COMMUNICATION.

FOR THE STANDARD.

"On Thursday last a Coroner's Inquest was beld over the body of a man found dead near the product suicide."

Ma. Entron,—
The above attracted my notice the other day in a late Newspaper, and was followed by a brief account of the man's life, and the distressing circumstances of his death, as far as they could be Sch gathered from the evidence before the jury called to investigate the matter. It appears that the deceased was a member of the Temperance Society and to this lamentable fact may be traced his tragical exit from the world, as, upon a post morte examination of the body an icicle was found attached to his liver.

How unfortunate it is for that part of mankind, so easily made the dupes of others' folly, that not only health and enjoyment but even life itself (as in the case above) is madly sacrificed to the enthusizem of those who are always ready to lead people astray-and for what and how many deplorable effects of their foolish views have the members of

I hope something may speedily be done to check the evils that such societies are letting loose upon the world; and to fence about with an impassible barrier, all those dear delights of social life which only possess unmingled enjoyment when secure. from the visite of such unwelcome intrudefs as the members of these secioties undoubtedly are. Show me one of their members, Mr. Editor, and I will point you out a man who had not sufficient resolution to refrain from getting drunk, even when he caught but the glimpse of a bottle- or one who found it necessary to patch up his drunken character, by seeming to be what he is not, while assoc ating with others; to enjoy in secret his beastly in-Brig toxication, and I will show you another who, want- Schr. ng wit to grace the table, kindly gave his friends s pleasing pretext for dismissing him-one whose miserly e sposition finds a very convenient saving of money in joining a Temperance Society, or a eyeophact seoundrel who, sex ous to keep friends Brig with both parties, passes by the cheering glass o Brandy, only to get tipsy on Port or Madeira.

In all cases, Mr. Editor, I could show you more | Schr. or less of hypocrisy and demonstrate that depraved habits and interested motives belong atmost exclu sively to these self styled modern reformers. Do not be surprised that I uso harsh language for I (sel so deeply interested in the subject that I must so speak - who that has ever met in the circle of his friends and felt his heart, warmed by the cheering glass does not think has I do-who is there, knowing the many generous actions, and genume Brig friendly attachments, growing over the "diluted lowi" that would so soon follow them to the grave. Schr. Shall we dash from our lips the cup which genius and talent have so sweetly wreathed with all the witchery of song, and endeavour to clog time with weights, that his moments may pass more heavily?
No, "I'd rather be a dog and bay the moon;" but Brig something, Mr. Editor, must be done, that the mo-tives of these designing men may be exposed to the world, and that our public journals may not be called on to record such distressing events as the one that has led to the preceding remarks. Please to offer come suggestion to myself and friends upon the subject.

I am, Mr. Editor, Yours &c.

St. Andrews, Feb. 1, 1833.

Fifty times a day do we hear this remark made; and the frequency with which it is called forth is a most unanswerable proof that

This extraordinary mildness of temperature seems to be a benevolent interposition of Providence in behalf of the poor, who, had the season been such an one as we usually hare, must have suffered very much, deprived of employment as they had been to a considerable extent for nearly the whole past year and unprepared as they consequently were and troublesome disease to eredicate in its advanced stages, in addition to its uncertainty. This disease is likewise dangerous to those who have to attend the animal. This disease is not contagious except by inoculation, and through this means it can be given to any animal, even man himself. The groom therefore, or whoever has to attend a horse labouring under this disease, should never touch him with his hands, but always wear oilskin gloves, through these the matter cannot penetrate. This is only a proper caution for although he may imagine his skin is perfectly whole, yet the smallest crack, or even the prick of a pin, is sufficient for the purpose of inoculation. These gloves should also be worn while giving the animal a ball, as from the scratches of the region of the one or the other is, we believe unavoidable. This, we should think, would also be a conficient reason for not triffing with any disease that bears the slightest resemblance to glanders; and that the owners semblance to glanders; and that the owners all human teeling towards the groom aside.)
