Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I assure the hon. member that I will take this question into consideration and that I will act within the framework of the law.

● (1427)

INQUIRY AS TO FALL ELECTION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a related question for the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister, having decided that history will not unfold as it should if we had an election now, I would like him to clarify—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: The Prime Minister will be pleased to note the relief of all his backbenchers with his decision.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: In all seriousness, would the Prime Minister clarify one part of his answer to the Leader of the Opposition, when he made reference to next March? Is the Prime Minister now saying to the members of the House and to the people of Canada that they cannot anticipate, under any circumstances, a fall election?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, once again, referring to the preamble of the hon. member's question, I must say that I noticed particular relief on his face when I announced there would not be an election.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: And I am quite sure I saw some of his members get off their knees and wipe their brow, Mr. Speaker. I am not, of course, referring to the hon. member for Greenwood who was urging an early election because he is not running again.

March was mentioned, but I hope that will not start a new spate of speculation, and I hope the question of the Leader of the New Democratic Party was not intended in that way. I would just say that an election next fall is possible, but I do not exclude the possibility of an election next spring.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, an election if necessary, but not necessarily an election. The Prime Minister is right at home in his own party. Since the election has definitely been put off and since there are major problems in the Canadian economy, including the textiles industry that may go belly-up in Quebec, the plastics and automotive industries in the province of Ontario, and other sectors in deep trouble elsewhere, will the Prime Minister assure the House, if we are here to do serious business for the next couple of months, that among its measures the government will bring forward an industrial strategy for Canada that will set out for the long term how we can come to grips with our serious economic problems?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the New Democratic Party is catching up with the work that the premiers and myself did in February when we met here and put together a plan for the long term. I am happy to see that it has the support of the hon. member.

An hon. Member: That is why you did not call an election.

Mr. Trudeau: I would urge him and his party to be a bit more positive for the future than they have been in the past.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister's answer, to say the least, does not explain why, within two hours of the Globe and Mail appearing on the streets of Ottawa with news of an industrial strategy outlined by the New Democratic Party, the Prime Minister's office phoned immediately and asked for a copy of the strategy.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: Will the Prime Minister, who leads a party notorious in Canadian history for being at least ten years behind the NDP, and equally notorious for taking some good ideas that are old hat in our party and finally implementing them, at least do us the honour and do a service to the people of Canada by stealing our program holus-bolus and implementing it immediately?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I am sure that if we did that, the hon. member would still say it was the wrong thing.

* * *

• (1432)

[Translation]

THE CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

STATEMENT OF SENATOR MARCHAND—PROPOSED CONFERENCE OF FIRST MINISTERS

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

Now that the election has been definitely put off, let us get back to business. Last night Senator Marchand made very serious remarks, and I should like to find out whether the Prime Minister shares the senator's views that Canada's problem stems from the fact that the country which our founding fathers thought they were building has remained an illusion. Could the Prime Minister indicate whether he shares this point of view and, if he does, whether he will call together very shortly the various levels of government for the purpose of examining the problem and finding a solution as soon as possible?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I feel as though the hon. member asked me this question because he wanted to give me the opportunity to remind the House and the Canadian people that for the past ten years we have indeed striven to make the Canadian constitution our own constitution, and not merely an act of the British Parliament. In this endeavour, we have tried to co-operate with the provinces, and the hon. member knows that we have not succeeded, but we shall keep trying. As for the rest, not having read Senator Marchand's remarks, I do not know what he had in mind when he said that.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary.

A little later, the same senator said the following, according to the newspaper Le Droit I have here: Since the beginning of Confederation, the constitution has often been violated and the resulting dispute, if any, was a dispute about government and power rather than a constitutional crisis felt by the citizens, according to Mr. Marchand. So, my question is the following: in light of such words, does the Prime Minister share the views that it is mainly a government crisis, and if so, that it would be possible to find a solution so that governments understand each other better in order to build a true country?

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, Mr. Speaker, now that it appears that we are going to stay here for several weeks, I can give the hon. member the assurance that we are going to table before the House of Commons the proposal we announced in the Speech from the Throne, in an attempt to deal with these issues in a much wider context than the constitution itself and to encompass the problems relating to Canadian unity as a whole.

* * *

[English]

ENERGY

GRANT TO COMMITTEE ON NUCLEAR ISSUES IN THE COMMUNITY

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources: it concerns the Committee on Nuclear Issues in the Community which is funded by a $200,000 grant from the federal government.

In view of the fact that Dr. Pierre Dansereau, former co-chairman of the committee, has resigned from that position, saying that the committee had the appearance of a whitewash since the anti-nuclear viewpoint is not adequately represented on the committee, what conditions has the government attached to its funding to assure that a proper and impartial balance of both pro- and anti-nuclear viewpoints is presented?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, as the chairman of the Science Council of Canada made clear in a statement last week in response to a similar question, the council is using its auspices, at the request of municipalities across the country, to conduct forums and debates as an opportunity for interested groups to ask questions and put their points of view before a panel of experts. That is the function of the Science Council of Canada, and that is why the funds have been provided to it with the support of the Royal Society of Canada.

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I gather that the minister did not quite understand my question. I asked about conditions that the government would attach to its funding to ensure there is an impartial and balanced viewpoint on the pro- and anti-nuclear sides of the question. Given the fact that the allegations were made by a distinguished scientist and Massey Medal winner, I ask the minister what steps the government has taken to look into them and see whether they are true and, if necessary, to have them corrected.

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, I believe the allegations are based on some misinformation. The role of the committee is not to act as advocate, as I have already made clear; it is to act as a convenor.

[Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse).]

FINANCE

BENDIX HEAVY VEHICLE SYSTEMS—REPAYMENT OF PORTION OF EMPLOYEES' SALARIES

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance regarding the very sorry matter of 35 people employed by Bendix Heavy Vehicle Systems Ltd. in London who, as a result of a ruling by the Anti-Inflation Board that their salaries should be rolled back by some $78,000, are now under edict to repay this at the average rate of $90 per week per employee.

This is a very sorry state of affairs. Even worse, this ruling came after a two-year delay; in other words, there has been foot-dragging. Has the minister looked into this matter, and what can he tell the House about a solution?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, some days ago I received recommendations from the three hon. members of my party representing the London district and I have started to look into the matter. It is a very difficult problem because the law applies to everyone the same way. At the same time, however, I recognize there is a human problem because of the long delay.

I have asked my officials to review it and to see if we can find an accommodation. As soon as I can reach a solution within the law, I shall be delighted to announce it. I am not sure if it is possible, but I shall do my best.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I am glad to learn that this government has a little compassion for those at the lower end of the economic scale. I remind the minister that the AIB has apparently given a time-frame in which this money is to be paid back: it is something like seven months. At $90 per week, that will leave many employees below the poverty line.

Has the minister considered that time-frame, and will he go to the AIB and indicate that more time is required if there is no room for further negotiation? I am thinking of something like two years. Will he go to the AIB and tell them that would be an equitable solution to a very serious problem?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, my hon. friends from London suggested three years. I think we will have to find something in the middle. I am looking into the matter.

* * *

GOVERNMENT ADMINISTRATION

SUGGESTION CALIBRE OF CABINET BE IMPROVED

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Now that the right hon. gentleman has neatly provided a six-month hoist for the election, and barring an apprehended insurrection across the way the people of Canada will have to put up with the right hon. gentleman, is he giving consideration to looking into the bottom of the barrel to see if he can improve the calibre of cabinet?

ELECTIONS

REASON FOR PRIME MINISTER'S ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Prime Minister. In view of the announcement which, hopefully, clarifies the political situation for some time to come in this country, and referring to a most relevant and topical book—which came out in 1967 before the Prime Minister announced he would seek the leadership of his party—entitled "Federalism and the French Canadians", the foreword written by the Prime Minister, which is the very creed of the Prime Minister, reads as follows:

> The only constant factor to be found in my thinking over the years has been opposition to accepted opinions.

Two sentences later he says he likes to swim against the current. I ask the Prime Minister if the decision he announced today was taken in opposition to the accepted opinion of the Gallup poll, or of the Liberal caucus, or both?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am glad that extra time has been given to the hon. member so that he can begin to educate himself.

* * *

INCOME TAX

NON-FILING OF RETURNS

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the minister who answers for the Minister of National Revenue. A Winnipeg businessman by the name of Don Oliver has claimed that income tax is unconstitutional. Mr. Oliver has publicly claimed that he has not filed income tax returns for seven years, and that the federal government is afraid to take him to court because it knows the Income Tax Act is illegal. If the minister is aware of this case, will she explain to the House how Mr. Oliver could escape paying taxes for the past seven years?

● (1442)

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I find this an interesting question about the alleged unconstitutionality of the Income Tax Act. I will, of course, refer the matter to the minister as soon as the question period is over.

Mr. McKenzie: As Mr. Oliver has found a loophole, will the minister advise the House and the Canadian people about this loophole so that we can all escape paying excessive Liberal taxes?

Miss Bégin: That would be part of my answer, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

URBAN AFFAIRS

POSSIBLE AGREEMENT WITH QUEBEC ON CLEAN-UP OF OTTAWA RIVER

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. Following the federal-provincial task force report made public by the Minister of State for the Environment this week; because of the urgency of cleaning up the Ottawa River whose waters are being polluted mostly by industrial and municipal wastes; and because of the need to give priority to the completion of the main sewers and sewage treatment plants for the Outaouais region, can the minister tell the House whether he has received any communication whatsoever from the Quebec government regarding the signing of a federal-provincial agreement for the construction of those greatly needed facilities and so accelerate the fight against the pollution of the Ottawa River?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, over a week ago I read in a local newspaper that the Quebec minister, Mr. Léonard, was to write me a letter with regard to that sewage treatment plant for the Outaouais area, and in the Ottawa area we understand the Outaouais as being the Quebec side and the Ottawa as being the Ontario side. Now, having received no letter, I got in touch with the minister and asked him where it was and whether he had sent it to me. I finally learned that, contrary to what minister Jocelyne Ouellette may have said, the letter had not yet been sent, that the provincial authorities were still working on a draft letter and that I should receive the letter within a few days. Mr. Speaker, the position of the government is very simple: we are willing to make the necessary funds available to local authorities for the construction of that plant. We are waiting for the decision of the Quebec government which has been putting off for weeks both making a decision and giving local authorities the go-ahead for calling tenders for the construction of that treatment plant.

* * *

MANPOWER

YOUNG CANADA WORKS—REQUEST FOR INCREASED FUNDING

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

In view of the statistics on unemployment which were released this week and of the fact that it will be very difficult for students to find jobs, would the minister give us now a final answer about the possibility of increased funding to create jobs for students? Could the minister tell us whether or not there will be increased funding?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, we will not be increasing the budget of the Young Canada Works program.

* * *

[English]

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

BELOW COST PRICE OF WORKS BY CANADIAN AUTHORS

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. It relates to a number of questions I have raised since last fall and as recently as February 27, more particularly concerning a resolution passed last weekend in Ottawa at the annual meeting of the writers' union which expressed frustration and outrage at the lack of government action on the importation of remaindered editions of works by Canadian authors at below cost price. Can the minister explain why it has taken almost three years since representations were first made to the government to give Canadian writers adequate and proper protection?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I cannot answer for the past three years. Representatives of the writers' union came to see me three months ago. I immediately looked into this. I am presently discussing several solutions with my colleagues, and hope to have an answer within a week or so.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I had hoped to get a more detailed answer than that from the minister, because it is at least six weeks since I put him on notice in the House and I have yet to receive a reply. As a result of the minister's meeting last Friday with the writers' union, and the possibility of raising this whole matter with National Revenue in the hope of taking some effective action on the enforcement of copyright protection for our authors, has the minister obtained any agreement from National Revenue to take some effective action?

If they feel it is proper or possible to take action, has the minister considered the amendment prepared by the Writers' Union of Canada, the Canadian Book Publishers' Council, the Association of Canadian Publishers and the Canadian Copyright Institute which have agreed on a very straightforward amendment to the copyright law which would adequately protect Canadian authors and Canadian publishers?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, we are pursuing the first solution. I have been in consultation with the Minister of National Revenue, the Minister of Justice and the Secretary of State, all of whom have a very strong interest in this matter. We think there is a strong possibility of solutions under the present law.

With respect to a brief amendment, it seems that would be much more difficult because many groups in the country would like to have some input into such an amendment in addition to the writers' union. Consequently, an amendment would not be as simple as the writers' union thought, and I at first thought, because there are so many others who have an interest, including library associations, booksellers, and so on. I think we will have a solution within a short period of time as a result of consultation with other ministers.

* * *

COMMUNICATIONS

BELL CANADA CONTRACT WITH SAUDI ARABIA

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Communications. In view of the fact that Bell Canada has refused to produce documents for the Human Rights Commissioner so that he can determine whether Bell is unlawfully barring Jews and women from working on its $1.1 billion contract in Saudi Arabia, and since Bell has also refused to make the details of this contract public at the current CRTC hearings into its application for a rate increase, will the minister order the CRTC to suspend the current hearings until Bell releases the details of this Saudi Arabian contract which has a direct bearing on the Human Rights Act as well as the arguments for a rate increase?

Hon. Jeanne Sauvé (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, as for the authority of the CRTC to order Bell to produce documents, it is quite clear the CRTC has that authority and that it has ordered Bell to produce the contract. The CRTC has the liberty to decide whether that document will remain public or be made confidential. That is to ensure that the release of such document does not damage Bell with regard to some of its competitors.

As for the other question the hon. member has asked, I am looking into the power which the Commissioner of Human Rights has to call for documents in order to examine them to the end the hon. member has just cited. I share with him the preoccupation that any company in this land should not do anything that is discriminatory toward women.

Mr. Symes: I agree with the minister on the power of the CRTC to request the document. I understand it will not be made public, which will inhibit the intervenors—that is why I asked the minister to take action—as well as the Human Rights Commissioner. Since Bell owes the Government of Canada over $833 million in back taxes, which in effect has been an interest-free loan to the company, will the minister instruct the CRTC to take this financial benefit into consideration with the aim of reducing Bell's inflationary 20 per cent to 28 per cent rate increase?

Mrs. Sauvé: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is suggesting the CRTC is not properly conducting its examination of requests which are made quite openly through the means of public hearings. There is a provision for keeping some of the documents confidential because of the danger that they might help competitors. I think that is a reasonable provision in the law. It is reasonable that the CRTC should be able to assess whether such documents should be released or not. It is in the hands of the CRTC, not Bell. It is not the privilege of Bell to decide whether a document is to be confidential; it is for the CRTC to determine that.

* * *

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

PROPOSED DIVERSION OF KOOTENAY RIVER, B.C.

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the minister of the environment. On two occasions the minister has publicly indicated his opposition to the Kootenay River diversion. Bearing in mind the minister has an opportunity to advance those concerns to his cabinet brethren, will he advise whether he has done so, particularly in the direction of the Minister of Transport who must sign an agreement under the Navigable Waters Act?

Hon. Len Marchand (Minister of State (Environment)): Mr. Speaker, I was expressing a personal opinion when I said I was against the Kootenay River diversion. That is not cabinet policy. I expressed a personal decision after I became a member of the cabinet, because I had expressed a personal position before I was a member of the cabinet that I was against that particular diversion.

● (1452)

The status of the project is this: there is an environmental study being conducted by B.C. Hydro in co-operation with officials of my department. It is expected that this study will be completed some time in 1979. A final decision will then be made on whether to divert the Kootenay or not. It would still be my personal preference that the diversion should not be undertaken.

* * *

TRANSPORT

KOOTENAY RIVER DIVERSION—DECLARATION UNDER NAVIGABLE WATERS ACT

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): A supplementary question to the Minister of Transport. Can the minister advise whether he has as yet been approached by B.C. Hydro or the provincial government to sign a declaration under the Navigable Waters Act which would permit the Kootenay River diversion to go forward?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I would have to check whether an approach of that kind has been made, but I would point out that under the Navigable Waters Act any certificate would only indicate our view on the technical question whether any impediment to navigation was likely to occur such as to prevent the project going forward. It would be neither a positive nor a negative sign with regard to the other issue of whether or not the project is desirable.

AGRICULTURE

BRUCELLOSIS TESTING PROGRAM

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Agriculture arising from the enforced brucellosis testing program. Why is this program not being carried out on the basis of a block system whereby certain townships could be declared free of the disease, as is the case under other procedures, thus allowing the movement and sale of cattle as the disease is eradicated? I should also like to ask the minister how long immunity lasts after a herd has been declared brucellosis free?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Before the program was put into effect, all those concerned with the eradication of this disease were consulted, including cattle breeders associations and provincial departments of agriculture whose staffs are responsible for enforcing the regulations. We do know we are experiencing some difficulty with the program in certain areas, but statistics will show that this year will probably be the best year in our history for dairy cattle exports, even though the problem we have with brucellosis is, in my view, being blown out of proportion.

The figures will also show that our dairy herds are freer of brucellosis than those in the United States, for example. We are getting some complaints, but if the hon. member has any suggestions for making the program work in a better way, I would be glad to hear them.

Mr. Rynard: When vaccination was carried out under the dairy program, provision was made to declare herds free on an area basis along the lines I have suggested. That is why I wondered why a similar system was not being used in this case.

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, we have what we hope will be recognized by the trading nations buying our livestock, especially our beef and dairy cattle, as a system of disease-free areas in Canada. We have already announced these and I will be glad to send a list of them to the hon. member.

* * *

IMMIGRATION

REQUEST FOR EXPULSION OF ALLEGED TERRORIST

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. It concerns the recently revealed information that a Rhodesian known as John Conradie, otherwise known as "Bomber John", a confirmed, self-admitted Rhodesian terrorist, is here in Canada under a ministerial permit. Will the minister inform the House of the circumstances surrounding this case, and state whether the government intends to take action to expel this self-confessed terrorist?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Conradie had been in prison in Rhodesia since 1966 for protesting that government's unilateral declaration of independence. We received representations for his eventual admission into Canada from no less a person than the right hon. member for Prince Albert—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cullen: —and from several academics, including the president of Brock University at that time. In 1973, my predecessor agreed that although Mr. Conradie had been convicted, he would probably issue a ministerial permit if the individual was released from prison. The present president of Brock University, Dr. Erp, reaffirmed that the position of visiting scholar at Brock for up to two years was available to him.

On the basis of the representations we had received, and taking into account the fact that this gentleman had been in prison since 1966, it seemed time to follow the lead of my predecessor and to issue a ministerial permit. I must say I do know when certain recent statements were made but, frankly, I think they were inappropriate.

Mr. Cossitt: As a preface to my supplementary question, I might draw the minister's attention to the fact that Great Britain refused this man entry before he was admitted here. Is the minister aware that Mr. Conradie stated to the press in the last week or so:

We should have blown up one or two of the big downtown department stores and I still think we should have done that. I thought we should have tried to destroy as much property as possible.

How can the presence of such a man be justified in Canada? Does the government plan stricter admission requirements to prohibit the entry of such persons as John Conradie, General Quang, and others?

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, it is all very well to talk about Quang and to be knowledgeable after the fact. We were dealing with a Vietnamese refugee situation at that time. A ministerial permit was, in fact, issued; but when we found out the circumstances it was withdrawn. If Vietnam would take him back, we would put him on the next plane. As far as Mr. Conradie is concerned, the best thing he can do is put a zipper on his lip.

* * *

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

GOVERNMENT POLICY ON PROPOSED DIVERSION OF KOOTENAY RIVER, B.C.

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of State for the Environment a question for clarification. When he told us his opinion with regard to the Kootenay River diversion, was it a personal opinion or was he stating government policy?

Hon. Len Marchand (Minister of State (Environment)): Obviously not, Mr. Speaker, since it was a personal opinion I expressed. I expressed it after I became a member of the cabinet, because as a backbencher I had said I was opposed to the Kootenay diversion. I really cannot change overnight. This question will obviously have to be addressed again once the studies are complete.

Mr. Gillies: Then may I ask the minister who is speaking for the government on this matter of the Kootenay diversion? Who is expressing government policy at this point?

Mr. Marchand: That kind of decision, as I have said, will be made after the studies are completed.

An hon. Member: After the cabinet reshuffle?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

* * *

CRIMINAL CODE

CONSULTATIONS WITH BAR ASSOCIATIONS RESPECTING PROPOSED AMENDMENTS

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Justice with reference to Bills C-51 and C-52, the amendments to the Criminal Code, Bill S-18, before the Standing Committe on Justice and Legal Affairs, and Bill C-42. Does the minister intend to refer these bills, now they have been given first reading, to the Canadian Bar Association, to the various provincial bar associations across the country and to other associations and organizations which have a particular interest in this subject? I ask this question because the minister did mention when they were tabled for first reading, that they were more white papers than proposals to go before the House for second reading.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): I do not have the precise wording of my press statement in front of me now, but when those two bills were introduced for first reading I made it clear they were being introduced so that organizations of the kind that the hon. member talks about would have an opportunity of studying then and commenting on them. I hope those who are interested will comment and make some response before the meeting of the provincial attorneys general which is to be held late in June.

● (1502)

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, do I take it from the minister's answer that before second reading—the amendments to the Criminal Code are substantial—the processes discussed this afternoon with reference to my first question will be followed, so that we can intelligently debate these amendments, particulary when we are dealing with pre-trial procedures and other matters?

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, I would not want to make that precise comment, because the reaction to the bills has been generally favourable. I am receiving a large number of requests that they be proceeded with rather quickly. I agree with the hon. member that there certainly must be time for those interested in the criminal justice system to comment. It may well be that it would be useful to have a second reading debate in the House, but not to deal with this legislation in committee until such time as responses are made.

* * *

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order regarding government business. Today will be an opposition day, and I would appreciate it very much if the government House leader would designate Tuesday, May 16, and Friday, May 19 as allotted days. We have discussed this informally.

If it is possible, would the government House leader be able to tell us now what the government proposes for the balance of this week and into next week? Is it his intention that we stay with the ports bill, Bill C-6, and then move to the ombudsman bill? If that is the case, can the government House leader tell us what the government intends to bring forward following that?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, in reply to the suggestion of the hon. member, it is my intention to designate May 16 and May 19 as allotted days. On Friday, tomorrow, I would like to call Bill C-4, the report stage of the aeronautics bill and, if there is consent, I would like to proceed with the Maritime Code. I understand there has been discussion, and it might be dealt with tomorrow. If business moves very quickly tomorrow, I will call a number of other bills such as Bill S-9, Bill S-3, and Bill S-2. However, notwithstanding the progress which might be made on Friday, it would be my intention to call the tariff bill, Bill C-48, on Monday, and after that the income tax bill for which notice is now on the order paper.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the government House leader for that answer. There is an absence from that list of legislation of the Bank Act, which has been of some considerable interest to us. We have raised the matter in the House. I wonder if that could be dealt with. I understand it is ready in the department.

While I am on my feet, I would like to refer the government House leader to the veterans legislation about which a statement was made yesterday. There is some indication that it would be given some priority. Is that the intention of the government House leader and, if so, when might we see that change to the veterans legislation affecting disabled veterans?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, the bill is now under preparation. I have had talks with the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald), and we hope to bring that bill forward very soon, it is to be hoped next week. The Bank Act is getting some finishing touches, and I hope to be able to make a definite statement on that next week also.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have two questions to put to the government House leader. The first one has to do with the ombudsman bill. Can the minister tell us where it stands on his list?

My second question arises out of the statement of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) expressing appreciation for the co-operation the opposition has shown in getting certain pieces of legislation through. As the minister will agree, an area where that co-operation has been outstanding has been with respect to veterans affairs. We passed the bill regarding prisoners of war compensation quickly. We have given an indication that we will pass very quickly the bill regarding the basic rate of the war disability pension. Now that we have additional time, and now that co-operation has been demonstrated, will the minister discuss with the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald) the possibility of bringing before the House in this session a bill regarding the outstanding issue in veterans affairs, namely, the rule respecting pensions for the widows of veterans?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to raise that point with the Minister of Veterans Affairs. I am not sure what his response will be, but I will raise it.

In connection with the question as to where the ombudsman bill stands, it stands very high on my list, but I would like to deal with the budget bills as quickly as possible. It is because of that desire that I have put these bills ahead of the ports legislation and the ombudsman bill, and I would be in a better position to indicate the order of priorities when we conclude the budget bills.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, before the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen) discusses the matter with the Minister of Veterans Affairs, I invite him to take note of a statement the minister made in the standing committee yesterday to the effect that he and his department are reviewing sympathetically the matter of the 48 per cent rule which applies to the pensions of veterans' widows.

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, would the government House leader tell us when we can expect legislation establishing the new department of fisheries and oceans? This was promised to us. It is a matter of some importance to us in the Atlantic provinces and, indeed, to those on the west coast. It is a matter which is also causing some demoralization within the Department of Fisheries. Why can we not bring in a bill to legalize what has become a de facto situation so that the new department can get on to its organization and on to its very important work?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment (Mr. LeBlanc) has been pressing the same point with me. As in the case of the Bank Act, we have to do some additional finishing up on that bill. I hope it will be possible to deal with it soon, but the principle has already been established, and I understand that a good deal of the transfer of jurisdiction has already been executed through orders in council. However, there is a remaining portion which may require legislative action in order to ensure that a full-fledged department is established.

Mr. Speaker: I have been given two indications of intentions to participate in questions of privilege, one by the Secretary of State (Mr. Roberts) regarding the point raised a few days ago by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert), and one by the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald).

* * *

[Translation]

PRIVILEGE

MR. LAMBERT (BELLECHASSE)—CBC COVERAGE OF SOCIAL CREDIT PARTY CONVENTION IN WINNIPEG

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, last Monday I believe, the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) raised a question of privilege regarding the CBC coverage of the Social Credit Party convention. I contacted the CBC to get a reply to the question that was asked and this is what I was told.

Last August, the CBC informed the various parties that it had modified its policy of automatic and live coverage of leadership conventions, and that in future it would consider several factors in its editorial decisions for such coverage. There are now several factors to be considered, for example the position that the party occupies nationally, the importance of the convention, the political interest that it provokes throughout the country, the impact of the candidates and of the orientation of their platform, as they appeared throughout the leadership race.

The Social Credit Party convention was to be held in June, possibly in the midst of an election. It was pushed ahead to the beginning of May and was therefore rushed. Candidacies were uncertain until the convention was held. The participation of some important candidates was even doubtful. None of the leadership candidates made a Canada-wide tour. The official nomination of some candidates was apparently made only at the convention.

The French services division of the CBC reported the leadership convention in its radio and television news broadcasts, and decided to review the convention in a one hour peak time program on Sunday night, both on radio and on television. The English television network of the CBC decided to broadcast a half hour special on the convention Sunday night. Monday night, Newsmagazine did an interview with the new leader and Mr. Gilles Caouette. Over the weekend, the English radio network aired news bulletins of the convention. CBC reports were comparable to if not better than those of other networks.

[Mr. MacEachen.]

• (1512)

[English]

MR. MACDONALD (EGMONT)—NATIONAL REVENUE—LIST OF CHARITABLE ORGANIZATIONS

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I want to raise a question of privilege which has come to my notice in the last few minutes. It concerns an issue of which Your Honour and many members of the House are well aware and which we have been raising over the last few weeks, namely, the recent memo that went out from National Revenue respecting the political activities of charitable organizations. I am glad the Acting Minister of National Revenue (Miss Bégin) is here, because I think this concerns the rights and privileges of all members of parliament.

Hon. members will recall that a couple of years ago when a similar issue was raised, the then minister, now Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Cullen), was in charge of the department and I asked him at that time whether or not it would be possible to have a complete list of the charitable organizations which were registered as having a special tax status with National Revenue. The minister and his officials made it clear that, while they could not provide the list, there was public access to the list and that an official from my office could go to the department and have a look at the list to see who was registered as having that special tax status.

A few minutes ago I was informed that a representative of my office was informed by the assistant deputy minister of Revenue Canada in charge of legislation that this policy has been changed this year and that they will no longer allow public access to their list of charitable organizations. Apparently their reason is that the list contains confidential information. Even apart from that, the official refused to provide such a list with the confidential information taken out, with the simple comment that it was an unreasonable request.

I find it passing strange, in the light of the fact that there has been great anxiety already generated among the community of more than 36,000 organizations in this country about what is the intent of the government with respect to the memorandum which was circulated, and in light of the fact that every charitable organization, to my knowledge, when it raises money indicates in a public way that it has this tax status. I can only believe that this secrecy is not for the protection of the organizations but in some way for the protection of government officials. I suspect that is the reason why the department has changed the position which existed until this year of allowing public access to the list of those who are registered as having a special tax status with National Revenue. I know it is perhaps not possible for the acting minister today to take action to reverse this very serious decision, but I certainly hope the situation will be cleared up shortly because it affects my rights and privileges and, I am sure, the rights and privileges of every member on both sides of the House.

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the hon. member for his courtesy in taking into consideration the fact that I am acting as interim minister. I would therefore prefer to have a 24 hour delay to inquire into the circumstances surrounding what in fact is not government policy but a telephone message to someone in his own office, not directly to himself. I think that by tomorrow we will have had enough time to examine the question in order to give the pros and cons with full knowledge of the matter.

[English]

MR. BRISCO—ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS—PROPOSED DIVERSION OF KOOTENAY RIVER, B.C.

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. During the question period I directed a question to the Minister of State for the Environment (Mr. Marchand). Subsequently another member of this party addressed a supplementary question to the minister, and on each occasion the minister indicated that his pronouncements during the question period, when we are seeking the official position of the government, represent his personal view only which he held before he became a member of the cabinet and which he still holds as a member of the cabinet.

My question of privilege pertains to the fact that the public pronouncements which the minister made to the press, both at Athalmer and to the public in the community of Creston recently, where the minister was on official government business and where he presented a cheque for $55,000 to the Creston Valley Wildlife Management Authority—something that I certainly appreciate—were made in his official capacity. He met these people in his capacity as minister and never once did he indicate to the public that his opposition to the Kootenay diversion was a personal position. The minister succeeded in getting himself boxed in very successfully by questions from our own member. At the same time, while the minister felt that that uncomfortable box was a laughing matter, I can assure him that the people of Kootenay West, and indeed the people of Okanagan-Kootenay, do not consider the Kootenay River diversion a laughing matter.

The following question arises therefore: can the minister, speaking for the government, provide an answer of the nature that the minister has provided when he stated he is giving a personal opinion and not the official government position during the official proceedings of the House, during the question period? Surely members on this side, in addressing questions to ministers are seeking the official position of the government, not the personal opinion of any minister.

If the minister is not providing his personal opinion, then who from among the ministers is responsible for providing the official government position? Certainly the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment (Mr. LeBlanc) is well aware of the fact that his pronouncements with reference to the MacGregor Diversion, when he was responsible for the Department of the Environment, represented the position of the government, in terms of its opposition to the MacGregor Diversion and the reasons for it, when he spoke both in the House and in the standing committee, and I commend him for it. I respect the minister for putting forward the government's view opposing the diversion. That was the position of both the minister and the department, it was the official position of the government. What we heard today, in response to my question to the minister of State, was not an official pronouncement, unless the minister is prepared to rise in his place and confirm that indeed he made an official pronouncement.

I wonder in what position this puts me, the people in Kootenay West, and members of the House who may subsequently wish to put questions to ministers and who become recipients of personal viewpoints rather than the official position of the government.

Hon Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. In the absence of the Minister of State for the Environment (Mr. Marchand), I should like to make a few brief comments. First of all, I think it was rather unwise of the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Brisco) to suggest that the Minister of State treated the issue as a laughing matter. I think the hon. member, as well as many other members of the House, know that the laughter which occurred was a result of a fairly amusing remark made by one of his Conservative colleagues in the House, and not in relation to the issue at all. But whether or not he knew that, the hon. member for Kootenay West knew that the Minister of State for the Environment does not treat any of these issues as a laughing matter.

Obviously it is possible for a minister to have personal opinions and to have expressed them before he became a member of the cabinet, and then to be in the interesting position of having to discuss that fact. Whether or not the minister referred to his statements as personal statements when he was out in the Kootenays may be a question open to further determination. Very often a minister does say that this is a personal opinion, and it is not carried by the press at all. In any case, obviously a minister may express personal opinions and need not always describe them as such, but has to live with whether or not they accord with government policy or decisions made later on.

In this case government decisions will be taken from time to time as the issue arises, in the case of transport, as questions relating to navigable waters are determined, in the question of the environment, after the appropriate analysis and studies have taken place, and then a governmental decision is taken. I do not think that is impeded in any way by the expression of a personal opinion by either a minister or a backbencher on any side of the House.

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the question of privilege. My contribution will not be long. It seems to me that we are listening to a third theory of ministerial responsibility being enunciated in the House. There is the standard one where there is ministerial solidarity. Then we have heard the business of ministerial abdication where they stand up and blame others for the mistakes for which they should assume responsibility. Now we hear personal views being expressed by a minister in the field of his responsibility, indicating that it is not cabinet policy. Surely this is an intolerable situation. It throws the whole business of government in this country into a state of utter confusion. It must be resolved.

● (1522)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am going by recollection, and of course I would not make a final determination without having the minister make a contribution to the discussion, if he so desires, and checking the exact record. It is my recollection that the minister confirmed today that he had made a certain statement of his own position prior to entry into the cabinet. He confirmed that position today. He did not go on to give a cabinet position. It seems to me he did not state that was in any way in disaccord with the cabinet's position. Simply he said that it was his own position, and that he was not stating a cabinet position at that time. I am still unable to say whether that in any way undermines the theory of ministerial responsibility. I would want to check the exact text of what was said, and particularly the exact text of the question which was put to the minister, and also give the minister an opportunity to state his own position again, in the light of the question of privilege raised.

* * *

POINT OF ORDER

MR. MURTA—TRANSPORT—SHORTAGE OF FERTILIZER IN MANITOBA

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a very short point of order. It deals with the very serious lack of rolling stock to move fertilizer in Manitoba at this critical time. Because my motion under Standing Order 43 was turned down today, because of the crucial situation where fertilizer dealers in Manitoba will be out of fertilizer this week end, and if the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) does not see fit to respond to my point of order, is he able to inform the House, no later than tomorrow, as to the government's intention in terms of taking some of the existing rolling stock and using it for transporting fertilizer over the next few weeks?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, on that point of order I should like to indicate to the hon. member that I would have been glad to have a question on that point. One of the problems regarding the Standing Orders is that if a motion is worded so that it urges the Minister of Transport to take certain vigorous action, and the Minister of Transport has already done so, then there is apt to be some objection on this side to that motion being adopted unanimously and leaving the impression that there is a great deal more to be done.

[Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich).]

The problem in question of the shortage of cars results from some very serious peaking of potash movements all across the country. It is one of which both I and the railroads have taken very serious account. We have done what can be done at this point to attempt to obtain additional cars, and to make sure they are available in an equitable fashion for various destinations throughout the country.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

GRAIN

TABLING OF CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN PREMIER OF ALBERTA AND PRIME MINISTER

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (for the Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have been asked to table, on behalf of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), under Standing Order 41, copies of correspondence in both official languages between Premier Lougheed of Alberta and the Prime Minister concerning Canada's future export grain marketing strategies.

* * *

PETITIONS

REQUEST FOR ACTION TO DEAL WITH OBSCENITY

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the Clerk of the House has laid upon the Table the thirteenth report of the Clerk of Petitions stating that he has examined the petition presented by the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp), and finds that it meets the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

* * *

[Translation]

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 1,198, 1,392 and 1,495.

I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

[Text]

CUSTOMS

Question No. 1,198—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Was an American tourist, Mr. Donald Berven, charged by the RCMP under Section 205 of the Canada Customs Act in July 1977 and, if so, was he fined $8,599.18 and given receipt number B 197635?

2. Was the charge and fine levied because he entered Canada on a two week vacation from New Hampshire without registering his car and mobile trailer with Canada Customs at his point of entry and, if so, is it policy to levy a large fine for such items that will be leaving the country at the end of a vacation?

3. On examination by senior departmental officials was it found that the charges should or could have been laid under Sections 18 and 180 of the Canada Customs Act and whether or not charges should or could have been laid, is the government prepared to have its legal experts examine the matter?

4. What is a complete explanation of all details of the case?

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of National Revenue and the Solicitor General as follows: 1. No (See answer to part 4).

2. Not applicable. (See answer to part 4).

3. See answer to part 4.

4. In August of 1976, Mr. and Mrs. Donald Auby Berven entered Canada at St. Stephen, New Brunswick, as returning Canadians and were allowed to enter all their possessions duty free. In September, 1976, one month later, during a trip to the United States, Mr. Berven purchased a 1973 Airstream travel trailer and a 1976 G.M.C. truck in the United States. In May, 1977, at the conclusion of another visit to the United States, he entered both vehicles into Canada by telling the Canada customs at the border crossing that he was an American tourist visiting Canada. In fact, the Bervens were residents of Canada since August, 1976 and Mr. Berven was gainfully employed in Canada. In view of these facts they were subject to the same customs laws as any other Canadian resident. Thus, the G.M.C. truck and Airstream trailer were seized by R.C.M.P. investigators under section 205 of the Customs Act as being unlawfully imported into Canada. Mr. Berven was not charged under section 205 of Customs Act, but rather, the goods were seized under section 205 of the Customs Act.

On July 19, 1977 the G.M.C. truck and Airstream trailer were released to Mr. Berven, pending final decision, on a deposit of $8,599.18, representing double duty and single taxes. Receipt number B197635 was given.

Mr. Berven, on his own initiative, flew to Ottawa and requested a meeting with members of Revenue Canada on February 14, 1978. After a thorough discussion of the matter, decision was rendered forfeiting $3,153,36 of the deposit and returning the balance of $5,445.82. The amount returned represented the applicable duty and tax since Mr. Berven presented information that the trailer and truck had been returned to the United States and would stay there.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE COMMISSION

Question No. 1,392—Mr. Dionne (Kamouraska):

1. From 1975 to December 31, 1977, did unemployed persons claim unemployment insurance at the Unemployment Insurance Commission's Office in (a) Rivière-du-Loup (b) Lévis and, if so, how many?

2. For the same period, did the Appeal Board receive appeals from claimants of the two offices and, if so, how many and how many decisions were (a) upheld (b) modified?

3. For the same period and the same offices, did officers of the Department of National Revenue (Taxation) make decisions concerning the insurability of employment and, if so, how many and were any modified following an Appeal Court hearing and, if so, how many?

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of Employment and Immigration and National Revenue as follows:

	1975	1976	1977
1. Yes.
(a) Rivière-du-Loup	12,508	12,013	11,649
(b) Lévis	40,946	38,477	31,358
2. Yes.
Rivière-du-Loup
Total heard	284	364	189
(a) Allowed (upheld)	57	105	56
(b) Adjourned (modified)	26	37	23
Lévis
Total heard	598	987	1,195
(a) Allowed (upheld)	110	141	170
(b) Adjourned (modified)	47	128	133
3. See list below.

	Rivière-du-Loup				Lévis
	1975	1976	1977	Total	1975	1976	1977	Total
Ruling requests from Unemployment Insurance Commission to National Revenue, taxation (Quebec district office)	36	55	117	208	212	476	362	1,050
Rulings issued by National Revenue, taxation to Unemployment Insurance Commission: —insurable	21	24	63	108	116	301	248	665
—not insurable (a)	15	31	54	100	96	175	114	385
Appeals to Minister of National Revenue from Unemployment Insurance Commission decisions (a) above	9	12	9	30	64	64	61	189
Minister of National Revenue Determination: —insurable	1	7	3	11	22	33	26	81
—not insurable (b)	8	5	6	19	42	31	35	108
Appeals to umpire from Minister of National Revenue determination (b) above	1	1	2	4	4	3	5	12
Umpire decision: —insurable	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	0
—not insurable	1	1	1	3	4	3	2	9
Umpire appeals pending	0	0	1	1	0	0	3	3

Fisheries

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

Question No. 1,495—Mr. Oberle:

At the time of General Dare's appointment, what RCMP officers were at, or one level below, his level of appointment?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Solicitor General): Mr. M. R. Dare was appointed director general, RCMP security service, (deputy commissioner equivalent) on May 1, 1973. At that time, there were three deputy commissioners and fifteen assistant commissioners on the strength of the force.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The questions enumerated by the parliamentary secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—NECESSITY FOR CONSULTATION ON FISHERY POLICY

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore) moved:

That this House condemns the federal Minister of Fisheries for his failure to consult and co-operate with provincial fisheries ministers and fishermen prior to establishing arbitrary rules and regulations which are harmful to the fishermen, and for his failure to develop a positive policy for the protection and development of the Canadian fishing industry in order to derive maximum advantage for Canadians from the extended jurisdiction.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity on this opposition day to comment on a number of problems presently facing the fishing industry. When looking over recent events which have occurred within the industry, I cannot help but be concerned over the statements and the actions of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment (Mr. LeBlanc) as they relate to this important industry.

It is obvious that Liberal supporters are very much concerned during an election campaign about how fishermen may vote, and then the promises come as thick and as fast as the capelin run off the coast of Newfoundland. However, after the election is over, the promises are soon forgotten. This is obviously Liberal policy. We should always remember that it was the present Prime Minister who called Liberal supporters "idiots" and who said that the political philosophy of the Liberal party is simplicity itself: "say anything, promise anything, think anything, but please put us into power." This scheme has worked very well for the Liberals quite a number of times.

From looking at the polls, it now appears that the electorate are unhappy over the manner in which they have been manipulated. Equally it is obvious that they plan to do something about it, if they are given an opportunity.

We in the Progressive Conservative party are not the only ones concerned over present Liberal fisheries policies. For example, at the recent Liberal policy convention held in Ottawa, between February 24 to February 26, the following resolution was adopted:

That there be co-ordinated development of the fisheries within the regions of Canada.

Even the Liberal party realizes that there is not a comprehensive and co-ordinated fisheries policy in Canada. For this reason, the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment should be censured. The Minister of Fisheries and the Environment appears content to rest upon the laurels of obtaining the 200-mile limit. If one were to believe the Liberal propaganda of the time, the limit should have been implemented at least five years earlier. We believe the attainment of the 200-mile limit was only the first step. Much more needs to be done for the rehabilitation of our fisheries.

At the Liberal policy convention this spring, delegates cried out for a co-ordinated fisheries policy. It is no wonder they did so, especially when one looks at the recent legislative record of the Trudeau government. During the past two sessions of parliament only two bills were introduced and passed pertaining to fisheries. However, one of these, the small craft harbours bill, allows the minister to set unrestricted licence fees for the use of these harbours. My colleagues and I requested that the minister bear in mind the high unemployment and low income levels of Atlantic Canada and to defer any introduction of licence fees for at least five years. However, this reasonable request was howled down and voted down by the Liberal party.

When speaking of the Trudeau legislative record, it is worth noting that we are still waiting for the promised legislation which will create a separate department of fisheries. In February the Liberal policy convention felt that a separate department was imminent. One resolution which passed read as follows:

We applaud the decision of the government to create by an act of parliament a separate department of fisheries, and recommend that the new department have a strong mandate in the management of the fisheries and oceans, with the resources and manpower it requires.

● (1532)

The latter sentence is a point which we have been advocating in this House for years. It is little wonder that many commentators describe the Liberal policy resolutions as being nothing more than direct steals from Conservative policies. As I said before, we are still waiting for this legislation from Pierre the procrastinator. Interestingly enough it was the Trudeau government which in 1970 needlessly ended the existence of the separate Department of Fisheries. And then what happened? During the 1974 election the Prime Minister—I think at that time he was in Digby, Nova Scotia—when he found that the heat was on one of his candidates promised at the time that he would recreate a separate department. Does this sound familiar? Of course after the election the promises were forgotten. That election was 1974, and this is 1978, and still today we are asking, "why has this not been done in this House four years later?"

The promises of this government for a separate department are nothing more than empty promises. An effective fisheries policy requires successful management, and quotas form the basis for the successful management of the 200-mile limit. However, sound quotas rely upon good research. For example, we believe the minister and his scientists overlooked an important fact when establishing the 1977 quotas for capelin and squid.

Fishermen complain about the excessive catches of these species, because they believe they provide the food for the other groundfish in the sea. Of course they do provide food for the cod, which is one of the main fisheries resources that must be restored. Cod in the fishing industry is king, and every effort must be made to restore this particular species. In 1976 the quotas on capelin and squid were 480,000 tons and 99,000 tons respectively. In 1977 they were increased to 500,000 tons and 104,000 tons respectively.

By permitting excessive catches of capelin and squid by foreign fleets, the minister is contributing to the continued decline of our over-all fishing stock because many of our important fish stocks will eat their own if capelin and squid are not available. Yet, only a week or two ago in committee when we raised the question about quotas on squid and their availability, the scientists and representatives from the minister's department said that they do not know if squid live longer than a year and a half, or two years. They admitted in committee that they really know very little about the life cycles of these two important fish species that feed the other fish.

More scientific research is necessary. We need to know what kind of changes in abundance and distribution occur as a result of natural environmental factors. We need to know the interdependence between fish stocks, the distribution of the stocks both vertically and horizontally at any given time, and when and where various fish species spawn. The minister has admitted in his speeches that we are not fully geared up in terms of research for a 200-mile zone. More trained people, more research vessels, and more laboratories are needed. I do not know of any place in the world where he has a better opportunity to get these things.

We have a million people unemployed. We have shipbuilders and scientists looking for work, and why does he not get on with the job? Despite his admission, the research and management budget for the Department of Fisheries and the Environment was increased by only 10 per cent to $21 million, and scientific manpower will be reduced by 16 for the budget year 1978-79.

The minister shakes his head. I stand to be corrected, because they are making alterations every day of the week. They have read the Gallup polls, and they know they are on the skids. They will now be digging into any pot they can find in order to raise some funds and establish some new programs. Some of the statistics which I am reporting and which come from the estimates books and other sources may be inaccurate in light of recent changes they have made in an effort to please fishermen—"please come back to the fold, please vote for us and please keep us in power."

This minister's attitude and the Liberal government's negative attitude to scientific research, I submit do not augur well for the future. This government has allowed expenditures to the foreign investment review agency to increase by 34.8 per cent and expenditures to the National Arts Centre to increase by 17.8 per cent. We are now subsidizing this organization for $10.4 million annually just "to see the show". Expenditures to the CBC have been increased by 11.8 per cent to $522 million, $10 million a week. This same government, however, cannot find sufficient additional money to carry out fisheries research.

We on this side believe that more fisheries research is essential for the future prosperity of the fisheries. We believe more money should be made available for research, and cutbacks in the above mentioned areas could provide these moneys. This viewpoint was also shared by the industry, for it was in evidence recently in the discussions held at the fisheries council meetings in Quebec.

Our commercial fish landings of 1,136,000 tons are less than one tenth of those of the leading producer of food from water, namely, Japan, which landed something like 10,620,000 tons. I am speaking from memory now and the minister can correct me, but I think we are sixteenth among the world's nations in so far as catching capability is concerned. Our catch represents approximately 2 per cent of world fisheries production. While these comparisons are interesting, they do not adequately describe the importance to Canada of food from water. It is more meaningful to say that many coastal regions are completely dependent on the commercial fisheries. It is more meaningful to say that a large scale production of a great variety of aquatic foods helps to meet the demand for protein in human diets.

We are seeing a shift of emphasis at present away from competitive exploitation of wild resources toward intensively managed fisheries resources. I believe that this gradual shift will continue, and in the long term aquaculture will play an ever-increasing role in the growth of fisheries. At present world production of fisheries from wild resources appears to be levelling off at about 70 million tons, while aquaculture, at six million tons, is still growing. Aquaculture is very important in many areas of Canada, and especially important to my colleague, the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay), who has told me that scallop fishermen in the Northumberland

Straits have some definite ideas for aquaculture development, if only the minister and his officials would consult and listen to them.

I believe that in the long run world trends in aquaculture will be followed in Canada, but to help bring this about we need a shift in our scientific program. Why, for example, should our scientific studies simply be a repeat of studies carried out by other countries? Surely, some effort should be made to have a quarterly, bi-annual, or annual scientific periodical prepared in which our scientific information on ocean studies and fisheries resources could be exchanged with friendly, co-operating nations.

To ensure that long-term research is not sacrificed for short-term needs, Canada needs a separate identity for fisheries research. We have had the Fisheries Research Board of Canada in operation for something like 75 years. I submit that now that we have taken over an area of the continental shelf one-third the size of Canada, the Fisheries Research Board and its activities must be reorganized and strengthened, and it should be encouraged to exchange fisheries data and facts with our friends internationally. Our bilateral agreements—I am sure the minister is well aware of this—cover this point, but I ask the minister are these agreements working? The machinery is there to hold scientific consultations with countries like Norway, Russia, Japan, Poland, Spain, and Portugal, to name but a few, but are these agreements operative?

I wish to turn now to another aspect of the Canadian fishing industry, namely, fleet development. I believe if we are to take full advantage of quota increases we need to start now on a program of rebuilding the Canadian fishing fleet. In the past, foreign fishing fleets often outfished Canadian vessels because of their modern equipment. In contrast, the newest vessels in the Canadian fleet are eight to nine years old, if we exclude the two scallop draggers that were launched only last week in Pictou.

Rebuilding the fleet was also a topic of discussion at the recent Liberal policy convention. Two resolutions were passed which urged, and I quote:

> That the government direct financial assistance to expand the fishing industry, and
>
> That the government participate in the program to make funding available for the building of new inshore fishing vessels.

● (1542)

It will be interesting to see whether pressure from the Liberal rank and file will have any more impact or effect on the minister than the arguments of the Atlantic premiers and the fishing industry, and the arguments of the fishermen themselves. Obviously these well-meaning Atlantic Canada Liberals fired up the minister because he decided to tell them where they could go. Only four days after the Liberal convention, the minister, in a speech to the Herring Fishermens Marketing Cooperative, on March 2, in Saint John, New Brunswick, stated among other things:

> The people who want to double the fleet are well meaning, they have just failed to examine the facts.

[Mr. Crouse.]

He also said that fleet expansion is only one of the mixed up ideas in the air. The minister has obviously picked up some rather bad habits from his leader, a leader who said to paraphrase him, that when members of parliament are five feet away from Parliament Hill they are nobodies. Obviously the Minister of Fisheries believes that when Liberal delegates are away from Ottawa they are nobodies and have mixed up ideas.

The minister's indifference not only applies to Liberal convention delegates, the so-called grass roots of his party, but applies as well to anyone who dares oppose him and his policies.

On April 26 the Halifax Chronicle-Herald carried a screaming headline on the front page—"Nova Scotia Has No Say In Policy", and the article read in part as follows;

> The federal fisheries department has not honoured its pledge to seek more consultation and co-operation with the provincial fisheries department and local fishermen, fisheries minister Dr. Dan Reid said Tuesday.

Two days later the same Liberal provincial fisheries minister moved a resolution in the Nova Scotia legislature condemning the undue and harsh federal fisheries department regulations that were imposed, without consultation, on Nova Scotia fishermen. Finally, when these representations were ignored by the federal minister, Premier Gerald Regan, Canada's most western Liberal premier, sent a telegram to the Prime Minister protesting the arbitrary actions of the minister in the strongest possible terms. It is my understanding that the Prime Minister invited Mr. Regan to come to Ottawa to sit down with him and the Minister of Fisheries. It is also my understanding that Premier Regan told him where he could go, and it was not to Ottawa.

Last Friday we noticed that the usually genial minister was absent from his seat. He was dragged haltingly, grudgingly, belatedly, screaming down to Halifax to meet with Premier Regan where he finally agreed—

Mr. LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent): That's not true.

Mr. Crouse: The minister said that is not true. He had better argue that one with the press because there is a picture of him smiling with Premier Regan, on the front page of the Halifax Chronicle-Herald. All is sweetness and light; all is honey and roses. The minister finally agreed to review his arbitrary regulations.

The minister cannot say he was uninformed of the fishermen's concerns. I and my colleagues in this House raised the matter on numerous occasions, and time and time again in committee. On April 28 at page 4971 of Hansard my question is recorded. I simply asked the minister to consult, rather than confront, Canada's fishermen. His response is a classic of arrogance and indifference. I could hardly believe my ears. The minister replied:

> As for the complaint of the minister from Nova Scotia, I really must say that we cannot have negotiations with fishermen's groups, with processing groups and with provincial governments and then try to synchronize all of these every time we have to make a management decision. It is obvious that in the case of the management of the stocks the federal government, which is responsible—and, by the way, which has to carry the can when there is a disaster—will continue to assume that responsibility, even if it means that at times provincial ministers are not satisfied.

So much for consultation. What colossal gall! This is nothing more than jackbooted, bully-boy, dictatorial tactics. It is "Alice in Wonderland" thinking. It is as if they say, "Everything we say, or order, or do, is right because we say it is right, and any one of you fellows who disagrees with us is nothing more than a separatist." That is what we get from the other side these days.

This minister and this government should know, but they have obviously forgotten, the primary rules and purpose of democracy. They have forgotten that they were elected to serve their fellowman—not elected to enslave him.

It was not only the premier of Nova Scotia who had to wire this minister. On May 9, Premier Bennett of British Columbia wired the Prime Minister and asked him to get with it through his Minister of Fisheries and help ease some of the problems on the west coast. This minister has consistently opposed the rebuilding of the Canadian fishing fleet until quotas or stocks have fully recovered. He has stated in his speeches that a rebuilding program would put pressure on him to increase quotas prematurely. I say this need not happen if it were the Canadian share of the over-all quota which was increased at the expense of the foreign share and not an increase in the over-all quota. After all, Mr. Speaker, it was the minister who said that the foreign fleets would only be allowed to catch those fish which are "surplus to our needs".

Mr. LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent): That is right.

Mr. Crouse: The minister says that is right. I say to him that by not building now the result will be the foreign fleets will make the greatest headway in future quota allocations.

I sometimes wonder if the right hand in this department knows what the left hand is doing. The minister's views on rebuilding the fleet are not shared, for example, by the federal Atlantic regional director general of the fisheries and marine service, Mr. Douglas Johnson. Last August when addressing over 150 delegates attending the Atlantic fisheries technological conference in Halifax, Mr. Johnson is reported as stating that the development of non-traditional fishing of such species as squid and silver hake will generate hundreds of onshore and offshore jobs in the Atlantic region. When making that statement Mr. Johnson knew that these soft species of fish can only be caught with freezer trawlers. The minister's views on freezer trawlers are not shared by Mr. Eric Nowe, business agent for over 1,000 Nova Scotia fishermen, who stated on Saturday, April 29, that the province's fishery will go nowhere unless it expands into freezer trawler fishing of non-traditional species.

I believe we need to develop a Canadian capability in new fish species, otherwise these species will always be surplus to our needs, available only to foreigners, and our people will continue to be unemployed. I believe that within the next five years we need a minimum of five freezer trawlers with the capability of catching and freezing species such as silver hake, round nosed grenadiers, Argentine, squid, capelin, and offshore mackerel, which must be frozen as quickly as possible upon removal from the sea. Practically all of these species are presently being given away by this Liberal government under bilateral agreements as surplus to our needs.

The minister shakes his head. He should get together with his own officials. I raised this question in committee only last week. I wonder how many members of this House are aware of what we are talking about in weight? In reply to my question, Dr. May, director general of resource services, stated that Canadians have been allocated a quota on the Scotian Shelf of silver hake of 17,200 metric tonnes for 1977, which he admitted is a substantial amount in light of the fact that catches of this fish are almost zero. Those are his words. If the minister does not like them, he can argue with his own officials. We have the same quota for 1978, and without a Canadian fleet of freezer trawlers our catch will again be zero. Dr. May also stated we have a quota of 1,000 tonnes of round nosed grenadier, a quota of 25,000 tonnes of squid, and an allocation of 60,000 tonnes of capelin. Anyone familiar with the fishing industry knows that in these figures lies a whole new industry for Atlantic Canada.

Dr. May went on to say that the difficulty in acquiring a capacity to exploit these underexploited species is the presssure such an operation will put on the fishing of more traditional stocks. What seems to be ignored is the fact that whenever we bring in foreign freezer trawlers under any arrangement in an effort to take some of these under-utilized species, we automatically put fishing pressure on the more traditional species, which appears to me to be a penny wise and pound foolish fisheries policy. The quotas are there; they are allocated to Canada, so it only makes common sense to build at least a few freezer trawlers in order to capitalize on this resource.

• (1552)

The foreign fleets are obviously not as keen on conserving our fish stocks as is the Minister of Fisheries. As he is well aware, there are rumours of "juggling" quotas within our 200-mile limit. There is also an apparent escalation of fishing effort just outside the 200-mile limit by countries which may be flying flags of convenience.

There are reports of Mexican, Venezuelan, and possibly Spanish flags in evidence just on the fringe of our 200-mile zone, and their operations may well not be in accordance with rules laid down by the International Commission for North Atlantic Fisheries prior to the implementation of NAFO, the organization which replaced ICNAF.

We must ask ourselves what this new threat does to fish stocks that cross over the 200-mile zone and why we are so reticent in providing new job opportunities in the fisheries for Canadians. According to all reports, many people in Atlantic Canada are still looking for work. In April the seasonally adjusted figure for the Atlantic area was 13.2 per cent. I submit that construction of some freezer trawlers would provide meaningful employment, ashore and afloat, for some of these people.

The minister has pointed out that the government does have a fishing vessel subsidy program for new vessel construction and refits. However, the budget for this program has remained constant over the past several years, while inflation has sent vessel costs skyward. Clearly, the funding is inadequate. That is why we have proposed the establishment of a fisheries development fund from which grants and loans would be made available for ship refits as well as for new vessel construction by the inshore fleet or for freezer trawlers.

On shore, this fund could provide assistance for the construction of freezers or holding depots for fish. By being able to freeze more fish, processing plants could operate year round, providing needed employment in our maritime regions.

It is obvious, when looking at the 1977 landings, that steps must be taken immediately to capitalize on all our fisheries resources. According to preliminary statistics for 1977, and if these are not correct I hope the minister will update them, fish landings showed a tremendous dip from 1976. For Canada as a whole, fish landings dropped by 37 per cent, from 2.4 billion pounds in 1976 to 1.7 billion in 1977.

In yet another field, the boundary problems on both coasts are yet to be resolved. On Georges Bank, we urged the government to consider seriously a joint management scheme with the United States. The Atlantic premiers and New England governors agreed to such a scheme in June, 1977, but unfortunately to date this matter is unresolved.

In still another area, if fishermen are to benefit from increased catches, our marketing efforts have to improve. We should and we can expand our markets in other world areas, specifically in Europe and Japan. The Japanese are anxious to buy more fish since they have lost vast areas in which they formerly fished prior to the extension of the 200-mile limit. Mitsunori Yoshida, a representative of Japanese fisheries, says the Canadian fishery offers a great hope for his countrymen who annually consume ten million metric tonnes of seafood. This offers a tremendous challenge to Canadian entrepreneurs.

It must be obvious from what I have said that I believe there are great opportunities being offered today by the fishing industry. However, it is obvious, I also believe, that in order for the industry to achieve its full potential there must be clear-cut, long range government policies which will permit the individual fisherman, the entrepreneur, and the private sector to plan properly for its development.

I have stated a number of important areas where I believe government policies are incorrect, unclear or non-existent. As a result of this situation there is a feeling of inertia and uncertainty throughout the entire industry which has significantly diminished the ability of the private sector to plan ahead, and to secure the benefits which should be available to stimulate the Atlantic economy.

We on this side believe that control over the fishing industry must be retained by the federal government. However, in carrying out the many functions that go with this responsibility, such as establishing the total allowable catch, the allocations for the inshore fishermen, the offshore fishermen and foreign vessels, the issuing of fishing licences, and assistance in rebuilding the fleet, to name but a few functions, there is no reason whatever for the lack of consultation with the provinces on these matters which have a vital impact on their local economy and their way of life.

The federal government must assume an important role in the over-all development of the Canadian fishing industry. However, the industry is like a diamond, with many facets, It has many aspects whose development can best be carried out by the private sector. While I believe the government should improve its surveillance and coastguard capabilities, I do not believe, as a supporter of free enterprise, that the government should own or operate processing, handling, or cold storage facilities.

Government should not become engaged directly in marketing fish products or in the operation of commercial fishing vessels. These activities should remain—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired. The House may be disposed to let the hon. member continue beyond his time. Is there consent for the hon. member to continue his remarks?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Crouse: I thank the House. I shall endeavour to finish within a few minutes.

I believe these activities should remain with the private sector, the individual fishermen or fishermen's organizations, or co-operatives or private companies incorporated to fill this particular role. When the minister states that he and his government intend to play more than a supportive role in these fields, he simply compounds the uncertainty created by his own government's lack of policy.

What the fishermen and the industry are crying out for today is a clear statement that the government does not intend to intervene in the areas which I mentioned and that it will stick primarily to its support role.

A supporting role should not only cover a policy of investment allowances or tax remission when freezer trawlers are built, but the Income Tax Act should be used to stimulate a policy of fleet replacement. Some of our shipyards are already closed and the valuable skills of the shipbuilders, once lost, are not easily replaced. So that our inshore, as well as our offshore fishermen can plan ahead, we need a policy for licensing inshore and offshore vessels which will maintain some balance in the catching capacities of these two segments of the industry.

In areas where there are definite signs that the inshore fleet is growing, where there are father and son teams, and where the small local communities are almost entirely dependent on the fishery, policy must be established which will ensure that the opportunities for growth in those areas are recognized.

This government should realize that equipment used at sea, on salt water, deteriorates very quickly. Fishermen should therefore be permitted not only a regular write-off of ships and equipment, but a special allowance which could be used towards the cost of replacement. If this policy were followed, the industry could generate a much larger amount of the capital required for fleet replacement and it would be less difficult to secure investors throughout Atlantic Canada for the construction of inshore and offshore ships.

Since the present minister and this government have not come forward with any progressive policies along the lines I have mentioned, I have moved, seconded by the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro):

That this House condemns the federal Minister of Fisheries for his failure to consult and co-operate with provincial fisheries ministers and fishermen prior to establishing arbitrary rules and regulations which are harmful to the fishermen, and for his failure to develop a positive policy for the protection and development of the Canadian fishing industry in order to derive maximum advantage for Canadians from the extended jurisdiction.

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and the Environment): Mr. Speaker, one of the difficulties in responding to the remarks of the hon. member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse) is that he persists in repeating some of the misinformation or misunderstanding which I have tried to correct during question period. Either he does not read, or does not choose to read the answers. A case in point is on the question of freezer trawlers. I made it clear to him, no later than yesterday, that I would be quite willing to look at licences for freezer trawlers if proposals were made covering only under-utilized species but did not expand the existing fleet and the existing pressure on the stocks.

● (1602)

The hon. member also chooses to ignore the research program we put into effect in preparation of the 200-mile zone, probably the most extensive of any country of a size comparable to that of Canada, indeed, superior to programs of countries whose area is much larger. He continues to spread scare stories to the effect there is total disorder and chaos outside 200 miles. He refuses to recognize it is due to extraordinary efforts on the part of my officials and of ministers involved that we have succeeded in obtaining recognition of Canada's special interests outside of 200 miles.

I could go into such questions as capelin quotas. The hon. member gave the figures only for the two most recent years forgetting, of course, to give the figures which show a dramatic reduction in the catch of capelin over the last five years. Recognizing that the supply of cod has dramatically increased, there is obviously a need to conserve the food which they utilize, capelin. This becomes a high priority.

As for my meeting with Premier Regan, the actual picture belies the "screaming and kicking" image which the hon. member used. I said, in fact, that I was ready to meet the premier or any of the ministers he might assign for a meeting, but it would have to take place in Ottawa because I was held here by cabinet meetings on Tuesday and Thursday of last week. Alternatively, on my way to the great Liberal convention in Fredericton I would be happy to go to Halifax. This I did, and it was a very productive meeting. That is reality, not press speculation.

The hon. member opposite has placed a motion before us which takes me to task for my so-called failure to consult and co-operate with provincial fisheries ministers and fishermen. If I have failed to do either, the hon. member from South Shore and myself are using different dictionaries.

To my mind, consultation with provincial ministers of fisheries is precisely what took place last Friday when I met with the premier and with the fisheries minister of Nova Scotia in an effort to find an equitable solution to the dilemma facing Digby scallop fishermen. Consultation is the precise purpose of the meetings of the Offshore Ground Fishery Advisory Committee which are going on right now in Halifax. That committee is made up of senior representatives of the provincial fisheries departments concerned, senior management of the federal department, representatives of fishermen's associations and the industry. Consultation is the reason I shall not be able to stay in the House throughout today's debate, since I am committed to meeting with the British Columbia Wildlife Federation and hearing the views of the federation at its annual meeting in Chilliwack. I can assure the House that neither of these two examples was conveniently arranged to coincide with the present debate and provide me with an easy answer to the hon. member's charges. They show that the mechanisms for consultation are not only in place but are being utilized.

I could give many more examples which burst the bubble of the motion placed before us, but I shall not ask the indulgence of the House while I go through the list. It would take up my allotted time, and more. Instead, I wish, with your permission, to table documents which outline those mechanism for consultation and co-operation—some 28 pages for consultation in Canada alone, including, of course, examples of the types of meetings in which I have been engaged over the months.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the House give unanimous consent for the minister to table the documents to which he has referred?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. McGrath: We would prefer to have the minister with us for the whole of the debate, but that is second best.

Mr. LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent): Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for allowing these facts to be put on the record. They are important. There are many mechanisms for consultation which are available affecting provincial governments, various sectors of the industry, processors, fishermen, and other interested parties.

As I have said and documented, Mr. Speaker, consultation between all aspects of the fishing industry is an ongoing and valued aspect of the management of this nation's fishery by this government. Not only are we engaging in consultation but we are making sure that the department is as close as possible to the fishermen.

I wish to touch briefly on the degree of decentralization of the fisheries management of the regions. Since I assumed responsibility for the fisheries in 1974, my department has moved increasingly toward further delegation of authority for fisheries management to regional fisheries. I am proud to point out with respect to the fisheries component of the department that more than 94 per cent of the personnel work in areas outside the national capital region. The Treasury Board task force on decentralization indicates that this is one of the most decentralized organizations in the federal government. Not only have we decentralized our personnel, we have given them the necessary authority to take decisions and to react to problems on the spot.

In the last five years we have established regional directors-general in six major Canadian fisheries regions. These positions are staffed by competent senior executives who are in close touch with the fishing industry. Reporting to them in many locations are area managers who, again, are given responsibility for taking local decisions.

I am personally very proud of another decentralization measure which I instituted. It is the appointment of community service officers who live and work in fishing villages. These officers work closely with fishermen interpreting federal fisheries policy and regulations, helping them cut through red tape and, equally important, feeding in their point of view. I think these are all examples of effective consultation.

But in accepting and encouraging the consultative process I must also keep in mind another truth, that is, the reality that consultation is no guarantee for unanimity. We might as well resign ourselves to the fact that there will always be competing interests and objectives. The federal authority for fisheries is the clearing house for these divergent views, the mediator for conflicting opinion and, ultimately, the decision maker. The federal authority also carries the can if things go wrong, and I did not hear the provinces yelling too loudly to join in when the going was rough. Decisions have to be made somewhere, by someone, and I, sir, not the hon. member opposite nor the president of a provincial fishermen's association, nor even a provincial minister of fisheries, have to make those decisions. And I have to answer for those decisions in this very House. The constitution clearly places that responsibility in my hands and I believe, without reflection on my person, that this responsibility is placed as it should be.

As all members of the House are aware, a great deal of time and energy is spent in resolving boundary and quota disputes between ourselves and our neighbours to the south. I am frankly less eager to see that same time and energy being expended at the provincial level.

If fish grew roots I would be willing to give a fair shake to the argument some provinces are currently expounding that they should have a greater role in decision-making affecting fisheries management. Fish, Mr. Speaker, are not trees. And for the converse reason, forestry is not a federal responsibility. Some stock, for example the Atlantic salmon, migrate past five provinces. If we were to hand those five provinces five knives—or perhaps I should say five fishing poles—to divide up that resource, I am afraid their five hooks might end up in each other's eyes.

There can be no movement from the premise that the common property of the living resources of the sea requires federal management. That does not preclude, and the documents I have tabled prove we have not precluded, the important role of the provinces in working with the federal government or their role in relation to the processing industry, in education and training for fisheries, and in matters such as providing good roads and water supplies to serve the fish plants.

● (1612)

An encouraging, positive step in that vein is the increased recognition of fisheries in some recent provincial budgets. In addition, shared optimism toward the future of the fisheries appeared clearly at the first ministers' economic conference in February where, for the first time, fisheries was included among the sectors of the economy to be discussed and became publicly identified as a major and growing sector of the economy.

This same confidence is also evident in the decision of this government to restore fisheries to its rightful place as a separate government department, a move, I am pleased to note, which was greeted enthusiastically by hon. members opposite. I hope, now that that other decision has been taken, we can move diligently to bring forward the legislation.

Let me touch for a moment on just what it is we have to be enthusiastic about. The fishery today represents a billion dollar industry which in the last four years has increased its production value by 55 per cent, increased its export value by 65 per cent, and taken control of 630,000 square miles of resources, which means it can double its supply of raw material. Today's fisherman is earning an income 50 per cent higher, in real terms, than he could ten years ago.

We are at last approaching the day when we can say that Canada's oldest industry is one of its best. An industry formerly fraught with instability and low return can, if we sensibly and carefully develop the management regime to reap the best benefit from extended jurisdiction, become one of the mainstays of this nation's economy. We must, however, not be blinded by this bright future before us. We must not forget the lessons learned from past mistakes. Time and time again high hopes, messages of promises and zealous enthusiasm, have seduced us into grand failures. This is what we must avoid in fisheries. No one wants to add the 200-mile zone to the list of broken hopes.

There is no doubt in my mind that the sure way to shatter that hope is not to have a national approach in developing policies and management of a national resource. We will only avoid discord, costly collisions and fragmentation of effort, by a common acceptance and sensitivity to a goal which is wider than provincial boundaries and local considerations.

I have to say that the so-called current difficulty with the provinces is much more evident in reading newspapers and listening to the hon. member for South Shore and the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay) than it is in my personal dealings with my provincial colleagues or with fishermen.

Mr. McCain: You don't deal with them.

Mr. LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent): The cries we are hearing today for increasing provincial responsibility for fisheries management were not heard when prospects for the industry were bleak. This is really a case where victory has many fathers, and defeat is an orphan.

Our final goal, which must not be lost sight of, is simple. It is to make fishing a profession which will be as attractive to the next generation as it is starting to be to our own. It is to create a self-sustaining industry which can give to its fishermen the benefits enjoyed by all other organized professions in our society, which is security of income and security of employment. It is to give the shareholders of the companies involved a reasonable expectation of return on their investment and, foremost, to give the coastal communities—the small coastal communities—in whose name we argued for the 200-mile zone, the assurance that they will be served first.

We must assure them that their needs will be met first and that the right of the many will not be sacrificed for the privilege of the few. There are, by the way, some sure-fire ways of ensuring that the inshore fisherman, who deserves the most from extended jurisdiction, is going to get the least. Let us look, for example, at the much touted plans for fleet expansion. No doubt, to handle the increased ground fish on the Atlantic coast we will have to have replacements for some of the aging sectors of the fleet, and eventually, with stocks recovering, perhaps some expansion, but I do not see the need for panic button expansion. Between 1959 and 1974 the tonnage of larger Atlantic vessels over 50 gross tons multiplied by five, that is, increased by 500 per cent. The Atlantic catch of all species went up only about 10 per cent. The little old fleet of the 1950s was catching almost the same amount of fish because there were more fish to catch.

The present ground fish fleet of larger vessels has the capacity to take half again its present catch and provide better incomes, if we increase the number of fish in the water and if we increase the catch rates. If we do it the other way around, that is, increase the fleet first, we are like a man looking over his exhausted woodlot who, instead of planting more trees, is spending his money on more chain saws to cut the shrubs.

There are opportunities for expansion in fishing capelin, silver hake, Argentine, and grenadier, the so-called under-utilized species. Federal subsidy and licensing policies are geared to encourage diversification into these species, but I can only reiterate what I told the hon. member for South Shore yesterday in this chamber, and that is that the economics of fishing these species seem to attract the Canadian industry about as much as fishing for sun fish or sea cucumbers. The day may come for silver hake and the like, as it came for the lobster we once used to fertilize our fields. In fact there are some signs that we can develop under-utilized species, as we have done with squid for the past couple of years, but the fact is that my desk is not overloaded with applications for licences—which I would grant—to catch those underutilized species which our industry has not always found economic to catch.

I know that some people, mostly from outside the fishing industry itself, are impatient with the cautious federal approach to fleet expansion, but have reasons for this approach. We have bitter memories of disasters as a result of over-hasty developments, and I cite herring on both coasts as an example. There are also good examples of fleet development which resulted from private initiative working in a good framework. The salmon fleet and the herring fleet on the west coast are good examples of organized and well disciplined development.

I might add with regard to the progress we are seeing in the 200-mile zone that we have a dramatic salmon enhancement program. This program will double the present level of the catch on the west coast. It gained cabinet approval because it promised money and profits for Canada and for it fishermen, plant workers, and the industry in general. These profits have been based on holding the line on over-expansion in fleets or over-expansion in processing to avoid dissipating the gains that were made.

The simple argument against holus-bolus expansion of our fleet is to examine what improved catch rates on our existing fishing vessels will mean for fishermen. They are who we are here to serve, and I see no faster road to disaster for them than to forget the very simple rule of thumb that biology cannot keep up with technology and that the wealth of the oceans cannot yet match the greed of man.

I have made my position very clear on many occasions. We have before us the opportunity to become one of the world's largest exporters of fish products by value, or the owner of the largest fish warehouses in the world. That is one of the reasons we attach great importance to marketing. We have to recognize that Canadians fish for dollars rather than for food supplies. The extension of fisheries jurisdiction by Canada and many other nations has brought major structural changes in world markets, and Canada's need for new and expanded markets, both for traditional and non-traditional species, clearly necessitates national policies and initiatives.

I want to take this opportunity to commend the formation of the Canadian Association of Fish Exporters, which will become known as CAFE, and of the British Columbia Seafoods Group.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the minister would allow me to ask a question on the matter which he has just covered. Would he mind if I asked a question now, or would he prefer me to wait?

● (1622)

Mr. LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent): I would prefer it if the hon. member would put his question at the conclusion of my remarks, although I am in the hands of the House. But if he does not object, I would prefer him to put his question at the end.

As I was saying, I commend the creation of an association of processors in a marketing organization, and I expressed the same satisfaction with the creation of the west coast group. The more market intelligence, promotion, and development I see, the more positive I will be about the future of this industry. The federal government has helped to instigate CAFE, and to see the positive results of its marketing effort will be most reassuring. But our interest does not stop there. We will keep an eye on this organization to see where we can assist it. It may be that eventually we will ask parliament to help it, as other nations have helped their marketing organization, with a legal framework.

There is just not enough time for me to touch on all the examples that are available to show the extent of the federal government's involvement in this industry. Such an overview would quickly and effectively dispel any truth there is in the words contained in the motion which prompted this debate, that there is not a positive policy for the protection and development of the Canadian fishing industry to derive maxium advantage for Canadians from the extended jurisdiction.

Let us look at some of the facts. In 1974 Canada took 34 per cent of all fish caught off her Atlantic coast. In 1978 Canada has 53 per cent of the total allowable catch, and most of the remainder is non-traditional species, such as capelin.

In 1974 Canada took 34 per cent of traditional groundfish, such as cod and haddock. That figure has risen to 69 per cent of the total allowable catch in 1978 inside and outside the 200-mile zone. When we allow for allocations to the United States and the French islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon, and for allocations of stock either exclusively beyond 200 miles or straddling the boundary, foreign nations have only 13 per cent of the traditional groundfish, and those allocations are almost entirely in the northern areas.

I think I must inject some realism into what has already been said by the hon. member for South Shore, and no doubt what will be said by other opposition members as this debate continues.

We must face the future of the fishing industry with all our expectations in line with our opportunities. There must be a balance between the vested interested within and between provinces. I think I have been very tolerant amidst the swirl of misinformation and opportunistic public statements which have been coming at me and my department over the past months.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. It is a small point of order. The minister has just been giving figures for 1978. It is my impression that we are now at May 11, 1978. I wonder how he can produce figures for 1978 at this point in the year.

Mr. LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent): I am afraid I did not quite understand the hon. member's question. The allocation between nations, between fleet types, etc., are set a year in advance in the fishing plan which was triggered on January 1, 1978. I will check in case I misinformed the hon. member and I will obviously put the facts on the record.

Perhaps the hon. member for South Shore has done me a favour by presenting his motion today, thus giving me the opportunity to set the record straight.

I need only turn to the controversy over the seal harvest to cite an example of where the tide was turned on misinformation. I can only say to those who would see themselves as the Brian Davies of the Atlantic fisheries, that they should be prepared to have their arguments stand up to close scrutiny.

I am willing to consult, as I indicated before. I think the paper I have tabled showed that I am willing to consult. I am consulting, but I ask that those with whom I deal understand the federal position. Because fish laugh at borders, federal fisheries must cross those borders. When many interests are at play, being responsible to all means you can never satisfy all. Trying to do so—trying to tell everyone what they want to hear, and granting every request—would be the end of our hopes for management of the fisheries.

Sometimes the decision that is best for all is bitter to the few; that is sad but is unavoidable. The lesson of history is that fisheries management never takes care of itself; it needs management that makes sense on an over-all level. To the provincial spokesman arguing for more jurisdiction over fishing, I can answer that I will not abdicate lightly the power given by the constitution, the same power that in the last four years enabled the federal government to take such strong action in getting the 200 mile limit and in rescuing and reinvigorating major sectors of the industry.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent): I might mention also the attitude I sometimes encounter, that consultation with the provinces should mean automatic adoption of their views, even when their individual views differ, for example, the jealous claims to reserve all the fish migrating near a province for that province, a claim that flies in the face of every principle of national unity or of sensible management of the fishing industry.

Recently I read in the Financial Post someone's remark that fish did not come from Ottawa, it came from God. I do not know what fisheries act applies up there, but I do know my responsibility as custodian of the resources of the seas on behalf of the people of Canada, and I intend to maintain clearly the lines of responsibility. The fish belong to the people of Canada and are managed and allocated on their behalf by a department responsible to this parliament. The fishermen are licensed to catch the fish. I see them as being free to sell fish with a minimum of constraint and a maximum of organization to protect their interests, but I see constraints, for example, as no wholesale selling over the side without some processing in Canada. I see the processors as making their own decisions as to processing the raw material they bought and selling it on the open market, again only with such constraints as will be in the interests of the whole country.

Fisheries have become a bit of a bandwagon. Sometimes I suspect that if fishing and fisheries could survive when few governments were interested, except for the federal government, and when many people ignored their existence, it may survive this renewed interest when there are many people who would like to take over the wheel of the wagon. My colleagues, especially my parliamentary secretary and others, will cover other aspects of the fisheries. I am thinking in particular of the international dimension and of inland waters. The fact remains that my predecessor of many years ago—I am flattered to have been compared to him at one time—the Hon. Jim Sinclair, once said this is a great portfolio and he would have no other. After three and a half years in charge of that portfolio, and despite our differences of views at times, I still think that this is a fabulous portfolio and I would not ask for any other for a good time to come.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, in the four years that I have been here, the salmon enhancement program to which the minister alluded has spawned more public statements than it has fish, and he has brought it to the fore again today. I was just looking at a letter I received from a new organization related to the salmon enhancement program called the B.C. Task Group, which I believe the minister organized. On the surface at least it looks like not a bad idea. I should like to ask the minister a question regarding one sentence in the letter which reads:

In other words, the salmon enhancement program has a built-in public involvement process that makes sure that more than just the civil servant has input to, and responsibility for, its success.

● (1632)

This is calling upon community people from all professions and levels of society to help fisheries officials implement the salmon enhancement program. I am concerned about whether this will be a community process. Will it have any power of decision-making? Will all of the provided information go into the Department of Fisheries and the Environment? What will happen if the department does not like the information and decides on a policy which the involved local people do not like? Is there any way for these people, who are closest to the work and immediately affected by it, to have a possibility of reversing the decision made by officials of the Department of Fisheries and the Environment?

Mr. LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, at the risk of scooping myself, I should like to indicate that I will have a fair amount to say on this very question tomorrow at Chilliwack. As the hon. member may know, suggestions have been made that the programs should be in the hands of the management board, with financial responsibility resting with the minister because of the expenditure of public funds. The fact is that this management board will have a majority of non-governmental employees. It will represent all the user groups such as sport and commercial fishermen, wildlife organizations, the public at large, et cetera.

If the hon. member reads the remarks I make tomorrow, he will find that my statement is very positive concerning the involvement of the public at large. One of the most attractive features of this program is the very wide acceptance, interest and involvement of large elements of the public. This should be continued and reflected in the management board.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow)—Medical Research Council—Funds for research; the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie)—Airports—Construction of facilities at Charlottetown—Alleged delay for economic reasons.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—NECESSITY FOR CONSULTATION ON FISHERY POLICY

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Crouse:

That this House condemns the federal Minister of Fisheries for his failure to consult and co-operate with provincial fisheries ministers and fishermen prior to establishing arbitrary rules and regulations which are harmful to the fishermen, and for his failure to develop a positive policy for the protection and development of the Canadian fishing industry in order to derive maximum advantage for Canadians from the extended jurisdiction.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse) has rendered a useful service to the House by presenting a motion which permits a discussion on the fishing industry. The fishing industry is becoming an increasingly important factor in the economy of Canada.

The Canadian fishing industry is geographically divided between the Atlantic coast and the Pacific coast. Consequently, the New Democratic Party has had a member from the Atlantic coast on the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry, the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond

(Mr. Hogan). He will take part in the debate later and will discuss the situation in the Atlantic area. Our representative from the west coast is the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt). Not only has he been a very active member of the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry, but he has attended various international conferences on the law of the sea. He has played a very useful role in this regard. Unfortunately the hon. member for New Westminster had a commitment in his own constituency. He is flying back to Ottawa and perhaps will be here in time to participate in the debate tonight. Therefore, I am taking his place by being lead-off speaker.

I make no pretension whatsoever at being an expert on fisheries, nor have I ever been a member of the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry, but I have spent many, many hours sitting on the docks and talking to the fishermen of my constituency. I have travelled a good many miles with them through the Gulf of Georgia, the Strait of Juan de Fuca, and up into some of the northern waters. Therefore I have had many opportunities to talk with them and listen to their complaints. I want to say to the minister that these fishermen have complaints. Fishermen like farmers are not born bellyachers. They do not tend to complain all the time. Most of the time they accept the vicissitudes of life with great equanimity. I have listened to their complaints and have attempted to pass them on to the minister.

The Minister of Fisheries and the Environment (Mr. LeBlanc) is one of the more competent ministers in the government. He is one of the ministers with whom one can take up a problem and be assured that it will be given prompt attention. He may not be able to do what one asks him to do, but he is very assiduous in the discharging of his duties.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I have always found him approachable and willing to listen to reason. He is a great improvement on some of the ministers of fisheries and the environment we have had. Certainly he inherited a sorry mess. Some of the things I will say are not said as a direct reflection on him, but on a lack of policy over a good many years. However, the minister ought not to take too much comfort out of statistics, as he tended to do this afternoon. He spoke about the incomes of fishermen being 50 per cent higher than they were ten years ago. If the minister will take the trouble to look at the cost of fuel for ships, buying ships, licences, operating ships, and the cost of living, which has risen a great deal more than 50 per cent over the last ten years, he will find that the real incomes of fishermen have not kept pace with the general state of conditions in the economy as a whole.

Briefly, I should like to enumerate some of the complaints I have received from fishermen in my constituency. The first complaint deals with the boat licensing system which was inaugurated by Mr. Jack Davis. I remember when it happened. I remember hon. members of the New Democratic Party took strong exception to it. Our objection was based on a number of grounds. Our first ground was that it was not being done by an act of parliament and there were no regulations. One of the difficulties with the Department of Fisheries and the Environment is that so much of the actions taken by the department are passed on to the public through press releases, ministerial statements, and ministerial orders. Very little of the actions are in the form of regulations passed under an act which can be examined minutely, so that a person knows with certainty what his or her rights are. That is one complaint we had about the licensing system. It is still true that there is a very vague area surrounding the entire area of boat licensing.

We objected to the boat licensing system when it was inaugurated because we were convinced that it would develop a trade in licences, that licences would become commodities. Certainly that is true. Every other week end when I return to my constituency, fishermen or young men who want to become fishermen are in my constituency office telling me of the fabulous figures they have to pay to buy a licence. It almost costs as much now to buy a licence as it does to buy a boat. Virtually this precludes many young men from getting into the fishing business at all. I realize the objective was to keep down the number of people in the fishing industry because of conservation. That was understandable, but I should like to say that it was rendered on the basis of the pocketbook, and it has not worked satisfactorily.

● (1642)

The worst criticism when the plan was introduced, and it is being demonstrated every day, was that it would lead to an increasing concentration of fishing in the hands of a smaller and more elite group and eventually into the hands, in large measure, of the fish processing industry. There is a good deal of dissatisfaction with reference to both licensing systems. There is a good deal of need for either the fisheries committee of the House or a task force to re-examine it and put it in proper legislative form in such a way that there is not this trading in licences.

The second complaint I get from the fishermen in my constituency is that we are being out-manoeuvred in our talks with the American negotiators regarding our fishing rights. They feel, and I must say that I share their feelings, that our attitude in negotiating with the United States has a cap-in-hand posture about it. I noticed that even in the discussions in the House on Monday when my colleague, the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent), and myself yesterday, were asking questions about whether or not we should make it clear to the President of the United States that if the Americans are not going to carry out their commitments under the proposed reciprocal temporary agreement, Canada will have no choice but to follow a similar course of action.

Immediately the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) talks about threats. Surely it is not a threat to say if two parties have reached an agreement, and one party decides to renege on that agreement, it is no longer in effect as far as the other party is concerned. All we are asking is that the Americans be reminded that the proposition works both ways, but we are accused of trying to threaten the Americans the moment we ask the government to stand up and make it clear that we Canadians have rights as well.

The minister in reply to a question from the leader of this party last Monday about retaliation said that it should be noted that last year when the Americans put some restriction on our fishermen we reacted by keeping their shrimp boats out of our waters. It is true that the government stopped the shrimp fishing off Tofino last year for the American fishermen, but it is equally true that we stopped it for the Canadian fishermen when conservation restrictions were placed on shrimp fishing so that on the grounds of conservation they could say to the United States that "neither of them are fishing and we are not really retaliating".

There has been a series of retreats in this whole matter of negotiating fishing rights as between the United States fishermen and the Canadian fishermen. I would like to remind the House that we once had a fish war between Canada and the United States. This afternoon the minister referred to Mr. James Sinclair, who was one of the best ministers of fisheries we have ever had in Canada. In the 1940s when he was minister of fisheries the Americans decided to fish very heavily on the fish that normally go up the Fraser River. Mr. Sinclair ordered all the west coast fishing boats in the Strait of Juan de Fuca to intercept the fish which would normally be going to American waters, and it did not take very long for the Americans to realize that it was not a very productive kind of confrontation. The result was that they came to their senses and began talking business. I can still remember Mr. Sinclair's statement to the effect "We do not want this fish war, but when you plead and ask and request and get no answer, then you have no recourse but to take some steps."

All the fishermen are really asking for is a feeling that we are prepared to stand up and fight for them, not to be belligerent or to ask for more than we are entitled to, but just not to be pushed around. We have an example right now in this 1978 proposed interim agreement. It is the height of absurdity when we, by executive order, announce an agreement which has not yet been ratified by the United States Congress, leaving the whole proposal open to court action by any group in that country. This is what has happened. The report is that the United States west coast fishermen have told the United States Senate committee that they propose to drop the charges on the understanding that the United States officials will not allow Canadians to expand into more salmon trolling areas off the United States west coast as is promised and proposed in the Canadian-U.S. 1978 agreement. I do not know whether the American government will give them that concession, but if they do I assume that our Minister of Fisheries will stipulate that what we gave under the 1978 agreement will also be set aside.

Surely there must be a better way to work out relations between the two countries with respect to fisheries other than to have Canada in the ridiculous position of having by executive order agreed to a certain policy only to find that the policy is not effective because it has not been ratified by the United States Congress. If we are going to accept an agreement with the Americans, then that agreement ought to come into effect only when it has been ratified and we would not be placed in the ridiculous position which we are in at the present time.

The fishermen do not know where they are at. On Monday the halibut season opens, and the representatives of the Department of Fisheries have told the fishermen on the west coast to go up to the Alaskan waters to fish, and hope that the Americans do not raise any objections. However, as long as the interim agreement has not been passed by congress there is nothing to prevent anybody from getting an injunction to stop them. This is a very embarrassing situation and a very clumsy way in which to carry on negotiations between the two countries because, if the Americans insist on going back to the 1978 interim agreement, it will mean our fishermen will not be able to do salmon trolling in the waters off the coast of Washington. Or if they do it will be in an area which was restricted by the agreement reached last year to allow the Americans more offshore area in return for the fact that they are giving more inshore area to their native Indians.

This was a bad decision, and many of the fishermen's organizations argue that it lost them 40 per cent of their potential catch. I am not in a position to say whether that is accurate or not. What bothers them most is that they keep insisting they have never been consulted about this. It is true they are asked to come to meetings in Ottawa or that a meeting is held in Vancouver and they are told a few things there, but the real decision about the final agreement has only come to them after the fact.

● (1652)

In the time I have left, Mr. Speaker, let me say that the thing that is causing the fishermen the most concern at the present time is the question of the negotiation of fishing boundaries with the United States. I tried to follow the negotiations and I have to say that I think the Canadian government, to use the language of the street, has "blown" this matter of boundaries. Canadian negotiators are taking the legalistic position of the equidistant line, whereas the United States is arguing for the maximum or trench system, which I understand they are arguing against on the east coast. The minister will say that the position we are taking is without prejudice. That is a good lawyer's position, but everyone who has ever negotiated knows perfectly well that when you go before an arbitration board it will not just look at the documentation but at the positions the two parties took originally. If they have to look at the trench proposal and the equidistant line proposal we will have already lost a good deal of the fishing potential to which we think we are entitled.

We fear there is a strong possibility that the boundary line will be brought down as far as Hecate Strait and Dixon Entrance. If it is, it will deny west coast fishermen of a good deal of the area upon which they have depended for their livelihood.

I hope that sometime soon the minister will tell the House the extent to which the fishermen's organizations on the west coast have had an opportunity to contribute some input to these negotiations regarding boundaries. I do not mean being asked to a meeting and given a free lunch—I mean a real input about the extent of meetings with Mr. Cadieux and having someone sitting in on the discussions, or even in an anteroom, who could be consulted during the discussions. This is important to them. It is their livelihood, and not just for today or tomorrow but for the years ahead.

I conclude by saying to the minister that if he were to listen to the message from the fishermen who ply the waters of the Pacific coast he would hear them saying they want more consultation, they want to feel they have his ear, that they have access to the Canadian negotiator who is determining what their fishing areas will be in the future. They want consultation, Mr. Speaker.

The second thing that I say on their behalf is—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to inform the hon. member that his allotted time has expired. He may continue with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I just want to finish my sentence. I think the fishermen would say to him—and I say it on their behalf—that he must put some backbone into the negotiators who are acting for Canada. The United States' negotiators have been very clever—the United States have always been good negotiators and good traders, as we know to our cost if we look at our history. The fishermen of this country expect the minister to see to it that those who represent Canada and speak for the fishermen in these negotiations, show the kind of backbone needed to ensure that in the future the fishermen of the west coast get a fair deal and a fair share of the fish to be caught in the Pacific Ocean.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, I thank you for giving me the opportunity to participate in the debate generated by the motion of the hon. member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse). I want to congratulate the hon. member because fisheries, an area of utmost interest to me, represent with the implementation of the 200-mile zone a substantial economic development potential for the Maritime provinces and eastern Quebec. Before discussing the hon. member's motion I would like to make a few remarks about the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment (Mr. LeBlanc), not because he is not competent, as the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) suggested earlier, but because he is a man I admire, a loyal and open man and I am convinced that he gives a lot of his time for the advancement of fisheries in Canada.

However, as the minister suggested, the Gaspé area is the most underprivileged area in eastern Quebec. Its fisheries are today its door to the necessary development to its economic survival. On April 25 last in Gaspé an economic summit on maritime fisheries was organized by the Quebec government where it and all other interested organizations were represented, except the federal government which was conspicuous by its absence. Is that as a result of the war of nerves the federal government has been recently waging in Quebec? It seems to me that childishness has lasted long enough. So I take exception to the fact that the federal government which has considerable input in the fisheries policy should not have considered appropriate to delegate a representative to that economic summit vital to my area. It seems to me that when the minister and the officials of his department consider it appropriate to participate in various regional meetings in the Atlantic provinces, they could have done the same thing in Gaspé.

Mr. LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I would not like at all to leave on the record an assertion which may not be accurate and this is why, further considering the problem of the relations with one province in particular, I should say that we were invited to send the deputy minister who, unfortunately, was held by another meeting. We suggested sending the regional director in the province of Quebec, who has a high ranking position in my department. We were informed that only people at the deputy minister or assistant deputy minister levels were invited, not as participants but as observers. So I think the hon. member should know the exact facts.

● (1702)

Mr. Allard: I thank the minister for his explanations. Of course, as he will recognize himself we had some reason to know why the representatives of his department were not there. I thank him.

Mr. Speaker, this criticism goes in the same direction—except for the one relating to the representation in Gaspé—as the motion moved by my colleague, the hon. member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse), as he also deplores the lack of co-operation and consultation between the federal government and its provincial counterparts. Although the 200-mile zone limit is an unprecedented asset for the eastern part of the country in particular, it seems to me we should establish at any cost a global policy, a policy of cohesion involving both the provincial and federal governments. I am convinced of the minister's dedication to the development of fisheries in Canada but it appears clearly to me that we do not draw all the benefits we should from the extension of our fishing limit to 200 miles. For example, for 1977, when the 200-mile limit was introduced, our catch for all species in the Atlantic area were only 58 per cent. As far as the catch of so-called traditional species is concerned, namely those we fish intensively, the figure was 76 per cent, which is an increase over 1976 of only 14 per cent. I seems very low to me.

The minister has announced to the House that for the current year foreign quotas would be almost exclusively made up of species which we do not exploit much such as silver hake, capelin, silver-fish, roughnose grenadier and so on. I am quite happy that foreign involvement in our traditional fisheries in Canada has been almost eliminated but we should make a breakthrough in fishing for the non traditional species which I have just mentioned. Those resources belong to us and I think that diversifying our fishing products would help stabilize that industry.

Of course, successful management of our fisheries requires that we make sound decisions on exploitation and preservation of stocks. One just has to look how herring has been overexploited on our coasts to realize it. So we must tread softly and not repeat past mistakes. That is why we cannot let foreigners exploit some species because we have no ship equipped for that kind of fisheries or there is no substantial demand for those species. At that state, it is up to government agencies to promote catching of less known species in assisting fishermen who would to get involved in this fishery, in finding markets and in stimulating the domestic demand with advertising and information campaigns. We do that already for dairy products and eggs, so why not for fish? I realize also that from January to September 1977 we imported quantities of codfish, salmon, silver-fish, herring, crab, lobster and some other species which are abundant within our waters and that such imports amounted to close to $70 million.

Is this situation due to bad marketing or bad forecasts? It should be noted that these species are fished mostly in the Atlantic, in our waters, and that they come back to us as finished products. Mr. Speaker, $70 million is not a sum to be taken lightly, especially in an area like the Gaspé peninsula. It is therefore imperative not only to ensure our share of foreign markets, but also to protect our domestic market because of the present level of competition on world markets.

I believe that to take advantage of the increased stocks of groundfish on the Atlantic coast, we should refit our fishing fleet, which is becoming rather obsolete. In this regard, I am concerned by the fact that Quebec received nothing under the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act between July 1977 and December 1977. It is necessary to offer good credit facilities to allow our fishermen to equip themselves for new fisheries outside our traditional fishing industry and to allow them at the same time to remain the owners of their boats. Finally, we should improve the lot of our inshore fishermen who have been hurt in the past by the depletion of the cod stocks. I am happy that in 1978 the inshore fishermen will receive 80 per cent of the cod quotas in Canada. This is a step in the right direction.

Sea fishery in Quebec provides employment for about 100 communities along the Gaspé coast, on the north shore and in the Magdalen Islands. It provides employment for nearly 6,500 fishermen and just under 1,500 people in processing plants. Unfortunately, there now exist certain difficulties, including smaller catches and aging of the fleet. It is therefore important for my area that in the next few years there should be a development policy to increase and stabilize the income of fishermen as well as employment in the sectors of processing and marketing.

I therefore ask the minister not to favour certain areas of the Atlantic region at the expense of others. It seems to me that the Gaspé peninsula has suffered enough from the indifference of governments as concerns its economic problems. The Gaspé people must have their share. Mr. Speaker, even though the minister has in general showed great interest in helping our fishermen develop a prosperous industry, it still remains that there is a lot to be done to guarantee that our resources will not be unduly exploited by foreigners at our expense. The sea is a reservoir of countless resources and will remain our great strength if we learn to preserve and develop systematically those resources.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out to the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment (Mr. LeBlanc) that as far as the staff is concerned, it is still difficult for the employees of the Department of Fisheries and Environment to work in their native tongue, especially on account of their low percentage of representation, that is 13 per cent, as well as the low rate of bilingualism among English-speaking employees, as mentioned in the last report of the Commissioner of Official Languages. Consequently, I would urge the minister to cope with the linguistic inequality by increasing the percentage of French-speaking employees to a fairer level to provide better services to French Canadians.

[English]

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I am honoured to have had the opportunity to second this particular motion today because it gives me another opportunity, unfortunately an opportunity that we have to come back on again and again, to underline the shortcomings of this government. I regret that we have to return so often to a theme in the fisheries-environment area with which we have dealt on numerous occasions before, that is, the government's inadequacies.

Since the government persists in disregarding advice offered to it, suggestions made from this side of the House, smug and satisfied that its own ways are best, I have no alternative but to return to the charge, because I am satisfied from some of the borrowings that have come from the policies enunciated on this side that those policies are the correct ones. Furthermore, in other areas, notably in criminal justice, the Post Office and the economy, this government has proceeded on its own course, smug and satisfied that its own ways are best, in total disregard of the advice offered to it from this side of the House and from a somewhat less subjective perspective. Look at the results: a crime rate that makes Canadians, even here in Ottawa, uneasy about going out at night. We read reports daily in the newspapers and hear them over the air. We have a Post Office where morale is so low that the mail is being delivered in an offhanded, negligent manner, and an economy that has about as much resilience as a flat tire.

Today we hear of a third theory of ministerial responsibility enunciated by the Minister of State (Environment) (Mr. Marchand). Aside from the present minister, to whom I give a fair amount of credit, what makes us feel that this government is going to act any better as a government in this area than it has in any of the others? In these circumstances it is the opposition which, though without the power to change the direction, is called upon to point in the direction to which we should be heading. It is up to us to set the gyro in this desert land where landmarks are so few, and get the caravan of state moving toward a predetermined destination.

● (1712)

There is one feature of the government's failure to govern which imposes a certain restraint upon responsible critics such as I happen to think I am. In the circumstances now prevailing, at this very moment when negotiations have reopened in Ottawa to determine the rights and responsibilities of Canadian and American fishermen on the west coast, it is extremely difficult to underline the longstanding failure of the administration to prepare itself for the burden which would result from this assumption of responsibility, if only for fisheries management, for the 200 mile zone. I do not want to weaken the bargaining hand of the Canadian negotiatior at this critical juncture. I know what problems he is facing, what odds. But it is the fault of the government for failing to provide him with sound and credible grounds from which to bargain.

The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) mentioned the government's failure to put some backbone into the negotiating team. I maintain that it ought to have been put there ten or 15 years ago when the 200-mile limit was looming before us. But what do we find? We find that the enforcement machinery is not in place. There is no sign of its being put in place even today. Ought it to come as a surprise, then, that there should be an injunction from the American courts preventing Canadians from deriving benefit from an interim agreement?

I wanted to ask a couple of questions today. I wanted to know whether the government intends to accept any dilution of the rights agreed upon under that interim agreement. After all, an interim agreement is, nevertheless, an agreement. We understood it was an agreement. The Americans, apparently, do not think it is until it has been ratified. Is the government prepared to assure us that it will not accept any dilution of the rights agreed to in that document, and prepared to take reciprocal action in the event Congress should block the treaty?

Further, should we decide on such action, do we have the means? That is where the great difficulty arises. It is the ineptness of the government over the past ten or 15 years which has brought us to this pass. I refer, of course, to the barely adequate enforcement machinery in the hands of the government in terms of accepting the responsibilities it assumed in extending Canadian jurisdiction. Government spokesmen maintain it is adequate. I maintain it is not.

[Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich).]

The government contends we are talking about an international agreement, or a bi-national agreement, and that enforcement should be conducted by the flag state, that is, an offender would be judged in his own courts for an offence committed on the territory of the other state and that, in consequence, all that needs to be done is notify the flag state of an infraction, in the case of a foreign fisherman, leaving the imposition of sanctions to that state. In other words, a United States fisherman, even if he were caught in Canadian waters fishing illegally, would be brought to justice and penalized in the courts of the United States. A Canadian fisherman doing something wrong in American waters would be brought to justice by the Canadian courts.

It is extremely difficult, when one has completely inadequate enforcement machinery, to produce evidence in court to prove there has been an infraction of an agreement involving over-fishing or fishing in prohibited areas. To do so requires evidence taken on the spot by enforcers of agreements. I contend that the necessary measures should have been under construction during the past ten years when we knew we were headed for the 200-mile limit. All we do now is to notify the flag state that one of its ships is in breach of the agreement. We do this, presumably, on the evidence of overflights. But get the picture of a ship rocking on the waves somewhere out at sea! Mr. Speaker, I do not recall seeing the latitudes and longitudes marked on the waves. And that is what one has to prove.

Enforcement by the flag state is really no way of enforcing jurisdiction. And I don't want any smart cracks from the other side about us getting our act together, suggesting that fisheries spokesmen on this side are always talking about spending money while spokesmen for finance are always calling for restraint. I am talking about government policy over the past ten or 15 years. The government has done nothing during all that period. I could reel off on the fingers of my two hands the names of all the enforcement vessels on the west coast, and probably, using two hands and my feet, the number of tens of people there are to operate those boats. We hear that on one occasion when the salmon season was opening one ship was unable to sail because of engine trouble, another was in dry-dock, and a third could not find a crew to go out to sea. Those were the three coastguard vessels. When were they built? The first in service was built before some of the hon. members sitting in this chamber were born. It was built in 1932. Sure, she is up for auction at the moment. The most recent one was built in 1967, 11 years ago, and nothing I know of is going on the stocks.

Ten years ago our negotiating teams were in New York, Geneva, Venezuela, negotiating the Law of the Sea, knowing full well the time was coming when we would go to 200 miles. Still, nothing is on the stocks. There is nothing in the estimates, now, to provide for the vessels we need. I think it is scandalous.

Is it any wonder we are in trouble on the west coast? What about the Dixon entrance? Why cannot our negotiators secure something sensible and realistic? Why are we not taking every step necessary to get Canadian rights off the Alaska panhandle to Canadian-bred fish breeding on their way back? Those are American waters, but do Canadian fishermen have any rights in those areas? No, because we cannot enforce those rights.

● (1722)

The parliamentary secretary knows what is happening. We are losing some fishing area there which we have claimed for a long time. We claim it, but we claim it with nothing to back up our claim. We do not back our fishermen up. We do not back our negotiators up, and it is high time there was something put into the estimates to back up our international negotiators and our fishermen.

The command structures we have are completely at sixes and sevens. They are not properly integrated. There are military, police, customs, fisheries, and research vessels out at sea at different times and in different places, but they do not have the power at all times to do fisheries patrol work. If they should find someone out of place, they do not have the power to use that as evidence. Not even out to the 50-mile limit do we have that.

It would surprise the House to learn that a commander of one of our service destroyers has to get special powers from the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment (Mr. LeBlanc) to stop a vessel. I think that is outrageous. He should have that warrant at all times. By contrast, at last count the U.S. coastguard—and I looked up some figures this morning which are about a year old—has 124 deep sea vessels, some with the capability of doing 29 knots. They have 36,300 men in their service, and there are 12,300 miles of coastline to patrol and defend. That 36,300 figure is just about half the size of our armed forces.

Where has this government put its priorities? We have 17,800 miles of coast line, and with the 200-mile limit we have increased our responsibilities over a third of our territory. What do we have by way of back-up to enforce our jurisdiction? We have nothing like what we need. Is it any wonder that we are in trouble when we are negotiating? We have had a very smart and good team negotiating at the Law of the Sea conference. I give that team full credit. We have a shrewd and capable negotiator dealing with the Americans. There is no question about that. We have made some yards on the international front in many areas, but on bilateral negotiations we have been going through with a whimper because we cannot back our negotiators up properly. Is there cause for concern? I think there is, unfortunately.

Fishing in British Columbia is an important industry which is worth defending. There are serious problems confronting the industry. Between 1976 and 1977 fish landings decreased on the Pacific coast by 19 per cent, about one fifth, from 383 million pounds to 322 million pounds. That was the Canadian catch. The Japanese, Russian, Polish and Korean landings were something else again. Prices were firm, and that is good. That is not the problem. Take-home pay was good, but poundage was bad. This could mean trouble in the years ahead, and we have got to know somehow or other whether the problem is the result of foreign fishermen or declining stocks. These are important problems.

I now come to the question which was raised by my colleague, the hon. member for South Shore, when he talked about research. Yes, there has been some research. Much of it is going out by contract to individual private companies. That is fine, as long as there is no patronage, and one wonders.

I have here a document which indicates that $12 million worth of research has been going out to private companies in the last couple of years, more than $6 million a year. Some of that money went toward getting public reaction to the salmon enhancement program. There is no need to spend money learning public reaction. The salmon enhancement program is needed. The minister made a good case for it. Let us get on with it. Let us not spend money learning public reaction and putting out publicity. Let us get on with enhancing salmon stocks. That is what it is all about. This business about publicity, putting out brochures, having radio programs and so forth, is nonsense. It is all right for carrying on some of the work at international conferences. I would buy some of that, but I will not buy it to the extent it is revealed in this document.

Unfortunately there are more questions about fisheries than there are answers. Moreover, I am thinking only of the west coast. I have not touched on the Arctic or the east coast at all. I have not touched on the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation in Manitoba or on the Great Lakes. The problems are immense. I dealt briefly with the west coast salmon problem and the need for additional policing and an international agreement.

What we obviously need is a reasonably just area assignment on the west coast under international agreements of some kind which will stick. We could call them international arrangements in order to avoid ratification. We could give them an umbrella treatment until a firm international agreement could be concluded and ratified in the appropriate manner in our two Houses. In these bilateral talks there are obviously trade-offs, extending fishing jurisdiction for Canadians to compensate for the fish take allowed to the Indians on the Olympic Peninsula and that sort of thing, but there is one other matter of great concern to me, and that is the effect on our fisheries of oil spills and the failure, again, of any coordinated approach to the whole matter. It has not proceeded far enough. There have been some talks, but the government has been delinquent in this area, as in all the others.

The government has known for years that oil tankers would be coming down our Pacific coast from Valdez. I am informed that the location of clean-up equipment is all on a computer. I am going to get a print-out. I have yet to see a print-out.

Mr. Friesen: It won't do you any good.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): I am told that Canada had observers at the oil spill clean-up on the Brittany coast earlier this year at the time of the Amoco Cadiz disaster to watch how it was being handled. That is fine.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to inform the hon. member that his allotted time has expired. He may continue with unanimous consent. Does the hon. member have unanimous consent to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will be brief, but I am worried about clean-up.

I will try to summarize quickly because I know other speakers want the floor. There is the matter of compensation. Under American law there is provision for some $200 million as a compensation fund. Under Canadian law there is provision for a $40 million compensation fund, one fifth that of the American fund. That is not enough. We have more coast. More damage can be done to our coast than to the U.S. coast.

● (1732)

Then there is the matter of liability and traffic controls. The traffic controls, they say, are now voluntary and they may be mandatory in due course. What about the standards of shipbuilding, the standards of seaworthiness, crewing standards and the placement of the clean-up equipment? I contend that all this deserves a place in a bilateral agreement between Canada and the United States. I am referring to compensation, liability, mandatory traffic controls, shipbuilding standards, crewing standards and all related matters affecting the pollution and the deterioration of the breeding and migratory grounds of our fish. All these deserve a place in a bilateral agreement to which Canada and the United States should be bound.

There are other areas with which I would like to deal but I cannot do so now. I shall leave to someone else the salmon enhancement program. For all the reasons I have stated, because of the government's shortcomings, its lack of foresight and its inadequacy, I subscribe fully to every word of the motion put forward by the hon. member for South Shore, and I enjoin others to do likewise.

Mr. Hugh A. Anderson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased that the Leader of Opposition (Mr. Clark) is present because the previous speaker, the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro), took a great deal of time suggesting that the federal government is not enforcing the 200-mile limit and that we should spend literally millions of dollars on the purchase of vessels. I would like to take a few minutes to comment on what the hon. member has said, because I think that if we look very closely at what has happened in the first year of enforcement of our 200-mile zone, we will find that the first interesting thing was that before 1977 Canada had negotiated with the distant water fishing fleets and had signed agreements with 90 per cent of those fleets that they would respect the 200-mile limit.

[Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich).]

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Oh, come on!

Mr. Anderson: Obviously the hon. member does not like hearing the truth. By obtaining agreements with these distant water fishing fleets, we saved Canada innumerable millions of dollars. On the question of inspections, instead of having very expensive ships or aircraft patrolling the world's largest coastline, what we have done in many cases where a distant water fishing fleet had obtained a licence from the Canadian government is to send one fisheries officer by helicopter to the mother ship. The fisheries officer went on board the ship and stayed there during the whole time that the ship was in Canadian waters. I am sorry the hon. member has left the chamber. What we have done is to save millions and millions of dollars by having someone on board the distant water fishing fleets. We had only one man doing the job instead of a ship worth several millions of dollars crewed by thirty or forty people.

The hon. member is proposing that we should spend literally hundreds of millions of dollars when we can hire fisheries officers to go out on-board these ships, and thus gain much better knowledge of what is being fished, how much is being fished and what type of species is being fished. Because obviously that gentleman on board the ship sees the fish coming on board. I hope the Leader of the Opposition will have a good talk with the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich and will tell him that it is in the interests of Canadian fishermen not to throw money down the drain but to use our resources in a logical manner.

Perhaps the hon. member is not aware of the fact that in 1977 fourteen convictions were recorded against foreign captains for breaking Canadian regulations. Also, our fisheries people have issued warnings and cancellations of licences. I understand that on the east coast alone, 900 foreign fishing vessels were inspected by the Department of Fisheries and also 170 Canadian fishing boats.

So I caution those who would literally spend hundreds of millions of dollars on a process that we do not require. I hope that the licensing system we have instigated whereby foreign nations must apply to Canada for a licence, following which we allow them to enter at a point of entry, specify the length of stay and the amount of catch and have one fisheries officer on board, makes much more sense than the suggestion put forward by the hon. member earlier.

Let us consider the motion before us today. I think its allegations can be refuted in several ways. First of all, I should like to quote the minister of fisheries for British Columbia, the Hon. Rafe Main, who spoke at the federal-provincial conference which was recently held in Ottawa. He spoke on the subject of fisheries, and after making his initial comments on behalf of British Columbia, he said the following:

> In summary, Mr. Prime Minister, we are very pleased with the co-operation that we have with the federal government . . . We have had hitherto, Mr. Prime Minister, this co-operation in British Columbia and we sincerely hope it will continue and British Columbia hopes to make it continue.

That is slightly different from what the motion says, that co-operation with the provincial ministers does not exist. Lack of consultation was also alleged. The Minister of Fisheries (Mr. LeBlanc) has tabled several documents regarding meetings he has had with premiers and with fishing groups, but he did not say much about them—he is a very modest man. Let me give the timetable of the minister for the current month, specifying his meetings with provincial ministers and with fishing groups. For example, tomorrow the minister will be meeting with the B.C. Wildlife Federation in Abbottsford, B.C. On May 5 the minister met with R. Cashin, president of Newfoundland Fishermen, Food and Allied Workers. On May 5 he met in Halifax with Premier Regan of Nova Scotia. On the same day in Halifax with Premier Regan and the Hon. Dan Reid. Again on the same day he met in Halifax with the Hon. F. Mooney. On the same day in Halifax he met with the Digby scallopers. On May 3 in Quebec City the minister met with the Fisheries Council of Canada. On May 2 in Ottawa he met with Richard Cashin, president of Newfoundland Fishermen, Food and Allied Workers. That was his timetable in May. These have been the activities of the minister in meeting with interested groups, fishermen and ministers.

On April 17 the minister met in Winnipeg with the provincial ministers responsible for fisheries for the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta, Ontario and the Northwest Territories. On the same day in Winnipeg he had a meeting with Kip Thompson and other representatives of northern Manitoba fishermen. On April 10 in Cape Breton, Nova Scotia, the minister met with Don Cadegan, president of Highland Fisheries. On the same day in Cape Breton he met with Arthur LeBlanc, president of the United Maritime Fishermen. Again on the same day in Cape Breton he met with representatives of the processors of Richmond Fisheries, Isle Madame Fishermen's Co-op, the Louisbourg division of National Sea Products, Peter Mullen's Limited, H. Hopkins Limited in Louisbourg and the Highland Fisheries Limited of Glace Bay. I could go on and on, Mr. Speaker. I have several pages of this timetable which the minister has already tabled.

This motion alleges lack of consultation. What I have done is to describe the minister's activities during an approximate 30-day period. The minister has already said that holding meetings does not necessarily mean that an agreement is achieved. However, this motion condemns the minister for his lack of consultation with the provinces and with fisheries groups. I think that the material that he has tabled today refutes that charge.

Comments were made by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) regarding the problems we have had with the implementation of the 200-mile limit and with the injunction taken out in the United States. I agree that the hon. member is quite correct when he indicates that we have had problems.

● (1742)

The hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich brought up the point that we do not patrol our 200-mile limit. Perhaps we should take a look at what happened in Canada with the 200-mile limit, as well as what has happened in other countries as they have implemented 200-mile limits. Perhaps it would be useful to compare the experiences in other parts of the world, developments in fisheries management in other 200-mile zones of jurisdiction, with the Canadian experience. A number of examples come to mind in various parts of the world where the movement is toward centralization and the development of larger units to deal with fisheries questions.

The European Economic Community is continuing to develop a common fisheries policy to deal with questions in areas such as the North Sea, where the zones of a number of the member states and non-member states border on each other, and where serious conservation problems have developed in the free-for-all which existed before the community's extension of jurisdiction to 200 miles. Now the EEC acts as spokesman for its member states in fisheries matters when dealing with other European countries and foreign nations abroad.

This is not to say the problems which existed before the implementation of the 200-mile limit have been solved. However, the EEC is establishing or attempting to establish a common fisheries policy. Anyone who reads the European press will be aware of the questions involving the proposed exclusive fishing zones for Britain and Ireland. Despite these internal problems, however, it is true to say that the European Economic Community is moving toward a centralized system of fisheries.

In the Antipodes, a large number of South Pacific island states including Australia and New Zealand are working toward a system of central management of fisheries resources in an area which encompasses many thousands of square miles of ocean. In West Africa there are problems in fisheries management due to the very narrow strips of water that have been created by the 200-mile limit. In Latin America, particularly on the Pacific coast, the Latin American states recognize their common interest.

One of the few examples of where a centralization of fisheries has not taken place is within the United States. Prior to the United States extension of fisheries jurisdiction on March 1, 1977, the individual coastal states enjoyed control over fisheries resources out to three miles from shore, with the federal government having control in the contiguous zone from 3 to 12 miles.

In the United States, extension of fisheries jurisdiction to 200 miles was accomplished through the initiative of congress, which in 1976 passed the fisheries conservation and management act that was to take effect on March 1, 1977. This legislation placed the prime responsibility for ocean fisheries management in the hands of eight regional fisheries management councils. The councils' mandate was to review all aspects of fisheries management, including regulations, total allowable catches, United States harvesting capacity, and surpluses available to foreign nations.

The membership of the regional councils is determined by the United States Secretary of Commerce. In the make-up of the councils, there is substantial input ranging from a reliance in some cases on academics and professional fisheries managers to relying in other cases on substantial input from the fishing industry.

Each regional council has a great deal of independence. This independence has caused some of the problems which were mentioned by the hon. member in his earlier remarks. This independence has caused a problem not only in American waters, but also in dealing with other countries. These difficulties flow from the fact that while the Secretary of Commerce must make determinations on fisheries management matters based on regional council recommendations, it is the Secretary of State who is charged with the negotiation of bilateral agreements. Sometimes we think we have created a bureaucratic nightmare. Can one imagine the bureaucratic nightmare which exists in the United States today in fisheries management?

I would dare to suggest the flexibility of the United States is severely limited by the determinations made by the Secretary of Commerce. This has created significant problems for Canada. These problems arise not only from the fact that regional councils are charged with defending local rather than national interests, but also from the fact that United States legislation did not provide for any special relationship with its two closest neighbours, namely, Canada and Mexico.

Therefore, the United States is experiencing a fragmentation of fisheries management. There is no guarantee the regional councils will carry out the policies of the national government in respect of fisheries. The current problems being experienced between Canada and the United States are indicative of this phenomenon. Both countries have attempted to develop rational management measures for fish stocks of mutual interest.

Ambassador Cadieux for Canada and Ambassador Cutler for the United States were appointed and instructed to report to both governments by October 1977 on the principles of a comprehensive settlement, and to develop the substance of an ad referendum agreement for submission to both governments, if possible, by the end of 1977. The two special negotiators succeeded in agreeing on a set of principles encompassing fisheries and hydro-carbon resource arrangements, and an interim joint report was submitted to the governments on October 14, 1977. In the next phase, efforts were directed at securing agreement on precise boundary lines, the exact terms of an over-all bilateral fisheries agreement, and the institutionalization of a system for shared access to hydro-carbons in the boundary areas.

Since October 1977, the negotiators, their officials and advisers have met regularly in both countries. In fact, negotiations are taking place in Ottawa today between Mr. Cadieux and Mr. Cutler. They have consulted closely with their respective provincial state and industry interests. It should be brought out at this time that in these negotiations representatives from the fishing industry processors, UFAWU, trawlers, et cetera, have been a part of the Canadian negotiating team.

I think the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands asked that specific question of the minister. He referred to the participation of Canadians in the negotiations. Canadians have been very much involved. I can report that they have met on numerous occasions to discuss the Canadian position. Their input is welcome, as their input was welcome at the Law of the Sea conference where Canada had the largest delegation of any nation. Canada's delegation consisted of government experts, experts from the industry and the unions, as well as native fishermen from British Columbia and the Pacific trawlers. In order to have an expert team, we believe the input of those people who are most closely associated with the industry is required.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, can I ask the hon. member to be more specific? Does he have any data as to how many meetings or conferences with the various fishing groups have taken place? Before the terms of the proposed 1977 and 1978 agreements became effective, were they ever submitted to fishermen's organizations, particularly the unions?

Mr. Anderson: I would be pleased to furnish that very extensive information which the hon. member is requesting. I will not furnish it to him orally at this time, but I will do so in writing later. If I may, I should like to continue with my remarks.

By the end of March 1978, a number of key differences remained unresolved. In particular, I am referring to the delimination line in the Gulf of Main-Georges Bank area and several important fisheries questions on both the east and west coasts. However, the negotiators believed that significant progress has been made towards reaching an over-all agreement and they recommended to their governments that they continue their efforts to resolve the outstanding issue in a manner acceptable both to Canada and the U.S.

● (1752)

In addition, they have negotiated an interim reciprocal agreement which will continue reciprocal fishing as previously agreed with new mechanisms over the 1977 agreement for consultations and settlement of disputes, and to help ensure that existing fishing patterns are maintained. These arrangements are to continue in force through 1978 unless superseded by a comprehensive agreement or terminated by either government on 45 days' notice.

The senior negotiators from both countries are now meeting to try to resolve some of the issues that have arisen with respect to the implementation of the interim fisheries agreement. While the execution of a U.S. court injunction that would bar Canadian salmon fishermen from the Washington coast has been indefinitely stayed, problems remain, although we have a temporary solution since the courts have overruled the original decision. The problems include the Swiftsure Banks and allegations that Canadian fishermen in American waters are being harassed.

There is no question that the management of the fish stocks off the coast of British Columbia will be to the benefit of the Canadian fishing industry. I was very interested in the remarks that were made regarding the stand that Canada should take with the United States. I would like to quote the Canadian Press yesterday in reference to comments by Senator Magnuson:

Canadians, he said, already have the best part of the bargain in reciprocal fishing rights since they allow U.S. fishermen to take groundfish off British Columbia while gaining access to more valuable salmon off the state of Washington.

Stating that the 1977 reciprocal fishing arrangement should be left as they are, without making any new concessions to Canada, Magnuson also complained that the U.S. state department has been undermining the intent of congressional action in establishing 200-mile fishing zones.

This is another quote from Senator Magnuson as reported by the Canadian Press:

We wanted to keep all foreigners out . . . but the state department keeps opening the door.

It would appear from some of the comments made this afternoon that some of our Canadian members of parliament are saying—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to inform the hon. parliamentary secretary that his allotted time has expired. He may continue with the unanimous consent of the House. Does the hon. member have unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, I will be very precise. What I was saying was that it would appear that United States Senators are saying what has been said in our august chamber this afternoon, that somehow Canada is not getting the best of the deal according to some of our people in Canada, whereas in the United States they are not agreeing with the view that Canada is being hard done by.

I would hope that sane heads prevail, that there is calm negotiation rather than gunboat diplomacy and that we do not have to exclude American fishermen from Canadian waters or that Canadian fishermen will be excluded from American waters. The Americans recognize that we are not about to give our resource away and their congress and senate have the same feelings about giving the American resource away. I hope that both negotiating teams will come to a speedy conclusion that will benefit both countries.

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, the motion, of course, is one where we condemn——the federal Minister of Fisheries for his failure to consult and co-operate with provincial fisheries ministers and fishermen prior to establishing arbitrary rules and regulations which are harmful to the fishermen, and for his failure to develop a positive policy for the protection and development of the Canadian fishing industry in order to derive maximum advantage for Canadians from the extended jurisdiction.

Let me say at the start that I have a lot of admiration for our Minister of Fisheries (Mr. LeBlanc). I think that of the Liberal ministers of fisheries the present occupant of that post is the best that we have had from that party. I was the minister of fisheries in Newfoundland in 1974 when he was the minister here. The fishing industry had hit rock bottom and it was a question of whether or not it was going to survive. Because of the minister's policies and other factors, and because of the work that was done in Newfoundland and other provinces, we have come out of that and the fisheries are now on the way up.

The trouble with the minister is that he now thinks he has all the answers. Unfortunately, he has become extremely arbitrary, extremely dictatorial and guaranteed to ruffle the feathers—if not the feathers, the scales—of any provincial minister of fisheries. It is not only of Newfoundland that I speak, it is of the four Atlantic provinces in particular. I do not know how he relates to British Columbia. It is not only a question of politics. The Newfoundland government is a PC government, in New Brunswick it is PC, in P.E.I. it is Liberal, and in Nova Scotia it is Liberal—but it will not be much longer. But even in a province like Nova Scotia we find the premier of that province saying on April 19 in the Halifax Chronicle-Herald:

The Canadian constitution should be reformed to give the provinces more jurisdiction over fisheries, Premier Gerald Regan said during question period in the legislature yesterday . . .

Outside the House, fisheries minister Dan Reid said this is a change all four Atlantic provinces are advocating.

"The whole direction of the fishery and how it affects the province and its economy now rests on the whims of Ottawa."

This is what a Liberal minister said:

He said many problems are created by this lack of control. "We are closer to the scene here and could deal with them more appropriately."

These are Liberal premiers and ministers, Mr. Speaker, saying this because what the federal minister is forgetting is that the fishery is life and death in the Atlantic provinces. Or at least, it is life and death to Newfoundland.

It may be that the fishery contribution to the gross national product is under one per cent, Mr. Speaker, but to Newfoundland it is tremendous. At least 20,000 people are directly employed as fishermen or fish processors out of a work force altogether of some 180,000 people. The indirect and direct employment effect on Newfoundland is gigantic, plus the fact that in three-quarters of the province you cannot live in the communities that are now settled there without a viable fishery. Therefore, we feel, and rightly so, that it must have more say over the fishery.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. It being six o'clock p.m. I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock p.m.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

● (2002)

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, when we went for supper I was describing how important the fishery was to Newfoundland and the Atlantic provinces, why we resent so much the arrogant attitude of the Minister of Fisheries and why, if this is not changed and corrected, there is going to be a major confrontation between Newfoundland and the Government of Canada. I pointed out that in Nova Scotia even the Liberal premier and a Liberal minister were very chagrined, disappointed and angry at the relationship.

I have one final quotation from a Halifax newspaper of April 26, where again the fisheries minister of Nova Scotia, Dr. Reid, said:

> The federal fisheries department has not honoured its pledge to seek more consultation and co-operation with the provincial fisheries department and local fishermen.

In an interview he went on to say that, despite assurances of closer co-operation during the recent first ministers' conference, the province still has no say in many of the sweeping federal regulations handed down.

Let me tell you, Mr. Speaker, that in the last ten years in Newfoundland we have got a real department of fisheries. We have a minister of fisheries that knows his stuff. We have a good deputy minister of fisheries and we have a good department. The years of Smallwood neglect are over. They're not dumb-bells, they're not yo-yos, they're not yokels; they're not dumb, ignorant Newfoundlanders who have to do whatever some minister up here in Ottawa tells them. We are sick down there of being treated like that. Not only that, but when it comes to spending the money on the fishery there is considerably more being spent in proportion by the Newfoundland government than is being spent by the Ottawa bureaucrats.

If we just look at the one area of construction of vessels and assistance given for the construction of vessels, last year in Newfoundland the provincial government made $9.2 million available in assistance to fishermen to buy and construct new vessels by way of loans and subsidies. The federal government, this great federal government in Ottawa, spent exactly $600,000 for those purposes in Newfoundland.

In Newfoundland they are also putting their money where their mouths are. They want to be consulted and involved in the fishery. We want to be consulted and involved in the future of our province. We have seen industrial development after industrial development fail. We have seen the fishery come back so that it is going to mean something in our future. We are not satisfied to have the Minister of Fisheries, no matter how good he might be here in Ottawa, deciding the life and death of our province by himself. We are not satisfied. We are not going to put up with it. We are not going to tolerate it. What does the Newfoundland minister of fisheries say about how they have been treated? I quote from the May 9 Daily News:

● (2012)

> "We should be given a greater responsibility in the control of our fishery . . . right now we are seldom even consulted concerning policy . . . I am not content to let a bunch of Upper Canadian bureaucrats dictate how we in Newfoundland should control our resource . . ."

That was said by the minister of fisheries in Newfoundland. The premier of Newfoundland said the same. In the Evening Telegram of May 6 the minister of fisheries is quoted as having said:

> The Newfoundland government is going to "fight like hell" and take legal action, if necessary, to prove it has a right to have a voice in the management of the fishery resources off the coast of the province.

I do not blame the Newfoundland minister of fisheries. He has been treated abominably, as has been the case with the minister from Nova Scotia. In May of last year our minister of fisheries, Mr. Carter, put a proposal to the federal fisheries people about fisheries development in Newfoundland. In May he had proposals for the landing of additional fish for processing in seasonal plants, how to acquire additional ships and co-operative fishing ventures with the Portuguese, upgrading and expanding the fleet and so on. He was advised by Ottawa in September, I think, that Newfoundland's plan would not be considered on its own merit, but rather it would be considered only in the Atlantic provinces context. In other words, Newfoundland would be permitted by Ottawa to proceed in matters of fisheries development only as it related to and at a pace with the other Atlantic provinces. Is it any wonder they have gone berserk in Newfoundland?

The fishery means more to Newfoundland than any other province and they have been told they have to go along at the snail's pace that some other province might want to go. Proposals of Newfoundland are treated with contempt. Our ministers are treated as though they were office boys and busboys by the federal minister. No wonder the relationship between the minister and his provincial counterparts are exacerbated.

On December 1, 1977, the four Atlantic provinces put in a proposal to the Minister of Fisheries with the collective views of the four provinces. We know there are four disadvantaged provinces, four suppliant provinces, provinces that get the fiscal Kung Fu foot right in the face if they dare raise their voices and do not do what they are told by great Uncle Ottawa. The four provinces put in a proposal on what should happen in fisheries development. It has been treated with scorn, derision and contempt by the Minister of Fisheries as though they are not to be listened to. One of their proposals was that $910 million should be spent over the next ten years to replace the present fishing fleet, $260 million to replace half the inshore fleet because it is becoming obsolete, $500 million to replace half the offshore wetfish trawler fleet, and $150 million for new vessels to start replacing the foreign fishing effort. That is the proposal.

The Minister of Fisheries treats them and their proposal as though it were a case of leprosy, that if this proposal were touched, his hand would fall off, or his fins would fall off, or his tail would fall off. He thinks this is a terrible proposal that these four provinces put in. The minister infers they should be locked up, that they are criminal for what they want to do in expanding the Canadian fishing fleet. The minister says they have to be more conservative, more careful.

The Newfoundland government does not see why the federal minister should refuse to license additional Canadian-controlled vessels to fish in the 200-mile limit while foreign nations are given licences to fish there. There are 500 foreign fishing vessels that have been given licences to fish within our 200-mile limit and the minister says Canadians are not to have additional licences to fish. He pooh-poohs, scoffs, scorns and attacks proposals of the four Atlantic provinces for starting to make preparations to replace existing obsolete trawlers on a ten-year program at $91 million a year.

It is time the members of the fisheries committee or some other appropriate committee had a good look at future policy in the fishery because we are headed on a collision course. I admire the minister for many of the things he has done, as I said earlier before six o'clock. However, he is too stiff-necked, too arrogant and too convinced that he and he alone has the answer. He forgets the fishery is life and death to Newfoundland. We are not going to have our life or death decided by Roméo LeBlanc or any federal politician.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Order.

Mr. Crosbie: I am not supposed to use his name; I mean the Minister of Fisheries. We are not going to let one man control our destiny and future like that.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) put on a charade at the February first ministers' conference and pretended that the provinces would be more involved in these decisions. When I questioned the minister in the fisheries committee a few weeks later, he smiled knowingly as he indicated that nothing was going to be done to follow up that pious protestation of the Prime Minister.

We are upset. This is life and death to Newfoundland. In my own district, one third of the voters live in the rural area. Our rural area depends on the fishery. I am not satisfied to have the Minister of Fisheries of Canada decide on the life and death of the various communities in my constituency.

I wish I had time to give all their names. I could start at Come-By-Chance where the oil refinery used to operate. There is now nothing but the fishery there. Every community in our rural area is dependent on the fishery. In St. John's we have a major fish plant. St. John's itself depends on the fishery. It depends on the rest of the island for its livelihood as a distributing centre and the rest of it. That is why they are so exercised in Newfoundland.

If occasionally someone on the mainland hears of some discontent from the Newfoundland government, they should understand why it is. If the future of Ontario was being decided by one cabinet minister here and he would not listen to the provincial government, you can be assured that the papers would be full of it. We would hear of nothing else. It would rage on for weeks. It would be in the Globe and Mail on the first page, the second page and the editorial page. It would be in the Toronto Star, the Toronto this and the Toronto that. That is all we would hear about in the rest of Canada if that were the case.

One man has determined the destiny of Newfoundland. They are told to keep their mouths shut in Newfoundland as though they are ignorant cuffs that should not be heard. We are certainly not noticed in the mainland press.

If the Minister of Fisheries is to be a successful minister, he will have to change his ways. The fisheries committee will need to have a look at the future of fisheries development. There is much to talk about, but we never have enough time to do it. If I were allowed to occupy the time between now and 10:30, I could maybe deal with it half adequately.

We have a longliner fleet in Newfoundland. The Minister of Fisheries says there is no need to replace any of those longliners. There used to be a 35 per cent federal subsidy on longliner construction of vessels in Newfoundland. The minister has cut it out. The Newfoundland government has gone ahead with the building of 20 longliners from 55 feet to 65 feet. Today it costs $250,000 for a 55-foot vessel and $350,000 to $400,000 for a 65-foot vessel.

The Minister of Fisheries cut out the 35 per cent federal subsidy. The province is paying a 15 per cent subsidy and is giving loans for 95 per cent at 3 per cent interest. If the federal government does not come through, the poor province of Newfoundland has to put up the other 35 per cent to get these boats in the hands of the fishery.

The Minister of Fisheries says that more longliners are not needed. The government last year was abused by the Minister of Fisheries of Canada for having the audacity and daring to build a longliner on its own. There were 120 applications for those 20 longliners, 60 of which were found to be qualified. Only 20 of that 60 will be able to get a boat. What is the federal government going to do? The minister suggested in his recent speech to the Fisheries Council of Canada on May 3, 1978, that he is going to cut out the subsidies that they used to pay on boats. He said at page 16 of his address:

> Will Atlantic fishing be profitable enough so that, as in B.C., we can do away with all boat-building subsidies?

He has already done away with them. He is just flying a balloon there. The Newfoundland trawler fleet needs replacements over the next ten years. The minister is doing nothing but pooh-poohing the idea. A solemn commitment was made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Jamieson) in connection with the Cape Sambro. There is still owing $930,000 in federal payments. The minister has to get around that and get it paid or the commitment by the Secretary of State for External Affairs will be broken.

What is wrong with the federal bureaucracy? In my district of Arnold's Cove, there is a proposal from National Sea Products Limited. They want a million dollars in loans from the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. They want the ordinary DREE assistance for job creation to expand their fish plant in Arnold's Cove. They are going to take the herring and process it to the final finished product so that we will not be shipping it out in bulk to Norway and buying it back in little bottles with little bits of herring in them for 50 times the price.

● (2022)

This was the most successful proposal ever made to DREE. DREE complains that it cannot get enough proposals for private enterprise in Newfoundland and that is why they are so low in the payments they make under their program. Yet that proposal has been in since October and three or four weeks ago I received a silly reply from the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Lessard) saying that he doesn't yet know whether the fishery resource can stand the expansion of this plant which is going to create 67 new jobs at Arnold's Cove in the Come-By-Chance area where the unemployment rate, I venture to say, Mr. Speaker, is about 50 per cent.

I ask the Minister of Fisheries to give the minister for DREE a boot right where he ought to be booted and get that proposal out. Get this extension to the fish plant going at Arnold's Cove in Newfoundland. The hon. gentleman is closer to the Minister for DREE than I am or I would give him the boot myself. I have to use sweetness and light because I am in the opposition; I cannot use the harsh tactics I would otherwise use to expose this bureaucratic nonsense—that it takes five or six months to approve a proposal like this when money is lashed out by DREE in every direction in other provinces.

The German firm, Nordsee, Mr. Speaker, made a proposal to the FIRB—the Foreign Investment Review Board—at the beginning of December, 1977 to take over a 51 per cent interest in Ocean Harvesters Limited in Harbour Grace, and it has not been dealt with yet. No decision has been made five months later. The Minister of Fisheries says he is opposed to it. He is so rude, he is so ignorant in connection with the proposal, that he refuses even to see the Nordsee company or its representatives. He says he is not going to have any foreign capital investment in the fishery.

Well, this is a new departure, Mr. Speaker. The minister had better look at the figures and see how capital is flying out of Canada before he starts preventing foreign capital from coming in to our fishing industry. The minister makes vague statements such as this—I quote from his speech of May 3:

> Foreign capital investment need not and should not become a major feature of the Canadian fishing industry on the east coast or on the west.

Note the word "major". Who is arguing that it should be major? Here is a German firm that has the marketing expertise, one of the largest fishing companies in the world. It wants to invest in this plant in Harbour Grace and put five trawlers there. It will give year-round employment there and put the plant on its feet in an area of heavy unemployment in Newfoundland. Yet because of some ideological reason the Minister of Fisheries says he won't give them a licence for their trawlers. Who does he think he is? Does he think he is God? Does he think these hundreds of people in Harbour Grace should be denied year-round livelihood because of some ideological reason the minister does not even explain properly? He is not going to let our zone be taken over by the back door, he says, by foreign companies borrowing our flag to catch our fish. They don't need to borrow our flag to catch the fish. There are 500 of them with licences now. What utter tripe and nonsense, Mr. Speaker. "I do not want so see the Maple Leaf become the world's fishing flag", the minister says. What has that to do with it? I say the minister should finish this up. His deskmate just up the row here had a different attitude. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner) said, and I quote from the Globe and Mail of March 25:

> Trade and Commerce Minister Jack Horner has said that the Newfoundland Government has a "pretty compelling case" and indicated that the Foreign Investment Review Agency, which is now considering the application, should look favourably on it.

That's what the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce said, while the Minister of Fisheries says he has refused to give them a licence. The Newfoundland government now has a deal in which it has said that, in addition to many other safeguarding conditions, it is going to take a 6 per cent interest so that the German company cannot control Ocean Harvesters Limited. It will be controlled by Canadians. And yet we still have this stubborn attitude by the Minister of Fisheries, who does not explain very clearly why this proposal is to be prevented at all costs. You wonder that we are puzzled down in Newfoundland by all these peculiar things which are happening.

We are also puzzled in my district, in Bay Bulls, as to why a $3 million centre has not been started yet. In the December 5, 1977 Daily News the regional director of fisheries said the new multi-million-dollar marine service centre was going to be under construction early in 1978. They were going to station their fisheries vessels there. However, he is now saying that the planning is going ahead, that there should be some evidence of work on that facility before the end of 1978. Well, the evidence is not strong enough, Mr. Speaker. There is a dirty suspicion that it is not going ahead as quickly as it was. I won the by-election in 1976, and the people of Bay Bulls and I don't like it. I want that job under way very shortly, Mr. Speaker. Never mind the planning. I want the proof. I want them to carry out the plans that were announced for Bay Bulls.

The province seeks permission to lease freezer ships. The province has to ask the permission of the Minister of Fisheries of Canada to do anything you can think of, Mr. Speaker. In order to overcome the glut problem during peak periods in the cod fishery, the Newfoundland government wants to lease some freezer ships to help take the surplus fish. They haven't got an answer yet from the Minister of Fisheries.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired. He could continue with unanimous consent. Is there consent to allow the hon. member to complete his remarks?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Crosbie: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will have to cool it. Now, I do not wish to be unfair to the Minister of Fisheries. Quite seriously, I said I think he is the best Liberal Minister of Fisheries we have had since 1949. He has done many good things for the fishery. But, Mr. Speaker, he is on the verge of spoiling that very fine record with his attitude toward Newfoundland and the Atlantic provinces, for the very reasons I have described here. It is life and death to us and we are not going to leave our life or our death in the fishery in the hands of one minister in Ottawa. He has got to share his authority and his power. He has got to start a process of real consultation. He has got to show less arrogance. He has got to start listening to the provincial ministers. They are not dumb-dumbs or dodos. They have something to say and we have good departments of fisheries in our provinces—all four of them. We can see the old dreams of industrial glory are gone. They have gone down, and everybody has come back to the realization that it was the fishery which originally caused the settlement of Newfoundland, that it is what will save Newfoundland, if it is to be saved, as well as the offshore minerals which we trust will come in over the next 10 or 15 years.

This is why the minister has to learn to change his attitude, and it is why I suggest that the House of Commons fisheries committee should spend a couple of weeks with the minister and his officials, and with the provincial minister and his officials, and have a good look at the future policies of our fisheries and see if we can agree. Let us let it all hang out and get some of these problems solved, and get the fishery on a proper basis with real co-operation between the five governments.

Hon. Iona Campagnolo (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, I rise to participate in this special debate with pride and enthusiasm but also with some frustration and regret. I rise with pride because I come from a fishing industry family, because I know and respect and have fought for the needs of the fishing industry, and because I belong to a government which has done more for Canada's fishermen in the last four years than has been done in any previous period in our history.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Campagnolo: Extension of the fishery limit to 200 miles has added impetus to upgraded search and rescue capability and a $350 million enhancement program designed to double our catch of salmonoid species on the Pacific coast. Perhaps most important, a strong and informed and concerned Minister of Fisheries (Mr. LeBlanc) has been an effective advocate for all fishermen in this country. All these things have combined in recent years, Mr. Speaker, to make the prospects for the fishing industry look exceedingly bright for fishermen from Newfoundland to the Queen Charlotte Islands and from Yarmouth to Kincolith.

I also rise in frustration and regret, Mr. Speaker, because it is very clear that the real and serious problems which do exist in the fishing industry and in the relations of our country with the United States have been blown entirely out of proportion by those with a vested interest in sensationalism and in division. In the face of the undeniable proof of this government's understanding of the needs of the fishing industry and its remarkable commitment to meeting those needs, there are still some who say that we do not understand and that we are actively seeking to sell out to the Americans. This is not good logic. In fact this is not logic at all. I think I need only remind the House of our tough, reasoned approach in the current marine boundary and fish management negotiations and of the extensive consultations among the federal government, provincial governments and representatives of the fishing industry to put those silly conclusions that follow from such logic to rest.

I would like to deal with the aspects of the current marine boundaries negotiations which are of particular relevance to the Pacific coast, especially to the halibut fishery. But I want first of all to respond directly to the Conservative motion suggesting that there has been inadequate consultation between our negotiators and representatives of the fishing industry.

In less than a year there have been six plenary sessions of the joint U.S.-Canada boundary negotiations attended by so many industry and provincial representatives that one special observer I spoke to, sir, referred to it as a mini-United Nations. The groups from British Columbia which attended these successful sessions included the following: the Fisheries Association of British Columbia, representing many fish processors in the province, the Pacific Trollers' Association, the Pacific Gillnetters' Association, the Central Native Co-operative, representing the native people who have made the Bella Bella Cannery successful, the Native Brotherhood of B.C., the Prince Rupert Fishermen's Co-operative, The United Fishermen's and Allied Workers' Union; the Co-operative Fishermen's Guild, the Union of B.C. Indian Chiefs, the Nishga Tribal Council, The Association of B.C. Independent Fishermen, and the Fishing Vessel Owners of B.C.

● (2032)

In addition to the six plenary sessions, each of these groups has had the opportunity to participate in smaller sessions dealing with specific aspects of the fisheries agreement, those dealing with particular fish stocks or particular geographical areas.

When certain representatives were unable to attend sessions because of commitments elsewhere—for instance, if they were out fishing—the consultative process was held for them so that they could join with the negotiators. These special arrangements were made many times. Our ambassador, Mr. Cadieux, has done so personally at least three times to my knowledge, and his closest assistants have done exactly the same thing. It was only on April 20 that a party of four negotiating members of the team came to a public meeting in Prince Rupert organized by the Prince Rupert Labour Council and consulted at length.

In addition to industry consultations the federal negotiators have met frequently in many types of forums with representatives of the marine resources branch of the B.C. department of recreation and conservation. To imply that these people do not know how to negotiate I really believe is a shocking suggestion for the opposition to make. Speaking of that consultation, I have here three enormous pieces of paper—

Mr. Symes: Just enormous.

Mrs. Campagnolo: —which outline the consultations in minute detail by hour, date and time. Even the hon. member opposite could understand them. In any event, the tone of these meetings has been remarkably friendly and businesslike.

Mr. Woolliams: Read them out, honey.

Fisheries

Mrs. Campagnolo: Mr. Speaker, I do not believe we have to have sexist interruptions from the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams).

During these sessions the participants know that important work is being done. I would also like to point out for hon. members opposite that the salmonoid enhancement program is one which will benefit all west coasters. There are regulations to be thought of with regard to the Indian food fishery, which is a very high priority of the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment. Another priority is to ensure the safety of vessels during particularly difficult fisheries, such as the herring roe fishery just completed. Involved in these meetings were 17 private organizations and at least five provincial ministries.

Since the beginning of this year, the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment has had 14 separate meetings with industry representatives on the west coast. This record of briefing and consultation speaks for itself. The minister, his officials and the special negotiators charged with the difficult task of charting new marine boundaries and of ensuring the proper joint management of fish resources have been thorough in their efforts to consult the people they represent.

As always, there are those who apparently feel that they stand to gain politically or otherwise by spreading the patent lie that the Canadian government is selling out the interests of its citizens, and there are those who apparently delight in creating division and disunity for motives which are unclear to responsible Canadians.

I hope, now that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has put to rest the concerns of the opposition as to whether there will be an election—

Mr. Woolliams: He hasn't the courage.

Mrs. Campagnolo: —those delighters in division will take off their cloaks of hypocrisy and help us deal in a positive and constructive manner with the real problems we face.

We face a number of problems with respect to Canadian-American fishing relations, and we face them because certain elements of the American fishing industry are clearly trying to subvert the intent of the 1978 interim fisheries agreement reached between our two countries, an agreement which provides for compensation for Canadian fishermen who suffered losses as a result of the failure of the Americans to live up to the terms of the 1977 interim agreement.

Mr. Woolliams: You can make a good speech; why do you want to read?

Mrs. Campagnolo: The hon. gentleman opposite should take note of the fact that his friend, the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie), said that we must remember that sweetness and light are the watchwords for all oppositionists.

In any event, I want to go back to the interim agreement. Certainly it was an unfortunate situation in 1977 and, if actions rather than threats are taken in violation of the interim agreement, then Canadian fishing interests will suffer. Certainly the interests of our fishermen must be protected. This government will protect them, as any responsible observer will agree that it has been doing all along. But is shrill rhetoric and painting images of sell-out and the threatening of a fish war the most responsible and productive way to go about resolving the situation? Nobody wins in a fish war, least of all the fish, on which the future earnings of all fishermen depend. The issue is too important and too complex for the simple slogans and scare stories that some parties seem to prefer to consultation and advice.

As an example of the complexities involved I wish briefly to discuss the problems faced by just one of the fisheries which may be affected by American failure to honour the interim agreement. The 1978 halibut fishing season opens next Monday, May 15, and already the boats have set out from Prince Rupert to the waters off the Alaska panhandle and into Dixon Entrance. It is a small but important fishery off Alaska, with 30 to 40 vessels and some 300 fishermen taking part. It is both historic and important to the north, and it is an international fishery. In the coming year Canadian fishermen are expected to land halibut from Alaskan waters worth approximately $4.7 million. American fishermen could land halibut from Canadian waters worth about $700,000. In other words, the potential loss to Canadian fishermen this year, if they were denied access to the U.S. zone, would be in the amount of approximately $4 million.

Clearly, those who speak eagerly about a fish war are not doing so with the best interests of our halibut fishermen in mind. If, indeed, worse should come to worst and we should decide that we must terminate the interim fisheries agreement because of American failure to abide by its terms, then our halibut fishermen would be among the first, and unfortunately, the worst, losers. They would have to be—and I am assured that they would be—compensated by our government for their losses, but surely they would prefer and surely we would all prefer that they be out on the fishing waters they have traditionally fished.

The elements of the current interim agreement which some U.S. fishermen insist on ignoring—causing us to retaliate—are those relating to protection and management of our own fishery. The need for conservation is clearly evidenced by the need to increase the take of valuable protein from the sea and to provide employment for a strong fisheries industry on the west coast.

As fish have the annoying habit of swimming from the territorial waters of one country to those of another, and as fishermen apparently have trouble, on occasion, charting exactly where an ocean boundary is when the line is on the map and not on the water, it is clearly understood that international agreements are needed to protect this resource, and we must have the assurance that individual fishermen will live up to those agreements. We do not want to be without an agreement with the Americans, but an agreement which is not interpreted in the same way by both sides may be worse than none at all. Our course is clear. We want to have an agreement. The fisheries resource needs the protection of a universally accepted agreement. The fact that we are not prepared to sign an agreement which does not offer these assurances is ample proof that no sell-out has ever been considered nor, indeed, ever will be.

There is one more aspect of the halibut fishery to which I would like to return for a moment, and that is the question of the A-B line, the Dixon Entrance portion of the boundary between Canada and the Alaska panhandle. The halibut fishery takes place in Dixon Entrance in waters on both sides of the A-B line. There is legitimate concern on the part of Canadian fishermen that American officials may act on the American position that the A-B line is a disputed boundary and seize Canadian vessels within three miles of that line.

● (2042)

While I do not expect this to happen, especially if cooler heads prevail and inflammatory statements and actions are subdued, I know our government is aware of the situation, is monitoring it very closely, and is prepared to offer full assistance to any Canadian vessel should it be illegally detained by American authorities.

What concerns me more than this, however, are the ill-founded and potentially dangerous rumours being circulated by those who either should know better or perhaps feel they stand to gain in some mysterious way by being irresponsible. Perhaps their gain will be political. The rumours indicate that Canada has acceded to American demands to shift the A-B line south. In the clearest possible language, such reports are not true. The only possible reason for movement of the A-B line would be if the Americans offered us something better, an irresistible offer of something better for Canadian fishermen in return. They have not done this, and consequently we have made no agreement to move the A-B line. The likelihood is slim indeed that we ever will.

I am concerned about this because among the people spreading such patently false rumours is one person who has acted as an adviser to the Canadian negotiating team, one who has been the recipient of confidential briefing information and who is aware of what the Canadian position is. This person is a regular guest on CBC news and knows full well that no agreement has been made to move the A-B line. Yet for whatever misplaced reason, this person continues to foster this myth, along with others of clearer political motivation. That can only weaken the position of our negotiating team.

This motion is about consultation and the alleged lack of consultation by the government with parties concerned about the future of our fishing industry. This motion is utter nonsense. I suggest a little more responsibility and serious concern is needed on the part of some hon. members opposite.

Mr. Woolliams: More reading.

Mrs. Campagnolo: The hon. member opposite seems to have had a bubbly dinner. In any event, it is a lovely spring day, and I am sure he enjoyed it. However, hon. members opposite seem to think they have a vested interest in destroying the effectiveness of the Canadian bargaining position. We are all Canadians, and the best bargaining position for Canada is something which cannot be played with and toyed with in the House.

Just as the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) proved himself to be a speculator's delight in his recent open-mouthed efforts to embarrass the government by single-handedly weakening the international credibility of the Canadian dollar, again we are faced with a position where some of our allegedly concerned individuals are in fact destructive tinkerers. Instead of attempting to single out the need for consultation as a government weakness, I suggest opposition parties should look carefully at their own performance in the House and try for the first time to fit into their personal vocabularies words like "co-operation" and "responsibility", and not criticize the full consultation which the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment has initiated.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, in spite of what the minister has said, and in spite of what the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Anderson) said earlier this afternoon, I have a group of clippings which indicate that there is no reasonable consultation, and if there is, it is after the fact rather than before.

An article in the Ottawa Citizen dated May 6, 1978 reads as follows:

> Federal Fisheries Minister Roméo LeBlanc promised Friday to reconsider controversial regulations recently placed on Bay of Fundy scallop fishermen.

Also his success is illustrated in the following headline, "Cdn. boats banned from U.S. West coast". Another headline reads, "Interim deal 'not binding' ". "Provinces still ask for power", "LeBlanc to review issue", and "Nfld. wants local fisheries control" are other headlines which I can use as examples.

I could go on, but I will not bore the House as time is of the essence at this particular moment. I suppose this evening's news gave the basic philosophical reason as to why this motion was brought forth. Although it does not particularly apply to the minister, it applies to the practices of the government in general. When Mrs. Ostry spoke tonight in order to receive her publicity, she stated that it was one thing to consult, it was one thing for people to make suggestions, but it did not necessarily mean the government had to take the suggestions. Perhaps a slight change in the phraseology of the motion is required. Perhaps hon. members opposite would care to amend it. But basically the consultative process has not functioned effectively or amicably between the Government of Canada and the various fishing ministries across the nation.

The predecessor to the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment has been criticized and blamed at various times in the House, but he initiated one program which was well worth while. It gave this House more information about the fishing industry than it had gained in 25 years prior to the 1972-74 period. At that time, the minister of fisheries brought before the standing committee representatives of the seiners' associations, the weir fishermen's associations, the B.C. Fishing Association, the Newfoundland Fishing Association, the freshwater people from central Canada, and others. These people came before the committee and presented their briefs. We considered their problems. We were making an element of progress toward the solution of those problems.

This seemed to be embarrassing to the present minister. He does not want to see fishermen before the committee. He does not want the House of Commons to have the truth. He does not want the attitude of some members of the fishing industry toward his high-handed handling of this very important industry to be known. Since he has become minister, not a fisherman has had a voice before the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry. We are kept with our blinders on.

An hon. Member: It is not true.

Mr. Whiteway: It is true.

Mr. McCain: I may be in error only once since 1974. Perhaps they appeared once. It can be checked out and I stand to be corrected. I do not object to that. It was the general practice in 1972 to 1974. If fishermen have appeared before the committee to discuss their problems, it would be the exception since and not the rule as it was before. It was a good practice. It is the practice of virtually every other committee of the House. It is the practice of the Standing Committee on Agriculture to hear representations from the horticultural council and from the Federation of Agriculture. Why do we not hear from the fishermen in committee?

The minister has been aloof, inflexible and autocratic. He wants a maximum of organization and a minimum of constraint. The constraints appear in the fact that one cannot get a licence, and that people fish according to regulations which are very constrained. That does not work. The minister brought this motion on himself by creating inflexible situations, as well as by the unreasonable regulations which he has imposed at all levels of the fishing industry.

I should like to refer to a speech which the minister gave before the Fisheries Council of Canada. In part it reads as follows:

> At a time of easy sales and of trade advantage for the dollar, I can understand those who feel that government has no business in the marketing plans of the nation. That is not my view. I have constantly insisted on the need for a strong Canadian presence in fish markets.

By that he meant a strong Canadian government presence. It continues:

> We stand in the position of becoming the number one fish exporters in the world, or the owner of the world's largest fish warehouses.

● (2052)

We have had example after example of criticism by the Auditor General of the performance of Crown corporations in general. We have had particular criticism of two Crown corporations that are dealing specifically and solely with the marketing of fish products from this nation. Both have been criticized and are under the scrutiny, to some degree, of the committee of the House of Commons. That committee chose in its wisdom to treat the matter firmly but briefly in the best interests of the fishing industry. I plead with the minister; let us take the proper position of government in respect of the marketing of this or any other commodity. Let us not get any further into Crown corporations marketing fish products. Do we want to have another AECL? Do we want another situation in which the fishermen do not know where their money has gone or why it has gone to international sales organizations in this world? That is a wrong position for governments to take.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McCain: There are those who say this is the only way, but I find in the main that they have never sat behind a desk to conduct international trade in a multitude of countries. I have found that those who have sat in a managerial position and who understand the finesse that is needed to market products on an international basis are not those who say that the government should do the business. Again, I give to the fishermen the example of AECL. Just beware before you get involved in further Crown corporations.

The government should involve itself in the marketing process, but only to a degree. The government has at its disposal information which is not available to probably a single processor, and certainly not to a single fisherman or group of fishermen or fishermen's co-operatives. The government has that information which should be assimilated and put forward to all levels of the industry in an intelligent form which everybody can understand. The fishermen should know on a daily or weekly basis what the international markets of the world or the domestic markets of Canada or the United States will pay for a pound of fish. The fishermen should and must know this, and so should those who are marketing fish, whether they be brokers, processors or engaged in some other capacity in processing and marketing.

The Department of Agriculture does just this. It circulates market information so that at every level of the agricultural industry there is an understanding of what is the price today and the potential tomorrow. That is important and the government should co-operate with industry in this regard.

The government should activate the trade commissions of this country in the one hundred or more countries in which they are located. Those trade commissioners should be told that, as fish is one of our major potential exports, as the minister has said, and I agree, they should get up out of their plush-lined chairs and get out and sell agriculture products, fish products and manufactured products. They should be told that is their job, that they should find out what is the potential in their markets, what is the price there, and send that information back home to advise our people what is available in those areas. That is what the government should do to help everybody.

I do not think one needs to expand on that. The government in virtually every aspect of Canadian business has been negligent as it has tried to expand the markets for Canadian goods and services world wide, and it has been particularly negligent in promoting the sale of agricultural and fish products.

The statistics which come to hand would indicate we have a declining catch of quite a number of species important to the Canadian fishing industry. The fisherman is asking why we have this declining catch and does not have the answer. The research scientist does not seem to have the answer. When you go to the research stations around this nation the scientists cannot give you the exact answer. The fishermen are asking questions which I think should be answered. Is the answer that the stocks are declining? If a stock is declining, is that because there are too many Canadian licences or are we granting too many foreign licences? Is the Canadian fisherman getting enough licences for the stocks that exist or could there be more of them so we can increase the catch in that way? Could we cut back some—not cut out but cut back—on quantities which are extended within our 200-mile limit to other nations? Is there too little surveillance? Perhaps there are not too many licences issued to foreign fishermen, but is there enough surveillance? Do we know now any better than before what the foreign fleet is catching?

Is there too much incidental catch? We do know that for some reason or other in an area where salmon fishing is not legal you can get Atlantic salmon in any restaurant between Montreal and Sydney. You cannot legally fish salmon for sale, but you can sell incidental catch. The people who are interested in the salmon industry want to know how come there is such a major supply of incidentally caught salmon which you can eat in the restaurants of this nation. The Government of Canada is still paying the commercial salmon fishermen not to fish, yet there is still salmon for sale. Is it correct, as rumour would suggest, that we do have an organized salmon sales organization? Is it correct that if you catch thirty salmon incidentally in a net today there is no problem selling them beneficially before nightfall? That is more than a rumour and it requires investigation by the minister and his staff.

What we do know is that while the minister is continuing to pay millions of dollars so that commercial salmon fishermen do not fish there is no surveillance along the rivers and streams which effectively prevents commercial poaching structures that exist in the fresh water system of Atlantic Canada and eastern Quebec. Is there a comparable poaching problem in the salt water nearby the shores of eastern Canada? It would seem that there may well be.

Why are there declining stocks and declining catches? The fishermen's income is not that bad. As a matter of fact, in most instances the income is very good. However, I do think Canada should be concerned about the decline in the pounds of fish caught, and the minister should be doing his best within market capabilities to see that we recover the poundage of catch we had so we can get back into fishing those people who have left in the last ten years.

The minister suggested how great the industry is. He mentioned the wrong era. In the era he mentioned of the 1950s and the 1960s a man could get assistance from the Government of Canada in the form of a subsidy to buy a boat. He could get a licence, and in spite of the fact that prices were lower the fishermen often paid for a $300,000, $400,000 or $500,000 seiner in three, four or five years with special concessions from the income tax branch, also granted by the government.

Today you could not afford to build a boat if you wanted to, because you could not get a subsidy. If you did build a boat, you could not get a licence as you could in former days, and it is highly improbable that you could get a special permit from the department of internal revenue in order to pay off the cost of that boat in a short period of time. The circumstances which made that an expansion era in the fishing industry in the Bay of Fundy have now ended. You cannot get a licence and you cannot buy a boat. The fishermen are getting more money but their seines cost three times as much, their nets for weirs cost three times as much and fuel costs more than three times as much. The number of subsidies is down and the amount of income tax is up. It is just about time the Government of Canada took a long, hard look at the real income of some of these fishermen. We have to get back into the fishing industry and we have to issue more licences.

• (2102)

We have got to allow people to improve their boats, restore a reasonable level of subsidy from the Government of Canada, and become more aware of the consultative processes that are necessary so that the federal and provincial governments can co-operate in the planning of a resource which in Atlantic Canada's mind is as much theirs as is the oil of Alberta. The one belongs to the one as much as the one belongs to the other. You cannot regulate the oil of Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba or British Columbia. You can tax it to death, and the government just about has, but still maintains control. The Minister of Fisheries is determined that he will maintain absolute control of the water resources of fish, minerals and whatever else may be under the surface. To a degree that is inexcusable and unacceptable. As long as he wishes to use that high-handed authority of his, there will not be contentment on the subject anywhere in Atlantic Canada.

An hon. Member: I can refute that on the grounds of what I heard last week when I was in the maritimes.

Mr. McCain: I wish you would. You were not that well accepted down there last week, were you? You ought to try that round again. I can tell the hon. member right now that New Brunswick wants control of its oil and fish, if any, and he is fully aware of that as well. Just ask your minister to treat the fish, minerals and oil, if any, in the same way as in Alberta.

The minister has refused to accept that we should even have one trawler with freezing capacity. It seems awfully funny to me that this would not be practicable in Canada, and I want to tell the House why. The licence goes to a Japanese boat which sails clear across the Pacific Ocean and either around the tip of South America or through the Panama Canal and up the Atlantic seaboard of North America, and it fishes those fish which would not be profitable for Canada. Having travelled that far it is still profitable. I want an explanation, and a detailed explanation, as to why that boat would not be used profitably if it was Canadian owned. It is a very fragile story that the minister told us this afternoon in respect to that facet of the fishing structure.

In view of the number of people who would like to express their views in this debate, I am not going to go any further tonight. As the member from Newfoundland stated, if you had until midnight tonight you would not have said it all, and you could not have said it all. I have said enough to prove that the consultative process is necessary, that a comprehension of the industry in the ministry is necessary, that both are lacking and that the consultation is after the fact and conducted in bad feeling, as it was in Nova Scotia, as it is in Newfoundland and as it has been in eastern Canada, central Canada and western Canada. The fishing industry in Canada cannot reach the peak it should as long as a process of autocratic confrontation or consultation after the fact exists. The irritation remains. If that policy does not come to an end, the Canadian fishing industry cannot achieve the level of success which it deserves and which the fishermen in particular deserve.

Mr. William Rompkey (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to take part in this debate. First of all, I want to correct the record on at least one thing that the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) said. He said there were no more subsidies on fishing vessels. That, at least in my province, is not true. The subsidies still exist. There is a 35 per cent subsidy still in effect on boats between 30 feet and 45 feet and boats between 60 feet and 65 feet. As a matter of fact, an additional amount of $250,000 was put into Newfoundland from Canada Works funds this past winter for job creation purposes. The subsidy still exists on vessels and longliners, plus there is still a subsidy from industry, trade and commerce on vessels over 75 feet.

This motion seems to have more to do with personalities than with the substance of policy. I do not know if that is because the opposition feels that the policy is good as it stands—I certainly do—but I feel the emphasis is on personality and the failure to consult. But even there I find an ambivalence, because the hon. member for St. John's West began and ended by saying that this was the greatest Minister of Fisheries since 1949, excluding Tory ministers of which there have not been very many since 1949. However, in the middle of his speech he said everything that this minister has done was wrong. He has not done anything right. I cannot see how that is a consistent argument.

One of the arguments the opposition is making is that the minister is failing to consult with the provinces. I heard the phrase this evening, "We are not going to be dictated to by the Ottawa bureaucracy". If you look at the bureaucracy within the fisheries service in Ottawa, you will find that a great many of them are in fact Newfoundlanders, people who lived by the sea, grew up by the sea and made themselves expert in fishing. Some of our top negotiators and policy makers within the fisheries department are from Newfoundland.

An hon. Member: Name some.

Mr. Rompkey: I can name them but it is not the practice to name such people in the House. I will be glad, however, to send the hon. member a list of these people within the fishery service who I am talking about. In fact, somebody last week from Atlantic Canada said, "We are no longer going to be dictated to by the Newfoundland mafia in Ottawa." Check your papers and you will find the quote, "Newfoundland mafia". Hon. members cannot have it both ways. You cannot say on the one hand that you are being dictated to by a foreign bureaucracy in Ottawa when in fact there is adequate evidence that fisheries policy, apart form the political level, is being constructed by Newfoundlanders, born and bred and well educated.

The opposition is talking about consultation and the minister's failure to consult. My friend from Comox-Alberni (Mr. Anderson) put on the record reams and reams—and I have them in front of me now—of consultations that the ministry of fisheries held. I do not hear the president of the fishermen's union in Newfoundland saying that he has not been consulted, although I do hear the minister of fisheries from Newfoundland saying that he has not been consulted.

I am also told that this subject is not political and has nothing to do with politics. We have a minister from Nova Scotia of one political stripe and a minister from Newfoundland of another political stripe. Obviously, these people are Simon pure and are the Robin Hoods of eastern Canada, and they are not doing this for political purposes. Well, if there is no politics involved why is it I have not got on my desk this great $900 million plan? Nor do the hon. member for Bonavista-Trinity-Conception (Mr. Rooney), the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker) or the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo (Mr. Jamieson) have it on their desks. If there is no politics, why have we not been consulted?

I am a Newfoundlander and I have some rights. I may not have the total say in shaping the policy, but I have some say. If there is this lack of consultation on the part of the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. LeBlanc), why is it that the minister of fisheries from Newfoundland has not seen fit to consult any Newfoundlanders in Ottawa? He cannot have it both ways. He cannot say on the one hand that we are not consulting with him if, on the other hand, he is not consulting with us. And he is not. I challenge him to show me a letter, any speech that he has given or any document from him that is in my possession. If somebody can find that I would be pleased to see it. We have not been consulted.

The fact is the only people who saw that document were the press. It was a political episode, and I think that it should be viewed in that light. The provincial ministers were playing politics with the issue. They saw that things were good and they wanted to get on the bandwagon; therefore they took this tack. I do not think it was a very positive or creative tack, but if they want to play games that way then that is their prerogative. The plain and simple fact is that that episode of the plan of the Atlantic provinces, which was not paid attention to in Ottawa, was in my opinion a political episode.

In the long run one may be able to fool members of parliament, the cabinet, bureaucrats and even the press. No, I would not go so far as to say you can fool the press. But there is one other group that you cannot fool, and that is the fishermen. The fishermen realize that this Minister of Fisheries, if he is anything, is not a minister of fisheries but of fishermen. There is adequate proof of that.

● (2112)

As well as saying that they are not being consulted, the provinces are saying that they want more control. I think we have to be very, very careful about that and continue to see that resource as a Canadian resource. I do not think we can consider the resource as being Newfoundland fish, Nova Scotia fish or British Columbia fish; where would we stop? If that concept were taken a little farther the stocks would have to be split up and somehow divided.

The hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain) read some press clippings during this debate which said that the provinces want control and authority over the fishery. But if they were to get that authority would they, in turn, appoint an authority over each bay? In Newfoundland, for example, if the minister of fisheries there were to get authority over the province, would be then turn authority over the stocks in Labrador to the people of Labrador?

The hon. member for St. John's West said that Newfoundland now has a great fisheries department and that he built it up. I give him credit for that—credit where credit is due. He did. At the present time, however, they do not have one single provincial fisheries officer in Labrador. If anybody can find one and identify him for me, I would be glad to see him, but as far as I know, there is not one. If they have such a great department and are going to exercise authority, when are they going to appoint some officials?

I do not think you can take that argument to its ultimate conclusion because it means a balkanization, splitting up rather than working together. I believe we should see this as a Canadian resource. I also feel that the people who are contiguous to the resource should have the primary chance to harvest the stock. I think that is also the minister's view. It seems to me that to balkanize the fishery would lead us into very deep water indeed. This is a time when we should act together as Canadians and not balkanize.

The minister has not only been accused of not consulting but also of not initiating a policy for the protection and development of the Canadian fishing industry. I said that this was a minister of fishermen. This is the government and this is the minister that brought in the 200-mile limit. I also said that you could not fool the fishermen. Do not try to tell fishermen along the northeast coast of Newfoundland that the fishery has been mismanaged, and in particular do not tell them that when fish landings have gone up by 30 to 40 per cent. They will find it difficult to believe that the fishery has been mismanaged.

This is the minister who a couple of years ago, when the fishing industry in this country was in trouble because Korea had hit the United States market with some cheaper fish and outbid us in that market upon which we are so dependent, obtained almost $200 million from the government to shore up the Atlantic fishing industry until he could develop an effective policy.

This is the minister who for the first time put subsidies in the pockets of fishermen. Until a couple of years ago it was the fish companies—the merchant princes of Water Street—who received the subsidies in the province of Newfoundland. Two years ago, two cents per pound on top quality groundfish went to the fishermen for the first time. This is not the Minister of Fisheries, this is the minister of fishermen. This is the minister who has put subsidies on new vessels, who has continued to build marine facilities all around the coast of Atlantic and Pacific Canada. This is the minister who has stressed the inshore fishery as opposed to the offshore.

The hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte spoke of the advent of more freezer trawlers. He should recognize, when that sort of thing happens, that if you increase the offshore fleet you simply replace the foreign fishing effort with a Canadian effort that will be in direct competition with Canadian inshore fishermen. It has been the policy of this government to stress the importance of the inshore fishery—as a matter of fact, to take off the top of the groundfish quota every year, a percentage for the inshore fishery. I think the hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte should remember the competition that more freezer trawlers for the offshore fleet would provide for the inshore fishery.

The latest policy for the improvement of facilities is a four-year $13 million program to equip about 200 ports with such things as net-bags, hoists and freezer containers to ensure top quality inshore fisheries.

This is the minister, Mr. Speaker, who very dramatically in the past couple of years stood up to world opinion on the matter of the seal hunt. I did not hear anyone on the other side of the House mention that today, although for the last three years the government and opposition have been battling jointly to get the law changed. In all fairness I think that should have been mentioned today and some credit given where it was due.

This is the minister who did not cave in, who did not get weak knees at the expression of adverse public opinion across the world and who changed the law to give greater protection to sealers who depend on that resource for part of their livelihood.

This is the minister who was building new research vessels and who has encouraged research in stocks off our shores. The shrimp, for example, has been described by some people as a virtual gold mine, and it is hoped that in the next couple of years we will begin harvesting shrimp and scallop and other species that we have not harvested up to now. I hope the minister will be making a statement on that in the next few days.

Then there is the matter of ownership of the fleet. The minister has said that his policy leads to ownership by fishermen of a greater part of the fishing fleet. The result is that, where appropriate, ownership of some part of the fleet by processing companies may decrease. This policy is intended to establish all fishing vessels as profit centres which would lead to the development of a better port market-pricing system for landings of fish.

Along with the independent ownership of vessels by fishermen, the minister has proposed credit requirements. In recognition of the fact that the resource availability will continue to improve and that the industry is on the road to development, the minister is saying that a requirement for credit financing could be expected for new and replacement facilities, including vessels. It is his intention to promote the development of a credit institution which will satisfy this requirement. It is intended that the credit institution will play an important role in implementing the policy to encourage independent fishermen to own vessels. This is important to fishermen. They do not have it now; it is something they should have and something the minister is working toward.

The next concern is increasing the Canadian share of the catch. We have heard tonight that foreigners are continually fishing off our shores, but that is a bit of a myth, Mr. Speaker. Primarily the fish they catch is fish that we as Canadians are not able to catch anyway. What have we done about the Canadian share of the catch since the 200-mile limit was imposed? The Canadian government has set quotas for 1978 that will keep foreigners almost completely out of our traditional fisheries such as cod, herring, haddock and redfish. In the cod fishery of southern Labrador and eastern Newfoundland where a few years ago foreigners took over 650,000 metric tonnes, they will now have a quota of 35,000 metric tonnes for 1978 whereas Canadians will harvest 100,000 metric tonnes. The remaining foreign quotas will be almost all in species that Canada does not fish in any great amount—silver hake, capelin, argentine and so on.

The minister has also instituted other programs for the supply of ice which again helps to produce quality fish. I could go on and on, Mr. Speaker. There is the matter of additional quotas for inshore fishermen and policies to protect them. There are other policies which are coming into being and which we on this side of the House will help establish.

I think it is unfortunate that this particular motion deals with personalities rather than the substance of policy. The evidence is there with regard to the policy; the evidence is there with regard to the performance of this government and this minister particularly. He is seen by the fishermen to be their minister. That is not only evidenced in his policy but in the way he conducts himself. While it may be possible to fool some of the people some of the time, it is not possible to fool the fishermen in this instance. It must be abundantly clear by now that if there were a vote tonight, I would vote against this motion.

[Mr. Rompkey.]

• (2122)

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I rise to make a brief contribution to this very timely motion introduced by my colleague, the hon. member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse). The concern expressed in the motion is very genuine and has been very eloquently endorsed by a number of my colleagues.

The two areas of deep concern outlined in this motion affect all Canadians, whether they live on the east coast, the west coast or in central Canada. The total lack of a consultative process between the federal Department of Fisheries and its provincial counterparts and the failure to develop a positive policy for the protection and development of the Canadian fishing industry is disturbing, to say the least.

I would also like to debunk the myth that the fishing industry is somehow the domain of our two coastal communities. We in central Canada, and in Ontario in particular, do indulge in fishing in pursuit of leisure. On the other hand, the commercial fishing industry offers employment to about 4,000 to 5,000 people and the catch is close to 40 million pounds a year. Currently the cash flow from this very important and growing industry is in the vicinity of $20 million for landed catch. This could be doubled to $40 million in retail sales.

These statistics, in a very small way, underscore my earlier remark about the importance of commercial fishing in the province of Ontario. We on this side of the House make an urgent plea to the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment (Mr. LeBlanc) to embark on some long-range and constructive policies in collaboration with his provincial counterparts in order to inject some life into an industry which is currently on weak economic ground. There need to be some constructive policies adopted in the area of fisheries resource management.

We in central Canada must join our coastal colleagues in this House who represent some thriving fishing communities on both coasts to express our concern about the violation of our 200-mile territorial limit. We have been very fortunate to enjoy an extremely amiable relationship with our southern neighbour. It will be a tragedy if we succumb to petty territorial rivalries with our neighbours and friends over commercial interests in fishing. It behooves the government, Mr. Speaker, to take urgent and positve action in engaging in serious and genuine consultations with our southern neighbour. The urgency and seriousness of the matter has been profoundly underscored in the past few days by my colleague, the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro).

My apprehension stems from the fact that this government may oversee the demise of our illustrious fishing industry in precisely the same manner in which it ruined our shipbuilding industry. The government's policy in the area of fisheries is shortsighted and erratic, similar to the deficient and bankrupt policies being implemented by the government to deal with our economic woes.

We are not asking the government to perform miracles. The fishing industry needs and certainly deserves a long-range plan of action which will introduce some form of stability, in contrast to the patchwork policies being pursued by the Department of Fisheries.

This morning I had the privilege of sitting as a member of the external affairs committee when the estimates of CIDA were being debated and questioned. The witness before the committee was Mr. Dupuy, the president of CIDA. It is interesting to note that that branch of external affairs has a budget of $1.2 billion, which was dealt with in less that two hours because of the present committee set-up. I am sure the president will not be back before the committee and the estimates will be deemed to be passed as of the end of this month.

I bring this to the attention of the House because in that over $1 billion of estimates there was one small item of $32 million which was earmarked for ten fishing projects. I certainly find no fault with CIDA projects to help countries in the third world. Part of that amount will be used for agricultural development, food. Part will be used to improve the fishery, part to provide boats, small boats, I believe, rather than the very expensive boats which CIDA provided in past years. Another part of the money will be used for fishing schools and training and also for outboard motors.

These projects worth $32 million are earmarked for this year, provided the third world countries and Canada work out suitable arrangements, which I certainly expect they will. There are also projects in the amount of $26 million on the board for the future.

The province I represent, Ontario, receives only $4 million of the entire budget of the Department of Fisheries, less than 9 per cent. One little department of CIDA will receive three and a half times that amount. The combined revenues of the commercial fishery and sports fishery of Ontario equals the amount of revenue generated by either of the coasts. Members on either side of the House may look at this askance, but that is correct. The province of Ontario is probably not assumed to be a commercial fishing province. I wanted that mentioned specifically.

Ontario has 25 per cent of the fresh water in Canada, several thousand miles of shoreline and approximately 53 per cent of all the small craft in Canada. There are 455 harbours. Granted, a good many are recreational harbours, but a good number are dual harbours.

Ontario is getting short-changed with regard to the amount of money allocated, considering that Ontario has more shoreline than the province of Quebec. However, the Quebec allotment is greater than Ontario. That does not even include the allocated amount for the Montreal harbour. I was under the impression that was around $26 million, but someone mentioned it is closer to $40 million. In addition, a tremendous amount is earmarked for Quebec City.

The province of Ontario contributes a considerable amount to the national coffers, but gets the short end of the stick when the Department of Fisheries and the Environment is handing out money. It is very important that Ontario at least get its share. As I mentioned before, it should at least get half its share.

We are talking about commercial fishing, but sport fishing is also important. It generates amounts in the millions of dollars. It is estimated that Ontario has 53 per cent of all pleasure boats in Canada. Our dual harbours are used for both commercial fishing and tourism. It is therefore important that the provinces should have additional moneys available with which to improve facilities. I have received letters from municipalities requesting improvements to docks. The regional manager of Environment Canada in charge of small harbours informs me that he appreciates the situation but that the available budget is cut to the bone and no additional funds are available. A few days ago I contacted the department because one of the municipalities had requested improvements to the docks. The regional manager said that nothing could be done before 1979-80.

• (2132)

So here again we find the little province of Ontario, which is contributing greatly to federal revenues, in a less than favourable position. I see hon. members smiling. I say it is just as well to have it on record. Everybody seems to think Ontario is the most favoured province, but a good many other provinces are fortunate that Ontario is able to contribute such large amounts of money in so many directions.

Tourism is another important means of generating money. I draw attention to the fact that there are 110 million Americans living within one day's drive of Ontario. And don't think they are not coming over here in droves. Naturally, we would like to see them coming in even greater numbers to help make Ontario and Canada green, but to encourage this movement it is important that we have the facilities they need, including upgraded harbours.

I will close, now, Mr. Speaker, realizing that there are others who wish to contribute to the debate this evening.

Mr. Herb Breau (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to take part in the debate this evening, consideration of a motion which condemns the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. LeBlanc), allegedly because there has been a lack of consultation. I do not want to spend much time on that part of the motion because the minister himself and his parliamentary secretary have dealt with it adequately. The minister tabled this afternoon a list of the meetings and consultations in which he has taken part, together with provincial representatives, fishermen's groups and other organizations. It is a record unmatched by any other minister.

Not only has the present minister been the best Minister of Fisheries, as the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) admitted this evening, but he has consulted more widely with provincial governments and others before reaching decisions. As I say, I do not want to spend too much time on the consultation aspect because it seems to me the opposition speakers were not particularly interested in it; they were more interested in finding other grounds for criticizing the minister.

The basis of the argument put forward by the hon. member for St. John's West was that the government did not seem to be interested in developing the Atlantic fishery. He told us that the government of Newfoundland, for example, was putting more resources into fishery development than the federal government. But look at the facts. The 1976 fisheries policy paper indicated that the average expenditure between 1973 and 1975 on resource management and development in the Atlantic region was $89.7 million by the federal government, of which $74.3 million was spent by the Department of Fisheries and Environment and $21 million by the provinces. So there is no question that the federal government has been spending the majority of the funds allocated to fisheries development in Atlantic Canada since 81 per cent of the funds so expended came from that source.

There was another erroneous assumption made by the hon. member for St. John's West. He complained about the fact that 500 permits have been given to foreign fishing vessels which fish in Canadian fishing waters. What he omitted to mention was the type of fish these vessels were catching. Canada took 34 per cent of all fish caught off the Atlantic coast in 1974 but have 53 per cent of the total annual catch in 1978. Most of the remainder consists of non-traditional species such as capelin. For traditional groundfish, cod, haddock and so on, the percentage taken by Canada was 32 per cent in 1974 and is expected to be 69 per cent in 1978.

Allowing for allocations to the U.S. and to France—St. Pierre and Miquelon—and for allocations of stocks either exclusively beyond 200 miles or straddling the boundary, foreign nations have only 13 per cent of the traditional groundfish. The hon. member complained loudly because there are a lot of foreign vessels fishing within the 200-mile limit but he forgot to mention that they are fishing for species which Canada has not eaten traditionally, for which Canada does not have processing facilities and which Canada is not used to marketing. So when we see incorrect assumptions of this kind being made by hon. members on the other side we conclude that the opposition does not really have much to criticize. They do not really have much of a case.

I should like to deal mainly with another aspect of this subject. Members of the Conservative party seem very preoccupied by the development plans put forward by Newfoundland and Nova Scotia and then, presumably, by the four Atlantic provinces. I was very surprised to hear the hon. member from New Brunswick, the hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain), say that he thought the province should have control over the resource, that the province should control the fisheries. I hope the hon. member and others of his party go to New Brunswick and campaign on that issue in the forthcoming election. I wonder if the hon. member knows that the province of New Brunswick backtracked quite hastily when they realized the implications of what they were saying.

The hon. member knows that fish swim, that we must rebuild the stock in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, rebuild the Atlantic fishery and restore it to the place it occupied 20 years ago. How can that be done if control over resource management and development is given to Newfoundland or to Nova Scotia? A few years ago a number of members, I believe the hon. member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse) was one, were scandalized at the suggestion that foreign trawlers should move into the Gulf of St. Lawrence; it would have taken them a matter of weeks to have denuded the area.

● (2142)

The hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte, a member from my province, said this evening that we should give the responsibility for the management of fishery resources to the provinces. In other words, he would be prepared to say to the fishermen of northeastern New Brunswick that they should not get a share of the improvement resulting from the declaration of the 200-mile limit. He would be prepared to say that they should get nothing but that Newfoundland should get everything. Mr. Speaker, the fishery resource is owned by all the people in Canada, and the people of New Brunswick, people from my constituency and from the constituency of the hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte, do not expect the Government of Canada to give up responsibility for managing the fishery resource in this country.

Mr. McCain: All those governments aren't Liberal. You are judging them all by yourself.

Mr. Breau: All those governments are not Liberal, but the provinces of New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island and all their inshore fishermen would become bankrupt if we were to accept the plan put forward by the province of Newfoundland, with the support of the province of Nova Scotia, because they do not want to rebuild the stocks. They are not concerned about proper management or rational development. I have a copy of their plan here. They want to build fishing capacity beyond what it was before the 200-mile limit was set. They want to build it beyond what it was when foreigners were fishing there. They are not talking about rebuilding stocks either in the 200-mile limit or in the Gulf of St. Lawrence. What they want to do is rape the resource and get short-term profits for themselves.

I think that point of view should be put to the people of this country and to the people of New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia and Newfoundland. I would be very happy for them if they could get something good, but there is a problem. The question is not one of who should own the resource but of who can manage it properly. I am from the Atlantic provinces, but we must criticize ourselves because, while we might agree in criticizing Ottawa or the rest of the country, the four Atlantic provinces cannot agree on the time of day. The maritime provinces have been trying for the last few years to agree on something. Why all these inter-governmental meetings between provinces when really one constitutional authority can listen to the four Atlantic provinces?

The federal authority has to account to this House and to hon. members opposite, who do not consider themselves the protectors of the interests of their constituents. They do not consider themselves the protectors of the interests of the people of Newfoundland or Nova Scotia. I do, and I am also ready to defend the interests of my constituents at any time in this House. Is it not really more efficient and does it not make more sense to have one constitutional authority? In the Gulf of St. Lawrence or even outside the gulf we really cannot define the line between the provinces of New Brunswick, Quebec, Nova Scotia and Newfoundland. And what do we do about P.E.I.? How are we going to agree on the line?

The position put forward by the province of Newfoundland is unfair in terms of the Gulf of St. Lawrence. The people of New Brunswick depend on the rebuilding of stocks and on a rational and cautious development of that fishery in the future. However, the position accepted by the Conservative opposition is really unworkable, and to suggest that we could bring together the four Atlantic provinces and the province of Quebec even to agree on where to hold a meeting to discuss these things is absurd. Nobody would agree on anything. As I said before, they could not even agree on the time of day. The result would be that a few companies based in Nova Scotia and Newfoundland would rape the resource.

We all know the concentration of power presently in the fishing industry. We all know about the transfer of shares which took place on the stock market in 1977. We all know how strong fishing companies are becoming. We all know that while provincial politicians were arguing amongst themselves, five or six big companies would rape the resource, and the result would be that all of us would pay very dearly.

I just hope that the Conservative party comes before the people in the Atlantic provinces with that kind of position, because I feel that the people of Canada everywhere do want a stronger central government; and if there is one area where the fishermen and the people generally want the federal government to maintain its authority, it is the area of resource management for the fishery. Anything else would be total chaos.

The basis of the policy of the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment in the last few years has been to have a fair allocation of quotas. For the first time in the last two years we have an allocation of quotas. If there is going to be a scarcity of fish, we say that different areas will have a fair allocation of quota. They can extract that fish from the sea. However, we also say that inshore fishermen will have their share. How will they have their share if more than one authority decides how much fish is to be taken? If we do not protect fish coming into the Gulf of St. Lawrence by having a sound, rational and cautious development policy within the 200-mile limit, it just will not get there. If it does not get there, that will mean bankruptcy for the fishing industry. The basis of the policy of cautious development is that the inshore fishermen should have a share and an opportunity to enjoy the prosperity it had, in relative terms, 20 years ago.

Mr. McCain: I agree with that.

Mr. Breau: The hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte now says he agrees. It is difficult to understand the policy of the Conservative party. One wonders if it is the result of conviction or confusion. Just about 20 minutes ago the hon. member was criticizing the minister for saying exactly what I am saying. I am saying that we should resist the policy of the Newfoundland government. Just because it is a Tory government, the hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte should not think it has the divine answer to everything. I am here defending the minister and explaining why, and the hon. member interjects and says he agrees. The hon. member should make up his mind.

I should remind the hon. member about what has been happening to the herring fishery in his own constituency in the last few years. The purse-seine landings tripled in value in 1977 over 1975, from $2.8 million to about $7 million, yet he has the gall to criticize the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment. The minister saved the herring fishery in the Bay of Fundy with his policy. Federal government measures have tripled the value of the herring purse-seine fishery in the Bay of Fundy. Federal fisheries authorities backed the seiners to form a marketing co-operative and helped them work out individual boat quotas which enabled them to slow down their rate of fishing and to sell herring for processing into food rather than racing to catch all the quota in a short time to sell for reduction to fishmeal. That is what was happening before the minister came in with his policy.

The hon. member suggests that the federal government is unfair by insisting that it should have the authority to regulate the fishery. He should have been in his constituency over the last two months asking herring fishermen what they think about that. If the herring fishermen of the hon. member's constituency were to read his speech of this evening, I would have to go there to help him in the next election because he would be in difficulty.

I mentioned a while ago that in 1978 Canada will get 69 per cent of the traditional groundfish catch. In 1974 it got only 33 per cent. That is not the only difference we must look at. In terms of inshore fisheries, again for the first time the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment introduced the concept of allocation on a regional basis. For example, there will be a cod quota in 1978 for the Gulf of St. Lawrence. Not only will there be a cod quota generally for the Atlantic provinces but also for the Gulf of St. Lawrence. Also there is a cod quota for inshore fishermen. As a result of that, the inshore fisheries now have an opportunity to prosper.

● (2152)

For hon. members opposite, under the guise of a motion, to attempt to condemn the minister for lack of consultation is unreasonable. They come here and present various arguments. The hon. member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse) complained this afternoon about 500 licences being given to foreign fishing vessels within the 200-mile limit. Is that a big scandal? In the groundfish industry, we will be fishing 69 per cent in 1978, whereas in 1974 we were fishing only 32 per cent of the total allowable catch. The foreigners are receiving species which Canada is not equipped to process. Canada is not used to fishing those species traditionally, and we do not have a market for them. Why not let the foreigners take them?

I support the position of the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment. I support his contention that fisheries management must remain a federal authority.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Breau: At this time in our history, there is no way that I would want to see the central government weakened in any way, particularly not in the area of the fisheries. That would mean chaos. There is no way the four Atlantic provinces would agree on anything. The result would be that four or five big companies would control the fisheries. For an hon. member from New Brunswick to suggest that the power over fisheries should be given to Newfoundland and Nova Scotia is not feasible. The result would be that the inshore fisheries of New Brunswick would be totally bankrupt. I could not stand for that. I support the posture the minister has taken, as well as the policy which he introduced respecting a cautious development of the fisheries. If there is a need for more fishing capacity, better boats and bigger boats, later on we can acquire these boats when necessary and when there are fish to fish in the sea.

Mr. Cecil Smith (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, in the very few minutes remaining in our allotted day, I should like to speak about the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation. It was established in 1969 specifically to market fish, fish products and by-products in the Northwest Territories, Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba and a portion of Ontario. As is clearly stated in its 1976-1977 annual report, the objective of the corporation was to market fish in an orderly manner and to increase interprovincial and export trade.

One could probably write a book on the allegations which have been brought to our attention concerning this corporation over the past eight months. One such allegation is that 14 million to 15 million pounds of fish purchased by the corporation through its Transcona plant were in storage at a cost of $5,000 a day to the fishermen. Some of it has been kept in storage for as long as nine months. Another allegation was that many pounds of fillets had to be thrown away because of freezer burn. A further allegation concerned the deliberate changing of packaging dates on fish already in storage so that it would appear to be fresh fish. Apparently expensive fishing and processing equipment was sitting unused adjacent to the Transcona plant. I could refer to many such allegations.

Prior to the estalishment of the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation, fishermen sold their produce through various private companies in the north. At that time all the fish was being sold. It did not have to be put into storage, and the fishermen were not assessed some nine cents a pound per annum to keep fish in storage. Today the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation does not seem able to sell half the amount of fish being produced. From 1963 to 1969 the average production in northern Manitoba was nine million pounds per annum. That fish was all marketed. It did not have to be stored, and fishermen were not assessed one cent per pound per month. Now that the corporation is in place, the average annual market volume is 5.5 million pounds. We have taken a step backward.

The corporation will indicate that fishermen are receiving a better price for their catch, but when fishermen are required to pay in order to keep fish in storage for a period up to nine months, that theory does not make sense. Instead of putting this fish in storage, we should use mother nature's deep freeze. The lakes in northern Manitoba are ideal. In the wintertime they could be used to replace deep freezer storage until production is sold to a buyer in the United States, our major customer. The fish could be taken out of the lakes and shipped directly to the market. Then fishermen would receive a better price for their fish, at least ten cents a pound bonus for fishing in the wintertime. Also we would get away from these high storage costs.

If the Canadian inland fishery is to survive, we will have to take a look at the lakeside results which fishermen receive in Manitoba, Saskatchewan, the Northwest Territories and so on. A portion of Ontario has opted out of the program. The fishermen of that province are now receiving $1.16 to $1.20 per pound for pickerel, whereas fishermen under the corporation receive only 50 cents to 69 cents per pound.

May I call it ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order. It being ten o'clock, it is my duty to inform the House, pursuant to Standing Order 58(11), that proceedings on the motion have expired.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

MEDICAL RESEARCH COUNCIL—FUNDS FOR RESEARCH

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, on May 3 I directed a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin). I asked her whether representations had been made by medical researchers to the effect that the small increase in funds allocated for medical research this year would have very serious effects on the entire program of medical research, and on the ability of this country to keep medical research in Canada. The minister replied by pointing out that there had been an increase of 5.6 per cent, which amounted to approximately $60 million. Also in view of the freeze under the restraint program, she felt that medical researchers had not been badly dealt with.

The increase is far short of what is required. Medical education in Canada to a large extent has been based on teachers in our medical colleges who are vitally interested and tremendously involved in research in the various specialties for which they have been trained and are deeply involved. They are experts in their fields. They want to continue their work. If they are not permitted to continue their work because funds are not made available, they will move to the United States. The United States is not just a country close to Canada, not just a country to which it is easy to move, and not just a country in which the people speak the same language; it is a country which spends at least ten times as much per capita on medical research as we in Canada spend.

● (2202)

This results in a constant pull from Canada of Canadian medical researchers to the United States. Just a week or so ago one of the best known and most competent of the researchers at the medical college at the University of Manitoba, Dr. Ruben Cherniack, announced he would be moving to one of the mid-western states. He is moving because he does not have to worry in that state about the funding necessary to carry on the research in which he is interested. The money is made available there freely and willingly.

Too little money for medical research has been the story for many years in Canada. What have aggravated the situation are the stop and go programs in Canada. Some two years ago when medical researchers successfully mounted a protest against that year's cut-backs, the then minister of national health and welfare, speaking at a meeting of the Standing Committee of Health, Welfare and Social Affairs, said in part:

> You cannot just turn it on and off as if it were a water tap. What we are trying to develop is a kind of formula or criterion, by which research . . . particularly medical research . . . will be able to count on some reasonably steady rate of growth in its expenditures.

Those were brave and sensible words. The medical research community hoped the government had changed its thinking and that there was a new understanding regarding the importance of medical reasearch. They thought the government had accepted the principles enunciated in those words I have just quoted from the former minister. After two relatively good years, researchers find this year they are right back in the mess they were in two years ago. The $60 million allocated is just not good enough. This is an increase and we can argue how much. The minister said it was an increase of 5.6 per cent. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in a letter said it was an increase of 7.8 per cent, and medical researchers say it is an increase of three decimal something per cent. The fact is that the cost of medical research has gone up between 15 per cent and 20 per cent annually.

What this small increase this year means is that the National Research Council had to turn down about 167 grants for highly qualified applicants, as well as the applications of 32 excellent investigators who wanted to continue the work which has been funded by the National Research Council so far. They have been told they would have to conclude their research in the next few months. It has been estimated that they need about another $6 million to cover the cost of staffing their research programs, as well as for equipment and for the development grants program which has gone a long way to providing the salary support needed to recruit new faculty members in the newer medical colleges. This development grants program was cut to the bone. It is short by at least $500,000.

What we have according to medical researchers is another crisis which will have a profound effect not just on the researchers but on the whole program of medical education. What we are talking about is some $6 million, and I do not believe that a country like Canada which has programs in every field which total in the tens of billions of dollars cannot find $6 million. I would urge the minister to reconsider the decision.

● (2207)

The Acting Speaking (Mr. Ethier): Order, please.

Mr. W. Kenneth Robinson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) for bringing up at this time a topic which is not only of concern to him but to many other members of parliament, and certainly to the Minister of the Department of National Health and Welfare. I would like to point out to him that the minister did reply to him in her response of May 3, 1978, but I wish to amplify that to some extent. Before doing so, however, although he has mentioned that many doctors are moving to the United States, I would like to inform him that it is not all milk and honey and sweetness and light in the United States and many doctors are returning.

The hon. member also indicated that the per capita research in the United States is ten times that of Canada. If he checks his figures he will find it is not ten times the per capita amount but rather $10 per capita in the United States as compared to one-third of that in Canada, if my figures are correct. It is true there is a difference, but ten times as against three times is quite a significant difference.

I disagree with the hon. member when he says there is a crisis as far as this is concerned, because many of the most important projects are in fact being funded at the present time. I believe that many hon. members will have received representations from their constituencies about the government's funding of medical research in 1978-79. I appreciate and share that concern.

I would like to take this opportunity, however, to correct a number of inaccuracies that have crept into reports and statements in the media. It has been stated that 20 per cent of ongoing Canadian projects in the medical sector have just been terminated by the Medical Research Council. This is significant exaggeration which should be corrected. In Canada in the fiscal year just ended, a total of 2,725 research projects in medical fields were under way with support from one of the major granting agencies—federal, provincial or voluntary.

This figure included 1,302 supported by the federal Medical Research Council, of which 545 were assured of funding for the coming year without further review.

In November, 1977, and March, 1978, the Medical Research Council had for consideration applications for the renewal of 575 projects. Approval was given to continued support of 475 of those projects for further periods of one to three years. In the remaining 100 cases, support was provided only for periods of three to eight months, to enable the investigators to bring the projects to an orderly conclusion or to revise the protocol for future work so that it would be more favourably viewed by the applicant's scientific peers and thus receive further funding in the next competition. This unconditional award rate of 82 per cent of the requests under review is not at all unusual in the experience of the Medical Research Council.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I regret to inform the hon. member that his allotted time has expired.

AIRPORTS—CONSTRUCTION OF FACILITIES AT CHARLOTTETOWN—ALLEGED DELAY FOR ECONOMIC REASONS

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, if I may make a minor transgression from procedure, I would like to ask the parliamentary secretary to convey to his minister my opinion that she is a lady of great compassion, and I support her in all the endeavours that she has put forward for the deserving people of this country.

Once again I address the House on a problem both important and pressing, the construction of adequate airport facilities for the city of Charlottetown and the province of Prince Edward Island. This is not the first time I have presented my concerns, Mr. Speaker. I brought up the subject most recently on November 7, 1977, and on May 24 and January 31 of the same year. I had hoped that an announcement made by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) on November 8, 1977 concerning funding for the new terminus would have ended my anxiety. However, I fear that my worries are far from alleviated. Delay and uncertainty seem to remain the order of the day.

The problems we are facing become increasingly serious as we approach the summer months. Tourists will soon be heading to our beautiful villages and sunny beaches. Once again the summer visitor arriving by air will be greeted with uncomfortable and inadequate convenience—an unnecessary and unwelcome set of circumstances far from becoming the capital city of the province where confederation began.

● (2212)

Being a believer in representative democracy, I consider it a grave situation that the worries of the people of the village of East Royalty have not been eased. For months they have had to contend with uncertainty concerning their position in respect to their property. Certainly, land acquisition is a necessary effect of expanding the Charlottetown airport. It has been estimated that approximately 28 property owners will be affected by the project, 28 individuals and families who at the present time have not been given any reasonable assurance from the federal government as to their circumstances or their future. They had been promised ample opportunity through public meetings to voice their position and to receive information from the responsible officials. The last such public session was held in December of last year, with no indication of another forthcoming. The people of East Royalty are deserving of better treatment and I request of the minister that the village be given immediate recognition and full information so that this problem affecting the airport's expansion be resolved.

Not all Islanders are enthusiastic about the Charlottetown airport plan. On a "hot line" radio program in Charlottetown, some citizens have suggested that $21 million is too much to spend. I know this problem and I am convinced of the importance of new air terminal facilities to the economy of the province and the well-being of its citizens. The sum of $21 million is not too much; in fact, I wonder if it is too little. We of the Island have been too long neglected. I urge the minister not to consider a reduction of this figure. PEI deserves a first class airport and I make no apology for advocating such an installation. Why should we settle for second best? I think we should not.

Four weeks ago we all thought that the days of this parliament were numbered. After today's words from the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) it seems that we are to stay for yet another few months. I urge the minister to devote some of this freshly acquired time to the exigencies of the construction of this much needed facility and to go "full steam ahead" on a sorely needed project, the airport in Prince Edward Island.

I want the parliamentary secretary to assure the minister—who is not the most popular figure in that part of Canada—that he will have my full and sustained support in bringing to Charlottetown a much needed airport with the most modern facilities that our province requires and needs. I will support the minister to the fullest extent of my eloquence and capacity as either a has-been politician or emeritus one, depending upon whether it is friend or enemy who describes me. I should like the parliamentary secretary to know that we appreciate his attention.

[Translation]

Mr. Charles Lapointe (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I share the views of the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie) when he describes his province of Prince Edward Island as one of the jewels of Canadian tourist life. I am sure—in fact that is the very reason why the Department of Transport decided to spend a relatively large amount of money on the Charlottetown airport—I am sure that everything in our power must be done to give better services to the visitors who go to Prince Edward Island as well, if not, in particular, Mr. Speaker, to the citizens of the island. I should like to thank the hon. member for his words of support for the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang). I agree with him that the needs of the people living near the airport must be taken into consideration and efforts made to try to solve the sociological problems caused by having to move and the construction of a larger airport in the vicinity.

[English]

As the hon. member mentioned in his intervention, on November 8, 1977, the Minister of Transport announced that the federal government will completely redevelop the Charlottetown airport at a total cost of $21,531,500, to include a new terminal building and eventually a new 5,000 foot runway. I can assure the hon. member that this amount will not be diminished and that we will forgo the previous engagement we took last November. The Minister of Transport said at that time, and I quote:

● (2217)

This massive project indicates the government's longstanding commitment to improve transportation facilities in this province and throughout Atlantic Canada.

The minister also paid tribute to the dynamic and highly successful Prince Edward Island tourism program since jet service began in 1969, which has resulted in a dramatic increase in air transportation. The Charlottetown airport redevelopment concept was developed in close consultation and co-operation with provincial and municipal authorities.

It is worth repeating that the carriers serving Charlottetown participated fully in the development of the master plan which identified a requirement for a new runway in future years. The first state of the new runway would be constructed to a length of 5,000 feet. As and when the demand developed, it would be extended to 7,000 feet. If at that time aviation technology has changed to the point where an even longer runway is required, operational requirements will be met.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, the House stands adjourned until tomorrow at eleven o'clock.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10:18 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, May 12, 1978

The House met at 11 a.m.

• (1107)

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

REQUEST FOR INQUIRY INTO PETER TREU CASE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43 and under the urgent and pressing circumstances which appear in the following motion, I would move, if approval is given, seconded by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker):

That this House, as the elected branch of the ultimate and highest tribunal in the country, concerned that justice should not only be done but be seen to be done, and that judicial and bureaucratic officials shall not make improper or unexpected use of laws enacted in parliament, requests that the Minister of Justice and the Solicitor General inquire into and report to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs on certain facts relating to the case of Peter Treu who, after being under charge and trial for approximately four years under the Official Secrets Act, behind a strict curtain of secrecy, was recently convicted and sentenced to imprisonment and, in particular, the allegation that Treu was commanded not to discuss the case even after conviction and was granted bail on appeal only on the same basis, and that the committee be required to consider the provisions of the Official Secrets Act which permit this kind of Star Chamber proceedings, with a view to recommending suitable changes.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for debate can be made at this time, pursuant to the Standing Order, only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

POST OFFICE

ACCOUNTABILITY TO PARLIAMENT FOR OPERATIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to deal with a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the fact that sections 80(1) and 80(2) of the Post Office Act specifically state that the Postmaster General shall submit annually to the Governor General a report of the Canada Post Office for the preceding fiscal year, and do this within ten days of the commencement of the next ensuing session of parliament, which action the Postmaster General (Mr. Lamontagne) has failed to take for the 1976-77 fiscal year, and because this is the second example of the hon. gentleman's ignoring statutory provisions in the operation of the Post Office since he recently assumed this responsibility, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling):

That this House orders the Postmaster General to desist from his tactics of operating outside the Post Office Act in order to avoid accountability in parliament for the operations of the Post Office.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for debate would require unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

COMMUNICATIONS

BELL CANADA CONTRACT WITH SAUDI ARABIA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to move an urgent motion. In view of the revelation in today's Montreal Gazette that Bell Canada has agreed to pay $88 million to Saudi Arabian "business concerns" under the terms of its $1.1 billion contract with Saudi Arabia, and in view of Bell's refusal to explain why this pay-out is necessary or who are the recipients, thereby preventing the CRTC from having complete information in determining the validity of Bell's current application for a rate increase, and also raising the spectre of illegal kickbacks, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters):

That this House demands that the Minister of Communications instruct the CRTC to investigate and make public the details of this $88 million expenditure.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for debate would require the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

S.O. 43

[Translation]

TRADE

REQUEST FOR RESTRICTION ON IMPORTED FOREST PRODUCTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. C. A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I seek the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion on a matter of very urgent and pressing necessity.

In view of the very serious crisis facing the forest industry in Quebec generally, and more specifically in the northwestern area of the province, because of the decreasing number of market outlets for the products of that major industry, and because of the very alarming unemployment situation in this sector; and in view of the fact that imports of plywood alone have deprived our forest industry of over $100 million in revenues during 1977, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Moncton (Mr. Jones):

That the House urge the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner) to examine this situation thoroughly and to impose restrictions on forest product imports which may prejudice the most legitimate interests of our workers.

Mr. Speaker: The house has heard the hon. member's motion. Pursuant to Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

[English]

ELECTIONS

DATE OF BY-ELECTIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. My motion concerns the fact that as of this moment over one million Canadians are unrepresented in this House. In view of the fact that the patronage and arbitrary appointments of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) are responsible for two-thirds of this regrettable situation, I move, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath):

● (1112)

That this House deplores the fact that the government would allow nearly one-tenth of the Canadian electorate to be unrepresented and, while sympathizing with Liberal candidates such as Dr. John Evans who will have to lose the same seat twice in a matter of months, nevertheless demands that the Prime Minister now set a date for the seven by-elections that he has so far lacked the fortitude to call.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the presentation of such a motion?

[Mr. Speaker.]

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

BILINGUALISM IN EDUCATION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil): Mr. Speaker, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, and in conformity with Standing Order 43, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Louis-Hébert (Mr. Dawson):

That the Secretary of State table in this House the government's proposals for the new federal-provincial agreement for bilingualism in education which would come into effect as of April 1, 1979, in order to allow adequate time for proper discussion and to remove the anxieties caused by the minister's statement in January of this year that, at that time, it would not be useful or appropriate to discuss them.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for debate, pursuant to Standing Order 43, requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

PENITENTIARIES

CONSTRUCTION OF PENITENTIARY IN SELKIRK, MAN.—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dean Whiteway (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that there is high unemployment in the construction industry in Manitoba, and in light of the government's decision to proceed in 1980 with the new maximum security penitentiary for Manitoba to be located in Selkirk, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie):

That the Minister of Public Works or, for that matter, the Solicitor General, immediately proceed with the construction of the penitentiary in order to maximize the economic benefits for both Selkirk and the province, to create employment and to fulfil his promise to the town of Selkirk.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the introduction of such a motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

TRANSPORT

CONSTRUCTION OF REGIONAL OFFICES IN MONCTON, N.B.—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Leonard C. Jones (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Whereas the unemployment situation and the construction industry is at a low ebb in many parts of Canada, particularly in the maritime region; and whereas the federal government has assisted downtown development in many Canadian cities, such as Montreal, Halifax, and so on; and whereas the Department of Public Works and/or the Department of Transport prepared plans, called for proposals and tenders, and proposals and tenders were submitted for the establishment of new regional offices for the Department of Transport in downtown Moncton; and whereas, for some unknown reason, the proposals or tenders were not accepted and construction not undertaken; and whereas, downtown Moncton is in need of a catalyst to revitalize the downtown area and assist in the employment situation, particularly in the construction field, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier):

That the Department of Transport and the Department of Public Works take steps forthwith to proceed with the establishment and construction of new regional offices for the Department of Transport in downtown Moncton, New Brunswick, for the reasons outlined above.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for debate, pursuant to Standing Order 43, requires the unanimous consent of the House? Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

MEASURES TO IMPROVE SITUATION

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Prime Minister. Yesterday, in announcing his disinclination to meet the electorate, the Prime Minister indicated that the government would be bringing forward other types of economic measures. He declined to give a date when the House of Commons might receive the Bank Act, which we know is ready, and legislation on small business which the government has been promising for some time.

Can the Prime Minister now tell us the general nature and the subject matter of the new economic initiatives the government is planning to introduce? For example, will there be new job creation measures, productivity incentives, new cuts in government spending, and tax incentives for regional development? Will the Prime Minister tell us the kind of measures which will be included in this economic package that he has delayed an election to introduce?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this seems like a repetition of the Leader of the Opposition's question of yesterday. We gave him the answer that these matters would be introduced before the House very soon.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, the reason the questions are repeated is the failure to answer being repeated day after day.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: If the Prime Minister expects people to believe his reason for retreating from the election, he will have to spell out precisely the kind of measures he wants to bring before the House. That is what I am asking him today.

Let me try something else on the Prime Minister. He has been proposing for some time, at least as far back as 1975, that his government is going to proceed on a major program of government deregulation. He repeated the promise when he met with the first ministers. Will the Prime Minister give an undertaking now that he or a responsible minister will make a full statement on motions on Monday outlining the extent of the progress of the government toward deregulation?

● (1117)

If they have done nothing in this field either, will he give us an undertaking now that he will refer that question to a standing committee of the House of Commons so that parliament can get to work on deregulation even if government will not?

Mr. Trudeau: I will take that as a representation, Mr. Speaker. I thank the hon. Leader of the Opposition for it.

* * *

ESTIMATES

STUDY BY HOUSE COMMITTEES

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I think there is an acting prime minister somewhere. I wonder if the government House leader could be enticed back to his seat for a question. I ask the acting prime minister—well, they are both acting prime ministers.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: As the government House leader will know, one consequence of the dithering, the delaying and the inability of the Prime Minister to make up his mind is that Liberal chairmen of committees have been delaying discussion and consideration of estimates by the House of Commons during the last few weeks.

An hon. Member: That is not so.

Mr. Clark: For example, there has been no consideration of the estimates of the Post Office, Air Canada, Public Works, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police or the National Energy Board. We are only beginning to make progress on consideration of the estimates of other departments. In light of this delay as a result of the indecision of the Prime Minister, will the government House leader agree to seek the unanimous consent of the House, which he will receive from this side, to extend by two weeks the deadline for the consideration of estimates in committees?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I have had absolutely no indication that committee chairmen or members of committees have not been doing their work. The responsibility for the operation of the committees is up to committee members. They are not under the direction of the government in this particular case.

Some hon. Members: No?

Mr. MacEachen: If work has not been proceeding in committees, which I have no reason to believe, then it is the responsibility of committee members as a whole to accelerate the work. I am satisfied that before the end of June, or June 22 which would be the end of the normal supply period, there will be plenty of time to consider the estimates in a thorough and businesslike manner. There will be absolutely no need to extend the period.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, it amazes me that even this minister can be so out of touch with what is happening in committees of the House of Commons. If he had been paying attention to parliament instead of trying to read the entrails of Mr. Goldfarb over the last several weeks, he would know that very little has been done in the House of Commons because of the deliberate refusal of Liberal chairmen of committees to proceed.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: I repeat my question to the government House leader. Will he seek the unanimous consent of the House, which we on this side will give, to extend by two weeks the capacity of standing committees of the House to consider the estimates of departments?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I have stated already that I do not accept the allegation made by the hon. Leader of the Opposition. It is passing strange to me, at a time when the House itself was accelerating legislation, at a time when we succeeded in passing a good many bills and at a time when the House was very productive, that the Leader of the Opposition should allege that committees have ground to a halt.

I think there is a very obvious contradiction in his argumentation. Even admitting, for the sake of argument, that there might have been some uncertainty in the minds of committee members as to what might happen, there is still plenty of time before the end of the supply period for the committees to do their work.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): May 31.

Mr. Baldwin: Not June.

Mr. MacEachen: Hon. members have failed to recall the suggestion made by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton when he suggested that the last supply day for this period would be June 22. We cannot have final supply until that day. It is my expectation that we have until June 22 to complete the supply period. If some arrangement is required to continue consideration to June 22, it will be quite all right with me—but certainly not beyond that date.

* * *

● (1122)

FINANCE

GOVERNMENT INTENTIONS RESPECTING SALES TAX

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the right hon. Prime Minister, in the absence of the Minister of Finance who just left the House—a Minister of Finance, by the way, who will probably have the unique distinction of being the only minister in our history who had to bring down three budgets in one session.

In view of the fact that the only economic stimulus in the budget of the minister is the reduction in sales tax, and this expires along with the FLIP program in October, and in view of the serious impact this will have on the economy and on unemployment—which is expected, under normal circumstances, to rise at that time of year—now that we will be around for a while will the Prime Minister indicate if the government intends to bring in a measure either to extend the provision in respect of sales tax beyond the six-month period or bring in new economic stimuli to replace it?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is experienced enough to know that we would not answer a question relating to tax cuts or alterations six months in advance. If there is need for a further budget in six months, in eight months or in ten months, we will have a further budget then.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, under normal circumstances the House would adjourn at the end of June and we probably would not come back until after these budgetary measures have expired. I ask the Prime Minister whether he intends, in the interim, to at least arrange a federal-provincial meeting to deal with serious problems in respect of the economy, and especially of unemployment which will be considerably aggravated by the expiration of these budgetary measures.

Will the Prime Minister indicate to the House whether it is the intention to meet with ministers of finance, because we have a situation in which employment is down and is going down in a number of important sectors, including construction?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, we are within weeks of a budget which was passed by this House—a budget that is already having the beneficial effects on the economy that are quite obvious.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: Of course, the best evidence of that is the negative evidence in that we have not had any questions from the opposition in recent days about the state of the dollar; they have not asked any questions about our successful export drive. The budget is having its effect. Of course, several times in the course of a year it is important for the provinces to be consulting with the federal government.

The hon. member is asking about a specific meeting. The hon. member will recall that I suggested one in my letter to the premiers following the February conference: there is discussion going on now as to when such a meeting would be appropriate.

* * *

ENERGY

PROPOSED INCREASE IN PRICE OF OIL AND NATURAL GAS

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources? Press reports of Wednesday quote him as saying he intends to urge OPEC to forgo any increase in prices this year. I am sure members in all parts of the House wish him well in his endeavours in that regard.

I would ask the minister if it does not seem somewhat contradictory, therefore, for the Canadian government to proceed with the idea on July 1 of increasing the price of oil by $1 per barrel and the price of gas by 17 cents per thousand cubic feet, which will add about $500 million to the fuel bill of the Canadian people in a 12-month period?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is well aware of the government's policy to cushion Canadians against high international prices. We have been able to hold the Canadian price below the international price and we have been able to hold the Canadian price below the United States price, so that we have been able to provide Canadian industry with a competitive edge it would not otherwise have had.

The hon. member is also aware that we have reached an agreement with the province of Alberta, an agreement which was endorsed by a majority of the consuming provinces of Canada, in respect of moving the Canadian oil price up in an orderly and graduated way but in a way which would maintain the competitive position of Canadian industry.

● (1127)

I am sure the hon. member is also aware that the Canadian government, through the oil import compensation fund, has been providing very large sums of money to subsidize consumers in eastern Canada. Since that program was first put into place, it has worked out to something like $820 per capita in some provinces. The bill is very close to $1 billion a year in oil import compensation payments. The federal government's position has been to move up slowly and only to move up in a way which will provide a balance between the interests of Canadian consumers and producers.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, the minister omitted to mention that the government has collected, in taxes for compensation in the last five years, approximately $1 billion more than it has paid out in compensation. Last year the major oil companies of this country were inserting one-page ads in periodicals and newspapers warning the Canadian people they would freeze in the dark if we did not get the Mackenzie pipeline. They are now telling us that we have a surplus of oil and gas, and they are urging the Canadian government to allow these commodities to be exported to the United States.

I ask the minister, since he is a supporter of the principle of free enterprise and the law of supply and demand, if in fact there is a surplus of supply over demand, should the price of gas and oil not come down, rather than going up on July 1?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is talking about what I believe is described in many circles as a deliverability bubble or a temporary surplus; he is not talking about any long-term surplus, so far as I know, inasmuch as Canadian gas supplies are concerned. For that reason, I cannot see that there should be any change in pricing policy at the present time.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, it is the government's oil policy that is the bubble, and it is being pricked every day by the events that are transpiring. Can the minister tell the House whether he is aware of studies done in his department and also by the government of Ontario which show that an increase of $1 per barrel for oil at the wellhead, and 17 cents per thousand cubic feet in the price of gas, will add approximately one percentage point to the consumer price index and will result in a loss of 30,000 jobs across Canada? Will he not make representations to his colleagues to combat both inflation and unemployment at the same time by forgoing the proposed price increase in oil and gas on July 1?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, I have already made clear to the hon. member that the Canadian government's policy has been to hold the price below the comparable price in the United States so that there would be in fact an edge, or a competitive advantage, for Canadian manufacturing industry and for Canadian industry in general. The result of that policy has been that many more Canadians have been employed than otherwise would have occurred.

Oral Questions

ESTIMATES

STUDY BY HOUSE COMMITTEES

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the government House leader arising from his exchange with the Leader of the Opposition with respect to the study of main estimates by the committees. I do not think that my hon. friend intended to mislead the House, but he must be aware of the Standing Order of the House which provides, in terms of committees dealing with estimates:

Each such committee shall consider and shall report, or shall be deemed to have reported, the same back to the House not later than May 31 in the then current fiscal year.

The date referred to the Leader of the Opposition is a date after which the committees' consideration of estimates has finished. The government House leader has indicated that he has no objection to June 22, but we will need a House order to allow the committees to deal with estimates up to June 22 of this year. Will the government House leader put such an order to the House, on the understanding that we are prepared to deal with that matter immediately?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the hon. member's reference to the rule. When I replied to the Leader of the Opposition about the period for estimates, I had in mind the period of about June 22 when we would deal with final supply, or allotted day. It was not my intention that we would go beyond that particular period, namely, to June 22.

● (1132)

If we agree that this shall be the final allotted day, I have no objection, if it is the desire of the House, to go into June for consideration of the estimates, but not beyond that date as has been suggested by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I look forward to considering, with my colleagues, the House order that would follow from that. May I deal with another aspect of the estimates, that is, the estimates of the Chief Electoral Officer. The costs of his office and the returning offices in ridings across the country may very well be increased as a result of gearing-up for the election upon which the Prime Minister has turned his back.

Is the government giving consideration to bringing in supplementary estimates to deal with that particular matter, as well as supplementary estimates with respect to government spending, beyond those contained in the main estimates?

Mr. MacEachen: On the second point, Mr. Speaker, I believe the hon. member would have to address his question to the President of the Treasury Board; but I will draw it to his attention. On the first point, with respect to possible additional requirements by the Chief Electoral Officer, up to the present he has not submitted any request for additional funds. When these are required, the normal course is that he submits them to me for presentation to Treasury Board, and that has not been done.

[Mr. Gillespie.]

If I may revert to an earlier question, with the indulgence of the House, may I say it would be in the interests of all of us, prior to the provision of a House order to extend the period for study of the estimates, to consider ways in which the committee system could work more effectively as well as over a greater period of time.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the government House leader knows that the opposition has been calling since 1969 for a more effective working of the committee system. There are a number of other things that my hon. friend knows could be changed.

* * *

ELECTIONS

CONSULTATION WITH CHIEF ELECTORAL OFFICER ON FORTHCOMING BY-ELECTIONS

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have a final question for the Prime Minister arising out of questions asked yesterday about by-elections. The Prime Minister indicated he was going to follow the law. Has he, or any official on his behalf or on behalf of the government, consulted the Chief Electoral Officer about the problem that has been created with respect to by-elections: the fact that 1,300,000 Canadians are unrepresented, and the electoral problems dealing with boundaries?

Are these matters being pursued by the Prime Minister, and has he made any decision on them? Also, has he made up his mind about the dates for the balance of the by-elections which have not been called?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am informed that consultations have begun with the Chief Electoral Officer.

* * *

COMBINES

ALLEGED CONSPIRACY OF URANIUM PRODUCERS

Mr. Bill Kempling (Halton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice. In view of the decision of the United States department of justice to file a misdemeanour charge against Gulf Oil Canada Limited alleging that the company conspired with other uranium producers between February, 1972, and December, 1974, to fix the price of uranium oxide, and noting that the company has stated they became involved only as a result of Canadian government direction, I ask the minister if he agrees with that statement.

Secondly, has the United States Department of Justice requested the co-operation of the Government of Canada, and does the minister intend to co-operate with them if that is requested?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the case involves a number of things. It is largely, however, an information filed against a United States corporation. The Canadian subsidiary is not a defendant. We have made representations, which appear to have been observed, to the extent that if the defendant or any co-conspirator was acting in accordance with Canadian policy, they should not be involved in the lawsuit.

Mr. Kempling: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister tell the House if the government intends to supply information to the United States department of justice if requested to do so and, particularly, will the findings of the director of combines investigations be made available to the U.S. department of justice when they are complete?

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, we do not intend to supply any information that would be contrary to the uranium information regulations.

Mr. Clark: Which are illegal.

* * *

[Translation]

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF SERVICE TO SMALL COMMUNITIES

Mr. Eymard Corbin (Madawaska-Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Communications.

As the CBC has decided not to extend its accelerated radio and television coverage program to communities where, since the 1971 and 1976 censuses, fewer than 500 persons speak a given mother tongue, that is the required minimum under the program to benefit from accelerated coverage, and seeing the very absence of those radio and television services is a significant cause of assimilation, could the minister and her cabinet colleagues convince the CBC to reverse this iniquitous decision and stem the appalling tide of assimilation in those communities and remind the CBC that part of its mandate is specifically to protect the minorities?

Hon. Jeanne Sauvé (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, of course the CBC's expansion program is the responsibility of my colleague the Secretary of State. But there is still hope that the CBC may be able to ensure its services to communities with a population of less than 500. Through the Department of Communications developments in satellite technology, it may be possible to give the service at a relatively low cost to those communities, thanks to technical means now being studied and developed. So, within a few years, perhaps three or four, and at a relatively low cost, all communities may be served throughout the remote areas of Canada, even if their population ranges between as few as 50 and 200 persons. Even now it is possible to bring the service in the far north to scattered and sparsely populated groups. That is the type of research and development being performed in the Department of Communications, which at some point down the road can be integrated into the CBC development program.

* * *

[English]

POST OFFICE

LATE TABLING OF ANNUAL REPORT

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Postmaster General, but in his absence I would direct it to the President of Privy Council. Could the hon. gentleman inform the House why the Post Office report for the fiscal year 1976-77 has not been tabled, as is ordered in section 80(1)(2) of the Post Office Act?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I have no idea why it has not been tabled, but I will make inquiries.

Mr. Dinsdale: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I think this question also lies within the competence and knowledge of the President of Privy Council. Can he tell the House if the delay in tabling the report is designed to avoid its referral to the estimates committee for detailed study, which will be embarrassing to the government because of its clear revelation of government administrative incompetence?

Mr. MacEachen: No, Mr. Speaker. I am sure scrutiny of the annual report would dispel some of the erroneous views the hon. member has formed.

* * *

ELECTIONS

EXPENSES INCURRED BY RECENTLY NOMINATED CANDIDATES

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. An unofficial general election has been going on for some months, some 600 candidates have been nominated by the various parties, and the Prime Minister says he is concerned about the laws of Canada being followed. Would the Prime Minister consider having discussions with the Chief Electoral Officer in order that a clear statement could be made by the Chief Electoral Officer as to what proportion of expenses incurred before the writs are issued, whenever they are drawn, will be part of election expenses, so that candidates who are nominated in the traditional fashion do not find themselves in moral breach of the new elections act?

● (1142)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will certainly draw this question to the attention of the Chief Electoral Officer. I do not think he will want to judge morality, but he will be interested in the law itself. It seems to me that in this area the law will give us fairly clear guidance.

* * *

PIPELINES

NORTHERN PIPELINE—LIABILITY FOR COST OF EXTENDING RAIL LINES IN B.C.

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the government House leader. Some time ago I asked the government House leader about the representations made by the province of British Columbia regarding maintenance of the rail lines south from Fort Nelson. That matter, of course, was directly related to the pipeline treaty.

Can the government House leader now advise whether there will be any federal assistance forthcoming to the province of British Columbia other than that contained within the treaty, as a result of those representations? Or can he advise the House that the treaty will speak for itself as far as that province is concerned and they will have to find their own funds for extension of the rail?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, I had a meeting some time ago with two ministers of the government of British Columbia. They made a series of proposals with respect to what would constitute an agreement between the Government of Canada and the government of British Columbia. The proposals have been under study in the meantime and I hope they will be considered by the Government of Canada relatively soon. Only at that time will it be possible to answer the general question as to whether there will be assistance, and what form of assistance might be forthcoming. That question has not yet been decided but it is under urgent consideration at the present time.

Mr. Leggatt: Mr. Speaker, could the government House leader advise as to the position of British Columbia with regard to the treaty itself? Is there a legal commitment from the province of British Columbia to proceed with the Alaska pipeline and to be committed to the terms of the treaty, or is that matter still under debate or negotiation? Can he advise whether, in fact, the terms under which British Columbia will participate have been settled, or is that still a matter that is open and, therefore, as far as we know there is no way we can proceed with the treaty until British Columbia has made a commitment to proceed?

[Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain).]

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, no, the treaty itself is not in question. With respect to this particular pipeline, we have undertaken to follow the principle of non-discrimination, particularly with respect to taxation, so that no province will tax this specific pipeline in a way different from the taxation of similar pipelines. That is the obligation that Canada has made with the United States through the transit pipeline treaty. In concluding the treaty on the pipeline with the United States, it seemed appropriate to secure assurances from the provinces that they would live up to the terms of the treaty in taxation matters.

As my hon. friend knows, the province of British Columbia said, "Yes, we will observe that particular principle of non-discrimination, but we would like you to meet some of the conditions that we set forward in communications made last August." It is this particular point which is still under discussion with the province of British Columbia. But the Government of Canada has a clear obligation to the United States to ensure within its power that the taxation systems will be non-discriminatory.

* * *

SMALL BUSINESS

DEFINITION OF "SMALL BUSINESS"

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Small Business. In view of the fact that his predecessor was unable to define "small business" as it relates to the small business portfolio, and because that ministry has done very little else since its inception other than initiate studies in order to study other studies on top of studies, could the minister advise this House whether all these studies have enabled him to define "small business" in order for him to realize which sector of the economy needs assistance? In other words, can he tell us the definition of "small business" as it relates to his portfolio?

Hon. A. C. Abbott (Minister of State (Small Business)): Mr. Speaker, I regret that the hon. member's pursuit of the reactionary cause closest to his heart has prevented his looking at many of the things that have been done by way of taxation, the Small Businesses Loans Act and a good many other things for small business. And more will be done. In answering the hon. member's question I would point out that on many occasions he has heard the definition we have prescribed. Essentially, it is that a small business is defined as a business with fewer than 100 employees and which, in general terms, is legally and financially independent of a larger corporation.

Mr. Jelinek: Mr. Speaker, I am glad the minister has finally come up with a definition, although it is a fuzzy one. My supplementary question is this: On April 11 the minister told this House that he was pleased with his government's budget in respect of small business. Yet a just concluded survey indicates that 78.1 per cent of the small businesses questioned are not at all content with the budget nor the government's handling of that sector.

In view of the serious need for more incentive opportunities and less government interference, could the minister now assure this House that an over-all, comprehensive, incentive-oriented small business program will be implemented prior to the summer break?

Mr. Abbott: Mr. Speaker, I differ from the hon. member when he suggests that my definition is fuzzy. I would say his hearing is fuzzy. It is as precise a definition as one could expect.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Abbott: I would question this so-called survey of his and its origins, and if he conducted it I would cast very serious doubt on it indeed. I would say I do not disagree with the hon. member that there are things that need to be done for small business. We have been working extremely hard to prepare programs. I am very hopeful we will soon be able to bring them forward.

* * *

CANADA MANPOWER

JOBS FOR STUDENTS

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. In his news release of February 1, 1978, the Minister of Employment and Immigration stated that the CMCs for students would attempt to place 250,000 young Canadians in positions in the private sector.

Since the words "placements" and "positions" have in the past been used to inflate and misrepresent the number of real jobs created, in that a student may be placed for three days, four days, a week or maybe one day, and some students are placed seven or eight times for short periods of work, showing seven or eight placements, will the minister revise his reporting methods and report the number of man-days of work created, so that Canadians will receive a true and accurate picture of the work situation as it relates to Canada's youth?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am much more interested in placing students this summer than I am with fiddling around with management statistics. We will, however, look at the hon. member's representation.

ELECTIONS

MILEAGE ALLOWANCE FOR RURAL ENUMERATORS

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question to the one put to the government House leader by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain. In view of the problem that is developing in rural constituencies by no provision for mileage allowance for rural enumerators—this is causing problems for returning officers—is the minister, in the discussions he will be having with the Chief Electoral Officer, prepared to bring this matter to his attention? If not, it will mean that there will be inadequate voters' lists in the rural communities.

● (1152)

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): Here again, as I recollect, the Chief Electoral Officer establishes a tariff of fees for the compensation of election officials. I am sure he will pay attention to the representations the hon. member has made, and if he brings forward a new schedule of fees we will consider it carefully.

* * *

INDIAN AFFAIRS

CUTBACKS IN FUNDING OF NATIVE PEOPLES

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. May I ask the hon. gentleman whether he has yet had an opportunity to meet with the executive council of the National Indian Brotherhood regarding the cutbacks in government funding for the native peoples and, if so, what was the result of that meeting?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Yes, Mr. Speaker, we met with the members of the executive council of the NIB six weeks or two months ago. I have also met with the presidents and representatives of the provincial associations and as a result of those representations made to us we have conferred with Treasury Board and there has been approval for a $27 million price and volume increase which will now be allocated in an attempt to deal with the problem the hon. gentleman has outlined.

* * *

SMALL BUSINESS

LEGISLATION TO ASSIST SMALL BUSINESS SECTOR OF ECONOMY

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Small Business. Is the minister aware of the fact that figures released by the government this month indicate that business failures in March of 1978 were at a level of 36.9 per cent higher than in March of last year? If so, can he tell us when he will be introducing legislation designed to give small business a much needed break?

Hon. A. C. Abbott (Minister of State (Small Business)): I did see the figures to which the hon. member has referred. I noted them with considerable regret. They bear testimony to the fact that in difficult economic times no sector faces greater difficulties than does the small business sector. As to the second part of the question, I cannot give the hon. member a precise date. I can only say it is my hope we shall be introducing initiatives in the near future.

Mr. Beatty: Last Thursday I asked the minister why he had yet to present to parliament a single piece of legislation since he became Minister of State for Small Business. At that time he told us he did introduce the CALURA amendments. Would he care to correct the information he gave to parliament at that time, and tell us why he has yet to present to parliament a single piece of legislation with his name on it?

Mr. Abbott: I did say I introduced the amendments to CALURA. The statement was, in effect, inaccurate because my situation is within the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, so of necessity under the act it is the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce who introduced this nominally. But I was responsible for it and I therefore took some credit.

However, I do not think the measures which I consider to be important require legislation. For instance, there was the change in the interest rate under the Small Businesses Loans Act which was made, quite properly, by regulation. There was the publication of our statistical book on small business, and the development of a variety of other procedures including the important task of advocacy before my colleague, for example, the Minister of Finance. These are not things which could be the subject of legislation introduced by me, but they are nevertheless important. I may add, however, that I share the hon. member's conviction that despite the real improvement we have made in taxation arrangements and a number of other areas, more needs to be done. I am hopeful that at an early date we shall be able to introduce positive new initiatives which will be helpful to this important sector.

* * *

TRANSPORT

CONSTRUCTION OF REGIONAL OFFICES IN MONCTON, N.B.

Mr. Leonard C. Jones (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Prime Minister. Is it now the policy of the government to cause plans to be prepared and tenders to be submitted, and then fail to proceed, as was done in the case of the establishment of the regional office of the Department of Transport in downtown Moncton?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I can inquire. I am not aware of the latest plans with regard to this building.

COMMITTEE CONSIDERATION OF ESTIMATES

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the chairman of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, the hon. member for LaSalle. Given the fact that the transport committee has not met for the last two weeks, and that there are only two weeks or so left before the estimates have to be reported, given the fact that there has not been a single transportation item considered by the committee and that there are urgent and pressing matters concerning transportation which ought to be discussed, including the implications of the Hall report, the congestion at Vancouver and the subject of air safety, may I ask whether the hon. member is considering calling the standing committee together? As a minimum step, is he prepared to call a meeting of the steering committee so that we can discuss the prospect of considering the estimates of the Department of Transport totalling $1.5 billion?

Mr. John Campbell (LaSalle-Émard-Côte Saint-Paul): There have been plans to hold a meeting of the steering committee next week to set up a schedule for the consideration of the main estimates and any legislation the government may wish to put forward.

* * *

[Translation]

INDIAN AFFAIRS

CONSULTATION WITH MUNICIPALITIES TO OVERCOME STORM WATER PROBLEM AT CHÂTEAUGUAY, QUEBEC

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

The minister is no doubt aware of the problem created for the town of Châteauguay by the storm drainage system flowing towards the Caughnawaga Indian reserve. In view of the fact that this puts the town in a very embarrassing situation because of the work that is required, has the minister recently met with the town council on this matter, and if so can he tell the House what decision his department intends to take in reply to the request put by the Châteauguay town council?

[English]

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): This matter was drawn to my attention by the hon. member for Laprairie several months ago and—

Mr. Clark: Nothing happened.

Mr. Faulkner: Wait a minute. We have since held discussions with the municipal officials concerned. The reason there has not been a complete resolution of the problem is that there are differences in our points of view as to where responsibility lies, and until we can agree on who is responsible for what, I do not think we can reach a solution.

[Translation]

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, as the work already done represents an amount of $900,000, and as the municipal council should spend $1,600,000, which of course it cannot pay, and in view of the recommendations made by the member for that riding, can the minister assure the town council that a decision is forthcoming? Is he also willing to financially back the town which cannot be responsible for all the work to be done, which indeed is the responsibility of a reserve under the authority of the federal government? In other words, will the minister take his responsibilities to help this municipality?

[English]

Mr. Faulkner: I think the hon. member should understand that a decision has been taken and that the municipality is unhappy with that decision. There has been some discussion between the department and the municipality as to the reason for the decision. It relates to the division of responsibility for the construction which has taken place. Until there is agreement as to who is responsible for what, it will be difficult to allocate the costs. I cannot, therefore, give the hon. member the assurance he is seeking.

GRANT TO SASKATCHEWAN INDIAN COMMUNITY COLLEGE

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address my question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development: it concerns the Saskatchewan Indian Community College, Saskatoon, whose funding needs for 1978-79 are projected as $3.3 million. I am informed the college is getting only $439,000 which means, according to one of the officials of the minister's own department, that the college may have to close. Since the minister announced today that more will be available through his department, will he provide the amount necessary to enable this college to remain open?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): It is not our view that the college will close. I think I should point out to the hon. member that last year we made a contribution to the college of roughly $430,000. We plan to make roughly the same contribution this year. The FSI is arguing for $3.3 million, so there are some differences between their figures and our figures, but there is no reason to believe that we would have jumped from a subvention of $430,000 last year to $3.3 million this year. There is no reason to believe, based on the evidence I have to date, that a continued contribution similar to that of last year would lead to the closing of the college. I also point out that Canada Manpower is making a contribution to the college of roughly a half million dollars.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

● (1202)

[English]

MARITIME CODE ACT

MEASURE TO CODIFY LAW

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-54, to provide a maritime code for Canada and to amend the Canada Shipping Act and other acts in consequence thereof.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Speaker: When shall this bill be read a second time?

Some hon. Members: Now.

Mr. Speaker: Is there to be discussion about leave being sought either now or at a later time to deal with this bill at second reading later this day?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I was told that there had been some discussions about which I did not know, but I was involved in a discussion this morning, and we would be prepared for this bill to be called for second reading later this day. We would ask that any further stages be left until we see what develops.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I apologize. I was engaged in a conversation about another bill which was in the order of business given yesterday. Would Your Honour please tell me the number of the bill to which you are referring?

Mr. Speaker: The bill just introduced for first reading dealing with a maritime code. Unanimous consent may be sought either now or later, and it is obviously being sought now for the matter to be taken up for second reading later this day, and that subsequent stages would follow in their normal course.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions, and that is agreeable. Perhaps later today we can discuss together when and how.

Mr. Jones: Mr. Speaker, I am not prepared to consent to that item unless I see what is being talked about.

Order Paper Questions

Mr. Speaker: Unanimous consent is not being sought at this time. There simply has been an indication that some time later in the day consent may be sought to proceed in that way.

* * *

[Translation]

SOCIAL SERVICES FINANCING ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND CANADA ASSISTANCE PLAN

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-55, to provide for the making of contributions by Canada toward the costs of the provision, development, extension and improvement of social services throughout Canada and to amend the Canada Assistance Plan and repeal the Vocational Rehabilitation of Disabled Persons Act in consequence thereof, and to create a Rehabilitation Fund.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

* * *

[English]

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 1,102, 1,231, 1,333, 1,365, 1,378, 1,429 and 1,438.

[Text]

MERCURY POISONING STUDY

Question No. 1,102—Mr. Howie:

Did the Department of National Health and Welfare begin its study on mercury poisoning in Canada and, if so, what will be the cost of such study and, how many persons will it employ?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): The medical services branch of the Department of National Health and Welfare has, since 1971, been carrying out a program of investigation surveillance and education in areas of the country, such as northwest Ontario and northwest Quebec, known to be affected by mercury contamination of the environment. In 1976, this program was expanded to include investigations on Indian reserves in all the provinces and in all communities in the Northwest Territories and the Yukon. To date, the program has involved some 24,000 tests in over 200 communities. The results of these tests are released regularly by the department. These tests are performed as part of the ongoing contaminants program of the medical services branch and mostly by employees of the branch as part of their regular duties. In certain specific areas, such as northwest Ontario and northwest Quebec, additional nursing staff and local health workers have been hired. On February 27, 1978 an agreement amongst the federal government, the department of social affairs of Quebec, the Donner Canadian Foundation and McGill University, was signed in Montreal. This provides for the carrying out by McGill University, of detailed epidemiological study on the health effects of methylmercury in northwest Quebec. The study is being funded equally by the federal and provincial governments and the Donner Canadian Foundation. Each of these parties has committed $125,000 for a total of $375,000 over a two year period. McGill University will be utilising the services of a number of its faculty during the course of the study. There will also be some short term employment of individuals in Montreal and in the communities being studied. These arrangements are being under the terms of the contract by McGill University. Information already collected by the medical services branch of the Department of National Health and Welfare is being used as a basis for this study.

NFB MULTI-MEDIA KIT

Question No. 1,231—Mr. Reid:

1. Did the Department of National Health and Welfare begin publishing "Facts and Feelings Filmstrips Series 295C 0176 002 Family Life, Values, Education, Social Studies, Physical Education and Health" and, if so (a) on what date (b) for what reason (c) how many copies were produced, in each case (d) were requests received from Provincial Departments of Education for this type of material?

2. Did the Department consult with provincial departments of education during the (a) development of the ideas for the series (b) production of the series (c) distribution of the series and, if so, with which ones?

3. (a) What was the total cost of the project (b) what was the cost of each of the filmstrip series (c) what was the price charged to the Department for the production of each of the series of filmstrips (d) was there any subsidy provided by the National Film Board in the production of the series in that it did not recover all costs associated with the production?

4. Did the Department distribute the filmstrips (a) throughout Canada (b) outside Canada and, if so, in each case (i) in what way (ii) through what agencies?

5. (a) How many filmstrips have been purchased by school boards in each province and in the Northwest Territories and the Yukon (b) how many were given to boards of education by the Department?

6. Did the Department seek the permission or consult with provincial departments of education before promoting the filmstrips series to local boards of education?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. Health and Welfare Canada has acted as sponsor to the National Film Board in the production of a multi-media kit, of which one series is entitled "Facts and Feelings". (a) The series has been available from National Film Board distributors since December, 1976. (b) The series was intended to provide an audio-visual resource in sex education. (c) As of January, 1978, the following number of copies have been produced: "Facts and Feelings": 129, "Savoir . . . Sentir": 83, "A Question of Values": 128, "Points de Vue": 49, "Living and Growing": 130, "La Vie Qui Pousse": 88. (d) Yes.

2. (a) Yes. (b) Consultation on such joint projects production, is carried out by the National Film Board. The board has a practice of inviting representatives of ministries of education to preview semi-finished materials. This procedure was in effect at this time. (c) Officials (designated for purposes of federal-provincial liaison on family planning matters) in departments of health and/or welfare in all of the provinces and territories were consulted in reference to the distribution of the series. This is in keeping with established departmental policy.

3. (a) $206,188. (b) "A Question of Values", "Points de Vue": $114,568. "Facts and Feelings", "Savoir ... Sentir", "Living and Growing", "La Vie Qui Pousse": $91,620. (c) "A Question of Values", "Points de Vue": $72,536. "Facts and Feelings", "Savoir ... Sentir", "Living and Growing", "La Vie Qui Pousse": $45,000. (d) It is our understanding that costs are recovered through sales. The National Film Board advises us that no subsidies are involved in these projects.

4. (a) The distribution of the filmstrip is the responsibility of the National Film Board. The department provided copies to the two national voluntary agencies, namely, "Planned Parenthood Federation" and "Serena" (La Société pour la régulation des naissances) and to each province and territory, in the latter case via officials in departments of health and/or welfare designated for purposes of federal-provincial liaison on matters relating to family planning and sex education. (b) No.

5. (a) The National Film Board states that total sales to January, 1978 are: "Facts and Feelings": 115, "Savoir ... Sentir": 55, "A Question of Values": 116, "Points de Vue": 49, "Living and Growing": 115, "La Vie Qui Pousse": 68. (b) None.

6. (a) The Department has not undertaken any promotional activities with local boards of education.

CAMBRIAN FAMILY PLANNING CENTRE

Question No. 1,333—Mr. Brisco:

1. What will be the total cost involved, in terms of manpower and office rental, leases, expenses, etc., with reference to the proposed Cambrian Family Planning Centre which has been proposed for Sudbury and district?

2. What services are to be provided by the Cambrian Family Planning Centre and how will they differ from existing services currently being provided by other agencies within that community?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1 and 2. A grant of $179,000 for the Cambrian Family Planning Centre has been requested. The proposal was appraised by federal, provincial and regional authorities, who took into account the existing services and service requirements in the Sudbury area. Major revisions have also been suggested, and discussions are currently underway between health unit officials and the applicants to ensure that any grant request from Sudbury meets the needs of the area. Because of these continuing discussions further information is not available at this time.

Order Paper Questions

CONTRIBUTIONS TO PROVINCIAL WELFARE SCHEMES

Question No. 1,365—Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse):

1. During the 1976-77 fiscal year, did the government contribute to provincial welfare schemes and, if so (a) what were the programmes (b) what was the (i) total amount (ii) amount for each province?

2. What is the percentage of the government's contribution to such programmes?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. Yes. (a)(i) Blind Persons Allowances; (ii) Disabled Persons Allowances; (iii) Vocational Rehabilitation of Disabled Persons; (iv) Young Offenders; (v) Nursing Home Care Benefits; (vi) Canada Assistance Plan—Part I and Part III; (vii) Unemployment Assistance. (b)(i) Total amount contributed in 1976/77 was $1,706,159.

(ii) Amount per province	Total 1976/77 ($000's)
Newfoundland	40,841
Prince Edward Island	10,812
Nova Scotia	48,376
New Brunswick	69,009
Quebec	614,830*
Ontario	475,467
Manitoba	68,624
Saskatchewan	65,732
Alberta	121,891
British Columbia	185,376
Northwest Territories	4,294
Yukon Territory	907
	$1,706,159

2. Through the program listed in 1(a) the federal government cost shares 50 per cent of the shareable costs incurred by the provinces in carrying out these programs. However, provision is made for the federal government to reimburse 75 per cent of the amounts paid by each province through Blind Persons Allowances.

* Since part of the Quebec provincial welfare scheme is financed through the interim arrangements act, both the cash contribution and the tax point amounts are included in this above figure.

OLD AGE SECURITY FUND

Question No. 1,378—Mr. Dionne (Kamouraska):

Since 1969, did the government allocate any money to the old age security fund and, if so, how much per province?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): The allocation of funds to the old age security fund is based on individual eligibility to benefits and not on any "allocation per province". Since April 1, 1969, however, amounts paid to individuals under the Old Age Security Act can be identified by province of residence as outlined in the schedule below.

Total Old Age Security, Guaranteed Income Supplement, Spouse's Allowance Payments

Fiscal Year	National Total	NFLD.	P.E.I.	N.S.	N.B.	QUE.	ONT.	MAN.	SASK.	ALTA.	B.C.	N.W.T.	Y.T.
1968-69	1,541,320	32,278	12,588	69,257	52,021	364,113	550,611	88,360	86,905	103,946	179,976	820	445
1969-70	1,730,535	36,375	13,768	76,118	57,720	415,812	618,063	97,978	96,249	117,206	199,802	948	496
1970-71	1,907,225	39,710	14,735	82,939	62,729	464,482	681,106	106,514	104,718	129,905	218,769	1,062	556

Order Paper Questions

Fiscal Year	National Total	NFLD.	P.E.I.	N.S.	N.B.	QUE.	ONT.	MAN.	SASK.	ALTA.	B.C.	N.W.T.	Y.T.
1971-72	2,205,355	47,183	17,204	97,117	73,208	543,751	775,910	123,494	121,949	150,831	252,708	1,304	696
1972-73	2,524,345	54,475	19,663	110,681	84,002	628,029	881,391	141,268	138,945	173,835	289,738	1,527	791
1973-74	3,034,492	64,209	23,123	131,450	99,554	756,027	1,063,979	168,243	164,196	209,049	351,927	1,803	932
1974-75	3,444,474	73,067	25,936	148,330	112,865	863,914	1,206,760	189,251	183,064	236,839	401,319	2,089	1,040
1975-76	3,933,976	85,237	29,480	170,198	128,767	1,000,433	1,369,293	214,191	205,450	269,883	457,388	2,457	1,199
1976-77	4,436,673	98,063	32,793	191,973	147,373	1,134,178	1,535,638	239,904	229,525	306,133	516,720	2,975	1,398
1977-78* (to date)	4,438,084	98,565	32,600	190,870	146,793	1,137,587	1,539,485	238,691	228,068	304,648	516,333	3,015	1,428
TOTAL	29,196,478	629,162	221,890	1,268,933	965,032	7,308,326	10,222,236	1,607,894	1,559,069	2,002,275	3,384,680	18,000	8,981

*February 28, 1978

Note: Payments are expressed $000's

METRIC COMMISSION ADVERTISING COSTS

Question No. 1,429—Mr. Neil:

For each year since its inception, what have been the amounts spent by the Metric Commission (a) in total (b) on printing and publishing the Metric Monitor paper (c) on newspaper advertising (d) on all other forms of advertising?

Mr. Bernard Loiselle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): (a) Metric Commission Canada Budget: 71-72, $44,541; 72-73, $530,943; 73-74, $1,590,792; 74-75, $2,634,101; 75-76, $3,316,100; 76-77, $5,175,000; 77-78, $5,532,000. (b) Starting in 1974 contracts for printing and publishing the Metric Monitor, decided by the Department of Supply and Services on a competitive bid system are as follows: October 24, 1974, $35,000; August 15, 1975, $60,000; July 28, 1976, $72,000; August 2, 1977, $67,344; February 16, 1978, $67,344. (c) Metric Commission Canada has a policy for not paying for advertising space and time. On one occasion only, the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, office of information and public relations, on behalf of Metric Commission Canada did spend approximately $130,000 in 1975 on the "Say Goodnight Fahrenheit" newspaper advertising campaign. (d) Same as (c) above.

RIMOUSKI—PERSONS EMPLOYED IN FEDERAL OFFICES

Question No. 1,438—Mr. Allard:

1. Does the city of Rimouski have an Old Age Security Office and, if so (a) since what date (b) what is its address?

2. (a) How many persons are employed in the office (b) what are their names (c) from what date have they been employed (d) how were they appointed (e) what are their annual salaries?

3. Were any of these persons (a) formerly employed in the Public Service (b) from the Constituency of Rimouski and, if so, in each case, how many?

4. How many such offices are in the Province of Quebec?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. Yes. (a) February 3, 1978. (b) Set up temporarily at "70 est, rue St-Germain, pièce 101, Rimouski". It will be permanently located at city hall, 204 rue de la Cathédrale as soon as facilities are available.

2. (a) One. (b) Louise Sainterre. (c) January 3, 1978. (d) Lateral transfer from the Quebec regional office. (e) $11,350.—$12,409.

[Miss Bégin.]

3. (a) Yes. (b) Yes. One.

4. In addition to the two existing offices, one in Quebec City and the other in Montreal, there are nine new offices in the process of being established in the province of Quebec. They are located in Longueuil, Sherbrooke, Rimouski, Val d'Or, Sept-Îles, Gatineau, Drummondville, Trois-Rivières and Chicoutimi.

[English]

Mr. Pinard: I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: The questions enumerated by the parliamentary secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

AERONAUTICS ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING CHARGES FOR USE OF AIRPORTS, ETC.

The House resumed, from Monday March 13, consideration of Bill C-4, to amend the Aeronautics Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, and motion of Mr. Mazankowski (p. 3708).

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak about the amendment to Bill C-4 presented by our transport critic, I would like to say that I strongly subscribe to the intent and the purpose of this amendment. There is a need for careful scrutiny of government regulations. There is no question that in the past, regardless of the form of legislation, the public and certainly members of parliament have shown a great deal of concern in the House and through the media about the nature of amendments, orders in council, regulations and so forth which come before us, or which we find out about after legislation has been approved.

One must ask what changes in the regulations or what new regulations will go forward to resolve problems at the community airport level. I am reminded of the circumstances surrounding the Castlegar airport, and I wonder whether regulations will put some form of stricture on that operation. The operation to date has shown signs of federal stricture. Positive decisions have been made by regional authorities, and negative decisions have been made by Ottawa-based authorities. The reverse can also happen.

Recently, after a number of years of operation at that airport, the Ministry of Transport in its benign wisdom decided that the Castlegar airport should have the benefit of a foam truck for the purpose of fighting fires. I think that is very commendable. The difficulty is that in providing a foam truck at the Castlegar airport the department did not realize that, in the freezing temperatures of winter, foam freezes. I have been applying to the Ministry of Transport now for about two years for an expansion of the facilities for the storage of equipment which services the runway. There is no storage facility in which to keep a foam truck. The only other way would be to leave other equipment sitting outside to freeze up during the winter months. I can just imagine the foam truck being called upon for immediate and urgent use in the middle of winter and it being discovered that the foam had frozen in the tanks. That would create all kinds of waves for Ottawa.

• (1212)

Surely in terms of regulations, and considering what will be done at the local level, there must be some form of reporting at the standing committee level, and reporting to this House. This House should have the opportunity to deny, or at least express concern about, the implementation of regulations that have an impact on flying, whether commercial or by private pilots.

Castelgar airport has an excellent record of all who use that facility. This includes the flight crews in commercial transports, private pilots, the ground crew in terms of weather and tower instructions, as well as the directors of the Selkirk College, one of the finest flying schools in Canada with some of the finest students.

On a recent visit to Selkirk College I overheard an inspector from the Ministry of Transport say what a treat it was to examine second year students at the flying school at Selkirk College. He said he did not think there was a student with a mark below 83. He stated that in Vancouver, where there are a number of flying schools, students applying for commercial licences frequently have an average of around 60 per cent, on the border line of failure. They fight with the instructors, inspectors, and examiners to try to get a pass mark. That speaks very well for the quality of students and instructors at Selkirk College.

That kind of dedication is demonstrated by students, instructors, air crew, be they private or commercial, the ground crew and those who operate at Castlegar airport. They have an outstanding record of safety, even though Castlegar airport is considered by many pilots to be one of the most awkward airports in Canada at which to land.

There are no facilities at that airport such as VOR, a type of navigational aid that is very costly and highly sophisticated. This facility would be very useful because of the mountainous terrain and the approaches to the field. We have difficulty with transport regulations and priorities in providing some of the most essential, but in terms of sophistication almost rudimentary, navigational aids for Castlegar airport. The aid that is now there belongs in the Smithsonian Institute. Parts are difficult to obtain. I recognize the problem is supposedly going to be solved before this year is out. Hopefully it will be.

When dealing with regulations one is drawn to the concern that has emanated from the findings of the inquiry into the terrible accident at Cranbrook airport. I can only say that there, but for the grace of God, go I. It is a route I travel practically every week end. I am very disturbed by the reports that have come out in the press as a result of the coroner's inquest in Cranbrook for the past three days. It is very disturbing to hear that the ground operations at Cranbrook Airport were not aware that that ill-fated flight was going to arrive in Cranbrook ten minutes earlier.

Given the right weather conditions and passenger load, it is not unusual, particularly for a jet aircraft, to arrive at its destination five, ten or 15 minutes early. We sometimes benefit from that kind of early arrival. The passengers on that ill-fated flight reaped a different kind of benefit, though it can scarcely be called a benefit. Surely that type of incident is something that can be discussed in depth by concerned members who serve on the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

I believe the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) is sensitive to some of these concerns. I believe also that he may be stubborn with regard to others, as is his nature. I really am dumbfounded as to how it can be concluded that it would not be possible for an aircraft to arrive at Cranbrook ten minutes early.

To remark on the other reported causes of the accident would not be appropriate for me or anyone else who lacks the experience, expertise, and knowledge to comment on them properly. They deal with the question of whether there was pilot error, mechanical error, or whatever. Much of that we will probably never know.

The Cranbrook airport has been in operation as a Ministry of Transport airport for a number of years. It enjoys a substantial amount of traffic, both private and commercial. It does not have the benefit of a tower. I might ask why Castlegar got a tower before Cranbrook. However, I would then be open to some concerns by my constituents. I am indeed pleased that a tower was constructed at Castlegar before Cranbrook, possibly because Castlegar is considered a much more difficult airport in terms of approaches. Nevertheless, the fact remains that we have our priorities mixed. There should be much greater emphasis on air traffic control.

It is incongruous that at this very moment in Castlegar the airport is under major reconstruction, with a total rebuilding of the surface. For the expenditure of a few extra dollars, there could be provision for adequate parking rather than having the cars parked every which way, and even out in the field. There should be provision of adequate facilities for the Castlegar airport such as for the reclaiming of baggage, especially in winter. The outdoor baggage pick-up area clearly does not demonstrate good judgment.

In Kelowna, which does not experience anything like the weather conditions at Castlegar, in fact it is positively tropical, there is indoor provision for luggage. The same is true of Cranbrook, but not so in Castlegar. They must work in cramped and confined quarters inside the terminal building, both in terms of service personnel and management as well as the representatives of PWA. The passengers are confined to a very small area. It is totally inadequate to meet the needs of the people.

There are a large number of airports in Canada. Nevertheless, the public questions the mixture of priorities in terms of the Ministry of Transport. The Minister of Transport has a habit of foisting these airport operations on to the communities. He makes it appear like a gift or a fire sale. Frequently it is the communities that end up being burned. The reaction from the communities is, "Take back your airport. We do not want the damn thing. You did not tell us the whole story". Another of the mixed reactions is, "Now that we are operating it for you, you are not prepared to spend a penny. You expect us to do all the work for you".

● (1222)

I am sure every municipality which has an airport is proud of that fact. They take pleasure out of being able to call their airports the City Airport of Cranbrook, the Castlegar City Airport, or the Vancouver International Airport. The communities cannot bear the load respecting airport facilities, equipment, manpower and maintenance, alone. They should not have to; they should not be asked to do that. There should be common ground and understanding before communities walk into situations such as that with their eyes blinded by the Department of Transport. At the other end of the road, there will be a big bill. Not only do local airports have cause for concern. The smaller airport facilities have cause for concern as well.

I am amazed at the Community Airport Facilities Fund. The Minister of Transport can correct me if he wants, but it is my understanding the fund per year allotted for that type of a facility is around $2 million, generally speaking. Also it is my understanding that the call on that money across Canada is in excess of $9 million. Some of these smaller community facilities—call them emergency strips, if you will—are in desperate need of upgrading in order to make them reasonably safe for private aircraft landings. Yet we have a fund of $2 million, with a demand of $9 million annually. It takes a long time for any community to reach the top of the pile. In some instances, communities find that they have been reshuffled and end up at the bottom of the pile.

The community of Kaslo made overtures to the fund for a number of years, with no results. The town of Creston was anxious to put in an airport. That town did not receive encouragement from the Minister of Transport because it was a community with a tax base which did not allow it to make an initial start. In fact that community requires that boost and that help. As matters now stand, they will not get an airport.

Aside from the provision of facilities, buildings, plants and other structures at airports, a great deal of concern should be directed toward the question of air safety, commercial or private. After the coroner's inquest, it was revealed that there have been other instances across Canada. Apparently there was one at Dorval and, if I am not mistaken, one at North Bay or Thunder Bay. In these instances, commercial flights landed and were impeded on final approach and touchdown by vehicles on the runway such as snow removal equipment, maintenance equipment or whatever.

Surely some kind of policy or regulation to protect us from accidents of that nature is necessary. I am referring to accidents which are caused by conflicting traffic being on the runways at the same time. I think of the horrible accident which occurred in the Canary Islands a couple of years ago. In that accident I lost two good friends from Kelowna when two 747s collided on the runway. I would hate to think a remotely similar accident could occur in Canada.

The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie) has repeatedly expressed his concerns in this House for air safety. He has drawn to the attention of the minister the violations which have occurred repeatedly in the north. I am aware of a number of occasions where aircraft have crashed, resulting in the death of the crew and passengers, because of one simple failure—the failure to adhere to load limits.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to inform the hon. member that his allotted time has expired. He may continue with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Brisco: The responsibility for load limits rests with the commander or the pilot of the aircraft. Load limit infractions are most dangerous, a real poker game with death. They are occurring repeatedly, most particularly in the north.

I can recall making a flight in a Beaver from Smithers to Buckinghorse Lake. I had the benefit of a good pilot and a good aircraft. He wondered why the aircraft would not maintain the straight and level course which he wanted. After we landed and were unloading supplies, the pilot realized that someone back at the base in Smithers had put a drum of fuel into the back of the aircraft. He did not know it was there. The aircraft was fully loaded with equipment prior to the drum of fuel being loaded. That drum was covered up, and the pilot was not aware of it being there. It was not an easy flight for him, and it was rather uncomfortable for me. I was aware of his concerns because I am a pilot as well, but I am not as skilled as those men who fly in the north. One should not risk death by overloading. The men who fly in the north are asked repeatedly to take a chance by overloading their aircraft.

There is a host of areas which can be covered during debate on this bill. I will not attempt to cover all those areas. I thank hon. members for allowing me to continue my remarks after my time had expired. The Minister of Transport bears a tremendous responsibility in the enormous and widespread field of aviation. This responsibility is shared by his officials, who are dedicated and have proven well, but are constrained by government policy. It is difficult to comprehend that government and cabinet regulations would impinge upon the effectiveness of the Department of Transport itself or those who are under its blanket or cover.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1232)

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to have this opportunity of participating in the report stage of Bill C-4 dealing with the Aeronautics Act, formerly known as Bill C-40. Members of this House are quite aware of the furor this bill caused small aircraft operators because of proposed changes in landing fees and so on. I am happy to say that because of pressures put on by those operators and other concerned groups, as well as by opposition members, we have been able to come up with some improvements to the bill during the committee process.

We now have an amendment to clause 2 which will provide for better consultation between the minister and aircraft owners and operators, and will exempt aircraft that weigh less than 5,700 kilograms from the regulation requiring a deposit of security lien for nonpayment and cases of overdue accounts.

Also during the committee process we amended clause 4 to eliminate the need to license premises used in the design of aircraft, and to provide notice by registered mail to landowners affected by zoning regulations made under the provisions of this bill. Prior to the amendment, any landowner who might be affected because of zoning changes brought in by the federal government was not even to receive the courtesy of getting a notice of that change by registered or first class mail. We managed a definite improvement there.

In addition, clause 7 was withdrawn from the bill. This would have changed licence requirements for non-scheduled air carriers.

I am happy to see that we have an amendment by the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) which will permit, if 20 members of this House desire, the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications to call witnesses and report to the House concerning the proposed regulation of landing fees and other aspects of the act. We support that amendment because we feel it is important to have on-going consultations with those affected, and we want to see how this act will affect the people in its operation, and have the chance to change or negate any of its detrimental effects.

In the short time remaining to me I should like to zero in on two aspects of the bill which, in a sense, relate to the process of amendment before us and the examination of how the act operates, that is, the effects the bill will have on landowners because of zoning changes near airports, and the matter of air safety.

An amendment in the bill gives the federal government an opportunity to make zoning regulations in areas adjacent to airports to provide for safety in respect of commercial and private aircraft. We welcome the idea in principle that the federal Department of Transport should have some authority in zoning around airports. However, we are dismayed at the lack of provision and safeguard in the bill in the whole regulatory process to protect existing land owners from any deterimental effects of rezoning. For example, we know there is no avenue of appeal before or after publication of the regulation affecting those who are going to be rezoned. The method of determining compensation to those affected by zoning is, in the opinion of the NDP, quite inadequate. Compensation is provided only to those who are using land in a manner which does not conform to the new regulations, and the act does not compensate for injury caused by airport operations.

I think of a specific case in point which demonstrates this situation, and that is the case of the residents of the Stanley Park area near the federal airport in that community of the city of Thunder Bay. The city made a detailed representation to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, making what I thought were quite logical and proper recommendations in terms of protecting landowners adjacent to airports. They brought out a number of weaknesses in the bill which, unfortunately, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) has not seen fit to address himself to by providing proper amendments.

Let me quote from this representation from the city of Thunder Bay as I think it is well worth putting on the record, and I urge the minister to take these recommendations into consideration. The city points out:

> Subsection 10 only provides for compensating owners who are put in the position of contravening the zoning regulations because the use exists at the time the regulations become applicable and only on the basis of the decrease in value caused by the application balanced by any increase in value of the property which may come about by the effects of the airport. No provision is made for compensation:
>
> (a) where damages are attributable to disturbance of occupation or business losses;
>
> (b) where there are special difficulties in relocation;
>
> (c) in a special allowance where a residence is taken, including a fixed amount for inconvenience and the cost of finding another residence as well as an allowance for improvements to the land where the value is not reflected in the market value;
>
> (d) for special costs in replacing the premises;
>
> (e) for moving costs;
>
> (f) for legal, survey and appraisal costs
>
> The act does not make special provision for compensating tenants or deal separately with mortgages.
>
> Subsection (11) limits the time for claiming compensation within two years from date of registration of the regulation. This provision without the safeguard that the owner has been properly notified would appear to assume that everyone checks his property's title every two years.

Those are the concerns of the city and property owners, and the only advance we have really made is in the area of notification. If there is to be a rezoning, the federal Department of Transport will send a letter to those affected. In terms of those other valid complaints we do not see any improvement. I think that is a glaring inadequacy of this bill, and unless it is overcome by regulation, or perhaps even by proper amendment, I do not see how we can support the bill as it is written. Surely property owners should not be jeopardized by "after the fact" kind of regulations, and if we have a government that believes in fairness and justice there should be a proper method of appeal, and we should have proper compensation procedures for those affected.

The other area of the bill which gives me much concern is that with reference to air safety. It is my conclusion we have a Department of Transport that is woefully negligent in this matter of air safety. I refer to that part of the country with which I am very familiar, northern Ontario, and in particular northwestern Ontario. We have seen one example after another of non-compliance with air safety regulations, non-enforcement of air safety regulations and, indeed, lax regulations in terms of air traffic in that part of the country.

● (1242)

The House and the public would be shocked to know that since 1970 in northern Ontario there have been more than 520 airplane accidents north of a line between Ottawa and Georgian Bay. One hundred and seventy people have died in those accidents. Between January and November, 1976, there were 57 accidents which claimed the lives of 13 people. The transport ministry official estimate states that there were almost an equal number of incidents in the same period caused by such things as fuel caps off, sliding off runways, near collisions in the air, and faulty plane maintenance. Yet the Minister of Transport likes to tell us in the House that we have one of the safest records of any country in terms of air safety.

Statistics in those specific areas indicate that we may have a very safe record when we average it out internationally, but certainly in terms of regions of Canada and the people who have to use that air travel, this is a very sad record indeed. I have called in this House for a public inquiry into the air safety aspect in northern Ontario time and time again. We have seen a department investigation in response to the clamour from the people of the area in light of these many accidents, and it was called the Slaughter and Carswell report. It brought in a devastating report on the state of air safety in northwestern Ontario.

Among many things they found overloading, falsification of log book entries, illegal and unsafe maintenance practices, flying below legal limits in bad weather, flying with insufficient flight instruments, failing to record aircraft defects, failing to train pilots although it is required by law, signing of logs by maintenance engineers without the required work being done, and employers pressuring employees into unsafe and illegal practices.

It also came to light that part of this horrendous state of the air safety situation in northwestern Ontario was that political considerations can supersede the safety of the travelling public. A memo from R. L. Bolduc, director of the ministry's aeronautical licensing and inspection branch, indicated instances in the past where an aircraft inspector had tried to suspend the licence of an airline operating out of Red Lake, Ontario, for violating safety regulations and was told by his Ottawa superior that suspensions should never be considered until, and I quote:

—you fully consider the possibility of embarrassment to the minister and any other potential political implications—

Does embarrassment to the minister take precedence over enforcing air safety regulations? What an incredible state of affairs that we have in this country when memos such as that are given to inspectors in the field. If that alone does not justify a full public inquiry into the full operations of air traffic in northern Ontario and the whole business of the adequacy of our inspection and regulations, I do not know what does.

Despite that revelation, the number of accidents, the Slaughter and Carswell report, the minister refuses and stonewalls a full public inquiry into that situation. Instead, what the minister does is issue a press release in December of 1977 announcing that a number of recommendations, of the 15 outlined in the Slaughter and Carswell report, are being given serious consideration, and that he is hiring 12 more aviation inspectors. Well, that is commendable and we do not argue with hiring more inspectors, but that surely is not going to get to the root of the problem. It will not clear up the example I mentioned of who is telling whom when air safety regulations are to be applied or not to be applied, and under what circumstances.

Mr. Leo Bernier, the provincial minister of northern affairs, requested an inquiry because there had been 134 crashes between January and October, 1976 in which 32 people died. The Minister of Transport's office confirmed these figures but responded by saying that an inquiry was not necessary because, and I quote:

—experienced aviation specialists have been hired and positioned in our regional offices to monitor and take appropriate action to improve the standards of operation of air carriers in all parts of the country.

We have had these assurances in the past, yet we still have the incredible accident rate in this part of the country. The governament must get to the bottom of this, and the only way that can be done is by an independent inquiry or holding public hearings that will examine such things as the state of radio signals and beacons in the small airports, landing strips throughout the north, mechanical repair facilities in these small communities and, indeed, the operating procedures of the various aircraft companies themselves.

The recent developments in northern Ontario are most disconcerting, and I refer particularly to one company, Patricia Airways. Anyone who has been following the situation will be familiar with the fact that on May 12, 1977, a Patricia Airways DC-3 crashed and the pilot, Dave Belluz, was killed. Three charges were laid against Patricia Airways under the federal Aeronautics Act that were later dropped in February, 1978, because the Crown prosecutor did not arrive in court on time. This is an incredible situation, but since then we have heard that the federal government is not going to proceed with prosecuting Patricia Airways because the company has now declared bankruptcy. What possible relevance does the financial state of a company have in relation to compliance or non-compliance with the Aeronautics Act of Canada? If they have been violating the act, then people must be held responsible and appropriate charges laid. It is hogwash when the federal government uses the excuse of bankruptcy for non-prosecution.

The airline was charged with assigning Mr. Belluz to a plane when he had not passed an efficiency test on that type of aircraft within six months, as is required by law, with operating an aircraft that was not safe and fit, and with operating an aircraft in a sparsely settled area without the required emergency equipment. The inquest found that the plane had been overloaded by 500 pounds to 600 pounds, the logbook was not up to date, the entire history of the plane was sloppy and sporadic. The jury advised that maintenance be improved. It was also learned that sometimes officials concerned with the aircraft had been found intoxicated. Indeed, one of the employees had stated that she had been instructed to keep a logbook out of sight so that it did not fall into the wrong hands.

● (1252)

There is an example of one company which, it would appear, violated section after section of the act and which, it would appear, is responsible in no small way for the death of the pilot, yet we learn there will be no prosecution by the federal government. What an incredible situation, Mr. Speaker. I think it was summed up very well by Mr. Iain Angus, the New Democratic Party candidate in Thunder Bay, who, in a press release stated:

It is bad enough that the federal prosecutor missed the first opportunity to present the Crown's case because he didn't plan for the inadequacy of the air system in the northwest, but to now drop any and all charges against the air carrier whose pilot died in the crash at Pickle Lake, just because the firm is in financial difficulty is an insult to every pilot and every passenger having flown in northwestern Ontario.

The bill before us is inadequate in regard to the whole business of zoning and expropriation. It is a bill that indicates much of the arrogance and authoritarianism of this government and the way it applies policy.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his allotted time has expired. He may continue with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Symes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank my colleagues. I shall be brief.

As I was saying, this demonstrates the arrogant heavy handedness of this government when it deals with ordinary individuals and their property rights. More important, the inadequacies of an air safety program accentuate the jeopardy that many people are exposed to just because the government is not serious about strengthening and upholding safety regulations.

The incidents in northwestern Ontario indicate that the only way we can find out who is responsible for this disastrous situation, and to what degree they are responsible, is to have a full public inquiry. We must not only find out who is responsible but see to it that they are prosecuted. In that way we may be able to introduce regulations to improve the situation so that all those who depend on air services in this country may feel safe.

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, for over six years I have been involved in federal politics full time. I remember being nominated in early February, 1972. At that time we were going through a period similar to the one we find ourselves in now. The Canadian people were expecting an election to be called for June or July, 1972; then the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) announced, as he did yesterday, that there would be an election-free summer.

I had the same experience as many candidates who have been nominated now are having. Some have quit their jobs and are involved full time in running for office, travelling about a constituency talking to people about their concerns and the issues that should face members of parliament.

As I travelled about the constituency and talked to my distinguished predecessor, Mr. Marvin Howe, he said that during his time in parliament—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I should like to suggest to the hon. member that he speak on the terms of Bill C-4.

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to do that, and I was just coming to my point. Mr. Howe pointed out to me that the most distressing aspect of his years in government was the continuous use by this government of the odious phrase "the governor in council may make regulations." This relates directly to this bill. On page 2 of Bill C-4 to amend the Aeronautics Act, in clause 3 appears the following statement:

5.2 For the protection of passengers, property and persons on the ground, the governor in council may make regulations requiring the owners and operators of privately registered aircraft to subscribe for and carry liability insurance, and fixing the minimum amount of such insurance.

The motion which stands on the order paper in the name of my colleague, the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski), applies to this clause. It provides that if a significant number of members of parliament are concerned about the regulations imposed by the governor in council without consultation with parliament, and if 20 of them sign a motion to that effect, a debate could be held on the subject of the regulations imposed by the government and could require that a study be made by the appropriate committee to determine whether such regulations should be allowed to stand. Surely nothing could be more sensible than ensuring that the power of parliament remains intact and that members who are concerned that regulations imposed in the dark of night by cabinet, without consultation with parliament, should be fully and adequately examined.

The issue is nothing less than the need to preserve parliamentary sovereignty. No issue is more important to members of parliament than this. To this government the issue of parliamentary sovereignty appears to be an arcane one and parliament is viewed as an impediment, not as a partnership. I say to you, Mr. Speaker, the power of parliament is nothing less than the power of the people of Canada. If the government takes away the ability of parliament to debate, scrutinize, and hold it accountable for its actions, it undermines the ability and power of the people to keep an effective check on democracy and on this government.

During the six years that I have been in parliament there has been a steady undermining of the role of parliament. We have seen this happen in many ways. During question period today there was some discussion about committees, many of which had not met or considered the estimates. It is very possible, if this government insists on this sort of procedure—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I would suggest to the hon. member that he get back to the terms of Bill C-4.

Mr. Beatty: The terms of Bill C-4 are explicit, Mr. Speaker. They further undermine the power of members of parliament to keep an eye on what the government is doing. What I am trying to establish is that over the last several years it has taken away the power of parliament to carry out its functions on behalf of the people of Canada. This bill, and the power to govern by regulation, are only one more step in a long process aimed at dismantling the power of parliament and removing the ability to check which is presently held by members of parliament.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this day.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

• (1402)

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

• (1412)

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, when the House broke for lunch at 1 p.m. we were discussing the amendment placed on the order paper by my hon. friend from Vegreville. It would have the effect of amending Bill C-4 which is before us at the present time on the subject of the Aeronautics Act. The force of the amendment proposed by my hon. friend would be to ensure that when orders in council are made by the governor in council under the terms of this measure, the House of Commons would be able to scrutinize those orders to see that the government had acted properly within the power delegated to it by parliament. The amendment would provide for parliamentary review if 20 members signed a petition requesting it.

I began earlier by noting that there had been an increasing tendency on the part of government to bypass parliament. What I should like to do this afternoon is to make four points. I think they are fundamental points. They are crucial, I believe, as we try to decide whether or not the amendment in the name of my hon. friend from Vegreville deserves support.

The first point I want to make is that the power of parliament is the power of the people of Canada. We have no rights except those which are drawn from the people. We act in their name upon authority delegated by them, and anything done to undermine the authority of parliament and lessen the power of the people's representatives undermines the power of the people themselves.

The second point I wish to make is that the government's increasing reliance upon the issuance of regulations is, in fact, undermining the authority of parliament. I will return to that point a little later.

The third is that the track record of the government with regard to government by regulation is bad, a dangerous one for the Canadian people.

The fourth and most important, I intend to establish that the amendment proposed by my hon. friend would give at least some protection to parliament and to the people.

I return for a few moments to the second point I made, namely, that the increasing reliance by the government upon governing by regulation is undermining parliament. I shall not deal this afternoon with other areas in which the government has been bypassing parliament or eroding its sovereignty by detracting from our ability to place a check upon the arbitrary powers of the cabinet, but it is worth mentioning that increasingly during this government's term of office the administration has relied upon orders in council, upon clauses in legislation which say that the governor in council "shall make regulations". A broad grant of powers having thus been given by parliament, the government is able, without returning to this House, to make decisions which affect the daily lives of Canadians.

I have in my hand, Mr. Speaker, a document which weighs about five pounds and contains over 1,000 pages. It is entitled "A Catalogue of Discretionary Powers in the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1970." This book, which simply lists the various discretionary powers held by the government—it does not elaborate on any of them—runs to more than 1,000 pages. What the government is proposing in the legislation now before us is to add to this list of the powers the government possesses to erode the freedom of Canadians without the consent or approval of the House of Commons. The government has increasingly been looking for ways in which to bypass parliament so that it can continue to rule Canada by order in council.

There was a book published several years ago entitled "The New Despotism," written by a former Lord Chief Justice of England, the Right Hon. Lord Hewart of Bury. Lord Hewart deals with means whereby a determined government could turn a parliamentary democracy into a despotism. I should like to read a couple of passages from this book into the record because I believe they are germane to the subject we are considering.

Writers on the constitution have for a long time taught that its two leading features are the sovereignty from and the rule of law. To tamper with either of them was, it might be thought, a sufficiently serious undertaking. But how far more attractive to the ingenious and adventurous mind to deploy the one to defeat the other and to establish a despotism on the ruins of both! It is manifestly easy to point a superficial contrast between what was done or attempted in the days of our least wise kings and what is being done or attempted today. In those days the method was to defy parliament—and it failed. In these days the method is to cajole, to coerce and to use parliament—and it is strangely successful. The old despotism, which was defeated, offered parliament a challenge. The new despotism, which is not yet defeated, gives parliament an anaesthetic. The strategy is different but the goal is the same. It is to subordinate parliament, to evade the courts and to render the will, or the caprice of the executive unfettered and supreme.

That is the issue before us when we are faced with demands by the government for more power to allow it to rule by orders in council. I should like to put on the record also one further quotation from this book. It reads as follows:

It is one thing to confer power, subject to proper restrictions, to make regulations. It is another thing to give those regulations the force of a statute. It is one thing to make regulations which are to have no effect unless and until they are approved by parliament. It is another thing to make regulations behind the back of parliament which come into force without the assent or even the knowledge of parliament.

My third point was that the track record of this government with regard to governing by regulation is very bad. Nothing could be more germane when we are considering whether we should give the government the further discretionary power it is seeking. I will cite just one example. I would like to bring to the attention of the House today the report of the Joint Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments. That committee examined the government's use of orders in council as a means of avoiding coming back to parliament to increase postal rates. The committee made this short but very fundamental recommendation:

● (1422)

Your joint committee reaffirms its objection in principle to the use by the Crown of subordinate legislation under section 13 of the Financial Administration Act to prevail against parliament. It reiterates its grave doubts as to the validity of relying on the general power in section 13 of the Financial Administration Act to set postal rates, to override the special enactments contained in sections 10 and 11 of the Post Office Act, to overcome the will of parliament as to the domestic letter rate expressed subsequently to the enactment of section 13 of the Financial Administration Act, or to empower the Postmaster General to set rates when parliament has empowered neither the governor in council nor anyone else to do so.

The amendment which has been proposed by my colleague would refer orders in council which are made by the government under the terms of the amendments to the Aeronautics Act back to parliament so that interested members of parliament could have the authoritiy to examine the orders in council to see whether the government had acted properly.

It would also make provision for a committee of parliament to study those orders in council. On the basis of the way this government has operated in the past, we know that even when the appropriate committee of parliament has studied the abuse which has been made of orders in council by this government, the government has simply decided to ignore the recommendations which have been made by parliament. When the issue of the increase in the postal rates was raised in parliament, the Postmaster General (Mr. Lamontagne), in response to a question in the House, made this one short statement:

I think we should put to ourselves the more serious question of trying to have more efficient delivery of mail everywhere, instead of wasting our time arguing if the rates are legal or not.

What more scathing indictment of this government could there be than the fact that the Postmaster General says he believes that parliament is wasting its time in questioning whether the government has acted legally or not? How can the government have the temerity to come back to parliament and say that it wants a vast grant of power which would be unchecked by parliament, when its track record shows that it does not deserve it?

All the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Vegreville asks for is simply that in cases where it is clear to members of parliament that the government has gone too far in making an order in council or a regulation which is offensive to the Canadian people and of concern to parliament, parliament should have the right to review that regulation and to hold the government to account. I suggest that when this power has been given to this government in the past it has historically abused it, and it is clear that parliament must have some remedy to ensure that its rights and the sovereignty of the people of Canada are protected.

No issue is more fundamental to parliament than the rule of parliament itself, and I think that is why the proposal which is being made in this motion in the name of the hon. member for Vegreville deserves the support of every member in this House.

The one last point I would like to make is that the government denies that there is a need to have this parliamentary scrutiny of its actions by order in council. It says that what the government will be doing by order in council will be so innocuous that parliament would be wasting its time even to consider it.

Let me put the proposition another way. If in fact the regulations which will be passed by the government by order in council will be innocuous and of little concern to parliament, what cause does the government have to fear that parliamentary scrutiny would in any way endanger its ability to act? Unless the government has something to hide, and unless the government expects to be abusing the power it is asking parliament to give to it, it should have no objection whatsoever to allowing parliament to maintain its very fundamental right of keeping a check over the activities of the government. The proposal which is being made in this motion is eminently sensible. It is designed to protect the rights of the people of Canada, and I think it deserves the support of every single member of this House.

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, I suppose if any individual reviews his educational background he finds that by some joke of fate he may have had a particular subject taught in a particular way which is well remembered. That particular aspect of my experience in education was to have had a series of teachers who emphasized the use of language as applied both in English and in French, as it was taught to me. Unfortunately, the latter language was never taught to me to such a degree that I can speak it, but I well remember the teaching I received in both, the emphasis upon the use of language and its value in our everyday life.

I suppose what I am going to say this afternoon may be thought by certain members on both sides of this House to be repetitive and, to a degree, boring, but anything one values and wishes to promote may perhaps have to be the subject of repetition.

This bill is perhaps as good an example as any of the utter failure of the proper mechanical use of language. A piece of legislation is intended to be definitive in its object as it relates to the control of our society in one way or another. Because this legislation is not definitive or precise, it must lean on that crutch clause which appears in many bills in this House, the regulatory clause.

Regulatory clauses may sometimes include the phrase "notwithstanding any prior clause" or some other item which might be of consequence in the administration and intent of the particular bill involved. It is because of the practice of poor language that this government brings to us legislation requiring regulation to the extent that this and many other bills do. I am alarmed that this House, which has among its membership many outstanding barristers—most of them, of course, are on this side of the House, but the other side is also favoured with one or two—as the upholder of the law does not object in holy horror to the language of this bill and its transfer of power to the hands of an individual. This is the lazy man's way of presenting legislation. This legislation indicates improper consideration and lack of knowledge of its objective. It indicates lack of thought, lack of planning and, above all, bad government.

I am pleased that the regulatory clause of this bill has become a subject of debate because, while this principle may not relate specifically to aeronautics legislation, it relates to all legislation, and I think we must abandon the lazy man's way of planning the laws which regulate our society.

I suppose I would have to say that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) has demonstrated to this House and to the country at large that he has a good command of the English language. His legal training and background should preclude the possibility that he, as a minister, would introduce legislation of this sloppy type. However, this legislation is not definitive or precise, and it is certainly not concise, and that should be the objective of all those who practise the mechanics of language.

● (1432)

In view of the fact the bill is sloppy and does not cover the field which will be later covered by regulation, I hope the government will indicate promptly that it will accept the amendment offered so that this House may consider the changes which may be made by regulation. Unfortunately, as pointed out by the last speaker, this is hidden law. I am going to be repetetive. This is the kind of law which allows Canadians to go to bed innocent of any breach of legislation in our dominion, and wake up the next morning criminals. This is because the governor in council passed a regulation, behind closed doors, changing the rules of the game, as this bill will permit the governor in council to do.

When you think of a crutch you usually think of the maimed and unfortunates who are incapable of proper walking without some additional instrument to aid them. I submit that when a minister brings in an act which is as subject to regulation as this one is, which is as incomplete without regulation as this bill is, he is wearing a crutch. It indicates his incompetence by virtue of his use of the language in the bill which has been submitted for its purpose.

In the committee which sits on statutory instruments for this House, consideration is given to regulations which are passed by government. Although I may have missed something, it has not been drawn to my attention that government has accepted the fact that the statutory instruments committee has on occasion found fault with the regulations passed by government. In fact, on occasion I have found them reprehensible, neglectful, illegal and, worst of all, retroactive.

On one occasion when I participated in the deliberations of that committee, they were discussing a regulation passed to accommodate an error which had been made by the Canadian Feed Grains Board. The legislation spelled out very clearly some of the things they could do. However, having that basket clause at the bottom, it permitted them to circumvent the bill by virtue of regulation. They found they were in some conflict of certain aspects of their administration. They had to ask the governor in council to approve of an amendment which they had drafted and submitted to the proper minister who, in turn, submitted it to cabinet.

What that amendment did was legalize what could be properly classed as illegal behaviour by the board for a period of 15 to 18 months. That regulation was passed by cabinet and considered by the committee. To the best of my knowledge and belief, the government took no action to chastise or in any other way criticize the Canadian Feed Grains Board for their illegal behaviour. It patted them on the back, approved the regulation on a retroactive basis, and forgave them all of their sins.

That happened to be a relatively minor matter. Granted, the action which they took was probably positive as it related to the execution of their duties. However, it is an example of the incapacity of the draftsman to define the purpose of the act, and the crutch had to be used, a regulation. I want to emphasize the necessity of the House of Commons, with all the capabilities it has, having the opportunity to consider those regulations. It should have the opportunity to present them to the minister and receive his respect for the recommendations with regard to language. What we are talking about is incompetence in the use of language.

My early indoctrination into procedures of government in this country happened in the province of New Brunswick in the provincial legislature. I well remember about four people whose minds were sharp and whose use of language was very much above average. There were such people as Gordon Fairweather, whom all hon. members know and respect, the late Babbit Parlee, the late George McInerney, the Hon. William West, who has shown himself to be an excellent member of the bench, and others. They analysed every bill presented to that caucus. They analysed it in a debate which demanded that the attorney general's department should present to government and to the province the type of language which was, as I suggested earlier, precise, concise, and definitive.

I raised this in committee many times. I asked that language be changed because it was ambiguous and did not fulfil the purpose outlined by the minister. That little legislature produced, while those minds were directing, legislation of the type which did not require regulation to the degree that this does.

There is, of course, a place for regulation. That place is for the minister's use so that he may to some degree direct the fashion in which the intent of the law is administered by his employees. However, it is not intended to amend the law so that his employees may administer the law as they see fit. That is precisely what is happening right here.

Examples of regulations are probably more obvious as they come from the fisheries department than any other department of government. I am reasonably familiar with that. Some of them have started as low down as the fisheries officer who, on his own, can virtually make a regulation. His superiors back him up after he has made a ruling. There are regulations which fishermen have not heard of before. Demands are made on them after they have obtained a licence and a guide for its use. That is a serious abuse of the regulatory power extended in the blank cheque legislation for which this government demands approval by this House.

I commend to the minister John Gray, Q.C., presently a member of the staff of the CTC. In that provincial legislature he made the necessary adjustments and became part of the drafting team which produced a type of legislation which we should have in this House as well as in the province of New Brunswick. Since we cannot have that kind of legislation, it is absolutely imperative that there be some vehicle which will give a meaningful opportunity to examine regulations, preferably before they become effective, preferably before they reach the stage of being gazetted because, after they have been gazetted, they are law. It is then too late, unless one can obtain an amendment. The subjects of this country are subject to the orders in council which have been passed. There should be a vehicle at the disposal of this House for the consideration of regulations.

The previous speaker mentioned that he had a catalogue which showed merely the names and numbers of orders in council which government has issued, approved, and incorporated into the statutes of this country. However, I read somewhere that a committee or group had been commissioned to determine how many regulations there are in Canada, and that it would probably require 40,000 pages to print them all. If I am incorrect, I ask any member of the government to correct me, but I am quite sure that is the figure that appeared in a news release some time within the last year. Since a 1,000-page volume would be necessary to list the names and numbers of them, I suppose it is not excessive to suggest that it might take 40,000 pages to print the real content of all those regulations. Canada is over burdened with regulations.

● (1442)

In the field of air transportation, a loyal maritimer or a resident of eastern Canada would suggest that we have permitted a scheduling structure which is detrimental to service in that area. An example of the lack of control in scheduling can be seen if one looks at the flights between Ottawa and Atlantic Canada. Our regional airline, EPA, has scheduled flights to Montreal. The Air Canada schedule includes a flight departing for Ottawa at the moment of the arrival of the EPA flight. A passenger is dumped at Gate No. 42 in Montreal and is expected to board the next plane leaving from Gate No. 1 within an instant. The distance between those two gates is practically the maximum with which one can be faced. Yet neither legislation nor regulation has interceded on behalf of proper economic arrangements for both airlines and proper convenience for those who travel to and from Atlantic Canada.

If Air Canada is late or if EPA is early, and if one rushes, he might make the connection. The alternative is to wait up to two hours in the Montreal airport in order to make a connection with the flight to Ottawa. Also, it is a sorry situation that it is more convenient for a person to fly from Ottawa to Fredericton for an evening appointment in Saint John than it is to fly to Saint John for that meeting. One wastes less time, although those cities are approximately 70 miles apart.

Only this week I experienced this situation. Because of appointments in Ottawa and appointments in Saint John, it was necessary to leave for Fredericton in the late afternoon and return to Ottawa the next morning in order to meet my commitments. I saved several hours by arranging my trip in that manner. This is not good.

If there is regulatory capacity, at least it should be exercised on behalf of the people who ordinarily use the system. I refer to regulations and contractual agreements which have been made by the Government of Canada in respect of privileges extended to regional and third level air corporations. The improper control of those airlines and national airlines has led to the economic demise of some regional groups, the sell-out of others, and the proposed sell-out of some yet to come. Existing legislation does not correct these situations, and regulations in this legislation will not do anything to alleviate them.

I have every sympathy with Canadians who are required to live under a structure in which regulations may be law. How can a lawyer be sure that his client is operating within the laws of the Department of Transport after this act becomes law? The regulatory capability within the law virtually supersedes the law itself. Since that regulatory capability will not be taken out by the government, on behalf of Canada, its citizens, its airlines, its transportation, and on behalf of better government, I plead for the acceptance of this amendment. Since one cannot define what he wants to do by law, and since it is necessary to rely on the crutch of the legal cripple, then the government should concede that this amendment should be passed. That would show the House of Commons and Canada what particular crutch is needed, why it is needed, and its impact. Let us go to bed innocent and get up innocent. Let us not go to bed innocent and get up guilty.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to participate at this stage in the debate on Bill C-4, and particularly the amendment standing in the name of hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski). That amendment accentuates the principle many members on this side of the House are attempting to illustrate. When power is given to ministers by order in council and power is delegated to boards, there comes a point in time when wide and vague legislation, in effect legislating by regulation, must come to an end.

The complexity of modern society and the technical subjects contained in bills put members of parliament into a position where they cannot become directly involved in a lot of the detail contained in legislation. Certainly that is the reason why there are so many general bills giving power to ministers by order of governor in council to make necessary regulations in order to implement the purpose in bills.

If I had spoken three or four days ago in the waning days of this parliament, I would have indicated that perhaps these are waning days for some people in parliament. Apparently parliament will continue for a while. A week or so ago the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) brought in a bill containing fundamental amendments to the Criminal Code. Of course the present Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) was the minister of justice at one point. Those amendments covered many subjects. One was an entire reclassification of the offence of rape. The effect was to take rape out of the dictionary, more or less, and rename it as indecent assault, and other forms of aggravated assault against persons.

Perhaps I do not know all the details of the Aeronautics Act. Certainly I do not know all the details of the regulations passed under the Aeronautics Act. During the several years I have been in the House I have watched an increasing tendency to provide unlimited, vague powers to governors in council to make regulations. I am beginning to understand, in a parliamentary sense and not in a criminal sense, the rape of parliament, if power is given to ministers to make regulations which involve the public of the land. If we are talking about many complex technical and scientific subjects, obviously members of parliament cannot become involved in all aspects of these.

Mrs. Holt: Obviously the hon. member is stretching the subject.

Mr. Nowlan: Since I am not in an angry mood this afternoon, I will not raise the timbre of my voice too high. The Minister of Justice should define some of the forms of parliamentary rape that government has incorporated in its bills. In effect that is what we are receiving.

The debate today would not be taking place if we were dealing with another subject matter. We are talking about the Aeronautics Act and the amendment put forward by the hon. member for Vegreville. In very simple terms that amendment indicates, if a regulation is passed by the governor in council affecting the aeronautics of the land, particularly the safety of flights, that regulation, upon the signatures of 20 members, should come on to the floor of the House for debate. Then it would be referred to the appropriate standing committee, which has a government majority. In that event, the government controls the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications. You have the debate, the report comes back, and at the most four hours are taken in this House to consider the regulation.

• (1452)

As I say, the only regulations which would ever get into that cycle are ones affecting the safety of people using the airlines. You might have one in the cycle in respect of the charges at airports which also affect the public. This happens when the public is concerned and directly involved. That is much different from an awful lot of bills in respect of which the public is very indirectly involved, as the public is in respect of whatever we do here in terms of the general law. The public is also indirectly involved in terms of the application of regulations passed under the law.

In this case which deals with aeronautics, because of the fact that more and more Canadians are flying each year, the hon. member for Vegreville introduced an amendment. That amendment is the subject matter now before us for debate. It in effect is an attempt to leave with parliament some input through this public process in respect of something that affects the public.

Why the minister should sit there so Gibraltar-like or sterile of thought and not receive this amendment with positive acclaim, I really fail to understand. When bills come before the House they are not in perfect form. That is certainly true of this government's bills, again without being too critical. One of the reasons this government is in so much difficulty is that never has any government drafted more faulty legislation which has to be corrected in committees on any subject than has this government.

Bill C-4 was before the committee where certain changes were made. At least at that time the minister acceded to requests by opposition and government members, some of whom had a hand in this. At least then the bill, which was just to give the minister the power to make regulations, was corrected. As the hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain) has said, the only time one knows about the regulation is when he finds out he is in violation of it. You can go to bed at night under one regulation and wake up in the morning to realize there has been a change because the minister has signed an order in council. At least through the diligent work of the members of the committee the minister was persuaded to see some light, and four or five changes were made in respect of notice to the public about things that could affect the public, for example, regarding air safety.

There were changes made. There was a change to clause 2 of the bill which in effect sets up the first ray of sunlight in this regulatory process. This is something members on this side of the House have been trying to be consistent about for years. The hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) has been trying for years to get a freedom of information bill. He has proposed other amendments to bring some light to the regulatory process. To give the Minister of Transport credit, he finally agreed at the committee to some changes which go part way down the road, allowing a little light to filter into this regulatory process.

Clause 2 now says that a regulation passed shall at least be published in the Canada Gazette for 90 days, and during that 90 days if someone feels very aggrieved, upset or affected, there can be, and I think the word is, consultation, with the minister and the department, with no great direction regarding the definition as to what "consultation" should be. I guess you could write a letter and he might answer it. I guess you could try to get an appointment with him and he might be able to see you if he was not too busy. However, at least there is to be publication of the regulation, and that is a step in the right direction.

As my hon. friend pointed out when he introduced this amendment when the bill was being debated on March 13, there is a most interesting statistic regarding the year 1976. That was the last year for which we have a record of the number of orders in council passed. In that year there were 3,326 orders in council passed, of which only 653 were gazetted, or ever shown the light of day. No one knows about the rest until a Canadian citizen runs into one. The rules of the game may have been changed, but that citizen would not even know of the change and would not receive notice of how they were changed until someone in officialdom informed him that was not the way things are being done because a new regulation has been passed through the simple means of a signature.

At least through the diligence of members of the committee there is a slight improvement to the bill. We have at least made sure that regulations affecting aeronautics and air travel, with particular interest to public safety, will be published and given the light of day for at least 90 days.

You and I know, Mr. Speaker, that not too many of us read the Canada Gazette. As members of parliament we get copies in our office. I must say that it is an interesting piece of information. I was trying to ask a question today of the Minister of Communications (Mrs. Sauvé) about something which was gazetted and will affect all the radio ham operators in the land after the publication time runs out. Quite frankly, this has taken a little time to catch on because most ham operators in the country do not read the Canada Gazette. I suggest, with deference, Mr. Speaker, that although you are learned in procedural definitions, with the high talent and grace with which you occupy the chair, part of your bedtime reading is not the Canada Gazette, unless you really want to go to sleep very quickly. In that case perhaps you could read it to put yourself to sleep, but then you might not remember what you had read when you woke up in the morning. The point of the matter is that it is a not a very well read public document.

We are talking about the public in respect of air travel, and what better forum is there than the House of Commons, where the representatives of 22 million Canadians sit, to have some input in respect of air regulations which are to be written by the bureaucrats? Those bureaucrats are going to write those regulations in all sincerity in the ivory towers of the Department of Transport. I guess they will be written in that big number two tower of Place de Ville, or at least that is where the Ministry of Transport used to be. That is a beautiful building. They can be up on the twenty-fourth or thirty-fourth floor of what is not even colloquially an ivory tower because it is all glass.

They can be looking out of those glass towers at the Gatineau Hills and the Ottawa River, and get carried away with writing the script, and write regulations they think are sensible. Then the minister, who is harried, comes back from the west where he has been trying to maintain one of the outposts of Liberaldom—whether it is "Fort Lang" or "Horner Hall"—and signs these documents without really knowing what is in them. He may be out in one of those places west of Thunder Bay all week, or all week end, doing his best, as we all do from time to time as politicians, trying to maintain government strength in certain parts of the country. He might be doing departmental work, and then on Monday morning or Tuesday he gets these sheets of paper to sign. He does not really look at those orders in council. They have been prepared by somebody else, put on his desk, and he is expected to sign them because somebody before him has ticked them and recommended them for the minister's signature. That is how the process works.

If I were the Minister of Transport I would be in favour of the amendment of the hon. member for Vegreville because it would make it possible, when there was a regulation affecting the public and air safety that might be embarrassing, to have an outlet for that frustration and a forum where the mistake could be corrected. Such a mistake could be correct in a procedural way without anyone having really to take ministerial responsibility for an official goof. This is what would be accomplished by the amendment of my friend. It would allow a debate here or a referral to the committee. The suggestion that this would tie up parliament is ridiculous, because other than the estimates which are referred to committees and a direct reference of other work, our committees are not always functioning.

Members of parliament, both in the opposition and in the government, are somewhat sensible creatures and will not be referring during debate in the House of Commons to a number of regulations, certainly those of a highly technical nature. As a matter of fact most members likely do not know a darned thing about those regulations. However, members are in contact with the public when travelling back and forth across this country, even more so than a lot of well-meaning public servants who write the regulations.

Members come into contact with the public, specifically small craft operators. We each have small airports in our ridings and we all pass through the larger airports on our trips back to Ottawa. We often have members of the public talking to us about matters that affect them, perhaps a specific regulation they have come across, wondering what it is all about.

● (1502)

Surely, if there is public outcry against a regulation that was conceived in all sincerity but based on an incorrect assumption, this amendment would allow the House of Commons to debate it and refer it to committee for study. Once out of committee, hopefully the regulation would be changed. I give credit to the minister for going so far as to publish the regulations but it seems to me that like night follows day it is natural and logical to go one step further so that parliament would have some input into a kind of regulation that very well would have aroused the public. In effect members of parliament themselves should have the opportunity to take an interest in it, but without the passage of this amendment, within a year, regardless of what government is in power, there will be a regulation under the Aeronautics Act that will have insulted and irritated in a most meaningful way the public of the land and thus will have to be changed.

No one is suggesting that our regulations are infallible. In fact, the more you get the more problems you have and the more chances of mistake. An example of this situation is when the government wanted to levy an airport tax and the minister was proposing increases of 400 per cent to 500 per cent in what the public would have to pay to get their aeroplane tickets. There was a public outcry and the minister had, in effect, to eat crow and make some changes. If the minister could make a change in that instance, certainly there should be a chance for public debate on this amendment so that members of parliament will have a chance to reflect the concerns of the public in something so vital as the Aeronautics Act and air safety under the act.

The essence of this debate is not the pros and cons of the Aeronautics Act but the amendment introduced by the hon. member for Vegreville, who is merely asking that when there has been a public outcry about something affecting the air safety of the land, members of parliament can debate it. It will be the only time members will be interested in debating it and getting it referred to committee, because it will be important enough to affect the travelling public from coast to coast. This amendment merely asks the House of Commons to refer it to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications. Since the government controls the majority in committee it will not get hung up there, and if the government does not want it it will come back here and be debated for only four hours. But at least the parliament of Canada would have an input into something that affects the public of the land.

[Mr. Nowlan.]

We continue to see the erosion of the power of parliament, which in the old days was to protect the power of the purse. We know from our amendments and the way in which we deal with estimates now in the standing committees that the powers of parliament have already been eroded to a great extent and that we are almost unnecessary in terms of examining the estimates. Surely, in something as important as the safety of the airways we should have some input in a parliamentary way that is delegated to the standing committee on transport which is very involved in this subject. Recommendations could then be made by that committee. Mistakes will be made—innocently—but will still have to be corrected. All the amendment is suggesting is that we use this parliamentary forum. I hope hon. members will consider the proposal seriously and not vote it down merely because it comes from the hon. member for Vegreville.

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, sitting here listening to the debate this afternoon, I am reminded of the motto or creed of the Jaycees, the Junior Chamber of Commerce organization in Canada, which says that they believe in a government of laws and not a government of men. It led me to conclude that if this Liberal government has a motto or creed it would be just the opposite, namely that they believe in a government of men and not of laws. Every piece of legislation that I am aware of in the six years I have been here contains clauses like the one we are discussing today, an offensive provision which says that the governor in council or the minister may make regulations, et cetera. In fact, that has become such a prominent part of government legislation that social scientists looking at the trends would have to conclude that the Liberal government will bring in at the start of a parliamentary session a single clause bill saying that the governor in council or the minister shall do whatever he wants. That is the result of clauses that provide this very arbitrary power of making regulations and have the same impact as any other form of law and legislation passed by this House.

As we travel down the path to more and more non-democratic use of regulations, more and more legislation and law by regulation as opposed to legislation passed in this House, we are surely travelling down the path toward what is less and less a democracy in which people are governed by laws established by their elected representatives.

Last fall, I was interested in this question of regulations and the extent we are governed by them, so I phoned the Department of Justice and inquired whether there was a compilation of all government regulations. As I have indicated, every piece of legislation has provision for regulations, and I wanted to know how many there were and whether a list had ever been compiled. The Department of Justice instructed me that they were working on a compilation and expected it to be completed and published this spring. When I asked whether I could obtain a copy, they informed me it would be possible but it would be very awkward because it consisted of 12,000 sheets of computer print-out. When I asked what it would be like when it was published, they indicated that it would consist of 40 volumes of 800 pages each—regulations flowing from this kind of legislation and which have not been examined in terms of their impact by democratically elected representatives.

Regulations are passed at a horrendous rate in cabinet, with the quick stroke of a pen, and at no time have they had the careful consideration that they should be given with regard to their effect on the people. Last year, as was mentioned earlier, some 3,400 orders in council were passed by this government, a huge amount of law making which has never been exposed to the public and which this body has never had a chance to examine or adjudicate upon.

In addition to this democratic question, which by far and away is the most important issue raised, we have the question of cost. The Minister of State (Small Business) (Mr. Abbott), in plugging his new appointment as "comptroller of the paper work burden", offered to the House and the people of Canada the figure of $10 billion as the indirect cost upon the economy of regulations made by government. That is not just the administrative cost, but the total cost to the economy. It does not necessarily mean there is no value, but that value is nowhere near $10 billion. So we have the Minister of State (Small Business) saying that he is going to start to deregulate and eliminate some of these regulations and reduce this $10 billion cost which is borne by the economy.

● (1512)

In earlier times the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) indicated that he would undertake systematic deregulation so that people would not be fettered by the thousands and thousands of regulations emanating from government. On the one hand we have the Prime Minister and the Minister of State (Small Business) making statements like that, and on the other hand we have another minister introducing legislation which imposes more of the type of things that the Minister of State (Small Business) claims is detrimental to the economy and to society. It makes one wonder if they talk to each other. How can they say, on the one hand, that they are going to reduce the role of government by deregulating government, and on the other introduce legislation which provides for the arbitrary imposition of more regulations, for no democratic control, and for no opportunity for this House or anybody else to debate the merits?

Surely, when we have a minister indicating that the cost of making these regulations is $10 billion, it is reasonable to require, to request, to provide some opportunity for the people's representatives in this House or in one of its committees to examine these regulations and see whether they are appropriate, how they fit into the total range of regulations, and to make sure that they simply do not become another burden that costs more than whatever benefit might accrue.

In the United States, President Carter has indicated that in the future any new regulations—such as those similar to the type contemplated in this bill—which are imposed upon the economy must be accompanied by a cost/benefit analysis. Regulations will not be examined or approved until there has been an associated cost/benefit analysis. They have recognized the horrendous cost of unnecessary regulations and that any regulation at all has a cost. Any wise decision-making process should involve some cost/benefit analysis. There is no such provision in this bill, of course, although the amendment proposed by my friend and colleague, the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski), would at least provide an opportunity for debate. Questions of cost could be raised at that time.

I think it is fair to ask why the government continually introduces this kind of legislation. Why do they always put in an escape clause to the effect that the governor in council may pass regulations as he sees fit? The answer is, of course, that there is a need for flexibility. The problems that may arise in a certain area cannot be foretold so there is need for flexibility on the part of government. I think we all understand that. The ultimate flexibility, of course, is the clause that says the government can do whatever it wants to do. Obviously, when we reach that stage we are no longer a democracy but some sort of tyranny. It is therefore very important to watch just how far we go in that direction.

When the question was raised members of the government replied that we live under a system of ministerial responsibility. It is that ministerial responsibility which precludes any inappropriate use of the power that a government gains through this type of legislation. If we look up the definition of "responsibility" in a dictionary, we see that to be responsible means to be accountable—to be held to account. That is the kind of language used. Then we must ask, to whom are ministers accountable and how is ministerial responsibility exercised? If ministers are accountable to the people, which is frequently claimed, then why is parliament here? If they are only responsible to the people at election time, why have a parliament at all? Why do we sit here if we cannot hold ministers responsible? Surely the answer must be obvious to anyone who watches the proceedings in this House. It must be obvious that we have no authority to hold ministers responsible. There is no way that this House of Commons can hold ministers responsible for their actions.

When the government is challenged on this matter of seeking authority through clauses that allow them to set regulations, they claim they need flexibility—that ministerial flexibility is the safety valve to ensure there is no abuse of this authority. If they sincerely believe that ministerial responsibility is a check on excessive abuse of the right to set regulations which have the effect of law, then surely they must accept the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Vegreville.

The sole purpose of the amendment is to provide the opportunity for the House of Commons to hold ministers to account—to ensure that ministerial responsibility means something. The amendment in no way, shape or form reduces the flexibility of the government. It in no way reduces the minister's flexibility. He may still pass regulations where he sees the need but it provides that the House of Commons may hold the minister responsible for the regulations he recommends to the governor in council.

Surely anyone who values our democratic system, who values parliamentary democracy, has to accept the validity of the amendment. Without it there is no opportunity for the House of Commons to hold the minister responsible. Without it how can anyone with respect for honesty and truth claim that we have a system of ministerial responsibility? We cannot have that unless there is some mechanism to effect it, and that is all the amendment does. It merely provides that if 20 or more members of the House of Commons deem it appropriate, the minister can be required to explain the impact of his regulations, can be required to justify his regulations and submit the matter to a vote of a committee of the House.

As I have indicated, the people in this country who look beyond the short-term horizons in terms of our democratic system must be and indeed are—judging by the reaction that I am getting, as I am sure others are—very concerned about the direction in which the country is taking our democratic institutions. Year after year the role of parliament and the role of the representatives of the people is diminished. More and more authority becomes concentrated in the ministries. Senior civil servants and individuals as knowledgeable as Simon Reisman, a former deputy minister of finance, have seen this happening. He recently indicated that governments today are involved in more and more things in more and more ways, and doing things badly, acknowledging that the amount of authority that is concentrated within the upper levels of the bureaucracy, such as organizations like the Privy Council office and so on is horrendous. Indeed, I do not think there is another country in the world that has less democratic control over the state than Canada—that is, no country that claims to be a democracy.

● (1522)

So I would beseech the minister and the government as well as members opposite to look again at this minor amendment. It will not reduce the ability of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) or his successors to manage the operation of that department, to introduce regulations for the benefit of the safety of the public and so on. This amendment will merely provide a small opportunity in a real way for the exercise of democratic ministerial responsibility. If there is some feeling for our system, some concern that a democracy must be maintained in this country in fact as well as in form, I am sure members opposite will find it easy to vote for this amendment and bring it into law and thereby improve this legislation significantly.

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I am the seconder of the motion in the name of the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) which is the subject matter of debate in the House this afternoon. As such, I think I should say something with respect to this amendment. As my friend the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) has said, it is designed primarily to bring back into parliament something which has been lost in terms of the legislative process and control over the processes of government. Like the hon. member for Calgary Centre, I find people saying that that has occurred. Studious observers of the parliamentary system have indicated they are alarmed by the tendency to move to a greater degree toward the use of regulations and guidelines rather than statute law which is passed openly in parliament.

I agree completely with those who have said that government cannot be fettered and that it is impossible in a complex age for everything to be set forth in statute form. It is equally possible and equally with precedent in this House of Commons to ensure that parliament at some time has at least the occasion to pass judgment on regulations, and that is the precise purpose of this amendment. It does not say that parliament must make a judgment in terms of a vote or that parliament must waste time debating the regulations. It merely says that if parliament is moved by the substance or the direction of legislation by regulation, or legislation by order in council, then parliament will be given this opportunity to consider it.

I say, sir, it is not without precedent for a very good reason. My recollection indicates that in the recent bill establishing the Anti-Inflation Board, which is within the life of this parliament, the right of referral to parliament for a second look was given in that bill. Also, in the recently passed legislation dealing with the northern pipeline, there was established by a rule change in our House a committee on which the duty was placed of overseeing the construction in the interests of Canada and to report to parliament. If my recollection serves me correctly, there was also some legislation affecting petroleum administration in this country which called for a review, for a look back at the legislation to see how it is functioning. I suggest those precedents are within the limitations of this very simple and direct amendment moved by my colleague from Vegreville.

The hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour (Mr. Raines) was in the House a few moments ago. I watched him on a local television program the other evening. The member for Burnaby-Seymour recently announced that he will not be contesting the next election. He said that he was frustrated generally with the life of a member of parliament. He made no reference to it in terms of his work on behalf of his constituents. He said that he enjoyed that work. He was not complaining about the travelling which is so necessary when one is a member from British Columbia and must go back and forth each week. This is a tremendous burden that a member bears. But that was not worrying him. What was troubling him was that parliament has lost touch somehow or other with the legislative process and its execution; that the processes of our parliament were not in tune with the necessities of the twentieth century. I believe this was the phrase he used, if I understood him correctly.

What has happened in the twentieth century is that we have moved to legislation by order in council to a great degree. In fact, more and more it is being done that way, and parliament is getting out of touch with such a legislative process. Even if the public servants who make the regulations are well intentioned, and I think most of them are, they are not elected and they are not responsible in the sense that a member of parliament is. There is no great opportunity for the public servants of the country to obtain feedback from the nation as to the effect of legislation, and subsequently regulations and orders in council under legislation, as there is for members of parliament, because that is our job.

I was so impressed by the television program the other night that, after midnight when the program was over, I telephoned the station and spoke to Mr. Brooke McNabb who introduced the interviewer of the hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour. It was a very thought-provoking interview and I expressed my sentiments to Mr. McNabb of that station. It is a problem that we have here, a problem that leads to frustration on the part of members. It is a problem that can lead to real injustices from time to time. They may occur inadvertently, because regulations on the whole are well intentioned, but sometimes they are misdirected.

The purpose of this amendment is to ensure with respect to the regulations made under the Aeronautics Act that this parliament has the opportunity, if it wishes, to review them. It would be a very foolish parliament indeed if it were to usurp the right of the government to govern. That is not the point. But it would be an equally foolish parliament which would not agree that perhaps the time has come for us to follow the process that was begun in these pieces of legislation that I talked about.

How important is the process? If I may for a few moments, I will deal with some things which indicate how deeply ingrained is the process now in Canada of legislating outside of this place by order in council or regulation. I am referring to a number of things not directly and specifically related to the Aeronautics Act but to the abuse which the amendment that is before the House is intended to obviate. I am happy that the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt) is in the House. She attended the meeting of the Standing Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments yesterday. She spoke out fully and strongly about the problems concerning regulations under the Customs Act. I hope that she enters the debate, because I do not think the problem is only for the opposition, it is a problem for this whole parliament.

● (1532)

I have in my hand a brief to the special committee to review personnel management and the merit principle in the public service. This deals, among other things, with regulations which were purported to be passed under a statute. As a result of those regulations certain things happened. I will quote from the brief because it shows how the operations of the merit system, in this case, were affected. The issue was finally placed before the statutory instruments committee of this House which had to deal with the matter. This is what the brief had to say about the use of regulations under one particular statute:

> Well over 8,000 appointments were made in the public service in 1976 without competition. These appointments were not made in conformity with the merit system but were made pursuant to section 7(2) of the public service employment regulations under which if the responsible staffing officer is of the opinion that a competition or other process of personnel selection would not result in the identification of a candidate better qualified than the person who is willing and able to accept appointment, he may appoint that person.

Because of the widespread delegation of authority in the public service at the present time, these opinions expressed by staffing officers have the force of law, and by using this power they have overcome the fundamental principle governing public service appointments—that they should be based on merit. The brief goes on to say in this case:

> This section leaves room for internal patronage in the public service by permitting departments to appoint persons without competition.

In 1976, as was admitted, this was done to the tune of some 8,000 appointments.

I might quote a host of other instances to show the effect some of these regulations have had. For instance, I could refer to the program which flowed from the Official Languages Act and its repercussions on the public service; it resulted in a set of guidelines, a set of rules, which had the force of law for whomever is subject to them. Now, with a change of direction, we find there is a new set of rules in place.

The same kind of thing can occur under the statute we are considering in the context of the Aeronautics Act. We in this party take great exception to making law by statute behind closed doors. We did so particularly when the gun control legislation was before parliament. A great deal of the power which would normally be expressed in the statute emerged by way of regulations. If this is a very real problem for those who must concern themselves professionally with statutes and regulations, it poses a dreadful problem for the general public.

The most improper misuse of the regulatory power which occurs to me is, of course, to be found in the Post Office Department. A report was made to the House of Commons not long ago with respect to the use of the regulatory power to increase postal rates from 12 cents to 14 cents. The committee found this method of increasing postal rates to be improper and the House of Commons concurred in its report. Notwithstanding all this, the Postmaster General (Mr. Lamontagne) has told us he does not care what the House of Commons says.

It is important we should bear such things in mind when considering whether the government should be given further powers to act by order in council. I can understand the necessity for a great many things being done by regulation and in accordance with guidelines. In an increasingly complex world it cannot be otherwise. But I trust it will not be foreign to the thinking of members of this House that it is equally necessary that, where there is excessive regulatory power, or a great deal of such power, we should have the right at some stage to consider these things in the House of Commons.

I commend to hon. members the speech made earlier in the debate by my hon. friend for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) in which he set forth very clearly the danger which faces this parliament and, I suppose, every legislative body in the world with respect to what is happening because of the complexity of society, on the one hand, and, I am sorry to say, lazy draftsmanship on the other. You know, Mr. Speaker, it is much easier for a legal draftsman faced with a complicated problem to succumb to the temptation of deferring a difficult section to be dealt with by regulation, something which can be done later and at leisure. The statutory instruments committee deals every week with a thick pile of documents which its counsel considers may have been passed improperly, cases where officials have taken unto themselves a discretion which was not contemplated in the statute or even in the regulations. Mr. Speaker, if the statutory instruments committee has done anything at all, it has at least been able to alert those who draft the regulations in an attempt to make statutes work that legislation is the function of parliament. The committee acts as a brake on the practice of exceeding the power given in the statute.

The amendment does not say that the operation of the Aeronautics Act shall grind to a halt. It does not say that the powers given to the government under the act can suddenly be brought to an end. It does not say that the government has no regulatory power at all. It does not say that the Minister of Transport cannot exercise the discretion which is appropriately left in any minister. It says none of those things. It merely says that, if one chooses to move by regulation under the Aeronautics Act, there is a duty on the government and, indeed, on this parliament at least to examine whether those regulations are appropriately enacted, and that parliament should have an opportunity to pass judgment on that openly.

● (1542)

While the Minister of Transport is in the House, I want to say to him that in view of the precedents we have already made in this parliament—indeed, in this session of parliament—I cannot understand, frankly, why the government should disagree with this amendment, unless it is because it would be an inconvenience, unless the government wishes to hide something or unless it feels there might be something done which parliament ought not to see. I cannot believe there should be any objection to this amendment. I cannot believe that at the end of the debate on the report stage it ought not to to be axiomatic or follow automatically that this government would allow this report stage amendment to proceed.

Just before I sit down, I want to ask the Minister of Transport to reconsider what I believe is his view that this amendment ought not to go forward, because I think it is important to our process. Although we have disagreements with the minister from time to time, I think he has some feeling for that process. But I think it is important that this kind of thing appear in a bill which affects such a broad spectrum of the Canadian community. I ask the minister to consult with his colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Cullen) and, if the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen) is in the House, with him, to see whether as this debate draws to a close the government cannot reconsider its position with respect to what is really a fundamental matter of parliamentary government.

Mr. Leonard C. Jones (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, I must say that preceding speakers have spoken very adequately, but this subject is of great and dire importance not only to this House but to all Canadians and to all those who believe in our system of parliamentary democracy. Is there any need whatsoever to have to make such an amendment? Quite frankly, I think this legislation by regulation is the phoniest blooming thing I have ever seen in my life. When I was in law school—and that is a number of years ago—I was taught that there would be no way under the British parliamentary system of justice that parliament would pass regulations unless they came back at a subsequent date to parliament for approval. That was the principle, and I suggest that that still is the principle of common law under the British system.

Having that in mind, I suggest that this amendment is too mild. It should have been more forceful. We should have no regulations at all because regulations are and have been abused time after time, to the detriment of the citizens of this country.

Let us look back 760 or so years to Runnymede when King John decided to recognize parliament. Prior to that he governed by decree or edict. Orders in council or regulations are edicts of one man or group of men called the governor in council. In King John's time it was necessary to pass the Magna Carta, and from that time we were supposed to have responsible government, freedom in government and democracy for the sake of the people.

I suggest that regulations are like a cancer. They get worse and worse, and that cancer is getting to be terminal because it eventually will result in the death of parliament. At one time the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said that parliament was becoming irrelevant. Parliament will and does become irrelevant through the use of legislation by regulation. Making a regulation is like drafting a document and putting at the end of it "One party may do this unilaterally". That is just exactly what is being provided in this legislation, that one party or group of parties may do something unilaterally. This invention of orders of council or regulations by a minister is far more serious than one would think. I suggest that regulations can be dictatorial and improper, and they can bring bad results to the whole system of parliament.

This practice reflects not only on ministers and their ministries but also on the House of Commons for allowing this type of legislation to go through without a clause such as the one suggested by the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski). I suggest that it is not proper that we should have other bills without clauses like this one. Possibly there should be a special act to cover all regulations so that they can be reviewed by parliament and be subject to parliamentary scrutiny.

We talk of responsible government. Responsible government does not permit legislation by regulation. The people want to know and we want to know what the results will be and what is happening. Regulations are an invention—perhaps a fiction—but we are not being fair to ourselves or to our constituents by permitting this type of thing to happen. I know that some hon. members have already suggested to the minister that he consider this amendment. This amendment would not stop him from making his regulations; it does not go that far. The amendment is very fair to the minister. With this amendment he could make his regulations, but upon a petition presented by so many members of the House the minister could be requested to allow his regulations to be scrutinized by the House and by a committee of this House.

I think that would be very fair, and I say seriously that if we do not stop this legislation by regulation, somewhere down the line we will cause the death of parliament, the death of responsible government and the death of democracy in Canada. I hope the minister will take these words seriously. They are meant to be taken seriously and, if they are, people will wake up to the problem which is the height and depth of this country.

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to raise my voice with those who have expressed concern about a development which has crept into our parliamentary practice. The whole purpose of the amendment put forward by my colleague, the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski), is to provide parliament with a safety valve. It is not enough for the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang), a distinguished lawyer, a former head of the faculty of law of one of the great universities of the country and a former minister of justice, to sit back complacently in the knowledge that we have a Standing Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments. As a good lawyer the minister surely knows that that is not enough. He knows that that committee cannot possibly keep abreast of the hundreds and hundreds of regulations which flow from bills which are passed by this House.

I recall a few years ago a very important bill coming before this House, a bill dealing with packaging and labelling. That bill received a great deal of attention by the House, and rightly so. It was the first real thrust by the government to provide a degree of consumer protection in the area of packaging and labelling. I remember debating that bill at great length in this House. I remember the bill going before a standing committee of the House where it received a great deal of attention. We heard a number of witnesses and studied the provisions of that bill with great care and in great detail. The bill became law. However, the operative part of that bill was the regulations which were to flow from it. The bill provided for publication of the regulations before they would be promulgated into law. We must not forget that regulations are a very important part of statute law. The fact is the regulations were not gazetted and promulgated into law until almost three years after the bill was passed by this House.

• (1552)

The extraordinary thing about that piece of legislation which struck me at the time was that there was never any reference whatsoever to this House or to a committee of this House of the regulations that had been put together by order in council to make that bill operative.

It is possible for regulations to go beyond the ambit of a bill. Indeed, there have been occasions when regulations have gone beyond what parliament intended.

What my colleague, the hon. member for Vegreville, is trying to do by this amendment is to provide a safety valve whereby if we find that the regulations which will flow from this bill go beyond what we intend by the legislation, we will have the right to call those regulations before the House and examine them. Surely that is a reasonable proposition. It does not follow that we will exercise that prerogative; it is merely put there in the event that the government and its senior bureaucrats attempt to go beyond the legislation which parliament passes.

When he spoke on this bill a few days ago, the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) referred to what I would call the case load of the statutory instrument committee. He referred to the fact that the committee had to examine over 3,000 regulations put in place by this government to cover various bills.

If we pass bad law, a bill that is going to be unjust or is going to take away somebody's rights or hurt somebody in some way, we have to be accountable for it as legislators. However, there is absolutely no accountability for the regulations of the government, none whatsoever. These regulations are put together by nameless, faceless bureaucrats who hardly ever follow the debates in this House. I look into the official galleries today. Where are the public servants who will draw up these regulations? Are they here listening to members of parliament express their concern over the danger of regulations going beyond the ambit of a bill? Will they sit down and read Hansard? I doubt it very much.

My colleague has put forward a very reasonable proposition, one that should surely lend itself to the serious consideration of the Minister of Transport. It is not an irresponsible move; it is made in the knowledge that we as legislators have the ultimate responsibility for any regulations that will be put together as a result of this bill. All we are saying by this amendment is that we would have the right to call these regulations before the House for a short debate if we deemed that the regulations did in fact go beyond the authority given to the government by the bill. That is a reasonable proposition.

There is concern in this country today over the growth in government, especially the uncontrolled growth of the federal government. When we have this kind of uncontrolled growth in the Government of Canada, it means that somewhere along the line some citizen of this country is getting all tangled up in red tape. In the process, he is losing some of his civil rights. That is happening every day.

When this bill passes the House and when these regulations are put together, somebody is going to be hurt by the regulations. At the very least, someone is going to find himself all snarled up in bureaucratic regulations. The very reasonable amendment moved by my colleague will give parliament the right to call these regulations back before the House, if we deem it necessary, so that we can examine them in the light of the bill to ensure that the regulations do not in fact exceed the authority given to the government by the bill.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The hon. member for Lafontaine-Rosemont on a point of order.

Mr. Lachance: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. member would allow me a question.

Mr. McGrath: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Lachance: Mr. Speaker, I merely want to put a question to the hon. member because he referred to the Standing Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments. Does he not feel that precisely because the committee is empowered to examine such regulations as concern it and, because it reports periodically to the House, the latter does have the power to scrutinize the regulations the minister may introduce eventually in order to check and see that they respect the act authorizing them?

[English]

Mr. McGrath: I thank the hon. member for that question, Mr. Speaker. Certainly he has a point. However, I remind him that just a few days ago the House unanimously supported a recommendation or a report of the statutory instruments committee where it found that the government had in fact exceeded its authority under the Post Office Act and arbitrarily increased postal rates. The government completely ignored that committee recommendation. What can we expect from a government that virtually ignores the workings of this most important committee of the House? Consequently, we feel that this amendment is vital if the rights of parliament are going to be protected.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. It being four o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private member's business as listed on today's order paper, namely, public bills, notices of motions, private bills.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I think there is unanimous consent for proceeding with Bill C-243 and, consequently, that preceding bills be allowed to stand.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The House has heard the suggestion of the parliamentary secretary. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

[English]

CANADIAN BILL OF RIGHTS FOR CHILDREN

MEASURE TO PROTECT FREEDOM AND DIGNITY OF CHILDREN

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East) moved that Bill C-243, respecting a Canadian Bill of Rights for Children, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

[The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier).]

He said: Mr. Speaker, 1979 will mark the twentieth anniversary of the signing by Canada and the passing by the General Assembly of the United Nations Declaration of the Rights of the Child, a declaration that was adopted by the General Assembly on November 20, 1959. Perhaps it might be appropriate if I were to cite part of that very important declaration to which Canada is a signatory. I quote Principle 2:

> The child shall enjoy special protection, and shall be given opportunities and facilities, by law and by other means, to enable him to develop physically, mentally, morally, spiritually, and socially in a healthy and normal manner and in conditions of freedom and dignity. In the enactment of law for this purpose, the best interests of the child shall be the paramount considerations.

● (1602)

As I have stated, that was adopted by the United Nations. It was signed and ratified by Canada approximately 19 years ago. Up to now, our laws have reflected the belief that a child's interest can be served best within the traditional family unit. That belief is now being questioned by increasing numbers of parents, educators and hopefully politicians, as they face the serious problems of the child in today's society.

There are a number of areas which I could cover to define what I believe to be the rights of Canadian children, and the need to have these rights defined by law. Let us take a look at poverty and malnutrition. Who would think, in this great land of plenty, that poverty and malnutrition would be a problem? Statistics Canada defines poverty as a state where more than 62 per cent of family income is required to provide the minimum necessities of food, shelter and clothing. The National Council of Welfare report entitled, "Poor Kids" is dated March 1975. I commend that excellent publication to the House. It indicates that according to the 1971 census, 1.65 million of the total 6.76 million children, or 24.5 per cent, were classified as below the poverty line. The census found substantial numbers of children living in poverty in every province. I am sad to say the highest proportion was in my own province of Newfoundland where almost half the province's children, 45.3 per cent, were in families with incomes below the poverty line. But even in rich provinces, the so-called "have " provinces of Ontario and British Columbia, more than one child in six came under the definition of poverty.

It is interesting to read through this publication to understand what poverty means to a child. It is a very moving document. I should like to read from one letter written by a poor child in New Brunswick. It reads as follows:

> My name is Pierre and I'm 13 years old. I'm the eldest of seven children. What makes me suffer most is not having a house, having to live in a shack where it's always cold and too small for all the family. There are nine of us. The seven children all sleep together in two 36-inch wide beds—pushed together in winter for more heat since we don't have enough blankets. We have an old broken-down stove. In the winter we push the beds near the stove, but it's dangerous.

The letter goes on. In fact, this publication contains a number of similar letters reflecting the plight of poor children in this country who lack the basic necessities of shelter, clothing, and an adequate diet. Lack of nutrition is not necessarily a problem confined to the poor. It has become a problem of nationwide proportion, thanks to the fact that we have many families in which both parents work and their children go to school without adequate breakfasts, and these children have to make do for the day with lunches of junk foods.

What are the consequences of poor nutritional standards? The ramifications are serious. Poor nutrition will lead to poor general health and a lower resistance to infection, thereby increasing the likelihood of sickness. Children who are suffering from poor general health are likely to be less alert and attentive in school; since they have less resistance to sickness, they are likely to miss days from school because of illness. Moreover, the results of poor nutrition form a vicious circle. For example, if young girls continue to have poor eating habits when they are adults, the effects of these habits are usually passed on to the next generation. Researchers have found that the physical and mental development of a child is affected by the adequacy of the mother's diet during pregnancy. This is a serious problem. We know that poor nutritional habits affect a child's mental health, physical health, as well as its learning ability.

I should like to turn to the area of child abuse. Who among us was not deeply moved by the very tragic death in the city of Ottawa last winter of little five-year-old Adrienne Paquette? The evidence showed that the Children's Aid Society returned Adrienne to her 32-year-old mother, despite overwhelming evidence indicating that this little girl had been abused and battered over the years since she was a baby. She was found dead from suffocation in the basement of the family home, with her hands tied behind her back in such a way as to force her to stand on one foot, with a gag in her mouth and a pillowcase over her head. If young Adrienne had been treated with dignity and respect as a human being, instead of as a chattel of her parents and a chattel of the Children's Aid Society of Ottawa, she might be alive today.

If we had a society which was prepared to recognize the fundamental rights of children as human beings, then Adrienne would have had an advocate to speak for her before the courts. But there was no such advocate. There was no one to speak on behalf of little Adrienne and she is dead. That is what my bill is all about. It is designed to protect the Adriennes of this country from child abuse, from irresponsible parents and irresponsible organizations which act as surrogate parents, whether it be the province or someone delegated by the province, such as the Children's Aid Society.

The House has the benefit of the recent report on child abuse and neglect. Again this was a private member's motion brought before the House. It was allowed to go to committee, and the committee came forward with an excellent study. It is difficult to know the exact incidence of child abuse in Canada because of the variations in definitions or in reporting systems. However, Dr. H. B. Cotnam, Chief Coroner of Ontario, stated that a fairly reasonable assessment can be made from United States studies which indicate a range from 225 to 350 cases per million population per year respectively. That is a substantial number.

Using this criterion, the number of cases in Canada, which has an approximate population of 22 million, would range from 4,950 to 7,700 cases. At the present time, approximately 25 per cent of the cases occurring in a province like Ontario are being reported. That is the tragedy of it. The majority of these cases are never reported. They never get to court. Like little Adrienne, for these children it is probably too late. In 1977, the Ontario Children's Aid Society reported 1,045 cases of child abuse. In addition, child abuse was held responsible for 13 deaths in the province. How many other little children have died as a result of child abuse? There is growing evidence that this is a serious social problem in our society. It is a crime which is committed but almost never reported.

So far only the battered child syndrome has been discussed, but the appropriate standing committee of this House also found that physical abuse is the extreme end of the continuum of child neglect, and that there is no firm dividing line between neglect and abuse. Child neglect covers a wide range of situations, including situations where parents are unable or unwilling to care for the child adequately. We all know of cases. I suppose there is not a member of this House who has not had direct experience in dealing with a constituent when he knows there is child neglect. You find it in any of the middle or upper middle class neighbourhoods in this affluent city.

● (1612)

Surely it is child neglect if both parents leave at eight o'clock in the morning without taking any care to ensure that their children are provided with an adequate and nutritious breakfast, the most important meal of the day. Surely it is child neglect when those parents do not bother to check on their children during the day and these children have to fill up on junk food, such as soda pop and potato chips and all the things they eat during the day. We know that kind of inadequate diet makes for an aggressive child, makes for a difficult child and makes for a child who has difficulty in learning.

It is not without interest that we note the growth in the rate of child suicides. This shocks us all but we have to talk about these things. Children as young as five years of age are taking their own lives. This is a serious problem. There is not a day that goes by in the city of Toronto when there are not ten reported cases of attempted child or teenage suicide, and unfortunately there are often deaths.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) has noted that as of June, 1975 there were approximately 68,000 children in the care of child welfare authorities in Canada as a result of neglect. These are the surrogate parents and many of them are not equipped either by training or any other criterion to be responsible surrogate parents of these children. Aside from the children removed from their homes, child welfare authorities are working with over 42,000 families involving approximately 96,000 children in order to protect the children from neglect by attempting to correct or mitigate the potential or actual situation in the home.

I wonder, Mr. Speaker, how far we have come from eighteenth century England when that famous English lawyer, William Blackstone, identified three duties which parents owe their children? He identified the duty to maintain, the duty to protect and the duty to educate. How far have we come since that famous jurist defined those parental responsibilities? We still treat children today as chattels. Children are in the same position today that women were in twenty-five years ago, when the female spouse was considered the property of her husband. That was the case in most of the provinces in this country, and she could be subject to beating or any other kind of abuse without any recourse to law. We have changed and corrected that situation, but we have not bothered to examine the problem of the young Adriennes of this country.

I address this question in the form of television advertising. We abuse children by what we do to them on television; by taking advantage of their young imaginative minds and using them as surrogates to sell junk foods or toys that do not work. We confuse them by advertising products and telling them that if they want to be members of the "in" group of young teenagers they have to drink "X" brand of beer. By the very sophisticated use of peer group advertising we are taking our children and turning them into alcoholics before they even reach the age of majority. We are confusing them and turning them into cynics.

We have addressed that problem by reference to a standing committee of the House of a bill I introduced. We made recommendations to the House, and the House concurred in the recommendations that this form of advertising should be eliminated in Canada. Those recommendations were ignored by the CRTC and the Minister of Communications (Mrs. Sauvé). That was three or four years ago and today the Federal Trade Commission in the United States is getting around to banning that kind of advertising. At least they have recognized this is a serious problem and are now holding public hearings which will lead to the serious curtailment, if not the total prohibition, of this kind of abuse of children which we condone in this supposedly modern and enlightened society of ours.

We could talk about venereal disease which is a growing problem. We could talk about the problems of the urbanization of our country and what that means to a child. Stop and think for a moment. Most of us in this House when we were growing up were part of an extended family that included not only our parents but also our grandparents, maternal and paternal, as well as aunts and uncles, the neighbourhood church, the neighbourhood school, all of which provided an umbrella of protection in the small towns and villages of rural Canada.

Look what is happening today in the megalopoli of this country. The extended family no longer exists. The neighbourhood pastor is gone. The grandparents are no longer there. The children are lost in this large urban society and no longer have that protection children once enjoyed. They are now very much alone, and require the attention of society to afford them a degree of protection.

Traditionally parents have had almost total control over their children. But, at the same time, as I have said, that control was exercised in the framework of a supportive network; a network which held the parent accountable for the way in which he raised the child. Lifestyles are changing and traditional family life has been altered. The movement of large groups of people from rural to urban areas, the increasing size of metropolitan areas and even the type of work one does are all factors which contribute to the changing lifestyle. No longer is there a majority of families living in a close-knit kinship group with numerous relatives nearby to offer a helping hand. Often families live several hundred miles from their relatives. Frequent moves because of job requirements also discourage close attachments to a particular community.

Other aspects of family life are also changing. With the increasing number of divorces and separations and with the tendency of unwed mothers to keep their children—and I support that situation—there are more families in which there is only one parent to shoulder the burden. In addition, more women are entering into the labour force, either by right or through necessity because of inflation, and remaining in it even when they have very young children; and that leads to the problem of providing adequate daycare centres which this country has not yet addressed. The Minister of National Health and Welfare should address herself to the matter of providing funding for good daycare centres, because there is greater reliance on this form of supervision and care.

Because of these changes and others, parents are confronted with a difficult and confusing task. No longer are parents confident that they know exactly how to raise a child, for the world is increasingly different from the one in which they grew up. Lacking the traditional basis of familial support and living in a society increasingly characterized by permissiveness and alienation, parents face a complex assignment. Needless to say, some parents are unable to cope with the pressures.

I notice, Mr. Speaker, that you are about to indicate that my time has expired. I wonder if the House would allow me the indulgence of carrying on?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is there unanimous consent that the hon. member should continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

• (1622)

Mr. McGrath: I will try not to take up the time of the House, Mr. Speaker, but I feel that the subject is important enough to have the case adequately presented. We are talking about whether or not parents are able to cope with the pressures of modern society, and we must ask if society is doing enough to assist parents in their job. What is the responsibility of society to ensure that every child has a chance to enjoy the benefits which society can provide? These include a healthy life, an opportunity for a good education, a chance for a meaningful career and the opportunity to work.

What can society do to protect the right of a child? Basically, society can take two approaches. First of all, my legal friends would appreciate the negative approach, which we now take, in which offenders are punished; and there is the positive approach in which respect for children's rights are encouraged. It is that positive approach that my bill speaks to.

At the present time the federal government, through the enactment of the Criminal Code, has followed the first approach in that parents or guardians are punished if they neglect or harm children under their care. Under the Criminal Code, parents or guardians can be charged for such offences as using undue force as a method of discipline—sections 26 and 43; for endangering the morals of the child—section 168; for failing to provide the necessities of life—section 197; and for exposing a child so that its life is endangered, likely to be endangered, its health injured or likely to be permanently injured—section 200. These laws help to protect the rights of the child by punishment through criminal proceedings. We have more amendments to the Criminal Code before the House now whereby it will become a punishable offence to exploit children sexually, through pornography or through the use of children to produce this kind of offensive material.

Negative sanctions can only be used when some infraction has occurred. Usually, as in the case of Adrienne, it is too late, because even if the child is saved all too often it is marked mentally for life. A preferable way to protect the rights of a child is by making sure that certain provisions are in place so that these infractions do not take place. It is therefore essential to place firmly in the minds of the public the idea of children's rights.

I do not mean giving Johnny and Jane the right to ridiculous things, like the right to vote. That is not what children's rights are about. Children's rights are what the UN declaration talked about in 1959. Many people are puzzled and bewildered by the concept of children's rights. I submit it is the task of legislators in Canada, and especially in this House, to provide leadership. It is an idea whose time has come and is absolutely essential. A child is an individual with certain basic rights and freedoms. Canada must take steps to show that the value and importance of the family and children are fundamental aspects of the future development of this country.

The last time this House addressed itself to laws affecting children in a serious way was in 1885. We passed laws in parliament patterned after those in Great Britain and the United States to protect children from exploitation in the labour market. For the first time children were recognized as citizens. The time has come for us as a nation to recognize in law that children have rights. I refer to the 1959 declaration of the United Nations. It is time that we as a nation started to live up to our commitments as a signatory to that declaration of 1959. I can think of no better time to start than now, 20 years later, as we approach 1979, a year that has been designated by the UN as the year of the child.

We have yet to hear anything from the government on how they propose, as a signatory to the UN declaration of 1959, to mark the year of the child. What better way for us to discharge our responsibilities under that declaration and to show the world we care about our children than for our government to provide for some kind of a forum where the provinces, which have the majority of the responsibility in this regard because of the constitutional provision regarding property and civil rights, are brought together to at least ensure that across this land—in a child custody case or in the case of a battered child or in the case of malnutrition—the child will have an advocate before the law to make sure its rights are protected. Let us make sure there are no more Adriennes.

Mr. Marke Raines (Burnaby-Seymour): Mr. Speaker, I have had an opportunity to look over Bill C-243 as proposed by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) and I wish to say that I am in favour of this bill and that I hope it will not be talked out at five o'clock.

The rights of children have been and are blatantly abused. I would like to share with the House an unforgettable incident which I witnessed more than ten years ago in British Columbia and which I cannot forget. At that time I was in a different role; I was a reporter and not a member of parliament. I was covering what I thought at the time was a story, as I still do. It was the case of four children all of whom were of pre-school age in British Columbia.

When I arrived on the scene in this home in the greater Vancouver area I came upon a father lounging in an armchair, a relatively young social worker about 30 years of age, and four children. My first question was, "Well, what is going to happen to these four children? The mother has left the house, where will they go?" I was told by the social worker, "Oh, we will find a home for them, a home here or there or somewhere but hopefully in British Columbia, but perhaps elsewhere, we are not sure." My response was, "Well, surely you can keep these children together and find a home for them?" The social worker replied, "Oh, no, that is too difficult in our society, you know; it is rather difficult to find a home that will take four children so we will scatter them around." My reaction at the time was, "Well, even puppies get better treatment, or the same treatment at least."

So there are no rights for children, and these children were no doubt handed around to various homes. Under our present system of doing things children have no rights later on if they want to know who their natural parents or brothers and sisters were. They are told that that is a bureaucratic secret. This is not right. Even as children they should have the right to know, and surely there should be no question when they are adults.

A task force should be set up to look into situations like these. Another such situation is the splitting up of a family. In countless cases today, in child welfare cases as well as custody cases, the children should be represented by somebody, perhaps a lawyer in this case. We should get away from the concept of various Children's Aid Societies and other groups we now have institutionalizing humanity. Their aim should be to bring the family together, not to act as a broker in breaking the family up.

I appreciate the comments of the hon. member for St. John's East in proposing this legislation, particularly as it concerns television program advertising that exploits children. This too should come under the bill and be looked into by a task force.

I do not want to take up the time of the House in outlining what the task force should encompass, but I believe that since the rights of the child are far reaching, it should be composed of federal and provincial representatives that might consider the rights of children as proposed in this bill, such as their right to a proper education—although I appreciate the fact that education is still considered a provincial matter. The right of a child to a proper education in the seventies might include not only the opportunity or privilege to learn the other language but the absolute right to learn the other language. What is a proper education so far as children are concerned in the seventies in Canada?

● (1632)

If the task force is set up I hope it will take into account that the right of a child in British Columbia is to have one hour of French in school every day beginning in grade 2 or 3. I include Quebec in that; perhaps their right should be to have an hour or two of English every day. Aside from what rights bureaucrats think children should have, and aside from federal provincial jurisdictions we are speaking of the rights of children to travel from one province to another and to be able to speak both official languages. That too should be the right of children.

I know that the hon. member for St. John's East has taken into account the ten provinces and two territories and the complex jurisdictions relating to the designation and enforcement of rights of children in the various provinces. I say this is all the more reason we should set up a task force comprised of both federal and provincial representatives to enforce the rights of children across Canada.

I submit we need uniform legislation by virtue of a task force. I would disagree on only one point. Clause 4 of the bill reads as follows:

Such officers and employees as are necessary for the proper conduct of the work of the task force may be selected—

In other words, we wish to select the task force. It continues:

—from among the public service of Canada and from among the public service of the provinces.

I would suggest that this task force be drawn from a broader spectrum of society such as is represented in the House of Commons. I should like to see lawyers, journalists, unionists, ministers, homemakers—people who, with all due respect, would not have a bureaucratic mind. The bureaucratic mind is worth while in some cases, but not in this case. I suggest it was the bureaucratic mind that ten years ago said: "Here we have poor little children so let us scatter them out like little puppy dogs or litters of kittens." I think we could enlarge the area from which members of the task force could be drawn.

I appreciate the fact that on December 21, 1976, the General Assembly of the United Nations passed a resolution declaring 1979 the International Year of the Child. That is all well and good, Mr. Speaker. A poster is fine, but what we need is a task force to go across the country making sure that children have their rights in the 1970s.

I hope the bill proposed by the hon. member for St. John's East will reach the committee stage and that we will soon have a task force bring in a report.

[Mr. Raines.]

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I should like to support the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) not only on this bill but I should also like to congratulate him on some other initiatives he has taken in the past. I think it is particularly important that we note the work he did with regard to children's advertising. I think that was one of the most effective contributions that a single member has ever made to this House, and I for one would like to congratulate him.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Leggatt: I am disappointed, of course, that the recommendations from the committee in regard to that matter, which were unanimous, were not adopted in legislation. Nevertheless I hope the hon. member will continue to press for changes in the advertising laws. Surely if there is one right that children have, it is not to be abused by subliminal advertising.

With regard to this bill, Mr. Speaker, one of its key parts would set up a task force to examine the rights of children. One of the most important of these is the right not to live in abject poverty. As we look at changes in the law to provide some protection from battering and starvation and the agonies that children suffer, I hope we will keep in mind that the bottom 20 per cent of our population in terms of wealth distribution draws about 4 per cent of the gross national income. That condition has prevailed over the last 20 years and as long as it continues the abuses that the hon. member so eloquently referred to will continue. We allow families and children to live in abject poverty, which is one of the main reasons for the abuse of children.

One aspect of this subject that I want to deal with is education. This is one of the reasons I am so anxious that the bill not be talked out and that the subject matter go before the committee. A subcommittee comprised of all members of this House examined all the maximum security institutions in Canada. We found that the educational levels of inmates in those institutions averaged grade 8. Even more important, 40 or 50 per cent of those inmates suffered some kind of dyslexia, brain disfunction, or some learning disorder that was not diagnosed early in their lives. As a result, those individuals who were discarded by their peer group, discarded by their parents, discarded by the school system, decided they still had an ego and the only way to display that ego was to commit crime. As a result, they wound up in our institutions.

Surely one of the rights of children is the right to an education, and in order to give them that education we must have the facilities to diagnose learning disabilities. All across this country we continue to place children in what they call "special classes". In these there are children with I.Q.'s of 80 or 130, hyperactive children and children with a wide variety of learning disabilities. Surely those children should be diagnosed and treated as individuals.

There has been a fair amount of debate in this House and in the country on the question of the death penalty. That may or may not make a contribution to the criminal justice system but

That Bill C-243, an act respecting a Canadian Bill of Rights for Children, be not now read a second time, but that the order be discharged and the subject matter of the said bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

I am not going into that here. We know, however, that psychopathic behaviour can be diagnosed very early in life. If we do not start diagnosing it early we will not solve that behaviour through the criminal justice system. We have not been able to in the past, and we will not in the future.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Leggatt: These problems must be solved early. It is no good putting children in jail. Their behaviour should be examined and treated early and we should have the resources for such treatment. We must understand that a child has a right to be educated and that a child who is disabled has a right to be educated or treated. That includes a child with a psychopathic disorder.

We hear talk about the extended family and I think the hon. member for St. John's East has put his finger on the major problem in society. Uncles, aunts and cousins today are gone. That family group pressure was upon the parent to treat that child well, otherwise grandmother would come over to take the child away. That pressure is no longer there. We have replaced it with nothing. We have replaced it with the faceless bureaucracy that tries to solve the problem. The only way to solve it is with a bill of rights for children so children have rights and the doctor will not be worried about protecting the parents of a battered child. The refusal to report suspicious incidents of battered children is a national tragedy and is a situation occurring across Canada. We need to change the law and in order to do that we need to study that law.

● (1642)

I began my remarks by congratulating the hon. member for St. John's East, but I want to take issue with him on one point which he made. It was probably an offhand remark and it concerned the question of unwed mothers and children of unwed mothers. I happen to think that that child also has rights. If the wrong parent is the unwed mother, that child should not be routinely raised by the unwed mother. The rights of that child should be paramount, and what is best for that child must prevail.

Perhaps it is wrong in many circumstances for an unwed mother to say "I must cling to my child. After all, I have been through a tragedy and all I have out of this tragedy is my child". If that is the wrong thing for the child, I for one do not think we should have an unbending rule that says that that unwed mother should raise the child. Quite often an adopting family provides a far better atmosphere in which to bring up that child. Perhaps that is the only thing the hon. member and I have a disagreement about. He may have simply been expressing a preference in an individual case.

As I have said, I do not want to see this bill talked out. In order that that will not happen I would hope the House would now support the following motion which I propose. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

I put this motion, Mr. Speaker, realizing there may be some reluctance to accept an opposition member's bill by the committee. Surely the subject matter is well worth the study. Certainly the precedent has been well set in terms of the bill which dealt with the subject of pornography as well as the bill which dealt with the subject of the abuse of children in the way of television advertising. I would hope the House would support this motion.

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. It is moved by Mr. Leggatt, seconded by Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre), that Bill C-243, an act respecting a Canadian Bill of Rights for Children, be not now read a second time but that the order be discharged and the subject matter of the said bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Mr. Lloyd Francis (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I am sure members on the other side would not want to deny me an opportunity to say a few words—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Take five minutes.

Mr. Francis: I am sure the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) would not want to gag me in this House when I have some things I want to say.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): No.

Mr. Francis: I have not had previous notice of the amendment. It does seem to me that the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs is about to have a number of very serious matters put before it. Before an amendment like this is adopted routinely there should be some consideration of what kind of attention the committee is prepared to give such a motion in the near future.

I want to commend the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) who introduced the motion. I have commended him on other occasions for the work he has done in the area of care for children. I am aware of his concern. He sets a very good example to members of the House in his own family life.

Without question his concern is a very real one. The cause which he has undertaken is one that will take a good deal of time, not only in this parliament but in subsequent parliaments. There is no easy resolution within our federal-provincial constitutional framework of the very complex matters raised. There is a very limited jurisdiction on the part of the federal authority as the hon. member would recognize; he is a lawyer and I am not.

When I listen to hon. members' stories about incidents of child abuse that live in their memories, there is one which will live with me as long as I am still rational and in possession of my faculties. When I was elected a member of the Ottawa city council in 1958 I was a new member of council and I had some knowledge of what a member of council could do, but I had very limited knowledge in the area of family care. I received a complaint about a family living in a converted summer cottage in Britannia. The complaint came from a neighbour and it concerned a sick child. This incident happened over the Christmas period. I called at the cottage and a woman answered the door. I identified myself, and with the greatest reluctance she allowed me to come in. When I asked her if she had a sick baby she told me that she had a baby with a cold but it was really none of my business. I noticed there was a broken window which was covered by a piece of cardboard. There was a baby in a crib not too many feet away from that window. I asked her if a doctor had seen the baby and she said no. I suspected the family might have been on welfare and I started to make a discreet inquiry. I discovered that her husband was employed and there was a regular income in the family. I was told in the bluntest terms that the matter of her child's cold was none of my business. The child was dead two days later.

Looking back, I have no knowledge even to this day what kind of action was available to a member of city council to intervene in a situation where there was gross neglect and abuse by a parent who was not competent to look after a child.

I listened to the hon. member of the NDP who said he was persuaded that not every unwed mother should have the right to raise her child. The simple truth is—and it is with the greatest reluctance that I say this—that the incident which will always stand out in my memory was that of an unfit mother and father with the responsibility of a child.

The truth is that our law is complex. Historically the common law gave no rights to the child. The father presumably had wide and extensive control over his children and he had very little by way of civil obligation imposed upon him. I understand that in this century jurisprudence has developed, but it is almost entirely at the provincial level and a very limited amount is at the federal level. The concept of the rights of a child is something very fundamental.

I have one or two comments about the bill before us. The hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour (Mr. Raines) has said that if we are to set up a task force we must expect ten provinces to enact legislation. It does seem to me that an inadequate amount of provincial representation is suggested by the hon. member in this bill. Furthermore, I am a little bit at a loss concerning clause 6, which I now quote:

> Nothing in this act shall be construed as requiring an appropriation of any part of the public revenue.

How will the task force operate? Will it hold hearings or will it be entirely conducted by volunteers? I would personally find that a very impractical way of conducting—

An hon. Member: No choice.

Mr. Francis: The hon. member says that he has a bill that would be out of order if there was a charge to treasury. In order to meet the rules of the House he puts a totally impractical consideration into the bill. He had the alternative of drafting a general resolution rather than a bill. However, that is really inconsequential. The general intent of what the hon. member is trying to do is highly desirable.

I said I am not a lawyer, but in the reading I have done and as a result of the limited number of situations which I have had to face, it seems to me that the balance between the rights of a family and the rights of a child is not easily established. It is possible to lean too far and to set up a situation where a manipulative child in later years could take advantage of and harass parents, especially when property settlements and such matters are considered.

● (1652)

I became familiar only recently with a situation where a marital breakdown is taking place, and it is almost certain that at the earliest opportunity one parent will attempt to deprive the other of access rights guaranteed by an agreement. I was shocked to learn from the lawyer who is giving advice that the most effective thing to do was to kidnap first. The possibility of the other parent performing in good faith is minimal, and the parent who is most reponsible in terms of the custody of the child does not have complete legal right, nor is there any means under present legislation by which such a right could be accorded.

The Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs already has a lot of work to do, which is another consideration when it comes to proposing that yet a further burden be added to its program. I would remind the House that Bill C-51 was introduced on May 1 to amend section 250 of the Criminal Code and create the offence of abducting a child in circumstances not now covered by law, such as in contravention of a custody order by a Canadian court or, in special circumstances, where no order has been made but the child is taken with the intent to deprive a parent or guardian of possession. The whole subject is a complex one.

The task force will not find its work easy and I look forward to several debates on the subject in the House of Commons. A great many people are exercised over the seal hunt. We see a hundred times more attention given that matter in the House and outside than is given to the rights of battered or abused children. There is nothing wrong about having more debates on this subject. I do not think we shall achieve our purpose by limiting discussion on a subject which is not urgent today but will become increasingly urgent in the years ahead. I am not a lawyer but I have learned from the experience of people very dear to me that when a marital breakdown takes place as many as four Ontario courts may become involved. As yet there is no unified jurisdiction to deal with these cases.

I am pleased to note that the creation of unified family courts has been encouraged by federal funding. A fund has been established by the government to finance special projects in various provinces. I understand that the Law Reform Commission in its 1974 working paper on family courts recommended the establishment of such a fund. Pilot projects have been put into operation in British Columbia in respect of which the Department of Justice and the province are sharing the cost. There is a project in the Richmond-Surrey-Delta region. I understand that evaluation of the project is due to take place shortly and those of us who have taken an interest in these matters will be following it closely. I am told that a unified family court pilot project has been established in Hamilton, Ontario.

Mr. Dick: Time is running out!

Mr. Francis: I am sure the hon. member is just as anxious as I am to have a good debate on this subject. I think the debate so far has been inadequate. It is a debate which should be repeated on more than one occasion.

Mr. Leggatt: Why not send the subject to the committee where it could be discussed at length?

Mr. Francis: The justice committee already has a number of matters to consider.

Mr. Leggatt: We are both on that committee. We shall accept the work.

Mr. Francis: I think the idea of unified family courts has a great deal to contribute to the subject before us. It relates to the whole question of what should be done to deal with marital problems arising out of child abuse, a subject which will be a recurring theme in this parliament and in parliaments to come. What I have tried to do is—

An hon. Member: Talk the bill out.

Mr. Francis: —draw attention to certain problems with which I have become acquainted as a member of parliament in this area involving child abduction, the kind of settlement which takes place when more than one court is involved in the case of marital breakdown, and the delicate question of the evolution of a law which respects a balance between the rights of the child and the rights of the family. Those who are concerned about this subject must be aware that it will have to be debated a number of times—

Some hon. Members: Five o'clock!

Mr. McGrath: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Since the bill has received unanimous approval perhaps you would undertake not to see the clock in order that Your Honour might put the amendment in the name of my hon. friend. In that way we can get the bill before the committee for consideration in depth along the lines the hon. member for Ottawa West has suggested.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I believe we have another member who has an excellent speech to deliver on the matter but that would last until much too late. We will have other occasions to deal with this issue. The committees are already quite busy. Besides, the Progressive Conservative party complained today that they wanted to deal with the estimates in committee. They will now have this opportunity, but obviously they could not discuss this bill in committee if we agreed to the hon. member's request. Under the circumstances, Mr. Speaker, if I continue to speak it is to give my colleagues opposite the chance to shout, which will probably relieve them, but we cannot accept their request.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order. Apparently there is not unanimous consent. The time provided for consideration of private members' business has now expired. Pursuant to Standing Order 2(1), this House stands adjourned until Monday next at 2 p.m.

At 5.02 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, May 15, 1978

The House met at 2 p.m.

● (1407)

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

AIR TRANSPORT

INQUIRY INTO CRASH OF PWA AIRCRAFT AT CRANBROOK, B.C.—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to move a motion of substantial public urgency and concern. In light of the unacceptable position in which the Ministry of Transport finds itself with respect to the crash of a Pacific Western Airlines' jet at Cranbrook, British Columbia, on February 11, which claimed 43 lives, I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Brisco):

That this House direct the Minister of Transport to appoint forthwith a member of a senior court of competent jurisdiction to inquire into the relevant facts surrounding this tragedy, and further direct the minister to introduce legislation establishing an independent commission of inquiry for all transport-related accidents in Canada.

This would avoid in future tragic conflicts of interest such as have occurred in this case.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for debate requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

INDEPENDENT BOARD TO INVESTIGATE AIRPLANE CRASHES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): On the same topic, Mr. Speaker, I should like to move, as a matter of urgency and public importance, a similar motion under the terms of Standing Order 43. In view of the February 11 crash of the PWA jet at Cranbrook airport in which 43 people were killed, the refusal of Ministry of Transport officials to provide the coroner with an unabridged transcript of radio conversations surrounding the tragedy, and in view of the conflict of interest in which the department finds itself by being involved in the crash while at the same time investigating it, I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn):

That this House instruct the Minister of Transport to establish an independent board to investigate and report on airplane crashes.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for debate requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

[Translation]

FINANCE

LEGISLATION TO PROVIDE 10 PER CENT DISCOUNT FOR CANADIAN-MADE PRODUCTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion dealing with an important matter of pressing necessity.

Considering the dilemma in which the Canadian government finds itself as a result of problems created by federal intervention in a strictly provincial jurisdiction, such as the retail sales tax; and considering that the federal proposal aimed at increasing the purchasing power of consumers through a reduction of the retail sales tax has given rise to many problems, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier):

That the House urge the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) to introduce a bill granting a 10 per cent discount on Canadian-made products to increase the purchasing power of Canadians without creating conflicts with provincial governments.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Presentation of such a motion for debate under Standing Order 43 would require the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

S.O. 43

[English]

AGRICULTURE

ESTABLISHMENT OF CANADIAN EXPORT COUNCIL—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Despite the fact that Canada is one of the world leaders in food production, there would be a substantial trade deficit in agricultural commodities if it were not for our export sales of wheat. This indicates that our attempts to increase export sales of other agricultural products have been less than satisfactory. Accordingly, I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Hargrave):

That the Minister of Agriculture take immediate steps to establish a Canadian export council to assist marketing boards, producers associations and others so as to increase our export contracts, utilize more fully all potential avenues of offshore market expansion, seek out increased opportunities for Canadian producers and develop more aggressive salesmanship and initiative in seeking markets than has been the case up to now.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

SHIPMENTS THROUGH CHURCHILL, MAN.—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Cecil Smith (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on an urgent matter of public importance. Shipment of CIDA grain from Canada is controlled by the Canadian Wheat Board. The port of Churchill is not being used to its handling capacity. I would, therefore, move, seconded by the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp):

That the government direct the Canadian Wheat Board to ship five million bushels of CIDA grain through the port of Churchill this season to help relieve the tie-up of grain shipped through Vancouver and Prince Rupert.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion, under the terms of Standing Order 43, can be put forward only by unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

[Mr. Speaker.]

• (1412)

[Translation]

FINANCE

PAYMENT TO QUEBEC RESPECTING SELECTIVE SALES TAX REDUCTIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I rise under Standing Order 43 concerning a matter of pressing and urgent necessity.

Since it is rumoured that the federal government intends to introduce legislation to be able to pay a tax subsidy directly to Quebec taxpayers, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That the House instruct the government to recognize for once its mistake on the sales tax cut issue, and grant the Quebec government the total amount to which it is entitled for its selective sales tax reductions.

Mr. Speaker: This motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

[English]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

COMMITTEE STUDY OF RECOMMENDATIONS RESPECTING GARRISON DIVERSION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dean Whiteway (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In light of the fact that the final recommendations on the Garrison diversion unit of the International Joint Commission has been in the hands of the government for some six months, and view of the fact that the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment (Mr. LeBlanc) has not yet studied the United States new proposal, the Andras plan, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp):

That both the IJC report and the Andras plan be immediately referred to the appropriate Standing Committee for study by all members of the House.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for debate requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

STEPS TO IMPROVE SHIPMENT OF GRAIN

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport who is in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board. Because the Canadian Wheat Board has now confirmed there will be a 350 million bushel carryover at the end of the current crop year, which is in the order of 200 million bushels in excess of what could be considered an ideal target, there will be a negative impact on the economy of approximately $800 million.

Given the fact that the board is now some 35 million bushels behind in its shipping targets, that demurrage costs are likely to exceed the $17 million which was accumulated in 1973, that there are now some 20 ships waiting in the port of Vancouver and our best customers are going to the United States for grain, may I ask the minister what new initiatives he is taking or contemplating to correct this disgraceful situation which has not only an impact upon the economy but, more importantly, an impact upon Canada's reliability as a supplier of grain in the international market?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, first of all, to put the matter into perspective, it should be pointed out that exports this year may well total in the order of 850 million bushels of grain which, if that happens, will be an all-time record. That can only be accomplished by shipping and disposing of all the 1977 crop, plus perhaps as much as 100 million or 150 million bushels out of the reserves so that our stocks at the end of the year will be significantly lower than they were last year and not particularly high from a long-term point of view. I think that is a necessary perspective to recognize.

When there is such a record volume for shipment, naturally there will be ships waiting more frequently even when things are going well. When things go a little badly, as they did with delays in ships arriving in December and then, just as we were trying to catch up, the problems of heavy snows and the problems with the rail lines of CP particularly, we are going to get behind. There is no doubt about that. It is part of setting a record. What is being done about it is that the railways are being urged to put as many cars as possible into the movement of grain and to do everything they can to get the turnaround which will allow the number of unloads to increase. We are still not completely happy with the performance and are working on it regularly.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Since it is quite clear that Canada will not meet its maximum potential in terms of grain sales this year as a result of the bottlenecks, can I ask the minister if he has met with the officials of the Canadian Wheat Board, the railways and all parties concerned with the movement of grain in the last week or ten days in an effort to establish an all-out strategy and an all-out effort to ease the bottlenecks, to unplug the elevators and to get some needed cash into the hands of farmers and thereby into the hands of the economy?

● (1417)

Mr. Lang: Again, Mr. Speaker, the fact that we are apt to be exporting a record volume of grain puts the lie somewhat to the suggestion that deliveries are slow or that farmers are not able to move grain. They will be delivering more grain than they have ever delivered before, I believe, by the time this crop year is over. I am constantly in touch with the Canadian Wheat Board. I met with the commissioners again this morning, as a matter of fact, and I am prepared to do anything they think is necessary on my part to assist them in their efforts to get maximum performance from the railways. I do from time to time intervene to try to make sure that everything that can be done is being done.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, it is obvious from the answer of the minister that no new initiatives are being taken and no leadership is being provided by this government. Given the fact that we have before us a very important and relevant document, the Hall report on grain handling and transportation, and since there seems to be a major conflict between the author, Mr. Justice Emmett Hall, and the Minister of Transport in terms of the recommendations of the Hall report, the speed at which some of these recommendations are being implemented, the refusal of the government to implement others, and the total impact of the Hall recommendation, might I ask the minister whether he will give serious consideration to referring this important document to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications in order that we may call Mr. Justice Hall before the committee and other interested parties who may wish to comment upon the recommendations or the impact of the implementation of these recommendations?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, in the process of implementing these various recommendations in the Hall commission report, which we have acted upon with great speed, I have had constant discussions with the really important agricultural organizations of the prairies, and generally speaking there has been expressed agreement with the way in which we are proceeding.

The hon. member wants me to consider a committee of parliament which obviously would simply be a partisan occasion, which is demonstrated by the fact that in asking his question he says, "What are we doing about this problem? What are we doing about moving grain," and ignores the fact that we have spent $255 million in building 8,000 hopper cars which are vital to the grain movement, ignores the fact that we put $100 million of new money into rebuilding the rail lines on the prairies, and have committed ourselves to an eight-year program to complete the rebuilding of those lines. How he can sit there, with his partisan attitude, and say there is no action on my part, I do not understand.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

CORRESPONDENCE WITH ALBERTA ON GRAIN MARKETING STRATEGY

Mr. Bert Hargrave (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the minister responsible for the Wheat Board. It relates to the tabling of Premier Lougheed's correspondence with the Prime Minister dealing with Canadian grain marketing strategy, including an overdependence on China for grain sales, the lack of a long-term agreeement with the Soviet Union and changing conditions in Southeast Asia. In view of the fact that Alberta produces over one-third of Canada's grain, will the minister explain why the premier's request that the Wheat Board provide private quarterly reports to concerned premiers in Canada was so peremptorily turned down?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the question is really, what kind of information does Premier Lougheed want that is not available to him? If he would be specific about it, we would be glad then to analyse whether or not we should give it to him. He has, of course, among his advisers some who would destroy the Wheat Board. I think this is reflected in this kind of correspondence.

In the letter, Premier Lougheed, as quoted by the hon. member, indicated an overdependence on the Chinese market. The fact of the matter is that this year we will be depending to about the 22 per cent or 23 per cent degree on the Chinese market, which is very close to the percentage ever since 1961-1962, when it was 22 per cent. The only difference is that when it was 22 per cent, that year it represented about half the grain involved this year, when it is 22 per cent, because we are exporting so much. The fact, also, is that the only danger to the Russian market that we suffered was when Premier Lougheed was visiting there and made some very serious tactical errors which the Wheat Board has been able to overcome. Those are the facts.

An hon. Member: Not so.

● (1422)

Mr. Lang: It is fact.

* * *

FINANCE

METHOD OF COMPENSATING QUEBEC FOR LOSS OF SALES TAX REVENUE

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. Considering that it is the unanimous decision of all political parties in the province of Quebec that the federal government should reimburse that province for its losses under the federal government's selective sales tax reduction proposal, and considering that such special consideration for Quebec would be fully consistent in principle with the other special arrangements which were made for the Atlantic provinces, can the Minister of Finance inform the House why the government has now made the incredible decision to bring in additional federal legislation which would enable it to make direct financial transfers to the citizens of Quebec over the duly elected government of that province?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, when we introduced certain special considerations into the proposal relating to the sales tax in the maritimes, all provinces had previously given their assent, including Quebec. All I propose to do today is to abide by the proposal we have made to Quebec by paying that province what it is entitled to, that is $40 million. As for the rest, we as the federal government are going to reduce the federal income tax for all Quebec taxpayers.

[English]

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the leader of the Liberal party in the province of Quebec, Mr. Ryan, with reference to the federal government's decision to make direct tax cuts to the people of Quebec, in clear contravention of the expressed desires of the government of that province in principle, and in contravention of all the other arrangements which were made with the other provinces, said:

It means that whenever the federal government makes any kind of offer to a province and when the province refuses it for reasons of its own, the federal government retaliates by handing the money over to the people.

I would like to ask the Minister of Finance, in all seriousness, would he acknowledge that when the federal government goes in clear contravention of the expressed desires of a provincial government which is acting within its constitutional domain and unless it gets agreement it is going to give money directly to the taxpayers of that province, that really such an attitude is a form of blackmail and, as such, is totally unacceptable?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member should know that there have been circumstances in the past where the Canadian government has vacated a fiscal field in order to try to accommodate some provinces. What we are doing at this time, since we could not reach an agreement with the Quebec government as we were able to with all the other provinces of the land is that we have decided to conform to the proposition and pay to the province of Quebec what we have agreed to pay to them, and for the rest use federal tax money that will be paid back to the federal taxpayers in Quebec.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, considering that the federal government's proposal makes special arrangments for all the provinces in Atlantic Canada and makes another set of arrangements for the prairie provinces, which had certain circumstances that they wanted special consideration for and considering that the government in fact realized its obligation to negotiate in areas of constitutional concern and direct responsibility to the provinces with those provinces, could the minister explain to the House why, in the case of Quebec, he flies in opposition not only of the government of that province but all the opposition parties in the province, all the opposition parties in this House and the elected provincial governments of every province? In fact, is he not contributing to the disunity of Canada by the absurd position he has taken?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, the best way to speak about unity in this country would be to acknowledge that it was the first time in the history of this country that the Minister of Finance took the liberty of going to the provincial ministers of finance to discuss his budget before presenting it.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): And you botched it.

Mr. Chrétien: I did it, and I presented a proposition. After the decision of the Quebec government I consulted all the provinces and some, unfortunately, are not in agreement with what I am doing today. I have talked to all the ministers of finance and most of them, indeed all of them, would have preferred Quebec to have accepted my original proposal. It would have been the best way to have a united economic policy developed by all ministers of finance and the federal Minister of Finance for the first time in history.

• (1427)

Quebec decided to go its own way, however, trying to divide the Canadian market. I could not make the same offer to the other provinces because I know they would have been quite willing themselves to choose the selective route. Ontario could have decided to go that way on the automobile industry, which would have been good in the hon. member's riding but it would not have been acceptable to the other provinces. That is why I am living up to the offer I made and compensating the federal taxpayers in Quebec for the money they do not get through the provincial government.

[Translation]

PAYMENT TO QUEBEC FOR SELECTIVE SALES TAX REDUCTIONS

Mr. Gilles Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Minister of Finance.

Since he seems to accuse the Quebec minister of finance of not doing justice to Quebeckers, how can he pretend to do justice to them when he intends to refund the amount to Quebeckers by way of a tax repayment or compensation and only to those who pay income tax to the federal government? How will the other Quebeckers get their share of this repayment?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, when it was suggested that repayments be made directly to individual taxpayers, one of the hon. members in the hon. member's party objected because in his opinion we were trying to buy votes.

Here is what we are going to do in the circumstances: to those Quebec residents who pay federal income tax every year we will repay the amount the Quebec government did not want in order to reduce by 2 per cent during six months the other items not covered by the sales tax.

* * *

[English]

FISHERIES

INTERIM AGREEMENT WITH UNITED STATES

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries, who was on the west coast over the weekend and knows some of the problems we face there and the difficulties of implementing the interim agreement.

According to press reports, the minister agreed to closure of the Swiftsure fishing grounds to Canadians in order to gain some concessions from the United States. I wonder whether he could say if this closure applies to Canadians and the Americans, and what concessions he hoped to get from the United States on this particular occasion?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the closure is for Canadian and American fishermen. I do not know where the word "concession" came from. The fact is that the possibility of the closure of Swiftsure was contained in negotiations as a conservation measure. We do not happen to agree on the need for the conservation measure, but it was recognized that it could be requested.

On the other hand, we have informed the United States authorities that we fully expect them to implement the terms of the agreement, including Canadian access for salmon trolling from three to twelve miles off the coast of Washington state and allowing Canadian salmon fishermen to have 26-inch salmon aboard. The American negotiator who was informed of this will obviously talk to his government, and we expect a meeting on the twenty-fourth or the twenty-sixth of this month.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The minister has not said whether concessions were made on the east coast as well. Since the Prime Minister claims to be on such good personal terms with President Carter, why is it necessary for us to get down on our knees and plead and make concessions to the United States when there was, according to the Prime Minister's own words, an agreement that they would see this was implemented?

Mr. LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that the hon. member has been reading some of the press from the west coast which for the last four years has used words like "sell-out" at a time when we have, in fact, negotiated so toughly. We have not been able to reach a permanent agreement and that is why we refused to give in on some fundamental issues where we think Canadian interests should not be bargained with. I am afraid the second part of the hon. member's question escaped me.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): The east coast.

Mr. LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent): On the east coast there is no question of a concession. We indicated to the United States representatives that we were not satisfied with the way the agreement was being carried out on the east coast and we asked them to come back with clarification.

REASON FOR DELAY IN TAKING POSITION ON U.S. ACCESS TO CANADIAN WATERS

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Fisheries. In view of the fact that on February 6, 1978, the Canadian advisers to the federal government on the Canada-United States boundary dispute unanimously recommended that the government should refuse to sign an interim fisheries agreement, and since the United States was taking a more and more extreme position and all the concessions were being made by Canada and none were being made by the United States, I ask the minister why he delayed from February 6 to the present time taking a firm stand on United States access to Canadian waters for redfish, pollock and swordfish, a stand which could have encouraged the United States to make major concessions on the boundary dispute?

● (1432)

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member's question is so garbled with misrepresentation that I will have to read it very carefully. One thing is certain: because we refused to make concessions which would have been required to reach a permanent agreement, in fact in February, as the hon. member mentioned, we indicated we would not be able to reach a long-term agreement. The interim agreement, to my knowledge, was not subject to the sort of rejection the hon. member talks about.

* * *

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF VETERANS AFFAIRS DELEGATES

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Before proceeding with the balance of the question period, may I ask hon. members to join with me in signalling the presence in our galleries of some very distinguished visitors, a delegation representing the veterans. This delegation comes from Yugoslavia and from Europe and it is headed by the vice-president of the Veterans of Yugoslavia, Mr. A. Milovanovic, and the vice-president of the European Committee of the World Veterans Federation, Mr. Banko Golovic.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF PREMIER OF TASMANIA, AUSTRALIA

Mr. Speaker: Also in our gallery today is a distinguished visitor in the person of the Premier of the State of Tasmania, Australia, the Hon. D. A. Lowe.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

AIR TRANSPORT

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON INCIDENTS OF VEHICLES ON AIRPORT RUNWAYS

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Following the Boeing-737 crash at Cranbrook airport where the presence of a vehicle on the runway contributed substantially to the crash, can the minister indicate whether it is true that there have been four other reported incidents of vehicles on runways across Canada, including another incident of a vehicle on the runway at Cranbrook airport within two months of that crash?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, no, I cannot confirm that but I will be glad to see whether any such information is available.

Mr. Brisco: Mr. Speaker, in light of the fact that the crash at Cranbrook will probably result in claims costing millions of dollars, and that a similar incident at the same airport will probably be classified as gross negligence and result in claims amounting to billions of dollars, is the minister prepared, in light of the report that there was another vehicle on the runway at Cranbrook during an aircraft approach, to order an immediate inquiry into the ground-to-ground and ground-to-air control being implemented at the present time at Cranbrook airport in order to protect the lives of air crews and passengers?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, we are at all times examining the question of what type of facility should be available at various airports. That particular question has been undergoing special examination itself. I expect to have some further analysis of the type of airports and the timing when air traffic control should be introduced. It is fair to say that it is an expensive matter, of course, and therefore has to be weighed against other matters which are required across our total air navigation system, including such things as increases in navigational aids and the like.

I can assure the hon. member that we are very concerned in having and maintaining the high level of safety we have in Canada. We are continually watching to see whether these improvements should be made.

REQUEST FOR INQUIRY INTO PWA CRASH AT CRANBROOK, B.C.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Given the controversy surrounding the proceedings of the coroner's inquiry into this tragedy, is the minister now prepared to name a senior court judge of competent jurisdiction to conduct an official inquiry into the relevant facts surrounding this incident?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will be considering that, although in the ordinary course I would do so at the time I received the actual report of the investigation into the incident itself. I expect to have that report, and also comments from the independent accident review committee in the fairly near future. At that point I will be able to judge whether an inquiry of the type the hon. member mentions should go ahead.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, my final supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Transport. With respect to the introduction in this chamber of legislation that I know is well advanced, following the principle of the establishment of a full commission of inquiry on an independent basis, might I ask the minister whether he would feel there is considerable urgency in bringing forward legislation of this nature and whether we might expect a draft of it before the House adjourns for the summer?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I certainly do consider that that kind of legislation is important. As the hon. member knows, I developed a draft bill to produce an independent accident commission and made it available for public comment some time ago. That comment has been important and useful. It will lead to some revisions in the bill in its final form. I am now at the final stage of preparing those changes and submitting them to the cabinet for consideration. At that time I would hope to put the bill before the House for its urgent consideration.

* * *

INDIAN AFFAIRS

FUNDING FOR POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. In view of the continuing concern for funding for post-secondary education for Indian Bands serviced by the Sudbury district office of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, including Wasse Abin College, the statement by the minister's parliamentary secretary that a submission was before the Treasury Board, and also a commitment by the deputy minister before the standing committee that existing levels of funding for post-secondary education would be maintained, can the minister now assure these bands concerned that funding will be provided by the department to ensure the post-secondary education for their young people this coming school year?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, on the general commitment, I certainly maintain the commitment I have given before. On the two specific cases the hon. member has referred to, I would have to look into the actual amounts.

* * *

AIR TRANSPORT

CRASH AT CRANBROOK, B.C.—REQUEST CORONER BE PROVIDED WITH UNABRIDGED TRANSCRIPT

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Transport: it concerns the coroner's inquest at Cranbrook which is investigating the fatal crash of a PWA jetliner. In compliance with the coroner's request, and in the interests of justice, will the minister order his officials to provide the coroner and the jury with the unabridged transcript of radio conversations surrounding the tragedy?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will certainly be giving that consideration when the matter is brought to my personal attention. At that point in time I will expect to have some legal advice, as well, in regard to the situation which of course I do not have fully at hand at the moment.

Mr. Symes: Mr. Speaker, I consider that answer is a stall, in light of the actual request by the coroner to transport officials and their refusal to provide that information. By way of supplementary question, can the minister explain why Cranbrook airport which, according to MOT guidelines, is supposed to have two fire trucks and 11 full-time firemen available, had only one fire truck and one fireman available at the time of the crash? Will the minister also report at the earliest opportunity how many other airports in Canada are below minimum firefighting standards?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, obviously, if the hon. member wishes to ask that type of question in the ordinary way—

An hon. Member: It was in the ordinary way—

Mr. Lang: —all detailed information would be supplied and I would be glad to get it for him. I think the references he is making are newspaper references to what someone thought would be on hand and what actually was on hand. When he accuses me of stalling in regard to dealing with a request from a coroner—

An hon. Member: Forty-three people died.

An hon. Member: The truth hurts.

Mr. Lang: —I must say that until the request is received by me, I can hardly do anything about it. I think it is reasonable for me to say that since it is a legal matter, I would also want legal comment about it.

● (1442)

AIR SAFETY FACILITIES AT AIRPORTS

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport on the same matter. The minister will recall I questioned him in the Transport committee on his intention with regard to the establishment of certain minimum standards at airports of the type at Cranbrook where this tragic accident occurred. I made reference in particular to the airport at Dawson Creek, B.C., where there is no air-to-ground communication of any kind, no firefighting equipment of any kind, and daily jet aircraft of the type which suffered this unfortunate accident when landing at Cranbrook.

Has the minister instructed his officials to make a survey of these kinds of airports and compile minimum standards to be followed at them, and will he advise whether the particular situation in Dawson Creek is being rectified at the present time?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I made it clear, in answer to an earlier question, that where air traffic control is desirable or required, it is being examined: it is constantly being examined against certain criteria, and we are now examining the criteria themselves. We have been changing from air radio control to air traffic control, or from air radio to air traffic control, from time to time. Not long ago we did so with regard to another airport in British Columbia. Interestingly enough, at that time one of the Conservative members of parliament urged that we not make that change because they were so satisfied with the air radio service that was there: they did not want air traffic control. Notwithstanding that, our standards indicate when the number of movements requires air traffic control to be put in place. We are re-examining these figures.

* * *

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

PETER TREU CASE—ALLEGED RESTRICTION ON FACTS BEING DISCUSSED

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for either the Minister of Justice or the Solicitor General, whoever has the ultimate responsibility. It deals with the case of one Alexander Peter Treu recently convicted after a secret trial under the Official Secrets Act and sentenced to two years' imprisonment.

Can the hon. gentleman advise of the nature of the restrictions placed on Mr. Treu to prevent him from discussing any aspects of the facts of this case, this having taken place at the time of the conviction, the sentence and the application for bail on leave to appeal? Were such instructions given by the government to counsel to press for such restrictions? Would these restrictions have the effect of prohibiting myself or any other member of parliament from discussing the facts of the case with Mr. Treu?

[Mr. Lang.]

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the restrictions placed on Dr. Treu were, I understand, as a result of an order on a bail application made by the judge in question. Therefore, it is not up to me; it is not a governmental decision but a judicial decision, which surely the hon. member understands.

Whether the hon. member is free to discuss the case with Dr. Treu or not would remain to be seen by the wording of the precise order, which I do not have in front of me but which I would be happy to consider. However, it is not my position, as Minister of Justice, to advise members of parliament as to what are their rights. If the hon. member feels he has a right to consult with Dr. Treu, that is for him to exercise. It is not up to the government to advise members of parliament as to what are their rights.

Mr. Baldwin: I suppose the latter part of that answer might properly mean inquiring what facilities might be available to members of parliament. I would like to ask this supplementary. At the time of the conviction, the judge stated that Mr. Treu was not a criminal in the regular sense of the word. After the investigation commenced, Dr. Treu was continuing to receive the documents. After the trial commenced, NATO awarded to Dr. Treu and/or his company a contract dealing with classified communications sytems.

Will the minister obtain and table in this House a transcript of the comments of the trial judge at the time of the conviction and at the time of the sentencing, so that we can determine whether there was a case of security or whether there was an element of bureaucratic bungling?

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, I will be happy to obtain what I can and table it in the House. The hon. member referred to bureaucratic bungling, and on this morning's CBC radio broadcast he alleged that the Official Secrets Act in this particular case was being used to cover up government corruption, both of which are, of course, obviously denied.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Basford: I am rather startled that the hon. member would use his words so loosely both this morning and this afternoon. I will do as he has requested and table in the House that which is available.

* * *

POST OFFICE

PLANS TO PREVENT INCIDENTS LEADING TO WORKERS BEING SENT HOME

Mr. F. A. Philbrook (Halton): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Postmaster General. In view of the silly and insulting behaviour of some inside postal workers toward management at the main Ottawa terminal on May 11, resulting in workers being sent home and police being called in, does the Postmaster General have any plans to prevent such an incident and resulting disruption from happening in the future anywhere in Canada, especially in the Toronto area?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I agree entirely with my colleague from Halton about the silliness and provocative attitude of some of the workers at the Alta Vista plant. I think it will be of interest to hon. members to know that right after that happened at the Alta Vista plant, I went there at one a.m. on Friday accompanied by the Deputy Postmaster General and my colleague from Ottawa West, Mr. Lloyd Francis, and saw for ourselves on the spot what had happened.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lamontagne: I think it was a positive action on our part and I hope everybody appreciates that we were told that as soon as the incident was noticed, people wearing those badges were given the choice of removing them or going home. Some stayed and some went home. We intend to continue with this policy. I think we are ready to communicate and dialogue with our workers, but no nonsense will be permitted in any plant of our Post Office.

* * *

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NUCLEAR WEAPONS ON CANADIAN SOIL—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. On May 10, the minister answered the hon. member for Greenwood as follows:

—as members of the alliance, we are the non-nuclear power. We do not have any nuclear weapons, nor would they be deployed on our soil.

I ask the minister, when did the nuclear weapons which were stationed on Canadian soil for the use of our interceptor aircraft in their NORAD role leave our territory? If they have not left, will the minister explain his remarks to the House?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I believe the hon. member knows I do not answer questions on that subject.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McKinnon: Mr. Speaker, that leaves one wondering. Is it because the minister does not know, or because he has some fancied precedent? The former minister of national defence had no difficulty in answering that question. I would ask why the minister refuses to answer.

Mr. Danson: Mr. Speaker, I believe my predecessor neither confirmed nor denied such allegations.

INQUIRY WHETHER NUCLEAR WARHEADS TO BE DEPLOYED AT EDMONTON, ALBERTA, BASE

Mr. Steven Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of National Defence. In view of the fact that NORAD is going to establish a base in Edmonton, will the minister advise whether there will be warheads in that vicinity? If so, when can we be advised of such event in that particular area?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member should know that the facility foreseen for Edmonton is a regional operations control centre. The only explosion will be in the hon. member's constituency at election time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

* * *

PUBLIC SERVICE

ALLEGED OVERCLASSIFICATION OF JOBS

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the President of the Treasury Board regarding job classification. It has come to my attention that there has been a waste of millions of dollars a year as a result of overclassification of jobs in the public service. I am sure the minister is aware of this serious matter and I wonder if he can advise whether a study has been undertaken. If so, would he table the report?

● (1452)

Hon. Robert K. Andras (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I do not accept the premise of the hon. member's question. I am not aware of the situation as he describes it. I will certainly look into it with great interest. I do not believe the hon. member has made a correct statement of the situation.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, the minister conveniently did not answer my question, which is typical of him. It has come to my attention that the waste is in the neighbourhood of $100 million per year. That is related to the Ottawa-Hull area. Will the minister look into that question and report back to the House?

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, I believe I did answer the question. I do not accept the question as having a valid base. I do not think the premise is correct, so therefore the question does not call for a detailed response.

[Translation]

EMPLOYMENT

INQUIRY RESPECTING REDUCTION OF BUDGETS FOR JOB CREATION

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Can the minister say whether he still believes in the efficiency of Canada Works and Young Canada Works projects when it comes to job creation? If so, why does the minister make the job creation offices almost inoperative by cutting their budgets by 66 per cent?

[English]

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I do believe in the talent, efficiency and calibre of the people we have in place. From day to day we are asked about the growth and size of the civil service. In an area where we can try to effect economy and where we can maintain service, I think that is an appropriate place to make changes. That is why changes are made, not to decrease the efficiency and effectiveness of the two programs.

[Translation]

Mr. Laprise: I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Considering that experience has shown that it is necessary and useful to have civil servants follow up, control and supervise Canada Works and Young Canada Works projects to make them as effective as possible and that several people in regional offices were dismissed following this decision by the minister for the sake of the future efficiency of these projects, would the minister reconsider his decision and put these people back to work so that they can monitor these projects to make them really efficient?

[English]

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, we have to decide if we are going to effect economies and if we are going to make the best use of the personnel in place. I am suggesting that that is precisely what we are doing now, and I do not think additional people would be necessary at this time. The programs are working very effectively and well and the people in place are doing an excellent job.

* * *

TRANSPORT

HALL REPORT—REQUEST MINISTER CONSULT MR. JUSTICE HALL ON RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Minister of Transport. In light of the fact that the minister demonstrated his disdain for parliament and insulted a distinguished premier of our country in his answer to the hon. member for Vegreville about the necessity of the implementation of the Hall commission report, I wonder if he can tell us, if he has consulted all the people he says he has, why he refuses to consult the architect of this commission, the Hon. Mr. Justice Hall, so that he can get first-hand information and advice about the implementation of this very important report.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think it is improper for the hon. member to suggest that I have any disdain for any aspect of parliament. I did refer to the partisan nature of the way the opposition worked a particular issue, but that should not surprise you, Mr. Speaker. The fact of the matter is that as far as the Hall commission report is concerned, I have had a variety of conversations with all of the five commissioners at different times, but not essentially about the nature of the report which I thought was fairly clear in its writings.

I have been acting to implement it, and in that regard the people who are obviously to be consulted are farmers, farm organizations, farm representatives and the communities which are affected by the recommendations, as well as my colleagues who are affected when I need $100 million, $200 million or $400 million to implement those recommendations. These are the consultations which have been taking place, and we have been making good progress. For the first time in six or seven decades we have seen the rebuilding of rail lines on the prairies instead of their deterioration. That is extremely positive action. It is part of the positive program which, in their partisan way, even Conservatives from the west insist on ignoring.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question, unlike the minister, will be brief. In light of the fact that even the cowardly Prime Minister thinks this parliament has more work to do, will the minister himself not consult with Mr. Hall? Will he not use his good offices to have the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications have Mr. Hall and Mr. Snavely appear before it so that if the minister does not care to consult them, at least members of parliament may?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I really am surprised at the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar, because I did indicate in my answer that I thought the Hall commission report was clear in its terms and that I had no difficulty understanding what it does recommend and, indeed, am taking action to implement most of the important provisions.

We took action faster than has ever been seen before in responding to a commission report. Within ten days of receiving the Hall commission report, we implemented the first and most important recommendation to make permanent the 1,813 miles of rail which the commission said should be transferred to the basic rail network. Within days after that we had a conference with all interested organizations and heard from them that they wanted faster action in resolving the doubt about the lines which were not identified by the Hall commission for either being kept or being abandoned. These interested organizations showed great support for the idea of the Prairie Rail Action Committee going ahead and identifying the future of those lines. Within a matter of months of that we also had before cabinet, and approved, a $100 million program for rebuilding rail lines, again for the first time in many decades. I think those are the important forms of action which are really needed.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I will extend the question period by a moment or two to recognize two or three hon. members who have been attempting to be recognized. However, before I can go on, I will have to ask the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar to withdraw the remarks he just made about the Prime Minister.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I withdraw them, of course. I did not mean to use the word "cowardly". Probably the word "brave" would have been more appropriate.

* * *

AIR TRANSPORT

INDEPENDENT BOARD TO INVESTIGATE MATTERS OF AIR SAFETY

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Transport. It is supplementary to several other questions, but specifically to the question asked by the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East regarding the coroner's remarks after the unfortunate tragedy at Cranbrook.

My question also concerns a series of problems which arose in northern Ontario regarding air safety and the in-house report which was made at that particular time. Following a question along this line, the minister mentioned that he was considering an independent board. I would like to ask the minister if he is considering that that board not only investigate accidents but also take responsibility for all safety, as is done in the United States.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the commission is intended essentially to be the independent review board. Indeed, the very argument in favour of the independent board is that the investigation into the situation be in the hands of someone other than the parties who have the responsibility for assuring that things are being done safely, in order that there not be an apparent conflict between them. I do not, therefore, contemplate transferring the responsibility for safety from its present location within the Department of Transport, but I will want at an early date to have an independent board.

* * *

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

PUBLIC SERVICE LABOUR DISPUTE—STATUS OF NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Wally Firth (Northwest Territories): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. In view of the fact that bargaining has broken off between the Public Service Association of the Northwest Territories and the employer, which happens to be the minister's department, is the minister aware of the apparent breach of the undertaking given by the employer, and that the employer has attempted directly to change certain terms and conditions of employment and may now be moving to change indirectly the housing rental rates and rental conditions applicable to members of the Public Service Association? I wonder if the minister can report anything about this matter to the House.

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): I am afraid I cannot, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member has just brought it to my attention, but I would be pleased to look into it and get back to him later today.

* * *

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

DEVELOPMENT AGREEMENT SIGNED WITH MANITOBA

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. In view of the development agreement the minister has signed with the government of the province of Manitoba which concentrates primarily on the development of small business in that province as well as tourism, I would like to ask the minister whether he is now in a position to give a statement as to the feasibility, from his point of view, of a special ARDA program for southeastern Manitoba similar to what was done in the Interlake starting in 1961.

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Lessard (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I am not entirely aware of the impact that the signing of such an agreement might have but I am quite prepared to raise the question with my officials and to look at whether such an agreement with the government of Manitoba would be workable. I shall consider the hon. member's question.

* * *

● (1502)

[English]

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

MOTOR VEHICLES NOT MEETING POLLUTION STANDARDS

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, last week after putting questions to the Minister of Transport we found that because we in this country do not have laws as they do in the United States obliging the recall of unsafe cars, cars which are being recalled in the United States are not being recalled in Canada.

Today I should like to put a question to the Minister of the Environment. Last week there was a massive recall of many thousands of United States automobiles because they were not meeting pollution standards. Since similar cars are on the roads in Canada, I should like to ask the minister what the situation is here. Is the minister ordering a similar recall in this country?

Hon. Len Marchand (Minister of State (Environment)): I will have to take that question as notice and look into the matter.

Mr. Grafftey: The Canadian people are being told time and time again that because of the climate here, the automobile pollution problem is more serious than it is in the United States. Can the minister tell us why laws considered necessary in the United States should apparently not be needed in Canada? If the situation is as I have described it, what action can we expect in Canada?

Mr. Marchand: I shall include that matter in my investigation and report to the hon. member.

* * *

PRIVILEGE

MR. STANFIELD—SURVEILLANCE OF CANDIDATES SEEKING PUBLIC OFFICE

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. On April 26 the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Stanfield) raised by way of a question of privilege the matter of the possible surveillance of candidates for election to this House. Some discussion took place on the subject on that occasion. On April 27 a motion, in fact, was put forward by the hon. member for Halifax, as follows:

That the matter of the Solicitor General's refusal to provide information respecting surveillance by the security forces of legitimate political candidates, and his contention that the McDonald commission is the only suitable vehicle to investigate a question affecting the privileges of all members of the House of Commons, be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

There was some discussion of that motion and, in due course, I had to indicate there were certain procedural difficulties attached to it. I hope I expressed my attitude with regard to the seriousness of the matter by suggesting that further consideration might be given to a motion on the same subject in a different form.

Considerable discussion followed and, in fact, on May 2 the hon. member for Halifax put forward a motion which has now been in reserve for some time, namely:

That the matter of the surveillance by the security forces of candidates at general elections be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections in order that the committee can determine and report upon the extent of and criteria for such surveillance.

A number of hon. members subsequently took part in the discussion. I indicated a few days ago that I would take the matter under consideration—that although I felt great sympathy with the importance of the subject matter I was having difficulty with regard to extending the parameters of privilege as we know them through the classic definition of privilege which is to be found in the nineteenth edition of May at page 67, and which has been referred to in many previous rulings:

Parliamentary privilege is the sum of the peculiar rights enjoyed by each House collectively as a constituent part of the High Court of parliament, and by members of each House individually, without which they could not discharge their functions, and which exceed those possessed by other bodies or individuals. Thus privilege, though part of the law of the land, is to a certain extent an exemption from the ordinary law.

The House has always been guided by this general definition of privilege and I would refer hon. members, for example, to the statement of my distinguished predecessor, the hon. Speaker Lamoureux, of April 29, 1971, a statement which has often been quoted, certainly by myself:

On a number of occasions I have defined what I consider to be parliamentary privilege. Privilege is that which sets honourable members apart from other citizens giving them rights which the public do not possess. I suggest we should be careful in construing any particular circumstance which might add to the privileges which have been recognized over the years and perhaps over the centuries as belonging to members of the House of Commons. In my view, parliamentary privilege does not go much beyond the right of free speech in the House of Commons and the right of a member to discharge his duties in the House as a member of the House of Commons.

It is also very clear that while the House has the undoubted right to apply the law of privilege to specific circumstances, one House acting alone cannot create a new privilege. Herein lies the real dilemma for a Speaker. While I have every sympathy for the substance of the hon. member's complaint, I must determine by some measure the extent to which the complaint falls within the existing law of privilege or whether, by accepting it as a "prima facie case"—a popular definition, a phrase which I do not use often—I would be creating a new privilege. The difference lies in the fact that if the matter touches a question of privilege in the House the motion must be taken into consideration before any other business; if it does not, the motion is not by any means set aside for all time; it must simply be introduced in a more ordinary way.

It seemed to me that in dealing with a case which is very similar—the case involving the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez)—that I had gone about as far as I could go in extending the benefit of the doubt in the circumstances. I felt, as I said, that we were getting into a new area, the question of electronic surveillance of elected members of the House of Commons. I was not sure how the law of privilege applied in those circumstances, and I took the matter seriously enough to conclude that the House ought to be able to address itself to that matter, on the benefit of the doubt, perhaps in debate, perhaps in the course of deliberations in a committee.

In any event, as is always the case, the decision is not made by the Chair; once the Chair decides that a matter does touch privilege it is for the House to make the decision as to what should happen to the motion. In that particular case, as I say, I gave the benefit of the doubt, though in doing so I was concerned, even in those circumstances, that I might be extending the classic definition of privilege on the basis of the precedents I have just quoted. In other words, while it is clear in those circumstances that the law of privilege applied to members in their capacity as legislators individually and collectively assembled, I am not clear as to the extent to which the representational function, though it is, of course, a very important aspect of the life of any member, can be assumed to be a necessary adjunct to his legislative function within the context of parliamentary privilege.

In the present case I cannot see how privilege as defined can be extended beyond the physical precincts and, indeed, beyond the life of a parliament to cover, not members but candidates, not in respect of activities here in this Chamber but elsewhere, and not during the life of a parliament but during a period when technically parliament does not exist.

As I said earlier, I have every sympathy with the hon. member's complaint and there will, I hope, be ways in which the matter can be raised through normal procedures, either the introduction of a motion or negotiations which might bring the matter forward in some other way. But confronted as I am with the existing law of privilege, to give this motion priority in the face of these precedents would, it seems to me, be stretching those precedents beyond all recognition, and I must therefore find I cannot accept the motion put forward by the hon. member for Halifax.

MR. HUNTINGTON—LEGAL PROCEEDINGS LAUNCHED BY VANCOUVER BRANCH OF CUPW

Mr. Speaker: On Tuesday, May 2, 1978, the hon. member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington) raised a complaint of harassment and obstruction in his parliamentary duties by virtue of a writ which had been issued against him in connection with remarks he had made on a radio talk show on May 6, 1977. In this broadcast he had "repeated the substance" of remarks he had made in the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications the day before, concerning the activities of the Canadian Union of Postal Workers particularly as they affected the city of Vancouver.

The hon. member based his procedural argument first on the privilege of freedom from molestation and, second, on an interpretation of the circumstances in which a matter arising outside parliament may be treated as a proceeding in parliament with respect to privilege.

It seems quite clear that this matter has caused the member certain difficulties in the performance of his duties as a member of parliament, but I have trouble in accepting the argument that these difficulties constitute obstruction or harassment in the narrow sense in which one must construe the privilege of freedom from molestation, particularly in the face of what must be construed as being ordinary access to the courts of the land, which surely ought to be something parliament would interfere with only upon the most grave and serious grounds.

In his argument respecting what constitutes a "proceeding in parliament", the hon. member places reliance on the decision of Roman v. Hudson's Bay Oil and Gas, Trudeau and Greene, in which the High Court of Ontario held that a press release and telegram repeating what was said in the House were extensions of statements made in the House. The hon. member goes on to say that the decision was upheld by the Court of Appeal of Ontario in 1971, and in turn by the Supreme Court of Canada in 1973.

● (1512)

However, the Supreme Court of Canada merely said that it did not dissent from the views expressed in the courts below as to the privileges attached to statements made in parliament. I underline and emphasize those words, "made in parliament". It went on to dispose of the appeal on grounds other than privilege. Furthermore, Mr. Justice Hugessen in the recent decision on the Ouellet case, which was affirmed by the Court of Appeal of Quebec, felt that the decision of the Ontario courts in the Roman case did not represent the law. Thus the question of what is a "proceeding in parliament" in Canada is not clear in terms of the judicial precedents.

In respect of the position in the United Kingdom, which was referred to also by the hon. member, in the 1967 report of the select committee on parliamentary privilege, the British House of Commons resolved to bring into immediate effect all of the recommendations of this committee which did not require legislation. The committee report in question recommended that proceedings in parliament be defined by legislation, and that any communication between a member and a minister or an officer of the House concerning the business of the House should be fully privileged.

While it seems that the meaning of the expression remains for the moment equally unclear in the United Kingdom, nevertheless it appears to exclude the factual situation set out by the hon. member. Therefore, while I am willing to accept the argument that there may be circumstances in which a matter arising outside parliament can properly be considered as an extension of a proceeding in parliament, and therefore covered by privilege, I feel I would be extending the definition of privilege, even on those precedents, to include discussions on an ad lib basis on an open line radio or television show, in which dialogue goes on for some time, questions are posed, and answers are made. Even though they are based on an original proceeding in parliament, it would be an unwarranted extension of the reasoning in those cases to say that that circumstance could be accepted as an extension and, therefore, in fact as a proceeding in parliament within the precedents.

Therefore, on either count—the extension of proceedings in parliament or on the grounds of molestation—I am unable to find privilege in the hon. member's motion or question which he put before us.

There is a narrow procedural difficulty as well. The hon. member concluded his presentation with a motion indicating that this matter be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections. Consistently I have rejected and set aside that kind of motion, even after a question of privilege, on the grounds that, as constituted, it would be far too general a motion for the committee to deal with properly and to determine an appropriate mandate for the committee.

Point of Order—Mr. McKinnon

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few brief words with regard to the matter raised by the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Stanfield). In effect, I rise to register a caveat. I believe a Liberal member who is not present in the Chamber today had planned, if Your Honour ruled against the hon. member for Halifax, to raise a question of privilege based on the invitation issued to the House of Commons by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) at a press conference, to pronounce itself on the issue of surveillance of members of parliament by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. I believe the hon. member to whom I have referred will do that when he returns. In case he does not, I enter a caveat indicating that I should like to raise the issue in that form.

* * *

POINT OF ORDER

MR. McKINNON—ANSWER GIVEN BY MINISTER OF NATIONAL DEFENCE DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, a few minutes ago the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Danson) either attempted to or did mislead the House in answer to one of my questions. My question concerned the position on nuclear weapons in conjunction with Canadian forces. In answer to my supplementary question, the minister claimed that the previous minister of national defence, Mr. Richardson, had never answered clearly in the House of Commons on this.

I should like to refer Your Honour to Hansard dated March 27, 1974, at page 908, where I directed a similar question to the then minister of national defence. He replied as follows:

> Mr. Speaker, none of our aircraft are equipped with nuclear missiles, but we do have in storage, and this has been public knowledge for several years—nuclear missiles at Comox and at the other bases from which our interceptor squadrons take off.

I do not think the minister deliberately misled the House. I think it was done through ignorance, as it was through ignorance that he misled the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) last week. It is through ignorance that he attempted to get away with it again today. The former minister of national defence stated that nuclear missiles were on our soil and, for all we can determine, they still are.

Hon. Norman A. Cafik (Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Danson) is not present in the House at this particular moment, I simply enter a caveat indicating that he may want an opportunity to respond to the allegation or suggestion of the hon. member.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member raises what is essentially a disagreement in the interpretation which can be placed upon a minister's response. In any event, it does not constitute privilege. Rather, it constitutes a disagreement which may be contributed to at some other time.

[Mr. Speaker.]

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[Translation]

INCOME TAX ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-56, to amend the statute law relating to income tax and to authorize payments related to provincial sales tax reductions.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

[English]

PUBLIC OPINION POLLS ACT

MEASURE TO REGULATE POLLS DURING ELECTION CAMPAIGNS

Mr. Dean Whiteway (Selkirk) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-455, respecting public opinion polls.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Whiteway: Mr. Speaker, my bill would not disallow public opinion polls during the time of a writ period, but simply make certain requirements, namely, stating who took a poll, the sampling and the results of the poll, in order that Canadians are able to ascertain whether the poll was an adequate one and not simply one done by a political party with no real basis of sampling.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

* * *

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Cafik: Mr. Speaker, I believe agreement has been reached in respect of granting leave through an order of the House to revert briefly to the tabling of documents at 8 p.m. tonight to permit the tabling of the report of the Royal Commission on Corporate Concentration.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I gather that has something to do with the market. That is agreeable.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Agreed, and so ordered.

* * *

[Translation]

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Frank Maine (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: 204, 800, 1,433, 1,460 and 1,586.

I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

[Text]

CMHC—PERSONS UNDER CONTRACT

Question No. 204—Mr. McKenzie:

1. What is the total number of persons under contract to the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and how many are retired public servants?

2. What was the total amount in (a) 1975 (b) 1976 paid to those under contract and how much of this was to retired public servants?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): I am advised as follows by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation: 1. CMHC has 415 persons on a contract basis of employment. None of these are retired public servants.

2. Such contract employees were paid (a) $1,852,890 in 1975, and (b) $2,941,363 in 1976. None of these amounts were paid to retired public servants.

DREE GRANTS

Question No. 800—Mr. Beaudoin:

In (a) 1975 (b) 1976 (c) 1977, were DREE grants allotted to the Constituency of Richmond and, if so (i) in what amount (ii) for what major economic sectors?

Mr. Donald Wood (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The reply for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows: under the Regional Development Incentives Act:

(a) 1975-76

Company offered an incentive	Accepted Incentive Offer	Economic sector
Abattoir Giroux Inc. (Bromptonville)	$39,860	Food and beverages
Spécialités B-Pro Inc. (Windsor)	$51,000	Primary processing of metals
Jolin Machine Shop (St-François-Xavier de Brompton)	$20,660	Metal products manufacturing
Les Ateliers Beauchemin Inc. (Danville)	$27,900	Idem

(b) 1976-77

Company offered an incentive	Accepted Incentive Offer	Economic sector
Les Plastiques La Salle Inc. (Richmond)	$147,650	Rubber and plastic
Robert & Robert Ltée. (St-François-Xavier de Brompton)	$ 70,000	Wood industry
Rousseau Lumber Inc. (Weedon)	$ 13,640	Idem
Plomberie Asbestos Inc. (Asbestos)	$ 76,740	Metal products manufacturing

(c) 1977-78
(as of November 30, 1977)

Company offered an incentive	Accepted Incentive Offer	Economic sector
Boisvert, Luc (company to be incorporated) (Asbestos)	$14,795	Clothing industry
Les Bardeaux de l'Est Inc. (Marbleton)	$25,160	Wood industry

POWDERED MILK SUBSIDY

Question No. 1,433—Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse):

During the fiscal year 1976-77, did the government subsidize the powdered milk producers and, if so, in what amount?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): The Canadian dairy commission advises: no.

LIQUID MILK SUBSIDY

Question No. 1,460—Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse):

In 1975, did the government subsidize liquid milk producers and industrial milk producers and, if so, what was the amount in each case?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): The Canadian dairy commission advises: yes. Subsidies paid to liquid milk producers for the dairy year 1975-76 totaled $81,824,335. Subsidies paid to industrial milk producers for the dairy year 1975-76 totaled $184,038,334.

COST OF EMR ADVERTISING

Question No. 1,586—Mr. McKinnon:

1. What was the cost of the full page advertising campaign by the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources approximately March 31, 1978 which indicated the approximate mileage for several cars?

2. What was the cost of producing and distributing the 106 page book on information about buying a new or used car which was distributed by the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources on a request basis?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): The Department of Energy, Mines and Resources reports as follows:

1. Approximately $80,000.

2. Cost of producing and distributing (by mail) one car book—23.7 cents. As of April 20, 1978, 2.3 million copies have been printed and distributed.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: The questions enumerated by the hon. parliamentary secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

• (1522)

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[Translation]

CUSTOMS TARIFF

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance) moved that Bill C-48, to amend the Customs Tariff and to amend an act to amend the Customs Tariff, be read the second time and referred to committee of the whole.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of Bill C-48 is to implement the proposed changes in the Customs Tariff contained in the ways and means motion that accompanied the budget on April 10, 1978. Proposed changes deal with the four following points: first, the extension, for another year, of the temporary reductions on a huge array of consumer goods which otherwise would have expired on June 30, 1978; second, the cancellation of the advantages granted through the British preferential tariffs on certain goods imported from Great Britain and Ireland; third, the provision of assistance to Canadian manufacturers of industrial tractor tires and chemical products used in the production of pesticides; and finally, various changes reducing the tariff on certain imports by an amount of roughly $135 million.

The main provision of the bill, namely clause 5, provides for the renewal, till June 30, 1979, of the many temporary tariff cuts which were to have expired on June 30, 1978. Those cuts were provided as a means to fight inflation in the Febuary 19, 1973, budget. Imports benefitting from the tariff cuts were estimated at about $1.5 billion in 1977 of which food products, including raw sugar, represented about $400 million. Other products included in the overall proposal are: medical and pharmaceutical products, automobile parts, hand tools, photographic equipment, vacuum cleaners, china and sports articles.

The complete proposal for July 1, 1978 will differ on four points from that of 1977. First, the reduced customs tariff rate on canned and frozen asparagus and frozen brussel sprouts will expire on June 30, 1978. This measure takes into account the recommendations of the Tariff Board to increase the protection in the case of these products. Moreover, the reduction of customs tariffs on glassware will expire in order to stimulate the development of the Canadian production of those items. Third, the reduction of customs tariff on synthetic detergents will not be renewed after June 30, 1978, due to the fast growing rate of imports in this sector. Finally, the 10 per cent temporary rate applied to some canned meat will also expire at the end of June. It will be raised to 15 per cent, a figure more consistent with the rates applied to other meat products as well as to the needs of the industry, but even then far below the rates effective before 1973.

[Mr. Speaker.]

We propose to cancel the advantages granted through the British preferential tariffs on certain goods imported from Great Britain and Ireland, namely confectionery, truck-mounted cranes, some diesel engines, some equipment used for community television broadcasting and knitted wear. This measure is motivated by the desire to help Canadian manufactures which do not operate at full capacity or which have seen their volume of business drop significantly because of the preferential rates granted to some imports. From now on, these imports will be subject to the most favoured nation tariff. Of course, Canada no longer has to apply preferential tariffs to goods from Great Britain or Ireland. A number of them will probably disappear under the tariff cuts which will be determined at the multilateral trade negotiations.

The bill also provides for duty on tires for tractors used for other than farm purposes. This measure will aid Canadian manufacturers who produce tires for industrial tractors and will put an end to a situation of inequity whereby tires used for the tractional components of certain types of equipment are duty free whereas tires for the non-tractional components are dutiable.

The proposed imposition of duty on two basic chemicals used for manufacturing herbicides will allow important investments in this industry and will help in establishing a guaranteed Canadian source of supply. Pesticides used for farming purposes will continue to be duty free.

There are also other amendments contained in Bill C-48. Aircraft and aircraft engines of types and sizes not made in Canada which were to be temporarily duty free until June 30, 1978 will continue to be so for an extra year. Markers used for crop dusting operations, as well as catgut used in the repair of sports racquets would also be duty free. The bill also proposes a cut for parts of electric light fixtures.

Mr. Speaker, this concludes my general comments on Bill C-48. I will be happy to answer specific questions on the bill when it is considered by the committee of the whole.

[English]

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, this is one of those bills that, because of its highly technical nature, precipitates a rather limited debate. I suppose the only subject matter that is even more technical and would produce a more narrow debate would be that involving the Income Tax Act.

This motion gives rise to a rather interesting debate because it seems that the minister must have clobbered the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in order to bring his attention to the fact that there is a paragraph in this motion which, in effect, would mean that parliament had to deal with customs amendments or the minister's proposals of April 10 would have been for naught.

Let me point out that in the ways and means motion which gives rise to this particular bill, and which appears in Hansard of April 10, it is stated in paragraph 5 at page 4341:

That any enactment founded upon subparagraph 1(2) of this motion shall be deemed to have come into force on the 1st day of July 1978, and to have applied to all goods mentioned in the said paragraph imported or taken out of warehouse for consumption on or after that day, and to have applied to goods previously imported for which no entry for consumption was made before that day.

The next paragraph refers to changes based upon subparagraph 1(1) and paragraphs 2, 3 and 4 of the ways and means motion which came into force on April 11, and it states that they will be deemed to have applied to all goods mentioned in the particular paragraphs, imported or taken out of the warehouse for consumption on or after that date. In other words, unlike income tax, the changes in the customs tariff must be passed by parliament for them to have effect. They would not have had any effect on July 1 had the Prime Minister called an election, as he had indicated he was going to do.

● (1532)

We get some rather knowing smiles from hon. members opposite, but we know that they are now behaving entirely from hindsight. Many of them, depending on what part of the country they come from, were really wanting an election, and others were pushing away an election with a ten foot pole. However, that is one of the effects, and it may have been a factor when the Prime Minister decided to put the election off until some indefinite date in the future.

The finance minister's thoughts are the same as mine in this connection, that in so far as the custom tariff is concerned there has to be enactment into law before the provisions can be effective. Therefore, unless all of these provisions were to go down the drain, the proposals made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) in his budget, which was designed to stimulate Canadian industry, would be all for naught.

The debate on second reading of this bill will range far and wide because schedule A contains every particular item that is subject to customs tariff and therefore each and every one is open to discussion. I know that many of my colleagues are going to comment upon some of the items referred to in this bill. They will comment favourably on a number of them, but many are going to say that action should have been taken of a different nature with respect to the other items. There are certain proposals that they would have liked because of their regional interests.

The total of the changes in the customs tariff are subject to the over-all influence of the GATT negotiations now going on in Geneva under the heading of the Tokyo Round. Naturally, at the moment certain areas are off limits because they are the subject matter of these negotiations.

There have been many debates in this House with regard to the secrecy of the negotiations in Geneva and the fact that the government has not taken the provinces and industry into its confidence. We had a recent visit from Mr. Warren and Mr. Grey, the chief negotiators, and they have been doing some explaining, but it is rather late in the day.

Our form of proceeding under these tariff negotiations is totally wrong. We should be much more open with the people of Canada. It is as though it were the government versus the rest of Canada, and that Canadians are lucky peasants to have whatever it is decided should be imposed upon them. To me this is fundamentally wrong. As an example, when it comes to the petrochemical industry, surely the government of my own province of Alberta has a clear interest and a right to participate in the negotiations, not merely, "it is the view of Canada or the negotiators that such and such should take place." It is the same with Saskatchewan and its potash industry, Ontario with regard to chemicals and steel, some provinces with regard to textiles and shoes, and so on.

The situation with regard to textiles is very strange because in some parts of Canada the industry is in very dire straits at the present time, and in other parts it is not so. I recently visited a friend of mine who runs a textile converting plant and who is adding to his premises and to his work force. To his work force alone he is not just adding one, two or three people, but hundreds. He says, "Oh yes, I know that there is tough competition from abroad and that our goods are higher priced than those of our competitors, whether they are domestic or foreign, but I am increasing my production because of the quality of workmanship and design, and the public is prepared to pay for that all the time."

The provinces and industry, as I and my friends have continuously pointed out, should have an overt role in the negotiations and know ahead of time what the government is thinking in its instructions to its negotiators. The United States does not conduct its negotiations in absolute secrecy; its producers are informed of what is ahead of them and what the government is thinking. I am sure that some of my colleagues will expound at greater length on this. Perhaps one could invite my colleague from York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens), who has had a good deal to say about this in the past, to do so.

I would like to draw to the minister's attention, since it obviously comes under the authority of the Minister of National Revenue and the Customs Tariff Act—and here I distinguish between the Customs Tariff Act and the Customs Act—section 17(1) of the Anti-Dumping Act with regard to varying the rate of duty after the anti-dumping tribunal has come to a final decision, which is classified as irrevocable. It states:

The deputy minister, upon receipt of an order . . . and subject to subsection 18(4) and subsection 19(1), such decision is final and conclusive.

There was a recent decision by the anti-dumping tribunal with respect to certain steel shapes that were being imported into the country, and frankly it was to protect Algoma Steel. They had complained that there was dumping in certain parts of the country from various sources and, following representations from the west coast and Alberta, the Minister of National Revenue gave relief against some of the additional duties imposed by the anti-dumping tribunal. The point at issue is that it was not in the findings of the anti-dumping tribunal that there was dumping.

● (1542)

I would like to know what power the Minister of National Revenue has to relieve against something where the decision is said to be final and conclusive. There has been some discussion about this in the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, but I find the replies of the minister totally inconclusive and evasive. It seems to me, on the face of it at least, that there should be an avenue open for a ministry to be selective and say that, under appropriate legislation, if a board, having found there was dumping, imposed certain dumping charges according to law, then the minister or the government, as the case may be, could relieve against that decision. This is wide open to abuse and I should like the Minister of Finance to deal with this point in his reply.

There are four kinds of customs tariff that are applicable in Canada under schedule A. There is the very familiar British preferential tariff; then there is the most favoured nation tariff; then the general tariff which, of course, is the highest of all, and then a category that was introduced about 1972 or 1973 known as the general preferential tariff. The reason I want to talk about these categories is to determine the guidelines for the particular category into which a country will fit.

We know that the most favoured nation status applies as a result of direct treaty. There is in the structure, over-all, a general tariff; then there is an exception to the general tariff under the most favoured nation provision. Of course the ramifications of that are easily understood. If Canada negotiates a treaty with a certain country and thereby sets certain rates of import duty on certain commodities which are less than those provided for under the general tariff, any other country which gets the most favoured nation classification will immediately get the best possible deal in existence with regard to that commodity. I dare say most of the goods that come into this country come in under the most favoured nation classification.

British preferential tariffs came into being as a result of negotiations in 1932, and have been very important to the type of industry we have in Canada. As a matter of fact, if anything, that particular tariff has been important in bringing a branch plant industry to Canada. At that time the British Empire market was possibly the largest in the world, as politically defined. In order for American firms and others to compete at the most advantageous level, they had to establish branch plants or subsidiaries in Canada and then, of course, they came within the terms of the British preferential tariff.

The same thing is done today by the Japanese, the Americans, and the Canadians establishing branch plants or subsidiaries in common market countries. The common market has an additional deal, however. Since the 1930s the non-tariff barriers have been refined, which can sometimes prove as highly effective as a 100 per cent duty in keeping Canadian commodities out of, say, the common market.

We ourselves, are moving against the British preferential tariff classification. As a matter of fact, the backbone of this budget is a retaliation or restriction imposed upon commodities manufactured in the United Kingdom and Ireland because those areas have now joined the common market. We do not want common market countries to push their goods through the United Kingdom or Ireland into Canada under the lower BP.

I want a better explanation for this move than that we want to encourage the manufacturer of certain commodities in Canada so we are going to place restrictions against the British. It has to be shown that the Canadian production would benefit Canada not only in the number of jobs that may be created but also that Canadian consumers will benefit. I find it an exercise in futility to say that we are going to establish a particular branch plant which will provide, say, some 300 jobs, but that its production will cost 15 per cent more than before and is going to keep on costing 15 per cent more. Of what benefit is that to the Canadian consumer? I hope there is a good answer. The proposals in this legislation which cover this particular restriction are rather sweeping.

What guidelines have been laid down to establish the list of countries entitled to general preferential tariff treatment? I thought they were developing countries—third world countries. When I examined the list, however, I found some rather sophisticated countries with manufactures that are not just handicrafts or agriculture or the basic products that we would import in great quantity. Why do we have a general preferential tariff for Argentina, for Greece, Hong Kong, the Republic of Korea, Romania, Venezuela, and Yugoslavia? Those are examples I have chosen. I do not particularly want to single out these countries. It seems to me in many aspects these countries are as far advanced as Canada. Their economies are strong. Why would we want to extend to them the general preferential tariff?

● (1552)

I find it extraordinary for instance that I would extend the same tariff rates to the Argentine that I would give, for instance, to the Ivory Coast, to Jamaica, to Liberia or to Malawi. Down the list we go. I have no objection whatsoever to this category, and I have said so in the past. I think most of the countries included in the list deserve being placed on that list. But again, I am going to ask the Minister of Finance to indicate why the countries I have mentioned have been included. And if Romania is on the list why would Hungary not be on the list, or Bulgaria? Those countries are at the same levels of development and, in many ways, they are much further ahead than Canada. But why are they on this third world list?

I have a few more things to say. On a personal basis I am pleased that the minister has agreed to create the item of 40917-1 which is not anything of great quantity but will be something of great import to western Canadians later this year in dealing with crop spraying or crop dusting. That is simply articles of any material designed to be ejected from aircraft for use as markers in crop spraying or crop dusting operations. These are a form of degradable paper which is not made in Canada. The market here in Canada is not big enough to justify any paper mill making these items in this quality and quantity at a price that would be economically feasible for the farmers concerned. These paper products are made by a couple of firms in the United States where there is a much bigger market. It is only a question of reducing the duty from 17.5 per cent, which would be the most favoured nation tariff applicable to the United States, to free entry. To that extent I am sure that that minor price concession which may be available to the agricultural industry in Canada would be most appreciated.

Then we have the general items covering aircraft No. 44047-1. Those are aircraft engines when imported for use in the equipment of aircraft when of types or sizes not made in Canada on or after July 1, 1979. They will come in free under the British preferential tariff. Some are free under the most favoured nation tariff, but usually it is 7.5 per cent. General tariff is 27.5 per cent.

Over 20 years I think I have seen a similar paragraph in every blessed budget in one way or the other. I do not know why this "rolling date" is used. I have asked ministers of finance for an answer on that point. They have said that is the way it has been done all the time. Presumably the habit has become jelled into acceptable practice, and there it is.

Many of my colleagues will deal with fruits and vegetables. There are certainly other involved subjects that I know some of my colleagues will talk about. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, we would prefer to see a wide ranging debate at this stage. We have not had a good debate on these matters for some time, and once we get into the committee of the whole the rules of relevancy will restrict us to the particular subject at hand.

There is no way hon. members will talk about textiles and shoes when we are dealing with canned pork. There again, some of my agricultural colleagues will take up that particular item to see why the change was made, sort of halfway between what it was. Prior to February 20, 1973, the most favoured nation tariff for canned pork and canned hams was 25 per cent and 20 per cent respectively. These items mostly came in from the United States, but there would be some coming in from Poland and other countries. The British preferential tariff was a flat 15 per cent across the board. Now the most favoured nation tariff as of the effective date will be 15 per cent. It had been lowered to 10 per cent. So there is a sort of halfway house. The minister did allude to that in his remarks, but frankly not enough. We will examine these at greater length.

In due course this bill will pass. I do not know that there are any particular items which anyone would find that objectionable at this time. But on the other hand I am sure many colleagues in the House will discuss with the minister more of what he did not include in this particular bill than those things which he did include in the bill.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo-Cambridge): Mr. Speaker, in some ways nothing better illustrates the problem of Canada and the problem of Canadian tariffs than the recent conflict between the federal government and the government of the province of Quebec regarding the use of the sales tax rebate.

The sales tax rebate by the federal government was designed to be non-discriminatory so that it would apply to everything whether the item was imported or domestic. Quebec has quite obviously opted for protectionism by the choice of its plan. This is very significant. My purpose in raising this question is not to cast blame on Quebec or to be critical of the position that Quebec has taken, but rather to point out the importance of this whole matter of tariffs and protection to the future of Canada. In fact the issue in Quebec may be decided more on the question of creating employment through tariff protection than on the language issue which all of us thought was so important. This is becoming quite clear. It is also quite clear that the Quebec government has the support not only of those who voted for that particular government but also the support of the Liberals in Quebec. It has the support of almost everyone in Quebec on the protectionist stance it has taken. By making its sales tax rebate proposals selective it has singled out those items which were of particular concern to the province of Quebec. It is a lesson for Canada.

• (1602)

Canadian policies in the past were reaping a whirlwind. Canadian policy in the past did not concentrate on the manufacturing industry, although for brief periods in our history there was that kind of concentration. When that concentration did take place, nothing was done to make it permanent or to stabilize it.

Canadian policy has been directed toward the export of raw materials, not toward secondary industry and labour intensive industry. While that policy may have made some sense in the initial stages of the development of Canada, in that we had a large territory with a relatively small population, it is quite clear that as our population grew, particularly following World War II, this policy of concentrating on our resource industries proved to be a disaster. Not only was it a disaster in the sense that it did not provide jobs, but even the resources themselves were no longer in demand.

We used to think that Canada had a monopoly on nickel. However, one of the greatest problems we face today in terms of employment is in the nickel mines of Canada. We no longer have a monopoly on anything. In many cases, because of foolish policies, we have taken the best sources of supplies and left ourselves with secondary or expensive sources.

There are a whole series of towns and districts in this country that bear testimony to the consequence of depending on non-renewable resource extraction. You can list the towns where, when the resource was defeated, the town was finished. The people moved elsewhere or changed the skills they had acquired in the resource-related industry to other industries.

We have to look at the attitude we are going to take toward tariff protection in the future. We are going into the GATT negotiations without any clear notion of what we want to be as a country. We have no clear notion of what is good for us in the short run or good for us in the long run. We are going in with our heads in the clouds, with a kind of mush-ball policy that there is something virtuous about free trade, as though there was free trade and as though GATT should be the first approach rather than the second. We know from our experience in Canada that it is not the tariff arrangement that is the most compelling and telling in terms of trade, but the other things. One example is the many ways in which countries successfully keep our products out of their markets while at the same time paying lip service to free trade.

We should not be giving anything at the GATT negotiations because we do not have anything to give. In the short run our problem is that we must cure the high unemployment in Canada. That can only be cured in the labour intensive industries in this country, the ones that need the most protection.

In the longer run, we do not have that problem. The demographic observations are that by the end of this century we will have a labour shortage, and maybe even before then. It is at that time we should be the most serious about free trade. It is at that time that this country will be able to afford to liberalize its trade, but not at this moment.

In many ways we have to some extent been saved from having the situation even worse than it is by the falling Canadian dollar. This has restored some jobs that were being lost because of previous policies.

There is not much time. The government will have to make some clear-cut statement on what its intentions are in the GATT negotiations. On those occasions when we have questioned the government, the answer has been that we are for fair trade. Everybody is for fair trade, but what does it mean? How do you debate fair trade? In what context is the government going to carry out its negotiations?

If we want to see some evidence of what freer trade has done for Canada, there are two examples that come to mind. There are many others, but these two are outstanding. The first is the Canada-U.S. auto agreement. We went into that and were assured that we would get our fair share of the market. In the initial stage of the implementation of that agreement, we got our fair share. To some extent we got a little bit more. At that time many of us warned the government not to be obtuse about it. We stated that it was one of those fortuitous things that take place in the initial stages of an agreement of this kind, in the sense that investment in the auto industry is very lumpy and there had to be heavy investment in the initial stages by the government in order to get the kind of productivity that was required.

We warned at that time it would be the second round of investment that would be important. We are in that second round of investment and we are not getting our fair share of the investment. Nor are we getting our fair share of the jobs. This is one area in which the government took some pride. It said it would liberalize trade and that it would work for the benefit of Canada. This has not worked for the benefit of Canada over the whole period. There were some initial advantages. When you look at the benefits, you have to ask yourself whether there was an alternative to the Canada-U.S. auto agreement. There was an alternative. There is still the alternative that we could have created an indigenous automobile industry in this country rather than tie ourselves into the decision-making process of some other country or of the corporations of some other country.

[Mr. Saltsman.]

The second area I want to point out is that of farm machinery. There has been free trade in farm machinery for some 25 years, and even more with some particular kinds. What has been the consequence? How much benefit have we received from free trade in farm machinery? Certainly our farmers received some benefit. We are happy about that.

In terms of manufacturing and jobs that need to be created, we have not benefited from free trade in farm machinery. As development took place and new technology was introduced, it was not in Canada that the plants were built and the production took place, but across the border. Canadian companies simply moved across the border on one pretext or another in order to manufacture in the United States. We have not benefited from free trade in either one of those two areas.

I know everyone wants to be in favour of free trade, I no less than anyone else. However, unless there is an industrial strategy and a short-run solution plus a long-run solution, under the present conditions in Canada, and with our enormous level of unemployment, freer trade will only increase unemployment and do nothing to give us the jobs required in this country. We should not be negotiating on that basis, particularly since other countries of the world are not putting their cards on the table. They are not prepared to dismantle the various institutional barriers they have set up for Canadian goods. We have nothing to gain from freer trade at the GATT negotiations, and we have to state that plainly and bluntly.

● (1612)

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I would like to cover four or five items. I would like to begin with the items on pages 7 and 8 of the schedule relating to the new levy to be in effect as of July 1, 1979, on aircraft and aircraft engines. The item on page 7 is tariff item 44043-1 relating to aircraft, not including engines, and on page 8 it is item 44047-1 relating to aircraft engines. Incidentally, I think this provision has to be clearly registered: neither aircraft nor aircraft engines being made in Canada. They are now free unless they come under the general tariff, and I think it is fair to say that most aircraft producers have negotiated most favoured nation agreements with Canada, so that it is really most favoured nations we are concerned about. I repeat that the important thing here is that the aircraft and the engines we are talking about are aircraft and engines which are not made in Canada.

As I understand it, customs tariffs have two purposes, first to raise revenue, and second either to protect existing industry in Canada or to provide a climate where an industry could develop. To my knowledge the levy which is to be imposed is to be effective July 1, 1979. That is a year off, but still business people are thinking about the imposition of this tax a year hence, and they are thinking about the businesses in which they are involved.

As a result of talking to one particular group of people in my area I have reason to believe that while there may be anywhere from 6 to 12 firms which would be hit adversely by the imposition of this particular levy, there would probably be about 500 firms across Canada which would be adversely affected by the imposition of this levy of an extra 7.5 per cent. The figures were provided to me in an interesting way. We have to remember that the largest proportion of these particular items are imported from the United States and Britain. I think Allison engines and air frames are imported from the United States.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) has been borrowing money all over the country and all over the world. He has been getting lines of credit to sort out our Canadian dollar, but we are still faced with importing goods which are going to cost an extra 11 or 12 cents on the dollar. This bill does not deal with that, and that is one of the problems we are facing. There was a time when there was an advantage to importing. There was a time when we got one per cent or two per cent premium on the Canadian dollar. Importers now have to pay 11 or 12 cents more in order to buy U.S. dollars to settle their accounts. That is the first levy, 11 or 12 per cent. Let us use 12 per cent.

On top of that there is going to be a new customs duty of 7.5 per cent. That will bring the cost of any particular item up to about $1.20, or a 20 per cent increase on imported items. Our Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner) has praised our sagging dollar for what it does for our exports. No one can deny that it is helpful to exports. Unfortunately, we are an importing country too, and amongst the things we import are aircraft and aircraft engines. The cost is now $1.20, or a 20 per cent increase. On top of that there is federal sales tax of about 12 per cent, which takes us up to about $1.34, a 34 per cent increase. On top of that there is a 10 per cent excise duty, which takes us up to $1.48.

In other words, for every dollar's worth of aircraft or engines or engine parts imported into this country, the Canadian user will have to pay an extra 48 cents over the market price. There are a dozen firms in my area which are afflicted with this problem of a falling dollar in addition to the prospect of having to face a new customs duty, sales tax, and excise tax. I am not sure which comes on first, but a 48 per cent increase is an intolerable burden to be placed on small business.

If an aircraft suffers a broken axle on landing, or a damaged wing as it dips when it is coming in, those elements have to be imported, and the cost will be 48 per cent more. If those parts can be made in Canada, there is no problem. Today in the question period we were talking about a dreadful, fatal accident at Cranbrook airport. PWA now has to import a whole new aircraft. Let us say the cost will be $6 million. When 48 per cent is added to that, on a quick calculation I would say the cost will be something in the order of $8.5 million for an aircraft which otherwise would cost about $6 million. This new 7.5 per cent levy which is being considered for aircraft parts, air frames and aircraft engines will impose a needless burden on a growing industry of technicians who have developed self respect and who are contributing considerably to the economy of our country.

There is one other element of this industry which baffles me. I have been in correspondence with the ministry on this matter. By administrative ruling a distinction has been made between a licensed carrier, and the freedom with which he can import, and a service organization which is not a licensed carrier, and the imposition of the customs duty and sales tax on a rebatable basis.

The matter which was brought to my attention involved the importation of an aircraft engine on which a duty of $1,128.75 had to be paid. Customs said, "Don't worry, you will get it back". Customs just had to process it. Customs collected the money and paid it back, and that took two months. That is bureaucratic nonsense. If a licensed carrier can bring in a replacement part—for example, an engine—duty free, there is no reason in the world why a person who is not a licensed carrier should pay a duty which is rebatable. There is no sense in that at all. The only justification I can see is that it keeps some public servants employed going through papers. I do not think public servants enjoy being employed in that way. They prefer useful work. There must be some way of getting around this stupidity, and I should like to see efforts made to do so.

• (1622)

There is another item with which I should like to deal, one which is in the schedule today. I am writing to the ministers concerned with this matter, but I feel I want to mention it now. It has to do with the imposition of a customs duty on a drug product used in treating a chronic disease. Its purchase imposes a very heavy burden on those who use it. The drug in question is a megavitamin used in the treatment of multiple sclerosis—M.S., as it is popularly called, and with your permission, Mr. Speaker, I shall use the abbreviation as being somewhat easier to pronounce. Megavitamins are used as a treatment, and some people believe them to be a cure.

In fact I was talking today to a man who had been afflicted with M.S. and who has undergone a course of treatment at considerable expense. He has since returned to my riding—he is a music teacher—and is now cured, though he has to continue his treatment. I might add that before he left his doctor told him he would be confined to a wheelchair for the rest of his life. This man, like others in a similar position, has to pay customs duty on the drug product he uses. That is nonsense, Mr. Speaker. It does not create revenue of any significance for the consolidated revenue fund, but it does cause great hardship, particularly in areas where pharmacare does not cover the cost of vitamins. In British Columbia, for example, I gather that vitamins as a class of drug are exempted from the pharmacare program.

Let us consider just what is involved here, bearing in mind that a person who suffers from M.S. is likely to be confined to a wheelchair and is almost certain to be partially removed from the labour market. We are speaking of people who cannot in the normal course of things find work, unlike most of us here who might, for instance, become lumbermen if we were tough enough. But the M.S. sufferers cannot do this, and they are the people who are being asked to pay, in this case 17½ per cent according to one of the ratings by which megavitamins are allowed to enter this country. They are not made here in Canada, but if they come through on prescription in the normal channel they are subject to a duty of 17½ per cent under item 7-1100-1.

This particular item is the item under which all articles not listed elsewhere in the customs tariff are placed. If there is something which is not covered and it is felt the government should get something out of it, it goes into this category and is subject to a duty of 17½ per cent. There is no sales tax imposed in that case, but sometimes these pharmaceutical products enter the country through the post.

I myself find it strange that drugs, as a class of goods, should be permitted to enter Canada for collection by an individual without a doctor's prescription in his hand. But that is another matter and outside the range of today's debate, although I do feel that drugs should be importable either by a pharmacist, by a hospital or similar institution, or by a doctor, but not by a patient because, by permitting this, we are inviting people to bring in drugs in another way. Be that as it may, when these products are brought in through the mail they are sometimes subject to a duty of a different type because the man at the post office is not as familiar with the various schedules as the customs officer would be. So a duty of 10 per cent is imposed, plus a 12 per cent sales tax. The increase in cost in that case is of the order of 23 per cent. We should bear in mind that an M.S. victim is not readily employable and this megavitamin treatment may be costing as much as $115 a month. We could lighten this load if we were prepared to invent a classification—I would be prepared to produce a number for it if the question were in front of me—and say that entry would be "free—free—free."

One cautionary word. I believe there is division in the medical profession as to the curative power of megavitamins. Some doctors say this treatment is a cure, others say it is a palliative, or that the cure, if one is achieved, takes place in the mind of the receiver. That is an aspect with which I am not competent to deal. I do say that those who have found a cure and believe it to be due to the megavitamins they have taken, feel obliged to continue the treatment all their lives. So when a person has to pay an extra $35 to $250 a month for his treatment it is time we took steps to remove the customs duty from that item. It is not a matter of saying: well, they can always claim it under the pharmacare program. I have already dealt with that aspect. But that is not the point. The public should not have to pay this extra 17½ per cent or 23 per cent, depending upon the calculation used, just because it all comes out of the funds to which we all contribute.

● (1632)

I do not know whether it is the Department of Finance or the Department of National Revenue which determines what goes in and what comes out of the customs tariff schedule, but it is time to move toward dealing with this particular matter. Those people believe they have found a cure for multiple sclerosis by massive doses of megavitamins. Whether that medication is in the form of pills or capsules to be taken orally, or whether it is necessary to administer injections, does not matter. They believe a cure has been found, and they should not be subjected to the 17.5 per cent customs duty. I should like to see a change made in that area. Perhaps we could receive an amendment during committee of the whole.

[Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich).]

I hope some of my colleagues will speak in due course about the fruit and vegetable situation, as well as the need for regional and seasonal adjustments in tariffs to assist the small Canadian fruit producer. On the first day of spring for the past five or six years, I have managed to receive daffodils from my constituency which I made available to all hon. members. I have not done that only to boast about the west coast and its weather. The daffodils are a symbol of something more than the early arrival of spring on the west coast. They are a symbol of the season for fruits and vegetables maturing earlier in the west than elsewhere in Canada.

I cannot see why there should not be a tariff imposition in the west against Mexican tomatoes and California lettuce when Canadian tomatoes and lettuce come on the market. I suppose I could include strawberries and raspberries as well. This tariff imposition would have to move across Canada with the seasons. I do not see why this should not be done. If we can get our strawberries, raspberries, and asparagus from the west to meet the eastern market, why should non-Canadian grown products be allowed into the country? Eventually I hope the government sees the need for encouraging our agricultural producers so that they can live and thrive in the communities of their choice.

It is unbelievable, for example, that the tomato levy does not begin until the Ontario tomatoes come on stream. That levy should become effective when British Columbia tomatoes come on stream. That is what I am requesting. It is part of the symbolism behind the gesture I make on the first day of spring by distributing daffodils. This applies not only to fruit and vegetables, but it applies to flowers as well. Since flowers can be produced in this country, why should we not be protected against imported ones? Sometimes these imported flowers come from as far away as Europe. If these flowers can be grown in Canada, surely that industry should be protected against such invasions.

I should like to refer to Schedule IV of Bill C-48 which deals with item No. 97012-1. It reads as follows:

> Costumes or parts thereof, designed or decorated in a manner reflecting a specific ethno-cultural heritage.

This is a good item. I am glad it is included. The portion of duty payable as drawback is 99 per cent. It is an excellent provision, but why should it be limited to the use of bona fide ethno-cultural groups which are recognized as such pursuant to regulations established by order of the governor in council, and which require such costumes for the public manifestation of their ethno-cultural heritage, under such regulations as the minister may prescribe? It is a 99 per cent drawback, rebate or whatever. Why should it be limited to a group applying for this particular drawback? Why should an individual be restricted from applying? I speak with some feeling on this matter, because not long ago I ordered a made-to-measure kilt and was faced with customs duty. I look pretty smart in a kilt.

The one thing Scots did not bring to Canada with them was the ability to make kilts. If the material were available, kilts could be manufactured in Canada. Unfortunately the tartan cannot be woven here. One must remember it is a specialized industry. In any event, when I received my kilt I was unable to have the benefit of a drawback because I was an individual. Even if this particular measure had been in effect, I would not have received the 99 per cent drawback on the customs duty I was required to pay on that kilt. I believe the duty was approximately 25 per cent or 30 per cent. In any event, it was somewhat high. A 99 per cent drawback would have been fine. It would have left one per cent. I am prepared to go along with that.

Schedule IV refers to ethno-cultural groups. What about an individual from Greece—

An hon. Member: The Ukraine.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Yes, people from the Ukraine are affected by this as well. I was thinking of an evzone costume from Greece, which is similar to the kilt. If an individual from Greece wanted an evzone costume, why should he be required to rely on an ethno-cultural group to import it for him? I see the parliamentary secretary is somewhat amused by what I am saying. Perhaps he agrees with me. If schedule IV referred to an ethno-cultural individual, that would be satisfactory. I do not think there would be abuse of this provision. Unfortunately some groups would not be able to bring in costumes from their countries of origin. I am thinking of Latvians, Estonians, and Lithuanians. These people make their own costumes. I do not know if Ukrainians could import their costumes as individuals. The Latvians, Estonians, and Lithuanians make their own costumes because they brought that cultural heritage to Canada with them. I object to the word "groups" being included in schedule IV. Hopefully that idea can be converted into an individual right to import and secure the drawback.

I should like to refer to another item which is not contained in the bill or the schedule. I am referring to the announcement which was made by the Minister of Finance some time in November or December, 1976, at which time he imposed quotas on imported garments and clothing manufactured from man-made fibres. At that time I remember sitting in the chamber and thinking I knew at what he was aiming. He was aiming at articles of clothing made in Korea, Hong Kong, and China. These are made from man-made fibres rather than from natural fibres, and they are manufactured in countries where the wages are not as high as in Canada. These articles have been coming in and flooding the market.

● (1642)

The minister stood in his place and said he was imposing a set of quotas. I thought he had in mind quotas in respect of imported goods, by way of non-tariff items, and this probably refers to the reverse application of the bill. However, I do think this is relevant. It was my firm conviction, when I heard the minister, that he was aiming at the importation of materials and clothing of man-made fibres from those countries that are able to produce these goods much cheaper than we can here in Canada. However, within a week we found that the quotas were aimed at all types of clothing being imported, including woollens and cottons. This came to our attention as a result of letters we received from what you might call high fashion establishments that import fine woollen materials from Britain, silks from Italy and France, and perhaps cottons to a lesser degree.

This quota imposition gave rise to the creation of what I believe is called a high fashion clothing committee. Some of this importation takes place by firms here in Ottawa. I better not do any commercials by mentioning names, but some firms here do a lot of this importing. They too have been put on quotas based on 1967 imports. Some of these firms find that the acceptance of their quota applications takes so long seasonal sales are lost. Some of these quota applications take months to be cleared. When dealing with clothes for the summer and winter seasons you must place orders six or seven months in advance so that quantities can be made up. Some of these items are specifically made. Some Jaegers items are made in large quantities. These are the kinds of materials and items of clothing which have been subjected to the quotas, unexpectedly, I might add.

We never did really get the minister to admit what his prime objective or target was in this regard. We do not know whether he had in mind man-made fibres and cheap clothing from Korea, Hong Kong, China and other similar countries, or intended that the quotas should include all these other high fashion articles. In any event, all clothing was covered, and the administrative problems created for the merchants of these high fashion clothing are absolutely tremendous. First of all they must get their quotas approved, and then order the materials or the articles of clothing from overseas far enough in advance to obtain those items at the appropriate season. The difficulties created are absolutely unbelievable.

We in this House have heard about a series of difficulties businessmen face in dealing with the masses of forms the government asks them to fill out. My colleague, the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth (Mr. Kempling), has described one method of dealing with this multiplicity of government forms, and that is to stamp them all "non applicable". Anyone who is in the business of selling high fashion clothing is not able to do that. He would probably prejudice his future applications for quotas.

These people dealing with high fashion clothes have to take certain steps. They must sort out the items they want and hope that the quota allotment comes back in sufficient time to allow them to order these materials or items from overseas in order that they will still be in style. One of the factors involved in the marketing of high fashion clothing is style, and styles change from one season to the next. A merchant may receive a quota for this fall, and then when applying for a similar quota for the following season may not receive the same quota. How does he deal with that situation? Maybe the quota volume would not be applicable the following fall.

The quota system announced in November or December of 1976 became cumbersome beyond any intent on the part of the minister. At least I hope it was not his intention to create such a bureaucratic mess deliberately. If it was a deliberate attempt, no minister of the government has ever succeeded so effectively. It is my honest belief that the government did not intend that this should be the case.

It is my belief the government intended this to be a quota system aimed at cheap clothing and material coming into this country, undercutting the cost of Canadian products. The high fashion products of which I speak are just not made in Canada. In my area there is a great demand for these particular items of clothing, most of this demand comes from those who are visitors to this country. Very often these articles are not sold to Canadians. British woollens, for example, and items by Jaegers, are among the items of clothing I have in mind. They are imported from Great Britain mainly for resale to United States travellers in Canada. Those people find they can purchase these articles in Canada, at comparable prices. One of the problems facing these retailers, and it has been created by this quota system, is that they are unable to supply the market.

Was this system really intended to kill this market? There is a market of this nature in my area as well as in Montreal, Winnipeg, and here in Ottawa. Many specialty shops carry these high fashion items. I do not believe the minister was aiming at these items when he made the announcement.

Also included in these high fashion items are articles such as kilts and other ethnocultural costumes. It is my hope that we can amend these schedules in order to get around these obvious difficulties. However, there is nothing more complicated to deal with than tariff schedules, particularly in deciding where an item can be included. Perhaps the officials of the department, or the parliamentary secretary, could assist us in developing the appropriate numerology to cover these items.

I was pleased to note the parliamentary secretary making copious notes when I referred to a number of problems, including those in respect of aircraft, aircraft parts and aircraft engines. He was also making notes when I referred to the stupidity surrounding the making of these rebates and the fact that the rebates are made without interest.

● (1652)

The particular man who has had to buy an engine must pay his $1,100 customs duty on top of the cost of the engine, and may very well have had to go to the bank to raise the money for the purchase. He is not buying it for himself, but rather to fit into either a private aircraft or a commercial aircraft. The commercial aircraft may have farmed out the job to him. For example, it may have been a Pratt and Whitney jet engine for one of the PWA aircraft. Had they done it themselves there would have been no duty, but since the man I have been speaking of is doing it, he must pay duty and get it back on rebate because he is not a licensed carrier.

[Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich).]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to inform the hon. member that his allotted time has expired. The hon. member may continue with the unanimous consent of the House. Has he unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): In summary, there is the aircraft problem and the megavitamin problem. With respect to the megavitamin problem, I am appealing in the name of people who are afflicted with a frightful disease that immobilizes them and makes it impossible for them to fit into the work force. Thus, there are good grounds for eliminating the customs tax and the sales tax, if that is what it is, on megavitamins. This is, of course, under prescription. I am not saying there should be a blanket withdrawal of the customs tariff.

As has happened so often in the past, there is again an appeal for an imposition affecting seasonal and regional influences. It is fair to say that the Department of National Revenue and the Department of Finance have got hold of the idea that there is a seasonal problem, but they do not seem to have grasped the idea that there is a regional problem. This is because there is a strong agricultural base here in Ontario which gets the favoured treatment, because they believe that when the season has arrived in Ontario it has also arrived in the rest of Canada. Well, the season arrives in Ontario in some cases after it is over in other parts of the country. This is something that Ontario should get into its noodle, that there are other growing areas in the country. The west coast is an example of an area that is favoured by its early growing season.

The ethno-cultural problem, which I favour, should be removed from the group restriction and individuals should be able to import. The quota matter of high fashion clothing—and somebody in this House ought to be able to stand up and say, "That was not our intention and let's get rid of it"—where it affects imports does not concern the high fashion clothing industry we are talking about at home because they are just not made in Canada. There is other good clothing made in Canada, and I wear the clothing that is made here.

Mr. Lalonde: I hope you can say that.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): I certainly do. I look at the labels whenever I buy anything, whether it is food, clothing, and so on, and I buy Canadian and I hope a lot of other people do the same thing. However, when we are talking about high fashion clothing that is brought in to meet the tourist market, why should we not eliminate the customs duty that is imposed on it, and certainly eliminate the quotas?

I have had my say on those five items, and I thank the hon. members for extending my time.

Mr. Bill Kempling (Halton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, it is approximately two minutes to five, and with the concurrence of the House, may I call it five o'clock and begin my remarks at eight o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Madawaska-Victoria (Mr. Corbin)—Canadian Broadcasting Corporation—Request for extension of service to small communities; the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes)—Communications—Bell Canada contract with Saudi Arabia; the hon. member for Annapolis Valley (Mr. Nowlan)—Elections—Reason for Prime Minister's announcement.

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions and public bills.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Notice of motion, item No. 14, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). Shall the item stand?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions, whether anyone is here to confirm those discussions or not, to the effect that we might let all of the items stand down to No. 17, and that we might proceed with the resumption of that debate this afternoon.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Is it agreed by unanimous consent that items 14, 13, 3, 7, 9 stand?

Mr. Paproski: Yes, that is agreed.

* * *

NATIONAL CAPITAL COMMISSION

SUGGESTION TO ESTABLISH STANDING JOINT PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE

The House resumed from Monday, January 30, consideration of the motion of Mrs. Pigott:

That, in the opinion of this House, the National Capital Commission is not sufficiently accountable to those who live in the national capital region or the people of Canada, and exercises its powers in an arbitrary manner without adequate consultation with other levels of government and, that as a just step, there should be a permanent standing joint committee on the national capital region.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): The hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Urban Affairs (Mr. Harquail) who, I believe, spoke for three minutes the last day.

National Capital Commission

Mr. Maurice Harquail (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, before continuing with my remarks from January 30 of this year on motion No. 17, I would like to quote the motion:

That, in the opinion of this House, the National Capital Commission is not sufficiently accountable to those who live in the national capital region or the people of Canada, and exercises its powers in an arbitrary manner without adequate consultation with other levels of government and, that as a just step, there should be a permanent standing joint committee on the national capital region.

Continuing from where I left off on January 30, I find it strange that the hon. member would bring such a motion into this House given the fact that she is at the moment a member of the special committee of the House concerning itself directly with all aspects relating to the National Capital Commission. I am proud of the area that is comprised in the National Capital Commission, and it is something of which all Canadians can be proud. Indeed, any Canadians having had the opportunity to visit the national capital, I am sure are as equally impressed and proud of what we have as I am.

● (1702)

The hon. member who brought in this motion has had an opportunity to express her views on the day-to-day workings of the National Capital Commission in the special committee, and has done so in a very positive way. In the short time that she has been in this House she has made a worth-while contribution as a member of that special committee.

Considering the mandate of the special committee, however, the fact that the NCC is accountable to the government and is required to obtain authority from Treasury Board for its expenditures, and considering the position of the commission, there is no justification for stating that the NCC is not sufficiently accountable. Furthermore, considering the significant improvement in the intergovernmental climate and in the range of programs within the NCR—joint programs such as public transit, pollution abatement, core area revitalization, and environmental improvement—there is no justification for the assertion that consultation and co-operation with other levels of government are lacking.

The hon. member, it seems to me, might have taken the opportunity to withdraw her motion since she has every equal and good opportunity to have her voice and views heard at the special committee which has already accomplished a great deal in the deliberations that have been going on for some considerable period of time. As a matter of interest, in my view the special committee has all but completed its work. It still has to review the reports and material gathered from witnesses, however.

In her short time in this House the hon. member who moved motion No. 17 has brought forward some excellent suggestions to committee about the mechanism and method of approach to accomplish the things she is concerned with such as better control of or input into the day-to-day workings of the commission. I have put some views forward myself in the course of the committee discussions and I have seen and felt some very real frustration about the operations of the NCC because of its make-up—because of membership—because of those who have a greater interest within the National Capital Commission—the city of Ottawa,—the city of Hull—the province of Ontario—the province of Quebec and, indeed, the federal government.

It is my view that we must devise some means of bringing in recommendations for a policy that would be considered by all levels of government and that would become law. It is only through legislation that we will have an easy flowing, co-ordinated implementation of the plans of the National Capital Commission. If we are ever to see these plans implemented in a continuing, orderly fashion, there must be total agreement between all levels of government. As things stand today, the plans could reach a certain stage and then one of the parties concerned might disagree, be that the province of Ontario, the province of Quebec, the municipal governments or the federal government.

The special committee and the National Capital Commission have done good work, and in the coming weeks and months I hope we can agree on a formula that will ensure the smooth implementation of all their planning. When debate is concluded, whether in this House, in the provincial legislatures of Ontario and Quebec, or in the city councils, the point must come when discussion is halted once and for all and we move on the irrevocable implementation of the plans. It is my considered and humble opinion that that is the only way we will see real progress. This is the only assurance of continued action with respect to the implementation of those plans, hours, money, sweat, equity, and everything else that goes into hard work. The commissioners, representing the various provinces and two territories, have brought forward the views of all Canadians as to what they might like to see in order to expand and improve the National Capital Commission. The commission and its chairman have done good work, Mr. Speaker.

I fear that if we continue in the same vein as in the past there is the danger of disagreement, and so we will be back to square one and will have to face starting all over again. I am convinced that until such time as we can devise ways and means of reaching general agreement between all levels of government, and that until such time as we have suitable legislation, we will be subjected to the whim and last minute changes imposed by one level of government or the other.

I notice that the hon. member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mrs. Pigott) has just entered the chamber so I will briefly restate my comments when I enjoined her to withdraw her motion, and suggested that she might have considered doing that some time ago since she is a member of the special committee. I wanted to state once again, in her presence that she has made a worth-while contribution to the special committee.

Most of the work of the committee is complete. It only remains for the co-chairmen, Senator Marchand and the hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Stewart), to review the work that has been done, and for members from this House and from the other place to reach consensus on the official report to this House.

One order agreed to by members of the House was that the special committee should visit Washington. The visit was postponed but, as I understand it, the matter is under review and the organizers are consulting with officials in Washington regarding the details. I am under the impression that once this is completed, and once we have availed ourselves of the opportunity of consultations with the officials in that capital, we will then be in a position to have the special committee consider a full and final report to the House.

• (1712)

With respect to concerns that might be expressed by the hon. member for Ottawa-Carleton, as she knows there is a meeting tomorrow morning where the minister and the chairman of the commission, as well as other officials, will be in attendance to answer any and all questions at the time of the consideration of the main estimates. I would recommend to the mover of the motion and other members who have an interest in this matter that they avail themselves of this opportunity of being in attendance at the committee meeting tomorrow morning when the minister and the officials of the NCC will be quite prepared to answer their questions on the subject—

Mr. Paproski: He won't have time to talk about this subject.

Mr. Harquail: There is one other comment of interest concerning the NCC that I wish to make at this time. The National Capital Commission has something in the order of 1,000 employees and spends approximately $30 million a year. As I have stated earlier, it carries out its work in a very commendable and efficient fashion.

Mr. Paproski: It never pays its taxes to Ottawa.

Mr. Harquail: Apart from some of the commentary that is coming from someplace in this House, I would just conclude, Mr. Speaker, by stating that there is in existence in the mandate within the special committee—there are other means within the Treasury Board—means whereby the NCC is accountable in every respect to the government. I have no concern in this regard. I am sure other speakers who will follow me this afternoon will have something to offer.

[Translation]

Mr. Gaston Clermont (Gatineau): Mr. Speaker, during the private members' hour on January 30, 1978, we had before us the following motion which was introduced by the hon. member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mrs. Pigott) and which read as follows:

That, in the opinion of this House, the National Capital Commission is not sufficiently accountable to those who live in the national capital region or the people of Canada, and exercises its powers in an arbitrary manner without adequate consultation with other levels of government and that, as a just step, there should be a permanent standing joint committee on the national capital region.

Mr. Speaker, the act establishing the National Capital Commission has been in existence since 1958, that is for 20 years. During the period, a lot of things have changed and it is undoubtedly one of the reasons why in the early 70s—I believe it was in 1973—the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau) asked Mr. Douglas Fullerton, a former chairman of the National Capital Commission, to look into the structure and the administration of the National Capital Commission.

In 1975, Mr. Fullerton, through the right hon. Prime Minister, tabled his report in the Senate and the House of Commons and in July 1975—July 17, 1975, to be more exact—a Special Joint Committee on the National Capital Region was established and began to sit in 1975. Several witnesses appeared before that committee to make representations, including the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Danson) who was responsible for the National Capital Commission to parliament.

The National Capital Commission was represented at that time by Mr. Edgar Gallant who is now chairman of the Public Service Commission. The representatives of the Ottawa regional community, the Ottawa-Carleton regional municipality and many other witnesses appeared before that committee. In several representations, they blamed the National Capital Commission for interfering in areas which, according to certain witnesses, did not come under the commission, but rather under the provinces or municipalities within the region. They blamed the commission for its local planning process. Mr. Speaker, those who live on both sides of the Ottawa River know quite well that 15, 20 or 25 years ago, regional cities and municipalities had little or no urban planning facilities, and the National Capital Commission was even asked at times to lend them experts in that field.

● (1722)

Mr. Speaker, things are very different today on both sides of the Ottawa River. As I have just mentioned, the Ottawa-Carleton regional municipality is on the Ottawa side and the Outaouais regional community is on the Quebec side. Since the establishment of those two communities, it is much easier for the National Capital Commission representatives to have a dialogue concerning regional planning and other matters.

The National Capital Commission has also been blamed for massive land purchases on the Quebec side. I would like to talk about the Quebec side since I am more familiar with it, but even though certain people accuse the NCC of having made massive land purchases, we know that had the National Capital Commission not purchased this land it might have been bought by foreign interests, as happened in the Templeton area three or four years ago.

When the then representatives of the National Capital Commission came before the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates to explain their supplementary estimates, I drew the attention of the public to this matter but I received no reaction. Certain people seemed to think that when the National Capital Commission purchased land on behalf of the Canadian government, it was as if it had been a foreign government. Yes, the money used for the transactions came from taxpayers throughout Canada.

The motion blames the commission for not consulting the municipalities, the cities and the other associations and not co-operating with them. I would like to say that it is now easier to do so. The National Capital Commission has had four chairmen in the last ten years: Mr. Douglas Fullerton, Mr. Edgar Gallant, Mr. Pierre Juneau and the Hon. C. M. Drury.

At this point, I would like to make a digression. I was amazed by the comments of the hon. member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mrs. Pigott) when she spoke on January 30, 1978. She was referring to certain editorial comments at the time when Mr. Drury was appointed chairman of the National Capital Commission. But, Mr. Speaker, why express doubts when someone who has had political functions takes over other responsibilities? From the outset there seems to be some question as to the ability of this person to be able to meet the new challenges. I gladly join with my colleagues of Hull and Ottawa West with respect to the present incumbent of the chairmanship of the National Capital Commission, the Hon. C. M. Drury. I have known him for several years and he has been among other things Minister of Public Works. He is a resident of the Outaouais region and I am sure he will be able to meet the challenges of the new responsibilities he will be entrusted with.

Apparently, Mr. Speaker, the National Capital Commission is being blamed for various things. Yet we know that the National Capital Commission has also acted positively in a way which is to its credit, however I do not have enough time to mention them all in the course of the short period allotted to me. Nevertheless I hope that the population is familiar with the positive actions of the National Capital Commission as well as its accomplishments on both sides of the Ottawa River. I can think of one right now. Mr. Speaker, you are probably aware that before 1974 or 1975, when a civil servant or a passenger went from Buckingham to Ottawa, he had to pay twice. It was the same for a person from Ottawa who wanted to go to the Quebec side. Through the financial co-operation of the National Capital Commission and both communities, these passengers now have to pay only once.

The National Capital Commission also took part in road system improvements on the Quebec side on behalf of the Government of Canada, namely the widening of Maloney Boulevard and the building of the Portage and Draveurs bridges. I also hope that current problems over the construction of the water treatment plant in Templeton will be settled as soon as possible. The Government of Canada, through the National Capital Commission, is prepared to share the construction cost of this plant in Templeton.

Most everyone is aware of the existing problem. It was in 1977 that the prime contractor for the construction of the project, namely the Quebec government, called for tenders; the lowest bidder was a company with an office in Ottawa; for the reasons we are aware of, construction has yet to start. Again on Thursday, the Minister of State for Urban affairs, the hon. member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet), assured the Quebec Outaouais population that the federal government is still willing to help finance the construction of a sewage treatment plant. We know also that work has started on the regional main that will run from Aylmer to the plant at Templeton.

I mentioned that several witnesses appeared before the special joint committee for the national capital area. Mr. Gallant, who at that time was chairman of the National Capital Region, had tabled a document on the capital in the future. At that time it was considered a working paper. I for one opposed the development axis, on the Quebec side, being run towards the west only; other witnesses criticized the document saying the NCC seemed to concentrate its development on the two downtown centers, that is that of Ottawa and that of Hull. It seems that the NCC has since changed its mind.

Mr. Juneau, then its chairman, indicated that the main impact would be felt mainly toward the east, that is the city of Gatineau. It is understandable why I am pleased with that change of attitude. I have the honour of representing the riding of Gatineau here in the House of Commons. The most important community in that riding is the city of Gatineau. Another recommendation of the motion of the hon. member for Ottawa-Carleton advocates setting up a special joint committee. I share the views of my colleague for Hull (Mr. Isabelle) on that score. I am not in favour of a special joint committee but I would be agreeable to a new committee of the House of Commons. Or again, why not use the standing committees we already have? The National Capital Commission's experts could appear before the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs to explain their estimates or else we could refer its annual report to that committee or to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates for example.

Following an understanding between the House leaders, we could refer its annual report to one of those committees. But this should not be done when the committees are already examining estimates, but as you already know it is considered that by May 31 the estimates have already been referred back to the House. So these committees could put questions to the representatives of the National Capital Commission and even ask people from the outside, either representatives of the Outaouais regional community or representatives of the Ottawa-Carleton community to appear before them to give their point of view and explain to the members what aspects, in the actions of the National Capital Commission during the year covered by the annual report, invite criticisms.

I hope, Mr. Speaker, that the committee I mentioned earlier and which was established July 27, 1978 and reinstated December 13, 1977 will be back in operation. Because of events which may have been anticipated, the members of this committee had to go to Washington to get first-hand information on the operation of the federal district of Washington. But now that things are back to normal, Mr. Speaker, I hope that the committee will start operating again, that the members who had to go to Washington will be able to attend and that we will be in a position to submit a report to Parliament. But in order to do so, Mr. Speaker, the 90-day delay for submitting a report to the House of Commons as granted under a motion will have to be extended.

• (1732)

[English]

Mrs. Jean E. Pigott (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The hon. member for Gatineau (Mr. Clermont) said that we criticized the appointments of Mr. Drury and Mr. Juneau. The point was the politicization of the role of chairman of the National Capital Commission.

Mr. Juneau is a defeated candidate. Mr. Drury was a member of this House, but he had also been appointed a northern affairs commissioner. He is turning out to be a part-time chairman of the National Capital Commission. We are concerned about the fact that 40 per cent of the land holdings in this region—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. The hon. member has already spoken on the motion, and I would like her to come to her point of order.

Mrs. Pigott: My point is that we do not criticize Mr. Drury or Mr. Juneau personally. We criticize the way this government deals with the chairmanship of the National Capital Commission.

Mr. Ralph Stewart (Cochrane): Mr. Speaker, I have been a member of this House for almost ten years, and I am amazed at how the proceedings here are carried on. In spite of many of us having tried to effect changes by making suggestions and so forth, we are still going along in the same way. I give as an example the placing of business for private members' hour. We did not know until today that this subject was going to come up. It is the same thing every day. This is the private members' hour, and we insist on saying that we will suppress a certain amount of business or jump over a certain amount of business "at the request of the government". At the request of the government be damned. This is private members' hour, not a government business hour. I wish that could be understood by those who organize the business of the House.

Here we are in the national capital and the subject of the National Capital Commission is before us. Hardly anyone is in the public galleries. If the people of this area knew we were discussing this matter, I suggest that the galleries would be full because there is great interest in this subject among the people of this area. But how would they know we are discussing this when we did not even know that? We did not know it until this afternoon.

We have an order paper, which is an agenda. Every business and organization has an agenda. Our agenda is so vague that rarely do hon. members know what is going to take place throughout the day, much less during the private members' hour. On Mondays we discuss notices of motions, but on a given Monday which notice of motion? We pretty well have to wait until we come to the end of the wire before we know which notice of motion will come before us.

We have before us a perfectly good motion which is of interest to many people, yet the people of Canada do not have the opportunity to tune in or come to this chamber to hear the debate.

I do not know whether in my dying days as a parliamentarian I can make my voice heard. It certainly has not been listened to very much with respect to the procedures of this House, in regard to which we are still in the last century. We still have not brought our business up to date, in spite of the fact that even the Mother of Parliaments has gone well ahead of us. We remain more British than the British.

I should like to come now to the essence of the motion before us and to commend the hon. member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mrs. Pigott) for having brought it forward. It contains a number of things about which the majority of the people on the special committee over the past few years would have echoed the same sentiments. I am afraid I cannot agree with my hon. friend, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Harquail), who has taken the position that there is enough accountability for the National Capital Commission. I am afraid I cannot agree with that. I do not like to disagree with my hon. friend, but the fact is that he, being a parliamentary secretary and in those exalted realms, must now not criticize too much or even seem to criticize the government.

I do not think it is a question of criticizing the government when I say that there is not sufficient accountability on the part of the NCC. The government agreed to set up a special committee to look into these matters. Hon. members will recall that in the first session of this parliament such a committee was set up. Throughout that first session the committee did a great deal of work and, as the House knows, I have the honour to be the co-chairman of that committee.

The committee went through what I refer to as kitchen work. We did the kind of work which had to be done but which perhaps was not very interesting to some hon. members because of the fact that it was tedious, laborious and repetitious. However, it was the kind of work which had to be done before we could go on to consider anything else. We had to listen to briefs. We had to read over many briefs and hear the points of view of as many groups and individuals as possible in order to apprise ourselves of what will be the need over the next 25 years or longer in the national capital area.

We have gone over this, and it is old history now but, unfortunately, during the second session the committee was not called together again. As a result a great deal of time was lost. Finally, during this present session we were called together again. The committee has tried to pick up where it left off and to review what had been studied in the first session. As a result, as has been mentioned by some of our colleagues here today, the committee is at work and is getting ready to prepare a report. In my view we could have used a lot more time in that committee. For this reason I rather like the idea of having a permanent committee to consider matters regarding the National Capital Commission, as suggested by the hon. member whose motion is before us.

I think it is essential to have a continuous process whereby the National Capital Commission reports to this House. This, of course, pre-supposes that the national capital remains in its present form or in a form similar to its present form. In our committee part of our work is to look at the whole governmental structure. We would like to consider, for example, whether the national capital area should be truly a national capital district independent of other governments. We would like to study whether it should be a state or a province and whether it should be represented by local politicians.

● (1742)

These are questions which were before us and these are the questions we wanted to consider. If we are talking about the National Capital Commission in its present form, there is no doubt in my mind that it should report to parliament on a regular basis. In the past, whenever NCC representatives came before us only a perfunctory examination was made of the commission's affairs. There has been very little accountability to the elected representatives.

The hon. member for Ottawa-Carleton mentions in her motion that the powers exercised by the NCC have been arbitrary. I would not say that the NCC acts in an arbitrary way and simply leave it at that, but I will say that the NCC has acted in arbitrary ways in the past. I am not saying it continues to do so. Indeed, as a result of the establishment of our committee and of the fact that awareness of what the NCC is all about has become so much greater, there has been an increased degree of co-operation and less arbitrary action on the part of some public servants. However, there have been many instances in the past of arbitrary action by the commission. Such cases were brought home to us by various witnesses who appeared before the committee.

When the special committee continues its work over the several months in which this parliament continues to exist, those who have not had the opportunity to visit another capital will be able to do so. As has been mentioned, the committee was to have visited Washington but the trip had to be cancelled because of work here in the House. I would hope that in the near future members who have not done so will avail themselves of the opportunity which will be given them to visit Washington and examine the structure there.

Although Washington is a national capital in the true sense, independent of other governments, there are some similarities to our situation here. The federal district is set up independent of other governments, but in practice it is not really independent. One of the things I admire greatly is the consultative process they have adopted. They have set up what is called a council of governments—they refer to it as COG. It is a voluntary organization inasmuch as people serve on it without remuneration. Through this mechanism the viewpoints of various groups in the community can be put forward on a continuing basis.

I have always believed there should be much greater input from elected representatives whether of this House or of other governments. It seems to me that if the people have chosen certain individuals to represent them, those individuals should be given the opportunity to express their points of view on the governing of the national capital as well as with regard to other matters coming within their mandate.

I commend the hon. member for bringing this subject before us for debate. It could be said, as was said by the hon. member for Restigouche, that this is the kind of subject we should be discussing in committee. But what is wrong with bringing it into the House as well? It does not interfere with the work of the committee in any way. In fact it might have a beneficial effect in calling the attention of more people to the importance of what is going on in the national capital committee. It is not the kind of motion to which one says yea or nay, and for this reason I do not know whether it would do a great deal of good if it were to come to a vote. But whether we agree with everything in the motion or not, we should all realize that a body such as the national capital commission has got to be accountable to the elected people one way or another. And evidence has come before us to show that certainly in the past this has not been the case.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): Hon. members on both sides, I am sure, will agree with that. I would certainly like to see this subject pursued further, if not here, then in our committee. Let us examine it more deeply and try to produce a formula which will please the various points of view. I know there are some who think we should establish a federal district independent of the provinces. Then there is a whole range of opinions, even those who favour maintaining the status quo. Surely there must be some way in which we could find a compromise which would be satisfactory to the majority so that a more efficient way of running the national capital is found.

It seems to me that with the numbers of governments presently involved it is not possible to have a smooth running capital, an opinion which coincides with that of Mr. Fullerton who in his study said that we are overgoverned. It is time we found a way of cutting down the number of governments involved. Some sort of consultative process is the answer. I always find it amazing that when a meeting is held and a decision is taken with only half the members present, those who are absent are upset about it. But if the same decision is made with all the members present, they are all happy about it. This simply means that people like to be consulted. They want to be able to make their contribution. This is true of the national capital committee just as it is of an other committee or organization.

I commend this to you, Mr. Speaker—that the motion presented by the hon. member for Ottawa-Carleton be accepted and that we refer the content of it to the special committee so that we, in committee, may get on with the job.

[Mr. Stewart (Cochrane).]

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Frank Maine (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, in response to some of the issues raised by the hon. member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mrs. Pigott) on January 30, 1978, may I say that I understand she has received an extensive briefing by the staff of the commission. I should like to point out that conditions in the so-called work ghettos supposedly created by the federal government are improving daily, in particular in the Hull area where the opening of the Place du Centre and of the skating rink at Place du Portage greatly humanized the downtown area.

● (1752)

The National Capital Commission has made a major effort to respond to the concerns expressed by the Auditor General. As to the perceived differences between the planning proposals of the regional municipalities and those of the National Capital Commission, it has become clear that many potential issues have disappeared because of the changed growth prospects for the area. Now we know the capital area will not grow as rapidly as in the past. Continuity of the National Capital Commission management has been provided in part by the composition of its advisory committee on planning, design and property with Canada-wide representation.

I should like to reply to several aspects raised in the motion by outlining the accountability of the National Capital Commission, thereby refuting the suggestion that it is not sufficiently accountable. The National Capital Commission is, under the terms of the National Capital Act, the agent of the Government of Canada, charged with the responsibility to prepare plans for, and assist in, the development, conservation and improvement of the national capital region in order that the nature and character of the seat of the Government of Canada may be in accord with its national significance.

Since the NCC is not a local government, it is not directly accountable to a local electorate but, rather, is accountable through the government to parliament, which must approve the commission's capital budget.

Nation-wide input into policymaking by the NCC is ensured by its commissioners, who are chosen from every province in Canada. Strong local representation on the commission is provided by the requirement that, in addition to members from the provinces of Ontario and Quebec, at least two members be chosen from the city of Ottawa, one from the city of Hull, as well as two members from municipalities other than Ottawa and Hull within the National Capital Region.

All of the commission's significant expenditures must be approved by Treasury Board and governor in council, which ensure the strict accountability of the NCC to the government for its financial transactions.

The government's recently issued white paper on Crown corporations outlines a series of proposals which essentially seeks to clarify and develop the relationships between Crown corporations, the government and parliament in the areas of policy and financial control, direction and accountability. The proposals also seek to clarify the roles of the governor in council, the appropriate minister, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Andras) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien), as well as the managers of Crown corporations. These proposals maintain intact the links of accountability, control and direction to the government and parliament and leave untouched the present situation whereby Crown corporations are ultimately accountable to parliament through a minister of the Crown representing the ministry as a whole. The proposals, in clarifying and making more effective these relationships, are more of an evolutionary than revolutionary step. As applied to the National Capital Commission, these proposals should lead to a clearer relationship between it and parliament, and therefore an even higher degree of accountability than exists at present. The National Capital Commission has reviewed the white paper and is in agreement with its aims and objectives.

There remains a need for a certain degree of independence of the commission from the regular administrative structures of the federal government, commensurate with its status as a Crown corporation. This independence assists in the business-like management of the commission's extensive real estate holdings, as well as ensuring the continuity essential to planning and developing the capital. Thus it enables the commission to maintain a long term perspective on the development, conservation and improvement of the national capital region.

I should like to say a few words concerning the aspects of intergovernmental co-ordination in the national capital region, which is another area criticized by the motion. The new spirit of co-operation between the federal government and local authorities in the national capital region is witnessed by the meeting recently held between federal cabinet ministers, the chairman of the NCC, and the executive committee of the regional municipality of Ottawa-Carleton, which dealt in a frank manner with the thorny question of grants in lieu of taxation. The meeting participants were all agreed, while differences might remain, that considerable progress had been made toward a resolution of this question. The meeting is to be repeated three times a year to discuss matters of mutual concern.

In spite of the obvious difficulties inherent in relations with the government of Quebec at this time, the NCC is confident that important projects, such as the sewage treatment plant and Quebec road network, will proceed in the near future. The National Capital Commission also recently concluded an agreement with the city of Hull to exchange various parcels of land to permit the joint development of certain federal and city projects, such as the development of Parc Fontaine and the completion of the Parc Linéaire. The NCC is working closely with other levels of government and the general public in the planning and development of many projects, such as LeBreton Flats, Rideau Centre, and the Gatineau Park development plan. The commission has participated in the regional municipality of Ottawa-Carleton's rapid transit study, and there are plans to conclude an agreement with RMOC to reserve certain of its parkway corridors for the construction of rapid transit facilities.

Negotiations have been completed between the commission and the two regional transit commissions for an agreement which will provide them with a subsidy of $1.3 million in 1978. The NCC is co-operating with RMOC and the Commercial and Industrial Development Corporation of Ottawa-Carleton in a study of ways of softening the impact of the decentralization program and the Hull relocation program on downtown Ottawa.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but the hour provided for the consideration of private members' business has now expired. It being six o'clock p.m., I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock p.m..

At six o'clock the House took recess.

● (2002)

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

COMBINES

TABLING OF REPORT OF ROYAL COMMISSION ON CORPORATE CONCENTRATION

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I understand there has been an order of the House to revert to motions at this time for the purpose of allowing the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) to table a document.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), under the provisions of Standing Order 41(2) I should like to table copies in both official languages of the report of the Royal Commission on Corporate Concentration.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

CUSTOMS TARIFF

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Chrétien that Bill C-48, to amend the Customs Tariff and to amend an act to amend the Customs Tariff, be read the second time and referred to committee of the whole.

Mr. Bill Kempling (Halton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I should like to participate in this debate on Bill C-48, to amend the customs tariff. If one were just to read the headlines of newspapers during the last week, one would see the dilemma facing many people in the business world today, particularly those involved in manufacturing. For example, if a person read the Toronto Star he would see the headline "350,000 jobs may be lost at world trade talks." There is then a statement made by some labour leaders indicating that six of them are flying to Geneva next week for a meeting with our chief negotiator, Mr. Rodney Grey, in order to discuss what they perceive to be a disaster for manufacturing industries in Canada.

If you read the Ottawa Citizen of a day later you will note that the man who arranged for these labour leaders to go to Geneva was Mr. Warren. The article urged Canadians not to fear the GATT Conference. This represents the centre of the problem or the dilemma they are facing. The chief negotiator suggests that we should not be afraid of what is going on at GATT, but the labour leaders are not convinced and find it necessary to send these people to Geneva to talk with our negotiators there and to determine what they can do to present their case.

We had a meeting with Rodney Grey, our chief negotiator. I believe it was the first meeting he has had with parliamentarians since he has been at Geneva. This meeting was arranged by the minister's parliamentary secretary, the hon. member for Stormont-Dundas (Mr. Lumley). We very much appreciate the efforts he made in having Mr. Grey appear at a luncheon meeting with members of the committee of finance of this House.

Mr. Grey did not tell us very much. The meeting reminded me very much of a meeting some members of my party had with Jake Warren a couple of months ago. At our request he met with a few of us. We heard a lot of words but nothing very much that was new. He spoke for about 45 minutes and answered questions for about 15. He gave overly long answers, and then unavoidably departed to attend a very urgent meeting at some other place.

That is an example of the kind of contact we have had about this matter. I can remember standing in this House on numerous occasions asking various ministers of finance—and there has been quite an array of them in the last few years—about what is going on at Geneva. They have all given answers which would lead us to believe that Mr. Grey and his officials who are at Geneva conducting the negotiations will look into matters. The ministers have told us they cannot give us details because these things are secret. The government feels the details are secret and they do not wish to give away our trade positions, thus letting the world know what we are doing.

● (2012)

When Mr. Grey came here we asked him about these negotiations, how he was going about them and what he was doing, and he said: "Really I do not do anything but negotiate and the points are all given to me by the Minister of Finance." This is typical of some of the confusion that goes back and forth. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien), his people and various ministers have told us that while Mr. Grey and his officials are doing the negotiating they cannot tell us very much. Mr. Grey, however, tells us he takes his instructions from the Minister of Finance.

This confusion is causing a great deal of concern in the business community. Indeed, several people I know in the business community have approached me, as they have various members of my party, and I am sure some members on the government side, and asked us outright what is going on at Geneva. They have been over there and all they get is a press briefing. I talked to the president of a large multinational corporation, and he could not find out what was going on in the Canadian negotiations. He finally decided the best approach would be for him to go to his parent company in the United States and ask them if they could find out from the American negotiators what the Canadian negotiators were doing. This is a ridiculous way of going about it.

When we read stories that agricultural exports would skyrocket but machinery and equipment industries would be a casualty, this has to be of concern to the manufacturing industries. That is the point I want to make here today. It is a terrible game that is being played and it is much like Catch 22. The minister says that Mr. Grey and his people are doing the negotiating and Mr. Grey says that he is only carrying out the instructions of the Department of Finance.

You would have to ask, in the face of that, why these six labour leaders are going over to Geneva. What is the purpose of their going there? Where is the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro)? He must certainly know what is going on and what the Minister of Finance instructs the negotiator in Geneva to do. Would it not be more logical for the Minister of Labour to arrange a meeting with these labour leaders and somebody in the Department of Finance so as to have their fears allayed? But no, the game is played and Mr. Warren, who tells us not to be worried about what is going on at GATT, arranges for these people to go over to Geneva when it all could have been looked after here in Canada. As is usual, the left hand does not know what the right hand is doing, but that is nothing new.

There is a real crisis in our manufacturing industry, and it stems from the introduction of the DISC program in the United States. Under that legislation, an American corporation taking part in the program has the facility of being able to retain 50 per cent of its earnings on exports tax free at the pleasure of the President. In fact, what the President has done and what the United States government has done is provide interest-free, tax-free working capital in the form of tax funds to American corporations. The difficulty is that Canada has never really responded to that legislation. We have no alternative for it, and as a result over a period of years we have seen a number of companies that were in Canada and manufacturing here look at the DISC program and the relative tax breaks the United States have over Canada and decide that their best bet is to move their plant to the United States and take advantage of this program.

When the hon. member for Stormont-Dundas and myself were down in Washington in January we heard the American government officials say that the President would like to cancel the DISC program. The President may, but whether the Congress will cancel it is something else again. At a time when Canada is looking for more investment from the United States, when we and the Americans are seeking more employment and they are seeking to wipe out a trade deficit, whether they are going to upset the DISC program remains to be seen.

Another program that will have as much impact as the DISC program is the tax proposals being put forward by President Carter in which the profits of overseas subsidiaries of American corporations are taxed in the United States. The object here is to repatriate those companies and those jobs back to the United States to create more employment there and help their trade deficit problem. So the net effect of the DISC program and this new proposal of President Carter's, if it is accepted, will be the loss of jobs to Canadians.

There is a further problem which will affect Canada and it is a serious one. It concerns a case presently in the U.S. supreme court that has to do with tariffs, and it could drastically affect Canada. This is the Zenith television case, and the Germans, French and Japanese call it a "trade time bomb" because that is how critical it is. The details behind this case are somewhat complicated but I think I can simplify it. In most western countries and in Japan there is a value added tax or a retail sales tax, and if you buy something you pay the tax on it. But if you export that product you get a rebate on the tax you have paid. What Zenith has said to the United States tariff board is that this rebate in fact is a bounty. This is the wording that appears in their 1895 tariff act.

The case is so critical that Zenith appeared before the tariff board and they turned them down. They then appealed and the matter went to a higher court where it was upheld unanimously by the three judges. The treasury department in the United States then appealed that decision and it has gone all the way up to the supreme court where it has been heard by the nine judges there. What will it do to Canada and these other nations if it is upheld by the supreme court? It would mean there would be a countervailing duty of 12 per cent in the United States upon any product of which a 12 per cent sales tax is charged in Canada. It would mean that most Japanese products—it does not really concern us, but it is all part of the same thing—such as Japanese sporting goods, would bear a 30 per cent countervailing tariff, cameras 16 per cent, French luxury items 33 per cent, wine 17 per cent, most German products 11 per cent, the Netherlands' products 18 per cent, and goods from Canada 12 per cent.

We can sit back and say the Americans would not allow this to happen. I can tell the House that U.S. Steel has filed a brief in the supreme court as has Ford Motor Company. U.S. Steel has said, "Go ahead, we would like you to put a countervailing duty on European steel coming in from the common market countries because that is one of our difficulties; we cannot compete with the rebate they get when they export that steel." The Ford Motor Company has asked for an exemption from their own foreign subsidiary shipping back to the United States, but the Ford company has urged the supreme court to retain or apply a countervailing duty against cars manufactured by other than U.S. companies.

I have mentioned these concerns because these are the things that businessmen are reading about. This, plus the general confusion in the country regarding GATT, our tariff situation and customs, is part of the difficulty we face. It is part of our employment problem, part of our inflation problem and part of our trade problem. This is one of the difficulties we must address in the months ahead.

● (2022)

I know there are some businessmen in the House but I do not know how many have had to sit around a board table and try to make decisions on situations such as this. As the article I referred to pointed out, the machinery and equipment business is supposed to go down the drain. Last year there was a trade deficit of about $4 billion in general machinery. That is, we imported $4 billion more that we exported. In other words, Mr. Speaker, there is a $4 billion market in general machinery available to us. I want to know why something is not done about it. It is a very significant market.

Last weekend I read an article which said that Westinghouse and General Electric are fighting over the light bulb market of $200 million and are spending millions of dollars to produce a new shaped bulb. It is a $200 million market and they are ready to spend millions to get it. What I am talking about is the $4 billion machinery market in Canada.

In white goods alone—washing machines, dryers, refrigerators and so on—our deficit last year was $970 million. We imported $970 million more in that line than we exported. That, too, is a very significant market and I suggest we could make a good proportion of those products in this country. There is no need to have one million unemployed. The application of the customs tariff is very uneven across the country.

Some months ago a group of people from Winnipeg came to Ottawa to complain that they were paying a different rate of duty on automotive products imported from the United States from Ontario, which in turn was paying a different rate from Quebec.

At any business convention the conversation is about differences in trading practices. The application of tariffs is uneven not because of any tomfoolery but because of different interpretations of the act. That is why the businessmen came from Winnipeg to talk about it. Because of the tariff on their product, they were losing business to people in Ontario who could bring the same thing in from the United States through Windsor or Niagara Falls at a different rate. That is not right, Mr. Speaker.

The Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce set up a machinery board to give remissions on duty and we have been having difficulties with it. I could speak for four hours on the misapplication of the act. A duty is charged on a product because someone says they are manufacturing it in Canada but the board does not check back later to see whether they are still manufacturing it. Sometimes it is only a few months before the manufacturer ceases production but the duty is still applicable. This is the sort of nonsense that goes on.

I am just appalled at the lack of co-operation and information given to members of parliament in regard to the GATT negotiations. Surely at least one of the recent ministers of finance must have felt that it was important to have the support of this House on such a complicated matter. If members were well briefed they could talk to businessmen in their communities about the GATT. We are all invited to speak to business seminars around the country—at least members of my party are. I do not know about members on the other side; people do not want to hear from Liberals. There are no politics in tariffs. We should be able to explain our negotiating position to the business world, but all that the last four ministers of finance have given us is mumbo-jumbo.

When Mr. Grey went to Geneva, a cocktail party was given for him. He was reckoned to be the greatest thing since sliced bread. I think he turned out to be the best civil servant for skiing in the whole country. The government has lost the opportunity to inform the business community where we stand on GATT. Every time I go back to my constituency I am confronted by businessmen asking about what is going on at the negotiations.

When I was a boy a company in my area made vacuum cleaners. Not one vacuum cleaner is manufactured in Canada today. That factory in Hamilton employed 1,500 people. When we think of the number of houses built in the last 25 or 30 years, the broadloom used in those houses, in factories and offices, we must ask why not one vacuum cleaner is manufactured in Canada today. The last company to manufacture them closed last spring because its American parent underbid on a large order to a chain outlet in Canada. That is what is happening.

Business people say that when they talk to officials in Ottawa they are told that one of the casualties of the GATT negotiations will be the electrical appliance business. Yet we have a trade deficit of $970 million and what are we doing about it?

Then there is the matter of communications equipment. Even with all the crying the NDP does about Northern Telecom, there is a deficit in communications equipment of $1,200 million. There is hardly any group of products in which we do not have a sizeable trade deficit. I think the smallest deficit is about $50 million for railway equipment. Everything else is in the hundreds of millions or billions of dollars. To me that indicates a market. If you talk to any businessman about business he will ask what the market is, and if you say there is a billion dollar market he will get pretty excited.

I get pretty discouraged, Mr. Speaker, about our one million unemployed when I think of our negotiators, many of whom have had no business experience whatsoever. If they have a callus on their hand it must have been transplanted. Officials in the Department of Finance tell us that this industry must go and that industry must go. All they can talk about is economies of scale. That has been the buzz word. In the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce the buzz word is "rationalization"—you have to rationalize everything.

● (2032)

In 1972 the minister of industry, trade and commerce of the day was talking about the sectoral approach. In 1973, 1974, 1975, 1976, 1977 and the other day we heard it again. That period encompasses four ministers and six deputy ministers, and we are still studying the sectoral approach to our industry. My God, they are negotiating in Geneva on a sectoral approach—

An hon. Member: It is obscene.

Mr. Kempling: It is obscene, but not in the way the hon. member is suggesting. That is the difficulty that we have. We have people who are making these decisions at a high level in the bureaucracy who really do not know. I have sat on boards of directors and I have sat with businessmen during the past two or three years while the GATT negotiations have been heating up. These negotiations are about three years behind time; they are about three years late from when they should have been completed.

I have listened to these businessmen and they have said that they do not know whether to expand their plants or not. They have said that they have been confronted by a terrible dilemma by listening to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Andras) when he suggested last summer in Toronto that if people did not get off their butts and invest that perhaps the government would invest in industry. A little later someone said to me: "I heard the Prime Minister tell us that the difficulty with Canadians is that we are spending too much." Then the Minister of Finance came along and told us to spend more in his last budget. At the same time these negotiations are continuing in Geneva. People do not know whether to expand, to contract, to go into business, to buy more machinery, or to wait until the GATT negotiations are completed, if they are ever completed. They just do not know what to do. That is all part of the floating and bobbing and weaving that is going on in our economy today. I think it is a shame that we cannot have more precise information.

We must consider as well the non-tariff barriers which we know are a difficulty in Geneva. This time bomb trade I was talking about earlier is a sort of non-tariff barrier. There are others and we know they are all very difficult. Mr. Grey said that there were not too many difficulties with the tariffs per se, the difficulties were with the non-tariff barriers. We can see a growing feeling of protectionism in the European countries. I would have to be convinced that the Europeans will open up their agricultural markets to the Canadians. I will never believe that.

Some time ago I did a study when I had nothing better to do of the agricultural distribution in France. After going through that exercise I can assure the House that if France ever gives way and allows their agricultural market to open up to Canadians, then it will be a raw day.

We have to look ahead now and consider what will happen if there is an impasse at Geneva. Where do we go from there? Do we continue or form some sort of broader trading agreement with the United States whereby we can try to even up some of our tariffs and divide some of the production? Should we renegotiate the auto pact or have another close look at the auto pact? Maybe we can extend it into some other area. We will have to examine that. While a lot of people believe that something will come out of the GATT conference, the current opinion that I have gathered from people who have been there is that if there is any settlement made it will be a political settlement. In other words, political leaders will have to knock the heads of people at the meetings and say: "This is the way it is going to be". Of course, the political leadership we have in this country places Canada in a great deal of jeopardy.

Those are concerns we have as we progress with Bill C-48. Later I will go into this bill clause by clause and discuss some of these individual items. No doubt this bill will pass in due course. There seems to be no reason to hold it up. However, this is a good opportunity for us to express our concerns. We can indicate to the government opposite that there are people in this House who are knowledgeable in the trade field and who should be brought into the trade discussions. We should be told more of what is going on so that we can do our job effectively as members of parliament and also make a contribution to those negotiations.

Mr. Ron Huntington (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, like my colleague the hon. member for Halton-Wentworth (Mr. Kempling) I take this opportunity to put on the record a few comments concerning Bill C-48, an act to amend the customs tariff.

These hours in the history of Canada are very important. I wonder if many Canadians realize the onus and the weight that is on the shoulders of the negotiators in the Tokyo Round of the Geneva General Agreement on Trade and Tariffs as it concerns the standard of living that is ahead for all of us in Canada. The current GATT negotiations which have been in place since 1973 are probably one of the most fundamental and important negotiations that are going on in Canada's history, and will determine well into the next decade the standard of living and the nature that Canadian life will take. They will determine the extent of growth in the g.n.p. and, in general, the position that we will be taking in the industrialized world. They involve a progressive dismantling of barriers to trade and will establish the framework in which such trade will be conducted.

We are negotiating tariff levels, a proposed elimination, and a reduction of barriers. We are negotiating proposed codes of international conduct. We are concerned about the technical standards that are imposed by the various nations negotiating in GATT. I might say this involves about 95 per cent of the trading world. It is only the People's Republic of China, the U.S.S.R. and a few Middle East countries that are not involved in these negotiations. We are dealing with and are concerned with government procurement policies, both here and in other countries. We are dealing with basic rules involving subsidies.

My colleague the hon. member for Halton-Wentworth (Mr. Kempling) described the DISC program in the United States. I know personally of transport subsidies which interfere with proper trade. Countervailing tariffs are another matter which give us very serious concern in these negotiations.

The bureaucrats who carry this weight in the negotiations have talked extensively, I understand, with many associations in Canada. The input into these negotiations has been pretty much one way. They have talked to various associations in agriculture, the Horticultural Association, the Canadian Food Processors Association, the Canadian Federation of Agriculture and the Canadian Manufacturers' Association. All of these groups have had their input into the matters that we need to discuss in these negotiations. There have been interdepartmental committees at work. As I said, I do not think there is anything going on that will have a greater effect on our lives tomorrow and well into the eighties and nineties.

The tentative lists of these agreements have been tabled in Geneva. They indicate the specific concessions in each field that each country wants to be negotiated. These include both tariff and non-tariff measures. We are told that these lists should remain confidential. I question the validity of that. I am sure the negotiators on behalf of the industries in the United States are not kept from further input during these trade-off sessions. I do not know why the people and industry of Canada should be held under a cloak of secrecy in matters as important as the GATT negotiations now going on.

● (2042)

One of the serious criticisms that has to be made is the one way or diode nature of the inputs. A lot went in. Nothing is feeding back. The people in the industry of Canada who are vitally concerned, and the associations vitally concerned, should be part and parcel of the amendments to these negotiations. I would like to see us improve in matters of this importance the consultative process in the country so that we can share in, and perhaps remove some of, the burden that is on these negotiators.

I spent many years in the farm community. One example was brought to my attention by consumers in my constituency whom you would think would normally be concerned about the purchasing power of their spending dollar. Their priority concern is the condition of Canadian agriculture. That was quite a surprise.

I started to read up on this subject and the plight of Canadian agriculture, particularly the fruit and vegetable industry. I found that the former minister of finance, twice removed, was expressing concern on this point. He pointed out the diminishing level of protection against imports, particularly as it affected fruits and vegetables. He also stated that the existing level of tariff structure could not provide sufficient protection for our agriculture industry.

This problem started in 1971. It did not affect just agriculture. Something fell into place. Something started to happen whereby the end products of Canadian manufacturers started to go into a strong deficit position. When a trend starts in 1971 and the government hopes and dreams it will be cyclical right up until today, when there is no chance of that problem being cyclical in fact, then there is something seriously wrong.

Can the government give us any answers as to what started going wrong? Was it the non-tariff trade barriers put in place by the United States? Was it DISC? Was it the Benson tax act that started to remove the decision-making base for Canadian industry and Canadian businessmen? What started to happen in 1971 that has delivered us into the very serious trade deficit position we now have?

As the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth stated, there is about $970 million worth of white goods in a deficit position because they are no longer being manufactured in Canada. You would think that in the heartland of the industrial sector of Canada technology could be put into place. Surely there are some investment incentives to keep that type of industry and work force going in Canada. However, that is not the way it is. Something is tragically and basically wrong in this country.

For the past year I have been deeply involved in this House trying to point out, not only before an anti-dumping tribunal but to the House, that it is not just a bilingual problem in Canada that is causing our unity problems, it is a regional problem. Where I live on the west coast, there is proximity to the Pacific rim trading countries such as Japan. We trade north and south with the west coast of the United States. We deal with all of the Asian countries. It is a market unto itself.

You cannot look at Canada from the Atlantic Ocean to the Pacific Ocean as a single market. You cannot put in place anti-dumping tribunal rulings to protect a single producer here in the industrial heartland of Canada. At no time we on the west coast fought against or argued against proper anti-dumping procedures. However, some markets are injured and others are not. When we have a blanket policy putting in an anti-dumping barrier, such as on wide flange steel beams, we do irreparable harm to the steel fabricating industry on the west coast. We threaten 1,500 to 2,000 jobs there. The normal, traditional, historic market for the steel fabricating industry in British Columbia is lost. Where does it go? It goes into the heartland in the central industrial sector of Canada. We say that just is not fair. That type of law or legislation is obsolete. Somehow or other we have to get the ear of the government about this. Otherwise it will flair up into a situation that will compound the problems that Canadian confederation faces today.

[Mr. Huntington.]

We do not go against GATT if we recognize there is more than one market in Canada. In fact, if GATT is there for the purpose of liberalizing trade and if we are to acknowledge there are markets in Canada where injury exists and at the same time a market in Canada where injury does not exist, we are then within the spirit of GATT and need no amendment to it. Surely we are within the liberalization principles of GATT.

I urge those on the government side who are responsible for this regional inequity to hear the call from the west. Canada cannot continue to exist strictly for centralist industries and interests. Those industries have to be spread. There has to be an open spirit of negotiation. We in the west are pleading for that. I have just suggested one of the ways to resolve the problem for us there.

Something else that troubles me is the lack of in-depth marketing studies that precedes very serious decisions on the part of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. They react to lobbying from certain specific interests. They put quotas in place. However, when you telephone to ask what they have done in the way of an over-all market study, studying spinoffs and negative effects as well as the positive effects of putting in quotas, you are quite shocked at their reply. They say they do not know because they have not asked those questions. they have not talked to that segment of the industry.

When all hell breaks loose and the world caves in around these people, when their offices are filled with protests and they do not have the trained manpower to handle the situation, they wonder what hit them. That kind of confusion and turmoil could be prevented if before some of these decisions were made by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce they did a proper in-depth marketing study.

They should not place total emphasis on self-interest groups that are after a specific degree of protection. They should provide protection, but only providing it is given in terms of total man-years and total Canadian payroll. There should be more benefit to Canadian industry, rather than the disturbance caused to the importers and the retailers who also make up an important payroll in Canada.

● (2052)

I call for an overview. I call for more in-depth marketing. I call for more research behind the decision-making process of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. The department just does not anticipate side effects. After the department got into textile quotas—I knew it had been warned by wave after wave of interested, knowledgeable people in the industry—I asked if it had given consideration to any of the things that were going to happen, and the department said no. I have asked well meaning individuals who are every bit as concerned about this country as I am if they had any idea of what they were getting into, and they said no, which just bears out the point I am making. There must be a complete lack of research behind some of these moves.

We are trying to protect the textile industry, yet the United States realizes that that is impossible for them. Their technology, industrial capacity, productive capacity and work force capacity is greater than ours, yet that is an industry the Americans are phasing out to third world countries and to emerging young industrial nations. Japan is doing the same thing. Surely to goodness part and parcel of the decision-making process here in Canada involves some of those attitudes, some of that experience and some of the marketing studies other countries have done.

I will give the example of shoe quotas. I telephoned the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce and asked its policy section if it had any idea of the man-years it was protecting by putting the quota in to protect the shoe manufacturing industry in Canada. I was told that that section did not look into that. It did not ask those questions. I did not know the answer, but I subsequently found it in a research paper put out by the footwear import committee. I found that from 1972 to 1976 that industry actually suffered a loss of 345 man-years of work. Was that loss due to imports? Was it due to increased capitalization of plant to improve the productivity of that industry in Canada?

I also asked how many of the Canadian shoe manufacturers are importers, and hon. members would be absolutely startled if they saw the list of Canadian shoe manufacturers, protected by the quota, who are importers of shoes. They have it both ways. They have protection for their manufacturing capacity as well as quotas. I also asked whether there was any value tied to the quota system, and the answer was no. So what did we have? We had one gentleman, for example, bringing in hundreds of thousands of pairs of inexpensive beach sandals. He was given quotas, and he made a small fortune selling them off.

Have these quotas on textiles and shoes helped the low income earner in Canada? No, they have not. These policies have been very inflationary. The average industrial wage in Canada is about $13,000. It is pretty difficult to raise a family on that kind of money today, but are we helping? Are we improving the purchasing power of wage dollars? With these kinds of policies, no, we are not. Importers have overheads, incomes and whole organizations. Travel expenses have gone up. Importers have stopped bringing in shirts at $40 a dozen; they now bring them at $80 a dozen. All of a sudden the market has dried up for low income earners. These are the distortions. When we ask the dreamers who make the decisions which affect us all if they foresaw anything of this, all they do is shake their heads. I take this opportunity in this debate on Bill C-48 to call for in-depth research into these matters which have such a wide and broad effect on all of us.

I sometimes wonder whether policies such as textile quotas and shoe quotas are really deliberate. Are they out to destroy the small business sector of Canada? What is happening in the shoe and textile industries today? Shoe manufacturers are eliminating their accounts receivable problems. They are dealing with big stores. They are dealing with chains. They do not want to take small, nuisance orders any more, and this is seriously distorting the distribution of footwear in Canada.

Surely to goodness a proper study would acknowledge that we are going to have a small business sector. We have a small business ministry. Is that just in name, or does it function? Has the Minister of State (Small Business) (Mr. Abbott) studied any of the complaints of small retailers? Has he learned about their inability to buy from Canadian manufacturers? I do not know. I think there is a serious inequity which has developed here too. I am told that Canadian manufacturers are not price gouging, that they are being quite responsible with regard to prices. But I am also told that their deliveries have slowed down. Just last April one very large manufacturer advised a buyer in the west that the fall production was all sold out. This indicates that Canadian capacity has been reached. Are the people in the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce watching these indicators? Is the department increasing quotas to prevent a shortage and to make sure we have full distribution? I say again that in both these commodities it is the low wage earner who has been hurt.

One other aspect I should touch on has to do with waste. We have done a good job of hammering waste in government. I am a member of a committee of this House which is doing some very structural and fundamental work to create a consciousness about waste. I think there is good evidence to back up the figure of some $2 billion in government waste. That has been expounded upon, and the people of Canada are becoming very aware of this. However, that figure is infinitesimal compared with the waste we have allowed to be built into our total system. Waste in the industrial sector is unbelievable, and herein lies one of the biggest challenges and concerns we have in Canada. Waste is built into our system. The very taxation system we impose on the incentive sector builds in waste. We tax those who are efficient and those who earn profits. Perhaps we should start thinking about those economists who are questioning the old authority. Perhaps we should start slowly phasing in a tax on net cost and start reducing the tax we have on efficiency or on profit.

That brings me back to GATT. I do not know how the negotiators we have at the conference table can do justice to the Canadian scene without a national industrial strategy being in place. Our negotiators are listening to specific lobby and interest groups. They are looking at total figures and attempting to balance them by sawing off here and there. It is ad hocery all down the line. How we can deal with something as important as GATT without a national industrial strategy, or at least the framework of one, is absolutely beyond me. I suggest that the generation tomorrow will be paying for our shortcomings today in these very important negotiations.

Much of our trouble today came with the 1971-72 tax legislation. I think that the socialist input into that taxation philosophy of "a buck is a buck is a buck" is probably the most dishonest, shameful and harmful thing that has happened to us. I say this because the civil servant who is spending money on behalf of the government, the bureaucrat who is designing the expenditure, does not put the same value on the dollar as people in the private sector. When the private sector has a dollar of earnings or profit, the rate of tax is so high that a dollar of Canadian after tax profit is too valuable to risk unless in a high capital, turnover situation.

• (2102)

Though not discounting measures such as DISC, I think a great many of our troubles started with that taxation act which turned a basically simple system into a complicated monster which has effectively removed decision-making from the private sector in Canada. We are surely paying the price for that folly today. The only way out is to start removing the tax on incentive and efficiency and begin to tax costs. That is the only way in which we shall be able to wring the waste out of the system and bring the industrial sector back into a competitive situation vis-à-vis the United States, the emerging Asian countries and our industrial colleagues in Europe.

I criticize tonight the floundering decision-making process within the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. I think it is having a tragic effect on the world of productive work in Canada. I do not believe we shall be able to turn this drift into national bankruptcy around until we put in place an industrial strategy for the medium and the long term which would be subject to continuous amendments as conditions in the world marketplace demand change. We have to stop taxing efficiency and begin giving awards to those responsible for efficiency and frugality for those who work. I see no other way in which we can produce our own capital on the scale required for capital plant and expansion, for putting in place the infrastructure needed for transportation and for the development of new frontiers of energy. All this is necessary if we are to remain an industrialized nation. It will take some basic change in the policy and thought processes of the government before any of this is likely to change for the better, allowing us to realize a more equitable distribution of our gross national product.

[Translation]

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few brief comments on Bill C-48 now under consideration. Canadians generally probably feel that Bill C-48 is far from being clear enough to enable them to discover whether their interests are adequately protected, especially as far as industry is concerned. Perhaps there is some protection at the commercial level but, in my opinion, this is not clear enough.

The bill refers of course to many tariff items with which most Canadians are not too well acquainted and for that reason, Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out once again to the House that those who draft the bills submitted to the House should make their contents more explicit because after all those bills are meant for Canadians. They are the ones who must live with them, comply with them, apply them in their midst and it seems to me that the more explicit and understandable they are for the entire population, the easier it will be for the government to administer them.

[Mr. Huntington.]

Mr. Speaker, I was for many years—I would not want to give away my age by saying that—secretary-treasurer of a municipality. As all other municipal secretary-treasurers in Quebec and in Canada I was called upon, at the request of the mayor and of the councillors, to draft regulations, and I always tried to make them clear so that the ratepayers could understand them and apply them more easily. I also had a hand in drafting releases to be distributed to the families of the municipality informing them of the decisions handed down by the municipal authorities in the best interest of the ratepayers. Since coming to the House of Commons, correct me if I am wrong, I have tried to follow the same principles, and at least I tried to have an input so that the laws by which Canadians have to abide be as clear as possible.

I am reminded of the hon. member for Lotbinière, Mr. Auguste Choquette, who was my opponent in the Bellechasse riding and who was not so fortunate in this race; in any event, that is not the point.

He said in this House that our statutes must never be too explicit so that lawyers can have some work to do in trying to explain them to the public. I am sure that he was joking on this occasion, but this is contained in a speech that he made in this House, as anyone can check from Hansard. In my opinion, the legislation we make should be much clearer, much more explicit so that the people concerned who have to live every day with laws passed by Parliament may understand clearly why the legislators included such or such a section in a bill.

I see the hon. Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Goyer) smiling, but looking at him, I am convinced that he is thinking: "Oh Lord, how true!" For my part, I have always thought that it was much easier for a government, whether it be at the federal, provincial or municipal level, or a school board, to govern in the best interests of the population when the population understands the reasons for such or such a decision.

Mr. Speaker, I have merely glanced at Bill C-48. I cannot say that I have studied it in depth as we should normally do because we do not have enough time. In any event, I have found that it would serve the interests of the population as well as those of the government if our laws were more explicit or certain sections better explained so that the population might well understand the reasons for them and see whether they actually safeguard the interests of the individual rather than those of people who are in the import business to make profits. Mr. Speaker, what Canadian workers expect above all from Bill C-48 is that the government refuse entry into Canada of products that would compete with the capacity of Canadian industries. And I imagine the situation is the same for workers elsewhere, be they Americans, Africans or Asians. In short, workers anywhere look after their own interests and they want the industry to allow them to make a living. They do not want to see trade come in conflict with their own interests in such a way as to make them join the ranks of the unemployed.

Mr. Speaker, I agree that Canada should trade with other countries. That is quite normal. We should be allowed to export to other countries products which they cannot produce themselves, but in return they should be able to sell us those products which we are not in a position to produce domestically. I agree with the establishment of tariffs to control trade. But care should be taken that trade is done on a fraternal basis and not in a spirit of competition which could create hatred between people instead of bringing them together. Mr. Speaker, parliament should not allow trading for the sole purpose of bringing profits to those who have the advantage of holding a commercial monopoly. We had that situation before when we found it most difficult here in Canada to secure markets for our beef or pork while at the same time we opened the doors to pork or beef imports directly competing with the production capacity of our Canadian producers. Of course some improvements have been made in that respect and I am pleased to say here in the House that very efficient measures have been taken and have improved conditions in that field. Canadian producers are right to be proud of them.

• (2112)

Mr. Speaker, we also have in Canada the textile and clothing industry and there are several industries of that type in my riding which provide a living for hundreds of families. The textile and clothing industry has been facing many difficulties in the last few years. There have been massive lay-offs due to unduly high imports under the pretext that a shirt from Taiwan costs $4.50 when a similar shirt sells for $9 in Canada. But the cost value of a product is not everything, we should also compare quality and consider that even if we pay less for imports, if we have thousands of idle workers living on unemployment or welfare allowances, it has an effect on the tax level and ultimately consumers have to pay a price equivalent to that of the Canadian product while they create unemployment.

Mr. Speaker, I accept and recognize that the recent GATT agreements have brought some improvements in that field. I asked that question not so long ago of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner) and he gave us very interesting statistics on the behaviour of the textile and clothing industry. But we should be careful and very vigilant because as soon as you relax there is always someone ready to take advantage of the situation. This is why I urged the government to be very careful in its negotiations with the various countries of the world.

Mr. Speaker, as concerns food products we import 40 to 50 million pounds of different types of cheese when we could encourage our own dairy industry to find the means to produce other types of cheese which would place our dairy producers in a better position. Mr. Speaker, a great many young farmers and young dairy producers who believe in agriculture and in the future of our dairy industry have committed themselves financially. They have incurred financial obligations geared to their production capacity but one day their quota has been reduced without any consideration for their financial obligations towards the Canadian Farm Credit Corporation, other farm credit offices, banks, caisses populaires or other financial institutions.

Having the volume of production which is necessary to meet their obligations these young farmers are unable to market their production; their obligations remain at the same level but their production quota is reduced. So they cannot make enough profit to meet their obligations. We now have many young farmers who become discouraged and simply leave their operations; they go bankrupt precisely because of a lack of foresight on our part as far as the import of dairy products is concerned. We are not vigilant enough, we should make more efforts to have our dairy production transformed into all kinds of products to enable this industry to thrive and thus ensure the survival of our agriculture, of our dairy industry all over Canada.

Mr. Speaker, another sector which has suffered directly from our lack of foresight is that of farming implements. You remember that a few years ago a commission was created by the Government of Canada to inquire into spare parts for farm machinery, namely the Barber commission. That commission did a terrific job. It reported to the government, to the House, but most of its recommendations have been pigeon-holed. And, today, parts for farming equipment have reached a price level that makes absolutely no sense, that is way beyond the capacity to pay of most Canadian farmers who have to buy them to keep their machines operating properly. There again, when dealing with other countries, the government should pay special attention to farm equipment parts so that their prices can be more in line with the purchasing power of their users. Mr. Speaker, I am not blaming those people, or businesses who must keep huge inventories of spare parts for farm machinery. They, and their industries, are subjected to trading conditions that escape their control. Obviously, if they buy a part that costs them $20, they cannot sell it for $19. But, Mr. Speaker, that is where the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner) is failing us. When he sat on this side, with the Progressive Conservatives, he spoke the way I do today; he seems to have changed his mind since he has gone over to the government side. Tonight, I make a special appeal to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce: let his administration, let him, have the same attitude that he displayed when he was simply an hon. member of the Progressive Conservatives, of the opposition. Mr. Speaker, I do not think I am insulting the minister by reminding him of his attitudes and words. I think it is logical, as we are studying this bill, to emphasize that the people who are responsible for signing agreements with other countries, should always regard the interests of Canadian producers of primary products as their first priority. Mr. Speaker, Bill C-48, now before the House, does not seem like an extraordinary bill but still its contents will have considerable impact on the trading future of our country in the fields of textiles, footwear and agriculture.

That is why we have to make sure that this bill will be studied very thoroughly in committee of the whole so that various clauses may be clarified. I hope I will have the opportunity, if possible, to take part in the proceedings of the committee when the bill is referred to it and elaborate on the brief suggestions I made to the House in this second reading debate.

● (2122)

[English]

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I do not think that over the years there has been a subject I have heard more discussion of than this one of customs tariffs. I say very bluntly from what little intelligence I may have and from bitter experience that the whole philosophy of customs tariffs is obsolete and has been for 35 or 40 years. I say this with great feeling because I have watched the nations of the world gather together under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. This was not really a world-wide group of nations by any means. It was nothing more than a rich man's club which periodically handed out a few crumbs at the gates of the poor nations of the world.

In 1977 there were at least some crumbs handed out to these nations, but these particular changes under discussion in Bill C-48 are aimed at one thing, and that is to stick a finger, or perhaps two fingers, into the side of the United Kingdom. As we read through these items we find over and over in respect of these changes, particularly in the schedules, the reference to the fact there is no change except in the case of any such goods that are the growth, produce or manufacture of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, the Channel Islands, et cetera. If we go down a little further we will see the same thing; there is no change in the tariff rates except in the case of any such goods that are the growth, produce or manufacture of the United Kingdom, Northern Ireland, the Channel Islands, and so on. This particular group of nations is mentioned because the United Kingdom has gone into the common market and the tariffs come under the "most-favoured-nation tariff".

Obviously the negotiators are playing with minute little changes at the present round of talks. My view of GATT is well and clearly understood. It is nothing but a rich man's club to make the rich richer and the rest of the world poorer. The great majority of nations in the world do not belong to GATT and do not receive its benefits, even though we do hand out a few crumbs periodically.

In suggesting that the tariff philosophy is obsolete I speak from bitter experience, with the knowledge that the actual tariffs set by various countries are meaningless. What is really important are the non-tariff items, the administrative procedures and the ethics of those companies that trade across boundaries. Government subsidies and programs within countries are the factors that absolutely change the whole concept of the tariff set-up. Therefore, it is a waste of my time to spend precious minutes in this House explaining in detail what are these non-tariff items.

Non-tariff items could more aptly be described as coming under the heading of the "dirty tricks department". Every government uses these tricks and will continue to use them. What was agreed upon at the first Kennedy Round in 1964, and what will be agreed to at the present time in 1978, amount to the same old thing; that is, non-tariff items falling within that "dirty tricks department". These are what will really decide the terms of trade between countries, and that is the fact of modern day living. There is nothing new about this, and there is not one nation more guilty of this than any other. I say this with some knowledge.

I do not condemn the philosophy of GATT. GATT was founded in that period of euphoria after the war in an attempt to put an end to tariff attacks on other nations as a new form of economic warfare. In the mind of man at that time there was a desire to put an end to this. The feeling was that if these economic causes of war—that is, high tariffs—could be removed the chance of war would be less. No one disagrees with that philosophy of GATT. I am simply pointing out the facts and the realities that have occurred in the last 30 years.

I well recall in this House 14 years ago when the then minister of trade and commerce, the former hon. member for Eglinton, announced he was going to the opening festivities of the so-called Kennedy Round, named after the then president of the United States. He was naturally quite proud to name the leading people of his department, and others he was bringing in, to attend the discussions. On occasion the government did bring in other people to help advise. As a member of the opposition at that time I was the spokesman for this party in respect of that announcement. Even though I have not read the record for some years, I remember very clearly what I said. I reminded the minister, who had been a long-time deputy minister of that department, that sending this crack team from the department of trade and commerce to the Kennedy Round was like sending their best hired man to milk the lousiest cow you had in your herd, because it took the best hired man to get a few drops from a dried out cow.

● (2132)

By contrast, I recommended that for Canada's trade future what a minister of trade should be looking for is places where the pasture is greener, the heifers are newly freshened and the milk is flowing. I took that occasion to announce that I was accepting the invitation of the People's Republic of China to visit that country and talk to their ministers vis-à-vis increasing China's trade with the rest of the world. That was 14 years ago.

China's trade used to be $400 million a year, $200 million in and $200 million out, and almost entirely with the U.S.S.R. The trade of the People's Republic of China today is around $15 billion. When you see trade grow in 15 years to that extent, from $400 million to over $15 billion, you know the pastures are green. I simply use that as an example of the type of logic that I want to put into some ideas that I would like to put forward at this time.

I would like to make my speech one with a few suggestions which I think are positive alternatives to the type of thing that we have witnessed in countries of the western world in the last 30 years. I would like to suggest a practical proposal that has been used in Canada and in other countries more or less successfully. I call this principle the growth rate exchange, and under it you simply ignore all those civil servants trying to put impediments into the movement of goods back and forth and carrying out these complicated regulations which merely add to the cost. You merely set a target for industry or for trading companies and let them go ahead and achieve that target without all these regulations, government controls and interference.

I cited in this House an example in the European steel community where two governments gave industry 20 years to achieve parity of steel production between Germany and France. Those two countries stood back under that target of parity and saw private enterprise achieve that objective in seven years.

I saw a Conservative government in this country led by the right hon. gentleman from Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) speak to the American car companies and propose to them that, since we bought their cars and trucks and consumed 7 per cent of the total cars and trucks in North America at that time, at least 7 per cent of the equivalent of those cars should be built and produced here in Canada.

I listened to minister after minister get up and say that this concept was started by the Liberals. I am not going to get up in a partisan way and quarrel about something like that. It was started under the chairmanship of the then minister of finance, Mr. Nowlan, and was carried on by the Pearson administration and supported by this side. The only difference was—and I am speaking in general terms—that we did not lay down any precise terms. We simply said that we expected those car companies, General Motors, Chrysler and Ford, if they wanted to continue operating in Canada to produce 7 per cent, or the equivalent of 7 per cent, of the cars and trucks here in Canada. And they did.

In the next agreement they made it more precise and said that the whole car had to be completed in Canada. Because of that there was a sudden burst in the automobile pact. These big companies said they would do what the government wanted them to do. They decided to make the small cars in Canada as Canada's contribution, but here they made a serious blunder. Everybody got in the mood for small cars and suddenly Canada was ahead of the deal. This had to be corrected, so today every word that you get out of the automobile industry and every trick of the trade is being used by them to get around this commitment.

We hear of cars coming into Canada in parts. They take off the wheels and ship the wheels in one package and the car in another package to some countries and say that this car was manufactured in Canada because the wheels were put on there. Or they take the whole package of parts and have them assembled in another country and want it credited as a car that has been made in Canada, the actual work being done in the parent country. That is an example of what I call bitter experience.

You have to have governments that are willing to learn what the philosophy of the agreement was and see that it is enforced. I use the automobile deal as an example in spite of the things that have happened to us in the last two or three years. The principle and philosophy are sound—that you make an agreement with these companies and then say you expect such and such to be done or certain action will be taken. If they try to duck around it in the interests of their parent country, all of a sudden that action is taken period, and then they know not to fool around.

I do not know how great the truth is behind these rumours. We do not make Cadillacs in Canada, yet I understand that Cadillacs are exported to Saudi Arabia from Canada and qualify as having been produced in Canada. We did not produce them. They simply sent a couple of parts to Canada, put them into a new package and shot them out. Trucks are treated in the same way. Trucks all over the world are labelled as made in Canada, and I know they were not produced in Canada. I am simply saying if you accept the good parts of the growth rate exchange system, where you set targets for private business to reach, it does not mean that you sit back and enjoy yourself beside a swimming pool for the rest of your life. You have to watch these people all the time.

I could go on and give what I think is the number one opportunity for Canadian jobs and for Canadian development of industry, not on any subsidized basis but on the basis of comparative advantage. How many people are aware that in the last 17 years our steel industry has been competitive with every other nation in the world? The only real fight they have today is with the Japanese, and they can meet them head on as long as they are treated fairly. We have an industry which uses a tremendous amount of iron, energy and water. We pay our men higher wages per hour to produce higher quality steel and produce it at a lesser cost per ton than our competitors. We have the know-how, the proven track record of comparative advantage in this industry, and the industry is growing at a very satisfactory rate—from four million tons in 1962 and 1963 up to about 14 million tons presently.

I know what the plans are. Long before the end of this century we will have a steel industry with a capacity of between 35 million tons and 50 million tons a year based on comparative advantage—not based on subsidy by government, but on the technological know-how of our managers and the skill of our workmen. It is fine to have this advantage in the steel industry but we as a government are not reinforcing their efforts. If we have this advantage in steel we can also have it in the value added industries created therefrom, and this is where the growth rate exchange comes in and the bargaining levers are well known. The United States is our main market. The United States has long since run out of good iron. It is down to the expensive, inferior taconite of the Mesabi range. The only nations supplying it with iron today are Canada and Brazil. If they want access to our iron and to our energy, then I think they should know that we in turn want access to their market, and not only for basic steel. We will have to export more and more to the United States as their industry dies. We want access to the United States for the value added products with no question of tariffs at all.

● (2142)

This would be a mutually advantageous deal to both nations. Their consumers would get the benefit of a better and cheaper product and we would get the benefit of the jobs and the maximum utilization of our resources. We would not bar them from access to the basic iron ore, and even energy if necessary, to maintain their declining steel industry—because they would have to maintain some in their own national interest. I am simply saying this is a classic example of how a government, without spending any money, does what comes naturally and makes a deal for everybody's benefit. The United States would benefit, we would benefit and certainly the tax collectors in both countries would benefit.

I could go on to talk about the petrochemical industry as another example of a priority item. Everybody must know, surely, that the cost of producing the basic feedstocks of the chemical industry in east Texas and Louisiana or in Sarnia are almost double what they are if the product is produced in Alberta, Saskatchewan or British Columbia. Under ordinary economic law, industry would go to those places that could produce at half the cost. But industry is not made up of angels following an economic textbook. They have certain interests to protect and so the petrochemical industry is not developed where it should be and at lowest cost to the consumer in the United States and in Canada.

The one man who has his eye on this particular argument and this technique—the growth rate exchange—is the Premier of Alberta. He tells the United States that our natural gas is a capital resource and that when it is gone it is finished, and if they want it they must remove their tariffs and let the natural economic laws prevail. In other words, in return for our natural gas they must remove taxes on their chemicals. We can produce a certain proportion of chemicals to the limit of natural economic growth in Alberta, British Columbia and Saskatchewan. This is the view of a man who is not only the premier of a province but one who recognizes the obsolete nature of this type of measure that we are passing through this House now. He is acting positively in the interests of the people who own those resources and at the same time he is providing a cheaper form of petrochemicals. So much of the things we use are in chemical form. The United States would benefit because of cheaper prices, and since they are running out of oil and gas it would be a good deal for both sides.

This is a classic example of where aggressive, intelligent leaders in our country see there is an alternative to sending your best hired man to these conferences to milk a dried out cow. This type of measure will not change anything. I suggest that there are positive alternatives to this obsolete tariff dance that we go through every ten years.

[Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain).]

If hon. members want other examples of ideas, let me take a second proposal. We must face the fact that we are and will continue to be one of the great trading nations of the world. This is natural in view of our resources and the working capacity of our people. Therefore, our interests have to be in the institutions of the world today.

I am suggesting an old idea that this government has resisted since the change of government in 1963 and is delaying now. I am talking about the oldest idea in the trade institution business—the concept of the international trading company. This is a concept that goes back 400 years in our history. This country was started with an international trading company—the Hudson's Bay Company. There was the British East India Company. The Dutch had them, the French had them, the Italians had them, the Portuguese had them and so had the Spaniards. Every nation that was going any place in the 17th century had an international trading company as a way of getting around trade difficulties.

If we look at the modern industrial state of Japan, tough and ruthless as they are, we must admire the way they set up these international trading companies. If you do not have something, they get it for you so they can sell you something. They will put up the money to develop your resources so they can get the resources. The weakness of the Japanese trading company, however, is that it thinks only of Japan. They would not be able to compete with the type of international trading company I am speaking of, an international trading company that has as its first motive helping the people they are trading with and not the reverse. The international trading company that I speak of has the idea of mutual benefit to both parties and sometimes three or four parties. That is the difference.

A while ago I mentioned that on my visit to the People's Republic of China in 1964 we discussed trade terms. How could this newly developing country get away from its tie-up with the U.S.S.R. and other communist states and trade with all nations of the world? They had the trading city of Canton to which they traditionally invite all their customers, but they had to put into the mix some form of international trading companies from outside to buy the goods the Chinese have available and distribute them all over the world.

Due to this principle of some companies going to China, buying their goods and distributing them around the world, the People's Republic of China has had enough money for the last 20 years to buy and pay for Canadian wheat. They buy our wheat on a time basis—six months. They have never missed a payment because, thanks to international trading companies and private trading companies, which I will mention later, Chinese goods have gone out over the world to the tune of $7 or $8 billion per year with the same amount of goods going back. That way they get enough dollars to pay for our wheat.

Today I read a letter from the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) warning us that we are too dependent on the Chinese market. As a westerner, I say thank God the Chinese honour their agreement signed in 1961 and have never broken it. It was agreed that they would buy our wheat on credit when they had no money and that we would help them sell their goods if they would continue buying wheat from us. We have never broken our word. When I say we, I do not mean this government. A lot of us have kept up the effort of moving Chinese goods around the world and helping those countries that buy Chinese goods get enough money to pay for them so that the Chinese can pay us. Today China's trade has moved up to $15 or 16 billion per year.

I give the credit for this to the international trading companies. The Japanese trading companies have done a remarkable job, as have the American trading companies, but it is the Canadian international trading companies that are going into China, buying goods there and then distributing them around the world.

● (2152)

Just a year or a year and a half ago the Prime Minister returned from a trip to South America. I asked him if he had taken the opportunity to meet the heads of state of those South American republics in order to thank them for what they had done to help Canada sell wheat to China. He knew nothing about it. The officials had not bothered to tell him. These six governments on the west side of South America set up Chinese trading offices in each of their countries so that the Chinese could set up selling agencies in those countries, and the $100 million a year of goods bought from China by these not too rich people of South America is what paid for the Canadian wheat. If was not the Canadians and it was not the Chinese who paid for it. It went three ways. The Chinese took our wheat and sold their goods to the South Americans. The South Americans gave their dollars back to China and we got our dollars.

I am simply putting this on the record, not that any person will report it or repeat it, because some day I know that historians will ask how it was that this country bought such huge quantities of Canadian wheat but did not have the money to pay for it. The answer is right in what I have been saying: it is thanks to the international trading companies and the many small private companies which went out and bought Chinese goods and got them distributed around the world. That is how their trade has been developed. The Chinese people have benefited, the rest of the world has benefited and so have we in Canada. That is the second constructive proposal that I put forward and this is where the government should be putting its efforts.

In addition, I want to mention the national buying and selling companies. People keep asking: "Why, if you are talking about international trading companies, do you say you have to have national buying companies and national selling companies?" These are for specific tasks. Once again I will deal with specifics. One product which the Chinese have to sell is rice. This rice is of just as good quality as anything produced in Louisiana or southern California. I have spent years of my life writing letters to and visiting and pleading almost on bended knee with Canadian company after Canadian company to go to China, buy rice there and distribute it in Canada. The quality was there and the price was right. But I could not find one company. Why? They said: "If we want to buy rice, we just put an ad in the trade paper. If any person wants to buy rice, they come to us and advertise, meet the advertisement's requirements and we buy from the best. We will not stir ourselves from our comfortable Canadian office to go across the ocean and look at the Chinese rice". I know very well the Chinese would not come here. They never do.

An hon. Member: It does not get past Saskatoon-Humboldt.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): The Chinese are an old culture. They happen to think they are the centre of the world. Everything comes to the centre. They do not go out to the barbarian areas. But I could not find a single Canadian company. I have a beautiful letter written from the federated co-ops of Canada centred in the city of Saskatoon, whose member sits right here. Their last letter to me stated: "If the Chinese want to sell us rice or any of their goods, bring them to Saskatoon and we will bring our buyers in and they will look and buy what they want." They have not even learned that the Chinese, like the Russians and the Americans, think that they are the centre of the world, and you have to go to them. When you are in business you have to do what business dictates. In the case of the Chinese you accept the fact that you are an inferior culture, a junior culture, and you go there and do business in their country. After that they will probably come back.

I put that very bluntly to you, Mr. Speaker, because it is another reason why that rice was not bought. Companies that distribute food in this country in the main are not Canadian-owned. They have holding companies that own them. These holding companies have rice plantations in Louisiana and southern California. The companies in Canada buy their rice from the subsidiary companies of the same holding companies to which they belong. Those are the facts of life. As I said in the opening part of my remarks, Mr. Speaker, those are the bitter experiences I have had.

On the question of selling companies, we have newsprint. Our Canadian companies for years have been in a bit of a drought, in a bit of a depression. Right now they are just getting out of it. A few years ago they had surplus paper. How hard it was to get Canadian newsprint companies to try to develop that market in China. It is so much more comfortable to sell to the papers that have long-term contracts in the United States, right near the centre of the continent. It has been impossible for almost 30 years to get a pulp mill started in the centre of Canada because the markets straight south were taken up by the coastal companies. If we had had one selling company that could have bought the paper right here in Canada from all those companies on the west coast and gone to China as one single company to sell that paper, we would have been selling newsprint to China for the last 15 years. It is true one company is now now selling quite a bit, and I want to say congratulations to them. How would you feel, Mr. Speaker, if you had spent 15 years trying to get something like that done?

I am moving into my final series of proposals. I think I have said enough to make my point. Instead of just condemning this silly business, this roaring farce of sending out top hired man to go over and deal with these nickels, dimes and pennies, would it not have been better if the government years ago had started a program of doing these things that should have been done to meet the new realities? I originally made these proposals in this House in October, 1964, 14 years ago. I repeated that speech any number of times, trying to get people to pay attention to what was needed. All we had was this flim-flam, this posturing and pretending, running around and exposing themselves like a baboon. And everyone knows the part of the baboon that is being exposed. I am simply saying the wasted time that I have seen in the last 15 years should have been used to get away from this silly, obsolete question of tariffs and to get at these policy proposals that could have put Canada back into the trading picture of the world on a positive rather than negative basis.

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, it is so close to ten o'clock that rather than say a few sentences may I call it ten o'clock?

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION—REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF SERVICE TO SMALL COMMUNITIES

Mr. Eymard Corbin (Madawaska-Victoria): Mr. Speaker, last Friday, on May 12, in the absence of the Secretary of State, I asked the Minister of Communications to bring to the attention of her cabinet colleagues a recent decision by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation to limit its accelerated coverage plan to communities with at least 500 people speaking an official minority language, based on the 1971 and 1976 census figures. Several communities which consequently expected to eventually get either French or English television have now been set aside.

I feel this is an urgent matter, and since it is not possible during the question period to set forth all the facts relating to a problem like this, and although it is not possible for the minister to answer adequately on behalf of the CBC, nevertheless it seems important to me to deal with the problem directly by exposing it to the full light of day. The essence of the information I have in the form of letters received from the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation last week is contained in the following paragraph, and I quote:

[Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain).]

Indeed, it is with regret that we had to cut from the accelerated coverage plan certain projects in communities where the French-speaking population—

—and that is the situation I am concerned about——proved too small considering the costs of implementation. They had been included in the preparatory and implementing phase of the plan.

. . . the most recent mother tongue statistics have forced the corporation to abandon those projects in view of the inability of complying with the standard of 500 people. You may rest assured that the research department, at the request of the planning department, made every effort to analyze thoroughly the data of the 1971 and 1976 censuses before arriving at that conclusion.

Last Friday I said that decision was unfair, and I urged that cabinet convince the CBC to reverse its decision so as to stem the appalling tide of assimilation. It is obvious that the absence of French schools, government services in the everyday language, legal services, a press service and what not, are powerful sources of assimilation. The fact still remains that the absence of radio and particularly television irremediably condemns the French-speaking community to assimilation in many areas of this country.

● (2202)

Can we and should we as the CBC did put a price tag on staffing those services? When one realizes that the accelerated coverage plan itself was implemented a little late in this struggle for the survival of minorities, it seems to me that we should step up our efforts instead of reducing them. By any chance, would the CBC decision reflect the statements made by the present premier of Quebec who said that minorities are a lost cause anyway? Is that what the CBC mean? I would not be surprised when I consider what we have obtained so far in my province of New Brunswick, but with so many efforts, so much hardship and struggle.

At the risk of scandalizing or even offending those persons who think they have done a lot for the minorities, I will say that it is not enough and that it is high time to do more. I repeat what I have said on several occasions, namely that because of a lack of a television service in the French language among other things, the rate of assimilation of minorities is going up an accelerated pace. The home, the family is not only the cradle of culture, it is also often the last stronghold against assimilation and the recent CBC decision condemns dozens if not hundreds of small communities to surrender. The terms of reference of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation are to consolidate national unity and it is generally agreed that under the mandate with which it was entrusted by the Parliament of Canada, it also has obligations vis-à-vis communities speaking one of the official languages and that is what is important.

I regret this decision of the CBC which is pushing the most fragile, vulnerable and needy minorities toward extinction. How many will be forgotten, forsaken and sacrificed following this decision? We need to know the true figures, Mr. Speaker. We need to know the operating costs which the CBC has given as an excuse to refuse this service. As far as the accelerated plan is concerned, I am afraid that the CBC's accomplishments fall quite short of the corporation's original objectives.

However, all is not lost, provided we act quickly. In this respect, I am very pleased to know we will be able, in the future, to avail ourselves of the opportunities which the Minister of Communications (Mrs. Sauvé) mentioned last Friday. Yet, I should like to know whether the corporation intends to take advantage of the new developments in satellite technology to provide all Canadians with a first television service in their mother tongue. I feel we have talked long enough about it, the time has come to act, and I hope that the Secretary of State (Mr. Roberts) or his representative will be able tonight to assure the House that the CBC will spare nothing and co-operate fully with all the other government agencies to satisfy their craving for national unity which is particularly felt by small minorities almost everywhere in this country.

● (2207)

Mr. Robert Daudlin (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, the Broadcasting Act states emphatically that "all Canadians are entitled to broadcasting service in English and French as public funds become available", adding that "the national broadcasting service should be extended to all parts of Canada, as public funds become available". The CBC's accelerated radio and television coverage plan, which was approved in 1974, provides for over 600 engineering projects. The scope of this project has exhausted the resources of the corporation and imposed heavy demands on the suppliers of equipment.

It would be impossible at this time for the corporation to implement another program which could lay a further burden upon its resources. The accelerated coverage plan is expected to be completed within two years. Planning for the extension of coverage once the ACP is in operation has already begun, so that it is possible to draw up a plan which will take advantage of the impetus given by the ACP in extending CBC services to communities of less than 500 people. The development of that plan is in its first stages, but if it were approved, it could well serve as an extension to the ACP for taking up where the other will have left.

Let me recall that the formula used to set up the priorities for the ACP comprises six factors. One of them is the cultural isolation which weighs very heavy since it is important to see to it that the minority group concerned will get the service in the required language from the early stages of the implementation of the plan. Mr. Speaker, I would very much like tonight to give the hon. member the figures he is asking for. I am sorry that I do not have them, but I will let him have them as soon as they become available.

Adjournment Debate

[English]

COMMUNICATIONS—BELL CANADA CONTRACT WITH SAUDI ARABIA

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, I want to pursue this evening a question I asked the Minister of Communications (Mrs. Sauvé) on May 11 concerning Bell Canada and its Saudi Arabian contract. We are entering another chapter in the long history of Bell's appearances before the CRTC for rate increases, this being one of the largest Bell has asked for. Part of the consideration regarding whether a rate increase is justified, of course, is the profitability Bell is experiencing, the kinds of contracts and undertakings Bell is entering into, how that relates to the company's profitability and, hence, its demands for a rate increase.

Not the least of all the factors which must be taken into consideration is this large $1.1 billion contract to supply telephone systems to Saudi Arabia. There are two things that worry me. First, some evidence has come to light that in negotiating this deal Bell Canada may be violating the Canadian Human Rights Act in the sense that it may be barring women and Jews from becoming involved in the contract work for Saudi Arabia.

● (2212)

When the human rights commissioner asked Bell to provide him with a detailed copy of the contract so that he could determine whether this was the case or not, Bell Canada declined to do so. I find this reprehensible and an affront to the commissioner. I hope he does not have to go to the length of pursuing this matter in the Federal Court. That is why I asked the minister, who has authority over the CRTC which is currently hearing Bell's application, to cause that hearing to be suspended until the company complies with the request of the human rights commissioner. I believe that is an effective way of getting the company to respond to the commissioner's request so that conformity with the Human Rights Act passed by this parliament may be assured. The minister said she would look into that suggestion.

The other aspect of the contract which worries me concerns the fact that details of it may not be made known to the interveners at the CRTC hearing. We have heard that under this $1.1 billion contract Bell is paying some $88 million to unknown Saudi Arabian interests; there is no explanation as to the use being made of this money. Given the record of Atomic Energy of Canada and many United States companies in their dealings with third world countries, the spectre of political pay-offs or kickbacks comes to the fore. I do not want to see Canadian telephone subscribers facing another rate increase because Bell—or any other company—is greasing palms abroad in order to obtain a contract. I think it is in the public interest for the contract to be made available at the CRTC hearings; we know that the commission will see it privately. I would appreciate a reply from the parliamentary secretary with regard to what action the minister is taking on these two fronts.

Adjournment Debate

Mr. C. Douglas (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, first I should like to reply to the question having to do with the human rights aspect of the contract to which the hon. member has referred. That aspect of the contract has gone before the human rights commission which has been asked by the minister to look into the matter. I understand that an investigator for the commission has now seen the contract and is preparing a report for consideration by the commission. If the commission finds that any aspect of the contract is in violation of the Canadian Human Rights Act, I would assume that the commissioner, for whom we have great respect as a former member of this House, will take whatever action he feels necessary or appropriate to correct any problems which may arise.

I would point out that there are really two contracts. One is a general agreement between the ministry of posts, telegraphs and telephones of the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia and a consortium consisting of Bell Canada, Philips of the Netherlands and L. M. Ericsson of Sweden to extend, modernize, operate and maintain the Saudi Arabian telephone system.

The second contract is a five year contract between the ministry and Bell Canada. Its current value is about $1.1 billion and it is for the operation and maintenance of the telephone system in the kingdom, the construction of certain facilities and the procurement of materials and supplies.

With regard to the second question, I would point out that the minister has not seen the contracts, nor have I. We have, wisely I believe, left the matter to the CRTC, the regulatory body. The issue was raised, of course, at the time Bell Canada was asked to make the contracts public. Bell has submitted that the contracts should be kept confidential because to make them public would, in Bell's view, cause the company to be placed at a disadvantage in future international negotiations. The interveners in the rate hearing, however, told the CRTC that its effective intervention in the rate case required them to be familiar with all aspects of Bell's revenues and expenses, including the potential risk involved in the Saudi Arabian contract.

● (2217)

In order to permit effective intervention while at the same time protecting Bell's international competitive position, the CRTC decided to hold an in camera hearing to examine the Saudi Arabian contracts. This hearing will begin tomorrow. One representative of each intervener will be allowed to review the contracts and then participate in the in camera hearing, to hear evidence, cross-examine witnesses and give arguments at that time. The interveners will have the opportunity to appear before Bell in order to review the contract and make whatever intervention they feel should be made at that time. I am sure the interveners will have an opportunity to ask questions about these agreements during that in camera hearing. By employing the procedure of a closed hearing, I believe the CRTC is rightly attempting to balance the interests of the public and the interests of Bell and its future negotiations.

[Mr. Symes.]

ELECTIONS—REASON FOR PRIME MINISTER'S ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, Thursday, May 11, 1978, was a day which will go down in parliamentary history as the day when the great election hoax story finally unravelled. It became a question of the chicken and the egg. Basically it was the chicken in terms of the Gallup poll. At that time I asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) the question as to whether, in making his decision not to go to the people on Thursday, May 11, in order to provide them with a chance to make some adjudication on his tenure, he was following his own personal creed, which reads as follows:

> The only constant factor to be found in my thinking over the years has been opposition to accepted opinions.

In fact, that is the first sentence of the foreword in his own book entitled, "Pierre Elliott Trudeau, Federalism and the French Canadians".

I was taken aback by the fact that Your Honour thought the question was somewhat advanced and somewhat of a frivolous nature. Perhaps Your Honour thought it was a little facetious, since the great announcement came after the Prime Minister had played and dangled Canadians for weeks and months on end. That interfered with the personal lives of many. It cost many thousands of people many thousands of dollars, yet the boy had his day. He played, he dangled, and he decided to pick up the ball and take it home. That one sentence of the book's foreword is perhaps the genesis for many of our problems today. I asked a serious question. I was disappointed that Your Honour cut me off. Fortunately the Prime Minister gave some answer. It was a traverse to the question. He thought it was good that the hon. member was educated.

I am glad to have an opportunity tonight to reiterate this one sentence of his personal creed. It is high time for Canadians of partisan and objective views to become educated regarding his personal creed. He has indicated that the only constant factor is going against accepted public opinion. Many hon. members know about the sales tax in Quebec. Every party in the province of Quebec, every party in this federal House and most of the premiers across Canada say that the stance of the Prime Minister on sales tax is wrong. I am referring to the debate and dispute between Mr. Parizeau and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien). We realize the Prime Minister is wrong and that his government is wrong. Yet going against that public opinion, we will have a pseudo-social credit, social dividend theory to pump money directly into the pocket books of those who can afford to pay the taxes.

Your Honour sits in his chair, I sit in my chair, and other hon. members sit in their chairs. We had the same things two or three years ago during what was then a debate on capital punishment. Again the government said it was to be a free vote, yet government members stood up in a monolithic or, as some people would say, a moronic way and voted as a group against capital punishment.

● (2222)

Never has there been a more definable matter in the opinion of the public. You can debate many of the reasons the public felt this way, rightly or wrongly. Some thought capital punishment would cure all problems in respect of law and order. In any event, I think 80 per cent or 82 per cent of the public expressed a desire for a return to capital punishment. Again the Prime Minister and his government went against "accepted opinions", to put it in his own words.

The same thing can be said in respect of something called bilingualism. There have been many who have said for several years that if you try to force feed something as sensitive as the tongue before educating the mind you will get a reaction. You might well get linguistic differences becoming differences of opinion at times of election.

The Prime Minister has now pulled in his horns and taken his little election ball, put it into his back pocket and gone off to his swimming pool. Some of the great commentators of the land, including Anthony Westall, Christopher Young and Richard Gynn, now suggest we see bravery in the fact of cowardice. They say we see bravery in the face of retreat because, has the Prime Minister gone to the people, we might have had an election that divided the country along linguistic lines. What better way could there be to clear the air than to have an election? This might have been better than having a Prime Minister leading the country at a time when different linguistic lines may be part of his problem.

We can also take the question of unity, another basic issue. Most people say this country is ready for a change. They cannot accept the status quo with no change whatsoever. They will not accept René Lévesque's brand of change. Even Jean-Luc Pepin says, in his smiling, beautiful way, that there has to be a third option.

A member of my party, our leader in 1968, tried to get Canadians to pay attention to what perhaps should have been a change. He tried to get them at least to recognize that we were not all the same and could not all be tucked into one bushel basket. He pointed out there were very fundamental differences that added strength if we could only recognize the reality of two solitudes, or call it what you will.

We can also consider the economy, which is of somewhat germane importance. How does the Prime Minister react to accepted opinions in this regard? He referred to the issue on New Year's Eve when speaking of something called the "forces of free enterprise". He got many people upset with his musings.

My time is short during this adjournment debate, but I would love to debate with Your Honour or any other member of this House the creed of the Prime Minister. This creed has been a constant factor in respect of all his thinking and his opposition to accepted opinions. How insulting and how arrogant it is to have that one man think that opposition to accepted public opinions is the essence of consistency, when so many of these opinions about the problems of the land are quite to the contrary.

Perhaps the Prime Minister came to this conclusion on the basis of accepted opinions, as expressed by the Gallup poll, but I would like to know what else the Liberal caucus had. Quite frankly, it will be interesting to see how it all turns out. Perhaps there will be a conclusion to the very unfortunate reign of the present Prime Minister. When it is all sorted out, the bottom line will not represent accepted opinion but rather a realization on the part of the Prime Minister that he himself is sadly one of the problems of this land today.

Hon. Norman A. Cafik (Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Annapolis Valley (Mr. Nowlan) raised this question, if we can put it in those terms, on May 11, 1978, at which time I read the question, if that is what you could call it, very carefully yet failed to understand just what it was. I can quite understand why Mr. Speaker interrupted at one stage, because it is a very difficult and elusive question, if one at all. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) gave a very fleeting answer to this non-question, and I will give an equally fleeting answer.

● (2227)

I do not think that it deserves an answer at all. It is not a specific question relating to a specific point but seems to be facetious, jocular and should be treated in that way. However, the question that was raised here tonight is slightly different in that the hon. member seems to be raising a point that the Prime Minister's willingness to swim against the tide is some kind of disadvantage.

Every human being from time to time has to swim against the tide, and sometimes swim with it as well. In any event, the Prime Minister is a man of courage, conviction and a person who is quite prepared to say what he thinks when he thinks it. He deserves respect for that particular intellectual quality.

When the hon. member goes into the question of capital punishment and questions whether it was a free vote, I can say that I was a member on this side of the House who was not a member of cabinet at the time and I can assure the hon. member that it was a free vote as far as we were concerned. I would also point out that the leader of his own party voted against capital punishment.

The other questions that are raised are not really worthy of any further comment. It was a silly question and it deserves no response whatsoever.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at two o'clock p.m.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.29 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, May 16, 1978

The House met at 2 p.m.

• (1407)

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

HEALTH AND WELFARE

REFUSAL OF DEPARTMENT TO PAY FOR VACCINE—MOTION UNDER S. O. 43

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgency which affects the future of vaccine production in emergency epidemic situations in this country.

In view of the fact that Connaught laboratories supplied the Department of National Health and Welfare with 12 million doses of swine influenza vaccine during the expected country-wide influenza epidemic in 1976, and in view of the fact that the Department of National Health and Welfare now refuses to pay for the final two million doses of influenza serum and is facing a lawsuit by Connaught Laboratories for a claim of $2.5 million, plus interest, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Rynard):

That the Minister of National Health and Welfare make a statement on motions to explain why her department refuses to pay Connaught Laboratories for the two million doses of vaccine, and in not doing so has broken a link of mutual trust with a vital source of vaccine and is thereby endangering the lives of Canadians in the event of another national epidemic emergency.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

[Translation]

FINANCE

SUGGESTION QUEBEC SALES TAX MEASURE BE WITHDRAWN—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion dealing with an urgent matter.

Considering that the bill introduced by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) concerning the refund of the $186 million owed by the federal government to the lawful Quebec government is an arbitrary gesture, a dangerous precedent and a constitutional hurdle; considering that the suggested formula ignores the unanimous desire voiced by all parties at the provincial legislature and the wish expressed by leaders to hold direct negotiations between governments; considering that the bill would frustrate over 300,000 citizens of that province who do not pay any federal tax and consequently will not get any compensation to which they are as much entitled as are all other Quebec and Canadian taxpayers, I moved, seconded by the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Grafftey):

That the House unanimously urge the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) to withdraw immediately that unfair bill which does not meet the objectives aimed at in his budget and could forever jeopardize relations between Ottawa and Quebec.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there such consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

[English]

CORPORATE AFFAIRS

REPORT OF ROYAL COMMISSION ON CORPORATE CONCENTRATION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to move a motion of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the fact that the report of the Royal Commission on Corporate Concentration constitutes a $3 million whitewash of the problems associated with the concentration of corporate power, problems which have now been recognized by most other industrial countries, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That this House urges the government to consider seriously applying the Minister of Transport's user-pay principle and regain from large corporations in Canada the $3 million misspent in producing this slick advertising propoganda on their behalf.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for debate can be done only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

FINANCE

REQUEST FOR DATA ON INFLATION EXCLUDING SALES TAX CUTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Whereas the people of Canada have a right to know the true rate of inflation in Canada, and whereas the government appears to be hiding behind a temporary artificial drop in the consumer price index, I move, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath):

That this House request that the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce direct Statistics Canada to publish data showing the rate of inflation without the sales tax cuts, which is the rate voters will experience after the fall election.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of this motion for debate would require the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

[Translation]

REQUEST MINISTERS DELIVER SALES TAX CHEQUES TO QUEBECKERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I rise under Standing Order 43 and request the unanimous consent of the House to discuss a motion relating to a matter of pressing necessity.

Given the unbelievable decision taken yesterday by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) in what we might call the sales tax affair, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez):

That the House ask the Minister of Finance, the Minister of State for Urban Affairs and the Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations to go in person and give each Quebec resident his cheque. While so doing, they might seize that opportunity of trying to explain to the people of Quebec the tact and the intelligence of the federal Liberals.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The House has heard the hon. member's motion. Pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion can be put only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

[Mr. Speaker.]

[English]

NATIONAL SECURITY

GRANTS TO CENTRE FOR EXPERIMENTAL ART AND COMMUNICATIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent necessity.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Cossitt: It pertains to an organization known as the Centre for Experimental Art and Communications, 15 Duncan Street, Toronto, the publishers of a monthly news magazine entitled "Strike". Its current issue reads in part:

In the manner of the Red Brigades, we support leg shooting/knee capping to accelerate the demise of the old system.

● (1412)

I move, seconded by the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay):

That the Prime Minister make a full statement concerning sizeable federal government grants to this organization in the amount of many thousands of dollars, including Canada Council grants of $29,000 in 1975-76 and $47,200 in 1976-77, that he make public the amount of travel grants given to this organization and whether our security services are aware if such grants were used by representatives of the group to meet with terrorists abroad and, finally, whether the government is aware that this organization advocating terrorism owns the building at 15 Duncan Street in Toronto where the Liberal party occupies spacious offices.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for debate requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

HOUSE OF COMMONS

ANNUAL INCREASES FOR COMMONS AND LIBRARY STAFF—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to ask the unanimous consent of the House to deal with a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the fact that the possibility of a spring or summer election has been the primary excuse for not giving the employees of the House of Commons, members of parliament staff and the library of parliament their annual increases which are now a month and a half overdue, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom):

That this House instruct the government to immediately introduce a 9 per cent wage increase for employees of the House of Commons and library of parliament and to reconsider plans to re-evaluate the work of employees of members of parliament so that they may begin to be paid salaries that reflect the work they do.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) will realize that pay increases related to the staff of the House of Commons are not at all the responsibility of the government; they are the responsibility of the Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

[Translation]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIOLATION OF HUMAN RIGHTS—PROPOSAL GOVERNMENT EXPRESS CONCERN TO U.S.S.R.—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Claude-André Lachance (Lafontaine-Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to ask for the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion about a matter whose urgency will be obvious to everyone.

Given the fact that with the opening of the trial in the Soviet Union of physicist Yuri Orlov who is accused by Soviet authorities of having established a group to observe the implementation in Soviet territory of the provisions contained in the Helsinki agreement and to report abroad violations of human rights in that country, Dr. Orlov does not seem to enjoy in the course of that trial minimum legal guarantees, that he has been refused the right to present a full and complete defence, that access to the court has been denied to foreign journalists and that clearly he will not have a fair and just trial, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont (Mr. Joyal):

That this House urge the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Jamieson) to express to Soviet authorities the concern of the Canadian government and people about what appears to be another violation of human rights in the Soviet Union.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the hon. member's motion. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, that motion requires unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

[English]

INDUSTRY

MULTINATIONAL NEGOTIATIONS TO COUNTER ADVERSE CONDITIONS FOR CANADA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under Standing Order 43. Since two key industries in Nova Scotia, Hawker Siddeley and Michelin Tire, continue to be adversely affected by legislation and unfair competition from abroad, in the case of Hawker Siddeley by unfair competition from Japan and the EEC and in the case of Michelin Tire by discriminatory countervailing duties initiated by the United States, I move, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie):

That appropriate members of cabinet immediately explore measures to counter these adverse conditions which could affect many hundreds of jobs by instituting high-level negotiations in particular with the United States, the United Kingdom and Japan.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for debate at this time, pursuant to Standing Order 43, requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

HOUSE OF COMMONS

ANNUAL INCREASES FOR COMMONS AND LIBRARY STAFF

Mr. Speaker: Before beginning the oral question period, and arising out of the motion put forward by the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez), I would like to address the House regarding pay increases for the staff. There has been concern expressed a number of times by members on both sides of the House about the progress of the salary arrangements for this fiscal year for staff members of the House of Commons.

I would like to indicate to the House that the matter has been under very diligent consideration on my part and on the part of the Commissioners of Internal Economy. We have shared responsibilities in this respect. On my part it is to represent the interests of the staff of the House of Commons, and on the part of the commissioners, of course, it is to represent the expenditure side of the ledger. We have undergone considerable review and re-examination of several proposals. We are not delaying the matter but are simply endeavouring to come to a consensus, which we hope to be in a position to announce very soon.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

FINANCE

SALES TAX PROPOSAL RELATING TO QUEBEC

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Finance. It concerns the government's latest variant in the sales tax proposal as it applies to the province of Quebec, a proposal that is not equitable as it concerns the people nor as it concerns the provinces.

● (1417)

Could the Minister of Finance advise this House of Commons whether he or his officials denied the request of at least one other province that it vary the federal sales tax proposal by using the money from their one point of sales tax to finance job creation programs? If they did deny that to one other province, will that denial stand in light of legislation introduced by the minister, and will the government open alternatives for variance of the sales tax proposal to other provinces?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, there was, during the discussions, a proposition made by the provinces. Some wanted many ways to operate that. I think there was some suggestion of that nature. I discussed with my colleagues what could be done and how we could make it as flexible as possible. Of course, we have not accepted the proposition that the money could be applied to other things than sales tax.

Mr. Clark: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I want to be clear on this. The government's proposal is to make an exception in the application of that proposal as it applies to Quebec but to deny that exception to other provinces. I understand that to be what the Minister of Finance just said.

I want to get to the equity of this proposal as it deals with individuals. It is clear that what the government is proposing is a bonus to the rich: it proposes to pay $85 to Quebeckers like the Prime Minister, like Senator Giguere, like Bud Drury, but to deny it to the 2.2 million Quebeckers who are now of working age but who last year did not pay federal income tax in the province of Quebec.

Will the Minister of Finance tell us why he is denying aid to low income Quebeckers who would have been aided by a reduction in sales tax on those commodities for which they pay as the rich pay but for which they have more need?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member does not comprehend very well what we have done.

An hon. Member: Nobody does.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: In Ontario and in all the provinces, what we have done—and it can be found in the budget speech—is reduce the income tax of every taxpayer in all provinces but Quebec by $100. Every province in the agreement has raised its own income tax by $100, and with the proceeds of that money they have decided to reduce the sales tax.

The government of Quebec has not agreed to reduce the sales tax across the board, so we have decided to carry out our commitment as much as we can in paying the $40 million that goes to the items they have cut. If the Quebec government and the Leader of the Opposition would like to be fair to everybody, they should have been on my side when I said to Quebec that they could cut the sales tax to everybody on all items so that the poor would have the money.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: On top of all that, with the way Quebec has cut its taxes, and when talking about the rich, if a rich man goes into a store in Quebec today and buys his wife a fur coat at $10,000, he will have a tax reduction of $800. If another rich person goes in a store in Montreal to buy furniture coming from France, like the Roche-Bobois type, and pays $10,000 for it, he will get an $800 break. The best way for all the people would have been for the government to do the sensible thing that the other provinces did and cut the sales tax across the board for everybody.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance should stop worrying about buying fur coats and address himself to the question of why his government is proposing a measure that clearly penalizes the poor in two ways: first, by ignoring some 2.2 million Quebeckers who would have been able to take advantage of sales tax cuts as proposed by the government of Quebec and, second, by introducing a sliding-scale arrangement.

Our estimates show that there are some 150,000 Quebeckers who in the 1977 tax year paid less than $85 in income tax. Consequently, they will be receiving less than $85 through this arrangement—less than the rich in terms of the benefits of this proposal. Why did the Minister of Finance not introduce some measure, if he intended going to this extreme, that was more equitable than giving more to the rich and less to the poor, as he is proposing in this measure?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I shall have to explain again to the hon. member what we are in fact doing in our budget. What we did is that we have reduced the income tax in all provinces in a fair way, which means we have reduced the income tax by $100 in Ontario, in Manitoba, in Saskatchewan, in British Columbia or in the Maritimes; on the other hand, the provincial governments have raised their income tax, and as we levy taxes for both levels of government, we have offered Quebec $85 in the same manner. If Mr. Parizeau wants to increase his income tax or other taxes, he can do so, except that we do not levy taxes for the provincial government; this is why we passed the reduction directly on to the individuals. We did it in such a way that we have vacated a field which the government of Quebec can take over if they wish but they cannot get benefits from both sides, which means they cannot increase their taxes and receive a benefit which the other provinces did not receive. As a matter of fact, the other provinces had to raise their income tax, and Mr. Parizeau can do the same thing. We have simply left one tax field.

● (1422)

[English]

Mr. Clark: May I ask one further simple question of the Minister of Finance? Since we have now been assured by the Prime Minister that there was never any intention to call an election and that there was never any urgency, consequently, to bring in a budget, why did the Minister of Finance not avoid all of this problem? Why did he not secure the absolute agreement of all the provinces before he proceeded with an act that involved an intrusion into provincial jurisdiction?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, for the first time I, the Minister of Finance of the land, took the time to visit the provincial ministers of finance and discuss this proposition.

An hon. Member: And you messed it all up.

Mr. Chrétien: It is beyond me to listen to the Leader of the Opposition who for weeks and months was asking me when we would have a budget, and today he gets up and says we were too early with the budget.

Mr. Clark: I said you are incompetent.

Mr. Chrétien: In a nutshell, I want to say that what we have done for Quebec in reducing federal income tax is the same thing that we have done for the other provinces.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PAYMENT OF INCOME TAX REBATES

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is also to the Minister of Finance. I want to refer him to a statement made by the Prime Minister at the December, 1969, constitutional conference regarding the rationale for direct payments through income tax rebates by the federal government to individuals. The Prime Minister said:

Within each province where the scheme applies, there is going to be a redistribution of benefits and certainly we are going to tax all rich Canadians, no matter where they are, a little more to help the less rich Canadians—

I would like to ask the Minister of Finance how he is going to explain to those 2.2 million poor people in the province of Quebec who are at the lower end of the income scale how the federal government can justify paying a rebate to those in the higher income levels, reversing what the Prime Minister said would be the rationale for this type of payment back in 1969?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am doing exactly the same thing for Quebec as I have done for the other provinces. I have reduced the income tax of the federal taxpayers. That is exactly what I am doing in Quebec with the balance of the money that the Quebec government did not want to use to cut sales tax. I think it is very clear what we are doing. There is no difference in treatment between Quebec and the other provinces. We have cut income tax in the federal budget for the citizens of all provinces and the provinces raised their own income tax by the equivalent amount of money.

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, once again referring to the 1969 statements of the Prime Minister which seem to have been so reversed now, when referring to the spending power and payments to persons and institutions at that time the Prime Minister said:

It is not possible to enter into a discussion of this particular proposition without considering the whole of the structure of Canadian federalism—

● (1427)

Now that the Minister of Finance has taken the country into an era of balkanized federalism and established a very dangerous precedent in what is going on, why has the government decided to endanger the very basis of our federal system by choosing a method of payment which bypasses the provincial governments and which the government at one time considered should only be proceeded with in a review of the whole structure of federalism?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I made exactly the same offer to the Quebec government as I made to the other provinces at the time of the budget. It is not me; it is the Quebec government which decided to balkanize the country in proceeding the way they have.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: After I made the offer there was no way I could go back to the other provinces and offer the same deal, because I wanted to be fair to everybody. For example, the citizens of Ontario would like to see the automobile tax cut; however, that would not have been agreeable to British Columbia because they are more interested in building materials. The ones who are trying to divide this country are the Parti Québécois in their manoeuvring. I am surprised that a national party wants to save the neck of the Parti Québécois.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

* * *

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INVESTMENT IN CANADA TO CREATE JOBS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, when the Minister of Finance has no other argument, he hides behind the Canadian flag.

I have a question for the Prime Minister. The Royal commission on the effects of corporate concentration having wasted $3 million of taxpayers' money on behalf of Argus, Power Corporation and the like, I would like to ask a question on this important subject which we thought would be dealt with by the royal commission. When the Prime Minister cancelled plans for a summer election, he said he wanted co-operation on measures to deal with the Canadian economy. The Royal commission said nothing about the serious effects of multinationals like Inco setting their own priorities: having the exclusive right, for example, to invest millions abroad precisely at the time we need such investment to create jobs here in Canada.

Will the government in the next few weeks bring in legislation similar to what has been done in most other industrial countries, which will give the Government of Canada authority to enter into long-range planning agreements with such corporations to ensure that when decisions like that are made by Inco to invest abroad, the public, through the Government of Canada, will have a crucial say in such decisions?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the leader of the New Democratic Party is making light of a report by the Royal commission with which he does not happen to agree. The position of the government is that this Royal commission researched into a very difficult and complex subject. They came up with many recommendations, some of which are liable to be accepted by the government and some of which are not liable to be accepted by the government.

However, we will not, as the leader of the New Democratic Party does, let our prejudices speak for an intelligent judgment on it. We will study it and the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs will make a report to cabinet on it.

Mr. Broadbent: I wish the Prime Minister would at least pay members of the House the courtesy of listening to the questions. I simply said the Royal commission did not deal with that issue. I pointed out that Canadians are losing thousands of jobs because multinationals in this country, unlike most other countries, have the unilateral right to transfer funds out of the country. Will the government of this country, like most other countries in Western Europe, and Japan, bring in legislation which will give it some authority to play a role in this decision-making process? I would like the Prime Minister to reconsider and answer that question.

I will ask a related question. Another area that was neglected by the Royal commission was the right of the banks, for example, to set their own investment priorities. In particular, considering the kind of decision that was made by the Royal Bank of Canada at the time, which was to give Power Corporation $150 million to buy Argus—which would have created no new jobs and would only have resulted in the concentration of more power—will the government bring in legislation similar to that which exists in other countries in order to give the Government of Canada a role to play in major investment decisions affecting the economy?

● (1432)

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the second question was a variation of the first. The hon. member uses the fact that he does not agree with the Royal commission report as a pretext for making a certain number of representations to the government. I will note those representations.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, in 1975, as a result of questions I asked, the Prime Minister set up this silly Royal commission and we have seen where it has got us after three years. Bearing in mind that he has asked for co-operation from this side of the House in the coming months to deal with serious legislation, allegedly to find jobs for Canadians who need them, can he tell the House what plans he has to bring in legislation either in the short-term or the medium-term which will effectively come to grips with the shortcomings of the Canadian economy?

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, Mr. Speaker. We shall be announcing such legislation very soon.

Mr. Broadbent: After ten years!

* * *

[Translation]

FINANCE

METHOD OF COMPENSATING QUEBEC FOR LOSS OF SALES TAX REVENUE

Mr. Gilles Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Since we have been informed today that the generous handouts of the federal government in the sales tax field were made at the expense of the provinces and that they have been forced to increase their taxes by $100, we can appreciate the attitude of the government and its sincerity in helping people. Considering that the Quebec minister of finance has decided to help productive sectors with this tax reduction, that is furniture, textiles and footwear, and that the province of Quebec had every right to use these funds as it saw fit, what does the minister propose to do to respect those decisions and to give to everybody equal opportunities of obtaining his fair share of the refund made by the federal government and not only to those who file a federal income return?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we have made the same proposal to Quebec as to other provinces. The federal transfer of funds has been made through a federal income tax reduction and provinces other than Quebec have increased their income taxes accordingly. As for the benefit they have obtained, they applied it to all items covered by the sales tax. It was up to the Quebec government, if it wanted all taxpayers to take advantage of it, to reduce the sales tax on other items.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): I wish to direct a supplementary question.

In view of the fact that the application of the sales tax is not limited only to taxpayers but to the public as a whole, and that the minister was wrong a while ago when he said that Quebec was the only province out of step, is the minister aware that the four western provinces have supported Quebec's claims?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I am afraid this is not the right interpretation to give to the statement of the western provinces. As a matter of fact, a number of provinces have not supported Quebec's decision to cut off this tax unilaterally, and all the ministers of finance have indicated to me when I talked to them how disappointed they are that Quebec has refused to co-operate in this matter as they did among themselves.

* * *

[English]

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

VALUE OF CANADIAN DOLLAR—CONTRIBUTORY EFFECT ON INFLATION

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Now that the Statistics Canada figures with respect to inflation have been made public, indicating that when the provincial sales tax figures are added back in, the inflation level in Canada in the past year has been 9.1 per cent, would the right hon. gentleman tell us whether Governor Bouey of the Bank of Canada was expressing government policy today when he said the falling dollar was contributing to inflationary pressures, and that whatever advantage it would give to Canadian exports would be lost if we did not contain the fall-out effect of the devalued dollar on costs and prices?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have not read the speech by the governor of the bank, who agreed to appear before a committee this morning. I will look into that. I think the hon. member should recognize that in the last three weeks the value of the Canadian dollar has increased substantially.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, you should give permission to the hon. member to be away for another week, because when he is not here with his rumours the dollar moves up.

An hon. Member: Go home.

Mr. Stevens: A supplementary to the Minister of Finance, who ignores the fact it was he who triggered the fall in the dollar initially: it would never have fallen so low but for his inept handling. Since the inflation levels now prevalent will be aggravated by the fall in the dollar, and since the governor of the Bank of Canada indicated today that it was "money incomes that are causing the problem" and that "we are paying ourselves too much money", would the minister tell us whether he agrees with the governor that the efforts of wage earners seeking to keep up with inflation will in turn cause more inflation?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I have recognized many times that Canadians in the last little while have been very responsible on that score. The level of compensation in this country is now more competitive, the dollar is at a more realistic level and the economy is gaining greatly. This was evident last month when we saw the biggest ever surplus in our monthly trade balance.

Mr. Stevens: Speaking about the competitive balance, particularly between Canadians and Americans, it is generally agreed that the excessive tax rate in Canada is one reason Canadians are tending to demand higher wages. Would the minister tell us, since the Bryce report is suggesting the phasing out of corporate income tax, whether the government plans any review of personal income taxes to ascertain whether there is some way in which they can be lowered?

Mr. Chrétien: The Prime Minister said earlier we would study the recommendations in the report tabled yesterday. I do not accept the suggestion that the level of taxes is unfair in Canada. The corporate tax rate, for example, is comparable to the American level. As to personal income tax, as I have said on other occasions in this House, we enjoy social services in Canada which are much better than the Americans offer to their citizens.

* * *

STATISTICS CANADA

REPORTING OF CONSUMER PRICE INDEX

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Can the minister explain why it is that Statistics Canada, notwithstanding the fact that the sample of the consumer price index was made prior to the bringing down of the budget, showed the advantage to the CPI of the reduction of the sales tax even though it became effective after the sample was taken? Perhaps he would assure the House that there has been no interference by himself or by any member of the government with Statistics Canada or the consumer price index.

Hon. Jack H. Horner (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the House there has been no interference with the sampling or with the index. I should also like to tell the hon. member that if the sales tax comes off for half a month, that half month is taken into consideration in computing the index for the whole month.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, as usual, the minister is uninformed. If that were the case, we would obviously have a far different consumer price index from this one which reports an over-all reduction for the entire month when it should not reflect any reduction at all.

Will the minister give us an assurance that the government will ask Statistics Canada to change the method of calculating the consumer price index so that it will show a more accurate measurement of the cost of living of low income earners, the fastest growing group in the country?

● (1442)

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I disagree with the preamble completely. I might inform the House, also, that Statistics Canada is working on a new formula for the consumer price index which I hope to be able to announce. I might say, also, that we were asked to devise a new formula for the consumer price index by the Premier of Ontario and by the Premier of Alberta at the first ministers' conference, and this was agreed upon by all first ministers at that conference.

Mr. McGrath: May I ask the minister if it is the intention of the government to ask Statistics Canada not to proceed with its plan to change the base rate in the consumer price index from the 1971 dollar to the 1974 dollar, which again, of course, will give the false impression that this government has inflation under control?

Mr. Horner: I think that today Statistics Canada is using a formula devised in 1969. We intend to update that.

* * *

HEALTH AND WELFARE

MINISTER URGED TO RECONSIDER BAN ON SACCHARIN

Mrs. Simma Holt (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the fact that the head of the health protection branch who precipitated the arbitrary and total ban of cyclamate in the summer of 1970, claiming that cyclamate was carcinogenic, this action causing severe damage to Canadian independent business, and since the same spokesman stated just last week that the great preponderance of world evidence indicates that cyclamate does not produce cancer, would the minister reconsider the competence of that person and the authenticity of his alleged science which led to the current precipitous ban of saccharin, using the identical claim, and even the same words, relative to the cyclamate ban eight years ago?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I know that moving saccharin from grocery store shelves to pharmacies has created some hardship, which we are trying to eliminate as soon as possible by bringing in new artificial sweeteners which are not damaging. I know that it also reopened the whole question of cyclamates, but I should like to confirm to my colleague, as well as to other members of the House, that we review and update scientific knowledge on that subject regularly.

The cyclamates which were used together with saccharin in previous artificial sweeteners and which were thought at that time to be a possible cause of cancer have now been identified as a separate element which does not cause cancer. I think it is unfair to make the assumption she made in the preamble to her question. The state of knowledge in the area is being constantly perfected and, as the government, we must act on what we know and as everyone would agree we must take a calculated risk in order to protect the health of Canadians.

* * *

FINANCE

FEDERAL METHOD OF DEALING WITH QUEBEC SALES TAX CUTS

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the right hon. Prime Minister: it relates specifically to the sales tax matter in general and the province of Quebec in particular. When this matter first came up and our party supported the proposition put forward by the Quebec minister of finance, we were accused of encouraging separatism.

The question I put to the right hon. Prime Minister today is: Why is his government, with one policy for Quebec and another policy for the rest of Canada in reality, encouraging the two solitudes and not only encouraging but practising separatism?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in the preamble to his question the hon. member suggests that his party wanted us to follow Mr. Parizeau and give the money to Mr. Parizeau, the finance minister of the province of Quebec. Today we have been hearing a series of questions from the Leader of the Opposition and the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands saying we should give the money to the poor people. Obviously, within a matter of a week the Tory party has flip-flopped. First they want to go to Parizeau and now they want to go to the poor.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Serge Joyal is not laughing.

Mr. Trudeau: As to the question itself, Mr. Speaker, about treating the country differently, I repeat what the Minister of Finance said to the Leader of the Opposition. Obviously, the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi does not understand what is being done. In the case of every province, including the province of Quebec, what this scheme involves is giving tax room to the provinces. We did this in the budget on budget night by giving tax room to every province so that they could occupy that tax room. We have done just the same thing for the province of Quebec. We have given it tax room so it could occupy it. It is the same thing for all the provinces.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Grafftey: I wonder if that includes the province of Alberta.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Translation]

SALES TAX COMPENSATION FOR QUEBECKERS NOT FILING INCOME TAX RETURN

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that, since he made his statement here yesterday, several members of his party here in Ottawa have indicated that they are against the proposition, including a number of Quebec representatives from the government side—

Some hon. Members: Give us their names!

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi has a question, would he put it.

[Translation]

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that several members from the government side here in Ottawa are against this proposal—

Some hon. Members: Give us their names!

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I was not asking the hon. member to repeat the preamble.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Tell them to keep quiet over there.

Mr. Paproski: Tell those Liberals to keep quiet.

[Translation]

Mr. Grafftey: Considering that only the citizens of the province of Quebec who pay income tax will receive a rebate from the federal government, could the Minister of Finance inform the House today how, specifically, he intends to compensate the poor people of the province of Quebec who do not pay any income tax? Moreover, considering that Mr. Parizeau's proposal received the support of all opposition parties in the province of Quebec and several federal members of parliament, will he forget his confrontation policy and accept Quebec's proposal as soon as possible?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to tell the hon. member that we have offered a taxation field which could be taken over by Quebec, much as we did for the other provinces. The formula used was to cut the federal income tax and allow the provinces to move into this taxation field. Quebec received the same proposal as the other provinces. I do not understand how the hon. member fails to comprehend that aspect. It is obvious to me.

As to the members of my own party who might not have supported this proposal, I wish the hon. member would try to name them.

ALLEGED INJUSTICE TO QUEBECKERS RESPECTING SALES TAX

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, when I look at the proposal of the Minister of Finance, I see it is true that if ridicule killed, he would not be in the House today.

Here is my question. As, according to the proposed formula, couples where both partners work will normally receive $85 each, while families where only the father works will receive only $85, can the Minister of Finance tell us whether he considers that as an answer to the just society promised by his Prime Minister?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, when we cut taxes, we cut taxes. The same thing goes for Ontario and the other provinces. We cut the income tax of every taxpayer. The proposal of the hon. member to the House at this point does not hold any water because we did exactly the same thing throughout Canada. We have withdrawn from a field of taxation which the other provinces have taken over without the hue and cry the Quebec government is trying to stir up in an attempt to derive the political advantages the hon. member supports.

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, allow me to remind the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister that the Quebec Minister of Finance got the support of all opposition parties, as well as that of Mr. Ryan, and the Prime Minister is aware of that.

Here is my question. Since the Minister of Finance intended it as an incentive to industry and since he recognized yesterday that his proposal no longer meets completely his basic objective, I conclude that the Minister of Finance deliberately lied to the Canadian people and, under the circumstances, does the minister—

Mr. Speaker: Order. If the hon. member has a question, I would ask him to put it immediately.

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, here is my question. The Minister of Finance intended this as a direct incentive to industry. Yesterday, he recognized that his formula was not a direct incentive. So, I conclude that he deliberately lied to the Canadian people, and I ask him to apologize to them.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I ask the hon. member to withdraw his words because they are unparliamentary. He used the terms "deliberately lied". Such words are unparliamentary and he should withdraw them before I can answer his question.

● (1452)

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Without being able to verify the exact language of the hon. member, my recollection is that what he had accused—

[Translation]

Mr. La Salle: That is what I said, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. What he did was accuse the hon. minister of directly lying to the population. Whether or not that accusation is made in respect of the House or whether or not it is made in respect of any action on the part of the minister, it seems to me the accusation by one member of another member of a direct lie is unparliamentary and must be withdrawn.

Some hon. Members: Three o'clock.

[Translation]

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, if I understood well, you want me to withdraw. In view of the commitments made by the minister regarding the proposals contained in his budget, and after what he did, I repeat that he is a liar.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Without having an opportunity to examine the record, the question period will not proceed unless and until the hon. member withdraws the remark he has made in respect of an accusation of lying by the minister, if that is in fact what has taken place. If the hon. member did not say what I have accused him of saying, I am prepared to listen to him. However, if he has accused the minister of lying directly, I would expect him to withdraw that. Otherwise, the question period cannot proceed.

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise on what I think amounts to a point of order at this point. It may be something else.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): In Your Honour's initial reaction to what was raised in the House by the Minister of Finance—and I am sure you did it deliberately—you mentioned that perhaps there might be a distinction. Quite frankly, I would like a few moments to consider what Your Honour has said in respect of that distinction. It is now five minutes to three o'clock: I wonder if the matter can wait until three o'clock.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have not heard from the hon. member for Joliette that he did not accuse the minister of lying directly. If he has accused the minister of lying, I would expect him to withdraw it. If he has not, I would expect him to make representations to that effect now. However, if that has been his accusation, the question period will not proceed unless and until that accusation is withdrawn.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Mr. Speaker.]

[Translation]

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, I listened attentively to your comments, and with all due respect, I also listened to the statement made by the Minister of Finance, his objectives, and his reaction to the allegations he made against us. We have always concurred in the unanimous stance taken by the National Assembly in this matter. The Minister of Finance always persisted in saying that we upheld a separatist measure or a measure aimed at undermining federalism, and such a statement is false. That is why I repeat that the Minister of Finance has been deliberately lying in this regard for the past three weeks, and I do not retract what I have said.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have made a decision in respect of the accusation of the hon. member for Joliette. He has not in any way withdrawn or in any way retreated from the accusation he has made against another member of the House of directly lying. The proceedings of the House will not go forward unless and until the hon. member either withdraws or retires.

Some hon. Members: Out!

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to get into the dispute as to what the hon. member said or what he should do. But it seems to me it is hardly fair to the rest of the House to cut off the question period for that reason. It seems to me, as is the case with most points of order or disputes, that this one should be raised at three o'clock.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am prepared to respect that there were a few minutes remaining in the question period. However, there is clear disorder in the House with the allegation and the statements made by the hon. member for Joliette in respect of another member of this House. In the face of that clear disorder, no other proceeding will take place unless and until either the hon. member withdraws that remark or extends an apology to the House for the use of that unparliamentary language, or else withdraws. Failing his withdrawal, I will have to compel his withdrawal from the premises.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, the question has now been clarified by Your Honour with regard to the use of the word "liar".

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I put it to Your Honour, and Hansard will show it—some hon. members present will remember—that during the years prior to Your Honour's accession to the Chair the word "liar" was used many times on both sides of the House. We can pick on the members who did it then; some of them are no longer here.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I would suggest it is an unfortunate extension of the question of privilege in that it has always, in my estimation, been that no hon. member could accuse another of being a liar in the House or to have deliberately misled the House. The hon. member for Joliette said that the minister had lied to the Canadian public. I know, as I stand here, that certainly Mr. Speaker Lamoureux made the distinction that one could say it was a lie to the public, but not in this House.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I have all the time in the world, too. An accusation of lying outside is certainly not an accusation of lying in this House. The privilege is in this House, not outside.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Edmonton West wishes to argue with the decision I have already taken. Rulings in respect of unparliamentary language are within the province of the Speaker. I heard the hon. member accuse another hon. member of the House of deliberately lying. This has been raised by that hon. member as a question privilege. I have found, unless the hon. member withdraws that remark, that I will have to ask him to be removed from the chamber.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The House will understand that in the failure of action on the part of the hon. member to whom I have extended the opportunity to withdraw the remark of unparliamentary language, it will be required that a motion, in the ordinary course of the precedents of our House, be put, as is the usual case, by the government House leader in respect of the withdrawal from the chamber or the eviction from the chamber of the hon. member who has uttered the offending remark.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

● (1502)

Mr. Speaker: All hon. members are aware that it has become an accepted part of our practice, before arriving at this stage, that an individual member who refuses to comply with an order of the Chair leaves the Chair no choice except to name that hon. member. Once again, before arriving at the stage of naming individually the hon. member for Joliette, I am now indicating to him again, for the third time, that I have found the language that he has used to be unparliamentary and it must be withdrawn, failing which I will have no alternative except to name him and ask that the government House leader make the necessary motion to have him ejected from the chamber for failing to comply with a direct ruling of the Chair.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, with respect, I believe it is important that all of us have an opportunity to see the blues, particularly the government House leader since he will be asked to move a motion. This parliamentary institution will not crumble to the ground, sir, if we proceed with other business until those blues are ready. I believe it is important that we see them.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member would have a very valid point had it not been for the fact that the hon. member to whom I have referred not only made the allegation in the first place but, in a subsequent presentation after an initial ruling by me, he got up in his place and repeated the allegation that he had made, in substantially the same terms. It is not necessary for me to read the transcript in the face of that. Therefore, in the absence of any action on the part of the hon. member for Joliette, I am left with no alternative but to name Mr. Roch La Salle.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, because of the importance of the situation that has arisen I feel I should explain, at least to the satisfaction of myself, the proceeding in which I am now engaged.

It has been the tradition of the House of Commons that when the Speaker names any particular member, the leader of the government in the House supports the Speaker in that decision. That, I believe, has been the unvarying tradition of the House of Commons with one exception, and when that occurred the Speaker of the day was left in a very exposed, unprotected, and unsupported position. It is therefore my desire in discharging my responsibility to support the Speaker.

I would add that while the Speaker did make the suggestion that I put this motion, it is a decision which the leader of the government in the House makes on his own account, and he can either agree—

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Move a motion.

Mr. MacEachen: —or disagree to move the motion. With that in mind, Mr. Speaker, and in accordance with the responsibility that you must discharge to the House, and in support of your responsibility, I would move, seconded by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford):

That the hon. member for Joliette be suspended from the service of the House for the remainder of this day's sitting.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It has been moved by Mr. MacEachen, seconded by Mr. Basford, that the hon. member for Joliette, Mr. Roch LaSalle, be suspended for the remainder of this day's sitting.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea;

Mr. Speaker: Those opposed to the motion will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. MacEachen) which was agreed to on the following division:

● (1512)

(Division No. 46)

YEAS

Messrs.

Abbott
Allard
Andras
(Port Arthur)
Andres
(Lincoln)
Appolloni (Mrs.)
Basford
Beaudoin
Béchard
Bégin (Miss)
Benjamin
Blackburn
Blais
Blaker Boulanger
Brewin
Broadbent
Buchanan
Bussières
Caccia
Cafik
Campagnolo (Mrs.)
Campbell (Miss)
(South Western Nova)
Caouette
(Témiscamingue)
Chrétien
Clermont
Collenette
Condon
Corbin
Corriveau
Côté
Cullen
Daudlin
Dawson
De Bané
Demers
Dionne
(Northumberland-Miramichi)
Douglas
(Bruce-Grey)
Douglas
(Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands)
Duclos
Dupont
Dupras
Duquet
Faulkner
Fleming
Foster
Francis
Gauthier
(Roberval)
Gauthier
(Ottawa-Vanier)
Gendron
Goodale
Goyer
Gray
Guay
Guilbault
Harquail
Herbert
Holt (Mrs.)
Horner
Jamieson
Joyal
Kaplan
Knowles
(Winnipeg North Centre)
Lachance
Lajoie
Lalonde
Lambert
(Bellechasse)
Lamontagne
Landers
Lang
Laniel
LeBlanc
(Westmorland-Kent)
Lefebvre
Leggatt
Loiselle
(Chambly)
Loiselle
(Saint-Henri) Lumley
MacDonald
(Cardigan)
MacEachen
MacFarlane
MacGuigan
Marceau
Marchand
McRae
Munro
(Hamilton East)
Nicholson (Miss)
Nystrom
O'Connell
Orlikow
Ouellet
Parent
Pearsall
Pelletier
Penner
Peters
Philbrook
Pinard
Portelance
Raines
Reid
Roberts
Robinson
Rompkey
Roy
(Laval)
Sauvé (Mrs.)
Savard
Smith
(Saint-Jean)
Stewart
(Cochrane)
Stollery
Symes
Tessier
Trudeau
Turner
Watson
Whelan
Wood
Young—116.

NAYS

Messrs.

Alexander
Andre (Calgary Centre)
Baker
(Grenville-Carleton)
Baldwin
Beatty
Brisco
Cadieu
Clark
(Rocky Mountain)
Cossitt
Crosbie Darling
Dick Dinsdale
Elzinga
Epp
Forrestall
Friesen
Gillies
Graffrey
Halliday
Hamilton
(Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain)
Hargrave
Hees
Hnatyshyn
Holmes
Howie
Huntington
Hurlburt
Jarvis
Jelinek
Johnston
Kempling
Knowles
(Norfolk-Haldimand)
Lambert
(Edmonton West)
MacDonald (Miss)
(Kingston and the Islands)
MacKay
Mazankowski
McCain
McGrath
McKenzie
McKinley
McKinnon
Muir
Munro
(Esquimalt-Saanich)
Neil
Nielsen
Nowlan
Oberle
Paproski
Patterson
Pigott (Mrs.)
Ritchie
Rodriguez
Rynard
Schellenberger
Smith
(Churchill)
Stevens
Wenman
Whiteway
Whittaker
Wise
Yewchuk—62.

[Mr. Speaker.]

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: Order please. I declare the motion carried. I must now order the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) to leave this chamber pursuant to the House order that has just been adopted.

[English]

And Mr. La Salle having withdrawn:

Mr. Speaker: Presenting reports from standing and special committees. Tabling of documents.

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. As Your Honour will recall, the question of privilege was raised by the Minister of Finance before the end of the question period. In all fairness to the House of Commons, I think Your Honour would want to grant parliament the opportunity to have at least the seven or eight minutes left in the question period.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It seems to me that choice was in the hands of the hon. member for Joliette, not of the Chair.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): As I understand the rules, Mr. Speaker, questions of privilege and points of order are reserved if matters arise during question period until three o'clock when question period is terminated. Without intending in any way to be critical of the Chair, the fact remains that the Minister of Finance raised a question of privilege prior to three o'clock. It should not have been heard at the time it was heard. It should have been heard at three o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Yukon raises a valid point, one that ought to be explained to the House. The discretion is in the Chair as to whether or not any question of privilege raised can be deferred until three o'clock or the end of the question period, or whether it is of such a nature that it ought to be taken up forthwith before proceeding further with the question period.

● (1542)

Obviously, with respect to a matter of unparliamentary language, as I dealt with yesterday in the case of the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar when he had made a remark which I found to be unparliamentary, and, incidentally with respect to the point raised by the hon. member for Edmonton West, I did not find that based on any accusation regarding the Prime Minister's conduct in respect to the House but on a general accusation, the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar rose in his place and withdrew that remark forthwith.

The fact of the matter is that once the Chair has drawn disorder to the attention of the House, the disorder exists and the House cannot proceed in the face of a disorder and a finding of disorder by the Chair. Had the hon. member for Joliette done precisely the same today as the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar did yesterday, the question period would have continued. However, the Chair, it seems to me has no choice in the face of a finding of disorder, in permitting the question period, or any other proceedings for that matter, to go on, when in fact disorder has been found by the Chair. That is a discretion which the Chair has to exercise every day.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, may I now be permitted to make the central point of order that I rose to speak to, and that is, that having proceeded in this fashion, and the question of privilege having been raised prior to three o'clock and considered by the Chair prior to three o'clock, it would seem to me, and I submit this to you, sir, that what your decision means now is that you take the position that we cannot resume the question period in that the infraction of the rules by any member, whether he sits opposite or on this side, is sufficient, if we follow this route, to penalize all the members of the House. I submit that that is not a fair way to proceed at all and that we should be permitted to continue with the order of business which was interrupted at the time, and that all the members of the House should not be penalized for the infraction of the rules by any one member.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, yesterday, as reported at page 5409 of Hansard, this was your ruling with respect to the matter involving the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar. Your position was different today than it was yesterday. Yesterday as reported at this page you said this:

> Order, please. I will extend the question period by a moment or two to recognize two or three hon. members who have been attempting to be recognized—

I am reading exactly what it says.

> However, before I can go on, I will have to ask the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar to withdraw the remarks he has just made about the Prime Minister.

In that case, the member chose to withdraw. In this case the member chose not to withdraw. None the less, there are other members in this House who are quite outside the difference of points of view, and of the view expressed by the hon. member for Joliette, who ought not have their right to ask questions deprived on the day after you preserved their rights under a similar circumstance. That is precisely why I rose, sir. I think you should understand it.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I rose not to defer consideration of a matter that affected the Minister of Finance. We all know the House had to deal with that matter, and it did. I rose for two reasons, first, to have you consider the step that you were about to take—you did quickly and decided to move on—but second, to preserve as well the rights of all members with respect to the question period. I cannot see, sir, and I say this with great respect, why there should be one order made on one day and another order made on the other.

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make just one brief point. You have discretion as to whether you wish to continue the question period at all, but it seems that if you wanted to contribute, with the greatest respect, to a calmer atmosphere in the House, surely the right decision is to exercise your discretion and permit the five minutes that were lost to the question period so that there is not an appearance of chastising the opposition for something one individual member may have done. I urge you, Mr. Speaker, to exercise your discretion in this particular instance so that the rights and prerogatives of the opposition are preserved.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I think there is a bit more involved here than discretion. I believe the rules do provide a definite duration for the question period, and while, from time to time, we permit the question period to go beyond three o'clock and the period is extended until 3.05 or 3.07, I think that if any hon. member rose on a point of order at three o'clock he would be entitled to do so, and it seems to me the discretion of the Speaker could not openly and blatantly turn aside the words of the Standing Order. I do not really believe it is entirely a question of discretion. But I am not arguing that point.

If the Speaker chose to exercise a different discretion today than he did yesterday, I would support him in that because I believe the circumstances were so different that not only the Speaker but many others would like to express their displeasure at the conduct we have witnessed today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We are dealing with two issues, and I think we ought to be careful here to separate entirely the two issues. I will endeavour to do so and come to some disposition of this matter now.

The history of our practice during the question period has been a rather happy one because about a year ago we developed the practice of purging from the question period points of order and questions of privilege, and I think all hon. members would agree that has been a very beneficial experience and that the ability of the Chair to defer until the end of the fixed question period any such questions of privilege and points of order has been of great help to the conduct of the question period.

That, nevertheless, has left, as I indicated to the hon. member for Yukon, a residual discretion with the Chair that it is still possible for the Chair to determine, on any given day, that a question of privilege during the question period is so important and so fundamental that the question period, or no other proceedings, can really take place unless that matter has been set aside. In the light of that, I dealt with this matter which I thought was of a very fundamental importance today, and I hope hon. members will agree, whatever their disposition in terms of support was for the motion which ultimately arose, that it was a point that had to be taken up at once because it was of such a fundamental nature.

I do see a certain inconsistency. Having the ability to rely on a daily basis on this improvement in our practice which has purged the question period of these matters of privilege, or at least deferred them to three o'clock for the benefit of all members, I do see a certain inconsistency on a daily basis in the Chair relying on that, and the House relying on that, and then one day getting in difficulty and taking up a point that had to be dealt with and thereby depriving the House of the balance of the question period. Perhaps in not carrying on for the last five minutes of the question period I was being a bit precipitous in tying the two points together. However, in the circumstances, giving the House the benefit of the doubt, I think we ought to separate the two questions entirely and recognize that there were about five minutes remaining in the question period.

I do not believe, if my memory serves me correctly, that I had as yet recognized a second speaker in the New Democratic Party. I will do so, and he will be followed by a new speaker from the Conservative party.

* * *

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

COST OF FOOD IMPORTS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I choose my words to the Minister of Agriculture carefully. Perhaps I can switch for a minute to the consumer price index without insulting the hon. gentleman. I see from statistics which came out this morning that the increase in the price of food this year over last year amounted to about 14.7 per cent. The minister expressed the view on May 2 that much of the reason for this was too great a reliance upon food imports. Since about 70 per cent of these imports could be produced here I should like to ask the hon. gentleman whether he is prepared to introduce a national program to promote self-sufficiency in food in this country.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member says much of these products can be produced here. There is no doubt about it considering the growing season and the climatic conditions. But fresh leaf vegetables account for 31.6 per cent of this increase in one month.

If the hon. member would describe a way of growing these things in snowbanks, I would be glad to listen to him.

[Mr. Speaker.]

• (1552)

But if we want to have those products, we will have to import them. It is our desire to increase production of those products which we have the ability to produce in the most efficient manner, and our discussions with our trading partners in Geneva are conducted with that aim in view.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I am talking about a lot of products other than just lettuce. I am talking about beef, poultry, many fruits and vegetables, and also cheese, much of which we could be producing in this country. Since last week the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce announced a program of half a million dollars to promote the consumption of Canadian manufactured goods in the country, I should like to ask whether or not the minister will talk to his colleague and devise a similar program for the promotion of the production of food in our country, because if you take away grain and oilseeds, last year our deficit amounted to $1.8 billion.

Mr. Whelan: I think that again the hon. member is forgetting that this is the nation called Canada, which does not mean that if you take away one thing from one sector of the country, you would not have it. We are one of the most fortunate nations in the world because we do have all those things, and we have a tremendous balance of trade in agricultural products of about $800 million.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the minister is aware of the fact that we could be producing in Canada about 70 per cent of the foods we import from abroad, according to the figures from his own department, and that if we were producing them here in Canada we would be putting several hundred thousand more people to work. In light of those circumstances, would the minister consider at least setting up a task force to study the possibility of self-sufficiency in food in Canada?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, we are doing just what the hon. member is talking about, we are considering this. Our whole trading program is designed to encourage production of those products which we produce in our country in an efficient manner. We should increase production of those and import only those products which we do not produce efficiently here. The hon. member refers to some of the products that we import. With regard to commercial beef, we have trading partners with whom we have traded for years from whom we buy beef which we do not produce in our country. Is the hon. member suggesting that we stop trading with them and break our Commonwealth ties and our agreements under GATT? If he is suggesting that, let him say so.

HARBOURS

PROPOSAL TO IMPROVE DOCKYARD AT ST. JOHN'S, NEWFOUNDLAND

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce on a matter that is now lying before the minister, that is, the matter of the government dockyard in St. John's, Newfoundland, which is owned by the Government of Canada. The minister has had a proposal before him since March 21 requesting an $8 million expenditure to put in a synchro lift facility so that the dockyard can get a contract with the U.S.S.R. for the repairing of 60 ships a year, which would bring in an extra 200 jobs in St. John's, Newfoundland. Can the minister tell me whether that is now before him and whether he has made a decision to advance that money for the expansion of the dockyard in St. John's, as he has done in Quebec and British Columbia recently?

Hon. Jack H. Horner (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the minister from Newfoundland, as well as a number of Newfoundland members in the House, have discussed with me the whole matter of the St. John's shipyard. The matter is still under discussion before the cabinet.

Mr. Crosbie: Would the minister advise the House whether his colleagues on the other side are supportive of this proposal, or are they discussing it with the minister in an unsupportive manner?

Mr. Horner: Certainly all members from Newfoundland to whom I have spoken are supporting the province and doing everything they can to help development there.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

PUBLIC OPINION POLLS ACT

MEASURE TO REGULATE POLLS DURING ELECTION CAMPAIGNS

On the order: Introduction of bills:

May 10, 1978—Mr. Whiteway—Bill intituled: "An Act respecting public opinion polls"

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Yesterday, through inadvertence, a motion standing in the name of the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Whiteway), for the introduction of Bill C-455, an act respecting public opinion polls, was introduced and the bill was read the first time, ordered printed, and ordered for second reading at the next sitting of the House. All this is reflected in yesterday's Votes and Proceedings. I must now bring to the attention of the House, regrettably, that while the document in respect of the motion was prepared, the bill itself had not been finalized and therefore is not ready for introduction.

Order Paper Questions

Standing Order 69 is very clear. It reads:

No bill may be introduced either in blank or in an imperfect shape.

I now find myself required to direct that the order for second reading of the bill be discharged. We should also note that I ordered yesterday that the notice in the name of the hon. member for Selkirk be carried under "Introduction of Bills" on the order paper until the bill is drafted, which I expect will be shortly, and the hon. member will then be able to proceed to ask leave to introduce it pursuant to standing order.

* * *

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have a point of order which I should like to put forward while the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) is in the House. It has been brought to my attention by someone outside the House that the bill he introduced yesterday has not as yet been distributed. It is an important bill, and I understand the government House leader regards it as having some priority. Perhaps the Minister of Finance has some comment on this. The fact is that the bill has not been distributed as yet. If we are going to go ahead with it tomorrow, I think it would have to be distributed within the next hour. I suppose that if we are not going to go ahead with it tomorrow, there would be time. I just warn the minister.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I followed the traditional pattern. The responsibility for the distribution of the bill in the House does not rest with the department; it rests with the House of Commons. I have introduced the bill in the usual manner.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The bill was in my hands yesterday and it should have been printed and distributed in the ordinary manner for the benefit of hon. members. I will inquire forthwith why that step has not taken place, if it has not.

* * *

[Translation]

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: 33, 941, 1,382, 1,457, 1,458, 1,466 and 1,597.

I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Order Paper Questions

[Text]

DAIRY POLICY

Question No. 33—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Has the government in recent years announced its annual current year dairy policy well into the year concerned rather than before the year begins and, if so (a) for what reason (b) is the government considering changing the announcement date to an earlier date?

2. Has the Minister of Agriculture received complaints from dairy farmers that late announcements do not allow time to properly plan their year in regard to quotas, finances, imports and exports, etc., and, if so, is he prepared to take action to satisfy these complaints?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): In so far as the Canadian Dairy Commission is concerned, the answer is: 1. No. (a) The dairy year runs from April to April and the announcement is made around April 1 of each year. (b) Yes.

2. Yes. This question is presently under study with the Canadian milk supply management committee.

FARMERS' INCOME

Question No. 941—Mr. Mazankowski:

1. Does the Department of Agriculture agree with the forecast of Mr. E. S. Boyko, Assistant Director of the Agriculture Division of Statistics Canada, that realized net income of Canadian farmers will decline by 6.1 per cent during 1978 and, if not, what is the Department's forecast?

2. Will 1978 be the third consecutive year in which realized net farm income will have declined due to rising farm operating costs which are not being met by increased income and, if so, what specific actions is the Department planning to take to reverse this disastrous trend?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): 1. The Department of Agriculture accepts Mr. Boyko's forecast but would like to draw attention to the following point in the Statistics Canada outlook statement: "It should be remembered that realized net income is the residual between two other forecasts i.e. cash receipts and expenditures, and as such is very sensitive to changes in the two larger series. Indeed, if cash receipts were to increase by 2 per cent more than forecast, realized net income would increase."

2. If realized net farm income declines in 1978 then that would be the third consecutive decline. However it should be noted that even if such a decline occurred, realized net farm income in 1978 would be 45 per cent higher than it was in 1972. The Government operates programs under the Agricultural Stabilization Act, Western Grain Stabilization Act, Farm Product Marketing Agencies Act and Canadian Dairy Commission Act which take into account farm operating costs and reduce the effects of instability in Agriculture. In addition to such measures the agricultural development strategy, now being formulated in cooperation with the provinces, will assist agriculture to realize its full market potential.

EUROPEAN STUDENT TOBACCO WORKERS PROGRAM

Question No. 1,382—Mr. Dionne (Kamouraska):

Between 1972 and 1977, did any Europeans, students or other workers come to Canada to work on fruit or tobacco farms in Ontario or other provinces under an agreement with the Department of Employment and Immigration and, if so (a) how many (b) what were their terms of employment (c) what was the nationality of the persons involved?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Yes. (a) and (c)

Year	Total	Austria	Belgium	France	Ireland	Netherlands	U.K.	West Germany
1972	814	75	289	150	—	75	150	75
1973	1,163	36	350	251	—	150	266	110
1974	1,332	19	350	294	—	200	319	150
1975	1,172	16	350	296	—	150	245	115
1976	670	10	225	180	—	75	122	58
1977	669	9	225	180	32	75	90	58

(b) All workers were participants in the arrangement known as the European Student Tobacco Workers Program. Participants were required to be: students; pay their own air fare to and from Canada; and remain with their employer for the full tobacco harvest period (from the first of August to approximately the middle of September). Employers were required to pay the European students at least the local prevailing wage rate, depending upon the exact duties and the types of tobacco kiln used. Employers also provided the students with free room and board as long as the students remained to the completion of the harvest.

CANADIAN CHEESE

Question No. 1,457—Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse):

In 1976-77, what was the volume of Canadian cheese available on the Canadian market and (a) at what price (b) what variety of cheeses were sold (c) what was the rate of consumption?

[Mr. Pinard.]

Mr. Bernard Loiselle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Statistics Canada reports the following: The following table shows the domestic disappearance of cheddar and other cheese in Canada during calendar year, 1977.

Disposition of Cheddar and Other Cheese in Canada—1977

	Cheddar Cheese	Other Cheese
	'000 lb	'000 lb
Stocks January 1, 1977	55,114	15,926
Production 12 months 1977	177,159	118,980
Imports 12 months 1977	—	43,759
Stocks December 31, 1977	61,766	19,367
Exports 12 months 1977	1,630	2,370
Domestic Disappearance 1977	168,877	156,928

(a) This information is not available.

(b) Varieties, other than cheddar, manufactured in Canada during 1977 include the following:

Alpin	Formaggio	Portuguese
Amfrom	Fresco	Provincal
Basilica	Fresh Cheese	Provolone
Blue Vein	Furlano	Quark
Bra	Gouda	Richelieu
Brie	Gruyère	Romano
Burini	Jowa	Serra-Vaquinla
Caciocavallo	Lemoine	Semi-Soft
Camembert	Limburger	Spiced
Dolce	Maigrelet	Suries
Duro	Montasio	St-Paulin
Ermite	Monterey	Swiss
Esrom	Mt.-St. Benoit	Swisca
Feta	Mozzarella	Tilsiter
Fontina	Oka

	Cheddar Cheese	Other Cheese
(c) Per capita consumption	7.24 lb	6.73 lb

IMPORTED CHEESE

Question No. 1,458—Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse):

During the 1976-77 fiscal year, did Canada import cheese and, if so (a) in what volume (b) which kinds and, in each case (i) in what quantity (ii) at what price per pound?

Mr. Bernard Loiselle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Statistics Canada report the following: during the 1976-77 fiscal year, Canada imported 49,135,200 pounds of cheese for a total value of $52,598,758. A breakdown by kind and price appears on the following table.

STATISTICS CANADA—EXTERNAL TRADE DIVISION
IMPORTS OF CHEESE
QUANTITIES IN HUNDREDWEIGHTS
VALUES IN CANADIAN DOLLARS
APRIL, 1976 TO MARCH, 1977 INCLUSIVE
11 APRIL 1978 PAGE 1

	CHEESE CAMEMBERT CWT	CHEESE GOUDA CWT	CHEESE PROVOLONE CWT	CHEESE GRUYERE PROCESS CWT	CHEESE N. E. S. CWT
	20,488	43,607	9,723	50,208	367,326
	2,091,511	4,541,154	1,450,540	5,543,831	38,171,722
HUNDREDWEIGHT	141.13	104.14	149.19	110.42	103.92

YOUNG CANADA WORKS PROGRAM

Question No. 1,466—Mr. Allard:

1. Since the implementation of the Young Canada at Work Programme, did the government allocate money to the Constituency of Rimouski and, if so, in what amount?

2. For each project accepted, what was the (a) name of the project (b) amount allocated (c) year of acceptance (d) name of the municipality involved (e) number of jobs created?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): 1. Yes. $421,000 for the summer of 1977 and $316,000 for the summer of 1978.

2. See table below for 1977. The 1978 projects approval process is under way and therefore data is not available for this year. Regarding 2(b): For 1977, approved projects totalled $419,330 which is $1,670 less than the 1977 allocation. This amount was too small to approve another project, therefore was not utilized in the Rimouski constituency.

YOUNG CANADA WORKS SUMMER 1977
for the Constituency of Rimouski

Project Name (a)	Federal Contribution (b)	Project Location (d)	Jobs (e)
Éducation-Embellissement-Jeunesse	6,360	St-Moise	4
Carrefour	17,532	Rimouski	10
Loisissons-nous en collectivité	6,546	Les Hauteurs	4
Théâtre de marionnettes pour enfants	6,288	Sayabec	5
Aménagement terrain de la résidence	8,004	Mont-Joli	4
Initiation au camping de l'handicapé physique	15,204	Rimouski	7
Projet Jazzofolklorique	4,374	St-Narcisse	3
Inventaire de la clientèle et de ses besoins	11,232	Rimouski	6
Sport—Santé Mentale	8,304	Val-Brillant	5
Price—Jeunesse-en-Vacances	7,860	Price	5
Protection-Métis-Écologie-Environnment	10,040	Métis	5
Jacinthe de Saint-Moise	7,860	St-Moise	6
Nacel: Nettoyage, Aide, Culture, Expérimentations locales	13,632	Val-Brillant	7
Jamborée provincial de spéléologues de la Rédemption	11,232	La Rédemption	6
Arbor-Viron	4,254	Ste-Blandine	4
Loge-Étudiant	18,792	Rimouski	10
Étude Populations d'oiseaux du Québec	15,432	Rimouski	9
Participation dans les Entreprises	6,804	Rimouski	3
Embellissons Val d'Irene	5,724	Val D'Irene	4
Éveil	6,363	Ste-Jeanne	3
Embellissement Touristique	7,860	Padoue	5
Tremplin	11,232	Trinité-des-Monts	6
Faune et Flore Sous-Marine aux Îles du Bic	11,004	Bic	4

Order Paper Questions

Project Name (a)	Federal Contribution (b)	Project Location (d)	Jobs (e)
Épanouissement Jeunesse	6,360	St-Donat	4
Démographie Historique des Paroisses du Comté de Rimouski	13,032	Rimouski	7
Collection Régionale de Photographies Région Bas St-Laurent	5,832	Rimouski	3
Opération Plein Air	5,088	St-Narcisse	3
Expression Camping Intégration	8,646	Mont-Joli	4
Les Loisirs de St-Charles-Garnier	4,860	St-Charles-Garnier	3
Pleins feux sur la Garde des Enfants	6,360	Rimouski	4
Pointe-au-Père—Pointe-du-vent	8,904	Pointe-au-Père	4
Mouvement St-Gab	7,074	St-Gabriel	5
Apprentissage de la Culture Maraichère	12,352	Rimouski	6
Participation Étudiante à l'environnement	9,888	St-Cleophas	8
Animation et embellissement dans notre municipalité	9,054	St-Marcellin	8
La Blabation	12,360	Rimouski	9
Animation et prévention aux jeunes en difficultés	14,832	Rimouski	9
Les Jeunes en Plein Air	7,074	Luceville	5
Centre Étudiant d'information locale	5,402	Rimouski	3
Camp de vacances Salumonko	5,802	St-Donat	6
On Instruit nos Jeunes pour nous	3,780	Ste-Irène	3
Inventaire de la Flore de la Région de Rimouski	11,946	Rimouski	7
Potentiel Latent Main-D'œuvre des 45 ans +	8,646	Rimouski	5
Folklore Rimouski '77	8,904	Rimouski	4
Clinique Juridique élémentaire	6,537	Sayabec	4
Recherche et Information sur les Relations de Travail	6,804	Rimouski	3
Théâtre Étudiant Été '77	7,860	Rimouski	6

CNR—CPR

Question No. 1,597—Mr. Beaudoin:

How many passengers did CNR and CPR carry in (a) 1977 (b) 1967?

Mr. Bernard Loiselle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Statistics Canada reports the following: A comparison of the number of passengers carried by Canadian National and Canadian Pacific in (a) 1977 and (b) 1967 is provided in the table below:

Year	Revenue Passengers Carried[1] by CNR and CPR 1967 and 1977 Canadian National Railways	Canadian Pacific Ltd.
(a) 1977	9,538,522	3,861,761
(b) 1967	17,620,665	6,138,757

[1] Includes commuter passengers.

It should be noted that 1967 data reflect the influence on passenger travel of Expo 1967 in Montreal and other celebrations marking Canada's centennial.

[Mr. Cullen.]

[English]

Mr. Pinard: I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

* * *

POINT OF ORDER

MR. FRIESEN—DELAY IN ANSWERING QUESTION NO. 1,306

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, I submitted question No. 1,306 on February 10. It is not that complicated a question to answer. Much of it is statistical, but it is very important for me that I have the information for which I asked in that question. I would ask the parliamentary secretary if he could ensure that this question is answered quickly.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—MEASURES TO IMPROVE SMALL BUSINESS POLICIES

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley) moved: That this House regards the small business sector as a key to the regeneration of economic growth, increased employment, an improved balance of payments position and increased Canadian ownership of the industrial and resource sectors, and therefore urges the government to end the delay in formulating small business policies by immediately taking steps to:

(1) implement a small business act, to include a realistic definition of small business, the criterion for which will be owner-management;

(2) give tax rebates and other incentives to those small businesses which invest in research and development;

(3) provide an incentive tax credit to any Canadian citizen who makes a direct investment in the equity of a Canadian-owned business;

(4) amend those provisions of the Income Tax Act which discourage the transfer of small businesses within families or to employees; and

(5) create a small business secretariat, independent of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, its duties to include:

(a) ensuring that the decisions of the federal departments and agencies reflect the interests of small business,

(b) assisting small businesses to form consortia to improve opportunities for export and domestic trade,

(c) establishing a fixed proportion of government-purchased goods and services, to be supplied by small businesses, and

(d) exempting small businesses from the application of federal legislation potentially harmful to them.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Hon. members will note that the proceedings on this motion will expire at the ordinary hour of adjournment later this day, pursuant to Standing Order 58(11).

Before giving the floor to the hon. member for High Park-Humber Valley (Mr. Jelinek), I should like to bring to the attention of hon, members that I have been advised just now that at ten minutes to three o'clock this afternoon the bill referred to by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) was distributed.

Mr. Jelinek: Mr. Speaker, hon. members will note that my motion is rather lengthy. The reason for that, of course, is to catch up on lost time, the time since the Department of State for Small Business was formed two and a half years ago. It was just over two and one half years ago that a long awaited and welcomed move took place when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) appointed a member to his cabinet who would be responsible for looking after the interests of the small business community. At that time a glimmer of hope arose within this vast and major sector of our economy, and we hoped that at long last specific action would be taken to reduce the maze of bureaucratic regulations, controls, and directives, and that the general paperwork onslaught would be replaced with meaningful, incentive-oriented programs. Unfortunately our hopes have turned to disappointment. What seemed like an emerging light at the end of a long dark tunnel turned into nothing more than a marathon of studies upon studies.

● (1602)

In the meantime, we have attempted to offer a number of realistic recommendations dealing with the potential solution of the Canadian small business problem, in the House as well as across the country. We have developed a number of positive programs which we were looking forward to implementing as early as this coming fall. However, the Prime Minister put a monkey wrench into that by postponing the call for a federal election. Now that we will have to continue to suffer the government's inability to deal with the problems at hand for at least another few months, and possibly a full year, we would like to present a number of recommendations and proposals which have received general acceptance from the small business community, some of which are outline in the motion before us.

As we all know, because small business is the backbone of the Canadian economic way of life; because Canadian-owned and operated enterprises are diminishing rapidly, as witnessed by the number of bankruptcies which increased over 38 per cent in 1977 from the previous year, not to mention the number of businesses which are moving south of the border in order to operate within healthier economic climates; and because of the importance of restimulating the small business community, we must deal with the matter on as strictly a non-partisan basis as possible. Therefore it is my hope that the government will consider seriously, either by stealing, begging or borrowing, some of our recommendations. In fact the government does not have to stoop to that. It should consider seriously some of the recommendations, if not all of the recommendations and suggestions, that my colleagues and I will make today.

Before dealing with the recommendations, I should like to compliment the hon. Minister of State for Small Business (Mr. Abbott). I am sure that compliment comes as a surprise to him. I compliment him for taking at least the initial, long-awaited steps in attempting to reduce the paperwork burden which is so harmful to small businessmen, and for having produced the CALURA amendments. Also I compliment the minister and his predecessor for initiating the many studies, as outlined in the minister's booklet entitled, "Perspectives". These studies are all that have taken place. Unfortunately, those ongoing studies do not solve, in any way, shape or form, the present problems and concerns faced by small businessmen in this country.

I know we have received promises of action by the government, even as recently as last Friday when the minister indicated that he hoped to bring new programs before the House soon. We heard them in the throne speeches of 1973, 1974, and 1976. We heard them in a number of budget proposals. Yet, next to amending or updating existing programs, such as the Small Businesses Loans Act, no specific incentive oriented programs to assist small business have been implemented.

I sympathize with the minister because he is living in a policy vacuum. The small business community is slowly becoming aware of the fact that he is offering nothing more than lip service. Is it any wonder? I do not blame the minister himself. I blame the government and the Prime Minister for creating a lame duck department which does not have the power or the right to deal directly with the problems and potential solutions of the small business community. Imagine the unfortunate position of being dictated by and responsible to the minister from Crowfoot, who is serving out his time in parliament very quickly.

The manner in which this ministry is set up creates yet another horrendous bureaucratic animal, where the minister is responsible to so many other departments and ministries that he loses track of who to see, about what, and when. Therefore our first recommendation is to make the small business secretariat independent of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, as well as other departments, and basically to make it a one stop service centre. Instead of keeping small firms abreast of all aspects of government policy, the sector divisions of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce are usually ignorant, and small producers often are forced to deal with several other divisions of that department, as well as with other departments and agencies. I am referring, for example, to special import policy, enterprise development, revenue, finance, DREE, and the anti-dumping tribunal, just to name a few.

The small business secretariat, as proposed by our party, must be made aware of the policies of other departments regarding small business. It should be capable of co-ordinating the various policies so that a small firm requiring assistance will have the benefit of a one stop service centre and will not be shunted from department to department. Small firms are far too important to be kicked around.

Although the Ministry of State for Small Business has failed to develop programs and policies beyond the promise and study stages, after two years and two different ministers, several departments administer programs meant to encourage small business development. The Department of Finance is responsible for the Small Businesses Loans Act. We propose the transfer of responsibility for this act to the small business secretariat, as is the case with any other matter relating to small business.

The Department of Regional Economic Expansion has developed extensive programs for the encouragement of small business in the developing regions of this nation. The small business secretariat must move out of its glass tower at the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce and be prepared to work with others in the field to develop further small businesses. The secretariat must be aware of the programs and activities of other departments which may have an adverse effect on small business. I am referring to the Department of Finance Bank Act, the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs competition policy, the Department of Agriculture marketing boards, the Department of External Affairs international development agency, and the Department of National Revenue tariff policies.

Without awareness of the policies of other departments which directly affect small business, and the mandate to administer most small business-oriented programs, the secretariat can never move beyond the purposeless and functionless existence which it operates within presently. Because we believe small business is so important, we could not but expect the small business secretariat to become a focal point for Canadian small businesses.

What is small business? What is the definition of small business? I have attempted to receive a definition for some time from the government in order to know with what part of the Canadian constituency we are dealing. For example, in March, 1977, when asked to define small business, the then minister was unable to do so, even as it related to his own portfolio. Later he indicated that perhaps it would not be wise to define small business in any event because it would confuse matters. However, in September, 1977, the government finally made public the following definition:

—independently-owned firms which have not developed the managerial structures typical of large, mature corporations . . . and that branch plants should not be excluded automatically from the small business community.

Therefore, according to that definition, branch plants of foreign-owned multinational corporations were included in the government's definition of small business.

Again last Friday when questioned in the House, the minister defined small business as follows:

—as a business with fewer than 100 employees and which in general terms is legally and financially independent of a large corporation.

● (1612)

We finally have our first incentive to small business provided by this government. It was created two and half years ago, and it is an incentive not to increase growth and employment in order to remain within the limits of that definition. It is one of the most ridiculous definitions I have ever seen because it limits companies on the verge of breaking the 100 employee mark if they want to increase their employment and therefore their productivity and growth.

Notwithstanding that definition by the minister, this government in less than one year has come up with four different positions in so far as a definition is concerned. Is it any wonder that a nightmare of confusion and uncertainty exists within not only the small business sector but our whole economy? My party's definition, which we have been consistently recommending for a number of years, is based on a definition—and I am not ashamed to admit it—put forth by the United States Small Business Administration, "a small business is one that is owner managed and not dominant in its field." This definition has worked effectively in the United States and is being widely accepted by many.

We should not be ashamed to borrow things that work, and certainly we should look at the example of the United States Small Business Administration which has been in existence for 25 years, including some of the incentive-oriented programs they have established. This definition is accepted by many business-oriented groups such as the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, and even by some Liberals. As a matter of fact, the Ontario Liberal party's official definition of small business is exactly the same as our proposed definition, and I would hope that the federal Liberals would at least follow the example of their counterpart in the provincial legislature.

Despite all of these studies which we are talking about, the government continues to remain confused, whether it be on the issue of definitions or of presenting incentive programs because of the promises which have never been kept, from that first promise in the 1973 throne speech. We need less government interference and far more incentive-oriented programs and opportunities if our Canadian owned, operated and controlled, small business sector is to prosper. It is as simple as that, and we cannot continue to swamp them with bureaucratic directives.

The minister must agree that all of these studies have gone far beyond the guidelines and have created a maze of bureaucracy. None of the studies has produced any legislation or a program that has even been presented on behalf of the small businessmen. The small business ministry in this country, as I stated earlier, has been in existence for roughly two and a half years, yet the government's own attitude toward the small business sector has not changed. The government still does not have a small business policy. Two and a half years, the minister says.

Mr. Abbott: It was created in the fall of 1976.

Mr. Jelinek: Two years. I stand corrected on that, Mr. Speaker. However, even at that the government still does not have a small business policy nor does it have a small business act, and probably has not even considered one. Yet the minister in answer to many questions comes back and says, "John Bulloch of the Federation of Independent Businessmen agrees with what we are doing." However, John Bulloch also agrees with a small business act, and I am not suggesting that we follow the wishes of John Bulloch to the "t". I repeat, I am more satisfied with the United States Small Business Administration outcome. Their small business act has worked effectively and proficiently for the United States small business sector.

I believe that if the government is serious in dealing with the problems of small business, the most realistic and effective way of committing itself to these problems is to implement a small business act. This we are recommending.

The small business act would co-ordinate and define federal law and policy affecting the small business sector. Such an act would adopt the definition of small business used in other effective legislation as "owner operated companies not dominant in their field", as I said earlier. More important, that act would ensure that a small business program is not tucked away and isolated in some department whose first concern lies elsewhere.

The independent secretariat would then, as a result of this act, be committed to deal with the problems first hand. It would ensure that the decisions of other federal departments and agencies reflect the interests of small business. It would exempt small businesses from the application of federal legislation potentially harmful to them.

What legislation is harmful? For example, in the present case of import quotas, we accept the need to limit temporarily footwear and textile imports to a percentage of the Canadian market. That is a piece of legislation offered by this government which has, indeed, been harmful to many Canadian small businesses. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner) has muddled what ought to have been a positive move to protect Canadian jobs. Some would suggest that he has destroyed more jobs through store closings caused by the quotas than are protected by these import restraints.

I am sure the minister knows that by imposing the quotas for the protection of large shoe manufacturers or textile manufacturers he has forgotten, or ignored as is the case on most occasions, the small business sector which automatically falls within those quotas. The small specialty shops across the country cannot compete with the large manufacturers in any way but they also fall under these import quotas on textiles and shoes, and they go bankrupt as a result.

There are many cases of this. I have received a number of concerned letters in my own office and I am sure the minister has received similar letters. I have received representations from small business shoe retail outlets across the country and the same with textiles and clothing stores which import specialty items from, for example, Italy or Mexico. So the job of the independent secretariat, instead of being dictated to by IT and C and by the other large departments and instead of going through red tape in order to effect anything on behalf of the small businessman, would be in a far better position to deal separately with small business and keep it away from the harmful pieces of legislation that are good for the large corporations but not necessarily good for the small ones.

We have yet to hear the small business minister either publicly denounce the treatment small retailers have received at the hands of the quota administrators or to intervene to protect small retailers from the disastrous effects of such quota administration. Our proposed small business secretariat could exempt when necessary small firms from such harsh regulations. It would intervene before the regulatory body to assist the development of clear criteria for small business that would consider the problems such quotas may cause when constructed and administered without thought for these small firms.

I believe I have indicated that the only action this government has taken thus far, generally speaking, was to reshuffle old programs and amend and update existing legislation, whether it be changing the IDB to the FBDB or amending the Small Businesses Loans Act in order to keep up with the times. But even those amendments are not realistic. For example, in the loans act, those businesses eligible are defined as a small business enterprise whose estimated gross revenue does not exceed $1.5 million a year. You will recall that this is one of the amendments that increased the gross revenue from $1 million to $1.5 million.

● (1622)

On June 13 I moved a motion in the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs as the Small Business Loans Act was being amended, and I quote in part the text of that motion as follows:

—to change the definition so that subsidiary companies with parent companies who have sales over the amount ($1.5 million) . . . would not be eligible—

The then minister of small business was forced to accept the concept embodied in my motion. In committee he stated:

I have accepted the spirit of the recommendation. I make a commitment that we will bring forth an appropriate amendment at the report stage.

Although promises were made, the amendments to the Small Businesses Loans Act passed the House of Commons on June 13, 1977, without any reference to the ability of subsidiaries of large multinational companies to receive assistance under the act.

According to this legislation, which is the law of the land, today a small business is one having less than $1.5 million in sales. Let us consider several of these companies. There is, for example, Nordex Explosives Ltd., based in Montreal. Their sales in 1976 were $855,000. This company is safely under the small business sales limit of $1.5 million. But is this company in fact a small business? I would argue that it is not. And I think the major shareholder of the company, the Dow Chemical Investment and Finance Corporation of Michigan, would be rather surprised to hear that a company they control is a small business. Dow Chemical's assets exceeded $7.7 billion in 1977.

Another Canadian firm which appears to fit into this small business definition in the legislation, with only $1.3 million in revenue, is Debhold (Canada) Ltd., a subsidiary of De Beers Consolidated Mines Ltd., the international conglomerate holding a near monopoly in the world diamond market, yet they are eligible under the Small Businesses Loans Act. There are many others. There is Husky Leasebacks Ltd., and the list goes on and on. It is sufficient to show that a definition based on size alone, as used by the Small Businesses Loans Act, does not always describe what is the most important feature of a small business, that it be owner managed, as in our definition. The minister and the government must consider using that definition which has been accepted internationally. Naturally, this party would like to remove the ability of subsidiaries of multinational corporations operating in Canada to apply for and receive assistance under this act.

Still on the loans act, Mr. Speaker, in order to help owner-operated enterprises raise working capital, we are recommending that the small business loans program cover working, as well as investment capital where such funds are not available through normal commercial arrangements. We feel that including working capital assistance within the loans act would enhance the use of the act and assist the small firms where assistance is most required.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have attempted to be as general as possible in talking to our very positive motion today. I will not repeat all the points in the motion, but it spells out many of the incentive-oriented programs we proposed, including—and this is a surprise to me and maybe the minister could speak on it—amendment of those provisions of the Income Tax Act which discourage the transfer of small businesses within families or to employees. The last budget indicated that incorporated farms would be exempt from the implications of this, so it is beyond me why the rest of the small business sector was excluded. I understand the minister will reply to my remarks, so I hope he will try to answer this question. We have made this proposal for a number of years, and prior to the minister's appointment, of course.

Some of my colleagues will speak on the areas of taxation and farming, and the hon. member for Halton-Wentworth (Mr. Kempling) will discuss research and development. But I have one point to make on that subject. In the last budget no mention was made regarding small business proposals, with the exception of the reduction in the provincial sales tax which is a short term, phony way of improving the situation. We do not see consumers flocking to retail outlets. As a matter of fact, Mr. Ted Burton, who represents Simpsons, the large Canadian retail outlet, has indicated that the reduction of the sales tax will not substantially increase consumer purchasing in retail outlets. Yet this was the minister's answer to the problems that small business in this country was facing.

I have said I will not dwell on research and development because my colleague will deal with that matter. Tax breaks were given for research and development, however, but in what sector were they given? To multinational foreign-owned oil conglomerates. There is nothing wrong with that, but again small business has been left out. This government supports a trend toward centralization and concentration of power, be it larger and fewer multinationals, bigger and stronger labour unions, or costly and more powerful bureaucratic governments.

The whole issue here is to decentralize, of course, and that is why when speaking on behalf of the small businessmen, not necessarily on behalf of my party, I am truly disappointed with the results of the just announced Bryce commission which not only supports but strongly recommends the concentration of economic power which would, on a long term basis, allow small business literally to go down the drain. That has been the trend of this government for at least ten years.

The fact that this government is more costly than any in the history of Confederation is no secret. I shall not go over the statistics. The concentration of union power is as damaging to the economy as a whole as to the small businessmen. The Post Office deficit alone has increased by 872 per cent to over $651 million. Yet in ten years postal rates have increased from six to 14 cents, while the mail service has deteriorated to such an extent that Indian smoke signals over one hundred years ago were more efficient and cheaper.

We must no longer allow this permissiveness on the part of the government to continue. We must begin to decentralize and, I believe, especially in the case of the Post Office, the right to strike should be removed from all monopolistic essential services in Canada.

I have outlined some of the positive, incentive-oriented programs which we are recommending and which the government has ignored since and before this minister was appointed. I hope that serious consideration will be given to our proposals. Had the Prime Minister not backed down from calling an election, in a month or two we would be in a position to implement these programs.

In closing, I would like to repeat what I have said often in this chamber, something which I believe is imperative if our democratic way of life is to survive. If we want the small business sector to survive within our society, as I am sure we all do, then immediate action must be taken by the federal government. The small business community is what the free enterprise system is all about. It is what this country is built on and what this country can prosper by. Other countries which presently are more fortunate than Canada with respect to unemployment, inflation, productivity, and other areas by which the standard to success is judged, have all concentrated their economic energies toward their small firms sector within their industrial way of life.

My concern is so genuine regarding the problems of small business and freedom of enterprise that I hope the seriousness of these problems can be dealt with, as I said, on a non-partisan basis. We cannot wait any longer, the small business community cannot wait any longer, and Canadians cannot wait any longer for the government to move in a positive direction in this regard. I hope hon. members will realize the seriousness of the situation and consider some of the proposals which we are outlining today. Opportunities still exist in Canada—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his allotted time has expired. He may continue with the unanimous consent of the House. Does the hon. member have unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Jelinek: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the unanimous consent. I was just coming to the end of my remarks. I repeat and emphasize to the minister, who sits there grinning, that I hope he will approve some of the recommendations we have been making. I hope he will seriously consider putting into effect some of the studies the government has made in the last few years, as well as our incentive-oriented programs, including the recommendation for a secretariat separate from the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. I am sure the minister himself would like to see that. I hope the minister will seriously consider implementing these things before it is too late for the small businessman in Canada, and before it is too late for the free enterprise that Canadians have grown to accept as a way of life.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

● (1632)

Hon. A. C. Abbott (Minister of State (Small Business)): Mr. Speaker, first of all I would like to thank my hon. friend, the member for High Park-Humber Valley (Mr. Jelinek), for his remarks, and for those which were complimentary.

I would like to say that the debate today is a very useful one. I believe the motion that was put down is a responsible one. It introduces a number of areas to which I have given a good deal of consideration. Some of which I would not view as necessary as others, but within them they possess a good deal of merit. I want to assure my hon. friend and his colleagues who are interested in this area, as well as my own colleagues, that as early as possible I intend to introduce new measures and to bring new programs to bear which I hope will meet some of the points raised here, but which will go a good deal further and do more.

There are, however, one or two areas with which I would take issue. The hon. member spent some time talking about definitions and the importance of such definitions. I have not yet become convinced that this is the most important problem that we face. He and I, and everyone else interested in this area, know what small business is as opposed to big business and I believe this definition suits the general purpose.

The other day I said that a small business is essentially one of 100 employees or fewer which is financially and legally independent. That probably could be qualified. It might be different in numerical breakdown in certain types of business than others. The hon. member's own definition, I believe, is to the effect that a small business is owner managed and not dominant in its field. This is reflective of the United States small business act which does purport to define small business in that country. By their statute they say a small business is deemed to be a firm which is:

"independently-owned and operated and which is not dominant in its field of operations".

Significantly, however, the act then proceeds to delegate to the administrator of the SBA authority to make more detailed definitions using, among others, such criteria as the number of employees and the dollar value of business. Moreover, the legislation specifically notes that, where these criteria are used, the upper limits established may vary from industry to industry to the extent necessary to reflect differing characteristics of the industries and "to take proper account of relevant factors".

The problem with a definition is that it tends to be difficult to put in precise words an explanation of what any small business might be. I think perhaps Professor Rein Peterson has best expressed it. Professor Peterson is a teacher at the York School of Business Administration who has written a very good book on small business. He has been associated to some extent with the Canadian Federation of Independent Business. In his comments he says:

In defining small business, we are attempting to grapple with generalizations that in practice must apply to a large and diverse group of legal and economic entities. Therefore, it is somewhat naive to expect that one can come up with a single, simple, concise legal definition of small business likely to be adopted by the diverse interests in an economy. We are also trying to describe a continually moving target group, because relationships between relative size, necessary specialization, and economies of scale—both internal and external to the firm—vary from time to time, from region to region, from product to product, and between one technology and another.

I could go on to quote other authorities that cast some doubt on the essential value of a definition. For instance, my hon. friend may have investments while he is an active member of this House and could not personally manage those investments. He might own a small business but not manage it. If he owned, for instance, a business manufacturing horseshoes in Prince Edward Island, he might own a business that by almost any standard would be described as small but would, I am told, be dominant in its field. Actually such a business exists. Therefore he might want to take advantage of the various programs we have to offer in Canada to small business. More, we hope, will be forthcoming. However, he would be excluded because of the precise restrictive nature of his definition.

I suppose you could say the T. Eaton Company is owned and managed by its owners but is not dominant in its field. It is a major operator in its field. I think the Simpsons-Sears Company would prefer to believe that it is not dominated by the T. Eaton Company. And yet I do not think it would qualify by anyone's judgment as a small business.

You can appreciate that while I do not want to spend the afternoon quibbling with my hon. friend about the merits of one definition over another, he will agree with me that one can get trapped into a easy assumption that some definition will suit the bill and be workable and useful.

I took some exception to another point mentioned by my hon. friend. He was annoyed that the Small Businesses Loans Act—

Mr. Jelinek: Mr. Speaker, would the minister permit a short question?

Mr. Abbott: Yes.

Mr. Jelinek: Mr. Speaker, without getting argumentative about the definition situation, I wonder if the minister now is saying that the government does not need a definition for small business and it does not have a general definition, although he has quoted several in the past?

Mr. Abbott: Mr. Speaker, I said I had defined small business in a way that I thought was sufficiently adequate when I stated that I thought a business of 100 or fewer employees, which is financially and legally independent, was sufficient to provide a curtain or an umbrella. I differ in some ways with the definition put forward by the hon. member. I went on to cite some interested authorities that say one definition does not suit. I am saying that I feel less concerned, and place a lower priority on the existence of one definition or the other. He and I, and most everyone else who is concerned in this field, know what small business is. I believe the hon. member mentioned in his remarks about the Small Businesses Loans Act that a subsidiary, however small of a major company, should not be included if we are talking about certain beneficial programs, and to that extent I agree.

The hon. member went on to mention the Small Businesses Loans Act, and I want to correct his impression. The Small Businesses Loans Act administration has been moved over and is under my responsibility. This is helpful, because already we have studied the procedures which are required. I believe they can be streamlined and improved upon. A good deal of work is going on in this respect.

In mentioning the Small Businesses Loans Act the hon. member failed to give us credit in the time the secretariat has existed for amending the act and changing the regulations so it is now a far more useful instrument for small business than it had been before. The limit is raised to $75,000. The regulations have been amended so that the interest rate is a point above prime. Because of the fixed interest rate during times of fluctuating interest rates, the bank managers found the bill totally unpopular. Indeed, there has been no encouragement whatever for the use of the act.

● (1642)

I had several conferences with them. If business under the act was unprofitable, the banks preferred to lend money under their own rules or not lend it at all. At our consulting meetings, they agreed with me that they would be prepared to give a lot more support to the act if it were changed. We did that.

We have published a brochure. Thousands have been distributed to bank managers and through organizations such as the CFIB. While we do not have precise figures, I am advised there has been a very substantial increase in utilization of the act. In due course we will have firm statistics on that point. I see the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes) shaking his head. No doubt he has done an exhaustive survey of the volume of business being done across Canada.

Mr. Symes: Not in my riding.

Mr. Abbott: They probably have not heard about it yet. If the hon. member would promote the bill and the act with his bank managers, as I have been trying to do, he would find that they are much more responsive. It is interesting that last year there was some $80 million in such loans by the banks under the act notwithstanding the fact they did not like it. I am told by those managers who are enjoying a higher volume of business that they find it a very good business indeed as a result of greater utilization of the act to the benefit of small business.

The hon. member raised the problem of certain businesses that do not deserve to be able to use the act. I do not think it is all that important. If the banks want to deal with a business that may have an affluent parent company, it does not cost the taxpayers any money. The bank simply takes the guarantee of the federal government to help repay the loan. Assuming it is a solvent subsidiary, the problem of security does not exist. I doubt there are many companies in that area which would need to avail themselves of that. However, that is just a matter of opinion. Considering this is a precise area we have brought up-to-date, I think that contradicts the hon. member's suggestion that we have done very little in that area.

I would add a number of other things that we have done. During the budget debate I discussed such areas apropos of what he was talking about in the area of paper burden. I realize he was generous enough to say we have started this program. I would like to see more done more quickly in the area of paper work elimination. However, I am convinced that, given a fair period of time since the organization was set up, very substantial results will be achieved.

I am hopeful that within a few weeks we can place before the public several examples of where the controller of paper burden can demonstrate that he has done his job.

Mr. Beatty: Controller of paper burden?

Mr. Abbott: No doubt much excessive paper work will continue to exist. However, I hope hon. members opposite will be fair minded enough to say that we have made a good beginning.

Something else we have done this year is to open our business centre. It is an efficient, well staffed operation—not lavishly staffed—of competent people. Small businessmen can visit there and receive information, not simply about the work of one government department, but, apropos of what the hon. member was saying, avail themselves of a whole breadth of information. They can have appointments made. They can be taken, not sent, to someone else to get the help they need.

In addition, the business centre, which is located in the Sparks Street building which houses our secretariat, and Industry, Trade and Commerce has a toll free Zenith number, Zenith 03200. Any businessman can telephone from anywhere in Canada. My advice is that it has been very successful and that it has resulted in positive help to the business community. That is a precise and specific measure, and while not earth shaking, deserves support.

We have also introduced a program known as the Small Business Internship Program. We hope it will succeed in providing jobs for a number of Canadian graduates on an internship basis with Canadian small businesses, which can both use the help they are afforded and, hopefully, create permanent jobs.

With regard to the question of a small business act, I share to a certain extent the hon. member's view that were we to have an act and create a separate department it would perhaps give the minister a greater feeling of importance. It might give us a function independent of other departments, perhaps of the department in which the secretariat is located.

That, of course, could be achieved. We could bring in an act, and I suppose everybody would support it. Like most acts setting up government departments, it would be relatively brief and non-controversial. We could include in that act certain targets and objectives for the department, and draw from some of the ones in the motion today and others like it.

Upon analysis, however, one has to recognize that a department so created would hardly create a sense of much priority or a sense of great importance, either in the business community or other government departments. Unless you were to allocate to that department a number of functions which may or may not be solely related to small business, the department could stand isolated. It would not achieve any more than what we are capable of doing today within the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

The other problem is that the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce has a variety of programs. For example, there is the enterprise development program, programs related to tourism, and a variety of others which cannot be severed from their impact on large business or small business. If the department the hon. member would want set up does not have access by right and regularity to these major programs, it would be cut off from the mainstream of government initiatives as they apply to businesses. Although he and I might agree it would give all of us a sense of greater self-esteem to be completely separate, upon analysis it does not have as much merit as appears on the face of it.

The effort and co-operation I receive from my colleague, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner), the officials who serve us both, and the growing realization in that department and the whole government of the expanding importance of small business, show that we are being served well. I do not say there is not room for improvement or no need for more programs. I do not say there is not need for changes in our tax structure, statutes of other departments, our purchasing policy, and a whole variety of efforts that, I hope, will ultimately be achieved.

● (1652)

But I think it would be unfair not to pay some tribute to the tax structure which exists today in Canada because it stands preferable to that of any other country in the world. I believe most observers of the small business scene, looking at the tax benefits it enjoys, would agree with that statement. A good many of the most beneficial of these changes were made, I might add, in the spring of 1977. They included a number of proposals such as the favourable measure dealing with employee stock options, income-splitting between family members in unincorporated small business firms, the elimination of federal sales tax for small producers of handcraft, deferral of capital gains on voluntary sales of assets, and the option offered to venture capital investors to choose whether to be taxed on a basis of capital gains or ordinary income. I could go on, but I have already made that speech in the budget debate.

Of course no one should mention the tax system without stressing the importance of the corporate income tax rate for small business, together with the dividend gross-up and credit which provide a significant benefit to businesses with less than $150,000 in income and retained earnings of up to $75,000 which pay some 21 percentage points below larger businesses.

For instance, a taxpayer with $30,000 of income pays only 26 per cent on additional income received from a small incorporated business. A wage or salary earner would be taxed at a rate of 46 per cent on incorporated income. All this shows that the government has not been idle when it comes to producing tax measures. While my predecessor and I cannot claim to have introduced these measures formally, they are the result of advocacy, of influencing the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) to the best of our ability. We believe we can do a better job on those lines than by trying to create a large empire from which we can crow about all the things we have managed to do for small business. It is better to develop a small, hard-hitting organization, to take policy initiatives and to influence our colleagues to put certain changes in place.

Mr. Jelinek: What about the transfer of businesses?

Mr. Abbott: The hon. member has made reference in the motion to the transfer of businesses and I acknowledge that in our ten-point program we forecast a need for intergenerational transfers. This is something I believe in, and I hope we can achieve it.

Mr. Jelinek: Why was it not in the budget?

Mr. Abbott: The Minister of Finance had a number of high priorities to deal with and he could not deal with them all. He could not do it this time, but I am hopeful we shall achieve it.

The Minister of Finance is not the only minister who has important areas under his control. The Department of National Revenue does its share to produce an efficient and relatively polite tax-gathering service, but it also imposes some onerous burdens on small business while carrying out its responsibilities. Here again there is a case to be made for influencing the Department of National Revenue to change certain of its procedures.

I do not want to take up more time because I recognize that this is a day upon which the opposition puts forward its ideas. I can assure members opposite, in all honesty, that I appreciate their motion. A good deal of it agrees with my own views and fits in our plans. Anything that is said today will help us. I know that is the attitude the hon. member has taken. I know he is eating his heart out to sit on this side, but if he continues to perform the useful service of telling us his ideas from over there, such a change will never become necessary.

Mr. Beatty: The minister explained the various things that have been done since he became Minister of State for Small Business. Can he tell the House briefly why it is that the rate of failure among small businesses has increased during the period he has been minister?

Mr. Abbott: I did not even begin to scratch the surface of all the things we have been able to do, but I will say this: I do not for a minute suggest that the Minister of State for Small Business can create a climate in Canada that will ensure prosperity. I do not suggest that my efforts have either been mainly contributory or otherwise to present economic conditions. But I will say that I am greatly concerned about the fact that business failures have increased. I worry, as does the hon. member, about the high volume of bankruptcies.

One of the problems is that in prosperous years of high economic growth a good many people get into business. They find the money and they start up. Some of them, it must be admitted, are not all that expert. Dun and Bradstreet, the people who specialize in receiverships, estimate that some 90 per cent of bankruptcies are caused by management difficulties I am by no means blaming businessmen for all their problems, but there is a natural condition that when the economy tightens up it affects small businessmen particularly, and the situation is especially hard for those who lack business skills. That is why the case consultative service we have set up is able to play a really important role in helping small businessmen.

What the higher bankruptcy rate indicates is not so much that small business is suffering unusually but that the economy itself has been going through a difficult time. But there are signs of improvement on the horizon, and we may hope to see a significant reduction in these figures.

● (1702)

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Rynard)—Communications—Television programs for the deaf; the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Philbrook)—Post Office—Plans to prevent incidents leading to workers being sent home; the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Friesen)—National Security—Status of former RCMP officer.

[Mr. Beatty.]

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—MEASURES TO IMPROVE SMALL BUSINESS POLICIES

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Jelinek:

That this House regards the small business sector as a key to the regeneration of economic growth, increased employment, an improved balance of payments position and increased Canadian ownership of the industrial and resource sectors, and therefore urges the government to end the delay in formulating small business policies by immediately taking steps to:

(1) implement a small business act, to include a realistic definition of small business, the criterion for which will be owner-management;

(2) give tax rebates and other incentives to those small businesses which invest in research and development;

(3) provide an incentive tax credit to any Canadian citizen who makes a direct investment in the equity of a Canadian-owned business;

(4) amend those provisions of the Income Tax Act which discourage the transfer of small businesses within families or to employees; and

(5) create a small business secretariat, independent of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, its duties to include:

(a) ensuring that the decisions of the federal departments and agencies reflect the interests of small business,

(b) assisting small businesses to form consortia to improve opportunities for export and domestic trade,

(c) establishing a fixed proportion of government-purchased goods and services, to be supplied by small businesses, and

(d) exempting small businesses from the application of federal legislation potentially harmful to them.

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, today we are debating a motion on small business which I find very timely and worth-while considering the sad state of our economy, especially as it affects small businesses. After listening to the minister this afternoon outlining in catalogue form all the things which this government is doing for small business, I can only lament at the state of small business in coming months when we consider that, despite these policies, we have record bankruptcies and record financial difficulties facing this important sector of our economy. Unfortunately, I was not reassured by the programs and the lack of new initiatives forthcoming from the minister this afternoon.

This motion is timely for another reason as well, because today is the day after the tabling of the report of the Royal Commission on Corporate Concentration, more familiarly known as the Bryce commission report. In it the Royal commission examined the operation of our economy and looked at the very important role that large businesses and large corporations play in our economy. That, of course, has a direct bearing on how small businesses operate in Canada today.

The very disappointing conclusion of this commission, as far as the NDP is concerned, was its conclusion that no radical changes in the laws governing corporate activity are necessary at this time to protect the public interest. I note that "in the public interest" includes not only consumers but all small businesses. Indeed, the royal commission went so far as to recommend the ending of corporate income tax and came up with the conclusion that big is beautiful. Our party parts company very dramatically with the royal commission in that conclusion because we look at the evidence provided by Statistics Canada and other sources, and conclude that corporate capitalism is not competitive capitalism and, as a result, the small business sector of our community suffers very badly because of the domination, in both supply and price, of a few relatively strong and powerful corporations.

Indeed, if we look at the statistics provided by the government in 1975, we find that in Canada there are 206,695 non-financial enterprises. These are companies outside of banks and trust companies, etc. Of those 206,000 corporations or enterprises, only 500, or less than one quarter of one per cent, control 59 per cent of the assets, 51 per cent of the sales, and 63 per cent of the profits of all business in Canada. Those are very disturbing and startling figures. What we have in effect is oligopolistic or near monopoly capitalism in this country. We do not have free enterprise or competition, as most economists or even members of the House would define it.

I submit that when 500 firms control 59 per cent of the assets of this country, it is absurd to suggest that the remaining 200,000 corporations or businesses can provide any meaningful competition. When we have four firms in the motor vehicle sector of our economy which control 90 per cent of output, is it any wonder that here in Canada cars of any kind produced in Canada cost more than in the United States, even though the same cars are produced here and shipped across the border where they sell at a lower price? Surely that kind of concentration and the resulting price policies must indicate to any unbiased observer that we have price fixing of a sort and that we do not have true competition in that sector of the economy.

When four firms control over 50 per cent of all capacity in the primary metal sector, can anyone tell me that we have effective competition in this country, or when three sugar companies are dominant in their field—and recently, as we all know, have been charged with price fixing—does the consumer, or indeed any other business competitor, benefit from that kind of economic situation? The answer must be no.

This concentration of corporate power is detrimental to consumers and to small businessmen alike, because those corporations that control these important sectors of our economy dominate supply and price, and that affects both consumers and small businessmen. I wonder when was the last time that Imperial Oil or Loblaws asked us if the price was right. Indeed, Imperial Oil, which was chartered back in 1881, had accumulated by 1970 $2.3 billion in assets. Just five years later, in 1975, their assets had grown to $6.2 billion, or almost tripled in five years.

You can go through sector by sector in the economy and you begin to see the concentration of corporate wealth and power, you begin to see that the small businessman has little chance competing against these huge giants which have policies of underbidding, underselling, cornering markets and driving out their competitors. Anyone who looks at the food chain or the oil industry in Canada might wonder what has happened to the small independent retailers. Of the estimated $10 billion in unpaid corporate taxes, we find that about $9 billion are owned by the largest 1,000 corporations.

In terms of the government's tax policy, year after year this Liberal government has favoured the large firms as opposed to small business in terms of total amounts of tax concessions and deferred taxes. That, of course, is an unfair situation. It is unfair from another point of view as well, because it is the small businesses that are mainly engaged in manufacturing, and that is where the job creation is. This government continues, in its tax policy, to give preference to large corporations, mostly in the resource field, which are highly capital intensive and not job intensive.

Indeed, if members on the government side have difficulty in accepting the words of the NDP in that regard, I should like to quote the comments of a former Liberal cabinet minister and president of the Stock Exchange, Eric Kierans, who said:

With the exception of the United Kingdom, I doubt that any nation in the world has given its corporate 1,000 a more handsome gift package of subsidies, tax allowances, two-year write-offs, deductibility of merger costs, cheap loans, export credits and insurance than our present Trudeau government.

In light of that kind of growth of corporate power and the disadvantages it entails for small business, and in light of the report of the Royal Commission on Corporate Concentration, which in effect did not find anything substantially wrong with this concentration of corporate power and wealth, I was shocked to read in the press today the comments of the hon. member for Halton-Wentworth (Mr. Kempling) on what is the view of the Conservative party of the royal commission. I should like to quote him from the Ottawa Journal of May 16. He said:

● (1712)

"It's a blue report and that's our colour baby," Bill Kempling, Progressive Conservative business spokesman said Monday night, expressing a positive reaction to the report of the Royal Commission on Corporate Concentration.

Mr. Orlikow: So much for small business.

Mr. Symes: Yes, so much for small business. The article continues as follows:

Kempling, was speaking literally—the book is blue—and figuratively: it contained what he said were recommendations Conservatives have advocated for years.

I am rather tired of the hypocrisy and duplicity of the Conservative party. Time and time again they have stood in the House to move motions and put questions in an attempt to indicate that they are in favour of small business. On the other hand, they have indicated that they are in favour of corporate concentration and the concept that big is beautiful in this situation.

Conservative members should get their act together. They should be honest. Either they are in favour of small business or they are in favour of big corporations. The two are not mutually synonymous or compatible in their aims. It is a shame for Conservatives to attempt to have it both ways. As I have illustrated, corporate concentration is operating to the disadvantage of small business. I regret the Conservative party is supporting the conclusions of the Bryce commission.

We in the New Democratic Party have repeatedly emphasized the necessity of revitalizing our manufacturing industry. That is where the jobs are. This important sector of Canadian industry has been declining year after year because of the government's allowance of foreign ownership and dependence on resource exports. Our manufacturing trade deficit has risen from $3 billion to $11 billion. That means we are importing more manufactured goods than we are exporting. That has resulted in a loss of some 400,000 jobs in Canada over the years. We have allowed this very vital sector of our economy to decline. Part of that is the result of a branch plant economy and allowing foreign ownership to take over.

Some 280 of the 500 corporations which I mentioned earlier are foreign controlled. The result of that is that when there is a slack in the economy the lay-offs are in the branch plants in Canada first. Also it means a lack of research and development in Canada, as well as policies to bar Canadian branch plants from exporting their products to other countries in order to develop a market of jobs here.

The role of small business in our economy could be much greater than it is now. That sector should be revitalized in order to get our economy back on the rails, to provide jobs, and income, and revenue for the federal government. At the present time small business employs between 30 and 60 per cent of our work force, depending on how it is defined. Most people would say the definition of small business is a firm employing under 200 people, owner managed, and not dominant in its field.

I want to stress the important role which could exist for small business in the rebuilding of our economy. When we look at budgets and small business policy, one can only conclude that the government favours the large corporations over the small businesses. Over the years it has allowed corporate concentration to exist. It has allowed foreign ownership to exist. It has allowed the higher prices these corporations can charge by virtue of control of the market. It has allowed high unemployment. It has associated with the decline of our manufacturing sector by allowing the record number of bankruptcies in small business. Surely the record is clear. The government is not interested in revitalizing small business and controlling the power of the dominant corporations in our society. We need a positive and imaginative small business policy in Canada. The New Democratic Party supports a healthy small business sector.

I should like to outline briefly what my party thinks small business requires, and what we would do to encourage this sector of our economy. It should be obvious that we need to put limits on the power of large corporations and their ability to manipulate price and supply. This can be done by breaking up the oligopolistic or near monopolistic situations which exist in many sectors of our economy, so that there will be true competition and benefits to be derived from that. There are cases which can be made in favour of not breaking up monopolies. For example, I am thinking of Bell Canada. If we are not going to break up the monopolies, then there must be effective regulation of these monopolies, either through a government regulatory body which has some muscle, or through a competition act which has the power and ability to restrict unfair competitive practices that are detrimental to consumers and small business. We must restrict the power of large corporations which enables them to manipulate the market, supply and demand, and price.

We must assist small businesses with their cash flow problems. Any hon. member who has taken the time to talk with small businessmen will know that is the first complaint made. Small businessmen require start-up funds, cash and capital in order to commence business, expand, or tide them over through difficult times. When I think of the minister's carrot, the Small Businesses Loans Act, as a solution to that problem, I have to weep. The small businessmen I have spoken with indicate that bank managers laugh them out of their offices when the idea of assistance under the Small Businesses Loans Act is mentioned. The act contains no compulsory requirement for banks to set aside a certain proportion of their money to be loaned to small businessmen. Most bank managers realize that if they hang tough they can force small businessmen to borrow at the prime rate, rather than the slightly lower rate applicable under this act. There must be some mandatory requirements for the banks to loan under this act.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. Minister of State for Small Business (Mr. Abbott) on a point of order.

Mr. Abbott: Mr. Speaker, will the hon. member allow me to make a correction to the point he just made?

Mr. Symes: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Abbott: The banks charge the prime plus 1 per cent under the Small Businesses Loans Act. The hon. member indicated that the banks would prefer the prime rate. I assume they would prefer one extra percentage point of interest. Rarely would they charge less than the intrest rate under the Small Businesses Loans Act.

Mr. Symes: I thank the minister for his correction. The number of small businessmen who would like to take advantage of the terms of the Small Businesses Loans Act compared to the number who are able to is very disappointing. When one looks at the total number of loans by private banks, under normal lending practices, and compares that with loans under the act, the latter is minuscule. That entire area requires reform. The loan limit should be raised, and there should be a much more lenient policy on the part of banks. Also the tax system should be reformed. The bias is toward large corporations as opposed to small businesses.

NDP provincial governments have taken initiatives toward reducing the small business corporate tax rate. We could learn something in that regard. Also there should be a restructuring of the Federal Business Development Bank. The small businessmen I have spoken with indicate that they receive more hassle and have more problems with the FBDB than private lenders. Yet the FBDB was established to assist small businessmen who did not have the traditional forms of collateral. Indeed, often they are much more difficult to get assistance from than the private lenders.

• (1722)

A third area that we need to move imaginatively into is a federal government policy which ensures that at least one third of all government spending on goods and services will be contracted out to the small business sector. This is a beginning for this government to take instead of its ad hoc policy. We need to subdivide large orders so that the small businessman can bid easily on them. We have to end some of these large bid tenders, complex tendering forms, and large bonding requirements that put roadblocks in the way of the small business trying to get a part of government business. The paperwork, as we all know, must be reduced. The minister, indeed, has begun in this area to reduce what he calls the paper burden, but there is much more improvement that could be made.

I am glad to see the government has implemented the employer tax credit idea. This was long overdue. Many other countries have used it to great effect. Finally, we need a long term industrial strategy to develop our manufacturing sector and get this economy back on the road. That can only be done with some investment planning in which government has a say in this country.

We need to support small business. The government is not taking the initiative it should and until it controls corporate power and comes up with some imaginative policies, the small business sector will remain in great difficulty.

[Translation]

Mr. C. A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, first of all I want to thank the mover of this motion on small businesses. The motion being rather lengthy, I will quote only its first paragraph as an introduction:

> That this House regards the small business sector as a key to the regeneration of economic growth, increased employment, and improved balance of payments position and increased Canadian ownership of the industrial and resource sectors, and therefore urges the government to end the delay in formulating small business policies by immediately taking . . .

Necessary steps starting with the implementation of a small business act and the definition of what exactly is a small business. Mr. Speaker, I think the best definition of a small business is the following: it is a business which is operated by its owner and which does not have the management structures typical of large corporations or companies.

Mr. Speaker, when we talk of medium size businesses we usually have in mind those with fewer than 100 employees whereas a small business has 50 employees at most and is also called a tertiary enterprise. We are right in saying that the small business is the key to the future of a country because it is the one from which it springs forth. A region is always opened by private business and it is always that business which makes the first test of a new economy. Large companies follow later. It is almost contradictory that large businesses are always openly welcome whereas the arrival of a small enterprise alway occurs in almost complete silence. Yet small businesses are those which generate most of the employment since 60 per cent of workers owe their living to them.

Today we urge the federal government to formulate small business policies. I think this representation should be made to all governments in this country and draw the attention of all citizens so their attitudes will change vis-à-vis small businesses. Even at the municipal level we have seen multinational corporations get 20- and even 25-year tax exemptions while small businesses in those same municipalities could never get a one-cent exemption on those same taxes. I think this is a bad attitude which has been perpetuated from generation to generation—always worshipping millionaires and forgetting about those who provide the basis of our existence.

Even today it is sad to see that big corporations and multinational companies have the assured protection of governments because they fill up the election coffers. The largest revenues belong to industries and multinational companies which barely pay 25 per cent of the whole national budget while the millions of workers who pay altogether 75 per cent of the national budget get 20 times less revenue than large corporations.

Some will say: We are helping our small businesses. there is the Industrial Development Bank with its thousands of advisors. Mr. Speaker, what kind of help are they providing? Loans for 50 per cent of their needs at interest rates of 10 per cent, 11 per cent and even 12 per cent. How is it possible for a small business starting out to make even a net profit of 11 per cent or 12 per cent to be able to pay only that interest? The subsidy they are given does not even pay the interest on three years of operation. Even if after three years the small business has survived, after that time taxes will eat it up.

That is why 90 per cent of our small industries end up going bankrupt or being bought by monopolies. In that respect I will give only one example experienced in my area, that of the bakeries in the four constituencies in my riding. A few years ago, we had only one bakery in each large municipality. Those bakeries were not making millions but they were doing well enough and were thus able to provide work for several heads of families. Then came the time to modernize, which involved mechanization will all its requirements, and since the small industries could not find help to obtain money at reasonable rates, they were swallowed up by the few monopolies of the areas who can now dictate to the whole sector. They even control the quality and the price of bread, and what a price it is, Mr. Speaker! They have eliminated 90 per cent of the jobs. Our bread is trucked in to us from a distance of 125 miles and we must accept it as it is, good or bad. Should this monopoly ever decide to call a lockout, the whole area would have to do without bread. The worst of it is that these monopolies have the blessing if not the protection of the governments.

● (1732)

We do have the Small Businesses Loans Act, but this legislation is ineffective because of the criteria which make it nearly useless. I am in complete agreement with today's motion which urges the government to give tax rebates to small businesses which invest in research and development. If we were to compare them once again with large businesses, we would be amazed to see how the latter are favoured.

I especially want to draw the attention of the government to the tertiary industries which are the most neglected in my opinion. I do not know if this is because the criteria are too strict or because the civil servants are given orders to refuse all requests for help from those small businesses, but of all the applications made in my area, only two per cent are accepted.

We ask the government today to end the delay in formulating a small business policy, and I would even urge the government to take concrete action through our present legislation by accepting the applications made by small businessmen. The government may claim that it is prepared to help the development of new small businesses, but if it refuses 98 per cent of the applications or else, which amounts to the same thing, if it imposes unacceptable conditions to those small businesses, the offers of the government will certainly remain only empty promises. There is the matter of financial help in which case the government offers a 10 per cent or 15 per cent participation in total investments. This does not even cover the interests nor the legal costs the owner has to pay during the first year.

As for guaranteed loans, the interests the owners of small businesses will have to pay outweigh by far the net income of the business during the first year when economic efficiency cannot be stabilized like in subsequent years. As to tax exemptions, unlike large companies, small businesses are subject to tax from the very first years of operation, which is the cause of 90 per cent of the bankruptcies I have just mentioned. The government should give priority to small businesses which often start with the means at their disposal and where the owners risk their whole future because they have limitless confidence in the survival of their business.

After their initial efforts they turn to the government, which is quite normal since it is there to support the efforts made by citizens and not to create an industry by spending millions of dollars at a time to advantage a select group of its supporters. It happened in the past and unfortunately it still happens regularly today. We deplore it and denounce it vigorously.

If we really want to help our small businesses, the government must further encourage those who are anxious to invest in such enterprises, particularly through the Income Tax Act which now stands in the way of transfers of small businesses to members of the family or employees. It is another weakness of the legislation that strikes a deadly blow to any small business operated by the family head. When he dies the Income Tax Act strikes it lethal blow. When the family head transfers his business to his children or his employees, he should declare bankruptcy because it would be cheaper for his heirs to purchase the bankrupt business than having to pay succession duties. This is a sad situation I have witnessed many times and experienced myself with the result that the business is crushed under the tax burden.

Another way for the government to help small businesses efficiently consists in buying in Canada. Obviously small businesses cannot assure the money support offered to the old parties by big corporations but it would be compensated by the social effects that would benefit all Canadians. If only the government were concerned about the well-being of the people instead of profitability, I think that many acts would be amended and that many false criteria would disappear.

Last, the motion says that the government should create a small business secretariat independent of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Mr. Speaker, I am afraid that those secretariats created by the government are nothing but a group of civil servants who want to impose their will on small businessmen. If that secretariat supported by the government were made exclusively of small businessmen I would agree, but please do not impose on us a group of civil servants delegated by the parties in power and who will play into the hands of politicians.

I think that the only persons who can really work in the interest of small businesses are businessmen with no political ties and whose only interest would be the success of small business. Mr. Speaker, I think that the only way to fight against monopolies at the production level as well as the distribution and consumer level is to encourage the development and multiplication of small businesses that can really benefit all people.

Today we are almost passive witness to a war without quarter against the financial monopolies of production, distribution and consumption on the one hand, and the labour monopoly and big unions on the other. And who is the victim of that macabre spectable? Always the consumer. That is why we are asking the government to take the necessary means to introduce legislation clearly favouring small business to enable it to play its true role in the Canadian economy by living on parallel lines with the monopolies without falling prey to them. That is why, Mr. Speaker, we approve and support this motion before use today on small business.

[English]

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, it is certainly a privilege to take part in the debate this afternoon. I wish to commend very highly my colleague and spokesman for small business, the hon. member for High Park-Humber Valley (Mr. Jelinek) for the content of the motion. He has spelled things out very correctly. Even the Minister of State (Small Business) (Mr. Abbott) said that while he did not agree 100 per cent with everything that was said—which we would hardly expect—he certainly agrees with the content of the motion. This motion gives the minister and his department a chance to speak on behalf of the government, to present their views and to let the people know that a great many of us have grave concerns for small business in Canada today. We feel that it should be given every possible incentive to help it.

● (1742)

I am pleased to speak on this topic, not just from the isolated position of a member of parliament but because prior to coming to the House of Commons I operated a small business in a small village in the riding of Parry Sound-Muskoka. Thus I am aware of the many problems that exist. Of course, similar problems are faced by colleagues in the same type of business in which I was engaged, that of general insurance and real estate. A great deal of the credit for giving assistance to small business and also for speaking on behalf of small business can be given to the Progressive Conservative party.

I certainly feel that our party can be classified as the party really beating the drum for small business. It is only logical for the Progressive Conservative party to follow this course considering the enormous contribution that the small business sector makes to our economy. Approximately 55 per cent of all businesses in Canada can be classed as small businesses. It is a well endowed source of revenue for the government. Of course, the government has seen fit to ignore this important section of our economy, perhaps not entirely, but certainly it has not given it its due place in the sun. I consider the small business sector to be the backbone of our economy. If the government took heed and implemented some of the sound economic proposals contained in the motion, the smallscale business sector could provide the remedy to our economic ills, give hope to the unemployed, and restore some balance to our lopsided international trade account.

Because of the important role it plays in our economy, not too long ago the government saw fit to establish the Ministry of State for Small Business. I would like to underscore and strongly support the suggestion contained in the motion to establish a "small business secretariat" which would be independent of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. This proposal will not require any further expansion but would be merely a transfer in the status of importance attached to the small business sector.

A small business secretariat will serve as a conduit to many businessmen who currently spend costly time trying to untangle themselves from government red tape or desperately trying to free themselves from the quagmire of government's stifling procedures affecting small businesses. Quite bluntly, Mr. Speaker, it will help the operator against the familiar "runaround", a commodity that the government dispenses so abundantly, whether in calling an election or providing solutions to our economic problems.

I was pleased to hear the minister mention that the secretariat is open and that there is a Zenith line where small businessmen can call in without cost. I hope that a good many of them will take advantage of that facility. I understand the minister gave the telephone number, but for the record again it is Zenith 03200. If anyone has problems let us hope they will call in. If they do not get answers from the secretariat, I hope that they will then contact their local members to intercede on their behalf.

The small business sector comprises firms operating in a variety of industries ranging from tourism to construction and from farming to manufacturing. Since I represent the picturesque riding paradise of Parry Sound-Muskoka, it behooves me to focus attention on small business operators in the tourist trade. Tourist trade immediately conjures up images of small scale operators. This is rightly so. Tourist trade is synonymous with small scale business. The plight of the tourist facility operators is a miserable reflection of the lack of concern that the government has shown in lending a sympathetic ear to the small business sector in the past.

It is well to note that in spite of our economic woes, tourism is one of the areas with the greatest potential for regenerating and fuelling our blighted economy. It is worth noting that tourism is now the sixth largest earner of foreign revenues for Canada. I may further add that travel in Canada is a $10 billion industry, but regrettably statistics also reveal that our travel habits have plunged us into close to a $2 billion deficit. Tourism expenditures in Canada provide employment for about one million people and the total annual investment is around $1.5 billion. Over $5 billion is poured into government coffers. In the province of Ontario it is the second largest generator of export dollars, exceeded only by the automobile industry.

I have briefly outlined the importance of the tourist industry to our economy and I repeat that this industry is comprised of small scale businesses. At this stage, Mr. Speaker, I would like to pose a simple but realistic question. Why has the government failed to recognize the importance of this industry? Is it because it is operated by a large number of small businesses? Why is the area of tourism cuddled up in some nook in the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce? I will take the liberty of further suggesting that the motion call for the establishment of an independent department of tourism. This is not a call to expand the bureaucracy but merely to transfer personnel from the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce to an independent unit.

This would facilitate the efficient handling of matters affecting the numerous operators who contribute to the tourist industry. It would also provide for some serious studies to be conducted in order to grapple with one of the fastest growing industries which may become the most important revenue earner for Canada in the not too distant future.

We need to do some long-range thinking. The role that tourism can play in eliminating our dismal and lopsided balance of payments account is certainly worth considering. Too little has been done to generate enthusiasm and to tap foreign markets so as to entice people from abroad to visit our beautiful and friendly land. Think for a moment of the tremendously favourable impact such a move could have on reversing the flow of much needed foreign exchange that this country is being depleted of at an alarming rate. These suggestions and proposals are not put forward as lofty ideals but can be achieved with some realistic approach by the government. That is why the opposition has consistently come forth with positive suggestions such as those contained in the motion before us today.

I will reiterate briefly what I have put forth on a number of occasions in this House. The small business sector needs special consideration in order to provide adequate financing. There ought to be special long-term loans to help the many ailing small tourist operators. Mr. Speaker, short-term and inadequate financing is the wrong formula to apply to solve the tourist trade equation. Small businesses also deserve to be given special consideration for tax credit purposes. This, Mr. Speaker, is well spelled out in the motion, which calls for tax rebates and other incentives to those small businesses with investment in research and development. It is the small business which usually ends up contributing heavily to the government revenue, for small businesses lack the services of skilled tax specialists. This sector is merely requesting a fair reward.

● (1752)

When speaking this afternoon, the minister mentioned small business loans and the more attractive interest rates. Let us hope that becomes a reality. Many members of parliament have been approached on this subject by small businessmen. I have mentioned this in the House before and it certainly bears repeating. They are asking where are the small business loans announced by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien). I am sure almost every member in the House has been asked about this. We tell them they do not get these loans from the Federal Business Development Bank or from the Ministry of Finance, that they must put in a request to their local chartered bank or financial institution. After doing this, they find there is no money there. This has been proven to be the case time and again, and has been documented by many members on both sides of the House.

In past years, the rate was set. At one time it was 9¾ per cent. The prime rate was that high or higher. What bank or financial institution will lend money at a loss? Not many. They say they are out of that kind of money. It is important to small business to be able to get adequate financing at reasonable rates. This is one of the most serious problems facing the small businessman today.

Many of our small businessmen are tourist operators. They find it difficult to secure funds in order to upgrade or enlarge their facilities. Even in small towns where there is a personal relationship between the businessman and the bank, a tourist operator is at the bottom of the list as far as being a credit risk is concerned. This is most unfortunate.

The farmer was in the same boat. When he went to the bank, he was more or less told that his ability to repay was not among the highest. Therefore, the farmer had difficulty securing suitable credit over a reasonable period of time. We must not forget that farmers are just as much small businessmen as limited or small companies.

The Minister of State (Small Business) said that the Federal Business Development Bank is a federal agency. Its interest rates are not as reasonable as some private institutions. It has been and probably still is known as a bank of last resort. I believe their current interest rate is around 11¾ per cent. After approaching the Federal Business Development Bank for a loan, they sometimes find that they can get a better rate and even a longer term at their local bank. The period of the loan is most important to many small businessmen.

The loan period with the Federal Business Development Bank is probably ten to 12 years. It is very difficult for a small businessman to repay a loan in that period. I hope something can be done about longer term loans at reasonable interest rates for small businessmen, tourist operators in particular. That is one class of business that finds it most difficult to secure financing. As a result, they must carry on with less than adequate facilities. Therefore, they cannot charge the rates they could charge if they were able to provide more up to date and more luxurious accommodation. Canadians and visitors from outside Canada demand the very best in accommodation and are willing to pay for it. I hope the Minister of State (Small Business) will use his good offices to see that something special is done for those in the tourist industry, an industry with which he is familiar.

The minister is well aware that that industry can bring tremendous revenue into Canada, if only we do a real selling job on it. I concede that is not his responsibility but that of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner), as the government agency and services come under his department. If money is spent in the right way to attract tourists to this wonderful country, it will be the old story that if you cast your bread upon the waters, it will come back in no small amount.

Small businesses are an integral part of any community, and are very important in my constituency of Parry Sound-Muskoka. I can hardly be blamed for beating the drum and speaking on behalf of the many small businesses in my constituency. There are about half a million small businesses in this country. It is a tremendous market. I therefore appeal to the government to accept the motion and implement the various statements made by the hon. member for High Park-Humber Valley.

The newspapers have recently given considerable publicity to the tourist industry. A headline in the Toronto Star reads "Tourist Trade Braced for the Yankee $1.12 Invasion". Let us hope that is right. I say a word of caution to the tourist operators. Our American visitors know there is a substantial difference in the exchange rate. They do not want to be ripped off. They must be assured they will be given every break possible. I know they can get the latest exchange rate at the banks.

Tourist operators are aware that the great American influx of tourists and tourist dollars have dropped off drastically, from a high of 50 to 60 per cent some years ago down to 10 to 15 per cent. That percentage certainly must be brought back up. May I call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I might bring to the attention of the hon. member that he has about 30 seconds remaining. If he does not mind I will recognize another member. I do not think he will be back for 30 seconds, after eight o'clock. However, if he wishes, he will be allowed to say a few more words at this time.

● (1802)

Mr. Darling: Mr. Speaker, I did have a couple of comments I wanted to make; they reflect the opinions of tourist operators in Muskoka. Tourism is Ontario's second largest industry. In 1976, 102 million visitors spent $2.8 billion here. Last year, 105 million spent an estimated $3 billion and this year it is expected the amount will be more. So let's hope our tourist operators will be able to benefit from the fact that the U.S. dollar is at a premium. Together with Canadians in all types of businesses we want to make Americans as welcome as possible, along with visitors from other countries. Canada is a tourist's paradise and small business can earn tremendous amounts of revenue and, with the continued development of this resource, become more and more successful.

[Translation]

Mr. Gaston Clermont (Gatineau): Mr. Speaker, may I now call it six o'clock and start my speech at eight this evening?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock.

At 6.03 p.m. the House took recess.

● (2002)

[English]

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. At six o'clock the hon. member for Gatineau (Mr. Clermont) had the floor.

[Translation]

Mr. Clermont: Mr. Speaker, the opposition motion we are studying in the House of Commons today deals with small businesses and what could be done to improve their situation. Mr. Speaker, I have always thought that small businesses are a very important topic worth considering. Because of their large number, they can have a great impact in our economy. It is a matter worth discussing at various times during our parliamentary debates and I thank the hon. member for High Park-Humber Valley (Mr. Jelinek) for having given us the opportunty to discuss it.

Small Business

Mr. Speaker, in the Speech from the Throne of October 12, 1976, as reported in Hansard for that date on page 2, we can read, and I quote:

> . . . Small owner-managed firms are a mainstay of employment in cities and towns across the country. They supply goods and services essential to consumers and to other business, and they demonstrate the innovation and entrepreneurship from which successful enterprise must spring. More than that, small businesses, and the people who own them, manage them, and work in them, are the economic backbone of countless communities throughout Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I have considered this matter on several occasions and I am happy to take part in this debate. The motion includes recommendations and measures to improve the situation. I am referring to the first recommendation which is:

> (1) implement a small business act, to include a realistic defintion of small business, the criterion for which will be owner-management;

Mr. Speaker, I remember that when the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs was discussing the white paper on taxation in 1970, various studies were made to arrive at a definition of small businesses. The mover suggests that the criterion for this definition be owner-management. I feel, Mr. Speaker, that the terms of this recommendation are too limited. Some would rather use the assets of the business as a criterion; others, the number of employees or the turnover. As you see, it is not easy to arrive at a consensus, but I say it is worth trying.

Mr. Speaker, here is the definition of a small business, according to section 632 of the small business act of the United States, and I quote:

[English]

> For the purposes of this chapter, a small business concern shall be deemed to be one which is independently owned and operated and which is not dominant in its field of operation. In addition to the foregoing criteria, the administrator, in making a detailed definition, may use these criteria, among others: Numbers of employees and dollars, volume of business. Where the number of employees is used as one of the criteria in making such definition for any of the purposes of this chapter, the maximum number of employees which a small business concern may have under the definition shall vary from industry to industry to the extent necessary to reflect different characteristics of such industries and to take proper account of other relevant factors.

● (2012)

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the small business act could consolidate current programs and would serve as a basis to a policy aimed at promoting the interests of that sector. Policies to be implemented under that act could also include certain considerations. I would like to mention a few, Mr. Speaker. The lack of capital and especially of long-term and equity capital to get these small businesses started and developed is for them a major problem. This is not surprising. Most often small businesses have not proven themselves and occasionally lack qualified management. They therefore represent a risk for creditors. Their size is also another disadvantage.

Firms specializing in risk capital are rarely interested in investing less than $100,000. In any case, it would not be very profitable for such a firm to spend about $1,000 to enquire as to the solvency of the business in order to lend $20,000. To increase the sources of credit open to small businesses, the existing government financing programs must be improved and new financing services must be created.

On another level, the availability of risk capital should be considered. Businessmen are often concerned that the lending requirements of the Federal Development Bank are as stringent as those of private lenders. As this bank is supposed to be a last resort lender, its lending requirements should be revised to put more emphasis on the commercial potential of the future business than on the usual guarantees.

However, the revision of the Federal Development Bank's lending requirements will probably not provide small businesses with all the risk capital required. There are always serious restrictions to having government agencies investing risk capital.

First of all, Canadians might not necessarily agree with the investment of public funds in high risk endeavours. On the other hand, the investment of risk capital forces the investor to work in close co-operation with the management of the business concerned, a situation which many businessmen would consider undue interference of the state in the board rooms of the nation. The government could encourage private sources to supply risk capital to small enterprises. The government could consider the possibility of encouraging the creation of private firms specializing in supplying credit capital and long-term participation in small commercial undertakings. Companies of that type, Mr. Speaker, known as investment companies in the small business sector have been very successful in the United States for several years now. They have the advantage of being allowed to borrow up to 50 per cent of their share capital from the American small business bureau. They are also granted tax rebates. Similar programs have been introduced in some Canadian provinces.

Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt that other proposals can be included in such a legislation. There now exist opportunities and certain programs to promote small business development and expansion, as the counselling assistance to small enterprises tendered by the Federal Business Development Bank to small businessmen on their management problems. The business expansion program offers grants to Canadian manufacturing firms and guarantees loans for developing new products and implementing new production techniques. Under the Small Businesses Loans Act, the Canadian government has the authority to guarantee loans up to $75,000 granted by private institutions to set up or expand small businesses, and the income tax employment credit has also been in place since March 1978.

Moreover, we have the Enterprise Canada 1977 program implemented by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce in co-operation with other departments and other services. It sponsors information sessions between officials and business people to inform the latter of the range of programs and services offered by the Canadian government.

In another area, Mr. Speaker, the approach used to set the interest rate allowed under the Small Businesses Loans Act should be reviewed to come up with a formula that would allow for interest rates that would be more competitive with current rates. In the latest report to parliament submitted by the Department of Finance for the first three months of 1978, the interest rate on loans under the Small Businesses Loans Act was 8¾ per cent, while the prime rate was 9¼ per cent over the same period. I wonder if in the circumstances the private sector has any real incentive to make those loans, when it can get higher rates on regular loans.

I read in recommendation No. 5 of the motion: Create a small business secretariat, independent of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

It is a known fact, Mr. Speaker, that the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) established in September 1976 the function of Minister of State for Small Businesses, in order to defend and promote the latter's interests.

The first minister was the hon. member for Kamloops-Caribou in British Columbia (Mr. Marchand) and now it is the hon. member for Mississauga (Mr. Abbott) in Ontario.

Mr. Speaker, I do not see any serious opposition to the recommendation of the hon. member for High Park-Humber Valley but, if it were implemented, we should not allow a duplication of responsibilities and we should not create at this time the impression that the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce is looking only after big business. On the contrary, Mr. Speaker, the activities of that department prove it is not so.

Concerning the procurement policy of the Canadian government, small and medium size enterprises—those having 100 or fewer employees—are encouraged by the Canadian government through the Department of Supply and Services whose minister is the hon. member for Dollard (Mr. Goyer).

When he participated in the debate on the motion, the hon. member for Sault. Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes) urged that at least 33 per cent of the Canadian government's purchases of goods and services be handled through small businesses.

During the supper recess I made inquiries and was told that the current percentage was about 41 per cent for small and medium size businesses—and again I repeat those having at most 100 employees. Mr. Speaker, I hope that percentage will continue to increase. Maybe in some cases we will have to change the tender system so that it will be less expensive and complex for small business.

In concluding, Mr. Speaker, I hope the Minister of State responsible for small and medium size business will take all necessary steps to help them expand, as he said he will soon table legislation toward that end.

● (2022)

[English]

Mr. Bill Kempling (Halton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I want to spend the bulk of my time talking about research and development. Before getting into that I should like to make a few remarks based on the comments of my colleague the hon. member for High Park-Humber Valley (Mr. Jelinek), and those of a few other members, possibly just adding a bit to what they have said.

Hon. members will have noticed that in our motion we recommended the establisment of a small business secretariat. The minister in his remark in reply said he felt the present structure of a Ministry of State for Small Business, under the wing, so to speak, of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner), was adequate. I believe that was the gist of his remarks.

Let me just say that the concern we have on this point results from the fact that we all saw the establishment several years ago of the Ministry of State for Science and Technology. Like many Canadians, we thought it was really going to be something, but we find on examination of the administrative structure that a ministry of state, though set up by act of parliament, can be cancelled by order in council. Essentially it is a weak structure from which you cannot expect too much muscle. For that reason my colleague and others who have looked at this situation felt that a small business secretariat not under the wing of the Department of Finance or the Ministry of Industry, Trade and Commerce would be a better structure through which we could carry out programs.

Let me just say a word or two about the Small Businesses Loans Act. Because I have had a good deal to do with it in my constituency during the years I have been a member here, let me make a suggestion to the minister, if he will consider it. Probably one of the most valuable things the minister could do as far as the Small Businesses Loans Act is concerned, now that we have the rates sorted out, is to put together a little booklet on how to apply for a small business loan.

In talking with people in banking I have been told that the greatest difficulty they have in granting a loan is with the applicant. Applicants do not as a rule come in with adequate information. They do not bring a financial statement in most cases or a statement in respect of cash flow, and in many instances do not have a clear idea of what they want to accomplish. Applicants usually come in as a result of a cash bind in which they find themselves at particular times. They run into the bank and say they would like to have a loan under the Small Businesses Loans Act, but they do not have the supporting information. These applicants do not get their loans and consequently feel aggrieved and call their member of parliament.

I think that if a very straightforward brochure was put together on how to apply for a small business loan, explaining also that the government only guarantees the loan, it would be of assistance. It should point out that the money does not belong to the government but is the bank's money and the bank has to approve the loan. That is something else most applicants do not understand. The brochure should point out that if the applicant expects to get bank approval he should take these several elementary steps, putting this information together, as this will assist the bank manager to assess the application for a loan. I pass that suggestion on to the minister for his consideration as I think it might help the situation considerably.

Having regard to the paper flood we seem to have experienced and about which everybody is complaining, let me just repeat what I have said a couple of times in this House. Perhaps others can do what I did in a practical way to cut down on the paper work coming into my office from the government. I bought a rubber stamp on which was engraved simply "not applicable". I took all those pieces of paper that dealt with taxation and put them to one side because I realized I had to pay the taxes, but anything that did not deal with taxation I stamped "not applicable" and sent it back to Ottawa. After I had done this three or four times my paper work was reduced by 30 per cent or 40 per cent. I pass that information on to any members who would like to use it because I can say from experience that it works.

Let me now deal with research and development as it applies to the small business sector. When you look at the structure of small businesses you must ask yourself where these people come from. In most cases you find they come from large businesses. These people have worked for a large business concern and have a desire to go out and make it on their own. Whatever the rationale is, away they go and they take with them a variety of talent.

In many cases these individuals have design talents, engineering talents or what-have-you. The great difficulty facing a small businesman is insufficient cash flow. These people just do not have the cash to carry through a research and development project. They may have the idea and the desire, and the market may be there, but they do not have the cash to carry the idea through.

The first suggestion we make in that regard is that we should consider setting up a reserve for research and development from tax payable. In other words, when you make out your tax return and get right down to the amount of tax you must pay, you should be allowed to reserve a portion of that for research and development. This could be accumulated for a period of two to five years, depending on what it is you are going to do, so that when you begin your research and development project you will have the cash available to carry it through.

The second suggestion we would make to the minister is that we amend the Small Businesses Loans Act to allow small and medium-sized businesses to borrow under the act in order to supplement their reserves for research and development. We should allow research and development as a reason for granting a loan under the Small Businesses Loans Act. In fact, the two things could flow together. We should allow a portion of the tax to be set aside out of profits as a reserve for research and development, and follow that up with a loan to make it possible for the individual to build the jigs and fixtures, allowing the project to be set up. In this way the cash would be available and something could be started.

Many of these small companies have a sort of mechanic who has worked in business and starts off on his own, designing and building a piece of machinery. Most of this is done by experimentation or by trial and error. If the part breaks, the man reinforces it. In many cases there is very little sophisticated engineering involved. One of the great things we might do in this country is make better use of our provincial research councils and research facilities at universities.

If a small business had a research and development project that had been approved, had the money set aside and the research facilities, perhaps in certain cases the government would agree to pay a portion of the engineering costs to bring that article to market. We could do this through provincial research foundations on a contract basis, thereby relieving the small business sector of that cost. We could also do this through our universities, because all provinces do not have research councils. In these instances we would be supplying the engineering and research facilities to the small businessmen who do not have this capability on their own premises.

● (2032)

In many cases we have people with ideas who know the market, how to sell something, how to market it, how to advertise it. But there may be engineering which has to be done to the product in order to put it in such condition that it can be easily manufactured. The product may require engineering that is not within the competence of the individual concerned. I am suggesting that we use the facilities of the provincial research foundations and the universities to assist the small business community in this regard.

Furthermore, I suggest to the minister that we establish a series of tax-free prizes or awards for new innovations that have a significant effect on reducing our unemployment and balance of payments. These prizes would be for new devices that could be manufactured, engineered and brought into the marketplace. There is a lot of this going on throughout the country. The federal government could sponsor national contests where small business people design and develop products that will have a market either inside or outside Canada. It could work on an award basis where the government gives a tax free prize to the business or individual who designed the device. This is something that people will strive for, such as municipalities do when building a new building. They hold a context among architects for the best design. This is along the same line, something that will stimulate the interest of the people.

The problem we face in Canada is how to get more things made in this country. Look at the tremendous balance of payments problem and the deficit we have in finished goods. We cannot go on like this. We have to make more in this country. We import more per capita in finished goods than any other western nation. We import more machinery per capita than any country in the world, and last year we imported $24 billion of high technology products. Certainly a good deal of that can be made in this country.

There are those who will try to convince people that everything we do has to be based on the economies of scale, and that we have to have large manufacturing facilities to carry this out. I would just refer to the report we tabled yesterday of the Royal Commission on Corporate Concentration, page 408, where it states:

> A healthy small and medium-sized business sector can offset the effects of high concentration in some industries, although stimulation or encouragement of small business will not fundamentally transform Canada's industrial structure, and many industries in Canada will continue to be dominated by large, capital-intensive firms. Nevertheless smaller businesses can increase competition in some industries and have beneficial social effects. They have demonstrated their ability to innovate and to sustain market competition when they are given a reasonable chance to grow.

That is the point I am making.

One of the difficulties our small business section faces is venture capital. We are going to have to address ourselves to this very serious problem and put in place instruments that will assist in getting these small businesses this capital. In fact the capital gains tax we have in the country today has done more harm to the small business sector than to anyone else, because in the past businesses were able to get a good deal of their funding from wealthy people within the community who were prepared to loan money on the possibility of a capital gain at a future date. Now, however, the small business must deal in the short-term money market with the banks. Businesses just do not have the facilities with the level of activity in the country to go ahead and develop things on their own. this is why we are suggesting to the minister than he seriously consider these points on research and development for the small business sector.

I would like briefly to review these points again. Firstly, to allow the small and medium-sized business to set up a reserve for research and development from taxes payable so that funds could be accumulated that would allow research and development projects to be carried through to completion. Under this scheme a small business would be able to accumulate funds over a period of from two years to five years, without affecting their cash position from their normal day-to-day operations, with which they could undertake a research and development project. That is the main thrust of it.

The second step is to amend the Small Businesses Loans Act. We do not use the Small Businesses Loans Act enough. We have all been through difficult times in the past. I can recall speaking to the one-time minister of finance, Mr. Turner, when he was here about the anguish of the small business community and how they would go to a banker who would say: "We have never heard of the Small Businesses Loans Act and we do not handle it in this branch." Mr. Turner's reply was to the effect that he would speak to the chairman of the Canadian Bankers Association and see if he could alleviate the problem. Of course, nothing ever happened.

There was also a problem with the rate formula, but that was changed and now we have a formula where borrowers pay one per cent above prime, and I believe that is reasonably acceptable. We now have to move to be sure that it is understood, and the minister must do more lobbying with the bankers and be damned sure that it gets down to the branches because this is where the difficulty lies. I hope we will see the day when the small businessman can go into a chartered bank that will say: "We know about the Small Businesses Loans Act, here are the necessary forms, fill them out and we will consider your application".

I do not wish to put all the onus on the banks because it is a two-way street when borrowing money. The individual borrowing has to supply adequate information to the banks if he is going to expect to get a loan. I suggest to the minister that he put together a booklet on how to get a loan through the Small Businesses Loans Act. Many people just do not know what is required, and I know this from the number that I talk to. I tell them quite openly if they are turned down by one bank to go to another. After all, we have six banks and we are not tied to one.

If the banks choose not to move in this area and the minister cannot make any progress, when we are looking at the Bank Act revision I will suggest to him that perhaps near banks, caisse populaires, trust companies and credit unions should move into the field covered by the Small Businesses Loans Act. Somewhere along the line we have to find funding for the small business sector, and it must be more than we have now. We have to find credit facilities. If we do, I know there will be more entrepreneurs and the hiring of more people.

I know this from people of my own acquaintance and from experience of my own personal business. In my own little business we have designed three products we hope to receive the patent for within the next 18 months. We did this all on our own without any assistance from the government. We are just one small company, and there are thousands across this country that have far better abilities than my company has. I know that it can be done and that we must move into this area to assist the small business sector. If we take this action, I know that Canada generally is going to gain. I urge the minister to heed my remarks and find some way to move in this direction in the very near future.

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, in this critical period when vast changes are occurring over a very short period of time, it seems difficult for those participating in these changes to have a clear perception of what is happening. Only much later is the nature of the crisis described by historians.

● (2042)

The failure to perceive global crises perhaps explains the nature of the deliberations in this House over the last year, with emphasis on alleged RCMP misdeeds, concentration on elections and polls and the kinds of events that occurred this afternoon. These factors, I believe, tend to belie the true nature of the period in which we are living.

The quantum leap in the problems facing all nations, the unheard of phenomena of growing energy shortages globally, and the failure of conventional techniques to deal with these problems either because the techniques are not commensurate with the magnitude of the problem or because they are, worse still, counterproductive, are factors which should suggest to all that we are in a critical period, a period between one era and another.

One of the characteristics of the era that we have lived through is the great faith in bigness. If something is big it has got to be better, cheaper and more efficient. I believe one of the causes for the changes in our time which will bring the end of this era is that faith in bigness. It is my belief in a new era, when we come to grips with these problems and the nature of this crisis of our time, that we will find smaller units and smaller groups, smaller businesses and smaller governments. These are some of the things which will characterize this new period.

I am pleased today to be involved in this debate on small business. I would like to congratulate the hon. member for High Park-Humber Valley (Mr. Jelinek) and those who were responsible for putting this motion together. I think the motion is well thought out. I would also like to congratulate the Minister of State (Small Business) (Mr. Abbott) for his response. It seems to me that in this debate today there has been a general good mood in terms of this problem. We all see different things that can be done, but in general we are looking at suggestions from all over this House so as to move in an intelligent direction, a direction which I think presages a new era.

Dealing with the motion, there are a couple of areas which I perceive as being important. One of the ways that governments can change direction is in their purchasing policies. Certainly I believe that governments, because of the very large nature of the operation, can make some significant advances in supporting small business by adopting purchasing policies which will support small business. The minister alluded to this. We have taken some steps but I am sure more can be taken.

The notion of a consortia of small businesses is one that I find particularly pleasing provided, of course, the consortia themselves do not become a large business. There are many ways this can be done. Perhaps more than anything John Bulloch's group and other groups in this country are explaining and pointing to a direction to make this possible.

I agreed with the minister when he took some exception to the limited nature of the definition of small business as described in the motion. One definition might very well be "owner-management" but I think this definition, as the minister explained, is somewhat limited and should be broadened and made a little more flexible. Generally in this House we know what we are talking about when we are discussing this problem.

In my area of the country, which is northwestern Ontario, we see some problems which communities and small businessmen are facing. I see that there are things sensitive governments can do to resolve some of these problems. I must say, Mr. Speaker, that in the first three or four years I was here I was not very happy with the approach taken to small businesses. I always had the feeling that officials in the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce were much more big business oriented, looked at big things and were only interested in big things. But I think in the last couple of years since we have had two ministers move into this area that there has been a great improvement and a new sensitivity is developing. It occurs to me that some of the communities and small business people, particularly in the small manufacturing sectors, require more managerial assistance.

There are one or two other factors which I would like to mention. First of all let us take a theoretical situation. As an example I would cite a community with a good supply of wood, some entrepreneurial skills in terms of working with that wood, a perception of the wood chip industry potential and the need to create jobs. Incidentally, the market for the wood chip industry is expanding, particularly in the United States. Here is a scenario that is found in many northern Ontario communities.

When governments look at this kind of scenario there are things they can do to change the situation into a productive one where jobs would be created. Money is one of the factors, but I think this factor is being solved. We are moving in a direction where it becomes more possible to get hold of the kind of funds necessary, at least in many cases. Other managerial skills beyond the skills needed to run the production unit are probably necessary. One that comes to mind, is the skill of finding a market. Very often the market is something that eludes the small entrepreneur because the market may very well be dominated or controlled by large business and large corporations. From the discussions I have had with a number of small businessmen, with community representatives and industrial groups looking for new industry, this kind of support is needed badly.

I suggest at this point that there is a rather fortunate economic situation which should make it easier for small businesses to compete in some of the traditional markets. This results from the depressed value of the dollar. We are all aware, since there has been a great deal of discussion of it in this House, of the 90-cent dollar or the 87-cent dollar and the effect it has on our exports. It is easier to sell our exports in traditional markets under these circumstances.

However, one of the things that has not been mentioned and which has not been part of the discussions to my knowledge—perhaps it has on one or two occasions only—has been the relative competitive advantage that the higher price of imports gives to the Canadian entrepreneur. If the import is 13 or 14 per cent higher in price than it traditionally should be, this could give the small Canadian businessman a chance to compete in this market. Sometimes I think the reason why more of this is not happening is that the business community and governments do not realize what the position is and do not try to stimulate that kind of activity. I think it is very important that we realize that when the dollar is depressed people selling on the local market—that is, the Canadian entrepreneur—have a distinct advantage over the importers of foreign goods.

[Mr. McRae.]

• (2052)

I think that the era of "small is beautiful" is going to dominate in the future much more than in the past. From my own experience in the business world of large industry, and as principal of several high schools large and small, I have come to believe that the smaller the unit, the more efficient and productive it is, and the happier are the people in it. Smaller businesses, smaller government units and decentralized government will offer many opportunities in the future which we did not have when we were so busy trying to make things bigger.

I want to compliment the Canadian Federation of Independent Business which I think has done more to bring the small businessman, the entrepreneur and the small company to the fore in this country than any single group up to this point. One of the things that John Bullock and the people associated with him has done is to differentiate between small business and the large corporation. In the past small businessmen, I think, had seen themselves as almost identical to large businessmen, the only difference being size. I think the Canadian Federation of Independent Business has identified a qualitative difference between the two groups and this is extremely important.

They have also indicated their concern about big government, big labour—the whole spectrum of bigness. This is one of the contributions being made to the new era which is fundamentally important in terms of where we, as Canadians, are going.

I should now like to make one or two comments on the report of the Royal Commission on Corporate Concentration which came down yesterday; I think it is very appropriate to this debate. I am one of the two or three members of this House who put in an appearance at the commission hearings and presented some thoughts on the question of corporate concentration. I agree with critics of the commission that the terms of reference were too narrow and that the commission should have dealt with the concentration of power in all areas. The terms of reference are what they are, however, and the commission had to work within them. I became very disturbed in particular about the global nature of multinational corporations or, as some people call them, global corporations—the extent of their power and the branch plant mentality which has had a great effect on the economic structure of this country. I was disturbed, too, about the control of global assets.

I would recommend to hon. members a book entitled "Global Reach" which deals with the assets of some global corporations. It indicates that the liquid assets of the major global corporations in the world are one and one-half times to twice the size of the liquid assets of all the national banks in the countries where they function. It also states that some of the currency problems of the past four or five years are the result of the great power that these liquid assets confer and the extent to which these assets are mobile. The United States Senate finance committee did a great deal of work in 1973-74 and the very first report it produced provides the basis for my figures.

Local corporations have some definite advantages. They are able to move goods around the world and encourage manufacturing in developing or non-developed countries, but they also create serious problems. Sometimes the type of production activity, the type of product or the type of advertising may not be appropiate to the country in which they function. Very often third world countries are faced with many problems because of the nature of global corporations. That is not to say that we make a judgment whether global corporations are good or bad, but one has to say that some things global corporations do are not desirable and other things they do are very desirable.

The problem of control, which was one of the topics I raised when I appeared before the royal commission, is a very difficult one. Some of the efforts being made by UNCTAD, the OECD and other such groups are very necessary, as are some other multination efforts to maintain some kind of regulation over global corporations, particularly in the area of tax transfers. There is a tendency to set up tax regimes which are not designed particularly for the benefit of the nation states of the world. These are some of the matters I dealt with in my submission to the royal commission.

Obviously, Mr. Speaker, I have not read through the 32 volumes of the report, but in the summaries I have read I was disappointed at the almost total endorsement without any real criticism of the nature of these forces. I was very disappointed for many reasons. I think the great concentration of power in the hands of global corporations could be a source of global depression.

One of the associate editors of The Economist, Norman McRae—no relative—published an article within the last six months in which he predicted some of the very grave problems facing us and the possibility of global depression because of the largeness and insensitivity of global corporations. He felt that only those global corporations that were able to decentralize their operations so that units in a given country, such as small factories, were able to function independently might survive this kind of depression. I think it is very important that we understand there are inefficiencies in global corporations attributable to bigness. A great deal of care must be taken to ensure that because of the largeness, the difficulty of administration, the remoteness—

● (2102)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his allotted time has expired.

Mr. McRae: May I have just one more minute, Mr. Speaker?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. McRae: I am just completing my remarks. Because of the nature and bigness of these corporations, there is great concern here. This concern must also be felt by the global corporations. In conclusion, I support the nature of the motion. I am very pleased that we will not be voting on this motion, but it is one we can all discuss. We can raise points and make suggestions and, in the end, it is hoped we will have a much more viable small business community in this country.

Mr. Bert Hargrave (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, this allotted day debate on small business is very timely indeed, particularly since it follows the day after the tabling of the Bryce commission report on corporate concentration.

About two weeks ago, during my nomination meeting in my constituency of Medicine Hat, I made this very short and succinct statement which I think is appropriate in this debate:

> We should let the private sector operate with much less government restraint and involvement and, given such an opportunity, the private sector would stimulate far more jobs than any make-work projects by governments.

While it is obviously an over-simplification, it seems to me that statement, in a nutshell, is what the Bryce commission report had to say in its 450 pages which came out yesterday after three years of serious work. However, today I want to relate this small business theme to Canada's agricultural industry and, if time permits, to a few other local small business operations that are typical in my constituency.

The original small business in Canada, as in many other countries, is, of course, farming. Every farmer by any definition is a small business operator-manager. In the total picture, they are certainly the most important since they produce society's prime necessity, food. If there has to be a case made for private enterprise, then surely farmers lead the way. As a group, they are probably the last natural private enterprisers left in our society today.

Farming, at least many sectors of it, as a business has had some rather serious problems over the past three or four years. There are now some indications we are emerging from at least some of the short-term difficulties. I want to now examine some of these situations.

I want to make reference now to Canada's hog industry, especially in western Canada. Over the last three or four years, Alberta's hog population has dropped by about one million hogs. At the same time, Quebec's hog population increased by that same amount, about one million hogs. At first glance, it would appear that we have lost our western hog population to Quebec, but this is not so. We lost it to the United States.

Last year, 1977, Canada had to import 202 million pounds of pork from the United States. In that same year we exported only 20 million pounds to the U.S.A. The Quebec hog increase was the result of their provincial incentive and subsidy programs. However, in total we could not produce enough hogs to supply our own requirements. That was last year, and the same situation appears to be continuing now.

Why has this situation developed? I suggest that we lost those million hogs in the west because of a change in the price of our barley. Over that three to four-year period, western barley changed from three bushels for $1 to one bushel for $3. The small businessman hog producer made the obvious business decision to sell his barley instead of slopping hogs. It was the right decision under those circumstances.

An added reason was the lower cost of hog production in the United States corn belt. Although western barley is somewhat lower in price now, somewhere between $1.75 to $2 a bushel in the west, this situation still exists. There is no stampede back into hogs in the west.

This hog situation has had some serious implications in the west in many of the related industries. Our meat packing industry, which is very labour intensive, now has a serious unused slaughter capacity for both hogs and cattle, especially in Alberta. Our 17 major slaughter plants in Alberta have seen three or four closures over the last year, and more will likely follow. Some of these are modern, efficient plants like our plant in Medicine Hat, which closed rather suddenly in late December.

Our livestock trucking service industry, a very valuable industry that we cannot get along without, has experienced a serious backlash from this meat packing crisis. The fact that cattle and meat prices have suddenly taken off to record high levels has not changed the bottom line problem for our western Canadian meat packing industry.

There is no easy solution to this hog production situation, certainly not in the short term. Surely the long-term approach must be for all concerned to recognize that the natural and obvious market for our western barley is right on the farm where it was grown, or on the one across the road with a hog operation or cattle feed lot on it.

Crop prospects now all across western Canada are very, very favourable, even at this early date. They are favourable because of excellent moisture conditions which extend over the whole of the west. This is in sharp contrast to last year's very serious drought conditions.

A somewhat later seeding, possibly due to wet fields and cool weather, could mean more barley being seeded and less wheat, perhaps all across the west. We might very well produce more feed grains than wheat in Alberta this year. We could see a western barley crop in excess of five hundred million bushels.

If an increasing portion of these feed grains could be fed on the prairies and converted to value-added food products, the load on our railway grain transportation system, which is now very heavily overloaded, would be considerably lessened. We should be exporting our domestic value-added agricultural products, especially to the United States, and not exporting those secondary value-added jobs. This is what is happening when we now export our live feeder-cattle to the United States.

Let us examine that overloaded railroad grain transportation system to which I just referred. The problem has been building up since the mid-sixties. I refer hon. members back to the government task force on agriculture. Among other things, it recommended that two out of every three western farms should go, as there was no real future in the grain industry. It also recommended that we should export 500,000 feeder calves from western Canada every fall because we could not grow them out or finish them in the west. This was followed by the famous LIFT program. It also indicated that the government had no confidence in the western grain and feeding industry.

• (2112)

The immediate problem is the shortage of boxcars. There is no labour problem. There are no rail stoppages. In 1975 the railways had 20,000 boxcars and 6,000 government hopper cars. This car count has now shrunk to 13,000 boxcars and 8,000 hopper cars, for a net loss of about 14 million bushels capacity. It is expected to decrease by another five million bushels capacity by the end of this year. The immediate need is for a boxcar repair program to provide some relief until the 4,000 new hoppers requested by the Wheat Board come into service. Our country elevators and branch line systems have never been a bottleneck. Yet for political reasons these areas have received all the attention over the past decade.

These are situations which have hurt every small businessman farmer in western Canada over the last ten years or more. Well-planned, long-range solutions are required, some of which will take years to implement. One such issue requiring attention concerns the statutory rate, or the Crowsnest rate, as it is called. This has been with us for 70 years or so. It won't go away by itself. We shall have to face up to it some time, though that cannot possibly be now, or before the election, whenever it comes.

Now I want to turn to a brief review of other small business matters. I have selected a few examples from my constituency which are typical of what one could find in most regions of Canada. I want to show how small business operators, especially in the rural areas, have been able to get along. First, there is a hockey stick manufacturing company in the short-grass country near Medicine Hat which combines imported Thailand hardwood with British Columbia wood to produce "Westar" hockey sticks used in our western junior league to a large extent and chosen in competition with well known brands manufactured in central Canada.

There is a glass blowing industry called Altaglass involving only six people which creates beautiful works of art through an almost forgotten trade.

There is another manufacturing plant called Scott Manufacturing which specializes in playground equipment and large outdoor Christmas decorations. They ship their products all across Canada, a fair amount going into the northwest United States.

In the towns of Brooks and Bassano there are a variety of small business manufacturers catering to the oil and gas industry. Needless to say their business is flourishing in Alberta today.

In Taber, the heart of the irrigated area, there are other specialized industries which relate to the highly developed and productive irrigation zone in southern Alberta.

These are just a few examples of small businesses which fill a great need, a need which was not being supplied from other sources. They are typical in that they turn their profits back into their businesses within their own community. That is the only way they could get started and expand.

Hon. members may recall Winston Churchill's description of Britain in the dark days of the war as "a nation of shopkeepers".

Mr. Leggatt: It was Napoleon who said that, not Churchill.

Mr. Hargrave: Surely it is appropriate to suggest that Canada is a nation of small business operations with farmers leading the way. The time is long overdue for considered attention to be given to our small business sector along the lines of the motion we are presently debating with its five-step policy suggestions.

Before concluding these brief remarks it seems appropriate to comment on the Bryce report which I mentioned at the beginning of my speech. The suggestion that the capital gains tax should cease can be taken as the end result of seven years of serious inflation which began with the introduction of this new tax approach on, I believe it was, January 1, 1972. It seems to me that either the capital gains tax has to go or inflation must be positively controlled. The capital gains tax rollover provision in the budget last month affecting incorporated family farms is a direct result of the serious threat to family farms due to a combination of inflation and the capital gains tax.

As to the other suggestion in the report that we can live with big business, I say that if Canada is serious about engaging successfully in international trade, big business is not only justified but necessary, if only to take advantage of economies of scale. I can also agree with the recommendation in the report that corporate profits ought not to be taxed provided they are re-invested in the business. After all, that is how all business grows, especially small business. I would add, in conclusion, that farmers have always had to do this, though with them it has been a survival technique.

Hon. Martin O'Connell (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, the importance of small business in the Canadian economy can be doubted by no one, not only in terms of the number of firms that are small business firms— something like 90 per cent of all the firms in Canada—but also in terms of the employment created by those firms. Well over one third of all the members of the work force are in small business firms and at least one fifth of all the value of goods and services produced in Canada is in small business firms.

We cannot doubt the importance of policies to foster the viability and success of these firms, nor can we hide from ourselves the fact that small firms in many Canadian small towns across the country are in a state of difficulty. This difficulty arises from erosion of their position. In some cases they are simply manufacturing goods of a standard technological character and are faced by competition coming over the horizon from the third world countries where there has been a transfer of technology, a transfer of industry. We support that, but we also have to take special measures now because small industry in our country is threatened.

Just think of some of the small companies in many towns manufacturing, for instance, bicycles or textiles or chainsaws or auto parts. Sometimes they provide income and support for the whole community. Therefore, support for small industry is important. It is important socially and economically to maintain small communities. It is important from the point of view of regional balance in Canada. How much of industry is concentrated in the central provinces and how great a sense of unfairness can develop across the country if there is not a fair share of industry in the towns and cities in parts other than central Canada? Policies have to take account of that concern too.

● (2122)

Small industry is more than a romantic ideology. It is possible economically with today's technology to have a thriving and decentralized economy with small industry, and many countries demonstrate that, as does ours to some extent. It is not only possible but it is good social and regional policy as well. So I would like to congratulate the mover of the motion for bringing it forward and giving us this opportunity to make some remarks by way of proposing a network of supporting policies. I say network because what I want to stress, as indeed the motion does, is that there is needed not one given policy but a whole network of policies.

Let us look first at the question of taxation. Too often we think of taxation as the only way to approach the problems of industry, particularly small industry. Already major steps have been taken, inadequate as I suggest they still are, but we should at least recognize that the government has, in effect, rolled up its sleeves with respect to the problems of small industry. It is moving, not only by the creation of a special secretariat in the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce and a special minister, but also by a whole host of provisions, including tax provisions.

Let us review some of them to see what has been done. There is a special low rate of tax on the profits of small companies. It amounts to 25 per cent compared with the 46 per cent maximum rate of tax on larger companies. There are rebates and tax incentives for investment in research and development. Most recently in the budget, two tax measures were brought forward. There is the proposal for tax credits of 5 per cent, ranging up to 10 per cent in slow growth areas, for new investment in industry and for research and development.

Then, in the most recent budget, there was a special measure to increase the write-off for new research and development over a certain base period. This added budget measure will allow small and large companies to deduct from their income 50 per cent of the costs of increased R&D activities, a very important measure for small business. This would raise the total immediate write-off to one and a half times the amount spent on new R&D. For example, if a company spent $100 on new R&D, it could write off $150 against the taxable income.

This is of considerable help to small business. What would be the savings to a small business? These tax savings would amount to about $16 in every $100 of new expenditure on research and development. Instead of the net cost of R&D after tax being $75, the net cost would be approximately $59 in Ontario and $55 in the slow growth regions of Canada.

I should like to suggest an improvement over even this salutary measure which I hope the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) will take into account. It would be an improvement on behalf of small business not granted to large business with respect to these R&D tax incentives. The point is that small businesses pay a low rate of corporation tax on their profits. When that low rate is applied in the R&D context, it means that small businesses receive, in effect, a lesser advantage than that gained by corporations paying at higher rates of taxation. I would like the minister to consider whether it would be possible to expand the tax credit in the case of small businesses.

What are the objectives of R&D? I think we should be clear on what they are because the network of support policies have to focus very strongly in this area. The objects of R&D are to help a company to be technically advanced in its processes, in the methods it uses, in innovating new products and in modifying a product which it has in order to expand its market—in effect, to be aggressive in the entrepreneurial sense, to be right at the leading edge of change in the market.

In the face of these needs, Canada has one of the poorest performances in R&D among the western industrial countries and its performance has actually deteriorated in recent years. Does anyone really believe that this poor performance in R&D is related mainly to the tax environment? I do not think so, and I do not think the situation can be corrected by simply applying tax incentives and tax measures.

The tax environment can help, but there are other aspects that I think are more important. One of them is the relationship between and within firms that exists in a country like ours because of the high degree of foreign control and ownership in the economy. I do not say this in an aggressive sense but I wish it to be recognized that it is the practice for companies to do their main R&D at their head offices where their main market is and where their main corporate strength is. That means that Canada gets R&D transferred to it after new technology, new processes and new products have been developed elsewhere. This lag is important because it puts us behind in getting into new markets. We come in late.

We should recognize at the same time that many subsidiaries of foreign corporations do significant R&D in Canada. The picture is a mixed one. For example, Ortho Pharmaceutical, which is a wholly-owned subsidiary of Johnson, and Johnson, a huge multinational company, has one of the few research and development laboratories in this industry with 40 scientists who have developed worldwide products in certain fields. That is the kind of autonomy and relationship that we need, but all subsidiary firms do not have it. Canadian General Electric has it to a limited extent, so does Eli Lilly and so does Hewlett Packard, DuPont and others; but in the main our branch plant economy lags in R&D because of that parent subsidiary relationship. We have it in our own case where Northern Telecom, a Canadian multinational, does its R&D in Canada.

What we need to do is to examine the relationship which is dragging R&D down in Canada. I think we can do that in the 23 task forces which have been set up a month or so ago and which are due to report for the first time in six weeks. They are developing action plans in 23 sectors, such as in plastics, in the auto industry, in pulp and paper, in mining, and in other manufacturing sectors. They can examine the impact on R&D of the high degree of foreign ownership and control which exists in Canada. We should not rely simply on changing the tax environment, because it will not change fundamentally the underlying patterns which are well entrenched.

I should like to suggest further in this connection that perhaps we should be considering a Canadian institute for intermediate scale technology. There is, however, a bias against new agencies and new initiatives of this kind. Nonetheless, it will work against our interests if we allow that bias to proceed too far. Why do I suggest a Canadian institute for smaller scale technology? In the first place, small businesses to succeed, certainly in manufacturing, have to be discontented with simply being a manufacturing firm manufacturing products on behalf of some other firm which has done all the design, all the research, all the development, and then says: "Bid on this contract. If you succeed fine, if you do not, we will go elsewhere". They must have independent, autonomous sources of product improvement and process improvement. Given the fact that we are on the lagging end because of the ownership and control situation, perhaps we do need research into intermediate scale technology to help Canadian businesses benefit from those improvements by developing them, and ensuring those improvements get into their operations.

● (2132)

As many hon. members have mentioned, perhaps we also need export consortia to help small firms grow out beyond their regional and domestic market. Because they are small and do not have a marketing organization to sustain the penetration of foreign markets, it would be an advantage for government to assist in the formation of export consortia. Let us not be driven off from such proposals by the argument that yet another government bureaucracy is being formed.

My main point in all this is that tax incentives are the easy way out. They will not do the whole job because of the particular problems we are faced with. I am referring to problems with the third world, the industrialized world and the scattered character of the Canadian economy. One aspect of the motion I should like to support was proposed and passed at the Liberal party national convention. I am referring to an amendment to the Income Tax Act which would suspend the operation of capital gains tax when small businesses pass within families or indeed to employees of firms.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. O'Connell: I am glad to see the party opposite has reached the same conclusion. Obviously that is because the need is evident. I hope it will not take long for the Minister of State (Small Business) (Mr. Abbott) to convince, with our assistance, the Minister of Finance of the importance of that provision.

There are other tax breaks for small businesses which are appropriate at this time as part of a network. Again I say that they are not the entire story. The Minister of State (Small Business) is proposing and developing what Americans have called small business investment corporations. We are likely to call them small business venture capital companies. What is such a company? Canadians with some savings can put their money into an intermediary corporation known as an investment corporation, a venture capital corporation, and not therefore directly into a small business itself. What will that venture capital company do with the money? It would invest in a number of risky ventures, some more and some less risky than others. It would diversify its total investment. It would protect investors by its diversification. It would be similar to an insurance principle. If one puts one's own money into a risk area, the risk is quite high. If one puts one's money into a company involved in the business of investing money in a diversified manner, then one has a chance at making a profit. Thus our small Canadian companies would be provided with the venture capital they need to go forward. Currently we lack such institutions. As I understand the minister, he is proposing their creation through a statute. I am sure all hon. members would support that.

What would be the inducement for Canadians to put money into such ventures? Well, they are given tax incentives. What kind of incentives? They are not difficult to find. They are allowed to write off any losses they might incur against other income. Also, they are allowed a lower than normal rate of tax on the gains made. As they look at the prospect of making gains with lower tax and being sheltered against total losses, then they will put their money into such a venture capital corporation. Entrepreneurs who would be assisted through other means in the network of policies would have this new source of capital with which to be innovative in products, and to become involved in new industries. With the capital gains adjustments mentioned earlier, they would be encouraged to retain capital and build it up.

I should like to mention another item, the special funds such as those the Canadian auto part manufacturers are requesting. This is not a tax measure. They are asking for repayable loans. Why are they requesting that? It is because we are entering a new phase of the auto industry. There is a demand for smaller, more economic, energy-saving, safer cars. The manufacturers will be required to make new parts. They will be using more plastic parts and will require new designs. Will we have our share? The auto parts industry is asking for a loan fund of a quarter of a billion dollars. That would be a repeat of a similar loan fund which was implemented 10 or 12 years ago when the auto pact began. They need such a fund again. Most of the money loaned from the previous fund was repaid. That is one method of assisting many of the smaller plants in the small towns and large cities across Canada. It would assist them in becoming involved in the next phase of the auto industry.

My time is running out but I should like to refer to the plastics processing industry. That industry has 1,400 firms. It is growing at twice the rate of our economy. Its productivity gains annually are twice the average in the manufacturing industry. It requires stabilized framework policies in tariffs and taxation. Above all, it needs a plastics institute to assist in the development of new technology in order for that industry to become very advanced. Other policies could be mentioned in the areas of procurement and tariffs.

At this stage, however, I should like only to refer to the need for a change in the internal organization of the federal government. We require more than a minister of state for small business. There should also be a senior economics minister. I am thinking of the office of the Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) as being assigned that role. One should consider the government's position in policy, the need for coherence and the meshing of policies. For example, one could look at such economic ministries as the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, the Department of Finance, the Department of Science and Technology, as well as others. At a time when policy and the creation of certain agencies are being considered, surely we need one minister who can bring it all together. The Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council is the person who ought to be assigned that special role.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the hon. member for High Park-Humber Valley (Mr. Jelinek) for presenting this excellent motion today. If all of the recommendations in this motion were accepted and implemented, certainly Canada would be back on track. It is evident we are off track today.

There was a previous excellent motion regarding the role of government in society and the economy on February 2, 1978. It was an attempt at bringing some sanity back into the Government of Canada. Also it was an attempt at bringing expenditures under control and to implement methods to limit the growing and undemocratic use of legislation which stifles Canadian businesses. Of course, the Liberal and New Democratic Parties united to vote against this excellent motion on February 2. No doubt we are going through an exercise of futility tonight.

It was interesting to hear the hon. member for Scarborough East (Mr. O'Connell) talking about venture capital. I have in my possession a document which was prepared by Peter Henry Jerch and Associates. Mr. Jerch in this document, which appeared in a recent weekend magazine, states:

● (2142)

For years I've been hearing the same scenario over and over again, with hardly any variations. It goes like this: Canadian entrepreneur develops hot idea, sets up company, gets successful in a small way, needs money to expand, goes to banks, goes to government agencies, goes to venture capital firms, knocks on half the doors in the Toronto-Dominion Centre, gets nowhere; his proposal is met with incomprehension or, at the very best, a cautious display of interest that's followed, weeks later, by a short letter saying no thanks.

Mr. Jerch in his document goes into some detail about the 40 firms he represents which are looking for capital venture so they can expand but are getting absolutely nowhere.

I should like to congratulate the Minister of State (Small Business) (Mr. Abbott) and the government for the excellent job they are doing to expand the economy. Unfortunately it is not the Canadian economy they are expanding but rather the economy of the United States. They are doing an excellent job of driving businesses and money out of this country, to the extent of billions of dollars.

I have done a little research into this and I know the amount of money that has gone to nine states. It totals $6.5 billion since 1976. Would it not be wonderful if we could have kept that money here for venture capital? We would then really have grown. I would like to challenge this government tonight, and perhaps the Minister of State (Small Business) could take this up with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien), to determine how much has gone to the other 41 states. If $6.5 billion has gone to nine states, what are we looking at in regard to what has left this country? These businesses are just not staying here. Businessmen have no faith in this government and are losing faith in this country. They are flocking to the United States with billions of dollars and numerous business ventures.

I have done a geographic breakdown in respect of this departure of businesses and money. Florida is going to be taken over by Canadians. The estimated capital expenditure in the state of Florida by Canadians is estimated to be more than $2.5 billion. While Florida is attracting large amounts of Canadian capital, California has become the second most invested area. To this date over $1.5 billion from Canadian pockets has ended up in California. Texas and New York comprise the third largest area of investment for Canadians, and the figure is $1.3 billion. In Colorado $500 million has been invested. In New Jersey the figure is $400 million, in North Carolina it is $400 million, and in the states of Georgia and Illinois the amount invested is $300 million. There is one area I have left off which should be listed. Some 30 per cent of the high rise apartments in Seattle, Washington, are owned by Canadians. Canadian Pacific invested $150 million in New York recently.

The Ottawa Citizen did an excellent study last year on the number of businesses moving out of Ontario. That article pointed out that 140 Canadian manufacturing firms moved to the state of New York, taking $28.6 million with them.

Union Nationale Leader Rodrigue Biron pointed out recently that $4 billion has left the province of Quebec. You can see how serious the situation is, Mr. Speaker. Until this situation is corrected we can talk all we want about the nice things we are doing to help Canadian business, but where will the money come from? As I have just pointed out, in respect of nine states alone $6.5 billion has left Canada for investment there since 1976.

[Mr. McKenzie.]

Peter Henry Jerch and Associates also prepared a document regarding the number of firms they represent. That firm represents 42 Canadian firms, and right now 30 of them are looking for expansion or a move to the United States. Let me give the reasons why they are going. While the known facts about small private investment in the U.S. makes Canada the most active foreign investor, even these facts are considerably understated according to Mr. Jerch. The vast majority of such investments or acquisitions are never reported officially, mostly for the reason that the normal successful businessman is good at operating a business but is generally publicity shy or fears that he may get burned somewhere in that process and that it may hurt his business to expose the transaction prematurely.

This is one of the problems we have when these investors or businesses decide to leave. They do not put ads in the paper. I hope the government is trying to keep some track of the number of businesses which are leaving as well as the amount of investment money they are taking with them in order that we can see how serious this problem is. This is a matter which has been raised in the House a number of times. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner) and the Minister of Finance have been questioned a number of times about this but we have received nothing but a negative response. We have seen absolutely no response from them, and no suggestions about meeting with these people in an attempt to keep this investment money in Canada.

In addition, Mr. Jerch goes on to say that many of these businessmen have tried to make their experience known, only to meet with civil service or political apathy. The experienced businessman therefore adopts the attitude that he should stick to what he knows best. Of course, they are worried about government reaction too, which tends to take the approach of controls—for example, control on exchange, like Italy, rather than taking the enlightened approach of making equity investment in a company at home less of a risk.

Mr. Jerch, in this document he has provided to me, points out that of 42 Canadian smaller and medium-sized active manufacturing and service enterprises, only 12 were looking for acquisitions in Canada only. Some 15 thought they would consider a further acquisition or investment in Canada as a second alternative, which suggests that reason tells them to go elsewhere, but they still tend to be optimistic despite all their complaints. However, 30 of the 42 are either actively looking in the United States or have already made one or more acquisitions or investment decisions there.

He also provided me with a document regarding a group of firms in Manitoba on whose behalf he was working. They total 49 and all are planning to move out of Canada. The amount of investment money they would be taking to invest in U.S. plants would amount to $196 million. According to Mr. Jerch's figures, this would mean a loss of up to 17,000 Canadian jobs. So hon. members can understand the difficulty we are running into.

Let me give additional reasons for this flight of capital and business. There are numerous reasons that money is fleeing Canada, and all of them are directly related to the economic policies of this government. Let me now examine briefly some of the more important causes of the lack of business confidence in Canada. Such an analysis will clearly show that neither Canadian businessmen nor American chambers of commerce can be blamed for the exodus of capital from this country.

Contrary to widespread public belief, the Quebec situation is not the only factor accelerating Canadian investment abroad. While events in Quebec have had a serious negative effect on investment in Canada, capital had been departing this country at alarming proportions for several years prior to the election of Mr. Lévesque.

The way to judge whether you have a good government and an attractive country is to determine whether you can attract investment money. Canada is no longer a country attractive to investment money. We cannot even keep the investment money of our own companies in this country. If there has been an exodus of $6.5 billion from Canada to nine states, I wonder what the amount has been for the other 41 states. Are we looking at $100 billion which has left Canada in the last few years? This is a staggering thought. There will be a huge burst one of these days when we find out the total amount.

We know what the effect of this has been in Canada, or at least the partial effect. We have one million unemployed, and unemployment is costing Canadian taxpayers $8 billion a year. More specifically, a climate of uncertainty has existed for several years in Canada, created by the policies of the present government. The best climate for quarterly and normal business growth is economic and social stability. During the decade this government has been in power, Canadian businessmen have been living in a state of uncertainty and insecurity because of the lack of leadership by this government.

• (2152)

Instead of enacting policies conducive to investment, the government seems to have done everything in its power to scare it away. The vast increases in spending, the proliferation of boards and regulatory agencies with numerous arbitrary powers and overlapping jurisdictions, and the lack of consultation for enterprising entrepreneurs, are just a few of the factors contributing to the uncertainty. These policies reflect the socialist leanings of this government, and it is no wonder that businesses look elsewhere when investing their money. References by the NDP to the effect that corporations are welfare bums does little to enhance investor confidence in Canada.

Mr. Jerch did a study on the number of businesses that were leaving Manitoba when the socialist government was in power. The number pulling out plus invested money would contribute to the loss of 4,000 jobs in the province of Manitoba.

Also related to the preceding point is the problem of too much government. The ever-increasing size of the federal public service and the problems created by this expansion are factors which hinder business activity. Businessmen are forever hassled by federal regulatory agencies, departments, boards, bureaux, offices and councils with their myriad of rules, regulations, laws, edicts, orders, decrees and statements. In short, they are inundated with paperwork. Moreover, should a businessman disagree with a ruling it is extremely difficult to appeal to that body, and the time and effort involved usually precludes an appeal anyway.

Businessmen do not run into this problem in the United States. The government and labour there welcome businessmen and investment money because they know there is no alternative to a business establishing a factory or a plant. They do not harass businesses to death.

Government involvement in the economy has increased to the point where 42 per cent of our GNP, which is the sum of all goods and services produced in Canada, is produced by the government. If present trends by provincial and federal governments continue, 88 per cent of all goods and services produced in Canada by 1990 will be under the state. Only 12 per cent will be left for private enterprise. That is the reason why businesses are pulling out. They have no faith in their government. There is so much uncertainty that they are not going to leave their money here.

It is all very well for government members to be talking about venture capital and what-have-you. There is not going to be any venture capital in this country. This is high risk capital, and nobody is going to take any risks in Canada. The solution to the problem is to slowly reduce the size of the government, not through massive lay-offs of dedicated civil servants, but by attrition. In addition, wasteful make-work projects could be eliminated. If governments want to make work, the best way to do it is through proper incentives to private industry.

Our motion on February 2 of this year was put forth to deal with these things, but the last thing this government wants to do is to reduce the size of any of its bodies. The NDP want more and more government employment because they want to do everything in their power to harass business as much as they possibly can so they can drive more and more of it out. They want everybody to work for the government. Everybody is going to work for the government and they are going to chase every business out of the country. That is what they want to do and they are successful. We saw it with Blakeney in Saskatchewan when he started it all in 1975 by nationalizing the potash industry. He put the fear of death into the American investor. They also did the same thing with the mining industry. Our friend from New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt) knows his leader in British Columbia put the fear of death in business and investors in that province.

I have a very interesting quote from Mr. Neil Wood, president of Cadillac Fairview Limited. He was quoted in the Ottawa Citizen recently as saying:

> We're not selling out Canadian assets, nor turning our back on good Canadian opportunities, but they are few and far between. Government delays in getting approvals continue to frustrate us in Canada compared with U.S. where development is welcome.

It is not welcome here with the socialist governments we have at the federal and provincial levels. Thank goodness there is only one left.

I would like to go now to some quotes from American newspapers. The Dallas Times Herald of February 19, 1978 says:

> The Canadians are coming! All the battle preparations won't be necessary, but our neighbours to the north are invading—in an investment sort of way . . . while the Canadians have invested in everything from mining and petroleum to merchandising and manufacturing, much of their money is being poured into real estate . . . The list of Canadian held properties is quite impressive. They include an ongoing $1 billion, 42 acre housing development in Homestead, Florida, the purchase of several small but profitable banks in Florida, the Peachtree Centre Tower in Atlanta, the development and purchase of shopping malls and mobile home communities in Florida and North Carolina, numerous new and old office buildings in New York, Detroit, L.A., San Francisco and many more.
>
> There are reasons bringing Canadian investors to the States other than age old desire to make a buck. First, the political climate in the 111 year old confederation is anything but encouraging to business. Add to the political climate the fact that Canada has many more environmental and planning restrictions on development than does the U.S., and one has a picture of a nation with a governmental atmosphere that stifles growth.

This debate is nothing but an exercise in futility because the government have no intention of correcting the situation and are not going to implement one recommendation in this motion. They will merely ignore it, just like they ignored our February, 1978 motion. Their philosophy is to stifle business and to make things as awkward and as difficult as they possibly can for people, and to stick their noses into everybody's business.

Here is another comment from the Miami Herald dated March 30, 1978:

> The Canadian dollar is buying up Florida in an escalating and often frenzied scramble to find a haven from political and economical uncertainty at home . . . Canada's largest financial and development corporations alike are exporting their savings and surplus capital in a classic flight to find sanctuary.

In my remaining minute, I would like to ask the government once again to supply figures for the 41 remaining states. I have given Canadian investment figures for nine states with a total of $6.5 billion in the last couple of years. Let us put all our cards on the table and find out the exact amount that has gone into the United States in investment. I have given some examples of businesses leaving, mostly from Ontario to go to New York, but let us get it all out in the open. I would like to know exactly what this government is going to do about this situation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It being ten o'clock it is my duty to declare that, pursuant to Standing Order 58(11), the proceedings on the motion have expired.

[Mr. McKenzie.]

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

COMMUNICATIONS—TELEVISION PROGRAMS FOR THE DEAF

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I have asked the Minister of Communications (Mrs. Sauvé) on two occasions to provide aid to assist persons afflicted with deafness. There are two million such in Canada. First of all, every Canadian has a right, regardless of this handicap, to an education which will allow that individual to develop and function to the maximum of his or her ability. The government has not seriously considered the needs and the welfare of the deaf. Employment of anyone handicapped rarely occurs unless there is some incentive. Manpower offers some assistance but the response is poor.

● (2202)

Very little money is spent on the deaf compared to what is spent on people with visible disabilities. The working deaf are taxpayers but they work in a world where, if not handicapped by the actual job, they are certainly handicapped by their surroundings which are altogether different from those of other people. They have little or no means of oral education, of hearing the conversation of others or of patronizing the things others do and getting news as you and I get it, Mr. Speaker, even though they have the same intelligence as we have. All this is beyond their means without special teachers. They do not yet have equal job opportunities and our twentieth century society does little to help them.

There are some questions that I should like to put to the parliamentary secretary who is representing the minister tonight. For instance, what education do the deaf get? Are they eligible for the $1,000 tax deduction that is available to other handicapped persons? It is rarely that we see these people rise to the level of university teaching, medicine or the other professions that are high on the pay scale. The George Brown college in Toronto draws a lot of people from all across the country and produces brilliant deaf scholars—many as brilliant as you would find here, Mr. Speaker, and maybe a little more brilliant at times. There is also a fine building for the deaf in Toronto which is being completed by the great war veteran, Con Smyth. I know him and the Reverend Roy Rumbull, Ernie Watts, and others I am not going to mention but who are also very interested in this work.

When I put my original question the minister told me that they are "researching". What are they researching, Mr. Speaker? They already have the decoder so why have they stopped? She said it costs $2,000 but I say let us spend the money. This device has been perfected and is working in the United States. Have funds been made available to Bell Northern Research, for instance, to go south of the border and research this system?

The decoder may be a bargain at $2,000 because it gives deaf people a chance to hear the things the rest of us hear. What more right have I, who can hear and see, to view the televised proceedings of parliament which is paid for by the taxpayers of this country, some of whom are deaf? Why can this decoder not be used so that they too can follow the proceedings? Are they not entitled to hear the hockey game that is being broadcast tonight? We are shutting these people out of many things because they are a quiet minority, and I say we have to do something about it.

Deaf people are often very innovative. Some of them took the old CN and CP teletype machines and converted them so that they could be used with the telephone. When you punch the keys a light comes on at the number you have dialed, the person there picks up the receiver and they can communicate back and forth. Why are we not pursuing this and getting ahead of the United States, instead of just waiting to copy them as we usually do?

I want to point out to the parliamentary secretary that it costs about $1 million to institutionalize a deaf person for 30 or 40 years. Yet they say the decoder only costs $2,000. Then when the unemployment rate goes up because it is hard for those persons who are a little hard of hearing to get a job, they look at them and say "no". I am not taking anything away from the government or manpower, because I know what they try to do, but look at what has been the response. Hon. members know the response as well as I do: it has been terrible. They just do not get it in this workaday world.

● (2207)

I want to go on a little further to say that there must be ideas and creative work for these people so long forgotten by the public purse which has poured out money on so many things that were far less deserving. Will the minister make a commitment to do something? Will she give some research funds to Bell Northern Research to make sure that the required research is done, and will she check with those in the United States? Will this invisible handicap then become one that will partially disappear?

In closing, I want to say to the parliamentary secretary for goodness sake let us stop putting things off and making excuses. Excuses only last so long. These are people who cannot speak for themselves or who cannot hear all that is going on. They are handicapped people that we all owe something to. As far as possible they try to work and do the things that they can do.

Mr. C. Douglas (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to respond to the hon. member this evening. As we all know, he at all times expresses sincere concern for the handicapped of this country and for those less fortunate than ourselves.

I can assure the hon. member that the minister herself feels the concern, as he does, for all handicapped, whether they are handicapped by loss of hearing, loss of sight or by other handicaps. However, the solution is not as simple as we would like it to be.

I will deal specifically with the hon. member's concern about the captioning and use of sign language in television broadcasting. As he may or may not know, even in the use of sign language we have not as yet been able to come up with a universal type of sign language that can be used from coast to coast across Canada.

As hon. members probably know, sign language came to this country from France possibly about 100 years ago. Since then it has been developed in individual areas in the country to the point where we have a break-up of dialects even in the hand signals or in the sign language used on television. This, of course, presents a problem when we speak about a national broadcast designed to go into homes right across Canada and the United States. The mandate of the Minister of Communications (Mrs. Sauvé) is such that she cannot compel the networks, to use this system. In particular this applies to the private networks and the CBC, because the CBC does not fall under the umbrella of the Minister of Communications as far as programming is concerned. She must cajole and try to persuade them. Her mandate falls into the area where she can permit the use of this system but not compel it, as the hon. member knows. She would be pleased to permit this type of broadcasting right across the country.

However, we have learned that there are problems arising in the United States with the private networks which have expressed some concern. There are two types of captioning. One is the use of the sign language itself in the corner of the picture and the other is the proposed use of line 21 for captioning, either open or closed captioning, in the television screen.

● (2212)

One problem with captioning is that they found in limited use in the United States, primarily at the present time by the Public Broadcasting System, that the actual captioning of a broadcast, for example a news program or an hour long program, could involve the work of people from ten to 30 times as long as the actual presentation of the broadcast in order to put it on the air.

Mr. Rynard: How about the decoder?

Mr. Douglas (Bruce-Grey): One has been developed at present at a cost, of, I believe, $2,000. There is still work going on with regard to the decoder. Some aspect has been looked at with cable television which would provide a special channel for the use of the decoder.

A final remark, if I may. The hon. member raised the subject of deductions. I hope he will address that at a later time to either the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) or the Minister of National Revenue in order to get an answer on this specific question.

Adjournment Debate

POST OFFICE—PLANS TO PREVENT INCIDENTS LEADING TO WORKERS BEING SENT HOME

Mr. F. A. Philbrook (Halton): Mr. Speaker, first of all I am very pleased to see the Postmaster General (Mr. Lamontagne) here to meet the concern that we have talked about. Yesterday I posed a question to him during question period about an incident that occurred last week, May 11, in Ottawa at the main postal terminal. It was an incident where some inside postal workers, through the use of such things as badges and T-shirts, instigated a rather silly, insulting and obscene gesture which was uncalled for toward management.

My question to the minister was, essentially, what can we do to prevent this kind of incident which could easily in the future, as it has in the past, develop into a much wider incident resulting in a wider disruption of postal service. The minister answered that he and his deputy minister, who it turns out is an excellent man from my constituency, and one of our colleagues, the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis), went there and spoke to the workers. They delivered a firm ultimatum that they either remove those objects that were insulting to management or be sent home from their shift. Apparently there was a mixed reaction. Some did, and some did not. That was fine as far as it went.

I appreciated that answer. However, it really did not entirely answer my question. I was asking what we could do to prevent this from happening in the future and not just deal with it when it does happen.

This is another in a series of events involving inside postal workers in various parts of the country. It has caused the Canadian people to become intolerant of this kind of action by this particular group. If my constituency is any example, I would say the Canadian people have just about had enough. They are fed up with this kind of irresponsible behaviour.

This probably represents for inside postal workers the worst industrial relations we have in the country. I do not want entirely to incriminate the post office management, although we recognize there are troubles on that side. But there certainly is great concern about these postal workers. It is peculiar because they tend to blame the post office management for all of their troubles. However, it is not all the postal workers who behave in this way.

We do not have any trouble with the letter carriers, the outside workers. In fact, I believe one reason the letter carriers split off and developed their own union was because they felt they could no longer be associated with the inside workers.

● (2217)

There is a book on the subject, an excellent book from the Post Office on its industrial relations, particularly with the inside postal workers and a certain group of them which is causing all this trouble. It is quite an experience to read. I have certain excerpts of it in my hand but I do not think I have time to read them. It would be worthwhile covering outstanding instances of what has happened during relations with these people on another occasion, perhaps on an opposition day when this subject is debated.

[Mr. Douglas (Bruce-Grey).]

People in my riding—I think they are fairly representative of business; they are business people by and large who rely on the mail—are puzzled about all this, as, I think, the rest of us are. They are frustrated because we do not seem to have an answer. After all, we have been at this for several years. They are angry and demanding some kind of action, a resolution of this problem and, of course, they look to the federal government for answers.

Why are we running into all this trouble? Industrial relations is a wide field. There are conflicts all the time between management and labour whether in the public or the private sector. But this type of behaviour by postal workers appears to be unmatched, unprecedented. Government and management tend to be blamed. The jobs are considered to be boring. Many jobs are very boring, Mr. Speaker. But these jobs are also very well paid.

Sometimes automation is blamed and at other times autocratic management. But surely these difficulties could be resolved peacefully. In other situations, they are. Workers blame the government, the cabinet and the various postmasters general over the years for lack of co-operation. Even the civil servants in the department are blamed. The workers, in turn, are accused of being deliberate troublemakers, in some cases of being communists, anarchists, separatists and so on. This does not seem to solve the problem. They propose certain solutions of their own—establishment of a private enterprise, a Crown corporation and so on.

The question now is: Can we get co-operation by agreement or shall we have to resort to tough measures? I believe Canadians are a reasonable people. They want to treat everyone well, including these inside postal workers. But they want these issues resolved soon. After all, this department is not a toy factory even though there are a lot of games being played. It is an essential service and the public wants some answers.

Hon. J.-Gilles Lamontagne (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate very much the speech just made by my hon. friend from Halton (Mr. Philbrook). I think he has said aloud what many people are thinking.

On May 15 the hon. member asked me whether the Post Office Department had any plans to prevent such incidents as the one which occurred at the main Ottawa terminal on May 11. On that day, some workers who were wearing an offending slogan were told by the supervisors either to remove the offending words or go home. Some stayed at work and others went home.

It just happened that on this same night my colleague from Ottawa West (Mr. Francis), the deputy postmaster general and myself went to the Alta Vista plant to see for ourselves how the plant was functioning and were informed of the situation. I agree entirely with the hon. member for Halton about the silliness and provocative behaviour of some inside postal workers toward management at the main Ottawa terminal, and I also support the positive action taken by the management on that occasion.

There are no specific plans, Mr. Speaker, to prevent similar incidents from happening. It is not really possible to formulate such plans. However, if an incident of this nature were to occur again elsewhere in Canada, we would apply the same policy as we did on that occasion. After all, there is no way to foresee such odd behaviour. But before such incidents escalate we always try, when possible, to find solutions in good faith, counting on the goodwill of all parties.

● (2222)

Some people have a tendency to think that we should be ruthless and more intransigent in our dealings with our unions. Others feel that we should be lenient and give in, in order to achieve peace at any cost. Mr. Speaker, experience has taught me otherwise. Nothing is achieved by extremes. Dealing with human problems requires a lot of understanding, tolerance and patience. However, one must realize that we have to accept out responsibilities towards the Canadian people who are entitled to an efficient and reliable postal service.

We have done a lot towards this goal: conciliation with CUPW is continuing; LCUC negotiations have already started; study groups to explore the possibilities of a Crown corporation status for the Post Office is proceeding; intergroup sessions are being held; full management meetings are continually taking place. Constructive, positive action is being taken by management. Mr. Speaker, we have a fine group of workers at the Post Office. We could achieve a lot more if a certain minority would agree to have a more tolerant attitude. Flexibility, tolerance, understanding, we all agree, are a must, but this does not mean we will sell out our responsibilities which are entrusted to us by the Canadian people.

The Post Office does not belong to the government, does not belong to any particular union, does not belong to management; it belongs to the Canadian people, and I intend to keep that so.

NATIONAL SECURITY—STATUS OF FORMER RCMP OFFICER

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, here it is at 10.22 p.m. and it is nice to see the Postmaster General (Mr. Lamontagne) here in person at this late hour to answer the previous question. I wonder if it had anything to do with the fact that the previous questioner was a member of the government. But I see the hon. member for Bruce-Grey (Mr. Douglas) here to answer my question on behalf of the Solicitor General (Mr. Blais), and I have much regard for that member. I know he can read the answer as well as anybody.

On May 3, as recorded at page 5111 of Hansard, I asked the Solicitor General the following question:

The Solicitor General is aware that a former RCMP staff sergeant, Ed Hameluk, has left the co-ordinating law enforcement unit in Vancouver to join John Meirs, a former associate of the late Howard Hughes. Since Mr. Hameluk was in a sensitive security position analysing intelligence and information sources and is now working for Mr. Meirs, who also had contact with CLEU, I ask the Solicitor General whether this matter is being looked into.

Also, is he aware of the concern of other police forces in Canada about this matter, and what steps are being taken by him and, to his knowledge, by the attorney general of British Columbia to evaluate the situation?

The Solicitor General answered as follows:

I will look at the information he has provided, and if his evidence is accurate I will express the concern that he has expressed.

I am looking for that kind of information tonight. The question was first raised in the B.C. legislature on April 3 or 4 and was answered by the attorney general there on April 11, as recorded in their Hansard. I read as follows from that record:

—a couple of days ago concerning the job function of Mr. Ed Hameluk with the Co-ordinated Law Enforcement Unit. The response is: under the general supervision of the deputy director of the co-ordinated law enforcement unit, policy analysis division, Mr. Hameluk was to examine the phenomenon of organized crime in B.C.

That was one of his principal duties. He has left the service; he tendered his letter of resignation for personal reasons. An undertaking of the confidentiality of information has been received from him.

That is the point which is at the bottom of my concern, the fact that he has expressed confidentiality of information. I take heart from that, but that does not give me enough of a sense of security for the well-being of all of Canada. As I said earlier, Mr. Hameluk has left that organization to work with Mr. John Meirs who used to be in the employ of Mr. Howard Hughes. Mr. Meirs is now reportedly interested in funding a bank in the South Pacific in the principality of Tonga. I understand that the Bank of Hawaii is very concerned about that. It is also a matter of record that the U.S. authorities have been after Mr. Meirs regarding tax evasion charges.

● (2227)

It is fairly common knowledge in British Columbia that Mr. Meirs was arrested some years ago in Bellingham. He was held on $50,000 bail and then was released. He dropped that $50,000 bail in the city of Bellingham Mr. Meirs has had contact with CLEU. Mr. Ed Hameluk was a principal spokesman for CLEU in some areas. He left that organization to work for Mr. Meirs. I think that is some cause for concern. It is my suspicion, if not my understanding, that some of the other police forces in Canada are concerned also about the new union between these two men.

I should like to receive some assurance from the Solicitor General (Mr. Blais) as to what steps have been taken to ensure the security of Canada has not been risked by this new association. I do not know what can be done if Mr. Hameluk has given his word to keep confidential all the information he has received over the years. I do not know what type of security measures have been taken, but I am sure the authorities in charge of this area have means at their disposal to make sure this sensitive information, which has been at his disposal, will remain totally secure and will not be used in some manner that would be detrimental to Canada in any way in future years.

Mr. C. Douglas (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Friesen) for raising this matter, as he did with the minister as reported at page 5111 of Hansard dated May 3, 1978. The hon. member referred to the reply which was given by the Solicitor General (Mr. Blais) at that time.

Staff Sergeant Edward Francis Hameluk loyally served in the Royal Canadian Mounted Police for 24 years. He retired on January 19, 1975. The RCMP has never had cause to doubt this man's discretion while employed in operational methods within the security services of the RCMP. As far as I know, the force has been given no reason to suspect him of anything contrary to the law since that time.

After his retirement, he obtained employment with the department of the attorney general in the province of British Columbia in the co-ordinated law enforcement unit. In the spring of 1978, Staff Sergeant Hameluk secured employment as a security officer with a firm operated by Mr. John Herbert Meirs of British Columbia.

As a result of the question raised by the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock, inquiries were made since that time by the RCMP. I am pleased to inform the House that no evidence of any impropriety on the part of Mr. Hameluk has been raised at the federal level, nor by any other person since the time of the investigation, as far as I know.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, the House stands adjourned until tomorrow at two o'clock.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.30 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, May 17, 1978

The House met at 2 p.m.

● (1407)

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

HEALTH AND WELFARE

USE OF NITROSAMINES IN FOOD PRODUCTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to move a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the partial ban placed on the use of sodium nitrates in bacon by the United States government because of the possible carcinogenic property of nitrosamines, and in view of the usual unwillingness of this government to state its position, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Lambton-Kent (Mr. Holmes):

That the Minister of National Health and Welfare state on motions whether she plans any changes in the use of nitrosamines which many believe pose a threat to the health of Canadians.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for discussion requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

NATIONAL SECURITY

GRANTS TO CENTRE FOR EXPERIMENTAL ART AND COMMUNICATIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I rise on an urgent matter relating to the same subject I raised yesterday, namely, extensive government grants to the Centre for Experimental Art and Communications in Toronto, whose chief spokesman, Amerigo Marrass, has, in addition to their already expressed support for Italian terrorism, stated in a Toronto newspaper today that the "Aldo Moro murder is just a red herring" and that "all this fuss and crying over Moro . . . we have to think of more important issues". I move, seconded by the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay):

That this House requests the Prime Minister, for a second time, to make a detailed statement as to why the government has given such an organization extensive sums of public money from the Department of Secretary of State and the Department of External Affairs and, specifically, for the Prime Minister to advise the House if the disgraceful statement made by the Secretary of State to the Toronto Liberal Forum at the Sheraton Centre on May 10 represents government policy, namely, that as long as he is Secretary of State, Canada Council files detailing reasons why grants are awarded or turned down will never be open for members of parliament who have been asking for such disclosures.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the presentation of such a motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

FINANCE

QUEBEC SALES TAX—REQUESTED WITHDRAWAL OF BILL C-56—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the unanimous resolution approved by all political parties yesterday in the National Assembly of the province of Quebec indicating strong disapproval of the federal government's intention to make direct income tax payments to Quebec citizens as a means of circumventing the constitutional authority of the government of the province of Quebec, and considering that an identical position has been taken by other provincial governments as well as by opposition parties in this House and a significant number of Liberal members of parliament, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That this House urges the government, in the interests of national unity, to withdraw Bill C-56 and bring forward new legislation which would specifically compensate provincial governments directly in respect of the federal government's sales tax proposal.

Mr. Speaker: The provisions of Standing Order 43 require unanimous consent for the presentation of such a motion for debate. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

S.O. 43

● (1412)

[Translation]

REQUEST PROVINCES HAVE JURISDICTION OVER DIRECT TAXATION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. C. A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion dealing with a matter of pressing necessity.

In light of the statement of the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) who said on television last night that his government would withdraw from joint programs with municipalities, thus admitting that the late Lester B. Pearson was right when he wanted to abolish all joint programs so as to hand over the authority taken from the provinces, and as we have always suggested that it was the only necessary condition to improve the climate in federal-provincial relations, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert):

That the federal government withdraw from direct taxation which, before the federal government insidiously laid hands on it, belonged exclusively to the provinces under the original constitution, and give back all direct taxes to those provinces.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Under Standing Order 43, presentation of such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

[English]

TOURISM

ACCESS TO B.C. THROUGH BLAINE-DOUGLAS BORDER CROSSING—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. The province of British Columbia is at present celebrating the two-hundredth anniversary of the coming of Captain Cook to the shores of our province. Through the promotional efforts of the government of British Columbia there is already a large influx of tourists, many of them coming through the Blaine-Douglas port of entry. The province last year enjoyed the highest percentage increase in tourism.

The American authorities have decided to tear down and rebuild their port of entry facilities at Blaine during these crucial months of high tourist traffic in the area. Because there appears to have been no leadership on the part of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, responsible for tourism, there has been no consultation with provincial officials and apparently none with American federal or Washington state officials to meet this emergency, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman):

That this House instructs the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce to forthwith call a meeting of his officials, together with the appropriate officials of the government of British Columbia as well as the state of Washington and United States immigration, to find ways by which the traffic can flow through the Blaine-Douglas port of entry without having the lines of traffic reduced from five to two.

Mr. Speaker: The provisions of Standing Order 43 require the unanimous consent of the House for introduction of such a motion for debate. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF PRESIDENT OF SOCIAL CREDIT PARTY

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Before beginning the oral question period, I ask hon. members to join with me in signalling the presence in our gallery of a very distinguished visitor, the newly-elected president of the Social Credit Party of Canada, Mr. Lorne Reznowski.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

● (1417)

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[Translation]

FINANCE

PROPOSED AGREEMENT WITH QUEBEC ON SALES TAX

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance.

I suppose the minister is aware of the motion which was passed unanimously yesterday in Quebec City, namely that the governments of Quebec and Canada conclude immediately a firm and final agreement respecting the Quebec proposal announced on April 12.

Given the circumstances, would the minister be prepared to accept the unanimous wish of the National Assembly?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, if the Quebec government wants to make some proposals, it is free to do so. After the proposal I made in my budget speech I wrote twice to the Quebec government to propose amendments which would suit them. I have not received any counter-proposal so far. If the government of Quebec really wants to propose a solution and discuss it, I would be glad to do so because prior to budget night I did spend three weeks conferring on several occasions with the Quebec government and at no time did it suggest any amendment either before or after, except its unilateral decision to cut the sales tax on four items only.

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, unfortunately the minister did not answer the question, because the proposal is clear.

In the light of the general protest from all parties in Quebec against the rebate formula put forward by the Minister of Finance in the sales tax dispute, could he tell us today whether he is at least prepared to defer or withdraw Bill C-56 so long as a solution has not been found?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, Bill C-56 is the bill deriving from the budget brought down in the House on April 10 last. It is important that the bill is passed as soon as possible.

I remember very well that last fall the opposition criticized us because we delayed the adoption of the budget until the fall rather than having it adopted in the spring. Therefore, I intend to proceed with the budget, and we are going to proceed with the study of the bill following the budget. We shall proceed with the second reading of the bill this afternoon, which does not prevent us from considering in good faith any offer on the part of the government of Quebec if any, as we always did in the past in this area.

INQUIRY WHETHER MINISTER OF FINANCE WILL CONSULT QUEBEC COUNTERPART ON SALES TAX

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address my question to the one who is responsible for this parliament, that is the right hon. Prime Minister.

In the face of the dilemma frought with consequences in which we now find ourselves as a result of the wishes expressed yesterday by the Liberal leader at the National Assembly, Mr. Gérard D. Lévesque, can the Prime Minister tell us whether, in view of the circumstances, he intends to start making the necessary arrangements to meet his counterpart, the Quebec premier, to discuss this dilemma and try, as leader of this government, to solve the matter in the interest of both sides?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the position of the government is the same as that of the Minister of Finance. If meeting the Quebec government can serve any useful purpose, not only are we ready but we are anxious to do so. The Minister of Finance has already made certain proposals, and we are willing to discuss counter-proposals.

For my part, I should like that meeting to take place. I should also like the Canadian people and parliament to understand clearly what the matter is all about. What we are doing in the case of the province of Quebec, contrary to what the Leader of the New Democratic Party said a while ago in his motion, as I say, what we are doing with the province of Quebec is exactly the same thing as with the other eight provinces, that is, Mr. Speaker, we are withdrawing from certains fields of taxation on income so that the provinces may occupy them.

In the case of the other provinces, they already do so; in the case of the province of Quebec, we expect it to occupy that tax field in the same way. I hope that will be clearly understood.

[English]

CONSULTATION WITH ALBERTA ON SALES TAX PROPOSALS

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Finance which concerns the province of Alberta. Does the minister intend to make Alberta a participating province, so that Albertans too can receive the $100 tax remission under Bill C-56 now that it has been made clear that the government's budgetary measure is no longer exclusively a sales tax credit but includes a direct payment of $85 to the people of Quebec?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I had occasion to say earlier that this scheme was designed to help people in the provinces where they are obliged to pay sales tax. I said from the first that this was not the case with Alberta. I discussed that with them at the time of presentation of the budget, at least ten days before the budget, on the day of the budget and later on in other discussions with the minister of finance. This proposition applied to the provinces less fortunate than Alberta which have to pay sales tax.

Mr. Towers: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Finance told this House yesterday that Quebec is being offered the same deal as every other province. Since that is not the interpretation being placed on his measure by some members of his own party, as well as many well informed people, will the minister consider making the same offer of a direct payment, without any strings attached, to taxpayers of every other province in order to dispel this notion of special status for Quebec?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I have made the offer to the other provinces in the budget that we will be voting on in the bill before us this afternoon. We have reduced the federal income tax in the other provinces by $100 per taxpayer and the provincial legislatures have increased their income tax accordingly. This is exactly the same deal that we are offering to Quebec.

Mr. Towers: Mr. Speaker, a further supplementary question. Since the Minister of Finance still leaves Alberta with no status, and since the government is demonstrating flexibility after the fact in this sales tax credit proposal, is the minister prepared to convene an immediate meeting of his provincial counterparts to more adequately explore some of the ideas they expressed to him during his so-called pre-budget consultations with them?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, we have had some meetings of ministers of finance. I have had two since my appointment, and another one is being organized for July. I think it was a very novel and useful initiative on my part to consult the ministers of finance of all the provinces.

I took the liberty, at that time, of saying to the minister of finance of Alberta that because of the special circumstances in Alberta we were offering tax incentives for the development of heavy oil: we were moving in the area of tax incentives for the development of oil. That is something that applies to the western provinces. There is a lot of money in those projects from the federal government and, of course, that benefits the economy of Alberta. In fact, already the situation there in terms of taxes is the best in Canada.

● (1422)

CO-OPERATIVE FEDERALISM IN TAX FIELD

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, the minister's arguments may go over well in the Liberal caucus, but they convince no one else: I hope he realizes that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: There is trouble there, too.

An hon. Member: Ask Serge Joyal.

Mr. Broadbent: They are not even unanimous in the Liberal caucus, I understand, these days. I ask the Prime Minister, who has written quite a bit on the subject of federalism, especially on the notion of co-operative federalism, would he not agree that in any federal system it is wrong for a federal government to attempt a form of blackmail with a provincial government by offering a direct tax cut to citizens of that province, after the fact, unless the provincial government in question takes a course of action which has been insisted upon by the federal government and which is clearly within the jurisdictional authority of the province? If so, how can the Prime Minister possibly justify the incredible approach that is being taken on this issue vis-à-vis the province of Quebec?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, generally taken, the statement made by the Leader of the New Democratic Party is one indeed with which I can agree, that the federal government should not use its leverage over taxes to force the provinces to do a certain thing. In this particular case, the Minister of Finance consulted the provinces, all ten of them, over a period of three weeks and asked them if they would do a certain thing provided we cut our taxes—this is not in provincial jurisdiction—and gave them tax room.

Nine provinces said, "Yes, we will go along with that." The tenth province gave no answer. We had to have a budget; the date was fixed. The minister made his budget statement. It was only after the statement was made that one province said, "We don't go along; you are trying to blackmail us." The Minister of Finance said, "We are not trying to blackmail you; we are offering you tax room." The provinces, as long as I have been around, since 1965, have been constantly asking for tax room. The Minister of Finance offered them tax room.

Mr. Broadbent: In the sales tax area.

[Mr. Chrétien.]

Mr. Trudeau: In direct personal income tax. The Minister of Finance is proposing that we cut the personal income tax of all Canadians. Alberta is a special case.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Special status.

An hon. Member: Talk to Jack Horner about that.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Nobody understands Alberta!

An hon. Member: How do you like that, Jack Horner?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I do not see why hon. members are seemingly dissatisfied because I say that Alberta is a special case. It is obvious: it has no sales tax. Therefore, the proposition that we are making cannot apply to Alberta, and that is why the Minister of Finance has special provisions in his budget for the Alberta situation. But we are talking of provinces where there is a sales tax, Mr. Speaker.

The Minister of Finance made a certain proposal and said, "You, the provinces, will have the resources to carry out this proposal. We are going to give you tax room." He has not, as the Leader of the New Democratic Party suggests, given money to Quebeckers in any different sense than he has given money to Ontarians, to Manitobans, to British Columbians, to Nova Scotians—

An hon. Member: Sure he has.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We can see that on both sides it would have been unduly restrictive for me to suggest that the question put by the hon. member suggesting blackmail is an argumentative one. I did not want to do that, but obviously it has invited a rather long and prolix answer. It is only fair to stick to informational questions and answers.

● (1427)

Mr. Broadbent: To use parliamentary language, Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister was just misleading the House. Does he, as Prime Minister, not know that when the Minister of Finance discussed the proposals with his equivalents in the provinces, and indeed when he introduced the budget here in the House, he proposed in that context, vis-à-vis the sales tax we are talking about, a reduction or compensation of federal payment in the sales tax domain by way of a cut which varied from region to region and province to province if, I would add, they took equivalent action in the sales tax field? If so, will he agree that what he is now doing is confusing the issue when talking about a proposal made by the federal government to cut income tax to leave room for the provinces, made in an entirely different context from the one in which the sales tax was originally proposed?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I am afraid there is a misunderstanding on the part of the hon. member as to what the Minister of Finance is proposing. The Leader of the New Democratic Party suggests that we are giving money to Quebeckers—to pay them off, or something—in a sense that we are not giving money to the other provinces. Let me make this very clear to the House: the Minister of Finance is cutting personal income tax by $100 in every province.

Mr. Stevens: How about Alberta?

Mr. Trudeau: He is cutting personal income tax by $100. He is not giving money to Quebeckers that he is not giving to Ontarians or to Nova Scotians. When citizens fill out their income tax forms, they will see that they are paying $100 less to the federal government, and they will see that the provinces are levying $100. In this sense we are giving money to the citizens so that the province can take this money and use it for indirect taxes.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: The House can disagree with the method taken: this is what the debate is about today. The Minister of Finance will make a speech on second reading. However, it is absolutely essential that hon. members understand what they do not seem to understand.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: I have time, Mr. Speaker. I hope you have. I hope you will not deduct from my time—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We are into two difficulties from a procedural point of view. We are very much anticipating the order of the day, the debate on the measure and getting into a discussion on the merits of the particular bill which will be the subject of debate. We are also getting into very argumentative areas, instead of informational areas. I would ask the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby to bear that in mind in his third supplementary.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I can understand why Richard Nixon is a close friend of the Prime Minister, after that answer.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: The income tax reduction that the Prime Minister is talking about was made last fall by the Minister of Finance—a $100 tax cut. It was to come into effect for the first two months of this year. It has absolutely nothing to do with the budget the minister brought in about a month ago, which had everything to do with the sales tax.

I ask the Prime Minister to take the opportunity and speak truthfully to the House of Commons in this matter and say whether he agrees with the leader of the Liberal party of the province of Quebec when he said, vis-à-vis the current proposal, not the one made last fall by the Minister of Finance, "It means that whenever the federal government makes any kind of offer to a province, and when the province refuses it for reasons of its own, the federal government retaliates by handing the money over to the people." Mr. Ryan implied that is a form of blackmail. That is what everyone in this House sees as a form of blackmail, as do all the people of Canada.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, when the Leader of the New Democratic Party says we are handing the money over to the people of Quebec, he shows once again that he does not understand the scheme. He refers to last fall's budgetary measure of $100. I am not talking about that, Mr. Speaker; I am saying that in this particular budgetary measure we are making tax room to the extent of $100 in the provinces, and we are making tax room so the provinces can occupy that tax room and take the money into their coffers. This is what is happening in Ontario, and this is what we are proposing should happen in the province of Quebec: it is exactly the same thing.

● (1432)

If the House cannot understand this, I am prepared to answer questions ad nauseam. But members must understand the facts. I realize this is a little complicated and I must ask for the attention of hon. members. But when we are giving tax room—something for which the provinces have asked repeatedly—we are giving it in Quebec in exactly the same way as we are in other provinces; and when members opposite say we are not helping the poor people of Quebec, then in the same sense we are not helping the poor people in Ontario either. We are cutting direct federal income tax for people who pay direct federal income tax, and not for the others.

[Translation]

REQUEST SALES TAX BE REMOVED OR REDUCED AT MANUFACTURERS' LEVEL

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the right hon. Prime Minister. This country is now facing very serious difficulties and I am afraid that if we fail to settle this problem very soon it will keep on worsening as it did last week. Here is my question: since the object of the proposal made by the central government to the provincial governments was to lighten the taxpayers' burden, to increase their purchasing power and stimulate consumption so as to put our economy back on the tracks, and such is the government's intention, and since there is no understanding among governments, would the Prime Minister accept the suggestion I once made in the House about reducing or repealing the tax at the manufacturers' level? This would serve the same purpose and nobody would complain that the federal government is overstepping its jurisdiction by interfering with a provincial field of taxation. Would the Prime Minister be willing to consider this alternative?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that is a valid suggestion. I want to remind the hon. member that finance ministers of this government have often done that. For example, they abolished the manufacturing tax on children's clothing, other consumer goods, and building materials. So the hon. member's suggestion is quite sensible. However, since consumers are not quite aware of the manufacturing tax, manufacturers often pocket the difference rather than lowering their prices. This time, as was suggested by several economists, especially from Ontario, we considered ways of cutting taxes, not at the manufacturers' level but at the consumers' level so that he could directly benefit from lower prices. Once again, nine provinces agreed, the tenth, the province of Quebec, said: we cannot give you an answer, we will get back to you on it. I repeat, I do not reject the hon. member's proposal, but I just want to draw his attention to the fact that in trying to establish some form of co-operation within federalism we must not be surprised that a government which is out to prove that federalism does not work should refuse to co-operate. Nevertheless we continue to bargain in good faith with that government, just as with the other nine, in order to provide a system which will benefit the taxpayer. The proof is that, according to figures published yesterday, the cost of living went down as compared with previous months. No doubt the consumer perceives this sales tax decrease as a lowering of prices.

POSSIBILITY OF DISCOUNT APPLIED TO CANADIAN-MADE PRODUCTS

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): I wish to put a supplementary question.

I understand quite well the explanations of the Prime Minister. However, the fact is that we are faced with a crucial problem. There is a solution which the government applied in 1972 and 1973 when it enacted a discount on the price of milk. This worked quite well and proved helpful to consumers. Would the Prime Minister agree to enact a discount on the price of all goods made in Canada as an incentive to Canadian industries and as a direct form of assistance to consumers? Would the Prime Minister be in favour of such a solution?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as was the case for the previous suggestion, some parts of this proposal are good, and in proof of this, the hon. member recalled that the federal government once took action somewhat along those lines. But I must remind him that we are bound under GATT not to discriminate in favour of Canadian manufacturers, because if we did, other provinces and other countries would devise some tax measures which would be detrimental to Canadian exports, and Canada would be the first to suffer. We must therefore operate within this framework, taking into account the trade agreements among all nations, failing which we should be the first to suffer.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): I have a further supplementary.

Mr. Speaker, a moment ago, the Prime Minister mentioned the fact that the removal of the sales tax at the manufacturers' level would not benefit the consumers. Can the Prime Minister assure the House that the consumers are truly protected by the measure he introduced urging the provincial governments to lower the retail sales tax? How does the Prime Minister intend to ascertain whether the tax cut has indeed benefited the consumers and whether it is possible for the retailers to add the tax to their sales price without reporting it as sales tax?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, once again, there is no better evidence that the consumers benefit from the tax cut than the figures on the cost of living that were published yesterday; but in practical terms, the hon. member knows what happens. You go to a store and the price is advertised. You buy an item, the dealer adds the sales tax. If he adds 4 per cent instead of 7 per cent, there is a difference. The Minister of Finance proposes that 4 per cent be added instead of 7 per cent. So the final price to the consumer is much lower as a result of the measure introduced by the Minister of Finance, and I hope the hon. member will support it.

METHOD OF SALES TAX COMPENSATION FOR QUEBECKERS NOT FILING TAX RETURN

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, when he presented his budget the Minister of Finance said on several occasions that this reduction of the sales tax was the best way to help all Canadians throughout the country. Given the fact that the right hon. Prime Minister has said today that everything will turn out just fine for the poor people in the province of Quebec and given also the proposition announced yesterday by the Minister of Finance, can he now tell the House how precisely the Quebec taxpayers who pay the sales tax but no income tax—the poor ones—will be compensated by the federal government?

I would also like to elicit from the Minister of Finance—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member has already asked a question.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the proposition we have made was meant to encourage the provinces to reduce their sales tax. The province of Quebec did not want to go about it exactly like the others. To urge everybody to benefit from this cut, the best way would have been to reduce the tax on all products, as the other provinces did. But Quebec decided to reduce it only on selected items. Thus, only the people who buy these products benefit from the sales tax cut. As in the other provinces, we offer to the public a reduction of the income tax that will give the provinces manoeuvring room in the fiscal area. The same thing goes for Quebec.

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Minister of Finance.

When you were negotiating with the ministers of finance of the other provinces before the budget, did you inform them of the 36,000 jobs lost over the past 18 months in the manufacturing sector in Canada, 30,000 of which were in the province of Quebec alone in the traditional sectors such as clothing and so on, as mentioned in the Quebec National Assembly? Did you explain that to the other ministers of finance during your negotiations?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that a 3 per cent reduction of the sales tax on textiles, clothing and footwear would be a great help to the Quebec industry. But never did the government of Quebec make a proposal similar to that of the hon. member. If during our negotiations the Quebec government had wanted us to give more compensation to the so-called soft sector, we could have made the same offer to the other provinces and it would have been up to them to accept it or reject it. British Columbia and Saskatchewan preferred a 2 per cent income tax reduction over nine months instead of 3 per cent over six months. We made the necessary adjustments. I said: Very well, I will talk to the other provinces. I made the same offer to all the provinces but only Saskatchewan and British Columbia accepted it.

But at no time during the three weeks of negotiations did the Quebec government specifically mention the textile, footwear and clothing industries.

● (1442)

[English]

REQUEST FOR WITHDRAWAL OF SALES TAX MEASURE

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, it is with regret that I put my final question to the right hon. Prime Minister. Many times in the past the Prime Minister has criticized the government of Quebec for acting as though separatism was already a fait accompli. Now we have in this sales tax business one policy for Quebec and one for the rest of Canada: that is clear.

In view of the reaction the Prime Minister has received from the rest of Canada, can he explain why he is already treating Quebec as though separatism was already a fait accompli; and because of the reaction he has received from all of Canada, will he now withdraw this stupidity?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member suggests that there is one policy for Quebec and one policy for the other provinces. I must point out to him that in so far as the application of their sales taxes is concerned, this is true. The province of Quebec chose to have a special scheme for its sales tax which, by the admission of the government of Quebec, would help not the Canadian common market but producers in the province of Quebec. In that sense, it is a separatist government, to use the hon. member's phrase, which has chosen to serve itself apart from the rest of the country.

In so far as the Minister of Finance is concerned, he offered to all provinces which had sales taxes exactly the same thing, and he is doing in all provinces exactly the same thing. He is making tax room by abating the federal income tax so that the provinces can increase their income taxes and occupy that tax room. In this sense, the minister is transferring money from the federal treasury, which gets its money from the payer of direct income taxes, to the provincial treasuries, which get their money from payers of income taxes.

I wish hon. members opposite would understand that we are not treating Quebec differently. We are treating Quebec in exactly the same way as we are treating the province of Ontario: we are giving it tax room so that the provincial government can use that tax room to cut sales taxes. In the cases of the other provinces, they have cut them according to the scheme discussed among themselves. In the case of Quebec, the sales tax has been cut in a different manner which seems to destroy the idea of a national common market and which seems to favour only jobs in the province of Quebec. This is the difference.

Mr. Clark: That is nonsense, and you know it.

REASON MANITOBA NOT ALLOWED TO USE TAX REVENUE FOR JOB CREATION

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the Minister of Finance. I would like to have the unexplainable explained, because the provinces are not being treated equally. On the one hand there are no strings attached and, on the other hand, there are very specific strings attached. What the government is doing is giving federal revenue to eight provinces on the strict condition that they accept the government's sales tax program, while one province gets money with no strings attached.

Under the present proposal, the Quebec government can use the so-called tax room for whatever purpose it chooses. Can the minister explain to me why the province of Manitoba was forbidden by the minister from using its own provincial tax money for direct job creation, when the minister says here today that the flexibility which was granted was granted to all provinces?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the proposition I made to the province of Manitoba was exactly the same as the proposition I made to the other provinces. I suggested that Manitoba cut its sales tax by 3 per cent for six months and that I would compensate two of those three percentage points. That proposition was accepted.

Like many other provinces, Manitoba asked me to do something else. I spoke to all ministers of finance and tried to reach a consensus. When I learned that Saskatchewan and British Columbia wanted to have a special proposition, I called the other ministers of finance and made that proposition to them. They all said that I could make that special deal with B.C. and Saskatchewan, but that it was of no interest to them. The scheme was agreed upon and known about before I introduced my budget. But during the course of the discussions many people made all sorts of suggestions and I was not able to get agreement from the other ministers.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, the Manitoba government proposed that of the 3 per cent sales tax reduction, 1 percentage point should be used for direct job creation in the province of Manitoba. The money involved was paid by Manitoba taxpayers. In view of the flip-flop the minister has done, what was the reason for his rejection of the Manitoba proposal which would have had direct beneficial results in our province?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I just explained very clearly that I was trying to get a consensus among all the provinces. The Manitoba government proposed something special which I could not sell to the other provinces. I made exactly the same offer to the government of Manitoba as the one I made to the others. There were two options. The government of Manitoba decided to cut its sales tax by three points for six months and pay for one of those three points, just as Ontario and the other provinces which had the same choice did. They did not want to take the same route as the one taken by Saskatchewan and B.C. Everyone wanted to have a different tax. That was the first time a federal minister of finance had tried in good faith to incorporate the views of all provincial ministers of finance in a budget.

Incidentally, sales tax was not the only thing we discussed. The minister of finance of Manitoba and myself spent only about ten minutes on the sales tax proposal, and he understood. After that we discussed the value of the dollar, the balance of payments, and so forth. We had a very useful meeting.

Mr. Clark: At the airport.

CONSULTATION WITH PROVINCES ON SALES TAX

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Finance. In connection with the minister's proposal to rebate $85 to each Quebec taxpayer in connection with the sales tax proposals in his budget, did the Minister of Finance consult with his provincial colleagues, the ministers of finance and provincial treasurers, before he made a final decision on that method of proceeding and before he announced it? Did he consult with them all, and did they consent or did they object? What was their reaction? I presume that the minister from Quebec must have objected. Were they all consulted with, and what was their reaction?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I previously took the time to call every minister of finance. The only one I could not reach was the minister of finance of Newfoundland, but I talked to the premier, Mr. Moores. He made some comments and then said he would not make any public statement about it, and I guess he has not.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, I would like to refer the minister to his statement of May 15 in connection with this whole matter. He said, at page 3:

> I have discussed this arrangement with my colleagues in each province.

He has now pointed out that he has not discussed it with all his colleagues. The minister went on to say:

> [Mr. Chrétien.]
>
> They all told me they would have preferred Quebec acceptance of the original proposal.

Is the minister saying that the Premier of Newfoundland and all his other colleagues in finance across Canada, including the Quebec minister—which is what this statement says—all said they would prefer Quebec acceptance of this proposal? If that is the case, why has Mr. Parizeau not accepted? What does this statement mean in the press release the minister put out?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member wants a play on words. Of course I did not talk to the minister of finance of Newfoundland; he was in Paris. I decided to talk to his boss. The Newfoundland minister of finance was in Paris on business. He was there to borrow some money for his province. He has a tough time because he had to take over from the hon. member for St. John's West who left the treasury.

In the case of Quebec, of course, there was no agreement. I think it is quite evident that the Quebec minister of finance has not accepted the proposition. The hon. member says I should have said "all but Mr. Parizeau". Perhaps I can add "all but Mr. Parizeau". Mr. Parizeau did not agree. Everyone knows that. This happened a long time ago.

● (1452)

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, when I was the minister of finance in Newfoundland the Canadian dollar did not have the bottom dropped out of it; I can assure the minister of that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: Our deficits did not approach $11.5 billion, either. I refer the minister to Hansard of May 16: at page 5451 the minister is reported as saying:

> We have cut income tax in the federal budget for the citizens of all provinces and the provinces raised their own income tax by the equivalent amount of money.

Has the minister reduced the income tax by $100, or any amount, for the citizens of Alberta? Has Alberta agreed to raise its income tax by an equivalent amount of money? That is what the minister said yesterday.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I think it is very obvious why he quit very quickly the treasury of the Newfoundland government. In the case of Alberta, we have explained very clearly that the proposition was related to provinces which had sales tax. Obviously there is no sales tax in Alberta. I explained that in my first discussion with the minister of finance for Alberta: I said, "This cannot apply to you". But I said at that time that there would be other things in the budget which would be of interest to the people of Alberta.

It is quite evident that it is great that we have decided to give more incentives in this budget for the heavy oil industry from our own tax in order to have that industry in Alberta. Obviously, that province can afford not to have sales tax. In the case of the other provinces, I have cut income tax by $100 and they have increased their own income tax by the same amount of money.

* * *

[Translation]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIOLATION OF HUMAN RIGHTS—PROPOSAL GOVERNMENT EXPRESS CONCERN TO U.S.S.R.

Mr. Claude-André Lachance (Lafontaine-Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

According to the observers of the Russian political scene, the trial of Dr. Yuri Orlov is a typical case since it involves the principle underlying the provisions of the third basket of the Helsinki agreements which are thus flouted by the court itself, expecially the way the proceedings are evolving. Does the minister intend to convey to the Soviet authorities the concerns which the trial of Dr. Orlov has raised in the government and among Canadians and is he seriously considering the negative effect of that trial on the implementation of the Helsinki agreement?

[English]

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as a preliminary, of course, I should remind the House that we have on a number of occasions within this chamber unanimously made reference to human rights issues in the Soviet Union including, by inference at least, the trial of Mr. Orlov or the arrest of Mr. Orlov. On the trial itself, I think hon. members will know it has not been possible for outside or western observers to gain access to the place where the trial is being held. We are doing what we can to determine the processes and the procedures which are being used.

As to whether or not there will be some sort of representations to the Soviet Union on this matter, we can only await the outcome of the trial and the assessment of as much evidence as it is possible for us to get together.

* * *

FINANCE

METHOD OF SALES TAX COMPENSATION

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In his recent budget statement he said that a reduction of retail sales taxes had the advantage of benefiting all those who spend in Canada, even those who do not pay income tax. In view of the fact the minister has recognized that those who do not pay income tax still pay sales tax, and often pay a disproportionate share of their income in sales tax, in seeking to make reparations to the province of Quebec why is he now dealing only with those who pay income tax and making no rebate whatsoever to those who have paid money in the form of sales taxes?

While we do think the money should be paid to the government of the province of Quebec in order for it to exercise its own fiscal priorities, which it is entitled to do under the constitution, if the Government of Canada insists on making rebates why are they not made on a fair and equitable basis?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we are not making rebates. The Prime Minister spent a lot of time this afternoon explaining to the House that we are making tax room in the province of Quebec. If the provincial government wants to occupy that field, it can do so, just like Ontario, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, British Columbia and the maritimes. Quebec is different from the other provinces. In the other provinces things were done in an easy way because we are collecting their taxes for them. In Quebec they have to raise and collect their own taxes.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Finance. The crux of the whole matter is whether or not the federal government would agree to making the same arrangement with Quebec which it has made with the other provinces in respect of reimbursing them for a loss of sales tax revenue.

Since the minister has insisted repeatedly that they cannot agree to selective sales tax and that it must be an across-the-board sales tax, has he any statistical or economic data to substantiate his position? If he has, will he table such data? Can he show the House that a selective reduction of sales tax in any province would produce less stimulus than the across-the-board provision which he suggested to the other provinces?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, the question of selectivity in Quebec has come from the fact that the same proposition could not have been made to the other provinces.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Why not?

Mr. Chrétien: Because it came after the fact. As the hon. member knows, there was an agreement among the provinces to cut their sales taxes the night of the budget. In fact, Manitoba and British Columbia decided to either advance or postpone their budgets to coincide with the same date in my budget. In effect, they have set that date for a tax cut across the board. Quebec came 48 hours after that with a selective system. Of course, it was too late to offer the same selectivity to the other provinces.

If Ontario had a choice, probably it would have been inclined to act in the automobile area. Because of my discussions with the minister of finance for British Columbia, if he had a choice of selectivity I know for sure he would have taken a cut in building materials because they are the only products which British Columbia sells to the rest of Canada.

Oral Questions

DIFFERENCE IN METHOD OF COMPENSATION FOR SALES TAX CUTS

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Several times today the Prime Minister said that this proposal applies in exactly the same manner in every province. What we have here is a proposal that Quebeckers will receive a cheque from the federal government, while citizens of the other provinces will not receive a cheque from the federal government. How is that the same?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it can be explained very, very simply.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: In the case of people who pay income tax in the province of Quebec, they send cheques to the federal government. Thus, when we want to rebate that income tax we send cheques back. In the case of the other provinces, they have tax collection agreements with us. I think perhaps 90 per cent of Canadians do not understand that. We have tax collection agreements with the other provinces. When a citizen of Ontario or British Columbia files his income tax return, he files it on the same form as that of the federal government. He does not send a cheque to the Ontario government and one to Ottawa; he sends the whole amount to Ottawa and we give the part which belongs to Ontario back to Ontario.

That is the very simple explanation. In the case of nine provinces, they have collection agreements with us. We collect the whole amount for them. Therefore, we give that amount to the provincial treasuries. In the case of Quebec, since 1954 they have insisted on collecting their own taxes. Therefore, when a citizen of the province of Quebec sends a cheque to pay his tax, he sends another cheque to the province of Quebec. If we want to rebate our taxes, we send part of that cheque back.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: I know that is very difficult for members of the opposition to understand.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. It is pretty clear that the purpose of all these contortions by the Prime Minister is to hide the fact that the first proposition by the Minister of Finance was confined to sales tax. This new proposition which he is making to the province of Quebec and Quebec does not want is not confined to sales tax. So he has changed the nature of the proposal.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

● (1502)

Mr. Clark: The Prime Minister has indicated to this House, in answer to my colleague the hon. member for Joliette, that he is prepared to discuss and negotiate this matter with the province of Quebec. Will he tell us now whether he is also prepared to discuss this matter with the other provinces of confederation, since it is clear that the arrangement on which the Minister of Finance proceeded without agreement when he brought in the budget is not working and the Government of Canada is now introducing and extending to Quebec an arrangement that Quebec does not want and which is different from the arrangement that is available to the other provinces?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, sometimes I despair of having all members on the other side understand the proposition. But I do not despair of the people in the country understanding it.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: I do not even despair of the Leader of the NDP understanding it; I think he is beginning to understand it, too. When we make tax room in the direction of income taxes, we give place to the provinces so they can tax, in a sense, painlessly because we are giving them some of our tax room and they are just occupying it. What we have offered Quebec and what we have offered other provinces, what we are doing in Quebec and what we are doing in other provinces, is the same thing: we are giving them tax room. The Leader of the Opposition can shake his head, but I would just ask him to think a little bit and to try to understand. He will finally understand it if he tries hard enough.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, we have thought a great deal about this and we have watched the contortions of the Prime Minister as he tries to bail out his Minister of Finance. It is very, very clear that the Government of Canada has changed the proposal. It is making a proposal to the province of Quebec that it did not make to the rest of the country. The Prime Minister has undertaken to negotiate now with the province of Quebec. Will he also undertake to negotiate with the other provinces?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could make it clear by saying this: exactly what we are offering the province of Quebec—and he says it is a special deal and we do not even have to negotiate again—we are offering at this time to the other provinces. I make this statement right now, Mr. Speaker. The Leader of the Opposition believes we are offering a special deal to Quebec. The only special deal is that we have not been collecting taxes for them since 1954. If the other provinces want to go out and collect these taxes in this tax room we have made, as Quebec will have to do, then they are welcome to do this too.

What we are offering to Quebec the other provinces can have, if they want. I doubt whether they will want to collect these taxes, Mr. Speaker; but if the Leader of the Opposition insists on that, that is fine. He says they have thought a great deal about this. Obviously they have, Mr. Speaker, but they have not arrived at the same conclusion, because yesterday the Leader of the Opposition was complaining that we were not giving the money to a lot of little, poor people, as he put it. So the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi complains that we are not giving it directly to the Minister of Finance for the province of Quebec. Indeed, two weeks ago that is what the Leader of the Opposition was saying, that we should do what Mr. Parizeau wants; in other words, give him the money. Yesterday, having thought a little more, he was not saying we should give it to Mr. Parizeau; he was saying we should dribble it out to all the little people who are not paying any income tax.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has now, as I understand him, extended, for example, to the province of Alberta the proposition that has been extended to the province of Quebec, so that there would be the possibility of a direct payment by the Government of Canada to the taxpayers in the province of Alberta. He has extended to the province of Manitoba the proposition that now there will be available to the province of Manitoba some flexibility in the use of the revenues realized from this proposal that would allow the province of Manitoba, for example, if it chose—as Mr. Craik told the Minister of Finance it did choose—to use that money for job creation purposes. He is providing flexibility to the province of Quebec. Is he, in fact, providing the flexibility I have outlined to the province of Alberta and the province of Manitoba?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, in the case of Alberta, I think we have explained that the budget contained special provisions for that province which does not have sales taxes. Therefore, we have special provisions in the budget to help it develop its natural resources and add to the wealth of the province. That is the case in respect of Alberta. Obviously, it is in a special circumstance because it does not have sales taxes. In the case of Manitoba, answering the same question, if they want to do as we are suggesting Quebec does—in other words, when we make tax room for both provinces and we are telling Quebec that it can collect the tax if it wants, we are saying the same sort of thing to Manitoba—we are making tax room for Manitoba, and if they would prefer to collect the tax rather than have us collect it, we are agreeable to doing that if that is what they want.

In this sense, in so far as our action is concerned, we are dealing with all provinces on the same basis. In so far as what the provinces want to do with the money they get through the tax room we have given them, the Minister Finance reached an agreement with nine of the provinces and the provinces agreed to this after three weeks of talks. So I would be very surprised if because the province of Quebec, having failed to state its position before the budget, is now coming out with a scheme which tends to balkanize the Canadian market, the other provinces would want to go in the direction of that balkanization. But the Minister of Finance is certainly prepared to hear from them. I said on the first day that I was prepared to meet with the premiers of the provinces if they want to come and discuss this.

* * *

POINTS OF ORDER

MR. BROADBENT—REQUESTED WITHDRAWAL OF BILL C-56

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a serious point of order that falls directly from what the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has just said and was said earlier in the question period, if I remember correctly, by both himself and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien). He has just indicated he is prepared to discuss and negotiate this important matter with the province of Quebec. I do not think I overstate the issue when I suggest that what we have before us now in Canada is potentially the most divisive piece of legislation in the past decade, and I say, "potentially".

I would now like to put to the Prime Minister on the point of order this proposal for his consideration, if he is serious that the federal government is still prepared to negotiate this important matter with the province of Quebec. Will he ask the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen) the government House leader, to withdraw this measure from debate today until some kind of arrangement or agreement can possibly be reached with the province of Quebec?

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. Following upon what the leader of the NDP has said, in order to ease the way for the government House leader I want him to know that if it were the choice of the government, and I think it would be a wise choice, to withdraw the bill that is to be called today, we are prepared to carry on with the customs bill which was introduced on Monday so there would be no House time lost.

However, I urge the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to consider very carefully Bill C-56, not only for the reasons that have been advanced by the leader of the NDP, but in the interests of settling a very difficult and dangerous matter in this country. I hope the Prime Minister will instruct his seatmate to withdraw this bill.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this is a very complex and lengthy piece of legislation. I can tell the House right now that we do not need any more time to think about it. We have discussed this in caucus and we have discussed it repeatedly in cabinet. I appreciate the concerns of members opposite, and I say that without any irony, Mr. Speaker. Members opposite, I suspect, do not understand exactly what we are doing. I think most of the questions they have asked this afternoon, including those of the leader of the NDP and of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark), indicate that they probably need a bit more time to think about this and to say what they really think about it.

Point of Order—Mr. Broadbent

● (1512)

What we are suggesting is that we proceed with second reading. The minister has taken a position, and this position is supported by the government and by every member on this side of the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Beatty: Look behind you.

Mr. Trudeau: I know it will be difficult for the opposition to state their position unequivocally on this. If they do not wish to talk about the particular aspect of it which concerns Quebec, certainly they can do that and come back some other day. The House leaders can make the necessary arrangements between themselves.

We have taken a position and we are going to stick with it. We hope the Leader of the Opposition and his party will take a position and that they will hang on that position.

Mr. Alexander: You will hang on it too.

Mr. Trudeau: You too.

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, on the point of order, I take it that the answers of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in the question period were meant to be taken seriously by the House of Commons—and were not, for example, in the nature of his statements on controls for the 1974 election campaign—when he said he was prepared to negotiate with the province of Quebec and that he would be prepared to discuss the matter with the other provinces. If that is to be the case and the Prime Minister was in fact stating what he intends to do, he is now proposing to waste the time of the House of Commons by having it consider a piece of legislation the content of which he proposes to discuss and negotiate, and I presume that any discussion or negotiation contemplates the possibility of change.

The situation is that we have a bill before the House of Commons, as my friend for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) and my colleague for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) have said, which is of very real significance to the country and is potentially of divisive impact upon the country. We also have the possibility that that bill will be changed significantly, if the Prime Minister meant what he said when he talked about a willingness to negotiate with the provinces.

There are two grounds to be considered here. The first is that the government House leader should not waste the time of parliament in debating a measure that the government might then withdraw. Secondly, I suggest that the House of Commons has a right to know what it is dealing with. Is Bill C-56, which is the subject matter for discussion today, a matter the contents of which the Government of Canada is now considering changing? The Prime Minister has said he is going to have negotiations. If he means what he says in the House of Commons, then he is asking parliament to deal today with a measure that might be changed tomorrow.

I suggest, knowing the respect for parliament that he has evidenced throughout his public career, that he might not want to waste the time of the House of Commons today, but instead go on with other business which is ready and with which we are prepared to deal while he considers what exactly it is he is going to propose in Bill C-56.

It is a matter which the House of Commons has a right to ask the Prime Minister to consider very seriously before bringing to the House. I hope, sir, that in that context, and since this point of order has been raised and argued by two parties on this side of the House, the Prime Minister will consider seriously whether he meant what he said in question period, when he said he was going to consider changing the bill, or whether in fact he meant what he said after question period, when he said the opposite, that he was not going to change the bill.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There have been suggestions made concerning the item to be called under government orders, which occurs later in the day. This is, of course, the prerogative of the government, and when we arrive at orders of the day I presume we will determine whether the matter is going to be proceeded with or whether some other arrangement will be made.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, this matter was raised on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There has been a point of order raised by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) and contributions were made by members on both sides of the House. There is no procedure whereby we can have two contributions made by one member on the same point of order.

Is the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) rising on the same point of order?

MR. ALEXANDER—OVERCLASSIFICATION OF JOBS IN PUBLIC SERVICE

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Oh no, Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) has done an excellent job in showing just what is happening with this government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alexander: I will not go any further on that point. My point of order has to do with the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Andras) regarding a question that I asked him on Monday related to overclassification of jobs. It is an extremely important point of order because overclassification is really circumventing the merit principle. As a matter of fact it is feeding the patronage system.

I do not know whether the President of the Treasury Board understands what is going on in his department and whether he has been informed or has misled the House—I would not use the word deliberately. I asked the President of Treasury Board on Monday the following:

Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the President of the Treasury Board regarding job classification. It has come to my attention that there has been a waste of millions of dollars a year as a result of overclassification of jobs in the public service. I am sure the minister is aware of this serious matter and I wonder if he can advise whether a study has been undertaken. If so, would he table the report?

The President of the Treasury Board replied:

Mr. Speaker, I do not accept the premise of the hon. member's question. I am not aware of the situation as he describes it. I will certainly look into it with great interest. I do not believe the hon. member has made a correct statement of the situation.

Those are the governing words.

Subsequently, the following day his own officials indicated that some time in 1976 there was a survey, assessment or audit taken involving some 2,000 public servants in the Ottawa-Hull district, the result of which indicated that some 16 per cent of those public servants audited were overclassified and at that time it meant a loss or waste of money amounting to some $19 million per year. This same situation exists even today. That was phase one of the study.

Phase two is another study that the President of the Treasury Board and/or his department have undertaken which involves overclassification outside the Ottawa-Hull area. If the projection of 16 per cent of 2,000 is carried on it means there is some $75 million being overpaid in terms of overclassification. What is disturbing is that the President of the Treasury Board—Mr. Speaker, this is an extremely important matter and I hope you will have patience. I wanted to get it on yesterday but because of the importance of the situation yesterday afternoon I did not take the time of the House. I have been patient today, and I hope you will be patient with me.

I want to say as well that I am sure that the minister has also been advised that his own department has completed a more recent study on the accuracy of classifications in the personnel administration group. I point out that these are the very people who are responsible for administering the classification systems throughout the entire public service. The minister's own study in this regard, as I understand it, indicates that 22 per cent in this group are misclassified.

My point is this. When I indicated to the President of the Treasury Board there were millions of dollars being wasted because of overclassification, he did not accept that premise at all; and now I would like the President of the Treasury Board to stand up and come clean with the Canadian people and indicate that I am right, that there is—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member on his own terms is asking, as a result of his point of order, the hon. President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Andras) not to correct any matter in which he may have one way or the other misled the House on Monday, but rather to come to an agreement and say that the hon. member himself is right. This, in essence, is a disagreement and does not in any sense constitute a point of order.

Point of Order—Mr. MacEachen

• (1522)

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, order.

Mr. Alexander: A question of privilege, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Trudeau: Oh, sit down.

Mr. Alexander: Don't tell me to sit down.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order.

Mr. Alexander: Let the Speaker tell me to sit down.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order.

Mr. Alexander: You have destroyed this country enough; don't try to destroy parliament.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, order.

MR. MACEACHEN—EXTENSIONS OF ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I should like to draw to the attention of the House Standing Order 15(2), which reads as follows:

Not more than two minutes after the reading of prayers, the business of the House shall commence. Members, other than Ministers of the Crown, may propose motions pursuant to Standing Order 43 at this time. Not later than 2:15 p.m., or 11:15 a.m., as the case may be, oral questions shall be taken up. At 3:00 p.m., or 12:00 noon, as the case may be, the House shall proceed to the ordinary daily routine of business, which shall be as follows:

Of course, it begins with presenting reports from standing and special committees.

Today, Mr. Speaker, the hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) rose and began to ask questions at a few minutes before three o'clock and the question period was extended until about 10 minutes after three. We extended that courtesy—

An hon. Member: The Speaker did, not you.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: We extended that courtesy to the Leader of the Opposition, as we have done on previous occasions when he rose at a minute or two before three o'clock. I want to make it very clear that we reserve the right in the future to rise at three o'clock and ask that, in accordance with the rules, we proceed with the ordinary daily routine of business. We do not admit at all that there is any discretion in any member of the House to alter the standing orders, which are clear.

Mr. Paproski: Shame on you!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The President of Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) raises, not I presume by way of a point of order but by way of caveat, the opportunity to argue this matter at some other time. Hon. members will be aware that the point raised has several elements, the first of which is the discretion in the Chair, having recognized a questioner prior to 3:00 o'clock in the afternoon, to grant that questioner sufficient supplementaries to pursue the matter to a conclusion.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The second element that has been raised directs itself to the difficulty that arose some time ago in the last session of this parliament when a motion pursuant to Standing Order 43, having been accepted with unanimous consent, was put to the House, debate began and then the Chair had to decide whether that debate should be interrupted in accordance with the strict terms of the Standing Order so as to commence the question period at 11:15 a.m., that day being a Friday, and conclude at twelve o'clock, and somehow determine the status of that measure which had been taken under consideration by the House prior to 11:15.

The third element in the point of order raised by the hon. President of Privy Council is that in fact the order which has been cited is one that was adopted by this House in the last session of this parliament and which has not been readopted in this session. The provision order under which we are operating and following this procedure, therefore, is one which—it seems on the consensus of everyone—is a beneficial procedure. The alternative is to revert to the previous routine proceedings and take up questions of privilege and points of order during the question period, and then somehow try to deduct those from a 40-minute question period. That is the way it was before and I think most members agree it was not as satisfactory an arrangement as the present one.

The fourth element relates to other proceedings which take place at a fixed time during the day, such as whether the Chair has any discretion to interrupt, for example, private members' hour if some point of privilege is raised which takes time away from that period, or whether other proceedings which take place at a fixed time can be moved aside at the discretion of the Chair.

The last point that has been raised and ought to be considered by hon. members in respect of this is that on previous occasions questions have been raised prior to 2:15 since the adoption of this provisional order in which ministers, for example, have sought the opportunity to make a statement to the House knowing that the statement would have some fundamental relationship to the question period which was about to take place. They have therefore sought the consent of the House or the discretion of the Chair, as the case may be—I am not aware of the details at the moment—to make that statement prior to the question period in the expectation, I am sure, that the Chair would guard a certain 45-minute question period following that. On some occasions the Chair has taken that discretion.

It seems to me, therefore, that this is not a single point of issue. It has at least the five elements I have just mentioned and probably several others that hon. members will want to consider. If we launch into a discussion of this matter I would certainly want it to cover all these points comprehensively before coming to a final decision about whether we can even operate on this basis at all or whether we have to go back to orders the way they were.

[Mr. Speaker.]

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[Translation]

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: 1,258, 1,467, 1,477, 1,484, 1,489 and 1,490.

I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

[Text]

ROYAL VISIT

Question No. 1,258—Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse):

Was there any cost to Canada for the visit of Her Majesty in October 1977 and, if so, what was the cost for travel, receptions, etc.?

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): During 1977, Canada was honoured by the visits of HRH The Prince of Wales (July 5-9, 1977) and Her Majesty the Queen and HRH The Duke of Edinburgh (October 14-19, 1977). The total cost of these visits amounted to $484,752 as at February 28, 1978. Separate expenditure records were not maintained for each visit as the planning and administrative functions were ongoing, and were applicable to both visits.

CANADA WORKS PROGRAM

Question No. 1,467—Mr. Allard:

1. Since the implementation of the Canada at Work Programme, did the government allocate money to the Constituency of Rimouski and, if so, in what amount?

2. For each project accepted, what was the (a) name of the project (b) amount allocated (c) year of acceptance (d) name of the municipality involved (e) number of jobs created?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): 1. Yes, $1,198,000 under Canada Works Program phase I and $1,907,000 under Canada Works Program phase II.

2.

Canada Works Program 1977-78

Phase I

Project Name	Federal Contribution	Project Location	Jobs
(a)	(b)	(d)	(e)
Aménagement d'un Terrain Récréatif Multi-Fonctionnel	34,340	Rimouski-Est	10
Protégeons nos Biens	45,000	Les Hauteurs	9
"Une Main Secourable"	30,492	St-Charles-Garnier/Les Hauteurs	5
Rénovation Des Équipements et Terrain 1977	35,000	Rimouski	11
Troisième Âge Animation	35,000	Mont-Joli	5
Vivre une Expérience de Travail Normalisé	38,250	Mont-Joli, Ste-Flavie
Programme Auto-Assistance Citoyens Émotionnellement Psychique	40,000	Mont-Joli	10
Val Neigette 1977	23,322	Ste-Blandine (Val Neigette)	7
Famille Plein Air	35,000	St-Donat	10
École des Mains Habiles	47,600	Mont-Joli	9
"Améliorons Notre Station Régionale"	35,000	Ste-Irène	6
La Radio de l'Étoile Filante	99,000	Rimouski	16
Embellissement Terrain de jeux et Loisirs de Sacré-Cœur	27,468	Rimouski	7
"Étude Familles et Logements"	30,000	Rimouski	5
"Dynamo"	35,000	St-Noël	6
Conseil Régional Environnement Est du Québec	47,600	Rimouski	9
Action Hadicap Embarque Alcyons	40,000	Mont-Joli	5
Aménagement du Cent Six Milles Carrés	110,000	St-Valérien, St-Narcisse	25
Aménagement et Rénovation	28,680	Ste-Angèle	12
L'Atelier de Reliure	68,000	Rimouski
Développment Culturel	40,000	Rimouski	5
Construction d'un Centre Polyvalent	120,000	St-Gabriel	20
Le Développement Communautaire dans L'Unité de la Neigette	40,706	Trinité Des Monts	8
"L'Art de Chez-Nous"	22,050	Ste-Luce	5
Revalorisation du Patrimoine	30,492	St-Marcellin	5

Phase II

Project Name	Federal Contribution	Project Location	Jobs
(a)	(b)	(d)	(e)
Comité Dépannage Socio-Culturel	35,100	Price et trois Localités	6
Atelier de Production Vidéo	55,100	Rimouski	9
Atelier la Relève	72,200	Val Brillant	8
Entraide Saint-Octave et Padoue	40,700	St-Octove et Padoue	8
Couturière Pour le Troisième Âge	47,788	Mont-Joli et trois Localités	5
Gerjean	26,649	St-Moïse	7
Relance des Loisirs à Sayabec	33,281	Sayabec	7
Service Communautaire Municipal Ste-Jeanne d'Arc	38,800	Ste-Jeanne d'Arc	8
Nous Voulons Survivre	95,691	St-Gabriel et dix-huit Localités	14
Vie. Alimentation	38,100	Mont-Joli	7
Amis Joie	20,832	Trinité Des Monts	4
Centre Activités Communautaires	55,963	Mont-Joli	7
Handicapé c'est Qui?	50,000	Rimouski	7
Progrès Travail	90,175	Rimouski	10
Économie Régionale Bois XIX Siècle	23,100	Iuuummio/Lm	4
Aides de l'âge d'or	19,344	Les Hauteurs	4
Sports à Tous	43,800	Rimouski	6
Loisino	22,320	St-Noël	4
Office Régional du Tourisme de L'est du Québec	25,644	Rimouski	3
Étape Relais Pont Rouge	97,138	Trinité Des Monts	11
Initiative Localité Ste-Luce	11,380	Ste-Luce	5
Drogue-Secours	44,200	Rimouski	5
Mont-Joli '78	68,800	Mont-Joli	9
Le Temps D'une Saison	19,915	Rimouski	3
Protection Securité Pour Tous	43,318	St-Charles Garnier	11
Handicapés Physiques et Déficients Intellectuels Est Québec	56,700	Rimouski et Région	9
Aménagement des Lieux et Programme Pour Service de Loisirs	40,800	Ste-Luce	8
Atelier de Reliure	27,600	Rimouski
Retour Aux Sources	30,200	St-Donat	4
Participation Familiale à L'apprentissage à L'handicapé	44,800	Rimouski	8
Développement Économique	27,600	Mont-Joli	5
Synthèse Historique Du Bas St-Laurent	30,200	Rimouski	6
Embellissons Notre Milieu	92,585	St-Cléophas	15
Artmico Relève Loisirs	47,477	St-Gabriel/Les Hauteurs	8
Bout D'Choux	22,500	Mont-Joli	4
Préservation du Patrimoine	28,800	St-Marcellin	7
Amitié Soleil	124,100	Rimouski et onze Localités	20
Animation Coopérative à Cooprix	25,200	Rimouski	3
Centre Mobile de Vente D'...:tisanat	35,532	Rimouski	7
Amélioration Cent Six Milles Carrés	53,418	St-Valérien	6
Plein-Air Scolaire	17,112	Rimouski	4
Technique—Art	38,070	Bic	7
Auto Assistance	14,222	Mont-Joli
Radio Étoile Filante	15,200	Rimouski
Centre Polyvalent	60,117	St-Gabriel
Vivre une Expérience de Travail Normalisé	19,318	Mont-Joli, Ste-Flavie	7

Projects showing no jobs are extension of original projects.

A carryover of $60,000 from phase I to phase II made the revised phase II allocation of $1,967,000. The amount of projects approved in the Rimouski constituency is $1,970,889 therefore over by $3,889.

MR. IAN HOWARD

Question No. 1,477—Mr. McKenzie:

1. Is Mr. Ian Howard working in the office of the Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) and, if so (a) since what date (b) what is the title of his position (c) what is his classification in the Public Service (d) what was his salary range on joining the Minister and what range is he in now?

2. Has Mr. Howard worked "overtime" since he joined the Minister and, if so, has he been remunerated, at what rate and what total amount as of March 1, 1978?

3. What travel expenses of Mr. Howard's have been paid by the government up to March 1, 1978, exclusive of any travel he may have done in the company of the Minister?

Hon. Iona Campagnolo (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): 1. Yes. (a) September 19, 1978. (b) Executive assistant. (c) On leave of absence from a position at the level of program manager 5. (d) (i) Salary range in previous position $22,695 to $25,473; (ii) Salary in present position not to exceed $29,450.

2. Yes, with no remuneration.

3. $2,568.22 since September 19, 1977. However, during the period of the assignment, Mr. Howard has received, in addition to this sum, $2,480 to cover accommodation and $1,402 in per diem allowances to compensate him for expenses incurred due to his absence from his home in Vancouver.

Order Paper Questions

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

Question No. 1,484—Mr. Oberle:

1. Was General Walter Dabros and the Intelligence and Security Branch of the Canadian Armed Forces involved in ascertaining the voting patterns of Canadian Armed Forces personnel and their dependents in provincial or federal elections in the 1960s and 1970s and, if so (a) to what extent (b) who authorized such action?

2. Were numbers of Francophone personnel moved from the Province of Quebec as a result of one such study of the 1970 election results?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of National Defence): 1. In April, 1977 the Canadian armed forces intelligence and security directorate undertook a review of newspaper reports of the November, 1976 Quebec election to ascertain what impact, if any, the armed forces members may have had on the vote in ridings that included defence establishments. The review was inconclusive, and the project was abandoned. Brigadier General Dabros was not involved.

2. No.

SECURITY

Question No. 1,489—Mr. Oberle:

1. What are the formal duties of the Security Branch of the Department of Supply and Services?

2. Who is the present director of the Branch and what is his salary, including military pay or pensions?

3. What is the relationship of the domestic intelligence gathering activities of the Branch to (a) Colonel Robin Bourne or members of the Police and Security Planning and Analysis Group of the Solicitor General's Department (b) the Department of National Defence Intelligence and Security Branch (c) the Security Service of the RCMP?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. The formal duties of the security branch of the Department of Supply and Services are to manage an industrial security program for protection of classified defence work on behalf of Canadian, NATO and other governments in accordance with national regulations and international agreements, including protection or related data in departmental facilities and normal loss prevention activities. Apart from these security responsibilities, the branch also administers an emergency supply planning division. In so far as private guard companies are concerned, the security branch provides a contract quality control function for all private security guard contracts issued by the Department of Supply and Services in the national capital region.

2. S. M. Jenkyns; classification—pm 7; salary range—$27,900—$34,900 (under review)—no pension nor military pay.

3. The security branch of the Department of Supply and Services conducts no domestic intelligence gathering activities.

INTERDEPARTMENTAL SECURITY ADVISORY COMMITTEE

Question No. 1,490—Mr. Oberle:

Is the Director of the Department of Supply and Services Security Branch a member of the Interdepartmental Security Advisory Committee?

[Mrs. Campagnolo.]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): It is not the policy of the government to divulge the composition of the Interdepartmental Security Advisory Committee.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The questions enumerated by the parliamentary secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

* * *

[Translation]

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all notices of motions for the production of papers be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the notices of motions for production of papers be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

INCOME TAX ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

On the order: Government bills (Commons):

May 15, 1978—Second reading and reference to a committee of the whole of Bill C-56, an Act to amend the statute law relating to income tax and to authorize payments related to provincial sales tax reductions—The Minister of Finance.

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, before we consider this bill I want to put an argument before you of a procedural nature concerning the relevance of this bill when we consider the income tax motion from which the bill arises. If now is not the proper time for my point of order, I could raise it at the appropriate time, as you advise.

Mr. Speaker: Order please. If it relates to proceedings at second reading stage I would think that the appropriate time would be now.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, my point of order arises from Standing Order 60(11) which, as you know, reads as follows:

The adoption of any Ways and Means motion shall be an order to bring in a bill or bills based on the provisions of any such motion.

A number of rulings have been made with respect to this question of the similarity between ways and means motions and the provisions of subsequent Income Tax Act proposals. The question was dealt with at some length on December 18, 1974, as recorded in Journals, pages 224-6, on June 14, 15 and 16, as recorded in Journals, pages 706, 710 and in Hansard of 1975, on page 7638.

Mr. Speaker, I want to explain what we feel is the extent to which a bill arising from a ways and means motion may go under the provision that the bill must be based on any such motion. I would suggest that the various citations to which I have referred establish the following points. First, that "based on" did not mean "identical with"; minor variations are permissible if the essential nature of the taxation provision originally proposed is unchanged.

Second, the taxing power of the Crown is limited by the ways and means motion. Therefore, it is not an acceptable variation between the ways and means motion and the bill to increase the burden that will fall on any group at any time. It follows that moving a measure of tax relief from one year to another will increase the tax on taxpayers for the originally proposed year, and will in addition increase the total tax burden on some specific individuals who might have benefited from the tax proposal being left as it was in the motion.

● (1532)

Third, substantial changes in the ways and means motion ought to be made by the House.

Fourth, when the Chair decides that a substantial difference exists between the motion and the bill, the two must be brought into closer conformity with each other. This can be done by obtaining a new resolution amending the existing one or deleting the offensive provisions of the bill. We will be making a suggestion as to what would be the proper solution in this case. The guiding consideration I would suggest was given in a ruling by Mr. Speaker on December 18, 1974. I quote:

> I wish to repeat and emphasize however that the terms of the Ways and Means motion are a carefully prepared expression of the financial initiative of the Crown and frequent departures from them can only invite deterioration of that most important power.

I contend, Mr. Speaker, that the ways and means motion—and we are now considering the bill arising from it—proposed a level of taxation for a given year, that the variations I have outlined and will outline more fully significantly shift the burden of taxation for some individuals and result in a total taxation package significantly different from that originally proposed to the House.

It would have been impossible to predict from the motion the eventual provisions we now find in this bill. The bill is based on events which occurred after the budget was brought in and the motion was put down. It should be based instead on a different ways and means motion which properly reflects the change in the government's policy and approach.

My job in making this point of order was perhaps made easier today during question period when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) stated, to paraphrase what he said: "I made changes in my proposal after my budget", referring to the type of Quebec proposal that we are now considering.

To be specific, the income tax motion which is paragraph (13) in the budgetary documents tabled by the minister of April 10, 1978 states:

> (13) That for the 1978 taxation year the tax otherwise payable by an individual resident in a prescribed province on December 31, 1978 be reduced by $100.

That is all the motion stated. The word "prescribed" is defined in the Income Tax Act as meaning prescribed as set out in regulations.

In the margin notes the paragraph is identified as an "Abatement for provincial sales tax reduction". In effect, the paragraph authorizes a reduction in federal personal income taxes of up to $100 per taxpayer in a prescribed province. I emphasize the words "prescribed province". Each prescribed province was expected to raise its provincial personal income taxes by the same amount. This was confirmed in our question period today. Each of the prescribed provinces was then expected to reduce its sales tax rates by the amount agreed upon earlier prior to the budget being introduced.

In reviewing the provisions of the bill before us, I would draw attention to clause 30 and clause 59. I would suggest that clause 30 in section 122.1(1) deals with essentially what was contemplated in the income tax motion, paragraph (13), to which I have referred. As I read it, it in effect gives life, if you like, to that provision in the bill that we have before us. I point out that that subsection deals with prescribed provinces. It deals with fiscal years ending December 31, 1978 and it deals with the $100 income tax amount; all are within the income tax motion No. (13).

Unfortunately, we then find there is a subsection (2) to section 122.1 which deals with a much different subject than is referred to in the motion itself. If I may read into the record the section, it states:

> (2) An individual (other than a trust) who resided on December 31, 1977 in a province (other than the Northwest Territories, the Yukon Territory or a province prescribed for the purposes of subsection (1) with which the Government of Canada did not, on April 10, 1978, have a tax collection agreement pursuant to Part III of the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Established Programs Financing Act, 1977 shall deduct from the tax otherwise payable under this Part by him for the 1977 taxation year an amount equal to the lesser of
>
> (a) $85, and
>
> (b) the amount that would, but for this subsection, be the tax payable by him under this Part for the year.

In three important respects that subsection is not in accordance with the income tax motion. First, it deals with the 1977 taxation year, not the 1978 taxation year. Secondly, it deals with an amount of $85, not the $100 that is referred to in the income tax motion. Third, it deals with a province, not a prescribed province. Clearly in the original motion what was contemplated was only prescribed provinces.

The hard truth is that, as we read the motion and then the resulting legislation which is found in Bill C-56, there seems to have been a change in thinking. There seems to have been a change in thinking since April 10, certainly up to the date this legislation was drafted. The net result is that we find the relevant income tax amendments differ from the income tax motion in at least two respects: the date of effectiveness and the range of application.

First, let me deal specifically with that date. While the motion states the measure applies to the 1978 taxation year, the act—and I have referred to this section, subsection 122.1(2)—states that the measure may apply to the 1977 taxation year. Clause 30(3) of Bill C-56 also states that subsection 122.1(2) applies to the 1977 taxation year. The motion became effective, as we know, on April 10, 1978. If it applies to the 1978 taxation year, its effect would appear in the federal accounts for the 1979 fiscal year, in short, the year we are now in. If, on the other hand, the measure applies to the 1977 taxation year, its effect should appear in the federal accounts for the 1978 fiscal year which just ended last March 31, or at least you would think that provision should have been made for some type of accrual in these 1978 fiscal figures. If the latter is the case, the budgetary accounts for the fiscal year 1978 would need to be retroactively adjusted to reflect the reduction in revenues and the increase in the budgetary deficit.

We are dealing with a very large amount of revenue as far as the federal government is concerned. Our finance minister has indicated that the personal income tax reduction in Quebec, which is really what is being affected by the clause I have referred to, namely, subsection 122.1(2), is $186 million. This reduction represents 1.4 per cent of the total federal personal income tax collections for the fiscal year 1978. The amount and timing of the tax reduction in Quebec is both of financial and economic significance. The change of the date from taxation year 1978 to taxation year 1977 represents a perceptible shift in federal budgetary policies.

● (1542)

Second, if I may deal with the general subject of the range we now find in Bill C-56 compared to what was stated in the income tax motion, I suggest that if the clauses as they now appear were accepted, it would mean that the Income Tax Act, through paragraph 13 of the motion would permit three quite different types of tax reductions. In short, out of the rather narrowly confined income tax motion, if we accept the motion that is now presented in Bill C-56 there are three types of tax reductions that would be included. We suggest that was never the intention of the income tax motion.

First, there would be a temporary transfer of tax revenues to eight provinces, which are the prescribed provinces, to provide for the general retail sales tax reduction which the minister referred to in his April 10 budget. Second, there would be a temporary transfer of tax revenues to Quebec to provide for partial financing of a total retail sales tax cut on specific goods and services. Incidentally, that was not announced in the budget. Third, direct payment of federal revenues to taxpayers in Quebec would be facilitated. Again that was not announced in the budget.

The fiscal effect of each of these measures is quite different. One is a general fiscal stimulus to increase consumption. Another is sectoral stimulus to aid particular industries. The third is localized general fiscal stimulus to raise purchasing power. Neither the sectoral stimulus nor the localized general stimulus was mentioned in the budget speech. They are quite different from the economic policies debated in the House and subsequently approved in the budget motion.

Further, section 122.1(1) of the Income Tax Act provides tax abatements to the eight prescribed provinces to finance their reduction of retail sales taxes. The abatement is worth up to $100 per taxpayer. Section 122.1(2) provides for that different payment to which I have referred, namely $85 per taxpayer or resident of Quebec. Not only a resident of Quebec but only a resident of Quebec on December 31, 1977 would be eligible for the tax rebate of $85.

As the motion provides for a tax reduction of $100 per taxpayer, section 122.1(2) provides for somewhat less than the amount designated by the motion. The remaining $15 per taxpayer is presumably intended to finance the federal contribution to the sectoral tax reductions in Quebec. However, this amount is not identified in the Income Tax Act amendments, and thus it is not clear under what authority this federal revenue will be transferred.

I would also draw Your Honour's attention to clause 30 of Bill C-56, page 35 of the bill. Subclause (4) reads:

> For the purposes of subsection 164(3), the portion of any overpayment that arose as a consequence of a deduction made by an individual pursuant to subsection (2) shall be deemed to have arisen on the day the portion is refunded or applied on other liability.

What this is contemplating is an actual pay-out from the consolidated revenue fund which will be authorized by the amendments we are now considering. Nothing like that was contemplated in the income tax motion to which I have referred. I would say on all counts the bill in its present form must be challenged as not being in conformity with the income tax motion as tabled on April 10.

That is my case, Mr. Speaker. I hope you will give it favourable consideration.

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, on several occasions I have had the privilege to rise on questions of procedure, that is on a point of order concerning legislation stemming from resolutions introduced by the Minister of Finance during presentation of the budget. I refer to 1971 when I had serious doubts about the contents and the congruity of the so-called legislation to amend the Income Tax Act. I believe that at the time I had pointed out 39 incompatibilities, if my memory serves me right, some minor some major, between the resolution and the legislation.

On one occasion Mr. Speaker Lamoureux ruled in my favour and the government had to table a new resolution, that is a new motion complying with the bill it had introduced. One might say that all we were doing then was to set tnings right. Well yes. But when there are procedural problems we should not go by trial and error and adopt a band-aid approach. Or else, on a point of order, we say: Let us forget it. That is not the way things are done, Mr. Speaker.

During the time when Mr. Lamoureux was in the Chair, I rose on points of order to set things straight with regard to bills arising from the budget. Even you, Sir, on one occasion did not rule in my favour because the argument I put did not concern a basic matter but a detail. I think it was about the excise tax on gas engines for boats. That was when Mr. Turner was minister of finance.

But every time we had a major point, and the point that was raised by my colleague for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) is definitely a major one. It strikes at the heart of Bill C-56. True, it is a bill to amend the Income Tax Act and there are several points in it, no question about that, but he has already touched directly on a point, namely paragraph 13 of the motion introduced by the hon. minister. I will not read it, it is well known, and it is simply that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) was proposing that every taxpayer in the prescribed provinces be entitled to a $100 allowance on his tax payable to the federal government for the year 1978. This would be for every taxpayer at December 31, 1978. That is all. You would have the explanation that the provinces themselves could then move up their contribution brackets by $100 to compensate. Why? Because the Minister of Finance said he had a draft agreement with eight out of nine provinces on the reduction under the Excise Tax Act.

However, the excise tax being exclusively of provincial jurisdiction, he was using a formula to bring the provinces to act in such and such a way in their field of jurisdiction. That is not a federal jurisdiction, but entirely and exclusively a provincial jurisdiction. For some provinces, Mr. Speaker, it was quite simply a case of interference because they do not have the financial strength to push back the federal government. I am talking about the Atlantic provinces and even the other average provinces, Manitoba and Saskatchewan.

Those provinces are not strong enough financially to turn down the federal government, except perhaps four provinces which could in effect discuss and negotiate with the federal government. The province of Alberta was not involved because it does not have any excise tax. As far as the province of Quebec is concerned, however, it did not agree. At the present time, Quebec is not one of those provinces coming under the fiscal arrangements legislation in any way. There was no agreement with Quebec—perhaps a hope of agreement. Later, however, we know there was disagreement. What do they come up with? A refund! But where is the authority for a refund under that legislation arising from the motion?

On budget night the Minister of Finance never said a word about a refund. Where would we find the authority to refund, Mr. Speaker, because it is not simply a matter of a deduction on the income tax return for the fiscal year 1977? No, because these returns have already been filed. Under the law, they must be completed and sent to the Minister of National Revenue by April 30. So we are looking at this moment, and it is this moment that matters, not the night the budget was tabled, because the reaction of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and of the Minister of Finance only goes back to this week. Only this week, with the introduction of Bill C-56, have we heard about this proposal whereby the federal government itself will reimburse to Quebec taxpayers, as of December 1977, a sum ranging from $85 to $1. Because we must realize that the amount to be deducted is not merely $85, but the difference between $85 and, according to the bill, clause 30(2)(b), line 33, page 34, and I quote:

> the amount that would, but for this subsection, be the tax payable by him under this part for the year.

So a taxpayer who had only $40 to pay would be entitled to $40 in compensation. He does not get more than what he had to pay in income tax. Where does this formula come from, Mr. Speaker? Not in paragraph 13 of the ways and means motion. Not at all. No details there. Would the Minister of Finance dare at this time ask the House for the right to reimburse this amount for which he had not given notice? Although there was no mention of it in the budget speech, he can rise today and say: Well yes, this goes, anything goes. Mr. Speaker, I want to insist, as the previous speaker did, on the fact that each bill arising from a budget and the motions stemming from the presentation of a budget should comply in principle and in its major details with the motion. There is no question. That is the rule here. We have all the precedents. Mr. Speaker, I suggest you should rule on this matter in line with my proposal.

● (1552)

[English]

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I have a few brief comments to make on the point of order which has been argued by members of the official opposition. I might say that those arguments have been directed to the specifics of the legislation rather than to the procedure. It may be that the purpose of the intervention is to achieve by procedural tactics a further opportunity for members of the official opposition to understand the bill and finally decide what position they will take during the course of the debate. But that is an aside.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It would have been better if it had been left aside!

Mr. MacEachen: In the view of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), it would have been better if I had not said that members of the official opposition were stalling for time so that they could understand the bill. Obviously they do not understand it, based on the evidence of the questions which were put and answered during the question period today. It was obvious that the member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) did not understand the bill either; perhaps both parties over there want more time to determine exactly what they are against. Maybe if they did understand it they would change their views.

Nevertheless, with due respect to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, the argument is that somehow the ways and means motion to be adopted has to be a carbon copy of the bill which goes forward in the name of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien). That is the basic argument. Standing Order 60(11) reads as follows:

The adoption of any Ways and Means motion shall be an order to bring in a bill or bills based on the provisions of any such motion.

Of course, it depends upon the meaning one attaches to the word "based". Obviously the bill as brought in is founded four square upon the ways and means motion. The hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) attempted to draw a distinction that payments were to be made in one case in 1978 and in the other case in 1977. Of course, the payments will be made in 1978 and are applicable in the tax year 1978 even though they may draw upon data which is provided in the taxation year 1977.

● (1602)

Mr. Gillies: Based upon the facts of the 1977 year.

Mr. MacEachen: That is exactly what I am telling the hon. member—based upon the data and information available in 1977 but payable in the taxation year 1978. So that even the substantive argument made by the hon. member is not accurate at all.

Mr. Stevens: You are not accurate.

Mr. Clark: You don't understand it, Allan.

Mr. MacEachen: The argument does not rest upon a point of substance. The argument rests upon the procedural fact that the adoption of any ways and means motion shall be in order to bring in a bill or bills based on the provisions of any such motion, and the bill obviously is based upon the provisions of the ways and means motion.

In addition to that, the Minister of Finance has succeeded in securing from His Excellency the Governor General a recommendation to the House of Commons providing for the appropriation of public revenue under the circumstances, in the manner and for the purposes set out in a measure entitled "An Act to amend the statute law relating to income tax and to authorize payments related to provincial sales tax reductions."

Perhaps the hon. member is confusing what used to be the view, that the royal recommendation ought to contain, in a sense, all the items of the subsequent bill. Mr. Speaker Lamoureux disposed of that argument entirely by suggesting more than once that a single line recommendation, generally put, would authorize any number of provisions in any bill and, of course, what the royal recommendation does here is recommend to the House all that is contained, and all the purposes which are set forward, in the bill itself.

The precedents are not numerous on this particular issue, but there was a case which was dealt with, I believe, in 1973 which is dead on with this particular proposition brought forward by the opposition. It had reference to the oil charge bill and has all the elements of similarity with the present case.

[Mr. MacEachen.]

In summary, I am saying that the Minister of Finance has presented a ways and means motion which has been adopted by the House, constituting an order of the House authorizing him to bring in a bill or bills based upon the provisions of the ways and means motion. There is no suggestion that the bill must be a carbon copy of the ways and means motion. It is fully based upon the principles which have been incorporated in the ways and means motion.

Second, the Minister of Finance has satisfied the rules of the House by securing a recommendation from His Excellency which is cast in the broadest possible terms and which contains none of the details which have drawn the attention of the hon. members who have argued the point of order.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, in case the point of my interjection in the opening sentences we just heard from the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen) was not clear, what I was trying to say was that I thought it was unfair to accuse the hon. member for York Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) and the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) of using time on substance instead of on procedure. Sometimes those hon. members, like some of the rest of us, can confuse substance with procedure, but I felt today that they were arguing as to the procedural regularity of certain parts of Bill C-56.

It seems to me that the meaning of Standing Order 60(11) and of rulings which have been made from the Chair on this point are quite clear, namely, that a tax measure cannot depart substantially from what has been proposed in a ways and means resolution.

The ways and means resolution on this point is quite clear. It has been read several times already. It reads: "That for the 1978 taxation year the tax otherwise payable by an individual resident in a prescribed province on December 31, 1978 be reduced by $100". Clause 30 of Bill C-56 carries out the terms of that ways and means resolution in part in subclause (1), but in subclauses (2) and (3) something totally different is imported into the bill.

I think that if this were only a tax bill, Your Honour would have almost no option but to rule that there should be a new resolution to cover what is in subclauses (2) and (3) of clause 30. The Deputy Prime Minister sought to get around this by drawing attention to the recommendation of the Governor General which is printed opposite page one of the bill. The Deputy Prime Minister interprets that recommendation as an approval of everything that is in the bill. My submission is that the only reason a Governor General's recommendation was attached to this bill is that it is not only a tax bill but also an appropriation bill. Part III, which is entitled "Compensating payments", provides for money to be paid out of the consolidated revenue fund. I would say that if there had not been a Governor General's recommendation, Part III of the bill would in effect have been an appropriation bill for which there would have been no authority at all.

The Deputy Prime Minister says that a recommendation has been obtained in this case. Most tax bills do not have Governor General's recommendations because they are based on proper ways and means resolutions. However, in this case the recommendation of the Governor General is specific and narrow. It recommends to the House the appropriation of public revenue in the circumstances, in the manner and for the purposes set out in this measure. As I say, that applies to the spending aspect of this bill, Part III, which is not a normal part of a tax bill at all. It is an appropriation bill, and I do not see how it can be argued that a Governor General's recommendation which covers the spending provisions in Part III gets away from the fact that an ordinary tax bill must have as its base a proper ways and means resolution. I agree with the Deputy Prime Minister that we do not expect every "t" to be crossed and every "i" to be dotted in ways and means resolutions, but there have been sufficient rulings in the past that, so far as a tax bill is concerned, it should be supported by a ways and means resolution.

I contend that subclauses (2) and (3) of clause 30 of the bill go beyond ways and means resolution No. 13, and that Your Honour should so find. I repeat myself by saying that I do not see how a Governor General's recommendation approving the expenditure portion of this bill can be taken as carte blanche for the government to make any other changes it wishes to make in the bill itself. If it had not been for the Governor General's recommendation I would have argued that Part III of the bill is completely out of order and that we would have to get that recommendation.

These things are in the hands of the government. We are talking about ways and means resolutions and about recommendations from the Governor General as though they were hard to get. We know they are not. The government can get them any time, but still there are the niceties of our rules and the procedural points that are laid down, and it has been clearly established that if the government is going to spend money, it has to have a recommendation from the Governor General. If the government is going to impose a tax—and this goes back to section 54 of the British North America Act—it has to have a ways and means resolution.

● (1612)

Therefore, I submit the points made by the hon. member for York-Simcoe and the hon. member for Edmonton West are valid. This bill is imperfect in the sense that subclauses (2) and (3) of clause 30 are not based on any ways and means resolution which has been presented to or passed by the House.

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, earlier I had a discussion with the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens). As a way of exemplifying the situation, on April 10 the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) had a certain pot of X millions of dollars in mind. This pot was to be divided in a certain fashion. As a result of the changes and the division into two tax years, we now find a person who was resident in the province of Quebec as of December 31, 1977 will be entitled to an $85 rebate, whereas that person may have moved to the province of Ontario on January 15, 1978 and will receive a second advantage by way of the 3 per cent reduction in provincial sales tax for the six-month period following April 10. If that person is to benefit twice, once in 1977 and once in 1978, then someone else will lose if it is the same pot of money. That exemplifies the problem the government has as a result of dividing it into two tax years, which is different from the original motion.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The point raised by the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) of course is a serious one which deserves very serious consideration. The arguments which have been presented are similar to ones which were presented in the past when this difficulty arose—the relationship between the ways and means motion and the ultimate tax measure itself.

I want to examine the precedents, including the ones referred to by the hon. member for York-Simcoe and particularly the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), and the more recent case referred to by the Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen). I will endeavour to make a decision on this as soon as possible.

I know I ought not to anticipate this, but I doubt very much that the remainder of the time available this afternoon will be sufficient to cover all discussion which might take place. Therefore, in the meantime perhaps the matter can go forward this afternoon while I have this question under review. Of course, I will endeavour to bring a decision to the House as soon as possible.

* * *

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I realize what business is called is at the discretion of the government. We are dealing with a matter which is quite fundamental to dealing with this bill in parliament. It is a very serious matter in that sense. It is regrettable that there may have been an error, or on the other hand, there may not have been. One way or the other, Your Honour has been put in the position of legitimately reserving judgment on a matter which is fundamental to the right of government to introduce a bill and proceed with it.

I respectfully suggest that what we all want to accomplish could be accomplished in another manner. For the balance of today and until Your Honour renders a judgment, the government could call the customs tariff bill. Earlier I indicated that we are prepared to proceed with that bill. The debate is under the general direction of the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert). We should not assume that we can start debating the bill in view of what happened in the House today. Respecting the government's position, we do not know whether the government will negotiate. I think the government indicated that it will negotiate. It is not fundamental to proceed in this manner, especially when there is other business which the House can properly deal with.

I do not want to hold the government up in terms of business. I am not suggesting that the House close down while

Your Honour considers this. On behalf of the official opposition we are prepared to proceed with the other government order today. I am referring to the customs matter. This will provide Your Honour with the required time to deal with this matter, to decide whether or not debate on the bill should commence, or whether there ought to be a new ways and means motion. My proposition is not unreasonable in the most unusual circumstances the House found itself in this afternoon.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the effort of the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) to be helpful, but we are not faced with an unusual situation at all. Frequently points of order are raised in respect of matters before the House, and Your Honour requests some time to consider the points of order and render judgment later. In the meantime, usually we proceed with the business before the House. In this case, I believe it would be desirable to proceed, as was indicated earlier by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). If the speech of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) is a long one, perhaps hon. members of the opposition will have a chance to make up their minds before they speak at eight o'clock.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): This happens to be Wednesday. We do not sit at eight o'clock.

An hon. Member: You do not even realize that it is Wednesday.

Mr. MacEachen: Then hon. members opposite would have a chance to consider the matter until tomorrow.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) should know that the position of my party is very clear, not only on second reading, which is the extent of the agreement in government caucus, but on the bill as it stands. We propose to oppose the bill as it now stands.

However, that is not the issue. I imagine it is entirely at Your Honour's discretion, but the issue is whether or not it is a wise precedent for parliament to begin consideration of a bill today which may not be properly before parliament. If that in fact is a dangerous course upon which we might be embarking, it would be in the interests of parliament, of orderly debate, and of providing the government with the time to speak with members of its caucus who are not prepared to support this matter on second reading to defer the bill. It would provide the government with time to arrive at a more complete agreement in support of the measure in the name of the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien).

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The discretion for the calling of business on the order paper under government orders is entirely that of the government. Certainly we are not making a new precedent by having a matter considered by the House while it is under review procedurally. Obviously it would not be desirable to become involved in several days of debate on a matter which might be reversed on procedural grounds, but it is certainly not a new practice or a new experience for us to allow the matter to go ahead while the Chair is reserving. That discretion is not one the Chair enjoys, to presume on the decision one way or another, until such time as I have had an oppotunity to examine the precedents and render a decision. Under the circumstances, I will attempt to render a decision as soon as I possibly can.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

INCOME TAX ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance) moved that Bill C-56, to amend the statute law relating to income tax and to authorize payments related to provincial sales tax reductions, be read the second time and referred to committee of the whole.

He said: Mr. Speaker, before I commence my remarks, I should like to indicate that I am pleased with the decision to proceed at this time. A debate on this bill will be extremely useful because it has stirred up a lot of confusion and discussion. It is appropriate for everyone to speak his mind on this matter. The hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) was worried about the extent of support that this measure received in our caucus. In due course he will see that discussions occur among government members, and that the bill has been discussed in many forums. The position I will attempt to establish will assist opposition members in making up their minds. They do not seem to understand what we are talking about.

It was unbelievable to hear the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) talking about the tax proposition of October 1 when we are dealing with the April 10 budget. For that reason, and in order to facilitate the debate so that people will understand, I think I should make this speech. I will make it as factual as I can so that the people will be able to understand the issue a little bit better.

● (1622)

Bill C-56 implements the principal measures advanced in my budget of April 10. That budget was designed to provide a modest and responsible stimulus to give a lift to our economic recovery and to ease inflation. It was also designed to encourage structural adjustment in the Canadian economy, particularly in the fields of energy, transportation and research and development.

I will deal today with the specific measures of the budget, and discuss in some detail the proposal to contribute toward temporary reductions in provincial retail sales taxes. But I would like to speak first about the economic context of the budget, a context of continuing adjustment and underlying improvement in the economic health of our country.

Since 1975 the challenge facing us all in Canada has been to pull our economy back into line as a trading nation, to restore our competitive position in the world. We have come a long way in this direction. We have some distance still to go. The ground we have lost is most evident in our current rate of unemployment. In this area, more than any other, we have had to live with damage for some time after we have made corrections elsewhere.

What are those corrections? We have brought our costs down to much more reasonable levels. Increases in our wage costs and unit labour costs are at or close to those in the United States. Demands for future increases are by and large responsible. Government expenditures are being held down. Federal spending has been kept within the growth rate of g.n.p. for two years, and we will continue to make whatever cuts are necessary to stay within that goal.

A series of target ranges has been established for increases in the money supply to ensure that monetary policy supports economic growth at declining rates of inflation.

Fiscal policy has followed the same goal. The tax burden on individuals and corporations has been eased, both indexing and through deep cuts in federal taxes.

Indexing of exemptions and brackets since 1974 means that personal income taxes this year are more than $5 billion below what they would have been in the absence of the indexing adjustments. Specific personal tax cuts totalling $2.9 billion have been introduced since 1974. Over the same period, the government has introduced tax cuts for business large and small totalling $1.6 billion.

The fast write-off for manufacturing and processing assets was made permanent. An investment tax credit of 5 per cent was introduced, and later increased in amount, extended in term and applied to research and development expenditures. Further incentives were introduced for frontier oil and gas exploration. The corporation tax was significantly simplified in important areas. A measure was introduced to reduce the impact of inflation on inventories. An employment tax credit was introduced.

Other measures were designed in particular to help smaller business operations in this country. I speak of increases in the profits taxed at reduced rates, the annual limit tripled to $150,000 and the cumulative limit increased to $750,000 from $400,000. I refer to the increased dividend tax credit, higher deductions for capital losses, preferred treatment of stock options and gains on venture investments, and the deferral of tax on replacement of business property.

The government will soon introduce new measures to help small business.

Because of these tax cuts and the weakness in the economy, the federal deficit has risen. As the recovery picks up and inflation recedes further, our cash requirements will come down. In the meantime, our borrowing program is manageable and fully within the capacity of the capital markets and the economy.

One of our basic adjustments in the past 18 months has been the depreciation of the Canadian dollar. In the last two weeks the dollar has regained ground and stabilized demonstrating that fundamental forces have reasserted themselves in the exchange market. Largely because of the dollar's adjustment, our trade and balance of payments picture is improving sharply. The improvement began last year when we almost tripled our trade surplus. It strengthened even further in the first quarter this year when the merchandise balance jumped to an annual rate of $5.6 billion, twice that of last year.

There are many recent signs of more growth with less inflation. Retail sales were up 4.3 per cent between January and February. In real terms, the sales in those two months were 6.1 per cent higher at an annual rate than in the fourth quarter of 1977. This suggests that the $100 tax cut early this year has helped boost consumer demand.

Employment continues to rise in Canada. The most promising part of this picture is a strong rebound in manufacturing jobs. They increased 4.2 per cent in the past six months.

We have corporate data now for the fourth quarter of 1977, showing an upswing in profitability and continued improvements in liquidity.

The working capital ratio in the last quarter almost reached its all time peak of 1973.

Because of the sales tax cut in last month's budget, the consumer price index is now 0.7 per cent lower than it would otherwise have been. The increase in the CPI for April was only 0.2 per cent, the lowest month-to-month increase since the fall of 1975.

An indicator of costs and prices used more and more in industrial countries is the CPI less the impact of food and energy. In Canada, the increase in that index has declined from 9.7 per cent in 1975, to 8.8 per cent in 1976 and to 7.3 per cent in 1977. The year-over-year rate to April was 5.7 per cent.

Data Resources Incorporated, a private research group, has calculated that output this year will grow by 0.4 per cent more than it would have in the absence of the sales tax reductions.

These are all clear indications of improving trends in the Canadian economy. The measures of this budget are already part of that story, and they will continue to support those improvements. Let me move now to a brief examination of those measures.

I have referred to the budget's contribution to structural change in the economy. I should mention that the incentives with respect to tertiary recovery and non-conventional oil are being put into effect by regulation, and do not appear in this bill. The same applies to the changes in capital cost allowance applying to major investments in railway transportation.

On the other hand, a third set of structural measures, those applying to research and development in Canada, do require legislative amendment and are set out in Bill C-56. They provide a deduction equal to 50 per cent of current and capital expenditures incurred in a year on R and D which are in excess of a corporation's average annual R and D expenditures over a moving three-year base period. The deductions are to be available over a 10-year period, that is in computing income for the 1978 to 1988 taxation years.

● (1632)

Personal tax measures in this bill provide additional alternatives to holders of registered retirement savings plans, expand the exclusions from income where employees at remote work sites receive board and lodging from their employers, and extend the types of loans received by employees which may be excluded from income.

This bill will allow a person to receive retirement income from his RRSP in the form of a fixed-term annuity as well as a life annuity. To ensure that RRSPs are used to meet genuine retirement income needs, the bill provides that an annuity under an RRSP is not to commence before age 60 or after age 71. The fixed-term annuity purchased under an RRSP arrangement must provide a retirement income until the annuitant reaches age 90, with a special rule to extend the fixed term of the annuity in case of a younger, surviving spouse.

Another option will permit RRSP funds to be transferred to an entirely new investment vehicle—a registered retirement income fund—after the holder reaches age 60. Where this fund is chosen, annual payments will be made from the fund each year until the individual reaches age 90. However, unlike an annuity arrangement in which the amount of the annual payments is pre-determined, the annual payments out of an RRIF will grow over time. They will be based on the size of the fund and the age of the beneficiary year by year. The fund may be self-administered.

The bill includes two amendments of major importance to farmers. One of these permits shares of the capital stock of a family farm corporation to be transferred to a farmer's children without immediate tax on any capital gain at that time. The special rule will apply not only to a transfer on death, but also to one made before death by way of a sale or gift to the child.

The same treatment is extended to transfers to children who have an interest in a family farm partnership. The new rules will place the farmer who carries on business as a family farm corporation or a partnership on the same basis as unincorporated farms.

Further measures will ease the financing problems of many Canadian private corporations and will facilitate joint undertakings by groups of Canadian corporations. This will be achieved by reducing the scope of the special 25 per cent tax that applies on certain dividends received by Canadian-controlled private corporations.

Other amendments in this bill are necessary to ensure that the Income Tax Act deals appropriately with the division of property between spouses in light of changes in a number of provincial laws covering marital property. In a number of circumstances, these provincial changes would require certain gains to be taxable on transfers between spouses or former spouses. The amendments are designed to permit the division of property between spouses pursuant to the family law without an immediate tax on capital gains. Other important matters are dealt with in this bill, including a measure made necessary by the recent introduction of an income tax levied by the Northwest Territories.

[Mr. Chrétien.]

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, as I said on April 10, the short-term action required at this stage of the recovery is a fast-acting nudge to growth, one that encourages consumer spending and one that offsets temporary factors which have been pushing up prices. I would like to take this opportunity to clarify some misunderstanding about the nature and purpose of the federal-provincial initiative to reduce temporarily provincial sales taxes.

First of all, it is important to put the federal proposal concerning a reduction of provincial sales taxes in the context of the historical evolution of fiscal relations between the two levels of government. Since the end of the Second World War, the federal share of over-all revenues levied by the public sector in Canada has declined steadily. Whereas in 1945 the federal government held about 70 per cent of government revenues, after transfers, that percentage gradually went to 50 per cent in the early 1960s and is now in the order of 40 per cent. The share of revenues of the provincial-municipal sector grew correspondingly.

Indeed, whereas in 1945 the provincial-municipal sector had only 30 per cent of total government revenues, it now has about 60 per cent. In short, the provincial-municipal sector actually holds a larger share of total government revenues than does the federal government. Most economists have agreed for some years that this degree of fiscal decentralization makes joint action necessary by the two levels of government in the area of economic and fiscal policy. Moreover, this requirement of our federal system was recognized unanimously by the recent conference of first ministers.

In this context it is essential to understand the growing importance given over the past several years to consultative mechanisms between the two senior levels of government, particularly to the conferences of ministers of finance. It is also in this context that the idea evolved for the federal proposal regarding provincial sales taxes. Given the high level of savings at present, it is generally accepted that a sales tax reduction is the most effective instrument for stimulating the economy. It has the advantage of providing a stimulus which has an immediate effect on prices, consumption, production and employment.

Several weeks ago, I suggested to provincial governments that we undertake joint action, through a reduction in the retail sales tax, to stimulate the economic recovery. I would like to emphasize that this offer was made in good faith and was discussed thoroughly with both ministers and officials of all the provinces including Quebec. These discussions took place in the three weeks prior to my budget speech. During the discussions, the provinces had ample opportunity to make their own suggestions and proposals. British Columbia and Saskatchewan did request adjustments to meet their particular situations. These we accommodated.

No one suggested that the federal government was invading a field of provincial jurisdiction. The proposal was taken under consideration. The province of Quebec did not, in either my discussions with Mr. Parizeau or in discussions between officials, make any special requests or object to the proposal itself. Not until the federal budget was presented, all other provinces having agreed to the proposal, did Quebec decide to announce its selective cuts designed mainly to help the provincial economy.

What is now in dispute is not whether Mr. Parizeau's selective sales tax cuts are a good thing. I fully agree that they are good for Quebec. Indeed by removing sales tax on clothes and shoes, Mr. Parizeau is putting Quebec taxpayers in the same position as those living in the four Atlantic provinces where there has not been sales tax on these items. But in these provinces, the federal government does not pay for the revenue loss. The cost is assumed by the provincial governments.

I recognize that there is a need for special measures to be taken to promote the furniture, footwear, textile and clothing industries of Quebec. That is why the federal government has imposed heavy tariffs on the imports of such goods into Canada, and that is why, as Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, I was responsible for imposing quotas on imports into Canada of clothing, textiles and shoes. The result of these measures is that Canadians across the country pay more to buy these Quebec products than they would if imports were unlimited and if tariffs were lower. Canadians are prepared to pay this price because it is necessary for the economic well-being of one part of Canada, i.e. Quebec.

What is in dispute, therefore, is not whether the government of Quebec should take special measures to help Quebec industries, but rather whether these special measures should be financed primarily by the federal government in the context of general budgetary policies. For the federal government to do so would mean first to give Quebec a deal which, through the fault of Mr. Parizeau, was not offered to the other provinces at the time of the budget discussions. More important, even if it were possible to offer a system of selective tax cuts to all provinces, the results would be detrimental to the economic unity of the country.

The Atlantic provinces and western Canada, with little or no manufacturing industry, would undoubtedly be uninterested in schemes of benefit mainly to Quebec and Ontario. Ontario and Quebec could conceivably engage in a series of moves of a protectionist nature—financed by federal funds—which would make a mockery of the economic common market which is an essential element of Canadian federalism. This would be harmful to all Canadians including Quebeckers.

Mr. Speaker, because Quebec sells 20 per cent of its manufactured products to Ontario, while Ontario sells only 11 per cent of its manufactured products to Quebec, any type of protectionist competition between the two would hurt Quebec more than Ontario. That is why what looks like a clever move to use federal money in a special way to protect Quebec industries would not be of benefit to the people of Quebec if the province of Ontario were to ask the federal government for a comparable deal for Ontario industries.

Therefore, in the long-term interests of the people of Quebec, I must insist that the federal proposal apply in the same way to all provinces. We cannot encourage a reduction in provincial sales taxes financed by federal money that would lead consumers to purchase certain products as opposed to others, unless of course there was agreement among all governments. This was the case for alcoholic beverages, tobacco and amusements. Other products no doubt could have been the object of such agreements if they had been suggested at the appropriate time.

Thus, because the Quebec action was so late, and because the federal government could not be party to bilateral agreements representing discriminatory measures impeding the free flow of goods between provinces, I advised Mr. Parizeau that he cannot expect to obtain the full financial assistance available under the national plan which was aimed at all Canadian consumers and all sectors of the economy. I offered to pay the cost of the first 2 per cent for six months of Mr. Parizeau's selective tax cuts.

● (1642)

In addition, and these are concessions I made after my first proposal, I offered to finance totally a 2 per cent cut across the board for six months of sales tax on all other goods and services sold in Quebec. The value of this offer to Quebeckers would have been $226 million. Mr. Parizeau refused this offer of the federal government. It is clear to me that the separatist government in Quebec does not want to have any part of a deal with the federal government because it does not want federalism to work. How else can one explain his failure to make any suggestions until after the budget. However, because the federal government does not want to penalize the people of Quebec for the actions of the separatist government of Quebec, I am introducing amendments in this bill to permit the return of $186 million to taxpayers in Quebec.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: We will be reducing the income taxes of Quebec taxpayers, thereby vacating an income tax field temporarily, by an amount of $186 million. In order to ensure that taxpayers in Quebec enjoy the full value of the federal offer and are put on the same footing as other Canadians who pay sales taxes, each Quebec taxpayer will receive a rebate on 1977 federal personal income tax. The federal government is doing this to provide Quebec residents with compensation to bear the cost of the sales tax on all items for which the tax has not been reduced by two points for six months by the Quebec government. The $40 million we have offered to the Quebec government for a two-point reduction over six months on the selected items is worth up to $15 per taxpayer. This leaves about $186 million—or up to $85 per Quebec taxpayer—outstanding from the federal offer. Thus, the amount of the rebate for each Quebec taxpayer will be $85 or the amount of federal income tax payable, whichever is less.

Once the bill has been passed, Revenue Canada will process rebates from the computer record of Quebec taxpayers who filed returns on their 1977 income. Rebates will be sent out later this year while the retail sales tax cuts still are in effect in the other provinces. Of course, if to straighten things out, this reimbursement to the Quebec taxpayers could be geared to a tax increase which the Quebec government might decide to impose then I am prepared to discuss it.

Mr. Speaker, I have been discussing the matter with the provinces since March 23. On that day I called Mr. Parizeau and Mr. McKeough on the telephone to find out what they thought of the proposal. We had already discussed it previously in October and January. Then, on Friday, March 24, I discussed the matter again with Mr. Parizeau on the telephone and since he himself had problems with the federal government, he asked me to help him settle them. I immediately called my officials in an effort to help him in another area; it was quite a difficult situation for Quebec since it was the end of the fiscal year. These things do not come out but they happen just the same, Mr. Speaker.

On Monday, March 27, my deputy minister, Mr. Shoyama, contacted all the provincial deputy ministers, except Mr. Collins from Alberta who was not available. He explained the proposal to them and they discussed their intentions in general terms. No one can say that all the deputy ministers were not informed. On Tuesday, March 28, I got in touch with every single minister of finance and on Wednesday 29th, I went West where I met the minister of finance of British Columbia, Mr. Wolfe, Mr. Smishek and Mr. Craik. On that very day I spoke on the telephone with the minister of finance of Alberta. When I came back to Ottawa, I spoke again on several occasions with Mr. Parizeau and Mr. McKeough. Several times I put a call through which sometimes was not even returned. It does not really matter; I am a patient and very humble man.

I still kept on trying in an effort to get a consensus. On Saturday, April 1 and on Sunday, April 2, the officials of all the provinces were called and told: Come and see us here in Ottawa; there will be a meeting on Monday, April 3. All of them, including Quebec and Alberta, sent representatives. The proposal was discussed, hypothetically, all day; changes were made to accommodate the requests made by some of the provinces; telephone conversations went on throughout the week.

When, at the request of the ministers of finance of British Columbia and Saskatchewan I made certain changes, I myself took the initiative of calling the other ministers of finance to tell them: Those provinces would like such and such a solution; do you agree with it? They answered: We see no objection to it. If you want to do that for thoses provinces, go ahead, Mr. Chrétien. Throughout that debate, that is, during almost three weeks of intensive consultations, at no time did the province of Quebec mention selective cuts. At no time did they make suggestions, either Mr. Parizeau himself or the officials. Mr. Speaker, what I did was quite simply try to be a little innovative because, as I said at the beginning of my speech, the taxation base of the federal government is constantly shrinking. The possibility of the central government influencing the economy is being reduced accordingly. And it is in that spirit following the conference of the first ministers, who were urging consultation, that I took a big chance to try and reflect the spirit of the first ministers' conference.

I took the initiative at the very great risk of being blamed in this House—and I was blamed in this House—for having talked about the budget with people who are not members of the Canadian cabinet. Mr. Speaker, I took that chance which could have been fatal, but I wanted to try to be innovative and convince the provinces to do in their jurisdictions, with my help, what could be best. I acted in extremely good faith. What I am proposing at this time, Mr. Speaker, is quite simple. I do not want to penalize Quebec residents who pay taxes at the federal and provincial levels because the government of Quebec did not want to follow me as another provincial government might have taken in good faith an extremely important initiative. On top of that, in all my conversations with the ministers of finance, Mr. Speaker, I did not talk only about the sales tax. I consulted them on the monetary and fiscal policy of the government. I consulted them on the effect of the Canadian dollar on their economies, on the effect of the fall of the Canadian dollar on exports, on the effect of their internal financing because very often, having borrowed on the U.S. market, they must pay in U.S. dollars and that adds to their budgetary burden.

I did that in trying to develop a new mechanism which is essential in this country. If I made a mistake, Mr. Speaker, it is in believing in federalism, in believing that it was possible to speak in good faith with finance ministers and try in speaking to the finance ministers to develop a consensus beyond partisan considerations. I knew full well, Mr. Speaker, that there were only two governments at this time with the same political stripes as mine and that I was taking political risks but when you believe in an institution such as Canada you take chances to try and develop an acceptable economic policy, and instead of relying exclusively on the constitution as is so easy to do, we have tried to take that into consideration. I could have acted arbitrarily and made the offer here in the House during my budget speech. Then the pressure would have been on the provincial finance ministers. All economists, commentators were saying: the sales tax should be cut. The C.D. Howe Research Institute, the Chamber of Commerce, all people analysing the economic situation since October, realizing that demand had declined too much in Canada, were suggesting a sales tax cut. Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, because of the constitution, even though I believe that we would be entitled to get involved with the sales tax if we wanted to, we have not occupied this tax room because it comes under provincial jurisdiction.

I took it upon myself to ask the provinces to do this, and I did not only consult them just before the budget. We started to discuss this in October, Mr. Speaker, at the finance ministers' conference. If I have been guilty of anything, Mr. Speaker, it is of having believed in Canada, of having believed the Quebec government when it said that it had been elected to be a good government and to provide sound management, that it would behave like a government still within confederation and not like a government that wanted to get out of it. If I have been guilty of anything, Mr. Speaker, it is of having talked with Mr. Parizeau for the first time in Canadian history before the tabling of a budget, not only about the sales tax, but also about the fiscal and monetary policy and about the policy of the Bank of Canada. Mr. Parizeau, Mr. McKeough and myself spent four hours one evening in Montreal discussing all this. And at no time was there any mention of a selective cut because it is fairly obvious that if we wanted to get into selective cuts, at that time—

● (1652)

[English]

It was evident when we discussed that. Everyone should realize this has been done before. Ontario paid from its own pocket. Two years ago the province of Ontario decided to stimulate the automobile industry. The minister of finance of that province decided within his own jurisdiction to reduce his own sales tax on cars from 6 per cent to zero for a period of time.

An hon. Member: He did it right.

Mr. Chrétien: He did it. He was very keen to convince everyone in Canada that it was the thing to do following his own experience—

An hon. Member: And you bungled it!

Mr. Chrétien: —to do it across the board.

An hon. Member: And he did it right.

Mr. Chrétien: I thought it was a good move. If someone is to be blamed because I played with the cards on the table by deciding to be novel and try to find a mechanism to help Canada solve its economic problems, then, if I am guilty of that, I will plead guilty. I will not apologize to anyone.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: When I hear so many accusations in this House that I am doing that just to try to separate the country even more—

An hon. Member: That is what you have done.

Mr. Chrétien: I think it is unbelievable that hon. members are making that kind of accusation. As I have said, we were acting in good faith.

I will meet the provincial ministers of finance next month. We are trying to arrange a meeting. I know it will be embarrassing for them and for us because we tried something. It was very difficult because the ministers from the west were uneasy about it; they do not have a big manufacturing base. I told them that as the maritimes could not afford to be part of the scheme the federal government would be paying 100 per cent as it applied to the maritimes. I went to Alberta and explained to its minister of finance that since I was moving into an area where that province does not pay any taxes, Alberta would not be part of this scheme. It was not a proposition that would apply equally across the land. For example, the maritimes treasuries would pay nothing. The provinces which manufacture goods and the others which can afford to do so would pay one-third of the cost. Alberta was not to be part of it. I remember they were not completely happy but they behaved in a responsible way before the budget and up to the budget, after everyone had agreed.

I would like to deal with a touchy problem concerning what was said by the western premiers after that. I believe I have to speak about it. The B.C. government decided to move the date of their budget in order to be able to produce exactly the same tax cut the same day as I. I presume they had discussions in their cabinet because no budget is proposed without approval of the cabinet. In Manitoba they did exactly the same thing. I had occasion to meet the premier of Manitoba. He was in Ottawa and I invited him to come and talk with me. We discussed this problem and other problems for almost two hours. It was useful for me and useful for him. After the fact, after it had been explained to them that their cabinets, except for Alberta, had approved it, I find it a bit incredible that they should say we forced them.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Are you calling them liars?

Mr. Chrétien: No, I do not say they are liars. They said they agreed with the substance, but they did not like the procedures and so on that we were following. If they did not want to be a part of it, it would have been very easy for them to call me—

An hon. Member: What?

Mr. Chrétien: —any day before and say "We are not going to agree". I would have advised my colleagues that there were no takers and I would have done something less valuable than that.

An hon. Member: Too bad.

Mr. Chrétien: I wanted to explain that point.

We are having problems at this moment, I do not deny it. We are trying to be fair. We do not want to penalize the taxpayers in Quebec because Mr. Parizeau wants a confrontation with me. It is not I who wants a confrontation with him. I said, and I repeat, that if he had said "I will go along with the other provinces", I would have praised him because he had been able to look at the national economy and the Quebec economy as a man who could look at problems as a minister of finance should look at them, in a non-partisan way.

● (1702)

Let us talk about the facts. I am talking about what happened. I am not surprised that the National Assembly does not like my proposition. What I am surprised at is that the opposition, even in the Quebec Assembly, make no suggestions as to how to solve this question. They just blame the government. At no point since the beginning of this debate have we received any suggestion on how to resolve this.

The Quebec government just want me to send them a cheque. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) explained that very carefully today. The reason Quebec will have to raise their taxes is because they collect their own taxes. It is as simple as that. We made room in Ontario and in the other provinces. On the same day as my budget, or the day after, they introduced an increase in their income tax equal to my decrease in income tax. That is exactly what happened.

I was amazed to hear the Leader of the New Democratic Party talk about the budget of October. It is not that. If he will read the bill, he will understand. They have raised their taxes. Now that I have made room in Quebec, they can tax their own taxpayers.

[Translation]

All Quebec premiers have said it was essential for Quebec to raise its own taxes. Yet, in this case, I collect for the other provinces the income tax they increased since my budget. In fact, it is the federal government that collects it for them. As concerns the province of Quebec, the only way to transfer funds exactly as for the other provinces, is to leave some tax room.

If the Quebec government wants to raise taxes, let it do it! Since 1954, they have been asking to raise their own taxes, and I made it easier for them through this tax cut. Obviously, the taxpayers will think that this tax cut is due to the generosity of the federal government. We are generous, but not any more than we are towards the other provinces.

The only difference is that in the other provinces, as the finance ministers wanted to share with the Canadian government the economic and political credit for the sales tax cuts, no mention was made either in the debates or in the press that we had actually reduced our taxes while they had increased theirs. In the province of Quebec, every taxpayer gets an $85 tax cut, which is the amount of the difference.

If the Quebec government wants to negotiate with me, I am waiting for their proposals. I cannot send them a cheque directly, as I do not do that for the other provinces. It is easy to understand. Each time I send a cheque, I consider it as an expense. To avoid any increase in government spending, since everybody complains about the level of spending, we decided to leave some tax room in Ontario, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, British Columbia and the maritimes. It is as simple as that. We do the same thing for the province of Quebec. But as they do not agree about tax collection in Quebec, they choose not to collect the taxes we cut. They would like me to send them the money directly. In so doing, I would increase my expenditures and the members of the opposition who are asking me to do this are those who complain about our spending. If I leave some tax room, I do not spend anything, I just reduce my revenue.

[English]

The tax is very important. If I had decided just to pay by cheque, the increase in the expenditures of the federal government would have been more than $800 million. Everyone would have said that the Minister of Finance is increasing his expenditures, while in fact it would have just been a matter of transferring cash to the provinces to reduce their taxes.

In order to be imaginative and to do what I wanted to do without creating the false impression that we are spending money—and the ministers of finance agreed with me—I said we would reduce our taxes and they could increase their taxes. As we are collecting taxes, nobody has noticed what is happening. The federal tax in Ontario and elsewhere has been reduced by $100. The legislatures of Ontario, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, British Columbia and the maritimes have introduced legislation increasing their income tax accordingly. However, as we collected it, nobody noticed.

We do not have an agreement with Quebec to collect their taxes. I offered that at the time of the negotiations, but we never came to an agreement with Mr. Parizeau. He did not respond before the budget. Then after the budget he said, and has been saying since that time, "Send me a cheque". That is the only proposition he has made. I told him that we have to be fair to everybody. We have to make tax rules for Quebec like everywhere else. Because the system is different in terms of collections, he does not want us to have credit for reducing our income tax in Quebec. He wants to take the credit for what he will do if he raises the taxes we have vacated.

There was no problem in the other provinces. I did not take credit for cutting taxes in my budget because the provinces were generous enough to let me share in the benefit of cutting sales tax. Nobody else talked about the income tax mechanism. The problem is that the mechanism does not exist in the same way in Quebec.

I cannot understand the Quebec government not wanting to raise their taxes to collect the amount I am vacating. In 1954

Mr. Duplessis said that it was fundamental to the autonomy of Quebec. You cannot have it both ways. Either you sign a collection agreement with the federal government or you do not. We have not had any counter-offer. They have merely tried to force me to send them a cheque. I am not sending a cheque to the other provinces in which I have vacated the tax field. Of course, it is a difficult situation.

Because I believe in our institutions and in the good faith of those who are elected across this land, regardless of political stripe, I did this. Perhaps I was too generous in believing that in economic and fiscal matters I could deal in good faith with everybody. Unfortunately, it is not possible. However, I will keep trying—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: —because I believe one of the problems in this land is that we are destroying a very necessary instrument, the national government. That is extremely important. At this moment, I am not comfortable as Minister of Finance of this country. I will not be partisan or political in the sense of raising the problem in Quebec.

I compared the books of the province of Newfoundland with the books of the province of Alberta, both of which have Conservative governments, and it made me extremely uncomfortable. The highest sales tax in the land is in Newfoundland. There is no sales tax in Alberta. The highest tax on gasoline is in Newfoundland. There is none in Alberta. Most of the taxes that exist in Newfoundland do not exist in Alberta. That is good for Alberta. However, in a country like Canada, is it not normal to have a federal government strong enough to help those who are poor with the money of those who are rich?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: I came to this House 15 years ago. Some people outside this place say that I have moved to the right. I do not mind when they say that. I try to do what is right. However, when I came to this House it was because I believed in distribution. There was no medicare. All sorts of programs were lacking. I have been associated with many of the programs which were initiated by Mr. Pearson and by the present Prime Minister. This week, if I am not mistaken—I speak from memory—the OECD stated that this year the level of income per capita in Canada is above that of the United States.

• (1712)

Mr. Stevens: Read the whole report.

Mr. Chrétien: We are surpassed only by Switzerland and Sweden. Bearing in mind the kind of land in which we live, with its provinces running 4,000 miles from coast to coast and another 4,000 miles from Windsor to the North Pole, and considering what we have managed to achieve in the last 110 years, I am proud to be a Canadian.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: I am proud to try to find ways to keep our country as it is and to bridge the gap between the rich and the poor. If I did not risk my skin, I would be at rest with my conscience—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Chrétien: Members opposite can laugh. For years I have been a member of this House and I have devoted six years, one month, three days and two hours to trying to solve the problems of the weakest in our society, the Eskimo and the Indian.

Mr. Paproski: Who is laughing?

An hon. Member: We are all Canadians.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): The Minister of Finance has the floor. This is going to be a long debate and we shall all have our turn.

Mr. Chrétien: I have done it because I believe this country can offer something that is different. One of the proudest moments in my life was when one day I took the taxpayers' money to help an Eskimo print the first book in the Eskimo language ever printed in the world. We believed it was important that the smallest minority in this land should keep its language and its culture for generations to come.

I can take a lot of abuse from the opposition. I do not mind. But I will do my duty as I believe is right. It is to try to find a new formula in order to achieve greater equality in this nation. Perhaps we shall have to change the constitution. The Prime Minister has spoken often on that subject. I will just tell the House that I think we are on a dangerous course at this moment.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: You put us there!

Mr. Chrétien: Some people are willing to make any compromise but I am not. This measure is a just measure. We are not penalizing the people of Quebec at all. We are not discriminating against other provinces. Members over there can introduce all the nuances they like, but basically this measure is sound. I have talked with the ministers of finance of the land, excluding Mr. Parizeau, and I have talked with my colleagues. They are uncomfortable with it, but—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Chrétien: I tried before. I talked to them. I will meet them again. I will try to carry out this duty. As Minister of Finance I must try to bring about, in conjunction with the provinces, an economic policy. That is an avenue which has to be explored. Of course, it has given me some problems, but not problems I am afraid of. I can face problems and difficulties. What I am concerned about are sensible solutions.

I should like to compensate the people of Quebec. I do not want them to lose. If the Quebec government wants to raise its income tax, it can do that. But basically we have to realize that with Canada as it is, the weakening of federal institutions being à la mode, the result may be that Canada will not have to hold a referendum to split up. You will have de facto separation. I will try to bring about policies which will produce the maximum economic growth with the maximum distribution from east to west. We have to be careful about all these things. I will carry on as long as I have the support of the Prime Minister and of my colleagues. It is very important to try to bring about justice in this country.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Could I ask the Minister of Finance a question? On three occasions in the course of his speech he said Quebec could always increase its income tax and take up the room the federal government has provided. In order to clarify this matter, would the hon. gentleman explain clause 30 of the bill? How could this be done in view of the fact that the taxable income dealt with in reference to the tax is for the taxation year 1977 for Quebec and 1978 for the other provinces? How could the Quebec government move into that field when the tax has already been paid?

Mr. Chrétien: I will have other occasions at the committee stage to explain this point but perhaps it is worthy of explanation at this moment. The problem is that this year for the first two months, January and February, we have cut the income tax for the fiscal year 1978 by $100. Everyone knows about it. It was for the first two months. If I choose to apply this reduction to the same fiscal year—1978—making a further credit of $85 available to the Quebec taxpayers, what would happen? It would mean that the taxpayers in Quebec who already have received an exemption of $100 this year would not receive anything. So I would be affecting in a negative way the people who would be paying least taxes.

Suppose that in 1978 they were paying $100 in taxes. We have already said to them that for January and February they will pay no tax at all. If I give another tax credit in 1978 they will not qualify to receive it. That is why I decided to look at the situation for 1977 which, even though it may not be perfect, is an attempt to protect as much as possible the taxpayers who are at the lower end of the scale. This is the reason I am doing that. If hon. members over there have a better suggestion to guarantee that result, I am willing to look into it. I am not stubborn about it. I have just given an explanation for my actions; it is a technical explanation.

There is another thing, too. The other provinces have increased their taxes already and we have effectively decreased our taxes for them since the night of the budget by collecting them for them. Because of the time of the year at which we have now arrived we will have to wait until October to bring about a reduction for the taxpayers in Quebec. As to the problem of those who pay only $100, we can give them a credit for the whole year of 1979 and they would receive the cash in the spring. I do not think this is fair to them.

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, having listened to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) in his introductory remarks to Bill C-56, I think there is a fundamental misunderstanding by this government as to what an agreement means.

• (1722)

In his remarks the Minister of Finance took us through those trying times when he tried to negotiate with various provinces. But the important thing he omitted to tell us is why he chose on April 10 to go ahead with his budget knowing that he had no agreement with such a key province as Quebec. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has indicated that he feels there is no rush for an election now. Presumably he felt that way on April 10, so why was there a rush for a budget? Why could one or two more weeks not have been taken in the earnest hope that there could have been an understanding arrived at, not just with eight or nine provinces but with all ten provinces in the country.

I believe that the minister clearly demonstrates that there is no understanding on his side of the House as to how to negotiate, bearing in mind the sensitivities of other levels of government. If the government made a mistake on April 10 by going ahead rashly and bringing in a proposal which was subsequently shown to be clearly unacceptable to the government and, presumably, to the members of the National Assembly of Quebec, why did the federal government then hasten to bring in Bill C-56, again to create the consternation we are now living with in this country? What was the rush? Why first reading on May 15 and second reading debate beginning on May 17?

In what has happened on the government side we can see that the government feels there are three distinct divisions in Canada. There is Alberta, which is treated, in a sense, as the outcast. It gets no benefit whatsoever as a result either of the budgetary measures announced or of the provisions now written into Bill C-56. There are the eight provinces which do receive the benefit of the initially announced budget of April 10. Finally there is Quebec, which seems to be treated in a unique fashion. Quebec residents—certainly those resident in Quebec as of December 31, 1977—will be geeting a tax credit of up to $85 simply because they are residents of Quebec. We know that Caesar divided Gaul into three. Our emperor has divided Canada into three. Is this the way the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner) wins big for Alberta?

To support Bill C-56 would be to condone government incompetence. To facilitate passage of this legislation would be to aid and abet a Minister of Finance who is the most inept minister to hold that office in living memory.

Any member of this House who chooses to vote for Bill C-56 will contribute to divisive forces in this country and will seriously undermine a satisfactory working relationship between our federal and provincial levels of government. As it has been presented to us, this legislation contains insidious provisions which were not contained in the minister's budgetary statement of April 10. Indeed, they were never even thought of as of that date. These provisions, to which I will refer shortly, are so odious that we in the official opposition ought not, must not and will not vote at second reading to support them in their present form.

What other Minister of Finance or Prime Minister in Canadian history has ever been so inept? Within a six-week period the minister has taken an essentially good idea and mishandled it to the point where at least the majority of the nine provinces with which he had agreement now feel they have been double-crossed, while the tenth, as reflected in the Quebec National Assembly, which has voted unanimously, rejects the federal government's offer of $186 million to go to the residents of the province of Quebec. This government, frankly, cannot even give money away without causing dissension.

For example, when the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce was at a football game in Edmonton he was booed when he attempted to present a $1 million cheque to the Commonwealth Games people there. Now we have the spectacle of every member in a provincial legislature, Liberal, Union Nationale, Creditiste or what-have-you, voting unanimously to condemn the Trudeau-Chrétien approach with respect to giving funds to individual residents of Quebec.

Let there be no mistake, their opposition is a fundamental opposition. The federal government is wantonly trying to circumvent provincial jurisdiction in an approach which is designed to blackmail a provincial government into submission. That is hardly the recipe for federal-provincial relations. It is hardly the approach to ensuring national unity. The Minister of Finance has spoken about being proud to be a Canadian. I am proud to be a Canadian, and I believe the time has come when the divisive forces this government is letting loose should be ended so that we can all continue to be proud Canadians.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: I was somewhat surprised that in his remarks the minister reiterated many of the things he said on budget night. He attempted to rationalize his record, but in that context perhaps we should put a few things on the record.

Since taking office in September of last year the record of this Minister of Finance has been one of a continuous series of errors. The plunge of the dollar was accelerated by the minister's lack of comprehension of the magnitude of the problem, with the result that we lost twice as much in foreign exchange reserves as was needed, and now we end up seeking credit to the extent of some $7 billion from not only our own chartered banks but also from foreign banks and other lending institutions around the world.

Hon. members will recall that the minister took the concept of a $700 million income tax cut in his October 20 statement and dropped it in as a $100 per person tax credit to be felt in January and February, but in fact it went virtually unnoticed by most Canadians. We lost, in effect, $700 million in revenue, with virtually no fiscal stimulant to show for it. It was a maximum loss, speaking fiscally, for a minimum gain.

The minister stole the concept of an employment tax credit from this party and from others. He threw it into his October 20 statement but, unfortunately, he threw it in without knowing what he was talking about. For weeks we watched the government wince and agonize over what legislation it should put in place. Hon. members will recall that eventually a bill was introduced and passed, with our acquiescence, within one day; but then we found that it took the government such a long period of time to put the measure into operation that there was little benefit for the unemployed during the recent wintry months.

• (1732)

Perhaps the easiest thing for me to do in attempting to rebut some of the statements made by the Minister of Finance, concerning the desirable things he claims he has done in his budgets is simply to refer the House and the minister to the last two forecasts put out by Wood Gundy in Toronto. That firm forecasts regularly on a quarterly basis what it anticipates to be the Canadian economic growth in coming years. In October last year they put out a forecast, as well as one in April. It is sad reading. We received a comparison of what Wood Gundy felt would be the Canadian economic situation as of last October, and currently how they feel their forecasts have measured up. By coincidence, those months happen to be the months the Minister of Finance has been tending shop in Canada.

For example, last October Wood Gundy felt that in 1978 the unemployment level in Canada would be 8 per cent. Currently they are indicating that it will be 8.6 per cent. They feel that in 1979 our unemployment level will rise to 9.1 per cent. Only last October they anticipated that it would be 7.8 per cent. Last October they felt the real growth for 1978 would be 4 per cent. Now they have marked that down to 3.8 per cent. More importantly, they anticipated the growth in Canada in 1979 would be 4.1 per cent. Now they see it to be only 3.2 per cent. On all counts they see their October forecasts will not be met, and that our inflation levels in Canada will be higher in 1978 and 1979.

Page 3 of the Wood Gundy report indicates that 1979 will be an even slower year than 1978. Even assuming that the recent sales tax cuts are extended indefinitely, they are now forecasting a 3.8 per cent real growth this year, compared to 4 per cent in their earlier forecast. Also they are forecasting a 3.2 per cent real growth in 1979, compared to 4.1 per cent in their October forecast. Also Wood Gundy have indicated that their figures will be accompanied by an unemployment rate rising to over 9 per cent.

Do I have to say any more to show how inadequate the minister has been in respect of the budgets he has brought in? Not only are the forecasters downgrading the real growth and upgrading inflation and unemployment levels in this country, but we find the government has been systematically underestimating its expenditures and overestimating its revenues. The result is the $11.5 billion deficit we are now living with. Over 20 per cent of the government's total spending ends up in the form of debt.

The provisions of Bill C-56 relating to provincial sales tax reductions are poorly conceived, drafted and explained. I should like to make one thing clear. Bill C-56 is an all-inclusive bill. It gives legislative effect to various measures which were announced in the budget. Many of these measures are welcome. Certainly we in this party welcome them. We supported those measures in the budget debate, and we will continue to support them. Let there be no doubt: these measures are already in effect. They are in place.

In this respect, I should like to refer to page 60 of the budget speech presented by the Minister of Finance on April 10. The effective date for various budgetary measures appears on that page. The reason I dwell on this is that I noticed during question period today that the government is insinuating that if there is any extended debate on Bill C-56, certain budgetary measures will not become the law of the land. That is just not true. That has been spelled out in the minister's budgetary document.

I should like to make the record clear. For example, special allowances to permit deduction from taxable income of 50 per cent of the costs of increases in research and development activity became effective on January 1, 1978. The federal income tax rate reductions in the Northwest Territories to facilitate introduction of a territorial income tax with no tax increase for individuals or corporations became effective on January 1, 1978. Costs of machinery, equipment and other facilities for enhanced oil recovery systems became eligible to earn depletion allowances of $1 for each $2 on April 10, 1978. The limit on the deduction of depletion earned on certain expenditures on non-conventional oil projects increased to 50 per cent of total profit as of April 10, 1978.

Taxfree rollover provisions apply to incorporated family farms as of April 10, 1978. Plans established to upgrade heavy oil manufacturing and processing facilities were effective on April 10, 1978, budget night. Additional capital cost allowances provided on depreciable railway system assets acquired by railways before 1983 were effective on April 10, 1978. As far as the registered retirement savings plan provisions are concerned, according to the minister a special provision will allow RRSP owners reaching age 71 after April 10, 1978 to make use of the new options proposed.

Let there be absolutely no clouding of the issue. Those measures are in place. They are the law of the land. The passage or non-passage of Bill C-56 is immaterial to those provisions being felt by all Canadians. As we debate Bill C-56, I suggest we look at it for what it is. Not only will we be asked to judge whether the government has mishandled a basically good idea, that is, a provincial sales tax reduction concept, but whether they have mishandled it to a point where it is totally unacceptable in its present form as found in Bill C-56.

I should like to review exactly what the government has done in respect of this matter. As has been indicated, the idea was borrowed from one or more provincial governments. It was felt to be a good idea. The government never explained why it chose to go the provincial sales tax route as opposed to the federal sales tax route which could be used as a device to increase the buying power of Canadians. It never explained that because there were political advantages open to the governement which were not open if the federal sales tax approach was followed.

Unfortunately, a federal sales tax of 12 per cent on most items has been left intact. It is one of the most outdated taxes of any industrialized nation in the world. It is inflationary, regressive, and it hits the poor more than any other sector. Unfortunately, the minister did not choose the federal tax, which is entirely within his domain, in order to do whatever he felt was necessary in the form of an incentive to Canadians.

Today the Minister of Finance indicated that intensive negotiations with the provinces of Canada have taken place for three weeks. We understand that certain provinces asked for flexibility. They said, in effect, "If we go along with the provincial sales tax approach, will you give us some flexibility—that is, if we find, as in the case of Manitoba, we would like to divert some funds to some type of job creation in our province as opposed to exclusively lowering our sale tax?" For reasons that are not totally explained by the government it chose to be rigid and said no to Manitoba.

● (1742)

The government negotiated with the provinces on the basis of one agreement for everybody, and that one agreement would exclude Alberta. It would include nine prescribed provinces, and in effect the agreement would work very simply. The government would give up $100 of its tax revenue; that is very clear in Bill C-56 when we look at clause 30. The government would give up $100 of its tax revenue, and that was anticipated to be taken up. The difference was to be taken up, in the case of the eight prescribed provinces, by those provinces adopting companion legislation to increase provincial personal income taxes by $100.

As far as the income tax returns of the residents of the eight prescribed provinces are concerned, one can see that this was a rather simple thing. The federal government would give a credit of $100 and the provincial tax would go up by $100, so the tax simply shifted from being a federal tax to being a provincial tax. That put the provinces into a sufficient revenue position to reduce provincial sales taxes under the agreement this government had with the provinces.

If there was an overrun as far as provincial sales tax expenditure was concerned—that is, in addition to the actual tax revenue the federal government had given to the provinces—the provinces would be getting a consolidated revenue payment. On the other hand, if there was a deficiency it would be reversed and the federal government would get money back. That would be the case when an excess payment had been made in terms of aggregate personal income tax revenue given up by the federal government. In short, that was the working agreement.

The minister confused the issue today when he wrapped himself in the flag and started to talk about equalization problems, poor provinces and rich provinces. We all understand that to be the case, but we do have a provincial equalization agreement in this country. This is an entirely different matter. The significant thing is that we now have a situation in which, rather than having nine provinces accepting the approach the government outlined, we have only eight. The ninth province, being Quebec, said it did not like the terms laid down by the federal government and wanted the flexibility of reducing provincial sales tax in the form it had in mind.

Frankly, that has been a wise move. First of all, the sales tax was to be reduced by 100 per cent on certain specific items, and the specific items referred to are those that are sluggish in the province of Quebec. That is a smart move. It is a smart move to reduce the tax by 100 per cent rather than a few percentage points. The people understand a 100 per cent reduction much more than they would understand a reduction of from 6 per cent to 3 per cent, or whatever the case may be. Zeroing in on particularly sluggish industries was a good idea, and making this a program for a year was also a good idea. Clearly a one-year time frame did not suit this government, which was anticipating a spring or, certainly, an early fall election.

We are now faced with this problem of what to do when the minister brings in a budget without having an agreement with all the provinces, and subsequently finds he cannot make a satisfactory agreement so brings in Bill C-56, which really by-passes the government of the province of Quebec. It in effect puts into place an $85 payment for any resident of Quebec who lived there on December 31, 1977, providing he pays taxes. What an absolute affront to any provincial government. This in effect is saying that if the province does not join with the bilateral agreement this government will unilaterally go ahead and the province is on its own. If it wishes to increase its taxes, that is its business, but this government is going to make this credit available to its residents whether or not the province likes it.

It is most unfortunate in the context of how this deal has been put together that the government has been so insensitive. Realizing it made a mistake on budget night, surely the government should have hesitated before bringing in Bill C-56 until it had negotiated a more satisfactory arrangement with the province of Quebec.

If this government is now willing to listen to proposals from Quebec, why was it not willing to listen to those proposals before bringing in Bill C-56? Why are we faced with a piece of legislation that is so obviously not to the liking of not only the government of Quebec but of all members of the National Assembly of that province? This is why we feel we must oppose this bill at second reading. How can any member of this House support in principle legislation such as Bill C-56, when he knows it will be so divisive in the country if it ever becomes the law of the land?

If it becomes the law of the land will not the residents of Alberta be taking the right position in saying they should be included? If the government is shifting from an essentially sales tax related type of revenue sharing scheme to an income tax credit arrangement for at least one province, why should the province of Alberta not also be included? Certainly if I were a resident of Alberta I would find most objectionable the fact that, by being a resident of that province, I am deemed to have more wealth than those in other areas of the country and should receive absolutely no benefit. If I were a resident of Quebec I would be getting an income tax credit, or at least if I lived in that province as of December 31, 1977 and paid income tax. Surely the government has created another problem here, setting a precedent by what it has done for Quebec. It will be very difficult for this government to deny the residents of Alberta the same accommodation.

What this means is that more revenue will have to be found to be given back to the citizens of Alberta in order to allow them some equity in relation to what has taken place in Quebec. A colleague of mine suggests they do not care about Alberta. Certainly if one were to read Bill C-56 one would see that not only do they not care about Alberta, they are indifferent to that province.

An hon. Member: Read the bill.

Mr. Stevens: Some of those seals in the back rows on the Liberal side suggest we should read the bill. Clearly they have not read it or they would not be making such a comment.

This is the nub of the problem. Bill C-56 is an indication of the incompetent and inept handling of an arrangement by the federal government involving ten provinces that would have resulted in a provincial sales tax reduction for nine of those provinces. There is nothing wrong with the idea, but this government basically blew it.

• (1752)

In response to a question put earlier the minister said, "If you have a better system, we'll look at it." That seems to be his attitude. He is so over his head in this portfolio that he demonstrates it by seeking help constantly—"Tell me what to do." You cannot run an economy, Mr. Speaker, as this Minister of Finance is attempting to do on a touch and feel system. There has to be a change, or the forecast figures that I put on the record today will be still bleaker come September and October of this year. This country cannot stand the type of economic conditions it is being thrust into by an incompetent government such as we have had for over ten years.

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, given the importance of a budget debate, I wonder if this House would be in agreement at this point to calling it six o'clock.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Agreed and so ordered. It being six o'clock p.m., the House stands adjourned until tomorrow at two o'clock p.m., pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At six o'clock the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, May 18, 1978

The House met at 2 p.m.

● (1407)

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CONDEMNATION OF U.S.S.R. TRIAL AND SENTENCE OF YURI ORLOV—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a motion which I trust will receive the unanimous agreement of the House. I ask leave, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, to move a motion under Standing Order 43 which concerns the case of Yuri Orlov, the Russian physicist who has been tried and convicted in the Soviet Union for the so-called crime of forming a group to monitor Russia's human rights performance against the pledges made in the Helsinki agreement. I therefore move, seconded by the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen):

That this House deplores the trial and extremely severe sentence given Yuri Orlov by the Soviet Union for his activities with the Moscow-Helsinki group, activities which in Canada would be perfectly acceptable.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Presentation of such a motion for debate, pursuant to Standing Order 43, can be done only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

* * *

AGRICULTURE

BEEF STABILIZATION PAYMENT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. R. E. McKinley (Huron-Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. We were advised some months ago that a stabilization payment would be made to beef producers who marketed cattle for slaughter in the first quarter of 1977, the producers realizing that the Minister of Agriculture probably intended that this payment would be sent out during an election campaign. Now that there is no immediate election coming, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Wise):

That the Minister of Agriculture immediately announce the amount of the payment to be made and make provisions to get this payment into the producers' hands as soon as possible, because we are now well past the first quarter of 1978.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion, pursuant to Standing Order 43, requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

VETERANS AFFAIRS

CALL FOR REVIEW OF 48 PER CENT RULE ON WIDOWS' PENSIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, and seconded by the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes), I move:

That this House warmly welcomes last week's announcement concerning an increase in the basic rate of the war disability pension and now calls on the Minister of Veterans Affairs to expedite his review of the 48 per cent rule that applies to the pensions of the widows of veterans, it being the view of this House that where the veterans' disability pension was below 48 per cent there should be a prorata pension for his widow as a matter of right.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion, pursuant to Standing Order 43, requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

● (1412)

CANADA COUNCIL

GRANT TO FACTORY THEATRE LAB OF TORONTO—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent necessity concerning a matter I have raised several times recently in the House, namely, the giving of Canada Council grants by the Department of the Secretary of State to some very peculiar organizations. I refer specifically to a grant in the amount of $60,000 given to the Factory Theatre Lab of Toronto which has produced a play entitled "Winter Offensive".

I hope, Mr. Speaker, when I give the words of this motion they will not be offensive to anyone, because they are quoted from Hansard. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay):

Whereas the Secretary of State has made the shocking admission in an answer to my order paper question No. 1,168 that this play includes scenes showing a character smearing his face with human excrement, a wounded man's insides spilling out on the floor, and references to the "insatiable sexual urges and sadistic drives of Mrs. Adolf Eichmann", that the House deplores the minister's refusal to furnish full information to members of parliament on the decision-making process used by the Canada Council for the spending of public funds, and the House demands an immediate parliamentary investigation of the Canada Council.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for debate requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

EQUALITY OF PROVINCES IN CONFEDERATION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity pursuant to the terms of Standing Order 43. In light of the serious consequences the discussion on taxation has to the unity of this country, considering the federal government has grievously undermined equity and fairness by not bargaining in good faith with the provinces of Canada, and considering the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) is further balkanizing this country by speaking of the Canadian common market as though Canada were some loose conglomeration of sovereign nation states instead of one coherent sovereign entity, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie):

That this House affirm that Canada is a federal state comprising of a national government for all Canadians, and ten equal provincial partners.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

SHIPMENT OF GRAIN THROUGH CHURCHILL, MAN.—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Cecil Smith (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Now that grain shipments through Churchill and Prince Rupert have fallen even further behind, and in view of the fact that CIDA grain shipments are under the control of the Canadian Wheat Board and the port of Churchill is capable of handling an additional five million bushels of grain this season, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Whiteway):

That the government take immediate action to direct the Canadian Wheat Board to ship at least a minimum of five million bushels of CIDA grain through the port of Churchill this season.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for debate would require the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

FINANCE

SALES TAX—EFFECT ON PROVINCES OF DIFFERENT TREATMENT

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Prime Minister. Yesterday the Prime Minister stated that the same deal on tax room was being offered to all the provinces. I still question that, but the point I want to clarify now is this: will the Prime Minister not concede that the effect of this proposal will be that individuals in the province of Quebec will be affected in a much different way than individuals in the provinces which have agreed to an across-the-board reduction in sales tax, and that that effect will be a sort of reverse means test so that in the province of Quebec only those individuals who have an income high enough to pay income tax will benefit, whereas in the other provinces all purchasers of goods and services will benefit?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, with respect, the hon. lady is confusing two things: the federal action and the provincial response. In so far as the federal action is concerned, it is the same in all provinces which accepted the scheme and it is the same in Quebec. We are cutting taxes and making room so the provinces can increase their income tax. So, from our point of view it is the same in all provinces.

Obviously, what the provinces are delivering is different. Eight of the provinces have said, "Yes, we will agree. We will cut the sales tax across-the-board three points." One province has said, "No, we will not agree. We will cut them in the way we want." So to the extent that they have cut them differently, the hon. lady is right. Mr. Parizeau, the same minister who was so ardently supported by her colleagues on the other side, is responsible for this type of reverse discrimination.

• (1417)

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): The Prime Minister is once again using sophistry to cover the discrimination he practices against individuals in different parts of this country. Given that last night the House leader of the Liberal party in the national assembly, Gérard D. Lévesque, said over national radio, "No budget should have been tabled or no final proposal should have been tabled in the House of Commons until the government had made sure that all provincial governments were accepting the plan", will the Prime Minister explain why the federal government did not postpone bringing in its budget until after the budget of the province of Quebec had been brought down and the position of that government had been made clear so that we might have avoided this whole sorry mess?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I am disappointed in the comments of the hon. lady because she is usually intelligent and would not escape an answer by saying it is sophistry. If she feels that my reasoning is wrong, surely she should follow up by a supplementary. Even if it is not written for her, she should be able to think up one and demonstrate by a question why my answer was not correct. I still maintain that her complaint is one which results from the behaviour of the province of Quebec. As far as the federal government is concerned, we behaved in the same way with regard to all provinces.

In so far as the suggestion that we should have retarded the budget—

Mr. Malone: It was retarded.

Mr. Trudeau: The hon. member says we should have retarded the date of the budget. Under substantial pressure, for which the opposition took credit, we announced a budget date. This date was announced some two or three weeks in advance. Until the very eve of the budget the federal minister was consulting with all the provincial finance ministers. There were complaints, even by the New Democratic Party, that there had been too much consultation because there had been a leak, and as a result of this leak the Leader of the New Democratic Party—

Mr. Broadbent: Sophistry again.

Mr. Trudeau: Take it easy. This is what he said.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, they do not like to be reminded of their inconsequential actions. However, in this very House the Leader of the New Democratic Party moved that there had been a budget leak and that somehow we should be responsible. The leak came as a result of consultations. What we are now hearing is that we should have retarded the budget. Can you see the Minister of Finance getting up at eight o'clock on the Monday night of the budget to say, "Well, Mr. Parizeau, after three weeks, has not given me an answer, so we will have the budget some other day"? I doubt whether we would have had the support of the hon. lady if we had done that.

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): What the Prime Minister is now saying, really, is that a provincial government is being denied the right to make a decision in a field of provincial jurisdiction if that decision does not happen to conform to the dictates of the federal government.

I would like to put my final supplementary to the Minister of Finance. Will the Minister of Finance explain how he proposes to transfer to the province of Quebec the $40 million of tax room which is not being rebated to individual income taxpayers in that province? Will that transfer be by means of a cheque, a method which he rejected yesterday for the other $186 million, or will he perhaps be proceeding to deliver it to Mr. Parizeau in a brown paper bag?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would like to reply to the previous questions. I think that Mr. Parizeau came 48 hours later with a precise proposition that was completely different and unacceptable to the federal government and the finance ministers of this country who had accepted my proposition. I have not tried to blackmail them at all. I made a proposition. I said I would withdraw from the income tax field for them to come in. Mr. Parizeau, of course, did not want to come in. He would like me to send him a cheque.

However, in Quebec they have to collect their own money. He does not want now to collect his own income tax. I am reducing my tax and in Quebec I can only reduce it by rebating the tax to the taxpayers in Quebec. However, if Mr. Parizeau, because they have been collecting their own tax since 1954, wants to have the money, he can raise the difference. We said in a letter to Mr. Parizeau at the time of the counterproposal that for the part of the sales tax that he has conformed with the plan, we were willing to do so.

• (1422)

[Translation]

SALES TAX—INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT READY TO ACCEPT QUEBEC'S PROPOSAL

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Finance.

Considering that it is now obvious that implementing the reimbursement policy announced this week for Quebec would cost at least $3 million to the Canadian taxpayers and, considering that it has been announced in the Canadian press that another textile plant will be closed in Quebec, would the Minister of Finance and this government be now prepared to accept the sales tax policy presented by the Quebec legislature?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not see any relation between that problem and a textile plant closing in Quebec. In reply to the question which the hon. member is asking me, I will tell him that Mr. Parizeau stated today that he will have to spend money to collect his taxes. This is the argument which we have been putting forward since 1954. The fact that Quebec has its own revenue department compels them to pay for the duplication of that service. To avoid that, they should abolish their national revenue department and we would collect their income tax as we do for the other provinces and we are prepared to make them that proposal.

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question. It is obvious that the policy announced by the Quebec government will help the textile industry.

[English]

SALES TAX—REQUEST FOR WITHDRAWAL OF BILL C-56

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): My supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. Considering that during the last three days, especially since yesterday in spite of what the Prime Minister said in this House then, Canadians and provincial leaders from coast to coast have felt we now have one set of policies for Quebec and another for the rest of Canada, and considering that yesterday it was proven that the minister of finance for the province of Quebec objected clearly last March to accepting the proposals of the budget, for national unity as well as for economic reasons will the government now take Bill C-56 off the order paper and convene a federal-provincial meeting immediately to rectify this situation once and for all?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I would be interested in knowing why the hon. member says it is proven that Mr. Parizeau rejected this scheme, when he had repeatedly stated that he had not decided one way or another. Why would the hon. member smuggle that word in?

SALES TAX CUTS—EFFECT ON INDUSTRY

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): It is clear the Prime Minister's miasma is bothering him today, considering that yesterday he said in the House:

In the case of Quebec the sales tax has been cut in a different manner which seems to destroy the idea of a national common market and which seems to favour only jobs in the province of Quebec.

Is the Prime Minister aware that in almost all the sectors from which the Quebec sales tax has been removed, more goods are produced by other countries or by other provinces than are produced by Quebec?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The point I was making is made by the Parti Québécois itself and by its members. I have a letter here from one of the members supporting the PQ. This is the propaganda they are sending around. They are bragging about the way in which they cut taxes. Rather than do it as the other provinces did it, they did it in a way which would encourage Quebec industries, not Canadian industry.

• (1427)

[Translation]

Since the Quebec government wishes to encourage Quebec industries . . . we made this decision with the interests of Quebec and Quebeckers in mind, in order to protect our industries and consumers in the sectors where the needs of the people are greatest.

[English]

This may be a virtuous position for one who believes in provincial autonomy and even more in separation; but, once again, what the federal minister tried to do was put together a scheme which would apply across the country and which would not call for each province to protect its own industries as much as it could. That is why the scheme put forward by Mr. Parizeau was not put forward, as the federal minister says, during the discussions, because he knew full well that if he had said, "I will do this for four industries which are helpful to Quebeckers", Mr. McKeough of Ontario would have said, "I will have a selective tax cut, too, on things which are produced essentially in Ontario".

An hon. Member: Automobiles?

Mr. Trudeau: Automobiles; and British Columbia would have said, "We will do the same thing for industries which produce essentially in British Columbia". Hon. members opposite should understand that this would have been contrary to the interests of the whole nation, where the tax should apply equally to everyone.

Mr. Clark: Use your federal sales tax.

Mr. Trudeau: Once again, hon. members opposite think that Mr. Parizeau was right. If they think he was right, our answer is, why did he not make that suggestion when the discussions were going on directly for three weeks? The reason he did not was that he wanted to have a better deal for himself after the others had locked themselves in. I am surprised that hon. members opposite cannot yet understand this.

Mr. Clark: Why did you fall into the trap?

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I hope we on this side of the House are given equal time to reply to these speeches. I would ask the Prime Minister to answer the question. This is the first time I have ever heard him quoting a Parti Québécois source to support his argument.

Would the Prime Minister answer the question: it was put in straightforward terms. Is he aware that in most of the sectors where the Quebec government has cut the tax, the goods sold in that province are either produced in greater numbers outside Quebec in other provinces or in other countries and, if that is so, does that not make a complete mockery of the argument the Prime Minister has made in this House with whatever source of evidence, PQ or otherwise, he has used to support his argument?

Mr. Trudeau: No, Mr. Speaker, it does not. I recognize that some goods more than others are imported into Quebec, and I realize that Quebec could not conceivably cut the tax only on things which are produced only in Quebec. That is not the way this country operates. Quebec could have not selected, but it is clear that the intention was to select those areas which would help Quebec in particular.

Mr. Broadbent: It helps Ontario more.

Mr. Trudeau: I am admitting that they could not select those goods which are produced only in Quebec any more than, obviously, the maritimes could select goods which are produced only in the maritimes, because there are very few goods manufactured in the maritimes. However, it should be obvious even to hon. members opposite—and I refer to the letter I was quoting and, indeed, to Mr. Parizeau's own arguments—that they tried to select those industries which would help Quebeckers rather than the Canadian common market.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the absurdity of the Prime Minister's arguments is revealing. For example, of all the cars purchased in Ontario, only one-fifth are produced in that province. I ask the Prime Minister to check with his colleague the Minister of Finance and get him to produce for his benefit, and then to table for all members of the House, an assessment which has been done by the federal Department of Finance on Mr. Parizeau's proposals. When he does that, will he make a statement on the fact that that assessment done by the federal Department of Finance reaches the conclusion, both in terms of equity and of job creation on a national basis, that Mr. Parizeau's proposal was better than that presented by the Government of Canada?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I cannot agree with the premises of the question and, obviously, neither could the treasurer of Ontario. When he cut the tax on automobiles in the province of Ontario a year or two ago, he was obviously trying to help the auto industry in Ontario. The hon. member should know a little bit about that. He was not saying, "I am not going to cut the tax on automobiles because we also import"—

● (1432)

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: Listen to the answer and maybe you will understand it. He was not saying, "I am not going to cut the tax on automobiles because we import automobiles in Ontario". He was saying, "This is my way of helping the automobile industry in Ontario". He was not trying to help the Japanese or the Swedes; he was trying to help the Ontario automobile producers. I think the hon. member should make a study of that, and he might understand it.

[Translation]

TRANSPORT

TRANSFER OF CERTAIN WHARVES ALONG ST. LAWRENCE RIVER—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport.

In view of the fact that the Minister of Finance indicated yesterday in his very elaborate speech that his administrative decisions always take into account the fact that Quebec is still part of Confederation, and I fully agree with that, could the Minister of Transport advise the House whether the negotiations between Ottawa and Quebec City concerning the transfer of certain wharves along the St. Lawrence River have progressed over the last months, or whether they have bogged down because of the discussions on the notorious sales tax issue? If negotiations are still going on, could the minister indicate what stage they have reached and whether we can at last expect to find a solution to this problem?

[English]

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I can say that very little progress is being made, but this is certainly not related to any recent event: it has been the state of affairs for some time. In the meantime, however, we have spent money on the improvement of a variety of wharves within our jurisdiction for the benefit of the areas concerned.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): I would like to ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

I thank the minister for his answer. I know that some communication wharves have been improved. My supplementary question is this: considering that residents of Île aux Grues, which is located in the riding of Bellechasse, the most beautiful in Canada, are faced with a difficult situation because of a lack of communications with the main land and that there seems to be problems in negotiating an agreement on the improvements to be made to the wharf of Île aux Grues, would the minister tell the House whether or not his officials are really working hard to resolve this problem as quickly as possible? I suggest that in doing so he would help eliminate problems elsewhere in the province of Quebec because, all told, the entire province is conscious of this situation.

[English]

Mr. Lang: I will certainly ask my officials for a report on that particular case.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. In view of the fact that the Department of Public Works—I see that the minister has left the House. I will wait to ask him my question on some other occasion.

Oral Questions

[English]

FINANCE

SALES TAX—REASON FOR NOT ACCEPTING MANITOBA'S PROPOSAL TO CREATE JOBS

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Notwithstanding the fact that Manitoba is now bound and committed to going along with the sales tax proposal, could the minister explain why he, according to his own statements in the House yesterday, was willing to accept counterproposals from British Columbia and Saskatchewan and to discuss these proposals with other provinces, while he rules out the Manitoba proposal of applying part of the so-called tax room for job creation?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it is very simple. I had talked with all the ministers about the concept that we were discussing and I had their views. In fact, the last minister to whom I talked was the minister of finance of Manitoba when I came back from my trip out west. After the discussions I had with the other ministers I realized that the proposal, if applied, would not have been a successful one and I said to them that it was outside the proposition I was making, which was to stimulate the economy through the sales tax, which is not what Manitoba's proposal would accomplish.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, I have a straightforward question for the minister. Did the minister, in fact, take the Manitoba proposal on tax room regarding job creation to the other provinces for consultation, or did he reject the Manitoba proposal out of hand, without any consultation?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, my attempt was to induce all the provinces to agree to cut sales taxes altogether. Of course, the proposition for job creation was outside the mandate I had to discuss with the provinces. I discussed its pros and cons with the ministers, and I told the Manitoba minister on the spot that I did not think his proposal was relevant to the proposition I was making and I could not accept it. I was already well aware of the views of the ministers on other aspects which had been ruled unacceptable.

Mr. Clark: Double-standard.

* * *

NATIONAL REVENUE

POLITICAL ACTIVITIES OF CHARITABLE ORGANIZATIONS

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare in her capacity as Acting Minister of National Revenue. Yesterday, in the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, the Minister of National Revenue issued a statement supposedly clarifying the government's position on the withdrawn circular on regulations regarding political activities of charitable organizations. But the minister has only confounded and confused the issue.

[Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse).]

I ask the acting minister whether it is the government's position that if a registered charitable organization in Canada, such as one of the churches, engages in a peaceful demonstration which is a political activity, as is their democratic right, that church or organization, under those circumstances, would be in violation of the regulations and would have its tax status withdrawn.

Hon. Monique Bégin (Acting Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, we do not yet know if that specific type of activity would be assessed as conforming to the law or as outside the act. I hope the hon. member is not trying to play one minister against another because one of them sits in the other place and the other is a member of the House. I will want to see the record of the committee discussions which took place. What I said in the House is that circular 78-3 was withdrawn and is being studied to define what democratic political activities are permitted under the Income Tax Act.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, unfortunately, I do not have the right to question in the House the Minister of National Revenue; I only have the acting minister. I am not trying to put words in her mouth; I merely want to ask her if it is the government's position, as stated yesterday in the committee by the Minister of National Revenue and the Deputy Minister of National Revenue, that if a charitable organization such as a church engages in peaceful demonstrations on Parliament Hill, at Queen's Park or at Quebec City, for any cause such as pro-life, anti-abortion or capital punishment, this activity would be designated as a political activity and it would lose its tax exempt status.

If that is the position of the government as stated by the minister, I ask the acting minister, on behalf of all reasonable Canadians, whether that ridiculous regulation will be withdrawn forthwith.

[Translation]

Miss Bégin: I will attempt to answer in French this time, Mr. Speaker. Circular 78-3 has been withdrawn to give the parties involved a chance to make an in-depth study of political activities which will be acceptable with respect to charitable donations under the Income Tax Act. The hon. member is now referring to a discussion between members of a House committee, between the minister and his deputy minister where people were evidently examining certain types of activities. That is now under study and it is not up to me to answer now in the House. The moment the new circular is ready, it will be tabled and circulated as are other circulars of the Department of National Revenue.

● (1442)

[English]

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, the regulations in the circular may have been withdrawn, but as the minister himself stated, the intent obviously has not been withdrawn. I quote from the statement the minister made yesterday in the committee. He said:

—we have to draw the line somewhere and that it has been drawn at highly organized attempts to influence a government for a purpose "particular to the organization".

I ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare, if that is the policy of the government, will the government review that policy with a view to withdrawing it, or at least issue further clarification so that churches and legitimate organizations which enjoy tax exemption as charitable organizations will know where they stand?

Miss Bégin: Mr. Speaker, I was not present at that committee meeting yesterday, and for the third time I would ask that I be given an opportunity to read the minister's remarks. Then perhaps I will be able to answer the question.

* * *

TRANSPORT

BARRINGTON, N.S.—SONIC BOOMS CAUSED BY JET OVERFLIGHTS

Miss Coline Campbell (South Western Nova): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Have the minister's officials made him aware of the fact that people in the Barrington area of Nova Scotia are still experiencing severe shockwaves or sonic booms due to Concorde flights, and that an increase in supersonic flights to John F. Kennedy airport is being contemplated? If that is the case, is the minister prepared to discuss the situation with his counterpart in the United States, with a view to alleviating the problem in South Western Nova?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am aware of the problem and, indeed, my officials have examined the problem of sonic booms. At our request, the flightways of the Concorde have been moved a number of miles farther away from the coastal area. That, however, has not stopped the problem. In addition, it appears that some of the booms may be caused by a source other than the Concorde, and we are not exactly sure what that is. We have on its way, thanks to a loan from the American authorities, some sensitive equipment which may help us track the source of the particular booms still being experienced.

* * *

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

CRITERIA USED IN CALLING FOR TENDERS

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Supply and Services: concerns the questionable tendering practices of this government. The Canadian Association of Data Processing Service Organizations has charged that more than $2 million in government contracts was awarded to a Quebec-based computer firm, not because it submitted the lowest bid but, rather, in the words of the Minister of Supply and Services, because of "socio economic considerations."

In view of this, I would ask the minister why arbitrary criteria such as "socio economic considerations" have replaced the bidding procedure as the determining factor in awarding government contracts for computer-related work.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member starts off with an unfounded premise. In fact, the contracts were awarded after public calls for tenders were issued, either to the firm in question or to other firms across Canada. As for the contract mentioned in the Ottawa Citizen article, I want to reassure the hon. member that in this case three companies submitted the same bid, that they were all highly qualified to carry out the contract, and that in the end it was decided to award the contract to IST, a Quebec firm.

It is normal that we should try to even out government purchases in the country. I have sometimes tried to favour the western provinces, sometimes the maritimes, and in this particular case I favoured a Quebec firm. One must recall that in 1977-78, 78 per cent of the electronic data processing contracts were awarded to Ontario companies. I think it is fair and just that we should try to give other companies a reasonable share of the market when they are qualified, and that is what happened.

[English]

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that computer firms spend between $20,000 and $60,000 on their bids on government tenders, and in view of the fact that "socio economic considerations", which is apparently a new terminology for "patronage", seem to have compelled the minister to grant the contracts to the Quebec firm despite lower bids from other firms, will the minister be kind enough to advise the non-Quebec firms to refrain from bidding, thus saving them a lot of money, since they stand no chance of being successful in their bids?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Yorkton-Melville.

* * *

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

DISTRIBUTION OF POTENTIALLY DANGEROUS FEEDING BOTTLES

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. I ask the minister whether he is aware that a gift pack which is given out by most hospitals to new mothers when they leave hospital contains a glass bottle which the three companies that produce the bottle say is potentially dangerous because it is made of regular glass and tends to fragment when heated or sterilized or has warm formula put in it, thus being dangerous in that the infant might be consuming glass on drinking the formula or milk? Is the minister aware of that and, if so, what is he going to do about it?

I am aware, Mr. Speaker, that the hazardous products branch yesterday, acting on information which we originally gave them, sent a telex to each of the companies expressing concern. I would like to know if the minister is going to do more than just express concern, because this may be a serious health hazard for infants.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we are aware of this situation. The information we now have indicates that these bottles should not be re-used. Our department will be working with the manufacturers of these bottles and other feeding systems to ensure that the hazards are clearly declared on the package and that other measures are taken to prevent their misuse.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I have with me a letter from Ross Laboratories which reads in part:

They are designed to be used only once and then should be discarded.

They are made of regular glass which has a low resistance to heat shock.

From our survey, we found that many mothers and some hospitals use these bottles more than once. I ask the minister whether he will go further and ban this gift pack altogether from hospitals.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is correct; the bottles should be used only once. But whether we should go as far as banning the gift packs has not been considered. However, we will look into that question.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs would consult his colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, about the nutritional value of the other contents of the gift pack and ask whether she thinks it is wise that hospitals should be promoting baby foods such as this, which is really junk food, rather than promoting babies being fed in the natural way, which is breast feeding.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I am not in a position to make a judgment about the nutritional value of the pack in comparison with breast feeding, but I would be pleased to consult my hon. colleague about this.

* * *

FISHERIES

LICENSING OF FREEZER TRAWLERS ON ATLANTIC COAST

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment. In view of the fact that the Minister of Fisheries has now backed down from his arbitrary regulations as they apply to the scallop fishermen of Nova Scotia, and in view of the fact that a golden opportunity now exists in Atlantic Canada for catching under-utilized species such as silver hake, capelin, squid, offshore mackerel and grenadier, as stated by the processors of some 16 major companies in Nova Scotia, where they say they are convinced of the viability of freezer trawlers which they are prepared to lease or buy without Ottawa's assistance, is the minister prepared to listen to the voice of the people within the industry and permit the licensing of a limited number of freezer trawlers as a start toward establishing a new segment of the fishing industry in Atlantic Canada?

[Mr. Nystrom.]

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the consultation which took place between the offshore and the inshore fishermen at which they expressed readiness to look at a new regime for the Georges Bank should not be seen as a back down, but should simply be seen as an improvement and an acceptance on the part of the Bay of Fundy fleet to keep the catch level where it was in the past and not to keep increasing it.

I will be looking at the recommendations of the fishermen, and if they are acceptable I will, of course, approve them, because it is my constant approach that the fishermen themselves should have a strong voice in regulating their own fishery.

As for the point made by the hon. member, I would remind him that I do not have on my desk applications for freezer trawler licences which do not contain clauses which would allow these vessels to have access to cod, flounder or redfish. If it is only for silver hake, round-nosed grenadier and the underutilized species, my door is open.

● (1452)

Mr. Crouse: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In light of the charges that have been made about lack of consultation among the minister, the provincial ministers and the industry, would the minister agree to consult the representatives of the major processors in Nova Scotia so that he will at least be informed of their views as they apply to establishing a new industry in Atlantic Canada?

Mr. LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, the very day last week when the hon. member was participating in a special debate on the absence of consultation was the day that the offshore committee on groundfish in the Atlantic, which would cover the type of subject the hon. member talks about, was meeting. If my memory serves me correctly, it met for two days in Halifax. The provinces, the industry, the fishermen and the departments of fisheries are fully represented on that committee.

* * *

INDIAN AFFAIRS

FISH LAKE, B.C.—CONTRACT WITH TOOSEY INDIAN BAND

Mr. Jack Pearsall (Coast Chilcotin): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, but in his absence I will direct it to his parliamentary secretary. I have been advised that a contract entered into by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and the Toosey Indian Band in the Chilcotin part of my riding has fallen through.

Mr. Speaker, I ask the parliamentary secretary if he can explain to me why the Fish Lake complex has been delayed for many months, when the Toosey Indian council met with me and Indian Affairs officials here in Ottawa and to my knowledge a bona fide contract was agreed to.

Mr. Ross Milne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, it is true that the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development agreed to transfer the complex of buildings at Fish Lake and gave the band the assurance it would be done very quickly. On looking into it, however, and on proceeding with the transfer we came across some legal complexities that took a great deal of time to work out. In addition, it was necessary to negotiate an agreement between two departments.

I apologize to the hon. member and, through him, to the band for the delay. It was not in keeping with the undertaking given two or three months ago, and we will make every effort to have things completed by June 1.

* * *

FINANCE

SALES TAX—NEWFOUNDLAND PROPOSALS

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. The minister has said that he consulted the provinces before April 10 on his sales tax scheme, before he took his swan dive, in the sense that he sought information or advice from the provinces on that scheme.

As it relates to the province of Newfoundland, did the minister of finance of that province suggest that the reduction should be for a longer period than six months on the sales tax, and how long did it take the minister to think about that and reject the advice?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the ministers of finance made all kinds of suggestions during the negotiations and the minister of finance of Newfoundland, along with others, suggested the possibility of extending the period. Of course, as we pay the whole amount in the case of the maritimes, they would have preferred that the cut be in effect for more than six months. On the other hand, other ministers had to contribute. Besides, under the circumstances, the federal treasury could not apply this measure for more than six months.

[English]

Mr. Crosbie: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the minister saying that because the four Atlantic provinces were offered 100 per cent compensation by the federal government, anything they had to suggest or say was not taken into consideration? Is that the kind of consultation there is with the economically depressed provinces in this country, that any views they have are to be ignored because they are not making their own contribution? Is that the kind of consultation that went on?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, that is absolutely not what we said. They made the suggestion. I have looked into that. I have only to cite the minister of finance of Ontario who was asked the same question after the budget and said he was not willing to go for more than six months. For one reason, he could not afford it.

SALES TAX—STATEMENT OF QUEBEC MINISTER OF FINANCE ON ACCEPTANCE OF PROPOSALS

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. The minister will have noted news reports from Quebec by Canadian Press which quote Mr. Parizeau as saying:

> I repeat that I never accepted the Chrétien plan for sales taxes; that he knew of it at that time and that he was told so again not on the eve but the very afternoon that he tabled his plan in the House.

Is it the position of the Government of Canada that Mr. Parizeau, in making that statement was, if I may employ this phrase, "deliberately misleading" the National Assembly?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think if he said he has not accepted the plan, of course he has not accepted the plan. He said, "I will give you the answer after the budget" and he gave me the answer 48 hours later. What I have said is that he never rejected or accepted definitively the plans before the budget. In fact, he said so himself when he said to me—and I put it in my speech—that I was to receive an answer from him in the next few days. If he had already given me the answer, why would he have asked for two more days before replying?

Mr. Clark: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Coming back to the mistake on the part of the minister which caused this problem, why did the Minister of Finance proceed with a proposal that involved the movement of the Government of Canada into the jurisdiction of the province of Quebec without the agreement of the province of Quebec to that interference?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, what we always said and always affirmed is that we were to cut our income tax and vacate the field so that the provincial government could move in. Mr. Parizeau did not want to say yes or no before that. He knew what was happening in other provinces. I had to proceed with my budget. The eight other ministers whom I consulted were in agreement with that scheme and had the approval of their cabinets. Mr. Parizeau did not want to go ahead. But I had a budget and I had to proceed with it, and that is exactly what I did.

Mr. Clark: A final supplementary question. Does the minister not recognize that he could have avoided all this difficulty, all this disruption in the nation, all this discord in the Liberal party in the province of Quebec, had he simply taken the precaution of ensuring that before the Government of Canada acted on a means to invade a provincial jurisdiction, it had the absolute, firm and concrete agreement of all the provinces?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I gave enough notice to the government of Quebec of our plans. We were not interfering in provincial fields; we were offering them compensation. We have the right to do what we want with our taxes, because that is our jurisdiction. What we are doing is reducing the taxes in Quebec at this time; we are reducing the income tax in Quebec as we have in other provinces. If Mr. Parizeau wants to get the money back, he can raise his taxes, as all the other treasurers did and as I did when I introduced my budget.

* * *

TRANSPORT

SLOW MOVEMENT OF GRAIN THROUGH VANCOUVER AND PRINCE RUPERT, B.C.

Mr. Arnold Malone (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. I should like to ask him if he would reverse his position of blaming the shipping companies for the slowdown in the movement of grain from the port of Vancouver and the port of Prince Rupert, in view of the fact that J.S. MacInnes, president of the Vancouver-based North Pacific Shipping Company, says there is clearly poor communication between ships coming from China and that the fault lies in the fact that there is not enough grain in the grain elevators at those ports.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, once again the hon. member made a false statement in his opening remarks. I did not say that it was the ships and only the ships, but I did indicate that part of our problem with the delay on the west coast was the delay in ship arrivals during December and into January. I have the evidence of the Canadian Wheat Board's telegram in that regard.

Subsequent to that time, the fact that we had a record program, a very, very full program under way meant that it would be very difficult to catch up in the short period of time. In addition to that, we had great difficulties on the prairies with snowfalls, particularly as far as Canadian Pacific lines were concerned. We had some bridge outages which interfered with ordinary performance and stopped us catching up faster.

Mr. Malone: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. If the minister is taking the position that the fault is not with the ships, how can he justify the 13 ships that are waiting, costing some $4,000 per day in demurrage charges, and the fact that berths in the ports of Vancouver and Prince Rupert are one-third empty and lack of certain grades of grain for shipment is causing this? What steps is the minister taking to rectify the movement of grain from the prairies to the ports so that these ships can be filled?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, any precise figure on demurrage is completely imaginary; the hon. member knows that. The position I am taking is that without doubt the Canadian Wheat Board is doing the best job possible to encourage the right kind of grain to be in Vancouver at the time the ships arrive.

The railways have been trying to put additional railway cars into the movement. I am not satisfied with their performance in total, but I recognize they are under severe pressure. This year, for instance, there is a great movement of potash; the usual movement of cars from potash to grain may not occur, so our difficulties will continue. It is important to recognize that this is all happening in the face of moving probably a record volume of grain out of the country in the course of this year.

* * *

POINT OF ORDER

MR. STEVENS—BILL C-56

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Yesterday the hon. member for York-Simcoe, by way of a point of order, raised a concern about the relationship between the present Bill C-56 and the ways and means motion which preceded it. We have given the matter very careful and extensive study. I regret at the moment that I am unable to finalize the ruling on the point of order. It has raised a number of considerations.

● (1502)

I do not think there is much difficulty in the relationship between the ways and means motion and the measure, since the measure does not propose a tax increase but a tax reduction, and the question is whether a ways and means motion is in fact required. Therefore, the whole general relationship between the two has brought into focus a matter which requires considerable study. We are doing that. I want to assure the House that we worked at it all morning. However, it will require more time before we can finalize it. I will try to do it as expeditiously as possible. If I do not do it later this day I would indicate as soon as possible to the House when I will do it, probably by tomorrow at noon.

* * *

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Could I ask the government House leader the usual business question? Perhaps I may preface it with this remark. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in his press conference last week indicated that it was his expectation that parliament would be adjourning, or this part of the parliamentary session would end, on June 30. This was either his expectation or his hope. I assume that he was not just speaking for himself but on behalf of the government. Given that situation, and given the legislative program which is at least potentially before us on the order paper, is the minister in a position, on behalf of the government, to indicate to us if that expectation is to be met? Specifically, what pieces of legislation would the government like to see cleared from the House by June 30 which was the Prime Minister's expected date?

While he is on his feet and answering the question, could he deal with the veterans legislation promised in the speech of the hon. Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald) which we have undertaken to deal with expeditiously, and would it be possible for him to designate next Tuesday as an allotted day in accordance with our understanding?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, yes, I will designate Tuesday next as an opposition day.

In reply to the questions raised by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker), I would say it is certainly my objective to have this session adjourned or prorogued by the end of June, not later than that. As the hon. member knows, there are a great number of bills on the order paper. Even an optimist like myself would hardly hope that the House would deal with them all before the end of June. Certainly I would want to deal with the income tax bill and the customs tariff bill, both emanating from the budget. There are some bills in committee to which I attach priority; the bill to provide additional funds for the Export Development Corporation is important. The bill relating to language of trial is important. Of course I have my eye on Bill C-28, relating to the Public Service Staff Relations Act. Whether it is realistic to suggest it could be completed in all its stages before the end of June is a matter of question. That is another bill to which I attach considerable priority.

I can add other bills. But these are among the bills with which I would like to have dealt. However, it would all depend on how long the House will take dealing with the income tax bill and the customs tariff bill, and as well there is the considerable number of allotted days which have to be dealt with before the end of June.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the minister knows that there are a certain number of opposition or allotted days which are provided by standing order. There is nothing very much we can do with that. If we subtract them from the total number of parliamentary days available up to the end of June, it leaves less than 20 government days. It is useless for us to talk about a long list of legislation on the order paper.

Maybe the government House leader would like to approach it from the point of view of the bills that are not essential. I do not know. But given that expectation by the Prime Minister,—and he may not be able to do it today,—of June 30, I think the government House leader owes the House a definite statement on what legislation is considered essential by June 30 if the House is to meet the Prime Minister's date of expectation.

If there is any new legislation to go on the order paper, aside from the Bank Act which appears there today and which is an extensive piece of legislation which I do not think could be dealt with reasonably by that time, I think we should know that. If there is none, what legislation precisely does the government have to have? It would be nice to have a definite answer to that question at this time since the Prime Minister has expressed a definite desire on behalf of the government, I presume, to be out by June 30.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I believe the request made by the hon. member is an understandable and justified one. I have attempted to provide my list at this stage which contains the budget bills, the language of trial and the Export Development Corporation bills. I have mentioned the difficulties we would experience in trying to get Bill C-28 before the House, to which I attach considerable priority. There is a measure relating to the veterans pension which has to be brought in and which, I understand, would be passed quickly. I may have another measure relating to social welfare that might be passed quickly, also in conjunction with the disability pension. That would be a matter for consultation with party representatives. That is my list.

There may be other measures that will come in. When they do, I will have to come to the House and say, "This is an item I would like to get through before the end of June." Certainly the objective is to terminate the session by the end of June. I understand the difficulties, but I cannot go beyond what I have said today, which is a reasonably candid explanation of where I think I am going.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I confirm what is already realized, that any attempt to proceed with Bill C-28 would play havoc with any adjournment by the end of June. May I thank the minister for his assurance that the bill regarding the basic rate of the war disability pension will be introduced. So far as we are concerned we stand by our earlier commitment to deal with that bill very quickly.

I have one other question which is a repetition of a question asked a week or so ago: will there be a bill to establish the department of fisheries and oceans separate from the Department of the Environment before the end of June?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, there very well may be, but I cannot be absolutely certain today. I believe that if we get an understanding to do it quickly it may be possible for me to bring in that bill. There has been a severance within the department and a general agreement on the creation of a single department of fisheries which has been partially achieved by order in council. I believe the final touch has to be provided through legislation. I will try to get a definite answer for the hon. member, and tell him as soon as possible.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, perhaps we could have consultation on these matters very soon.

• (1512)

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, on the point of order, I should like to say that as far as our party is concerned, we have always felt that we should co-operate as much as possible with the government in the introduction and adoption of priority bills.

We have also repeatedly expressed the opinion that we should plan our sessions, set both the starting and closing dates, in order to enable the members, which I think is quite legitimate, to spend some time with their families throughout the year. We have suggested it in the past and I do so again: we should try as much as possible to plan our work so that it fits in with the school year.

To my mind, the government should make an effort towards that aim and parties could agree amongst themselves about programming our work for the session in that way. Mr. Speaker, I take this opportunity to bring up again a very interesting suggestion that would spare us a considerable waste of time in our work, that is, that general elections be held on a set date. I draw the attention of the Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) on that point, so that we might study it very seriously in every party. We are all here to manage as best we can the business of this country, and the suspense that always accompanies the possibility of a general election always plays havoc with the normal course of our work. I feel that we should, like intelligent people, reflect on those two matters: namely, a set date for general elections, and set dates for our sessions. If we could agree on them like intelligent people, we would give the country, I am sure, a more efficient administration, and the people would be very pleased with our decisions.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[Translation]

BANKS AND BANKING LAW REVISION ACT, 1978

MEASURE RESPECTING BANKING

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-57, to revise the Bank Act, to amend the Quebec Savings Banks Act and the Bank of Canada Act, to establish the Canadian Payments Association and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

* * *

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: 467, 1,304 and 1,469.

[Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse).]

I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

[Text]

QUEBEC ELECTRONICIANS ASSOCIATION

Question No. 467—Mr. Schellenberger:

1. Has the government awarded financial assistance to the Quebec Electronicians Association in the past ten years and, if so (a) in which years were funds awarded (b) for what reason (c) what was the amount awarded in each year (d) to whom was the money paid (e) under what programme was the money awarded and what is the criteria for eligibility?

2. Is the government presently involved in allocating funds to the Quebec Electronicians Association and, if so (a) for what reason (b) in what amount?

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of Communications, Industry, Trade and Commerce, Labour and Science and Technology as follows: no.

ARSENIC POLLUTION

Question No. 1,304—Mr. Leggatt:

Are steps being taken by the Department of Fisheries and the Environment and/or the Department of National Health and Welfare to mitigate the problem concerning the effects of arsenic pollution on human hearing and, if so, what are such steps?

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): In so far as the Department of National Health and Welfare is concerned: the Department of National Health and Welfare does not consider the effect of arsenic pollution on human hearing to be of such significance as to warrant an investigation at the present time. In so far as the Department of Fisheries and the Environment is concerned: no.

NEW HORIZONS PROGRAM

Question No. 1,469—Mr. Allard:

1. Since the implementation of the New Horizons Programme, did the government allocate money to the Constituency of Rimouski and, if so, in what amount?

2. For each project accepted, what was the (a) name of the project (b) amount allocated (c) year of acceptance (d) name of the municipality involved (e) number of jobs created?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Yes.

List of New Horizons Projects
Approved in the Constituency of Rimouski, Quebec

Project No.	Name of Organization	$ Amount
1972-1973
	Nil
1973-1974
4-00314	Les Retraités à l'Action, Rimouski	$ 15,317
386	Le groupe des Aînés de St-Anaclet, St-Anaclet	1,226
481	Confort et Détente à l'Âge d'Or, Sayabec	3,873
502	Club d'Âge d'Or, Ste-Angèle de Mérici	1,075
	Total	$21,491

List of New Horizons Projects
Approved in the Constituency of Rimouski, Quebec

Project No.	Name of Organization	$ Amount
1974-1975
4-00655	Club de l'Âge d'Or du Bic, Bic	$ 5,200
885	"Les loisirs, les bons amis", St-François-Xavier-les-Hauteurs	1,856
892	Club de l'Âge d'Or St-Yves, Rimouski Est	4,400
992	Les Blés d'Or de la Météo, St-Octave-de-Métis	2,858
1005	Les Dynamiques du Foyer de Rimouski, Rimouski Ouest	3,118
1350	Club de l'Âge d'Or "La belle Équipe", St-Donat	3,594
1360	Conseil Régional de l'Âge d'Or, Rimouski	3,044
1401	Club "Âge d'Or" St-Cléophas, St-Cléophas	2,175
	Total	$26,245
1975-1976
4-01082	Les Aînés de Ste-Odile, Rimouski	$ 8,475
1121	Club de l'Âge d'Or "du Bonheur", St-Noël	3,040
1222	L'Âge d'Or de Luceville, Luceville	4,615
1433	Club de l'Âge d'Or, Sayabec	4,582
1437	Club de l'Âge d'Or, St-Valérien	4,785
1545	Club d'Âge d'Or St-Gabriel, St-Gabriel	5,175
1558	Club de l'Âge d'Or de Ste-Angèle de Mérici, Ste-Angèle de Mérici	1,019
1564	Les Personnes du Troisième Âge, Mont-Joli	2,202
1620	Cercle d'Âge d'Or de l'Amitié, Rimouski	6,154
	Total	$40,047
1976-1977
4-01653	Le Club de l'Âge d'Or de Price Enrg., Price	$ 1,732
1669	L'Association de l'Âge d'Or de la Paroisse de St-Rémi de Métis Inc., Price	2,935
1703	Club de l'Âge d'Or St-Moïse, St-Moïse	4,464
1836	L'Âge d'Or de Pointe-aux-Pères, Pointe-aux-Pères	4,699
1841	Club de l'Âge d'Or St-Pierre-du-Lac, Val-Brillant	5,899
1978	Le Club de l'Âge d'Or, La Rédemption	3,494
2046	Âge d'Or de Ste-Irène, Ste-Irène	4,357
2108	Les Vrais Amis, Rimouski	4,069
2157	Les Blés d'Or de la Métis, St-Octave de Métis	2,199
2287	Club de l'Âge d'Or, Rimouski	6,373
2311	Le Club de l'Âge d'Or de St-Charles-Garnier, St-Charles-Garnier	7,318
	Total	$47,539
1977-1978
4-02387	L'Âge d'Or de Luceville, Luceville	$ 4,297
2482	Club de l'Âge d'Or de Sainte-Agnès, Rimouski	8,160
2555	Le "Club de l'Amitié" Ste-Blandine, Ste-Blandine	8,015
2560	Club de l'Âge d'Or St-Germain de Rimouski Inc., Rimouski	5,400
2595	Club de l'Âge d'Or de Les Hauteurs, Les Hauteurs	2,920
2636	Le Club de l'Âge d'Or de Bic, Bic	1,360
2686	L'Association de l'Âge d'Or de la paroisse St-Rémi de Métis Inc., Price	9,405
2695	Aînés de Ste-Odile, Rimouski	5,958
2699	Club Âge d'Or "La belle Équipe", St-Donat	2,622
2804	Club de l'Âge d'Or, St-Gabriel	5,843
	Total	$53,980

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

* * *

POINT OF ORDER

MR. ELZINGA—DELAY IN ANSWERING QUESTION NO. 423

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order with regard to a question I have on the order paper, No. 423. It has been on throughout this entire session and was on the order paper in the previous session. I wonder if I might get a commitment to have an answer.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

INCOME TAX ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed, from Wednesday, May 17, consideration of the motion of Mr. Chrétien that Bill C-56, to amend the statute law relating to income tax and to authorize payments related to provincial sales tax reductions, be read the second time and referred to committee of the whole.

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, the budget bill that we are debating in the House today emanates, as all members know, from the budget presented to the House about a month ago. The central purpose of the budget, according to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien), was to do something about the deplorable circumstance in which we as a people find ourselves, almost half way through 1978, with more than one million unemployed. Therefore the central purpose was to generate employment. The central provision of the bill is to do this by means of a sales tax cut at the provincial level, provided by the provinces, which in turn are to be reimbursed by the federal government.

At the time this budget was introduced our response was that, at best, this was a gimmick designed by the Liberal Party of Canada to get it through an anticipated soon-to-be-held federal election. The gimmick was to provide short run tax cuts for a six month period as a means of influencing voters to vote for the Liberal party. The voters certainly were not taken in. When the Liberals read the results of the Gallup poll, the election was cancelled.

What has emerged from the budget, quite apart from its significant failure to come to grips with the problem, is that the provision to stimulate the economy and generate jobs has not only turned out to be a failure, if and when it runs its full course, but has been a major instrument in the creation of national disunity. The proposal before us, and the way it has been interpreted by the government which brought it forward, has created untold damage in the country.

By a series of misguided and arrogant strokes, the federal Liberals have managed to turn virtually everyone in this country against Ottawa on this particular measure. This is not only because of the way they treated the provincial government but also the people of the province of Quebec with regard to this measure.

Lined up against the federal government are not simply opposition members of the House of Commons. One normally anticipates that on a budgetary matter. The opposition parties are strongly united in opposition to the measure that is at the core of this bill. In addition, there are the editorial writers, without exception, of French Canada and English Canada, the premiers of the provinces, and Liberal backbenchers. In the province of Quebec all parties in the National Assembly are expressing disagreement with this measure and, in particular, with this government's plan to implement it.

At the very time the appeal of the premier of the province of Quebec for independence had begun to wane in that province, the Liberal party at the federal level, the self proclaimed saviours of the country and, in their view, the only experts capable of dealing with the question of national unity, came to the rescue of Mr. Lévesque. They have provided him with the strongest possible evidence in support of his general contention that the federal system does not work for Quebeckers, that provincial rights and jurisdictional authority are always, in the crunch, trampled upon by the federalists in Ottawa.

● (1522)

To use the words of one of the most distinguished citizens in the land, and I sincerely believe this, Mr. Claude Ryan, the leader of the opposition party in Quebec, this measure is a "dangerous" precedent. These are not the words of a newspaper normally opposed to the Liberal party, or of an opposition member. With this measure, particularly in the light of the means used to bring it into being, and the attitude taken by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and by the Minister of Finance, we find blackmail replacing co-operative federalism. The tragedy is that this sad sequence of events might have been and, indeed, should have been avoided.

The quagmire in which we find ourselves at present is not inherent in the federal system, as every member of the House knows. It is, I regret to say, however, inherent in the cynical, expedient and, above all, arrogant attitude of the federal Liberal Party of Canada. The Liberal Party of Canada, particularly the leadership of its Quebec wing, combines two totally unacceptable attitudes in terms of national politics in a federal system. One is an almost congenital incapacity to admit they are wrong. That is serious in politics, and it can be monstrously serious at a time when the unity of the country is at stake.

The leadership of the Liberal Party of Canada has an arrogant streak; it is this which is causing us so much trouble. Combined with that is what I think can only be described as a pathological incapacity to find any virtue in the current government of Quebec. I make these points because they are central to the difficulty we face right now in terms of the legislation before us. On the one hand there is arrogance, and on the other there is an attitude toward the Parti Québécois which says that even if a member of the PQ is eating breakfast he must be doing it incorrectly. That is not the attitude which can hold the country together.

Mr. Blouin: How naïve can you be?

Mr. Broadbent: A Liberal member says I am very naïve. If he is satisfied with the leadership the Prime Minister is providing his caucus, he himself is naïve.

[Mr. Broadbent.]

In coming to grips with this issue I shall cite chapter and verse for the statement I have just made. I shall do so by dealing with two aspects of the bill. One is the aspect of co-operation. On the whole, a flexible and co-operative attitude was taken toward the other provinces in connection with this matter. I give the Minister of Finance credit for that. I give him credit for saying, as federal Minister of Finance when he is preparing a national budget in a federal state, that it does make sense to consult the premiers. I do not agree entirely with the partisan attitude which has been taken by some of the provincial leaders in response to the minister's approach. I want to give credit to the federal minister for his approach in developing the budget on this basis. In my view he demonstrated a reasonableness and an acceptance of reality vis-à-vis all the provinces—with the exception of Quebec.

Ontario liked the sales tax proposal, basically for the obvious reason that this was the province which suggested it. The reason Ontario suggested it was because it knew the plan would boost industry and produce more jobs—that throughout Canada, following these tax cuts, people would purchase goods made in Ontario. There is nothing wrong with that. I am simply saying this was the self-evident reason for supporting the proposal.

What about Atlantic Canada? The federal government recognized that there was little manufacturing in that region, that the per capita income was lower there than in the rest of Canada, and that its unemployment levels have, unfortunately, always been higher than elsewhere in the country. In these circumstances, it made the proper response. Special consideration was given to Atlantic Canada; the federal government offered to pick up the whole cost of the tax reduction in those provinces. Very appropriate!

Both Saskatchewan and British Columbia wanted an extension of time during which the cut would be applied. Once again the federal government showed a responsive attitude and introduced a flexible element in the legislation to take into account that request.

Alberta receives no benefit from this measure because right now it is the richest province in terms of per capita income. To the credit of that province its representatives graciously said they would go along with the scheme, nevertheless. So going through the list we find an attitude of flexibility on the part of the minister toward English-speaking Canada, which is commendable. But when it comes to Quebec, the record of flexibility goes out the window. The minister is shaking his head over there. Though he cannot reply at this point in the debate he will have an opportunity to speak later. If he wishes to ask a question at the end of my speech I shall be delighted to deal with it.

Consider the minister's words. He said, with regard to British Columbia and Saskatchewan, as reported in Hansard for April 13, "I even made adjustments to meet particular situations in British Columbia and Saskatchewan." On April 14 he said, with relation to provinces outside Quebec, "I changed my formula." Later, he told us, "I even made some adjustments to accommodate them." As reported at page 4501 of Hansard, the minister told us he made changes to suit the special cases of Saskatchewan and British Columbia.

● (1532)

However, when the minister, the Prime Minister, the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Ouellet), and the Hon. Marc Lalonde, whose ministry I happen to forget—

An hon. Member: Federal-provincial relations.

Mr. Broadbent: —ironically enough, federal-provincial relations—when their charming, flexible thoughts turn to the province of Quebec and to the government of that province, flexibility goes out the window, and intolerance, inflexibility, and almost blind hatred fill their place. At this time in our history that is a tragedy. It is demonstrated by the kinds of phrases used by the minister and others in this House. At page 4504 of Hansard the Minister of Finance is reported to have said about Mr. Parizeau, the Quebec minister of finance—and let us note the contrast in language and tone between the quotations he has used to describe his relationship to other governments—the following:

> . . . he has to live with his own decision, just as I have to live with my own decision.

Unfortunately that same attitude of inflexibility is carried over not only in the thoughts and actions of the Minister of Finance but also in the thoughts and actions of all senior ministers, including the Prime Minister of Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance have stated that they proposed the same policy to all provinces. That is not true. The Minister of Finance did not threaten to crush the other provinces with a unilateral decision were they to refuse his sales tax reduction. He threatened the province of Quebec only. Threatening and blackmailing a province in such a way is unacceptable. In that sense, that act of the Liberal government is the most serious in ten years. It is the first time the threats of the Prime Minister go so far in threatening a province and it is ironic that he should pretend to be the great champion of national unity and then take such steps against the province of Quebec and not only against the government of Quebec.

Had the minister of finance of Ontario proposed a similar selective cut, I am sure that the federal Minister of Finance would have accepted. There is no doubt about it in my mind. But the same idea coming from Mr. Parizeau is unacceptable. I think the Minister of Finance knows it as well as I do. The selective sales tax cut in Quebec does not benefit Quebec alone, far from it. Ontario also derives enormous advantages from it. I will explain that in a few minutes. I think the current crisis we are in is due to the blind intolerance of the great federal Liberal tenors about everything the present government of Quebec does. To my mind, it is a certain fact.

[English]

If we are going to reject the response of the Quebec government, it seems to me that we have to do so in this, the federal legislature of Canada, on the ground that it is unacceptable in principle to the thrust of this legislation. The Minister of Finance himself has indicated, as I tried to show in my earlier comments, a flexible attitude toward the other provinces. I want once again to emphasize that a flexible attitude is commendable in a major financial measure, but it is only when we come to Quebec that we do not find that flexibility. The test for us in assessing this measure is whether what Mr. Parizeau and the prime minister of the province of Quebec propose is compatible or not compatible with this federal legislation in principle and, if it is compatible but simply departs in some detail, then we should accept it because we have accepted the right of almost every other province to depart in some detail from the central principle of the legislation.

What has the province of Quebec said? First, it has asked for a transfer to it of the financial equivalent of what it would have got if it had accepted the original tax proposal of the federal government.

Second, the Quebec government has offered a complete tax reduction in five sectors of its economy, shoes, textiles, clothing, furniture, and hotel bills, and for what reason? The reason is that this is very important not only for the province of Quebec but for all other provinces. In this proposal the Quebec government is on exactly the same ground and in exactly the same constitutional position as any other province.

Mr. Parizeau and the prime minister of the province of Quebec have said that they are taking this position because it accords with their interpretation of the existing federal constitution, and on that they are dead right. They are not mistaken.

They are not acting as separatists. They are acting as good federalists, so to speak. An hon. member opposite shakes his head. He will have to convince this House that what the Quebec government is doing in this regard is contrary to the principle of federalism. Ironically in this context of Canadian history, it is the separatist government of the Parti Quebecois in Quebec which is being federalist, and the Liberal Party of Canada which is causing a separatist tendency in the province of Quebec. What Mr. Parizeau has said is that a tax area like this is within provincial jurisdiction and therefore the priorities in terms of its application should be up to a particular province to decide.

Saskatchewan could have done the same thing if it had wanted to. Ontario could have done it a different way if it had wanted to. Surely that is the point and, speaking for my party, I say that that is exactly the position we take. If I understand the position of the official opposition, that is exactly the position it is taking too. The government of the province of Quebec has said that constitutionally it should have the right to set the priorities in jurisdictions where it has authority under the federal system. The Quebec government has argued that its proposal would create more jobs. If I understand it, that is exactly the argument of the Quebec government.

An hon. Member: And you believe that?

Mr. Broadbent: A Liberal backbencher says he does not believe that or, at least, someone does not believe that. I ask him to check with the Minister of Finance who can get for him a study—which has not yet been published—by the Department of Finance which shows that Mr. Parizeau's proposal is right and that the federal proposal is wrong in terms of job creation.

I think I have answered the question I am about to raise rhetorically. If what the government of Quebec is doing is within its constitutional authority, and if it is saying that the provincial tax area in the sales tax field is exclusively the prerogative of the province and that therefore the province should have the right to decide whether it should apply to shoes—or cabbages, for that matter—the Quebec government is on faultless ground as a federalist. Its argument cannot be rejected. And if on a pragmatic basis the Quebec government reaches the practical conclusion that it can create more jobs in its own domain by removing taxes in the sectors it chooses, then I ask, in God's name, what really is wrong with accepting the idea of the Quebec government, and what really is wrong with being as flexible toward the government of the province of Quebec, the opposition in the province of Quebec, and the people of the province of Quebec, as the federal government has been toward every other Canadian?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

● (1542)

Mr. Broadbent: Indeed, a case could be made by the province of Quebec for asking for the full compensation that Atlantic Canada got. That has not even been raised. Normally, in DREE projects, in financial assistance for the development of industry, and in a whole range of transfer payment programs, the province of Quebec received not only exactly what the provinces of Ontario and British Columbia have, but something more, for the obvious reasons that in the province of Quebec per capita incomes are lower, unemployment is higher, human advantages and possibilities at this point in our economic development are less than they are in the wealthy provinces, and normally Quebec is linked with Atlantic Canada. So the province of Quebec has not, as they might have had a legitimate case to do, applied for precisely the same special consideration that Atlantic Canada got. All they want is to get the same benefits as the people in British Columbia, the same flexibility as the people in Saskatchewan, the same rights as the people in Ontario, and we think they ought to have precisely that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: At this point I want to put on the record some statistical information, because the heart of the government's case against the province of Quebec is that the proposal they made was one that was aimed at creating jobs in the province of Quebec to their exclusive benefit. In my question to the Prime Minister earlier today I quoted statements he had made. On numerous occasions in the past two weeks the Minister of Finance has said the same thing. They have talked about balkanizing Canada, that that is what would have happened had they accepted the proposal made by the province of Quebec. The proposal made by Quebec was one that was going to create jobs for Quebeckers only, to the exclusion of other Canadians, they said. Well, the best that one can say about that argument is that it is rubbish. The Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister should know that it is rubbish.

I want to put on the record some statistics drawn from 1975 about the impact that the Quebec proposal would have had in terms of stimulating different parts of this country. The source for these figures is Statistics Canada and the industry itself. The reality is that if you look at the shoe sector in the province of Quebec you find that in Quebec in 1975 some 54 per cent of the provincial market was serviced by foreign imports, that is, imports not from other provinces but from other countries. Of the remaining percentage, 22 per cent was produced by Quebec producers, but 23 per cent was produced in Ontario. In short, more jobs would be created in the shoe industry in Ontario than in the shoe industry in Quebec.

Second, if you look at furniture and other sectors selected by the Quebec government, what do you find? First of all, of the Quebec consumption in 1975 in the furniture sector, 12 per cent came from foreign sources outside of Canada, but of the remaining part of the market, 30 per cent was produced in Quebec and 44 per cent was produced you know where, in the province of Ontario. So once again the Parizeau proposal will produce more jobs in Ontario than in Quebec. Some balkanization!

The third sector—and we could not get, for statistical purposes, a separation of clothing from textiles because our figures both from Stats Canada and from the industry were combined—shows the following figures for 1975: 65 per cent of the Quebec market was serviced by foreign imports; 24 per cent by producers in the province of Quebec; and for the first time in this series only, 14 per cent by the province of Ontario. For the first time, more producers in Quebec would have been aided by the special tax cut than producers in Ontario.

The point I want to make is that the federal government's entire case in substance has to rest on the claim that what the province of Quebec was doing was to meet their own needs, to create jobs for Quebeckers only, and that this was going to balkanize Canada. First of all, we say that the province, whether it is Quebec or any other province in this country, should have the right to make that decision as to where to apply the sales tax.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Second, we say that hard economic analysis of the consequence of the Quebec government's proposal shows that it does not offer a disproportionate advantage to the province of Quebec but is spread to other provinces, particularly to the province of Ontario. I say, with all due modesty, that the Prime Minister would recognize inherently that the government's case has to collapse in substance. I come full course in the point I am trying to make.

If the Government of Canada had shown flexibility in the details of its arrangements with the other provinces, if it could adjust the time frame for Saskatchewan and British Columbia, if it could adjust the amount of money for Atlantic Canada—all of which flexibility makes immense sense—why could it not show the same flexibility to the province of Quebec? Similarly if you look at the substance of the proposal in terms of its economic impact, if the effect of the proposal is not simply to create jobs in Quebec but to create jobs all over Canada, I say: why in God's name could the Government of Canada not accept it for that reason?

I come inescapably to the conclusion, which I asserted earlier in my comments, that the only reason the federal Liberal party has not accepted the proposal made by the province of Quebec is that it happens to be the Parti Québécois. It happens to be a government for which the federal government has a pathological hatred and in which it can see no good whatsoever. I repeat to the Minister of Finance what I said earlier in French: I have not the slightest doubt that if the same proposal had been made by D'Arcy McKeough instead of by a man named Parizeau, the federal Liberals would have accepted it within five minutes.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: In concluding, I say in all seriousness that in my experience—and I have only been here ten years—this legislation is potentially the most harmful for federal-provincial relations that I have seen. It is coming at a time in our history which is particularly dangerous in terms of the unity of this country. I hope still that the pressure which has mounted within this country in the province of Quebec and beyond shows the unanimity among French and English-speaking Canadians in Quebec and out of Quebec in opposition to the federal Liberal leadership. This kind of united opposition could cause the federal Liberal leadership to think for once that perhaps they are wrong, that perhaps other Canadians have an insight into this measure which they do not have, that we too are good federalists, that Claude Ryan is a good federalist, that you can have a federalist in Quebec and a federalist outside of Quebec in this chamber, a federalist who is not a politician, who can say he differs with the Liberals, and yet is not a separatist.

• (1552)

If this virtually unanimous opinion in French-speaking and English-speaking Canada, apart from the federal cabinet, can have any impact, I hope that at least it will cause the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister—both of whom said yesterday at certain points that they would be prepared still to negotiate, be prepared still to think about some counter proposals coming from the province of Quebec—to act on that basic decent impulse. If they do reach the conclusion that what has been just for the other provinces is just for the province of Quebec as well, and that the essence of what Quebec is proposing in this instance coincides with the essence of this bill, perhaps we can get this matter resolved and go on with other more important matters, particularly matters of the economy that are of central concern to Canadians wherever they may live.

To this end, Mr. Speaker, and to give the government some time to think about this, I would like to move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

> That all the words after the word "That" be deleted and that the following words be substituted therefor:
>
> "Bill C-56 be not now read a second time, but that it be read a second time this day one month hence."

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, before you take note of the motion and put it to the House, since the hon. member said to me in his speech that he would allow me a question, I wish to direct one to him which might shed some light on his speech.

[English]

I would like, Mr. Speaker, to commend the hon. member for the very positive remarks he made when he stated that I have tried to do something novel and flexible. I would like to ask him two questions, with the consent of the House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the House give its consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Chrétien: How can the hon. member say that I am not flexible enough to Quebec when it was them that came to me with their proposition, 48 hours after the others had accepted the proposition that we agreed on? The second question I have for the hon. member is, how can he say that I am not flexible when, after receiving the proposition of Mr. Parizeau, I called my counterparts in the provinces and asked them if in their judgment I could accept the proposition put by Quebec, and they said no? How can the hon. member square that with a lack of flexibility?

Mr. Broadbent: I do not quite understand the second question.

Mr. Chrétien: The second question was, how can the hon. member say I am not flexible enough when, after receiving the proposition from Mr. Parizeau, I called some ministers of finance of the provinces that were part of the deal—

Mr. Crosbie: Some; some.

Mr. Chrétien: Some, yes. And I asked them whether I could accept the proposition of Mr. Parizeau. I called three ministers of finance and all three of them said that I could not accept the proposition because it would betray the agreement that was made among all of us.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I would be very happy to answer both of those questions because, if I understand them correctly, rather than confirming the minister's own view that he is flexible, it seems to me that the questions confirm my side of the argument. However, I will try to state the reasons why I have reached that conclusion.

On the first point the minister asked, if I understood him correctly, how can the Quebec government seem to be flexible if they did not give a final answer until two days after the budget, and then it was a negative one. Well, surely, on a very complex measure like this when the government of Quebec believes—and constitutionally it is absolutely right—that this tax area is within provincial jurisdictional authority, and the province of Quebec almost above all others in our history has been very sensitive—and I would have thought that the minister would know that—to having control of areas within its jurisdiction, obviously it had to think, perhaps longer than the other provinces.

The minister is shaking his head, but they perhaps took longer in reaching a conclusion because they wanted to come up with a counter proposal that they thought, in terms of their priorities, was more reasonable. So, I turn it around to the minister. We have passed federal legislation where some parties have come later than others. If the minister was flexible, he would have looked at the essence of the Quebec government's proposal, not at its timing—whether it was two days later or whatever—and then decided whether it was good or bad. I do not accept the minister's implied argument there. If he was flexible he would have accepted it.

The second question was that he went back to the other ministers and asked them.

An hon. Member: Some.

Mr. Broadbent: He said some. I would like him to put it on the record as to which ones, but to me it is not relevant. They were all, within the federal constitution, autonomous within their domain. They had the right to accept or reject the federal government's proposal. As the minister knows, perhaps better than the rest of us because he dealt with it, he made flexible, different proposals to different provinces and they decided to accept. Why they did not think it agreeable to accept the Quebec government's alternative, I do not know. That is their decision. I say to the minister with all due respect, quite literally, it is none of their business. It has everything to do with the federal government's decision as it regards the government of the province of Quebec.

● (1602)

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Before recognizing the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert), I must put to the House the amendment moved by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent).

[English]

It is moved by Mr. Broadbent, seconded by Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre):

That all the words after the word "That" be deleted and that the following words be substituted therefor:

[Mr. Broadbent.]

"Bill C-56 be not now read a second time, but that it be read a second time this day one month hence."

● (1612)

[Translation]

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, when I am free to do so, I take pleasure in reading the official report of the proceedings of this House in the early days of confederation, and I must say I am impressed by their seriousness. I trust that the generations to come will take as much pleasure in reading our proceedings as I have when I read those of a century ago.

Mr. Speaker, even though the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) has gone out for a few moments, I would like to congratulate him for the courage he demonstrated yesterday throughout his speech when he introduced his bill on second reading. I do not agree with all his points of view; however I must say he showed a lot of courage in arguing for his bill which is far from satisfying everybody, but at least he showed courage. He tried to convince hon. members of the House of the merits of this legislation. Mr. Speaker, it is always annoying for a member of the House to be required to take a position on an omnibus bill. We have seen that before, a bill containing many provisions, some good, some not so good and some quite bad. In order to accept the good ones, you have to accept the bad ones too. This is not really an omnibus bill; rather I would say semi-omnibus because it does have good points, but there is one which I am greatly dissatisfied with.

The bill before us today is not just a simple economic measure. Politically, it is the most consequential bill we have had since the beginning of the session, and perhaps even in the last few sessions. Of course the economic measures it contains are important and they should be debated. But any economic impact this bill might have is relegated to the background by he flagrant injustice Quebec will have to bear if this piece of legislation is passed. We of the Social Credit Party of Canada have always emphasized the significance of positive criticism in parliament. That is what I would like to continue to do with my colleagues. We should not let partisanship blind us to the point where we cannot see the good aspects of certain pieces of legislation. We should recognize that Bill C-56 does contain some good measures. Although not many, there are at least two which I would like to mention.

The one which pleases me most is the amendment dealing with capital gain exemption for farm corporations. My colleagues and I have long since been insisting on the need for such a measure. The government is finally introducing the necessary amendment, and I am sure that if it is adopted it will serve to protect our family farm corporations, a formula which is very popular these days.

I wanted also to comment on the political aspect of this bill. I am referring of course to the stand which the province of Quebec as a whole has taken against the federal Liberal party.

The motions which were adopted on two occasions by the Quebec National Assembly bear witness to this. I shall refrain from involving all government members in the House, for it appears that some of them have the courage of their convictions and the guts to oppose the centralizing option advocated by the Minister of Finance. During the debate on his budget speech, I indicated to the House how concerned I was about a possible confrontation on the sales tax issue. I was certainly worried about this. I even stated, as reported in Hansard on page 4526:

—and this is the cause of the present confrontation. It worries me so much that I warned today that we should proceed carefully and sensibly, if we want to avoid constitutional crisis.

I spoke about the same worries yesterday, Mr. Speaker, during the question period when I put some questions to the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) whose answers showed that he was fully aware of the seriousness of the situation. But, Mr. Speaker, one month later we are still faced with this problem of the sales tax. We are very close indeed to getting into the worst constitutional crisis of our history and I would like to see us avoid it, as I believe we can still do. I am not saying this lightly. I am convinced that if a solution is not negotiated at the government level, the concept of Quebec sovereignty will make much more progress than it has since the Parti Québécois came to power. The situation is serious.

Mr. Michel Roy of Le Devoir gave the following summary of the situation in an editorial, and I quote:

... by working only to maintain their prestige and save their honour, they (Mr. Chrétien and his colleagues) are undermining federalism and serving the interests of the government they think they are fighting.

It is worth thinking over. And again last Tuesday the Minister of Finance accused the opposition, and I quote, from page 5451 of Hansard:

I am surprised that a national party wants to save the neck of the Parti Québécois.

You have to be very shortsighted to talk like that. The Minister of Finance should get rid of the beam in his own eyes before looking for the mote in the eyes of those members who do not agree with him.

The reactions of some Quebec editorialists to the solution proposed by the Minister of Finance are worthy of being analysed. It is necessary to recall that Mr. Roy of Le Devoir and Mr. Adam of La Presse are not known to be independentists. However, Mr. Adam talks of politically questionable solutions and aggressive fiscal measures. He is not afraid to saddle the federal government with the full responsibility for this serious conflict. Mr. Roy of Le Devoir talks about an unsatisfactory, unfair and regressive solution. According to him, and I quote:

By losing its temper as it did, the central government has violated the letter as well as the spirit of federalism.

And all this because of what Mr. Roy calls:

... a fine case of stubbornness and wounded pride.

Mr. Speaker, the government is trying to trip us up by introducing its solution to the sales tax problem within a bill which contains, as I said already, some measures everybody in this House would like to see passed. But the government will not fool me, no more than it will succeed in misleading the people. I will take a stand on this legislation, I will even oppose this legislation so long as the solution proposed to the sales tax problem is not changed. The people are not taken in and will realize that the government itself has to bear the shame and the odium of the situation. For its bad solution the government deserves to be blamed by all Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, the reasons why I am opposed to that solution are very clear. Lately, the government has intervened in an area of taxation which unquestionably is of provincial jurisdiction. The right of the provinces to arrange their sales taxes according to their own needs and their priorities is a sacred right enshrined in the British North America Act. The infringement of the federal government in this provincial area is pure and simple provocation. That the government in its precarious position with the Canadian electorate should try to scare people, to use every means it can, that I can understand, but that it should do so to the detriment of the people of a province and their elected government and even so with glaring disrespect for the constitution of this country, that is of the lowest possible level of petty politics.

Mr. Speaker, I am not accustomed to using such words when speaking in this House but since the problem is extremely serious, I feel obligated to use expressions that are likely to to strike the will and the mind of those in charge, those who also have the responsibility of using all the means available to save our democracy. We love democracy but we must love it enough to take all the means necessary to save it, to preserve it but also to be able to live it.

Mr. Speaker, the contempt that the government seems to have for the Canadian constitution and the people of Quebec also affects the underprivileged. How could one interpret differently the proposed tax reimbursement to Quebec taxpayers? The formula proposed by the government penalizes those on low income and those who do not pay any or hardly any taxes. And in that respect I want to say that yesterday during the question period the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) told opposition members several times that they did not understand the problem.

If we really do not understand the problem and the right hon. Prime Minister and his Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) are the only two people in Canada who can, it means that it is a problem which is not within everyone's grasp. So if it is such a serious problem, it is our duty to work at it for as long as it takes to understand it. We must do everything we can to understand it. Personally, if the right hon. Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance can convince me and make me see the problem the way they do I will be honest enough to say so and then I will join them. If it is a matter of time, let us take the time needed, the situation is very serious.

Mr. Speaker, have you ever seen a measure which, to my mind, is so unfair and discriminatory? I must admit that even coming from a government which is the servant of large financial interests—this is nothing new, everyone knows it—that surprises me. The very idea of a sales tax cut is that it should benefit everyone since everyone is a consumer. That is the way it should be. On the other hand, a tax cut benefits only those who pay taxes and the right hon. Prime Minister once again said so today.

Mr. Speaker, where is justice for senior citizens, for people on welfare and for all other underprivileged Canadians? As they do not pay taxes they will not benefit from any tax credit. They have been ignored by the government. It is a sad way to progress towards a just society. But what is insulting here is that the government assumes that the people are idiots. It is hoping that this false generosity will turn public opinion in their favour. Not only does it hope to influence the voters in its favour but it hopes to do it with that paltry $85, and that is the maximum since many people will have much less depending on the taxes they paid.

Mr. Speaker, I object to that solution for another reason relating to the very principle of democracy. As I have just said the National Assembly has, on two occasions, unanimously objected to the federal government interference in its tax jurisdiction and to the proposals made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien). I am thinking of the new leader of the provincial Liberal party which held its convention recently, in April I think, and that was well covered by the CBC. I am thinking of the comments made by the Secretary of State (Mr. Roberts) in this House last May 11 while I was not here. I did not have the opportunity to comment on them but it seems from his remarks that that Crown corporation is free to air truths and half-truths, lies and political covention of their choice and so on. I repeat, I do not agree with that method and I am anxious to know the decision of the Chair following the motion I proposed here in this House last May 8.

Mr. Speaker, the National Assembly represents the people of Quebec as legitimately as we represent here in Ottawa the people of Canada. When a sovereign assembly unanimously decides something it does so one behalf of all the people. It does not matter if the government is short-sighted, blind or deaf. What matters is that these people, who are elected by the population, have adopted a resolution requesting that members of parliament, especially those who represent ridings in the province of Quebec, oppose this measure.

I did not have to wait for this resolution to know that my party and I must oppose this measure, especially clauses 30 and 59. Mr. Speaker, I would not want the House to think that I object to the entire bill, because there are also good measures and good provisions in this piece of legislation. However, the fact that all parties and all affiliations in the National Assembly voted unanimously in favour of the motion gives added dimension to the matter. The federal government has succeeded where the PQ government has always failed: forming a common front in the National Assembly against the central government. The fact that the concept of Quebec's sovereignty might earn new credentials because of this crisis is nothing to brag about: the federal government will have been the major force behind it. We should reflect very seriously about this.

● (1622)

It is easy to understand that a government can make mistakes. It can always be forgiven if it has the courage to admit it and tries to make up for its mistakes. However, a government that refuses to admit its mistakes and tries to blame others for them no longer deserves the confidence of the population. This government is on the road to political suicide and I shall certainly not be the one to stop it unless it wants to drag the whole population in its wake. In this case, I am responsible towards the population and I will fight with all my energy to protect all Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, I cannot put into words everything that is now going on in my mind. To fight effectively against this government, I want to remain in this House as long as necessary so that we may get to the bottom of this issue and find a solution likely to bring harmony to our country instead of division.

However, I admit that I am indignant, revolted and disgusted at this unfair, partisan and offensive attitude towards the whole population of Quebec. Mr. Speaker, this bill is a logical result of an improper tax system that we should no longer tolerate. Instead of helping small wage earners, the economic policy of the present government only widens the gap between the rich and the poor.

Yesterday, I was happy to hear the Minister of Finance say that he gave 15 years of his life to try to narrow this gap between the rich and the poor. I believe he is sincere, but he will certainly never attain his purpose with such formulas. Mr. Speaker, the minister also told the House that he had never been able to understand the theories of social credit. On two occasions, he replied to my questions on this subject. Yet, I am convinced that the economic situation in our country would be better than it is now if he had understood them.

This bill is the outcome of an irresponsible and excessive position taken by the federal government both in political and economic matters, as can be seen in a part of the bill. This bill is the outcome of a series of blunders which have ruined the Canadian economy in the past 15 years. Fifteen years ago, Canada was the second wealthiest country in the world. Today, we see our position is constantly declining. Qualified engineers are needed to build a strong bridge. So, we need good politicians to run the country in a sensible manner. For ten years the government has followed the advice of economists who based that advice on orthodox theories which are obsolete and no longer meet our present needs. Mr. Speaker, the complete removal of the provincial sales tax is somewhat close to the Social Credit theory that governments should set up a system of compensated discount. Had we set up such a system, which is under federal jurisdiction, we would not have this conflict between governments about the retail sales tax.

Our position is that governments should initiate a compensated discount system to encourage the consumption of Canadian goods and, at the same time, increase the production of Canadian industries, which would create jobs for Canadians on the labour market. So, the number of unemployed would decrease. This compensated discount system is essentially oriented towards the poor within our society. The $186 million of the Minister of Finance will certainly penalize the poor and fail to boost the production of Canadian goods.

Mr. Speaker, why does the Minister of Finance still refuse to negotiate the transfer of this money directly from government to government? If the federal government has funds to give the provinces, that is fine, but it should respect provincial jurisdictions. The sales tax area falls under provincial jurisdiction, and if the federal government wants to foster Canadian unity and set the economy in motion again, it should respect the authority of the provinces, of all the provinces, not only that of Quebec, and stop infringing all the time on their jurisdictions. This bill would have been a lot more useful if the minister had introduced a series of measures aimed at stimulating the economy.

Mr. Speaker, I see time is running out, I shall shorten my comments. I would like to say this: federal-provincial conferences have been going on for many years. Spokesmen for the provincial and the federal governments have certainly always shown a great desire to co-operate. But the same issue always pops up: the rights and the responsibilities of the federal government, the rights and the responsibilities of the provincial governments. The federal government keeps on saying that it is unable to yield any source of income to the provinces because it does not have sufficient income to face its responsibilities, its obligations, and likewise with the provinces. I have attended some conferences where I heard premiers express their desire to co-operate, but say that, in view of their responsibilities towards the people of their province, their government was not in a position to yield any more fiscal rights to the federal government, as they themselves did not have enough. Conferences always end on the same note, premiers or finance ministers return home faced with the same problems, and the same holds true for the federal government. Which means, Mr. Speaker, that the problem is one of money, of dollars, and it will never be solved as long as the federal government, which under the constitution holds the authority to legislate on monetary matters, will be dominated by financial interests, by a monopoly which through legislation can cash the credit of the nation. When we borrow money, be it from Germany, New York or Italy, the Canadian government enters into financial agreements which are based on the credit of Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, your own work represents a credit. The hon. member for Rivière-du-Loup-Témiscouata (Mr. Gendron), who sits in front of me, creates a credit by his own work. All our activities put together constitute a credit. When industrialists produce the goods needed by the population and when farmers produce milk, butter, cheese, vegetables, all these things, they are actually creating credit. And when the government borrows abroad, it is all that credit that it is incurring in our name. That is why I suggest that the solution is not solely to be found at conferences. The solution has to do with the fact that the Canadian government and the Canadian parliament is not assuming its responsibilities in this matter.

I said earlier that our disputes are due to the fact that we do not have enough revenues to meet our responsibilities in each of the provinces and in parliament. Therefore, because of our disagreements and a lack of money, the solution is to use the means at our disposal and which rightly belong to us to cash in on our own credit at lower interest rates than those we are now paying. Mr. Speaker, why borrow from Germans, Italians, Americans at 10, 12, 15 per cent interest rates, when we could borrow from ourselves in Canada at much lower interest rates? I see that the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Grafftey) finds this funny. I guess he has never been in need of money, but those who have been and are still short of money and have to go to finance companies to borrow at 20 and 30 per cent interest rates find it less funny, and you can be sure that those people understand what we are saying. So, it is the same with a government as with an individual.

When one borrows at nonsensical interest rates, no wonder, you end up creating uneasiness and discord in a country. That is the cause of our problems. The best proof is that a sum of $186 million has been keeping us busy in this House for the past two months and is the cause of all our wrangling. Yet this money that we so badly need comes neither from heaven nor hell. It was invented by men. It was created somewhere. And the government and all of us together should look fully into this serious problem of the creation of money which causes trouble even for the most intelligent people. It cannot be said that the Prime Minister is not inteligent. He is extremely intelligent and he knows the problem, but he is not able to find a solution to it.

I have already said this in the House, and I repeat it for the benefit of government members. Their responsibilities may be greater than ours, only the future will tell. Their responsibilities in caucus are not only to discuss sales tax and those $186 million, but also to suggest solutions to the Prime Minister and to the Minister of Finance. It is not only a matter of nationalism, it is a matter of plain common sense, not only for today but for the years to come. I believe that if only they took the trouble to heed the suggestions I want to put forward very seriously, and being completely free from any financial hindrance that may exist, I am convinced that I would have helped effectively to improve the social climate, the economic conditions and the political issues in this country. I am in favour, for my part, of a new constitution, a constitution in which not only the responsibilities and rights of the various levels of government will be clearly defined, their sources of revenues to meet their obligations, so that we will stop wasting so much time in useless conferences that do not solve anything.

So, Mr. Speaker, in taking part in the debate on Bill C-56, I wanted to put forward very positive ideas and, hopefully, work with all my colleagues in this House to create a greater harmony in this country, so that Canadians in eastern, central and western Canada can be proud of having equal opportunities all across this country and we are no longer led to believe that a part of the country is giving handouts to the other out of sheer kindness. Are we living in the same country or not? If we are living in the same country, our responsibility at the national level is to provide good administration for everyone and not have part of the people believe that one part of the country is doing the other favours out of generosity.

Mr. Speaker, perhaps my words will be judged as coming from a man who has not much confidence at this point precisely because of the situation created by that issue we are now discussing and because of the $186 million, but $186 million is not much compared with the whole future of a people and a country. Let us disregard that $186 million barrier and build a real constitution, so that we may have a real prosperous country in which all Canadians today and tomorrow will be proud to live.

● (1632)

[English]

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil): Mr. Speaker, in the six years in which I have been in the House I have risen to speak on many occasions, but never have I felt as much desire to speak out as I do today. I have never felt so strongly about an issue. I have never listened so attentively to all the arguments which have been presented by members of the opposition, and by others outside this House, on the subject of this bill, Bill C-56. I have never on any issue been as convinced as I am today of the wisdom of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) in his objective, in his method, and in the presentation of the bill before us. With all my English logic I have listened to the arguments presented. I can say, frankly and honestly, that I do not understand them. I have looked at the emotional side. Perhaps I am not very emotional, but I have tried to look at the subject from an emotional point of view to see whether I could better understand the extraordinary attitude and point of view which have been put forward in opposition to the bill.

I find it extraordinary we should be discussing today what Canada is all about. We are seeking to determine, in this argument on the provincial sales tax measure, what kind of Canada we want for the future. I hope we will never write a constitution which would make it impossible to carry on a dialogue between the provincial and federal levels of government.

When the minister presented this bill to the House he clearly outlined his objective in making the proposals he did. Economists throughout the country had almost unanimously agreed that the best way to stimulate the economy was to reduce provincial sales taxes across the land to provide immediate stimulus to purchasing which would, hopefully, result in increased investment, increased manufacturing, and greater employment opportunities.

● (1642)

The minister was faced with the obvious problem that provincial sales tax is under provincial jurisdiction. He has acknowledged this right from the start. The method he proposed—and really the only method available to him—was to use federal taxes as a compensation if the provincial governments were willing to accept the scheme he proposed.

After three weeks of argument the minister obtained the agreement of nine of the ten finance ministers. A couple of them decided to make alternative proposals in forms which were acceptable to the federal minister. During those three weeks the Quebec minister of finance never said a word. He did not say, "Mr. Chrétien, this is provincial jurisdiction; stay out; do not touch". He kept his mouth shut because he was playing games. One could consider our Minister of Finance perhaps a little naive because he thought intelligence might override these emotional game considerations.

The timing is what I find difficult to understand. The federal budget was brought down on April 10. The Quebec provincial budget was brought down on April 18. We have talked a lot about what was understood regarding how moneys were going to be raised and how the transfer was going to be made.

In the budget of Mr. Parizeau of April 18, at the bottom of page 22 he acknowledges—and it is printed—that the method of transfer would be by a reduction in federal taxes paid by the taxpayers. I do not know how long it takes to print a document such as the document I have in my hand, but I would suggest that such a document was put together even before the federal budget of April 10. I am not inclined to believe that there was any misunderstanding whatsoever in the mind of the Quebec Minister of Finance prior to the presentation of the federal budget on April 10.

On April 12 the Quebec Minister of Finance made a counter proposal. On April 21 the federal Minister of Finance suggested a different form for his original proposal. This, incidentally, should certainly answer one of the points raised by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) when he spoke of the differences between Quebec and the maritime provinces. The counter proposal of the federal Minister of Finance was to provide an opportunity for Quebec to be treated in the same way as the maritimes. The federal minister was prepared, if Quebec was willing, to cut 2 per cent from the sales tax on the remainder of products to which sales tax was still applicable.

He was prepared to go along with the same proposition he made to the ministers of finance of the maritime provinces.

The minister of finance of the province of Quebec, Mr. Parizeau, insisted that the full value of the budget offer be provided toward the cost of the selective cut which he had chosen to make in Quebec. I suggest that, as it stands right now, that is exactly what is being done. By vacating an amount of $85 per taxpayer in the federal field the federal minister makes it possible for Quebec to occupy the field in the same amount—or a varying amount, if it so wishes—so that it can be compensated fully for the provincial sales tax cuts instituted. No one in the province of Quebec would suffer.

There is one point upon which I want to dwell. Many speakers have spoken about the so-called unfairness of the deduction of federal tax from the incomes of those who pay taxes. It has been said that this is not fair to the poor who do not pay taxes, or to old people. With all the logic I could muster I have tried to understand this point, but one thing I do understand is that a sales tax cut is applicable to all those who make purchases. Poor people make smaller purchases than rich people do, so by its very nature a sales tax cut aids those who have money much more than it aids those who do not. What this has to do with the transfer of tax field from the federal level to the provincial level I do not understand.

We are saying that in eight of the provinces where the scheme is applicable we are taking $100 out of one pocket and putting $100 into the other pocket. In those eight provinces where the federal government collects provincial taxes, the individual who pays taxes is not even aware that there has been a transaction.

The province of Quebec is the only province which has decided to collect its own provincial taxes. That is its right, but that costs the people of Quebec many millions of dollars. I am told the cost is $120 million. That is what the people of Quebec are paying so that the Quebec provincial government can exercise its right. However, because the Quebec government chooses to exercise that right, there is no simple solution for Quebec by which the federal government can, as it is doing in the other eight provinces, take $100 out of one pocket and put $100 into another pocket. The money must first be given to the taxpayer. In the case of Quebec the amount is $85 for the simple reason that the federal government has already agreed to reimburse two percentage points of the eight percentage points that have been eliminated from the sales tax on shoes, furniture, and clothing.

So we give the taxpayer $85, and we say to the Quebec minister of finance, "You have chosen to tax your people yourself. Now you can make a choice. You can choose to tax them the same $85". The Quebec government can choose to tax the people of Quebec on some sliding scale in order to bring in the same amount, or it can choose not to tax them, if it wishes. However, it is the Quebec government's field, and it is Quebec's decision.

There has been so much misunderstanding that I want to refer briefly—as did the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert)—to an editorial which appeared in Le Devoir on Tuesday of last week.

• (1652)

It has been called the confrontation between the two ministers of finance, and I suppose that one cannot deny that it is an emotional confrontation. I do not know why we should be surprised.

In one case we have the federal Minister of Finance who believes in a Canada with ten provinces joined together willingly, and in the other case we have the Quebec minister of finance whose avowed intention is to destroy the country as we know it today, and whose avowed intention is to separate. So it should be no surprise to anyone that, no matter what the Canadian Minister of Finance proposes, it is going to be rejected by the Quebec minister of finance. He has no reason for reaching an agreement, and I might suggest that if anybody has sat for weeks and weeks on end across the table at a bargaining session between employer and union one would know right away whether one is going to reach an agreement or whether one is entering into an exercise in futility where the intention is not to reach an agreement.

I suggest that under the present circumstances the objective of the Quebec minister of finance is not to reach an agreement, and there is no way in which he is going to reach an agreement because, if he did, he would be illustrating that federalism works, which he has no intention of doing.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Herbert: The article in Le Devoir to which I referred mentions the intervention of the Canadian Minister of Finance in a provincial jurisdiction. That is admitted. I suggest that the day that a federal minister of finance is not able to sit down with his provincial counterparts to try to reach an agreement, we might as well call it quits, give up on Canada, and start carving it up right away. He did just that, and I suggest that three weeks is a long enough time for anyone to say, "I do not like what you are doing. I am not going to accept what you are doing. Go away and don't talk to me."

It should be remembered—and I think the point has to be raised—that this federal Liberal government was dealing with ten provinces of which only two have Liberal governments. So the federal Minister of Finance had to deal with Conservative, right-wing ministers of finance, and also with socialist, left-wing ministers of finance. But these gentlemen—and I call them gentlemen advisedly—were willing to sit down, and whilst they might not have been very happy, whilst they might not have liked the deal that was being suggested, they were willing to discuss it and come to an agreement. I suggest that despite the proposal afterwards of four ministers from the west, even those four provinces, Alberta included, were willing to come to an agreement.

To suggest that the Canadian Minister of Finance, after having presented his budget and after seeing the action of the Quebec minister of finance, should play into the Parizeau track and hand over to the Quebec government the balance of the funds allocated for specific purposes, seems to me to ignore the fact completely that there are ten provinces in Canada and that an agreement was already reached with nine.

In the new constitution, which we will obviously be discussing soon, we should consider very carefully to what degree we want to allow the power of veto to prevent any further agreement or any further change. As I have mentioned before, the extreme is if that provincial power of veto is to extend to the province of Prince Edward Island, and I am not at the moment criticizing that province for any other reason than to say that it is a province that has a population smaller than the constituency which I represent. I think we have to think very carefully about our attitude toward a constitution that will completely stymie any future progress. I suggest that if we believe that we must at all times have the full agreement of the ten provinces, then we are in effect saying that at no time are we going to be able to have any future agreements between the provincial and federal governments.

Even the point about the distribution of the funds to the Quebec federal taxpayer being inequitable I find difficult to swallow, for the simple reason that the 2.4 million taxpayers in the province of Quebec cover almost all the families in Quebec. I suggest also that the $85 which will go to every taxpayer is far more beneficial to those who are only paying $100 or $200 in federal sales taxes than would be the total of either the 8 per cent on furniture, shoes and clothing, or the 2 per cent across the board on the total purchases at that period of time.

What I am suggesting is that $85 for every taxpayer is a fairer distribution than either the 8 per cent formula or the 2 per cent formula initially proposed by the Minister of Finance. Again I find it difficult to follow the logic of the argument that even if this $85 per taxpayer is of benefit—and it is not intended to be a benefit—that it is inequitable.

I have one last point to make, and I see it is nearly five o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

If the minister of finance of the province of Quebec is not prepared to deal his hand while Quebec is still part of Canada, then how is he going to deal with Canada under sovereignty association?

* * *

[Translation]

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt)—Health and Welfare—Minister urged to consider ban on saccharin; the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie)—Supply and Services—Criteria used in calling for tenders; the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow)—External Affairs—Bell Canada contract with Saudi Arabia.

[English]

It being five o'clock p.m. the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, private bills, notices of motions, public bills.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

[English]

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, may I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to deal with the whole series of notices of motions for papers standing in the name of the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens), starting with No. 7 and continuing to and including No. 43, since those motions are on the same subject, uranium cartel. I do not believe the hon. member would wish to come here every Thursday to deal with each one of them separately, and I think it is his wish that we proceed with all the motions together. I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to proceed in that order and that the other notices of motions preceding them be allowed to stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Hon. members have heard the proposition put forward by the parliamentary secretary. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

• (1702)

DOCUMENTATION RESPECTING URANIUM CARTEL

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe) moved motions:

No. 7.

That an order of the House do issue for a copy of the letter dated September 1975 from Dr. O. J. C. Runnalls to Gulf Minerals Canada Ltd. advising them of the fourth quarter assessment of dues to SERU otherwise known in English as the Uranium Marketing Research Association or as the Uranium Club.

No. 8.

That an order of the House do issue for a copy of the Department of Justice legal opinion referred to by the Right Honourable the Prime Minister on August 4, 1977 in the House of Commons touching on the uranium cartel.

No. 9.

That an order of the House do issue for copies of the quarterly reports prepared by Andre Petit of the Secretariat at SERU bearing on the uranium cartel.

No. 10.

That an order of the House do issue for copies of the minutes of all meetings at which Dr. O. J. C. Runnalls attended, bearing on the uranium cartel.

No. 11.

That an order of the House do issue for copies of the minutes of all meetings at which Andre Petit attended bearing on the uranium cartel.

No. 12.

That an order of the House do issue for copies of all SERU Secretariat documents numbered 73.1, 73.2, 73.3 etc. for 1973, bearing on the uranium cartel.

No. 13.

That an order of the House do issue for copies of all SERU Secretariat documents numbered 74.1, 74.2, 74.3 etc. for 1974, bearing on the uranium cartel.

No. 14.

That an order of the House do issue for copies of all SERU Secretariat documents numbered 75.1, 75.2, 75.3 etc. for 1975, bearing on the uranium cartel.

No. 16.

That an order of the House do issue for a copy of the memorandum dated March 22, 1972, from I. W. Coleman, Associate General Counsel, Gulf Oil Corporation to Mr. E. B. Walker, Executive Vice-President, Gulf Oil Corporation, describing recent developments regarding proposed international uranium marketing arrangements and distributed to Mr. R. K. Allen, Counsel, Gulf Mineral Resources Company, a subsidiary of Gulf Oil Corporation; counsel, Gulf Minerals Canada, Limited; J. G. Dieter, Assistant General Counsel, Gulf Energy and Environmental Systems Co., a division of Gulf Oil Corporation; and R. D. Jackson, Attorney, Gulf Oil Corporation.

No. 17.

That an order of the House do issue for a copy of the memorandum dated April 12, 1972, from Mr. I. W. Coleman, Associate General Counsel, Gulf Oil Corporation to Mr. M. E. Minks, General Counsel, Gulf Oil Corporation, reflecting legal analysis and requesting consultation regarding the giving of legal advice to Gulf management personnel concerning a proposed international uranium marketing arrangements and distributed to Mr. E. B. Walker, Executive Vice-President, Gulf Oil Corporation; R. D. Jackson, Attorney, Gulf Oil Corporation; R. K. Allen, Counsel, Gulf Mineral Resources Company, a subsidiary of Gulf Oil Corporation, counsel, Gulf Minerals Canada, Ltd.; H. E. Hoffman, Associate General Counsel/Vice President, Gulf Energy and Environmental System Co., a division of Gulf Corporation.

No. 18.

That an order of the House do issue for a copy of the memorandum dated April 19, 1972 from M. E. Minks to file summarizing author's communication to Messrs. Zagnoli and Allen concerning proposed international arrangement, and outlining legal conclusions.

No. 19.

That an order of the House do issue for a copy of the handwritten notes dated April 24, 1972, of Gulf lawyer reflecting telephone conversation with Mr. Allen concerning a uranium producers meeting, which set forth legal opinions and conclusions from the files of Gulf's Law Department.

No. 20.

That an order of the House do issue for a copy of the memorandum dated April 28, 1972 from R. D. Jackson, Attorney, Gulf Oil Corporation to J. W. Coleman, Associate General Counsel, Gulf Oil Corporation, setting forth principal points of discussion between Messrs. Jackson, Ramsey and Zagnoli concerning proposed uranium cartel and distributed to M. E. Minks, General Counsel, Gulf Oil Corporation; M. W. Ramsey, Director, Corporate Planning, Planning and Economics Department, Gulf Oil Corporation.

No. 21.

That an order of the House do issue for a copy of memorandum dated April 28, 1972, from R. D. Jackson, Attorney, Gulf Oil Corporation to I. W. Coleman, Associate General Counsel, Gulf Oil Corporation, transmitting opinion of counsel regarding proposed international producers' arrangement which sets forth legal conclusions and advice concerning Gulf's being compelled to participate by the Canadian government and distributed to M. W. Ramsey, Director, Corporate Planning, Planning and Economics Department, Gulf Oil Corporation.

No. 22.

That an order of the House do issue for a copy of memorandum dated May 1, 1972, from I. W. Coleman, Associate General Counsel, Gulf Oil Corporation, to M. E. Minks, General Counsel, Gulf Oil Corporation, reflecting discussions among Messrs. Allen, Estey and Matthews regarding application of legal principles and suggested courses of action.

No. 23.

That an order of the House do issue for a copy of the letter dated May 1, 1972, from W. Z. Estey, Partner, Robertson, Lane, Perrett, Frankish & Estey; counsel for Gulf Minerals Canada, Limited, to I. W. Coleman, Associate General Counsel, Gulf Oil Corporation, together with an attached letter dated January 5, 1972 from W. Z. Estey to R. K. Allen, Counsel, Gulf Mineral Resources Company, a subsidiary of Gulf Oil Corporation; counsel, Gulf Minerals Canada, Limited, prepared by counsel containing legal advice and opinion concerning Canadian statutes and policies as applicable to certain of Gulf's activities.

No. 24.

That an order of the House do issue for a copy of a letter dated May 3, 1972, from O. J. C. Runnalls, Senior Advisor—Uranium, Department of Energy, Mines and Resources; Official of Uranium Canada, Limited, a Crown Corporation, to N. M. Ediger, Manager, Gulf Minerals Canada, Limited, together with an attached undated letter from O. J. C. Runnalls to J. Austin, Deputy Minister of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources; President, Uranium Canada Limited, a Crown Corporation, attaching the Minutes of the Meeting of the International Uranium Producers in Paris, April 20-21, 1972.

No. 25.

That an order of the House do issue for a copy of a letter dated May 4, 1972, from W. Z. Estey, Partner, Robertson, Lane, Perrett, Frankish & Estey; counsel for Gulf Minerals Canada, Limited, to R. K. Allen, Counsel, Gulf Mineral Resources Company, a subsidiary of Gulf Oil Corporation; counsel, Gulf Minerals Canada, Limited, attaching revised page of the opinion of counsel, set out in a memoradum dated February 6, 1972, from R. D. Jackson, Attorney, Gulf Oil Corporation to file.

No. 26.

That an order of the House do issue for a copy of a letter dated May 11, 1972, from R. D. Jackson, Attorney, Gulf Oil Corporation, to M. E. Minks, General Counsel, Gulf Oil Corporation, together with a buckslip attaching telex dated October 5, 1972, from N. M. Ediger to R. K. Allen summarizing the Ottawa meeting of Canadian Producers, which telex contains marginal notes reflecting mental impressions and conclusions of Gulf Counsel, which writing is believed to be that of Mr. Jackson.

No. 27.

That an order of the House do issue for a copy of a letter dated May 17, 1972, from O. J. C. Runnalls, Senior Advisor-Uranium, Department of Energy, Mines and Resources; Official of Uranium Canada, Limited, a Crown Corporation, to N. M. Ediger, Manager, Gulf Minerals Canada, Limited, together with a letter dated May 16, 1972, from O. J. C. Runnalls to file, attaching minutes of Canadian Uranium Producers' Meeting of May 9, 1972.

No. 28.

That an order of the House do issue for a copy of a letter dated may 19, 1972, from R. K. Allen, Counsel, Gulf Mineral Resources Company, a subsidiary of Gulf Oil Corporation; counsel, Gulf Minerals Canada, Limited, to I. W. Coleman, Associate General Counsel, Gulf Oil Corporation, together with an undated Draft Aide Memoire re Canadian Uranium Producers' Meeting on May 19, 1972 and a letter dated May 10, 1972, from Carl to N. M. Ediger, Manager, Gulf Minerals Canada, Limited, enclosing attachments for purposes of keeping counsel advised and receiving continuing advice from counsel on matters concerning uranium producers' arrangement and which was distributed to W. Z. Estey, Partner, Robertson, Lane, Perrett, Frankish & Estey; counsel for Gulf Minerals Canada, Limited and H. E. Hoffman, Associate General Counsel/Vice President, Gulf Energy and Environmental Systems Co., a division of Gulf Oil Corporation.

No. 29.

That an order of the House do issue for a copy of the memorandum dated June 2, 1972 from R. D. Jackson, Attorney, Gulf Oil Corporation to file describing discussion between author and Mr. Allen concerning legal advice and containing counsel's advice and opinions with regard to a proposed uranium marketing organization and distributed to M. E. Minks, General Counsel, Gulf Oil Corporation; I. W. Coleman, Associate General Counsel, Gulf Oil Corporation; and R. K. Allen, Counsel, Gulf Mineral Resources Company, a subsidiary of Gulf Oil Corporation; counsel, Gulf Minerals Canada, Ltd.

No. 30.

That an order of the House do issue for a copy of the memorandum dated June 2, 1972, from R. D. Jackson, Attorney, Gulf Oil Corporation to file describing legal analysis and conclusions of Mr. Jackson with regard to a legal opinion which he had been requested to prepare and gives legal opinion of counsel regarding a matter communicated to him by client, and distributed to M. E. Minks, General Counsel, Gulf Oil Corporation; I.W. Coleman, Associate General Counsel, Gulf Oil Corporation; R. K. Allen, Counsel, Gulf Mineral Resources Company, a subsidiary of Gulf Oil Corporation; counsel Gulf Minerals Canada, Ltd.; and M. W. Ramsey, Director, Corporate Planning, Planning and Economics Department, Gulf Oil Corporation.

No. 31.

That an order of the House do issue for a copy of the memorandum dated June 15, 1972 from O. J. C. Runnalls, Senior Advisor—Uranium, Department of Energy, Mines and Resources; Official of Uranium Canada, Limited, a Crown corporation to J. Austin, Deputy Minister of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources; President, Uranium Canada, Limited, a Crown corporation being a summary of Canadian Uranium Producers' Meeting in Johannesburg, May 28, 1972 (classified confidential by Canadian government) and distributed to G. M. McNabb, Assistant Deputy Minister (Energy) of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources; Executive Vice President, Uranium Canada, Limited, a Crown corporation.

No. 32.

That an order of the House do issue for a copy of the memorandum dated June 27, 1972 from O. J. C. Runnalls, Senior Advisor—Uranium, Department of Energy, Mines and Resources; Official of Uranium Canada, Limited, a Crown corporation to J. Austin, Deputy Minister of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources; President, Uranium Canada, Limited, a Crown corporation being a summary of meeting of Canadian Uranium Producers of June 9, 1972 (Classified confidential by Canadian government) and distributed to G. M. McNabb, Assistant Deputy Minister (Energy) of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources; Executive Vice President, Uranium Canada, Limited, a Crown corporation.

No. 33.

That an order of the House do issue for a copy of the memorandum dated July 6, 1972 from R. D. Jackson, Attorney, Gulf Oil Corporation to I. W. Coleman, Associate General Counsel, Gulf Oil Corporation describing advice of counsel concerning a matter communicated to counsel by client and distributed to F. R. O'Hara, Attorney/Antitrust Counsel, Gulf Oil Corporation.

No. 34.

That an order of the House do issue for a copy of the memorandum dated July 10, 1972, from R. D. Jackson, Attorney, Gulf Oil Corporation, to I. W. Coleman, Associate General Counsel, Gulf Oil Corporation; F. R. O'Hara, Attorney/Antitrust Counsel, Gulf Oil Corporation; and M. W. Ramsey, Director, Corporate Planning, Planning and Economics Department, Gulf Oil Corporation describing work schedule of lawyers regarding preparation of legal opinion and subjects of upcoming meeting of counsel and client, distributed to M. E. Minks, General Counsel, Gulf Oil Corporation.

No. 35.

That an order of the House do issue for a copy of the memorandum dated July 20, 1972 from R. D. Jackson, Attorney, Gulf Oil Corporation to M. E. Minks, General Counsel, Gulf Oil Corporation containing an antitrust evaluation and counsel's opinion and advice given to Mr. Zagnoli with respect to Gulf's prospective involvement in the proposed international uranium marketing arrangement distributed to R. K. Allen, Counsel, Gulf Mineral Resources Company, a subsidiary of Gulf Oil Corporation, counsel, Gulf Minerals Canada, Ltd.; I. W. Coleman, Associate General Counsel, Gulf Oil Corporation; W. Z. Estey, Partner, Robertson, Lane, Perrett, Frankish & Estey; counsel for Gulf Minerals Canada, Limited; N. M. Ediger, Manager, Gulf Minerals Canada, Limited; F. R. O'Hara, Attorney/Antitrust Counsel, Gulf Oil Corporation; M. W. Ramsey, Director, Corporate Planning, Planning and Economics Department, Gulf Oil Corporation; and S. A. Zagnoli, President, Gulf Minerals Canada, Limited.

No. 36.

That an order of the House do issue for a copy of the memorandum dated August 15, 1972 from R. D. Jackson, Attorney, Gulf Oil Corporation, to F. R. O'Hara, Attorney/Antitrust Counsel, Gulf Oil Corporation describing substance of discussions among counsel regarding proposed Canadian regulations concerning uranium marketing, distributed to I. W. Coleman, Associate General Counsel, Gulf Oil Corporation.

[Mr. Stevens.]

No. 37.

That an order of the House do issue for a copy of memorandum dated September 25, 1972 from Mr. O. J. C. Runnalls, Senior Advisor—Uranium, Department of Energy, Mines and Resources; Official of Uranium Canada, Limited a Crown corporation, to Mr. G. R. Albino, Official of Rio Algom, Ltd., a Canadian mining company; J. Kostuik, Official of Denison Mines, Ltd., a Canadian mining company; W. M. Gilchrist, Official of Eldorado Mines, Ltd., a Canadian Crown corporation; N. M. Ediger, Manager, Gulf Minerals Canada, Ltd.; K. E. Kegel, Official with Uranerz Canada, Ltd., a Canadian subsidiary of a West German company; and G. M. McNabb, Assistant Deputy Minister (Energy) of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources; Executive Vice President, Uranium Canada, Limited, a Crown corporation.

No. 38.

That an order of the House do issue for a copy of the memorandum dated September 26, 1972 from R. K. Allen, Counsel, Gulf Mineral Resources Company, a subsidiary of Gulf Oil Corporation; counsel, Gulf Minerals Canada, Limited to I. W. Coleman, Associate General Counsel, Gulf Oil Corporation describing the letter attaching outline of a proposal prepared by counsel for possible use in the then forthcoming negotiations with joint venture partner concerning the impact of regulations adopted by Canada's Energy Control Board, requesting legal advice from co-counsel regarding the proposal.

No. 39.

That an order of the House do issue for a copy of the memorandum dated October 11, 1972 from R. D. Jackson, Attorney, Gulf Oil Corporation to F. R. O'Hara, Attorney/Antitrust Counsel, Gulf Oil Corporation describing the letter concerning earlier consultation on legal points and recommending the giving of certain legal advice to the client regarding international uranium producers' arrangement.

No. 40.

That an order of the House do issue for a copy of the memorandum dated October 12, 1972 from F. R. O'Hara, Attorney/Antitrust Counsel, Gulf Oil Corporation to R. K. Allen, Counsel, Gulf Mineral Resources Company, a subsidiary of Gulf Oil Corporation; counsel, Gulf Minerals Canada, Limited describing the letter by counsel which sets forth legal comments and brief antitrust analysis concerning a matter on which client requested legal advice.

No. 41.

That an order of the House do issue for a copy of the memorandum dated November 20, 1972 from F. R. O'Hara, Attorney/Antitrust Counsel, Gulf Oil Corporation to N. M. Ediger, Manager, Gulf Minerals Canada, Limited describing the letter setting forth counsel's analysis and legal opinion with regard to antitrust considerations and advice with regard to compliance with antitrust laws, regarding international uranium producers' arrangements and direction by Canadian government that Gulf participate therein and distributed to R. K. Allen, Counsel, Gulf Mineral Resources Company, a subsidiary of Gulf Oil Corporation; counsel, Gulf Minerals Canada, Limited; W. Z. Estey, Partner, Robertson, Lane, Perrett, Frankish & Estey; counsel for Gulf Minerals Canada, Limited; J. McAfee, President, Gulf Oil Canada, Limited; M. E. Minks, General Counsel, Gulf Oil Corporation; J. C. Phillips, Vice-President, General Counsel, Gulf Oil Canada, Limited; and S. A. Zagnoli, President, Gulf Minerals Canada, Limited.

No. 42.

That an order of the House do issue for a copy of a letter dated January 2, 1973, from R. K. Allen, Gulf Mineral Resources Company, a subsidiary of Gulf Oil Corporation; counsel, Gulf Minerals Canada, Limited, to F. R. O'Hara, Attorney/Antitrust Counsel, Gulf Oil Corporation and distributed to N. M. Ediger, Manager, Gulf Minerals Canada, Limited and attaching letters dated December 27, 1972, from N. M. Ediger to S. A. Zagnoli, President, Gulf Minerals Canada Limited, and distributed to R. K. Allen and W. Z. Estey, Partner, Robertson, Lane, Perrett, Frankish & Estey; Counsel for Gulf Minerals Canada, Limited and December 22, 1972, from J. Austin, Deputy Minister of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources; President, Uranium Canada Limited, a Crown corporation to N. M. Ediger, setting forth legal conclusions and requesting legal opinion re client's proposed response to Canadian government's proposed directive.

No. 43.

That an order of the House do issue for a copy of an undated document being handwritten notes of a Gulf Attorney reflecting communication with client and statement of legal question in advance of preparation of formal legal opinion from the files of Gulf's Law Department bearing on the uranium cartel.

He said: Mr. Speaker, in entering the debate on the motions, to which you have just referred, I would point out that the debate arises from the government's refusal to release documents bearing on the uranium cartel. These are remarkable documents, Mr. Speaker, the most remarkable documents I have seen in my five years in this House, because they paint an incredible picture of administration officials conspiring with uranium producers to fix prices, set quotas, and rig bids in an effort to raise the price of uranium.

Even worse, these documents tell a chilling story of how government officials coached worried uranium producers in ways of circumventing the laws of the land, in ways of "minimizing the risks under the Combines Investigation Act." These are serious matters in themselves, so serious that they would warrant the release of the documents to a concerned House.

There is another more important point; one salient fact about these documents that I ask hon. members to bear in mind during this debate; and that is that a great many of these documents are now readily available in the United States. They are available to the United States Congress, to American courts in at least three states, to two federal and state investigative bodies and, in fact, they are available to any American who wants them and requests them of his government. All in all, something like 90 per cent of the documents I have requested from this government are available right now in the United States. Yet this administration has consistently denied them to this House.

The government went even further in suppressing this information. For the first time in Canadian history, the government moved retroactively to deny these documents, or any other information about the cartel, to Canadians. It passed an order in council to make it a crime for Canadians even to discuss the cartel. That order in council has been modified somewhat, but it still applies to members of government and industry who were involved in the cartel. In other words, anyone who knows anything about the cartel is still forbidden to shed any light on the matter. Such a move by a Canadian government is an insult to us all. To state my case as simply as possible, it is ludicrous that we in this House, and the Canadian people in general, should have to turn to United States tribunals for information about the activities of our own government, information which should rightly come from Ottawa.

We will undoubtedly hear many excuses from the government tonight why this House cannot be trusted with these documents. We will be told again—just as we have been told consistently over the past eight months—that the release of these documents is detrimental to our foreign relations, and in some strange manner would assist the extra-territorial application of United States law.

The central point I urge hon. members to consider as they listen to these arguments is that most of these documents are already in the hands of those foreign tribunals. They are there now. They were there when we asked for them last August. The only thing this administration accomplishes by denying them to Canadians is to humiliate this House and the Canadian people by making us look abroad for the information which should be forthcoming right here at home.

It is a sad mistake this government is making, and I for one think it is tragic that Canadians should once again be the last to find out what their government has been up to.

The second point we hope this House will consider is that this government has attracted widespread attention around the world for its efforts in setting up this cartel. It is incumbent upon this House to ensure that Canadians too—not just Americans, but Canadians as well—are given an opportunity to scrutinize first-hand the activities which have generated so much interest elsewhere. In other words, it is incumbent upon this House to ensure Canadians access to information about the uranium cartel at a time when that cartel is the object of such controversy abroad.

This is clearly no ordinary request for routine or ordinary documents. The "harmless", "informal marketing arrangement", to use their words, described by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie), has been stripped of its respectability by recent investigations and has been revealed to be the world's first international energy cartel since the end of the second world war. It showed OPEC how to do it. It is probably one of the most successful as well.

The price of uranium has shot up 700 per cent since Ottawa began its little adventure in marketing in 1972, and concerned electricity consumers and utilities around the world are combing through these documents for an understanding of how all this came about.

In the United States the cartel has become the subject of a congressional investigation in Washington, and an investigation by the New York state assembly. Ottawa's marketing agreement has found its way into lawsuits in Illinois, Virginia, New Mexico, and Pennsylvania, where the cartel has become the cornerstone in the largest and most complex round of civil litigations in U.S. history with claims and counterclaims in excess of $10 billion. In one of these lawsuits, a utility, the Tennessee Valley Authority, has named several Canadian uranium producers in a multimillion dollar action.

More recently the cartel was the subject of an 18-month United States federal grand jury that ended in a so-called "informational" indictment against Gulf Oil Corporation, and could possibly result in a number of civil actions against other cartel participants.

In short, this government has made history, though of a somewhat dubious sort. It has set up the first energy cartel and, in the process, has become embroiled in history's largest round of lawsuits. The judiciaries of three states and no less than two arms of the U.S. federal government are currently rummaging through the dirty linen surrounding this fiasco, and this administration still feels that the parliament and people of Canada cannot be trusted with a first hand look at what all the fuss is about. "Trust me", the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) says. That is the sum total of everything he has told this House about the cartel, "Trust me and I'll tell you everything you need to know. And right now the only thing you need to know is that the cartel is basically harmless. It didn't cause uranium prices to rise; the Arabs did. And anyway, it was the only way government could help a struggling industry."

We know from these documents that this simply is not so, Mr. Speaker. Three of the documents we requested detail very specifically how the cartel secretly conspired to take the price of uranium from $6 a pound in 1972 to over $18 a pound by the end of 1974. A 300 per cent increase in any commodity is not negligible, it is very substantial regardless of what this government says. As a result, the cartel we are discussing will have repercussions for the consumers of electricity as long as uranium is used to fuel nuclear generators.

If hon. members think my remarks are partisan in nature, then I refer them to a preliminary report on the cartel prepared by the Hon. Irwin J. Landes, chairman of the New York Committee on Corporations, Authorities and Commissions. Mr. Landes says very simply:

> From the information already developed by our staff, we are now beginning to re-evaluate New York's plans for nuclear energy development.
>
> One of the reasons the state was seriously considering nuclear options was the assumed low cost of nuclear fuel.
>
> We believe the cartel has set in motion price increases which put in doubt whether nuclear energy will continue to be a low cost energy source.
>
> The unique process of rate-setting allows the increased costs to flow directly through to the taxpayers.
>
> In New York state, it is our belief that price increases set in motion by the cartel could cost consumers $1 billion in New York alone between now and 1980.

Here in Canada where ambitious plans are under way for nuclear development in Ontario, New Brunswick, and possibly Quebec, the cost to consumers could be equally as high.

● (1712)

In New Mexico, Judge Edwin Felter was also unimpressed with arguments that the cartel has had little effect on energy costs. In a judgment that could cost a subsidiary of a cartel participant $1.2 billion, Judge Felter ruled as follows:

> The purpose and effect of the cartel was to limit the supply, control the production, allocate markets and fix the price of uranium.

He added:

> The cartel agreements were carried out effectively—the world market price of uranium was fixed at artificially high levels by the cartel.

He said that, contrary to the government's claims, the cartel pursued a "policy of secrecy . . . that expressly included" domestic markets.

The point is, Mr. Speaker, that while I have no personal interest one way or another in the outcome of the American litigation, I think it is important for this House to remember that two different independent inquiries in the United States have taken radically different views of the cartel than that put forward by this Trudeau emperor administration. I can think of no reason why either the Moss committee, the grand jury, or Judge Felter would take a partisan interest in Canadian politics, and we must ask ourselves why—in all the serious inquiry to date about the cartel—this administration alone views the cartel as basically innocent?

[Mr. Stevens.]

At any event, whether the Americans are looking for scapegoats for high energy costs that they themselves may be responsible for, or whether this administration is simply whitewashing the whole sorry mess, I think it is important that Canadians be given an opportunity to judge this matter for themselves. It is important that Canadians be given a clear and unimpeded view of the cartel, and these documents which, I repeat, are already in most cases available in the United States, are necessary for such an understanding.

I want to turn to one final matter before summing up. We have heard before, and we will no doubt hear again tonight, attempts to equate this reasonable request for documents with some ridiculous allegations that we on this side of the House are insensitive to the needs of the Canadian uranium industry, or that we are somehow "on the side of the Americans" to the detriment of Canadian interests. Nothing could be further from the truth, and I want to set the record straight.

There is no doubt that the uranium industry in the late sixties and early seventies was in trouble. The cutbacks in the British and American arms programs, as well as protective measures taken in the United States, had the effect of depressing uranium prices. Initiating a cartel was not the only way to help our industry. The cartel records show over and over again that other options were open to government if it wanted to assist a troubled industry. At least three of the documents I have requested spell out very clearly that this government could have set up a uranium marketing board, as it has with wheat, for example. It could put legislation before this House to ensure a two-price system that would raise world prices for uranium producers while protecting domestic users against excessive prices. In other words, Mr. Speaker, there were perfectly legal and open ways of coming to the rescue of a Canadian industry, ways in which Canadians, producers and consumers alike, could be protected. What disturbs us is not that the government moved to help our uranium producers, but that it chose secret, backroom conspiracies, with little regard for the Canadian consumer or the laws of the country.

There are today many thousands of Canadian jobs in the steel, footware, textile, nickel, copper, agricultural, and furniture industries that are just as endangered as those in the uranium industry in 1972. Yet no one would suggest that that gives government, or the industries carte blanche to violate the laws of the land, especially if perfectly legal and acceptable means exist to help those industries.

The government is trying to paint this whole episode with the broad brush of respectability, but I suggest that if nothing is wrong with the government's actions in the cartel then it has nothing to fear from releasing these documents to the Canadian people.

To sum up, Mr. Speaker, it is vital to the democratic process of review of government that these documents be released. Even if all of them were heretofore undisclosed, it would be in the best interests of an open and candid government to allow public scrutiny. The insanity of the situation is that documents requested in 23 out of 36 of my motions were already released by the Moss committee when we requested them from this government. Another eight or nine of them have come out in subsequent civil lawsuits. There is no danger to international relations or anything else in releasing to Canadians what is public knowledge around the world. Simply put, there is no need for the continuing cover-up. The cat is already out of the bag, whether the government likes it or not.

Eight months ago we first requested these documents on the basis of a promise of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to consider, expeditiously, their release. Four months later—the House was sitting for at least two of these months—the minister acted expeditiously in denying them. Let us look at the reasons he gave: one group we cannot have, he says, because they are not in his files. We can be forgiven our scepticism, Mr. Speaker, for questioning this because we know the minister ordered an all-inclusive roundup of cartel documents in November, 1976, from the very firm he now says owns them. If the documents are not in his files, Mr. Speaker, where are they? Are they on his farm, under his bed, or in a favourite shoe box?

There is another group of documents the minister says we cannot have because they would be damaging to international relations. But look at which documents these are. Motion No. 27, for instance, concerns the communication between an official of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources and an officer of a Canadian firm. Since when did the memos of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources to a domestic company become "international relations"? Perhaps the minister meant to say that the release of these documents would be harmful to public relations, not international relations.

I hope the government uses this debate tonight to end this ridiculous charade and release to Canadians what others have free access to already. We hope it will permit the Canadian people to make a candid and frank assessment of the cartel that was built secretly in the boardrooms of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources. After all, the Canadian public will be paying for it for a long time to come.

I am pleased that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is in the House this evening. I hope he will respond to my request in a positive way. There is, frankly, absolutely nothing in any document to which I have referred, or to which I refer in the motions, that should not be disclosed to the Canadian public. It is a sordid tale, Mr. Speaker, a tale of a government more concerned with cover-up and hiding facts than of levelling with the Canadian people. Perhaps the worst example of a government conspiracy to break the laws of Canada has been this instance of the uranium cartel fiasco.

In another jurisdiction we know what happened to the senior executive when they chose to break the laws of that land. In this country, unfortunately, we have a different system. In this country we would not have had a Watergate investigation, because basically if Mr. Nixon had been the Prime Minister of this country his consent would have had to be sought for the investigation. If Mr. Nixon were then to act in the way our emperor, the Prime Minister, acts in respect of the uranium cartel, the investigation would never have taken place.

Mr. Breau: You do not understand the parliamentary process.

Mr. Stevens: The hon. member says that I do not understand the parliamentary process. Sitting on the opposition benches and sensing the frustration of most members of this House with the absolutely dictatorial powers of the emperor, I certainly do understand the workings of parliament.

I see my time has just about elapsed, Mr. Speaker. The Canadian people are entitled to those documents. Certainly they may be embarrassing to the government, and certain ministers have now left the government, but it is time we had a little more linen washed in public. We must know what this government is up to as a result of its very complicated and cozy relations with uranium producers in this country.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have the motions of the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) on the order paper because they give us a chance to talk about the so-called uranium cartel and also about the kind of commitment and effort the federal government has made in relation to the uranium mining industry in Canada.

The economic well-being of ridings like mine in Algoma, and Uranium City in north Saskatchewan, have risen and fallen with the fortunes and misfortunes of the uranium mining industry in Canada. The Elliot Lake region of Ontario first came into prominence as a potential source of uranium in 1953 when exploration drilling activity commenced to test uranium showings in Quirke, Pecors, and Elliot Lake.

• (1722)

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I wish to rise on a point of order. If the hon. member wants to choose his own time to make a speech for home consumption, I would suggest he take another time than this. He has had absolutely nothing to say so far with respect to why the various documents I have requested production of should be produced or not.

An hon. Member: What arrogance!

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, if he has some evidence why these documents should not be produced, let him state it—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. Later in his speech the hon. member may be addressing his remarks to that and hon. members should listen to him.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, the documents which the hon. member has referred to have a great deal to do with the fortunes and misfortunes of the uranium mining industry of Canada—

Mr. Stevens: Let's see them.

Mr. Foster: —of which Elliot Lake is one of the prime producers—

Mr. Stevens: Let's see them.

Uranium Cartel

Mr. Foster: The hon. member sketched out a great deal of the history of the uranium mining industry when he was speaking, and I would hope he would allow the same degree of latitude on this side of the House. It seems to me that not only the hon. member for York-Simcoe but many of the members in this House have been greatly concerned with the uranium mining industry and the difficulties it experienced in the 1970s and 1960s which have led to the more favourable situation existing today.

I would like to remind the hon. member that this industry was not always as fortunate as it is today. The exact documents that he is talking about have some relationship to that difficulty—

Mr. Stevens: Let's see them.

Mr. Foster: I was mentioning that by 1955 negotiations had been completed for the sale of uranium concentrates to the extent of $300 million for the deposits located in the various parts of Canada.

The town of Elliot Lake was created to house the people needed to extract the uranium produced from the vast low-grade ores in that area. By 1959 shipments from Ontario, mostly from Elliot Lake, had reached an annual rate of 12,746 tons of uranium concentrates valued at some $269 million. Production from Saskatchewan and the Northwest Territories brought Canadian production in that year to almost 16,000 tons with a value of some $331 million; the highest for any mineral or metal exported from Canada in that year.

Of more importance is the employment which this uranium industry provided. In 1959 Canada had 19 uranium mills and 23 mines providing direct employment for some 13,600 people. The boom in uranium production was spurred by special price incentives offered by the United States, through Eldorado Mining and Refining, to obtain uranium for its military programs.

In November, 1959, the United States Atomic Energy Commission announced it would not take up its options to purchase additional uranium, so the industry had to substantially readjust downwards its scale of operations. As early as January, 1960, the number employed by the uranium mining industry in Canada had dropped by almost 2,000 to some 11,800, of which 8,500 were employed in the Elliot Lake area alone. Throughout 1960 the layoffs accelerated, so that by the end of 1960 employment in the uranium industry in Canada had declined to 6,000, of which 4,000 were in the Elliot Lake area.

Mines continued to close, so that the Canadian government in 1963 instituted the first of a series of stockpile programs to maintain the semblance of a uranium industry. Even with these programs, only three mining operations continued operating in Canada between 1964 and 1975, Eldorado Nuclear Limited in the Beaverlodge area of northern Saskatchewan, and Rio Algom and Denison Mines in the Elliot Lake region of Ontario. By 1971 employment in the uranium industry in Canada had declined to less than 2,300 employees, about 17 per cent of the peak employment in 1959. This employment was only maintained by the stockpiling programs of the Canadian government and those instituted by the producers themselves.

The community of Elliot Lake declined with the misfortunes of the Canadian uranium mining industry. The population in 1960, just at the start of the market crash, was some 25,000. By 1966 the population had declined to less than 6,700. Some recovery took place with the negotiation of contracts in the late 1960s with the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority and with Japanese utilities. A gradual return to the mining community took place so that by 1969 its population was some 9,500.

Growing concern with the limited market potential and the accumulating producer stockpiles threatened the well-being of the community again. And thus, in 1970 the government had to institute another stockpiling program. This one was a joint venture with Denison Mines to maintain a production level of 2,000 tons of yellow cake per year over the period 1971 to 1974.

Historically, about 70 per cent to 75 per cent of the world's uranium production has been in Canada and the United States, with the United States taking the major share of the production after the market collapse of the 1960s and the institution of the United States Atomic Energy Commission's restrictions on the enrichment of uranium for use in nuclear reactors within the United States.

In 1958 and 1959 for example, Canada's share of world uranium production was 37 per cent and the United States share 35 per cent to 38 per cent. By 1968 Canada's share dropped to 16 per cent while the United States share increased to 54 per cent. Canada's share would have been even less without the stockpiling policies of the Canadian government and private producers.

Not only Canadian producers were facing the dilemma of production over-capacity and the accumulation of stockpiles. Other non-U.S. uranium producers were also facing the same problems. In 1971 and 1972 the international uranium market was in a chaotic condition because of over-capacity, the accumulating stockpiles in both private industry and government warehouses, and because of the continuing efforts of some consuming utilities to play off one producer against another so as to reduce the price paid for uranium to an absolute minimum. Market deterioration was so serious in fact that some uranium sales were made at below $4 per pound of yellow cake, less than the operating costs alone for many producers in the world. Uranium policies originating in the United States served to exacerbate the difficulties being encountered by the producing industry.

Faced with the chaotic marketing conditions, the government had several options. The first of these was to let the uranium industry collapse. I assume that is what the hon. member for York-Simcoe probably would have done. The second choice was to continue with yet another expensive stockpiling program; the first three cost the Canadian taxpayer some $129 million. The third option was to try to alleviate the problem through discussions with government representatives of consuming nations; and fourth was to explore an arrangement with government officials of producing countries.

Following the first option would have been irresponsible and would have negated the efforts which had been followed in the 1960s to protect the industry. To follow the second option, that of stockpiling, would have only exacerbated the problem by creating more stockpiles to over-hang the market and deter its eventual recovery.

While the Canadian government had no success by its interventions in the 1960s to have the United States government reconsider its policies which were damaging the Canadian uranium industry, the then minister of energy, mines and resources and his officials did discuss the problem in 1971 with government representatives of consuming nations. One of the dangers envisaged was that, in the face of both devastating competition and unprofitable operations for producers, little or no exploration was likely to be undertaken in order to prove up the enormous quantities of uranium that would be required for the 1980s and beyond. The reactions to the Canadian concern were negative or neutral.

● (1732)

Lacking any positive results from these discussions, the Canadian government authorized officials of two Crown corporations, Eldorado Nuclear, Limited and Uranium Canada, Limited to meet with international uranium producers to discuss possible marketing arrangements for the non-U.S. market. The government also requested private producers to attend. The discussions led to an informal marketing arrangement which excluded the domestic markets of France, South Africa, Australia and Canada, and the United States domestic market.

The Canadian government was informed of and approved the marketing arrangements negotiated by Canadian uranium producers and supported the arrangements in Canada by issuing a regulation under section 9 of the Atomic Energy Control Act controlling such aspects as the minimum selling prices and volumes of sales to export markets. In essence, the government had decided that uranium should not be sold below what was considered to be a reasonable price for this non-renewable resource, and the amount to be exported should be distributed on an equitable basis among the several producing companies in Canada. While the minimum prices acceptable to Canada were revised on several occasions as prices recovered from their distressed levels, they were almost without exception below those reported for the protected United States market, and the last minimum price schedule sent to the Atomic Energy Control Board by the then minister of energy, mines and resources, Mr. Macdonald, on March 6, 1974 were far below the prices which prevail today.

The uranium price spiral of 1975 and 1976 was not caused by the uranium marketing arrangement but by factors outside the control of either the Canadian government or those producers who participated in the arrangement. Shortly after the Arab oil embargo was imposed and the price of imported oil increased four-fold, several countries declared an intention to expand markedly their nuclear power programs. Soon there developed an attitude among many utilities around the world that longer term purchasing arrangements for uranium should be negotiated and that, if necessary, a stockpiling policy should be adopted.

Then the United States Atomic Energy Commission proposed to relax the embargo on utilization of foreign uranium enriched in the U.S. facilities, and it soon became apparent that there was not enough uranium to supply all those requests that suddenly appeared in the market.

Canadian producers in early 1974 quoted prices of $12.50 per pound U_3O_8, well above the then current Canadian government's minimum directed price. At about the same time, curtailment of marketing activities occurred for diverse reasons in Australia, France, South Africa and other African countries. The curtailments placed even more strain on Canadian producers to meet the rising demand. Within the next few months, future Canadian sales of 45,000 tons U_3O_8 had been negotiated, ten times the current annual production in total. By the end of 1974, the world market price had reached about $15 per pound, essentially double that prevailing a year earlier.

The upward price spiral continued during 1975 for a variety of reasons. One reason was related to the fact that the light water reactor industry around the world, dependent as it was on U.S. enrichment, had decided from various USAEC announcements that the tails assay would probably be increased from 0.2 per cent to 0.25 per cent by 1977 and then to 0.3 per cent by 1981. Such a change would represent an increase in uranium feed requirements to the enrichment plant of some 20 per cent. Furthermore, there was a growing conviction that uranium and plutonium recycling from spent fuel was becoming less likely because of regulatory delays and actions by interveners in the United States.

Then came the announcement by U.S. Westinghouse in September 1975 that it would be unable to deliver some 32,500 tons U_3O_8 which it had contracted to sell to various utilities in the United States and abroad. The effects of this action contributed substantially to an increasing rise in the price of uranium as utilities sought to cover their shortfall by rushing into the market. As a consequence, the price reached the $40 level in early 1976.

For the past two years the market price has remained more or less stable with some slight upward adjustment to take account of inflation. This is despite the very marked slowdown in the rate of ordering and delays in construction of nuclear capacity. Requirements for uranium have not responded to this slower growth rate because many utilities made commitments to provide uranium deliveries to the U.S. enrichment plants based on nuclear programs envisaged in the early 1970s. So far the U.S. has not relieved their customers of these obligations.

Actions taken by the Canadian government in supporting the uranium marketing arrangement have assured a sound future for Canada's uranium industry. Production in 1977 from all Canadian uranium producers was some 7,500 tons U_3O_8 compared to the 4,100 ton level in 1971, just prior to the events which led to the marketing arrangement. Production is expected to increase to some 16,000 tons U_3O_8 by 1985, of which some 7,500 tons will be in the Elliot Lake area. In response to this increase in industrial activity, Elliot Lake is expected to grow from 12,000 today to 42,000 by 1985 or 1986.

Even though the marketing arrangement was not instrumental in the price increases which have taken place since 1974, Canada has benefited from the incentive it provided to companies to expand their exploration efforts. In the early 1970s when prices were abnormally low, there was essentially no incentive for uranium exploration in Canada and the level of expenditure in uranium exploration was less than $4 million per year. From 1974, exploration activity responded to the rapid rise in uranium price so that today the rate of expenditure on uranium exploration is in the order of $70 million per year. Promising new discoveries were made in 1975, 1976 and 1977 at Key Lake, Collins Bay, Midwest River and Maurice Bay in northern Saskatchewan. This can only lead to increased assurances of uranium supplies for both the domestic and export markets and the continued expansion of a sound uranium industry in Canada.

The hon. member for York-Simcoe has not been able to find many takers for his argument that the price of uranium has been pushed up by the marketing arrangement which Canada entered into with other countries of the world. For example, I have with me a letter from the chairman of the board of Denison Mines Limited, Mr. Stephen Roman, who was a political associate and was a supporter politically of the hon. member for York-Simcoe. This letter was sent to the shareholders of the company on October 19, 1977. In it he states that he ran twice as the Conservative candidate in an adjoining constituency to the hon. member. He is certainly no great supporter of the government. He points out in this letter that he not only supported the hon. member for York-Simcoe in his race for the leadership of his party but provided him with an aeroplane for his use at that time.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Another Otto Lang.

Mr. Foster: Let me just quote Mr. Roman from the letter:

> The allegations made by Mr. Stevens and his friends are completely unfounded and are, in fact, an irresponsible attempt to discredit the Canadian government and the Canadian uranium industry. Not only are the allegations unjust and baseless, they impugn the integrity of our company, our employees and, by association, our shareholders.

● (1742)

That is the view of the chairman of Denison Mines. There are several other interesting items further on. This is a letter sent not to the government but to the shareholders, and in it he refutes—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Hastings): My intervention will be extremely brief, Mr. Speaker. Like the previous speaker, I have a fairly heavy concentration of uranium in the northern part of my riding. I am well aware of the problems which have been evident in the industry for the last number of years and I am also aware of the efforts the government has made to be of assistance. I have talked to people who are interested in uranium in three different countries in the past week on two different continents and I know a little about the industry, having kept abreast of its affairs.

I do not disagree with three-quarters of what the hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) has said. However, what the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) is asking is perfectly reasonable. He wants to look at some of these documents. If what the Canadian government has done has been so exemplary, why cannot we see the paperwork? These documents are obviously in existence; no one has denied it. They are all available to the government. There was a time, not long ago, when we were told we would not be allowed even to mention the subject—we were going to get five years in jail if we talked about it. This in the free country of Canada.

Let us see these documents. I have no personal involvement in this matter. I know the people the hon. member for Algoma has talked about. I talk to them regularly. I call them friends. But, surely, if there is nothing sinister in these documents we ought to be able to see them. What is it about them which makes it so imperative that they remain top secret? The details the hon. member for Algoma gave about pricing, production, shipments and so on may well be correct—I did not listen very closely when he read the documents which had been prepared for him by the department—but I have to make this point again: If there is nothing in these documents which does other than embarrass the government, possibly, let us see them. Why should this smokescreen be kept up?

The hon. member for York-Simcoe has asked for a number of documents—20 or 25, I think it is. He has prepared his case well. He knows the documents are there. Let us have a look at them even though they may, possibly, be embarrassing to the government.

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I should like to deal with some of the points which have been raised by the hon. member for Hastings (Mr. Ellis) and the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) in their remarks this evening. Many in this House saw the hon. member for York-Simcoe revert to character as he attacked, on a point of order, the remarks made earlier by the hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Foster): I suppose most of us on this side have come to the conclusion that the hon. member for York-Simcoe misjudged this issue a long time ago and is now trying to wriggle out of the dangerous position into which he got himself and his party.

Mr. Stevens: Wriggle out?

Mr. Gillespie: He came on very strong, almost as a spokesman for the Moss committee—that is the committee in the United States—which is concerned with what was perceived to be the interest of U.S. corporations in uranium marketing during the early seventies. That committee subpoenaed a number of U.S. corporations, some of which had Canadian subsidiaries. It said, in effect: We would like to know what went on under the so-called international marketing arrangement. The reference was to the arrangement which Canada, Australia, France and South Africa, four independent sovereign countries, formed because they were threatened by the action of the United States government in closing its market and using certain other marketing practices, which the hon. member for Algoma has put on record, which we felt were in direct violation of the obligations under GATT, practices which would have spelled the end of the uranium industry in Canada if we had not reacted as a government.

Mr. Stevens: Let us see the documents.

Mr. Gillespie: But that is not something in which the hon. member was very interested until some of his own friends reminded him that he was on the wrong side of this issue, that a lot of Canadians had a great interest in this industry and depended upon it for their livelihood.

Mr. Stevens: This is unbelievable. What more do you want me to do?

Mr. Gillespie: The hon. member for York-Simcoe got on the wrong side of this issue. He is trying to say that some sort of arrangement was made which was somehow increasing the price in Canada as a result of a so-called cartel arrangement.

Mr. Stevens: Do you deny it?

Mr. Gillespie: If the hon. member gives me time, I will deal with that point. I am very pleased to see him smoked out. I am pleased to hear him indicate that this is really his concern.

I should also like to deal with some of the allegations he has made this evening. Not only did he show arrogance toward Canadian industries, arrogance toward a member of parliament who had been supporting the interests of his constituents in Algoma, but he showed great disdain for the Canadian people. He seems to believe they are a lot more gullible than we on this side believe them to be. He implied that the actions which were taken were taken by the Canadian government alone and not in concert with other countries, or that the Canadian government entered into an informal agreement with other countries and that, having done so, had no obligation to those other countries.

Mr. Stevens: Informal? How can you say that?

Mr. Gillespie: Call it a formal agreement, if you like, but we are still dealing with an informal arrangement. Let us not quibble about words. Canada was a party to an arrangement with other countries; that is my point.

The hon. member for Hastings suggested it would embarrass the government if copies of the documents were made public. When you enter into an agreement with other countries regarding the marketing of uranium and accept certain obligations as a member of that club—and the Canadian government did that—it should be important to put on the record that other countries which were also part of the arrangement took action in their countries to ensure that the documentation associated with that so-called cartel arrangement would not be made public.

● (1752)

The Australian parliament passed legislation which is, I am told, in every respect just as stringent as the order in council which was passed by this government. The British government, through its attorney general, has taken the case to the House of Lords. I am sure hon. members are aware of that. The French government has taken action. Other governments which were party to this arrangement have taken action to protect their interests — yes, their sovereignty too — because their industries were also faced with survival situations.

The hon. member for York-Simcoe has not said anything about that. He suggested that Canada could forget the fact that it entered into an arrangement with other sovereign countries to protect, in a collective sense, the interests of an important industry in those sovereign countries. The hon. member for York-Simcoe would have us repudiate our arrangements with those other countries. At times I am not sure whether the hon. member is concerned about questions of honour and reputation, but when we are dealing in the international field I suggest that our partners expect us to honour the spirit and letter of agreements.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am sure that the minister does not want to mislead this House. Would he make it clear that parliament has never condoned the actions he is asking us to observe as far as other countries are concerned?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I see no point of order.

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, again the hon. member is demonstrating his character. He is more interested in debate than in listening and getting information.

Mr. Stevens: What is wrong with debate? Let us have the documents.

Mr. Gillespie: Earlier the hon. member asked to be given reasons with respect to the combines side, and I told him that I would deal with that in my remarks.

I also pointed out that I thought the hon. member had misled the Canadian people by suggesting that somehow Canada had acted alone, had not acted in concert and therefore had no obligations, and that there would be no embarrassment whatsoever for Canada if Canada were to make public all the documents to which Canada had been party. He also implied that there was some sort of action here which could contravene the Combines Investigation Act. He did not mention that the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Allmand) took action to deal with that specific concern.

Mr. Stevens: Whitewash.

Mr. Gillespie: Quite wisely, the hon. member says.

Mr. Stevens: I said whitewash.

Mr. Gillespie: There may be some concern about this. Perhaps some of the confusion in the mind of the hon. member for York Simcoe emanates from the set of circumstances surrounding the regulation which the Canadian government passed for the purpose of protecting the sovereignty and, indeed, the confidentiality of the documents which minuted, one way or another gave effect to or reported on the arrangement of the Canadian government and preventing that information from leaving the country as a result of the extra-territorial application of the U.S. governmental or legal process.

Mr. Stevens: But it was already there.

Mr. Gillespie: That was the reason we took that action. The effect of that regulation was to provide an exemption from the Combines Investigation Act since the board was effectively regulating the volume of exports pursuant to an act of parliament.

The board I am referring to here is the Atomic Energy Control Board. The jurisprudence under that act holds that, in so far as the activities of an industry are effectively regulated, they cannot be in violation of the Combines Investigation Act. The regulation did not operate so as to exempt the producers from any activity which might unduly lessen competition in the domestic market, as it was the government's policy that the domestic market be excluded from the marketing arrangements. While we have no reason to believe that the arrangement did violate the Combines Investigation Act, it was because of the need to resolve allegations that it had done so that my colleague, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, directed the director of investigation and research to conduct a formal inquiry under the Combines Investigation Act. That inquiry is now well under way and has had full access to documents and other material in respect of the marketing arrangement.

We do not believe there was any contravention of the Combines Investigation Act because the so-called cartel excluded the Canadian market, as it excluded the U.S. market and the markets of each of the member countries I have mentioned. However, just in case there was, and to meet allegations, action was taken to ensure that the Canadian public interest would be protected, and the director of combines investigations has had, as I have indicated, full access to the documents and will in due course be making his report.

I have dealt with two of the substantive points raised by the opposition. I have dealt with the question of embarrassment to the Canadian government in a situation of this kind in a way which leaves no question about embarrassment when a country enters into an international arrangement. I have also dealt with other allegations of the hon. member for York-Simcoe about the combines side. I believe I have dealt with that conclusively. It is important to remember that if this action had not ben taken, the Canadian uranium industry, as the hon. member for Algoma made clear in his remarks, would not be in the healthy state it is in today.

Mr. Stevens: Why not a marketing board?

Mr. Gillespie: It would not be planning the major expansion it is planning. It would not be in a position to provide uranium fuel for our famous Candu system which is now providing about one quarter of the electric power needs of the province of Ontario.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. The hour provided for the consideration of private members' business having expired, I do now leave the chair until 8 p.m.

At 6 p.m. the House took recess.

● (2002)

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

INCOME TAX ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Chrétien that Bill C-56, to amend the statute law relating to income tax and to authorize payments related to provincial sales tax reductions, be read the second time and referred to committee of the whole.

Mr. Herbert: Mr. Speaker, when I stopped speaking for the summer break—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Herbert: Judging from the attendance in the House this evening, it may well be the summer break. Before the adjournment for supper, I spoke about the attitude of the Quebec finance minister, Mr. Parizeau, and I said that if Mr. Parizeau is not prepared to deal his hand when Quebec is still a part of Canada, I cannot understand how he proposes to deal with his English-speaking counterparts in a sovereignty association environment. Certainly we were told by the premier of Quebec that while Quebec was still a part of Canada he would try to abide by the rules.

The strange thing is that the finance ministers in the other nine provinces expressed concern at the attitude of Mr. Parizeau. In fact, they told the Canadian Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) that they would have preferred the acceptance by Quebec of the original proposal, this despite any reluctance that they expressed themselves. This is surely the name of the game when we negotiate together in a reasonable spirit, being desirous of having some kind of an agreement.

● (2012)

I want to make reference to the telegrams which have been sent to Quebec members of parliament from Quebec, specifically from their counterparts in provincial ridings. I received a quite lengthy telegram quoting the same motion I have read in all the newspapers. There is one word that struck me in the motion itself, and that is the word "provocation". I would take issue with it on this ground. As far as I am concerned there is only one person who has done any provoking, and that is the finance minister, Mr. Parizeau, who stood silent for three weeks and was unable in those three weeks to talk about his jurisdiction. He stood silent for one reason only—because he intended to provoke. As I said before the supper break, there was never any intention on his part of reaching any agreement, and we should bear this in mind in any future dealings.

This telegram is rather strange because it talks about the injustice toward citizens in the province of Quebec of low revenue, particularly old age persons or senior citizens. As I mentioned earlier, I find this passing strange because the benefit that everyone gains is from the reduction in the sales tax. Am I to assume, then, from the telegram that the older people in Quebec are being discriminated against because there is an 8 per cent sales tax reduction only on shoes, on clothes and on furniture? I would assume that most old age persons are not buying furniture. If there is an injustice it is because those same old age persons are not able to benefit from any sales tax reduction on most of their purchases which fall outside the items in respect of which the Quebec finance minister has decided to remove the sales tax.

As far as provincial autonomy is concerned, let me refer to the last paragraph of the telegram. Again I find this passing strange. Everyone accepts that any province can reduce or increase sales tax as it wishes. In fact, and I can be corrected if I am wrong, there is nothing to stop any province from making further adjustments in sales tax up or down at any time in the future. Thus there is surely no interference as far as sales tax is concerned. I am left to infer, then, that the alleged lack of respect for provincial autonomy must refer to the action in respect of federal income tax, that sum being remitted to all taxpayers in the province of Quebec.

Once again I ask myself, is this not federal jurisdiction, and is not the federal government at all times free to increase or decrease federal sales tax for everyone in Canada? Thus I find it passing strange that this type of telegram should be sent to members. Is it not the péquiste party that imposed the tax on children's clothing, something that was not done in any other province except the province of Quebec? Now they have seen the error of their ways and have taken the tax off children's clothing. They think the federal government should reimburse them for their errors. I do not think so. If there is any inequity it is caused at the provincial level.

I want to pass quickly to some remarks made by the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) yesterday in his speech. If I can quote him, he said:

> The government never explained why it chose to go the provincial sales tax route as opposed to the federal sales tax route which could be used as a device to increase the buying power of Canadians.

This is the type of misrepresentation and hypocrisy that comes all the time from members of the Conservative party. The reason that route was not chosen was well explained. It was because there would be no immediate impact on prices. In fact, there might have been only a partial impact on future prices because there was always the possibility, with a change in federal sales tax, which is a hidden tax, that the reduction might not necessarily be passed on to the consumer. This was fully explained and why he should make such a remark I do not understand. He also goes on to say:

> If this government is now willing to listen to proposals from Quebec, why was it not willing to listen to those proposals before bringing in Bill C-56?

What happened during those three weeks? What happened to Mr. Parizeau? Was he struck dumb or what? I do not understand. I cannot for the life of me see why, because he waited until after the budget in order to come in with his preposterous proposal, we should give any more credit to them now than we did before the budget was proposed.

The hon. member for York-Simcoe then goes on to say, talking about the province of Alberta:

> —if I were a resident of Alberta I would find most objectionable the fact that, by being a resident of that province, I am deemed to have more wealth than those in other areas of the country and should receive absolutely no benefit.

Once again, there is no sales tax in Alberta so there cannot be a reduction in sales tax. The Albertan loses nothing. How, under those circumstances, can we be complaining that there is no reimbursement of moneys which have not been lost? Frankly I fail to understand that argument. In the same breath we have members of the Conservative party talking about the inequality existing between the maritimes, Quebec and the other provinces. They cannot have it both ways.

The hon. member for Kingston and The Islands (Miss MacDonald) during today's question period talked about the denial of the right to make a decision in the field of provincial jurisdiction. Once again I do not really understand what the Tories are talking about. No one has interfered at any time with the provincial right to change provincial sales taxes up or down as they please, including an additional change-over and above what the Canadian Minister of Finance was proposing.

When we talk of the problem in Quebec, if there is one, it is simply that the minister of finance in Quebec has always collected his own provincial taxes. This has been going on since 1954. As I mentioned before supper, the cost of collecting provincial sales tax is over $100 million; something in the order of $120 million. That is a direct cost to the people of Quebec. That is an inequity, and that is one of the reasons the people in Quebec are paying so much higher provincial sales tax than people in any other province of Canada. As I have often said, even as a member of parliament, we pay many hundreds of dollars, some of us a thousand dollars, more in provincial tax because we live in the province of Quebec than we would pay in the province of Ontario.

I should like to make reference also to some remarks made today by the member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent). First of all, I was pleased to hear of his recognition of the fact that the Canadian Minister of Finance was consulting with the provinces. The hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby went on to talk about the fact that the people of Quebec are only getting what the people of Ontario are getting and that they should get the same as the maritimes. He forgets that the alternative proposal of the Canadian Minister of Finance was to do just exactly that and put Quebec in the same position as the maritime provinces.

Furthermore, he goes on to quote some figures, and I find those figures most interesting. I would like to repeat them, though he used them for an entirely different purpose. He says that in the province of Quebec more goods are produced by other countries and provinces, and he quotes, for example, the shoe industry, in respect of which only 22 per cent of shoes sold in Quebec are made in the province of Quebec; more than 22 per cent are made in Ontario and 54 per cent are imported. There is an 8 per cent reduction in the tax on all those items, so we are not just assisting Quebec industry but imports as well. The same thing applies in respect of furniture, with only 30 per cent of the furniture sold in Quebec being made in Quebec. In respect of textiles, 24 per cent are made in Quebec. Once again, if there is an inequity or stupidity it is in the inference that the 8 per cent tax reduction is good just for Quebec. The 8 per cent reduction in tax in Quebec is as much of assistance to provinces such as Ontario as it is to Quebec, and the Quebec people should realize that. In the meantime, because there is not a 2 per cent reduction on other products, other industries of manufacture in Quebec are not getting any benefit.

● (2022)

We have often talked about the fact that Quebec purchases goods from Ontario and Ontario purchases goods from Quebec. The difference is that 20 per cent of Quebec purchases are made in Ontario and only about half as many, 11 per cent, of Ontario purchases are made in Quebec. The obvious inference is that Quebec is much more dependent on Ontario than Ontario is on Quebec.

One last point I would like to make concerning figures is that whereas today the federal tax is approximately 40 per cent of the total tax take of the three levels of government—federal, provincial and municipal—some years ago the situation was reversed. Quite obviously there is less power in the hands of the federal government today to adjust various factors, to adjust the economy, as a result of this smaller portion of the taxing power that the federal government has. In addition, despite the fact the federal portion has dropped from approximately 60 per cent to today's 40 per cent, included in the federal portion today are all the programs of redistribution of incomes which are surely a direct benefit to the provinces and particularly to the have-not provinces such as the province of Quebec.

As far as the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Clark) is concerned—and I feel that everybody has been very hypocritical in their remarks on this particular bill—he talks about interference in provincial jurisdiction and yet only today he proposes a motion criticizing the government of Russia. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that if we have a right to attempt to interfere in the jurisdictions of other countries—and bearing in mind that the same motion that was proposed today was proposed the day before by a member on this side of the House but was negatived by members on the other side of the House—then surely we have a right at least to make some suggestions in an area of provincial jurisdiction.

Mr. Stevens: You are a commie lover.

Mr. Herbert: Mr. Speaker, they can make any remarks they like. I am talking about interference in another jurisdiction. The Tory party is very quick to complain whenever there is any suggestion that the United States might be meddling in Canadian affairs.

I support the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) when he said that we members here represent all Canadians. We are expected as federal members to be Canadians, but that does not stop us from representing our ridings or our province. In all the remarks I have made this afternoon, before supper and again in closing here, what I said I meant for the people in my riding first, for the province of Quebec second, and for the Canadian people third. Because it is all the same. As I said at the opening of my remarks, I have never felt so strongly about an issue. We are not talking just about Bill C-56; we are talking about what Canada is all about.

If we can have no discussions between our provinces today when we still theoretically belong together, then we might as well pack up and go home. Because if we are unfortunate enough to see a Conservative government at some future stage, with the direction in which they are moving we have de facto separation and we will not need a referendum to decide what is going to happen to Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, I want to say at the outset that we, of the official opposition, have listened with great interest to the speech made this afternoon by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby, the Leader of the New Democratic Party. I want to state immediately, Mr. Speaker, that we fully support the amendment he put forward.

If the Prime Minister was serious in the remarks he made yesterday about the necessity to delay the passage of the bill another month, these remarks can be interpreted to mean that he wants to hold real and serious consultations with the provinces concerning the question we are debating tonight. We, on this side of the House, are convinced the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby will give this government another month during which consultations may be held with the provinces as well as private citizens on the very complex problem that is before us tonight.

[English]

I say most regretfully, Mr. Speaker, that in all my years sitting on the left side of the Chair in this House, I have never seen our federal government commit a greater series of errors than they have in the handling of the sales tax case with the provinces which we are discussing tonight. The hallmark of the Prime Minister's and the Ministers of Finance's approach to this matter has been gross incompetence, arrogance and political expediency at the price of hurting national unity.

In spite of the simplistic approach of the hon. member we just heard from, the approach of this government is inflexibly based on the proposition that Ottawa has all the answers and that the provinces are to be consulted but never listened to; that all the conventional wisdom rests here in Ottawa and the provinces can never suggest anything, because once the Prime Minister consults his federal bureaucrats nothing can change no matter how good the suggestions are from the provinces. This shows a complete disregard for the realities of contemporary Canada and its regional and provincial diversities, as well as a complete disregard for the Canadian constitution, provincial powers and provincial jurisdiction.

This matter has been handled by a tired government in complete disarray, a government without direction and without new ideas to challenge Canadians. I have got to add a proviso here. Not so many months ago the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert), who has just spoken, said this was the worst government Canadians have had to put up with since the second world war. I would like to go one step further than the hon. member, who reluctantly supports this tired government: the handling of this serious matter has confirmed in the minds of all Canadians once and for all something that we in the opposition have witnessed and have known for many months, namely, that this government now sitting to the right of you, sir, is undoubtedly the worst government we have ever had in Canada since confederation. And I say this regretfully. In speaking to people from coast to coast I find they say this is the worst government, and historians will judge it so. This is the worst government that has sat in office since confederation. It must go and the sooner the better.

Mr. Penner: Save it for the election.

Mr. Grafftey: There might not be an election because this Prime Minister hasn't got the guts. He looks at one poll, and he hasn't got the guts to face the electorate. I cannot say that for the electorate because, frankly, the Canadian people cannot put up with another few months of the worst government since confederation.

When I was a young man I joined the board of a medium sized Canadian company, and at my first session sitting on the board of directors at a directors' meeting I turned to one of my fellow directors and I said, "Is this company strong and healthy?" He said, "My good Heward, it is strong and healthy; it has survived ten successive years of mismanagement!"

● (2032)

When I look at the way this sales tax was handled, I say to the Canadian people do not despair; this is a strong and healthy country because it has survived ten consecutive years of gross mismanagement. But this sort of nonsense has to stop, Mr. Speaker. I spoke to an older constituent of mine who has voted Liberal, who has voted Conservative—he has voted against me as well as for me—and he said, "I am 90 years old and in my 90 years as a Canadian citizen I have never seen a government in Ottawa bungle a single matter as much as the federal government has bungled the sales tax proposition."

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, as for the question under consideration this evening, I categorically ask: Who are the people who support this bill? The Quebec legislature, including each opposition party? No. The people and groups of concerned citizens in Quebec? No. Members of the opposition in Ottawa? No. Mr. Ryan, the great Liberal leader in Quebec? No. And since the federal government reversed its stand earlier this week, the citizens and governments of other provinces? No. The turnabout of the federal government announced this week is the most significant one that I have seen during all the years that I have been in Ottawa. And finally, Mr. Speaker, do several government members sincerely support this bill? No they don't.

Mr. Speaker, there is an amusing saying in English which goes like this: Everybody is out of step but me. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) should think about it and for the sake of our country, and the well-being of our Canadian economy, they should withdraw that bill as soon as possible and ask the advice of the provinces in a spirit of understanding and good feeling. They should at least accept the amendment moved by the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) this afternoon. And you, hon. members on the government side or rather members from the province of Quebec—I think now of the hon. members for Maisonneuve-Rosemont (Mr. Joyal) and for Compton (Mr. Tessier)—the people of Quebec are looking at you now with much interest. They want to know what is more important: you, the hon. members from the province of Quebec or the legitimate aspirations of the whole Quebec population as expressed by a unanimous vote of the National Assembly and by several private groups in the province of Quebec.

I am calling upon members from the province of Quebec tonight. What is your stand? Because on many occasions, you have talked to me in the halls and said: We are against that! The Minister of Finance is stupid and crazy! It is all nice and easy to say that in the halls of Parliament Hill, in the caucus of the Liberal party, but are you going to stand for the legitimate rights of your fellow-citizens in the province of Quebec, and speak up on their behalf? You have a great opportunity, right now. Now is your chance, my hon. friends, hon. members from the province of Quebec, to defend the legitimate rights of your fellow-citizens.

I repeat what was said last week at the National Assembly, the population of the province of Quebec is keeping a close eye on you. I would like to know what you the government members of the province of Quebec consider most important, the interests of your own party or the interests of the population of Quebec.

I am pleading with you. Did you listen, as I did, to the opinions expressed by your fellow citizens of the province of Quebec, by the opposition parties in the National Assembly and, since the beginning of this week, by the provincial governments that have spoken against the measure we are debating tonight? I am pleading with each and every member from the province of Quebec regardless of their political party. We should work together to convince the government to withdraw this bill as soon as possible and, in order to remedy the situation, to consult the provinces in a spirit of mutual understanding. It is not too late.

I think and I hope that when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) mentioned yesterday afternoon in the House of Commons during the question period that he would probably consult the provinces in a spirit of understanding, that he will be doing so with the full support of the government and some members of the province of Quebec so as to remedy this situation as soon as possible.

On many occasions, Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister said that we supported the Quebec separatist option because we were in favour of the resolution adopted by the National Assembly concerning the sales tax proposal. Well, let me tell the right hon. Prime Minister that I hate the kind of federalism you and your government have been imposing on Canada for the past ten years. Because of your recent confrontation with the provinces on the sales tax issue, because of you inflexibility, your arrogance, no one has done more than the current Prime Minister of Canada and his government to reinforce the two solitudes and help the separatist cause.

[English]

An hon. Member: You are not serious!

Mr. Grafftey: I could not be more serious. How did the Parti Québécois come to power? Was it in a spirit of goodwill or nonconfrontation as practised by this government?

What is the situation in the province of Quebec now? I was only too glad to see a federal budget with sales tax proposals that would obviously help the secondary manufacturing sector in the province of Ontario. I am glad about that. In dealing primarily with the secondary manufacturing industry in the province of Ontario, in dealing with the flexible approach to the legitimate demands of Saskatchewan and British Columbia, I was glad of many things contained in the sales tax proposal.

[Translation]

During the preparation of this budget the federal government showed enough flexibility in terms of the sales tax to accommodate the needs and requirements of the provinces of British Columbia, Saskatchewan and Ontario. I ask now: Why not Quebec?

[English]

I have before me briefing notes for the consultative task force on tariff negotiations. If the textile industry in Quebec or across Canada got their hands on these there would be a fine how-do-you-do. Let me read just two paragraphs regarding the situation in the province of Quebec vis-à-vis textiles, clothing and furniture. This has nothing to do with separatism or federalism. This report cites that in the Quebec manufacturing sector the overriding issue is one of adjustment to competitive pressures on the traditional sectors of textiles, clothing, footwear and furniture. I hope members opposite will listen to what I say, including my confrères from the province of Quebec. Quebec has borne the brunt of the recent decline in Canada's manufacturing employment. Our data suggest that between October 1976 and October 1977 average manufacturing employment in Canada dropped by 34,000; about 30,000 of this net loss was in Quebec, with the great majority in the traditional sectors. Did hon. members hear that? Are they listening? Thirty thousand jobs lost in Quebec out of 34,000 across Canada in the traditional sectors of shoes, clothing, textiles and furniture. Members opposite wonder why Mr. Parizeau replied with that eminently sensible proposition. And they have the gall to support a Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) who wants to confront people and call them separatists for supporting this eminently sensible suggestion.

● (2042)

In this package of euphemisms, the last paragraph of the report states:

Some industries will, however, remain the focus for industrial adjustment. These include the traditional sectors of textiles, some clothing, footwear and furniture—

For these industries the policy of the government and its objectives should be to reduce progressively the employment phase. Oh, the government has done that—through increased rationalization behind the necessary minimum of transitional protection.

This government has messed up the economy in the province of Quebec, Mr. Speaker. Let us go from the general to the particular.

[Translation]

In the town of Cowansville, which is in my constituency, the Bruck Mills textile plant employed more than 1,000 workers fifteen months ago. Now, there are only 500 workers left. In one town where there are 12,000 residents we have lost 1,000 jobs in the textile sector. Five years ago, Vilas, a company that specializes in furniture, employed 500 workers. Today the plant is almost closed.

In Cowansville we have two small shoe manufacturing industries which will soon close their doors or go bankrupt as a result of the federal government's policy. The same story goes for the rest of the province of Quebec. The only thing I ask from the members of the opposition is to forget all the stupidities concerning this bill and to support the legitimate requests of the national assembly of our province.

[English]

Here is a headline in today's newspaper which states "Yarn mills to close, 200 will lose jobs". Does a headline like this not indicate to the government that we have a particular problem involving textiles, shoes, clothing and footwear?

Mr. Stevens: They don't care.

Mr. Grafftey: Hon. members don't care? Are hon. members not listening? For the next five years, three years or four years will you just have a Pavlovian dog responsible for everything coming from the province of Quebec and saying "Separatist, separatist, separatist"? Because if you do, my friends, nobody but you and your Prime Minister will aid the cause of separatism more.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Grafftey: I will tell you what happened, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

Because of the traditional situation, this government thinks it automatically has the Quebec electorate in its pocket.

[English]

For this reason, because the Liberals get their electoral support from the province of Quebec automatically, they think Quebec can put up with any insult and any mismanagement of their economy by this government. They think they will still vote Liberal. Wait until the next Gallup poll, Mr. Speaker. The Liberals will see what they have done to the electorate in the province of Quebec on this measure.

This particular budget regretfully was prepared not for the long-term good of Canada and Canadians, but for an election. It was the old Liberal strategy of divide and rule. It was not prepared for serious discussion in this House as we are doing tonight. But once and for all we have caught the Liberal government at their own game. Once and for all both French-speaking and English-speaking Canadians have seen the game of the right hon. Prime Minister—one policy for the rest of Canada and another policy for the province of Quebec.

An hon. Member: That is not true.

Mr. Grafftey: Once and for all, what was the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) up to? What was the hon. Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations (Mr. Lalonde) up to, and what was the Prime Minister up to? They were trying to escalate the confrontation between Quebec and the rest of Canada for short-term votes for an election which the Prime Minister did not have the guts to call.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Grafftey: The last thing that this Prime Minister and the King government expected to have to do was to come before the House of Commons and justify their chicanery to the people of Canada. Now the chickens have come home to roost and the government is caught, my friends.

Mr. Paproski: Right on.

Mr. Grafftey: The government wanted a confrontation during an election. The Liberals wanted to go to English-speaking Canada and say: "Only the Liberal party can save you from this big, bad man Lévesque and all those terrible separatists". The Liberals were going to confront and confront. Forget Canada, and forget why this Prime Minister makes Mackenzie King look like a statesman.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Grafftey: The government took Quebec for granted and thought it could insult Quebec with this proposition. Then it went to the rest of the country and said: "Look how tough we can be with Quebec". Well, my friends, wait until the next Gallup poll is out; it will be seen that it was the biggest backfire in Canadian history.

[Translation]

Ottawa does not have a monopoly on shrewdness when it comes to economic measures. From time to time, provincial governments also have good ideas. I may be repeating myself for the second, the third or even the fourth time, but I submit it is not too late for you to withdraw this bill and to accept as soon as possible, first of all, the amendment proposed by the NDP this afternoon and, second, the proposition made by the National Assembly of Quebec.

[English]

What we are being confronted with this evening and during this week proves more than ever—and I agree with the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) on this point—that we are in dire need of constitutional revision. When I think of the wasted ten years since this Prime Minister has taken over, my heart nearly breaks in two. I remember when I greeted my friend, the right hon. Prime Minister, when he came here as a backbencher over ten years ago. I think of the number of times when I sat in the parliamentary cafeteria with him and said to him: "Mr. Trudeau, with our social, cultural and political atmosphere, but moreover because of economic duplication and waste, if there is one thing you can do it is to help bring meaningful constitutional change to Canada as quickly as possible." He said to me: "I have not come up here to do that. The present BNA Act is flexible enough for my needs." Subsequently I found out what he really meant.

I say regretfully, Mr. Speaker, that the Fathers of Confederation drafted the British North America Act feeling that it would always be, in cases of prime ministers, in the hands of statesmen. But in this case they were wrong. The Prime Minister has used the British North America Act as no other Prime Minister in the history of this country has used it for short-term political advantage and confrontation. Look what we have today. The chickens have come home to roost and we are divided as we have never been divided before. Do hon. members think I say this with any partisan delight? No. I say to members opposite, where are the members from the province of Quebec? Could anything be more obvious than that by supporting the Prime Minister as he sinks with his ship they are flying in the face of every single opinion, not only from the province of Quebec, but from all over Canada?

● (2052)

When I ran a company several years ago and I announced my position, very often my branch managers or section heads revised my opinion. They told me they thought I was wrong. I accepted their advice. Did I think I lost face? Their advice perhaps saved my company. Is it really too much to expect the Prime Minister and this government to forget their pride for a minute and accept a measure that would be good for Canada, particularly for our province? In the name of God I ask him to do this.

It has been cited time and time again—and we have a report in our hands emanating from the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce—that the traditional sectors of textiles, clothing, footwear and furniture are very strong in Quebec.

[Translation]

Several members have noted on many occasions that, as far as the traditional sectors are concerned, we import many goods from the other provinces. I agree with you that we do not have the exact figures—and neither have you—but I am under the very strong impression that if we adopt the proposal made by the Quebec National Assembly, this will help enormously not only the traditional sectors within the province of Quebec and low income groups, but also the economy of the other provinces, because of these imports.

[English]

What about the fact that we have discussed during this debate, that the measure of returning refunds to the province of Quebec will almost 100 per cent obliterate many of the benefits that the Minister of Finance intended in his original budget speech? When he presented his speech, he said, as reported at page 4319 of Hansard:

> Any further stimulus should obviously be fast-acting. It should encourage consumer spending, not more spending by government. It should offset some of the temporary factors which are pushing up prices. This is particularly important now, on the eve of the start of decontrol.
>
> A reduction on retail sales taxes fits these requirements best, and has the added advantage—

He said this many times in his speech over television and outside.

> —of benefitting all those who spend in Canada, even those who do not pay income tax.

[Mr. Grafftey.]

[Translation]

About the proposal announced by the Minister of Finance this week, could you, as elected representatives of the province of Quebec, explain to me how this rebate proposal can help the people who pay the sales tax, the poor, who do not pay any income tax? Do not try, because it is impossible to explain the unexplainable!

[English]

It is clear that because of the economic mismanagement of this government, the low and middle income people of the province of Quebec are being beaten like nobody else in this country by high inflation and a staggering rate of unemployment. Now the federal government, because of its intransigence, will not budge on this measure. They are proposing a counter-proposal or another proposal that will send rembourse-ments or refunds to people who really do not need them.

I can think of thousands and thousands of people in my constituency and the constituencies of almost every member of the province of Quebec who do not pay income tax but will pay sales tax and will not be helped at all because of this measure. Hon. members opposite know it and I know it.

The Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister have created confusion in this confusing debate with all their sophistry. They do not understand and therefore have confused the difference between tax room, tax points and tax mechanism. Will the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister get on their feet in this House and show to us that they really know the difference between tax room, tax points and tax mechanism? They do not. It is for this reason that I and all thinking Canadians realize that with this new proposal this week they have balkanized this country as it has never been balkanized before.

[Translation]

The right hon. Prime Minister has on numerous occasions strongly criticized the province of Quebec when they claimed that separation was already a fait accompli. And now, with such a treatment for the province of Quebec, the federal government and the right hon. Prime Minister in turn claim that with such a policy of reimbursement to Quebec taxpayers federalism is already a fait accompli. We now have the proof, Mr. Speaker. I ask another question to hon. members. Is the sales tax a provincial or federal jurisdiction?

[English]

Supposing that at nine o'clock tomorrow evening I invited myself to your house, Mr. Speaker, for dinner. Supposing I not only invited myself for dinner and accepted my own invitation, but I then walked into your house and decided to rearrange all of your furniture and your pictures. Would you not be a little annoyed? Sure you would be. That is what this arrogant, intransigent, confronting government has done with every province, one after the other.

[Translation]

And that is exactly what you are doing with the province of Quebec today.

[English]

No wonder this country is divided as it never has been divided before. This government's dividing policies have brought this country almost to its knees. Most thinking Canadians now realize that you do not have to be a good Liberal to be a good Canadian.

The other day I took the Minister of Finance at his word. Yesterday we found out that in March, speaking with the minister of finance from the province of Ontario, on many occasions—

[Translation]

—before the Minister of Finance had introduced his budget here in the House of Commons, the Quebec minister of finance had on many occasions rejected the proposal by the federal Minister of Finance.

[English]

Let us be quite clear about it. I am basing my remarks on the fact that I know, and members opposite know, that on at least three occasions before the Minister of Finance presented his budget in the House of Commons, Mr. Parizeau objected to the proposition. Some years ago Mr. Howe said "What's a million?" This Minister of Finance is now saying "What's three million?"

[Translation]

It is obvious that because of the arrogance of the federal government in applying the rebate formula for the sales tax in the province of Quebec, the Canadian taxpayers will waste at least $3 million.

• (2102)

[English]

How many times has the Prime Minister stated both in this House and outside that the federal government should never use tax leverage to force the provincial governments to do something they would not otherwise wish to do? He has said so time and time again.

[Translation]

Why make an exception today? How often did the Prime Minister notice that, because of the taxation powers of the federal government, he should not compel the provinces to take measures they do not want to take. You have the answers. Why make an exception today for the sales tax in the province of Quebec? I wonder why. I am going to tell you why. It is because once again the Prime Minister wants to resort to confrontation and say to the English provinces: I am the only one able to keep Quebec like this! Yes.

[English]

Why did the Minister of Finance in announcing this program not tell us how much money was available and then set out the broad lines of his policy, afterwards letting each province administer the details? The government believes all the conventional wisdom exists in Ottawa and that the provinces know nothing. But that is not the main reason they took the action they did. Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance did not want Quebec to agree to this measure. They wanted Quebec not to agree. They made it impossible for Quebec to agree with it because they thought they were going into an election and they wanted a spirit of confrontation so as to escalate the national unity debate and make Canadians forget about the economy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Grafftey: But I say this to members opposite: you have been caught at your own game. There is no election. The gutless Prime Minister backed away from it on the basis of one poll, and now you are in the highest forum in the land trying to explain the inexplicable, trying to explain your chicanery.

An hon. Member: You are in bed with the péquistes.

Mr. Grafftey: We are in bed with the péquistes! That is the most slanderous remark I have heard for a long time. I am just as good a Canadian as you are. I will fight the péquistes as hard as the hon. member will fight them. But like my father before me, I will fight the Liberal government.

[Translation]

—one policy for the English, another policy for the French, and they wonder how come the country is as divided as it is.

[English]

I am not a separatist, I am a federalist. But I detest the kind of intransigent confrontation federalism practised by the worst government since confederation which has divided this country as it has never been divided before. I will fight with my life, like my father before me, in such a cause. We have not forgotten such statements as "Conscription if necessary but not necessarily conscription". The present Prime Minister makes Mackenzie King look like a statesman.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his allotted time has expired. He may continue by unanimous consent.

An hon. Member: No. We want Paproski!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Does the House give consent for the hon. member to continue?

Mr. Grafftey: I do not think hon. members really want me to carry on, but I will say this:

[Translation]

It is not too late. It is not too late. I really hope that the Quebec members and opposition members will remedy the situation. It is not too late. Can you tell me, without saying that I am a separatist, without saying that it is a question of separatism, of federalism. Since the entire population of Quebec and most people outside Quebec consider that the stand taken by the National Assembly is good policy, can you tell me what is wrong with that?

[English]

Supporters of the party opposite cannot escalate this sort of thing into a debate on national unity because the whole of the Canadian population has seen that tactic for what it is. So let us get on with the business of governing this country. Let us adopt the amendment proposed by the New Democratic Party. It is not Parizeau's advice, it is the advice of the whole national assembly. I know that members over there would dearly like to resurrect the national unity debate, but they cannot do it now. That is over. So let them get on with the business of this House, withdraw this bill, consult the premiers, admit their errors and do what is good for Canada and for all Canadians, rather than what they think is good for getting votes in the short term.

● (2112)

[Translation]

Mr. Yves Demers (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I realize now how very crafty the previous speaker, the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Grafftey), and the Progressive Conservative party are being. Indeed, in supporting the proposal of the New Democratic Party to delay by a month the study of this bill, the Progressive Conservative party is being very wily, as they know full well what they are about. They have had it confirmed by the statistics. They realize very well that this sales tax cut is of great benefit to the Canadian economy. They have seen it in a decrease in unemployment and inflation. I take my hat off to them. I must say they are crafty because they do not want this government, or the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) who moved those measures, to get the credit for them.

And when that same party calls for an immediate election, I have serious doubts that it is for the same reason. They do not want the recovery of the Canadian economy, and they want an election right now precisely because they do not want this bill passed. The hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi and the Progressive Conservative party are asking for an election because they have no confidence in their own party; with the Gallup poll indicating a 41 to 41, tie, they want an election because they are convinced they will never reach a higher level than those 41 points. They are convinced of that.

I would like to mention also that the Liberal members in this House, contrary to what the hon. member suggested earlier, fully support the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien). The hon. member mentioned statistics earlier and said that in the past year or so 34,000 jobs have been lost in the manufacturing sector in Canada, 30,000 of them in Quebec and said that it was specifically due to our budget. But those jobs were lost in past months and have nothing to do with the budget.

Furthermore, I must confess that when the hon. member recalls that fact he knows full well that it is not true and that those jobs were lost in Quebec over the past year and a half and I can give him a few reasons why those jobs were lost in his riding and more particularly in Cowansville. One of the reasons is that the minimum wage in Quebec is much too high and the city of Cowanswille is rather close to the U.S. border, the state of Vermont, and Quebec businesses are moving to Vermont where the minimum wage is much lower. Another reason why those jobs were lost mainly in Quebec is that taxes in the province of Quebec are higher and companies are interested in paying fewer taxes and going to invest in another province like Ontario. There is also the threat of the separatist sword and the fact that those very industries moved. The hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Grafftey) had better not try to tell me that Sun Life moved out of Quebec because of the Minister of Finance's budget. It is not true. First, they do not pay sales tax. Second, they announced their intention to move long before this budget was introduced.

The hon. member is also misleading the House when he says that the $85 rebate to every Quebecker does not benefit people who do not pay taxes but who must however pay the sales tax. What the government is proposing is quite simply to treat the province of Quebec the same way as the other provinces. In the other provinces if the tax room is $100 and the province occupies that tax room and if poorer people do not benefit from the sales tax cut it is precisely because Mr. Parizeau did not want to give them that credit.

I would also like to ask the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi whether he is serious when he believes that the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) is the one who is going to stop the separatist movement in the province of Quebec. I am convinced that he is not a separatist. I am convinced that he is a strong federalist. But when he states that Joe Clark is going to stop the rise of separatism in the province of Quebec he makes me laugh. In fact, he makes me laugh so much—

Mr. Grafftey: He is the Leader of the Opposition!

An hon. Member: Do not say Joe Clark.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that when he refers to a member of this House, he should refer to him by his riding and not by his name.

[Translation]

Mr. Demers: He makes me laugh so much that a certain number of Quebec separatists are so convinced that they are now working for the Progressive Conservative party. I could name a few whom I know personally in the constituency of Joliette. I could also name some candidates, some people who intend to run for the Progressive Conservative party and whose allegiance is very questionable indeed. Anyway, those are matters with which we will deal during the next election campaign. Mr. Speaker, there are surely many Canadians who have been wondering why the federal government has decided to reduce the sales tax by 3 per cent across the country. The government has reached that conclusion after having sought the advice of several prominent economists, and also after suggestions made by the Canadian Chamber of Commerce which had made a study to see how the economy could better perform and had come to the same conclusion as the one that the government accepted.

I would like now to read from the March 1978 publication entitled:

The Canadian Chamber of Commerce: Impact

This is an exact quotation:

If the federal government considers it imperative to stimulate the economy, it is the opinion of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce that this objective would be best achieved by reducing the provincial sales tax by 2 to 3 per cent.

And further on:

That it is quite obvious that the government should maintain the size of its anticipated deficit of $10.5 billion for the fiscal year 1977-78, and warns that cuts in expenditures must be emphasized now and in the future.

We can also read the following:

However, to reduce the high rate of unemployment and the serious underdevelopment of our economy anticipated for this year, the Chamber of Commerce recommends that the federal and provincial governments share on a 50-50 basis the cost of reducing provincial sales taxes.

This same bulletin also contains this paragraph:

If the federal and provincial governments cannot come to an agreement, the Chamber of Commerce suggests as an alternative that the Government of Canada reduce other taxes to obtain the same result; however this alternative will not have any immediate impact on the economy and will take longer to reduce the very visible consumer price index.

I wanted to read this to show you that by reducing sales taxes, the federal government followed the suggestion of economists, the Canadian Chamber of Commerce and other organizations specialized in this field.

Also one may wonder why these economists did come to the conclusion that a tax reduction was the most appropriate way to stimulate the economy. First, we all agree that the Canadian economy is a federal responsibility. The federal government is responsible for lessening regional disparities and for stimulating the economy. In general, the provinces do not claim that responsibility.

Statistics show that for the past several months, because they feel insecure, Canadians have been saving money as they have never done before. Reports from banks and caisses populaires indicate that there is plenty of money in bank accounts. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, people are saving money instead of consuming goods and thus are not contributing to the health of our economy. As a result, we have to find a way to urge people to spend their money. When sales tax reductions were announced, people were told this: "If you buy within the next six months, you will benefit from a three per cent tax reduction. If you do not buy within these six months, you will forfeit that reduction".

That is direct motivation, actual motivation, because people can readily see on their invoices, on their accounts, that they get a three per cent rebate. By urging Canadians to buy, this legislation will help to put the manufacturing industry back on its feet, and, consequently, companies will hire additional people who, in turn, because they will no longer be unemployed will get larger incomes and will afford to spend more money so as to keep the wheels of the economy turning. We have to get that economic wheel turning again because it has been slow in recent years.

The government also decided to abolish this tax uniformly in all sectors so as not to create any animosity among the provinces and to help equitably and without exception all sectors of the economy. Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, it is extremely difficult to abolish the tax in a specific sector, and fraud becomes a high risk, something which the provinces would certainly not have accepted. Right now in Quebec many stoves, fridges, washers and dryers which are taxable appliances are being sold and identified as bedroom sets, living room sets and so forth so that the customer does not have to pay tax. By implementing selective tax cuts, the government of Quebec will lose several million dollars in these tax evasions.

Furthermore, if we had allowed the provinces to act selectively the province of Quebec would have acted as it did, without consulting other provinces. On the other hand the province of Ontario would have said: We wish to cut the sales tax only on products that are made here, such as cars, home appliances and so on. This would have greatly reduced the thrust of that tax act. It should be understood that if the province of Quebec eliminates its 8 per cent sales tax on clothing and furniture it is certainly a very worth-while measure which will encourage Quebeckers to spend more. Those Quebeckers who intended to buy a suit six or seven months from now will probably buy it immediately.

However, 40 per cent of the Quebec production of textiles, knitwear and furniture are sold in other Canadian provinces. It means that the 3 per cent reduction of the sales tax given to all other Canadians will encourage them to buy textiles and furniture made in the province of Quebec. If we had allowed all those provinces to reduce their taxes selectively, they would not have cut them on furniture and textiles that are produced mainly in Quebec.

The fact that this tax is not reduced on all goods in Quebec is a great disadvantage for producers and workers, construction hands, truckers who are many in my riding and who have to pay that 8 per cent tax everytime their trucks need repairs; it would also have helped manufacturing companies producing all kinds of items like chinaware, various types of trailers, tools, household articles, mobile homes, and all sorts of things.

In order to know if a 3 per cent tax cut on all goods instead of an 8 per cent reduction on some items would have been more advantageous for Quebec families, I figured out from statistics available, what proportion of their budget Canadian families with two children spend on furniture and other taxable items. According to statistics, 10 per cent of the family budget is spent on furniture and clothing while 25 per cent of that same budget is spent on taxable items like wallpaper, paint, cosmetics, home appliances and all sorts of items. So it means that Quebeckers would have benefited much more from a 3 per cent tax cut across the board instead of an 8 per cent cut on a few selected items.

There is also another point that I would like to clear up. I refer to the jurisdiction for provincial sales tax. It has been suggested that the federal government has interfered in a provincial field of jurisdiction. It is quite clear to me that the sales tax is exclusively a provincial matter. In my opinion, it could have been said that the federal government was infringing upon a provincial jurisdiction only if it had imposed its own retail sales tax. But that was not the case. We merely said to the provinces: If you reduce your tax by 3 per cent, the federal government will pay 2 per cent of it. The federal government of course will pay it with taxes collected in other fields which come exclusively under its jurisdiction. Moreover, the provinces did not have to accept that proposal. It was subject to one condition only. We told them: If you withdraw your sales tax, we will pay two percentage points. It was a reasonable offer and they were free to accept it or reject it. Besides, nine provinces out of ten accepted it. However, if they rejected the proposal they certainly could not expect the federal government to refund the money which would have then been owing to them.

However, during the three weeks of negotiations which took place with the Minister of Finance, Mr. Parizeau did not say anything, which seemed to imply that he accepted the proposals as did the federal government and the nine other provinces. But once the nine other provinces had accepted the deal, just after that he lets us know that he wants a special status for the state of Quebec. It is impossible for the Government of Canada to agree to such a proposal because if it did the same offer would have had to be made to the nine other provinces and the negotiations would then have been back to square one. In that line of thought, the economic measures considered would no longer be valid.

The Minister of Finance studied the situation and tried to work out a compromise which the other provinces have accepted. He proposed to Mr. Parizeau to reduce his sales tax not by three percentage points as it had been originally intended, but only by two percentage points on all items. This two percentage point sales tax would be reimbursed completedly by the federal government without any contribution of any kind from the provincial coffers. Yet out of pride Mr. Parizeau refused the offer and by refusing such an offer paid for entirely by the central government as I have mentioned he is penalizing all Quebeckers who could have benefited from this sales tax rebate of two percentage points, all Quebeckers whether they pay income taxes or not. Besides being intransigent, Mr. Parizeau has the audacity to say that he absolutely wants these $186 million to be returned to the treasury of the government of Quebec. The Canadian government cannot accept that and as I said a moment ago the other provinces would not accept such an injustice and everything would have to be renegotiated. So there was only one solution left and that was to reduce the federal income tax of Quebeckers. As we intend to inject money right now into the Canadian economy, we have therefore decided to give each Quebecker a cheque of up to $85, depending on the income tax he has paid in 1977.

We hope this measure will prompt Quebeckers to consume more goods in order to create jobs. We are also convinced that this measure is one of last resort because there was no choice left since we have not been given that choice and we think that this measure will not bring about the expected benefits the three percentage point reduction of the sales tax on all items would have brought about. However, if by any chance there is still time, I would like the government of the Parti Québécois to revise its positions before this bill is passed and to decide to reduce its sale tax by the two percentage points which the federal government is willing to pay and thus all Quebeckers, even those who do not pay income tax, would benefit from this measure.

• (2122)

[English]

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, in starting my remarks this evening I want to point out first that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) when speaking yesterday—he should not leave because he is going to receive some good advice if he stays—as recorded in Hansard at page 5524, said:

> What I am surprised at is that the opposition, even in the Quebec assembly, make no suggestions as to how to solve this question. They just blame the government. At no point since the beginning of this debate have we received any suggestion on how to resolve this.

That is really laughable and if the minister is listening, as I hope he is, I will tell him how easy it is. I will quote to him a man of whom I had never heard before, an American named Guterman, who said something very wise, and I came across this only today. He said: "Admitting error clear as the score, proves you wiser than before." That is all the Minister of Finance has to do to cure the whole situation. The government has made a bad error and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) seems determined to lock them in the error. I think the Minister of Finance has somewhat more flexibility than the Prime Minister. All he has to do is to admit the error and say that the federal government went about this in the wrong way. He should admit that they did not really try to consult with the provinces; that they did not have it worked out with Quebec when he brought his budget down on April 10; that Quebec has outsmarted them, that Quebec has outfoxed them, that Quebec has been streets ahead of them in sagacity, intelligence, shrewdness, slyness, craftiness—far ahead of this mighty government here in Ottawa. They have been run around the ring, and Mr. Parizeau has had the old ring through the Prime Minister's nose and the Minister of Finance's nose right from the start. Just admit that. Let them admit they made an error and are destroying national unity, and destroying any concept of federalism in Canada if we keep on this course.

● (2132)

Admit that is an error and tomorrow or the next day, or within the next month, if the NDP amendment is carried, let the government withdraw what they have in this bill, pay over to the minister of finance of Quebec, to the government of Quebec or to the province of Quebec what they should pay—that is, the $226 million—participate in the reductions they are making—that is, the complete sales tax reduction on clothing, furniture, footwear, etc.—and that will be it.

It is the simplest kind of thing, Mr. Speaker, but you have to be a bit flexible. The trouble is that the government is not flexible. The Minister of Finance has delivered a ukase, they used to call it in Czarist Russia—a command, an edict, an arbitrary order. They delivered an ultimatum to Quebec which Quebec does not have to accept and which Quebec is not accepting. They made a final proposal or a statement of terms. They have tried to dictate.

I want to tell the Minister of Finance what "consulting" means so we will be on the same wavelength when we consider terms. This is the definition given in the Concise Oxford Dictionary. It states that "consult" means to seek information or advice from; to take into consideration. Consultation means the act of consulting, deliberation. It does not mean that you call the provincial finance ministers and tell them you are going to take certain action, that you are going to do something and that they then have to agree, or if they express no reservation or no opinion you have consulted them. That is not consultation. That is not asking them for information or advice. That is not taking into consideration their views.

The minister when he called the premier of Newfoundland did not seek information or advice last Friday. He called the premier of Newfoundland when he could not get hold of the minister of finance and told him what he was going to do. He told him he was going to pay this $85 per taxpayer direct to the Quebec taxpayer. I will not say what the premier of Newfoundland told the Minister of Finance on the phone. It is confidential, but I can assure you he did not agree. He did not give him the advice that this was the right thing to do. I will not say what he did tell him. The minister did not consult with the provincial ministers.

The humiliation of the four Atlantic provinces was that before April 10 the Minister of Finance never even met physically with a finance minister from any one of those four provinces. When I asked the minister a question today about whether he had any suggestions from the minister of finance for Newfoundalnd before he brought his budget down on April 10, he said in his reply—and if you look at his reply in Hansard tomorrow you will see what he meant—that he did not have to listen to what the minister of finance for Newfoundland said. He said that they were going to bear 100 per cent of the cost of the tax reduction, so I did not have to listen to him.

That is how Newfoundland and the four disadvantaged provinces of Canada are treated by this government here in Ottawa. That is what consultation is. That is what happens to the poor; the poor in resources and the poor in finances. That is the kind of consultation they get from this Liberal government at Ottawa. They are told what is going to happen, and because they are going to be compensated 100 per cent their suggestions are not welcome and not listened to. The minister of finance in Newfoundland did not agree with the six month hoist of this 3 per cent sales tax. He did not want it to come off in October of 1978 just when unemployment is starting to rise again to catastrophic and stratospheric heights in Newfoundland. He did not want that. He wanted it to go on at least until the spring, but he was not listened to because beggars cannot be choosers. That is the federal system we now have operating here in Canada, under Liberal domination for the last ten years. That is co-operative federalism.

Quebec, according to all the statistics, is disadvantaged also, but they are bigger and they have more of a sense of having their own homeland in Quebec. They have a history of every government and every political party in the province fighting for provincial rights in Quebec from 1867 to date. That is what they have, so they are prepared to make the financial sacrifice and make themselves heard and felt.

The minister was very incautious when he tried to consult in his usual way with Quebec, telling Quebec what he was going to do with their tax. Quebec just sat by and let him walk into his own trap, into his own arrogance. He delivered his ukase to Quebec and they told him to kiss their icons. That is what they told him, Mr. Speaker, and rightly so, and I congratulate them. I wish that Newfoundland had told him to kiss their icons also. These are Czarist edicts that come from this great monarchy here in Ottawa. The emperor Trudeau and his cohorts. They had better learn and consult. I have given the definition of consult.

"Dictate" means to prescribe, lay down authoritatively, terms, things to be done; lay down the law, give orders. What the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister tried to do was dictate. This was dictation, not consultation. He could not lay down terms to the province of Quebec. He could not lay down the law to them. He could not prescribe. They were not ready to lie down there, and I congratulate them for it. I do not care if they are péquiste, Union Nationale, Liberal or Conservative in Quebec; they took the right attitude. They were not going to be dictated to by Ottawa. I only wish the other nine provinces had done the same.

On budget night on April 10, the Minister of Finance did not pretend, lucky for him, that the provinces had all agreed. He did not even say there was agreement with nine provinces. What he said, as appears in his speech at page 14, was what he offered to do for them. He said at the bottom of page 14 that the measure can be an outstanding example of fiscal co-ordination, and if all provinces accept the federal offer it will mean such-and-such. There was no pretence that Quebec had accepted this federal dictation, this federal edict, this federal ukase; they did not say they were accepting it. When the Minister of Finance jumped off the diving board with his proposal on April 10 he had no right to think that Quebec was going to accept it, and the péquiste minister of finance said quite plainly they were not going to accept it. Do not let us hear any more of this nonsense we have heard here about how Quebec fooled them and did not indicate any opposition to this suggestion.

We have a federal system yet the Prime Minister goes on with nonsense about balkanizing the country. If Quebec is allowed to lower its own direct sales tax the way it likes, it is going to balkanize the country. It is going to stop the free flow of goods. Don't they realize we have a federal system and that the very fact that provinces have sales taxes means they can interfere with the flow of goods? In Newfoundland we have no retail sales tax on food, clothing or footwear. In other provinces they are taxing the people with a retail sales tax. We have an 11 per cent tax but in Newfoundland we do not tax clothing, footwear and food. Other provinces do. Other provinces have their own purchasing policies.

In Quebec they will only enter into contracts with firms headquartered in Quebec. We have all kinds of situations that interfere with the free flow of goods—whatever phraseology you want to use. Quebec is not balkanizing the country if Quebec has a sales tax and decides to exempt certain things and not exempt certain other things. It is exercising the same prerogative as Newfoundland, P.E.I., New Brunswick and others, and they have done it every year, as the federal government has done in respect of tariffs and federal sales tax. There is no balkanization involved.

If Quebec is permitted to go ahead and do what it is doing and still receive federal financial assistance, no other province can complain because it did not get the same deal. They did not stick out for the same deal. They gave in, they surrendered, they collapsed. They did not have the backbone to stand up on their hind feet because most of them were not in the financial position to do so. They did not do that, but Quebec did. Some of them tried but they did not hold out to the bitter end. Quebec did because it is more important to them to preserve their own rights in their own province than other considerations. There was no agreement so the government cannot complain that Quebec has not gone along with them. They knew there was no acceptance by them at all.

• (2142)

Now, if we look at May 17 Hansard again, the Prime Minister is again mixed up. Some may say it is only semantics. At page 5507 the Prime Minister said:

—The Minister of Finance reached an agreement with nine of the provinces and the provinces agreed to this after three weeks of talks.

They did not agree, Mr. Speaker. There was not an agreement with nine of the provinces. There wasn't any such agreement. Nine provinces have acquiesced, not agreed. There was no agreement from the province of Newfoundland. The province of Newfoundland never consented to this. An agreement is where two parties agree freely and voluntarily to enter into an arrangement with one another. Newfoundland, for example, never did that. They accepted the gratuity handed to them by the Government of Canada when they made some suggestions as to how it should be done; otherwise they were ignored.

I do not believe there was a genuine agreement with any of the provinces except Ontario. It was Darcy McKeough's brainwave in the first place and naturally Ontario agreed, but not the other provinces. The Prime Minister is mixed up. He said:

So I would be very surprised if because the province of Quebec, having failed to state its position before the budget, is now coming out with a scheme which tends to balkanize the Canadian market, the other provinces would want to go in the direction of that balkanization.

Well, I do not care whether they do or do not. I see nothing wrong if the province of Ontario had reduced all tax on automobiles, if that was their choice and another province reduced all tax on something entirely different. As long as the consumer was getting the break and the economy was being stimulated, what difference does it make? The only difference is that this is an arrogant, inflexible government that wants to make the provinces bow to their will.

The greatest sin, Mr. Speaker, that the Prime Minister has committed in this connection was on April 14. You would expect the Prime Minister of this country not to be a cheap politician, or at least not to show that he is a cheap politician as easily as some other people might be. When I questioned him on April 14, Mr. Speaker, in the House of Commons in the question period, asking him why Quebec was not permitted to do what they wished to do, the Prime Minister said at page 4507 of Hansard:

I find the opposition supporting a separatist government in Quebec—

And on the same page, Mr. Speaker:

I was dealing with the support given by the Tory party to the scheme put forward by the separatist party of Quebec.

That is an attempt to paint anyone who disagreed with the Prime Minister and his policies as separatists, Mr. Speaker. But now he is painted into a corner because Claude Ryan and the Liberal members of the legislative assembly in Quebec, the Union Nationale members, the Social Credit members and all members of the Quebec national assembly are now, by that definition, painted as separatists.

Agreement does not mean, Mr. Speaker, accepting or acquiescing in ultimatums. That is why there were no agreements. On May 16 the Minister of Finance at page 5451 of Hansard said:

I am surprised that a national party wants to save the neck of the Parti Québécois.

That was the Minister of Finance's response to questions by our spokesman on federal-provincial relations, the hon. lady for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald), "that a national party wants to save the neck of the Parti Québécois." It is the federal government that is saving their neck. It is the federal government that has by its stupidity, by its arrogance, by its inflexibility, given this neck tremendous additional strength.

What we want to do is to save Canada, Mr. Speaker. To save Canada it is necessary to remove the Prime Minister and his government from office in this country, not save the neck of the Parti Québécois. They can look after their own necks. As somebody once said, "some neck, some chicken". Winston Churchill said that. I tell you the Parti Québécois has got a neck that the Prime Minister of this country cannot deal with. The people that are going to be able to deal with that neck are we on this side when we take office.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: The Prime Minister's position, Mr. Speaker, was given also yesterday in Hansard, May 17. Speaking at page 5508 he said:

The minister has taken a position, and this position is supported by the government and by every member on this side of the House.

He was intimating that there was a surge of support over there. There is one "Serge" I heard is not supporting them. And further down he said:

We have taken a position and we are going to stick with it.

Well, Mr. Speaker, if the Prime Minister sticks with it then certainly he is finished as an apostle of national unity in this country. What the Prime Minister is practising is rigor mortis federalism. The Liberal party and the government are dying and they are entering into a state of rigor mortis. The old co-operative federalism is gone and it is rigor mortis federalism now. They never deviate. The Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance decide what federal-provincial relations are going to mean. They decide what the provinces will do with their sales tax; they decide what Quebec is going to do; they decide what Newfoundland is going to do; and they are able to enforce their decision because Newfoundland got complete reimbursement from the federal treasury. Quebec did not.

When somebody comes up with a better suggestion, "No, we won't budge, we won't move, we are stiff, we are rigid, we are Trudoids, we're Liberals in power in Ottawa, we have rigor mortis, we can't move a muscle, we can't respond." So co-operative federalism has now degenerated into rigor mortis federalism.

An hon. Member: And to the death of the Liberal party.

Mr. Crosbie: And to the death of the Liberal party, that is good. We think that that is an advantage. And from the decaying corpse of the Liberal party will spring in a few years' time perhaps some fresh flowers such as those that adorn the Prime Minister now when he speaks to us in the House in question period.

Here we are, Mr. Speaker. We can have a unitary state. If we want a unitary state—and I presume the people of Canada deserve that—we could vote to do that, do away with federalism and we won't have any problems. We could have the government in Ottawa decide everything, as they do in the United Kingdom. But since the people have not decided that yet, Mr. Speaker, we have in Canada vast inequities because we have provinces. We have in the province of Newfoundland a gasoline tax of 25 cents a gallon; we have in Alberta no gasoline tax and in the other provinces a very small gasoline tax. Well, we are prepared to put up with our high gasoline tax if it means that we have our own local government, at least for the province of Newfoundland. If everything is not decided up here in Ottawa, we are prepared to sacrifice something. We know that if we lived in Alberta we would pay no gasoline tax at all.

The country in that sense is balkanized. We know that we are paying 11 per cent sales tax and in Alberta they are paying no sales tax. It appears to be unfair. Presumably, if we wiped out all ten provinces we would all be treated exactly the same from one end of the country to the other. But would we want that? We would no longer be a federal state. That is where this government is leading us to. If Quebec wants to make its own decision on what exemptions it is going to grant in its own direct sales tax, Mr. Speaker, and that is not permitted because it is supposed to be balkanization, then that means the end of federalism. That is where we are headed to if the Prime Minister's attitude is the one that wins the day.

Look at the statement put out by the Minister of Finance on May 15. Just look at this for arrogance, Mr. Speaker. Page 1:

I have also written to Mr. Parizeau today to explain my resolution of the dispute over the retail sales tax reduction in the province of Quebec.

How can the Minister of Finance of Canada by himself solve this dispute? He is a nice man and I genuinely like him, but he has been too long in office. Just listen again to the monumental arrogance of that statement:

I have also written to Mr. Parizeau today to explain my resolution of the dispute over the retail sales tax reduction in the province of Quebec.

The Minister of Finance of Canada has spoken. He is saying: "The dispute has been resolved. This is my ukase, I am like a Russian czar, when I speak everyone must bow". This is a statement issued by the Government of Canada. Now, Mr. Speaker, we proceed with the statement at page 2:

The federal government should not be party to an arrangement which interferes with the flow of goods in the Canadian common market.

What bourgeois! It pays Newfoundland hundreds of millions of dollars in tax equalization, and Newfoundland uses it to interfere with the free flow of goods because Newfoundland will use it to buy Newfoundland first if it can, the same as Quebec does, the same as Ontario does. The government is in a conspiracy to interfere with the flow of goods in the Canadian common market every day of the week with the money they are giving the other provinces through tax equalization and the like. So don't give us such statements as: "The government will not be a party to such an arrangement." The government in its arrogance does not even know what arrangements it is party to any more.

● (2152)

On page 3 the minister has this to say:

I have discussed this arrangement with my colleagues in each province. They all told me they would have preferred Quebec acceptance of the original proposal.

I do not believe it. I do not believe the statement "They all told me they would have preferred Quebec acceptance of the original proposal." I do not believe that for a minute. They did not all tell them that. He said "I have discussed this arrangement". This was a telephone call to the premier of Newfoundland: "Premier, this is what I am doing. I am going to solve this thing by paying $85 per capita back to the taxpayers in Quebec." That was the discussion. There was no discussion in any sense of "discussion" as we free people know a discussion to be—I give my views and you give yours. So that is another incorrect statement.

In his letter to the minister of finance of Quebec on April 21 there are the same kind of errors polluting the whole letter as attached to that statement. The minister laid down certain conditions. On page 2 he writes:

Third, it was necessary that the proposed measure apply uniformly in all provinces.

Why? It is only necessary because the Minister of Finance says it is necessary. There is no immutable law of the universe that says it was necessary and had to apply uniformly in every province. And it did not. In British Columbia and Saskatchewan they had a different arrangement. Who is the Minister of Finance trying to fool?

On page 3 of that same letter this appears:

However, the federal government could not envisage bilateral agreements aimed at exempting one product in one province and another in another province.

Why not? The whole sales tax arrangement provincially has that flavour, so why not? I have already made the point about tax equalization and the rest of it.

The whole thing is riddled with inconsistencies. This is a government that can no longer see. It has had so much power for so long, it has had financial power vis-à-vis the provinces for so long, that it now automatically has got itself convinced that these silly mistaken statements are correct. It is an awful shame and tragedy, Mr. Speaker.

The exception in Quebec on clothing, footwear, furniture and textiles is not just for Quebec manufactured products. That also applies to imported products. That applies to products that come in from other provinces. They have not made an exemption just for Quebec manufactured goods. To exempt clothing, surely, is a proper thing. The lower income people spend most of their income on food, clothing and shelter, so furniture and clothing are the kinds of things you would like to see a major reduction of sales tax on. There is nothing wrong with that. It is just that the federal government had not dreamed it up first. They thought they were going to apply the iron fist to a government that decided to do something they had not thought of.

This becomes the great sales tax swan dive. It is just as well for the Minister of Finance to realize that the swan has become the ugly duckling. The darling swan of the Quebec caucus is now the ugly duckling of the Quebec caucus, with his strident quack-quacks in this chamber and his quack-quacks outside of the chamber; and the Prime Minister's quack-quacks are just quack-quacks. They are ugly ducklings now. The old white feathers are gone off the old swan. The graceful swan that came into this chamber a few months ago as the new Minister of Finance has turned into an ugly quack-quack. His statements make no more sense than a quack-quack, Mr. Speaker. I wish I knew what the French is for "quack-quack". This is the old sales tax swan dive. The sooner the minister takes that swan dive, the better.

Miss Bégin: Is he from the farm or from the zoo?

Mr. Crosbie: What did the finance minister in Newfoundland say about this proposal to rebate taxes to the individual taxpayer in Quebec when he heard about it? I quote the minister of finance of Newfoundland. He said:

. . . certainly not an action that could be construed in any way as a unifying measure.

Even the province of Newfoundland, which has to accept federal largesse because we poor devils down there have an 11 per cent sales tax and cannot turn down the opportunity to have it go away even for six months, even we have the right to express an opinion. Our government's opinion is that it is "not an action that could be construed in any way as a unifying measure". No, it is a measure that is disunifying this nation. It is unifying the nation against the government. That may be the only good part about it. They are going to transfer and make a payment to Newfoundland and other provinces which they could not refuse.

What consultation was there with the government of Newfoundland before April 10? A telephone conversation with our minister of finance. Imagine, an important matter of federal-provincial relationships like this and the four Atlantic provinces' ministers got telephone calls to tell them what was happening!

The Minister of Finance went out west and met with the western ministers. He met with the Quebec and Ontario ministers but he didn't even bother to meet with the four maritime provinces. That is how important this was looked upon, this major excursion into the change in our whole federal-provincial relations.

When the government says, "We are not going to allow the provinces to act selectively," the government is saying, "We, the government, are not going to allow you in your own constitutional jurisdiction, with your own poor little old retail sales tax—we are not going to allow you to do what you like with it. Not with our money. We want you to reduce the tax and give stimulus to the economy, but when you want to reduce it one way that we do not agree with, we are going to tell you no, you can't do it with our money." That's the government's position.

Should the federal government not have said to Newfoundland, "Gentlemen, put back your sales tax on clothing so you will be uniform with Quebec. We are not going to allow Quebec to eliminate it. Newfoundland has got to put it back on clothing and P.E.I. has to put it back; and Newfoundland, you have got to put it back on footwear so that you will be uniform with the other provinces. P.E.I., you have to put it back on footwear. You can't exempt these any longer because if you exempt them when you are getting some help from us to reduce it 2 or 3 per cent over all you are going to balkanize the country."

That is just as intelligent as telling us now that Quebec is not to be allowed to make selective cuts, that it is going to balkanize the country. They have the balkans on their mind over there. They are going to balkanize the electorate of this country. They have already done that.

We have come now to a position where everyone in Canada who takes any interest in these matters can see how real an attitude this government takes toward national unity. When it has an opportunity to do something constructive in a national unity sense with the province of Quebec, it tries to act like a Russian emperor and crush any opposition in that province. Then, when every other party in the province backs the Parti Québécois government, the Prime Minister gets more rigid than ever, more inflexible than ever. Rigor mortis has set in. He is determined that he is not going to budge.

Mr. Speaker, I have given my advice to the Minister of Finance. I repeat it in ending my remarks—admitting error clears the score and proves you wiser than before. If it helps, Mr. Speaker, I will admit that I have been wrong at times, too.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

HEALTH AND WELFARE—MINISTER URGED TO RECONSIDER BAN ON SACCHARIN

Mrs. Simma Holt (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have repeatedly asked questions in this House on the saccharin ban and received what were patently self-serving answers from the officials of the Department of National Health and Welfare, using an excellent member of parliament—a minister who must rely on them—as their voice in parliament.

On Tuesday, May 16, I again asked the question. Now my question was based on a new revelation, one that could have been expected in this area of power brokerage in the back rooms of the department. Eight years ago the same vocal official, literally proselytizing his anti-cyclamate campaign, used the same scare tactics, based on the same type of so-called excessive research—rather comical research if it had not had such bad effects.

Without warning, without debate in parliament, without even consultation with the representatives of the people in parliament, a ban was imposed on the use of cyclamates, an artificial sweetener that had been on the market for 24 years. It was done then as was the saccharin ban: as though the people of Canada were irrelevant.

The question now is more serious than cyclamates or saccharin. It is—who runs Canada? Are the officials of the department or the elected representatives in charge? I have evidence of the contempt of a few officials for the members of parliament, not only in the Department of National Health and Welfare but in the shoe quota board of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, the Department of National Revenue, the CBC and CRTC; and other members of this House can give testimony and names to this experience that I have had in this one area and in the several other departments.

On October 21, 1969, the officials of the Department of National Health and Welfare imposed their decision on parliament. It was carried into the House by a minister who then—as now—had to depend on these people. No warning, no right of the representatives of the people to comment or to argue against the ban. It is most telling, Mr. Speaker, to note the words on August 1, 1970, of this one official. Just a month before all cyclamates came off the stands, he said:

● (2202)

Cyclamates are a dead issue as far as food manufacturers are concerned. I have the feeling that if we were able to lift the ban on the sweetener tomorrow we would not touch it with a ten-foot pole.

This same man who has pushed his words through this House and who will no doubt do it again tonight said eight years after the ban, just eight days ago, on May 10, 1978: "In our view the great preponderance of world evidence indicates that cyclamates do not produce cancer". Then he went on to discuss the Abbott Laboratories production of an all-cyclamate table top sweetener again, and he arrogantly said: "It is not an earth-shaking product". And not only this, Mr. Speaker, he is further quoted as saying: "We think Abbott Laboratories may be using it as a foot in the door. But in our opinion the door is still closed; we won't consider opening it a crack until we get all the information and we have time to review it."

I ask these questions, Mr. Speaker: Who does this man think he is? Who vested him with such power? Why is parliament allowing him to continue using this power? How is it that he has had the second chance to decide that Canada's diabetics, 400,000 of them, and the 13 million overweight people cannot have their sweets? Why is he still in this job? To whom does this person owe his loyalty? To the people of Canada, or some special interest group who may want to remove the competition? I also ask why does this man not order the same kind of experiments using sugar, which is believed to be dangerous and to have carcinogenic properties? If an equivalent amount of sugar was used in these experiments on rats it would amount to 40,000 teaspoons a day. I am sure the rats would strangle on it.

There is no doubt in my mind that the answer this person will give to members in this House to cover his own error will be that saccharin was in the cyclamates. It was an impurity that caused it. I want to put on record tonight the damage I know that has happened because of this department's gross errors on cyclamates and why I feel that senior public servants must now be held responsible before the law for damages when they act irresponsibly.

I will list some of the companies affected: Berryland Canning Company, Maple Ridge, B.C., lost $60,000. These are private companies. Canadian Cannery lost $1 million; E.D. Smith lost $400,000; Tom Steeves, Anassis Island, B.C., lost $200,000. This was a small firm and it almost caused its bankruptcy. At least 12 small independent businesses were in financial difficulty as a result of the cyclamate ban.

No one can count the number of diabetics, obese, or hypoglycemia victims who were seriously injured or who died as a result of this deprivation of sugar substitutes. I doubt whether this official will investigate that. This official sneered at me when I suggested in a private meeting that if he is concerned with cancer harming people then he should remove cigarettes from the stands. I might add as well that he might take carrots off the shelves which contain carotatoxin, a nerve poison, and an hallucinogen called myristicin.

● (2207)

Shrimp should be taken off the stands since it has 40 to 170 or more parts per million of arsenic, as well as olives and vegetable oil found in salad dressing which contain the carcinogenic substance benzo(a)-prene; and so should even apples, which contain phlorizin, which interferes with the enzyme system of the cells.

It is interesting that these same people who have banned saccharin are pushing to free marijuana when the experiments so far on humans show that it has carcinogenic qualities and cause other ailments. The minister and her predecessor in this portfolio echoed the laugh of this official when several members asked why they did not ban the known carcinogenic cigarettes. They said it was too much of a habit in society, yet here they are pushing for a drug not yet known to be safe and suspected to be carcinogenic with other dangerous components.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please, I regret to interrupt the hon. member but her time has expired.

Mr. W. Kenneth Robinson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, at the outset I wish to congratulate the hon. member for her perseverance with regard to this whole subject matter. I know her avowed concern is sincere. I would like the hon. member to appreciate, however, that the state of knowledge in that area is constantly being perfected. As a government, we must act on what we know and everyone will agree that we must take a calculated risk in order to protect the health of Canadians.

I would like to correct several statements made in the House earlier by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt) on the subject of cyclamates. Cyclamates were never totally banned; they were restricted to use in tabletop sweeteners in 1969, not 1970. The action was not arbitrary but was based on careful consideration of the scientific data then available. Many countries, including much of Europe, took the same action as Canada. Other countries, including the United States, Japan, England, Sweden and Finland, have banned cyclamate totally. The recommendation to restrict cyclamates was made to the former minister of national health and welfare (Miss Bégin) by officials of the Food and Drug Directorate. The Health Protection Branch did not exist at that time.

The then Director General of the Food and Drug Directorate has since retired. I understand he was considered highly qualified and is still in great demand as an international expert. The hon. member may be interested to know that in a 1974 decision on a court case in which a company using cyclamates brought legal action against the government for restricting the use of cyclamates, the judges ruled in favour of the government. He stated that, in his opinion, the officials of the Food and Drug Directorate, in recommending that cyclamate be restricted, "acted prudently, expeditiously, and reasonably in the public interest. To have acted otherwise ... might well have exposed them to a charge of negligence or a breach of duty".

It is my understanding that, contrary to the hon. member's insinuation, the current head of the Health Protection Branch is considered highly competent both by his peers in government and by the scientific community in general. It is unfortunate that the protection of this House is used to attack the reputation of an official of the Department of National Health and Welfare.

With regard to the 1969 cyclamate decision, I would like to emphasize the statements made earlier. Toxicology is a relatively young science, and new and more sophisticated testing procedures are constantly being developed. It is logical that, as we learn more about any given substance, decisions which were made on the basis of less information may, on hindsight, appear questionable. I am satisfied that we do the best we can with the data available.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES—CRITERIA USED IN CALLING FOR TENDERS

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, this afternoon I posed a question to the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Goyer). It concerned the questionable tendering practices of this government. The Canadian Association of Data Processing Service Organizations has charged that more than $2 million in government contracts were awarded to a Quebec based computer firm, not because it submitted the lowest bid, but rather, in the words of the Minister of Supply and Services, because of "socio-economic considerations". Part of the minister's reply to me was: "One must recall that in 1977-78, 78 per cent of the electronic data processing contracts were awarded to Ontario companies". He went on to say: "I think it is fair and just that we should try to give other companies a reasonable share of the market when they are qualified, and that is what happened."

● (2212)

In other words, the tendering process has gone out of the window. "Socio-economic considerations" is nothing but a new terminology for Liberal patronage. There are ten provinces and two territories and all should be treated fairly.

Here is a partial list of special patronage accorded to Quebec. Public Works for 1977 awarded a total amount of $306 million of which Quebec received $173 million or 58 per cent. The other nine provinces shared 42 per cent. DREE grants for 1969-1977 accorded 30 per cent to Quebec and 70 per cent to the other provinces. Equalization grants of 52 per cent went to Quebec over the past ten years with 48 per cent to the other nine. So now we know about this new terminology, Mr. Speaker.

The minister has unbelievable powers and is downgrading the whole democratic system of tendering by stating we should ignore the lowest bidder in Canada and give government computer business to Quebec even though they cannot compete with the lowest bid. I have information that the president of the Montreal-based firm of Industrial Life Technological Services, Mr. Philip LeMay, was a school chum of the minister responsible for housing. IST was the firm which was awarded computer contracts. This is probably the reason IST received the contract.

I would like to ask the parliamentary secretary to confirm this and to answer two other questions tonight or give the answer by letter as soon as possible. My first question is: Will tenders for federal government computer contracts from now on be publicly opened or will they be kept secret and only the firm receiving the contract be announced? My second question is: Has the above-mentioned firm, IST, had a complete RCMP security check of its employees and have all its employees completed the DSS form on security which is a condition of employment with firms doing computer contracts for the federal government?

This question is most important and I hope the minister will supply an answer to me by next week. The reason I mention this, Mr. Speaker, is that today it was brought to our attention that letting the contract to IST has caused duplication problems and the Montreal-based firm has not been as efficient as Data Crown, an Ontario-based firm, because of the fantastic growth of their service. They cannot properly cope.

This issue of security was discussed in great detail in the Standing Committee on Public Accounts in February of this year. At that time Mr. Baxter, a federal civil servant, stated:

—if programs were modified by design, that is, if someone deliberately modified the programs to subvert some of the normal control procedures, that would be a serious breach of the normal process.

You can play around with computers, Mr. Speaker, and I have information that this Montreal-based firm has not been properly scrutinized by the RCMP. I do not have time to read all the detail of that committee meeting in February of this year, but that is why I raised that question tonight.

In a news report today with respect to this Montreal firm receiving computer contracts it is pointed out that:

In one case—$1 million for National Health and Welfare computer services awarded through the Department of Supply and Services—the contract went to Montreal-based IST despite the fact it did not submit the low tender—

So the low tender process has gone out of the door—we are into this new form of patronage, the socio-economic process which the Minister of Supply and Services has just recently introduced. The article goes on:

In a second instance, a contract for Industry, Trade and Commerce, formerly held by Computel Systems Ltd., also channelled through Supply and Services, went to IST "because of political considerations"—

That is the new socio-economic process, the new terminology for patronage. We also find some indication that the government was trying to direct business into Quebec. In the same article it says:

Everyone has to recognize that ministers of the Crown, whether you like it or not, have the final say.

● (2217)

So they have the final say, and it does not mean that the lowest bidder is accepted. The computer firms feel the evaluation and final award was not made on the basis stated in the tender, and they may be right. If they do not like what the ministers of the Crown say, the only recourse they have is to our democratic system, which means we have to wait until the next election and vote for another political party if we do not like the process. Is that a proper way to handle the tendering system? Ontario computer companies, upset by government contracts going to Quebec, say they are not getting full information when they bid on government jobs. This is part of the socio-economic theory which is now being presented by the minister. The Canadian Association—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I have to interrupt the hon. member.

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Goyer) has had on many previous occasions the opportunity to speak in this House, as he did this afternoon, about the basic procurement policies of the government and its contracting policies according to the objective set out in the main estimates approved by parliament, which reads as follows:

To acquire and provide in the most economical manner goods and services required by departments and agencies, taking into account the contribution of procurement to the realization of national objectives.

The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie) in his question this afternoon referred to two contracts awarded by the Department of Supply and Services to the firm IST of Montreal. The first one was for the Department of National Health and Welfare. The tender called for information to allow for an evaluation of estimated costs over a four-year period. In evaluating the bids, the dollar figure arrived at was based both on the firm rates and on the best estimate available of the anticipated work load and mix.

When the evaluation was completed, allowing for the varied nature of the pricing formulae contained in the proposals, there were three bids which were approximately equal in terms of price. All three firms were judged technically capable of performing the work. Since a clear winner could not be decided on the basis of estimated costs alone, there was a necessity to use other criteria, and the ability to assist in the realization of national objectives by compensating for the imbalance in the distribution of government business between the various regions of Canada was considered.

The final decision to award this contract was, of course, made in the usual way under the authority of the Treasury Board. The award of this contract was made within the over-all objectives of the department and in conformity with government contracting regulations.

In the case of the contract awarded to IST for the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, it was awarded on April 1, 1976 for a three-year period as a result of a competitive tender, and IST was the lowest responsive bidder by a distinct margin.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m.

At 10.20 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, May 19, 1978

The House met at 11 a.m.

• (1107)

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

RAILWAYS

CAR-GO-RAIL SERVICE IN MANITOBA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Cecil Smith (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing importance. VIA Rail have now confirmed they will not be prepared to take over passenger runs until the end of June. Car-Go-Rail service was to terminate on May 1 but was extended to June 1. Because of this further delay in takeover by VIA Rail, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie):

That Car-Go-Rail service remain in effect until such time as the VIA takeover is completed, and that rates remain the same for passenger cars from Churchill and Gillam, $60 and $69 respectively, one way, to Thompson.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for discussion, pursuant to Standing Order 43, requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

IMMIGRATION

REQUESTED EXTENSION FOR GALINDO MADRID—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43 I wish to raise a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. It concerns the case of Mr. Galindo Madrid who is seeking refuge in Canada from the Pinochet regime of Chile.

In view of the fact that Mr. Madrid has been advised by the Minister of Employment and Immigration that he will be deported to Chile at the end of June, in view of the fact that he has not yet exhausted his legal remedies in Canada, there still being an appeal to the Federal Court, and in view of the real risk that he will again be tortured and imprisoned in Chile as he was shortly after the coup d'état, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That the minister provide sufficient time for Mr. Madrid to complete any legal proceedings and, further, that the minister exercise his discretion and permit Mr. Madrid to remain in Canada on humanitarian grounds.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 43, such a motion can be presented for debate only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

URBAN AFFAIRS

DISCUSSION OF MUNICIPAL GRANTS PROGRAM WITH ONTARIO MINISTER

Mrs. Jean E. Pigott (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Urban Affairs, but in his absence I will direct it to the Prime Minister. The minister of housing of the province of Ontario is on record as rejecting the federal minister's practice of consultation by telex and telegram, as are most of his colleagues. In response to the minister's first telex, the Ontario minister sent a request for immediate consultation.

Would the Prime Minister tell the House why the Minister of State for Urban Affairs has not even bothered to arrange a meeting with the Ontario minister to go over his new program, the municipal grants program?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will gladly look into the matter. I am not aware of what telexes have been exchanged. I can only tell the hon. lady that frequently the premiers and myself have consultation through telexes and I am not surprised that the minister responsible for housing did the same thing.

• (1112)

In so far as meetings are concerned there have been very frequent meetings among the federal and provincial ministers of housing. I am sure the minister will be prepared to have another one, if the hon. lady wants to ask him the question.

Mrs. Pigott: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry the Prime Minister does not realize that there have not been frequent consultations with the ministers. There have been at the official level, but not with the ministers.

My supplementary question is directed to the minister of housing. One would think that after the mauling which the Minister of Finance has taken over the sales tax fiasco, the minister responsible for housing would tread a little more carefully. He has been meeting with the provinces individually, but is he afraid to meet them collectively around the same table?

Will the minister tell the House why he is afraid to meet the provinces at a federal-provincial meeting of ministers? Will he also tell the House when he will call such a meeting?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): I do not think I have been afraid of meeting my provincial counterparts. I did it in Edmonton—

Mr. Paproski: You bombed out there.

Mr. Ouellet: —and it was a very successful and fruitful meeting. I will be quite glad to have another meeting with my counterparts at any time that suits all of them. The hon. member at one time indicated a meeting had been cancelled. I want to assure the House that I have never cancelled a meeting. In fact, the previous minister of housing for Alberta intended to host a meeting of provincial ministers of housing and invited the federal minister to it. The minister of housing for Alberta received a reply from many of his counterparts, indicating they would not be ready at the date he suggested. Since then, I understand this person is no longer the minister of housing for Alberta.

Mr. Paproski: He is running against your government.

Mr. Ouellet: Therefore, he could not pursue his efforts along this line. I want to assure the hon. member that I have had discussions with many provincial ministers responsible for housing and municipal affairs. Meetings are taking place with each province in order to sign an agreement on both the housing package and the community services package. These meetings are very successful, maybe not in the mind of the hon. member but surely in the minds of those who take part in these meetings. They are advantageous for the people who need affordable housing in Canada.

Mrs. Pigott: Mr. Speaker, the minister says there was not a cancellation of that meeting. But telexes really are not a great idea when one is trying to bring forth new proposals for housing and, under municipal grants, put a whole new direction into municipal affairs.

My question is: The minister's latest excursion under the municipal grants program has already been criticized by the provinces of Ontario and Quebec. In view of the concern expressed by those two provinces that the government's Liberal patronage machine will completely ignore their provincial jurisdiction, will the minister assure the House that there will be no consultations among federal officials and municipal authorities or, more particularly, among pork-barrelling Liberal politicians and local officials, before the grants under this program are awarded?

[Mrs. Pigott.]

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I do not know why the hon. member is so afraid of a good program that has been put forward by this government.

An hon. Member: Because of your record of patronage.

Mr. Ouellet: It seems quite clear that the hon. member recognizes the value and the merits of such programs, but she is trying to do her utmost to discredit them.

MUNICIPAL GRANTS PROGRAM—COMMUNICATION WITH QUEBEC

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, the program is being discredited by the minister's high-handed attitude in dealing with the provinces of this country. That is the problem we are facing.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: I ask the minister if he is in a position to tell the House how he is proposing to get around the Quebec intergovernmental affairs act which prohibits municipalities in the province of Quebec from dealing directly with the Government of Canada.

Perhaps while he is on his feet the minister might explain to the House and the country why, on a question that violates the constitution of this country and infringes on provincial jurisdiction, he would take a 15-page telegram to explain this program to the province of Quebec? Why would he not meet with his counterpart in the province of Quebec, or are communications completely blocked off between Ottawa and Quebec?

• (1117)

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I would first like to say that there is no infringement of provincial rights. Second, the federal government does not intend to deal directly with the municipalities: the hon. member is totally wrong in assuming that. If he is afraid that the intergovernmental act that he referred to would be infringed, I say he has no reason to fear this because the federal government does not intend to deal directly with the municipalities.

In concluding my remarks I would like to say there has already been a series of meetings with provincial ministers. There will be others. The program will be put in place according to the priorities of the provinces, as they asked me to do when in Edmonton. The program that has been released is as a result of consultation among the ten ministers of housing of the provinces and myself in Edmonton a few months ago.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, the program that is now in place is in difficulty because it was anticipated that we would be in a federal election campaign. The minister anticipated this program would strengthen the government in dealing directly with the municipalities and bypassing the provinces—another method of pork-barrelling.

Can the minister explain to the House how it is possible for the government to proceed with this program, which clearly infringes upon provincial jurisdiction, at a time when the Government of Canada has already done so in the area of provincial sales taxes? Can the minister, further, explain how he can proceed with this program when two of the largest provinces in this country, Ontario and Quebec, are clearly unhappy about it? Indeed, the province of Quebec is not prepared to go along with it.

In light of that, is the minister now prepared to announce that he will call his provincial counterparts together to discuss the proposals that he outlined to them by telex? Is he, at least now, prepared to sit down with them because it is obvious the program does infringe upon provincial jurisdiction?

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, my answer is that I have not outlined the federal proposal in a telex: it was outlined to them at the time of the federal-provincial conference. After that federal-provincial conference it was discussed by officials of both the federal and provincial authorities. It was also discussed at the first ministers' conference. It was confirmed in a telex that was sent. Therefore, there was a series of activities which took into account a series of consultations with the provinces in arriving at a program that would allow the local authority to create jobs at the local level and have programs that are urgent in various parts of Canada.

What we want to do—and I do not know how the hon. member can find this unconstitutional—is put $150 million at the disposal of the provinces to approve municipal projects that will create jobs in Canada now, for the best advantage of Canadians.

Mr. McGrath: Perhaps the minister will explain to the House and the country what constitutional authority he, as a minister of the government, has for funding hockey rinks, libraries and daycare centres which are clearly within provincial jurisdiction.

In light of the very delicate fabric of the confederation that holds this nation together, because of this kind of confrontation antic, is the minister now prepared to go to Quebec City and meet with Mr. Tardif, who yesterday expressed grave concern in the Quebec National Assembly over this penchant for dealing in provincial jurisdiction? Also, will he meet with his provincial counterpart in Toronto? Failing that, is the minister now prepared to withdraw that program?

Mr. Ouellet: My answer is yes, Mr. Speaker; in fact, I spoke with Mr. Tardif over the telephone yesterday. He will decide when we will meet. I indicated to him that I am ready to meet him. He is supposed to call me back to tell me when and where we will meet, possibly next week.

In answering the second part of the hon. member's question, the program proposed to the provinces for municipal projects is a continuation of sectorial programs in which the federal government is active. It has received the support of members from both sides of the House. I am referring in particular to the sewage treatment program, to the Neighbourhood Improvement Program and to the municipal incentive grants where the federal government is paying for municipal projects.

● (1122)

We have said we shall continue these programs. We shall not only allow these three types of programs to continue, but we shall allow the municipalities and the provinces more flexibility in choosing schemes under these three types of projects or seven other categories of projects which could be considered priorities by the municipalities. This is a very flexible program we have put forward for good projects which are creating jobs in Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: Flexible sewers.

* * *

FISHERIES

INTERIM AGREEMENT BETWEEN CANADA AND UNITED STATES

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries. It has to do with the dispute on the west coast of British Columbia in relation to the salmon fishery, and the interim agreement.

Can the minister now confirm that the decision taken by his officials in not allowing Canadian fishermen to fish on the Swiftsure Bank in Canadian territorial waters was not connected with conservation but was taken because there was hope the Americans might respond under the terms of the interim agreement? Can the minister confirm that it had nothing to do with fish escapement?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the recommendation was made by the officials and I agreed to it in a telephone consultation. This was a last-minute negotiating point. We know there is a problem at a certain time of the year on the Swiftsure Bank in the catching of capelin and small salmon. We recognize that this is a conservation problem. We did not agree in this case with the U.S. negotiators or with the U.S. conservation experts, but we did not wish to put ourselves in the position of jeopardizing increased access to the American zone by failing to live up to our undertakings in the negotiations and confirmed in the agreement.

Mr. Leggatt: Can the minister confirm that under the terms of that interim agreement, Canadian fishermen were to be allowed to fish off the state of Washington commencing May 1 and that, in fact, a decision has still not been made by the United States authorities? Canadian fishermen still do not have the right to fish off the coast of Washington, and they have already lost almost a month's fishing. In other words, the United States has failed to live up to any of the terms of the agreement to date, while we have and we have been prejudiced as a result.

Mr. LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent): It is not as dramatic as the hon. member makes it sound. The fact is, however, that we have given the United States authorities a period of time in which to consult following the discussions which took place here last week. We have indicated that we cannot see a situation which would drag on all summer, because our fishermen would then be paying the price of the delay.

I might add that the significant fishery off the U.S. coast is not in early May but begins slightly later than that, and that our fishermen are still fishing off the coast of Alaska under the terms of the 1978 agreement.

Mr. Leggatt: Given the fact that most U.S. salmon have to travel off the coast of Vancouver Island to reach Puget Sound, and that a good many Canadian salmon must also travel through the same waters to reach the Georgia Strait, has the minister advised his United States counterpart that if no agreement is forthcoming with regard to this matter, Canada might have to resort to the alternative which one of his predecessors, Jimmy Sinclair, used, which was to move Canadian gillnetters off the coast of Vancouver Island and make a major fishing effort to catch all salmon?

● (1127)

Mr. LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, we have made it very clear that if we cannot come to an agreement and there is no 1978 interim agreement, the fishermen of each country will then be confined to waters of their own country, in which case what the hon. member is suggesting would take place automatically.

* * *

[Translation]

MANPOWER

CRITERIA FOR APPROVAL OF PROJECTS

Mr. C. A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

In my riding of Roberval, a group of four students got together to prepare and present a project. They have worked for weeks every night to make sure their project met the criteria and it was accepted. I have just been told that only one student out of four will not work at that project. Could the minister tell me if that is normal or if this is a new regulation governing acceptance of manpower in these projects?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his representations. I do not know whether or not it is a regulation. I will have to examine this situation and report to the hon. member.

Mr. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question. If it is a regulation and if the question is exact, would it not be discouraging for any group of students who have worked at preparing future projects?

[Mr. Leggatt.]

[English]

Mr. Cullen: No, Mr. Speaker, my experience has been that young people in Canada are not turned off by one rejection or one particular regulation. The fact is that they work even harder the next time to see that they come within the criteria.

* * *

FINANCE

COMPENSATION TO ALBERTA FOR SALES TAX LOSS

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance who wants to have it both ways. He told this House on Wednesday that Alberta was offered the same deal under his sales tax rebate program as the other provinces because of Alberta's oil and the incentives of the federal government to aid in the development of heavy oil projects. However, in the minister's budget address he stated that he did not include Alberta because Alberta did not have a sales tax, not because of incentives to the oil industry which, incidentally, benefits all Canadians.

Now that the rules have been changed and Quebec is getting $186 million with no strings attached, will the minister offer Alberta taxpayers the same rebate that is being offered to Quebec taxpayers?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have stated, and I repeat, that at the time of the budget I said to the government of Alberta that I wanted to help the provinces which had sales taxes. Of course, Alberta is privileged enough not to need any sales tax and the scheme does not apply to Alberta.

Mr. Clark: Now you have changed the rules.

Mr. Chrétien: At the same time, I said to the Alberta minister of finance that there would be in the budget other things which could aid in the development of Alberta. I did not mention what it was to be because I had to keep that information for budget night.

On budget night I declared that the federal government was willing to make it easier for the development of heavy oil reserves and tar sands in Alberta in order to bring about more development there. The maritimes, for example, have a special deal, so to speak, because we have paid the maritimes three points and they have not contributed a single point because they are in a financial situation completely different from that of the central and western provinces.

Mr. Towers: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has stated from time to time that it would be good to have a voice from Alberta in the cabinet. He now has that voice. I would like to ask the Minister of Finance whether Alberta's representative in the cabinet, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, had an opportunity to veto, or did he agree with the proposal to pay $85 directly to Quebec taxpayers, at the same time not paying anything to Alberta taxpayers, thereby selling Albertans down the river?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Vancouver South.

Mr. Clark: Silence tells the story.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for—

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, may I reply?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

• (1132)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have done something that I do often. When a question is clearly out of order, I have gone to another questioner. In a sense, that does not thwart justice because there are occasions when there may be an indication of a desire to reply but I will not permit the reply because the question is out of order. But I should at least state the reason. Obviously, the question that was just put was out of order because it was clearly argumentative.

* * *

TRADE

INTERNATIONAL ECONOMIC BOYCOTTS

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. It concerns the long overdue report on Canadian government policy on international economic boycotts, the second semi-annual report which, according to the first report, was to be due in March of this year.

My question to the minister is, was the delay in presenting this report in any way related to a change in the policy of the government or a reassessment of government policy?

Hon. Jack H. Horner (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, in answering that question I would like to state that certainly Alberta was not sold down the river in the budget.

An hon. Member: But you were.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That question was out of order, so the answer will have to be confined to the question that is in order.

Mr. Horner: Alberta benefited a great deal from the tax measures in the budget. May I say, in reply to the hon. member's question with regard to the Arab boycott clauses, that I will be reporting very soon. The delay, if there is any, is due to an attempt by the cabinet to clarify the position for all Canadian businesses in Canada.

Mr. Fraser: May I say to the minister through you, Mr. Speaker, that there is some indication from departmental officials that this report could be delayed for as much as two months. I ask the minister to assure this House that we will not have a delay of anything like that long, and to give us some idea when we will have the report and a statement, if one is coming, as to a change in policy.

Mr. Horner: I feel very confident, Mr. Speaker, that I will be able to table that report next week.

* * *

AIR TRANSPORT

CRASH AT CRANBROOK, B.C.—TRANSCRIPT OF PWA AIRCRAFT TAPES

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Kootenay): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport and it arises out of the renewed interest in the air crash at Cranbrook, British Columbia. Is the minister satisfied with the statement from a Department of Transport official that another month will be necessary to complete the transcript of the tapes from the Pacific Western Airlines jet which crashed at Cranbrook and, if so, how does the minister intend to meet the May 23 deadline ordered by the coroner for presentation of those tapes?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the department has no problem about meeting the request for the tapes. Indeed, it was our position that that was the kind of evidence the coroner might want to have if the content of the tapes was important to him. The department's problem is that the actual analysing of the tapes is a very difficult matter indeed, having to do with the problem of the identification of particular voices and of many messages which may be on the same piece of tape. That job, which is a highly technical, expert job, will indeed take some time to complete.

In other words, our position, basically, is that what we have, we can make available to the coroner; but what we do not have, because experts have not completed their work, obviously we cannot make available.

Mr. Johnston: I wonder, then, if the minister and the department have had the same facility in bringing rescue, firefighting equipment and personnel up to the strength prescribed by existing departmental regulations at airports such as Cranbrook and others in that category in the country?

Mr. Lang: There has been a great deal of confusion in the press reports about many of the things related to the Cranbrook incident. But in this case also, there has been confusion between the standards which are applied by the department as a matter of condition for the use of an airport—and, generally speaking, those standards are being met—and, on the other hand, some standards which are much higher than those recommended by ICAO for adoption but which have not yet been adopted as standards in Canada or in many other countries.

Oral Questions

NATIONAL REVENUE

POLITICAL ACTIVITIES OF CHARITABLE ORGANIZATIONS

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister: it follows on the questions placed by my colleague, the hon. member for St. John's East, yesterday with regard to the status of Revenue Canada's circular 78-3. I should like to ask the Prime Minister if he can now clarify the status of that circular, which the Minister of National Revenue has said is withdrawn but the intent of which he indicated is not withdrawn.

Will the Prime Minister, therefore, give us a guarantee that, contrary to what the Minister of National Revenue has said, no action will be taken against any charitable organization with regard to their tax exempt status until such time as these guidelines have been revised in consultation with the charitable organizations of this country?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I am not quite sure in what context the minister spoke about intent, but certainly I can support him if he says that the intent of the circular is to explain to people, as best the department can, what the law is. That intent is not withdrawn. We always want to be helpful to the taxpayer in explaining what the law is. The law itself is not withdrawn. The circular was withdrawn, but not the intent to help people interpret the law.

If we can, this is the intention of the minister, come up with a more helpful circular—and that is why the previous circular was withdrawn—we will do so. But we will not withdraw the intent to apply the law; we will continue applying the law. In the last resort, the courts will be the judge of what the law says, not the minister, his department or the hon. lady.

Mr. Clark: The "hon. member."

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, that is not what the Minister of National Revenue said. What I want clarified is his statement which was as follows:

—we have to draw the line somewhere and that it has been drawn at highly organized attempts to influence a government for a purpose "particular to the organization".

What I want to know is, what kind of intimidation does this mean, for example, for the Canadian Association in Support of Native People if it continues to try to influence the government to settle aboriginal rights; or what kind of threat does this mean, for instance, to the Positive Action organization in the province of Quebec if it tries to influence the provincial government of that province in the interests of national unity?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the hon. lady—

Mr. Clark: The "hon. member".

Mr. Trudeau: —is asking me for a legal opinion on the status of a particular association.

Miss MacDonald: No, I am not.

[Mr. Lang.]

Mr. Trudeau: I am saying that the courts, in the last resort, will judge whether an organization is charitable as defined by the law. The hon. lady—

Mr. Clark: The "hon. member".

Mr. Trudeau: —is asking me about a particular organization: she wants to know if a citizen who contributes to the organization can deduct the amount from his income tax. Surely it is the purpose of the minister to try to help people to answer this question. That is the purpose of this circular and of previous such circulars. The law remains, and surely the hon. lady supports the intention of the law, which is not to give tax exemption to people who are not giving to charitable organizations. This is a simple situation that the law puts before us.

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister still has not got the point that his Minister of National Revenue is making. The point is that the Minister of National Revenue said that if charitable organizations—not individuals—involve themselves in any kind of political activity designed to influence a government, they could lose their tax exempt status. I ask the Prime Minister, what is going to happen to organizations which have been carrying on that kind of activity over the years, until such time as the guidelines have been revised? That is what we are asking the Prime Minister.

Mr. Trudeau: They do not have to listen to the minister.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: No one else does.

Mr. Trudeau: The hon. lady—

Mr. Clark: The "hon. member".

Mr. Trudeau: —is rejoicing at the fact that I say the law is superior to any minister's guidance. It is the judge who, in the last resort, decides what the law is.

Mr. Clark: This is a new concept of ministerial responsibility.

Mr. Trudeau: Now the Leader of the Opposition wants to butt in. I suggest that you recognize him, Mr. Speaker, because it is 20 minutes to twelve o'clock and I am sure he will wait until 2 minutes to twelve o'clock before butting in.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: If the hon. lady—

Mr. Clark: "Hon. member".

Mr. Trudeau: —needs assistance, she needs it now, not at 2 minutes to 12, so perhaps the Leader of the Opposition can join in the debate.

● (1142)

[Translation]

AIRPORTS

INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT INTENDS TO CONSTRUCT TERMINAL BUILDING AT ÎLES-DE-LA-MADELEINE

Mr. Albert Béchard (Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Transport.

In view of what is known so far about the studies of Department of Transport experts on the construction of an airport in the Îles-de-la-Madeleine, whether jets or Dash-7 type of aircraft use it eventually, and with the advent of the MLS, and in view of the cramped quarters and therefore the total lack of comfort of what is now known as the Îles-de-la-Madeleine terminal building, can the minister tell the House whether he intends to order the construction of a decent terminal building in the Îles-de-la-Madeleine this year in order to calm the justified impatience of that island population and, must I add, their MP?

[English]

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the hon. member's impatience with developments in that particular airport area. We have now well advanced examination of the question of the use of the Dash-7 for several airports there. That will help us to decide what is needed in the way of further facilities. In the last few days a member from my office, as well as my officials, have been visiting the island airport. I will have from them a first-hand report on the nature of the quality of the terminal facilities and also recommendations upon which I expect to be able to act very quickly for their improvement.

* * *

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

PROGRAMS FOR NORTHERN MANITOBA

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. In 1976, his department and the government of Manitoba signed the Northland agreement under which the federal and provincial governments, on a shared cost basis, would spend $138 million for development and the employment of people in northern Manitoba.

The present government of Manitoba has cut back those programs very, very drastically and hundreds of people have been laid off by the provincial department of northern affairs. Over 1,000 people involved in projects on an hourly basis have been laid off. Was the minister's department consulted about these decisions? Was agreement arrived at with the province to proceed with these very severe cutbacks in employment?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Lessard (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, indeed there have been consultations and exchanges between the officials of my department and those of the Manitoba government. As we know, the government having changed there, the new government decided to reduce considerably some of its programs and expenditures. Recently, we were advised that they wanted to reduce expenditures under the agreement on the development of lands in northern Manitoba, but I must say to the hon. member that we did not accept that those reductions be allotted to other purposes within the agreement. We will accept transfers of funds provided the main purposes of the agreement are respected. But if there is any intention of redirecting those amounts to new programs, new projects and new objectives, I think we will oppose our contributing to them.

[English]

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, under certain programs, such as the New Careers program, in which I think some 500 people were involved, the provincial government was required to find employment in its various departments when the people involved had finished their training. In the view of the federal government, is the provincial government required under the agreement it signed, to which program the federal government has contributed a great deal of money, to find employment for the people who are now in the training program?

Is the minister's department continuing to pass on 60 per cent of the $138 million which the federal government has to pay under this agreement? Is it continuing to pay its share when it now knows that substantial parts of that program have been either reduced or eliminated?

Mr. Lessard: Mr. Speaker, referring to the last part of the hon. member's question, I should say that if they have reduced the program we are not going to pay our 60 per cent of the cost. That money will be spent on and applied to other projects which are not under the agreement.

As to the first part of the question, the commitment that people trained under the program would be given a job within the Manitoba civil service was made in an attempt to achieve that end. We understand it is always difficult when there is no need for jobs. When a government decides to cut off a program and reduce the number of its public servants, it is always difficult to fing jobs for newcomers. Obviously, there will be a need for comprehension of that difficulty. Nevertheless, we will be pushing the provincial government to help find jobs for these people. We will try to help find jobs for them as soon as they come out of the training program.

Oral Questions

URBAN AFFAIRS

PURIFICATION BY OUTAOUAIS SEWAGE TREATMENT PLANT

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. In view of the fact that the Outaouais regional sewage treatment plant is scheduled for construction commencing June 1, can the minister assure the House that all precautions and required measures have been taken to ensure that all harmful viruses and various chemicals in the sewage will be removed by the plant?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I will take this question as notice.

Mr. Yewchuk: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that experts in the field of sewage treatment have declared that this plant will not do these things and is outdated before it begins, can the minister indicate whether he is willing to re-examine the possibility of redesigning the plant? If not, what logic is there in building a plant which will not do the job and is outdated before it gets off the ground?

Mr. Ouellet: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I will undertake to study this matter.

* * *

COMBINES

FACTS SURROUNDING URANIUM CARTEL

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the right hon. Prime Minister: it centres around the unfortunate uranium cartel incident. On August 5, 1977, the Prime Minister told the House the following:

We will put every fact we have before parliament so it can debate this matter properly.

Will the Prime Minister tell the House, now, when he proposes to put the facts before us in respect of the uranium cartel, in view of the fact that a motion asking for certain documents to be produced was talked out by his Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources last night?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member will send me a copy of the context in which I said that, perhaps I will be able to enlighten him further. My recollection is that the House was debating the policy itself and denying our claim that it had helped the uranium industry, helped to preserve jobs in Canada and, indeed, was a farsighted act which permitted the Canadian uranium industry to be in a good posture.

Mr. Clark: It broke the law.

Mr. Trudeau: I said that at any time we would be prepared to debate this policy. I think there are several opposition days left before the end of June. Why does the opposition not take a day to quarrel with our uranium policy?

Mr. Clark: Table the documents.

[Mr. Lessard.]

Mr. Trudeau: We will put all the answers and facts before the House at that time.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that the United States department of justice, following an 18-month grand jury inquiry, has indicted certain officials in the Gulf Oil corporation in respect of their participation in an illegal cartel, would the Prime Minister tell the House if the government has contacted in one way or another the White House, the American state department or the American department of justice regarding the grand jury findings and requested, on a government to government basis, that the American government should in no way move against certain Canadian corporations, including Crown corporations, as a result of the grand jury deliberations?

● (1152)

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member asks if we contacted some agency or department of the American government. Of course we did, and we are very pleased that there is no indictment or any charge of misdemeanour against any Canadian corporation.

Mr. Clark: What was the nature of the contact?

Mr. Trudeau: If the Leader of the Opposition has a supplementary, Mr. Speaker, I suggest you recognize him.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for York-Simcoe.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I will assist the Prime Minister once again. Would he elaborate, for the benefit of the House, on the nature of the government's contact and, specifically, why did they request that no action be taken with respect to the Canadian companies?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, we did not make that specific request. What we indicated was that we would take a very dim view if American law were to be interpreted in some way as to apply to Canada, and we objected to the extraterritorial application of American law.

Mr. Clark: Just as you object to the application of Canadian law.

Mr. Trudeau: Again, Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition wants to get in on this. I wish you would recognize him, because it is getting closer and closer to twelve o'clock.

An hon. Member: It is 2 minutes to 12.

* * *

ELECTIONS

APPLICATION OF EXPENSES ALREADY INCURRED FOR FORTHCOMING BY-ELECTIONS

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, now that the leader of the government has indicated his great respect for the law, I wonder if I might ask his seatmate, the President of the Privy Council, a question with respect to the decision made by the Chief Electoral Officer that only electoral expenses incurred after May 11, 1978, the day the Prime Minister decided that a triumphant march to an election might turn into a rout, would be counted toward the spending limits for the eight by-elections.

I ask the government House leader whether the government sanctions the Chief Electoral Officer's actions which ignore the force and effect of the order in council that set March 1, 1978, as the date for the issuance of the by-election writs.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Chief Electoral Officer is an officer of parliament. He is not in any way the subject of direction of the government as such, and the government in this case has not indicated in any way any particular view as to how the Chief Electoral Officer ought to carry out his operations. That would be quite unacceptable because of the special status which he occupies, and we have not in any way indicated to the Chief Electoral Officer a view as to any consultations he may have had with political parties.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I am not concerned with what consultations he may have had with respect to the matter; I am concerned that this officer of parliament, perhaps in good faith—I would suggest that until it is proven to the contrary, that is the case—has set himself above parliament and has really set himself above the courts with respect to what the law is.

The minister has indicated that there was no approach made to him by the government to influence this decision. In that event, is the government intending to review the decision, because the President of the Privy Council happens to be a member of parliament too? Is he intending to review the decision, as a member of parliament, to ascertain its correctness with respect to the law and, if so, is he intending to join in an approach by parliamentarians to this officer of parliament with respect to the appropriate interpretation of the law? If the minister has not had time to consider that matter, would he consider it and advise me as to what the decision of the government might be?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I believe the Chief Electoral Officer has been an outstanding officer of the House of Commons. He has in this particular case attempted, in consultation with representatives of the political parties, as I understand it, to reach a modus operandi with respect to the occurrence of the by-elections. I want to put his efforts in context, which were intended to be helpful in the current situation. I repeat, in so far as I am concerned as President of Privy Council and as the conduit for the Chief Electoral Officer to the House of Commons, I will not interfere in any way with his operations. In so far as this party is concerned, we intend to fulfil all the requirements of the law with respect to the Election Expenses Act. After all, it was this government that brought in the Election Expenses Act and we intend to observe it to the limit.

Mr. Gillies: How about to the letter?

Mr. MacEachen: To the letter, to the limit and to the spirit, in all its aspects.

Mr. Gillies: Good.

Mr. MacEachen: We all want to support the Chief Electoral Officer in the work that he is doing, and it might be a very useful project to have the Chief Electoral Officer appear before a committee of the House. If general suggestions were made there, or if a consensus was developed to meet a particular situation, then of course the proper procedure would be for the House itself to take steps to change the law and the situation. It is not my intention, in the absence of all-party consensus, to move to change the law in this particular respect.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the government House leader has given an undertaking that he is prepared to consider the question of bringing the matter before a standing committee of the House of Commons. Would he undertake, as the government House leader, to discuss this matter with the chairman of the appropriate committee as a first step to removing what is a misunderstanding, notwithstanding the good quality of the Chief Electoral Officer with which we all agree, to ensure that in fact the law which was brought in by this government and supported by all members of the House can be observed. If the law is not satisfactory, then it can be changed in an appropriate way, rather than by administrative action which this appears to be. Will he give me that undertaking?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I will undertake to consult the party representatives with a view to having the Chief Electoral Officer appear before the appropriate committee to discuss this matter with members. It is vitally important at this stage for all of us to restate our confidence in the integrity of the Chief Electoral Officer.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: The electoral process will not carry the confidence of the Canadian public unless he has that support. Certainly, the government extends to him the confidence that is required in this situation, but unfortunately some recent press reports are not calculated to maintain proper confidence in the Chief Electoral Officer.

The second point is that if members of the committee, in consideration of the problem, want to move in a particular way, then I will certainly facilitate an amendment that will change the law.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: It is twelve o'clock.

Point of Order—Mr. Stevens

IMMIGRATION

REQUESTED REVIEW OF CASE OF JOAN CREARY

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Will the minister immediately review the case of Joan Creary who, even though only nine years old, has been ordered deported to Jamaica by an adjudicator of his department, and will he use his authority to the extent that it exists to allow her to remain in Canada with her father, a Canadian citizen, her mother having apparently agreed to this since she is unable to look after her daughter? Also, will he, where necessary, change the regulations or propose amendments to the Immigration Act to the extent that they are shown to cause inhumane and unfeeling results of the kind indicated by this Creary case?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, my concern here, and I must say the concern of the province of Ontario as well, is with the welfare of the child. The province of Ontario has to make a determination whether this is a fit and proper father for the child. The official guardian is making his own investigations in this connection.

● (1202)

Incidentally, it is not a deportation order. Under the more humanitarian act, the child is subject to an exclusion order which would mean that the child could come back into the country within a year. I have indicated that I am prepared to hold off executing that exclusion order until I am satisfied that the rights of the child are protected and have decided whether it is better for her to be with this particular father or to go home to her mother and two sisters.

* * *

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF ISRAELI MINISTER

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. May I take a moment to call attention to the presence in our gallery of a distinguished visitor in the person of the Minister of Education and Culture from Israel, Mr. Hammer.

* * *

POINT OF ORDER

MR. STEVENS—BILL C-56

Mr. Speaker: Yesterday I indicated I would endeavour to bring forward a decision on a point of order raised on May 17 by the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens). The point of order arose on the motion for second reading of Bill C-56, an act to amend the statute law relating to income tax and to authorize payments related to provincial sales tax reductions.

[Mr. MacEachen.]

The hon. member for York-Simcoe, having raised this point of order, submitted that Bill C-56 did not comply, or does not in its present form comply, with Standing Order 60(11), which reads as follows:

The adoption of any Ways and Means motion shall be an order to bring in a bill or bills based on the provisions of any such motion.

It is admitted in the argument, and surely on the precedents, that while the words "based on" certainly do not mean identical with, nevertheless the hon. member is concerned, and the House is always concerned, that there must be such a relationship between the bill and ways and means motion that a substantial difference between the motion and the bill would make it run contrary on a procedural basis to two earlier rulings of the Chair, namely, that of December 18, 1974, and July 14-15, 1975. In the 1974 ruling I was prepared to accept a discrepancy between the ways and means motion and the bill concerning the definition of a boat. However, I did say that the terms of the ways and means motion are a carefully prepared expression of the financial initiative of the Crown, and frequent departures from them can only invite deterioration of that most important power.

I think we must understand clearly that the importance of the ways and means motion in this whole process is as an expression of the financial prerogative of the Crown. Indeed, if one were able to introduce legislation into the House of Commons in respect of tax matters without a ways and means motion, that would indicate that the financial prerogative of the Crown had lost that element of its singularity.

I repeated this warning on July 14, 1975, when I ruled on a discrepancy between a ways and means motion and the bill based thereon with respect to the power of the minister to describe by regulation the class of exempt persons. In that case, without arresting the progress of the bill, I suggested that the minister either amend the ways and means motion or prepare amendments to the bill to bring it into conformity with the existing motion. In the event, the Chair found it necessary the next day to delete certain words from the bill in order to have it conform to the ways and means motion upon which it was supposed to have been based, and an amendment was subsequently moved in committee of the whole which conformed to the ways and means motion.

In the present case the specific objection, which was also referred to by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) is that paragraph (13) of the ways and means motion provides:

That for the 1978 taxation year the tax otherwise payable by an individual resident in a prescribed province on December 31, 1978 be reduced by $100.

This is found in the bill in clause 30 and particularly in section 122.1(1).

However, clause 30 in the bill goes on to deal with matters not contained, in my opinion, in paragraph (13) or elsewhere in the ways and means motion, to deal with those taxpayers not in a prescribed province and perhaps even not in the same taxation year, that is, it appears that section 122.1(2) to be enacted by clause 30 represents a substantial departure from paragraph (13) of the ways and means motion or from any other part of the ways and means motion, besides paragraph (13), in endeavouring to deal, not with the residents of a prescribed province, not for the taxation year 1978, but with the residents of a province which is not a prescribed province and for the taxation year 1977, depending on the ultimate interpretation to be placed on the language which I, of course, do not now decide.

On the other hand, it has been argued that section 122.1(2) is an amendment to the Income Tax Act and represents a deduction from income tax for 1977, the time for filing of which has expired, and the section therefore provides in essence for an expenditure of public money and thus is safeguarded procedurally by the recommendation of His Excellency the Governor General. No matter what the administrative arrangements might be for the implementation of this section, I am confined to the wording of the ways and means motion and of the bill. It seems to me that section 122.1(1) to be enacted by clause 30 lies completely within the four corners of paragraph 13 of the ways and means motion, while on the other hand there is no provision in the ways and means motion to cover section 122.1(2).

Whether section 122.1(2) is seen either as a reduction of tax for the 1977 taxation year, or as a pay-out of funds in the fiscal year 1978-79, is immaterial on the procedural basis. We must begin from the premise that a ways and means motion, as the basis of a tax bill, is the procedural device used to protect the financial initiative of the Crown.

Paragraph 13 of the motion and section 122.1(1) to be enacted by clause 30 of the bill, offer a certain relief from taxation to a particular group of taxpayers in a given taxation year. If the government thought it was necessary to initiate this relief by a ways and means motion, it seems to me that consistency alone demands similar relief to be provided for some other taxpayers in section 122.1(2) to be enacted by clause 30, which also provides relief from taxation, albeit for an earlier fiscal year and for a different segment of the population, be similarly founded on a ways and means motion.

It may very well be that I would be disposed to be more stringent in terms of procedural correction if we were dealing with an imposition rather than an exemption from tax, but in the circumstances I see no reason to arrest the progress of the bill at this stage. The cure is simple. It requires a ways and means motion to cover the provisions of section 122.1(2) to be enacted by clause 30 of the bill. Meanwhile the bill may proceed, certainly through second reading and, if necessary, into committee up to and including clause 29 of the bill.

We have examined carefully the precedents which would support this point. They are clearly recited in Erskine May's Parliamentary Practice, nineteenth edition, page 790, which reads as follows:

If any provisions of a bill are found to go beyond the resolutions on which the bill is founded, further resolutions must be passed before those provisions are considered in committee on the bill, or the bill must be amended to conform to the resolutions to which the House has agreed.

That citation seems to me clearly to give the Chair some discretion in determining the manner in which the curative provision should be entered into. In these circumstances I would think that the proper course would be for an amended resolution to be brought in by the government to conform with the language of the bill, and that that be done before clause 30 of the bill is considered in committee of the whole.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): On a point of clarification, Mr. Speaker, I appreciate your ruling, but I was wondering if you could comment on the second part of what I referred to in my original point of order, and that was clause 59 of the bill. This is a complementary clause that is required, as set out in the footnote, as a result of the passage of clause 30.

Clause 59 deals with what they call compensating payments. This clause reads as follows:

The Minister of Finance may pay out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund to a province the amount, if any, as determined by the Minister, by which the aggregate of

That is, if the provincial sales tax in the province concerned exceeds the income tax rebates as provided for in clause 30, and to the extent there is an excess amount then, as the concluding paragraph states:

and may make advance payments to the province out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund on account of any amount that may become payable to the province pursuant to this section.

I feel that this clause very clearly contemplates the expenditure of funds on the part of the government and, if anything, is very obviously not included in the original income tax motion to which Your Honour has already referred. Could you clarify to what extent the government will be required to rectify the motion to cover clause 59 as it now appears in the bill?

● (1212)

Mr. Speaker: With respect, the hon. member is confusing two different procedural problems. The position that I have endeavoured to set out to implement a taxation measure is that the government must, of course, proceed by a ways and means motion. The bill to implement taxation measures must be based upon that ways and means motion. To make a pay-out of the public funds, no such ways and means motion is required. However, a royal recommendation is required for the pay-out of funds. As the hon. President of Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) carefully argued the other day, there is a royal recommendation which directs itself to all provisions of the bill. Therefore I did not enter into that particular area.

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, if I understand your ruling correctly, we are in a position now in a procedural sense where we can proceed with discussion and consideration of this bill, but we have to recognize the fact that government policy has changed between the presentation of the budget and the introduction of the bill. So that we can be sure where we are proceeding, I ask the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) is it the intention of the government to bring in a modified resolution, to which the Speaker has referred, and when might we have that?

Business of the House

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as you have said, to be consistent we should proceed with an amended ways and means motion. We will proceed in that manner before we reach clause 30 at the committee stage.

Mr. Clark: I have a further matter for clarification, sir. So that we can be sure of precisely what we are dealing with, could the Minister of Finance tell us whether the government is now actively considering or contemplating any significant other amendments in this bill at second reading stage, or whether it is now presently contemplating any amendments to this bill during the committee of the whole stage, particularly as they might relate to the sales tax provision which has caused so much consternation in his own caucus?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, the hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) did not choose to ask a question on policy at all during question period. Of course, when we have amendments to a bill we will propose them in due course in the House of Commons.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question arising out of your ruling. I do appreciate the nature of your ruling. However, there is a question in my mind that follows upon that. Until the amended ways and means motion comes in, it seems to me that the Chair having indicated that the ways and means motion is deficient, there is a breach of the rule with regard to this particular provision. So the government must immediately, before we proceed with further debate, take some action. Otherwise I submit to you the debate on that portion which you have ruled to be outside the rules is totally irrelevant.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We are in a situation here where there is no appeal from the rulings of the Chair. I find it difficult to cast the hon. member's opening in any other light except that of a reconsideration of the judgment that I have already made. I recognized the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) who wanted some clarification of a portion of my ruling that I did not deal with directly. I recognized the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) who wished to determine what the next step would be of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) as a result of the ruling. I do not think I can entertain any hon. member now to say, with respect, the ruling that I have made is not in conformity with any hon. member's opinion. I have already indicated in very clear and explicit language on the basis of the precedent in Erskine-May that the bill can proceed while the amended resolution is being brought before the House. I cannot make that any clearer, and I do not think I should entertain any further discussion on that subject.

* * *

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise on another point of order. The government House leader and I have had some discussions in the House with respect to estimates and the period of time within which we might consider estimates extending beyond May 31. There were some consultations to be undertaken by my hon. friend. As a result of those consultations has a decision been made, and what is it? Could he also tell us whether we would be amending the standing orders for that purpose for the balance of this part of the session?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I have had consultations but I have not yet completed them. I hope that by Wednesday of next week I will be in a position to indicate to my hon. friend just exactly what I propose to do. There is a case that has to be considered. I want to do that and consult further.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[Translation]

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: 1,163, 1,183, 1,242, 1,284, 1,448, 1,509, 1,512, 1,532 and 1,594.

I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

[Text]

MR. P. ZOLLMANN

Question No. 1,163—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Was Mr. P. Zollmann employed by the Department of the Secretary of State and, if so (a) was his title Chief of Post Secondary Education Support Branch (b) on what date did his employment with the Department terminate and for what reason (c) what was his annual salary?

2. Did the Department or the Department of Supply and Services give a contract in the amount of $40,000 to Federal Systems of Canada, 971 Richmond Road, Ottawa to provide consulting services and programme designing for the Canada Student Loans Programme and, if so (a) on what date (b) what is the name and job designation of all public employees involved in allotting the contract (c) what are the names of all persons with Federal Systems of Canada, dealt with by the government in arranging the contract?

3. Were tenders or alternate submissions received and (a) if so (i) from whom (ii) on what dates (b) if not, for what reason?

4. To the knowledge of the Department of the Secretary of State, is Mr. Zollmann associated with or employed by Federal Systems of Canada as Marketing Director and did he take such employment immediately upon leaving the Department?

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of the Secretary of State and Supply and Services as follows: 1. Mr. Zollmann was employed by the Department of the Secretary of State. (a) Yes. (b) On January 29, 1977—resignation. (c) $25,000-$30,000.

2. No. (a) and (b) Not applicable.

3. Not applicable.

4. Immediately upon leaving the Secretary of State, Mr. Zollmann went to work for a private consulting firm.

BOOKS CANADA LIMITED

Question No. 1,183—Mr. Andre:

1. What is the Crown's precise financial interest in Books Canada Limited as administered by the Department of the Secretary of State through the Association for the Export of Canadian Books and on what date was such interest acquired, at what cost and for what reason?

2. What was the book value of the Crown's equity on the date of acquisition and what is its latest estimated book value?

3. To date, what is the Crown's total investment, including equity costs, contributions to operating funds, debt forgiveness and what is the Crown's total realized profit from such investment?

4. In what manner is the Crown's interest represented (a) on the Board of Directors (b) in its senior management?

5. Did the government make a policy decision in regard to the future disposition of its interest?

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): 1. The Crown does not have any financial interest (i.e. shares) in Books Canada Limited. It has been making contributions to the Association for the Export of Canadian Books/l'Association pour l'exportation du livre canadien, a non-governmental organization, since 1972. The AECB/AELC has recently acquired shares of Books Canada Limited. Prior to that acquisition, Books Canada Limited was wholly owned by a number of Canadian book publishers. The Crown has never owned any shares of Books Canada Limited (BCL).

2. The Crown has no equity in Books Canada Limited. See 1 above.

3. The Crown has never made a direct gift or contribution to Books Canada Limited. Because the Crown has no investment, it has made no profit. See 1 above.

4. The Crown has no financial interest in Books Canada Limited nor is the Crown represented on the board of directors or in its senior management.

5. Not applicable. See 1 above.

GRAIN TERMINAL, WINDSOR, ONTARIO

Question No. 1,242—Mr. Towers:

Did the government make grants to the grain terminal at Windsor and, if so, in what amounts and on what dates?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): The government has not made any grant to the grain terminal at Windsor. Specifically, the government has entered into a contractual agreement with United Cooperatives of Ontario, to make a repayable contribution towards the costs of constructing a grain terminal complex at Windsor, Ontario. Under the terms of the agreement, amounts of $500,000 and $8,000,000 were deposited into a trust account on April 29, 1977 and May 27, 1977 respectively, to be disbursed to U.C.O. upon certified presentation of documentation as to costs incurred during the design and construction phase. A repayment schedule has been prepared whereby U.C.O. will repay the contribution over a period of 15 years. In addition, all interest accruing on the trust account and any amounts in the trust account remaining after completion of the project, will be returned to the Consolidated Revenue Fund.

FRESH FRUIT AND VEGETABLE STORAGE

Question No. 1,284 —Mr. Marshall:

By province, what amount was allocated under the Fresh Fruit Vegetable Storage Construction Financial Assistance Programme since its inception?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): The following payments have been made since the inception of the program in 1973.

Province	Total Payment
British Columbia	$2,798,043.81
Alberta	261,615.57
Saskatchewan	—
Manitoba	324,789.11
Ontario	1,060,794.46
Québec	611,198.55
New Brunswick	35,592.04
Nova Scotia	70,000.00
Newfoundland	—
Prince Edward Island	—
	$5,162,033.54

A total of three applications were received from Newfoundland for financial assistance under this program. Two, which have been considered in the past, met the eligibility criteria for producer groups, however the producer groups did not proceed to have the agreements signed. One is, at present, under review. No applications have been received from either Prince Edward Island or Saskatchewan.

ETHNIC NEWSPAPERS

Question No. 1,448—Mr. Mitges:

1. How does the Department of National Health and Welfare define "ethnic newspaper"?

2. In which ethnic newspapers did the Department advertise (a) in the fiscal year ending March 31, 1977 (b) since March 31, 1977 and, in each case, what was the total amount of advertisement placed?

3. What criteria does the Department use to determine which ethnic newspapers will receive government advertising?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. This department is guided by the Multiculturalism Directorate of the Department of the Secretary of State, which defines an "ethnic newspaper" as one that serves an ethnocultural group.

2. (a) Ethnic Newspapers—Fiscal Year Ending March 31, 1977

Arc Arabic Journal	$ 300.00	Il Cittadino Canadese	$ 120.00
Canadian Arab World Review	300.00	Corriere Canadese	306.00
Canadian Middle East Journal	1300.00	Corriere Illustrato	330.00
Chinese Express	132.00	Corriere Italiano	240.00
Chinese Times	132.00	L'Eco D'Italia	150.00
Chinese Voice	132.00	La Gazzetta	132.00
New Republic	132.00	Il Giornale Di Toronto	240.00
Shing Wah Daily News	132.00	Insieme	240.00
Chinese Star Weekly	120.00	L'Ora Di Ottawa	90.00
Bielaruski Holas	81.00	Il Samaritano	312.00
Glas Kanadskih Srba	150.00	La Settimana	240.00
Kanadski Srbobran	120.00	Il Settimanale Di Montreal	240.00
Bratsvo	52.00	Il Tevere	240.00

Slovenska Drzava	$ 120.00	Vita Italiana	$ 132.00	Vaba Eastlane	640.00	Ciao	1800.00
Hrvatski Glas	144.00	La Voce D'Italia	210.00	Canadian Uutiset	560.00	Liscio E. Busso	540.00
Serbia	120.00	Communita Viva	392.62	Vapaa Sana	640.00	Il Mormoratore	320.00
Vrijeme	200.00	The Newsletter	360.00	Courier (Toronto)	1500.00	Il Rincontro	480.00
Nase Hlasy	96.00	Ciao	1460.00	Courier Nordwesten	2268.00	La Tribuna Italiana	576.00
Novy Domov	120.00	Liscio E. Busso	270.00	Hamilton Journal	784.00	The Continental Press	672.00
Modersmaalet	180.00	Il Mormoratore	90.00	Kitchener Journal	840.00	The New Canadian	640.00
Calvinist Contact	180.00	Il Rincontro	240.00	Mennonitische Rundschau	980.00	Canadian Jewish News	1120.00
Hollandia News	150.00	La Tribuna Italiana	288.00	Montrealer Zeitung	784.00	Canadian Jewish Weekly	1400.00
De Nederlandse Courant	144.00	The Continental Times	144.00	Toronto Zeitung	952.00	The Hebrew Journal	840.00
Windmill Herald	198.00	The New Canadian	120.00	Die Zeit	504.00	The Jewish Eagle	1340.00
Duca Post	118.80	Canadian Jewish Weekly	180.00	Pacifische Rundschau	360.00	The Jewish Post	840.00
De Hollandase Krant	180.00	The Hebrew Journal	180.00	Anagennesis	840.00	The Jewish Standard	1328.00
Pioneer	90.00	The Jewish Eagle	120.00	Evdomada	952.00	Jewish Times	800.00
Meie Elu	132.00	The Jewish Post	120.00	Greek Canadian Reportage	700.00	Jewish Western Bulletin	1400.00
Vaba Eestlane	120.00	Jewish Western Bulletin	300.00			North York Downsview Reporter	1204.00
Canadian Uutiset	108.00	Toronto Jewish Press	300.00	Greek Canadian Tribune	840.00	Toronto Jewish Press	1400.00
Vapaa Sana	120.00	The Yiddish Press	132.00	Hellenic Free Press	736.00	The Yiddish Press	616.00
Courier (Toronto)	414.00	The Canada News	120.00	Hellenic Postman	700.00	Western Jewish News	840.00
Courier Nordwesten	486.00	The Korean Journal	108.00	Hellenic Tribune	288.00	The Canada News	840.00
Hamilton Journal	168.00	New Korea Times	126.00	Hellenic View	980.00	The Korean Journal	504.00
Kitchener Journal	180.00	Latvija-Amerika	120.00	Greek Canadian Action	384.00	The Koreanna	480.00
Mennonitische Rundschau	120.00	Nepriklausoma Lietuva	120.00	Parikiaka Nea	684.00	Batkivshchyna	392.00
Montrealer Zeitung	168.00	Teviskes Ziburiai	174.00	New Korea Times	588.00	The Canadian Farmer	896.00
Toronto Zeitung	204.00	Norrona	153.00	Latvija-Amerika	560.00	Homin Ukrainy	1356.00
Die Zeit	108.00	Fortnightly Crescent	153.00	Nepriklausoma Lietuva	560.00	Nasha Meta	896.00
Pacifische Rundschau	180.00	Czas	153.00	Teviskes Ziburiai	812.00	Novy Shliakn	748.00
Greek Canadian Reportage	75.00	Glos Polski-Gazeta Polska	144.00	Malayalee	1120.00	Postup	860.00
Greek Canadian Tribune	180.00	Polish Canadian Courier	120.00	Norrona	700.00	Ukrainski Visti	780.00
Hellenic Free Press	144.00	Zwiazkowiec	180.00	Akdaja Gulrang	640.00	Ukrainsky Holos	896.00
Hellenic View	210.00	Dzis (formerly Krzyk)	120.00	Fortnightly Crescent	700.00	Vilne Slovo	952.00
Greek Canadian Action	96.00	O Mensageiro	138.00	Pakistan Times	640.00	Lemko News	240.00
Parikiaka Nea	342.00	Voz De Portugal	60.00	Czas	840.00	Moloda Ukraina	180.00
Kanadai Magyarsag	204.00	Correio Portugues	150.00	Glos Polski-Gazeta Polska	784.00	Nowi Dni	150.00
Menorah-Egyenloseg	204.00	Sentinela	99.00	Polish Canadian Courier	560.00	Promin	360.00
Sporthirado	144.00	Tribuna Portuguesa	150.00	Zwiazkowiec	840.00	Zhinochy Svit	280.00
Magyar Hirlap	204.00	Asia Times	234.00	Dzis (formerly Krzyk)	480.00	My I Svit	300.00
Logberg-Heimskringla	132.00	Ecouri Romanesti	60.00	O Mensageiro	644.00	Svitlo	300.00
Scandinavian Businessman	264.00	Postup	75.00	Voz De Portugal	700.00	Yunak	420.00
Kanadsky Slovak	120.00	Ukrainski Visti	150.00	Journal Acoreano	400.00	Jung Montreal	1052.00
Slovensky Hlas	54.00	Ukrainsky Holos	192.00	Correio Portugues	300.00	Jung Toronto	1148.00
Coreo Hispano-Americano	162.00	Vilne Slovo	204.00	Sentinela	396.00	Panjab	460.00
El Popular	168.00	Lemko News	60.00	Tribuna Portuguesa	200.00	Toronto Contrast	960.00
Mundo Ilustrado	72.00	Moloda Ukraina	39.00	Asia Times	520.00	Toronto Talking Drums	1500.00
Nya Svenska Pressen	120.00	Nowi Dni	65.00	Ecouri Romanesti	360.00	Bharati	460.00
Canada Svensken	132.00	Promin	82.80	Scandinavian Businessman	528.00	Mundo Illustrado	288.00
Batkivshchyna	42.00	Zhinochy Svit	67.60	Kanadsky Slovak	560.00	Quincenario Hispano	240.00
Canadian Farmer	192.00	Jung Montreal	198.00	Slovensky Hlas	216.00	Nya Svenska Pressen	560.00
Homin Ukrainy	150.00	Panjab	117.00	Coreo Hispano-Americano	784.00	Canada Svensken	264.00
Nasha Meta	150.00	Bharati	96.00	El Popular	868.00
Novy Shliakh	75.00			Critica	368.00

(Amounts shown are estimates only—final 1977-78 billings have not yet been received.)

(b)

Ethnic Newspapers—Since March 31, 1977

Al Ra'Id Al Arabi	$ 480.00	Kanadai Magyarsag	$1048.00
The Source	1040.00	Magyard Elet	1064.00
Arc Arabic Journal	600.00	Menorah-Egyenloseg	952.00
Canadian Arab World Review	600.00	Sporthirado	812.00
Chinatown News	1170.00	Magyar Hirlap	408.00
Chinese Express	616.00	Logherg-Heimskringla	616.00
Chinese Times	616.00	Canadian India Star	1040.00
Chinese Voice	616.00	Canadian India Times	480.00
New Republic	616.00	The Link	840.00
Chinese Wide Angle	320.00	India Digest	720.00
Shing Wah Daily News	616.00	India Calling	300.00
Chinese Canadian Bulletin	800.00	Il Cittadino Canadese	1120.00
Bielaruski Holas	396.00	Corrieve Canadese	1540.00
Glas Kanadskin Srba	700.00	Corriere Illustrato	1604.00
Hrvatski Put	624.00	Corriere Italiano	1260.00
Kanadski Srbobran	560.00	L'Eco D'Italia	780.00
Bratsvo	240.00	La Gazzetta	840.00
Slovenska Drzava	240.00	Il Giornale Di Toronto	1120.00
Hrvatski Glas	288.00	Insieme	1120.00
Serbia	220.00	L'Ora Di Ottawa	420.00
Nase Hlasy	448.00	Il Samaritano	1540.00
Novy Domov	560.00	La Settimana	1120.00
Modersmaalet	840.00	Il Settimanale	2100.00
Calvinist Contact	840.00	Il Settimanale di Montreal	1120.00
Hollandia News	784.00	Il Tevere	1248.00
De Nederlandse Courant	720.00	Vita Italiana	1232.00
Windmill Herald	924.00	La Voce D'Italia	1060.00
Duca Post	528.00	Communita Viva	720.00
De Hollandase Krant	360.00	The Newsletter	250.00
Pioneer	180.00	Occidente	360.00
Meie Elu	592.00	Il Marco Polo	300.00

[Miss Bégin.]

3. The criteria for determining which ethnic newspapers will receive government advertising are dependent on the communications objectives of each advertising campaign and, therefore, could vary widely from one campaign to another. In the selection of media, consideration is given to the specific public reached, geographic location of that public, the frequency and timing of publication. Advertising campaigns of a national nature would normally employ all ethnic newspapers whose publication dates were appropriate.

MR. K. R. BUNCE

Question No. 1,509—Mr. Cossitt:

1. What is Mr. K. R. Bunce's employment history in the government?

2. (a) Did Mr. M. J. Cardinal, Director of Personnel Administration, write a memo to Mr. S. Rubinoff, Assistant Deputy Minister, Department of Finance, dated November 14, 1977, marked confidential and, if so, did it state in part: "As you are aware, the transfer of functions of the Guaranteed Loans Administration section has an effective date of December 1, 1977. In view of the fact that we have no work for Mr. Bunce for which he is qualified or would likely accept, it would appear to us that laying-off action and therefore notice of lay-off might be required." (b) Did Mr. Cardinal write a memorandum marked confidential dated December 2, 1977 to Mr. Claude Passey, Head of the Guaranteed Loans Administration, with a carbon copy to Mr. S. A. Rubinoff stating in part: "Mr. Bunce was hired by you to work for you and he is your responsibility. Under no circumstance will the Department of Finance be placed in a situation that will require bringing Mr. Bunce on lay-off status because the functions of G.L.A. were transferred elsewhere. Mr. Rubinoff has assured me that if necessary he will take this matter up with appropriate officials in the Secretary of State." (c) Did Mr. Rubinoff write a letter dated January 20, 1978 to Mr. Bunce stating in part: "This letter therefore serves to notify you that you have been declared surplus . . . you will be laid-off with effect from May 1, 1978 in accordance with Section 29 of the Public Service Employment Act." (d) Did Mr. Rubinoff write a further letter to Mr. Bunce on March 9, 1978 repeating much the same information contained in his letter of January 20, 1978?

3. What are all the reasons for the contradictions contained in these various items of correspondence and specifically was Mr. Bunce given assurance of transfer rather than lay-off under date of December 2, 1977 by Mr. M. J. Cardinal and, if so, for what reason has this assurance not been followed?

Mr. Ed Lumley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): 1. Appointed to the Public Service—September 18, 1967 to the bureau of management consulting services, Public Service Commission. Level, computer administration level 4. Salary range: $12,753 to $14,493. The bureau of management consulting services transferred to the Department of Supply and Services, October 1, 1968. Appointed to the Department of Finance, guaranteed loans administration, April 1, 1976 at the computer system level 4. Present salary range: $26,092 to $29,400. Lay-off due to lack of work effective May 1, 1978.

2. (a) Yes. (b) Yes. (c) Yes. (d) Yes.

3. The functions of the guaranteed loans administration, student loans program were transferred to the Department of Secretary of State, which has no requirement for Mr. Bunce's services. Mr. Bunce was at no time given a transfer guarantee.

WINDSOR JUNCTION, N.S.—RAILHEAD

Question No. 1,512—Mr. Forrestall:

1. Has CNR considered developing an integrated railhead at or near Windsor Junction for handling piggyback, domestic containers, express and pool car business and (a) if so, will CNR proceed with this development (b) if not, for what reason?

2. Could such a facility be used as a base to develop a gateway or free-trade zone?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): The management of Canadian National Railways advises as follows: 1. Yes. (a) Not at present. (b) Such a facility is not needed at this time.

2. No.

CANADIAN DAIRY COMMISSION QUOTAS

Question No. 1,532—Mr. Tessier:

Did the Canadian Dairy Commission note any unfairness in relation to quotas in 1976-77 and, if so (a) what were they (b) what were the reasons?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Yes. (a) The reduction of market sharing quotas in 1976-77 favoured those provinces in which the fluid milk sector was more important than the industrial milk sector and also those fluid milk producers with a market sharing quota. The reduction of the quotas was therefore to the detriment of Canada's industrial milk producers. (b) The Canadian Milk Supply Management Committee, which represents the dairy producers of each province, the provincial governments and the Canadian Dairy Commission, enforced rules that were established during a period of underproduction. Enforcement of these rules during a period of overproduction proved unfair. Since the Committee operates by consensus, and the needed consensus was lacking, the rules were enforced unaltered. The allocation of the 4 million hundredweights of milk in November 1976, according to the criteria established, was to correct those injustices as much as possible.

DEPARTMENT OF SUPPLY AND SERVICES SECURITY

Question No. 1,594—Mr. Beaudoin:

Does the Security Branch of the Department of Supply and Services have employees, namely detectives, in the Province of Quebec and, if so, how many?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): No.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The questions enumerated by the parliamentary secretary have been answered.

[Translation]

Is it the pleasure of the House that the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

* * *

[English]

POINT OF ORDER

MR. COSSITT—DELAY IN ANSWERING CERTAIN QUESTIONS

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, it gets tiresome to rise on the same point of order and I am sure it gets tiresome for the parliamentary secretary for me to do so. I refer to the same series of questions. They begin with starred question No. 30 and go on quite a few numbers after that. Some of these questions have been on various order papers for as much as two years and still remain unanswered.

A few weeks ago when it appeared that the dissolution of the House was imminent, one could assume that the government was simply going to let these questions die on the order paper. There is no excuse whatsoever now, because the House has not been dissolved. I would like to draw particular attention to four questions, two of which I have mentioned before. First of all question No. 54 asks for the amount of government money which was paid to the brother-in-law of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang), namely, Mr. Tony Merchant, who is a candidate in the forthcoming election for the Liberal party and a member of the provincial legislature in his province. This concerns legal services, and particularly concerns work involving a radio station in that area. That is a simple thing and it could have been calculated very quickly and the question answered.

An hon. Member: Hanky-panky.

Mr. Cossitt: The parliamentary secretary promised that he would look into this particular question and give me a reply on when we could expect an answer. This was approximately two weeks ago.

Second is question No. 40 which has been on the order paper for almost three years. This deals with the fact that $86,000 was spent on behalf of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to buy things for his office on the third floor of the centre block. I asked what was bought and what did these items cost. For some reason or another the government is finding it hard to tell parliament what is contained in that list and what each item on that list cost. I can only assume there are some things on that list that the government would rather parliament did not know about.

Third is question No. 52 concerning Goldfarb and Associates. That question asked simply how much have these people received in the way of government contracts for various services performed in a certain period of time. In view of the fact that Martin Goldfarb controls when elections are held in this country, as we saw a few weeks ago, I would think it is more necessary that this question be answered at this time, and yet we have not had an answer to it.

Finally I come to question No. 1,088 which has been on the order paper for a long time. It concerns the misuse of the Unemployment Insurance Commission computer in Montreal by a firm known as Key Data Canada, used after hours whereby employees were brought back to work and used the machine or machines on an apparent non-permission basis. I have asked who authorized this and how much money was spent, who paid the wages of these employees, and particularly did the senior employee involved receive the gift of a swimming pool for his backyard for allowing this to happen. I do not know why this question has gone unanswered for months and months.

● (1222)

I do know that subsequent to my questioning the RCMP were called in to investigate. I have co-operated with the Mounted Police. I furnished them, as they asked me to, with the names of the employees who were called back to work and offered $20 bills in plain envelopes in an attempt to involve them in the process in the first place, most of whom, I am glad to report, refused.

The point is, why are the results of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police investigation, which I understand is long completed, being withheld? These are the questions to which I want to draw attention. Surely it is not too much to ask the parliamentary secretary to rise now and say a little more than "I will look into it again". We answered two of your questions today," which they did, questions which were nothing of this significance, or the usual excuse that 86 per cent have been answered in this session and so on. Can we get something absolutely relevant and concrete from the parliamentary secretary?

[Translation]

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member's number is a real verbal order paper. If each member of the House who does not have his questions answered as fast he would like took upon himself to rise and reread questions from the order paper to try and score a few political points for himself, we would never see the end of it and all it would amount to is a show of partisanship.

By reading over some of his questions remaining on the order paper, the hon. member has wasted some of the Social Credit's precious minutes on its allotted day. I do not intend to waste as much time has he did, so I will merely set right some facts that need to be straightened.

The hon. member implied that we do not answer questions and that is unfair, Mr. Speaker. I have here some relatively recent statistics dated May 9 which show that we answered 1,040 questions out of the 1,609 appearing on the order paper and that 559 questions were still outstanding on that date, but they are now being examined and have been referred to the various departments for research. That, Mr. Speaker, means that 64.6 per cent of the questions were answered.

I am in a position to tell the House that this percentage now has risen to well over two-thirds because we have answered many questions since last May 9. Furthermore, we answered 42 out of 44 orders for the production of papers, an almost perfect average. And Mr. Speaker, we also answered half of the questions indicated by an asterisk. That is another excellent average and it shows the good faith of the officials of the department of which I am the parliamentary secretary. Mr. Speaker, it is only fair to point out in reply to the question and insinuations of the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Cossitt) that we answered 94 per cent of the order paper questions during the last session.

[English]

Mr. Cossitt: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I will make this very brief. The parliamentary secretary, presumably speaking for the government, breached my privileges a few moments ago when he in effect said, and I do not have his exact words until I see them in Hansard, that I have no right to do what I was asking, that I was holding up the business of the House. I would say this. It is my right as a member—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Cossitt: I have the right to ask questions, and I will.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Cossitt: I have a question of privilege—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Surely the hon. member cannot ask the Chair to accept that every time an hon. member accuses another hon. member of wasting time or holding up the business of the House, that that is a question of privilege. I listened to the language of both hon. members. It was perfectly orderly and does not constitute privilege in any respect.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[Translation]

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—CONDEMNATION OF GOVERNMENT FOR ALLEGED NEGLECT OF ECONOMIC PROBLEMS

Mr. C. A. Gauthier (Roberval) moved:

That, this House strongly condemns the government:

(1) for having failed at the task in the fight against inflation and unemployment which are affecting mostly the workers between 18 and 30 years of age;

(2) for failing to present to parliament new and effective measures such as granting at age 60 the right to the voluntary benefits of the old age security pension;

(3) for not having paid a national dividend as a means to increase the buying power of Canadians in order for them to benefit by the surplus of production deriving from progress and technology; and

(4) for not having agreed to present new legislation that would have stimulated the consumption of Canadian products, such as, a discount on retail prices of Canadian-made products of which the percentage would be determined by the volume of the gross national product, and that the financing not be done by means of income tax, but by creating new credits emanating from the Bank of Canada and loaned to the government at an interest rate relating to the cost of administration.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members will want to note that proceedings on this motion will expire in accordance with Standing Order 58(11) at the ordinary hour of adjournment later this day.

[Translation]

● (1232)

Mr. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to rise on an opposition day, when each party is allotted a certain time to criticize or to submit proposals to the government propositions to improve its administration. Without dealing with the four points of the motion introduced by our party, I intend to speak to the two problems that have caused the most concern among the Canadian people these last few years. In other words, I intend to point out the government's shortcomings as far as unemployment and inflation are concerned, and especially to suggest solutions. I hope that all members will keep in mind that I do not criticize just for the sake of criticizing the government, but to give them a chance to better understand the remedial measures we are proposing.

We maintain that the government has generally failed in its fight against inflation because it has never wanted to believe that inflation was first and foremost the result of pyramidal interest rates, taxes and levies which eat up 50 per cent of our purchasing power. The government has been looking for the causes everywhere except where they really are. Therefore we are wondering today whether it is through ignorance or to conceal the real reasons which they know as well as we do, while their financial masters made them find a scapegoat.

This is why the Anti-Inflation Board was set up, a suggestion which they had aggressively rejected outright during the 1974 election, but which they were forced to endorse one year after the financiers' victory—pardon me, after they were returned to power. Throughout 1975 they warned financial and industrial monopolies as well as all multinationals that the government was going to establish wage and price controls. During that year, Mr. Speaker, we witnessed tremendous price increases before the legislation came into effect. The government even warned the suppliers, as reported in Le Quotidien of December 19, 1975 where the following can be read: Suppliers will not be allowed to increase the price of their products more than once every three months.

That was a beautiful warning, Mr. Speaker, more than was needed to attract the attention of all monopolies, bankers and manufacturers with the result that by September 1975 prices had gone up by 14.4 per cent, the most significant increase ever. So when the act was passed, the question of prices had already been settled because the maximum had been reached. Mr. Jean-Luc Pepin was appointed head of the board with an annual salary of only $54,000 to control prices and wages, but in fact there was no need for controls over prices; he could only control wages which had not increased at the same rate as prices during the months preceding enactment of the legislation.

As for the issue of taxes and interests, it seems that it was not subject to the controls of the Anti-Inflation Board. That is why we claim today that the government has failed with regard to inflation and that it did not do any better with regard to unemployment. When I hear the tenors of the Liberal party, the party which runs the country, say that they will eliminate unemployment and replace it with full employment, when everybody knows that the main cause of unemployment is the advent of the machine which replaces man and technology which increases productivity immeasurably. To create full employment, we would have to destroy all machines, suppress all technology in order to go back 100 years and get everybody back to manual labour.

Such regressions can be seen in non-industrialized or marxist-communist countries, such as Cambodia, where the entire urban population was expelled from the cities and forced to work in rural areas with the most primitive tools. At that rate, they will soon be using soup spoons as shovels. But as long as we live in an advanced democracy, it is impossible to consider going back to such practices in Canada. Nothing short of a marxist regime could force Canada to destroy the work of past generations. However, the government cannot be commended for one million unemployed, not to mention all those on welfare. When you realize that almost half of the unemployed are young people between 18 and 30, this is quite demoralizing. It is urgent to take strong action to get these young people on the labour market. They were led to believe in a great future, provided they completed their schooling and graduated, only to find doors closing on them, now that they are trying to enter the labour market.

The problem facing young people is a crucial one, Mr. Speaker, because not only are they rejected but they were fooled. About a hundred of them must have filed through my office recently not knowing where to turn. At the Quebec Construction Federation, which is controlled by union leaders, they were told that there was no work for them because there are plenty of workers in all fields. These young people had job offers in their pockets, Mr. Speaker, yet they could not get the working permit issued by the Quebec Construction Federation. On the one hand, you have these hundreds of young people who want nothing better than to work, yet they are being refused this right because they cannot get the working permit required by the unions.

On the other hand, the employers want to hire these young people but they cannot because the authorities refuse to grant this famous working permit. Yet, this generation has diplomas that the older generation, today's workers, never had. What kind of society do we live in, Mr. Speaker? Do you think that young people will tolerate such rejection much longer? Never! They will not accept being turned down when employers are running after them with job offers.

So, Mr. Speaker, I believe the best reform to open the door to the labour market for young people aged between 18 and 30 is to allow all workers from 60 and over who want to retire voluntarily to take old age security pension if they so wish. I have already stated in the House that the government would spend far less paying retirement benefits to that group of elderly than to support thousands of young people through unemployment or welfare benefits, for there is nothing they would like better than taking over from their elders. We find that citizens having reached retirement age do not cease to be active for our economy; on the contrary, they take a different orientation and develop other activities in areas still unexplored and likely to give a new impetus to communities those pensioners live in.

As for the young people who are to take over, they will carry on the work of their predecessors and spend their energies developing their country by introducing their own techniques for ever greater modernization. All these young people, instead of spending their days searching for work which will never materialize and staying idle, which is something unbearable at that age, would be able to set up a household, an institution which is the basis of our democratic society and they could then carry on a normal social life. Again I say this will of course depend on the lowering of the old age pension for all Canadian citizens who have reached the age of 60.

During the last elections, Mr. Speaker, the present government received a majority mandate after having promised the population that if it were elected it would grant the right to a pension at age 60 to anyone reaching that age. We were quite convinced that the government would not break its promises. Yet once again the voters have been deceived and are very disappointed to notice that only a few spouses who are 60 years old will get that pittance because I call it a pittance, Mr. Speaker, or if you prefer alms for the poor since it is based on the income of the other spouse. I suggest that by acting this way the government has grossly and intentionally deceived the population and I can assure you that the people over 60 will not forget it. They are only waiting for an opportunity to make known their discontent and the fate they have in store for those who betray their promises.

For several years we have been asking for a true old age security pension, that is a pension which would not be based on the degree of poverty or the marital status of Canadian citizens. Let me explain: that 50 per cent pension and 50 per cent supplement based on the income of the spouses is the most unfair and sneaky formula ever devised to discriminate against those who have toiled all their life to save a few dollars or collect a little annuity. If we were to grant full pension to all citizens who are 60 and over, we would thereby make substantial savings by eliminating thousands of civil servants. If we give these senior citizen a full pension there would be no need for inquiries. It would be just like a family allowance, and it would be the birth date which would determine when the cheques are to start being sent out.

And this way we would get rid of the thousands of civil servants whose job it is to go and search in the old folks homes like police investigators to check whether or not a pensioner has a few hundred dollars hidden in a wool sock or under his mattress. Imagine the millions of dollars that would be saved if tomorrow all auditing offices were to disappear with their hundreds of thousands of over-paid civil servants simply because in the future only a birth certificate would be required to issue cheques to everyone 60 years of age. No more searches, no more discrimination, no more possible injustices and even less favouritism.

Pensioners who end up with no income at 60 would get their full share of the cake and would suffer no injustice, as they would receive their full pension without even an investigation. As I said, retiring at 60, on full pension, would not be mandatory. Those who managed to put together a few hundred dollars for their old days would then have an additional income on top of their pension. They would have to file their income tax return and pay back the government every year, as they are now doing for that matter.

However, there would be this very important difference: they would pay taxes on their supplementary income only once whereas today in addition to being checked every month or every three months, and getting a cut-back in their pension cheques every month, because they made sacrifices and put a little money aside for their old age, they still have to file their income tax returns. By allowing this situation to continue, we not only make the lives of 50 per cent of our senior citizens miserable, we actually give them the Tantalus treatment day after day as we put them through the water drop torture.

To ensure equal justice for all pensioners I have asked the government on many occasions to issue pension cheques on the basis of citizenship rather than marital status, as is the case today. At present, a married couple receives $22 less every month than a registered non-married couple or two persons living under the same roof. Yet each has contributed in the same way as all Canadian citizens, so why not pay them back on that basis?

That is just another discrimination that must be corrected for people 60 years of age and over in addition to reducing the purchasing power of the legally married couple who deserve their rightful participation in the Canadian economy, just like anyone else.

If we blame the government today for having failed in its fight against inflation and unemployment, we can blame it even more for having introduced bills whose social impact are clearly antisocial. I have mentioned that several times in this House: almost 80 per cent of our so-called social laws are in fact antisocial. Take them one by one and you will realize it; besides, all the examples I have mentioned are proof of it.

Mr. Speaker, in closing my remarks, I urge once more the government to consider the two points I made earlier in my motion, namely, workers 18 to 30 years of age, and a pension for all persons aged 60 or over who want one.

I am convinced that if the government would heed my suggestions it would then have a most efficient weapon to launch a real attack on inflation and unemployment.

● (1242)

[English]

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, on an opposition day the normal practice is for the mover of an opposition motion to speak first and then for a government spokesman to rise, but today it appears that the government does not want to speak too early.

I would like to start by pointing out that the first three lines of the motion put down by the Social Credit party are very interesting, as is the second part of the motion. I think I shall have to restrict my comments today to the first three lines, or the first part of the motion which states:

● (1252)

That this House strongly condemns the government:

(1) for having failed at the task in the fight against inflation and unemployment which are affecting mostly the workers between 18 and 30 years of age.

In the time allocated to me I should like to speak on that topic for a few moments. It can be said of the situation in which we find ourselves in 1978 that the young people of this country can be referred to as the Canadians forgotten by this Liberal government. The present government has paid lip service to their cause. It has put out flyers, printed posters, and prepared a number of advertising programs on what it is doing for the young people, but in effect it has not even scratched the surface. I can remember the 1972 election campaign when the Liberal candidates and the Liberal government were telling the young people that at that time there was a high rate of unemployment, especially among the youth of this country, but that by 1975 demography showed there would be a shortage of young people ready to contribute to the work force of this country. That propaganda did not turn out to be true because by 1975 there was a higher rate of unemployment among the young people, which continues today in 1978, three years later than predicted in 1972.

The second matter that concerns me is the fact that the government has frequently said that this is a temporary problem which will be overcome by 1980, implying that the baby boom will have passed and that there will be fewer people seeking work. The true fact is that we have had at least ten years of problems with unemployment among the youth of this country, and that we have at least ten years of them ahead of us. I hope that the government will start to recognize this fact and will start planning on this basis.

The first part of the Social Credit motion refers to how inflation has hurt the young people today. First of all, unless a young person is from a wealthy family, that person is not established and does not have a bank roll enabling him to live through inflation. When a young person gets out into the work-a-day world and lives as an adult member of society, he wishes to buy a house. But the cost of a house has gone up from, perhaps, $21,000 in 1971, to $46,000 or $47,000 today. That is the price of the smallest type of housing unit you could find in any urban area where most young people are. It is harder for them to get that money because they cannot get the jobs, and also because in the last few years salaries have not increased as fast as inflation as regards basic commodities such as housing.

Another basic commodity required by a young family starting out is an automobile. Whereas an automobile would have cost $3,400 in 1970, today it costs $6,200. Again the price has doubled in eight years, whereas salaries of young people have not doubled, that is, if they can find a job. So those young people do not have a bank roll, and inflation is hitting them really hard.

The other problem is that inflation is probably what is most devastating, whether it be in Germany in the 1930s, in Brazil, or in Canada, because in the long run inflation causes more unemployment. I think the government must be taken to task for not solving a number of problems.

First, the federal government has not co-ordinated its youth programs. There is not one department to which one can write asking what are the youth programs available to the young people of Canada. I know, because we ended up going to all the departments asking for all the programs. We have found through our research that there are 58 federal programs dealing with young people, which are spread through 16 different departments. We were asked by one department to give them the compilation which we had made of the various programs so that they might know what programs were available. I think this is rather sad. There should be some bureau or some official organization at the federal level to which the young people can write, asking what programs the federal government is providing for them. I have here a 91-page list with a description of every type of program available for young people, what program was phased in and what program was phased out in the last three years, how much money the government has spent, how many people have been employed, and at what cost.

The second problem is that although there is a rather large section in the Department of the Secretary of State which deals with young Canadians, the Secretary of State (Mr. Roberts) has no idea of what the department is dealing with. When I was first invited to become the youth critic for our party, I wrote to the Secretary of State asking him to give me a list of all the post-secondary institutions in Canada. His officials could not do so, and yet we spend through that department tens of millions of dollars a year financing post-secondary instruction. But they could not give me a list. They asked me if I could give them a list, if I had one. We then wrote to the ten provinces and territories to find out what post-secondary institutions they had.

Prior to concluding at one o'clock, Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out that nowhere at the federal level is there a list of the volunteer organizations in this country dealing with young people, whether it be the Red Cross, the St. John's Ambulance, or Boy Scouts. We have now compiled a list of well over 250 of these organizations.

I should like to continue my comments at two o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until 2 p.m.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

● (1402)

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. Prior to the luncheon adjournment the hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. Dick) had the floor. He has ten minutes remaining.

[Mr. Dick.]

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, I thought I had 12 minutes remaining, but in any event I appreciate Your Honour's notice. As I was indicating before lunch, it is unfortunate the federal government does not have an organization within its entire bureaucracy which can inform young Canadians of the range of programs that are offered. The government does not have a list of its own programs in any one location. It is necessary for people to go to various government departments when seeking such information.

The government does not have a list of the Canadian post-secondary institutions which it funds. We were anxious to receive such a list, but were unable to get it. It does not have a list of the voluntary organizations which help young people and the youth groups in Canada, although lip service is paid to those organizations and they are under government direction. This is unfortunate and the federal government should do something to remedy the problem as soon as possible.

● (1412)

One thing the government has done is to blame its problems on youth unemployment and everybody else, without taking any responsibility for itself. A few years ago the government blamed it on a world recession, then it was on world inflation, and now it blames it on a world-wide phenomenon, but of course it is not as problematical in Austria, Germany or England as it is in this country. Our problem is magnified over that of the other countries.

Recently, of course, the government blamed it on the baby boom. If ministers had been looking at the statistics they could have seen how many children were born some years ago, and predicted that they were going to have a large influx of people into the work force at this stage. They were also blaming it on the young people, saying that they have too high an expectation and they are not prepared to take any job, but only a select type of job.

It is not fair to blame the problem on people who happen to have an education and who aspire to a certain type of job, by saying that they are afraid to take any job. People are entitled to these aspirations. Last year we heard the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), when he was at the University of Toronto, telling the young people there that if they did not like it they could leave Canada and fly to another country in which they could find work. That is great advice for a government which has done so little, considering such a large job has to be done.

I hear the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Cullen) is going to speak later this afternoon. He is doing a lot of chattering right now. Perhaps he can give some advice on new plans because the existing ones are not doing anything. Hopefully the minister in charge of youth unemployment will have some new ideas. Maybe they will announce them during the election campaign.

One thing this government has not recognized is its own federal statistics. If we take five-year groupings of young people in this country or of people of any age group—the 0 to 4, 5 to 9, 10 to 14, 15 to 19, 20 to 24, and the 25 to 29—we find that the five largest are those which are 5 to 9, 10 to 14, 15 to 19, 20 to 24, and 25 to 29. Indeed, those in the 15 to 19 bracket who in 1986 will be 25 to 29 years of age, number over 2,300,000. Those who are 10 to 14 years of age, who will be 20 to 24 years of age in 1986, number 2,276,000 of them. And of the ones who are 5 to 9 and who will be 15 to 19 years of age in 1986, there will be almost two million. In rounded figures, we have almost six million people who, in eight years from now, in the middle 1980s, when we are told by the government we are going to have a shortage of people to do work, will be eligible for work. There will be six million young Canadians who will be able to work, between the ages of 15 and 30 years of age.

I am not suggesting that they are all going to work, but if there is a participation rate of anything approaching what we have today when it is becoming the trend for two members in the family to work we can expect at least 60 per cent of them to be looking for jobs. This will amount to something in the neighbourhood of 3,500,000 new jobs that we will have to find for these people, and I am not talking about the people unemployed today who are over 24 years of age and number approximately 500,000. So we have almost four million jobs that we have to find in this country in the next ten years if we want to get down to full employment. The government should bear that in mind.

The government has spent a lot of money on short-term job measures, and I have gone through them in detail. Some of them are modestly effective and some of them are completely ineffective, but the problem is they are all short-term jobs. For example, Canada Works is going to spend $48 million on Young Canada Works this summer for a maximum hopeful employment of 30,000 young Canadians under 25 years of age. They are not going to have any skills after working 18 weeks. They will have cleared a plot of land in some municipality for a park, made a boat ramp, raked brush at the side of a road, taken over a day care centre, or tried to run a summer camp, but they are not going to have life skills which they could use in other jobs in the future.

There is the same problem with Canada Works where you can work up to 52 weeks. There are a number of people in those jobs, but they are not ongoing jobs. They are merely band-aids. The problem is that at the end of the 18 weeks for Young Canada Works, or 52 weeks for Canada Works, these people will be dumped back into the unemployment force again, and they will not have learned a skill or trade.

Another problem I would like to point out, although I know I will not be able to expand on it today, is that the federal government has been very lax in dealing with teaching skills, and teaching skills through apprenticeship programs. I realize that this would have to be done in co-operation with the provinces. It would be much more beneficial if the government were to take a long-term view of what it is teaching the young people in order to give them skills which will last them throughout their lives.

I would like to summarize a few things before sitting down. Youth unemployment has been a problem in Canada for several years. The long-term dangers to Canada's newest entrants into the labour force—still forming their initial attitude to work, being frustrated and turned off by bleak employment prospects—are obvious, but the young unemployment crisis in this country has been all but ignored by the present Liberal government.

When the present government has referred to youth unemployment its ministers have characterized it as "unusually high", or "temporary". The government's own statistics prove that the unemployment rate has risen consistently and predictably. When the present government says that these rates are temporary or recent, it is misleading the Canadian people.

If we look at Statistics Canada we find that in December, 1973, the unemployment rate among the 14 to 24 age group was 9.7 per cent. By December, 1974—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I regret to inform the hon. member that his allotted time has expired. He may proceed if there is unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Dick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will try to wrap up as quickly as possible. In December, 1974, the figure had risen to 10.6 per cent, and continued to rise to 12.5 per cent in December, 1975. It went to 13.4 per cent in December, 1976, and hit 15.2 per cent in December, 1977. As of March, 1978, the adjusted unemployment figure for this age group was 15.1 per cent, but the actual figures indicate over 16 per cent.

If the government would only read its own figures it would realize that the problem has been steadily growing over the past five years. The present situation was predictable, yet the government has ignored this and tried to pretend that the problem will solve itself in the very near future.

Also, according to Statistics Canada, the government's own direct youth job creation response, including summer student employment, has been going down over the years. In 1973 the government spent $85.4 million to create 67,000 jobs for young Canadians. In 1974 the federal government spent $85.4 million to create 67,000 jobs. In 1975 the federal government spent $67 million to create only 37,000 jobs for young Canadians. In 1976 the federal government spent $24 million to create 12,000 summer jobs. In 1977 the federal government spent $106.2 million to create 81,400 jobs. In 1978 it reduced the amount to $96.2 million to create some 60,000 jobs. I point out that is 60,000 summer jobs, which is 3,000 more than was in its comparable figures for last year. I think it is inconsistent with trying to upgrade the youth employment problem.

● (1422)

I should point out that even the minister has indicated that the statistics they have often quoted in reference to how many jobs they create in the summertime are deceptive. Just the other day I asked a question about this in the House and the minister said that they did not like to play with figures, that they are more interested in jobs. Yet as he goes around the country he says that last summer Canada Manpower found 190,000 jobs for students and young people. In actual fact 65,718 of those jobs were casual placements. That means a job for the duration of one week or less, but the minister does not say that. He talks about placements, not about full-time jobs. When you are dealing with placements, a person could have a job in one place for two or three days, then in another place for three or four days, and in still another place for a few days—the same person would be placed six or seven times during the summer. The department counts that as six or seven jobs, and so the figures are deceiving. That is why I asked the minister last week if they would consider dealing in man-days or man-weeks of work, rather than placements.

Members will have noticed press reports on this subject in the past. A headline in the Toronto Star just a year ago in May, 1977, read "Grads Job Outlook Grim". A headline in the Ottawa Citizen about the same time read "Job Garden not Rosy for University Graduates". In the Montreal Gazette of Thursday, May 18, under the heading "Students' Summer Jobs Outlook Bleak" there appears this statement:

> But government statistics indicate that no more than 75,000 or about 20 per cent will find jobs through federal and provincial government employment agencies.
>
> Last summer 53,000 students found work through Canada Manpower Centres, and Manpower counsellors predict that this summer they will place no more and perhaps less, than last year.

This prediction by Manpower counsellors in Montreal indicates they are expecting less this year than last year.

Perhaps I can close by reciting a poem by Kipling. The blame for the very gloomy prospects for young people at the present time lies with the government which has been in office for the last 15 years. It has known about these statistics for that length of time. Why did it allow this to happen? Why will our grandchildren say? They will probably curse the current group of politicians. Perhaps they will have some right to curse them and feel cynical.

I think that a suitable epitaph for the graves of some of the people in cabinet who have known of the problems but have not come up with a solution could read as follows:

> I could not dig; I dared not rob;
> Therefore I lied to please the mob.
> Now all my lies are proved untrue
> I could not face the land I slew.
> What tale shall serve me here among > Mine angry and defrauded young?

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member who has just taken his seat concentrated his remarks on one of the several paragraphs of the motion before us today. It will come as no surprise to my colleagues if I state that it is my intention to concentrate my remarks on another of the many sections of this motion.

I congratulate the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier) and his friends in the Social Credit party for including in today's motion the important issue of making pensions available on a voluntary basis at age 60. Perhaps I might be permitted to read the preamble of the motion, together with paragraph (2):

> That this House strongly condemns the government:
>
> (2) for failing to present to parliament new and effective measures such as granting at age 60 the right to the voluntary benefits of the old age security pension;

I want to assert once again that this issue of lowering the pensionable age will not go away. I know that the government strives to blur the issue by telling us that we are in a time of restraint. I heard that message when I first came to parliament a long time ago. I know, too, that the government likes to talk about the desire of many people now to work beyond age 65 or 70. I join in that sentiment, I may say. I know also that the government emphasizes its concern to do something not only for those between ages 60 and 65, but for those who are having a tough time between ages 50 and 60 or, indeed, at any age. Those points are all valid, but they do not wipe out the urgent need in our society for giving more consideration to people between the ages of 60 and 65.

When I think of this issue I think of two main groups. If I indicate that one of them consists mainly of men and the other consists mainly of women, I shall probably be told there are no others, but in any case I have two main groups in mind.

My constituency of Winnipeg North Centre is one in which very large numbers of workers are employed in heavy industry. They work day by day, month by month, year by year in the railway shops, the steel mills, the rolling mills, the packing plants, the clothing establishments, and so on, where the work is heavy and sometimes not the most interesting. These workers find that when they reach age 55 or 58 the rat race gets pretty hard for them. If there is one request that is made to me by my constituents, particularly when I meet them at their places of work, it is to get that pension age down to 60.

I plead that it is just as urgent an issue in this day and age as it was a number of years ago to get the pension age down from 70 to 65. As I say, I join in the various views that have been expressed about doing something for other groups as well. I just say that instead of talking about any of these issues, something should be done. This issue is one that sooner or later this parliament must grapple with and, in my book, it should be done sooner rather than later.

In urging that there be pension available at age 60, I want to make it clear, as I have done so often, that I am not advocating that there be a universal pension at age 60 as there is at age 65, but rather—in line with the words of the motion—that it be available on a voluntary basis. My suggestion is that the rule that should be applied is simply the rule of whether one is in or out of the work force. My contention is that if a person is out of the labour market, whether by withdrawing from it or never having been in it, that at age 60 that person should be entitled to the full amount of the pension under the Old Age Security Act, and also that that person, if he has been a contributor thereto, should be entitled to the full amount that he has earned under the Canada Pension Plan.

• (1432)

I like the fact that the suggestion about reducing the pension age to age 60 in this motion is placed in the context of our economic problems, including the problem of unemployment, and there can be no doubt but that it would be a significant contribution to the solution of the unemployment problem faced by our younger people if more of our older people were given the opportunity to retire. The opportunity to retire, of course, means nothing unless there is with it sufficient income on which to live. It can be argued that if persons could enjoy their old age security and their Canada Pension Plan benefits, together with any other savings or pension rights that they might have, then retirement at 60 would be possible.

Every time I raise the subject with people I meet at shop gates or whom I meet in my constituency they impress upon me their point of view, namely, that the reform they would like to see most is the reduction of the pension age to 60 on a voluntary basis.

The other group I have in mind when I am pressed for pensions at age 60 is the other half of the human race, the women.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): As I have said in other debates, for all that we have tried to do in modern times to establish equality between men and women in our society, we are still a long way from that goal in terms of pensions. We do not have pension equality between men and women. The proposal I make for pensions to be available at age 60 to all of those who are out of the labour market redresses that wrong to an extent, because it would provide pensions to those women who have chosen to remain at home. They are out of the labour market, and pensions at 60 would thus be available to them. As I say, that would correct one of the elements of discrimination suffered by women in our society. But they have suffered in other ways. I will however, come back to the main point about pensions for women at age 60.

Hon. members will say they have heard me say this before. I tell them they will hear me say it many more times until something is done about it. It is not fair and it does not square with a society that believes in equality between men and women for us to have so many pension plans under which, if the woman dies first, the man's pension is 100 per cent, but if the man dies first, the woman's pension is only 50 per cent.

An hon. Member: Right on.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Do not give me the line that he was out working, and that he made the contributions. If marriage is anything, it is an equal partnership. Both partners contribute to whatever they save or earn. That concept of partial pensions for widows and full pensions for men, whether they have a wife or are widowers, is completely wrong.

There are many other ways in which there are pension inequalities. I think of the kinds of actuarial tables that are used which are pursued in such a way as to discriminate against women; the different rates that have to be paid under certain pension plans whether one is a man or a woman. All of this is completely for the birds, certainly in a society in which we say that we believe in equality between the sexes.

I suppose the most glaring example of unfairness to women in terms of pensions has to do with the spouse's allowance. This was something that was brought in after it had been promised by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in the 1974 election campaign. I well remember the day that he made that promise. I remember hearing and seeing it that night on the national television news when he was quoted as saying that, while it would solve certain problems, it had to be a transitional measure because it would create other problems as well. If ever the Prime Minister said anything that was right, that was so on that occasion. The spouse's allowance may have helped, and indeed it has helped in many instances. It has helped out where there was a man and wife one who was over the age of 65 and the other was between 60 and 65 trying to live on one pension. They now get two pensions.

In the process we have divided the people between the ages of 60 and 65, and most of the persons affected by the spouse's allowance are women. Do not give me the line that this is an equal thing—it could be his or hers—it could be a younger husband with an older wife. The fact is that most of the persons who draw the spouse's allowance are women. We have divided the women of Canada between the ages of 60 and 65 into two groups, those who have a man and those who do not have a man. The idea of determining one's rights to a pension on that basis is so foreign to all the concepts of fairness and equality that I really do not understand why the government, even after the Prime Minister made the promise in 1974, went ahead with it—

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): It is a shameful position for them.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Some of us said so in 1974 when the legislation was brought in and did our best to get it corrected at that time. Some of us in our platforms in the 1974 election campaign did not say, as some others did, that they wanted the pension only for women at a younger age. We said we wanted to lower the pension age to 60 for all who were out of the labour market.

Under the spouse's allowance arrangement, a woman who is between age 60 and 65 can get the spouse's allowance, which in amount is the old age security rate plus the guaranteed income supplement, if she is married to and living with a husband who is over the age of 65. But if she is already a widow at age 60, or if she is a spinster, in other words if she is a woman who does not have a man or never had one, there is nothing for her. What kind of a society is that?

An hon. Member: That is the just society.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On top of all that we have this gross and inhuman injustice under which the government says, that if a woman is 62 years of age and she is married to a husband who is 67, she gets the spouse's allowance all right. But then, if next year he, at age 68 dies, and she is now 63, she is no longer a spouse; she is a widow and so her spouse's allowance is cut off at age 63 and she must wait until she is 65 to qualify for old age security and a guaranteed income supplement. I do not know which is worse, the widow or the spinster who never receives the allowance, or the spouse who becomes a widow and then loses it. Either way it is an act of complete unfairness and I insist, Mr. Speaker, that this cannot go on.

One of these days—I do not know when—we might have another election in this country—

An hon. Member: It may go like the spouse's allowance.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That is an interesting remark that perhaps the hon. member might expand. But if we do not get something solved about this issue before the election, I hope that in the election campaign the Prime Minister may complete the promise he made in 1974. Election campaigns do have that advantage. All sorts of promises get made. It is quite a study afterwards to line up the promises that were made and notice how many of them go unfulfilled. There is not time today to list the 1974 promises that were not fulfilled. In this case the fulfilling of the spouse's allowance promise left the very problems which the Prime Minister had in mind at that time. If they are not solved before the 1978, 1979 or the 1980 election, I hope that during that campaign, if it is for no other reason that to try to get votes, the Prime Minister will say, "We are going to correct this situation."

● (1442)

It is completely false and unfair to say to women between the ages of 60 and 65 that their entitlement to a pension is not based on their need or on what they have done in terms of work to raise a family or work in the community. Their entitlement to a pension between the ages of 60 and 65 is based on their being able to give the correct answer to one question: have you got a man? That is a blot on parliament and, in particular, a blot on the government which brought in this legislation.

I suggest that a solution to it is very simple. It is the solution in paragraph (2) of the motion we are debating this afternoon, namely, that pensions should be available at age 60 on a voluntary basis for all those who are in that bracket.

There are other things as well that can be done to correct the unfairness in the Canada Pension Plan and the public service plan. Also, something should be done about plans in the private sector. We should look at this in the concept of providing jobs for persons who can be employed at younger years if we move these people out, but we must not let this issue of the right of women to pensions in that age bracket sit around any longer.

I congratulate my friends in the Social Credit party on placing this issue before us this afternoon. Again, it is a motion that does not come to a vote. As a Liberal said the other day, on another issue, he was glad that issue did not come to a vote. What he meant was that he could speak in favour of it without having to risk voting opposite to the way he spoke.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

This motion does not call for a vote. I hope some of the Liberals who speak today will recognize that the Prime Minister was right in 1974 about the spouse's allowance, that it would create problems. I hope they will express their views to their government to the effect that this ought to be changed. It is not good enough just to continue the allowance to the spouse who has become a widow. That ought to be done, but it does not solve the problem. It is not good enough to keep that tied in any way to the marital status of the woman.

The best answer is to make pensions available at age 60 on a voluntary basis. That should be done with regard to old age security and the Canada Pension Plan. Private plans should be encouraged to do the same. That would start to improve the lot of those hard working men to whom I have referred who have spent 30 to 35 years in the rat race and have looked forward to a few years' retirement. Do that and you will correct the situation for the women in the same age bracket. But for God's sake, let's not just talk about it year in and year out. Let's do something about it right away.

[Translation]

Mr. Albert Béchard (Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, never in my short life have I seen so accurately stated the ideology of the Social Credit Party of Canada than in the motion it brought forward through its visible leader, the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier), and interim creditist House leader. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, upon close scrutiny of the motion moved by the interim leader of the Social Credit Party of Canada, it can easily be seen that this masterpiece, reflects exactly the Social Credit philosophy. With your permission, Mr. Speaker, I will read the motion:

> That this House strongly condemns the government: (1) for having failed at the task in the fight against inflation and unemployment which are affecting mostly the workers between 18 and 30 years of age;

Secondly, and this is where it begins:

> (2) for failing to present to parliament new and effective measures such as granting at age 60 the right to the voluntary benefits of the old age security pension;
>
> (3) for not having paid a national dividend . . .

. . . and this is where things get worse:

> . . . as a means to increase the buying power of Canadians in order for them to benefit by the surplus of production deriving from progress and technology; and
>
> (4) for not having agreed to present new legislation that would have stimulated the consumption of Canadian products, such as a discount on retail prices of Canadian-made products of which the percentage would be determined by the volume of the gross national product, and that the financing not be done by means of income tax, but by creating new credits emanating . . .

. . . and here is the cure-all:

> . . . from the Bank of Canada and loaned to the government at an interest rate relating to the cost of administration.

And at the end of that disturbing paragraph Social Credit sympathizers can see that mention is made of an interest rate, and until now there was never any talk of interest. But now the Social Credit Party of Canada has recognized that when one has money to invest, from time to time something must be expected in return if only to pay administration costs.

Mr. Speaker, after listening to the arguments of the mover of this motion, who in fact shows very little interest in it—he has disappeared—I wonder why, after having complained through his motion that the government has done nothing, he did not stay in the House to listen to the learned speeches of the opposition as well as the government. In support of his motion, it is easy, Mr. Speaker, and I think my colleagues understood and understand easily how our colleague for Roberval came to his conclusion; with all the respect I have for him as interim leader of his party, I say he has not changed at all and, worse still, he has failed to understand the policy of the Canadian government.

I say he has not changed at all when he blames the lack of jobs, for the young and part of the Canadian population, on the unions. I am not prepared to say that all is rosy and that everything union leaders do in Canada is fine; to approve the pressures they put upon their members, and to overlook all that is bad or reprehensible in what some union leaders do, but I must say to the leader of the Social Credit Party of Canada that unions were a necessary institution and still are for the protection of the workers.

● (1452)

It is true that at times, unions go to the other extreme, but I submit that we cannot deny workers the right to become members of a trade union. Moreover, the hon. member blames technology. He says the government should blame technology, the mechanization of work. He even said that we should go back to manual work in order to give everyone a job. Frankly, Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member for Roberval is serious, he should remember that society has evolved and that technology creates jobs.

Why have we changed the whole education system in Canada and more particularly in Quebec? The evolution of society and of technology has made it necessary to retrain our fellow citizens who had not had a chance to further their education in order to enable them to adapt to the development of technology. Of course, I have seen technology on the farms of Roberval where they do not use horses only and do not sow as our grandfathers did in the early days. Today with tractors and expensive machinery, and not more in Roberval than elsewhere, who wants to return to the old ways?

But all this machinery, all this advanced technology, Mr. Speaker, gives work to specialized workers, and that is why this government has provided large amounts of money to retrain workers, to ensure their mobility and show them how to work with modern technology. Millions of dollars, if not more, have been made available to Canadians for that purpose. Technology and machinery cannot be blamed entirely for the present unemployment.

Unemployment exists, it is a fact and it is a source of concern to everyone but the government is doing all it can to create jobs in order to alleviate the situation. When we say that the unemployment rate in Canada is 8.4 or 8.6 per cent that in this country a million people are unemployed, we forget to mention how many do work. An unemployment rate of 8.4 per cent, if my figures are correct so far, means that 91.6 per cent of the working population are employed. In March 1978, just two months ago, how many people were employed in Canada? 9,884,000 as compared to 7,767,000 in 1968. Therefore, an employment rate of 91.6 per cent means that 9,085,-440 people out of 9,984,000 have a job. It is all very well to say that we have a high rate of unemployment, but we should not forget to mention those who contribute to the economy of our country.

As I said before, we would certainly like everybody to have a job. When the hon. member for Roberval says for example—I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, I was looking for another paragraph of his motion. I would like to go over the figures for the last decade. In 1968, we had 7,500,000 workers. Today we have 9,984,000, almost 10,000,000. On the average 250,000 jobs were created each year for the past ten years. In percentage points, the number of people over 15 years of age who have a job, is a now higher than ever. In 1968, it was 54.5 per cent and in March 1978, it was 57 per cent. The rate of participation in the economy is higher than ever: in March 1968, it was 57.1 per cent, today it is 62.4 per cent.

The youth participation rate was also higher in 1968, when it was 57.1 per cent, and in 1978, when it reached 64.1 per cent. Our gross national product has also increased, even though our economy is said to be in a bad way, by 45 per cent in real terms between 1968 and 1977; there was a real increase of 32 per cent in the gross national product per capita during the period 1968-77; the average family income increased by 35 per cent in real terms during the period 1969-76; the average income of Canadians increased by 25 per cent in real terms during the period 1969-76; and the per capita personal available income increased by 118 per cent from 1968 to 1977. Mr. Speaker, these figures show that even though our economy has not been in top shape, it is certainly not the worst among industrial nations.

Today, most Canadians have a much higher standard of living than a few years ago, and to those who are unfortunately unemployed because of the slowdown in the world economy, this government has provided generous assistance so that they can at least enjoy a minimum basic income. Pessimists like those on the other side, not only in the Social Credit party, but also other opposition members, including those of the official opposition, who compare our living conditions with those of the 30s during the depression show that they do not have first-hand knowledge of that period.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Do you?

Mr. Béchard: Yes, I do, and perhaps even more than the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro). Instead of a moderate economic growth like we have now, Canada witnessed in the 30's massive job losses and an economic downturn. On the other hand, this year in March, there were 330,000 workers more than at the same time period last year. Canadians only have to look around them to see the tremendous progress made in the last ten years. As I said earlier, not only has the real income of Canadians increased significantly, but the quality of health services, for instance, of transportation, the number of community centres, schools, universities, national and provincial parks as well as recreational centres have considerably increased.

For example, by striking off low income earners from the tax rolls, and by implementing an enlightened social policy, we managed to make poverty regress in the last ten years. According to reliable criteria, the percentage of Canadians below the poverty level dropped from 20 per cent in 1967 to 10 per cent today in 1978. This is a 50 per cent improvement and I think it is rather significant for an unsound economy, for an administration which is said to be inefficient. I think that the present administration is to be commended for increasing the standard of living of the Canadian people by 50 per cent.

The Canadian people who took advantage of the social justice measures implemented by the present government may ask themselves, and rightly so, what the Progressive Conservatives are thinking about when they propose to reduce the federal budget by $2 billion. This morning, the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier), and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) stressed the fact that old age pensions should now be universal, which means they should be paid to all persons of 60. Well, meanwhile, the opposition, not the New Democratic Party, but the official opposition, criticizes the government for spending too much money and asks us to extend the old age pensions universally at the age of 60.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): We never asked for that.

Mr. Béchard: Not you, the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), but others. And the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier) even said that pensions—and if I understood proprely, he meant pensions plus guaranteed income supplements—should be paid to every one at the age of 60 without a means test. This is the Social Credit theory. So, Mr. Speaker, while we are asked to lower the eligible age, I do not know if you have figured out what would represent paying pensions at 60. Here on this side of the House, we would like every 60-year old to get it, and within ten years the eligible age will probably be lowered to 50, including us state pensioners at 50—

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Who will work to pay for it?

[Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich).]

Mr. Béchard: Yes, who is going to work to pay for those pensions? So, Mr. Speaker, I consider that those proposals cannot be serious particularly when we are asked to cut expenses and taxes. As the sponsor of this motion suggested earlier, even if we would like everybody to receive that pension at the age of 60, we should not forget the taxpayers, and as my colleague from Edmonton West so ably put it, we should not forget those who are still working.

I also heard the two previous speakers, I refer to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier) say that the government party had promised the pension at 60 during the last election campaign. We have never promised such a thing. It may be possible that the pension at 60 for everyone has been promised in the heat of an election campaign, but this is not the platform I had to defend and put forward. And those who did it were probably not elected and are not in this House.

Mr. Speaker, before moving on, another thing that was said for the umpteenth time by the hon. member for Roberval is that the government party, and it will surprise also those of the official opposition, was opposed to the wage and price freeze during the last election campaign. Well, as in the case of those who promised the pension at 60 for everybody, we never objected to price controls, but we objected to a price freeze. We objected to the Canadian people being sent to freeze in the cold lands where the official opposition party, namely the Progressive Conservative party, wanted to lead us. We could not have objected to controls because we already had some in some areas. So I think it is not too honest for the opposition to play petty politics and show partisanship in this matter.

The progress made in this regard in the past ten years has allowed senior citizens, large families and the unemployed to keep their dignity despite the high rate of inflation and economic problems at the world level. In 1967, for example, the old age security pension was $75 a month, and I would not be surprised to hear the official opposition say—in fact, they already said it—that the pension should be paid at the age of 60. However, bearing in mind that since the advent of social security measures, all the official opposition party has managed to offer Canadians is a meagre $16 compared to the total amount of $156.66 paid today. I wonder whether the Canadian people can take them seriously. Today—

An hon. Member: How much?

Mr. Béchard: $156.66 less $16. The difference is what the party led by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and his predecessors have given Canadians. Today, those eligible for those benefits get a basic amount of $156.66 a month, and a guaranteed income supplement of $107.62 is paid to those who need it.

• (1502)

I heard a while ago the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) refer to the spouses' allowance. He never mentioned the spouse. If you noticed, as the member for Roberval did, he mentioned the wife. The allowance is not only meant for the wife between 60 and 65, but for the spouse, either husband or wife. Then, the husband remains without a pension if he is 62 years old when his wife dies at 68.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): How many are there?

Mr. Béchard: I will count them and let you know next week. The member for Winnipeg North Centre added that the spouse was left with nothing when the Department of National Health and Welfare pays welfare allowances in every province to all needy individuals. The federal share of those allowances is 50 per cent, thanks to a policy implemented by this government.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired. But he could go on if there is unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The hon. member for Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine.

Mr. Béchard: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I thank you for that generosity as well as my colleagues. As I was saying, those who are in need, whether they be widows or widowers, whether they live alone or not, are entitled, whether they are spouses—because today you don't call those people widowers or widows, you call them spouses—but the spouse has the right to apply to the provincial department and he or she will have his or her pension or allowance set by the Quebec department of social affairs, and I repeat that this social allowance that senior citizens in Quebec, Ontario, Manitoba, all across Canada will be receiving is shared on a 50 per cent basis by the Government of Canada. And that is made possible once again, as the guaranteed income supplement, thanks to the measures passed by this bad government, according to the opposition.

So tomorrow I would like those who want to cut the budget by $2 billion to tell us exactly what they are going to do to cut it. What they are going to do, well, those who receive social security pensions or allowances will find out because it is already rumoured, and we can see the reaction, that certain things are going to be cut in those social security measures. You cannot go and get it elsewhere. So, that is the program that is not being talked about openly but which will be implemented if by misfortune the official opposition were to be called upon to form the government of this country.

Spouses over 65 and the others between 60 and 65 get a maximum allowance of $249 a month. Family allowances are other social security measures passed, it must be acknowledged by a Liberal government and increased by a Liberal government, by Parliament, but at the instigation of a Liberal government, a good government. Family allowances are a very important source of revenue for Canadians. In 1967, they amounted to $6 a month per child under nine. Nowadays the average is $25.68 per child.

I would like to see the opposition try and advocate the reduction of these allowances in their constituencies. Now let us talk about the much criticized unemployment insurance. It went from $26 a week in 1967 to the present maximum of $160 a week for the unemployed with dependants. Allowances for veterans and the handicapped have also increased considerably. I would like to take advantage of this opportunity to thank the Minister of Veteran Affairs (Mr. MacDonald) for his active support of veterans.

• (1512)

As did my colleague from Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), I would also like to beg him to improve the lot of veterans' widows who are not entitled to anything when their husbands die unless they are getting a pension of at least 48 per cent. So this afternoon, since to ask is to receive, I am asking the Minister of Veterans Affairs to consider that matter, to think of it even more seriously so that the lot of veterans' widows can be improved considerably.

At this time, Mr. Speaker, when some are tempted to yield to pressures and reduce those programs, we must give credit where credit is due, that is to the government, to various departments, because they took those measures. The other side can laugh but when they praise what a Progressive Conservative government has done in some provinces, they hold it up as a model.

We are trying to say what this government has done and I know that it has made mistakes: Errare humanum est, to err is human, and since the government is made up of human beings, just like the opposition, nothing is perfect on this earth. We are only trying to say that this government took those measures to make sure that the less advantaged people in our society will not suffer an unfair setback. Here again, I believe our society is much more just than it was ten years ago with all those measures that ensure the well-being of all citizens even though they are not all well off yet. Those who say that Canada is less prosperous today than it was ten years ago are closing their eyes to the facts as the members of the official opposition and others are doing. The hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. Allard) is shaking his head. He says it is clear to him. We will see later when he takes the floor.

While as I said, the real per capita income rose nearly 52 per cent in Canada over the 1968-1977 period, the increase was 24 per cent only, in the case of our neighbours down South, the United States.

Recent budgets improved the Canadian workers' position. I would have liked to insist on this during the debate, but time is not available because I would like to give a chance to other members. Because members from Quebec allegedly do not wish to express their views on the sales tax matter, I would have welcomed the opportunity to do so, but I shall, on some other occasion.

The automatic escalation of income tax exemptions amounts for this year to some $900 million in income tax reductions. This certainly is a significant help to Canadians. In addition to the $100 income tax reduction announced earlier, consumers will benefit from a provincial sales tax cut. I would have liked to elaborate on this, but I will have to wait for some other time.

I must also refer to measures like the amendment extending to capital gains the $1,000 exemption for interest and dividends, the amendments to the registered retirement savings plan to give it more flexibility in the use of revenues, and the tax exemption on transfers of incorporated farms between family members.

This, Mr. Speaker, concludes this very brief outline of the current situation, as developed by this government for the well-being of Canadians. As I said, I realize this is not paradise on earth, but apparently we cannot expect it in this world.

I believe that under this government, headed by a Prime Minister who entered politics to help his fellow Canadians, and give them a greater share of our great Canadian economy so that they could benefit more, such a goal has been achieved with flying colours, as all available figures and statistics prove this government will endure, and I hope for a long time to come, for the greater benefit of all Canadians.

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I support the motion put forward by the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier). It is always regrettable to have to correct a colleague, but I should like to point out to the hon. member for Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Béchard) that if the hon. member who has presented the motion today is absent, it is because he was called away on serious business. And I would also point out to him that we are only eight members in this House and that without boasting about it we take an active part in all the proceedings of this House. I think that we are one of the most diligent parties along with the New Democratic party, because the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) is always here to follow the proceedings and try to see to it that this country gets a fair and honest administration.

Mr. Speaker, the speech of the hon. member for Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine reminds me a little of one of my friends who one day went to confession. He started telling the priest all about his numerous conquests, and the priest finally said to him: My good friend, this is no place to boast, just tell your sins. So, Mr. Speaker, I think this is no place to boast of oneself but rather a place to realize the numerous problems of our country, to realize the enormous unemployment situation and to realize that inflation has been eroding the fabric of our society for several years. I therefore intend, Mr. Speaker, to deal with inflation this afternoon.

Mr. Speaker, we, from the Social Credit party, are naturally the target of a lot of attacks and our philosophy is being criticized on all sides. Unfortunately, I must say that the enemies of the Social Credit party are precisely those who know nothing about the whole doctrine of Major Douglas, and they are often the first, like my colleague the hon. member for Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine, to intervene and try to ridicule the philosophy of the Social Credit party. I would therefore urge him to read about it and to realize like many others that the present system is not that great and that there is certainly good reason to look for something better and see to it that men live as they should on this earth, and not in a system which does not meet all the needs of our modern society.

So, Mr. Speaker, the phenomenon of inflation which we have tended to neglect for several years is still with us. Inflation continues to thwart the realization of our individual and collective objectives. We in Canada have to face rising prices caused by shortages and soaring prices in foreign countries. To overcome this situation, the best thing we can do is to substitute home-made products for imported products. We could easily produce here a great number of the products we import.

On the other hand, a large percentage of the price increase is due to international factors that can be blamed mainly on the chartered banks and the Bank of Canada. The chairman of the Royal Bank, Mr. McLaughlin, said last March, and I quote: "The fact still remains that the money supply is growing too rapidly if we are to check inflation." Thus, the managers of the chartered banks themselves confirm what I have always said in the past, namely that the chartered banks have expanded the credit volume inconsiderately, without taking into account the economic situation, without governmental controls and at rates of interest far too high. Consequently, these credits have not benefited the whole population, as we have created poverty in the midst of plenty. Let us not forget, Mr. Speaker, that the price mechanism is directly related to the monetary system. Theoretically the chartered banks can issue up to 16 times more money in the form of credit than they have in actual reserves. The high interest rates on bank loans are responsible for the ever growing rate of the cost of living.

● (1522)

The producers who have to repay the capital and interest will reflect those costs in the price of their products. Consumers buying goods and services with borrowed money must therefore pay their own interest and that of the producer as well since it is already included in the price of those goods and services. Mr. Speaker, when the government members tell us that inflation cannot be controlled because it is due to a number of external causes, they show how little they know about the problem. I do not pretend that there are no external factors involved, but I think we should first consider domestic factors such as our money supply, and in that respect bankers recognize that I am right. Since the reasons for inflation have been identified by economists, why is the government unable to come up with an aggressive policy to control spiralling prices and do for prices what they have been doing for salaries for over two years? Must we believe that the government has abdicated in front of the financial power of chartered banks and big concerns?

It seems that the Canadian government has adopted the American president's declaration that any hope to control inflation is a myth. And yet Germany and Switzerland have done just that. Why do we not lead the way for once? I would like to quote here the projections for 1978 of the Friedbert and Co. Ltd. group in Toronto: "In 1978 and 1979, more than $10 billion in net financial requirements will be needed by the private sector, a fact which will push interest rates to record levels". And since the government itself goes to the private sector to finance its debt, it will be victim as well of these higher interest rates. The end result will be unprecedented profits for chartered banks and lending institutions. These last few years inflation has been the most controversial economic problem, but there has been no real action to control it. We must not let inflation become part and parcel of our system, already bad enough as it is. History tells us that the surge of prices gives way to economic instability and threaten the personal financial security of social groups such as people living on pensions and the unemployed.

We can easily see how important it is to revamp our system. Unfortunately the longer we allow inflation to stay with us the more problems we must expect to have, in number and complexity. All government policies so far have proved useless. Indeed I had the opportunity to discuss this question at length during the debate on Bill C-18 about anti-inflation controls. Perhaps government policies were not entirely useless but they did not go to the heart of the problem. As I said earlier, inflation is related to prices and prices are a monetary measure. Money is created by chartered banks, their reserves being controlled by the Bank of Canada. No one here can deny that these institutions have a decisive influence on the conditions determining our purchasing power. One of the determining factors in extending credit to the people is that borrowed money has to be paid back with interest. For the mere fact that he is paying interest on his credit, an individual sometimes happens to pay three times the value of the products he buys. A typical example would be the case of a house bought with a mortgage loan. We are faced with much the same situation as regards the national debt.

Not later than this morning, Mr. Speaker, we could read the following headline in the economic pages of Le Devoir:

> Hydro-Quebec invested $2 billion in 1977, half of the hydro bill goes to pay the interest on the debt.

Just think of it, Mr. Speaker, half of the bill goes to pay the interest on the debt.

A little further, we can read this and I quote:

> The interest on the long term debt amounted to $620.8 million against revenue of $1.2 billion. The decrease in the value of the dollar cost Hydro-Quebec $10 million in 1977.

We also see in the annual report that the average interest rate for this public company was 8.32 per cent in 1977, and that it got a $55 million loan from ten chartered banks in the country at a rate of 9.25 per cent.

Mr. Speaker, such indebtedness is unacceptable when we have all the tools required to make these funds available to the quasi-public sector at administrative interest rates. Interest rates are no longer related to administrative costs. High interest rates are therefore a direct cause of high prices. If the interest rates were lowered to reflect the administrative cost of a loan, the current trend towards rising prices would obviously be greatly reduced. This is what I have suggested on many occasions by explaining that the issue of new credit by the Bank of Canada to finance the public debt as well the financial requirements of the public and quasi-public sectors would not have an inflationary effect and would at the same time contribute to lighten the financial burden of our present high unemployment rate.

The major legal responsibility of the Bank of Canada is to administer the money supply in the best interest of the Canadian community, and the increase in the cost of living is directly opposed to this interest. The Bank of Canada therefore has a duty to control these high interest rates which are a major cause of the ever higher cost of living. Our present monetary system is clearly at the source of the inflationary trend of interest rates. I therefore suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the centre of gravity of financial control, which is now solely in the hands of the bankers as concerns the population as a whole, be transferred so as to create an economy which would truly serve the consumer. I also suggest the distribution of a basic income to all citizens to enable them to obtain the necessities of life. Finally, I would like the obvious defects of the present price system to be eliminated since these defects lead our economy from inflation cycles to recession cycles. To this end, the Bank of Canada, the last resort institution of money and credit, must steer its monetary policy to achieve a harmonious development of our economy. Such a philosophy of credit will greatly contribute to stabilizing the purchasing power of the consumer.

I also wanted to talk about a national guaranteed income. Mr. Speaker, we now have a tendency in this country to want to divide a national dividend, but we must consider that the monetary capital is now the only one to obtain national dividends each fiscal year while the labour capital and the intellectual capital are penalized for having contributed to the development of our country and for having increased production as required to serve the consumer. People are penalized because they have paid taxes on these products while someone else controls the economic life blood of our country. In fact, Canada receives a national dividend in the form of a reward. I thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, before dealing with the substance of the motion, I hasten to congratulate and thank the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier) and his party for their cunning in drawing up the orders of the day. At the same time, I also want to thank him for having given me the chance, considering the terms of his motion, of pointing out once again the shortcomings and even the failure of this government in the area of general economic policy.

Notwithstanding the comments we heard from the hon. member for Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Béchard) in trying to whitewash the government, it is obvious and there is every indication that the economy of this country which possesses almost endless wealth and opportunities, has never ceased to deteriorate since the coming into power of this government under the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau).

Our country has experienced incredible economic ups and downs since 1968. Unfortunately, time does not allow me today to mention the constitutional ups and downs we have also experienced, but I want to submit evidence that proves my case. The Consumer Price Index which was pegged at 100 for the year 1971, amounted to 89.4 per cent in 1968, while today, it reaches the 171.8 per cent level as of the month of April. That is almost twice the 1968 figure, Mr. Speaker.

Besides, in another area, the inflation rate was 4.5 per cent in 1968 and, for the current year, it is up to 8.8 per cent, which is almost twice. Our national debt is yet another example. We had an indebtedness of $32,900 million in 1968 and this has increased to $67 billion today; that means $32 billion against $67 billion today. Once again, it has increased almost twofold.

Each Canadian has seen his personal indebtedness, as reflected by the national debt go up from $1,600 to $2,861. In order to finance this debt, the increase in interest went from $2.3 billion in 1968 to $5.4 billion today, which is close to twice as much. To pay the interest to finance the national debt, to face this terrible cost, each taxpayer in Canada had to pay $162 in 1968, whereas today the government takes $744.50 from him, which is close to four times as much. The government levies four times as much income tax as it did in 1968 in order to be able to meet this interest on the national debt.

While I talked about inflation in general terms, we have just heard the hon. member for Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Béchard) praise the efforts made by the government to check unemployment, but the record is also depressing. In April 1968, the month when the Prime Minister took office, there were only 375,000 jobless in Canada. Today we have more than one million unemployed. We have seen a three-fold increase in the number of unemployed, of people seeking a job. The unemployment rate is also an indication of the failure of this government: it went up from 4.5 per cent in 1968 to 8.6 per cent in 1978.

• (1532)

[English]

I could give a good many more figures, but I want to concentrate, having set that scene, on section (2) of the resolution which is before us. If time permits I would like to say a word on section (4) as well.

Section (2) condemns the government for failing to present to parliament new and effective measures in connection with the elderly. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) expanded on this to some extent. There is another aspect on this that has captured my attention. I have spoken about it before in the House, but I find sometimes one has to come back again, again, and again to the same matter because only by going over it does the government gradually get the idea. They eventually find there is some value in what they are hearing from the other side of the House and they adopt pieces of it and, of course, present it as their own to derive full political advantage from it.

The matter I would like to speak about this afternoon arises out of the consumer price index which is used for the adjustment of pensions. It is a misleading index when applied to all sectors of the population, and I will explain why. The consumer price index is made up of a basket of things. The basket consists of food items, housing, clothing, transportation, health and personal care, recreation and finally, an interesting category that I shall come to in due course, tobacco and alcohol. These items in turn are broken down into individual portions. It is through these portions and their allotment that I hope to show that it is an unrealistic basket as far as those who are on pensions are concerned. The government has not been sufficiently imaginative and thoughtful in its presentation of policies, programs and procedures to deal with the problems facing these people.

On the food side 24.8 per cent of the whole basket goes into the consumer price index. Out of that, 3.3 per cent is for dairy products, 7.2 per cent for meat and 3.2 per cent for fruits and vegetables. It stands fairly well when you compare one with the other, 3.2 per cent for dairy products, 7.2 per cent for meat, poultry and fish and then 3.2 per cent, about the same as dairy products, for fruits and vegetables.

However, if you look at it in relation to the larger picture, food in relation to housing and so on, the distortion in the consumer price index becomes a little more evident. I will read the breakdown that makes up 100 per cent of the basket: 24.8 per cent for food, 31.4 per cent for housing—one quarter for food and about one third for housing—11 per cent for clothing, 15 per cent for transportation, 4.5 per cent for personal hygiene, 6.8 per cent for recreation and 5.9 per cent for tobacco and alcohol. I do not know why they did not go into recreation, but it is cited separately.

If you had these figures in front of you, Mr. Speaker, you would agree that those who are on pensions and have limited funds to spend would not be spending, for example, 6 per cent on tobacco and alcohol and only 31 per cent, five times as much, on housing. Even the housing is subject to certain corrections because a person on pension either gets special concessions, as they do in my province where they get a special rate on rent, or they are fortunate enough to have bought their house by the time they reach pensionable age. Therefore, 31 per cent of their expenditure is not going to housing. I suggest that 4.5 per cent for hygiene is away out of line. Even where most medical expenses are taken care of, it is not enough when you relate it to the 24.8 per cent for food.

● (1542)

Then there is recreation. How many elderly people can spend 7 per cent of their income on recreation, travel and movies? Included in recreation is admission to events, movies, sports, entertainment, stereo combinations. How many of our elderly people are buying stereo combinations when they are on pension? They either have them already or manage to do without them. They also are likely to have their television sets. Then there is TV repair and recordings. Under sports equipment comes boats, motors, bicycles, camera film and processing, cameras, camping equipment, toys, games, pet expenses. I think many people on pensions have pets and are fortunate to have their dogs and cats. Vacation lodging is listed. How many are able to have that? Education fees, tuition fees, driving licence; if they have not learned to drive by the time they go on pension, I suggest it is a little late. Reading includes newspapers and magazines.

Those are the various components of this 7 per cent set aside for recreation. I say this is out of line, just as the personal hygiene cost of 4.5 per cent is out of line.

One of the things the government ought to have been doing is directing Statistics Canada to draw up a more realistic consumer price index for those on pensions, relating it to their needs and style of life. How many of them buy children's clothing? How many can afford a sirloin steak?

Another interesting things about this index is that it was devised in 1967. At that time gas cost about 30 cents per gallon, and home heating fuels something the same. Our electricity bills were in line. The bits and pieces contained in the consumer price index have swollen between 1967 and today. It is time the consumer price index was updated for the general public, let alone the elderly.

I said that the CPI is completely improper as a basis for pensions for the elderly. I am going to say quite clearly, so that there will be no mistake, that there has to be an adjustment in pensions for the elderly if inflation is going to continue.

The prime purpose of this party when it assumes government will be to conquer inflation. Meanwhile, there can be no question that a realistic index will have to be applied to those who are on pension. They do not have the organized power to apply pressure to governments that other organizations in our community have and, therefore, they must be taken care of. They are our parents and the parents of our friends; let us not forget that. Those of us who are sitting here will one day feel that perhaps we would like somebody to look after us. Let us not forget that these elderly are ourselves ten or 15 years down the road.

I have said that what is needed is a more realistic consumer price index for the elderly. I want to deal with one other element in the resolution, the last paragraph which says that we strongly condemn the government for having failed to present new legislation which would stimulate consumption of Canadian products.

That is one of the things that I suggest this government might have done and did not do. Instead, it did something for political advantage, namely, it worked out by some devious means a confrontation with the provinces and invaded provincial jurisdiction on the matter of sales tax.

As soon as I heard this sales tax gimmick in the budget I said, "Why in the world did this government not just decide to reduce the federal sales tax?" Within its own jurisdiction it could have done this to the advantage of all of Canada. But not this government. This government wanted a confrontation. It wanted to invade a provincial domain and so proposed this exchange: "We will leave a couple of points on the sales tax and reduce income tax by $100; you come in and increase provincial income tax and get back that $100." They conned a lot of Canadian people into believing that the individual taxpayer was to gain something. That is not so. They are not being taxed by the federal government but by the provincial governments.

The other thing that I think is so reprehensible about the manner in which the federal government approached this is that in October there will be some tough decisions to make and it will be the provincial governments that have to make them. October sounds to me like an election month. The federal government will say, "Fine, you got that adjustment for six months so you are in clover. Now you are either going to have to continue with the tax abatement—we are not going to go any further than we did—or you are going to have to re-apply it."

If that is not the sneakiest way of dealing with the provinces that I have ever heard, then I have a lot to hear. It absolutely baffles me that a respectable federal government would try to put all provincial governments in this corner six months down the road, but that is exactly what they did. They fell for it but the day of reckoning will soon come.

On top of that they put forward this extraordinary method of deciding to return to one particular sector of the population in the province of Quebec, the federal taxpayers, something up to but not more than $85. Again, that is a method of creating a confrontation situation with the provinces.

I think whatever else is said, this motion has a great deal in it. I think this House should strongly condemn the government, first of all for having failed to bring effective measures forward to deal with those who have reached age 60, and also for having failed to present legislation that would stimulate the consumption of Canadian products. If the federal government had reduced its own federal sales tax, that would have been of universal application.

● (1552)

We worked on the sales tax and dropped the building tax from 12 per cent to 5 per cent. We managed to persuade the government to reduce sales tax on children's clothing, even eliminating it completely. Why did they not reduce the sales tax and make it universal for all people, whether those people were buying gasoline or building houses? If they had removed the tax entirely on building materials, this would have been the greatest stimulus to the house building industry of this country. Not only the consumption of Canadian products, but the whole Canadian economy would have received a great shot in the arm. Therefore, I want to thank the proposer of this motion and the Social Credit party for having brought this motion to the floor.

[Translation]

Mr. Claude Tessier (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to participate in this debate, but also very unhappy because I must object to a motion which, although it may appear acceptable at first sight, must be rejected out of hand because it is overly simplistic, because it is irresponsible, in short because it is not rational, that is neither logical nor serious.

Mr. Speaker, one cannot try to sell anything under the pretence of sincerity and good-heartedness, but I think what we should heed from that motion is the sincerity and the philosophy of its movers. However, Mr. Speaker, when someone makes up half-truths and incomplete statements and then believes in them, which is more serious, he ends up making up falsehoods and, if it were not unparliamentary, I would even say becoming a liar. It is first and foremost unworthy of the unquestionable credibility and efficiency of a representative at the government level. As far as I am concerned, it is a sign of dishonesty to try to subtly deceive right-minded people—perhaps demagogically would be more accurate. It is about time to be serious, that is logical and realistic. The problems stated or described in the motion, I might rather say denounced, such as unemployment among youths aged between 18 and 30, I would have liked the motion to tell us what those young people could do. What can they do, at what cost, and of course who will be able to buy the goods thus produced?

As for the old age security pension at 60, then again the question is how much, and who will decide? Does the decision lie only with the federal government or does it involve consultations that some hon. members consider necessary at times while on other occasions they advocate lavish spending to finance programs such as the old age pension at 60? As for a national dividend to increase buying power, the federal government and particularly the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) in his last budget tried to introduce a measure which would actually increase the purchasing power of the Canadian taxpayer, and there again for reasons that some would call constitutional and others nothing but political, objections were raised in this House to the government's proposal aiming at putting more money into the Canadian consumer's pockets. We did provide for that, but the opposition parties seem to enjoy thwarting our efforts.

This motion suggests stimulating consumption by discounting retail prices or doing away with interests. I wonder, Mr. Speaker, when I hear motions like the one before us today, whether the Créditistes are not simply turning communists. One of these days they will have to tell us whether they do in fact advocate private enterprise, and what role, what place and what rules they want for it. As far as the government of Pierre Elliot Trudeau, is concerned, I feel that the Minister of Finance, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Andras), the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Cullen), have introduced many solutions to the various problems we have today.

Nonetheless, the problems that exist in the areas of unemployment, old people, rates of interest, are actual problems, but it remains to be seen whether the government proposals can be considered as beneficial and until we have evidence to the contrary, I consider them such. We must recognize, Mr. Speaker, that when it comes to implementing solutions, we have partners who have their own viewpoints and their own compulsions. I think it might be well for us in this House to realize that we are not here to establish heaven on earth; but we should at least be convinced that we can render hardships more acceptable; I think that some day we shall have to accept living with problems without blinding people to the facts in a totally irresponsible way and trying to have them believe there are miracle solutions that can be applied. I wish the opposition would at least account for its proposals. It definitely would have helped the House today if the opposition had really accounted for its proposals since, with a budgetary deficit of some $11.5 billion, it is quite easy to add or subtract. And I believe this is as much the responsibility of the opposition as that of the government. I am sure that the day when the opposition agrees to account for its proposals, we will be able to spend more time working effectively to meet the needs of our constituents, as they will become more realistic and responsible instead of constantly trying to win votes and campaign on strictly demagogic issues.

● (1602)

The hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier) seems to think that interest rates, income tax and taxes in general are the cause of inflation. Obviously, interest rates and income tax have always been considered too high, but, Mr. Speaker, I think one should realize it is the income tax and the taxes we pay which allow the federal government to give taxpayers the quality of services which they can judge for themselves. And in that sense, we do not have any choice or alternative even if we object to or condemn income tax and taxes in general. Therefore, we should find the courage to propose reduced services as a logical result of income tax and tax cuts.

The hon. member raised an issue which is also an image, almost a Creditiste ghost, that is master financiers, monopolies and the triumph of the financiers, forgetting that our government established an Anti-Inflation Board. Obviously, he noted, as we did, a stupendous price increase before the setting up of the Anti-Inflation Board. It was set up as an effective measure against inflation, but of course, some believe it to have been completely inefficient, but one must admit that it has at least succeeded in restraining the inflation rate. They raised the issue of one million unemployed and welfare cases, but the Social Credit has failed with all its logic to convince us that our rate of inflation in 1978 is responsible for one million unemployed, and not realizing that the real reason is a series of problems we do not want to face but with which we should try not only to live but also improve our situation. And I think that is the government's philosophy.

The hon. member for Roberval said that it was time to resort to radical means. That is all very good, but I was hoping to find out what those means are. I did not. He told us about the young people. He said they had been lied to and even rejected. He mentioned work permits and what the government could achieve with them, but does he not know that this is a matter of provincial jurisdiction? He tells us that employers should hire young people but it is impossible because they do not have working permits. Here again would he want the federal government to interfere in provincial responsibilities.

The hon. member went as far as saying that young people will no longer tolerate closed doors. I wonder if that is an incitement to violence. I suggest we do not have the right to lie to young people, we do not have the right to engage in demagogy to try and incite them. Indeed, I think young people are much too intelligent to fall for that political game. This is the kind of game which makes young people completely distrust public figures precisely because too many of those young people or too many of those public figures are trying to mislead them with old stories that are definitely outmoded and which to say the least do not reflect reality. Yes, of course, the hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. Allard) talks of the just society, a more humane society, but that more just and more humane society was not and will not in future be based on lies or stories.

Mr. Speaker, it is certain that the solution for 60-year-old workers might be to offer them the possibility of retiring early, we agree on that, but once again how do you find the money for such a proposal? Another example. We on this side have been talking for a long time about guaranteed minimum income schemes. I understand that the proposals are drafted, that they are ready. On the other hand, we do not have the means right now to implement them and it is precisely the reality with which we must deal on a daily basis, meaning that it is all very nice to have social projects but one day and more than ever it is high time we looked at the cost of proposals such as those which are being made. I consider that most of today's motion is a heap of old clichés on which everyone agrees. There is no possible objection, except for the fact that we must obviously learn to set a price on our proposals.

I would also like to slip in a few comments concerning an area which the members opposite have once more said that the government was wrong, and I mean the area of dairy policy. In a week or two they will again be blaming the government for cutting down the quotas. Is the government to be blamed if at the present moment, in Quebec especially, there has been a distribution that exceeded the quotas? The federations that are at fault must then adjust these quotas to the Canadian demand. I think that in this case again the government will be blamed, and some people will try to mislead the public by saying: See that lousy government again; they told the farmers that they had to produce. They do and now they are affected by reductions. I think we should be honest enough to recognize that some day it will be necessary in all areas of economic activity to adjust our supply to the demand. It is about time we acted consistently but this does not seem to mean that it is time to accept the Créditiste theories. I think these two things are completely different. It is time to be consistent, to show some courage, and it is time we tried to stop harping on the same string and even fall for demands we might consider as legitimate.

I repeat, Mr. Speaker, about the subject matter of the motion before us, we would certainly agree to rid the country of unemployment this very day once and for all. Likewise, if it had been possible to grant pensions at age 60, perhaps tomorrow at 55 and then who knows, perhaps at 50. We agree in theory but not in practice; the government cannot be the be-all and end-all of everything. This is a fact which should be recognized and understood because it is a fallacy to say that the government should provide a solution to all ills.

● (1612)

Today's motion is a complete statement of what is left of the Social Credit party which, far from coming, is going, because it is no longer relevant, because it has no original and responsible, that is realistic, views, to offer. It is not enough to be sincere you have to find the appropriate means. That calls for courage and imagination as well as a new democratic consciousness which through long and complete consultations would make it possible for the government to act with a sense of responsibility in the best interest of the people and for the House of Commons to be really responsible and aware of the needs of the people.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, on our side too we have people in our ridings who are unemployed. We have senior citizens, people paying interest rates, and young people. And we must provide social services. We have built houses but there are more to build. And we agree that the needs of all those people are real. But we must stop creating new needs because we do not have the means to pay for those already created. So we must either stop creating needs or we must establish new priorities and I think that the government is quite prepared to discuss and readjust its priorities in co-operation with the Opposition and the people, to make them more efficient, more sensible and more realistic.

There is something strange in this debate, Mr. Speaker, which goes to prove that there is still some hope. In its motion, the Social Credit party did not mention our deficit. I wish they had because in our party the election campaign had already begun and mention was made of the government deficit.

I think that if the opposition, the press and anyone else want to denounce the government deficit, they should have the honesty to tell what government services they are prepared to cut off.

There should be co-operation among governments and I think that here we have a lesson to learn. We tried to act with the province of Quebec as we did with the other provinces but we have failed up to now with regard to the sales tax. However, it is very important the various governments, provincial and municipal, work together toward job creation as I consider it to be an essential prerequisite.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has now expired.

Some hon. Members: Carry on!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Does the House give its unanimous consent to allow the hon. member to continue.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Tessier: Thank you Mr. Speaker and I also want to thank my colleagues for their kindness. I think that my colleague from Rimouski (Mr. Allard) would want me no doubt to change the tone of my comments. I would like to do so but on the other hand, I would feel that I am betraying those who elected me here.

I will therefore try to conclude my remarks as rapidly as possible, Mr. Speaker, by telling you that my primary objective is to give work to all those who can and must work. However, the question I wish to share with all the members of this House is at what price could we give work to everybody and naturally what type of work could we find to give back to our workers their right to work? It is all very well to talk about employment but if tomorrow morning for instance and that is a fact which we have experienced in my area, we decided to build campers and there were no buyers I wonder if that is what is really meant by creating employment and it is precisely at this stage that we must be realistic enough to know in advance what will have to be produced tomorrow and to whom those products may be sold. If our consumer goods cannot be sold, how do you expect the system to survive, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker, asking each other questions will obviously lead us nowhere and today's motion proves it once again blatantly. How can serious and responsible public administrators have any faith in politicians who keep advocating demagogical and unrealistic solutions? What credibility, Mr. Speaker, can an institution such as this parliament retain when it tolerates such demagogical endeavours which have become synonymous with inefficiency and dishonesty? It is high time to put an end to farcical situations such as we have experienced today if we want to restore the necessary credibility of this House and ourselves as members of parliament, which seems to me to be one of our major problems at the present time.

I think that the opposition must go a lot further regarding the proposals it made and I have to denounce today the absence of the Socred members who on a day set aside for the opposition have been noted for their absence during the study of a motion which should particularly interest them and which should have given them an opportunity to present us with solutions. I am even wondering today if we did the right thing when we accepted to allow them to retain the status of a recognized party when this same party presents us with solutions such as those we have heard today, yet is absent for all practical purposes when it comes to making this House work efficiently.

Mr. Charles-Eugène Dionne (Kamouraska): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to be given the opportunity to participate in this debate even though I got here a few minutes late. I had to go to the CBC studios for the recording of a program dealing with social credit. I think it is worth-while talking about it and I even feel it is the only way out of the economic problems we are experiencing now.

When I got in the House, I heard the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Tessier) say that it was kind of a waste of time to discuss this motion today. I naturally respect his opinions. He has a right to voice his feelings about it. But I would like to know if he has a solution to our unpaid and unpayable debts situation. Ever since I was elected to this House—and I have said this before—I have not heard a single minister say that he was aiming at finding ways and means to pay the public debts. I see what they can do and I see that they have great difficulty in doing it. The present situation and what is going on in the House lately are eloquent proofs of it.

● (1622)

All they can do is try to pay the interest on our debts. Finally, this system boils down to a formula of management for the country that no Canadian citizen is allowed to use for his own private affairs. Certainly anyone is compelled by law to pay his debts sooner or later, even if that takes years, and if he does not, sooner or later he is deprived of whatever he has by the law.

But the government of the land goes on piling up debts, and the result is that this year Canadian taxpayers will be paying an excess of $6 billion in interest costs. Of course, no one on the government side, including the speaker who had the floor when I came in, is considering ways of repaying some of the principal. All they can do is try and pay the interest. At times they have to get deeper into debt just to pay the interest. And it was not so long ago that we discussed the transfer of the CN debt. In the final analysis, the Canadian government increases its indebtedness in order to absorb another debt. The same thing happened with the St. Lawrence Seaway. The same thing goes on and on, and this is unacceptable. Sooner or later, citizens with a sense of duty and responsibility will have to try seriously and honestly to find a way out, because this cannot go on forever. We hear of various projects, and I know that most hon. members here in this House, and especially on the government side, would be quite happy to accept many of the worth-while projects prepared and submitted by students, by the people involved in Canada Works programs. But the answer we get from departmental officials and the minister himself is that they do not have enough funds to accept any large number of projects. They themselves publicize this to encourage young people, students, to submit projects.

In my constituency of Kamouraska, projects were submitted for a total of nearly $1 million, while available funds amounted to $192,000. Clearly, those responsible for selecting projects had a difficult task, that of trying to deal with projects totalling $1 million when they only had $192,000. The same thing occurs every year when the program is reactivated. I am not criticizing the program in itself because it is a good program. We were given a chance to see that there is quite a lot of ingenuity among young people and the not-so-young, among those who are interested in the Canada Works program. I was myself involved with the officials of the government in the selection process, and I know, having seen many of those projects, that there were some good ideas, that there were for instance, young people who spent several evenings, and worked very late in the night, drafting projects which seemed acceptable to them. Unfortunately, only 26 out of more than 60 projects were accepted. After first instilling some hope, this program becomes a source of frustration for many students who are now without jobs for the summer season. They will have to travel from one area to another, in the province and in the country, without finding suitable enployment. All that, because ours is a financial system which lessens the possibility of accepting good ideas.

We, from the Social Credit party, maintain the monetary system which can and should be improved, especially as we know this is what is wrong. Almost every day we see headlines in newspapers stating that such and such item could not be accepted, for want of money; such project, such organization, they will have to fire workers, because they have not enough money. Therefore, we suggest methods to improve that monetary mechanism which operates backward.

I will not say, and we Créditistes never suggested that, that a Social Credit government will solve all issues overnight, that Social Credit is a cure-all for all human ills, that is not what we say. How many times have I heard politicians of different stripes mention the "Caouette's buck", for instance. I beg your pardon if I mentioned the name of our chief that we loved so much, who did so much for Canada to arouse public opinion to this issue. But anyway those people will say: this one or that one's buck, or the buck machine or the Bank of Canada. Yes, indeed, the Bank of Canada. Why have they created the Bank of Canada? Was it only to change little nickels, to make bigger metal pieces of different value, resulting in confusion between nickels and quarters? Is that the responsibility of the Bank of Canada? The Bank of Canada has been created by a past prime minister who once stated very clearly: As long as a nation does not control money, it is useless to speak of a responsible government.

Why is it then, that we can read many statements made by distinguished people? Presidents of the United States of America. By the way, I could name Abraham Lincoln assassinated in a theatre at ten o'clock in the morning, who was one of those who wanted to improve the monetary system which resulted in so many difficulties. Also, a statesman, a military leader, Napoleon who said that on many occasions he wanted to do something, but was prevented by the monetary system from reaching his goal.

Everywhere we see people ready to sell their conscience in order to get money, people with power holding on to power in any form and who do not dare criticize a financial system which is crushing people. The federal government prefers to keep fighting with provincial governments, in order to decide who will be allowed to tax people more in never ending bickerings.

I remember in 1941, at a federal-provincial conference when the premier from Alberta who was then the Hon. William Lyon Aberhart expounded his theory on Social Credit to the provincial premiers. He mentioned: "We are here in order to try to find ways and means to provide all Canadians with happy living conditions and a formula which would enable everyone to use goods in plenty." But the issue was laid to rest and discussions went on on who could take the most out of the taxpayer's pockets.

This bickering has been carrying on for a month, following the budget speech of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien), which was given here and, of the Quebec minister of finance, a few days later; one sees immediately the same response and it is now threatening what a few people like to call Canadian unity, simply for a question of dollars. Why should this be? I would like to know and I regret that the speaker who was addressing himself to the House when I came in did not stay longer—

Some hon. Members: No, he went because he was frightened.

Mr. Dionne (Kamouraska): —I would like him to tell me how he thinks this money is generated. The angels do not come down to earth every six months or every year to manufacture dollars. Money is made by human hands. It should therefore not be considered as a sign of wealth. Money is not wealth. Wealth is in material things. That should be easy to understand. What is important for a nation is to have enough food, to be able to dress properly, to have the necessary materials to build appropriate and comfortable housing. There is no lack of all that in Canada.

● (1632)

We have had the chance to be born in an extremely wealthy country, as our politicians are always saying. But wealthy in what way? Is it wealthy in natural resources? Yes. But how is it that to obtain the right to develop our natural resources, the national government has to go down on its knees to one group of men, the bankers who control the nation? It is not for nothing that the Pope, in the encyclical Quadragesimo anno, wrote very clearly: The manipulators of money and credit hold the economic life in their hands to such an extent that no one can breathe without their consent. This is a fact as anyone who wants to look seriously at the situation as it is and without red or blue glasses can see. Our government is always paralyzed by a corrupt and corrupting financial system.

We have heard about guaranteed income. I have been hearing about this for 10 years. Investigators from the Senate have made a study throughout the country. They found out what everyone knew already, that there were many poor people in Canada. Thousands of families lived under the poverty level. Since then, there have been occasional discussions about a minimum guaranteed income for everyone. That is what the Social Credit party has always recommended. For my part, I have been studying the principles of social credit since 1939 and I did not become a prophet all of a sudden. Of course not! However, I must say that before then, I was a Liberal party organizer and that I tried to tell my supporters that the Grits were a little better than the Tories. However, after a few years, I realized there was not much to choose between them. It is then that I decided to study the social credit doctrine.

In passing, I must add that social credit as such is not a political party but an economic doctrine. Has someone ever thought of the financial system as a political party? No, it is a financial doctrine. Nobody would say that the Catholic religion or any other religion are political parties. Those are religions which have their own ways of thinking, of observing and of offering to people the opportunity to assess the value of their beliefs or of their system. It is the same thing with social credit. It is an economic doctrine.

That a political party was formed under that name does not change anything to the social credit doctrine. It was established by a Scottish civil engineer and mathematician. He was always faced with monetary problems, so he tried to find out why. Since then the Douglas doctrine has been discussed in various countries of the world. Some will contend that it has not been implemented anywhere. Indeed, it is the main argument of our opponents. They do not study that doctrine. They say: if it was that good it would have been implemented somewhere. But I can still bring evidence that a Canadian province has applied the social credit doctrine under provincial jurisdiction. It was not the social credit as taught by Mr. Douglas. They could not do it because the monetary reform comes under federal jurisdiction. They even pleaded their case before the London Court.

● (1635)

Lucien Maynard, the Alberta secretary-treasurer, went up to the London court in an attempt to have the judges of that court understand that the legislation he had passed had to be implemented. The federal government, of course, had hastily declared it ultra vires because it affected the monetary system. They were afraid to lose a little of their power. The fact, of course, is that our lords from London who have the same conception of the imperfect monetary system as we have, confirmed the judgment which had been passed, with the result that the Alberta premier could not then implement the social credit system as developed by Major Douglas.

But even though the social credit system was not fully implemented, nobody could deny that the Social Credit party succeeded, when it came into power in Alberta in 1937 during the depression, at a time period when I, as well as thousands of other people, were trying to plan our future properly faced with an economic crisis, and our leaders both in the federal government and in the provincial government, when we talked to them about the possibility of improving our lot, used to answer: It's too bad, we don't have any money. Some answer! but it was at that time that the government took over in the province which was in debt as all the others.

After a few months, the laws were passed with the result that the debt of the province was extinguished, paid off. That government, had a social credit mentality, it believed debts must generally be paid. So they found a way of operating Alberta's oil wells. And people hasten to say: Of course, Alberta is filthy rich, it has the oil. But at the beginning of the Alberta administration, the Aberhart administration, there were no oil wells, there were no oil operations. So he undertook to find suitable administrative methods. Later on, after a few months, the oil fields were developed but in a special way, so as to yield a decent return based on the values of national resources.

The government that replaced it today is a Conservative government in a rich, pretty rich, province, and we often hear it said these days that the province of Alberta is not like the others. It does not pay taxes. The oil is flowing but the development of Alberta's oil wells was set in motion by a Social Credit government which saw to it that it brought revenues to the province. But that is part of social credit, and the doctrine itself on the whole—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his time has now expired. Nevertheless, he may continue with the unanimous consent of the House.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Dionne (Kamouraska): I am grateful to hon. members for letting me go on.

As I was saying, that is Social Credit, but that also is practical common sense, no more and no less. Nobody can deny this. There are so many things that can be said. Just an hour ago I was speaking with someone who seemed well-educated. He told me: "We are too deeply involved in the current system, it would be too difficult to get out of it." And this was my answer: "When your car gets stuck in a snow drift, do you leave it there or do you try to get it out?"

I suggest it is still time to make a worth-while effort. But as I said at the outset, if it were that we should have to wait for some divine power to come down from heaven and give us a certain amount of money at various points in our history, we could say: "Let us wait!" But such is not the case. We have but to see how things go. Of course we know that in almost every one of our educational institutions, there was never much talk of how money is created. they are now starting to do so.

I have had the opportunity to meet students in CEGEPs and elsewhere. Clearly those young people get no explanations on the workings of our monetary system. Our crazy system is hard to understand. Why is it that people get so deeply into debt and are never able to get our of it, and this is true first of the government. How is money created and how is it distributed? Not many people understand those things. However, it is a crucial issue as money is behind everything and today, money is more important than man, man will suffer if he has no money, he will be deprived of the basic necessities. Money is absolutely necessary. If we wanted to, it could really be a service as money should be at our service but it is more important than man, than the family, than all the basic necessities. We condemn that adoration of the golden calf resulting from a deficient system and that is why we suggest different methods, a new approach. I am always surprised to see the reluctance in some areas to study the problem. They say: it is difficult to understand but we must admit frankly that we do not understand the present system.

● (1642)

This week, explanations have been given, and not by anybody, but the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister of Canada who seemed to understand why they are proposing to give money back to the people of Quebec following the great blunder made in the initial budget, but according to the comments made in the House it seems that they were the only ones to understand how their gimmick would work. This is very complicated as there are only two or three people who can understand it. We know how the income tax legislation works.

I think that Bill C-259 ran to 710 pages and had many loopholes for clever people and all kinds of traps to catch the small wage earners. Ways are found to get their money and such legislation, as I said earlier in this House, is the result of a deficient financial system under which people try to get away with everything they can. What is taking place in this country, is a little bewildering. Some people think it is the same thing in all countries but those people do not seem to have better answers or arguments themselves. You have the case of the taxpayer, the worker who toils to earn his living and who realizes by reading the press that big corporations and big businessmen succeed in using loopholes in their income tax reports and end up paying the least possible amount of tax. He then tries to act the same way but he soon ends up being caught by the civil servants, is subjected to inquires and finds himself in hot water.

Yes indeed we are caught in a perverted system in Canada. One half of Canadians watches the other. This is what you come to realize. You need permission for doing this or that. There are restrictions for doing this or that, there are adjustment formalities for this or that in all laws. I have said it on occasions but I wish to repeat it and I am not afraid to because I can prove it in just about any instance, we have laws and particularly those which should protect the unemployed, that poor fellow who finds himself in the worst possible position. When he loses his job, he still has to try to get an income some way. An act has been passed and modified several times, but it is always with the intent of protecting the treasury because the protection to be given to the unemployed comes second and protecting the treasury is the first priority.

I know it because I often have to go to the Unemployment Insurance Commission every week, almost every Monday, and certainly every two weeks, in order to defend unemployed workers besieged with problems arising from a law which has been badly worked out. I have often said it to the House and I have evidence of that in my office, hundreds of proofs for those who would want to check if what I am saying is true. I have already said in the House of Commons that the defrauders of the Unemployment Insurance Act, and I could include those who defraud the Income Tax Act, or other acts, are to be found without as within the commission. There may not be more but there are just as many.

So I am saying that the employees of the Commission because of a badly drafted law are making mistakes and it is obviously not their fault because they have to proceed according to the law and I am not trying to criticize them more than is necessary. There are well-intentioned people among them but they have to abide by a poorly phrased law and to comply with all kinds of administrative nonsense which prevent an unemployed worker from collecting his benefits. I am wondering if they are not actually defrauding people in the sense that they are depriving them from revenues to which they would be entitled.

Why is it that when a decision is taken and an appeal made to the arbitration board, regarding someone and sometimes the case goes as far as the arbitration judge where the individual succeeds in solving his problem and winning his case, why is it then that this individual gets paid some six or seven or eight or even ten months after. Yet he was entitled to that money in the first place. Why should he have to endure that situation for ten months? I am talking about the case of one unemployed worker, you must realize. Yet that example can be multiplied by the hundreds. I am talking about a law in particular, but it is the same thing with others.

We are not suffering from a shortage of laws in our parliament, on the contrary we probably have too many but most of them are poor.

Most are inspired by well-paid jugglers who are not always good advisers. We know that those who advised the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) are surely not the best government advisers; they are responsible for his blunders and for the stalemate situation where he now finds himself. I have much sympathy for the Minister of Finance, but I have noticed that sometimes he turns livid and that he has difficulty defending himself in our defective system. Now if he only tried to understand the social credit theories, he would realize that there are ways to get out of a problem and to distribute assets in a more equitable fashion. This is what we want to achieve through Social Credit methods and nothing else.

We know that we have boundless wealth in Canada and that there are still many untapped natural resources. Thousands of unemployed are waiting for a chance to make a valuable contribution to the development of this country, to make society profit by their technical and other skills, but they are hindered by a monetary system, by a defective financial system. What is the use of sending our children to school if after graduating they can't find a job. It is time for a change because the situation has become impossible.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I think the House unanimously agreed to giving the hon. member extra time, but I think it would be useful to know of which part of the motion he is speaking.

[Mr. Dionne (Kamouraska).]

Mr. Dionne (Kamouraska): Mr. Speaker, I thank you for that remark, but I am speaking of the part of the motion—Of course the motion deals with many things. The government is being condemned for having failed in the task of fighting against inflation. Inflation is a product of a defective monetary system and of unemployment. That is what I was talking about. I believe that comes from the motion, and I quote:

(2) for failing to present to parliament new and effective measures such as granting at age 60—

This is because of the monetary system. Ministers have told us that it would cost billions of dollars to grant pensions at age 60. So I am discussing the possibilities of making our monetary system more flexible, and then we might consider lowering the pension age for those who would voluntarily accept that benefit. I quote paragraph 3 of the motion:

for not having paid a national dividend as a means to increase the buying power of Canadians in order for them to benefit by the surplus of production deriving from progress and technology;

We find in the motion what I talked about in my speech. I mentioned the guaranteed income. I mentioned the inquiry on minimum guaranteed income made by our friends in the other place, so dividend or guaranteed income is almost the same thing, only the word is changed. According to the dictionary, a dividend is a surplus, a return to shareholders on the production of some industries. I have always believed that Canadians were shareholders of the Canadian government. What is now unbelievable is that according to many of our politicians—

Then, I shall give someone else a chance. I thank the hon. members for their goodwill, their generosity in allowing me, a while ago, to complete my remarks. I think the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Tessier), when he came into the House, had obviously prepared me well. I wanted to explain to him what people think of the Social Credit party and its erroneous understanding of the system.

According to the concept of politicians of every stripe with whom I have occasion to discuss, not all but unfortunately the majority, according to them, from Champlain and the courageous men who planted the cross, the plough and civilization in the forests of Canada, to their successors who for three centuries have improved agriculture, built cities, developed road systems and all the wealth we see about us, according to them, those people instead of inheriting wealth, have inherited debts. It seems to me we could hear, at times, a voice coming from our forests, our plants, saying in parody: You shall pay your taxes and your debts by the sweat of your brow. That is what we want to change, that infamous system of slavery which has been maintained far too long.

● (1652)

[English]

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): A day such as this, Mr. Speaker, which is officially known as an allotted day but more colloquially is called an opposition day, is very appropriately chosen. I would like to congratulate the Créditiste party because they have done something that is very important. On an opposition day the idea is that the opposition parties attempt to identify the issues in Canada which are of some significance and which are probably being ignored by the government. I want to congratulate the Créditiste party, for having chosen the motion on a subject that is very important to all parties on the opposite side.

The basic clause in the motion we have before us reads:

That this House strongly condemns the government:

The important word there is "condemns", and there is no doubt that all of us on the opposite side are condemning the government. It is not only us on the opposition side, however, because only two weeks ago the government found that the people of Canada were condemning them as well, and consequently they backed off from an election.

In looking at the balance of the motion that is before us, it is obvious what the Créditiste party is aiming at, and that is condemning the government because of their failure to give serious consideration to the economic problems that are facing this country. When you look at the four parts to their motion, each and every one of them deals with the economy in one way or another. The economy is possibly the most important of the issues facing Canada today.

One might ask, what does the government think of the important issues facing Canada today? It was not very long ago when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) was interviewed by the press, and as reported in the Ottawa Journal on April 18 in an article by Mr. John Best the Prime Minister was asked what he felt were his greatest accomplishments in the last ten years. The Prime Minister said firstly the "linguistic equality". That is what the Prime Minister thought was his main achievement in the ten years of his reign as Prime Minister.

The second thing was this:

Right next to language came a whole series of supposed accomplishments in the foreign affairs field.

If those are the two areas of priority for this government and the two areas the Prime Minister wants to brag about, having made the greatest accomplishments in linguistic equality and foreign affairs, it is no wonder this country is in a sad way and that the opposition is condemning the government. It is no wonder the people of Canada are finally coming to life and realizing what is going wrong with this country.

I would like to read the important parts of each clause in the motion and comment on each. The first one reads:

—for having failed at the task in the fight against inflation and unemployment—

To get evidence of that we simply have to go back to April 10 and the speech of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) on the budget. I would like to quote from an article in the St. Catharines Standard by Charles Lynch. The heading of the article is "Budget is an admission of failure". It is a quotation from the minister himself.

"This is a time," he says, "for Canada to face our problems critically and realistically."

He goes on:

—"we can see that we did not always use our good fortune wisely . . . We all come to expect too much of the economy. Governments increased their spending too quickly. The money supply was increased too fast."

It is obvious what the problems are when the minister himself indicates the difficulties this government has got the country into.

The second clause in the motion before us reads:

—for failing to present to parliament new and effective measures—

The government has presented some new measures, but the question is whether they are effective. They have presented bills such as the Canada Labour Code, the act to recapitalize CNR, the transfer of offenders, compensation for former prisoners of war, and language in the courts. There is not very much in there dealing with the economy at all.

One bill they presented about the economy had to do with the inauguration of employment tax credits. One of the most leading and active business people in my constituency who has a business which makes springs tells me that it is a complicated mechanism, that the extra tax he has to pay because of the tax credit is in no way meaningful to him and he is not going to bother applying for it.

I will skip the third part of the motion because it is dealing with Créditiste philosophy on economics and I personally do not understand it.

The fourth clause reads:

—for not having agreed to present new legislation that would have stimulated the consumption of Canadian products—

The government has failed to act in this area completely. I would like to read a quotation from the minister of finance of Manitoba. After he heard about this new measure of the government to give the sales tax credit, he said:

"The initiative to give a major sales tax reduction to all taxpayers in Manitoba is one to which all reasonable persons subscribe, provided it is done in a fiscally responsible manner," Craik said. "However, for a federal government whose spending continues to careen out of control to espouse such a major tax reduction—$1.3 billion—without concurrent and matching reductions in federal expenditures, represents fiscal irresponsibility of the highest order."

That is our complaint. We have a sales tax credit abatement but the government is still spending more and more money.

I would like to wind up by saying that if we are going to get at the real issues behind the economic difficulties facing our country, the one area the government must look at seriously, which it has failed to do thus far, is the philosophy of taxation. There are two basic philosophies. The first one is to tax people as we do now on the basis of ability to pay. In other words, you tax profits, you discourage production and so on. The other one is to tax on the basis of services received.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): It being five o'clock, it is my duty to inform the House that pursuant to section (11)—

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): There is still half a minute.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): There is still half a minute.

The Economy

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. It being five o'clock p.m., it is my duty to inform the House that, pursuant to Standing Order 58, section (11), proceedings on motion have expired. Pursuant to Standing Order 2(3), this House stands adjourned until Tuesday next at two o'clock p.m.

At five o'clock the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, May 23, 1978

The House met at 2 p.m.

• (1407)

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

PROTESTED FORM OF TRIAL FOR ALEXANDER TREU—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. I am encouraged to do so by the strong and unanimous vote of condemnation last Thursday at the instance of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) expressing indignation at the form of certain trials in the Soviet Union, despite domestic law, because they were contrary to principles of natural justice and against the practice of Canadian courts. On a similar basis, I would move if leave be given, seconded by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker):

That this House deplores the dangerous form of secret trial and the continuing restrictions involved in the case of Alexander Peter Treu which are contrary to the usual practice of Canadian justice.

Mr. Speaker: In accordance with Standing Order 43, such a motion can be presented for debate only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

PUBLIC SERVICE

PROPOSED RED-CIRCLING OF CERTAIN POSITIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In light of the fact that the matter that has recently been raised regarding public service overclassification is having an adverse effect on public service morale, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro):

That this House direct the President of the Treasury Board to release his department's October, 1976, report on overclassification in order that public servants will know how they are affected; and, secondly, that the subject matter of this report be referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates for full discussion before the Treasury Board undertakes wholesale red-circling of public servants, the policy of red-circling not having been designed for use on such a massive scale.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for discussion, pursuant to Standing Order 43, requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

YOUTH

CRITICISM OF APPLICATION FORM FOR SUMMER EMPLOYMENT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Andy Hogan (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. The Solicitor General's office is hiring students this summer to work on a project called Puppet Theatre. Students are being required to fill out a personal history form—I have the form here—which asks, among other things, "Have you travelled to a communist country since July 1, 1945?" It also requires fingerprinting of applicants. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes):

That this information should be excluded from the application form for a summer job in the Solicitor General's department.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for discussion can be done only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REQUESTED SUSPENSION OF AID TO CUBA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43 I rise on a matter of grave urgency. In view of the tragic episode this weekend in Zaire, where hundreds of innocent civilians from home and abroad were massacred on the streets of Kolwezi, and because it has been learned that military advisers from Cuba trained and possibly led the Katangan rebels in this horrendous bloodbath, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay):

That this government discontinue its support of Cuba and its dictator, and that all present and future aid to Cuba by the government be suspended forthwith.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for debate requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

TRANSPORT

CALL FOR FURTHER STUDY OF WELLAND CANAL CROSSINGS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. S. Victor Railton (Welland): Mr. Speaker, under Standing Order 43 I would like to present the following motion. Since the policy of total removal of all overhead bridges on the Welland Canal envisages an eventual move to tunnels only for cross-canal traffic, since this policy is completely impractical and since all developed countries use both tunnels and bridges on rivers and canals for crossings and will continue to do so far into the future, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Andres):

That the Department of Transport and the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority be now instructed by the government to modify or reverse this unrealistic policy, and forthwith make plans to rebuild the canal bridge in Port Robinson in the city of Thorold after a new study has been done.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for debate at this time requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

REVISION OF POLICY FOR CONSTRUCTION OF ICE-BREAKERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the urgent need to encourage Canada's shipbuilding industry and restore our former pre-eminence in the construction of ice-breaking vessels, which until recently gave Canada the distinction of having designed and constructed the largest ice-breaker in the world, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Friesen):

That the Minister of Transport revise and report to the House before the end of this session on the policy which transferred the design staff giving Canada this capability to the Department of Supply and Services, where they have been steadily downgraded and reportedly recently ceased to exist as a design authority as a result of a decision reached at meetings held by Treasury Board and DSS senior management, a decision allegedly having been taken without any input or discussion with this important and prestigious design group who were never invited to the meetings.

[Mr. Jelinek.]

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for debate at this time would require unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

● (1412)

CANADA COUNCIL

GRANT TO PULP PRESS, VANCOUVER, B.C.—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgency concerning the continued giving of Canada Council grants to assist terrorist purposes, and refer specifically to a grant to Pulp Press of Vancouver, publishers of a book entitled "Minimanual of the Urban Guerrilla", by Carlos Marighella, dealing with how to commit assaults, raids, ambushes, murder, sabotage and kidnapping; and another book entitled "Anarchists Peril", by Augustine Hamond, which follows the type of terrorism of the Italian Red Brigades. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie):

That the methods of deciding on Canada Council grants be made fully public at once, that all grants to organizations, groups or individuals under investigation by Canadian security services be immediately suspended, and that the Prime Minister is forthwith ordered by this House to call a judicial inquiry into the shocking aims, decisions and actions of the Canada Council.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for debate, pursuant to Standing Order 43, requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

BELL CANADA

TELEPHONE SERVICE AT HALF RATE FOR ELDERLY AND HANDICAPPED—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, and seconded by the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes), I move:

That this House notes that Bell Canada provides extensive telephone service, both local and long distance, completely free for life to its top and highly paid executives, together with free or reduced rates to some 26,000 of its employees, and this House therefore calls on Bell Canada to provide telephone service at half rates to senior citizens and to others to whom telephone service is a necesssity because of health or handicap.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for debate, pursuant to Standing Order 43, requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

[Translation]

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

SINGING OF NATIONAL ANTHEM AT SPORTING EVENTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. D. M. Collenette (York East): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I request the unanimous consent of the House to present a motion dealing with an urgent and important matter. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia):

[English]

That this House joins in commending the Toronto Blue Jays' organization and team for its presentation of Canada's national anthem during the Victoria Day weekend . . .

[Translation]

. . . thus showing their confidence in a united Canada and in both official languages.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion at this time requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

PRACTICE IN AWARDING COMPUTER CONTRACTS

Mr. Ron Huntington (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Supply and Services: it concerns the contracts to IST in Montreal. Since there were five companies involved in bidding for the two contracts, one for the Department of National Health and Welfare and the other for Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, can the minister indicate whether all of the companies bidding were made aware of the additional criteria prior to submitting their bids?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, first of all I must say to the hon. member that my department did not call for tenders for Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. The latter attends to its own needs. As for the Department of National Health and Welfare, I have already answered that question, I believe, giving all the necessary details. My parliamentary secretary also answered the question, and I indicated quite clearly that of the five companies, three were highly qualified technically. The three made similar bids. So, it was a matter of deciding, according to other criteria, who would be awarded the contract. That is when I applied the criteria for ensuring a better distribution of government purchases among the various parts of Canada. I have done so for the west and for the maritimes and am doing so now for Quebec. That is one way of achieving the objectives Parliament itself has set. When parliament approved my budget, it accepted that socio-economic considerations occasionally, and exceptionally, apply. That explains what happened.

● (1417)

[English]

Mr. Huntington: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question concerns government policy in connection with the award of computer contracts. Testimony before the public accounts committee has revealed there are some 17 computers within the Department of Supply and Services' system and that there is available capacity at the moment. Can the minister explain why the government, in this period of restraint, persists in seeking outside computer facilities when its own hardware is perfectly sufficient to fulfil services of this type?

[Translation]

Mr. Goyer: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member's information is somewhat outdated. There was a time when the department had an over capacity. This is no longer the case and we are using our computers in a most economical and profitable way. As to the policy of purchasing outside the government cheaper and more efficient services, I am not telling the House anything new when I say that such is my department's policy, a policy which I feel is a good one. We intend to pursue this policy because we feel that it benefits the Canadian taxpayers.

[English]

Mr. Huntington: I have to advise the hon. gentleman that testimony before the public accounts committee has shown that an updated program could make all kinds of capacity available within the government's computer system. The minister has mentioned the need to apply socioeconomic criteria when considering the allocation of computer contracts. When 78 per cent of those contracts are for Ontario and 15 per cent are within the province of Quebec, can the minister advise us how these criteria can apply to the other eight provinces which are trying to share the remaining 7 per cent?

[Translation]

Mr. Goyer: Mr. Speaker, I did not say that I was making exception in the case of computer data processing contracts for socioeconomic considerations. Such considerations apply to all government contracts, but in fact in a most exceptional way—

Mr. Clark: Most exceptional!

Mr. Goyer: —indeed, in a most exceptional way. I said that they were applied under certain circumstances to the benefit of western Canada, and if the Leader of the Opposition is against that policy, let him say so and explain his policy to western Canada. I for one think that it is the government's duty to strike a better balance and to pursue national objectives. If the policy of the Progressive Conservative party is different, the Canadian people will be the judge.

[English]

INTRODUCTION OF "SOCIOECONOMIC CONSIDERATIONS" IN COMPUTER CONTRACT BIDDING

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is also to the Minister of Supply and Services. One might applaud what the hon. gentleman says, but I am sure he will agree that the institutions of democracy are ruled by law, not by people. I ask by what authority he introduced the criteria of socioeconomic considerations into the process of calling for tenders.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the hon. member was absent or absent-minded when I answered a few minutes ago. I said that policy was clearly specified and in the objectives of the department and that it is reviewed each year by the committee of the House which considers and approves my departmental estimates. Moreover, it is the objective pursued by my department under the act and we must try to achieve the aims which the government sets for itself. One of those aims is a better distribution of government contracts. But we must keep in mind the golden rule that, in so doing, we must abide by the rules of competition. But when a choice must be made because competition does not make that choice obvious, what criterion must we go by, if not criteria relating to a better distribution of government contracts throughout the country? I think this is quite legitimate.

[English]

Mr. Gillies: I am talking about questions of legality and of propriety which arose during consideration of the awarding of this contract. Was a definition put forward by the government to all bidders making clear what "socioeconomic considerations" meant? There were ten criteria listed for the bidders: "socioeconomic reasons" was not among those defined. Has the government made public a definition, approved by parliament, of what "socioeconomic considerations" means when tenders are being called?

● (1422)

[Translation]

Mr. Goyer: Mr. Speaker, I am repeating myself because the questions are the same. But following an analysis of the tenders submitted by the five companies, when the departmental officials come to the conclusion that three of them are most satisfactory and the prices are similar, how do we make our choice? We could do it in a quite arbitrary way, maybe by tossing a coin. We could also proceed in a more sensible way by following the principles which the government has set for itself and try to alleviate regional disparities. If I had chosen to award the contract myself or if my officials had advised me categorically to award it to one particular company, I would have done so. And if I had used my discretion to pick some other company than the three, let us say one from Ottawa, would the hon. member have asked the same questions under the same conditions, or would he have been satisfied that it was an Ontario company? Personally, I think that one must refer to other objectives and not simply to what the hon. member has in mind, that is mere party considerations.

[English]

Mr. Gillies: Mr. Speaker, let me go back to the Minister of Supply and Services and tell him I would have put precisely the same questions because the issue at stake here is not the general objective; the issue at stake is fairness and propriety in the awarding of contracts. How can the minister say what he says if socioeconomic conditions are not defined? If they are not defined for tenders, how can there be justice, fairness or propriety?

After the Lockheed mess, I would think the minister would want to get these things defined effectively so that we know what they are. If a person is contracting with the Government of Canada, can he go to the Department of Supply and Services and find spelled out in some sort of administrative bulletin a definition of the policy of the government with respect to socioeconomic considerations, what they are and what the government considers them to be, so that if I am bidding or anyone is bidding on a contract, I will know what they are?

Mr. Hees: It is what Keith Davey says.

[Translation]

Mr. Goyer: Mr. Speaker, to be still more specific if the hon. member will listen to me for a few moments, I will say that when three companies are equal, how do you administer the decision process within the department if not by referring to more global objectives, to general government objectives? I wonder just how the hon. member would have decided which one of these three equal companies would be given the contract. By plain patronage, or on the basis of socioeconomic considerations, which are well known to the hon. member and are widely used by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, and with which I totally concur.

[English]

FINANCE

ALLEGED SPECULATION ON DOLLAR BY MPs

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister regarding the serious allegations which were made over the weekend concerning the possibility that a number of Liberal members of parliament and perhaps even some cabinet ministers speculated with respect to the rise or fall of the Canadian dollar. I ask the question because of its serious nature. It is very serious if there is any truth to it, and equally serious if charges have been made without foundation.

In view of the fact that reports indicate that Mr. Michael Pitfield has conducted some kind of an investigation into this matter, and in view of the concern of the whole House about this, will a statement be made to the House on the results of Mr. Pitfield's investigation, or will the matter be referred to one of our standing committees so that it can be sorted out in its entirety?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as you know, we intend to raise a question of privilege on this matter at three o'clock. Perhaps at that time we can state the government's point of view more explicitly. However, I want to tell the hon. member that this kind of insinuation, innuendo and accusation without any substantiation or proof is something which is not only harmful to this side of the House but, I believe, to all those in public life.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

● (1427)

Mr. Trudeau: When the hon. member who made these accusations has made this type of accusation before, he generally fails to follow up on a Monday what he has said on a Friday and gets enormous coverage on it. We hope that he will be able later today to either withdraw his allegations or substantiate them.

* * *

HOUSE OF COMMONS

CONFLICT OF INTEREST LEGISLATION

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I thank the Prime Minister for telling us that his side intends to raise this matter at three o'clock. As Your Honour knows, I gave similar notice because I agree with the Prime Minister that the matter is serious, no matter which way it goes.

I should like to put a supplementary question perhaps to the Deputy Prime Minister. In view of the fact that this kind of thing could not happen, or could not be alleged if we had proper, airtight conflict of interest legislation, can the Deputy Prime Minister say when action will be taken to have such legislation considered by the appropriate committee and placed before the House?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, I have had this matter under consideration. In fact, there is a bill ready and if there is a disposition on the part of hon. members to deal with it, I will bring it forward very quickly.

* * *

[Translation]

FINANCE

INQUIRY WHETHER $186 MILLION IN SALES TAX DISCUSSED WITH QUEBEC

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. In view of the continuing dispute between Quebec and Ottawa over the remittance of a certain amount of money to the Quebec government, can the minister tell the House whether he has had talks with the Quebec authorities during the weekend over this famous matter of the $186 million to be reimbursed to that province?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, last Monday, when the bill was introduced in the House, I spoke over the telephone with the Quebec minister of finance, Mr. Parizeau. He told me that he might phone back, yet eight days have passed since the telephone conversation and I have not heard anything from him.

SUGGESTED MEETING WITH QUEBEC PREMIER TO DISCUSS SALES TAX

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, given the present situation, one can look back to the fifties when the government of Quebec adopted its income tax legislation which caused a dispute between the provincial and the federal government. I am talking specifically to the right hon. Prime Minister. At that time, this conflict was settled by a meeting of the two heads of government following two excessively harsh speeches delivered the same day respectively by Quebec Premier Duplessis and the Prime Minister of Canada, Mr. St. Laurent. During the following days, the two men agreed to meet at the Windsor Hotel in Montreal to try and find some common ground between them. Would the Prime Minister be prepared to repeat this gesture and to arrange a meeting with the premier of Quebec before it is too late?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have not delivered any harsh speech, but I answered a similar question last week and indicated that the federal government and I were ready to discuss that question with Quebec representatives, including the premier. But I would remind the hon. member that from the beginning we had very extensive talks with the province of Quebec regarding that matter. Our Minister of Finance had talks with Mr. Parizeau for three weeks but unfortunately we never got an answer. At the time of Mr. St. Laurent and Mr. Duplessis, both parties could talk to each other and reach conclusions. Now it is difficult to know where we stand when we try to have talks and the other party does not answer.

* * *

[English]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CALL FOR IMMEDIATE END TO AID FOR CUBA

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. It arises out of the horrifying slaughter in Zaire over the weekend. At the present time, while there is no evidence that Cuban troops were engaged there, nonetheless 32,000—-incidentally, transported to their destination by Air Canada—have been acting in such a way as to give leadership in undermining governments in Africa which would lead one to conclude that the leadership of Cuba has been taken over by others in this regard.

● (1432)

A few minutes ago the hon. member for High Park-Humber Valley endeavoured to move a motion to have this question looked into. In view of the utter lawlessness, dangerous to world peace, which has been perpetrated regularly since Angola was occupied by Cuban troops, will the government advise the administration in Cuba that the millions of dollars Canada has given by way of technical assistance and the contributions through the Canadian International Development Association will end once and for all, so that Canada will not be placed in the position of being an accessory to the disreputable international brigandage on the part of Cuba?

Will the Prime Minister give that assurance, because all over the world people wonder why Canada continues to give repeated assistance to a nation which has become lawless internationally?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, something was said in the preamble to the question which I did not quite understand. In some manner the right hon. member linked Air Canada to the presence of troops in Africa. I think this is another of the many unsubstantiated allegations which we hear from—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: I will substantiate it right away.

Mr. Trudeau: It is another of the unsubstantiated allegations which we are hearing constantly from the other side. If the hon. member wants to raise a supplementary question, I am sure Your Honour will recognize him.

[Mr. Trudeau.]

As to the substance of the question of foreign aid, I would point out to him that the aid program to Cuba was initiated some years ago under a regime of co-operation with Cuba which began, if my memory is correct, in the right hon. member's day. This program of co-operation began several years ago, before the Angolan incident. It is being brought to termination: the Secretary of State for External Affairs has said so. There are no present plans for any future projects in Cuba. The present projects are either terminated or are on the verge of being terminated.

In so far as concerns representations to Cuba, I would remind the right hon. member they have been made in various circumstances, including by myself to Premier Castro, indicating the degree to which Canada disapproves with horror the participation of Cuban troops in Africa.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, that is a typical kind of evasive answer one would expect from the Prime Minister who had a love affair over the years with Castro which began, or at least was participated in by him, by canoe. That is not unsubstantiated. I will go into the particulars, if the Prime Minister wants to hear them.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Will he give me the assurance that this love affair will end, that Cuba will be told it is an international brigand, and that we are not going to do anything to assist it by loan, or otherwise make available further funds for the continuance of its aggressive, unjustified actions dangerous to world peace?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is suggesting that we do things which have been done already: disapprove of the Cuban action in Angola and not continue our foreign aid.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Done when?

Mr. Trudeau: As to having a love affair in a canoe, either the hon. member knows nothing about love affairs, or canoes.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, if the Prime Minister wants proof as to his "canoedling", he can get in touch with the CIA of the United States which entered into the equation and caused him to be denied entry to the United States for years and years.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Joliette.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I just want to—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Baldwin: You are up the creek without a paddle.

Mr. Trudeau: The hon. member has not substantiated his allegations on Air Canada. But I must point out to him that I was denied entry to the United States in the middle fifties. I attempted to paddle to Cuba in 1961 or 1962. Therefore, the CIA is wrong again, if that is where the hon. member gets his information.

* * *

[Translation]

FINANCE

SUGGESTED MEETING WITH QUEBEC PREMIER ON REIMBURSEMENT OF SALES TAX

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister.

He said a while ago that he already had discussions with other premiers and that perhaps communications were smoother then than they are now. I remember quite well, for example, the case of universities when the premier and prime minister at the time had succeeded in finding a solution to a deadlock, and the Prime Minister knows exactly what I mean.

Under the circumstances, in the present conflict and in view of the deadlock between the two levels of governments, would the Prime Minister who is responsible for the administration of Canada be prepared, considering the failure of negotiations by his Minister of Finance, to initiate and arrange a meeting with the Quebec premier to endeavour to find a fair solution for his government as well as for the Quebec government?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance has just answered that question. He tried to arrange such a meeting when he phoned to the Quebec minister of finance on the day he introduced his bill, that is last week or the week before, and he has yet to receive a reply.

SALES TAX—INQUIRY AS TO FORM OF PAYMENT OF $40 MILLION TO QUEBEC

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister is certainly aware that the Minister of Finance is finding it increasingly difficult to go on with those negotiations. Such was the reason that prompted my question, because many Canadians in my view are concerned, and rightly so, that the minister may not assume responsibility for those negotiations. My supplementary, however, is for the Minister of Finance. Many Canadians I am sure would like to know exactly where the Minister of Finance will find those $40 million he indicated he will be paying the province of Quebec? Under what form and from which account will they be paid to Quebec?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, in the legislation that has been put forward, there is provision for the Canadian government, in addition to making fiscal room for the other provinces, to provide compensation because under the agreement entered into with the provinces calling for a 3 per cent sales tax cut over six months, we cannot beforehand determine the exact amount of revenue that will be lost by each province in the process. There is provision in the bill before the House that, if they lose more than the $100 we have recognized as being the normal rate for the tax cut at this point, payments could be made, and we would be using the same provision for the $40 million.

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary.

In interviews with the Gazette during the weekend, the leader of the Liberal party of Quebec stated about the sales tax that Quebec has just applied its normal jurisdiction by refusing the conditions imposed by the federal government. In the face of such a statement, could the Minister of Finance think a little further and recognize that he made an enormous error, and withdraw his proposal to meet the wish expressed by the leader of the Liberal party of Quebec on this matter?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, in the circumstances, we offered to withdraw from a taxation field to ensure that the taxpayers in Quebec will not suffer because no agreement can be reached between the provincial government and myself. We do so according to the formula used in 1959 by the universities and in 1965 on the general agreements on the withdrawal of the federal government from some activities. So we follow the tradition which has been applauded in Quebec as being the most normal means in the absence of an agreement between the federal government and the province, namely the withdrawal from a taxation field, and if Quebec wants to increase its taxes, it can always do so because it is its own field.

● (1442)

SALES TAX—INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT PREPARED TO REIMBURSE QUEBEC $186 MILLION

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the right hon. Prime Minister.

In view of the declaration of Mr. Ryan, the Liberal party leader in Quebec, that the recent inflexibility of the federal government as concerns the sales tax proposal has greatly encouraged separatism in Quebec, I would like to ask the right hon. Prime Minister if he is now prepared to change his policy of reimbursment for Quebec taxpayers and to negotiate directly with the province of Quebec to give the province the $186 million?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, since I have not seen Mr. Ryan's statement, I cannot comment on it, but as concerns the suggestion of the hon. member, I would like to say that he is suggesting that the money be paid to the Quebec government while his chief, the Leader of the Opposition, suggested some days ago that this money be distributed fairly to all Quebec citizens. His party should first of all come to an agreement about the method to be used so as to put an end to the whole matter.

SALES TAX—POSSIBILITY OF WITHDRAWAL OF BILL C-56 AND RENEGOTIATION WITH PROVINCES

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the right hon. Prime Minister.

In view of the clear statement by Mr. Ryan that the federal government's position is helping separatism in the province of Quebec, is the government now prepared to support the amendment suggested by the opposition, that is that Bill C-56 be withdrawn for one month and that the proposal be renegotiated with the provinces to correct the situation?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member could only tell us what we should do after one month! Renegotiate what? If his party had an idea about this, we could at least listen to their suggestion, but they cannot agree amongst themselves about what should be done.

* * *

[English]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

UN DISARMAMENT CONFERENCE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the right hon. Prime Minister. I note that he will be addressing the special assembly on disarmament at the United Nations on Friday next, May 26.

Will the Prime Minister, either before he speaks there or upon his return, make a statement on motions in the House of Commons on the disarmament conference and Canada's initiatives, so that the Canadian Parliament and the Canadian people can participate in a serious effort to reverse the present trends toward immensely wasteful expenditures on arms which are a curse and a scandal to the world as a whole?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the support and the feelings of the hon. gentleman. I would be interested in debating these matters with the House of Commons and, hopefully, gaining support for the position of the Canadian government. I must point out to him, however, that the special assembly of the United Nations will be going on for as long as a couple of months and we would not be able to report to the House on the results of the conference until it is terminated.

If the hon. member wishes, we could debate the subject either on motions or on a special day. The time will be difficult to find as far as special days are concerned, but there are 8 or 10 opposition days which might be a good occasion to discuss this important subject. We would participate with pleasure.

[Mr. Trudeau.]

Mr. Brewin: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether it would be possible, after his visit, for him or the Secretary of State for External Affairs to let the Parliament of Canada know the progress and the prospects of this disarmament conference. I fully appreciate his point that a complete report must await completion of the conference, but I hope that we may not be here at that time. In any event, I think the people of Canada would like to know what is going on in this matter that so much affects their lives and the lives of everybody throughout the world.

Mr. Trudeau: I repeat, Mr. Speaker, that the government is willing to discuss this matter. The hon. member knows that between now and the end of June the government has less than 20 days at its disposal, and every day there arises a suggestion from the opposition that we do certain things with that time. Today the opposition has suggested we should bring back the independence of parliament. The government House leader has stated that he can bring that forward too, but time is limited between now and the end of June.

The hon. member may want to follow my suggestion of doing it on an opposition day, or having me answer questions on the subject from members of the opposite side when I return. I would gladly give answers as lengthy as the House permits.

* * *

FINANCE

SALES TAX—REQUEST FOR WITHDRAWAL OF BILL C-56 AND RENEGOTIATION WITH PROVINCES

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. In defence of the federal income tax rebate to Quebec taxpayers, the Minister of Finance made the unfounded statement that Alberta receives its share in grants to the oil industry, completely disregarding the fact that all Canadians benefit therefrom through lower than world oil prices, thus leaving Alberta out in the cold.

I ask the minister if he is now prepared to admit his error, to amend Bill C-56 by removing the tax refund provision, and to renegotiate this policy in the best interests of Canada's ten provinces.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the first day that I talked to the minister of finance of Alberta I said that the scheme of the federal government was to compensate the provinces that were faced with sales tax. Some provinces have a sales tax of 11 per cent, so we wanted to help them to reduce it. I told this very clearly to the minister of finance of Alberta.

At the same time, I said that as they do not have any sales tax in Alberta, there were other provisions in the budget that would be helpful to that province. Evidently the oil tax break that was given to heavy oil and the tar sands will help the economy of Alberta. For that matter, when we decided to do something for incorporated farms, I think per capita in Alberta is where there are the most.

Mr. Towers: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The provision respecting incorporated farms affects farmers all across Canada. Bill C-56 is one of the most divisive pieces of legislation presented to any parliament.

In light of the fact that senators and members of parliament representing Quebec would ordinarily qualify for the $85 tax refund and, if resident in Ontario for a major part of the year, would benefit as well from the 3 per cent sales tax reduction in that province—having the best of two worlds—why has this government ignored Albertans who pay income tax on much lower incomes yet do not receive any benefit?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I have explained many times that we decided to compensate the provinces where there was a sales tax, and in Alberta there is none. The hon. member speaks about people who have a better deal. When he is in Ottawa he pays sales tax, but he does not pay it back home in Alberta.

I do not think this is creating an injustice to the rest of Canada under my scheme. The maritime provinces could not afford to contribute to the cut in sales tax from their own treasury, so I paid the total sum to them because I recognize that there are some provinces richer than others.

* * *

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

SOCIOECONOMIC CONSIDERATIONS IN AWARDING CONTRACTS

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Supply and Services which is supplementary to earlier questions asked by the hon. member for Capilano and the hon. member for Don Valley.

In introducing the question of socioeconomic considerations, the minister has introduced a new factor in adjudicating bids for government construction: at least it is new to members on this side of the House.

Could the minister inform the House whether there have been other circumstances where socioeconomic considerations have resulted in a firm being awarded a contract when the other details of the bid such as price, performance and reliability of service might not have indicated such a choice?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, first I must insist on the fact that my department awards the contract to the company which offers the best product at the best price and which complies with the conditions of the tender call. That is the policy of my department. Exceptionally, we introduce the socioeconomic concept. I will give an example for members from western Canada, from Alberta, who are interested in this question. We went farther than selecting among firms with similar bids, in one case we awarded a contract directly to a company without calling tenders for manufacturing furniture to satisfy the needs of western Canada where there were no factories which could fill our requirements. We gave a contract to a company from Edmonton. This factory expanded and today it can be competitive on the national market, so much so that three years ago when we called tenders for furniture for the Canadian Royal Mounted Police headquarters in Montreal, this company from Edmonton submitted a bid and got the contract ahead of companies from central Canada, from Quebec and particularly from Montreal. That is a very intelligent supply policy, Mr. Speaker.

• (1452)

[English]

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, the minister has not explained to those of us on this side of the House and the public just what socioeconomic factors are and how one introduces those in submitting one's bids. Perhaps we could get some guidance on this if he would tell the House why a company like IST, which is headed by a personal friend of the Minister of State for Urban Affairs, was awarded a contract for computer services, when it is widely held that it is incapable of meeting some of the technical performance standards of the other bidders for the contract.

[Translation]

Mr. Goyer: Mr. Speaker, the remarks of the hon. member are trite and really out of place in this parliament. If the hon. member can tell me how this company was not technically qualified, I am prepared to listen to him, and the same thing goes for the hon. member for Don Valley. Concerning the contract which was awarded, Mr. Speaker, not only was it awarded upon my recommendation but also with the authority of Treasury Board.

* * *

[English]

PUBLIC SERVICE

PERSONS PROPOSED TO BE RED-CIRCLED BECAUSE OF OVERCLASSIFICATION

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. I am sure he is aware of the study undertaken by the Treasury Board involving overclassification, a study which revealed that in the Ottawa-Hull area, having looked at some 2,000 cases, 16 per cent of them were overclassified. I am sure the Prime Minister realizes this is a very serious matter for those who have been overclassified.

I ask the Prime Minister if it is his intention and that of the President of the Treasury Board to indicate just who those persons are, as the Prime Minister can readily understand that this is affecting morale in a significant way.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do know the Treasury Board is constantly attempting to improve the efficiency and proficiency of government and inquiring into its administration and the administration of other departments. This study is one of such initiatives of the President of the Treasury Board. As far as details are concerned, I would ask the hon. member to hold his question and I will ask the minister to answer it the next time he is in the House.

Mr. Alexander: Following that answer—after all, the Prime Minister does not know everything that is going on in the country—I would put the matter to him this way. There is a study, and there has been some indication that the government is intending to impose red-circling on a massive scale. Would the Prime Minister, when he is discussing this matter with the President of the Treasury Board, also ask him if he would be prepared to see to it that that 1976 study is referred to the appropriate standing committee, perhaps miscellaneous estimates, in order that the whole matter can be looked into prior to any red-circling, given the fact that red-circling was never envisaged to be used in such a massive way as is indicated in today's press? Would the Prime Minister tell the House that he will be pleased to take this matter up with the President of the Treasury Board as well?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the President of the Treasury Board is presently appearing before a Senate committee on some of his policies. The hon. member knows the President of the Treasury Board is available in the House almost every day to answer questions. Of course, he appears before committees of this House, notably on his estimates, where the hon. gentleman can not only put these questions but make some proposals of his own, about which he is always very generous.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, why cannot the Prime Minister answer my question, or does he want to continue governing in secrecy? I am asking the Prime Minister whether he will see to it that this matter is brought to the attention of the President of the Treasury Board. After all, this matter has hit the fan over the past two or three days. Would he ask him whether he will see to it that the 1976 report is directed to the appropriate committee before further consideration is given to wholesale red-circling? That is all I am asking the Prime Minister.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, that is all I am answering, and the hon. member does not have to wax indignant over it. I told him I would note his questions and transfer them to the attention of the hon. minister.

An hon. Member: And keep them under cover.

[Mr. Alexander.]

SMALL BUSINESS

PROGRAMS TO ASSIST

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Small Business. In view of our continuing insistence that action dealing with small business problems in this country is long overdue, and because the minister has now had a full week to absorb the latest positive recommendations made during our opposition day last Tuesday, could the minister confirm to this House his intention to introduce much needed incentive-oriented programs to small business along those lines today or in the near future?

Hon. A. C. Abbott (Minister of State (Small Business)): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated last week, notwithstanding the helpful intervention of the hon. member we have been planning for some time to initiate new programs of assistance for small business. I hope to be able to announce some of them very shortly.

Mr. Jelinek: Mr. Speaker, I am naturally pleased that the minister is finally succumbing to our initiatives and I look forward to his announcements. However, I wonder why small business rates so low with this government that it was virtually ignored in the recent budget and is now looked at as an afterthought.

Could the minister tell us whether we can look forward to hearing him on motions when he makes these announcements in this House, as is customary, or will he follow the recent examples of his cabinet colleagues and the Prime Minister and once again ignore parliament by making his statements outside the House? Which is it going to be? I hope it will be in the House.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

* * *

AGRICULTURE

PROBLEMS OF DAIRY INDUSTRY

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. Since I have only one question, perhaps you will permit me a little longer preamble. The concern of the dairy farmers of Canada for the future of the dairy industry was heightened this past week by three events. The minister was defeated in a live milking contest by the hon. member for Elgin, the official opposition critic for agriculture.

In view of the obvious need to improve the skills of the minister and his department, some concerned constituents in Oxford have asked me to provide the minister with this new gadget for solving dairy problems. The directions read as follows:

This rather complex gadget
Is one you pull and squeeze
It's a Dairy-Problem-Solver—

Gives answers in a breeze.
Provides the need for tranquil thought
For skim milk, take one udder,
It's 2 for cheese and 3 for cream,
Grab 4 if you want budder.

An hon. Member: Table it.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Does the hon. member for Oxford have a question?

Mr. Halliday: Mr. Speaker, my question relates to the provision of milk and cheese and the other two events which came to my attention last week. I ask the minister if he can confirm that last week at a banquet in the Chateau Laurier, a CN hotel, given by the National Capital Commission in honour of over 250 students from across Canada, no milk was available for those students.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Halliday: Could he confirm that CEMA, the Canadian Egg Marketing Agency, has negotiated a deal with companies such that they now provide this kind of coupon worth 15 cents in a box of—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I gave the hon. member more than sufficient leniency and I think he has overextended it.

An hon. Member: Come on, Gene.

An hon. Member: He wants an answer.

* * *

PRIVILEGE

MR. BASFORD—FINANCE—ALLEGATIONS MADE BY HON. MEMBER FOR YORK-SIMCOE REGARDING SPECULATION ON DOLLAR BY MPs

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege relating to the matter raised during the question period by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) involving statements made on Friday evening, in a Canadian Press story, by the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens). I regret that having occupied the headlines of the news media for the week end the hon. member is not in his seat today—

Some hon. Members: Shame!

• (1502)

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, on Friday, May 19, 1978, a Canadian Press story was transmitted and subsequently broadcast on a number of radio and television stations, as well as published in a number of newspapers, quoting the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens). The story in part reads as follows, and I am quoting from the Canadian Press story as published in the Ottawa Citizen of May 20, 1978:

Privilege—Mr. Basford

Conservative finance critic Sinclair Stevens says he has been told by bank sources that nine Liberal MP's, including two or three cabinet ministers, have been involved in speculation against the dollar . . .

In the interview, Stevens said: We've learned through the banks that nine Liberal MP's played the Canadian market as it was going down . . .

Stevens said in the interview that about two or three cabinet ministers were supposed to have been involved. "Presumably they've broken their oath for secrecy" Stevens said.

The seriousness of this story and these statements was underlined by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) who, in his question to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), pointed out the serious nature of these statements.

For our part, we on this side find that they have no validity. This interview and the unsubstantiated and grave allegations, in my opinion, constitute a question of privilege, and adversely reflect upon members in our capacity as members or as ministers.

There can be no doubt that such untruths are intended to cast doubt on the honesty and integrity of members on this side of the House. In so doing, the hon. member for York-Simcoe has gravely reflected upon all of us on this side. As the Prime Minister in his answer a moment ago pointed out, he has in fact by these unsubstantiated and, if I may say so, reckless statements, reflected upon all in public life.

Since making them, he has done nothing to substantiate them, withdraw them, or correct them, except, I understand, to explain that he was fairly "relaxed". I would not think that loose lips would be a desirable characteristic of an official financial critic of the official opposition.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Basford: He has done nothing to alert the Prime Minister as to the persons involved or the seriousness, or any facts that he may be in possession of. In my view these statements clearly constitute an abuse of privileges of members of the House. If Your Honour so finds, I am prepared to move a motion.

Having had occasion recently to reflect on a number of cases, I think Your Honour will be familiar with the authorities. May I simply quote Erskine May on Parliamentary Practice, nineteenth edition, page 152:

"Written imputations, as affecting a member of parliament, may amount to breach of privilege, without, perhaps, being libels at common law", but to constitute a breach of privilege a libel upon a member must concern the character or conduct of the member in that capacity.

Your Honour recently had occasion to refer to Beauchesne's citation No. 140, and I quote:

The ruling relating to personal reflections occurring in debate may be stated thus, namely: that it is doubly disorderly for any member, in speaking, to digress from the question before the House and to attack any other member by means of opprobrious language, applied to his person and character, or to his conduct, either in general, or on some particular occasion, and tending to bring into ridicule, contempt, or hatred with his fellow-members, or to create ill blood in the House.

Your Honour's citation at page 11999 of Hansard for March 22, 1976, continues:

The House itself has developed a regime or practice which has grown up to protect members who feel themselves aggrieved by an allegation; it is a protection in the form of a challenge that the allegation either be substantiated, explained, qualified sufficiently or withdrawn.

The story that I have quoted, in my view clearly reflects upon members on this side of the House. Without substantiation or facts, it puts all of us under a cloud. There has been no denial, or clarification. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, clearly a question of breach of privilege, and that the hon. member either has to be specific in his allegation, or withdraw it. As I say, Mr. Speaker, if you find that my submission is in fact a prima facie case I am prepared to move the necessary motion, that the article as quoted be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. Speaker: As the House knows, I received notice of such a question from the minister and as well from the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles).

MR. KNOWLES (WINNIPEG NORTH CENTRE)—FINANCE—ALLEGATIONS MADE BY HON. MEMBER FOR YORK-SIMCOE REGARDING SPECULATION ON DOLLAR BY MPs

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, as you just indicated, I gave you notice earlier today that if this matter was not raised in some other way, I would do so.

Let me say at the outset of what will be a very brief statement that if this were only a conflict between a member of the official opposition and the government, I would stay out of it. I would let the two of them fight it out. However, when this kind of thing can be said and I refer to the charges that were made over the week end by the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens), it casts a shadow over parliament itself.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): As I see it, that shadow is cast either way. If there is any truth to the charges, it is a very serious cloud that hangs over us and it ought to be cleared up right away. On the other hand, if there is nothing to the charges, if the allegations are without foundation, that too is a serious thing to happen on the part of any member of parliament. I feel very strongly that the whole question should be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

As I said earlier, there have been indications that Mr. Michael Pitfield conducted investigations. I am not sure from the reports whether it was some time ago or recently. This concerns not only Mr. Pitfield and the Privy Council office. This concerns us all. If the matter is referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, Mr. Pitfield should be called before that committee.

I realize that in the absence of the hon. member for York-Simcoe, Your Honour will not want to finalize this matter today. However, I strongly urge that you give favourable consideration to referring the matter to the committee. By saying that, I am really admitting quite openly that I do not know the facts. I doubt if many members of the House know the facts. I do not think we can settle the issue by cross-fire in the House, but it certainly does need to be looked into.

Perhaps as a bit of a sideline, I may say that it concerned me to discover that the Toronto Globe and Mail in its issue of yesterday admitted or reported that it had stopped the run of Saturday's paper, after some 26,000 copies had been printed, to remove a story that it had run because it had been told by the office of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) that the story was not true.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): There are times when the papers report things about us that we think are not true, but I do not know of any instance where they stopped a press run because of our appeal. I think that part of the story ought to be looked into by the committee.

I say, Mr. Speaker, we cannot settle the matter here. We could not settle it even if the hon. member were present. It is interesting that he has denied making certain statements, but over the radio certain statements he made have been played back from a tape. I believe the case is clearly one, not for argument and debate on the floor of the House, but for reference to the appropriate committee.

• (1512)

The Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) has indicated that he would be prepared to move a motion and I suspect that, under the scheme of things around here, he would have priority over me. But in case his motion does not fit the bill and mine does, I am happy to read the motion I would be prepared to make if your Honour found there was a prima facie case of privilege. It reads:

That the allegations reported to have been made recently concerning speculation by Liberal members of parliament, including two or three cabinet ministers, be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections for a full inquiry as to whether there is any foundation for such allegations and as to the circumstances under which they were made.

It would be my hope that at a meeting of that committee we might come more closely to grips than we have done as yet with respect to the whole question of conflict of interest and the independence of parliament. It is time we had this place tied up so tightly in these matters that such things as have been charged could not take place and, therefore, that such charges could not be made.

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I want to say how grateful I am to the officials at the Table who were the first to inform me that a question of privilege would be raised today.

The hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) is not in his place today. He is in his own constituency attending a function which was arranged some time ago and which could not be avoided. He will, however, be in the House tomorrow at which time he intends to have something to say, and I would naturally hope Your Honour would allow him to make a contribution before you adjudicate on the matter. I wonder if I could reserve that right for my hon. friend from York-Simcoe by asking that the matter be held in abeyance until tomorrow.

Mr. Trudeau: What about the Globe and Mail?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has read his proposed amendment into the record, and it might be useful, for the sake of the orderly conduct of our discussion on this matter, especially tomorrow, if I were to read mine as well. I propose to move, if your Honour finds there is a prima facie case of privilege:

That the allegations purported to have been made by the hon. member for York-Simcoe, namely that members of the House of Commons, including two or three cabinet ministers, have been involved in speculation against the dollar and that the ministers have broken their oath of secrecy, as referred to in a Canadian Press story published by the Ottawa Citizen and other newspapers on Saturday, May 20, 1978, be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. As all members will recognize, it would be quite inappropriate to proceed with this matter in the absence of the member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens). His absence has been explained by his House leader. In these circumstances the least we can do would be to postpone further debate until the hon. member can be here to make his contribution. It would then be appropriate that hon. members who have contributed to the discussion today be given an opportunity to make further contributions after which it can be determined whether a prima facie case of privilege exists.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[Translation]

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: 934, 1,195, 1,203 and 1,357.

I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

[Text]

MR. PAUL GÉRIN-LAJOIE

Question No. 934—Mr. McKenzie:

1. Did the former chairman of CIDA, Mr. Paul Gérin-Lajoie receive retirement or pension benefits from CIDA or the government and, if so, what were the benefits and in what amounts?

2. Does Mr. Gérin-Lajoie hold, at present, a position in the government and, if so, what is the position?

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): I am informed by the Department of Supply and Services as follows: 1. During his employment in the federal public service, Mr. Paul Gérin-Lajoie was a contributor under the Public Service Superannuation Act and the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act. Upon the termination of his employment, he became entitled to receive at his option either a refund of his own pension contributions, a full pension payable at age sixty, or a slightly reduced pension payable immediately. A full pension is based on 2 per cent of the average of the salaries received during the person's six most highly paid years for each year of credited service. As a matter of long standing government policy, the specific amounts of the benefits payable to any individual are considered confidential.

2. No.

CANADIAN FILM DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

Question No. 1,195—Mr. Andre:

1. What is the Crown's precise financial interest in the Canadian Film Development Corporation as administered by the Department of the Secretary of State and on what date was such interest acquired, at what cost and for what reason?

2. What was the book value of the Crown's equity on the date of acquisition and what is its latest estimated book value?

3. To date, what is the Crown's total investment, including equity costs, contributions to operating funds, debt forgiveness and what is the Crown's total realized profit from such investment?

4. In what manner is the Crown's interest represented (a) on the Board of Directors (b) in its senior management?

5. Did the government make a policy decision in regard to the future disposition of its interest?

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canadian Film Development Corporation as follows: 1. The Canadian Film Development Corporation is a Crown corporation that was created by parliament (14-15-16 Eliz II, c 78, which received royal assent on March 10, 1967). The act set up an advance account for the corporation in the amount of $10 million. In 1971 the amount was increased to $20 million and in 1975 to $25 million. In 1977-78, the corporation began receiving annual appropriations instead of a statutory fund. Hence the corporation is not a private organization of which the government acquired control, but rather a corporation incorporated by a special act of parliament and included in schedule C of the Financial Administration Act.

2. (a) Not applicable. (b) According to the corporation's latest financial statements, the book value of the Crown's interests, that is "Federal Assets", is $2,849,984.

3. (a) $10 million when the corporation was created in 1967; $10 million in 1971; $5 million in 1975; $3.343 million for 1977-78; for a total of $28.343 million from 1967 to 1977-78. (b) The corporation recovered $4,390,000 from its contribution to films it financed, not necessarily in the form of profit but as capital recovery.

4. (a) The members of the board of directors are appointed by the governor in council. (b) The executive director and secretary are also appointed by the governor in council on the recommendation of the board of directors.

5. No.

Taxation

MR. KEITH SPICER

Question No. 1,203—Mr. McKenzie:

Did the former Commissioner of Official Languages, Mr. Spicer, receive retirement benefits or a pension and, if so (a) what were they (b) in what amount?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): During his employment in the federal public service, Mr. Keith Spicer was a contributor under the Public Service Superannuation Act and the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act. Upon the termination of his employment, he became entitled to receive at his option either a refund of his own pension contributions, a full pension payable at age sixty, or a reduced pension payable at age fifty. A full pension is based on 2 per cent of the average of the salaries received during the person's six most highly paid years for each year of credited service. As a matter of long-standing government policy, the specific amounts of the benefits payable to any individual are considered confidential.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

Question No. 1,357—Mr. Haidasz:

What was the total amount of federal grants to each province and territory for the teaching of minority official language since the inception of the programme?

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): Department of the Secretary of State: Attached is a chart on the assistance granted to second language education at the elementary and secondary levels.

Province	1970-71	1971-72	1972-73	1973-74	1974-75	1975-76	1976-77	Cumulative Total
			(000's)
Newfoundland	113,608	168,502	185,087	140,316	230,220	189,797	459,358	1,486,888
Prince Edward Island	42,863	50,463	46,508	50,948	50,443	101,995	111,853	455,073
Nova Scotia	310,223	349,733	347,621	296,889	458,441	557,950	694,947	3,015,804
New Brunswick	218,585	320,759	289,475	291,886	253,447	284,951	648,798	2,307,901
Quebec	5,635,954	6,644,155	5,860,970	8,731,620	7,560,566	9,351,686	14,777,074	58,562,025
Ontario	3,061,979	4,674,307	3,971,881	4,229,429	3,722,576	5,871,482	7,022,852	32,554,506
Manitoba	354,959	465,742	408,601	288,114	449,972	543,396	701,566	3,212,350
Saskatchewan	453,518	318,616	348,766	242,650	432,106	461,043	525,797	2,782,496
Alberta	579,653	680,007	578,196	410,827	625,501	756,655	832,021	4,462,860
British Columbia	834,645	961,907	756,577	817,491	732,359	1,376,833	1,319,737	6,799,549
TOTAL	11,605,987	14,634,191	12,793,682	15,500,170	14,515,631	19,495,788	27,094,003	115,639,452

Assistance to second language education at the elementary and secondary levels. (Contributions at a rate of 5 per cent.) For each pupil registered in a second language class, at the elementary or secondary level, the province receives 5 per cent of the average annual cost per capita. The formula takes into consideration the time spent on studying the second language.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The questions enumerated by the parliamentary secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—SUGGESTION COMMITTEE STUDY FEDERAL TAX STRUCTURE

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre) moved:

That a special committee of this House be established to determine whether the federal tax structure is inhibiting economic growth in Canada and promoting the export of employment opportunities to the United States.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this is a straightforward motion and it concerns a subject the government should have been dealing with long before today. As a matter of fact the serious disparity between the United States and Canada with regard to tax structures was first pointed out in 1966. It is closely tied to a subject which has been raised in the House on a number of occasions by myself and others—the serious outflow of capital from Canada. There is a brain drain, a business drain, a money drain, and a mass exodus of people. All this movement has been in evidence for a couple of years.

I read some figures into the record on May 17, Mr. Speaker, on research done in nine states, and I pointed out that approximately $6.9 billion of investment money had gone into these nine states, and I asked the question: how much has gone into the other 41 states? What are we looking at? Has $50 billion left this country, or $100 billion? We really do not know, and it is time some committee in this parliament started an investigation into this mass exodus to see what we can do to stop the flow.

I have some information provided by Peat, Marwick on the tax problem, Mr. Speaker, it is very difficult information to obtain. The government does not seem to be keeping any statistical information on the exodus of money and businesses or if it has it is keeping it to itself. We in the opposition have to rely on American newspapers, information from the United States government, and research done by investment counsellors in Canada. I have here some examples set out in detail which show the relative positions, after tax, of individuals residing in New York State and in Ontario, Canada. The date for the examples has been taken from the tax files of two Peat, Marwick files and the information has been simplified somewhat for illustrative purposes.

It is assumed in both cases that the individuals have been transferred to Canada by their employers for a period of more than one year and that their families would also reside in Canada. The housing allowance which the employer pays is an amount to compensate the employee for the higher cost of housing in Ontario and other parts of Canada compared to New York, and the agreed amount is received by the employee in addition to his base salary. The two examples are based on certain assumptions—the employee would file a joint return for his non-working spouse in the United States, each individual has two children under 16 at the end of the year, OHIP premiums are paid by the employers, and 1977 tax rates are used. Also, an employer does not compensate the employee for any difference in tax arising from income which is not employment related, and there is no currency adjustment.

Now, if a United States firm transferred an employee from New York to Ontario and he was receiving a base salary in the States of $19,700, he would need, by way of housing allowance, the amount of $5,328; $384 in the form of OHIP assistance, and $3,968 in tax equalization. He would have to receive a salary of $29,380 in Canada to equal his $19,700 salary in the United States. This means the American firm would have to assist him with a payment of an additional $9,680 in Canada if the employee was transferred here. An American earning $35,460 working for that same firm, who is transferred to Canada, would have to be subsidized in the amount of $18,638. Hon. members can see the vast difference between the two countries.

● (1522)

For an employee to obtain a net disposable income of $15,887 in Canada he would have to be paid $28,996. To obtain a net disposable income in the United States of the same amount, $15,887, all a person has to receive is $19,700. Taxes on that amount in the United States would be $3,813, and in Canada they would amount to $7,781, more than double.

In another comparison, an employee in New York State receiving $19,700 in salary would pay taxes amounting to $3,813. A person being paid the same amount in Canada would have to pay taxes amounting to $7,781.

Hon. members can see how serious is the problem. This problem has much to do with the brain drain and the exodus of capital and business from Canada. That is why we presented this motion. We want to call witnesses, do research in a parliamentary committee, and study our whole tax structure.

There are many other examples which I would like to read into the record. This problem was first highlighted by the Royal Commission on Taxation in 1966. In a document entitled "International Tax Comparisons" the commission stated:

> For many Canadian workers, the market for their services is continental, not Canadian. This is especially true for highly skilled and professional employees who are increasingly sought by United States and other foreign employers as well as by employers in Canada. The so-called "brain-drain" from Canada has been widely noted and deplored by many observers. We are anxious that the Canadian tax system should not contribute to that drain.

So are we, Mr. Speaker.

> Taxes are not the only factor that affects an individual's decision to emigrate from Canada. For example, the persistently large differential between Canadian and United States mortgage interest rates may be as important a factor as taxes for many individuals.
>
> As is emphasized, differences in tax burdens are probably not as important as differences in salaries, working conditions and living costs. For reasons that need not concern us here, Canadian employers generally do not offer competitive salaries and frequently have not been able to offer work as interesting as that offered by United States employers. We are, however, concerned with reducing Canadian taxes on skilled workers and professionals to the point where there are no major tax incentives for emigration to the United States.

I will provide examples of the difference between the income taxes currently paid by taxpayers in equivalent positions in the United States and Canada. The examples will show, in several different situations, the total income taxes paid to all levels of government by a family with two children, both of whom are assumed to qualify for family allowances, and with an income of $12,000 earned by the head of the family. Comparisons will be provided for the average taxpayer earning this amount in the United States and in the Canadian provinces with the lowest tax rates, as well as for the average taxpayer residing in the state of New York and in Saskatchewan. In both of the latter cases taxes are substantially above the average for the respective countries.

As can be seen from the data given in my table, income taxes paid by a Canadian family living in the provinces with the lowest tax rates are even higher than those paid by a family residing in New York State. The differential is especially large for a family living in a house it owns because mortgage interest payments and property taxes are deductible in computing taxable income in the United States.

The examples in my table, which I will read from in a moment, show only the higher taxes paid by a Canadian family with two children at one income level. The percentage differences between Canadian and United States income taxes for different taxpayers with different incomes is given in my next table. In all cases the comparison is between United States taxpayers with average state and local income taxes, and Canadian taxpayers in provinces with the lowest income taxes. The data given in the table thus compare average United States income taxes with income taxes in all provinces other than Quebec, Manitoba, and Saskatchewan. Because 13 states in the United States do not levy any state income tax at all, this comparison is somewhat biased in favour of Canada. In spite of this bias it is apparent from my table that middle income taxpayers pay substantially higher taxes in Canada than in the United States. The difference in taxes arises in part from more liberal deductions in the United States, in part from lower tax rates, and in part from the right of husbands and wives in the United States to file joint returns.

The difference is lowest for a single individual with no dependents who does not claim itemized deductions. Such an individual, on the average, pays less income tax in the United States than in Canada if his income is between $8,000 and $30,000. If the United States taxpayer lives in a state such as Pennsylvania, which has no state income tax, his income taxes are less for incomes ranging from $5,000 to $30,000.

For a married couple, average income taxes are less in the United States if the couple's income is greater than $7,000, even if only the standard deduction is claimed. However, over 60 per cent of United States taxable returns filed jointly by husbands and wives claim itemized deductions.

I have a few examples. The typical home owner in the state of New York pays an average of $1,419. In Saskatchewan he pays $1,914, or 25.9 per cent more income tax. The average in the United States is $1,318. In all provinces other than Saskatchewan, Manitoba, and Quebec, the average is $1,827, which means that the average in the United States is 27.9 per cent less. The average taxpayer filing itemized deductions in New York state pays $1,529. In Saskatchewan the amount is $1,914, or 20.1 per cent more.

The average taxpayer in the United States filing itemized deductions pays $1,409. In all provinces other than Saskatchewan, Manitoba, and Quebec the average is $1,827, or 22.9 per cent more than in the United States. Hon. members can see the wide variance, and it is time we got down to business and looked at our whole tax structure to see what we can do about lowering taxes so that we can keep Canadians, businesses, and investment money right here in Canada.

The average taxpayer using standard deductions in New York State pays $1,843. In Saskatchewan the amount is $2,178, or 15.4 per cent more than in the United States. The average taxpayer in the United States using standard deductions pays $1,634. In all provinces other than Saskatchewan, Manitoba, and Quebec the amount is $2,060, or 20.7 per cent more than in the United States. The Royal Commission on Taxation also made the following note:

Income taxes include provincial income taxes and old age security tax in Canada, and average state and local income taxes in the United States. They do not include compulsory contributions to government pension plans in either country. In all cases, the percentage difference is calculated using the Canadian tax figure as base.

● (1532)

I have a few other examples which I would like to read into the record. The first is examples of the percentage differences between U.S. and Canadian income taxes. If you earn $8,000 in the U.S. and $8,000 in Canada, you pay 17.3 per cent less in taxes in the U.S. If you earn $10,000, you pay 19.1 per cent less in the U.S. On $12,000 in each country, you pay 22.9 per cent less in the U.S. On $15,000, you pay 27.3 per cent less in the U.S. On $25,000, the difference is 36.6 per cent. No wonder people are moving to the United States.

I have some other comparisons to put on the record. These are more up to date figures. This is a tax equalization table for 1977. If you earn $20,000 in Canada, after all the deductions you pay $3,708 in taxes. On $20,000 in the U.S. you only pay $2,734, or $1,000 less. On $40,000, in Canada you pay on the average $12,369 in taxes, but in the U.S. only $8,472. There are many professional people in the $40,000 bracket, lawyers, businessmen and so on, and on about the same income they pay approximately $4,000 less in the U.S. That is quite an incentive to go to the United States.

In the higher income brackets, in Canada if you earn $61,000 you pay $23,094. If you earn $54,881 in the U.S., you only pay $13,400 in taxes, or $10,000 less. In what is called the middle income group in Canada, if you earn $27,776 a year you pay $12,377 in taxes. On a similar amount in the United States you pay only $6,198. That means $6,179 less in taxes after all the comparable deductions are made.

Some other examples I have here show that a Canadian earning $29,544 has to pay $9,418 in taxes. On the same amount in the United States he pays $5,317 in taxes which is approximately $4,000 less.

A question was raised a couple of weeks ago about the different tax structures in the two countries, and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) made a comment regarding the medical and hospitalization costs in the United States. There are private plans there and you can get insurance coverage for medical and hospitalization costs both of which are tax deductible. Also, senior citizens have a social security plan under which medical and hospitalization costs are paid. They are well covered there, and it is not a penalty for them to become sick. You do not become bankrupt when you become sick, but you can claim your expenses in tax deductions. You can pay into private pension plans.

Many firms in the U.S. have their own medical and hospitalization plans. They also have deductions for dental expenses. There is quite an extensive list of deductible medical expenses. People in the U.S. are well covered. I obtained this information from the 1978 U.S. tax guide. We can certainly use these documents for study in committee in comparing the two tax structures.

I have further examples of tax deductions between Canada and the U.S. In the 1977 tax guide you will find information on profit or loss from business or profession, capital gains and losses, supplemental income schedule, credit for the elderly, computation of social security self employment tax, tax computation schedule, and credit for child and dependent care expenses. All these are areas that we can study.

There was a very interesting article in the latest Executive magazine entitled, "Trudeau Played To A Great Hush". It reads:

Executive spoke with columnist Janeway shortly after Trudeau addressed the Economic Club in New York City.

There was little doubt Trudeau wished to impress upon that audience that our economic nationalism is behind us, that his government now sees the value of the private sector, and that we wished to be taken back into the North American fold. Did he convince that audience of powerful business figures?

He played to a great hush.

I don't think anyone here believes that Canadian economic nationalism is behind you. I recently was in Fargo, North Dakota, right under Winnipeg. They tell me there that every week end you can't get a hotel room, and that all the shops that are well stocked are cleaned out by Canadian buyers. That is a lot more potent evidence than a press release to a group of stuffed shirts in New York. This has gone on every week in every border market centre between Seattle and Bangor, Maine.

As long as our people see your people flocking down here to buy their preferential merchandise and to park their money, they are not going to believe that economic nationalism is behind you in Canada.

We think, as I see it, the Trudeau visit meant nothing. If you are weak against the U.S. dollar, buddy, you're weak.

There seems to be less worry on Wall Street about Quebec separating. Since you are closer to the Canadian scene than some of those Wall Street people, wouldn't you agree they still have reason to be concerned?

Wall Street's got so much to worry about Wall Street. I don't think it's got Quebec on it's mind. Wall Street can't see beyond Fulton Street, beyond the ferry that goes to Staten Island.

In Grand Forks, North Dakota, they are building a $20 million shopping centre for Canadian visitors. This is a serious situation, but we hear nothing from the government. Actually we are the best boosters of the American economy. It is time we sat down together and found out how we can keep our people here.

Prior to the provincial election in Manitoba last October, financial experts, Peter Jerch and Associates, compiled a list of 19 clients whom they were assisting to move to the United States due to the political climate in Manitoba prior to the change of government there. These people who were moving out of Manitoba were taking some $40 million in investment money with them, and this was going to cost Manitoba 4,000 jobs. We were able to stop this trend in Manitoba with the change of government. Peter Jerch and Associates have done other studies. They are working on behalf of another 30 Canadian businesses which are planning to move to the United States. They are going to take $196 million of investment capital with them. Peter Jerch and Associates say that this will cost Canada up to 17,000 jobs.

The seriousness of the situation is quite apparent. My motion is perfectly legitimate. Certainly we have received no answers from the government in the past year in spite of having addressed questions to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner) and the Minister of Finance. Also we have received no answer from the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). This is a serious and dangerous trend, but there is no evidence that the government is doing anything about it. It is time we forgot partisan politics and referred this subject to a standing committee which could start an investigation and study of this serious situation.

U.S. magazines have done a considerable amount of research into foreign investment. One article points out the following:

● (1542)

This year alone foreign interests are likely to reinvest over $2 billion into their U.S. holdings—no small vote of confidence in the U.S. economy.

That is the direction in which they are going.

Last week I mentioned some figures regarding the geographic breakdown of where Canadian capital is flowing. The estimated capital expenditure in the State of Florida is more than $2.5 billion. While Florida is attracting larger amounts of Canadian capital, California has become the second most invested area. To this date over $1.5 billion out of Canadian pockets has ended up in California. Texas and New York comprise the third largest area of investment for Canadians, the figure is $1.3 billion; Colorado is $500 million; New Jersey is $400 million; North Carolina is $400 million; Georgia and Illinois are $300 million. This totals approximately $6.5 billion.

Some of our small businesses and individual investors, as well as our large companies, are moving large sums of money into the United States. For example, Canadian Pacific has moved $185 million to New York. Also 140 Canadian manufacturing firms have moved to the state of New York, taking with them $28.6 million. Union Nationale leader Rodrigue Biron indicated that $4 billion of economic exodus has gone to the United States. As reported in December, 1977, the Financial Times indicated that Cadillac Fairview invested $80 million in the United States. Canada Development Corporation invested $50 million; Bell Canada, $30 million; Inco Limited, $25 million; and Asamera Oil Corporation Ltd., $11 million.

Canada is no longer an attractive country in which to invest. Since 1975-1976 the flow of capital coming into Canada has decreased. Certainly it is most disturbing to read articles in Canadian and United States newspapers with headlines similar to: "Canadians Race to Buy up Florida". Approximately $7.5 million went to a north Miami beach apartment complex; $1.3 million for the Hawaiian Inn. The list is endless. Canadians have invested in businesses, motels, banks, and insurance companies.

Much of the Canadian investment from western Canada is going into Colorado. For example, $11 million was invested in two Denver apartment buildings by Hillcrest Investment Ltd. of Calgary. Canlea, a Canadian investment group, invested $16 million in an 850-unit apartment building in Houston.

I should like to refer to some of the larger takeovers. There was a $70 million takeover by B.C. Forest Products Ltd. of a Minnesota paper company plant; a $140 million takeover of a Revere Copper and Brass Company plant in Alabama by Alcan Aluminium Ltd.; and a $95 million acquisition and reconstruction by Co-Steel of Toronto of a New Jersey plant.

Between the exodus of capital and the serious disparities in the tax structure, it is time for the government to take a responsible stand. I hope we will hear some encouraging words from the government today on what will be done about this serious situation. It is not the purpose of governments to see how much money they can take away from the people. But certainly that is the philosophy of the federal government. I hope we receive some words of encouragement today. Tax reductions will stimulate the economy.

I should like to refer to one proposal which was offered by my party. A tax cut can be financed by a massive cut in federal expenditures, and an increase in federal revenues resulting from increased economic activity. As economic expansion takes hold and the restraint program matures, the federal deficit will grow smaller than would be the case with existing fiscal policies. Cuts in federal spending need be neither economically nor socially harmful. In proportional terms, the room to cut appears small. In terms of taxpayers' dollars, there is plenty of room.

Notwithstanding ministerial statements about restraint, operating costs have increased by 37 per cent over the last two years. Why has that occurred? If these costs had increased only at the target inflation rates of the controls program, which were 8 per cent, and 6 per cent, federal budgetary spending would be $2 billion lower than it is now.

On February 2, 1978, we presented a motion which would give committees the power to examine all government departments and their expenditures, as well as the introduction of sunset laws. Nothing is being done in Canada about various programs. Once a program is established, whether provincial or federal, it carries on to infinity. Every government program does not have to continue for all time. They should be reviewed, along with the functions of all governmental departments. They should be reviewed to ensure they are still necessary and should carry on. Once a program is commenced—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to inform the hon. member that his allotted time has expired. He may continue with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. McKenzie: In closing, personnel expenditures account for close to 60 per cent of operating costs. These expenditures must bear the brunt of expenditure cutbacks. Firings or layoffs in the public service are not required. A new hiring freeze, in conjunction with a policy of not replacing staff who resign or retire, would reduce on-strength personnel by more than 20,000 per year. Military personnel, prison guards and the RCMP would be exempt. The staff reduction program would apply to the remaining 470,000 in the employ of the federal government.

Further savings can be achieved over the medium-term by sunset laws and zero-based budgeting. Some of the nearly 400 federal Crown corporations can be dismantled, integrated within departments, or sold to the private sector. Non-budgetary or borrowings of Crown corporations must be curtailed, especially where the interest rate does not reflect market conditions.

The only federal department, Crown corporation, or agency which has shown any leadership in attrition has been Air Canada. I heard no objections from anyone in Canada when Mr. Claude Taylor, the president of Air Canada, announced that he was going to implement an attrition program within Air Canada. He reduced the staff by over 2,000 people during the last two years, taking into account deaths, early retirements, and what have you. The net result is a more efficient airline which is making a profit. We should follow the example of Air Canada. When the president of Air Canada announced the attrition program, I heard no complaints from the New Democratic Party or the Liberal party. In fact I received one complaint from an Air Canada employee who did not like where he was being moved. That was the only ruffle I heard. If it can be done in Air Canada, certainly it can done in the various departments of the federal government. We must get started now.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo-Cambridge): Mr. Speaker, having listened carefully to the remarks of the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie), in conjunction with the previous unfounded charges made against members of the House, I should like to indicate that this is not a good day for the Conservative party.

• (1552)

I found it very very difficult to understand what the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre was trying to say on behalf of the Progressive Conservative party. He quoted a lot of things, and I presume he intended them to leave some kind of impression or message. As I listened to him I kept thinking that when Sir John A. Macdonald was trying to put this country together he must have listened to people like that. There must have been people who said, "Why create Canada? Things are so much better in the United States. Look how much better off we would be if we stayed with the American colonies instead of trying to create a separate country."

There are obviously advantages to being an American, Mr. Speaker, but there are advantages to being a Canadian as well, and I think the advantages of being a Canadian far outweigh the disadvantages.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Saltsman: The only conclusion I can come to is that some people say, "Isn't it great to be an American rather than a Canadian" and poor-mouth this country for everything we have tried to do. It may be true that some of our taxes in this country are higher, but it is also true that we have things in this country of which we should be thoroughly proud. To a greater extent than the United States we have brought in programs which have benefited many of the small people of this country.

I sometimes wonder for whom the great Progressive Conservative party speaks. Is it only for the rich? Are there no poor people who vote Conservative? The argument they are making is really an argument against progressive income tax. Let me show by example the kind of virtues they hold up in the United States and encourage us to adopt.

In showing us how much better things are in the United States than in Canada, the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre used a table—and I think it is fairly accurate—which illustrated that at the $8,000 income level in the United States they pay 17.3 per cent less taxes than Canadians; at the next level it is 19.1 per cent less taxes; at the next level, 22.9 per cent less; at $15,000 income in the United States compared to Canada it is 27.3 per cent less taxes, and at the $25,000 income level it is 36.3 per cent less taxes than in Canada. That is what he is holding up as an example.

How else do we read this except as an attack on progressive income tax? Using those figures it is obvious that in the United States the income tax system is better than it is in Canada because in Canada it is too progressive. Mr. Speaker, we are far from having the most progressive income tax system in the world, but it is better than in the United States. The hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Gillies) says that is not so. He is a learned economist and a scholar, but I do not see what other conclusion can be drawn from this than the conclusion that it is a good thing for the rich to pay less taxes. I think it is a good thing for everybody to pay less taxes, but let us be honest in this debate. The extent to which the rich pay less taxes is the extent to which the poor have to pay more. There is no such thing as tax avoidance. If some people avoid or do not pay taxes, they have to be made up by somebody else, and that somebody else is at the lower end of the income scale. Otherwise, services must be cut out.

I know the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre went to some pains—not great pains but some pains, because I think it occupied less than two minutes of his presentation—to say that if the Progressive Conservatives were in power they would have a way of reducing government expenditures, in other words, a way of reducing taxes without hurting anyone. They would do it by attrition and would not cut out essential services. Mr. Speaker, if you look at any budget, provincial or municipal, there is always some fat that can be cut out. An efficient government could do that. Let us be honest, however. Most of the expenditures are in transfer payments; the overwhelming bulk of expenditures at every level of government is the transfer of income from one group of people to another. No matter how efficient you make the administration, no matter how much attrition you have in the staff of that administration, the amount of savings is negligible in comparison to the profits. This does not mean you do not have to do everything you can, but doing everything you can at the administration level is not really going to result in a substantial decrease in taxes.

There is only one way in which taxes can be reduced and that is one thing the Progressive Conservative party does not want to admit, that is, to cut services. If you cut out services you are cutting out the poor.

The Conservative party is showing itself to be the champion of the rich without really caring what happens to those who are not rich. The examples they put forward in this House benefit the rich, not the ordinary citizens, and particularly not poor citizens.

Let us talk now about the brain drain. What brain drain, Mr. Speaker? The brain drain from Canada to the United States? Is there any evidence to support the argument that the brains of Canada are dissolving into the United States? I think there is some considerable evidence that a lot of Americans are coming to Canada because they find it a very attractive place in which to live. I have heard more Americans say they like the way we do things in this country than I have heard Canadians say they like the way things are done in the United States. So what is this brain drain? If the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre wanted to call it a venality drain or a cupidity drain I would go along with him. We have that kind of drain.

Let us take one example, Mr. Speaker. Recently there has been a series of newspaper articles about doctors moving to the United States. Why is this? Are doctors in Canada so poor, so underpaid? Is life in Canada so miserable that they have to move to the United States? Are doctors at the lowest end of the economic ladder here? Surely no one would say that is the case. It may be true that doctors make more money in the United States, and probably is, but there are other advantages that they do not take into account. In the United States it costs a lot more money for a doctor to receive medical training. It costs him more to practice, because of their system.

Why should a doctor, who has been educated in this country at public expense, costing us close to $100,000, say, "I can make more money south of the border?" It is not as though he needs it for survival. Doctors may not be at the top of the income ladder, but they are close. They work hard and deserve it, and I am not critical of them. However, if we are going to match the incomes of the United States for our doctors, is the Conservative party then prepared to say that medical costs in Canada should rise? After all, the chief cost of medical care is doctors' salaries and the things that surround doctors' incomes.

Hospital services and medical services cost much less in Canada and are of equal quality to those of the United States. Part of the reason for this is that our doctors are not paid as much, part of the reason is that our hospital services are more efficient, and a great part of the reason is that we have a national health system.

What does a national health system mean? Is the Conservative party saying that we should abandon our national health system and that people should pay privately? If they are not saying that, then they are saying we should raise taxes in order to pay for those high incomes that doctors in the United States are earning, and if we want to keep doctors in Canada we will have to pay. They are not talking about cutting services because the bulk of services is paid through the national health scheme—hospital insurance programs and medicare services. Are they saying they are going to raise taxes? That is the implication they are leaving with us. They do not want to say that, but it is the obvious conclusion.

● (1602)

Those doctors who are so ungrateful to this country and who have forgotten how much it costs Canada to provide them with an education and an opportunity, and who want to go to the United States because they can make a few more bucks—the Americans are welcome to them. I do not want them. That is all they care about. It is not a brain drain, it is a venality drain. If their system of values is oriented only to how much money they can make—most doctors are not like that, at least the doctors I know are not—but those few who are, if that is all that life means to them, to shop around to see which country will give them a few bucks more, that country is welcome to them. I have no regrets at losing them beyond saying that we should make these doctors pay back what it cost us for their education—

Mrs. Campagnolo: Same as New Zealand.

Mr. Saltsman: That is right. Brain drain! That is not a brain drain. It is always popular to argue that we should lower taxes. There are occasions when all of us have to argue that as politicians. It is a worth-while objective to lower taxes. But we should not use those kinds of arguments on the basis of arousing expectations or being dishonest in terms of how that can be done.

I want to take a more specific look at some of the things that the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre was saying. He was talking about executive salaries. Executives get all kinds of benefits in the United States which they do not get in Canada. Is there one shred of evidence that Canada is short of executive talent? Is there one shred of evidence to suggest that the benefits they get in the United States have deprived this country of the ability to direct its affairs and its economy, and to create a fine society? There is not. I know many people in Canada of the highest calibre. I have matched them against their counterparts in other countries. They know they can get a few dollars more by going to the United States. But they do not care. These people think it is worth while to live in Canada. I do not see any evidence that there is any shortage of brains or talent in this country because of the differences in the tax system.

Those people for whom money is so important that they will switch loyalties and switch nationalities, and bounce around looking for the big take, I say those countries they go to are welcome to these people. There is enough of the others in this country to make sure that we do not have to worry about them.

Not once throughout the intervention of the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre did I hear him say a good word about Canada—a good word about some of the things we have done in this country—so that the picture is not one-sided and it does not look as though everything the Americans do is good and everything we do in this country is bad. We do a lot of bad things in this country. I wish we had a much better government than the one we have. But judging from what I have heard today that government will not come from the Conservative party. That party would not make a better government. That is just an offset.

How about some of the things we have done in this country? Is there nothing that the Conservative party can find that is good in Canada? Is medicare not good? Is hospital insurance not good? Are old age pensions not good? Is family allowance not good? Is DREE not good? None of these things are good—

An hon. Member: Let us have some honesty.

Mr. Saltsman: The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre says that I am the one who is dishonest. I would like to sit down, if I may, and give him a chance to say in which way I am dishonest and in which way the arguments I am putting forward are not correct. I ask him for some sense of balance so it does not look as though we are some kind of a pariah country where nothing is any good, and where the only thing in life that is important is taxes.

If I were an archaeologist, and I was in some dig and I wanted to know something about a civilization, the one thing I would hope to find would be the tax tables of that civilization. Those tax tables would tell me something about that civilization. They would tell me what that civilization valued. If one saw a progressive tax table, one would say that that civilization cared about the poor. On the other hand if one saw a regressive tax table, one could conclude that that civilization was run for the benefit of the rich. When history digs up the tax tables of our two countries, if they could ever be understood, it will be apparent, even with all the faults in this country and with some of the higher taxes in Canada, that we have built a more sensitive, intelligent civilization than our friends across the border. The poor in this country benefit more from this civilization than the poor and disadvantaged in the United States.

As a politician and member of this House I am proud that our civilization is that different. The founders of the Conservative party, Sir John A. Macdonald and the people who had the vision to want to create a different kind of society, would also have been proud to see the gamble and the chance that they took to try and create a different kind of civilization worked out, that we did create something worth-while by being independent and separate even though it cost us something in taxing the rich.

Let us talk about the flight of capital. One can argue, as the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre argued, the reason that capital is flowing to the United States is that the tax system is better in the United States. It does not occur to the hon. member that perhaps the reason capital is flowing to the United States is our tax system is too good to the rich in Canada. There is evidence to suggest much of the capital flowing out of Canada is not because of lower taxes in the United States but because we have enabled people with income to save so much that they do not know where to invest it any more, that the level of savings in this country is too high in the business and the private sector.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Saltsman: This constitutes an area of mirth for my friends to my right. The evidence is startling. We have been too generous in this country to those people who have money. An example that was given illustrated that people in higher income brackets, where the husband and wife are working and making a great deal of money, saved a lot of tax in the United States. Should they? We have a number of examples of senior civil servants or senior business executives where husbands and wives are both working and making large salaries. How much solicitude should we have for them? They still have lots of money after they pay their taxes. There is evidence that we are saving more money in this country than we have ever saved before in our lives. We are doing it because of an over-generous tax system.

We were the last country, as far as the western industrialized world was concerned, to introduce a capital gains tax—

An hon. Member: France.

Mr. Saltsman: France? We were the last country. The United States had it long before we had the capital gains tax. What was the consequence—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): I regret to inform the hon. member his allotted time has expired. He may continue if there is unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Saltsman: I would like to thank my colleagues in the House. I will be very brief and I will conclude the capital gains example.

• (1612)

One reason this country lost so much of its industry to foreign investors was not because our tax system was tough but because it was too easy for them. The absence of the capital gains tax meant that the businessman who could sell his industry to a foreign investor could take all his money without paying any tax at all, whereas if he operated his business he had to pay tax. Faced with that kind of solution, many Canadians simply sold out because our tax system was so soft, easy, and solicitous that it encouraged them to do so.

You can have tax systems that are too onerous. All members of parliament, in fact all politicians, have to be conscious of that. You can also have tax systems, as we have in this country and even more in other countries, being too generous to those to whom there is no need to be that generous. One of the problems in this country has been that we have been too generous to the well-to-do.

The message we get today from the Progressive Conservative party is that if they were in office, following the American example, they would be even more generous to the rich than this government.

Mr. Bill Kempling (Halton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I thought there would be a speaker from the other side coming on, but I will be glad to contribute to the debate at this time.

Before getting into my main remarks, and while he is still in the House, I was hoping the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge (Mr. Saltsman) would explain to the people why he has bought, or is a major shareholder in, a motel in the United States, and whether he is being greedy, venal or whatever, and whether it is cupidity. As usual, he is speaking out of both sides of his mouth.

Mr. Andre: He has too much money.

Mr. Kempling: We should tax him more so he will not have money left to invest in the United States.

The motion put down by my colleague, the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie), reads:

> That a special committee of this House be established to determine whether the federal tax structure is inhibiting economic growth in Canada and promoting the export of employment opportunities to the United States.

I think that is a very responsible motion. We have a million officially unemployed. We have approximately another 400,000 unoficially unemployed in that they are not entitled to benefits.

There is a large number of graduate students who will be leaving our universities and coming into the labour market. There are a number who are leaving our secondary institutions who, for one reason or another, have decided not to go on with their education. They are going to be added to the unemployed.

What we are really talking about in this motion is whether our tax structure is inhibiting economic growth. I think it is. There has not been this flight of industry to the United States for nothing. They have gone there for reasons, but not the reasons given by the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge. Can you imagine anyone being so silly as to say they went to the United States because the tax benefits are too good for them in Canada? Can you imagine that? That has to be the most illogical reasoning I have heard as long as I have been around.

When we look at why some of these plants have gone to the United States, we must look at some of the difficulties our companies have had here in Canada. The DISC program in the United States is a clear example. There has been an erosion of industry in Canada, moving to the United States, ever since the DISC program has been in place.

We hear, as we heard in January when some of us visited the United States, that the DISC program will be discontinued. We will have to wait and see whether it is or not. However, it would be worth while to have a committee of this House do a comparative study on the federal tax programs and a parallel study of the provincial tax programs as opposed to the state programs in the United States.

What is going on today is a barter. We saw it recently in Ontario when the state of Ohio gave some taxation benefits to one of the automotive companies to put a plant there rather than in Ontario. As a matter of fact there is quite a strategy being developed by many of the southern states of the United States to attract many Canadian companies there.

In my own small company, I have four letters on my desk from southern states which are inviting me to move my company or establish a business there. They are offering tax benefits from the state, forgiveable tax from the municipality, capital tax allowances, or assistance with the construction of plants. They offer to subsidize wages if we employ people who are unemployed and teach them skills and so forth. This is a concerted program on their part. For that reason, and no other, it would be worth while for this House to look into the discrepancies between the two taxation systems in Canada and the United States to see what can be done.

My colleague from Winnipeg South Centre listed several companies and gave several examples of companies and people who have taken money out of Canada and invested it in the United States. They are from every Canadian province.

I wish to quote from an article that appeared in the New York Times a week ago Sunday. The heading is "French Canadians in Florida". I quote:

> In south Florida, some real estate men estimate that French Canadian investors have spent more than $500 million in the last three years; a company controlled by Canada's Hudson's Bay Company recently announced that it would finance half the cost of a $1 billion new town of 50,000 people in Dade county.
>
> Canada's Olympia and York Development Ltd. recently bought eight New York city office buildings for almost $350 million, and has made several other acquisitions in this country.

It went on to name another Canadian company, Nu-West Development Corporation Ltd. of Calgary, which recently paid $16 million for 2,000 acres of undeveloped land overlooking the coast at San Clemente, south of Sacramento, near the home of the former president, and recently offered to buy 80 per cent of a major Phoenix homebuilder. If further states that Canadians in Sacramento bought a hotel for some $4 million.

From coast to coast Canadians are moving their money, for one reason or another. It may be the tax rates. I cannot comment. I would have to look at each individual case to determine whether that is correct. However, it is the general temper in the country.

The hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge mentioned doctors. I thought his comments were very unfair. In my constituency a number of doctors have already left or are in the throes of leaving. One of them circulated a letter, in which he said in part:

> Unfortunately I find it necessary for the future welfare of my family, especially my children, to emigrate to the United States. Some time this summer we will be moving to—

He then names a place in Texas. The letter continues:

> I am a fifth generation Canadian and grew up in a society which valued free enterprise and industriousness. In the last decade our government has become a democratic socialistic government, and individuals and industries who have shown initiative and made profits and expanded have been denigrated by the public and government alike.

It goes on to tell why he is leaving Canada and going to the United States. I have a letter here from another doctor, a copy of which was addressed to me. I quote:

> The Joseph Brant Memorial Hospital is being threatened by a mass defection by its medical staff to the United States.

● (1622)

It goes on to describe the difficulties hospitals are experiencing. People are leaving for the United States for various reasons.

The motion my hon. friend has put down asks that a committee of the House be empowered to look into this whole question and make recommendations to the government about what could be done to halt the flow of capital and people from the country. A few years ago we were encouraging U.S. industries to come to Canada—whether this was right or wrong depends, I suppose, upon which part of the political spectrum one happens to belong to. Some of those industries came here because by doing so they were able to enter the Commonwealth market. The pattern of development which disturbs me is this: they have pulled their operations out and chosen to return to the United States keeping only a shell here, a corporate presence. All the jobs on production, the acquisition of raw materials, transportation and so on, have been transferred south of the border. Why did they go? One reason is, obviously, the incidence of the taxation system in this country. I suppose the capital gains tax was a factor. Then again, they were influenced by legislation in the United States—the DICC legislation was an important factor in many instances. The proposal which the President of the United States presently has on his desk to tax U.S. subsidiaries in other countries on the profits they earn in those countries would, if adopted, no doubt draw more of these companies back.

My hon. friend's motion is really a plea to the government. Why cannot members from all parties discuss this subject in committee, hear witnesses, draw conclusions, and make recommendations? This, really, is all the motion is asking for, not the silly nonsense which was put forward by the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge. Every time he speaks we wonder what party he represents; he is a chameleon; he can turn colour from one day to the next.

The situation facing us is serious. We have 1.5 million people unemployed, and the value of the gross national product has to grow if we are to deal with the needs of the labour force. We can only make progress by expanding the private sector. It reminds me, Mr. Speaker, of the book "If This Is Such a Bowl of Cherries, Why Are We In The Pits".

An hon. Member: Who wrote that?

Mr. Kempling: That is about as succinct as one could get on this subject.

To return to the security aspect, my hon. friend from Winnipeg South Centre said we have to get our statistics from foreign publications, private analysts, and so on. I would think it would be of major importance to the government to know just how much money had gone out of the country to the United States, why it had left, and what the effect is likely to be on future employment, tax revenue, and so forth. We do not get this information as members of parliament. I would think the Minister of Industry, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) or whoever was concerned about economic policy would be glad to let a study of this kind go forward and have a committee of the House make recommendations, even if only to the extent of proposing that the situation should continue to be monitored.

Another difficulty which we face is the reluctance of the government to make forecasts of future trends. As a result we must go to the private sector and take a look at the forecasts for the Canadian economy put out by Wood Gundy. They say our gross national product for 1978 is likely to increase by 3.8 per cent followed by a decline in 1979 to 3.2 per cent, and a slight increase to 4 per cent in 1980. This means our growth would not be sufficient to meet the needs of the labour force. Unemployment is, of course, the other factor to be considered. An unemployment rate of 8.6 is estimated for 1978, 9.1 per cent for 1979, and a slight drop to 8.7 per cent for 1980. Those are the forecasts.

This is certainly a subject we should be looking into in committee. The government has enough economists to put forecasts together; there can be no doubt about that. It is likely that for political reasons they do not want such forecasts made. But as a committee, we could ask the representatives of Wood Gundy to appear and question them about the forecasts they have made, the assumptions behind them, and so on. There are many matters which could be discussed in a standing committee, and I commend my friend for putting his motion down on the order paper so at least we could prod the government and urge it to take heed of the warning signals. Until the estimates were brought in, the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs held few meetings. Once the estimates had been considered we had, of course, the Bank Act ahead of us. We have had plenty of time to look at this, and I think it would have been a very useful exercise for us to have gone through.

• (1632)

I feel that a committee of this type could look at the report of the Royal Commission on Corporate Concentration which came down the other day. We cannot agree with all its recommendations, but there is a tremendous amount of good, hard information there which should be examined. It is interesting that while there were only three or four pages in the report dealing with taxation, it has been given major play in the media. There are many things in that report at which we should be looking. I was interested in some of the comments about "what else could we expect from a business group?" I think anyone with a brain in his head who looks at the terms of reference of the royal commission would expect the report to come out pro-business but, by the same token, I defend that to some extent.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), various ministers of the Crown, some of our own people, and even members of the New Democratic Party say that the only way we are going to employ our unemployed and stimulate our economy is by stimulating the private sector. The report of that royal commission suggests one way to do that, but that is not the only way. We think priorities regarding corporate taxation could be put into a different order. However, many items in the report would be good information to bring before a committee. It would be good background information, and it would be a good exercise for the committee to study that report. Such a study would probably make better committee members out of all hon. members.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to inform the hon. member that his allotted time has expired. He may continue with unanimous consent. Does the hon. member have unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Kempling: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will wind up my remarks very shortly. When we consider the flight of capital, as it is called, and that is just a term, from Canada, the last three years are the interesting ones. The net flow of capital from Canada, particularly in the last two years—$950 million in 1976, and $380 million net outflow in 1977—is what really interests me, and it is interesting to note the climb in direct Canadian investment abroad from $225 million in 1968 to $790 million in 1977, about three quarters of a billion dollars.

We are not suggesting that there should not be investment abroad. After all, there is a normal flow of commerce back and forth. If investment goes abroad for the expansion of a business enterprise, whatever it might happen to be, that is fine. I do not see anything wrong with that. That is a normal flow of capital which should be good, but we are concerned about the fact that much of the capital that is going out now is just closing down Canadian operations and opening up operations in the United States. I suggest that that is not the normal flow of capital. It is more an escape of funds than foreign expansion.

We are concerned when we hear that the Cadillac Fairview's of this world, along with many others—generally Canadian—are major holders of lands and buildings in New York city. That is something about which we should be concerned. There is a more difficult problem. Arcrad Limited, a small Toronto firm composed of an innovative group of fellows who got together to discuss the production of energy devices such as windmills for farms in Canada, sought funds from the government and from private financial institutions, without success. Arcrad Limited wanted to develop its ideas. A large multinational opened its hands and took the firm to the United States. That company is now located in Buffalo. It is developing its product there and exporting it back into Canada. That is one of our problems.

In my own constituency the same thing happened. A man invented a device and had it patented and so forth, but he could not sell it in Canada in any great volume, so he went to the largest market in the world, the United States. He introduced his product at a trade show there and took orders he could not believe. He came back to Canada and found that he could not get the funds required to produce his product. I spoke to him. I went to two or three banks with him. He just could not get the thing off the ground. Consequently, his American customers got together and told him they would help him finance his production. They got together with state of New York business development people. A factory was built for him down there, and he was given all kinds of assistance. He is now manufacturing his product in the United States and exporting it back into Canada. These are the kinds of things we are concerned about. Why is it happening?

It is not necessarily happening because of taxation. In this instance there just was not enough venture capital available. That is why my constituent went to the United States. There was not enough venture capital available in this country. He found it in some other place. What can we say to this fellow?

Can we tell him not to develop his invention? We cannot do that. That is not human nature.

I will close in just a couple of minutes. If I wanted to, I could give the names of many people who, when they saw the patent laws which were proposed by this government, decided not to continue with their developments here. They decided that if they were going to develop, they would patent in the United States and export into Canada because they were concerned that they might lose their patent rights if the patent legislation which was proposed by the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs had gone ahead. Fortunately, it was withdrawn, and I commend the minister for withdrawing it because it was dangerous. However, there is a great lesson to be learned, and the lesson is this: do not put that kind of information out. When these great studies are put out, they should not be put out under an official cover stating that what is contained in those studies will become government policy. That is where all the damage is really done. The government should have said that those studies were just proposals. The thing should have been down-played.

It should have been made clear that the studies were put out for discussion by industry and by patent attorneys and so forth. Out of that something reasonable might have been the result. However, that was not done. There was a great outcry by patent attorneys and inventors generally. Finally the government realized it was under the gun, and the proposed legislation was withdrawn. It is undergoing a re-write now. I assume it will be re-introduced at some time in the near future. That particular proposal by the government caused numerous companies to hold back investment in this country. The other day we were talking about why we have no research and development in Canada. That is one of the reasons. People looked at that proposed legislation.

My own little company has three devices it hopes to patent this year. One of my directors asked me if we should proceed here or whether we should patent outside the country and come back. I said that we had no alternative, as far as I was concerned, but to proceed here because I thought the patent laws the government will finally come forward with will make some sense.

There is no one thing upon which we can put our finger which explains why companies and people are leaving Canada. It is a collection of things.

In conclusion, I think the motion put down by my colleague, the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre is a very sensible motion. I think we should support it and establish a committee of this House to look into this matter and report to the government recommending what we can do to bring a more equitable balance to this situation. I thank the House very much for its kind attention.

[Mr. Kempling.]

• (1642)

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. McRae)—The Canadian Economy—Value of dollar—Effect on Canadian entrepreneurs; the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow)—External Affairs—Bell Canada contract with Saudi Arabia; the hon. member for Surrey-WhiteRock (Mr. Friesen)—Fisheries—Arrangements with U.S. on reciprocal fishing.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—SUGGESTION COMMITTEE STUDY FEDERAL TAX STRUCTURE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie):

That a special committee of this House be established to determine whether the federal tax structure is inhibiting economic growth in Canada and promoting the export of employment opportunities to the United States.

Hon. A. C. Abbott (Minister of State (Small Business)): Mr. Speaker, I am certainly glad to be on my feet to speak about small business and its importance to the economy, even though it is the second time in a week. I am sorry that I was not here earlier to hear my hon. friends opposite discuss why we should set up a special committee of the House to find out whether our tax system inhibits growth in Canada.

Mr. Kempling: Read the motion.

Mr. Abbott: It reads:

That a special committee of this House be established to determine whether the federal tax structure is inhibiting economic growth in Canada—

I simply want to say, as I said in the budget debate and during the recent opposition day debate with regard to small business, that our tax structure, far from inhibiting economic growth, is one of the most progressive in the world and has gone a long way toward providing a stimulus in the small business area in particular.

Today I am pleased to announce the beginning of new initiatives with regard to small business, one of the most important of which is with respect to the federal sales tax. When the regulations are changed, manufacturers doing a volume of business worth $50,000 or less will not need to be licensed and will not be obliged to pay federal sales tax. This will relieve some 11,000 manufacturers of the obligation to pay sales tax, and I think it will contribute greatly to the development of the small business community in Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Abbott: In addition to that, greater flexibility will be introduced in the regulations regarding the federal sales tax, which require that a return be filed monthly on any amount, no matter how small. When the amendments are brought forward, the filing of reports will not be required more than twice a year.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Abbott: In addition, the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Goyer) has announced certain initiatives which we have worked out with his department respecting the procurement policy of the government. The government will now require all major contractors bidding on government work to provide a subcontracting plan. This will show what Canadian companies will be receiving subcontracts, and thus small business concerns in Canada will be assured benefits under government contracts.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Abbott: It might be of interest to members to know that some 41 per cent of all government business in dollar volume terms is done by small business for the federal government. This represents some 84 per cent of the 11,640 small business firms which won contracts. A further breakdown shows that these businesses won 71 per cent of the contracts let in Canada, worth a total of $585 million in the year the study was made. We are determined to ensure that this percentage occupied by small business is continued and will grow. We are certain that the monitoring procedures which will be established through the subcontracting obligation will enable us to know better how much is going to small business.

Also, we are able to confirm through the Department of Supply and Service that a faster payment scheme has been put in operation under DSS and that small business concerns doing business with the government will receive their payments faster.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Abbott: Hon. members may know that some 90 per cent of the business done with the government is done through the client departments rather than directly with DSS, so that DSS does not have all the information concerning how fast the payments are being made. But judging from the complaints we have received it is none too fast, so I think those measures go quite a way to assisting small business.

There are a number of other measures which I am able to confirm today. One of them is with regard to the important area of paperwork required by the government. As hon. members are aware, the paper burden that is imposed on businessmen, particularly small businessmen, is onerous. Statistics Canada will confirm that the merchandising survey done on a decennial basis will be modified. It is estimated that some 265,000 businesses will be relieved of this reporting requirement by 1981.

A paperwork controller has already been active, although this function has only been established in April of this year. He comes from Saskatchewan, and he has already succeeded in dealing with a number of important areas, among them the Small Businesses Loans Act under which the government has hitherto expected banks not only to complete their own borrowing documents but also to fill in government forms which, as might be expected, are complex. Now a change will be made so that banks will have the option of either using government forms or using their own forms. This is a modest but, I think, significant example of the kind of work that can be done in this area.

There are a number of other initiatives with which, I hope, hon. members will acquaint themselves. Tomorrow I will be introducing for discussion in the House a paper concerned with venture capital.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Abbott: I hope hon. members will take a good look at it because I think it represents a thorough study of the possibilities of small business investment companies, and I hope it will elicit a great deal of discussion. We hope, when this paper is tabled, it will lead to legislation which can benefit Canadian business ventures. I understand that on Thursday the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) will be making some comments on initiatives to complete the package we are offering for small business commencing today.

I have not prepared a formal speech today because I had not anticipated that I would have a chance to speak in the debate until a little while ago, but I am pleased to give this brief resume. As hon. members can understand, some of these announcements are of a technical order and they refer to a review of the departments' policies. The hon. member for High Park-Humber Valley (Mr. Jelinek) suggested that parliament was the place to make these announcements. Under the procedures of the House, we have been provided with an opportunity today to discuss them. I hope in the weeks to come that hon. members will take an opportunity to look at them and acquaint their constituents, particularly small businessmen, to make certain that full advantage is taken of these beneficial programs.

● (1652)

If one reviews the policies of this government respecting taxation, he will see that benefits have been created. Those who know, as opposed to those who simply talk—

Mr. McKenzie: I have all the quotes from the United States.

Mr. Abbott: The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie) does a good deal of research when he travels around the United States. If he paid a little more heed to the laws of Canada and some of the policies of the government, he would be better informed and more able to discuss this subject.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McKenzie: I was the first one to bring up the subject of venture capital.

Mr. Abbott: If that is the case—

Mr. McKenzie: I am glad the government adopted my suggestion. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. If the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie) wants to pass any flak to the minister, I suggest he should do it from his own seat.

Mr. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is hard to believe the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre was the originator of the concept of venture capital, or anything else.

Mr. McKenzie: Read the record.

Mr. Abbott: Perhaps he is correct when he says that he is the first member to refer to venture capital. I will take his word for it.

When hon. members have acquainted themselves with the small business initiatives and the package being offered today, I am sure they will realize, in the relatively short time the government has created and had in operation a ministry for small business, that we have been able, by co-ordinating the efforts of other departments, to provide Canada's small business community with a solid program of which we can be proud.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of State for Small Business (Mr. Abbott) has just admitted to the House and to the country the fact that the government has been a horrendous burden on small business.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Andre: That is the message we have been attempting to communicate for approximately four years. The receptiveness of government increases and its obtuseness decreases as we near an election. Now government members are reviewing entire speeches of members on this side, such as of the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie). The government is gathering together ideas in order to have something to say prior to facing the electorate.

I congratulate the hon. Minister of State for Small Business. Since these ideas came from my side of the House, I can say nothing else but that they are good ideas. I congratulate him for introducing them. Having admitted that the Government of Canada has been in fact a burden on small business in this country, and having taken a small step today toward reducing some of that burden, I call upon the minister to ask his colleagues to be open-minded enough to look at the extent to which the Canadian tax system is a burden upon individual Canadians who may or may not operate small businesses.

The motion before us is to have a committee of the House look at the extent to which the Canadian tax system in fact imposes a burden upon individual Canadians, greater than the burden imposed by the United States tax system on its citizens. Also it is to examine the degree to which that is an inhibiting factor in terms of economic growth in Canada. That is a very reasonable approach. Now that the government has admitted it is a burden upon small business, surely it is a small and reasonable step to allow an examination of the extent to which the tax system is a burden upon individuals. That is all this motion requests. It is a very reasonable and responsible motion which should be adopted.

A committee charged with that responsibility could work in a non-partisan atmosphere in order to take a good, hard look at some of the information provided by hon. members in the debate today, and other data which are available. The committee could come up with some assessment of the impact of our tax system upon individuals, where improvements should be made, and whether they should be made.

The spokesman for the New Democratic Party, the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge (Mr. Saltsman), indicated in his opening remarks that to talk about the burden of federal government taxation is somehow unpatriotic. If we mention the fact that taxes in Canada are substantially higher for all salary levels than in the United States, that is somehow unpatriotic. To state that other countries have lower tax levels is an unpatriotic act. That is absolutely absurd, because it is not Canada which imposes taxes. It is the Canadian government, this Liberal government, which has implemented the tax regime under which we are living. If anything, criticizing the government is one of the most patriotic things any Canadian can do.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Andre: We live in a superb country. We live in a country which is second to none in the world. We have enormous natural resources. No other country in the world has a similar natural resource base per capita. Only the U.S.S.R. has more in actual amount. Canada has enormous human resources. We have a highly educated population. Anyone in this country can be educated to the total extent of his or her ability. No one is prevented from that. Canada has superb universities, colleges, high schools, technical schools and elementary schools. Those institutions turn out graduates with educational standards, technical competence, and human resource potential which are second to none.

A few years ago Canada had the highest standard of living in the world. Now we place eighth or ninth. Why has that happened? Given our enormous natural resource potential, our very sophisticated and superb structure for improving our human resources through education, and the fact that at one time we had the highest standard of living in the world, why are we eighth or ninth now? What has happened? Why are other countries which have less than us able to outperform us?

Has Canada used up its natural resources? Are we running out of natural resources? Of course not. Have we experienced some natural disasters which have prevented Canada from performing as well in recent years? Of course not. Are Canadians genetically lazier or less productive than Americans, Germans and other nationalities? Is there something inferior about Canadians? Of course not.

Obviously there must be something in our society or our economy which prevents us from achieving the greatness which could be ours. We had that greatness at one time, compared to the rest of the world. It could be achieved again, and even more so. Obviously that opens up the question to what extent is that an inhibiting factor that is precluding Canadians from participating collectively in business, small, medium and large, and from performing as well as people in other countries? For the answer one has to look at the tax system—the way our Liberal government interacts with the economy, the effect of the tax system on our ability to compete, to perform, to grow, to invest and so on. This motion simply suggests that we take a look at that. Surely it is not unreasonable to suggest that a group of duly elected members of parliament examine the situation to see whether we have brought ourselves into a system which is restricting the potential of Canada and Canadians and restricting their opportunities.

● (1702)

The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre and the hon. member for Halton-Wentworth (Mr. Kempling) gave examples of Canadian companies that are investing in the United States. The hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge implied that this was unpatriotic and that we were well rid of them, neglecting to mention that he was one of those, having invested in a motel in Florida. The reality is that capital is international, Mr. Speaker, and this capital is going where the opportunity is. It is not unpatriotic.

There is the example of ATCO which is possibly the world's largest manufacturer of temporary shelter. The company is based in Calgary because the owner grew up there. It supplies temporary housing to a growing market throughout the world. Within the last two years it needed to build a new plant in order to satisfy the growing demand by companies engaged in oil exploration in the middle east. The president and chief shareholder of the company lives in Calgary, has no intention of moving away, is as loyal a Canadian as anyone in this House, but he found that building a new factory in Canada would have meant he would be unable to compete in the world market. The choice was either to get the business by building the new plant in Texas, or not get the business. It was not a choice about leaving Canada—it was get the business or not get the business. In the end, Canada lost about 300 jobs and lost enormous trade because this factory was designed to supply the international market. We ended up the losers.

It does no good to say that this was a case of an unpatriotic capitalist who was greedy for money and went to another country. It was simply a matter of doing business or not doing business. If it is greedy to be in business, then we need more greedy people so that we can get the business and put our one million unemployed back to work.

One does not need a Ph.D. in economics to discern the cause of the cost difference. It is the tax system. The hon. member for Halton-Wentworth mentioned Nu-West Development Corporation Ltd. which is the largest housebuilder in Canada. It did a comparative study on the cost of building a house in Denver versus Calgary and found there was a 30 per cent difference. A more detailed analysis of the Canadian house found that 40 per cent of the cost was as a result of the direct involvement of the government through the tax system. The difference in the cost of housing in Denver and Calgary can be totally attributed to the different taxation systems. It is not just federal taxes, of course, but also municipal and provincial.

It does the country no good to say that high taxes are a sign of civilization and that if you do not like high taxes you are a disloyal Canadian and we are better off without you. It is time for reasonable people, elected by the people of Canada, to sit down in committee and examine the effect of our taxation system on our economic development. The hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge said that our high tax system is primarily due to the fact that we have enormous transfer payments and that this is a sign of civilization. We collect the money from the rich and give it to the poor. The reality is that after 20 years of tremendous expansion in transfer payments, the difference between the rich and the poor in Canada is greater than it was. This is shown in the study conducted by the C. D. Howe Institute which indicates that, for all the great progressive modern civilizations the collection of taxes and distribution of taxes, ostensibly to reduce disparity, have actually made the disparity marginally worse. All this has put a tremendous disincentive into the system for people who would like to work for themselves—which is a natural human instinct—which only the most myopic would deny.

We have a marvellous country, Mr. Speaker. We are indeed fortunate to be citizens of this country—a fortune for which if we have not thanked God lately, we should. Realizing that simple elementary fact does not mean that it is unfair or unreasonable to look for improvements. I for one and, I think, the majority of Canadians want for this country and for ourselves, primarily, an opportunity to pursue excellence. We want a country in which excellence is rewarded, in which performance is rewarded, and in which there is a stimulus for better behaviour and better activity. We want in this country a tax system, a set of rules and regulations, an attitude which promotes adjustment, encourages excellence and development. It is living in that kind of atmosphere which is true living. That is what distinguishes man from other beasts—living in an environment where excellence and growth are encouraged. Fundamental to that is the tax system. If there is a tax system which penalizes excellence and performance, which denies reward for effort, then there is less effort.

● (1712)

There was some pooh-poohing of the notion of a brain drain to the United States. That is nonsense. There is a brain drain to the United States. We are losing people who are going there for what they perceive to be a better opportunity at this point in time. They are not going there for better security or for more room. There is more room in Canada for growth than there is in the United States. They are not going there for better social conditions, because the social conditions in the United States are not better than they are in Canada. They are better in Canada. They are going for opportunity, the opportunity for personal growth.

It is myopic in the extreme to deny that we live on the North American continent. Every year one million Canadians travel to the United States for vacation. To believe that what happens south of the border is something we need not be concerned about, that we need not make these north-south comparisons in terms of taxes and other things, is just insane. With the kind of mobility we have nowadays those comparisons will be made. Those million Canadians holidaying in the United States will make those comparisons. There will be that temptation to leave for the greater opportunity. Indeed some are leaving right now.

We cannot ignore competition from the United States in anything, whether it is lumber, manufacturing, automobiles or people. We have to realize that we are competing. But more important than that is the question of what about the individual Canadian who does his job, performs a certain function, and wants to stay here and will stay here. But when he realizes at the end of the year, when he sees what he has left to keep for himself, he says the society in the United States values the kind of service he provides more than Canada does. What does that do for his sense of nationality and patriotism? So it is not just the competition of the United States, Mr. Speaker, it is the fact that we should understand and appreciate our own citizens and reward them and appreciate their efforts, and appreciate those who perform as much as other countries appreciate their citizens.

Mr. Cliff McIsaac (Battleford-Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, the motion put forward today by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie) seeks to establish a special committee of this House, conveniently ignoring the fact that we have been, you might say, in a special committee debating the budget for the last several days and well could be for further days to come. The motion seeks to establish a special committee to determine whether the federal tax structure is inhibiting economic growth in Canada and promoting the export of employment opportunities to the United States.

I suggest the motion implies that Canadian economic growth is losing out to the Americans. In the first place that assertion has not been proven by the hon. member himself in his rather inconclusive suggestions and remarks put forward, or by any other speaker from the opposition benches. Secondly, there is the assumption in his motion that tax structures in the United States are considerably more advantageous and therefore more attractive to both business and workers in the United States of America.

The hon. member tried to tell us in his introductory remarks that medical care and hospitalization, which costs a good deal in this country to provide and which no group of Canadians and no political party wants to be without, are available in the U.S. at considerably less cost.

His motion conveniently ignores the basic differences in the nature and the scale of the economies of both countries. He seeks to compare only the tax structure. He does not look at the fact, for example, the state of New York in the eastern U.S.A. was roughly equivalent a few years ago to the total Canadian population. For another example, one can cite the state of California on the west side of the United States where there is a population tenfold that of Canada. My hon. friend seeks to compare the two countries without any recognition of this basic fact.

I suggest the motion is a typical Conservative effort, the kind of thing we have heard from members opposite for many months now to downgrade the country and promote the concept they have worked at practically since the beginning of this session on January 23. At that time the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) wound up his first question in the House on January 23 like this:

> I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. This is the first day of parliament in 1978, a year which looks like it will become known as the year the country closes down.

That has been the kind of rhetoric and negativism that we have heard for a considerable period of time from members opposite.

My hon. friend is concerned about the civil servants. He has made his speeches here and elsewhere concerning the civil servants of this country. We could go into that topic—if he chooses! I suggest we could leave that one until later. I could perhaps comment on that suggestion of his later on as well.

I want to suggest that the budget of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) of April 10 is and represents the kind of responsible change in tax structure that this country needs. Perhaps we need more of it, that is true, but hon. members opposite have so far not advanced any additional measures of their own, other than an income tax reduction to further add to the existing deficit about which they continue to express some considerable concern.

The budget of April 10 contained a number of specific measures to deal with economic growth, to promote greater short-term growth, at the same time looking at some of the long-term problems as well. I suggest to my hon. friends opposite that rather than embark on a study of United States tax structures they would be best advised to adopt these measures put forward by the Minister of Finance in his budget just as quickly as possible, and put forward some of their own specific suggestions as well while they are at it. Instead, they have chosen to delay the budget and prolong the debate.

In the course of that they have chosen a new route for the Conservatives. It is not surprising really because any route is a good route for them. They have chosen to side with the PQ government of Quebec, judging by press and media reports. They have chosen not to debate the budget and the changes put forward, but rather to engage in the phony issue at this point in time of provincial rights. This is an issue which was manufactured and put together by the Lévesque government in Quebec whose sole purpose in existing as a government is to dismember the country, and we have our friends opposite siding with that government.

One can forgive provincial political parties in Quebec for standing up with the Lévesque government on the question of provincial rights. It has long been part of the Canadian political tradition to blast Ottawa, to blast the federal government at almost the drop of a hat, and to oppose federal initiatives, many of which, to varying degrees, could be said to intrude or infringe in some manner on provincial fields of responsibility. That certainly is not new. The Tory opposition fell into that trap. They condemn separatism in one speech in one part of the country, and then slide in others to make Parizeau and Lévesque look more or less like Canadian heroes in this tax debate. I make this point to indicate the insincerity of the motion today to come to grips with the federal tax structure.

● (1722)

The April 10 budget of the Minister of Finance contained a move to reduce the provincial sales tax all across the country. It was a good move, one that deserves the support of all parties in this House. That move obtained the support of nine provinces in a joint effort to come to grips with economic problems in this country. I say again that the minister deserves the full support of the House for a very timely initiative on his part. Incidentally, that move was recommended by many economists and economic advisers of a wide variety of political stripes.

I suggest to hon. members opposite that Canadians want more action of the kind contained in the Minister of Finance's budget. Western Canadians in particular prefer action to the kind of rhetoric we have heard today from the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie).

Canadians from one coast to another are not interested in any more of the kind of grandstanding we are hearing today, that we have heard outside the House and in previous debates in the House from the official opposition. Putting forward a suggestion to establish a parliamentary committee to study American tax policy is another red herring to propagate the supposed tax advantages of the United States.

I suggest to the hon. member who moved the motion that western Canadians welcomed the changes in the April 10 budget. Indeed, the thrust of that budget was almost entirely directed to the concerns of the industrial development and the concerns of western Canada. There are about six concerns I would like to touch on very briefly as being indicative of the kind of change and policy with which we should be, and indeed the government is, proceeding.

First, there is the provision to increase the tax write-off for research and development, a special allowance to permit a deducting from taxable income of 50 per cent of the costs of increases in research and development activity. That will benefit not only the small implement manufacturers and other farm oriented types of manufacturing activity going on in western Canada, but other industrial activity there as well.

The cost of machinery, equipment and other facilities for enhanced capital recovery systems becomes eligible to earn a depletion allowance of $1 for every $2 spent, an increase from the previous $1 for every $3. That move is designed to encourage oil and gas exploration in Canada, Saskatchewan and Alberta primarily.

Another move is the increased limit on the deduction on the depletion earned on certain expenditures on non-conventional oil projects, such as the heavy oil and tar sands projects. It is increased to 50 per cent of total profit. That incentive is designed to bring about development of those programs and large bodies of primarily undeveloped sources of energy in western Canada.

Fourth, the tax-free rollover provisions apply to incorporated family farms. That goes along with the provision which has been there for some time for the unincorporated family farm. Fifth, plants established to upgrade heavy oil will be deemed to be manufacturing and processing facilities. Once again, it will give those plants a better tax advantage and tax breaks.

The final point of particular interest in western Canada is that an additional capital cost allowance will be provided on depreciable railway system assets acquired by railways before 1983. This comes at a time when the government is putting up $175 million this year, with the promise of more money to come, to improve and upgrade not only the rail network but the running stock and other stock, as well as spending associated with rebuilding and upgrading the rail network which is so vital not only to agriculture but to other industries in western Canada. I say again that the April 10 budget certainly has been designed for western Canada. It is one that should be adopted and moved forward.

I want to take a few moments to deal with the question of capital gains tax and the provision to allow the tax-free rollover provision to be extended from the individually owned farm to the incorporated family farm. Someone said earlier today that there are probably more of those farms set up in western Canada than anywhere else.

That move has been endorsed by practically all members of all parties in the House. It will be welcomed by all members. It has certainly been promoted and pushed for by the Liberal party in western Canada, particularly in Saskatchewan and by many provincial constituency associations. I know it has also been sought by farm organizations, members opposite, and others.

It is another modification of the capital gains provisions which came into effect in 1971 at the time of the abolition of estate taxes and a number of other major changes to the income tax structure.

While I congratulate the minister and his cabinet colleagues for this particular change, I would like to see them go further in terms of modifying the capital gains tax structure. For example, to continue the 1971 valuation for land and other business assets such as buildings and facilities is not realistic in terms of the level of inflation we have had since 1971.

Over the past several years, most tax rates such as income tax and others have been indexed. Indeed, most government spending programs have been indexed. I think specifically of old age pensions, family allowances and veterans pensions. I should say that I concur in the fact that we should continue to index veterans pensions and old age pensions. I am not so sure about family allowances and some of the other programs.

If we are going to pursue indexing and adopting that principle, we should do something about the fact that farm land values across this country, in the western provinces in particular, have increased dramatically since 1971, particularly as the result of inflation. Not all of the increase is due to inflation. The temporary $5 wheat and the strong market demand were certainly a factor in pushing up land values. The depreciation of the dollar is a major factor in that upward change in land values.

The Canadian tax structure in so far as it relates to capital gains should be changed so that the taxpayer is not paying for illusory inflationary gains. Farmers and small businesses in particular will welcome the moves announced in this debate this afternoon by the Minister of State (Small Business) (Mr. Abbott) which will facilitate the operating of their businesses, be it farming or some other business.

● (1732)

I think there should be further relaxation of the provision with respect to the capital gains tax. I acknowledge the fact that last year amendments were introduced and passed allowing people who sold their land or businesses to incur no capital gains tax when the funds realized from the sale were reinvested in a similar business or purchase. That was a good move and one which will go a considerable distance, but I believe it could be extended still further.

Perhaps the idea of a once in a lifetime exemption from capital gains tax is one which we might look at. If a farmer wishes to sell his farm and take up another business, possibly within his own local community, I think he should be permitted to do so. If the tax is not remitted he should be given several years, anyway, in which to make payment. The proposal in the report of the Bryce commission that we should get out of the capital gains tax entirely might be worth considering, at least for a period, so as to stimulate entrepreneurship. I know the report did not go into much detail with regard to the inequalities such a move would create but I believe this whole complex subject of the capital gains tax and the effect it may be having on entrepreneurship and investment should be examined more closely.

I am sure that setting up a parliamentary committee as suggested by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre is not the place to begin. A committee is not the best forum in which to consider complex matters involving the tax structure. It is true there are a few accountants on both sides of the House but basically we are not in a position as members to inquire into specific details of tax law and suggest changes in such a complex piece of legislation as the Income Tax Act. This should not, of course, prevent our putting forward concepts and proposals embodying the changes we would like to see.

In conclusion may I say that it is long past the time when members of the official opposition should begin to turn their attention to restoring confidence in the country and promoting Canada for what it is, one of the great world democracies and an example of how people from different backgrounds and with different histories can live and work together. I submit that economic growth has been inhibited to a much greater degree by the attitude of members opposite, and others like them, than by any tax structure or bureaucratic system. I am not too optimistic that this will happen but I should like to hope that, as a result of this debate, members opposite will change their tune, become more optimistic about opportunities which still exist in Canada and demonstrate their pride in their country.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, it is fortunate that the luck of the draw allows me to follow the hon. member for Battleford-Kindersley (Mr. McIsaac). It is evident from the attention the House gave him that we recognize the soundness of his thinking. It was one of the rare occasions I have witnessed in the last few years upon which a member on the government side has come out with a positive and constructive suggestion.

He had to spoil his speech, of course, as any supporter of the government is obliged to do, by praising the budget of April 10. Automatic support of this kind is one of the reasons the Liberal party is disappearing in Western Canada. Young Liberal MLAs in Saskatchewan leave their party, an old, traditional party in the province which for a long time dominated the political history of Saskatchewan, giving as their reason the fact that the party supported whatever the federal Liberal party was doing in Ottawa in spite of the fact that what the federal Liberal party has done to this country in the last ten years has probably made them the champions when it comes to taking a strong country with so much potential and putting the brakes on all the forces which enable it to go ahead.

I prefer to deal with the more positive aspects of the hon. member's speech. He spoke about the case for changes in the capital gains tax. He referred sympathetically to the proposal in the Bryce report. Mr. Speaker, this is the first occasion on which I have heard a member of the Liberal party say a good word about that royal commission. We on this side have been telling the government for a long time—and I have been in a good position to do so since I myself voted in favour of the capital gains tax—that this question should be reviewed as a matter of necessity. It is a brake on our growth at the present time.

If the hon. member for Battleford-Kindersley is sincere, that is why he should support the motion now before the House. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) wants us now to work on economic matters, get away from the fooling around we have been doing in the House for the last ten years and take this opportunity of a year's delay before the election to do some sound work such as we have not done for ten years. I think the hon. member would agree that since parliament is doing nothing about this suggestion of changing the capital gains tax as a result of the apparent opposition of the government, it would be wise for him to show his sincerity as a backbencher by voting for this motion. Let parliament have a chance to look at the tax legislation, get evidence from people who know something about it and then recommend ways in which we believe it could be improved.

The hon. member suggested that we in the opposition have not been coming forward with constructive proposals. All I can say is that he has not been reading Hansard very carefully. Idea after idea has been put forward from this side of the House to make our country stronger and better. I propose to talk about one of them today.

Last fall, when the mini-budget was brought forward, I knew the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) was in trouble. He is a well liked, ambitious, hard working young member who was suddenly pushed into the job of Minister of Finance knowing full well that every minister going back to the days of Walter Harris 30 years ago had failed in this job. It was my hope, since he appreciates the value of common sense, that he would have realized that the biggest load on the back of our nation, one which retarded our growth more than anything else and prevented the achievement of our national objectives, is the taxation system developed in the last 40 years. Ever since the war it has been clear that this restrictive tax system has been the heaviest load on all classes of people, rich and poor, in this country.

● (1742)

In my day I have seen young men get lucky breaks. When the oil boom first started in Alberta in 1947 and some people made a few dollars, they realized that because of our tax system they would have to take their money they had earned in the early stages when small companies were able to operate to the United States, form an American company with that money and then come back into Canada to invest it under American tax law. That was not because they were disloyal to this country. It was because, as the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) pointed out, there was no choice. If you want to go into business, you have to be able to survive. The House has avoided studying this tax system of ours ever since I have been here. On more than one occasion I have criticized heavily the people in the Department of Finance who have systematically followed a mythology of taxation which does not stand up to quantitative analysis.

I am going to give an example of what I am going to propose as a positive suggestion. I would like at least to see a select committee talk about the concept of potential budgeting. I spoke about this in the mini budget debate. The minister was very interested; he came over to me to talk to me about it. He said he liked that kind of idea. Later the parliamentary secretary asked me if I would put it into writing, so I wrote a positive, constructive letter to the Minister of Finance. I have a copy of it with me here. I suggested how this could be done and gave more details than I had given in my speech. I finally received a letter from the minister stating, in effect, that the idea was very sound but that it created a new principle, a new precedent. The minister said that I was asking the government to give individuals in Canada the same equity and fairness in the tax system which business gets, and he said the government could not do that because it would erode the tax base. It is not a matter of just reducing the amount of taxes owing to the government; it is a matter of the growth of the country.

For example, a French-Canadian farmer spent $85,000 over a 20-year period to develop a new technique for making every part of an implement go to the same depth in the ground. His name was Jerome Bechard. He happened to live in my constituency. The tax system would not allow him to take one cent of deduction off his farm income for the sum of close to $85,000 spent in developing a new technique for better cultivation, which would have meant many hundreds of millions of dollars each year for the farmers of the west and to any farmer who had the chance of using this big machinery in any part of the United States or Canada.

Last year an American entrepreneur took up this particular invention, which was patented and put into production, and now this French-Canadian farmer is allowed to take all his receipts for the last 20 years and deduct them from the income he makes from the small royalty he gets from the utilization of this invention of his. Thank God he waited and lived long enough to be able to find an opportunity under the tax law to deduct the huge expenses he put into developing his technology.

Another example of potential budgeting can be seen in the fact that we have to convert our country quickly from the utilization of energy from non-renewable resources. The state of the art is such that there are only a dozen or so of these technologies which come close to the economies which are necessary to make them viable. In my speech last November I put forward to the Minister of Finance, in the hope that I could help him, the suggestion that since these things were not presently being made in Canada, it would cost his budgeting nothing to say that, if any person goes ahead and tries these things out on an experimental basis, that individual should be allowed the same exemptions under the tax law that the hon. member for Battleford-Kindersley mentioned: that if any person does research, he should be allowed to write the expense off his income.

The research I am talking about is not the fundamental research. That is already done. Our National Research Council has developed an upright windmill in the wind tunnel here in Ottawa. It has been written about all over the world, but no single company mass produces this windmill for sale to the public even with an 80 per cent write-off for research work. It has to be the individual who takes it on. If civil servant scientists can make it work, I am sure that two thirds of our farmers can make it work. It runs soundly. If you put an induction motor on the bottom of it, you can pump this power into the power grids and sell your excess power to the power grids; and when the wind is not blowing, you can draw your power back from the power grids. It has been done for years in Wisconsin.

Last October the province of Saskatchewan announced its willingness to do it, but we still do not have that windmill's introduction because of the tax law. I think it is a fairly reasonable idea. It is just as reasonable as the change in the capital gains tax which many hon. members on this side have mentioned and which now has the support of the hon. member for Battleford-Kindersley. It is news when a backbencher of the government supports a royal commission.

All the pundits say that no one dares to support the latest royal commission report because it is pro-business. One of the mythologies of Canadian politics is that to be "with it" you must be anti-business. That has been the curse of both the United States and Canada for the last 30 years. Most people assume a "rip-off" attitude toward business. God knows that business needs to be kicked around, but we cannot get along without it. I suggest that there is a good case to be made, considering all the ideas which have been put forward in this House. We are not getting publicity for them because it is not news to make a constructive suggestion, but let us get our suggestions into a select committee, and just maybe, in its desperation of having to face the people, the government might consider some tax changes.

Our tax system has held this country back. We have had double taxation on corporate income for all the years I have been around here, and long before that. A royal commission now recommends that we stop that double taxation. The Carter royal commission recommended it in 1969 and 1970, but no action was taken. A royal commission recommends it in 1978, and, judging by the sounds we hear from the government benches, we know what will happen to that recommendation.

The government does not want to be caught going into an election ending double taxation on business. Double taxation occurs when a corporation is taxed at the rate of 45 per cent to 50 per cent and then the fellow who has invested and who owns the corporation is also taxed. If one royal commission recommended in 1970 that we get rid of double taxation and now another royal commission recommends it, the same thing will happen as happened in the case of the last four royal commissions on transportation. The government gets busy immediately and hides the whole report on transportation. We have before us now the Hall Commission report. The government does everything to delay it, hoping to get by the election. That is what the budget was for. The deduction of sales tax for six months was designed to get the government by the election, but there is not to be an election. When the six months is up, their tail will be in the fire and the fat will really flow.

[Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain).]

• (1752)

I suggest that if the Prime Minister is honest and wants parliament to go to work, then let us set up this select committee. I am sure that among the laymen and the few accountants on this side and among the few accountants on the government side there can be found some who could put forward some proposals, because certainly the Department of Finance ran out of ideas 30 years ago after the white paper in 1946.

As for the remarks of the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge (Mr. Saltsman), let me say that it is clear that here is a man preaching for the call. He wants to join Crowfoot on the government benches. The crow from Waterloo-Cambridge hopes that the Prime Minister will hear the call of the wild and answer his appeal.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That is the ultimate insult.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): The hon. member is right, it is the ultimate insult.

When I heard the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge devote his whole attack to the simple idea of establishing a select committee to examine the tax law and say it was unpatriotic, that we should stay in Canada with the high taxes, and that they support the Liberal government because of their high taxes and because they are a good government, I knew that that man was preaching for the call and has been preaching for the call for a long time. He must be very jealous of the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) for having made it across the way. But what a price he had to pay! Now he has to come along and attack the poor old Conservatives.

We have not been in power since 1963 because the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has steadily led his party in support of the government. He helped defeat the government of the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) in 1963. He helped to keep in power the minority government under Pearson, and he helped to keep in power the minority government as well as the full majority under the present Prime Minister. Is that party doing its duty of pointing out the weaknesses in the government so that we get a better government? No, sir; their main financial spokesman attacked the official opposition. I am just warning him. David Lewis destroyed the NDP in 1974. He went up and down this country attacking the Conservatives because he said their 90 days of price and wage controls would ruin the country. He frightened the labouring man in the cities into voting Liberal, and the NDP disappeared out of our cities.

Now we have another member of the NDP wanting to repeat what David Lewis did. You cannot frighten people all the time. When I was a kid, the first time I was on a farm I noticed horses coming up to the water trough. If you jumped out of the pump house and yelled "boo", they all ran. After a while, the horses stopped paying attention to it and they came to the water trough in spite of the shouting and yelling. I want to remind the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge that his job here is to take each subject as it comes up and look at arguments for or against it. All he did was to attack the Conservatives and make charges that are as silly as the charges made by the hon. member for Battleford-Kindersley (Mr. McIsaac). We have the right to stand for a certain federal system with the right of the province to tax without being attacked by the government in Ottawa. He stands up and says we support the PQ. How believable is that type of remark?

If the government wants to show that it will make parliament work next year, then let us set up this committee and see what we can do. Let us end this silly political science type of yelling at each other which we heard in one or two disgraceful speeches today. This is a good opportunity for serious minded members of the government to show their Prime Minister that they would like this parliament to work. Maybe we can produce some ideas that will improve this tax system. I repeat again and again that our tax system is not perfect. Our tax system must be competitive with the tax system in every other country, and it is not competitive with other countries at present. It is time to compare our tax system with that of our main opponent in business, namely the United States. Let us see if we cannot produce one that will compete, that will allow capital to flow into this country and allow Canadians as individuals to own this country instead of the large U.S. companies, the way it is now.

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be able to participate in this debate on the motion presented by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie), which reads:

That a special committee of this House be established to determine whether the federal tax structure is inhibiting economic growth in Canada and promoting the export of employment opportunities to the United States.

I am particularly honoured to be able to speak on this motion following the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton), a gentleman who has been in the House for better than 20 years and provided valuable service, not only to the House but to the country. I cannot help but stand here in admiration to the kind of service he has given to the House through the years, having provided leadership in the cabinet of a former prime minister, and now continually providing constructive and fertile ideas to the government party, even to the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien), elaborating on those ideas in order to provide wholesome leadership to our country, and then seeing those ideas turned aside. I admire him for continually coming forward with more ideas to help the country in spite of seeing them taken over by the government. It is no small measure of the man that he refuses to give in to discouragement. It would be natural for an opposition member who has served in opposition for the number of years that this member has served to give way to discouragement. As I say, it is a tribute to this man that he has not given over to that kind of discouragement but that he continues to provide new and vibrant ideas.

I see it is almost six o'clock, Mr. Speaker; may I call it six o'clock?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until 8 p.m. tonight.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Prior to the dinner hour, the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Friesen) had the floor. He has 17 minutes remaining.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, it will seem like seven minutes. Prior to the dinner hour, I was complimenting the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain on his contributions not only to the debates in the House of Commons, but also for the ideas he has presented in his service to the country.

I wish I could say the same thing about the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge (Mr. Saltsman). Far be it for me to be partisan in any debate here, but we are debating an opposition motion. The hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge is a member of an opposition party, but his entire speech was devoted to attacking another opposition party. I could not help but conclude that he was like a homing pigeon. No matter how far afield they fly, when the distress signal goes out, they all come home to roost and are all together in the same nest. Just a few weeks ago the New Democratic polls were down by 3 per cent. Obviously he realizes the threat is from the Conservative party rather than the government party, so his duty is to attack the real enemy.

The hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge referred to the fact that the kind of debate we are involved in today supports the rich to the disadvantage of the poor. I understand a news release came out today concerning Mr. Lewis, the former leader of his party, who was granted an $80,000 donation from the Canada Council to write his memoirs. He is one of these labour lawyers who does not charge the lowest fees.

Mr. Huntington: A millionaire lawyer.

Mr. Friesen: Yes, a millionaire labour lawyer. He needs that $80,000 in order to make ends meet, this poor man from the NDP. He has already received this $80,000 grant, but he has not written his book. He is an example of the poor people the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge was attempting to support today. We in the province of British Columbia have had a three-year reminder of what members of the NDP think of poor people. They really hate poverty. As soon as they are elected to office, they double their salaries.

Mr. Huntington: They purchase $2,000 desks.

Mr. Friesen: That is correct. The hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge indicated that we are not talking about a brain drain when we talk about the talent which is going from Canada to the United States. He indicated that it is a "banality drain" rather than a brain drain. A few minutes after that, I learned that he is one of the people who has an investment in a hotel in Florida. I suppose he ought to recognize banality when he sees it. He should be careful about using such terms in the House. Apparently he has a limited view of human nature.

I represent a business community in my riding which has worked hard to keep its end of the economy going. Yet in a 12-month period 66 businesses went out of operation. I asked the local chamber of commerce in Surrey to do a count of those businesses which had gone out of business, gone bankrupt, closed their resources, tightened them up, moved to another province or moved to the United States. For one reason or another, 66 companies representing 2,500 jobs went out of business in a 12-month period.

● (2012)

Let us assume some were mismanaged and that some may have been undercapitalized, but surely not all 66. We have to look for some other reasons. The hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge said it was a "banality drain" if they go to the United States, but maybe it is a survival drain. Maybe these people want to keep their lives, their bodies, their souls together.

I know a young lady just out of university with a talent for designing clothes. She is specializing in designing tennis wear for ladies. She is very creative and loves this business. She started operation in Surrey but has found it very difficult, not because she does not have the expertise or the creativity, but because of tax, regulations and other strangleholds by the government. Out of curiosity she went to the United States and there found the freedom she wanted to expand her business. This is a brain drain rather than a move by some tired businessman who wants to get rich quickly. This is a young person who is creative and has imagination. She wants the freedom of spirit to work with her talents, but she finds the atmosphere in Canada is just too stifling.

The hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge referred to the number of doctors moving to the United States, and assumed that all doctors who move there to practise medicine are doing so exclusively in order to earn more money. I suggest these are creative people, and naturally they want to earn as much as possible, as does everyone else. But that is not the only reason they are moving. As a matter of fact, a doctor acquaintance of mine who is now practising in Calgary plans to move to Texas. He is not planning to move so he can earn more money but rather because the atmosphere and the incentive in the United States for his profession are so much better.

The Minister of State (Small Business) (Mr. Abbott) made some grand announcements today regarding the freedom the small business community will experience as a result of his changes in policy. He wanted us all to join in singing "Hail the Conquering Hero" because he had brought in some new measures. The Minister of Finance suggests that is what we should be doing right now. Of course, I am sure he will lead us in that singing. This is much like thanking someone who stops hitting you on the head. This government has instituted a lot of policies that have been oppressive and a blow to businessmen. The minister now says the government is going to take away those oppressive regulations and that we should thank him for doing so. I do not know that we are in a mood for that.

[Mr. Friesen.]

I talked to one of the local businessmen in Surrey this evening about this motion. He gave me the following information regarding differences in taxation policy between Canada and the United States. He said that in Canada there is a small business deduction at the low rate of tax on up to $150,000 a year, cumulative to $750,000. That rate is 25 per cent, but it is assessed on all associated companies. If you go to the United States you will find the same kind of tax, but the tax there is on each $200,000 in a year at the rate of 25 per cent up to $50,000. That seems to be more, but when you realize that it is on up to $200,000 for each company, and the tax is not associated, you will find the tax burden is considerably less in the United States than in Canada, and there is no cumulative clause in that tax policy.

In this country we find that for manufacturers there is a 5 per cent tax credit on capital equipment. This is helpful. It can accrue to $5,000 and represents a deduction from tax payable. In the United States the tax credit is 10 per cent or 12 per cent, plus depreciation, and they are considering increasing it to 17 per cent. Perhaps some will think that is not an incentive for businesses to move from Canada to the United States. Certainly it is not responsible for a brain drain but rather has caused a survival drain. Business people like to stay alive and when they find that kind of difference in taxation policy on small businesses between Canada and the United States they move to where they can survive.

Some time ago this same businessman sent me some of his suggestions. Among other things, he said there ought to be some relief for municipalities from federal government taxation. We all know that the federal and provincial governments have first right to taxation powers and the municipalities get what is left over. For that reason the municipalities get what is left over. For that reason the municipalities use whatever source they can find, such as a tax on machinery. That may be all right when the machinery is operating at 100 per cent capacity, but when there is an economic slowdown, such as we are facing today with machinery shut down for 20 per cent, 30 per cent or 40 per cent of the time, while the tax carries on, this becomes very oppressive and only the sharpest of business people can remain in operation.

This businessman had another observation which I think is worth presenting to members of the House. It is one of those creative ideas the Minister of Finance may want to entertain. Since he likes to adopt those ideas presented by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain, perhaps this is an idea he would like to accept. My business friend in Surrey suggests this:

> My proposal would be to charge no duty as such at all. Instead each country would be rated by labour standards. The lower the standard, the higher the surcharge. On top of this surcharge would be a direct tax. This tax would be applicable to Canadian products as well as imported.

This type of taxing arrangement, if the details are worked out right, should be designed to give:

A. Canadian industry the protection it needs from low-wage areas.

B. Foreign high-wage countries a better opportunity to compete in Canada with other foreign countries.

C. Low-wage countries a better chance to obtain a higher standard, because it will become advantageous to get classified in a higher wage category to lower their surcharge.

We are losing our markets to low-wage countries or third world countries around the world. This does not mean that the people we want to help are getting the benefit of those exports to our country. We may be buying shoes from Korea but the people who are making the money are the industrialists, the factory owners in that country; the benefits do not necessarily filter down to the working people.

What my constituent suggests is that if we set up a labour code for all countries of the world, especially applicable to third world countries, perhaps there would be some kind of incentive to those countries to upgrade their working standards, wage standards and conditions in their factories, and pass on the profits from their products to the workers. This idea represents some insight into human nature.

Everyone wants to make as much money as possible. We believe in the incentive system, but human nature is such that too often those who have money get more at the expense of those who are defenceless, particularly the masses in those third world countries. The suggestion this gentleman makes is that we provide a kind of incentive in our country through our import policies in order to encourage manufacturers, industrialists and investors in those third world countries to improve living standards for their workers which would in turn enhance their opportunity to export their products to Canada. If we do not provide that prod, it is not likely that they will do it on their own initiative.

● (2022)

As I said earlier, what we need is a proper understanding of human nature. Business people have great incentive, great inventiveness and they want to be rewarded for their work. There is nothing wrong with that but there are many people in this country who regard "profit" as a dirty word. Unconscionable profit, illicit profit, is dirty, but hard won profit is a compliment to the ingenuity, foresight and creativity of our people.

I want to compliment the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre on putting this motion before the House and bringing to our attention the very serious investment climate which is draining productivity from our country to the United States and taking manpower and personnel south of the border.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the motion now before us gives us an opportunity to outline the comparative performances of the Canadian and American economies as well as our fiscal structures. I welcome this opportunity and I hope that today's discussion will leave us with a better appreciation of the matter. The growing economic closeness with the United States has been of concern to all successive ministers of finance since confederation. This is an important issue, because of the sizes and proximity of our two nations, the nature of our resources and respective attitudes, and also the free flow of capitals, goods and services across our common border.

Our two countries are interdependent. Clearly, none of my predecessors has been free to take any decision of economic policy without prior scrutiny of the impact on that economic closeness. For some people, that kind of interdependence is an unhappy or indeed untolerable situation. Such an attitude in my view is neither useful nor realistic. There is no way our two countries can be separated geographically. What we can do, is maintain the largest possible degree of freedom of action, and make the best possible use of the advantages in that huge market down south.

I would like to expand today on the comparative economic performances of our two countries during the last few years. Such differences as may be are the best pointers to our accomplishments and shortcomings in the last few years.

I will continue by dealing with certain aspects of our respective tax burdens. The economic growth curves of Canada and the United States have diverged in the last few years as almost never before. This has generally been in our favour and comes from the fact that most of the policy decisions taken in Canada were good ones. As world oil prices quadrupled in 1973 and 1974, we took advantage of our energy reserves to compensate for higher domestic oil prices. We took action to protect Canadians against inflation and the impact of a world recession. We maintained incomes and production in Canada more successully than they did in the United States. Contrary to what happened in all other industrialized countries of the world, we never had a decline in the gross national product. Real income of Canadians has continued to grow and employment has risen steadily.

Economic recovery in the U.S. was slow in coming, and it is because it was under way that for two years the rate of economic growth in that country was faster than here. That situation came as a result of the fact that the U.S. was coming out of a recession to cover lost ground. Canadian production nevertheless went up by 21 per cent last year over 1972, whereas in the United States it increased only 14 per cent over the same period. Employment in Canada over the past five years increased by 16.1 per cent, compared to 10.8 per cent in the U.S. Real disposable income per capital has risen 24.7 per cent in Canada since 1972. South of the border, it increased only by 11.8 per cent, less than half, Mr. Speaker.

On the negative side, we of course experienced a set-back in terms of costs and prices as compared to the United States. We have been concerned with this situation for several years. Our poor performance relative to the Americans is largely responsible for our present economic problems. The economic gap between our two countries was bound to have general repercussions. It was bound, sooner or later, to lead to appreciable increases in unemployment.

As the increases in manpower unit costs were larger here than in the U.S., there were no buyers, both here and elsewhere, for a number of our products. We had to devise a way to rectify the situation and we of course implemented the prices and income control program whose main objective was to restore our competitive position. In 1975, the unit cost for labour in the manufacturing sector increased by 11.8 per cent in Canada as compared with 6 per cent in the United States, which means a margin of 5.8 per cent. That gap was gradually reduced to 5.1 per cent in 1976 and 1.8 per cent in 1977. I have repeatedly pointed out the advantage for Canadian trade and our balance of payment of the recent evolution in the rate of the Canadian dollar. Its depreciation is the answer of the market to our imbalance. It has helped restore our balance in terms of foreign trade. If we take into account the effect of the depreciation on the unit cost for labour, the latter in fact decreased last year.

As I have explained several times already, we must not bank exclusively on our floating dollar to pull us out of the whirlpool of inflation in which we were caught. To keep the gains we have registered, we must make sure there is also a decrease in the underlying rate of prices and costs increases. We have not yet restored ourselves to the strong international position that was ours in the early '70s. Unless we manage to reduce progressively the rate of increase in our costs, nothing can prevent another inflation spiral or yet another serious imbalance in our balance of payments and new depreciation of the Canadian dollar.

[English]

We have before us today a motion which implies that the tax system is behind all our problems. The motion suggests that taxes are holding down growth in Canada and forcing entrepreneurs into the United States where presumably they will get better treatment. Of course, tax levels are very important in business decisions—decisions about location of production, about expansion of production and about the balance between capital investment and employment of labour.

In Canada more than half of all revenues are collected by provincial and local governments. To a far greater degree than in the United States the second level of government shares a responsibility to ensure that the total burden of taxation is competitive on an international basis. I am glad to say that the provinces are keenly aware of this.

The communiqué from the first ministers' conference in February committed both levels of government to a tax policy that will establish our tax system in line with those of other trading nations. We have made a careful calculation of over-all tax levels in Canada and the United States. We have made specific comparisons of personal income taxes and corporate income taxes in the two countries. It is possible, of course, to find specific states where some extraordinary tax incentives are offered to industries if they locate there. For federal and provincial governments in this country to try to match every one of these incentives would be to sell out our tax system. We should not be in the business of creating tax havens in Canada. We should be levying a fair burden of taxes on corporations and individuals and delivering needed and effective government services to both groups in return. In fact, our comparisons of average tax burdens between Canada and the U.S.A. show that Canada is competitive.

• (2032)

Let me outline our main conclusions. First, over-all burdens. Despite the fact that Canadians enjoy substantially more government services than Americans, such as universal medical care, family allowances and higher old age security payments, the total level of taxation as a percentage of total output in the economy is only slightly higher in Canada. In 1977 we estimate taxes as a percentage of the g.n.p. were 32.7 per cent in Canada and 30.8 per cent in the U.S. The difference was 1.9 per cent. The difference was slightly smaller than in earlier years of the 1970s. This level of taxation ranks both Canada and the U.S. in the middle among industrialized countries.

I might note that the mix of tax revenues is quite different between Canada and the U.S. While corporation taxes are about the same in relation to total, personal income taxes and indirect taxes are relatively more important in our tax structure while social security taxes are much higher in the United States.

I should say a word about indirect taxes; that is, the federal sales tax and customs duties. I want to make it clear that the federal sales tax, which is applied at the manufacturers' level, is not charged on goods which are exported from this country. In other words, our system favours those industries which must compete internationally. This is very important. For example, if the federal sales tax were to be replaced by an increase in corporate income tax, about 15 percentage points would be added to the rate of tax on corporate profits. Clearly, the mix of Canadian taxes is favourable to the operation of business in our open economy.

As I said, the corporate income taxes take up about the same proportion of total taxes in Canada as the U.S.; the percentages are 12.3 for Canada and 11.5 for the U.S. I will come back to that in a moment.

A comparison of taxes on individuals in Canada and the United States should include social security taxes as well as income taxes. In 1977, average tax rates in Canada for these two taxes together totalled 15.8 per cent of personal income. For years these burdens have been very nearly identical on average in the countries.

I should point out that here again the structure of the system differs significantly in the two countries. Unlike Canada, the U.S. assesses tax on aggregate family income. It does not tax government transfers or pensions. It uses different rate structures for different family types, and it does not index its tax structure. The U.S. provides more itemized deductions but fewer exemptions. The Canadian system therefore tends to be fairer since exemptions are automatically available to all taxpayers, while deductions are based on particular expenses which tend to be larger at higher income ranges. A further factor is that our dividend tax credit partly integrates personal and corporate taxes which, to some degree, eliminates double taxation on corporate income. The credit has the effect of refunding to shareholders part of the taxes already paid at the corporate level. No such mechanism exists in the U.S.

Furthermore, Canadian taxes on family income tend to be more progressive; that is, they are relatively lower at the bottom end of the income scale and higher at the top. Our system is also more favourable to families with children, and it is more favourable to families where more than one member is employed.

Let me turn to corporation income taxes. On balance, Canadian corporation income tax rates are now substantially lower than the same tax rates in the United States. In 1977, federal and provincial corporation income taxes as a percentage of corporation book profits totalled 35.2 per cent in Canada and 40.2 per cent in the U.S.A. In the important manufacturing sector, Canada's two-year write-off for machinery and equipment, together with the lower corporate tax rate of 40 per cent, gives Canadian manufacturers a much lower rate than their U.S. counterparts.

In the corporate area as well the structures of the two systems are substantially different. The Canadian rate structure is more generous with its lower general rate; that is, 46 per cent compared with 48 per cent. The Canadian federal small business deduction applies a rate of 20 per cent or 25 per cent over a large range of taxable income. A company in Canada may enjoy this rate on up to $150,000 of profits a year. In the U.S. the low rate is available on $50,000 annually only. As I mentioned, the 40 per cent manufacturing and processing rate is available in Canada.

The U.S. treatment of business losses is more generous than in Canada. In Canada all domestic intercorporate dividends are deductible while in the U.S. some dividends are not fully deductible. In the U.S. inventory valuation is made on the last-in, first-out basis. In Canada, a 3 per cent inventory valuation adjustment has been introduced. The relative generosity of these two inventory methods depends on the particular circumstances of a company.

The value of the Canadian and U.S. investment tax credits are difficult to compare because coverage differs. The rate in the U.S. is generally higher; that is, 10 per cent compared with 5 per cent, 7½ per cent or 10 per cent in Canada. The Canadian credit applies to both investments in structures and in machinery and equipment. The U.S. credit does not apply to buildings but covers more industries. In the area of depreciation provisions, Canadian rates are much more favourable.

I have introduced these comparisons to make the point that in broad terms tax burdens in this country are reasonable and fully competitive with those in the U.S. In many respects, it can be argued that our tax system is fairer and provides more boost to growth and employment. But I have also pointed out that all sorts of special incentives can be found in one state or another, incentives that we should not try to duplicate if we are to retain the integrity of our tax system. Nor would we expect that the U.S. federal tax system would try to match every incentive offered by individual Canadian provinces.

Our job as legislators and my task as Minister of Finance, Mr. Speaker, is not to make sweetheart tax deals to entice industry to this country. Our job is to develop tax law fairly in the interest of all taxpayers. When we give up tax revenues in the interest of special deals and special privilege, we deny the use of that revenue to the benefit of other deserving Canadians. Our job is to make decisions in this chamber that will help promote a positive environment and sustain a sound economy, where business leaders will be encouraged to take the risks that are required in the market system, where worthwhile new jobs are being created, where planning and investments go forward in step with the great potential of our economy.

Above all—and I say this very seriously—we can best inspire confidence in our economy, and ensure growth and new employment, by keeping Canada united. The battle for unity is being won. When the outcome is clear to employer and investor, we will have cleared a hurdle standing in the way of our best economic performance. Certainly, we are not being held back by any lack of skills or resources in this country. And we are not being held back by the Canadian tax system.

• (2042)

This is a good occasion for me to speak on this because rumours are being spread across this country that our tax system is bad in relation to the American system. It was important to clear up some of that misinterpretation. We have a different tax system, but the spread is only 1.5 between the two nations. We have a much more developed social system than exists in the United States. We should be very proud of the fact that we are still in a very competitive position as far as our tax system is concerned with regard to the United States.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: The previous speaker referred to the speech made by the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge (Mr. Saltsman). He could react in no other way to the motion by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie). That kind of absolutely negative speech creates the impression that Canada is about the last among all nations of the world. That kind of proposition makes no sense.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. minister but his allotted time has expired. He may continue with unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Chrétien: I just want to conclude, Mr. Speaker. We can have our differences in policy, there is no doubt about it. However, to create the picture that this country is about to die economically and socially is a disservice to Canadians.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: I do not mind criticism. It is part of my job and I love it. As Mike Pearson said, it is great because it keeps a person clean. I do not at all mind being criticized. However, when I see someone using this chamber to depreciate this country as was done this afternoon, I cannot stand back and say nothing.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: We are here to debate. This afternoon a question of privilege was raised with regard to accusations that had been made against members of this place. They threw a cloud over every member of this place. The accusation had been made that some members had used their position to try and make a profit for themselves. Every member who is here could probably do better outside than in this chamber.

It is absolutely unacceptable to throw around accusations which cast a cloud over the integrity of all members of this place. It is all right to question the incompetence or intelligence of members. However, everyone who came here did so with one motivation, to serve his country in the best way he could. It is wrong to say that some of us are trying to use our position in order to pocket some money. I am happy to be here. I see that some of my predecessors are doing well on the outside. I see that it is possible to make more money there than here.

The performance we saw over the weekend and again this afternoon, a depreciation of those who serve the nation and a depreciation of the nation as a whole, is absolutely unacceptable. Despite the many other things I have to do, this is why I decided to get up and speak this evening.

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, we have just observed another hair-shirt emotional speech by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien). He read the first part of his speech. That is the way the Minister of Finance likes to make a speech. First he reads a bunch of statistics from the department so it will appear he knows something about the portfolio. It is a very learned type of reading. He then goes on to make an emotional speech which, as is so typical of members of this government, equates the good of the Liberal party and the Liberal government with our country. He says in effect that any suggestion for a review of our tax measures by the House of Commons is an attack on Canada.

What a ridiculous proposition the minister puts before us. The reason we are sitting here debating measures on allotted days and on government days is that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) could not screw up his courage to call an election. He was twisting and turning. He was frightened. The polls were and continue to be against him. He was very concerned about the fact that parliament should do some work.

Mr. Friesen: The people did not want an election.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: As the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Friesen) says, the people did not want an election. The Prime Minister's excuse for not calling an election was that parliament had work to do.

On one of its allotted days, the opposition makes the suggestion that maybe parliament has a role in studying the tax system in Canada. It is an opportunity to review our situation today. A prima facie case has apparently been made by spokesmen in various businesses, such as construction, manufacturing and so on.

We have a situation where officials in the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce are expressing serious concern about the flow of capital to real estate investment in the United States. What happens when we in the official opposition suggest that, since we are going to be sitting here for another year or so, parliament should take an active role in trying to come to terms with the taxation system of our country? It is considered by the government and its henchmen in the NDP. They support the government at will. They are going from 14 per cent to possibly 12 per cent in the next Gallup poll. That is because they keep supporting the government regardless of its policies.

We are told that this motion is some sort of an attack on Canada. They say we should be proud of having one of the highest rates of taxation, that we should be proud to sit here and listen to speeches about the beneficence of this government.

If parliament is to turn to performing a useful role and if we are to take the Prime Minister at his word, which is very difficult with his record, this motion should receive the wholehearted support of every member of this House. There should be a non-partisan, non-political look at our tax system, a review of the experience in this country with regard to the flight of capital to the United States and other countries. We should consider the extent of the problem. What has the government to fear from that kind of consideration by a committee of parliament?

There is nothing wrong with this motion. The government feels it is in a box, that it is losing the support of the country and will be turned out of office. What is its reaction to any response by this party in bringing forward a resolution that in effect allows parliament to operate? By a committee set up by this motion, parliament could consider our tax levels and mode of taxation with respect to individuals, corporations and businesses in general.

This motion gives an opportunity to the government to show it is prepared to listen, as opposed to the spectacle we saw today when there was no one here to speak on behalf of the government. That is the way they operate government. That is the way they approach matters in the House of Commons. It is a reflection of the attitude taken by this government, particularly by the Prime Minister who has absolutely no time for parliament.

Mr. LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent): He is here every day and you are not.

● (2052)

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The Minister of Fisheries (Mr. LeBlanc) is renowned for making speeches from the seat of his pants. He says the Prime Minister is here every day. I can assure the minister that it is a great honour for us to see the Prime Minister here in this chamber to answer the questions we put to him. He does us all a great honour. The emperor comes into parliament and gives his time to answer questions. Then at three o'clock he retires to his office to be surrounded by a phalanx of 101 members of his staff. Since I have been in parliament he has not participated in a debate on any motion or item of business before the House except for the debate on the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne, when he makes a contribution whose only effect is to put people all across the country to sleep.

When the Prime Minister says of members of parliament, including his own party members, that within 50 yards of Parliament Hill they are nobodies, he is revealing his attitude toward them. If I were a backbencher on the government side I would be more concerned about being a nobody while I was on Parliament Hill. The present government, more than any other in history, fears parliament. It fears debate. It fears any suggestion on our part for a constructive review of taxation and its reasons are well founded. Members opposite have placed themselves in a position where they are criticized universally for their mismanagement. They have brought a country whose potential is unsurpassed in the world to a point where there is apprehension and concern felt by citizens from coast to coast and from north to south.

My hon. friend from Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie) is responsible for the motion which has had an immediate effect on the government. After the first round of speeches when the government whip had difficulty finding anyone to take part, in came the Minister of State for Small Business (Mr. Abbott). His face was flushed. He had no written or carefully prepared notes. The upshot was that he made a number of statements about what the government proposed to do for small business, that very important sector of society. In that act alone was an admission of guilt on the part of the government, an admission that their attitude toward the taxation of business, both individual and corporate, leaves a great deal to be desired.

There is no thought of setting out a taxation strategy with respect to business. The notion of industrial strategy is altogether foreign to them. Their only approach to these matters is the "finger in the dyke" approach. The minister talked about relieving the paper burden imposed on a limited number of businesses. Mr. Speaker, it makes no sense to come into the House and occupy time with unrelated statements which show only that the government doesn't know where it is going.

Canada is a country of unlimited potential. Nobody is standing up and saying we do not have the greatest country in the world. We do. What we have, unfortunately, is a government which leaves everything to be desired, a government in need of replacement by a new government. That is why we need an election very soon.

I want to deal in the few minutes remaining to me with some of the evidence for the existence of the problem referred to in the motion. People inside government who have studied this question have expressed concern about the flight of capital. I refer to a story in the Ottawa Citizen of April 20 in which Mr. Carl Wenaas, senior policy maker at the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, is quoted as saying that the federal government is concerned about increased Canadian investment in foreign real estate. According to this report he stated:

> If companies are transferring funds out of the country, it is not desirable, obviously.

The article continues:

> The federal government, he says, keeps close track of net direct investment abroad by Canadian firms but "we have no way of knowing if a Canadian is spending $2 million on a condominium in Florida."

Here we have a statement that records of investments outside Canada are being kept. But when we ask ministers during the question period about this flow of capital, they refuse to answer. The ministers responsible for economic planning do not give out any information on the subject, another example of the government's preoccupation with secrecy. Ministers opposite believe that only they can reach direct decisions and that parliament should have no voice in economic or financial planning. That is why my hon. friend asks that a committee be charged with studying these matters so as to determine the extent of the problem.

There are indications of its cause in a statement by Robert Dodge reported in the Dallas Times-Herald of February 19, 1978. John Meyer, vice-president for corporate relations at the Trizec Corporation of Montreal had this to say:

> Canada has been taken over by a lot of planning boards and agencies. Here you have to undergo financial analysis by the government to do business. We said "Screw it" and started looking for U.S. properties.

This was a statement made by a vice-president of a very large Canadian corporation. What does Canadian Pacific Investments say about investment in Canada? Here is a story from the Montreal Gazette of May 2, 1978:

> Canadian Pacific Investments of Montreal plans to continue expanding into the U.S. because business conditions are more favourable there, Willian Moodie, CPI president, told shareholders at the annual meeting yesterday.

I could go on and on quoting spokesmen for business across this country. They all indicate concern about the investment climate in Canada. Yet the government in its arrogance and its disdain for parliament refuses to accept the reasonable proposition put forward by my hon. friend from Winnipeg South Centre. He proposes that we, as members representing all parts of Canada, take this opportunity to make parliament work, as the Prime Minister has asked us to do, by coming to grips with the taxation system to determine whether there are ways in which it might be improved. At present it is no secret that there is lack of confidence in the government and in the economy. Even the most ardent partisan backbencher in the Liberal party cannot deny that we are going through an economic crisis and that we face a serious prospect in the future. I am not here to gloat over that. In fact, I feel very badly about it. But when we do come forward with a reasonable proposition it is rejected out of hand by government spokesmen.

● (2102)

Somehow our suggestions are taken as an attack on the future of Canada. What a ridiculous proposition it is for the Minister of Finance to suggest that, because we want to study our taxation system, that is the extent of our concern about the Canadian economy. Clearly, that is one important aspect which has to be looked into by parliamentarians and by people who are involved in the governing of our country.

The Minister of State (Small Business) himself pointed out this afternoon that small business feels particular concern about bureaucratic red tape, and in response to this motion he came forward and made certain statements, attempting in small part to remove some of these items of red tape and paper work. We all know that this red tape affects business in Canada, the confidence of people in Canada and our economy. The Minister of Finance said that if we are critical of the performance of this government, somehow we are being unpatriotic. The temptation to criticize this government's mismanagement and mishandling of economic affairs is to me irresistible, and I hope I will not be considered unpatriotic if I point out the record of this minister with respect to the handling of his portfolio.

It has been my observation that during the time the present minister has been Minister of Finance there has been more criticism of our economy than under any previous minister of finance appointed by this Prime Minister. I suggest that perhaps one of the fundamental problems which underlies our economy is lack of confidence in this government.

In the last quarter of 1977, according to Bank of Canada statistics, over $180 million in direct investment was drained out of our economy, despite the improvement in trade balances. To date it has taken over $7 billion in either loans or international stand-by credits to shore up the dollar. In my estimation one of the reasons the world has so little confidence in our economy is the way this Minister of Finance has on a number of occasions dealt badly or failed to deal with serious problems facing our country.

As far as parliament is concerned the minister has been non-communicative or has given us information which has not been in accordance with the actual facts. I want to list a few of these things. The minister indicated to us in answers about the situation relating to the dollar that the dollar was not being supported by our government when in fact it was. At one stage the government was spending something over $700 million a month to support the dollar, all the while proclaiming that it was a "clean float".

Another example of the government's saying one thing and acting in another way is the retail sales tax legislation we are now considering. In trying to convince the people of Canada, we see the Prime Minister twisting and turning in his seat. He never speaks about anything, but the only time we saw him sitting in the House of Commons during a debate—and it was the subject of newspaper comments across the country—was when we watched the Minister of Finance twist and turn through the sales tax debate at second reading. He was here that time because he knew he was on a sticky wicket. The Prime Minister knows that the people of Canada are on to him. They know he says one thing and does another.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to inform the hon. member that his allotted time has expired. He may continue with unanimous consent. Does the hon. member have unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: What concerns me even more than some of these things are the answers we are getting in this parliament with respect to our economy. I am concerned about the aura of incompetence which seems to pervade this government's handling of economic matters. On March 9, the minister raised the bank rate by half a point, only to have to raise it by another half point on April 3. In the meantime, hundreds of thousands of dollars in foreign exchange reserves were flushed down the drain, together, I suggest with all respect, with the government's credibility.

This minister has put us in hock to the point where we are dependent on foreigners for our economic well-being as never before in the history of our country. For example, without the $2.1 billion the government has been forced to borrow from foreign banks, our reserves would be down to $423 million, a decline of something like 88 per cent from October of 1976.

The government is so inept that it cannot even identify the capital flows which are taking place, or it refuses to tell us. In 1977 the unidentified capital flows plus the balancing items totalled $3.176 billion. In the last quarter of 1977 money was flowing out of the country at the rate of $10 million a day, yet the government was unable or unwilling to identify publicly the reason for this haemorrhage.

I hope that in the brief time which has been available to me I have set out some of the compelling reasons why this motion should be supported by all members of the House. This motion should be supported, not in the interest of any partisan political gain by one side or the other, but in order to give an opportunity to members of parliament from both sides of the House through the medium of parliament in one of its standing committees to come to grips with and deal with the serious economic future we face. I thank hon. members for the extra time, and I thank the House for this opportunity to speak.

● (2112)

[Translation]

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Very objectively, Mr. Speaker, I would like to take part in the debate on this motion proposed by the official opposition of the Canadian Parliament according to our rules of procedure which specify that a certain number of days called opposition days be set apart to allow members to introduce motions criticizing in a valid way the shortcomings of the government, so as to provide our country with an efficient administration.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would like to take part in the debate on the motion moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie). In this motion, the hon. member suggests that the federal tax structure inhibits the economic growth in Canada and contributes to the brain drain towards the United States, be they financial or research brains.

Mr. Speaker, all members agree with the mover of this motion that the American rate of taxation is lower than the Canadian rate. That is recognized and accepted. But we must face facts. This rate of taxation imposed on incomes, on taxpayers, on workers is of course lower than in Canada. However, Canada's program of social services is much more extensive and equitable than in the United States. Compared to that country, our social benefits are much greater and Canadians must necessarily pay for them and be taxed on their income, in comparison with the American system.

Having said this, Mr. Speaker, it does not mean that I support the present tax system: I merely want to make a comparison from which to draw conclusions on possibilities of improving our tax system as compared with that in the United States.

Those social programs are obviously very costly and they must be paid; under our present system, the only way the government can do so is through our taxes, that is, personal income and corporate taxes. Mr. Speaker, the bill must be paid. At the present time, the bill is paid through taxes levied on income: the higher the income, the higher the tax. That system of personal income tax, setting aside that corporate taxes, bears no relation whatsoever with the tax system south of the border, in the United States.

Mr. Speaker, in the United States, in the case of the average taxpayer it is true that he seems to pay less than we do here in Canada—but after having weighed the pros and cons objectively, it will be found that, all in all, the two systems are comparable. We pay more in Canada but, on the other hand, we get more services. We have more services and so we must pay more. The Americans have fewer services, but they are satisfied because they pay less.

Some would say that it all amounts to the same thing. Why not follow the American system? In my opinion, the answer is quite simple. In Canada, those who have the highest incomes pay most services, which seems fair in a society which advocates as much egalitarianism as possible. Those who have higher incomes pay a higher percentage than those who earn less. However, Mr. Speaker, that is the role of government. They must establish a certain balance, see that a certain percentage of economic justice is applied to each individual and each taxpayer living in a country such as we know, Canada.

When he introduced his motion, the hon. member did not say that he wanted cuts in these areas. He did not talk about this. He did not say that there should be cuts in certain areas and increases in others so as to strike a certain balance. But experience tells us that when the income tax is reduced, the government must cut certain services, and too often, these cuts affect the social services. We have seen this in the past. Under the pretext that government spending must be cut, the governments have tended to reduce certain social services before introducing a balanced budget, even at the risk of causing some harship to those who are unable to contribute the equivalent because their income is lower than that of people in higher income brackets.

If this government could guarantee that this will not happen, if they could suggest a formula that would prove to me that they are able to go about it differently, I would certainly support their proposal because it would tend to increase indirectly the purchasing power of the disadvantaged without penalizing the efforts of the taxpayers with higher incomes because they work harder or have better positions.

Mr. Speaker, I would also like to talk about another point raised by the mover of the motion, the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre. Because of our taxation system, many of our Canadian brains go to the United States in search of less excessive taxation rates. Mr. Speaker, I must say that I am somewhat sceptic about this statement. What exactly is the brain drain? Have the people involved been identified? Has the public been told who are the people who flee to the United States because of inadequate incomes for the services they have rendered to the Canadian people? No mention is made of this. Mr. Speaker, who are those professionals rich enough to pay taxes here in Canada but who are so vain and materialistic that they move to a foreign country to increase their income? Very seldom low income earners because although they know they would pay fewer taxes in the United States they stay in Canada where they get more free social services than anywhere in the world.

However, Mr. Speaker, we should be realistic. Without advocating a socialistic system, through the years and following the representations from grass roots organizations to hon. members of various political parties, every one of us on various occasions has made representations to the government party which we usually call the party in power but which is not necessarily in power if the results achieved are any indication. Those results should be analysed on the basis of accounting revenues affecting the income of Canadians throughout the years, on the basis of the budgets proposed by the majority party, budgets which throughout the years increasingly affect the income of private citizens who have to pay for the social services demanded by the people, but for which the whole population has to pay. And I am upset when I hear in this House or on radio or TV a government member tell the people that if we have old age security in Canada we owe it to the Liberal party, that if we have family allowances we owe it to the Liberal party, and that if there is a guaranteed income supplement for people aged 60 or more living with a spouse aged 65 or more we owe it to the Liberal party. Mr. Speaker, I am upset by such assertions. After all, hon. members who have been sitting here for as many years as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and his colleagues of the same age have fought to push through parliament legislation recognizing the right to security and freedom in our country. We owe it to the work and efforts of these people throughout Canada who have done their best to develop our country and make it more affluent to ensure a certain security to senior citizens. But it is false to say that all that prosperity and our capacity to pay pensions to people aged 60, 65 or more is the result of the efforts made by the political party in power like the Liberal party. Because, Mr. Speaker, all Canadians whatever their age, whatever their political allegience have worked in agreement to give to our country this momentum toward prosperity so that it could give its aging citizens the possibility of enjoying this security, this assurance of going through their later days in a certain feeling of security coupled with a feeling of independence.

Mr. Speaker, today's young workers, and I have some among my relatives, as all members of this House probably have, these young people are working in conditions which are often difficult. Let us take for instance the case of construction workers. In summer time they have to withstand extremely difficult heat conditions which affects them considerably, and when winter comes, these same construction workers—and I am talking about them because I know their situation, Mr. Speaker, for if did not I would not speak so passionately about them—these same construction workers who are on the job, during December, January, February and March work through difficult conditions but they accept to do so and they also accept to pay on their wages a tax which will ensure the people who preceded them, their father, their uncle, relatives or just friends, some security for those who are over sixty because they recognize that while they are holding their jobs, they enjoy working conditions which are perhaps not always very advantageous but still better than those which prevailed some 40, 50, 60 years ago. These people accept to do their share to ensure their kind of security to the present generation of retired people.

Mr. Speaker, I understood the motion moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre to the effect that there is a difference between the conditions which prevail in the U.S. and in Canada. I also understand that there are Canadians working in lumber camps or elsewhere in the United States who pay taxes which are perhaps inferior to those which Canadians must pay when they work in Canada. Yet, Mr. Speaker, even if by that kind of work, even because of situations, conveniences, agreements which exist between the United States and Canada and even if there is a flight of Canadian capital to the United States which is detrimental to us, the fact remains, Mr. Speaker, that governments share a great responsibility in all that—

[English]

● (2122)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to inform the hon. member that his allotted time has expired. He may continue if he receives unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

An hon. Member: No.

[Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse).]

Mr. D. M. Collenette (York East): Mr. Speaker, I was not sure whether I would have an opportunity to participate this evening. I am glad I have been provided with that opportunity. I am grateful to the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie) for putting his motion before the House.

An hon. Member: Then why did you not let the hon. member for Bellechase (Mr. Lambert) continue?

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

[English]

Mr. Collenette: Let the record show that I did not say "No".

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. The Chair definitely heard a "No" when unanimous consent was requested.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): The hon. member for Bellechasse on a point of order.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

When I read the official report of last Friday's debate, I noted that all hon. members had been kind enough to grant additional time to all those who took part in the debate. I had thought that today they would demonstrate the same generosity to us. If hon. members should decide not to grant the hon. member for Bellechasse additional time to complete his remarks, they may rest assured that I shall indeed remember that in future when the time comes to grant additional time.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member for Bellechasse that it is the responsibility of the Chair to listen. Definitely I heard a "No".

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): From where?

Mr. Collenette: Mr. Speaker, actually I was surprised to be recognized by the Chair. Hon. members on this side of the House were prepared to let the hon. member for Bellechasse continue. Distinctly I heard a "No". I am sure the "No" came from the Conservative side. It is evident that that party denied the hon. member for Bellechasse the opportunity to finish his very thoughtful speech.

● (2132)

I am grateful for the opportunity provided by the member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie), who I see has re-entered the chamber after some absence. I am glad he is here this evening to hear my remarks as well as the remarks of the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Hnatyshyn).

An hon. Member: Well, say something then.

Mr. Collenette: This debate is decidedly a non-event. After sitting here listening to what one of my old professors used to call pure and unmitigated eyewash or drivel, such as passed for a speech by the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar, I feel perhaps I should counter some of the bold and bald assertions he made in that speech.

I do not propose to get into a lengthy debate on Canadian tax measures in comparison with United States tax measures. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) in a very able speech set out the main features of the Canadian tax system and the weaknesses, as we perceive them, of the United States tax system. On the facts the minister presented to us I am sure all members would agree there is no real comparison, and that in this country we do by and large have a very fair and equitable tax system.

I want to address my remarks to two particular points of view, the first of which deals with this comparative study of our lifestyle and standard of living with that of the United States. This does touch upon the general economic climate and tax systems of both countries. Secondly, I want to talk about one particular tax system, namely, sales tax as covered in the budget and which has been part of a national taxation or constitutional debate.

An hon. Member: You aren't going to muck that one up further, are you?

Mr. Collenette: An hon. member asks whether I am "going to muck that one up further". I think he should be patient, hear my remarks and then see how very ably I am going to try to expose the position of the Conservative party as being very duplicit, a position that most Canadians will see through on the election trail.

When we talk about comparisons between Canada and the United States the Conservative party is obsessed with the fact that everything south of the border is better than it is in this country. The minister said a number of times that the Conservative party is continually carping, complaining and tearing down our institutions and the confidence and morale of Canadians. This has some effect, and I do not deny that. When the official opposition in the House of Commons continues day after day to tear down the great confidence and feelings that we have developed in this country over the past 100 years, this does start to have some kind of effect on the Canadian people. I think many of our problems at this time result from lack of confidence, and that lack of confidence must be placed squarely at the doorstep of the official opposition.

When we talk about the United States let us consider a few basic facts. The per capita income in Canada is higher than it is in the United States, as supported by figures released recently, I think last week. This contradicts some of the suggestions of hon. members on the other side to the effect that this country is falling behind our American neighbours.

Over the last ten years the disposable incomes of Canadians in Canada have been considerably higher than those in the United States. The number of new jobs that have been created in this country on a per capita or relative basis has been considerably greater not only than the number in the United States but also in all of the industrial trading nations in Europe and Japan, our major trading partners.

The official opposition will be riding in the next election, whenever that comes—this year, next year or whenever—on what I call the "Stirling Lyon white horse". It will be ridden across this country by those hon. members taking pot shots at our social services and at our bureaucracy. I do not think Canadians are going to buy their arguments, and those hon. members will find themselves in the same kind of difficulties their counterparts in Manitoba are finding themselves in now.

It is fine to talk about efficient and effective government. I think everyone on this side would agree that what we stand for is efficient and effective government. Over the last 30 years we have developed in this country, throughout all of industrialized society, a kind of social system, social tolerance and economy whereby a large number of people, perhaps the largest ever in history, have equitable access to income. I want to support that system as it has and is developed. I want to support the social programs which have been developed over the last 30 years. This does not mean to say we cannot administer those programs in a better way and thereby save taxpayers dollars.

Hon. members of the Conservative party, when comparing the United States and Canada, are always talking about our higher unemployment benefits. It is clear that the members who criticize our unemployment insurance system do not represent major urban constituencies. I do not hear very much criticism of UIC benefits from our Atlantic area colleagues. Those hon. members who criticize certainly do not represent constituencies in Quebec and northern Ontario where unemployment is high and where opportunities available in the relatively wealthy areas of southern Ontario and B.C. are not available to the people there.

I have to defend the unemployment insurance system we have today, and I am not embarrassed to do so. There have been some terrible administrative problems with that system, but those problems are being ironed out. It is true, perhaps, that some aspects of the system have encouraged disincentive to work, but simply to rip through this whole system, as some members opposite would do, solely in the guise of a work ethic, higher productivity and emulating the free enterprise of our American neighbours to the hilt, would be disastrous to many regions in this country.

Hon. members are very quick to criticize the universal and portable medicare system we have in this country, which the United States does not have. When they talk about the favourable position of the U.S. economic system, they fail to point out that many thousands of Americans every year are forced to pay hundreds if not thousands of dollars in medical coverage, which literally bankrupts whole families, causing a degree of hardship which I do not think any of us in this chamber would ever want to see return.

We have a very much more favourable old age security system.

Mr. Clarke: Order, order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. The hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Clarke) rises on a point of order.

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I have looked very carefully at the motion of my colleague the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie), and I can see no relationship between it and the contribution to the debate being made by the hon. member for York East (Mr. Collenette).

Mr. Collenette: With all due respect, Mr. Speaker, that was not a point of order but rather a point of debate.

An hon. Member: Relevance is surely something.

Mr. Collenette: I have carefully studied the motion and we are talking about the federal tax structure inhibiting economic growth in Canada. When we talk about economic growth we are talking about all of the economic infrastructure of this country, which includes as far as I am concerned unemployment insurance, direct and indirect taxation, social benefits and other things. As can be seen by the lack of tolerance exhibited by the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Clarke), this is the callous kind of approach we are used to from members of the Conservative party.

As I was saying before I was rudely interrupted, we have in this country an old age security system that is very good. That is not to suggest it cannot be improved, but when you compare the level of benefits here with that level in the United States you will see that United States citizens are not afforded equal benefits. In my constituency and throughout metropolitan Toronto there are many government sponsored senior citizens' homes—that is, federal, provincial and metro—which provide a level of accommodation for senior citizens of which we as Canadians can be proud. Senior citizens in the United States do not enjoy that level of care.

I suggest we have a better education system in terms of available facilities and uniformity. There is not the degree of uniformity I would like, but I will be talking about that during the latter part of my speech, particularly in reference to the sales tax difficulty.

We were talking about taxation and services the government provides. Even if you compare Air Canada with other air services you will see that Air Canada provides a level of service to people in all communities across this country. The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre is continually complaining about the operation of Air Canada. It is suggested that this service is provided as a result of our tax system—

Mr. McKenzie: Read my speeches.

Mr. Collenette: I read your speeches, my dear friend. In fact, I sit on a committee with you and have listened day after day to criticisms you make in respect of the minister of Transport (Mr. Lang), officials of Air Canada and Canadian National Railways. I hope those kinds of remarks are circulated around the country during the next election to demonstrate what the Progressive Conservative party's transportation policy is. However, I am getting a little off the track, Mr. Speaker.

• (2142)

When we talk about the level of services and the taxes to pay for those services, we are talking about the high quality of service that the national airline provides. My friends opposite are continually knocking the postal service—

Mr. Clarke: A point of order, Mr. Speaker, with the greatest of respect. I know you did not rule on my earlier point of order but I have listened carefully to the hon. member for York East since then and he has talked about Air Canada, Toronto real estate taxes, the transportation policy of the Progressive Conservative party, health insurance in the United States and finally, he wants to give us a diatribe on the post office. I would like to remind the Chair that the debate is on the motion:

That a special committee of this House be established to determine whether the federal tax structure is inhibiting economic growth in Canada—

With respect I would hope you would rule that the hon. member for York East is not on the topic.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I should like to suggest to the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Clarke) that the Chair has been very tolerant with hon. members and they have all wandered over the field. The hon. member for York East.

Mr. Collenette: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for the discretion you have shown. I have not seen the degree of impertinence that I have seen this evening from the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra in a long time. I am sure he will cease and desist now that you have made your very effective ruling.

When I talk of these services and the level of taxation necessary to pay for them, I am relating it directly to this motion. In the last sentence the motion talks about the export of employment opportunities to the United States. The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre in this way is talking about jobs being created in the United States and people leaving Canada. I am relating this directly to people staying in Canada. The reason they want to stay in Canada is the many social and economic programs that have been built up over the last 30 or 40 years. However, I am digressing but I hope my time will not be cut into.

This afternoon the hon. member for Battleford-Kindersley (Mr. McIsaac) said it all when he quoted a speech made by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) after Christmas in this House. The Leader of the Opposition said that this is the year the country closes down. Mr. Speaker, I hope that in the election campaign that comes up in the next few months or in the next year or so the country will close the opposition down. That is long overdue.

The hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar talked about the flight of capital. I thought he was going to get down on his knees and sing an Al Jolson swan song. What does the Conservative party propose to do about the flight of capital? Is he saying to members of this House that the Conservative party favours exchange controls? I challenge him to tell us where the Conservative party stands. Do they want exchange controls? Let him tell that to the business community of the country and to ordinary Canadians. That is what he is implying when he talks about the flight of capital.

I should not get myself worked up over these points of order, Mr. Speaker, because I am missing one of the central themes that I want to talk about, and that is the sales tax measure in the budget. I think it was a pretty good budget and I think the sales tax measure was pretty good.

There has been a tradition of secrecy in budget preparation in this country, Mr. Speaker. Hon. members opposite have always demanded that this secrecy be respected. They would decry any kind of leak. A few years ago there was the case where the hon. member for Kerora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid) was charged with having previous knowledge of the budget of a former minister, Mr. Turner. This was disproven in committee.

The opposition has jealousy guarded this tradition but at the same time they are the foremost spokesmen in this country in defence of provincial rights. First of all, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) saw the premiers last fall. Then there was a federal-provincial conference. We recognize that the federal government only has direct control of 40 per cent of all government money spent in this country. A federal-provincial conference was called and some good things came out of that, one of which was the sales tax proposal. It did not come from the federal government but from the government of Ontario. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) consulted with all the provinces and told them that he wanted to co-operate and act in consort with them in economic planning in this country. But what happened? The Quebec government pulled the rug from under him. The Quebec government in its own budget brought in a sales tax proposal which, in a sense, is a protectionist proposal—not in the absolute sense but it is a protectionist proposal for industries in Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, we talk about the free exchange and movement of goods in this country. No one in his right mind who stands for the concept of a united, federalist Canada can support the position of the Parti Québécois.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Claude Ryan does.

Mr. Collenette: When the official opposition talks about special status and accuses the federal government of according special status because of the $85 tax payment to Quebeckers, they are the ones who are favouring the Quebec sales tax system which would promote only Quebec-based industries. No federalist in his right mind who has integrity can countenance that proposal.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: A point of order, Mr. Speaker. I apologize to the hon. member because he is in full flight. I have not seen him so agitated since the day he got married. I wonder if the hon. member would permit a question on the matter he is now raising.

Mr. Collenette: Mr. Speaker, I wanted to do the official opposition the courtesy of finishing this matter this evening. It is their motion. They have already cut into my time, however, and now the hon. member wants to ask a question. I will be prepared to answer questions when my 20 minutes is up and not before, if there is unanimous consent. I warn hon. members, however, that they are probably going to run out the clock in doing so.

As the hon. member said, he caught me in full flight. I sat here all last week and heard these incredible charges coming from the Leader of the Opposition, from the hon. member for York Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) and all the other so-called financial critics on the other side. They attacked the federal government for giving in to special status. That is absolute rubbish. They are the ones who want special status; they are the ones who are backing Jacques Parizeau to the hilt.

If they want to talk about Claude Ryan I can answer them. The hon. member for Battleford-Kindersley answered that this afternoon when he said it is fair game for all provincial politicians to criticize the federal government. That is one of the greatest weaknesses we have in this country. It is not just René Lévesque—it is the Alberta heritage fund, it is the Allan Blakeneys of this world, it is all these provincial potentates with their little empires who are chipping away at the nation state we have known for the last hundred years.

Members on the other side smirk about it, but this is the most fundamental and central issue facing this country at this time. The opposition does not want to talk about national unity, but here is an economic measure, this sales tax proposal, which is not only a taxation measure but something that affects the very fibre of the country. They cannot see that, however.

It has often been said that we are one of the most decentralized federations in the world. In the United States 60 per cent of all government revenues come under the control of Washington. It is the same in West Germany. But in this country it is only 40 per cent. Last week the Governor of the Bank of Canada appeared before the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs and more or less admitted that the way fiscal and taxation policies have gone in the last 30 years makes it difficult for the Bank of Canada to exercise monetary and fiscal control in this country. The Bank of Canada is responsible to parliament through the Minister of Finance, yet 60 per cent of all government revenues is spent by municipal and provincial governments.

There is Bill Davis running off to Zurich and René Lévesque running off to New York, borrowing money indiscriminately and not paying attention to how much interest has to be paid. What we need in this country is a centralized and economic planning system, and we are not getting it.

I am not sure where we are with respect to time, Mr. Speaker, but if we are getting back to this sales tax measure in the province of Quebec and talking about the federal tax structure, I must say that the Minister of Finance has shown his ability to co-operate, his willingness to talk. He admits it is difficult because essentially he is prodding the provinces to do something in their jurisdictions. Most of the ministers of finance wanted it. It was only a week after the Parti Québécois started making noises that the four western provincial governments started to say—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. The hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) on a point of order.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

You will note that the hon. member who has the floor is not sticking to the motion under consideration, that is the establishment of a special committee of this House, and that his statements relate to Bill C-56 which the House will debate in due time.

I would therefore ask that you call the hon. member to order so that his statements pertain to the motion under consideration.

● (2152)

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I would like to suggest to the hon. member for York East (Mr. Collenette) that his time has expired. He may continue with unanimous consent. Does the hon. member have unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I object. There is not unanimous consent. A moment ago I had the floor and, if I understood correctly, you asked for unanimous consent—

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. Due to the fact there is no unanimous consent I have to recognize another member. The hon. member for Oxford. The hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) is rising on a point of order?

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I rise again on a point of order. With all due respect for your authority in the House, a short while ago, while I had the floor, if I understood you well, you asked the House if there was unanimous consent to allow me to continue my remarks. You then ruled that my time had expired.

[Mr. Collenette.]

I would like to know on which side of the House somebody refused to allow me to continue my remarks. I ask that the name of the hon. member who objected be put in the record.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I would like to suggest to the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) that I asked for unanimous consent for the hon. member to continue with his speech. There was a definite "No" in the House. Therefore, I went to the hon. member for York East. The hon. member for York East is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Collenette: Mr. Speaker, I hate to prolong the debate but I was quite surprised that I was cut off immediately on a point of order by my colleague the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert). I did point out that it was on the Conservative side that denied him unanimous consent. For my part, I would certainly have agreed that he should go on. I am sure he would allow me to go on, but the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar wanted to ask me a question, Mr. Speaker. I said I would be fully prepared to answer the question—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I would like to suggest to the hon. member for York East that I asked for unanimous consent for the hon. member for York East to proceed and there was a definite "No". The hon. member for Oxford.

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, thank you once again for recognizing me. I had the pleasure of speaking in a similar debate last Friday, the last day this House was in session. At that time I had the last eight minutes and tonight I have the last five minutes.

It is perhaps significant that the nature of the motion before us today is not unlike the motion that was before us last Friday which was brought to us by the Creditistes. That was indeed an excellent motion which condemned the government for their lack of concern about our economy. It pointed out about four main areas where the government has failed to tackle the economic needs of this country. I would like to read the motion that is before us today, as so many others have, because there are two important parts that I would like to refer to for a minute or two. The motion reads:

> That a special committee of this House be established to determine whether the federal tax structure is inhibiting economic growth in Canada and promoting the export of employment opportunities to the United States.

I want to congratulate the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie) who has brought this motion before the House. He has pointed out, as the Creditistes did last Friday, that the main issue before Canada today is the issue of the economy. It is not the issue of bilingualism and it is not the issue of our foreign affairs, as the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) would have us believe; rather it is the issue of the economy. On two consecutive days two opposition parties have each picked on this matter of the economy as being the key issue before us.

I was pleased to note that this motion started off by referring to the establishment of a special committee of this House, as framed by my colleague the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre. I believe my colleague, the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Hnatyshyn), and perhaps one or two other members have mentioned the fact that the proposal was for a subcommittee or a special committee of the House to deal with this matter. I have to spend a minute or two on this, Mr. Speaker, because it has been obvious to us during the last three or four years that the government has done all in its power to avoid having committees of this House study something that is of special concern to this country.

There have been one or two exceptions. The one I am most familiar with is the subcommittee on the penitentiary system. I am a little surprised the government allowed this particular body to be formed and given a mandate. I feel sure now that they regret it. They have been put in the awkward position where it is possible for members from both sides of this House, if they want to, to get together and to come to a consensus. As a result the government is then in the difficult position of having to implement the report.

I am certain the government would be reluctant now to have any kind of common consent on the matter of the economy because they would be so embarrassed by what their own members on the committee would say. The backbenchers on the government side would want to agree with the opposition, and the front benchers of the government would not want to be embarrassed in that way. Therefore they are going all out to prevent establishment of any kind of a parliamentary committee.

There is one obvious place where there ought to be a parliamentary committee and that is for the post office mess. If the government wants to clear up a problem in this country such as the post office, or deal with our penitentiaries or the economy, it will not be done by royal commissions or special commissions but by a group of parliamentarians. I want to congratulate the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre for identifying this factor. More and more Canadians are recognizing that we do have to use parliament more instead of adopting the Prime Minister's attitude of ignoring parliament, downgrading parliament—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Halliday: —and just allowing royal commissions to be set up, the reports of which the Prime Minister perhaps ignores completely if he does not like what they have to say.

I did want to talk for 15 minutes or so on a form of taxation that I think could bring some sense and order into our whole economy in Canada which is now seen as being so messed up. If we want to do something to bring the economy back into order, we must do what the government has failed to do, and that is look at our tax system. I am not talking on behalf of my party, I am talking as an individual member of the opposition. I think this House of Commons has ignored the whole problem of taxation too much. The area in taxation that we must look at and about which I want to talk at greater length some time when time permits is the area of taxation based on services received. That is the way municipal taxes are generally levied and it is time we looked at it from the point of view of both federal government and provincial government.

I see it is ten o'clock. I hope I will have an opportunity in the near future to elaborate further on this matter of how we raise our taxes.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. It being ten o'clock p.m. it is my duty to inform the House, pursuant to Section (11) of Standing Order 58, that proceedings on the motion have expired.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY—VALUE OF DOLLAR—EFFECT ON CANADIAN ENTREPRENEURS

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, on May 5 I asked the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) a question dealing with the value of the Canadian dollar, and in particular one aspect of it that has not been looked at. This concerns Canadian entrepreneurs selling in Canada having an advantage when the price of imports rises. The minister in his reply indicated that from March, 1977 to March, 1978 our exports increased from $40 billion to $50 billion. There was a 25 per cent increase in these exports which is certainly attributable to the change in the cost of the dollar. Also our imports did not increase over this period. In fact, we gained an advantage in this regard. Even though purchasing power did not increase during this period, it is obvious that Canadians were buying more Canadian goods.

● (2202)

A good many Canadians are concerned about the dollar. Perhaps there is more concern than is necessary. They are concerned that in some ways we are not as competitive as our neighbour to the south. Sometimes our costs of production have risen higher and faster than theirs. This is reflected in the value of the dollar.

There are other factors as well. There is the matter of pure speculation. That may have been ironed out to some extent at this point, given the fact that the dollar has been closer to 90 cents for the past few weeks. The government has taken some necessary steps to keep the swing from being too great. However, I would not like the government to do much more than it has done because there are some definite advantages to having an 89 or 90 cent dollar. One of the disadvantages has to do with inflation in terms of imported goods. With an 89 or 90 cent dollar, imported goods will cost ten or 11 cents more per dollar. That, of course, fuels inflation. If the dollar stabilized at this point, we would not expect a great deal more inflationary effect than that which has already occurred. There are two very definite advantages. One is well known to most Canadians, the advantage of being able to sell our exports in a more competitive way around the world.

The community from which I come and represent, part of Thunder Bay, is very fortunate. Last year it had one of the lowest rates of unemployment of any community in Canada with a population of over 100,000. A good deal of this can be attributed to the fact that our community does a geat deal of exporting.

Between 80 and 90 per cent of our pulp and paper is exported to the United States and other parts of the world. We are very heavily into the grain business with the largest grain port in Canada and one of the largest in the world. Exports in that area are supported by the lower dollar. This is one reason why there is a great advantage to having our dollar at around 90 cents in terms of American dollars.

The other advantage has not been discussed to any great extent. This is the whole point of my question. I refer to the advantage of Canadian entrepreneurs selling on the Canadian markets to Canadians and competing with imports from foreign countries.

When the cost of imports is higher, Canadian entrepreneurs have a great advantage in terms of competing with foreign goods. This area has not been looked at carefully enough by Canadian entrepreneurs. The federal government should be encouraging Canadian businesses to look at the higher cost of imports to see how we can compete in this market.

● (2207)

I would hope that if the dollar is held at 90 cents or 89 cents for a year or two a whole series of businesses will spring up able to compete with the higher cost imports, the greenhouse industry among a number of others would benefit a great deal from this situation. So I end by suggesting that the government should refrain from further support than what may be necessary to keep the dollar around 89 cents or 90 cents and that the dollar be allowed to float at that point in the hope that this will stimulate our export companies as well as many of our own industries which do business on the Canadian market.

Mr. Ed Lumley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. McRae) has stated, the recent decline in the external value of the dollar has improved the competitive position of Canadian firms by reducing the price of Canadian goods relative to foreign goods when measured in the same currency. The benefits to our exporters from this relative price change are clear. In fact in 1977, despite the relatively weak performance in the economies of most of our industrial trading partners, the volume of our merchandise exports increased by 10 per cent; preliminary indications for the first quarter of 1978 suggest that this pace is being maintained. This is a direct benefit of the depreciation and has received fairly widespread recognition.

Hon. members are also aware that the other side of this coin is also important. Indeed, one of the main results of the rapid increase in Canadian costs and prices in the mid-70's was that Canadian producers were being squeezed out of our own market. The depreciation of the dollar has reversed this by raising the price Canadians must pay for imported goods, thus making home produced substitutes relatively cheaper. In quantitative terms, movements in the exchange rate since October 1976 have resulted in more than a 13 per cent increase in the relative price of goods imported from the United States.

The level of domestic demand stimulation induced by an exchange rate depreciation depends upon such factors as the availability of domestic substitutes and the ease with which Canadians can divert their expenditures towards domestically produced alternatives. In these terms, conditions in Canada have been favourable to take advantage of the exchange rate change.

The evidence amply demonstrates the impact of Canadian price performance on imports. Between 1973 and 1976 when the Canadian dollar was often above par with the U.S. dollar despite our unfavorable cost performance, merchandise imports rose over 13 per cent in volume at a time when g.n.p. grew only 10 per cent and exports declined. In 1977, however, imports rose only one per cent and by the end of the year were actually below year-earlier levels. The numbers so far available for the first quarter of 1978 suggest this favourable trend is continuing this year.

In summary, Mr. Speaker, the data support the view that the recent depreciation of the Canadian currency has aided Canadian business by improving its competitive position, not only abroad but also at home. As a result Canadian consumers are switching back from foreign produced imports to domestically produced goods to an important extent.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—BELL CANADA CONTRACT WITH SAUDI ARABIA

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, Bell Canada has concluded an agreement to improve and operate the telephone system in Saudi Arabia from a contract worth more than $1 billion. Several hundred Canadian citizens will be working in that country. Bell Canada has assured Saudi Arabia under the agreement that it does not do business with the state of Israel. Prospective employees of Bell Canada who are to go to Saudi Arabia are required to fill out application forms which ask for their religion. There is evidence that Jewish applicants are not issued visas by Saudi Arabia.

When I asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) on May 5 whether he was aware of these discriminatory practices and whether he would take action to deal with this discriminatory situation, he evaded the issue, as he did on earlier occasions when answering similar questions by the hon. member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray). That Saudi policy, as I have indicated, was proven in a recent United States court decision. The United States has passed two bills dealing with boycotts, such as the Arab boycott to which I have been referring. They are the tax reform act, 1976 and the export administration act, 1977. Under terms of those two bills U.S. companies are prohibited from signing contracts which contain boycott clauses of the kind Bell signed, or even from providing undertakings to the same effect.

● (2212)

The American system operates on the basis of the view that the Arab boycott is successful as long as uninvolved third parties, like U.S. or Canadian companies, agree to go along with boycott demands, as Bell Canada has done. The Americans argue, on the basis of a successful experience, that a refusal to go along with boycott demands does not lead to a loss of any trade. In fact, what happens is that it leads to renegotiation of contracts so that boycott undertakings are left out. United States laws are what give American companies their government's support in resisting these discriminating terms of trade.

Bell has admitted that its contract contains a so-called statement of fact that neither it, its associates or subsidiaries, have or are at present engaged in any business relationship with Israel. This clause is an intrinsic part of a five-year contract. This clause would, presumably, have to remain in place for the duration of the five-year contract. Bell spokesmen have admitted they have made a five-year undertaking with regard to this clause as well as the contract as a whole.

The Export Development Corporation has insured this contract for $430 million, the largest single insurance coverage in its history. Its president, John MacDonald, has said that this clause does not contravene the policy of the government because it is not overtly written in the future tense; that is, Bell does not agree that it will never deal with Israel in future. This distinction between present and future tense in a boycott undertaking, especially when the contract is clearly of a five-year duration, is a nonsensical distinction, yet it is distinctions of this kind which lie at the heart of the anti-boycott policy of the Canadian government and which, in my view, have made the Export Development Corporation a partner in this reprehensible contract.

I want to deal with the question of visas for Bell employees. It is the stated policy of Saudi Arabia not to grant visas or work permits to members of the Jewish faith. The only exceptions are officials of governments, important journalists, industrialists who accompany officials or those who have been individually approached by the Saudis and asked to come. All application forms for visas to Saudi Arabia contain requests for information, and at a further stage in the process proof in the form of a baptismal or other certificate regarding the religion of the application. All this is specifically requested for the purpose of selecting out and excluding Jews.

The United States government's policy on this issue, as given to American applicants for Saudi visas, is that the religion question should not be answered and that it should be left blank. The U.S. government has made representations to the Saudis which have succeeded in developing a situation in which Saudi visas are granted to U.S. citizens without any specification as to religion. It seems to me that Canada has the same moral obligation to its citizens and to its corporations as has the United States, and we could well take a leaf from the experience and the policies of the United States government.

[Translation]

Mr. Charles Lapointe (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have followed very closely the hon. member in his comments and there is something he did not mention, that we should congratulate ourselves that a Canadian corporation such as Bell Canada has their expertise recognized by a friendly country such as Saudi Arabia. It is all to our honour as Canadians that this corporation's technology is put to help a country technologically less developed than we are in building a large scale telephone network.

Turning to the substance of the question, namely the Arab boycott clause, I am not in a position to confirm whether Bell Canada signed that clause in their contract. I share the hon. member's concern that Canadians, and more specifically those to which we are addressing tonight, Canadians of Jewish origin, could be denied the right to work through Bell Canada in a country such as Saudi Arabia. However, I feel we must exercise a degree of caution, we should not suggest that certain things are done in the United States and we, in Canada, should sign a blank cheque or blindly follow what is now done in the United States. And it appears to me that I am not, nor is any member of this House in a position to state specifically that Bell Canada's contract with Saudi Arabia would have been refused under the American legislation.

I feel, Mr. Speaker, that on various occasions the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Jamieson) and the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) indicated our deep repulsion for any boycott clause, whether the anti-Jewish boycott as proposed by some Arabian countries, or any other boycott for that matter, and this country's reputation is by far the best among countries of the world in the matter of human rights. We have always made it a point, both in our domestic and foreign policies, to ensure equal status for all our citizens, equal rights to every citizen whatever his ethnic, national, racial or religious origin. I feel that Canada's record in that respect is one of the most glorious, and I have no fear whatever that the Canadian government will go on defending human rights, and certainly those of our own citizens.

[English]

● (2217)

FISHERIES—ARRANGEMENTS WITH U.S. ON RECIPROCAL FISHING

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, for some years now Canadian and U.S. fishermen have enjoyed reciprocity in fishing rights off Canadian and American waters. In 1976 and 1977 an agreement was signed between the two governments, but about three weeks ago some of the American fishermen decided to ask for a court injunction against Canadian fishermen fishing off the coast of the state of Washington. On May 3, the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. LeBlanc) spoke in Montreal, and one of the subtitles of his speech was "What can go wrong". On May 8 I rose in the House to ask the following question, with the preamble quoting the minister's statement:

As we know now on the west coast, plenty can go wrong. I would like to read a sentence or two from the joint report to the governments of Canada and the United States:

"The negotiators have agreed to recommend to governments the terms of interim arrangements to govern reciprocal fishing during 1978. The proposed arrangements would continue reciprocal fishing as previously agreed, with new mechanisms for consultation and resolution of differences and to help ensure that existing fishing patterns are maintained."

As I have said, previous to that joint statement the Americans had asked for a court injunction against Canadian fisheries. That is the backdrop to the problems we face today.

The proposed 1978 agreement also included expanding fishing areas in the U.S. waters for Canadian fishermen. So far as I know, to this day the United States Congress has not signed that agreement. I understand from a newspaper report of May 11 in Victoria that the American fishermen agreed to drop the court injunction because they fully believe that the Canadian fishermen will not get the expanded areas in the U.S. waters.

Since that time the Canadian authorities have agreed to close down the Swiftsure bank to Canadian and U.S. fishermen, even though the Canadian authorities see no threat to the salmon stock from fishing there. The U.S. authorities feel that it is a threat but, so far as I know, they will not share their information with Canadians. This means that Canadians have lost their fishing rights to the Swiftsure banks, they have lost the rights to American waters, and, as I say, the Americans have not allowed the Canadians into their waters, even though the Canadians have kept their part of the bargain, albeit perhaps a few days or a few weeks late.

According to the minister's answers to the questions from the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt) a few days after I asked the question, the minister admitted that this might have been a bargaining position for the U.S. fishermen. It could well be that Canadians will never get the expanded fishing rights as proposed in the 1978 agreement. We are not talking about sport fishing or anything casual; we are talking about a major industry of Canada, and certainly of the Pacific coast. We are talking about a catch last year which amounted to 138 million pounds of salmon with a wholesale value of $230 million. The salmon resource base of British Columbia is the fourth most valuable primary industry. It supports 14,000 jobs, a large number of processing plants and a fleet of 5,000 vessels in the commercial industry.

● (2222)

I am concerned about the minister's answer to the question posed by the hon. member for New Westminster which reads as follows:

[Mr. Friesen.]

It is not as dramatic as the hon. member makes it sound. The fact is, however, that we have given the United States authorities a period of time in which to consult following the discussions which took place here last week. We have indicated that we cannot see a situation which would drag on all summer, because our fishermen would then be paying the price of the delay.

I might add that the significant fishery off the U.S. coast is not in early May but begins slightly later than that, and that our fishermen are still fishing off the coast of Alaska under the terms of the 1978 agreement.

How long is it going to be until we receive a firm commitment from the government that action against United States fishermen will be taken? Do our fishermen have to wait and wait until a decision is reached, during which time they lose their incomes? Do they have to sit by idly waiting for some casual agreement to take place before they can commence fishing? Are they to commence their fishing after the fish stock is gone, which has occurred in other years? Are they to sit by and let their livelihoods disappear while we take a casual approach to this matter?

Mr. Hugh A. Anderson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I am very, very pleased to respond to the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Friesen). Before I do, I should like to preface my remarks by making one very short statement. It is very easy to become involved in a war. It takes a bit of diplomacy and common sense not to get into that type of situation. It is not to the benefit of any fishermen, whether American or Canadian, to become involved in a war which will hurt both sides.

For a number of months we have been attempting to negotiate the maritime boundaries with the United States. Hopefully its congress will approve the interim agreement for 1978 which was signed in good faith by Ambassador Cadieux for the Dominion of Canada and Mr. Cutler for the United States of America. The fact that fishermen off the coast of Washington have chosen to bring in an injunction through the courts of the United States is perfectly within their rights. The fact that they have withdrawn it again is perfectly within their rights.

Surely the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock would not hold the federal government responsible for the fact that fishermen in the United States felt that Canada had negotiated an interim agreement which was to the benefit of Canadians rather than Americans. Senator Magnusson of the United States Senate committee on fisheries indicated in very strong terms that the United States had sold out its interests to Canadian fishermen. He asked for Canadians to be stopped from sneaking into the 200-mile limit, after the United States had taken very strong steps to put into effect that limit. Also he indicated that Canadians are the ones who take advantage and the ones who have the greatest benefits from the system. That is exactly the opposite to what various people in British Columbia have said—that it is the United States which gains all the benefits from negotiations with Canada. I would hope there is some sanity brought into the discussions of what has happened in respect of trollers off the coast of Washington of Canadian origin. I suggest it is in the best interest of those trollers—

● (2227)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. parliamentary secretary but his allotted time has expired. The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 o'clock p.m.

At 10:27 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, May 24, 1978

The House met at 2 p.m.

● (1407)

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

AIR TRANSPORT

CRASH OF PWA AIRCRAFT AT CRANBROOK, B.C.—LIABILITY FOR CLAIMS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to move a motion of urgency and concern to a number of Canadians. It has now been some 14 weeks without settlement of claims of the surviving families of those killed in the crash of the PWA Boeing jet at Cranbrook on February 11.

In light of the agreement that came out during the coroner's inquiry among counsel for Pacific Western Airlines, the Boeing Aircraft Company, the manufacturer of the reverse thrusters, the town of Cranbrook and others to pool the liability so that claims might be at least partially settled, thereby relieving the undue financial distress caused by this accident, and in light of the failure of this proposal being implemented because of refusal by counsel for the Ministry of Transport, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Brisco):

That this House direct counsel for the Ministry of Transport to immediately review its position with respect to the pooling of liability so that some measure of relief from the financial burden imposed on these families may be realized.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for discussion, pursuant to Standing Order 43, would require the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

TRANSPORT

REQUEST FOR BOXCAR REHABILITATION PROGRAM FOR GRAIN MOVEMENT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, that being the mounting crisis in Canada's grain industry reflected in what as of this week amounts to a one million ton backlog in shipping. Ships are now waiting to load grain in all Canadian ports—Vancouver, Thunder Bay and on the St. Lawrence. Because of the seriousness of this matter, which will reflect itself in lower quota levels, a larger than expected carry-over of western Canadian grain, and demurrage charges that will be the highest on record, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. Hamilton):

That the government immediately pass an order in council freeing money for the 4,000 grain hopper cars the Canadian Wheat Board has requested and launch immediately into a boxcar rehabilitation program.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion, pursuant to Standing Order 43, would require the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

HOUSE OF COMMONS

METHOD OF DEALING WITH QUESTIONS OF PRIVILEGE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of the same Standing Order. In view of the allegations that the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) has violated the privileges of this House, I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay):

That in the event our Speaker finds a prima facie question of privilege in that case, that this House at the same time be given an opportunity to vote again on the question raised concerning the violations of the privileges of the hon. member for Nickel Belt—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Leggatt:

—so that we may have an opportunity to support—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Leggatt:

—Mr. Speaker in all instances—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Leggatt:

—and not merely those which may suit our convenience.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

S.O. 43

[Translation]

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT WILL REVISE POSITION RESPECTING QUEBEC SALES TAX—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I request the unanimous consent of the House to present a motion on an important and urgent matter.

In view of the statement made last Sunday by the leader of the Quebec Liberal party to the effect that stubbornness of the federal government in the dispute over the sales tax has increased the popular appeal of the independent option of the Quebec government, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That this House request the government to alter its policies which, in addition to being unfair, also do considerable harm to the unity of the country, and that it agree to revise its current position with regard to the sales tax.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Pursuant to Standing Order 43, presentation of such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

[English]

TRANSPORT

COMPENSATION FOR LOSSES INCURRED IN SINKING OF M. V. "WILLIAM CARSON"—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the fact that the m. v. William Carson sank off Labrador on June 3, 1977, almost 12 months ago, with the result that 37 passengers and the crew of 91 lost their possessions and various cargo owners lost cargo totalling 1,000 tons, all of which resulted in severe financial loss and hardship to passengers and cargo owners, particularly in Labrador, and especially because CN Marine refused to pay for the losses of passengers and cargo owners, and in view of the fact that the hon. Mr. Justice Noel, as a commissioner, has now found that due to the default of the operator of the vessel, CN railway company, and her master the sinking was caused by ice penetrating the hull, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall):

That the government instruct CN Marine to pay immediately to the passengers and crew on board the m. v. William Carson on June 3 and to the owners of cargo their losses, costs and expenses immediately so they will be spared further hardship, together with interest on amounts due since last June 3, and that the government advise CN Marine that it will be held responsible financially to the government for the costs involved to the government and taxpayers of Canada in the loss of the said vessel.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for debate requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

[Mr. Speaker.]

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

● (1412)

NATIONAL DEFENCE

GOVERNMENT POSITION ON NUCLEAR ARMS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the terms of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Some two weeks ago, in answer to a question, the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Danson) stated in the House:

We do not have any nuclear weapons nor would they be deployed on our soil.

One week later he said he never answered questions on that subject. But this week he has changed his mind again and is answering questions on the subject outside the House, contradicting his original answer which misled the House. I would, therefore, move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie):

That this House direct the Minister of National Defence to make a statement on motions clearly setting out the truth about Canada's nuclear position and explaining to the House his misleading remarks on May 8 and 15.

Mr. Speaker: Under the terms of Standing Order 43, such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

GOVERNMENT POLICY ON DEPLOYMENT OF NEUTRON BOMB—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, in light of the fact that the world disarmament conference is taking place at the present time and that the question of the production of the neutron bomb will be on the agenda, and since it has been suggested by the press that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) proposes to disclose the Canadian view on this question at the conference, I ask consent to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on an urgent matter of pressing necessity. I would move, seconded by the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt):

That this House direct the government forthwith to disclose to the House of Commons, the proper forum for such disclosures, what is the attitude of the Canadian government as a member of NATO and of the international society to the production and deployment of this bomb.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion would require the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

NATIONAL SECURITY

GRANTS TO ALLEGED TERRORIST ORGANIZATIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgency concerning the fact that the Progressive Conservative government of Ontario yesterday blocked a $25,000 Ontario Arts Council grant pending a full review of the operations of the Kensington Arts Centre, the Centre for Experimental Art and Communication, and the tabloid "Strike" which supports terrorism. I might add that the city of Toronto took similar action a few days ago. In light of these decisions, I ask consent to move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie):

That this House condemns the government and the Secretary of State in particular for failing to take similar action and for failing to justify the allocation of large sums of public money to these groups previously; and, finally, demands an explanation from the Prime Minister as to why he continuously maintains a position of silent inaction with regard to the award of public funds to extreme leftist-oriented organizations which advocate terrorism.

Mr. Speaker: In conformity with Standing Order 43, unanimous consent is required before the motion can be presented. Is there such consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

AIRPORTS

UPGRADING OF SAFETY AND NAVIGATIONAL FACILITIES—CRASH AT CRANBROOK, B.C.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. In light of the implications of the report of the coroner's inquiry into the crash of the Pacific Western jet on February 11 at Cranbrook which, among other things, publicly rebuked the minister and called for immediate and necessary changes with respect to certain navigational, communications and firefighting capacities, would the minister tell us what steps he intends to take to meet these recommendations and in a general way to upgrade the standard of airports such as Cranbrook?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): First of all, in referring to me the coroner was actually dealing with certain reports and statements, some of them taken out of context. I am not sure how far apart we would be if we were meeting face to face.

● (1417)

We have an investigation under way and our experts will continue to analyse all factors from an aviation and safety point of view. The results will be reviewed by our independent review board and at that point I will expect to receive a report and to be acting upon it.

Mr. Forrestall: I appreciate the minister's response, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if he is now in a position to indicate to the House whether consultations with the various provinces and other jurisdictions have gone far enough to permit him to move ahead with tabling in this House the long overdue legislation with respect to the establishment of an independent commission of inquiry.

If consultations have not gone that far or proceeded to that point at this stage, is the minister now prepared to indicate to the House and to the people of Canada that he will name a senior court judge with competent authority to conduct a proper public inquiry so as to remove the uncertainty and continuing confusion surrounding this tragic incident?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, my answers to those questions really remain the same as they were last week. I will await the report from our investigating team before deciding on the second question.

As far as the first question is concerned, it has been our proposal to go ahead with an independent accident board. One of the questions which has involved most of the time in discussions with the provinces and others has been the matter of the provisions which can assure that the role of coroners is not interfered with in any way by the accident board which we may create. Those discussions have been very useful and I think have very much warranted the time we will have spent between first proposing the board and the time when we will introduce the legislation. We are now in the final phase of developing proposals, after those discussions, into legislative form, and as soon as that is complete we will move forward with the legislation.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the minister is now prepared to have further consultations with the Minister of Justice and other colleagues with a view to having counsel for the ministry reopen the question of the pooling of liability so that at least a partial settlement of claims arising out of this accident might be proceeded with. There is some urgency and considerable financial distress. Has the minister addressed himself to this question? Is it a matter of ongoing concern within the department, or must we wait until the minister has all the final reports and until he can make some judgment about the establishment of a public commission of inquiry?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, the matter of compensation for persons seriously affected by an accident like this is always of great concern to us all. The matter is very much in hand. It is being handled by our legal personnel in consultation with myself and the Minister of Justice and I hope progress can be made, but I do not think it would be appropriate for the details of the problem to be analysed here in this House rather than being handled by the lawyers and representatives of the parties involved.

Oral Questions

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

CRASH OF PWA AIRCRAFT AT CRANBROOK, B.C.—EVIDENCE AVAILABLE TO CORONER'S INQUEST

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Minister of Justice concerning the same air crash which took place on February 11 and in which 43 people lost their lives. When the coroner was summing up, he rebuked the federal Minister of Transport for his suggestion that the inquest should concern itself only with the immediate cause of death. The coroner went on to say that inquests have a tradition of 1,000 years.

Did the Minister of Transport consult with the Minister of Justice, the chief law officer of Canada, regarding the advisability of holding a public inquiry prior to the inquest or while the inquest was adjourned so that all the best evidence—and I emphasize, best evidence—could be placed before the coroner and so there would have been scientific research done with reference to the tape which was transcribed but which was not clear?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): No, Mr. Speaker, not with me personally. Whether he consulted with officers of my department or his officers consulted with officers of my department, I am unable to say today.

CRASH OF PWA AIRCRAFT AT CRANBROOK, B.C.—CONSULTATION BETWEEN MINISTERS OF JUSTICE AND TRANSPORT

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to turn to the Minister of Transport. The Minister of Transport has heard my question with reference to the rebuke by the coroner. Did the Minister of Transport consult with the Minister of Justice and, if not, why not, especially when the Minister of Transport refused at the beginning to have the tape admitted as evidence and then later changed his mind?

● (1422)

Did the minister consider, not only as Minister of Transport but as a person with some knowledge of the law, that a public inquiry would have added to the best evidence not only on the cause of death but on the cause of the crash which led to 43 people meeting death?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): It is obvious that hon. members will stray a long way away from the facts when they rely on press reports and on what are not even correct statements. Of course, he has the example of the hon. member for York-Simcoe who creates press reports of a similar false nature. Perhaps that is part of their operation.

If the hon. member had listened to my first answer, he would have noted that the coroner was not even dealing with a very exact expression of any statement of mine in dealing with the issue of coroners' inquests and accident review boards. So we part company on that. Second, if the hon. member had watched the second set of press reports instead of the first, he would have known that at no time did we refuse to make the tapes available. We did indicate at a certain stage to the coroner that we did not have what we considered to be the final transcript available. What we had was a rather incomplete one; in fact, one not unlike the one he had earlier thrown out when it was produced in front of him by someone else. We could not produce what we did not have; I think that position is very clear. But it was also very clear to us that, in fact, we were always willing to produce the evidence which we had available when it was asked for.

Mr. Woolliams: It is rather strange to hear the minister talk about evidence when he actually refused to give them the tape—now he says he did not refuse, but that is not what the report states—or transcribe the tape so scientific research could be done and so that the pure facts could be put before that inquest. I put this question to him again: Why did he refuse to have a public inquiry so that the best evidence could be put before that inquest, not the evidence he is now trying to set out here in the House?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I would think that the hon. member would accept the fact not only as it was in the press but what I say to him, namely, that we always made the tapes available and were willing to make them available. What we could not do was to provide a transcript which we did not have. Having regard for the traditions of the House, I would think that when I said that for the second time the hon. member would accept that statement without any further problem.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: You are testy, Otto.

Mr. Lang: I see that hon. members opposite from the Tory party have no respect for the traditions of the House and I am not surprised to see that further evidenced today.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: Testy ministers get nowhere, Otto.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, the experts who are in the process of analysing what is on the tapes have indicated that it may take them a month to complete their analysis to a degree of satisfaction which is really adequate for conclusions to be drawn from it. When experts who know the business of what they are analysing tell me that, I accept it as a fact; and, indeed, any final conclusion or any final report of a successful investigation will only come about after that transcript has been completed to the best satisfaction of experts. I hope the hon. member will find a way to accept that as a fact as well.

Mr. Alexander: What are you getting so sore about?

TRANSPORT

RECOMMENDATIONS OF HALL REPORT

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): It was touching to hear the Minister of Transport give verbal support to parliamentary institutions. A royal commission headed by Mr. Justice Emmett Hall made a recommendation to this parliament and to the minister. Mr. Justice Hall is quoted in the press yesterday as saying:

The federal government has virtually ignored the recommendations in the report.

He also said:

Lip service has been given to the report rather than its being implemented.

So much for parliamentary respect for tradition. I ask the minister whether he can now assure the House that he will stop subverting this eminently sensible report and positively go beyond that and assure the House that at this time the government accepts the full recommendations of that report and intends to implement them as a package.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, when the government receives a report of a commission, the government still has to take the responsibility for either carrying out or not carrying out the provisions or the recommendations of that commission. I think that also is an understood tradition of the House. In fact, we have carried out very effectively and very fully most of the important recommendations of the Hall commission which, after all, was composed of five eminent commissioners.

I have great respect for Mr. Justice Hall—he is an old friend, colleague and teacher—but the fact is that I find it very hard to sustain his objection to our not going ahead with the prairie rail authority when I have the support for not going ahead with it of virtually every farm organization, including the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, the Alberta Wheat Pool, the Manitoba Wheat Pool, Palliser, Unifarm and all the other important organizations in the farm areas of the west. Furthermore, if Mr. Justice Hall or any of the opposition speakers think that it is wrong for us to go ahead with a $700 million program for rebuilding rail lines, I would like them to go out to the communities of the west and say so. For my part, it is the most important thing which has been done for western rail lines and grain handling for a long, long time. It will continue to be well received in the west. It is important there, and I will fight for it.

● (1427)

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I rather thought the minister would give me precisely the answer he did. Mr. Justice Hall is probably an ex-friend of the minister at this point, not a current friend.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: He has said that the government, in all its wisdom, intends to spend the next eight years doing what farmers in western Canada need now: he is going to spread that over eight years.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Considering that the time-frame for upgrading the grain handling facilities of western Canada is now, not eight years down the road and, considering that we have over one million unemployed, will he not do what the Hall commission intended and what the farmers want: will he not cut this time in half and spend the money, which he has announced for eight years, over a four-year period to meet the needs of western farmers as well as to provide jobs to people in Nova Scotia who would be employed in building those facilities?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, at least I am glad the hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party endorses the spending of $700 million on rail rebuilding, which apparently was not being endorsed in his earlier quote.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lang: However, I should like the hon. member to recognize that the eight-year period makes very good sense in terms of planning the rebuilding program and the use of crews. Indeed, I had representations from the unions involved to spread the rebuilding over that kind of time period so that sensible work could be done. Furthermore, before this work could be done or begun in any sensible way, we had to go about the business of buying the necessary ballast cars, dump cars and sleds to do the work.

We have a $47 million order of those pieces of equipment in the process of being filled. With that equipment we will be able to carry out this program and complete the work in eight years. The important thing is that at the end of the eight-year period we will have a permanent grain system in the west, with every line retained in that permanent system rebuilt to standards to carry hopper cars and rebuilt in a manner which will confirm the faith of communities in the fact that that system is going to be around for a long time to come. This is dramatic action in favour of western farmers and western communities, and I think it will be seen as that out there.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the minister is not making speeches in his constituency now.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: He would not make that speech in his constituency.

Mr. Broadbent: He has made no fewer than three distortions in his answer: I will not put it any more bluntly than that. Since he talked about spending the money, he knows full well the Hall royal commission recommended that we stop giving away millions of dollars carte blanche to the railway companies, and instead recommended that any compensatory payments made to subsidize the railways between their costs and the actual Crow rate should be made to them in the context of the government announcing its intention to maintain the Crow rate and putting the onus on the railways to maintain and upgrade the grain handling facilities.

Given that recommendation, which is central to the needs of western farmers, could he tell us why he continues to give out millions of dollars to the railways? Second, why has he not made an unequivocal commitment to maintain the Crow rate?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, time and time again I have made the unequivocal commitment to maintain the Crow rate. I have said it is extremely important to me, as a westerner, that the value of the Crow rate be considered in the full relationship in this country of the cost of the tariff to grain farmers. I have observed that there may be better ways of conferring those benefits. When the west is ready to receive those benefits in another way, I will be delighted about that. The rate is being maintained; therefore, it is completely clear that that recommendation is being carried out. In any case, there is no departure from the Hall commission recommendation in that regard.

● (1432)

With regard to the moneys being paid to the railways, the Hall commission in its report would have us pay something in the order of $200 million to $250 million a year over the next four years, on and forever in order to make up the difference. We are not paying that full amount; we are paying that part of the amount which we force the railways to match dollar for dollar into the rebuilding of rail lines. In other words, every dollar we transfer is for the purchase of equipment to rebuild those lines and for the actual rebuilding of the lines. We have not given the extra $150 million or so which the NDP is now urging we give to the railways. Imagine that, Mr. Speaker—the NDP urging that we give that amount to the railways.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

* * *

[Translation]

MANPOWER

CANADA WORKS PROGRAM—INQUIRY WHETHER FUNDS WILL BE REDUCED

Mr. C. A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. It looks as if the minister has already decided to reduce the personnel in charge of the preparation of projects under the Canada Works program in my area. A few employees have been laid off so far, so that in November not more than 50 per cent of the personnel will be left.

Does the minister mean by that that he intends to cut his third phase budget down by 50 per cent of what it was for previous phases?

[English]

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): No, Mr. Speaker, what we will, in effect, be doing is maintaining the figure at $225 million. But in keeping with the recommendations of the first ministers' conference, and as a result of recommendations from both sides of this House, $50 million of that will be put into the economic growth component factor so we will be able to create more permanent jobs rather than the temporary jobs created under the Canada Works program. We are trying to blend the two programs to make them as effective as possible in dealing with unemployment.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, is the minister not concerned that with such a restricted personnel, even if it is permanent, the quality of the projects might suffer because they will not have time to make the necessary contacts with promoters and that could affect the number of projects?

[English]

Mr. Cullen: Yes, Mr. Speaker, most assuredly I have that concern, but I also recognize that the people who are on the job recognize the responsibility they have and will do their utmost to see that the quality of the projects does not, in fact, suffer. But you cannot have it both ways: on one hand criticizing the government for spending too much money, and on the other suggesting that we continue to hire temporary employees to complete our staff. You cannot have it both ways.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question. Can the minister tell the House if we can expect about the same amounts for phase III as for phase II?

[English]

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, certainly the figure will be reduced by about 22 per cent, in rough figures, but not in each riding. The figures in that respect will come out in approximately one weeks time. Where unemployment has increased in a particular region, of course, there may be more money available. The basic figure for each riding will be established at about $150,000, rather than $50,000, so it is difficult until we come out with specifics on each individual riding to give the hon. member a better answer.

* * *

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF DELEGATES OF CANADA-MEXICO BUSINESSMEN'S COMMITTEE

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Before continuing the question period, I know that all hon. members will want to join with me in signalling the presence in our gallery of a distinguished visitor, the chairman of the Businessmen's Committee in his own country and head of the delegation to the eighth bilateral Canada-Mexico Businessmen's Committee in the person of Mr. José B. Zozaya.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

TRANSPORT

COMPENSATION FOR LOSSES INCURRED IN SINKING OF M. V. "WILLIAM CARSON"

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Yesterday the minister released the report of Mr. Justice Noel on the sinking of the Canadian vessel m.v. William Carson last June 3. In that report Mr. Justice Noel finds that the sinking was the fault of the vessel's operator, Canadian National Railways, and her master.

The report is dated January 27, which is 116 days ago. When did the minister receive the report, and why has it been delayed so long in being made public? In view of this finding that the CNR was responsible or was at fault, is the minister going to direct the CNR to pay the passengers and crew loss claims and the cargo owners their claims which have been in abeyance now for 11 months? They were to be paid for personal effects. There has been a great deal of hardship in Labrador, Happy Valley, because of these claims not being paid. Will the CNR now be directed to pay them?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I would have to check the exact date on which I received the report. The time in between has been taken up with printing and preparation for publication, as well as for some advance distribution to provincial authorities, and so on. It would not be my intention to give directions to the Canadian National. I am sure they are looking at their legal position and what is their proper course of action. They have, no doubt, the knowledge that I would want them to do what is right for them to do.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, it is very important to find out when this report was received. Some 16 weeks is a long time to print a report. If the minister could check that, I am sure the House would be interested. A number of cargo owners in Labrador were practically made bankrupt by the loss of this cargo, not insured by the CN, and they neglected to insure it themselves because they always considered they could recover if the vessel owner was at fault. Will the minister take steps to have the CN speed up the settlement, in view of this finding, to help these people who have had a lot of problems in the last 11 months?

The other part of my question is, what about the government itself? The government owns this vessel. Is it now going to take action against the CN to recover the value of the vessel at the time of the sinking due to the finding of fault on the part of the CN, or are the taxpayers going to be asked to cough up the $4 million odd to meet the fault that the judge found on the part of the CN? What action is the government going to take?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I would certainly be glad if I could do anything to speed up the resolution of the questions referred to in the first part of the hon. member's question. As far as the second part is concerned, the Canadian National was operating this vessel on behalf of the government and I would want first to have legal advice as to the implications of that in respect of any potential claim.

STEPS TO IMPROVE GRAIN HANDLING

Mr. Frank Hamilton (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board. As the backlog of grain exports on the west coast continues to worsen, and we now have over 10 million bushels of lake shipping waiting idle at Thunder Bay, with the Churchill movement about to begin, it seems the only way out of the transportation tangle is to comply with the Canadian Wheat Board's request that the government help repair out-of-service boxcars and order some additional hopper cars.

Has the government approved a program to repair 5,000 out-of-service boxcars as requested, and has the government let a contract for an additional 4,000 hopper cars, because the Canadian Wheat Board now has 10,000 fewer boxcars at its disposal than it had when the minister first took over?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, what the Wheat Board has at its disposal is, of course, 8,000 additional hopper cars, at a cost of $255 million, supplied by the people of Canada to ensure that there would indeed be a significant ability to move our grain. The very question of additional cars is one to which the hon. member knows I have always given close attention, having been the initiator of the program to purchase hopper cars and renewing those orders to the extent that 8,000 have now been acquired.

We are looking at the question of additional acquisition at this point in time. The movement of grain is making use of all possible cars. We are also looking at the question of how to turn those cars around more quickly. I welcome the hon. member's support for the additional steps in repair and the purchase of cars, because there are those who have been critical of this thought and I am very happy to have support from him in this regard.

Mr. Hamilton (Swift Current-Maple Creek): The highest quality grain line in Canada, the southern line through Saskatchewan, has not had a train since last March. I would repeat that the Wheat Board now has 10,000 fewer boxcars to use than when the minister took over. I ask him, once again, if he will look at the transportation section in that way.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, in fact, the hon. member is quite wrong: the Wheat Board had zero cars. The railways have a certain number of boxcars for a variety of services. We now have—that is, the Wheat Board and government—8,000 hopper cars. That is an increase of 8,000. Whether a train is run on a particular line is very often a decision taken by the Wheat Board and the railways, having regard to the conditions of the line. In spring conditions, and until these lines are rebuilt to proper standards, there will be these difficulties. Again, I now welcome the hon. member's support for the program of rebuilding which has come under some criticism from other corners of the opposition.

Oral Questions

● (1442)

RAILWAYS' GRAIN CARRYING FACILITIES

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Transport. The problem rests largely with the rapid decline of the railways' grain carrying fleet. Just to inform the minister, our figures indicate that the capacity of the grain carrying fleet has been reduced by some 20 million bushels since 1975, and projections indicate that by 1981 it will have been reduced to some 6,300 cars, from 20,000 cars in 1975. It is hardly an encouraging situation.

Can the minister explain, in view of these circumstances, how the government can justify the payment of these huge subsidies, these huge hand-outs to the railways—the $700 million that the minister referred to earlier and the $800 million write-off of the CNR debt—while they at the same time are reducing their grain fleets and are not discharging their mandate and responsibility? To many, this constitutes the sell-out of the century.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, first of all, it is useful to put the hon. member's question into context since this year, when he says we have reduced the capacity for moving grain, we are likely to move into export 850 million bushels and perhaps one billion bushels in total, which along with two other years earlier in time than my responsibility for the Wheat Board represent a record three years of all-time movement. We have the capacity to move a lot of grain, but we are not satisfied with that because we believe there will be more grain, and a need for more, and we will continue to move it.

I find it odd that the hon. member now comes down against his colleague in criticizing financial support for the rebuilding of the rail lines. This is not a gift to the railways; it is a transfer of funds to obtain a very specific upgrading of branch lines like the Conquest line which was completed during the course of last summer, and hundreds of thousands of miles of line which will be completed during the course of this summer. It is far less than the transfer we would make to the railways if we had carried out literally the recommendation of the Hall commission report which has just been urged upon me by a variety of colleagues. That would have seen twice as much money per year go to the railways, without the commitment in relation to upgrading unless we had actually put in more money. We are getting exact results for our dollars, whether in hopper cars or rebuilt lines, when we spend the dollars to get the results.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, to put the matter in perspective, I am quoting figures from the minister's own publication put out by the Canadian Wheat Board entitled "Grain Matters". The fact is that the railways' fleet has been reduced dramatically, while the government pours millions of dollars into the hands of the railways with, obviously, no strings attached. Is the minister going to undertake a review of the policy in this regard to ensure that the railways will not only maintain an adequate fleet but will ensure that that fleet is operative at all times?

[Mr. Lang.]

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, the very gist of the recommendations of Hall and Snavely in this regard were that the government should pay the railways enough money so that they would in fact be able to operate at a profit in this area. They would have had us transfer the money without strings attached. What we have done is quite the contrary: every dollar that we have put in, whether for the rebuilding of lines or for the purchase of hopper cars, has been directly for results that are visible. Every dollar is visible there. Not one of those dollars, in addition to that, has gone for the profit or better advantage of the railway systems.

The railways, of course, have been letting their systems deteriorate. Without the cash which the Snavely and Hall commissions found them to be short of, they have not been rebuilding cars. Thus, in 1972 and at intervals since that time this government has been taking action by buying hopper cars and putting them in place.

Mr. Mazankowski: Sit down.

Mr. Lang: So, Mr. Speaker, when you talk about dropping from 20,000 cars to 7,000, you really should not ignore the 8,000 hopper cars which, after all, have 1 1/2 times the capacity of even the best boxcars.

* * *

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

DEMURRAGE CHARGES ON GRAIN NOT MOVED TO EXPORT

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, my question is also to the Minister of Transport. In view of the fact that demurrage charges for the 1977-78 crop year will possibly total $17 million to $20 million, the highest in our history, in view of the fact that these charges are incurred through no fault of the producers but, rather, as a result of this government's incompetence, and in view of the fact that the grain producers' income is being eroded year by year, and that the minister stated recently there will be no final payment this crop year, will the minister give an undertaking that all or a portion of the demurrage charges will be borne by the public treasury for this year?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the last estimate that I saw with regard to demurrage charges was that it would not be as high this year as in the record year. Therefore, the hon. member is using imagined figures again. He says "possibly", but they are simply in his imagination. I should say, as well, to correct the hon. member, that I certainly never made a blanket statement about no final payments and, indeed, I would expect final payments with regard to many types of grain, including barley, select barley, and durum. There had been some question about the spring wheat pool, although I must say that with wheat prices now having moved into the area of $4.30 to $4.35 a bushel, things are looking rather better.

Mr. Neil: Mr. Speaker, I might point out that the information as to the figure of $17 million to $20 million comes from the Canadian Wheat Board. Is there some doubt about what is going on? As a supplementary, can the minister confirm that because of the situation in the St. Lawrence Seaway, namely, with 12 ships waiting and 12 due this week, demurrage charges will be incurred in the St. Lawrence for the first time in history?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to look into that. Of course, the fact is that when we have a record movement in grain, we are bound to run into situations where the system is not capable, with a lot of slack, to deal with delays and ship arrivals and the need for cars in all directions at the same time. This year we have a particularly tight situation because potash movements are at very, very high levels. We have a shortage of potash cars for potash movement alone and the normal movement of cars from potash to grain is not taking place.

I wish hon. members would understand that when you shoot for a record, you may not have a transportation and handling system capable, without a little bit of tough sledding, of easily handling that record. We have a system that can handle twice as much as ever had to be handled during the regime of the right hon. gentleman from Prince Albert, because we are up to twice as much in our regular pattern.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

* * *

PUBLIC SERVICE

PROPOSED CHANGES IN JOB CLASSIFICATIONS

Mr. Lloyd Francis (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the President of the Treasury Board. Was the preliminary 1976 study of job classification in the Ottawa-Hull region, to which reference was made in this House yesterday, based on a comparison of jobs within the public service and jobs in private industry? If the study was not based upon comparisons with outside private employers, is it the intention of the government to conduct a number of similar studies before suggesting changes in something like 16 per cent of the job classifications in the public service?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the classification study of 1976 was an internal audit, as the hon. member knows, of a sampling of the federal public service in the national capital region. It was to some degree based on comparisons on the outside world and comparisons with other levels of public service, but as to the recognition of overclassification and underclassification, that study is now being continued in a second audit in the public service outside the nation's capital. We will not be drawing any final conclusions about changes to classifications or methods of monitoring until we get the other report, which I expect in about two or three months. We will be discussing any proposals as a result of that matter with the various public service bargaining agents involved.

* * *

TRANSPORT

REPAIR OF RAILWAY CARS TO IMPROVE GRAIN HANDLING

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would return to the Minister of Transport and to questions asked earlier today. In view of the splendid performance in achieving the goal of a new record in grain movement, which could be increased if we had sufficient railway rolling-stock to an even larger record than the minister envisages, could he advise the House what action he is taking to require the railroads to repair and refurbish railway cars? In view of the fact that taxpayers have already provided 8,000 hopper cars and we have not gained ground in the capacity to move grain because of the withdrawal of rolling-stock by the railroads from grain movement, can the minister say if he is taking any action to require the railroads to repair some of their equipment?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, we do not necessarily have the power to require the railways to do that without the dollars to go with the requirement. Certainly, whether we have the technical power or not, the spirit of the Hall and Snavely commissions was that because the railways do not make enough money out of moving grain, we ought to pay the railways additional sums so that they would have the facility to keep their stock in good shape. We have chosen to go a more limited route than that, and that is to specifically acquire equipment or authorize rebuilding of cars. We have now, in addition to the 8,000 hopper cars, rebuilt at a cost of $4 million or $5 million a certain number of boxcars so that they will remain longer in the fleet, and we are now looking into the question of what we should do with approximately 5,000 cars which will be retired unless they are repaired. We in the government are looking into that question at the moment.

• (1452)

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I find it amazing that the government cannot tell a railway that we own what they should do. While the government and the taxpayers of Canada were placing hopper cars on track, since April of last year the railways have removed 1,881 cars from grain movement. They will be removing another 501 by July 1, 1978, and another 700 and some by December of this year. Canadian Pacific's $50 million—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the hon. member has a supplementary question, will he please put it.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that none of the investment being made by CP and CN is going toward grain cars designed to move grain, and the railroads are withdrawing rolling-stock so that we are not improving our capacity to move grain to the ports to load ships, can the minister say if he will now instruct Canadian National and if he will now request, if not require, Canadian Pacific to channel some of that investment into rehabilitation of several thousand railway cars that are presently sitting around not being used?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I would not request the railways to divert money which they are now putting into other investments such as cars, plant or equipment because that investment is needed as well for the movement of many other products. The very specific question is, what should be done additionally to make sure they have capacity to move grain? The Hall commission recommended that we pay the railways a couple of hundred million dollars a year and then have them rebuild the cars and the like.

We do not think we have at this moment the cash to make that kind of contribution, so we are looking at the very specific issue of the purchasing of additional hopper cars, the repairing of certain cars, as well as the rebuilding of track. It is not that the railways are withdrawing these cars out of some kind of malicious design: the cars are effectively coming to the end of their useful life unless they are rebuilt. So it is a major investment decision as well as a major financing decision whether the cars should be rebuilt, and then by whom they should be rebuilt or who should pay for them. According to the Hall and Snavely reports, it is very clear that the cash must come from the government because the Crowsnest rate does not give the railways enough to do their job.

That is the very issue we are considering, having previously taken steps to rebuild lines, to build hopper cars, to repair cars so that we have this record movement of 850 million bushels of grain. I am not content to rest with that movement because I am looking forward in two or three years to the movement of a billion bushels of grain into export.

PURCHASE OF HOPPER CARS

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Transport. According to very reliable sources within the Canadian Wheat Board—and we are talking about this week—yesterday there were one million tons of shipping waiting at all ports in Canada and over 300,000 tons waiting in the St. Lawrence area. Also, according to the Canadian Wheat Board, the record the minister talks about will not be reached this year, demurrage will be in the area of $20 million and quotas will not be as high as expected.

Will the minister inform the House whether he is giving consideration to allocating moneys for building the 4,000 hopper cars which have been repeatedly requested by the Canadian Wheat Board?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, three times today and in previous question periods I indicated that that very matter is being considered. Indeed, the specific request from the Canadian Wheat Board was a response to my request to them to give me an analysis as to their need for cars. There are some who think we can move more grain with the existing cars by turning those cars around more quickly and taking various further steps. That is a question we must also address carefully. We are addressing that and at this moment in the government we are considering what the next steps should be with what are obviously very limited dollars in Canada, for all kinds of purposes, in order to ensure that this constant grain movement which is so important to our country can continue.

Mr. Murta: Mr. Speaker, we are in a situation at the present time where there is no doubt that things are getting worse in terms of the movement of grain, and the backlog is not being used up: it is getting worse, and it will get worse between now and the end of the crop year. Can the minister inform the House whether there will be any grain sales lost to the Canadian Wheat Board because we cannot export the amount of grain that we should be exporting?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, at particular points in time the fact that our transportation system has already been committed to its full capacity means that we cannot add to that. We have been stretching it to the limit. As a result of that, it has obviously got into the odd back-up situation when ships have been late and, therefore, cars have not been available. This situation does happen. We can, indeed, lose some sales. It should be recognized that the volume we are moving this year is, effectively, more than the available grain from the whole of the 1977 crop plus a significant amount of the backlog available from the previous year. That was a very good crop: it was close to being one of the best.

We are moving the whole of the available crop plus, perhaps, a couple of million bushels of the rest. We have been managing to do that with our system because of the steps we took in planning to make sure it could happen. A few years ago the thought of being able to move 600 million bushels was a dream—a dream which was suggested from time to time in the early 1960s. We have now moved over 800 million bushels and, with this year, it will be three years this has been done.

* * *

HEALTH AND WELFARE

CELEBRATIONS FOR INTERNATIONAL YEAR OF THE CHILD

Miss Coline Campbell (South Western Nova): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Could the minister tell the House if the government has plans for the celebration of the International Year of the Child and, if so, will the private sector be involved in these plans?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, plans for the celebration next year of the International Year of the Child in Canada by governments and the private sector are currently under consideration in cabinet. As soon as I am able to make an announcement, I will do so.

* * *

TRANSPORT

SUGGESTION INADEQUATE GRAIN HANDLING FACILITIES HARMFUL TO EXPORTS

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with continued interest to the observations of the minister. I have never heard anything to equal the babble that he put out here today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Indeed, some of the statements that he made bore no relationship to the truth.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I was referred to, and surely I can answer.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member was indeed referred to, and he has the floor. It is the question period, it is not a debate, and the hon. member will have to put a question.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I might point out that the minister dragged me in; I did not do it.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: As far as his statements are concerned, I cannot use an expression which was used the other day and caused the eviction of one of our members, but I can quote Nye Bevan who said, "It's time to puncture this bladder of falsehood with the poignard of truth."

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: I ask one simple question. Does he realize that under the previous Liberal government, when we came into office there were 600 million bushels piled up, the government could not sell any, and it was sold under our administration?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Because we stand in danger of losing potential markets, I ask the minister just one question. Having regard to the Chinese purchases which we secured in the face of the most outrageous criticism on the part of the Liberals—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: —did he not say the other day that Canada will likely miss out on major new wheat sales to China because of the outmoded prairie railway transport system? Is that a fact? Did he say that? I am quoting from a summary of Hansard.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: I ask him: Are we in danger of losing any potential contracts with China because of outmoded transportation facilities?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Order.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I always enjoy dragging the right hon. gentleman into these debates. He has been a little hesitant to ask questions recently, and I am glad to see him back at it. He talks about selling grain. He accuses me of not giving facts, yet in his long preamble he did not refer to any single fact or statement which is wrong: he simply makes the generalization.

● (1502)

I repeat, during the time he was Prime Minister we at no time exported 500 million bushels of grain. We have not been below 600 million bushels of grain in the time that I have been responsible for the Wheat Board. We have continued to maintain a first-rate, superb relationship with China. We will continue to be one of the principal suppliers to them, and they will continue to be a main source of our marketing. The right hon. gentleman appears to approve of that: I am glad he does. Let him or his leader, if he recognizes him, go to Alberta—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lang: —and tell that to the Premier of Alberta who the other day criticized us for having too large a share of our market committed to China. The fact is that in 1961-62, with the right hon. member, it began to be 22 per cent. This year it is about 23 per cent. The thing is, of course, that the 23 per cent with us is twice as much as 22 per cent was with the right hon. member.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This promises to be a very fascinating debate. It is not the proper subject of a question period; however, I will permit one supplementary.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am still waiting to be free of the circumlocution common to the law faculty of Saskatchewan when he was dean. I am now asking, did he, or did he not, state the other day that we stand in danger of losing potential markets in China? "Yes" or "no"— no evasion, no equivocation and no mental reservation?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, the answer is no, I did not. The right hon. member's summary is as bad as his summaries usually are. Once again he failed to refer to any fact which he said I had put in error before him. He simply stands and makes these personal attacks which have no bearing whatsoever upon the facts.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

PRIVILEGE

MR. BASFORD—FINANCE—ALLEGATIONS MADE BY HON. MEMBER FOR YORK-SIMCOE REGARDING SPECULATION ON DOLLAR BY MPs

Mr. Speaker: Yesterday, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) raised by way of a question of privilege certain remarks which were attributed to the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens), who indicated that he would be here today. I understand he now wishes to contribute to that subject.

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege relating to the matter raised yesterday in this House by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles).

I regret I was not in the House yesterday to deal with the subject when it was first raised, but I had made three commitments in my home area which I simply could not cancel at the last minute. In fact I did not know there would be a question of privilege raised until noon yesterday at which time I had left my first meeting and was heading for my second meeting of the day.

The proposed questions of privilege raised by the two members concern a report carried by the Canadian Press news agency last Friday night in which I was quoted as saying:

We've learned through the banks that nine Liberal MPs played the Canadian dollar as it was going down.

That report originated from a lengthy 90 minute interview I had Thursday last with a Canadian Press reporter. During the course of our discussion reference was made to the circumstances in which charges are or are not made in this House. I gave two examples of charges that we had made only after we were satisfied we had concrete evidence to make our point. On the other hand, as an example of a situation which I had not raised here, I mentioned that we had received the above reports to the effect that as many as nine Liberal MPs, and there were supposed to be two or three cabinet ministers in the nine, had speculated against the Canadian dollar, but that I had not pursued the question in the House. I said that because as yet I had not been able to obtain concrete evidence to substantiate those reports.

Mr. Speaker, that was a true and honest statement. I had received such information from what I considered to be credible sources. And I had decided not to raise the matter in the House unless and until I had concrete evidence.

It may be helpful if I read into the record a partial transcript of what the Canadian Press reported me to have said. In their report they quote me as stating:

There are things we could be mentioning, that we have not mentioned. I'm very curious about some of these things. Like I noticed Trudeau twice has said about opposition members trading on the Canadian dollar. I don't know whether you've noticed that.

Who was the member that shouted out to me yesterday, "Are you buying Canadian dollars?"

I don't know why they say that. Because we've learned through the banks that nine Liberal MPs played the Canadian market as it was going down.

Q: Were they named?

STEVENS: Not to me. But apparently the names are available. But we've been in a real dilemma as to whether we should press it or whether we should just let it lie. I don't know.

I cannot understand why Trudeau would be inferring that we were doing it, other than whatever guilty conscience he's got, eh?

The two references I was referring to in connection with the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) appear in Hansard, one on February 16, page 2914. The statement I would like to read into the record was in answer to a question put by myself with respect to the desirability of an 80-cent dollar. The Prime Minister stated, and I quote:

The hon. member knows that if I were to give an answer, it would set up a wave of speculation which he and his friends might perhaps make money out of, but that is not our intention.

In response to a question put to the Prime Minister by the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge (Mr. Saltsman), again dealing with the 80-cent dollar, asking whether there was some policy to hold it at that level, the Prime Minister stated, as recorded at page 4192 of Hansard for April 6, and I quote:

It is a floating dollar. I understand hon. members opposite would like to engage in a bit of speculation; they would like us to tell them the way it will float. If they want to risk some money, they can do it on their own.

Those are the two references I referred to in the Canadian Press interview. I could have also mentioned an exchange that took place on November 9, mainly involving the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner). This exchange appears at pages 758 and 759 of Hansard, and I quote:

MR. KEMPLING: Tell us about the dollar.

MR. HORNER: Hon. members opposite are asking me to tell them about the dollar. The hon. member for Provencher referred to the dollar in his speech.

MR. KEMPLING: What about the balance of trade?

MR. CLARKE: What about the deficit?

MR. HORNER: There are Canadian citizens on the other side of the House betting that the Canadian dollar will go down more. They are buying American dollars, Canadians sitting on the other side of the House.

MR. KEMPLING: Name them, Jack.

MR. CLARKE: Name them!

MR. HORNER: Yes, I can name some.

MR. PAPROSKI: Then, name them.

. . . .

MR. HORNER: Mr. Speaker, I will do neither because that is not impugning. Everyone in this House can rise and speak on this debate.

MR. BLACKBURN: I have.

MR. HORNER: Good. Everyone can rise and say that they are not buying any American dollars. That is fine with me.

. . . .

MR. HORNER: But many financiers are, and some of the hon. members on that side of the House are.

AN HON. MEMBER: How many on the government side are?

MR. PAPROSKI: Name them.

MR. HORNER: I do not have to.

• (1512)

Be that as it may, Mr. Speaker, on reflection I was wrong even to raise the matter of dollar speculation with the CP reporter, even in the context of explaining why I had not pursued it in the House. I made statements which I now realize constituted an allegation or are perceived as an allegation which I cannot substantiate at this time.

That being the case, Mr. Speaker, and in keeping with the established practice, I wish to withdraw any such allegation against any member of this House. While I made no reference to any individual member, I regret any embarrassment which I have caused to any hon. member of this chamber.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I was pleased to listen to what the hon. member for Simcoe North had to say. He has, I take it, given you, Mr. Speaker, and the House an unqualified and unconditional withdrawal and retraction of any remarks made by him with regard to speculating on the dollar. I am pleased that we on this side raised the question of privilege and that this matter is now cleared up. I would, however, observe that we have seen a somewhat slick performance this afternoon.

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have before me a procedural matter to decide. The question was raised by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) yesterday as a matter of privilege and, as I have said many times in the past, there is no machinery available whereby I can call upon the same member to contribute twice to the same question. In some circumstances I extend that opportunity, at least in a nominal way; there are occasions, such as today, when the House has given an hon. member the option to withdraw a remark or make an apology. In such cases it is not at all extraordinary, I think, to allow some indication from the original mover of the motion that the apology has been accepted as put forward. In that sense I thought it appropriate on this occasion to recognize the original mover of the motion. However, on strict procedural grounds I ought not to accept a second contribution on the same question of privilege by any member, and that is a rather safe course to follow.

The second point I wish to make is that during the course of the remarks made by the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) I was weighing the information he was presenting to the House, and I must say I came to precisely the same conclusion as he did. He had an explanation for his remarks; that he had put them forward in a somewhat strict context. His explanation was this was an example of a case which he would not pursue in the House because he lacked evidence, and in doing so—as he realized on reflection—that in itself was an indiscretion which had rather heavy consequences for the reputation of the House in general. I was, of course, very pleased that he had come to the same conclusion as I had, and I felt he had done entirely the honourable thing in reaching that conclusion and extending his apologies.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: In any case, my opinion of the course he followed is not important, except in a procedural sense. The hon. member made these allegations outside the House. He was the subject, as a result, of two motions, one put forward by the Minister of Justice and the other by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). With respect to those motions the hon. member came in to make his contribution today and, again in a procedural sense, having made his apology for the action he took in making those allegations, and having withdrawn those allegations, the matter is now totally closed.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. Hamilton) on a question of privilege.

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Oh!

MR. HAMILTON (SWIFT CURRENT-MAPLE CREEK)—ANSWER GIVEN BY MINISTER OF TRANSPORT DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Frank Hamilton (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, my question of privilege arises out of an answer given today by the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board in which he indicated that he has loaded out twice as much wheat as the administration of the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker). I would like to quote from the current Canadian Wheat Board annual report--

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Surely the hon. member will realize that if he is making a refutation of certain statements or of interpretations which may be put on them, he is into a matter of disagreement or debate. If he is not speaking to a matter of disagreement or debate I will be glad to hear him if his subject resembles privilege. On a simple matter of disagreement, however, I am afraid I cannot give the hon. member the floor.

Mr. Hamilton (Swift Current-Maple Creek): It is not a matter of disagreement, Mr. Speaker, it is a matter of misleading the House.

In 1963, the last year of the Diefenbaker administration, when wheat was still king, we exported wheat and flour to the tune of 592 million bushels, an all-time record, representing 28.4 per cent of the world market. In 1976-77, the record year under the present minister, it was down to 494 million bushels, 21 per cent. This year so far 350 million bushels have been exported—below 20 per cent of the world market. Those are the figures of the Canadian Wheat Board and are presented under the minister's own signature.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member was referring to wheat. In most of my answers I was referring to grain, and I understand—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lang: I understand why the members in the Tory party would miss that fact. Even now I know they would not recognize its importance. Until we got into the business, the Conservative regime was totally neglective of barley; they were not exporting any rapeseed.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure that the House will now be convinced that it really is a matter of disagreement in debate and not a question of privilege.

MR. RYNARD—INCORRECT CONSTITUENCY ATTRIBUTION BY MINISTER OF JUSTICE

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Basford) referred in his remarks to the hon. member for Simcoe North. I am the hon. member for Simcoe North and, if I heard correctly, that reference to the hon. member for Simcoe North is on the record. I am not insulted by the reference but I do want the record corrected. The minister did refer to Simcoe North and it will appear that way in the record. I want it corrected, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the reference was intended to be to the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens).

MR. McKINNON—ANSWERS GIVEN BY MINISTER OF NATIONAL DEFENCE

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question of privilege is raised at this time because the evidence upon which it is based was only available to me minutes before one o'clock today. Otherwise I would have given Your Honour the usual notice. I would like to report that the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Danson) has given answers in this House which appear to have been misleading. I am not quite certain of the appropriate parliamentary language, but I can say that the answers he has given are not the truth. I brought this matter up a week ago on a point of order. It has become more explicit with the passage of time, and I believe it now qualifies as a question of privilege.

Your Honour will recall that on May 8 the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) asked a question about the neutron bomb. The minister answered with respect to another subject, nuclear missiles. He said, "We do not have any nuclear weapons, nor would they be deployed on our soil." I asked the minister about this a week later and strangely enough he said to me, "I believe the hon. member knows I do not answer questions on that subject." That was after I had asked him about the previous question asked by the hon. member for Greenwood. This served only to confuse himself and perhaps the House. It certainly did not mislead me, but it seemed to be an attempt to mislead the House.

● (1522)

He at the same time tried to cast a certain aspersion on a previous minister of national defence by saying that the previous minister had not answered questions on that subject. He said, and I quote:

Mr. Speaker, I believe my predecessor neither confirmed nor denied such allegations.

A few minutes later, as Your Honour will recall, I brought the record into the House and showed where the previous minister had stated that, and I quote:

Mr. Speaker, none of our aircraft are equipped with nuclear missiles, but we do have in storage, and this has been public knowledge for several years—nuclear missiles at Comox and at the other bases from which our interceptor squadrons take off.

I would like to read a news report put out by Broadcast News. It starts off as follows:

Danson—Nuclear

Ottawa—Defence Minister Barney Danson has confirmed reports there are nuclear weapons in Canada.

The minister has refused on several occasions in the past to comment. However, he told Broadcast News in Ottawa today that Canadian planes attached to the North American Air Defence Command have nuclear capabilities. Danson said the aircraft are stationed at Comox, British Columbia. However, he would not say how many nuclear weapons are on Canadian soil, their size, or their capabilities.

But the minister says the weapons will be returned to the United States when Canada gets its new fighter aircraft. Danson said the nuclear weapons were needed because Canada's aging fighters weren't a credible deterrent with conventional weapons.

However, Danson said the new planes will be so sophisticated they won't need nuclear capabilities.

A large part of the release is true, although it did miss the point in a parliamentary sense. The point here is that on May 8 the minister said that we do not have any nuclear weapons, nor would they be deployed on our soil, and in this Broadcast News release he confirmed reports that there are nuclear weapons in Canada. The minister may have thought he was doing what he did for security reasons, or perhaps because of ignorance of the facts.

I do not know how many people, if any, were misled. It depends upon how many people believe the minister when he speaks about defence matters. However, it is a clear case of misleading the House, and I believe the minister should apologize to the House. If he does not, I am prepared to move a motion that this matter be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member was also somewhat confused when he referred to the question put by the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin). We were talking in the context of the so-called neutron bomb, and it was in that context that I was speaking. Indeed, I have advised the hon. member for Greenwood that it was in that context, and my answer might have given the impression that there were no nuclear weapons of any type whatsoever. It was my impression that my predecessor neither confirmed nor denied that. I did check the record and found that that is incorrect. Quite properly in answer to a question in this House, and before a committee in response to questions from the hon. member for Comox-Alberni, my predecessor indicated that there are weapons which are not under Canadian control but which are on our soil. Their deployment, of course, is under joint control under our NORAD agreement. They are designed to be placed in our Voodoo 101 fighters which have only that capability in the full deterrent sense. The new fighter aircraft which will replace the aging Voodoos will have more sophisticated conventional weaponry, and those other weapons will be returned. If indeed it was a misleading of the House, it was not intentional. It was a misunderstanding which I am pleased to correct.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

ANTI-INFLATION ACT

TABLING OF BOARD'S REPORTS

Mr. Ed Lumley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to section 17(2) of the Anti-Inflation Act I wish to table, in both official languages, copies of ten reports sent to the administrator by the Anti-Inflation Board.

* * *

SMALL BUSINESS

TABLING OF DOCUMENT ON EQUITY FINANCING

Hon. A. C. Abbott (Minister of State (Small Business)): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to table a document for discussion purposes entitled "Improving the Equity Financing Environment for Small Business in Canada".

Mr. Jelinek: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. My point of order deals with yet another example of shameful disregard for parliament. On behalf of the small business community in Canada this House has been waiting for years for this government to present parliament with its policies.

Yesterday the minister felt that he should not make a statement on motions in this House and instead was led by the hand by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to the Prime Minister's press conference—to the dismay of the media as well, as we saw on television. Today when the minister made his first presentation to this House he did not have guts enough to make a statement on motions, which has been the tradition in this House. We hope the minister will be brave enough to make statements on motions regarding small business because of its importance not only to this House but also to the millions of Canadians who are involved in small business in Canada.

Mr. Abbott: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. This is a lot of unqualified rubbish. Yesterday afternoon in the House of Commons I spoke in the debate, if the hon. member would care to refer to Hansard. If the hon. member had been present, he might have participated in the debate in which I announced the initiatives we have developed, many of them in cooperation with other government departments, but which did not necessarily or appropriately lend themselves to a debate on motions. We have been advised that hon. members opposite and others are loath to have a presentation of documents become a lengthy debate. I did welcome an opposition day upon which small business matters were discussed, and I felt it was appropriate to participate in the debate yesterday at approximately 4.30 in the afternoon. I am sorry that the hon. member was not present.

This discussion paper was introduced today for the purpose of eliciting public discussion, and it is my hope that we will be ultimately translating the outcome of those discussions into legislation. Needless to say, at that time I will welcome a lengthy debate in which the important matter of venture capital will be discussed.

* * *

CANADA LABOUR CODE

AMENDMENT RESPECTING RIGHT TO WORK

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-456, to amend the Canada Labour Code (right to work).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Elzinga: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to protect an individual's right to work, thereby ensuring an individual's right to join and maintain membership in a union, and also an equal right not to join or maintain membership in a union.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

* * *

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENT TO ENFORCE CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-457, to amend the Criminal Code (death sentence).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Elzinga: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to impose the death sentence in all cases of premeditated murder.

Mr. Speaker: On a precautionary note, I point out that it is the habit of the Chair to indicate a seconder for a bill, and the seconder at first reading always supports the principle of introduction of any bill but is not necessarily in agreement with the subject matter.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

[Translation]

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: 1,275, 1,276 and 1,608.

I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

[Text]

FITNESS AND AMATEUR SPORT

Question No. 1,275 —Mr. Cossitt:

1. Since the appointment of the Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) in what way has the government improved (a) physical fitness (b) amateur sport in Canada?

2. Is it government policy to have the Minister pose wearing skates with the Vice President of the United States or leading a parade of a few people to the 1977 Grey Cup Game in Montreal and, if so (a) how does this help physical fitness and amateur sport (b) does the government have plans for further pictures of a similar nature?

Hon. Iona Campagnolo (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): The role of the Minister of State, Fitness and Amateur Sport, is to promote and develop fitness and amateur sport in Canada. This role comprises objectives which are pursued in a variety of ways: through financial contributions to some 88 national sport and recreation associations and to the National Sport and Recreation Centre which houses and provides support services to 54 of these associations; through financial assistance to student-athletes as part of our grants-in-aid program and to Canada's elite athletes as part of our Game Plan Assistance Program. The fitness and amateur sport branch also offers communities, associations, schools and other institutions and special groups specific programs including the Canada Fitness Award Program and the Sports Demonstration Program, designed to encourage involvement in physical activity. The branch supports participaction in their efforts to promote the benefits of such involvement.

2. (a) Since it is the role of the minister of state to encourage and promote fitness, the government sees nothing incongruous in the minister donning a pair of skates to greet a visiting dignitary at the Rideau canal—a major tourist attraction and recreational facility in the national capital region. Similarly, as walking is held to be excellent exercise, the government sees no incongruity in the minister participating in a walk to the site of the 1977 Grey Cup Game. (b) The government believes that the minister of state should continue to encourage and promote fitness and amateur sport to the fullest extent possible.

GOVERNMENT AIRCRAFT

Question No. 1,276—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Since becoming the Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) has the Minister used a government owned aircraft and, if so (a) on how many occasions and, in each case, what was the point of departure and arrival (b) what type of aircraft was used (c) what was the total cost of flying time and waiting time in each case?

2. Has the Minister used helicopters operated by the Department of Transport or the Canadian Coast Guard and, if so, on how many occasions has she used them to (a) fly into and out of her constituency or to and from points in her constituency (b) to or from any other place in Canada?

Hon. Iona Campagnolo (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): 1. (a) and (b) For information regarding flights prior to August 1st, 1977, see reply to question No. 29 tabled October 17th, 1977. For information regarding flights after August 1st, 1977, see list below. (c) See reply to question No. 2,881 answered October 17th, 1977.

2. Yes. (a) Nil. (b) Once.

Aircraft Type	Date	Point of Origin	Stops	Point of Destination
Bell 212	22-01-77	Gander	Baie Verte-Grand Falls	Gander
Viscount	06-08-77	Ottawa	Trois-Rivières-Moncton	St. John's
JetStar	18-08-77	St. John's		Ottawa
JetStar	20-08-77	Ottawa	Winnipeg-Edmonton-Kelowna	Vancouver
JetStar	25-08-77	Sandspit	Vancouver-Winnipeg	Toronto
Viscount	19-09-77	Toronto		Ottawa
JetStar	20-09-77	Ottawa	Frobisher	Ottawa
JetStar	26-09-77	Victoria	Winnipeg	Ottawa
Viscount	30-09-77	Ottawa	Montreal-Mirabel-Shearwater-Halifax	Ottawa
King Air	12-10-77	Ottawa	Peterborough	Ottawa
King Air	13-10-77	Ottawa	Kitchener	Ottawa
JetStar	01-11-77	Terrace	Edmonton	Ottawa
JetStar	07-11-77	Terrace	Saskatoon	Ottawa
JetStar	14-11-77	Victoria	Edmonton	Ottawa
JetStar	17-11-77	Ottawa		Toronto
Viscount	08-12-77	Montreal		Ottawa
JetStar	09-12-77	Ottawa	Thunder Bay	Winnipeg
JetStar	12-12-77	Prince Rupert	Winnipeg-Montreal	Ottawa
JetStar	22-12-77	Ottawa	Calgary	Vancouver
JetStar	21-01-78	Prince Rupert	Winnipeg	Ottawa
JetStar	28-01-78	Regina	Fort St. John-Dawson Creek-Calgary	Ottawa
JetStar	02-02-78	Ottawa		Prince George

REFERENDUM

Question No. 1,608—Mr. La Salle:

Did the Ministry of State for Federal-Provincial Relations grant money to organizations interested in national harmony, in order to finance pre-referendum activities and, if so (a) in what amount (b) to whom were such grants paid?

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): No.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The questions enumerated by the parliamentary secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all notices of motions for the production of papers be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

INCOME TAX ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed, from May 18, consideration of the motion of Mr. Chrétien that Bill C-56, to amend the statute law relating to income tax and to authorize payments related to provincial sales tax reductions, be read the second time and referred to committee of the whole, and of the amendment (Mr. Broadbent) (p. 5548).

● (1532)

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, it was just over a month ago that I expressed my concern in this House during the budget debate about the potential for damage to our federal system when one level of government fails to consult and reach accord with the other, and the past few weeks have indeed shown that my fears were justified.

- The process of consultation between levels of government is vital to any federal state, but it is an absolute imperative in matters relating to fiscal measures, especially when federal initiatives affect the fiscal planning of the provincial governments. I say that, sir, because the provinces are responsible for the collection of something like 60 per cent of the public revenues in Canada, and for about 60 per cent of total public expenditures. That being the case, they have a heavy responsibility to plan their financial affairs carefully. Their budgets are not something that can be thrown together at the last moment, and yet in the instance that we have before us in consideration of this bill we have the federal government intervening in the financial planning of the provinces in a capricious and arbitrary way. Capricious and arbitrary intervention is what we have witnessed throughout this entire sales tax fiasco, a fiasco that has gone from bad to worse over the past month.

Let us take a look at how the government has managed, in the few weeks since it introduced its budget, to turn bungling into disaster, incompetence into disunity. The original proposal put forward on budget night was for the provinces to agree to reduce their sales tax and, in return, to be compensated by a transfer of federal income tax into their treasuries. This proposal required consultation and negotiation with the provincial governments affected. Consultation to some degree there may have been; negotiation there was not, even though it was in a field of provincial jurisdiction.

The federal government apparently decided in advance that the only acceptable variation to its proposal would be a minor one, that is, it would agree to lengthen the time to three months and reduce the amount of the sales tax cut. The more affluent provinces were required to pick up one third of the cost of the reduction. That proposal, as the Minister of Finance (Mr.Chrétien) stressed in his press conference on the night of the budget speech, was not disclosed in full, as a matter of policy, to any province until two or three hours before the minister spoke in the House of Commons that night.

The other provinces which were bringing down their budgets that night, namely, British Columbia and Manitoba, had to wait until the Minister of Finance confirmed his proposals in the budget speech itself before they could vary their own budgets to take that initiative into account. Indeed the Minister of Finance pointed out in a television broadcast last Sunday that, as of budget day, all he had discussed with the provinces was, as he put it, a hypothetical situation. "If I were to do such and such", he said to the provinces, "what would you think?" That was what the minister stated at the press conference last Sunday.

Those provinces which were in the process of drawing up their own budgets for presentation the same night had to plan for two possibilities: one, if the Minister of Finance proceeded with his proposal, and another, if he did not. Manitoba is a case in point. Being just one hour behind Ottawa's time, Manitoba's minister of finance was getting ready to present his budget as the federal minister's budget speech was being made in the House of Commons. The Manitoba minister of finance, Mr. Craik, had his two possibilities ready: one, if Ottawa proceeded, and the other, if it did not. So as he began the presentation of his own budget his aides were required to monitor the budget proposals of the Minister of Finance in Ottawa to ensure that the sales tax proposals had indeed been included in the budget presentation. Only then, by monitoring what the Minister of Finance in Ottawa had said, could Manitoba's minister of finance include in his presentation a special section that would ensure that the two budgets dealt simultaneously with the sales tax proposal. That is what consultation really amounted to.

In these circumstances there was precious little time for manoeuvrability or even for consideration on the part of that particular province, and certainly none for meaningful consultation about a proposal that was finally made firm, but made firm only on the night that the Minister of Finance presented his budget.

The consultation of which the Minister of Finance has boasted in the House must have been casual, informal, and indefinite in the extreme for such a situation, such a scenario as the one that I have described, to have been allowed to develop.

The provincial ministers of finance throughout the country thought something was coming. It had been indicated to them that something was coming, but they had no assurance that in fact anything would be coming until the Minister of Finance made the announcement in his budget speech. The consultation of which he boasted amounted to this. A proposal was made; the provinces were told that one variation to it would be acceptable, all other variations would be rejected out of hand. That is indeed what happened. It was: take it with or without this slight modification, or leave it. As I have already pointed out, according to the minister's own statement the discussions until then had been about a purely hypothetical situation.

The minister of finance in the province of Quebec was in a different position from his colleagues in the other provinces because he had a manoeuvrability that they lacked. Since he was the only minister of finance whose budget had not been brought down by April 10, he was able to consider a concrete proposal rather than a hypothetical one, and he had time to advance a counter-proposal.

Would anyone in this House, with the possible exception of the Minister of Finance or the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), believe that Mr. Parizeau would fail to take advantage of that opportunity? Why did the Minister of Finance proceed without the agreement of the Quebec minister of finance? Since the date of the Quebec budget had been announced well in advance, why did this government not wait for the Quebec minister of finance to show his hand before they showed theirs? One can only surmise that the reason they did not wait was a political one. They were attempting to provoke a confrontation with the government of Quebec to shore up their position for the election campaign that they have been orchestrating throughout the winter and early spring. The reason a budget was brought down in this House on April 10 was to provide a platform for the Liberal party in that election, an election that they never did get around to calling.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

● (1542)

Miss MacDonald: That platform would have been one which could be presented as an attempt to co-ordinate federal-provincial fiscal policies and to stimulate the economy. Also they could claim the attempt was being resisted by the separatist provincial government in Quebec. That was their game, and that is what they set out to try to achieve. Obviously hon. members opposite knew the advantage and value of having a convenient enemy.

In its calculation of this Machiavellian strategy, the government ignored the fact that the province of Quebec, like every other province, had a legitimate right to resist this proposal or to modify it, since it dealt with an area of unquestioned provincial jurisdiction. As has been said on many occasions throughout the history of parliamentary democracy—this edict has been said over and over again—"the right to tax is the right to govern." For the federal government to attempt to dictate the manner in which a province raises, lowers or abolishes its sales taxes, is to violate that basic democratic principle.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: As for the other provinces, for reasons having to do with their desire to co-ordinate fiscal policy, or because the proposal promised benefits to their people, they, with greater or less degrees of reluctance, chose to co-operate with the federal government's initiative. This was not an easy decision for them to make. Whereas an across the board sales tax reduction throughout Canada would benefit consumers in all provinces with such taxes, it would disproportionately benefit those provinces with disproportionate shares of Canada's manufacturing capacity. Moreover, each province, except the Atlantic provinces, was being asked to re-order its priorities to pay one third of the cost of this reduction. In other words, the province of Saskatchewan, for example, was paying out money to subsidize not only its own consumers, but also the manufacturing sector in British Columbia or in Ontario. There is no question that this proposal would provide—and indeed it may have been designed to provide—more benefits to some provinces than to others.

Mr. Parizeau's decision was an attempt to ensure that the people of Quebec obtained full benefit for whatever sales tax reductions were made as part of this package. While his motives in doing so may have been questionable, his proposals are based on an undoubted and important provincial right. That is why his proposals have been supported by all the parties in the Quebec national assembly and by almost all shades of public opinion in the province of Quebec, ranging from separatist to staunchly federalist. His proposals undoubtedly were designed also to place the federal government in a most embarrassing position. They have succeeded in doing so.

The federal government obtained the consent of the other provinces to this scheme on the understanding that the sales tax cuts would be across the board in all the provinces, but the Quebec government legitimately challenged whether that uniformity should be forced on them. Then the federal government had to decide whether to accept the modifications proposed by Mr. Parizeau, or to exclude the province of Quebec from its initiative. Instead of confronting this dilemma, the Minister of Finance has attempted to make an end run around it. This attempt was made by using the federal taxing power to rebate directly to the taxpayers of Quebec a sum of money equivalent to the value of the sales tax cuts which the minister refuses to negotiate with the government of Quebec, the sum of $186 million. Now we are faced with a situation which almost perfectly illustrates a concern raised in the abstract some nine years ago during the discussions on constitutional review.

I should like to refer to some of the arguments raised during the period of the constitutional review between 1966 and 1971. For a long time there had been a consensus among the provinces on the need to manage their own fiscal affairs, to do so without the intervention of the federal government. Also there was a consensus that they should have the right to obtain their revenues in the way they judge consistent with their fiscal needs, and to spend those moneys on projects of high priority to them.

In 1969 when the federal government began to recognize the force of some of these arguments during that constitutional review, the question of using federal fiscal muscle to regiment the provinces into line came up for broad discussion. In those discussions, the Trudeau government acknowledged the desirability of limitations on its spending power. Simultaneously it made proposals about what to do when a province did not want to join a scheme to which most of the other provinces had formally and officially agreed. At that time the Trudeau government proposed making payments directly to individuals, a proposal which was attacked by the provinces, including those which are strong supporters of a vigorous central government.

I should like to refer to a few of the arguments made by the premiers against that federal proposal to make payments direct to individuals. Mr. Smallwood, the then premier of Newfoundland, said the following:

> Has it ever been done and ought it to be done? If there is to be a federal redistribution of income surely it ought to be on a national basis and not provincial.

He went on to say that, if it is to be provincial, it must be done by the legislature of the province.

Mr. Robarts, the then premier of Ontario, said the following:

> If you do attempt to return the money to the individuals in the province, we must realize, of course, that you are not going to return it to the people who paid the tax.

He continued by indicating that it simply would not be exact, and asked the following:

> Are you going to return it just to taxpayers or to every single individual?

That was his question. It is very relevant today.

Mr. Bennett, the then premier of British Columbia, perhaps signified the danger of the federal proposal most clearly back in 1969 when he made the following statement:

> You are going to play provincial governments against the federal government and you are going to break up this country and not build up Canadian unity. You are going to make for disunity.

Therefore the proposal of the federal government to proceed by direct payments to individuals, in the way it is proceeding now, was tabled by the Prime Minister, who said the following:

> I think the views have been fully aired all around and the most we can do at this time is to let them lie there until further meetings. There is nothing to add to that.

Indeed, he did not add anything either at the Victoria constitutional conference or subsequently. The federal government's method of dealing with this kind of impasse was discussed back in 1969 and was rejected by the provinces at that time. Also it was rejected by the joint parliamentary committee on the constitution in 1972. That proposal has now been resurrected unilaterally by the Minister of Finance.

● (1552)

Why has that been done, Mr. Speaker? I suggest it is for two reasons. The first is, it is his attempt to regain the initiative in the bungled confrontation he deliberately staged with the province of Quebec. That motivation is understandable, if contemptible. But the second motive of the Minister of Finance in putting forward this proposal is to extend the use of the federal spending power by deliberate invasion of provincial control of the sales tax field. That motive would be understandable only if we were to assume that the government is an agent provocateur working on behalf of the cause of separatism. What better strategy could the proponents of separatism conceive than to have the federal government boldly stake out a claim to use the federal spending power to bludgeon provincial governments whenever an impasse was reached between them and Ottawa?

The minister of Finance and the Prime Minister are acting in such a way as to give an aura of credibility to the image of confederation which the Parti Québécois has desperately, and to this point with diminishing success, tried to portray as reality to the people of Quebec; an image of an aggressive, centralizing, power hungry government at Ottawa, eager to grasp every opportunity to destroy the exising balance of federalism and to move Canada toward a unitary state.

Someone, somehow, must get it through the heads of the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance that Canadian nationalism and the cause of federalism in the province of Quebec will best be promoted by wise and effective use of the powers now enjoyed by the federal government, not by a backstairs usurpation of the powers assigned by the constitution to the provinces.

Claude Ryan, the Leader of the Liberal party in the province of Quebec, put that case so succinctly when he said in an interview last Sunday that the strength of the Parti Québécois "has definitely been helped by the federal government's stubborn position".

This view is reinforced by a Quebec journalist, Don McGillvary, writing in the Montreal Gazette on May 23 in these words:

> And Chrétien and Prime Minister Trudeau seem to be unaware still that they are giving federalism a bad name. Quebeckers may well be persuaded to stay in confederation if they feel that the rights of their province will be guaranteed and respected.
>
> But if the future that Ottawa holds out to them is a succession of episodes of federal meddling, like that of the past few weeks, the case for independence is bound to seem more persuasive.

That is the kind of result this federal government may well promote.

The direct tax rebate is not only a dangerous innovation, but one unprecedented in our history and which strikes at the very balance of confederation. Not only is it dangerous, and not only does it strike at the balance of confederation, it is also very meanly conceived. It calculates that for an $85 cheque the taxpayers of Quebec will abandon the option of looking to their provincial government, whatever political stripe that government might be, to defend the existing distribution of powers under the constitution. It presupposes that $85 is the asking price for the loyalty of Quebeckers.

It is no longer good enough, according to those opposite, to be a federalist in the province of Quebec unless one's definiton of federalism precisely and on every point coincides exactly with their own. That kind of rigid "them and us" approach calls into question the very basis of federal-provincial relations. It is one of the key reasons why it is becoming more and more clear that this government is part of the problem and not part of the solution to the problem of national unity.

And what has this face-saving proposal in the bill done to the economic initiative which was supposed to have been the point of this whole exercise? What has it done to the original budget proposal? It has, literally speaking, turned that proposal on its head. Instead of a sales tax cut which benefits all consumers, what the Minister of Finance proposes is a direct income tax rebate in one province; a rebate which discriminates against those too poor to pay income taxes, and which favours those most likely to save rather than spend the rebate they would receive. That tendency to save is exactly what the minister wanted to avoid in the first place.

Here is what the minister had to say in this regard at his press conference on the night he presented his budget:

> It is an economic package to restore confidence, to stimulate demand very quickly. That was the aim . . . to increase demand in the Canadian economy. The other tax cuts available to me were of a different nature and we were not sure that they would go to the people who spend their money. Income tax? Perhaps the people would have put that money in savings.

This, suggests the minister, is what went wrong with his earlier income tax cut. The people saved it and did not spend it, but the sales tax cut, he promised, would be different. Again I quote from the press conference on the night the minister presented his budget:

> This retail sales tax is going to everyone who spends his money. Even those who don't pay any income tax, the poor in the society, will get a benefit in spending their money.

In the context of the minister's statement that night about his budget, Mr. Parizeau's proposal bears a closer resemblance to the avowed purpose of the budget initiative than the provisions of the bill we are debating here today. Mr. Parizeau's proposal benefits all the consumers in the province of Quebec, rich and poor, and it directly stimulates purchasing in that province, and that was what the Minister of Finance said on budget night he wanted to do. How he has turned that proposal around! Since no province has a complete monopoly on any industry, the proposal which is put forward in the province of Quebec at this time benefits manufacturers in many other provinces of Canada. The effect is disproportionately beneficial to Quebec, to be sure, but the effect of the original budget proposal, as I have already noted, is in itself disproportionately beneficial to those provinces in which manufacturing is concentrated.

However ingenious may be the rationalizations of those opposite for their course of action, however many red herrings they may wish to lay across their trail of blundering, arrogance, stupidity, and cynical political manipulation, they will never convince anyone that they are the victims rather than the authors of their own misfortune. That fact would ordinarily be of concern only to those interested in an attractive image for the Liberal party. But in this case the stakes are far more serious. By their approach to all provinces in formulating their original proposal, by the action they have taken to punish the one province which chose not to go along, and by their arrogant assumption of the right to use the federal spending power to expand clandestinely the area of federal authority, they have put the Government of Canada in a position of saying to every province implicitly, "That we will do what we like regardless of the constitution, with your consent if possible, without it if necessary".

● (1602)

That position is objectionable not just to the Parti Québécois, not just to the province of Quebec, not just to provincial governments everywhere, but to every Canadian who believes in a federal system of government. Their position does not even have the merit of candour. The federal government is saying in effect, "We believe in a unitary state, we know that is unacceptable, but we are going to move toward that goal at every opportunity."

I could respect a government that wanted to change the federal system radically to centralize power and jurisdictions at Ottawa, much as I would disagree with that position. But what I cannot respect, and what I protest against with real anger, is a government that professes to defend federalism while undermining it at every opportunity, whenever it believes it can confuse or frighten the people of Canada into going along with it.

Canadians need a government at the federal level that is strong, dynamic, and effective. Those qualities flow from imagination, vigour, and ability. They do not come from attempts to weaken the other partners in the federal system, but from making good and efficient use of the powers and the opportunities which the federal government itself holds. The federal government will be respected in Canada when it respects the rights of the provinces, when it is sensitive to their needs and aspirations, and when it effectively uses its resources to work with those partners to develop the full potential of this country. Sadly, sir, this textbook case of bungled federalism will be justified only if the government has learned that lesson.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Jack H. Horner (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): In listening to the hon. member who has just taken her seat, Mr. Speaker, I could not help but think that it was delivered very well indeed, with just the right amount of indignation towards the government. It was a beautiful delivery. It is too bad the content was not as worthy as the effort the hon. member put into the delivery and the amount of indignation she expressed in her voice from time to time.

Let me just say a few things about Bill C-56 and perhaps give it its proper interpretation. First of all, the federal government, in bringing about the tax measures that it brought in on April 10, went to great pains to seek out the co-operation of the ten provinces in Canada. For the first time in my history in parliament, a finance minister, before bringing down a budget, seriously talked at length to the finance ministers of the ten provinces. It was a tremendously innovative, daring and risky initiative. The hon. member talked about wanting a strong, effective, and dynamic government. Well, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) showed effectiveness, dynamism, and initiative in talking to the provincial finance ministers.

The purpose of the sales tax reduction was to stimulate the economy and to encourage Canadians to go out and shop now. I would say buy now in Canada. Why did the Minister of Finance want to encourage that when profits were up in Canada in the last quarter of 1977 by 22 per cent and savings were up nearly an equal amount? It was because our factories and their efficiency were only at a production level of approximately 80 per cent. The idea was to encourage Canadians to buy, but not necessarily equally in all provinces. That was not the case. The Minister of Finance dealt with each province. He went out and consulted with each finance minister individually. One can look at the budget papers where it clearly states that he offered to compensate them for a reduction of 2 percentage points in their retail sales tax for a period of six months. He states:

In return, I have asked them to bear the cost of either a further one percentage point for the same period, or an extension of the two-point cut for a further three month period.

He clearly outlined what he wanted the provinces to accept. He went on to say that he recognized the Atlantic provinces were in a different position because of the tax and revenue structures of those provinces, and he also commented that he recognized that Alberta was in a different position.

Quebec, after consultations with Mr. Parizeau, its minister of finance, chose not to go along with the federal Minister of Finance. It was not the choice of the federal Minister of Finance, but a choice which was made by the province of Quebec. Is that such a strange thing for us federalists to believe? Was it completely unexpected that Quebec would not go along with the federal government? To me it was not unexpected because the government of Quebec today has stated quite clearly that they want to separate from Canada and that they want to do everything they can to prove to Canadians that federalism is not working. The choice was not that of the federal Minister of Finance but of the Quebec government, and if they had done anything else than what they did, I would have been surprised.

The federal Minister of Finance, however, did not remove any of the benefits in his budget for the people of Quebec. He did not in any way, but Mr. Parizeau did.

Mr. La Salle: And Mr. Ryan too.

Mr. Horner: I am sorry but Mr. Ryan is not in power.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Parizeau was the one who prohibited the poor people from taking advantage of the offer made by the Minister of Finance of the federal government, but he went on to give $40 million under the four items on which Mr. Parizeau said he would reduce the sales tax. It is perfectly within our constitution and within the prerogative of the minister of finance of a province to remove the sales tax completely if he so wishes. That is what Mr. Parizeau did, and there is nothing wrong with that.

This government asked for an across the board removal of the sales tax. Mr. Parizeau did not what to comply with this, and the Minister of Finance chose the most appropriate way to pay back to the people of Quebec the approximately $215 million which they would have had if the minister of finance of Quebec had accepted the offer.

There has been a lot of statements made about this country of ours and federalism. There is no question in my mind, in the 20 years that I have been in this House, that Canada, the very fact that we remain a nation, has been questioned very severely. It might well be that in this budget of April 10 we are once again seeing our country being questioned as a nation. The Minister of Finance has done his utmost.

I for one regret to see the official opposition wholeheartedly supporting Mr. Parizeau, the one who is deliberately attempting to divide and destroy this country. I am not surprised, however, because just a little over a year ago when I was in that party they told me to go easy on Mr. Lévesque and not to attack him. They wanted him as an ally the next time a federal election rolled around. Maybe that explains why they are stoutly defending Mr. Parizeau today. Why I do not know; one can reach his own conclusions.

• (1612)

I know that the federal government has a responsibility for the over-all defence of the nation. I know, as a nation, that the federal government has a responsibility and that responsibility can be shared with the provinces with regard to the question of immigration.

I know, as a nation, we have a responsibility to provide a transportation system across Canada and at the ports. I know, as a nation, we have a responsibility to look after our trade, with other countries. I certainly know that, as a nation, we must have a strong, effective, dynamic minister of finance, and I think that is what we have in the present Minister of Finance. The finance of the nation is the very key and the heart of keeping a country together.

I know, and the budget dealt with it at length, that the question of energy has become of national importance to this country. It is of importance to every country in the world. As far as we can see in the foreseeable future, energy will remain of national importance to every nation, particularly Canada. We are in a very fortunate position, and I intend to deal with that point at length further on in my speech.

First of all I want to say a word about the differences that the Minister of Finance recognized in the field of taxation. In taking a look at personal income tax as it affects this country of ours, one can readily see that personal income tax as taxed by the provinces is a percentage of the basic federal tax. In the province of Newfoundland it is 58 per cent of the basic federal tax. In the province of Quebec it varies slightly. Quebec levies its own income tax. Depending on how many children a married couple has, it varies from 58 per cent to 63 per cent of the basic federal tax. One could go down the list, but I want to cite Alberta's position and put it on the record. I will name only three provinces although I have the figures here for all of them. For the province of Alberta it is 38 per cent of the basic federal tax.

There is a logical reason why the Minister of Finance in his attempt to bring and hold our country together should address himself to the problem that exists in Canada, a huge tax rate in some provinces and a lower tax rate in other provinces. Similarly, in some provinces there is a high sales tax rate, and in another province there is no sales tax rate at all. The Minister of Finance, in my opinion, was quite right in addressing himself to that problem.

I want to deal now with another question. I read very carefully the speech of the finance critic for the opposition party. It was rather a poor speech, but he said this:

If it becomes the law of the land will not the residents of Alberta be taking the right position in saying they should be included?

That is why I wanted to put those tax figures on the record. What citizen of Alberta would not recognize that they have, by far, the lowest tax rate in Canada? If the Minister of Finance attempts to increase purchasing by increasing the purchasing power of citizens, to get our economy turned up a little more by lowering the sales tax by 2 per cent for a period of six months—

Mr. Mazankowski: Don't be an Olson now, Jack.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Horner: I will continue to quote the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens):

If the government is shifting from an essentially sales tax related type of revenue sharing scheme to an income tax credit arrangement for at least one province, why should the province of Alberta not also be included?

He goes on to say:

A colleague of mine suggests they do not care about Alberta. Certainly if one were to read Bill C-56 one would see that not only do they not care about Alberta, they are indifferent to that province.

The hon. finance critic for the opposition party obviously did not read the bill, or he cared not to hear or see what he read. I could say a lot of things about the present critic on the opposition side—they had two critics before him and either one of them was better than he is—but I want to put on the record just what kind of a financier he really is. Is he reliable? Is he capable of handling the finance portfolio? We know that he is a very close adviser to the present Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark).

Mr. Nystrom: Who is that?

Mr. Horner: The only evidence we have is his past performance of handling finance. I quoted the hon. member for York-Simcoe's speech from Hansard about how he thought the present Minister of Finance was neglecting Alberta and western Canada. How did he neglect western Canada when he was attempting to form the Bank of Western Canada?

First of all I should point out the supposed bank charter was named the Bank of Western Canada. One could assume from that that here was a knight in shining armour riding forth to the west to help them to get rid of the eastern bankers that were forever robbing and hurting great western Canada. Here was the shining knight riding out to the west, to save the west with his finances. Not so, Mr. Speaker. Why did he name it the Bank of Western Canada? That is very interesting.

Western Canada at that time was a surplus depository area. The former governor of the Bank of Canada, James Coyne, admitted that to me before a finance committee. He said, "Yes, my records prove to me western Canada is a surplus depository area." The inspector general of banks at the time, before the finance committee admitted to me that, "Yes, western Canada was a surplus depository area". This all took place, for the benefit of members, in 1966 and 1967 when the bank interest rates were frozen at 6 per cent. But there had been a Porter Royal Commission on Banking in Canada. The Porter Royal Commission recommended to the government of the day that they should raise the interest rates and take the ceiling off banks so they could charge more than 6 per cent—

An hon. Member: What about sales tax?

Mr. Horner: So, the shrewd finance critic, what did he do? He proposed a bank just before the interest rates were being raised; a very opportune time. He called it the Bank of Western Canada—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Hnatyshyn) is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry to interrupt the proceedings. I know you have been listening to the debate, as we have been in this House, and we have been listening with some interest to the minister's comments. However, I submit to you with all deference that the comments of the minister, even with the widest latitude given by yourself on second reading in a debate on Bill C-56, bear absolutely no relevance to content of the bill. It is in fact an attempt on the part of the minister to comment on the financial critic of the opposition with respect to his capabilities to act in that capacity. With the greatest of deference, if the minister wants to get up and speak in support of the bill, we will be interested in hearing him. If he wants to get up and give the names of those on this side of the House he alleges were playing the market, we will be glad to listen to him on that.

● (1622)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I think the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar has a point. I was following the minister's remarks closely. He did lay aside the subject matter of the bill for his own purpose. I am sure he was about to come back to the bill. I hope he will do that.

Mr. Horner: I intend to deal with the bill at length, Mr. Speaker. I was quoting the speech of the hon. member for York-Simcoe. I had suggested earlier that the hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Gillies) would have been a far better finance critic, and the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) would have been a far more credible finance critic.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Even you could do a better job, I suppose!

Mr. Horner: We again have Sir Arthur riding to the rescue. He looks beautiful on the white horse with the hon. member for York-Simcoe. The beauty of those two hon. members is that they can ride a horse, which is more than the Leader of the Opposition can do.

In his whole speech the hon. member attempted to build on the premise that the Minister of Finance knew not what he was doing and was incapable of being Minister of Finance. This has been his whole line of attack. I was, as Your Honour correctly stated, nearly at the end of my remarks about the Bank of Western Canada.

The hon. member tried to run $195,000 into a pyramid and control $13 million—not a bad stroke of business if you can do it overnight. However, he was not able to do it.

He had called it the Bank of Western Canada. He wanted the deposits of western Canada. The interest rates were coming off. Where was the control going to be? It was to be held by a consortium of basically his family and two other people in the city of Toronto. He would not put 53 per cent on the market for sale. It was not because the remainder was not gobbled up. The nearly six and a half was gobbled up quickly. He kept control in Toronto and tried to perpetrate the belief that he was some kind of a saviour to western Canada and that he cared about western Canada. He cared about his own pocket and not much else at that time.

I want to say how Alberta has benefited in recent years and will continue to benefit by the budget of April 10.

Mr. Stevens: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I did not interrupt the minister when he was making certain comments concerning the formation of the Bank of Western Canada, but I hasten to add, in case anybody has inferred otherwise, there is not one tittle of truth in what he has said.

Mr. Horner: That is not a question of privilege. What I said is on the Finance Committee records. What I said was supported by the former governor of the Bank of Canada, Mr. James Coyne, when he blew the whistle on the hon. member and said, "produce your $4½ million," and he could not. I am not saying any untruths. It all can be substantiated and, in fact, has been substantiated in the past.

I wanted to deal with how the energy development incentives announced on April 10 will benefit the province of Alberta. Most Canadians are aware of the energy picture in the world today. I will paint the picture as vividly as I can so that Canadians can clearly understand.

In the known conventional oil reserves there are about 6.4 billion barrels of oil in Canada. We in this country use about 600 million barrels a year, or 1.6 million barrels a day. If someone looks at this speech tomorrow, he can use a computer or check my mathematics and he will see that we have in conventional oil reserves, if our consumption does not increase, somewhere between ten and 12 years' of known supplies.

What about the tar sands and the heavy oil, the development of which this budget attempted to encourage? In the tar sands in Alberta there is estimated to be 900 billion barrels of oil, a fabulous amount when you equate that to our conventional reserves. Three hundred billion barrels of oil can readily be mined in the tar sands if we put the capital investment into that area. With regard to the other 600 billion, we may have to develop new technology. We may have to develop a better in situ method of recovery. Of the 300 billion barrels I spoke of in the tar sands, about 80 per cent is recoverable with today's technology. Of the remaining 600 billion, with today's technology we can probably recover something in the neighbourhood of 15 to 20 per cent.

Looking at those figures one can see how fortunate this country is, if we develop the tar sands quickly enough and have it coming on stream when our conventional oil begins to slow up.

We have a lead time of 12 years, at best 15. Therefore it behooves the federal government to encourage tar sands development now. Did the Minister of Finance take that into consideration in his budget? Yes he did, in about three different ways, and I will deal with them.

Outside of the conventional oil wells and the tar sands, we have in northeastern Alberta what is commonly referred to as the heavy oils. They are in the ground. The present method of bringing them up is to pump steam down which forces up the oil. In the known estimate of reserves of heavy oils, there is about 30 billion barrels of oil. Roughly speaking, we have five times the amount of reserves in the heavy oils and 150 times the amount in the tar sands that we have in the conventional wells.

There is only one other industrial country in the world today that can say down the road, if proper care is taken now, that it will be self-sufficient. We can become a major exporter of oil. We have that much. Action must be taken.

I am often accused of comparing our country with other countries. Today I want to compare our country with the United States with regard to the question of oil. One year ago the United States were using approximately 14.7 million barrels a day. Today they are using 17.1 million barrels a day. They have had a tremendously rapid increase in their consumption of oil. What has their production been? One year ago production in the United States was 8.7 million barrels a day. Today it is 8.1 million barrels a day. Their consumption has risen rapidly and their production has gone down nearly as rapidly.

This is a very fortunate country. Our consumption has not gone up as fast, and our production and our capabilities of producing have increased substantially. If Canadians ever looked around, they would see we are at the bottom of the rainbow. This country is very, very fortunate.

What is the federal government doing through this budget which is being attacked, by innocent people, I believe, because they know not why they speak? Some of them know not why they are here, even from the province of Alberta. I have heard Albertans stand up in this House and say that Alberta is not helped in any way by this budget. How foolish can they be! How unknowing of the truth can they be of the province of Alberta?

Previous ministers of finance introduced in budgets, and the present Minister of Finance reinstated it again last fall, drilling exploration funds that individuals can put together to invest in oil and gas exploration in the province of Alberta. Individuals can get together and invest in gas exploration in Alberta. Why do I say in Alberta? It so happens that in our great nation between 83 per cent and 85 per cent of the oil industry is in Alberta.

● (1632)

This tax provision, allowing individuals to invest in drilling and exploration, brought tremendous funds into the province from all over Canada. The president of Ranger Oil told me when I was speaking with him recently that, as far as his company was concerned, it was the largest investment put together in Canada for a Canadian firm. I asked him, out of curiosity, where the money came from, and he said that, by and large, most of it came from people in Montreal. More than 100 investment funds had been put together to back exploration and drilling. Dome Petroleum, which has done such tremendously good work for Canada in the Arctic exploring for oil and gas in the Beaufort Sea, has put a fund together using the tax provision brought forward in the budget and extended by the present Minister of Finance.

In his present budget the Minister of Finance has recognized the importance of heavy oil and of the tar sands. The federal government has put together a research fund under which $2 million a year will be devoted to extending our knowledge, particularly of the tar sands, in the next five years.

The Syncrude project alone involved an expenditure of some $2 billion, and the contribution made by the federal government was 15 per cent, or $300 million. Mr. Speaker, that is more than Quebec is getting under this sales tax proposal. That province is getting something in the neighbourhood of $215 million. But Ottawa put $300 million into Syncrude, bringing the consortium together after Atlantic Richfield backed out. The project is now coming on stream and will produce something like 125,000 barrels a day. I estimate that Syncrude cost $2 billion. A large proportion of that money was spent within the province of Alberta. Wages and salaries of workers accounted for half the cost. That money was spent within the province, and those people pay income tax into the provincial treasury. And I am not taking into consideration, now, the royalties which the provincial government will receive on the sale of this oil, oil developed through the encouragement of the federal government.

[Mr. Horner.]

Look at page 10 of this document under Energy Development Incentives. The Minister of Finance clearly spells out:

> Second, it will be important to extract as much oil as technologically possible from all deposits. It has already been established that enhanced recovery systems can greatly increase total production. After today, therefore, special machinery, equipment and other facilities acquired for enhanced recovery systems—specifically, so-called "tertiary" recovery—will be able to earn depletion at a rate of $1 for every $2 of expenditure as compared to the normal earning rate of $1 for $3.

This change means substantially more revenue for Alberta because it will continue for a lot longer than six months. The sales tax reduction is only for six months. Let us keep things in perspective.

The budget went on to say:

> Finally, earned depletion may be applied at present only to reduce taxable resource profits, and only up to a ceiling of 25 per cent. This provision will be significantly improved. Effective immediately, corporations may deduct depletion earned through certain qualifying investment in non-conventional oil projects up to the extent of 50 per cent of total income.

These two measures will greatly encourage investment in the tar sands and in heavy oils. Further, the minister states, as set out on page 10 of the budgetary papers:

> I want to make clear that the up-grading plants to process the heavy oil produced from wells into a type of oil similar to conventional crude will be treated as a manufacturing facility, eligible for fast write-offs and the reduced tax rate.

All this gives us an idea of the immense amount of money which will be invested in Alberta as a result of the encouragement given in the budget. I suppose the oil industry is still not clear as to the interpretation of these tax measures or as to what their full effect will be, but there is no question in my mind that there will be far more potential benefit from the assistance given to the development of oil deposits in Alberta than from the total of the tax reduction, which amounts to around $1.1 billion.

In other words, these measures will mean more by way of financial benefit and encourage more investment in Alberta than all the other benefits seen in the budget for all the other provinces put together.

If this is correct, one might say, "Surely, this is too much to give one province?" Mr. Speaker, it is not going out to one province. It is benefiting the whole nation. We know that sooner or later we must develop these resources. Indeed, we could become energy sufficient, and if we develop the proper technology we could even become a major exporter of oil after 1995, I estimate.

What has all this meant to the province of Alberta? I am told that many people are envious of that wealthy province. Many say it was Premier Manning, through his connection with the Lord above us all, who put the oil below the surface of Alberta. Today, many newcomers believe it was Premier Lougheed who put the oil below the surface of the province. There are some in this House who believe that the prosperity of Alberta is the result of the way in which the affairs of the province have been managed by its present government.

Mr. Speaker, I am well connected with the present government of Alberta, and you might say I even have good relations with that government. But I am fair enough to realize that the tax measures to which I have referred were brought in by the former minister of finance and by the present Minister of Finance. The tax measures contained in the budget of April 10 have contributed and will continue to contribute to a dramatic growth in the part of Canada about which I have been talking.

Looking at the growth figures for the population generally I see a figure of 1.25 per cent. I look out to Alberta and find that the population there is growing at close to 4 per cent. The population of the city of Calgary is growing at the rate of 1,500 a month. The city of Edmonton is growing at a like rate. Fort McMurray—

An hon. Member: How about Cessford?

Mr. Horner: It is growing too. It is very near my home ranch and it is growing faster even than the rest of the province. I feel a little like Khrushchev when I say that, because when you start from nothing it is very easy to grow quickly.

● (1642)

An hon. Member: Not with this government.

Mr. Horner: Calgary is growing at the rate of 1,500 per month, and the same is true of Edmonton. In 1973 Fort McMurray had a population of about 8,000. Today it is 23,000. Citizens from all over Canada have gone to the province of Alberta. Rightly or wrongly they are now paying income tax to the province of Alberta. I think it is right that they should, but we have to recognize that it was the federal government, particularly since the oil dispute of 1973-74, which caused a great deal of rapid expansion of that province.

Alberta has benefited immensely. As I flew out of Calgary on Monday I looked at the skyline of that city and wondered what it was like ten years ago. It was nothing like it is today. I also thought of the gigantic roadways traversing the valley of the Saskatchewan River, and the gigantic hotels and apartment buildings built at the edge of the Saskatchewan River in the city of Edmonton. I thought to myself about how the skyline of that city has changed immensely in the last ten years.

One can say that the Minister of Finance neglected Alberta in his April 10 budget, but if one wanted to be parochial and to divide Canada into regions, he could do that too. I do not particularly like that. I got into federal politics because I am a federalist. One could even accuse me of being a centralist. I do not mind that, because I believe that in order to hold this nation together we have to accept the fact that there should be one government for the whole of the nation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Horner: When I was a member of the other party I once asked my leader what power he would decentralize, so that I could know what he would do to my country. He could not tell me what power he would decentralize. It is a nice sounding phrase, but I said to my leader that he could not go on forever saying it. I told him that someone would ask him what he would do, but he could not tell me. I hope he has thought up an answer by now. Perhaps the hon. member for York-Simcoe has given him an answer. The hon. member for York-Simcoe seems to have many answers and rumours ready.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: We decentralized by giving you to the Liberals.

Mr. Horner: When the hon. member for York Simcoe was in Calgary he said on a radio phone-in program that he was very glad to see the hon. member for Crowfoot go because he could not get along with him. I explained in my speech today how he and I disagreed about what he was trying to do with the Bank of Western Canada. Anyone who reads my remarks will readily see why I could not get along with the hon. member.

We are changing the law regarding rape. The hon. member for York Simcoe was attempting to rape western Canada financially, and I will never forgive him for his intentions. Of course he was not a politician then. His true business ethics were coming through loud and clear, to me in any case.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. minister, but his allotted time has expired. Nevertheless, he may continue if there is unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Epp: No.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, I said no.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): I heard one hon. member say no.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the warm applause with which I was greeted by Liberal backbenchers when I stood up. It seldom happens, but I do indeed welcome it.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, is somebody else conducting the debate?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. The hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) has the floor.

Mr. Brewin: I have never claimed to be an expert on taxation problems and, indeed, I am not an expert on taxation problems, but I know there are certain basic principles which should be applied to test all taxation problems. These principles depend, in my judgment, on whether proposed tax changes tend toward more equality or more inequality, whether they benefit those who already have too much or whether they are calculated to assist those below the proverty line and those in urgent need. Judged by these tests I find the present bill totally inadequate. I propose to deal with the sales tax later, but I wish first to speak about the bill as a whole.

In March of this year the National Council of Welfare, which hon. members know is a responsible and experienced group of Canadians, produced a report on taxation and the distribution of income. This report reveals a society, and I quote:

—which continues to be marked by vast inequalities of income—inequalities which condemn three millions of our citizens to lives of poverty in the midst of Canada's widespread affluence.

The income gap separating the richest and poorest 20 per cent of Canadians has grown enormously over the past 25 years, and this drastic increase has been at a time when Canada has been creating an elaborate multi-billion income security system. In 1976 the lowest income 20 per cent of Canadians received barely 4 per cent of the total national income. The highest 20 per cent—in other words, the same number of people at the top level—received more than 40 per cent, a share ten times as great as the poorest 20 per cent.

It is a striking fact that this picture has not changed relatively over the past quarter of a century. In 1951 the bottom fifth of Canadians received 4.4 per cent of the national income. Today those people receive 3.9 per cent. The top fifth got 42.8 per cent. Today those people receive 44 per cent.

The incomes of the lower 20 per cent in 1951 stood at $3,060 which, adjusted for inflation, was the equivalent in 1976 of $6,900. By 1976 the difference between the richest and poorest fifths had increased by $18,000. In other words, the gap had increased by over four and a half times in constant dollars. Despite all the rhetoric about the welfare state, our system of taxation and welfare has had no effect in tempering the overwhelming inequality of income distribution. The supposed levelling effect of the tax system has turned out to be a myth.

The income tax system is indeed progressive, but the tax system includes a great deal more than personal income tax. There are federal and provincial sales taxes, excise taxes, import duties, property taxes, provincial health insurance premiums, contributions to the Canada and Quebec pension plans, and unemployment insurance premiums. These are all taxes under another name. What, then, is the reason for this situation?

In 1972 the Economic Council of Canada found that over the lower portion of the income scale the system tends to contradict the ability to pay principle by taxing the poor at a higher rate than those who are better off. The effect of the few taxes that are progressive, such as the income tax, is completely offset by the remainder of taxes in the system. Most important, a host of new exemptions and reductions has been introduced into income tax, all provisions which give no benefit whatsoever to those too poor to pay taxes, only modest benefits to lower and middle income persons, and the greatest benefits to those with the highest income. In 1976 the National Council of Welfare issued a report discussing these exemptions and reductions. In that report, entitled "The Hidden Welfare System", they estimated the cost of just 17 of these tax subsidies—there are more than 60 all told—at $6.4 billion, with the taxpayer making over $50,000 a year receiving an average of $4,000 in annual benefits, and the taxpayer with less than $10,000 income receiving less than $500.

• (1652)

Much has been said about equity in the tax system. The scrutiny to which it has been put by the National Council of Welfare suggests that no such equity exists. I say—this is something that all of us from all parties in the House should know—that we in this country, despite all the good things we say about ourselves, despite the good fortune which we enjoy, have created a society in which there are gross injustices and inequalities along the lines which I have not dug up but which are based upon the report of the National Welfare Council.

To remedy this would require amendments to the methods of securing funds for the Canada and Quebec pension plans, unemployment insurance, and health care plans. The report of the National Council of Welfare goes into these in detail, but I will not do so here. Let me only remark that we in this party have supported and do support the welfare provisions. Indeed, we take some responsibility for their introduction. However, I will say that we too have underestimated the importance of making sure that the acquisition of funds or payment of these schemes is supported progressively rather than regressively, and adds to rather than diminishes the income of the poorer people. Nor is the objective of more equality merely a moral or humanitarian objective. It is not an objective of people of soft hearts and kind dispositions. It is a condition of a healthy economy?

With hundreds of thousands of Canadians below the poverty line, these Canadians are effectively debarred from playing an effective part in our market system. The net result of this unfair contribution of income is the state of depression, recession, and stagnation with which we are all familiar. The government plans in the tax bill with which we are dealing have failed to make any effective dent in these facts.

I want to return for a minute or two to the sales tax and the means devised to distribute the compensation benefits from the sales tax reductions. It is well known that the sales tax is one of the important means of taxation of the provinces. The provinces have claimed, and no doubt have the right to claim, the right to dispose of the proceeds of direct sales tax according to their own judgment and without interference from the federal government. The present legislation contemplates an intrusion in this field by the federal government. In so far as the provinces agree to this and accept federal leadership, there can be no objection, but interference over the objection of the provinces is interference in a provincial field which is highly important to our whole federal system. In the case of Quebec and the other provinces, the federal government offered to repay compensation equivalent to the reduction in the sales tax and the losses from that across the whole field. This has been accepted with varying degrees of grumbling from all the provinces except the province of Quebec.

The Quebec government preferred a scheme where there should be a total abolition of the sales tax for certain essential commodities. I think it included textiles, furniture, etc. I will not go through the list, but they are unquestionably essentials. This reduction was to be a total reduction, not limited in time, and obviously presented a real contrast to the proposals made by the federal government. However, the purpose of these reductions was to promote employment, which is the objective of the exercise claimed by the federal government. It provided for the stimulation of employment through reduction in the prices of the goods covered by the tax. The federal government has obstinately refused to pay compensation, as requested by the government of Quebec, except in the form of direct payments to the citizens of Quebec who pay income tax.

The federal proposal has earned the opposition of the government of Quebec and all the other parties in the legislative assembly of Quebec, of all the opposition parties in the House of Commons, and some opposition from other provinces. The federal government has persisted in its particular plan with an obstinacy worthy of a better cause.

There may be arguments as to whether the federal or Quebec scheme for the reduction of the sales tax is best. I myself prefer the Parizeau to the Chrétien model, and one of the basic reasons for that is that the federal scheme excludes the most needy of all, the people who do not earn enough even to have to pay any income tax, those who are on the poverty line and who do not benefit, even though they still have to pay sales tax on what they purchase. It is here that the general principle which I outlined at the beginning of my speech is applicable, namely, that all tax proposals should be judged by the effect on the poorest people in the community. But the real tragedy is that this comes at a time when the federal government claims to give leadership to strengthening and preserving our federal system.

What the federal government has proposed gives aid and comfort to separatists, and is a blow to the future of Canada. Furthermore, it appears to violate the government's own proposed guidelines on conditional grants for federal-provincial programs. The hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) has dealt with this matter and I will not repeat what she said but will summarize some of the points in my own way.

In 1969 the Government of Canada issued, under the signature of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) himself, a constitutional working paper entitled "Federal-Provincial Grants and the Spending Power of Parliament". The white paper stated that the proposed principles would establish two limitations on the use by parliament of its power to make conditional grants for general federal-provincial programs. Of course these schemes for the sales tax are precisely that because the Government of Canada, quite rightly, is going to spend the money and was asking that the moneys received be applied to the sales tax.

According to the white paper on the federal proposal, first, there must be the existence of a broad national consensus in favour of the program, and second, there must be the assurance that a fiscal penalty would not be imposed on the people of non-participating provinces. I note the constitutional paper refers to people and not governments. Perhaps the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) and others would claim that looking after the claims of the people of Quebec and bypassing the provincial government is in accordance with the guidelines proposed. I do not think the guidelines intended any such thing. The people of Quebec, as selected by the federal government, may well not be the same people as those who would benefit from a disposition of the funds by the provincial legislature.

● (1702)

Undoubtedly it is the constitutional right of the Quebec legislature to prefer to receive the payments in lieu of sales tax. In my understanding of our constitutional system, the federal government communicates in such matters with provincial governments and not with individuals in the provinces. All the preliminary papers I have read constantly refer to the provinces. Our system is composed of a federal parliament and provincial legislatures which are supreme within their own realms. This is not a new doctrine. It was pronounced by learned law lords in the privy council of Great Britain, which was the final court of appeal, nearly a century ago. The provincial legislatures have sovereign rights within their own jurisdictions.

The constitutional paper produced by the Prime Minister goes on to suggest that the first step toward ensuring a consensus would be the introduction in parliament of a money resolution preceding a bill to be proceeded with if and when a consensus was reached. This has not been done yet. Obviously it may be done in the future. It was contemplated to be the first step. Then this resolution was to be sent to each province for approval or rejection in their legislatures. That was contained in the statement of the Prime Minister on behalf of the government when the future constitution of Canada was being dealt with.

The Minister of Finance has not come close to following the proposed method of operation of the federal government. One must assume the federal government is abandoning its own scheme of instituting a federal plan for conditional grants to the provinces. As this is a central feature of federal-provincial relations, greater attention should have been paid to it by the government. Its failure to do so constitutes a blow to the unity of Canada and a blow to Canada itself.

Now I should like to turn to the other provisions of Bill C-56. As I read them, apart from the corporate sales tax, there is little or nothing designed to assist those in the greatest need, or to equalize the distribution of income. Clause 1 of the bill deals with the removal of taxes and expenses of a second residence needed for temporary purposes. Perhaps this is a good idea, but it is hardly an important one. Clause 4 deals with loans to shareholders by corporations. Certainly it is not an earth-shaking measure. Clause 6 deals with additional allowances for scientific research. Indeed this is needed and beneficial, but it can hardly be said to have any direct impact upon the distribution of income. Clause 11 and other clauses deal with registered retirement income funds. The proposals in clause 11 may be a measure of relief for those who contribute to these funds. Perhaps much of the clause can be commended. However, it encourages saving and not spending. To that extent it fails to stimulate employment, which is a major priority of the day.

Clause 14 deals with the transfer by a taxpayer to his child resident in Canada of shares of a qualifying farm corporation. Indeed this is a helpful provision, but it is of very little significance in the over-all picture. Clause 30 deals with the reduction in 1978 of the tax payable by individual residents in prescribed provinces by $100. Indeed this may have some small effect on stimulating purchasing power, but it would be far more effective in redistributing income equitably if income taxes were used and if it were removed entirely from those at the lowest level.

I cannot say that I have read the bill carefully, but I have glanced at the 66 pages which constitute the involved provisions before us. Also I have read the notice of the ways and means motion to summarize some of the proposed amendments to the Income Tax Act. The same observation is true of nearly all of these provisions. Some of them may remedy minor injustices, but none of them provide an adequate stimulation of the economy by making more purchasing power available, none of them reduce the enormous gap between rich and poor in the country.

My party has made its stand very clear. It believes it is necessary to fulfil these dual purposes: on the one hand, the stimulation of the economy and reduction of unemployment and, on the other hand, more justice in our tax system and a redistribution of income by income tax reductions at lower levels. The government has not taken this advice although many others, as well as the New Democratic Party, advocated this course.

For these reasons I cannot support this bill. It might be said cynically but justly, as my party is against the bill, as I work with the party and attempt to support it when I can, that my vote against the bill is no more than a party vote. Indeed it is a party vote, but it is much more than that. It is an endeavour to express my regret that the government has failed to stimulate the economy adequately, to deal effectively with unemployment so far as the tax system can and, above all, has failed to maintain the principle of a more just and fair distribution of income in Canada to those who are at the poverty line or below.

Also, the government has failed to reduce the gap between those who have acquired substantial and secure incomes in Canada and those who live in poverty. In my view, this is the essence of this legislation. It is ample reason for saying it is not good enough, if we are truly concerned about the welfare of all Canadians.

[Mr. Brewin.]

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1712)

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Roy (Laval): Mr. Speaker, I am honoured to bring my humble contribution to the second reading of Bill C-56, an Act to amend the statute law relating to income tax and to authorize payments related to provincial sales tax reductions. I do not claim to be an expert in taxation or even in constitutional law, but I think I know the problems of Quebec as much as the member who had the floor before me, and I will try to be practical regarding the study of the bill.

To start with, Mr. Speaker, I will confess that I have never felt so surprised in seeing the attitude of the members of the opposition because the issue is to sell a sales tax reduction to all Canadians. There is nothing about increasing taxes, and yet it seems that we are experiencing difficulties in getting people to accept a lower sales tax. I hope that my intervention will not be considered and interpreted by some as an interference into provincial jurisdiction or as the attitude of a traitor to the people of Quebec or even as that of an unconditional federalist. Rather I am appealing to my fellow citizens from Quebec so that they will consider my intervention as that of a representative of Quebec who had been elected to the House of Commons and has the courage of defending his convictions, who believes in the Liberal philososphy and wishes to continue improving the standard and quality of living of his fellow citizens in the city of Laval, in the province of Quebec and all accross this country by supporting a program designed to meet a most difficult economic situation not only in Quebec or even in Canada but in all industrial countries of the world. Throughout my speech, I will endeavour to point out the reasons which justify Bill C-56 while trying to provide some explanations on the crippling attitude of finance minister Parizeau, and also voice my opposition to a general transfer from government to government for if we consider the objectives of this legislation a general transfer cannot reach them.

This bill is in line with the main measures deriving from the economic and fiscal statement made before the Commons on October 20 of last year. Under this initiative from the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien), Canadians have benefited from a $100 income tax reduction for the months of January and February. Altogether this amounted to a reduction of some $700 million which, coupled with the indexation factor of 7.2 per cent, represented another saving, or if you prefer another federal government revenue loss, a saving of $850 million for Canadians. The April 10 Chrétien budget reflects this trend by offering the provinces a reduction in their sales tax. The two-thirds compensation by the Canadian government comes in addition to the $700 million which I mentioned earlier, so to these $850 million granted through indexation we are adding another contribution of some $1.147 billion, namely the value of the proposed reduction of the retail sales tax.

The budget is a positive reform in the context of our current economic problems, increasing as it does the consumer's purchasing power and the level of production of a number of our manufacturers who are now using some 60 per cent of their capacity. So we are increasing our industrial production, which will in turn foster job creation. Mr. Speaker, the sales tax reduction initiative has been supported and indeed called for by a number of economic groups. As an illustration, I would like to quote from the Canadian Chamber of Commerce report, Impact, Vol. 2, No. 3, the March 1978 bulletin issued when the Canadian Chamber of Commerce came here to Ottawa to meet with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) and the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Guay):

> If the Canadian government feels it has an absolute duty to stimulate the economy, the Canadian Chamber of Commerce believes the best way would be a 2 to 3 per cent reduction of provincial sales taxes. In the pre-budget brief issued in Ottawa on March 6, the chamber indicates it can easily be proven the government should maintain the size of its deficit . . .

And it goes on with a number of other suggestions. I would once more quote a paragraph from the Canadian Chamber of Commerce submission to minister Chrétien:

> But in order to absorb the high unemployment rate and the serious underutilization forecast for the Canadian economy this year, the Canadian Chamber of Commerce recommends that the federal and provincial governments share equally in the provincial sales tax reduction. However, Ottawa should pay an extra percentage point in areas where unemployment is above the national average. The chamber feels that such reductions will meet a number of prerequisites for a real economic pickup.

That proposition was put forward by the Canadian Chamber of Commerce. I heard no member indicate this was suggested by the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, an important group in our Canadian economy. I would also have welcomed associations and chambers of commerce from various Quebec towns and cities if they also had been in support of the Minister of Finance's initiative at the suggestion of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce. I also have here, Mr. Speaker, another report on the conference of industry, trade and commerce ministers, a federal-provincial conference held here in Ottawa. That document was signed by Mr. Rodrigue Tremblay, the Quebec minister of industry and commerce. I am quoting from page 5 of the magazine Commerce of April 1978:

> Precise and immediate actions needed.
>
> Care should be taken however that, under the pretext of discussing medium and long-term industrial strategies, concrete and immediate steps needed to correct the most urgent problems are not neglected. The Canadian manufacturing sector is probably more seriously affected by the current economic recession than other sectors of the economy.
>
> Due to insufficient demand, most companies are now experiencing below normal capacity utilization. Demand stimulation measures therefore appear to be urgently needed to strengthen the manufacturing sector.
>
> We would be doing a real disservice to companies and workers if, in the course of such a conference—

This was the January conference—

> —we simply discuss medium and long-term strategies. It is imperative that each level of government take concrete and immediate steps to stabilize and strengthen employment in the manufacturing sector.

So, Mr. Speaker, there you have Quebec's position as stated by its minister of industry and commerce, Mr. Rodrigue Tremblay, after a federal-provincial conference of ministers of industry, trade and commerce.

● (1722)

So the budget is indeed a positive response to representations. It is an answer to the representations made either by the chamber of commerce or by other organizations in the economic sector—and even trade and commerce minister Tremblay agreed—to do something to stimulate consumer activity. The Chrétien budget is a positive reform for economic problems. It has many elements. I referred earlier to the sales tax and I shall come back to this later on, but the budget is also an incentive for industrial development. As the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner) said this afternoon, it is an incentive for research and development, and will have short term and long term effects on investments, productivity and employment. These measures are essential to reinforce the position of Canada in an increasingly competitive world.

The third and not the least aspect of this budget which we sometimes forget to mention is the expansion in the field of social legislation of the possibilities offered to the two million individuals who contribute to a registered retirement savings plan and the creation for those who reach retirement age of a new plan for accumulated savings which will be called the registered retirement income fund. I am somewhat disappointed to see that my colleague who spoke before me did not even mention this benefit contained in the budget. The budget also contains other measures such as the extension to incorporated farms of the tax free transfer of farming operations, which now applies only to members of the same family. Mr. Speaker, those are the main features of the Chrétien budget, which also includes the firm commitment to reduce federal expenditures by $350 million. How have the various sectors of the Canadian economy reacted to this budget?

> Chrétien budget favourably received by Canadian business sectors.
>
> Despite a small group of dissatisfied business interests, most Canadian business sectors quickly applauded yesterday the federal budget introduced Monday evening by finance minister, Jean Chrétien.
>
> We fully endorse the fiscal co-operation between provincial and federal governments which has made sales tax cuts possible, stated the Canadian Manufacturers' Association.
>
> This measure will help create jobs because Canadians will buy more Canadian products and it will also result in lower prices at the consumer level.

Chamber of commerce chairman Sam Hughes, to whom I referred the representations made to the Minister of Finance last January, said about the last budget:

> Mr. Chrétien has taken the "basic measures that were required".
>
> According to him, . . .

. . . the chairman of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce . . .

. . . sales tax cuts will do much to eliminate regional disparities and will encourage demand at the consumer level "where it is required".

Mr. Hughes believes that Mr. Chrétien was right not to reduce personal income tax as it would have interfered with capital inflow into government coffers.

The Chairman of the Canadian Federation of Independent Businessmen, Mr. John Bulloch, said that the last budget showed fiscal creativity and emphasized that the government did its best with little money. Those are a few comments on this budget from various organizations in the private sector.

The budget, as presented, has surely answered the wishes of several organizations to which I have referred and it is obvious that it cannot get the unanimous approval of all those individuals. The budget has even succeeded in suggesting steps likely to increase the total demand of the Canadian economy. Following meetings and consultations with the provinces, the budget is the first step towards the distribution of responsibilities between the two levels of government as regards the stabilization policy and more especially the economic stimulus.

Rather than being an intrusion into provincial autonomy, the budget provisions reflect the importance of divided responsibilities as a result of economic conditions. As stated on several occasions by the Minister of Finance, we must bear in mind that 60 per cent of taxes in Canada are levied by provinces and municipalities while 40 per cent are collected by the federal government. It is therefore impossible for the federal government to take full responsibility for the employment situation and to implement alone an economic stabilization policy without the provinces' co-operation.

This situation is most obvious, it seems to me, in the Chrétien-Parizeau dispute, especially since in negotiations, with a separatist government whose "raison d'être" is to leave Canada, and solutions are apt to be slow in coming. The aim of the Quebec government is precisely to show the people of that province that it is impossible to live under a federal system. Mr. Lévesque said in October 1967, and I quote, as I think this is extremely important in the context of this debate:

A sovereign Quebec assumes all powers and all financial resources of the public sector. Thus it has all the tools of decision and the total product of its fiscal efforts.

Today, this same Mr. Lévesque goes to the United States, Mr. Morin to London and others to African countries who are stating that this is a sovereignty association. It is therefore not surprising that negotiations between the province of Quebec and the Minister of Finance cannot take the form of a dialogue as with the other provinces. Mr. Speaker, it seems as difficult to come to an understanding with the Péquiste government on the sharing of goods and obliglations as it is to reconstitute the eggs from an omelet. That is an absolutely impossible task, Mr. Speaker. Quebec sells more manufactured goods to other provinces than it buys from them and most of its sales consist of highly protected products such as clothing and footwear. To substantiate this, one has only to look at the latest figures published in this regard and which show that Quebec does indeed sell more manufactured products to the rest of Canada than it buys from the other provinces. In textiles, for instance, sales are in the range of $192 million.

In the furniture industry, $134 million. In clothing, $503 million. In the leather industry, $59 million. In textiles, $111 million. In this whole sector, products worth $1 billion are manufactured in Quebec and sold in the rest of Canada. Quebec also sells a high percentage of its products in the other provinces, for example 41 per cent in the rubber industry, the leather industry 47.8 per cent, textile industry 38.6 per cent, knitted wear industry 39.4 per cent, clothing industry 41.7 per cent and furniture industry 40.2 per cent.

• (1732)

What would be the consequences if the other provinces did not cut their taxes on these products? The crippling attitude of Quebec finance minister Parizeau might very well balkanize the provinces. There are other products which are made in Quebec and on which there is absolutely no sales tax cut. I have in mind the refrigerator and range industries in l'Assomption which are providing jobs to some 400 people. In the area of electric lamps, Westinghouse is providing jobs to 600 people in Trois-Rivières. I have also in mind sporting goods and cooking ware industries in Cowansville, Cookshire, Drummondville, and trailer manufacturers in Cookshire, and many other firms which are being penalized because they cannot cut the sales tax by the amount suggested in Mr. Parizeau's budget. I am also thinking of electric controls in Granby and cars in Sainte-Thérèse, with some 3,000 people employed, near my riding. It seems to me that these figures should matter to us, that Quebec also benefits from some products, and that several of the sectors which were meant to be protected were already protected by a number of measures to which I will now refer.

In light of those statistics and the request of representatives of various economic sectors, the Chrétien budget was definitely a necessity. But the situation deteriorated after Quebec finance minister Parizeau refused the Chrétien proposal for reducing the sales tax across the board and suggested instead that the cut apply only to furniture, clothing and textiles. I must say, Mr. Speaker, that I was very disappointed with minister Parizeau who, instead of congratulating the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) for having consulted the provinces before preparing his budget, accused him of interfering with provincial budgets.

Mr. Speaker, that is an opinion to which I have given a lot of thought. I am a Quebecker, I was born in Quebec, and I find that language problems are not the only source of confrontation between Canadians: there are also problems of power. Cultural, social and economic problems become political as soon as one wonders which government has authority to solve them. That may be even truer in Quebec. The problem of the sharing of powers is fundamental to any given society. The political aspect is important but basically sharing of power is much more important, more dramatic than sharing of powers.

Mr. Parizeau's refusal to co-operate in economic matters was given support by several provincial groups of constitutional experts that are less competent in the economic and financial field than the organizations which I referred to at the outset of my speech. And yet, being an economist, Mr. Parizeau must know that the economy of any country cannot be dissociated and that it is a joint responsibility of the federal government and the provinces to stimulate the economy by appropriate measures.

It is obvious that the sales tax comes under provincial jurisdiction. Some people are still pointing that out as if the Minister of Finance was not even aware of it. That is precisely why he spent three weeks negotiating with the provinces and that eight out of ten agreed because he knew perfectly well it was a provincial jurisdiction. The sales tax does belong to the provinces but they are not losing anything because the federal government is prepared to pay two thirds of the total cost of the proposed reduction. General reduction of the sales tax on all products in all provinces should increase demand for consumer goods. We should recall that in his budget of April 1975 Ontario finance minister McKeough allowed a 2 per cent sales tax reduction until December of the same year.

Retail sales in Ontario had increased by 14 per cent in that year, i.e. 2 per cent over and above the Canadian average. All the stores have shown a certain amount of prosperity with increased sales of goods. The Chrétien proposal has seemed so interesting for the Quebec government which had identified itself a few months ago with levying tax on children's clothing and shoes that today, being conscious of their error, they have taken through their minister Parizeau this opportunity to exempt clothing, shoes and even furniture. And the federal tax on children's clothing had been completely removed at the wholesaler's level three years ago. The imagination of finance minister Parizeau had been involved to a greater extent in the levying of taxes on children's clothing and shoes than with any reduction of sales tax. Has minister Chrétien's proposal led minister Parizeau to think about removing that sales tax that he had himself initiated for Quebeckers?

Given its economic objective, the Canadian government has committed itself along with the provinces to overcoming unemployment, creating jobs and straightening out the economy all across Canada. They therefore suggested to the Canadian provinces a reduction in consumer sales tax for all manufactured goods sold by any busines or store, for any retail sale. Recently, I met a group of manufacturers, at an exhibition held in Quebec. Naturally, I was asked what was my reaction, my attitude to the Parizeau proposal as against the Chrétien budget? They were manufacturers at an exhibition. I told them: "I will reply by asking you a question. You will then say that it is the way a politician answers but I would rather be a political man of action than be called a politician." I asked how many of the 126 participants in this exhibition were displaying footwear and clothes? Not a single one. This means that none of those manufacturers could benefit from the sales tax reduction, because Mr. Parizeau has decided to act on a selective basis rather than reduce the sales tax on all manufactured goods. I think that this somehow describes the situation of our industries in Quebec. They are being penalized by the action of Mr. Parizeau.

Alberta—a province that has no retail sales tax, and one of the three Canadian provinces contributing to equalization payments, which Quebec will receive this year to the tune of $1.350 billion, that is, 45 per cent of the total amount—accepted the Chrétien proposal, and not necessarily to benefit from it, because there is no sales tax in Alberta, without receiving the contribution of the Canadian government. That participation, it seems to me, which amounts to $186 million in Quebec, is precisely the federal contribution for the 2 per cent cut in the retail sales tax.

It is unfortunate that millions of Quebec consumers, thousands of Quebec manufacturers, and hundreds of Quebec businessmen and dealers should be penalized because of the attitude of minister Parizeau who restricts the tax cut to textiles, clothing and shoes. I checked whether sheets made in the Eastern Townships, sheets and pillow cases made in Quebec would be tax free, and found they would not. The reason why the sales tax applies is that the goods covered by the Parizeau budget include only yard goods and not sheets, pillow cases and things like that. Yet, all goods imported from Taiwan and manufactured abroad will not be taxed. So, I feel it is unfortunate that millions of consumers, manufacturers and dealers in Quebec should be penalized because of that decision.

The implementation of selective tax cuts will not be an easy matter. It is not easy to monitor retail stores nowadays, shops which sell combs, dishes, tires, paint, electric appliances, and even sweaters imported from Taiwan. The Chrétien formula cut the sales tax on all the products sold. The Chrétien formula applied to all products; it is much simpler and much more direct for all consumers, including those who have no taxable income, which means those who do not pay income tax.

If we changed the formula, it is because of Mr. Parizeau's refusal. It is rather the formula of the Quebec finance minister, a tax measure, which balkanizes the Quebec industry. This late proposal by Mr. Parizeau, being discriminatory, could result in a balkanization of the Canadian economy, it could paralyze the retail sales industry and penalize the consumers in Quebec. I think a responsible government which wants to negotiate an association with the other provinces of Canada should act in a less selfish, not to say in a less separatist manner.

I hope that during this debate we shall make the people in Quebec realize what this dispute means and how important it is that the Government of Canada develop with the provinces a sound climate of co-operation, if we want to solve together the economic problems in the country and continue to improve the situation of the population which should not be penalized by this dispute. Let us stop bringing politics into the economy, because in so doing, we distort the mechanisms at the expense of all taxpayers, both in the business world, in industry and for the consumers.

● (1742)

[English]

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak on Bill C-56 I would like to put on record some of my reservations about the way the minister has handled the provincial tax situation. First, although our expenditures are some $45 billion, with an $11.5 billion deficit, the minister and the government have shown their ineptitude by getting involved in a measure that has only created confusion and consternation. It is doing nobody any good, while the country suffers. I do not disagree but that it is a reasonable tax change as regards sales tax if it could be administered easily, but in our complex federal system it is obvious from the beginning that it was a maze of contradictions, difficult to administer and still more difficult to institute.

The previous member spoke of economists and businesses and suggested that this sales tax abatement is a good idea. I agree, but not in our complex federal system. Furthermore, many of the negotiations seem to have been by telephone and, unless they are recorded, there is no record but merely the verbal recall of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) of the various provinces.

This is interesting because the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Minister of Finance suggested they had long consultations with the four western premiers and with Mr. Parizeau. However, these gentlemen generally denied there were any great consultations. In the case of Manitoba, they were more or less told, rather than there being negotiations.

Given the situation in Quebec, Mr. Parizeau has roundly outfoxed the Minister of Finance, and the federal government will be putting up some $140 million more money from general revenues, according to my calculation, than what it would have if the government had followed the same course with Quebec as it has followed with Ontario, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and British Columbia, the so-called provinces that have economic stability. The dilemma of the government can be best summarized by the editorial in the Globe and Mail of May 18, and I quote:

> The federal government has done what nobody thought could be done. It has united the Quebec National Assembly. It has induced all members of all parties in that assembly to denounce as "totally unacceptable" the federal response to the Quebec government's refusal to cut its sales tax to fit federal demands. It has produced a unanimous request from the assembly to members of all parties in parliament, including members of the Liberal party, to oppose the federal legislation which would grant tax rebates to Quebec taxpayers in place of the across-the-board cut in provincial sales tax which the Quebec government has refused to make.
>
> Even Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau virtually admitted that his government was in the wrong. "The federal government" he told the House, "should not use tax leverage over the provinces to force a province to do certain things." He tried to contend that Mr. Chrétien had not done such a thing because he had consulted the provinces for three weeks before he brought in his budget which guaranteed that Ottawa would pick up two-thirds of the cost of a temporary across-the-board reduction in sales taxes if the provinces would pick up the other one-third.
>
> Yet on budget night Mr. Chrétien himself admitted that Quebec had not agreed to the deal. And Quebec did not agree to the deal. It decided instead to eliminate the sales tax entirely on certain items that are chiefly produced in Quebec, thus providing maximum stimulation to the Quebec economy. That was within its right.

In the Montreal Gazette of May 18 we have what I think is a very good account of the problems of the Minister of Finance in dealing with Mr. Parizeau. It had always been my impression that the Minister of Finance had the tacit approval of Mr. Parizeau when he introduced the controversial sales tax measure. But instead, he, Mr. Parizeau, did something entirely different than what the rest of the nine provinces have done.

In effect, the provinces of the rest of Canada, where they have sales taxes, reduced their sales tax by 3 per cent. This, in effect, helped the manufacturing industry mainly in Canada rather than any specific region, and I think it allowed the province of Quebec, more than any other, relative advantage.

According to Mr. Cam Nappi of the University of Montreal, as recorded in the Gazette of May 17, Quebec manufacturers would lose 30 per cent of their existing market while manufacturers in the rest of the country would lose only 10 per cent of their existing market. This heavy dependence of Quebec manufacturers on the rest of the country is because of two things. The rest of the country represents a larger market than Quebec alone, but it also means Quebec is more heavily depending on markets in other parts of the country than any of the other four regions in Canada. He went on to state that although statistics of interprovincial trade are incomplete, Quebec is, and I quote:

> —the only region for which the Canadian market is more important than the international market.

Fifty six per cent of Quebec exports go elsewhere in Canada while 44 per cent go to other countries. He estimates that Quebec manufacturing exports over 100,000 Quebec jobs to Ontario while Ontario exports to Quebec about the same number of jobs. Canadian tariff barriers have strongly benefited Quebec manufacturers because industry in that province is concentrated in sectors protected by the highest tariff walls. Exports from Quebec to other provinces are protected by tariffs averaging 9.9 per cent, exports from Ontario averaging 8.4 per cent, and those from other provinces averaging 7.8 per cent.

By the Quebec action of the selective tariff cuts, they have in fact benefited most industries concentrated in those provinces, but the exports of Quebec manufactured goods will benefit from the reduced sales tax in all other parts of the country that have taken up the federal offer.

There has been complaining by the provincial premiers of Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and British Columbia that there was not enough consultation, and that now a new ballgame has developed that is inimical to their interests. I certainly agree, but I wonder why the provincial governments were hoodwinked into agreeing with the Minister of Finance when he invaded their provincial jurisdictions on this short term episode.

Provincial jurisdictions have been invaded in the past through unemployment insurance, old age pensions, health and welfare programs forced on the provinces by the federal government and too expensive for efficient running of these programs. I might add that I believe one of the problems of disunity in this country is the fact that in the last 25 years the federal government has invaded provincial jurisdiction through massive health and welfare programs. This has caused much disunity in this country.

It is folly for the Minister of Finance to invade once again provincial jurisdiction without having very clear outlines as to what was at stake. He has done confederation a great disservice. His complaint in the budget speech that the federal government was losing control of the fiscal responsibility is not quite true. He points out that in 1945 the provincial sector had only 30 per cent of total government revenues whereas it now is 60 per cent. He further states that the provincial and municipal sector actually holds a larger share of total government revenues than does the federal government. But this argument is falacious because most of the increase in terms of percentages has been in the fields of health, welfare and education; in the last 20 years provincial governments have taken over from private plans, and the financing of these very expensive programs has fallen on the provincial governments instead of upon individuals. Some 60 per cent or more of provincial revenues are spent in the health field so the argument put forward by the minister is not valid.

● (1752)

I turn, now to the complex question of cash rebates to the citizens of Quebec. I can understand the contention of the Prime Minister that in the absence of a tax arrangement with Quebec the rebate must be different. But the decision to give a cash rebate to citizens of Quebec in the next few weeks smacks of political opportunism. In Manitoba, when income tax forms are made out in 1979 for 1978 tax, there will be a box in which citizens of that province will be able to claim a rebate of $100 on their 1978 tax from the federal government and, correspondingly, this amount will be taken up by the $100 recovery tax on the provincial side. Why does the federal goverment not reduce the $100 or its equivalent, $85 or whatever it is, on the tax returns for 1978 to be filed in Quebec next year? This would bring them in line with the other provinces.

The Minister of Finance accused Mr. Parizeau of bad taste. But in the matter of payment to Quebeckers it seems to me the Minister of Finance is just as guilty. Cash payments to Quebeckers will induce them to feel they should vote for the Liberal administration in October, if there is an election, and presumably, also, with the referendum coming up in Quebec, citizens of that province will look to Ottawa as a benevolent institution giving them payments they would not otherwise receive.

This must explain Mr. Parizeau's objection, because obviously the total economy of Quebec gains relatively more than the rest of the country. Mr. Parizeau has made selective tax cuts which will presumably effectively minimize the benefits to goods produced in the rest of the country and also to imports which in our financial position is its only saving grace. But Quebec industry will be able to benefit from the tax cuts in all the other parts of the country and their industries should get a relatively greater improvement than industry in other parts of the country.

Now what about the selective tax cuts? In these the federal government has assumed, I believe, that at 3 per cent applied across the board in Quebec as in other provinces they would have cost the Quebec treasury some $330 million, assuming the estimates given are correct, and I would assume that they are probably rough in nature. However, the selective tax cuts will presumably diminish the Quebec treasury by only some $120 million during the six months that the federal plan remains in force, so that the federal government says that it must make up $220 million to be even with the other provinces. Having allowed a $40 million credit for the selective tax cuts, the federal government proposes to pay $186 million to the citizens of Quebec. Assuming that all citizens of Canada paid approximately the same federal tax, the citizens of Quebec would have paid in some 25 per cent of $186 million, or some $45 million.

In the other provinces such as Ontario and Manitoba the provincial treasurers gave up 3 per cent of their sales tax income with 2 per cent reimbursed by their own citizens through the abatement of the federal tax system, and in the province of Quebec the provincial treasurer should have given up $330 million, as I understand the minister's calculations but, in fact, they are only giving up some $120 million, at least for the lifetime of the six months' agreement.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I submit that the rest of Canada is putting up some $140 million through the cash rebates to Quebec citizens over and above what the Quebec people themselves paid to the federal tax. It should be understood that during the lifetime of the agreement of six months, which is the only thing we are talking about, the provincial treasury of Quebec will not lose nearly the revenue that they would have under the across the board 3 per cent reduction. This represents a transfer from one portion of the country to the Quebec economy and a form presumably of equalization. I do not necessarily disagree with this but I should recognize it is a form of equalization payment.

I do not disagree one whit with the right of Quebec to impose selective tax cuts, but it is probably wrong to extend some form of federal subsidy hidden under the guise of sales tax rebates. I think it would have been better to allow the tax reduction to the Quebec taxpayer at the time he filed his income tax return for 1978. Taxation would have fallen more evenly across the country.

One of our taxation problems in this country is that justice must be seen to be done, it must not only be done. When taxpayers in different parts of the country are taxed differently—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order. It being six o'clock this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m., pursuant to Standing Order 2(4).

At six o'clock the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, May 25, 1978

The House met at 2 p.m.

• (1407)

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

NATIONAL FILM BOARD

BURNING OF CANADIAN FLAG AFTER FILM FESTIVAL—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

Last week the National Film Board, in Montreal, celebrated a film festival. It has been reported to me that at the end of the festivities a Canadian flag was burned in the yard of the National Film Board headquarters. In view of the seriousness of such a report, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Hnatyshyn):

That the Secretary of State investigate this report to establish its validity and, if it is found to be true, investigate the circumstances, determine who was involved and report back to the House on his findings.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion, under the terms of Standing Order 43, requires the unanimous consent of the House before it can be put. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

[Translation]

FINANCE

SUGGESTED SOLUTION FOR QUEBEC SALES TAX DISPUTE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Pursuant to Standing Order 43, Mr. Speaker, I seek the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion.

In view of the fact that the leader of the opposition in the Quebec national assembly has come up with a reasonable suggestion to put an end to this dialogue which falls on deaf ears—the Ottawa and Quebec governments—concerning the sales tax issue, namely that both governments should sign an agreement whereby the federal government would collect the $226 million and turn it over to the Quebec government, or grant a tax cut for the fiscal year 1978-79 which would allow the Quebec government to recuperate the sums involved, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That the House urge the government to accept one of these solutions to put an end to the conflict between the Ottawa and Quebec governments concerning the sales tax issue.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The House has heard the hon. member's motion. Pursuant to Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

[English]

CANADIAN TRANSPORT COMMISSION

PROPOSED RAIL LINE ABANDONMENT IN MANITOBA—REQUEST FOR REVIEW—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that the prairie rail action committee recommended the abandonment of the Quadra to Hamiota and Kenton to Wheatland rail lines in Manitoba, which the Hall commission said should be put under a prairie rail authority, and since the Canadian Transport Commission has acted with unseemly haste, without public hearings, to rubber-stamp this bad decision in spite of the assurance given by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) to the House on May 4 that full hearings would be held, I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom):

That the Minister of Transport require the CTC to hold hearings to review its decision to abandon the Quadra to Hamiota and Kenton to Wheatland lines in Manitoba and to hold hearings on other PRAC abandonment recommendations, and that the Minister of Transport disband the prairie rail action committee and bring forward legislation to set up the prairie rail authority.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard the proposed motion. Under the terms of Standing Order 43, such a motion would require unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Oral Questions

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

INDEPENDENCE OF PARLIAMENT

INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Deputy Prime Minister. As the House knows, there has been considerable controversy in recent days about a potential conflict of interest involving members of this House. The basic problem is that there are no guidelines regarding conflict of interest for all members of parliament, and only meaningless guidelines for members of the cabinet.

Since the Prime Minister has said that conflict of interest legislation is ready, would the Deputy Prime Minister tell the House when we may expect to see this legislation?

● (1412)

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned I believe earlier in the week, the bill on the question of conflict of interest, or the independence of parliament, is ready. There are a few more points which have to be dealt with. It would be my intention, if possible, to bring the bill forward for first reading, if not in May then certainly in June. It would provide a basis for discussion of the whole question of conflict of interest as it applies to members of this House and to members of the Senate.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, I welcome this legislation and we look forward to seeing it as soon as possible.

If I might turn now to the very difficult question of conflict of interest regulations as they apply to ministers—difficult because it is a question from which this government has backed away—on July 18, 1973, the Prime Minister said that the rules relative to members of the cabinet "will be put in the form of precise guidelines just as soon as parliament has had an opportunity to consider the green paper with regard to members of parliament and senators and the legislation that might be made applicable to them".

Parliament long since has considered that green paper. Will the Deputy Prime Minister tell us whether those precise guidelines promised nearly five years ago by the Prime Minister have been issued? If so, will they be made available to the House of Commons and to the public to see? If not, why have they not been issued as the Prime Minister undertook five years ago?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I would like to check into the details and get more information on the question. But as I recollect it, based upon the statement that was made by the Prime Minister all ministers were asked to conform to a certain set of guidelines in handling their financial affairs with respect to their public duties. Certainly there has been communicated to members of the cabinet by the Prime Minister the obligations he expects ministers to follow with respect to conflict of interest.

[Mr. Speaker.]

I cannot answer the Leader of the Opposition as to whether these guidelines have been made public, but certainly the obligations which fall upon ministers have been communicated to them and ministers are expected to live up to those obligations.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, this is a matter of some concern because the Prime Minister went out of his way to make it clear that there would be, and I quote his words of July 18, 1973, "precise guidelines". Not some general directive, but precise guidelines. I presume that if those existed, the Deputy Prime Minister, as a member of the cabinet, would know something about them. I gather that since he does not, they do not.

I would like him to come back to the House of Commons and tell us if the undertaking of the Prime Minister regarding precise guidelines has been honoured; and I would like him, if it has been honoured, to table those guidelines. If it has not, I would like him to set an early date by which that undertaking will be honoured and to give us a commitment now that the guidelines will be tabled in the House of Commons. May we have that date? May we have that undertaking?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I think the Leader of the Opposition is mistaken in concluding that these precise guidelines do not exist. Precise guidelines do exist, they have been communicated to ministers and ministers have been expected to conform to the guidelines at the request of the Prime Minister. What the Leader of the Opposition is now asking is that these precise guidelines be made available to the public in the form in which they have been transmitted to the ministry: that is something I will check into further.

REQUESTED RESCINDING OF DISCLOSURE OPTION

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. It relates directly to the precise guidelines which, according to the minister, are available to members of the cabinet.

In view of the fact that the guidelines for cabinet ministers permitted a former minister of finance to take the so-called disclosure option, which involved disclosing the fact that he had a 30 per cent interest in a private investment company without disclosing the company's assets, does the government intend to close this loophole? I point out that when I first asked this question in November of 1974, the minister's predecessor took my question as notice and there has never been any answer to it.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I do not have the details of the arrangements in the particular case to which the hon. member refers. Obviously, it is a matter which can be checked into, and I will do so. That is all I want to say on the subject.

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, it seems that these guidelines are so stringent that members of the cabinet are held in terror by them and are very much aware of them. Will the government amend the guidelines for cabinet ministers to require them to disclose their debts to outside creditors, as well as their assets? Also, will the government eliminate the loophole provided by the frozen trust option which allows ministers to manipulate public policy in full and private knowledge of the holdings in their frozen trusts? This is an option which has been followed by six ministers, including the Prime Minister.

● (1417)

Mr. MacEachen: I think the allegations or suggestions made by the hon. member are quite unworthy, Mr. Speaker. The option available to ministers under the frozen trust option or arrangement does not permit manipulation of any kind. The hon. member should really revise his thinking if he is suggesting, as he seems to be, that public policy is being manipulated by ministers in order to accommodate the arrangements they have made under the frozen trust option.

If hon. members are aware of the theory of conflict of interest, they will realize that disclosure is one of the ways of dealing with potential cases of conflict of interest, and in the case of the trust to which the hon. member has referred, the option of disclosure has been used and is well accepted in dealing with cases of conflict of interest. The hon. member should not suggest that that is not the case.

Mr. Beatty: I referred to the frozen trust, not disclosure.

GUIDELINES ON CONFLICT OF INTEREST

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, for the information of the Deputy Prime Minister and of the Leader of the Opposition, let me point out that the guidelines have indeed been made public. They were made public in a letter tabled by the Prime Minister which was written to the Deputy Prime Minister on October 18, 1976. It was tabled in the House on December 17.

My question to the Deputy Prime Minister is as follows: Given this government's discovery during the minority government days that such guidelines were essential, and considering that the Deputy Prime Minister promised in 1976 to act with urgency on the matter, will he, in assuring us that we will have the legislation in June, specifically promise the House that the following two aspects of the legislation in this area will be included in the bill: first, the legislation will establish certain moral and legal standards expected of all members of parliament in financial dealings; second, it will follow the successful British example of making it mandatory that all members of parliament declare their financial interests in a form which is accessible to the public?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for reminding us that the precise guidelines have been made public.

Mr. Clark: These are not precise guidelines.

Mr. MacEachen: With respect to the independence of parliament legislation, the hon. member will recall that the green paper on conflict of interest was sent for study to an all-party committee of the House of Commons. That all-party committee has reported to a great extent; maybe not totally. We will be following the advice of the standing committee of the House which reported upon the proposals made in the green paper.

The hon. member will recall, with respect to the second part of his question, that the conclusion of the parliamentary committee is quite different from the request just made by the Leader of the NDP. Hon. members will be able to deal with the bill when it comes forward and see to what extent it has followed the advice of the all-party committee of the House.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, surely the minister can answer a straightforward question. He is quite correct in pointing out that what I am suggesting is different from the recommendations that came from the all-party committee—recommendations, on this detail, which my party did not support.

I should like to ask the minister precisely, given the very successful practice in the British parliament of making all ministers of the Crown declare, in a form which is accessible to the public, their financial holdings, will the Government of Canada now promise us that whatever else they may include in the bill, that provision will be there—because it is essential?

Mr. MacEachen: The hon. member may believe that provision to be essential: the fact is that the majority of the members of the committee decided otherwise. Normally, we are asked to pay more attention to the recommendations of parliamentary committees. Should we take their advice, or the advice of the Leader of the NDP?

● (1422)

Quite apart from that point, the bill will deal with disclosure provisions. It will be before the House of Commons and members from all parties will be able to decide what regime they wish to have followed in respect of how they deal with the very difficult question of conflict of interest. Hon. members know that there are other ways than through disclosure to deal with the question of conflict of interest. The House will want to consider what other options will be as useful as disclosure in the context of the bill.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the minister is quite right; there are many ways of avoiding the problem which disclosure in this area is intended to solve. Given the answer of the Deputy Prime Minister, we can expect the bill not to include this very important provision. With respect to the second point in my first question, will the bill or bills the government intends to bring in next month also include guidelines which it thinks are appropriate for members on both sides, in terms of either moral or legal obligations which affect their financial dealings? I say this in the context of allegations which have been made, for example, by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce about behaviour on this side of the House, as well as the government side. Is that question to be dealt with by the government as well?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, certainly the interface between members of parliament, senators and, for example, the business community and what financial affairs will be tolerable, will be dealt with in the bill. We hope it will be dealt with fully. In addition to the written rules or the written laws which may be adopted by the House of Commons, there is a certain sense of ethics and responsibility which must be exercised by each individual member of the House of Commons. It seems to me that is a stronger guarantee, over-all, than to attempt to anticipate every possible situation which might cause a conflict of interest. I would add to the rules, regulations and the Standing Orders which may be proposed, the sense of ethics and responsibility that hon. members must follow in all their dealings: that is much more important.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

[Translation]

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

DELAY IN MAKING GRANTS UNDER CANADA WORKS PROGRAM

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Supply and Services. As phase II of the Canada Works program is drawing to a close and some of the sponsors of projects have to borrow money to pay their bills, can the minister tell the House whether he will find out why payment of the subsidies earmarked for the projects is being delayed? If so, can he assure us that those payments will be made in the very near future?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I shall be happy to do so, all the more so that when we receive requisition for payment from the various departments, we usually comply with their request within three days.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, because payments are made so quickly, may I ask whether the books are checked by civil servants in the department and, if so, is there a long delay between checking and authorizing the payments?

Mr. Goyer: There may be, Mr. Speaker, but the hon. member can rest assured that I shall look into the matter and speed things up if necessary.

[Mr. Broadbent.]

[English]

TRADE

GOVERNMENT POLICY RESPECTING EXPORT DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of both the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and the Prime Minister, I should like to direct my first question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs: it deals with the activities of the Export Development Corporation, with particular reference to governmental policy behind EDC. With reference to possible aid or assistance to Cuba, the Prime Minister stated on Tuesday:

● (1427)

This program of co-operation began several years ago, before the Angolan incident. It is being brought to termination: the Secretary of State for External Affairs has said so. There are no present plans for any future projects in Cuba.

Is the minister aware that John MacDonald, chairman of the Export Development Corporation, stated this morning before a standing committee that he has received no instructions to discontinue any future planning in respect of the financing of projects in Cuba and, secondly, that until there is a public declaration requiring all future financing of Cuban projects to be made by the government, he feels free, through his board of directors, to finance projects in Cuba?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I was not aware of that particular statement and I am glad the hon. member has told me about it. In so far as statements made previously are concerned, the hon. member will also recall that they were primarily, if not exclusively, directed to CIDA activities. I think the hon. member for Edmonton West originally asked the questions of me and it was in that context that I replied. We are not engaged in any additional activities in respect of CIDA support or financing.

The question in respect of the Export Development Corporation is, of course, quite a different one. That is equally valid as to whether we wish or ought to withdraw or in some way issue the kind of directive with which the hon. member is concerned. One of the considerations is whether or not, for example, such would be a greater penalty to Cuba or one which would, indeed, bear most heavily on Canadian suppliers. The hon. Leader of the Opposition shakes his head. I put it to him that there are a good many agricultural sales and sales of other Canadian products and equipment—

An hon. Member: Double standard.

Mr. Jamieson: If the hon. member thinks it is a double standard, Mr. Speaker, it may very well be, but I am not going to argue the point. I think it is a question that we should sit down and discuss at a committee, and I would be very happy to do so, in order to determine precisely what it is we are going to do. I point out to the hon. member that if, in fact, this kind of assistance is withdrawn from Cuba or any other country, it is basically Canadian suppliers, including quite a number in the agricultural community, who will be affected. Hon. members should recognize that and should also be prepared to stand in support of that kind of proposition.

EXPORT DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION—SALES TO IRAN AND SAUDI ARABIA

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Supply and Services: it again deals with general government policy in respect of the activities of the Export Development Corporation. It was reported this morning that the minister has elaborated on plans for export sales amounting to about $1 billion involving Iran and Saudi Arabia.

Will the minister indicate whether it is anticipated that as these plans become more formalized they will be turning at any time to the Export Development Corporation in order that financing can be made available to either Iran or Saudi Arabia, or both?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, it is the Canadian Commercial Corporation which has been requested by the private sector to help consortia already set up to get contracts, one in Iran and the other in Saudi Arabia, and we are there at their request. As for project financing, it is the prime responsibility of the participants in the consortia and, of course, if we can help them complete financing, we will, because it is our duty to help the private sector export more.

[English]

EXPORT DEVELOPMENT FINANCING FOR IRAN AND SAUDI ARABIA

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my final supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Finance, and again it centres on the activities of the Export Development Corporation. As the minister has probably heard, this new move will likely result in export development financing being made available to Iran and Saudi Arabia if the Canadian Commercial Corporation's transactions are formalized.

● (1432)

As we learned this morning the EDC have fairly large offers of credit, amounting to $500 million to $1 billion, outstanding in favour of Iran, would the Minister of Finance indicate to the House how he reconciles the extensive foreign borrowing, possibly up to $7 billion, that he has put in place with the fact that we are lending money in terms of hundreds of millions of dollars to Iran and Saudi Arabia?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we are dealing at this moment with two different aspects. We have borrowed on American markets for our exchange operations in Canada and of course when we export we offer Canadian exporters credit facilities in order to be able to sell Canadian products. Those are two completely different problems which I have no difficulty in reconciling.

* * *

FINANCE

REQUESTED RESUMPTION OF NEGOTIATIONS ON QUEBEC SALES TAX

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance stated the day before yesterday that his last communication with his Quebec counterpart dated from May 15. Since we must recognize the failure of those negotiations, whatever may be the reason for that deadlock which should not be extended further in the interests of the Canadian people, does the minister not feel that as Minister of Finance it is his duty to make the first move to resume negotiations on the matter?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, before the introduction of the budget during three weeks I spoke on several occasions to Mr. Parizeau. He did not give any answer. After the introduction of the budget, he told me about his decision a few hours before announcing the selective tax cut which he made without any negotiation. Afterwards, I sent him two different messages which he rejected in a backhanded manner without calling me back. Before introducing my bill on Monday, I phoned him and he told me that perhaps he would call me back. That was ten days ago and he has not yet done so. I think, Mr. Speaker, that I have shown great flexibility in the matter and since the bill is still under consideration, our solution lies in the bill and the problem will be solved when it is passed.

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question.

The minister is telling us about his flexibility whereas I feel it is a matter of responsibility. Considering this deadlock and the day to day increasing support—and the minister knows what I mean—and considering also the circumstances and his responsibilities, for how long yet is the minister prepared to sulk while he is perfectly aware that Quebeckers expect him to take his responsibilities and act promptly on that matter?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, perhaps the hon. member has failed to read some papers yesterday morning where it is stated that 87 per cent of Quebeckers agree on the $85 income tax rebate. Besides, the interesting thing in Mr. Ryan's proposal yesterday is the fact that he rejected what I would call the La Salle-Parizeau solution to make a direct payment to the Quebec government. He said that the income tax rebate was the solution. Of course, I realize that I am in good company now when the Liberal leader says that the income tax rebate, that is the tax reduction, is the solution and that he rejects the La Salle-Parizeau Conservative-Péquiste solution to make a direct payment to the Quebec government.

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, can the minister assure us that with this tax rebate formula the Quebec government will be able to pass this benefit on to Quebeckers for the five selected products as advocated in the formula, something which would go a long way toward providing Quebec residents with the advantages they are now seeking?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, since the sales tax is under provincial jurisdiction, the Quebec government decided to act within the limits of its responsibilities and to cut taxes in a way which was unacceptable to the federal government. But Mr. Parizeau has already cut his taxes and he must now suffer the consequences of his act. As far as I am concerned, I will maintain the policy I announced on budget night, which is to reduce the income tax for all Canadians. At this moment the only difference with Quebec Liberals is that they would prefer to have the problem solved in 1978 rather than taking the list of taxpayers for 1977. All in all, it is a question of deciding when the people of Quebec will receive their tax rebate. Since my budget was aiming at stimulating the economy in 1978, I think it is preferable to give Quebec residents their benefits right now rather than having them wait until next spring.

* * *

[English]

AIR CANADA

LEASING OF AIRCRAFT TO CUBA

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. During the last few days I have endeavoured to secure the lease agreement that was made between Air Canada and Cuba, or with Fidel Castro directly, whereby two jet aircraft were leased to Cuba.

Could the minister, in whose custody the agreement now is, according to Air Canada, produce that particular document so that parliament will understand the basis for what was, and still is, being considered as a most unusual procedure?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised at the right hon. member's suggestion that it is in my custody. In fact, the question arises as to whether this is the kind of document which should ordinarily be requested on the order paper and then dealt with in the ordinary way. As I understand it, however, it was an ordinary commercial transaction between Air Canada and Cuba, or the Cuban airline, in which I think a total of two DC-8s were involved.

The leases were terminated, in one case, I think, with the destruction of or harm to the aircraft and in the other case by the passing of time, last February. In any case, at no time was there any basis for the right hon. gentleman's extraordinary suggestion the other day of Air Canada's participation in any movement of troops, if this is what he is now trying to support with his strange question.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman has an infinite capacity for evasion. I simply ask, will he produce this innocuous document, which is the way he has described it: simply a document of agreement, of no consequence? Parliament has a right to see the agreement, or there must be some reason for the concealment that has taken place ever since the request was first made by the hon. member for Edmonton Centre. Why hide this agreement, if it is so simple; or does it conceal some information that the government does not want exposed?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, that is, again, a rather characteristic refusal of the right hon. gentleman to note the answer which I provided. If he refers to the blues he will see that I answered him completely. There are ordinary procedures for testing this. He asked whether I would produce it and suggested that I have it in my custody, and I tell the right hon. gentleman that it is not.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It is in your custody; at least, that is what Air Canada says.

* * *

AIR TRANSPORT

PURCHASE OF STOL AIRCRAFT BY EPA

Mr. Eymard Corbin (Madawaska-Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. In view of the fact that spokesmen for Eastern Provincial Airways, the Atlantic provinces regional carrier, are publicly stating they are considering purchasing Dash-7 STOL aircraft from the government-owned de Havilland Aircraft if an equitable financing arrangement is arrived at, is the Ministry of Transport supporting and encouraging this move, and have we the assurance this change in planes would improve both the interregional service and the access service to other parts of Canada?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, we are very actively pursuing the question of the additional use of the Dash-7 by several of our regional airlines in providing service to various parts of the country. I, personally, believe that there is a very good chance that the Dash-7 could provide far better service than any alternative, and at a lower cost when you take into account the infrastructure as well as the cost of the aircraft themselves. We are pursuing this with the regional carriers and asking for their analysis of the kinds of routes which would be served and what the financial requirements may be. I look forward to progress in these discussions in the days ahead.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NEUTRON BOMB—CANADIAN POSITION

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I intended to address it to the Prime Minister, but he is not here. It is reported that the Prime Minister proposes to disclose, in a speech to the disarmament conference at the United Nations in New York, Canada's attitude toward the production of the neutron bomb.

● (1442)

At the risk of stealing, or at least dulling some of the Prime Minister's thunder there, will the Secretary of State for External Affairs disclose to parliament the attitude Canada is taking to this weapon which is so important to NATO and to the peace of the world?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think it is entirely appropriate that in a major speech on disarmament, the Prime Minister should include reference to this particular and quite important subject.

Mr. Clark: Why not to parliament?

Mr. Jamieson: There is no particular reason why not to parliament. I do not believe, however, that it would be possible to handle this question in the context of the question period: this is a most complex subject which I think it would be quite impossible to deal with properly.

I should like to make the observation that I have spent some five or six hours before the committee which includes members of all parties, and I think my colleague, the Minister of National Defence, has done the same thing; but I have yet to be asked a single question on the neutron bomb in the committee, where it would be possible to answer in full.

An hon. Member: That is an evasion.

Mr. Jamieson: I do not consider it at all an evasion. May I suggest to hon. members that, following the discussions on disarmament which are taking place at the United Nations—in which we have arranged to have members from all parties participate—it would be extremely useful, after that session is over, to have a full discussion of the total disarmament question either in committee or in full session of the House. I would be very happy to answer all questions at such time, but it is not possible to deal with this matter in a minute of the question period.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, may I point out to the Secretary of State for External Affairs that as far as most of us are concerned, this question of the neutron bomb has only arisen very recently, probably since he appeared before the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence.

Is there any good reason, that he can think of, why a statement on motions should not be made to this House, and why is this House not the proper place to make an announcement of such crucial importance to Canada's policy?

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, when I referred to the committee, I was not saying it in any critical way with regard to the hon. member; but I do think it was an issue and was known because it is only a matter of two or three weeks since I was before the committee.

I see no reason why there should not be a statement on motions in this regard. I repeat, I am sure the House leader would be glad to consult on this, but I do not think it would be possible for me to do it today, for a number of reasons. I may say that if there is agreement among the House leaders as to either a statement on motions or an appearance before the committee, there is nothing in this issue that we wish to conceal.

To suggest that in some way the Prime Minister is substituting the United Nations for the House of Commons is grossly unfair, I think, because he is making a comprehensive statement on the whole issue of disarmament. Surely it is logical that something of that nature be included. So far as I know, this is the first occasion anybody has asked in the House that such a statement be made on motions.

* * *

AIR TRANSPORT

PURCHASE OF STOL AIRCRAFT BY EPA

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport: it is supplementary to the important questions raised by my good friend, the hon. member for Madawaska-Victoria, and the minister's reply.

Considering the fact that EPA has, to my mind, alway given excellent service in the Atlantic provinces, if there should be an arrangement made with regard to the Dash-7 through government subsidiaries, etc., can we have the assurance of the minister that Air Canada will not abandon the Atlantic provinces' service?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I do not think any such inference should be taken from my answer to the earlier question. This is simply a question of how to provide services which are suitable for regional carriers or primary level carriers. It should in no way diminish the need for mainline carriers connecting our principal cities.

* * *

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NEUTRON BOMB—CANADIAN POSITION

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. Does the minister know what Canada's policy is regarding the neutron bomb, bearing in mind—perhaps the Secretary of State for External Affairs would also take note of this—that he stonewalled my questions on this matter on July 15, 1977, October 24, 1977, and April 5, 1978, in this House?

If the minister knows what Canada's policy is, would he tell the House of Commons and, through us, the Canadian people? Surely we have more right to hear our government's policy in such a vital matter than does the New York or Washington media?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I really have nothing more to add.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Danson: The people who aspire to government over there should learn to deal with issues like this a little more sensibly than the comments I hear coming across this aisle.

Mr. Clark: You are so bad that you could be minister of finance.

Mr. McKinnon: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In his stonewalling procedures, the minister always protested there was continuing consideration, particularly during the last three months. This appears to have a certain amount of sanctimoniousness to it when one considers that his department issued a report which concluded as follows:

Given reductions in indiscriminate effects and the potential for a more resilient deterrent posture, it is likely that the enhanced radiation warheads would be a positive addition to NATO's nuclear inventory.

How can the minister explain such support of the bomb when he is unwilling to discuss it in this House?

Mr. Danson: Mr. Speaker, I, too, would be happy to discuss this in greater detail—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Danson: —than one can in the question period. Certainly, that is a piece of advice on which there has been a lot of information, briefing papers and articles written; but they are not directions to ministers. Ministers will make up their minds, as will the government. When we have, we will let you know.

NEUTRON BOMB—REQUEST FOR STATEMENTS LATER TODAY

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, given the willingnes of the two ministers, the Secretary of State for External Affairs to deal with the matter of Canada's policy at the disarmament conference and, now, the willingness of the Minister of National Defence to discuss in this House the question of the neutron bomb and the government's policy, whatever that may be—these matters are related—would the Minister of National Defence or the Secretary of State for External Affairs tell the House whether they would be willing to begin statements tonight at eight o'clock, giving them each an hour to make their statements, with an appropriate question period? I know they need time, but would they be prepared to do that tonight?

[Mr. McKinnon.]

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in the first place, I will not be here at eight o'clock tonight. In the second place, I have emphasized that I think it will require consultation about how this is going to be handled, particularly in view of the fact that there are some elements which members would want to discuss privately before there is any public discussion. In the third place, while we might be ready with a sensible statement by eight o'clock tonight, given the ignorance that has been displayed on the other side, they will never be ready.

* * *

TRADE

"BUY CANADIAN" POLICY

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the government House leader. On May 18, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce—who unfortunately is not with us today—revealed on a T-shirt that we have a new policy in Canada, a "Buy Canadian" policy. Could the minister tell the House whether the government feels bound by the "Buy Canadian" policy, where possible?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): Yes, Mr. Speaker, where possible.

* * *

PUBLIC WORKS

EXTERIOR LIGHTING FOR TRANSPORT CANADA BUILDING AT CORNWALL, ONT.

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Public Works. The Minister of Transport might also be interested, because the Department of Public Works is responsible for putting up a building in Cornwall for the Department of Transport, called the Transport Canada training institute.

Why would they allow specifications to go through for decorative, exterior lighting fixtures which are so stringent that they apply only to one type of lighting fixture which is manufactured and sold solely in the United States, when if they had broadened the specifications they could have obtained cheaper fixtures which would use less energy and are manufactured in Canada?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Public Works and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I am not certain whether the allegation made by the hon. member is correct. I should like to deal with his fundamental point, that we should make certain architects specify very clearly that products which are available in Canada are used. This is a subject I am currently reviewing with the department. I am making certain that directions go out to architects who are doing design work for the Government of Canada which make it very clear that we expect them to specify products which will favour Canadian producers.

* * *

● (1452)

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

WATER AND AIR QUALITY OF POPLAR RIVER, SASK.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I refer to the press release of the International Joint Commission concerning water apportionment on the Poplar River, Saskatchewan. I notice that on the second page the commission says:

> The commission's report does not discuss the potential air and water quality impacts of proposed developments in the area because those issues were beyond the scope of the reference given to the commission by Canada and the United States—although a 1977 reference deals with the water quality of the Poplar River.

Will the minister now correct that mistake, join with the United States and give a reference to the International Joint Commission that does include both water and air quality?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Assiniboia, who obviously has a similar interest in this matter, asked me the same question privately today. I told him at that time, and I tell the hon. member now, that I will take his question as notice and will be in touch with the International Joint Commission. I am informed that the government of Saskatchewan has made such a proposition. We will undoubtedly be looking at it. I am not sure it has reached us formally as yet.

* * *

COMMUNICATIONS

CABLE BROADCASTING IN MANITOBA

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Communications. It arises from the Canada-Manitoba agreement on cable broadcasting that was reached last December 21 which will extend cable service to 28 rural communities in Manitoba.

Can the minister give assurance that she is strongly supporting the agreement and, in particular, the ownership of the hardware, including cable drops, by the Manitoba Telephone System?

Hon. Jeanne Sauvé (Minister of Communications): Yes, Mr. Speaker, of course I stand behind that agreement which was signed by myself and the minister of communications of Manitoba. There are some problems which have arisen as to the application of the agreement. I understand that the rural cable companies have come to an understanding with the CRTC.

As to the question to which the hon. member refers, I know that there will be a meeting in Ottawa of the cable operators of the rural regions, where I hope all these matters will be properly ironed out.

Mr. Dinsdale: I am pleased that the minister is aware of the urgency of the matter. In view of the fact that Westman Media is proceeding to supply service to the rural areas by September, can the minister give her assurance that the problem of the ownership of the drops will be resolved in plenty of time to reach the target date for opening service?

Mrs. Sauvé: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I know there is a problem with construction. The summer period, of course, is the best period in which this can be done. This is the reason I have asked the chairman of the CRTC to look into these questions in a very urgent manner. There are conditions to the licence which had been given by the CRTC prior to the agreement. Therefore, there is some administrative difficulty as well as practical difficulty in the application of the agreement. I am very confident this will be ironed out. I have been in constant contact with the minister in Manitoba, and the chairman of the CRTC tells me he is doing his utmost to come to a favourable solution.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

POPLAR RIVER, SASK., POWER PROJECT

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question with regard to the Poplar River power project near the international boundary between the province of Saskatchewan and the state of Montana. With reference to the suggestion of a special treaty between Canada and the United States dealing with the question of air quality, which is presently not covered, I hope the Secretary of State for External Affairs will report to the House as soon as he has any word from the Saskatchewan legislature on this point.

My supplementary should be directed to the minister of the environment. In view of the language used in a recent report of the International Joint Commission about this matter, which indicated that the necessary permits and licences had been received by the SPC for only the first phase of development, can the minister say whether the SPC has yet obtained any of the necessary permits or licences to allow that corporation to proceed with anything beyond the first generating unit?

Hon. Len Marchand (Minister of State (Environment)): Mr. Speaker, it is my information that the SPC does not yet have permission to proceed with the second generating station.

Oral Questions

AIR TRANSPORT

STOL SERVICE FROM TORONTO ISLAND AIRPORT

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Transport. Can the minister tell us whether it is government policy to have a STOL service out of Toronto Island airport? If they intend to push forward with this, what are the time dimensions for starting that service, and what do they propose to do about it?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, there is at the present time a regular, scheduled service using the Toronto airport. What I have proposed in discussions with the province of Ontario, and now with local authorities, is that the advantages which may exist at Toronto Island be used for flights between there and Ottawa and Montreal, for example.

Because of the overload at Malton and the clear desire of people to move as quickly as possible between Toronto and some other cities, we are prepared to make significant improvements in relation to the Toronto Island airport if there is general agreement about this kind of service.

The next step, really, is local agreement from the Harbour Commission and the city of Toronto. If that were forthcoming, we could probably put our improvements in place in about an 18-month period. I should think by that time the carriers which might be interested in providing the service could also make the necessary arrangements with their licences.

An hon. Member: Improve the trains.

Mr. Lang: I heard an hon. member shout "Improve the trains". I would like to emphasize that we are going to improve the trains. This is quite a different market which is being served. The air service, trying to cover distance in the shortest possible time, is at a much higher price and for quite a different market than people willing to consider train or bus as a convenient method. In cases of our heavy populations, the Toronto—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

* * *

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

APPLICATION OF HUMAN RIGHTS ACT IN LABOUR DISPUTES

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice. The arbitrator who dealt with the wage dispute between the 25 women members of the Ottawa Steel Plate Examiners Union and the British American Bank Note Company did not address himself to the question of equal pay for work of equal value.

In view of the fact that section 19 of the Canadian Human Rights Act empowers the government to include a directive in federal contracts with respect to the anti-discrimination sections of the act, may I ask the minister if the government will test the validity of section 19 of the act by giving a directive to the British American Bank Note Company to pay attention to those anti-discrimination provisions?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the award of the arbitrator has not yet been brought to my attention. As a result of the hon. member's question, I will examine the arbitrator's award and the content of his report to determine whether this is an appropriate case in which to issue a directive under the Human Rights Act.

* * *

PRIVILEGE

MR. KNOWLES (WINNIPEG NORTH CENTRE)—MAINTENANCE OF PARLIAMENTARY DECORUM

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, in keeping with a notice which I gave to Your Honour earlier today under Standing Order 17(2), I wish to rise on a question of privilege. I shall indicate in a moment why I believe I have a question of privilege in a parliamentary sense. May I point out that what brings the issue to a head is an editorial in today's Toronto Globe and Mail which uses my name a couple of times. In particular, I should like to quote this paragraph:

● (1502)

Where was Mr. Basford with his concern for "abuse of the privileges of the members of this House" when the abuse came from Mr. Trudeau and Mr. Horner?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Perhaps members of the Conservative party will let me finish the paragraph. When I read the end of the sentence they may want to applaud again. It reads: "Where was Mr. Knowles?"

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I regard that as a very fair question, a question which deserves an answer. My view some days ago when the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner) and other Liberals were throwing taunts across to members of the Conservative party was that it was so much political banter. I did not feel at that time that it was parliamentary. On the other hand, neither did I feel it was severe enough to call for an intervention on my part.

An hon. Member: A very weak argument.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): But when a few days ago the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) made a similar charge with regard to members of the cabinet, it seemed to me it was more serious.

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The point I am making, regardless of legal distinctions, is that in terms of parliamentary decorum, in terms of gentlemanly behaviour on the floor of this House, there is no difference. Just as the hon. member for York-Simcoe apologized yesterday for what he had said, so, now, should the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce do likewise. It may be argued that the minister's assertions were made some weeks ago. But he repeated them yesterday on television.

My reason for feeling I have a question of privilege is that, as a person who does not belong to either of the parties which are engaged in this warfare, I am concerned about the image of parliament, and I suggest that these allegations back and forth between members of those two parties are not good for the image of this House. In these circumstances I believe I have a right to ask that just as one member yesterday did apologize, so there should be an apology from the other side.

It has been pointed out both in my questions on Tuesday and in the questions asked today by my leader, the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent), that the heart of the matter is this: the picture is not clear. Members can make these charges of conflict of interest because no legislation is in effect against such conflicts. It therefore seems to me that for the good of the House there should be a cessation of charges regarding the financial operations of members and that we should clear up this issue. There should be precise legislation setting out the rights and obligations of members of parliament in their financial dealings, so that this whole situation can be cleared. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, if you find I have a question of privilege, I would be prepared to move:

That the question of the urgent need for the introduction and passing of appropriate conflict of interest legislation to clear the air with respect to the rights and obligations of all members of parliament in relation to financial matters be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Before calling on other hon. members I would have to find at least the vestige of a question of privilege in what has been put forward by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). He has given the Chair notice and indicated the general nature of the question he intended to raise, in accordance with our practice. Today he has referred to an editorial comment, as has been done in the past under the general heading of a question of privilege. I might reflect, however, that in the past it has always been done by members seeking to differ from what was said rather than to agree with it.

While the hon. member had a comment to make of some importance, in the final analysis his intervention was, first of all, in response to an article in a newspaper, followed by a suggestion that a general subject, the need for legislation in a certain area, be referred to a committee. Especially since part of the question period was devoted to this very subject when it was determined that legislation will be forthcoming, I have to find that though there are perhaps several important matters for discussion here there is nothing which would warrant calling on other hon. members to make contributions at this point.

Point of Order—Mr. Clark

POINTS OF ORDER

MR. CLARK—GUIDELINES FOR MINISTERS

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order in relation to the statement made by the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen) in which he might have inadvertently misled the House. He accepted the suggestion of the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) that the letter of October 8, 1976, to the President of Privy Council from the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) constituted the precise guidelines which the Prime Minister promised parliament in July, 1973, relative to conflict of interest involving ministers. Upon reflection, the Deputy Prime Minister may now have had an opportunity to reread that letter addressed to him and he might have seen that it deals primarily with former ministers—I can see that such a statement might very well be on the mind of members of the Privy Council on that side of the House at this stage. But it deals only in the most general way with conflict of interest guidelines as they might apply to ministers of the Crown. In fact, it lacks all precision.

The hon. gentleman might wish to advise us whether he was correct in indicating that this document, dated October 8, 1976, represents total fulfilment of the undertaking of the Prime Minister to set out precise guidelines relative to the activities of ministers, or whether we may expect something more later on.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): I am glad the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) has raised this point. He has read the date of the letter referred to by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) and I see it does not set out the precise guidelines I had in mind, those which were communicated to ministers by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and which have been followed by ministers. They are quite precise. It was this particular set of precise guidelines about which I was uncertain as to whether they had been made public or tabled—I undertook to look into the matter further. Judging from the description given by the hon. member, the letter referred to does not contain the precise guidelines I have in mind.

Mr. Clark: The Deputy Prime Minister undertook, after he had verified the nature of those guidelines, to address himself to the question of whether or not they would be made public so that everyone might know what they are. Will those guidelines be tabled in the House and made available to those of us in parliament and elsewhere who are interested?

Mr. MacEachen: I want to check, first of all, whether they have been tabled. To my recollection, they have not. In the second place, because they constitute a direction from the Prime Minister to ministers, I believe I should consult with the Prime Minister before giving any undertaking about publishing them. I will do so when the Prime Minister returns to Ottawa. However, I can tell the hon. gentleman that these guidelines are quite precise and, as far as I am concerned, are quite onerous.

● (1512)

Hon. members are urging, with legitimacy, the building up of further guidelines and conflict of interest rules for themselves. In so far as those for ministers are concerned, though they may be open to criticism in various ways, I think they are onerous and constitute quite a heavy obligation with respect to the financial dealings of ministers. In contemplating their own guidelines hon. members will want to consider how onerous they wish to be in imposing obligations upon themselves.

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a separate but related point of order which arises out of the response given by the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen) to my question, which was supplementary to the question put by my leader. If the minister did not mislead the House, he certainly appeared to have misled himself into believing that I in some way indicated that I was opposed to the principle of full, true, and plain disclosure of ministers' assets. In no way do I oppose a policy of disclosure. What I do oppose is a policy of disclosure where there is no disclosure. I oppose a polity of frozen trusts—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The right hon. member for Prince Albert.

MR. DIEFENBAKER—AIR CANADA—INCORRECT STATEMENT ON TRANSPORTATION OF CUBAN TROOPS

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I always believe in upholding parliament. I have a reference to make today in connection with a statement I made which is recorded at page 5628 of Hansard. Today two ministers, the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Danson) and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Jamieson), were unable to give answers because apparently the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has not yet told them what the policy he is going to enunciate will be.

The statement I made was this:

> Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. It arises out of the horrifying slaughter in Zaire over the weekend. At the present time, while there is no evidence that Cuban troops were engaged there, nonetheless 32,000—incidentally, transported to their destination by Air Canada—have been acting in such a way as to give leadership in undermining governments in Africa which would lead one to conclude that the leadership of Cuba has been taken over by others in this regard.

The statement I made was based on information from a reliable source who apparently misunderstood what the situation was with respect to the use of Air Canada aircraft. Two aircraft apparently were leased by Air Canada to Cuba under a lease agreement.

The information coming from this person, who knows the facts, was to the effect that Cuban soldiers were transported either directly or indirectly on these two aircraft. Today I tried again to get some information on the agreement. If the government has nothing to hide, why hide it? It is a very simple agreement, according to the minister, who says he does not have possession, yet only the day before yesterday Air Canada stated that the documents were in the possession of the Department of Transport.

The statement I made was based on information which, as far as I was concerned, had always been acceptable. I made an error in the generality I used. This is my first opportunity to make it clear that, in so far as the Cuban troops now engaged in Africa are concerned, they were not transported by Air Canada. I have a high regard for Air Canada, but must say that a very serious mistake was made when it leased two jet aircraft to Cuba and, directly or indirectly, was beneficial to that country in its communist aggression with Soviet approval and support.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I indicated to the right hon. gentleman, in answer to an earlier question in the question period, that I thought this kind of subject matter indeed would be appropriate to be placed on the order paper. It is my recollection, and I will want to check, that in fact there has been an exchange of questions on the order paper in the past, in connection with the lease, and all the information which is available is already there on the record.

Furthermore, I am glad that the right hon. gentleman has now confirmed what the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said to him the other day, that he was wrong and in error in suggesting that Air Canada had anything to do with the transport of these troops. What was involved was a commercial transaction between a Canadian airline and Cuba, or the Cuban airlines. Over a long period of time trade has gone on between our country and Cuba, and this was not intended to benefit anyone else but, indeed, from Air Canada's point of view was intended to benefit Air Canada. I think that should be on the record.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) on a point of order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I want to reply to one statement the minister made. It is apparent that he still intends to cover up and refuse to produce the documents. We will find the truth as to what happened to the aircraft and to the Cuban soldiers who allegedly—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Grenville-Carleton on a point of order.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might vary somewhat the normal House business question today. Rather than asking my friend, the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen) what business he intends for the balance of this week and into next week, I would like to ask him what business, from the government's point of view, he intends to bring forward for the balance of this month and into the next month, bearing in mind the statement made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), on two occasions, that it is the desire of the government, if at all possible, to have this part of this session of parliament adjourn at the end of June.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I wish to confirm that it is the intention of the government, if at all possible, to terminate this part of the session by the end of June. I will attempt to indicate as clearly as I can what I think a realistic package of business might be for the time between now and that date. Obviously I would like to clear all items from the order paper, and if hon. gentlemen would be generous they might indicate their willingness to do that, but in the absence of that generosity I will be realistic and indicate what I think might be achievable. If I am pessimistic, please correct me.

I have in mind two bills arising from the budget which are in the name of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien); the language of trials bill, which is in committee; the export development bill, which is also in committee; the bill in the name of the Minister of State (Small Business) (Mr. Abbott) having to do with business reporting; the CALURA bill; and another bill which is in committee which has to do with the monitoring of petroleum corporations.

There is a notice on the notice paper today with respect to a bill in the name of the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald) having to do with disability pensions. That is also on my list. I discussed last week my interest in Bill C-28, and I noted the response I received when I raised that matter, but it still is very much on my mind. In addition, I would want to deal with a bill which will flow from the notice of ways and means which will be tabled today by the Minister of Finance. I mentioned that privately to representatives of the parties earlier today.

In addition, there is also a number of small bills which I have discussed with my colleagues and which might be dealt with as opportunities present themselves, and as Friday afternoons become available for these small items. The Minister of Finance is suggesting that I raise the question of the Bank Act. It would be of interest to me if the subject matter of the bill, if the House so wished, would go to the committee, but I think it would be unrealistic to expect that the bill could be cleared before the end of June. Obviously I will have further consultations with my colleague, the Minister of Finance.

• (1522)

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I understand that there have been discussions with respect to the subject matter of the Bank Act, and I will be prepared to discuss that matter with the government House leader after he has had discussions with the Minister of Finance.

There are two other matters. Would the hon. gentleman designate next Wednesday, May 31, as an allotted day, and could he also make a comment, which he might be prepared to make at this time, with respect to the request that we have made to extend the period for the discussion of estimates in the standing committees of the House of Commons, given the fact that the period has been so short because of the expectation of an election that never came? Is the hon. gentleman in a position to answer those questions?

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I will designate next Wednesday as an allotted day. I should say, as my hon. friends are aware, that I did mention the possibility of a bill with respect to the Department of Fisheries about which I was not in a position to be conclusive today. I just want to mention it.

With respect to the extension of time period for the consideration of the estimates, I have had discussions with some members on this side of the House and with respresentatives opposite, and I have concluded that it would be useful if the chairmen of the standing committees met with either the steering committees or the committees themselves and assessed the situation in each committee. If necessary, they could come back early next week with a request to sit additional time. If these requests are made by the various committees, then I would certainly consider taking the steps necessary to bring it about. It has been suggested to me that this is a matter which should first be considered in the committees before we dealt with it in the House, or by the steering committee of each committee.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I say with respect to the program which the government House leader has placed before us that, despite its length, it seems to me that under certain conditions it would be possible to conclude most of that business before the end of June. We have already given the commitment that the legislation respecting veterans can be dealt with in a small part of a day. I have reason to be hopeful that the bill to separate the Department of Environment into two separate departments would not take very long either, and there are a number of items that could be dealt with some Friday afternoon. We are all aware of how propitious things can get at that stage of the week.

But I must say to the minister, as one friend to another—

Mr. Alexander: Oh, oh!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): —that if he wants to make progress and get a number of those small items through, he should not try to bring on Bill C-28. Certainly he should not try to bring it on with any thought of getting it through because it will just not go through, and he should not even bring it on for a day's debate because it would just mean the loss of a chance to put through three or four other bills.

With respect to the Bank Act, again I make the suggestion that, if possible, we should consider not having a debate in the House but rather we should send the subject matter of the bill to a committee without having a second reading approval. I think that is an endorsable proposition. But to bring on the Bank Act and have a day or two of debate, and then let it go to the bottom of the order paper, seems to me to be very poor planning. In other words, let us use the time between now and the end of June not to start debates which will not be finished but to deal with things that the House is willing to put through.

Mr. Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. I just want to suggest to the government House leader that we are disappointed that the bill on veterans affairs received such low priority on the list that he has just recited to us, and I join with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) in saying that we on this side would be prepared to give it very speedy passage, because it is something we have long advocated. There is no reason why we could not do it in a matter of moments if it could be brought before the House.

* * *

POINT OF ORDER

MR. COSSITT—RECOGNITION DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I rise on another point of order. With the greatest respect for the Chair, I wish to seek the guidance of the Chair as to the recognition of some of us in the House during the question period. I raise this point because in my case it has been since April 5—I will check the date to be accurate—but almost two months since I have been recognized by the Chair, although I have tried every day and been unable to attract your attention, sir. I know that there are others on the opposition side of the House in the same position as I am. I know my views are not popular with those who sit opposite, and I also realize that that fact has nothing to do with how people are recognized. On the other hand, it forces a backbencher to use the methods of Standing Order 43, points of order, or points of privilege to place his opinions on the record.

Just before I sit down, let me say again that I would like to check my own record to ensure that I am right with regard to the date I have mentioned. If I am inaccurate, I stand to be corrected. I know that in the last few weeks I found it almost impossible to gain the recognition of the Chair.

With all respect, sir, I ask if those of us who are not on the front benches could receive your guidance as to just what the procedure is in that regard.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the hon. member will recognize, on reflection, that indeed he was one who was not recognized today, although he was endeavouring to be recognized yesterday. In that respect he is joined by the hon. member for Pembina (Mr. Elzinga), the hon. member for Battle River (Mr. Malone), the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Ritchie), and the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers), to mention just a few who I am aware are in that situation. He shares that difficulty in common with his colleagues and with the Chair.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

* * *

[Translation]

LAW OF THE SEA

TABLING OF DELEGATION REPORT

Mr. Maurice Dupras (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 41(2), I wish to table, on behalf of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, the seventh report of the assessment of the Canadian delegation at the seventh session of the Law of the Sea Conference.

* * *

[English]

CANADA LABOUR CODE

AMENDMENT RESPECTING SAFETY OF EMPLOYEES

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-458, to amend the Canada Labour Code (safety of employees).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Rodriguez: The purpose of this bill is to amend the Canada Labour Code to make the provisions of the Canada Labour Code in relation to safety of employees applicable to all federal undertakings, including the operation of trains, ships and aircraft, departmental corporations, and also to private and local works in both territories.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

* * *

[Translation]

WAYS AND MEANS

DESIGNATION OF ORDER OF THE DAY TO DEBATE WAYS AND MEANS MOTION

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 60, I would like to table a notice of motion of ways and means—

[English]

—and I request you to designate the necessary order of the day for the consideration thereof.

• (1532)

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Roger Young (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 104, 715, 836, 1,418 and 1,500.

[Text]

CROWN CORPORATIONS

Question No. 104—Mr. Herbert:

1. Has the Export Development Corporation declined to divulge the number of persons under contract who receive a salary in excess of $30,000?

2. Is the government given such information and is it the government's intention that Crown corporations should be obliged to communicate salary information on a similar basis as that used to record the salary levels of senior public servants?

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): 1. Crown corporations operating in a commercial environment have not traditionally been required by parliament to publish detailed information relating to matters of day-to-day operations and internal administration which could be of value to competitors, for to do so could prejudice the Crown corporations' competitive position.

2. Recognizing the responsibility of boards of directors of Crown corporations to oversee the internal administration and day-to-day operations of Crown corporations, the government does not usually request such information. However, when such information is requested by the government it is provided. The possibility that salary information relating to Crown corporations be published on the same basis as that for senior public servants is currently being considered by the government.

VALLEYFIELD CHEMICAL PRODUCTS LTD.

Question No. 715—Mr. Crosbie:

1. Were any conditions attached to the financial assistance given to Valleyfield Chemical Products Limited by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce and the Department of Regional Economic Expansion and, if so, what were they?

2. What amount of the assistance was by way of (a) grant (b) loan?

3. (a) Is repayment of the assistance contributed to by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce contingent on the realization of profit by the Company and, if so, on what date is repayment expected (b) are there conditions under which repayment is not expected and, if so, what are they?

4. Did the Company make a commitment to the government to operate the chemical plant at Valleyfield, Quebec for any specified number of years?

5. Is there a contractual agreement or tacit agreement between the government and the Company regarding the domestic or foreign ownership of the equity and debt of the Company and, if so, what is the agreement?

6. What is the amount of interest subsidy on the financial assistance given to the Company by the Departments?

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): In so far as the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce is concerned: 1. The assistance provided by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce will carry the normal conditions appropriate to Defence Industry Productivity Program commitments. In addition, the department has taken mortgage security and the two departments have, inter alia, imposed a range of conditions which are concerned with the preservation of viability and the protection of the Crown's interests.

2. The financial assistance to be provided by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce will consist of: $5,325,000 repayable contribution; $3,000,000 conventional contribution: $8,325,000. The financial assistance to be provided by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion consists of $3,000,000 repayable development incentive. It is to be repaid without interest in five equal annual instalments, commencing 48 months after the date the facility is brought into commercial production.

3. (a) With respect to the $5,325,000 repayable contribution, there is a repayment formula based on sales performance by the company, as well as a minimum repayment provision, which would see the retirement of this contribution within six years after the facility is brought into commercial production. The amount of annual repayment is not contingent upon the profitability of the company except that there are provisions for accelerated repayment if profits exceed current forecasts. (b) With respect to the $3 million conventional contribution, no repayment is expected if the facility is kept in operation for a period of ten years.

4. A contribution agreement was signed in late December by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce and the company. This agreement sets out the undertakings and warranties of the company and the terms and conditions attached to the department's contribution. One of the conditions of the agreement is that the company will continue commercial production using the facilities at Valleyfield for a minimum period of ten years. The non-repayable portion of the department's contribution will not be fully vested in the company until ten years after the facility is deemed to have been in commercial operation.

5. Under the terms proposed in the contribution agreement, control of the company whether through debt or equity cannot be altered without prior approval of the government. The company is currently controlled by Canadian citizens.

6. There is no interest payable on the government's contribution to the company.

In so far as the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is concerned: 1. Yes. The financial aid was subject to the applicable conditions of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion Act and the Regional Development Incentives Act and 1974 regulations, special areas order PC 1977-2644 of August 31, 1977, and a memorandum of agreement between the company and the department on the amount of the incentive, dated September 30, 1977.

2. (a) A repayable incentive of $3 million, to be refunded to the government in five equal annual portions ($600,000) beginning 48 months after the facility is brought into commercial production. (b) None.

3. This question will be answered elsewhere.

4. The company is required to operate its Valleyfield plant during the administrative control period that normally applies under the Regional Development Incentives Act to a project of this kind. That period normally extends for at least 24 months after the date of commercial production.

5. No.

6. No interest is charged on the department's repayable grant.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

Question No. 836—Mr. Alexander:

1. Have any Crown corporations reacted to the proposals of the government on the control, direction and accountability of Crown corporations and, if so (a) how many, (b) will the results be made public?

2. Has the (a) Royal Commission on Financial Management and Accountability, (b) the Auditor General, reacted to the proposals, and, if so, will the results be made public?

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): 1. (a) As of May 5, 1978, of the 49 active Crown corporations listed on schedules B, C, and D of the Financial Administration Act, 13 have provided a formal response to the government. The government has received undertakings from many of the remaining corporations that formal responses will be transmitted to the government as soon as possible. (b) The responses submitted by Crown corporations to the government's proposals will be fully considered during preparation of the omnibus Crown corporations' bill which the government hopes to present to parliament in the fall of this year.

2. (a) No. (b) Yes. The response may be found in part 9 of the report of the Auditor General of Canada to the House of Commons (for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1977).

UNION SUBSIDIES

Question No. 1,418—Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse):

In (a) 1976-77 (b) 1977-78 to date, did the government subsidize Canadian workers' unions and, if so, in each case, what was the (i) name of the union (ii) amount of the subsidy (iii) reason for granting the subsidy?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): 1. (a) 1976-1977—No payments; (b) 1977-1978 to date.

(i)	(ii)	(iii)
Hospital Employee Union, Local 180, Vancouver	$ 12,618.75	Labour Education
Vancouver Municipal and Regional Employees Union, Vancouver	2,199.00	Labour Education
British Columbia Government Professional Employees Association	575.25	Labour Education
Registered Nurses Association of British Columbia (Labour Relations Division), Vancouver	8,098.50	Labour Education
Non-Academic Staff Association, University of Alberta	1,200.00	Labour Education
Alberta Certified Nursing Aides Association, Edmonton	2,155.50	Labour Education
Health Sciences Association of Alberta, Edmonton	846.00	Labour Education
Provincial Staff Nurse Committee of the Alberta Association of Registered Nurses, Edmonton	1,000.00	Labour Education
McMurray Independent Oil Workers, Local No. 1, Fort McMurray, Alberta	510.00	Labour Education
Saskatchewan Joint Board, Retail, Wholesale and Department Store Union, Regina	3,565.50	Labour Education
Saskatchewan Union of Nurses, Regina	641.25	Labour Education
The Manitoba Teachers' Society, Winnipeg	7,409.25	Labour Education
Manitoba Organization of Nurses Association, Winnipeg	3,554.25	Labour Education
Communication Union Canada, Toronto (National)	5,424.00	Labour Education
Ontario Public Service Employees' Union, Toronto	33,750.00	Labour Education
Canadian Steelworkers Union, Welland	1,025.25	Labour Education
Christian Labour Association of Canada, Toronto	1,696.00	Labour Education
Canadian Air Traffic Control Association Inc., Ottawa (National)	1,287.75	Labour Education
Centrale des Syndicats Démocratiques, Montréal	25,500.00	Labour Education
Syndicat des Employsé de Soutien de l'Université de Sherbrooke, Sherbrooke	402.00	Labour Education
Fédération des Policiers du Québec, Montréal	5,985.00	Labour Education
The United Nurses Incorporated, Montreal	3,600.00	Labour Education
Syndicat de la Construction Côte-Nord de Sept-Îles, Québec	1,033.75	Labour Education
Canadian Telephone Employees Association Montreal (National)	5,400.00	Labour Education
Nova Scotia Teachers' Union	6,780.00	Labour Education
Prince Edward Island Teachers Federation, Charlottetown	878.25	Labour Education
Newfoundland Teachers Association, St. John's, Newfoundland	4,771.50	Labour Education
Canadian Labour Congress	1,000,000.00	Labour Education
Canadian Conference of Teamsters, Ottawa	56,520.00	Labour Education
Confédération des Syndicats Nationaux, Montréal	120,000.00	Labour Education
Centrale des Syndicats Démocratique	25,500.00	Labour Education

ADVISER FOR FRANCOPHONE AFFAIRS

Question No. 1,500—Mr. Jones:

1. What is the meaning of the government's use of the term "international francophonie"?

2. What are the responsibilities of the Adviser for Francophone Affairs to the Secretary of State for External Affairs in the field of international francophonie?

3. Was the Adviser for Francophone Affairs to the Secretary of State for External Affairs accompanied by departmental officials on his visit to Francophone Africa, March 8-13, and if so, what are the names, positions, salaries, and expenses of this trip by these officials? Give details.

4. Has the Adviser for Francophone Affairs to the Secretary of State for External Affairs made other such visits, and if so, please give details, stating full costs for those accompanying him, if any?

Mr. Maurice Dupras (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. The term "international francophonie" has been used since the early 1960s to describe the multilateral co-operation which has developed in a wide range of fields in both intergovernmental and private bodies between countries where the French language has an official status or is frequently used.

2. The responsibilities of the adviser for Francophone affairs to the Secretary of State for External Affairs in the field of francophonie is to assist the SSEA in his task of developing Canada's relations with Francophone countries and promoting Canada's role and interests in the multilateral institutions and meetings of Francophone countries.

3. The Minister for Supply and Services and adviser for Francophone affairs to the Secretary of State for External Affairs travelled to Togo, Benin and Gabon between March 9 and 13 accompanied by the following officials of External Affairs: Mr. T. J. Arcand, Director, Francophone Africa and Maghreb Division, Department of External Affairs. Salary: Level FS3 ($33,684—$44,806); Transportation: $1,861; Expenses: $1,246.23. Mr. Gilles Duguay, Executive Assistant to the Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs. Salary: Level FS3; Transportation: $1,861; Expenses: $754.46. Mr. Marc Perron, Special Assistant to the Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs, Department of External Affairs. Salary: Level FS3; Transportation: $1,861; Expenses: $734.46.

4. (a) The Minister of Supply and Services and adviser for Francophone affairs to the Secretary of State for External Affairs was called upon to replace the former Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce who had been scheduled to lead a trade mission to Algeria and Morocco from September 22 to October 7, 1977. He was accompanied by the following official of External Affairs. Mr. Raymond Roy, Director, Francophone Africa and Maghred Division, Department of External Affairs. Salary: Level FS3; Transportation: $1,119; Expenses: $681.81. (b) The Minister of Supply and Services and adviser for Francophone affairs to the Secretary of State for External Affairs made an official visit to Senegal, Cameroun, Mauritania and the Ivory Coast from 3-17 June 1977 accompanied by Mr. André Couvrette—then Canadian ambassador to Senegal. Mr. Gilles Duguay, Executive Assistant to the Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs. Salary: Level FS3; Transportation: $2,229; Expenses: $930.26. Mr. P. Boulanger, Information Division, Department of External Affairs. Salary: Level FS2 ($23,299-$33,684); Transportation: $2,229; Expenses: $915.37. (c) The Minister of Supply and Services and adviser for Francophone affairs made an official visit to Upper Volta, Zaire and Gabon between 7 and 15 November 1977 accompanied by: Mr. Raymond Roy, Director of Francophone Affairs and the Maghred, Department of External Affairs. Salary: Level FS3; Transportation: $1,116; Expenses: $572.52. Mr. Marc Perron, Special Assistant to the Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs. Salary: Level FS3; Transportation: $1,116; Expenses: $693.76.

[English]

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

* * *

POINT OF ORDER

MR. COSSITT—DELAY IN ANSWERING QUESTION NO. 1,086

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order which I think Your Honour will find to be a legitimate one. It concerns question No. 1,086, and the question on which I have been attempting to get recognition on the floor of the House for the best part of two months.

Question No. 1,086 concerns the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen). It refers to an oral question which I asked him in November, 1977, in the House, about the so-called Taschereau papers on national security which were taken by Mr. Lemieux to the Privy Council office—Prime Minister's office. At that time I asked him if and when they would be returned, and whether they would be open to public or press inspection after a set number of years, which procedure was halted last year.

The minister said that he would take the question as notice and answer it. The answer has never been forthcoming. In view of the fact that the papers were returned to the National Archives on February 6, 1978, I think there is no logical reason why the question could not have been answered a least to that effect.

Other parts of my question would have brought out why the National Archives has been instructed not to reveal what is in those papers to anyone without the permission of Major Lemieux. I think the answer to this question is long overdue. I gave the Deputy Prime Minister three months, and he did not provide an answer. I put it on the order paper as question No. 1,086 on January 23, 1978. All in all it has been approximately six months and nothing has been forthcoming. I think I am justified in raising this point. What is the government hiding in the Taschereau papers which prohibits the public from knowing what is therein? In other words, are there prominent public servants mentioned in those papers?

In another question I have on the order paper which stands unanswered, I asked if there were, as quoted publicly in the press by Mr. Igor Gouzenko, five Soviet espionage rings which he had disclosed in Canada uninvestigated by the RCMP. No action has been taken. I asked if there was information concerning that in the Taschereau papers, and that has been withheld. Can the parliamentary secretary tell us now when both of those questions will be answered?

[Translation]

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am going to check whether the hon. member has read the order paper correctly. I am going to check whether his remarks jibe with the questions he asked, and I can assure him that, as in the past, we shall make every effort to give him as much satisfaction as possible.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 26

[English]

GRAIN

SHORTAGE OF RAILWAY BOXCARS

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a motion of which I gave Your Honour notice. I ask leave, seconded by the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom), to move the adjournment of the House under the provisions of Standing Order 26 for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter which has been raised by many members for many weeks, which remains unresolved, and which now requires urgent consideration, namely, the withdrawal of railway boxcars from grain movement which, in spite of the provision of hopper cars by the government, is inhibiting seriously the efforts for record grain movements this crop year; the refusal of the ministry to implement the Hall Royal Commission recommendations regarding statutory Crowsnest grain rates and compensatory payments for the costs of transporting grain; the costs of demurrage charges for ships waiting to be loaded being assessed against prairie grain producers through no fault of theirs; the rail branch line abandonment recommendations by the Prairie Rail Action Committee that are counter to the recommendations of the Hall Royal Commission; and the lack of government legislation or responses to deal with these and other related matters and, which, as a result, prevents increasing our capacity to meet expanded grain export objectives.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) gave the Chair the required notice pursuant to the terms of Standing Order 26. Having given notice of his intention to ask leave to move the adjournment of the House under the provisions of that Standing Order, he has now put forward basically the contents of that notice which in itself is in conformity with the provisions of the rule.

As is very often the case, I have no hesitation on this occasion in saying that these are very important and urgent matters raised by the hon. member. As he and other hon. members will understand, my decision must be made on the basis of the rules of precedent which confine me to the question of urgency of debate, rather than the urgency attached to the particular subject matter. In this respect I must point out that this subject has been before the House in one way or another on a number of occasions, the most recent being April 25, 1978, approximately a month ago, on a motion on an allotted day which was critical of the transportation policy. That motion was by the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski).

Subparagraph (d) of that motion called upon the House and the government to implement the major recommendations of the Hall commission report on grain handling and transportation in the west. The hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre moved an amendment to that motion, which read as follows:

(e) to reject the prairie rail action committee recommendations to close down the Liberty to Dilke and Eston to Lacadena rail lines, and to bring forward legislation to set up the prairie rail authority.

In the course of that day I am sure the hon. member had a great deal to say about the subject which he has put forward now. I take that only as a reference point to say that this and other occasions have already presented themselves.

A number of questions have been put forward during question period. It would seem to me, in the face of Standing Order 26(5), I am required to give some consideration to other opportunities for the discussion of these matters.

Also, I must make the general observation that we seem to be dealing with something which is more of a chronic rather than an acute matter in that it has been under consideration by the House for quite some time. Therefore it is not a proper subject for disposition under Standing Order 26.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

INCOME TAX ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed, from Wednesday, May 24, consideration of the motion of Mr. Chrétien that Bill C-56, to amend the statute law relating to income tax and to authorize payments related to provincial sales tax reductions, be read the second time and referred to the committee of the whole, and of the amendment (Mr. Broadbent) (p. 5548).

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, when we adjourned last night at six o'clock, I had discussed the sales tax and the problems the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) was having with his counterpart in the province of Quebec. Mr. Parizeau, the minister of finance for Quebec, seems to have come out of this encounter very well. He has outfoxed and outgunned the Minister of Finance in every category.

Let us look at what he has done. By selective tax cuts for those goods mainly consumed in Quebec and made in that province, in effect Mr. Parizeau has set up a non-tariff barrier.

That will not improve manufacturing in the rest of Canada and shipping into the province of Quebec nor garner any advantage. Presumably this will be directed to things like automobiles, wrenches, tools and so on. To this degree, in so far as sales tax is concerned, the province of Quebec has put its interests first, and in this it seems to have been eminently successful.

Each province received 2 per cent from the federal government in lieu of the federal treasury giving up 3 per cent. Each provincial treasury will lose that amount of money, but not the province of Quebec. That province will lose only the portion of money in its selective tax cuts, which is considerably less than the other provinces that went along with the plan. Even so, the Minister of Finance has seen fit to guarantee to the province of Quebec the same amount of money as if it had accepted the federal offer as did the provinces of Ontario, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and British Columbia.

● (1542)

The Minister of Finance showed that he bowed to pressure from Quebec, making payments that he should not have made if he was to be fair and intended to stick to what he originally attempted to do, and that was reduce sales tax right across the country. In fact the government of Quebec has been able to suggest it can have it both ways; it can have selected tax reductions but still be guaranteed the full value as though it had made a general 3 per cent tax reduction across the board. In the way this is being done the money paid to that province will come out of the general revenue of this country, yet the province of Quebec will maintain its own treasury and tax structure, without great losses. The Minister of Finance supposedly is a street fighter. All I can say in this regard is that he must have slipped on a banana peel when getting his gun out of its holster, because Mr. Parizeau really outgunned him on this occasion.

We are aware of the problems associated with the special status which some want for Quebec. The finance minister for that province has in this case been able to further the interests of his province without necessarily going along with what seemed to be in the national interest. If the Minister of Finance had stuck to the original idea of tax cuts he would have been much better off. He should not have acceded to the request of the finance minister for Quebec, that moneys be given that province indiscriminately.

I should now like to comment on the value of this sales tax reduction so far as its avowed intention of increasing consumer spending is concerned. I might suggest that Mr. Parizeau may have considered some of these things I intend to cover in suggesting that this tax cut will not do what it is supposed to do. It has been suggested there was a personal savings rate of 11¼ per cent in the fourth quarter of 1977, which is twice as high as it has been in the past decade. This rise in the rate is considered by some to be the result of uncertainty over the political situation in Quebec and the possible rearrangement of the country.

There seems to be a trend to save and for people to be frugal. Personal savings have doubled at $45 billion compared to what they were five years ago. Investment in Canada Savings Bonds accounts for $18 billion. That is almost $2 billion more than last year. This money deposited in banks and invested in savings bonds is money not being spent for the purchase of goods and services. It is difficult to make this money available for investment in the maintenance of existing production, or in expansion or new production. The intent of this reduced sales tax should be to get the economy going and restore confidence.

Is much of the saving a desperate effort on the part of the people to conserve value by counting upon the earnings from the savings to offset the erosion of inflation? We also forget the extent to which savings are forced on the people. We have compulsory participation in pension plans, and because home ownership is so excessively subsidized there is a great deal of pressure on people to own houses rather than to rent. Indeed, a citizen loses out if he does not own. Housing has been used as a source of employment rather than as a means of housing the population.

Many people resort to registered home ownership savings plans because of the tax relief. We are putting some $2 billion into these plans, thereby depriving the government of taxes that have to be made up by other means. Incidentally, I think these registered retirement savings plans give too much of an advantage to people in the higher income brackets. Their savings are much greater and are really at the expense of the federal treasury. On the other hand, without this program, resentment against a regressive income tax would be much greater. It seems likely that much of the savings occur in circumstances that create government deficits, rather than contributing to productive growth.

How much of this increased savings is voluntary and how much is forced upon those seeking tax relief? This cannot really be measured. It is obvious that these registered retirement savings plans and savings bonds are designed to discourage liquidation, so the money involved is not really available for the purchase of goods and services in order to take advantage of a sales tax reduction.

In addition, one might ask what the implications of this increase in personal savings may be. How affluent are Canadians when the liabilities of the federal government alone have reached $51 billion and will increase by $12 billion in the next 12 months? These liabilities will have doubled in the last five years. It is obvious there has been a good deal of borrowing by provincial, municipal, and federal governments. They are borrowing in order to spend on social benefits. As a result, we are supplementing current income by borrowing on the future. If the borrowing were for capital goods and capital works, that would be another situation. Certainly the savings of many individuals are being discounted by the charges against them put on at various levels of government. Personal affluence may well be less than what we expect. This may be why the economy is not responding, as the experts have anticipated, to increased spending at both government and personal levels.

It is unfortunate that so much of this debate has been taken up in respect of sales tax, with complex abatements and rebatements, particularly when this represents only a minor part of the federal scene. I was astounded at a meeting of the Standing Committee on Finance the other day to hear Mr. Bouey of the Bank of Canada say that we had no real balance of payments problem. When the government has to borrow $3 billion on the foreign exchange market, with a line of credit for another $4 billion, costing us $100,000 a day, does that not mean our economy is in trouble? Surely Mr. Bouey cannot say we are in robust economic health when in fact we have had to shore up a floating dollar that is supposed to find its own level, keeping in mind the $11.5 billion deficit and the necessity to raise more money. All of this creates considerable problems for our economy.

Mr. Bouey said he would not monetize any of the government's deficits, except up to and within the limits of growth which can be set for the money supply. The money supply has already been growing too fast over the years. In the years from 1972 to 1974, when there was a minority government, the bank monetized some 66 per cent of federal requirements in borrowing, but that only amounted to a total of some $3 billion. Can the federal government in fact borrow $9 billion on the market this year to meet its financing requirements? Even if it is able to do so, how much will that leave the private sector? Without money in that private sector our productivity cannot be increased in order to provide the expansion in the number of jobs necessary to meet our growing labour force and increasing government expenditures.

It would be interesting to note what the Minister of Finance intends to do to resolve this difficulty. Will interest rates go up as competition increases for scare money, that is, competition to meet private and government needs? The minister has stated that the Bank of Canada will not inflate the money supply. Let me suggest that only by increasing interest rates can available capital be rationed.

There have been some events occurring around the world that are disturbing to the Canadian economy. Some are predicting a fairly severe economic setback early next year with the slowdown in the United States economy. The United States suffered a severe recession in 1974-75 when wage-prices were corrected. It seems likely that inflation will remain our greatest problem, and it is difficult to see, with the expected increase in inflation in the United States, how Canada can escape.

There are some good things in the budget, but some are more apparent than real. One is the expansion of the rollover provision for the corporate family farm. But unless what is interpreted as a rollover is more widely interpreted than the present regulations allow, this provision is not of much value. As we discussed in the House when the provisions were introduced in the last budget debate, the rollover provision applies only to like businesses, and in the interpretation of the Department of National Revenue, selling a dairy farm and buying a hog farm does not constitute a like business, nor does selling a grain farm and buying a cattle ranch.

[Mr. Ritchie.]

• (1552)

These rollover provisions are not really of much practical value. They are really only of value where, for example, a farmer has a parcel of land farther away than he would like from his main operation, sells it, and replaces it with another. Unless the department is willing to expand the scope and to be more liberal in the interpretation of what is a like business, it has little value. In any case, of course, the capital gains tax must eventually be paid somewhere down the road, and in many instances it is probably better to pay capital gains tax rather than have it accumulate to be paid in one lump sum at the end of some generation when that generation leaves the farm.

The Royal Commission on Corporate Concentration had a few things to say about capital gains taxation. On the face of it there is a good argument to tax capital gains in fairness to tax on ordinary income, although presumably all capital gains should be taxed instead of half. But this principle has been eroded as it is realized that capital costs are an important and depressing problem to business. Obviously, the practical problem with capital gains is that it represents very often a great deal of inflation and that the savings of perhaps 20 years are suddenly to be taxed as if they were earned in one year, causing a loss to the extent that the capital gain is fairly well eaten up. As well, principal residences are exempted along with the first $1,000 of capital gains dividends and interest income, all of which have eroded the capital gains tax.

The problem is that for a very small amount of revenue, some one third of a percentage point, capital gains tax causes bad business decisions. People do not sell their businesses, real estate and so on because they find they will lose any gain that might accrue. Capital gains tax would have been fine if the economy had remained stable and with little inflation, but in large measure capital gains tax is only a tax on inflation as such and a great depressant to risk capital investment where the individual entrepreneur is concerned.

The royal commission had this to say:

> The design of the capital gains tax ensured that it would do little in terms of equity and the most recent amendments to the tax law are a further step backward in this sense. The result is a complicated and costly addition to the tax system and a disincentive to business investment, with little compensating benefit.

I would certainly agree that the capital gains tax should be abolished. The enormous increase in government spending, particularly in social welfare programs in the past few years, has meant that the tax pay-out of federal and provincial governments has been enormously increased, and all our programs are not yet mature with such further things as bilingualism becoming more expensive. Furthermore, we are facing the probability of an attempt to establish some sort of guaranteed income for our citizens. This, I feel, would be certain disaster and would push our already overburdened service industry into more direct competition with that segment of the economy that produces our goods.

The minister mentioned that indexing of exemptions brackets since 1974 on personal income tax has meant that the take is $5 billion below what it would have been in the absence of indexing. Specific personal tax cuts totalling $2.5 billion, and $1.6 billion for business, have reduced the federal tax take. Of course no one promises that without indexing there would not have been some alleviation in the tax structure. But with the government tending to increase spending at one end with maturation of programs and new programs, to have cut on the intake through the indexing system makes for fiscal deficit budgeting and conceals for a time the necessity of a better balance between income and outgo. Therefore I believe it is time to consider the fact of indexing and I believe governments must, instead of automatic indexing, consider whether or not they should make the proper adjustments in the rates and levels of taxation as they did in the past.

I know it is easy in an inflationary period to hide behind the index, but in fact it is now recognized the index is not a good method of measuring the total business activity. Studies in the United States have shown that indexing is probably fallacious and gives too high a figure for the cost of living index as related to the actual over-all business activity—something which is very difficult to measure, I know. It has been estimated that this cost of living is too high by something like at least 2 per cent, based upon what studies in the United States would indicate. It may well be that the present method of indexing is not as good a barometer as we would like to see.

I am inclined to feel that the use of indexing creates uncertainty and, while its intent is not questioned, it makes for difficulty in budgeting, and increases the incentive to borrow to cover deficits. I appreciate that more and more people in small business, and I presume in larger ones as well, make business decisions on how the tax changes and taxation system affect the business rather than attempting to run it on a careful and constructive basis. Rewards are as great by taking advantage of the tax system, rather than attempting to run an efficient business, and in the final analysis contributing jobs and economic activity to the over-all community. There are so many exemptions, indices and allowances that the tax accountant becomes the most important person in business management. I do not think this is a good thing.

I was pleased to see that the minister of small business has introduced some ideas and some intentions which hopefully will improve the climate for small business. There are a good many more things in the budget I would like to speak about, but at the moment I would like to wait for committee of the whole.

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Fort William): I am very pleased, Mr. Speaker, to have an opportunity to speak in this budget debate and on Bill C-56, which is perhaps one of the more important bills to be discussed in this House in quite some years. It is important not just because it is a budget bill, but because it is a specific budget bill, and also because of the nature of the debate that has surrounded the sales tax provisions.

There are two fundamental principles that must be examined. One of them is the relationship of a common market to a common market within a nation, and that total concept which has to be examined. The other has to do with how a nation like Canada, in terms of global economics, mobilizes its resources, given the federal and provincial problems that surround confederation to meet some of these critical events that are occurring in our industrial world.

Before I deal with these two principles, I would like to review the sequence of events and the ideas that went into this particular budget and this particular sales tax proposal. We have had a great deal of discussion in the House about the difficulty in stimulating the economy and actually creating effective demand in it. We have had comments about the fact that the quantity or degree of savings in the country have increased immeasurably over the last 15 years. I believe in 1960 we had a savings ratio to gross national product of something like 2.3 per cent, and in the last quarter of 1977 it had risen to 11.25 per cent, which is more than a 400 per cent increase in the level of savings as a percentage of the gross national product. This is extremely substantial.

• (1602)

The effect of the tax cuts in last fall's mini-budget on purchases within Canada was minimal. It did not deter people from taking trips, but neither did it increase the demand for goods produced in this country. It therefore became important to find a method of stimulating the economy over a short period so that people would buy more goods. Most economists indicated that the reduction of sales tax would have a rapid effect.

The minister either met, or discussed this problem with all provincial premiers. The province of Alberta had no sales tax so it opted out, but opted instead for some concessions which favoured Syncrude and other operations in heavy oil and tar sands. That left nine provinces with sales tax. The minister was able to get agreement with eight provinces—not with the province of Quebec. The agreement with the five provinces from Ontario west concerned the transfer of 2 per cent to those provinces through the income tax after which the provinces would reduce the sales tax by 3 per cent, thus redistributing the federal funds by a reduction of sales tax. Because of the slack economy and relative poverty of the four Atlantic provinces, the agreement was for the federal government to fund the provinces for the full 3 per cent reduction in sales tax. The province of Quebec took part in the discussions but did not respond, and a few hours before the budget asked for an extension of 48 hours. I assume that if the budget had been delayed nothing would have been done.

Just 48 hours after the budget was tabled, the province of Quebec announced its program which called for an 8 per cent or total reduction of sales tax on specific items. These items are not totally made in Quebec, but in many ways this would create a separate tariff situation within that province for many of the goods produced there.

There is one aspect of all this which is not well understood, Mr. Speaker, and that is that in the other nine provinces the federal income tax and provincial income tax are collected by the federal government. In 1954 Quebec opted to collect its own income tax separate from the federal government. This means that the operation could not be conducted the same way in Quebec as in the other provinces.

In the other provinces the federal tax would be reduced by $100 or the provincial tax increased by $100, and the money would be redistributed to the people. That is not possible in Quebec because there the people get separate tax forms.

Let us consider how this program could have operated under two sets of circumstances. Let us assume that the province of Quebec had gone along with the scheme. If it had, the full $226 million would have been sent out in the form of a cheque from the federal government and then redistributed to people in the province by way of a sales tax reduction. The province went along to the extent that there was some reduction on certain items, and for those items the two percentage point reduction will be transferred in this way. In other words, a cheque of roughly $40 million will be given to the province of Quebec to meet this particular reduction, but the other $186 million is not being given in this way because the province did not go along with the scheme.

In the other set of circumstances, the province does not go along with the scheme. If we give the province $40 million to make up for the sales tax being reduced by two percentage points, then the question arises of how we maintain equity in this country in terms of the people of Quebec receiving their fair share of this tax reduction.

Both the Tory party and the NDP have said we should hand over the full amount to the government of Quebec in the form of a cheque even though it has not gone along with the scheme, and then the province could redistribute it in a way that would favour its industry. I cannot accept this method, Mr. Speaker, because I think it would encourage a disruption of the notion of a common market.

The province of Quebec has every right, and should continue to have every right, to do what it wants with its own tax system. It is a different thing, however, when the federal government tries to do something and actually sends a cheque to do it or when the province does something that creates a kind of non-tariff barrier. This is extremely important. Two years ago the province of Ontario removed the sales tax on automobiles. That was a legitimate move. At no time, however, did the federal government offer encouragement to them to do that. This is the difference in the two situations.

I should like to deal with this notion of a common market, Mr. Speaker, because I have seen some things in the press which disturb me. The usual idea of a common market is that it is something that exists between countries and that therefore, in these circumstances we are not talking about the same thing. It seems to me that one of the essential things about nationhood is that the central government does everything it can to maintain the commonality of the market within a nation. This is the principle at stake in this issue. Should the federal government transfer $226 million to the province of Quebec to set up a tax system which tends to break down or disturb that common market—which tends to set up a non-tariff barrier? Should the federal government be in that kind of business? I say no, Mr. Speaker. I think this point is crucial and should be understood.

The other point I wanted to deal with, before I move on to some other aspects of our economy, is the nature of federal-provincial relationships, particularly in a very critical period in our economic history and in the world. There is a very basic difference between the position of the Tory party and the position of the government on this isue. Without putting any value on it, at this particular point it is unique, in the origins of this country and the origins of the Conservative party, that there is a different situation.

● (1612)

Speaker after speaker from the Conservative party has talked about provincial rights, stating that we must do absolutely nothing to reduce provincial rights. They never seem to think there are some very important federal rights that must be maintained. There is a substantial difference in viewpoint and this should be looked at very carefully by the Canadian public.

In this period of real crisis in our country and throughout the world, it is important that the federal government maintain as much power as possible to deal with the critical issues. When we begin making constitutional adjustments, which we are going to do, it is extremely important to remember that this country has a million unemployed, $11 billion deficit, 8½ per cent inflation, and a foreign exchange deficit of perhaps $5 billion. This is not the time to dissipate the power of the federal government to deal with these problems.

When we are criticized in terms of this tax situation, I am afraid it creates the impression that we are in some way trying to usurp provincial powers. What the minister attempted to do, and it was extremely important, in my opinion, was to say that the provinces have a taxing power which we do not, and that we should get together with the provincial finance ministers. This did not start a few weeks before the budget. It began eight months to a year ago. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) asked them to sit down to see how co-operatively they could work out a system to reduce sales tax in order to create a demand to solve part of our problem.

It is extremely important that in a crisis situation, almost like a wartime situation, we have the collective support of the provinces. We need to work with the provinces. We need as much power as possible to solve some of these problems. I would like to deal briefly with the global nature of these problems. In dealing with this budget, we have to realize it is a short term instrument which will provide stimulation for a six to eight-month period. It is not a budget to deal with the global crisis that we face.

Let us take a country with an inflation rate of 16 per cent, an unemployment rate of 11 per cent, a $3.4 billion foreign exchange deficit, a reduction in productivity of 4 per cent last year, and a reduction in gross national product in the year 1977 of 2½ per cent. This is not Canada. It is Sweden. That is one example of a country in serious trouble. If you put that foreign exchange deficit of $3.4 billion on a population basis with Canada, it would be in the order of $10 billion. That country is in serious difficulty. If you go through the group of the 24 OECD countries, you will find similar problems.

I maintain we are in a serious global economic crisis when we see this situation reproduced in country after country. Most of these countries responded extremely well during the sixties and early seventies to very rapid growth. They instituted, as we did in this country, some very elaborate social services to meet the needs of the people.

All of a sudden, a new concept was introduced, a shortage of oil. The OPEC countries began draining off $100 billion to $150 billion a year in capital. From this point, we are all in some trouble. It is not the only reason for the trouble, but it is the point where we seriously began to get into trouble.

There are three major factors globally that we have to look at in terms of these problems. Quantumly in the kinds of problems that all countries are facing, there is a minimum universal rate of inflation of 5 per cent and rapidly growing unemployment, such as in Sweden. A whole series of social problems have grown in a quantum way over the past four or five years. That is the first situation.

The second is the unique situation where, perhaps for the first time in the history of mankind, we see universal shortages of energy. We all grew up with the notion that there was plenty and all we had to do was arrange our lives to take advantage of it. As I mentioned earlier, global shortages have had an effect in terms of the large drain on our dollar. Eventually, we will be required to change our lifestyle.

The third factor which is extremely important is the techniques with which we have traditionally solved these kinds of problems. The Keynesian fiscal and monetary techniques do not work any more. They do not work because of the magnitude of the problems. The problems are far too large to be solved in terms of techniques such as creating demand by sales tax and so on. One cannot reduce one million unemployed just by these techniques.

The second reason they do not work is that they are sometimes counter-productive. We are dealing with stagflation, where you have high unemployment and high inflation at the same time. These are unheard of in any conventional economic theory, at least over a long period of time globally. For these reasons these techniques are not working.

It appears we will not be embarking on an election for some months, possibly a year. It is important that we in this House and we in this nation begin to look very seriously at these long-term problems that face us. I suggest that the government embark on a series of major white papers dealing with some of the alternatives in terms of unemployment, government spending, foreign exchange problems, and energy.

I wish to outline some thoughts on the problems of unemployment. White papers should be set up so that the Canadian public will talk now and at the time of the next election about the real issues facing us. I could perhaps state some ideas on areas such as energy, but the example I wish to deal with is unemployment, one problem that has bedevilled us more than any other single problem in the history of this country.

Canadians seem to be concerned about the notion of creating jobs. The thesis I would like to present is that we cannot possibly begin to solve our unemployment problems and substantially reduce the one million unemployed with the techniques used at the present time. We cannot solve this problem by the use of any kind of notions surrounding job creation. We cannot create enough jobs to do this.

● (1622)

I believe discussion about job creation has led to a myth which has made it impossible to come to grips with unemployment in this country at its present level. I want to explain this contention and give some background material which will show how this figure of one million unemployed came about.

Between 1955 and 1971 the school population of this country rose from 2.7 million to nearly 6.4 million. In other words, it increased by about 2 ⅓ times. In the same period the over-all population increased by only one third. Putting these things together we see that the school population rose seven times as fast as the general population. This created a whole series of problems. For example, we now have more vacant classrooms in this country than we know what to do with. We had to build these schools because of the demographic bulge. I suspect there will be a reverse housing problem in a few years because fewer family units will be formed. Remember, there is a factor here of seven. The situation is beginning to change now, but it will be four or five years before the change is substantial enough to be reflected in the unemployment figures.

It is interesting to note, also, that in 1953 19 per cent of the population of Canada, from infants to people 100 years old, were in the work force, and that by 1971 this percentage had grown to 29. So there are these two factors to consider—the striking increase in the school population during the period I have referred to, and the hardly less remarkable increase in the number of the population engaged in employment. Together this had led to an almost impossible situation in terms of job creation.

The number of people working between 1970 and 1975 increased by 18.2 per cent, or 1.4 million. Look at what the OECD countries have accomplished in this field. You will see that Canada leads the group. We have created almost twice as many jobs as any country in that group. The United States has moved along, but before 1975 its record was well below ours. We have created more jobs than any nation in the industrial world. But there are still one million people unemployed. It is perfectly understandable, given the demographic situation to which I have referred.

Consider the conventional techniques one might use to solve this problem. Look at the latest review from the Economic Council. It says that if we were to achieve a 5 per cent growth rate the unemployment rate would level off at about 8 per cent in the next couple of years, and that if we raised it to 6 per cent unemployment would drop to 7.7 per cent. In other words, an increase of a full point in the g.n.p. would result in only a .3 per cent decrease in unemployment. But how do we achieve even a 5 per cent increase in the g.n.p. when the United States in the first quarter of this year had a negative growth rate—not 5 per cent, or 2 per cent, or 1 per cent, but less than zero? How do we achieve this growth when we are dealing with countries like Sweden, for example, which last year experienced a "growth rate" of minus 2.5 per cent? There are no countries in the OECD at this time which can expect more than 5 per cent.

I should like to refer to a couple statements by different economists, one known as a progressive, and the other an economist for an investment firm. They were made, of all places, on the Barbara Frumm show. The first is from David Wolfe, professor of political science at York University. He was asked whether there were any other things government could still do to improve the situation, and his answer was:

> Possibly, but it would involve a more radical degree of government intervention in the economy than the government has appeared willing to undertake to date or the Canadian public at large has appeared interested in seeing the government take.

The other was from Dr. John Grant, chief economist at Wood, Gundy. But he was talking about the baby boom and the other problem I have mentioned in terms of demography, and he said:

> For this five-year period ahead its almost a superhuman effort for the economy to absorb individuals into the labour force as fast as we would like them to be absorbed

He went on to say:

> I can't conceive of a policy that could bring us down to 6 per cent unemployment in, say, the next couple of years. I just don't think there is a mix we could live with that would do that.

I hope I have demonstrated that a substantial reduction of the present number of unemployed is just not possible given the techniques which are being suggested. It is not possible of solution in terms, for instance, of the Tory suggestion that we might throw another couple of billion dollars into the pot by way of providing income tax cuts. First, that amount is too small—it represents less than one per cent of the g.n.p. Second, we already have an $11 billion deficit. The New Democratic Party talks about $3.5 billion, but we still face the same problem. It is not going to work.

Hon. members opposite talk about an industrial strategy. Well, that might have some effect, but it would take five or six years for results to show, by which time the demographic situation will have changed and the unemployment rate will begin to go down on its own. I might mention that Sweden has embarked on an industrial strategy of the kind suggested and got itself into grave difficults as a result. In short, I do not believe the techniques suggested, including the present budget in terms of a massive effect, will have any basic impact.

When we talk at this point about putting the unemployed to work, one million of them, we are creating a myth which makes it impossible to approach the problem realistically. We say "Let's create more jobs", and then we do not have to think the unthinkable because we keep saying that. I think that is the problem we are facing.

[Mr. McRae.]

● (1632)

I do not begin to presume to say that there are simple answers, but I think there is one thing we can look at as an alternative to job creation. We really have not looked seriously at this as yet. When we cannot create enough jobs, perhaps we should look at redistributing the work that is being done among the people who are available to do it. That may sound like a very fanciful idea. It may sound foolish, but how else can we involve the one million people who are unemployed in the labour force? Let us just look for a moment at this possibility in terms of what it really means.

There are one million people who are unemployed. The rate is 8.5 per cent. Because of the way we live and because of the customs we have developed let us accept that perhaps a 4.5 per cent unemployment rate might very well be close to zero. In other words, if we had enough jobs for everybody to work at, there still might be 4 per cent to 4.5 per cent of the population at any given time not working as a result of job turnarounds, etc. There are all kinds of reasons for this.

What I think we are looking at is reducing that one million to 500,000. In terms of man-days, a very rough calculation shows that if in every 20 days, 19 days are worked at the same hourly rate and that other day is given over to someone else, we would eliminate 500,000 people from the unemployment rolls. That sounds fanciful, and obviously that is not the way we do things, but I think there are many things we can examine. We can consider earlier retirements, educational leaves, sabbatical leaves, shorter weeks, and a very interesting thing called pairing.

As a high school principal I found, especially in the early seventies, that growth in the school population began to dwindle, and we did not need quite as many teachers. There were many people who felt they would like in some way or other to work a shorter week, or possibly to work half days and pair their jobs with others. There are all kinds of ways that can happen. For those people who worry about productivity, the studies which have been carried out indicate that each of the individuals in a pair produces more than 50 per cent of the work, more than was produced before, so we get more than 100 per cent of the work being done. In these circumstances productivity tends to grow. Some people call this work sharing. I prefer to use the phrase "redistributing work" because it at least implies that the work is still being done.

I would not be talking about redistributing work if I thought there was any other way, but I believe that the idea that we can create anywhere near the number of jobs that would be necessary to reduce the number of unemployed by half a million is just not plausible, and therefore we have to look at the other alternative, which is redistributing work. I use that as an example of the kinds of things we should be talking about and of the kinds of things which should be found in a white paper on employment, inflation or energy. These are some challenging ideas about which we have to start talking.

We have spent too much time in this House talking about the RCMP, alleged barn burnings, and this, that, and the other thing. We never seem to focus on the real world out there, the world of real economic crisis. I hope that before we go before the public, possibly next spring, we will have looked at all these things seriously and given Canadians a chance to have dialogue. We need to have dialogue with Canadians on these problems. When we face the public, I hope we will be talking about the real problems of a world in crisis in a meaningful way.

● (1642)

[Translation]

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take full advantage of the time allotted to me to make some comments on Bill C-56. We know that since the beginning of this week, part of this legislation has been the main topic in the House and I would like to say first that I object to the contents of the legislation, and this is not the first time that such a thing has occurred, because it includes a number of economic and financial provisions. And of course the bill covers the proposal made by the Minister of Finance to the provinces in connection with the sales tax.

We on this side of the House realize that there are good provisions which should be supported and indeed we would be prepared to do so. Unfortunately it is impossible for us to accept some of them because we find in the bill a provision which we consider unacceptable, encroaching as it does upon provincial jurisdictions. Under the circumstances, I think we must first of all oppose this legislation fiercely as a consequence of the fact that we refuse to accept a specific measure on the sales tax; if the government had wanted to show some honesty, we could have gone on quickly to measures that would be quite welcome throughout Canada, while withdrawing this one until such time as a solution could be found to the dilemma in which the province of Quebec and the federal government find themselves with regard to the sales tax.

It is not the first time, Mr. Speaker, that we have this kind of legislation hidden inside a bill that can hardly be justified but which it is hoped the official opposition will overlook because most of the other provisions can be supported quickly. Perhaps this one should not be discussed. But I feel that part on the sales tax, which is the important part, cannot be glossed over as easily as some might have wished. Last week, I listened to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) when he introduced this bill; naturally, he appealed to all Canadians; he made an effort to play the part of the great Canadian appealing to us to support this measure. Yesterday, I also heard some of the remarks of the Minister of Finance, as well as those of a minister representing Ontario, who blamed the province of Quebec for trying to protect its own industries. I do not understand that coming from Ontario, he does not know that industries protected under the Quebec proposal are from Ontario in a proportion of 50 per cent. In the four areas, the people in Ontario will benefit from the Quebec proposal which, and I repeat it again and again, was unanimously agreed upon by all opposition parties in the National Assembly.

In my opinion, it is an attempt to manipulate public opinion to say that the province of Quebec wants to balkanize a segment of the Canadian economy, when the federal Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce has made it clear that the sectors protected by the Quebec government also exist in the neighbouring province of Ontario in a 50 per cent ratio out of 90 per cent, with the 10 per cent remaining divided among three other provinces. So, I am sorry that they should spread the idea that this measure—and the Prime Minister went even further, saying that it tends to undermine federalism, and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) did not hesitate to endorse his leader's position on this matter. Besides, I put a question along those lives to the Prime Minister: Does he still believe, in view of the support which the Quebec government obtained from the Liberals in the Quebec National Assembly, from Mr. Biron's Union Nationale members, from Fabien Roy, from Mr. Samson and from others, including some I shall mention later on, that all these people seek directly and unequivocally to undermine federalism. I must say that the Prime Minister was not as brave as he was with the media. He did not give the same reply and, as a matter of fact, he did not answer my question.

We fully realized also that the Minister of Finance was pursuing a very specific goal, that of stimulating industry and, consequently, the purchasing power. I feel therefore that Quebec's proposal meets in a selective way the need to stimulate industry, taking into account, of course, Quebec's priorities; perhaps I should remind hon. members of the particular problem facing the province of Quebec: an excessive unemployment rate which gives rise to a difficult situation. And the Minister of Finance, with this proposal and in view of the sudden generosity of the federal government, wanted to satisfy the needs of Quebec with a measure which does not purport to balkanize the national economy, and this was ascertained by the federal Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. I therefore do not think that the Quebec government can be blamed for wanting to help those sectors most in need. Some economic meetings in Quebec have also shown that all groups agree that these sectors should receive more help.

The Minister of Finance will say that he has tried to help the textile, footwear and clothing sectors by imposing certain barriers or certain quotas, but he waited until their situation had completely deteriorated. So the Quebec government only profits from the federal proposal. Now I wonder just how much candidness the minister has exhibited. He talks of consultations with the finance ministers, and we know perfectly well that this consultation was not as flexible as he claims. That much we know. He says over and over again that for three weeks he showed a flexibility such as no other finance minister had ever shown, and we know perfectly well that a decision had to be made at some point. The Minister of Finance also knew that nine provinces had presented their budget and that, as in the case of the Maritimes, when he offered to pay 3 per cent of a tax under provincial jurisdiction the province would have been foolish to refuse.

In other provinces, his proposal had strings attached and that is where we see interference in provincial jurisdiction. We are told that is a question of federal and provincial powers which we talked about a moment ago. But the minister also knew that the province of Quebec had not handed down its budget and it was normal that his counterpart, whoever he might be, should want to learn first of the federal generosity to use it for the most pressing needs of his province. That was exactly the reaction of the Quebec finance minister who received, I repeat, unanimous support in the National Assembly. And how many other groups support the Quebec government proposal? It seems, Mr. Speaker, that all those people are not intelligent when the Minister of Finance continues to pretend that the Quebec proposal is unacceptable and means the division of our country.

So I think that the Minister of Finance has lost his credibility in the eyes of Quebeckers and even of all Canadians. Obviously when I ask the Prime Minister if in the circumstances he intends, to deal personally with the situation as a head of state and to reopen the negotiations and initiate a meeting with his Quebec counterpart, I think it is important for the Prime Minister of our country to understand the urgency of that issue. What are the real reasons for such stubbornness on the part of the Minister of Finance? I think that with the support coming from everywhere it is obvious that the minister has some reasons he does not want to reveal in the House. That stubbornness on the part of the Minister of Finance reflects to a certain extent the hatred of the government for the legitimately elected government of the province of Quebec, that is supported by all the opposition in Quebec and it is worrying to see that kind of reaction in the province. I understand that the Prime Minister of Canada now supports the unjustified obstinacy of the Minister of Finance. We must recall for instance their deep deception after the election of that government in the fall of 1976.

I know that the election of the present Quebec government in the fall of 1976 was the proof of the monumental failure of this government which bragged about being able to get all Canadians together to reach the objective of the Prime Minister of Canada which was national unity, but everything turned into a monumental failure in the fall of 1976. And I shall never believe that the majority of those members from Quebec will continue to support this odious obstinacy concerning the legitimate demand from the province of Quebec which is not aimed at federalism or economic balkanization in those sectors but only at meeting an urgent need for the people of Quebec.

This is why I insist, Mr. Speaker, that the Prime Minister take the issue into his own hands. There is no doubt that the Minister of Finance has made a blunder. I have no hesitation in saying that, because of his comments concerning the Quebec government, he can no longer reestablish normal negotiations. I believe that as a responsible leader, the Prime Minister should take matters into his own hands and initiate a meeting with the Quebec premier to find a solution to this problem in the interests of both governments.

Of course, the Prime Minister repeated at a press conference no more than 24 or 48 hours ago: If Quebec wants to negotiate something, I am willing to do so. This is going too far, Mr. Speaker. The Prime Minister is perfectly aware of the concern and the embarrassment that this is causing to many Canadians. However, but for a few exceptions, my colleagues from Quebec remain silent. In fact, these few exceptions will perhaps convince the Minister of Finance to change his attitude because apart from the opposition parties in Quebec, important groups are asking for a change of attitude on the part of the federal government, like the QFL did yesterday. The business executive centre has also condemned the attitude of the federal government in this affair. Moreover, there seem to be some feelings of revolt within the government party, which should normally make the Minister of Finance understand that he could lose everything on this issue. In addition, Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister of Canada replied with an incredible lack of concern at a press conference that he has other things to do besides dealing with this matter.

● (1652)

It is both disquieting and saddening for Canadians that the Prime Minister acts in such a way on such an important issue. The Prime Minister shrinks from assuming responsibility for the issue for fear of disavowing the Minister of Finance, but he is already disavowed in the minds of Quebeckers and Canadians. The Minister of Finance lacked both competence and know how in these negotiations, as is evidenced by his stubbornness, his negative approach, the pressure he is using because they have the power and the majority to force us into accepting such a proposition on a basic principle, when we believe that any province must have the freedom to negotiate with the federal government and accept such a proposition. Under these circumstances, Mr. Speaker, I can only point to the sell-out by members from Quebec who did not take a stand as they had a duty to do. Regretfully I must indicate this is a conspiracy against one province because it is a well known fact that all opposition parties in the Quebec National Assembly supported their government, and therefore this is turning down the whole of the Quebec people. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner), a federal minister, is bringing the proof that protected industries are shared by Ontario and three other provinces, and therefore the reasons given by the Minister of Finance are groundless. Such being the case, certainly I will not hesitate to oppose with all due vigour the Minister of Finance, who suggested he was prepared to put his political future in the balance on this bill. He is doing a very poor job of representing Quebec's interests, a very poor job of meeting his commitments to his own province's interests, and the position we all have a duty to take in this House at this point I am ready to share with any member who feels he has that duty to defend his province's interests in the face of a federal decision that is not accepted by that province.

I would like to refer later to the question of provincial and federal powers, since the hon. member who spoke before me expressed a concern for what he called a dilution of federal powers, on the assumption that nothing should be changed at a time when we have a $11.5 billion deficit and 1,500,000 unemployed. Well, this government has been there for ten years and the unilateral decisions it has been taking no matter what repercussions and implications there may be at the provincial level, and it is responsible for that 1,500,000 unemployed figure. Some efforts have been made, I have never denied it, but there were too few and they came too late in several cases.

I am fully aware that the government tried, but they failed to take the proper measures at the right time. They wake up today and tell us that because we have a $11.5 billion deficit and 1.5 million unemployed, we must give the federal government greater powers without adequate consultation with the provinces. Mr. Speaker, we shall never agree to such an attitude on the part of the federal government. We believe that in this matter the federal government has failed and infringed upon the provincial jurisdictions. That is why we shall oppose this legislation so long as the government does not withdraw this part, and I am sorry to say that we should like to support some other measures in this piece of legislation, but after the experience we had with other bills a few years ago, we shall certainly not be made to swallow this unsavoury pill contained in this bill.

The Minister of Finance was telling me this afternoon that a survey—I do not know where he found it—showed that 87 per cent of Quebeckers were in favour of his proposition. I hope he will not say that this 87 per cent was taken in the province of Quebec because, Mr. Speaker, I would then—

Mr. Chrétien: In a Montreal paper!

Mr. La Salle: —find myself again in a difficult position, but today I would like to use my allotted time, even if I entertain some serious doubts about such a statement. I see that the Minister of Finance is in the House, so I ask him again to resume negotiations with the Quebec government.

I say to him again while he is here that it is up to the federal government, to the responsible government to make the first move, to set up a meeting with the Quebec government and find a solution. And a government which is no longer able to bow to the unanimous decision of the National Assembly is an irresponsible and incompetent government. It is impossible, Mr. Speaker, for the Minister of Finance to be the only one to be right in this matter. It is unacceptable and unbelievable. Besides, there are thousands of Canadians who think as I do. In the circumstances, they are trying to waste time, they are sulking and refuse to pursue the matter seriously. And I know, and the Minister of Finance is fully aware, that the members behind him are worried by his attitude and would like to see—

Mr. Chrétien: There is only one.

Mr. La Salle: —this issue settled. We have heard some statements and seen some members on television. I can think of one in particular, and I will tell you right away, Mr. Speaker, because he made me laugh a little. The member for Compton (Mr. Tessier) made a statement terming the proposal of the Minister of Finance a political disaster, and the following day he was applauding a statement from the minister like mad. Let the constituents of the riding of Compton be the judge of this performance. It worries me a little, of course, when I see a member act in this manner. But at the same time, another member who is more serious made some remarks and we are waiting to get some evidence in support of his allegations.

Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister did their best to accuse us of wanting to go to bed with the separatists. Yet they have manipulated, that is the word, public opinion and they chose to conceal the truth. I will not say that they lied but that they concealed the truth, namely that the political parties endorsed the provincial government position. They are not talking about that. The Minister of Finance tells me that Mr. Ryan has rejected the La Salle-Parizeau formula. First of all, this is a further example of public opinion manipulation. No one can claim that I set up that formula with Mr. Parizeau. It is unthinkable, Mr. Speaker! The Minister of Finance fails to say that Mr. Ryan feels the solution of direct payments to taxpayers that Mr. Chrétien is trying to have adopted is inconsistent with the true federalist spirit, administratively costly, cumbersome and socially unfair. He likens that solution to a form of blackmail, Mr. Speaker. It is not I who say so nor a separatist. He believes that should the federal government act in this manner every time a province refused to endorse a program, it would be dangerous for it would exert undue pressures on the provinces and undermine local governments in the minds of the people.

That is a statement the new leader of the Liberal party made just recently. Mr. Biron made one also, as well as Mr. Fabien Roy, the Social Credit representatives and the New Democratic Party. The whole opposition, Mr. Speaker, rejects the attitude and the proposal of the Minister of Finance. Responsible organizations across the country, the QFL, the Quebec workers, are opposed to it. Mr. Laberge did not hesitate to ask the government to clarify that matter. But no, it seems that only the Minister of Finance is right.

Mr. Speaker, may I call it five o'clock? I shall have further comments to make after supper at eight o'clock.

Export Development Corporation

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman)—Canada Council—Request mandate be studied by committee; the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie)—Transport—Compensation for losses incurred in sinking of m. v. William Carson.

[English]

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions for papers.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Notice of motion No. 2 in the name of the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert).

Some hon. Members: Stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The motion stands at the request of the government.

Motion No. 52 in the name of the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale).

Some hon. Members: Stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The motion stands at the request of the government.

Motion No. 1 in the name of the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Brisco).

Some hon. Members: Stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The motion stands at the request of the government.

CORRESPONDENCE RELATING TO EDC FINANCING OF SUGAR COMPLEX IN REPUBLIC OF IVORY COAST

The House resumed from Thursday, December 15, 1977, consideration of the motion of Mr. Herbert:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House copies of all correspondence, notes, minutes of meetings, documents and agreements relating to the financing by the Export Development Corporation of a cane sugar complex in the Republic of the Ivory Coast to be built by Redpath Sugars Ltd.

[Translation]

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, concerning this motion, I would like to report a few facts in connection with the financing by the Export Development Corporation of a cane sugar refining complex to be developed by Redpath Sugars Ltd. in the Republic of Ivory Coast. This sugar refining complex is an integrated project wholly-owned by the government of Ivory Coast which has committed itself to expanding and diversifying its agricultural production. To that end, Mr. Speaker, they set up a state corporation, Sodesucre, which is responsible for the production of sugar in Ivory Coast. Traditionally, this country has been importing sugar. Today, Mr. Speaker, it hopes to develop its own natural resources in order to supply its domestic market and get foreign exchange from export sales.

To establish that sugar complex, Sodesucre called for tenders internationally and Redpath Sugars Ltd. was awarded the contract, in spite of very stiff international competition from firms which were supported by state organizations equivalent to the Export Development Corporation. The successful bid of this Canadian firm resulted in suppliers and sub-contractors creating employment for Canadians.

This sugar complex which is a commercial undertaking was developed because the government of Ivory Coast felt that it was an answer to an economic need. The EDC supports commercially viable operations which involve exports profitable to Canada. By definition, such operations involve two willing parties: a buyer and a vendor. In other words, such operations must be profitable to both.

On the other hand, the expected operation must be financially viable. As it is a commercial and financial agency responsible for creating firm commercial relations for Canada, the EDC tries to deal with buyers who will prove successful. Indeed, the buyer who concludes a good deal will be able to meet his financial commitments and will become a regular customer for Canadian goods and services. This sale was announced, Mr. Speaker, on May 11, 1976, partly in the following terms:—

● (1702)

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order. The hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) on a point of order.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, we are discussing a motion for the production of papers. The matter we have to consider is not the history and the merits of the project, but merely whether the motion introduced by the hon.

member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) is founded or not, whether the papers are to be produced or not.

We all know that the official record of the Debates does contain numerous decisions made by the Chair to show that the point I am raising is founded and that we cannot afford to spend an hour and forty minutes merely applauding or criticizing the substance of the issue, the contents of the papers. The discussion is on the simple matter of producing or not producing these papers. The member who has the floor should now indicate whether those documents will be tabled or not.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order. The hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) may have a point of order, but I must remind him that if we listen to the parliamentary secretary, we might learn at the end why he agrees to or rejects this request. I now suggest that we listen to the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of Privy Council (Mr. Pinard).

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I find it strange that the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) should ak us to say merely yes or no. I find it unbelievable. I am referring specifically to the said organization and I think that for a better understanding of our reasons for agreeing to or rejecting the motion for the production of these papers, it is proper to speak of the organization involved and to give some particulars. I realize that our comments do not always please some members opposite, but the opposite is also true. And the hon. member has enough experience to know that you cannot so candidly censure hon. members who have intelligent remarks to make just because it displeases the members who object to it. So, Mr. Speaker, I think that the hon. member through his intervention—

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) on a point of order.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is unfair to me. It is not that what he says does not interest me, you can always read any book and find it interesting. But the hon. member being Parliamentary Secretary to the President of Privy Council, the problem is that he has aspirations as concerns our rules and I would urge him, Mr. Speaker, to follow the rules. Our basic rules do not authorize him to talk just about anything during this period. We are considering a motion for the production of papers and I invite the hon. member to say why there should be reluctance or agreement concerning the production of those papers. This is what we would like to know.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. That is precisely what I pointed out to the hon. parliamentary secretary. During his remarks he certainly will have to say why he supports or rejects the motion for the production of papers.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member just said, it is indeed up to the Speaker to decide what is relevant or not under the rules. And what I say is perfectly relevant but no member of the opposition will force me at the beginning of my speech to say in advance if I am for or against a bill. I shall first present my arguments. That is what I am doing. And then I shall decide myself, freely, if the Chair allows me to do so, to support or reject the motion of the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert). I know as well as the hon. member for Edmonton West the basic rules on which he insisted so much. The rules are the same for everyone. But I do not agree with him on facts and I contend that what I say is particularly relevant to the motion under consideration and that he is entitled not to agree with me. He is entitled to object if he believes that what I am saying is irrelevant, but he does not have a monopoly on truth and you have decided that what I am saying is relevant, Mr. Speaker. Later on in my speech I will say whether or not I support the motion. Therefore, with your permission, I shall continue to explain my position. I was saying that the operation considered must be financially sound.

Since it is a business and financial organization responsible for establishing solid business relationships on behalf of Canada, the EDC wants to do business with buyers who will make money. This is what I said a while ago, Mr. Speaker. The sale in question was announced on August 11, 1976, partly as follows: The Export Development Corporation in Ottawa will be the leader of an international pool of financial institutions which will include the Royal Bank of Canada and the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce. This pool will be responsible for financing the establishment of a $172 million sugar cane agro-industrial complex in the Republic of the Ivory Coast.

I would like to mention that this is only one of the many projects which have benefitted from the support of the Export Development Corporation through its loan, insurance and foreign investment guarantee programs. Outside the export sector, the role of the Export Development Corporation is perhaps misunderstood by the public, and I would like to take this opportunity to define its areas of responsibility and mention some of its achievements. I think it would also enlighten the hon. member for Edmonton West. It is a fascinating story that goes back to 1944 when a bill was passed on export credits insurance, creating a body whose head office was located in small quarters near Sparks street and was headed by one administrator, only one, assisted by a lone employee. According to its first annual report, published at the end of March 1945, that body had assets of $1 million in available and excess capital; it had also made $296.55 in operating profits. Since then, that body has grown and the present corporation has granted loans in the order of $4 billion to foreign buyers.

Through its programs alone, just in 1977, its support to Canadian exports exceeded $2.6 billion, Mr. Speaker.

But let us come back to the announcement made in August 1976 on the occasion of the signing by the Export Development Corporation of a loan agreement for $88.3 million for that sugar cane complex. When the Minister of Trade, Industry and Commerce (Mr. Horner) made the announcement, it was with some pride because far more was involved than just a matter of lending money to lubricate the wheels of our trade.

I would like to say a few words about the responsibilities of the corporation, Mr. Speaker. First of all, it issues export credit insurances and as such, it protects exporters against any risk of loss under circumstances beyond their control when carrying out their operations. Those risks include wars, funds freezing, removal of export or import licences and other political hazards. Included are also refusal or failure of payment by the buyer, insolvency, evasions and other commercial risks. The Canadian Export Corporation is the only agency which can provide that range of protection. It can also insure a bank or a third party against insurable risks under an export transaction. As far as insurances and guarantees are concerned, businessmen should also be able to obtain a bank credit to cover their export operations, which would not be charged against their regular line of credit. The CEC covers prior and subsequent risks to delivery either for contracts or for the delivery itself. On the whole, it covers all sales with a one year credit (short term) or a five year credit (middle term). At the end of the year the value of insured exports amounted to something like $1.3 billion.

The Corporation also grants loans to foreign buyers to help them finance the purchase of capital goods, goods and services which, according to standards internationally agreed upon, require a longer credit period, ten years for instance. It is important to emphasize this in this debate on the motion brought forward by the honourable member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert), to justify the position I shall have to take in a few moments, Mr. Speaker, in answer to your suggestion. Such loans cannot be granted by Canadian financial institutions, because either of the lenght of the credit period or the interest rates. The former depends on the level of efficiency of the project and on the existing foreign competition. The loan we grant enable the exporters who are competitive as to prices, quality and delivery periods, not to lose a market for lack of competitive credits. The EDC can also provide guarantees to banks for their export loans. It also encourages banks, involvement as in these loans as much as possible and quite often Mr. Speaker without the benefit of a guarantee. The EDC is not trying to compete with the banks. It only deals with financing arrangements to help the banks. Finally the corporation insures Canadian investors against loss of their foreign investments in case of wars, riots and insurrections, confiscations or uncompensated expropriations and restrictions to the repatriation of gains or goods. This factor is uncreasingly important for our trade and the new trend for countries which buy our goods is to constitute joint ventures. This simple description of the responsibilities of the EDC will certainly give you an idea of the complexity of the problems which we are facing at this time when our trade is becoming more and more specialized. As a matter of fact the EDC has recently launched a new program of completion guarantee for projects abroad and special aid to expanding export firms.

The Ivory Coast operation, Mr. Speaker, is somewhat exceptional in view of the fact that it is the first of the kind in Canada, as has been announced. Incidentally, Redpath Sugar Limited of Montreal has been able to hire a bilingual team of designers and engineers in Montreal. This is the first Canadian project for which three major EDC programs were used to carry out the trade objectives of our country.

At this stage, Mr. Speaker, I would like to state the position I shall be taking on the motion by the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert), but I see that my speaking time has nearly expired and I will have several other matters to discuss before I let this position be known. I wish to give some of my colleagues the opportunity to take the floor. To conclude I would like to mention that some other programs to which I have referred require the involvement of very important participants. The buyer, the exporter, the bank and the investor are all seeking to pursue their own interest which does not concern anyone else. The details of the projects considered cannot be made public, for it is because of the information of a confidential nature that the EDC had obtained that it could arrange the financial aspect of these projects. These details could not be released without violating the trust of the parties. On the other hand, the activities of the EDC would be hampered, which would be detrimental to Canada's trade.

● (1712)

[English]

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make but two brief points about the motion that is before us today. In supporting the hon. member who wishes to have these papers produced, I would like to read to you once again the motion that is before us:

> That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House copies of all correspondence, notes, minutes of meetings, documents and agreements relating to the financing by the Export Development Corporation of a cane sugar complex in the Republic of the Ivory Coast to be built by Redpath Sugars Ltd.

My first point is, as I say, that I support the motion to produce these papers. It is important to know what the arrangements are, and we should have openness in government and in financial transactions that involve the people's money. The other point of major concern in a case like this is that we have an Export Development Corporation helping a large sugar firm, the Redpath company, to establish a sugar complex in the Ivory Coast. I have a number of questions I would like to have answered with regard to that area.

I have seen now for too long large multinational corporations from the west going into the third world countries or developing countries and setting up huge complexes on the best land that is available for luxury crops, primarily goods like sugar, bananas and tobacco—crops that are not part of the necessities of life. These corporations set up on the best land and leave the secondary land for the people of those countries, in this case the Ivory Coast. It is that secondary land that these people must use to feed themselves.

Despite the fact that we have developments like this in many countries of the Third World, there is now more starvation and hunger in many of these countries than there has ever been before. The reason for this is that foreign owners like Redpath are going in and taking the best land and taking advantage of the very cheap labour that is available. Because of this the corporations are making a lot of money but they do not reinvest it in those countries. It is not a good thing to promote, nor is it a good thing for the EDC to be promoting.

It is the taxpayers' money that is financing a project of this sort, and yet, as I said earlier, the people of the Third World countries must live on secondary land and produce their food on land of inferior quality because a foreigner is using their best land to produce a luxury export. This is not a good precedent, nor do I like the importation into the Third World of this sort of agriculture, which is a psychology that North Americans seem to follow.

• (1722)

I do not want that method of farming and agriculture to be exported to countries of the third world because it may not be the best thing for them. Instead, we should help the countries of the developing world help themselves. We should make sure that the countries of Africa, Asia, and South America are self sufficient in food. Few countries can produce enough food to feed themselves. Countries like France and the United States can, of course, and even a small country like Israel is able to feed itself as a result of good planning and proper utilization of its resources. If we do not promote self sufficiency in food for other countries, we will have massive famine. Shortages of food in years to come will make the energy crisis look like a Sunday school picnic. When people are faced with starvation they turn to violence. The EDC should not be involved in transactions of this sort.

The other thing about this kind of development in the Third World is that it is not only important to huge agra-business companies but that those countries also import eating habits. An example is the exportation of skim milk powder to the third world and the promotion of the bottle feeding of children in those countries. This turned out to be a disaster because those children cannot digest the lactose, yet it was promoted for commercial profit. I do not want Canada, through the EDC, to be part of that sort of thing.

I think the House should support the motion for the production of papers relating to the financing arrangements made by the EDC. Just yesterday the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Rynard) questioned the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Goyer) about the government's business dealings in Iran and Saudi Arabia. They are two of the wealthiest countries in the world, and anyone who doubts that should read the article in last week's Time magazine about the billions of dollars that Saudi Arabia cannot even spend. The money is coming in faster than they can spend it, yet a Canadian Crown corporation is investing in Saudi Arabia and Iran. Today in the House the minister said that the Canadian Export Development Corporation may become involved in the transaction referred to and, if it does, I say that is a crime. If Canadian industrial development is to be stimulated through the EDC it should be done in countries that can be helped, not the wealthy ones.

The motion calls for the production of documents, notes, minutes of meetings, correspondence, and so on, between the EDC and the Republic of the Ivory Coast regarding a sugar complex to be built there by Redpath Sugars Ltd. Perhaps we should also talk about the other things the EDC does and whether it should be doing them in the third world. I say it should not. It should not be investing in countries like Iran and Saudi Arabia.

I hope the government will take note of my remarks and made policy changes which will help people in the developing countries as well as the people of Canada.

Mr. Roger Young (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I was going to begin by saying for the benefit of the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert)—but I notice he has left the chamber—that I will be speaking against the motion. I will elucidate on the premise I intend to put this afternoon, which is that it would be adverse to the effective functioning of the Export Development Corporation if we were to expose the papers connected with this transaction. That being the case, I suggest it would mean that such a disclosure would be adverse to Canadian export sales and the interests of all of us so far as employment of Canadians is concerned.

It seems to me that the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) has serious misconceptions about how the Export Development Corporation assists other countries and Canadians. Perhaps I can give him some of the bits and pieces of information that he said he was looking for, and at the same time explain how it functions, how it helps Canadians, assists developing countries and even some of the more developed countries of the world.

The financing by the Export Development Corporation of the cane sugar complex in the Republic of the Ivory Coast should be regarded as a commercial triumph. I suggest that it is a victory by Canadian exporters. It carries benefits to exporting suppliers and sub-suppliers all the way across Canada. The project involves development and construction of a cane sugar plantation, raw sugar factory, ancillary facilities, with a new railway spur, sidings, and access roads which will link the site to the existing systems and allow transportation of the factory output to the sea for export. The government of the buyer country is the driving force behind the project and is putting up $25 million of equity, as well as guarantees of payment.

The sugar complex is a commercial project being built because the Ivory Coast government has decided that its economy needs and can benefit from it. I want to point out to the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville that is was largely the decision of the Ivory Coast to begin this project. The EDC supports commercially viable transactions which involve exports beneficial to Canada. By definition, such a transaction involves a willing buyer and a willing seller. In other words, it must be mutually beneficial. Furthermore, it must be a financially sound proposition. As a commercial financial institution devoted to building strong, long term trading relationships for Canada, EDC wants to be involved with buyers that will prosper. The satisfied buyer engaged in a sound transaction will be able to meet financial obligations and will also become a valuable repeat customer for Canadian goods and services.

The Ivory Coast government was certainly a willing and enthusiastic buyer. It was represented at the signing of the EDC loan agreement by the minister of finance of the country, its minister of agriculture, two ambassadors, and a number of its very senior officials. Obviously the government sees long term benefits accruing to the country from the project, otherwise it would not have embarked on such a large undertaking in the first place.

● (1732)

The benefits to Canada are very considerable. There is nothing wrong with that. Foreign trade is our economic lifeblood, so to speak. We rely very heavily on export trade. Exports represent over 22 per cent of our gross national product. Canada is seventh in the world of exports as a percentage of gross national product and even more strikingly is second in the world in the value of exports per capita.

The project in the Ivory Coast has been profitable for Redpath Sugar and has been good business for the Export Development Corporation. The foreign investment guarantee was for $12.5 million with respect to a 12-year management contract and for technical services. This provided a substantial premium to the Export Development Corporation. But let me emphasize that the Export Development Corporation proceeded to provide its support when it was satisfied that the government of the Ivory Coast wanted the project. It was at their invitation that the project be conducted. We assume that this project was in the interest of the Ivory Coast, that it made good economic sense for them and would have a beneficial impact on the standard of living in that country.

Let me give some of the specifics about Export Development Corporation's financing with respect to the Redpath Sugar project in the Ivory Coast. On August 11, 1976, the Export Development Corporation announced that it would lead an international syndicate of lending institutions, including the Royal Bank of Canada and Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce, to finance a $172 million agro-industrial raw cane sugar complex for the Republic of the Ivory Coast. Export Development Corporation is to lend up to $88.3 million for the project.

The Export Development Corporation financing involves participation by Canadian banks totalling $21.6 million which will be co-managed by the Royal Bank of Canada and Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce. In addition, Antony Gibbs and Sons Limited is participating in the amount of up to $16.7 million.

A $45 million Eurocurrency loan will be provided by a consortium of banks to assist in the local cost financing, start-up working capital and contingencies. The loan will be co-managed by Citicorp International Bank Limited, New York, the Royal Bank of Canada, Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce and Brandts Limited, London.

A project of Redpath Sugars Limited, Montreal, principal subsidiary of Redpath Industries Limited, Toronto, the 14,800 acre complex in the west African French speaking nation, will provide 60,000 tons of raw sugar for export annually. The deal was the first of its kind for Canada. It was largely due to the assembly, by Redpath, of a bilingual engineering team based in Montreal that the project was a Canadian one and not American or British.

Value of Canadian goods and services to be financed under the Export Development Corporation agreement will exceed $74 million. Export Development will also provide preshipment insurance for Canadian goods and services, as well as guaranteeing the Redpath investment in the form of a long-term management and technical assistance contract. This was the first time all three operating divisions of the corporation have been jointly involved in concluding a project of such magnitude.

Redpath's contract includes responsibility for construction and management of all phases of operation from land preparation to product shipment. This involves development of a sugar plantation, an irrigation system, a molasses terminal, a sugar factory and all necessary infrastructure including a rail spur and marine terminal. The sugar factory, molasses terminal and irrigation system will be handled on a turnkey basis.

A substantial part of capital goods and services will be procured from exporting suppliers and sub-suppliers from accross Canada. The realization of this object has put Canada in a most favourable position for further export sales related to sugar production.

Redpath Industries Limited is a diversified company involved in sugar refining, construction materials manufacturing and engineering, and agricultural consulting services. It employs more than 1,700 people in Canada and abroad.

That is why, Mr. Speaker, I describe the project as somewhat of a triumph. I suggest that for the proper functioning of these facilities provided by Export Development Corporation there must be an element of trust between the Export Development Corporation and its client, exporters and investors, and a similar degree of trust between Export Development Corporation and its correspondents, the banks and similar institutions at home and abroad.

The corporation is on the inside, so to speak, of business deals large and small. In each one the exporter has to trust Export Development Corporation to safeguard information involving particulars of the exporter's business affairs. That trust would be totally destroyed if the confidentiality were broken. These confidences create an obligation. More than a mere government agency fondness for secrecy is involved. To produce papers of a commercially confidential nature would be to require a breach of that trust.

The project in question, an integrated sugar complex, is wholly owned by the government of the Ivory Coast, a government which has committed itself to expanding and diversifying its agricultural base. In an effort to do just this, it created Sodésucre, a government owned corporation to assume responsibility for the production of Ivorian sugar. The country has traditionally imported sugar, and hopes to develop its own national resources to supply the domestic market and provide the country with foreign exchange earnings from export sales.

Sodésucre called for tenders in the international market for the development of the sugar complex, and in response to this call Redpath Sugars submitted a successful bid. The bid was won in the face of stiff international competition from firms which were supported by their national equivalents to Export Development Corporation. The successful bid of the Canadian firm has resulted in the placing of substantial equipment orders in Canada and has created jobs for Canadians by these suppliers and their sub-suppliers.

The sugar complex is a commercial project being built because the Ivory Coast government has decided that its economy needs and can benefit from it. The Export Development Corporation supports commercially viable transactions which involve exports beneficial to Canada. By definition, such a transaction involves a willing buyer and a willing seller. In other words, it must be mutually beneficial. Furthermore, it must be a financially sound proposition. As a commercial financial institution devoted to building strong long term trading relationships for Canada, Export Development Corporation wants to be involved with buyers that will prosper.

This project represents the first chance that a Canadian company has had to export a sugar cane complex. It was also the largest project of any kind realized by Canada in West Africa. All of this has been made possible by a unique and ingenious blend of the three facilities available through Canada's EDC. It has not been mentioned that Canada is perhaps the only country in which all three such facilities are available under one roof, available through the same government agency. The EDC is an agency, incidentally, that costs the taxpayers nothing except the share capital paid into it for the shares the government holds, and in 1977 EDC made a profit of $18.7 million or 11 per cent on the equity.

● (1742)

It has been mentioned that among the international syndicates which EDC is leading are Canadian banks; the Royal Bank of Canada and the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce are lending U.S. $16.6 million. It was pointed out earlier that banks are not in the business of making loans repayable over a term as long as ten years. The EDC has so arranged the financing that the banks' share will be on terms acceptable to the bank's normal practices. They will be repaid out of the first five repayment instalments. Thus we can say the banks' funds will be in for a portion of the construction period and a portion of the repayment period, probably not more than five years, so that the funds can be made available without going beyond the normal five or so years maximum for bank funds.

EDC disburses its loan funds and the banks also disburse their loan funds as payments become due to the exporter under the terms of the sale. For goods and services sold by Canadians the disbursements are made to the Canadian exporter or suppliers as delivery is made or performance is carried out. A small percentage may be applied to local costs of the project, under EDC's practice. The banks' funds are not normally tied to Canadian exports. Thus EDC disburses its loan funds to the Canadian supplier. The money stays here in Canada.

What happens if there is a disaster, or a breach by the borrower of a predisbursement condition? In such a case the EDC can protect the exporter by insurance, credits insurance, commonly called pre-shipment cover, which will cover those risks until the time payment is received. Thus the second of the EDC facilities has been blended into this transaction.

Sugar manufacture has gone a long way from the days of the windmill and open fired vats. Will the borrowers be able to manage a modern plant with all the technological refinements, if I may use the term, of a sugar operation? Redpath will not stay in the Ivory Coast indefinitely, and after it leaves trained personnel will be essential. Provisions have been made to cover that eventuality. Redpath and the buyer have arranged a management contract and a training contract which includes training in Canada in the French language of some 50 Ivorians. So that need has been taken care of.

The management contract brings into play the foreign investment guarantee facility of the EDC. It is an "investment in a foreign country" within the Export Development Act, the statute which has created the machinery for these guarantees. Thus if Redpath were unable to repatriate its earnings from the contract or if the government of the Ivory Coast were to repudiate the contract, the resulting loss would be covered by the foreign investment insurance policy. Thus the third of EDC's three facilities was employed in this sale.

I think it would be gratifying to the House to observe how the wise and beneficial measures parliament has provided are employed to bolster our foreign trade and encourage its development, not by subsidy, but by reasonable, sane and sensible operations carried out in a businesslike way.

Let me emphasize that the exporter, Redpath Sugars Limited of Montreal, employs about 1,700 people in Canada. It is Canada's largest producer of refined sugar. It operates two sugar cane refineries in Canada. This company is the principal subsidiary of Redpath Industries Limited of Toronto, which in turn is slightly more than 50 per cent owned by Tate & Lyle Investments Limited of London, England. The Montreal company certainly has the expertise to carry out successfully the interesting Ivory Coast project of which we have been speaking.

Still more importantly, perhaps, is the favourable position in which Canada will be for further export sales related to sugar production when the Ivory Coast operation comes into production. There is a real Canadian identity in this sale. Mr. Speaker, those further sales and the sale we have been speaking of mean jobs for Canadians. Reference has been made at some length to the Export Development Corporation, and in one word that is what it stands for—jobs. As we have said, to expose all the papers connected with this important transaction is adverse to the effective functioning of the EDC. In the simplest terms that means adverse to Canadian export sales and against the interests of all of us so far as employment in Canada is concerned.

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Hastings): Mr. Speaker, when this private member's motion was introduced I had, frankly, no reason to get involved in the discussion; but as I sat here this afternoon I found myself irritated by exactly the same kind of nonsense we have heard for years—what is good for the EDC is good for the country. Or, in other words, what is good for General Bullmoose is good for the country.

The hon. member for Niagara Falls (Mr. Young) tells us EDC costs the country nothing. That may be so. But how is it, then, that in the last few minutes in another room closure was almost forced on a committee because the government wanted to raise the appropriation for EDC from $8 billion to $20 billion? If EDC costs us nothing, why should the government be using all its weight to put another $12 billion into the institution? I have great difficulty imagining $18,000 let alone $18 million or $18 million. Yet all of sudden this corporation which costs us nothing is to get $12 billion more.

I rise this afternoon to say thank you to the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) who has the courage of his convictions, though his colleagues and the government obviously oppose him, in asking for the production of papers to show what happens when the EDC sponsors a Canadian firm operating in a foreign country. One thing the hon. member for Niagara Falls did was to lay before us a lot of figures, millions of dollars for this, hundreds of thousands of dollars for that. Obviously, somebody knows the answers to all these questions. If the hon. member can submit this information so readily, why should it be so difficult to get a look at some of these papers?

Questions were asked in the House this afternoon. For instance, the ministers were asked to explain why the government, through EDC, was investing in countries like Iran and Saudi Arabia, to the tune of $500 million or $1 billion. My understanding of the current world situation is that those countries have enough money of their own. But the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Jamieson) stood up and accused us of threatening to take away jobs from Canadian farmers and workers if we as much as raised a whisper against the EDC. I do not buy that balderdash, frankly. I believe that given the right climate Canadian firms would export a great deal more than they are now. But I do not believe this aura of secrecy is needed. Nor do we need the heavy hand of government, the inference that when we ask questions on this subject we are threatening Canadian unity or employment possibilities or doing all kinds of nasty things.

• (1752)

What does the government have to hide? What is there in a contract that is so very secret? If a major Canadian company dealt with a contract overseas, at its annual shareholders' meeting it would certainly be forced to reveal some of the details of that contract. Private enterprise has to do it. Why is it so difficult for the government to bring some of these papers before us? What is there in this government that it is so bound up in secrecy?

I might just digress momentarily. I intend to bring this up before this session is closed. All of us know that the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) caused quite a flurry in the House just recently when there was a question regarding someone looking at his income tax files. That has been exaggerated to the most ridiculous extent.

I tried the other day, in order to help an aged veteran, to get the date of his discharge from the Canadian forces. I was told that that was a secret and that I had to get a letter from that veteran authorizing me to ask the question. That is utter nonsense. All of us know that one of the things we do most frequently is intercede on behalf of our constituents in matters arising out of conflicts with the Unemployment Insurance Commission. Now we are being told that in the future when we ask questions of the Unemployment Insurance Commission we will have to have letters from our constituents authorizing us to ask those questions. This is happening now with regard to income tax. What is there about this government that it wants to hide everything? I heard as a joke some time ago that the government wanted to keep secret the number of cans of dog food on the DEW line. I sincerely believe that the government would hide almost anything.

I want to hear this government tell us why it is going to hide all these documents, but before I sit down I want to say that I admire the hon. member for Vaudreuil for bringing this matter forward and asking very simply that these papers be produced. I must ask again, why is the government trying to hide them?

[Translation]

Mr. Bernard Loiselle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I am very glad to take part in this debate, especially at this time, because of the difficulties we are having in committee, in spite of the agreement in principle we had obtained from the official opposition to support Bill C-36, because of the opposition's eagerness to filibuster and prevent the adoption of this government bill which would provide the Export Development Corporation with a margin of operation which is absolutely essential.

Every time the Corporation wants to increase its authorized capital stock in order to help our Canadian firms export, sell goods and thereby create jobs, it must indeed come before Parliament.

It is clear that the Opposition is asking why the EDC needs so much leeway to manoeuvre. No later than this afternoon in committee I had to explain once again to the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) that if the Corporation—

[English]

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I have been listening to the debate and I am beginning to wonder how committee hearings regarding the EDC might relate to a motion which is very simple, namely, that the government produce certain documents. What happened in the committee today is of interest, of course, but the matter which is before the House is a motion asking the government to produce certain documents. I hope the parliamentary secretary will do his best to answer the question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I think that the remarks of the hon. parliamentary secretary were perhaps brought on by the remarks of the previous speaker, the hon. member for Hastings (Mr. Ellis), which referred to comittee deliberations, particularly those of this afternoon. However, I will ask the parliamentary secretary to confine his remarks to the motion before the House.

[Translation]

Mr. Loiselle (Chambly): Mr. Speaker, if my hon. friend on the other side would like to be as patient as we have to be with them everyday and let me continue, he will see that I would quickly come to the point.

With your permission, Mr. Speaker, I should like to mention what happened in committee this afternoon, where members of his party asked us a series of questions. In the case of Redpath Sugar Ltd., we are asked to submit figures, to open books. I ask members of the opposition to take a greater part in the work of the committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, where the chairman of the Export Development Corporation will answer their questions as long as confidentiality, contrary to what the previous speaker said, is respected. You can indeed, if you are a shareholder of a bank or a company, ask questions at the annual meeting but without going into all sorts of details.

There is secrecy, that principle of confidentiality which might affect the competitive position of the company by divulging some technical aspects, some aspects of their know-how. When you attend meetings of shareholders of private companies, you will note that you cannot always get all details on a bank loan for instance. There is a very simple reason for that; you may borrow $100,000 at 8 per cent but all the other terms of the contract may affect the terms and the cost of borrowing.

However, Mr. Speaker, Redpath Sugar Ltd. is another case where the Export Development Corporation was involved to create employment in Canada. If I may refer to the New Democratic Party members, they used to give examples where the EDC involvement in such transactions had jeopardized employment in Canada. We must remind the Canadian public that if the EDC did not intervene in some cases, as we heard before the standing committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs some other country which has the same financing mechanism will help its own companies compete and get contracts to supply equipment. Consequently not only would our companies not be in a better position and face stiffer competition, but we would lose employment that such initiatives create in Canada. Mr. Speaker, despite all the respect I have for my friend the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert), it seems to me a proposal, indeed a motion which certainly shows a concern—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. The hour provided for the consideration of private members' business having expired, I do now leave the chair until 8 p.m.

At 6 p.m. the House took recess.

● (2002)

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[Translation]

INCOME TAX ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Chrétien that Bill C-56, to amend the statute law relating to income tax and to authorize payments related to provincial sales tax reductions, be read for the second time and referred to the committee of the whole, and of the amendment (Mr. Broadbent) (p. 5548).

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, as I was saying before the five o'clock recess, in my capacity as representative of a province which has its own problems, I am quite sorry to see that few members from that province have disagreed with the Minister of Finance who rejected the Quebec proposal which, I repeat, would not jeopardize the incentives or objectives advocated by the Minister of Finance, namely a stimulus to the economy and to the industry and more purchasing power. And I think that my friends from the province of Quebec know perfectly well that the Quebec proposal is the right response to those two basic requirements and will provide an incentive to crucial sectors of the Quebec industry, and is supported, as I said earlier, by Ontario and three other provinces. The sales tax reduction will amount not to 3 per cent but to 8 per cent and I challenge my friends opposite to pretend that this is not a solution or proposal acceptable for the province of Quebec and honourable for the rest of Canada.

When I look back, Mr. Speaker, on what took place over the last few weeks, and am confronted with this arrogance, this stubbornness, I will not hesitate in accusing the federal government of dishonesty. And what about its prejudiced attitude towards the Quebec move to abolish the sales tax in the soft sectors of its industries? I shall refer you to a recent study in support of the Quebec proposal, by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce which shows that in the four sectors where the sales tax was cut out altogether, namely clothing, textile, shoes and furniture, about 122,000 workers out of 270,000 are working in Canada outside the province of Quebec, which clearly proves that the Minister of Finance's allegation that this measure is aiming at the balkanization of the Quebec economy is groundless and deceitful. In fact, it is only in the clothing industry that Quebec has more workers, that is one third of a total number of 121,000 in Canada. I say that by voluntarily suppressing those figures and having us believe that the Quebec proposal is prejudicial to the national interests, the government is misleading the people and is resorting to some kind of political deception which is unworthy of a government with the least sense of honour, Mr. Speaker. A good number of manufacturers in the industries involved outside Quebec have recognized that the other provinces would profit by the withdrawal of the sales tax and not only Quebec, as the government and the Minister of Finance would have us believe.

● (2012)

Once again, Ottawa has infringed upon a field coming under provincial jurisdiction, and because Quebec stands up for its economic priorities and to protect the interests of its citizens, it is taxed with being separatist and with trying to balkanize the Canadian economy. This is just not so, Mr. Speaker. The Prime Minister and his assistants know it quite well, even though they are suffering from chronic federalitis to the extent that they are unable to admit that Quebec can be right without jeopardizing Canadian unity.

The economists, industrialists and political commentators of Canada, even Anglophone, are virtually unanimous in agreeing that the Quebec counter-proposal is likely to stimulate employment, an objective pursued by the Minister of Finance, while at the same time increasing by 8 per cent the purchasing power of Quebec residents. That can only help the national economy and constitute an element of economic revival. Though the complete abolition of the sales tax as advocated by Quebec seems to have favourable effects on the economy throughout the land, the gentlemen heading this government maintain that it is a subversive manoeuvre. According to their reasoning, the formula cannot be beneficial since it supposes a special arrangement with a provincial government. Still, during the negotiations prior to the minister's budget, he himself managed to accommodate the special requests of British Columbia, which delights us, of Saskatchewan, Ontario and the Maritimes. But when it comes to Quebec, that is asking too much, and as they see it it threatens to split the country asunder.

I say most emphatically that if our party were in power now, we would not hesitate in handing over to Quebec, on their own conditions, that is for the pursuit of two objectives, the full amount of $226 million, to which they are entitled under the formula initially proposed by the minister himself. There would be no hesitation either in giving the same advantages, of course, and the same consideration to the provinces which would voice such a wish.

At this point in my comments, Mr. Speaker, I say that the government's present attitude is close to being ridiculous, and that it amounts to mere stubbornness in these circumstances. I conclude by saying that I charge this government with deliberately seeking a pretext to wage war on the government of Quebec on the eve of an election. This will perhaps enable them not to lose face in front of certain provinces but as far as I am concerned, I call this hypocrisy, falsehood and electoral fraud.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is important that Canadians in general and Quebeckers in particular, be made aware of the position taken on this matter by the hon. members who represent them. All Quebeckers, I was reading this morning in the papers, it is unbelievable, when the Minister of Finance tells me that he saw, in the Journal de Montréal, the results of a survey showing that 87 per cent of Montrealers favor his proposal. Is it possible, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister of Finance should rely on a survey conducted by a newspaper, the Journal de Montréal, which is a serious paper, but this survey may have been rigged by a group of individuals who would report that 87 per cent are supporting Mr. Chrétien's proposal. I see how naive he is when he refers to this seriously, just as naive as when he submitted his proposal to a province that had not yet presented its budget.

Quebeckers must know that the Finance Minister's proposal is far from contributing to the just society promised by this champion of national unity, this champion of inflation and unemployment, this czar of the provinces who has promised to give us heaven during the last ten years. Mr. Chrétien's proposal amounts to gross injustice. That is unfortunate, but I think the leader of the Liberal party was speaking about it yesterday in Quebec City when he said that he found this solution inconsistent with the true spirit of federalism. That was Mr. Ryan speaking, and Mr. Ryan, Mr. Speaker, is no separatist as far as I know. This solution is administratively costly, cumbersome and socially unfair. It is not Mr. Parizeau who said that but the leader of the Quebec Liberal party.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) says that he will compensate for the Quebec refusal by distributing $85 cheques in certain cases, $22, $42 cheques or nothing in other cases, but nearly one million workers in Quebec will not receive this cheque from the federal government. For instance, a young couple who both work and who both paid their $85 in taxes will receive $85 each or $170. I am very happy for this young couple, Mr. Speaker, but in a family with six children, where the mother cannot have an outside job, the father who must work hard every day will only get $85. No one can tell me that this is the just society promised by the Prime Minister who has certainly not kept his promises. Quebeckers are starting to realize that the dream of 1968, the just society, paradise in Canada, has become a deep disillusion in the last few months, since the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) made his decision recently about the possibility of going to the country. Dr. Gallup advised him not to call an election for a while yet, but for a number of Quebeckers, I believe that this dream will determine the future position of the party in power. No one in Quebec remains untouched by this basic issue. We are defending a matter of principle. We want a viable federalism where the provinces will participate truly in major national decisions. It is only in this way that there can be co-operation in Canada, and not in the way that the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance are now behaving. This is stubbornness, Mr. Speaker. This reflects hate against a government which was legally elected in Quebec. Why? Because of too many deceptions, too many disagreements, too much confrontation and arrogance on the part of the federal authorities.

I remember very well that I endorsed requests from Quebec members, from the Quebec government at the time of Mr. Johnson. I was accused of supporting the Union Nationale. I supported the submissions of Mr. L'Allier, Mr. Hardy, Mr. Saint-Pierre, when the government in Ottawa turned down recommendations which were perfectly justified in view of the rather special situation of Quebec. At that time, of course, I was not accused of being a Liberal, but the Liberals are now ignoring their colleagues in Quebec. Today we are endorsing the proposal unanimously supported by the four Quebec provincial parties, by the chamber of commerce, by the FLQ, and by I do not know how many organizations which are blaming the Minister of Finance for his present position. We are accused of being bedpartners with separatists. The Minister of Finance should have the courage to say that Mr. Ryan is a separatist, that Mr. Biron is a separatist, that Ontario industrialists manufacturing textiles, clothing and footwear are separatists. That is hogwash, Mr. Speaker, and the Minister of Finance knows it. He is disavowed at this very moment by the whole province of Quebec and he has surely lost much credibility across the country. It is a clear fact that the Minister of Finance has made a colossal mistake.

He has not the courage to recognize his error and correct it, and he is now proving, Mr. Speaker, that federalism as suggested and described by Mr. Lévesque cannot work. He is proving it with the complicity of members opposite from Quebec who refuse to understand that the situation is serious. They are proving that Mr. Lévesque is right when he suggests that federalism cannot work by rejecting a proposal with which most Quebeckers agree, Mr. Speaker.

● (2022)

That is exactly the situation and we are being accused of promoting separatism, but they are the ones who give first class reasons and grounds to Quebeckers to keep on believing that it is impossible to live under such a regime whereas we are fighting for the respect of provincial jurisdictions and we assure to all provinces that they will have their say whenever a proposal will be made on such a vital issue as the sales tax because it does come under provincial jurisdiction.

I have here yesterday's issue of La Presse and at one place, I read: How disgusting! The Minister of Finance does not mention it! Contemptible mean action! Ottawa must retract. Deeply sickening! A whole series of headlines, Mr. Speaker, which have been appearing on newspapers for the last few weeks. Our friends opposite do not talk of that. The hon. member for Laval (Mr. Roy) was convinced yesterday that we had not yet understood. He would rather applaud to statements made by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner) who as recently as 18 months ago, called the members of this cabinet a bunch of nonentities of the worst kind.

To add insult to injury the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, supported by the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Roy), thought this was funny. A lot of Quebeckers will find that funny indeed! The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce indicated that that gentlemanly Minister of Finance had shown competence and initiative, after calling him by less flattering names 18 months ago.

No, Mr. Speaker, I believe that Quebeckers and Canadians are not fooled. In the few remaining moments at my disposal, I want to state, in the name of my party, that public opinion is being manipulated. We are not told the truth. Of course I was granted a short leave of absence last week, perhaps because I was telling the truth, but in the current sales tax strife between Canada and Quebec, the Progressive Conservative party is moved neither by electioneering motives nor by the least bit of sympathy for separatist aspirations. What moves us to support nonetheless the Quebec government's position is our historic interpretation of the nature of Canadian federalism, and also our traditional respect for provincial jurisdictions. There is also a factual analysis of the economic impact of the budget proposals as submitted by the Minister of Finance, as well as a sense of fairness to Quebec workers in Quebec's four industries that are the most severely hit.

That quarrel once more underlines the difference in outlook between the government and our party on the constitutional tax problems. For 30 years at least, through successive leaders three of which were former provincial premiers, the Progressive Conservative party consistently exposed the Liberal party of Canada's traditional tendency to view the provinces simply as administrative agencies, whose role most of the time is to implement the central government's unilateral decisions in many areas of provincial jurisdiction.

To conclude, because I nearing the end of my time, I call once more on Quebec members—if they had some guts left they could not remain seated—and on all members of all sides to work for a solution that is fair, both for Canada and the province I represent here.

Mr. Claude-André Lachance (Lafontaine-Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) evidently enjoys the limelight. As a matter of fact, his little performance of last week has demonstrated to all Canadians that of all the words which could be used to describe this party, arrogance is the one that fits best. In this respect, Mr. Speaker, I suggest that Canadians realize now that it is one thing for the Progressive Conservative Party to make allegations and that it is quite another for them to make them stick. Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Joliette has tried, in a ground-skimming flight of oratory, to prove the unprovable, namely that the Minister of Finance has been dishonest. It is he who is dishonest, Mr. Speaker, because if someone in this House has tried to be an innovator in this whole matter it is the Minister of Finance. If there is someone who has made a real effort to show openness regarding the budget, the consultations with the provinces so that they may take part in the process, it is the Minister of Finance. If there is someone who got himself into hot water in doing so, it is the Minister of Finance.

He can only be blamed for one thing: to have got himself in trouble because of the action of someone in Quebec who has since then taken an uncompromising attitude and who is waiting, sitting on his behind for things to happen and for his own trivial problems to be settled, because Mr. Speaker, we do indeed have a problem. I will come back to that later. But others have problems too and I am convinced that the Canadian people will not be fooled by the petty game played by Mr. Parizeau in Quebec.

In this respect, Mr. Speaker, I think it is important to go over the events which led to the presentation of the bill now under consideration. Besides, I would like to say it is too bad about the sales tax issue, especially because of the difficult relations between Quebec and the federal government which is endeavouring to find a solution. It is too bad that this sales tax issue is so embarrassing that we cannot see the excellent provisions of Bill C-56, which result from the budget presented by the Minister of Finance to improve the economy, to encourage research and development, and to promote small business, in other words, to give it the push it will need during the coming months in order to attain its cruising speed.

But we have a problem, the sales tax issue. Then we must try to understand what has happened. I believe that it is important. First, what do we find in that proposal? There are objectives, ideals, principles, terms and conditions. First, the objectives. Why did the Minister of Finance take all that trouble: consultations, meetings with provincial ministers of Finance, talks with provincial premiers? Why did he go to all that trouble to propose a measure which finally should be beneficial to all Canadians since it is a tax reduction? Why so much trouble, Mr. Speaker? The reason is, according to all the economists, all the serious economists, not those from the opposition, according to all the economists, reducing the sales tax was an appropriate way of improving the Canadian economy until the fall of 1978 when by that time we hope it will be recovering.

They criticize this measure saying it is a mere six month hoist, whereas it is a basic measure designed to accelerate the recovery of the economy, a measure which should directly encourage Canadians to spend more money, to buy more products. If we had reduced the federal tax as we did in the past, once again retailers or manufacturers might have taken advantage of it and the consumers would have gained nothing by it. But by using the sales tax, Mr. Speaker, consumers were being encouraged directly to benefit from the advantage offered to them. Naturally, sales tax is a field now mainly taken over by the provinces but once again let us not be deluded, it is a shared jurisdiction: the provinces are not the only ones that can deal in indirect levying of taxes like that. The federal government also has powers in that field which it is not now using; so, this is not strictly a sphere of provincial jurisdiction; it is shared. In short, since the provinces are now the ones benefitting from the sales tax, then, of course, there had to be negotiations with them.

• (2032)

And let us remember, Mr. Speaker, that the one who started the whole thing was not the Minister of Finance. It was Darcy McKeough, the Ontario Conservative finance minister, who thought and who continues to think, I believe, although he has been contradicting himself a little recently, that this measure could be extremely beneficial to Canadian industry. Negotiations then lasted for three weeks, during which the provinces that wanted some other arrangements presented their views to the Minister of Finance, who upon consideration, accepted some and rejected others. What about Quebec? We do not know. Quebec is in limbo. Quebec is waiting it out. Quebec is waiting for heaven knows what, Mr. Speaker, because when negotiations are under way, each of the concerned parties must try to present its own view of the matter. Mr. Speaker, I have not yet heard the Quebec finance minister tell what he suggested to the Minister of Finance when he should have. We don't even have it from him, Mr. Speaker. So what was he doing? The question remains unanswered, Mr. Speaker because there is no answer to it. Yet, the negotiations are going on—

Mr. La Salle: He made his proposal known. It is unfair to say that.

Mr. Lachance: Mr. Speaker, I would ask the hon. member for Joliette to listen to me. I listened to him for 40 minutes when he had the floor, I did not interrupt him once, so he should hear me out, Mr. Speaker!

Mr. La Salle: It is unfair to say that.

An hon. Member: You will not make the front page like last week!

An hon. Member: Bedfellows with the separatists!

Mr. La Salle: Say in the House what you say outside the House!

An hon. Member: Be quiet!

Mr. La Salle: You are playing another tune!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order. I would like hon. members to show the same courtesy to this speaker as they did to the previous one. The hon. member for Lafontaine-Rosemont.

Mr. Lachance: Mr. Speaker, as usual, the hon. member for Joliette is clowning, but his voters will decide.

Mr. La Salle: I will not put up with this! You people are dishonest, but I tell the truth.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): I must ask that we extend to all hon. members the same courtesy as was extended to the hon. member for Joliette. The hon. member for Lafontaine-Rosemont.

[Translation]

Mr. Lachance: Mr. Speaker, this is the House of Commons; I realize that some have a Latin temper, but once again I would ask the hon. member for Joliette to be kind enough to listen to me. If he is not satisfied, he could ask questions. Mr. Speaker, there has been consultation with the ten provinces. The Minister of Finance has received the agreement of nine of them, the other one has given no answer. It is possible, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister of Finance—oh! it is easy to play politics backwards; the hon. member for Joliette is an expert in this field—it is possible that the Minister of Finance has been imprudent. But what is his mistake? He believed that the others too would play the game of federalism. That is his mistake, Mr. Speaker, to have believed in the rules of the federalist game. Having said that, the province of Quebec reacted a few days later with its budget and made public its own sales tax reduction scheme on a selective basis applied to four sectors seen as priorities. Nobody says, Mr. Speaker, that these sectors have no priority. Nobody says, Mr. Speaker, that they should not have reduced the sales tax by 8 per cent. Nobody says, Mr. Speaker, that they were wrong to put the emphasis on the sectors they felt they had to encourage. Nobody ever said that, Mr. Speaker. To my knowledge, nobody ever said that.

Let us make a distinction! We are living in a federation. Since we are living in a federation, there are national interests, provincial interests, and municipal interests, and you also find a federal government, a provincial government and a municipal government. The federal government, Mr. Speaker, proposed a measure designed to spur the economy throughout Canada. Nine provinces accepted, one did not answer. One province, that same one which did not answer, came up a few days later with its own formula. And then it tried to impose upon us its own conclusions because that is what it wanted to do. It wanted to play the game its own way, all by itself. It did not want to play the federal game. It wanted to play the game of the province of Quebec. What are the facts, Mr. Speaker, what are they? In the Maritimes, where the provinces do not have a very strong manufacturing structure, the Minister of Finance suggested that we would pay their sales tax, I mean the reduction, that we would compensate for the loss of revenue due to the sales tax reduction, these 3 per cent. In other provinces, different arrangements were submitted. Quebec, Ontario, Saskatchewan, Manitoba would have to pay 1 per cent, the federal government taking over the other 2 per cent.

By doing away with its 8 per cent sales tax, Quebec figured that this was perhaps not a bad idea at all, Mr. Speaker, and that it just had to squeeze the lemon and see to it that it would not cost them a cent. The problem is again that they will always try their little Parizeau deal but they stand all alone, while the federal Minister of Finance has ten provinces behind him. He is in charge of a federation, you see, Mr. Speaker. When he makes a proposal, Mr. Speaker, he is dealing with ten finance ministers and if the Ministers of Finance were all like Mr. Parizeau, I can tell you that life would be a lot harder in this country because that man wants to play the game his way all by himself. Incidentally, what are the counter-proposals made by Mr. Parizeau? What are they, I ask you? None has come up since the beginning of this debate. All he said was actually "take it or leave it". So much for negotiations, Mr. Speaker! Take it or leave it! You assume entirely the loss of revenue from the sales tax in the four priority sectors on an 8 per cent basis. This is our final position.

The Minister of Finance has played the game from a federal point of view. He made a proposal. He got no answer. Let us admit that he made a mistake. A few days later, maybe one week later, he forwarded a proposal to the Minister of Finance Parizeau. He said: Listen, you have four priority sectors. We might have discussed it before but let us suppose we have been through all that. We shall let you allocate the 1 per cent you should have normally spent for that cut on the four priority sectors you have identified and we are going to pay 2 per cent on everything else. It was perfectly logical, but then there was a problem. The problem was that Mr. Parizeau had to finance a part of his proposal. He does not want to finance it, he wants the whole pie, he wants to press the lemon dry. He wants to get the $220 million without having to pay out a single penny.

Mr. Speaker, that proposal from the Minister of Finance was something different from his original stand. You cannot call this inflexibility, Mr. Speaker. I think that even the hon. member for Joliette must admit that there has been a compromise between the original proposal and the 2 per cent "across the board" proposal. Mr. Speaker, I keep hearing the hon. member for Joliette from behind the curtains, and having made his speech earlier, he should let me speak now. Mr. Parizeau rejected his proposal. After that, a few Quebeckers realizing that the situation was heading towards a dead end, asked the federal Prime Minister whether he was willing to promise that those funds would finally be paid to the province of Quebec. Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister promised that the funds owed to the province of Quebec would be handed over to the province of Quebec.

● (2042)

What was the next step? The next step was getting bogged down, unfortunately. Now I come to the definition I gave earlier, Mr. Speaker. What was behind that budget proposal? Objectives. What are those objectives? An economic recovery to join with the upturn in the economy which should have some results next fall. The objectives were to make the link. What was the ideal? Consultation. For the first time, provincial ministers of finance were consulted about a federal budget, in order to help precisely the economy to attain its cruising speed. What was the principle? A very simple principle in a federation. It is for a central government to see to it as much as possible that resources are distributed in all parts of the federation, even if some adjustments have to be made through negotiations, adjustments which were made in the case of five provinces. What were the terms and conditions, Mr. Speaker? That is where things went wrong.

Since Mr. Parizeau refuses the offers made by the Minister of Finance, the minister must find ways to return to the Quebec economy and turn over to Quebeckers and eventually to the Quebec government the funds which cannot be distributed for lack of an agreement. Several proposals have been suggested. As a matter of fact, there have been four proposals.

First of all, there is this proposal which Mr. Parizeau would like us to accept because it would solve some of his problems, and I say some, Mr. Speaker, because it would give rise to problems of another kind, about which I shall say nothing just now. So, let us assume that the federal government turns over to the Quebec government a cheque for $226 million to finance the 8 per cent reduction in the four priority sectors. It is a possibility, but a possibility which does not make sense under the present circumstances for a number of reasons. First, it runs counter to the principle of equality which I explained a while ago. Should a province receive a cheque for $226 million—for that matter, the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) stated a while ago: Well, if we are elected, we promise to give them $226 million. And he added: But if other provinces want to do the same thing, they will get the same amount. What kind of a low calibre policy is this that the Canadian population is expected to swallow? They should at least try to meet their objectives, because otherwise it will be a monumental flop. For the moment, it is a flop in Quebec. It is not a flop elsewhere. It is working very well in nine provinces up to this time.

Mr. Speaker, let us talk about the various possibilities. The first one is to give $226 million. It is impossible because, as I said earlier, it goes against a basic principle. It also goes against the most basic rules of negotiation. If you have negotiated something, it is more or less the same as if you have signed a collective agreement with one or two unions, and a third one comes along and says: Listen, we want such or such a thing. The first two unions will not be very happy if you give something to the third that you did not give either to the second or to the first.

If you have agreed on something, you must respect your agreement and do so for everyone. Moreover, this transfer of $226 million is not logical for another reason. I cannot see why the Minister of Finance would give a cheque of $226 million to Quebec when the other provinces will not receive immediately the sums to which they are entitled since they will get this amount in the form of fiscal rebates over a period of six months in 1978. Quebec would therefore have an unfair advantage over the other provinces over a period of six months. This is another possibility, that of fiscal rebates. These rebates can seem very attractive at first glance, but I shall come back to this later on. The third possibility is a tax credit for taxpayers. What is a tax credit? Federal taxpayers simply paid income tax to the federal government. We are making tax room for a certain amount of fiscal points. We are rebating taxpayers the monies involved, so that provincial government may tax in that field. I see nothing bad with that. I cannot understand why there is so much excitement. I do not understand the outcry. There is nothing so horrendous about that, it is simply a matter of provision. There is no principle involved. None, Mr. Speaker, it is merely a matter of provision. I do not say it is the best one, but it is a simple provision. There is no question of principle involved. And what is the principle? It is to rebate $226 million. Once the principle is accepted, we turn to the provision. And what is the available means? It is to rebate an income tax credit for the province to collect. Why is it somewhat more complicated in Quebec? In fact, it is rather more apparent in Quebec. Quebec is the only province with its own revenue department, and I am not judging that in any way. So it collects its own income tax, with its own income tax returns. You have on the one hand the Canadian government collecting its own taxes, and the province doing the same. In other provinces the Canadian government, through Revenue Canada, collects for both levels of government and pays the provinces their share. In other words, to make room for the income tax credit in the nine other provinces, because this in effect was done, the Canadian government vacated a tax field to the tune of $100, allowing the provinces to increase their income taxes by that amount. Nothing shows on the income tax return. The Canadian government gets a cheque and then distributes the money. In Quebec, things are slightly different because they are more apparent. There is an income tax credit.

The fourth possibility that was not used but that is still available was to rebate $226 million pro-rated on the Quebec population. This way everyone would get a cheque, every Quebecker at least would get a cheque for $45. Trying to understand somewhat the confusion perpetuated by opposition members, it is more or less the formula they were putting forward two weeks ago. They have changed their views two or three times since then, but that was the Clark formula, that of allegedly reimbursing the poor.

But that does not make much sense in taxation, and it is administratively extremely complex. Thus there are two possible formulas left: the tax credit and the tax rebate. The Minister of Finance retained the tax credit. I have no objection in principle, and I repeat, Mr. Speaker, I have no objection in principle because there is no principle involved. As a matter of principle, whether they choose a tax rebate or a tax credit makes no difference at all. I repeat it a third time, Mr. Speaker, because I think it is the basic factor, it is the key which will enable us to get out of this dilemma which some newsmen take pleasure in maintaining because it serves their purpose and makes the news, I think, but never mind the newsmen for the moment. The key is that there is no principle involved. What was the principle? It was to remit $226 million to Quebec so that the government of Quebec can take over this tax field and finance its own activities. There is no invasion of the provincial field, but where is the invasion of the provincial field, Mr. Speaker? You know, so many falsehoods have been spread around. Besides, members opposite have had their share in that matter. There have been so many falsehoods, so much lack of understanding in all that matter that there comes a point when one must restate the facts. There are principles, possibilities, ideals and objectives involved. Let us make a distinction. The possibilities are as follows. A tax credit. The Minister of Finance proposes that $85 be refunded to each Quebec taxpayer, and I mean Quebec taxpayer at the federal level. We are then accused of proposing a socially unjust measure. I surely would like to know why. It is quite easy to launch accusations once again but they should be able to substantiate them.

Why is it socially unjust? Why is it that by making tax room, because this is what we are actually doing by issuing a cheque to allow the provinces or the province of Quebec to move into a tax field, we are applying a socially unjust measure? I would like someone to explain that to me because I fail to understand. Would it be more just to give $45, because I am returning the argument, would it be more just to give $45 to all Quebec taxpayers, and then the government of Quebec steps in and taxes the Quebec taxpayers—who are more or less the same as the federal taxpayers who have actually received only $45—to the tune of $85 because they still have to finance the whole debt!

But is it more just this way? This question has not been answered yet, and I would like somebody to answer it once for all. The tax credit is $85 and not $100 as in the case of the other provinces. The reason for this is also quite simple to understand. It is because the Minister of Finance has agreed to give $40 million to the province of Quebec to finance 2 per cent of the sales tax reduction in four priority sectors. I must admit that I have no objection whatsoever to that, even if I doubt that it is in complete accordance with the original proposal, but this is another story. The Quebec government will get $40 million, and I suppose it will manage to get the rest. Anyway, logic—and I do not say that pure logic necessarily goes with pure politics—logic would have required us to take a position and to stick to it, from A to Z. For example, the tax credit should have been $100 for everybody; thus Quebec would have had to get the $226 million it needs. But these are only technicalities since on the question of principle it does not make much difference to the Quebec government to receive either $40 million from the federal government and $186 million from the taxpayers or $226 million from the taxpayers, even though in practice it makes a slight difference.

However, there was another possibility, that is a tax rebate. It has certain advantages and disadvantages. First of all, it has the advantage of avoiding the obvious administrative problems involved in the $85 refund because to do this, you must take the tax tables for 1978, or what is left of them, and make the deduction at source for an x amount, for instance, 10 tax points in the case of Quebec—I believe it would be 10 in this case—and you must tell the province of Quebec: You will increase your own tax tables for the equivalent amount. What happens then? This implies fairly large expenses for businesses and administrative problems in preparing the tables, but those again are problems that can always be solved in cooperation with the Quebec department of revenue.

So, for 1978, what you would do would be simply to give a tax rebate for a certain number of tax points so that Quebec could, and again this is the same principle, tax within its temporary tax points for a period of six or three months—if the period was six months, it would be ten points, if the period was three months, it would be 20 points. I suppose that there would be problems with the tax tables, but here again, I believe it is possible to come to some agreement with the Quebec department of revenue.

This is a possibility, this is the system that Mr. Ryan supports. There is nothing to get excited about. Why should there be? Why the other system, but not this one? In any event, those are possibilities and possibilities can always be discussed. There is something else that I could perhaps urge the Minister of Finance to try, because we cannot be certain that the other side would agree to this suggestion, and this would be to discuss these possibilities with the Quebec authorities. Would this be the Quebec minister of finance, or the premier? The decision is up to him and I have complete confidence in him in this regard.

Mr. Speaker, there is a moral to be drawn of all this. Sometimes, the best intentions give rise to problems in politics. Sometimes, logic and feelings are incompatible for all sorts of reasons beyond anyone's control. Sometimes, the population or the politicians of different levels of government fail to understand each other because they do not speak the same language. Sometimes, it is next to impossible to put forward logical, reasonable, realistic arguments. Yet, that is what I tried to do tonight, Mr. Speaker. And I can assure you it is not easy, because even if the hon. member for Joliette might call us traitors, it is quite easy to call someone names. Mr. Speaker, I have always thought that logic was worth a fight at least once. An attempt had to be made to quietly solve these problems which are not really so complicated, Mr. Speaker, to suppress emotions for 40 minutes and try to prove that the objectives were worthwhile, that the ideal was lofty, and that the whole thing fizzled out because of technicalities, a speck of dust having lodged in the wheel axle. In short, Mr. Speaker, I would be the last one to put the blame on the Minister of Finance, because I say once again that he has done a terrific job and has broken new ground. He was the first to discuss tax matters with the provinces while preparing his budget, and that, Mr. Speaker, nobody will be able to take it away from him.

● (2052)

[English]

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, the bill before us deals with tax measures which the present government, under the direction of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien), bungled in an unprecedented way. I say that because never in our history has a government attempted to hand out money to Canadians only to find themselves under near unanimous attack by all, including their Liberal colleagues in Quebec and elsewhere, and, I may add, here within their own caucus as well.

I will not dwell on this subject of underwriting provincial sales taxes because many of my colleagues before me have dealt with that subject in detail, and more have yet to make numerous worthwhile comments on the matter in the days and perhaps weeks ahead. I would like instead to deal with some of the small business measures that were announced this week by the Minister of State (Small Business) (Mr. Abbott) and others.

In introducing these long-awaited announcements on small business, the government created a three-ring circus equivalent to a tragi-comedy drama. Not only did the government choose to spread the announcements on one subject matter over a three-day period, but they did it in such a manner that they once again demonstrated a shameful disregard for parliament by ignoring parliamentary traditions.

[Mr. Lachance.]

On Tuesday, the "minister irresponsible for small business" bypassed the House of Commons by allowing himself to be led by the nose to the weekly news conference of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) where he read his statement to the most unimpressed media we have ever seen. I was not there, but someone said there were only two questions for the minister. One was, why was he there; and, second, when was he leaving? I am not sure whether that was a fact, but someone suggested that was the case. By announcing what he thought to be new measures outside the House of Commons, he shamefully ignored parliament.

By the reception he received at that press conference, he was moved the next day to table in the House of Commons his second phase of his announcement which dealt with a study on improving the equity financing environment for small business in Canada. A very important topic indeed, and yet the minister again ignored parliamentary procedures, this time by declining to make a statement on motions, thereby removing the rights of all members of parliament to question the minister on this very important subject.

The third part of the three-ring circus came today when the Minister of Finance tabled tax measures related to small business, again without giving the traditional statement. It is obvious that this "charade" was meant to receive maximum exposure for the government and the Minister of State in view of their lack of public activity within the small business sector, particularly when compared to what our party has been proposing in this regard in the last months and years.

I am not one for quoting newspapers, Mr. Speaker. However, Don McGillivray put it correctly when he wrote in his column published in the Montreal Gazette, Wednesday, May 24, and I quote:

> We are not having the election. But we are having the campaign, which has now turned into a campaign for victory in the Gallup poll as a prelude to victory in the eventual election.
>
> So the small business plank from the Liberal campaign platform was produced at a Trudeau press conference. The press gallery reporters, gathered for their weekly joust with the Prime Minister, found themselves confronted as well by Tony Abbott, the apple-cheeked Minister of State for Small Business.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I am left wondering whether the hon. member is addressing his remarks to Bill C-56 which is before the House.

Mr. Jelinek: Obviously, Mr. Speaker, these are some preambles. I will be dealing with the tax measures. I would like to continue my quote by Mr. McGillivray. I will back up a little bit:

> The press gallery reporters, gathered for their weekly joust with the Prime Minister, found themselves confronted as well by Tony Abbott, the apple-cheeked Minister of State for Small Business.
>
> They were not too pleased to have come loaded for bear only to find that the first course was chipmunk. They sat silent while Abbott read out his press releases. And they still sat silent when asked if there were any questions about small business.

He went on to write, and I quote:

> What Abbott had to say was mostly fluff... Canadians have learned in the past to treat election promises with some reserve. But we are now in a new situation in which a government that has called no election is likely to conduct its day-to-day administration as though it were part of a political campaign.

The episode also suggested that Trudeau and his colleagues will bear watching as they try to run a government and a campaign at the same time.

That, Mr. Speaker, basically indicates the fiasco surrounding the various announcements this week, and what makes it more serious is the fact that we in the official opposition, as well as a vast number of small business concerns across Canada, have been pressing the government for years to introduce and implement realistic incentive-oriented programs helpful to the small business community and changes in the tax system that would be beneficial to small business. Instead, we received a hodge-podge of rehashed promises with the exception of one or two provisions which we were advocating in the first place.

Nevertheless, my primary purpose in taking part in today's debate is to respond to the minister's long awaited announcements. Although it is the duty of the opposition to oppose, as its name implies, the record shows that over the past few years we have been doing much more than that. In matters pertaining to small business we have taken a wide lead in introducing policies and recommendations geared to the small business sector. These measures have proved sound, logical and realistic and have generally been welcomed by small business interest groups and concerned businessmen in every region of Canada.

● (2102)

I shall not repeat here the policies we have introduced in the past due to the lack of time, and because the last time we did so was less than two weeks ago, on May 16, when we took the initiative to introduce again measures to assist the small business community in Canada. In fact, it is ironic, Mr. Speaker, that important as the small business community is, employing well over 50 per cent of the labour force, it has only been the Conservative party which has prompted and initiated debates on small business in the House of Commons. I believe it is this insistence which has moved the government into at least the limited action we witnessed this week.

It seems that the federal sales tax amendments by the Minister of National Revenue were the highlight of the minister's announcements last Tuesday. The proposal is to raise from $10,000 to $50,000 the level of sales by manufacturing firms which would make them exempt from paying the 12 per cent federal sales tax on production and sales.

At first glance this seems like an honourable and welcome gesture by the government. However, does any hon. member here know of a full time manufacturing firm which can operate on total yearly sales of $50,000 a year? We are not talking about small retail outlets, we are talking about manufacturers. Even the government's claim that 11,000 businesses will be affected by this change indicates less than one per cent involvement from the 1.1 million plus small firms operating in Canada today. Less than one per cent, Mr. Speaker, by the government's own admission, and in my opinion less than one tenth of one per cent of full time Canadian manufacturers. That, Mr. Speaker, was the highlight of the minister's announcement when he claimed that this measure will greatly enhance the betterment of the over-all small business community in Canada.

I believe consideration should be given instead to removing the federal sales tax from all Canadian owned and operated small business manufacturers. This would not only help the over-all small business community, but make Canadian-produced goods at least competitive with their imported counterparts on which federal sales tax would continue to be collected.

This renewed sense of competition by Canadian manufacturers would naturally stimulate sales and thereby equalize government losses caused by removing the federal sales tax in the first place. This, of course, cannot be done unless a realistic definition is used, one which the government obviously lacks. As I stated last week in this House, the government up to that time had taken four different positions within one year as to definitions, including one of 100 employees or less. Since then a new definition has been added which indicates that a small business is one that has 300 employees or less. In this last definition, as in previous ones, no provisions have been made to exempt subsidiaries of large multinational corporations from the small business definitions.

This latest addition to the government's various definitions only underlines the total chaos within the small business secretariat in its relationship to other federal departments. I repeat that any definition based on the number of employees is only a negative incentive to small business, urging them to curb growth and employment opportunities for the sake of remaining within the small business definition.

We on this side of the House have consistently maintained that the only realistic definition is the one used by the United States small business administration, that being that a small business is one that is owner-managed and not dominant in its field.

The minister also announced that a series of information bulletins will be sent out to small businessmen by his office. Small business does not need more government paperwork. Small business does not need more government directives, regulations or controls. It is obvious that these bulletins would only add to an already heavy paper burden while at the same time promoting the government and the minister himself prior to an election.

One area of importance which the minister did touch on was that of job creation for university graduates. But can you imagine, Mr. Speaker, that the minister is limiting this program to only 800 students, and this on a temporary basis at a cost of $5.4 million to the taxpayer? It is like throwing crumbs at potential voters. What about the thousands of other graduates in Canada who are just as qualified and unable to find job opportunities? At least the minister did not repeat what the Prime Minister told students in Toronto a year or so ago, that if they do not like it here, they should move elsewhere.

I believe that governments, being the largest potential employers in this country by far, should have a set-aside employment program for graduate students along the same lines as a set-aside program for goods and services to small business as proposed by my party. In the area of procurement the minister also had an announcement to make. He acknowledged "that small businesses from time to time have cash flow problems which stem from slow payment of bills by the federal government." He promised that progress to speed up these payments will be made. Hurray for the minister! He promised something which should have been done years ago.

The rest of the minister's announcements on Tuesday were generally, as I said at the outset, rehashed policies or proposals already made. For example, the minister emphasized the importance of the Small Businesses Loans Act. This act, Mr. Speaker, has been in effect since 1961 with amendments made last year only for the sake of keeping up with the times. The minister also dwelt on the enterprise development program, for example, and said that millions of dollars are available to small business. No specific number of millions was mentioned though he did say that the amount allocated to the EDP for this coming year is less than last year. And is it really geared to small business? Just recently, the government awarded $8 million to C.C.M., not only a large company on its own but a subsidiary of a multinational corporation, Multi Seaway Corporation. Hardly helpful for small business, is it?

We move now to the second ring of the circus, the minister's tabling of the white paper on venture capital. Yesterday in the House of Commons, after years of persistence by us and other Canadians concerned with the lack of working capital in the small business community, the minister presented a white paper on venture capital. I will not dwell on it very long because most of the paper is dedicated to such sub-titles as "Government recognition of the need to support small business financing". We told the government that years ago. I am happy they finally recognized its importance. In any event, the three basic proposals within the paper are viable to a certain extent although in some cases overlapping with existing programs. The simplest, of course, is to increase the equity investment activities of the FBDB. My own thought is that since the FBDB, an extension of the IDB, has not been overly successful in the past, the idea is perhaps overly simplified.

The second option is to introduce tax measures to enhance the availability of risk capital to small business. This is excellent verbiage except that the paper does not expound on how the government would go about providing these tax measures.

The third option—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I suggest the hon. member get back to Bill C-56 and not continue to address himself entirely to the subject of small business.

● (2112)

Mr. Jelinek: Mr. Speaker, with all due respect I suggest that Bill C-56 has a great deal to do with small business, tax incentives and with all the other matters connected therewith. If this government—or anyone for that matter—thinks that small business should be disregarded in Bill C-56, it does not have the right perspective of what small business is all about in Canada.

[Mr. Jelinek.]

If I may continue, the other option is to introduce tax measures to enhance the availability of risk capital to small business. The option is to create another intermediary vehicle, this time referred to as a venture enterprise company. The bulk of the white paper deals with the licensing requirements of this program, the limitations, ownership, powers and so forth, and generally one can conclude that the incentive to invest in this program is a back end incentive, which would not be very entertaining to the investor. "Back end" means that the incentive would not be there at the beginning, and Canadians would be discouraged from investing in that capital pool. It is obviously based on the United States program called the Small Business Investment Company, operational since 1958; and even the white paper refers to this program as not having been an unqualified success.

Therefore, it seems strange to me that, on the one hand, the government would be considering following the not too successful program of the United States while ignoring the very successful SBA policies, such as the introduction of a small business act or the general definition of small business plus any number of incentive-oriented programs which have been working effectively in the United States.

Although the white paper is impressive in its appearance—it consists of 36 pages—it is far too unrealistic in its recommendations for improving the equity financing environment for small business in Canada. It is, of course, presented for public discussion and therefore all options should stay open, and I do hope it will receive the attention it deserves. In any event, I believe that the recommendations we have been making in this regard, whether we want to call it venture capital, risk capital or working capital, are far more realistic and relatively simple to implement. We must continue to realize that red tape and bureaucracy must be simplified rather than made more complicated. Therefore, one of the ways to increase working capital for small business is to utilize and expand on existing programs.

One such program which is in place but which is under-utilized is the Small Businesses Loans Act, which assists small businesses with sales of $1.5 million or less with up to $75,000 toward fixed assets. My party's recommendation has been to expand this program to include working capital as well, and I will quote from my remarks during our opposition day on Tuesday, May 16. We have been recommending this for quite some time, and we made it clear again that day. I said the following:

> —in order to help owner-operated enterprises raise working capital, we are recommending that the small business loans program cover working, as well as investment capital where such funds are not available through normal commercial arrangements. We feel that including working capital assistance within the loans act would enhance the use of the act and assist the small firms where assistance is most required.

This is precisely what the white paper is attempting to achieve, but I am afraid that instead of achieving such an objective it will only enhance the already confusing and contradictory atmosphere which the small business ministry is creating.

Our second recommendation in this regard, which we have been advocating for some time, is to provide an incentive tax credit to any Canadian citizen who makes a direct investment in the equity of a Canadian-owned small business. This is a front end incentive because the incentive would come to the Canadian citizen directly as a tax credit when investing in a Canadian-owned and Canadian-operated small business enterprise. This again is a typical example of what the white paper is trying to get at. Instead of copying, borrowing, stealing or begging ideas which are available—I do not care which—many of which are operational in the United States and elsewhere, we create a monster, the white paper which was put forward just yesterday in this House for discussion. I hope there will be a discussion of the paper on a national level, but I hope that the final outcome will be simplified and realistic because we need less government and more incentive programs in this very vital sector of our economy.

The third and final tabling of the government was the amendments to the Income Tax Act and the excise tax, which were tabled yesterday. Naturally, we welcome these amendments, particularly the first one which deals with the rollover of capital gains tax to families in small businesses. In March of 1977 we made precisely that recommendation, and I quote: "Amend those provisions of the Income Tax Act which discourage the transfer of small businesses within families or to employees." This tax proposal does do this, but it does not go far enough. There is a limitation of $200,000 and, therefore, as a capital gain only $100,000 is gained.

Second, it does not include employees. In small businesses there are a great number of employees who are close to the ownership, and it would be worthwhile to be able to transfer those businesses to employees rather than shutting them down because the taxes cannot be paid at the time of death.

The other two matters, the capital losses and the amendments to the Income Tax Act, are really just window dressing to the VEIC program proposed in the white paper. We have no objection to that amendment except, as I say, that it is applied by the government to make the VEIC proposal in the white paper more favourable to the investor by amending the Income Tax Act according to the capital losses as outlined in the paper.

The third amendment to the Excise Tax Act by the Minister of National Revenue, through the Minister of Finance, deals strictly with those announcements of last Tuesday on the removal of the federal sales tax for companies whose sales are under $50,000. Basically this last move by the government today in its three-ring circus was clearly just to tie in with the two announcements which were made over the past two days.

It is incredible to me that the latest budget did not include these amendments to the Income Tax Act. Is this a second thought by the government in dealing with small business? Is it because the government has seen fit to move into the small business area after it saw what happened in the Gallup poll? Is it because many people are involved in small business in Canada? It is not that long ago that the budget was introduced, and in fact in the budget—and, to satisfy you, Mr. Speaker, in Bill C-56—the limits we are taking off for incorporated farms and farm partnerships as far as the rollovers are concerned do nothing for small business.

Then, as an afterthought, when the government does come in with amendments for the rest of the small business community, they do not compare with the amendments regarding farmers. I agree with those farm amendments. They are long overdue. Farmers deserve the amendments in Bill C-56 and we support them, but why not handle the small business community in a uniform way? Why is there a limit on the other small business sector of our economy? Why are employees not included? These are some of the questions which must be answered by the government in the very near future.

● (2122)

I just want to emphasize that any assistance to small business is naturally welcome. Small business has become, I believe, a partisan issue because everyone always wants to help the small guy. But the government must realize who the small guy is. They cannot make provisions, tax amendments and assistance available in the form of incentive oriented programs unless they come up with a realistic definition of small business. I repeat, we have had five different positions from the government so far as definitions are concerned, and this cannot work. It has not worked in any other industrialized country. Therefore, I recommend again what I have done many times in the House: let us borrow from the United States small business administration their definition of small business which has worked effectively and which is viable. I do not understand why the minister is afraid to come up with that definition rather than changing it every week.

As I said, we welcome as well any policies or measures that the government decides to borrow from us. I say "borrow" because after the next election when we are on the other side we will naturally keep those recommendations and suggestions which we have been making and develop them in such a way that small business will once again become the backbone of our economy, and our economy will once again reflect the healthy and free enterprising system on which this country was built.

[Translation]

Mr. C. A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I will try to deal with Bill C-56 and I would ask you to be as lenient with me as you have been with the previous speaker. I have always wondered why it was so hard to get along in Canada, particularly Quebec and Ottawa, and now I realize why: Not only do we not speak the same language, Mr. Speaker, but we cannot discuss the same subject.

With regard to Bill C-56, I regret to have to say again that the government has once again brought forward an omnibus bill. This is just another bill designed to make us accept the unacceptable. I think that someday someone will write about this government saying that it was the omnibus bills champion. I think that all the discussions which we have had in this House since the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) became the head of the government and most particularly since the issue of the provincial sales tax came up, which will compel us to reject this bill C-56, if the Finance Minister (Mr. Chrétien) does not see reason, will have been completely useless if the government won't give way.

The crisis which we are presently experiencing is just the outcome of the increasingly centralizing policies of this government and if we want to put an end to this rising federal dictature which I have ceaselessly denounced before this House, there is only one way: throw out of this House those intruders into areas of provincial jurisdiction, who are going to destroy Canada. As soon as we rise to defend the constitutional rights of the provinces, and most particularly today, those of Quebec, all the Liberal party tenors call us separatists but where are the separatists actually to be found, Mr. Speaker? Are they not among those who want to strip the provinces of all their powers, which are at the very basis of our Confederation? The Parti Québécois wants to establish a true and legitimate association so that Canada will cease to have to survive by snatching one compromise after another. With regard to the British North America Act which I do not consider as a constitution but rather a royal decree, do people know that there has never been a formal agreement signed by the Canadian people and supported by it?

All that this act contains is a compromise between the newly constituted provinces of the time and it is from that compromise that have emerged all the struggles between the two founding peoples of Canada, mainly over the past 110 years. England has always acted as the arbitrator between two groups which have never gotten along with one another, because it was actually London's intentions to make us quarrel between ourselves to dominate us. This is what we have never understood in Canada. An in this regard we are not yet decolonized. This is why a petty autocrat such as the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) French by birth and English by principle has managed to bring Canada to the brink of collapse. And just like any dictator has to have its court jester, ours has found one in the person of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) who seems to enjoy that role greatly. The Minister of Finance keeps shouting right and left that he does not want to grant Quebec any favors, that he wants to treat the province of Quebec absolutely like any other province. Let us see how he acts out his contradictions. While he accepts to hand over directly to the provincial governments the reimbursement of the loss incurred through cancellation of the sales tax, after entering into various agreements with each one of the provinces, and incidentally those agreements are tailored to the need of each province, when it comes to Quebec, he finds all kinds of reasons not to transfer to the province the amounts he had promised and refuses to allow it the freedom to choose its own mode of taxation and distribution.

[Mr. Gauthier (Robcrval).]

• (2132)

This is not the first time the provinces are allowed to choose. It happened with family allowances when Quebec decided on how they would be distributed, contrary to the other provinces; but we did not have then in power the petty dictators we have today. What we have here in this fight is the Prime Minister who, having failed to get the Quebec government to kowtow to him since November 15, 1976 has decided to resort to any legal or illegal means he could find to punish Quebecers for having elected such a government by launching an attack on all sectors of exclusively provincial jurisdiction. Today, he was caught red-handed in the case of the sales tax. Having been found out, he now plays innocent and even proclaims his innocence, laying the blame on the P.Q. government and separatism.

From the very beginning, I have followed the confrontation with regard to the provincial sales tax. Clearly, the present government has once again put its foot in it, not to say in the provinces, by interfering in the field of sales tax which is an area of provincial jurisdiction. We should not forget that. I heard earlier spokesman for the Liberal party say: What is so wrong about that? What is wrong is that you have trampled on someone else's ground and do not want to admit it. To justify this intrusion which all parties in the Quebec national assembly objected to the Minister of Finance tries to flip-flop like the Prime Minister or under his direction.

I do not know exactly how you could call someone who acts exactly contrary to what he preaches. I am not saying he is a liar. Nor is he perfectly honest. In fact, the Minister of Finance is always saying that he does not want to grant the province of Quebec any special privilege and will treat it exactly like any other province. However, in bill C-56 the Minister demonstrates that he deals differently with each province according to the discussions he had privately with each of them except Quebec as they did not accept his proposals like the others. In fact, except Quebec, the other provinces have finally accepted the federal proposal while they reacted and obtained what they asked for as the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner) mentioned yesterday. And he recognized that the Atlantic provinces were in a position different from that of other provinces. They had different agreements. It appears on page 5695 of the Debates.

First, four provinces have seriously blamed the government, which the Minister does not want to admit, for having invaded an area of exclusive provincial jurisdiction. We must let the people know because the Minister of Finance will not admit it and does not want the people to find out. Second, some provinces asked for a nine months' exemption instead of six months. The federal government has accepted in spite of all the budget difficulties it might cause. Some provinces will have a nine months' cut and for others it will be six months within a twelve months' budget. And last, in the case of some provinces the Minister of Finance has accepted to repay two-thirds of the loss while for other provinces it will be a complete write-off. And in another province he will pay nothing. The legislation leaves the door open for some other forthcoming arrangements that have yet to be determined. All those provinces had discussions with the minister, and they succeeded in having their requirements accepted according to their criteria. When it comes to Quebec, the finance minister also states his conditions and has priority since it is an exclusively provincial jurisdiction. Although he was extremely surprised to see the federal government invade once more an exclusive jurisdiction of Quebec, Mr. Parizeau listened to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) make his offer, namely whether he accepted to reduce the sales tax by 3 per cent, the federal government would refund two-thirds of the loss incurred because of this reduction, and the provincial government could get back the 1 per cent through income tax. Although this proposal was against the constitution, Mr. Parizeau accepted it while indicating his preferences or priorities, just as the other provinces did. Here are his priorities: in order to stimulate four industries in the economy of Quebec which had been declining for several years, Mr. Parizeau thought it was time to change direction by removing completely the sales tax in Quebec not for six or nine months, but for twelve months. The government of Quebec and all opposition parties found this proposal fantastic. The Minister of Finance and the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) did not see it that way. Quebec had had the gall to devise a new formula more appropriate to the priorities of the Quebec economy. That is why federal ministers had to punish the Quebec government and all its supporters.

So the Minister of Finance stated that the government of Quebec will not get anything of those $285 million he had for it. But when he found out that all Quebeckers were behind their representatives in the National Assembly and raised a strong protest, the federal minister of Finance then decided to give $285 million directly to taxpayers, that is to those who have filed an income tax return. The minister did not suspect he had made a bigger mistake since he was prepared to make a gift to the rich, forgetting there were 2,500,000 people who are too poor to pay income tax. And he will not gain friends among the millions of taxpayers who filed income tax returns because they know that the provincial government will have to get back that money and all that scheme has been prepared by the federal government. Its last mistake was to refuse to treat Quebec like all the other provinces by forcing it to find the money which the federal government gave to the other provinces.

The Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance believed they had found a way to humiliate the Quebec government but the whole thing boomeranged because the reaction of Quebeckers was quite contrary to what federal liberal party strategists had anticipated. The Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance succeeded in at least one thing in Quebec, Mr. Speaker, that is to achieve unanimity among all parties in the national assembly, among all federal opposition parties and among all Quebeckers who want Quebec to survive and the constitution to be respected. And of course some senators supported the population, unlike federal members who cannot say how they feel about it. Speaking about the flip-flop of the Minister of Finance, I cannot help mentioning the acrobatic trick played by the right hon. Prime Minister on May 18, 1978.

● (2142)

In trying to reply to the question of the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald), as reported on page 5532 of Hansard:

—yesterday the Prime Minister stated that the same deal on tax room was being offered to all the provinces. I still question that, but the point I want to clarify now is this: will the Prime Minister not concede that the effect of this proposal will be that individuals in the province of Quebec will be affected in a much different way than individuals in the provinces which have agreed to an across-the board reduction in sales tax, and that that effect will be a sort of reverse means test so that in the province of Quebec only those individuals who have income high enough to pay income tax will benefit—

And the Prime Minister replied, and I quote:

—the hon. lady is confusing two things: the federal action and the provincial response. In so far as the federal action is concerned, it is the same in all provinces which accepted the scheme and it is the same in Quebec.

And the Prime Minister went on:

We are cutting taxes and making room so the provinces can increase their income tax . . . Obviously what the provinces are delivering is different. Eight of the provinces have said: "Yes, . . . One province has said: "No . . . We will cut them in the way we want."

Let us consider the craftiness used by the Prime Minister of Canada to conceal the discrimination he practices against the Quebec government. He attacks the response of the provinces. But surely there are various responses and it could not be otherwise, since the Prime Minister or the Minister of Finance contacted them one after the other. Why were they not brought together. It was a matter of national interest since they were going against a basic principle of the constitution. It should have been dealt with at a federal-provincial conference, but when the federal government has infringed upon provincial areas, it has always done so as cunningly as possible. When the Prime Minister states that eight provinces unanimously agreed to the federal proposal, I must point out to him that some of them reacted to the terms and conditions of that proposal, as did Quebec, and it is precisely on that point that I heard recently the Prime Minister expressing his support for the Minister of Finance. It is true that some provinces, after discussions, have accepted a six- or nine-month exemption, but Quebec asked for a 12-month exemption. Why accept six or nine, but not 12? The other provinces indicated that they were primarily interested in a general reduction. Quebec proposed four specific sectors of its economy. I think that Quebec, like the other provinces, had the right to indicate its priorities within its field of taxation.

When the Prime Minister says: We are cutting taxes so that the provinces may collect more, I am stunned by such a statement, Mr. Speaker. In my opinion, the Prime Minister should have said: We ask or we suggest that the provinces reduce their sales taxes; instead of we are reducing them. The truth is that the federal government does not cut any of its taxes. It asks the provinces to cut their own taxes. Why let the population believe that the federal government is the most generous? The Minister of Finance wants to punish the province of Quebec because his provincial counterpart took a few weeks before answering to his proposals. Should we not instead blame the federal Minister of Finance for having so long delayed his budget. The two budgets would not have come out at the same time as they did. The Minister of Finance first refused to introduce a budget probably because just before an election he did not want Canadians to realize that it would cost them $56 billion to look after 23 million people. It is a fantastic amount because the government took over all the best tax fields and spends unsparingly, while the provinces cannot find enough money for their administration. The province of Quebec which was preparing its budget as well wanted to know more about the intentions of the federal government in order to gear its own budget accordingly. But because of the budget secrecy and because the government, constantly fears any possible leak I am sure that the Minister of Finance of Quebec had not been informed of some important details, especially when we learn on the side that the Federal government is ready to change the provincial sales tax.

Any serious Minister of Finance would have reacted just as the Quebec Minister did. The federal government ought not to have brought forward generalities, invading somebody else's jurisdiction. If the Minister of Finance had been serious and sincere, he would have gone to Quebec and would have revealed the whole thing to Mr. Parizeau, even at the risk of a few leaks. After all, they are both Ministers of Finance, two Ministers who should be able to keep a secret. One could hardly expect the provincial minister to run after the federal minister because the federal government was asking a favour in coming into a provincial field of jurisdiction to play the good Samaritan. Why did not the government use their own tax fields to bring a tax relief to the people? The federal government has more powers of taxation than the provinces. Why ask the provinces to stimulate the economy when the federal government have all the money?

I am sure that if ever the provinces were to ventures into the federal tax field, this would raise a general outcry here in the House. But with all this quarrelling and more to come, we have an irrefutable evidence of the need for a new Canadian Constitution in order to determine once for all the rights and duties of each level of government, with well defined standards and severe penalties in case of non-compliance.

We have said it time and times again in the House: Canada is made up of various regions; their geography, their various resources, their economic features make them different. This is why we maintain that not two provinces in Canada are alike and therefore that each of them must be treated differently. That is why we say that a true confederation must be based on the authority of the provinces joined in an economic association, based on a truly Canadian constitution, written for Canadians and voted by Canadians in a referendum, after interprovincial meetings where it will be determined which sectors the provinces wish to relinquish to the federal government which will become the executor of provincial wishes.

It is time, Mr. Speaker, that a group of men from financial influences took over Canada. Unfortunately today, we are faced with a personality clash where the opponents are risking the future of Canada for their own personal glory. This may surprise everyone, but the minister is showing us here the government's true face.

Since this Prime Minister has been leading the government, he has been dreaming of the day he has all fiscal rights now enjoyed by the provinces. He is dreaming of a central government for Canada, and yesterday we heard the statement made by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner) on the subject. I believe it perfectly reflects this government's schemes. Let me quote his comments from page 5699 of Hansard:

> . . . One could even accuse me of being a centralist. I do not mind that, because I believe that in order to hold this nation together we have to accept the fact that there should be one government for the whole of the nation.

That is the Liberal party's dream, Mr. Speaker. Those are the people who pretend to save Confederation, who do not even realize they are destroying it. All those centralist federalists must have read the sad history of federal-provincial conferences, which shows all the tricks used by various Liberal governments to steal tax fields away from the provinces in order to completely dominate them one day.

A single scenario runs through all those conferences. The federal government takes hold of the most profitable tax fields, leaving only residues for the provinces, and then perforce remitting them a share to allow them to survive, rebating a fraction after they have taken everything. Or alternately, the federal makes loans, this is still better, loans that tie them up, ropes around their necks, those famous shared cost programs that are just so many ropes to hold the provinces and make them pay interest to the federal government.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Repay five for one!

Mr. Gauthier (Roberval): A province with a five to ten year loan repays five and ten times the principal. In the 1867 financial arrangements, it is stated that the federal gets unlimited taxing powers in indirect taxes, but direct taxes were so hated it left them to provinces. Anything repugnant was left to the provinces.

With changing direct taxation, especially in the 40's, the provinces had to enter direct taxation because the federal government had occupied everything else. When direct taxation became profitable for the provinces, especially in the 40's, the federal government used all available tricks to get its hands on direct taxes, because he saw they were profitable, to the dismay of the provinces losing the main bulkwork of their autonomy.

As the government of that time could not get the agreement of the provinces, the Minister of Finance used its discretionary powers in wartime to declare that the dominion would levy taxes on personal and corporate income. It forced the provinces to find other sources of revenue, which explains the series of small taxes that the provinces had to levy while the federal government used those additional revenues to invade areas under provincial jurisdiction such as health, education, municipal affairs, because the provinces no longer had the money to work in those fields. That is the federal government's iron collar of which we have been trying to rid ourselves since this famous invasion.

And again today, after they robbed the provinces of their direct taxation power, they have the nerve to propose the abolition of the provincial revenue department. The Minister of Finance declared that if Quebec considers it too expensive, they should abolish their revenue department. They go really far. They even went further by creating a federal Department of Urban Affairs. This is the most serious insult, everybody knows that towns and municipalities are strictly under provincial jurisdiction.

Not satisfied with having its own Department of Agriculture, its own Department of Labour, its own Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, its Department of Communications, its Department of Fisheries and Environment, its Department of Regional Economic Expansion, its Department of National Health, the federal government has now created its own Department of Urban Affairs. All of these already exist at the provincial level, but the federal government wants to play the same role as the provinces in Canada. As I watched the right hon. Prime Minister in the last few years, and more recently the Minister of Finance, I have been wondering if they have not sworn to destroy Canada and if their prejudices against Quebec did not override every other consideration. The survival of Canada should not be based on the result of a confrontation between two men.

National interests outweigh the pride of a few politicians who seem to care nothing about better harmony among our provinces. I only hope that what I said here tonight will bring back to sanity certain Liberal party leaders who seem to ignore the law, the constitutional agreements and show no respect for the provinces and cannot forget about their resentment for Quebeckers because they elected that particular government on November 15, 1976. The bitterness has reached its climax with that surprising interference of the Minister of Finance in a tax field which has always been recognized as being exclusive to Quebec. And still more recently, the latest statements made by the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Ouellet), thus following the example of his leader, the Minister of Finance and others. It so happens that the little people in Quebec have succeeded in reaching a consensus in Quebec, something that not one government had managed to do since Confederation, to alienate all parties in Quebec.

I heard Mr. Gérard D. Lévesque, Mr. Claude Ryan, Mr. Goldbloom state on television that they strongly objected to the statements of the Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance and the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. I sincerely hope that all those testimonies will bring the Minister of Finance to his senses and that he will refrain from shirking the issue and from playing on words about the the rebate to Quebec. He may not like the PQ supporters, but he should not forget that most Quebeckers of all political parties do not like at all the present Minister of Finance.

• (2152)

[English]

Miss Campbell: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I wonder if you would call it ten o'clock and not count this as my time to speak? I cannot speak tomorrow and I would like to speak next week.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Shall we call it ten o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

CANADA COUNCIL—REQUEST MANDATE BE STUDIED BY COMMITTEE

Mr. Bob Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, when I made my motion back in early April suggesting that the House of Commons should assign the committee on broadcasting and the arts to re-examine the mandate of the Canada Council, the minister received the request in a careful, studied and seemingly concerned manner and indicated that he would look into the matter. That was the first time he had said in his studied way that he would look at the matter. Well, he looked at the matter. Then he looked at the matter six months ago when I raised it and I thought, "Well, I shall raise it again in the House of Commons". This is that opportunity.

However, as I stand to raise this issue I know that the minister has already answered. In fact, he gave the studied, careful response that he would make in an address to the Canadian Conference of the Arts in Halifax on April 28. That studied response in reference to the arts and their relationship to the Canada Council and its relationship to the government was entitled "The Relationship between Government and Support for the Arts". I waited anticipating that we might have a response, even a non-partisan look at the Canada Council mandate, the Canada Council's relationship to government, members of parliament and the people of Canada. And what was the response? It was one of the most amazing and irresponsible speeches that I have heard given by a minister.

I could understand when he stood up in this House of Commons and in committee and said, "I am not accountable or responsible for the Canada Council." The Canada Council agreed he was not responsible. So who was responsible and accountable? We were led to believe it was this House of Commons—you and me, Mr. Speaker. If we are going to be responsible, I say let us look at the information. Let us look at the criticisms of the Auditor General who said that things were not right in the Canada Council; that in the way they were spending their money there was not adequate invoicing, there was not adequate documentation, there was not adequate assessment. It was one of the severest criticisms in the Auditor General's report.

● (2202)

In reply to the allegations of the Auditor General the Canada Council has said, "Mr. Auditor General, you are overstating the matter. It is just not so." Now we have a dispute between the Auditor General and the Canada Council, each of them saying very opposite things on the basis of some documentation. One of them is saying that this is serious and the other one is saying that it is not. Mr. Speaker, who is to judge whether the allegations of the Auditor General are serious? The minister cannot be the judge.

In committee I asked if he had access to the files of the Canada Council and his answer was that he did not. He has confirmed that in his speech. Can you believe a minister would make a statement such as the following:

> Politicians, on both the opposition and government sides of the Commons, have been demanding information—

What a terrible thing, that members of the House of Commons should be demanding information, Mr. Speaker! The minister continued:

> I am not one of them. I want to be clear about that.

Then he went on in the next paragraph to say:

> I am opposed to that. So long as I am Secretary of State I shall not allow interference—

I want to give notice tonight to this House of Commons, to the minister, to parliament and to the people of Canada that I intend to interfere, and my interference is just starting. I realize now how absolutely necessary it is that I interfere, because the minister refuses to accept his responsibility. In addition to that his attitude is that, if he is not going to do it, then members of parliament will have to.

I should like to give the House the minister's description of himself, Mr. Speaker—not my description or that of another person eulogizing him. This is what he said in the same speech:

> I regard myself, personally, as a sensitive and discriminating individual, knowledgeable of our past cultural heritage, perceptive, and sure of what should or should not be accepted. I am quite assertive and combative about my judgments: I hold to them strongly. I am undismayed by the fact that few agree with me. I am superbly confident of my taste.

That is the Secretary of State (Mr. Roberts) speaking of himself. He is a paragon, Mr. Speaker. But what does this very sure person do with what he has? I will quote him again:

> Politicians, on both the opposition and government sides of the Commons, have been demanding information—

And then again:

> I am not one of them.

In the House I asked the minister if he had ever been refused information by the Canada Council.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to inform the hon. member his allotted time has expired.

Mr. Robert Daudlin (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, some time ago the hon. member raised the question which I thought he would pursue this evening, but since he has gone in a different direction I will not stick to the answer that I thought he might be seeking.

The hon. member has demonstrated an inability to perceive or understand the speech delivered on the east coast. Even when he has it before him he picks and chooses bits and pieces from it that completely distort the direction of the speech. The hon. member takes bits and pieces out of his speech and would indicate that the minister was not seeking information. He would have the House believe that in fact it dealt not only with the finances and the directions of the Canada Council, but all aspects of the Canada Council.

● (2207)

The speech makes quite clear that the minister accepts full responsibility in terms of the finances and, indeed, he believes that he, together with the parliamentary committee, has the responsibility to examine the finances. He has made that clear not only in that speech, but in this House and in the committee. If the hon. member is going to be fair, he will agree that that in fact is what has been done.

In addition, the speech makes quite clear that the hon. minister does not feel he has the responsibility—indeed, he said that not only in his speech but in this House—to interfere with the ordinary day-to-day operations of Canada Council. That is not his mandate. He has never had that mandate. He proposes not to move into that sphere.

The minister does not delude himself or anyone else into believing that he does not have financial responsibility in terms of presenting Canada Council applications to Treasury Board and appearing before the appropriate committee with the financial administration of the Canada Council. Indeed, there is an opportunity for all hon. members, the hon. member opposite as well as myself, to go before that committee and examine in great detail and very closely the Canada Council and demand the figures showing what they are spending, on what and why.

The Canada Council has made clear that it will in fact make that information available. The information the council will not make available is the private information of artists who are seeking grants, the kind of information that in fact is the day to day operation of the Canada Council. That would go beyond any mandate that this House has ever given the Canada Council if that were the case.

Mr. Wenman: You are wrong.

Mr. Daudlin: The hon. member says I am wrong. I suggest that he go back to the questions and answers that were given to him in the committee. He seems not to be able to understand those answers, notwithstanding that they come to him directly in response to questions given to him. I suggest in effect he has completely misread the speech. He does not understand—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the parliamentary secretary but his allotted time has expired.

TRANSPORT—COMPENSATION FOR LOSSES INCURRED IN SINKING OF "WILLIAM CARSON"

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I rise in connection with a question I asked of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) yesterday about the sinking of the William Carson and his reaction to some things that now need to be clarified. I received an unsatisfactory response. In fact, I did not get much of a response at all.

The Minister of Transport, as all members know, is as popular as a school of dogfish in a cod trap. He is continuing to sully his reputation in that direction. In fact, today in the transport committee it was moved that the committee does not have any confidence in the Minister of Transport and urges the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to request his resignation, a motion I would strongly support.

On May 23 the minister made public the report of Mr. Justice Nathaniel S. Noel of the Newfoundland Supreme Court on his investigation into the sinking of the m.v. William Carson off Labrador, on June 3, 1977. By the way, that report is dated January 27. The minister explained today that he did not receive it until March 13. Well, even March 13 is 71 days earlier than May 23. Why did the public have to wait 71 days to have the minister make this public? It is unjustified. It should have been made public a lot sooner. It does not take 71 days to print this little report that I have in my hand now.

The commissioner found that the vessel sank, and I quote:

> —due to the default of the vessel's operator, Canadian National Railway Company and her Master, Norman Lewis Hinks, the sinking was caused by ice penetrating the hull when the vessel was making a passage through an ice field on a voyage from St. Anthony to Cartwright.

At the end of his report he repeats those findings. I quote from page 39:

> The sinking of the m.v. William Carson was contributed to by the default of her Master, Norman Lewis Hinks, who directed the ship into the hazards of Labrador ice when there was no grave necessity to do so.

At page 40 he states:

> The sinking of the m.v. William Carson was contributed to by the default of her operators, Canadian National Railway Company, who sent the ship on a voyage to Goose Bay, via intermediate ports, when it was known and intended that she would encounter Labrador ice, under a Master who had little experience in the conditions to be met.

Mr. Justice Noel may be right or not right in his conclusions and opinions, but this is what he has found after studying the case. This brings up several questions. One that arises is whether CN, who are not going to be pleased with this report of Mr. Justice Noel, and I cannot blame them, will be driven by the conclusions of this report perhaps to hesitate to send a ship up to Goose Bay this year while there is still Labrador ice around. The Bond is supposed to replace the Carson and is to be under way on July 4. It is possible CN will say they are not going to send a ship, that they will not take that responsibility in view of this report.

I asked the minister today in that committee what he would do in that event. It is possible CN might say: "We are not going to send a ship; we are not going to take responsibility in view of this report". I asked the minister today in committee what would he do in that event. He seemed to indicate there was only one course of action to take. The government would then have to instruct CN to send a vessel or to agree to indemnify them and take the responsibility to assure that that service starts as soon as possible, that the people on the Labrador coast get the cargo and other supplies they need and enjoy the passenger service that is required. I hope the minister understands this and that if CN attempts this manoeuvre he will counteract it immediately.

● (2212)

Yesterday I asked him:

> Is he going to direct the CNR to pay the passengers and crew loss claims and the cargo owners their claims which have been in abeyance now for 11 months?

There were 1,000 tons of cargo aboard the vessel, Mr. Speaker. It was not insured by the consignees. It was not insured by CN. CN, a Crown corporation, has refused to pay the claims. It will be 12 months one week from Saturday, on June 3, 1978, during which the cargo owners have had to sustain this cost not knowing whether they will ever be paid.

Canadian National has stated that the claims will only be paid if the company is held legally liable. CN has certainly been found, now, to be liable by the commissioner, Mr. Justice Noel, so I asked the minister where he would now direct the railway company to pay up with no further delay. Some of these small businesses in Labrador are in a bankrupt condition. It was the start of the season last year when the Carson sank, and very large consignments were on the way to them. The minister said:

It would not be my intention to give directions to the Canadian National. I am sure they are looking at their legal position and what is their proper course of action.

Mr. Speaker, the government is responsible for this service. The government meets its deficits through subsidies. The minister can direct CN. It is the government that is responsible. The minister should say to CN: "Pay those cargo owners. Never mind your strict legal liability, never mind running them through the courts for the next three or four years, pay up; we have a commission report that says you were in default." But he has given no undertaking he would do this.

Then when I asked him whether he would have CN speed the matter up, he said:

I would certainly be glad if I could do anything to speed up the resolution of the questions referred to in the first part of the hon. member's question.

What nonsense, saying he would be glad if he could speed it up. That is no answer. He is the minister. He could order the company on behalf of the government to settle these claims or to speed up the settlement.

Then I asked him whether the government was going to take action against the CN to recover the value of the Carson which had been lost due to fault on the part of the company. The minister replied:

The Canadian National was operating this vessel on behalf of the government and I would want to have legal advice as to the implications of that in respect of any potential claim.

● (2217)

It is time, Mr. Speaker, for this minister to wake up and observe his responsibilities. Here are those poor cargo owners, 1,000 tons of cargo lost, and their claims are still not peid. It may take years for the courts to settle this. Mr. Justice Noel has given his view and opinion now. Why should the vast CN Crown corporation be able to punish them by making them wait for years for their money? Or perhaps they won't get it at all in strict legal terms.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to inform the hon. member that his allotted time has expired.

Mr. Robert Daudlin (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member started off this evening by talking about mackerel and dogfish. I suggest that at least the first half of the question he asked tonight is neither of those two species but probably herring of the red variety. Having spent a lot of time on the first question he raised with the minister with respect particularly to the date of January 27, he today finds out that he was wrong about that date, so the next tack is to say that, notwithstanding what the time was, it still has been too long. He emphasized that the date, which he now admits was March—I think March 9—was still too long ago.

The essence and the crunch of what the hon. member is getting to is the fact that he would have the minister direct CN to pay. I suggest that the hon. member ask us to direct Canadian National to pay compensation to those who lost goods as a result of the sinking. In so doing he would have us pre-empt the legal process, and I do not think he really means that. Perhaps he really has not thought about it. In any event , I believe that all hon. members sympathize with those who are in this position. However, surely the hon. member would not want the government to act arbitrarily in this case in setting aside the legal rights which exist not only for the company but for the claimants as well.

With regard to the whole question of claims I can do no more than reiterate what the minister has said, that CN should deal with the situation expeditiously and with the sensitivity which is always appropriate for any business in a situation like this involving many individual claims.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m.

At 10.18 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, May 26, 1978

The House met at 11 a.m.

• (1107)

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

SPORTS

ANOTHER STANLEY CUP FOR LES CANADIENS!—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to introduce a motion dealing with an important matter of pressing necessity. Considering that on Thursday, May 25, the Canadiens won a brilliant victory and once again carried off the Stanley Cup, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers):

That congratulations be sent to the directors, coach and players for their success and for the fine way in which they contributed to the prestige of Canada in the world of hockey, where their fame is proverbial.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie).

* * *

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INDIVIDUAL INVESTMENT IN UNITED STATES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter or urgent and pressing necessity, under the provisions of Standing Order 43. During Tuesday's debate on my motion calling for a special committee to be established to examine how our federal tax system is forcing Canadian businessmen to invest in the United States, the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge (Mr. Saltsman), in disagreeing with the motion, severely criticized Canadians who choose to invest in the United States and those who have moved there to escape excessive taxation and government regulation.

In view of the hon. member's conviction that Canadians who invest in or move to the United States are greedy, venal and less than loyal to their country, and in view of the startling fact revealed by my colleague, the hon. member for Halton-Wentworth (Mr. Kempling), to the effect that this same member has or had property and business interests in the United States, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Cossitt):

That this House instruct the NDP House leader, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, to ask the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge to explain to the House why it is legitimate for him to have or to have had investments in the United States, but illegitimate, greedy and venal for other Canadians to have similar investments in that country.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion would require unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

ADVERTISING TO REDUCE ABUSE OF SYSTEM—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. My motion concerns the fact that the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Cullen) has virtually admitted in committee that the recent $3 million advertising campaign against UIC cheating was designed to manipulate the Canadian people into believing that the commission was doing a good job. In view of the fact that this is not the first instance of the use of taxpayers' money by a public agency to manipulate the public politically and to pressure parliament, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie):

That this House condemns the use of taxpayers' money for partisan political purposes by agencies such as the Unemployment Insurance Commission, the Export Development Corporation, the Anti-Inflation Board and Petro-Canada, to name only a few, and notes that if the UIC had really wanted to discourage cheating it could have circulated warnings against it inside envelopes mailed to UIC recipients.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for debate would require unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

S.O. 43

TRANSPORT

HARBOUR DREDGING AT FOX ISLAND, NEWFOUNDLAND—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In order that Newfoundland fishermen at Port au Port will not have to risk their lives and boats as they did last weekend when they were unable to enter the Fox Island harbour during a storm because of a sand bar which has impeded passage for more than two years, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom):

That this House instructs the Minister of Transport to undertake emergency action which will permit temporary dredging while the department awaits new tenders for permanent work, delayed last year through a technical error in awarding a contract for this project.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for discussion, pursuant to Standing Order 43, would require the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

INDIAN AFFAIRS

OBLIGATIONS UNDER TREATIES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity concerning the several Indian treaties solemnly entered into by Her Majesty Queen Victoria. I move:

That this House declares that such treaties are in effect and their respective terms are sacred obligations which are now being deliberately evaded, diminished or denied in administration in the face of the fact that such treaties were to be continued "as long as the sun shall shine and the rivers shall flow".

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for debate, pursuant to the Standing Order, would require unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I think it is only fair that there should be identification of members who are denying these motions.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom).

[Mr. Speaker.]

• (1112)

LABOUR RELATIONS

GOVERNMENT INTERVENTION IN ONTARIO LABOUR DISPUTE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that violence on the picket line at the Fleck manufacturing plant in Centralia is increasing, with the reported beating of men and women on the picket line by members of the Ontario provincial police, and in view of the fact that no progress is being made between members of the UAW and the management of the Fleck plant, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent):

That this House instruct the Minister of Labour to approach the premier of Ontario to encourage the management of Fleck to bargain in good faith and reduce the possibility of further violence on the picket line.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

COMMITTEE STUDY OF ANNUAL REPORT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity concerning the continuing backlog in the movement of grain, the accumulation of record demurrage costs, the loss of sales and customer confidence, all of which are having a serious impact upon the Canadian economy. Therefore, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil):

That the 1976-77 Canadian Wheat Board annual report be referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture to review the current situation and consider new initiatives related to grain handling and grain marketing strategies.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the presentation of such a motion for debate?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

NATIONAL SECURITY

RELEASE OF TASCHEREAU PAPERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgency concerning the so-called Taschereau papers on national security that were scheduled to be made public in 1976 and were removed from the Public Archives prior to such revelation by Major P. A. Lemieux of the Privy Council office. Recently I was informed they were returned to the archives on February 6, 1978, without public knowledge, and a further mandatory term of ten years applied before release, with a review to take place at that time. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie):

That the Prime Minister release all details as to why Michael Pitfield, secretary to the cabinet, wrote a letter to the Public Archives ordering release extension to 1986; all reasons why the Prime Minister and the security committee of the cabinet ordered that such release be delayed; specifically, why it is considered necessary to protect the identity and testimony of certain public servants, some of whom have or are presently occupying high positions in the public service after so many years; and, finally, whether release of such evidence would be incriminating against some of the persons involved.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

FINANCE

PUBLIC SCRUTINY OF REAL GROWTH FORECASTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. My motion concerns the fall in real domestic product of 0.2 per cent in March. In view of the fact that this tends to undermine what little credibility remains in the Minister of Finance's 1978 growth target of 5 per cent, and in view of the fact that the minister has yet to make an accurate forecast during his entire career as finance minister, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Gillies):

That this motion does not call upon the Minister of Finance for yet another bogus forecast, but demands that the minister now open his forecasting procedures to public scrutiny and that a special committee of this House be given the mandate to investigate the Department of Finance's forecasting practices.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

NATIONAL REVENUE

CONFIDENTIALITY OF TAX FILES

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister, and it relates directly and exclusively to the way in which ministers of the Crown carry out or have carried out their responsibility to uphold the law of Canada.

As hon. members and the minister know, there was a 1972 agreement between the Department of National Revenue and the RCMP which allowed a violation of confidentiality of tax files. The McDonald royal commission yesterday heard testimony to the effect that there was a letter from a minister of national revenue, unidentified, to a solicitor general, unidentified, in which the minister of national revenue expressed the view that that agreement was against the law—that it broke the law of Canada.

I presume that the Deputy Prime Minister, having had his attention drawn to that testimony of yesterday, would have looked into this question. I would like him to tell us whether there was such a letter, whether he will table it, and what was the resolution of the position of the minister of national revenue that the 1972 agreement broke the law of Canada?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the question of the Leader of the Opposition, I think I should make it clear that so far as I am aware there was no testimony, in the proper sense, put before the commission. As I understand it, there was a reference by commission counsel to a letter, and that was the extent of the proceeding.

• (1117)

In so far as the government is concerned, the matter is before the commission and it is not the intention of the government, as has been stated on many previous occasions, to replace the work of the royal commission. If this letter is to be adduced as evidence, then it ought to be done at the royal commission. That is the place for any other evidence or evidence from ministers, in our view.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, once again we have had the capacity of the McDonald royal commission expanded and expanded to cover up activities of this government. Apparently what we have here, according to a letter to which reference was made at that commission yesterday, is an indication that a view was expressed perhaps two years ago by a member of the cabinet of Canada that a practice approved by the cabinet of Canada was against the law. Surely, if the cabinet of Canada is condoning and accepting the breaking of the law of Canada, that is a matter for the House of Commons to inquire into.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Was there an expression of a department position by a minister that an agreement sanctioned by the Government of Canada was in violation of the law of Canada? Was there such a letter? If so, can the House of Commons, to which this government reports—royal commission or no—see that letter? Can the minister tell us whether it continues to be the policy of the Government of Canada to support the breaking of the law of Canada?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I think as the hon. Leader of the Opposition built his question he drew additional and unwarranted conclusions. As I understand it, what happened yesterday was that commission counsel made brief reference to a letter which had been exchanged and put a particular construction upon the letter himself.

An hon. Member: Let's see the letter.

Mr. MacEachen: There is no desire on the part of the government to impede the work of the royal commission in any sense.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: As far as we are concerned, we would be very pleased to have this matter fully, thoroughly and expeditiously examined before the royal commission, have whatever evidence is available put on the record, have whatever ministers may be involved in the transmission of correspondence examined before the commission, and have all the evidence brought forward. Certainly, it is not the intention of the government to replace the royal commission, nor is it the intention of the government to put on the record of the House of Commons fragments of information. I think that would be quite irresponsible and quite opposed to the work of the McDonald royal commission.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, no one has ever accused this government of trying to impede the work of the royal commission. It is attempting to use the royal commission to impede the work of the House of Commons.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: If the Deputy Prime Minister is worried about unwarranted interpretations of a letter from one of his colleagues to another alleging that the Government of Canada was breaking the law, the way he can resolve those concerns is to let us see the letter. If it continues to be the view of the Minister of National Revenue that that agreement is illegal, can he tell us if he has received a legal opinion from the Minister of Justice as to whether that matter is legal or illegal? He can come clean by telling us what the government of Canada is authorizing, whether it is authorizing activities which violate the law of Canada, and stop trying to hide behind a royal commission.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, the Government of Canada is not authorizing activities which are against the law of Canada, nor is the Government of Canada attempting to hide behind the McDonald royal commission. It was as a result of repeated representations from members of the opposition that this government finally agreed to establish the McDonald royal commission.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Finally.

Mr. MacEachen: This was because it had been stated frequently that the subject matter which was the concern of the House of Commons was not an appropriate subject for the House of Commons and it ought to be dealt with by the McDonald royal commission. That is why we established the McDonald royal commission.

● (1122)

I want to repeat precisely the same position that was taken by the government on previous occasions when the credibility of witnesses was under examination by the House and when contradictory evidence was put forward before the royal commission and hon. members asked questions in the House. I believe the place to conclude all these questions is before the McDonald commission, where all the evidence will come out in context.

Mr. Broadbent: After the election.

Mr. MacEachen: The hon. leader of the NDP says "After the election". That shows the suspicious mind he has.

An hon. Member: You want to believe it.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: Maybe the hon. member should have had the foresight not to advocate the establishment of a royal commission if he felt its work might not coincide with his electoral objectives.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: What he wants to do, of course, is use this issue for political purposes and not to obtain the truth which we believe will be forthcoming at the McDonald royal commission, not through the politicking of members of the opposition.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN FORMER REVENUE MINISTER AND SOLICITOR GENERAL

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Deputy Prime Minister should await the results of the Laycraft commission which will drop just as big a bombshell in this particular field. However, in the absence of the Minister of National Revenue from this House and the first acting minister of national revenue, I would like to turn to the quite likely second acting minister and direct my question to the Minister of Employment and Immigration who is a former minister of national revenue. Did he write a letter to the then solicitor general expressing a view with regard to the agreement signed in 1972?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is wrong in his premise. I am not the second acting minister of national revenue.

An hon. Member: Answer the question, anyway.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is addressed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Will he indicate to the House who is the second acting minister of national revenue; or is this part of the shell game that is going on?

An hon. Member: The Gazette says Francis Fox.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: No, it is Iona.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Iona Campagnolo (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take the representations of the hon. member, as second acting minister of this group. I would just like to make sure the hon. member knows that Miss Bégin is prepared to appear and make any representations that are necessary with respect to this matter.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the hon. lady, since she represents the Minister of National Revenue in this House. Is she able to reconcile the opinion he gave this House late last year on a number of occasions in reply to questions by myself and the hon. member for Perth-Wilmot, to the effect that all that was done by the Department of National Revenue in connection with this particular agreement of 1972 was legal and that the agreement itself was legal?

Mrs. Campagnolo: Mr. Speaker, the hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare will be pleased to take the hon. member's question when she returns to the House.

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): I have a question for the expert on parliamentary government in this House, the Deputy Prime Minister. Since he, of all people, knows that the central characteristic of parliamentary government is cabinet responsibility to members of this House, if he were interested in the truth, instead of obscuring it, he would realize that the government's central obligation, in view of this political decision reached by the cabinet, is to produce the letter that has been demanded by members on this side.

• (1127)

Considering it is now part of the evidence submitted to the royal commission, that the man who was superintendent of the legal branch of the RCMP, Mr. J. V. Cain, submitted to his superior a memo dated March 3 of this year and in the view of the expert in the RCMP the agreement that had been reached and authorized by the cabinet in 1972 was legal, I would like to ask if he will confirm that the cabinet authorized this agreement in 1972. Will he also inform the House whether or not there was an opinion offered by the minister of justice at that time on the legality of this agreement?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I confirm that the agreement was entered into in 1972. My recollection is, subject to checking, that it was a matter approved by the cabinet and there is absolutely no suggestion or evidence that the agreement was in any way illegal.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, if it is the minister's view that it was not illegal—and he has at least offered his opinion on this matter that is before the McDonald inquiry—will he not reconsider the position he took just a minute ago and provide for all the members of this House and the people of Canada, well in advance of the final report of the royal commission, the letter in question so that we will have an opportunity to judge the opinion that was offered allegedly by one minister of the Crown on this important matter.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I believe that the hon. member, who is normally fair-minded, would understand how dangerous it would be to produce one single element of the total evidence that will be brought before the royal commission. What happened yesterday was that reference was made by commission counsel to a letter upon which he placed a particular construction. I am not commenting one way or the other on the validity of that construction; but surely, if the letter is relevant, it ought to be considered in the over-all context of all the evidence. If a minister of the Crown is involved in the writing of the letter, then he ought to be heard before the commission and his evidence sought, so that the commission and those who are following the commission can reach a proper conclusion.

It seems to me that it would be a very wrong practice to feed into the House of Commons, in response to newspaper accounts, bits and pieces of evidence and expect that the matter would be dealt with other than in a highly partisan and highly political way.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, if there is one institution in Canada in which politics should be thoroughly discussed, surely it is the House of Commons. Considering that this matter, the decision that was made in 1972 and the subsequent testimony before the royal commission pertaining to the decision, is the first clear indication that the government abused its legal authority in condoning illegal activity, and since those allegations are clearly out now, does the Deputy Prime Minister not agree that the cabinet has a primary political responsibility in this case not to wait for the findings of the royal commission, but to help clear the air now, well in advance of the next election, so the people of Canada can judge in a fair-minded way whether the cabinet has performed legally or illegally?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, as I have stated already, the ministers have already indicated their intention to appear before the royal commission. They can be summoned at any moment the commission so decides and this particular aspect can be dealt with thoroughly and expeditiously long before the election which the hon. member fears so much.

● (1132)

The hon. member says the House of Commons is the place for politics. I agree with him. If we are to take the views of the opposition seriously, however, it is not the place to deal with the activities of the RCM Police in order to determine what illegalities may have occurred—

An hon. Member: It is the cabinet we are talking about.

Mr. MacEachen: —and to determine what the long-run practice of the force ought to be. My hon. friend again forgets that it was at the request of members of the opposition that we put this whole problem before the McDonald royal commission. Now, when there is a snippet of information that may have dribbled out of the commission, the opposition wants to bring it before the House of Commons for political purposes.

LEGALITY OF GOVERNMENT'S INSTRUCTIONS

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I think the first thing we should do is get back to the original question asked by the Leader of the Opposition, which is simply this: Was there such a letter in which the Government of Canada was found guilty in advance of doing what was wrong and illegal? Is there such a letter?

I have followed the hon. gentleman's circumlocution with interest and with admiration for his political adroitness, but we come back to the question: Did the Government of Canada know that what was being done was illegal, unlawful and unjustifiable according to the opinion of the Department of Justice? That is all. If so, where is the letter? The fact that the minister has evaded the whole problem so well and so cleverly could lead even the least suspicious to conclude that the reason he is doing it is to hide the facts. They do not want to be found guilty of wrongdoing as was the opinion of a lawyer in the Department of Justice.

This is a very serious matter and not one for a royal commission; it is for parliament to determine. Will the minister produce the document? If there is nothing in it, there will be nothing to worry about; but if there is, he knows there will be a problem for the government.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, that is a whole series of questions.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Just produce the letter.

Mr. Hees: Will you produce the letter; that is all?

An hon. Member: Is there a letter?

[Mr. Broadbent.]

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, there is a whole series of questions there. I could answer "No" and "Yes" to the whole series of questions. The right hon. gentleman is asking whether the government will produce the letter.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): That's it.

Mr. MacEachen: I am saying that the government is not prepared to produce this particular letter because it has been referred to as part of the proceedings of the royal commission.

Mr. Clark: That is incredible.

Mr. MacEachen: It is before the royal commission.

An hon. Member: It is not.

Mr. MacEachen: The letter obviously is in the possession of the commission. That is the place where it ought to be dealt with, not the House of Commons. If we do it, obviously we are transferring the whole job of the commission to the House of Commons.

Mr. Clark: That is nonsense.

Mr. MacEachen: I just do not think the House of Commons is equipped to do the job that is required.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman does not think the House of Commons is equipped with the necessary knowledge and appreciation of the issue at stake to be able to look into this matter while a royal commission sits. I ask him once more, why cover up unless there is something to cover up?

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): No answer.

* * *

AIRPORTS

ADVERTISING CAMPAIGN TO PROMOTE MIRABEL

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Minister of Transport arises from a series of advertisements appearing in newspapers across the country promoting Mirabel airport. Since this lovable white elephant which now symbolizes Mirabel is said to be seriously deficient from a safety point of view, according to the International Federation of Airline Pilots Associations, and since Transport Canada has had to resort to a rather laughable ad campaign to attract business for the airport, may I ask the minister whether he approved of the advertisement? Could he also assure the House that before the travelling public is lured into this love-in, its safety rating will be improved to meet international standards?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the fact is that the pilots' allocation of stars to airports is on the basis of their view of a departure from an absolutely ideal system. There are, of course, significant airports in the United States with stars of deeper colours than the orange star allocated to Mirabel. In fact, the reason for the star concerns the ambulance response time, but in fact Mirabel is one of the few airports with standby ambulance service available on a 24-hour basis. So there is an argument about the one element they feel is deficient.

I think there is reason to applaud the initiative of the committee and group promoting Mirabel and its usefulness for passengers and cargo as a developmental place. I am rather happy that they decided to use the white elephant symbol. I know they will have a great deal of help from the opposition in drawing attention to the symbol over a period of time and that will, no doubt, reinforce their campaign.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that the minister approves of the ad. While some people may applaud the ad and the operation of the airport, I can assure him and you, sir, that the taxpayers of Canada are not applauding the airport nor the ad.

I ask the minister if he is disregarding the comments of the international association of pilots. Does he not think the orange star, which in their view rates it as a deficient airport in terms of safety, should be taken into consideration, or does he not agree with their assessment? If he does not agree, is he going to take immediate steps to make sure that assessment is clarified? It seems to me the pilots are the logical people to assess the safety or otherwise of an airport.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I thought I had put the matter into perspective for the hon. member by indicating the ambulance response time. It is true that the location of Mirabel means it takes longer for ambulances to arrive than it does from the downtown centres of some of the smaller towns and cities nearby. There is a longer time-span for a large number of ambulances to arrive at Mirabel. On the other hand, Mirabel, unlike most airports, has a 24-hour ambulance service available, which has been used.

I think there is room for disagreement about the type of service that should be provided. I simply point out that I do not in any way diminish the view of the pilots about how they would like all conditions to be ideal, in an ideal world. This is a very small element compared to some of the elements they have noted at other airports with which red and black stars have been associated. Yet aircraft fly into those airports in great numbers. It is a relative matter that we have to weigh against all the other expenditures we could make in terms of air safety. I come back again to the over-all situation, which is that in allocating funds for air safety in Canada we have managed to produce about the safest civil aviation system in the world.

TRANSPORT

STEPS TO REDUCE DANGER AT RAILWAY CROSSINGS

Mr. F. A. Philbrook (Halton): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. In view of the fact that some railway crossings in Canada are proven death traps, including the one at Derry Road, Milton, in my riding of Halton, would the minister consider setting up a new, improved system to expedite requests for improvements to make these dangerous crossings secure through the use of crossbars and other safety devices?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, after the hon. member for Halton first drew to my attention the long delay with regard to some crossings, I initiated an investigation into the question. We will be looking at this matter very seriously to see what we can do to expedite approvals so that safety can be provided as quickly as possible.

* * *

AGRICULTURE

PAY-OUTS UNDER FED CATTLE STABILIZATION PROGRAM

Mr. Bert Hargrave (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture relating to the meeting of the Standing Committee on Agriculture last Tuesday, at which the minister made an announcement to the effect that there would be no pay-out for the fed cattle stabilization program for the first quarter of 1977—well over a year ago. The actual market price level for the first quarter of 1977 was some $2 lower than the last quarter of 1976, when there was a pay-out; and the costs of production for this period in 1977 were higher than in 1976.

• (1142)

Would the minister explain his rationale for arriving at the decision that there would be no pay-out for this period, other than the fact there will be no immediate election?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Agricultural Stabilization Act as it stands allows no pay-out for 1977.

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I have a very important question for the President of the Treasury Board which will further illustrate there is a mess in personnel administration regarding classification. However, as he is not here—he seems to be evading me—I will wait until Monday.

* * *

TRANSPORT

REPAIR OF BOXCARS TO SPEED UP MOVEMENT OF GRAIN

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, in view of the serious situation facing western grain producers, can the minister advise the House whether he has met with representatives of the railways to determine what steps can be taken to solve the current problems? Specifically, can he advise whether the railways have given him any undertaking that they are working on a crash program to repair boxcars for the movement of grain? It has been rumoured that if the railways find that the cost of repair is more than $500 per car, they push the boxcar into a siding.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the main work with the railways on the question of grain movement is done by the Canadian Wheat Board and the transportation committee. They do a very good job of working with the railways. When the Wheat Board feels that my intervention would be helpful, they let me know. I have, accordingly, been in touch with the railways from time to time.

The question of car repair was dealt with in the House yesterday and the day before. Essentially, I believe the situation is that most of the cars being repaired are not involved in the movement of grain. A significant number of cars would be suitable for the movement of grain but they require a large expenditure in being rebuilt for that purpose; perhaps a few thousand dollars.

* * *

AGRICULTURE

USE OF INLAND TERMINALS IN MOVEMENT OF GRAIN

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, in view of the serious situation facing western grain producers, can the Minister of Agriculture advise whether he has met with the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board to determine what use may be made of Canadian government inland terminals? In particular, has he discussed with the minister in charge of the Wheat Board their use for cleaning grain to export standards and the use of solid or unit trains to speed up the turnabout time so far as grain deliveries to the coast are concerned?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, there is an ongoing discussion about how we can improve the handling of grain. I am sure the hon. member is aware that we did use unit trains to transport grain to the coast. Every means available is being used to expedite the shipment of grain. There are some reservations on the part of some people in the trade about using government elevators, etc. Some people are suggesting that we should turn them over to the private sector, let the private sector operate them, and that that sector may be able to do it in a more efficient manner. When we do suggest turning them over to the private sector, they do not want us to turn them over at a reasonable cost; they want us to give them away. In most instances I object to this because taxpayers' money is involved in these grain elevators. The elevators should be used to their fullest extent by someone, but not given to the private sector.

NATIONAL REVENUE

CONFIDENTIALITY OF TAX FILES

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister: it follows from questions put by the right hon. member for Prince Albert and the Leader of the Opposition.

In light of the Deputy Prime Minister's concern and the concern of all members of parliament about the integrity of parliament and the decline in the trust of the public of Canada concerning the responsibilities and integrity of parliament, why is it that after an allegation has been made on the basis of alleged evidence that the cabinet may have been breaking the law, the government will not respond to that concern today to be certain that this cloud over the cabinet of Canada and the parliament of Canada is removed immediately?

Whether the matter should have been raised at the royal commission is irrelevant. It is now on the public record that there is an allegation that the cabinet of Canada was acting illegally, and knew it. How can the government let that stand for another day before the people of Canada?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I can clear up that point immediately. There has been no allegation that the cabinet of Canada has authorized illegalities. If that allegation has been made, then I deny its validity immediately.

Mr. Gillies: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. It seems to me that this is not an issue about which to split hairs. There is no question that someone has said there has been a letter. Certainly, it has been alleged there is a letter which suggested that the cabinet was informed they might be breaking the law. This was two years ago. That is in the public record. It will be in all the newspapers of Canada, it will be on television, and it is there. It is a matter of no consequence whatsoever whether the Deputy Prime Minister thinks that the cabinet did not break the law: it is there.

Until to the contrary evidence is put down in this parliament, that is what the people of Canada will believe, or at least will be suspicious of. Surely, in the interests of parliamentary democracy and the people of Canada, the Deputy Prime Minister will clear up this matter by tabling the letter so that this cloud will no longer hang over this institution.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, the key words used by the hon. gentleman were "until the evidence is put down".

Mr. Clark: Here in this House, to which you are responsible.

Mr. MacEachen: That has been my point. In the course of all the questioning there has been no suggestion of hiding anything; not at all.

Mr. Clark: Produce it.

Mr. MacEachen: The letter is in the possession of the royal commission. All the evidence can be put down before the royal commission, and that is the appropriate place for it.

An hon. Member: Like a criminal.

Mr. MacEachen: If the government is at fault, and if the evidence proves that, of course it will be known and parliament can take whatever action it wishes.

An hon. Member: It will be too late.

Mr. MacEachen: I think there is a difference of opinion between the hon. member and myself as to the proper course to follow.

Mr. Hees: He wants to open it up, and you want to hide it.

Mr. MacEachen: As I have already said, the place to hear the evidence, to get all the documents and to get the evidence of the ministers, is the royal commission; and it will come out. At that time conclusions will be drawn. In my view, it is certainly not appropriate to dribble out bits and pieces of the evidence in the House of Commons, in response to newspaper reports, and expect to get any judicial conclusion. I thought we set up the royal commission because we wanted a judicial process and not a political process. That is the difference of opinion between us.

* * *

FISHERIES

NEGOTIATIONS WITH U.S. ON WEST AND EAST COAST FISHING

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries. Last Friday the minister indicated that he had set the deadline of May 26, which is today, to receive an answer from the United States in terms of responding to his decision to take Canadian fishermen off the Swiftsure Bank.

Can the minister now advise the House whether he has received a response with regard to the Canadian action in removing pressure from the Swiftsure Bank? If he has not received a response, can the minister now advise us when he will set some kind of deadline, so that we have something firm about these negotiations?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I would have to check Hansard to see exactly what words I used. Regarding the idea of a deadline, my impression was that the two sides had agreed to meet today, May 26. We expect the American answer to be known later today, or possibly tomorrow if the talks continue. I will await the report of the special negotiators indicating the answer of the United States. Maybe the word "deadline" was taken from what I said, that we would not wait until the fishing season was over, because at that point our fishermen would have made a sacrifice which would be unacceptable to us.

● (1152)

Mr. Leggatt: As the minister knows, our fishermen have already made a sacrifice of one month with regard to fishing off the Swiftsure Bank. I should now like to direct the minister's attention to the east coast and the scallop fishery. The information I have is that the United States has doubled its fishing pressure on the scallop fishery, contrary to the interim agreement under which both sides had undertaken to maintain a consistent level of conservation. What steps does the minister propose to take, in response to U.S. pressure on the scallop fishery, to get them to comply with the interim agreement?

Mr. LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent): I agree that Canadian fishermen have sustained a loss in the Swiftsure closure. I should like to remind the hon. member, however, that the possibility of closing the Swiftsure Bank was very much part of the agreement. We did not agree on the conservation reasons put forward, but the fact remains it was within the terms of the agreement that the Bank could be closed and we did not want to leave an excuse for failure by the U.S. to live up to the rest of the agreement. We have lived up to our side of it, and we expect the United States to live up to its side.

As to the east coast, again the hon. member seems to indicate that Georges Bank is completely within the Canadian eventual zone. The fact is that part of Georges Bank will be within the eventual Canadian zone and part within the American. This is a disputed area. We think the United States' conservation performance in the scallop fishery in its part of the zone, or eventual zone, has not been wise. We feel the same way about the haddock fishery. That is what the discussions which took place yesterday in Halifax were about.

* * *

AGRICULTURE

DUMPING OF CANNED TOMATOES

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture: it has to do with canned whole tomatoes. I have raised this subject on more than one occasion with the minister and with the Minister of Finance. I want to quote one sentence only from the anti-dumping tribunal on canned whole tomatoes:

> The tribunal concludes . . . that a dumping of whole tomatoes from Taiwan has caused, is causing, and is likely to cause material injury to the production in Canada of like goods.

Will the minister assure the House and the processors that the tariff will be continued beyond early summer this year and that serious consideration will be given to the extension and increase of the tariff?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Tariff Board has just handed down a decision and I have not had time to review it with my colleagues. As soon as I do, we will make a statement.

Oral Questions

TRADE

CANADIAN REPRESENTATION AT GATT NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Deputy Prime Minister. The Prime Minister has agreed to send six Canadian labour leaders to Geneva to participate formally in the GATT negotiations which are going on in that city. Has thought been given to sending a similar contingent of Canadian agricultural leaders to put forward the views of Canadian agriculture at first hand?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member used the expression "formally participate". I would describe the process somewhat differently. We have made it possible for a group of labour leaders to meet with our delegation at Geneva to discuss the ongoing multilateral trade negotiations. We thought that was a useful thing to do. We have already arranged for provincial delegations to have a similar experience. Parallel arrangements have been made for business, and I am sure we could do the same for the agricultural community if a number of leaders wish to go to Geneva to discuss matters with our delegation.

* * *

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

APPLICATION OF PROGRAM TO WOMEN

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, my question was to have been directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. I notice he has had to leave, so I will direct it to the acting minister. Is the hon. gentleman aware that the Advisory Council on the Status of Women, meeting in Moncton recently, stated unanimously "that a biased and misleading document was one of the studies used as a basis for recent amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act".

The council was referring to the publication "Comprehensive Review of the Unemployment Insurance Program in Canada" released by the Minister of Employment and Immigration earlier this year which, the council said, contained "incredible statements about women and their use of the unemployment insurance scheme which bear no relation to the data". If the minister is aware of all this, does he agree with the council; or will he investigate these statements?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and the Environment): Mr. Speaker, my neighbour is out of the House temporarily, but his book is still here on his desk. He may come back before noon, in which case I will tell him about the hon. member's question.

[Mr. Whelan.]

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

LEGALITY OF GOVERNMENT ACTION RESPECTING TAX FILES

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Justice and the Solicitor General, I would like to ask the Deputy Prime Minister a question with reference to the agreement we have been discussing today. I listened carefully to the answers given to the right hon. member for Prince Albert and to the Leader of the New Democratic Party, and I gather from one of the answers given that this agreement is legal. Is that the personal, flimsy and elusive opinion of the Deputy Prime Minister, or is it an opinion he got from the Department of Justice?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): I have not today, nor did I yesterday, asked that question of the officers of the Department of Justice. What the Leader of the New Democratic Party asked me was whether this agreement had been approved by the government and whether I thought it was legal or illegal. I answered that it had been approved by the government and that in my opinion it is certainly a legal document. It is a legal execution. If the hon. member wants me to confirm my opinion with the Department of Justice, I will be happy to do so.

Mr. Woolliams: I am not asking whether the signatures were legal; I am asking about the meat, the content of the agreement. Did the cabinet, at that time in 1972, get an opinion from the Department of Justice to determine whether this agreement was, in substance, legal or illegal? The Deputy Prime Minister knows what I am talking about.

Mr. MacEachen: The hon. member asks me whether in 1972 a legal opinion was sought from the Department of Justice. That is not information which I have in my head. I will find out and tell the hon. member on Monday.

* * *

VETERANS AFFAIRS

DISPOSITION OF FORTHCOMING LEGISLATION

Mr. William Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Veterans Affairs, or Deputy Prime Minister in his capacity as leader of the House. Last night I asked when the bill on veterans affairs would be introduced. Later that evening the Minister of Veterans Affairs indicated that the first reading stage would proceed today. Has he cleared with the government House leader whether or not arrangements will be made for the bill to receive second reading and early passage next week?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): No decision has been taken as to when the bill will be brought forward. It will be brought forward, but I want to keep second reading of the tax bill under consideration by the House until it is passed, before we proceed with any other legislation.

An hon. Member: Lots of luck.

Mr. Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): Would it make any difference to the hon. gentleman's decision if we gave an assurance that it would receive speedy passage in one afternoon, possibly Tuesday of next week?

* * *

SHIPPING

NAVIGATION REGULATIONS FOR EAST COAST

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Early this week he tabled the findings of the judicial inquiry into the sinking of the CN ferry William Carson. The principal recommendation of Mr. Justice Noel was that regulations be put in place regarding the type and conduct of ships navigating off the coast of Labrador where they encounter Arctic ice.

My question is of some urgency because the service to Labrador from the island part of Newfoundland will commence again within a very short time and the replacement vessel is undergoing a refit. Will regulations be put into effect before the service is resumed, and will those regulations reflect the recommendations of Mr. Justice Noel?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think it would be more accurate to say the commission recommended that the minister undertake an inquiry into whether changes in the regulations should be made to provide additional levels of safety. We are undertaking that inquiry. It would obviously be ideal to have that in place before the summer movement of the new vessel into service, and we will be bearing that very much in mind as an objective.

● (1202)

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, has the minister sought the advice of the law officers of the Crown with respect to his responsibility vis-à-vis the liability of CN to compensate those who lost goods, automobiles and belongings on the William Carson, in light of the findings of Mr. Justice Noel which placed a great deal of the blame—in fact, the majority of the blame—on CN?

Mr. Lang: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have sought that advice.

* * *

POINTS OF ORDER

MR. KNOWLES (NORFOLK-HALDIMAND)—VETERANS LEGISLATION

Mr. William Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I asked the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald) and the Deputy Prime Minister

(Mr. MacEachen) about Tuesday as a possible day for introducing the veterans bill at second reading. The minister was about to answer. I wonder if he can tell me now whether it could be brought in on Tuesday for speedy passage.

Mr. Speaker: Order! I understood the minister to take into account the hon. member's offer of speedy passage of the bill, but he did not make an answer during the question period. Without the leave of the House I do not think I can permit him to answer now.

MR. MACEACHEN—CONFIRMATION OF LEGAL OPINION

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am rising on a separate point of order on a matter which is of interest to the justice critic of the Conservative party. He asked me whether a legal opinion had been received by the government with respect to an agreement. A legal opinion was received from the Department of Justice, and the law officers of the Crown advised that the agreement was legal and valid in all respects.

Mr. Alexander: What was the date of it?

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that we now have had reference made by the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen) to one of the documents that is referred to in relation to the agreement between the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and the Department of National Revenue to violate the confidentiality of tax files. In order that we might not deal with this in a fragmentary way but might have an opportunity to see the whole picture and all of the matters which are involved here, I wonder if the Deputy Prime Minister would make available to this House that legal opinion to which he has referred and the letter of the then minister of national revenue of some two years ago, which we understand raised very serious questions as to the legality of the action in which the Government of Canada was involved and to which, we presume, the legal opinion of the Department of Justice is a response.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I will raise the matter of the legal opinion with the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford). With respect to the other question, it was dealt with, I thought, fully and effectively in the question period.

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. The Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen) has now informed the House that a legal opinion on the 1972 agreement was provided by the Department of Justice. My point of order pertains to two aspects of that assertion by him. First, would he give us the date of that judgment? Was it made in 1972, or was it made subsequent to that time? Related to that, if the minister has now decided that it is appropriate to provide the House with that kind of information concerning a document which has come before the McDonald inquiry, why, logically, will he not go the appropriate step further and actually provide us with the letter which was alleged to have been written by a minister of the Crown in 1976 on the same subject matter?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, the agreement between the then solicitor general or the RCMP and the Department of National Revenue, which had as its purpose to accelerate the fight against organized crime, was made public months ago. It has been in the public domain, and it is in quite a different category from the matter which was the subject of the question period.

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order arising out of the questions today. I appreciate that I did not get Your Honour's eye today, but on the statement the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen) has made here today about a legal opinion, and a letter somewhat subsequent, is the Deputy Prime Minister, as a point of order, trying to suggest that there is no difference between evidence before a commission, whose terms of reference are the investigation of the RCMP, and an incident which arose in that investigation and examination suggesting illegal conduct of the cabinet to which the terms of reference of the royal commission do not extend? In that event would the Deputy Prime Minister not think that to clarify this matter, regardless of the evidence before the royal commission as to RCMP conduct, illegal or legal, there is some onus on the Deputy Prime Minister because of the allegation of illegality or an illegal agreement? Regardless of an opinion of law officers of the Crown in 1972, should the minister not clarify that now, since it has arisen now?

Does the Deputy Prime Minister put the McDonald royal commission investigating the RCMP and evidence before that commission—which properly, I agree, should be determined by that commission—together with the incident which was the subject matter of questions here by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark), the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) and everybody else, regarding an allegation by a minister suggesting the cabinet has been acting illegally? That is directly outside the terms of reference of the McDonald commission. It does not involve the RCMP. It is an allegation directed against the cabinet. Is the Deputy Prime Minister today trying to say that the two situations are the same? If they are not, surely he can clarify the matter by having the letter come before the House.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have allowed this dialogue to go on a bit because it followed a point of order raised by the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen) himself, who indicated that because he had made a certain answer during the question period and undertaken to inform the House about an opinion, and since he had it now, he was doing it now. However, I will certainly permit a response to the point just raised by the hon. member for Annapolis Valley (Mr. Nowlan), but I do not think we can permit it to go, procedurally, any further. The Deputy Prime Minister.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order—

[Mr. Broadbent.]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I indicated I would permit a response to the hon. member for Annapolis Valley (Mr. Nowlan), but this point ought not to go any further.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, the question asked by the hon. member is a further illustration of how a matter can be escalated. There has been no allegation before the McDonald royal commission that the cabinet authorized illegal acts. That is the first point to be clarified. The proceeding before the McDonald royal commission was of an entirely different character. In any event, both issues can be dealt with by the McDonald royal commission. The investigation of the RCMP, the conduct of ministers and how they behave—all of that is within the purview of the McDonald royal commission, and there is no obstacle before the commission in dealing with the total situation, including the interface of ministers with the department and law officers or the RCMP. There is no limit at all.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I wish to raise a brief point of order. I may have missed it, but I am almost sure the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen) did not indicate the date of that legal opinion of the law officers of the Crown, and I wonder if he will give us that date. If he does not have it at this particular moment, would he assure the House that he will let us know on Monday?

Mr. MacEachen: I will do that.

Mr. Speaker: Statements on motions.

MR. CLARK—NEUTRON BOMB POLICY

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Yesterday in response to questions from this side of the House concerning the speech of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) at the United Nations this afternoon, which will deal with the neutron bomb and Canada's policy in that regard, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Jamieson) said he saw no reason why there should not be a statement on motions expressing to the House of Commons the policy of the Government of Canada, rather than bypassing this House to express that policy in some other forum. I understood that he was going to enter into consultations with the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen), and I presumed that had in view the end of ensuring that the House of Commons would know what the policy of the Government of Canada is before that policy is expressed elsewhere.

I am rather surprised—and that is why I rise at this time—that the Deputy Prime Minister, who is also the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs, did not rise to tell the House of Commons the policy of the Government of Canada in relation to this matter, which was referred to by the minister as quite an important subject. I wonder if that was perhaps just another oversight on the part of the Deputy Prime Minister and if, in fact, he intends now to take advantage of the opportunity to rise and to tell parliament what is the policy of the government in this matter, rather than bypass parliament for another forum.

• (1212)

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, it is not an oversight. I had absolutely no intention of making a statement on motions with respect to the disarmament policy, and I do not accept for a moment that parliament is being bypassed when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) is making a statement before the United Nations on the question of disarmament. To suggest that parliament is being bypassed, I think, is an untenable position to take.

Mr. Clark: I wonder if I might—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) has been recognized on a point of order about statements by ministers. I do not think any of our procedures would permit this to become an argument.

MR. CLARK—ALLEGATION GOVERNMENT IGNORING HOUSE OF COMMONS

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a separate point of order. The Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen) today has indicated that we cannot ask questions and that he will not answer questions about matters that are before the McDonald royal commission. He has said that we will not hear statements about matters of policy which the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) would prefer to express before the United Nations. So that the House of Commons might know exactly about our diminished state, I wonder if the Acting Prime Minister might provide a list of those other forums at which government policy will be stated and government information made known, as the government carries on its consistent practice of ignoring the House of Commons, ignoring its responsibility to make statements of policy here, and consistently seeking forums other than the forum to which it is responsible to make its statements of policy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): The statement of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) is filled with distortions and inaccuracies. He said I had refused to answer questions on this subject. I spent about 40 minutes answering questions from himself—

An hon. Member: You said nothing.

Mr. MacEachen: —from the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), from the justice critic of the Conservative party, and from the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent). And the Leader of the Opposition has the gall to say I refused to answer questions! The country can see on television how foolish is the statement of the Leader of the Opposition.

To suggest that when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) makes a statement at the UN on disarmament he is bypassing parliament is a ridiculous assertion. The President of France, the Vice-President of the United States and, I understand, the Premier of Germany, are all making statements, and I hope there is no leader of the opposition in any of those countries so absurd as to suggest that they are casting a reflection on the elected representatives of the people when they are doing that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Those are republics, not parliamentary systems.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

PENSION ACT

AMENDMENT TO INCREASE PAYMENTS

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-58, to amend the Pension Act and the Compensation for Former Prisoners of War Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

* * *

[Translation]

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, a total of 114 questions will be answered today, more specifically questions Nos. 560 to 673 inclusive, and question No. 1,424.

I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

[Text]

PUBLIC WORKS

Questions Nos. 560-673—Mr. McKinley:

No. 560

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the Aaron Building, 1712 Carling Ave., Ottawa?
2. What is the cost per square foot?
3. Which departments are located there?
4. Who is the landlord?
5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?
6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 561

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the Abrams Building, 2620 Sheffield Road, Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 562

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the Alakantti-Liff Building, 222 Somerset St. W., Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 563

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the Allstate Building, 875 Carling Ave., Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 564

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the American Can Company, 145 Spruce St., Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 565

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the Aselford-Martin Building, 1725 Woodward Dr., Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 566

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the Bank Building, 491 Bank St., Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

[Mr. McKinley.]

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 567

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the Bank of Nova Scotia Building, 427 Preston St., Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 568

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the 80 Bayview Rd. Building, Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 569

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the Beamish Building, 1501 Carling Ave., Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 570

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the 717 Belfast Road Building, Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 571

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the Berger Building, 100 Metcalfe St., Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 572

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the Betcherman Building, 10 Beechwood Ave., Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 573

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the Billings Bridge Plaza, Riverside Dr., Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 574

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the Bonaventure Building, 301 Elgin St., Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 575

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the Bourque Memorial Building, 305 Rideau St., Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 576

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the Brock Building, 2780 Sheffield Road, Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 577

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the Brunswick Building, Bank at Lisgar St., Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 578

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the Burnside Building, 151 Slater St., Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 579

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the Canada Permanent Trust Bldg., 42-48 Sparks St., Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 580

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the Canadian Building, 219 Laurier Ave. W., Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 581

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the Canadian Labour Congress Bldg., 2841 Riverside Dr., Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 582

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the Canadian Legion Building, 359 Kent St., Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 583

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the Canadian Teachers Federation Building, 110 Argyle Ave., Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 584

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the Carlingwood Plaza Building, Carlingwood, Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 585

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the Centennial Towers, 400 Laurier Ave. W., Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 586

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the Century Building, 360 Lisgar St., Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 587

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the Chomley Building, 400 Cooper St., Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 588

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the City Centre Towers, 880 Wellington St., Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 589

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the Colonel By Campus, 281 Echo Drive, Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 590

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the Colonel By Towers, 969 Bronson Ave., Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 591

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the Commerce City Building, 1675 Russel Rd., Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 592

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the Commonwealth Building, 77 Metcalfe St., Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 593

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the Concord Building, 280 Albert St., Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 594

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the Congill Building, 275 Slater St., Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 595

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the Connelly Building, 2487 Kaladar Ave., Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 596

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the Copeland Building, 294 Albert St., Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 597

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the Corbet Building, 1339 Wellington St., Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 598

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the Crain Building, 270 Carling Ave., Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 599

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the Cross Canada Flights Bldg., Hunt Club Rd., Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 600

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the D.M. & M. Building, 2378 Holly Lane, Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 601

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the Darmont Building, 1306 Wellington St., Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 602

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the Dibblee Building, 2721 Highway 31, Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 603

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the Dustbane Building, 25 Pickering Place, Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 604

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the Dustbane-Dominion Building, 250 Tremblay Rd., Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 605

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the Elgar Building, 200 Elgin St., Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 606

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the Empire Building, 124 O'Connor St., Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 607

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the Export Development Bldg., 110 O'Connor St., Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 608

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the Fraser Building., 130 Bentley St., Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 609

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the French Canadian Institute Bldg., 316 Dalhousie St., Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 610

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the Fuller Building, 75 Albert St., Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 611

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the G.M.A.C. Building, 237 Argyle Ave., Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 612

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the General Building, 185 Somerset St. W., Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 613

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the Genco Building, 1129 St. Laurent Blvd., Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 614

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the Gillin Building, 141 Laurier Ave. W., Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 615

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the Goldstein Building, 177 Nepean St., Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 616

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the Grant-Unsworth Building, 322 Catherine St., Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 617

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the Greenberg Building, 100 Gloucester St., Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 618

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the Halifax Building, 309 Cooper St., Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 619

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the Halldon House, 2255 Carling Ave., Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 620

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the Highland Bldg., 505 St. Laurent Blvd., Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 621

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the Hull Building, 183 rue Principale, Hull, P.Q.?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 622

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the I.G.A. Building, 1650 Carling Ave., Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 623

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the Imperial Building, 251 Bank St., Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 624

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the Jelnor Building, 171 Nepean St., Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 625

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the Johannsen Building, 47-51 Young St., Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 626

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the Journal Building No. 1, 365 Laurier Ave. W., Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 627

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the Journal Building No. 2, 300 Slater St., Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 628

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the Kelly Building, 39 McArthur Rd., Vanier City, Ontario?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 629

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the Kenson Building, 225 Metcalfe St., Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 630

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the Kent-Albert Building, 150 Kent St., Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 631

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the Kent Professional Building, 381 Kent St., Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 632

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the Killeany Building, 460 O'Connor St., Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 633

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the Laurier-O'Connor Bldg., 251 Laurier Ave. W., Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 634

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the L'Esplanade Laurier Bldg., Laurier & O'Connor Sts., Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 635

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the Lisgar Bldg., 116 Lisgar St., Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 636

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the Liverpool Court, 1570 Liverpool Court, Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 637

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the Lord Elgin Plaza, 66 Slater St., Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 638

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the MacDonald Building, 123 Slater St., Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 639

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the Majestic Building, 396 Cooper St., Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 640

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the Maple Building, 227 Laurier Ave. W., Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 641

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the Martel Building, 270 Albert St., Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 642

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the Metcalfe Building, 88 Metcalfe St., Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 643

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the 200A Metcalfe Building, Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 644

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the Metro Centre—Block C, 1030 Innes Rd., Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 645

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the Museum Bldg., 2379 Holly Lane, Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 646

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the Narono Building, 354-366 Laurier Ave. W., Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 647

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the National Capital Commission Bldg., 7 Murray St., Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 648

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the National Drug Bldg., 205 Catherine St., Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 649

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the National Museum of Science & Technology, 1867 St. Laurent Blvd., Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 650

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the Nicol Bldg., 331 Cooper St., Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 651

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the O'Connor Bldg., 190 O'Connor St., Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 652

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the Ottawa Motor Sales Bldg., 860 Bank St., Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 653

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the Pebb Building, 2197 Riverside Dr., Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 654

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the Place Bell Canada Bldg., 160 Elgin St., Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 655

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the Place de Ville, Tower "A", 320 Queen St., Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 656

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the Place de Ville, Tower "B", 112 Kent St., Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 657

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the Place de Ville, Tower "C", 330 Sparks St., Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 658

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the Place de Ville, Podium, 300 Sparks St., Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 659

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the Place Vanier, Tower "A", 333 River Rd., Vanier City, Ontario?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 660

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the Place Vanier, Tower "B", 355 River Rd., Vanier City, Ontario?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 661

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the Place Vanier, Tower "C", 25 McArthur Rd., Vanier City, Ontario?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 662

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the 60 Queen St. Building, Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 663

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the 66 Queen St. Building, Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 664

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the Queensway Towers, 200 Isabella St., Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 665

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the Queenswest Block, 1600 Liverpool Court, Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 666

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the Rankin's Hardware Bldg., 20 James St., Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 667

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the R.C.A. Victor Bldg., 1517 Laperriere St., Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 668

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the Richmond Road Bldg., 1305 Richmond Rd., Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 669

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the Royal Trust Bldg., 116 Albert St., Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 670

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the S.B.I. Building, Billings Bridge, Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 671

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the Sanitary Laundry Building, 255 Argyle Ave., Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 672

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the Shirden Building, 308 Rideau St., Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

No. 673

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the Sir Guy Carleton Bldg., 161 Laurier Ave. W., Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

Mr. Frank Maine (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works and Minister of State for Science and Technology):

Question No.	(1) Square Feet	(2) Cost per Square Feet	(3) Department	(4) Landlord	(5) Expiry Date and Renewal	(6)	(7)
560	Nil	Nil	Nil	Nil	Terminated November 30, 1976	Nil	Nil
561	30,339	(3 leases) $3.32 av. No. 1 1,936 at $3.29 No. 2 26,467 at $3.29 No. 3 1,936 at $3.75	Indian and Northern Affairs	Leo P. Abrams (Carleton) Ltd.	November 30, 1980 Final disposition not yet determined	Nil	Nil
562	Nil	Nil	Nil	Nil	Terminated November 30, 1976	Nil	Nil
563	3,976	$4.40	Department of Public Works	Lieff Holdings Limited	April 30, 1980 Final disposition Not yet determined	Nil	Nil
564	45,838	$1.81	Indian and Northern Affairs (Indian Arts and Craft Centre)	Domanial Holding Co. Ltd.	April 30, 1978 Yes	Nil	Nil
565	66,912 off. 138 storage plus 89 parking spaces	*See below $6.75 off. $2.50 storage *No. 1 67,050 at $6.74 expires June 30, 1985 No. 2 89 parking stalls at $144.00 ea. expires June 30, 1980	Public Service Commission.	Garth Aselford Ltd. and J. Walton Martin Ltd.	June 30, 1985 Office and Storage June 30, 1980 Parking Final disposition not yet determined	Nil	Nil
566	7,044	$4.00	National Museums of Canada	Shenkman Corp. Ltd.	January 31, 1979 Final disposition not yet determined	Nil	Nil
567	3,265 (3,178 office) (87 storage)	$5.20	Agriculture	Prescott Realties Ltd.	June 30, 1978. Final disposition not yet determined	Nil	Nil
568	640	$3.75	National Museum of Canada	National Capital Commission	Monthly Final disposition not yet determined	Nil	Nil
569	22,558	$3.90	National Museum of Canada	R.A. Beamish Stores Co. Ltd.	August 31, 1979 Final disposition not yet determined	Nil	Nil
570	12,369	$5.50	Energy, Mines and Resources	Sheffield Industrial Park Ltd.	March 31, 1979 Final disposition not yet determined	Nil	Nil
571	186,264	(5 leases) No. 1 96,174 at $4.49 No. 2 3,700 at $2.00 No. 3 83,852 at $4.82 No. 4 218 at $2.00 No. 5 2,320 at $2.00	Canadian Radio and Television Commission, Department of Finance, Supply and Services Canada, Energy Mines and Resources, Public Service Commission.	Ottawa Commercial Realties Ltd.	No. 1 June 30, 1979 No. 2 June 30, 1979 No. 3 March 31, 1979 No. 4 December 31, 1977 No. 5 September 30, 1978 Final disposition not yet determined	4 parking spaces	Nil
572	Nil	Nil	Nil	Nil	Terminated June 30, 1975	Nil	Nil
573	24,000	$6.25	Veterans Affairs	S.B.I. Management Ltd.	April 30, 1978 No	Nil	Nil

[Mr. McKinley.]

Question No.	(1) Square Feet	(2) Cost per Square Feet	(3) Department	(4) Landlord	(5) Expiry Date and Renewal	(6)	(7)
574	60,000	$5.98	National Health and Welfare, Public Works and Industry, Trade and Commerce	Sardina Investments Ltd. c/o E.D. Berry in Trust	April 30, 1980 Final disposition not yet determined	Nil	Nil
575	227,149	$6.06	Manpower and Immigration, Supply and Services Canada, National Health and Welfare	Immeubles Laurentian Realties Ltd.	September 30, 1986 Final disposition not yet determined	Nil	Nil
576	22,000	$2.95	Transport Canada	Sheffield Industrial Park	January 31, 1986 Final disposition not yet determined	Nil	Nil
577	37,650 (office) 5,980 (storage)	$3.47 (office) $2.50 (storage)	Consumer and Corporate Affairs, Environment, National Museums of Canada	Levine Realty Co. Ltd.	February 28, 1981 Final disposition not yet determined	5,000 in basement	Nil
578	16,541	(3 leases) 6.29 av. No. 1 10,557 at $7.00 No. 2 2,235 at $4.79 No. 3 3,749 at $5.20	International Joint Commission, Indian and Northern Affairs, Manpower and Immigration	Metcalfe Realty Co.	No. 1 November 30/77 extended to February 28/78 No. 2 January 31/78 No. 3 January 31/78 extended to March 31/78 No. 1 and 3 final disposition not yet determined No. 2 terminating January 31/78	1,546	Nil
579	12,000	$4.10	Privy Council Office	National Capital Commission	April 30, 1978 Final disposition not yet determined	Nil	Nil
580	198,675	(2 leases) No. 1 1,718 at $3.70 No. 2 196,957 at $3.09	Anti-Inflation Review Board, Supply and Services, Secretary of State, Regional Economic Expansion	Ottawa Commercial Realties	June 30, 1978 Final disposition not yet determined	7,217 (basement) 6,828 (6th floor)	Nil
581	5,429	(2 leases) No. 1 1,396 at $5.57 No. 2 4,033 at $5.42	Agriculture, Supply and Services Canada	Canadian Labour Congress	No. 1 October 31, 1978 No. 2 January 31, 1979 Final disposition not yet determined	Nil	Nil
582	19,206	$7.00	Supply and Services Canada, Public Works Canada, Consumer and Corporate Affairs	Royal Canadian Legion	April 30, 1980 Final disposition not yet determined	Nil	Nil
583	5,684	$5.91	National Museum of Canada	Canadian Teacher's Federation	June 30, 1986 Final disposition not yet determined	Nil	Nil
584	Nil	Nil	Nil	Nil	Terminated August 31, 1977	Nil	Nil
585	372,849 (257 parking spaces)	(5 leases) No. 1 190,280 at $3.75 p.s.f. 6,428 at $2.00 p.s.f. 24,650 at $0.50 p.s.f. 221,358 sq. ft. No. 2 71,571 at $5.75 p.s.f. 1,000 at $2.00 p.s.f. 72,571 sq. ft. No. 3 21,080 at $5.45 p.s.f. No. 4 13,684 at $5.38 No. 5 37,582 at $3.75 p.s.f. 4,374 at $5.00 p.s.f. 2,200 at $0.50 p.s.f. 44,156 sq. ft.	Indian and Northern Affairs (Administration Program), Canadian Transport Commission, National Health and Welfare, Supply and Services Canada	Campeau Corporation Co. Ltd.	No. 1 July 31, 1980 No. 2 July 31, 1979 No. 3 July 31, 1978 No. 4 July 31, 1980 No. 5 September 30, 1980 Final disposition not yet determined	Nil	Nil
586	125,325	(2 leases) No. 1 114,000 at $4.80 No. 2 11,325 at $2.00	Revenue Canada (Taxation), Public Works Canada, Energy, Mines and Resources, Industry, Trade and Commerce and Secretary of State	Cyrand Investments Ltd. and Levine Realty Co. Ltd.	May 31, 1978 No	1 parking space	Nil
587	129,423	(3 leases) No. 1 12,489 at $10.00 No. 2 113,789 at $ 7.15 2,956 at $ 3.25 No. 3 189 at $ 4.76	Manpower and Immigration, Unemployment Insurance Commission, Public Service Commission, Royal Canadian Mounted Police	Chomley Investments	No. 1 July 31, 1981 No. 2 October 30, 1980 October 30, 1980 No. 3 October 30, 1980 Final disposition not yet determined	Nil	Nil
588	57,331 and 80 parking stalls	(5 leases) No. 1 31,845 at $4.10 No. 2 9,579 at $2.13 No. 3 6,742 at $1.95 No. 4 6,169 at $1.81	Energy, Mines and Resources, House of Commons, Fisheries and the Environment	City Centre Developments Ltd.	No. 1 December 31, 1977 No. 2 September 30, 1978 No. 3 February 28, 1979 No. 4 February 28, 1979 No. 5 February 29, 1979	4,099 and 6 parking spaces	Nil

Order Paper Questions

Question No.	(1) Square Feet	(2) Cost per Square Feet	(3) Department	(4) Landlord	(5) Expiry Date and Renewal	(6)	(7)
		No. 5 2,996 at $1.99			Terminating 18,845 December 31, 1977 Final disposition not yet determined
589	Nil	Nil	Nil	Nil	Terminated October 31, 1976	Nil	Nil
590	20,510	$4.91	National Health and Welfare	Campeau Corporation	December 31, 1977 renegotiated to May 31/78 No	Nil	Nil
591	14,812	$3.70	Environment Canada	Commerce City Investments Ltd.	August 31, 1981 Final disposition not yet determined	Nil	Nil
592	5,215	(2 leases) No. 1 1,517 at $4.45 No. 2 3,698 at $3.92	Secretary of State	N.D.M. Leaseholds (Nathan David and Max Zelikovitz)	No. 1 June 30, 1978 No. 2 March 31, 1978 No.	Nil	Nil
593	Nil	Nil	Nil	Nil	Terminated October 31, 1977	Nil	Nil
594	202,660	(4 leases) No. 1 1,382 at $3.00 No. 2 540 at $2.10 No. 3 198,968 at $4.78 No. 4 1,770 at $2.10	Cdn. Transport Commission, Atomic Energy of Canada, Cdn. Patents and Development, Statistics Canada, D.S.S.	Standard Life Assurance Co.	No. 1 May 31, 1978 No. 2 October 31, 1978 No. 3 October 31, 1978 No. 4 October 31, 1978 Final disposition not yet determined	2 parking spaces	Nil
595	23,393	$1.51	National Museums of Canada	C.L. Connelly	October 31, 1978 Final disposition not yet determined	Nil	Nil
596	55,000	$6.25	Ministry of Transport	Robert E. Simon	March 31, 1978 No	Nil	Nil
597	Nil	Nil	Nil	Nil	Terminated November 30, 1976	Nil	Nil
598	Nil	Nil	Nil	Nil	Terminated September 30, 1977	Nil	Nil
599	28,346	$5.26	Energy, Mines and Resources	Cross Canada Flights Ltd.	May 31, 1978 Yes	Nil	Nil
600	10,568	$4.50	National Museums of Canada	D.M. & M. Realties Ltd.	July 31, 1978 Final disposition not yet determined	Nil	Nil
601	9,466	$2.91	National Museums of Canada	Darmont Holdings Ltd.	December 31, 1980 Final disposition not yet determined	Nil	Nil
602	21,766	(2 leases) No. 1 19,766 square feet at $3.54 No. 2 (shed) 2,000 square feet at $0.50	Environment Canada	Dibblee Construction Ltd. and Iruck Investments Ltd.	No. 1 January 31, 1979 No. 2 November 30, 1978 Final disposition not yet determined	Nil	Nil
603	14,300	$4.79	Environment Canada	Dustbane Enterprises Ltd.	October 31, 1978 No	Nil	Nil
604	103,112	(5 leases) No. 1 11,957 at $6.05 p.s.f. No. 2 41,840 at $4.65 p.s.f. No. 3 4,500 at $4.65 p.s.f. No. 4 41,472 at $4.65 p.s.f. No. 5 3,343 at $5.80 p.s.f.	Royal Canadian Mounted Police	The Manufacturers Life Insurance Co.	No. 1 July 31, 1979 No. 2 July 31, 1978 No. 3 July 31, 1978 No. 4 October 31, 1978 No. 5 December 31, 1979 Final disposition not yet determined	Nil	Nil
605	118,330	$3.39	National Defence	Bert Loeb	May 31, 1978 Yes	Nil	Nil
606	2,785	$6.00	Indian and Northern Affairs	Uniprop Holdings Ltd.	June 30, 1978 No	Nil	Nil
607	112,665	$5.14	Anti-Inflation Review Board, D.S.S., National Defence, Secretary of State, Statistics Canada, Canadian Penitentiary Service, Indian and Northern Affairs	Narono Holdings Ltd.	October 31, 1979 Final disposition not yet determined	413 square feet (basement)	Nil
608	65,389	$2.98	Energy, Mines and Resources	Greenside Developments Ltd.	January 31, 1985 Final disposition not yet determined	Nil	Vacating 65,389
609	5,808	$5.25	Manpower and Immigration	L'Institut Canadien Français d'Ottawa	September 30, 1980 Final disposition not yet determined	Nil	Nil
610	50,385	(5 leases) No. 1 700 at $4.50 No. 2 33,398 at $4.50 No. 3 2,926 at $5.00 No. 4 11,687 at $3.77	National Museums of Canada Secretary of State	Metcalfe Realty Co.	No. 1 October 31, 1978 No. 2 October 31, 1978 No. 3 October 31, 1978 No. 4 December 31, 1977 No. 5 October 31, 1978	2,461 (basement)	Nil

[Mr. Maine.]

Question No.	(1) Square Feet	(2) Cost per Square Feet	(3) Department	(4) Landlord	(5) Expiry Date and Renewal	(6)	(7)
		No. 5 1,674 at $5.00			Terminating 14,248 December 31, 1977 Remainder, disposition not yet determined
611	3,620	$5.95	National Museums of Canada	Retno Limited	April 30, 1980 Final disposition not yet determined	Nil	Nil
612	6,176	$4.40	National Defence	Freedman Realty Co. Ltd.	September 30, 1978 Final disposition not yet determined	Nil	Nil
613	1,945	$7.90	Unemployment Insurance Commission	Robert M. Gencher	April 30, 1978 Final disposition not yet determined	Nil	Nil
614	78,974	(2 leases) No. 1 70,000 at $3.58 No. 2 8,974 at $5.95	National Museums of Canada C.E. and I.C.	Gillin Engineering and Construction Ltd.	February 29, 1980 Final disposition not yet determined	10,000	Nil
615	Nil	Nil	Nil	Nil	Terminated November 30, 1977	Nil	Nil
616	13,804	$2.34	Energy, Mines and Resources National Museums of Canada	Hugh M. Grant Ltd.	October 31, 1979 Final disposition not yet determined	Nil	Nil
617	5,482	$4.75	National Defence	Kenneth Radnoff in Trust	September 30, 1981 Final disposition not yet determined	Nil	Nil
618	21,555	$5.50	E.M.R.	North Cooper Limited	July 31, 1978 Final disposition not yet determined	Nil	Nil
619	No record in DPW Inventory
620	75	$6.67	Royal Canadian Mounted Police—antenna	Wesman Holdings Ltd.	September 30, 1982 Final disposition not yet determined	Nil	Nil
621	Nil	Nil	Nil	Nil	Terminated September 30, 1976	Nil	Nil
622	23,036	$4.00	Revenue Canada (Customs)	Northern Telecom Ltd.	March 31, 1979 Final disposition not yet determined	78 Parking spaces	Nil
623	6,412	$5.40	Solicitor General	McRae Holdings Ltd.	May 31, 1979 Final disposition not yet determined	Nil	Nil
624	23,130 and 2,867	$5.40 and $2.00	National Defence	Granum Ltd.	March 31, 1978 Final disposition not yet determined	2,276 (basement)	Nil
625	19,580	$3.00	Transport Canada	Secemb Investments Ltd.	September 30, 1979 Final disposition not yet determined	Nil	Nil
626	238,917	$6.25	Solicitor General, National Defence, Supply and Services, National Health and Welfare, Canadian Transport Commission, Indian and Northern Affairs, Tarriff Board	1) The Journal Publishing Co. of Ottawa Ltd. 2) Campeau Corporation	February 28, 1979 Final disposition not yet determined	Nil	Nil
627	286,924	(2 leases) No. 1 278,065 at $7.25 7,419 at $3.50 No. 2 1,440 at $8.75	Communications, Atomic Energy of Canada Ltd., Treasury Board, Labour, Solicitor General, M.O.T. Justice	Campeau Corporation	April 30, 1980 Final disposition not yet determined	39,270	54,047
628	10,065 and 9,670	$4.35 and $3.25	National Museums of Canada	Jelnor Holdings Ltd.	July 31, 1980 Final disposition not yet determined	Nil	Nil
629	4,931 16,069	(2 leases) No. 1 4,931 at $5.50 No. 2 16,069 at $5.50	Consumer and Corporate Affairs, Supply and Services Canada, National Defence	Riverside Terrace (Ottawa) Ltd.	July 31, 1978 Termination 6,517 January 31, 1978 balance, final disposition not yet determined	Nil	Nil
630	104,116	(8 leases) No. 1 11,837 at $3.00 No. 2 10,747 at $5.50 No. 3 14,650 at $6.25 No. 4 7,232 at $8.50 No. 5 29,300 at $6.25	Industry Trade and Commerce, National Film Board, Privy Council, Science Council of Canada, Solicitor General, National Parole Board, National Museums	Dolly Holdings Ltd., Willowdale, Ontario	No. 1 October 31, 1979 No. 2 October 31, 1979 No. 3 January 31, 1978 No. 4 October 31, 1979 No. 5 February 2, 1978 No. 6 July 31, 1979	Nil	Nil

Order Paper Questions

Question No.	(1) Square Feet	(2) Cost per Square Feet	(3) Department	(4) Landlord	(5) Expiry Date and Renewal	(6)	(7)
		No. 6 14,650 at $4.20 No. 7 14,650 at $4.20 No. 8 1,050 at $9.50			No. 7 July 31, 1979 No. 8 October 31, 1979 29,300 terminate February 28, 1978 balance, final disposition not yet determined
631	13,865 and 500	$6.25 and $2.50	Tax Review Board	381 Realty Ltd.	March 31, 1979 Final disposition not yet determined	Nil	Nil
632	115,829	(2 leases) $6.95 (average) No. 1 8,242 at $3.00 p.s.f. No. 2 107,587 at $7.25 p.s.f.	Public Service Commission	Kelleany Corporation Ltd.	October 31, 1985 Final disposition not yet determined	4,914 (basement)	Nil
633	9,982	$4.90	Manpower and Immigration	N.D.M. Leaseholds	September 30, 1979 Final disposition not yet determined	Nil	Nil
634	882,247	(4 leases) No. 1 841,567 at $ 6.95 No. 2 2,399 at $18.00 No. 3 20,300 at $ 6.75 No. 17,981 at $ 3.00 Parking 300 at $480.00 per stall per annum	Insurance, National Defence, Public Service Commission U.I.C., Manpower and Immigration, National Museums of Canada, Public Works, Public Service Staff Relations Board, D.S.S., National Health and Welfare	Olympia and York Developments Ltd.	(Lease Purchase) No. 1 June 30, 2010 No. 2 February 28, 1986 No. 3 June 30, 1986 No. 4 June 30, 1981 Parking 300 expires August 31, 1980	Nil	Nil
635	26,122	(2 leases) No. 1 6,443 at $6.05 No. 2 19,679 at $5.19 (approx.)	Environment Immigration Appeal Board	Logawi Holdings Ltd.	No. 1 January 31, 1978 No. 2 March 31, 1979 Terminate 6,443 January 31, 1978 balance, final disposition not yet determined	2 parking spaces 3,982	Nil
636	31,934	$3.65	Indian and Northern Affairs	Merkburn Holdings Ltd.	December 31, 1980 Final disposition not yet determined	Nil	Nil
637	246,125	(6 leases) No. 1 17,790 at $6.80 No. 2 200 at $2.10 No. 3 91,356 at $5.00 No. 4 64, 587 at $5.76 No. 5 2,348 at $7.99 No. 6 69,844 at $4.91	Supply and Services Canada, National Defence, Cdn. Intergovernmental Conference, Secretary of State, Anti-Inflation Board	Ottawa Elgin Investments Ltd.	No. 1 June 30, 1982 No. 2 January 31, 1979 No. 3 March 31, 1979 No. 4 August 31, 1977 No. 5 March 31, 1979 No. 6 July 31, 1979 Final disposition to be determined	27,484	Nil
638	99,070	$5.90	National Revenue (Taxation)	Metcalfe Realty Ltd.	December 31, 1979 Final disposition not yet determined	32 parking spaces	Nil
639	23,025	$4.25	Environment of Canada	Shirden Investments Ltd.	August 31, 1978 Final disposition not yet determined	Nil	Nil
640	16,133	$2.07	Anti-Inflation Review Board	Landis Realty Ltd.	June 30, 1978 Final disposition not yet determined	Nil	Nil
641	127,909	$7.11	Ministry of Science and Technology, Supply and Services Canada, Atomic Energy Control Board, Industry, Trade and Commerce, Finance	270 Albert Realty Ltd.	August 31, 1980 Final disposition not yet determined	Nil	Nil
642	105,064	(2 leases) No. 1 99,832 at $5.01 No. 2 5,232 at $5.05	National Revenue (Taxation)	Metcalfe Realty Ltd.	December 31, 1979 (2 leases) Final disposition not yet determined	Nil	Nil
643	992	$4.15 Treasury Board and Finance to January 1976 Sublet to the Ottawa Rape Crises Centre in April 1976 to March 1978.		Daniel Komesh	March 31, 1978 No	Nil	Nil
644	65,516	$3.02	National Museums of Canada	Admiral Leaseholds Ltd.	April 30, 1995 Final disposition to be determined	Nil	Nil
645	42,000	$3.75	National Museums of Canada	D.M. & M. Realty Ltd.	June 30, 1982 Final disposition to be determined	Nil	Nil
646	110,328	(3 leases) No. 1 105,418 at $4.49 No. 2 4,072 at $2.10 No. 3 838 at $9.00	National Defence, Supply and Services Canada	Narono Holdings Ltd. c/o Goldberg, Shinder, Schmelzer and Gardner	No. 1 July 31, 1984 No. 2 July 31, 1978 No. 3 July 31, 1981 Final disposition to be determined	Nil	Nil

[Mr. Maine.]

Question No.	(1) Square Feet	(2) Cost per Square Feet	(3) Department	(4) Landlord	(5) Expiry Date and Renewal	(6)	(7)
647	16,454	$1.50	National Museums of Canada	National Capital Commission	Month to month to December, 1979 Final disposition to be determined	Nil	Nil
648	28,300	$2.59	Statistics Canada	Bechard Investments (North Bay) Ltd.	July 31, 1978 Final disposition to be determined	4,010 storage	Nil
649	141,772	$2.82	National Museums of Canada	Gerku Investments Ltd.	March 31, 1987 Final disposition to be determined	Nil	Nil
650	Nil	Nil	Nil	Nil	Terminated November 30, 1976	Nil	Nil
651	56,782	$6.08	National Defence	Sol Shabinski, David Reid, Herbert Cohen, Moshe Feig, Herman Goldstein, and Sybil Greenberg-Mirsky	November 30, 1977 Yes	Nil	Nil
652	Nil	Nil	Nil	Nil	Terminated September 30, 1976	Nil	Nil
653	27,492	(2 leases) $4.78 average No. 1 765 at $4.00 p.s.f. No. 2 26,727 at $4.80 p.s.f.	Statistics Canada, Pensions Advocats Bureau, Canadian Dairy Commission	Riverside Terrace (Ottawa) Ltd.	October 31, 1979 (both leases) Final disposition to be determined	Nil	12,187
654	434,504	(2 leases) No. 1 433,979 at $5.86 No. 2 525 at $5.50	Finance, Treasury Board, Supply and Services Canada, National Health and Welfare, Inspector General of Banks	Olympia & York Developments Ltd.	November 30, 1979 (both leases) Final disposition to be determined	Nil	Nil
655	238,207	(12 leases) $4.83 average No. 1 1,932 at $ 2.00 No. 2 6,027 at $ 6.50 No. 3 1,488 at $ 6.50 No. 4 1,319 at $ 5.50 No. 5 1,547 at $ 5.50 No. 6 1,957 at $ 5.77 No. 7 215,163 at $ 4.82 No. 8 905 at $ 5.77 No. 9 2,463 at $ 2.00 No. 10 2,780 at $ 2.00 No. 11 1,803 at $ 5.34 No. 12 823 at $10.00	National Harbours Board, St. Lawrence Seaway Authority, Supply and Services Canada, National Health and Welfare, M.O.T.	Campeau Corporation Ltd.	No. 1 March 31, 1983 No. 2 December 31, 1980 No. 3 June 30, 1978 No. 4 June 30, 1981 No. 5 June 30, 1981 No. 6 June 30, 1978 No. 7 March 31, 1983 No. 8 June 30, 1978 No. 9 May 31, 1980 No. 10 March 31, 1983 No. 11 October 31, 1981 No. 12 September 30, 1979 Final disposition to be determined	Nil	Nil
656	Nil	Nil	Nil	Nil	September 30, 1977 Building vacated December 8, 1977 No	Nil	Nil
657	541,568	(4 leases) *No. 1 560,268 at $5.77 No. 2 6,300 at $8.73 No. 3 27,326 at $6.44 No. 4 998 at $2.00 *See also question No. 658 includes 53,324 sq. ft. in Place de Ville, Podium Bldg.	Transport Canada, Supply and Services Canada	Campeau Corporation Ltd.	No. 1 October 31, 1981 No. 2 October 31, 1981 No. 3 October 31, 1981 No. 4 April 30, 1982 Final disposition to be determined	Nil	Nil
658	53,324 Included in Lease No. 1 of Tower "C" See question No. 657	$5.77	Public Works Canada, Justice, National Revenue (Taxation) Farm Products Marketing Council, MOT	Campeau Corporation Ltd.	October 31, 1981 Final disposition to be determined	33,990	Nil
659	185,726	(7 leases) No. 1 113,400 at $4.66 No. 2 4,847 at $5.25 No. 3 15,904 at $4.75 No. 4 4,731 at $4.66 No. 5 670 at $4.66 No. 6 40,500 at $4.49 No. 7 5,674 at $2.25	Economic Council of Canada, Canada Pension Plan, National Sports and Recreational Centre, National Health and Welfare, Supply and Services, Unemployment Insurance Commission	Bona Bldg. and Management Ltd.	No. 1 October 31, 1981 No. 2 June 30, 1978 No. 3 October 31, 1981 No. 4 September 30, 1979 No. 5 February 28, 1979 No. 6 September 30, 1979 No. 7 October 31, 1981 Final disposition to be determined	Nil	90,629
660	218,821	(5 leases) No. 1 213,720 at $4.66 No. 2 1,200 at $3.50 No. 3 2,000 at $3.50 No. 4 1,463 at $3.25 No. 5 438 at $3.25	Unemployment Insurance Commission, National Health and Welfare, Canada Pension Plan, National Sports and Recreation, Urban Affairs and Housing, Royal Canadian Mint, Government Annuities Branch, Manpower and Immigration, Public Works Canada, National Defence	Bona Bldg. and Management Company Ltd.	No. 1 October 31, 1981 No. 2 July 31, 1980 No. 3 April 30, 1979 No. 4 August 31, 1980 No. 5 October 31, 1981 Final disposition to be determined	Nil	55,089
661	90,243	(3 leases) No. 1 87,048 at $ 7.20 No. 2 2,173 at $10.00 No. 3 1,022 at $ 3.25	Manpower and Immigration, Central Mortgage and Housing, National Sports and Recreation Centre	Bona Bldg. and Management Company Ltd.	August 31, 1980 (3 leases) Final disposition to be determined	Nil	Nil

Order Paper Questions

Question No.	(1) Square Feet	(2) Cost per Square Feet	(3) Department	(4) Landlord	(5) Expiry Date and Renewal	(6)	(7)
662	Nil	Nil	Nil	Nil	Terminated August 6, 1976	Nil	Nil
663	4,476	$6.00	Treasury Board	National Arts Centre	July 31, 1978 No	Nil	Nil
664	Nil	Nil	Nil	Nil	Terminated October 31, 1976	Nil	Nil
665	31,947	$3.80	Indian and Northern Affairs	Queenswest Development	February 28,1985 Final disposal to be determined	Nil	Nil
666	15,505	$4.50	Library of Parliament	Rankin's Hardware	May 31, 1981 Final disposition to be determined	Nil	Nil
667	16,000	$2.35	Energy, Mines and Resources	Bill Cliff Ltd.	October 31, 1978 Final disposition to be determined	Nil	Nil
668	6,907	$5.10	Statistics Canada	Ernest W. Assaly & Thomas C. Assaly	August 31, 1978 No	Nil	Nil
669	3,151	$5.14	Unemployment Insurance Commission	Lander Holdings Ltd.	March 31, 1978 Final disposition to be determined	Nil	Nil
670	147,708	$7.25	Post Office, Supply and Services, Agriculture, Public Works, Revenue Canada (Customs)	Rolancia S.A. Societe Anonymous, Geneva Switzerland c/o S.B.I. Management Ltd. (Agents)	October 31, 1980 Final disposition to be determined	Nil	22,828
671	40,285	$3.90	National Health and Welfare	A.T. Rosenberg	May 31, 1978 Final disposition to be determined	Nil	Nil
672	9,936	1 (lease) 4.95 average 3,077 at $6.50 5,159 at $5.00 1,700 at $2.00	Manpower and Immigration	Corbert Investments Ltd.	October 31, 1980 Final disposition to be determined	Nil	Nil
673	179,715	$6.23	Regional Economical Expansion, National Health and Welfare, Supply and Services	One-Sixty-One Realty Ltd.	February 28, 1978 Final disposition not yet determined	10,441	Nil

STUDENT SUMMER EMPLOYMENT PROGRAM

Question No. 1,424—Mr. Marshall:

What is the salary scale for each student summer employment program under the various departments?

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): In so far as the Department of Employment and Immigration is concerned: Non-Career Oriented Summer Programs: Canada Employment and Immigration Commission: Native Internship—$4.34 per hour; Summer Job Corps—$100-$163 per week; Young Canada Works—Provincial Minimum Wage; Job Exploration by Students—Determined by Individual Employers—up to $4.25 per hour; Canada Manpower Centres for Students—$4.34 per hour, Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development; Indian High School Program—Provincial Minimum Wage; Indian Eskimo Recruitment and Development Program—Provincial Minimum Wage; Parks Recruitment—average $4.50 per hour; Parks Awareness—Provincial Minimum Wage; Northern Community—Minimum Wage (Yukon or Northwest Territories). Department of Health and Welfare: Health Activities Program—$135 per week; Non-medical Use of Drugs—$155-$200 per week. Department of National Defence; Reserves—$127.50 per week; Cadet Training—Nil; Community Assistance Program—$127.75 per week. Secretary of State; Hostel Program—$125-$160 per week; Student Community Services—$135 per week. Consumer and Corporate Affairs: Product Safety Program—$150 per week. Fisheries and Environment: Various levels depending on assigned job—$135 to $248 per week. Justice; Public Legal Education—$140 per week. Labour Canada; Labour—$140 per week. Solicitor General: Criminal Justice System—$5.00 per hour.

In so far as the Public Service Commission is concerned: Career-Oriented Summer Programs: The Public Service Commission administers three summer programs for which Treasury Board is responsible for establishing rates of pay. The rates in effect for the summer of 1978 are those that were established by Treasury Board in 1977.

(1) Rates for Summer Student Customs Officer (SCOP) Revenue Canada-Customs and Excise

	Rate per hour
Basic hiring rate (First summer of employment)	$4.50
Second summer of employment (With one summer's experience)	$4.90
Third and subsequent summers of employment (With two or more summer's experience)	$5.30

(2) Rates for Solicitor General Peace and Security Projects (SOL) Solicitor General

	Rate per hour
Basic hiring for all students	$5.00

(3) Rates for all other career-oriented summer programs.

Successfully Completed Academic Level

University	Techonogical	Rate per hour
Qualifying Year	1	$3.30
1	2	$3.70
2	3	$4.25
3		$4.75
4		$5.20
5		$5.60
6		$6.00
7		$6.40
8		$6.80

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: The questions enumerated by the parliamentary secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[Translation]

WAYS AND MEANS

INCOME TAX AND EXCISE TAX

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance) moved:

That the ways and means motion to amend the Income Tax Act and the Excise Tax Act laid upon the table, Thursday, May 25, 1978, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

* * *

[English]

INCOME TAX ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed, from Thursday, May 25, consideration of the motion of Mr. Chrétien that Bill C-56, to amend the statute law relating to income tax and to authorize payments related to provincial sales tax reductions, be read the second time and referred to the committee of the whole, and of the amendment (Mr. Broadbent) (p. 5548).

Mr. F. A. Philbrook (Halton): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to speak in this debate today. I should like to restrict my remarks to the budget. This is one of the measures I consider to be one of the most important that the Government of Canada has ever initiated because I think it tries to answer two main challenges in this country. The first challenge is the economy. If we had a plan to propose to the Canadian people to reduce prices for the shopper, to stimulate sales for the storekeeper, to encourage use of savings, to boost manufacturing indirectly, and to give an over-all boost to the economy, including reducing inflation which is the underlying factor in the whole set of our economic problems, we would probably all accept it eagerly.

Our second challenge is federal-provincial cooperation where there is a new thrust as part of our whole national unity picture, where admittedly we have problems in such a big country with strong and varied regional interests, with cyclical changes throughout our history in terms of centralized versus regional power, with the present trend toward increasing provincial power but still with a need for a strong central government in the interests of national unity, international competitiveness, fairness and equity across the country. Certainly with regard to these two challenges, the economy and federal-provincial co-operation, this is the sort of promise held out by at least one recent Government of Canada initiative in the last budget, namely, the proposed retail sales tax cut announced in the April budget by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien).

As we know, this type of tax cut, novel in our history, was agreed to in general at the federal-provincial economic summit conference in February, here in Ottawa. It was recommended before that, and since then, by many prominent economists in this country, and it seemed to have the general agreement of all the provinces except Quebec which delayed its decision until after the budget announcement and then, to the surprise of many of us, bucked the deal, which we can only interpret as typical separatist tactics.

Oddly enough, in the meantime many political forces which we would normally consider federalist seemed to have sided with the stand of the separatist provincial Parti Québécois government. For example, the western provinces have had second thoughts on it, federal opposition parties have expressed concern, Quebec opposition parties have sided with the Parti Québécois government, and even the new Quebec Liberal leader, Mr. Ryan, did so, although the other leadership contender, Mr. Garneau, took a rather courageous, constructive federalist approach on this, initially at least; and the media took a similar stand, curiously enough.

Who then still supports this deal? Certainly the Atlantic provinces in general do. The maritime provinces have done so, partly, I suppose, because all their expenses will be paid in this tax cut by the federal government. The province of Ontario supported this measure. It needs this measure and stands to benefit highly from it, if not more than any other province. Ontario still supports this measure, even though it has become somewhat quiet as this debate has become more heated.

• (1222)

There was a great deal of positive reaction in the editorial pages across Canada. I will not repeat the list of 17 media sources which I have in my possession. These sources represent all parts of the country. Their reaction to the announcement of the Minister of Finance was very positive.

Mr. Gillies: Including Quebec?

Mr. Philbrook: Yes, including Quebec. There were positive reactions in the editorials of newspapers such as Le Devoir, Le Droit, the Montreal Star and the Montreal Gazette. Also there were positive reactions in various regions of the country such as the maritimes. The tax cuts were welcomed in the maritimes for obvious reasons. Premier Moores of Newfoundland complained that this measure helped Ontario and western Canada more than any other part of the country. At least that can be refuted to some extent.

The province of Alberta did not benefit directly because it has no retail sales tax. I should point out that Alberta received the benefit of a great deal of supportive measures in the budget for its petroleum industry. The Canadian Chamber of Commerce indicated that its executive director, Mr. Sam Hughes, was grinning like a Cheshire cat. Obviously he was pleased. Mr. John Bulloch, a small business leader, seemed pleased with the measure. In general, business leaders from the financial community were relieved that big government spending was avoided. They felt that the budget was unusually good in avoiding inflationary pressures.

Big business and retailers in the province of Ontario seem to favour the budget in moderate tones, and were pleased with the incentives for consumer spending. Ontario Treasurer Darcy McKeough said that he thought the retail sales cuts would help accelerate the province's slow rate of growth. According to recent reports, Ontario has had one of the slowest growth rates, if not the slowest, whereas it used to have the fastest. Mr. McKeough indicated that production and employment can expand through consumer purchasing. Mr. McKeough and other sources, such as the Science Council of Canada, were pleased with the incentives in the budget for research and development. Those incentives will stimulate the economy in the long term.

Financial leaders who have been critical of the economic policies of Canada in the past also spoke positively of the budget, for example, Mr. Douglas Peters, the Vice-President and Chief Economist of the Toronto-Dominion Bank, and Mr. William Mackness of Pitfield Mackay Ross, investment dealers.

The Canadian auto industry is based mainly in Ontario. For example, Ford of Canada in Oakville said it expected the 3 per cent tax cut would rev up its business to near record sales, especially since it came in time for its peak selling period in April, May and June. By the way, Ontario is the main consumer as well as the main producer of automobiles. That is why this measure is very important to that province. Recently Mr. David Lamb of American Motors was quoted as saying the following, "The sales tax cut will make 1978 one of the best years in memory".

I should like to refer to what happened on the Quebec scene. There was some deception in the action surrounding the Quebec government at the time of the budget. At one point Quebec seemed to be working in conjunction with the other provinces. It attended the pre-budget consultations, offered no alternatives, and gave no indication of its reaction. At the last minute Quebec announced it would give a decision in 48 hours, that is, after the budget was announced. Then that province stated it would not cooperate. All the other provinces had agreed to the tax cuts. Some of these provinces even offered other ideas, which Quebec should have attempted.

[Mr. Philbrook.]

The Parti Québécois announced that it wanted complete tax relief on selective items produced mainly in Quebec. It was a plan favouring that province to the detriment of other parts of Canada. As we have experienced in the past, it was another true separatist challenge, and a deliberate trap for the government and the people of Canada.

In the area of deception, the Parti Québécois did not point out to its own people that its plan to favour Quebec had the same basic weakness for Quebec as the general tax plan had for the rest of Canada. I am referring to the area of competition by imports. At this time imports are usually lower in price and acceptable in quality. The Quebec plan set up protectionism against products from other parts of Canada but not from other countries. Even its own plan cannot benefit Quebec manufacturing greatly because the tax cuts apply to imports as well. Only a voluntary "buy Quebec-made" or "buy Canada-made" policy could accomplish this.

An important initiative which came out of the federal-provincial conference in February was the idea of encouraging our consumers to buy Canadian-made goods, even where protectionism did not exist. Like most other countries these days, Canada is caught between a need to stimulate its own economy by exporting more and importing less, on the one hand, and avoiding a vicious international trade war on the other hand. On the basis of past experience that could lead to world-wide depression and a third world war. This is identified by the current difficult GATT negotiations in Geneva. These negotiations are badly behind schedule and do not favour Canada. Canada is said to have got off lightly at the last Kennedy Round in Tokyo.

Also Canada suffers the disadvantage of not belonging to a trading bloc like other countries. We certainly do not dominate a region of the world, unless we finally yield to the wishes of the United States of America to form closer trade links—a continentalist policy—with the threat of being assimilated by our giant neighbour to the south—trading our culture for security. This trade advantage can be achieved only by Canadians on a voluntary, discriminatory basis putting economic nationalism into practice, rather than becoming involved in a trade war. The federal-provincial conference promoted this idea. Recently the Canadian government announced such a plan.

What happened in Quebec is very important as a basic learning experience for this country. One of the best analyses with regard to Quebec came from Mr. Jeffrey Simpson as reported in the Toronto Globe and Mail on May 15. The article reads as follows:

> It is Ottawa that has been taking a relentless political kicking in Quebec and elsewhere. Only Ontario, which thought up the idea of a sales tax cut last October, and the Atlantic provinces, which are fully reimbursed by Ottawa, are content.
>
> In many ways, the sales tax reductions were a highly imaginative solution to the economy's need for stimulus. The irony is that the provinces were unanimous in their belief that a sales tax cut was the most effective economic tool available.
>
> For the first time, Ottawa took the provinces into its confidence in budget preparations. An exhaustive series of meetings and conversations were held between federal and provincial officials from March 23 to budget day April 10.

A week before the budget, senior officials from Ottawa and the provinces held a day-long meeting in Ottawa to iron out problems.

This indicates that the approach by the Minister of Finance was as thorough as possible, especially when one considers the secrecy surrounding the budget.

● (1232)

The question has to be asked, as the article goes on to state:

Why do most Quebec people seem to support the PQ on the sales tax cuts issue and oppose Ottawa?

He explains:

Quebeckers admire good political showmanship and a healthy sense of political dash. They got both with the Quebec government's reply.

He goes on to state:

Ottawa, thinking it was doing the country and Quebeckers a favour, walked right into trouble.

That could be read as saying "trap". The article continues:

To this day, federal politicians have not explained their case adequately to Quebeckers.

Ottawa's subsequent arguments about fracturing the Canadian market made little impact on Quebeckers who could not see that if Ontario pulled the same trick and eliminated its sales tax on, say, office furniture, dishwashers, and appliances, Quebec dealers would be clobbered.

Coming from a town that has the Ford Motor Company, I might include in that list automobiles.

At this point, partisan politics aside, I should like to give credit to the Ontario government for the statesman-like way in which it acted, and approached this particular attempt to help the economy and the individual Canadian at the same time, although I must say that this was partly a matter of self interest as well. The article goes on to state:

It is a fact that Quebec never rejected Ottawa's plan until Ottawa was politically exposed. Mr. Parizeau subsequently said Quebec had not prepared an alternative scheme, but within 48 hours of the federal budget he had produced his own plan of infinite subtlety.

Quebec of course was greatly aided by the four western provinces. Beyond these objections, the western politicians knew it is good politics to bash the federal government. And the sales tax looked like a bonanza for the industries of Ontario.

Western premiers succeeded in having it both ways. They took the federal money to defray two-thirds of the sales tax reduction, then got substantial mileage in attacking the federal government.

Manitoba wanted greater compensation from Ottawa, but that was rejected by federal officials.

I regard that merely as something that shows that Quebec could also have made an alternate suggestion, and could have cooperated if it had really wanted. Although the Minister of Finance had to change his arrangements with Quebec, and this has been a major item of dispute as to whether it represents favouritism or is a necessary expediency, I note that even Charles Lynch concedes that these things do happen quite often, particularly to Ministers of Finance.

As I mentioned before, Mr. Ryan, the new Quebec Liberal leader, seems to side with the Parti Québécois government. However, his opponent for the leadership, Raymond Garneau, at least spoke up for the general Canadian cause.

The Minister of Finance asked for opinions from provincial finance ministers on Mr. Parizeau's proposal, and found that at least three objected to it. The Minister of Finance says he still wants a conference of provincial finance ministers in June. I think that is very reasonable, and hopefully that will help.

Finally, in an attempt to make this thing work, it is reported that all other eight provinces agreed by phone the day of the budget to go along with the tax cuts. Therefore, there was even last minute consultation.

In other words, Ontario, the Maritimes and other provinces had accepted virtually an average tax cut of $100 per person. Why did Quebec not do so as well? They were all free to refuse the offer but, unlike Quebec, they accepted. Our Minister of Finance says he could only allow three weeks for federal provincial negotiations on this because of confidentiality in respect of this new budget approach. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) says his Minister of Finance contacted Quebec treasurer Parizeau more than a week ago to arrange a meeting. This was after the budget, so it was probably about nine days. He had not had a reply, and therefore he suggested this makes it very difficult to negotiate.

Where we are at the present time is that our finance minister is proposing to pay $40 million to Quebec through the general program, knowing that province is only carrying on a part of it, and $186 million, a much larger amount, being the balance, through income tax rebates to individual Quebecers. It is my understanding that they will be only too happy to receive this.

Admittedly the Minister of Finance is in a box, but it does not seem to be entirely of his own making. He did try to be flexible, and Mr. Parizeau did withhold his view of the necessary degree of flexibility until after what he knew to be the deadline.

Finally the media tells us that Mr. Parizeau, and we might as well accept this, will serve separation first. He may find himself in his own box, however, as those cheques begin to arrive from Ottawa for Quebecers.

I would just like to close with a comment about Ontario's position, because that is the province I help to represent. I believe Ontario is happy, or should be, with the deal. It should be happy with the retail sales tax cuts. I think this is chiefly indicated by the provincial government. I recently quizzed the Minister of Finance in committee on the whole process, and what has happened, particularly in respect of relations with the Ontario government, and I believe he confirmed this.

The Ontario government was the first to suggest this plan. It had experienced good success with it in this province and it has been since, and I believe is still, its chief promoter, especially through Premier Davis and Darcy McKeough. Ontario is still the business centre of Canada and needs the stimulus to its economy, an economy which has been growing slower than that of the rest of Canada. I believe that economy will be stimulated right from the immediate retail level, where the whole process starts with the shopper, and the reduced retail sales tax, right back to the manufacturing level. Ontario was also prominent in suggesting the "Buy Canadian Made" program which seems worth trying and far preferable to an official government protectionist system with high tariffs, non tariff barriers, and so on.

Unfortunately, at the present time the Ontario government is taking a low profile in this debate. It seems to have been a little quiet lately while the federal government has been taking the political flak, in spite of the fact that the Quebec minister of finance even seemed to goad Ontario by suggesting that the main purpose of the tax cut was to take Ontario off the hook, implying that its government had gone too far with taxes, had a high budget, and excessive provincial debt. In reply to this premier Davis simply said "nonsense".

Before all that, the indication in respect of this dispute was that there was satisfactory consultation with all provinces, including Quebec. What we need now for the sake of this country, as we guide it through rather difficult and uncertain times, is less partisan politics, more pulling together among Canadians, more cooperation, and less party consideration, on the part of federal and provincial governments.

Certainly inflation and the sales picture are looking better. An article in the Globe and Mail this morning suggested that in at least three out of 14 Canadian cities the inflation rate was down in the month of April. At least consumer prices fell. This was particularly true in Winnipeg, if not in Quebec, where the prices fell by 0.5 per cent. It is true prices were also down in two Quebec cities, Montreal and Quebec city, but at least the Winnipeg situation shows that generally the policy is working. The main reason for prices going up was the higher cost of food items, in addition to certain other items, but we know that that is a chronic problem which nobody has been able to solve yet. The fact is that even where there were increases, this article states that they were offset by provincial retail sales tax cuts that followed the Minister of Finance's April 10 budget. Certainly, such measures can help all of Canada's economy and unity if they are given a fair chance.

● (1242)

I am sure that my riding of Halton in the Toronto area in the province of Ontario, the heart of business and consumer spending in Canada, is a typical one which will gain greatly from this new federal-provincial initiative.

Mr. Bert Hargrave (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I want to begin by saying quite simply that this is a most important bill, possibly the most important of this whole session of parliament. I say that because it involves directly the various provinces, or at least most of them. In my opinion, it clearly falls into the category of a package bill or package legislation, and the package was added to yesterday with the amendments on the capital gains rollover deferrals for incorporated small family businesses, which is a concept that we have seen many, many times. It is a government device or approach that is used much too frequently, especially over the last few years.

This tax amendment bill has two component parts in its package approach. The first one is the very contentious provincial sales tax issue, and the second one, most of the remainder, including the capital gains rollover provisions, is the result of both the current budget with some specific references to the March, 1977 budget. I will be speaking in support of this latter group.

It is now most obvious that the finance minister is in trouble with the provincial sales tax items. I say this partly because this Bill C-56 has introduced some changes in the minister's actual budget of April 10, which were confirmed by the Speaker's ruling on May 19 at page 5592 of Hansard. The minister's troubles stem from the fact that for the first time in our history the federal government is proposing to move into a provincial government's sacred jurisdiction of deciding its own tax policies, and to influence the province on how its provincial tax moneys are to be spent.

As it now stands, Quebec taxpayers are to receive a personal federal government refund cheque for $85, and the rest of Canada will get no refund cheques. In addition, because of the implications of the phrase in the bill, "specified province", there is a double standard implied for Alberta in that we in Alberta are not eligible for that $100 tax deduction. I suppose, bluntly stated, those of us who come from that province do not exist as far as this bill goes. They have written us off, and it is a situation that we find hard to accept. Clearly, this bill should be split to resolve these serious problems.

I would now like to make some further comments on the capital gains tax deferral items for incorporated family farms and partnerships. The minister and his parliamentary secretary are very much aware of my intense personal interest in this particular issue. That interest extends back well over five years, and it deals with three different finance ministers. It was a most welcome, timely, and long overdue change in our tax laws. Quite frankly, I am sure it is fully supported by all members and all parties in this House.

The denial of this rollover provision to family farm corporations and partnerships had become a real problem to the approximately 20,000 such farm operations in Canada. These 20,000 farm operations are producing a disproportionately higher amount of Canada's agricultural production. The concept of the family farm was being seriously questioned. After seven years under the new capital gains tax laws in the face of very serious inflation, more and more incorporated units and partnerships were being forced to sell out completely to satisfy the capital gains tax requirements, instead of passing on the family farm to that next generation, as has been possible for individually operated family units since 1973 when the first capital gains rollover was introduced for the individual farmer.

How did this situation really develop? It was the inevitable consequence of escalating land value which have been going up since 1972. That was, of course, the start of the capital gains era. This was due mostly to galloping inflation and also to the availability in increasing amounts of foreign capital that was anxious to invest in Canadian farmlands. Another contributing factor was also the understandable tendency of farmers selling their lands to add the capital gains tax payments to their selling price, thereby creating a false reflection of the true productivity value of that farmland. Since the capital value of land represents a very high proportion of nearly all farm units, it is understandable why this item is so significant and important to family farm units that are now incorporated or in a partnership.

A closely related corollary of this question of farmland values is the massive growth of farm debt during the last decade, but mostly after the new tax concept was introduced in 1972. Canadian farm debt has now more than doubled from 4.6 billion in 1970 to $10 billion in 1978, a figure that is almost equivalent to the total government spending in the year 1968. You might say that farmers have borrowed themselves into prosperity. The ultimate choice had to be either to support the family farm concept or change the capital gains tax laws.

In this bill we are debating today we are fortunately seeing the changes that are needed. It should, however, be emphasized that this is a tax deferral and not a tax forgiveness. Essentially, it permits the transfer of farmlands and depreciable farm property from a farmer to his children without payment of capital gains tax at the time of the transfer, the same provision that individual farm operators have had since 1973. It should also be noted that it will be retroactive to April 10 of this year after this or the modified legislation is passed.

It seems appropriate to sound a cautionary note that this tax item is not strictly guaranteed until after the appropriate legislation is passed. Farmers planning to take advantage of this item should check its status before proceeding to incorporate or, I might add, perhaps before dying. In addition, it should be understood that if the cost of the acquisition of the land to a child is greater than the V-day value, capital gains would be due on the difference between the two. In other words, the only way to get complete deferral of the capital gains tax would be if the son or daughter purchased the land at or below the V-day value.

● (1252)

In interpreting clause 14(1) which refers to subsection 70(10)(b) of the Act, Revenue Canada could very well need the wisdom of several Solomons to interpret the key phrase "substantially all of its property". The inference is that the Department of Finance does not want hobby farmers to benefit from the tax deferral provision. On page 20 of the bill the reference to subsection 73(3) of the act states that an heir has to be residing in Canada at the time of transfer in order to qualify for capital gains deferral. I suggest that so long as the heir indicates he is willing to farm in Canada and not be an absentee landlord, it does not really matter where he is living now or has been living.

Clauses 2, 3 and 4 on pages 2 and 3—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I should like to suggest to the hon. member that he is not supposed to refer to clauses of the bill on second reading but to the principle of the bill.

Mr. Hargrave: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The particular clause I am referring to now deals with the correction of a problem of interpretation which was created by the budget of March, 1977. This item permitted a farmer or a small businessman to avoid capital gains tax if he sold his farm or business in order to reinvest in another farm or business by the end of the following taxation year. It seems that the Department of Finance intended a broad interpretation of the phrases "for the same use" and for the same business". Revenue Canada had chosen to enforce a very narrow interpretation that denied this provision to a farmer who had, say, sold a grain farm to reinvest in an irrigated farm producing different crops.

This matter of interpretation has been corrected in Bill C-56. In addition, I received further specific clarification in the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs on May 17, as reported in the minutes. I was assured by the minister and his Revenue Canada staff that the phrase now used in this bill "for the same or similar use" will be broadly interpreted for all classes of farms and that these provisions will be retroactive to March 31, 1977, and that they will also apply to incorporated and partnership farm operations.

This is a specific example of lack of consultation and cooperation between two federal departments, the Department of Finance and the Department of Revenue, when the bill was being drafted and implemented. Yesterday's announced amendments to this bill allowing essentially the same capital gains rollover deferrals to small family type businesses that family farms presently enjoy, is a good measure and will be widely supported. My family type business friends were quick to respond to the family farm announcement with the logical question, "Why not us?" It was a valid response and certainly deserved this addition to the package. There will be general support for the fact that the deferral will apply whether the rollover occurs during the taxpayer's lifetime or at death.

Similarly with respect to the amendment announced yesterday, that portion referred to as "allowable business investment loss" is an interesting proposal with which it is difficult to find fault. The obvious comment on this last minute amendment brought before us yesterday must be, "Why did we have to wait until the eleventh hour for the necessary changes that have been so obvious for so long?"

Before leaving this discussion of agricultural tax matters in the bill it seems appropriate to suggest two additional approaches to the Minister of Finance. The first deals with the traditional and inescapable cyclical fluctuations in farm income. The general income tax averaging that is now possible does not adequately deal with the problem, neither does the stabilization approach because it fails to be specific on an individual basis for all agricultural commodities. Let us recognize that the good years have to carry the bad years. In my business that is known quite simply as good, common, cowsense. In pre-income tax days—certainly in the west—this was the natural and necessary philosophy of every farmer and certainly of every cattleman.

I say to the minister, why not implement a program for bona fide farmers similar to the Registered Retirement Savings Plan? In the good years the farmer would be able to set aside money, tax-free, in a savings plan, from which he could draw in his poor years. Once withdrawn, that money would be subject to the prevailing tax rate. It is not unlike building up feed reserves for the hard winters that do come eventually. After last winter and last year's drought, those of us from southern Alberta and southwestern Saskatchewan know what that means.

The second approach that I think the Minister of Finance might consider is one that I have offered a number of times. It is a most serious and personal suggestion and is the result of some 48 years of living in the short grass regions of southeastern Alberta and southwestern Saskatchewan. That includes all the 10 years of the drought in the thirties and the more serious one-year drought of last year. Both the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) are fully aware of my serious representations on a drought tax deferral program.

This was a carefully documented proposal advanced by myself and the Canadian Cattlemen's Association that would allow an emergency sell-down of cattle due to severe drought conditions such as last year, rather than buying expensive feed that was not available. It would allow grass and feed supplies to come back with reduced stocking rates, and at the same time would allow cattle numbers to increase slowly by natural increment.

Mr. Speaker, may I call it one o'clock?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): It being one o'clock p.m., I do now leave the chair until two o'clock.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

● (1412)

Mr. Hargrave: Mr. Speaker, when I called it one o'clock before lunch, I was referring to the proposal I made some time last year when the drought situation was very acute across southern Alberta and southwestern Saskatchewan. I proposed to the minister that he consider a tax deferral program which would encourage cattlemen to sell down their cattle in view of the obvious lack of grass and feed, then grow back in later, on the assumption there would be better years. That suggestion calls for consideration by the taxation department since the above average sell down would require tax deferral in order to avoid a punitive tax on the sales of cattle above the average.

At the time I made this proposal, the Minister of Finance did not receive support from the Minister of Agriculture and the special tax force which was created last year. I must say I was disappointed. I am confident the concept was sound, and I believe we should still have such a program available for drought emergencies. It is not too late to plan now for the next drought.

I want to express my support for the provision in this bill to extend manufacturing and processing incentives to profits from plants established to upgrade the heavy crudes which are now in substantial supply in both Alberta and Saskatchewan. This is a necessary complement to the recent federal action to permit heavy crudes to enjoy world oil prices similar to those applicable to the new Syncrude production expected next month. It is an obvious and necessary step to complement Alberta's oil exploration and development policies if only because it recognizes both the short term and the long term need to develop our vast heavy crude resources in addition to our oil sands resources.

This is a very important debate on finance and financing over a broad spectrum of Canadian business as earlier contributions have shown. My personal responsibility is, of course, to my leader and my party. I am concerned specifically, of course with the Canadian beef cattle industry. Most members will be aware that after three or four years of distressed cattle markets, the industry has made an incredible turn-around. Over the last two months, cattle markets have advanced to record levels. We should realize that these latest market increases reflect the current drop in beef production in both Canada and in the United States, rather than as a result of inflation.

Over the last three or four years, high beef production and low cattle prices, along with escalating costs, have brought severe financial losses to cattlemen and forced the selling off of basic heards. In my remarks on the budget last month I concluded by expressing a hope that governments, politicians, and cattle producers themselves would all learn some very costly lessons from the bitter experiences of those years.

Canadian cattle producers have already initiated a new "Beef Watch" program in an effort to anticipate the cattle and beef cycle, to project trends and advise accordingly. This survey and assessment by the staff of the CCA and their Canfax resource is being published twice a year, in May and November. I should like to read certain passages from the survey into the record:

> The main danger in the present beef situation is that producers may have already reduced the North American beef herd too much—and there may be a tendency for cattlemen to rebuild the beef herd too quickly.

It goes on to say:

> There are now clear signs that North American beef producers have already cut back their breeding herds quite far enough. During 1978, producers should initiate a moderate rebuilding phase of around 1½ per cent to 2½ per cent in cow numbers. That is the major message in this edition of Beef Watch.

Later on the publication has this to say:

> Consumer demand for beef will strengthen progressively over the next 3 years. That's because most of the factors that contribute to demand will have positive effects through 1980.
>
> Per capita beef supplies will decline each of the next 3 years. Total supplies are expected to decline from 112 pounds per capita in 1977 to 88-93 pounds by 1980.
>
> Per capita disposable incomes will continue to rise, though quite possibly at a reduced rate. We are cautiously projecting a 6% rise per year in per capita disposable income. As beef supplies decline and incomes rise, we expect that consumers will once again return to their custom of spending at least 2.5% of their disposable income on beef. This pattern was quite constant from year to year with expenditures varying only from about 2.3% to 2.7% in 24 of the past 27 years.

However, in both 1976 and 1977, consumers spent only about 2.0% of their disposable income on beef while consuming record quantities. The price of beef was low.

Finally, in summary, Beef Watch had this to say:

The primary purpose of the Beew Watch program is to comment on the size of the national beef breeding herd. It is now evident that the high rate of female slaughter has reduced the herd to the point where domestic supplies will fall below 90 pounds per capita by 1980. It is our view that these levels are lower than optimum and represent some lost opportunities.

Further, the continuing high rate of female slaughter confirms that the herd reduction phase continues. As mentioned in the text, this process may now have proceeded too far. The retention of sufficient heifers and cows to permit a modest increase of 1½% to 2% in the breeding herd would help to restore a favorable demand/supply balance. Certainly a continued high rate of female slauther is no longer necessary or justified.

That is a valuable comment and there are some lessons there which should be obvious to all of us, not just to the cattlemen themselves. Mr. Speaker, I want to draw these remarks to a conclusion. Here is an appropriate quotation from the current week's edition of Agriweek dated May 22, 1978. The "Backgrounder" column of that paper was commenting on the "inevitable cyclical nature of agriculture" and concluded with the following paragraph:

● (1422)

Understanding the cycles is the key, for both farmers and agribusiness, to the stability of individual enterprises, be they farms or businesses which exist to serve farmers. That would seem to be self-evident, yet there are few signs that these cycles are understood and properly respected. Far from devising ways to take advantage of cyclical conditions, the demands of most farm organizations and undoubtedly most farmers have been for their elimination, preferably by so convenient a means as government action. These agri-economic cycles will never be eliminated simply because their causes are beyond anyone's control. Every time government action comes to cope with conditions developing at a particular point in a cycle the inescapable result is a new and permanent government presence. And even the worst down-phase of the worst cycle ever seen is a poor excuse for that.

I say "amen" to that comment about government involvement, which attempts to tame beef cycles by legislation.

I said in my opening remarks that this is a package bill. There are some very good features in it, and I include in those the concept of the capital gains rollover provision for incorporated family farms and partnerships. In addition to that, of course, as announced yesterday, that includes incorporated small family businesses with that $200,000 limit. That certainly deserves support.

However, the problems the Minister of Finance has got himself into over his provincial sales tax approach certainly merit the idea that this bill should be split. Then I think we would see some hasty action on both parts of the present bill.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, in taking part in the debate on this bill which results from the budget of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) I want to start off by saying that while lemmings have a bent for suicide, about once every seven years, and politicians sometimes have a bent for suicide about every four years, I suppose one could make a case for at least trying to save the lemmings.

I and my colleagues in the New Democratic Party are not interested in assisting a Liberal government in actions which will assist in the suicide of our Confederation. We will not assist the government in playing into the hands of separatists and those who seek to break up our Confederation. We will not assist in the invasion by a national government into areas which are solely within the jurisdictions and prerogatives of the provinces. Unless and until agreement is reached between the national government and the provinces for changes in the jurisdictions of the provinces, the provinces have the sole rights in areas under their jurisdictions.

We have moved to amend this motion by asking for a one-month hoist. If the government were to accept our amendment, one month from today parliament would still be sitting, and the government could bring in an amended bill outlining agreements reached as a result of negotiations. Both the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Minister of Finance have said they are willing to negotiate, but they maintain an adamant, stubborn determination to proceed with the legislation in its present form.

When the government of my province of Saskatchewan brought down its budget, it incorporated measures aimed at stimulating the economy of the province which would also indirectly create employment in other provinces. I say, without blushing, that the budget brought down by the Saskatchewan government has been applauded in Saskatchewan by business, professional, and trade union circles. That budget has been applauded across the country.

In terms of numbers Saskatchewan is a small province, but I am proud to say that my province set an example and led the way, as usual. Our provincial budget has contributed to stimulating the Canadian economy. The provincial budget provided for provincial personal tax reductions amounting to $52 million. Corporation taxes on small businesses were reduced by $3 million. The budget provided a job creation strategy to create 5,800 new permanent and seasonal jobs.

The Saskatchewan provincial budget provided for revenue sharing with municipalities. This will provide an additional $20 million for the municipalities of Saskatchewan so that they can hold down mill rates. It provided for an increase in property improvement grants to homeowners in Saskatchewan in the amount of $4.5 million. It provided for a reduction of 5 per cent in automobile insurance rates, and it announced the intention of the Saskatchewan government to limit and hold down increases in utility rates, particularly for electricity and natural gas. The total benefit to our provincial economy amounts to $82 million.

In addition to that we will be incresing employment in our little province by increasing capital expenditures by the government and by the Crown corporations of Saskatchewan by $140 million, bringing expenditures to a total of $834 million for the current year. Investment in assets has been enlarged, which will be of long-term benefit to the province but which will also, in the immediate future, provide additional employment. I believe that Saskatchewan still has the lowest or second lowest rate of unemployment in Canada, but still these were the kinds of investments and the kinds of budgetary proposals which my province, many members of parliament, and many members of the public asked for and hoped that the federal government would incorporate in its budget.

On April 10 the minister of finance of the province of Saskatchewan rose in his place in the Saskatchewan legislature and announced a reduction of the Saskatchewan retail sales tax from 5 per cent to 3 per cent for a period of nine months. He said that the Saskatchewan government was committed to maintaining that reduction until September 30, but that before October 1 it would announce that the duration of that reduction would extend beyond that date. In other words, Saskatchewan will have to make a decision, like the other provinces, as to what to do after the six months, or nine months, have gone by.

Hindsight is like curling behind the glass, but in retrospect one could say that in some respects the provinces bought a pig in a poke. Except during wartime, or perhaps under the authority of the War Measures Act, I do not believe a national government has ever encroached upon provincial jurisdiction regarding economic matters. Other than in periods of national emergency, I do not believe there has ever been an occasion when the basic part of the national budget had to do with the taxation authority which lies solely within the jurisdiction of the provinces.

● (1432)

Saskatchewan brought its budget down early. The other provinces have not responded in the same positive manner to create employment and to get our economy moving. They have in fact, if I may use the word, been somewhat conservative because there has been conflict in this country for the last two or three years. There are some who have yelled and screamed for reduced government spending and less government intervention, and at the same time they complain when the government is not spending enough in some area in which they have interest. But that kind of pressure has been felt by provincial and national governments, and it is the kind of pressure that is inappropriate when there are officially one million people unemployed.

The sales tax reduction, which is a temporary measure, amounts to $1.147 billion across Canada. In my province of Saskatchewan the tax cut will put an additional $54 million into the hands of the Saskatchewan taxpayers. The province's share of the cost of that $54 million is $18 million. When you add that to what has already been provided in the budget by the province of Saskatchewan, $18 million to $82 million, our province's contribution to stimulating our economy and creating more employment amounts to $100 million.

I want to quote our Saskatchewan minister of finance. He said:

> I want to say that our preference would have been for a permanent federal income tax reduction for low and middle income Canadians. That would have put cash into the hands of those who need it most and surely would have stimulated consumer spending on an on-going basis.

We have requested in the House for many months that a $1.5 billion cut in personal income taxes be made to do that very thing. Saskatchewan accepted, as a less preferable option, and agreed to cooperate with, the federal government's proposal to have reductions in retail sales taxes. But the Saskatchewan minister of finance also said the following:

> I regret that the federal offer to participate in this tax cut came so late. From the standpoint of budget planning, it would have been much better to have known the federal government's intentions well in advance, so that we could have introduced this additional tax cut in our budget on March 7.

A similar quandary applied to many other provinces as well. The Saskatchewan minister of finance went on to say:

> Certainly, the finance ministers' meeting in January, or the first ministers' meeting in February, would have provided an ideal forum for the federal government to present such a tax proposal to the provinces. But this did not take place.

If the federal government wishes to bring in a budget whose main thrust is to intervene in a tax area that is solely within the jurisdiction of the provinces, surely it should have had the courtesy, surely it should have felt it a requirement, to discuss it openly and in public view at the meetings of the ministers of finance, or at least at the first ministers' meeting in February, and reach an agreement with the provinces which would have been included in a budget that would be subsequently presented by the federal Minister of Finance.

The government has chosen to hang its hat on its obstinate refusal to change this bill because Quebec's sales tax reduction is somehow going to balkanize our economy, is meant to help Quebec only. That kind of contention that the federal government makes falls in the face of the facts.

I want to quote the minister of finance of Saskatchewan again. He said:

> Since last fall, I have been urging the federal government to move to stimulate consumer spending. More spending would gradually put idle plant capacity and the unemployed back to work. The federal government did not agree with this approach. Instead, greater tax concessions were given to industry. Manufacturing plants were encouraged to expand even though 16 per cent of our existing plant capacity was idle.

What sensible owner or operator of a manufacturing plant that is 16 per cent idle is going to spend money to expand that plant? He is just not going to do it if he is a wise and sensible businessman. While the federal government's policies were in place, what has happened? We have had more lay-offs, more shutdowns, and more Canadians out of work.

We submit, and so does the minister of finance in Saskatchewan, that these national economic policies have been misguided.

I want to turn now to a further remark of the minister of finance of Saskatchewan, so that there is no misunderstanding. Even though the Saskatchewan government agreed to cooperate and gave a commitment to reduce our sales tax by 2 per cent for nine months, the minister of finance of that province has also said:

> I am concerned that the federal government intruded into an area of provincial jurisdiction by trying to establish policy for the provincial retail sales tax. A dangerous precedent was established when the provinces were not allowed to participate in the formulation of a federal compensation formula which does not apply equally to all provinces.

Mr. Smishek went on to say:

Mr. Speaker, the western premiers made it clear, when they met in Yorkton, that they were not pleased—that the temporary sales tax reduction was not a precedent for future intrusions by the federal government into tax fields traditionally held by the provinces.

Mr. Smishek went on to say:

Let me make clear that I do not rule out—indeed I welcome—federal-provincial co-operation in fiscal matters. But this was the wrong way to go about it.

Let us look at the situation regarding Quebec's entitlement under this budget. I said earlier that our preference, and that of the government of Saskatchewan, was for stimulation to be provided by further reductions in the personal income tax for low and middle income families, which is solely within the jurisdiction of the national government.

There is another option which would be solely within the jurisdiction of the federal government. The federal government should have looked into a reduction in its own sales tax if it wished to implement a sales tax reduction to stimulate the economy. Federal sales tax revenues amount to approximately $4 billion. A federal sales tax reduction, with appropriate legislation and monitoring, could see to it that the benefit was passed from the manufacturers and the wholesalers to the consumers. Perhaps for the first time the Anti-Inflation Board would have been put to some useful work, that is, monitoring the wholesalers and manufacturers to make certain a federal sales tax reduction was passed on to consumers. That option is less preferable than a reduction in income taxes.

● (1442)

Instead, the government chose to intervene in an area which belonged solely to the provinces. With the benefit of hindsight, I am sure provincial officials in many provinces feel they have received a pig in a poke. In any event, some provinces agreed to cooperate, gave commitments, and are living up to them.

I should like to refer to the case of Quebec. According to the figures of the federal government, if Quebec were to reduce its sales tax by 2 per cent across the board it would be entitled to approximately $226 million by way of direct payment, tax room, or whatever. The removal of the 8 per cent sales tax in five areas in Quebec will cost the treasurer of that province $340 million, according to federal government figures. If the Minister of Finance would telephone the Saskatchewan minister of finance, I am sure he would be told to give Quebec the amount to which it is entitled. I am confident that would be the response from Saskatchewan. Also, I have some confidence that many other provinces would say the same thing.

How, when, for how long, and in what amount retail sales taxes are levied, are entirely within the jurisdiction of the provinces. If one province reduces its retail sales tax by 2 per cent for nine months across the board, and another province reduces its tax by 3 per cent for six months across the board, they have a perfect right to do so. The Minister of Finance recognized and accepted that fact. Equally it is valid for another province to decide to remove taxes totally from certain commodities or areas of sale within its jurisdiction.

The Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance have said that Quebec is attempting to balkanize its economy, is selfish, and wants to help itself only. That theory does not hold water. It is false, when the facts are examined. A sales tax reduction in Quebec of the 8 per cent on shoes, furniture, textiles, clothing, and hotel bills, amounts to a total of $340 million. Quebec's share, whether in the form of tax room or whatever from the federal government, is $226 million. Quebec's removal of sales tax from four of those five areas will benefit Ontario manufacturers more than it will Quebec manufacturers. I see an hon. member opposite is shaking his head. I should like to remind him that the figures pertaining to shoes, furniture, textile and clothing manufacturing, were obtained from Statistics Canada.

Referring to the retail sale of shoes in the province of Quebec, a little over half are manufactured outside Canada; 46 per cent are manufactured in Canada; 23 per cent are manufactured in Ontario; and 20 per cent are manufactured in Quebec. Surely that means the reduction in sales tax on shoes will be of at least as much benefit to Ontario manufacturers and their employees as their counterparts in Quebec. That is hardly balkanization.

Turning to the furniture industry, 88 per cent of its retail sales in Quebec is manufactured in Canada, 35 per cent is manufactured in Quebec, and 44 per cent is manufactured in Ontario. With an increase in consumer spending and purchasing of furniture in Quebec, an equal or larger benefit will result to Ontario furniture manufacturers. That can hardly be called balkanizing the Canadian economy.

The same situation applies to the clothing industry. Approximately 32 per cent of the clothing sold in Quebec is manufactured there, and 37 per cent is manufactured in the province of Ontario. A reduction in sales tax will be of equal or greater benefit to manufacturers and employees in the Ontario clothing industry as it will be in Quebec.

Quebec's decision to remove sales tax will be of benefit mainly to the low and middle income earners. This benefit applies to areas which are essential to them such as shoes, clothing, furniture, yard goods, and ordinary things. It will reduce their cost of living by approximately 8 per cent. If Quebec chooses to do it this way, it has that right. It is in our constitution.

The government and the minister of finance of Saskatchewan have no objection to the Government of Canada reimbursing, in an agreed upon manner, the $226 million to the province of Quebec. The Quebec sales tax reduction amounts to $340 million. The budget proposal has done a great deal of harm to Confederation and has hurt co-operative federalism. No political party or no government is perfect. Any political party or any government can make a mistake. This is a mistake. It will be of no political harm to the Government of Canada and the Minister of Finance if they agree to go back to the provinces, particularly Quebec, to negotiate and arrive at an agreement.

Approximately an hour ago I had a telephone conversation with the Saskatchewan minister of finance. He indicated that the Minister of Finance should go back and meet with Quebec's minister of finance in order to make arrangements to give Quebec the share it is properly entitled to, the $226 million. In fact, arrangements should be made to give every province that to which they are entitled. How Quebec chooses to reduce sales tax is Quebec's business, just as it is the business of Saskatchewan, Nova Scotia or any other province.

● (1452)

This business of the Minister of Finance trying to set up a budget on the basis of hotel room discussions with successive ministers and premiers, from one day to the next, just a few weeks prior to bringing down the budget, is not good enough. This is not what you could call real consultation. There is no reason this idea could not have been put on the table at the first minister's conference in February. It could have been discussed then, and the nation as a whole could have watched the ten premiers and the Prime Minister negotiating and agreeing to proposals for a national budget and budgets of nine provincial governments, reducing sales tax with federal and provincial cooperation. They could have agreed then on how the reductions would be shared. That did not happen.

The manner in which it has been carried out is just not good enough for at least four western premiers who have indicated their unhappiness about it. They will stick by what they agreed and committed themselves to; they are men of their word. Since the minister put the budget proposal to the province of Quebec and that province chose to reduce its sales tax in a different manner than the other provinces, I do not see why the federal government should think it has a problem. This is accomplishing in a different way what the national government want to see accomplished by its budget, namely, significant reductions in sales tax to increase consumer spending and thereby stimulate economic growth and employment.

The argument is not so much in opposition to what is being done by the federal government, but how it is being done. The federal government is trying to suggest to the provinces, whether they be Quebec, Saskatchewan or others, how they should levy their retail sales tax, something in respect of which the federal government has no business, jurisdiction or authority whatsoever.

It seems to me this government would do well to say it will not call this bill for another two or three weeks, or it will accept the amendment proposed by my leader, the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent), will go back to the other provinces to work out an agreement, and then come back in a month's time with an amended bill. I am sure the government would then find members on this side of the House ready to see it passed quickly. That is all that is needed. I would not even expect members of this government to blush; just admit they have made a mistake and are happy to do all they can to correct it, and are willing to do what the Minister of Finance has suggested on previous occasions, namely, negotiate. Surely that would be a sign of real leadership and statesmanship. Surely that would restore some confidence in cooperative federalism. That would be a move toward national unity instead of playing into the hands of the separatists.

As things stand now those separatists can suggest that, in a tax field that is entirely provincial, Ottawa is trying to interfere, and Confederation is not working for them. In this way the Minister of Finance and the Liberal government have played into the hands of those who want to destroy Confederation.

There are other ways in respect of this bill or a subsequent one in which the government could help Canadians through our present economic difficulties. Let me put forward one suggestion which I know the Prime Minister has received and has said has been turned over to the Minister of Finance for serious consideration.

We require an amendment to our income tax laws that would do away with the standard $100 deduction for charitable contributions. The standard deduction would then only apply in respect of medical expenses. Those who give to charitable or voluntary organizations would get credit in respect of income tax, but only if they actually made contributions. A tax credit of 50 per cent, as has been suggested by voluntary organizations, would be allowed in respect of those contributions. This would encourage even bigger contributions by Canadians to these worthwhile organizations. The Association of Voluntary Organizations in Canada is unanimous in this suggestion, and this includes the Canadian Cancer Society, the YMCA, and a host of others.

An increase in the funding of those organizations would benefit not only those who are the beneficiaries of their activities, but also those who would be hired to staff the organizations in order to carry out additional work. The organizations would then be in a position to do an even better job in communities across this country.

This is a provision which may not look like very much at first blush, but one which would provide the incentive and opportunity for Canadians to do an even better job in helping one another through these voluntary organizations. It would also stop some of those who are now taking advantage of the standard $100 deduction as a credit on income tax without giving a nickel. Let us remove that provision and provide a tax credit for those who now give generously and might then give even more generously.

Such a change would be helpful and useful to the communities in Canada. It would encourage people to work together even more than they now are, and would be a symbol or a sign of how this parliament and this government are making significant efforts toward fostering national unity and cooperative federalism.

I began my remarks by saying we are not going to assist this government to precipitate the suicide of our Confederation. I do not care if Liberals want to commit suicide, but we are not going to offer that kind of assistance. I hope members opposite will accept our amendment. I plead with them to return to the finance ministers of Quebec and the other nine provinces for consultation, and then to come back to this House in two weeks or a month with a new bill. We would be agreeable, even though this meant sitting a few days in July. Such a new bill would confirm that Quebec, like the other provinces, has the right to levy sales tax in whatever manner it wishes, because this is solely within provincial jurisdiction.

Quebec as well as the other provinces would then get the money or the tax room to which they have a right under the federal government's new proposal. Quebec is entitled to $225 million and it should receive that amount. We do not need this sleazy idea of paying $85 to each income taxpayer in Quebec. This is another thing that will harm Confederation and play into the hands of the separatists. This is a typical Jimmy Gardiner trick, and it will not wash.

The government must admit it has made a mistake, and if it does so it will be applauded. The government must come back with an amended bill. It will get the support from all sides of the House and it will reinforce what is the constitution of Canada, the jurisdictions of the national government and the provinces in various tax areas. It will weaken the argument of those who would break up our confederation and who say that it does not work. It is a positive contribution. I say for my province of Saskatchewan that the government would have the full support and co-operation from us in that kind of endeavour. The minister of finance of Saskatchewan has said "Give Quebec the amount they are entitled to by whatever method you agree on, $225 million. They get no more, no less, than any other province."

● (1502)

Quebec is doing this differently. Well, so is Saskatchewan, British Columbia, Ontario, and the Atlantic provinces. Whether it is tax cuts across the board or tax cuts on certain commodities, it is the business of the provinces. When are my good friends on the government side going to admit they have made a mistake, that there was not sufficient consultation and that all of this could have been arrived at and agreed to before the provinces brought down their budgets? All of this could have been arrived at and agreed to by the time the Minister of Finance brought down his budget in this parliament.

I beg the government, Mr. Speaker, not to proceed in the manner in which they presently intend. It will only do harm and it can easily be avoided. Here is an opportunity where they can show some leadership and statesmanship, and they will get the support of the members on this side of the House as well. I urge the government to accept our proposal, to delay further dealing with this bill until they have returned to the provinces, obtained an amended agreement, and brought back another bill with those amendments. This parliament will deal with it quickly and Canada will be much stronger for it.

[Translation]

Mr. Maurice Dupras (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, to begin with, I also would like to express my support to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) for his excellent budget of last April 10. And since I believe that this is the right place to express support or disagreement for such a taxation measure which has been making the headlines since April 10, I want to take this opportunity to do so in the House of Commons and shall explain why. In the 40 minutes alloted to me, Mr. Speaker, I shall deal mostly with that most controversial part of the budget which provides for a rebate of provincial taxes, and an obvious problem with this part of the budget is precisely that it has been called the provincial tax rebate.

After long consultations—I do not want to go over all the negotiations which preceded the budget speech on April 10 last—but after long consultations starting in October 1977 and continuing afterwards following the representations made in February and March 1978 by the Canadian Chamber of Commerce according to taxation and economy experts like the C.D. Howe Institute, everyone seemed to agree that the quickest and most direct way to give the Canadian economy the impetus it so urgently needed, was to reduce the sales tax, which comes under provincial jurisdiction. For many years, the provinces have been pressing the Federal government for more participation and a greater say in major fiscal policies, discussions, or decisions. So, in keeping with their requests, in October 1977 all the provinces were consulted, starting with the premiers, down to the ministerial and finally the high executive levels of the provincial departments of finance.

Following the advice of the experts that I referred to earlier, who had supported this tax rebate, and after having figured out the implications in each provincial department involved, provincial authorities have chosen to accept that proposal and cut their taxes for a fixed period to stimulate the economy immediately rather than abolishing a tax permanently. By abolishing or removing a tax for six or nine months, the economists and experts thought that people would be encouraged to make certain expenses earlier, which would stimulate the economy.

While two provinces had some reservations about the Minister of Finance's proposals, some adjustments and arrangements were made to meet their expectations and the previous speaker, my hon. colleague from Regina-Lake Centre comes from one of those provinces, Saskatchewan. Those two provinces expressed some reservations and arrangements were made so that they would join the program. And indeed an arrangement was made to their satisfaction.

The day after the budget we heard from the province of Quebec that this measure would penalize Quebeckers and their industries, that it was again an invasion by the federal government in a provincial jurisdiction when the province was seeking to have more say in the decision making process. However, Quebec remained silent during all those consultations and even during the three weeks preceeding the budget. There was no appeal or counter proposals from the Quebec minister of finance. Of course we should not expect anything else because his party wants to take Quebec out of Canada. So it would not be reasonable to expect from them a favourable attitude towards the federal proposals. They are deceitful, Mr. Speaker. They wait until all other provinces accept the project or the proposal because it is fiscally interesting and feasible, easily controled and favourable to all parts of the country without discriminating against any industry.

● (1512)

The day after the introduction, the finance minister stated that he was against the proposal made by the federal government. That is the same man who three years ago, perhaps four, Mr. Speaker—I forget because it is not my favourite topic—launched a newspaper called Le Jour which failed. Still it was an undertaking conceived, designed and developed by that famous finance minister who is apparently living in a fantasy world. He thinks of himself as a cow watching a train go by. Such was his own admission in the National Assembly in reply to a question put by a member of the opposition. He said: You know of the difficulties in which the Minister of Finance now finds himself; me, I am somewhat like a cow watching a train go by. Perhaps those comments are unparliamentary, Mr. Speaker, but they were uttered by the Quebec finance minister and his description of the situation faithfully mirrors what I think of him.

So the question is whether Quebeckers are really penalized and how a minister who is supposed to be an economist can reach such a conclusion. Mr. Speaker, I would like to consider the impact of the proposal made by the Minister of Finance on the economy and the collection of provincial taxes. I see that the respected member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) has not left yet; I wish he would stay a few more minutes, Mr. Speaker, so that he can see the other side, the other way of analyzing this tax cut program.

As I indicated earlier, a 3 per cent tax cut over a period of six months will stimulate purchasing. A number of people will buy certain goods earlier than they expected, for instance to replace carpeting, furnishings, a suit or what have you. However we suggested a six-month cut for those who accepted the scheme and nine months for those who prefer the nine months, without discriminating against any industry, except of course alcoholic beverages, cigarettes and such things.

So this increase which could normally and legitimately be expected would have reduced the loss that the provinces will suffer, will reduce the loss that the provinces expect to have, because if you figure it out, Mr. Speaker, it takes a 14 per cent increase in sales to compensate for the 1 per cent which the provinces will have to pay. Early indications in provinces other than Quebec show that not one province will experience a loss because in fact of this 14 per cent increase in sales that can compensate for the 1 per cent paid by the provinces. So it is not a bad deal.

We are not trying to penalize the industries which are doing well in those provinces, we do not discriminate; as for myself, Mr. Speaker, I am not altogether convinced that helping only a few industries will lead to economic recovery. I believe that the universal formula of promoting industry is the best, the simplest and the one that offers the most leeway. And I am convinced that on the economic and fiscal levels, helping four industries which perhaps are not doing well—and I have figures, Mr. Speaker, to disprove some arguments of the Quebec finance minister in that regard—that helping four industries is perhaps not the best way to ensure economic recovery in a country or a province. As I indicated a moment ago, Mr. Speaker, a 14 per cent increase in sales of all goods subject to the tax cut will compensate the province for the loss it would have incurred without the increase. We can well expect at least a 14 per cent increase, but more probably closer to 20 per cent. If on the other hand you take away the 8 per cent tax on certain goods, if you remove it completely, there is no way the province can get its money back, even with a 40 per cent increase in sales, which is doubtful. In my view the increase could be limited to approximately 15, 20 or 22 per cent, but even if it were 50 per cent, there is no way the province of Quebec could get the money back on those 8 per cent that were removed. We are talking here of course in the case of the province of Quebec of the 6 per cent on its goods, because 2 per cent will be paid back by the federal government.

Mr. Benjamin: That is their business.

Mr. Dupras: The hon. member is suggesting that is their business. When the deal is bad we should not be intimating it is a good one because that is their business.

Mr. Speaker, how is it possible to suggest we should penalize this country's economy, deprive the economy and the Canadian people of several initiatives because of an alleged invasion to a degree of a provincial jurisdiction? My colleague from Regina-Lake Centre suggested earlier that such an invasion by the federal government had not been seen since the war years. But apparently the economic situation was serious at the end of 1977. The first ministers at the federal-provincial conference all expressed a desire to sit down with the federal government and prepare measures to counteract, to put the economy back on the right track, to solve economic difficulties. In those circumstances, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance candidly trusted all ministers of finance. He was right eight times out of nine, which is not such a bad score. I feel his batting average is excellent.

Of course it is normal that after the fact there is a temptation to suggest this was a federal invasion. But we were opposing this, we only joined the program because they themselves were urging us to do so. There is no need to quote from the multiplicity of speeches that were made on the subject by the majority of Canada's ministers of finance, urging action and inviting the federal government to come up with proposals.

Well, they did. The federal government made some proposals and that is how it happened.

But, Mr. Speaker, to give a new impetus to the economy of a country, it is not enough to give help to four industries if we want to make sure that things pick up, especially in view of the dead loss the Quebec government will incur by abolishing the 8 per cent tax in their case, since 2 per cent will be reimbursed by the Canadian government. That loss will amount to something like $120,000, $140,000 or $150,000 depending on the volume of business. The Quebeckers should ask their minister of finance, Mr. Parizeau, to reverse his silly decision and accept the proposal of the federal government in which case there is no loss because, as I said before, and I shall repeat it for those who were not here, an increase of 14 per cent in sales would allow a reimbursement to the province of that 1 per cent loss it will incur by reducing the 4 per cent sales tax as opposed to joining the national program that would reduce it by 5 per cent.

Of course, with the benefit of insight after the fact, Mr. Speaker, it is an easy statement to make: Had we been consulted, we would have liked to study an entirely different proposal. I say, Mr. Speaker, that with the results that notorious Minister of Finance has had with the newspaper Le Jour on two occasions with his concept of business, as I said before, he seems to live in a world of fantasy. It is no wonder, Mr. Speaker, that he should have preferred to show off in front of the Quebec population and tell them boldly that he was cancelling the 8 per cent tax on furniture, clothing, shoes and textiles. Of course, it was also an unexpected opportunity for him to be forgiven for having taxed children's clothing. Quebec was probably the only province where children's clothing was taxable. By abolishing the sales tax on clothing, footwear, textiles and furniture, he saw this as an opportunity to be forgiven. And it is true, as the previous speaker said, that most of the furniture sold in the province of Quebec is not manufactured in Quebec but in Ontario. I am convinced that Ontario manufacturers will not gain anything from that; merchants and retail dealers of Quebec are the ones who will benefit from this measure. And following the refusal of the province of Quebec—I should not say the province of the Quebec but its present government—to join in a national fiscal program, I do not think that the public will be prepared to further encourage Quebec manufacturers. And I also think, Mr. Speaker, that this is a discriminatory way to stimulate the economy.

● (1522)

If I lived in the Joliette riding and belonged to the Joliette chamber of commerce, the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) would know what I think of Mr. Parizeau's proposal, since there are many corporations in Joliette which cannot benefit from this rebate, and neither can the Bigelow corporation which makes carpets in Sainte-Agathe-des Monts, in my own constituency. And these people are outright insulted by this discriminatory approach to helping Quebec industries and stimulating the economy.

First of all, I am thinking of the unions, of the unionized workers of the Hupp Canada corporation, in l'Assomption, who do not benefit from this rebate, this tax cut, of the employees of Westinghouse in Trois-Rivières, I should say of the 600 Westinghouse employees in Trois-Rivières, of the employees of the Raleigh corporation in Waterloo, Drummondville, Cowansville or elsewhere in the province of Quebec, who do not benefit from it either. In Saint-Germain, for instance, Pacific Mobile, with 300 workers, is excluded from this tax cut, as are the 700 Lowney's employees in Sherbrooke who are terribly discriminated against because they have not been chosen to benefit under this national program.

In this case, Mr. Speaker, it is only normal that workers who manufacture cans should stage a demonstration in Quebec City because the sales tax on those products is going up by 5 per cent. I wonder, Mr. Speaker, why some unions in the industries I mentioned did not stage any demonstrations in Quebec City to demand that 3 per cent tax cut on their products, which would have allowed the province of Quebec to increase its revenues and to stimulate its economy, without having to suffer a loss in tax receipts for all that, because as I was saying earlier, a 14 per cent increase in sales compensates for this 1 per cent cut.

So, it is quite unbelievable, Mr. Speaker, that the Quebec minister of finance, who is an economist, did not realize that. No wonder, since he was the one who led his fellow citizens in the venture of Le Jour and he is responsible for salary lost by a great number of journalists when this newspaper went bankrupt. There are so many things that could be said on the manner in which the economy of the province of Quebec is managed, Mr. Speaker. We learned recently, we read this week press reports about replies to questions put by the opposition in Quebec City, that members have been calling for the tabling of the Bonin report, a report which has reviewed the economic opportunities of the province of Quebec should it separate, that is the separatist government is bent on proving, by means of well-organized propaganda, that the separation of Quebec could be to the economic advantage of Quebeckers. It is quite an aberration to believe this, but that is what they are dreaming about. So, a high official by the name of Bonin was asked to conduct a study. This study has been completed but Mr. Lévesque refuses to table it as his premise that separation was economically favourable for Quebec is disproved in this report. And I would bet my last dollar, Mr. Speaker, that this report will never be tabled.

Instead of selecting four so-called "soft" Quebec industries, Mr. Speaker, they could have given some thought to traditional sectors of the economy. There is a saying in Quebec which goes this way: a healthy construction industry means a healthy provincial economy and they say in the United States: that if the automobile industry is doing well, so is the U.S. economy as a whole. And the same can be said about Canada particularly in my own area as we have also 3,000 people working for General Motors in Ste. Thérèse a few miles south of my riding, and they are not favoured by that 3 percent cut either, and I wonder, Mr. Speaker, when they will go to Quebec requesting a sales tax cut on their products. If workers who feel they have been hurt by this new 5 percent tax levy can demonstrate to voice their discontent, surely workers who have been overlooked in the sales tax cut can do likewise in fact, I invite the employees in the General Motors' plant in Ste. Thérèse to demonstrate and demand from their provincial government the national programme that has been proposed and was accepted by all other provinces. Other provincial Finance ministers have understood the situation and realized that the recommandation made by C.D. Howe Institute and others was certainly the best way to boost the economy.

It is said that the textile industry was a weak sector in the province of Quebec. According to the data provided by one of the main textile industries in the province of Quebec, the Dominion Textile Ltée., for the third quarter of 1977, their sales have reached $145,700,000. which represents a $406,-000,000 increase for the nine first months of the previous year, or a 12 percent increase over the previous year. And those figures, Mr. Speaker, were released on and apply to their 1977 financial year, long before Parizeau proposed his new fiscal policy. So it is no longer a soft sector and these higher sales are certainly due to the measures taken by the Canadian government in 1977 in imposing quotas on the importations of textiles. It is therefore wrong to state that the textile industry is part of the soft sector. Perhaps some industries in the textile field can say they are in a weak sector, but this is surely not true of most of the thriving textile industry of the province of Quebec which has hired additional employees during the last eight or ten months and has increased the volume of its sales. That is obvious in the report submitted by the Dominion Textile Company.

Of course, since November 1976, the economy of the province of Quebec is going down and it is normal. I mentioned earlier an industry which should have been helped by a tax rebate, that is the Quebec building industry because since 1976 generally speaking there has been a slowdown of at least 75 per cent in that industry. I want to emphasize that is was 75 per cent, Mr. Speaker, because the media, especially those from the province of Quebec tend to censure what we say in this House. This is why sometimes we have to repeat to be sure we are understood. There was a 40 per cent decrease compared with last year, that's 1977, and this is very serious. The point, Mr. Speaker is not to find amusing formulas, window-dressing formulas such as the 8 per cent tax rebate on hotel rooms to stimulate this sector of our economy. While I am on the subject Mr. Speaker, it is rather amazing to note that everytime the question of helping the poor comes up in the province of Quebec, it is always the wealthy who do bring it up. The 8 per cent tax on hotel rooms was taken off because, once again, this notorious Finance Minister found out that the minimum living wages in his province, which are unique in Canada and in the rest of the world, have a tremendous detrimental effect on the Quebec tourist industry. To such a degree, Mr. Speaker, that in certain areas of the province, such as Montreal and Quebec City hotels suffered losses of 60 per cent over 1966 and 35 to 40 per cent from 1976 to 1977, which has meant that major hotels in Montreal have had only a 45 per cent occupation rate in 1977 whereas to be profitable, a hotel which wants to give a good service must have at least a 75 per cent occupation rate.

● (1532)

Because of all the requirements imposed upon the Quebec tourist industry because of the minimum living wages which are much higher than the minimum wages of all other areas of North America—in many cases they are at least twice as high—and also because of the tax burden placed upon the tourist industry, we could read in a recent newspaper report published last Monday or Tuesday, that the tax burden per room in the province of Quebec, in Montreal, is around $1,835 whereas in certain tourism oriented areas of the country, it is about $400. There is therefore no need to be an economic expert to see that the Quebec industry is not able to compete with the tourist industry outside Quebec. It is probably for this reason that the provincial minister decided to help once again the poor and reduce the tax of 8 per cent. This will perhaps convince certain members of the provincial cabinet to spend their 1978 summer vacations in Quebec rather than in Old Orchard or somewhere.

However, Mr. Speaker, the impact that such a tax reduction might have will not be felt for a few years yet because it is mostly aimed at the convention industry which can fill the major hotels for three or four days and bring in people who spend an average of $75 to $100 each outside of hotel charges, of course. There are the people at whom the reduction is aimed. Those are the people who have been chased away by our minimum living wages of over $3 in Quebec, which is twice as much as in many other provinces. Those are the people we want to get back. This will not be possible before a couple of years, because such arrangements are always made 18 to 36 months ahead of time. For instance, the conventions which were not held in Quebec this year were cancelled in the spring of 1977 and in the fall of 1976. The stimulating effect we had anticipated with our 3 per cent tax reduction for the whole economy, for all products manufactured in Canada, would indeed have had an immediate effect far more important than reducing the tax on hotel rooms.

Then, Mr. Speaker, tax is removed on shoes. I believe we all want to get the highest salary possible for our work. On the other hand when you need things such as are manufactured in this country, you go out and buy products manufactured abroad, and this is true concerning shoes, since 40 or 50 per cent of all shoes sold in Quebec are manufactured not in Canada but in other countries specially in Europe.

Practically the same, Mr. Speaker, may be said concerning electrical appliances. Our manufacturers are not better off with Mr. Parizeau's tax reduction. He should have moved in favour of those industries as that sector has lost the greatest number of jobs because European and Japanese products are more competitive. We should improve employment in this industry where wages are quite high. With respect to textiles, that industry did not develop so well, even though it is not true for the whole of the industry, but certain areas of that industry have failed to remodel or automate their facilities as fast as was done elsewhere and wages did not follow the general trend in Canada. Mr. Speaker, that sector should have been helped instead of the shoe industry, for instance, because a high percentage of those products are not manufactured in the province of Quebec.

The same applies to all appliances, washing machines, dryers, and also carpeting, Mr. Speaker. There is a carpet manufacture in my riding and as I said earlier, the workers in that plant are simply insulted because they cannot benefit from that sales tax reduction. Once again, I wonder why the union has not yet staged a demonstration to show that they disagree with the economic policy of the government of the province of Quebec.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, it is my firm belief that it is economically unsound to think that it is possible to put the economy back on its feet by favouring one, two, three or even four individual industries. When the industrial incentive program was developed, the Department of Regional Economic Expansion just about ignored sectorial industries and gave special assistance to the development of certain geographical areas and it is rather along that line that Quebec should have taken action.

If there were a proposal to be made, if for some reason the Quebec government wanted to encourage the industrial community in the province, they should have offered a proposal, they should have first responded to the proposal made by our Minister of Finance and suggested that some of the provisions in the program be made applicable in some areas of the province rather than in some others, or that some areas be excluded from the program, and not have discriminated against certain industries. That is why, Mr. Speaker, I say this here, as I would do elsewhere, and this is the place to do so, I support without reserve the provisions included in the budget which the Minister of Finance has brought forward and I hope that the media will play the role which morally is theirs. I am referring especially to those in the province of Quebec which will consider the proposal made by the Minister of Finance, the national proposition, before it is too late. Because, on the one hand, Mr. Speaker, one cannot try to make the people of the province of Quebec believe in sovereignty-association and pretend to be open to any proposal or any offer, and on the other hand to scorn any proposal coming from the federal government. Those people do not seem to realize that they lose all credibility and that all they deserve is the scorn of business circles in the province of Quebec towards an administration as clumsy and as unhealthy for the economy of the province.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member allow me a question?

Mr. Dupras: Yes.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I wonder if the hon. member, who is a good friend, would like to compare the situation of taxpayers in Quebec, given the current proposal of the Minister of Finance, and that of taxpayers from the province of Alberta. It has even been suggested that the Minister of Finance said that he had agreed to make concessions in favour of the oil industry in the province of Alberta in the future, perhaps for the next five to eight years. Now what is the taxpayer from the province of Alberta going to gain from that, considering that all taxpayers should be treated the same way? I am asking you for a new proposal because the Alberta taxpayer is definitely at a disadvantage compared to some—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order.

Mr. Dupras: Mr. Speaker, this question is becoming a speech but I would like to say to my friend and colleague from Edmonton West that I had written a note here to remind me to talk about the compensation program for Alberta oil prices and the openmindedness of the Alberta government. You will be surprised, Mr. Speaker, and my colleague will be surprised too when I tell them how much I admire the Alberta government and the Albertans who agreed to contribute to relieve the population of the province of Quebec—I refer to Quebec because this province is involved in the tax reduction program—by accepting the oil prices compensation program which has already benefited the people of the province of Quebec to the tune of $3 billion. And the Albertans, and I say so because it is exactly what happened, did not try to finesse with the Department of Finance or the 1974 federal proposal. They agreed and indeed it is partly taxes which might be paid to Alberta that Albertans have agreed to surrender to Quebecers.

As for the other part of his question, Mr. Speaker, there are some provisions in the budget which favour the citizens of Alberta. He is acquainted as well as I am with those provisions. So the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) agrees with me as he often does, Mr. Speaker. There is also the speech made by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner)—

An hon. Member: Just read the speech made by the Minister of Industry Trade and Commerce!

Mr. Dupras: Mr. Speaker, through you, I should like to say to the Leader of the Opposition that in his excellent speech, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce deals with Alberta and the benefits it derives from the budget.

● (1542)

[English]

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, as I rise to participate in the debate on Bill C-56, to amend the statute law relating to income tax and to authorize payments related to provincial sales tax reductions, I am struck by the inept method that is being used by the government to solve Canada's economic problems. The bill, of course, flows from what we now call the unwanted budget. The Minister Finance (Mr. Chrétien) was forced to bring in a budget. He did not want a budget. This budget was brought down less than 20 days after the Minister of Finance said that it would not be useful to have one and that it would be wise to wait. Canadians had five days' notice before the budget was introduced. Domestic and foreign pressures forced the Minister of Finance to reverse his position on presenting a budget. In Canada he was faced with a growing public outcry as more and more Canadians realized that the economic policies of this govemnent had failed. Even though the minister wanted to take more time to study the effect of his October economic measures; trends of unemployment, inflation, and real estate sales clearly showed that they had failed. The budget was delayed until the minister understood what most people had realized long ago. In foreign countries he was faced with vanishing investor confidence. The value of the Canadian dollar was declining rapidly, and even with the Trudeau government's efforts made after denials of intervention, the government was incapable of stopping it.

This reluctance to present a budget is understandable. The presentation of such a budget requires the government to reveal its forecasts for economic performance in the current year and to exhibit the government's spending and revenue cuts to public scrutiny. The Minister of Finance did not wish to admit that the forecasts made in the economic statement of October were proved wrong only six months after they were made. He did not want to reveal a serious error in the forecasting of the size of the budgetary deficit. The Minister of Finance did not wish to present a budget because a budget would have shown that the economic policies of the government had failed, and that is what the budget has shown.

Let us discuss the sales tax reductions which are included in this bill. At best, they can be seen as stop-gap measures. As the government has admitted, they will last for only six or nine months. The effect of these sales tax reductions will be to reduce consumer prices by 1 per cent, and that is a welcome development, but the increase in consumer prices between February and March alone was over 1 per cent. Thus, the benefit of the sales tax reduction will be swept away quickly by continuing high inflation.

In most provinces the sales tax cut will end in either six or nine months. Prices will then jump up the 1 per cent that is now being shaved off. So as I say, it is a temporary and stop-gap measure. The effect on inflation will be limited to the six or nine months, depending upon which province we are talking about. Even with the cut, inflation for the year is still going to average at least 7 per cent. Price levels have already surpassed the target for the end of the controls program in October of this year. In the 36 month attack on inflation, consumer prices were predicted to rise by a total of 19 per cent. Already, after 30 months of controls, consumer prices are more than 20 per cent higher, and there is still half a year of price increases to come. Even so, the rate of 19 per cent as predicted is not an acceptable rate.

No country with an economy like that of Canada can go along with a rate averaging even 6 per cent per annum over a lengthy period of time. The experience in the United States has shown—and the government there is very much aware—that the rate there, which is much lower than ours and which is presently at the 6 per cent level, is still too high, and the United States is taking measures to reduce that rate drastically.

I suppose we should not be surprised to see some stop-gap measures coming from the government opposite. I think these measures are very much like the Local Initiatives Program, Opportunities for Youth programs, Canada Works and others which have been shown to be stop-gap measures and which did nothing for long-term employment or long-term economic improvement. Even in the housing industry, which is supposed to be the bellwether of the economy, we find government gimmickry with such programs as the Assisted Home Ownership Program, which simply puts government-financed houses in competition with apartment buildings financed through the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

In many rural areas people are simply moving out of apartments and into AHOP homes, and when the government starts to take action on its mortgages, they move on with no equity and no stability for themselves or for their communities. Also in the housing field we have gimmickry like the assisted rental program, which has encouraged private investors to buy or build rental housing on the basis that they can rent it at lower than economic rents knowing that the government will give them the cash necessary to operate the units, albeit that that cash advance is added on as a mortgage and there is a charge against the title. All the program does is defer the date the owner of a property has to repay the money, and unless inflation continues in Canada at its present rate, those investors are destined for bankruptcy. Any program of the government that is predicated on continuing inflation at high levels has to be considered to be gimmickry.

Unlike the measures I have been speaking about, the sales tax gimmick I mentioned earlier is a huge intrusion into provincial jurisdictions. It is a move to set Canadian against Canadian. I ask hon. members to compare the treatment of the residents of Alberta with the treatment of the residents of British Columbia, and the treatment of residents of British Columbia with the treatment of residents of Quebec. I ask hon. members to compare the attitude of the government of Quebec with that of the federal government. This measure was so inadequate, that this week the Minister of State (Small Business) (Mr. Abbott) had to announce that he was going to introduce other measures to stimulate business in his sphere of interest.

● (1552)

Even the controls program which we are just now phasing out was harmful to Canada's economy. In the first place, it made investors nervous and delayed economic growth by limiting wage increases and reducing the amount of money in the hands of consumers. Consumers can hardly be expected to increase their demands on the economy and spend more money if the government is going to limit the amount of money that is put into their hands.

Looking at the situation with regard to taxation, and capital gains in particular, we can see quite clearly that the capital gains regulations as they exist have inhibited economic growth and have been a great disincentive to investment insecurities. Two days ago we on this side had a motion calling for a special committee of the House. I thought that the motion was apt and timely, but of course it was denied by the government. I thought it tied in very nicely with the results of the Royal Commission on Corporate Concentration which after three years had made its report at last. The observations in that report were that the capital gains had yielded less than 1 per cent of the total tax revenues in 1976 and that half of that was paid by corporations. On page 275 of the commission's report we find the following statement:

> Estimated yields from the tax on capital gains rose from $54 million in 1972 to $235 million in 1975, slightly less than half of which was paid by corporations. These are very modest sums indeed, especially when compared with the total federal tax revenues of $32.4 billion in 1976/1977.

A little later, the report states:

> In exchange for a relatively small sum in tax revenue and a partial move toward more equity, Canada's tax system was made much more complex and expensive to operate. The question is, was it worth it? We do not think so. There is no reason to expect that the capital gains tax will ever make a significant contribution to the government's tax revenues. It certainly will not do so while the Canadian economy remains in its present depressed state, and the existence of the tax is one depressing factor that the economy can ill afford at this time. The design of the capital gains tax ensured that it would do little in terms of equity, and the most recent amendments to the tax law are a further step backward in this sense. The result is a complicated and costly addition to the tax system and a disincentive to business investment, with little compensating benefit.

Clearly that indicates that the present policies for stimulating the economy are inadequate. Our motion called for creation of a special committee which would have been able to examine such ideas as those for which the government had already paid a big dollar.

I want to look also at the income tax aspects of this bill as well as the report of the royal commission. Certainly changes have been made to the income tax. I am not sure how good they will be in helping the economy out, but let me run briefly through them. Tax changes will be made on rail transportation and on expenditures on scientific research. There will be measures to encourage the production of energy-increased depletion allowances, measures to help production of Canadian films and to help employees at remote work sites, and measures that will affect many elderly Canadians with registered retirement savings plans. We were pleased to note that efforts by members on this side and the Consumers' Association of Canada have resulted in progressive changes to the rules regarding registered retirement savings plan withdrawals after the age of 60.

Measures were introduced to help capital gains tax problems arising on the family transfer of shares in family farm corporations and partnerships. Again I was dismayed to note that none of the small business people in Vancouver-Quadra, where we have no farms, were going to be helped by this measure. To illustrate the inadequacy of this bill and of the budget measures, let me point out that only yesterday the Minister of Finance announced that there will be similar relief in the way of capital gains tax given for private businesses which will be able to be passed on within a family without attracting the tax at the time of death.

After a great debate not many months ago—I guess it was after the last budget—concerning the proposals as they affect life insurance, I find that again changes are proposed to the rules relating to interest paid on insurance policy loans. I suggest that this is as unclear as it was some months ago. I hope that in committee of the whole the minister will be able to solve some of the problems existing in that area.

On the income tax aspects I wanted to mention what the royal commission has said in that regard as recorded at page 274 of the report. It stated:

> It is abundantly clear from what we have said in this chapter that savings over the next few years will be inadequate to finance the necessary business investment and that current unexpected risk-return ratios will be inadequate to induce risk capital investment. This and the other serious problems of the Canadian economy which we reviewed briefly in chapter one concern us deeply.

The commissioners say that tinkering will not work and that major changes are needed to our income tax system. I am not saying that this is my policy, and I am certainly not saying it is my party's policy to do what the royal commission indicates is necessary, but I am a chartered accountant who understands, probably better than most in the House who are not chartered accountants, some of the complications in the income tax and accounting laws and I have an idea of the huge costs involved in the legal advice needed in dealing with the income tax laws.

I think it is most important that we have some method of minimizing these legal costs for the ordinary taxpayers of Canada. After all, in the end it is the people who deal with these corporations who are required to pay the taxes. What we need is some forward looking ministers, particularly in the finance portfolio. I was thinking of that today as I prepared these notes and I was forced to look at the list of finance ministers in the last 15 years. There has been no fewer than six of them—most of them have disappeared now. Some hon. members may remember the names: Gordon, Sharp, Benson, Turner, Macdonald.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order. It being four o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely public bills and notices of motions.

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to proceed with Bill C-244 in the name of the hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. Dick) and to stand all preceeding bills.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Hon. members have heard the request of the parliamentary secretary. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

[English]

CONSTITUENCY RECORDS ACT

MEASURE TO ENSURE PRESERVATION OF CONSTITUENCY RECORDS

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton) moved that Bill C-244, respecting the preservation and surrender of constituency records, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this bill, which is entitled "An Act respecting the preservation and surrender of constituency records", is in many ways like a devil's advocate bill. I am bringing it forward because I think an important issue is involved and there should be some open discussion on it. I am not necessarily wedded to the exact form in which I have drafted this bill. I would like to see this subject matter referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, where perhaps it could be altered or a new bill drafted.

● (1602)

There have been discussions regarding bills dealing with conflicts of interest for members of parliament and so on. Let me outline generally the reason for bringing in this bill and why members of parliament cannot shy away from certain duties. We must come to grips with this problem and resolve it.

If a client has certain work done on his behalf by a lawyer, then the lawyer opens a file in his name. The lawyer is required to keep that file. It is not his file, it belongs to the client. If the client subsequently requests his file in order to take it to another law firm, as long as his bill is paid, the lawyer must give him that file because it is the client's property.

Doctors are required by law to keep files on patients. Those files must be kept for a certain number of years after they have ceased seeing the patients. Those files deal with particular persons and are important. They contain personal private matters about patients. Frequently those files are passed on from one doctor's practice to another. Notification goes out to the patients so that they always know where their files are.

The same happens in an accountant's office. An accountant cannot throw a client's file away because he is finished with him. Perhaps there will be a requirement for that file some years in the future. Other professions such as optometrists and dentists have patients' files on trust. Those files belong to the patients and are held in trust.

I am suggesting that members of parliament, in dealing with their constituents, should put material, letters written to them and their replies in files opened in the names of constituents. I believe those files are held in trust by the member who holds the office of a particular constituency. I point this out because I consider it to be important.

This was the first private members' bill which I introduced after I was elected in 1972. Unfortunately this is the first time it has been debated.

I should like to refer to an incident involving my predecessor, who shall remain nameless. I am sure this has happened in almost every other constituency. My predecessor was doing active work on a number of files. I was elected to office on October 30, and on November 7, 1972 I wrote a letter congratulating my predecessor and his wife for a vigorous, clean and hard-fought campaign. The letter read as follows:

> I would especially like to congratulate you for the earnest work you have put in in the last four and one-half years as the member of parliament for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton.
>
> Knowing your feeling that the constituents of Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton must be fully and actively served, I would enquire whether or not there are any matters involving them which you commenced during your term which I should now follow up in order that continuity be maintained and the electorate served and their problems dealt with. If you find that there are certain files or actions which you feel would be best handled by an uninterrupted service to the constituency, then I would be only too happy to get together with you at your convenience for a full discussion and to hear your suggestions.

I did not receive a written reply, but I happened to meet that member a few days later in the west block cafeteria. It was during lunch hour and he was sitting with a constituent from Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton. He told me that all his files were personal to him and that I would receive none.

Perhaps that does not seem to be an important issue, but in the following three months a number of constituents wrote to me and telephoned me indicating they had occasion to communicate with my predecessor. Apparently they had sent certain original documents. They asked me to follow up on these matters. I was put in the position of having to say, "I do not have any files; I do not have any such documents. Would you replace them and start again with me?" In some cases the documents were originals and could not be replaced. Those constituents never received what they deserved. Later I found out that those documents were not just thrown in the garbage; they were put through a shredding machine in the centre block. Those original documents belonged to the constituents. They were sent to the member representing them. They were not his. They were in his custody only because he held the office of member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton.

Members of parliament hold files on behalf of constituents, whether they are individuals or corporations. They are held in trust and should be turned over to our successors. Members of parliament have various files. They have files which deal with taxation matters for private individuals, health, the Canada Pension Plan, the guaranteed income supplement, unemployment insurance and immigration. To some people this is very personal information. Because of our offices, these people come to us for assistance. Members build up files on corporations and industries in their constituencies. Perhaps these files deal with tax problems, grants or with any number of things from tariffs to inquiring about getting landed immigrant status for a certain person who is an expert required by them. These files cannot be kicking around and opened up to the rest of the world because they contain personal information. They are particular to an industry, corporation or company. It is their right to deal with their respective members of parliament in a sense of confidentiality and trust. One should not bandy about this particular information. It is important for a member to retain the right to the information contained in files on a basis of trust only. The contents belong to the respective constituents, be they individuals or corporations.

In the cases where my predecessor destroyed files resulting in the loss of original documents, individual constituents were left without a remedy. They were left in awkward and difficult positions. In the case of some of the corporations in my constituency which wanted me to pursue matters that had been dealt with by my predecessor, I was required to write to them indicating that I had no files in my possession. They wanted me to continue pursuing matters on their behalf. I wrote to them indicating that I had no such files. They replied by saying that they had sent down an inch of material to my predecessor. They asked where this material was. I had to apologize and say that I had not received it. I asked them to send me photocopies of their files. At their expense, they provided me with complete photocopied files, including my predecessor's letters to them. I ended up being in possession of the files respecting corporations in photocopied form. That situation is unsatisfactory. I feel we must hold these files in trust.

That is the purpose of this bill. It provides in the preamble that:

● (1612)

—it is desirous to provide for continuity in the management of constituency affairs by members of the House of Commons and to ensure the preservation and maintenance of all constituency records that are relevant to and necessary for the better servicing of constituency needs, and generally to promote and to improve public confidence in their day-to-day dealings with elected representatives.

The bill contains a definition dealing with constituency records. It suggests what these records are that have to be passed on. I do not think this would appropriately include every file I have in my office. The bill states that:

"constituency record" means any record, file, correspondence or other document concerning constituency matters but does not include any such material that pertains to matters of a purely personal or political nature.

Naturally I have some files in a drawer labelled "personal" which have to do with Paul Dick and are not necessarily of a political or constituency nature. They may contain my life insurance policies, dealings with my bank or what-have-you. I happen to have these files in a drawer. Some people may have a filing system at home which they use for this purpose. Those personal files should not be turned over to a successor, and that is why I included that explanation.

Every member in this House probably has a number of files that deal with their constituency, but deal with it in a political way in the sense of who the member has as organizers in each municipality, ward or area. The files may contain mailing lists, voting trends in the constituency in federal and provincial elections. Those are files of a poltical nature and do not deal with individual or corporate constituents. Those are files that most members have for political reasons. I call those files political in nature, but I do not feel they should be passed on. Naturally a successor can dig out those facts if he wants, or he may be using a different method for compiling such files of a political nature. However, other files that deal with constituency matters, particularly in respect of individuals or corporations, should be turned over to a successor. This would include any record, file, correspondence or document that would constitute a constituency record.

One might wonder just who is to be considered a successor. A successor may come into being if a member retires from office and a by-election is called in that electoral district. The person elected would receive that material. A member may die in office or be defeated during an election. This measure provides for a time within which those constituency documents as they relate to people, corporations, unions or whatever in the constituency, may be turned over to the successor.

Of course, there is the matter of redistribution. I suppose the constituency of York Scorborough is a classic example. This is a constituency that is to become part of five constituencies after redistribution. The most recent member for York Scarborough who has had those files would have an obligation to pass them out to the new members. He could look at the street addresses to determine where the people live and turn those documents over to the new members for those areas.

I am not suggesting this is a simple matter, but I suggest it might be a way of ensuring continuity. If an individual wants to indicate that he has moved from Toronto to Vancouver, for example, he could request that the member send his file to the member representing that area in Vancouver. I also suggest in clause 4 that no person should be allowed to shred a person's file. These files are of an important nature and deal with the government and individuals' elected representatives. I was disgusted, quite frankly, when I discovered that my predecessor had shredded files of his constituents, and that some of those files contained original documents. The least he might have done was to send them back to the constituents.

This bill provides for arbitration in the case of any dispute. Mr. Speaker would appoint an individual, perhaps the whip of a party, or more than one if there were two parties involved. I do not have to elaborate on that. Someone may argue that the file is a constituency file while another may suggest it is a personal file. The matter could be settled finally in this way through arbitration.

The bill also provides a penalty, which is not light. In fact, it is greater than many penalties for summary conviction offences. The penalty is a fine of not more than $1,000 and not less than $500. I feel strongly that these files are held by us in trust for our constituents and there is no way a person should get away with a slap of the wrist or a suspended sentence. I think they should be fined, and this is something that we as members of parliament should recognize.

At page 3, clause 7 states that, in spite of this act, all other rights of an individual would be preserved, specifically the right to civil recourse against a member of parliament if he should destroy a constituent's file by shredding it or throwing it in the garbage. That member would have the right to sue for recovery or for compensation.

I realize I only have about a minute and a half left so I will try to wrap up this introduction very quickly. Perhaps this bill is not the best way of dealing with this matter. I would be glad to have the subject matter referred to a committee. Perhaps we might relate the bill only to files that have not been dealt with for two years or more. We could adopt the rule of sending such files back to constituents so they could deal with them. We could then state that the file is returned, it is in the constituent's hands and the constituent can do whatever he wishes with it. This would provide the member with a document showing that on such and such a date the file had been returned.

There may be other ways of dealing with this situation, but I would hope this matter could at least be sent to the committee as a general topic for discussion and consideration. This matter is of importance, just as the matter of conflict of interest is of importance. Let me emphasize that we hold these files in trust because of our position and we are not entitled to throw them away or destroy them. A constituent has a right to the file because the file deals with him, her or it, if a corporation is involved. I hope hon. members will give the bill consideration, and I will listen to their comments with interest.

Mr. D. M. Collenette (York East): Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to speak at length this afternoon. The hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. Dick) often comes to this Chamber with a good idea, and he should be commended for at least attempting to come to grips with what obviously could be a problem. I do not think his bill is the appropriate way of dealing with the subject. Perhaps it would be better if the subject matter was sent to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, or included in the deliberations in respect of the bill on the independence of parliament, which I understand will be going to the committee shortly. I say that in view of the undertakings by the President of Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) recently as a result of allegations made by the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens).

[Mr. Dick.]

• (1622)

As chairman of the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, I do not think it behooves me to move the subject matter of this bill to the committee because I believe in a certain amount of independence in that position. Certainly I would not object to another member moving the subject matter of the bill to committee.

There is an element of sadness really in discussing this topic, because if you go back to the British parliamentary tradition, going back 500 years, there has been a concept of what we would call the "honourable" member, the "honourable" gentleman or the "honourable" lady. To use a British expression, "it is good form"; it is good manners and good courtesy to pass on documents or files from one member to another when one is defeated.

In my particular case the former hon. member for York East, who was only here for 18 months, and whom I am sure the hon. member for Renfrew-Lanark-Carleton knows very well, was quite helpful in passing files on to me, especially in immigration cases, because we have a heavy immigration load in my constituency. Indeed, Mr. Arrol actually wrote letters to constituents after he was defeated on the basis that he was the member for the 29th parliament, and I believe he paid for postage out of his own pocket. I certainly did not object to that as a member of the 30th parliament because he was merely trying to clean up loose ends. I felt, having campaigned with this particular gentleman, that he was honourable enough that he would pass this information to me.

I know the opponent which the hon. member for Lanark-Renfew-Carleton defeated in 1972, and I am quite surprised that this gentleman, whose name shall go unmentioned at the moment, acted in this way. I do not dispute the word of the hon. member opposite, but I am very much surprised by his allegation.

If we pass this bill or if this bill is allowed to go forward, what we are really doing is admitting that members in this place are somewhat less than honourable. Perhaps I am naive, perhaps I am clinging to ideals of another generation or age, but I do not think there is anything wrong with idealism. I would rather leave it to the discretion of the defeated member and accept his or her judgment as to what should be passed on.

The hon. member mentioned the case of York-Scarborough. My former colleague, Mr. Robert Stanbury, retired from this House last year, and he made provision with the members who share his constituency now—one of them, the hon. member for Scarborough East (Mr. O'Connell), who is in the chamber, the hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. Martin) and myself—to share the load of his constituency work, which we have done. In my particular case in York East, some files and letters have been sent my way. I understand that that portion of his constituency which has no member at the moment is being looked after by the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Danson). So provisions have been made. Of course, it makes it much easier in that particular case because we are all of the same party.

If a member retires and his constituency is swallowed up by other constituencies not represented by the same party, I would think that those members would be willing to share their case load and their experience. Perhaps the independence of parliament act is where we should deal with the absolute question of destruction of official documents.

The member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton, I assume, is indicating that birth certificates, affidavits or that type of thing were shredded in the environs of this parliament. If this is true I do not think anyone could support that kind of action. Documents are sent to us by our constituents on a confidential basis and they expect them to be returned. Indeed, I would expect such action when a file is dead. It would be good form to contact certain constituents who have sent very sensitive documents to you to make sure that even the copies of these documents are returned to their originators upon defeat of the member.

Again, we should not go the route of this bill to achieve this end. This debate this afternoon serves its purpose in drawing to the attention of hon. members in this chamber the very problem the bill proposes to rectify. It is on the record. There will be hon. members in this chamber who will be defeated in the next election, I am sure. It happens. There will be those who resign. I see that the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) has a funny look on his face. I do not know whether he is contemplating defeat or not, but with the rise of Liberal fortunes in western Canada that cannot be counted out.

Mr. Mazankowski: Not at all.

Mr. Collenette: I would like to deal with the element of confidentiality a bit more. The hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton talked in terms of a member of parliament on the same footing as other professionals—accountants, lawyers and doctors. Maybe it is arrogance on my part or maybe it is naivety, but I believe that members of parliament occupy a special presence within our society, one that is not more privileged but is special in its service to the country.

I would not accept the element of professionalism in the same context as the hon. member, so I would not want him to give people the wrong impression, that just because a certain thing is expected of professionals then it should necessarily follow from us. There must be an element of discretion that is permitted members of parliament by virtue of our office and position in society. Again, my point of view can only be accepted if society at large accepts the point of view that hon. members are indeed responsible, and that they are honourable despite the fact there may be cases where honourable conduct has not been forthcoming.

One other element I would like to talk about, should Bill C-244 go through as we have it not, is the policing aspect. As a member of parliament—again, perhaps it is arrogance, naivety or my own peculiarities—I believe that I have to answer to only one constituency in this country and that constituency is the one that elected me. I do not believe that I should policed or that my files should be policed, even after my defeat or even by my colleagues, no matter how much I respect them.

Indeed, for a party such as the Conservatives, who are continuously talking about the evils of security, policing and government bureaucracy, I would think this is the last thing that they would want. Given what I have said about the attitude towards members of parliament for the concept of a member of parliament in the British tradition, I am surprised that this kind of bill does come from the Conservative party, a party which is known for being one that has always tried to preserve the British parliamentary system to the hilt, at least according to the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), who gives one the impression that the Conservative party is the only party that has any respect for this place. This, of course, is not true, but even if you accept one iota of that argument, then bringing this bill here this afternoon seems inconsistent.

In conclusion, I commend the hon. member for giving us an opportunity to discuss this bill in the House. I would certainly not be opposed—though I would not be prepared to move such a motion myself because of my peculiar position as chairman of the committee—if the subject matter of this bill was referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections. I think also the hon. member should talk to his House leader and his other colleagues who will be dealing with the independence of parliament act, and perhaps the government could make some accommodation for some of the provisions in this bill, or at least include some statements on expected behaviour when members are defeated without actually stipulating that all documents, irrespective of their content, must be handed over to one's successor.

● (1632)

[Translation]

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a few comments on this bill. I think that Bill C-244, which would require members of parliament to pass on to their successors any files they possess dealing with matters relating to their constituency poses a very sensitive question. This afternoon, I heard a member make a comparison with professionals such as notaries and lawyers who are bound by law to keep important documents, and to preserve the secrecy of their correspondence. I would not put a member of parliament in the same category as a professional, first of all simply because there is no association, as in the case of the professional, which forces him to act in such a way, there is no code of ethics which requires him to ensure secrecy and preserve all documents. Also, I think the role of the member of parliament is a temporary one. I would rather compare his role with that of a mayor, a chairman of a school board or a chairman of some agency. It is so temporary as a matter of fact that I am surprised to hear that some members keep the original birth certificates, and extremely important contracts in their files here in parliament.

That is not the way I do things. When I discuss a particular case and must use the originals, I make a photostat copy of them and immediately return the original to its owner, because one never knows just how many years or months a member will stay in parliament. The point is that this is a temporary period, and I underline temporary, because one cannot risk having important documents destroyed, as the hon. member indicated a moment ago. That is unfortunate but I think that if the hon. member had understood his role he would not have kept these important papers in his offices.

I have been keeping files for 16 years, but I have only photostats. If the client wants his original copies, he has them himself or his legal counsel. I only have photostats. I feel this is the safest way for a member in this House to deal fairly with his clients, considering conditions here in parliament. For certain exchanges of correspondence that are strictly of a private nature, and even political correspondence, I strongly object to a member being obliged to submit to regulations under the penalty of being fined, as proposed in the bill. This is going too far, this is asking too much from a member that may be elected for six months or a year only. That is asking too much because once again the best way is not to keep originals but to return them, with the constant feeling that we are here on a short-term basis only. Those who are here on a long-term basis have a chance of a lifetime, because we are always asking ourselves whether we will be re-elected at the next election that comes every three years or so. Therefore there is an absolute necessity to protect the confidentiality of correspondence. Those who write to us, members from the Social Credit Party of Canada, would not write to a Liberal member. They will often not tell me secrets they will disclose to one of their friends who is a Liberal member, but other people will tell me secrets they would not disclose to someone else.

So this is a very difficult matter, this is a very sensitive subject because our correspondence is to some degree privileged. When people come to see us, they trust us. They do not trust someone else who may beat us at the next election, but they trust us not to betray their confidence, not to kneel before someone else they never liked and they never trusted. I feel that immediate steps should be taken to avoid their having to do something they would not like to do. This is the suggestion I wanted to make. So let each member, instead of keeping originals, simply keep photostats and return to the originator as soon as possible the originals of any correspondence and important documents.

[English]

Mr. Rod Blaker (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, when I looked at this bill earlier this afternoon I thought that perhaps the hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. Dick) had put his finger on one of the problems that members of parliament have faced. As I read the bill, however, and listened to those who have spoken on it, I wondered whether he had done me and others the service I had hoped he might.

[Mr. Gauthier (Roberval).]

I share the experience of coming to parliament and finding not so much as a single constituency file left by my predecessor. One spends the next few months explaining to constituents that there is not a great deal one can do about their lost property or documents. It is also distasteful in that one is locked into the position of trying to explain it is no one's fault. As time went on I encountered a couple of other problems, and I will conclude by suggesting to the hon. member who proposed Bill C-244 that he has not found the solution.

On the one hand, I think I can put forward the argument that there is available existing law to satisfy the problem he has raised, but he does not seem to satisfy the problem I have found not only of predecessors not dealing with files properly, but the other problems that all of us have as members of parliament.

The hon. member argues that ownership of constituency files is a matter of trust. I take that to be an expression more common in the law in which the hon. member opposite was trained, the common law, than it is in the law in which I had my training. But if we agree on the general legal meaning of the word "trust," there is no difficulty. The obligations which flow from the care of handling of information and documentation would be about the same in Canada whether in the common or the civil law.

The hon. member raised the question of how these documents are to be dealt with. I want to propose that there is existing law to handle that problem, but it does not solve some of the other problems I have seen.

When both the hon. member and I first arrived here, public archives was willing to store the documents and files of ministers and members of parliament. Some time in 1973 or 1974 they stopped doing that because they could no longer afford the incredible amount of space required. Furthermore, they were running into a very serious problem on the method of storage. It was not clear for how many years documents were to be stored, who owned them, what was to be done with them and who would have access to them. Since we as members of parliament have never given instructions on what should be done with these files, it was obviously going to become a serious storage problem.

● (1642)

To give some idea of what we are talking about, I would assume that each and every member of parliament would probably have about 100 square feet of document space accumulating per annum. Taking a storage cost of about $6 a square foot, which is the warehousing storage cost today in Ottawa for files, it would run $250,000 per annum to store these files. This would be without any thought as to their eventual dispositon which is the original Kafkaesque problem of bureaucracy building upon bureaucracy with the never ending horror of nobody being allowed to see the files and nobody being allowed to dispose of them. We would be inundated with files within about five years and we would be unable to come into the chamber.

When public archives no longer permitted MPs to dead file their files in that fashion, I began to wonder if it would be possible to have microfilming done, but that process did not seem to be available. As a result I began to store things in various nooks and corners of the office but this is not a very satisfactory arrangement. However, one day I was in the parliamentary restaurant, curious as to what lay behind the various wall of this building. I am sorry that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) is not here as is usual on Friday afternoon because I am going to tell one of his better guarded secrets.

If hon. members who are familiar with the restaurant upstairs want to probe around, they will probably find in the order of ten to twelve rather old filing cabinets, each containing upwards of 1,000 files, all belonging to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, who has spent 30 years in this House. I have never told him that I found out where he stores his dead files, so I expect next Friday afternoon when he is reading Hansard he will come across the floor and give me the devil for talking about it. But he has never found the solution to the storage problem either. What he has done is that he has relied on his friendships, contacts and his well deserved reputation in the House and has the roof of the House of Commons under the rafters jammed to the doorways with his original files collected over the years—

An hon. Member: Twenty-nine filing cabinets.

Mr. Blaker: Is it 29? I did not do an actual count. I suggested there were several thousand of them. It is incredible. While we have all come to believe that the man is eternal, it is probable according to the statistics that one day he will no longer be in a position to deal with these files and, of course, we have no rules here as to what to do with them.

Mr. Paproski: And he won't give them up.

Mr. Blaker: The hon. member for Edmonton Centre (Mr. Paproski) says he will not give them up. How true that is. He does not give them up in his office either.

That is one of the problems the hon. member responsible for this bill I thought might try to solve. Perhaps one day we will get microfilm legislation which will handle this difficulty. However, I believe Bill C-244 does not go the root of the problem.

There is another difficulty concerning this matter. The hon. member has argued that the contents of these files are not only subject to the law of trust but they are also held in either the solicitor-client relationship or in something so similar to it that the general principles of the solicitor-client relationship should obtain. I agree with him. Having said that, nothing in this bill seems to offer the assurance to the citizen, or non-citizen for that matter, under his definition of a constituency record, that that information shall remain confidential unless and until he has given his consent to the handling of the documentation. While I understand the interest in the subject matter of documents, it seems to me that we are not only concerned with that; we are also concerned with the exchange of information, the exchange of opinion, the exchange of data, expressions by either a member of parliament or expressions by the individual citizen.

The vast majority of citizens would be more than a little disturbed to find that a committee of two or three members of parliament or whips, or whoever it might be, had suddenly acquired the power and the authorization to dispose of the correspondence of those citizens without the expressed consent of those citizens beforehand. This raises another problem. Generally in law practice there is some financial interest, together with a professional interest, in seeing to it that out of date files, or current but not active files, are moved along either to other members in the partnership, when one partner dies, or they are moved along to other law firms in the event it is a sole practitioner who has been unable to keep up his practice for whatever reason or has died. There is no direction as to how to handle the incredible pile of documentation and correspondence that we as members of parliament seem to acquire.

There is not much interest on the part of any other member, regardless of his party affiliation, to take over files from one of his colleagues.

I suppose if there were any interest it would probably be on the part of another party's member who might have gained the seat and who would be curious to know how his predecessor had handled correspondence, et cetera, in the riding. But we do not have an essential, important and rational motivation as to how to deal with these things.

The hon. member's bill comes at an opportune time. Summertime is when a lot of us start carrying out files. I hesitate to destroy any of these files, not only because of the documentation itself but because citizens who write to me are entitled to feel that the opinions they express are not simply thrown into a garbage pail. On the other hand, after five and one-half years in parliament I am beginning to wonder if the building will withstand the weight of all the files which I am collecting. Sometimes we think about attempting to contact citizens in an effort to gain their consent to destroy files. However, mobility is such a factor in Canadian life that it would take months to find all the people who originally wrote to me. Some of them are dead, and I would have to look into the question of whether there are any rights in their estate to take any action. Sometimes I find constituents have moved to other parts of Canada to addresses unknown. I cannot cope—

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, I am rising on a point of order. I agree with my hon. friend who presently has the floor on a number of points which he has brought up. It is sort of like a devil's advocate bill in that I want to have an airing of the topic. I would be pleased to have someone move the motion to discharge the bill but to send the subject matter to committee, where it could perhaps be dealt with in more detail—

An hon. Member: It is not important enough to do.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please.

Mr. Dick: I would like to ask the question whether he would be so kind as to do that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I think the hon. member had mentioned that during his former speech.

Mr. Blaker: Mr. Speaker, very often there is a courtesy in the House that members will attempt to get the subject matter of the bill off to committee. I want to finish by explaining to the hon. member why he is wrong. If I believe he is wrong, it would be most improper of me to propose that the subject matter go to committee.

At one point the hon. member mentioned that he was discouraged because there was no remedy open to the citizen. I have tried to point out that we do not have any rational way of handling this information. I went through that entire story to make it very clear to the hon. member that his bill would require the handling of documentation in a manner of which most of us are incapable. As the years go by we are simply not capable of storing this kind of data. Barring access to space under the roof of this building—where at least one hon. member is storing his dossiers—there is no way in which we can do what the hon. member wants us to do. We simply do not have the ability to store and care for these documents under a law which would, in effect, impose a solicitor-client relationship upon a member of parliament and his constituents, or anyone else who may write to him.

● (1652)

Having said this, I want to point out what I feel is wrong in law with the proposal, and it is this. A remedy is already available to the citizen who claims his documentation has not been returned to him. Those documents, under the law of my province—and I assume this would apply to a citizen of the other provinces—are private property. Under the law he has a right to reacquire his file and the court will uphold that right.

The hon. member has included in his bill a provision that, in the event of the wilful or deliberate destruction or mutilation of the documentation, a fine may be imposed. Well, Mr. Speaker, the Criminal Code already handles that matter. The wilful destruction of property of other people constitutes an offence. That is why I do not want to see this kind of bill go before a committee. The law already provides a remedy for citizens who feel aggrieved in this regard.

I end by saying that I had hoped the hon. member would help us resolve some of the problems we have in this regard. I do not think he has done so. In the area with which he is dealing, there is already good common law and good civil law to make sure that the rights of citizens are well protected. I regret the circumstances in which this bill should not, in my view, be sent to a committee. As a matter of fact, it will not be me who will prevent it from going further through the usual method of talking it out. I realize the hon. member wants the whole subject to be considered in committee, but I believe we need a far better understanding of how this problem should be dealt with before we proceed further into the narrow issue of the handling of documents.

Hon. Martin O'Connell (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, I have no doubt that the author of this bill is well intentioned but his proposals are, in my humble opinion, misguided and in part contradictory. I think he has placed before us a bill which is unworkable. We all recognize the attempt the hon. member has made to be reasonable in not seeking to sweep all correspondence or documents within the ambit of the measure, but the means he has provided for determining what is within its scope and what is not are ineffective. Moreover, I find some of them objectionable.

The hon. member himself suggested that this might not be the best bill for tackling the problem he outlined. I think he is right. He suggested it might be preferable to return important documentation to whomever had sent it to us. That is indeed a preferable procedure in the case of original documents. In my own case, as far as I can recall I do not accept original documents without asking the person concerned if he wants them back. If so, I photocopy and send the originals back.

My question is: Should we be legislating in this field? Should we not, rather, be developing more professional standards of conduct which would ensure the protection of original documents? I say this bearing in mind the vulnerability of members of parliament in their occupation. Ought not members simply to exercise good judgment in passing on a file?

I agree with the hon. member for Lachine-Lakeshore (Mr. Blaker) that documents should be passed on only with the consent of the authors. This is why I say that the bill is in part contradictory in its principles. I think we would all agree that correspondence between a constituent and a member of parliament involves aspects of trust. But is it not a contradiction to say that in other circumstances, or at some other time, because these documents constitute what are sometimes called constituency records, some generalized conception of the constituency, this trust can be interpreted as requiring that, in effect, it be broken and that the documents or correspondence be turned over to someone else? There is no requirement for consent. In fact, consent would be so difficult to obtain in the circumstances which arise when an MP is defeated or resigns that I think any proposal along these lines would be unworkable.

In closing, I will mention another aspect. Let us consider the means proposed by the hon. member for implementing the bill. He suggests the setting up of an arbitration committee composed of three persons. How would such a committee be established? It would be established by whips. Do we conceive of whips, who are members of parliament, as being non-partisan, judicious persons—members who are whips in this House at the present moment excepted, of course! Can the public be assured that the element of a judicious approach would be represented in such a body nominated by partisans and in proceedings which would lead to fines? Is parliament to get into the business of imposing fines on persons who do not comply?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. It being five o'clock, the hour for the consideration of private members' business has expired. I do now leave the chair until 2 p.m. on Monday, pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At five o'clock the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.