budget for us. I am particularly impressed as a northerner from the far west of this country that the budget did include, as I stated, a number of measures that will be of direct and immediate benefit for the kind of Canadians I represent.

It is from that perspective that I wish to enter this current budget debate, from the perspective of one who cares deeply about the people who live in the far reaches of Canada outside of our major cities. There are two matters that I wish to draw attention to. First, I would like to highlight what this budget, together with other economic measures taken by this government, will mean for the far west and north, areas of critical importance to Canada because of the part their vast mineral and other wealth plays in our balance of trade. Second, I want to look at economic performance in these areas during the tenure of our current Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and under the influence of comprehensive Liberal economic policies.

For the benefit of members of the opposition with short attention spans, and sometimes I am afraid minimal comprehension, let me give short answers first. On the impact of this budget, I say that its measures will mean increased activity in many sectors of the economy which are particularly important to the west and to the north. This is true for logging, farming and for exploration sectors, as it is for many others.

On recent economic performance, I can say that the west and north have seen excellent progress and performance in most sections, even in the face of global economic upset during part of the last decade. In this regard, almost every economic indicator of importance shows significant real advances. In addition, the federal government has co-operated with the provinces in undertaking projects that will build the infrastructure of this nation. The positive results are obvious for anyone who looks objectively at the figures available.

I will come back later to these points about healthy economic performance in the west and north and will fully document them for you, Mr. Speaker, and for hon. members of the House. First, I want to deal with the positive impact which many of this budget's measures, together with accompanying measures that augment the budget's effectiveness, will have on the economy of this part of Canada over the coming years.

I think it is important that we see this budget in its context of other economic initiatives taken by this particular government. A budget is an important tool of economic management. I remind hon. members, however, that it is, after all, only one tool. Its many positive programs and elements serve to support and advance a whole range of programs designed to build this country and to increase the prosperity of Canadians everywhere. The opposition makes the dishonest ploy of selectively focusing on certain elements of the budget, when it is the rest of the budget and the rest of this government's far-reaching economic programs that are really part of the whole picture. It is fashionable on the other side to make selective statements as if other things did not exist.

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Chrétien that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the government.

Hon. Iona Campagnolo (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, as I was saying just before six o'clock, I think my colleague the President of Treasury Board (Mr. Andras) did a particularly good job of showing up the opposition on the budget when he joined this debate last week. While the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) argued that the total economic stimulus in the form of tax cuts for the coming year amounts to something under $1 billion, the President of the Treasury Board listed a comprehensive list of tax cut stimulants which will amount to $4.5 billion in 1978. The Conservatives are uncomfortable with these figures because they dwarf the $2.2 billion Tory tax cuts over three years which they propose.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Would the hon. lady deliver here own speech?

Mrs. Campagnolo: Mr. Speaker, hon. members opposite bray and yell but I will deliver my speech as others have done.

Mr. Andre: The minister of fun and games is playing games with parliament.

Mrs. Campagnolo: The hon. member opposite forgets that he reads almost everything he utters except his ad libs, and I wish he would stand up when he makes them.

Let me be more specific about the positive impact of measures contained in this budget and in current programs to stimulate the economy and build for the future. In remote logging and construction camps such as I mentioned earlier in my remarks before six o'clock, wage earners will receive higher after-tax income as a result of the measure to remove the value of board and lodging in relation to earnings. Not only will this put more money into the pockets of a sizeable number of men and women, people who are consumers as well as workers, but it will help employers to attract and keep those employees engaged in these projects which contribute so substantially to Canada's industrial growth.

There is also a particularly good bit of news in the budget for the many farmers who have steadfastly maintained the tradition of family farms and who have incorporated their holdings. The announcement that tax-free roll-overs will be extended to include incorporated family farms means that the tradition of family-owned and operated farms is being protected and encouraged. This provision will be very significant for the many farmers outside the large acreage farm belts of central Canada, but in my part of the country it is only the most recent of a whole range of government initiatives designed to facilitate agricultural development.

In July of last year the Prime Minister and Premier Bennett announced a joint program aimed at agricultural and rural development which will pump more than $80 million into agriculture in the province of B.C. over the next five years. It is a comprehensive program which will help small agricultural communities develop facilities for serving the farm community. It will rehabilitate extensive range lands, provide money for market and other research and fund such projects as new irrigation systems. This, together with the budget announcement, is a convincing commitment to the future of small scale agriculture in Canada as well as to large scale corporate agricultural groups.

But the commitment to agriculture in the west and north and Canada at large does not end there. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) recently announced plans to build additional grain handling facilities in Prince Rupert to take the pressure off Vancouver and to facilitate the movement of grain from northern Alberta to a northern export port. The commitment to rail upgrading, to the provision of additional rolling stock, and to aggressive overseas marketing—an effort that has consistently produced record sales—all form part of the comprehensive plan for economic development in this sector.

The current budget makes brief but telling reference to mining. I know it is popular to deride the future of mining among the doomsayers across the way. It is a sector on which much of this country's wealth is built. I believe the federal and provincial financial and resource ministers are in the process of reviewing the taxation of the mineral industry, with an eye to its continued health and importance.

This process of careful review is taking place against a background of active involvement by governments in developing the infrastructures that will make rapid mineral development possible when world markets inevitably draw on Canada's huge potentials in this area. Two examples of this approach can be found in the joint agreements between the federal government and the government of B.C. in developing coal and uranium resources in the province. In January, 1977, we signed an agreement that put $3 million into transportation, manpower, community resources, and environmental studies. It was followed in May, 1977, by a second agreement that will make available $10 million for the same purpose over the next three years. These agreements are in addition, Mr. Speaker, to projects such as Roberts Bank—in which I know the hon. member in the back row opposite is interested—which has already made a huge contribution to the B.C. economy.

In April, 1976, we joined with the province in funding regional geochemical exploration in B.C.—specifically aimed at identifying and developing uranium resources.

An hon. Member: Good old Social Credit.

Mrs. Campagnolo: The Social Credit government would not have undertaken this without the federal government's share, which I would think hon. members opposite of whatever political stripe would welcome.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Friesen) is rising on a point of order?

Mr. Friesen: Yes, Mr. Speaker. The minister made reference to me as "the member in the back row". I wonder if she would permit a question.

Mrs. Campagnolo: Yes, I would welcome it, but I would prefer to have it at the end of my speech rather than now.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Because the speech is too well written.

Mrs. Campagnolo: The hon. member from somewhere in Edmonton sits there like an old gentleman at a tea party. I wish he would await his turn quietly, as he usually does.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): What is wrong with old gentlemen who drink tea?

Mrs. Campagnolo: About $600,000 will be spent on the program as a seed investment that may result in a whole new industry in that part of the country.

In a few moments I will be putting figures before the House that attest to the strength of that industry in B.C. and to its remarkable growth during the tenure of this government, but let me point for the moment to the impact government monetary policies are having on the mineral industry this year. The devalued dollar has made most of our mining products particularly attractive to foreign consumers, with the result that the value of mineral production in the province of B.C. alone rose by about $290 million last year to a record $1.89 billion. The federal government has moved to make new export facilities available for bulk commodities like coal and sulphur with the announcement of the Ridley Island, B.C., port development over the next three years—a development fueled by close to $20 million from the federal treasury. This is the sort of comprehensive approach needed to keep such industries competitive and healthy well into our future.

My colleagues have gone into some detail in explaining the positive impact that can be expected subsequent to a cut in sales tax. In British Columbia the federal government will fund a 2 per cent cut in the cost of consumer items. That, I believe, will be a signal to consumers to buy, with a range of spin-off benefits for retail merchants, wholesalers and manufacturers.

But again, if one were just to look at this element of government economic measures, one would not see their comprehensive and integrated nature. To use the example again of the more remote parts of B.C., the federal government is co-operating with the province in funding an ambitious five year industrial development program that will pump up to $110 million into its economy. The money is available to help fund the construction of such things as industrial parks to assist municipalities in attracting businesses. Other money is directly available to manufacturing, service and small business ventures and other similar industries. The money will fund industrial commissions, which in turn are eligible for money for market research, research that will help to establish the potential of these remote areas in British Columbia.

To aid the fishing industry on the west coast, there has been a considerable amount of funding, research and a great deal of work undertaken. My colleague the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment (Mr. LeBlanc) has undertaken an ambitious multi-year program to restore depleted fish stocks, especially depleted salmon stocks.

Mr. Friesen: So that Americans can catch them.

Mrs. Campagnolo: The hon. member fails to note, I suppose, that last year Canadian fishermen had the highest return in many, many years.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Campagnolo: The $100 million plus salmonoid enhancement scheme has already yielded results in the form of above average catches on the Nass and Skeena rivers in the past year. This is a fact that augurs well for the future of this most important industry, an industry that is currently valued at more than $300 million at the wholesale level.

The introduction of the 200-mile fisheries protection limit, together with the reduction of the number of foreign vessels in our waters, promises to increase the volume of the catch for Canadians, the numbers of jobs for Canadians, and the strength of the Canadian economy as a result of the increasingly significant contribution this industry will make to our balance of trade.

These elements of the budget and related economic measures, as I said at the outset, will mean increased activity in all of the sectors I have mentioned, certainly in the short run but, more important, over the long run. These are measures that build for the future—and that is what good government rather than opportunistic government is all about.

I also promised in my introductory remarks to look at the economic record of B.C. over the sweep of the last ten eventful years. I am pleased to be able to say that according to most indices, the economy in that part of Canada has paralleled the growth of the economy in all of Canada—it has steadily advanced. In the last couple of years, B.C.'s economy has actually outpaced that in the rest of Canada because it has been the direct beneficiary of a number of federal government programs I have already touched on, and because certain B.C. industries have benefitted from the very phenomenon the Conservatives are so strongly denouncing—the devaluation of the dollar.

I will speak more about our current economic status and about our immediate prospects in a few moments, but first let me dig into the past. The Conservatives would have Canadians believe that we are all a lot worse off than we were when the Prime Minister came to office ten years ago. If one were to believe those prophets of despair, Canadians are less productive, less well fed and less prosperous than before. One would expect less investment, lower production volumes and a lower standard of living. But that is not the case, and I will present a few figures to make my point.

First, let me indicate some sweeping indicators as guides to our economic progress: gross provincial product, new capital investment and the value of exports. In 1967 British Columbia's gross national product was an acceptable $7.1 billion, but in 1977 it stood at over $24 billion, which is a 350 per cent increase, fueled largely by an increasingly buoyant export market.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Constant dollars?

Mrs. Campagnolo: "Constant dollars" is what the hon. member is saying. In any dollars a 350 per cent increase is a very large amount.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Oh, oh!

Mrs. Campagnolo: I hope the hon. gentleman is not bubbling over with good humour because of his dinner.

New capital investment in 1967 was about $2.6 billion in British Columbia. Last year it was $7.2 billion, which is roughly a 250 per cent increase. With the exception of 1968, real investment figures have increased every year, jumping by close to a billion dollars a year over the last two years, each year. It is jumping by close to a billion dollars each year.

The value of exports leaving British Columbia was about $2 billion in 1967. Last year it was $8.4 billion, which is a 430 per cent increase. Also this figure has taken enormous strides during the last couple of years.

The record in these three critical areas puts the lie to Conservative babblings about hard times. Of course we have problems, all nations have problems, but what are we doing? We are doing a lot more than just coping. We are advancing at a rate that most other countries would like dearly to emulate.

If hon. members think I have deliberately stacked the deck by choosing just a few especially good figures tonight, while more gloomy ones go unmentioned, let me point out significant advances on other scales as well. Retail sales advanced from $2.6 billion in 1967 to $3.3 billion in 1970; to $4.6 billion in 1973; to more than $7 billion in 1977. This is more than a 200 per cent increase in ten years. Mineral production values jumped from $380 million in 1967 to $530 million in 1971; to $1.3 billion in 1974; to $1.8 billion in 1977. This is another 400 per cent increase. The landed value of British Columbia fish catches has recorded a 300 per cent increase in the decade. It advanced from $50 million in 1967 to $150 million last year. Remember this is the landed value of the catch. At the wholesale level the value of the catch passed the $300 million mark last year.

The lumber industry has been more variable over the decade, because it is more subject to market conditions in other countries than most. When building starts are down in the United States, the Canadian lumber industry suffers as a result. But in that decade the number of board feet of production advanced from about 7.1 billion board feet to roughly 12 billion. The industry has more than recovered from the bad years of 1974 and 1975 and is looking forward to an excellent year in 1978.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Thanks to Bill Bennett.

Mrs. Campagnolo: Thanks to Bill Bennett? The hon. member must forget when British Columbia had its last election. There was an interregnum, which the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) will also take credit for.

Investment in primary industry has marched from $390 million in 1967 to $1.1 billion in 1977.

Mr. Nystrom: Why the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles)?

Mrs. Campagnolo: Because the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is my friend. That is why I mentioned him.

Investment in manufacturing has taken place at roughly the same rate, going from $430 million in 1967 to $1.3 billion last year. I could refer to all sorts of other great and magnificent increases, as multi-percentage increases are certainly there in British Columbia and in the western provinces in general.

I can see some hon. members opposite starting to wince, as they do when they hear some true figures for a change, so let me conclude my numbers by pointing to progress in British Columbia in a field the opposition has chosen as its very own—employment. If we were to believe the Conservatives and members of the New Democratic Party, no progress should have been made in securing livelihoods for British Columbia residents or, in fact, from listening to them during question period, for any Canadians whatsoever.

The figures indicate the following: between 1967 and 1977 more than 354,000 jobs were created in the province of British Columbia. Employment is currently at an all time high, with 1,065,000 men and women gainfully employed in that province. The rate of job creation shows every sign of soon outstripping the truly phenomenal rate of increase in participation in the work force. When that takes place, as it will because of the promising national and world economic picture a few months and years down the road, then the economic stimuli wisely implemented by this government will ensure that unemployment rates return to the very low levels all Canadians have a right to expect.

If hon. members still think I am overly optimistic or perhaps a little selective, let me conclude by pointing to the economic prospectus for British Columbia which was prepared by the Employers Council of British Columbia. This was prepared for the coming year. That council is predicting a real growth rate of 5 per cent for 1978. It foresees strong markets for our products in all nations, but most importantly, those nations which are on our specific list, such as Japan. There are other nations which are of interest to our western economy, such as the countries of the European Economic Community and the United States. The council predicts strong years for the fishing industry, the tourist industry, the oil and gas industry and for a number of key mineral industries. The legacy of the controls program is part of the significantly improved labour scene, and it will make the predictions possible. The Employers Council thinks this will continue for another year, and we will see vastly fewer days lost to strikes and lockouts, as we have experienced since the program of anti-inflation began.

I am proud of the record of this government. As I have said and supported, I have particular cause for satisfaction as a resident of northwestern Canada. I ask Canadians to look at what the record really contains, and to give the doom and gloom portraits of the oppositions the scorn they deserve. Once again, I make mention of the hon. Minister of Finance. As I said a few moments ago, good government rather than opportunistic government is something special. Good government is what we have. It has done and will do more for the average Canadian than the nay-saying, crepe hanging of hon. members opposite. This government is led truly and surely by a rational, logical, intelligent leader; not someone who has to bear the indignity of a teeny, tiny perfect threat to his opposition leadership.

We are a team on this side of the House. We have a leader of whom we are very proud and one whom the world respects. Respect is what I am talking about tonight. I am not only speaking of leadership, I am also speaking of the solid, year-in, year-out service to human beings that members of the government spend their time on. Hon. members on this side of the House stand for service to the people of this nation, whether an individual in Canada, a group with special interests, be they large or small, or a lot of Canadians seeking changes to adapt to a new and sometimes very frightening future. This is a government of service, as well as a government of leadership.

This was a budget of service, and the budget debate on this side of the House has shown what kinds of services are offered to hundreds of thousands of Canadians.

Mr. McKenzie: As Your Honour is apparently giving special privileges to hon. members on the other side—

• (2032)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I would hope the hon. member would withdraw that remark.

Mr. McKenzie: Well, explain then, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I would ask the hon. member to resume his seat. I keep the count in co-operation with those at the table, and the hon. member would be the first one to object if I took a minute away from him. The hon. member might not have been in the House when the proceedings started this evening. I do not know if he was here, but he did not check the time. In any case, I think his remarks are not appreciated by the Chair at this time.

Mrs. Campagnolo: Mr. Speaker, I only have one more minute and I was mentioning that this is a budget of service; service to all Canadians, even the hon. member opposite. It is perhaps only a question of time, sir, before people in this chamber address not only you but all those who are looking in to see what kind of a House this is. We will address both you and the nation at the same time. I should like to emphasize that those of us who are British Columbians—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I have to interrupt the hon. lady as her time has expired. I did allow half a minute for the intervention.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I should mention to the hon. member that the hon. lady's time having expired, she could not answer a question.

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I have been listening very carefully to the speech that has been read by the hon. minister. She read very quickly during the entire length of her speech, in fact so quickly I was not sure whether she did not quite believe it herself or—

An hon. Member: Have you got a speech to give?

Mr. Epp: —she wanted to get over the material as quickly as possible.

An hon. Member: Why don't you give a speech?

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, that hon. member has just made the longest speech and the least intelligent of his career. I was wondering why she was going over the speech so quickly and whether she did not quite believe it herself. I should like to make one suggestion to the hon. minister. If she paid anyone to write that speech, on behalf of the taxpayers of Canada she should ask for a full refund.

An hon. Member: You are sick. Make a speech yourself.

Mr. Epp: If she does not, then the treasury will have been very sorely done in by paying for the speech she made today.

An hon. Member: Why don't you make a speech yourself?

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, I will get to my speech as soon as—

An hon. Member: You have been recognized to make a speech.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, I will get to it as quickly as there is order in the House.

We have been listening to various government members during this budget debate, and one might think one was not living in the reality that is known as Canada today. For example, it has been mentioned time after time that investment in this country is not being made in order to create the number of jobs that we need, first of all simply to maintain the present unemployment rate, to say nothing of reducing it.

The hon. minister spoke for half an hour and at no time did she ever refer to the crisis that is now facing us in Canada as a result of the one million unemployed. She acted as if the situation did not exist, and as though there were not one million unemployed. She never mentioned that. Nor did she mention that there are young Canadians under the age of 25 today who, upon entering the labour force, have doubled the national unemployment average. Never did she mention that there were students coming into the labour market at the end of the academic year, this month or at the beginning of the next, who cannot find jobs.

Let us look at the facts as presented by impartial observers—for example, the Conference Board of Canada. Its report today stated that barely three months ago, in January, Canada's real growth after inflation was estimated at 4.7 per cent.

It is generally regarded that we need 5 per cent real growth just to maintain present growth, and with that we will not even have started to reduce the unemployment rate. Three months after making that projection the Conference Board today lowered that projection to 3.9 per cent. The fact of the matter is that we do not have enough growth in this country at this point in time to give to our young people and our unemployed the opportunities they deserve.

We could look at the loss of investment capital in Canada. At no time did a member of the cabinet get up and say what the government was going to do simply to reduce the exodus of investment capital from this country. Every time investments of this kind are made outside the country two things are obvious: the first is that many Canadians do not have confidence in this government and are, therefore, investing outside Canada; they do not have confidence in the economic leadership of this country. That is simple.

Even more important—and this is a long term effect—is the fact that as we invest outside Canada we do not invest to create the jobs we need now. Right now we are exporting jobs. As western Canadians we have chafed for a long time over this situation. We have said that in our view we have not realized our economic potential because of exporting raw materials without enough processing at home. Members from western Canada regardless of their political persuasion have put this argument forward. The situation has gone even further in that we have now reached the point where we are exporting jobs not just out of western Canada but simply out of Canada. That is a very tragic situation.

What I want to do today is bring to the attention of the House some of the realities of Canada and some of the opportunities that I believe exist. Earlier the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Cullen) quoted from a statement by the Prime Minister of England, Mr. Callaghan, in which he stated that one cannot create prosperity by government spending, and one cannot create prosperity by spending oneself out of trouble. I agree with that statement. You cannot spend more than you produce for a long period of time without reaping the negative effects of that economic approach.

This is the situation we are facing in Canada today. The huge deficits being rolled up by this government will not be paid by any member of this House. They will be paid through lost jobs, lost opportunities and high taxes on our children and their children. The legacy of spending by this government is now becoming a legacy of debt for future generations. The future generations will be saddled with this debt. There is no point in minimizing that fact. It is simply a fact that exists.

We have seen from the British Columbia and Manitoba experiences that it is very difficult for a provincial or a federal government to cut back. I am not suggesting for a minute this is easy or that it is a panacea. However, it does take leadership, and this government has not shown leadership in putting in place those programs needed to create expansion. It has in fact continued a process that has cost great amounts of money, but from which we have received very little in long term economic benefits.

The government has not emphasized the spending of public funds on job creation on a long term basis within the private sector. Every government that is now faced with deadlock—whether a federal, provincial or municipal government—is faced with the startling reality that they cannot continue spending the amounts of money that they have been spending in the past. What the government intends to do, according to the budget statement of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) is spend $1 billion a month more than it takes in in any given month over the next year. The government expects to have a deficit of $11.5 billion, roughly a $1 billion shortfall a month. They intend to over-spend this year more than the total budget for the first year of the government of the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) when it stood at $9.9 billion. Today the over-spending exceeds that by one and a half million dollars.

I ask the members of this House, is that economic leadership? Is that courage? Is that an economic statement that is worthy of praise, or economic leadership that one can go to the Canadian people with and say "Look how well we have led"? The point that I am making is that it will be difficult for any government to cut back. Why is it difficult? The minute a program is established it creates within itself a dependency factor which benefits certain areas but does not necessarily benefit the total economy or all of the Canadian people. I challenge every government in Canada today to get their economic house in order. It is going to mean difficult decisions. There are going to be negative reactions from many people who feel that they are being done in by that kind of program; but it is a program that is extremely necessary if we are to give to our children and grandchildren a heritage that will allow them to develop the potential that I believe is Canada.

I would like to spend some time on the matter of farm income. One of the most incredible statements that I have heard in this House was made by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) the other day. I quote him from Hansard at page 4641, April 18, 1978:

> I am so tired of hearing talk about farmers who have lost their net income. I wonder how many are honest enough to admit why farm land is higher in value in Canada than it is in the United States. The answer should be plain and simple to them. It is because farm income is generally better in Canada and because farmers, if they are efficient producers, are provided more security in this country that they are in any other nation of the world. None of our programs provide any kind of income for an inefficient producer who is lazy and does not want to work. He or she must work or they will not get that kind of living or that kind of net income I have just talked about.

He further said:

I am so tired of listening to politicians and even some farm leaders who talk about farm income going down. I received a letter from a so-called farm leader from British Columbia pointing out that the farmers' incomes had dropped 9 per cent. Mr. Speaker, do you know how much farm income went up in 1975? At that time it had an increase of 187 per cent.

That is what is recorded in Hansard, but what are the facts. The Canadian Federation of Agriculture in its statement to members of parliament dated April, 1978 said:

If the 1978 figure is reduced 19 per cent to 1975 dollars, it becomes $1.562 billion, a drop from 1975 of an horrendous 54 per cent.

How can the Minister of Agriculture say there is an increase of 187 per cent when the Canadian Federation of Agriculture—and I would think that those members who have a rural riding know that the Canadian Federation of Agriculture is a very credible organization—comes out with this report?

I went a little further, Mr. Speaker, because I wanted to find out what was happening in Manitoba. Here are the figures, taken from Statistics Canada data as compiled by the Manitoba Credit Union Federation. They are not my compilation, so it cannot be argued I used wrong addition or sleight-of-hand. In 1976 the gross income of Canadian farmers was $9,975 million. The expenditures of farmers in 1976 in Canada gave them a net income of $3,706 million. In 1977 that net income was reduced to $3,372 million, and in 1978 it is estimated that there will be a further drop to $3,082 million. Even a zero growth I would understand, but not 187 per cent.

Let me now go to Manitoba, because that is the province I was most interested in. In 1976 Manitoba farmers had a gross income of $897 million and costs of $570 million, for a net income of $327 million. In 1977 their income was $892 million, and costs of $611 million gave them a net income of $281 million, a drop from 1976. The estimate for this year from the same statistics is that income will escalate to $904 million with a comparative cost increase of $656 million. It is estimated, Mr. Speaker, that their income will drop even further to between $248 and $260 million. How can the Minister of Agriculture say that there has been an increase? He cannot use the figures of gross income without looking at input costs, because surely, every person in this House and every farmer in this country must look at income as income after expenses. Surely no other figure is valid. I say to the Minister of Agriculture, almost in disillusion rather than anger, that Canadian farmers are in desperate straits because of the cost-price squeeze they are in.

Let us look at some of the solutions. In Manitoba we have a program in the Interlake region known as the ARDA program. The ARDA program, and I say this quite openly, I believe had beneficial effects in the Interlake. The program in the Interlake was used for drainage and land clearance, with a general approach to expanding the agricultural base. At that time we in southeastern Manitoba were hoping that our area would also be included in the special ARDA region. Conditions were similar. Unfortunately, this was not to take place.

What has happened, not through my leadership but through that of farmers and local municipal officials in the far southeastern corner of Manitoba, is that they have created a development corporation known as the Stuartburn-Piney Agriculture Development Association. A large portion of the land mass of this area is Crown land, and primarily provincial Crown land. The province is working on a plan in conjunction with the farmers so that they can sell some of this bona fide Crown land to farmers in order to expand the agricultural base. I hope that plan will be put into effect shortly.

A survey was done in that area by these constituents and it showed some very interesting facts. It showed that there was not enough developed land for an agricultural base that would have economic viability. It showed that people in the area were interested in land development and in making the investment, and that what they needed was an incentive program. Three-quarters of the respondents to the survey indicated that drainage and water control was a problem. The underlying argument, however, was that they needed to expand the tax base and create an infrastructure.

I think a few facts should be put on record about the findings of this committee, Mr. Speaker, and I should like to quote from the study as follows:

The farmers of the L.G.D. of Stuartburn and Piney suffer from the lowest farm incomes and poor agricultural services in the province of Manitoba . . .

65 per cent earn $1200 to $5000 gross. There are several reasons for this:

(1) Very small percentage of total land, only 4 per cent and 7 per cent respectively in Piney and Stuartburn is developed crop land. In most cases, a lot more land can be developed and put into agricultural production . . .

What they propose—and I want to present this to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Lessard) and the Minister of Agriculture—is the following. I believe the first recommendation is the critical one. It reads as follows:

First we propose that this area be designated for assistance under a long term federal-provincial ARDA-type program bearing some of the following points in mind:

Then they clearly spell out the various advantages that program would have and the areas of development they would like to see take place.

I listened to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion state today that he would be signing an agreement with the government of the province of Manitoba tomorrow. I urge and recommend to him that first of all we need a general development agreement for the southeastern part of Manitoba. That agreement should not only include tourism, which is an attractive option for that area, but should definitely include a program similar to the special ARDA area that was used in the Interlake. At the present time the minister of agriculture for the province of Manitoba has associated himself with this report. He wants to move ahead and we look forward to the co-operation of the federal minister in this program. I ask the minister not to worry about press releases and announcements that an agreement will be signed tomorrow, but to put into that agreement terms which will allow for the development of this area and the growth that these people deserve.

I also want to mention that tourism in that part of Manitoba as well as eastern Manitoba must be expanded. This is a job creator. The spin-off affects the area substantially. I made numerous representations to the former minister of national revenue—wherever he might be today—and to former ministers of national revenue—

Miss Bégin: What is wrong with us?

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, I suggest to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) that she was better in her former portfolio than the present one. I also say to the Minister of National Health and Welfare that if she is still interested in the problem, highway 59 should be open for a longer period of time as a port of entry. This is important. Communities along that highway have asked for it. Chambers of commerce such as St. Pierre have asked for it, but there has been no positive response from the federal government.

There are other areas of eastern Manitoba where I believe potential exists and can be developed. There is the old question of the northlands agreement. That was signed and was to be a general development agreement to expand economic activity in the north. We have seen very little positive effect from it. I say to the government and to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion that a development program is needed throughout eastern Manitoba. We must get a program that does not just spend money on research and more studies. We have been literally studied to death. I say, use some of the money for development.

Let me give an example of what I mean, Mr. Speaker. I mentioned to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner) that research and development should be expanded, for instance, into tantalum mining in eastern Manitoba. We have at least 66 per cent of the world's reserves of cesium tantalum. We were exporting some to the U.S.S.R. so we placed it on the export control list. I am not arguing the point that it should be placed on the export control list. We have a potential there. But instead of expanding research and development, instead of expanding opportunities for ancillary manufacturing that could come from that mining, we literally closed the place down and said that if we cannot export it to our traditional markets, nothing will happen.

I should like now to speak of small business, and this takes me to the matter of taxation. A great deal was said in the budget about the reduction of sales tax by the federal government. I say quite openly that it is hoped the reduction of sales tax will have a beneficial effect on retail sales in Canada, at least for the next six months. What will happen when we go into the winter period and the tax comes back is another question.

I want to point out what happens between the time something is presented to us in the House and the person back home is faced with the regulations which flow from decisions made here. In the March 31, 1977, budget there was a provision for a roll-over if a person sold his farm or small business and used the full amount of money to buy another farm. In that case there was to be a deferment of capital gains tax. That was really the essence of the program. I announced it in my riding and in the budget debate I supported the provision. Indeed, most hon. members commended the government for that action.

I find things a little strange now, however. First the government puts on a capital gains tax and then removes it in certain instances in two subsequent budgets. A case was brought to my attention of a farmer who had land and a poultry operation. He decided to sell the poultry operation and rolled the total proceeds over to purchase more land to expand his grain operation. Revenue Canada taxed him. It was never mentioned in this House that if a farmer—let us say a hog producer—should sell his hog operation and buy a larger operation that was not a hog operation, he would be taxed. That is trickery. That is what creates the cynicism that we find about government throughout Canada.

The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lumley) is here this evening. I have mentioned this situation to his minister and to the Minister of Agriculture. I thought last week that we were making some progress and that that regulation, which I found out in fact does exist, would be modified. I had high hopes that common sense would prevail. But what do I find out this week? I found out that a farmer can sell a farm, say a dairy farm, and use that money for a rollover only if he buys a larger dairy farm. If he buys a grain farm, he will be taxed.

Was that the way it was presented to the people of Canada on March 31, 1977? No way. I say to them, Mr. Speaker, that is the ignominy that this government will have to face with the farmers and the small businessmen of Canada. No matter how you cut it, it was not presented to them in that way. I say to the farmers and the small businessmen of this country that if that regulation is not removed with the provisions that were in the March 31, 1977 budget and this recent budget, then they had better be careful before they make any move whatsoever.

I notice that the Minister of State (Small Business) (Mr. Abbott) is in the House tonight. He has made a few pronouncements that small business is going to get the government off its back; less red tape, less bureaucracy, more return. I say to the minister that I hope he is right. I hope that what he has said will in fact take place and that I will not have to come back to him a few months later—

Mr. Paproski: You won't have to because they won't be in power.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to inform the hon. member that his allotted time has expired.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) closed his remarks by touching on a particular interpretation of a regulation and its enforcement. He then immediately drew from that example a conclusion, the wrong one. But instead of waiting and pursuing the interpretation, pursuing it not only through government but also through the various processes which are available, he drew an interpretation of skepticism and cynicism which is so common in those who constantly oppose.

The record of this government is clear as being sympathetic to the various needs and situations in which our Canadian farmers find themselves in regard to their taxes. This budget included a new move in relation to the extension of the rollover of the capital gains tax to the corporate farm structure. Those of us on this side of the House who saw the need for the rollover for farmers in the first place thought that it would apply fairly broadly. We found as a matter of interpretation that the way the law was written it did not apply to corporations. We were first told there might be some difficulties in applying it in that regard. We persisted and we saw that the change was in fact extended.

That is not the first example by any means of the extension of tax advantages to farmers. I would remind the hon. member for Provencher that when it came to the question of delivery of grain and how that grain would be delivered, it was this government which quickly responded to a need on the prairies, where the quota system exists and where farmers were in the position of not necessarily being able to control deliveries, for a new device—the idea of preferred tax credit where they could deliver their grain and have the grain counted in the following year for tax purposes, if that is what they chose.

Those are just small examples, but important ones, of the way this government has been responsive to the needs of that sector of agriculture to which the hon. member for Provencher most recently referred.

It is extraordinary that the hon. member today would talk about agriculture and its needs when the record of the Conservative party, even when it was represented by large numbers of members from the west, was such a sorry story in the area of agriculture. It is most extraordinary indeed.

Hon. members opposite, including several from Saskatchewan and other prairie provinces, were critical when an analysis of all the developments which have taken place in agriculture in the last eight or nine years went out not long ago from this government. It was a long document with many items in it of tremendous importance to farmers, and particularly to grain farmers to whom it was addressed. It included such things as hopper cars, with an expenditure of $250 million for that item. It included the introduction of two-price wheat. It included grain stabilization which the Tories have so long fought to stop from coming into existence, not because in their hearts they thought it was unwise, but because they did not want to see a program of that quality put in place by a Liberal government with the Liberals taking credit for it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lang: The story goes on and on, list after list.

Two-price wheat is significant because that is an item which was asked for by prairie people long before the Conservative government was in power with all its prairie strength in the years 1957 to 1963. What would that prairie story of the Conservative government have shown if they had printed it at that time? There would be one item of permanence and merit and that item would be cash advances. There would have been one other item and that is two pre-election $100 payments on an acreage basis, to a maximum of $200, which were pure election gimmicks and which the Conservatives have looked for ever since. Their grain story for six years, with a prairie prime minister and prairie members in the Conservative party, could have been printed on two pages, and one of those pages would have been blank.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lang: Perhaps not blank because, as hon. members have noted, the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) would have insisted on his picture being printed, showing him signing a sales agreement in a boat off the shore of China, an agreement which he was pretending to sign because in fact it had been signed and completed by the Canadian Wheat Board weeks before he got there to put his pen to that agreement.

Mr. Paproski: You wouldn't say that to his face.

Mr. Lang: I have said that to his face in Regina many a time. The opposition—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. The hon. Minister of Transport has the floor and I suggest we listen. We have all had our day; let us give the Minister of Transport his day.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, the opposition are in a sorry state when it comes to making suggestions to deal with what are difficult questions in today's economy. They are difficult economic questions and recognized to be that by everyone, particularly by this government. They are also the kinds of questions which require sensible and sensitive solutions, not a lot of rhetoric such as we have heard today.

The budget which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) brought in clearly did the right things for today, for this week, for the economy of this country, in striking the right balance between further encouraging economic development and yet taking very careful note of the need to restrain the financial spending of the federal government because of the dangers of inflation. We had had a target of 5 per cent growth. It began to look as though that might not be achieved in real terms. The hon. member for Provencher referred to a Conference Board figure of 3.9, but he failed to say that the Conference Board said that their figure did not take into account the recent stimulus put into the economy by the Minister of Finance.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lang: The budget of the Minister of Finance was a courageous budget, one which was welcomed by economic experts across this country as being the right thing for today.

● (2112)

The extraordinary testimony about the quality of the budget of the Minister of Finance is the fact that some members suspect, probably with some correctness, that we are fairly close to election time. It could have been very tempting for the Minister of Finance to accept a suggestion that more be done in the way of tax cuts, that he not restrain himself to the $1.2 billion in total tax cuts being accomplished in these next six months by his reduction in sales tax, whereby he helps the provinces to create those reductions. He could have done more about that if he had not been careful about the advice of his best advisers or not cared about the comment and advice of reasonable experts everywhere.

What in the face of that budget do the opposition parties come up with at a time when there are challenges and you might think they would be dreaming solutions of their own? The hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) comes in with a motion that suggests there be a tax cut of $2 billion on the income tax side. Essentially the New Democratic Party through the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge (Mr. Saltsman) said that a sales tax cut is the right cut. In neither party were there imaginative ideas about what the government should do in the way of further job creation. There was no criticism, particularly of our Canada Works programs, our other major ventures and all the rest.

There were a few comments by the opposition about matters chosen from the first ministers' conference and the background papers, such as the economic development which we see ahead and where 11 first ministers agreed that the course the government was on was right. Hon. members opposite then say there should be a tax cut of $2 billion a year. What the Minister of Finance came up with was a tax cut of $1.2 billion in six to nine months, which is a greater tax cut than they with their best imagination are able to come up with as economic advice today.

The evidence was clear that this was the right thing to do. Economic advice clearly indicated that was the best course available to this government. The banks, the senior civil service and all outside advice agreed as well, so much so that the opposition did not dare to suggest, even in their own position of opposition, that much more should have been done in that regard.

One might well ask where the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) gets his economic advice. The hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Gillies) is now moving out of that scene, probably because he sees that not very much in the way of economic quality and advice is required or wanted by the Leader of the Opposition.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lang: When I think of the Leader of the Opposition and his advice, I am reminded of a premier of Saskatchewan some years ago who, looking across at one particular member of the opposition, referred to him as a yahoo. That word created some parliamentary difficulty in those days. Things are different now. Hon. members may not know what a yahoo is; he is a close relative of "Joe Who" when it comes to his economic advice. Where does he get this economic advice?

Look at what he thinks of advice inside the government. Whereas the Minister of Finance was accepting the best that was available, the Leader of the Opposition was sneering at it, just as he sneered at the RCMP and police of this country a few months ago when his party, instead of calling them in or having the key sleuth in his party call them in, fearing their offices were being bugged, did not trust the police. In all their attacks on the police, they could not get away from the fact that they have not trusted the best possible advice available in that circumstance, just as they do not here in economic circumstances.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lang: They called in a group from outside, a group the quality of which is now a matter of public record. I remember one great day in Saskatoon. The morning edition of the Star Phoenix had a picture of the Leader of the Opposition peering at his telephone. There were some words to the effect that "Clark finds some listening device there". It turned out to be a top head diode, a regular part of the equipment. The afternoon edition of the Star Phoenix had much the same picture, much the same front page. It changed the headline. It read "Clark device normal". That was very reassuring to many of us. Those who believe in a healthy opposition were certainly delighted to see that bit of evidence.

The sales tax was the right tax. One of the delightful things in the Minister of Finance's introduction of this particular sales tax is that once again he was able to demonstrate the way this government seeks the support of all the country in taking what is indeed a differential approach in the way a tax is handled.

The Atlantic provinces have less financial capability than many others. In complete keeping with the spirit of this government's putting very high priority on the development of the Atlantic area and promoting causes there, the minister said there would be a 3 per cent sales tax reduction without any cost to them, fully reimbursed by the treasury. In this Liberal party, members from the west, central Canada and the Atlantic area support that kind of program, in that regard and in every regard, showing that we believe in the development of this country.

I look at the programs of this government from one part of the country to the other, programs which are designed to spur development by taking action when it is required to allow the free enterprise side of the economy to operate, which is what hon. members opposite ask.

I look at the west coast and I see our development in the ports. I see the Vanterm terminal, Lynterm, the Fairview terminal in Prince Rupert coming to a conclusion, the investment we propose to make in Ridley Island, our willingness to co-operate through DREE in the northeast coal development. You see there, step by step, the laying of the groundwork for investment by Canadians which will mean many jobs in the future right across the country.

Mr. Smith (Churchill): What about Churchill?

Mr. Lang: The hon. member asks what about Churchill? There too we have millions of dollars going into dredging and lighting programs, and $1½ million going into rail improvements during the course of the next year to build the capacity of Churchill, because we have confidence in it. So would everyone else in that area if they did not have a member who constantly "hoo-hoots" gloom and doom in the face of our programs.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lang: In the prairie provinces, I mentioned our developments in assuring grain transportation in the sense of $255 million worth of hopper cars. There are members opposite who go into other regions of the country and use that as a negative example against this government. Of course, they very much hide that from people in the prairies whom they want to support them. That is the kind of division they go through. One of their members says "Everything is done for the prairies and nothing is done for us here". They are always dividing the country instead of trying to see the positive side of good action in every region.

The stabilization program was an example of recognition by this government on the tariff structure in this country, which we are trying to improve by lowering the burden it traditionally imposed upon our prairie farmers. There was built into our structure such things as the Crowsnest rate on grain, built in and maintained because of the problems the grain farmer faces in this tariff world. We carried through on that, instead of doing nothing, as the Tories had done in their years of power, with, I say again in astonishment, a prairie prime minister and a House full of prairie Conservatives. They did nothing of note for that particular farmer.

It is a monument of credit to this country and to real democrats within it, like my Liberal colleagues from central Canada and the Altantic provinces, that when we come forward with one, two, three or four voices alone from the prairies, they do not ask whether, in providing hopper cars and $60 million a year for grain stabilization, and now $75 million a year for rail rehabilitation, there would be political consequences in our favour. They only asked whether it was right for the regions, and they were then willing to do it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lang: The railway rehabilitation program is a positive example of our moving forward in an optimistic way in the prairie region in terms of the grain handling program. This program means that, with the Hall commission report and the Snavely commission report and the action now being taken, we shall in the course of seven or eight years have transferred to the basic rail network the bulk of the prairie grain lines and rehabilitated every one of those miles of lines with ties where required, stones to lay the ties upon which will last for half a century, and with rail which will carry those fully loaded hopper cars. That is the kind of action which is forthcoming from this government in the prairie region.

This budget also recognized the need for further railway investment. This is important in many parts of the country but particularly in the west where so much freight traffic will increasingly move. The last budget made provision for easier investment by the railways. There were cash flow advantages to the railway companies through increased depreciation allowances. One further step in that regard was taken by the Minister of Finance in this budget.

You know, Mr. Speaker, you could not at this time of restraint have implemented immediately and in full the recommendation of the Hall commission to pay the total of $200 million a year as an additional sum to the railways. But we did the important thing. We paid that part of it which could assure railway rehabilitation in getting a contract agreement with the railways and assure that every penny was spent on equipment for those rail lines. Though not being able to go the whole distance as the commission recommended, we did put the railways in a better position be giving them depreciation advantages, and this, too, will be reflected in terms of rail development by improving the cash position of the railways.

I could go on to mention the development of a heavy oil processing plant in the Lloydminster area. Concessions in the budget make this possible now as soon as the provincial government in Saskatchewan comes forward with some certainty in this area. The plant is ready to go. The investment would be there if the provincial government would move. Once again we have seen a significant and sensitive approach by the Minister of Finance in the field of economic development affecting our western provinces.

The Atlantic area is one to which the government constantly attaches extremely high priority as far as development is concerned. We have seen in that region advances in the development of ports, highways, airports, and now also of bus transportation, which signify the importance we attach to this area. In the last two weeks I have had the privilege of visiting several of the cities in the Atlantic region. I have seen an additional forest products terminal being put under way in Saint John, New Brunswick.

An hon. Member: Did you fly there?

Mr. Lang: Yes. The small-minded Conservative from I know not which constituency asks me: Did I fly there? Indeed I did. And, indeed, that record of transportation costs which they like to allege and criticize from time to time is made up over the years of trip after trip after trip by myself and my staff to places all over this country to talk transportation to people who want to hear.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lang: I do not back away from the fact that in this country members of the government have to fly frequently when they want to meet with people far from the centre of administration. I have met with hundreds and hundreds of groups of farmers from throughout the prairie provinces by doing just that, and by flying to those meetings I have been able to go there and back in one day and also attend to cabinet matters which affect the prairies and the rest of the country, which is, of course, what I am expected to do.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lang: Still dealing with the Atlantic region I would refer to a couple of transportation initiatives we have taken, such as the development of the ports. In Halifax, only two days ago we turned the sod for a new container terminus which will meet the needs of the port and which will be ready just as the terminus is ready for completion. It is not, as some Tories have suggested, a part of the country which would be neglected by us because we favour some other region. Again I refer to speeches they make in their own areas spreading this divisiveness and terrible negativity in which they constantly engage.

I was also in Charlo and Wabush and Gander visiting new airport developments which would encourage regional development in a major way by providing important transportation links between those areas and the rest of the country. In the last two weeks I have signed highway agreements with all four Atlantic provinces which involves an expenditure of $100 million of federal money joined with $100 million of provincial money to develop highways and strengthen highways across the Atlantic region. This means there will be uniformity of truck rates so that the most economic handling of trucks will be possible in the region, thereby furthering the development we want to see.

The development of the Atlantic region in particular, of course, through the department of my colleague the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Lessard), has always received a very high priority from this government and will continue to do so. We do not think we have found all the solutions, but it is very evident that we have the will to try to develop the Atlantic provinces and find a way to allow people who go there to stay there and find jobs. The will is present and we will keep searching for new, different and better ways of helping development there. I say again on behalf of all of us on this side, including those from the west, and I say this proudly of myself: we in this government put very high priority on Atlantic development.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I have mentioned a number of regions of Canada and outlined what the government is doing for them—the effort it has made to understand their varying problems. I could say the same about central Canada where port development at Hamilton, Montreal and Quebec is under way. Almost unnoticed, $125 million is being spent on Toronto International Airport. These are important developments to meet particular needs.

I should like, however, to say something about another issue which is not directly economic. It concerns my colleagues from Quebec and the desire of my Francophone friends to see promoted in this country a place for themselves and their culture. This government has responded, initially with the support of parties opposite, and I hope we can count fully and firmly on their support today, too. We responded because Liberals in all parts of the country felt it was an important priority which had to be taken into account. We did so because, whether we came from the west or from Ontario, we wanted to provide for our friends who were interested in Francophone development in this country what we ourselves would want if we were in such a minority position.

Time and time again the government has been able to find ways of meeting needs, and in speaking of this issue, just as in the case of economic issues, it has never expressed itself in one way in one part of the country while putting forward a different view elsewhere. That is of fundamental importance.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lang: I hope the Conservative party will dedicate itself to controlling its many members so that they follow the principles for which they voted several years ago. Of course, I am not sure that one can expect a great deal from a leader of a party who has, after all, succeeded at nothing else but hopes to succeed at being prime minister.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lang: I suppose I should make an exception because of the fact that he won the leadership by being the third choice of everyone present on that particular occasion.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lang: The way he chooses his advice, by going away from the RCMP and the police to an outside source for excellent advice, is another example of his quality of leadership and his judgment. He said the other day, however, that he has accomplished one thing, and that is unity within his party.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): You have the ethics of an alley cat.

Mr. Lang: He loses members here, there, and everywhere and says he has unity within the party.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): You are disgusting.

An hon. Member: If he is the only one left, he will have unity all right.

Mr. Lang: I see, Mr. Speaker, that he has just managed to come through with a major constitutional proposal which he puts on the desk and then quickly says: "Of course, this is for discussion." I see three Conservative comments noted in the paper today. One of the outstanding senators in the Conservative party says that that would lead to a house of obstruction; the second one says it is a half-baked idea. The Conservatives might say these are just senators, but then I could refer to the right hon. gentleman from Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), who has sat in this House for some 37 years now, when he was faced with the proposals of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark).

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: You cannot take it.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): May I just say that for this speech, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang), who has been known to misuse aircraft—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: That is not a point of order.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): —and has shown himself to have the morals of an alley cat, ought to be ashamed of himself. He ought to know that his government is the cause of the great difficulty that our country faces, and I would like him to address himself to the problems in the country.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I would like to suggest to the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) that that is not a point of order.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to inform the minister that his allotted time has expired. The hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom).

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Sit down, turkey.

An hon. Member: You're finished.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I will want to look at the rules to consider further what course of action I ought to take because I had some difficulty hearing the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker), if I may call him that, but I heard some rather distinct slurs. It seems to me he took a bit of grievance out of some reference I made to the Leader of the Opposition. It happens to be true, which is why, no doubt, he grieves even more.

He has some nerve, Mr. Speaker—and this will be my question of privilege—to use slurring language in regard to me when over these many months and years he has, from his place, tried to make it appear that I was somehow doing something unfair, indecent, in doing my job. He constantly made it appear, in a despicable way which should be beneath contempt, except that the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton has no standards at all with which to restrain himself—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lang: The hon. member for Grenville-Carleton is giving one of his big, broad smiles because he does not take seriously what he does to the political system and to people who work within it. I may say, to the credit of some of his colleagues and I think also to some of mine, that there are many members in this House who give a great deal of effort and dedication to politics and who do not deserve the standards of politics which the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton is showing when he takes them into the mud and makes slurs upon them the way he has again tonight.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): The hon. member for Grenville-Carleton is rising on the same question of privilege.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Apologize.

An hon. Member: That is the only course you have.

Mr. Paproski: Go to a judge.

An hon. Member: Go call a judge.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. The Chair would like to hear the response of the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, if I have in any way slurred the Minister of Transport in an unparliamentary way upon his examination of the record, he knows and I know that I would withdraw it. But I am going to say to the Minister of Transport that I believe—

An hon. Member: Resign.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I would suggest to the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of Privy Council (Mr. Pinard), who said the minister should resign, that perhaps he should.

An hon. Member: You should resign.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I will examine the record, but I hope that, with respect to ethical conduct by the government, the Minister of Transport in that government would not hold up as a model to Canadians the conduct of this government and those who have been associated with it. Never in the history of this country has there been a government that has been so involved in the courts as a result of—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. The hon. member for Yorkton-Melville.

Mr. Andre: Otto, that was good practice for the opposition.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Finally, Mr. Speaker, I have a chance to say a few words, but I will be brief because the hon. member for Frontenac-Lennox and Addington (Mr. Alkenbrack) wants to say a few words to the House tonight, which will be his last in the House after serving here, I believe, some 16 years. His anniversary will be on June 18. I will try not to take up too much time to enable him to say a few words of farewell to the House.

I will briefly mention three items—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. The Minister of State for Small Business (Mr. Abbott) wishes to rise on a point of order.

Mr. Abbott: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same question of privilege. I do not think it is quite enough for the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) to rise and describe a minister of the Crown as having the personal ethics—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Come on!

Mr. Paproski: Raise it tomorrow morning.

Mr. Abbott: —the personal ethics of an alley cat, then try to make a speech about it, then sit down and for the debate to move on. I think that that was a disgraceful moment.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: And you are a pussy cat.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I would like to remind all hon. members that in his comments the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton suggested that, after he has taken a look at the written record tomorrow, if he finds he said anything unparliamentary he would be willing to withdraw it. So I consider the case closed.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same question of privilege. I indicated earlier that I had not heard the precise words due to the noise, but I gather that one of my colleagues did hear them and he has now referred to them. Presumably the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton would know himself whether he used those words. If he did, surely the words are clearly unparliamentary. Perhaps he would have the good grace to confirm whether or not he did use them and, if so, withdraw them without further ado.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I think that I have made myself fairly clear to the minister. I think it should be understood clearly that I have very little regard for the Minister of Transport—

[Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton).]

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Who does?

An hon. Member: Nobody in Canada does.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): —whether as Minister of Transport or otherwise, together with the government. I have very little regard for this government. If the minister would like me to read into the record tomorrow other things about the government, and to waste the time of the House doing that, I will do so. The public already knows these things.

● (2142)

I respect this place. Sometimes it is a place of harsh words. Those words, harsh or not, always should be parliamentary. If I have offended the rules, then he knows and I know. Indeed, all hon. members should know. If that is the case, I will withdraw those words; but I want an opportunity to examine them tomorrow.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry I am having difficulty with the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton. It seems to me he would know if he used those words. If he used those words, it should be very clear to him, as well as to Mr. Speaker, that those words are unparliamentary. If he has any respect for this place at all, he should not wait any further. I put that to him very directly. Perhaps he can end the matter by withdrawing those words, and I will not get into a speech about my respect for the hon. member.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I think the hon. minister should look at the record to see what I said.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. Perhaps we should wait until tomorrow to see the written report. The hon. member for Grenville-Carleton has indicated that if he used unparliamentary language he would be willing to withdraw it. At this time the Chair considers the incident closed.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, ethics of a tomcat or not, I think the hon. member for Frontenac-Lennox and Addington (Mr. Alkenbrack) and I are being short-changed.

An hon. Member: I think we all are.

Mr. Nystrom: Perhaps we all are. I want very briefly to touch on three issues, because I have only approximately seven minutes.

The economy of this country is in real rough shape. Many people indicate that Canada is in good condition, especially when one considers what is happening around the world. We in this country have a lot of resources such as oil, gas, potash, iron ore, lead, zinc or what have you. Our people are highly educated. We have all the technology in the world that we need. If those three things are put together, it seems to me a society could be developed in Canada which would be second to none in the world. It is a real crime that the government is not entertaining that type of plan.

Back in the days of the second world war, I am told by hon. members of the House, such as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles)—

Mr. Parent: Before the second world war? Perhaps the first world war?

Mr. Nystrom: Not the first world war.

Mr. Parent: What about the Boer War?

Mr. Nystrom: No, not the Boer War. I am referring to the days prior to the second world war.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. It being 9.45 p.m., the Chair recognizes the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton on a point of order.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, there has been an agreement arrived at among all parties that Your Honour ought not to see the clock at 9.45 in order for us to continue until ten o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Agreed and so ordered.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That is agreed, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Nystrom: Perhaps I should quit.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nystrom: I meant perhaps I should quit speaking. At any rate, prior to the days of the second world war, Canada was faced with a situation similar to that of today. There was a lot of unemployment in this country. People were told that money could not be found to put them back to work, to build schools, hospitals, roads and other necessary things. The government of the day indicated that it could not find a money tree. Suddenly a war broke out, and within a few short weeks, the government found money. They took men off the rails and took men out of the unemployment lines. They bought them uniforms, shined their shoes, filled their teeth and put them to work fighting a war, working in munitions factories or various factories across the country that were building tanks, boats and things for Canada's war effort. If that can be done during the time of war, surely it can be done during peacetime. We could declare war on the unemployment situation and the inequality which is present in Canada.

Many people ask what unemployment really means. It is said that it only affects a few of us, but that is not true. In the last year, unemployment has cost Canada approximately $8.5 billion. Approximately $4 billion of lost productivity, $3 billion in welfare and unemployment insurance payments and $1.5 billion in lost taxes make up that total. Instead of that money being spent on welfare and lost productivity, perhaps that amount and more should be spent on putting people to work. That would create a much better and wealthier nation for each and every one of us in the long run.

The Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) referred to the question of rail line abandonment, which is something important to the people of the prairies. The Hall commission determined that approximately 2,000 miles of rail lines in the prairies should come under the prairie rail authority. That was suggested because a decision could not be reached as to whether or not the 2,000 miles of rail should be preserved in the basic network or abandoned. The Hall commission thought the matter required further study, and that the PRA be established for that purpose between now and 1990.

Instead of establishing a prairie rail authority, the Minister of Transport established a small advisory body composed of his friends. It is known as the Prairie Rail Action Committee. Apparently it does not have a mandate to go into various communities and hold hearings. I am referring to the communities which the Hall commission could not make a decision on. A number of those communities happen to be situated in my riding on two rail lines, namely, the rail line which runs from Preeceville to Kelvington, and the other one which runs from Canora to MacNutt. The people in those communities have set up Save Our Rail Lines committees. They want the prairie rail authority, the CTC or someone who is able, to make a decision. They want those authorities to come out to their communities to see the reason why those rail lines must be preserved. They have strong, solid arguments, and they want to present their cases to the government. The least the government can do is to instruct the Prairie Rail Action Committee, if the prairie rail authority is not going to be established, to go to those communities and hold hearings in order to provide those people with a chance to fight.

If they were provided with a chance to fight their cases in front of federal officials, I am sure they would save those rail lines. The rail lines which are placed inthe category recommended by the Hall commission deserve to be transferred to the basic rail network. I am sure the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Goodale) could point out other cases.

Before I give the hon. member for Frontenac-Lennox and Addington a chance to participate in this debate, I should like to refer to the question of farm incomes. The other day the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) indicated that Canadian farmers are enjoying quite a bit of affluence. When he quoted his figures, he forgot to mention that he was referring to farm income jumps between 1971 and 1974. He picked 1971, which was one of the worst years Canada has ever had in relation to farm incomes, and 1974, which was one of the better years.

If one refers to those two years, of course there will be a substantial increase in farm incomes. But in the last three years, farm incomes have dropped drastically. From 1975 to 1977, in fact farm incomes went down by 73 per cent in Canada. I am referring to the net farm income which goes into the pockets of farmers. At the same time farm costs have risen by 18 per cent. Farm incomes have dropped by 23 per cent at the same time as farm costs have risen by 18 per cent. Canadian farmers deserve better, but they have not received such from the hon. minister. When one looks at other statistics concerning farm incomes, it is evident that the trend is continuing downward rapidly, despite the programs which are in effect today.

For example, in Saskatchewan, the cash receipts of farmers between January 1975 and 1978, according to the minister's own department, have dropped by 55 per cent. During that same period of time, the cost of operating prairie farms has risen by some 23 per cent. How can a farmer be expected to pay his bills, if the costs are rising by 23 per cent and his income is dropping by 55 per cent?

There are many other things I could say, but out of courtesy I will conclude my remarks at this point in order for the hon. member for Frontenac-Lennox and Addington to have an opportunity to say a few words of farewell before he retires.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I should like to point out to hon. members that this could be the last speech of the hon. member for Frontenac-Lennox and Addington (Mr. Alkenbrack). He has served his country well for the past 16 years. On behalf of the Chair, officers of the table and hon. members of the House, I wish him well.

● (2152)

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Thank you, Mr. Speaker, thank you my colleague, the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom), thank you ladies and gentlemen, colleagues in the House of Commons. I am pleased to make my contribution to the debate on this budget, although it will be brief.

The best definition of this budget is that it is a short term election device of the Liberal party.

An hon. Member: There goes the goodwill!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alkenbrack: It is regrettable, sir, that the policy makers of that party did not find themselves able to look beyond the next election. Sir, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), in marking the end of his decade in power, having been first elected to the high office in 1968, marks the end of this decade at this time.

In 1968 when the first Trudeau government came to power, the Prime Minister campaigned under the slogan "The Just Society". If the just society meant anything in 1968, it was a clear mandate to Trudeau and the Liberals to attack regional disparities across our country, to work to alleviate poverty in our society and to improve employment conditions and fight unemployment in our society.

The slogan "The Just Society" would imply a fair system of taxation. In order for the just society to prosper, inflation should have been controlled. Again, a just society would expect the wise spending and administration of tax moneys levied from that society by this government, in whom that so called just society had pinned its hopes. Our society of 1968 expected continuation of healthy trade relationships with other countries and the usual measure of necessary tariff protection for Canadian industry that would be vulnerable to unfair competition from countries employing cheap labour.

That once strong society of 1968 expected that our government would be a good neighbour among the comity of nations, helping those less fortunate than ourselves as long as it was not at the expense and dire hardship of unemployment of our citizens. That just society expected a reasonably strong economy that would sustain itself if it were left alone and was not over taxed or dictated to by a federal government.

That 1968 just society I mentioned implied good co-operation and good relationships between the so-called two founding races of our country; the French and, for want of a better description, the English. We expected bilingualism would be encouraged only wherever needed in our public service, and wherever numbers warranted this and it was expected.

We anticipated that all these principles and ideas, if put into effect, would maintain the unity we had always enjoyed before this country ever heard of Prime Ministers by the names of Pearson or Trudeau. But, alas, none of those great expectations ever materialized. We are now all asking the question here this evening, even some of those on the government side, as a result of a surfeit of so-called Liberalism and ten years of Trudeau: Where is that just society? It is a myth; it simply does not exist.

Both national unity and justice have been withering and dying over the past decade. The so-called charisma that the Prime Minister was supposed to have possessed is also a myth. The Liberal administration has been a total failure and all that remains at the present time is the Prime Minister's obsession with power and the exercise of power.

To go back over the list of implications I have just mentioned in the meaning of a just society, we see that Liberalism under the Prime Minister has totally failed in this country, and we see where that failure has led us.

Sir, I must now dispense with further remarks I had ready regarding this budget and say to you and to the House that my final remarks during this budget debate tonight pertain to myself, my family and, one might say, "my budget".

As most hon. members know, after 16 years in this House as representative of the former federal riding of Prince Edward Lennox and the still existing riding of Frontenac-Lennox and Addington—that is, it still exists until an election writ is issued—I am voluntarily retiring from federal politics.

I was first elected on June 18, 1962 and I am the last remaining Progressive Conservative member of what we call the "class of '62", although there are several other members remaining in this House from other parties of that class of '62.

My working career began here in Ottawa in 1931 when I was employed by the government of that day, the Bennett government, as a clerk, grade 2, in the Dominion Bureau of Statistics. I was employed on the agricultural census for two years, and the offices of the bureau were on Green Island, down on Sussex Avenue, directly opposite the present City Hall.

My working career as far as this House is concerned also ends here in Ottawa, in this House of Commons, where I was a frequent gallery visitor as a boy in 1931 and 1932, never thinking I would occupy a seat here for sixteen years.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alkenbrack: My friends, I have seen quite a bit of the Canadian Kaleidoscope pass in review in this chamber. Although I have sat on the opposition side for the past 15 years, with the goodwill and help of colleagues from both sides of this House I have been able to accomplish many things in the service of my constituents, and I thank you, Mr. Speaker, and other Speakers under whom I have served, as well as members on both side of the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alkenbrack: I want to thank all hon. members of this present House and that vast throng of other members and colleagues of the past who are no longer here, many of whom have gone to their just reward. My appreciation and commendation also go out to all those who work on Parliament Hill, which of course includes the security staff, the secretaries and the executive assistants, all of whom I remember and recognize with magnanimity and gratitude. My deep appreciation also goes to the public service and all the various departments of government that throughout the years have assisted me in representing my constituents.

I deem it time to return to Napanee, my home in Lennox and Addington county. I invite all my colleagues in any of their journeys throughout our area, or near it, to visit me in Napanee. I can assure them that they will certainly be welcome.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The question is on the main motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

An hon. Member: On division.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Motion agreed to on division.

Motion (Mr. Chrétien) agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being ten o'clock p.m., this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 10 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

BEREAVEMENT OF HON. MEMBER FOR WINNIPEG NORTH CENTRE

EXPRESSION OF SYMPATHY ON PASSING AWAY OF WIFE OF MR. STANLEY KNOWLES

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Before calling motions pursuant to Standing Order 43—I will, of course, try to reserve an appropriate length of time for that and extend the question period if necessary—hon. members will have noticed the rather singular absence from the House today of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). This absence from this House is so rare that it is worthy of note on the occasion it does occur. I wish I could say that the hon. member's absence was due to some happy event, but it is not. Hon. members will be saddened to learn that the wife of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre passed away last night and he is, of course, in Winnipeg at this time.

Hon. members of all parties have spoken to me, and rather than having individual comments at this time, particularly in view of the suddenness of the event, perhaps I could speak on behalf of all members of the House in saying to this very distinguished parliamentarian of such long service and great devotion and affection for parliament that all of us wish in some way to reach out to him in this moment of sadness.

Our thoughts and prayers on this day are with him and his family who are all together in Winnipeg. We know the hon. member left earlier this week to be in Winnipeg because of some news and returned to his duties here only too briefly, to be called again last night to be told of this very sad news. I am sure I speak on behalf of all hon. members in saying our prayers and thoughts are with him. I will, of course, be taking the appropriate steps to extend that sentiment directly to Mr. Knowles the moment I leave the chair here today.

PARKS CANADA

REASON DIRECTOR DOES NOT TRAVEL IN COMMERCIAL AIRCRAFT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of pressing necessity under Standing Order 43. On the Peter Warren show on radio station CJOB in Winnipeg, it was stated that the director of Parks Canada in Winnipeg, who owns a Mooney 201 aircraft which normally rents at $42 per hour, rents the aircraft to the federal government for $52 per hour when he travels on government business. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Whiteway):

That this House direct the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development to launch an immediate investigation into this renting practice and report to the House on why the parks director does not use commercial transportation when on government business instead of using his private plane which he rents to the government at considerably above commercial rates.

Mr. Speaker: The presentation of such a motion for discussion is permitted, pursuant to Standing Order 43, only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT CONSULTS PROVINCES ON AMENDMENTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. C. A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I should like to introduce a motion and ask for the unanimous consent of the House under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Considering that the Prime Minister stated yesterday that it is difficult to decide whether it is advisable to unveil the constitutional proposals to the House of Commons or during an election campaign; considering that according to the confederative spirit the provinces should be first to decide, or settle as the Prime Minister said, the future of confederation, although we recognize that the federal government could take part at the unanimous invitation of the provinces, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert):

That the Prime Minister undertake serious consultations with the provinces to know what they want instead of forcing his will on them, thus antagonizing them and giving rise to the present state of confusion instead of creating the harmony suggested by the Social Credit Party.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there such consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

FUNDING OF NORTHERN FLOOD COMMITTEE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Cecil Smith (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. On March 16, 1978, the Northern Flood Agreement was ratified by the five Indian bands comprising the northern flood committee. However, it will become "another meaningless paper commitment" if the Indian people cannot participate in the actual implementation of the agreement.

In view of the fact the former minister of Indian Affairs, the present Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Allmand), recognized the committee's need for continued funding during the transitional period after the agreement had been ratified, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp):

That the present minister of Indian affairs meet with the northern flood committee and ensure funding be continued throughout implementation stages of the agreement.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion would require the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

UNEMPLOYMENT

LAY-OFFS AT MARINE INDUSTRIES, QUEBEC—REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. From the month of April and on for nine consecutive months, Quebec's Marine Industries will lay off 100 employees each month, bringing the number of workers down from 2,500 to 1,600. This reduction is caused by international competition, particularly from Japan and Brazil.

I move, seconded by the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert):

That the House ask the government to take action to stop this drain of 900 workers.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

REQUEST FORM OF PRAYERS BE PROPOSED BY VARIOUS PARTIES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I seek the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

In view of the fact that several months ago the House adopted a motion calling for a change in our Standing Orders which would allow the public to be present in the galleries and join us in the prayers at the beginning of our daily meetings, a motion which was referred to our Committee on Procedure and Organization for recommendations; and in view also of the fact that the nature and length of our current prayers should be modified to reflect better the new ecumenical spirit, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier):

That the House urge the caucus of each and every political party represented in the House to provide our committee on procedure, within the next two weeks, with the text of a prayer in which all Canadians could join to ask Our Lord and Father for His guidance, with instructions to the committee to report before the end of the current legislature.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Pursuant to Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

VACANCY

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have the honour to inform the House that I have received a communication notifying me that a vacancy has occurred in the representation, namely that brought about by the resignation of Claude Wagner, Esq., member for the electoral district of Saint-Hyacinthe.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

FINANCE

SALES TAX—GOVERNMENT STUDY OF QUEBEC PROPOSALS

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Because of the current concern in Quebec about the budgetary proposal and also because of the impending lay-off of 1,900 workers announced by Marine Industries and Northern Telecom, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance whether, in view of the analysis made by his department which proves, with supporting figures contrary to the claims of the minister himself, that the Quebec proposal could help the industries outside Quebec as well in the clothing, footwear and textile industries, he will take that report into consideration and give an affirmative reply to the Quebec government, this in order to stop misleading the Canadian people by claiming that the step was taken as a separatist measure?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have answered that question repeatedly. Over a period of three weeks, we made proposals to all the provincial governments. During my discussions with my provincial counterparts, we looked into all kinds of possibilities. We picked two out which were agreeable to the nine other provinces; unfortunately, Mr. Parizeau decided to act unilaterally after the federal government reached an agreement with the other provinces. Last Friday, through my officials, I suggested a compromise through the formula explained to the House by my colleague the Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations and I intend to send Mr. Parizeau a letter if he feels the information given by his officials is not adequate.

GOVERNMENT URGED TO PREVENT LAY-OFFS AT MARINE INDUSTRIES, QUEBEC

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. Could the minister tell us whether he is prepared to have a personal meeting with his counterpart to discuss this issue, which is quite important at least for all hon. members in the House and, at the same time, would he consider with his provincial counterpart the possibility of offering at least his co-operation and could he tell us what his government can do to avoid 900 workers being laid off by Marine Industries shipyards in the town of Sorel?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it is well known that the federal government has been working very actively to help the Canadian shipbuilding industry. When I was Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce a year and a half ago, I increased the level of federal government subsidies to shipyards by 12 to 20 per cent and we took action with the Export Development Corporation to finance, almost entirely, the ships which are now under construction. Unfortunately, current conditions on the international market are rather depressed and it is clear that some shipbuilding industries may find themselves without work for some time but I know the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce is actively working with this industry to find new contracts.

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, I am certainly listening carefully to the minister's answers, but he does not answer my question at all and he cannot give any encouraging answer.

Is the minister prepared to announce soon the proposals of his government and give us the assurance of co-operation? What kind of proposal on the danger of those lay-offs can the minister make, not necessarily to the government of Quebec, but for the Canadian economy as a whole? Furthermore, is he prepared to assure the House that he will make every effort to come to an agreement on the proposal of the province of Quebec? I think these are two questions which should be answered by the Minister of Finance and as soon as possible.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, as to the second question put by the hon. member concerning shipyards, I did say that not only have we substantially increased the subsidy to shipbuilding but all the ships which are now in the shipyard of Marine Industries are financed practically outright by a federal agency, and yet the company itself is owned by the provincial government.

As for the first part of the question, I said that I was sending a letter to Mr. Parizeau and, of course, I took the trouble of going personally to Quebec City with Mr. McKeough two weeks before the budget in order to talk to him about this. I would be prepared to do so again. However, he did not ask to meet me. I made a counterproposal through my officials, and he said that it was not enough for him, so I will send him a letter as early as today or next Monday at the latest.

LAY-OFFS AT NORTHERN TELECOM PLANT IN QUEBEC

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. It relates to the lay-offs at Northern Telecom in the province of Quebec. I ask the minister, inasmuch as these jobs were developed from research and technology and are high-technology jobs that are being undertaken in other countries, what is the minister planning to do to keep in Canada the jobs that result from investment in research and technological advance?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it has been explained often that there is no export of jobs in the operation of Northern Telecom. It is a corporation that tries to expand its operation not only in Canada but abroad. I think it is a welcome development because it is quite important that Canadian technology and management be used internationally. Of course, because of the slow demand in that type of business in Canada at this time, Northern Telecom have temporary problems. But we hope that with recovery, orders will increase for the corporation and the people laid off will be re-employed.

Mr. Gillies: Mr. Speaker, it is certainly important that the products of Canadian research and technology be used abroad. We would be very happy if the government would do something to see that this has a reasonable opportunity of being fulfilled. One of the prime reasons it is difficult to get products of research and technology and the jobs resulting therefrom is that many countries have tariff barriers or internal agreements which provide that they will not accept the products of research and technology unless the work is done in their own country.

Will the Minister of Finance or the government give assurance to this House that in the GATT negotiations at Geneva which are now going on, the question of opening the borders of other countries to the importation of products of research and technology is an important condition that the Canadian government is putting forth in connection with non-tariff barriers for trade?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, in the negotiations going on at Geneva the government is pushing for the opening up of procurement policies by all governments. We think it is a very important element of freer trade in the world. We are asking for less protective policies in terms of procurement by all nations involved in the GATT negotiations.

Mr. Gillies: Mr. Speaker, will the Minister of Finance give us an assurance that the Canadian position at Geneva will be that we will not permit the importation of products of research and technology in Canada without a reciprocal agreement with countries exporting to Canada that they will give the same preference to Canadian products? Is that the position the Canadian government will take at Geneva?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I have just explained the goal which the federal government has for the negotiations. Of course, negotiations are going on at this time and we will see the results when they are completed, we hope at the end of the year.

Mr. Gillies: It will be too late then.

Mr. Chrétien: Exactly what we are doing is asking countries to be less protectionist in their procurement policies, which is the point I made earlier.

[Mr. Chrétien.]

GOVERNMENT ADMINISTRATION

REASON PRIME MINISTER NOT IN HOUSE—EXPENSES IN CONNECTION WITH TRIP

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Prime Minister. Will he confirm that the Prime Minister is not in the House today because he is attending a private election planning meeting with Liberal organizers and candidates in Toronto, and that he flew there at public expense in a government plane?

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the trip between Montreal and Toronto will be at the expense of the Liberal party.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I say to the Acting Prime Minister that the question was put in that direct way to get that kind of direct answer, and I thank him for it. Will the Acting Prime Minister assure the House that all subsequent flying around by the Prime Minister in this pre-election period will be done at the expense of the Liberal party and not at the expense of the public?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I explained very clearly that the trip between Montreal and Toronto was a recognized political trip and it will be paid for by the party.

● (1127)

However, as sometimes happens with every one of us, we have to combine both political and governmental work. Therefore, we judge accordingly. However, with regard to the expenses of travelling between Montreal and Toronto today, they are being paid by the Liberal party.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT CONSULTING PROVINCES ON ENACTING NEW CONSTITUTION

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations. Given the responsibilities delegated to the minister for improved relations between the federal government and the provinces, can the minister tell the House whether he has had continued talks with the officials responsible in each province on this subject, and can he also specify if there have been talks with the officials responsible in the province of Quebec for an in-depth study of a possible redrafting of the constitution, in order to maintain harmony in our country and preserve a Canada of which we can be proud?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the hon. member for his question and indicate to him that I have indeed been in contact with my provincial counterparts and even the premiers during the last few months. We have had the opportunity to discuss the matter raised by the hon. member. Unfortunately, as far as Quebec is concerned, I have not had the opportunity to discuss the constitutional question with my counterpart, for the simple and obvious reason that that government has clearly indicated through its official spokesmen, including the premier himself, that it is not interested in discussing a federal or federalist type of approach to Canadian problems, but that it merely wants separation of the country and the constitution of a country separate from the rest of Canada. Of course, the government does not endorse such an option and as far as we are concerned it is not even a negotiable option, so as long as the Quebec government maintains that position on the future of Canada and of Quebec, I fail to see on what grounds we could agree.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): My question, Mr. Speaker, was of course inspired by the statements made by the Quebec premier in Boston these past few days, where, according to newspaper reports, he stated that he has absolutely no intention of splitting up Canada. That is why I thought that the premier of Quebec and the federal minister responsible for federal-provincial relations had engaged in certain discussions. That being the case, however, is the minister willing, in light of the reply he has just given, to lend an ear to the least showing of good faith which may come from the Quebec government?

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, this government would obviously be very happy to see a positive evolution by the Parti Québécois and the Quebec government in their position, more particularly as it relates to the question of independence. Moreover, the hon. member knows very well that Premier Lévesque is a master in the skilful use of words, that he has a tendency to speak with extreme moderation when he is abroad and to spit fire as soon as he is back in Quebec. Nothing in what has been said, both in Quebec and abroad, indicates any change whatever in the fundamental position of the Quebec government about the future of Canada and more particularly about that of Quebec. It is obvious that the Quebec government has in no way modified its position as far as its objectives are concerned, these objectives being its political sovereignty in Quebec and the independence of Quebec, even at the price of some economic association with the rest of Canada, the conditions of which have not yet been determined. As far as we are concerned, we believe that position is absolutely unrealistic; it is not a reasonable solution to the problems of Canada and, in our view, it is unacceptable.

COMMONWEALTH GAMES

PROPOSED ATTENDANCE OF IDI AMIN AT GAMES

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, we are now approaching the Commonwealth Games to be held in the city of Edmonton. There has been a tremendous commitment by the president and committee of the organization for the games and the people of Edmonton, in particular the hon. member for Edmonton Centre, to make this an event of which Canadians will be proud. We now learn that Mr. Idi Amin, a dictator of Uganda, has stated that he will be present at the games in order to coach.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: We need no coaches for murder and terrorism in this country. I ask the hon. Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport whether the government will assure that he, in common with other criminals, will be denied admission to Canada?

● (1132)

Hon. Iona Campagnolo (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, some time ago my office became aware of the possibility that Mr. Amin might be coach of the Uganda boxing team—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Campagnolo: There has been no confirmation of this, however. I would inform the right hon. gentleman that this same ploy was used in connection with the Commonwealth Games held in Christchurch, New Zealand, in 1974. Mr. Amin did not appear at those games and I do not expect he will appear at ours. However, as my colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, has stated in the House, if such an eventuality should become a fact we shall deal with it at that time. I would like to join with the right hon. gentleman in praising the people of Edmonton for the absolutely superb job that has been done on the preparations for the Commonwealth Games.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Campagnolo: I am most pleased to see the very great pleasure that Canadians from every part of Canada take in sharing in those games. They are presently sharing in an amount in the order of $40 million.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am glad to have the enthusiastic support which I knew would be forthcoming from the minister. Now I would like to ask my supplementary question. Amin having stated that he is coming, will the Government of Canada informally advise him that he will not be welcome here, so we will not have that pest entering this country?

MANPOWER

UNEMPLOYMENT RATE IN CONSTITUENCY OF PERTH-WILMOT

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): In the absence of the Minister of Employment and Immigration, Mr. Speaker, may I direct my question to his chief statistician, the Minister of Agriculture, who said in the House during the budget debate that there was less than 2 per cent unemployment in the constituency of Perth-Wilmot?

Since no official statistics are available by constituency—though under present government secrecy, such statistics may be available to ministers—since that constituency comes under region 57 which had an unemployment rate of 8.2 per cent, up 44 per cent, and since the major Manpower office has a "live file" register showing an increase in the number seeking work of 38 per cent over the figure of a year ago, would the Minister of Agriculture, as the statistician for Manpower, explain to the House the basis on which he said the unemployment rate in Perth-Wilmot was less than 2 per cent?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member knows full well that I obtained some of my facts from a conversation with him when he was bragging about the young people in Perth-Wilmot all having jobs. Most of the statistics I got were his own statistics. If his statistics are so inaccurate, perhaps I should not use them in the future, Mr. Speaker. I note the hon. member did not quote the statistics I gave about the incomes of the people in Perth-Wilmot. The farming population there has one of the highest incomes of any constituency in rural Canada. I am surprised he has not asked a question about those figures also.

Mr. Jarvis: I hasten to assure the minister that my statistics are a great deal more accurate than those he gave in the House on Tuesday night. In supporting the very excellent situation which admittedly exists in Perth-Wilmot—nothing approaching the minister's statistics—I wonder, since the minister attributed this happy situation to government policy, whether he would agree that a 44 per cent increase in unemployment and a 38 per cent increase in the number of people registered for work and unable to find it—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Medicine Hat.

AGRICULTURE

SUGAR BEET STABILIZATION PAYMENT FOR 1976 CROP

Mr. Bert Hargrave (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture in connection with sugar beets. It is almost two years since the 1976 Canadian sugar beet crop was seeded. In view of a clear indication from the minister's department and the stabilization board that a pay-out would be forthcoming, will the hon. gentleman indicate when the sugar beet stabilization payment for the 1976 crop will be made, and what will be the amount?

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I signed a document and a news release the other day announcing the payment. I do not know whether it has gone out yet or whether the media saw fit to use it. I can say, however, that our support price for beets in Canada, as I am sure the hon. member is well aware, is $6 more a ton than it is in the United States. It is probably one of the best programs in the world. The marketplace has returned practically all that is needed by producers. The payment, if I remember correctly, was based upon three different sections in Canada, not just Alberta. It was based on three provinces—Alberta, Manitoba and Quebec—and in all instances it was less than $1 a ton.

Mr. Hargrave: A short supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does the minister recall what the specific pay-out was for Alberta?

Mr. Whelan: Because of the economic conditions which existed in the sugar market and the return producers were able to obtain for themselves, I am happy to say the pay-out is not very big. They got their return from the marketplace, where it should come from.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CANADA-U.S. NEGOTIATIONS ON HIGHWAY-USE TAX

Mr. G. H. Whittaker (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs, but in his absence I will ask it of the acting minister. In view of the concern expressed to the Canadian government by the Canadian trucking industry about the unfair application of the United States federal highway-use tax, in view of the understanding Canadian truckers have that External Affairs would raise this issue with the appropriate United States authorities, and in light of the pending requirement that the United States federal highway-use tax has to be renewed by congress, would the acting minister inform the House and the country what steps the department has taken to raise this issue with the American authorities, and what stage the negotiations have reached?

Mr. Maurice Dupras (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I will take the question as notice. I am sure the minister will wish to deal with it early next week.

REGULATIONS FOR GUN CONTROL LEGISLATION

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. In order for the law to be obeyed and respected, free from any ambiguity so that citizens will know what the law is, and now that more than a year has elapsed since parliament approved the gun legislation, have the orders in council called for in that bill to clear up the ambiguity in the law been approved and published?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, this matter really lies within the jurisdiction of the Solicitor General who is administering these sections. There are, however, no ambiguities in the law which need to be cleared up by legislation.

Mr. Woolliams: The minister says there is no ambiguity in the law. I asked him two days ago a question with reference to the difficulties encountered by bona fide gun collectors who are trying to get certificates. I read from a police report according to which various citizens had gone to the police detachments to get their certificates. According to the letter, the commissioner had received legal advice from the Department of Justice that he lacks legal competence to deal with these applications, and because of the way the law is presently written, if those applications are not approved by January 1, 1978, they cannot be made at all. I wish the minister would comment on this subject, because we are getting hundreds of letters with reference to this deficiency in the law as it now stands.

Mr. Basford: The letter from the commissioner which the hon. member mentioned refers to the statement that under the law he is unable to process applications for the new registration of machine guns. Under the legislation it was made clear that owners of machine guns registered prior to January 1 were bona fide collectors of machine guns, but that thereafter there will be no additional machine gun collectors.

There are some cases before the courts relating to the interpretation of the statute. In one case about which I know, someone imported 500 machine guns before the end of the year and endeavoured to register them. The application was not processed after January 1.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I have some sympathy with reference to machine guns; they are called automatic weapons. However, I am advised that there are no orders in council approved by either the government or by the provinces, which also have to approve orders in council. Would the minister assure us that no prosecutions will take place under this act until the orders in council are drawn up? That is what the farmers, trappers and Indians are asking; they want to know where they stand on this matter. There has been a hiatus of over a year. Nobody knows what the law is. How can we obey the law if we do not know what it is?

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, I am not aware that farmers, trappers and Indians want machine guns.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Oral Questions

LAY-OFFS AT NORTHERN TELECOM PLANT—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO PREVENT

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. It relates to a couple of questions asked earlier in the question period with respect to Northern Telecom. This is a rather sad story. Northern Telecom laid off approximately 2,500 workers in the past year and a half. The company has now announced that it will be laying off another 1,000 workers. I would ask the minister what he has done so far to prevent these lay-offs.

Hon. Jack H. Horner (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, Northern Telecom is making great efforts to export many of its products and we are assisting in every way possible. We believe that the more the company can export, the more employment it can create in Canada.

FINANCE

TAX CONCESSIONS TO NORTHERN TELECOM

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, the minister should have said that Northern Telecom is exporting jobs, not products: that is a well known fact.

I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. It is well known that tax concessions given to Northern Telecom in the last several years have been used to build plants abroad, and that has transferred jobs out of Canada. Has the minister called Mr. Scrivener? Will the minister bring Mr. Scrivener into his office to tell him that he had better keep the jobs in Canada or there will be no more tax concessions?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I hope the hon. member will be able to substantiate his accusation that the money has been used to create jobs elsewhere, because the tax concessions which have been given to the private sector have been for expansion in Canada. I think that kind of accusation which is not based on facts should be substantiated. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and I are trying to help any industry to export, but I explained in my previous answer that the lay-offs at the present time are because of slow demand for that type of equipment within Canada. The jobs which have been affected are those involving exports.

Mr. Blackburn: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce to get their act together and to investigate what Northern Telecom is doing in Turkey at the present time. That is where the company is making components for telephones which should be made in Canada. Would the minister investigate the Turkish operation of Northern Telecom?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I would like to look into that matter. Of course, when a company exports, it signs agreements with local industries. Perhaps that is one of the arrangements. But the technology, engineering, and so forth, which is being exported is Canadian. That is the way we proceed with foreign trade. Sometimes we have to share the work with the country to which we are exporting.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

REFERENCE OF IJC REPORT TO HOUSE COMMITTEE

Mr. Dean Whiteway (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State (Environment) and it has to do with the Garrison diversion project. Can the minister tell the House whether the government has any intention of referring the final report of the International Joint Commission to the appropriate standing committee of this House, and does the government intend to refer the Andras plan to the IJC?

Hon. Len Marchand (Minister of State (Environment)): Mr. Speaker, I will have to investigate. I have not yet seen the Andras plan. I have read accounts of it but I have not seen the actual plan. I am not sure that this is the final position of the United States government with respect to the Garrison diversion, but I would be very willing to have the committee study the IJC report. There is nothing wrong with that.

Mr. Whiteway: Mr. Speaker, I want the minister to be clear on this. Is the minister telling the House and the Canadian people that he has not yet seen the Andras plan? Has he not yet seen that counterproposal to the IJC? The whole Garrison diversion question is now some four years old. Would the minister undertake to give an answer to this House on Monday? Will he look at the Andras plan over the weekend and report the government's response on Monday? This is a long-standing problem. This is incredible.

Mr. Marchand: Mr. Speaker, I said I have not seen the actual document, but I have received accounts of it. I have been briefed on the Andras plan and my officials have indicated their concern and opposition to it. The IJC plan was very acceptable to us because it met all the concerns we had. We could have lived very easily with the report made by the IJC.

An hon. Member: You are six months late.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

FORECAST OF UNEMPLOYMENT FIGURES AND REAL GROWTH

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. The Conference Board in Canada has revised its unemployment figure for 1978. The board is forecasting unemployment for this year to be 8.5 per cent. The board forecasts an unemployment rate of 16.3 per cent for Newfoundland, 11.3 per cent for Quebec and 13.5 per cent for New Brunswick. Would the minister indicate the level of unemployment forecast in his April 10 budget?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have replied many times that we do not have a precise figure for unemployment in the next fiscal year because it is too difficult to predict in view of the participation rate over which we have no control. I laid out other information in the budget speech. The Conference Board made those predictions before the provincial and federal budgets were out.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, the Conference Board has revised its estimate of real growth in the country down to 3.9 per cent. Would the minister indicate his current estimate as of April 21 with respect to real growth in Canada in 1978?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, on budget night I predicted that the real growth of the gross national product in Canada for 1978 would be close to 5 per cent.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Provencher.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, the minister to whom I want to direct my question has left.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

WAR DISABILITY PENSIONS' ADHERENCE TO 1973 FORMULA

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Is the minister's department preparing legislation, to redeem his department's credibility, for presentation to this House which would make the 1973 formula of mandatory application in the calculation of disability pensions for war veterans? In addition, are any proposals coming forward to accord prorated pensions to widows of those who are drawing pensions?

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member refers to Hansard he will find that on probably 17 occasions I have made reference to this matter and told the House just what the position of the government is.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I asked the minister whether there is any legislation coming forward because I am sure the House would undertake to give it rapid passage. There are people in dire need. Is the minister refusing to bring forward legislation: is that what he is saying?

Mr. MacDonald (Cardigan): Mr. Speaker, if anything of this nature happens, it will be available to all members of the House.

INDUSTRY

REQUEST GOVERNMENT ACT TO STOP EROSION OF INDUSTRIAL BASE

Mr. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Large segments of our electronics industry, such as television research and production facilities, which are the largest ones, have discontinued Canadian operations. Northern Telecom, which has been "the" private Canadian industry in terms of research and development, is now experiencing difficulties.

● (1152)

Will the minister tell the House what new action the government will take to stop the erosion of Canada's industrial base, which Mr. Shepherd, director of the Science Council of Canada, estimates is happening at the rate of 10,000 jobs per month?

Hon. Jack H. Horner (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, this afternoon we will be asking for speedy passage of the Export Development Corporation bill. Last year, through the Export Development Corporation and its assistance in exporting goods produced in Canada, we created or maintained 200,000 man-year jobs alone. Thus, it is very important for the House to pass that piece of legislation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Howie: Mr. Speaker, I thank the minister for his answer. I draw to the minister's attention the answer he gave in response to a question I asked some time ago, that representations were made to auto manufacturers to carry out a proportionate share of their research and development in Canada amounting, by some estimates, to $250 million a year, which is not done here now. Can the minister report any success in this matter? When, and what companies, will commence such operations?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, we are continuing to work with the Big Three in the automotive industry. We have set up a sector study on the entire question of the automotive industry. I hope to be able to announce shortly research and development plans for the automotive industry in Canada.

COMMUNICATIONS EQUIPMENT—STEPS TO CORRECT TRADE IMBALANCE

Mr. Bill Kempling (Halton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. It follows on the questions posed by my colleagues, the hon. member for Don Valley and the hon. member for York-Sunbury. Is the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce aware that last year Canada imported $1,251 million worth of communications equipment and that we exported $39 million worth? In other words, we had a net deficit of $1,212 million. What is the minister going to do about it? It is a significant market.

Hon. Jack H. Horner (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I am doing two things in particular about our manufacturing industry. Just as the hon. member did with one particular item, the $26 billion item of manufactured goods imported into this country is being analysed by my department. We are studying who buys them, what they are used for and why they cannot be produced in Canada. We are about to launch a program to encourage and to educate Canadians as to the value of buying Canadian goods. It would create jobs and improve the basic standard of living of all Canadians if we could procure more of our equipment in Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Kempling: Mr. Speaker, can the minister tell us if there is any mechanism of which he is aware in the statistics-gathering mess in the government to indicate whether the results of research and development policies of the government in fact go out of the country? When we look at $26 billion in imports of high-technology products and the amount of research and development which has been done in Canada in the last ten years, certainly a great deal of it is going out of the country and not staying in the country as it should. What can the minister tell us about that? What mechanisms does the government have?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, we have a Patents Office. The Canadian government encourages Canadian manufacturers to patent the results of their R & D. Naturally, the patent only lasts so long and then it can be used by other countries.

Mr. Kempling: That is the problem.

POST OFFICE

ALLEGATION INCREASE IN POSTAL RATES ILLEGAL

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. It arises out of an answer which he gave yesterday, as reported at page 4687 of Hansard, which reads in part as follows:

—the present and past postmasters general have acted on the advice of the Department of Justice that the use of section 13 of the Financial Administration Act is a proper and valid use of that section—

Is the minister aware that the former postmaster general, the hon. member for Papineau, in 1974 said that he would not proceed to raise rates until he had an opportunity to amend the Post Office Act. His successor, the Hon. Bryce Mackasey, in 1976 was the first to use the Financial Administration Act but he realized he was operating contrary to the will of parliament and said that he would move retroactively to regularize what he was doing by this irregular procedure. The present Postmaster General—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the hon. member has a question, perhaps he can come to it quickly; we are running out of time.

Mr. Dinsdale: The previous postmaster general said that he would be amending the Post Office Act to make his action regular. Why is the Minister of Justice advising ministers to break the law, and in particular to circumvent the rights of parliament which is the main charge made in the fourth report of the Standing Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments that was concurred in unanimously by the House?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, none of those statements in any way affect the statement I made yesterday. There is more than one way of doing something. One way—

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Legal or illegal.

Mr. Basford: —both of which are legal, and one of which may well be preferred by the hon. member or the committee. That is a matter of opinion and debate. But as was indicated yesterday, it does not affect the legality of the action taken.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the Minister of Justice does not even realize—and yesterday the Postmaster General indicated that he did not realize—that he is violating the fundamental right of parliament in the advice he has given—

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): And the law.

Mr. Dinsdale: Yes, and the law. In view of this, would he now table the judicial opinion which is supposed to support his illegal activity or his illegal advice?

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated yesterday, successive postmasters general have acted on the advice of the Department of Justice. I take it the hon. member wants the legal opinion upon which that is based, not the judicial opinion. As the hon. member well knows, for the reasons once very eloquently stated in the House by the hon. member for Peace River, governments do not table their legal opinions.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

FUNDING OF NORTHERN FLOOD COMMITTEE IN MANITOBA

Mr. Cecil Smith (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. The northern flood committee in Manitoba was led to believe by the previous minister of Indian affairs and northern development that funding would be available for a transitional period after the flood agreement was ratified. The agreement was ratified on March 16, 1978. Will the minister give a firm commitment now to fund the northern flood committee during the implementation stages of that agreement?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I should like to inform the hon. member that discussions are ongoing at this time among the members of the flood committtee and the regional director of Indian affairs in Manitoba. In fact, they are discussing a proposal for funding. I will review any commitments made by my predecessor and if they are there I will certainly live up to them.

Mr. Smith (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, will the minister meet the request of the northern flood committee and meet personally with them at his earliest convenience?

Mr. Faulkner: I will look into that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

MOTION OF CONDEMNATION RESPECTING ATROCITIES IN CAMBODIA

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I find it amusing that when I rise, hon. members opposite try to end the question period.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: My question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister, but I will wait until the House has quietened down and the shouting has stopped.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: As the Acting Prime Minister will know, on April 7 the House of Commons unanimously passed a motion moved by the hon. member for Matane and seconded by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton expressing the horror and condemnation of this House at the murder of some two million men, women and children in Cambodia. The Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs at that time indicated that the extent of the action the Government of Canada was prepared to take was to have the matter discussed at the United Nations Commission on Human Rights. That is good as far as it goes, but obviously it does not go far enough to give expression to the horror felt by this parliament.

As a matter of policy, will the Acting Prime Minister give us a commitment now that the government will put this item on the agenda of the fall session of the United Nations?

● (1202)

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as this problem comes within the jurisdiction of my colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, I will let him reply to this question next week. Because the proposition of the hon.

member does not call for action before the fall, we can wait a few days.

PUBLIC SERVICE

REQUEST PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSION REPORT BE TABLED IN HOUSE

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the President of the Treasury Board which arises from reports a few days ago on the report of the Public Service Commission to the D'Avignon committee which is looking into personnel management and the merit principle in the public service. This report was intended to be made public shortly after it was made. Public reports indicate that now that a federal election is in the wind, the Public Service Commission is keeping the proposals under its hat for fear they will become political footballs. Would the government be prepared to concur in the tabling of that report in the House of Commons?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, the Public Service Commission reports to parliament and might or might not be properly influenced by government attitudes toward it. However, the chairman of the Public Service Commission has indicated that the facts as the hon. member has stated them in his question are essentially correct, and this is by its decision, not by the government's.

I also gather that this decision was based upon some implied advice by the parliamentary committee at an earlier stage to the effect that this question be kept out of the political realm. If the hon. member disagrees, I have no particular objection one way or the other. I think probably the proper way to do this is to have the chairman of the Public Service Commission note these views and make a decision. We could not, of course, impose the government's view upon the Public Service Commission, but I will convey that view to the chairman.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, for the minister's benefit, let me say that the task force referred to by the joint parliamentary committee has now had part of the Public Service Commission's submission given to it and that part is public. I am sure that if the minister, on behalf of the government, joined with me—or I am prepared to join with the minister if he is willing—in advising the Public Service Commission that there would be no objection to this report being tabled in parliament, particularly now that it appears the election they feared is not so imminent, the Public Service Commission would be prepared to do this.

Would the minister undertake, on behalf of the government, to join with me and others in the House who are concerned about these secret plans for the public service, which will not be released before an election, in advising the Public Service Commission that it should release and table the report in the House of Commons?

Mr. Andras: We will give that suggestion consideration, Mr. Speaker. I do not think the hon. member intended to indicate otherwise, but if he did I think we should be clear that this is a decision of the Public Service Commission and not of the government. Therefore, the suggestion of secret plans and that sort of thing and the implications should not be addressed to the government. This is a decison of the Public Service Commission.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Are you willing to go to the Public Service Commission with me?

Mr. Basford: They are not accountable to you two people.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): We could ask.

Mr. Andras: I will reiterate what my seatmate has said: they are not accountable to us. Under the circumstances, I will listen very carefully and give great consideration to the suggestion of the hon. member, but that is as far as I can go at the moment.

PRIVILEGE

MISS BÉGIN—UNPARLIAMENTARY LANGUAGE USED BY HON. MEMBER FOR GRENVILLE-CARLETON

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I should like to rise on a question of privilege and I refer to page 4690 of the English version of the House of Commons Debates of yesterday where the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker), whose name appears in Hansard, is reported to have said, when speaking of me during an answer to a question, "She is a hypocrite". I do not think that is considered to be parliamentary language. I checked the meaning in the dictionary, and I do not understand at all to what the hon. member is making reference. I should like him to withdraw the remark or to explain it. If he makes an explanation, I should like the opportunity to answer. None of my colleagues can understand why he should use such language, and I would like him to withdraw it.

Some hon. Members: Shame, shame!

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have checked the precedents this morning in respect of the use of the word "hypocrite". It was drawn to my attention that it was on the record of the House. That is unparliamentary language, and I withdraw it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

MR. WOOLLIAMS—ANSWER GIVEN BY MINISTER OF JUSTICE DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege, and I am sure the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) would not deliberately misinterpret my words. When I used the term "guns" today I am sure he knows what I meant. When I was talking about regulations in connection with the act which governs the new owners of long guns, guns used by farmers, ranchers, fishermen, and trappers, I suggested the regulations had not been drafted. That act has been law for almost a year. I have looked into this matter and there are no regulations which have been approved by the provinces or the Minister of Justice. In other words, there is a law on the books without any explanation or understanding.

For example, in respect of the definition of a bona fide gun collector, we have no idea in law whether this has reference to one gun, two guns, or twenty guns. When these people apply for permits in order to get certificates they are told quite properly by the commissioner he does not have the authority to issue the certificates. If the certificates are not issued before January 1, 1978, or at least applications are received, gun collectors can never get certificates. That is what I was putting to the minister.

We have waited a whole year for this from the government, as we did in respect of regulations regarding gas and oil. These people are subject to prosecution probably because of the illegal possession of weapons of any kind, in the absence of those regulations. The minister misinterpreted my question to be related to machine guns. The Minister of Justice knows I was not talking about machine guns, but he used that answer deliberately to cover up his own procrastination.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the hon. member was not talking about machine guns, but the letter from the commissioner, from which he has quoted in this House on two occasions, is a letter relating to the registration of machine guns, in which the commissioner makes it very clear that the law states that after January 1, 1978, new collectors of machine guns cannot register what are now absolutely prohibited weapons. The law is also quite clear that bona fide collectors of weapons other than machine guns can register their guns. The RCMP is clear on what is a bona fide collector for that purpose, namely, someone whose record, on checking, does not contain some adverse comment, and nothing is known to the local registrar of firearms that would indicate the information on the application, as a collector, is false.

On the third point the hon. member raises, and I am surprised that the hon. member is not aware of this, having sat as a member of the committee studying that bill, it has been made very clear by the government, by myself, and by the Solicitor General (Mr. Blais), that the portion of the law relating to firearms' acquisition certificates in respect of long guns, rifles and shotguns does not come into effect until January 1, 1979 and, therefore, there are no orders in council to be passed. Farmers, trappers and hunters who want to go out and buy rifles or shotguns can do so now under the law.

MR. STEVENS—ALLEGATION CONCERNING COMMITTEE APPEARANCE BY MINISTER OF FINANCE

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question of privilege arises from the fact that, in spite of the minister's main estimates being introduced in the House on February 22, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) has refused to appear before the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs to give an accounting to that committee.

Your predecessor, Mr. Speaker, in a similar situation, took it upon himself to send a letter to the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization, requesting that committee to review the matter and determine whether there is some way a minister can be required by parliament to appear before the appropriate committee to answer in respect of his estimates.

This is particularly pertinent today because, in response to questions is this House, and I had only one supplementary, the minister made it very clear that he has presented a budget to this House and the government does not know what unemployment level to anticipate in the current year. Surely, Mr. Speaker, a minister who makes that kind of admission to the House should be virtually required to go before the appropriate committee of this House and give an accounting, not only with respect to his main estimates, but with respect to how he could conceivably be asking this House to accept a budget, as he has done, without having the basis of that unemployment level they foresee for Canadians. My formal question is, Mr. Speaker, that you consider at least sending a letter to the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization pointing out the fact that we have not been able to get the Minister of Finance to appear before the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

This morning he was tentatively supposed to appear. He flatly refused, saying that he did not have time to go before that committee, yet he had time to attend a session in Vancouver. I would suggest he should make the time to spend at least 60 to 90 minutes before the appropriate committee of this House to account for his estimates.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, again we see how this member of parliament can be dishonest with the House of Commons. My parliamentary secretary stated that I would appear next Tuesday night, and I have accepted that, but the hon. member rose in this House this week again to throw some cheap shots because I was presiding over an international meeting in Vancouver.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: There were 2,000 delegates, ministers of finance from the Latin American countries and so on, and I was performing my duty as Minister of Finance.

Mr. Stevens: You should have been here.

Mr. Chrétien: Because we on this side of the House can be gentlemen occasionally, I invited the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) to sit in my place and represent Canada at this conference. He is more of a gentleman than the hon. member.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Chrétien: The hon. member seems to think that my three-day absence was a very long absence. It was probably longer than the life of the Western Bank of Canada before it went bankrupt. I did go to the meeting because I was representing Canada in my responsibility as Minister of Finance and as governor of the InterAmerican Development Bank, for which I was elected chairman of the Board of Governors in the coming year.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: I know that the hon. member will be at the meeting on Tuesday to ask his thousands of questions that will make no bloody sense!

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, you gave him time to make all sorts of insinuations on a point where he was completely wrong.

I had already indicated when I would come before the committee, and it was not necessary for the hon. member to get up in this House and accuse me of refusing, when he already knew that I would be there. Or, if he did not know, it is because he is not aware of what is going on in front of the committee, perhaps because he is a part-time member of the opposition—I do not know.

I will be there on Tuesday, Mr. Speaker, because with the kind of policies they are proposing we will not have an $11.5 billion deficit but it will be $20 billion, and if he becomes minister of finance the fate of Canada will perhaps be the same as the Western Bank.

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: Again the Liberals opposite, particularly the hon. member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), whose major contribution to debate is to shout from his seat, are trying to shout me down.

Mr. Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): I did not say a word.

Mr. Clark: What has happened on this question of privilege is that the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens), who is responsible to this party as the critic on economic matters, quite properly stood in his place to express concern that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) for Canada at a time of the most serious economic crisis in the country, has refused to this point to come before the appropriate committee of the House of Commons to discuss his main estimates. The minister tells us today that—and my colleague from York-Simcoe has informed me that this is the first time that he, as a member of that committee, has been advised—he intends to appear on Tuesday night. Well, that is fine, and we will see if he keeps that engagement, because he failed to keep the engagement this morning.

The point raised by my colleague was a request to you, Mr. Speaker, on a matter of the greatest of importance to the ability of this House of Commons to do its job in examining estimates and to try to hold this government accountable. I regret to say that it is not only this minister who refuses to come to committees, but it has become a pattern with that government on its estimates. It is a very appropriate request that the hon. member for York-Simcoe has made.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: Please do not try to shout me down again. I can understand that a party that is in full retreat from calling an election wants to shout, but I wish that they would not try to interrupt debate in the House in this way.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, it is a fundamental right and an obligation of this House to review estimates. It is particularly important in relation to the economy when we are in the state of crisis that we are. There is a precedent of which you have been reminded by my colleague from York-Simcoe and he has asked you to consider taking very seriously that precedent.

The Minister of Finance, as has too often been his practice, instead of dealing directly with matters which might have advanced confidence in the Canadian economy, has resorted instead to the inference of malicious intent, personal attacks and the debasing of debate in this House of Commons. That is why I rise. The business of the Parliament of Canada and the necessity of confidence in the Canadian economy are too important to be put aside by the partisan game-playing of the Minister of Finance.

What I would like you to do, Mr. Speaker, is to give most serious consideration to a very serious request put forward by my colleague from York-Simcoe, and you act as previous Speakers have acted in similar circumstances when previous ministers refused to carry out their responsibilities and come to committee.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We have had contributions from the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens), by the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien), and the hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark). I do not believe this matter need be discussed any further.

The Minister of Finance stood in his place today and said that he was not able to attend the committee meeting this morning and that he has indicated to the committee, and confirmed in the House, that he will be at the next meeting, which is Tuesday night. That closes the matter as far as any procedural difficulty is concerned.

I am unable to take any action in a situation in which the minister says that he has indicated that he is prepared to come to the committee at its next meeting and that is the first opportunity he has had to be there. Therefore, from a procedural point of view, the matter is closed and ought not to go any further.

Ways and Means

MR. LUMLEY—NOTICE OF MINISTER'S APPEARANCE

Mr. Ed Lumley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I do not wish to further this debate, but the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Clark) made a very erroneous statement when he said the opposition parties were not aware that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) agreed to come on Tuesday, April 25. At our last meeting of the steering committee of the standing commiteee I stated emphatically, while the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) was present, that the minister would be available on April 25, and tentatively available on April 21, which was this morning. The minister could not make it this morning, but he has re-emphasized the fact that he would be there April 25. The statement of the Leader of the Opposition, Mr. Speaker, is totally erroneous.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We can go on at great length here, and argue this matter, but we are clearly into questions of debate. The procedural question raised initially by the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens), and contributed to by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) was totally answered by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) when he stood in the House and stated that he would be at the meeting on Tuesday night. There is no further procedural argument or remedy that can be advanced at this time.

MR. STEVENS—MINISTER'S COMMENT

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I have a new question of privilege. During the course of his remarks the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) said that I had acted dishonestly. I would ask him to withdraw his comment because I believe that it is unparliamentary language.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If my memory serves me correctly, the minister said that this indicates the manner in which the member can act dishonestly, or can be dishonest with parliament. However, I will check the record to see if in fact he said there had been dishonesty in the circumstances.

WAYS AND MEANS

CUSTOMS TARIFF

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, in accordance with Standing Order 60 I request you to designate an order of the day for consideration of the Notice of Ways and Means Motion with regard to the Customs Tariff, tabled Monday, April 10, 1978.

[Mr. Speaker.]

PETITIONS

REQUEST FOR IMPROVED POSTAL SERVICE IN CONSTITUENCY OF EDMONTON WEST

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I have here a petition in the following terms:

THE PETITION of the three hundred-fifty (350) undersigned residents of the City of Edmonton in the Province of Alberta who now avail themselves of their ancient and undoubted right thus to present a grievance common to your Petitioners in the certain assurance that your honourable House will therefor provide a remedy,

The petition goes on to show:

THAT there is grave dissatisfaction with the present method of mail delivery from the site box system in the constituency of Edmonton West and more particularly in those areas west of 170th Street;

THAT those residents of such areas now pay tax levies for postal service at the same level as do other citizens in the said constituency who receive door to door delivery and to that extent your petitioners feel that they are being discriminated against;

WHEREFORE your petitioners humbly pray that the Government of Canada give immediate consideration the institution of door to door postal delivery in those areas of the constituency of Edmonton West not now served which in all respects meet the normal requirements—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wanted to let the hon. member go along enough to describe the petition, which he is entitled to do. He is not entitled, as a right, to read it. I would certainly not want to encourage any practice whereby those bringing petitions into the House would consider it a right to read the terms of the petition. The hon. member is entitled to present the petition and describe it accurately, which he did in that particular way on this occasion. I want to stress again that I would not want that to be taken as a precedent that those bringing petitions into the House for application and approval would be entitled to read them in every instance.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I would simply say that the terms of the petition are as brief as any other description that could be made. I hereby present the petition.

AMENDMENT TO AUTHORIZE ISSUANCE OF CERTAIN GOLD COINS

Hon. Marcel Lessard (for the Minister of Supply and Services) moved that Bill C-39, to amend the Currency and Exchange Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates.

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to allow the Governor in Council to authorize the Royal Canadian Mint to strike and issue gold coins, to determine their face value and specify the maximum mumber of gold coins to be struck in a year.

In 1977 the Royal Canadian Mint was authorized to issue a special 22 carat gold coin with a $100 face value to commemorate the 25th anniversary of Her Majesty. In only four months, 176,000 gold coins were sold for an amount of $24.6 million.

[English]

The world annual market of numismatic coins is estimated at about $1 billion, and in 1977 the Mint sales were more than $31 million. The government believes the Mint should continue its efforts to gain for Canada a substantial share of the world market.

[Translation]

Such a project could yield such benefits as creation of jobs at the Royal Canadian Mint and better profitability of production services; creation of jobs outside the mint, for example for the production of related products like blanks and cases; creation of jobs in mining and related industries; and improvement of our balance of payments through the sale of coins abroad.

[English]

I trust these advantages will commend themselves to hon. members opposite and that any difficulties they may find with the bill will be resolved in a spirit of mutual co-operation at committee stage.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I expect there will be considerable difficulties from members on this side in connection with this bill because of the possible wide powers it takes away from the House of Commons and gives to the cabinet.

This would not be the first time we have seen attempts by this government to reduce the powers of the House of Commons. I do not have to think back very far to remember the last tally we had on orders in council issued by this government. The last annual count was something like 3,300. I think we have to compare the number of orders in council used in this parliament with the number used in the British House of Commons. There, for the same period, 12 orders in council were issued, compared to over 3,000 issued by this government. It may be that through familiarity with the use of orders in council, Canadians, and even Canadian parliamentarians, have been lulled into a sense of complacence and think there is nothing wrong with this.

I ask hon. members to recall a few short years ago when we had a lengthy debate in this House on the right of the government to issue these very coins that are under consideration. The reason for that debate was obvious. Members of the opposition were quite concerned that this kind of tampering with the coinage and the money system in Canada should be taking place. I only refer to this to indicate to the House the seriousness of the measure before us.

I am sorry that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) has left the chamber. He was party to another move by this government when it attempted to remove the importance and power of this House of Commons. I am referring to an action taken within the last two months by the Minister of Justice who, while in Vancouver, called a press conference for the express purpose of announcing a matter of serious concern to British Columbians. It was a matter which should have been announced in this House, not by the Minister of Justice but by the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Guay). I am referring to the matter of the importation of and duties on wide flange steel beams which are so widely used in steel fabrication in British Columbia.

The government has imposed a tariff on imported steel in order to help eastern steel producers. That move was probably understandable, Mr. Speaker, but the government had not thought it through to see how that kind of a move would affect the industry in British Columbia. It was established that the B.C. steel fabricators were not using eastern Canadian produced steel in any event. Freight rates and other factors made it non-competitive with steel that was available from overseas.

I do not mean to debate the steel issue under this bill, but I am stressing the fact that instead of the then minister of national revenue getting up in the House and saying that the government had decided to remove temporarily the tariff on imported wide flange steel, the government took that power away from the House and sent the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) to Vancouver to hold a press conference at noon Ottawa time on a Friday, which effectively closed off any possibility of debate until Monday afternoon of the following week.

In the normal circumstances the Minister of National Revenue would have made a statement in the House. There would have been an opportunity for reply from this side and from other opposition parties, and then questions on the matter, so that it would have been fully aired. As it was, the Minister of Justice was sent to Vancouver to do it. But not only that, he had indicated in less than a frank manner after the cabinet meeting the night before that no decision had been reached on that matter. Furthermore, he indicated to the press conference in Vancouver that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) or the then minister of national revenue—I am not sure which one it was—would be making a simultaneous statement in the House of Commons. That, of course, did not happen. The only statement which was made in that case was made by the Minister of Justice in Vancouver.

Another reference which we can all remember involving the removal of powers from this House of Commons was the holding of a first minister's conference by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in Ottawa which took place down the street from this building. This conference, held during the current session of this parliament, took away from the media and from Canadians the importance of the business of this House. We can excuse the Prime Minister—I guess we can get along without him from time to time—but in this case there were more ministers than just the Prime Minister absent, which curtailed the answering of questions. As well, other members had to absent themselves from the House in order to observe the conference. I draw that to your attention, Mr. Speaker, simply as an example of attempts by the government to take away powers of this House.

Who knows at this point what the intentions are of this particular bill or what powers will be taken away from the House and given to the cabinet under this bill? What is the bill actually telling us? It allows the gold content of coins to vary. It allows the cabinet to determine the number of coins to be issued. The parliamentary secretary has set out briefly and accurately the intent of the bill. However, I would like to look at the explanatory notes to the bill, shown on page 2. With regard to clause 1 it says:

> This amendment would allow the Governor in Council to authorize the issue of gold coins of different denominations and would remove the requirement that the value of the gold in the coins be equal to the amount that appears as the denomination of the coin.

What will that do to our coinage? Already under the Olympic Coin Act we have a situation where we have two categories of gold coins. In each category the gold coin has a face value of $100. We find the 14-karat gold coin contains 7.77 grams of pure gold, whereas the 22-karat gold coin contains 15.55 grams of pure gold. I do not know what reliance people can be expected to put on the value of coinage. Here are two coins both having a face value of $100 but each containing a different quantity of gold. We do not know whether it is the intention of the government to issue a Kruger rand kind of coin with a known quantity of gold, for instance one ounce.

We can refer to some other actions of the government to illustrate that the government does not let us know exactly what it has in mind. However, before I do that I want to refer to the Olympic gold coin program and in particular with regard to the advertising which was used to market the coins. A buyer was given the impression that this investment would pay handsomely within a short period of time. The advertisement states:

Seven reasons why the Canadian Olympic 22 karat Gold Proof Coin is one of the most unusual coins in history . . . . . and why you should reserve yours now!

Those words appear in large print at the top of the advertisement. Following that the seven reasons are given why these coins will increase in value. Then it opines "Yesterday's Olympic Coins are today's treasures." Then a table is given which is headed "Value of Olympic Coins—The Historic World Record". The impression created is that these coins are a good investment and will increase in value. In very small print at the bottom of the page in something like we call shyster print out in my part of the country, it says, "No assurance can be given that any particular coins will appreciate in value". It is even hard for me to read these words under the bright lights of the House here.

With that kind of advertising and the kind of content we see here, I hope that we on this side of the House can be forgiven for wondering what it is that the government has up its sleeve. I have a comment here about these particular coins:

Critics point out that the coins do not contain sufficient precious metal ($35.50 and $71 worth of pure gold respectively), to justify their face value, nor are they scarce enough to bring about large price increases.

I recognize that collectors make their own markets, and if the claims in the advertisement are correct that fewer coins are being issued than there are collectors in the world, perhaps the values will go up, although there is no assurance that the government will not be producing any more coins to take away the value contained there.

I remember a couple of years ago that the government laid a charge against an industry in this country, the particular company involved was fined, I think it was $7,000, by the courts of the land for advertising pewter beer mugs. This was a give-away kind of thing offered by one of the cereal companies, I believe it was General Foods, and these beer mugs were to be sold for $2.39 or some other very low figure. The government laid a charge against General Foods and the company was subsequently convicted, even though it would have been obvious to any person with the slightest knowledge of valuable metals that pewter beer mugs could not be sold for the price advertised. Of course, there was no pewter in those mugs at all. They were made out of some kind of metal which looked like pewter or, possibly, out of plastic. Anyway, the courts made the decision, and it is not my intention to reflect on that decision.

A similar instance occurred right here on Parliament Hill when the Secretary of State circulated a letter to all members of parliament offering supplies of desk flags, Canadian flags suitable for placing on a desk. The letter said they had a "nice gold mounting". Perhaps the expression used was "gold-plated mounting". Well, Mr. Speaker, it is not gold at all. It was merely a plastic base and a plastic stick, but they were gold coloured. I raised that point in the House because this happened about the same time the government was charging somebody else for selling pewter mugs which were not made of pewter. But neither the Secretary of State nor the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs felt that the law applied to the government. And to this day those flags are still being advertised as having gold bases and gold standards. I use this example simply to illustrate the trouble into which legislation like this can get us.

I wish to turn attention for a few moments to the history of the Royal Canadian Mint and to the circumstances in which it became what it is. It is interesting to note that for approximately the last ten years it has come under the jurisdiction of the Ministry of Supply and Services. I should like to refer to the remarks of no less a personage than the Prime Minister who spoke as follows when introducing the measure to establish the Department of Supply and Services following the creation of the Royal Canadian Mint as a Crown corporation:

The most significant suggestion concerns the establishment of the Department of Supply and Services. The Glassco Commission had recommended the grouping within a single department of common services—

These are the important words—"common services"— —such as purchasing and supply, in a way that . . . would be advantageous . . . The proposed department will be responsible for procurements as well as for other administrative services.

That will enable us to . . . to provide most of the common services needed by the various government departments.

Common services might very well be understood to include the issue of coinage for daily use in our commercial transactions, but I do not understand at all how common services could be considered to include the issue of gold coins or souvenir coins produced for sale or profit by the Mint.

About the same time as the Department of Supply and Services was formed, the Mint was established as a Crown corporation. It was understood that this was being done to permit more flexibility in its operations. At the present time the Mint can make a profit. This is known as seignorage. When the Mint produces certain coins and circulates them at face value, charges are made and the Mint is in a position to make a profit from their distribution. Here is a statement from the Mint itself with regard to the position:

Like any manufacturer, the Mint has problems of supply and demand and has never been able to accurately predict the requirements of the public. Under the new financing arrangements, the Mint now has greater operational flexibility and is able to adjust rapidly to fluctuating demands.

A great debate is going on at the present time as to the latitude which ought to be allowed Crown corporations. We have had experience of Crown corporations improperly using their retained earnings in revolving accounts. Moneys provided by parliament for certain purposes are subsequently used for different purposes. The Royal Canadian Mint was previously obliged to seek appropriations in parliament for each year's capital expenditure. This procedure, of course, gave the House an opportunity to examine the estimates, since each appropriation is considered by a committee. Under the new arrangements the Mint will be able to borrow funds from the treasury and build up a surplus out of its expected profits. However, the limit on the accumulation of such profits will be one million dollars—any sum in excess of that has to be turned over to the treasury. Some foresight appears to have been used there. The freedom which has been provided is, of course, exercised by the Mint's operations.

We come back to the question: what did the government have in mind when it produced this bill? I ask myself: why are we expected to relieve parliament of the task of approving the issuance of coinage? I seriously question whether this power should be taken from parliament and placed in the hands of cabinet. In my view consideration should at least be given to placing a limit on such authority by granting it only for a certain period so that we might have an opportunity to see how the new system works out. I would think a trial period of two years or so would not be unreasonable.

I trust we shall have an opportunity before parliament is dissolved to get this bill into committee and examine it in more detail, and that the government will then give us information on the basis of which we shall be able to make a reasonable decision on the matter.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I am very interested in this bill. I do not know why it has been presented in this way. It leaves a lot of decisions up to the cabinet, and ministers may find themselves facing the same questions as the Post Office does in relation to the issue of stamps.

The government has now found out something which I knew a long time ago; it is that we have never really gone off the gold standard. We have played around with it. We have fooled around with substitutes. But when the crunch comes, gold is important because of the respect paid to it by people all over the world, not only for its value in terms of coinage but for its worth as a precious metal to be hoarded or saved.

The value of our dollar has risen slightly in the last day or two, not because the minister is spending hundreds of millions of dollars to bolster it but simply because the United States says it will take gold out of Fort Knox and put it on the market to bolster the American currency. Our currency is the tail on the American dog. The value of our money went up a little because the issuance of gold from Fort Knox to the international market to buy American dollars resulted in a stronger American dollar.

In the sixties I asked the then minister of finance to consider establishing a gold coin for the centennial year, 1967. There were three ministers of finance after that before one would agree that a gold coin should be issued for our centennial. That had not been done for many years. The minister of finance I first spoke to was a Conservative, Donald Fleming, and he would have nothing to do with that because he had decided that the American dollar was all-powerful and that he did not want to put a price on gold in Canada. The only assistance Canada was giving to its gold industry was in providing emergency gold mines assistance.

After much discussion with three ministers of finance it was decided that Canada would put out a $50.00 gold piece for our centennial year. I do not know how much one of those would be worth now, but I wish I had a hundred of them. They would be worth more than bonds, speculative oil stock or anything else, because their value went up tremendously. They were so good that when the 1976 Olympics were in such great difficulty it was agreed to put out another gold coin. However, there was so much confusion that some people were unable to get a series. Some people were able to get only one out of the series. This caused great difficulty for collectors. The indication was that we could not over-produce because there was a large market for gold coins.

The government must have learned, although that is not indicated in this bill, that once it decides to mint a coin which is to be used mainly by collectors, it has to go on the futures market. I am very unhappy that the government will not say how much gold is in the coin and that it will not be redeemable for that amount of gold. Our history of gold coins indicates that gold coins have never been common tender.

Gold coins are not seen on the market. They are not seen crossing bank counters. They are not used for tender because their intrinsic value as collector's items is considerably higher than their face value, even if that face value fluctuates according to the market, and there has been considerable fluctuation at a reasonably high level.

If we decide now to put out gold coins, we should indicate the reason, what use will be made of them, and how many will be issued. If we can stabilize gold in Canada by developing the Kruger rand system or some other system, we will solve much of the problem of our falling dollar and certainly much of the unemployment problem in my area because there are literally dozens of gold mines which could be reopened. They have very high employment factors because of the type of mining involved. Many of these mines could reopen if a stabilization of the price, to eliminate some of the fluctuations, were guaranteed. I doubt if we will mine very much more gold in Canada unless there is a big incentive. We will not produce much more than we can use for our own currency.

I am pleased that we are going ahead with this operation, but I am surprised that we are leaving it up to the cabinet. This is a beautiful way of bootlegging. How many hon. members have received complaints because people could not buy nickel dollars last year?

Mr. Horner: Silver dollars.

Mr. Peters: They used to be called silver dollars, but they are now made solely of nickel. They are not very attractive, but they are collectors' items, and people with grandchildren or great grandchildren might want to give these dollar coins to them. The children can look at them and fondle them. They cannot swallow them, and there are no problems with paper. They are collectors' items, but the banks bootleg them. The Mint turns them over to the heads of the banks. I had about 20 different conversations with banks, the Mint, with local banks, and with everybody in an attempt to get 100 of these coins for a collector in my area. They are not distributed. They do not become tender. They are bootlegged from the banks or from the Mint directly to coin collectors.

While collectors can buy these coins for a dollar from a bank or the Mint, they are not available to the public. However, they can be bought from coin collectors for $1.25 or $1.75 during the current year. Not only has the Mint been making some money but so have coin collectors. I think it is almost like bootlegging. When a certain kind of liquor is not available at the liquor store, it can be bought down the street from a bootlegger. That is what we have been doing with coins, and I think there should be an investigation of this bootlegging from the Mint and from head offices of banks. I have had great difficulty obtaining from the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce even new coppers for my constituents who are collectors. Even coppers are sold to coin dealers. They are delivered to coin dealers rather than to banks. I think there has to be some control. Mr. Speaker, may I call it one o'clock?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): It being one p.m., I do now leave the chair until two o'clock later this day.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, before lunch I mentioned that I welcomed this bill and the decision on the part of the government to make gold coinage a regular part of the operations of the Mint. Also I mentioned the difficulties we were facing in relation to acquiring gold coinage at the present time. Obviously something has gone wrong with the Mint, because it is very difficult for my constituents and for other coin collectors to get coins from either the Mint or their local banks. Yet they see coin dealers selling fairly large amounts of coins. For example, the current issue of the silver dollar is sold by coin dealers at anywhere from 25 cents to 75 cents higher than the cost of purchase from the banks or the Mint. Obviously the coin dealers have some edge on that market, and a great deal of bootlegging apparently is taking place.

● (1412)

We are interested in the production of gold coins other than as legal tender. I agree that they have to be put out as legal tender in order that they will qualify in the field of numismatics. What is happening in respect of this currency is that the coins are all being retained by those individuals who purchase them as a security investment or for some some other reason. In any event, they are being kept off the currency market.

There are other gold currencies being traded in Canada. It is possible to go to the bank and buy gold coins manufactured in England, and Kruger rands are quoted on the Canadian exchange, as well as several other gold currencies.

These coins contain a certain amount of gold, but they are not traded for the face value but for the value of the gold content on world markets. As a result this value fluctuates from day to day. I presume this will not be the case in respect of the currency we will be producing and it will not qualify under the Currency and Exchange Act. We were not talking about currency with a face value of less than $2, including one and five cent pieces, or perhaps other coins of a value less than $10. What we have in mind are coins that will be considerably more valuable than this, such as gold coins of $100, $200, and $500 denominations.

For these reasons I think these coins must have an established mineral content and a specified value in order to serve the purpose I want served, that is, these coins should provide the Canadian producer of gold with an outlet, with a value that is fair and reasonable to those purchasing the coins, rather than making the coins specifically for the numismatic industry. That market is a world-wide market and, as the parliamentary secretary has suggested, it amounts to something in the neighbourhood of $1 billion a year. A great proportion of the gold coins manufactured for that purpose would find their way to that market. I want to see more involved than just that. These coins should be produced in a form that will be purchased by the people because they have a known value. Coins produced for numismatic purposes do not necessarily fall into that category.

Our present act states that a gold coin has to contain a certain amount of gold equal in value to at least the coin's face value. That is to be changed. That is not a big change, as we have done it with everything else. Up until 1968 our silver coins contained silver. Following that we switched to purely nickel coinage. I am surprised that people are still buying silver dollars and fifty cent pieces which contain no silver at all. As far as the fifty cent pieces are concerned, it is difficult to find any, even though they contain no silver at all. Our commonly circulated coin contains no silver, but it has a value as legal tender. I am wondering why there are so few of these coins available. The minister or his parliamentary secretary should give an explanation to parliament about what happens to this coinage. We mint a very large number of silver dollars each year, although they now are nickel dollars, and we mint a large number of fifty cent pieces, but to my knowledge no bank in Ottawa had any fifty cent pieces this year. They were all absorbed by the numismatic industry.

What we are talking about is the feeding of that industry and the bootleg market in coins. I do not know whether the Master of the Mint is getting rich, but he damned well should be. You will remember that there were investigations on a couple of occasions about things that go on, some of which would lift your scalp, I suppose. Somebody is doing very well in respect of our coinage. The silver and gold industries are not doing very well at the moment in Canada. If we are going to get into this business we should be willing to share some of the profits with those industries, thereby putting people back to work in those areas of high unemployment.

I have no objection to the governor in council making the decisions regarding the denomination of the coins and when they should be minted, but I do not think we want to add just another $100 coin to our production. These coins should have some significance.

This whole thing may be likened to our postage stamps. We must be supporting almost every artist in the country as we are putting out more stamps than it would be possible for you to buy, and certainly more than a young stamp collector could afford. I buy stamps, although I am not sure why as I am not a collector. I have bought corners for years and just left them in my office. The last time I looked they had disappeared. I am not really much of a collector, but I do buy them. Considering the number of notices one receives of new stamps coming out, one would have to pay $5 or $6 on occasion just to buy a new issue. These stamps are becoming very high priced and we are turning them out like they were going out of style and we were going out of business. I have no real objection to that, but I would like to see some less expensive stamps. With the prices we are paying for them now we must be getting them done by Goya, and I have in mind that series put out a little while ago with ships and things.

An hon. Member: It wasn't this Goyer.

Mr. Peters: No, I am sure it is not this Goyer, but some famous artist. In any event, these stamps are very good, and we can be proud to have them travelling around the world. I have in mind particularly a fourteen cent stamp put out recently.

In any event, I think the same should be true of our coins. Part of the intrinsic value of our coins is in how they look. We should give credit where credit is due. The Mint has done a beautiful job with these coins. Perhaps it has not done any better than Franklin or probably one or two other private mints around the country, but for some reason the coins minted in Canada are beautiful.

It is interesting to note that a number of countries throughout the world have their coins minted in Canada because we do such a nice job. I suppose our Mint will do the same with these gold coins. The responsibility will not be that of some committee. The minister must assume some responsibility in this regard, and I would not like to see the same old game played. I have seen this happen at least two or three times in respect of postage stamps.

A decision must be made as to what denominations are to be put out and how many of each coin will be minted. Then much of the business can be given to our mining industry in Canada. I suppose it does not matter a damn which way we go, but let us at least buy what we need for these coins from the industry in Canada. The last time we bought silver and gold for coinage we did not buy nearly enough. The first half was at a very low price, and when we went into the market the second time to buy enough to finish the run we were paying almost twice as much. So, if there is any money to be made from the advantage that our coinage will have on the market, surely some of it should go to the mines themselves, and we should buy it in a pre-set block. There is nothing unusual about that.

Ontario Hydro has done that very thing with the mining industry. They have set a block aside and said that they will buy that over a period of time at a set price. Therefore, they know how much it is going to be. It is less than wise for the Mint not to have their full run either ahead of them or the price set in the futures market so that they are not involved in that speculation that takes place once a decision is made to make a new coin. I commend the government for finally having made the decision that to mint gold type coins in Canada does not mean that we are back on the gold standard. I am not prepared to argue whether or not it would be good to go back on the gold standard.

As I mentioned earlier today, when the Americans decide to take money out of Fort Knox in the form of gold and put it on the market, it is going to help our dollar, and we are quite a piece away from Fort Knox. It will certainly help their dollar as well, so maybe it is a relationship that we should honour. Certainly, in relation to the hoarding of coins through collections and in other manners, we are going to have a ready market for these gold coins provided we do not overdo it by manufacturing too many at a time.

If a gold coin is used for tender, it should be such that it is evaluated on its gold value as well as on its face value. There should be some relationship. This is not possible in a free market; therefore it was probably necessary to take that out. There was really no point in changing the section that said that you could use gold to make your full transaction or full tender. Now, under the proposed bill, only one coin can be used towards that tender each day in transactions. If it is going to be called a tender, then it should be available to make the total payment, and I do not think that it should be restricted to this one coin.

I welcome the decision, Mr. Speaker, and I hope that this means that in co-operation with the mining industry we can provide a stable base price by our future orders, and that that stable price will allow many of the gold mines throughout very distressed parts of Canada—northern Ontario, northern Quebec, northern Manitoba—to reopen so that work can take place in those mines for the advantage of communities that were built on them. These communities have always been subject to the fluctuations that are influenced very greatly by decisions of government, and I hope that this is one decision that will be favourable to them.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): This little two-clause bill, Mr. Speaker, would appear to many to be a very innocuous bill, but I would suggest that it is in fact the contrary. This bill seeks to eliminate for the government the problems it had over the debate when Olympic coins were set off. That debate did not have the proper arguments, and it was a bad case.

I am sure there are some people who would confess right now—and the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner) is one of them—that they shared a lot of doubts about the Olympic gold coin issue. Oh yes, one remembers! Now, however, the ministry of which he is a part seeks to give power to the governor in council to act on its own without getting parliamentary sanction. There are those purists who will say, "Oh, but the House committee for statutory instruments would have a go and could comment upon it." This is not the case. This is not like the Post Office. In the Post Office case, which is now of current debate, it is a question of whether there is legal power to so act to pass the order in council. Under this bill there will not be a question of legal power to issue gold coins of a partial value, debased value, or a glittering value, because the power will be there. The governor in council is to be given power to issue coins of various rates, that is, to use the language of the bill:

—of the denominations and standards of fineness specified in Part I of the schedule . . .

Automatically there will not be any more such controversy. I do not know why they are asking for that. This is a point the parliamentary secretary failed to explain to the satisfaction of the House, and is also a point the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Goyer) will have to explain when he comes to committee.

It is interesting to note that C-39 in the Revised Statues is the number, in those statutes, of the Currency and Exchange Act, a pure coincidence. There was a debate last year with regard to part of this act because certain amendments were brought in whereby with respect to the foreign exchange fund, which is audited by the Auditor General, there is no longer a requirement that the audit report be made to parliament but that it be made to the Minister of Finance. The minister then has five months after the end of the year, as I recall, to submit the report on the status of the foreign exchange fund during the previous year. I believe the House was divided on that point, but this particular matter deals with two areas. The first area is determining when the governor in council can issue gold coins.

As the act now stands, and I am wondering why the act was not amended to make it conform to present circumstances, the conditions that apply in C-39 Revised Statutes, have not been eliminated entirely. Apparently under the old act, as was established another act of parliament and as is being maintained, Canada is on a floating dollar. Therefore, there is no value to the dollar on the basis of gold value, so this is eliminated.

● (1432)

The wording of section 4(1) of the Currency and Exchange Act will be as follows:

The governor in council may by proclamation authorize the issue of gold coins—

The old section 4 is being subdivided into three subsections. The first subsection continues as follows:

—having the description, standards, remedy allowance and least current weight specified in Part 1 of the schedule.

Then the governor in council is given authority to issue other new gold coins, not those specified in the act but coins of an undisclosed nature.

Subsection (2) reads as follows:

The governor in council may by proclamation amend Part 1 of the schedule by adding denominations of gold coins other than those specified therein and prescribing . . .

In other words, as the governor in council sees fit, so shall it act. This House will have no recourse whatsoever not even through a review of the order in council because the order in council shall only be reviewed as to its legality, not as to its intrinsic value.

Subsection (3) reads as follows:

The governor in council may by order specify the maximum number of gold coins of any denomination specified in Part 1 of the schedule to be struck in any year.

We need an explanation of why these changes are being made, and I can advise the parliamentary secretary that these explanations will have to be forthcoming. There can be no pressure put on opposition members on the committee because of a pending election. At this late date it is pointless. There has been plenty of time to get bills through, and there will be competition for time in the House for measures arising out of the budget which are important.

The second point is that the bill changes the status of coins in so far as their being legal tender is concerned. Hitherto legal tender consisted of gold coins for their face value, because that was the value of gold. We know now that value is around $160 or $165 per ounce, and no gold coin can contain gold to that value because the size would be too big. We are going into a debased gold coinage and it is going to ruin the market, unless you get one with the figure of a nude dancing girl on the back that is struck upside down, or with some other peculiarity that will make it of extraordinary market value.

We also want to know why it will not be possible to pay any account with more than $10 in 25-cent pieces for $1 coins. Ten dollars is the maximum legal tender on any one occasion. There is nothing to say that I cannot walk into a store where I owe an account and put down the $10 payment in pennies, however, and then go out and return with another $10 worth of pennies.

An hon. Member: Not in this act.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): If the hon. member would check, the explanatory note referring to paragraphs 7(2)(b) reads as follows:

. . . would limit the legal tender of all coins of denominations of ten cents or greater but not exceeding ten dollars to payments for amounts of ten dollars or less.

Therefore, every time I pay on an account is a payment, up to $10, except in the case of a gold coin which usually has a greater value than $10. Let us assume there is a $50 gold coin or a $100 gold coin. In that instance the payment could be in legal tender up to the face value of the coin.

We are playing around with coins here, Mr. Speaker. I wonder why a limit was placed on the legal tender of coins. I can see no particular reason for it. A reason will have to be offered by the Minister of Supply and Services or whoever is acting on his behalf.

Those are the two purposes of this bill, Mr. Speaker. I am rather surprised that we have not heard any comments from backbenchers on the government side, although an explanation was offered in part. I am not too sure the parliamentary secretary understood what she was telling us, and I am sure some of her cabinet colleagues did not understand it either, unless they had the translator on.

Why is there a rush to bring this bill forward at this time, to be followed by Bill C-36 which requires a great deal more examination than this one? This bill is to go to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates, which is a strange venue for it. It should really go to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. Is the reason to leave that latter committee free to deal with Bill C-36? The finance committee has before it the finance estimates and the industry, trade and commerce estimates, so Bill C-36 will have to take its place.

Ministers will be sounding the alarm on several bills because of a pending election and claiming that they must have the legislation. Mr. Speaker, this House does not take cognizance, officially, of a pending election. It has the responsibility to examine estimates until May 31. They have first priority. I think it is an abuse of his position for any minister to come along with legislation now. It points up the nonsense of the committee structure. These are the people who instituted that form of committee where the same committee is charged with the study of estimates and legislation. The Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs is usually the butt of most this pressure. Ministers do not appear, or find that they have other things to do.

I want to interject my views on a matter that was raised earlier on a point of privilege, after question period today. This matter was in regard to the duties of a minister to appear before a committee examining his estimates. It was suggested in the past that action should be taken by the procedural committee to provide some sort of sanction, some sort of rule, compelling the minister to appear on his estimates. All I can say is that a minister who does not appear before a House committee with regard to his estimates is failing to discharge his duties. He is misplacing his priorities, and he is actually giving affront to the House. He is responsible to the House. However, all too often cabinet ministers suddenly become statesmen. It is their scale of priorities that suddenly becomes the most important.

I will refer to the scheme of committee structure which I proposed through the procedure committee along with my colleague, the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro), and other members on the other side of the House who agreed with my proposal. Some who felt that they had greater knowledge of the rules and the practices of this House objected to my form of committee structure, but no one has been able to come up with anything that begins to match the flexibility of the system which was proposed. We would not be faced at this time with the difficulty, I suggest, which may face certain government ministers, if the committees of the House had the backbone to stand by their duty to examine estimates with which they are charged, and for which they have so little time to carry out.

Now, a minister merely has to appear only as frequently as is decent, leaving the rest to his officials. For any sessions for which he is being closely questioned, with a ten-minute question period, the minister can consume the questioner's ten minutes with eight minutes of inconsequential answers. He only has to go through about 90 minutes a session. It is the old business of "just keep a low profile, duck your head, or pull in your head like a turtle and ride it out". That is how much control the House has on a minister with regard to estimates. It is nonsense. I would like to hear one minister from the government side defend the present structure—one of them.

In so far as these bills are concerned we do not know when this House will end. These bills will go to particular committees. We will see some other legislation possibly on Monday. Tuesday is an allotted day. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) has given notice to us of the coming forward of a bill to implement his customs tariff proposals in the budget. They stay in the House in committee of the whole. All of this will take more than next week. Therefore, to say sittings of the House must necessarily come to an end next week is nonsense. It is nonsense, because there are certain ministers here who will ask for legislation to come forward and who will be most insincere. I do not agree that there should be this pressure.

On miscellaneous estimates I certainly intend to ask my full share of questions of the Minister of Supply and Services when, and if, he gets around to us on this particular bill. We certainly intend to go into any other bill that comes before the committees, as they should. I do not intend, because there is a pending election, to neglect the discharge of my duties, nor do my colleagues. I expect the same from the conscientious committee members on the other side of the House, and there are some who will do a good job. They will have to be satisfied as to the validity of these legislative proposals.

It may be that we will reach Bill C-36 this afternoon. Because that bill is not so simple a bill, there are a lot of questions which the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce is going to be asked. With these few points I am quite prepared to see this bill go to the Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates to see what explanations we can get. I reserve my position depending upon those explanations.

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, it had not been my intention to speak to this bill. However, as I sat here and listened to some of the comments being made, my curiosity was aroused and I read the bill carefully. I wonder what we are getting into. I did not hear all of the statements being made. I followed the introductory comments made by the parliamentary secretary. As I said, my focus of attention was not on the bill at that time and I do not know whether an explanation, in the absence of the minister, was given. It does seem strange that the minister should be absent when a bill in which he is interested is before the House. I should have thought that this is one of the prime roles of a minister, to introduce and to shepherd through the House, at least in the introductory days, a bill in which he has some concern.

There remains this question in our minds as to why a minister is absent when a bill standing in his name is brought before the House. It is not just an ordinary bill but a bill with royal recommendation. There are funds involved, and the minister has assigned his parliamentary secretary to introduce this bill.

Then we come to the timing of the bill. This has already been referred to by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert). These days were considered at one time to be the days when we were winding down and it might be thought that these bills of secondary importance, perhaps, are being introduced to fill in the time? Are they being used to fill in the time? Are we under pressure? Are we being pressured? This raises a question in my mind too. I have a feeling we are being put under false pressure in order to get some of these bills through. There seems to be some disinclination now, for one reason or another, for better or for worse, to wind down this tension that has built up over the last couple of weeks and put off that evil day, an evil day for the government. But it will be a great day for the country when that election comes, I can assure you.

We have been subjected in this parliament by this government to a reign of error. Unbelievable, a reign of error! This government has committed one error after another. That is what we are confronted with. We are being asked to put through a bill of doubtful priority, so much priority that the minister is not here. I have my curiosity aroused on the second point.

The third point that grasped my attention was not curiosity. It was fear, because of the provisions of the first clause. I think it is worth reading into the record. Those who read Hansard do not always know the terms of the bills we are considering. The first of the amendments we are being asked to approve reads like this:

> The governor in council may by proclamation authorize the issue of gold coins having the description, standards, remedy allowance and least current weight specified in Part I of the schedule.

I notice that even in the development of this bill and its presentation to the House of commons, possibly by oversight on the part of the public service which put it together for the minister, they did not even bother to include schedule I as it stands. It is not being amended. The idea is that this parliament shall have no further opportunity to amend this schedule.

I went to the library while my friend was speaking to get a copy of schedule I. I looked at it. Then I looked at the second part we are being asked to amend, 4(2), having in mind "may by proclamation authorize the issue of gold coins" under part I. The second part reads this way:

> The governor in council may by proclamation amend Part I of the schedule by adding denominations of gold coins other than those specified therein and prescribing the description, standards, remedy allowance and least current weight for each coin so added or specified therein.

What's cooking? Why should we be asked to allow the governor in council to proclaim the issuance of coins under this schedule in the existing act and then be prepared to grant to a government like this the authority to add and change, not just the number of coins, but the standards, the amount of the standard weight, the number of grains in each coin, the standard millesimal fineness of each coin and the remedy allowance.

I am not sure, but I suspect the remedy allowance is the degree of variance from the standards, plus or minus .5 grains or, in the case of fineness, plus or minus 1.5 millimeters. I suppose that is what it is. Also, the least current weight can be changed.

There is a footnote in part I of the schedule which indicates that the least current weight of 280.59 grains means that when a coin has through usage, through the passage of hands—and I am not sure gold coins will pass through that many hands—been worn down to the point where it no longer weighs more than 280.59 grains, it must be withdrawn from service. Thereupon it could be melted and reduced or added to another coin.

The whole operation of granting a government power by proclamation to issue gold coins is fair enough. It is probably within the purview of a government. However, to authorize any government, this government in particular, to change the denominations, standards, remedy allowance and least current weight is something at which I balk. If this government had a better record of performance in any area, I might have been prepared to consider agreeing. I cannot grant this government the right to debase the coinage. It could reduce the amount of weight contained in the coinage. That is what they want this authority for. However, why do they want that? My curiosity is again titillated. I cannot make out why they are aiming in this direction. I think the right expression is to strike coinage.

[Translation]

—in French, la monnaie est frappée, is it not? I believe the translation in English—

[English]

—is to strike coinage.

There is an interesting sidelight on the operations of the Mint which I am not sure has been examined carefully in this House or by the minister, who is not here. That is the production of decorations and medals.

Recently a new medal was struck and sent to Canadians. Each member of this House was sent a copy of the Silver Jubilee medal honouring the occasion of this twenty-fifth year of Her Majesty's reign. Good. Fine. Excellent. The medals are good. They are well designed.

That goes for the large medal, but do you think you can find a miniature? Do you think it is possible to find one in this town? They just do not make them here. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner) has been talking about how he has been forcing Canadian industry to do this and that. However, they do not even make miniatures in this country. Why does the Mint not make them?

For three weeks I have been trying to get a miniature so that I might wear it proudly when I am invited to a formal occasion, whether it be at Rideau Hall or the Lieutenant Governor's in British Columbia. In fact there are people in high places in this country who have asked me whether I can get a miniature for them.

Do you know what is happening? The suppliers of these medals are sending to Britain asking that the miniatures be sent to them so that they can be sold here. However, it is the British Silver Jubilee medal not the Canadian one.

The Queen's head on both medals is identical, but the reverse side of the Canadian medal is a distinctively Canadian design, and so it should be. I have no objection to that. In fact I am proud of that. It is a good design. However, you cannot get the Canadian design in this country. Why has the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce in collaboration with his friend, the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Goyer), who is primarily responsible for the conduct of the Mint, not worked out a scheme whereby the miniatures would be struck by the Mint and made available to the Canadian people? I asked about this in a committee earlier this week.

I understand this medal was issued to some 7,000 members of the Canadian armed forces. I am delighted. I am sure they have earned them and will wear them proudly. I am glad it has been extended to them and to a number of other Canadians.

There are 7,000 miniatures that might have been part of the commerce of this country from our Mint. Never a thought was given to the idea that they might be struck by the Mint. Why not? I am at a loss to understand how that opportunity might have been lost by our Mint which has done such outstanding work both in the minting of Canadian coins and coins abroad.

When I was serving abroad, I had some of these suppliers of metals come to me in Costa Rica to ask if I could introduce them to people at the central bank. They wanted to take orders for supplying the metal for striking in Canada of the coinage of these foreign countries. This is good business, yet the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce is not applying for this business. He is not paying attention to it at all. The Minister of Supply and Services is not paying attention to it either. Yet they say they are interested in developing Canadian industry.

On the four grounds I have mentioned I shall find it extremely difficult to support this bill. As we all know, it is impossible to amend a bill at this stage; we just have to outline some of our ideas and misgivings. I suppose it could be defeated on second reading, but I doubt it. We have all asked numbers of questions to which answers will be required in committee. I am sure the Minister of Supply and Services could have been here. He is not presiding over a group of international bankers.

Incidentally, I might remind hon. members that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) was not singled out at the meeting in Vancouver for election to the Chairmanship of the assembly there. It is simply a matter of international courtesy that the minister of finance of the host country is chosen chairman. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) told us the hon. gentleman was out in Vancouver and made a point of adding that he had been elected chairman. Well, he was elected chairman because he was minister of finance of the host country. One feature which disturbs me is the absence of the Minister of Finance.

Then again, the timing of the bill gives rise to some uncertainty in my mind. Further, it would be parliamentary suicide to accept the second clause; we have been asked on far too many occasions to agree to parliament withdrawing from whatever it is doing and allow the government to take over. Not this government, thank you.

Also, I wanted to draw the attention of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce to his failure to get the Mint involved in a profitable business, that of striking miniatures and selling them. It looks as though the hon. gentleman will not be proud to wear his Silver Jubilee medal. That is for him to decide. I think we should have commissioned the Mint to strike those medals and make them available to Canadians. I will have a lot of questions to ask when this measure gets to committee.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I came into the House in the middle of the speech of the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich and I intend to emphasize the cogent arguments he advanced. I see the cabinet is strongly represented here today; of that multitude of 33 ministers there are four present in the chamber. That is par for the government course when there is a bill before the House.

An hon. Member: We don't see you here often on Friday.

Mr. Diefenbaker: We are not the government but we shall be soon, and we would not be trailing all over the country when we should be here. To my mind this is complete contempt of parliament, another example of the government making a eunuch out of this institution. I have every regard for the hon. lady who is the parliamentary secretary, but we are being asked to deal with a gold bill, a bill changing the law with respect to the content of certain coins, and no responsible minister is here. I do not think we would have got much further if the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Goyer) had been here. I understand that the uselessness of the Minister of Supply and Services has been well established by now. I understand he is about to be translated to the repose of a high government executive position based upon trade and the expansion of trade in this country.

When I think of him I often think of him as the $20 million kid. You will recall, Mr. Speaker, the situation in which those dollars disappeared and we never got an explanation of what happened. The Minister of Supply and Services is concerned with the subject under consideration today. He should be here to explain, though I do not think he would be able to explain in any case. When I see parliament treated in this way I am reminded of the words of Cromwell to the Long Parliament: "In the name of God, go; go at once." I would only add, to bring those words up to date: "Go, Goyer, go without any possible delay". It is making an abomination of this institution.

This must be an important bill. It is one which has to be passed before the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) ultimately reaches the conclusion that he must go to the country. He has fooled around for the last ten days or so trying to find some explanation for the apparent change across the country. One of the hon. members over there shakes his head in the negative.

This bill has to do with gold, but there was another recent incident dealing with Goldfarb. Goldfarb operates some kind of poll. He is close to the government. My information is that in the last few days he has produced a prophecy which indicates that all is not well for the Liberals in Toronto and in Ontario. So the Prime Minister is not here today. He is away.

Oh, since I started to speak I have added 20 per cent to the number of ministers in the chamber which indicates the attractiveness of my contribution. What is the purpose of this bill? Why the rush? I followed my hon. friend from Victoria who asked why the right should be given to the governor in council to add denominations of gold coins other than those specified therein and prescribe the description, standards, remedy allowance and least current weight for each coin so added. What is the purpose of this? Is it the intention to issue an emaciated, depreciated currency? Is the government not satisfied with the present standard of gold coins? Does this proposal for turning over the power to the governor in council to determine the gold content of each and every coin indicate that there is a desire on the part of the government to get this bill through for a purpose as yet unknown and in respect of which no information has been given? This is just part and parcel of the course that is being followed.

We sit, we ask, we endeavour to get information and we hear from the government that it believes in freedom of information. Fifteen hundred questions which would have been embarrassing to the government, many of which have been on the order paper for the last six, seven or eight months, are still not answered; and when this parliament ends those questions will not be answered. That is the contempt which is being shown to parliament. Never have I seen anything like this. I remember the days of war under the Right Hon. Mackenzie King when secrecy was necessary in many cases in the interests of the protection and preservation of the security of the nation. But we were able to get information. We cannot get it today. The government says it will not answer.

I do not condemn the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) in any way. He has been condemned for the budget he introduced the other day. He had no more to do with that than I had. The determinant was the Prime Minister, following the course that he has in finance of determining what shall and shall not be brought in.

That is the reason the Hon. John Turner and the hon. Donald Macdonald are no longer here. They would not dance to the Prime Minister's tune. However, parliament is now asked to do that. If there is anybody in the group of ministers which is here, including my hon. friend the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner), "than whom there is no whomer," to use a western expression, I would like him now to rise and tell the House exactly—and I know he has the information—what is the reason for this. Is this going to improve the trade of Canada? Is this going to advance the cause of those who believe in the necessity of an expansion of trade for this nation?

What is the reason that parliament is being asked by order in council to allow the government to depreciate Canadian gold currency? That is all I want to know, and there may be a perfect answer, at least one—and we will not look at the political consequences—which, if it comes from the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, I feel sure would be most revealing. I do not want to hold him up. I want to give him the opportunity of letting the House know what nobody else among the ministers present knows.

The Minister of Supply and Services is hightailing across Canada at our expense. The Prime Minister is in Toronto for the purpose of finding out whether Goldfarb knows what he is talking about in his prophecy that all is not well for the government. We want to know, not about Goldfarb, but why the gold standard of this country should be depreciated with the opportunity given to the government to do it by order in council. This is a step which has never been taken before. This is a step which ought not to be taken now.

I am going to sit down, knowing how this government has trodden on the rights of parliament and turned this institution into a place where we simply talk and debate. The government does not listen and relies on its majority, regardless of what arguments are advanced. What is the reason for this? Why has the government suddenly decided here on a Friday afternoon, with ministers all over creation, to bring in this piece of legislation which cannot but have the effect of adding still more knowledge in the Canadian people and people all over the world internationally that Canada's dollar is falling and falling, and that, today we are in a position where Canada is not in economic difficulty but actually in a depression and even worse than that?

I recall very well that when I was prime minister we valued the dollar after the president of the United States decided to try to destroy the Canadian government. We valued it and set it up, finally, at 92.5 cents. What did the Liberals say? I am speaking about the Liberals then because they are not that today. They are the Trudeau party today and since he has taken over. They said, "Oh, this is terrible". That 92.5 cent dollar brought the greatest trade Canada has ever had internationally, and I was glad to hear the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce the other day—and he is now applauding exactly what I am saying because he has not forgotten those days—say that the only thing wrong with the present value of the Canadian dollar was that apparently it should even be lower.

Mr. Clarke: He wants a zero dollar.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am very happy to see a reformation in the thinking of the hon. gentleman so far advanced among those members of the cabinet with whom he now sits, and I am waiting with bated breath to see him rise and hear him say, "Yes, I know the Diefenbaker government was right when it fixed the rate at 92.5 cents".

The minister just applauded that statement on my part, but those who today sit around him said, "We will do away with it as soon as we come into office". They waited six and a half long years before doing it. The greatest trade this country ever had was during that period following the fixing of the value of the Canadian dollar. However, we did it by act of parliament, and whatever the change by order in council in the gold standard in so far as the content of gold coins is concerned, I am against it. It is dangerous. It is apparently some trick which has been worked out which can only have the effect internationally of Canada's credit going down more and more week by week.

Today, as a result of the actions of this government and the deficit of $10 billion, Canadian taxpayers are paying $5.6 million a day in interest on the amount of the deficit which had to be borrowed. Let us hear from one of these responsible ministers of the government. One minister has left. He knows nothing more about this than he does about his own department, so I do not mind his absence. I greatly admired the courage of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce a few moments ago when he approved what my government did, because those with whom he sits now kept it for six and a half years.

I now ask him to get up and with the clarity which is naturally that of any westerner clear the situation. The Prime Minister is not here. He is finding out how bad conditions are in Toronto and elsewhere. I ask the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce to rise now and let us know what benefit will come from an order in council procedure being set up to enable this government to depreciate Canadian gold coins.

An hon. Member: Come on, Jack.

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, the reference in the order paper shows this bill as being directed to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates, but in the course of discussions last week with the House leader of the official opposition and with the financial critic of the official opposition the understanding was that the bill would be referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. I wonder if hon. members who are now in the House are of the same opinion and whether Your Honour might find unanimous consent to make that change.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Hon. members have heard the suggestion of the hon. parliamentary secretary. Is there unanimous consent to allow the Chair to modify the motion so that after second reading the bill will be referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs instead of the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I agree with the correction made by the hon. parliamentary secretary. I should also add that there is unanimous consent for this bill to be referred to the standing committee.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion as amended?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

EXPORT DEVELOPMENT ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Jack H. Horner (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce) moved that Bill C-36, to amend the Export Development Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, in rising to take part in this debate, I am sorry to see that the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) has had to leave the House. Earlier this afternoon he urged me to speak.

Mr. Paproski: He knew you were getting up on this bill. That is why he left.

Mr. Horner: I thought he would have remained in the House. With his great concern for parliament, I expected him to take an interest in the Export Development Act.

Basically Bill C-36 amends the Export Development Act by increasing the authorized capital to $1 billion. The corporate accounts are multiplied by ten times the authorized capital.

Mr. Paproski: The right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) heard your statement. He is entering the chamber now.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Yes, I am here.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Horner: It would increase the direct liabilities in the corporate accounts to $10 billion, the contingency liabilities of the Export Development Corporation would be increased to $10 billion, the direct liabilities in the government accounts to $2.5 billion and the contingency liabilities to $3.5 billion.

The Export Development Corporation has done a tremendous job in assisting Canadian exports by finding and creating markets for Canadian produce. It is essential for parliament to understand the great work that corporation is doing. Also it is essential for parliament to understand that EDC will have lent its complete account of approximately $4.25 billion by the middle of June.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Do we ever get any back?

Mr. Horner: This is an essential piece of legislation. The hon. member is asking if we ever get any back. Actually a profit is made, and it does quite well creating jobs in Canada.

The right hon. member for Prince Albert referred to trade. Canadian exporters are winning business abroad on the basis of quality, price and delivery. The purpose of the Export Development Corporation financing is to match the officially supported financial competition from abroad. EDC is experiencing an increased level of business. It must remain in a strong competitive position in order to support Canadian exports. By the end of this year, the corporation will have lent out something in the neighbourhood of $2 billion. Obviously with expanded trade there is a need for expanded financial assistance and contingency liabilities.

Also the right hon. member spoke about the exchange value of the Canadian dollar with respect to currencies as well and major national competition. Certainly the present situation is a great boon to export trade and manufactured goods. Last year there was a $3 billion surplus in exported goods and I believe it will be higher than that this year.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): In constant dollars?

Mr. Horner: We had an increase in constant dollars. The right hon. member for Prince Albert referred to the trading days of the 1960's. In 1967 a little over $10 billion was exported. In 1977, ten years later, over $44 billion was exported. The hon. member can work that out any way he likes. If one takes inflation into consideration, he will readily see that our exports have risen substantially.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Will the minister allow a question?

Mr. Horner: Our exports have risen substantially.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Will the hon. Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce allow the right hon. member for Prince Albert to ask a question?

Mr. Horner: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. minister for his courtesy in permitting me to ask a question. My question is a very simple one, because I have the same objective in mind as he has, to achieve the largest possible export trade. If parliament passes the power to the governor in council to add denominations of gold coins and to prescribe the standards and the current weight for each coin, will that improve trade?

An hon. Member: We are dealing with the Export Development Act.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I should like to hear the explanation, not a generalization on other matters. I know the minister can answer my question with the precision he is capable of.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. With all due respect to the right hon. member, his question has nothing to do with the bill before the House.

Mr. Paproski: He is talking about trade.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am talking about trade.

Mr. Horner: The previous bill which was sent to committee will create jobs, as well as a market for Canadian gold. When the right hon. member for Prince Albert was prime minister, there was an act before parliament entitled the "Gold Subvention Act" under which gold mines were subsidized. If a market for gold is created, our mines will no longer require that type of assistance. In fact, it is no longer needed at the present time.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I came back into the chamber to get an answer to my question. Apparently the minister cannot answer it, because there is no answer forthcoming.

Mr. Horner: I am attempting to speak on the legislation which is before the House now. It has to do with enlarging the liabilities and the contingency fund of the Export Development Corporation. It is a very important piece of legislation and I am pleased that it is before parliament today. I hope it can be sent to committee quickly in order for the Export Development Corporation to come before the committee and answer all questions that the right hon. member or anyone else would like to put.

The ceiling on corporate loans is $4.25 billion at the present time. That ceiling will be reached by the middle of June. Thus, it is important to deal with this piece of legislation now. If the bill is not passed, it will mean a loss of new jobs and could occasion many lay-offs. It would result in a tremendous loss in Canadian exports, and it would not assist the economic recovery which would take place if parliament did not pass this piece of legislation before the summer recess.

Mr. Clarke: What about an election, Jack?

Mr. Horner: An election would be fine with me, but it is not my prerogative.

The Export Development Corporation is probably the most misunderstood corporation in Canada. Many members of the opposition, as well as many people across the country, do not really understand what the government and the EDC are doing. Some months ago lay-offs occurred at Inco. A great deal of concern was expressed because Inco had constructed nickel mines in Guatemala and Indonesia, and it was said that somehow or other jobs were being taken away from Canadians. In that particular case, the Export Development Corporation provided approximately $20.75 million for the mine in Guatemala and $57.25 million for the financing of the mine in Indonesia.

Let me explain what really happened. The project was going ahead and Inco came to the Export Development Corporation and wanted some insurance on the financing. They said they would procure about $1 million worth of goods in Canada. The Export Development Corporation said that $1 million worth was not nearly enough, and, by negotiations, increased the expenditure for manufactured goods in Canada up to as high as $60 million.

In the total project involving the building of those nickel mines in those two countries something like $900 million was spent, financed by Japan, Germany and Great Britain, and the Export Development Corporation helped to sell the mining equipment to those mines in both of those countries. The mining equipment we sold really involved something like 4,800 man-years of employment in Canada, so the Export Development Corporation is creating jobs.

Another very good example of the work done by the Export Development Corporation in creating jobs in Canada can be found in the announcement on April 5, 1978 of the biggest insurance agreement yet supporting $1 billion worth of sales by Bell Canada to Saudi Arabia with $250 million in security insurance and $180 million in export credit insurance. This contract will provide at least 2,500 man-years of employment for Canadians.

I am just picking out a few specific projects to give parliament and the Canadian people some idea of what the Export Development Corporation really does.

On March 9, 1978 loans totalling $57 million supporting engineering and mining equipment sales valued at $67 million by the Canadian firms of Sandwell and Company Limited of Vancouver and SNC-Rust Limited of Montreal to Argentina were made. Here again a tremendous number of jobs were created in Canada. This money does not leave Canada but goes to pay for the procurement of the Canadian manufactured machinery used in these projects.

During a visit to Mexico the chairman of the Export Development Corporation, Mr. MacDonald, offered lines of credit totalling $1.45 billion to help foster Canadian trade to that country. Mexico is deeply interested in developing its oil and gas industry. We have the expertise and believe we can sell the machinery needed for oil production and mining, and for that matter for pulp and paper, power generating plants and urban transportation projects, all of which are being eyed by Canadian firms for sales to Mexico.

In January of 1978 Alcan International Limited was awarded a $30.6 million contract for the construction of an alumina plant on Aughinish Island, Ireland, with the support of an Export Development Corporation loan.

[Mr. Horner.]

In December of 1977 four loan agreements were announced involving $50 million for the sale of five electrical generators to Venezuela by Canadian General Electric in Scarborough; a $3.75 million loan to support a sale of $4.4 million by Canadair Limited of Montreal for two CL-215 water bombers to Greece; and a loan of $5.5 million to Romania supporting sales of $6.9 million in pulp and paper plant equipment by Combustion Engineering-Superheater Limited of Ottawa. The fourth loan amounting to $1.45 million was in support of a sale of $1.7 million by Douglas Aircraft of Malton to Finnair Oy for wing, floor and tail assemblies for DC-9 aircraft.

The Export Development Corporation on December 20, 1977 extended a $285 million financing protocol to Poland and announced a $46.1 million loan supporting a $52.1 million sale of capital goods and equipment to that country by thirteen Canadian exporters for the Kwidzyn pulp and paper mill in that country. These are loans made for the procurement of Canadian equipment to assist those countries in their own development. If we had not got into the business of guaranteeing or insuring the loans, some other country would and we would not be selling pulp and paper mill equipment, aircraft, mining equipment and the other things I have listed.

On a per capita basis, exports represent $2,000 per person in Canada; and as a percentage of our gross national product, exports represent about 22 per cent. Canada is one of the most reliant on exports of any country in the world. In 1976 it ranked seventh among the largest world trading nations in terms of value of exports and second in terms of exports per capita.

This gives the House some idea of how important exports are, and of the continuing role that the Export Development Corporation must play in order to assist this country in meeting and creating job needs, and attaining the world trade potential that is at our feet.

We must look increasingly to the export of goods and related services for economic growth and to strengthen the industrial sector. Many times I have heard members in the House say our manufacturing industries cannot compete, or that we have too large a deficit in manufactured end products. Certainly the Export Development Corporation has assisted tremendously in increasing our exports of manufactured goods.

It is imperative that this piece of legislation be passed because it means so much to the creation maintenance of jobs. Last year alone it is estimated that the work being done for export under financing or insurance by the Export Development Corporation created or maintained something in the neighbourhood of 200,000 jobs in Canada. Many times we hear opposition members talking about unemployment and the need for job creation. I can say to you, Mr. Speaker, without worrying about recrimination, that I have been negotiating with the opposition to get speedy passage on second reading in order that the bill can be sent to the committee where hon. members can examine the operations of the Export Development Corporation. Questions can be asked and answers can be given quickly so that the bill can come back to the House and pass, as it is needed before the end of June. If there is an election, as hon. members have been suggesting, we may not have the chance of passing this legislation until the fall. This would seriously hurt Canada's export trade.

There are 50 principal Canadian exporters and 220 sub-suppliers involved in 42 agreements in 22 countries. Three loans totalling $95 million were made on behalf of the Government of Canada. This gives some idea of the scope of this corporation. It is not just a small thing but involves a great many companies. In fact, it is used extensively for almost all our trading off the North American continent and used as well quite extensively in trading with the United States.

This will give some idea of the importance of this tool which Canadian exporters have learned to use in trading particularly with that group I might refer to as third world countries who want to buy manufactured goods. Canadian firms today are bidding on $5.5 billion in goods to be sold in the Middle East. We have acquired in the Middle East to date approximately $1.2 billion of trade and bidding on another $5.5 billion. All of these sales are managed through the Export Development Corporation through either insurance or guaranteed loans.

I do not intend to speak any longer, Mr. Speaker, but I do urge that members give speedy passage to this bill. It will be referred to the finance committee, and the Export Development Corporation is very anxious indeed to come before the committee and explain how important it is to our export trade and over-all picture, particularly to manufactured goods which everyone will agree create a great deal of employment in our country.

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the minister to clarify something in his policy. While I was listening to his address on this bill, I was looking at a news release put out by the government which is dated October 14, 1976. It reads:

> The Export Development Corporation (EDC) will lend up to $102 million to finance the $113 million sale of Canadian equipment for a world scale integrated pulp and paper complex near Kwidzyn, Poland.
> The Kwidzyn project consists of a bleached Kraft pulp mill with a capacity of 150,000 metric tons per year—a semi-chemical pulp mill of 50,000 tons per year capacity and a paper mill with an annual output of 270,000 metric tons. Also included in the project are recovery units, steam generators, water supply and effluent treatment systems.

Such a project will undoubtedly provide a lot of jobs in Canada.

I also know from my studies of the east coast fisheries problem that if we in Atlantic Canada under the present circumstances are to catch and market squid, capelin, silver hake and argentines—to name four species of soft fish which must be frozen immediately when taken from the sea—we require freezer trawlers of a minimum length of 230 to 240 feet. Our studies and pricing techniques have told us that these trawlers have been built and provided by Poland at a cost some 25 per cent lower than we can build them in Canada.

My question to the minister is: How is it that we can loan money to Poland for the construction of paper mills, or that they are willing to buy this equipment in Canada at a price which must obviously be 25 per cent higher than it would cost to build it in their own country, when we in turn must, if we can get the government to move on the construction of freezer trawlers, build them in Canada at a 25 per cent higher cost? What quid pro quo do we offer Poland in order to get them to buy from us at what is obviously a 25 per cent higher cost than they could buy the same product in their own country?

Mr. Horner: The hon. member is making the assumption, Mr. Speaker, that Poland could build this pulp mill themselves without having to buy the machinery for it in Canada. There are many, many things Canada does better than some other countries. Poland may be able to build a better fishing trawler than we can, I do not know.

Mr. Crouse: Ha!

Mr. Horner: The hon. member laughs. I know he is of German descent and comes from a German community, but he may be surprised to know that Canada has the best engineered packing houses and the best sausage makers. It took the Germans two years to realize that they had to buy a sausage-making machine from Canada. They could not believe that a Canadian sausage-making machine would be better than one that they could make. However, they eventually bought a Canadian sausage-making machine because our machine could make sausages faster than theirs. What I am saying is that we in Canada do some things better than some other countries can, and I acknowledge the fact that some other countries can perhaps do some things better than Canada.

This type of situation is what promotes trade. I would like to think that the 20 per cent subsidy that I announced some months ago to the Canadian shipbuilding industry would help to promote the building in Canada of the refrigerated trawlers for the fish the hon. member spoke about.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, in speaking to Bill C-39 a few moments ago, perhaps I was rather prophetic in my remarks that the minister's chief plea with regard to this bill was rapid passage. I would like to ask him and the other members of the ministry why the bill is coming forward only now. Because I have attended at conferences with the president of the Export Development Corporation, and he told me of it four or five months ago.

Mr. Horner: Would you like me to answer that question?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Yes, please. Why is it now?

Mr. Horner: The simple fact is that I tried to get agreement from the opposition for speedy passage some months ago and I was told "no deal", that it would not get through quickly. If it was to be held up there was no time available in the House. The House business is important, and a number of bills have been passed recently, and we would like to see this one passed.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): This is shocking, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Shame, shame!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): As a matter of fact, the argument is so empty that it is not even worth putting forward. This minister says he wants speedy passage.

Mr. Horner: I want it to go to committee.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): When this minister was on this side of the House, to debate a bill for only 10 days was too short, in his opinion.

Mr. Gillespie: Do you intend to filibuster it?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I do not intend to filibuster. There is nothing to filibuster that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie) could ever put forward.

If this bill does not pass and the corporation does run out of money, they have recourse to receiving Governor General's warrants. I am suggesting that that is a possible solution; it has certainly been used in the past. For example, in 1972 the hon. minister knows that the administration of which he is now a member ripped through the Unemployment Insurance Act by lending under Governor General's warrants $400 million in excess of the borrowing powers of the commission. There is nothing that this administration would hesitate to do if it felt the need.

In this particular case I can readily understand the problem that is facing Mr. MacDonald and the board of directors of the Export Development Corporation, but to blame us for not bringing the bill forward smacks of sheer incompetence on the part of the government House leader and the minister in question. It is not a question of the opposition kowtowing or bending to any particular whim of any particular minister, and the last man who should speak of that kind of thing is the present minister. He spent 18 years on this side of the House exhorting everybody who was in opposition not to bend before any cabinet minister. Talk about Paul being converted on the road to Damascus; Saul was a piker compared to the hon. minister! He has now become a statesman. Perhaps he will emulate a former member of this administration who, when he was in opposition, was always urging the government to do something immediately. I am referring to the Hon. Paul Martin. When he was in opposition he said that Canada ought to recognize and participate in the Organization of American States right away, but as soon as he became secretary of state for external affairs in 1963 and was asked about this he said, "Of course, when you come to this side of the House you must become responsible". I suppose that is what this minister is now saying. When he was on this side of the House he had to be irresponsible, and now he has become responsible because the corporation of which he speaks requires the money.

The minister has spent a good deal of time, like his seatmate the Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) (Mrs. Campagnolo) last night, trying to recite figures. Comparisons should be made on the basis of constant dollars, Mr. Speaker. Let us not compare trade figures of ten years ago with trade figures today. If the hon. minister is prepared to admit that the 1971 dollar is worth 62 cents today, we will translate that. There has been a 78 per cent move downwards in the value of the 1968 dollar. They should apply that to the figures they quote.

Mr. Horner: You still get double.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Much less than double.

Mr. Horner: No, you get double.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Over the years there have been some very great deficits on the commodity market—not that I am trying to say I would love to see Canada on the deficit side. I would rejoice as much as any member of the House if on the commodity side we had a surplus. That means some Canadians are waking up to reality and coming out of the dream world of the past few years when they thought the world was their oyster and they just had to open it to find the pearl.

We know now that we have priced ourselves out of the market and have done the same thing on quality. Our unit cost of production is high and we are slow on delivery. In other words, our industry is sloppy. I think this has now levelled out, however, because people have come up against the hard facts. In business you either sell quality goods at competitive prices and deliver on time or somebody else does it.

There is one element of competition which is much more difficult, and that is in the matter of credit terms and financing. One can produce the same or better goods, but if the credit terms are less favourable than those of the competition, the purchaser will go for the long pull at the lower rate.

This was apparent when certain proposals were discussed at the recent sessions of the InterAmerican Development Bank. One could readily see the influence of the non-regional members of the bank, the Europeans and Japanese; they realized this is a tremendous market for them, not one reserved to Canada and the United States by any means. The danger is that in trying to meet the competition of the Japanese, the Germans, British and other European members of the InterAmerican Development Bank or, in another context, the Asian Bank, we are going to extend ourselves too far in credit terms and financing.

It will be said that because we want to compete in the big league we are a soft touch; in other words, we will always try to outbid the others on credit terms.

Mr. Gillespie: You're kidding!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie) says I am kidding. Not at all, Mr. Speaker. He just does not hear these things.

I am also concerned that the Canadian banking system, because of restrictions on the operations of the chartered banks, is not flexible enough to undertake the type of financing that commercial banking does and that we need in Canada to face this type of competition. I am concerned too that the Export Development Corporation has reserved too large a sector of the market to itself. It is not able to get down into the really small transactions.

These are points we want to go over with Mr. MacDonald and with the minister to determine whether we are on the right course. It is too simple to say on the insurance side that we are going to increase limits by 400 per cent. What is so magical about 400 per cent? Why take us to $10 billion? There are financing increases that I do not think are justified at the present time. I want to see greater diversification in our facilities for the financing of exports, and not all through a Crown corporation. There has been a fantastic increase in the scope and influence of the business, almost as though it is becoming a state monopoly. I have this inner feeling that I should like to see us develop—

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being four o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely notices of motion, public bills and private bills.

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I ask for the unanimous consent of the House so we may now proceed with the consideration of notice of motion No. 10, and that previous notices of motions be allowed to stand.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Hon. members have heard the suggestion of the parliamentary secretary that the House proceed to notice of motion No. 10 on the order paper in the name of the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert). We can only proceed in this way by giving consent because the items preceding this motion have already been stood at the request of the government. Pursuant to my ruling of December 5, 1977, and in accordance with Standing Orders 19(1) and 49(1), the only way these items can be stood is by unanimous consent; otherwise they will have to disappear from the order paper. Is there consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, you will note that I agree with your proposal. There are two, three or possibly four notices of motions standing in the names of hon. members who have withdrawn from the House. Presumably one should strike their names from the order paper since they are no longer members of this House. Unless there is agreement that somebody else should sponsor their motions, I do not think we should carry them on the order paper any longer and we can clean up the order paper to that extent.

• (1602)

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, there is no urgency to deal with that problem. There is consent today to proceed with the motion in the name of the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) and we will see whether or not notices of motions standing in the names of members who have resigned or are no longer members of this House should be struck from the order paper. We will see whether these motions can be introduced on their behalf or in the name of another member.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I think this is the better way to proceed. Then the hon. member will look at the motion and be sure. I know there is a motion in the name of the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis) respecting the establishment of a committee that I believe has already been established. Maybe the hon. parliamentary secretary or the House leaders could look at the question. By unanimous consent, all motions appearing ahead of motion No. 10 which is in the name of the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), are stood. We will proceed and resume debate on the said motion.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

SUGGESTED EXTENSION OF AGE OF COMPULSORY RETIREMENT

The House resumed, from Monday, November 7, 1977, consideration of the motion of Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West):

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of enacting legislative proposals to raise the compulsory retirement age from 65 to 70 for any person aged 65 or more who does not so wish to retire and is prepared to give up his/her entitlements to any private pension plan or annuity.

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that this is the second time we have had the privilege of debating the motion of the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), although it is the first opportunity that I have had to become involved directly. I am delighted to be able to take part in the debate on this topic, which I see has had a lot of consideration from many different quarters all across this continent and perhaps even around the world.

First of all, I notice that the other place had occasion to debate a very similar motion on six different days. The latest date of debate in the other place was December 7. On conclusion of the debate on date, the motion was agreed to. That motion referred to a special committee the subject matter, being mandatory retirement at the age of 65. The special committee of the other place was to examine and report upon the existing retirement age policies affecting workers in both the public and private sectors; the social and economic implications of mandatory retirement based on age alone. I do not think I need to run over the details completely of the motion of the other place but suffice to say that consideration was given on six occasions and the subject matter of the motion was referred to this special committee.

That is not the only place where consideration has been given to this subject. I would refer the House to the congressional record of the United States Senate where less than a month ago, on March 23, a motion to put an end to mandatory retirement was considered and the vote was taken on that date. The result was yeas, 62 and nays, 10.

They have an interesting practice in that chamber, Mr. Speaker; they indicate the number of members not voting on that day. The number was 28. A further interesting wrinkle in their procedure is to announce how absent members would have voted if they had been present. Accordingly, Senator Stevens is reported as saying: "I announce Senator so and so". He then lists about eight of the absent senators, stating that they were necessarily absent and that if they had been present and voting, they would have voted yea.

Those are a couple of high-powered considerations of this motion. It would be my hope, at the end of the debate on this motion today, that this House might also approve the motion of my colleague the hon. member for Edmonton West. It asks the government to consider the advisability of enacting legislative proposals to raise the compulsory retirement age from 65 to 70 for any person aged 65 or over who does not wish to retire and is prepared to give up any entitlements to any private pension plan or annuity.

I want to refer to some other considerations of this problem. It is a serious problem and it has many implications. It is not just a simple matter of whether or not a person wants to work after the age of 65. There are such considerations as whether a person over the age of 65 continuing to work deprives some younger person of a job. There is also the effect of forced retirement on an individual who is forced to retire in the midst of a productive life.

There is a further complication which could be helped by the passage of this motion. I refer to the so-called age bulge that we have in Canada today. If we continue on the working cycle that we are presently embarked upon, there will be a small number of workers by the end of this century to support the very large number of retired people. The statistics go something like this: Presently we have seven workers for every retired person. It is expected that that number will be reduced to three workers for every retired person by the end of the century. The effects of that are obvious. The tax burden on those three workers will be more than double what it is today in order to provide for the support of the individuals who are then retired. By passing this motion and the following legislation, we could alleviate the very serious problem which will be with us by the late 1980's and certainly by the end of the century.

I want to refer again to action in the United States Congress. Consideration has been given in that legislature to that matter. Writing in the Congressional Digest there is this foreword to an article headed: "Revision of Mandatory Retirement Age Policy". It starts out:

Pending in the 95th Congress is legislation which, if adopted, could have major impact on the work habits and job opportunities of millions of older Americans. Already passed by the House of Representatives and near floor action in the Senate in somewhat different form are proposed amendments to the Age Discrimination in Employment Act of 1967 (ADEA) which would bar mandatory retirement for any worker under age 70 who wished to continue in his job and who was able to do so.

The measure, which would not prevent retirement at an earlier age, is directed at those persons in the American work force—in private industry as well as State and local government—who now are forced to retire at a specified age, most commonly 65. Civilian employees of the Federal Government are already subject to a mandatory retirement age of 70, the level which pending legislation would establish for all covered workers.

The date of this issue is November, 1977. The motion reached the floor of the United States Senate last month. I imagine we can all point to examples of cases where people continued to carry out useful occupations past the age of 65. We have some notable examples of that in this House. The retirement age for members of the other place and members of the judiciary in Canada today is 75 years. I know of many workers doing far more active work than what is entailed in being a Senator or a judge, such as those cleaning and doing other manual work. Many thousands of Canadians involved in voluntary work are well beyond the age of 65 or even 75.

The history of this kind of legislation goes back a long way. I have an article here which mentions legislation pushed through in Germany by von Bismarck, First Chancellor of the German Empire in 1889. That legislation allowed their older citizens to continue to work and raised the need to define old age. In Great Britain similar legislation was passed in 1908 using the age of 70, later reducing it to 65.

I have many pages of references to the desirability of this kind of legislation to permit older people to continue to lead useful lives. I have explained the advantages I see to the economy and the employment situation as a whole. I do not think any great purpose would be served by making further reference to the body of information that I have here. All the evidence that I have been able to lay my hands on supports the view. It is my feeling that, given the opportunity, this House would also support the view. If there are any contrary views, I suggest they be given to us now so that those who wish to contribute to the debate will have an opportunity for rebuttal.

Mr. W. Kenneth Robinson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) for bringing this matter before the House. He first brought it before the House on November 7, 1977, suggesting that there be an extension of the age of compulsory retirement. I would like to read his motion again:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of enacting legislative proposals to raise the compulsory retirement age from 65 to 70 for any person aged 65 or more who does not so wish to retire and is prepared to give up his/her entitlements to any private pension plan or annuity.

This motion is most timely indeed. We are all pleased to have the opportunity to speak on this motion today.

The hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Clarke) pointed out that the whole question of aging has become a consideration in Canada. He stated that in the next decade, and without doubt before the end of the century, there will be greater numbers of senior citizens than ever before as a percentage of our population. He pointed out that members of the other place and of the judiciary retire at the age of 75. I note there is no age of retirement in the House of Commons. I think that is rather significant.

In making this motion, the hon. member for Edmonton West is dealing with a subject, namely retirement, which has tremendous potential implications, touching as it does on financial, economic, social and health issues, not to mention political considerations. Certainly this is a current topic which has been receiving growing coverage in the press and has been a focus of attention for governments both here and abroad.

But the subject of retirement is also one of baffling complexity which does not really lend itself to simple solutions. I am sure that in making his proposal, the hon. member for Edmonton West was less intent on revising retirement ages than he was on making all members aware of the problems facing society, both now and in the future, in this important area. Indeed, in earlier debate on this motion the hon. member indicated his awareness that there is no compulsory retirement age in Canada at present. This fact has a distinct bearing on this debate, since it reflects a certain freedom of choice and adaptability to conditions which would be difficult to achieve with an over-all mandatory retirement age.

Perhaps we should examine for a moment some of the issues which are involved in any discussion on the subject of retirement. In the light of these issues, we can then, if time permits, look at a few of the proposals which have recently been made, including the hon. member's suggestion, and place them in perspective.

One of the most obvious and important factors determining an individual's decision to retire is the state of his or her health. I am sure every member of this House has experienced days when, no matter how exciting the prospect of the day's work was, it was difficult to work up enthusiasm for the tasks at hand because physically, for one reason or another, we just did not feel up to it. Most of us are fortunate enough to spend most of our lives in good health, but not all are so lucky. It is an unavoidable fact that, as our bodies age, they become more susceptible to problems. Bones become brittle, break more easily and take longer to mend. Resistance to many diseases and complications such as pneumonia is lower. Perhaps some day, with dramatic medical advances, the situation will change. However, for most Canadians declining physical strength is an inevitable function of the aging process.

True, for some—and we need only look about the House for examples—this process moves more slowly. Unfortunately, for others, whether as a result of accident, disease or genetic factors, aging is accelerated—I believe the expression used is "premature aging".

It used to be that for many Canadians retirement from the labour force was a physical necessity. They simply could not work any longer. They could not cope with the physical and mental demands being made upon them day after day. Much of the rationale for the development of pension or retirement systems was to enable people to retire by ensuring that they had the financial resources to leave the work force. Pensions were an innovative move to help such people.

Today, of course, many people who retire are not physically or mentally hampered significantly from pursuing a career. Studies tend to support the observation that most early retirees—that is, men and women who leave the work force before the retirement age normally associated with their particular work of profession—still do so primarily for health reasons. This is a vital consideration to bear in mind before making any move to raise retirement ages.

Those who must leave the work force earlier because of their health should not find their financial situation inadvertently adversely affected. To counterbalance this possibility, many who advocate the pushing ahead of retirement years simultaneously propound the necessity for more comprehensive disability plans and suggest this avenue of assistance for those who find themselves unable to continue working.

Concern has been expressed for those faced with not only the measurable effects of physical deterioration but also the special difficulties imposed by the pressures of change, technological and social. It is unquestionably an over-generalization to say that you cannot teach an old dog new tricks. The fact of the matter remains, however, that many people as they grow older are not as flexible in their ways, ideas or approaches. In many areas of endeavour this rigidity is a definite liability both to the employee and the employer. Those who defend compulsory retirement at age 65 or earlier often point to this problem, and underline the humiliation to an employee who must be told he is incompetent, rather than that he has simply reached the normal retirement age.

Of course, the financial aspect of retirement is equally important. The costs are something that too few Canadians really consider in advance. A person who retires can rarely count on an income after retirement which compares at all favourably with his income from work. Income from government sources such as the Canada Pension Plan and old age security provides a secure base of income which is adequate to meet basic needs.

But what about the additional income the individual undoubtedly desires? This must come from private savings or a company pension. The latter, even where it does exist, will usually only replace a significant portion of pre-retirement income for an employee with a record of long service for the same employer. Also, private retirement savings are something to be encouraged. All members, I am sure, have welcomed the additional flexibility for registered retirement savings plans recently announced by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien). But personal savings of this type requires a good deal of advance planning.

Timing is clearly critical. A person who plans to retire at age 60 is going to have to start building up adequate income sources over a relatively short working career to provide for a longer retirement period than a 65-year-old would have. Conversely, someone who works to 70 years of age, as under this proposal, would have a relatively shorter period of retirement to plan for, on average, and a longer time to build up secure income sources for retirement.

The financial cost to the employer must also be remembered. An employer willing to provide for employees retiring at 60 or 65 will have to put more money into a pension plan than he would if employees generally were staying on until age 70. On the other hand, the employer will have to pay the wages of these senior employees, and many times will feel that a younger worker would be more productive at less cost.

This leads us into the economic aspects of retirement. All too little is known of the potential economic effects that a change in retirement ages could have. The age of workers in the labour force could affect levels of employment, the size of the work force and the general productivity. Purchasing patterns and savings rates would obviously be different if people were generally planning for retirement at 70 as opposed to 65 or 60. The economic burden on the working population which the retired population represents would also change dramatically. This ratio of retired to working Canadians will change over time in any case, and this is something that has caused concern for many experts.

The effect on employment opportunities bears some study, since it is one of the most controversial aspects of the whole retirement issue. Proposals for raising the retirement age are opposed by some on the grounds that they are taking opportunities for employment from the unemployed and denying advancement to younger workers. Countries like Denmark have instituted strong inducements to early retirement for such reasons. I hope to touch on their policies at greater length a bit later.

On the other hand, there are those who say that we should not just raise the retirement age, but abolish retirement altogether. There is no doubt that retirement is one of the most traumatic of life's experiences for the retired individual and his or her family. Many prove unable to cope with this situation, especially in a society based on the work ethic and oriented around the work experience.

Much of the problem is clearly a matter of planning on the part of the individual and society as a whole. Most people, it appears, still do not give retirement any serious thought until immediately before they get their gold watch, if then. Preparation for retirement in educational, psychological, financial and social terms should be undertaken by the individual. But this is changing, and increasing numbers of employers offer pre-retirement sessions in the same way as they offer training or orientation sessions for new employees. Community colleges and non-profit organizations are coming into the field as well. The scope and quality of the programs offered is improving and will continue to improve as more experience is gained and more feed-back received.

[Mr. Robinson.]

It is interesting to note that, when surveyed, the preferences and perceptions of persons five or ten years from retirement differed noticeably from those of persons already retired. This has been especially true of the particular topic with which we are dealing today—the age of retirement. It reflects an actual difference in attitude, but perhaps it is also a result of the experience of the retired person as opposed to the less realistic viewpoint of the person who has not yet experienced departure from the labour force.

Certainly, knowledge of and preparation for retirement are important. Another approach is to change the nature of retirement. The idea of gradual retirement—taking on less strenuous or demanding work; working shorter hours; having longer vacations; working into a second career where interest rather than income is the principal impetus—has been proposed, examined and tried at various times by various people. What we seem to be finding is that there is no single solution for everyone.

In this light we can examine some of the proposals which have been made concerning the retirement age both here and elsewhere. It is of interest to note that different countries have proposed different solutions to the various issues I have outlined. While the United States appears to be moving to extend the mandatory retirement age to 70, many European countries seem to be moving or already have moved towards earlier retirement. In Italy, where retirement is currently at age 60 for men and 55 for women, labour unions are striving to reduce the retirement age for men to 55. In France, employees in private firms who opt for retirement at age 60 rather than 65 are paid 70 per cent of their last salary until age 65, when their normal pension comes into effect. Companies employing these workers are expected to replace them with workers under 25. However, few appear to be taking advantage of this offer.

A somewhat similar program exists in Belgium which, I understand, requires employers to replace those opting for early retirement with unemployed people under 30 years of age. Belgium also prohibits pensioners from gainful employment, as do Finland and Ireland.

In Denmark, the government is proposing to pay an "after wage". Workers over 60 but under the national pensionable age of 67 will qualify for this voluntary retirement payment if they have contributed to an officially recognized unemployment insurance scheme for five years or more. The so-called "after wage" offered is only 90 per cent of the current maximum unemployment benefit offered in Denmark, but such unemployment benefits may rise as high as $15,000 per year. It is apparently the hope of the Danish government that such a program will generate new job openings for they young. However, it is my understanding that many in that country feel jobs vacated by older people will not be made available to the young but merely create an opportunity for employers to reduce their work force.

In the United States an entirely different approach to the retirement problem appears to be developing. Recent legislation passed by Congress and signed into law by President Carter on April 6 of this year raises the mandatory retirement age in the United States to 70 from age 65. The law will become effective in September 30 of this year for all federal government employees and effective January 1, 1979 for all other workers in the United States. The bill allows those between 65 and 70 to continue working as long as they meet a competency test. Senator Pepper, the 77-year-old Florida Democrat who sponsored the bill, now apparently wants to go even further and abolish age entirely as a criterion for mandatory retirement.

I hope I have made clear, Mr. Speaker, that at present there are conflicting points of view regarding the issues concerning retirement, and different governments have taken different approaches to solving these issues. This confusion of ideas and solutions may lead us to question whether the time is ripe for fundamental changes in the Canadian retirement system such as would be implied by the hon. member's proposal.

At present, as all members here are aware, the Canada Pension Plan and the Old Age Security Act are neutral regarding retirement age. Benefits are available at age 65, but beneficiaries are not required to be retired. It is true that many private employers in Canada have made age 65 the mandatory retirement age. Many others, however, have developed pension plans containing provisions which explicitly permit the deferment of an employee's retirement date. Thus, there is considerable flexibility already available in Canada and many Canadians are taking advantage of this flexible system.

To quote figures previously given, in September of 1977 there were some 188,000 persons over age 65 still in the labour force, of whom 64,000 were over 70. At the same time, there were many others who have entered retirement before age 65, for a variety of reasons. Nevertheless, this issue of retirement is one which must always be borne in mind, and I thank the hon. member for his efforts in bringing it to the attention of this House.

Mr. Hugh A. Anderson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and the Environment): Mr. Speaker, it is an honour to participate in this debate. Despite what the hon. member suggests in his motion, there are still many Canadians who work beyond age 65 and, in so doing, make a valuable contribution to our economy and our society.

Nevertheless, while we may not agree that the initiatives proposed by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) are necessarily the most appropriate for achieving the goal which he seeks to achieve, it is refreshing to hear some concerns being expressed for those Canadians who believe that their productive years are not necessarily over when they reach some arbitrary age such as age 65.

This is a considerably different approach from that taken by a number of persons who in the past have pressed not for the postponement of retirement for those who wish to continue in the labour force but, rather, for lowering the eligible age for a whole range of benefits such as old age security and under the Canada Pension Plan. Some have even proposed the imposition of a mandatory national retirement age of 65 or 60 years of age in order to thrust bodily out of the labour force our country's most experienced and skilled labour.

It is rather interesting to consider what reasons we might have for taking such steps. Why do people want to retire at age 65? The use of that figure as a pensionable age is commonly attributed to Bismarck, who actually set the minimum age for retirement at age 70. That occurred more than 100 years ago. Because of the low life expectancy at that time Bismarck apparently felt that a retirement age of 70 would ensure that very few people would live to collect any pension from the state. This is assuredly not the case at present. The majority of Canadians today live to collect their old age pensions for a considerable length of time.

The idea of retirement at age 65 has taken hold rather more slowly in this country than in others. Old age security benefits, for instance, became payable at age 65 only in 1970, and the Canada Pension Plan retirement benefit has been available at age 65 without retirement and earnings test only since 1975. I might note that Sweden, which is often held up as an example for social security, lowered its retirement age from 67 to 65 only in 1976.

Regardless of its origins, however, we do at the present time have 65 as a fairly constant retirement age throughout the world. It may have become normal because it is the age at which people become entitled to retirement benefits under the Old Age Security Act and the Canada Pension Plan. But I emphasize that there is no federal legislation making retirement mandatory at that age or at any other age.

Even where employees are offered earlier retirement there are usually not very many takers. I understand that since the public service has had retirement available at age 55 with 30 years' service, the average retirement age has dropped by only a year and is still well over 60. Yet we continue to hear the suggestion that the Government of Canada should consider dropping the retirement age for old age security and Canada Pension Plan purposes from 65 to 60 or even make retirement mandatory at that age. It seems we are in love with round numbers. Very few people have suggested a retirement age of 62, 63 or 61. They seem to want to take things five years at a time.

There is nothing magic about 60 as a number. I suspect that if we adopted that figure and the whole country followed suit, we would then find somebody suggesting that the age be reduced to 55 or some other number or perhaps have some other radical individuals suggesting that 50 would be even more appropriate. Clearly, the retirement age of 65 is not engraved in stone, but is there reason to believe that it is too high a retirement age? I do not know. Perhaps it is too low.

Since life expectancies and average health in our population seem to be on the rise, should we perhaps not be thinking in terms of going even beyond the suggestion of the hon. member for Edmonton West in encouraging people to remain in the labour force? If some sudden break-through in medical science raised the average life expectancy by 20 years overnight, I am sure most people in this country would wish to reconsider their plans regarding retirement age. Yet the interesting point is that average life expectancy has risen by more than 20 years in this century. Perhaps it is legitimate to ask whether Canadians wish to have this reflected only in the lengthening of the portion of their lives which is devoted to the pleasures of retirement, pleasures which are not unalloyed, as many older Canadians would quickly advise.

The idea of raising the retirement age, which is what is suggested by the hon. member, is not idle speculation. In 1933 retirement at age 65 was made compulsory in the public service of Canada in an effort to reduce staff during a time of severe austerity. Ten years later this country was at war and that order had to be suspended. In fact, all over this country thousands of retired people went back to work and proved quite capable of doing a job and doing it well. We are told that the world wars did much to change our views on the role which women should play in our social and economic life. Perhaps we should have learned the same lesson about the elderly and retirement.

A somewhat similar phenomenon might be occurring now. Much of the pressure to lower the retirement age in Canada stems from the belief that by retiring people early we will be making room for the hiring of unemployed and young people who are currently entering the labour market in great numbers. Unfortunately, there is really no reason to assume that retiring the old will make way for the hiring of the young. Employers will not find in an 18-year-old the skill and experience which is lost when a 60-year-old employee retires. Sometimes, also, employers may take the opportunity to automate jobs out of existence.

However, we can look a bit farther down the road and see that a change is taking place in our population which will cause this pressure for early retirement to slacken. I think this is very important. The present flood of young people on job markets is a result of the so-called baby boom which occurred after the second world war. It is no secret that this boom is long since over and that the birth rate has plummeted. Zero population growth is no longer a goal to be achieved; it is a fact which exists in Canada today. It is a goal which has been surpassed, at least in the sense that we can foresee our population beginning to decline because of the lower birth rate.

This means very simply that the surge of workers entering the job market will also begin to decline in years to come. We are told that in less than a generation from now it is more than possible that this country will have a negative unemployment rate and not a positive one. Yet in terms of what we are discussing this afternoon, if we accept the principle espoused by many Canadians, we will have the people with the most skill and experience leaving their jobs at earlier and earlier ages.

It seems quite possible that the pressures which now exist will be reversed in the future and more and more people will be suggesting 70 as the normal retirement age, as the hon. member has. In fact, as the population ages and the percentage of the population in the over 65 group continues to rise, it may be less of a suggestion and more of a necessity to keep people at work later in life. Such a prospect might cause far less dismay among the elderly than we suspect. I am sure other hon. members would find it interesting to know how many retired people would really have preferred to work for several more years before retiring. We might find that many would have preferred never to retire. I wonder if it would be possible to find out through Statistics Canada or some other agency how many Canadians were forced to retire from the private sector and how many actually retired by their own choice and not by that of their employers.

I wonder if we should address ourselves to questions such as: are there sufficient leisure time activities to ensure that Canadians will find a long period of retirement to be a satisfying and fulfilling experience? I am reminded of a story which was told to me by a chap. It dealt with what we were doing in the age of technology, the fact that we can fly from Paris to New York in four hours. It used to take eight hours four or five years ago, and much longer in the years before that. Then the question arises: what is the point of saving four hours if there is no reason for being there at an earlier time? What in fact has been saved?

Perhaps a similar situation arises when dealing with retirement and whether it is satisfying and fulfilling. I am sure for many people their greatest satisfaction and fulfilment lies in their work. Traditionally we do not expect artists, statesmen or politicians to stop working at the age of 65. No one asked A. Y. Jackson to hang up his paint brush at age 65. What type of world would we be living in today, if Winston Churchill had been forced to retire at age 65 in 1939? What would this House be like if members such as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) had taken advantage of retirement at age 60?

I feel the entire approach toward retirement in this country could benefit from a more flexible attitude. As we practise it in Canada at present, retirement is one of the most sudden and wrenching physical, financial and emotional dislocations which people undergo in their entire lifetimes. The stress of a sudden switch from regular work activity to inactivity has been known to cause premature aging and even death in people who might have had many years of a healthy and productive life if they had continued working in their occupations. This phenomenon is so common that doctors have referred to it as the "retirement disease".

There are numerous alternatives to an abrupt and final withdrawal at any age from the labour market. For example, some older individuals might prefer to keep working at productive activities but with shorter working hours, longer weekends or longer vacations. Others might wish to keep working but move to a job which would be less demanding physically but still productive. Some countries have introduced systems whereby a person over a given age can obtain a portion of the regular old age pension while continuing to work on a part-time basis. Therefore, to a large extent we applaud the motives of the hon. member for Edmonton West for moving this motion.

Even after retirement there should be activities—and not necessarily leisure activities—in which older Canadians can participate. The success of the New Horizons program is ample evidence of the useful part senior citizens can play if given the opportunity. Unfortunately we tend to think of senior citizens as a population of helpless individuals who require monetary support in ever-increasing amounts at even earlier ages, rather than as an untapped source of creativity, energy and productivity which would help improve the quality of life for all Canadians.

I would be remiss if I did not conclude my remarks by referring to a phenomenon which occurred in the last several years. Basically people can set their own retirement age by investing in registered retirement savings plans, which reduce their income tax loads during their highest years of income. In fact, there is a mechanism which guarantees a secure future regardless of their employer and many other factors. Perhaps this is something which should be looked at very closely. As most of them are set up at the present time, either a lump sum is paid at age 65 or it is in the form of an annuity at that same age. However, perhaps it would be in the interests of both the companies which provide this service and Canadians to have a more flexible retirement savings plan. The plan could be open-ended, so that an individual at age 55 or 58 could start his program because of illness or for some other reason. The age could be at his own choosing, realizing that if he does not wait until age 65, the amount of money he will receive will be proportionately less. It would be less because it is calculated on an actuarial table as to how long an individual will live beyond the age of 65.

In conclusion, there are many alternatives to retirement at age 65. Because of health, some people may wish to retire before that age. Government and private programs should have the flexibility to meet that need. The individual who works beyond the age of 65 for his own very good reasons also should have the benefit of this flexibility so that he can continue a productive and full life, if that is his desire. God help us if government and other agencies are somehow given the power to make all the decisions affecting our lives.

Mr. C. Douglas (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, certainly one can appreciate the reasons for which this motion was made. Currently a number of people are suggesting that retirement activities require a good, hard look.

I thank the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) for making this important topic the subject of the debate before the House at this time. While I agree with his motion in many ways, personally I take exception to his placing a definite cap or figure on the retirement age. Compulsory retirement should not be introduced at any age. A person is best suited to make up his own mind physically, mentally and in every other way as to when and if he should retire from the work force.

Perhaps I am borrowing from the hon. member himself, but if I can play the role of the devil's advocate this afternoon I should like to refer to some of the contrary points of view which have been expressed. I mean some of the proposals to make retirement compulsory at even earlier ages and the various reasons for them. I should like to bring to the attention of hon. members the arguments which have been advanced by those in favour of compulsory retirement ages. Certainly I would not suggest that all the arguments are valid, but they must be put on the record and discussed. It would be useful to delineate those views in order to clarify the implications of the motion of the hon. member.

It has been suggested that the retirement of older workers is essential in order to open up opportunities for younger employees to gain advancement and make a contribution to progress by bringing new ideas and attitudes into the work force. Undoubtedly there are different outlooks, on the part of individuals in their late sixties and those in their late forties, regarding corporate and social life. I notice there are some younger people present in the gallery this afternoon. Many of them indicate that they want an opportunity which is now being held by a senior member of a corporate firm or by a senior planner in a plant. Perhaps that senior employee is reaching age 60 or age 65, and if that man retires, vacancies will be opened up all the way down the line. Thus, younger employees will be able to move up more quickly and achieve the goals which they have set for themselves in their working careers.

However, I might add that all of us who are here probably thought the same way when we started in the work force, whether it was in teaching, in a profession as a doctor or a lawyer, or whatever our profession might have been. We have looked around and seen those who had served that profession or that field of endeavour well and had attained some degree of recognition, and with that degree of recognition had attained some degree of age as well. We tended to make a comparison between the fact that they perhaps might have been grey of beard or head, in some instances without hair whatsoever, and the conclusion that it was simply because they had reached a certain age and a certain stage in their development. We soon learned, once we had gone through the work force or the profession we had chosen for ourselves, that it is not advancing years that give you progress through that business or profession; it is through the attainment of knowledge and skills and a good amount of very hard work that these people reach the positions they hold and for which they are respected.

Our attitudes change as we go along in our lives from the time we are thirty, to forty, to fifty and so on. I think that really cannot be looked upon as a serious suggestion for bringing our retirement age down to a lower level, or even putting a cap on it, by any stretch of the imagination.

As the hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Robinson) said, somebody has said that you cannot teach an old dog new tricks. That may be true, but I can assure him that the old dog can certainly add a lot of smart wrinkles to the tricks he has already learned, and in so doing make the job he has easier for himself and for those who may follow. I do not think you have to teach an old dog new tricks; he can teach you something on the way through.

It must also be admitted that some workers will not be as capable of withstanding the rigours of employment at an advanced age as some others. This may be more obvious in physically demanding pursuits such as mining, forestry and farm labour, to some extent, though I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, there are farmers in my area who are exceptionally capable at the age of seventy, and some even beyond that.

If I might impart one small incident that happened recently in my area, let me state there was a lady in one small community who was slated to celebrate her 102nd birthday. It was a real event for the community. On the morning of the event there was quite a stir raised in the community because a number of people had tried to reach her on the telephone and could not get an answer. Of course, what immediately came to mind was that something had happened to this dear, sweet lady, and she was unable to answer the telephone. A convoy of cars took off and went to her house to see what had happened. They found out what had happened. This lady, knowing it was her 102nd birthday, was concerned that people would visit her house and find it not up to scratch. She was up on top of a twenty-foot ladder cleaning windows! That gives the House some indication of the physical capabilities of some of our senior citizens.

However, this applies as well to the white collar worker, to some extent, who perhaps cannot respond as flexibly to the pressures that can occur at critical times in almost any type of work environment. In some cases it is felt that employees lose the ambition and drive necessary to carry out their tasks, especially at more senior levels of industry. In such cases a mandatory retirement age avoids confrontation and possibly humiliation to the older worker by being demoted or worked around or even fired for incompetence after what may have been a distinguished career with faithful and competent service and work. If we take a very close look at the statistics, we will see that this has not proven to be the case.

It is the experience, knowledge and ability gained by that worker over the twenty, twenty-five or in some cases even thirty years he or she has spent in a particular field of endeavour that gives the competence that cannot be matched without that length of service and without that devotion, and in some cases, as has been said, without the blood, sweat, toil and tears that have gone into it.

Thus a mandatory retirement age has been said to maintain an upward mobility, avoid embarrassing decisions for the employer and allow the employee gracefully to withdraw from the labour force. We must always be reminded of what is lost when these years and years of experience and training come out of that labour force or particular profession.

Many have argued that compulsory retirement at an early age would also help to ease the unemployment situation among the younger workers of the labour force. It is pointed out, for example, that unemployment is highest among the very youngest workers. It is argued that by retiring the older workers, positions would be freed for younger persons to fill. I think I should say here that this is a rather unsatisfactory argument since such a move would only serve to redistribute unemployment rather than create any new employment.

I must also, if I may, make one personal observation here. This type of attitude tends to put into focus the growing attitude of some young people in our work force today, or of some people who are entering the work force today, that the only way they can be successful is by starting where their fathers left off. To me this is a rather sad commentary to be made, to some extent, because I believe the young men and women we have coming into our work force today do have the ability to start where their fathers started, from scratch, with the ability to show the devotion, aptitude and determination their fathers and our fathers showed before us in a career or a job. If there is any move to take away that urge from young people coming into industry or labour, it certainly should be looked upon as a serious thing for the people and the country.

It is also claimed that many employers would face critical financial problems if they were forced to keep on older employees who are in receipt of higher salaries as compared to less senior workers. It is true that pension costs might decrease in some cases since the employee could not draw a pension while still actively at work. However, it would be anticipated that health, disability and group life insurance premiums would certainly spiral upwards; thus a compulsory retirement age might have a disastrous effect on the cost of these pensions and medical benefits that are taken into the planning of the work force and industry today.

It has also been pointed out that whatever stigma is currently attached to the retired state would be reinforced if retirement was not a part of the normal course of working. The sense of discrimination and the loss of status and prestige felt by some older persons—

ELECTIONS

DATE OF NEXT ELECTION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, I rise under Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Since the Prime Minister has let election speculation get out of control over the last week, and his continued indecision and vacillation on the date of an election does not help our dollar or the unemployed, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie):

That this House direct the Prime Minister to follow an old maritime custom and fish or cut bait, rather than continue his ego cat-and-mouse games with the body politic at the expense of the Canadian public.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion would require unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

CHAIRMAN OF VIA RAIL—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Andy Hogan (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the fact that VIA Rail officially takes over most of the passenger train operations in Canada this month, in view of the fact that VIA Rail during the last few months has given the impression of vacillating and faltering in its decision-making process, and because the chairman of the board of this corporation—which was supposed to be set up to save the passenger train—is none other than Mr. Robert Bandeen, who was a quoted advocate just a few years ago of doing away with passenger trains and, moreover, since the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang), who is a gung-ho supporter of airports, air travel and highways, will be stipulating passenger service levels on various rail—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the hon. member has a motion, would he put it forthwith.

Mr. Hogan: I move, seconded by the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes):

That Mr. Bandeen be removed as chairman of the board of VIA Rail corporation.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) on a point of order.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I thought perhaps it may help the hon. member if he knew that Dr. Bandeen is no longer the chairman of VIA Rail.

LIABILITY FOR COSTS OF COURT ACTION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the outrageous suggestions being made to the effect that the award to Mr. Stopforth should be paid out of public funds, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker):

That this House rejects out of hand and unequivocally the notion that the Canadian public should foot the bill for the judgment against the Minister of Supply and Services for the libellous statements made by him outside this House.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for debate, pursuant to Standing Order 43, requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

TRANSPORT

VIA RAIL SERVICE

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Can he inform the House if VIA Rail, the government agency taking over rail passenger services, has under a proposed summer schedule change eliminated direct passenger service from eastern to western Canada which would mean a variety of inconvenient routes? For example, a passenger going from Ottawa to Banff will travel to North Bay, then to Sudbury by bus, where there will be a 12-hour wait for the train going farther west.

Will the schedule be implemented? If so, how does the minister justify the inconvenience and confusion which will be caused not only to Via Rail in terms of promotional work but also to the travelling public?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the proposed routes for VIA Rail are a matter of record. It is possible to go from eastern Canada to western Canada all the way through to Vancouver on a direct CN route or a direct CP route. Obviously, if one wants to make a change from the originating CN trackage to a Canadian Pacific destination, certain changes and waits are required. But that is true at the present time and is almost inevitable under any system.

What is intended in the VIA schedule is that a train going from the east through Montreal and Ottawa and then through the northern route across Canada to Winnipeg meets another eastern train from Toronto through Sudbury to Winnipeg and then, of course, from Winnipeg to Vancouver, each following respective CN-CP rail. Clearly, you cannot go from anywhere to everywhere in a direct way, and I should have thought that would be beyond what the hon. member would really demand.

Mr. Murta: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Mr. D. Lewis, of VIA Rail, has confirmed that if the temporary summer schedule—which is what we are talking about—is okayed by the Canadian Transport Commission, there will be no direct routes to southern Alberta and some vacation areas in western Canada.

Would the government consider maintaining existing CN and CP services for the summer months, so there will be direct train service from one part of the country to another and not this confusion, and so VIA Rail will not get off to what appears to be a very bad start in the mind of the public?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I regret very much the expressions of concern, even by those who are supporters of VIA Rail, about the schedule. It is impossible to do everything which everyone might like in an ideal way, but this may save the taxpayers $30 million to $40 million and that is important. There is, of course, a very good eastern Canadian connection through to Banff. That is essentially a Canadian Pacific route.

Those who originate on a northern or CN route clearly have to change somewhere. It is possible to change at the Sudbury-Capreol area. It is true that would involve a bus connection. It is possible to change at Winnipeg, where there would be no bus connection because both trains arrive at Winnipeg. So it is possible to go from the northern route through to the southern routes. However, if one is moving from what has been a CN route to a CP route, one must change trains: a change is necessary. It is not possible to have a connection between every point in Canada to every other point without a change. As a result of these changes we have better service at far less cost to the public. Both considerations, in my view, are very important.

Mr. Murta: Mr. Speaker, I agree with the minister in the long term. But certainly in the short term, for the peak period this summer when people do most travelling, the proposed change of schedule will cause a great deal of confusion. It will cause chaos and VIA Rail will get off to a bad start, which I do not think anyone in this House of Commons wants to see. I would ask the minister one final supplementary question. In VIA's future plans is there talk of any change which would eventually eliminate the Vancouver-Jasper-Edmonton-Winnipeg run which, of course, would be totally unacceptable to people in western Canada and to most Canadians?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, at this point there is no consideration of elimination of any runs. The Canadian Transport Commission produced its final plan, and that is the basic document with which VIA Rail is working. Of course, we all hope that VIA's management will come up with better ways of offering service to people who want to travel and will make proposals for schedule changes before the Canadian Transport Commission.

The immediate future, as fast as VIA can arrange it, will be to bring the trains from Toronto and Montreal together at one point in the Sudbury-North Bay area. Any problem which may arise in the first year of scheduling will therefore disappear. The very enthusiastic and energetic management of VIA and this whole new spirit of trying to make rail passenger service operate well again in Canada should be given a chance. We should avoid narrow, carping criticisms from day to day about some of the difficulties which are bound to occur.

VIA RAIL FARE STRUCTURE

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I would like a little clarification from the minister about VIA Rail. I think we all want to see it get off to a good start. My question concerns the fare structure, which I understand differs on CP and CN routes: one could wind up paying a substantially different price going from Montreal to Vancouver, for basically the same distance and the same service. Is this correct? If so, how long will it stay in place?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the rail structures we have been familiar with have been very different from CP to CN and even different in CN on different routes and on different days of the week. What VIA is now proposing, if it can get the necessary agreement and consent from the railways and the Canadian Transport Commission, is one uniform fare schedule in relation to movement across the country, regardless of the line of track on which the movement is made.

VIA is also attempting to bring about a fare schedule which is sensible from the point of view of the distance covered.

There is relativity with respect to rates between cities of equal distance apart and fares elsewhere in Canada. This is VIA's objective, and they are hoping to be able to move forward with that kind of rate schedule for June 1.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, can the minister give some assurance that a uniform rail fare structure will be in place by approximately June 1? Without this, VIA will be held responsible by passengers who are travelling the same distance and paying substantially different rates. Is this not likely to give VIA a black eye? One might ask why VIA took the service over before it was able to put a uniform rate schedule in place. Can the minister give assurance that this great possibility for misunderstanding and bad public relations will, in fact, be removed by roughly June 1?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, that is the objective. If VIA indeed takes over the service and is able to accomplish the changes required by June 1, that will be the case. If there are difficulties and we have rates which reflect different prices for the same distance in different parts of Canada, that will be a continuation of the existing situation and should in no way be laid at VIA's door by anyone.

● (1422)

Mr. Stanfield: May I, therefore, lay something at the door of the government? Advertising by the Canadian government office of tourism advertises VIA Rail vacations at a reasonable price, comfortable and different. They seem to be quite different today. Can the minister explain why the government is advertising in this way, putting VIA on the spot when he is in no position to give any assurance that this will in fact take place at any time on which he can put a firm date?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, VIA is already marketing the service and, therefore, in that sense will be associated with what is offered. I would like the hon. member to join in explaining that if there are any difficulties in moving toward a uniform, similar rate across the country it will not be VIA's responsibility but the inability to get, by that time, the necessary agreement from the railways. All that will remain is what has been in place for the past 10 or 15 years. I hope the hon. member will join me in hoping that the railways will co-operate in the ways required so that VIA Rail will be in a position to put a uniform, improved schedule in place, by June 1.

FINANCE

CDC INVESTMENT IN FOREIGN COUNTRIES

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Finance. Last year the Canadian Development Corporation acquired some $45 million worth of gas-producing property in Louisiana. Given the fact that we have over one million unemployed in our country, and the stated objective of CDC, according to the act, is to "assist in the creation or development of businesses, resources, properties and industries of Canada", does the government approve of CDC investment in the United States such as the purchase made in Louisiana?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I will look into the question and report to the hon. member.

Mr. Nystrom: In light of the fact the Canadian government controls some two-thirds of CDC voting stock and has two deputy ministers, including the minister's deputy, sitting on the board of directors, will the minister advise whether it is the intention of the government to direct the CDC to expand and invest in Canada rather than in other countries such as the United States?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, it is possible that in some circumstances they have decided, in the best interests of the corporation and its long-term goals, to invest in foreign ventures; but basically CDC is investing in Canada.

Mr. Nystrom: Quite apart from what the CDC is doing, there has been a dramatic increase of investment by Canadian companies and private citizens in other countries, primarily the United States. Is the minister concerned about this move in Canada regarding the flow of capital outside our country? If the Canadian government is concerned, is it contemplating any action to stop this trend?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, there is a free flow of capital between Canada and the United States. We are not planning to impose any foreign exchange control. It is basically a matter of the investment policies of the individual. There are some distorted factors in those figures. In some cases money went to the United States, but it has been a case of Canadians buying Americans' interests in Canada. It seemed as though it was investment in the United States, but it was just buying back Canadian interests.

PROPOSED EXTENSION OF TARIFF CUTS—EFFECT ON EMPLOYMENT

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Finance. It concerns the minister's decision to extend permanently the 1973 tariff cuts which were due to expire on June 30 this year. Will the minister tell the House, in light of the promise made by his predecessor, John Turner, to monitor the impact of the cuts, what the precise effects of the tariff reductions were in terms of jobs; and, further, will he now table whatever reports have been made of the impact of the tariff reductions?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not know if there is any monitoring of the precise tariff cuts but I will inquire. If we have that information, I will gladly report it to the hon. member.

Mr. Ritchie: It appears that the minister made the decision to renew the cuts on such items as drugs and pharmaceuticals, kitchen and dinnerware, furniture, house trailers, photographic equipment, all of which could be produced by Canadian industry, without having any real information on the effect of the cuts in the first place. Will the minister tell the House why he did not initiate a full-scale study of the impact of the cuts, especially in light of Mr. Turner's promise to this House?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I said that I would inquire and report my findings to the hon. member. Of course, these tax cuts were made at that time to help reduce the cost of living in Canada.

[English]

Mr. Ritchie: By unilaterally renewing the tariff reductions, the minister seems to have thrown away a good negotiating card. Will he tell us why, since the United States has made public a firm list of non-negotiable items, he has chosen to concede permanent reductions in these important tariffs at this time?

Mr. Chrétien: I have extended the temporary cuts. We have not made them definitive.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

INVESTIGATION INTO SALE OF MILITARY EQUIPMENT TO IRAN

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance, who I understand is the Acting Minister of National Revenue or responsible for reporting to the House on that department. Last week I asked the Solicitor General whether the RCMP investigation into the Department of Supply and Services-managed operation called Project Iran had been completed. I have since learned that it has not been completed and is still the subject of ongoing investigation.

Prior to the RCMP involvement there was also an investigation by auditors and investigators of the Department of National Revenue respecting some of the Canadian paticipants in that particular project. My question for the Minister of Finance is this: Can he tell us whether that investigation into certain tax practices by the Department of National Revenue has been completed?

[Translation]

Mr. Yves Demers (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I shall inquire as to the question put by the hon. member and gladly answer him in writing in the next few days.

[English]

Mr. Lawrence: On matters of importance such as this, it would certainly be desirable to have a minister of the Crown give an answer. There must be a minister who is responsible in this chamber for the Department of National Revenue. It would be a fairly simple matter for such a minister to find out whether or not the investigation has been completed. Could I possibly have that information tomorrow, or within 24 hours?

[Mr. Ritchie.]

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Solicitor General): The hon. gentleman is very familiar with the policy. When I spoke to him privately, I felt he recongnized the sensitivity of this issue. He will, indeed, be given the information he is seeking when the investigation is complete and when charges have been proceeded with, should any charges have been laid.

Mr. Lawrence: My question related to a separate investigation in connection with an entirely different matter. If the Solicitor General had been listening, he would have realized I was referring to a Department of National Revenue investigation, not to an RCMP one. If there is a minister in the House responsible for the Department of National Revenue, could I please have an undertaking about this information?

Mr. Blais: In replying to the earlier question, I thought the hon. gentleman would understand that any investigation in relation to this matter is subject to the utmost confidentiality until such time as charges are laid.

ELECTIONS

DATE OF NEXT ELECTION

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. As it has been widely reported by the press and members of the Prime Minister's party that a decision to call a general election is being held up because of unsatisfactory poll results coming out of Toronto and southern Ontario, might I ask the Prime Minister whether he has now decided when he is going to call an election or whether he has chosen to continue to govern by Gallup poll?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I do not know why the hon. member is so eager to retire his seat early. I thought he would be happy that I had decided to continue the session a little longer.

Mr. Hees: Would the Prime Minister be willing to cover his last statement with a cash bet of any size respecting the ability of his candidate to defeat me in a general election? Is he willing to put his money where his mouth is?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

FUNDS FOR REFORESTATION

Mr. Leonard Hopkins (Renfrew North-Nipissing East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State (Environment). Because of the continuing need for effective reforestation programming, and because of the need to upgrade certain species of trees in Canada in order to provide for the future requirements of Canada's forest-based industries, is the government prepared to make a commitment that an adequate percentage of the dollars earned through our international sales of forest products will go toward reforestation and upgrading of our forests in various woodland areas of Canada? The upgrading of our forests would help make us more competitive.

Second, is the minister's department continuing to do research work to develop and produce particular disease-resistant types of trees in order to protect future forest resources from natural enemies such as Dutch elm disease, spruce budworm, and so forth?

Hon. Len Marchand (Minister of State (Environment)): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Forestry Service has a program under which it is developing better species and better productivity, more disease-resistant, more insect-resistant, and so on. Discussions are now going on with a number of provinces relative to reforestation. It is hoped that my colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration, will be able to reach agreement with a number of provinces to implement reforestation programs using Canada Works funds.

With regard to basing possible support for regeneration programs on the value and amount of forest products exported from Canada, I must advise the hon. member that the federal government has no such plans.

EMPLOYMENT

ASSISTANCE TO RCA TO PREVENT LAY-OFFS

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. We in eastern Ontario were very discouraged to learn that RCA has announced the closing of another plant in Ontario. Two years ago, 440 jobs were lost in Renfrew. RCA is going to put another 300 people out of work, allegedly because its plant is not competitive and needs to be automated.

Since the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce is not here, I wonder if the Minister of Employment and Immigration can comment on the steps his department will take to try to find jobs for the 300 people who will be unemployed in an area which already has 12 per cent unemployment. Would the minister take up this matter with the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and encourage him, through his department, to allow a grant to RCA in Smiths Falls, Ontario, so that the plant there can be automated, become competitive and keep people working?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I have asked my departmental officials to see if we can set up in that particular region a Manpower consultative agreement so that we can do everything possible to find positions for the 290 workers who are affected. We have put this into place in other areas and we have been particularly successful. That is the downside end of the operation. I will discuss the hon. member's representation with my colleague, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

HIGH WATER LEVEL OF LAKE ONTARIO

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Hastings): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State (Environment). The levels of Lake Ontario are already dangerously high. The input into Lake Ontario is close to 400,000 cubic feet per second and the outflow is in the neighbourhood of only 280,000 cubic feet per second. There is a possibility of flooding in the very near future. Would the Minister of State (Environment) indicate whether he will take steps to increase the outflow through the St. Lawrence waterway?

An hon. Member: Pull the plug.

Hon. Len Marchand (Minister of State (Environment)): Mr. Speaker, my department is monitoring the situation carefully all the time. I am advised that the outflows from Lake Ontario are at their maximum. We will try to make sure that the outflows are adequate, and we will do everything we can.

Mr. Ellis: Mr. Speaker, since the outflows just a week ago were 40,000 cubic feet per second higher than they are now, I suggest to the minister that his department is not doing everything it can and I ask that it do a little more.

ELECTIONS

DATE OF NEXT ELECTION

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. In view of the uncertainty about our dollar, our economy and our country, would the Prime Minister agree with me that uncertainty about the election date adversely affects those matters and that he has some duty to tell the Canadian people when he will announce the date of the election, or does he expect this parliament to continue in the normal fashion because he is not going to do anything until the fall?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I hope it is not too much to expect that this House will continue in a normal fashion.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I will not argue with the Prime Minister about what is normal in this House at any given time, especially with this government. Do I understand from the Prime Minister that if the legislative program proceeds in an orderly way—whenever the government introduces it—this House will continue and that after a normal summer recess other things will happen in the fall?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I understand the hon. member is trying to change the constitution to have a set date determined for general elections, but this is not the practice in this country and the House usually learns about dissolution when it happens.

PUBLIC SERVICE

LIABILITY FOR COSTS OF COURT ACTION

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the retiring Minister of Justice and it relates to the judgment obtained by Mr. Larry Stopforth against another retiring minister, the Minister of Supply and Services. Can the Minister of Justice tell the House whether the policy of this government will be to pay the judgment, or will he confirm the proper decision on government policy not to pay the judgment of $10,000 and legal costs for a minister who defames and libels a public servant?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, at the moment all I am considering is awaiting advice from counsel as to whether the case should be appealed. In line with a number of precedents, the Crown acted for the defendant in that case on the basis of past experience and practice within the government. If past practice and past experience is any guide and if no appeal is taken, the Crown will pay the damages.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I am chagrined to hear that answer from the minister.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: In view of the judgment of Mr. Justice Lieff which exonerates Mr. Stopforth with respect to the allegations make by the Minister of Supply and Services inside and outside this House, will the minister do the decent thing and reinstate Mr. Stopforth in the position he held before this situation? Second, will the minister stand in his place like a man and apologize to Mr. Stopforth?

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): And pay the bill.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Davenport.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

CLARIFICATION OF LEGISLATION RESPECTING MORTGAGES

Mr. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Considering that mortgage prepayment penalties are a growing source of complaint for consumers, and the claim that federal law seems to be unclear whether after five years mortgage holders may give three months' notice of prepayment and thereby avoid the assessment of prepayment charges, and in view of the fact that mortgage companies are inconsistent in their assessment of prepayment penalties to mortgage holders, assessing no charge to home owners with mortgages under 8 per cent but charging extra interest to others, could the minister inform this House what steps he is taking to clarify the principle of law contained in the Interest Act of Canada in order to protect consumers better?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the borrowers and depositors protection legislation which was tabled by my predecessor in the last session of parliament would have repealed the Interest Act. It contained provisions to control conditions for mortgage prepayment in favour of the mortgagor. That bill died on the order paper at the end of the last session in September. Since that time, we have been consulting business and consumer interests in order to improve the bill. It is our hope to introduce an improved bill with mortgage prepayment provisions as soon as possible.

I think I should point out, however, that the hon. member for York-Simcoe said, on behalf of the Conservative party, that if we were to reintroduce that bill he would do everything possible to oppose it.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

INDUSTRY

EDC ASSISTANCE TO DEVELOP STEEL MILL IN U.S.A.—EFFECT ON CANADIAN JOBS

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce I would like to address my question to the Minister of Finance. My question concerns the $47 million in financing assistance by the Export Development Corporation to a company called Co' steel to develop a steel mill in New Jersey.

In view of the fact that Lasco, a subsidiary of Co'steel which is located in Oshawa, currently exports about 60 per cent of its production to the United States, and that the new plant to be developed in New Jersey with EDC financing will be selling the same products, can the minister guarantee that this deal will not jeopardize in the long run the 650 jobs at Lasco in Canada?

FISHERIES

DECLINING LOBSTER FISHERY—REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment. According to all reports, inshore lobster fishermen along the south shore of Nova Scotia are experiencing a very serious decline in their catches, which in some cases is causing severe economic hardship. I therefore ask the minister, in light of the controversy over the effect of offshore lobstering on the inshore stocks, if he has had an opportunity to evaluate the study which I believe was undertaken concerning this matter and, if so, what steps he is planning to take, if any, to help restore the inshore lobster fishery?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I am advised by the scientists in my department that the conclusions based on this study can only be drawn at the end of the coming season after more research is undertaken. We hope that by the end of the summer season we will have the type of information on which to base changes in management policy if required. The problem to which the hon. member refers is a very serious one and I recognize it.

BANK ACT

PROPOSED AMENDMENTS THERETO

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Two or three weeks ago the minister and I had exchanges with regard to the introduction of amendments to the Bank Act. At that time the matter was in the hands of the inspector general of banks. Surely the minister has now had the bill back and has put it before the legislative committee of the cabinet. Can he give us a firm date, in view of the fact that an election is not coming right now? Can he give us the answer so we may have some intelligent thinking about the act?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the act will be ready soon. We are awaiting finalization of the translation into French.

ENERGY

DRILLING FOR OIL AND GAS WELLS ON CROWN LANDS

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Last week the Canadian Petroleum Association released data indicating that oil and gas drilling activity in Canada's frontier lands under federal jurisdiction continued to decline in 1977, and that out of a total of 6,200 wells drilled in Canada only 28 were drilled on federal lands. This means, in percentage terms, that activity on federal lands is one-eighth of what it was in 1972, five years ago. Can the minister tell the House if this decreasing oil and gas drilling on federal lands is in keeping with federal government policy?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, it is true that proportionately there has been less activity in the frontier regions than there has been in other parts of the country, particularly in Alberta and British Columbia. We regret that there has not been more absolute activity in the north, although I must point out to the hon. member that in terms of absolute activity it has held even for the last couple of years. However, I regret that there has not been more.

I believe that if the opposite parties were to have their way, there would be considerably less drilling, because they have gone on record as saying they would abolish Petro-Canada and, as hon. members must know, one-half of the oil wells drilled in the frontier areas of Canada were drilled by Petro-Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Andre: I think the minister had better get better advice from his officials in order not to put forward erroneous information like that.

Mr. Gillespie: It is your leader who gave it out.

Mr. Andre: Since at least part of the decreased activity in Canada's frontier lands is due to the fact that there is almost universal dissatisfaction with the royalties and land use regulations spelled out in Bill C-20, can the minister indicate the government's plans with regard to northern royalties and land use regulations? Is it the intention of the government to proceed with that legislation in what remains of this session of parliament, or are his officials currently trying to draft a new and better set of regulations which will entice other oil companies, not just those which have nowhere else to go?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member must know, with respect to the increased activity out west, that the reason there is increased activity in the west is that the finding rate there has been significantly better than it has in the north, in the frontier regions of the country. I think the federal government's incentives with respect to oil exploration and development out west have been a significant factor, the reason being that there is not a spare drilling rig anywhere in the country now. So it is not true to suggest that there is not a lot of drilling activity in this country. There is more than ever before.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gillespie: With regard to the second question respecting the legislation now before the House which has received first reading, I would be very glad to take that up with the House leader.

Oral Questions

FINANCE

POLICY RESPECTING GOLD RESERVES

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that the government has tried all sorts of measures in vain attempts to bolster the Canadian dollar, and in view of the fact that the U.S. decision to sell some of their gold reserves has moved that country's dollar up sharply on world markets, is it the intention of the government to sell any of Canada's gold reserves?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker, it is not the intention of the government to do so.

Mr. Clarke: Does the government have any other plans in mind to shore-up the Canadian dollar?

Mr. Chrétien: We are following the same policy, and I am glad to report that today our dollar strengthened in relation to the U.S. dollar.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PENITENTIARIES

EFFECT OF LONGER SENTENCES ON PRISON ENVIRONMENT

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. It concerns the Canadian Penitentiary Service and specifically the situation wherein more and more convicted persons are sentenced to longer sentences as a result of amendments to the Criminal Code. It is projected that in ten years some 900 inmates may be serving sentences with little hope of parole for a prolonged period of time. The Solicitor General was quoted last week as saying that this situation would demand changes in the prison environment. I wonder if he would tell the House specifically what changes he proposes within that environment to deal with what is obviously a serious situation which will become more serious with time.

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman knows that, in effect, his figures may be completely out of line. In my view, the figures he has quoted are unrealistic. However, that does not lessen the difficulties which he has identified and which I identified previously. We are dealing with that problem. If the hon. gentleman has read the report of the subcommittee of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, he knows that they also addressed themselves to that problem. We are looking at a number of options and alternatives.

Mr. Jarvis: If the Solicitor General is looking at a number of options, I would ask him to reconsider his earlier refusal to accommodate one very important tool in dealing with the serious situation of prison environment; that is his refusal to permit a permanent reference to that subcommittee whose work I presume he values because it was a unanimous report which has been partly implemented, although not as fast as we would hope. He has refused to permit that permanent reference. Would the Solicitor General not take advantage now of the ability of that subcommittee to assist in dealing with the problem which, as he points out quite accurately, is a serious one in the prison environment?

[Mr. Gillespie.]

Mr. Blais: I have indicated to the hon. member, and indeed to the committee, that I am ready to discuss the report of the subcommittee on a regular basis. As I understand it, I have been asked to do so again. I feel that the committee has done a yeoman job in overviewing the recommendations of the subcommittee. It continues to do so, and I do not see at this time any need to provide a permanent reference.

RAILWAYS

REPRESENTATION SECTION OF BRITISH COLUMBIA RAILWAYS' LINE NOT BE ABANDONED

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport and concerns a report by a provincially-appointed royal commission into the operation of British Columbia Railways and their recommendation to abandon the very important 200-mile section of that railway in the north, a section which is very critical to the resource harvest in northeastern British Columbia and crucial to retaining 750 jobs in the city of Fort Nelson.

Can the minister tell the House whether there have been any discussions with the province of British Columbia on the possible involvement of federal resources in the maintenance of this railway and its possible extension, what is the outcome of these discussions and what possible help can the federal government provide the province to keep this railway in operation?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, no such discussions have come to my attention up to this point at least. I would be glad to learn the provincial reaction to the commission's report.

Mr. Oberle: Can the minister inform the House whether there has been an official submission to his department from the province of British Columbia, from both the rail authority there and the government? Is the minister saying that there has been no approach?

● (1452)

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, obviously, as my previous answer indicated, I have not any personal knowledge of that. But clearly, it may well have been a matter of discussion between my officials and those of the province, and I would want to determine that before I answer the question.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

FUNDING FOR POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. In his absence, perhaps I might direct it to his parliamentary secretary. In view of the importance of the post-secondary training of young persons from Indian reserves in obtaining jobs, and the indication by departmental officials that there is to be a shortfall in funding of some $500,000 in educational grants from the Sudbury district office of Indian Affairs, which would prevent many young persons from taking this post-secondary training, will the minister review this urgent problem and obtain the additional funding for education?

Mr. Ross Milne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I would be glad, on behalf of the minister, to give an undertaking to review this matter. I would point out that the minister first has the responsibility to satisfy the statutory requirements, but because of the tight budgeting situation there are a number of areas of concern. These are being reviewed. I understand that a submission has been made to Treasury Board, so perhaps before too long a definite answer could be given to that request.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

REMOVAL OF POLLUTANTS FROM GREAT LAKES

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State (Environment). Last week the Ontario environment ministry was moved to warn Canadians, specifically in the Oakville-Burlington area, of the dangers of eating certain fish found to be contaminated with unacceptable levels of Mirex and PCBs which, as the minister knows, are directly linked to cancer and other diseases.

On behalf of the safety of some 30 million North Americans living around the Great Lakes and its waterways, I would ask the minister what steps this government has taken or is taking to eliminate PCBs and other harmful chemicals from the Great Lakes and what pressures, if any, are being made on the United States to do likewise.

Hon. Len Marchand (Minister of State (Environment)): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian government has made very great strides in the elimination of Mirex and PCBs and we expect to take further steps in the near future. As a matter of fact, the elimination of PCBs from the environment was announced by my predecessor. As a result, I think there has been a much greater awareness on the part of all Canadians of the effects of PCBs. We are working very closely with provincial governments and also with the United States.

Mr. Jelinek: Mr. Speaker, I have been receiving similar assurances from this government since 1974, only to find the situation worsening year by year. In view of the fact that these harmful toxics, in spite of what the minister says, are still being used by private industries and some major institutions not only in the United States but here in Canada, will the government take immediate steps either to ban all further use of PCBs and other similarly dangerous chemicals, or assure the destruction of such toxics by burning them at very high temperatures, as presently is the case in two U.S. states, namely, Alabama and Texas?

Mr. Marchand: Mr. Speaker, it is our intention to eventually eliminate all uses of PCBs in Canada.

Mr. Jelinek: When.

Mr. Marchand: It is a matter of time, Mr. Speaker. There are some very important industrial uses of PCBs right now—for example, in transformers and capacitors—and you just cannot eliminate them overnight. However, there are no PCBs being manufactured in North America right now and no new uses of PCBs are being allowed in Canada. I think these are great steps, but there is just no way we can, overnight, eliminate the uses of PCBs, for instance, in transformers.

An hon. Member: In five years?

Mr. Marchand: I cannot give the hon. member any definite time, but very definitely we will move toward getting rid of all uses of PCBs in the Canadian environment.

NATIONAL RESEARCH COUNCIL

PROPOSED REMOVAL OF EMPLOYEES FROM CHURCHILL, MAN.

Mr. Cecil Smith (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Public Works and Minister of State for Science and Technology. The National Research Council in Churchill now has 22 families stationed there. Plans are under way at the present time to remove eighteen of these families from Churchill. The reason given is that the government can no longer afford to maintain its personnel in remote parts of Canada. I should like to ask the minister what action he is taking to stop this move.

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Public Works and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I do not think the assertion that the government cannot maintain its personnel in remote parts of Canada is correct. There are many areas, particularly throughout the north, where the government maintains a great many personnel. A decision has been taken by the National Research Council that it can discharge its responsibilities at the rocket range in Churchill even though moving the personnel out to Gimli. It is the present intention to locate these personnel within the province of Manitoba, but further south in the area of Gimli.

Mr. Smith (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, only two years ago the federal and provincial governments spent $50 million rebuilding the town of Churchill. The population is now down to 1,500. The recreational complex cost $11 million to construct. The town can no longer support this complex as it sees the federal government removing its personnel from the community. I would ask the minister to do everything possible to retain these eighteen families in Churchill.

EMPLOYMENT

CAREER RESOURCE PROGRAM FOR YOUTH

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Fort Garry school division No. 5 in Winnipeg has developed a career resource centre course which basically assists a student to choose a career before he leaves high school. They are working with Manitoba businesses in advance to find jobs for 100 students upon graduation. As there is record youth unemployment in Canada today, will the minister have his Winnipeg officials contact the school division in order to make the career resource program fully successful and expand it to other schools which need the assistance and resources of manpower?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, we are already working in concert with many businesses across the country under the aegis of chambers of commerce and boards of trade. The pilot project mounted by the Bank of Montreal in Montreal, Halifax and Winnipeg is working very, very effectively. If this particular program, or any of our others, dovetails we will have a look at it.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

POLICY ON INTERNATIONAL ECONOMIC BOYCOTTS

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. In the government's first semi-annual report on its policy on international economic boycotts, tabled February 9, it was stated that the second such report would be tabled in the House in "early March". We are now approaching the end of April and the report has not been tabled. Would the Prime Minister tell the House when it will be tabled?

In this connection, will the government now give some fresh review to this policy, in light of Bell's recent contract with Saudi Arabia which is apparently acceptable for Canadian government support including Export Development insurance, even though Bell has given a declaration to Saudi Arabia which purports to be simply a statement that neither Bell nor any of its affiliates presently has any kind of commercial dealings with Israel but is, in fact, an integral part of this contract whose term extends at least five years into the future; and, finally, as well the possible existence of restrictions under Saudi law for entry into that country based on the applicant's religion?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, on the latter part of the question, this matter was drawn to my attention late last week and I asked that it be looked into and that I be informed as well as the minister. I hope that shortly we will be able to answer the hon. member's question on that point. On the first point, I understand the second review is ready and will be tabled very soon. The government presently is working on a statement which will be made at the time of tabling.

DREE PROGRAMS FOR DEPRESSED AREAS

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. Does he have any present intention of modifying DREE grants or loans programs within his department to expedite job-creation in depressed regions such as Nova Scotia?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Lessard (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, we have indeed studied our legislation and the possibilities that it offers and we could probably consider some changes but not in the near future. We have legislation in force which enables us to give refundable grants, that is interest-free loans. We can also guarantee loans and we regularly do so, but we cannot do much more than support the applications we receive and organize projects in differents areas such as the Atlantic area, as we are endeavouring to do. However, we must wait for industrialists and promoters to decide to develop some industrial potentialities or resources.

TRANSPORT

OPERATION OF VIA RAIL

Mr. Andy Hogan (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport in connection with his answers to questions put by the hon. member for Halifax and others. I agree that time has to be given to VIA Rail, but my question goes to the substance of VIA Rail. Will the decisions which are to be made to reroute certain phases of rail transportation across the country be made exclusively by VIA Rail as a special corporation, or will they be made through the Minister of Transport?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, a good deal of initiative and positive proposals can come forward from VIA Rail. If it is for the addition of service, it is fairly easy for them to make arrangements for such to happen. However, if it is for the discontinuance of the service, this, of course, is a role for the Canadian Transport Commission and VIA Rail cannot unilaterally act to remove the service.

PRIVILEGE

MR. LANG; MR. STEVENS—UNPARLIAMENTARY LANGUAGE

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I rise on question of privilege. On last Thursday there were several references to me made by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) arising on a point of order at that time, and I believe that they are, on examination, unparliamentary language. The hon. member for Grenville-Carleton indicated that he would look at them and, if he found them to be so, he would withdraw them. I would suggest that it would be appropriate if he now do so, because to me they are clearly within the range of words referred to in Erskine May's 19th edition at page 445 as words of an abusive and insulting character, and are a personal attack or reflection upon my character. I would, therefore, ask that the offensive words relating to the ethics of an alley cat or the morals of an alley cat be withdrawn.

It is clear that they are the kinds of words which would, in the words of Beauchesne, be of a nature that they are likely to create disorder, and certainly they are abusive and insulting language.

Mr. Dick: He doesn't like alleys or alley cats.

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I listened very carefully to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang), and I also listened to him the other evening when he frothed in his prissy way about our exchange in the House of Commons. I want to—

Mrs. Holt: Shame on you.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): —say to you, sir, that the statements of the minister which gave rise to the exchange were the grossest misrepresentation of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark), and I for one do not intend to sit idly by and allow that thing to happen in this House of Commons about my leader—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): —especially when such a personal and vindictive attack comes from such an empty vessel in such an empty government.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Quite frankly, sir, that is intolerable to me. The minister likes to jump into the ring and pretend to fight but, when somebody hits him, he starts to blubber, and he is starting to blubber today. I do not have to remind anybody that it was not the Leader of the Opposition who has presided over the decay in our economy and the decay in our national—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We are dealing with a procedural matter, and before we go too far along this road we ought to bear in mind that we have two outstanding procedural matters in front of us of a very similar nature. On Thursday night at the conclusion of the budget this exchange, which is now the subject of argument, took place. Points of order were raised at that time and it was indicated then that the matter would be given consideration by the Chair.

That matter has now been reraised by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang). It gives the Chair the always difficult decision of determining whether or not the remark made by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker), having to do with the ethics or morals of the minister, has to be withdrawn in terms of parliamentary precedents. I must say that the matter is made a little simpler by a balancing event which took place at noon the following day when, during the course of an exchange between the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien), the Minister of Finance made a statement about which the hon. member for York-Simcoe complained in a similar way. That statement was, and I quote from page 4744 of Hansard:

> Mr. Speaker, again we see how this member of parliament can be dishonest with the House of Commons.

I had indicated at the time that this was my recollection of the way the minister had said it.

Before we go too far in this matter, I do not believe that I, or the members of parliament who have had any experience in this House, or for that matter the members of the public, I am sure, are about to fall over in a faint at the sound of the words that were used in either of those occasions. But that is not the point.

The point is simply that in the conduct of our debate we are entitled and encouraged to say vigorous and strident things about the performance of people on opposite sides of the House and other parties. This is the way parliament should operate. However, in the course of doing so, whenever we cross the line and enter into personal reflections, instead of reflections on matters of policy or performance of the duty of hon. members or of a party, and things of that nature, we always get into an unfortunate incident, such as these instances that are before us at this time.

Frankly, I do not take as much umbrage at such instances as my predecessors have done. However, I wish to remind the House that what my predecessors were doing, and what I have to do, is not guard my own sensitivity to these kinds of remarks, but guard the sensitivity of the House of Commons now and for all time in the future.

We must adhere to a certain standard of language and a certain standard of conduct in the House, in order to maintain a proper standard of dignity in respect to the debates here.

Inevitably, every time we get away from the substance of debate and cross over into the area of personal reflection, on the one side or the other, we always run a very high risk of putting that whole sense of dignity and decorum in jeopardy.

I could quite easily come to the conclusion that neither of these exchanges was unparliamentary in nature and neither ought to be withdrawn. However, my inclination, rather than letting the matter extend any further, is to indicate if the one is, then so is the other, but the much safer course is to preserve for the future that level of decorum in this House and that we not cross over from the general area of discussion before the House into matters of personal reflections. In other words, in the circumstances in which the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton found himself, it was quite open to him to get up in his place, if he had the opportunity during the course of the debate, and say that he was very critical of the performance of the Minister of Transport and that he found that it, in fact, may have some other reflections, about which he could have asked the House to conclude. Similarly, the Minister of Finance on Friday could have stood up and said that "the hon. member for York-Simcoe has said this and, Mr. Speaker, here is the record, and I want members to judge."

Not that I want the House to judge whether it is ethical or moral, but on Thursday night the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton went one step further when he stood up and said the minister has the morals of an alley cat—and, similarly, on Friday when the Minister of Finance said that the hon. member can be dishonest in this way—instead of putting the facts before the House and asking the House to judge. Both these instances have crossed the line into personal reflections, which, in the first place, are irrelevant to the debate, and in the second place call into great jeopardy the standard of conduct to which members of parliament should adhere. My preliminary instincts would be to say to both members, in the circumstances, that the safest course would be not to argue the matter further but to withdraw the remarks that have been made, to preserve parliamentary decorum, and let us get on with other business.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, having regard to your ruling, I withdraw my remarks. I am one who has tried most of the time to respect the rules of the House of Commons, and I intend to respect them now. I do not, therefore, intend to raise the remarks made by the Minister of Transport as reported at the bottom of page 4727 of Hansard when he referred to me. I think it is best that the matter now be closed.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not know if my comments were unparliamentary when I spoke but, if they were, then I withdraw them. In reply to the remarks made by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) as stated to him by the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) when he got up in the House and said that it was the first time he was aware that I would appear next Tuesday, I have something to put on the record so that the people can judge the truth of the matter. It is the second report from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, and I will table it. It was agreed on April 4, 1978, at 3.20—and the hon member for York-Simcoe was there—that I was to be in the committee next Tuesday. The hon. member may have said something that was not dishonest, but it was not the truth.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Minister of Finance has touched on the difficulty that we face, and I take it he has withdrawn the allegation that the hon. member for York-Simcoe had done anything dishonest as was described. There is no objection to any member putting facts on the record and asking the House to judge. In case there is any doubt, I would ask the minister to repeat to the House that what he is doing is asking the House to pass judgment and that he is not making an allegation of dishonesty against the hon. member for York-Simcoe.

Mr. Chrétien: I am tabling the truth; that is all.

MR. LAWRENCE—ROLE OF MINISTER OF NATIONAL REVENUE VIS-À-VIS HOUSE OF COMMONS

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege on a completely different matter which affects all members of this House. It is a basic tenet of the British parliamentary system that the ministry, collectively and individually, is responsible to the House of Commons. We are, hopefully, in an embarrassingly short period when the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Guay) does not sit in this chamber.

Last Thursday or Friday when I spoke to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) about this matter I understood from him, or perhaps I should say I misunderstood from him, that he was taking upon his shoulders the position of acting Minister of National Revenue, or at least would be responsible to this House for that department. Obviously I misunderstood what the minister said because today, when a question was directed to him relating to that department, he sat in his seat waiting for someone who is not a member of the ministry to answer the question.

I think this is a serious matter, Mr. Speaker. We should have someone responsible for each of the departments in this House. This is not to say there has to be a minister in this House for each of the departments, but there has to be a minister responsible in the House for each of the departments. There is a difference. That has certainly been the parliamentary tradition. If it is abridged, I suggest to you it destroys one of the basics of the British parliamentary procedure under which we operate and sometimes suffer. Nevertheless, it is there.

I think we should know—and I hope you do, sir—if there is a member of the ministry who is responsible in this House for the Department of National Revenue. I suggest to you, sir, if you do not know the answer either, we should get that answer from you, sir, and you should use your office to get it from either the government House leader or Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), or whoever is in control of the government.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): With respect, Mr. Speaker, I suggest the hon. member may be confusing two issues. First, is there an acting minister? The answer is yes. By order in council we always establish not only one acting minister but two acting ministers in the event that a minister should be away and action has to be taken in his department or in the House on his behalf. There are two acting ministers. The list has been distributed, as is customary, not only to the opposition but has been made public in the Canada Gazette.

The second question is, who in the House of Commons answers questions? I think it has been clearly stated by you and your predecessor, sir, that parliamentary secretaries have, as one of their functions, to answer questions. We attempt to answer questions as best we can. It is easier when notice is given in advance. The questions are put for the purpose of seeking information and we attempt to co-operate and give that information when we are advised of questions. Who can best give this information? The practice, as long as I have been in the House, has been that when the parliamentary secretary is present, when he has been briefed, when he has the information or is able to vouch for its obtainment, he gives the answer. This does not mean there is not a minister or acting minister, but we seek to have the answer given by the person more likely to achieve the result wanted by the opposition. These matters are quite distinct. I submit to you that the government has been following well-established parliamentary practice.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, having been in this House somewhat longer than the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and having been here when the Parliamentary Secretaries Act was set up, may I suggest to him that it is quite well established a parliamentary secretary does not state policy on behalf of the ministry or the government. That is quite clearly understood. When an acting minister responds for the government, however, that can be a statement of policy and there is responsibility.

Most of the practice has been for a parliamentary secretary merely to say he will take a question as notice because he cannot speak on behalf of the government under these circumstances.

With the greatest deference I would suggest that the confusion is in the mind of the Prime Minister on this particular point. What my colleague, the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Lawrence), is saying is that he wants to be able to question an acting minister who can speak for the government. That is the only clarification that is wanted.

Mr. Speaker: This matter has been contributed to many times in the past. The final conclusion has always been—and I will venture to say it would be no different under these circumstances—that the role of the parliamentary secretary in respect of endeavouring to take questions and deal with them on behalf of his or her minister in the House, relates to the general obligation of the government to give answers to questions and to give them in some sort of satisfactory way. That is not a procedural obligation, and it is not an obligation which can be enforced by the Chair in the first instance. Therefore, if any effort is made to give any kind of answer, the judgment of the quality of that contribution to the question period is one that must be made in other than procedural senses and is outside the authority of the Chair.

I have no authority to compel an answer and, therefore, no authority to decide whether a parliamentary secretary does or does not properly answer for a minister in this House. On the points that have been raised, I understand the theory very well, but it seems to me there is no action the Chair can take in this regard.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. PAPROSKI—CHAMBER TEMPERATURE

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. In view of the fact that you are the custodian of the chamber and it looks as if the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has no intention of calling an election for a couple of weeks, and we have some government business to take care of, I would point out that the temperature in this chamber must be at least 92 degrees Fahrenheit. We would hope that you could advise the responsible people to cut down the candlelight power and give us a comfortable House in which to work.

Mr. Speaker: I should inform hon. members that the temperature in the chamber is not being contributed to by the level of the light as much as by the removal of the ventilating fans for a short period of time, for repair. We hope to have them reinstalled soon.

HOVEY AND ASSOCIATES LIMITED CONTRACT

Question No. 1,443—Mr. McKinnon:

What technical and engineering services are Hovey and Associates Limited providing to the Department of National Defence for $33,165?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of National Defence): A contract was negotiated with the firm to produce a repair and procedures manual for the multi-purpose van body of the 1¼ ton truck.

MARITIME FORCES—DESTROYER LIFE EXTENSION PROJECT

Question No. 1,444—Mr. McKinnon:

What is the purpose of the Destroyer Life Extension Project that Eyretechnics Limited are carrying out for the Department of National Defence at the cost of $48,000?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of National Defence): The department is conducting a definition study of the effort necessary to extend existing destroyers beyond their original 20-25 year design life until the ship replacement program can commission new ships. An extension of up to 10 years may be required for the older ships. Contracted assistance is being used in the conduct of the study. The particular contract referred to is for engineering assistance in the combat systems area as required, to a ceiling of $48,000.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. PAPROSKI—ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. In view of the fact that we are going to be here for a couple of weeks—

An hon. Member: A month.

Mr. Paproski: I would hope that the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) would answer a few more questions, because he will have plenty of time to do so. Members on this side would like to have these questions answered before the next election.

[Translation]

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, election rumours have never slowed down our efforts, and we continue to deal with the questions in depth trying to give the best possible answers; we shall continue to do so in the coming weeks.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

EXPORT DEVELOPMENT ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Friday, April 21, consideration of the motion of Mr. Horner that Bill C-36, to amend the Export Development Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, on rising this afternoon I would like to know who on earth is responsible for this bill on the government side. As far as I can see, neither the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner) nor his parliamentary secretary are here. His parliamentary secretary was here some time ago but he is not here at the present time. I think that this is just a further indication by the minister in question of the almost contempt in which he holds this House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. The Minister of State (Small Business) (Mr. Abbott) on a point of order.

Mr. Abbott: Mr. Speaker, I am the Acting Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. I am here to listen to the hon. member with rapt interest.

An hon. Member: Wrap it up.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, this is a grave revelation considering the exchange that my colleague, the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Lawrence), had with the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) concerning the Acting Minister of National Revenue. The Prime Minister would not disclose who the acting minister was, and the questions were to be put to parliamentary secretaries. I am glad to see my hon. friend here in the capacity of Acting Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce so that there is somebody here; I now see the parliamentary secretary is back here too.

If there is to be an answer made, I trust it will be made by the minister in question. This hon. member here has not got, shall we say, the awkward position into which the present Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce has put himself by some of his statements with regard to trying to get passage of this bill through the House rather expeditiously, on an earlier occasion. I am going after the reputation of that minister and his behaviour in this House, one side or the other. The two are not reconcilable. I want to place that straight on the record.

I know all about this bill. I saw the president of the Export Development Corporation at a meeting months ago. At that time he indicated that this would be the situation. We are fully aware of it. This is stupidity, and that is all I can call it, Mr. Speaker, sheer stupidity in handling government affairs with regard to this bill. This bill was preceded by Bill C-39 regarding debasement of gold coins in this country—terribly important, I am sure. All it wants to do is get the government off the hook for the snafu with regard to the Olympic gold coins and the difficulties they had with the House; another way to trying to bypass parliament.

This particular bill, Bill C-36, I agree is an important bill, far more important than a lot of the tripe put before us prior to this. Then the minister on Friday had the gall to say that he wanted the House to pass this bill quickly on second reading so that it could go to committee, be considered ahead of the estimates, and get passed ultimately under some sort of deadline. Overriding this whole situation is the cat and mouse game of the Prime Minister with regard to the election date. The minister says, "Well, you better pass my bill before I get it caught by the guillotine of the election." Now, is that the way to run a shop? I say no. It is just crass incompetence on the part of that minister. I do not care whether he says that he tried to consult somebody on this side to see whether he could get expeditious passage.

There is no way any minister, least of all the member from Crowfoot, is going to say that a bill requires expeditious passage. I have heard him, year in and year out, and I am not talking about caucus secrets or anything like that, standing in his place on this side, berating ministers for the speed with which they wanted legislation. As I have said, he thinks that he is now responsible, that he has become a statesman. It only indicates the two standards in thinking which that minister has. I am sure the people in his constituency will be fully aware of that. Certainly the people of Alberta will be more than fully aware of it because they will be hearing a great deal more about it too.

Something else happened which came to my attention over the weekend. We did a little bit of digging in another file. I have a letter before me from the Canadian Export Association. It is dated March 28, 1978, addressed to Robert Kaplan, M.P., chairman of the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs of this House. The letter is signed by our old friend, Tommy Burns. Mr. Burns was a former senior assistant deputy minister for the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In his capacity now he is president of a lobby group, the Canadian Export Association. With all due respect to Mr. Burns, and I always got along well with Mr. Burns—I had a great deal of appreciation of his abilities as a senior public servant—I do find it objectionable that he should write to the chairman asking, and I quote:

> . . . for your support for the expeditious passage of the bill regarding the Export Development Corporation recently introduced in the House of Commons.

He goes on to say:

> Any inability of EDC to support the efforts of Canadian exports through long-term lending, insurance, or support for bid bonds and performance guarantees relating to export contracts, will have a very serious impact on Canadian [exports, with a consequent] effect on employment in Canada.

The concluding paragraph states:

> If your Committee would want to have more detailed views from the Association, we would be very glad to provide [either in a written] brief or in an appearance at one of your hearings.

● (1532)

We certainly would on that point. What I object to is this orchestrated lobbying by a former insider of the department, as a matter of fact a senior officer of the department, to get this bill through, it coming through so late in the year.

I have a further letter dated March 20, signed by H. W. Godwin, the president of Seismic Service Supply (1958) Limited, Calgary. He is a director of EDC and planning to be a private Canadian businessman relying on the facilities of EDC in our export business from time to time. He states:

> —I respectfully urge you to support this bill through the legislative process with every possible haste.

This is a personal letter addressed to me from a director of EDC. Is there some sort of a con game going on here? Why this pressure?

As I said before, I have fully discussed the performance, the problems, and the future of the Export Development Corporation with senior officials of that corporation, at the invitation of the president. I understand their situation. I may have some different views on what they offer.

Why do we get this sort of pressure on the side? Certainly Mr. MacDonald will have to explain why he gets the non-government directors of the Export Development Corporation to lobby individuals members about quick passage of this bill. If these men are experienced in the ways of government, the blessed bill should have been in the hopper a long time ago. It is not necessarily the fault of the EDC. They certainly made their requirements known to the government a long time ago.

If they did not, they should have. The matter of when they made their requirements known to the government will have to be cleared up.

We are in this bind today as a result of incompetence in the legislative process of this administration who have got their tails caught up in a snarl on every side. Frankly, this type of administrative snafu is one of the reasons why it is high time this government was sent packing. Why is it so late in the day? No matter how expeditiously this House deals with it, the Finance committee has a currency bill before it. If anybody reads what I had to say on Friday afternoon, they will see that the responsibility of the Finance committee is to deal with the estimates of this House. It must be remembered that the responsibility of parliament with regard to supply is the principal reason it is there. It is not there to pass amendments to bits and pieces of bills. That is a secondary purpose. It is the operations of government through the examination of the granting of supply that rate number one. This has been a standing principle ever since I have come to parliament.

There are some who might think that efficiency in government depends on the number of bills passed. All you have to do to pass bills is to sit here silent, get wide in the flank, and wider between the ears. Bills will pass, but they are not the measure of the efficiency of government or of the performance of this House.

I want to make something clear. The prime role of this chamber and the membership thereof, between the end of January and early February, when the estimates come down and are referred to the various standing committees, and May 31, is the detailed consideration of estimates. We need to have a block system. There are only so many sessions during which committees may sit, when House personnel are available, and the membership is available for those committees.

At the expense of the consideration of the estimates, there are some who insist that we consider a gaggle of bills in committee. This is particularly true of the finance committee by reason of its jurisdiction in dealing with all sorts of matters that have to do with economic affairs.

The finance committee necessarily attracts more bills to it year in and year out. A former chairman, the Minister of State (Multiculturalism) (Mr. Cafik), will be a real witness to that. In fact anyone who sat as chairman of that committee will readily agree. However, to expect them to pass between February 1 and May 31 is totally misreading the situation. There are ways of dealing with it, but not within the present framework that we have for a committee structure. No way!

Committees cannot sit from early morning until late at night every day. There are those, including departmental advisers, who, frankly, have to go back to the drawing board and learn all over again the workings of parliament. We can accomplish the business, provided it is properly organized and brought forward early enough. This bill has been in the contemplation of the Export Development Corporation for months and months. They can forecast their requirements. As a matter of fact, the bill goes far beyond their present requirements. It is not a question of giving them annual supply. It is a total structure that will remove them from coming before the House for years, unless inflation keeps galloping at the present rate.

I do not disagree with the principle of giving them borrowing limits or ceilings with regard to the contingent liabilities to ensure their contracts so they do not have to come back to parliament every year. I agree with that. We agreed about that months ago.

Why is this bill now before us under the guillotine of a pending election? As a matter of fact, according to all the portents, parliament could have been dissolved on not one, but two occasions in the past fortnight. The hon. member from Bonaventure asked me—

● (1542)

[Translation]

An hon. Member: —Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): —Îles-de-la-Madeleine—I am sorry, it used to be Bonaventure. The hon. member for Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine is asking me how we can possibly know this. Well, he reads newspapers as we do. He listens to the radio. He has his own colleagues who are saying the same thing. And some of his colleagues have told me that they hoped the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) would put an end to this.

An hon. Member: Newspapers cannot be trusted!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I agree. And he says now that newspapers cannot be trusted. Well, that is something else again. I wonder how many of his colleagues share his opinion that one should not believe everything one reads in the papers. You can always go and talk about this to newspapermen. Go and share your opinions with them.

Nevertheless, Mr. Speaker, I should like to conclude this part of my intervention by saying how surprised I am to see that a minister who deems this bill to be of such tremendous importance could not be present in the House and was satisfied with having his acting minister try and reply to our questions. I am well aware that the acting minister is not too well informed of what this bill is all about and therefore of what he should reply to the questions some of my colleagues and I are about to ask him.

[English]

I want to get back to some questions which I am sure the minister or his officials will have to answer in committee. I am referring to the financial statement for the year ended December 31, 1976. Unfortunately I do not have a statement for 1977, which would have been far better; we have not been able to put our hands on it though I trust such a document does exist, in which case I hope one of my hon. friends will make reference to it and to the newer figures it must contain. I should like to know why there was an increase between 1975 and 1976 of about 25 per cent in administrative expenditures and whether this increase has been matched in the period 1977-78.

There are items in this financial statement, such as those relating to shareholders equity and the disposition of retained earnings, which will have changed so much in the past year that it would be less than useful to go into an examination of their significance or put questions with regard to them at this time. I realize that because this document is concerned with 1976 it would be unrealistic to deal with it now.

Certainly we want this bill to go to committee. We shall talk to representatives of the Export Association there and we may want to talk to some other people as well. I would suggest that in the interval the parliamentary secretary or the chairman of the finance committee, before deciding when any meetings should be held, should call a meeting of a steering committee to obtain the views of members as to the manner in which these matters could be dealt with best. Some serious meetings have been arranged with ministers to deal with estimates and these will more than occupy the attention of hon. members. Besides, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) gave notice this afternoon that he wants the bill dealing with customs tariff changes arising out of the recent budget considered in the House, and there is no way in which meetings of the finance committee could be scheduled at that time.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I want to say a few words on the bill before us today, the bill introduced by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner) on Friday. It is unfortunate that the minister is not present in the chamber today, but I see the acting minister is here in his place.

As we all know, the Export Development Corporation was established in 1969 to succeed the Export Credit Insurance Corporation which had been in operation since 1944. The EDC does a number of things which, I suppose, are necessary. Almost all the industrialized states around the world have export development corporations of one sort or another through which governments assist exporters, presumably because they realize they have to do so in order to maintain jobs at home. The interesting thing is that, despite the work of the Export Development Corporation here, we support our exports to a lesser degree than do most of our trading partners. These are the figures as supplied by Statistics Canada for 1976: Canada supports its exporters to the tune of about 5 per cent of the value of the exports. Figures for other countries are as follows: the United States, 8 per cent; West Germany, 10 per cent; France, 39 per cent; Great Britain, 45 per cent; Italy, 9 per cent; Japan, 49 per cent. Despite the operations of the EDC we are not promoting the export of our commodities, technology and so on, to the extent other countries do.

One can see, also, from the figures I have given, that the arguments raised in this House during the Alcan debate by my hon. friend from Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands, my hon. friend from Sault Ste. Marie, and others, are indeed very credible. Japan supports its exports to a much greater degree than any other industrial country. This is one reason we have to be very concerned about the Alcan route, whether the pipeline is actually built with Canadian steel and whether it is our steel mills which will provide the pipe, supply the jobs, and so on. We have a great deal to fear from Japan because of the way in which the government of that country supports exports.

In any case, the EDC has been in operation since 1969, and its functions are really threefold. First, it offers insurance to the various companies which export goods around the world; second, it extends export loans; and third, it offers insurance for the foreign investments of firms operating in countries where the political climate may not be particularly stable. The corporation helps in many ways. In my own region of the prairies it has assisted in the export of grain and the other commodities we produce.

There are four matters of concern to me that I wish to place before the acting minister this afternoon. One of the concerns I have is the support given by the Export Development Corporation to Canadian companies which invest abroad.

We know, for example, that the federal government has supported the International Nickel Company for quite some time through various tax concessions and the like. Despite that, jobs have been lost at Sudbury and Thompson, Manitoba. The reason for that is the over-supply of nickel in the world. Despite the fact that there is an over-supply of nickel in the world, we find that the Export Development Corporation has been supporting Inco in its investments in Indonesia and Guatemala. Between 1973 and 1976 about $78 million went to Inco so that it could expand its facilities and plants in Indonesia and Guatemala. The Export Development Corporation is financed by taxpayers, and it is giving money to a Canadian corporation to expand in foreign countries and take jobs away from Canadian workers. This is a good example of the corporation's doing the exact opposite to what it was established for in the first place. It was established to create jobs, to build up our exports, and to make sure that we are more competitive in the world community.

When the acting minister responds, I hope he will deal seriously with this. It does not seem right that we should be giving money to Inco to go to places like Guatemala and Indonesia. We could say that those loans are one of the reasons why we have an over-supply of nickel in the world and one of the reasons, why Canadian workers here are losing their jobs. To me that does not seem right. It does not seem to be the type of priority the Export Development Corporation should adopt.

One of the reasons Inco goes to Guatemala and Indonesia is that there are very low wage rates in those countries. Inco can hire local workers for just a few dollars a day or a few cents an hour to work in its mines. That is why Inco wants to go to third world countries to develop. Inco wants to compete with other huge internationals around the world in order to make a buck. I do not blame Inco for that. Under our system the purpose of a large corporation is to make money, to exploit people, to exploit resources, to make a few bucks for its shareholders, and to make itself more powerful in the world community. However, when a company receives all kinds of grants to develop industries here at home, it should not be allowed to invest in other countries and to use taxpayers' money in order to make its investments profitable for a few shareholders.

My second concern—and I would like the acting minister to respond, if he possibly can—is that it has been reported that a number of other companies will be receiving or are receiving money from the Export Development Corporation to expand in other countries around the world. The result of that will not just be larger companies but, more important, Canadian jobs will be lost.

The first example I want to use was raised in the question period today by the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes). The Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) was not aware of the details and agreed to take notice of the question on behalf of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. The question dealt with a company called Co'steel International of Whitby, Ontario. As reported in August by the financial newspapers, this company received some $47 million toward a $94 million project to build a steel mini-mill in New Jersey. The company will receive, or has received, $47 million from the Export Development Corporation. This company was an adviser to the Cansteel consortium formed by the Nova Scotia government to revive the province's steel industry. It had to abandon plans to build a plant on Cape Breton Island last year when a government consultant said the world's steel market could not justify the construction of a new plant.

This is rather interesting. We find that the company cannot justify building a new plant on Cape Breton Island because of the world steel market's being soft, yet a Crown corporation financed by you, Mr. Speaker, me and everybody else in this country, gives some $47 million to a Canadian company to build a steel mill in the United States. I am sure the Americans do not need Canadian tax dollars to build a steel mill. The Americans have a competitive economy of their own, and I am sure that money could be better utilized in our own country to expand our steel industry in places like Cape Breton, Sault Ste. Marie, Hamilton or, indeed, in my own province of Saskatchewan.

The Ipsco steel plant in Regina or the Ipsco plant in Edmonton could be expanded. The Ipsco plant in Edmonton has been waiting for a long time for an announcement by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion of money so that it can expand its facilities. These companies want to expand their facilities because they want to be in a good position to compete for the tenders on the pipeline which is about to be built in this country to take American gas from Alaska to the main part of the United States.

This government is spending money to build a steel mill in New Jersey. I have a knowledge of that area, and I just do not think that makes any sense. There are one million people in this country who are unemployed, and it seems to me that all investment priorities should be channelled in a planned, coordinated and rational way toward resolving the big problem we have, unemployment. We should have jobs first. Jobs first must be our priority, and if we channel all government programs into resolving that problem I am sure that with the resources, money, talent and skills we have in Canada we could, over the span of a few short years, put our people to work and build an even better country called Canada in which, we, our children, and our grandchildren, can live.

I do not just stop there in terms of examples. I think hon. members must find it very worrisome that there is a pulp and paper project in Poland financed by the EDC. EDC financing in 1976 and 1977 brought to a total of $102 million the loans given to Poland for a world-scale pulp and paper mill. The EDC admitted in a committee of this House last May that that mill will compete with Canadian concerns but that it will provide sales for the pulp and paper machinery industries in the province of Quebec.

The Export Development Corporation is also financing a pulp and paper project in Peru. Not only will Poland compete with the industry in Ontario and Quebec, but EDC money is going to Peru to set up a mill which, I assume, will also compete with our industry. All we have to do is look at the unemployment rates in the province of Quebec and in the northeastern part of Ontario to realize that we do not need any more competitors in the pulp and paper industry, and we certainly do not need competitors which are financed partially—or to a large extent in some cases—by our own tax dollars. In effect, our own money is making things difficult for us, and that makes no sense to me whatsoever.

I am not certain whether this has been verified, but there are indications that there will be an EDC loan to Cuba. The purpose of the loan is to establish a stainless steel plant in Cuba. That plant would compete with many mills right here in our country. That is the second concern I have about the Export Development Corporation. If we in this House are going to vote to expand the capitalization of the EDC and to make it bigger and more effective, I want to know what its priorities are going to be and if it is going to continue to do the kinds of things it did with regard to Inco.

I want to know if the EDC is going to continue financing steel mills in New Jersey and pulp and paper mills in Poland. I want to know if it will continue to invest in Peru, Cuba, and God knows where, in industries which are important here in Canada in terms of jobs. If these are the intentions of the EDC, I am not interested in expediting or facilitating the passage of this bill through this House. I think it is very important that we be concerned about jobs here in our own country when we are spending public funds, instead of using those funds to subsidize large corporations to create jobs for others.

The third of my four major concerns regarding EDC is that when I look through their annual reports over the last number of years, when I look to see which companies in our country receive grants and loans, which ones are insured against the possibility of political unrest in certain countries around the world, I find that not many small companies are mentioned, that overwhelmingly the money that is provided by EDC goes to help large multinational companies in this country, which, in many cases, I suggest, do not really need the money. One can mention again Inco as a good example of a large company which does not need the taxpeyers' money to finance its exports in any way. So when we are talking about expanding the corporation, making it stronger and bigger, we should look at its priorities, what companies it helps, and why so much of its money goes towards helping the large and privileged companies in this country.

My fourth and final major concern partly stems, I suppose, from the reason that I come from the prairies, and certainly stems from the fact that I am a member of the democratic socialist party. When you look at the addresses of companies which receive money from EDC, you find that in most cases they are in central Canada, particularly in southern Ontario, so that the stimulus to the economy is provided in southern Ontario instead of in the other regions.

The fact that you are putting millions of dollars every year through EDC into places like Toronto renders ineffective the DREE program which was set up with the specific purpose of trying to make the country more equal and trying to rid the country of some of the disparities we have, trying to give the province of Quebec, the Atlantic provinces, the north, the prairies and parts of British Columbia a better break. You have another program, such as that undertaken by EDC, which does exactly the opposite of DREE, which puts almost all its money into regions which are already the most privileged. Perhaps that happens naturally because that is where the head offices of the corporations are located. Once again we must look at the general and economic priorities of the government as they concern EDC.

My main concerns, therefore, Mr. Speaker, are, first, the concern of subsidizing large companies in this country to expand their facilities in other countries around the world, thus directly taking jobs away from our own people. Second, I am concerned about most of the money from EDC going to very large corporations. I can give hon. members many examples in my own riding of small companies which would not mind more assistance from EDC. There is the example of a small plastics plant at Melville called Mid Canada Plastics. They are one of the most forward thinking small industries I have ever seen. Now they are in the process of manufacturing plastic trailers and all kinds of gadgets and objects made of acrylic. The company is having a great deal of difficulty in obtaining support from the federal government.

I do not just single out EDC, I single out other programs, such as those under CMHC to do with housing, programs under the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce to do with various loans and grants, research development information, and so on. When I talk to officials of small companies I find that the impression they get from the federal government is that to be really considered by the government one has to be big and have really big international connections, but because they are small, they are discriminated against.

We should probably make some changes in the EDC legislation so that it would direct a lot of its capital toward helping small companies in this country. I can give you many examples in my own riding of small companies which are building prefab homes, farm machinery companies in the city of Yorkton, and other companies across the province of Saskatchewan and indeed in the whole of Canada, which are discriminated against by the federal government because of the very fact that they are small. It is somewhat like the chicken and the egg. If they do not get aid and assistance, they might never grow to be big enough to get the golden eggs. These are my concerns about EDC.

It seems to me that when we talk about a program under a corporation such as EDC, it should fit into an economic plan which should have as its priority the creation of jobs in our country, putting to work the million or so unemployed who really want to work. Many people have asked me: what does it matter if we have a million people unemployed? They are looked after well and many of them might enjoy being on unemployment insurance. I say, first of all, that this is not true. Anybody I met who is unemployed is eager to find a job. But even if it were true for some of them, the fact that we have so many unemployed affects all of us.

You can do the calculations if you wish, but this year we will lose about $8.5 billion as a result of having over one million people unemployed. I believe we will lose $4 billion in lost productivity, which we would have had if these people were working on building schools, hospitals, or roads, improving our rail lines, our harbours, manufacturing goods and commodities, and mining and processing in Canada. We lose about $4 billion that way, and we lose another $3 billion in UIC payments and welfare cheques which we are spending on our unemployed—UIC payments which come from the federal government, and welfare cheques which come from both the federal government and the provinces when the UIC payments run out and a person is disqualified but has to look after his or her family because they have to live, they must have food, shelter and clothing. Finally, we lose another $1.5 billion in lost revenue which we would have if the unemployed were working and paying income tax. If you total that up, you will find that we lost about $8.5 billion a year.

Instead of doing some of the stupid and foolhardy things this government is doing, and some of them, I suggest, are found in EDC, we should be using the resources at our disposal to create an economy and a society where there is full employment, where a genuine attempt is made to get rid of the inequities among people, to give people equality of condition. The government talks about equality of opportunity, but you have to equalize the conditions in which people live and also equality betweeen regions. I suggest that EDC as it is operating now is not keeping that as one of its objectives. Indeed, it is making parts of Canada more wealthy compared to others than if EDC were not there in the first place. I think that this corporation should be part of the over-all game plan we have in this country to create a better country, to put everybody to work, to give everybody a sense of pride in our country, and to develop it into something which is really and truly great for the remainder of the twentieth century and in the years to come for our children, our grandchildren, and those who are to follow.

In conclusion, I hope the acting minister will try to respond to some of these fundamental questions that I have raised about EDC, questions which people who know a lot more about the corporation than I—I do not pretend to be an expert on it—have asked me, questions that have been put to me by business people and academics who study the economy of our country and of other countries around the world. I will be surprised if he can answer these questions, but perhaps he would take them seriously and make changes in the legislation so that the corporation can be a lot more effective. Canada will be better off for it.

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, in considering Bill C-36 I think we must look for a trick or two in it. It is not until you get through quite a few pages that you find what are the real implications of this bill. Let me refer to a summary I made showing the various clauses of the bill and the sections that are going to be changed, and the effect these various clauses have on the structure of the Export Development Corporation at the moment.

To start with, in clause 1, having to do with the capital of the EDC, we find the share capital is being changed from $400 million to $1,000 million, or $1 billion. Therefore, in general, the reference to dollar commitments or dollar exposure is on a ten times basis, so that instead of reading a figure of $10 billion later on, for instance, in clause 3, which amends Section 26 of the existing act, the reference should be, the contingent liability on corporate account is an exposure ten times the share capital of the corporation, and that translates into $10 billion, which is four times the present limit of $2.5 billion.

The same clause changes section 28 of the Act, that is, the $1 billion figure to $3.5 billion, an increase of 3.5 times, and in clause 4 we find that Section 30 is being changed. The guarantees on corporate account are increased from $4.25 billion to $10 billion. Clause 5 of the bill increases the guarantees on government account from $850 million to $2.5 billion. Altogether that means that the commitments the EDC will have under the new act will be precisely three times what they were. In other words, the total of share capital and commitments at the present moment is $9 billion. Under the new proposals the total will be three times that, or $27 billion.

I am suggesting that these really are quite important commitments we are dealing with during the debate on this bill, amounting to an increase of $18 billion. We should ask ourselves what it is exactly that we are financing with this Export Development Corporation. The government may tell us it is creating all kinds of jobs for Canadians and so on, but I think we have to look at what has happened.

We can see that the Canadian government has financed a pulp mill in Poland and steel mills in the United States, and reference has been made to those already. Where are the jobs for Canadians. That is what we want to see, as we have over one million unemployed now and we want those jobs for Canadians. The minister has told us that jobs will be given to Canadians through construction of this machinery. That is true, but this is a one-time sale, and I will come back to that in a moment.

The projection we would like to see is some kind of a national development corporation with funding which would not be restricted necessarily to export sales, but would in the long run improve Canadian job prospects.

If we take that kind of idea, recognizing that the development of export sales is one of our principal national objectives, but by no means the only one, in the hands of the Export Development Corporation the pursuit of export has too often been a single-minded undertaking, undertaken at all costs and at the expense of other more overriding domestic aims. In too many cases there has been a trade-off of our long term national objectives, such as permanent employment, for the short term benefits of a specific contract, such as those about which the minister told us.

I want to go into a little more detail about the two recent examples I referred to a moment ago. Recently the EDC committed $160 million to financing a pulp mill in Poland. There is no doubt that this low cost loan underwritten by the taxpayers of Canada enables Canadian firms to sell this equipment abroad. It is also quite clear that the Poles, whom everyone expects to be among our chief competitors in the European pulp and paper market, are really the beneficiaries of that deal. The Poles will get the new mill and the new permanent jobs. We in Canada will have to content ourselves with the fact that we helped to finance the creation of jobs in Poland, at the expense of jobs here at home, in order to gain one export contract.

I referred earlier to steel mills in the United States. The EDC agreed last summer to put up $47 million for a new steel mill in New Jersey. That brought to a total of $100 million the amount loaned by the EDC for steel mills in Minnesota, Texas, and New England. Once again with the steel mill a Canadian firm got the contract, so there was a short term benefit to Canada, but once again it was the Canadian interests that lost out in the long run. It is the Americans, not Canadians, who get the permanent jobs resulting from this contract, and these are the very steel plants in New Jersey which will eventually compete against our own Canadian steel manufacturers, to the detriment of Canadian jobs. We have already seen the government do an about face recently in respect of tariffs on imported steel. First it put a tariff on, and then it removed it temporarily as it affects British Columbia and some other marginal provinces.

Clearly we in Canada must rationalize a new export policy. We must have one that is sensitive and subordinate to the whole of our national needs, and one that is part of a reasoned, systematic approach to national development.

Above all we must realize that the empire building in the EDC, empire building for its own sake, must be brought to rein in the face of broader and more beneficial national goals.

I say this is especially true in light of the bill we are now considering. This $27 billion package would enable the EDC to finance a growing number of contracts to countries that have the commercial and financial wherewithall to finance these projects for themselves. Increasingly, Canada is becoming a source of ready and cheap money, and increasingly we are subsidizing our exports, not merely supporting them. What is even worse, we are subsidizing our exports at the expense of vital needs right here at home.

In every corner of Canada today there is a crying need for the very type of projects that the EDC is now financing abroad. For example, in the maritimes, and I think some of our maritime colleagues will be speaking on this, there is a great need for a new fishing fleet to keep abreast of the highly competitive and highly technological fleets from other countries. Many millions of dollars a year, spread over a certain period down there, would go a long way to helping out our maritime fishing fleet.

In Vancouver, out in my area, we are in dire need of dry dock facilities which would be capable of handling today's modern ships. Some $100 million would go a long way toward providing this, plus a new light rapid transit system for the city of Vancouver.

Highways, railroads, and communications systems are needed in the north to open up Canada's vast lands, especially along the route of the proposed pipeline. Approximately 600 miles of the pipeline route are without telephone or television, and a lasting communications system would become a reality if there were an investment of $100 million.

Some 300 miles of the Alaska Highway require paving in order to create a viable tourist industry in northern British Columbia. Once again $100 million would go a long way toward accomplishing that.

Looking to the east, Montreal is desperately in need of a modern waste treatment facility. It has been considered many times, but the project has gone through a number of convolutions and appears to be threatened again because of the lack of money.

In other cities in the country, virtually every public transit project plan is in trouble because of financial shortages.

These examples, and scores of others, illustrate the kind of development we in Canada could foster if we applied the EDC approach right here at home. Why not let the EDC be transformed into a national development corporation whose chief task might be the development of the infrastructure, such as these fishing fleets, grain elevators and so on, so necessary if we are to realize our true potential in Canada today? The new national development corporation could absorb the export functions of the Export Development Corporation, which would continue pretty much as before, with one major exception—export contracts underwritten by public funds would be weighed for the contribution to long-term national goals, such as the creation of permanent jobs and their protection of Canadian industry. It would not be much different than the method now used by the government under the Foreign Investment Review Act where there is a committee which considers the prospects of foreign investment and weighs it compared to other investments for substantial benefit to Canada, and if it passes the test then it is allowed. A similar test could be applied by this new development corporation to determine whether Canada should finance projects overseas.

This new national development corporation would loan low cost, long-term money to provinces, municipalities, and other groups which could not obtain private financing for their projects. High priority could be given to those projects which contributed to fortifying the economic base, especially those projects which would act as a catalyst in inspiring other development in the private sector.

The chief advantages to establishing such a corporation are these: first, it would help to rationalize our export policy by continually weighing our support of exports against domestic needs. Secondly, it would provide a cheap source of funds for the development of Canada itself, with all the attendant bonuses of higher employment and a stronger economy. Thirdly, it could be instrumental in bridging the five to ten year slump in the 50-year cycle of capital expansion that we now seem to be experiencing. Fourth, if both the CDC and the EDC were merged into a new national development corporation, a new economic strategy for Canada could be formulated which would balance our exports and industrial objectives. Finally, if a new export policy is thus rationalized, private financial institutions could be encouraged to contribute to a fund for the development of third world nations on the threshold of development. A new foreign development corporation could be established with a working fund of perhaps $1 billion.

It was interesting to hear my friend from Yorkton-Melville commenting on the contribution that would be made by Canadian workers to national revenues if they were, in fact, put to work by some scheme such as this. I have often argued, and I am glad to see our friend from Yorkton-Melville taking an idea from this party, that Canadians who are not working are not contributing to the national revenues and are adding to the national deficit. If we can get that situation turned around and get these people off unemployment, where they do not want to be and where they have their souls destroyed, then they will become taxpayers and we will go a long way toward eliminating our national debt and annual deficit. This, of course, will contribute to strengthening our Canadian dollar in world markets.

I do not want members opposite or the House to think that we on this side are against foreign aid for, after all, that is what EDC is really doling out. We do not have a stingy attitude on foreign aid at all, but I think that the exporting of Canadian jobs at a time when we have over one million unemployed is a far greater consideration for us at this time. When it comes to foreign aid, Canadians have always prided themselves on their generosity, but do we really need to give steel mills to Texas and New Jersey, and pulp and paper factories to Poland? There is also the forestry hardware for oil rich Iran.

Does the federal government really expect the Canadian taxpayer to finance projects such as these in the definitely "have" nations of the world? It does, indeed, seem that that is what the government intends, because over the past year and a half the Trudeaucrats at the EDC have been making themselves very busy finding places to divert taxpayers' money. Admittedly, they say it is not foreign aid in the usual sense, but it is, in any way you would care to look at it, foreign aid, because low cost loans are supported by the Canadian taxpayer, and they are supposed to be, but are not always, paid back. Increasingly, we find that Canadians are becoming a source of cheap and ready money, and we are providing this cheap and ready money for the benefit of some of our most intense competitors internationally.

As I said earlier, EDC decided to put more than $160 million out to finance the pulp and paper mill in Poland. It did this despite the fact that our own pulp and paper industry is struggling to stay alive in the face of fierce competition abroad and despite the fact that everyone, including the government, expects the Poles to be one of our major competitors in the European pulp and paper market. The EDC rationalized the investment decision by pointing out that Poland would buy Canadian equipment, but that argument is very weak when I consider that Poland is a state run society and the Polish worker is paid far less than his Canadian counterpart. Ultimately, Poland will be able to sell paper products far below Canadian prices. Our pulp and paper industry, which is operating now at only 75 per cent capacity, will shrink even further, with fewer and fewer jobs for Canadian workers.

I also gave the example earlier of the investment of $47 million in a steel mill in New Jersey. The total for all the steel mills Canada has financed abroad is $100 million. Meanwhile, in Hamilton and Nova Scotia, our own steel industry is encountering stiff competition and the prospect of further lay-offs in Atlantic Canada where the unemployment rate is already alarming. In fact the unemployment situation there has even threatened this past winter to erupt into violence. I am delighted that Canadian firms can get contracts for exporting these mills, but surely there is plenty of financing available in the United States, where many Canadians have to go to get financing for Canadian projects. Surely it is not necessary to provide low cost loans at the expense of our own industry and taxpayer, especially when our own industry is literally more desperate for capital funds to upgrade its plants.

The worst example of all occurred when Inco announced plans to lay off thousands of workers in Sudbury and Thompson due to distressed conditions in the world nickel market. At the very time approximately 3,000 families were bracing themselves for a winter of unemployment, mandarins at EDC sheepishly announced that they were putting up approximately $58 million to finance nickel mining projects in Guatemala and Indonesia. Think of that, Mr. Speaker. At the same time that a glut of nickel in the world is forcing thousands of Canadians out of work, we are being asked to foot the bill to finance putting more nickel on the market somewhere else. In fact the EDC announcement came the same day that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) rejected a suggestion in this House to stockpile nickel and thus buy a year or so of time for the distressed Sudbury workers.

It would seem that Canadians are being asked to help out everybody but themselves. Last year EDC put up over $2 billion in loans for foreign projects. Some of these are undoubtedly necessary and beneficial to Canada, but others are not. We have seen some of the numbers that we are now being asked to approve, and we will probably be appalled at some of the projects we will be asked to approve.

All of this money that has gone into projects in the United States, Russia, and the oil rich nations is, in many cases, so that they can compete against our own industries. Last year the OPEC nations accumulated more than $45 billion in trade surpluses, while Canada hobbled along with a current account deficit of over $4 billion. And here we are lending them money. I say, if the Trudeaucrats of the Export Development Corporation have got that kind of money and are looking for a home for it, let them invest some of it in a new fleet and more modern equipment for our Atlantic and Pacific fishermen, or at least invest at home where we need jobs and our own industry needs a hand.

● (1632)

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-36, an act to amend the Export Development Act, is a very important bill. When the minister introduced it on Friday he stated that Canadian exporters are winning business abroad on the basis of quality, price, and delivery. He also explained that the purpose of the Export Development Corporation financing is to match the officially supported financial competition from abroad and that, by the end of this year, the corporation will have loaned something in the neighbourhood of $2 billion, an action which will directly and indirectly help employment in Canada.

In light of recent unemployment figures in this nation which show 1,040,000 people unemployed, with the largest percentage of them being under 25 years of age, surely no one would argue with the objective outlined by the minister.

As he continued with his explanation of the corporations's activities, he raised certain questions in my mind about the manner in which direct employment opportunities may be improved in Canada. I therefore asked him for the reasoning behind the loan to Poland in 1976 of $102 million to finance the sale of $113 million worth of Canadian equipment for a world-scale integrated pulp and paper complex in that country, while it is reported to have a capability of providing Canada with freezer trawlers at a cost 25 per cent less than we can build them. In his reply the minister stated that I was assuming Poland could build the pulp and paper mill themselves but that this was not desirable since Canadians build better paper mill equipment. The minister said:

Poland may be able to build a better fishing trawler than we can, I do not know.

By this the minister was implying that Canadian expertise in the contruction of fishing trawlers and deep sea ships could not match the expertise of Polish shipbuilders—a statement which I submit would be highly unacceptable to Canadian shipbuilders and workers. This attitude on the part of the minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner) could well explain why many of our important shipyards in Canada are closing down and laying off workers. It is quite obvious the minister is more interested in expanding industries and employment opportunities in other countries than in Canada. Since this seems to be the trend of thought which prevails among other ministers responsible for pushing forward with a Canadian shipbuilding program, the future for that industry looks very gloomy at the present time.

The minister is obviously unaware that it was Canada with its shipbuilding ability that helped turn the tide of battle against our enemies during World War II. I hope he will agree that at that time it would have made little sense for us to look to Poland or any other part of Europe for our ships of war or our merchant fleet. We knew what we needed and what we had to do, and we went ahead and did it.

Today I look at the Export Development Corporation, and specifically at Bill C-36, with mixed feelings. Just what does Bill C-36 accomplish? It increases from $8.85 billion to $26 billion the capacity of EDC to finance, insure, and guarantee export contracts. Under the present act there is an insurance ceiling of $3.5 billion, including $1 billion for government account; under Bill C-36 there will be an increase to $13.5 billion, including $3.5 billion for government account. Under the present act there is a loan limit of $5.1 billion, including $850 million for government account; under Bill C-36 there will be an increase to $12.5 billion, including $2.5 billion for government account. Under the present act there is an investment guarantee of $250 million, and under the new act that guarantee will be ten times the present incorporation, or something like $10 billion. Under the old act the total is $8.85 billion, and under the new act it is $26 billion.

We have to ask ourselves what EDC has done with its money in the past and what projects it has established. In a press release dated February 8, 1974, EDC announced it would put up $132.5 million for an integrated forestry complex in Iran; on October 14, 1976, it announced loans totaling $102 million for a pulp and paper mill in Poland; on September 21, 1977, it announced $1.8 million for a pulp and paper mill in Peru; on November 8, 1977, $102.6 million for a new pulp and paper mill in Iran; December 28, 1977, $5.5 million for a pulp and paper project in Romania; March 8, 1978, EDC announced loans totalling $57 million for two pulp and paper projects in Argentina. The total of EDC money going to foreign pulp and paper concerns amounts to around $401.4 million, not counting at least three projects announced by EDC in press releases since February, 1978. These pulp and paper projects are part of EDC activity totalling $600.97 million.

I point this out to the House because, if my memory serves me correctly, the Canadian pulp and paper industry is working at 75 per cent capacity today and is facing severe competition from European suppliers. According to this information, we are directly or indirectly helping these countries to compete with our Canadian corporations. Is it any wonder, then, that the unemployment rolls are growing?

There are some other EDC projects which are of interest. On October 24, 1977, $78 million was provided for nickel mining projects in Guatemala and Indonesia; December 28, 1977, $2.95 million for steel products in Los Angeles, California; January 18, 1978, $3.6 million for first sale of Dash-7 aircraft to a Colorado buyer; January 27, 1978, $30.6 million for construction of an alumina plant in Ireland; February 13, 1978, $47 million for a mini steel plant in Perth Amboy, New Jersey. This brings to $100 million the amount loaned by EDC for steel mills in Texas, Minnesota, Great Britain, and New Jersey.

I should now like to move on to loans to Communist countries. EDC has advanced financing to Russia, Poland, Yugoslavia, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Romania, Hungary, and Bulgaria. Export financing given to Communist countries in 1975 was as follows: Cuba, $19.7 million, including $1 million for pulp and paper equipment—again this is an instance of aiding competition in foreign countries; Poland, $51.9 million for pulp and paper projects, for a total in 1975 of $71.6 million. In 1976 Cuba obtained an additional $1.2 million, Poland an additional $108.7 million, U.S.S.R. an additional $46.1 million, and Yugoslavia an additional $.6 million, for a total of $156.6 million.

The total accumulated export financing arrangements with Communist countries from 1961 to 1976 were: Cuba, $55.9 million; Czechoslovakia, $2.8 million; Poland, $166.2 million; Romania, $4.8 million; U.S.S.R. $52.2 million; Yugoslavia, $89.3 million; Bulgaria, $1.3 million, for a total of $375.5 million. These are loans to Communist countries whose regimes are dedicated to the overthrow of western democracies. This is evidenced by the thrust we see today on the continent of Africa.

Next come loans to Arab bloc and oil-rich nations. Algeria received $132 million; Egypt, $8.1 million; Iran, $90.7 million; Morocco, $1.5 million; Venezuela, $43.5 million, for a total of $275.8 million. This figure does not include a credit of $1.2 million approved for Algeria in November, 1977.

Based on the foregoing it is clear that EDC is increasingly loaning money to the "have" nations, those with financial and commercial systems capable of financing these projects for themselves, and not merely those which need EDC financing to support these sales. Often, as I said before, these projects will benefit our competitors in international trade.

● (1642)

Mr. John A. MacDonald, not the first Prime Minister of Canada, but the present chairman and president of Canada's Export Development Corporation, explains his reasons for making these loans by stating:

Canada cannot control the decisions of other countries who are desirous of developing their resources. In his view if Canada's Export Development Corporation decided not to finance Canadian sales for an overseas project, we would simply be denying valid export jobs for Canadians without influencing in the slightest degree the decision by the foreign country to proceed with that project.

I am prepared to agree with the minister and with Mr. MacDonald when they say that we live in a competitive world and that many countries are eager to take Canada's place to supply both goods and financing from their own resources, and that by winning at least some participation for Canada's export industries, EDC has created jobs which would otherwise be lost to this country.

However, I submit that these are jobs which are developed by an indirect process. I submit they are jobs based on the whims of foreign builders. They are jobs which are dependent on the whim, if you will, of a federal bureaucrat at Ottawa and his officials. These jobs are obviously bought at a great price. If we accept the minister's statement that we build better machinery for pulp and paper mills, then it should be equally true that foreign countries will buy from us because of our quality, and they will arrange their own methods of financing.

At this time we must raise the question of how much of this type of foreign business can we afford to buy? When we look at the "Budget in Brief," and I have two of them here, one dated March 31, 1977, and the other dated April 10, 1978, each one presented by a different finance minister, we see some amazing figures. For the "Budget in Brief" of March 31, 1977, which was brought in by Mr. Macdonald, the former minister of finance, we read on page 12 that the deficit for 1977 will be $7,160 million. Those are his figures, not mine. However, we now know that the minister was seriously in error and the deficit for this year, according to the statements of the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien), will be approximately $11 million, or $4 billion more than was predicted by his predecessor a year ago.

The present finance minister in his "Budget in Brief" presented April 10, 1978, calls for a deficit for this year of $11.5 billion. He qualifies that by saying "exclusive of foreign exchange transactions". These figures are found on page 15 of that document. We have to ask ourselves will these figures also be out of line by some $4 billion? Is it any wonder that foreign investors are worried about Canada? It is no secret that Canada is facing a grave economic crisis at the present time. One only has to re-read the finance minister's speech to realize this.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and his colleagues seem totally unconcerned. The shattering Inco layoffs in Sudbury, for example, left the Trudeau government undisturbed. They only made optimistic noises about the possible results of the 1978 Geneva conference, as if the whole situation were strictly a matter of world economic climate which they are powerless to control. Yet the power which has been taken by the Trudeau government is immense. It has, unfortunately, been used to steer Canada into a bog of inflation and unemployment into which we are now sinking. Many Canadians are now nervously asking just what is going on; what are the Prime Minister's priorities? Obviously a positive cure for unemployment and business recession is low on the list. So we must ask ourselves what is at the top?

[Mr. Crouse.]

Today in reply to a question from the hon. member for Annapolis Valley (Mr. Nowlan) the Prime Minister smuggled into his response the word "constitution," even though the hon. member mentioned nothing about the constitution. It seems to me that the Prime Minister has constitutional reform on his mind as being a matter of urgent necessity. In view of the Prime Minister's past changes of parliamentary rules, which have virtually destroyed parliament's control of government expenditures, I submit that we should not be too anxious to let this man tamper with our constitution.

Obviously we must alter course. We must change our direction in so far as our economic policy is concerned. Some of the old concepts which have put us so deeply in debt during the past decade under this government must be questioned. No one in his right mind would agree they are working. We need to show more concern for the small businessman. We need to show more concern for business in general, for our farmers, for our fishermen, and for those who work, as we say, at the grass roots level.

I am not proposing in this speech that we abolish the Export Development Corporation. It is obvious that some of its aids programs are more political than economic. For example, aid to Cuba and to other foreign communist countries in the form of loans totalling $375.5 million in 1976 must surely be put to question in light of the agressive stance taken by Cuba, backed up by Soviet war equipment, on the continent of Africa. We have too small a population in Canada, some 23 million people, to be indirectly involved in a war of aggression on the African continent. I submit that loans of this magnitude would be more productive if they were made to Canadians for developments in this country.

Perhaps the time has arrived when we should consider the establishment of a maritime commercial development corporation. This idea is similar to the one proposed by the preceding speaker, the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Clarke). In this instance I am talking about a Canadian organization, an organization which would be dedicated to assisting development in Canada, assisting in the establishment of jobs on both coasts of Canada.

Quite frankly, I disagree with the minister when he says perhaps the Polish people can build ships better than Canadians. This apparently was his statement in this House on Friday. The Poles do not agree with him either. Four cargo ships were built recently for Polish ocean lines at Sorel, Quebec.

I would point out to the minister that the inherent importance of maritime concerns to the entire Canadian nation cannot be underestimated. Three impressive ocean coastlines and a massive inland water network impinge on the daily lives of virtually all Canadians. "A mari usque ad mare", "From sea to sea" may in retrospect be slightly restricted because Canada does not end at its coasts. Our continental shelves occupy more than one million square miles of territory, or one third of the Canadian land mass. Because of this fact I would point out that the importance of maritime industries, and especially transportation over water, is in no danger of declining in the foreseeable future. No other mode comes close to offering an economic alternative to the movement of bulk goods over great distances. So we are on safe ground in a very uncertain period if we, as a government and as a country, encourage its development.

The shipbuilding industry has always catered to the needs of the conventional deep sea trade, the defence sector, and the fishing industry. However, vast new frontiers are beginning to emerge, providing challenges that boggle the mind. Harnessing the ocean's energy, Fundy tides, harvesting mineral nodules, exploiting petroleum reserves, gas reserves, and even the cultivating of new food sources from the sea, all provide new challenges for today's society, in particular for maritime industries.

These opportunities will not remain as visions of the future forever, but to capitalize on them will require changes in the nature of our maritime industries. Especially do we need changes immediately in the attitude of this government. We need them now.

If we are to cope with the future, we need only to travel back in our imagination a single lifetime, say to the year 1900, to realize how much of today's technology would be not merely incredible but incomprehensible to the keenest technical brains of that time. We are therefore, in my opinion, wasting valuable time.

In spite of all that has been said by the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. LeBlanc), we need the immediate development of a freezer trawler fleet if we, as Canadians, are to capitalize on the extensive fisheries markets that are open to us in Japan. These markets are fantastic. That is not my view alone. I quote from a recent article:

> Mitsunori Yoshida, a representative of Japan Fisheries, says the Canadian fishery offers a "great hope" for his countrymen wh annually consume more than 10 million metric tons of seafood.
> Fish supply in Japan this year has been cut by almost 40 per cent because of the various declarations of 200-mile limits throughout the world and particularly in the Soviet Union, the United States and Canada.
> Yashida said not only does Japan want to buy more than a proposed 300,000 tons of Canadian fish annually by 1985 but it also wants to establish a series of co-operative fishing ventures in Canadian waters. Japan is currently dealing with the Canadian government in an attempt to establish those fishing ventures.
> According to Charles Moulton, president of the Canadian Brotherhood of Railway Transport and General Workers Union: "There is no doubt in my mind that if we are to service these markets we must get started on development of our own freezer trawler fleet."
> "We have been afraid of the U.S. market which traditionally has always been our biggest buyer. We must make plans to find other export markets and in preparation for it we must have the freezer fleet."
> What bothers Moulton now is that everyone is talking about a freezer trawler fleet but "no one is doing anything about their construction."

That gives some indication as to what opportunities are available to us. It is obvious that our fishing fleets on both coasts must be mechanized and modernized within the next ten years. Experts estimate this will result in approximately $1 billion in new work in our shipyards. However, to assure this future, it is necessary that the shipbuilding industry remain healthy during the next two or three years in preparation for the challenges and opportunities of the 1980's.

A maritime commercial development corporation operating for Canadians would, in my opinion, go a long way toward re-establishing our Canadian shipbuilding industry. I hope these views are kept in mind before we place too great an emphasis on expanding the Export Development Corporation. Let us not continue as we have in the past decade with the destruction of Canada. Let us get on with the job of reconstructing Canada. A viable shipbuilding program along the lines I have proposed, and for the purposes I have outlined will, I submit, go a long way toward bringing about this objective.

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, my participation in this debate is motivated by a concern for the economy of this country. We hear the argument, and it was put forward by the minister when he introduced this bill on Friday, that the whole purpose of the Export Development Corporation is to ensure that Canadian industry is put in a more competitive position than it would otherwise be for export. That is one reason. The other reason puzzles me now and puzzled me last Friday afternoon when another bill was put forward dealing with gold coinage.

I am puzzled by the urgency. This was mentioned by the hon. member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse) and also the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Clarke). What is it that brings this bill before us at this time? We have good cause to ask why this bit of patchwork, if it has been in the mind of the Export Development Corporation for all these months, as it appears it has been, why did they wait until these last few days to see if it would be possible to have it rushed through at the last minute?

My concerns here are with this government's sense of priorities. We have seen our national debt double within the past ten years ago. Our deficit equals what budgets were ten years ago. Interest on the public debt has increased by five times, and per capita interest charges have almost quadrupled in the past ten years. These are indicators of a very serious economic situation in our country. Why has the government not put forward a comprehensive program to remedy the situation that I am sure even they admit exists today?

In 1968 unemployment was something in the order of 375,000. Today it is over one million. It has almost tripled in ten years. This is a serious problem. What we get is just one component. True, it is an aspect of our economic situation, but not the main aspect or main corrective of the situation.

Why is this government prepared to face the popular vote at this time without a comprehensive economic policy which will deal with our inflation, and with the problem of unemployment which is so serious in our country today? Therefore, I ask about the matter of the urgency. I want to deal with another aspect of the bill, but I am afraid that I will now have to call it five o'clock.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

SUGGESTION SPECIAL SUBCOMMITTEE INVESTIGATE NEEDS OF HANDICAPPED CITIZENS

The House resumed, from Monday, December 12, 1977, consideration of the motion of Mr. Dinsdale:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should set up a special subcommittee of the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs, to investigate and report on the needs of Canada's physically and mentally handicapped citizens; in order to provide a basis of information, necessary in avoiding the current costly duplication and overlapping of services, and essential in planning legislation for a comprehensive program of services at the federal, provincial and municipal levels of government to support and supplement the excellent work of voluntary organizations; all with a view to making it possible for the handicapped to live a creative, fruitful and independent life in the family and community, and thereby placing Canada in a position of leadership in the rehabilitaton movement in preparation for the XIV World Congress of Rehabilitation International to be held in Winnipeg during June 1980.

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the first thing apparent with regard to this matter was in the words of the officer at the Table who indicated that the motion stands in the name of the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale) of the Progressive Conservative Party of Canada, and is seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) of the New Democratic Party. Indeed, the measure we are talking about is of such a nature that, as I hope all hon. members will agree, it transcends party lines. I trust, therefore, that the motion will be supported by all members of the House of Commons.

It is important we should note that the purpose of the proposed subcommittee is—

● (1702)

—to investigate and report on the needs of Canada's physically and mentally handicapped citizens; in order to provide a basis of information, necessary in avoiding the current costly duplication and overlapping of services, and essential in planning legislation for a comprehensive program of services at the federal, provincial and municipal levels of government to support and supplement the excellent work of voluntary organizations; all with a view to making it possible for the handicapped to live a creative, fruitful and independent life in the family and community, and thereby placing Canada in a position of leadership in the rehabilitation movement in preparation for the XIV World Congress of Rehabilitation International to be held in Winnipeg during June 1980.

This motion is important because we all know how time slips by—we are almost in the middle of 1978 and there is a prospect that some time later in the year we shall be facing a general election. The lead time may be so compressed as to prevent adequate preparation. In the meantime there has been placed before the House of Commons a report, tabled by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Andras), on the employment of physically and mentally handicapped people in the federal public service. This is a report of a Public Service Commission and Department of Manpower and Immigration study team, and it is dated September 6, 1977. The authors are Virginia C. Miller and Helen J. Morton.

Anyone who is interested in the position of the handicapped in the Public Service and of the proposals with respect to them, anyone interested in this plan to improve the opportunities available for them to live a creative life within the community, within the spirit of this motion, should read this report. I commend the President of the Treasury Board for arranging to table it in the House of Commons. It deals with the handicapped in a way which is almost undeniable. I also commend the government for deciding to increase the opportunities for the employment of the handicapped in the public service and for the statement issued by the minister under date of March 21, 1978. I commend the minister because, as I say, this is a subject which is above the daily clamour of partisan politics. It is an area in which action could be taken not only in the private sector but in the public sector.

In the public sector there is an opportunity for the federal government, regardless of its political stripe, to provide leadership. I think it important that the following statement in the document of March 21, 1978, be placed on record in relation to this debate:

The position of the federal Public Service should be summarized as follows:

With respect to physically handicapped persons and without regard for the nature of the handicap, it is the policy of the government to provide, and to actively promote, equal access to employment and career development in the federal Public Service in work for which they are considered to be qualified and to ensure that any barriers to such equal access, whether procedural, attitudinal or physical, are progressively eliminated as quickly as possible.

With respect to mentally handicapped persons, it is the policy of the government to promote actively the increased employment of such persons within the federal public service in work for which they are considered to be qualified, and to ensure that where necessary special measures are utilized in the staffing process to give appropriate recognition to the nature of their handicap.

That is the statement made by the President of the Treasury Board, and it is one which members of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition support. Mr. Speaker, this report is so far reaching that it should not be tabled in the House only to be set aside. If we establish a committee and refer this matter to it, the objective of my hon. friend from Brandon-Souris, we ought to ensure that this report goes before that committee for consideration. I would therefore move, with the concurrence of my hon. friend from Brandon-Souris, seconded by my friend, the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro):

That the motion be amended by adding thereto the following:

"and the document entitled "Employment of Physicaly and Mentally Handicapped People in the Federal Public Service" should be immediately referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs for reference to the subcommittee."

The availability of this document can only enhance the work of the committee and increase the appreciation in the House and the country of the problems facing the handicapped. I hope this amendment will be accepted by the House.

Mr. F. A. Philbrook (Halton): Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to oppose the motion or contribute to it being talked out, but I should like to make a few comments and contribute a few facts and ideas which I believe to be important for the record.

I am sure each and every one of us sitting in this chamber today will agree it is the right of every handicapped individual in this country to "live a creative, fruitful and independent life in the family and community", to quote the motion.

This is especially meaningful as it relates to the area of employment. As our society presently functions, employment provides the framework within which to earn not only a financial livelihood, but also to feel a part of the maintstream, to be "where it's happening." Akin to this, perhaps just as important, if not more important, is that work fosters confidence, the desire to achieve, and the satisfaction of accomplishment. I think hon. members will agree that these observations are true for everyone. What apparently was not officially recognized until relatively recently was the fact that they are just as true for the physically and mentally handicapped members of our society.

The recognition that there have been disadvantages for the handicapped in Canada with respect to employment resulted in the drafting of the Human Rights Act, section 15. Section 15 deals especially with the elimination of disadvantages suffered by those who are physically handicapped, and I quote:

It is not a discriminatory practice for a person to adopt or carry out a special program, plan or arrangement designed to prevent disadvantages that are likely to be suffered by, or to eliminate or reduce disadvantages that are suffered by, any group of individuals when those disadvantages would be or are based on or related to the race, national or ethnic origin, colour, religion, age, sex, marital status or physical handicap of members of that group by improving opportunities respecting services, facilities, accommodation or employment in relation to that group.

The same recognition was given in a recent study by the Employment and Immigration Commission and the Public Service Commission entitled "Employment of the Physically and Mentally Handicapped People in the Federal Public Service." I think that has been referred to already.

When tabling the document the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Andras) outlined the government's plans for increasing opportunities for employment of the handicapped in the federal public service. I would like to read from that report. It is entitled "Government's Plans for Increasing Opportunities for Employment of the Handicapped in the Public Service."

Increased opportunity for the handicapped is clearly a matter of importance to the government. In 1975, Canada sponsored a declaration on the rights of disabled persons which was subsequently adopted by the United Nations General Assembly. That declaration specified that 'disabled persons have the right, according to their capabilities, to secure and retain employment or to engage in a useful, productive and remunerative occupation and to join trade unions'.

In that declaration the government was asserting that the right to work is not a privilege reserved for the non-handicapped. More recently, the passage of the Human Rights Act reiterated this concept by specifically prohibiting discrimination on the grounds of physical handicap and, moreover, explicitly recognizing the need for programs, plans or arrangements designed to eliminate or reduce disadvantages based on physical handicap.

We are all conscious that there have been disadvantages for the handicapped in Canada, and it was with this in view that, as Minister of Manpower and Immigration, the Honourable Robert Andras asked for a study of those disadvantages with specific reference to the federal public service. The minister wanted a frank and realistic appraisal of the kinds of problems which stand in the way of the handicapped when they seek employment or career development in the public service, so that these problems might be confronted head on and dealt with in a realistic way. That was the genesis of the report tabled this afternoon, which represents the combined efforts of officers of the public Service Commission, the former Department of Manpower and Immigration and a number of other departments.

The report, based on pilot projects, studies and widespread discussions with handicapped persons and associations representing the handicapped, was made available last year and provides us for the first time with a comprehensive view of the problem. What Mr. Andras wants to do now and particularly in view of his present responsibilities for personnel management in the public service, is to describe the measures which will be taken to address the problems which have been identified.

First, it is evident that much needs to be done in order to ensure that attitudes and employment practices do not discriminate against the handicapped. There is no deliberate discrimination; indeed, if there is any discrimination, it is quite unconscious and accidental. Nevertheless, if the concept of a non-handicapped person is what we have in mind when jobs or work places are designed, then the end result may very well favour the non-handicapped at the expense of the handicapped when employment decisions are made. Equally, if ignorance or misunderstanding is prevalent concerning the true capacities of the handicapped, then handicapped persons are likely to be overlooked when we search for candidates for many kinds of jobs.

What has to be done, therefore, is to attack these aspects of the problem on two fronts: first, the government must mount a vigorous information campaign within the public service aimed at radicating myths and misunderstandings about the abilities of the handicapped. In this connection, there is much evidence to demonstrate that the majority of handicapped persons are rated by their employers at least as high as, and often higher than, their non-handicapped counterparts in terms of such measures as punctuality, output, quality of work, attendance, stability and safety records. Handicapped people are good workers and it makes good sense to employ them. Through training and information programs, the government should ensure that all concerned focus on the capabilities of handicapped persons rather than on any real or perceived limitations.

Secondly, a vigorous program of change must be established with respect to policies or practices which unconsciously reflect some wrong attitudes. For this purpose, it is the government's intention that all its departments begin immediately to review and systematically eliminate any of their practices governing the design of jobs, the selection, training and career development of employees or the provision of office facilities and equipment which might discriminate against the handicapped.

The Public Service Commission has begun to examine its staffing policies, to ensure that handicapped persons are not inadvertently being screened out by recruitment and selection procedures which were basically designed for the non-handicapped: the way jobs are advertised, for example, or the manner in which job interviews are conducted. Thus an important task for the Public Service Commission will be to design recruitment and selection programs which are appropriate to the handicapped population, including the mentally handicapped. The Department of Supply and Services is already studying an expansion of the employment of physically and mentally handicapped workers in the provision of services and materials to the government. To facilitate that activity, the Secretariat of the Treasury Board is currently reviewing contract policy governing the use of sheltered workshops.

There are, of course, many other important areas in which the Treasury Board is or will be active in support of greater opportunities for the handicapped. Innovative approaches to job design will be considered, particularly where self-supervision, part-time employment, job sharing or work at home are concerned. Some of these have already been experimented with, with good results, and they can be applied successfully where handicapped persons are concerned. The Treasury Board will also look at its policies governing the provision of special equipement, so as to ensure that handicapped persons are not excluded from work for want of a mechanical aid or a piece of furniture adapted to their needs. It seems a small thing to a non-handicapped person, perhaps, but the lay-out of furniture or equipment in an office can be a real impediment to a person confined to a wheelchair.

All these activities are already under way or can begin immediately. They are activities which will be of great benefit to handicapped persons who are public servants or are seeking employment in the public service. They will be done as quickly as possible. Accordingly, all departments will be asked to start immediately on specific action plans for these activities, to report progress regularly and to hold managers accountable for the results achieved. Recognizing that these plans will profit from the advice of persons with special knowledge of the problems of the handicapped, an advisory group is being established, drawn from various agencies and associations concerned with the needs of the handicapped.

What has been described so far is a range of activities which will promote the changes in attitudes and pratices necessary to open up the public service to handicapped persons. It is a fact that there are some real problems with respect to physical access to government buildings or to their internal facilities. Many of these buildings, whether owned or rented, lack parking facilities, ramps, handrails, elevators or washrooms suited to the needs of handicapped people. While it has been a practice for several years to design appropriate facilities into new construction, or require them in buildings that might be leased by the government, there are many buildings which do not contain them but which still have many years of useful life. Conversion of these will not be cheap and in view of the government's intention to restrain spending the costs involved will have to be looked at carefully. Nevertheless, the Department of Public Works has been asked to co-ordinate studies of how to, by 1983, fully convert all government owned or leased buildings in which handicapped people might be employed. In establishing priorities within this plan the government will obviously bear in mind the need to accommodate not just public servants but also handicapped persons among the general public who need access to public buildings.

It is the government's intention to keep track of the results achieved in its programs and activities. This is a third major problem area, because the fact is that there has in the past been no satisfactory basis, in terms of either definition or statistics, for keeping track of our performance concerning employment of the handicapped.

● (1722)

With the promulgation of the Human Rights Act there is now a definition of a physically handicapped person which can be used in the employment context. For working purposes, the definition of a mentally handicapped person which the authors of the report proposed has also been accepted. However, neither of these would be of very much help without statistical information concerning the numbers of handicapped persons who are working or who have applied for work in the public service.

[Mr. Philbrook.]

I would like to have read the rest of that report. It is an excellent report and it would be worth while having it on the record, but I would like to stop short of quoting it further. I think all of us in this House can see the sense of responsibility and action in that report. I would now like to sum up quickly by saying the following.

As most hon. members are now aware, a block financing proposal has recently been made to the provinces to cover the costs of social services, including transportation services for the disabled. It represents the substituting of one financing arrangement, namely, block funding, for another, the conditional shared cost arrangement associated with the new social services legislation, Bill C-57.

As you may be aware, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) met with her provincial colleagues on March 6 and 7, 1978, to discuss the federal government's offer to block fund social services in place of the conditional cost sharing approach contained in Bill C-57. As a result of that meeting it has been decided to implement the block funding arrangement effective April 1, 1978. The financial formula takes into consideration current expenditures on social services, an additional amount to provide for more comprehensive coverage, annual escalation based on changes in the gross national product and the population, and a levelling adjustment that would gradually eliminate, over a ten year period, the provincial differences above or below the national average contribution by Canada so that at the end of the period each province would be receiving the same per capita amount.

I should like to add that the federal government will be providing financial support for the same services that were identified in Bill C-57, services that had been agreed to by the provincial and the federal governments as being necessary in this country.

Since the provincial governments as well as the federal government have indicated a real desire to improve social services, and as the needs of the handicapped are a very real concern to the federal government and the provincial governments, I am confident that the new arrangement will result in the development of services designed to enable the handicapped to participate more fully in Canadian society.

The federal government realizes that as much as possible should be done for the handicapped. The Minister of National Health and Welfare has made it clear that she is dedicated to aiding, and indeed, is most anxious to aid, the disabled in their desire to leave the institutions, to achieve integration and to become full and contributing participants in Canadian society. All of us here will have a part in the achievement of this goal in our capacity as legislators.

For this reason it is my pleasure to commend the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale) for having proposed this motion. It is the type of motion, the type of sentiment, which will focus the awareness of all members on such things as barriers. If there is any uncertainty about the motion, it is about whether it should be dealt with by means of a subcommittee of the standing committee. I understand that we will soon be debating the block funding legislation.

One other possible alternative is that when this legislation is being debated by the standing committee, it might be an opportune time for the idea contained in the motion to be debated. To my mind, it would be useful to look at this motion again at that time in the context of all social services legislation.

In closing I would like to say that I think it is important for us all to take a very close and frank look at that motion.

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, we have before us today the motion standing in the name of the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale) that the House consider establishing a subcommittee of the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs to investigate and report on the needs of the physically and mentally handicapped citizens in Canada. I should like to commend the hon. member for his motion because it affords us an opportunity to bring before the House of Commons the serious problem facing thousands of Canadian citizens, and an opportunity to try to prompt the government to take corrective action.

I know the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), who seconded the motion, would have wished to be here today to follow the proceedings, but, as we know, he is in Winnipeg attending the funeral of his wife.

The problem of the physically disabled or handicapped is, I am sure, a problem that every member of parliament comes across during his term of office, in terms of people who come to the MP hoping they can be helped to become, to the degree possible, productive members of society.

I have had many examples of constituents who have come to me who do not qualify for any kind of federal, provincial or municipal assistance because they are not totally disabled under the definition contained in the various acts, yet at the same time suffer some kind of physical or mental disability which bars them from being employed. It is a sad experience to see another individual in that state of affairs, someone who desperately wants to fit back into society in some small way, in order to feel a part of society, rather than being shunted into some corner and not looked upon as a productive and full-fledged member of society. Many of them want to be able to participate in work in some way. We are so imbued with the work ethic in our society that people who are barred from working lose a sense of dignity and self worth. It is a very frustrating experience for them because they know they have talents and they would like to participate, yet they find some kind of barrier stopping them from taking part in society.

It is important that we understand and examine the extent of the problems of the handicapped and the disabled in our country. We have to begin, first of all, by working out a definition of "handicapped" or "disabled". We have a number of pieces of federal legislation on the books right now which do not have a common definition of "disabled". I refer, for example, to the Canada Pension Plan which contains the disability provision and where disability is defined as being severe and prolonged. Yet, when you try to get that definition narrowed down further, it is at the hands of the bureaucrats and the regulations, and in the end it is defined as meaning you have to be flat on your back or confined to a wheelchair.

There are many persons whom we as members of parliament see who, we know, under any rational definition of "disabled" would qualify, but, for the purposes of the legislation, they do not, and therefore they cannot receive assistance under the Canada Pension Plan.

Another example was brought to my attention recently by a constituent filling out his income tax form. There is a provision there allowing a deduction to be made by someone who is disabled under the provisions of the Income Tax Act. This particular chap was undergoing kidney dialysis. He had to spend two days a week in the hospital, or seven hours, undergoing dialysis, and a number of hours each day in bed at home recuperating. People who have read the little brochure that taxpayers get will have seen the provision which states that if someone has been confined to bed for a lengthy period, he qualifies for a tax deduction on the cost of these treatments. My constituent filled out the form and was granted the deduction for 1976. But suddenly he was disqualified on his 1977 tax return and has had to repay a lump sum. Anyone reading the brochure would have thought that person qualified, but according to Revenue Canada he did not.

The first thing we have to do is clarify and define in a consistent way and for the purposes of federal and, hopefully, provincial and municipal legislation just what we mean by someone who is handicapped or disabled. The second thing we have to do is begin to identify who are the handicapped and disabled in our society, who they are in terms of sex, age and location, so that we actually know how many handicapped people we have.

I made a very rough investigation through various agencies that deal with handicapped people and was astounded to learn the extent to which Canadians suffer from some kind of handicap or disability. I learned there are some 15,000 paraplegics in Canada and there are 13,000 people registered with the National Institute for the Blind. That institute estimates that in addition there are 75,000 Canadians with a visual impairment severe enough to cause employment problems. I also learned that there are some 266,000 Canadians suffering from serious hearing impairments and 50,000 known cases of mental illness requiring hospital treatment each year, with some 250,000 treated through out-patient facilities for mental disorders.

In fact, I was astounded to learn that over $1 billion a year is being spent on psychiatric services in Canada. I also discovered that we have at least 200,000 known alcoholics in Canada, and that on Canadian pension disability plans as of June, 1977 there were 64,600 people receiving disability benefits. I found out that in the province of Ontario alone the workmen's compensation board is paying out 46,000 pensions each month to workers who have a work related disability. The figures begin to add up, not only in the thousands but in the tens of thousands. I do not think all the members of this House, or the public in general, realize the extent of people in Canada who have to undergo the discrimination or disadvantages associated with one disability or another.

The United States has done a study which estimates that one of every seven Americans is handicapped in one way or another. If we in Canada did a study I think the figure would be somewhat similar.

Therefore, I would recommend to members of the House that we should as a beginning step, in addition to the subcommittee, make sure that on the next census form instituted in Canada we include questions relating to how many Canadians are disabled and the extent of their disability. This would be a very efficient way of finding out just who in this country are handicapped.

Besides defining and identifying the handicapped we must move more vigorously in the area of preventing discrimination against the handicapped, especially in terms of entry into public and private places of business, but, more important, I think, in the field of employment. I had the experience of a young man about 20 years of age coming into my constituency office only a few weeks ago who told me he was seeking employment with the largest employers in Sault Ste. Marie, Algoma Steel, but was refused employment on the ground he was bowlegged. The doctor for Algoma Steel Corporation examined him and told him Algoma would not hire him because of that so-called disability which, in the doctor's opinion, could lead arthritic problems when he was older. The young man went to his own doctor to get his medical opinion. His doctor said he did not think that bowleggedness would be a serious problem in his later life or could lead to arthritis. I went to the personnel manager of Algoma Steel and presented the case. Although he was very sympathetic to my arguments, he said he had to stand by the decision of the company doctor.

There is nothing in Ontario labour law or the human rights act of Ontario, under which jurisdiction companies like Algoma fall, to which that man could appeal for the protection of his rights. We have to move rapidly and comprehensively in some of the anti-discrimination laws that exist throughout Canada to make sure that examples such as I have cited are not allowed to occur in the future.

We have to improve the human rights acts of the provinces as well as their labour codes. I wonder if we should not take a leaf from the books of some European countries which have established a quota system for large employers which requires that a certain percentage of their labour force must be people who have some sort of disability. I was interested to find out that about 3 per cent of the work force of DuPont, a large industrial firm, are handicapped. This amounts to some 1,452 people. Studies undertaken by the corporation have concluded that 90 per cent of these handicapped people are rated by the company as average or better than average workers. We should first destroy this myth that somehow the handicapped are unreliable, not eager workers and do not have talents and skills to contribute to the work force. Studies in the United States and elsewhere have shown that, with certain accommodation and goodwill, the handicapped can be very productive members of our society.

Another recommendation is that the federal government co-ordinate its efforts on behalf of the handicapped. I would like to see a multidepartmental approach so that we could have national health and welfare, manpower and revenue get together in a co-ordinated effort to improve the situation for the disabled in Canada.

I would certainly like to see more assistance in terms of loans and grants to the many volunteer organizations which do such a tremendous job on behalf of the handicapped. The government should study very seriously a system whereby we would be able to subsidize the wages of the handicapped for certain employers. Again and again the message I get from the handicapped is that they do not want to do the little "make work" kinds of projects they often are offered in sheltered workshops, but would like to do meaningful and productive work just like their fellow citizens. Many employers, while they see the moral side of that argument, find in terms of pure economics that it is too risky to hire someone who is maybe a little bit slower in getting things done; but if we were able to subsidize some of those wages, especially for the smaller employers, it would go a long way to overcoming much of the reluctance of certain employers to hire handicapped people. I hope the government will take that idea seriously and at least try some pilot projects.

Lastly, we must have an immediate campaign to begin to educate the public about handicapped people. When I was first elected I had a certain state of mind in respect of what being disabled or handicapped meant. However, the more I met with handicapped and disabled people, the more impressed I was with their abilities and their attitudes. The message has to get out among the general public that we as a government have a responsibility in this regard, and this must be done through the media and other public relations methods. I have seen many examples in my own riding of injustice and wrongdoing, and I have felt very frustrated because I know there is no legal redress for these people. We must make some real improvements in terms of legislation.

I have also seen volunteers in our society do such a heroic job on behalf of the handicapped. We would not want to shut them out, but rather encourage their efforts. They can only do so much with limited manpower and limited funds. Any society that calls itself humanistic will realize that there is a positive role for government to play.

I think I have outlined some of the roles in terms either of legislation on human rights or financing that we could play to bring these fellow citizens more into the mainstream of Canadian life, thereby restoring their sense of dignity and worth, which is a claim that every Canadian citizen has.

● (1742)

Mr. C. A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I want to take a few minutes of the time of the House to say a few words on this motion which, of course, I support. This motion asks the government to set up a special subcommittee of the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs, to investigate and report on the needs of Canada's physically and mentally handicapped citizens, in order to provide a basis of information, necessary in avoiding the current costly duplication and overlapping of services.

I shall stop here, Mr. Speaker, because I believe the point of this whole question is precisely the misunderstanding between the three levels of government. To set up a sub-committee as recommended is all very well; to look into cases takes a long time and it could take another two or three years before a report could be presented. It often happens as well that the report that is finally produced comes out too late and is already obsolete.

I think we should perhaps look closer during this study because I am not against the establishment of this subcommittee. I think however that even if we make a study for the well-being of handicapped citizens, we should think of the immediate possibility to negotiate agreements between the three levels of government, municipal, provincial and federal, if we are to come to something more concrete.

Several people organized movements, and I can point out that there is in my area a good organization working for handicapped people. In my constituency we have small manufactures for the handicapped but unfortunately, we often see conflicts between the various levels of government. I remember the opening of a manufacture which employed about thirty handicapped people; the first year, it operated under the responsibility of the federal government through winter work, Canada Works or other federal programs, and everything was all right, although a few months was too short a period.

We have noted that six or seven months were a somewhat short period to complete a whole year, although they would make them eligible for unemployment insurance benefits and continue to be paid a salary. But I suggest that even with unemployment insurance benefits, a handicapped person cannot help feeling unhappy when he has known the satisfaction of receiving a regular pay cheque for useful work. It is not so much the salary a person receives that matters, Mr. Speaker, but the job a person does. A person feels useful to society. These people are greatly improved when we meet them again at work at the plant.

Frankly, I was somewhat like all other people who had never been in touch with this group of people who are more often than not ignored by society, but after a few weeks, I could see these boys, these girls and sometimes these older people who are entirely transformed and who replied, when I asked them why they looked so delighted, that they finally considered themselves useful to society and that they could live at last like everybody else. We thought that giving benefits of some kind to the handicapped was enough and that they were happy: I suggest it is quite the opposite and that we make of them the unhappiest people in the world. When we let them play useful parts in their own region, spend their time in a constructive way, that is when they consider themselves true men and women.

And our stumbling block at the time when we launched that industry was that the second year both governments so overlapped that we received a federal and a provincial grant; a conflict ensued and the following year we received nothing. We did not know whether the federal or the provincial government was going to look after that group. It was actually the provincial government which did something because when Canada Works projects were submitted, we were told that the federal level could not intervene as this was not in its jurisdiction. Meanwhile, the handicapped were in the forefront of this war between both governments.

That is why I was saying at the outset that the crucial point today is not the study of the matter but the agreement. Whose duty will it be to act so that we can finally have a solid base from which to go and know who is responsible? That is what is interesting. I remember that the secretary of that group is also handicapped. The secretary, the foreman, they are all handicapped and they are not used to this conflict of jurisdiction. This was the first time they encountered it, and I had to explain to them that that was Canada, a conflict of jurisdiction.

Therefore, I sincerely hope, Mr. Speaker, that while we study this matter, as study we must to encompass the entire country, we first of all aid the movements that are already started in order to come to some agreement. There can be agreement between the provinces and the federal government, to help those groups and allow them to continue. Their little factory is now doing as best as it can, but they are barely making it with the revenues they are netting; if there were some form of assistance, like in the beginning, I think the operation would run much smoother and the handicapped would not have to spend 50 per cent of their time working and remain idle during the other 50 per cent.

I believe getting orders is not a problem for that small manufacture. What is lacking is money to operate the business, and without knowing what is going on elsewhere, I feel those are the problems which also happen in the other communities which started to be concerned about their handicapped people. Someone said earlier that we should know how many handicapped people there are.

Surveys have been done in my area and of course we have been stunned to see how many there were, because only a few of them were visible, most of them did not speak up, remained hidden in the house and did not dare show themselves. At the time of the survey they were visited at home and persuaded to come out in the light, to speak up and realize that like everyone else they were human beings and had a right to a good life in keeping with their abilities and needs. It seems to me that a new interest has been stirred up in that group and that today, at least in my area, we know perfectly well the number of our handicapped and we hope to help them more over the years.

Once again, I want to insist on that point because it is very important, and I would like that both government levels, federal and provincial governments, get together with a view to doing something concrete and permanent for those handicapped people.

Mr. S. Victor Railton (Welland): Mr. Speaker, it has been well documented by the second last speaker how many handicapped people we have in Canada, a number of whom occupy—

Mr. Dinsdale: A point of order, Mr. Speaker. I have been trying to get the floor ever since this debate began today—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Actually the hon. member has already spoken. He moved the motion and therefore he would be closing the debate. The only way he can speak now is by unanimous consent.

Mr. Dinsdale: On that point of order, Mr. Speaker, there is an amendment before the House and it is in connection with that that I wish to speak. In the normal routine the right to speak alternates between each side of the House, but that has not been the case in this discussion.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member will admit that he has spoken once and now another member wishes to speak, so it is for the Chair to decide. If he wants the Chair to decide otherwise he will have to do it by a motion. The hon. member for Welland (Mr. Railton):

Mr. Railton: We have many problems with handicapped people. One is age, but there are many other diseases which are regarded as types of handicap. For instance, the second last speaker mentioned defects of vision. There are as well people with strokes, cerebral palsy, amputation cases, paraplegics, severe diabetics, people with congenital malformations and mental retardation, or retardation which is congenital or acquired. We also have psychiatric illness. All of these are handicapped people and up to the present there have been fairly well defined causes for their not being accepted in a place of work. A lot of them have also found it difficult to be accepted in society. Like healthy or so-called normal people, however, they have a great need to be accepted in society and to be allowed to do meaningful work, to have some way of expressing themselves and some type of creative outlet.

It is very interesting that we now find some mental retardation is due to diseases like German measles in pregnancy—an innocuous disease but one which causes retardation if contracted in the first three months of pregnancy.

There has been a debate about schizophrenia. Freud thought it was due to mental aberration which either developed or was stimulated by some abnormal circumstance. We are finding out that it also has a physical background, and this is a breakthrough. We have had a preliminary report from the doctor who runs the Lakeshore psychiatric hospital in Toronto which shows that many of his chronic patients were people with renal disability. These kidney cases had to receive treatment by renal dialysis in order to survive and in the process of treating them the doctor was astounded to find that some people thought beyond help had recovered. Some even went back to work. I mention these things because they point out the necessity for continued work and research and for trying to make the lives of these people more pleasant and meaningful.

The opposition House leader spoke of the need for this subcommittee. In Welland I have had experience with a society which is helping the handicapped. It was started in Port Robinson and the other night they held a dinner which the Lieutenant Governor for Ontario, Pauline McGibbon, attended. I was unable to attend because of an expected vote in this House.

The country as a whole must show an improvement in its attitude toward the handicapped. We should also find some way of changing the architecture of places of work, public buildings, residences and all areas of the environment which make life so difficult for handicapped people. The Department of National Health and Welfare is extremely concerned about the problem. A great deal of work is being done by the committee but the old question of more committees and subcommittees comes up. Studies are being carried out now into the work of private agencies, citizens and provincial and federal governments; it is not that the government is averse to this particular subcommittee study at all. There is a question of timing, however, as there must be a great deal of education—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): A point of order, Mr. Speaker. I have been listening with great interest to what the hon. member for Welland is saying. I think I should say to you that a consensus has been reached in the House about this motion. There was some discussion about dealing with the amendment. This discussion led to the point where the member for Brandon-Souris would be able to speak on the amendment. I know, Mr. Speaker, that you have a choice of who might speak in the debate, but the hon. member for Brandon-Souris has been identified with the cause of the handicapped for so long, as has the hon. member for Welland. Perhaps it would be appropriate for you not to see the clock in view of this consensus in the House. The hon. member for Welland could finish his speech and then we might hear from the hon. member for Brandon-Souris to close the debate. Given the consensus there is on all sides of the House respecting the importance of the subject matter to the handicapped and to their advancement, I hope that the proposition would be agreeable to all of my colleagues in the House.

● (1802)

Mr. Railton: Mr. Speaker, I have not been told that there was a consensus. It was my understanding that the government was quite happy with the debate on the question of this subcommittee. But nobody has told me whether or not there was a consensus and that any vote could be taken. I think for that reason I would have to refuse to give unanimous consent.

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, respecting the comments made by the House leader for the opposition, my colleague the Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council had gone off to check. I was unaware of any consensus. I know the hon. member for Welland would like to finish his remarks. I can appreciate that the hon. member for Brandon-Souris would like to make some remarks, but I think this matter could come up again on another Tuesday. If the hon. House leader for the opposition would permit, I would like to make some remarks on the motion as well, and I do so only for the simple reason that I can speak from some family knowledge on this subject.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. parliamentary secretary for his remarks. I think I speak for the hon. member for Brandon-Souris in suggesting that it would be quite agreeable for the matter to come up at the next Tuesday when it could be dealt with. The reason I suggest that to you is because of this rather unique consensus in the House on this matter. I appreciate the comments of the parliamentary secretary and I accept his offer. I know that he will ask the government House leader to do his best to ensure that this will happen.

Mr. Railton: Mr. Speaker, I certainly concur with the suggestion that we make another attempt to finish the debate on a Tuesday.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I might conclude that the hon. member for Welland had called it six o'clock; he wants to finish his speech at the next sitting.

The hour provided for the consideration of private members' business having expired, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock p.m.

At 6.08 p.m. the House took recess.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

EXPORT DEVELOPMENT ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Horner that Bill C-36, to amend the Export Development Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

● (2012)

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, when I called it five o'clock I was explaining why I had some doubts about this bill being brought forward at the present time in current circumstances. It is only a partial solution to one of the great problems confronting this country, namely, unemployment. While the increase we are being asked to approve would contribute to the reduction of this unemployment by ensuring orders for our exports, I am persuaded that there are other ways in which we could proceed and I propose to say more about this later on. The proposal is that the credit potential of the Export Development Corporation be increased from $400 million to $1 billion.

Even when the Export Development Corporation was an export insurance scheme, Mr. Speaker, I wondered why it was not possible to get an accounting of the extent to which credits which have been extended are being paid back. I know that when credits have been extended and debts are repaid the money goes back into the consolidated revenue fund. But surely the corporation should be in a position to indicate openly the extent of the sums it was getting back from the credits it had extended so that there might be a roll-over scheme, a self-liquidating fund for its operation. At the present time, except for what appears in the annual report of the corporation it is very difficult to learn the extent to which loans are being refunded.

One would imagine that since 1964, when the corporation came into being in an earlier form, there has been a considerable return on the expenditures laid out. There ought to be a means whereby, through parliamentary approval, the corporation might, for example, ask in a particular year that 80 or 90 per cent of the funds returned in the previous year or two be made available for future operations by the agency. But that is not how it works. The way it works is for the corporation to come to parliament and seek to increase the amount which can be made available for export development.

Some of my hon. friends have mentioned countries to which lines of credit have been extended. Cuba has been mentioned. Among industries, the paper industry has been mentioned. I believe that either through CIDA or the EDC, or a combination of the two, there is a scheme whereby bagasse, as it is called, or the crushed fibre of the sugar cane, instead of being burnt or otherwise destroyed, is being converted into a form of paper. Some Canadian papermakers have had a hand, I understand, in this enterprise.

The criticism I make of this operation is that, through this assistance in its industrial development, Cuba is being freed to send troops throughout Africa, causing serious problems for established authorities there. We should examine this aspect very closely. We hear from some quarters the suggestion that we should not attach political considerations to the extension of assistance, but there is a kind of precedent for doing so. An embargo, for instance, is the application of political considerations, in a negative sense, and one is being applied against Rhodesia. So if political criteria are being applied and given expression by way of an embargo, why are political criteria not applied when it comes to the extension of credit or assistance?

Algeria is another country receiving assistance from the EDC. I remember trying to find out where the $1.2 billion line of credit at very low interest had come from. I had received a number of letters sharply critical of this $1.2 billion being made available. Algeria must by now be one of the wealthy countries, whether good use is made of that wealth or not. Almost from the first day of its independence it managed to conclude contracts across the Mediterranean with France for the sale of petroleum products. There is, of course, still a great deal of commerce in liquid natural gas across the Mediterranean to France and other countries on the north shore of the Mediterranean. Algeria is not a pauper by any means, and therefore one has cause to wonder why $1.2 billion should be extended as a line of credit to Algeria.

The other criticism of Algeria was, and still is, that it was one of the host countries to hijackers of aircraft. It was the one country to which many hijackers wished to be sent once they sorted out their problems with the countries in which the hijackings took place. In other words, Algeria was the host country to international criminals. Therefore, why should we extend a line of credit of $1.2 billion to a country which makes itself a haven for the criminal element in the international community?

I question that particular line of credit, and if this bill goes to committee I would certainly like to get a further line on this. I am sure I will be given a suave answer like "They are in need of it". There was one little aspect about Algeria which amused me when I visited there with the then president of the Canadian International Development Agency. This will lead into another comment I want to make.

One of the projects which had been organized by CIDA was a school which was set up in Algeria to teach Algerians how to run a merchant marine. My friend, the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) would roar with laughter to think that Canadians would teach anybody how to run a merchant marine. We have difficulty persuading this government to create a merchant marine in this country, yet CIDA managed to find technical people from around the country to go to Algeria to set up the administration of a merchant marine in that country.

That brings me to the final point I had in mind when I rose to speak about this measure. This was mentioned by the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Clarke) and also by the hon. member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse). Surely in today's world and with the problems confronting Canada there must be some way of using the funds which we are being asked to give to the EDC to help Canadian industry help Canada. There is talk about assistance to fishing fleets.

I mention this in terms of extension of assistance to a merchant marine because we do not have one. We have not had one, unfortunately, for a number of years. We built up a fairly respectable merchant marine during the war, but gradually it was allowed to deteriorate. The hon. member for Lévis (Mr. Guay), who sits on the government side, has risen to speak about this. The hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall) has also spoken about it. I have spoken about it as well. On the economic ground of what it costs to import and export the goods which we import and export, surely to goodness it stands to reason that there ought to be a merchant marine in Canada manned by Canadians and using ships which are built in Canadian yards. Our shipbuilding yards are withering away, and much of the shipbuilding technology which we built up during the war is virtually lost to us now. It is still there, but we are very near the critical moment, and funds should be made available for the creation of a merchant marine. It cannot be done in one year. It is a fantastically expensive operation, but a start should be made. I have said this in this House before. I probably referred to it, at least in passing, in my maiden speech, and that was almost six years ago.

The tradition of the sea is part of Canada. I think even my friend the hon. member for Welland (Mr. Railton) would agree that there are traditions of the sea even as far inland as Welland. They are good traditions which ought to be kept alive, yet we are allowing them to disappear and die. The hon. member for Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Béchard) would also agree.

Mr. Béchard: Me especially.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): However, we ought to think and continue to think in terms of real deep sea transport with large ships. We export in the order of $40 billion worth of goods a year, and, if my figures are correct, we import about the same amount, but all in foreign bottoms. We pay billions of dollars to send our wheat abroad. We arrange to sell it, and then we arrange for someone to pick it up and carry it away. Why we do not have our own ships to carry our wheat? How many millions or trillions of tons, gallons or barrels of oil do we import into this country, all in foreign bottoms? Some of them are Liberian, some Panamanian and some Japanese.

Why should we not make a start at building our own merchant marine to carry the trade which is the very lifeblood of this country? What we are being asked to do today is to build up a fund for the EDC to allow Algeria to dream up the idea of a merchant marine. We will send away our technicians so that Algeria can have a merchant marine. It is absolutely ludicrous that we should be creating a merchant marine for someone else when we are not doing it for ourselves. There are shipbuilding subsidies in the estimates. I was able to get at the last minute only the 1977-78 estimates, but there was $65 million for shipbuilding in the estimate of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Some of that was for fishing vessels 75 feet in length. There was federal support for accommodation of a new shipbuilding assistance program which was an extension of the subsidy program administered by the Department of the Environment for patrol vessels and fishing vessels, but not for the carriage of trade. These other vessels are important and needed, but we also need vessels for the carriage of trade.

I have the suspicion that this matter has been brought in at the last minute just to fill in time. It could have been brought in earlier. We are under some pressure to make sure it gets through. I suspect that there is something behind this bill which I do not like. I have misgivings about the fact that there is not a clear story about the returns on the loans already made and on which I assume repayments are being made. I hope they are not all being forgiven. Some of them maybe. On political grounds I question whether EDC assistance should be extended to such countries as Cuba and Algeria; I cite only those two. There may be others, but those two are the most obvious. We seem prepared to assist others, but we are not prepared to confront the problems of unemployment and lack of self-respect in our own country which we ought to be able to do through an organization such as this.

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased indeed to be able to take part in this debate on Bill C-36 because I believe very strongly that we need an incentive which will induce our producers to make the extra effort which is necessary to increase our export sales and thereby start to produce the additional jobs which our people—and especially our young people—need today.

Because of this country's great dependence on the United States market—we ship 70 per cent of our exports to that market—and the steady move of that country toward protectionism, the development of additional markets has become particularly necessary if we are to increase our volume of exports, or even maintain our present level of exports.

Making sales in other countries depends to a very large extent upon doing four things successfully: first, going abroad and making personal contact with potential buyers; second, finding out what is required to meet the competition in those markets; third, returning to Canada and producing a product which can compete successfully; and fourth, displaying the product effectively before potential customers.

The incentive I suggest would allow producers to write off 200 per cent of all expenses connected with, first, making sales trips abroad; second, displaying their products at foreign trade fairs; and third, any other expenses incurred in sales promotion in the export market in excess of those made in the base year, the year before the plan goes into operation.

Not only would all such expenses be completely written off in the year when they are made, but a considerable cash bonus would accrue to the company for its additional sales promotion activities. The kind of incentive I have mentioned would greatly encourage the kind of activity which is essential if increased sales are to be made.

Another thing which the government should do to help increase the sales of Canadian products abroad is to organize fly-and-buy missions whereby the important buyers in the principal foreign markets would be brought to Canada once a year to see Canadian products displayed in giant trade shows in Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg and Vancouver, and our heavy machinery in the factories where it is made across the country. Such operations have produced spectacular results where they have been used, and have paid for themselves many times over by the additional business which they have generated. I hope that the government will have the good sense to introduce such incentives in the very near future because not to do so would greatly jeopardize the increase in export sales which this country so badly needs.

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I had not expected to be given an opportunity to speak in the House again in the present parliament when I spoke last week in the budget debate, but here we are proceeding with parliament while the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) attempts to make up his mind whether he dare risk an election or whether he dare risk an election in this century. Because, quite frankly, I am starting to become dubious as to whether we are going to have an election in Canada again. When I look at the hon. gentlemen opposite, I am reminded of the great Scottish bard, Mr. Robert Burns, who wrote of the "wee sleekit, cow'rin', tim'rous beastie" in his poem. Certainly the cabinet members opposite are getting the wee sleekit, tim'rous beastie look about them. I hope the Prime Minister will be encouraged by the wee sleekit, tim'rous beasties.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I suggest the hon. member get back to the bill under discussion, namely, Bill C-36.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, as always I accept your advice on these matters, so I will leave the wee sleekit beasties and proceed to the bill.

This bill is an illustration of the unparallelled arrogance of the government opposite. It is one more example to the Canadian public which is aching from the many blows it has taken from this government in the last four years. It is another example of the unparallelled arrogance of the government. We had the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner) a few weeks ago sending out a release to the financial papers stating that it was a shocking thing that the opposition had not agreed that this bill should be rushed through parliament without any debate.

The unparallelled arrogance of the minister is only second to that of the Prime Minister and of the Minister of Finance

(Mr. Chrétien). How he got that way so fast is one of the mysteries of the century, or perhaps the gentleman who sits near to me already knew how arrogant he was and, as I have often said, he is looking very relieved now that he has been relieved of the case of "horneroids" which he had.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: It was booted about in the North American papers by the minister that if we did not rush this thing through, the export trade of Canada would collapse in a heap this year, in 1978, and the Progressive Conservatives in the official opposition would have to accept responsibility for this state of affairs. So we are supposed to rush through these millions of dollars in additional powers and authority to the Export Development Corporation without a moment's hesitation, on the say so of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, who is not here tonight to defend his bill. I presume he spoke in this debate. I rushed up from Newfoundland this morning when I heard this was coming up in the House; I came 3,000 miles to try to save this House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: Therefore, I am not as well organized as I would like to be in addressing this bill, but I still have some relevant things to say about it. I expected to see the minister here to defend it.

There are billions of dollars involved here. On this point I want to say something, but because I did not hear the other speakers I am afraid of being repetitious, as I am sure you know, Mr. Speaker. I do not know whether this point has been made. A year ago, on May 12, 1977, the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs considered Bill C-47, an act to amend the Export Development Corporation. At that time the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens)—a more dedicated, hard working and astute member of the House there is not—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: —our financial critic, a man who is going to make a tremendous minister of finance—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: —who is going to put it all back together once we get the government out, if there is an election this century—was questioning the president of the corporation in the committee. He said this:

. . . If we raise you from the $750 million to the $2.5 billion—

That is what they wanted last year, and we remember C. D. Howe's famous statement "What's a million?". With this crew it is "What's a billion?". The hon. member for York-Simcoe went on to say:

—how long do you project ahead that that new ceiling is going to be sufficient for you?

MR. MACDONALD: We have to cope with the existing business, the secondary rate of growth which topples out in this case—

[Mr. Crosbie.]

This is typical Ottawa "bafflegab", you will notice, Mr. Speaker.

—and the fact that we are prepared, if and when this increased ceiling is approved, to start writing some front-end risks of performance bonds, frivolous call and cross liabilities, which the companies have been crying for for some time.

Who can understand what he is saying?

We anticipate that on these two counts the new ceiling we put forward will carry us, we hope, through the end of 1978.

So last year at the committee meeting, when the president was asked whether this would keep them going, he said "through the end of 1978". Now we have the minister, acting like a cry-baby in the financial pages of the financial press in North America, bawling, crying and moaning that if it is not put through, they will stop operating some time in 1978.

They better get their act together. Either the president of the corporation knew what he was saying in May of 1977 and the minister does not know what he is saying now—that is my preferred solution to the problem—or else the president in 1977 did not know what he was saying and the minister does know now. That is so unlikely as to make it beyond belief. We know the minister does not know what he is saying. He has not said a sensible thing since he became minister. A more puerile performance by a minister of this government has not yet been seen.

The president of the corporation then went on to say:

That is, it will give us ample time to come back to parliament when we hope to have a major revision of the statute on the lending side.

This is certainly a major revision; it is in the billions of dollars. It raises the authorized capital from $400 million to $1 billion. It raises the number of shares from four million to ten million. It raises the ceiling for all contingent liabilities from $2.5 billion to $10 billion. We are talking about billions of dollars, Mr. Speaker. This crowd has gone wild with power! They have come to this parliament and they ask to be given extra authority to raise the amount from $2.5 billion to $10 billion, and we do not even have a chance to scrutinize properly what this corporation is doing.

● (2042)

I went to a meeting of the public accounts committee where this corporation came before it. It was sickening to see a corporation that is able to lash out guarantees in the hundreds of millions in loans and credit—in excess of $1 billion—and we in that committee unable to really dig in and get any information. Grown men and women were given ten minutes to ask questions while the "bafflegabbers" you asked the questions of took up nine minutes of "bafflegabbing" in response to the questions you asked. That is the only scrutiny that this parliament has had as respresentatives elected to represent the Canadian people over this Crown corporation, and we are now asked to go on and give them the ability to make $10 billion in contingent liabilities, up from $2.5 billion, and to raise the ceiling for all contingent liabilities re the government account to $3.5 billion from $1 billion. Not on your life, Mr. Speaker!

We would be derelict in our duty were we to rush this through as the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce wants.

We want an accounting, we want this corporation before a committee of this House and we want them put under a grilling, a real grilling. We want to see what they are doing. We want to see what they are up to. That is what we want to see, Mr. Speaker. We are not just going to walk this through because the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce thinks this is an election year and we are going to fall over and play dead while he raises to industry and business the spectre that before the end of the year the corporation may run out of credit facilities. It is not going to run out of credit facilities. It is going to run out of credit with us unless it comes before a committee of this House and lets us get right into the meat and potatoes of that corporation and see what it is up to and what they are doing.

Now, Mr. Speaker, just look at the provision for loan losses this outfit has that is dealing in the hundreds of millions and even billions of dollars. What have they got there for loan losses? This is an example of "bafflegab" gone berserk, Mr. Speaker. Their provision for loan losses you will see in their financial statement for the end of December, 1977, page 5. The provision for losses and loans receivable is $4 million; provision for claims in insurance in force is $5,026,000. These are minuscule amounts when you are dealing in the huge amounts they are dealing in. What is the answer? We are told this at page 9:

> Provisions for losses are based on a review of collectibility of all outstanding loans to sovereign and commercial borrowers. In respect of this review, the corporation recognizes that the future economic and political conditions in some of the countries where the corporation has made loans are subject to varying degrees of pressures, some of which are unpredictable.

You can bet your "bafflegab", Mr. Speaker; you can bet it is unpredictable what they are going to do in some of those countries. Have you seen the list of the outfits they are lending to and the countries? There is not enough sovereignty in most of those countries to put in a glass of water.

They say:

> Accordingly, delays in the repayment of principal and interest may well occur from time to time.

That is an astute prophecy!

> In the case of loans made to sovereign borrowers—

Now we are going to get it right square between the old eyes. Here we were worried about our money and about the difficult conditions and delays that might well occur from time to time with the varying degrees of pressure. We were getting worried, but now we come to the punch line so we won't worry any longer, the soporific statements that put the minister to sleep. Oh, the minister loves to hear statements like this. He does not need to worry then about the EDC and their billions of credit. What is the statement? The statement is, Mr. Speaker:

> In the case of loans made to sovereign borrowers, that is the governments of countries or their agencies, payment delays are not necessarily indicative of a future loss requiring a provision.

Why not? Here is a sovereign that has defaulted—defalcated. They have said, "Buzz off, we can't pay you". We are not going to worry about that. Why not? It states:

> Sovereign entities and their international financial obligations do not have commercial mortality—

They might not have commercial mortality, but they have got an awful lot of other mortality in the barrels of their guns, Mr. Speaker. In other words, they are going to exist whether they pay their bills or not. That is exactly what they are going to do.

> Sovereign entities and their international financial obligations do not have commercial mortality, and the international system does not allow the unilateral denial of a sovereign obligation.

What bellywash! Did you ever hear the like of that, Mr. Speaker? International law does not allow sovereign entities to unilaterally deny their sovereign obligations. What a joke! All through the centuries they have done it tens of thousands of times, and the only way you can stop them is if you go in and invade, take them over and give them the iron fist.

Can't we see dear old Canada putting the iron fist to all these countries in Africa and South East Asia, not to talk about Poland? Suppose the Poles do not meet some of their obligations? Are we going to send the Canadian armed forces steaming over to Poland to show them that it is just not allowed by the international system for them to internationally spurn their obligations? What a laugh. Imagine this appearing in an official government document. It might have made the minister feel better but it does not make me feel better. I want this outfit before a committee where we can question them hour after hour, day after day and week after week until we find out what they are up to.

This is another quotation:

> Furthermore, the international system provides several mechanisms and institutions through which countries facing repayment difficulties can effect remedial measures in agreement with their creditors.

Did anybody read about Indonesia a few months ago and how the whole shooting match just about went up the spout with their great company pertimax, whatever it is called, over in Indonesia which was unable to meet its obligations? All the great U.S. banks and others that have been lending all the money, and who pretend to know so much about international economic order, just about all went down with Indonesia and had to get together and kiss the old Indonesian whatnot so they would not go under. Because if they had gone under, they would have taken all of them with them. That is what is happening, Mr. Speaker. The creditor countries are afraid to collect. They cannot put any pressure on to collect because if they do the whole house of cards will come tumbling down. Then they state:

> Therefore, except in the rare instance of outright repudiation or a write-off of asset value agreed to by creditors, in the opinion of management the ultimate collectibility of a sovereign obligation, and thus its asset value, is not subject to question although delays may have to be accepted.

Yes, delays—something like a thousand years. They do not want to put this in their accounts. They do not want to allow reserves for it. What is a thousand years in the life of a sovereign entity? Have you ever in your life, Mr. Speaker, had this kind of malarkey thrust before you in an official document?

Finally, if the review of the outstanding loans does not specifically indicate future loss, it is the policy of the corporation nonetheless to set aside each year some provision in consideration of the total loan portfolio.

Something like $1 for $100 million, I presume, because they certainly do not show much allowance here.

I am only giving the House this example, not because I want to denigrate the Export Development Corporation, but because I want to get them on the right track. I want to get them under the scrutiny of the people who are elected to this parliament to govern these things. Because in twenty years' time, or thirty, they will be looking back to see what we did and how we acted with this corporation that is now so proud of itself, and so boastful about itself, and which so easily gives away billion dollar credits around the world.

There is an oil refinery in Come-By-Chance, Newfoundland, that was not financed by the EDC because it is in Canada. They are not financing or helping with development anywhere in Canada in the underdeveloped areas. No, that is one of the things that is wrong. We should have a credit agency that does that. That oil refinery in Come-By-Chance was financed by the ECGD, the English export credit department of the board of trade which is the equivalent in England of the Export Development Corporation here.

I remember Mr. Smallwood saying how the ECGD had said the whole thing at Come-By-Chance was feasible and economically sound, and that is why nobody should question it. I had the temerity to question the deal; I had the effrontery to question the great wisdom of the deal at Come-By-Chance. I got jumped all over for three years, and brutalized politically, but I fought back, Mr. Speaker, and here I am ten years later and I am still going to speak my mind and expose this kind of chicanery whenever I come across it.

They went ahead and ECGD financed it, and they are holding the bag for $110 million today. That is what ECGD is doing because they are interested. And so the EDC; they are interested in financing Canadian exports and it is, very, very secondary whether the credit they are giving is sound or not. They are not concerned about how sound the credit is. They are not concerned. They want to have a big record. Mr. MacDonald wants to come before the committee and say: "We had a billion dollars; we whacked out a billion dollars last year in credits. We financed a billion dollars worth of exports."

The January/February "EDC News" states in the heading, "EDC Loans Top Billion Dollars in 1977". That is what they want, another record, not whether the $1 billion in loans is sound from a banker's point of view. They are interested in financing and their job is to finance Canadian exports and to help us export more. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, they are prepared to take risks and they are taking risks that bankers would not take.

They are going to get stung with big losses, Mr. Speaker. The losses that ECGD are suffering in Come-By-Chance, Newfoundland heralds the losses that EDC are going to have the way they are operating around the world. Mark my words. I do not know how long it is going to take, a year, five years, ten; but they are going to suffer some big, staggering losses. You can see it there now. They have got huge outfits like Inco who have gone ahead in Indonesia, and Falconbridge in other parts of the world, in nickel mines. They compete with their own nickel mines over here where they are having big problems now because of the economic conditions of the world, the demand for nickel has gone down, and so on. And these are large projects that one would normally think there would never be any trouble with. The whole thing is a shaky edifice, Mr. Speaker. We can only hope that in the next or 24 months it is not going to topple.

I have another point to make with this EDC. They had the unmitigated audacity, Mr. Speaker, the unmitigated gall as a Crown corporation—this House should take notice of this and put them in their places—to say this in their "EDC News", January/February, 1978. I turn to page 2 and I see "EDC answers MPs charges". Then they say in an article that recently appeared in a number of local newspapers:

Conservative MP William C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton) called for the abolition of EDC and charged that it was a "threat to the future of some of (Canada's) domestic industries".

And then EDC went on to answer what they said were the hon. member's charges. He identified Mr. John Bowles, EDC's director of corporate communications, and he identified four statements that he said were particularly misleading. Then there is practically a whole page answering what they said were charges by a Conservative MP.

What is this outfit doing, having the audacity and the gall, Mr. Speaker, to interfere in our political life and to criticize what a Conservative MP had to say about them? That is the job of their political master, or their supposed master, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. How dare they take it upon themselves in their "EDC News", to attack a Conservative MP. The minister should act on this. There should be people dismissed for this. It is the minister's job. If the minister does not agree with what the MP from Victoria-Haliburton said about the EDC, it is up to the minister to respond, not the EDC.

I am surprised and shocked, Mr. Speaker. As far as I know this has not been brought up before. I have not had a chance to bring it up. We have not had them before a committee, or at least not a committee that I have been at. If this was a Liberal MP, Mr. Speaker, do you think this outfit would dare criticize a Liberal in their "EDC News"?

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Crosbie: No way. If a Liberal MP had made some criticism of the Export Development Corporation, do you think that they would have had a page in their "news", paid for by the taxpayer, and if they would have answered the MPs charges and named him a Liberal? If they ever come out with an article while this government is in power saying "Liberal MP Smith said this, that and the other and he is all wet and he is all wrong", that will be your day, Mr. Speaker.

I am asking the government for an explanation for this. Who was reprimanded for this? Here are civil servants of a Crown corporation—all right, they are not civil servants, but whatever they are, employees of a Crown corporation—putting out a newsletter criticizing a Conservative MP. Is it the policy of the government that Crown corporations are now free, holus-bolus to criticize and attack members of the opposition if the members of the opposition make statements that they do not like? Is this House going to put up with this, Mr. Speaker? I dare say it will, the majority are Liberals, and this plea will probably fall on deaf ears. The minister is not here tonight.

As for the EDC, well, I will not go into the criticism they made of the Conservative MPs statements that they said were particularly misleading. One of the statements that the hon. member for Victoria-Haliburton made was this:

EDC has gotten completely off the track . . . loaned millions of dollars . . . for the construction of nickel mills in countries (competing with) Canadian nickel producers.

How is that misleading, Mr. Speaker—"particularly misleading", Mr. Bowles said. It is not misleading at all, it is exactly the truth. EDC helped Inco and Falconbridge and others, or those two in any event, to construct nickel mines and mills in countries that compete with their mines in this country. That is the truth, and they got cheap financing from EDC to do it. This is one of our criticisms. It is not only our criticism, it is a criticism many people are making, and which the NDP party certainly made, of what the EDC is doing. They are giving cheap credit and easy financial terms to people who are going to compete with us all over the world, not just in nickel, but in pulp and paper. I can give all kinds of instances. There are two pulp and paper mills going into Argentina, another in Poland.

Surely, Mr. Speaker, we are a big export nation in pulp and paper, and if we are going to help to finance them in Poland and Argentina and everywhere else around the world, we are only helping to finance our competitors. They are going to go for export orders just as most of our industry has to go for it. To get temporary jobs in constructing the manufactured equipment and so on, are we going to help these people compete with us forever?

This requires intensive review to see whether it should be permitted any longer. It is a short-term game for a long-term detriment. So when the hon. member for Victoria-Haliburton made that statement, to think that this Crown corporation could call his statement particularly misleading and go on and answer it like this is just beyond belief. If that happened in Newfoundland, Mr. Speaker, with any Crown corporation, that would be it. They would be gone, dismissed, out. It just would not be permitted. This is a Crown corporation that has gone wild. They are only a different form of organization from the civil service. They are out in a corporation and civil servants are in a department. But they are still owned by the government, Mr. Speaker. They are in that forum that gives them a little more flexibility, but it does not give them political freedom. I am going to be calling on the government and the minister to take some action on this. Who has been reprimanded; who got demoted; who was dismissed; will it ever be permitted again?

There has been a $285 million line of credit extended to Poland, $46.9 million for goods and equipment for Poland's Kwidzyn pulp and paper complex and so on. Yes, we are asking questions about that because I think there is something peculiar about it.

Now, here is a mini steel mill being assisted to go down in the United States. This quote is in the March April "EDC News":

Sale of Canadian-produced mini steel mill will generate 1,350 man-years of employment.

This mill is going to go down in Perth Amboy, New Jersey. The Whitby based firm of Co-Steel International Ltd. and its subsidiaries are launching a similar venture in Perth Amboy. The equipment is to be built in Canada, and it is being financed by EDC and Canadian banks. The Raritan River Steel Company in New Jersey is going to operate the mill and is expecting to go into production in late 1979. It is going to produce 450,000 tons a year, tailored to supply the market for steel rod, wire mesh and fastener industries along the U.S. east coast from Maine to Florida.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether this mill will compete directly with Canadian mills or not which export to the United States. Surely, if we are in the steel business, we have steel mills that make the same kind of product, yet here we are helping to finance a steel mill down in the United States.

A year or two ago when the present Minister of Finance was minister of industry, trade and commerce he said in Hansard, October 21, 1977, when this criticism was brought forward—and I quote the Minister of Finance who was then the minister of industry, trade and commerce; there have been seven of them in the last seven or eight years:

We are preoccupied with creating some growth for the poor around the world.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if that is the rationale, is the United States in this category? Is Canada so rich that we now consider the United States and New Jersey to be poor and we are creating some growth for people down in Perth Amboy, New Jersey? What malarkey! It is not what they are doing at all. The minister then might have felt that arrogance and so on about Canada, but he does not feel that way today with the trouble he is having with the Canadian dollar and all the rest of it.

We are concerned about what EDC is doing. We are not voting them additional billions of credit, Mr. Speaker, to go on this path until we see just what they are up to, until we get clear statements from the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, who is going to commit them to go on as they are.

Now, here is an issue, January/February, paid for by the taxpayers, with two pictures of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, one on the English side and one on the French side. Even if we are bilingual, Mr. Speaker, the pictures are not bilingual; you only need the one picture. But no, we have two pictures of the minister and Mr. John A. MacDonald, the EDC president. It is the same picture on both sides, the French side and the English side, to make sure nobody will miss it. One of the perils of being bilingual is that you might see two pictures of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce where formerly you would only see one. Is that necessary?

• (2102)

The March/April issue shows two pictures of Mr. MacDonald again signing various deals. What is going on? Are we going to have somebody else leave the civil service and jump into politics? Why all these pictures of the president of the EDC? I would not mind having this to send to my district, Mr. Speaker. I would like to get my picture in next month. I call on EDC now to have a couple of pictures of opposition MPs looking on while they are signing a deal so that we can send it out to our districts the same as all the rest of them do. We hope it will be a deal we can support as being a sensible deal.

Now, parliamentary review. The Auditor General has reported. By the way, Mr. Speaker, I've got so much material I wish I had the hours to speak that I need.

Mr. Hees: Just keep going. They will give you unanimous consent.

Mr. Crosbie: While the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce says that he wants this legislation to help Canadian businessmen and to help our exports, the Prime Minister and the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Buchanan) are trying to shake the confidence of Canadian businessmen themselves. I read this quote the other day here in the House just to show the hypocrisy of it. The Minister of Public Works was speaking to the Prime Minister about Canadian business abroad. He told them it wasn't too good, that Canadian businessmen were not really cracking and were not doing their job. The Prime Minister replied, "Judd, amen." I hope the electorate are going to say amen to Judd too. The Prime Minister went on:

—that's the story I get in all the trips I have taken. We Canadians seem to lack the entrepreneurial spirit, lack that hustle.

That's the Prime Minister's view of Canadian businessmen, Mr. Speaker, his statist, elitist sentiments which he expressed two years ago on an unguarded New Year's Day. I don't know what happened. I don't know whether it was the Ontario liquor board that loosened his lips or what, but that is still what he believes, Mr. Speaker. All this cosying up to business in the last few months means nothing. The Prime Minister says that Canadians lack the entrepreneurial spirit, lack the hustle. If they do, it is because of this government, Mr. Speaker. They have been hamstrung by them, regulated to death by them, they have been scorned by them, they have been taxed by them, tied up in knots by them, been insulted by them, they've been verbally assaulted by them. And the final insult was to make the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, the gentleman who now holds that portfolio, show how much Canadian businessmen were thought of by the Prime Minister.

If the Prime Minister is right and there is no entrepreneurial spirit, no hustle in Canadian businessmen, they are a bunch of slackers, they are a bunch that won't get off their duffs to go get an export order, why should we give them all these billions of dollars through the EDC? Why should we raise their limit for guarantees from $2.5 billion to $10 billion? Not at all. Who is going to use it? There is no hustle, there is no bustle, there is no zeal, nobody getting up off their duff apparently. The Prime Minister is certainly not getting off his to call an election. Little Orphan Annie he is now. He is stuck with an election he has got to call and he doesn't know how to call it. There he was in Toronto over the weekend going to the Blue Jays baseball game. By God, he must want to win this election pretty badly!

Some hon. Members: Boo!

An hon. Member: He got booed there too.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, I mentioned lack of parliamentary review briefly. Oh yes, the Auditor General's report. Before I come to that, let me deal with the financing of projects in Canada. Apparently credit is unlimited to finance things to go to Indonesia, to go to the Dominican Republic, to go to Zambia where the kwacha is now 26 per cent higher in value compared to the Canadian dollar than it was a year ago. We are ashamed to go Zambia any longer. You can't look a kwacha in the face if you go there with a Canadian dollar. Because of what has happened to our dollar in comparison to the kwacha, if you go there you have to go with some other currency.

Mrs. Pigott: What is kwacha?

Mr. Crosbie: The kwacha is the currency in Zambia. It used to be a lot less valuable in terms of the Canadian dollar than it is now. All over the world the Canadian government through EDC can finance projects—mines, mills, steel mills but it finances nothing in Canada.

Don't give me the old DREE malarkey. DREE is just a grab bag now for paving roads, building roads, a few water and sewer systems and things like that. We have to have an internal EDC that will help the underdeveloped parts of this country. It is just as good to us if we build up our own country and help finance mills, pulp and paper, whatever it might be in our own country, as it is to do it outside the country. This government stood by and allowed the Labrador linerboard mill in Stephenville to go under without one cent of help—not a cent, not a sou, not a nickel, not a kwacha. It wasn't in the right province, Mr. Speaker. I am not going to say what the right one is because the next thing they will say is, "He is a bigot." I say they are a spigot. If I am a bigot they're a spigot and they are pouring it only into certain parts of the country and outside the country. Now they want us to go and assist them in billions more for all kinds of areas around the world except our own. We want an internal development corporation.

That's what we want, Mr. Speaker. We want something like that, something that will be properly reviewed by the House.

When we looked at the estimates this year the government was very proud to state that there was a decrease in the estimates for the Export Development Corporation of $365 million. That was tremendous news—EDC wanted $365 million less. It was reduced from $425 million last year to $60 million in the estimates this year. Our hearts jumped as good Conservatives who want to restrain government expenditures. We were pleased and thrilled with this government until we saw that EDC planned to borrow the money this year from the private sector instead of borrowing it from the government.

What is the difference, Mr. Speaker? The EDC is the government. It is owned by the government and if the government is not legally obligated to meet its debts, it is certainly morally obligated and it is certainly going to have to do it as a practical matter. The government is responsible for EDC debts. If EDC borrows the money direct itself or borrows from the government, there is no difference. The Canadian people are still responsible to see that it is repaid. No Canadian government is going to allow a Crown corporation to go bankrupt or not meet its obligations. When EDC goes and borrows the money itself, the government is still behind it 100 per cent. They have to be. They might not be albe to sue the government, but in actual practical fact the government is responsible and will have to be responsible. It is an entirely false sense of security to think that anything was accomplished in that reduction of the estimates this year. They are now not going to borrow from the government or take from the government, they are going to borrow from the private sector. They are not bankers and they are not going to be cautious with it. We have seen how they operate. I already pointed to the example of the oil refinery in Come-By-Chance as to what can happen to things that appear to be in excellent credit.

Financing Canadian exports is only half the equation. If we want to help our position in the balance of payments—I am glad the hon. member for York-Simcoe is here tonight because if I get off base on any of my statements on finance or economics he can slip me a note so that I can recover my tracks. I want him to nod his head surreptitiously if I do happen to make a mistake so that nobody will see it or notice it.

As I see it, financing is only half the equation. We want Canadian exports, but if we are to do something about our deficit on the balance of payments on the international account there are several ways of taking action. Increasing exports is only one of those ways. We improve our situation in tourism, we travel less abroad, we encourage more tourists to come from abroad to travel in Canada. That helps. We stop borrowing so much abroad so we don't have to pay so much interest abroad, or pay as many dividends abroad. That helps. We stop importing so much.

This country, I think, is the largest importer in the world per capita of any country. I think 35 per cent of all manufactured goods consumed in Canada are imported. I don't see the hon. member for York-Simcoe disagreeing so I assume I remember correctly. It was about 35 per cent, Mr. Speaker. What we need in addition to exports is some import substitution. What we want is not only to be helping Canadian businessmen to export but to help them to replace a lot of the imports we are bringing into Canada. This has got to be our policy.

The Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce has no policy to help industry. It has no industrial strategy. In fact, one of its higher civil servants a few weeks ago said you couldn't have an industrial strategy in Canada, that it was nonsense to even start to try to have one. What has happened to the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce is that industry was smothered at birth, Mr. Speaker. When those departments were combined industry got smothered and the trade section has been the glamour boy ever since.

If you increase exports, that is all that counts. It does not matter if imports are being increased at a faster pace. We had a deficit of $4.2 billion in the current account last year. That does not matter because we increased our exports. Have you ever seen anything so feeble, Mr. Speaker? Fantastic tunnel-vision. We need a lot more than just increasing our exports. We have got to stop importing so much. We have to manufacture the stuff here, to substitute for the imports.

When a province like Quebec attempts to help its own industry, where they lost 30,000 jobs last year in furniture, footwear, textiles—I have forgotten clothing; did I mention clothing? When they want to help reverse that situation by giving themselves some tax relief, to encourage their consumers to buy more, to encourage the manufacturer to get back those manufacturing jobs they have lost—30,000 the government's own figures, this government's figures—what does the government do but place the iron heel of fiscal oppression upon Mr. Parizeau's neck.

Mr. Parizeau has a pretty thick neck. I do not know anything about his head, but his neck is pretty thick. He is resisting this pressure. We are all in this country together to help one another. Why is it, just because a province suggests something that the federal government has not originated itself, that the federal government has to say no and to use such false and flimsy arguments to say no to? Why is it that all the wisdom in this country is supposed to emanate from the heads of the 34 people we have in the cabinet?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Thirty-three and a half.

Mr. Crosbie: There is a half up in the Senate, I think. The other place I mean, Mr. Speaker. We must observe the proprieties; I mean the other place where many of our members on this side seem destined for. If this election is held off for another few weeks there will be none of us left. If there are enough vacancies up there, we would all be there. Some of us will resist the siren call to the Senate. The hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Stanfield) spurned that siren call to the Senate. He has more gumption in his little finger than all 33½ members of the cabinet.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: I am glad he is here tonight so we can say nice things about him while he is here and not just while he is gone. I did not think I would have a second chance to say what a great contribution the hon. member for Halifax has made to our political life—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: —and how much we admire that hon. gentleman.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: We only wish he was running with us to take his rightful place in the cabinet of Canada after the next election. Maybe we can persuade him to change his mind and run down in Mount Royal and trounce the Prime Minister right where it hurts, right in his own district. The hon. member for Halifax is now bilingual and he is ready for anything. The next thing he is going to learn is Ukrainian.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, I can see that—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to inform the hon. member that his allotted time has expired. He may continue with unanimous consent. Does the hon. member have unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, in joining the debate at second reading of this bill, I would first like to suggest to hon. members that the bill we have before us has a much more serious consequence than most members on the government side like to admit. It has become quite standard for this government to delay the introduction of a bill. Then, when they bring it in, if they feel they might be a little embarrassed about it they immediately start lobbying both through the press and through the various people in the private sector, that somehow or other the opposition is delaying passage of the bill.

With respect to the bill now before us, that must be denied point blank. There is absolutely no reason for the government to suggest that there has been delay in this parliament with respect to their bill to amend the Export Development Act. The fact is it was introduced for second reading only on Friday and this is the first full day that we have had an opportunity to speak about this important matter. I say important, Mr. Speaker, because some place the emperor and his cabinet on the other side have lost perspective in this country. When they took power the total federal government spending at all levels, including what they then regarded as Crown corporations, totalled less than $10 billion.

To bring this debate into perspective tonight we are being asked, if the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner) had his will, to virtually rubber stamp a bill which would give one Crown corporation of the federal government the right to loan, guarantee or insure obligations totalling $26 billion, or insure more than two and a half times the spending that the entire federal government engaged in the year before the emperor took power in this country.

Let us get that into perspective. That is the magnitude of the amount we are talking about tonight. When I say that, it would be pertinent to put on the record the explosion there has been with respect to export development activities in Canada. I say this because it is a motherhood thing for members in this House to say "Let us create employment"; we are all in favour of that. It is a motherhood thing to say "Let us create more export activity"; we are all in favour of that. But there must also be some perspective regarding how far the government of the day is warranted in binding the Canadian public with respect to certain export financing that to some degree we are not be paid for.

Let us be blunt about it. To create a year's employment in Canada today we are basically lending billions to foreign jurisdictions, who may or may not pay us back in ten years or 15 years or what have you. Not only are we loaning those jurisdictions billions of dollars, but we are doing so at very advantageous rates compared to the prevalent interest rates in this country.

When considering the bill before us we should reflect on how we arrived at the point where we are being asked tonight to give one Crown corporation the right to bind the Queen in the name of Canada to the extent of $26 billion. In this connection I would point out that the Export Development Corporation, as most members realize, was established by an act of parliament on October 1, 1969. It replaced at that time the 25-year old Export Credits Insurance Corporation. The original act underwent major revisions in 1974. There were minor revisions in 1971, 1973 and 1977.

Bill C-36 incorporates a $26 billion package, as I have stated. That is a package of $26 billion compared to the present loan authorizations, insurance and guarantee obligations within the Crown corporations, EDC, at this time of $8.85 billion. Now we are faced with this revision.

If I may, Mr. Speaker, I would like to put on the record the plateaux which we have hit in the evolution of the Export Development Corporation. First of all dealing with the authorized capital in the act, this is found in subsection (11). Initially the authorized capital in this corporation was set at $25 million. That was in 1969, just a year after the emperor took power in Canada. In 1971 authorized capital was raised to $75 million. In 1973 it was raised to $125 million. In 1974 it went up to $400 million. It is proposed in Bill C-36 that the authorized capital should be a mere $1 billion compared to a capital in this corporation of $25 million in 1969.

• (2122)

Let us look at the corporate insurance activities which are set out in section 26 of the Export Development Act. There we find that in 1969 the initial authorization that this parliament gave this corporation was $250 million. By 1971 it was raised to $500 million, by 1974 $750 million and by 1977 $2,500 million. Bill C-36 before us now proposes that that corporation's insurance authorization will be $10 billion compared to the $250 million authorization in 1969.

That is the corporate side of insurance with regard to EDC. On the government side, which is another department that this corporation administers, we find that the total government authorization in 1969 was $500 million. In 1974 it was raised to $750 million and, by 1977, it was an even $1 billion. Tonight it is being proposed in Bill C-36 that that particular section should go up to $3,500 million, or $3½ billion. That is being asked for in the bill before us. Compare that to a total insurance authorization on the government side under section 28 of this act of $500 million in 1969.

Let us look at how they have escalated their authorization for loan activity. It is the loan activity in which Canada is most vulnerable. We find under section 30 of the original act the total authorization for this corporation was $600 million. That was in 1969. In 1971 they raised it to $850 million and in 1973 to $1,500 million. In 1974, hon. members will recall, it was raised to $4¼ billion. I am now talking about the authorization for Export Development Corporation to lend to foreign governments and foreign entities. In Bill C-36, they are now asking for an authorization of $10 billion compared to $600 million in 1969.

The act is divided into two sides. On the corporate side there is $10 billion for foreign governments and other entities. On the government side, they are asking for an authorization of $2½ billion. That compares to an authorization for this corporation in 1969 of $200 million. In 1971 it was $450 million and in 1974 it was $850 million.

As can be seen from the foregoing, the growth of EDC has been sporadic but it has been significant. Perhaps I can show it best if I bring together the various levels of authorization that they are now seeking. The total value of 1969 EDC authorizations was $1,550 million, in short a little higher than $1½ billion. If the bill goes through tonight, the total value of authorizations awarded to EDC will be $26 billion. This is why I caution hon. members initially to view this bill with a great deal of scrutiny. When we are talking in terms of EDC having the authority as a corporation to loan $10 billion, let us not forget that a good portion of that $10 billion may never be repaid and will have to be written off.

As we know, certain write-offs, or reschedulings as they are called, have already been taking place in EDC with respect to some of the lending activity they have entered into. In this connection, I refer hon. members to the Auditor General's report with respect to the Export Development Corporation for the year ended December 31, 1977.

In that report, the Auditor General points out that under the Export Development Act the corporation, meaning EDC, may have outstanding loans to foreign borrowers, outstanding guarantee agreements to other lenders and signed but undisbursed loan and guarantee agreements up to a maximum of $4,250 million at any time. That is where we now sit if Bill C-36 does not go through.

He then points out that as at December 31, 1977 the position of the corporation is as follows: Loans receivable, $1,833 million, less certain participations which he lists of $40 million, for a net outstanding loans receivable position with respect to the corporation, EDC, of $1,793 million. The Auditor General then points out that there are guarantees for which the corporation is contingently liable of $8,479,000 and undisbursed funds under signed loan agreements of $1,647 million. All of those total—and I know you are very fast in arithmetic, Mr. Speaker—$3,449 million.

In short, you can see where the panic is. They have already committed or disbursed almost $3½ billion of their total authorization of $4¼ billion. They had done that as of December 31. Now they rush into this House with the bill before us and say the sky is falling, pass it quickly or our authorization is going to be exceeded.

If that is true, there can be no more basic fundamental criticism of this government than that they have handled their affairs in a leisurely, unconcerned fashion. They have allowed a Crown corporation to run up obligations bringing it within its total authorization limit. Second, knowing that this is occurring, they did not bring this bill in in proper time to ensure there could be ample debate in the House, without suggesting that somehow we have to be stampeded into an early passage of the bill.

I wanted to give the House that background as to why the urgency tonight. The fact is limits previously set by parliament are now coming into view as far as EDC is concerned and there is a bit of panic on the government side.

The other point I would like to emphasize is that the Auditor General points out that they are up to their old hanky panky. They are rescheduling loans. This is the classic way that loan corporations cover bad bills of yesteryear. Here is what the Auditor General says:

> During 1977, the Corporation rescheduled payments due of $3,942,000. These reschedulings are intended to aid collectibility and servicing of the debt. Since inception of the export loans program in 1961, the corporation has rescheduled $65,377,000, of which $591,000 is overdue at December 31, 1977.

If you have any trouble in the lending business, you never admit it. You never like to talk about write-offs. That means the mistake is very obvious. What you do is bring in the person to whom you are creditor. You tell him he would feel better and you would feel better if you both sat down, wrote a new note for the principal, the interest and a new fresh date and he would go away and have a happy Christmas and you would have an even happier Christmas. Mr. Speaker, they are at it already. Yet they have the colossal nerve to come to this House and say: Quick, give us further authorization which will allow us to put out another $10 billion, because our limit is now in sight with respect to total disbursements.

What the Auditor General has said was also revealed in the documentation which the Export Development Corporation has been filing in Washington in accordance with the United States security and exchange regulations. In this connection we recall that we presently have a government which, when it was faced with borrowing abroad to cover the current account deficit and other things, had to file a presentation revealing, for the first time in the past decade certainly, exactly what was the state of affairs in Canada. They did that in March. They had to rush the presentation through so as to be in a position to include figures only up to March 31, 1978, because they realized that if they filed in April or later they would have to show not just the 1978 figures but the 1979 figures also. They had to come clean, because they realized they had to make a clean breast of it to the securities and exchange commission in the United States. So did the Export Development Corporation.

I would invite every member of the House before voting on this bill to take a look at some of the dealings which have been going on. I have a document here called a confidential private placement offering memorandum. In this presentation the corporation is selling notes due in exchange for $50 million U.S. The presentation is dated June, 1977. I draw this to your attention, Mr. Speaker, because here again the corporation has been obliged to reveal some of the rescheduling which has been going on. On page 62 of the presentation it is stated:

> Since the inception of the program, loan payments totalling $61.2 million have been rescheduled, of which $15.9 million had been repaid by December 31, 1976. Interest rates on rescheduled loans have been generally at the same or higher rates. On other loans, principal instalments totalling $1.8 million were overdue at December 31, 1976. No loans have been written off since inception of the international lending program, but one loan was cancelled at no loss to EDC under an arrangment with the Government of Canada to cancel a corresponding amount due from EDC.

The crunch comes with the last line. The EDC likes to represent itself as never having to write off a loan. It acknowledges that loans have been rescheduled, but that is all. However, in the filing they had to make in Washington the corporation admits that one loan was cancelled, though at no loss to the EDC. Do you know what they are up to there, Mr. Speaker? They got into trouble with a country. The Government of Canada stepped in and went to the assistance of the debtor by lending that country money so that it could in turn pay back the EDC and clear the loan. But guess who pays the shot in the final analysis? It is the Canadian taxpayer. That is the result of the comfortable relationship which exists between this corporation and the government of the day.

One of the most serious things that is occurring with regard to federal government spending is the tendency of Treasury Board and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) to misrepresent the spending figures of Canada. It is traditional when dealing with budgetary matters to include all spending, to include whatever our Crown corporations are spending in addition to normal budgetary expenditures. However, if hon. members look at the budget brought in on April 10 they will find there is a little footnote which states that the expenditures of the Government of Canada do not include certain Crown corporation activities. Under government policy, it is stated, such activities will no longer be included in the over-all picture.

When we press to find out why EDC borrowing is not automatically included as part of the government's financial picture, we are told that these arrangements are not binding upon the Government of Canada, that somehow or other EDC is raising the money on its own signature and that the Government of Canada does not have the eventual obligation to pay a debt in the event of a default. Mr. Speaker, if we look at the filing in Washington to which I have referred, we find this is not true. At page 12 of the document asking the Americans to lend the EDC money the following statement appears:

> The notes will be direct unsecured general obligations of EDC and as such will constitute an obligation of Her Majesty in right of Canada. Payment of principal and interest on the notes will be a charge on and payable out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada. Issuance of the notes is subject to the approval of the Minister of Finance of Canada and the notes will be created pursuant to resolution of the EDC board of directors.

In short, the notes are being sold in the United States as direct obligations of the Crown without any equivocation. I think it is altogether misleading for cabinet ministers to be stating they are not obligations of the Crown in the right of Canada and that they need not, therefore, be included in this country's expenditure figures.

When it was instituted in 1969, Mr. Speaker, the EDC was a comparatively small corporation. The government is now proposing that it blossom into a $26 billion organization, making it one of the largest export development corporations in the world. I would suggest the corporation is engaging in leading activity which, in all likelihood, will result in a severe loss factor to be reckoned with in future years. Further, I would suggest that, contrary to what has been said, the obligations it is incurring, as the expression goes, offshore in the American or Eurodollar market are obligations of the Government of Canada and not, as ministers are representing, simply obligations of this Crown corporation.

A number of my hon. friends have dealt with certain of the lending activities in which this corporation has been engaged. If I may, I should like to mention some of the highlights of this activity. It goes without saying it is nice to feel one is supporting exports if those exports create jobs for Canadians. Who could disagree with that proposition? But we should bear in mind that there are two ways of looking at this. There is the short term perspective, the immediate creation of jobs. But in the longer term is it in the interest of Canada to be creating competition for our own businessmen in future years? It is this side of the corporation's activity which the government is ignoring.

The competition this agency is helping to foster in the pulp and paper industry is something about which the government should concern itself. Was it, for example, proper to announce, as the corporation did on February 8, 1974, that it was putting $82.5 million into an integrated forestry complex in Iran, a country which hardly knows what to do with its United States dollar surpluses? Here we were pumping $82.5 million into that country to help it with its forestry development, and later we were begging in Washington for $750 million to help us withstand the fall in our dollar resulting from our current account deficit.

That is not the only loan the corporation has made in the forestry field. On October 17, 1976 the corporation put out $102 million to help a pulp and paper mill in Poland, of all places. I will come back to that in a minute. On September 21, 1977 the corporation put out $1.8 million for a pulp and paper mill project in Peru. On November 8, 1977, joining, as the corporation sometimes does, with one of our chartered banks—this time it was the Bank of Montreal—the corporation put out $102.6 million for a new pulp and paper mill in Iran. Iran again. The government tells us in the Toronto area that it does not have a nickel to mitigate the urban transportation plight of people going to and from work in Toronto. The EDC has $102.6 million for Iran, but according to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) the government has no money for urban transportation in Toronto.

That very same government told the fishermen on our east and west coasts that it has no money to help them refurbish their fishing fleets so that they can fish the allotments off both coasts which should be theirs. That very same government cannot help the city of Montreal with its sewage treatment problems. Montreal is a large city which has no sewage treatment facilities to speak of. The government says it has no money for that, but it has, as I have said, hundreds of millions of dollars to help other countries build pulp and paper and forestry plants which in coming years will end up competing with our own pulp and paper industry.

Let me give other examples. On December 28, 1977, between Christmas and New Year's Day, the corporation put up $5.5 million for a pulp and paper project in Romania. On March 8, 1978, again with bank participation, the corporation announced loans totalling $57 million for two pulp and paper projects in Argentina. I notice, Mr. Speaker, that you are fast with your pencil. If Your Honour has been following what I have been saying, Your Honour will know that the corporation has put up something like $350 million to help others build pulp and paper and forestry developments which will compete with us, yet the government tells us there is no money to help with some of the infrastructure needs which exist in Canada.

There is no money, for example, to help with the building of the Bay of Fundy power project. There is no money to help with the electrical project in Labrador. There is no money to help the farmers of western Canada with their grain handling problems. Where has the perspective gone? Why is there money for these types of foreign activities which are risky but which, granted, give us perhaps one year's employment, but no money for the infrastructures and services which are needed so urgently in Canada and which could also provide employment in Canada?

I will go on. On October 24, 1977, $78 million was the total amount of loans for nickel mining projects in Guatemala and Indonesia. On December 28, 1977, $2.95 million was put up for the production of steel products in Los Angeles, California. I was down there just a few months ago, and that is a boom area. Here we were, again just after Christmas—Christmas must make the corporation open up in a very expansive way—putting up $2.95 million to help with the production of steel products in Los Angeles, California.

Mr. Crouse: Where are they going to get this money?

Mr. Stevens: My colleague from Nova Scotia asks where they will get this money. We know where. The money will come from private markets, both domestic and international. The corporation will raise the money as best it can, but above all it will be binding the people of Canada to those obligations. Our point is that if money like that is capable of being raised, certainly a portion of it could be diverted to help Canadians and to meet Canadian needs. Frankly, some of the countries into which we are pouring money are in much better shape than we are internationally, so it is time this government regained some sanity.

On January 18, 1978 the EDC put $3.6 million into a company in Colorado to help it buy Dash-7 aircraft. The governmet is at all ends of these deals. It owns DeHavilland. There are loans amounting to something over $100 million to keep DeHavilland going, and now the government is at the other end lending money to the buyers of Dash-7 aircraft. On January 27, 1978 the EDC put up $30.6 million for the construction of an aluminum plant in Ireland.

I think it has already been mentioned that on February 13, 1978 the corporation lent $47 million for a ministeel mill in New Jersey. That loan meant that the government had put up $100 million for steel mills in Texas, Minnesota, Great Britain and in New Jersey. The steel people of this country say that there is no doubt that they will have to meet that competition whenever it comes on stream with its new facilities.

I have already referred to certain communist countries which have been picking up these loans. The EDC has advanced financing to the following communist countries: Russia, Poland, Yugoslavia, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Romania, Hungary and Bulgaria. In that respect I think there are two important things to bear in mind. If we finance facilities in Cuba, Poland or some other such country, we are dealing with an entirely different environment from that which exists in Canada. A state planned economy can impose virtually any wage structure it wishes for its export development activities. Here we are helping communist countries build facilities which will compete with ours. We are ignoring the fact that they can compete with us with wage structures of their own choosing. Second, we are making loans to countries such as Cuba, which sees fit to have armed troops in other countries basically for revolutionary purposes.

This government has a strange double standard. It sees nothing wrong with that. But let the shoe be on the other foot and the government is quick to give lip service to any revolutionary group which may be acting in some country which is not of communist persuasion. These are the hard facts, and when the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce comes before us and says "Quick, let's pass this bill", I say he just has not read the bill or does not understand what the EDC is doing. How can he seriously expect members of this House to jump into line and allow early passage of this bill?

I have referred to communist countries which have been picking up our credit. I could run over the list, but in total they have picked up about $375 million in loans. There are extensive lines of credit out in addition to that amount. Loans to Arab bloc and oil-rich nations total a further $275.8 million. The point is that if funds amounting to hundreds of millions of dollars are available, surely the government, if it should so will, could be finding at least a portion of those funds for urgently needed Canadian developments such as the ones I have itemized.

My colleague the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) touched on what I think is one of the most serious developments that has occurred in any Crown corporation, that is that a Crown corporation, I take it with the consent if not the specific direction of its president, has chosen to openly criticize members of the House who choose to speak about what they feel are irresponsible EDC activities. My colleague the hon. member for Victoria-Haliburton (Mr. Scott) has dealt quite well with this. He has rebutted the statement put out by EDC in his report from parliament dated January 26, 1978.

Frankly, I think it is unfortunate that any member of the House has to deal with a Crown corporation in that way. Surely if EDC, or any other Crown corporation, feels that a member of the House has raised some facts that should be challenged, the proper way to challenge them is through the responsible minister in the House or at a committee meeting. They should not feel that they have the right to go even to the ridings of members of parliament and attempt to blackmail them—because that is what it is—into being less vocal in their criticism of their activities. When you think of it, Mr. Speaker, where are we going to end up in this country if the 380 odd Crown corporations which exist all decide that they, using public funds, have the right regularly to criticize the activities of members in the House who, after all, are supposed to be elected to supervise the very activities of those Crown corporations?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: This is the dangerous precedent that has been set by this corporation. Before this bill is passed, I think we need some clarification, not just from the minister but from the executive of EDC. Do they intend to pursue this type of harassment in future months and years? Do they feel that they no longer have to answer to the Parliament of Canada through the relevant minister but that they have the prerogative to openly challenge members of parliament in whatever statements they care to make concerning that corporation's activities?

I notice representatives of EDC sitting in the gallery. They laugh when I make these points. This is no laughing affair. I think it is high time that EDC was called to task for this kind of conduct.

[Mr. Stevens.]

There are some more serious matters that I would like to touch upon, but I notice my time is starting to run out. Let me say that here we have a bill which must be given in depth study before it is passed. In no way should the Parliament of Canada be expected to rubber stamp this type of legislation without intensive review, not only during debate but in committee when the bill reaches that stage.

I know that one or two of my colleagues wish to participate in this debate, so perhaps I will give them an opportunity, although time is running out. I will have more to say on this important bill at report stage, in committee and at third reading. But let there be no doubt that we in the opposition feel there are significant comments to be made about this corporation and this legislation, and the government had better not look to us for any rubber stamping.

Mr. Roger Young (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, there are only a few minutes left this evening before time runs out and I think I can make my remarks in those few minutes.

I know from past history that the hon. member who has just spoken has visited the area I represent, and I also know that the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) who sits just behind him will be visiting that area tomorrow night. I only hope they will go down there and make those kinds of comments in my area again because that will assure not only me but the Liberal candidate in that riding a sound election victory. I would love to have them go down and make those kinds of comments because I think it is about time somebody said a few good words about EDC.

I would like to tell the hon. member, who is so afraid of these EDC helpful purchases, contracts and guarantees of purchases which involve countries that do not share our political philosophy but follow the communist one, that today in the riding of Niagara Falls there are some 150 men back at work who did not have a job two years ago. They work in a brand new plant which was opened just last year because EDC had enough good business sense to back a company in that riding which wanted to sell some trucks to the Soviet Union. That company in my riding, called Unit Rig, which makes giant earth moving equipment, has now, with the successful completion of a couple of bargaining contracts with EDC, managed to undertake sales contracts for some 50 trucks for some $85 million worth of business, and thanks to EDC there are some 100 men working in that plant. I think that EDC deserves laudatory credit for that.

If that is not enough, I would like to point out one other instance. In the same riding last year there was a great deal of unemployment as a result of a number of factors which came together at one time. Another firm by the name of Horton Steel had all its contracts in one basket with the Ontario government through Hydro to make pressure vessels and steel fabricating necessities for nuclear power projects. When the Ontario government cancelled those contracts it had to shut down the plant. That meant that 200 men were laid off for three to four months straight through. But because of EDC, because of some intervention and because of an aggressive sales force on the part of Horton Steel, they were able to get a contract to build in Indonesia part of a cement factory built by Catinho Caro. They had some work involving a $22 million contract and they put 200 men in the community of Fort Erie to work, men who did not have jobs.

I hope that hon. members on the other side will come to my riding. I invite them to go there and criticize EDC and some of the job creation projects that we in the Liberal government have undertaken in the last year, because the people there will not buy that kind of nonsense. It is about time that the hon. member who has just spoken investigated some of the facts and gave a little credit to EDC.

With that I will conclude my comments, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, after listening to that outburst, may I call it ten o'clock? We will deal with the hon. member next time.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

HEALTH—REQUEST FOR REVIEW OF BAN ON SACCHARIN

Mrs. Simma Holt (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, on March 17, after the Appeal Court of Quebec confirmed what we all suspected—that the sugar companies were a monopoly victimizing the consumer by price fixing—I asked the question which surely must have been on everyone's mind that day about the announcement by the former minister of national health and welfare that saccharin will be banned. He claimed that some rats, creatures prone to cancer, showed signs of bladder cancer in what he declared were scientific experiments.

The Quebec decision was handed down, and I asked the present minister for an independent investigation to be made from outside her department to review the research on saccharin. Tonight I would like to ask her to go further and seek an independent investigation of the strange coincidence of the monopoly being cleared in the courts, and then so soon after that the saccharin ban being announced in the House.

● (2202)

Remarkably, no one in the department told the House that these rats were in fact cancer prone, or that they were given excessive quantities of saccharin to prove that three out of one hundred would get cancer, or might get cancer, as a matter of fact. That was the equivalent, if given to humans of comparable weight, of 20,000 grains or 40,000 teaspoons of sugar as a sweetener, or 800 cans of pop or the equivalent of drinking a bathtub of diet pop a day.

The federal drug administration in the United States found no evidence that saccharin had caused cancer in humans during the 80 years it has been used by diabetics and, latterly, by overweight people.

Experiments with Rhesus monkeys by Dr. Frederick Coulston of Albany, New York, showed saccharin was not dangerous. Dr. Coulston gave the monkeys moderately high doses of saccharin for seven years, and not one contracted cancer. I would like to think humans are more like monkeys than rats, but sometimes, of course, we have a few qualms and doubts about that. The longer one stays in the House, the greater the doubt.

In fact, the International Toxicology Forum in Omaha, U.S.A., in May of 1977 had already come to the conclusion that the frequency of bladder cancer in the Canadian rat experiments was probably not primarily due to saccharin but could be attributed to other circumstances, such as increased formation of micro-stones in the bladder or increased stress. Professor C. H. Slatter, Director of the Institute of Toxicology at the University of Zurich, was able to prove that the artificial sweetener "possesses none of the typical characteristics of chemical carcinogens".

Professor Dieter Schmahl of the German Cancer Research Centre in Heidelberg, after two years of saccharin experiments with pregnant rats, has only this to say so far:

> —the fact that it was even possible to apply a food additive in such large overdoses as in the Canadian experiment for a whole lifetime, attest mainly that it is not poisonous.

The British Medical Journal, The Lancet, reinforced this by citing the study by the Americans Wynder and Goldsmith, which concluded that "users of saccharin have a smaller risk of bladder cancer than non users".

It is remarkable that the Canadian scientists, with the huge laboratory of Canadian people who have had saccharin for almost 90 years for the care and control of diabetes, and for overweight, had to go to the rats for this ludicrous experiment in order to get this valuable and vital substance banned.

One has to look at the timing of the ban in Canada. It was for this reason I asked my question. I did not get a satisfactory answer. The sugar companies raised their prices excessively, no doubt a greed impulse which they knew they could carry off because they were a monopoly. The price went up, as I recall, from about 30 cents a pound to about a dollar. Many Canadian consumers found alternatives, knowing that sugar, especially refined sugar, is dangerous to health. They either reduced or cut out the use of sugar altogether, or learned to use saccharin or honey as substitutes.

The then minister of consumer and corporate affairs, the present Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Ouellet), charged that sugar group under the combines act. He lost that first round. The whole country trusted and believed he was right. As you recall, he also believed he was right and he stuck to that. This caused him considerable trouble, and nobody since has apologized for what they said at that time. He cared about the people, the consumers, who are the inevitable victims of the greed of monopoly groups. The court acquitted the sugar companies but few in Canada believed the court at that time.

● (2207)

Shortly after, the ban was announced in this House of Commons. There was no debate in this House as to whether it should be banned or not. It was simply announced and some people in the back room, whom we call "officials," must have set this up. After all, the only competition left from outside this group was the producer of saccharin and saccharin products.

The Court of Appeal of Quebec has proven that the minister was right in his charge. The sugar companies did combine to fix prices. I suggest that a full investigation be undertaken of the so-called research, the reason why we in Canada alone have banned saccharin and saccharin products and how it really came about. The ban is more dangerous to the nation's health than saccharin has been or ever will be. There are 11 to 13 million overweight people, some dangerously obese, and 600,000 diabetics and at least 400,000 that are aware of the dangerous illness they have. These people cannot control the diet they need because of this ban. Just look—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I have to interrupt the hon. lady because her time has expired.

Mr. W. Kenneth Robinson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, at the outset I would like to congratulate the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt) for putting forth a very strong argument, as she always does; and she did it very effectively on March 17 when she asked another question of the minister of health and welfare. The whole question, of course, is one of risk-benefit, the risk to the individual who uses saccharin and/or the benefit that may be derived if you happen to be a diabetic or somebody who needs this kind of sweetener. The health protection branch of the department of health and welfare has deemed it necessary and in the interests of Canadians to ban saccharin. This has been carried out and recommended by the World Health Organization as well. I would point out to the hon. member that Canada is not the only country that has banned saccharin, Holland has done likewise.

With regard to questions that have been raised concerning the scientific validity of the Canadian tests on saccharin and the need for independent scientific review of the data the following points should be noted.

The Canadian saccharin test was designed and conducted according to internationally acceptable guidelines for the assessment of the potential carcinogenicity of food ingredients. These guidelines have been enunciated by the World Health Organization and the U.S. National Cancer Institute and are in use worldwide.

When the Canadian tests were completed in March 1977, an independent board of world renowned pathologists was assembled to review the lesions noted in the animals fed saccharin. This board of pathologists arrived at a consensus diagnosis regarding the bladder tumors in the animals and this consensus has been universally accepted by scientists worldwide.

The results of the Canadian tests have been presented to the World Health Organization, and to several independent scientific organizations including the Society of Toxicology and the Toxicology Forum. These groups have endorsed the contention that saccharin is unequivocally carcinogenic in animals and a potential carcinogen for humans. In fact, at the 1977 Joint Expert Committee Meeting on Food Additives held under the auspices of the World Health Organization in Geneva it was recommended that severe limitations be placed on the use of saccharin in food products.

The commissioner, U.S. food and drug administration, after reviewing all data on saccharin and particularly the results of the Canadian tests, concluded that saccharin must be considered a potential carcinogen for humans. Intent to establish regulations prohibiting the sale of saccharin in food products was published by the commission in the Federal Register of April 15, 1977.

At the request of Senator Edward M. Kennedy's sub-committee on health and scientific research, the office of technology assessment was asked to assemble a distinguished panel of scientists to summarize all the known facts regarding the carcinogenic effects of saccharin. The OTA is an arm of Congress set up to provide Congress with an independent appraisal of complex scientific matters.

The following are conclusions of the OTA that related to the cancer producing potential of saccharin. First, laboratory evidence indicates that saccharin is a carcinogen. Second, prolonged ingestion of saccharin at high levels caused a significant increase in the incidence of bladder cancer in rats in three independent experiments. Earlier tests, which were negative, were not sensitive enough to detect this carcinogenic effect. Third, this evidence leads to the conclusion that saccharin is a potential cause of cancer in humans.

A further discussion of the OTA's report and additional information concerning the validity of the Canadian tests has been published in Hansard, Tuesday, June 14, 1977.

AIR TRANSPORT—NORTHERN ONTARIO—CALL FOR INQUIRY INTO AIR SAFETY

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, on April 20 I requested that an inquiry be conducted into air safety in northern Ontario in light of the evidence presented by the Association of Treaty Chiefs located in Timmins, Ontario, who have compiled a rather lengthy document on air transportation problems in northern Ontario, particularly air safety.

In part of the minister's answer to me he stated that I used a lot of outdated information. Mr. Speaker, I have concerned myself with air safety problems since 1973. The information I have been using has been supplied to me from employees in the Department of Transport on a continuing basis since then. Much of the information was a couple of years old—not outdated but no action had been taken by senior officials in the Department of Transport. These employees come to me on a continuing basis because they are so concerned about the senior officials in the Department of Transport not acting on air safety regulations in Canada.

In his answer on April 20 the minister stated:

... the smaller carriers in this country adopt very high standards indeed, and I would not like to see them smeared in this way.

The minister was referring to me. At no time was I smearing the small carriers.

I should like to quote from an article in a recent issue of the Canadian Flight magazine. The article was written by the small carriers. It begins:

... We should all be very wary of the background of those in high office who make decisions that affect general aviation operations.

Later the article goes on:

Walt McLeish is a case in point. As top man—administrator of DOT's Canadian Air Transportation Administration—Walt feels that his background as a professional aeronautical engineer (Masters Degree from Michigan State; RCAF trained pilot) qualifies him to speak authoritatively on general aviation.

The industry isn't inclined to give him that respect, deserving though it may be. In spite of his excellent reputation as a good government administrator, ...

I will provide this whole document to the parliamentary secretary tonight. They do not have faith in Mr. McLeish.

Tonight, Mr. Speaker, I have been informed that there are no visual approach indicating systems at 60 airports in Canada. I will check that out further. In his answer the minister commented that my references were to matters that happened in the nineteenth century. Mr. Speaker, it was not the nineteenth century but March 9, 1978 when I raised the subject before.

The document from the treaty Indians is rather lengthy and it contains some startling statements. It opens with a quote from a witness to the Hartt Commission in Ontario as follows:

There is an appalling lack of proper air navigational aids, weather facilities, and all weather day and night airports ... The mode of operation has in the large part, changed very little since the 1930's ... The further north you go, the more the bush flying ethic prevails.

This refers to air safety in northern Ontario. The report goes on to say:

This report should be considered as an introduction to the study of air transportation in northern Ontario. For many people who live in the north, it is a fact that air transportation is hazardous. Many of us have encountered horrendous experiences, ranging from non-fatal crashes, to running out of gas upon landing. Just recently, the vice president of the central region of Grand Council Treaty #9 was stranded in the bush after the plane in which he was a passenger crashed to the ground. Luckily there were no injuries. He witnessed the fact that this aircraft contained no medical equipment, food, rifles, or sleeping bags for emergency situations. This situation is only one of the many that we hear about when living in the north.

You can see my concern, Mr. Speaker, and the concern of the treaty Indians who prepared a statement of this length. I am not interested in continuing to hear these smart aleck answers of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) regarding matters as serious as this. The report continues:

In this report I do not choose to point a finger at the companies who are responsible for air transportation. However, I do wish to examine the situation as it has been reported to me, and experienced by me, and I also choose to discuss the struggle we have had in trying to convince the government of the need for a transportation inquiry.

I can certainly sympathize with them there, Mr. Speaker. We have been calling for this public inquiry for the last year and a half. I received recently a document dated February 25, 1977 from employees of the Department of Transport. I am informed the information is relevant today and that no action is being taken on this very serious study done on weather irregularities, reports and landing regulations. Among other things this document, which is a Government of Canada document, says this:

● (2217)

Pilots have chosen to ignore limits for various reasons, not the least of which may have been pressure from management, but mainly because of the unenforceability of present regulations. Also the present inaccuracies in measurement of ceiling and visibility in the take-off or touchdown zone have led pilots to come and go at will. The only time action is taken to curb this dangerous practice is when accidents occur.

It goes on to say:

There are several recent known instances which very nearly resulted in serious accidents in this Region—

The region referred to is the Atlantic region.

—all partially attributable to landings completed when the reported weather was below limits. In none of these cases was enforcement action taken by this Ministry mainly because the Official Weather Report is not accepted as proof of existing weather conditions.

It continues:

While the following recommendations may seem drastic and past fatality records in Canada where weather has been proven to be a factor may not appear to bear out their use, unless action is taken to improve the existing situation the probability exists that a major accident will occur soon.

I hope the Ministry of Transport will not wait until there is a major accident before taking some decisive action. There was a serious accident recently at Cranbrook. All the people to whom I have spoken point out that it is the senior executives in the Ministry of Transport who are the ones not enforcing these regulations. It is disturbing that these conditions exist in this country and absolutely nothing is being done about them. These people telephone me and come to my office with this documented evidence. I and other members have brought this matter repeatedly before the House of Commons but nothing is being done by this minister that we are aware of.

It is stated that runways should be closed when bad weather conditions zero in. But this is not done. It is all by chance and by golly.

Mr. Charles Lapointe (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I can only begin my remarks by deploring the comments made by the hon. member concerning an official of the Department of Transport whose energy and outstanding competence are devoted to make Canadian civil aviation one of the best and safest in the world. Furthermore, I think that the competence of that official has never been contested and that his reputation is recognized not only in Canada but also in the aviation circles in foreign countries.

First as concerns the report on air transportation in northern Ontario, dated March 21, 1978, it is being reviewed by departmental officials. But at first glance the report which includes quotations from the Hartt Commission report, the report on the study of air safety in northern Ontario prepared by department inspectors, and articles from newspapers and other documents does not seem to include any new information or facts that would give to the government any reason to believe that an inquiry commission on air transportation in northern Ontario should be established.

Since January 1978, regional inspectors of Transport Canada have made many inspections of air carriers in this area. Those inspections have identified minor infractions in the operations of those carriers but nothing important has been unveiled to justify the temporary withdrawal of an operation license or other sanctions. The government intends to ensure strict surveillance of air carriers in this area, particularly those that have been identified by the inquiry on air safety in northern Ontario.

[English]

As the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) has stated in the House on several occasions, he is confident that the various measures which are in the process of implementation, for example, additional manpower resources to permit increased surveillance of air carrier operations, will adequately reinforce the licensing and inspection systems of air carriers not only in northern Ontario but throughout Canada.

● (2222)

Once again, Mr. Speaker, I should like to caution the hon. member opposite not to create false impressions about aviation safety in Canada. Canada has one of the finest safety records in the world, because most air carriers are responsible and respectable and meet, and usually surpass, high regulation requirements.

MANPOWER—JOB VACANCIES BEING FILLED BY PERSONS OUTSIDE PROVINCE

Mr. Cecil Smith (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, on several occasions I have raised in the House concerns about northern Manitoba where the student unemployment rate is one of the highest in Canada. On March 22, page 4016 of Hansard, I put forth a motion under Standing Order 43. It did not carry and therefore could not be debated.

On April 4, I directed a question to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Cullen), page 4112 of Hansard, asking what was being done about the financing of transportation of students from Shawinigan, Quebec to Flin Flon, Manitoba. In 1976, 25 students from Shawinigan received preferential treatment in receiving student jobs in Flin Flon, Manitoba. Presumably because of a corporate policy, the Hudson Bay Mining and Smelting Company hired a certain number of French students during the summer. I do not know if it was because Shawinigan is in the constituency of the Minister of Finance, (Mr. Chrétien), but these 25 students received transportation grants from Canada Manpower.

I have been told by officials in Winnipeg and in Flin Flon that there is no program to cover transportation costs from their homes to jobs unless there is a reciprocal agreement. This was not a reciprocal agreement. Therefore, these students received preferential treatment in filling those jobs.

I brought this to the minister's attention through the media because I was not receiving any replies to the letters I had written. In a story printed in the Ottawa Journal and the Winnipeg Free Press I expressed my feelings about students in the north not getting a fair shake with regard to those jobs.

After my motion under Standing Order 43 and my questions to the Minister of Employment and Immigration, I received a letter from the minister. I feel that unemployed students in Flin Flon, Shawinigan or any other part of the country should all receive the same treatment. However, those from Shawinigan received preferential treatment. They received air tickets from Shawinigan to Flin Flon, with no obligation to stay on the job or to repay the money. As I said, there was no program that this situation fitted into.

The staff in the Winnipeg regional office were infuriated over this order that came from on high. I think there was a deal between the Minister of Finance and someone in Manpower to pay the transportation costs of these students. The counsellors in the Flin Flon Manpower office had students to place into those jobs, but they were bypassed. The office in Flin Flon was in the position where they had been dealing with the employer and the students. They then found these jobs were being filled with students receiving preferential treatment.

It took two years to get this clarified in a letter from the minister. In 1977, there were supposed to be 25 students going to Flin Flon. However, because of the concern I felt that the students in Flin Flon were not getting the same treatment, only eight went from Shawinigan to Flin Flon. The minister says, in his letter:

● (2227)

In the past years, the commission has assisted this movement through small mobility grants, because of the then much lower student unemployment levels in Flin Flon than in Shawinigan.

The general rise in unemployment levels has, however, changed the situation expected this summer and we do not, accordingly, feel that repetition of such assistance would be justified during the summer of 1978.

The basic situation for this summer thus appears to be that the company is likely to continue its past policy of providing summer jobs in Flin Flon to a number of students from Quebec, but that the commission will not be providing any financial assistance in respect of the movement.

That is really what I was after. As I said earlier, I felt that students from Shawinigan or in other communities competing for the jobs in the mining communities in the north where opportunities are limited should get the same treatment as others, not preferential treatment in circumstances where the minister—because Shawinigan is in his constituency—put pressure on Manpower to pay transportation costs.

[Translation]

Mr. Charles Lapointe (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. member will share with me the positive side of that experience, namely that students from Shawinigan should go to Flin Flon, and I dare hope that one day, Mr. Speaker, students from Flin Flon will go to Shawinigan, or Tadoussac or Matane and that students from Matane and all those towns and cities in Quebec will go somewhere in Manitoba and other Canadian provinces because it is on that basis of student exchanges that we can build a better Canada.

However, Mr. Speaker, the implication that the Minister of Finance was in any way involved in the decision of the manpower centre or the manpower commission to pay for the transportation of those students from Shawinigan to Flin Flon seems to me to be quite regrettable. I think it also denotes very poor knowledge of the operation of Canada manpower centres to dare even imagine that the Minister of Finance or anyone else in this House could influence any manpower centre in the application of their program.

I would like to continue my remarks by mentioning that it has been the policy of the Hudson's Bay Mining and Smelting Company since 1976 to hire a small number of French-speaking students from Shawinigan, Quebec, for the summer at its operations in Flin Flon, Manitoba. I am informed that the company has decided to continue that policy in 1978. The hon. member will appreciate that this is a policy decided entirely by that company—our Canada employment centres fill the job applications they receive but cannot control the policy of the company in this area.

In past years the commission helped students get to the work site of the Hudson's Bay Mining and Smelting Company in Flin Flon through small mobility subsidies covering travel expenses and a small per diem of $20 per student for their housing needs. Mobility grants of this kind are generally available to students only if there is a shortage of qualified workers in the community where they are going to work. In past years, there was a low rate of unemployment around Flin Flon, whereas in Shawinigan the rate of unemployment among students was rather high, which enabled the commission to have a relatively broad policy in the area, particularly from the point of view of the benefits stemming from such cultural exchanges.

Unfortunately it will not be possible for the commission to approve mobility assistance grants for the 10 or 15 Quebec students seeking jobs in Flin Flon this year. The employment situation for students in Flin Flon is not as favourable as in the past. So it will be impossible to meet the request of the Quebec students and consider once again this modest form of financial assistance.

[English]

It appears that regardless of the commission's policy with respect to student mobility grants, Hudson's Bay Mining and Smelting is likely to continue its practice of providing a small number of summer jobs to students from Quebec. As I mentioned earlier, this is not a matter in which the employment and immigration commission can properly intervene since the selection of employees is a matter of private sector decision making. The commission is not in any way assisting this movement; neither is it hindering it nor is it in a position to hinder it.

RELOCATION OF SUN LIFE—GOVERNMENT INTERCESSION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I seek the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

In view of the fact that Sun Life shareholders are meeting today in Toronto to decide whether the company head office should be moved from Montreal to Toronto, and that the board of directors of this company feels very strongly that it should, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle):

That the House advise the shareholders and board of directors of this company that it wishes their head office to remain in Montreal.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The House has heard the hon. member's motion. Pursuant to Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

INDUSTRY

REPAIR OF FOREIGN VESSELS IN CANADIAN PORTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment (Mr. LeBlanc), in response to questions put to him by myself, announced on April 6 a policy allowing increased use of Canadian ports by foreign fishing vessels for purposes of repairs in Canadian shipyards, thus permitting the government-owned CN dry dock located at St. John's to continue negotiations with the U.S.S.R. for a repair contract involving repairs to 60 Soviet fishing trawlers per year, and in view of the fact that to handle the work required by the U.S.S.R. fishing fleet and others, involving an increase in employment of several hundred people, the St. John's dry dock must install a synchrolift capable of handling vessels of up to 4,000 tons leaving its graving dock free for use by larger vessels with 18 months needed to do the work, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Whiteway):

That the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce immediately provide financial assistance to the government-owned dockyard at St. John's in the amount of $8 million as requested by the dockyard, as the government did for government-owned dockyards and shipyards in Quebec and British Columbia earlier this year.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for discussion would require unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

"DUPLESSIS" TELEVISION PROGRAM—PUBLIC APOLOGY TO BISHOP CABANA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, as a member of this House and also as a former president of the Catholic Parents Association for the Sherbrooke diocese, I am rising under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to obtain the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion dealing with an important matter of pressing necessity.

The sixth program of the CBC TV serial Duplessis gave unfair and shabby treatment to Bishop Cabana of Sherbrooke, one of the founders of Sherbrooke University, a grand accomplishment for the people of the eastern townships of which Bishop George Cabana was primary mover as head of the Sherbrooke diocese.

The program gave a false impression by suggesting that the foundation of Sherbrooke University was the result of a shady deal to obtain the tactical support of the church for the administration of the late Maurice Duplessis.

Since the program has falsely interpreted the facts and considerably blemished the reputation of Bishop Cabana, the church as well as the people of the eastern townships, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier):

That the House direct the CBC and the authors of the serial Duplessis to apologize publicly to Bishop Cabana and to the church by setting the facts in their true light.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there such consent?

ENERGY

FUNDING OF ORGANIZATIONS STUDYING NUCLEAR ENERGY RAMIFICATIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Andy Hogan (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Since the federal government has announced a plan to give the Science Council and the Royal Society of Canada $200,000 to explain to the Canadian people the positive side of nuclear power as an energy resource for Canada, in view of the fact that nuclear power technology as it relates to safety and pollution is a very controversial matter among North American scientists themselves, and since it is obvious that there is another side to the question, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes):

That the Canadian Coalition for Nuclear Responsibility and Energy Probe be given equal funding so that the other side of the nuclear debate would be presented to the Canadian people.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

ILLEGAL ACTIVITIES OF FORCE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): Mr. Speaker, my motion relates to today's Globe and Mail article wherein the Solicitor General (Mr. Blais) disclosed that the government knew last September that there had been several hundred criminal investigation break-ins without warrant. The previous solicitor general told this House on October 28 that the government was committed to informing the McDonald commission, as well as any person entrusted with the administration of justice, of any alleged breach of Canadian law, and in fact that evidence was adduced before the McDonald commission last week. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay):

That the Solicitor General make an immediate statement on motions as to why his predecessor's commitment to inform the McDonald commission and administration of justice officials of this alleged illegal activity was not honoured.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion, pursuant to Standing Order 43, requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

REINSTATEMENT PRIOR TO NATIONAL REFERENDUM—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, on a matter of grave national importance, I would like to move a motion under Standing Order 43. In view of yet another senseless murder, this time of an RCMP officer in Saskatchewan shot down while in the line of duty, and because it is only sensible that, since punishment is a deterrent to crime, capital punishment be a deterrent to capital crime, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Lawrence):

That this House reinstate the death penalty prior to the issuance of a writ, failing which a national referendum on capital punishment be included in the next federal election.

INQUIRY INTO CONDUCT OF ANTI-BILINGUAL EMPLOYEES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to ask for the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

Considering the exasperation of the Gens de l'air du Québec over the lack of concern of Air Canada for matters relating to bilingualism and the hiring of bilingual employees in Quebec; considering the latest report from the Commissioner of the official languages who not only deplores the unacceptable level of complaints but also denounces the undue delay of the head office and of the respective branches of Dorval and Mirabel in taking measures to correct the situation, and who also qualifies the status of the French language at Ottawa airport as particularly serious, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Laprise):

That the House order the Minister of Transport to implement the recommendation of the Gens de l'air du Québec, namely to establish a special inquiry on the sources of resistance towards the French language and the Official Languages Act within Air Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The House has heard the terms of the hon. member's motion. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

OUTFLOW OF CAPITAL

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. With our current account deficit aggravating our foreign exchange position, we now find that the capital outflow from Canada continues at alarming rates. The figures in the March, 1978, Bank of Canada review show that in 1976 unidentified capital outflows were $3.4 billion and in 1977 they were $3.2 billion compared to, say, three years ago when they were only $600 million. Will the Minister of Finance indicate if they have reviewed these figures to determine the cause of this type of outflow? If so, what can he report to the House?

● (1417)

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, this question was asked some days ago by the hon. member's seatmate. We have reviewed these figures. There is nothing special to report. I have prepared a letter for the hon. member's seatmate and I will send a copy of it to the hon. member for York-Simcoe in order that he will have a lengthy explanation.

Mr. Stevens: The Minister of Finance has indicated there is nothing unusual about the $6 billion of unidentified capital outflows. Will he indicate whether consideration has been given to contingency plans in order to relieve the situation with regard to our foreign exchange position? If so, will he indicate what those contingency plans are?

Mr. Chrétien: There is nothing special that I can add at this time on the exchange rate and the policies that the government has been following. I gave plenty of explanation in my budget speech.

Mr. Stevens: Is the Minister of Finance aware that the Department of Justice has drafted legislation which provides for a limitation on capital outflows by residents of Canada, restricting them in any year to $600 of capital outflow? Is he aware of that legislation being drafted in the Department of Justice? Will he indicate who requested it and what its purpose is?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I am aware of no such legislation and the government has no intention of introducing capital controls in Canada.

TRADE

MEASURES TO REDUCE TRADE DEFICITS

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce is in connection with capital outflows and their relationship to our loss of round-the-world trade. I imagine the minister has seen the latest International Monetary Fund and Statistics Canada figures which show that Canada slipped last year to ninth place as an exporting nation, after The Netherlands, Italy and France, whereas 20 years ago we were in fourth place with France. Our share of world markets has dropped from 5.15 per cent in 1966 to 3.96 per cent in 1976. Canada is the only major industrialized country that lost ground in addition to the United Kingdom.

In view of these figures, and in view of the fact that the minister's department has a report, "Evaluation of Industrial Support Programs," which states it is futile—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the hon. member has a question, would he put it.

Mr. Crosbie: In view of the advice to the minister by his own department that normal measures are futile in an attempt to change these deficits, what emergency action is the minister and the government prepared to take to overcome this problem, apart from dive-bombing the Canadian dollar? What other program has the minister got?

Hon. Jack H. Horner (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the major program within the department to promote Canadian trade is a bill before the House, C-36, the Export Development Corporation Act. I read the hon. member's speech of yesterday. At the beginning of his remarks he said that he was a little mixed up because he had just flown 3,000 miles. His line of questioning today could be better put to the Export Development Corporation when Bill

C-36 is through second reading and sent to committee. They would answer him quite clearly as to how they can assist Canadians in increasing our export trade.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, it is obviously useless to ask this minister questions for information. Will he explain to the House why he feels, as quoted in the April 7 edition of the Winnipeg Free Press, that Canada has a very strong economic hand at Geneva, when we have slipped to ninth place in export trade among the nations of the world—the only industrial nation in the world besides Great Britain to slip—and we have slipped to seventh position in our trade with the EEC? We slipped from third place to seventh place with the EEC from 1962 to 1975. What is this strong hand that we have, as the author says that we have a pretty withered hand? Why does the minister think it is strong, in view of these statistics?

● (1422)

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I said in my speech on Bill C-36 that in 1977 Canada ranked seventh in world trade. Actually, on a per capita basis, we as a nation are second in world trade.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Horner: The hon. member refers to Canada's strong hand at Geneva. We have put forward a very firm offer. The Americans found it too restrictive and are asking us to be more lenient. This would suggest to me that our hand is indeed strong, maybe even too strong to facilitate the further liberalization of trade.

Mr. Crosbie: As the minister knows, there is a large deficit in fully manufactured end products—$12 billion. Has the hon. gentleman read his own confidential report, "Evaluation of Industrial Support Programs", which states that our balance in connection with technological goods is so unfavourable that it is probably not correctable by any ordinary amount of stimulation? Has the minister read this report? If so, what is he doing to overcome this deficit?

Mr. Horner: I have read a great many reports about Canadian industry and dealt with a lot of them. The budget which the Minister of Finance brought down on April 10 spells out special provisions for increased R and D as a result of which Canadian industry will benefit a great deal.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

PROSECUTION OF MEMBERS COMMITTING ILLEGAL ACTS

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Solicitor General. It arises from recent testimony before the McDonald commission which has shown that members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police took part in illegal activities for which they could be prosecuted under the Criminal Code. The Solicitor General is quoted in today's Globe and Mail as saying he is not planning to take any action in connection with these breaches of the Criminal Code. Can the minister tell us why he does not intend to take action against those who broke the law of Canada?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Solicitor General): The hon. gentleman has undoubtedly read the terms of reference of the McDonald commission. They include power to inquire into procedures which might not have been authorized by specific legal provisions. The evidence in the past week has shown—if this is what the hon. member is referring to—that there have been what are called surreptitious entries. A legal opinion has been forthcoming from the Department of Justice to the effect that these procedures are legal. There is a decided opinion with reference to their legality, and I wish the evidence were completely adduced before the commission so that the inquiry, which is proceeding apace, would be able to make a judgment and bring in its own recommendations.

Mr. Rodriguez: In view of the expectation that the McDonald commission will not be reporting until 1980 or 1981, and that in the minds of the Canadian people justice delayed is justice denied, and since the royal commission will be examining the procedures followed by the RCMP in carrying out their duties—while what we are talking about, in effect, has to do with the illegal actions of individuals—can the minister tell us what specific steps he and his department plan to take now that he is aware of specific criminal actions on the part of certain members of the RCMP?

Mr. Blais: With reference to the specific illegal acts which the hon. member has mentioned, those acts were referred to the attorneys general of the provinces in which they were allegedly perpetrated. The inquiry is continuing to deal with other matters, such as the procedures followed. The hon. member has cited 1980 or 1981 as the termination date for the inquiry. That is a judgment which a reporter has made, it is not my judgment. Hopefully, the commission will be reporting post-haste—

An hon. Member: Post-haste?

Mr. Blais: —to this House. Further, as I have said before, the commission can make interim reports as it sees fit.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, it is absolutely appalling that the chief law officer of the nation should give responses such as we have heard this afternoon. Can he tell this House and the people why any Canadian should respect the rule of law in this country when the government has decided it may be inoperative at any time the circumstances suit it?

● (1427)

DELAY IN INFORMING McDONALD INQUIRY OF ILLEGAL ACTS

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Solicitor General. The press report indicates that the government knew last September about several hundred entries made without warrants. I refer the Solicitor General to the commitment of his predecessor to refer to the commissioners of the McDonald commission and to law enforcement agencies, not evidence of alleged illegalities but, to quote the minister's immediate predecessor, "any alleged breach of Canadian laws"—which is a far different thing.

Can the Solicitor General tell the House why, if his predecessor knew last September, it was not until last week that the McDonald commission was informed of this type of activity in direct evidence, when a clear commitment was made in this House on October 28 by the minister's predecessor to inform immediately the commission and other law enforcement agencies of any alleged breach of Canadian laws?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. gentleman has read the terms of reference, he will know that the commission has jurisdiction to study procedures, as I indicated to the hon. gentleman from Nickel Belt. I indicated in that interview that indeed there was knowledge of the procedure of surreptitious entries. There was no indication by me that there was knowledge of 400 specific events, as was the evidence last week. However, that evidence, of necessity—

An hon. Member: You were quoted.

Mr. Blais: I was not quoted. Of necessity the evidence relating to surreptitious entries was made known to me and my predecessor some time before, but in accordance with the procedures of the McDonald inquiry such evidence was prepared so that it could be led by my solicitors before that commission.

I would like to indicate to the hon. gentleman that it is an indication of the excellent co-operation that there is presently, and has been, between the RCMP, my department and the commission that there is a proper scheduling of the evidence and the presentation of that evidence before the commission. The hon. gentleman will understand that evidence relating to procedures cannot all be introduced before the commission on the same day.

Mr. Jarvis: Mr. Speaker, the issue is not the co-operation that exists; the issue is the competence and responsibility of the minister of the day and the present minister. Can the Solicitor General indicate to this House whether it is his view that the present terms of reference enable the McDonald commission to advise that charges be laid against whomever, because on reading the terms of reference it is certainly not clear to me nor, I presume, to others that any such power exists within those terms of reference?

While the minister is answering that, perhaps he would also tell the House the difference between an alleged culpable act committed one day before the McDonald commission was constituted, and a similar culpable act one day after; because it is very clear in the press story—unless it is incorrect—that the Solicitor General distinguishes clearly between any activity up to the moment the McDonald commission was constituted and any activity which occurred after that constitution.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, I am afraid the hon. gentleman is making distinctions where distinctions do not appear. What I did say was that if an illegal activity is made known to me, and that illegal activity is expressly contrary to policy directives which I have issued or which my predecessor may have issued, that activity will be the subject of possible prosecution. I wish to advise the hon. gentleman that it is the policy of the commissioner of the RCMP that any illegal activity which comes to his attention is referred immediately to the attorney general of the province concerned, who has responsibility for the administration of justice.

With reference to the other distinction which the hon. gentleman wishes to make regarding the terms of reference, I would like to take note of his questions because they deal with a very precise interpretation. I will report to the hon. gentleman.

AIR CANADA

INQUIRY INTO CONDUCT OF ANTI-BILINGUAL EMPLOYEES

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Transport.

As the Gens de l'air du Québec union recently denounced the policy of Air Canada on bilingualism and the hiring of bilingual personnel in Quebec, and also, as the Official Languages Commissioner has severely criticized Air Canada for its undue delay in respecting the Official Languages Act, can the minister tell the House whether he intends to implement the recommendation of the Gens de l'air du Québec and set up a special inquiry into the pockets of resistance that exist within Air Canada against the French language and the Official Languages Act?

● (1432)

[English]

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am satisfied that Air Canada is not being unnecessarily slow or difficult with regard to the development of policies in connection with the Official Languages Act and its spirit. The corporation is in the process of developing its final formal plan for improvement in the way the official languages are dealt with within the corporation. It has been paying special attention to hiring to ensure that it will be able to serve the public in both languages. That is not an easy problem to solve in a short period of time, but I would like to assure the hon. member that at this time the will is there and it is a matter of how fast we can accomplish the kind of results we want in order that the grievances cited are removed.

[Translation]

Mr. Allard: Mr. Speaker, on a supplementary.

The minister being aware that this matter has been under study for over a year, can he tell us whether he intends to take steps to redress that glaring injustice towards French in the air and in many other departments in Quebec, and whether he will bring in those measures before the next election?

[English]

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I would be very pleased indeed if the hon. member would draw to my attention any specific instances to which he might be referring. I would also be glad to give him further detailed information about the progress which is being made and which we will ensure will continue to be made in this regard.

HOUSING

DISCUSSIONS WITH PROVINCES ON IMPROVEMENT PROGRAMS

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, my question concerns the government's housing policy or strategy, and particularly the uncertain future of a number of important programs such as the Neighbourhood Improvement Program, the rehabilitation program, and so on.

In the absence of the Minister of State for Urban Affairs for some days now, perhaps the Prime Minister is in a position today to tell the House, in the knowledge that there have been discussions with the provinces on these programs, what the outcome of these discussions was, whether these programs will be renewed, cancelled or changed significantly, and when we can expect an announcement on them, in view of the fact that the housing season is upon us and the industry throughout the country is held up and is in a critical situation, as well as people expecting to find shelter this year.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I heard my name mentioned halfway through the question, and I am not sure what the hon. member is talking about.

Mr. Oberle: The question was with respect to the government's housing policy and strategy, and particularly the uncertain future of a number of federal programs which have received widespread acceptance and support throughout the country from provinces and from individuals. The question is whether these programs will be cancelled or changed significantly, or whether we can expect them to be implemented in the near future?

Mr. Trudeau: I will be glad to take notice of the question on behalf of the minister.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

VALUE OF CANADIAN DOLLAR—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. In a recent statement in Alberta, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce stated with reference to the Canadian dollar:

I don't believe it is any advantage to advocate it should be above 90 cents,

He also suggested that the Canadian dollar should be renamed Beaver. Can the Minister of Finance say whether that is government policy, or was the minister flying a kite to assess public acceptance of the fact that the Canadian dollar will never recover?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the policy of the government regarding the dollar is well known. I think the suggestion of calling it Beaver is as original as the one made by the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States that we could perhaps call it Maple Leaf.

Mr. Towers: The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce also said "there is no rhyme nor reason why it should be equal" to the U.S. dollar, and then mentioned the advantages of the devalued dollar. Has the government calculated the adverse effects which the devalued Canadian dollar has on the economy?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, there are some positive and some negative aspects to the floating dollar. This is the policy which the government has been following for years. Of course, it is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce to speak about the advantages because a weaker dollar is very good for the export business.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, my question is intended for the Minister of Justice. If he is out of the chamber temporarily, I wonder if I could be recognized later.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway.

Mrs. Holt: Mr. Speaker, the minister whom I wanted to question is not in the House.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Where are all the ministers?

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

INVESTIGATION INTO CONDUCT OF CERTAIN YUKON OFFICIALS

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. In view of the fact that the Stratton inquiry into the conduct of the commissioner and of certain officials of the Yukon was concluded about two weeks ago, could the minister tell me whether or not he has received a copy of the report or whether his commissioner in the Yukon has received a copy?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I have not received a copy of the report and I do not believe the commissioner has either.

Mr. Neil: I wonder if the minister can tell the House when he expects to receive a copy of the report. Also, will he make it public or will it be tabled in the House?

Mr. Faulkner: I expect it will be received shortly, and I expect it will be made public.

FINANCE

PROPOSALS TO QUEBEC ON SALES TAX

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that he recently presented the budget in the House, and that this budget involved specifically the jurisdiction of the provinces; in view also of the fact that the province of Quebec did not accept the federal government's proposal and that today the minister made a counter-proposal, I believe, to the Quebec government, that he gave a press conference just before—

Mr. Chrétien: No.

Mr. La Salle: No? If the minister did not give—it seems to me that the minister officially made Quebec a counter-proposal. Would the minister be willing, at three o'clock, to make a statement on the counter-proposal he made officially, it would seem, to the Quebec government?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I stated on several occasions that the offer I put in writing for Mr. Parizeau is the same as the Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations himself made in his speech last week in the House.

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question. I understand that the offer he made yesterday to the Quebec government is nevertheless slightly different from the original proposal. Given the circumstances, would the minister make a statement before the House so that opposition members could question him on this matter?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I will be pleased to forward a copy of the letter I sent to Mr. Parizeau but the proposal I made in writing is more or less the same as the one proposed in the days which followed the budget and which was outlined in more detail by my colleague in the House of Commons.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

LIABILITY FOR COSTS OF COURT ACTION INVOLVING PUBLIC SERVANT

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice: it concerns the decision of the minister to make the Canadian taxpayer pick up the tab for the Minister of Supply and Services with respect to the libelling of an innocent public servant, Mr. Larry Stopforth.

Yesterday the minister gave a press interview in which he quoted two precedents, one which involved a case which was never brought to trial and the other which involved a case in which the minister in question was successful and the court held that he was acting within the scope of his duties. In neither case did the defendant pay any damages. Will the minister now inform the House whether it is the policy of this government that a minister who unjustly defames a public servant is acting within the terms of reference of his position, and if that is the basis upon which he puts the judgment of the Minister of Supply and Services?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the question is a little academic or hypothetical because no decision has been made as to whether or not to appeal the decision. That decision will be made very shortly. With regard to the latter part of the question, there are precedents in which the Crown has acted for members of the ministry in their defence against actions for tort of one sort or another. In fact, while the situation is not necessarily the same in Canada as in Great Britain, in Great Britain the Crown Proceedings Act is very clear on the point. Therefore, if we defend someone in the course of their employment in an action for tort, the usual practice and the past practice has been to pay any damages resulting from that action.

Whether damages in fact are paid is a matter for Treasury Board to decide upon application. However, at the moment the matter is purely hypothetical because no decision has been made on whether to appeal or not.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, yesterday the minister was not hypothetical; he indicated that it was the government's intention, if no appeal were taken, to pay for this defamatory action. The minister appears to be "amicus Goyer" in this particular matter. Therefore, does he accept the proposition that the minister's responsibility goes out the window in this particular case?

If he accepts the proposition that defaming a public servant is within the course of the duties of a minister, under the circumstances will he at least take the step of advising, in his capacity as Minister of Justice, the minister to stand in the House and apologize? Will he advise the minister that the person should be reinstated to the position within his department which he held prior to this particular, very regrettable incident?

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, that would depend upon whether an appeal is taken and the result of that appeal.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

PAYMENT OF LEGAL COSTS OF MEMBER OF FORCE

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Solicitor General. As the Minister of Justice has said, now that the government has decided, subject to possible appeal, to pay the costs and award against the Minister of Supply and Services for breach of the law on libel and slander, in the name of consistency will the Solicitor General recommend payment of the legal costs of RCMP corporal John Danch who won a very important case in the Federal Court of Canada on November 10, 1977, setting a notable precedent against arbitrary dismissal from the force? He has the discretion to pay these costs. In the name of consistency and appropriateness, I am wondering if he will give his undertaking now to do so.

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I will take the hon. member's representations as notice.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

PRECEDENTS RELIED UPON RESPECTING PAYMENT OF LEGAL COSTS OF PUBLIC SERVANT

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. In view of what he said, which I understand the law to be, that there is no statutory ability in the Government of Canada to pay the costs, and the idea is based on past experience, and in view of the clear indication that the government intends to pay the costs and the damages suffered by the Minister of Supply and Services for a wrongful act defaming a public servant who has been demoted—which is a rather interesting set of facts—would the minister be prepared to table before the House of Commons, not the opinion he was given, if he was given an opinion at all by the Department of Justice, but the precedents upon which he relied?

Will he inform the House whether there is a specific precedent, Canadian or British, relating to the libelling of a public servant and the minister carrying out that libel being entitled to compensation for his wrongful act?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, of course I would not want to table legal opinions; that is a long-standing practice. The two recent precedents which have been mentioned are Roman against Trudeau and Green—

[Mr. Hnatyshyn.]

An hon. Member: Who?

Mr. Basford: —and Holiday Magic versus the CBC, Collins and Basford.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Paproski: They both won academy awards.

Mr. Basford: In the latter case, the Department of Justice acted for the CBC and the CBC acted for Collins.

An hon. Member: How about the other one?

Mr. Basford: The Crown selected counsel for me when I was minister of consumer and corporate affairs. There were no damages resulting from that because the action was dismissed for want of prosecution.

With regard to earlier precedents, I am not sure I can supply them to the hon. member. I am sure I can supply him with public statements made by former deputy attorneys general including Mr. Driedger, who is well known to the hon. member, covering the subject.

ABUSE OF LAW BY PUBLIC SERVANTS—COMPENSATION FOR CITIZENS

Mrs. Simma Holt (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. In view of the fact that there are some people in the public service, not elected and not accountable, who are abusing regulations so seriously that they are damaging independent business and private citizens, and in view of the evidence citizens are producing of this to me and other members of parliament, would the Minister of Justice consider preparing a law to make these people liable for damage as a result of abuses which can be related to and proven to be directly responsible for that damage?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, obviously, if the hon. member—

An hon. Member: The Crown will pay.

Mr. Basford: —has specifics of where regulations are being breached by public servants, they should be brought to the attention of the deputy head or the minister of the department. The hon. member asks whether we will prepare legislation. There is legislation before the House to establish a federal ombudsman whose express purpose will be to deal with citizens' complaints about administrative abuse of regulations.

NATIONAL UNITY

PROPOSED MOVE OF SUN LIFE FROM QUEBEC

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of the recent news that at a meeting of the shareholders of Sun Life, 83 per cent voted in favour of the transfer of the head office from Montreal to Toronto, and in view of the commendable, symbolic gesture of the President of the Treasury Board to vote against the transfer, even though it was not persuasive, what steps does the Prime Minister intend to take to prevent the transfer of that head office?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is aware of the steps taken by the Minister of Finance and by myself when we met with the chairman of the board and the president of the company in an attempt to dissuade them. He is aware of the steps we took as shareholders in voting against the move.

The hon. member is referring to a fact which I understand took place just a few minutes ago. I will consider whether any step can or should be taken by the government. My recollection of the first meeting I had with the Minister of Finance and the officers was that we did not have the legal power to prevent any such move. I can look at the matter again, but I must confess that it is not the inclination of the government to force the shareholders of a private company to do anything they do not want to do.

Mr. Gilbert: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the Government of Canada holds at least ten policies with Sun Life, would the Prime Minister consider either cancelling or transferring those policies as a demonstrative step to show that we mean action, rather than words?

Mr. Trudeau: I take that to be a representation, Mr. Speaker. I will have it studied.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CONDEMNATION OF ATROCITIES COMMITTED IN CAMBODIA

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs. It has to do with the motion which was passed unanimously by the House on April 7 in which the Parliament of Canada condemned the genocide now going on in Cambodia, a resolution which was taken note of by President Carter in developing world opinion on this subject.

Over the noon hour a group of members of parliament met to voice their concern again. We want to ask the minister whether the Canadian government has yet raised the issue of genocide with the United Nations, particularly the Security Council, or whether it intends to do so. What instructions has the Canadian government given our ambassador in China to intercede with the Chinese government to have this senseless slaughter in Cambodia stopped?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, the motion passed was a motion by the House itself. In that case the Secretary of State for External Affairs obviously would take whatever steps were necessary to ensure that the motion would reach the people for whom it was intended. I am not certain and I cannot tell the hon. member what other steps the Secretary of State for External Affairs may have taken since then, but I will make inquiries and report later.

IMMIGRATION

ACCEPTANCE OF CAMBODIAN REFUGEES

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration and is on the same subject. Can the minister confirm that Canada intends to take 290 Cambodian refugees who have escaped from that country? Can he inform the House what further instructions he intends to issue to the Canadian ambassador in Bangkok to expedite the processing of applications from Cambodian refugees who wish to come to this country?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, we have 7,000 people in that particular quota and that number is almost filled at the present time. I have a representation which I will make to my cabinet colleagues probably on Thursday in connection with this specific problem.

PUBLIC SERVICE

COMPARISON OF SALARIES WITH THOSE OF PRIVATE SECTOR

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the President of the Treasury Board regarding the opinion of the Canadian Human Rights commissioner who indicated that the amendments to the Public Service Staff Relations Act which relate to comparing salaries and wages in the public service to those of the private sector are offensive in that under this legislation we must pursue equal pay for work of equal value. The minister was going to look into this matter.

This is a very important question. Has the Minister of Justice rendered his decision in light of the concern of the chairman of the Canadian Human Rights Commission and does he know in which direction he will now go?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, before and after the letter from the commissioner the Department of Justice confirmed to me their view that this did not breach the Human Rights Act. Nevertheless, I have agreed with the Minister of Justice to make absolutely sure, so there can be no possibility of misinterpretation, that we will make the necessary change to the PSSRA amendment to absolutely, clearly state that the Human Rights Act is paramount.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Fraser Valley East.

Mr. Patterson: Mr. Speaker, I direct—

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, one supplementary, after a week away?

Mr. Speaker: I do not know how I can award a supplementary when the hon. member obviously got precisely the answer he was looking for in his question. However, I am prepared to be persuaded.

Mr. Alexander: Thank you very much, sir; you have been persuaded. I ask the President of the Treasury Board, in light of the very important position that the chairman has regarding his functions in his own department, can the minister assure the House that if and when he introduces legislation which deals primarily with the public service and, of course, their rights, he will take into consideration the expertise of the chairman of the Canadian Human Rights Commission and his officials in order that we do not have this sort of thing happening periodically? This is a good move and I hope the President of the Treasury Board can give me that assurance.

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, I have already given the assurance that we are quite prepared to ensure that the Public Service Staff Relations Act does not breach the Human Rights Act. I do not know what other comment the hon. member is looking for.

Mr. Alexander: I am talking about the new legislation.

AGRICULTURE

REQUEST MILK QUOTA BE INCREASED IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Alex Patterson (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the fact that fluid milk consumption in British Columbia is increasing, and in meeting this demand there will of necessity be an increase in the production of industrial milk, will the minister consider the desirability of recommending the granting to that province of a higher percentage of the provincial market share quota in order that the industry will be permitted to expand, or will he make this possible through some other mechanism?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. member is aware that the national market share quota is divided among the provinces and is in turn divided by the people involved on that committee. They decide how to distribute that quota; I do not.

Mr. Patterson: I would just remind the minister that 3.1 per cent is the share for British Columbia, which is highly inequitable. As surplus milk must be of sufficient volume to allow for the maintenance of an adequate processing facility and trained staff, and all such milk produced on the lower mainland of British Columbia and Vancouver Island is processed by the two Fraser Valley milk producers' plants in Abbotsford and Sardis, will the minister call upon the Canadian Dairy Commission to call a meeting of the national supply management committee at the earliest possible moment to resolve this problem which will seriously affect the B.C. dairy industry?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to see that the hon. member recognizes the fact that dairy products are being consumed by more Canadians all the time and that he recognized the success of our national dairy program, because without that there would not be the interest in wanting to produce the product.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. In his answer to my question yesterday about the Bell-Saudi Arabia agreement, he said he would ask that the matter be looked into. Has he received a report on it from his officials and, if so, can he provide the information he has received to the House?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I believe the question yesterday dealt with two matters. One was the question of whether Bell Canada was in compliance with our boycott regulations. I am told that their contract has been looked at in detail by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce and they state that Bell has been very co-operative in indicating in every way that it would, and has indeed, complied with the boycott regulations.

The other matter had to do with the alleged prohibition of people of Jewish faith going to Saudi Arabia. I am told that there is nothing in the contract to this effect, that indeed such is not the case and that people of Jewish faith can and do go to Saudi Arabia. There is a requirement in their visa formulation for indicating their religion, but there is no prohibition against admitting people of religious faith into Saudi Arabia.

SOUTHWEST AFRICA—AGREEMENT REACHED ON RACIAL PROBLEMS

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the right hon. Prime Minister: it relates to the meetings that have been taking place in London and New York over these last three or four days. Since SWAPO, a movement composed largely of expatriates belonging to one particular tribe with only marginal support in Southwest Africa, has indicated that it is irrevocably opposed to a multiracial régime in Southwest Africa, I wonder, despite the multiracial nature of that country, if the Prime Minister can provide the House with a report confirming or denying news stories to the effect that the Secretary of State for External Affairs within the last three or four days has been seeking to undermine the Turnhalle agreement which was reached on a multiracial basis by a conference which the SWAPO officials, though invited, did not attend.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, far from attempting to undermine the agreement, the Secretary of State for External Affairs has been designated by the four other countries participating with Canada in a proposed solution to the Namibia problems; and the hon. member knows that the Secretary of State for External Affairs is, and has been, at the United Nations putting forth his proposal. I understand that on behalf of Germany, France, the United States, Great Britain and Canada, of course, he has already put forth a proposal which has been accepted by South Africa and an answer is now awaited from SWAPO.

DISCUSSIONS ON RHODESIAN SITUATION

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, in connection with the same conversations that have been going on, and its having been denied in this House within the last week or so that Canada had no initiatives whatsoever to propose in this area—particularly with respect to Rhodesia—could the Prime Minister explain what the Secretary of State for External Affairs is putting forward in terms of policy related to Rhodesia in the current round of discussions taking place in New York and whether, in addition to that, there are any commitments with respect to peacekeeping forces in which Canada would be involved in any such proposals?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, do I understand the hon. member to be now switching from Namibia to Rhodesia, because his first question was on Namibia and that is the question I have answered. I do not know that the Secretary of State for External Affairs, in New York now, is having any particular discussions on Rhodesia.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): We do not, either.

HOUSING

IMPROVEMENT PROGRAMS FOR LOW INCOME AREAS

Mr. Andy Hogan (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the minister of state for housing. I would ask him if there are going to be any changes in the Neighbourhood Improvement Program for low income areas across Canada this year, and whether there are going to be changes announced in the Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Program.

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, earlier this week I sent telegrams to my provincial counterparts putting forth a series of proposals, not only in relation to the rehabilitation of housing but in relation to joint activities at both levels of government in what we call public housing. As the hon. member knows, the Neighbourhood Improvement Program terminated earlier this month because of a sunset clause in the legislation.

The proposal that I put forth to the provinces is a package by which the federal government will make available funds for municipality infrastructure programs. Therefore, neighbourhood improvement could continue under this approach if the municipalities, with provincial concurrence, want it continued.

IMMIGRATION

GOVERNMENT ACTION RESPECTING MARRIAGES OF CONVENIENCE

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Approximately a week ago I referred to a departmental memo sent to the minister which addressed itself to the problem of marriages of convenience. I should like to ask the minister whether he has investigated charges made by his officials in that memo and, if so, what action has he taken or what action is he prepared to take?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, we are conducting investigations at the present time. Our officials are in the field and we are endeavouring to use the avenues available to us to determine whether it is possible to make a subjective decision that a marriage is one of convenience as opposed to a legitimate marriage. Where the marriage takes place in the province of Ontario, for example, and meets the provisions of the act in that province, it is legal. It puts us in a somewhat difficult position to say that although it is legal, it is a marriage of convenience. We have a practical problem which we are endeavouring to deal with.

Mr. Epp: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the detailed documentation included in the memo where specific charges were made of Canadians operating rings of marriages of convenience, I should like to ask the minister if that is also under investigation and if he is planning to lay charges in cases which have been proven to him.

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, if the law has been broken and charges are to be laid, they would not be laid by my department. In all probability we would bring that matter to the attention of the proper authorities.

Point of Order—Mr. W. Baker

PRIVILEGE

MR. BASFORD—QUESTION ASKED BY HON. MEMBER FOR YORK-SIMCOE

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege relating to a question asked at the beginning of the question period by the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens). He implied that the legislative division of the Department of Justice was drawing legislation relating to foreign exchange controls or to the amount of capital that an individual could remove from Canada in any given year.

I think it terribly important that I state there is no foundation whatsoever for that question. The legislative division of the Department of Justice or the justice section of the Department of Finance is not drafting any such legislation and has received no instructions to draft such legislation. I think it important that I state that.

I also think it important to state that I think the hon. member's question, the innuendo contained in it, and the possible rumour established by it, are the height of irresponsibility coming from the financial critic of the official opposition.

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, on that question of privilege raised by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) I noted that he said no legislation is being drafted. My question was to the effect that legislation had been drafted. In fact a member of his staff has let the word be known that the legislation is drafted and is now in the Prime Minister's office. It was confirmed by an executive assistant to a member of the government.

In no way did I feel it was irresponsible to ask for clarification if that legislation had been drafted and, if so, why did the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) feel it was needed.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I apparently am drawn into this fictional account by the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens). I can assure the House there is no such legislation in my hands and that, if the hon. member wants to invoke an unnamed person talking to other unnamed persons who were talking to him, of course he is still compounding his irresponsibility.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Hon. members will realize we have a disagreement and not a question of privilege.

POINTS OF ORDER

MR. BAKER (GRENVILLE-CARLETON)—THE STOPFORTH CASE

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order arising out of a matter dealing with the question period. First of all I want to thank the Secretary of State (Mr. Roberts) for staying, and I see that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) is also here. The point relates to matters involving the Stopforth case.

The Minister of Justice made it clear that he would have no objection to tabling the precedents upon which his department is relying as opposed to a legal opinion. I thought that was quite clear, and I hope that can take care of itself.

There is another matter that I think important, however, and that is the position of the Public Service Commission which reports to the House of Commons through the Secretary of State. There is the unfortunate position of Mr. Stopforth who finds himself defamed, has recovered damages, desires to be reinstated in his old job and who has not been, notwithstanding the fact it was clearly established in a court of law that he was removed for the wrong reasons.

Given the fact that the Public Service Commission reports to this House and the minister is a conduit for that reporting, I think it appropriate that the House be informed at some point and in some way about what the government intends to do, and what the Public Service Commission intends to do with respect to Mr. Stopforth, and whether an investigation is being carried out into the elements of this case.

If the minister would rise in his place and deal with the matter affirmatively he could undo a great injustice to a public servant. This is a blot on the whole Public Service and it has to be removed. I invite the minister to deal with this matter openly in the House, today or at another time.

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has correctly described me as what would in other circumstances be unflattering—he described me as a conduit. That is exactly what I am in relation to the representation he has made. He realizes that my position is not to give direction or do other than communicate to the Public Service Commission the statement he has made today. I undertake to do so and to reply on some other occasion with whatever information it provides to me. I hope that assurance will be acceptable.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Certainly.

MR. STEVENS—TABLING OF COMMITTEE REPORT

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order arising from a comment made with respect to the question of privilege raised yesterday by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang). At page 4782 of Hansard the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) is reported as follows:

> . . . I have something to put on the record so that the people can judge the truth of the matter. It is the second report from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, and I will table it. It was agreed on April 4, 1978, at 3.20—and the hon. member for York-Simcoe was there—that I was to be in the committee next Tuesday. The hon. member may have said something that was not dishonest, but it was not the truth.

I have inquired whether the Minister of Finance tabled whatever he was referring to and I find out he has not—procedurally he probably could not in any event. But, Mr. Speaker, apparently there is no such report of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, or at least it has not been tabled. So the Table informs me.

My point of order is to seek clarification. I would hope that in the tone of the question period yesterday at least the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lumley) would clarify for me what report the minister was referring to. The first I learned of the minister agreeing to come before the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs was after I left the chamber on the day I originally raised the point. A notice was in my office for the first time definitively saying he would appear.

Mr. Ed Lumley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the report the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) is referring to is that of the Subcommittee on Agenda and Procedure, dated April 4, 1978, which shows that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) was requested to appear twice before the committee, one meeting to be held on April 25, 1978, at 8 p.m., and the other possibly on April 21, 1978, or any other suitable date.

At the meeting the hon. member refers to I specifically stated that the minister would appear on April 25 and, if possible, on April 21.

Mr. Stevens: That is not in the report.

RCMP—COST OF INVESTIGATIONS

Question No. 1,373—Mr. Jones:

What are the costs of R.C.M.P. investigations into political patronage scandals in the province of New Brunswick from 1976 to date?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Solicitor General): It is not the practice of the RCMP to record its costs on an investigation-by-investigation basis. Moreover, it is not uncommon for an investigator to be tasked with more than one investigation at any given time, and to move from investigation to investigation during any working day. It is, therefore, impractical to arrive at the costs of any particular investigation or investigations.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—TRANSPORTATION POLICY

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville) moved:

That in the opinion of this House, the Minister of Transport has consistently failed to manage Canadian transportation policy in an efficient and effective manner and implement the promises of the 1974 election campaign, and the House calls upon the government to take positive action:

(a) to abandon the user pay concept and develop overall transportation objectives which will enhance national harmony, reduce regional disparities and promote balanced economic growth;

(b) to develop mechanisms which will encourage the federal government in consultation with all provincial governments to set national and regional transportation priorities;

(c) to clarify the mandate of the Canadian Transport commission to ensure that the regional diversity of the country is taken into consideration in all decisions of the Commission; and

(d) to implement the major recommendations of the Hall commission report on Grain Handling and Transportation in the West.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members will know that pursuant to Standing Order 32(1)(k) the motion is debatable, and that proceedings on the motion shall expire in accordance with Standing Order 58(11) at the ordinary hour of adjournment.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased on this occasion to present this motion before the House on behalf of my party. I believe the subject matter of the motion is very timely.

It will give the House an opportunity to examine the Trudeau government's record in the important area of transportation. It will give the House an opportunity to examine the reliability of the Liberal government in fulfilling the election promises of 1974. It will give us an opportunity to assess and analyse the effectiveness and the manner in which the current minister is handling the day to day issues which arise. It will provide hon. members an opportunity to consider some new initiatives and new directions in the formulation of goals, objectives, and priorities for a national transportation policy in Canada into the twenty-first century. It will also give us an opportunity to discuss how we might be able to execute such policy. Perhaps what is more important is that as we now head into another election campaign there is no question in the minds of many people that Canadians will again, in all probability, be bombarded with another assortment of transportation goodies, which the Liberals have no intention of implementing even if they were elected.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: As a matter of fact that process is well on its way right now, Mr. Speaker. Whole promises are being reactivated. So-called new commitments are being introduced, along with so-called new promises, all of which are politically motivated. I am glad the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) is in the House because he is the master of political motivation. I am sure that Canadians this time around will look upon that kind of benevolence and that kind of charity with much disdain.

Let us take a look at some of the highlights of the 1974 election campaign commitments. On June 19, 1974, the man who once proclaimed that Canada's transportation policy was in a mess and who got his reward in the other place, said this in a press release—

An hon. Member: What about the future?

Mr. Mazankowski: Yes, we will get to the future, but we have to review the past before we do that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. Will the hon. member please address the Chair.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I will certainly abide by your ruling. I would never insult the Chair, and you know that, sir.

The important issue in the next election campaign which will be the Trudeau government's record, and particularly its record with respect to transportation policy—

An hon. Member: He does not want to run on his record.

Mr. Mazankowski: In a June 19, 1974, press release it was reported:

Transport Minister Jean Marchand today announced sweeping changes in the institutional structures which manage Canadian transportation, a radical departure from past transportation philosophy and a comprehensive set of new transportation programs for Canada. "These changes and these programs are going to move Canada toward world leadership in the use and construction of passenger and freight transportation systems. We are reaching for world leadership in quality equipment and systems," Mr. Marchand said.

That was June, 1974, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member across the way has a short memory. He forgets about these commitments, as do most members across the way, including the Minister of Transport. These commitments were made by a former minister of transport. Let us bear in mind that this is the man who suggested that transportation systems were in a mess. I submit to you, sir, that if clearing up the so-called mess was contingent upon the fulfilment of that lofty statement, then one can only conclude that the mess has become worse.

What radical departure from past transportation philosophy have we seen or heard? What new set of comprehensive transportation programs or proposals have we seen? What kind of world leadership has been displayed by this government? The fact of the matter is none. Those who are involved in the transportation industry would probably not agree that our systems were all that bad. If there ever was a mess in the transportation industry in Canada, that mess was in the transportation minister's office. I have every reason to believe there has been very little improvement since that infamous statement was made. It is quite obvious the condition still exists.

Let us look at some samples, Mr. Speaker, first of all respecting urban transportation. On June 17, 1974, there was an announcement that some $290 million would be provided in the form of financial aid for urban transportation systems. That never got off the ground. The provinces took the commitment as a good word. They went to work, developed programs, and perhaps even committed the expenditure of those funds.

On February 17, 1977, the then minister of finance, Mr. Macdonald, announced cancellation of the program due to fiscal restraint. He cancelled it in the same city in which it had been announced three years earlier. They used fiscal restraint as an excuse, but it is very interesting to note that inflation was running at something like 11½ per cent during the election campaign of 1974. Restraint was not much of an issue at that time.

When Mr. Macdonald announced cancellation of the program, inflation was running in the order of 8 per cent. It is therefore obvious that the program was announced for political expediency and for political gain. There is no question about that. Even Liberal members of parliament could not stomach the government's about-face. Many of them spoke out on the matter, including the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Philbrook), the hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. Martin), the hon. member for York East (Mr. Collenette), the Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) (Mrs. Campagnolo), the hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Sharp), and the hon. member for Laprairie (Mr. Watson). All expressed shock and dismay at the blatancy of the government reneging on what was considered to be a formal and honest commitment. They did garner some votes however.

The minister of transportation in the province of Ontario described it as one of the most unresponsive and disappointing transporation programs put forward by the federal government in years. He stated that over the past three years the federal government indicated it would be willing to support the development of urban public transportation. This was not a casual or "maybe" commitment. They were public statements of the federal government's intent to give full support to this important program. What we have is a broken promise. It can be described as nothing else.

What about ferry service? The Liberal campaign document described that we would have a comprehensive new policy for expanding assistance to the ferry service in Canada. What was the result? A dramatic increase in tolls in our ferry system, reaching almost 70 per cent in the province of British Columbia. It almost caused the Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) to leave the cabinet.

What about ports? We were to have a comprehensive program to improve railway access to western ports and to Vancouver. This was to be launched immediately. As a matter of fact this launching was to have taken place in 1973 at the WEOC conference in Calgary. That launching is still sputtering. We were to have had new legislation to provide greater autonomy to the port authorities. Bill C-6 which was introduced contravenes that philosophy and principle.

What about freight rates? This is a dandy. It was the major priority of the Liberal government in the election campaign of 1974. They said this:

> The third major priority of these new transportation policies is the removal of regional inequities in freight rates. Mr. Marchand said it has been demonstrated over the past six years that the principle of competition on which Canadian freight rates has been based, that is, competition between different modes of transport supposedly resulting in fair and low rates, has not worked for many areas in Canada. The Liberal government will adopt the principle of consistent and equitable pricing of freight rates rather than the old "what the traffic will bear" principle. This will be a dramatic change—and the government intends to monitor the implementation very carefully to cushion shippers and carriers.

The fact is not one freight rate discrepancy or anomaly has been removed. In fact the disparity has been widened as a result of inflation and other increases. The discrepancy between long and short haul rates still exists, as does the discrepancy in freight rates between raw and processed products. There is also the issue of rapeseed as it applies in the discriminatory application of freight rates in western Canada. My colleagues will deal with that in more detail.

The discrepancy in freight rate groupings still exists. These discrepancies continue to exist, notwithstanding the fact that in 1975 there was an agreement with the then ministers of transport of the western provinces and the then minister of transport, Mr. Marchand. These matters had been agreed upon and initiatives were to be taken. There was a short communique issued in February, 1975, in which it was said in respect of Mr. Marchand:

> —he will propose a legislative amendment to reduce the rate differential anomalies between raw and finished products and in the interim will consult with the provinces and take measures necessary to correct urgent anomalies. Specifically the minister said he will recommend to his colleagues immediate steps within the existing legal structure to reduce the long-standing rapeseed products differential anomaly.

What do we hear today from the Minister of Transport? On October 20, as reported at page 59 of Hansard, the minister said:

> On the question of equity, this is a matter of serious concern to us, as we have expressed over the years our belief in the need for greater equity in freight rates between processed and unprocessed products. There are very significant financial implications. We have been discussing this with the provinces in an attempt to reach some rational conclusion about what processing should take place, because the natural advantage in the prairie region does take place there.

That is just more words and more procrastination. Nothing has been done, nothing but more equivocating.

I turn to the question of grain handling where we have a glorious commitment. The commitment in 1974 was that the total grain handling system, from the grainery to the ships in the harbour, would be revamped, and new systems introduced. What do we have? We have continued congestion in the port of Vancouver. We are now 35 million bushels behind our shipping target for the year. We have continued delays in loading. On any given day, there are an average of 24 ships waiting in the harbour. Elevators on the prairies are congested. Demurrage costs continue to pile up, some as high as $5,000 per ship per day.

An hon. Member: Who pays that?

Mr. Mazankowski: I will tell you who pays that. The farmer pays it, further reducing his income level which has declined by some 54 per cent since 1975, translated in terms of 1975 dollars. The Canadian Federation of Agriculture calls it a horrendous drop. More important, Canada continues to lose its reputation as a reliable supplier of grain in the export market. Its reputation is becoming tarnished and deteriorated. That is the sad fact of the matter.

We were to have had an expansion of the utilization of the port of Churchill. Those initiatives continue to be delayed. Prince Rupert has once again surfaced. It seems to surface during every pre-election campaign. There has been another commitment. However, if we are really honest about it, we will not see any improvement in the utilization of that port for five or six years.

Since 1973 we have heard about the necessity of a rail link to bypass the Fraser Canyon, the Clinton-Ashcroft link. Although it was promised in 1973, nothing has been done.

What about the grain handling system, the great revamping, and the great new system that was supposed to be introduced? It still takes an average of 23 days for a car to be loaded with grain, leave the country elevator point, go to Vancouver, and return. Those are not my statistics but statistics of the Hall report and Snavely report. It takes 23 days for a trainload of grain to get from the country elevator to the harbour and back for another load. I think it is fair to say that even hon. members could probably walk faster than that. We have seen no progress, no improvement in that area whatsoever. What is sad is that this situation continues to prevail in spite of the fact that we have seen a great deal of branch line abandonment on the prairies, a great deal of rationalization of the grain handling system, a great deal of consolidation of the elevator system, all of which have cost the prairie producer more money because he is obliged to deliver his grain further.

• (1532)

Speaking of branch line abandonment and elevator consolidation, it is interesting to recall what the present Minister of Transport had to say during the election campaign of 1974. A report in The Globe and Mail of June 10 of that year reads as follows:

> Countering opposition that he is out to close small grain elevators situated close to farms, Mr. Lang declared that the small elevators would remain as long as farmers wanted them.

He went on to say at Lloydminster, as reported in the June 11, 1974, edition of the Winnipeg Free Press:

> As long as the Liberal party forms the government and as long as producers wish to continue to deliver to the elevators of their choice not one rail line will be abandoned.

More hollow, shallow, empty promises, Mr. Speaker.

I believe producers are prepared to play their part in improving the grain handling system, but the government, the railways, and the elevator companies all have to do their share. Leadership lies with the federal government. My party recognizes that it is a government responsibility. But the fact remains that the party sitting across the way has failed to deliver. The promises to which I have referred by no means represent the totality of the government's transportation package which was unveiled in 1974. Those vote-catching promises, without any real meaning, uttered without any sincerity, are probably consistent with the Liberal approach.

The party opposite thrives and survives by misleading the people. It is likely that nothing new will emerge from the upcoming campaign. Perhaps there will be a repetition, a rehashing of the old promises. However, I am sure the people will not be fooled for ever because, after all, most of those promises have been floating around ever since the Western Economic Conference of 1973. We all remember that in 1974 leadership was said to be the issue in the election. I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that the honesty of that leadership will be very much an issue in the minds of most Canadians.

In 1974 Liberal propagandists were saying:

> The issue—the overwhelming issue—is leadership. The answer for anyone who is willing to take a good look at the record is obvious. Prime Minister Trudeau and his team of Liberal candidates are asking for your support July 8th.

But we have to ask this question: who is likely to do the best job of fulfilling the commitments which were made during the election campaign? That is what we have to ask ourselves.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: Consider the record when it comes to fulfilling the commitments which were made. What has become of those sweeping plans, those radical departures from past methods, those comprehensive programs we heard so much about? What became of the idea of world leadership in transportation? We can probably summarize all this in one phrase: all we have received following those lofty promises amounts to nothing more than the Otto Lang user-pay concept. What has been done in this field? I will give the House a few examples.

The government tried to eliminate or dismantle the "at and east" rates which are a very important tool of economic development for the Atlantic provinces. The minister tried to do this on three occasions. He doubled the Seaway tolls. He proposed a 533 per cent increase in user fees at airports.

An hon. Member: For most people.

Mr. Mazankowski: For most people, as my hon. friend reminds me. He increased the tolls on the ferries by as much as 70 per cent in some cases—I have in mind the province of British Columbia. The gap in freight rates brought about by discriminatory rates and the anomalies to which I referred earlier, is ever widening, and the glib promises made during the campaign of 1974 are by now nothing more than a distant ideal—unless, of course, one happens to be the present Minister of Transport—he has a different version of user-pay for himself.

On behalf of my party I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that we reject Otto Lang's concept of the user-pay philosophy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: It has become a symbol of economic and political tension between the federal government and the provinces, between users and carriers, and I submit it is incompatible with the political, social, economic, and geographical dimensions of Canada. Furthermore, it leads to discrimination and decreases opportunities for economic growth and positive regional economic development.

I turn, now, to the Hall report. I say to you, sir, that my party endorses the Hall recommendations not only as a transportation charter for the west but also as an economic manifesto. This being the case, we are deeply disturbed by the minister's foot dragging in implementing the major recommendations of the report. There are some 92 recommendations in all. Six have been implemented, four have been partially implemented, 24 are the subject of further study, and 58 have not yet been acted upon. The Hall report must be viewed as a total package, a total concept for the economic development of western Canada.

The minister acted with great haste in the area of branch line abandonment, but it is interesting to note that he proceeded at a snail's pace when it came to removing the anomalies as between freight rates on raw and processed products. He has failed to make an unequivocal statement with respect to the Crowsnest Pass freight rates and the way in which the government would handle the gap between the Crow rate and that which would be viewed as a fair rate for the movement of grain.

● (1542)

As I understand it, the Minister of Transport has not even invited Mr. Justice Emmett Hall to discuss the implications of his report. That is very disturbing. There are a number of major recommendations in the Hall report which must be implemented, and we as a party would implement them very quickly and work together with Mr. Justice Hall in implementing them. Far too many specific recommendations which would revitalize processing activity in western Canada, broaden and strengthen its economic infrastructure, are in that document to let it sit around and gather dust on the shelf. We feel very strongly about that.

In conclusion, I want to outline some directions and some initiatives which we, as a party, feel are important in terms of developing and implementing a national transportation policy. We believe that transportation is a vital instrument of national unity. We believe it to be key to balanced economic growth, and we believe that it must be a positive tool of regional economic development.

We believe that a new transportation act is needed to serve Canada throughout the eighties and on into the twenty-first century and to reflect the fact that transportation must be a positive tool for regional economic development. Transportation must respond to national, regional, and urban challenges and realities. It must recognize the necessity of further processing and manufacturing of our resources, particularly our renewable resources, in those areas where they are grown, produced or located. We believe that it is the responsibility and the duty of the federal government to define national transportation goals, objectives, and priorities. The federal government must provide leadership in this area. These goals, objectives, and priorities must be developed, however, through meaningful and continuing consultation with the provinces. There must be a permanent mechanism for this to take place because transportation is very important to every region of Canada economically, socially, and politically.

We believe that consideration should be given to the establishment of a council of transport ministers composed of the federal minister and his ten provincial counterparts plus representatives from the Yukon and Northwest Territories. We believe that this would serve not only as a mechanism for development of priorities in national transportation but—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to inform the hon. member that his allotted time has expired. He may continue with unanimous consent. Does the hon. member have unanimous consent to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Mazankowski: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and I thank hon. members for allowing me additional time. I assure the House that I shall not abuse this privilege. I simply want to confine my remarks to some initiatives and directions which we would like to place before the House at this time in connection with the motion we are debating.

We believe that such a mechanism would be very useful and helpful in developing priorities, goals, and objectives for national transportation but, more important, it would promote understanding and, I believe, would result in national support for any priorities and initiatives which may be taken and which have to be taken in the national interest.

Having defined the goals and objectives, the regulatory body, the Canadian Transport Commission, should have its role very clearly defined. It should be responsible for the implementation and execution of the national policy which is defined, and it should function with a minimum of political interference. We feel that this is needed to provide the degree of stability and certainty which is urgently required at this point in time in the transportation industry, because there has been too much political interference, political manipulation, and ad hoc measures. It is necessary to restore confidence in the transportation industry if we are to improve our productivity, the reliability of our transportation systems, and our technology. It is important to have that climate of stability and confidence in order to attract the kind of capital investment which will be required to develop and expand the systems we need in this country for the twenty-first century.

We hold in very high regard the importance of the regions of this country, and having regard to the regional needs and the uniqueness of the regions of this country we feel that consideration should be given to the establishment of a western and an Atlantic arm of the Canadian Transport Commission. This would provide an opportunity to respond quickly in meeting the regional needs and demands of users of the various modes. Furthermore, it would serve to speed up the regulatory process, which needs a lot of speeding up. It has become entwined in red tape and over-dominated by bureaucratic devices. That operation clearly has to be streamlined.

The act has to be clearly defined, and there have to be new mechanisms put in place for seeking and obtaining adequate redress for the problems which crop up from time to time. Such a mechanism would ensure that adequate and effective service is provided at a minimum cost, and would monitor and correct such things as freight rates, equipment supply, maintenance and modernization of plant and equipment facilities. We believe that this could be achieved without adding to the size of the existing Canadian Transport Commission. That would basically mean a regionalization of the operation to take into account the regional realities and the diversity of this country.

We feel that consideration should also be given to the establishment of a national advisory council on transportation, and that the users of all modes of transportation should be invited to participate. We feel that this is necessary so that the goals and objectives which are defined in a national transportation policy could be geared to the needs of users. We think that is very important, and it is something which has not been happening.

There has not been enough consultation in the development and administration of transportation policy. I see that the minister is smiling. His version of consultation is perhaps somewhat different from the version of hon. members on this side of the House. To hon. members opposite it is consult and "We will do what we want to do anyway". That is really not the way we describe consultation. We feel that the role of the Ministry of Transport should be reviewed and assessed with a view to reducing the monopolistic role which it now plays. That role often finds itself in a conflict of interest position. It was described adequately and appropriately by the Air Transport Association of Canada, which said that users view themselves as captive tenants of a monopolistic landlord. Airports are built and facilities are established by the MOT without any consultation, and without any advice from the people who use those facilities.

Mr. Lang: You are out of date.

Mr. Mazankowski: If I am outdated, there should be no problem in accepting the amendment to Bill C-4 which would enshrine the kind of consultative process which we think is necessary, and which, incidentally, is supported by all the users involved with the Department of Transport. You have accepted one, sir, and there is another one on the order paper. If the minister is saying they will accept the amendment which is now on the order paper in my name, I can assure him the bill will have speedy passage. The fact is, there is no appeal. Consultation is non-existent.

We think that MOT would do well to work toward divesting itself of its responsibilities in areas which might be better served by the private sector or by other levels of government. When you look at the conflict which arose with regard to the Edmonton International Airport, the desire to have new and better facilities there to accommodate the tremendous number of people who will be visiting that city during the Commonwealth Games, you find that the provincial government wants to help the federal government, but there is no co-operation from the federal government. There has been consultation, but there is no co-operation.

Perhaps other levels of government could involve themselves in supplying this kind of infrastructure, not deviating from the power and authority of MOT to lay down standards and of CTC to ensure that those standards are maintained, but there may well be another area in which we can expedite the development of our transportation infrastructure. We believe that immediate steps should be taken to stimulate innovation and to improve productivity in the transportation sector. The appropriate fiscal policy and incentives are necessary there.

We believe that steps must be taken to increase private investment in our transportation systems. We know that over the next number of years a huge infusion of capital will be required to provide the infrastructure and the equipment necessary to expand and to strengthen the basic transportation network to meet future demands.

Most important of all, what we need to get on with the job of building an efficient and effective transportation system is a climate of openness, a climate of trust, and a climate of co-operation. We have the most secretive government in the history of this country, and that is part and parcel of the problem. It is not only secretive, it refuses to consult, and it fails to co-operate. We believe that if we are to get Canada working again, if we are to get the most of our transportation system, we must do it together and, in order to achieve that, we must work together.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the motion moved by my good friend, the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski). One could think of another ten items at least to add to this motion, but it covers most of the ground.

The preamble to the motion states that the minister has sidetracked promises made by his own party and by his government in 1974. That is true and obviously plain to people all over Canada. They made promises that were glowing and that warmed the hearts of the public when they promised to abandon the outmoded freight rate structure and to remove regional freight inequities. They promised that rates at less than cost of service would apply in special cases, but instead they are trying to give us the user pay concept. They even tried to enshrine that concept in Bill C-33 in the last session, which, I gather, now is withdrawn as a result of opposition even from government backbenchers. Not only did they renege on those promises, but now they want to do away with the Crowsnest statutory grain rates, about the only benefit left to western Canada. They want to do away with the "at and east" rates on grain and flour shipments through the maritime ports, creating unemployment there, as if there were not already enough.

The federal government, with the capitulation of the Liberal and Conservative provincial governments in the Atlantic provinces, plans to tamper with the Maritime Freight Rates Act assistance. The government promised that not one railway branch line would be abandoned so long as the producers wanted to use it and the elevators continued to operate. What has happened to that promise?

About a month ago, for example, the Prairie Rail Action Committee—a little committee that was set up so that both the minister and the railroads can get their way, sometimes in spite of what the railroads want—recommended the abandonment of two lines, and everyone, including their railroads, the elevator companies, the producers, and the communities concerned, wanted to keep them. The Liberals promised a transportation information act to provide Ottawa with access to all information it needs to formulate freight rate policies, including companies' costs. We still have to rely on the U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission to find out how much the president of CPR is paid.

They promised a national freight car leasing corporation. We did not get it. Every day there are reports of some Canadian commodity unable to reach market because there is a shortage of railway equipment.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) promised to abandon the outmoded freight rate structure, one based on the competitive market place. What has happened is a greater reliance on market place competition and profitability, not a lessening of reliance.

The Prime Minister promised that a Liberal government would provide $290 million in urban transit assistance to provinces and municipalities. That promise has not been kept. The actual program announced last fall involves little or no new funding. They juggled the books. It will take $100 million from the commuter services program announced in 1975 but never implemented, and $130 million from the railway relocation and grade crossing fund. That is a program that needs more funds, not funds being taken away from it, but that is how they try to fool people into thinking that that promise of the Prime Minister was kept.

The Prime Minister promised to establish transcontinental excursion trains to supplement existing transcontinental services. That means more trains, not less. Instead, they plan to phase out one of the Montreal to Toronto to Vancouver services, or substantially reduce it.

The Prime Minister promised to bring into service high speed passenger trains to the central corridor. That was four years ago. The minister finally got around to getting some LRC trains ordered just in the past year. These high speed trains are a laugh. The train from Ottawa to Toronto still takes five and three quarter hours. It travels at an average speed of 48 miles an hour. Another train takes six hours and five minutes and travels at an average speed of 46 miles an hour. If that is the vision of the Prime Minister and of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) of high speed intercity trains, we do not need that kind of vision. That will not entice people to get out of their cars or get off short haul plane flights and get on to trains. It will militate even further against them wanting to do so.

VIA Rail, which I think had great plans and great ideas, has been stepped on by the ministry. It wanted to do a good job, but will not be allowed to do it. They will not be provided with the funding that is required to implement the Prime Minister's own promise. They do not intend to provide train service between Edmonton and Calgary. Although the Minister of Transport has announced that some LRC trains are going to operate in the west and in the maritimes, VIA Rail has not provided a commitment that these units will supplement existing passenger train service. We suspect that instead it will replace existing passenger train service in which there is also some reduction.

The motion of the hon. member indicates that the Minister of Transport has failed consistently to manage Canadian transportation policy in an efficient and effective manner. That is true, but also it is true of the old line party administrations which governed previous to this one. As long as pofitability and competition are the cornerstones of transportation policy, we will remain in the same mess with inefficient duplicate systems, energy wasteful systems, further lay-offs in our transportation industry, depressed regional economies, and regional disparities.

I find it passing strange that the official opposition would call upon the government to abandon its user pay policy, when those same hon. members advocate profitability and competition. In order to attain profitability and competition, it is necessary to maintain user pay. One cannot have it both ways. I wish hon. members of the official opposition would stop attempting to work both sides of the street.

The official opposition persuaded the government to amend the legislation to require Air Canada to operate in contemplation of profit. That can mean only one thing: reduced service to Atlantic Canada, the prairies, and outlying regions which do not have the volume of traffic to sustain a commercial enterprise or, in other words, where it is not profitable. My Conservative friends cannot have it both ways on that one either.

The Conservative governments of Newfoundland and New Brunswick not only agreed to allow the federal government to do away with passenger services, but agreed to let the maritime freight assistance act fall by the wayside. Canada does not need Tories. The Alberta Conservative government was not only opposed to letting rapeseed products qualify for the statutory grain rates, but suggested that domestic shipments of grain be taken off the Crow rate to Thunder Bay. The hon. member for Vegreville and his colleagues from Alberta should attempt to have that straightened out by the Conservative government in that province.

Activities are ongoing in the prairie provinces which cause me to want to move an amendment to the hon. member's motion. I am confident my amendment will receive approval from most members of the House. It is a worth-while addition, and I hope hon. members will agree with it. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes):

That the motion be amended by changing the period at the end thereof to a semi-colon, and by adding thereafter an additional paragraph:

(e) to reject the Prairie Rail Action Committee recommendations to close down the Liberty to Dilke and Eston to Lacadena rail lines, and to bring forward legislation to set up the Prairie Rail Authority.

The Hall commission made recommendations concerning these two particular instances, as well as a number of others. In the case of the Colonsay subdivision, which is a heavy grain line, the recommendation was that it should be maintained. The Prairie Rail Action Committee, which is a creature of the Minister of Transport, recommends that a significant portion of it should be abandoned. This would accomplish perhaps the aims of the minister, but both railroads feel that it should be maintained, not to mention the producers and the Hall Commission.

The affected communities have been betrayed, as well as the intention of the Hall commission recommendation. When I questioned members of the commission about this particular line I asked them, if this line was so important and should be maintained, why could it not be put into the basic network, instead of having it come under the Prairie Rail Authority. Their response to me was reasonable. They wanted it to come under the Prairie Rail Authority so that it would receive fast rehabilitation and upgrading, and then be transferred to the basic network. That is why the Hall commission recommended that, so that it would receive priority treatment in upgrading and then be returned to the basic network. Instead of that, the minister's committee recommended that a significant portion of it be abandoned, which betrayed those communities as well as the recommendations of the Hall commission.

The Prairie Rail Authority should be an essential tool for the rehabilitation of hundreds of rail lines in the three prairie provinces. Instead of that, the minister has a Prairie Rail Action Committee, which is designed to implement what the railroads and the minister wanted in the first place. After all the hearings, the consultations, and the fine work done by the Hall commission, it is being subverted in this backdoor manner which the minister and his committee chose. The same thing applies to the other subdivisions which were mentioned in my amendment. The people out west are worried that there is more to come. They are worried on good grounds.

The first vice-president of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, on April 19, 1978, said the following:

The pool may be forced into a greater degree of rationalization and consolidation than it would like in its country elevator system.

Mr. Donald M. Lockwood, the first vice-president of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, made that comment. That organization is the largest farmer-owned grain handling organization in the world. Also he pointed out that the pool projected the reduction of its country elevator system to a network of 600 operating units at 500 locations. Also Mr. Lockwood indicated that PRAC may go further than the pool had projected in rail line abandonment. Their plans for the construction of new, upgraded, and high throughput country elevators have been thrown askew. Now their planning has to wait. Their intentions to build and rebuild country elevators for their members and the grain producers at dozens of shipping points, are in jeopardy. This is because of the recommendations the Prairie Rail Action Committee has come up with already, as well as other ones which we are afraid it will make.

The Minister of Transport should reject those recommendations. Also he should assure us in a concrete manner that the recommendations of the Hall commission, in the main, will be implemented and that he is committed to them. If not, the Minister of Transport, his colleagues, and Liberal candidates will rue that day. Of course that day will be called election day.

If the minister does not provide an irrevocable commitment to maintain the statutory grain rates, we have news for him. I am not only referring to the maintenance of those rates, but also to an extension of them to apply to grain products. It is not a subsidy to western grain producers or the processors of our grain products. It is a benefit to the nation as a whole. It allows us to compete in the markets of central Canada and around the world. Because of our geography and climate, the nation as a whole should share in the cost of moving raw products as well as processed ones. There should be an extension of the statutory grain rate principle to other processors and producers of raw products in the prairie provinces, as well as in the Atlantic provinces and the other outlying regions of Canada. That is only fair, if these regions are to have further economic development. If these regions are to have a fair crack at the markets of central Canada, the United States and other countries around the world, we must not handicap them with a freight rate system which causes their costs to rise to a point where they are unable to compete.

What has the government done instead of that? It helped finance an oil seed processing plant in Windsor, Ontario. They do not even grow it there. What does that do to rapeseed processing in western Canada? I understand that that plant will be capable of processing soybeans, peanuts, sunflower seeds, and palm oil. This will mean that the western Canadian rapeseed producers will be played off against the American soybean producers. It threatens the rapeseed processing industry and the other oil seed processing industries in western Canada.

It is bad enough if the competition comes from other countries, but when it comes from within our own boundaries and harms people in a major portion of our country, it cannot be justified by anybody who would wish to do something about reducing alienation and increasing national unity. There is no reason why we cannot do this. The same should apply to our transportation industry when it comes to moving people as well as goods.

It has long been maintained that transportation companies should be publicly owned and operated. There are many instances in the transportation industry in which competition is taking place and it is not working. Such a position was even maintained by a former minister of transport. If you are going to maintain competition and profitability as a cornerstone, there must be discrimination against people and goods because of where they happen to live or where the goods happen to be produced. Unless we set up a transportation system that both cross subsidizes and directly subsidizes and equalizes transportation costs around this country, then that discrimination that we have been getting all these years is going to continue because the transportation companies will, quite rightly, say "It is not profitable and we are not going to do it." Because of this, another part of the country loses service entirely or has it reduced, and rates and fares go up to a level where the people who must use them cannot afford to do so.

What we need is a rail passenger service of a frequency and quality that will attract people out of automobiles and from short and medium haul plane runs. Those passenger services must be integrated, not only among the railroads but with other modes of travel such as bus and air. This scheme would allow people to buy a package of transportation with fast schedules at a reasonable cost.

I could not believe my eyes when I saw the proposal put forth by VIA Rail. To take one rail trip from Montreal to Regina one of the alternatives was to sit in the railway station in Winnipeg for nearly nine hours to make a connection to another train. That is really no way to improve railway passenger systems, and it will not entice people to get out of their cars and on to the train.

VIA Rail is being started off with a count against it. I believe the minister has already advised VIA Rail that they—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order. I regret to inform the hon. member that his allotted speaking time has expired. He may continue if he has the unanimous consent of the House. Does he have unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, as my colleague from Vegreville has done, I too will not abuse the kindness of the House in the few extra minutes that I have been granted.

As I was saying, the minister, his department, and the government have told VIA Rail that they will be unable to operate a rail passenger system across this country to the extent that they proposed. When the transportation committee heard the president of VIA Rail a number of months ago, he made a presentation to us that had us all delighted. We all complimented him and, indeed, we embellished upon it and promised him the support of the committee. Since then, however, there has been a steady erosion and reduction in the plans that VIA Rail has in mind. I would not blame the president, Mr. Roberts, if he resigned in protest tomorrow. In fact I would be willing to applaud him because it may be the kind of hit on the head that the government needs.

If VIA Rail is going to provide the attractive, efficient, safe, comfortable, and fast alternative in travel to the public it was meant to, it is going to require not only re-equipping but extra trains. There is no reason why we cannot be implementing, over the next two or three years, 125-mile an hour passenger trains on runs over 400, 500 and 600 miles in western Canada. It should already be in place between Quebec City and Windsor and it is not. There have been improvements in the Turbo, but it can be improved more and should be, if it is to operate at higher speeds. In a couple of years we should be looking at speeds of 150 miles an hour on the trackage we now have, provided there is some improvement in our signal systems and some curves straightened out on the roadbed. Generally, the trackage is capable now of taking trains at those speeds.

If we are going to reduce automobile travel and put an end to the nonsense of short-haul, commercial aircraft runs, in which money is wasted in the form of energy costs incurred in the use of airports which are in excess of what the public costs would be for high-speed, intercity rail passenger service, and down the road one or two years from now, if we are unfortunate enough to have a Liberal government, it may say, "Well, we tried VIA Rail and passenger business did not go up, so we are going to cancel some more". It is a self-fulfilling wish. If there is no incentive and no attraction for people to ride on the passenger train, then it can be reduced some more. That is the way the minister is setting it up. That is the way this government wants it, which is a tragedy as it does not serve the national interest as well as we think it should.

There are many other ways, Mr. Speaker, of making our transportation system in the area of moving people more efficient. There should be effort directed toward improving the use of ticketing, reservations, and downtown passenger terminals, which all modes of transportation use. The minister is perfectly aware of what we are trying to have implemented in Regina, and I hope we succeed. We hope to have in one terminal the bus service, rail service, the airport ticket office, airport limousines and transit stops all of which would orginate and terminate there. There would be ample taxi stands and private parking.

It is nonsense to have the Air Canada ticket office in the very prestigious Toronto-Dominion Bank building in Regina where there are only two parking places, and they are two-minute zones. The facility is cramped, and neither the public nor the employees like it, but there it sits. Yet, we have the railway station, most of which is unused, centrally located, with lots of parking. This is where Air Canada should be told to put their downtown ticket office, but instead they want to continue with that elitist attitude of having it in an expensive new bank building, which does not properly serve the people of that city. This is also the case in many other areas of Canada, and I only use Regina as an example. This is another area of deficiency, and I am certain that the bus companies and airlines would be willing to co-operate because it would reduce their costs and eliminate a lot of duplication.

The electrification of railway lines is another area into which we should be moving. I hope to get the figures soon, but I would guess that if you were to electrify the railway lines, the main and secondary lines between Thunder Bay and Rocky Mountain, the amount of diesel fuel saved would be equal to what our farmers in the west use to put in their crops. This would be a sensible innovation, and we have the capacity to produce the electricity for it. The cost of electrification would be approximately $100,000 per mile according to figures I can get from engineers. That is where the profit is—it profits the whole nation and improves our use of energy through a more efficient way to move trains, yet we are not doing anything about it.

We believe this kind of program for a 25,000 volt overhead electrification system on the main lines should be launched immediately, particularly on the prairies and through the mountains to the Pacific coast. That kind of imagination is required for the rebuilding and enlarging of our transportation systems. The present piecemeal, haphazard way of doing it—the continuous effort to make profitability and competition the priorities in transportation—these things are self defeating. They got us into the mess in the first place, yet the government and the Conservative party cling to the nineteenth century concepts in transportation that most other countries, socialist and capitalist, discarded a long time ago. This is the kind of fundamental change required in transportation in this country, but we are not getting it.

Many people thought the election promises made in 1974 by the Prime Minister would move us in that direction, but most of those promises have not been kept and, indeed, in some cases the opposite was done. It was a betrayal, and if the minister thinks the public will trust similar promises in the coming campaign he is just fooling himself. He will not fool Canadians.

Unless and until we have a government with the political will to make this fundamental change in transportation policy, and a more efficient organization, we will make no headway. We need buses that stop at every little town and take people 50 or 100 miles, trains that do not stop so often but travel at 125 miles an hour on 500 mile trips—if that is downtown to downtown it is almost equivalent to flying time. The train from downtown Ottawa to downtown Montreal takes less time than the flight, yet we have this nonsense of three or four engine jets wasting thousands of gallons of fuel on a flight of 120 miles. That is just stupid. The government seems to have no will to do anything about it, however, and I suspect a Conservative government would leave everything to competition and profitability.

This party would make a change. I believe we can provide transportation for people and goods while making the most efficient use of all modes, gaining the confidence of the workers on all modes, and providing a service on a shared pay basis. People will be willing to share the cost with their fellow Canadians—to share the cost of things like statutory rates for grain and grain products and for other primary and natural products from the prairies, the far north, or the Atlantic region. We all share those costs; that is called confederation. It puts an end to alienation and strengthens national unity.

The transportation policies of past years have contributed to the alienation not only of Quebec but of other regions of Canada. Surely this fundamental change must occur in transportation, because it is an essential part of a renewed and lasting confederation. It is an essential tool.

The gentlemen in power in the 1870's and the 1880's had more foresight than governments of recent years. They regarded transportation as a tool of national policy. At least they looked at it in that way in principle. If the Minister of Transport implements that kind of policy, he will have made, and will be applauded for, a real contribution to national unity and a stronger confederation.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. The House has heard the terms of the amendment moved by the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin).

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—TRANSPORTATION POLICY

The House resumed consideration of the motion of the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski):

That in the opinion of this House, the Minister of Transport has consistently failed to manage Canadian transportation policy in an efficient and effective manner and implement the promises of the 1974 election campaign, and the House calls upon the government to take positive action:

(a) to abandon the user pay concept and develop overall transportation objectives which will enhance national harmony, reduce regional disparities and promote balanced economic growth;

(b) to develop mechanisms which will encourage the federal government in consultation with all provincial governments to set national and regional transportation priorities;

(c) to clarify the mandate of the Canadian Transport Commission to ensure that the regional diversity of the country is taken into consideration in all decisions of the Commission; and

(d) to implement the major recommendations of the Hall Commission Report on Grain Handling and Transportation in the West.

And of the amendment thereto (Mr. Benjamin):

That the motion be amended by changing the period at the end thereof to a semi-colon, and by adding thereafter an additional paragraph:

"(e) to reject the Prairie Rail Action Committee recommendations to close down the Liberty to Dilke and Eston to Lacadena rail lines, and to bring forward legislation to set up the Prairie Rail Authority".

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think it is apparent from the speeches of the lead spokesmen for the Conservative party and the New Democratic Party how much progress has been made in the field of transportation in the last several years.

The hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) mentioned that my predecessor said we would be coming forward with a comprehensive statement in regard to transport, and he asked about that. I presume he has forgotten what has been a charter document, issued in June, 1975, and the basis in philosophy and analysis of many of the solutions we have since been applying to problems of transportation. In a few short years, what my predecessor described as a mess in transportation has been put right.

Further evidence is contained in the speeches of hon. members who preceded me. In saying what they would do about transportation they supported in almost every case the positive things we have done. When the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) calls for an integrated, intermodal transfer system, with common usage terminals, he is quoting one of our policy documents. When he says he wants the Crow rate retained he knows that I have made it very clear that any change in regard to that would have to reflect western interests and western analyses of the problems that may be created between grain and beef, and nothing else.

He says he wants to look at electrification. I presume he has forgotten that, just as the Hall commission was completing its report and recommending studies on electrification, we were already producing studies on electrification and that experimental work on it is in progress at the present time.

The hon. member for Vegreville has put his party's views in regard to the field of transportation. I presume he is unveiling his platform. He wants a permanent method of consultation with provincial governments. He has forgotten that we have set up with each region of the country a permanent form of consultation and it is exactly what those regions want, because it recognizes in most cases the problems to be faced are regionally analysed in a superior way. In addition, ministers of transport can meet whenever they want to. He says he wants the Canadian Transport Commission's role defined. The bill he talked out in the last session—he joined in filibustering—

Mr. Mazankowski: I never even spoke on it.

Mr. Lang: He also said that he wanted a western branch of the Canadian Transport Commission, enunciating what apparently is a platform policy he has taken from an announcement I made several months ago. That was our view as to what should be done in relation to the Hall commission recommendation that a prairie rail authority had exactly that kind of function and that kind of authority. We announced that was our intention and we hope to proceed in that way in the near future.

● (1632)

The hon. member for Vegreville wants consultation. Any organization significantly involved in transportation with federal jurisdiction involvement would agree that full consultation about changes we want to make or propose to make has been the order of the day these past several years. In many cases, as in the case of landing fees affecting light aircraft, we responded, and changed the form of the charge being made to meet the wishes of the people, who were, in that way, consulted. That puts the lie to the hon. member's suggestion that our view of consultation is to do what we intended to do originally.

The hon. member for Vegreville did refer to certain proposals that we had which we have not been able to carry out in full. He referred particularly to the urban transportation assistance policy where, instead of the exact program we had intended in the 1974 campaign, we produced an urban transportation assistance program worth $230 million over a five-year period. This includes a significant amount of $100 million of new money.

I recommend to the hon. member that he look at the nature of the program as it portrays our approach to transportation problems with the provinces and municipalities in this area where theirs is the prime responsibility. Under the urban transportation assistance policy we have set up, there is a great deal of flexibility for the provincial interest involved, speaking on behalf of its various municipalities to see its view expressed in terms of direct concrete results. In other words the federal government, in this case, has made available a specific amount of money for each province. It is basically saying that the provincial priorities in the broad field of urban transportation assistance are the ones that will determine how that money is used. This is an important step in eliminating red tape and the complexity in our assistance to municipalities and provinces.

We have produced, and it is on the order paper, a ports act to revise and completely put into a new framework the ports policy of this country. It is a ports policy which has been generally welcomed across the country, particularly by those who are most involved in ports. It is designed in keeping with our policy and our principles to give as much local autonomy as possible to vital port commissions for each of our great and important ports throughout the country. That would be our intention as soon as we can find the legislative time to go forward with that important piece of legislation. It is there, and it solves an important problem in regard to organization of our ports.

The fact of the legislation being there and not having been dealt with has not stopped us from moving ahead rapidly with major port improvements in Canada. Announcements, sod turnings, and opening of port facilities in Halifax, Saint John, Montreal, Quebec City, Vancouver and Prince Rupert, to name the principal east and west coast ports of Canada, have shown that these improvements have been carried out. These improvements, which total many millions of dollars, are extremely important.

We have moved forward on the issue of freight rates. This is something which a Conservative government only tackled by setting up a Royal commission. This Royal commission recommended certain formulae and an approach to rates that was basically free and competitive rather than controlled. This has not worked. We now intend to put this right by introducing controls on long and short-haul rates so that the short-haul rate cannot exceed the long-haul rate. We intend to put maximum rates in place. These are not just to apply to those who are technically captive shippers but to those who are charged too much in any case and in every case.

When this measure in the form of Bill C-33 was before this House it was clear that the Conservative opposition at least intended to take a long time over it, and we were not able to invest adequate time to see its passage. They made that stand clear to us in private conversation as well as their conduct in the House. I think it is particularly sad that western members were once again stopping an important matter of interest—

An hon. Member: What is his name?

Mr. Lang: —and vital interest to the west, just as they did in the case of stabilization—forcing us to take many more years to accomplish what we need to accomplish for the west.

That will come better after the next election if, as I expect, we will have more western members on this side of the House.

An hon. Member: No; we will be over there.

Mr. Paproski: We will be there and you will be here.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, the opposition likes to excite concern about the practical, sensible, financial approach to transportation—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: User-pay.

Mr. Lang: —that in many cases we try to apply. The hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Hnatyshyn) says user-pay. It is a phrase they like to use to mislead people.

We do not think it is right that those who ride on a bus should pay their whole way while those who fly or go by rail or go by automobile get subsidy support for their way of moving. In areas where we can support these various forms of passenger travel it is better if we leave the system even in terms of the way taxpayers' dollars are used, so that the person choosing a transportation system chooses it according to his own view of how he weighs the value of the privacy of his automobile, the economy of the bus, the additional comfort of the train, or the speed at the great cost of air travel.

What we should not do is abuse the taxpayer by using taxpayers' dollars in one way or another to induce a person to travel in a way he would not travel if he were making the choice on his own. That is what a sensible financing policy in regard to transportation means.

What it has meant in regard to our airport policy is that increasingly we do consult the airlines, and the spokesmen who have to market the service, about what is needed in regard to airport services. We find that when they know they will be accountable for the amounts that are spent, they suddenly become more practical minded in regard to the demands they make concerning facilities which should be put in place.

As long as it was simply the taxpayer paying for an airport facility there was not the same regard as there is now under the new policy. This will be demonstrated step by step, not by airports which were built while the old policy was in place, but those which are being built now. It will explain why we are not moving forward with major changes and rebuilding at the Ottawa airport. We have no present intention to do that on the basis of current indications. Instead we have found a modest way of making improvements which are desirable and sensible but at really very low cost. That is the kind of change which happens when one applies a principle of sense and responsibility to the financing of airport construction—

An hon. Member: What about Mirabel?

Mr. Lang: An hon. member has referred to Mirabel. Mirabel was built before the introduction of this policy. Even at that it is an airport which will prove to be extremely useful, as will the Calgary airport.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lang: We have seen in the last couple of years in regard to two of our great transportation Crown corporations a complete turn-around of a past practice of inefficiency. Instead there has been a move toward effective provision of service. Both Canadian National and Air Canada have reported profits in 1977. Payments of dividends on investments made by Canadians will begin. This is a reversal of the trend as was so often the case in the past when efficiency and good service were unimportant.

● (1642)

We do not intend to look over the shoulder of good management in those corporations, under pressure from spokesmen in this House on the opposition side who will want this or that done in terms of management, as though we should be running those corporations on a day to day basis. We continue to resist that, and produce instead a document in which good and effective service can be provided by Canadian National and Air Canada more and more, in full and complete balance, competitive with other companies in the same or other modes of transportation.

Hon. members have seen what has happened in our policy with regard to rail passenger service. We have announced an intention to give rail passenger service in this country a fair and full trial. To do so, we have made it possible, through our direct purchase and a purchase by VIA Rail, to acquire ten new train sets of the light, rapid, comfortable kind, which will be made in Canada and put in service in Canada to attract more and more passengers to the rail mode throughout this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lang: The ten sets will allow us to have that improved service not only between the most populous cities in the country, but on the transcontinental service from ocean to ocean. Under the new management, which is putting together a new form of marketing and a unified ticketing system, we want a rededication to attract passengers back to the rail mode, not with heavy subsidies allowing rail to ride on the back of the bus system, but more and more in a way to attract passengers out of automobiles into public transportation. We believe this is possible and sensible in our revision of service.

Hon. members referred to the movement of freight by rail. The hon. member for Vegreville asked what we are doing in that regard. The railways are ordinarily expected to make the major move with regard to the provision of adequate capacity as movements are projected and foreseen. The railways have been doing a fairly competent job of that. To assist them to assure they would do the job, in each of the last two budgets there have been significant changes and improvements in the capital cost allowance for the railways so that their cash flow might be improved. They responded with plans to expand more rapidly their capacity where they foresaw that freight coming about.

The big exception of the railway's capability to do what is needed for freight has been in the area of grain. There, as the Snavely commission has identified, the railways receive very little for grain movement compared to the cost of moving it. The Hall commission stated there is a call upon the government to do additional things in the way of financing to ensure that the railways have the funds, notwithstanding the continued existence of the longstanding statutory Crow rate on grain.

The government foresaw that before the Hall Commission recommendation. In our 1975 policy statement we made clear that where it is a matter of policy to maintain rates at a level below cost, the government should be willing to identify that policy and its cost, and pay the amount of money to the transportation system expected to bear the burden. Therefore, it would not have to pass the costs of that transportation system on to other people or, indeed, be inadequately provided for.

We responded to that spirit of need of an additional infusion of cash with the provision of 8,000 hopper cars for the movement of grain, at a cost of $255 million. Two western spokesmen speaking on transportation in the House today omitted to mention that very important investment, which was the first real important move toward improving our grain handling system in the way of capital and investment in some 40 years. I remind hon. members, with some dismay, that that includes a period of six years when the Diefenbaker government was in power. That western Prime Minister did not take any steps toward improving that grain handling and transportation system, except setting up one royal commission on transportation as a whole. We set up the Hall commission and the Snavely commission, and have been dedicating ourselves toward implementing their reports. In this moment of fiscal restraint we do not have the ability to move at once to pay to the railways what the Hall commission recommended, the whole of the difference between the Crow rate and what it costs to move grain. That recommendation was consistent with our 1975 policy statement.

What we did was immediate and of fundamental importance. The most important thing was to see that the railways went ahead with investment in those grain lines on the prairies which had been neglected. Within a matter of a few short weeks of the Hall commission report coming down, we transferred to the basic rail network the additional 1,813 miles which the Hall commission identified for that purpose, and we committed the first $100 million for the rail rehabilitation program in the prairie region. That is significant.

As a western member I am particularly pleased that, at a convention here in Ottawa in February, a resolution sponsored by the prairie provinces, under the leadership of Saskatchewan, was passed by that great Liberal convention of people assembled from all over the country.

Within a few short weeks that resolution, which recommended the allocation of $600 million for a further eight-year completion of the upgrading program, had been adopted as government policy. We were able to announce that in Regina at a cabinet meeting held there in March.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lang: After years and years of neglect, years and years of nothing having been done with regard to the grain handling system, we not only had the 8,000 hopper cars, but the commitment of the full amount of money required to put the basic rail network, all of the branch lines which will be progressively transferred into it, into first class shape, at least for the carrying of the fully loaded aluminum hopper cars, if not in every case the steel ones. That is extremely important.

We also did the engineering almost immediately on the connections of one line to the other, as recommended by the Hall commission. We found those connections are in each case feasible. In several cases, we will be proceeding with them. One particular one in Vegreville is already completed.

The western CTC which the Hall commission recommended is something we will be proceeding with in the next session of parliament. We knew we could not in this session deal with the whole of the issue of the prairie rail authority to which the Hall commission referred. Therefore, we set up its equivalent in the Prairie Rail Action Committee. It is equivalent in so far as the important powers are concerned, which is to identify those pieces of track within the doubtful category where the Hall commission had not identified their future, and where the committee could recommend the permanence of those pieces of track which they think should be permanent.

We have had some of those recommendations. They have given us certainty where uncertainty, as was left by the commission report, would not have sufficed. That is why when setting up the Prairie Rail Action Committee and moving toward resolving these questions, we put our proposals and our action before 30 or more groups representing prairie farmers and prairie municipalities. We have had overwhelming endorsement of what we are doing. Certainty is what was wanted, certainty, and the rebuilding of lines identified as permanent. That is what we have been doing.

I remind hon. members, particularly the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre, that we have in the Prairie Rail Action Committee recommendations a certain number of rail lines which that committee recommends be transferred to the permanent network. In several of those cases we have acted to move to transfer those lines and put them in our rebuilding programs. We have also moved to begin negotiations on the connections and the interchange of rail lines between CN and CP which was envisaged in the Hall commission report.

● (1652)

I want to remind the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre, who moved the amendment, that when he speaks of Prairie Rail Action Committee recommendations in regard to the section from Liberty to Dilke, from Eston to Lacadena, these are recommendations only, and would first have to be considered by the Canadian Transport Commission before they could be acted upon, and if, as I propose, we set up a western arm of the Canadian Transport Commission they will be considered and acted upon there, no doubt with further hearings so that the communities concerned can be heard. What we have done on the positive side is something he chooses to ignore.

We have accepted the recommendation to go ahead with the permanence of the line from Watrous to Liberty, the permanence of the line from Wartime to Kyle, and included those lines in the basic network and in the program for rebuilding so that they will not just be lines of steel on a map or on the prairies without the substance to carry cars, but be in solide, first class shape. That, I think, is something the hon. member should recognize at this point in time, rather than leave great concern in the minds of people in the area about what is being done.

The Hall commission recommended action with respect to Churchill and Prince Rupert, and in both cases we have been taking that action. Last week I announced programs of $5 million and more for Churchill in connection with the installation of lighting, dredging, and improvement of facilities at the port and elevator, and the rehabilitation progam, to which I referred earlier, including $1.6 million for additional sidings at Herchmer on the way to Churchill. It is the very thing which is required in order to increase capacity for the carriage of grain to that port.

In the case of Prince Rupert, as hon. members know, we have announced a proposal to spend $28 million on that port to improve grain facilities and to provide additional facilities. A further $11 million or more is to be spent on the improvement of existing elevators so that more grain can be handled there and, of fundamental importance, an investment of $16.5 million is contemplated at Ridley Island in order to prepare the way for private investment by the grain trade, perhaps, I am happy to say, with the co-operation of others. I foresee this happening in a very large way.

We recognize the challenges. We recognize the challenge of continuing to increase our freight capacity through the mountains, for instance, and we have responded with the budget changes to which I have referred, thus allowing some additional double-tracking of rail so that increased capacity will be there. We are responding in that way because we foresee, with what I believe to be realistic optimism, not only the record of grain exports which we have already assured for this year but growth by about 200 million bushels over that amount in the several years to come. That is extremely important news for the prairies and, indeed, for all of Canada.

With the expansion at Prince Rupert we will have additional capacity because, in the opinion of those expert in selling our grain, the Canadian Wheat Board particularly, the bulk of the growth in our exports will be shipped through the west coast ports. We are therefore taking action. We are not simply standing by to see what may happen and see what is needed.

I could go on and on about other subjects. I could refer to air travel which, with our initiative, has moved forward with charter flights and charter competitive fares, initiatives which have led to airlines in this country not just Air Canada but all of them, becoming more efficient. It will result in their having a higher level of seat occupancy for the good of the passengers. I referred to Air Canada's profits, Mr. Speaker. It is significant that this profit reflected directly an improved efficiency of operation. The fare increases which occurred in the period can be shown to reflect only actual increases in the cost of base operations and that profit, instead of loss, has come from the fact that with the same kind of basic operation, and perhaps even fewer flight operations, Air Canada has been carrying more passengers more passenger miles and is thereby becoming more effective and more efficient and is now able to offer lower fares, as well as showing a profit for the Canadian people.

It is the same with Canadian National. The profit is made by improved efficiency, by doing more things with fewer hands, it is true, and fewer inputs of investment, but still making a profit while carrying more freight more ton miles than in previous years when it showed losses.

The direction in which we are going gives one a sense of flavour of the important changes which have been made in transportation in the last several years and explains why it is that the opposition spokesmen from whom we have heard could only point to the direction in which we are going and say they agree that that is the way to go; their program and platform for the future will, in each case, follow programs and platforms which we have already adopted or implemented, or are well on the way toward implementing. That is why it is possible to say, Mr. Speaker, that transportation in this country is, every day, in better shape. The mess of old is behind us and we look to a brighter future in the air, on rail, on the roads, and in the water. Transportation in this country is in better shape every day, and will be continuing to get better as long as we can put these policies into play.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: I wonder whether the minister would be prepared to entertain a question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Well, there are two problems. First, the minister would have to accept a question and, second, his time has expired so he would need unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent for the hon. member to ask a question?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Mazankowski: The minister mentioned the railway rehabilitation program and referred specifically to the link at Vegreville. It is obvious he must know something about this and he may know that the link was built by CPR. Canadian National are going to provide the service but they refuse to put an engine on the track because of deficiencies in its construction. We, therefore, have a situation where CP has discontinued the service, CN refuses to put even an empty locomotive over that piece of track, the elevators have to rely on trucks to remove the grain, and there seems to be no mechanism in place to see to it that the line is put into condition to accommodate the traffic. As he is familiar with these conditions, perhaps the minister would be prepared to outline what mechanism is in place to ensure that the conflict is reconciled?

Mr. Lang: I think the hon. member has misstated the situation. There are complex discussions going on between Canadian National and Canadian Pacific about the appropriate relationships when there is a transfer of some rail sections from one company to the other. There will be larger transfers in cases such as the Gravelbourg line which is to be transferred from CN to CP, and the line at Watrous which is to be transferred in the other direction. In due course we shall be refereeing these matters. But at the moment there is no operating certificate for the connection at Vegreville and that has to be applied for. We shall ask the Canadian Transport Commission to look at that in an urgent way so that we can proceed. I have asked both railways to make arrangements in this regard, and I expect them to come up with a formula for dealing with these transfers. If not, we shall have to deal with them in another way.

[Translation]

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy that the motion moved by the Progressive Conservative Party concerns our Canadian transportation policy and blames the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) for having failed consistently, and I quote:

> ... to manage Canadian transportation policy in an efficient and effective manner and implement the promises of the 1974 election compaign, and the House calls upon the government to take positive action:
> (a) to abandon the user pay concept and develop over-all transportation objectives which will enhance national harmony, reduce regional disparities and promote balanced economic growth;

● (1702)

Of course, I shall not have the time in the few minutes allotted to me to talk about our three major transportation modes. I shall therefore speak only about the Canadian National and VIA Rail in the province of Quebec, as I am convinced that hon. members from other provinces can plead their own case easily. Mr. Speaker, in April 1977 we learned that the Canadian National had finally made its first profits in 20 years for the operating year 1976. In its annual report, the Canadian National said that it was optimistic about the future profitability of its business. When the CN management talk about profitability, I always hope they make the distinction between the transport of goods and the transport of passengers. The same report states that the profits of $11.8 million compared with the deficit of $16.4 million in 1975 are attributable to the vitality brought about by re-organizing the company in six operational divisions. It should perhaps be added that more vigorous marketing and the impact of the technological advances of recent years also contributed to this surplus.

We must now look to the future. We must analyse carefully what the future holds since the CN notes that manpower and equipment expenditures will continue to cause problems for some time. The solution suggested by the CN to solve future problems would be to restrict expenditures and boost productivity by increasing rates if need be and maintaining the user pay concept. It is not on this point that we disagree, Mr. Speaker.

We of the Social Credit Party of Canada have always told the government—and we believe this more than ever—that the major cause of deficit is the continuing increase in interest costs. Then, there is the multiplication of positions at the senior executive level and in all the bureaucratic sectors which are not profitable for the CN. The major cause of the CN deficit is the millions of dollars the company must pay each year for interest on the old accumulated debt and which would not exist if we had a logical financial system. The second cause is personnel that I consider unprofitable for the CN: to many employees behind desks and too few along the tracks to ensure adequate and permanent maintenance of the lines. In the past there were four linemen and one foreman for each eight or ten miles of track. Today two linemen cover 25 or 30 miles of track with three foremen, verificators, inspectors, whatever you want to call them. No wonder then we have so many derailments, which are very costly to the government and are due to a lack of maintenance personnel not to mention the fact that the trains are too long for the capacity of the tracks.

Regarding this subject, I wish to remind the House of the motion moved on November 28, 1974 by the member for Rimouski (Mr. Allard) calling for a royal inquiry commission on national railways safety. This inquiry has still to come and we still witness a doubling in size of the bureaucratic supervisory staff. Let us add to that the overcentralization taking place in Montreal for rolling stock maintenance. I have already mentioned that to the House and nothing has changed since because management keep having their coffee breaks in the comfort of their offices while the army of inspectors drive around in cars; they no longer dare ride in trains and, besides, all their expenses are paid for.

I can believe the report when it says that wages will continue to be an element of the over-all deficit, Mr. Speaker. There are too many senior officials who do not really earn their fat salaries, too few maintenance employees who can barely make ends meet. That is the real tragedy of the CN.

So long as we fail to eradicate the evil at its root, we cannot expect to get cost efficient transportation. How come, I ask you, the CP keeps on showing enormous profits while the CN has recorded nothing but deficits over the past twenty years? Is it due to the competence of the former and the incompetence of the latter? I do not think so, Mr. Speaker. The blame for all that rests squarely on our transportation policy which is solely geared to the cost-efficiency factor first; we are trying to achieve that by excessively inflating the higher echelons of that organization to a point where we actually lose track of its very foundation. In other words, the CN is a clear case of overplanning in the skies while forgetting the fact that the CN is still running down on earth. Could it be also that there is a conflict of interest within the CN management? I am seriously asking myself this question when I notice that some CN managers are also shareholders of or even belong to the CP board of directors.

Mr. Speaker, when someone's interest is outside his home, there are many chances he will neglect his own family by providing certain little advantages to his associates on the outside. How come the CP retains the best roads while enjoying the same financial benefits as the CN which has to serve locations where the CP refuses to go because they are not profitable? The whole population is seriously wondering about it. Most of the important producers of paper, lumber and other commodities such as grains are now complaining about a shortage of railways cars.

Mr. Speaker, for too long the Canadian National has invested billions of dollars in hotel construction, forgetting completely to renew and improve its rolling stock. Today we suffer from the disastrous effects of such an attitude. If the western provinces are complaining, I urge them to visit the province of Quebec where we are 20 years behind.

I think I have said enough about freight trains. I wish now to add a few comments on passenger transportation and more specifically on our new company called VIA Rail. I take this opportunity to salute the first president of VIA Rail, Mr. John Roberts, whom I had the pleasure to meet. I wish to tell him that we from the province of Quebec are expecting much from that new company under his direction and more specifically my area of Saguenay-Lac-Saint-Jean where I have been fighting in the last 15 years to obtain better passenger service.

Mr. Speaker, in recent years we have witnessed the closing of railway stations, public disenchantment caused by an unacceptable service to the extent that we were wondering if those responsible at the time had not sworn to abolish our only rail service between Montreal, Dolbeau and Chicoutimi. They even proposed an impossible day schedule that would be a disincentive to customers because of the late arrival time in Montreal. On February 28, 1977, I proposed a motion pursuant to Standing Order 43 on that matter that read as follows:

Whereas according to the new CN passenger service schedule becoming effective in early April, the only passenger train will be arriving into Montreal at 23:30.

—in the night—

Whereas at that late hour all connections with other trains is impossible.

Whereas according to that new schedule, three days and two nights will be needed to spend one business day in Montreal, that waste of time never having existed previously because the same trip is now made during the night; the implementation of that new schedule will cause serious prejudice to the travelling public in the area to the extent where the clientele will disappear,

I move, seconded by the hon. member for Abitibi: That the Minister of Transport exert immediately the required pressures with the CN president and Mr. Jean-Marie Beaulieu, general superintendent, to delay the implementation of the new schedule for six months, with a view to allowing local organizations to present their suggestions in that regard.

On April 4, 1977, I received the reply of the CN which reads as follows, and I quote:

You must have received a letter from Mr. Levasseur, advising you—

● (1712)

I shall spare you the opening paragraph of the letter in which I am thanked for the two letters I sent, one dated February 25, the other March 1.

You must have received a letter from Mr. Levasseur advising you that we have decided to keep the night train in service. Besides, on Friday, I sent a press release to the newspapers saying among other things: "The Montreal-Chicoutimi and Quebec-Senneterre-Cochrane night trains will be kept in service in both directions after April 24, contrary to what had been previously announced. The decision to substitute day trains for them has therefore been suspended pending further notice, and the present schedule will apply except for a few minor details".

Mr. Speaker, I refer to this specific case. I would have some twenty others because I have a very thick file on this question but I will spare the House because time does not allow me to read more.

I would like to read an article published in the newspaper La Presse of Montreal of June 2, 1977. It is about VIA Rail integration with other modes of transport. I quote:

While trying to revive in the mind of the public the use of the train as a mode of mass transport, VIA Rail Canada does not intend to work in an ivory tower. On the contrary, it wants to combine its services with other modes of passenger transport in use in this country.

That is the essence of a speech made by Mr. John Roberts . . . in March 1977.

The basic objective of VIA Rail, Mr. Roberts said, will be to provide high quality service suited to the real needs of Canadians. The tariff structure will have to help make it attractive while ensuring its viability from an economic standpoint.

Mr. Roberts recognizes that railway transportation has been clearly neglected and said that for about a quarter of a century, 95 per cent of federal expenditures for human transportation have gone to aviation and the road infrastructure. But, he says, the mistake of neglecting railway transportation has been recognized, and VIA Rail is precisely one of the means to correct it.

However, any attempt by VIA Rail to develop without taking into consideration the other modes of transport would serve to give official recognition to the fact that what Mr. Roberts calls comprehensive national planning has been neglected. Hence VIA Rail's desire to combine with other passenger services.

Talking about that planning, Mr. Speaker, when in today's motion, the government is being asked to take action to clarify the mandate, paragraph (c) of the motion says about that planning: to clarify the mandate of the Canadian Transport Commission to ensure that the regional diversity of the country is taken into consideration in all decisions of the commission. I wonder, Mr. Speaker, whether the CTC from now on will play its true role. I think that in the final analysis it has already started to play its true role based on the invitation they sent us recently. I would like to quote that invitation which reads as follows:

Find attached to this letter an order of the Railway Transport Committee of the Canadian Transport Commission advising you that public hearings will be held on dates and places yet to be determined concerning trains No. 170, 171, 172, etc., between Quebec City (Sainte-Foy) and Chicoutimi; Montreal and Chicoutimi; Chambord and Dolbeau; and Quebec City (Limoilou) and Rivière-à-Pierre . . .

The commission thus informs you in advance so you will have more time to decide whether you will be making representations and to prepare and submit those representations if you feel that you are a person, corporation or public body interested or likely to be affected.

While reading this, I cannot help wondering if this notice has indeed been sent to all Quebec municipalities, as I had suggested to the department, and to all Quebec towns, chambers of commerce and social organizations to advise them that such a survey would be carried out, because for many years now we have been urging the CN to consult the public. I think this is the first time we receive such an invitation, and I should like to mention here that the commission should send similar invitations to all public organizations involved which must use the railroads.

I see, Mr. Speaker, that the time I have is coming to an end, and I still have something to say about transportation in the province of Quebec. I limited my remarks to my own region, because I had something to say on behalf of my region, but I suggest there remains a lot to be said about the shortcomings of the passenger service throughout the province, in Abitibi as well as in the Gaspé area. I think that the consultations which the Canadian Transport Commission intends to hold will prove useful throughout the province, and we expect a lot from them.

● (1722)

[English]

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I should like to begin my remarks by stating to the House that I want to speak on the entire question of the grain industry and the movement of agricultural products out of western Canada, as well as on some of the things which have taken place under the aegis of the present government.

While listening to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) this afternoon, one thing Canadians must remember is that the present government has been in power since the early 1960's. The government has to accept the blame for what has transpired during that particular time. It cannot wash its hands of any past problems, and just look to the future. The government cannot indicate that it is sorry things are the way they are, and not provide any real solutions.

We must look at what has transpired since the 1974 election and the promises which were made at that time. We will draw the conclusion that very little has happened in terms of over-all transportation in western Canada. Some studies have been conducted, and a few recommendations have been implemented in connection with those studies. I give the government and the minister their dues, but very little concrete results have transpired.

Over the years the government has regulated rates in a fashion which has inhibited economic growth in the prairies, certainly from the point of view of processing and secondary manufacturing. It has allowed the entire rail system in western Canada to deteriorate to the point where it is struggling to keep up with exports at the present time. As a result of this deterioration and mismanagement, which has squandered millions of tax dollars, the government finally was forced into doing something. On April 19, 1975, the Minister of Transport announced the formation of the Hall commission to look at the entire situation of grain transportation in western Canada.

The Hall report was tabled in the House of Commons in May 1977. It contains some 92 major recommendations, ranging in scope from branch line abandonment, freight rates, to port facilities. It is a very comprehensive and carefully thought out report, designed basically to bring back some sanity to the system, and to attempt to implement the principles that form the basis of the original Crow rate agreement, which is adhered to in western Canada at the present time.

Nearly one year after the publication of this report, the government's response virtually has been to ignore most of the recommendations and the provisions in it. Of the 92 recommendations by Mr. Justice Hall, the government has acted fully on only seven. Another three have been implemented partially, and 24 others have prompted statements to the effect that they wil be studied further. Better than two-thirds of those recommendations have never been acknowledged by the government. Neither the minister nor his senior staff have undertaken to meet with Mr. Justice Hall to discuss his very, very important report. In fact, it is one of the most important reports to ever come out of western Canada.

The minister has so far refused to act upon one of the most important recommendations in the Hall report. I am referring to the recommendation which dealt with the freight rate structure and the principles upon which it is based. I should like to refer to page 534 of the Hall report, where Mr. Justice Hall is reported as saying the following:

> The production and processing of agricultural products should take place in the regions of this country which have a natural geographical advantage for such activities. Freight rates and other transport related policies should not destroy nor hinder these natural advantages.

It continues:

> The flour milling industry in Canada be permitted to enjoy the natural geographic advantage of locating in western Canada.

Virtually this recommendation is repeated word for word later in the report dealing with the rapeseed crushing industry, the livestock processing industry, and the malting industry. Each of these industries would be encouraged to locate in the west to be near the producers of their basic raw materials, if the government's transportation policies effectively did not bar them from being cost effective. In many cases it is the inequities of the freight rate structure which prevent these industries from providing the prairies with needed jobs and the foundation for a healthy economy.

In the area of livestock, one example came to a head in 1976. In that year Alberta effectively lost one of its most thriving industries, hog production. There were many reasons for this loss which left over 8,000 hog farms idle in Alberta, but one of those reasons is surprisingly simple but nevertheless tragic. It is cheaper to ship 800 pounds of feed grain to eastern Canada on which to raise a pig to shipping weight, than it is to ship the 150 pounds of pork which the pig produces. At the present time, Alberta imports a substantial amount of pork products from the United States, and ships pig feed to eastern Canada. Nowhere else in the world is there a country which grows its feed in one region and raises its livestock in another.

Similar situations exist in other sectors which were mentioned by Mr. Justice Hall. As a result of stop-off charges and discriminatory interest and storage charges, it is cheaper to ship wheat east to be milled and import the flour, than it is to produce the flour in the prairies. Similarly, these problems exist in respect of the malting industry. I should like to quote from the report once again, which reads as follows:

> Freight rates on malting barley continue on the statutory basis, and apply to both the malting barley and barley malt.

I emphasize that because one is raw material and the other is processed product. One of the clearest examples of the inequities in the government's transportation policy, if such a policy exists in any recognizable form, can be provided by referring to the case of the rapeseed industry. If ever there was an industry which enjoyed a locational advantage, it should be oilseed production. But that is not the case, in spite of the fact this crop is not really grown outside the prairies.

● (1732)

As recently as 1974 the Rapeseed Association of Canada was looking to the future with bright expectations. However, the rapeseed crushing industry in the prairies was not able to develop as fully as it might, because, once again, it was cheaper to ship the raw material to eastern and foreign markets than it was to ship the finished product, in spite of the substantial reduction in volume. By 1976 producers and processors alike were expressing serious concern about the future of the oilseed crushing industry in the prairies, and the origins of the problem can be traced simply to the fact that the Crow rate applied to the bulk shipment of rapeseed and not to the finished oil product. This fact makes it more economic to export seed than oil or meal, but at the same time thousands of jobs that belong in western Canada are being filled instead by workers in Japanese crushing plants. The federal government has stepped in with an interim subsidy program, but it is not good enough.

A recently published study of the effects of the Crow rate structure on the rapeseed industry by a group of economists in Saskatchewan concluded that the low Crowsnest rate and a high Japanese import tariff were holding back the rapeseed processing industry in western Canada. As partial relief in this area, however, the government would be well advised to take heed of Justice Hall's recommendation at page 536 of his report, namely, that the federal department of transportation and communications devote more effort to export market development for rapeseed meal and oil.

Nevertheless, at least one half of the problem is directly associated with the freight rate inequities between processed oil and meal and the unprocessed seed. The ideal situation would be an extension of the Crow rate to cover processed oil and meal combined with an elimination of the Japanese tariff. Hopefully the tariff question will be settled at the current round of GATT negotiations.

However, the study concluded, using 1974 figures, that if the tariff were maintained and only the Crow rate extended to cover oil and meal, the advantages to producers, processors and westerners in general would have been substantial in 1974. Rapessed oil consumers would have paid approximately $1.3 million more for the product. To offset that, crusher earnings would have risen an extra $907,000; grower earnings would have increased by some $3 million; the rapessed meal consumer would have paid nearly $900,000 less; and our foreign exchange earnings would have have risen by a dramatic $3.6 million. This represents a clear benefit of some $7 million but, more importantly, it provides support for the development of an industry natural to the prairie provinces—one that would provide needed jobs and contribute to the evolution of a stable western economy, which in turn would go a long way towards overcoming western dissatisfaction and what is commonly known as western alienation.

The Hall report dealt with a broad range of specifics and general problems relating to grain handling and transportation in the west. It demonstrated two overriding facts. The first is that the grain handling system has deteriorated immensely as a result of this government's misguided attempts at policy formulation. The second relates in many ways to the first, and putting it simply, this sorry excuse for a management team has not been able to devise a national transportation policy which allows for the development of an industrial base and a market system which would promote the processing of agricultural products in the west.

On this side of the House we have continually asserted the need for a rational transportation policy which would support and encourage regional development priorities. We have continually argued that since transportation is one of the most heavily subsidized industries in our economy, the Canadian people are entitled to a meaningful return on their substantial tax dollar investment. That return should be in the form of new and expanded industries which are based on the particular geographical, social and cultural advantages of our various regions.

Our transportation system should be a tool which will help us to build a stronger, healthier and more united Canada. Neither government regulations nor administration of our transportation system should result in road blocks which are placed in the way of progress, but this is exactly what is happening time and time again when one looks at western Canada. The government has allowed the grain transportation system to deteriorate to a point where it threatens the very livelihood of the prairie grain producer, and when it threatens that group it threatens the foundation of the prairie society and, in fact, has a certain spin-off effect on the entire nation.

This government's failure to act in any comprehensive or meaningful way with regard to the over-all transportation system in the west has produced chaos which has significantly retarded growth in the prairies and even in those areas which enjoy a natural advantage. We are at the point at the present time—certainly all of the blame cannot be laid on the transportation system, but it has a great deal to do with it—where we are going to be owing over $12 million in demurrage charges that will ultimately be paid by the farmers in western Canada. The demurrage is there because the grain cannot be moved to the Vancouver port in time to load the particular boats that are waiting.

With the exception of the expansion at Prince Rupert, not one of the seven fully implemented proposals involved any significant expenditures, although some reorganization is implied. The minister has done a good job of undermining the original effectiveness of these proposals. Instead of the prairie rail authority recommended by Justice Hall, for example, we have the Prairie Rail Action Committee, which is a watered down version of the Prairie Rail Authority, and is not what we on this side of the House would have liked to have had. The minister has not moved to implement Justice Hall's recommendation that the railways be compensated for the cost of moving grain by rail. As a result, the responsibility for maintenance and upgrading of those lines already in the network and those to be added still rests with the government through its branch line subsidy.

Shortly after the release of the Hall report, one of the minister's frequent press releases stated that he intended to encourage branch line rehabilitation with an initial "firm commitment of $200 million." This was less than one half of the $450 million recommended by Justice Hall in his report. To compound the confusion, it was not long before the minister had cut the $200 million in half, leaving $100 million earmarked for 1978. During the cabinet's recent roadshow to western Canada, the minister announced that $75 million would be made available for branch line improvement in 1979. So the amounts of money are certainly dropping, and this still does not add up to the minister's firm commitment of some $200 million. In fact, it represents a decrease from that recommended by Justice Hall.

More significantly, the branch line subsidy just is not working. The railroads are receiving too much of the taxpayers' dollars without having to account for the way in which those dollars are spent. The railroads really have the best of both worlds—subsidies plus grants to be spent as they wish. But not one cent of branch line subsidy in recent years has been spent on upgrading branch lines in western Canada.

We on this side believe, with Mr. Justice Hall, that the railroads must be compensated for the difference between the cost of transporting grain and the statutory rates. But then they must be responsible for retaining and upgrading the prairie rail network without further subsidy from Canadian taxpayers.

There is much more I could say about the inequities which have existed over the years and which still exist. They predominate in the minds of many westerners who seek a natural advantage in terms not only of growing the product, which they do so well, but also the processing of that product and shipping it to other parts of North America and the world.

The government must realize that secondary manufacturing is needed very badly in western Canada. Without it we will have alienation and frustration. Proper transportation policies would be a way to alleviate this very troublesome aspect of life in western Canada.

Mr. Cliff McIsaac (Battleford-Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, I was pleased to note that the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Murta) agrees that the present branch line subsidy program that has been in effect for a number of years by virtue of the National Transportation Act passed in 1967 has not really worked. The railroads have taken the money and put it into general operating revenue, but they have not applied it to upgrading the various lines for which the funds were paid. That is one of the reasons for the government's policy—to make sure that a work program in connection with the rehabilitation spending is applied to specific lines. It is for that purpose alone that federal funds go to the railroads. That is one point on which we can agree with the hon. member.

I am sure the hon. member for Lisgar knows very well that the problems he alluded to in his remarks regarding the pork industry in Alberta, the beef industry in western Canada, flour milling, meat packing, rapeseed crushing and other related processing industry problems, are not solely the result of transportation policy or lack of it. Things are a great deal more complex than that. Since we have an 1897 rate that has not been adjusted for the last few years for the raw product, while the other rates have been allowed to change and adapt to the rate of inflation, it is obvious that there will be problems. As usual, my hon. friend opposite did not offer any concrete solutions.

This government shares his concern but I think we have made real progress in implementing the thrust of the Hall Commission report on these and other major issues of importance to western Canada.

The motion before us seeks to keep alive a number of the myths that the opposition continue to propagate in regard to transportation policy. My hon. friend opposite, who is my neighbouring member in the province of Alberta as well as opposition critic and whom I consider to be an excellent member, very knowledgeable about transportation, said some things today that no doubt were due to the over-zealous writing of his caucus research staff. He spoke of the lack of effort by the government in this part of the country. Mr. Speaker, he knows full well that this government has made more progress in the last three or four years than any government in the history of the country in addressing some of the very real problems of Canadian transportation policy.

Dozens of examples can be cited to demonstrate the efforts of the government and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) in that respect. There are the selective freight subsidies paid on commodities moving in and out of the maritimes. These have been worked out with people in the maritimes and have evolved as a result of policies brought forward three or four years ago. Committees of transport ministers exist in the maritimes, western Canada, Quebec and Ontario. The hon. member said he was in favour of approaching these problems on a regional basis. That is what the present federal and provincial committees do—they recognize regional differences. Support is given to ferry services on the east coast and the west coast; air facilities have been improved and expanded; we have developed not only a fully consultative mechanism but a new ports policy, and new container terminals are operating, are under way or have been announced in practically every part of the country. Improvements have been made and issues addressed.

The question of passenger rail service was raised in this House yesterday and again today in this debate. Highway agreements have been developed and are in operation across the country. There are two or three in western Canada. There is the highway strengthening program for the prairie provinces with over $20 million paid to the province of Saskatchewan, more than that to Alberta and a similar amount to Manitoba. The money is given by the federal government at the request of and with the co-operation of the provinces to upgrade the standard of highways so that load limits can be raised and made uniform from British Columbia to Ontario. This will allow highway transportation to develop with greater uniformity across the country.

Another agreement which is of particular interest to me and other members from western Canada is the western northlands agreement. I am sure that hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) will be familiar with that in general. An agreement has been signed with each of the three western provinces. An interim agreement has been completed with Saskatchewan for an expenditure of $35.6 million for transportation, roads and community access roads in northern Saskatchewan. There is a similar program in Alberta and a larger, more comprehensive program in a long term agreement with Manitoba. These are specific and concrete examples of programs designed to meet regional needs in this country which have been enunciated by members of parliament, provincial spokesmen and other interested groups.

There has been a real need to develop transportation networks and links into isolated communities in Saskatchewan. There was a contribution of $9 million odd dollars in federal funds to Highway No. 2 from Montreal Lake to Lake La Ronge, $2.3 million for Highway No. 155 from Green Lake to Beauval, and $5 million for Highway No. 135 in the Creighton area. These communities have existed in the north for a long time, are out of the main stream, and have been brought in by these programs. The community access road to Stanley Mission, the oldest community in Saskatchewan, received $1.7 million. A community access road was constructed there last year for the first time in its history. Similar programs have been operated throughout a dozen communities across Saskatchewan, including even airstrips.

● (1752)

Toward the end of the remarks made by my hon. friend, the hon. member for Vegreville, he elaborated to some extent on the platform of the Progressive Conservative opposition. As usual that party is anxious to implement the Hall report, being very careful to be non-specific about that, not to spell out what they are going to do and when.

An hon. Member: You will hear about it.

Mr. McIsaac: Secondly, they are anxious to make use of transportation as a tool in rectifying or remedying regional disparities in this country. This is exactly what this government has been doing, and it has been succeeding to a much greater degree than has ever been the case before.

If I heard my hon. friend correctly, his party would modify the CTC to establish a western arm, as the minister has already announced. My hon. friend was good enough to enlarge on that by saying that he would like a maritimes arm as well. That is a good concept and he will have no argument from the government in that respect. But, again it is policy which has been announced by this government and by the present Minister of Transport.

The opposition are talking about a huge infusion of funds that will be required. As one listened to the hon. member for Lisgar, particularly it appears it will be a very large infusion. I believe fiscal policy was also mentioned. I am not sure if my hon. friend was here, I think he was, but in the last budget a new policy was introduced providing for a faster write-off of railroad equipment. This is designed to encourage railroad rehabilitation and an updating program which this government has already embarked upon.

An hon. Member: Five to ten years too late.

Mr. McIsaac: After nine years of study by the Progressive Conservative commission of years ago, that still has to be their record in transportation. That is all we can compare it to. We have nothing more than that rusty old record of that royal commission dealing with transportation from the last Conservative government of this country. I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that Canadians both from the east and the west will be looking at that record of theirs as opposed to the record of this government in the field of transportation in the various areas that have been dealt with.

I had to smile at a point made by my hon. friend. The Conservatives wish to generate an attitude of trust and confidence. That has to be a first. That is the one I could certainly endorse. In my short time here, and elsewhere in public life, I have seen the Conservatives excel at generating an attitude of mistrust across this country, whether it concerns transportation or any other issue. I was pleased to hear my hon. friend from Vegreville say that they wished to generate an attitude of trust and confidence. I am sure he would want to see that happen; he has the opportunity to begin now.

He could have begun sooner to implement and generate trust and confidence from one end of this country to the other. That certainly has not been demonstrated in transportation policy, grain policy, fiscal policy, tax policy or any other subject or field one might examine, if one listened to the remarks made inside and outside of this House over the last couple of months. So that is a very welcome change.

I think it is worth noting for the record the achievements of this government with respect to implementing the Hall commission report. I would remind my hon. friend opposite that it was this government, the Department of Transport and the present minister, when he was minister in charge of the grains group and the Canadian Wheat Board, which established the Hall commission to look at and deal with the whole complex question of improvements in the grain handling system of western Canada. That commission did an excellent job throughout western Canada and elsewhere in looking at and assessing the problems and making recommendations. The commission did a great deal to allay the fears and concerns which have been there, and genuinely so, for many years.

What did the government do upon receiving the Hall commission report? Within 11 days—and this has to be something of a record for any government, be it a municipal government, provincial government or otherwise—an order in council had been passed which added 1,813 miles of prairie rail lines. This addition was recommended by the Hall commission to the basic rail network. It increased the total to some 14,000 miles, which was about three-quarters of all prairie rail trackage. In other words, there was no more fear or apprehension about abandonment, of elevators being closed or lines closed, over three-quarters of the prairie network. That was accomplished within 11 days. That certainly has to be the main thrust of that report.

Another 2,344 miles that were suggested should be transferred to the jurisdiction of a prairie rail authority were protected from abandonment until January 1, 1979. Again that portion of the rail lines examined by the Hall commission and sort of left in limbo was set over until such time as it could be assessed, looked at and categorized one way or the other into a permanent network or abandoned.

The question of prairie branch line rehabilitation has been alluded to by both of the hon. members opposite and by the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) as being something which is still a long way off. There is evidence that work has proceeded on a number of rail lines right now in the prairie area and money has been budgeted. The work program is lined up.

Perhaps it might be worth putting on the record of the House of Commons some of the projects that are either under way or scheduled for this particular year. They are: Swan River to Sturgis; Delisle to Beechy; Delisle to Dunblane; Dunblane to Elrose; Glidden to Alsask. I have about four or five pages of these projects covering every part of the three prairie provinces. Vegreville, Alberta, is mentioned; the hon. member referred to problems there. There is another line going out of Vegreville that is scheduled for revamping or new ties. There is another one out of Lloydminster into Alberta which is scheduled for new ties this year. Both the lines from Kerrobert to Rosetown and Lloydminster to Wilkie involve new ties and renovations.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member still has three minutes left of his allotted time. I suggest that we do not see the clock for that three minutes. We could allow the hon. member that time and then give the floor to the next speaker and call it six o'clock. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. McIssac: Mr. Speaker, I have just a few brief comments in conclusion. The NDP spokesman today, along with other representatives of his party, will have to devise a new version of a transportation policy for western Canada. For the last good number of years their sole policy in transportation has revolved around the fears and apprehensions of massive rail abandonments across the prairies. The implementation of the Hall commission report and the study itself has put the rest those old fears that have been developed and fanned by harangues from many an NDP spokesman, both federal and provincial, over the years.

The hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre in this debate today resorted to a good ploy from his own point of view; he expressed concern for the line in his own area. There are some lines where there has been and will be abandonment. Above all, there are many lines, many communities over the prairie provinces today, by far the majority of the total geography affected by rail lines, where that uncertainty has been cleared away. There is no longer any uncertainty. That has been the most positive achievement of the Hall commission in my opinion and, indeed, of this government in dealing with that particular question, plus the major commitment to rebuild, upgrade and renovate the entire branch line network.

● (1802)

That is a major beginning and a major part of any transportation improvements in the entire grain handling network, to go along with the various other things that I am sure other hon. members will be referring to in this debate.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain).

Mr. McCain: Thank you for your recognition, Mr. Speaker. May I call it six o'clock?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being after six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock tonight.

At 6.03 p.m. the House took recess.

● (2002)

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, it was interesting to listen to the hon. member for Battleford-Kindersley (Mr. McIsaac) as he outlined the progress, so-called, in the west in the field of transportation. He had the courage, or lack of it, to venture into the Atlantic provinces and tell us how good they had been to him. But, Mr. Speaker, he never rode the rails from Port aux Basques to St. John's, Newfoundland. He never got on the ferry from Cape Breton to Newfoundland. He is not aware that there was a time when the government regulated transportation in such a way that it was possible to ship steel from Sydney pretty well across Canada and make money at it; that there was a time when we could ship a number of products from the maritimes to central Canada. That was the good old time. Nowadays freight rates are so high that we have been obliged to seek other markets.

There is no need to review the position of the steel company on Cape Breton Island to find out how it is doing under this government, because that is done on a regular basis in the House. Among the reasons which have led to the affairs of this company being in very serious shape, along with others, is the level of rates which have been imposed. Contrary to the intention when confederation was entered into, rates have been imposed which have precluded the maritime provinces from the Canadian market.

The hon. member spoke at some length about the moneys the central government had provided to the provinces. But he did not tell the whole story, and unless people read other contributions to this debate they will be seriously misled. What the hon. member did not say was that every time the minister held a lollipop out to the provinces what he said to them, in effect, was: "You can have it if you put another one with it, but if you don't have another lollipop you won't get this one".

One might, for instance, review the $100 million or the $130 million—I was not quite clear as to the amount when he had done garbling it out—which he proposed to give to the Atlantic provinces toward the rationalization of transport services. But when the provinces began to deal with the minister they found the terms were extremely expensive. They found that he would not give the Atlantic provinces anything unless they matched it.

In the field of transportation, and particularly as it relates to highways, on which most of this money will be spent, the Government of Canada was in the habit of offering to provinces in eastern Canada and in certain cases in western Canada a 90-10 federal-provincial program or an 80-20 federal-provincial program; but when the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) started to deal it out, he dealt it out to the provinces on a 50-50 basis, and he said, "If you have another lollipop to go with this one, we will give you the one we have, but under our terms and conditions".

This means that by the time a province buys a right-of-way to build certain highway connections which are necessary, under this program the province will spend $60 for every $40 spent by the federal government. I submit that if this Santa Claus pulled off his mask, Jekyll and Hyde would be revealed. The minister did not tell us that the railroad on Prince Edward Island has got to such a state that it is doubtful if five years from now there will be trains moving on it. I am not aware of any grant—and I am sure the minister did not miss any—which is going to be given to P.E.I. to recondition that rail service.

The minister sounded as if he was going through a batch of Liberal promises to local constituents. He sounded as if he was trying to save his own conscience, sweeten the disposition of those scattered across the prairies and other parts of Canada and cajole them into voting for his party. However, when you start describing a situation in which you are putting in new ties, you are talking about railroad maintenance, and that goes on every month of every year under every government. The minister certainly got down to the nit-picking level when he started to brag about that.

The transportation structure as it exists in Canada has been getting some attention as election year approaches. Whether the election is this year or next only one man knows, but as it approaches there are ad hoc solutions to the transportation problems of Canada. Some specific problems have been attacked, but basically it has been an ad hoc program without rationalization. The government has chosen to buy many rail cars for the west. I do not quarrel with that, if that is the right approach, but why has there not been a rationalized program to examine equipment shortages which exist across Canada and not just in the area of Canada in which the minister lives? That is not good enough.

I would like to cite another example to which perhaps the hon. member for Battleford-Kindersley should have paid a little attention. The minister has been giving much attention to the new ports policy. The hon. member for Battleford-Kindersley said that the government is looking at the east and the west and having meetings here and there, but what happened? All at once the east and the west met without the minister, and they found that the minister had gone to the west and said that the eastern provinces agreed with the government's ports policy. When the east got out west and heard what the west had to say, the east found that there were ten provinces in Canada, none of which agreed with the ports package.

They all disagreed with it because they felt that they should have a voice in their own destinies with regard to the ports of Canada. They pleaded with the minister to be represented on the various ports boards which would be appointed, and he said no. The premiers of Atlantic Canada then sent a letter to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) telling him that they wanted to be represented on the boards which are to be appointed and to have a say in the management of the ports of eastern Canada, but the Prime Minister said no.

The destiny of Canada and of particular provinces rests with the decision-making process with regard to ports policy, and the provinces will have no say. The provinces have had no say about rates and little, if any, about VIA Rail. There has been practically no consultation, but much dictating, with respect to expenditures of so-called joint moneys by Ottawa, and we just do not have a transportation policy. This government has not been capable of analyzing either the needs of shippers or the capabilities of carriers.

Does the government know that when a certain commodity group met with the railroads it found that it took 24 to 28 days for a round trip of less than 500 miles for one car? Why should the Government of Canada buy cars for a railroad which cannot make a round trip of 500 miles in less than 24 to 28 days for one car? Why should the government buy cars to transport any commodity when a railroad as a competitor takes 18 to 20 days for a 400 mile round trip journey for one car? If we buy cars for this outfit, we are buying cars for the outfit to park without knowing the substance of the problem with which we are trying to deal. We are trying to deal with it from the wrong end. Under this man's policy we do not know what it costs the railroads to carry a car of potatoes from Prince Edward Island, a car of fish from Newfoundland or a car of wood pulp from New Brunswick to any destination.

If the minister has this information, it is secret and will not be divulged. These questions have been asked in the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, but we in Atlantic Canada do not know whether we are being charged what the tariff will bear or a fair rate; and neither does anybody else in Canada because the CPR does not have to account, as Bell Canada does. The CNR does not have to account for its charges, as does NB Tel. We pour subsidies into an operation, the mechanics of which we do not understand. That is not a policy. There has to be service, and at the moment we are not getting it.

I remind the House that we have been having problems at the port of Saint John. The only way the ports of Saint John and Halifax can be expanded is if the provinces and municipalities put money into federal works which they will never own. The provinces will never own them, but they have to put money in. I do not want to be misunderstood by any member of this House. I do not begrudge the St. Lawrence Valley the policy that the Government of Canada is exercising, but I want the same policy in New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McCain: The government is selecting its political plums and spending its money in an unjust fashion, which brings about disunity in this nation. That is discrimination of the rankest kind. We are talking about the CNR and its recapitalization. We are going to double track through the Rockies, fix tracks across the prairies and examine tracks from Quebec City to Windsor; but when the president was asked what is scheduled for the maritime provinces, he said that everything is great down there and that we do not need anything in Prince Edward Island, Newfoundland, New Brunswick or Nova Scotia. He told us there are no plans for that area.

That is the policy which the hon. member for Battleford-Kindersley praised to the sky. That is the Santa Claus of the Jekyll and Hyde type. When the minister wears his beard, he is the true Santa; but when he pulls off his beard, we see the other discriminatory personality. That is typical of this government.

There is another matter which must be rationalized. We must operate on a competitive basis. Let me give an example. In the last five years the freight rate on grains from Thunder Bay to Woodstock, Ontario, has gone up 30 per cent. Members opposite from Quebec should be interested in this. I think they were present when it was discussed. To Sherbrooke, Quebec, it has gone 80 per cent, and to Moncton, New Brunswick, it has gone 90 per cent. And this from the minister who claims he has a transportation policy for Canada! When the rates from Thunder Bay to Woodstock, Ontario, are raised up to 30 per cent and from Thunder Bay to Moncton up to 90 per cent, is that a good transportation policy for this country? It is discrimination, lack of judgment and lack of understanding. I suggest it is ignorance of the things that are going on.

● (2022)

In the Atlantic area we have a regional air carrier which served in good faith points which were not economically viable on the advice of and with aid and direction from the government. They were assured that a certain subsidy would be paid them if they would serve these particular points of interest to the Government of Canada, and to all of Canada for that matter. What did they find? Inflation came along, the subsidy remained constant, there was no indexing of it, no increment in it, the company lost money. On top of this there was lack of rationalization again, because in those routes which were then profitable for Eastern Provincial Airways, Air Canada paralleled and inconvenienced them. They did everything they could to take the business away from them.

It is no use improving the tracks in the prairies, it is no use improving the tracks from Quebec to Windsor, and it is no use improving the tracks from Quebec to Saint John, for that matter, if you do not understand the problem. What is wrong with this government's transportation structure is that they do not understand the problem, and I want to tell the House why. You cannot approach a subject as complex, complicated and meaningful to all of Canada as is transportation to this country, by pulling people out of a hat or from the Prime Minister's office to lay down policies for Atlantic Canada, how much subsidies you will give to the prairie provinces, and say that this should be a good plum for this area or that area, and it should make them happy politically so they will vote for you. Whether it is land, sea or air transportation, there must be rationalization.

For example, you cannot have recapitalization of the CNR when it can be established, in spite of evidence which was presented to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, that the trucking companies owned by CNR are getting advantages in the piggyback service which are not extended to their competitors. This can be established, contrary to the evidence which was given. I do not think we should recapitalize that structure until we are guaranteed in an unqualified way that the competitive structures will not be placed in a position of disadvantage because we forgive the debt of $808 million to the CNR.

I have to say to you, Mr. Speaker, that I do not believe there is anybody in the House at present who, in spite of the Hall report, the work which the committees have done and the time which the minister and other hon. members have spent, really knows just how a proper transportation program from eastern Canada to western Canada and all the points in between can be put in place. But I can tell you that we are not shipping lumber products out of New Brunswick by Canadian National Railways; we are trucking them from the mills to the U.S. railroad companies, which are taking them to markets in New England and farther down into the states because our rails, which are beside the mills, have a subsidiary just across the border which will take the products to the New England states and to other American points at a price that is lower than the price at the mill, a price that is so much lower that you can truck them to a main point and put it aboard the U.S. railroad.

I said this in the House on another occasion and somebody across the floor yelled that the U.S. railways are subsidized so they can do this. Let me point out that Mr. Bandeen, president of CNR which owns three subsidiaries in the United States, told the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications that he is not aware that any of his subsidiaries are receiving any subsidies whatsoever for the normal service which they provide in the United States. So this shoots down that balloon.

Atlantic Canada wants to know why rates in Atlantic Canada are not competitive with rates in Maine. We want to know why rates to Atlantic Canada have gone up by 90 per cent while they have gone up by only 30 per cent to Woodstock, Ontario. We want to know why, when you take the beard off Santa Claus, you find Jekyll and Hyde. We think we deserve a reasonable break in the ferry service to Newfoundland, for the transportation of potatoes to central Canadian and other markets and for the transportation of potatoes to export markets, for fair competition within the competitive structure in transportation which exists between rail and road, for an open policy, an open rate structure, a known quantity with which we can deal and with which we can come to an understanding. The hon. member for Battleford-Kindersley should take off the blindfold and go back to the veterinary service which he understands so well and about which I know nothing.

Mr. William Rompkey (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, I am quite happy to follow my colleague the hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain), who has given us the down side of transport in Atlantic Canada. Possibly I can balance the record on that score for that particular region.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Bring back the Newfie Bullet.

Mr. Rompkey: We have new highways and new buses to replace the Newfie Bullet. The Newfie Bullets are on this side.

An hon. Member: Bunch of duds!

Mr. Rompkey: I am quite happy to speak on this motion in one sense, but in another sense it seems to be a waste of debating time because this motion is quite erroneous as it applies to Atlantic Canada. I do not know if it is intended to apply to Atlantic Canada because I notice that towards the end it says:

> . . . to implement the major recommendations of the Hall commission report on grain handling and transportation in the west.

A couple of studies have been carried out in the east also. I do not know if the opposition is aware of them, but they are certainly not mentioned in the motion. If the opposition is concentrating on the west rather than on the Atlantic area, that is understandable because, after reading Charles Lynch's columns and having come back from the west, I know that there is a great need for the opposition parties to pay attention to the west. They certainly cannot take the west for granted and they need to come up with some policies for western Canada.

Mr. Paproski: Yes, keep on listening to Charles Lynch.

Mr. Rompkey: I suggest to opposition members that they should start developing some policies for Atlantic Canada also.

I also want to point out what might be a pattern of development for such a policy. The motion states that the government failed to implement the promises of the 1974 election campaign. I invite opposition members to examine the Atlantic Liberal manifesto of the 1974 election campaign. I do not have it with me. Do you know why? I filed it away far back because we in Atlantic Canada know that it has been dealt with.

An hon. Member: Empty promises.

Mr. Rompkey: Eighty per cent to 90 per cent of the commitments made in that Atlantic Liberal manifesto of the 1974 campaign have been dealt with. If hon. members opposite have a copy of it, I invite them to spread it around to their colleagues because the facts speak for themselves.

The second part of the motion refers to the abandonment of the user-pay concept and the development of transportation objectives which will enhance national harmony, reduce regional disparity and promote balanced economic growth. I want to set on the record some of the policies that this government has carried out in Atlantic Canada to achieve those aims and objectives. I will have to read because I cannot remember all the facts and figures. There are a myriad of them, and they are substantial. I want to refer to the government's record in transportation in Atlantic Canada.

Last year the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) announced a $125 million transportation program aimed at improving services and facilities over the next three years. Approximately $100 million will be spent by the federal government to improve highways in the four provinces. Only last week the federal government and the province of Newfoundland announced a formal agreement on a three-year $60 million highway improvement program in that province. We have been scored because it is 50/50 and not 90/10. How many 90/10 agreements can there be?

There is much to be done in Atlantic Canada. I do not think the federal government has been niggardly in its agreements in the past. In addition to the $60 million, which was formalized in Newfoundland last week, I suspect the total is something between $60 million and $70 million of DREE money which has gone into the establishment of trunk roads and major highway building programs in Newfoundland. If that is added together, the total amount is over $100 million in one province alone, most of which was 90/10. That is a record the government can be proud of.

We have not built all the highways that should be built. I will not be satisfied until there is a highway across Labrador. Last week the Minister of Transport was in Labrador to talk about that very subject. I hope some funds are found in the future to aid the province of Newfoundland in carrying out that project. Is a 90/10 agreement user-pay? It is not. It is the taxpayers all across Canada providing the funds for the federal government to assist provinces which are less able to pay. It is not a user-pay concept. It is the spending of money on transportation in a region which needs it, without regard for the payback on the part of those using the transport system.

In addition to the highway program, there has been new airport construction at a total cost of $21 million. It will provide valuable links to areas at some distance from major New Brunswick and Newfoundland centres.

Mr. Whittaker: Is that pork-barrelling?

Mr. Rompkey: That is looking after transportation needs.

Mr. Whittaker: It sounds like pork-barrelling.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): The hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador (Mr. Rompkey) listened to all the other speeches. I suggest we listen to his.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rompkey: Hon. members opposite do not want to hear the facts. They do not want to hear the truth. They want to preach doom and gloom. This new airport construction will provide for fast and efficient transport of equipment and supplies to valuable resource areas in New Brunswick. In New Brunswick, $6.4 million will be spent over the next three years to complete the development of Charlo airport. A new airport at St. Léonard, on which work was already begun, will be built at a total cost of $3.8 million over the next two years. In addition, funds have been budgeted for the construction of an air strip at Grand Manan, at an estimated cost of $1 million.

Improvements to airports in Newfoundland and Labrador also are part of this program, with a total of $10.8 million allocated for Wabush, which is in my riding. A new air terminal and operations building is being built at Wabush, as well as a maintenance garage, fire hall, aircraft parking ramp, taxiway, air cargo site, parking lot and access road. In 1978 airstrips will be at Nain and Makkovik on the Labrador coast, at a total cost of $1 million for each site. Studies are under way for similar facilities at Marys Harbour and Hopedale. Also there is a master plan for 13 airstrips along the Labrador coast, which will revolutionize transportation in that eastern extremity of Canada. With that airstrip pattern, we will be able to institute a Twin Otter service, or perhaps a Dash-7 service. That will revolutionize transportation in that area.

The hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte referred to the good old days when things could be transferred from the east to the west. The government has been studying the Maritime Freight Rates Act and the Atlantic Region Freight Assistance Act which cover the Atlantic region and the Gaspé coast. Following consultation with the provincial governments, the government determined that existing subsidy for movements within the region did not provide the maximum possible economic benefit for the region, and in turn agreed a subsidy should be paid on selected regionally produced goods moving on all means of transportation. There will be a subsidy on selected goods manufactured and processed within the Atlantic area. The subsidy will not apply to those goods which come from other parts of Canada to be processed in the east and shipped back out again. The hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte said that the rates are higher coming from Thunder Bay to New Brunswick. So what? It is a chance for the people in New Brunswick to produce their own goods and to become self-sufficient. I do not see that being a bad thing. We are changing the freight rate pattern and the levels of freight rates in Atlantic Canada in the interests of Atlantic Canada.

This subsidy will be implemented by September 1 on a selected list of commodities worked out by federal and provincial officials. I am convinced the revisions to the blanket 15 per cent subsidy program will have a positive economic effect on the entire region by making goods produced in Atlantic Canada more competitive and by improving competition in various forms of transportation.

Another program which affects all four Atlantic provinces is the urban transportation assistance program. It was designed to tackle a number of transportation problems affecting major cities. Each province would receive an amount for urban transportation projects which require attention. In the Atlantic region, New Brunswick will receive $6.8 million; Nova Scotia, $8.2 million; Newfoundland, $5.6 million; and Prince Edward Island, $1.2 million. As a result of these programs, I hope areas in my constituency, such as Grand Falls and Windsor, are provided with much needed arterial roads for the expansion of industrial parks and housing areas.

The province of Newfoundland has special transportation difficulties. In an attempt to solve them, the government formed a commission of inquiry to assess a wide range of factors affecting present and future transportation needs. I mention that in the beginning, because the Hall commission was referred to and the Sullivan commission was not mentioned. I draw the attention of hon. members opposite to that commission. The commission is charged with studying economic, social and geographic conditions in Newfoundland. It will provide us with an excellent framework through which we can work with the provincial government to achieve the best possible transportation system for that province. In other words, we are rationalizing transportation.

Marine coastal service has been subsidized over the years to the tune of tens of millions of dollars. The same amount of money can be put into transportation, a variety of modes, so that transportation in that province will be rationalized. The Sullivan commission has just about finished its work. Either the minister has a copy of its report in his possession or he will be provided with one soon. It will provide us with a policy line for the future of Newfoundland.

Also the government has been investigating the distribution system for potatoes from New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island. Working with provincial governments, potato producers and distributors, some significant improvements to the distribution system have been made, including revisions to potato freight rates, some improvements to port facilities in several places in Atlantic Canada, and a new operational planning system.

An important segment of the economy of Atlantic Canada centres around the shipbuilding industry. I am sure the hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte will be interested in knowing that there are several projects which could mean a significant boost if a shipyard is the successful bidder. The design and construction of a hybrid nuclear gas-turbine polar icebreaker has been estimated at $310 million. If hydro-carbon development in the high Arctic continues, there is little doubt the government will need a polar icebreaker by the early 1980's. We hope that construction can be done in Atlantic Canada. We do not want absolute guarantees, but we do want to compete on a fair basis and we are hoping that that work can be done in a shipyard in Atlantic Canada.

● (2042)

Apart from the government's general programs, it has begun a number of specific improvements to transportation facilities throughout Atlantic Canada that will have a significant effect on both passenger and freight transportation in the area. For example, one project is the building of a new container handling terminal in Fairview Cove off Halifax harbour at a cost to the federal government of $2.1 million. The construction of this facility is already providing additional employment in the area, and following completion in 1980 more than 100 jobs will be created to operate the facility. The significant project in Prince Edward Island is the redevelopment of the Charlottetown airport to include a new terminal building, maintenance garage, fire hall and eventually a new 5,000 foot runway. This project, developed in consultation with provincial and municipal authorities, will cost more than $21 million, and work is expected to begin in the summer of 1978.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rompkey: They do not want to hear the facts, Mr. Speaker. They do not want the record set straight; they only want to preach doom and gloom.

Other improvements at Charlottetown airport include a new maintenance garage, aircraft apron, carpark, access road system and taxiways. Gander airport in Newfoundland will also be receiving a new air control centre, expansion of its air terminal building and improvements to the north runway. The complete project will cost $18 million, and that is in addition to the movement by the federal government of the search and rescue centre to Gander, which is not only providing facilities and protection for our fishermen, but employment for people in Gander.

Let me go on with the record.

An hon. Member: It must be election time.

Mr. Rompkey: This is not going to do any harm for the election either.

The construction of one shed of the forest products terminal in Saint John, New Brunswick, was completed last year, and an additional shed will be completed shortly at a cost of $3.5 million. This new terminal is a major improvement in the handling of forest products at the port since they were previously handled at a number of diverse harbour facilities. The new specialized terminal ensures more efficient handling of all forest products, a major export of the province.

Although there is no funding involved, a major step towards streamlining the management of east coast ferry and coastal service was taken in December with the establishment of CN Marine, based in Moncton. The new corporation will function as a subsidiary to Canadian National Railways to provide incentives for efficient ferry operation, and help to control costing and deficits in providing these services. The previous method of offsetting operations deficits with federal funding created an ineffective management system and provided no incentives for operating efficiently. This new arrangement in no way diminishes the federal government's constitutional obligations, nor its responsibility for maintaining levels of service for those vital shipping links. We will continue to control rate setting and all major decisions affecting the services.

In addition to that movement of the centre of operation of east coast marine, new ferry services have been instituted in the Atlantic area. In my own riding, for example, they received a $500,000 subsidy last year to provide a new service across the Strait of Belle Isle between Newfoundland and Quebec and southern Labrador. There was an announcement just a week ago on the Sir Robert Bond—

An hon. Member: What have you done for the west coast?

Mr. Rompkey: Listen; just pay attention to the facts.

An hon. Member: What about the ferries in B.C.?

Mr. Rompkey: There was a $4 million grant for the conversion of the Sir Robert Bond which links Louisport with Labrador. There has been a new truck carrying ferry inaugurated between Yarmouth, Nova Scotia and New England in addition to the Bluenose on that run.

These are substantial ferry improvements in eastern Canada and just some of the examples that this government has been concerned with, illustrating the fact that it has been doing something.

An hon. Member: What did you do on the west coast?

An hon. Member: What about the unemployment rate?

[Mr. Rompkey.]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. The rules state that a member should be entitled to speak without interruption. I suggest we listen.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rompkey: I welcome the interruptions, Mr. Speaker, from across the way because it shows their frame of mind. They do not have any real facts to put on the table, but are simply shouting and bawling to make themselves heard.

The opposition is talking about federal government consultation. Two years ago the Department of Transport created a directive to establish sound lines of communication between the department, provincial governments and industry. With respect to liaison with the provinces, this directive provides an effective channel for consultation and communication and ensures that the provincial point of view on transportation issues is known and understood by Transport Canada policy-makers and given an objective and fair hearing. There are mechanisms within the department that we have set up to ensure that the provinces are consulted. Apart from these mechanisms, the Minister of Transport has had adequate consultation with all four Atlantic provinces—

An hon. Member: Take Newfoundland, for example.

Mr. Rompkey: With Newfoundland as well. Before bringing in his policies this minister consulted with his counterparts. The record of this government in Atlantic Canada is clear, and the record of this Minister of Transport is also clear. Members on this side of the House from Atlantic Canada will agree with me that this is a minister that has been responsive and responsible.

When the hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte says that policies are made by somebody pulled out of the PMO who has to go to work on transportation in Atlantic Canada, I want to inform him that we have had the Minister of Transport come to an Atlantic caucus. The improvements that have come about have been a result of this caucus. My caucus colleagues from Atlantic Canada will agree that this is one of the best ministers of transport that we have had, and certainly one that is—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to inform the hon. member that his allotted time has expired.

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a contribution to this most important debate initiated by my distinguished colleague from Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski). I would like to put into proper perspective some of the things mentioned by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang), particularly as they relate to western Canada. One thing that has really concerned and amazed me in this whole debate about transportation policy—particularly with a minister who comes from western Canada—is that when this minister is discussing the Hall commission report, which is so important to the future of western Canada and its buoyancy, I can come to no other conclusion than that he either has not read the report, does not understand it, or cares not to understand it one whit.

I hope to demonstrate today by some of the points that I make that the minister completely misreads the importance of this particular commission report or completely misreads the very important and most germane portions of it.

Mr. Benjamin: He is trying to head it off.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: My colleague from Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) says that he is trying to head it off. One can come to no other conclusion except that the minister is in a position where he does not want to embrace the recommendations contained in this report and, in fact, is dragging his feet on some of the very important recommendations mentioned in it.

It has been pointed out on a number of occasions that of the recommendations made in the Hall commission report, there were something in the vicinity of—

Mr. Benjamin: Two recommendations.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: —six—I am being generous—of these recommendations which have been acted upon, notwithstanding the protestations of the minister. There are five others that have been partially acted upon but no action has been taken on the rest. The minister misunderstands the purport of the Hall commission report. He misunderstands this report which must be taken as a whole. Unless the recommendations are taken as such and implemented as a package, the results that are hoped to be gained from this particular report will not be attained.

● (2052)

It is interesting to see the minister's attitude toward this report. He takes a portion of it and indicates that he considers it the most important. He does not look at the report as a whole. Of the 92 recommendations he decides that number 91, say, is less important than number 90 and so on. In a letter to the Gravelbourg Star in Saskatchewan the minister indicated that he approached the report in that way when he wrote:

> Since last May 16 when the Hall commission report was tabled in the House of Commons, the government has taken a swift but methodical approach to its implementation. On May 27 the most important recommendation in the Hall Report was implemented when some 1800 miles of prairie rail line was added to the basic network guaranteed to the year 2000.

The minister regards this report as one that merely deals either with the retention or the abandonment of rail lines in western Canada. That is a narrow approach. In his beneficence he announced, during the course of the debate, a number of very large grants for the improvement of rail lines in western Canada. Just after the report was presented the Western Producer carried the following report:

> The elimination of some 2160 miles of branch line railways in Western Canada will save the Canadian taxpayers about $400 million annually, Chief Commissioner Emmett Hall told a May 16 press conference.

Referring to the minister's suggestion that the proposal for additional hopper cars would be a great asset to western Canada, the report went on:

> Regarding the federal government's proposal to build an additional 2000 grain hopper cars at a cost of $80 million, Mr. Hall said while these may be needed some time in future, they are only "make work" projects for Eastern industries and do not represent one additional dollar of revenue for Western Canada.

That is what Mr. Hall said about the minister's claims that he is paying great amounts of money to western Canada. Through rail line abandonment the government is saving something like $400 million annually, but the minister would suggest that he is giving about $100 million to western Canada for rail line improvement. People in western Canada understand what is happening, Mr. Speaker, and will not be fooled by such financial transactions. It has been pointed out that something like $55 million of that money will be spent in central Canada on rail and other supplies necessary for the improvement of rail lines.

I was somewhat amused during the debate when the minister accused the opposition of filibustering Bill C-33, introduced in his name. I think I should put some facts on the record with respect to that legislation. The minister said it was impossible to get the bill through because of the Conservative party. Mr. Speaker, I checked the record and I find that of seventeen speakers eight and a half were Liberals, two were NDP and six and a half were Conservatives. Hon. members may wonder about the two halves. One of the speakers was the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner), so I apportioned one half of him to each side. If there was any filibustering I suggest the government should look within their own ranks.

The Minister of Transport said that Bill C-33 was a wonderful piece of legislation and would solve our national transportation problems. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce had other ideas, however, and I think it would be interesting to see what he said about it. Since the minister is not in the House tonight and there is no member present on the government side from western Canada, I shall put this on the record and they can read it tomorrow. I see the parliamentary secretary is here. Indeed, he is always here and does a good job. He stays in the House and listens.

The Minister of Transport thought this bill so important that he had the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) introduce it and read his speech. This was supposed to be an important breakthrough in transportation policy but that is what happened.

The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, then an ordinary member like the rest of us, chastised the Minister of Transport for not being in the chamber. At page 3530 of Hansard for March 1, 1977 he is reported as follows:

> . . . he has lost favour with the Liberal backbenchers, so the government has demoted him and sent him out west because they do not want the backbenchers of the Liberal party to enter this debate, and they felt that if he was here initiating the debate he would antagonize his own members and provoke a discussion.

The Minister of Transport has accused us of holding up the bill and filibustering, but here is what the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce said a little later.

> I believe that this legislation takes the government from the mess it was in and puts it in another mess.

What words of commendation for this wonderful legislation that the Minister of Transport says is essential to the future of transportation in Canada!

I could go on and on Mr. Speaker, but I have underlined portions of the speech and would be glad to send it to any member of the government who wants to know what the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce thought of Bill C-33. March 1977 was a critical period in his political life; that was when it became crystal clear to him that the time had come to accept a portfolio under the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau).

I want to deal with the Hall commission report because it is so very important to western Canada, although in its ramifications it affects all of Canada. Because the grain handling system in western Canada is being improved, we tend to take it for granted that any assistance given or changes made will fill the pockets of western Canadians. Nothing could be further from the truth, Mr. Speaker. If we consider the importance of grain exports to the balance of trade and consider the amount of money spent on goods and equipment from other parts of Canada, we realize that the agricultural industry, and the grain industry in particular, must be seen as essential to the future well-being of the country.

The minister seems to think he is moving fast enough on the recommendations of the Hall commission. Although he pays lip service to those recommendations, only five have been implemented and there is ample evidence to suggest that the minister has no interest in the total package. I am sorry to report that the Minister of Transport has not approached Mr. Justice Hall or called him in since his report was presented to discuss the ramifications of it.

What a peculiar situation we are in. The minister said that we are going to go ahead with the report. But what they forgot to do was to ask the person who was the head of this important commission for his advice and interpretation of the recommendations contained in the commission's report. As I say, not once has the government got together with Mr. Justice Hall. Not once has the government sought an explanation or a clarification or asked him for his assistance in bringing forward meaningful implementation of this most important report.

What have the government done? They have set up what they call a Prairie Rail Action Committee. In Saskatoon we know what action committees are all about. It is a political motto used by the Minister of Transport. It is a convenient kind of spin-off between what has been going on politically on one side and what is going on now with this commission. We have some serious reservations with respect to this action committee. In my opinion the creation of this committee is merely another form of stall for the purpose of avoiding the implementation of these worth-while recommendations of the Hall commission. The effect of it will be to put the control of transportation and grain handling, in particular transportation, back into the hands of the Canadian Transport Commission which is now a central and eastern dominated commission.

I want to briefly go over some of the points which must be taken in the total context as far as the Hall commission report is concerned. It has to be taken as a package. One recommendation cannot be isolated and expected to solve the whole problem. Concerning the grain handling system in western Canada there were something like 5,758 elevators in the prairie region in 1938. In 1976 the number of elevators had been reduced to about 3,964. The Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, one of the largest grain elevator companies in western Canada, say that it is their intention to rationalize the number of elevators down to something like 550. There are presently just over 1,000. If elevators on a line are removed, then there is nothing left to justify retaining a railway in that particular area.

The Hall commission could not get specific information from the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool as to which elevators would be retained and which elevators would not be retained. As a result they recommended the creation of a prairie rail authority. The commission could see that some 2,000 miles of railway would have no grain to carry if these elevators were closed down. Therefore, they directed abandonment of roughly 1,800 miles. This left about 2,343 miles in doubt. The commission indicated that nothing could be done with respect to decisions on these lines until the grain companies had made up their minds regarding these elevators.

In his brief, Mr. Runciman of the United Grain Growers pointed out that decisions made in this connection in 1976 could be wrong in 1986. As I mentioned, the commission recommended a prairie rail authority. It was felt that money should be spent to keep these doubtful lines operational, but that no money should be spent to upgrade them.

I suggest to you, sir, that the government has ignored the recommendations of the commission in setting up this Prairie Rail Action Committee. It has been stated by my colleagues on this side, the hon. member for Vegreville and the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Murta), that the concept of a western component of the CTC should be kept alive and should be implemented. Notwithstanding the statements of the government that they would do this at some time, I suggest it is something which should be looked at as an immediate priority. The decisions that will be made by the Prairie Rail Action Committee will be made before decisions are made by grain companies as to which elevators will be abandoned. This, I suggest to you, sir, could result in very high costs to the country.

It is also important to understand in terms of western Canada, central Canada and so on, that central Canada benefits from the grain industry and derives substantial benefits with respect to the price paid for grain, flour and ultimately bread. The commission has pointed out that eastern millers get the benefit of the Crow rate which is so often attacked and which was brought into question by none other than the Minister of Transport on a number of occasions. Wheat is stored along the seaway. With western grain producers—that is, the Canadian Wheat Board—paying, storage charges were originally one-thirtieth of a cent per day and I believe it has now been moved up to one-twentieth of a cent per day. This is paid for out of the pockets of the western farmer. There is no question that the Minister of Transport and this government have abandoned the prairie rail authority concept by having named the Prairie Rail Action Committee—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to inform the hon. member that his allotted time has expired.

[Translation]

Mr. Charles Lapointe (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have been waiting for a long time for this opposition day on the transportation policy in Canada. I was naïve enough to believe that opposition members might suggest some measures and concrete solutions to the admittedly important problems we must face when drawing up a national policy in this very important area of our economy and the life of this country, because that policy has an impact on national unity.

So, Mr. Speaker, I admit that I am very disappointed, after listening to this debate from the start, to have heard for hours on end all about what the government failed to do, that the transportation policy should provide for advisory groups with the provinces, that it should be based or oriented toward a better economic development of Canada, that there should be a western arm, and an eastern arm of the Canadian Transport Commission, when all those points, Mr. Speaker, were made repeatedly by the government, and more particularly in the 1975 transportation policy statement.

I should like, Mr. Speaker, to deal more specifically with the achievements in the area of transportation, particularly in the province of Quebec. During this debate and in previous ones, we did not often have the opportunity to hear from members opposite about what is being done by Transport Canada in Quebec. Every time they deal with transportation issues pertaining to the province, all they can say is that the government is spending too much money in Mirabel, that freight rates in the province of Quebec are too favourable in relation with the rates in the Maritimes, or that the aircraft maintenance facilities in Dorval should be moved to Toronto.

I am aware that our hon. friends opposite are sadly lacking as far as their representation in the province of Quebec is concerned, and that is why I am so glad, Mr. Speaker, to be able to enlighten them a little about the great accomplishments of Transport Canada in that province.

Most hon. members opposite have complained with a lot of energy and concern about the great problems we are facing in the rail passenger service in Canada. Unfortunately all of them have touched very lightly on this great achievement of this government, namely the creation of VIA Rail. And I should like to deal briefly about this new Crown corporation which is especially beneficial to the province of Quebec. Everyone knows that historically railways originated in the Montreal area and that Montreal is also the site of Canadian National and Canadian Pacific head offices, therefore it was only logical in my opinion that the headquarters of VIA Rail should be located in Montreal as they have been.

Mr. Speaker, it will be recalled that in 1967, under the National Transportation Act, the government had committed itself to pay 80 per cent of passenger service deficits of both railways, the Canadian National and the Canadian Pacific. It became obvious in 1974 that that policy had fallen short of the expected results for there was a $167 million deficit and the projected deficit for 1980 would have reached $400 million. So in 1977 the government decided to set up a new corporation called VIA Rail and to merge the services of both the Canadian National and the Canadian Pacific railways in order to give a boost to that important mode of transportation.

Mr. Speaker, the challenge faced by VIA Rail is to establish an efficient passenger rail transportation system at reasonable cost. They must also aim at a significant reduction of the subsidy and launch an innovative marketing program to regain public trust in this means of transportation. We are convinced that the income will increase in the long term. Of course they are not expected to report profits in the first years of operation, but I am quite confident in the management and in the chairman of VIA Rail who I know are all doing their best so this new service will earn the share of the Canadian market it deserves in the field of transportation.

In order to allay the concern of our friends of the New Democratic Party who often complain that we tried to deprive Canadians of services for the sake of profit, they must be reminded that in the terms of reference of VIA Rail as in the legislation passed last fall on Air Canada—and this also applies to the CN bill we are now examining—in each of those acts there is always a provision allowing the government to decide that, in a given underdeveloped area of the country that is either underpopulated or lacks a good industrial infrastructure, a service can continue to be given through government subsidies whether it be passager trains, air service or freight trains.

Mr. Speaker, as we know also, in order to help VIA Rail, Transport Canada has entrusted a Montreal company, after calling for tenders right across the land, of course, with the care of redecorating passenger cars that will be transferred by the CP to the CN. Those cars will first be used on the lines running in the Quebec City-Windsor corridor and on the continental run and allow passengers to travel by train in greater comfort. The minister has also asked the Montreal company, Bombardier M.L.W., to build ten LRC trains; that new material will include 22 locomotives and 50 cars bought jointly by the federal government and VIA Rail at an approximate cost of $90 million.

Mr. Speaker, I feel all hon. members must rejoice in the fact that a Montreal company managed to get that contract; when those new trains go into service in 1980, we will prove to the whole world how technologically advanced we are in the field of railway transport, which will surely help us export and sell Quebec and Canadian technology in world markets.

This $90 million project will create 1,500 man-years of employment over a three-year period. Many Canadian companies, including Alcan and Dofasco, are partly responsible for developing this new LRC train and will be the main suppliers of Bombardier M.L.W., which means Mr. Speaker, and this should be emphasized, that the Canadian content as concerns manpower, material and engineering will be 80 per cent for the engines and 96 per cent for the cars.

Still in the railway field, Mr. Speaker, MOT has just purchased 488 cars for moving grain at a cost of $18.5 million from Marine Industries Ltd. of Sorel, and these will be added to the 150 other cars which are now being manufactured at a cost of $6 million under the Prairie branch line rehabilitation program. By the way, Mr. Speaker, I would like to note that while the previous speaker complained about the government's delay in implementing the recommendations of the Hall report, he should remember, as one of my colleagues on this side of the House said earlier, that 11 days after the publication of this report, about 1,800 miles of lines were transferred to the basic railway network of western Canada, and that since then, we have spent $175 million to rehabilitate the lines and that the government is also committed to an eight-year program to rehabilitate all western lines at an approximate cost of $600 million. This is not doing nothing, Mr. Speaker, and I feel that we should not worry but rather keep going in this direction, because I believe that our transportation policy is very useful to all Canadians, both from eastern and western Canada.

Mr. Speaker, after speaking briefly about railways, I should now like to go on to another area, that of the automobile. I am happy to note that the work done at the car testing center in Blainville which has cost us $20 million will soon be completed. The center will provide various tests this summer. It will undertake research and investigations on the defects and the compliance to Canadian standards of the various car models. This center will also make its equipment available to the government, private industry and private research organisations. There is another area, Mr. Speaker, where great progress was made by MOT in 1977 in Quebec, namely shipping. I should like to recall briefly the extensive investments made in Montreal harbour which have already started and the announcement made during a cabinet meeting held in Montreal last December, namely that the government will try to develop Montreal harbour so as to increase considerably the handling of containers which is important for our economy, and to give a new economic impetus to the Montreal area by creating new jobs there. The National Harbours Board will invest $37.5 million in this project. One of the aspects of the project is the upgrading of the Racine container terminal, at a cost of $26 million, which will be of tremendous benefit to the economy of the Montreal area.

Along the same lines, Mr. Speaker, this terminal will create 80 permanent jobs and 500 man-years of employment in the four years of construction work. The other group of projects concerns the $11.5 million program for the upgrading of grain elevators. This amount does not include the demolition of centres 1 and 2 but it covers the old harbour modernization project and provides for the automation of weighing facilities and for the improvement of both the electrical system and the grain-loading facilities for trucks at elevator No. 3. Other changes will be made under the form of interconnected galleries and so on, at elevators No. 4 and 5. Those extensive works, Mr. Speaker, will enable Montreal harbour to maintain its strategic and competitive position and to continue to serve efficiently the agricultural food industry in Quebec and the Canadian export market.

Mr. Speaker, another harbour where we have tried to improve conditions is obviously the Quebec City harbour where, under a federal project of $42 million to refit the old harbour, an amount of $8 million will be allotted to the reconstruction of piers along the shores of the St. Lawrence, that is piers 21 to 8 and their extension up to the western limit of the federal property. Those works will provide 300 jobs and will accommodate visiting ships as well as freighters at anchor. Also in the Quebec harbour, Mr. Speaker, the Department of Transport has approved an investment of $3 million for the renovation of a grain elevator. That elevator is owned by the National Harbours Board and has been rented to Bunge of Canada Limited since 1967. This company will provide the other $6 million required to carry out this program. Again in the Quebec City area, Mr. Speaker, the National Harbours Board is working in co-operation with l'Administration du port de Québec on a development plan that would create an industrial harbour zone on the sandbanks of Beauport. Their objectives are the following: minimize the development costs, provide functional and harmoniously integrated development and finally secure the development of management techniques suited to the efficient application of such a plan. The Beauport sandbanks cover approximately 1,065 acres, including 450 mainly from embankments made up from the dredging of the river.

We have also discussed at length, Mr. Speaker, the adverse effects that the move of CP Navigation will have on Quebec harbour. To offset this loss of tonnage, Quebec harbour authorities joined with l'Association des producteurs de bois de sciage and the province of Quebec to carry out an important study of the viability of a forest product terminal in Quebec City. This study will deal with transport, distribution, marketing and organization of that undertaking. The cost of the study, that is some $73,000, will be shared by the three parties involved and we expect the study to be published by late May or early June.

I could give many more examples of investments, such as the $3 million invested in the Chicoutimi dock to make it a tanker dock open to ships carrying oil products for the Saguenay region. I could also refer to a plan for improving the use of Trois-Rivières harbour, but I could not leave unmentioned the $12.5 million investment at Gros-Cacouna for the establishment of a general cargo harbour. Also, Mr. Speaker, as concerns Sept-Îles, the second most important harbour in Canada, the department will soon publish a long range development plan which will give this harbour the tools necessary for its development. It will therefore be necessary to develop an implementation strategy as soon as possible. The provincial and municipal authorities have already recognized the importance of Sept-Îles harbour and of its development, and are willing to offer us all the support necessary for its achievement.

Those, Mr. Speaker, are some of our achievements in the maritime field in Quebec for 1977. I did not want to go back to 1974 or 1970, for fear of frightening my colleagues opposite. Despite all these investments in 1977, there are others to be made, and the minister himself as well as his officials are conscious of the fact that maritime development is a major asset in the economy of Quebec which is the door to the rest of Canada. As far as other future projects are concerned, and which are under consideration at the moment, I think we must look into regional development, for example the development of a harbour in Pointe-au-Pic, in Charlevoix county, which would complement the harbours in Quebec City and Baie-Comeau which serve a more important purpose.

In the few minutes I have left, Mr. Speaker, I also wish to refer briefly to air transportation. I should mention that in 1975-76, 13,000 people in Quebec were working in air transportation in the private sector or in the public sector. And this excludes employees working for provincial or municipal governments or for local carriers. In addition to that direct effect on employment, the air transportation industry has significant economic fall-outs in distribution and manufacturing throughout Quebec. Suffice to recall the production by Canadair of the Challenger aircraft which is one of the outstanding achievements of modern aviation on international markets. Or again the numerous contracts awarded to the firm Pratt and Whitney to meet the requirements of the Department of National Defence; in its Quebec plant that firm will receive $140 million in Department of National Defence contracts out of a total of $250 million.

In October 1976, the federal government authorized Canadair to build a total of 250 Challenger aircraft which represent, Mr. Speaker, an injection of $1.2 billion into the economy of the province of Quebec. To date, 120 aircraft have been sold which represents an inflow of $600 million. The total number of employment created only by that aircraft is 1,900.

As concerns airport facilities, everybody knows that Montreal has two major airports, Mirabel and Dorval. We are now studying a development plan for Mirabel airport that should be implemented at the beginning of 1980. This plan will include the development of Dorval airport. I shall not mention the many investments in air transportation at Sept-Îles, Mont-Joli and Quebec City, but there is still much to do in that field and within a limited budget, we are still working to find answers to the problems of the people in Magdalen Islands, Gaspé, Bonaventure, Havre-Saint-Pierre and other communities.

So, Mr. Speaker, I insisted on mentioning a few figures and a few accomplishments to make it clear that the motion introduced by hon. members opposite has no ground whatsoever when you compare the unfounded statements it contains with the facts and the achievements of Transport Canada.

• (2122)

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, at the outset of his speech, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lapointe) said he hoped to hear positive suggestions from this side of the House. From what he said, it is obvious he would not acknowledge a positive suggestion coming from the opposition, because the contributions of opposition members did contain a great many positive proposals in the area of transport. I will do the same, although with some concern I must admit, because this government is well known and famous throughout Canada for their policy which is to borrow ideas from the opposition. Government members just might appropriate the ideas I will submit tonight and convert them into electoral promises.

[English]

Because, after all, they were only electoral promises. Some may have noticed how many of the projects contained in that long catalogue recited by the hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador (Mr. Rompkey) were cast in the future tense—the government was about to do this or that; it was about to build a road up into Labrador, it was about to do something at Wabush. Why, after ten years, has the government decided so late in the day to put forward this enormous catalogue? Why did it decide to wait until now before bringing these proposals forward? All it was, was a catalogue of goodies, an attempt to get votes.

Indeed, I was afraid, when my hon. friend from Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) was referring to certain aspects of the need for reform in prairie transportation policies, that the government would be prompted to issue still more election promises between now and election day. I say, let Canadians beware.

I do not remember too much Latin, but there is one thing I do remember. I will not say it in Latin, but the English translation is: "I fear the Greeks when they come with gifts in their hands". I would like to update that quotation from Virgil. I think it should read like this, and I put it in the exhortative: "Mistrust the Liberals, especially when they come with gifts on their tongues". With all these misgivings I intend to take a risk and deal with a problem on which an election promise might very well be made. I will just have to take the risk, but once again I go back to that old expression which we see so often, and I will translate that to the occasion and say, "Cave, Canada,"—"beware, Canada". I will come back to that.

There are two problems about which I would like to speak tonight. One of them has to do with a railroad on Vancouver Island which has a long history of being shut down by the Canadian Transport Commission, started up again and shortened, and I think it may very well be lengthened. I suppose it goes back to 1905 when a grant was made to the CPR or to another company to establish a railway between Esquimalt and Nanaimo.

The E and N Railway had been in service in one form or another running from Esquimalt right up to Courtenay, and for some reason there was an interruption. The CPR claimed it would not be able to carry on the service any longer, and it asked if it could be discharged of its responsibility to run that particular service. Hearings were called by the CTC in Victoria. I, for one, made a submission to that hearing on March 8, 1976.

I had a variety of reasons for arguing against the closing of that particular service. My first reason for opposing the CPR petition stemmed from the legal obligation accepted by the CPR when it applied in the first instance to operate the railway, which it was prepared to accept in return for proprietary rights and a substantial grant of land by the Crown amounting to 1.9 million acres. That was what the CPR was granted in return for building and operating the railway. I thought that was a sufficient argument for it to go on operating the railway. It was supplemented, actually, by a rather philosophic argument connected with the relationship between the acceptance of a privilege, that is, the right to make use of the 1.9 million acres, and the performance of a service undertaken as a result of that acceptance.

There was a variety of other reasons which I brought forward, and I submitted them to the Railway Transport Committee. That was on March 8, 1976, and in July, the Railway Transport Committee ordered that the CPR reconstruct two bridges located at certain mileages in accordance with an annexed order, and so on. That was promptly done. The date of that order was July 28, 1976.

Then came the next step in the proceedings. The CPR finished the job. It built the bridges and prepared the railway for operation. Then, having heard from the CPR that in the year 1972 there was a loss attributable to the operations of the passenger train service of the order $176,000, in 1973, $190,000 and in 1974, $231,000, the Canadian Transport Commission ordered that, as of January 31, 1978, the CPR should discontinue the operation of the passenger train service, having previously instructed the CPR to build bridges and put the railway back into operating condition.

That, of course, was quite an extraordinary order. Freight was being transported on that line twice a week. It was carried throughout the whole service, but the transport of passengers was to cease. That caused the province of British Columbia to give notice that it was going to appeal that ruling. A letter to that effect was sent on December 27, 1977 to the chairman of the Canadian Transport Commission.

I too felt that that was not quite the way things should be, but with a little bit of pressure from the provincial government and letters from a variety of people, including several members of parliament from that part of the country, we managed, on January 20, 1978, to get the CTC to agree that the date should be changed to June 30. We are fast approaching June 30. June 30 may be a very important date, and this is why I have some fear about the conversion of this suggestion into an electoral promise, but there has been more pressure built up suggesting that this railway is required. The Regional District of Greater Victoria, for example, submitted a telegram to the CTC on January 18, 1978 indicating that the railway should continue. I too argued for that.

I was not aware yesterday when I was working in my office that I would be taking part in this debate, but I received a submission from one of my constituents, and last night I dictated a letter which I sent to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang), a copy of which was sent to the chairman of the Canadian Transport Commission, arguing that the June 30 date should be erased from the record and that the CPR should be ordered to maintain the service through the summer months until there is opportunity to have another look at this matter. I have this letter in front of me now.

I was puzzled as to why June 30 should be chosen as the date to close the railway. June 30 is just the beginning of the tourist season.

Mr. Symes: Election.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): I do not think it was known back in January when the extension to June 30 was discussed that there might be an election in or around June, but it is beginning to smell a little bit like that now.

Mr. Benjamin: They still don't know.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): That is true.

One of the arguments I advanced then—and I advance it again now—is that the timetable for the running of this particular railway should be more in tune with the needs of the communities up island so that people can come down to Victoria and go back on the same day. People from Victoria who wish to have a day's outing on the railway are able to leave in the morning and come back in the evening. That is not the way it works for people up island. The train leaves from Victoria and comes back to Victoria at night so that people up island have to stay in Victoria overnight and go back the following morning.

As I have said, there is some danger that between now and election day a promise will be made that an order will go out to the Canadian Transport Commission to continue this service at least through the summer months. If that happens, I think that by now the Canadian public will be aware that it is an election promise and will look at it for what it is worth.

One other matter that could well become an election promise—because the Minister of Transport has been reminded of it often enough within the last three or four weeks or months—is the provision of radar at Victoria International Airport. I remember when I raised this question that I spoke of the incident which really prompted the question. It was on January 21, 1977, and I made a note about seeing an aircraft go by the port windows as we made a swift bank to starboard. I looked into the matter and found out what had happened.

There are a few statistics here which I think are worth putting on the record to indicate the place of Victoria International Airport among other airports across Canada. I will give the rank of these airports according to the traffic using the airport. I will be happy to see this information on the record.

In fifth rank is Vancouver International Airport. In 1977 there were 235,825 flights in and out of the airport. Edmonton is eighth in rank with 231,060. Calgary is ninth, with 208,170. Victoria is thirteenth with 178,707. Then I will mention two important and interesting ones. Number 16 is Dorval International with 159,361, as compared with Victoria which has 178,707 flights. I have a funny feeling in the pit of my stomach that there is radar at the Dorval International Airport but there is not at Victoria. I would like to bet that there is not a member in the House who could guess where Mirabel ranks on the list of airports used. It is forty-seventh, with 50,447 flights a year.

An hon. Member: That is not so.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mais si. This is the report here.

An hon. Member: Which year?

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Gander is fifty-fifth in rank with 36,686 flights. I have a reason for making this selection. I suspect that Edmonton and Calgary both have radar. I do not know for sure, but I suspect they do because I am always being told that the traffic coming into Victoria is being directed from Vancouver. What about Dorval and Mirabel? Are hon. members going to suggest that only Dorval or only Mirabel has radar? Mirabel needs it to bring aircraft in from overseas, I agree, but does it control the traffic to Dorval as well?

I would like to mention why I have picked Gander as No. 55 with only 36,686 flights, about 3,000 a month. The old radar that was taken out of Vancouver airport was hurriedly put on a train and shipped out to Gander so that there could not be a movement afoot in Victoria to have it shipped 80 miles across the water and mounted at Victoria International Airport.

The figures I mentioned are impressive and I do not need to repeat them. They will appear in tomorrow's Hansard and they can be checked and rechecked against the statistics put out in the annual report of aircraft movements by Transport Canada. It is simple and straightforward.

I warn everybody that if a promise is made between now and election day that radar will be placed in Victoria International Airport, we will all be grateful but we will know why it is being done.

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to say a few words in this special debate on transportation because those of us who live in northern Ontario have suffered from the inadequacy of every national transportation policy that this Liberal government has designed.

I have made speeches in the past outlining the concerns of those of us in the north about the need for a rational transportation policy. I do not have time to go into that again this evening, but I would like to reiterate our concern that if we allow the present Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) to implement fully his concept of profit oriented and user-pay modes of transport to override the concept of service, then in areas of sparse population, such as northern Ontario and elsewhere in Canada, we will suffer because we just do not have the population or the usage on the various modes of transport to make them always pay their own way. Surely if we are serious about national unity, service at times must come before profit.

We in northern Ontario know what it is to have discriminatory freight rates, how this has inhibited the development of secondary manufacturing in our part of the province and how it has perpetuated the export of resources because it is always cheaper to ship out the nickel, the iron ore or the pulp and paper than to have them processed, developed and manufactured in northern Ontario. Until we solve the transportation freight rate problem, we are not going to solve the problem of unemployment. Only by developing manufacturing industry will we be able to provide jobs for young people living in northern Ontario.

I do not want to go into details on that aspect because I have talked about it in the past. What I would like to focus on is some discriminatory policies of this government as they affect my constituency of Sault Ste. Marie. We have witnessed over the past decade or so, as I have said, discrimination in terms of the freight rate policy on rail, lack of air service and bad highways and roads. But recently, under the present Minister of Transport, we have suffered another blow, in fact two blows, the first being the ending of the passenger rail service between Sault Ste. Marie and Sudbury in the name of economy. This government, which subsidized passenger rail service, decided that it could save some money by ending that subsidy, and therefore the CTC was allowed to let CPR discontinue that passenger rail service. Many communities along that route suffered, making the transportation problem even harder. People were forced to rely on buses and other modes of transport, to the detriment of their travel schedules.

That was the first blow that we received only about a year and a half ago. More recently, in fact a couple of weeks ago, the Minister of Transport dealt us another blow by announcing a cut-back in the operation of the ship canal or lock at Sault Ste. Marie. We have only one Canadian lock to bring vessels from Lake Superior to the lower Great Lakes. The rest of the locks are owned by the United States. Our lock was an old one that had not been upgraded or enlarged over the years and was indeed allowed to deteriorate.

The first rumour was that the government was going to close the lock at Sault Ste. Marie by 1982. It was based on the erroneous argument that the lock was no longer commercially viable, that tonnage was being reduced, and therefore, the government could not afford the $1 million annual expenditure to keep the lock open. Representations were made by myself, the union involved, the city council of Sault Ste. Marie and the hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Foster). Our arguments were in favour of increasing the usage of the lock by upgrading and indeed building a larger lock. Those arguments fell on deaf ears.

I should like to examine the minister's argument in favour of cutting back the service provided by the lock. He has cut out the night shift, which means the lock no longer operates on a 24-hour basis. The inevitable result of that is a reduction of the tonnage going through that lock. Thus, this time next year the Minister of Transport will be in a position to produce figures indicating that the tonnage is down even more, and that therefore the lock is not commercially viable and must be closed.

When the announcement was first made regarding the closure of that lock, I made immediate representations to the minister as to why I felt the lock should remain open and indeed should be improved. The Minister of Transport sent a letter to me dated February 15, 1978, dealing with the prospect for growth in traffic and whether the lock should remain open. In part the letter reads as follows:

> Nevertheless, when I look at projections of traffic through the Canadian-American lock system at Sault Ste. Marie, I note that no capacity problems are envisaged until some time after 1995. In these times of financial restraint for the federal government, I am doubtful that there would be much merit in Transport Canada undertaking a cost-benefit analysis of a new super lock, since there would be very few benefits in terms of a more efficient transportation system until after that date.

The minister has erred by not doing a cost-benefit analysis. He has not taken into account some recent developments. That is the reason I appeal to the Minister of Transport to reconsider his argument that he does not foresee any problems concerning growth in the system and the need for building a new and larger lock at Sault Ste. Marie.

The minister has not taken into account some recent figures concerning projected coal shipments from western Canada to Thunder Bay, and then through the St. Lawrence seaway system, in order to fulfil Ontario Hydro contracts. By 1980, 3.9 million tons of coal will be delivered annually to Thunder Bay, and then trans-shipped by water to various points in the Great Lakes. That represents a 12 per cent increase in total Canadian coal production. It means that increased tonnage will go through that lock system, carrying coal to various parts of Canada. In light of that increased tonnage projection, there is a strong argument in favour of that lock's hours of operation not being reduced. The 24 hour operation should be maintained, and indeed the size of the lock should be expanded, or a new one should be built.

This would ensure a Canadian presence and a Canadian option at this important junction in the Great Lakes. Of course, that is important in terms of future bargaining on the seaway, but also it would help our failing shipping industry. New vessels will have to be built to trans-ship the coal. They will be larger vessels. Thus, the expansion of the lock would encourage the Canadian shipbuilding industry to make use of this new movement of goods.

Also I am discouraged that the federal government has not taken into account, aside from the need for a Canadian presence at the lock and the need for a fully operative lock at that point, the fact that this lock provides annually an infusion of $1 million into the local economy of Sault Ste. Marie in terms of wages, repair work and other contracts let in conjunction with the operation of the lock. That is not an insignificant sum, especially considering the repressed state of much of the economy in northern Ontario.

As an alternative, the minister proposes building an historic park in the area and infusing $170,000 a year for the maintenance of that park. That falls far short of the revenues which would be generated locally by maintaining the full operation of the lock. We should not be backed into an "either/or" situation. An historic park in the area is compatible with a full-time commercial operation of the lock. Indeed, it is important for our tourist industry. Some 80,000 visitors are attracted each year to the lock to watch its operations. The Americans attract over one million visitors a year who view the operations of their lock. The reason the Americans are able to attract more people is because larger vessels can be handled by their lock. By upgrading our lock, a shot in the arm would be given to the tourist industry in the area.

Also I am disturbed by the information which the minister has been given by officials in his department concerning the actual tonnage going through the lock. His figures indicate that in 1972, 1,120,570 tons went through the lock; by 1976 it had declined to 564,350 tons. The figures I have obtained from the union involved, which are the figures of the lock itself, indicate that in 1972 the tonnage was 1,523,754; in 1976, 1,288,903; and declining in 1977 to 709,890 tons.

Those figures are very different from the figures of the minister. They do not indicate as dramatic a drop as his figures do. The factor which has not been taken into account, as far as the drop in 1977 is concerned, is the summer-long strike in 1977 of the iron mining industry in Minnesota. Also, the fact that the average water level on that system of the lakes had dropped from 20 feet to 17 feet 10 inches was not taken into account. That prohibited many ships from making use of the facility.

We cannot allow the kind of discrimination practised by this minister to continue. That system is important to Sault Ste. Marie. The workers want to continue working there under the jurisdiction of the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority. I appeal to the minister to reconsider this very regressive decision.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It being 10 p.m., it is my duty to inform the House, pursuant to Standing Order 58(11), that proceedings on the motion have expired.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

PUBLIC SERVICE—LIABILITY FOR COSTS OF COURT ACTION

Mr. Benjamin: What is your problem?

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, the problem I have to raise tonight is not my problem but one of the government's. The government misinterprets the attitude of the people of Canada with respect to the kind of activity and mentality that would lead the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford), in responding to questions by me in this House yesterday and today, to indicate, in the event no appeal is taken with respect to an action commenced by Mr. Larry Stopforth, a former senior official of the Department of Supply and Services, against the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Goyer) relating to alleged defamation and libel to his character, an action in which the Supreme Court of Ontario awarded substantial damages in the amount of $10,000, whether or not the award and costs with respect to this libel action is to be paid out of the public purse.

● (2202)

Very briefly, I would like to put the facts and the contentions that I have with respect to this matter before the House to determine whether or not there is any justification whatsoever that the parliamentary secretary can give to this kind of circumstance. Let me start by saying that I do not think that anyone seriously disputes the fact that, in the ordinary course of carrying out one's responsibilities as a member of cabinet, there should be indemnification to ministers of the Crown.

We have a very unusual and different situation before us in this particular case. We have a situation where a minister of the Crown has stood in the House of Commons and blamed a senior official within his department for misinformation and incompetence; and the innuendo was there very clearly that it was the fault of Mr. Larry Stopforth and literally millions of dollars were put in jeopardy and a great financial loss was suffered by the Government of Canada. We have privilege in the House of Commons, and the minister was not able to be sued for that statement, wrong as it turned out to be according to the judgment of Mr. Justice Lieff. Subsequently, the minister took it upon himself to go outside the House of Commons and repeat, in effect, those statements with respect to Mr. Stopforth's competence, blaming him again for the loss that was sustained by the Government of Canada.

By virtue of this particular action the minister took a positive step outside the scope of his formal duties as Minister of Supply and Services. He said to the world, without the protection afforded to him as a parliamentarian within the House, that this man was the cause of a loss of money by the Government of Canada and that it was really no fault of the minister that it occured. The judgment laid that particular contention to rest. It in fact, exonerated Mr. Stopforth and said there was no basis upon which the minister could make that statement. The minister was therefore found to have libelled and defamed a public servant.

The result of this whole situation is that Mr. Stopforth has suffered serious damage as a result of the actions of the minister. Not only has he suffered the ignominy of being publicly singled out by the Minister of Supply and Services, but he has in effect been demoted within the department and is now in a position of having to go to the courts to collect money for this defamation. The Minister of Justice then stands in the House and informs us that it is the intention of the government, on the basis of precedents, to pay this particular judgment.

In acts of commission or omission by a minister in the ordinary course of carrying out his duties, it is understandable that there be indemnification. However, in this particular case it is going, if we accept the answer of the Minister of Justice, to set the precedent that in all future cases if something goes wrong within a department the whole concept and parliamentary tradition of ministerial responsibility is thrown out of the window.

● (2207)

Now, apparently, the minister can say that someone in his department has given him bad advice, that a certain segment of the public service has given him wrong and incompetent advice. The government will not have to worry about such a statement because the Minister of Justice says that precedents show that a judgment incurred as a result of wrongful accusation will be paid out of the public purse. Imagine the precedent that will set and the relationship that will be developed with the public service. No public servant will feel secure about giving advice in the performance of his duties when he can apparently be singled out with impunity, be subjected to vicious statements by a minister made outside the House, and face a reversal in his career as a result, the public purse, in the final analysis, protecting the minister and paying any damages and court costs.

Even if this were an isolated instance we would have a very strong case for chastising the government for its actions. I would point out, however, that the same minister was involved in the infamous blacklist incident, circulating a list to the cabinet of people in the extra-parliamentary opposition—people who are enemies of the government. It is the same minister who, in effect, blamed his executive assistant in the "Habourgate" matter when a controller from Hamilton came to his office to tell him about the situation. In committee he said, "My executive assistant received the message and did not pass it on to me." He has a record of blaming other people.

This has to stop both in the interests of the public service of this country and in the interests of maintaining the concept and the fine tradition of ministerial responsibility.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Roger Young (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I am rather surprised in the first instance that the hon. member persists in pushing a question which is entirely premature and hypothetical.

Second, I am rather surprised that one trained in the law, as he is, would expect a defendant in this issue to compromise his legal right to an appeal.

Third, I am somewhat surprised to hear the veiled suggestion that the Supreme Court of Ontario judgment, with all due respect to Mr. Justice Lieff, should bind this House, which has always been the final arbiter and has been looked upon as the final court. Such would conceivably lead to a blurring of the principle of separation of powers and the separation of the judicial and legislative functions in this country.

There are three points which must be understood. The first is that the question of payment of costs or damages is academic pending the decision on appeal. Second, any decision to pay damages cannot be made until the Treasury Board has first approved them. Third, the decision to appeal is one that is mutually arrived at, in this case between the defendant, his counsel and the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford).

It is the generally accepted principle that ministers are servants of the Crown and that therefore any damages incurred by them would be paid by the Crown if the act in question arose during the course of their duties.

FINANCE—APPLICATION OF CAPITAL GAINS TAX

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, on April 5 I asked the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) to spell out clearly the provisions of the capital gains turn over for farmers and small business. In 1971 this government imposed the capital gains tax and in two subsequent budgets, on March 31 last year and on April 10 this year, they started pulling back on capital gains. They told the Canadian people that they were reducing the tax load, but the fact remains that it was this government that imposed the capital gains tax in the first place.

The issue has been surrounded by confusion from the beginning. For example, valuation day was back in 1971. It still concerns Canadians as to how a valuation made in 1971 will relate to the amount of capital gains assessed when farms are disposed of. Someone has said that this capital gains tax is the greatest single assault on small pools of capital which were held formerly in the hands of farmers and owners of small businesses.

Many members of parliament lobbied that a change be made in the capital gains provisions whereby a farmer or owner of a small business would have the right to roll over his business or sell it and use that capital to buy another business or farm.

In the March 31 budget of last year we thought that we had won a major victory. The budget of that day states the following:

> Taxes are to be deferred on any capital gain that arises from voluntary sales in cases where a farmer or small businessman sells his farm for business, providing the funds received are re-invested in the same type of business.

Members on both sides of the House welcomed that change. They again welcomed the change when corporate farms were included in this last budget. But once more we have been misled by this government. It is not important that members of parliament have been misled, but that the wrong impression has been left with the Canadian taxpayer. What was thought to be the case, namely that a farmer could sell his or her farm and use the proceeds of that farm to roll over and buy a larger unit, in fact now is not the case. The regulation, now hidden in a department of Revenue Canada, is that a farmer, for example, who has a dairy farm and sells it, and who uses the total proceeds to buy a grain farm, is liable to capital gains tax. In other words, it is only if that gentleman sells his dairy farm and buys a larger dairy farm that in fact capital gains tax is deferred.

That was never the impression on March 31 last year. As we talked about this provision in the budget the government never indicated at any point that what was meant, for example, was that a farmer would have to sell his farm, specifically a dairy farm, and could only have a deferment of tax if he bought another dairy farm. If a farmer sold his farm and remained in farming—and I would think a grain farmer is as much a farmer as a dairy farmer—capital gains tax would be deferred. But, Mr. Speaker, that is not to be the case. It is important that farmers and owners of small businesses recognize that this government, having said one thing, is doing another thing through regulations that have not been passed by this House of Commons.

Incidentally I raised a case during my intervention in the budget debate last week concerning an example in my riding. In a letter sent to a gentleman in Alberta dated April 6, 1978 by the Director of Rulings Division of Revenue Canada it says:

For example, the replacement of farmland used in a wheat farming business with farmland used in a dairy farming business would not qualify under the new provisions of the Act dealing with property dispositions; consequently, capital gains tax would not be deferred.

I asked the government, if they knew this on March 31 last year, why did they leave the impression that if a farmer sold his farm and stayed in farming he could defer capital gains? Why was it never said to the House, never said to members, but more important, never said to farmers and owners of small business, that in fact they could only have a roll over if they stayed in the same operation?

● (2217)

I guess we now have to interpret that budgetary provision in this way. For example, if a businessman who owns a shoe store sells it and buys a clothing store, he will have to pay capital gains tax. That was never the impression that was left.

I say to the parliamentary secretary that the pool of capital that is in the hands of Canadians, owners of small business and farmers, is being eroded rapidly. This provision was going to change that and bring back some equity. Surely this regulation is not in keeping with the spirit of the budget, and I ask the government to change it.

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) pointed out, Bill C-11, introduced in 1977, included a provision that allows farmers and other businessmen to defer tax on certain sales of business property where the proceeds are reinvested in replacement properties. A number of questions have arisen in the House concerning the availability of this rollover, particularly as it affects farmers.

Technically, the words in the Income Tax Act require that the replacement property must be for the same purpose and for use in the same business as the property sold. This raises the question: What is the same business when, for example, a farmer who has been growing crops decides to sell his property and go into livestock?

Officials in the Department of Finance have had extensive discussions with officials in Revenue Canada to determine the most appropriate way of ensuring that a tax-free rollover will be available for farmers, so long as they stay in the farming business. This is what the government intended when the law was introduced.

The most appropriate way of ensuring the rollover is available for all farmers would be to amend the income tax legislation. Accordingly, consideration is being given to incorporating in the bill to implement the April 10 budget measures an amendment to the Income Tax Act, to ensure that rollover provisions will be available to farmers even though they change the nature of their farming business. Any such amendment would be made effective March 31, 1977, the date on which the original rollover was introduced.

Adjournment Debate

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—CANADIAN PARTICIPATION IN UN DISCUSSIONS ON DISARMAMENT

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, we have been hearing a lot in the past few days about the TV show "Holocaust". I want to spend a moment tonight talking about another kind of holocaust, a nuclear holocaust that is very possible to be visited upon the world. The neutron bomb controversy merely highlights the unbelievable escalation of the arms race that has come about in the world. World-wide military expenditures have now reached $400 billion per year. That figure is 26 times more than governments spent on international development.

The focus of my question concerns the special session of the United Nations General Assembly which will be held in New York beginning May 23. The complaint I bring to the government is that very few Canadians know anything about this special session that is going to take place.

In the words of the United Nations Secretary General, Kurt Waldheim, this session may well be the largest and most representative gathering ever convened on disarmament. He hopes it will become a turning point in our search for peace.

Today there is a great escalation of nuclear warheads in the world from divers countries producing the capacity for "first strike" defensive strikes. Half a dozen other countries are now on the threshold of this horrendous capacity. At long last we have at least reached the point where the United Nations is going to devote a special session to this problem.

We find not only a lack of information, a lack of public opinion on the subject throughout our country, but that whatever opinion there is tends to be skeptical of what the United Nations session might be capable of achieving. This skepticism is not unfounded when one considers the Soviet arms build up, for example, or when one considers the presence of Cuban troops in Africa. All this tends to make us uncaring, even in terms of the effort which must be made and the steps which must be taken at this special session far beyond simple rhetoric. This special session is attempting to focus world attention upon the tremendous danger into which we are all being thrust and to consider whether certain steps can be taken to alleviate this danger.

Project Ploughshare was set up by some 18 non-governmental organizations in Canada including the Canadian Council of Churches and the Canadian Catholic Organization for Development and Peace. I want to commend Project Ploughshare for playing its part in the development of public opinion and pointing out certain things which could be done—for example, holding this special session—with the participation of the Canadian government, and highlighting the need to eliminate weapons of mass destruction by asking the super powers to suspend production of all new weapons of mass destruction—for example, the Cruise and Trident missile systems in the U.S. and the SS 18, 19 and 20 in the U.S.S.R.

Further, those engaged in Project Ploughshare, and I in support of them tonight, ask that Canadian initiatives be taken to secure a comprehensive test ban treaty banning underground nuclear tests of any size.

Third, Project Ploughshare urges that all proposals to prevent the spread of nuclear weapons be coupled with guarantees from the nuclear weapons states to begin the reduction and eventual elimination of their nuclear stockpiles. Then we must consider curbing the growth and use of conventional weapons, halting the international trade in arms and the linking of disarmament with development which, in itself, is a whole theme worthy of development.

Consider what only 5 per cent of the enormous world military budget would do if it were properly spent upon the social development of mankind today. So far, the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence has devoted only one meeting to the subject of disarmament, and when we asked that there be a special sub-committee set up on disarmament the government dragged its heels, with the result that now, on the eve of this conference, Canada is going to the United Nations with hardly any knowledge of its importance among the public generally and without the benefit of discussion in this chamber.

Could the spokesman for the government tonight tell us, even at this late hour, whether something special might not be done to develop Canadian public opinion so as to strengthen the government's hand when it goes to the United Nations for this important session?

[Translation]

Mr. Maurice Dupras (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, on April 5 last, the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Roche) asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs to specify what stand the Canadian government will take at the special session of the United Nations General Assembly on disarmament which will start in New York on May 23, 1978. I am pleased to be able to provide additional information on behalf of the minister.

Even during the preliminary stage, the Canadian delegation played a leading role by submitting a series of specific and constructive proposals designed to stop the arms race and to backtrack in the matter of conventional as well as nuclear weapons. The proposals have been submitted either on behalf of Canada or jointly with a group of western countries which take the same position.

On April 27th 1977, Canada released to the Secretary General of the United Nations the essence of the recommendations and the content of the closing document which the Extraordinary Session will have to submit. In that same line of action, in January and February of this year, Canada co-sponsored the presentation of three papers on the following themes: a declaration on disarmament, a program of action for disarmament and international mechanism for disarmament. Canada presides over the western group caucus of the UN members and a great many members of that group have co-sponsored these papers with us. Canada also played a major role in the preparation of these important contributions to the success of the Extraordinary Session.

Mr. Speaker, these documents are bulky and exhaustive and can be made available to my hon. colleagues and to the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona. If he wishes to get a copy, I will be willing to let him have one. As the hon. minister already stated in this House, the Department of External Affairs is at present carrying on a thorough study of the proposals and supplementary initiatives which could be put forward on the occasion of representation by Canada during the Extraordinary Session of May 25 in keeping with the government's objective of not sparing any efforts during that session to bring a new input to the international proposals for armament control and disarmament.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

At 10.29 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

NATIONAL SECURITY

SURVEILLANCE REPORTS OF RCMP—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of the same order I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the CBC news today that 24 monthly reports made by the RCMP to the Solicitor General concerning the force's surveillance operations are missing, and in view of the fact that the reports concern the period 1971-72, a period when Jean-Pierre Goyer was solicitor general, I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Hogan):

That Mr. Goyer be requested to check his brief case to see if he has inadvertently removed them from his office, and if he finds them would he please return them so that we can get the commission of inquiry under way.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

NATIONAL REVENUE

REGULATIONS PERTAINING TO CHARITABLE ORGANIZATIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Andy Hogan (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity I raise the following matter based on information circular 78.3 of the Department of National Revenue. According to the circular, its purpose as noted in paragraph 1 is to explain to registered charities and to charities seeking registration the consequences of carrying on activities that are political in nature. On page 3, point 2, under the title—

An hon. Member: Order.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member has a motion, would he put it, please.

Mr. Hogan: Mr. Speaker, my motion is that the information in this circular that was put out by the former minister of revenue—

Mr. Hogan: Let me finish the motion, please. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes):

That this House deplores the regressive, undemocratic and idiotic nature of some of the rulings pertaining to charitable organizations that occur in the revenue department's information circular 78.3.

This circular is important reading for you people over there.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for discussion would require the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

INDUSTRY

REQUEST FOR TAX CONCESSIONS FOR MINING INDUSTRY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to present a motion on an urgent and important matter.

Since the Canadian mining industry, more particularly asbestos and copper, which represent an investment of $18.1 billion a year, is faced with a lack of export orders on world markets and is strangled by taxes, with a view to making it more competitive on the external market, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert):

That the House urge the government to grant immediate tax concessions for the Canadian mining industry and to undertake discussions with other countries to promote our mineral exports.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Pursuant to Standing Order 43, presentation of such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

SUGGESTED SEPARATION OF NCPC OPERATIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Wally Firth (Northwest Territories): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that people living in the Northwest Territories, particularly those in isolated communities, experience the highest cost of living in the country, given the very high cost of housing for northern residents, and in view of the fact that all government consumers and domestic consumers in the communities of Yellowknife, Fort Smith, Pine Point and Fort Resolution have been subjected to yet another rate increase by the Northern Canada Power Commission of the order of 10.5 per cent, I move, seconded by the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt):

That the Northern Canada Power Commission be divided into two separate operations and that the responsibility for each be given to the territorial councils of the Yukon and the Northwest Territories.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

PROTESTED REMOVAL OF SERVICE FROM KAMSACK, SASK.—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): I rise under the same Standing Order, Mr. Speaker. The CNR has proposed to remove its agent and station from the town of Kamsack. Since the CNR has benefited tremendously by the long service provided by the town and residents of Kamsack, and since the CNR is now attempting to escape its historic and statutory obligations rather than providing better service, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That this House condemns the CNR's proposal to remove its agent and station from the town of Kamsack, and that this House calls upon the Minister of Transport to instruct the CNR to honour its historic obligations by retaining and improving the service provided by both agent and station to the town of Kamsack.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion at this time requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

NATIONAL SECURITY

SURVEILLANCE REPORTS OF RCMP

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Solicitor General. The McDonald commission has been informed that there are missing, or have been destroyed, 24 monthly surveillance reports prepared for the Solicitor General covering the period of time during which the present Minister of Supply and Services was solicitor general, and also covering a period of time that is very crucial in terms of the McDonald commission's investigation.

Is it a fact that these 24 reports, covering two years, are missing? Were they destroyed? If so, under whose authority did the destruction take place?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I would like to indicate to the hon. gentleman that we are dealing with files relating to the criminal investigation branch and not the security service. Evidence was indeed adduced before the McDonald inquiry to the effect that certain files which contained reports on surveillance installations were destroyed. Those were destroyed with reference to the principles on records, administration and maintenance within the RCMP which provide that certain files and reports can be destroyed three years next after their date of operation. However, all the installations and files relating to the specific installations which are referred to in those reports are still in existence. Therefore, the McDonald inquiry is not at all hindered in its investigation.

To make it precise once more, there was a process whereby certain installations were reported on a monthly basis. The reports which referred to the original installations were destroyed in accordance with administration policy. However, the records relating to the specific installations were not destroyed and are still available.

Mr. Jarvis: Mr. Speaker, on one hand we have uncontradicted allegations that 58 copies of a document marked "Top Secret. For Canadian eyes only" were distributed all over Parliament Hill, the national capital, and likely to foreign countries as well. On the other hand, we now have evidence from the Solicitor General that this particular series of reports covering two years was destroyed according to normal procedures.

Is the Solicitor General telling us that the reports prepared monthly for the Solicitor General were prepared in one copy only; that that copy has now been destroyed and that no other copies were maintained of what presumably was an extremely important monthly report to the chief law enforcement officer of the Crown?

● (1417)

Mr. Blais: Again, Mr. Speaker, the report related to specific installations. The records of those installations are still available. As I understand it, they have been used by counsel in the preparation of evidence to be laid before the inquiry. I do not see what the hon. gentleman's point is at all.

Mr. Jarvis: The issue is one of credibility. Surely the Solicitor General must understand how it tests one's credibility to learn that the missing or destroyed reports cover exactly the period of time during which the present Minister of Supply and Services was solicitor general and cover exactly the period during which activities took place which formed the main subject matter of the McDonald commission hearings.

Will the hon. gentleman be precise in telling us when the destruction of those documents took place, and under whose authority, and when did their destruction first come to his notice or to the notice of his predecessor?

Mr. Blais: First of all, if you recall, initially when I commenced my reply I said we were dealing with criminal investigation branch reports; we were not dealing with national security. The reports which were submitted to the Solicitor General in relation to national security are still available. I am dealing now with reports relating to installations and involving electronic surveillance, which have nothing at all to do with the security service. Therefore, the allegation advanced by the hon. gentleman does not hold water.

RCMP SURVEILLANCE OF POLITICAL CANDIDATES

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Halifax): Knowing what an eager beaver the Solicitor General is, I am sure he has already checked out the accuracy of a report with regard to documents purported to be copies of RCMP instructions to certain personnel relating to the surveillance of political candidates. Can the Solicitor General tell us whether the document is a valid copy and, if so, whether those instructions were modified in any way by the instructions the government issued, I think it was in 1975, telling the RCMP and the security force to stop exercising surveillance over political parties; or is the instruction relating to the surveillance of political candidates still in place?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Solicitor General): I thank the hon. gentleman for the compliment he has paid me. In accordance with his evaluation of my activities, I have indeed ascertained certain facts. I want to say to the hon. gentleman, because I think this is the first question he has asked in the House in relation to the McDonald inquiry for some time, that he is well aware of the terms of reference of that commission and one of the terms of reference is to study all procedures within the RCMP.

He will be the first to recognize that the manuals are essential in the study of those procedures. As a consequence the manuals of the RCMP, past and current, have been made available to the McDonald inquiry. In terms of the contents of the manuals, I would call the hon. gentleman's attention to the fact that under the terms of reference of the inquiry certain hearings are to be held in camera to protect the security service and our national security. In terms of methodology or procedures which affect investigations related to national security, those hearings are to be held in camera and it would not be proper at this time to comment as to the accuracy of the contents.

● (1422)

Mr. Stanfield: With all due respect to the Solicitor General, whom I know is not only an eager beaver but also a great democrat in his heart, would he not agree that it is of fundamental interest to hon. members of this House to know whether the RCMP were exercising surveillance over political candidates in the manner indicated in this report, and also of fundamental interest to us to know whether this has continued since the government's instructions to the RCMP to discontinue the surveillance of political parties, because they are not the same thing? Is it too much for me to insist on a straight answer from my friend the Solicitor General?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman and hon. members of his party who have been briefed on security service operations know that because an individual belongs to an organization, whatever organization it may be, that does not make that individual impervious to investigation or surveillance by the security service, because the criterion relating to the exercise of surveillance or investigation is conduct which goes against the provisions of section 16(2) of the Official Secrets Act. The security service is indeed charged with effecting surveillance of individuals who could be a threat or who may be a threat to Canada's security. Surely it is not the position of the hon. gentleman that that surveillance ought not to take place.

Mr. Dick: Answer the question for a change.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I would have thought that the best way, if I may suggest this to the Solicitor General, to be fair to the RCMP and to discharge his obligations to this House would be to give a straight answer to the question. I think it was the Prime Minister who told us some months ago that in 1975 the government asked the RCMP to stop exercising surveillance on legitimate democratic political parties.

Can the Solicitor General tell me whether those instructions from the government referred to by the Prime Minister—instructions such as those also referred to in the Globe and Mail—are no longer in effect? I think the House is entitled to an answer to this kind of question, and any reference to the McDonald Commission is quite beside the point.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, that was the first specific question the hon. gentleman has asked.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Blais: The directives which were issued by the Prime Minister of Canada relating to the surveillance of any legitimate political organization are being complied with in full by the RCMP.

ALLEGED DESTRUCTION OF RCMP SURVEILLANCE REPORTS

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take the Solicitor General back to the question of the 24 documents which are reported to be missing. I am trying to get the Solicitor General's answer clear in my mind. Is it correct that those reports were not only destroyed but any exact duplicates were also destroyed, and all we have now is some summary of those reports? Are those reports available to the McDonald commission in full and in total as full exhibits, so that the commission can inquire into them?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, the reply I have already made relating to those 24 reports was that they cannot presently be located, that they refer to existing files relating to installations, that all the files are complete and that the sequence of those files is ascertainable and complete. Therefore, there are no files—which is really the subject matter of any investigation by the McDonald inquiry—which could be missing.

In terms of whether the 24 documents to which the hon. gentleman is referring were destroyed, I can say to the hon. gentleman that those documents are not there, they have not been found and they are presumed destroyed. I suggest to the hon. gentleman that the destruction took place in accordance—

● (1427)

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Mr. Blais.]

Mr. Blais: Those documents could have been destroyed in accordance with the procedures that have been followed and approved internally by the RCMP.

Mr. Leggatt: The Solicitor General still has not advised the House as to the date of the destruction of those particular documents, which I am assuming now—that was his evidence before the House—are not available as documents to be inquired into. My question is: Will he now confirm the date of the destruction of those documents, will he also confirm that they were destroyed subsequent to the revelations of the break-in at the APLQ, and can he also advise us whether they were destroyed under the instructions of any of the solicitors general?

Mr. Blais: First of all, the hon. gentleman presumes that the documents have been destroyed. I suggested to the hon. gentleman—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Blais: —there is no specific record that the documents have been destroyed. If I inadvertently misled the hon. gentleman, I apologize. Indeed, the documents are not there.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Blais: Evidence was laid before the McDonald inquiry to the effect that the reports referring to the electronic installations were destroyed—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Blais: —or at least not available, and there is a presumption—

An hon. Member: You've got to be kidding.

Mr. Blais: There is a presumption that the documents may have been destroyed because it is the internal administrative policy of the RCMP relating to that sort of report, which is a monthly report, that it may be destroyed three years following the date of the issuance of the report.

However, the documents to which the reports refer, namely, the installations themselves, are still available. I will reiterate for the hon. gentleman, who has not been mindful of that fact in his question, that the documents relating to the installations are available and have been made available to the McDonald inquiry.

Mr. Leggatt: I have a final supplementary question for the Solicitor General.

An hon. Member: That buffoon.

Mr. Leggatt: The Solicitor General has some experience with the courts of this country and he knows that evidence is evidence and documents are documents, and that summaries of documents are a very different thing. My question is this: In terms of the alleged mislaying or destruction, somehow the documents are missing—we have had confirmation of that today—I want to know from the Solicitor General whether he or his predecessors have inquired as to what happened to those particular documents. What study has he done to determine whether any solicitor general has had any responsibility for seeing that those possibly inculpatory documents are now missing and are not available to the McDonald inquiry?

Mr. Blais: The hon. gentleman is not being fair in making suppositions in questions of that nature. I can guarantee to the hon. gentleman that neither myself nor my predecessor nor, indeed, any solicitor general has had anything to do with mislaying of any document or documents.

Mr. Stanfield: How do you know?

Mr. Blais: I will say, further, that indeed the documents themselves could have been destroyed because the three years during which they were being retained, according to the internal procedures of the RCMP, had expired and in accordance with the usual methods and measures the documents could have been destroyed. The fact is that the hon. gentleman recognizes very well that if he were to keep files eternally in any internal administration, the cost of storing them would be prohibitive indeed.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

INQUIRY WHETHER SHIP CONSTRUCTION CONTRACTS AWARDED TO LAUZON SHIPYARDS

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence.

Not long ago I asked the minister in the House whether his department has finalized ship construction plans and the minister replied that he would soon have good news for us about this.

In view of the fact that unemployment is rising in Lévis and along the south shore, could the minister indicate to the House whether his department has reached a decision and whether contracts will be awarded to the Lauzon shipyards to ease the unemployment situation?

● (1432)

[English]

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of National Defence): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have been pursuing this with the hon. member for Lévis as well. The hon. member raised a question in the House before, with the hon. member for Lévis, and also with my colleague the Minister of Transport in an attempt to speed up work so that those shipyards can be busy and the people well employed. The Minister of Transport may wish to add to this answer today or in the very near future.

TRANSPORT

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON SHIPBUILDING IN LAUZON, QUEBEC

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Since the Minister of National Defence is referring me to the Minister of Transport, has the latter good news to communicate to the House on this subject and could he confirm the date on which the work might start on the job he wants the Lauzon shipyards to do for him?

[English]

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker, some arrangements are in the final process of being made and the work involved would follow immediately.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

LAKE ONTARIO—DAMAGE TO SHORE PROPERTIES DUE TO HIGH WATER LEVELS

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for the Environment. I gave him notice of this question yesterday. It deals with a matter which I have discussed with him and his department over several weeks.

As water flowing into Lake Ontario at a rate in excess of 400,000 cubic feet per minute and flowing out at a rate of only 300,000 cubic feet per minute has caused the level of the lake to rise one foot above the average level for this time of year, which is continuing to rise rapidly and has already caused extensive damage to properties on the shores of the lake, would the minister advise the House what steps he and his department are taking first of all to stop the water from rising and then to bring the level of the lake back to normal?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: We used to do it when the Conservatives were in power.

An hon. Member: How long ago was that?

Hon. Len Marchand (Minister of State (Environment)): We are getting into pretty deep water, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Marchand: The present level of Lake Ontario is 246 feet which, despite the spring rise, is still within the International Joint Commission orders of approval. The St. Lawrence board of control is continuing to discharge the maximum possible under existing conditions. The present rate of discharge is 308,000 cubic feet, which is just a little more than what the hon. member said.

I want to assure the hon. member that we are watching the situation very closely and doing everything we can within the means that we have to manage these levels. As the hon. member knows, there is no way of managing the water coming in from Lake Erie. It causes us some concern. Perhaps the Minister of Agriculture prayed a little too much last fall. The water levels from last fall were a problem also.

The hon. member will appreciate that if we allow too much water to escape from Lake Ontario there could be trouble at the other end at Lac Saint-Louis in the Montreal area. I assure the hon. member that we are watching the situation very closely.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. minister knows that watching the lake very carefully is not going to stop it from rising, as it is doing every minute at the present time. As this situation was brought about by catering solely to the wishes of the shipping companies which use the St. Lawrence Seaway, will the government start now to look after the needs of those living and working on the shores of Lake Ontario, instead of only paying attention to the wishes of the shipping companies which contribute so generously to Liberal campaign funds?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

FISHERIES

IRISH MOSS FISHERY IN MARITIMES

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment. More than a year ago, in January, 1977, the minister made an announcement regarding changes in the Irish moss fishery in the maritimes. These changes referred to deficiency payments, new regulations, active exploration of new markets and stabilization of markets with respect to Irish moss.

I know the minister has received representations recently, specifically from the Prince County Fishermen's Association and perhaps other groups, with regard to the very difficult year which they experienced last year. They requested an extension of the deficiency payments and inquired as to how much success the minister has had in attempting to stabilize and improve the market situation for Irish moss. Has the minister responded to those urgent requests? Can he give a brief reply to the House?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I will have to check the record. I know representations were made to my office. As the hon. member knows, a decision on possible assistance to those fishermen would depend on the Fisheries Prices Support Board. I will check with the chairman and inform the hon. member.

[Mr. Marchand.]

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

PRICE-FIXING ARRANGEMENT RESPECTING IRISH MOSS

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure if the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs is aware of a recent report which I sent to the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment on the Irish moss fishery. I should like to direct my supplementary question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, if I can have his attention.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I do not mean to disturb him during question period when he is reading his fan mail. A recent report released by the Social Action Commission of the diocese of Charlottetown on the state of the Irish moss fishery in Prince Edward Island cited the testimony of a former vice-president of one of the major foreign buyers of Irish moss, Marine Colloids Ltd. It concerned an arrangement made among three multinational companies in 1975 to fix buying practices in a way which would drive the newly-formed co-operative, the P.E.I. Marine Plants Co-op, out of business.

Is the minister aware of these serious charges? Has he initiated, or is he aware of any investigation within his department on attempting to fix prices in this manner? These three companies virtually control the Irish moss market, nationally and internationally. Is he prepared to refer this matter, if it has not been investigated, to the Combines Investigation Branch for investigation and possible prosecution?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this is the first time I have heard about this problem. I do not recall receiving any letter similar to the one referred to by the hon. member. I would be pleased to look into it and refer the matter to the director, if that is appropriate.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

HOUSING—PROGRESS REPORT ON NEGOTIATIONS WITH PROVINCES

Mr. Dean Whiteway (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the hon. Minister of State for Urban Affairs, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations. It has to do with the announcements made yesterday by the Minister of State for Urban Affairs regarding the new initiatives by the federal government in the area of housing, and specifically with regard to RRAP and NIP.

Because the minister obviously has been part of the negotiations with the provinces, can he tell the House whether any consensus has been reached with the provinces in the area of housing, which is clearly within the jurisdiction of the provinces?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Mr. Speaker, actually, I have not been part of the negotiations but I have been involved indirectly in the process over the past few months. I should like to inform the hon. member that, indeed, there was a federal-provincial conference in Edmonton a few months ago on the question of housing as part of the preparatory conference leading to the first ministers' conference. At that conference there was a general review of the proposals announced by the minister. At the time, those proposals were very well received by all the provinces.

Mr. Hees: No, they were not; that is not my information.

Mr. Lalonde: Since then there have been telephone conversations between the minister responsible for housing and the minister responsible for housing in each province. I understand these conversations led to positive results, hence the announcement which was made by the minister which I think represents a very, very significant and major improvement in our housing program and which I think will benefit Canadians from all provinces.

Mr. Paproski: Order.

Mr. Lalonde: Also, it will increase the flexibility of our programs in terms of provincial participation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whiteway: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same minister. "In the broad area of housing, consultation has been virtually non-existent." That is a quote from page 34 of the Western Premiers' Task Force on Constitutional Trends. In light of that which is found in the report of the four western premiers, can the minister assure the House that consultation and agreement will be sought with all provinces before any new federal initiatives are undertaken by the government and the minister?

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I should like to mention to the hon. member that he is referring to a report which is several months old; as a matter of fact, it is a report from last year. I have had an opportunity of discussing that report extensively with the western premiers. They recognized that in many respects, having studied the report with their officials, there were certain allegations contained in it which were not quite accurate, and they have been corrected since. Others were correct. Steps have been taken to remedy the situation. I have had very fruitful meetings with the western ministers concerned in this whole area. I think major improvements have been made in that respect.

● (1442)

As far as the latter question is concerned, I can only repeat to the hon. member that there have been extensive consultations on the proposals or decisions announced by the minister responsible for housing. All provinces have been consulted. If the hon. member wants to imply that in the field of housing the federal government cannot move unless it has the unanimous agreement of each and every province, then I think he is going rather far and it will be the Canadian people who will suffer from the lack of funds for housing in many provinces. I am not ready to subscribe to the notion that every province should have a veto.

HOUSING—ALLEGED LACK OF CONSULTATION

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the minister responsible for housing.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Paproski: I will get to my question if they will be quiet for one minute. I should like the minister to know that because of lack of consultation, the hon. minister for housing in Alberta, Bill Yurko, is running as a PC candidate against this government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): I can think of very many reasons, Mr. Speaker, why anybody else would like to run instead of some of the PC members from Alberta at the present time.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

REQUEST NCPC RATES BE SET TO COVER COST OF OPERATIONS

Mr. Wally Firth (Northwest Territories): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Solicitor General in his capacity as Acting Minister for Indian Affairs and Northern Development. The subject matter is the extremely high cost of electricity in the Northwest Territories. The people have been subjected to yet another increase by the Northern Canada Power Commission in the order of 10.5 per cent.

In view of the fact that some power bills now received by home owners exceed the cost of the mortgage payments, I would ask the minister whether he will consider seeking an amendment to the Northern Canada Power Commission Act which stipulates that the power commission must set its rates to cover the cost of operations in each of its two zones; and would the minister consider turning over responsibility for the Northern Canada Power Commission to the two territorial councils of the Yukon and Northwest Territories?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I will be pleased to take notice of the representations by the hon. gentleman.

Oral Questions

AGRICULTURE

PRICE OF HERBICIDES—STEPS TO ASSIST FARMERS

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the fact that certain herbicides are priced much lower in the United States than in Canada, even if one takes into account the discounting of the Canadian dollar against the U.S. dollar, in view of the fact that the Canadian farmer must compete in the international market and get international prices as the return for his products; and in view of the overwhelming evidence that the price of certain herbicides is much higher, will he reconsider his position, opening the border to allow Canadian farmers to purchase herbicides in the U.S. if that is the best deal they can get?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member makes it all sound very simple. I do not agree with everything he said. Many herbicides in Canada are cheaper than they are in the United States. No American farmer has ever been allowed to come into Canada and purchase herbicides to take back into the United States for his own use. It is against the law in their country to do that because the registration in respect of quality may not be the same here as in the United States.

The same thing is true in reverse. We have adopted the same law here because some products do not meet out registration demands and qualifications. There are many herbicides, as I said, which are much cheaper in Canada than in the United States. In addition, the United States has a 14 per cent tariff in respect of chemicals going into that country even if they are manufactured here in Canada where there is no tariff on their coming into Canada if brought in legitimately.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, there are tariffs, but even with those and the discounted Canadian dollar certain products are priced much lower in the United States, and Canadian farmers can only obtain an income from selling on international markets. In view of the overwhelming evidence possessed by farm groups, individual farmers and members of parliament, if the evidence is given to the minister once again will he consider changing the policy relating to herbicides in respect of which Canadian farmers are now being penalized severely?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, Canadian farmers are not being penalized. I am the Minister of Agriculture for all of Canada—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whelan: —and I have to consider the picture as a whole scene in respect of herbicides. I can go into the maritimes, for example, and find that with regard to potato herbicides the price is lower there than it is in Maine. I can go into Alberta and find that herbicides there are cheaper than they are in Montana. Neither the people from Montana nor from Maine can import those herbicides because it is against the law, in addition to which there is a tariff. However, there is no tariff on herbicides coming into Canada, as the hon. member has indicated.

[Mr. Blais.]

SPECIAL IMPORT PERMITS FOR AGRICULTURAL CHEMICALS

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture along the same lines. Since the Canada-United States border will not be opened to the free flow of chemicals, which some of us on this side of the House have advocated, let me refer to committee proceedings dated Tuesday, March 21, where the minister, in reply to a question I asked, stated:

> We are considering doing some other things that I am not free to make public at this time—suggestions by some farm organizations on how we import chemicals.

Has the minister given any consideration to allowing specific or special import permits for agricultural chemicals which are in some cases between 60 per cent and 100 per cent cheaper in the United States than in Canada? Would the minister give consideration to this request?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am perfectly willing to look at any evidence the hon. member may have. I have an advisory group that is appointed from the industry, farm organizations, which reviews prices in the United States and in Canada. I am sure that the hon. member realizes if we had fixed prices the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs would be after me in relation to a combine, particularly if we allowed that kind of situation to exist. There is competition in respect of these chemicals among distributors in Canada.

If the hon. member has real evidence, I will consider it. But no evidence has been presented to me by anyone, which I am aware of at the present time, that indicates a 100 per cent discrepancy. If the hon. member can come forward with that kind of fact, I certainly will consider some different action to what we have taken in the past.

TRADE

EFFECT OF GATT NEGOTIATIONS ON TEXTILES

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I want to address a question to the Deputy Prime Minister: it relates to questions asked last week regarding textiles and GATT. In view of the fact that the United States protects and maintains 90 per cent of the U.S. textile market for U.S. textile producers, and that similarly the European Economic Community protects and maintains 85 per cent of that textile market for its own domestic producers, what percentage of the Canadian textile market will be maintained for the domestic textile industry in Canada after the cuts which the minister referred to last week are made at GATT?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I think I can repeat with even greater certainty what I said last week, that there is little prospect that big or major cuts will take place in the textile or clothing sectors as a result of negotiations at Geneva. For reasons that are well known, the textile industry is not the most robust in any of the industrialized countries and all negotiating partners are aware of the difficulties in undertaking substantial cuts in that area.

● (1452)

Mr. Dick: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Considering that under this government the domestic share of the textile market has gone from 64 per cent in 1966 to 40 per cent in 1978, may I ask what the government intends to do to reverse this trend? If we had a 64 per cent share of the market, we would have another 80,000 jobs today and 80,000 fewer persons on unemployment insurance.

Mr. Basford: Ask him where he got that French tie.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, from time to time the government has taken steps to provide protection for the textile and shoe industries. Whatever steps are under contemplation will be announced in the usual way.

Mr. Dick: Why does the Minister of Justice call this a French tie? Is he upset about it? Doesn't he like French ties?

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

LAY-OFFS IN QUEBEC—REQUEST GOVERNMENT RECONSIDERS SALES TAX PROPOSALS OF PROVINCE

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations. I have here a report put out by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce from which I should like to quote a brief paragraph. Quebec was the first victim of the recent increase in unemployment—

Mr. Speaker: Order. If the hon. member has a question to put, he should do so immediately.

Mr. Grafftey: As the report claims that of the jobs lost in Canada over the last two years 30,000 to 36,000 in the manufacturing sector were lost in the province of Quebec, specifically in textiles, clothing, furniture and footwear, can the government now give the House the assurance that, because of the conditions mentioned in the report, it is now seriously considering the proposal of the Quebec minister of finance with regard to the sales tax?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member should refer to the report put out in the last few weeks on the state of the footwear, textile and furniture industries in particular; he would then realize that it is above all thanks to the measures adopted by the government, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, and the Minister of Finance, who imposed quotas and reductions on imports, that those industries are now in a better position than they have been in several years. In fact, some of them are doing so well that one has to wait from six to eight months before getting delivery of their goods.

The federal government took steps in the last two years which have led to a considerably improved situation in those industries. As for the general state of the manufacturig industry in Quebec, the hon. member knows full well that the constitutional policy adopted by the Quebec government at the present time has not been conducive to the creation of jobs in the province. Finally, with regard to the sales tax, my colleague, the Minister of Finance, made a reasonable offer to his Quebec counterpart. The latter turned it down, suggesting he had another proposal to make. We shall wait and see what that proposal is. My colleague made it very clear that he would be quite willing to pursue discussions further on the matter.

Mr. Grafftey: I would like to ask a supplementary question.

I would like to know if the federal government is preparing another proposal for the province of Quebec regarding the sales tax. In view of the fact, Mr. Speaker, that in another federal government report the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce said that the adoption of the proposal put forth by the Quebec minister of finance would even help job creation and the economy of other provinces, as Quebec imports a good deal of clothing, footwear, furniture, and the like, will the confrontation with Quebec continue or will we seriously consider the Quebec finance minister's proposal?

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, there has never been any question of confrontation on that level. The federal Minister of Finance consulted with all his colleagues, including his Quebec counterpart. In fact, consultations with the Quebec minister of finance started 18 days prior to the presentation of the budget, around March 23 I believe, and there have been continued consultations between Mr. Parizeau and the federal Minister of Finance, as well as between the officials concerned. So the government did not seek a climate of confrontation, quite the opposite; this was done in an attempt to come to a solution of co-operation on that level. Unfortunately the Quebec government decided not to co-operate and afterwards came up with a proposal of its own, which created problems. We have no objection to the Quebec government eliminating the sales tax. We have in fact proposed to extend the federal contribution.

[English]

RETURN OF GRANT MADE TO QUEBEC CANADA MOVEMENT

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations. Has the Quebec Canada movement returned the $265,-520 grant that the federal government gave, as the other unity groups had declared their opposition to this donation?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): I regret to see that the hon. member seems ill-informed, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps I should ask him to verify his facts. As far as I know, the groups involved in the question of national unity did not express their opposition to the granting of federal funds. This is true for all groups throughout Canada which receive such funds, including those operating in Quebec. I do not know of groups or organizations in Quebec or elsewhere which raised objections in this regard. I would be very happy to hear the additional information the hon. member may have on this subject.

[English]

Mr. Ritchie: Does the minister feel that this grant can be justified in a moral sense and with due regard for a difficult democratic process?

[Translation]

Mr. Lalonde: Frankly, I think the hon. member is still more confused in his second question than in the first one. Funds are made available to all kinds of groups throughout Canada which are interested in an extremely important matter, namely national unity. Not only do I think that it is in accordance with the democratic process but also I hope with the wishes of all parties in the House which want this country to remain a united country, and I think it is the responsibility of the government of Canada to contribute to this matter in an extremely positive way.

[English]

Mr. Speaker, I am amazed that a member of the opposition would be scandalized by the fact that the federal government would contribute to groups working in the area of national unity.

MANPOWER

PERMITS ISSUED TO FOREIGNERS TO WORK IN CANADA

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the fact that a Japanese firm, Fujitsu, is working on a contract to instal certain communications equipment for Teleglobe, a Crown corporation, at its offices on Pharmacy Avenue in Toronto, and in view of the fact that this work is being done by Japanese installers employed by Teleglobe brought into Canada to do that work and that more are expected, and in view of the fact that the minister's department has issued special work permits to these people, can the minister tell the House why his government is issuing special work permits to foreign nations to do work which could be done by unemployed, skilled Canadian labour?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am not familiar with the particular case to which the hon. member refers. In the ordinary course of events, we issue work permits or visas to individuals who have particular or special skills. This often results in more work for Canadians, not less. Because the Japanese bring in this particular skill, others who participate in the assembly process have jobs that they would not have if the skill was not available.

Mr. Rodriguez: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I never heard such hogwash in all my life. In view of the fact that Teleglobe is a Crown corporation, and at the present time has placed this order with a Japanese company and has Japanese workers at this plant, and in view of the fact that we have Canadian installers and Canadian manufacturers who can make this equipment, can the minister tell the House why a Crown corporation placed an order with a foreign installer, with foreign help, when Canadian firms are available to provide the equipment and service?

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member had a genuine interest in this particular problem, he could have given advance notice of a particular contract. He is more interested in bombast and rhetoric. I will check into it and find out the real answers, not those we have been hearing from the hon. member.

PRIVILEGE

MR. JARVIS—ANSWERS GIVEN BY SOLICITOR GENERAL DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege which relates to the questions I put to the Solicitor General (Mr. Blais) at the beginning of the question period. Subsequently similar questions were put to him by the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt). These questions related to 24 monthly reports prepared for and delivered to the then solicitor general in 1971, he now being the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Goyer). As a result of the answers given by the Solicitor General one thing appears clear, that these reports are no longer available. At least they are not available according to the present Solicitor General.

● (1502)

In my first question regarding these documents I understood the Solicitor General to say that they had been destroyed in the normal course because they were dated more than three years ago. Subsequently, when questions were put by the hon. member for New Westminster, the Solicitor General said, and I thank him for saying so, that he may have inadvertently been misleading in replying to my first question in that he presumed they may have been destroyed because this was the normal course of events.

The issue in my question of privilege is whether the Solicitor General did inadvertently mislead the House in terms of the destruction of these documents. What is difficult for me, sir, and I presume for all members of this House, is to believe that documents dated 1971 and 1972 may have been destroyed in the normal course of events, when subsequent documents of exactly the same nature, dated 1973 and 1974, were not destroyed but were adduced as evidence before the McDonald Commission. If I am not mistaken that evidence was adduced by Assistant Commissioner Venner. On the basis of the answers given today by the Solicitor General it is very difficult to understand whether documents dated 1971 and 1972 might have been destroyed in the normal course of events but subsequent documents of exactly the same nature were not.

I cannot stress too much the importance of these documents. The documents relate directly to the basis of knowledge of the then solicitor general about electronic surveillance activities. I did not say that it related to security service surveillance, not at all. I did not mention the words security services in any of my questions that I am aware of, but it is extremely important when one realizes the nature of the documents.

It is a monthly report to the Solicitor General which presumably he must initial receipt of, and presumably he may make notations on it instructing members of the RCMP as to his wishes with respect to this important part of law enforcement activities. The report goes directly to the Solicitor General of the day. Presumably instructions or notations may be added by the Solicitor General to those monthly documents. It goes to the very heart of the Solicitor General's knowledge of activities of the day. It has nothing to do with the infringement upon the rights of the McDonald Commission in the normal course of their inquiry. It is also inconceivable—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has made the point that the Solicitor General (Mr. Blais) may have misled the House during the course of his response to questions. That was the purpose for which he was given the floor. I do not want to restrict him unduly, but I do not think he ought to go on to argue the importance of the question.

Mr. Jarvis: Mr. Speaker, I apologize if I have infringed upon you. The destruction of documents is the issue upon which I raised my question of privilege. May I reserve my right to make the appropriate motion once I have had a chance to check the record, which is not available to me as yet? I think the important answer was the answer to the first question I put to the Solicitor General at the start of the question period today.

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, on that point I simply indicate to the hon. gentleman that I did point out subsequently that in the event that I did say they had been destroyed in categorical fashion, perhaps that could have been misleading to the hon. gentleman. I did correct that, Mr. Speaker, by indicating that I presumed they had been destroyed because that was the current procedure being followed within the RCMP, and that documents older than three years may have been destroyed. However, in order to answer the hon. gentleman, I would be pleased to check and find out if the documents might in some way be mislaid. I indicated to the hon. gentleman that the matter came to my attention this morning in the same way that it did to him.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a point and I would like to make it clear for all hon. members. It regards some reports concerning electronic surveillance that may have been submitted to me by the RCMP. Those reports have never been in my files, have never been stored in my filing cabinets, have always remained in the hands of the RCMP. And if such reports have been destroyed, I have never given instructions to that effect and I have not been involved in their destruction.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Perth-Wilmot (Mr. Jarvis) raised by way of a question of privilege answers which may have been misleading in some way to the House. That was the gist of his question of privilege. He requested an opportunity to examine the record to determine that. The Solicitor General has indicated in response that he will re-examine the problem to see if there is any matter which needs to be further clarified. This issue will remain in abeyance until those two steps have been taken.

MR. STANFIELD—SURVEILLANCE OF CANDIDATES SEEKING PUBLIC OFFICE

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I would like to raise a question of privilege. This afternoon I raised questions with the Solicitor General (Mr. Blais) which I think touch on matters of fundamental concern to members of this House respecting possible surveillance of candidates for election to this House as well as to other political offices in the country, on grounds which are admittedly set forth in a document.

I do not question and I do not rise in my place, after being in this House for ten years, to dispute the right of the Solicitor General to refuse to answer a question. I am not arguing that ordinarily he must answer my question. My question of privilege is that he did not simply refuse to answer the question, but that he took the position that this matter was in the hands of the McDonald Commission and will be dealt with, as I understood him, perhaps secretly. I took it that he was telling me that there was no way in which the Government of Canada would give me the information I was seeking as to whether these instructions have gone out, or whether members or candidates for election to this House are in fact subjected to this kind of surveillance under the very loose and broad terms as set forth in this document.

I suggest to you, sir, that it is a violation of the privileges of this House for a minister of the government not simply to say that he is not going to answer that question but for him to say that this is the business of the McDonald Commission and that this is really none of the business of members of this House.

I do not wish to take more time, but it is a matter about which I feel most strongly. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) told us that in 1975, for example, the government had instructed the security forces to discontinue surveillance of legitimate political parties in the country. I presume the Prime Minister made that statement to the House because he recognized that this is a matter of fundamental concern to members of this House. I submit in all seriousness that it is a breach of the privileges of this House for the Solicitor General, the chief minister responsible in this area of government in stating government policy, to tell me, as the member for Halifax, that it is none of my business, that this concerns security and it is not the business of any member of this House as to what kind of surveillance is exercised on candidates for this House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

● (1512)

Mr. Stanfield: I emphasize again, so there will be no confusion, that I am not disputing the right of the minister in the question period to refuse to answer my questions. He went far beyond that, I submit. If Your Honour believes I have a prima facie question of privilege, I will at the first opportunity submit a motion to this effect.

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, the document to which the hon. member refers, was, as he well knows, the subject of a newspaper report this morning. I like the hon. gentleman and I would like him to be assured that it is my preoccupation and main concern to ensure there is never any breach of the privileges of any of the members of this House.

I would indicate to the hon. member that it is well recognized in matters affecting national security, and the operations of the security service are one of the areas affecting national security, that those matters are not made public in the House. That is the reason why the government, by order in council, created the McDonald inquiry. That inquiry is reviewing the procedures of the security service of the RCMP.

That has been the practice not only in this House and in Canada, but in all jurisdictions that owe their traditions to the Mother of Parliaments in Great Britain. When we are dealing with an article relating to documents that could well involve matters of national security, I suggest to the hon. member that the proper course of action is to keep those matters in confidence. If those matters need examination, then they are being examined now by the McDonald inquiry.

Relating to the surveillance of members of this House, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has written to the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark), and the same evidence has been made available to the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent), to the effect that there is not surveillance of the members of this House and there has not been while he has been Prime Minister of Canada.

Relating to the surveillance of the legitimate political parties, I replied to the hon. member very specifically to a specific inquiry, indicating that the Prime Minister had issued directives and that the security service of Canada is abiding by those directives.

In terms of surveillance of individuals who may be acting contrary to Section 16(2) of the Official Secrets Act, a section passed by this House, that is a matter of proper investigation by the security service of this country.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt) seeks the floor on a separate question of privilege. The hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin).

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I want to say that we feel the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Stanfield) has made a most important and valuable point, and that the privileges of this House are indeed concerned with the matter that he has raised.

First, it is said that because the McDonald Commission is making inquiries, the result of these inquiries may be postponed from month after month, that somehow or other that diminishes the powers of this House. I deny that proposition. This House is the supreme court of the land. There is no way in which the rights and privileges of this parliament can be curtailed merely by reason of the fact that some other tribunal is inquiring into some aspects of the fact.

We go from there to the same old thing which we have heard again and again, namely, reference to national security. If there are documents that throw light upon whether the members of this House are or have been subjected to surveillance, then no question of national security arises with regard to that matter. This is a matter which mainly affects the members of this House. I think we are entitled to the fullest answers from the minister. Let him give up these weak-kneed, foolish, misleading, and thoroughly unsound suggestions that, because it affects national security, this House is not to get the information to which it is clearly entitled.

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I wish to continue briefly on the same question of privilege, further to the remarks of the hon. member who has just spoken.

The Solicitor General (Mr. Blais) in dealing with this general question ought to say to this House whether he in fact is satisfied with the attitudes and truthfulness of some of the top officials of the RCMP on whom he has to depend for information, which in turn he has to give to the House. I say this in view of the answer given by Superintendent J. P. Nowlan to counsel named Bruno Pateras when he was questioning an operation which he considered typical of illegal activities. He asked Superintendent Nowlan, "To what limit will you go, if there is a limit, in giving information that is false?" Superintendent Nowlan said, if this newspaper report is correct, that "it depended on the situation."

The Solicitor General owes the House a clear and definitive statement as to what length he will go before he will take action, keeping in mind what the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) has said about the tendency to put all the responsibility on the McDonald Royal Commission. The Solicitor General should definitively say if there is a point to what limit he will go in apologizing, covering up, or condoning lack of information which surely he must know he, as minister, was entitled to receive before this time.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Stanfield) has raised, by way of a question of privilege, questions and answers that may have a fundamental relationship to the ability of persons to campaign for membership in this House free from any interference. That was the purpose of the matter raised by the hon. member for Halifax and certainly the very clear tone of the support given to it by the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) and the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay) who contributed to that side of the discussion.

The hon. member for Halifax did not accompany his remarks by a motion today which would call for some action by the Chair. He did indicate that, after reflection, if the Chair felt there was a basic matter of privilege involved, he might put a motion in due course. I will therefore give the matter further consideration.

MR. LEGGATT—ANSWERS GIVEN BY SOLICITOR GENERAL DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, my question of privilege arises as a result of the answers given by the Solicitor General (Mr. Blais) in the House today concerning the correction that he made to the answer given to the hon. member for Perth-Wilmot (Mr. Jarvis). In answer to the hon. member for Perth-Wilmot, he indicated he may have been in error by saying that the missing 24 documents were destroyed. He indicated in his answer that those 24 documents in fact may have been mislaid.

My question of privilege is this: while I realize the Solicitor General does not have an obligation to make answer in this House, he surely has some reasonable obligation to this House to inform himself so that he can make some answer. In this particular instance, the records of the RCMP, in terms of the documents that have been destroyed, are available to the Solicitor General. He comes very close to misleading this House by simply refusing to ask the question or get the information before appearing here, on a day when he knows that the major business of the House will deal with his department, and when he knows from news reports he has read over the past three days that it is his department that is under attack. If he does not want to answer and say it is in front of the McDonald inquiry, that is one matter. Another question is whether he should make any kind of reasonable inquiry to determine the accuracy or otherwise of newspaper reports.

It is clear the minister has not done that today. It is clear he has not checked that with the RCMP in terms of records being destroyed, otherwise he would have been able to provide a clear answer to the hon. member for Perth-Wilmot. I submit that comes as close to misleading hon. members on this side as you can get.

Privilege—Mr. Brisco

MR. BRISCO—EXAMINATION OF DEPARTMENTAL ESTIMATES

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a new question of privilege to seek your advice and assistance. Although there is nothing unusual about a motion under Standing Order 43 being rejected for lack of unanimous consent, it nevertheless brought to bear the question of the failure of certain ministers to bring their estimates before a standing committee.

I am disturbed over the fact that not only have we had such a refusal in the Standing Committee on Labour Manpower and Immigration, but it is perhaps coincidental that for some time now there has been the absence of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Faulkner), the periodic absence of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Milne), and the protracted absence of the chairman of the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs.

● (1522)

In spite of the charges and allegations which I have made, and which have gone unchallenged, I am concerned that there should still the be failure to call the estimates of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development before the standing committee. In the face of these facts I would appeal to you, Mr. Speaker, to take such measures as would oblige ministers to bring their estimates before the standing committees. What are they trying to hide?

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): I intend to be very brief, Mr. Speaker. I sought to raise this matter today under the terms of Standing Order 43. The Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration has not been called upon to examine estimates since the estimates were referred to it. The committee has nevertheless examined in detail Bill C-8 and Bill C-45. When we were considering Bill C-45 I raised this question of the referral of estimates to the committee—I made a point of it and discussed the matter with the chairman. But at no time have we received any commitment that the estimates would be brought before us. There is roughly one month left for this work, otherwise the estimates will be deemed to have been passed. It is of critical importance that members should be given an opportunity to examine these estimates on behalf of the people.

An hon. Member: It may be only one hour.

Mr. Epp: Whether there is an election or not, the principle remains. The government, and, to be specific, the chairmen of parliamentary committees, have used their positions to prevent estimates being examined, and I appeal to you, Mr. Speaker, to give us some advice and guidance on the matter and explain what rights we have on behalf of our constituents to examine these estimates. The restriction of time now available to us makes a farce of the committee system.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Without consulting the precedents, my memory, if it serves me well, tells me it is fundamental to the whole system that there be an examination of estimates and, this being the case, the phase of the parliamentary authority which relates to the financial accountability of our work here, demands that when the estimates are referred to the standing committees they be examined there in a meaningful way, and that members ought not in any circumstances to be deprived of their right to carry out such an examination. However, it is not entirely clear that the Chair has a very direct line of authority, although I would think it at least has one of inquiry into the matter to determine whether or not there has been any difficulty. I would presume that those concerned with the management of business in the particular standing committees referred to would want to contribute to our discussion before I made any decision. I will certainly give them the chance to do so.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. MALONE—ROLE OF MINISTER OF NATIONAL REVENUE VIS-À-VIS HOUSE OF COMMONS

Mr. Arnold Malone (Battle River): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I rose to catch your eye during the question period today and my question would have been directed to the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Guay) if he were not in the Senate. I would ask any of the ministers on the other side, since the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen) is not in the House, who is the minister in charge of Revenue Canada? This is just in case I should catch your eye at some future date.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): I believe that question was answered yesterday.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Not satisfactorily.

Mr. Hogan: If the answer was given yesterday, would the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) please repeat it so that we might know to whom we can direct questions?

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING TIME PERIOD COVERING ELECTION EXPENSES

Mr. Jim Balfour (Regina East) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-446, to amend the Canada Elections Act (election expense period).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Balfour: Mr. Speaker, this bill is in response to reports that some candidates nominated for the next federal election have already spent as much as $50,000 on pre-election campaigning. Although such expenditures are currently unrestricted, this spending is in clear violation of the spirit of the Election Expenses Act which attempts to make campaigning fairer by imposing ceilings on campaign expenditures. By extending the time during which election expenses are deemed to have been incurred to include the period following a candidate's nomination but before an election writ has been issued, this bill recognizes that in practice election campaigning begins long before elections are called. The effect of the bill would be to close a loophole in our election procedures.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

FINANCIAL ADMINISTRATION ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING GARNISHMENT PROCEEDINGS

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-49, to amend the Financial Administration Act (Garnishment).

He said: Mr. Speaker, checking the authorities I find it is appropriate for me to rise on a point of order at this point inasmuch as this bill involves a matter of the Crown's prerogative, and to point out to the House, after leave is granted and before first reading, that His Excellency the Governor General has been informed of the purport of this bill, and has given his consent as far as Her Majesty's prerogatives are affected to the consideration by parliament of the bill, that parliament may do therein as it thinks fit.

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I do not rise to question what the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) has said. I think the procedure he has felt bound to follow today is one which might appropriately be followed hereafter with respect to government bills generally so that there would be no need for us to wait for press statements and so on. I think a short summary from ministers with respect to their bills is just as important as a short summary from private members on such occasions.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. MALONE—ROLE OF MINISTER OF NATIONAL REVENUE VIS-À-VIS HOUSE OF COMMONS

Mr. Arnold Malone (Battle River): Further to my point of order, Mr. Speaker. I have checked through Hansard for yesterday and I find nothing in there which indicates who speaks on behalf of Revenue Canada. I wish to raise a series of questions with whoever is responsible and again I ask, who is the minister?

Mr. Speaker: The Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) is correct. The matter was dealt with and an answer was given by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). Whether that answer was satisfactory or not is something the hon. member could take up at the next question period.

Order Paper Questions

RCMP—RECORD OF DOCUMENTS INCINERATED

Question No. 766—Mr. Broadbent:

1. Is there a practice, established either by statute, regulation, policy directive or otherwise, that the Royal Canadian Mounted Police maintain a list or file of all documents pertaining to investigations, that have been incinerated?

2. Is there a list of the documents that were incinerated by the RCMP on June 2 and June 3, 1977 and, if not, for what reason?

3. Is there a practice, established either by statute, regulation, policy directive or otherwise, that sets out the period of time that documents related to RCMP activities are maintained prior to their incineration or destruction and, if so (a) what is the period of time (b) was such a practice followed regarding the incineration of documents on June 2 and June 3, 1977 and, if not, for what reason?

4. Is there a practice, either by statute, regulation, policy directive or otherwise, that all documents, prior to their destruction by the RCMP, are microfilmed and, if so, was such a practice followed in relation to the documents that were incinerated on June 2 and June 3, 1977 and, if not, for what reason?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Solicitor General): 1. No. The only requirement is a statistical report on the volume of records destroyed annually which must be submitted to the Dominion Archivist.

2. No. There is no requirement to compile or retain such a list.

3. Yes. This period is known as the retention period and is the time the records are retained prior to a review for disposition. This review may cause a record to be destroyed, to have a further period of retention added or to have the record classed as historical and thereafter retained indefinitely. (a) The retention periods are variable depending on the type of records and may be from one year and up as approved by the Dominion Archivist vide Public Records Order P.C. 1966-1749. (b) Yes.

4. No.

UIC—BENEFIT CONTROL INVESTIGATION

Question No. 815—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Is the Minister of Employment and Immigration aware that the Ottawa Journal of November 30, 1977 quoted him as saying that the so-called fraud squad within the Unemployment Insurance Commission had not been disbanded but "merely reorganized and it is ever vigilant to the situation"?

2. Was the Minister correctly quoted and, if so, has the situation changed since the answer to Question No. 2,765 of the Second Session of the 30th Parliament?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): 1. Yes.

2. Yes he was correctly quoted, and, the situation on which the reply to question 2765 of the Second Session of the Thirtieth Parliament remains the same. The Special Investigation Division of the former UIC was organized between late 1973 and early 1974. At the end of 1974 the operations of the division, which had been carried out separately from the benefit control activity were decentralized and integrated with normal benefit control investigation activities. The Special Investigation Division has not been in existence since early 1975.

EXPENDITURES IN NICKEL BELT

Question No. 1,111—Mr. Rodriguez:

For each fiscal year since 1970, what amount was spent in the Constituency of Nickel Belt by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce and those agencies that report to it?

Mr. Bernard Loiselle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): In so far as the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce is concerned:

* Amounts are for grants and contributions only. Departmental accounting records for administrative and operational expenditures are not kept in a manner which readily allows breakdown by constituency.

In so far as Statistics Canada is concerned: For each fiscal year since 1970 the approximate expenditures in the constituency of Nickel Belt were as follows:

	Labour Force Survey $	Census $	Total $
1970/71	2,000	49,000	51,000

1975/76	4,500	78,000	82,500
1976/77	2,300		2,300

* The increase in cost resulted from the fact that both the old and the new LFS were run for one year. As well, the sample size for subsequent surveys was doubled.

In so far as Foreign Investment Review Agency is concerned: None.

In so far as the Metric Commission is concerned: Not applicable.

1969	1	111
1970	1	91
1971	4	101

* One more course is scheduled for 1978 and it is anticipated there will be some women participants.

Every year, a few specially selected middle level public servants are chosen to study at institutions with an international reputation. These are, l'École nationale d'administration, Paris, France (program started in 1964), the British Program for Administrative Principals, London, England, (program started in 1967), l'École nationale d'administration publique, Quebec City, Canada, (program started in 1970), College of Europe, Bruges, Belgium, (program started in 1977). established program in 1977, only 114 public servants have participated of which there were 5 women. To date a total number of 92 women have been sponsored for the Career Assignment Program and the Special Development Programs. Several federal departments have designed programs to benefit and enhance the career opportunities for their own women employees. Data on these programs is not available from the Public Service Commission.

REVIEW OF RETIREMENT INCOME SYSTEM

Question No. 1,456—Mr. Alexander:

1. Did the government establish a committee to review the area of retirement income including options available to holders of registered retirement savings plans (RRSP's) and, if so (a) on what date (b) to which Minister does it report (c) what are its terms of reference (d) who are the Members?

2. Will the committee determine what options are available to holders of registered retirement savings plans when they reach the age of 71?

3. Is the committee expected to report its findings or recommendations and, if so (a) on what date will it report (b) will they be tabled in the House of Commons?

Mr. Ed Lumley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): 1. The government began a review of the retirement income system in 1976. The review is being conducted under the auspices of the Minister of Finance, the Minister of National Health and Welfare and the President of the Treasury Board. The ministers are being assisted by officials from their respective departments, other departments and a task force. The review covers the various sources of retirement income including the public pension programs, employer-sponsored pensions and personal saving, as well as registered retirement savings plans (RRSPs).

2. The options available to holders of registered retirement savings plans have been reviewed and, as a result of this examination, two additional alternatives to holders of RRSPs were introduced in the recent Budget (April 10, 1978). The new options available are as follows: (a) a fixed-term annuity may be purchased to provide benefits to age 90, and (b) the savings may be transferred to a new investment vehicle—a Registered Retirement Income Fund (RRIF). Financial and other institutions that are now eligible to issue RRSPs will be permitted to offer the new options. Under both alternatives, retirement income will be provided to age 90. Further details are available in the budget document.

3. The task force report is expected to be available for consideration by ministers within the next month or so. A decision concerning tabling of a public document based on the report will be taken after the cabinet has had an opportunity to study it.

EXPORT DEVELOPMENT ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed, from Monday, April 24, consideration of the motion of Mr. Horner that Bill C-36, to amend the Export Development Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to speak about this bill because I think it exemplifies some of our major problems in export markets. The intention to assist exporters is, of course, laudable and beneficial to certain small companies. Under certain circumstances that assistance is recommended. The idea of assisting a small struggling Canadian company to land an order in a developing country has much appeal. It appeals to our sense of trying to help the Canadian company find its way through the maze of external politics in foreign countries, often in competition with other countries much more export-oriented than is Canada, particularly in the manufacturing field.

Furthermore, when there is any question about our aiding exports in the very large amounts we are, the answer always seems to be that other countries such as the United States, Germany, Japan, the United Kingdom, France, and Italy all have their own forms of export development assistance, and unless we do the same our companies will be at a serious disadvantage.

When we look at our exports of manufactured goods and the locations of firms given assistance by the Export Development Corporation, we can easily come to the conclusion that nearly all our exports of manufactured goods off the North American continent are financed by the EDC.

Recent actions of the EDC call into question the value of much of what it has been doing. If it is necessary to give so much export assistance to many of our producers, surely it is questionable that this is a good way to go about promoting exports. The mere fact that so many of our exports are financed by the EDC and need to have that assistance, really means that that portion of our economy not assisted by government is being forced to help that portion which is.

Certainly the EDC in the broadest sense seems to be nothing more than an export subsidy program, albeit the intention is to assist our exports. There certainly are disadvantages. What about some of the loans the EDC has been making? From a social point of view, assisting developing nations and lending to companies involved in these markets strikes a responsive chord generally among Canadians. However, what about financing steel mills in Texas and New Jersey? Are those developing states in the great U.S.A.?

We have always considered our pulp and paper industry to be one of our leading exporters, yet on February 8, 1974, the

[Mr. Speaker.]

EDC announced a $82.5 million loan for a forestry plant in Iran. Oil prices have quadrupled the income of Iran in the last four years. In 1976, $102 million went to a pulp and paper mill in Poland. In 1977, $1.8 million went to a pulp and paper project in Peru, which has a left-wing dictatorship and has just completed the purchase of many military aircraft from Russia, some of which passed through Dorval on January 19 of this year. In November of 1977 there was a $102 million loan for a new pulp and paper mill in Iran, and in December of 1977, $5.5 million went to a pulp and paper mill in Romania. In March $57 million was put up for two projects in Argentina. In Argentina we are building an atomic plant at a loss of some $100 million.

It seems that Canadian exporters have to be assisted to obtain export orders abroad. Many recipient countries, such as Poland, have the avowed aim of destroying our society as we know it, while others, such as Algeria, Iran, and Venezuela, are wealthy countries and have the capacity to be as stable and as wealthy as Canada, yet we see fit to lend them money at low rates of interest. Officials of the EDC have stated that the money is borrowed outside the country and that it does not constitute a burden on the Canadian economy, but the mere fact that the money is borrowed abroad does not absolve Canada from responsibility. In fact, the covenant of Canada is also on loan. It is almost the same as co-signing a note at the bank for a friend. EDC loans eventually are a charge on the Canadian economy and must be made good if the loans should be negated.

As I understand it, most of the money is borrowed in the Euro-dollar market. More and more this market, evidently, becomes less and less stable, and some suggest that that might create an economic recession.

The Euro-dollar has no backing. If a person makes a deposit of $10,000 in a bank in Europe and keeps that deposit in the form of dollars, the bank lends out those dollars to a creditor in Europe or in some other part of the world, who then re-lends them to someone else. The Euro-dollar is an American currency which has not been changed into the currency of the country of receipt. The United States does not owe those dollars and is not obligated to redeem them. If a person receives value for his goods, and if the money is held in the form of American dollars, those dollars still rest in the Euro-dollar market, and the United States Treasury has no obligation.

There are $350 billion to $400 billion Euro-dollars whose value has already been received, and there is no bank standing behind those dollars. This is where the EDC borrows its money. That money cannot be presented to the United States treasury for gold, for U.S. treasury notes or for U.S. greenbacks. There is an uncontrolled mass of money floating around in the world monetary sky. It has no home and no guarantor, and this is where the EDC is getting its money. This indicates that, in the final analysis, Canada is responsible for the loans made by the EDC, even though the officials of the EDC try to say it is not.

There is increasing concern about the world economic situation, and there are those who suggest that the western world is on the brink of a depression. Throughout the capitalist west, unemployment seems to be moving upward. Depressing events are occurring, and the old economic mechanisms appear to be losing efficiency. Economies cannot be managed the way they once were. The British found that they incurred heavy budgetary deficits, but inflation continued to rise.

In connection with the problems of the EDC it should be pointed out that no convincing theory has been advanced to provide an alternative to the old mechanisms. Monetarists suggest solutions, but those solutions mean creating more unemployment, at least at the beginning, for which there is considerable resistance in democratic societies where people elect politicians. No one could have forecast the sudden fourfold increase in the price of oil which spoiled all the neat long-range forecasts of that time. Arising out of this oil price increase, the current instability in the balance of payments, and chaos in international currency markets, there have been no new mechanisms developed to deal with the situation. One of the disturbing effects of all this, including the actions of vehicles such as the EDC, has been that we are internationalizing economic policy.

At the recent summit meetings in France, Puerto Rico, and Britain—and the one coming in July in Bonn—economic politics dominated. Mr. Callaghan, the British Prime Minister, is relying on the Bonn summit to provide some answers. We are relying on the EDC to provide help, and increasingly economics are taking the place of weapons in defensive alliances. At last year's summit in London all the participants agreed to increase economic growth so that world trade would expand and unemployment fall, but this has not happened. Germany, which many nations blame for not having done enough, has tried to re-inflate its economy on three occasions, but the result has been a disappointment.

The great problem is that the United States, the great economic locomotive of this world, is plagued by a falling dollar, a balance of payments deficit of astronomical proportions, and an economy which threatens to be severely inflated. Small wonder then that protectionism is rife and that it gives economic internationalists bad dreams. It is a problem for the Export Development Corporation.

The protectionist lobby in Great Britain, which is mostly left wing, complains that the number of unemployed in Britain might increase to 4.5 million, that is, three times as great as at present.

Import controls are another subject about which the protectionists are complaining. The industrialized west could also raise high tariffs against Asian countries, notably Japan. President Giscard d'Estaing seems to be following this line. The dilemma which faces the world is obvious, with the protectionists arguing that, if countries do not follow their policy, a depression will result, while the opponents of protectionism argue that it is the introduction of these tariffs which will result in a depression. Most people agree that one way or another we are going to have problems, and this is a sobering thought for those in the western world.

No one would seriously doubt that we have been able to maintain our high standard of living largely owing to the availability of cheap energy in the form of oil and gas. Although there might be a small glut of oil now, the future seems bleak. The United States, the great locomotive of the world, is now importing almost half the oil it uses. If U.S. oil supply is cut off in the Middle East by either the Russians or any other nation in that sector of the globe, it will result in severe economic hardship for the United States, and perhaps severe depression.

Anything can be exported at a price, and Canada is becoming a source of cheap and ready money to some of our intensive competitors. I have spoken about the financing by EDC of the $100 million pulp and paper mill in Poland. The government, and others, expect Poland to be one of the major competitors in the European pulp and paper market. Karl Marx said long ago that capitalists are so anxious to sell that the Marxist states can continue buying from them in sufficient quantities to keep their own struggling economies alive until they are in a position to overpower them.

Obviously there comes a time when the indiscriminate lending of money for export purposes ceases to be useful. It is unfortunate that what started out to be a useful tool, with the increase in multilateral trade, has reached the point of no return.

In many ways this bill exemplifies the dilemma in which Canada finds itself. In the past 25 years we have had a contrived type of economy, that is, we continue to help one part of the country over another by one kind of government intervention or another, and we favour one area of the country over another by means of government intervention. A classic example of this is the official interference, at least in a moral sense, to prevent the move of Sun Life headquarters from Montreal to Toronto. For some reason the government feels that Sun Life should stay in Montreal. But Montreal is part of Quebec, and that province has said that the use of the English language should be kept to a minimum, if at all. However, it should be kept in mind that the vast majority of Sun Life policy holders come from the English speaking part of the country.

As many industries are now finding out, it is difficult to work in the second language and to have a head office working in a language other than that used by the main group of subscribers, particularly when on this continent English is the language of business. Sun Life is a co-operative mutual insurance company which belongs to its policy holders, and it should have the privilege of deciding where its head office is located in Canada. It should have the right to decide even to move its headquarters to the United States if it so wishes. In view of the fact that the company is a mutual insurance company, the individual policy holders of which have the right to vote, there should be no government interference and no government disapproval of the decision of the millions of policy holders.

Surely people with investments are entitled to move their investments to whatever location they feel is safe and will bring them the best return. Obviously the fear expressed by many policy holders of Sun Life, that they will be unable to collect their pension should the company remain in Montreal, is very real to them.

Indeed, many parts of Canada would benefit from the movement of head offices out of Montreal, particularly the movement out of Montreal of Crown corporations. So far as western Canada is concerned, both Air Canada and CNR, with their headquarters in Montreal, are totally oblivious to the needs of western Canadians.

Now I would like to return to some of the problems facing the Export Development Corporation. In 1968 its budget was $2 billion. Now the minister is asking for $26 billion. Even taking into account the high rise in inflation, this increase is of great magnitude. Obviously the minister does not expect any export of industrial goods from our country to take place unless it is subsidized by the EDC.

Let us consider again the pulp and paper industry which is one of our largest money earners, with a high level of efficiency. In spite of this, we are lending money all around the world at low rates of interest to countries such as Iran, Poland, and Peru—we have made further loans to Iran this year—to Romania and Argentina, presumably because the EDC believes that the Canadian pulp and paper industry is not going to prosper and that it is better to sell pulp and paper machinery at subsidized interest rates to other countries. But what about our own industry? It will have to modernize its pulp and paper facilities at the going rate of interest of 10 per cent to 15 per cent, while its competitors around the world can get Canadian loans at low interest rates.

Small business can be analogous to big business. Every small businessman could expand his business if he could get his friends to co-sign a note at the bank. Occasionally a small businessman might get an order as a result, but if he persists in following this practice, his business will depend on other people co-signing. This is not a good practice, and it might cause the business to collapse in the long run.

According to EDC reports, many of our exports of manufactured end products from this country have to be financed by the EDC. The question arises as to whether or not the EDC has been successful and whether we have not reached the stage where we will only be able to export our manufactured goods with the assistance of EDC. What will happen then is that the EDC assistance will be a form of subsidy, and the cost of Canadian goods will rise to cover the subsidy. Industries which have exported goods on their own might find that they can no longer compete because the goods are subsidized by EDC at the cost of those that are not. In short, the EDC has a role and a place, and we must question whether or not the role it is playing has become so large that its activities are detrimental to the export community.

[Mr. Ritchie.]

When EDC first came into existence there was a need for assistance to Canadian firms wishing to export. No one questions that, and this need continues. However, the activities of EDC might become detrimental in the case of certain exports. We seem to have a passion for exporting manufactured goods at all times, but we must remember that we can only export as much as we import over a period of time. If our export of manufactured goods increases, other products such as grain, raw materials, and pulp and paper, must decrease as, relatively speaking, one cannot go on exporting more than one imports over a period of time.

I will follow with interest some of the matters I have raised when the bill is considered in committee. I believe that as a nation we must consider how much we want to finance and subsidize our exports. Certainly EDC has a subsidizing role to play without damaging the competitive ability of our industry. This is a matter of judgment which is not easily defined. Perhaps some answers will arise when it is studied in committee.

● (1552)

Mr. Andy Hogan (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise in order to point out a few simple facts relating to the bill before the House and its relationship to the Canadian economy.

Opposition has been expressed by members of parliament to the extension of funds to the Export Development Corporation. That corporation claims it needs those funds in order to fulfil its objectives. Generally parliamentarians, including myself, suffer from a lack of understanding, or perhaps there has not been enough openness concerning the activities of the Export Development Corporation. There is some confusion surrounding the prime objective of EDC.

In any institution which grows and is an appendage of a department, there comes a time when the original purpose evolves into other types of things which were not originally intended in the legislation. The Export Development Corporation is an appendage of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. When the Export Development Corporation was established, it was to assist Canadian exporters. Economic historians have written great tomes about staple exports, particularly since the famous Toronto economist, Mr. Innis, forecast a period of such growth for Canada. He indicated, from an economic point of view that Canada had many natural resources, what he called staples. Our resource industry began with the fur trade and expanded into such things as wheat, minerals, and oil. Economists indicate that Canada has a comparative advantage. Perhaps it is not an economic rule. Perhaps it is just logic which has been taken over by economists, this notion of comparative advantage. The development of Canada has stressed both renewable and non-renewable resources. In the natural course of our development, we became an exporting nation because of our primary resource industries, both renewable and non-renewable.

As time went on, other countries discovered similar resources or substitute resources which could be sold on world markets. To this day, by and large we are a nation which depends upon staples for the standard of living which we experience. When our exports are in trouble, our nation is in great trouble. At the present time our current account deficit is running extremely high. In the past it was covered by capital inflows and borrowings abroad. At the present time it has not balanced out because of the failure of our monetary, fiscal, export, and general commercial policies.

Canada does all right in the merchandise hard goods and soft goods sector, but we fall far behind in the service sector. In order to make up for this, we are forced into large borrowings. Our economy is still structured around the basic notion of exporting mainly primary resource and staple products, plus some processing of them. As far as manufactured end products are concerned, at the present time we are experiencing a deficit of approximately $11 billion. Although it does not seem to worry some people, it should.

Recently an hon. member referred to the idea that Canada is following its historical, natural comparative advantage. Also he indicated that we should not be worried about the fact that our manufacturing industry is not growing. He forgets that many of our comparative advantages are now dwindling because of competition from other countries, and because we have not succeeded in building our own manufacturing capability.

In the process of the evolution of our economy, since the export of staples was so important, during the post war period we arrived at full nationhood. Perhaps Canada is a small or medium-sized power as far as the giants are concerned, but our population grew from approximately 11 million people during the time of the war to approximately 23 million or 24 million people today.

The Export Development Corporation was established to give a shot in the arm to Canadian exports when they were in trouble, in order to maintain Canadian jobs and to increase Canadian jobs. In my section of the country there is a steel plant which is nowhere near the market place when compared to Ontario steel plants. Over the years that plant has depended to a large extent on semi-finished products, as well as being dependent upon selling rails to underdeveloped or less-developed countries. The steel plant has been dependent upon rail market orders, and through its period of public ownership that rail mill in Sydney has been largely assisted by the Export Development Corporation. Thus, EDC has maintained if not increased jobs in that area. Of course everyone realizes there has been a decrease in jobs in that steel plant. If the soft loans which were granted to countries like Mexico had not come about, that Sydney steel plant would have experienced less employment than at present. Another plant in Trenton which is owned by Hawker-Siddeley also was assisted to a large extent and was able to survive.

The original intent of the Export Development Corporation was to improve Canada's natural advantages, as well as our export sector, for the benefit of all Canadians. Some point out that in the evolution of the corporation, in recent years it has made new moves akin to things one might consider as being the function of a Canadian international development agency, such as supplying grants and loans to Canadian companies operating in other countries, with the jobs basically going to people in those other countries. It may be true that in some cases this helps Canada's balance of payments and employment picture, but I see this as the essential problem confronting those who are opposed to giving increased funding to the Export Development Corporation at this time. This is an important role for the EDC to fulfil, particularly at this time when we know these less developed countries of the world need help. Nevertheless, when we compare Canada with the United States, Russia, Japan, West Germany, and most other countries of the European Economic Community, this is still a developing country. For this reason we require the type of activity I alluded to in the two examples I gave.

What some of us feel, and a few very seriously, is that the Export Development Corporation has gone beyond its original purpose. It is getting out of hand in allowing certain multinational mining corporations to use its funds to create jobs in Guatemala and Indonesia, through developments such as that of the Inco plant in Sudbury.

We know of the work being done by Eric Kierans at McGill University in respect of what tax deferrals do for this type of thing. You have approximately $11 billion in tax deferrals by multinational corporations, and that is approximately the situation, given a slight interpolation from the last figures put out in the CALURA figures, and yet there is little real investment development in terms of equipment, plant and factories in Canada, most of which are operating at about 80 per cent capacity, then there is an apparent contradiction.

This government has acted through its fiscal policies to assist these large corporations. This was particularly true under former finance minister John Turner. It is amazing just to realize the number of tax deferrals allowed during that two or three year period. As a result of this type of thing and of retained earnings on the part of these corporations, many of them are now very liquid. Some of them suffer from a shortage of cash flow or capital, but many are very liquid.

Given the internal saving or retained earnings, and given the help offered by government in terms of tax and investment credits of a variety of kinds, including the tax deferrals I have mentioned, we cannot understand why these funds are not being turned into jobs for Canadians. The theory is that you put savings into insurance and trust companies, as well as banks and other institutions, which pay you interest, and in turn they lend out that money at a greater interest rate in order to make money for themselves. The corporations then take that money and turn it into plant and equipment for jobs. There is a great missing link here. We have more personal savings in Canada at this time, as a percentage of the g.n.p., as a percentage of disposal income, and as a percentage of national income, than at any time during the last ten years, but we still suffer high unemployment.

We have these special tax deferrals and tax investments which are not being used to increase the number of jobs to meet the needs of the Canadian labour force. If they were being used for this purpose we would not have the 1,040,000 or 1,080,000 unemployed at the present time, and those are the official figures according to Statistics Canada. My leader is not exaggerating when he suggests the real unemployment figure is closer to 1,400,000 when you take into account the number of discouraged workers who are no longer actively looking for employment.

We know the officials of the Export Development Corporation have done a great job in promoting exports throughout the history of this corporation. This is particularly true of the exports from my own area of the country, such as those from the Sydney and Trenton Steel works.

Many people are concerned about the other function of this corporation, and that is the promotion of Canadian multinational corporations, especially mining ones, no matter where they operate. I am wondering whether the Export Development Corporation should be pushing that function when the primary function, as I see it, was to assist export industries in Canada, both in the primary and manufacturing sectors, to compete internationally, through loans and in other ways, in order that jobs for workers would increase. This is vitally important in Canada at this time.

I try to be as fair as I can to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), particularly in relation to the national unity issue, but in the last four years the major failure of this Liberal government has been in its mismanagement of the economy of this country. This government has mismanaged the economy of this country to such an extent in the last four years that it makes one sad. If we are going to recover we must certainly find a means of developing manufacturing and processing industry in this country rather than in other countries of the world.

From a moral point of view we want to see these underdeveloped countries assisted economically, but we must look at the situation in our own country. I do not think the people in Alberta, who do not even have to pay any sales tax are generally happy that the situation in the maritimes, Newfoundland and elsewhere, is much worse. However, the situation there is not nearly as bad compared to the situation in many underdeveloped countries of the world. I do not think any Canadian will be satisfied until this gap between our standards of living and theirs has been closed. We have both the moral and economic obligation to help these countries, but I do not see that as the role of the Export Development Corporation. It is one for CIDA.

I have just one or two more points to make. Since coming to parliament I have said that one of the greatest failures of Liberal governments over the years has been in not gaining control of our own economy. I say this is a failure of a Liberal government because they have been in power most of the time, although some of my Tory friends were in power for a number of years.

[Mr. Hogan.]

I do not want to be as nationalistic as people in the independent movement in Canada but, Mr. Speaker, there is an important germ of truth in what they are trying to tell us. We cannot continue to have a deficit of $10 or $11 billion in manufactured goods because we lose the ability to produce the primary goods that, through technology, can be turned into finished manufactured goods.

An Australian economist, Colin Clark, has said that the growth of a nation's economy and the growth of the welfare of nations is such that you move from a primary resource stage—principally agriculture—and then, because of changing technology on the supply side and changing demand on the other side, most people get out of primary industries and go to the manufacturing sector and make that labour intensive. Things then become so technologically improved on the supply side and the demand side, with changes against the manufacturing sector, that most people are pushed over into the tertiary or service sector. In other words, you become a society that produces non-things called services, rather than a society that produces things which are called goods.

There is a parallel in all western nations, Mr. Speaker. Much of our labour force has moved into the service industries. Unlike the United States or Japan, Canada has jumped as it were from being a primary producer requiring little labour into a service sector, both government and private, without having a fully developed manufacturing sector. This is hurting us.

I think the Export Development Corporation should be putting emphasis in this area rather than enabling multinational corporations which originate in Canada—and to be fair which have supplied jobs to the primary sector in this country—to move into other countries. It should be helping us build our own manufacturing and processing industries.

There can be debate on how to go about this, given the decisions made in the past regarding tariff structure and capital borrowings from the United States. We must realize that for Canada, the day of reckoning has come, and we hate that to happen during a national unity crisis. We realize there are relatively few separatists in the province of Quebec—probably about 20 per cent, and we are all opposed to them despite the slur that the Prime Minister cast—probably in anger—on all in the opposition last week. It was not fair to say that because we opposed certain things about the sales tax agreement with Quebec that we were favouring the separatist party in Quebec. He can be forgiven, though, because at times we all say things in haste and anger.

The tariff that has protected industry in central Canada is no longer effective. In the last few months questions raised about Quebec in the daily question period generally relate to furniture, footwear, textiles and clothing. These industries have been over-protected from the beginning. Now the same thing is happening in Ontario. We have the most effective protective measures in the western world, Mr. Speaker. A study was done on this subject by Professor Barber of the University of Manitoba.

What the Export Development Corporation has done to help our export trade is appreciated, and all parties will probably agree to increase the funding, although we cannot be sure of that. The corporation must ask itself some serious questions about its function as a development corporation, however, and its relationship to the manufacturing sector.

Winston Churchill is supposed to have said that democracy is the worst form of government until you compare it to everything else. One does not have to sit in this House very long to realize that one of the most disheartening things encountered is the difficulty in getting information. Whether I am re-elected or not by the people I respect, admire, and love, I want to tell members on the other side, or whoever comes to power in this country, that we must have greater freedom of information. We are a democracy, not an Iron Curtain country. We know that some things cannot be disclosed because of the provisions of the Official Secrets Act.

Even in the question period, why should we have a rule that allows a minister to refuse to answer an opposition question? That is undemocratic. We can understand a poor answer, as it is spontaneous, but there is no case for a refusal to answer, as sometimes happens in very important circumstances.

I want to return to my topic, Mr. Speaker, and say to officials of the Export Development Corporation in the gallery, and to the minister in charge of the corporation, who is not here today for whatever reason, that we must find a way to make our institutions more open. We must make this real in fact, not just rhetoric. This applies to the corporation we are now discussing.

In our time in this House we come to have respect for individuals on all sides, regardless of political affiliation, and I have that respect for the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin). I have come to the conclusion that one of the most important contributions we can make to parliament is to ensure there is more openness about all our institutions. This will be embarrassing to a government at times, of course. We have before us the lesson of the United States. I have a very high regard for the humility of that nation despite apparent stupidities. We laugh at them at times and we make fun of their presidents sometimes. But when the time came their elected officials told their people. They get much more information in that country from their parliamentarians and from their government than we do here in Canada. I cite that as an example.

● (1622)

I think the Export Development Corporation is in difficulty, partly because under the Ministry of Industry, Trade and Commerce, not just under this particular minister, but all ministers of industry, trade and commerce, parliamentarians have not been told enough about things they should know. If we continue to make light of parliament, there will come a day when provincial and federal entities in special meetings will become the dominant institution. But at this time as a parliament we do not have too good an image. We can dispel our present image. There are all kinds of hard working people here. In general we should take the secrecy out of things. This would be relatively easy to do in most cases, although in certain instances discretion is needed, and certainly the Export Development Corporation falls into this category.

I see Mr. Speaker rubbing his knees. I know over the last four years, whenever he is in the chair and when he does that, he is getting a little tired. However, I ask him to bear with me on this point.

I want to repeat that the Export Development Corporation in its primary objective, as I have described it and as it appeared to me, has done a great job. There are many questions now about where it has gone in recent years and where it intends to go. We must get that Corporation to join with all of the institutions in Canada, even at this late date in our history and despite the economic, social, psychological, and political difficulties, and build a solid economic structure in this country. This should include a large, decisive, manufacturing sector otherwise we could go down the drain much faster than we realize.

[Translation]

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for allowing me to speak on Bill C-36 now before us. However, I must first of all deplore the fact that the government is again doing all it can to have us adopt at full speed such an important piece of financial legislation. To begin with, it seems to me that when such a legislation is put before us to triple the Export Development Corporation's support to Canadian business, as elected representatives we are entitled to ask for guarantees regarding the allocation and management of these funds.

I know that most of us think that our unemployment rate is quite unacceptable and that it is mostly the result of competition from foreign countries and of our rather weak position in an increasing number of industries. I recognize that the Export Development Corporation needs fresh funds which will create new jobs in industries where we are already competitive. The corporation should obviously be able to ensure the steady volume of exports we need to restore our balance of payments.

Mr. Speaker, I think that the corporation could not only promote the continuous expansion of a number of industries such as farm and industrial machinery plants, but also earmark some of these new funds—which Parliament is probably going to authorize—for the development of some sectors where Canada is presently experiencing a significant decline and which might reverse the trend if new markets were found. I am thinking particularly of mining and textile industries. So the government is prepared to increase the maximum guarantees of the corporation from $2.5 billion to $10 billion and its authorized capital from $400 million to $1 billion. If not for electoral reasons, why does the government want to hand out millions under our nose without giving us the opportunity of at least suggesting that these funds be put to better use than has ever been the case in the past?

Mr. Speaker, I note that as at December 31, 1976, the Export Development Corporation was owed $2,458,000 in unpaid interests. We have spent considerable amounts of money to help countries such as Chile and South Africa where the rights of individuals are violated every day. We have lent money to Cuba, which, through its military interventions in Africa, is a threat to peace. Since political considerations are taken into account, as is the case with Rhodesia, why do we not do the same in the cases I just mentioned? The political and economic situation of certain countries is so unstable and unpredictable that we would have reasons to doubt that they will ever norow their commitments. The Export Development Corporation's objective is to increase Canadian exports and not to help less developed countries. Another institution has been established to that end, namely the Canadian International Development Agency or CIDA whose practices also leave much to be desired when it comes to allocation of funds. That means, Mr. Speaker, that the Export Development Corporation will have to review their management mechanisms in order to be able to get their money back.

In an economic situation where competition is very tough and requires concerted action from the government and its lending institutions, it is a must for Canada to make competitive products. While giving EDC the funds they require, I feel it is reasonable to ask them to expand their activities. EDC must play a wider part in the future. Let me explain myself. We all know that a number of sectors of our economy are sick, that eastern regions like the one I represent are in urgent need of competitive industries based on export products.

For instance, in eastern Quebec we have mining, forestry and off-shore resources that only outlets on foreign markets could allow us to develop. In an area where unemployment reaches dramatic proportions, a number of industries and mines have slowed down their production because of a lack of markets. In addition to issuing loans to bying countries and ensuring that Canadian businesses are paid, the Export Development Corporation should also help businesses which are directly involved in export products by way of financial contributions, subsidies and search for other markets.

Mr. Speaker, allow me to say in passing that a Liberal government had to be defeated and a Pequist government elected to revive projects such as the Magdalen Islands salt mines and the Gaspésie limestone deposit projects which were gathering dust on shelves. It is unthinkable that the government should increase so substantially the lending power of its own corporation without reconsidering its objectives. In other words, charity begins at home.

● (1632)

[English]

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, I wish to say at the outset that while I approve of Bill C-36, I am greatly concerned about the ad hoc approach to development on the part of this government. This debate is important because it gives us the opportunity to express what, in my judgment, should be an outward view on the way to create manufacturing jobs in Canada. We have to take a bold new approach.

As we consider the Export Development Corporation, we must in this debate not only confine ourselves to EDC but consider the way in which EDC is related to those other instruments of government that are supposed to be promoting development both in Canada and in our role in other countries.

The bill before us triples the carrying capacity of EDC from $9 billion to $27 billion. Several members have expressed concern about the size of this enlargement. They have expressed concern about whether the Export Development Corporation in its attempt to help Canadian manufacturers is actually creating jobs in other countries rather than in Canada.

Is the role of the Export Development Corporation being handled correctly? That is the question on which much of this debate has turned. Questions of growth, capitalization, and the future of markets for Canada are not simple to answer. That is one reason why this debate should not be closed off quickly, as though we have nothing to say; expressing our views, not only of criticism of the government for its failure to create long range jobs in this country in sufficient numbers, but pointing the way and encouraging the government to take certain steps that will be of an innovative character in order to match the future of this country.

A new book has been published, prepared by the Hudson Institute of Canada under the general direction of the head of that institute, Herman Kahn, of the United States. The book is called "Canada Has A Future". There is no question mark after that title. It is about time we started to get some literature of a positive nature on the future of our country. I want to indicate one paragraph from that book which sets the context for the remarks I want to make about the Export Development Corporation.

This book makes the following observation:

> —Canadians could be innovative in the international field generally. An innovation which would be terribly useful for the Third World and the First World alike, indeed perhaps the most useful single thing any advanced country could do, would be for Canada to innovate appropriate methods of alleviating a world problem which will become increasingly acute during the next two or three decades: an enormous and increasing labour surplus in the Third World and an almost equally dramatic labour shortage in the First World.

I want to align that quotation from "Canada Has A Future" with a comment made by my colleague from Vancouver Quadra who, in his contribution to this debate, put his finger on what really needs to be considered when we talk about the Export Development Corporation. The hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Clarke) said what is necessary is for the Canada Development Corporation and the Export Development Corporation to be merged into a new national development corporation. If that were done, he said:

> —a new economic strategy for Canada could be formulated which would balance our exports and industrial objectives. Finally, if a new export policy is thus rationalized, private financial institutions could be encouraged to contribute to a fund for the development of third world nations on the threshhold of development.

What we are considering here is the enlargement of markets for Canadian goods of a long range. As I said a moment ago, much of the government's preoccupation is with short range, getting over the hump, meeting the exigencies of what appear to be the daily crises, the monthly figures. We have to look at where our markets for Canadian goods can be found in the future of our country.

I quote from Mr. Shridath S. Ramphal, the Secretary General of the Commonwealth. Mr. Ramphal has been distinguished in his contributions to what is called the north-south dialogue taking place today, in which the developed and developing nations are attempting to work out new strategies for industrial growth which will permit that growth to take place on a more equitable basis around the world.

He points out that most of the developing populations around the world, and most of the future markets of the world, are in what is now called the developing countries. They now have a low purchasing power, with the result that they are not able to buy very much from the developing nations. The point he makes is that if we took the long range view toward the creation of new markets in the developing world, it would not only be a good thing to do for the growth of the people concerned, but it would be very good for us. It would not only stimulate the economies of the developed countries, but it would ensure their continued steady growth to meet the growth of world conditions.

Mr. Ramphal says:

The increases in the incomes which the developing countries would earn from the dismantling of trade barriers and other obstacles and from a sustained expansion of their export income from primary commodities and from manufactures, would be spent, and spent quickly, on imports from the industrialized countries.

What he is saying there is precisely what was said by the subcommittee on international development which conducted studies in the past two sessions of parliament on questions related to commodity pricing related to the UNCTAD IV Conference and on questions related to debt financing in the third world, connected to the Conference on International Economic Co-operation which concluded its work last summer.

When we talk about fusing policies, harmonizing what the Canadian government's policies are with regard to the Export Development Corporation which is supposed to be in business to help the export of Canadian goods abroad and, in turn, to stimulate and create Canadian jobs, that whole approach needs to be keyed to the Canadian approach of international development taken by CIDA.

Two of the speakers this afternoon reflected in their remarks the confusion which arises when we consider the role of the Export Development Corporation, especially in the third world. Let there be no mistake. The Export Development Corporation is a commercial enterprise. It is not in the aid business, nor should it be. It ensures exports. It makes loans to what one might call middle range countries. It has been criticized for providing loans to first world countries—one example is the steel mill at Perth Amboy, New Jersey, and another is the development of the pulp and paper industry in Poland. I would certainly criticize the corporation for its policy in providing loans for Cuba.

My hon. friend from Esquimalt-Saanich pointed out the other night, in the course of a very effective contribution to this debate, that it was altogether wrong to expect the Canadian people to support an instrument of policy which was, in effect, helping a country to expand its military operations overseas, causing havoc in the process. I have in mind Cuba's policy of sending increasing numbers of troops to Africa taking us, in my judgment, one step closer to world war III. I have expressed the view for some time that our commercial relations with Cuba through the EDC, and through our aid policies, ought to be suspended on the ground that we should express our condemnation of that country's exacerbation of the danger of war through its military activities.

The policy of EDC, whether we are talking about the development of pulp mills in Poland or of a steel mill in the United States, or the development in Indonesia which Inco is managing, ought to be debated and examined in committee. It is not my intention at this time to enlarge on the concepts put forward by others. What I am attempting to do is emphasize the commercial character of the EDC so that a sharp distinction may be made between the corporation and the aid policies of the government through CIDA. It is precisely because CIDA has got itself into the export business that its true purpose has been hurt. Further, through this jungle of policies, we find ourselves in a strange position, one in which CIDA is not only failing to carry out the humanitarian work it ought to be doing in third world countries but is failing to develop people who might in future be customers of Canadian business.

I stated at the outset of my speech that one of the most important contributions to the debate so far was made by my hon. friend from Vancouver Quadra, who said a new national policy was needed, one which would rationalize the creation of jobs and the development of our industry. I would use that statement as a stepping stone to what I wish to say next.

If the government would move away from its dependence on ad hoc decisions and policies with respect to development, and clarify the distinct roles of its agencies, it could stimulate the economy by providing a long range pattern of growth. In addition, it would be doing a better job in relation to helping those who most need help in an era of profound change.

It is not new to talk about harmonizing the various instruments of government policy. I have here a publication put out by the federal government entitled "Strategy for International Development Co-operation, 1975-1980." This document outlines a five-point strategy, and the first of those five points calls attention to the need for a comprehensive and organic approach to development co-operation. I will read the first point in its entirety because I wish to place it on the record.

In renewing its firm commitment to international development and cooperation, the government undertakes to harmonize various external and domestic policies which have an impact on the developing countries and to use a variety of policy instruments in the trade, international monetary and other fields in order to achieve its international development objectives.

What does this mean? The point, it seems to me, is summarized in the following sentence, also from the publication mentioned:

While continuing to value a higher volume and an improved quality of development assistance, developing countries are particularly concerned with other factors influencing their economic prospects, such as trade, monetary reform, investment, shipping and transfer of technology.

Well, Mr. Speaker, how have we been doing? How well have we been harmonizing the various instruments available to the government? The new North-South Institute, a private organization founded about a year ago, an organization well respected in development circles in Canada, made an evaluation of the government's development policies in a report issued a couple of months ago. Time does not permit me to go into this in this debate, but with respect to point one, about which I have just read, on the question of harmonizing, the North-South Institute has given a rating to the government's performance in that policy, and the rating is minus D. When my children come home with minus D on their report cards, I do not think very much of it.

What does minus D mean? It means that the government has failed to implement that key plank in the five-year strategy which is supposed to be harmonizing our industries to promote development in the world. The government, and I quote:

. . . is failing badly on this point. There is not sufficiently strong or consistent leadership being exerted to force all departments to give adequate weight to developing countries' concerns in their areas of policy. Without this supervision, departments tend not to do homework and to lose sight of the development dimension. The result is that the main effort now must be to prevent backsliding in several important policy areas.

Then the North-South Institute goes on to make the following point:

—Negative steps (non-tariff barriers) and contradictions (promotion of uncompetitive industries by DREE and the adjustment programmes of Industry, Trade and Commerce).

All of those programs have had a negative rating so far. When we talk about failure to implement policies, we have to put the discussion into the wider context of what is going on in the world, because I think it is unfair to single out the Canadian government as the only culprit in not taking long-range constructive policies to promote development. The problem is deeper than merely the colouration of the government. The problem has to do with the structures in the international community today as well as with what we might call the climate of world opinion.

There is another important passage from the most recent address by Mr. Ramphal to a number of British parliamentarians on January 23 of this year, in which Mr. Ramphal puts his finger on the dilemma we and the Export Development Corporation face as the EDC attempts to decide where it can most successfully invest its money commercially. It is a dilemma which hon. members of this House ought to be considering as we contemplate the future of the EDC. Mr. Ramphal evaluated what has been going on over the past couple of years since the new international economic order was formulated and espoused by the United Nations at the Sixth and Seventh Special Sessions of the General Assembly which took place in 1975 and 1976.

Mr. Ramphal gave this evaluation:

The frustrations of UNCTAD IV, the failure of CIEC . . .

The North-South Conference which took place, at which the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen) was co-chairman.

. . . to produce meaningful results on structural change in the world's trading and financial arrangements, or, even to agree on the character of its disagreements; the negligible progress being made in eliminating the barriers to trade at the Multilateral Trade Negotiations in Geneva after four years of intensive dialogue; the bogging down of the negotiations on individual commodity agreements and on the Common Fund in spite of verbal agreement on the Integrated Programme for Commodities; the perpetuation of disorderly conditions in the international financial system with the attendant displacement of an international financial system by one substantially under national control; and the inability of the international community to agree even on a forum for coming to grips with the debt problem of the developing countries despite the staggering balance of payments deficits which have been projected for them—these events (or non-events) are not only disappointing in themselves, they are positively dangerous. To put it at its most charitable, this record of continuous dialogue and consistent inaction suggests that the realism which induced the promises of the Sixth and Seventh Special Sessions has passed and that the rich are returning to accustomed complacency with an unequal world—with all that that implies for a world at war with itself, even though all the evidence demonstrates that—as the young Canadian poet Margaret Atwood so poignantly warned us: "surviving is the only war we can afford."

I have used that quotation to indicate that the harmonizing of our domestic and international policies, with a new understanding that such a move is essential to create those long-range markets for Canada, is most urgently needed at this moment. I said that we should clarify the roles of both EDC and CIDA so that we can stop being confused about them. In order to do that I would like to draw attention to Mr. Robert McNamara, the president of the World Bank, who is among the leaders in the world now making the point that if developed nations in their assistance programs would change their programs to provide basic human development in developing countries—and by that he means food, water, shelter, hygiene, and education—that would provide a spirit of self-reliance in the developing nations and would help them to grow so that they can become those legitimate consumers who are waiting in the expectation that some day they will be able to have some of the basics of life. I want to use a little incident to illustrate the magnitude of what we are talking about here.

I was in China recently. I was going through a commune. I know the Export Development Corporation does not deal with China, but its officials should listen anyway because the moral applies to the countries with which it does deal. When I was in China I went through a commune, and I noticed a television set in the home of one of the leaders of that commune. That leader was a woman, and I asked her why she had a television set. She said it was true that there were television sets in public halls and so forth, but that more and more people now wanted to have television sets. I asked why, and she said, "Well, because it is so nice to lie in bed and watch television". I said to myself that that woman was ringing a bell. She was speaking for millions upon millions of people in third world countries who are waiting with the expectation that some day they are going to be able to buy the goods and services that we should be able to produce.

It is in the interests, as Robert McNamara, Mr. Ramphal, and United Nations experts keep telling us, of the countries of the developed world to create aid policies which produce self reliance so that people in third world countries can eventually rise above the kind of life which is deprived even of human dignity and become the consumers of the future. That is a long-range policy for human development which is good for people, for society, and for Canadian manufacturing industries.

● (1702)

When I say harmonizing the policies I mean the government should harmonize its policies. I say to government members today, and to some of my own colleagues whom I expect to form a government before very long—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Roche: —that when this party forms the government we are going to formulate development policies of the kind which the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra has described, namely, long range development policies which can be depended upon and are not ad hoc as the present government's policies are. That is the route advocated by Mr. McNamara.

I am confident that the future of Canadian development policies would be much sounder if we asserted, through this debate and through the committee work which will follow, and keep driving home to the government, the need for long range, integrated, harmonizing policies which take advantage of our need to create new markets, and realize the very real conditions throughout the world, particularly the developing world of people who need to be brought to a state of self-reliance.

Before I come to my final point I would like to make this observation, Mr. Speaker. The way in which CIDA is now being used by the government as a sort of mini EDC is doing a disservice to the cause of development, because most of the money that CIDA spends—its budget is now $1.2 billion, and some 60 per cent to 65 per cent is spent through high technology bilateral aid—is aimed at helping Canadian industries. I am all for helping Canadian industries and for doing everything we possibly can to increase our exports and improve our manufacturing potential in this country. What I am against is CIDA giving away high technology items such as planes, generators, and bridges. I am against CIDA giving that away in the name of aid because it is creating a dependence on CIDA by Canadian manufacturers as an instrument which is going to do their sales work.

CIDA should be confined to helping to create self-reliance among the masses of people in villages, rather than so much of its budget being devoted to exporting high technological equipment, an activity which may look good in the short range because it adds to our export total, but one which in effect does not promote development in countries with which we are dealing. One example of that is Indonesia, a country about which our friends in EDC know a lot because they are heavily involved there.

CIDA has a $37 million program in Indonesia today in the form of official development assistance, plus a credit line of some $200 million from EDC operating in Indonesia. What do they get for this kind of money? They get planes, training of pilots, generators, and a number of things such as high technology equipment which I have seen with my own eyes. This adds a fraction to our manufacturing here.

CIDA officials, of course, go around the country telling Canadians they should support CIDA because it is good for Canadian business. This puts people like me in a very difficult position because I do not want to argue that we should not be helping Canadian business. Obviously Canadian business needs to be helped, but it is the function of EDC to do that, not a function in the name of aid, because in Indonesia, while highly technological equipment is being sent there in the name of aid, studies which have been carried out in that country show that 75 per cent of the people live in villages where there are no floors in the houses, there is no water, there are no latrines, and no educational facilities.

We are not talking about some throw-away, backwater community. We are talking about the fifth largest country in the world, with a population of 140 million, 75 per cent to 80 per cent of them living in villages at this very low subsistence level. Bangladesh is in a similar situation. It has a population of 80 million people, 90 per cent of whom live in rural areas with no basic services. That is why Mr. McNamara said that if the developed countries are serious about their relations with developing countries, they would steer their aid policies toward the creation of self-reliance by having their aid emphasize what I call the big five, that is, food, water, shelter, hygiene, and job opportunities.

I have indicated some reasons for differentiating between what EDC does and what CIDA ought to do in order that the markets for Canadian potential sales may be developed. What we have to remember at the base of this very complex discussion of north-south relations is that low productivity is at the heart of the dilemma both in Canada and in the developing countries. It is in the interests of both the rich and the poor to boost productivity all over the world, and this can be done by stabilizing commodity prices, lowering tariff barriers, increasing the flow of capital to the developing world, and improving the transfer of technology.

This bill gives us an opportunity to make the point that we advocate an intensified and continuous technical co-operation with developing countries. That should lead us into more private investment in the developing countries stimulated by EDC as a way of helping out not only those countries but also helping the Canadian manufacturing industry.

I advocate an increase in private investment capital from Canada to the developing countries through an instrument such as the Advisory Council on International Development to provide systematic consultation between business, labour, and government. This would stimulate private enterprise to transfer larger capital investment and more managerial skills to broaden the industrial base of Third World countries.

Further, I advocate modifications in Canadian tax laws, and other steps to encourage Canadian companies to participate in international trading companies and form consortia to help develop the economies of third world countries. At the same time, these ventures would bring substantial benefits to Canadian business and industry.

That is my case for making this intervention. I believe there are two sides to the EDC story, the side here in Canada which can be harmonized successfully with the other side, which is our need to find new markets and to develop those markets through the creation of self-reliance among those millions upon millions of people who want nothing more in life but the opportunities we have in this country.

Mr. Hugh A. Anderson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and the Environment): Mr. Speaker, when the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner) initiated the debate on Bill C-36, he said that the Export Development Corporation was probably the most misunderstood corporation in Canada. After having read the record of the debate which has taken place on this bill, and having listened in person to the debate this afternoon in the House, I am afraid that people reading Hansard or listening to the debate will be confused further. I may be a country boy from Vancouver Island, but it seems to me that Bill C-36 is a very simple piece of legislation.

The bill proposes to amend the present Export Development Act by increasing the authorized capital of EDC to $1 billion. It proposes to provide separate ceilings for direct and contingent liabilities, as well as providing ceiling amounts in the direct liabilities corporate account of $10 billion. Also it proposes to have ceilings expressed for corporate accounts in multiples of ten times the authorized capital. I am not an economist, but that seems to be a simple bill.

I have no reason to suspect the words of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. He indicated that the Export Development Corporation will have reached its corporate lending level by the month of June. Therefore, either one of two things will happen. If this legislation is not approved, then there will be no more funds for the Export Development Corporation to lend out, because its maximum will have been reached.

If this legislation is allowed to go to committee, then I am sure the minister and his officials will be very glad to go over the role of the Export Development Corporation. As the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Hogan) said, it should be out in the open. I am sure the officials will be willing to talk about interest rates and other matters. I hope the hon. member will participate in that committee in order to question the Export Development Corporation.

Since I am a country boy, perhaps I am not the world's greatest economist. I know in 1977 the Export Development Corporation contributed to maintaining and creating new jobs in the amount of 200,000 man-years.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Anderson: Perhaps that does not sound like very much to hon. members of the opposition. Day in and day out I hear doom and gloom from hon. members opposite concerning employment problems in Canada. This Crown corporation is increasing and maintaining Canadian jobs to the amount of 200,000 man-years.

Mr. Rodriguez: Oh, come on!

Mr. Anderson: I suspect the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) does not like what I am saying because it is a success story.

An hon. Member: Right on!

Mr. Anderson: Hon. members of the opposition parties do not like to hear success stories.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) on a point of order.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, will the hon. parliamentary secretary permit a question?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Will the hon. parliamentary secretary permit a question?

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, I will more than welcome a question after the conclusion of my remarks.

Mr. Rodriguez: Chicken.

Mr. Anderson: Before the hon. member interrupted, I was referring to a success story. Aside from the Export Development Corporation creating jobs for Canadians, it is interesting to note that it is self-sustaining. In most years of its operations, it contributes a profit which is reinvested back into the corporation to be lent out again. My understanding is that the profit made by the Export Development Corporation in 1977 was approximately $60 million. In itself, that is a very complimentary and beneficial result of the corporation. It means that the corporation generates funds to lend out on foreign markets.

The criticism regarding the Export Development Corporation basically has been that it is financing competition to Canadian industries. Because certain people and parties in this country have created the false impression that, by funding Canadian industries abroad, the Export Development Corporation is somehow cutting down jobs in Canada, this should be laid to rest in the House immediately. Capital projects in Indonesia, Poland, and Iran will go ahead with or without Canadian expenditure.

Mr. Rodriguez: Oh, oh!

Mr. Anderson: If the hon. member for Nickel Belt would care to debate this subject on any platform, I would be pleased to participate. If he or his party indicate in the next election campaign that capital projects—

Mr. Rodriguez: When is that going to happen?

Mr. Anderson: If it is indicated by them that capital projects in Poland, Iran, and Indonesia will not go ahead without Canadian participation, then they are deluding Canadians. Those projects will go ahead. It is only a question as to whether Canadian manufacturers will get a bite of those projects. It is only a matter of whether we become a part of those projects.

Mr. Rodriguez: Oh, oh!

Mr. Anderson: Obviously the hon. member has a problem with his economic theories. Not only will they delude Canadians, they will delude themselves if they argue that Canadian participation does not create Canadian jobs, and that these projects will not go ahead unless Canada participates. That is utter rubbish.

Mr. Rodriguez: I challenge the parliamentary secretary to come up to Nickel Belt and repeat that.

Mr. Anderson: Inevitably Canada's competitive position will be challenged in areas such as pulp, paper, and nickel as a result of other countries developing their own capabilities.

Mr. Rodriguez: Tell that to the people of Nickel Belt.

Mr. Anderson: These developments will take place. Third world countries, as well as other underdeveloped countries, will develop their paper facilities. If they have nickel or copper, they will not sit back idly.

Mr. Rodriguez: The parliamentary secretary should include that in a speech to my constituents.

Mr. Anderson: I do not expect to hear economic theory which makes sense from the hon. member for Nickel Belt.

Mr. Rodriguez: Oh, oh!

Mr. Anderson: Instead of playing politics all the time, I hope the hon. member for Nickel Belt will examine our economic theory. Instead of making political speeches, perhaps he should look at what is being done by the Export Development Corporation and what its objectives are. Last year that corporation provided 200,000 man-years of employment for Canadians.

Mr. Rodriguez: Where did you get that figure from?

Mr. Peters: Did you pull it out of the air?

Mr. Anderson: Canada is doing something that no other country does. At the present time the Export Development Corporation charges in the neighbourhood of 6 per cent to 7 per cent on its loans.

Mr. Rodriguez: How do you know that?

Mr. Anderson: Countries such as Japan are competing with Canadian products. They have organizations similar to the Canadian Export Development Corporation, but their interest rates are in the neighbourhood of 4 per cent.

Mr. Peters: Then why is Indonesia coming to us?

Mr. Anderson: We are like lambs in the international market. Thank God the lambs from the New Democratic Party are not out on the world markets. If that was the case, Canadian contracts would never be sold and Canadian machinery would not be going to the world markets.

Mr. Peters: Very funny!

Mr. Anderson: If we are to encourage our manufacturing industry, we must supply assistance in the form of corporations such as the Export Development Corporation. Every other major exporting nation has exactly the same type of corporation. Anyone who even pretends to have any economic knowledge is talking absolute drivel if he indicates that this corporation should be examined, perhaps abolished, and that machinery and equipment should not be exported to countries such as Poland.

Mr. Hogan: Who suggested that?

Mr. Anderson: These people should ask the government what it is doing to help the manufacturing industry. I am pointing out what is being done.

Mr. Rodriguez: Come on!

Mr. Peters: Is that what you call help?

Mr. Anderson: We would like to have the limit raised so that this corporation will not run out of funds in June of this year and, in fact, will have funds to continue financing Canadian industry throughout the world. In 1977 the export trade support of the Export Development Corporation reached a record high of $2.6 billion. It is estimated that in 1977 the Export Development Corporation financed 40 per cent of all capital goods and services exported from this country.

• (1722)

An hon. Member: No wonder we are in trouble.

Mr. Anderson: According to the theory put out by my good friends opposite, I guess what we should do is put a lid on all those bad people in the third world who have the temerity to have an utter disregard for Canada in developing their own resources. What a bad bunch of robbers they are, developing over there while we as Canadians are plugging money into the multinational corporations, which do not need it anyway, setting up competition for Canadians. What a simple story to tell your children at night; children who are too young to understand. It is unfortunate that in this day and age, when Canadian businesses, exporters, and manufacturers are having a very difficult time in foreign markets, and I suggest this is for a variety of reasons, this parliament does not recognize the importance of a corporation such as the EDC and the assistance it can bring to the Canadian businessman. It is unfortunate that this parliament does not recognize these facts and pass this legislation so that this money can be provided before the corporation runs out of funding in June of this year.

It is all very well to stand up and criticize the government because of a slow increase in the number of jobs in the manufacturing sector, but one should take into account the facts. Let me give one example. There have been a number of comments regarding a steel company in the United States which was provided with Export Development Corporation money. No one has ever said what the situation actually is regarding this company. Perhaps a few facts about this will wake up my hon. friends in the New Democratic Party.

This is referred to as a unique concept in the production of steel. This mini steel mill has vaulted the small community of Whitby, Ontario, into prominence in the export of Canadian technology and the creation of employment in Canada. Does that name Whitby ring a bell with hon. gentlemen opposite from the NDP? Is the Leader of the NDP (Mr. Broadbent) going to go to Whitby and say he is against this EDC program which is helping out a Canadian company located in his constituency? You go there and tell them this is a bad thing!

The Whitby-based firm of Co'steel International Limited already is operating mini steel mills in Canada, the United Kingdom, and the United States. It is now launching a similar venture in Perth Amboy, New Jersey. The equipment will be built completely in Canada, providing at least 1,350 man-years of employment in 130 companies across Canada.

Mr. Hogan: Name them.

Mr. Anderson: I will if you would like.

Mr. Hogan: Go ahead.

Mr. Anderson: I have them here. In a brief ceremony—I will not go into the details of that meeting. Raritan River Steel Company of New Jersey, a subsidiary of Co'steel, will operate the mill which is expected to go into production in 1979. The project consists of steel-making and rod-rolling facilities. The rod mill will utilize billets produced by an arc electric furnace and a continuous casting machine. The projected output of 450,000 tons a year is tailored to supply the market for the steel rod, wire mesh, and fastener industries along the U.S. coast from Maine to Florida. That is a traditional Canadian market, the Maine to Florida market.

Despite strong competition from the U.S., Germany, the United Kingdom, and Japan, Canada is assured of the sales of the equipment going into the proposed mill. Some 130 small and larger Canadian firms engaged in engineering, metal working, and electrical equipment manufacturing, will provide equipment, supplies, and services for the Perth Amboy mill.

The interesting fact here is that, first of all, the mill is not competing with Canadian products. Secondly, regardless of whether the EDC is involved or not, the mill would have gone ahead. The only question is whether the jobs in Whitby would have been provided. I suggest rather they would have been created in the United States. I would ask the hon. gentlemen in the NDP if they are willing to go to Whitby and tell the people there that the EDC has hurt their chances for jobs. I am afraid they would be laughed out of town. I am certainly sure that the Leader of the New Democratic Party is not going to go to Whitby and stand on a stump shouting "Down with the EDC". It is all very well to do that in other parts of Canada, but I am sure he will not be doing it in his own riding because that would obviously be foolish.

One of the gentlemen from the NDP asked me to name some of the companies. I will name some of them if he wants and he has the time. I have a list of them here. They include Co'steel International Limited, 1601 Hopkins, Whitby, Ontario, and the amount of the loan is $47 million. Suppliers include Provincial Crane Division of Dominion Bridge Company Limited, Niagara Falls, and that company will be supplying cranes to the value of $2.6 million; Lake Ontario Steel Company of Whitby will be supplying reinforcing steel to the value of $461,000; Canadian General Electric of Scarborough will be providing main drive DC motors to the value of $1,780,000, generating 77 man-years of employment; Whiting Equipment Limited of Welland will supply an arc electric furnace to a value of $1,521,000; Concast Canada Limited of Montreal will be supplying a casting machine at a cost of $2,230,000; and Brown Boveri Canada Limited of Pointe Claire will be supplying power supplies and controls to the extent of $1,730,000, providing 54 man-years. Mr. Speaker, let me suggest that the point has been proven.

What would have happened in this particular instance had this particular mill been financed by the United States, Japan, or the United Kingdom? I suggest the jobs which have been created in Canada at the various companies I have mentioned would just not exist. We would not have those jobs. We must bite the bullet and realize that if we are to compete on world markets there may be instances in which the products produced by the companies assisted will be in competition with Canadian produced products, whether those products are manufactured in Poland, Indonesia, or elsewhere. This is what we must realize, and this is the heart of the matter. These projects will go ahead, with or without Canada, and it is up to us to determine whether we want some of the man-years employment in time devoted to these projects, or whether we want to kiss it off by saying we will not take part because these projects may be in competition with our own. I submit that such action would be cutting our own throats.

We are not dealing with an "either or" situation. This involves simply a question of whether Canada participates and jobs are created as a result of that participation. It is utter and absolute nonsense to say that such financing is reducing jobs in Canada. Competition may be involved but, as sure as God made little green apples, we would be getting that competition from Japan, Germany or the United Kingdom whether Canada participated or not. Their factories would produce the equipment. Either we accept that fact, or realize we are ridiculous as economists—as are our friends opposite.

When a Canadian company such as MacMillan Bloedel goes abroad it brings benefit to Canada in the form of the share dividends that accrue to Canadian shareholders. The role of the Export Development Corporation in setting up these corporations abroad is to create jobs and bring other benefits such as the flow of capital to Canadians.

If my friends in the opposition do not agree with that thesis that projects will go ahead with or without our participation, if they wish Japanese, West German or United Kingdom companies to straddle the world while ours remain at home, let them say so. Let the Japanese, the West German and United Kingdom companies develop mines in Indonesia and Guatemala. Let them surround us with their capital while we stay pure and do not put money into industries that may compete against us.

The argument put forth by some hon. members is fallacious. If we are to provide stimulus to Canadian business so that they can compete abroad in countries using exactly the same type of corporation—some with lower interest rates than ours—then we must support this legislation. If we take the view that such competition does not matter—that because Alcan or any other company has interests in Canada and therefore we should not compete against ourselves—we should say so.

The hon. member for Nickel Belt will have an opportunity to contribute to this debate later, although judging from his past performance he will not have much to contribute.

I hope that members who have an interest in this corporation will express their views at committee stage when they will be able to examine witnesses, including the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and his officials. I hope we get speedy passage of this bill to the committee stage.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The parliamentary secretary said he would answer a question at the end of his speech, so I presume he is now prepared to do so.

I have information from International Nickel Company of Canada in a letter signed by Elizabeth Parr Bond, the director of government affairs. The question is related to the hon. member's reference to the number of man-years of employment that would be created. The letter says quite clearly that the EDC has estimated their loans to Inco have provided the equivalent of 4,000 man-years of work for Canadians through contracts to about 490 Canadian suppliers. This relates to the $77 million that EDC loaned to Inco for the Indonesia operation and the Guatemala operation which it claims created 4,000 man-years of employment. How does the hon. member reconcile 4,000 man-years of employment with the loss of 4,000 permanent jobs at Inco in Sudbury, Thompson, and Port Colborne?

Mr. Anderson: As I indicated, Mr. Speaker, I did not think much would come from the hon. member. I am not sure if this is allowed but I should like to ask him how many tons of nickel are being produced in Guatemala or Indonesia today, April 26, in competition with Inco mines in Canada. I suspect the answer is zero. I also suspect the hon. member did not listen to a word I said. The mines in Guatemala and Indonesia would have been developed with U.K., German and Japanese capital, regardless of what Inco did or of EDC involvement.

The hon. member should ask himself if he would be satisfied with no jobs being created in Canada through the development of those mines when the work could have gone to any other country, or is he happy with the 4,000 man-years of work created in Canada? We could have ended up with no jobs but still had the competition. Now at least we have the 4,000 man-years of work, although we know there will be competition at some future date from mines throughout the world that do not have any Canadian participation. He makes a rather foolish argument, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Could I ask a question, Mr. Speaker? The hon. member used the example that I presume was provided for him of the Whitby firm Co'steel International Ltd. which has established a plant in New Jersey, and pointed out, quite rightly, that it has been given a large amount of assistance to enable it to buy from Canadian manufacturers. This is a one-time grant, of course.

Could the hon. member tell me what we are doing wrong? Surely the money we loaned would produce permanent jobs in Canada, not just jobs on a one-shot basis. Could the material not be manufactured in Canada? Are tariffs too high or our prices too high? What could we have done to keep that corporation in Canada so that the jobs could be permanent jobs?

Surely the function of EDC is to work toward that end and not just on one-time projects that give a certain number of man-years of work but from which there is no lasting benefit. Presumably the suppliers who benefit at this stage expect to exist afterwards, but this type of operation makes their future precarious, to say the least. Is there not something more that the EDC could have done so that this Canadian plant could have located in the maritimes where it was going to locate had not some inducements been offered which persuaded it to establish in New Jersey?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. For the information of hon. members, I did not recognize the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) on a point of order for the purpose of asking a question. Perhaps we could clarify that at this time. He may not be recognized in the debate again if there is not unanimous consent that he was recognized for the purpose of asking a question. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member asked a very good and rational question. Unfortunately the decision was made by the company in Whitby to locate its mill in New Jersey. I cannot comment on the reasons for the decision. I suspect, however, that the location is closer to the market it intends to serve. I am sure the hon. member heard me say the company has branches in the United Kingdom. I suspect it located in New Jersey to serve a regional market from Maine to Florida. Perhaps that and other questions could be answered in committee.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, would it be in order for me to ask a question?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I would recognize the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) in the ordinary course of debate. Surely we should have no more questions. We are not at committee stage now.

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I would not dare ask any more questions because we are not getting a debate with the parliamentary secretary; what we are getting is a debate with the bureaucrats and nabobs in EDC who have written his spiel. I do not mind debating with the nabobs, but I want to do it in committee.

• (1742)

Some of the things that the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Anderson) mentioned in his attempt at responding to the question I put to him, indicate very clearly that he is unaware of the controversy which exists on the board of directors of the EDC with respect to making EDC loans to multinational mining companies. There has been a great deal of turmoil and disagreement. I was told that by the president of EDC, for what it is worth. He said that it was a question which has divided the board of directors.

An hon. Member: He did not tell it to you in confidence either.

Mr. Rodriguez: And he did not tell it to me in confidence either.

No one in this House can expect me to stand in my place here after what we have been through in the Sudbury Basin with respect to the layoffs by Inco and Falconbridge and say that I think the EDC is doing a terrific job, that in effect I support the increase of its capitalization. It seems to me that it ought not to be supported by members of this House until an overhaul is made of the way in which the Export Development Corporation operates, along with their accountability to parliament and to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. I have been before the committee on three previous occasions. On each of those occasions it was for a matter to increase capitalization of the Export Development Corporation.

We heard the hon. member for Comox-Alberni mention in relation to the Inco operation that no nickel has come out of Indonesia or out of Guatemala as yet, so they could not have an effect on the market. We had better take a look at the whole situation, Mr. Speaker, for the edification of the bureaucrats who probably do not know a bloody thing about nickel. Maybe they ought to listen if they are in the galleries.

There are two kinds of nickel, namely, lateritic nickel and sulphide nickel. The sulphide ores are the kinds which are found in the Sudbury basin and at Thompson, Manitoba. The lateritic nickel deposits are found in the tropical countries. These deposits are on the surface of the land and are scraped off. To reduce the lateritic ores to a semi-processed state—to remove the nickel—a great deal of energy must be applied to the lateritic nickel. For the sulphide nickel which is found in the Sudbury basin, the sulphur in the ore is an energy agent. In effect we do not need as much energy to reduce that ore to nickel.

With the cost of petroleum and the cost of energy in the world, it makes Canadian nickel extremely competitive with the tropical countries where the lateritic nickel is found at this point in time. But never sell the EDC short. Falconbridge and Inco are always willing to look for a friend, and EDC is always there to be the friend at hand.

It is said that a friend in need is a friend indeed. That is the problem with Falconbridge in the Dominican Republic. Nickel is now selling at approximately $2.20 a pound. What do they have to find? They must find some energy deposits. So, what does Falconbridge do? It has one of its sister companies, Superior Oil of Canada, searching for oil and gas in the Dominican Republic. Who is the friend in need ready to put $25 million worth of insurance on the operation? Of course, the EDC! You can just see the boys, Mr. Speaker! The picture and the story were printed in the paper. They even broke out the champagne when they signed the contract. There was Marsh Cooper as large as life. There was John MacDonald, president of EDC, bigger than Marsh Cooper, bigger than life.

An hon. Member: You don't have to scream.

Mr. Rodriguez: They sprung out the champagne and the boys were breaking the bottles. My, 1977 was a good year for Falconbridge Dominicana or Falcondo. A good year. And guess what, Mr. Speaker? Inco is not to be deterred. Inco will show the same initiative. As a matter of fact they are presently showing the same initiative. Right at this moment they are exploring for gas and oil off the coast of Guatemala and, guess what, Mr. Speaker? I will lay my neck on this table that the EDC will very shortly receive an application for insurance—

An hon. Member: What a neck.

Mr. Rodriguez: I hear the retentionist over there. He is touchy about necks these days. Now you have made me forget where I was.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rodriguez: You can bet your bottom dollar—

An hon. Member: You hang in there.

Mr. Rodriguez: —that Inco will be shortly approaching and making a demand on the munificence of the taxpayers of Canada to get some insurance for their operations. That is the problem. It is not what you know, it is who you know in this world. Everyone will subscribe to that theory, and Falconbridge knows the president, Balaguer. He is a good friend. Marsh Cooper told me. He said, "I was playing golf with Colonel Balaguer". They have friends in high places and, guess what? I will bet you dollars to doughnuts that the energy costs will be subsidized by the people of the Dominican Republic just as the people of Indonesia subsidize the energy cost for Inco in Indonesia. At that point in time it will be found that lateritic nickel from the third world becomes much more economical than the nickel in Canada.—I see the member from Thompson, Manitoba, and I am going there tonight—

An hon. Member: Tell them about capital punishment.

Mr. Rodriguez: I will tell them about capitalism, not capital punishment.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: We will let Joe Clark tell them about capital punishment.

Mr. Rodriguez: Earlier in the debate I heard the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Ritchie) quote Karl Marx. I think socialism is creeping into Manitoba. Wait until Sterling Lyon hears about that, or better still wait until the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) hears about that, or the hon. member for Winnipeg South—

An hon. Member: Winnipeg South Centre.

Mr. Rodriguez: Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. MacKenzie).

It is the friends that one has in high places that count. At that point in time lateritic nickel becomes much more economical than Canadian nickel.

Indeed, on the very day the Law of the Sea Conference opened to discuss ocean floor mining, the mining of nickel and magnesium from the floor of the ocean, Inco and Bellevue, Washington, unveiled the first experimental runs on the nodules which they have raised from the ocean floor. Even a minister of the government, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Cullen), went to Sudbury. There was a mass rally of 25 people at a luncheon at the Chamber of Commerce. He told the people of Sudbury that as a nickel producing community its days are numbered.

I want to ask some simple questions that the people in the Sudbury basin asked. If we have $77 million to put into helping Inco develop its lateritic ores in Guatemala and in Indonesia, why do they not make that $77 million available in Canada at these reasonable rates of interest? This would help the community, the small entrepreneurs and individuals who want to develop an infrastructure around the nickel industry, such as heat pumps and copper rods and all the other infrastructure we can use in the Sudbury basin. Why do we not put the money into that?

There is another aspect to this whole question of multinational mining companies receiving EDC grants. I have heard a lot of garbage about creating employment in Canada. In the mining industry the Export Development Corporation has done nothing more than help the multinational mining companies do to the third world countries what was done here in Canada. For example, the lateritic nickel in Guatemala is going to be mined from the shores of Lake Izabal. The boats will come in. The material will be scraped off the surface of the land and semi-processed, just as it is in the Sudbury basin. It will then be loaded on to ships. The ships will sail across the lake and across the ocean to Wales where it will be refined.

EDC has loaned $23 million to the Guatemalan operation. Inco says the total operation cost them $325 million. It is highly capital intensive. It will employ 700 Guatemalans, and they will have spent $325 million. We are allowing Inco, with the Canadian taxpayers' money, to do to third world countries as far as mining companies are concerned exactly what they have done here. That is what I am talking about. I want that perfectly clear.

It is morally wrong and economically mad to loan Canadian taxpayers' money to multinational companies which have raped this country, laying off workers the minute they feel a downbeat in the economy. It is not only morally wrong, but economically stupid. Regardless of what the hon. member for Comox-Alberni has said, it is wrong to loan money to Inco and Falconbridge to set up an operation to do in third world countries exactly what they have done to Canadians.

Note the countries they go to, countries with a record of respect for human freedoms. They have gone to Guatemala where the "Butcher of Zacapa" provided a captive work force for Inco. In the Dominican Republic they have a dictator, Balaguer. It is interesting to note that when Marsh Cooper played golf with the president, they had armed guards guarding the golf course. You can see how loved the dictator is by his people.

I raised this in 1974 when Bill C-9 was before the committee. I went through the whole process of a country where the political regime has denied its people their human and civil rights. They do not call him the "Butcher of Zacapa" for nothing. I brought that out. I said in effect we have the taxpayers of Canada participating in this sort of development, but not to help the people develop and control the technology for the future. Is that the kind of development we want for the third world? Do we want to make them hewers of wood and drawers of water in their own country? Are we going to allow to happen to them what happened to us? I say that is morally wrong.

We should provide the Guatemalan government with low interest loans, guaranteed in the same fashion as EDC loans are presently guaranteed, and let them purchase the technology required for the operation. If they want to exploit their lateritic nickel, give them a long-term loan at a reasonable rate of interest to help them develop their own technology and resources so that they can be master in their own home. They should not be subject to the whims and fancies of a multinational mining company.

We then go to Indonesia. Amnesty International tells us there are 55,000 political prisoners who have been put in prison without trial there. We have the situation in Indonesia where Inco is attempting to penetrate the Japanese market.

Here we have the Export Development Corporation using the taxpayers' money to help Inco to exert market dominance in lateritic nickels.

What is in it for Canada? That ought to be one of the primary concerns for the Export Development Corporation. What is the benefit to Canada? I do not mean the 4,000 man-years that will last as long as it takes to send down the equipment or the specialized personnel. They are Inco personnel who are already on salary. What they are doing is paying the wages of Inco personnel to go there and set up the operation.

What plan is there down the road for the nickel communities of this country? That is extremely important. It is not just the New Democratic Party that has raised these concerns. Every time we make a loan or insure an operation, whether it be in Chile, Guatemala, Indonesia or Santo Domingo, we have a vested interest in ensuring that the operation continues. In effect we are indicating support for the regime in power. If the people rise up and take over the operation, our Export Development Corporation pays the insurance. We are really in the position of committing ourselves to the regime in power, whether it be in Indonesia, Guatemala, Santo Domingo or Chile.

I do not often quote from the Northern Miner, the trade paper of the mining industry. However, I wish to quote from an editorial in their November 3, 1977 edition. If the bureaucrats want, they can look that up and see whether I am quoting correctly. I quote:

> Although Guatemala and Indonesia cannot be charged with having precipitated the current situation, looking further down the road to the years when nickel markets improve, the reality is that there will be more nickel producers laying a claim to a share of the nickel market. And no amount of castigation of Inco's policies or motives will alter that fact. We sowed, so shall we reap.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. It being six o'clock, this House stands adjourned until 2 p.m. tomorrow.

At six o'clock the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

CALL FOR INCENTIVES TO CREATE JOBS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to move a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. As the rate of unemployment for men and women under 25 years of age is twice the rate of those 25 years and older, so that our young people are bearing twice the burden of the worst unemployment since the great depression of the 1930s, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. Dick):

That the government announce a program of incentives which will make it possible for businessmen and farmers to employ our young people, and thus enable them to take their rightful place in the work force, instead of enduring the unemployment and disillusionment which the economic policies of the present federal government have forced upon them.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for discussion would require the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

REQUEST WAR DISABILITY PENSIONS BE RAISED TO LEVEL OF 1973 FORMULA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, there is a double sense of urgency about the matter which I wish to present to the House under Standing Order 43. First, since this House is still here it is urgent that we do something useful and important. Second, in view of the fact that an election might be called, it is urgent that we deal with this matter quickly. I believe the House would do so. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters):

That this House calls on the Prime Minister to give approval to the immediate introduction by the Minister of Veterans Affairs of a bill to provide prorata pensions for widows of veterans where the veteran's disability pension was below 48 per cent and to restore the basic rate of the war disability pension to the level calculated on the basis of the formula agreed to in 1973.

Mr. Speaker: In accordance with the provisions of Standing Order 43, such a motion can be presented for discussion only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

AGRICULTURE

UNRESTRICTED IMPORTATION OF CERTAIN AGRICULTURAL CHEMICALS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I rise under Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, that being the statement of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) yesterday that he is perfectly willing to look at any evidence the hon. member, meaning myself, may have in relation to the question of agricultural chemicals.

Given this fact, and because the minister's letter to me dated April 13, 1978, admits that in the case of two chemicals quoted in his letter—those being Eptam and Eradicane—there is a substantial difference in price between Canadian and United States figures and the difference in price, using the minister's own calculations, is 65 per cent and 70 per cent respectively, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp):

That the minister immediately issue special import permits to allow chemicals designated by the Department of Agriculture to enter Canada without restriction.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for discussion, pursuant to Standing Order 43, would require the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT FUNDING OF NORTHERN FLOOD COMMITTEE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Cecil Smith (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. The northern flood agreement was ratified on March 16, 1978. The previous minister of Indian affairs and northern development made a firm commitment in August, 1977, at Winnipeg before witnesses that the Northern Flood Committee would be funded for some time. After ratification, funding was terminated on March 31, 1978. The flood committee's job has not been completed. Therefore, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Portage (Mr. Masniuk):

That the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development take immediate steps to provide funding to the Northern Flood Committee until such time as the development corporation is established.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for discussion would require the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

YOUNG CANADA WORKS

EMERGENCY GRANTS FOR STUDENTS IN LOW INCOME AREAS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Andy Hogan (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that Young Canada Works funding has been cut nationally this year, to the great detriment of students from low income areas, and since this is a pressing and urgent matter, I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn):

That the federal government extend emergency grants to such students for the purpose of allowing them equal opportunity for higher education.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INFLATIONARY EFFECT OF FLOATING DOLLAR

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, as we know, not only are prices rising in Canada to an extent far beyond what was anticipated, and certainly beyond what was expected by the government, and we understand now through merchandising organizations that still higher prices may be anticipated, for example for wood products and animal products—one store indicates there is likely to be an increase of as much as 50 cents a pound in the price of certain cuts of beef alone—

[Mr. Smith (Churchill).]

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Stevens: —would the Minister of Finance tell us, when he adopted what he calls his new monetary policy of "a floating dollar is a floating dollar," did he fully consider the inflationary consequence of a falling dollar upon this country and, if so, did he anticipate the price rises which are now being felt and which will likely be felt between now and June?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): I dealt with this problem in my budget speech. I said that because the Canadian dollar has been devalued, some cuts could be expected and I revised my inflation forecast of last fall from 6 per cent to 7 per cent. I maintain that figure which I put in my budget speech.

Mr. Stevens: Not only has the government caused the value of the dollar to fall, resulting in the inflation to which the minister now admits—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Stevens: —but the government has also caused the Bank of Canada to buy $2.2 billion of the federal debt, 30 per cent of the total financial requirement in the fiscal year just ended, as has been revealed in the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. Would the minister also tell us whether he anticipated the inflationary impact of that type of monetarization of debt and, if so, when does he intend to ask the governor of the Bank of Canada to be less inflationary in his monetary stance?

Mr. Chrétien: The governor stated some months ago that the range of increase in the monetary supply was to be between 7 per cent and 11 per cent, and he has adhered to that policy. I might point out that some critics say it is too strict a monetary policy.

Mr. Stevens: Realizing that the government, through the falling dollar, through its habit of having the Bank of Canada monetarize debt by printing more money is simply putting in place future inflation, would the minister tell us whether he has specifically asked the Anti-Inflation Board to assess the impact, first, of the Bank of Canada's monetary policy and, second, of the fall in the value of the dollar—some 16 per cent—to its present level?

Mr. Chrétien: We have analysed all these factors and made a forecast for this year that the annual rate of inflation will be 7 per cent and that the growth in the gross national product will be close to 5 per cent. The hon. member forgot to mention to the House that in the last ten days the Canadian dollar has gained two points.

● (1417)

Mr. Stevens: It is down today.

RATE OF INFLATION

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Finance how he can predict an inflation rate of 7 per cent when the Statistics Canada general wholesale index shows the February over January percentage change to be 1.2 per cent for just one of the 12 months of the year.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, when these statistics were published I stated that certain increases had occurred in March as a result of higher oil prices but that we had forecast a larger increase for March than for February. We have not changed our predictions for the full year because we had already predicted that we would have a problem in March.

[English]

Mr. Clarke: Would the minister now reconsider reducing the rate of expansion being practised by the Bank of Canada?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the expansion rate of the money supply fluctuates between 7 and 11 per cent. It has been considerably reduced during the past two years. I think that rate can accommodate 5 per cent of the economic growth in addition to the inflation we have predicted.

PIPELINES

ALASKA HIGHWAY PIPELINE—EXTENSION OF NORTHERN RAIL LINE

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister in his capacity as minister responsible for the Alaska Highway pipeline. Can the Deputy Prime Minister advise whether he has been officially approached by the government of British Columbia with respect to the extention of the rail line from Fort Nelson?

I understand that the Premier of British Columbia announced that he would have a decision within six weeks and that he had made an official request for federal government assistance to continue the operation and development of this northern rail line. Would the Deputy Prime Minister advise whether such a request has been made and, if a request has been made, would he advise us of the amount requested of the federal government?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I had a meeting on Friday last with two members of the government of British Columbia, the purpose of which was to discuss the elements of an agreement which might be entered into between the Government of Canada and the government of British Columbia in connection with the enforcement of the non-discriminatory features of the pipeline agreement.

A number of proposals were made by the members of the government of British Columbia. We intend to have further meetings. It is not my intention—at least without direct consultation with the government of British Columbia—to disclose the contents of their proposals at this stage.

Mr. Leggatt: Mr. Speaker, with regard to the decision in the original Alaska Highway treaty, was there any request by the government of British Columbia, when the federal government was negotiating with the United States regarding the B.C. section of the Alaska Highway pipeline, for some form of transportation assistance to the province of British Columbia prior to the signing of the final treaty? Was there any request made by the province of British Columbia for that purpose?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, before we entered into the agreement with the United States we had discussions with the government of British Columbia. If my hon. friend will look at the agreement, he will find that there are addenda there relating to the commitments undertaken by the various provincial governments with respect to the principle of non-discrimination. The condition, or the qualification entered by the government of British Columbia had to do with how, as I recollect it, its proposals were subsequently to be dealt with.

So it is a fact that prior to the agreement, the government of British Columbia did make known to us in a general way, as I recall, its views on what agreement ought to be entered into with Canada.

Mr. Leggatt: Mr. Speaker, can the Deputy Prime Minister at this point advise the House whether there will be some form of assistance forthcoming with regard to this very serious problem in northern British Columbia? Will there be some assistance, perhaps less than that requested? Can the minister at least give us a commitment that there will be federal help for that rail line, in view of the fact that it is going to be carrying pipe up to that pipeline and will form a very key and necessary part of the construction? Is there some feeling of federal responsibility in this regard now?

● (1422)

Mr. MacEachen: If any transportation system is required by the pipeline in order to undertake the project, then of course it is possible to consider charging the pipeline company directly for that type of requirement. But it has to be an installation that is required by the company in order to build the pipeline, and would thereby be a direct charge on the pipeline and eventually included in the cost of the service to the consumers. But one would have to look at each particular expenditure on transportation in relation to the logistical plan of the company to know whether it could constitute a direct charge.

Oral Questions

ALASKA HIGHWAY PIPELINE—LIABILITY FOR COST OF INFRASTRUCTURE

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): I have a brief supplementary question for the minister. It concerns the proposals advanced by British Columbia to the federal government regarding a joint approach to the creation of the necessary infrastructure in the area of transportation, communications and community services.

Can the minister advise the House whether he perceives the pipeline agreement with the United States to be flexible enough to incorporate or to charge the cost for some of these infrastructures which are obviously required at this late date to the pipeline company or to the end users of the product flowing through the pipeline?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I would have to repeat part of the answer already given, that in each case there are obviously certain installations or a certain infrastructure which will be required by the pipeline company, and in that case it would be chargeable to the pipeline company.

I believe what was contemplated in the question put earlier was federal assistance to British Columbia in order to undertake certain projects which might not be directly related to the requirements of the pipeline company. In cases of that kind, of course, it would not be possible to have these expenditures charged directly to the pipeline company.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

USE OF MINI-COMPUTERS IN NORTHWEST QUEBEC—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Gilles Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

Following abundant correspondence on the installation of a model SRI mini-computer to improve the processing of applications for unemployment insurance and reduce delays—it now takes as long as two months to study some applications—the minister indicated to me that the decision to supply northwest Quebec with such a mini-computer depends on the merging of the unemployment insurance office with the manpower centre. In addition, he indicated that he must first assess the results of the test area of Hull before reaching a decision. Can he tell the House today whether, after two years of study, he has come to a conclusion with regard to the test project in Hull? If not, when does he expect that study to be completed?

[English]

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, no one can deny that additional computers would help to expedite the claims that are filed at the present time. I think we have a splendid record in that respect. Sometimes errors are made by the applicant, and sometimes they are made by our departmental officials. I would like to see the kind of thing the hon. member is recommending used in other regions of the country. It is a case of setting priorities, seeing the extent to which they can be used and the amount of money available to give that kind of service.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, since the minister indicated in his written replies that it was a question of merging the unemployment insurance office with the manpower centre, can he tell the House whether that agreement has been reached in northwest Quebec and when the two offices will be combined?

[English]

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, in the interests of the personnel who work in the various offices, we want to proceed carefully and cautiously so as not to upset the personnel we have there. We want their morale to remain high. We also want to put offices where they will be most effective. There is a whole series of questions of this nature to be determined before we determine where the mini-computers should be placed.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, the minister indicated it was a question of budget and that the regional office for the province of Quebec, that is the Montreal office, is willing to cede to northwest Quebec that part of the budget now allotted to it. Those additional funds would enable northwest Quebec to have a mini-computer. Is the minister willing to make a decision immediately seeing the funds have been allotted and can be transferred?

● (1427)

[English]

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, I do not know that the decision would be made immediately, but I can assure the hon. member that we are doing everything we can to bring first-class service to the people in that particular region.

NATIONAL SECURITY

DESTRUCTION OF RCMP SURVEILLANCE REPORTS

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General: it relates to the two years of missing documents covering the period when the present Minister of Supply and Services was solicitor general. At various times yesterday the Solicitor General indicated that documents were destroyed, later he qualified that by saying they were presumably destroyed, and even later he said there was no certificate of destruction and, therefore, a great deal of uncertainty. Has the Solicitor General determined whether, in fact, the documents were destroyed, when they were destroyed, and under whose authority?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, the documents are presumed to have been destroyed. There is no precise date indicated as to the time of destruction.

Mr. Jarvis: Mr. Speaker, therefore, I presume no certificate of destruction has been found. Yesterday the Solicitor General indicated that this was a matter of routine procedure—which in itself is alarming enough—wherein documents may be destroyed after a three-year period.

Can the Solicitor General explain, under these routine procedures, why documents would be destroyed for these very vital two years, yet documents for 1973, 1974 and part of 1975—which are now three years old—are so readily available to the McDonald commission?

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated to the hon. gentleman, the source documents referred to in the reports are still available and, indeed, are available to the McDonald commission. In terms of the procedures which were followed, yes, they were internal procedures. There were directives issued relating to this type of report, that the destruction ought to take place three years next after the date of the document. The three years have expired. I understand the directives were fairly explicit.

With reference to the documents after 1973, the documents are available because, indeed, the question of the McDonald commission came up within the time; otherwise their destruction might have been ordered.

Mr. Jarvis: Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Solicitor General indicated—and I believe he has implied it today—that the McDonald commission would not be at all hindered by lack of availability of these documents, in that supporting documentary material is apparently still available. Assistant commissioner Venner said that the records show the government was fully informed as to electronic surveillance by means of these monthly reports.

For this crucial two-year period wherein those missing documents would have shown the degree of ministerial knowledge by the then solicitor general, is the present Solicitor General now telling us that supporting material is still available to the McDonald commission to enable that commission to know the degree of ministerial knowledge during that crucial two-year period?

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, we are dealing here with a document or report referring to the criminal side, or the criminal investigation side. We are not dealing with material relating to the security service side. Therefore, when we are dealing with the reports, the information contained therein which is presently available to the McDonald commission is satisfactory for all the commission's needs.

MEANING OF "GOVERNMENT REQUIREMENTS" IN RCMP INSTRUCTIONS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. With respect to the apparent instructions issued by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police in 1971, about which I questioned the minister yesterday without much success, can the minister tell me what was meant in the instructions which indicated that the request for reporting was not so much for security reasons as it was for statistical purposes, including "government requirements"? Since this could not possibly have anything to do with security, can the minister indicate what was meant by "government requirements" in those instructions?

● (1432)

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, with reference to yesterday's questions, the hon. gentleman will recall that I did not want to comment specifically on the document that was referred to. The method which is employed in terms of collecting certain information follows the collection of statistical information that is generally available relating to all candidates in any given election. That information is then compared to files that are within the security service relating to their own responsibilities and discharging those responsibilities relating to national security, in the terms that I described yesterday. As I understand it, that is the significance of the terms that the hon. gentleman has advanced.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, with all due respect, it is a little difficult to accept the explanation if this is what is meant by "government requirements". Some months ago the Prime Minister indicated that following the invocation of the War Measures Act the government requested the security forces to increase their interest in what he referred to as internal subversion, but the Prime Minister has never met my request to tell us precisely what the government's instructions were.

Could there be any connection between the instructions given to the RCM Police by the Prime Minister and members of the government following the October crisis and the reference to "government requirements" in the instructions issued in 1971 by the RCM Police?

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman addressed himself yesterday to the question of directives that might have been issued by the Prime Minister relating to the question of surveillance of organized parties. The hon. gentleman was informed by me that, indeed, in 1975 specific instructions were issued relating to surveillance of political parties, and those instructions were that the surveillance ought not to take place.

With reference to the hon. gentleman's question, the Prime Minister was asked a question of similar nature some time in the past and made a very fulsome response to it.

Oral Questions

INSTRUCTIONS GIVEN TO RCMP FOLLOWING INVOKING OF WAR MEASURES ACT

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, since the Solicitor General will not, or cannot, answer my question, I ask the Prime Minister whether he is now prepared to tell the House quite frankly, either by tabling or by some other method, precisely what instructions were given to the RCMP following the invocation of the War Measures Act to which reference was made in the House some time ago by the Prime Minister.

Will the Prime Minister now give the House this information, so as to remove the suspicion that in fact the instructions issued by the RCM Police were, at least partially, the result of instructions given to the RCM Police by the Prime Minister and by the government?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, on the latter part of the question, I would have to find out when the RCMP gave the instructions that the hon. member is talking about. My impression is that they have existed for a long period of time and that they did not begin around 1970 or 1971. But I could ascertain the exact date if, indeed, I can get it exactly from the RCMP. I can get a general answer.

In so far as the first part of the question is concerned, I repeat in the House now as clearly as I did the last time, that this instruction was given by the government, notably at meetings of the cabinet committee on security and intelligence when we were somewhat distressed that after the events of October, 1970, the police did not have more files on people who had been involved in bombings, kidnappings, killings, raiding of arsenals, and so on. We asked them to increase their security operations also in the area of internal subversion and not to concentrate, as appeared to be the case, mainly on external security. This was the general nature of the instructions. The police then abided by these instructions to the best of their ability.

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF INSTRUCTIONS TO RCMP

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has indicated the general nature of those instructions. Would he now undertake to the House of Commons to table those instructions in their entirety?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I repeat, the instructions were given at a cabinet committee on security and intelligence, and probably in the course of discussions among myself, other ministers and the commissioner of the RCMP. There are no instructions to table: I talked to the commissioner as I talk to the House now, as I think any reasonable member on the other side would say.

We were worried that there could have been activity by the FLQ over a period of years, and when it culminates in kidnappings and even the murder of a minister— "You do not seem to have many files on these people." You become concerned and ask that the security forces make sure they investigate this side more thoroughly and not only look at external subversion. There is nothing to table. I talked in those words, or words like them, and I make that quite clear before the House.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister will understand that most of us would assume there would be some record kept, either in the form of minutes, notations made internally by security officers to whom the instructions were given, or in the form of an aide memoire that the Prime Minister might have prepared for himself.

Will he give us an undertaking now that he will have a very thorough search made for any record of any of these instructions, and that all such records will be tabled in the House of Commons?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition knows that a record is kept of cabinet committee discussions. Therefore, in the sense that what I have told the House now was told by me to the ministers and the members of the RCMP, there is probably a record of that. It is called either a record of decision, or minutes of a cabinet meeting. Certainly, it is not the intention of the government to table minutes of cabinet discussions. I am surprised that the Leader of the Opposition would suggest that the secrecy of cabinet be unveiled in order that the Canadian public and the opposition know the discussion which goes on in cabinet. That is completely contrary to the cabinet system of cabinet solidarity.

Mr. Clark: We have had a number of events, Mr. Speaker, come to light in the last couple of days that are completely contrary to the formal practices of the parliamentary system.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: These have raised very real concerns about the extent of ministerial direction to the security service and the degree to which there was ministerial or prime ministerial involvement in some of the activities that are now of concern to the House and the country.

In light of the fact that already there have been unusual events, I wonder if the Prime Minister would give the most serious consideration to—admittedly, it is an unusual action—making available a partial list. In other words, would he make available to the House of Commons and the people of Canada, to end all this mystery, those portions of cabinet minutes and, I emphasize, any other documents which might relate to instructions given by the Prime Minister, or people acting on his behalf, to security officials?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition prefaced his question by talking about unparliamentary practices. It seems to me one of them is that suggested by his side, that they will fire all the deputy ministers if ever they form a government.

If the Leader of the Opposition will reflect on the nature of cabinet government—

Mr. Stanfield: You must be in trouble.

Mr. Trudeau: —he will realize that for the purpose of arriving at a cabinet decision it is necessary for ministers to have discussions among themselves freely, and not have those discussions recorded publicly. It is obvious why I will not, and should not, table the discussion or the minutes of discussion in cabinet, and the Leader of the Opposition should know enough about the cabinet system to understand that.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: We will.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

SHIPBUILDING IN LAUZON, QUEBEC—REQUEST PRELIMINARY STUDY BE SHORT

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the right hon. Prime Minister.

Considering that the government is about to award one of the biggest contracts in the history of shipbuilding and that this program would apparently secure 4,500 jobs, and given the unemployment situation in the towns or cities I have in mind, namely Sorel, Montreal, Lauzon and other localities in Canada, in the circumstances could the Prime Minister make a commitment or be prepared to ask the people who are responsible for this contract to make the related studies in the shortest time possible, precisely to enable the builders to draw the benefits of this contract which is apparently rather fantastic?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I understand the interest of the hon. member in such a subject but if he has followed the policy of the government and the announcements which were published when talking about building ships for the Canadian navy under the responsibility of the Department of National Defence, he will certainly remember that we mentioned one ship to be launched during the year 1984 or 1985. Thus I do not think this question is realistic. Before building these ships we obviously need very detailed and very complicated plans. These plans must then be presented to the bidders. There are several stages to go through. So I think it is not realistic to suggest that these dates be set earlier so as to meet the hon. member's request.

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, my question is simple. I am trying to reassure the persons involved and of course the population of Canada. Could the Prime Minister ask that these studies be completed as soon as possible? I do not ask to lessen the importance of these studies, but considering the unemployment situation in Canada today, I simply ask the government to act more quickly in this regard than it has done over the last ten years.

STOPFORTH CASE—REQUEST CROWN PAY LEGAL COSTS

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Justice I would address my question to the Prime Minister. It has been announced that the Minister of Supply and Services is going to launch an appeal with respect to the $10,000 in damages awarded by Mr. Justice Lieff for the libelling of Mr. Larry Stopforth.

In view of the fact that the Minister of Supply and Services has the full resources of the government behind him with respect to legal costs, in the interests of equity will the Prime Minister recommend to the Minister of Justice that Mr. Stopforth's legal costs be paid by the government so that he will not be facing very large costs for what could be a series of appeals from this point forward?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in the area of criminal law, where the federal goverment has jurisdiction, we have proposals and procedures for assisting people who are victims of crimes, and so on, and who incur damages in the way of costs. But in the area of civil law, or common law, which is not within our jurisdiction, we do not have these procedures.

I understand the common law and civil law provinces do have measures of assisting litigants who are in need of assistance. But certainly, as a matter of general practice, I do not think the hon. member would suggest that every time the government is sued by somebody, or a minister or official of the government is sued, the government should pay the expenses of the suer.

An hon. Member: The "suer"?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I would suggest to the Prime Minister that the Minister of Supply and Services had better be—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I will wait until the government side quietens down.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I would suggest that the Minister of Supply and Services had better be successful because a Conservative president of the treasury board will look very hard at any payment of damages. I ask the Prime Minister whether, in view of the very interesting precedents given by the Minister of Justice, the government has paid the legal costs of the former minister of transport, Senator Marchand, who was sued by the Crown attorney in Ottawa for saying that the Crown attorney had double-crossed him. Also, is there an undertaking from the former minister of finance, Mr. John Turner, who sued the CBC, that any moneys received from that libel action would be turned over to the public treasury?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, it seems to me the hon. member is trying to make a debating point. If he is discussing the matter seriously as a matter of law, I hope he will restate his question.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I will be glad to. I thought you were a professor of law.

PENSIONS

REQUEST FOR OVER-ALL STUDY OF PENSION PLANS

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. I put my question to him because the Department of Insurance and the Pension Benefits Standards Act come under his jurisdiction.

In view of the fact that a couple of days ago the United States Supreme Court ruled that in that country employers must no longer require women to make larger payments to retirement funds than men simply because females have a longer average lifespan, and in view of the fact that there are provisions in the Canadian Human Rights Act which prohibit discrimination between men and women in matters of pension plans, may I ask the Minister of Finance if he will take steps to have this matter studied to make sure that pension plans in this country, not just those which come under jurisdiction of governments but those that come under private auspices as well, are set up so that there is no discrimination, bearing in mind that this should include the elimination of actuarial tables which set up differences in rates between men and women?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member raises a very interesting question, and I will ask the superintendent of insurance to inquire and report to me. I will then communicate with the hon. member to inform him of the situation as its stands in Canada.

[English]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is put to the minister so that I can ask if he will have that inquiry directed not only to pension plans but to insurance policies generally, so that there is no discrimination, particularly in the matter of rates being based on differences in longevity between men and women.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, certainly I will be asking the superintendent of insurance to look at all aspects of the question.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

SEARCH FOR KOREAN AIRCRAFT—PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF MASTER CADET

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. Can the minister advise the House if the Canadian armed forces were involved in the initial search for the Korean Airlines' plane which was forced down in the Soviet Union? If so, what was the extent of that search?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, when the airplane was first noticed overdue, although it was not close to our coastline, as was further indicated, the Canadian armed forces major air disaster plan was put into place immediately. Aircraft were in the air with para-rescue teams on the search path when it was learned that the plane had gone down elsewhere. That the whole system was in being I found comforting, as minister, and I am sure the people of Canada do as well. This capacity works in a highly efficient way. It was put into operation automatically and I was kept informed during every stage of the operation.

While I am on my feet, Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Danson: —I would like to draw the attention of the House to the presence in the gallery of Master Cadet Peter Dillon, the most qualified cadet in the cadet corps.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Qualified cadets make up for the minister!

TRADE

GATT—CANADIAN POSITION VIS-À-VIS U.S. PROPOSAL FOR LOWER TARIFFS

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the House leader in his capacity as minister responsible for the GATT negotiations. It appears certain the United States will be demanding deeper and broader tariff cuts than those proposed by Canada at the Tokyo trade discussions going on at Geneva. According to some American sources, the Canadian offer—which is basically the Swiss formula—will not be acceptable to the United States.

I ask the minister what Canada's position will be with regard to the United States proposal for lower tariffs than those presently formulated by Canada?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member will recall that the negotiations are being conducted under the general hypothesis, or a working hypothesis of, I believe, an over-all 40 per cent weighted average cost. I believe the Americans at an earlier point had argued for cuts greater than the 40 per cent, but negotiations are proceeding. Certainly,

Canada's participation in the negotiations is based upon this hypothesis.

At the present time, offers and proposals are being made. It is not possible at this stage to determine whether the offers made on either side are adequate or will result in the kind of reciprocal advantages which will have to come into play at the end. When Vice-President Mondale was here, his declaration on the trade side indicated that the United States had presented a proposal which went a long way toward meeting Canadian objections, particularly in the field of sector negotiations.

● (1452)

Mr. Murta: Since the proposal Canada put forward, basically the Swiss formula or 40 per cent reduction, the United States has indicated it is looking in the neighbourhood of 61 per cent or 62 per cent on industrial goods, in terms of the proposal it will put forward. Is the proposal the Canadian government has put forward—the basic Swiss formula or 40 per cent reduction—Canada's firm position, or will the government be prepared to negotiate off that position? If so, to what extent would it be prepared to negotiate?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I believe at the present time all participants are operating under the single hypothesis of a 40 per cent cut. I do not believe the Americans are still pressing for 60 per cent over-all, a cut which was objected to in the earlier stages particularly by the European Economic Community.

The hon. member is asking whether we will back off the over-all 40 per cent. It is understood that countries will seek exceptions from the application of the 40 per cent—that some cuts may be greater than 40 per cent, and others less. It will be an average. When all these are put together, it will be possible to introduce a certain amount of flexibility into the over-all negotiating hypothesis. I should say it is generally understood that when you net out the exceptions and the flexibility, it is expected that a general 40 per cent cut will have been achieved.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

PROPOSED 40-HOUR WEEK FOR EMPLOYEES OF COUNTRY GRAIN ELEVATORS

Mr. Arnold Malone (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Labour. It relates to the question of a 40-hour week for country grain elevator employees and the minister's letter in response that that will not be his implication, and the letter goes on to state, "to have a realistic and reasonable variation in this form provided by regulation". Is that going to be a regulation from his department? Is that intact now? What consultation with country elevators is taking place in relation to that regulation?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, to answer the last part of the hon. member's question first, we have had rather continuous discussions with the country grain elevators and their representatives, as well as the unions involved. At least one or two commissions of inquiry that I can think of were very much involved in the consultative process.

As far as the first part of the hon. member's question is concerned, the regulation would be drafted by my department; there is no question about that. In view of the fact I announced in the House prior to the passage of Bill C-8 that I was granting a further period of six months for the entire exemption of country grain elevators from the regime under the Labour Code, it is not immediately pertinent.

Mr. Malone: Can the minister give us assurance that these regulations for a 40-hour a week in country grain elevators—which have peak seasons—are not now lying in wait simply for a period that would follow the next election—and God help us if this government gets back in—simply to be implemented then, as indicated by some of the top officials of his department?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member's cynicism is entirely unjustified in this particular situation.

EMPLOYMENT

JOB VACANCY SURVEYS BY STATISTICS CANADA

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Is it the intention of Statistics Canada to do away with job vacancy surveys? If so, can the minister explain why this step is being taken at a time when unemployment is in excess of one million Canadians?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): That has not been brought to my attention, Mr. Speaker. Statistics Canada comes under the jurisdiction of my colleague, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. I was not aware they were contemplating that step.

AIR CANADA

FIRING OF EMPLOYEES AT U.S. AIRPORTS

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Transport. It arises from Air Canada's unorthodox firing of some 84 ramp attendants and baggage handlers at United States airports and subsequently awarding the contract to an outside entrepreneur. Is the minister aware of a ground collision involving an Air Canada DC-8 and a towing vehicle which occurred on April 3 at the John F. Kennedy airport shortly after the transfer took place, causing considerable damage to the aircraft? It had the potential of a serious tragedy.

Since it appears that the incident occurred as the result of inexperience on the part of the operator, will the minister undertake to look into this matter, have the whole question reviewed and, as an immediate step, ensure that the people providing this service are indeed qualified to do so?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the incident had not been brought to my attention. I am not sure the hon. member has any basis for suggesting the cause of it as he has outlined it. I did look at Air Canada's analysis of the reason for their change and the great economies involved in going to the new system. It seemed sensible to me. I will certainly be glad to bring the hon. member's representation to the attention of Air Canada concerning the qualifications of the people now involved.

FINANCE

GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE TO IMPROVE SITUATION IN TEXTILES INDUSTRY

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance arising out of Canada's present dilemma in trade and the fact that Canada is losing its shirt because Canada's shirt is losing.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Alkenbrack: Since current trade and mercantile policies of this government have disillusioned and muddled the Canadian people to the extent that they cannot afford to purchase the products of their own handiwork, what is this government doing to help our Canadian textile industry in the present crisis of unfair foreign competition? An example is the sale of men's shirts today in a large store on the Sparks Street mall, the Canadian-made shirt selling at $8.99 and the Korean competitor selling at $3.99—the latter outselling our product six to one?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we have had a policy for a year and a half of establishing a quota system in Canada and dividing the Canadian market between Canadian textile products and imported products. I hope Canadian workers will never be called upon to work at the same rate as Korean workers.

AGRICULTURE

USE OF SKIM MILK POWDER FOR LIVESTOCK FEED PURPOSES

Mr. John Wise (Elgin): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. With reference to the possibility of using greater quantities of skim milk powder for livestock feed purposes, has the minister had discussions with any of the Canadian feed manufacturers or producers with regard to a special arrangement to make this product available to them?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I understand the Dairy Commission has had discussions in the past, although I do not know how recently. We announced a new program for this year of $6.5 million. Part of that is to be used to develop new uses for skim milk powder. That program allows them to use it in any fashion or form they think is better economically than throwing it on the world market and trying to get rid of it in that way.

Mr. Wise: I am not referring to that at all. I am advised that some discussion was held with either the minister or the officials of the Department of Agriculture, and the commitment was given that a special arrangement would be made to make this product available to Canadian feed manufacturers at a price less than the support price, which would be 74 cents. That commitment was to be delivered when the dairy policy was announced on April 13, but there was no mention of it. Is the minister saying that no meeting was held and no commitment was ever given to either the Canadian Feed Manufacturers Association or any other producer group in Canada?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of any meeting. No meeting took place between myself and any representatives of the feed manufacturers on an official scale. I did meet with some of them informally and we did talk about many things. We never talked about any formal arrangements or skim milk powder at world prices for animal use, as a supplement in place of protein. That has been discussed in the past for a special veal feeding program, a calf feeding program, and so on. I do not know how far it has advanced. I will certainly check and let the hon. member know.

FINANCE

INCOME TAX DEDUCTIONS FOR PERSONS AFFLICTED WITH CEREBRAL PALSY

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. It has to do with personal income tax deductions for a parent or parents of children who suffer from cerebral palsy. I am not referring to cerebral palsy children actually confined to a wheelchair, but those who, thanks to surgery, are able to walk and get around.

At the present time these parents have to pay up to $40 a month for shoes, $70 to $75 a month for special tuition fees, and so on. Will the minister consider allowing personal income tax deductions or exemptions for the very high costs these parents have to meet?

● (1502)

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): I will take notice of the suggestion made by the hon. member and ask my officials to look into it. Any changes, of course, would have to wait for the next budget.

PRIVILEGE

MR. STANFIELD—SURVEILLANCE OF CANDIDATES SEEKING PUBLIC OFFICE

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Stanfield) yesterday, by way of a question of privilege, expressed concern with regard to matters which arose during the question period and I indicated then, in a preliminary way, and I repeat now, that although I respect the hon. member's suggestion that if I were to adjudicate in a general way he might then put forward a motion, I must say to him that on a number of procedural grounds it is impossible for me to bring the issue into the necessary focus unless I have a motion in front of me. The motion itself may be procedurally correct or otherwise, but in any case it is necessary for me to have a motion before me so that I can adjudicate on it. I will therefore have to leave the matter open for the hon. member to put forward a motion. Should he wish to do so, I would think the matter would be reopened for discussion, depending upon the content of the motion.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Halifax): I have a motion here, Mr. Speaker, which I will move if you find I do have a prima facie case of privilege. It reads as follows:

That the matter of the Solicitor General's refusal to provide information respecting surveillance by the security forces of legitimate political candidates, and his contention that the McDonald commission is the only suitable vehicle to investigate a question affecting the privileges of all members of the House of Commons, be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Halifax has raised a subject which is obviously of fundamental importance to the House of Commons and I am sure it is of concern to members. The matter was raised in a general way yesterday. Now that a specific motion is before the House, I wonder if it would not be appropriate to allow time for hon. members to prepare arguments which might be helpful. We did hear some preliminary argument yesterday, but it was advanced without preparation. Now that the specific text of a motion is before us, members might wish to participate at this point in some argument on the merits, or else do so tomorrow after questions, or at the first opportunity, Monday, perhaps. I certainly think it is a matter of grave and fundamental importance if there is any suggestion that candidates for membership in this House are in any way interfered with by reason of an official directive. It is not a point I would wish to treat lightly, or without hearing full argument on both sides of the question.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I made my argument yesterday. I shall be away from the House tomorrow and I do not ask that the matter be delayed, because I do not know what the intentions of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) are with respect to the life of this parliament.

An hon. Member: Neither does he!

Mr. Stanfield: I would be very happy to see the discussion proceed tomorrow in my absence. I have had my say on the matter already.

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Solicitor General): That suggestion is acceptable to me, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, I should like to make a contribution to the discussion tomorrow. As well, I could before then, perhaps, speak to the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Stanfield) with regard to the points I shall be making tomorrow and, in the event he has further comments to make, I would be pleased to receive them.

Mr. Speaker: Then it is agreed that the matter stand over for further argument, if any, until tomorrow after questions.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, looking over at the government is like looking over at the living dead.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): But since the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) does not seem to know whether the House will stay or go, or what will happen to it—he seems to be dithering a bit—perhaps I can assume that his seat mate, the government House leader, will be proceeding on the assumption that we are staying. He has given us a list of legislation which includes Bills C-36, C-10, S-8, C-42, S-9 and C-4, indicating that this will be the order in which they will be taken unless changes are made later. Would it not now be appropriate, since we are in this state, for the government House leader to tell us today what are his priorities with respect to legislation as we look to the balance of the session, however long it might be? On the assumption that the Prime Minister has lost his nerve and has decided that parliament should stay, could we be told what the legislative priorities of the government might be quite a way "down the road?"

Mr. MacEachen: The hon. member has referred to the announcement of legislation I made on Thursday last. That announcement still stands. I might add that, in accordance with the suggestion of the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker), next Wednesday will be designated as an allotted day.

I am quite interested in the suggestion the hon. member has made with regard to legislative priorities "down the road." I shall be happy to look at the order paper and indicate, at the first opportunity, what legislation we shall be seeking in the next indefinite period. All I will say now to the hon. member is this: he has prefaced all these questions on recent Thursdays by speculating as to whether we shall be here. Well, Mr. Speaker, my track record has been perfect, and the hon. member ought to take my word for it.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I suppose the question we should like to have answered is whether we are going down the road or out on the campaign trail. But since we are still here, can the hon. gentleman tell us whether there is any intention to bring before the House any legislation arising out of the recent so-called budget?

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, Mr. Speaker, it is proposed that the bills based upon the budget will be brought forward. As the hon. member knows, I stated yesterday that there will be amendments to the Criminal Code. One or two bills related to the Criminal Code will be introduced. In addition, a bill will be introduced tomorrow, I believe, in the name of the Solicitor General (Mr. Blais), so there is a considerable body of legislation available to the House before we would contemplate adjourning.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this amendment is to extend in all Canadian provinces the right for Canadian banks to advertise in newspapers in both official languages. EXPORT DEVELOPMENT ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed, from Wednesday, April 26, consideration of the motion of Mr. Horner that Bill C-36, to amend the Export Development Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I want to make a brief intervention in this debate at this stage. As the House of Commons knows, there are a number of aspects of the legislation respecting the Export Development Corporation which are of very real concern to hon. members on this side of the House and to the people of Canada generally.

I personally have been alarmed at the performance of information officers of the Export Development Corporation, which very much borders on the partisan, in some of the attacks they have levelled against members in this House of Commons. I think this goes well beyond the proper bounds of the activities of information officers of a Crown corporation. It is a matter to which we will want to turn more attention later.

We are also very deeply concerned about the degree to which the Government of Canada has used the Export Development Corporation as a contributor to the economic hocus-pocus of this government by which it attempts to hide the degree of obligations and the degree of indebtedness which have been brought to Canada by the operations of the present government.

This bill would authorize the Export Development Corporation to raise $26 billion. That is, in effect, a three-fold increase in its authorized accounts. That amount is not reflected in the national accounts of the government, and it is natural that we and others who are concerned about sound economic management in this country should ask questions as to why that very significant amount is omitted from the national accounts. The answer of the government is that it does not believe that loans by the EDC are direct obligations for the taxpayers of Canada. That position by the government is denied by publications of the EDC itself. That is very seriously misleading, because it allows the Government of Canada to claim that federal government spending and federal government obligations are much less than they are in fact, and I think that this government would find that it would be able to generate much more confidence in the Canadian business community, and among Canadians generally, if it were prepared to come clean and speak the truth about its full indebtedness.

The Government of Canada should stop trying to cook the books, as it has been doing with the Export Development Corporation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: I want to deal with the specific direction of this legislation. This bill would raise the loan ceilings of the Export Development Corporation to $12.5 billion from the present $5.1 billion. It would raise the insurance ceiling to $13.5 billion from $3.5 billion.

We all know that the broad objective of the EDC is to encourage and promote Canadian exports. That role is carried out by the EDC by providing insurance and loans to finance capital projects throughout the world, and to tie those projects and that financing to the purchase of Canadian goods and materials. Of course, nobody can object or take exception to that basic purpose. Nobody would find fault with a Canadian government policy designed to promote Canadian exports, but when we look beneath the surface at what is going on in the EDC, and once we study its operations and look at the nature of the ventures in which it has become involved in the world, it becomes clear that the activities and the impact of the EDC go well beyond that general purpose of which all of us can approve.

There is in the activities of the EDC much more than that which appears on the surface. In many cases we are clearly realizing some short-term gains for Canada in terms of encouraging exports, but we are also—and this is the point to which attention has been drawn—gathering for this country some very serious long-term harm. What is happening, stripping away all of the detail—and I want to get to some of the detail later on—is that Canadian money is being used to build plants abroad which will compete with plants which are already operating in Canada. Canadian money is being used now to build plants abroad whose existence outside this country may very well prevent the development and construction of plants and the provision of jobs right here in Canada. In other words, we have a situation where we may be spending Canadian money now to create Canadian unemployment later, and that, sir, is a piece of foolishness which no sane, responsible parliament can approve or sustain.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: It is not at all surprising that this kind of proposed legislation comes from this government because, if this government is anything, it is a short-term government. In the name of long-term economic planning this government brought in a six-month budget. With its eye on trying to alleviate unemployment, which grows most acute in October and November, this government introduced a sales tax cut which will end when unemployment becomes most acute. This government is committed to the short-term, and it is absolutely incapable of taking a long-term look at the future of this country. While that might be the pattern of what this government has done, we in this parliament have a much larger responsibility. The government might be interested in surviving only the next six months, but the Parliament of Canada has to be interested in the country's being able to survive and be strong for a much longer period of time.

As in the case of many agencies of the federal government, we need a full scale, thorough, and calm review of all the activities of the Export Development Corporation. We need to have the opportunity, in an atmosphere of calm, and without any unusual pressures, to sort out the gains for Canada from the losses for Canada and to ensure that Canadian public policy is designed exclusively to create opportunities for this nation and is not designed, as is unfortunately the case with some of the loans and activities of EDC, to have the consequence of creating new problems for this country. We cannot get that kind of examination of the bill now for a variety of reasons, some of which I intend to go into, but I make the point in passing that an examination of EDC should be one of the very early activities that is undertaken by this parliament once we have introduced into practice here the concept of the sunset law, the concept of an automatic review of the effectiveness of federal agencies. That is a commitment that my colleagues and I intend to introduce early after the next election—

• (1522)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: —so that we and the Canadian taxpayers can be sure that there will be an opportunity to review, coldly and carefully, the effectiveness of agencies which are now in place.

Mr. Pinard: You are dreaming.

Mr. Clark: My colleague opposite says I am dreaming. I presume he means I am dreaming in thinking that there might be an election. I say to him that his party can only run so far. Your Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) is running away from the election now, but he has to call one within a year from July. You might have a year left if you demonstrate more reluctance to face the electorate than you have in the past few weeks. But your time will come, and the people of Canada will have an opportunity to have a government that will introduce sunset legislation and other legislation that will review and curtail the activities of agencies which are not serving the public interest in Canada now.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Abbott: May I put a question to the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark)?

Mr. Clark: Please go ahead.

Mr. Abbott: I want to be clear whether he is suggesting he would introduce a sunset provision to bring the sun down on the EDC.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: What I am suggesting to the minister, Mr. Speaker, is that I think it is past the time when individual members of the House of Commons had the opportunity to have some real impact upon controlling the activities and the expenditure of the Government of Canada. That is the tradition of parliament; that is why we are here. It is a tradition which has been broken by the government of which the minister is a part, and it is a tradition which we intend to reintroduce. One of the means by which we intend to introduce it is by bringing into practice a sunset law which would ensure that a committee of this parliament will have the opportunity to examine in detail whether agencies and operations, such as EDC, are in fact carrying out their mandate. They will be subject to detailed examination. If it is found that they are not carrying out their mandate, then they will go out of business. If it is found that their mandate is inappropriate, then their mandate will be changed. I am sure the minister will agree that that would be a very helpful innovation in the House, and I am sure he will also agree that it will only occur with a change of government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Our problem right now is that this government has manufactured a crisis, which means that we cannot give EDC the kind of searching analysis that is required now because there are certain immediate and legitimate pressures upon the government. In short, the problem is that EDC has already reached, or has very nearly reached, the lending limits which have been authorized by the House, and exports of Canadian goods will be lost if the House does not move fairly quickly to pass this bill raising the loan ceilings of EDC.

There is one reason why this has happened, there is one culprit here, and that culprit is the government itself because it could have brought this legislation in some time ago, and then we would be considering it calmly rather than in an atmosphere of crisis. Instead of acting responsibly and with foresight, this government waited until the last minute, as it does so often. It has now provided the House of Commons with this legislation in a crisis atmosphere, forcing us to decide too quickly on a matter which involved the potential expenditure and the obligation to Canada of literally billions of dollars.

I should simply add that this incompetence in economic matters is not at all confined to EDC. Another example is the Bank Act. The Bank Act has been delayed. It has been more than two years since this government brought to the House of Commons its White Paper on revisions to the Bank Act. As hon. members will recall, the Bank Act has to be revised every ten years. The date of the last revision was 1967. What we get instead of action we need are two extensions to the 1967 act because this government is so unable to manage that it cannot bring forward its amendments, and it cannot bring forward a new bill on time. We are told that the bill is ready but that the government will not bring it forward because, presumably, it does not want the people of Canada to know what the Prime Minister meant when he said the other day to me that the Bank Act will deal with les caisses populaires and with credit unions.

Let me come back to this bill, because the government's inaction and delay have created an atmosphere of crisis about this bill also. Under the provisions of this legislation, the total authorization for EDC would increase to $26 billion from $8.85 billion. That $26 billion is equivalent to 10 per cent of the current domestic gross national product.

Since 1969 when the EDC was first established, the authorized capital for corporate lending has risen from $600 million to $10 billion—a sixteenfold increase in less than ten years. In corporate insurance, this rise has been from $250 million to $10 billion during the same period. In other words, the growth has been nothing less than dramatic.

But we have to ask the question: what do EDC loans provide Canadians? The EDC, just to cite some examples, has lent something like $350 million to finance pulp and paper mills in Poland, Peru, Romania, Argentina, and Iran. These projects, built with Canadian capital goods, eventually compete with Canadian pulp and paper mills for markets. This is particularly troubling in view of the difficulties that Canadian manufacturers of pulp and paper products have had in finding markets during the last couple of years.

Again, EDC has financed $78 million worth of nickel mining projects in Guatemala and Indonesia. We know to our sorrow that 4,000 Canadian miners recently lost their jobs in Sudbury because of depressed world nickel markets. That was before these two new EDC financed nickel mines, operated with cheaper labour than is available in Canada, achieved full production.

Again, EDC financed a mini steel mill in New Jersey, the cost of which was in the neighbourhood of $47 million. It financed other steel operations in Texas, Minnesota, and Great Britain. In fact EDC financed steel mills outside of this country with $100 million in Canadian taxpayers' money, and that at a time when Algoma steel is experiencing difficulties in finding markets for its rolled steel products, and at a time when Stelco is forced to slow down the pace of construction for its Nanticoke mill because it has no markets for its end product.

Again, EDC has financed projects in a number of countries behind the Iron Curtain, such as in Russia, Poland, as I mentioned, Yugoslavia, Czechoslovakia, Romania, Hungary, Bulgaria, and Cuba. Many of the projects which have been financed by EDC will compete directly with Canadian manufacturers, when they are completed. Because all operate with state planned economies, wage costs can be adjusted in various ways to make plants competitive at all cost in world markets and to make them competitive with Canada in an unfair way.

The point that we cannot lose sight of, and the point that I rise today to emphasize, is that the activities of EDC may seem to be providing a short term benefit for Canada. We may have exports of capital equipment to build steel mills and pulp and paper plants, but that is only a short term benefit. The long term result could very well be the loss of Canadian jobs to concerns and projects which are financed abroad by the Canadian Export Development Corporation. These plants are more efficient because the are newer and cheaper to operate, and because they operate in countries where wage costs are lower. What long term good is there for Canada if we eliminate our own industries for the short term advantage of some export contracts?

● (1532)

Part of the difficulty is that the government is operating, in terms of the Export Development Corporation, without any kind of long term industrial strategy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: There have been a number of failures by this government during the ten years in which it has been in office. But none has been more significant for the long term future of the country than its absolute failure to establish any over-all sense of direction for Canadian industrial development. That means Canada goes to GATT with no industrial strategy than to follow the Americans. It means we have the Export Development Corporation spending Canadian money to create plants abroad that will compete with Canada and cause unemployment here. It means a number of other inconsistent actions which can work very seriously against the long term interests of Canada. Canada requires a national industrial strategy which will provide some direction for the Export Development Corporation, as well as some direction in what we are doing at GATT. Instead of that, we receive six-month budgets and Export Development Corporation bills brought in at the last minute during a state of crisis, when there cannot be the detailed examination that the public interest and the House of Commons require.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: What is abundantly clear to all of us is that the Export Development Corporation engages in very little long term planning. It is an ad hoc organization, operating without the guidance of a national industrial strategy. It looks for immediate gains, but it gives far too little attention to the long term costs to Canada of some of the ways in which it is spending Canadian money abroad.

I do not blame the directors of the Export Development Corporation. As always, the fault lies with the government of the day on questions of policy. The government of the day has failed to give the direction which is necessary to the Export Development Corporation. The government of the day has failed to develop the industrial strategy which our nation needs. Because of those failures by the government, we face a short term crisis now. There is a real dilemma for EDC.

The government has delayed the introduction of this piece of legislation for so long that a crisis has been created. We will help the government get out of that crisis. Also we will assist it in raising very quickly the authorized capital of EDC. But in committee, in the next stage of debate on this matter, we will propose that the ceilings be lowered by an aggregate of $10 billion.

In the case of the corporate loan ceiling, the government has proposed an amount of $10 billion. We will offer an amendment lowering that amount to $6 billion. The government is proposing a loan ceiling on government loans of $2.5 billion. We will offer an amendment to make that amount $1.5 billion. In addition, we will propose that the government's proposal for insurance and guarantee authorization be lowered by $5 billion. That will be an aggregate lowering of the ceilings by $10 billion, which is a great deal of money, as much as the total spending of the government when it first took office, and as much as its deficit is now. It leaves substantial spending power with that Crown corporation. But the people of Canada need the assurance that money will be used in the best long term interests of our country, and that we will not sacrifice many jobs tomorrow for a few jobs today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: We are prepared to act in the public interest and in the tradition of parliamentary responsibility, which has marked our participation in attempting to bail out the government and rescue it from its own incompetence throughout this session. We will help the Export Development Corporation out of its present difficulties. The fact that we are prepared to help in this way does not solve the far more serious problems concerning the proper role of EDC. It does not solve the far more serious problems of the absence in this country of a national industrial strategy which can provide guidance and direction to government agencies and private entrepreneurs who operate now in a policy vacuum.

Those changes can only come with an election which will allow Canadians to make a choice between a government which thinks in terms of six-month budgets and spending money now to create Canadian unemployment later, and a new government which is determined to bring in a national industrial strategy which will give guidance to Canadian Crown corporations and private entrepreneurs, and bring some sense of honesty and restraint into the activities of government in this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, will the hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) permit a question?

Mr. Clark: Certainly, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Young: In the context of the hon. Leader of the Opposition's remarks that these Export Development Corporation contracts with Soviet nations were detrimental to Canada, and that they resulted only in plants being built in other countries with a potential loss of jobs to Canadians, can he explain those remarks, in view of the fact that I am aware of an EDC-backed contract which helped a truck manufacturer in this country to build a brand new factory, thus creating over 100 new jobs?

Mr. Clark: Question.

[Mr. Clark.]

Mr. Paproski: Do not make a speech.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Ask your question.

Mr. Young: I am asking a question. It is a specific one.

A second EDC-backed contract in Indonesia helped put 200 men back to work in Canada, who had been laid off for three months.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, obviously the hon. member opposite requires some practice in asking questions. If he survives the next election, he will get some practice doing that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: I said that the Government of Canada, through the Export Development Corporation, is aiding the development of industries in Iron Curtain countries and other countries.

Mr. Young: And in this country.

Mr. Clark: If the hon. member wants to rise in his place once again, he can do so. But he prefers to shout across the floor, which is typical of the action displayed by the Liberal party throughout this session of parliament.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: Since the hon. member asked a question, which I can only presume was serious I presume he is interested in the concern I and many other Canadians have. The government spends substantial amounts of money now, and makes money available to encourage the development of industries in countries which operate under a different market system than ours, and where the state controls and keeps wage levels low. When the government subsidizes the creation of industries in those countries, which compete with similar industries here, it is much more difficult for Canada to compete in the world. They may well be raising competition for industries which now operate in Canada. If that is being done, Canadians who have jobs now may well be jeopardized, or jobs Canadians could look forward to may be jeopardized. The question which must be answered is: why should Canadian money be spent to help other countries compete with us, at the cost of Canadian jobs in the future?

Mr. Young: It is putting our own people to work.

Mr. Clark: That is the type of question which has been raised repeatedly by hon. members on this side of the House. It is the type of question government spokesmen consistently attempt to ignore. It is a basic question. This is the reason why there must be a thorough review of the activities of the Export Development Corporation in this country. That is the kind of review that we want to see happen, and the kind of review that we will introduce after the next election. In the meantime we are prepared to help the government out of the crisis it has created, by increasing the ceilings.

● (1542)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Abbott: Mr. Speaker, acting on behalf of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner), I would ask that the debate be closed, and move that the bill be moved to committee. I see that my hon. friend is rising to speak.

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, yesterday during a rather lively debate in the House on this bill, I had the opportunity, or the misfortune—whichever way you would like to put it—of listening to the comments of the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Anderson), the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment. After listening to and reading his speech, I wondered whose side he was on. I think he should have stuck to his own department, one which hopefully he knows more about. I hope he is better informed on fisheries and the environment than he is on industry, trade and commerce and the EDC, because the bait that he was trolling would only catch suckers.

Mrs. Pigott: That is a good one.

Mr. Brisco: Yesterday he stated—and he was on shaky ground, or perhaps he was at sea—that I have no reason to suspect the words of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner). That is the statement of the year. I have reason to suspect the words of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. The people of Alberta have reason to suspect his words, and all other Canadians have reason to suspect his words. For example, the minister made a very solemn promise to the city of Edmonton that he would expand their airport facilities and improve on them. He then lived up to that promise by narrowing it, stenosing it, stricturing it, and restructuring it so that the program really amounts to nothing. I have heard the minister speak in this House very strongly in favour of a beef import act. Now he favours an import-export permit scheme which he himself knows has caused a great deal of difficulty within the beef industry. So much for the flip-flop, cow plop statements of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

The parliamentary secretary yesterday said, as reported at page 4904 of Hansard:

> Day in and day out I hear doom and gloom from hon. members opposite concerning employment problems—

Thank goodness there is somebody, sir, in this House of Commons who is prepared to draw to the attention of this Liberal government the very real reasons for doom and gloom in this country. We have the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce with his new bill, we have EDC with their proposals, and you have the opposition preaching doom and gloom. Where does that doom and gloom come from? It comes from my constituency, from the member's constituency, Comox-Alberni, and from all constituencies across Canada, save and except a few.

Do you know, Mr. Speaker, what the unemployment figures are for my riding of Kootenay West? Obviously, the hon. member for Comox-Alberni has no idea what the unemployment figures are for his particular riding, otherwise he would address himself to the very doom and gloom which he accuses us of preaching. If he had the fortitude to come forward and admit to the fact that this country is in a very serious situation, and if he had the fortitude and intelligence to listen occasionally to the opposition, instead of rejecting out of hand any proposals which are put forward, then perhaps he might accomplish something of benefit for his own riding.

I would like to give a brief example of the doom and gloom that face us, why it is doom and gloom, why I am concerned, and why the opposition is concerned at something that absolutely fails to register on the other side. It does not matter what the inflation rate is, it does not matter how many unemployed there are, when it comes down to the cold hard facts, the government acts and reacts about two years out of phase.

Let us look at Statistics Canada. They gathered data on 19 specific categories of manufactured and imported end products and classified them as high technology manufacturers. These are the kinds of items that we see developed in foreign countries by the Export Development Corporation. I have no beef with the basic thrust of that corporation, but my first concern is Canada and jobs for Canadians. I do not care how much rhetoric we hear from the other side about how much the pulp mill in Poland is going to help Canada, it still does not come anywhere near looking to the problems that are before us in terms of our own markets and our own products.

When we wonder where the jobs have gone for the 1.5 million unemployed, we note that most of them, 80 per cent have gone back to the United States. Ten per cent has gone to Japan, and another 10 per cent to Britain and the European community. We have a deficit in end product, high technology manufactured products, of $8.2 billion for 1977. At the risk of boring the hon. member, perhaps he would listen to the impact of these figures. We are not talking pennies or dollars, but we are talking millions and millions of dollars.

What is our export situation and our import situation in terms of some of these products? What about our man-made fibres? The net deficit for man-made fibres is $41,151,000. In chemicals we have a deficit of $253 million. I will not bother with the thousands, because the government does not. In petroleum and coal products, one of the unusual ones, we find that we actually have a surplus of $360 million. Industrial machinery is at $743 million, and mechanical handling equipment, $148 million. These are all deficits, and these are things that we are bringing to Canada that should be manufactured and produced in Canada.

Surely, if the markets are there, as is evidenced by the statistics and the volume of imports, our industries can pick up that slack even if it is only the 20 per cent by which they are now depressed. Other industrial machinery has a $1,296,000,-000 deficit. In spite of the fact Canada is one of the major agricultural producers in the world, agricultural machinery has a net deficit on imports of $746 million. In railways, locomotives and rolling stock, the deficit is $46 million.

We have roadways of over 5,000 miles from sea to sea, highways spread out across the 49th parallel and adjacent to it, thousands of mile, yet we find that road transport equipment has a deficit on imports of $1,036,000,000. In aircraft and parts equipment we managed to create a surplus of $203 million; in other vehicles, $42 million deficit.

We have Northern Telecom trying to expand their telecommunications industry, trying to create more jobs, but being throttled by this government—and my goodness we have a classic example right here with the microphones on our desks that are imported from Austria. We have imports to the tune of $1,173,000,000 in communications equipment. In heating, air conditioning, and refrigeration equipment, we have a deficit of $198 million; domestic and commercial appliances, $946 million; tools, $196 million; office machinery, $384 million. My goodness, you would think that the bureaucracy here in Ottawa could establish its own industry to look after office machinery that is used in bureaucracy alone. Medical, pharmaceutical supplies have a deficit of $405 million, with photographic goods and equipment at $406 million. This adds up to $7,582 million. What was the response of Industry, Trade and Commerce to these figures?

The assistant deputy minister in charge of industrial policy and planning has stated that he does not believe anybody could put together a strategy which will last for more than 30 days. In fact he says debate about an industrial strategy is sterile and should be discontinued. If that is the case, why did the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce bother bringing in this bill? We reject that proposal by the assistant deputy minister completely. Any country with 22 million people that imports $24.4 billion in high technology products should not engage in a debate, but should get on with the job of eating into that multibillion dollar market by creating jobs and profits right here in Canada. No wonder there are concerns from this side about this new bill for the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Yesterday in a speech made by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni, either in a blush of honesty or a flash of brilliance, I do not know which, he said that we are like lambs in the international market. Certainly Canadians and members of the opposition know that we have been fleeced, if that is what the member is implying. Perhaps he thinks that Canadians will follow this government like lambs at the next election. I think he may find that the lambs will turn into lions, and that we feed heartily on grits. I did not expect the member to be so thoroughly honest when he made that reference.

In reviewing his speech, probably what concerns me the most was the fact that only once during the period he spoke did he make any reference to any western Canadian industry. That was a one-liner about shareholders of MacMillan Bloedel. It had no bearing on the thrust and the context of the debate on the bill before us. I would suggest that if the hon. member examines the circumstances in the riding of Comox-Alberni, as I have examined the circumstances for the riding of Kootenay West, and as other western members have examined the circumstances for their particular ridings, would find that the record of co-operation and the degree of interest demonstrated by the EDC are negligible. It is so much simpler to do business here in Ontario and Quebec, and to hell with the west.

Just to illustrate, the Canadian Export Development Corporation recently provided assistance to Treco Limited, an eastern supplier of prefab housing. I say, look it up in your books. They landed a nice contract of $93 million with Algeria. Nobody in British Columbia was advised that the contract was open. Nobody had the opportunity in British Columbia to bid on that. Nobody in the lumber industry, which was depressed at that time, had an opportunity to know that they could bid on that. I suggest that the officials from the Export Development Corporation add the word "co-operation" after their title and think in terms of talking to the British Columbia Development Corporation. I suggest that these officials have an opportunity to find out from the BCDC how unimpressed they are with the measure of co-operation from the Export Development Corporation.

I know that the Corporation is sensitive; its people do not like criticism. As a matter of fact I took the liberty of mentioning them, in passing reference, in a parliamentary news column. I noticed they were sensitive to that because they responded by a letter to the editor. The Export Development Corporation's director of communications, Mr. John M. Bowles, sent a letter to the editor of the Arrow Lake News and he quoted a number of facts. He said that EDC does not cost the Canadian taxpayer a cent. What he means is it does not cost the taxpayer a cent, it costs the taxpayers billions of dollars! That is what he really means. If the man had the courage of his convictions and if he were really concerned, pehaps he might have followed it up with a letter to me instead of conducting a paper war with the member of parliament for Kootenay West through the media of the editorial columns of a newspaper. That is the only time I have ever heard from Mr. Bowles.

It is significant to note that throughout the speech made by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni, who is a parliamentary secretary for this government, that there was not a single reference to the activities and the degree of support that this Corporation gives to western Canada. I want to put on the record now that British Columbia is thoroughly fed up, as is western Canada, with the failure of the EDC to address itself to anything else but centralized concerns and centralized business.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I believe the Minister of State (Small Business) has indicated that he wants to speak on behalf of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. If he does, I would suggest he will close the debate. Does the Minister of State for Small Business have unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. A. C. Abbott (Minister of State (Small Business)): Mr. Speaker, as acting Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce I am pleased to have the opportunity today to say a few words in connection with this important bill before parliament. I think my colleague adequately expressed the importance of the bill and the importance of EDC to the economy, as well as explaining why it is essential that the bill receive as prompt passage as possible. He indicated at the time he spoke that it would be quite open to the committee to interrogate the officers of EDC closely and go into any specifics they might wish.

It was particularly distressing to hear the number of speakers who rose in the opposition and levelled such unsupported allegations in the direction of EDC, particularly the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens), and the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) who spoke so ignorantly about the activities of this important element of Canada's export trade. I thought the Leader of the Opposition demonstrated several of the qualities which will almost certainly restrict him from ever occupying the position of Prime Minister of this country.

An hon. Member: Don't count on it.

Mr. Abbott: Of course the hon. member says, "Don't count on it". I shudder to think of the prospects if, by some accident of fate, he was elevated to that position. It is bad enough to have him comment on those matters with which he presumably has some acquaintance. But when he rises in his place today, and suggests that because the Export Development Corporation finances overseas developments consistent with its charter and its very proud history of accomplishment, that somehow it is deliberately taking away the jobs of Canadians by the so-called short-term benefits to them, it is so outrageous and palpably absurd as to make it shameful that a person purporting to be an alternative to the prime minister of this country should ever make such a speech.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: No more shameful than our deficit on imports.

Mr. Abbott: He made specific reference to the foundation of a mini-steel mill in New Jersey as an example of his indignation at the taking away of Canadian jobs. This represents a very important development that is being exercised by a company in Whitby which has set up mini-steel mills, not only in Canada but elsewhere in the world. As a result, it has employed as many as 1,500 man-years at this plant, creating this very important element of export. To say that this is somehow setting up a steel mill in New Jersey to compete with Canadians demonstrates once and for all, if we ever needed any demonstration, what an economic, industrial illiterate we have in the Leader of the Opposition.

● (1602)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Abbott: He went on to question the kind of countries the Export Development Corporation is dealing with, countries such as Romania, Poland, and others. He cast insulting aspersions on them. Moreover, he suggested that somehow EDC was guaranteeing loans, with money that would otherwise have been spent in Canada to create jobs in plants for Canadians, and helping to set up competitive industries abroad. He took that as a dastardly betrayal of Canadian economic interests.

I would have hopes that even so parochial and restricted an observer as the Leader of the Opposition might realize that the rest of the world does not stand hopefully waiting for any of those industries to be set up by Canada. Countries such as Poland have other nations of the world eagerly hoping they may be given an opportunity to employ their people to help set up industry, to create paper making machinery, to do all the things that the Export Development Corporation is financing in order to give Canadian manufacturers jobs.

I cite a very outstanding example, the recent contract that the Bell Telephone Company, through Northern Telecom, has with Saudi Arabia. Here is a billion dollar contract competed for and won by a Canadian corporation in that important and growing part of the world. It is to be partly financed through EDC. It will be a profitable deal, as have been nearly all the deals that the EDC has conducted. It is going to bring thousands of jobs to Canadians, not short-term jobs, and will help to create the kind of industrial fibre we need to maintain if we are going to employ as many Canadians as we must.

Far from a record of failure, as has been suggested by the Leader of the Opposition, the Export Development Corporation has been a very successful corporation. It has enjoyed a triple A credit rating with the leading firm of Moody's and with another leading one as well. I forget the name of it. There is no other corporation in the world that enjoys this triple A rating of two leading corporations of this kind.

I am sorry the hon. member of York-Simcoe is not here. He expressed some very dark suspicions about the financial standing of the Export Development Corporation. Anybody who knows the hon. member for York-Simcoe and his own history realizes he must have quite a profound knowledge of shaky operations. I was singularly interested in a comment he made in his speech on this bill, reported at page 4815 of Hansard for April 24, and I quote:

> If you have any trouble in the lending business, you never admit it.

I am sure that was the credo by which the former president of the Bank of Western Canada conducted his business. However, I assure him that this kind of subterfuge he may have believed in when he was in the banking business is not the kind of behaviour displayed by officials of the Export Development Corporation.

When those officials appear with the minister before the finance committee I feel certain they will be able to account for themselves very capably as to the deals in which they are involved. They will point out they have never had a year in which they have not enjoyed a profit. They do not need these additional funds because they have somehow failed, but because they have succeeded. They are advancing the frontiers of Canadian industry. They are doing the job for which they have been created.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Abbott: Some outrageous suggestions were put forward by the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez). Surprisingly, his views were subscribed to by the Leader of the Opposition who, one would have thought, should know better.

When the International Nickel Company determined to set up in Indonesia, this was a $900 million deal. Their intentions were to buy in Canada about $1 million worth of machinery and parts, if they could. It was only when the Export Development Corporation and other agencies of the Canadian government pressed them that that total was raised to some $60 million. It was financed through EDC.

It was not that Indonesia was unable to set up its mine. It certainly was not going to wait for the Parliament of Canada to give it permission to set up this new mining enterprise. Thanks to the efforts of the EDC, a whole lot of Canadian jobs and manufacturing were created and maintained.

One of the sad aspects in Canada today is that we have a Leader of the Opposition who, on the verge of an election, is not content to puff himself up and say what he will do about sunset laws and other dreams he might have. He chooses to advance his cause by denigrating a vital economic enterprise that is very important to Canada, such as the Export Development Corporation. Some of the members of his caucus have expressed sounder views. The hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) made a rather reasonable speech the other day. The hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Clarke) gave us some good comments as well. I hope these gentlemen will ask the Leader of the Opposition to concentrate on those matters he presumably knows something about, and allow them to go to the committee and bring forward important points they may have before this legislation is returned, giving parliament the opportunity to let the EDC get on with its job.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

* * *

FINANCIAL ADMINISTRATION ACT

AMENDMENT TO ESTABLISH OFFICE OF COMPTROLLER GENERAL

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-10, to amend the Financial Administration Act, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates.

[Mr. Abbott.]

Hon. Marcel Lambert (for Mr. Andre) moved motion No. 1:

That Bill C-10, An Act to amend the Financial Administration Act, be amended in Clause 1 by striking out lines 11 to 16 at page 1 and substituting the following therefor:

"pleasure, and he shall rank as and have all the powers of the deputy head of a department.

(2.2) The Comptroller General of Canada shall design, develop, implement and monitor such systems that will ensure that

(a) the form of Estimates provides a sound basis for budgetary control;

(b) public monies and assets are under effective custody and control at all times;

(c) accounting procedures and financial reports conform to accepted accounting principles and standards;

(d) expenditures of public monies are made with due regard for economy and efficiency; and

(e) satisfactory procedures measure the effectiveness of government programs; and without restricting the generality of the foregoing shall perform such additional duties and functions as may be assigned to him by the Treasury Board."

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): It is presumed that motion No. 2 will not be proceeded with as it is identical to motion No. 1 which has just been put. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): It is so ordered.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this amendment, which is to amend clause 1 of the bill, is to carry out the declared view of the official opposition that the bill creating the office of comptroller general should define the duties of that office. On the other hand, the government, in its proposal, says the comptroller general, who is to be one of the watchdogs for parliament, is to have his or her duties defined by the Treasury Board. This, to my mind, is a total negation of the purpose of setting up the office. It is as though, when the office of Auditor General was set up, we were to provide that his duties be set by the Minister of Finance and that he should act through the Minister of Finance. That is no watchdog position. Frankly, the set up is simply mechanistic.

● (1612)

I have met the new Comptroller General. I have discussed certain matters with him at a meeting of the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates. I wanted to find out from him precisely what he thought his functions were.

If we turn to page 28.28 of the Blue Book on estimates we read the following as a description of the objective in mind when the office of comptroller general was proposed to be set up:

In accordance with the responsibility delegated by the Privy Council as set out in the Financial Administration Act to ensure the quality and integrity of financial control systems and related administrative practice and procedures designed to operate after and within the authorization of the allocation of resources by the government and by parliament.

This, from the same page, is the program description:

Operations—Develops and ensures the effective application of financial administration legislation, policies, standards, systems and procedures to provide public assurance that the financial resources of the government are properly managed, controlled and accounted for.

—Develops policies to ensure that satisfactory procedures are established to measure and report the efficiency and effectiveness of government programs.

Administration—The Office of the Comptroller General; financial, personnel and administrative services.

In other words, the office and the role of the comptroller general are mechanistic. They are to ensure that proper controls will be established. That is a mechanical operation. It is not, as set out, under Evaluation and Planning in the program description of the Treasury Board——undertake in-depth policy analysis and program evaluation related to the major sectors of the economy; provide economic briefings; collaborate with other federal departments and agencies in medium term planning and evaluation studies; provide research and analytical support to the other branches of the secretariat; and administer . . . grants as listed in the estimates.

In the amendment, which stands in the name of my hon. friend, we have put in precisely those functions which have been described in the estimates. The only thing is, the description in the estimates can be changed from year to year. In other words, parliament has no control over it. Unless it is contained in a statute so that everyone can see, that will continue to be the position. The statutes have far wider coverage than the estimates. Apart from a few parliamentarians and public servants, there is hardly anyone in this country who knows his way around this book. And it is in this book, the Blue Book of estimates for the year 1978-79, that the duties of the comptroller general are designated. Treasury Board, in its wisdom, can, in the preparation of the estimates for 1979-80, change those duties around by 180 degrees—and who would be wiser? Certainly not the public. It is this to which we object.

The office of comptroller general was set up by a government which was dragged, kicking and scrambling, through the door, because of representations made, not once, not twice, but at least three times by the Auditor General, and in the face of continued criticism from the opposition. As a result, we get this grudging, half-hearted measure. This is not the way to go about it, Mr. Speaker. I have no objection whatsoever to the definition of the duties of the comptroller general as outlined in the estimates book because they are parallel to those we have provided in our amendment to the bill. But there is an important difference. Under the terms of the amendment his duties would be defined by statute to be seen by all and they would not be subject to change except by an amendment to the bill which would require debate in parliament.

If this man is to be a watchdog on behalf of parlament, then parliament should set his duties, not Treasury Board. I think I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that in the event of a change in government this, too, will be an undertaking: we shall see that the duties of the comptroller general are enshrined in the Financial Administration Act.

This morning I had a further opportunity of discussing with the new Comptroller General a subject which I have taken up at various times with a number of deputy ministers during the examination of estimates. I believe I have had a clear exchange of views with the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Andras), with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien), and with the deputy minister of finance and, now, with the Comptroller General.

● (1622)

I am interested in increasing the effectiveness of members by making available to them many of the reports to which I referred when I was outlining the program description of the central administration of the public service program at Treasury Board. It says, and I quote:

On the basis of the analysis of departmental plans and programs to recommend to the Government the acceptance or modification of specific expenditure proposals in order to:

—reflect the priorities which the government assigns to the objectives;

—increase the effectiveness of existing and proposed programs;

—increase the efficiency with which the manpower, facilities, equipment, materials and supplies are used in the operation of programs; . . .

And ultimately to develop the estimates for the approval of parliament. I am asking that the reports which are made at that time be made available to members of parliament and to heads of departments so that if there are mistakes in one particular area, or problems to solve, the solutions or the proposals to solve those problems will be available to other sectors of the government and to members of parliament who are asked to pass on close to $50 billion in estimates.

Based on what information are members of parliament asked to pass on these estimates? It is difficult even for one who is well versed in the Blue Book to understand what is really happening, and it becomes far worse when we consider that on the average a minister will appear not more than about three times, for an hour and a half at the most each time, to answer questions about the administration and the policies of his department and the spending programs which are outlined in the Blue Book. Let us consider the small amount of time that is available to each member to question ministers and, of course, the time used to answer his questions is his time.

To top off this nonsensical program we have, the same committees have to consider legislation which comes their way. The Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration has yet to begin its examination of estimates because there have been two or three bills kicking around. The chairman is in no hurry to get to the examination of estimates. And what is coming? Either an election or May 31, whichever comes first. What is coming is a guillotine. I do not want to operate under the threat of a guillotine when examining estimates.

The general summary shows that total budgetary items amount to precisely $46,476,469,179. That is almost as good as Loto Canada. In addition to that, total non-budgetary items amount to $2,255,546,092. That is a total of nearly $50 billion, and the amount of time available for the examination of estimates is very little. A member must depend upon his own acumen, or that of his researcher, to go digging and to ask for information or detail at a committee meeting because the estimates are in omnibus form. If a member wants any particular detail, it may be filed at a subsequent meeting if it is not available when first requested. The net result is that remarkably little information is brought out, and absolutely nothing is available to members from either side of the House.

The estimates are equally important to members on either side of the House. It is not a case of them against us, or of members of parliament against public servants. Public servants do not sit in the witness chairs behind six-foot fences with their heads up above waiting for us to shy coconuts at them, but one almost gets the feeling that they are afraid to say anything because we might criticize them.

Most things the government does are for the benefit of the people. There are some things one might perhaps do differently, and some things are wrong-headed to start with, but that is the essence of a human being. We are not perfect. Human programs are not perfect either but, goodness gracious, would it not be far better if assessment reports or evaluation reports based upon zero budgeting were available to hon. members in this House? Our work on estimates would be not only more pleasant but also immeasurably more intelligent.

I have not been here as long as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), but I have spent 20 years looking at estimates, and I think I would match my knowledge with his when it comes to getting around the Blue Book. However, I feel a sense of personal insufficiency when I try to discuss intelligently with able public servants the philosophies of programs or their effectiveness. Are they over the hill? Should we terminate them in the foreseeable future? How should they be amended, if they need to be? If we could deal with these matters more effectively, we, as members of parliament, could function much better.

I discussed this with the Comptroller General. That was the nature of the discussion I had with him in the brief time that I was able to question him. I spent most of my time stating my philosophy in this regard. I think the Comptroller General was very well disposed to the idea.

I anticipate being back in this House after the next election, either on this side or on the side opposite, and I can tell hon. members that I will continue to press and press for the presentation of these reports. My colleague, the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), is conducting a campaign on the right to know. Well, this is part of it. I think members of parliament have not only the right, but the duty, to know on what they are basing their judgment in order to accept, modify, or reject the government's spending programs outlined in the estimates.

I hope that after two years' experience we will be able to assess better the role of the comptroller general and the rules or the guidelines under which he operates, and that we will be ever vigilant, because I know the government will not accept this amendment, to ensure that the duties are not changed to suit the government's temporary views should the reports of the comptroller general prove embarrassing. We remember the time some four or five years ago when certain government ministers really wanted to move in on the auditor general—not the present one but his predecessor—because he dared to criticize bad government programs and their bad administration. To his credit, the present Auditor General took up the cudgels with regard to the administration of programs and the financial controls, and this has culminated in the creation of the office of the comptroller general.

I had hoped that in committee and at the present time the government would have been disposed to accept the amendment of my colleague, the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre), because I think it makes eminent sense. But even if amendments make eminent sense, there is a strange disposition in this placefor the government to close its mind to opposition amendments. I hope that, if there is a turnabout, that bad habit will not apply, but I have seen it. It is a sort of malady around here. I think it is part of our system. I know that in the British system ministers are much more inclined to accept amendments in committee. Their position is not quite so fixed. It is not as though by accepting an amendment you confess a weakness. It is just that perhaps somebody has a better way of expressing the same ideas, or perhaps a little more strongly.

I had hoped that the government could have seen fit to accept this amendment, but it does not. So I hope that I have exposed this problem—and certainly this amendment has served me with a vehicle to put forward my views with regrard to making available evaluation reports on government programs from the Treasury Board and the comptroller general.

I will close these remarks with a plea that even now the government should accept this amendment. Strangely enough, the ministers responsible for this bill are not the House.

Mr. Lefebvre: I am.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The parliamentary secretary is present, but unfortunately he cannot determine government policy, and even though he might be the man most disposed in the House to accept my arguments in favour of the amendment, he cannot do anything about it. Seeing that the parliamentary secretary is in charge of the debate at this stage, it is quite clear that the government has closed its mind to accepting any amendment. That is a real pity. With that, I think, we will call it a day on this amendment, but I hope that hon. members will remember much of what I have said this afternoon.

Mr. Thomas H. Lefebvre (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) has repeated essentially the same arguments that had been made previously on this bill in describing the duties of the comptroller general. They had been answered by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Andras) and by myself many times, both in the House during debate and at the committee hearings which were held to study Bill C-10. I do not intend to repeat them again, and I wish to refer any member interested in the office of the comptroller general to acquire copies of the proceedings and evidence of the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates, issues Nos. 7, 8 and 9, where all the answers were given in great detail in reply to the arguments put forth here today and previously.

Also, this morning—and this was mentioned by the hon. member for Edmonton West—Mr. Rogers himself, the new Comptroller General, appeared before the committee and once again answered in great detail questions which were put to him. Unfortunately, as the hon. member himself mentioned, because of the conflict of having to attend another committee, the hon. member was able to be present at the meeting of that committee for only a few minutes, although we did give him time to put forward his own philosophy, as he mentioned. Had he been able to attend the full committee hearing this morning, he would have found that Mr. Rogers feels in no way restricted and has studied the committee hearings, as he revealed in a direct answer to a question I myself asked him, and has also studied the 20 recommendations which were tabled in the committee on March 21. If the hon. member has not read them, I would commend them to him. They describe fully and in detail in 20 paragraphs the comptroller general's responsibilities and duties.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): They can be changed so easily.

Mr. Lefebvre: They were tabled on March 21. I do not know if the hon. member has been able to study them.

I do not intend to prolong this debate, Mr. Speaker. The Comptroller General is in effect on duty now. He started his work on April 1. He has come from the private sector with excellent recommendations and he has held any number of important positions before taking on his duties as comptroller general. We all know he has made a personal sacrifice in accepting this position. There is no doubt as to his capabilities, his integrity, or the way in which he has handled himself in his previous positions.

I think we should terminate this debate. The government has no intention of accepting this amendment. This has been stated before regarding similar amendments in the committee. I recommend that this amendment be turned aside and that we proceed to third reading of the bill and final passage, so as to give Mr. Rogers the full co-operation of this House to carry out his duties, which all parties believe are very important, and to establish a system of even more effective control of the taxpayers' money.

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, certainly it is a pleasure to rise and speak on this amendment. I hope that in the last few days of this session of parliament—

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. A number of members are finding it too cold in the chamber. Could you have the temperature raised?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I have already spoken to the House of Commons staff and they are doing something about the temperature right now.

● (1642)

Mr. Towers: Perhaps if the hon. member got involved in the political process he might get warmed up, and then he would not feel the chill in the air.

Actually we have been disappointed because the government has not been more receptive to suggestions made. Generally speaking, in the Standing Committee on Public Accounts, there has been little political manoeuvring, which speaks well of the hon. members who serve on that committee. I have participated in that committee for a number of years, and certainly it is a pleasure to witness how that committee has been changed. A number of years ago, that committee dealt with issues which were considerably in the past. We have steadily progressed to the point where hon. members can deal with the Auditor General's report shortly after the time of its presentation before the House of Commons.

Further to that, the chairman of that committee deserves a certain amount of credit, if not a great deal. It speaks well of parliament that the chairman was chosen from the opposition. Perhaps this is one reason why the committee has worked as well as it has.

We had hoped the majority would see fit to accept some of the amendments which have been presented. I do not doubt the veracity and sincerity of hon. members on the government side. Quite often good suggestions are made by members of all parties. The Auditor General and the Comptroller General require all possible assistance, if public spending is to be brought under control. There is no way for Canada to survive, if the deficit remains at $10 billion or $11 billion, which has been the case in two successive years. Unfortunately, this has occurred in what can be construed to be relatively good times. What will happen when the going gets tough and the economy goes into a doldrum? What will we do then? This is why it is important for the House to give the Comptroller General all the support which is possible. I am sure the Comptroller General has a certain amount of wonderment as to what the future holds for him. Undoubtedly he requires the support of all members, along with the support of the Auditor General.

I should like to refer to the Report of the Auditor General for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1977. At page 6, clause 2.3, he recommended the following:

> . . . first, the establishment of the position of chief financial officer of the Government, preferably with the title of Comptroller General of Canada; . . .

Fortunately this has been fulfilled.

His second recommendation reads as follows:

> . . . second, the appointment to this position of a person with appropriate professional qualifications, with a proven record of outstanding competence and achievement at senior levels of responsibility, and with extensive experience as a senior financial executive in a large-scale organization in either the public or private sector; . . .

To all intents and purposes this has been achieved. We believe the qualifications of Mr. Rogers will measure up to our expectations. His final recommendation reads as follows:

> ... third, the appointment in each department, agency and Crown corporation of a senior financial officer, preferably designated as the Comptroller (in combination, if appropriate, with another designation such as Assistant Deputy Minister in departments or Vice-President in Crown corporations), who would be directly responsible to the deputy head or chief executive officer for all aspects of financial administration within his organization and who would possess the professional and personal qualifications and senior financial executive experience that are commensurate with his important responsibilities.

He went on to say:

> ... that implementation of these recommendations would lay the essential foundation of a soundly-conceived program for restoring effective control over public funds and assets, and for ensuring probity, prudence and economy in their management. I was confident that the government, parliament and, indeed, all taxpaying Canadians would subscribe to these objectives.

We subscribe to these objectives. If the Comptroller General is to achieve that, certainly he requires the support of all hon. members of parliament, all members of the senior executive within departments, and also the willingness of executives in Crown corporations to work with him. Crown corporations must co-operate with the new Comptroller General.

The Export Development Corporation bill receive second reading today. That corporation is one of many Crown corporations which have concerned taxpayers. The National Capital Commission is another Crown corporation found lacking in financial management and control. The Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development will require a tremendous amount of effort in order for it to be brought under control. I hope all departmental officials, including deputy ministers and ministers, will make sure that no obstacles are placed in the pathway of this new official of the Government and Parliament of Canada.

The office of comptroller general is of fundamental importance to the survival of all Canadians. If he does not receive cooperation, the result will be a mess from which there is no return. I trust everyone will support him in the best possible manner.

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, a few moments ago the hon. member for Scarborough East (Mr. O'Conneli) was in the House. Not too long ago he made some comments regarding the difficulties with which we in parliament are faced in respect of government expenditures. I am happy he joined with us to review the expenditures of government. Both of us have made suggestions to improve and rectify this matter. I am sure he and other hon. members are concerned by what appeared not too long ago in the most infamous of all Auditor General reports. It was the second to last one which gave rise to the whole movement and pressure in this House of Commons to appoint a comptroller general. The bill which arose from that report contained so much bad news and offered such a straightforward solution that it sent many people scurrying for cover.

[Mr. Towers.]

• (1652)

You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that when the government finally decided that the time had come for it to accede to the demands for a comptroller general, we received a bill. The unfortunate part about the bill is that it merely calls for the appointment of the comptroller general. I have no quarrel with that.

I thank the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) for handing me the bill. It states:

> The Governor in Council may appoint an officer called the Comptroller General of Canada to hold office during pleasure and to perform such duties and functions as may be assigned to him by the Treasury Board, and the Comptroller General of Canada shall rank as and have all the powers of a deputy head of a department.

That principle is acceptable to all sides of the House, but what I am concerned about, as, I am sure are all members of the House, including the hon. member for Scarborough East, who has taken such a great interest in this, is that at the outset, whereas every major officer in the hierarchy of government has his duties and scope of authority spelled out for him in legislation, the comptroller general alone is left without that kind of control or that kind of support that the terms of reference set out in a statute could mean for him. That is why the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) has put forth the motion that is before the House today, to give to the comptroller general specific statutory authority so he knows where he stands. Otherwise he will be bumped and buffeted by the government from place to place or priority to priority as things change, and must change from time to time.

I know that the Auditor General would want more for his creature, the Comptroller General of Canada—because in that sense he is. I am sure that he would not inform the House that he was dissatisfied completely with this. I am sure that that is the case, as the hon. member for Gatineau has mentioned, but I am sure he would agree that it would be best if we start off on the right foot. Let us start off on the basis on which no one who thinks about our financial proceedings in this House could argue that the comptroller general is best left to the whims of the government, but instead should be like all other officials who have terms of reference spelled out for them. I mean that not in the sense of the treasury bench, but in the sense that his colleagues all have other deputy heads and senior officials in their department. That is the purpose of it.

As the opposition in the House of Commons or during an election, we constantly reiterate the need to reduce government expenditures. This is not because we hate to see money wasted but because we are concerned about the immediate dangers of inflation and the long-term implications of public spending dominating the economy and overshadowing the economic forces which ultimately supply the country's wealth. The reply that we always receive is, "Well, would you like us to eliminate family allowances or pensions, starve babies, or throw widows out into the snow drifts?" We never get an admission—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Would you fire deputy ministers?

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): —from the government that money leaks out of the system at a ridiculous rate. It is always the challenge that cannot be met by any but an army of accountants. Now, of course, the army of accountants has reported to the general staff in the Auditor General's report, and that general staff happens to be the Parliament of Canada.

It is important, as we consider this amendment, that we understand the source of the problem. First, there will always be problems of cost control in organizations with goals other than the accumulation of a profit and with security of tenure as a necessary feature to prevent politically-motivated staffing. Prior to 1969 wasteful proclivities were kept at a reasonable level by the partnership of the comptroller of the treasury and the Auditor General. The former watched the funds as they went out, and the Auditor General scrutinized the accounts to make sure moneys at all levels were spent productively and in the manner authorized by parliament. The comptroller general was part of the administrative structure. The Auditor General reported to parliament, and his report was discussed in detail by the public accounts committee, as it is now. In response to a number of real and suspected problems, the Diefenbaker government in 1960 set up the Royal Commission on Government Organization, known as the Glassco commission. One of its several terms of reference was to suggest means of:

—improving efficiency and economy by alterations in the relations between government departments and agencies, on the one hand, and the Treasury Board and other central control or service agencies of the government on the other—

The commission's response to this challenge may be found in summary at pages 120 to 124 of Volume I. It was suggested that many of the functions performed by the comptroller of the treasury should be decentralized to the departments and that the comptroller should henceforth be called the accountant general, reflecting important but narrower responsibilities. As was said at the time, "removal of the administrative details which now swamp the board and frustrate departmental management will undoubtedly enable the board to discharge its important responsibilities more effectively."

I note that it is quite close to five o'clock, Mr. Speaker. May I call it five o'clock, sir?

LEGAL OPINION ON POSTAL RATE INCREASES

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris) moved:

That an order of the House do issue for a copy of the legal opinion concerning the legality of the latest postal rate increases, given by the Department of Justice to the Post Office Department.

He said: This motion, Mr. Speaker, is one of a series that I have moved in recent months in an attempt to pry information out of this most secretive of all governments. In every case the government's reply has been to the effect that the information, if revealed, would not be in the public interest. I submit right at the outset of my remarks this afternoon that it would be very much in the public's interest if some of the internal antics of the present administration could be revealed in the documentation that I have been endeavouring to obtain by the only method that is available to members of the opposition, the motion that is before the House.

● (1702)

Through this specific motion, No. 53, which calls for the tabling of the legal opinion behind which the government hides in refusing to explain its refusal to proceed legally in increasing postal rates, we have an opportunity once again to bring a vitally important issue before the House of Commons, that is, the current sad and deteriorating state of the postal service in Canada. Everyone agrees, the public, management, labour, and even the government, that the Post Office is in deep trouble.

Ten years ago Canada had one of the best post office departments in the world. I specifically state ten years ago because that was the beginning of the perilous progress and peregrinations of the present administration. We had delivery service six days a week. We had a first-class postal rate of five cents. The service was fast, reliable, and reasonably economical. The Glassco Royal Commission, which investigated in depth government organization just prior to this time, gave the Post Office Department high marks for efficiency. In fact it was one of the few departments of government which escaped unscathed many criticisms made by the Glassco Royal Commission. Now, unhappily and tragically, because Canadian well-being and national unity depend upon a reliable, responsible, efficient, and reasonably cheap postal service, horror stories abound.

The Post Office Department has become the butt of jokes from coast to coast. I am sure hon. members agree that when people start laughing at a department it is in deep distress indeed. Stories are heard with reference to the now rather regular postal increases. The public is not paying for a service, it is paying for storage, and with each increase in rates the service deteriorates further. Hand in hand with the remarkable perversity of the increasing postal rates, there has been a steady cutback in service. Some of the cutbacks have been ridiculous, beyond understanding and comprehension to common sense.

Almost every day we hear complaints made by members from all sides of the House that the Post Office is cutting back in its door to door delivery service. The only explanation given is that the Post Office Department cannot afford to deliver mail from door to door. On the other hand, in the United Kingdom the post office is increasing its door to door delivery service. The postal service in the United Kingdom is compelled by law and regulations, not only to deliver even in the rural areas to a post box perhaps at the end of the road, but it must put mail right in the slot of the householder's door. Canada is reducing that kind of service.

One of the most ridiculous cutbacks came to my attention recently. The Post Office Department made a decision, if you can believe it, Mr. Speaker, to remove telephones from rural post offices. This was a cutback to save money. This takes us back to the pre-Thomas Edison and the pre-Alexander Graham Bell era of communications. Of course the Post Office is in the communications business. How they can justify a cutback in this kind of service to save money is beyond understanding, as I say. This is especially so in rural areas because the rural areas, more than any other part of the Canadian body politic, require reliable and speedy communications, particularly if we are to arrest the decline in our rural communities. This decline has been going on for the past two decades with increasing speed. The rural population is moving to the city and the rural communities are folding up because of the decline in services of this kind.

The decline of the family farm is involved in this situation, and yet the Post Office Department which is operated by the Government of Canada aggravates the situation by removing telephones from the rural post offices. I say that if they want to make savings in this way, service should be discontinued completely. If that were done there would be an absolute saving in expenditure on the part of the government.

Many people have come to the conclusion, including post masters general who move in and out of the department so fast that they can hardly catch their breath, that, if drastic action is not taken soon, the Post Office could collapse in its own incompetence. This is why I am pleased to have the opportunity to bring these matters to the attention of the House again this afternoon.

The government is not coming to grips with this urgent problem. The only action the Post Office Department has taken, in the last ten years, and I think this is fair criticism, has been to change post masters general so frequently that it has become a game of musical chairs. Nobody knows who is responsible for what from the standpoint of the government. Rates are raised constantly. Ministers opposite used to change rates legally, but now they are doing it illegally. This is the point I want to stress this afternoon.

The Post Office used to operate legally. This goes back to the days to which I referred of ten years ago, when the Post Office at that time was one of the most efficient departments with the most efficient services of any in the world. In the past decade the government has decided, and this is a part of a general move toward secrecy and refusal to take parliament into the confidence of the government, to increase rates, and rather than do so under Section 10 of the Post Office Act, which clearly outlines that it is the obligation under that act, it has decided to do it by the illegal procedure of order in council under the Financial Administration Act.

Another aspect which needs to be mentioned is that the increases in the rates have not been subject to the restrictions of the Anti-Inflation Board. The postal rate has soared from five cents in 1968 to 14 cents in 1978. That is one decade of Liberal administration. Notwithstanding constant increases in the postal rate, the deficit has increased from $60 million in 1968 to almost $600 million in 1978. Where are we heading? Why the government does not take action in the face of these dramatic figures is impossible for an ordinary person to understand.

• (1712)

Not only has the cost of service gone up from five cents to 14 cents, but hidden in the deficit is an increase of $1 in taxation for every $1 of expenditure for service. Therefore, the actual cost of a first class postage stamp today is 28 cents.

The government does everything in its power to frustrate parliament's opportunity to come to grips with this situation. There is a secrecy in the government that is almost paranoid. Today the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) is almost afraid to call an election, indicating paranoia in that direction. He is afraid to face the electorate.

The motto of the government has become power, patronage, and perpetuity. That is the only explanation I can arrive at. My friend across the way is smiling. He will be smiling on the other side of his face when an election is called. The people are fed up with that sort of nonsense, paranoid secrecy, and refusal to deal with a fundamental issue like this. This issue affects every person in Canada because the mail comes to every doorstep almost every day. This will be heard loud and clear when we are finally allowed to get out on the hustings.

Getting to the legality of the situation, every postmaster general has agreed that they are operating illegally when they increase rates other than by amending the Post Office Act. I could read Section 10, but I am not going to waste my time reading sections of the act. When the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) was Postmaster General, he agreed that in order to increase postal rates you must amend the act. This was agreed by every Postmaster General right down to the Solicitor General (Mr. Blais) when he was Postmaster General.

That opinion has been strongly supported in two successive reports of the Joint Committee of both Houses on Statutory Instruments and Regulations, condemning the government for operating outside its legal rights and, in particular, for avoiding its responsibility to parliament. Just the other day there was unanimous concurrence with this viewpoint from the House of Commons when the fourth report of the standing committee was concurred in unanimously in this House.

More significant from the standpoint of the government's tendency toward paranoia is the view expressed in this House the other day by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford). That is recorded in Hansard for April 21. He stated that the present and past Postmasters General have acted on the advice of the Department of Justice and that the use of Section 13 of the Financial Administration Act is a proper and valid use of that section. In other words, the Minister of Justice advised successive Postmasters General, and there have been six in seven years, to break the law as it is laid down in Section 10 of the Post Office Act.

I can understand why the Minister of Justice has decided to leave politics. If this became an issue in his constituency in the city of Vancouver, B.C., he would not have a hope of re-election. The Minister of Justice advised Postmasters General to break the law so that a parliamentary discussion on post office affairs could be avoided. He deliberately circumvented the rights and responsibilities of members of parliament on all sides of this House.

This was underlined recently by the attitude of the Postmaster General (Mr. Lamontagne). He came into the position quite unexpectedly early in the new year because of the vacancy that had occurred in the Solicitor General's portfolio. When the Solicitor General was Postmaster General, he indicated in a parliamentary committee that he would be moving to bring in amendments to the Post Office Act to legalize what had been done illegally. The present Postmaster General, who was only elected last fall, does not agree that what is being done is illegal. He was specifically asked in this House on April 18 by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) whether he accepts the viewpoint of the committee on statutory instruments that what he is doing is illegal. The minister replied as follows:

Post Office

Mr. Speaker, I must say that the postal rates have been increased legally, as I have already indicated to the House, and we have no intention of changing our present way of doing things.

Obviously he is adamant. It will be up to the people of Canada to change the present way of doing things, and this I am sure they are going to do as soon as the Prime Minister can screw up his courage to dissolve and call the long overdue election.

There has been a deathbed repentance on the part of the government in recent days, all geared to the exigencies of the election call. They introduced, and it was approved by this House, Bill C-45 which outlaws the right to strike in the Post Office during an election. That goes back on the right that was established by a Liberal government in 1967.

An announcement was made outside the House that the Post Office Department was at long last going to accept a recommendation that had repeatedly been made in the House by the opposition. If action had been taken earlier we might have come to grips with some of the problems that have caused such a tragic state of affairs in the Post Office. Outside the House, the Postmaster General and the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) announced there would be a study on the advisability of transforming the Post Office Department into a Crown corporation and that the report must be in by July 15. Obviously that was political expediency of the deepest kind to coincide with what was anticipated then would be the call of an early summer election. However, we are still shrouded in secrecy. For this reason the hon. member for Peace River has been calling for a freedom of information act that would open the secret operations of the government to parliamentary and public scrutiny.

• (1722)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired. He may continue, however, by unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Dinsdale: I am just about to conclude. I had this nicely timed. Post Office customers, and this is the strangest anomaly of all, have been alienated. Because of the recent action of the Postmaster General in increasing rates illegally, major users of the service such as the periodical publishers have taken the department to court. The Supreme Court of Ontario will be ruling on the matter in due course. But I would think that in the light of events just around the corner the real verdict will be expressed by the people of Canada through the ballot boxes, and I am optimistic about what the result will be.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise to express strong support for this motion. I do so as one who is consistent, because I have supported motions similar to this in years gone by. That leads me to a bit of history which I should like to relate to the House in a minute or two.

The motion calls for the tabling of an opinion of the Department of Justice which was apparently given to the Post Office Department to the effect that it is legal to raise the postal rate from 12 cents to 14 cents under the provisions of Section 13 of the Financial Administration Act rather than by amending the Post Office Act and giving parliament the chance to say yes or no.

The wording of Section 13 is such that I do not see how any Department of Justice official or anyone who has respect for law can say it gives the governor in council the right to raise postage rates without bringing a measure before parliament. The section reads in part as follows:

> 13. Where a service or the use of a facility is provided by Her Majesty to any person and the Governor in Council is of opinion that the whole or part of the cost of providing the service or the use of the facility should be borne by the person to whom it is provided, the Governor in Council, on the recommendation of the Treasury Board, may
> (a) subject to the provisions of any Act relating to that service or the use of that facility, by regulation prescribe the fee or charge to be paid by the person to whom the service or the use of the facility is provided.

The section goes on to a paragraph (b) which says more or less that same thing except that in certain circumstances it can be done by a minister. The first part says it can be done by order in council, and the second says it can be done by a minister.

Surely the section from which I have read is there for use in case of an emergency, for cases in which, for example, certain services were being provided free of charge and it is thought a fee should be imposed. The postal service is not something new in Canada. It is not something which is logically subject to emergency consideration. After all, Canadians were already paying 12 cents before this order in council was passed to raise the rate to 14 cents. It seems to me the method employed by the government is a blatant abuse of the provisions of Section 13 of the Financial Administration Act.

An hon. Member: That is what the committee said.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Yes, Mr. Speaker, that is what the committee on statutory instruments said. And anyone with any respect for the law would surely agree that the action the government has taken is an abuse of the section of the Financial Administration Act to which I have referred. This being the case, I believe the motion before us should be passed and that we should be able to read what the Department of Justice had to say in justification of the action taken by the Post Office Department.

I said I would ask your indulgence for a moment or two, Mr. Speaker, while I related a bit of history. Sometimes we in the New Democratic Party do not like being the third party in the House; we would prefer to be the second party or the first. But one of the advantages of being the third party is that we can look objectively at the other two and see how alike they are. I remember that six days after the election of 1962—the election was held on Monday, June 18—I was sitting in my home in Winnipeg watching the television news. Who should come on but the Prime Minister of Canada, the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), to tell us that because of serious economic conditions which had developed during the campaign certain steps had to be taken.

An hon. Member: That was the floating dollar.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): We had dollar problems and all sorts of problems which somehow did not surface during the campaign. But something had to be done. So what did the then Prime Minister announce on June 24? It was to the effect that there was to be a 15 per cent increase in customs duties on a whole range of products. Well, I had been mixed up in things around here for a long time, and I sat in my room and thought: that is impossible. The Prime Minister, I thought, cannot amend the Customs Tariff by order in council.

Mr. Dinsdale: It had been done before.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Don't give me that line. Doug Abbott did announce by radio certain increases which would come into effect subject to a vote in parliament, but these increases were to come into effect immediately. How did the prime minister and the government of the day achieve this?

Mr. Dinsdale: Doug Abbott—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Just a moment. You are not going to get out of this by referring to Doug Abbott. This is what the Tories did. They did it by an order in council based in part on the Financial Administration Act and partly on the Customs Tariff itself. You see, under the Customs Tariff there are three different columns—the general tariff, the most favoured nation tariff, and the British preferential tariff. And though the Customs Tariff does not give the government the right to change rates it does give the government the right by order in council to move certain products from one of those columns to another. When this is done, of course, rates are changed. The trouble was that the extent of the change in such cases was too great.

The effect of moving products from one column to another was to increase the rates by 25 per cent or 30 per cent. The government wanted to increase the rates by only 15 per cent. So it made use of a double-barrelled order in council. It said, "Under the provisions of the Customs Tariff certain items will be moved from one column to another, then, by virtue of a provision in the Financial Administration Act which gives the government the right to remit any fee which a person has paid, the tariffs which have been thus increased by 25 per cent or 30 per cent will be reduced again to 15 per cent." It was ingenious, if not devious. At any rate, it went into effect.

Some time later in 1962 parliament reassembled and this was one of the first things we began to talk about. We in the NDP raised the issue, and so did the Liberals in those days. Oh, they were hot about this subject. This was a denial of the rights of parliament, and so on, they kept telling us. Well, the government secured a ruling from the Department of Justice that the action it had taken was legal and appropriate. When I moved that that ruling be tabled, I got no further than my friend is getting with his motion today. Oh, the government did not need to table the ruling. We had to take not only the word of the then prime minister but also the word of the then minister of finance.

● (1732)

Mr. Dinsdale: We have learned from experience, Stanley.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Just a minute. My friend is not going to get out of this by this kind of thing. The prime minister of the day and the then minister of finance, the late Hon. George Nowlan, father of an hon. member who is still with us, said that they had the ruling of the Department of Justice that it did not need be tabled, that the matter did not need to be referred to the courts and that it was perfectly all right. We fought that through the 1962-63 session and got nowhere. In particular, we got nowhere with a motion like this one asking that the opinion be tabled. In 1963 there was an election, and things got turned around. When it was all over, the Tories were on the opposition side and the Liberals on the government side.

Hon. members will remember that in the 1962-63 session the Liberals said that this kind of order in council was all wrong and should not have been allowed. In the meantime, some big companies in this country which were affected rather severely by those 15 per cent tariff changes took the matter to the courts, and it became obvious that they had a good case, that they were going to win and that it would be clear that the order in council was ultra vires the rights of the cabinet.

So what did the Liberal government do with this faux pas that the Tory government had made the year before? It got a ruling from the Department of Justice, the same Department of Justice with some of the same senior public servants in it. They were not fired back and forth the way it is being talked about today. They got a ruling from the same people saying that the order in council which was passed in June of 1962 was invalid. We tried late in 1963, to get out of the Liberals of that day a copy of that opinion of the Department of Justice, but we could not get it from them either.

I am afraid this has some effect on my respect for Department of Justice rulings. Any government can get from the Department of Justice any ruling it wants because in 1963 the Tories got the ruling that its order in council was valid. In late 1963 or on into 1964 the Liberals got from the same Department of Justice the ruling that that order in council had been invalid. What did the Liberals do to take care of the situation? I would have thought, since they were so opposed to what had been done, that they would cancel the whole thing and rebate the increased duties; but no, they brought in a special act of parliament to validate the order in council which they themselves had argued the year before was invalid. As a member of the third party my reaction in both cases, whichever party was in power, was to try to get the opinion of the Department of Justice. But we were not able to get it, either when it said the order in council was valid or when it said it was invalid.

My friend the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale) can relax a little bit now. We have got over the history of the past. We should learn something from that history. What we should learn from that history is that these things ought not to kept secret.

I think it was wrong for the Tories in 1963 not to let us see what the Department of Justice said. I think it was wrong for the Liberals in 1963 or 1964 not to let us see what the Department of Justice said the other way.

Mr. Dinsdale: We need a freedom of information act.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I think it is wrong for the present government to refuse to let us see what the Department of Justice has said regarding the action of raising the postage rate from 12 cents to 14 cents on the basis of an order in council passed under the Financial Administration Act. I am satisfied that the courts would find this invalid, just as they would have found that order of 1962 to be invalid.

However, that is a long way down the road, and how could we ever rebate to the people of Canada the extra postage they have paid? It just cannot be done. But in the meantime the issue today is not so much the history I have recited and not so much all of the faults and shortcomings of the Post Office Department which my hon. friend has recited, but our right to know the basis on which these decisions are made. My guess is that the reason the government does not want to table this opinion of the Department of Justice is that every lawyer in the place would be shocked by it. Any Department of Justice official who said that it is right under section 13 of the Financial Administration Act to raise postage rates by order in council would clearly be laughed at.

If I can carry my history forward a little and be speculative—back in that other instance there was a change of government—I will go this far and say that if there happened to be a change of government in the election about to be held, and if the Conservatives formed a government, they could go to the Department of Justice saying "We did not like that ruling," and get from the Department of Justice a ruling reversing the one obtained by the Liberal government. That is all the more reason why we should have these things brought out and put on the table so that we know what is going on behind the scenes.

The hon. member for Brandon-Souris made reference to the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) and his campaign for freedom of information and the right to know. He is absolutely right, and that is really what is at stake here. I agree that related to all this is the whole question of postal service, what is happening to that service, whether it was right to raise the postage rate and so forth, but the fundamental issue is the right of parliament to say whether or not it should be raised.

When the rights of parliament are set aside by a ludicrous ruling from the Department of Justice, an opinion which says that the government can act without coming before parliament, we ought to have all the facts, and therefore I strongly support this motion. I feel that the stupid opinion which the Department of Justice has given in this matter should see the light of day, and the passing of this motion would bring it before us. That is why I support the motion.

Post Office

Mr. Roger Young (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I will leave it to my hon. colleagues to point out some of the necessities for raising the postal rates and some of the requirements and conditions which existed at the time.

At the outset I would like to say to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), who has just spoken, that differences in legal opinions are what keep lawyers in business, and those same differences in legal opinions are what keep us as members of parliament at work trying to keep lawyers in business.

The hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale) called the increase an illegal one. I do not know upon what opinion or advice he relies, but I do not share that opinion. I do not believe that the committee report in which we concurred last week claimed that the increase was illegal. I think the words of the committee were to the effect that its members had grave doubts as to the validity of relying on the general power in section 13 of the Financial Administration Act. The committee is entitled to its opinion or decision, but it is one thing to express grave doubts and another for the hon. member for Brandon-Souris to twist that and say that the increase was illegal. They are two quite different things.

The hon. member went on to say that everyone says the increase was illegal. I have not heard that. I should also point out that the concurrence of the House in that report does not affect the validity of those postal increases at all. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre read part of section 13(b) of the Financial Administration Act. He read through the "legalese", if I may put it that way, of the section. Perhaps I could read that section to hon. members without using as much legalese and try to put it into what might be considered somewhat plainer English. Section 13(b) of the Financial Administration Act refers to charges for services or use of facilities. It states that the governor in council, on the recommendation of the Treasury Board, notwithstanding the provisions of any act—and I would stress that—relating to that service or use, may authorize the appropriate minister to proscribe the fee or charge to be paid by the person to whom the service or the use of the facility is provided. On that basis, some legal advice was given.

● (1742)

Turning now to the reason we are debating this motion this afternoon, let me point out that it arises out of a request by the hon. member for Brandon-Souris last October 26 which reads as follows:

> That an order of the House do issue for a copy of the legal opinion concerning the legality of the latest postal rate increases, given by the Department of Justice to the Post Office Department.

At that time my answer to the hon. member, on behalf of the minister, was that legal advice provided by the law officers of the Crown on a matter of state policy falls within the class of confidential documents, and on that basis I asked if he would withdraw his motion. He chose not to withdraw the motion, and that is the reason we are here debating the subject matter this afternoon.

I should like to expand upon the answer that was given to the hon. member for Brandon-Souris at that time. Advice given to ministers by law officers of the Crown on government policy matters has traditionally been regarded as confidential. On March 15, 1973 the then president of the privy council, pursuant to Standing Order 41(2), tabled in the House of Commons an outline of the government's position with regard to notices of motion for the production of papers. That outline was printed as an appendix to Hansard of that date and appears at page 2288. It reads in part as follows, under the heading "General Principle":

> To enable members of parliament to secure factual information about the operations of government to carry out their parliamentary duties and to make public as much factual information as possible consistent with effective administration, the protection of the security of the state, rights to privacy and other such matters, government papers, documents and consultant reports should be produced on notice of motion for the production of papers unless falling within the categories outlined below in which case an exemption is to be claimed from production.

Immediately following, under the heading "Exemptions" is found the following:

> The following criteria are to be applied in determining if government papers or documents should be exempt from production:
> 1. Legal opinion or advice provided for the use of the government.

The hon. member for Brandon-Souris and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre are well aware—they have been in the House a long time and they know—of the long standing procedure and precedents which the government is following in giving the answer it first gave to the request for the order to the hon. member for Brandon-Souris, and I know the hon. members will understand the point I am making now with regard to in-house legal opinions held by the government and given by officers of the Crown to ministers.

Were documents containing legal opinions or advice subject to compulsory disclosure, the free expression or candour that is essential to the proper conduct of the affairs of the government would be seriously curtailed and the performance of the duties of the advising ministers of the Crown on questions of law would be inhibited.

If one looked for a moment to the private world outside this chamber, one would see that there has always existed a privileged relationship between a solicitor and a client, and those legal communications, solicitor-client communications, have always been accepted as being sacrosanct. We are in an analogous situation but in a government in-house circumstance. That advice which is being requested to be brought forward publicly is advice from public servants on which ministers of the Crown rely, and it would be a serious curtailment of the abilities of public service employees to fully express themselves when assisting the government to carry out the duties and functions of various departments.

The Department of Justice was consulted almost two years before the rates were increased and the opinion was that it was legal to increase the postal rates by virtue of section 13 of the Financial Administration Act, to which I referred earlier. I am not going to comment at any length on the committee report which was concurred in last week. As the hon. member for Brandon-Souris pointed out, if the matter has not yet been brought before the courts, it is my understanding that it may be soon.

Mr. Dinsdale: It is before the Ontario Supreme Court now.

Mr. Young: I have been informed by the hon. member that it is before the courts. In that case, for me to comment further would be wrong since, I take it, the matter is sub judice.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Don't give us that.

Mr. Young: It is generally taken that one does not comment on matters which are before the court. If the postal rates are being challenged—and I gather a challenge may be coming from the Periodical Publishers' Association—I think we will await the advice of the court and the decision of the very able people who sit on the bench. I am quite prepared to leave it to the court to make that decision.

In closing my remarks tonight let me remind the House that the hon. member for Brandon-Souris spoke about the service performed by the Post Office today. We have all heard the stories and humorous anecdotes about that service, and I am sure that on some occasion or other we may all have been looking for a letter which might have taken a day or two longer to arrive. Some people these days are fond of trying to compare the Post Office to the pony express. I want to point out to the hon. member for Brandon-Souris, because I see him smiling, that I came across an interesting fact and some interesting figures some weeks ago. At the time when the pony express operated—I believe it was at the turn of the century; I am not quite that old to remember that far back, but perhaps the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre might help me there—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): At the turn of which century?

Mr. Young: I took it the hon. member was referring to the most recent century. I heard that it cost about $25 to send a letter by pony express from one side of the continent to the other, and it could take anywhere from three weeks to a month for the letter to reach its destination. If that is true, I think that some of the humorous anecdotes do not describe the situation sufficiently accurately. I would like to ask that those who bandy about those stories should also compare the value of $25 at that time to what it is today. Would it be $75 to $100 in today's monetary terms? I do not know exactly. For that same letter to go through the Canadian postal system, as some six billion letters do, crossing six time zones, we pay 14 cents for a first class letter.

● (1752)

Mr. Dinsdale: It is 28 cents including the deficit.

Mr. Young: Well, it is 14 cents for the person who buys the stamp. I suppose we all share in the deficit.

I will conclude at this point in order for some of my colleagues to expand further on the recent rate increase.

Hon. Martin O'Connell (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, the hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada (Mr. Young) set out the position of the government very well. Further debate in the House is not likely to produce many results regarding the legality or alleged illegality of the postal rate increase. The government received advice. The matter is now before the courts. No useful purpose will be served by continuing the debate on the legal issue. Personally I believe the government had the legal right to do what it did.

The public is less interested in the postal rate increase to 14 cents, since it is not out of line with the rates charged in other countries. They are really interested, however, in the service the Post Office is able to deliver at this stage of its development. Many of us are as concerned as the public with the quality of this service.

The Post Office is a federal institution which is facing a crisis. It is not difficult to understand why that is so; this federal institution has had a long history of neglect by the public and particularly by governments. That neglect was overcome in the last ten years or less. The Post Office in fact has gone through a massive transformation which has resulted in inside turmoil and difficulties in its service to the public.

Approximately ten years ago, collective bargaining came to the Post Office, as it did to other federal institutions within the public service. I am referring to the Post Office as an institution which employs one out of every five public servants. In fact, the Post Office has some 63,000 employees. It is a massive institution into which the collective bargaining procedure was introduced for the first time. At the time collective bargaining was introduced, the working conditions in the Post Office were poor, the wages were exceptionally low, and a military style of administration and management existed, if I can put it that way. Therefore, one would expect that employees would use collective bargaining to better their positions. They were perfectly entitled to do so.

Also, the facilities of the Post Office have been starved of capital for decades by successive governments. Not only were the working conditions poor inside those facilities, but the facilities themselves were poor and employees could not cope with them because of the millions of pieces of mail they were expected to deliver. Thus, service was breaking down, and morale and working conditions were poor.

The transformation is still going on at the present time. A new postal code was introduced. Industrialization was introduced into the operations of the Post Office. Also, mechanization on a massive scale was experienced. For example, there are three letter mechanized sorting plants in Toronto and other parts of the country today. Anyone who goes into one of those plants will appreciate that people are no longer handling the mail. Instead, machines are handling it. The work force has been industrialized to that extent. Thus, a major changeover in working conditions and psychology has occurred. It is still not easy to work in a modern Post Office facility.

It is important for us to know that the system can remain difficult, even with mechanization. If one goes into the Scarborough letter sorting plant, one will see a group of coders sitting in a row behind what appear to be typewriters. The letters go down a moving belt. That belt stops for four or five seconds, at which time the typist is required to copy the postal code from the envelope, and the code reappears on the envelope in the form of yellow bars. The future progress of the letter is controlled by an automatic and mechanized process based on yellow bars. The typist is required to read the postal code which is on the envelope, type it within a few seconds, and then switch attention to the next envelope which appears before her immediately. This process is repeated and repeated automatically and the postal coder becomes a part of the machine. One must agree that even though the working conditions have been mechanized and improved, they are difficult to adapt to and live with. The psychological and emotional strains of working in the mechanized Post Office are still very considerable.

Of course there will be breakdowns. For example, if the postal coder looks at the code on the envelope very quickly and misreads M1E 1E2 as N1E 1E2, the letter will end up in London, Ontario, rather than Toronto. It may require ten days to recover that letter. There are many management and systems problems still to be worked out. These are the kinds of questions which should be in front of us because they affect service.

It was for these reasons that I asked for the establishment of a special parliamentary committee to inquire into our postal service and the host of problems associated with the transformation that is occurring. Many of those problems are management problems and not problems caused by rate increases.

I will give another example. At any given time the Post Office is not aware of where bags of mail are, even though it seems to think so. The railways know where their boxcars are because the sides of the boxcars are coloured and numbered for computer reference. If a bag of mail goes astray, however, the employees at the Post Office do not know whether it is in Kitchener, Vancouver or wherever, because no such tracing mechanism exists. This is why the public will remain concerned about slow delivery.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. The hour provided for the consideration of private members' business having expired, I do now leave the chair until 8 p.m.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

[Mr. O'Connell.]

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

FINANCIAL ADMINISTRATION ACT

AMENDMENT TO ESTABLISH OFFICE OF COMPTROLLER GENERAL

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-10, to amend the Financial Administration Act, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates, and motion No. 1 (Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West) (for Mr. Andre)).

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, before the adjournment I was recounting for the House the history of the Glassco commission, its purposes, what it hoped to achieve, why the change was necessary and the recommendations that were felt required. The major reason for the change was the fact that the comptroller was responsible for details of financial control, but he could not avoid the administrative details which were not to be his chief concern. In other words, he found himself in a difficult position. In fact, the history of the time would reveal that he found the work overwhelming, and the departments of government resented the interference of the then comptroller arrangement.

The new arrangement that was proposed was to sift out the administrative detail at the departmental level and to leave the nuts and bolts of the accounts to the accountant general. The system was sound on paper, and it may very well have been in practice if all its components had been set in motion. Unfortunately, this did not happen. The financial control was moved to the departments; Treasury Board assumed greater responsibility for financial management, and in 1969 the position of the comptroller of the treasury was abolished.

Two vital mistakes were made. Firstly, the decentralization of financial control to the departments was not made to financial officials but to senior officials who already carried a burden for policy creation and administration; or on the other hand it was made to junior financial officials who did not carry sufficient weight in their departments to keep financial priorities in the forefront of decision making. Secondly, the comptroller general's position was dropped, but no accountant general was appointed to replace him as had been recommended by the Glassco Commission. Instead, the Treasury Board tried to do everything.

You were here, Mr. Speaker, then. I have only read about this in the history of this department, but during that period of time the Treasury Board assumed responsibility for negotiations with the public service, who at that time had acquired the right to strike; it was given the responsibility for the bilingualism program; and it became increasingly important in setting the priorities of the government because of its increased responsibility for financial control. In this regard it seemed to be challenging the finance department for the final political say in allocating financial resources to departments for their priority programs.

As it grew, it seemed to pay less effective attention to its Glassco inspired functions—to keep a firm watch not only on the purpose for which money is allocated, but the manner in which it is spent. The report in 1975 of the Auditor General, which landed like a bombshell in this parliament when it was tabled, was a direct result of this failure to follow those recommendations. Then, in came the Auditor General.

Everyone in this House will recall Mr. Macdonell. Everyone in this House waits and has waited for years with gleeful anticipation for the Auditor General's report, and I think that some of my friends on the other side said that after Maxwell Henderson, Mr. Macdonell would be some kind of an auditor pussycat.

Mr. MacFarlane: You said that, we didn't. We said he would be brilliant; he's a Scot.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): He put the case perfectly in the public accounts, and I want to quote it for edification of the chief government whip because I am sure it will do him the world of good. He said about the financial management of the government which the government whip supports so gleefully:

> The present state of the financial management and control systems of departments and agencies of the Government of Canada is significantly below acceptable standards of quality and executives.

That was quite a judgment for the quiet Mr. Macdonell to make, and quite a judgment for an organization which at that time had supervision over the expenditure of $34 million for the year ending March, 1976.

In dealing with Crown corporations and other adjuncts of the government, Mr. Macdonell said:

> In the majority of the Crown corporations audited by the Auditor General, financial management and control is weak and ineffective. Moreover, co-ordination and guidance by control government agencies of financial management and control practices in the Crown corporations are virtually non-existent.

If the first was a strong comment on financial management procedures with respect to financial control and Crown corporations, this was an indictment of the management of the government. Mr. Macdonell chose his language with great care and great precision when he said in his report that the financial control system of the government was grossly inadequate.

It was against that background that when we asked for the appointment of a comptroller general by the Government of Canada they indicated that they felt it was not necessary, thereby flying in the face of the Auditor General. Then when the Auditor General's report sunk home in the minds of the Canadian people—and I suppose ministers of the Crown began getting the same mail from their constituents as members of parliament—they did not advance the argument about there being no need for a comptroller general. Instead, the government fell back on the argument that they had to investigate whether this would interfere with ministerial responsibility and the relationship of the ministry to parliament.

That was the first time that I had ever heard any member of the government concern himself greatly about the issue of ministerial responsibility. It seems in the last little while they have not dealt with ministerial responsibility at all. In fact, in the mind of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) it has been something that should be avoided especially when it is embarrassing, and sometimes I am led to believe that they substitute the doctrine of ministerial ignorance for ministerial responsibility. Nonetheless, that is the argument that they advanced. It was not until the eleventh hour, when they were belaboured by the public and perhaps by their own conscience, that one day in this House of Commons there was the dramatic announcement: "We are going to have a comptroller general." Some would have called it a deathbed conversion. If it had been made today it would be a deathbed conversion. They went on to say: "A distinguished Canadian has been appointed Comptroller General of Canada, and he has his place in the scheme of things as established by Bill C-10".

As I said at the outset, it is very important that we clothe that official with sufficient statutory authority that he knows where he stands. We must give him some authority which can stand with ministerial whim so we do not see a repetition of the practice of government by order in council, government by regulation, government by guideline, all of which gives tremendous power to the executive and removes from parliament the power to set the guidelines that ought to be in an agency responsible for an aspect of government which is eventually reported to parliament.

This amendment has not been advanced to cripple the Comptroller General in any way. It is to give him solidity in the scheme of things, to lay out certain statutory responsibilities that we know he has, that he knows he has, that the government knows he has, that his brother deputy ministers in the public service know he has and that the public know he has, so that he, parliament and the rest of us can make judgments in the appropriate way. That is the purpose of the amendment and why I support the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) who before we adjourned said that we have to go much beyond that.

Treasury Board does a tremendous amount of evaluation and planning of government programs which should be referred to parliament. The objective of the amendment is to strengthen the office of the comptroller general and to put into the hands of the comptroller general the knowledge and the tools by which he can more effectively do his job, so that he and we know that there is the machinery available to look after the interests of the citizens of the country. That is the purpose of the amendment and I invite the House to support it.

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): I welcome the opportunity, Mr. Speaker, to speak on this bill. It is through the insistence of the members on this side that we have a large part to play in why the government has finally come around to creating a comptroller general position. Actually if the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Andras) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) were doing their job, we would not need a comptroller general.

● (2022)

One cannot help but wonder if this comptroller general office that is being established is nothing but window dressing. If one looks back to 1970, this government introduced a bill to reduce the powers of the Auditor General, but thanks to the insistence and filibustering by members on this side that bill had to be withdrawn. The last thing this government wants is someone examining what it is doing. We will find out in time whether the Comptroller General will be able to do his job. When we form the government after the next election we will make sure that he has all the powers to carry out his duties, Mr. Speaker. How irresponsible can this government, which is now spending $1 billion more a month than it is taking in, get?

Perhaps the Canadian people would like to know just exactly what it is going to cost them to operate the Comptroller General's department. Initially Treasury Board estimated a total expenditure of $4.9 million and 124 man-years to run the office of the Comptroller General. Even they realize that they need a large department to keep track of what this outfit is doing. This includes $1.9 million of new spending and 35 new man-years. Another $3 million and 89 man-years comes from a transfer from the Treasury Board secretariat. The financial administration branch and the efficiency evaluation branch of the Treasury Board secretariat are being transferred to the office of the Comptroller General. So one can see that because the President of the Treasury Board cannot control expenditures and the Minister of Finance cannot control expenditures, the Canadian taxpayers will now have to pay almost $5 million to establish another department to keep track of what this government is doing.

I would like the Comptroller General to examine why the CBC had six units standing west of the main block for the last two weeks with a whole crew of technicians and truck drivers. There were six large mobile units sitting there waiting for the election to be called. Well, we are not going to have the election, Mr. Speaker, because the vans are being pulled away. I guess the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has notified the CBC that there will be no election. From information that I have obtained I understand that for approximately the last two weeks it has cost the Canadian taxpayers $1,200 an hour to have these six vans sitting there. This just shows the games this government plays and the cost of the games which the Prime Minister plays for this parliament and for the Canadian taxpayer. Tonight there are two vans left. We will find out tomorrow whether they will be pulled away, and that will be an indication of whether or not there will be an election this fall. I will try to get the total cost of having those six vans parked outside for the last two weeks.

I would like to quote from a recent article which appeared in the Ottawa Journal. It is written by W. A. Wilson who has summed up this cabinet's performance in an excellent way. It is headed "Trudeau cabinet incredibly careless". I do not need Mr. Wilson to tell me that; all of us are aware of it. In this particular article he states:

> The sensational aspects of the public accounts committee's investigation of nuclear sales abroad, the suspicion that payments were made for corrupt and illegal purposes, inevitably will secure the most public and political attention.

The new Comptroller General will certainly have his work cut out for him. What a challenge it will be to keep track of this government and what they are doing. Over the last ten years this group has spent $235 billion of taxpayers' money. All they have reduced from that $235 billion is $20,000. So that gives a clear indication of the disrespect this government has for Canadian taxpayers.

For another example I would like to quote from Hansard for November 26, 1976, some comments made by the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner). These comments are in regard to the Government Expenditures Restraint Act which we were discussing at that time. The hon. member for Crowfoot stated:

> Mr. Speaker, in rising to resume debate on Bill C-19 I would refer to my remarks of last night when I said there is a shocking lack of planning by this government, particularly in the Department of Transport.

The hon. member for Crowfoot is now overlooking all this irresponsible spending and he is sitting on the other side with the rest of them. He goes on to say:

> There are heavy lay-offs in the steel industry, but no plans are advanced on how to assist the regions faced with these lay-offs which come as a result of lack of orders from railway companies

And on and on he goes. How could any responsible person join a government which operates in that manner? The member for Crowfoot goes on to say:

> I have read of the problems in the Department of Transport. In fact, I read a very revealing statement. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) said that no additional airports would be built in Canada without consulting the airlines. That is an admission that when Mirabel was built, the airlines were not consulted with regard to the kind of terminal facilities they wanted.

How is the Comptroller General going to deal with the political pay-offs and political decisions which are how this government operates? Will he be able to stop their political decisions and pay-offs? Not very likely. The new Comptroller General will be in a most frustrated position when he deals with this government.

The hon. member for Crowfoot goes on to say:

> When talking to the former president of Air Canada, he informed me that he was not consulted about the public transit vehicles used between the terminal and the airport. In fact, when he was told that the system would be at Mirabel, he informed the government that it was a very costly and wasteful system.

As if that would concern them. It most certainly would not. I do not know how the Comptroller General will deal with a situation like this. The hon. member for Crowfoot went on to point out:

> Many members of parliament and the press have been making hay with regard to the Minister of Transport's abuse of the public trust placed in him, with his exorbitant travelling costs. He stated in all seriousness that he had to fly to Calgary a year ago for the Grey Cup game in order to represent the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde).

How will the comptroller deal with these JetStars? The minister from Crowfoot now flies around in one of these JetStars. He was the one who was so critical about this matter and was the one who revealed the Minister of Transport's travelling costs, which were three quarters of a million dollars then and will be up to at least $1 million now. He is continuing to use the Jet Stars every weekend and so is the minister from Crowfoot. How will the Comptroller General control this? The government has no intention of setting an example of controlling expenditures. They never fooled me, Mr. Speaker, and they will not fool the Canadian people again.

In talking on this restraint bill the minister from Crowfoot said:

> The bill before the House suggests that the government is going to curtail expenditures.

The minister from Crowfoot went on to point out that they have no intention of doing any such thing. He is now part of this particular government and will operate in the same manner.

What is the Comptroller General going to do about a government that gives low interest loans to communist countries? These communist countries have the money to fight wars around the world; a prime example is Cuba. There are 45,000 Cuban troops in Africa now. We found out in 1975 that CIDA was trying to conceal the amount of loans to Cuba. They wanted to give a no-interest loan but apparently somebody over on the government side had a little bit of conscience and so they settled for 3 per cent. We are pouring millions of dollars into a communist country which has all kinds of money to fight wars. What is the Comptroller General going to do in a situation like that?

● (2032)

I wish to refer to a former finance minister, and we have had many of those. This particular one is Mr. Turner. When he inaugurated the current spending restraint program in the budget of June 23, 1975, at that time the main estimates had received the approval of parliament. They forecast budgetary spending of $32.2 billion. The main estimates for 1979 forecast budgetary spending of $46.5 billion. Thus during the three years of the restraint program, the main estimates of budgetary spending have increased by $14.3 billion, or 44 per cent. That is why I am so suspicious of this legislation to set up a comptroller general office. In fact, I do not trust the government. Their statements mean absolutely nothing.

I wish to refer to a statement made by the Prime Minister on August 13, 1969. He stated over television that we would have to control expenditures. He said we would be on the way to financial disaster if nothing were done to bring spending under control. He further stated that to spend vast sums on welfare, education and other programs while allowing inflation to continue would merely place hundreds of thousands of Canadians on a treadmill they could not escape. Since the Prime Minister made that statement, government spending has increased by 410 per cent to over $35 billion. How can we possibly have any faith in the office of comptroller general? We will have to support it and hope that it works, but I believe it is nothing but window dressing.

The President of the Treasury Board stated that federal spending will rise by 9.8 per cent in fiscal 1979. This figure is suspect, but even if it is accepted, a 9.8 per cent increase in spending is hardly evidence of restraint. It goes on and on. Today we received a press release from the Information Division of the Department of Finance. In it the Minister of Finance announced:

> Canada and the Deutsche Bank have reached an agreement for a private placement in Germany of 1.5 billion Deutsche Marks. The Deutsche Bank is a major commercial bank in the Federal Republic of Germany. It managed the private placement of DM notes issued by Canada in 1968.

All we hear from day to day is that the government are going to borrow more and more money. Where is the control? How is the Comptroller General going to control this? Today Canadian taxpayers have to pay $6.5 billion a year in interest on the money they are borrowing. We are borrowing money abroad to pay interest on money we borrowed abroad. How irresponsible can they get? What amazes me are the backbenchers, who sit opposite supporting this. They have no conscience. They have no respect for the taxpayer. It is unbelievable. Yet the government say they are going to control federal spending.

I say tonight that federal spending will increase at a faster rate in 1979 than it did in 1978. Total federal outlays are expected to increase by 8.3 per cent in fiscal 1978. The administration expects outlays to increase by 9.8 per cent in 1979. I do not understand how the Comptroller General can accept this challenge he is taking on. Maybe he does not know the facts. I do not think he knows what he is stepping into. He is being led down the garden path.

Another large item of inflexible expenditures is the interest and servicing costs of the public debt, which I have just covered. Primarily due to the large deficits tolerated by the present administration, debt charges have increased by 82 per cent since the 1976 main estimates. An increase of that magnitude during a restraint program indicates that this administration sees no connection between restraint and living within one's means. In more human terms, the increase in debt charges over the life of the restraint program, 1976 to 1979, works out to an increase of $215 per person employed, from a level of $382 in the 1976 main estimates to $597 in 1979. Public debt charges will become more burdensome in the future, as the present administration continues to tolerate sustained large deficits.

I do not know how the Comptroller General will deal with a government that allows the following kinds of expenditures under the Canada Council. This shows the disrespect they have for the Canadian people and their tax dollars. Here are some examples of how they hand out Canadian taxpayers' money. The council gave out $8,000 for an illustrated glossary of household objects in New France. We have five million Canadians living below the poverty line, yet they hand out $8,000 to somebody who does not want to work so he can study something like this.

Another one is $5,275 for research on themes taken from Apocalypse in the work of Russian "Symbolist" writers. How on earth can an elected official tolerate handing out taxpayers' dollars for such hairbrained schemes? Only a Liberal government could do that.

Then we have $14,345 for psychological research on the effect of foreknowledge on human reaction. What on earth does that mean? We then come to $9,502 to continue research on the psychology of individual behaviour in the face of unavoidable events. Every day we face unbelievable events in this House with this government, which is an absolute disaster. Next we have $8,000 for research on African psychological studies and their implications for traditional psychological theory. It is unbelievable!

I have three stars beside the next one, which is $43,000 to continue research in Vancouver and Winnipeg on how individuals are influenced to take an active role in politics. I can speak for Manitoba. They are taking an active role in that province. My fund raiser is a former Liberal. The people who operate my constituency office, a couple who have donated their services, are former Liberals. I have had former Liberals come to my office in Ottawa and say "Dan, we have had enough. We have seen the light and are joining the Conservative party." They say they will support us and do everything they can to get rid of this outfit across the way.

Mr. Cullen: Hallelujah, Brother Dan!

Mr. McKenzie: There will be a hallelujah for the hon. member from Sarnia. Maybe he will join us. The next one is $10,501 to prepare a critical edition of the complete works of the Mexican political pamphleteer, Pablo de Villavicencio, 1792-1832. I am sure the Canadian taxpayers will be sitting on the edge of their chairs with bated breath waiting for that report on what happened in 1792. The Liberals squander and throw around tax dollars and then sit back and laugh.

Here is a dandy, $19,900 to study population and social mobility in Huntingdonshire, England, in the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries. That is a top priority. Next, $13,240 to study reactions of infants to strangers and familiar adults. Oh, boy! Next, $3,600 to explore the motivational aspects of Western tragedy. We should be talking about the Canadian tragedy. Fifteen years of Canadian government is the biggest tragedy which ever happened to us. My God, at a time when 70 per cent of our people are never going to get into a home of their own we are squandering the taxpayers' money. I see that even the Speaker is getting a chuckle out of this, and he is a Liberal. I do not envy the Comptroller General. He will probably be taken away in a strait-jacket within a month after trying to deal with this group.

● (2042)

When he made his original growth forecast the Minister of Finance said he expected exports and consumer spending to lead the way to economic recovery. He forgot to say that this country is assisting the United States to recover through a serious outflow of capital and business to that country. People are bailing out because of the political climate created by this government. None of these make-work programs or appointments such as that of a comptroller general are going to keep them here.

[Mr. McKenzie.]

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-10 takes up only one paragraph of writing, yet underlying that paragraph are a multitude of concerns, some of which have been expressed by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) and others more recently by the entertaining member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie).

I am not at all surprised that my hon. friend succeeded in entertaining the House with some of the excerpts from the book he brought with him, "The Legacy of Spending", prepared by an incensed Canadian, a radio station commentator in Vancouver, a man who in all likelihood will seek the Conservative nomination in one of the lower mainland ridings, a man who daily discloses to Canadians in the lower mainland of British Columbia the kind of insensitivity, the kind of sheer thoughtlessness and idiocy which has been encouraged and allowed to continue by the present government. It makes no difference where you look, in what framework, department or Crown corporation, it is all there in this one book "The Legacy of Spending", a book which is enjoying massive sales across Canada, a book which is making a national impact, a book which will haunt the Liberal party. And so it should.

The time is long passed for the appointment of a Comptroller General. I echo the comment of my hon. friend: the man may be in a strait-jacket within a month when he is confronted with the irresponsible spending of some of these departments and Crown corporations. It is frustrating for a backbencher, and I have in mind particularly those who serve on the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development, to admit that for the past several weeks the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Milne) has been periodically absent, that the minister himself has been almost consistently absent, and that the chairman of the standing committee has been absent for a protracted period. How is it possible for any member, myself included, even to ask the minister when he intends to summon up his courage and have his estimates brought before the committee?

I have made allegations in this House and also, without fear, outside this chamber with reference to the chaos in the auditing and in the management of that one ministry. Yet there has been no opportunity given us to examine and pursue these matters because the minister declines to bring his estimates before the standing committee.

Similar frustrations have been experienced by members serving on the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration. So in the final analysis, unless the ministers, the parliamentary secretaries and the chairmen of standing committees are prepared to demonstrate a measure of responsibility to parliament and to Canadians, our efforts, despite the appointment of a Comptroller General, go in vain.

Hopefully, outside this chamber there are Canadians who are prepared to demonstrate a measure of concern and who will express their concern at the polls. Nobody seems to care that the Department of Indian Affairs in one province alone is $12 million over its budget for a single fiscal year, 1976-77. How could one province be allowed to exceed its budget for programs for 43,000 Indians in Saskatchewan by $12 million? How is it possible in the province of Ontario for somebody outside the department to accept money from Indian affairs, to put that money into a bank, to allow it to stay there for months gaining interest, and then to take the money out of the bank, put it where it was supposed to go in the first place and pocket the interest? We certainly need more than an Auditor General; we need a Comptroller General.

How is it possible that someone in the Department of Indian Affairs in a position of trust could arrange to have materials belonging to the department used in the construction of an apartment building in some other province, the stamp of the department being covered over with paint? Why is it that conduct of this kind is not answered for by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Faulkner)? Why is it apparently of no concern to his parliamentary secretary? Why is it totally ignored by the chairman of the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development? If things are that bad in one ministry, what are they like in others?

In the past year, Crown corporations have given us all cause for serious reflection. One of the classic cases is the affair involving Atomic Energy of Canada, Limited. If there was ever an urgent need for consistent standards of auditing public expenditure in the hands of Crown corporations, this is one outstanding example. Reading from the minutes and proceedings of the report of a sub-committee of the Public Accounts Committee on this matter, I note a letter from the judicial authority of Argentina. In this letter, which was sent to Canada through its ambassador, the Argentine attorney general's office had this to say—I am talking about the cozy little deal in which AECL took part:

● (2052)

(a) The actual payment of 5,000,000 dollars to a presumed "commercial agent" has been established.

(b) The commission was paid in equal parts by AECL and ITALIMPIANTI, for the apparent purpose of obtaining the award of the contract.

This, sir, is from the government of Argentina, written in Spanish and then translated.

(c) ITALIMPIANTI advanced 300,000 dollars towards payment of the commission between the months of March and May of 1973, depositing the final balance of 1,000,000 dollars in the month of January 1975.

(d) It has been possible to reconstruct the bank movement of these funds.

I am talking about Canadian tax dollars, not just the tax dollars of large corporations, businesses and industries. No wonder they are having problems surviving. The economy is a clear reflection of that. I am talking about the smelter worker in my home town and the pulpmill worker some 25 miles removed, in Castlegar. I am talking about the sawmill worker at Kootenay Forest Products in Nelson who has a wife, who has four children to raise and to put through school and who is working his backside off for five months out of twelve just to pay income taxes to this government so it can fritter them away and pour them down the drain.

(e) The responsible Canadian officials ordered payment of the part corresponding to AECL, following instructions from ITALIMPIANTI.

(f) The Canadian parliamentarians were unable to ascertain the identity of the presumed "commercial agent", in spite of having brought in the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, who appear not to have obtained concrete results up to the present.

I would bet it was not without one hell of a fine effort at trying.

(g) ITALIMPIANTI, which admits the intervention of the "agent", indicates that this latter was dispensed from issuing receipts or supporting documents and refuses to identify him.

(h) For the most part, the funds which made up the presumed "commission"—

Five million dollars.

—were concentrated in a Swiss banking institution, using a coded account for this purpose.

That is a very familiar story. It does not matter whether it is AECL or the mafia, it is an intrusion into Canada's democratic system. It is a distortion of honesty. It is corruption of the lowest and highest order at one and the same time. It demonstrates skill in manipulating funds through Swiss bank accounts. It demonstrates the total insensitivity and uncaring attitude of the government. It demonstrates one of the reasons that the taxpayers of Canada are absolutely fed up with the nonsense which goes on in this government, and that will be reflected in the next federal election.

In that legacy of spending we see some shocking examples of the blunders of the Canada Council. If hon. members would care to read the minutes of the Canada Council appearance before the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts, they will find that when the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman) questioned a director from the Canada Council, he was told that in no way would he, the Secretary of State (Mr. Roberts), who is responsible for the Canada Council, or the standing committee have access to the reports and files indicating the manner in which the Canada Council was spending the taxpayers' dollars which this parliament gave to the Canada Council, totalling $64 million, so that somebody could write a poem, the title of which is so obscene that I cannot repeat it in this House. That is the kind of garbage we have to put up with. It is time hon. members on both sides of this House were provided with the authority to act against people who spend amounts of money like that in such an irresponsible fashion.

We do not need one comptroller general; we need a dozen of them and a half dozen auditors general to clean up this mess which is the legacy of the spending of this government, and that is just the top half. The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre has said that when there is a change of government and the cans of worms are opened, the smell will fill this chamber.

One of the difficulties with this bill is that the provision for a comptroller general is in one simple paragraph. How can that be arranged? It will be arranged by regulation. God knows we have seen other bills pass through this House dealing with regulations. I can account for half a dozen bills about which the minister responsible has said "Trust me". We trusted them with Atomic Energy of Canada, Limited. We trusted them with the Canada Council. We trusted them with Polysar. We even trusted the Minister of Transport (Mr.

Lang) to use some discretion when flying back and forth attending to the affairs and business of Canada.

It is a misplaced trust to allow a government to rule by regulation. The concerns referred to by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton are very legitimate concerns. The bill should spell out what we expect of the Comptroller General. It should not be left to government regulation. Surely that lesson has been learned. Surely that concern has been advanced and repeated often enough. Surely it is not too much to ask, in the dying days of this parliament—if that is what these days are—that we address ourselves to spelling out what we expect from this man. Let us not hamstring him, but let us know.

Mr. Lloyd Francis (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to support this bill, but I cannot support the amendments which have been suggested, and I would like to indicate my reasons.

The bill has its origins in the report of the Auditor General presented in the fall of 1976. Hon. members opposite have quoted in vivid detail from that report of the Auditor General, and the measures which have been taken subsequently to correct the deficiencies in the control of expenditures have been put on the record by hon. members on this side of the House.

I am sure every member in this House will agree that the reports brought down by the Public Accounts Committee and tabled in the House a matter of two weeks ago dealing with financial controls of Crown corporations, with Atomic Energy of Canada, Limited and with Polysar are the result of many hours of hard work by hon. members from both sides of the House. The committee conducted its business in a very fair and non-partisan way. It would have been a little more satisfactory to me if those who are declaiming so loudly the need to do something about government expenditures spent a little more time with the Public Accounts Committee.

I invite the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie), who unfortunately is not here now, and the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Brisco) to do so. The Public Accounts Committee is an instrument of this House which has tried to deal with the complaints which the Auditor General so very vividly described and to do something about them. The Auditor General pointed out that in the implementation of the Glassco commission recommendations we went from perhaps one extreme to the other. We had a position called comptroller general of the treasury, and it was abolished in the mid-1960's.

That position was a line position, a position which required a very centralized control of every dollar of expenditure. As the public service of Canada grew, as the expansion took place in those fabulous years in the 1960's, Mr. Glassco pointed out that some kind of decentralization was absolutely essential for the efficient management of the public service. In a nutshell, the philosophy of Mr. Glassco was: let the deputy ministers manage, let them be the bosses, free them from this highly centralized line control of the former auditor general, free them from the centralized hiring policies of the Public Service Commission, let them have delegated authority to do their own hiring, and let them be responsible for their own spending.

In a way, the wheel turned full circle—we went to the other extreme. Now we see the re-establishment of a position called the Comptroller General, with significant differences from the previous post. This is not a line position, it is a staff position. The new Auditor General cannot directly control, but he can require systems to be set in place which will control expenditures under the direction of the deputy ministers, a very basic principle which must be recognized by those who are studying this legislation.

I sympathize with those hon. members who say that the Comptroller General's duties must be spelled out, and here we have amendments (a), (b), (c), (d), and (e) spelling out exactly what he must do. I invite hon. members to think for a moment. We have a position called the secretary of the Treasury Board who is responsible for many things. We have an Auditor General who has been given an act, recently passed by this parliament, stating that, among other things, the Auditor General will examine expenditures in order that they may be made with due regard for economy and efficiency, properly accepted accounting principles, and all the rest of it.

If the words sound familiar to hon. members opposite, let me tell them that they incorporate exactly the same words and phrases regarding the duties they are setting for this new position. It would call for the wisdom of Solomon to predict exactly what each is going to do. One thing is certain—the Auditor General is in the pre-eminent position. His duties do have a statutory base, his report must be laid before parliament according to the statute and it is automatically referred to the Public Accounts Committee. That is a treatment that no other agency of government has. No other individual in the public service of Canada has such a responsibility.

The Public Accounts Committee is a special committee whose chairman is chosen from the ranks of the official opposition and whose vice-chairman is a senior government spokesman. I happen to hold that position. The hon. member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington) has filled the job of chairman of the committee very ably, and I want to pay tribute to him for a very conscientious effort. But the facts are that the Comptroller General is in no such position. His report must go to his minister because he is at the deputy minister level; he does not have the statutory responsibility to report to parliament, and he is like another deputy minister of the Crown.

I invite hon. members on the other side to cite me any other deputy minister whose duties are prescribed to this degree, as the sponsors of these amendments would suggest, by statute. I invite them to cite one, because when they reflect about it they will realize that it is extremely important that there be no jurisdictional conflict between the Auditor General, the Comptroller General and the secretary of the Treasury Board. Their duties must be prescribed by regulation and in the normal way in which the duties of deputy ministers are set out and developed. Only the Auditor General can be chosen for the special treatment of a statutory responsibility because he has a mechanism by which he reports in a very effective way directly to parliament.

I am sure that when hon. gentlemen and hon. ladies on the other side think about this matter they will realize that the pattern of the Auditor General Act cannot be repeated, that it would be a serious mistake to attempt to set out by statute duties which would involve a jurisdictional conflict, that an attempt to define the duties precisely would be self-defeating, and that the usual way by which the duties of a person of deputy minister rank are developed and described should be observed in this instance.

For this reason I will vote against the amendments, but I support the bill enthusiastically. I welcome it. I was delighted to have the opportunity to examine yesterday before the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates the incumbent who has just been appointed to the position. I wish him well, I congratulate him on assuming these duties at what must be something of a financial sacrifice for him, and I am sure the people of Canada will have reason to be grateful.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Dean Whiteway (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to speak on this bill. I heard a comment from the other side to the effect that they want to have our two cents worth. Well, let me point out to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Cullen) that the Progressive Conservatives have already given the government our two cents worth, but I do not know whether the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) likes it over there. If they would get inflation under control, he might still be worth that much to them. If he is only worth half that much, it is only their fault.

We are debating tonight Bill C-10 to amend the Financial Administration Act. Before I get to the specific parts of the bill I want to pause for a minute to recognize the situation in which we find ourselves tonight on April 27. We recognized that back in November, 1976 the Auditor General pointed out in his report that the government had lost control of its spending and suggested that it was so serious that, if it continued, he would be unable to approve government accounts.

Why is it necessary for us to have a comptroller general? There are many reasons why we on this side see the necessity for such a position, why we will support this legislation and why my colleagues have submitted from this side some reasonable amendments based on sound judgment.

Let us look at the situation we have in Canada today as related to government spending. I would like to compare the figures of today with those of 1968 when this government came to power. Because it is the ten year legacy of spending by this government that caused the Auditor General, in November of 1976, to say that government spending is out of control.

When this government came to power in 1968 the rate of unemployment was 375,000; today it is 1,045,000. That is the official figure. The real figure is closer to 1,400,000. Ten years ago UIC benefits amounted to $438 million; today they are $4.5 billion. We are paying Canadians $4.5 billion not to work, not to be productive. When this government came to office, the rate of inflation was 4.5 per cent; today, with the world champion wrestler who has wrestled inflation to the ground, the rate of inflation stands at 8.7 per cent, double what it was ten years ago. When this government came to office, the CPI was 89.4 per cent; today, ten years later, it is 168.9 per cent.

When the government came into office, the trade balance was $3.1 billion; today it is $11.6 billion, which is four times greater. This is the legacy of spending which caused the Auditor General to say that government spending is out of control. When the government came into power, total spending was $10.9 billion; in this fiscal year it will be $41.1 billion, which is almost four times as much. If there was a reward for spending, the government would receive unquestionably the blue riband. The amount of money the government spent which it did not have or would not realize in revenues, at the time it came into office, was only $800 million; today that deficit is $9.2 billion. The government spends more today than what its total budget was when it came to power.

When the Trudeau government came into office, the budget of the Post Office was $67.2 million; today that deficit is $567 million. When the government came into power in 1968, the Post Office employed 36,000 people; today it employs 61,000 people. The number has doubled. If it doubles again, we will never get our mail. When the federal government came ito power, there were 236,000 employees in the federal public service; today it has 331,000 employees.

One would think the increase in staff which has occurred in the office of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) would result in their at least straightening him out, but obviously that has not happened. When the Prime Minister came into office one decade ago, there were eight people on his staff. Today there are 90 people, which is an increase of 82. That is the legacy of spending I am referring to.

I could refer to more figures that would indicate the increase in government spending. We are happy to be able to debate tonight whether Canada will have the benefit of a comptroller general. The government does not seem to accept the urgency of such a position. Two years ago the Auditor General pointed out that government spending was out of control. It took a year and a half for the government to put the legislation in place. It was introduced on March 8. I should like to indicate just how serious the government was about the creation of this position. Was it the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Andras) who moved and spoke on this bill? No, it was not; it was his parliamentary secretary. If this position is as important as the government indicates, and if it is as important as members of the official opposition know it is, why did it take so long to get the bill? The Auditor General made his recommendations in 1976. The bill was introduced on March 8. Today is April 27, and we are on the eve of a federal election. Why did the government bring in legislation of such critical importance to Canadians and the workings of parliament at this time?

I believe Canadians will turf out this government and call upon the Progressive Conservative party and its leader to form the new government. We want the position of Comptroller General to be a position of authority, not simply a position of name. One of the deficiencies of this bill is the fact that it does not clearly set out the responsibilities.
