FRENCH POLITICS.

When Premier Floquet, on the 14th inst., brought up his proposition in the French Chamber, to revise the Constitution, Count de Parville at once moved that the debate on the subject be indefinitely postponed. This was strenuously opposed by the Government, but the postponement was carried by a vote of 307 to 216.

Premier Floquet thereupon announced that the Ministry would resign, and immediately after Floquet's announcement all the members of the Ministry sent their resignations to President Carnot.

Opportunist and moderate journals, commenting on the vote of the Chamber of Deputies, on the motion to indefinitely postpone the debate on the bill for the revision of the Constitution, said that Count de Parville had been given President Carnot to exercise perfect liberty in the construction of a new Cabinet, and to form the Government as he saw fit.

Radical papers assert that after M. Floquet's overthrow by the Opposition no Republican Government is possible. Conservative and Boulangist organs claim that a dissolution of the Chamber of Deputies is more than ever necessary. The Chamber, they say, can no longer be relied upon.

The provisions of the bill for the revision of the Constitution, which was drafted last October by M. Floquet, are as follows: By clause 1 the Chamber, elected for seven years, shall be renewed to the extent of one-third every two years and by clause 2 the Senate, also elected for six years, but by delegation of the clause, appointed by the President, shall be renewed in thirds by the President, who can reappoint them, and are to resign only when the Chamber of Representatives formally votes that the nation has lost confidence in them.

By clause 4 a Council of State is created to advise and screen the Cabinet in the work of legislation.

Boulangier was a passive spectator of the proceedings in the Chamber of Deputies, but immediately after the vote he issued a manifesto to the electors of the department of the Seine, claiming credit for his party for the overthrow of the Ministry, and attempting to secure the country by the coming of a proposal to revise the constitution, which if passed by the Chamber, the ministry will have to be rejected by the Senate.
