

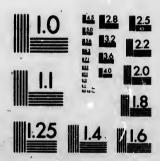

IMAGE EVALUATION TEST TARGET (MT-3)

Photographic Sciences Corporation

23 WEST MAIN STREET WEBSTER, N.Y. 14580 (716) 872-4503 O to the least of the least of CIHM/ICMH Microfiche Series.

CIHM/ICMH Collection de microfiches.

Canadian Institute for Historical Microreproductions / Institut canadian de microreproductions historiques

61981

Technical and Bibliographic Notes/Notes techniques et bibliographiques

	em is filmed a	supplémentaire	ratio checked belov éduction indiqué ci- 18X		26)	·	30X
Ce do	Commentaires tem is filmed a cument est fili	supplémentaire t the reduction né au taux de re	ratio checked belov éduction indiqué ci-	dessous.	26)	•	30X
			16;
	appear within have been omi il se peut que lors d'une rest	itted from filmir certaines pages auration apparai cela était possib	ver possible, these		ensure the bes Les pages tota	it possible ima ilement ou par un feuillet d'e imées à nouve	ge/ tiellement rrata, une pelure au de façon à along interior (La reliure serre	margin/	ows or distortion le l'ombre ou de la intérieure			disponible or partially obs	ocured by errata
		itres documents			Comprend du	lementery mate matériel suppl
		s and/or illustra i illustrations en			Quality of prir Qualité inégal	nt varies/ e de l'impressio	on i.e. other than b our (i.e. autre qu	iue or black)/ e bieue ou noire)		Showthrough, Transparence	•
	Coloured maps Cartes géograp	s/ phiques en coul	B ur		Pages détache
	Cover title mis Le titre de cou	sing/ verture manque				ured, stained o ées, tachetées
1 1		d and/or iamina staurée et/ou pa				d and/or lamin ées et/ou peliid
	Covers damag Couverture en				Pages damage Pages endome
	Coloured cove Couverture de	. •••			Coloured page Pages de coul
origin copy v which reprod	e institute has attempted to obtain the best ginal copy available for filming. Features of this by which may be bibliographically unique, iich may alter any of the images in the production, or which may significantly change usual method of filming, are checked below.			qu'ii de c poin una mod	L'Institut a microfilmé le meilleur exemplaire qu'il iul a été possible de se procurer. Les détails de cet exemplaire qui sont peut-être uniques du point de vue bibliographique, qui peuvent modificure image reproduite, ou qui peuvent exiger une modification dans la méthode normale de filmage sont indiqués ci-dessous.

The copy filmed here has been reproduced thanks to the generosity of:

Library of Congress
Photoduplication Service

ues du

ger une

filmage

by errata med to nent une pelure, facon à modifier

The images appearing here are the best quality possible considering the condition and legibility of the original copy and in keeping with the filming contract specifications.

Original copies in printed paper covers are filmed beginning with the front cover and ending on the last page with a printed or illustrated impression, or the back cover when appropriate. All other original copies are filmed beginning on the first page with a printed or illustrated impression, and ending on the last page with a printed or illustrated impression.

The last recorded frame on each microfiche shall contain the symbol → (meaning "CONTINUED"), or the symbol ▼ (meaning "END"), whichever applies.

Maps, plates, charts, etc., may be filmed at different reduction ratios. Those too large to be entirely included in one exposure are filmed beginning in the upper left hand corner, left to right and top to bottom, as many frames as required. The following diagrams illustrate the method:

L'exemplaire filmé fut reproduit grâce à la générosité de:

Library of Congress
Photoduplication Service

Les images suivantes ont été reproduites avec le plus grand soin, compte tenu de la condition et de la netteté de l'exemplaire filmé, et en conformité avec les conditions du contrat de filmage.

Les exemplaires originaux dont la couverture en papier est imprimée sont filmés en commençant par le premier plat et en terminant soit par la dernière page qui comporte une empreinte d'impression ou d'illustration, soit par le second plat, selon le cas. Tous les autres exemplaires originaux sont filmés en commençant par la première page qui comporte une empreinte d'impression ou d'illustration et en terminant par la dernière page qui comporte une telle empreinte.

Un des symboles suivants apparaîtra sur la dernière image de chaque microfiche, selon le cas: le symbole → signifie "A SUIVRE", le symbole ▼ signifie "FIN".

Les cartes, planches, tableaux, etc., peuvent être filmés à des taux de réduction différents. Lorsque le document est trop grand pour être reproduit en un seul cliché, il est filmé à partir de l'angle supérieur gauche, de gauche à droite, et de haut en bas, en prenant le nombre d'images nécessaire. Les diagrammes suivants illustrent la méthode.

1	2	3	1
			2
			94.

1	2	3
4	5	6

THE O'DONNELLS

GLEN COTTAGE.

A TALE OF

THE FAMINE YEARS IN IRELAND.

By DVP. CONYNGHAM, LL.D., OR OF "SERRICAN'S MARCH TERROUGH THE SOUTE, LISH BRIGADE AND ITS CAMPAIGNS," "RAMPIELD,
THE LAST PREAT STRUGALE FOR RELAND," "LEVIES OF THE RESE SADITS AND MARTYSS," ETC., ETC., ETC.

D. & J. SADLIER & CO., 31 HARCDAY STE MONTREAL: Mo. 875 Norma-Danie Stenie.

ive day of the state of the post of which the again, the light was firstly Entered secording to Act of Congress, in the year 1874, By D. & J. SADLIER & CO., In the Office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington. in the state of the contract of the state of wise has a gratestamina, assess with a rest of the contract of the still state of the secured more by I knight then est and and desire to promote analysis The first out of the series of the free free of the first of the first of the free of the and surface a proof to the contract of the tion in which thinks and the old man children

8

In nove wrote thric story add press on to Eng wise Tof a of a concinter laws

frier but reso

IRELAND is a fruitful theme for the poet, the novelist, the orator, and the historian. Her wrongs and her grievances have been, like a thrice-told tale, so often repeated in song and story, that it may appear difficult, indeed, to add anything new to the sad catalogue of oppression on the part of England and of suffering on the part of Ireland.

boatta (%)

thing sale one.

a lad mor a p

What its to

English Brack

in company of September 2

the Vale ten

Han Shill W

The English policy of coercing Ireland into English views and English ideas is neither a wise nor a statesman-like one.

The love and devotion of a nation, like that of an individual, are secured more by friendly concessions, and a desire to promote mutual interests and prosperity, than by oppressive laws and coercive measures. The Irish are a generous and chivalrous people, whose friendship can be won by kindness and justice; but they are, on the other hand, a jealous and resolute people—jealous of their liberty, jealous of their rights and privileges, and resolute in the maintenance of them, even though they had no other means to guard them but by banding together in that wild spirit of revenge which has been so fruitful of blood and misery.

be

me

th

try

go aff co br na de th re di

For seven hundred years England has tried a system of coercion on Ireland. It has failed in pacifying her. She has followed up this by maligning and slandering her before the world by her subsidized writers, such as Cambrensis and Froude. What is the result to-day? Trampled and despised Ireland is prouder and more defiant than she was when the first Anglo-Norman set foot on her soil; and her long-cherished inheritance—her Catholic faith—which has cost centuries of persecution and oceans of blood to wipe out, is to-day purer, stronger, and more firmly rooted on her soil than ever.

Such an introduction as this may appear out of place for a novel; but then it must be recollected that this "o'er true tale" is founded on the incidents arising from that most fearful period of Irish history and Irish suffering—the famine years. The unfeeling, unchristian spirit displayed at that time both by English statesmen and the English press can never be forgotten. When the Irish were dying by thousands of actual starvation, and when the living were scarcely able to bury the dead, the London and resolute though they out by bandvenge which sery.

d has tried

d. It has owed up this before the uch as Camsult to-day? prouder and first Angloer long-cheraith - which and oceans er, stronger, than ever. y appear out must be re-" is founded most fearful uffering-the vistian spirit glish statesever be foring by thouen the living

, the London

Times, in a fit of jubilation, cried out-"The Irish are gone, gone with a vengeance; the Lord be praised!" In the same spirit English statesmen prevented Turkey and other powers from sending relief to Ireland, as such generosity would look like a reflection on England. In fact, several steamers laden with grain had to return with their cargoes, and others were so hampered with red-tapeism that their cargoes rotted before they could be delivered. It is no wonder that starving Ireland became disaffected. It is no wonder, while, in the same spirit; the landlords were wiping out the unfortunate peasantry to make room for sheep and black cattle, that many of them were shot by the infuriated people. Such assassinations were followed by Special Commissions, and such men as Judge Keogh were instructed to do the work of the government, and to strike terror into the disaffected which simply meant to hang all they could muster up evidence enough against. The brothers Cormack, who were executed in Nenagh, County Tipperary, were victims of this decimating policy. The first jury that tried them (on which jury, by the way, were wear relatives of the writer) disagreed and were discharged; but Judge Keogh, fully resulved on doing the work of his masters, immediately, empanneled a more obsequious one, and they were convicted and subsequently executed. The innocence of the Cormacks of the murder of Mr. Ellis was so generally known that His Grace the Most Rev. Dr. Leahy, Archbishop of Cashel, joined in a petition to the Lord Lieutenant, requesting a commutation of their sentence. But the fiat had gone forth; terror should be stricken into Tipperary, and two innocent young men were immolated in order that her Gracious Majesty might live in peace and reign in security.

The scene of "The O'Donnells of Glen Cottage" has been laid in Tipperary, and the plot chiefly turns on the sufferings of the people during the famine years and the execution of the Cormacks. The characters introduced are each and all real personages, many of whom are living to-day. The name of some few of them have been slightly changed, but the majority of them come before our readers under their real names.

The pictures of the sufferings of the poor starved peasantry during the famine, the heartless evictions of Lord Clearall, the treacherous, unprincipled conduct of his agent, Mr. Ellis, and his sanctimonious protege, the Rev. Mr. Sly, are no fancy sketches. They are unfortunately true pictures of the state of Ireland at the time.

executed. he murder that His hbishop of ord Lieutheir senh; terror nd two inl in order

Muy 142 3 Glen Cotd the plot he people ecution of oduced are of whom me few of ut the maders under

e in peace

the poor the hearthe treachagent, Mr. e, the Rev. hey are unof Ireland

Such are the scenes and incidents that go to make up our story; and if the author has but succeeded in laying before his readers a truthful picture of the state of Ireland, and of the wrongs and sufferings of the Irish people, during the famine years, he feels satisfied that his labor will be fruitful of good results.

strong h. Manufact the state to make D. P. CONYNGHAM, LL.D.

. प्रांत्र अंतर सी अपूर्व है है है

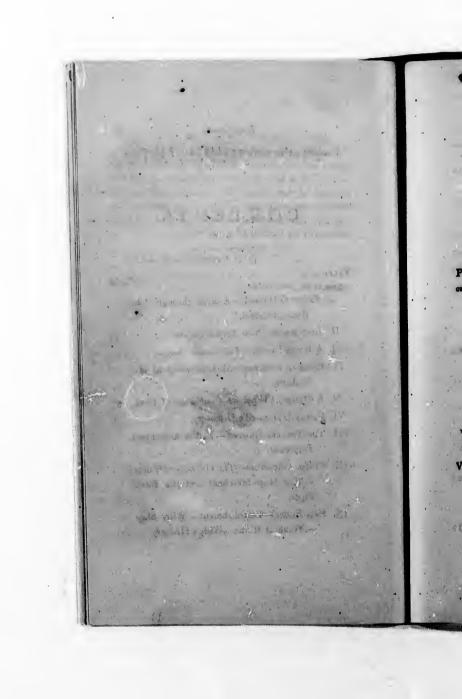

and the the remain of the without and ager NEW YORK, July, 1874.

The strue of "The O Donn-Ma of tiler usi this and that was mail of that moderal " " ## chief the log again has odd no enter whether during the fair on years and the coloution of The Company is the element of interpreted an capp and all eral corresponds many of whom willies for a few matter of cope less many days but the matter of them the matter of them willies our readers and the matter of them.

sade real name of the suffering of the pour thered sail region of mer the property in the franchiself Heavy County to anonthing want

ments from the first adjustered by agreen Mars will and his valueties private trade and the figure By Sig and so maist secretes Play one the incipal to ocate only to empton year allegants

CONTENTS.

						. 1	PAGE
PREFA	CE, .	• ,		-11		24.	iii
CHAPTHI I.	Father			Stroll t	hrough	"the	4
a	Ro	ck of Ca	shel,"	1			13
II.	Irish 1	Races-1	New Acc	luaintan	ces,		27
. III.	A Rac	es Dinne	er-The	Guests	Stories,		40
IV.	Count	ry Pastin	mei-Al	l-Hallo	we'en at	Mr.	Se ave
5 *	Ma	her's,	200				47
V.	A Cou	ntry Cha	pel—A	Confes	ion of I	ove,	63
VI.	Father	O'Don	nell's Di	scovery,			76
VII.		Officers (er O'Do	nnell	94
VIII.	Villag	e Celebri	ties-T	he Henj	pecked T	ailor
					d the I		109
					-Willy History		39
2 45 B		semy at	TTO:UE-	-24 THY B	ATMIOLY		17.7

Contents.

CHARGE AND	PAGE
X. Mr. Baker's Noble Exploits-Mr. O'Don	- 7
nell's Family,	. 144
· XI. The Foster Brothers - Mr. Baker's Ex	- ploits,	. 164
	h
XII. Some Account of Mr. Ellis - An Iris	. 185
Agent,
XIII. An Irish Agent and his Victims,	. 197
XIV. Christmas at Home,	. 219
XV. How St. Patrick's Day is kept in Ireland	i, 233
XVI. How we Manage Elections in Ireland-	7
Lord Clearall's Opinion of Priests ar	ıd
People - How Tenants' Conscience	es
should be Managed,	. 253
XVII. A New Lesson, on the Treatment	of Famine,	. 274
XVIII. Famine Treatment (continued) - T	he
Rev. Mr. Sly's Charity-Nelly C	or-
mack Tempted—Her Deliverer—N	L. A.R.
Sly meets his Match at Scripture,	. 293
XIX. Family Derangements—The O'Donne	ells
in Trouble—Love's Pledges,	. 322
XX The Priest and the Parson as they sho	ald
be The Meeting of Old Friends	- 1
Christmas-Day at Father O'Donne	l's, 334

PAGE	CHAPTER C Fight PA
Don-	XXI. The Parson acting the Good Samaritan
. 144	-How the Poor Live-A slight cue
s Ex-	to the Rev. R. Sly's Character-Willy
164	Leaves,
Irish	XXII. An Agent Promises to be a Friend-
185	Burkem begins to Appear in his True
. 197	Colors—His Love-advances, and their
-100	Warm Reception, 3
1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1	XXIII. The Lovers' Interview - The Political reland, 233	Meeting—The Guager Tricked, 3
land—	XXIV. How an Irish Agent Fulfils his Promise
ets and	Ruin of the O'Donnells - Messrs.
ciences	Burkem and Pembert Plot together-
253	Death of Bessy O'Donnell, 3
ent of	XXV. How Mr. Sly turns Things to his Advan-
274	tage — Attack upon the Mills — Mr.
—The	Ellis and Lord Clearall's Receipt for
y Cor-	Dispersing a Mob,
er_Mr.	XXVI. The Eviction of the O'Donnells-The
ire, . 293	Death of Mrs. O'Donnell—Alice Maher
onnells	Frank's Guardian-Angel,
322	XXVII. A Short Account of the Working of the should	Poor Laws—How the Poor are Treated
riends—	A Humane Board The Fruit of onnell's, 334	as a frag Evictions, and to gate adain but 4
* **

XXVIII. Frank bids Farewell to the Old House	LOZ and his Mother's Grave—A Scene—Nelly Sullivan gives her Benediction to Mr. Ellis—The Separation—The Emigrant Ship,	52
XXIX. The Plot Thickens-The Elopement-
The Cormacks Entrapped-Murder of
Mr. Ellis—Arrest of the Cormacks—	. '
The Trial, many	66
XXX. The Separation—The Execution,	83
XXXI. The Wreck - Meeting of Old Friends-
True Love Rewarded,	89
The E style of providing his hope of the hope the

to a whole of those it to mound, white the White Men Salar Salar Salar Salar Salar the Marity many over all the walls.

Touse eneiction -The 11-1452

entder o.

cks-. 466 . 483

nds-

er val

$ 13 80sh

tours for mirror from

. 489

O'DONNELLS A contract the sent XIX

GLEN COTTAGE.

The West, pleasing or U. F. calle-PATHER O'DONNELL.—A STROLL THROUGH "THE ROCK OF CASHEL."

Ir was an autumn eve; one of those beautiful evenings that seem to linger, as if loath to leave us to winter's chilly blasts.

In a cosy little parlor, in a comfortable cottage, near the village of Cleriban, sat an old gentleman, reading a large volume which lay on the table before him.

He was a stout, full man, with a good he acred appearance, that told more forcibly than words could do that he was at peace with himself, and the world besides.

A crucifix stood on the chimney-piece before him, and several prints and pictures of Our Saviour and the Holy Family nung around the walls.

From these, and from his black dress, and closely shaven face, it was evident that he was a priest.

"Deo gratias /" said he, as he finished a chapter from his breviary.

Father O'Donnell closed the book, leant back in the arm-chair, and placed his feet on the fender, near the little fire that burned so brightly before

His little dog, Carlo, seemed to enjoy the quiet of the thing, too, for he dozed away upon the hearthrug, occasionally opening his drowsy eyes, and taking a sly peep as he moved, to see would he be reprimanded for his rudeness. and the straight to the

At the other side of the fire, puss, rolled up in his sleek coat, and his lazy paws stretched out from him, purred a contented cronaun for himself, as a contented happy cat should do any all O share

Having finished his office, the priest leant back in his chair, and fell asleep.

A graceful young girl, with a world of fun and mischief sparkling in her laughing blue eyes, stole along the hall; she peeped in at the door, and seeing the priest asleep, noiselessly slipped behind him, and ped her hands upon his eyes.

olapped her hands upon his eyes.

"In God's name who is this? who dare do it?" exclaimed Father O'Donnell very indignantly, as he strove to pull off the hands. the way the hands at the

"Hal hal hit" rang a very musical voice behind him; " guess who's in it ? " to be as wings, do a residence

"Go along, you baggage, and take your hands;

i closely riest. chapter

back in fender, y before quiet of hearthand takhe be renp in his out from aself, as a at back in

f fun and eyes, stole and seeing I him, and

e do it?"

ice behind

nr hands:

isn't this a respectful way to treat an cld priest, I ask you?"

"Now, don't get vexed with me, Father O'Dounell," said the young girl, flinging back the curls from her pretty face, with a toss of her head, "sure I was only joking."

"Well, well, sure I might easily know who it was, for none other but mad-cap Alice would do the like," said the priest, relaxing into good humour.

"That's it," said the other, playfully; "you now look like yourself; but you had such a cross look that time, you nearly frightened me; now, you look like a Christian, but these faces"—and she hung her brows, curled her lips, and pursed her mouth, in imitation of Father O'Donnell—"pooh! it frightens me."

Father O'Donnell leant back and laughed heartily at the caricature.

"Well, well, Miss Madcap, I can never make any thing of you. The face certainly was a good one," and Father O'Donnell laughed heartily again.

"Well, then, Father O'Donnell, I have some news for you, so I came over all the way to tell it."

"And pray what is is it, Miss?"

"O! I am not going to tell it here, though.
Come out in the garden, until we pluck the flowers and hear the birds singing, this beautiful evening.
How do you live in this stifled room; it is as alose as bee-hive; I couldn't live five minutes in it."

"Now, Alice, don't go on at such a rate; if you were as tired as I am, after traveling through the parish-really, I don't know how a poor old priest like me can stand it. I first went-

"That will do now; if you get into a history of your day's adventures, I fear it would be night when they'd be concluded. Now, I have but fifteen minutes to honor you with my precious company, as I have left my car at the village, and ran up to see you and tell you the news."

"Well, then, let us have it, if you please; but I'd much sooner you'd leave me here."

"Not a bit of it; here is your old hat; good gracious I why don't you buy a new one; it is a regular scare-crow; put the good side in front, though; now, come out." * THY

Father O'Donnell followed, greatly perplexed as to what the important news was that should disturb him from his quiet nap—that should bring her up from the village to tell him.

"Well now," said he, standing in the middle of the walk, and facing Alice, "tell me what you have to say?" Alice looked at him with a rich humor sparkling in her eyes. She then tossed her head to fling back some straying curls that floated about her

"I tell you what, Father O'Donnell," said she, a you poor old priests, like old bachelors, don't know how to address a lady. Just think of it, to tell me I must do a thing; but then, poor creatures, ye don't know better, ye don't knew how to enjoy life d could book state right, is an "I strivi tracte

Morg you s not r her h lieve Was T 1 66. T

> with . "It will " do ne

ugh the d priest

be night ut fifteen npany, as up to see

; but I'd

a regular gh; now,

perplexed hould disbring her middle of you have ich humor er head to about her

don't know to tell me life cosily and comfortably at all; not you, who could tell you; not a time I come but I find your books and glasses and other things in one rich state of confusion, whilst you think them all right, because Mrs. Hogan, who in your imagination is an immuculate house-keeper, placed them so." 100

"Do you know, Alice," said Father O'Donnell, striving to look as if such light conversation detracted from his dignity, "I often think that Lady Morgan must have met you somewhere, and taken you as her model for her Wild Irish Girl.' I need not read the work any more to learn all the pranks of her heroine, while I have such an original before me."

"There are more of your mistakes. Now, I believe I was scarcely born when the 'Wild Irish Girl? 题。由中华地域,特别的"下山"的一种

"Well, well! you're right, child; but now, out with your news?"

"I suppose I must; then, in the first place, I and papa will go to the races to-morrow, if you come with us."

"No, no, child; a race is no place for an old less you come, and I have set my heart on going, so do not disappoint me," said Alice, eagerly.

The priest looked at her, as a shade of sadness crossed her handsome sprightly face.

"I don't know, I don't know; I don't like to disappoint you, child, yet..."

18

a Do come, Father O'Donnell!" said she, pleadingly; besides, Frank O'Donnell, or as you call him, 'your child,' though he's a young man over twenty years of age"——

"What about him?" said the other, eagerly.

"He's to ride the Fawn for the Rock Stakes; won't that induce you?"

the priest, raising his eyes, and looking the very picture of surprise.

"Now, if you put such a horrid phis upon you again you'll frighten me away. What is there wrong in it; would you have him become a Trapist, and not have a spark of life in him; as for my part, I should like to see him riding, he will look so grand when dressed."

an O'Donnell descend to become a jockey?"

"There you're wrong again; the best of gentlemen ride; look at Lord Waterford—but it's getting late; will you come?"

"Yes, I will go; I'll, meet ye at the little gate in the morning, so good-bye now."

"Good-bye, and don't fail," said Alice, as she

"I will be there, sure enough," said Father O'Donnell to himself, "to prevent him from riding; this racing brings on such habits of idleness and dissipation, I must try and save him."

age.

, eagerly.

chasel" saiding the very hat is there ecome a Tram; as for my e will look so you say; can

est of gentleut it's getting little gate in

Alice, as she said Father, from riding;

はよるの本語記録

There is a splendid view from the picturesque and majestic Rock of Cashel.

Extending along beneath you, in one beautiful fertile plain, lies the golden vale, so called on account of the great fertility of its soil. Villages and the ruins of abbeys and castles do: the landscape, while here and there are gentlemen's seats and farm houses. The silvery Suir flows through this beautiful tract of country, and the stately Gaultees, Slievenamon, and Knoo-Mael-down, raise their towering heads in the distance. The city, with its ruins of abbeys and churches, lies in one panorams at your feet. What shall we say of the Rock itself?-once the seat of kings, and even now bearing the impress of kingly grandeur upon its brow. Though the hand of time has pressed heavily upon is; though the real of rude fanatics has pressed beavier still, yet there it stands, proud, stately, and majestic, even in its decay, a living monument of the zeal and power of Catholicity in the olden times.

On the day with which our tale commences, there was nothing of that sleepy indolence that too often characterizes our decaying towns and villages; about the city of kings; no, the people appeared joyous and happy, for it was a races day.

On such occasions strangers and sightseers take a run through the Rock before the races; you might see crowds of boys and poor men, who eagarly pay their penny, to run about its vast ruins, and to wonder and speculate for what it was built at all.

But look at these respectably dressed men, with their guide carefully explaining every part to them; they have paid their shilling and entered their names in the visitors' book, for the edification of future tourists. They nod an assent to everything the guide says, and he, honest man that he is, tells them a great deal, be it true or false; no matter, he gives them the full value of their money.

Apart from the rest strolled two men; one was our friend, Father O'Donnell, the other was a young man of about twenty; he might be a few years older. He was of middle height, with a light, elastic step, and a pleasing appearance. His hair was dark, and clustered in thick curis about his ample forehead. His eyes were dark, but intelligent-looking; and though a smile played occasionally around his handsome mouth, still, an air of sadness, that ill became one so young, overshadowed him by times.

The two stood for a time without speaking, for Father O'Donnell seemed to have something heavy upon his mind; at length his young companion said: "I'm sure, uncle, it is not to see the races you come, for I think you were never an admirer of them?"

"No, Frank, it is not; what would a poor old priest like me want to races?"

"Why, sir, the old require enjoyment as well as the young, and after your heavy duties a little relaxation would serve you; for the mind requires rest as well as the body." men, with rt to them; heir names of future thing the , tells them er, he gives

t; one was vas a young few years ght, elastic ir was dark, ample forent-looking; around his ss; that ill by times, eaking, for hing heavy companion refrace you admirer of a poor old

as well as a little read requires "True enough, child; but when the mind grows old, and the body totters on the verge of the grave, all our amusements should consist in the performance of those duties we owe to God and man; there is a terrible reckoning hereafter, Frank, moreover, for a poor old priest entrusted with the salvation of others."

Frank said nothing, but commenced an inspection of a stone effigy of St. Paul, that lay at his feet.

Father O'Donnell laid his hand upon Frank's shoulder, and then, after a few hems, said, "Tell me, Frank, are you going to ride to-day?"

Frank held down his head, and seemed to commune with St. Paul.

mune with St. Paul.

"I know, Frank," continued the priest, "you. won't tell me a lie. I see it is true, child. It is a poor ambition, Frank, for an O'Donnell; I always thought that you would fill my place when I'd be in my grave. Despite your mother's solicitations, you have given up the Church, and now, you are going to descend so low as to become a jockey."

Frank still held down his head and was silent.

"Frank," said the priest, taking him tenderly by the hand; "you know I love you, my dear child; do this now to gladden the heart of your poor uncle; give up this racing; nothing good can come of it; I have come here on purpose to ask this favor of you."

The tears stood in Frank's eyes as he replied. "My dear uncle, I would do anything to please you, but I have promised to ride the Fawn to-day; now, you have always taught me to keep my word. Perhaps I was wrong in promising; I know I was, but, as I have, allow me to ride this time, it will be my last."

of

mo

be ex

hadis

to ey de

"Well, since you have promised, be it so, but never do it again."

"I pledge you I will not," said Frank.

"Well, then, go now, boy, I'll meet you in the evening; but stop, we hav'nt seen much of the rock; that mad-cap, Alice Maher, that brought me here, Frank, you know her, don't you?"

"Oh, yes, I have met her at your house."

"She is a wild girl, Frank, and after all, somehow I'm fond of her; if you heard how she fought for you yesterday, I'm sure you'd be fond of her too."

All this time Frank was turning the unconscious saint over and over; he examined it at all points; in fact, he might become a statuary, and carve one for himself, so closely had he tried it in all its bearings. Father O'Donnell wondered at his allence, but like most old men, he loved to have all the talk to himself, so he did not mind. He did not know, so little was he versed in the intricacies of that strange thing, the human heart—he did not know, when he told Frank that he ought to be fond of Alice Maher, that Frank had dutifully anticipated his advice. Five years had passed since Frank had met Alice at his uncle's. Father O'Donnall fondly hoped that Frank would replace him in his house day; now, word. Perwas, but, it so, but

you in the of the rock; t me here,

ll, somehow fought for . her too." inconscions all points; carve one all its bearhis silence, all the talk not know, des of that not know, be fond of anticipated Frank had iell fondly and place, and as paster and law-giver to the village of Clerihan, and the adjacent parish. Frank's mother, too, longed for the day that her son would be a blessed soggarth-aroon, but, contrary to all their expectations, Master Frank O'Donnell found that he had no vocation for a clerical life. He made this discovery about two years before we introduce him to our readers; some thought that the sparkling eye and roguish ways of Alice Maher had a great deal to do with it. Father O'Donnell—poor innocent man that he was—still persisted in looking upon Alice and Frank as children. He little knew what a deep passion was agitating their young bosoms.

"Come, now, let us have a look at the rock, Frank; I know it pretty well, so I'll be your guide. See, Frank, see this magnificent cathedral, look at these grand Gothio jointed arches, see how beautifully they are chiselled, how fine the tracery is; it is said to be founded about the year 1152, by Donald O'Brien, king of Munster; some think that is was built by the celebrated Cormac M'Cuilenan, king of Munster and bishop of Cashel. He was killed in the year 908; be this as it may, it is a grand structure. Look at all these old tombs, efficies, and monuments, that lie scattered about. That old stone comin beyond belonged to King Cormac. Look at that richly carved tomb with the efficies of the twelve Apostles near it. Of all these monuments, perhaps that erected to Milor M'Grath is the most remarkable. He apostatized, and was translated from the bishopric of Down to that of Cashel in 1570. This is an effigy of him in a recumbent position with his mitre on.

"The following is a translation of his quaintepitaph, which he wrote himself:"—

The verse of Milor McGrath, Archbishop of Cashel, to the traveler. The most sunctified Putrick, the great glory of our soil, first came into Down. I was also in Down the first time; though-succeeding him in place, would I were as holy as he. I served the English fifty years, and pleased the princes in raging war.

Here, where I am placed I am not, I am not where I am not, neither am I in both, but I am in both places. He that judgeth me is the Lord. 1st Cor. 1 chap.

"Let him that standeth take heed lest he falleth." Father O'Donnell mused, and looking about him on the crumbling monuments, said,—"Kings, and bishops, and lords lie mouldering beneath our feet; how far does their pride or ambition avail them now, Frank; one kind act, a cup of cold water given in the name of the Lord, would smell sweeter before heaven than all their vain pomp and parade. The poor peasant that moulders in his humble grave beneath the canopy of heaven has a sweeter sleep than these lordly ones in their storied arns."

They then passed into Cormac's Chapel.
"This," said Father O'Donnell, "was built by.
Cormac M'Carthy, in the early part of the twelfth

Cottage.

el in 1570. This position with his

n of his quaint

Archbishop of most sunctified, first came into ret time; though ere as holy us he, and pleaced the t, I am not where it I am in both Lord. 1st Cor.

lest he falleth."

oking about him
,—"Kings, and seneath our feet;
avail them now,
water given in Il sweeter before ad parade. The umble grave beweeter sleep than as."

Chapel.
"was built by.
t of the twelfth century. It is cruciform, of the decorated Norman style. All its capitals and traceries are embellished with grotesque heads of men and animals. Near it is a fine round tower in a good state of preservation."

As they passed beneath the spleudid arch which springs from the centre of the cathedral, and is about fifty feet high,

"Look," said Father O'Donnell, pointing upwards; "this was the belfry; it was battered in 1647 by Oromwell's troops under Murrogh O'Brien, Earl of Inchiquin. What a strange medley of good and bad these O'Briens were. There was in the hall at Dromoland a rough marble table, on which their progenitors were wont to behead their refractory subjects, but this was in accordance with the spirit of the times, when, as their motto has it, 'lamb laudhir amuaktha,' or the strongest hand uppermost."

"Here is the castle at the west end, the residence of the ancient kings, where

"Stately the feast and high the cheer,

that echoed through its halls. Now let us pass out. Beneath this rough stone cross the kings of Munster were crowned. Look at all these abbeys around; there is a whole host of legends about St. Patrick, Ossian, an enchanted bull, and an enchanted lady, that decoyed people to Tirn nogue; but I must reserve them for another time. So, you see, Cashel was a place of importance in its day.

"I know you are impatient to go now, Frank," continued Father O'Donnell to him, as he stood counting the chimes of a neighboring clock that struck eleven. "Well, go, child, and God bless you; and as for me, I'll return to commune with myself among these deserted halls and cloisters. It is pleasing to listen to the music and chirping of the little birds in these grey old ruins. They seem so happy amidst the surrounding desolation, none of our cares or troubles disturb their joyous existence. These sculptured walls and architraves do not recall any feeling of the past to them. These lonely graves do not speak to them of decay, nor can they conceive the devolation of the sublime spirit that makes us shudder at death; but, then, there is hope, for angel voices above us inspire us with the belief that God shall accept our good works, and hearken to our humble prayers.

"While you are enjoying yourself, Frank, I will people these ruins with mailed warriors and ladies fair; with thronging worshipers bowing before their prelate and their king; with priests and monks around the sacred shrines, chanting God's endless

Of paslmody and hymn !"

low, Frank," of with the gold of the Land

CHAPTER IL

IRISH BACKS -- NEW ACQUAINTAPOES.

ed the tusty for the

. warmin o was water and his As Frank returned to the city the streets were thronged with people; conveyances, too, of all kinds dashed rapidly on, There was the coach-and-four with its liveried servants and fair inmates; next came the tax-cart, with its dandy driver in white kids and immaculate tie: then the jaunting-car, laden with the wealthier class of farmers' sons and daughters; and lastly the Scotch car, with its rosycheeked laughing occupants, reclining upon transes of hay or straw, and modestly blushing at the bantering jokes of happy swains, whose blameyed tongues and good looks proved irresistible passports.

The hotels and shops were crowded with lounging squireens, smoking their eigars, sipping their brandy, and betting and speculating

There were, too, plenty of wet souls fortifying themselves with spirituous comforts, and loving souls coaxing their sweethearts to take the least "tint of wine against the day; shure the dear oreatures would want it."

Seldom did the old royal city of Cashel witness such a concourse of drinking jovial souls, bent on

as he stood g clock that od bless you; with myself

ige.

sters. It is rping of the hey seem so tion, none of ous existence.

do not recall These lonely nor can they spirit that there is hope, ith the belief , and hearken

Frank, I will ors and ladies g before their 强和"好"

s and monks God's endless

28

fun and enjoyment; not, perhaps, since the shouts of a quarter of a million human beings from the priest hill startled the old rock and the quiet dead therein reposing, with the glad tidings that Ireland was to be free. O'Connell said so, and the people hailed him with lusty lungs.

Strange, all this time pauperism was beginning to overspread the land; the people were treading upon a mine; they rushed on with light hearts, whilst starvation was enfolding them with its sable wings.

As Frank approached the hotel, a most ludicrous scene blocked his way. There, elbowing and crushing one another, was collected a ragged group of beggars. Some of them hobbled on crutches, others on dishes, others had crying children in their arms to create sympathy.

Jarvies, too, were vigorously whipping their jaded rosinantes. "A seat, sir, only sixpence; a spleudid drive, sir," shouted a squat little fellow, with a red handkerchief tied around his neck, to Frank.

"A beautiful drive, indeed; oh, mushs, do you hear that; into the pond, I suppose, where you are after leaving Mrs. Parse and her family; the day is fine enuff, glory be to God, to take a shwim; up here, your honor; I have got the horse," shouted the rival.

"Ay, barrin' the two spavins and the blind eye," retorted the other; "begorra, sir, it will be as good as travellin' in a balloon; the beautiful way he has of dashin' you up with the hind feet."

tage.

beginning to treading upon hearts, whilst as sable wings, nost ludicrous ing and crushaged group of rutches, others in their arms

ing their jaded ice; a splendid low; with a red
to Frank.
musha, do you
where you are aily; the day is e a shwim; up

the blind eye,"
will be as good ful way he has
"

e," shouted the

"Goin' out, sir, just goin', wants only one; jump up. Arragh hould your prate, every mother's sowl of yes; this is the horse that ran against the 'rock.'"

"No wonder," said another, "considering that he hasn't a sthem; shure he's always running against rocks and cars."

"I mean Captain Rock, your honor, he only won by a neck."

"Was it this races twelve months, Jim," enquired another, "that he broke Mr. Ryan's leg? You see, your honor, when he heard the bugle, he ran away and upset the car upon the poor jintleman; shure we had a dacent berrin' upon him; the scarf I got made a shirt for my little boy."

There was an old gentleman settled very comfortably upon the car with his rug loosely about his feet, but the old gentleman became very pale and jumped off; the driver insisted that he should remain, but the old gentleman wisely paid his fare and decamped.

"This is the horse, your honor, that does the thing handsomely," shouted another, as he whipped up to the old gentleman.

"I think I won't go at all," said the old gentleman, doubtingly.

"Arragh do, your honor, he's as quiet as a lamb," and he drove up to him among the ragged group, whose devotions he disturbed.

"One penny for the good of your father's sowl."

"A weeny expense betune a lot of us, poor forlorn women; do, your honor, and God reward you."

The old gentleman looked bewildered among the "Bad luck to you, do you mean to drive the horse 3.43 8

on top of us ?"

"Arragh, will you look before you, you omadhawn, and not rush on the top of the poor." They have anything

"Out in five minutes; lay the way, ye set."

"The curse of Cromwell attend you, Tack Lanty; who'd go upon yur broken-kneed, broken-winded garron ?"

In truth, Jack's horse showed evident signs of being a pious horse, and also of a breaking constitution; the chief sign was a dry, asthmatic cough, that almost shook the driver from his perch.

Jack whipped the horse more fiercely among the group, which set crutches and dishes in active use. The old gentleman vowed that he wouldn't go at all, and succeeded in albowing his way through the crowd.

"For God's sake, will you let me pass in ?" said Frank. 1 W Can Ph

"Throw a weeny sixpence betune us, your honer."

"Mushs, faith, the young blood doesn't have much to spare now-a-days; God be wid ould times." said an old cynical beggar, with a short dudeen in his mouth. And Old Burn and

"He has the good face, any way," said another.

"Many's the good face carries an empty pooket, though," said the cynic, drawing out his dudesn to indulge in a good whiff.

omadhaion,

e set."... Tack Lanty;

oken-winded

lent signs of king constitumatic cough, nerch

y among the n active use. buldn't go at through the

in ?" said

doesn't have id ould times," ort dudeen in empty pocket, his dudeen to "Here," said Frank, putting his hand in his pocket.

"Long life to your honor. Shure it's Mr. O'Donnell; it's kind for him to be good to the poor. Shure he's to ride the Fawn, and may he win; he's the handsome gentleman, God bless him."

"Whoop, tallyho there! lay the way for Mr. Frank," shouted a voice from behind.

Frank turned around and beheld a nondescript figure dressed in a red hunting frock and cap, and whirling a club that might do credit to a Cyclopa.

"It's only Shamus a Clough, a poor simpleton, your honor," shouted the group.

"Ah! is this Shemus," said Frank, turning to

"Sarra anither, Misther Frank; whoop, tallyho."
"Shure you wont forget us, your honor," said the beggars.

Frank flung some coppers among them, and while the lame and blind and halt were mixed in one scramble, he got into the yard with Shemus, who, as was his habit, was all the time singing snatches of songs.

Bome loves to kins a pretty lass,

Bome loves to toos a flowing glass;

But I loves a sporting pack.

A chasing reynard in their track.

Thillyhe, tallyhe, in the morning.

"Isn't that beautiful, Misther Frank; hurra, I am glad to see you here, and you'll win, Misther Frank; ahure I know it, for something here," and he placed his hand over his heart, "tells me the good news always, you know. I can sing and laugh then, and I can sing and laugh now."

"Some loves their horse and hounds,
Some loves their pleasure grounds;
But I loves a sporting pack
A chasing reynard in their track.
Tallyho, tallyho, in the morning."

"And Shemus, poor fellow, you have come all the ways to the races?"

"Faith, in troth I have. Isn't it pleasant, Misther Frank, though I was scarcely able to come, for I-fell into the big quarry of Garryleagh last week; we were in such a chase we never saw it until I rouled head over heels into it, along with Spanker and Dido; wasn't it pleasant?"

"Poor fellow, I think not. Why did you come here, for really you look ill?" said Frank, compas-monately.

"Misther Maher got me taken to his house, and I'm there since with his colleen of a daughter; I'm fond of her, for she's good to poor Shemus. Well, fond of her, for she's good to poor Shemus. Well, when I heard that you were to ride the Fawn, whoops, I jumped out of bed this morning, for they wouldn't show you fair play if I wasn't there; well, I stole away, and shure when they overtook me, Miss Alice took me up beside ther; aye faith. I'm foud of her; she's a collect baser."

"Her cheeks are rosy, and her sparklin' eyes Are like two stars in the asure aties; Her votee is sweet, and her golden hair Floats as soft and free as mountain sir.

My collect bawn that Machree."

good news h then, and come all the ant, Misther me, for I fell t week; we til I rouled Spanker and

d you come nk, compas-house, and ughter; I'm mus. Well. the Fawn, ing, for they there; well, overtook me, e faith. I'm

"Isn't that purty, Misther Frank?"

But Frank did not Leed him, so occupied was he with his own thoughts.

"I'll sing the rest of it; shure she deserves it."

"Not now, Shemus, not now. Here, take this to get your dinner, and meet me after the races."

Shemus' simple tribute of praise to the girl of his soul awoke a delicious feeling in his bosom; a chaste desire thrilled his heart, and suffused his cheeks with its warm glow. Frank, with a sigh, turned away, muttering to himself, "Alice, sweet Alice !"

A number of gentlemen, jockeys, and other lovers of the turf were collected around the centre table in the parlor of the hotel. Some decenters of wine and whiskey were upon the table, and, from their consumptive state, it was evident that they were done ample justice to.

"Ah. here's O'Donnell," said one. "Come, my dear fellow; where were you all day? Try a drop of this, and let us be off."

Frank drank a glass of wine.

"Cau I travel out with you, O'Ryan?" said he

to a young man near him.

"Certainly, my dear fellow; I hope we won't be the worst friends by and by. You see, if I fall, O' Donnell, you must pick me up, and viceversa."

"Nonsense, man, I wont kill you if I can avoid Command while of his fallow

"It will be, as the old saying is," said another,

"the devil take the hindmost." Ha, ha, ha, shouted the company.

"I fear, then, I will come in for his share, for I'm always looked upon as his child," said O'Ryan.

"Then you ought to have the devil's luck," said another; "however, I think we had better be moving now."

An Irish races, and, I suppose, an English one too, is a very important event; it affords a fire-side gossip to the peasantry for months previous. They speculate on the merits of the contending horses; they lay by their little savings for the grand occasion; even the young maidens look forward to it with the greatest anxiety, and no wonder, for many a colleen meets her sweetheart there, and arranges how some relentless father or guardian is to be propitiated; many a sedate father meets his neighbor to arrange that little affair between the colleen and his gorsoon.

An Irish peasant is a most incomprehensible being; though steeped in poverty, though, perhaps, the agent has distrained his last cow, still he will rush into the gayest scenes with a kind of reckless pleasure. This unaccountable levity after grief, like sunshine after a storm, is, as he says himself, "to kill grief, for an ounce of care never paid a pound of solvow."

It is hard to fathom an Irish peasant's heart, agitated by all the feelings, passions, and virtues of other men; his unrequited labor, his unceasing

re, for I'm tyan. mck," said better be nglish one a fire-side size. They ig horses;

rand occaward to it
, for many 1 arranges to be pros neighbor olleen and prehensible

h, perhaps,
still he will
of reckless rgrief, like imself, "to d a pound

int's heart, l virtues of unceasing struggle for existence, his blighted prospects, too often stir up the worst passions of his mercurial nature, and fill his heart with that wild spirit of revonge that too often brings desolation in its track.

The day was fine, beautifully fine; the roads were crowded with masses of people, and cavalcades moving towards the course, which was about a mile from the city. As Frank and his party reached the showy stand-house upon the top of the hill, it was crowded with gentlemen with their cards stuck jauntingly under their hat-bands. Some used operaglasses, which they invariably pointed towards the long range of cars and carriages at the other side.

Gallant cavaliers often rode up to the carriages, trying to make themselves particularly agreeable to their fascinating occupants. There was occasionally a hearty laugh at the expense of some dandy, whose dusty coat showed that he had come to grief in trying his bit of blood at the huris.

This scene was enlivened with the crice of

"The color of the rider, and the rider's name."

"Twenty fusees for a half-penny."

"Who rakes and sports again, who rakes and sports again."

"Five to one on the Fawn, five to one on the Fawn,"

"Three to two on Harksway."

"Three to five on Slinger."

"A cigar, sur, a cigar, sur; a light, sur, a light,

"A card, sur, a card; a true and correct bill of the races."

"Three ballads for a half-penny; a full account of the execution of the Codys, and how they tried to kill the haugman, glory be to God! all for one halfpenny!"

The weighing-ground was a walled-in space beside the stand-house, and after some minor races, the bell rang for the great event of the day-the steeplechase for the Rock stakes.

Frank threw off his over-coat and stood in his green silk jacket and pink cap, a perfect type of a gentleman rider. His slight, graceful, and well-built frame looked to advantage in his picturesque dress. The riders now mounted and cantered their horses about the roped-in space to put them in move-

As Frank passed on he cast a hurried glance at the cars; he was greeted with a friendly nod and kind smile.

They now returned as the last bell tolled and were formed into a rank. The signal was given, away they dashed in beau mil style.

They took the small wall leading to the pond in a-breast, then swept over the pond, keeping well to-

As they dashed up the hill in the heavy ground, Frank allowed the strong horses to lead him, for ar, a light,

ect bill of

ull account hey tried to or one half-pace beside r races, the -the steepletood in his t type of a , and wellpicturesque ntered their em in move-

ed glance at dly nod and

I tolled and al was given,

the pond in ping well to-eavy ground,

Fawn was a slight mare, highly bred, and possessed of immense speed. Two rolled over at the kiln fence, but Slinger, New Light, Harkaway, Fawn, and a few more, kept their places well together. As they turned the rise of ground, Fawn took the lead at a fearful pace, but slackened against the hill near the stand-house. Harkaway now dashed in front, followed by New Light, Chance, and then the Fawn. Frank noticed a white handkerchief waving to him as he shot by. Now they were nearing the pond again; down went New Light, and Chance. Frank raised the mare and thought to jump her over the sprawling horses and riders. As the Fawn dashed over them with one fearful spring, she rolled heavily stroad with Frank beneath her.

"There are two in the pond," shouted the spectators from the hill. "Whist, the Fawn is down, he's killed, she's on top of him!"

. Alice leant back pale as death.

"What's the matter, child?" said her father, anxiously.

"Hurral he's up again!" shouted the people.

"Nothing, pape, Pm well now," said Alice, as she heard the shout.

The Fawn had scarcely rolled over, when Frank was pulled up and flung upon her back; neither of them was much hurt.

"Hoorrahl whip away, Misther Frank; you'll win et," shouted Shemus-a-Clough, as he flung him into he middle a moder the way and the model

As Frank recovered himself, Harkaway and two others were contending hard for the next fence.

They were about a hundred yards a-head.

Frank, depending upon the mare's breeding and speed, gained upon them until he came up to the kiln fence. As they turned the fall, Fawn took the lead, and they came nearly a-breast for the last jump. The mare's high breeding and mettle now stood to her, for, though hard pressed by Harkaway, she ran in wither by a length.

"Come, my dear fellow," said Mr. Mahor, taking Frank by the arm, as he left the scale; "you got on eleverly, we have a bit of lunch for you, so you must come and join us."

Frank assented, and drew his top-coat over his riding dress.

As they passed through the crowd, a wild chorus of cheers and a flourish of alpeens greeted them; but high above the rest Shemus' voice and oudgel were equally prominent.

"Alice!" said Mr. Maher, to his daught ar, "I have caught the lion of the races for you, and I am sure he wants some refreshment now; so I brought him.

to you."

"You are always very kind, papa," said she, with a sweet smile, as she reached her trembling hand to Frauk.

"Alice," whispered Frank, as he pressed that fair

There must be some electric power in the human way and two next fence.

d.

preeding and le up to the l

faher, taking
"you got on
, so you must

oat over his wild chorus ed them; but oudgel were hter, "I have and I am sure brought him said she, with bling hand to essed that fair

n the human touch, for Frank's heart beat high, and Alice blushed and busied herself about the lunch.

"Frank, my boy, fill a glass of wine, you look pale and agitated; no wonder, it was fierce riding; my heart jumped to my mouth when you fell, and some imps, confound them, cried out that you were killed. I hadn't much time to see whether you were or not, for just then Alice took it into her head to get a weakness like; you can't know when these women will fall upon your hands; but why the deuce arn't you drinking your wine, man alive; you look as pale as a ghost," said Mr. Maher.

The glass trembled in Frank's hand, and Alice was very busy looking for something she couldn't find.

"Ha, O'Donnell! is it there you are, boy; right old fellow; remember the supper, the winner to stand all, you know; devilish nice swim I had in the pond," shouted a young man from the seat of a

"I shan't forget, O'Ryan," stammered Frank.

"Stop, though, will we take you in, a seat for one?" and O'Ryan pointed to the vacant place, and winked to his companions.

"You can travel with us," whispered Alice.

"No, O'Ryan; I'm too comfortable as I am to change."

"So I thought; good-bye until dinner," and O'Ryan whipped his stood.

CHAPTER III.

A BAGE DINNER—THE GUESTS' STORIES.

THE dining-room of the hotel was quite crowded. The little front parlor was occupied with a roulette table, surrounded by a number of gentlemen, some betting, others reclining on sofas or chairs, taking a nap. A waiter, with a white apron before him, and flourishing a napkin, announced-" Dinner, gentlemen, dinner," and he gave another flourish to the napkin.

"I say, waiter, will you waken Mr. — there?"
"Yes, sir. Mr. — come to dinner;" and the waiter pulled him gently by the coat.
"Yes, honey; sure it is that cursed O'Ryan, bad luck to the scamp, made me drink; aren't we better go to bed, love."

A general roar of laughter convulsed the company, which made Mr. — open his eyes, yawn, and ask, "where am I?"

"Here, sir," said the waiter; "the company is going to dinner, wont you come?"

"Oh, certainly," said the other, " go on, I'll follow you."

TORIES.

quite crowded. with a roulette entlemen, some hairs, taking a pefore him, and Dinner, gentleflourish to the

there?" nner;" and the d O'Ryan, bad ren't we better

ed the company, , yawn, and ask,

company is going

go on, I'll follow

It would not be easy to meet a more gay or jolly company than crowded around that dinner table.

There is something peculiarly gay about the Irish people. This is evident, not only among the peasantry, but also among the higher classes of society. Whether this is owing to our nature, to our soil or climate, I cannot tell; but it is true, at least, and happy for us that it is so, for this pliant elasticity supports us through the many trying vicissitudes that have harassed our country. The passionate elements of our strong nature seem but ill adapted to the state of sufferance under which we live. How often will you see depicted on the face of the peasant that dogged indifference that tells of sufferings deep and deadly, sufferings that would steel the heart of any but an Irishman against all the finer feelings of human nature; yet express but one word of sympathy, do but one trifling set of kindness for him, and the haggard, death-like face will brighten up, and a tear of gratitude will glisten in the eye so dull and stupid with despair a moment

"Will you help me to some turkey, gentlemen?" said a fat, puffy man, from the end of the table. This puffy one always ended his subject with a long

"Certainly, Mr. Baker," said another. "Doctor, pray dissect that turkey near you."

"Ay do, do tor; you ought to be good at dissecon, you know. Pooh, pooh."

70

Mr. Baker pursed up his mouth, leant back in his chair, and indulged in a very long "pooh."

"I say, Mr. Baker," said O'Ryan, who sat near him, "would you give us a change of air?"

This created a general laugh.

"Hand it to the coroner; let him try it," said the doctor.

"Which?" said Coroner Mara—"the air or the turkey?"

"Both, Mr. Coroner, both; we want a post mor-

The dishes were removed, and the drink circulated freely, enlivened with song, and jest, and story.

"Will you tell us, Burke," said one, "what Sergeant Purcel O'Gorman said to the priest?"

"Aye, faith, that was a good one," said Burke.

"I had some business to the session at Urlingford.

After the court broke up, I called to see the sargeant about some special business."

dinner; will you have a glass of punch?'" glass to glass, until we had a dozen each. 'Ring that bell, Mr. Burke, if you plesse.' I did so, and the servant shortly made his appearance. 'John,' said he, as John poked his head through the door, 'John, get a broil; I feel a little sick, and don't mean to retire vatil late.' 'Yis, sur,' says John, with a bow. So we were quietly brewing another back in his h."

it," said the air or the

a post mor-

drink cirand jest, and

"what Serest?" aid Burke.

t Urlingford.

e; just done

got on from each. 'Ring did so, and noe. 'John,' gh the door, ok, and don't ' mys Joha, wing another glass, and the grateful steam of the broil was ascending, when we heard a rap at the door. John soon made his appearance. A Who the devil is that, John?' said the sergeant. 'The priest, your worship; he wants to see you.' Show him up-and John, take care of the broil.' 'Yis, your worship.' Father ____ was shown up. Ah, welcome, Father. This is Mr. Burke. Will you have a glass ? With much pleasure,' said the priest, who had a point to carry. 'John, a glass for Father ___.' 'Yis, your worship.' 'I have a case for your worship to-mor-dent of that,' said the priest, with something like a sneer. 'It is a case of ejectment, in which I am defendant. I go more on the principle of the thing, as it is an important one, than on ---.' Oh, certainly, we will see all about it; now take your punch. Your health, Father —. 'Good health, sir.' Father — rose to depart. 'John, show Father — down stairs.' 'Yis, your worship.' They had scarcely gained the landing when he called out—' John.' 'Yis, sir,' shouted John. Sergeant O'Gorman was puffing and blowing all this time, and now thinking the priest had left, he called out 'John.' 'Yis, your worship,' shouted John, from the middle of the stairs, 'John, bring up the devil, the priest is gone.' And a state of the priest

"Father was all this time standing with the door ajar, undecided whether he'd go, or return to impress his case more forcibly; but when he heard of the devil, he made a hasty enter I think it served his case, for, when it was called next day, the sergeant ordered it to be dismissed, giving as his reason, that the priest would not defend it if it were a just case."

44

"Faith, that was a novel reason," said one.

"Ah, you know little about the law, or you wouldn't say so," said Mr. Burke.

"O'Ryan, will you tell us how you killed the gauger?" said another.

"Killed a gauger !" said all the company, with

"Aye, faith," said O'Ryan, "and waked him too."

"Tell the story, anyway."

"Well, there was a gauger hunting for a still; he called to me one evening just as I was going to dinner; I was after a spree, and half-drunk. 'You didn't dine,' said I to the gauger. 'No, but' — 'Oh, now, no excuse, my dear sir; we are just going to dinner, so you will take pot luck with us.' The gauger assented. After dinner we fell at the punch. I had a bottle of tincture of opium, and whatever devilment seized me, I let some of it opill into his punch. Bedad, he shortly fell off into a comfortable heavy doze. I had Ned Wright and a few more scamps with me; what did we do but take the poor man and stretch him on a long table; we then threw a sheet over him, and lit candles think it d next day, d, giving as defend it if

one. aw, or you killed the npany, with waked him

. 966. 1

for a wtill; ras going to half-drunk.

No, but' we are just ok with ns. e fell at the of opium, and me of it spill ell off into a Wright and a l we do but a long table; d lit candles around him. I rang the bell; 'Biddy,' said I to the servant, 'the gauger is dead; don't make any noise about it.' Biddy stood at the door almost petrified, with her mouth and hands opened to their fullest extent, and her eyes staring at the supposed corpse. Biddy, like a good, dutiful girl, being told not to make any noise, ran out into the street as soon as she was able, and told it to every one. The people crowded in, and before we could rouse up the gauger the room was full. When he came to himself, I never saw a man so angry; he told me that I would never have a day's luck, and I believe he told the truth. Here, shove round the bottle."

"It was a sporting trick," said O'Donnell.

"Faith, then, so it was. By-the-bye, who was that fair one you were so engaged with, when I accosted you on the course?" asked O'Ryan.

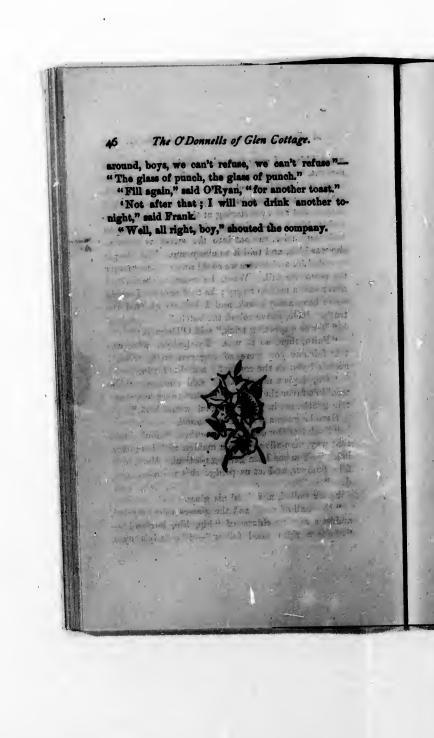

"Oh, she is a noted belle," said another. "She wouldn't favor the races to day but to see how a certain gentleman in green and plnk would look."

Here he gave a wink at O'Donnell.

"Pooh! O'Donnell," said another, "don't blush that way, man-alive, 'like a maiden with love overladen,' You see Lam getting poetical. Here, man, fill a bumper, and let us pledge this unknown god-

Frank smiled, and filled his glass.

"Now, all of you," and the glasses were emptied, amidst a regular chorus of "hip, hip, hurrah". "She is a right good fellow"-"To lady's eyes,

CHAPTER IV.

in the second of the contract of the contract

her toast."

mpany.

LOWER WAS

11 / 1 4 14 14

ty to av

THE PARTY OF

it since

others the s

AND STATE OF

中的国家的"是"的

化。"红旗 植诗

A. S. S. Markey

ACT THE THE

THE STATE OF THE S

simples I'm.

一条 安林 "我。

Bart March # 12

de se de seso.

OOUTIES PARTIES AND STOUTE AT HE

Though we have taken a hasty notice of Father O'Donnell in our opening chapter, we must now return to him more fully.

The little village of Clerihan, over which Futher O'Domell presided as priest and lawgiver, was, like most of our Lish villages, a straggling compound of shops—a spothecary's establishment, a church, a charat, and then the saburbs were garnished with rows of filthy cabins. Irish landlords take little or no concern about improving the towns and villages on their estates; and many, through a dogged spirit of non-interference with their rights, will not even give leases to the enterprising or industrious; therefore, the good houses fast decay, whilst cabins of the most filthy kind spring into existence.

"Faith, sur, if he ejects us out of this aself, it is no great loss! Shure, if we built as better one we should pay well for it," is the unavailing answer you will get if you ask why their houses are in such a westched state.

Father O'Donnell's house, or cottage, was situated at the end of the village. A small lawn extended to the road. It was a comfortable thatched house. Shrubs and trees were nicely ranged in front, whilst the wall glistened with ivy and woodbine. Its interior was not less inviting. On one side of the hall, which ran through the house, was the parlor, which was contrived a triple debt to pay; for it answered the purpose of drawing-room, parlor, and, on pressing occasions, bedroom. Father O'Donnell's parlor was furnished in very respectable style. A nice Turkey carpet concealed the cracks in the floor, an easy-looking sofa occupied a niche in the side wall, whilst a sideboard, glistening with glasses and some real plate, stood opposite the window. But the seat of honor, in which the good Father read his breviary, heard the disputes of the parish and adjudicated on them-in fact, ruled at once as the Law and the Prophet; and there enjoyed a doze, was a fine old arm-chair of ample proportions that occupied a place near the fire. Now, if we add to this his little dog, Carlo, which was stretched in the fullness of enjoyment on the hearthrug, and place Cather O'Donnell in his chair, we have a perfect picture of the good priest after the labors of the day.

It is fair that we should take a look at the kitchen, where Mrs. Hogan, the house-keeper, is enjoying herself. Mrs. Hogan is seated in a corner beside a blasing turffire, with one foot thrown across the other, her eyes turned up the chimney watching the lasy age. wassituated vn extended ched house. front, whilst oine. Its inle of the hall, parior, which it answered and, on pressnnell's parlor

yle. A nice the floor, an the side wall, sees and some But the seat

l his breviary, djudicated on Law and the was a fine old cupied a place his little dog, ness of enjoy-her O'Donnell e of the good

at the kitchen, r, is enjoying corner beside a cross the other, ching the lasy curling smoke from the aforesaid fire. She looked a real picture of enjoyment, and no wonder, for the very tins glistened upon the dresser, and the flags were perfectly clean and smooth, and the flitches of bacon hung temptingly over her head.

"So, you expect Misther Frank, ma'am," said Neddy O'Brien, the boy of all work, as he sat at the other side of the fire enjoying its warmth.

"Yis, achora," said Mrs. Hogan, without lowering her eyes.

"Shure I am often wondering, Mrs. Hogan, why he did'nt become a priest."

"Well, asthore, as Father O'Donnell says, 'man proposes, but God disposes.""

"True enuff for you, ma'am; oh, its you have the larnin' and scripture; faix, though what do you think of myself, but do be thinking that Miss Maher has something to do with it; begorra, ma'um, but I thinks they's courtin'." Neddy held down his head and blushed at the turpitude of his suggestion.

"May be so, achud; who knows; shure its natural: throw tow into the fire and it will burn."

"Thrue for you ma'am, but they say it is not lucky, when one is intended for the church to kick up; but Mrs. Hogan, I do be wondering that so fine a woman as you never married; shure Jack Grace, and you know he has a sing place, often ax's me would you marry; shure I don't know what to say."

"Git out of that now," said Mrs. Hogan, looking ntly well pleased.

"Sorra a word of a lie in it; faix he has me bothered."

"A good sensible man he is, and a snug little place he has. I believe he milks two cows."

"Three, Mrs. Hogon," suggested Neddy.

"And what did you tell him?"

"Faix I said I knew you would, that you had a handsome penny, and that there were many looking for you."

"That's a good boy, Neddy; shure it's a blessing for people to have their own house; you see, Neddy, if anything was to happen the poor old priest, God betune us and harm"—here Mrs. Hogan put the corner of her apron to the corner of her eye, and indulged in a little melancholy reflection; having composed her feelings, she continued—"if anything happened him, I would be badly off."
"That's what I does be saying myself, ma'am, in your absence. I wish I had my dinner, for I feel hungry," said Neddy, breaking off with a yawn and stretching his hands.

"That's true, I was forgetting," said Mrs. Hogan, and she went and placed plenty of cold meat on the table, and fell at crisping the potatoes for Neddy.

"I will draw the table near the fire," said Neddy. "Do, avic, and make yourself comfortable."

So he drew down the table, and made himself comfortable, all the time chuckling inwardly at how he "butthered" Mrs. Hogan; for Mrs. Hogan was remarkable for her miserly propensities, in fact for sung little ly.

you had a any looking

a blessing see, Neddy, priest, God ran put the eye, and inhaving comif anything

f, ma'am, in er, for I feel a yawn and Mrs. Hogan, mest on tho. for Neddy. said Neddy. rtable." made himself vardly at how Hogan was res, in fact for starving every person and thing she could, save and except herself.

"Neddy," said Mrs. Hogan, "maybe you'd like a glass of punch with that."

"If you please, ma'am, shure that's what would wash it down. I wish," and Neddy gave a sly look at her from under his brows, "I wish I had a house, and a few acres of land, it's I wouldn't be long without a wife, and that's somebody I know." Here he gave another sly look.

"Who would she be, Neddy ?" said Mrs. Hogan, attempting a laugh, or rather a kind of chuckle.

"Faix, I needn't go outside the dure to find the best wife in the parish," and Neddy winked at Mrs. Hogan, as much as to say, you know who I mean.

"Get out, you schemer," said Mrs. Hogan.

"Sorra a word o' lie in it, and that's what I do be telling Jack Grace." Here their tete-a-tete was disturbed by a ring from the bell.

Frank had driven over to Father O'Donnell's that evening, accompained by Uncle Corny.

As Uncle Conry is to be a remarkable personage in our story, it is fit that we should introduce him to our readers.

Corny O'Brien, or as he was more familiarly called, "Uncle Corny," had vegetated among the O'Don-nells for the last forty years, and was now superin-tending the growth and military education of the third generation. Uncle Corny had been something of a Lotharic in his youth; but at length he fell he and ears in love with a pretty girl. Aileen was not insensible to his addresses, but, he being a younger brother, with slender means, her father, who was a shrewd old fellow, without a particle of romance in his composition, took a common sense view of things, and married her to a wealthy farmer; who, if he had less love, had more wealth, which, according to her father's uction of things, meant more happiness. This Uncle Corny must have been a fine man in his. youth; even now, when his form was bent with age, and his hair was g. ey, as also his mountache, which he almost reverenced, he was as fine a specimen of an old man, and an old soldier to boot, as you could see. Uncle Corny, as I said, was deeply in love, and being unable to bear up against his affliction, thought he would reverge himself on Aileen, and the world in general, by getting himself knocked off the

He went and enlisted, and, in a fit of remorac, for he yet loved Aileen, he wrote to her not to take it to heart too much if he should be killed. Aileen became a happy mother, and laughed and sang, and never thought of Corny; whilst he, poor man, was putting himself in a fair way of getting his brains knocked out on her account. But the fates were unpropitious, and Corny could not get himself killed unless he got some friendly hand to do the deed; so he returned home after the battle of Wate loo with one arm. Unele Corny had obtained the rank of sergeant, and felt highly flattered at being called leen was not g s younger r, who was a romance in ow of things, rho, if he had ording to her happiness. e man in his ent with age, stache, which pecimen of an ron could see. love, and betion, thought and the world cked off the

of remore, for not to take it diled. Alleen and sang, and coor man, was ting his brains a fates were unhimself killed to the deed; so Wate loo with ed the rank of at being called sergeant. After his return he lived with the O'Donnells, to whom he was distantly related, where his chief occupations were smoking his pipe, relating his military adventures, and superintending the military education of the lads of the neighborhood. It would do your heart good to see Uncle Corny sitting on a seat near the door, indotently watching for some one idle enough to listen to his adventures, and complacently smoking his pipe. Even the pipe seemed to enjoy this kind of somnolency, for its smoke whited and curled in lasy wreaths around his moustache. He was occasionally visited by another old soldier, called Shaun the Rover. The Rover was a rambling, restless spirit; he was a man of about fifty. Having lost the use of one of his eyes a few years before in India, he was dismissed the service. He traveled about from house to house, where his fund of wittigins and conversational tales gained him a welcome admittance and entertainment.

Uncle Corny occupied his seat earlier than usual when he expected the Rover, for he seemed to know the precise evening on which he would call. As soon at the Rover came near enough, he shouldered his stick, touched his hat, and saluted Uncle Corny in the most approved military style, with "How do you do, sergeant?" Uncle Corny took out his pipe, gave a whiff of smoke, stood up, bowed, and generally replied: "Well, thank you, Delany," for that was Shaun the Rover's name; "well, thank you;

but this old stump of mine annoys me betimes;" and then he proudly looked at his arm.

"To win honor and glory we must suffer, sergeant," the Rover would reply, as he would take his seat beside Uncle Corny. Thus would they spend evenings together, fighting their battles over again, and winning renown and glory in the old seat near Mr. O'Donnell's door.

So great was their military mania, that one fine evening, in the absence of Father O'Donnell, they resolved to carry out their movements on a grand scale. They got a few boys from the village, and, having armed them with clubs, they resolved to celebrate the battle of Waterloo by a grand display in the priest's garden. Uncle Corny commanded the English, and took up his position in a small summer-house, as the farm-house of Fer La Hay.

The Rover, with his French troops, commenced an imaginary fire from behind a small hedge. This not dislodging them, the French leaped the hedge, and, with a shout, charged the enemy.

Waether it was that Uncle Corny thought his position not tenable, or that he thought it better to repulse the assailants before they attacked him in his stronghold, like all generals, he kept to himself; anyway, he gave the word to charge. Now, it happened that as they charged across a transverse walk, like many more soldiers, they did not well see what they were about; so, in the melee, they upset a hive nat one fine onnell, they on a grand rillage, and, resolved to rand display commanded in a small La Hay. commenced hedge. This thought his tit better to to to him in to himself; Now, it hapmoverse walk, well see what y upset a hive The bees took the war in earnest, and assailed both parties. Never was a more beautiful retreat effected than that of the French and English, with a whole swarm of the enemy attacking them in front and rear.

Hallowe'en happening the evening after Frank's arrival at his uncle's, he promised to spend it at Mr. Maher's, to enjoy the sports and play the usual country tricks.

Mr. Maher was a free, easy, kind man, who yet clung to the good old customs of the country. He was as ready as the youngest of his family to burn nuts, dive for apples, and the like postimes. Though belonging to that class called "gentlemen farmors," he was not above joining his servants in their innocent amusements. Mr. Maher, or as he was called by the poor about, the "Masther," was a man, indeed. If you doubt my word, you need only look so the well-thatched rows of stacks and ricks that filled the haggard. There was nothing of the Paddy-go-eesy way about Mr. Maher; none of your windows stuffed with rags, nor your geps with ploughs not a bit of it; everything bore an appearance of case and opulence. Mr. Maher's house, too, was altogether new; the parlor was tastefully furnished and carpeted, and a piano lay open near the fire. And the kitchen-but here I must refer to Mrs. Moran, Mr. Maher's house-keeper, for Mr. Maher buried his wife a few years before, and Alice being too young to manage so large an establis ment, he very wisely submitted it to the government of the discreet Mrs. Moran. Mrs. Moran vowed "it was the tidiest kitchen in all Ireland." And no wonder, for it was well stocked with tins and chinaware, and pans, and the like, all bearing shining evidence to Mrs. Moran's cleanliness. Then the tempting rows of sides and hams of bacon that hung from the ceiling would make a hungry man's teeth water with delight. Now, having said so much about Mr. Maher's house, it is time that we should say something about Mr. Maher's family, for Mr. Maher's was a notable family. Mr. Maher had, besides our heroine, two sons and a daughter, all younger than Alice; and as Alice was but eighteen they must be young.

As I merely introduce them to my readers for acquaintance sake, we need say no more about

As our friends joined the family circle, the sports of the evening had already commenced. The kitchen was swept clean, and the bright peat fire threw its ruddy glow around the room.

The Rover and Shemus-a-Clough were quietly ensooneed beside the fire. As soon as Uncle Corny appeared, the lover did not forget his accustomed salute of "How do you do, sergeant? glad to see you;" nor Shemus-a-Clough his "Hurroo, Misther Frank; arragh, didn't I do it well at the races. flung you into the saddle while you'd be saying Jack Robinson. Shure if I wasn't there you couldnt

yovernment
yowed "it
" And no
and chinaing shining
Then the
on that hung man's teeth
d so much
t we should ity, for Mr.
Maher had,
laughter, all out eighteen

readers for more about

le, the sports enced. The ght peat fire were quietly Uncle Corny account of glad to see troo, Misther the races of saying Jack you couldnt?

win; hurroo 1" and he then performed his usual gymnastics. After the usual greetings and welcomes the party collected around the fire. The Rover occupied the one corner, Uncle Corny the other, superintending the sports. Uncle Corny seemed superbly happy when he attracted the attention of Alice Maher. When a child she would often spend hours on the old man's knee, with her hands supporting her head and her earnest eyes drinking in his strange words as he related his battles and adventures.

Then a tear would often trickle from the old man's eyes and moisten her little hands; and then ahe would fondly look into his face and nestle on his strong bosom, and ask, "Wrat alls you, Uncle Corny?"

Who can define the old man's feelings as he shed these tears and pressed that nestling darling. Ah, his good heart was not yet dried up—a balmy softness, like the manna of the desert, came to sweeten its bitterness; for his feelings went back to the time when he poured out the fullness of his gushing love to her aunt—for Uncle Corny's first and only love was Alice's aunt.

As Alice grew up she resembled her aunt; the same mild expression, the same confiding look. Uncle Corny, though an orthodox Catholic, was something of a Pythagorean, for he firmly believed that the spirit of the aunt had passed into the niese. He spent much of his time at Father O'Donnell's, it was thought for no other purpose than to be noar Alice Maher.

The servant maids and boys were collected around a large kish or basket of potatoes on the middle of the floor, peeling them for the colcannon.* The maids took care to hang the first peel on the key of the kitchen door, for whoever came in first then was sure to be their sweetheart.

As I said before, the sports of the night had commenced. They all laughed immoderately at one young man who, in fishing for the apple, lost his balance and fell into the large vessel of water. He bore his misfortune very good humoredly, dried his neck and dripping hair. After several other games they placed clay, water, and a ring, on three different plates, then blindfolded the person trying his or her fortune. They all laughed or became grave as they laid their hands on the different plates, which be-tokened death, traveling, or marriage. So much importance do the peasantry attach to these rites, that they influence them very much. Even though free from these superstitious notions, Frank's heart beat heavily as he saw his Alice place her hand on

As colcannon is a national dish, and as my An are fond of novelties, and good ones to boot, they as agreeable as our beef and mutton, so I will giv

o be noar middle of on.* The the key of then was thad comely at one le, lost his water. He y, dried his wher games

ree different g his or her rave as they
, which be. So much these rites, trank's heart
her hand on morion readers might find this re them the reinstrum off the cream, onions, may of butter to not like it I comthe water; and, on a second trial, on the fatal clay. Alice, too, looked sad, though she tried to smile away her fears. "Alice," said Frank, "let not such a trifle annoy you; you know these things are of no importance."

The large kitchen table was drawn near the glowing fire, and the punch was circulated freely among the elder members, whilst the younger collected closer around the fire, watching the burning of nuts that were to decide the issue of their love adventures. Frank sat on a small form, with Alice beside him, her hands resting upon his knee, both watching the progress of two nuts which were to represent themselves. There were a good many jokes and witticisms passed on them.

"They are burning smoothly enuff," said one.

"Not more than they ought,"

This allusion to their love, made Alice and Frank blush.

"I'll knock them down, if you don't hold your tongue," said Alice.

"Oh! you'd like it, Miss Alice," said one, "see how nicely they are kissing."

At length the small nut, which represented Alienfuttered about, and flew off.

There was a general laugh and titter at this; some said, "she left him there;" others "they knew she'd do it."

"Faith, it was pleasant; hat I knew you'd do it, ma Colleen Bawn!" said Shemus-a-Clough, rubbing his hands with delight; "that's the way the Fawn jumped over the ditch."

Frank was more than consoled for all this bantering by a soft whisper from Alice, saying:-

"Don't mind them, Frank; sure I couldn't help it; you know ! wouldn't do it."

Frank squeezod her band upon his breast.

Alice looked into his face, with all the love and milk of human kindness she possessed sparkling in her clear blue eyes.

And that look thrilled through Frank's heart, and spoke volumes of love.

The party at the table were getting very noisy. The Rover was tast beating the Sikhs at Chillinwallagh, and Uncle Corny in as hot pursuit of the French at Waterloo.

"War is a glorious profession," said Uncle Corny, warming to the subject; "if you were to see how we chased the French."

"Or the Sikhe at Chillinwallagh," cried the Rover.

"It is a curse," said Mr. Maher.

"How we formed into columns and lines, and charged," said Uncle Corny, not heeding the interruption.

"How we dashed into the streets, and-". "How we howed down the clurassiers, although they were covered with steel;" interrupted Uncle Corny. "They came ca us, the horses neighing and prancing, the bright steel glistening. On your this banter-

uldn't help

nat. he love and sparkling in very noisy. arsult of the

Unole Corny, o see how we

" cried the

nd lines, and ng the inter-

1d-/" iers, although rapted Uncle neighing and On your knees,' shouted our general-' present-fire.' They dashed at us, but we met them with fixed bayonets; the wounded horses turned and fled throwing the lines

As Uncle Corny was giving this glowing description of the battle, he had mechanically taken up the very attitude, and converted a long pole into a musket. On the other hand, the Rover, all excited, was charging across the table with a sweeping-brush, to the no small danger of bottles and glasses.

"That was as hot work as our own," said the Rover, shouldering his brush.

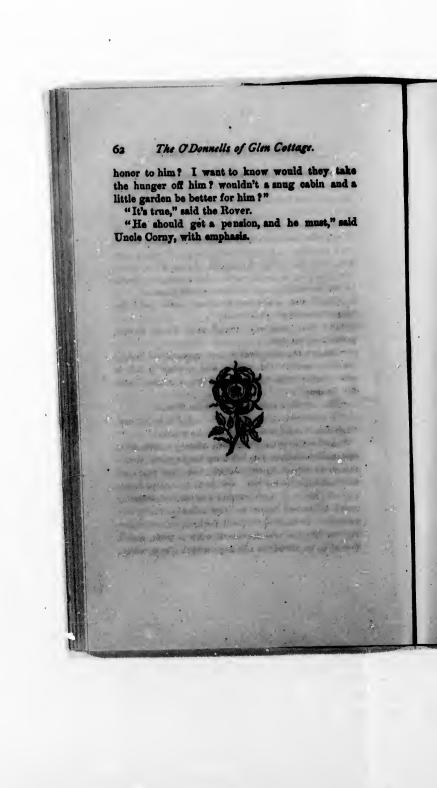

"Ay you may say that," said Uncle Corny, grounding his pole.

"Many's the poor man it sent unprepared before his God; many's the widow and orphan it left in want; many's the broken-heart it has caused," said Mr. Maher.

"We couldn't help that," said the Rover.

"We should do our duty," said Uncle Corny;
besides it is a glorious thing to be praised."

"As for the praise," said Mr. Maher, "little of it falls to the soldier's lot; his name may appear, with a thousand others, in the Gasetts, but then that's all that's thought about him; and as to his gains, he has a good chance, if, after getting a broken constitution and a shattered body, he gets a few pence a day pension. Look at our friend here, after endangering his life, he was dismissed with a trifle, and is forced to go about for a living; what's glory, what's they take

CHAPTER V.

A COUNTRY CHAPPI.—A CONFRISION OF LOVE.

"First love! thou Eden of the youthful heart!
Of all earth's joys, the only priceless part."

Tus little chapel of Clerihan was falling fast into decay. Father O'Donnell was feeding himself with the pious thought of building a new one; still, he calculated the expense, and when he found that it would press so heavily on his parishioners, he relinquished his darling scheme. The chapel was pretty spacious, as it had, in addition to the long house, two side ones, all which had galleries. The roof was unceiled, except a part over the Sanctuary. This was even cracked and broken, and a wing had fallen off the dove that hung from it; even St. Peter had lost his keys, and was getting grey with age. Here Father O'Donnell inspired his humble hearers with awe and reverence. He was, in truth, a fine specimen of a man and a pricet. His flowing vostments added dignity to his person. An observer of Irish manners and customs must be struck with the deep devotion of the Irish peasant to his pricet. If we consider that through all the vicisaltudes of his wayward life the priest has been his friend, has made himself nerry at his wedding, has repined at his troubles, and stood by his sick bed to cheer and console him, we should not wonder that this love should warm into a kind of adoration.

Father O'Donnell was a fine specimen of the old Irish priest. Simple in his habits and manners, charitable to a fault, he was beloved by the people. He knew every person in his parish, and he also knew how to play upon their whims and foibles, so as to create laughter and tears alternately.

Father O'Donnell belonged to the old school of priests. Prejudiced writers have painted them as rude and ignorant." It is too true, that, while a fine was placed on an Irish priest's head, there could not be that attention paid to their education that is in the present liberal enlightened times. Thus schoolmasters and persons of hurried education, but of great seal and devotion, had to be ordained to supply the great want. Writers are too apt to carica-ture the priest of the latter part of the past century for those of the previous one.

As I said, Father O'Donnell had a good deal of the old school about him. Though possessing the polish and refinement of the priests of the present day, still, he clung to old oustoms and habits, and usually at the conclusion of the Mass, gave a lecture on the state of his parish.

His exhortations, which, though homely, were always to the purpose, were received with evident pleasure by the congregation, save and except those at whom they were aimed. After Mass, Father console him. hould warm

n of the old nd manners, the people. he also knew bles, so as to old school of sted them as while a fine ere could not tion that is in Thus schoolcation, but of ained to supapt to caricapast century

good deal of descening the f the present d habits, and gave a lecture

mely, were alwith evident except those Mass, Fathe

O'Donnell generally retired to the school-house to distribute the alms collected in the poor-box, and oftentimes to take his breakfast. The school was a neat comfortable room with a flight of stone steps leading up to it. Frank and Alice had retired there, for Alice was to spend the evening at the priest's house. Father O'Donnell had just done breakfast, and was bantering Alice about something, when a sturdy beggar poked in her head, which was illuminated with a broad grin.

"Well, Molly," said the priest, "what's the mat-

"Not much, your holy riverence," said Molly, with a most submissive courtesy; "only, you know, I am in a bad way; I have myself and the two childers to support, and nothing in life to give them, but what we get from the neighbors, God reward them!"

"Molly, I thought you were in the poorhouse?" "Oh, the childers were, your riverence; but sure they couldn't live in it."

"Why, Molly?"

"They were seeing nothing but the bad, one uing worse than another every day; they couldn't save their souls there at all, at all; Lord keep us from it your riverence, it's the sinful place."

Molly's sanctity was so shocked at the depravity of the poorhouse, that she raised her eyes in a plous attitude to the ceiling. Whilst doing so, Peg St. John, another sturdy vagrant, forced her head through the half-open doorway, and made good her claim with, "Don't forget me, your riverence, you know the little girl is on the last legs, and _____"

Before she had time to proceed, Molly thrust her back, telling her "not to be bothering his riverence; shure one was enuff at a time."

Molly, having given this sage advice, fixed herself firmly in the open space to prevent further intrusion. Peg, indignant at such treatment, kept scolding and remonstrating with her from behind, which Molly answered by sundry back kicks and thrusts.

"I am sure, Molly," said the priest, who did not seem to notice the struggle at the door, "I am sure, Molly, if they satisfied you in eating and drinking, you would not mind religion so much."

Ah, throth, I would, sir, as you in your sarmon—and it is you're able to give the fine one, that makes us cry down tears from our eyes—but, as you say, what's the world-to one if they lose their mortal sowls?"

"Molly, I didn't think you were so devout; do you say the Rosary often?"

"We says it every day, and twice on Sundays."

"That's oftener than I say it myself; look at Peg, how she grins at you, as much as to say, you don't say it once in the fortnight."

Peg had contrived to fix her head in the opening, and with a corner of her cld apron stuck in her mouth, she strove to conceal her langhter at Molly's affected devotion; but when she came to how often she prayed, Peg could contain herself no longer, but

s, and —"
y thrust her
his riverence;

her intrusion. secolding and which Molly rusts.

who did not r, "I am sure, and drinking,

your sarmon ine one, that —but, as you se their mortal

o devout; do

on Sundays."
f; look at Peg,
ay, you don't

n the opening, stuck in her hter at Molly's to how often no longer, but burst out it to a loud titter, which titter was taken up by at least a dozen women and children that lined the stairs outside. Molly was so enraged, that she rudely shoved the other back, calling her the greatest robber in the village.

"Don't mind a word she says, your riverence," said Fog, "shure I caught her last Monday stealing a bag of praties. As for prayers, och mavrone l sarra a one I believe she ever says."

"Oh, you villain," said the other; "shure I wouldn't steal them but for you put me up to it; you said you got a bag there yourself; the country knows you well, Peg; never fear when they hear that you are out, they'll run to take in their clothes, and to have an eye to you; never four they will," and Molly, in her indignation, shook her hand most violently at the other. Peg looked up with pious indignation at such an assertion, and then in the depth of her humility, exclaimed: "Oh, did anyone ever hear the likes; oh, oh, shure, if his riverence goes to the pawn office, he will get more of the neighbors' clothes there after her than"-Peg was unable to finish, but looked for sympathy to the priest. Molly, seeing no other means of redress for her wounded honor, twined her hand most affectionately in Peg's hair, and applied the other to her

"Stop there, the two of you, for one moment, until I get a catechism, and I will see which of you have your prayers the better. If you don't answer me, maybe it is the whip you'll be getting," exclaimed the priest. Father O'Donnell shut the door, and gave a wink to Frank, as much as to say, "I have got rid of them." Father O'Donnell was right, for when he came to divide the alms, both Peg and Molly had decamped. Father O'Donnell, accompanied by Frank and Alice, returned to the cottage. After dinner he went to attend a sick call. On his return home he met the Rover trudging along.

"Ha, Shawn, is this you," said Father O'Donnell.

"Aye, indeed, your riverence," said Shawn, respectfully, doffing his caubeen.

"Where are you bound for now, Shawn?"

"I was thinking of going to Glen Cottage; but as the sergeant and Master Frank are with you, I was thinking of calling to see them."

"Why not, Shawn; sure you know you are welcome, while the poor priest has a bit or sup for you, or a bed for you to lie upon."

"I know that, Father O'Donnell; God bless you and give you a long life," and Shawn reverently took off his hat as he mumbled a Pater and Ave for the priest's especial benefit.

"That's a bad hat you have, Shawn," said the priest, remarking its broken state.

"It does for the fine weather well enoughit lets in the air."

exclaimed the

i gave a wink ve got rid of for when he id Molly had

y Frank and ter dinner he turn home he ather O'Don-· 大好你的

said Shawn, through the succession .

ISWIE P. M. Cottage; but e with you, I

you are welor sup for you,

God bless you wn reverently er and Ave for

The Wallet of the St. swn," said the 对相信 医原外管

"True enough; but when the rain comes, what With the the to sty we. will you do?"

"God is good," said Shawn, sententiously.

"Here, Shawn, poor fellow, this will buy a hat for you," and Father O'Donnell handed him two shil-The March of the state of the said lings.

Shawn hesitated. "It is too much—besides, I don't like to take it." Why so ? " reasons the the reasons the

"Maybe it's to drink it Pd do."

"Drink it! why, that would be a sin; and all the good it would do a poor person."

"That's what I was thinking myself; shure, you can give me an old hat, and that will do as

"Very well, Shawn; but why not buy it for the

"It wouldn't have luck, sir," said Shawn, looking down; "it should go to feed the poor."

"Ha, ha!" laughed Father O'Donnell; "it is said so, Shawn, and I believe it's true. All we get belongs to the poor, Shawn, and to the poor we should give it. Money is a great evil, Shawn, when we place our affections upon it. St. Thomas Villanova ordered himself not to be buried in consecrated ground, if there should be a single chink found with him. A priest should never heard up money, Shawn."

"So I does be always saying," said Shawn; "it would be a shame an' disgrace for them to do so."

"Well, Shawn, let us leave them to God; there are some of them good and bad, like all men."

"The parson over there is a better man than many of them. God pardon me for comparing them,"

Now, whether Shawn's dark side of the comparison was cast to the account of the priest's or the parson's, I cannot say; I suspect the latter.

"Mr. Smith is a good, charitable man, no doubt, and he shall have his reward. I wish I could say as much of these ranting preachers that are running about the country sowing strife among Christian people."

"Begor, they ought to be hunted like dogs."

"No, Shawn, no; God will take an account of their doings. Judgment belongs to God."

"Well, you know bent," said Shawn.

Still he looked as if it would be a great deal pleasanter to try a bit of rustic persussion with

"Shawn," said the priest, after a short silence.

"Well, sir."

"A hem-ha! Shawn, I want to know how do you live?"

"Very well, sir," said Shawn, pretending to misunderstand the priest; "very well, sir, the people do be very good to me; I never want for anything, glory be to God!"

"It's not that I mean, but do you go to your duty

-do you go to confession?"

God; there men." n than many ring them," he compariiest's or the ter. 1, no doubt, could say as could say as are running ng Christian e dogs."

n account of od."

a great deal raussion with rt silence.

now how do

nding to misir, the people for anything,

o to your duty

Shawn held down his head.

"Ay, Shawn, tell me now; you see, as a minister of God, it is my duty to look after you."

"Shure, I have no parish, Father O'Donnell; I am here to-day and away to-morrow."

"Oh, oh, you unfortunate man! is that the reason you would run headlong to perdition? is that the reason you would damn your immortal soul? is that the reason you would not go to confession—to the tribunal of penance? Oh, Shawn, I fear for you."

"I believe I am a wretched sinuer," said Shawn, very humbly, "but not near as bad as you think."

"How is that?"

"Is what a man never did or never thought of doing, a sin?"

"Certainly not, Shawn."

"Well, then, when I found that I belonged to no parish, I thought that nobody had a right to me, so I never went near a priest nor to Mass, nor never thought of doing either. So I'm not as bad as you thought.

Despite Father O'Donnell's houset indignation at Shawn's want of religion, he had to smile at his nice distinction; so we will leave the worthy couple for the present.

After Father O'Donnell left, Alice and Frank walked into the little garden. There was a rustic arbor entwined with honeysuckles and hops in the corner of it. A green bank extended from it to a little rivulet that ran babbling and sporting along.

7

In this arbor Father O'Donnell was wont to read his breviary on fine evenings, and here now our lovers seated themselves. The little stream babbled on; the merry voices of the lads and lasses of the village, as they passed along to the hurling green, floating on the breeze. A thrush and blackbird, from a thicket near, seemed to endeavor to tire each other out. There was a delicious freshness in the balmy air; it was an evening for lovers to breathe forth their feelings of devotion. Though Frank and Alice loved deeply, though they knew that they were dear to one another, yet they never spoke of love, but their eyes and hearts communed with each other.

Oh, there are looks and tones that dart,

They were alone. As they sat side by side, how sweet was the intoxicating draught of love that agitated their young bosoms; you might hear the ticking of their hearts. Her beauty, her wild, natural graces, joined with the unspeakable tenderness of her affection, threw a charm around her that almost hallowed her in the eyes of her young lover. They remained some moments as if enraptured and afraid to break the spell. True love is silent; the heart is too full of a sweet thrilling sensation to find yent in words. It is told by the furtive glance, the suppressed sigh, the soft, low voice, and then, the low, whispering words that tremble on the lips. How sweet is this young love that brings the pearly ont to read ow our lovers babbled on; so of the vilurling green, d blackbird, r to tire each chances in the to breathe ough Frank lew that they over spoke of dart,

by side, how of love that light hear the ser wild, natu-ble tenderness at her that alryoung lover. Araptured and is allene; the meation to find ive glance, the and then, the on the lipsings the pearly tear to trickle from the maiden's eye, like dew drops from the morning flowers—this love that binds young hearts with a mysterious feeling, with some strange fascination, which is beyond the power of the writer's pen to portray. Love seems to be the great inherent principle of our nature. In childhood the lisping tongue breathes its little cares and hopes at a mother's knees. Who can picture a mother's love as she cherishes her first-born; as she fondles it with enraptured gladness, her very heart throbs with a delight unknown to all save a mother. Thus were Frank and Alice insensibly drinking the delicious poison.

"Alice," said Frank, as he pressed her little head against his bosom. Alice looked into his face; there was a beaming mildness in her eyes, and her rich hair clustered around her face. "Alice, darling, how wildly our hearts are beating; tell me, sweet one, is this love?"

Alice hung down her head; a faint weakness came over her, and she nestled on his breast.

"Oh, it is, it is! Alice, our hearts, our eyes, have long been speaking what our lips now utter. Sweet girl, say the blessed words, that you love me.

"Frank," said she, in a trembling voice, "sure you know I do."

"Oh, Alice! Alice, my love, my life, I am happy.

I have lived and loved."

They spent some hours in the arbor settling their little affairs, and gilding the future in pictures more glowing than fairy visions. Who can blame them? We all know how sweet it is to sit beside the girl we, o look int her softly-beaming eyes, to feel me presage of that tiny hand, and the throbbing of tient fond heart, to feel her warm breath fanning our who is and the rich luxuriance of silken hair floating around us. Oh, this is a feeling worth living for, and so thought and felt Frank O'Donnell as Alice Maher clung to him in all the confiding innocence of young love. As he looked upon that sweet girl what visions of future happiness did he not create. How he would labor and toil to win wealth and a name for her; how he would make home a paradise. The future was all bright and sunny to his imagination. Dresm on in your love; but, alas! life has too may sed realities for dreamers. There are few of us but have formed similar schemes of happiness for the girl of our heart. To-day, Frank, we build gilded castles of hope to the goddess of fortune; to-morrow, inexorable fate comes and levels them to the ground, burying us, poor mortals, in the ruiss. It is truly said that youth is the season of love. It is then our feelings gush forth in the most refined and exaited character. It is then we feel the passion of love in its purest and most delicate state. Our views are free from any of the sordid selfishness of maturer years. All the vivid impressions and associations of youth tend to the increase of this passion in its holiest and purest form. The energies of the blame them?

4

74

side the girl

eyes, to feel throbbing of

h fanning our en hair float-

worth living

O'Donnell as nfiding inno-

on that sweet

s did he not to win wealth

and sunny to

ve; but, alas!
rs. There are emes of happiay, Frank, we less of fortune;
id levels them

is, in the ruies.

of love. It is

et refined and the passion of

e state. Our

sions and asso-

of this passion

energies of the

l selfishness of

make home .

heart are vigorous and fresh; none of the vanities or notty platter, or selfishness that afterwards damp the warmth of our feelings, intervenes between the fond youth and the girl he loves.

s , s., . could that ? . Ast y of which the commender of ten arri as turing a nutral closic of from 1 24 Adject Villar chargers bean up all the upon graneseries of young love. I his laked appart to see a sen of the exercise of executable annihis sulw ledge are now in a street in a redult the owned by it in oil me . And other the bill med and rot amus after R was the The factor was at the first and arm a the many to the many of the ma to the ground budging W. they pulled by the term It went to and the your of the season of hower the In bandia a migutt in disad dend a miller me and to over our the type and the Interior to been with the state of the history to be deposited the court of The manufacture to the latest and the trans of the part are which to specialists come able the study in president that then into acquain and a grad scripe lain decited at hi go each but in its with the this of the care of 8

CHAPTER VI.

FATHER O'DONNELL'S DISCOVERY.

FRANK and Alice were alone; they spoke little, but their hearts were full. The evening was calm and beautiful, and the sun was sinking fast, shedding its roscate hues o'er the neighboring hills. It was one of those calm, mellowy evenings so rare, and therefore so highly prized at that season of the year. The little stream habbled on, and the lovers from time to time threw fading flowers to float on its rippling current. At length they stood up, and Frank said, "What a glorious evening, Alice; how calm; lis-

"What a glorious evening, Alice; how calm; listen to the joyful laughter of the happy peasants, listen to the warbling of the birds. Oh, Alice love, everything seems in unison with our fend hearts."

"I often think, Frank, when we are happy ourselves, we picture the world bright and beautiful, but when unfortunate, we shadow it with clouds and darkness. I think we draw our images from our own feelings more than from exterior objects."

"It is true, love, to a certain extent; while the heart is full of a delicious feeling, as our's are now, we might indeed be excused in seeing nothing but poke little, was calm nking fast, neighboring y evenings that season on, and the flowers to

h they stood

w calm; lisy peasants, , Alice love, d hearts." happy ourd beautiful, th clouds and ges from our bjects." it; while the ar's are now, nothing but love and beauty in the world, but when the stern duties of life cross our paths, we will, indeed, find much to make us look upon life as troublesome, and the world no better than it is."

"True, Frank. Do you know, but I often think, will our love remain through life as pure as now?"

"Why not, my love; though we should lose a great deal of the fervor a first passion reveates, still, trust me, sweet one, our love will not be the less pure." 1 4 11. propring all my L. L. areas

"But, Frank, will our parents consent?" We are young, too young, perhaps, to settle in life,"

"It is true, love, we are young, and our happiness will not be the less by remaining as we are for a few years; we can love each other, we can often see each other; in fact, we could not expect to be hap-pier than we are. We will wait our opportunity. I don't see that our parents can have any objection, as we are equal in circumstances; I know, if any obstacles should occur, that my uncle will do his best for his poor children, as he calls us."

"What a good man he is, Frank; why, I often regret all my tricks; and yet, he is so simple hearted, I cannot resist the temptation; you know, Frank, I am as playful as a young kid betimes."

"I know it, my little wife, that you are; he tells me all, and he wid me how you defended me about the races."

"Stop, sow, said she, blushing and smiling; now don't sail me wife yet, don't be too sure of me, Frank; you know I am, as Father O'Donnell says, 'an arrant baggage,' so you couldn't know when I'd give you the slip."

And she looked with a playful, saucy smile into his face. Frank's answer was a kiss.

"There is more of it; I declare I'll run away from you, you schemer; look the way my hair is tossed."

"I'll settle it, love," and he commenced to braid

her golden hair, and then tied it up.

I pity the man who can travel through life and call it a cold, barren journey; and so it is to the spienetic man, who will not cultivate its affections and cheerily collect the sweet fruit it offers. Such travelers more wearily on, without looking to the right or left, to plack one fair flower or cultivate one sweet sentiment. Their hearts are closed against the purer feelings of our nature; pride, avarice, or vanity button up their hearts and their pockets against love and charity. There are gentle spirits fanned by the wings of love that make this earth a paradise after all.

Frank's pleasing occupation was, however, interrupted by the appearance of Father O'Donnell, who was now nearing the little avenue. Father O'Donnell seemed to be in earnest conversation with the Rover, as no doubt he wes.

"Now, Shawn, I hope you won't forget all I have said to you; this world is nothing but vanity—here to-day, away te-morrow; vanity, vanity."

"Thrue for you, sir; the Lord be praised, it is a

O'Donnell in't know smile into

away from is tossed." d to braid

h life and it is to the affections ters. Such ing to the r cultivate sed against avarice, or eir pockets entle spirits ever, interonnell, who her O'Donon with the his earth a et all I have fine dinner and drinking his punch, fell dead in a fit of piexy, or something they call it."

"Apopiexy, Shawn; it was a sudden death, no doubt, the Lord be praised. Run, Shawn, look at the pigs in the stacks, hunt them out, bad cess to

While Shawn was after the pigs, the priest rode leisurely towards the house.

Mrs. Hogan was quietly enjoying herself at the kitchen fire, listening to the feats of the hurlers discussed by Uncle Corny and Neddy O'Brien, who had just returned from the match.

"Arrah hadn't we fine devarshin?" said Neddy.

"I enjoyed it very much," said Unele Corny.

"Who was hurling?" inquired Mrs. Hogan. "The Fethard boys and us, ma'am; my soul, but we gave them the licking,"

"Neddy avick, you sthripped," said Mrs. Hogan, looking at him with an air of some contempt.

Neddy feared that Mrs. Hogan was going to open at him, for she entertained a great disregard for small men, and Neddy, though hardy and mettlesome, still came under her category of small men. Mrs. Hogan had read Jack the giant-killer, the Seven Champions of Christendom, and, as I said before, held small men in superb contempt; so he thought it better, as he said himself, to mollify her. is present to wood out the work and south

The O'Donnells of Glen Cottage.

"Arrah, Mrs. Hogan, why not? shure it isn't the big min cut all the harvest."

"Dear me," said Mrs. Hogan; "dear me, I see ye had a fine hurlin' then."

"Sorra betther you ever laid your two purty eyes upon, Mrs. Hogan," said Neddy, not pretending to notice her allusion to himself.

"And ye say ye be" them, Neddy," and she gave a wink at Uncle Corny.

"Troth an' that we did, too; Jack Grace and I, and a few more of us wor on the sweep; it would do your heart good to see us outting away with it; begorreys but Jack is as shmart as a hare, and faith I was close enuff to him; and whisper, Mrs. Hogan," and Neddy put his mouth close to her ear, "I have something to tell you in private that Jack said."

Whether it was the whisper, or Neddy's allusion to her purty eyes, or what it was, I cannot say, but Mrs. Hogan smiled and changed her tactics alto-

"Shure, Neddy, I was only jokin'; I always heard that there wasn't a shmarter boy in the three parishes than yourself."

"The legs are party supple with me, thanks be to God," said Neddy, looking down at his shanks, and then looking up at Mrs. Hegan, evidently well pleased with the inspection.

"They are light enum to carry you, anyway,

Neddy." "They are, Mrs. Hogan; and more betokens, as age.

me, I see ye

o purty eyes retending to and she gave

trace and I,
; it would do
way with it;
are, and faith
Mrs. Hogan," ear, "I have ack said."
ldy's allusion
nuct say, but tactics alto-

always heard three parishes

e, thanks be to is shanks, and vicently well

you, anyway,

e betokens, as you said, there isn't a man in the three parishes able to run from me, except a certain Mr. Grace, that does be bothering me about some one."

Here Neddy gave a wink at Mrs. Hogan, and something like the ghost of a blush mantled on Mrs. Hogan's cheek for a moment only; for, then, as if ashamed of itself, it fled.

All this time Uncle Corny was laying the plan of an important battle, with the point of his stick in the ashes, but his grand operations were interrupted by the entrance of the Rover.

"How do you do, Sergeant?" and the Rover touched his cap; "and you Mrs. Hogan, glad to see you looking so well; faith it's young and fat-looking you are getting. Run, Neddy, and take the pricet's horse; shure the pigs have played the dickens with the stacks."

"Bad soran to ye, ye'll never be alay," said Neddy, reluctantly leaving his warm corner.

"Neddy, you villian," said the priest, as soon as that functionary made his appearance, "I wonder but you could see the pigs in the stacks."

"Bad scran to them, but they are troublesome entirely; shure it's not five minutes since I put thim into the house."

"Well, put them in now again, and hasp the cor; that old hog, I think, knows how to open it."

"Faith, thin, that she does, your riverence; shure I saw her myself and I after fastening the hasp with my two hands, and she tugging away from the inside at it; ay, faith, to see her catching it in her

"Catching the hasp in her teeth, Neddy; oh, the old thief!"

A thousand of the most subtle syllogisms or a chapter of the most polished sentences could not say more for Father O'Donnell's easy innocent disposition than these words, "oh, the old thief," all the time forgetting that the door intervened between the pig and the hasp.

When Neddy returned to his corner near the fire, Mrs. Hogan, Uncle Corny and the Rover were in the midst of a very warm engagement.

"My artillery from this mound," said Uncle Corny, laying his cane on a heap of ashes, "would batter down the head of your column."

"What would my sharpshooters and cavalry be doing all the time; you see your left wing is unguarded, so I would silence you in less than no. time."

"You see I have left a company here to provide against any surprise if —"

"Begor that's just like us with our party at the hurling," suggested Neddy, from the hob.

"If," continued Uncle Corny, not heeding the interruption, "if you should force my defiles, I have also placed some pieces along the slopes here of Mo'nt St. Jean."

"I would make a furious charge and throw your columns into disorder; then their retreat would be

ig it in her

ldy; oh, the

ogisms or a could not say cent disposiief," all the ned between near the fire, or were in the

Uncle Corny, would batter

I cavalry be left wing is less than no.

e to provide

party at the heeding the defiles, I have here of Mo'nt

l throw your

intercepted by the hill," and the Rover ran the poker with which he conducted the engagement along Uncle Corny's lines, thereby disordering them.

"Faith, it's hot work," said Mrs. Hogan, who was intently looking at the battle.

"You may say that," said Uncle Corny, drawing his sleeve across his forehead.

"That's the very way we were teeming hot when we drove in the ball," said Neddy.

There is no knowing how long the battle might have continued had not a pot of potatoes overflowed and deluged the works, and as it was too late to begin them anew, and as Mrs. Hogan hinted that it was time to get the supper, there was a general armistice. While the worthy trio are engaged discussing Mrs. Hogan's smoking potatoes and cold ham, we will try and give our readers a description of that truly national amusement in which Neddy seemed to take such peculiar delight—we mean hurling.

It is to be regretted that this fine manly sport should be fast passing away, giving place to the more fashionable game of cricket.

Among all the plays, games, and gymnastics of the ancient Greeks and Romans, there was none that called forth and developed the musconlar action of the frame so much as hurling. Many's the Sunday and holiday evening I stole away with my hurly under my arm to join the invigorating game. Alast for those happy days of boyhood, that morn of sunshine in a stormy, cloudy life; alast for the past, with all its sweet and innocent joys. I then little thought that heavy clouds would darken the noon of life, and shadow its decline.

Now national pastimes are fast dying out; we seem to get ashamed of everything national. The famine years, no doubt, did away with a great deal of the elasticity and cheerfulness of character of the Irish peasant. They seem now as if doomed to serve but a probation in the fand of their birth. They look to other lands as the land of promise where their toil. is rewarded with peace and plenty. Despite of all the ties of home, so dear to an Irishman's heart, despite of all fond family associations, despite of his wish to sleep with the bones of his father in the old church yard, still he must move on. God's earth is wide and he must toil and live. Man has cursed his own green fertile land, so he must more on. On, on, to make room for the beauts of the field! Poor peasant, you and your calds, and your fond wife, and your little prattling babes are in their way. Move on, I say! Such is the ukase that has gone forth from despotic landlords to their serfs! Such is the ukase that government has connived at, because the victims were aliens in blood and religion, and had the manliness to tug at the shackles that bound them. Ahl the millions of corpses that rot in pauper graves, that are tossed about by the ocean waves, or that sleep in far off lands, slain by the miasms of some pestilential

the past, then little the noon

t; we seem The famine leal of the f the Irish o serve but hey look to e their toil. spite of all an's heart, ons, despite aes of his at move on. live. Man so he must he beauts of r cable, and g babes are is the ukase ords to their ent has contug at the at are tossed swamp, will yet rise up in judgment. Well, well, let us draw a veil over this for the present, and as I am shortly going to describe all the horrors of the famine years, let us take a view of the merry green where the youths and maidens are dancing, hurling, playing hide and go seek, and the like pastimes. These arcadian scenes are now fast dying away; will some kind spirit rise up and revive them? Will you, good kind old priest, and fear not that you are infringing upon God's law? Will you, young man of influence and energy, and think not that it detracts from your dignity? Will you, maiden fair, with the soft beaming eye and light step, join our dance on the green, and listen to the music of the blind fiddler?

"It's not fashionable."

arity for the other archive "Pooh! Who told you so? " while we distributed

If laughing, gay, and merry hearts are not fashionable, then away with fashion for me, and let me rollick with that gay company of peasants yonder. Well, as I have said, I must describe a hurling match for you; for our exquisites of the present day dare not venture to one, lest they would injure their dignity or knock the polish from their hoots. As I said hefore, let us take a peop at an Irish burling. The place selected was generally some broad, level, green field.

Old and young, matrons and maidens, all brimful of anticipated enjoyment, collect to the trysting piace. I would be a summary with the print.

The young men, in groups, collect from different parts of the country. They came on, leaping over hedges and ditches, laughing, shouting, and singing in reckless joviality.

All preliminaries being arranged by the elders, twenty-one young men at a side were selected. The spectators then retired to the ditches, and the ball was thrown up among the rival parties.

The ball was struck here and there, often pucked up in the air, then hit again before it reached the ground. Such lucky hits were acknowledged by cheers from the spectators. Then by tumbling, toosing, feint blows, and the like, at length one party succeeded in driving it to the goal, amidst a peal of shouts and hurras from the friends of the victors.

It was a glorious sight to see these fine athletic young fellows, stripped off in their linen, their damp hair floating around their faces, and a handkerchief, which they got from some colleen who wished them luck, bound around their waists—to see them thus, with flushed brows and kindling eyes, striving for victory.

All this time the old men and women were looking on, and encouraging the combatants, and prognosticating their future greatness from their feats. To hear their expression of natural pride out of their own sons, and their encomiums on their neighbors. To hear one old man, with a sigh, regretting to his neighbor their young days.

m different eaping over and singing

the elders, ected. The and the ball

Trev hall in reached the wiedged by tumbling, length one hal, amidst a lends of the fine athletic , their damp andkerchief, wished them e them thus, , striving for were looking and prognosir feats. To out of their ir neighbors. setting to his "When the priest and the gintlemen used to head us, and we were all dressed out like jockeys in jackets and caps, and the green was all roped; thim were the times, Bill, when we used to have the fun."

"True for you, Jack; God be wid thim times."
And both sighed at the degeneracy of the days
they had lived to see.

An Irish hurling was a glorious sight, no doubt; so think we, and so thought Louis XVI., when the young students from Munster and Leinster, dressed in green and white silk jackets and caps, amused his majesty and court by a game of Irish hurling match.

All Paris went to see them, and the strong athletic young fellows, fired with national pride, strove in glorious rivalry, until the king and court, and all Paris too, cried out that no exercise ever surpassed it. When the hurlers have wiped their damp brows and hair, they retire to make a match of lesping, or of casting a stone; or more likely to join the girls, who are dressed out in all their finery, with their hair nicely combed behind their ears, and braided with the utmost elegance, and who are enjoying themselves at "drop the glove," "hide and go seek," or some other amusement equally innocent. There was an elegance in their fine natural movements, their light floating dresses, their blushing cheeks and smiling faces, which gave a fascinating beauty and picturesqueness to them.

Most likely the old traveling piper has set up his stand in some corner, and is puffing away at the "Humors of Glin," "Rory O'More," "The Foxhunter's Jig," or the like. Then to see the boys and girls twisting, capering, jumping, timing the music with their heads, their hands, and feet; turning and shuffling as if they were bit by a tarantula. Oh! it was grand! it showed the elasticity and exuberance of spirit of the Irish peasant. But now, what has become of all this fine genuine feeling? Oh, the famine years and a grasping landogracy have crushed and broken all the finer feeling of their nature; have made them what they wished them to be—helpless slaves in their own green land.

Alice had the tea-things laid before Father O'Donnell. The nice fresh cream, the yellow butter, the hot smoking cakes, and the clean cups and saucers looking so pleasant and tempting that he rubbed his hands with delight, and wondered to himself how Mrs. Hogan couldn't make things look so comfortable at all. What made the fire burn so bright and cheerily? What made Father O'Donnell feel so very happy as he reclined in his arm-chair, and looked about him the perfect picture of content? What made Carlo frisk and leap with joy as he did? and what made puss purr his cronaun longer than usual on the warm hearthrug? As I am a bachelor I cannot well answer the question myself; but this I say, if I were in Frank O'Donn'all's place, I would think that A lice had lent some 'atchery to the whole.

way at the
"The Foxhe boys and g the music turning and
hia. Oh! it exuberance
w, what has g? Oh, the have crushed nature; have
be—helpless

ather O'Donbutter, the and saucers he rubbed his himself how so comfortao bright and maell feel so rm-chair, and e of content? joy as he did? longer than am a bachelor self; but this lace, I would y to the whole.

"This is comfortable, my children," said Father O'Donnell, as he rubbed his hands again, and looked at the tea-table and then at Frank and Alice; "it is comfortable to have a home to cover one's head from the storms and sneers of the world—to have peace and plenty with all, and a few fond hearts to enjoy it with one; even for an old priest this is pleasant. O God, grant me these, and shower down riches upon the avaricious, and fame and glory upon the ambitious as Thou wilt!" When Father O'Donnell had lowered his eyes and hands, which he had raised in an attitude of prayer during his pious exclamation, he sat silent for a moment.

"Shall I get the tea, sir," said Alice.

"Yes, my child; yes, do."

Alice took her seat at the head of the table, and Frank and Father O'Donnell sat one at each side of her.

As she poured out the tes her hand trembled, and she sighed.

"What's the matter, Alice; your hand is trembling as if you had the ague, and you are sighing as —— I'm blest but there is another sigh. I hope, child, that your true love hasn't run away from you; but no, I'm sure, your little heart hasn't—helgh-ho, what's this they call him? sy, I have him, Cupid. Well, I hope Cupid hasn't seized on your little heart yet?"

"Who is he, Father?" said Alice, with an arch

"Oh, you don't know, I suppose; but then you are too young. Wait a little, though, my little baggage, I warrant you that one of the first hearts he'll steal will be your own."

"Sure you would not let him, Father?"

"That's good, though-a poor old priest to prevent him; if Frank, there, had any pluck, he is a likely young fellow, he might take the start ----Pooh, there is another sigh from Frank. I am blessed but it is infectious-but Alice; Alice, child! What the dence God forgive me; Alice, stop! don't you see that it is into the sugar-bowl you are pouring the tea?" out and have and measons has a cold at Both Alice and Frank blushed, and smiled alternately. Father O'Donnell looked at them and sighed too; and then mused and muttered-"Could it be?" but he there is it does a platent accordit

Now, we must try and make out what Father O'Donnell wer hatching in his precious noddle when

"That will do, child; take away these things and bring us the makings of a glass of punch."

Alice did so, and then sat beside the fire playing with Carlo and puss. Carlo and puss received her attentions with evident pleasure; for Carlo frisked about and jumped into her lap, and pues purred and curled up his tail, and rolled on the rug, and then locked up as if envying Carlo his happiness, and then thinking that he had as good a right to be in her lap he also jumped into it de Carlo, not liking

age.

ricst to preuck, he is a start rank. I am Alice, child!
e, stop! don't and smiled at them and red—"Could what Father noddle when se things and on.

fire playing received her Carlo frisked rug, and then appiness, and ight to be in
do, not liking

his company, grinned. "Now, Carlo, don't; you naughty little dog, let pussy alone; do you be quiet and sleep together, poor pusseen cat. I will tell you something, pusseen cat; you ought to get in love with Carlo, and then you will be quiet." Though Alice said this in a whisper, Frank overheard it, and blushed and looked into his glass, watching the dissolution of a lazy lump of sugar. Father O'Donnell, too, overheard it, and stirred his punch, and took a spoonful to see was it strong enough, and then, not finding it exactly to his liking, he put a little more whiskey into it, and again tasted it, and, not finding it to suit, put another lump of sugar into it, and then gave a "Pooh—can it be?"

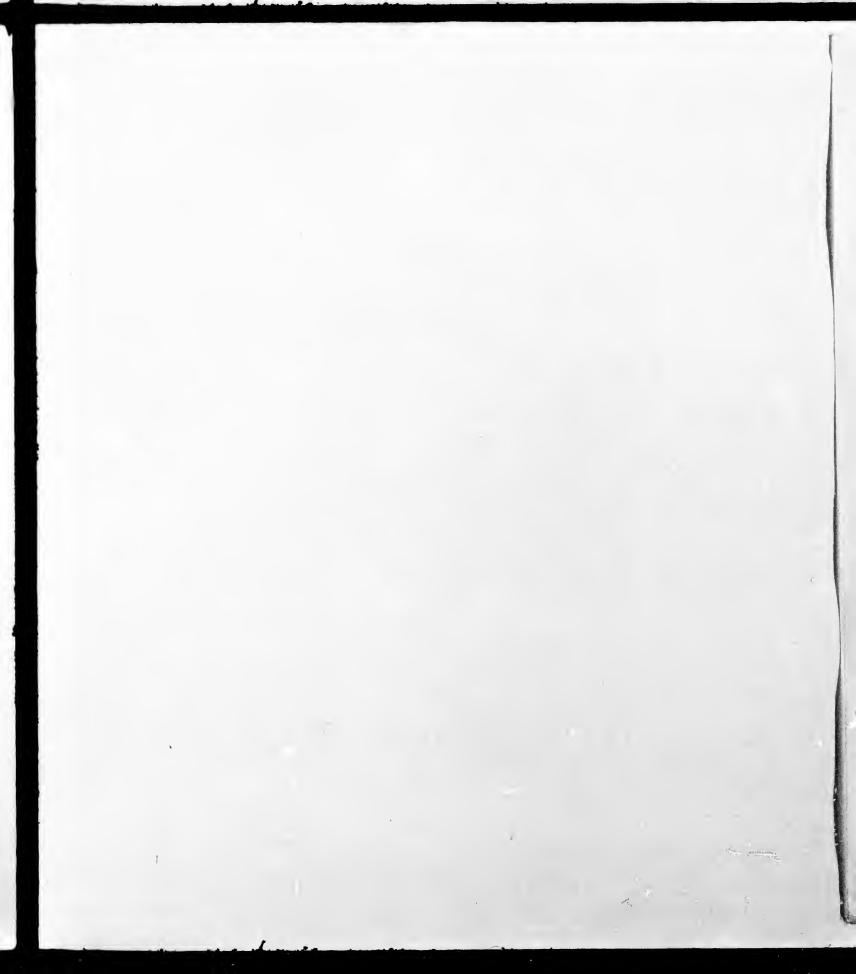

Having finished his glass of punch, he least back in his chair and seemed to reflect.

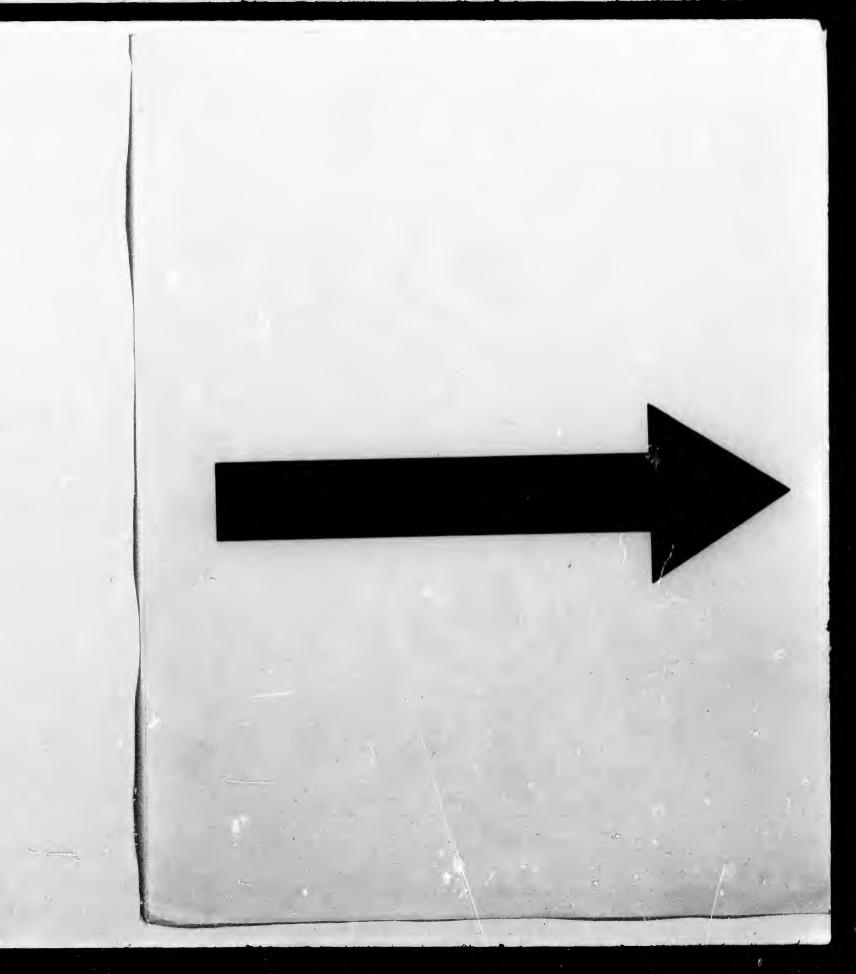

He leant back in his chair and reflected for some time, and then he slapped his thigh with his hands, and exclaimed half aloud, "I will ask them!"

"Ask whom, Father O'Donnell?" said Alice.

"Oh, nothing, love," said he do to said the man

"Now," said he, or rather thought he, to himself,
"what an ass I was near making of myself,—ask them, indeed,—why that would be playing the deuce with it entirely, but then it can't he,—in love, in lovel and they so young—two children, that used to be climbing my kness a few years ago! no, it cannot be; but then, sure I didn't feel them growing. Look at how big they are!" and he gave a side look at Frank and Alice, as if to see how far they

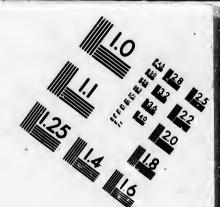

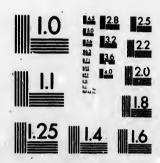

IMAGE EVALUATION TEST TARGET (MT-3)

E .

Photographic Sciences Corporation

23 WEST MAIN STREET WEBSTER, N.Y. 14580 (716) 872-4503

CIHM/ICMH Microfiche Series. CIHM/ICMH Collection de microfiches.

Canadian Institute for Historical Microreproductions / Institut canadian de microreproductions historiques

01981

had grown beyond the standard of children. "What will I do with them? I'll tell you; I'll send. Frank home; I could not tell that laughing little baggage to go;" here he gave another sly look at Alice, who was busily engaged with Carlo and puss.

"Stop, Frank," said Alice, saucily; "stop, and don't be pinching Carlo; look at the way they are fighting, and as Frank had pushed near her to join the fun, she saddled him with the grave offence, in the priest's eyes, of pinching Carlo.

and Father O'Donnell

"There again, Frank," said Alice, as Carlo gave a squeel, and no wonder, for she had pinched puss, and puss laying the charge to Carlo's account, stuck his paw in his woolly ear.

his paw in his woonly said.

"Come here, Carlo, from them," said the priest;
and Carlo jumped over to him, leaving puss in undisputed possession.

"Well, well; what will I do with her; and yet, I cannot live without her," thought the priest. "I don't blame the boy to be in i.ve with her; look at her, isn't she a noble-looking girl? I don't blame him after all; sure it's natural, why wouldn't he love her—she's so pleasant and winning, sure it's natural; and if it makes the poor children happy, who would grudge them their happiness? Not I, I'm sure. I don't see what objection anyone could have to it; they are a little young, to be sure; well, when they get a little older, bedad I'll marry them myself—

ttage:

ly; "stop, and way they are ear her to join the poor dog,"

as Carlo gave d pinched puss, a account, stuck

said the priest;

the priest. "I with her; look at l? I don't blame wouldn't he love a sure it's natural; appy, who would to I, I'm sure. I could have to it;

well, when they

y them myself-

why wouldn't they be happy?" Father O'Donnell rubbed his hands and looked at them and smiled, and rubbed his hands again, and exclaimed, "I will make you happy, my children. Come, Frank, what are you thinking about?"

"Not much, sir."

"Oh, no matter, boy, when you are a little older I will settle all, my children; sure you couldn't conceal it from me—but no matter, I will settle all, I will, Frank; give me your hand, and you, Alice, God bless you;" and he looked so happy; no wonder that he was, for the angel of goodness and mercy was fanning him with his wings.

Alice set beside the good priest, and laid her hands upon his knee, and looked tenderly and confidingly into his face; a tear of joy and gratitude trembled on the lashes of her sparkling blue eyes. Father O'Donnell patted her cheek, and then threw back the golden hair that clustered around her brow.

"Alice, my child, believe me, there is a happy future in store for you; and now go and sing me one of your songa."

She did, and with a soft, silvery voice, trembling with emotion, she sang Davis, "Annie Dear."

"That is very sad, Alice; why didn't you sing something pleasant? No matter; Frank, sing Davis' Welcome."

Frank did so in a fine manly voice.

"Now, children, let us retire for the night."

CHAPTER VII.

THE OFFICERS QUIEZED—FATHER O'DONNELL PER-

Mrs. Incheald says that "love, however rated by many as the chief passion of the heart, is but a poor dependent, a retainer on the other passions:-admiration, gratitude, respect, esteem, pride in the object. Divest the boasted sensation of these, and it is no more than the impression of a twelvemonth, by courtesy or vulgar error called love." Now, Mrs. Inchbald, what do you mean by all this? If you chance to be a crusty old maid I could forgive you; but no, you are most likely a mother. I say then that Mr. Inchbald must be a musty customer, without a particle of love to warm your heart and his, or you never would write such nonsesse. Love, a vulgar error! a sentiment of courtesy! Hear this ye love-sick swains and maidens! Hear this, Master Cupid! I tell you, madam, it is a passion, and one of the deepest and strongest in our natures, too; if not, why did many a poor d-l take it into his head to drown himself for love. How would Alice Maher define it that night as she retired to her room? Would she call it a sentiment or pas A CHARLE OF STATE

DONNELL PER-

owever rated by rt, is but a poor passions: admioride in the obof these, and it twelvemonth, by ve." Now, Mrs. Il this? If you uld forgive you; her. I say then customer, withur heart and his, lonsese. Love, a tesy! Hear this Hear this, Masis a passion, and our natures, too; I take it into his How would Alice

e retired to her

ment or passion,

Alice sat beside her little bed, thinking about many things that had never come into her little head before.

There she sat, her slight graceful person leaning on the bed, and her head resting on her left hand, while her right played with her golden hair that fell about,

"Showered in rippled ringlets to her knee."

Her thoughts must be sweet, for her breast heaved and she smiled, and whispered to herself:—

"Frank, I love you!"

And then braided her hair, and retired to her

"Nestling among the pillows soft, A dove, o'er wearied with its flight."

Sweet were Alice's dreams that night, for the passion, or sentiment if you will, of love had thrown its witchery around her heart.

Frank remained at Father O'Donnell's for a few weeks. He was a constant visitor at Mr. Maher's, where he made himself particularly agreeable to Alice's little brothers and sisters, by joining in all their childish amusements:

Mrs. Moran declared that "he was a nice young man," but she hoped he wouldn't be going on with his palavering on Miss Alice, and trying to coax her;" then giving a sly wink, as much as to say, "I know what's going on, don't I?"

Mr. Maher, too, felt a great interest in him, and frequently took him about to see his stock and farms; if Mr. Maher noticed anything like what lovers call a mutual attachment springing up between him and Alice, he allowed it to take its course, for he looked upon Frank not only as a worthy young man, but also as a suitable match for his daughter. They spent the evenings in the parlor, wining, and chatting and romping about. Little Willy called him his brother, and often took him to ride, and hunt about with him. Alice, too, joined in some of their rambles, and then, mounted on Willy's pony, she rode around the fields, with Frank and Willy her escort.

It was in the evenings when collected around the parlor fire that they presented a true picture of domestic bliss. After tea Mr. Maher and Frank took a quiet glass of punch, whilst Alice, seated at the piano, poured forth her mellowy, thrilling songs. Frank often sat beside her, and joined in the song. These were pleasant nights and as Frank rose to return to his uncle's, he felt happy, for there was one fond heart he sould call his own. Alice called over to Father O'Donnell's on the day on which Frank was about returning home. They spent the morning rambling about their favorite walks, renewing their vows of love, and building fairy palsoes for the future. Frank had sent home his horse, so he set out throught the country with his gun and dog, and Shemus a Clough as a companion.

After travelling a few miles, and meeting with

ttage.

en took him to lice, too, joined n, mounted on lds, with Frank true picture of her and Frank Alice, seated at thrilling songaned in the song trank rose to return there was one Alice called over on which Frank spent the morn-walks, renewing fairy palaces for his horse, so he his gun and dog, nd meeting with but little shooting, he sat down to refresh himself. Shemus, with his club, took his seat beside him. Shemus' feet were of immense size. This was owing, in a great measure, to the frost and cold, for Shemus never wore shoes but on one occasion.

"Don't your feet be sore, Shemus?" said Frank, looking at his swollen eracked feet.

"Sometimes, sir; they are used to the road now though; use makes masther."

"Why wouldn't you get shoes, Shemus! I'll get a pair made for you for the winter."

"No use, sir; Father O'Donnell gave me a pair ohee, and I couldn't wear thim."

"Why so, Shemus?"

"I'll tell you all; shure I couldn't carry thim."
"Try another pair now; I'll get them for you."

"Divil a bit; it would be only throwing away money for nothing; for the priest said to me one day, 'Shemus, will you have shoes; if so, go down to Toomy, and tell him I sent you for thim; and be the same token, tell him, that it was yesterday he sold me boots,' so down I goes. The priest told me get a pair of shoes, says I. 'Did he?' says he. 'To be sure he did; so hurry out wid thim.' 'O, wait for your time,' says he, 'there is luck in leisure.' 'By my soukens, thin, I will go back and tell his riverence.' 'O, don't,' says he; 'come in and thry some.' So in I goes; phoo! I might as well go whistle jigs to a mile-stone. Shure divil a one would come near me at all. 'Now, go home and tell his riverence to get a pair of lasts made for you, and I will make the shoes.' So I did, and well be done of him, but went out to the carpenters and tells thim to make lasts for me; so they set to work, and when they wor finished I set out wid one under each arm. O, musths, but they were as big as two rouling pins. If you wor to see me wid me new shoes and a fine bran new pair of stockings, that Mrs. Hogan made for me out of an ould blanket, for any others would not fit me, begor I was grand intirely, sir, and I had a new hunting coat and cap.

Shemue, said the priest, you must run to Cashel of a message for me, and dont let a blade of grass grow under your feet, for I'm in a hurry."

"Off I started like fun; after two or three miles they began to shlap and clatter on my feet. Bad soran to ye's, says I, shure ye are playing the dickens wid me intirely. By and by I looked down, and there was my heel all skhinned. I took and flung the fellow in a field of wheat; after a short time the other got as bad; I flung him after his brother."

What did my uncle say ?" "What did he say? Shure he was mad; but how could I help him; shure I could get thim for him afterwards; for one day I went into a cabin and there I saw my beautiful shoe turned into a oradlo for the baby."

"I believe I might as well not get any for you for you, and I ell be done of and tells thim ork, and when der each arm, o rouling pins, oes and a fine . Hogan made others would , sir, and I had st run to Cashel blade of grain arry.

or three miles my feet. Bad ing the dickens ked down, and took and flung er a short time him after his et thim for him to a cabin and ed into a cradio

get any for you

"Is it long since ye had any hunt, Shemus?"

"Last Tuesdy; begor we had the fun intirely. Isn't it pleasant work, Misther Frank; shure we met a fox at Grove, and thin to see all the jintlemen wid their red coats and cape and they collected around the cover, and the huntamen bating the bushes this way," and Shemus jumped up and struck a bush with his cudgel; "and, thin, to see the hounds this way," and he threw himself all fours, and ran along the ground, crying "bow, wow, wow!!" and thin to hear thim when the fox got up; begorra it was as good as any music to hear the cry they set up, and thin the jintlemen fell at cracking their whips and shouting "yolcks tallyho! yolcks tallyho!" and away they dashed. Shure I was houlding Mr. Ryan's horse, and he gave me a shilling, and off wid him. To see them dashing over ditches and hedges, and some of them rouling head over heels; wasn't it pleasant?"

mus."

"They ran on for Kilonah, and I proceed the field.

I was going over a ditch where there was a big boggy place, when I saw Lord Clearall riding towards it, and he standing in his stirupe trying to look over the ditch. 'I say, fellow,' said he to me, is that place sound outside?' 'Oh, it's very sound at the bottom,' says I, purtinding not to know him. With that he jumps out, and to see himself and the horse rouling and splashing in the bog hole. Begor, they draw water up half a mile in the air—shure myself couldn't help laughing at him.

100

""You secondrel! says he, looking up, 'why did you tell me that this had a sound bottom?"

you. So it has, says I; thut you are not half there yet. I ran away and left him to get out as beat he could." I have seen to be the could." I have seen to be the seen the seen to be the seen the seen sea "Why did you do that?" are a self were "Why did I do it! Och! Misther Frank, shure he is a bad man-he pulled the house down over me aunt and she sick wid the fever, and the poor woman died in the ditch side. Oh, to hear her raving and orying and calling her children; but you know they wor all gone to Merika, and her, husband was sick too; and the neighbors were afterd of the fever, so they had no one but myself. I made a shed for them in the ditch wud the thatch and sticks, and I placed my coat around thim, for it was snowing and very cowld. My sunt was talking about her children, and to take her home; but near day she said she'd shleep, and I placed my coat and bundles of straw about her; but whin we went to wakin her the was dead. Hill sentrant during fields , d

""". That was too had, my poor fellow," said Frank, with a sigh. And Frank thought on the contrast between that proud aristocratic nobleman, that refined educated gentleman, the admired of gay saleons and balls, that turned out that poor old couple under frost and snow to die in the ditch side, ottage.

hole. Begor, the air-shure up, 'why did tom?

not half there out as best he . " JO ART 1" TON

Frank, shure down over me the poor woman her raving and you know they shand was sick of the fever, so sade a shed for d sticks, and I was snowing and about her chilar day she said and bundles of t to wakin her

w," said Frank, on the contrast bleman, that redmired of gay that poor old in the ditch side, and that poor despised simpleton that acted the good Samaritan.

"But I had my revenge, though; hadn't I? Oh, to see him tossing in the mud, and his fine coat and cap all puddly; wasn't it funny?" and Shemus laughed and rubbed his hands with delight.

Shemus' simple narrative touched a tender chord. Lord Clearall was Frank's landlord; their fine farm would be out of lease in a few years, and what if he should carry his clearance system so far as to evict them; but, no, it could not be; and Frank banished the evil foreboding, and proceeded on his journey.

After Frank's departure, Father O'Donnell went to attend a sick call, and Alice, feeling the place too lonely, also set out for home, as it was only a pleasant walk across a few fields to her father's house. When passing out of the little lawn she was interrupted by a company of soldiers, who were on their march; so she leant ou the wicket to let them pass. Captain Pry and Lieutenant Done, who were in command, saw her passing down the little avenue. "By Jove, Pry, there is a divinity for you: look beyond!" and he pointed to Alice. To die di war

"Aye, faith, she looks a perfect Juno-how sylphlike! Im't there grace and elegance in her movements mids and tagands ducit tack, min adding

"There is "Do you know, but I am a fervent admirer of sylvan nymphs. Give me a graceful creature, with all the playful charms of a Ninon, could ander from and snow to die at their and I will leave your starched, staid votaries of fashion to whom you please."

"Very fine, my dear fellow; all very fine. She might be just the thing for an arcedian life; but introduce her into high life-heigh-ho! I think you would wish your nymph at ____ No, I won't say it; but here she is at the gate - a perfect beauty."

"I say, we will have a lark with her. An oyster and a champagae supper; but I will pick up an acquaintance, and get an assignation." And the handsome lieutenant stroked his moustache and whiskers, as much as to say, "Let her regist these if she can."

"Done, my dear fellow; I would willingly pay forfeit for an acquaintance." a sound at moute

"As they came up to the gate, Lieutenant Done doffed his cap in the most approved fashionable style and bowed.

"May I take the liberty, miss, of asking you how far is the town of Clonnel from un?" the the mile About ten miles, sir," terminis has made mile cawotaries of fashion, that gaiety is necessary to our existence."

Well, I think you will find plenty of it there." The officers stared at her, and then exchanged glances. Alice noticed this; besides, she overheard a part of their former conversation, so she resolved on having her revenge, if they only gave her the opportunity. Me of the test of the state of id votaries of ory fine. She dian life; but I think you

o, I won't say feet beauty." er. An oyster ill pick up an n." And the noustache and her regist these

d willingly pay

ientenant Done red fashionable asking you how

"il oir dunir a well after the ficers, are such necessary to our

ity of it there." then exchanged e, she overheard so she resolved ly gave her the utalizationing state. "

"What a quiet-looking little neet this is?" said Done, looking at the priest's house. "I am sure one should feel very happy here; if he only had some loving spirit to share it with him, it would be

And the lieutenant sighed, and looked at Alice. Alice blushed and then smiled, and replied : . .

"I fear you would shortly grow tired of your paradise; as soon as it would lose its novelty, it would lose its charms." I 125 I to some the more

"I yow not," and he made a most obsequious bow to Alice. "I wish I were favored with the chance

"Well," said she, blushing, "as you seem to admire the place so much, if you do not think the journey too far, I am sure my father would be most happy to see you at dinner in his humble cottage any day."

"Bless my soul! you overpower us with kindness, miss. We shall, then, with your kind permission, do ourselves the favor of living with you on Thursday next. Now, may I ask to whom have we the "honor of speaking the grand store for agreetair

"Miss O'Donnell."

"I am Lientenant Done. This is my friend, Captain Pry; allow us to present our cards."

They then bowed most politely, and took their le loave. telde see mailter except minister While .

Well Done, what do you mean to make of this? You have the devil's lot of pluck. I dare say the poor young thing is in love with you already; did you see how she blushed?"

"Heigh-ho!" and he stroked his moustache again.
"Heigh-ho! you are in for the supper, boy."

"I confess it; but tell me, what do you mean to make of it? That poor thing will jump into love, as naturally as we would into a trench. Now, it wouldn't be honorable to gain the innocent creature's heart, and then leave her. She is handsome enough to be a countess."

"Don't know—we'll think hereafter—carry on a pleasant liaison at least—how your pretty country nymphs fall into love, my dear fellow?"

Alice, on reflection, did not know whether she had better cry or laugh at the joke. She was afraid that she might offend Father O'Donnell. There was no help for it now, so she left the good priest to receive his unexpected guests as best he might.

According to promise the two officers drove up to the priest's gate in a beautiful pheeton. All the dogs and idlers of the village were after them, but they were above heeding such curiosity. They certainly were two fine-looking young men, dressed out in spotless kids and ties, ready to besiege the heart of any young lady, and sure of an easy conquest of Miss O'Donnell.

They had laid wagers with their brother officers as to the result, they betting largely on their success; one thing puzzled them—how none of their acquaintances knew Miss O'Donnell, of Clerihan—

already; did

stache again.

boy." you mean to np into love,

nch. Now, it cent creature's dsome enough r-carry on a retty country

whether she She was afraid onnell. There good priest to he might. ers drove up to eton. All the fter them, but

ty. They ceren, dressed out iege the heart sy conquest of

brother officers on their sucnone of their of Clerihanbut then, she was young, and didn't make her debut in society yet.

They drew up at the priest's door and rapped very gently. Father O'Donnell was after enjoying a beefsteak, when he heard the noise of the phæton, and then the knock.

"Bless my soul! who is come now?" said he, starting from his seat; "how will I stand it; a poor priest cannot enjoy himself after his steak, ay, and yesterday a fast day, and I after riding. Let me see, from the widow Delany's; the poor woman is very bad; I told the butcher to give her a pound of fresh meat and a loaf of bread every day, until she is well; she wants it poor woman—how would I feel myself, if I were sick, to want it. I went from that to Tom Casey's, and back to Harry St. John's, about fifteen miles; I must get a curate, but then the parish wouldn't afford to pay him; bless me, there's the knock again; who' that, Mrs. Hogan?"

This was addressed to our old friend, Mrs. Hogan, who poked her head through the door.

"Two jintlemen, your riverence, that wants to see you; I think they are officers."

"Officers, Mrs. Hogan! in God's name, what do they want me for ?"

"Don't know, I am sure." Now, it happened that Father O'Donnell had a great dread of law, as he was once nearly rained by a heavy suit; so, being a simple kind of a man in the ways of the world, he carried this dread to all officers in general.

He proceeded to the hall. As soon as he made his appearance the officers bowed most politely, and introduced themselves with, "I am Lieutenant Done; this is my friend, Captain Pry."

Father O'Donnell stood before them not well knowing what to say, whilst behind, at a safe distance, came Mrs. Hogan, and bringing up the rear, Neddy, ready to rescue the priest from the grasp of the law, if needed; for they all participated in Father O'Donnell's horror of law-officers, and feared a repetition of the old suit.

"Your humble servant, gentlemen," said Father O'Donnell; "to what do I owe the favor of this unexpected visit."

"You don't mean unexpected, sir; I presume your daughter has apprized you of the favor she has done us in asking us to dine with you today."

"My daughter, gentlemen! There must be some

"Not the least, sir, not the least. Be good enough to inform her that we are waiting." The priest looked at Mrs. Hogan for advice.

The officers whispered—"Strapge old cove this—devilish pretty daughter, though—will make amends for all."

Mrs. Hogan, not knowing what to make of it, only raised her eyes in bewilderment.

dread to all

as he made politely, and tenant Done;

em not well at a safe disup the rear, the grasp of rticipated in rs, and feared said Father or of this un-

the of the state

; I presume he favor she with you to-

must be some good enough The priest

old cove this -will make make of it,

into West

The priest turned to his guests. "Really, gentlemen, there must be some mistake. I am the parish priest. Oh, Alice, Alice! you mad-cap, this is all your doings; will you never rest! " !!

"The officers looked bewildered, and were proceeding-"Good sir, we met your daughter-"

"Arrah, hould your whist," said Mrs. Hogan, who, seeing that she had nothing to fear, stapped in to her master's assistance. Did any one ever hear the likes of it? Oh, holy Josephi Out of the house wid ye, to say the likes of that; ugh, ugh, out wid ye. O, blessed Saint Pathrick, if there was any one any good list ning to yez, they would tach yez how to respect the clargy. Oh, Holy Mother!" and Mrs. Hogan raised her eyes to heaven, and then her apron to her eyes, and then began to sob. an absent the same respect of your to le Neddy O'Brien could not bear this appeal to his feelings, particularly from Mrs. Hogan. Her cold ham and turkeys, and the like, crossed his mind.

In he bounced into the hall with a whoop, that would do credit to a red Indian, and cutting capers, and whirling a poker in a manner that might win him a civic crown at Astley's. Neddy also felt pretty certain that reinforcements were near, for he had very prudently sent a gomeon to apprize the villagers of the priest's danger.
"Who dare insult his riverence now?" said Neddy, whirling the poker.

Stop Neddy, you blockhead, stop," said Father

O'Donnell; "these gentlemen did not come here to insult me; they came here under a mistake, and as it happened so, I will feel favored if they take a beefsteak and a glass of punch with me."

"With pleasure, sir," said the officers, for to tell the truth (sey felt ashamed to return home without dinner to be bantered by their companions.

Father O'Donnell had to make a regular speech to disperse the motly group that had collected around the phæton. Mrs. Hogan dressed the beefsteak; though at first rather distant, she relaxed after a time, and when the officers slipped a piece of silver each into her hand at parting, she vowed that she never met the likes of them. Neddy O'Brien, too, as he jingled his two shillings, was of the same opinion. As for Lieutenant Done, and Captain Pry, they vowed that they never spent so jolly an evening. The old priest was so full of tales and anecdotes, that he kept them in roars. After a time, though, the whole joke leaked out; they were so quizzed about how they were done by an "innocent country girl," that they had to get themselves removed. no see a construction of the second property in language. all Markets

the state of the state of the state of the gamer

Mar Tribust of all as Might would well

The star start CHAPTER VIII.

VILLAGE CELEBRITIES THE HENPECKED TAILOR THE

The village, which has been the scene of many of the incidents narrated in this story, possessed many other remarkable and interesting characters not introduced into this work. Our boyhood had been so impressed with their originality and eccentricities that we are resolved to give a few of the most prominent of them a separate chapter to themselves, feeling confident that our readers will not be displeased at the digression.

Most readers of Carleton's humorous and graphic sketches of Irish life would be inclined to think that he drew largely on his imagination for his leading characters, there is something so ludicrously absurd in their bungling good-humoredeccentricities and oddities.

But to one brought up in the country, whose young days have been spent among the gay, light hearted Irish peasantry, each and every one of them appear as natural as life. How often have I seen a protetype of poor Neal Malone, who was "blue moulded for the want of a beatin'," in some prim little

age.

come here to ake, and as it y take a beef-

ers, for to tell home without ions.

egular speech had collected seed the beeft, she relaxed oped a piece of the vowed that eddy O'Brien, as of the same d Captain Pry, jolly an evenieles and anec-After a time, they were so y an "innocent themselves re-

rient all has ada,

adjustic fun

Ma sertiment

throat for the

प्रचंद्रात असी.

coxcomb, who strutted about with all the pride of a bantam cock, until he was thoroughly sobered down by a termagant wife. How many a Paddy-go-easy is to be found, even to-day, smoking his dudeen in the neighboring shebeen, complacently awaiting some one to drop in either to give him a treat, or to discuss politics and the affairs of the parish, while his garden lay untilled—the rain poured down through his cabin and his children ran about half wild and naked.

As a specimen of the Neal Malone style of blatant heroes, we remember a little hop-of-my thumb of a tailor, who kept the village in which he resided, in a continual broil by his bellicose, quarrelsome disposition. He strutted about like an inflated gobbler, fuming in rage at the most trival reasons, and always ready to fight with some one. He was so small in appearance and so pugnacious in disposition that the boys of the village treated him with that pitying contempt a huge mastiff bestows upon a quarrelsome cur. But they soon had their revenge for the tailor got married, and his wife proved to be a perfect vixen, the compound essence of vinegar and gall. The poor fellow soon sobered down and insensibly dwindled away almost to a shadow; yet, he occasionally made a show of authority; but the rebellion was soon nipped in the bud, and Billy subsided into a patient, submissive subject. Having broken out on one occasion into a violent rebellion against the ruling powers, he walked up and down the streets age.

tyle of blatant ny thumb of a e resided, in a lsome disposiated gobbler, ns, and always ras so small in sition that the that pitying a quarrelsome e for the tailor be a perfect egar and gall. and insensibly yet, he occat the rebellion subsided into ig broken out on against the flourishing a huge stick and shouting out, "There isn't a man in Ireland but what I'd lick, and some women tool"

Now, Billy was right in qualifying his notes of defiance, for he knew from bitter experience that one woman, at least, always came off best in the contest. With a crowd of urchins at his heels, who cheered him on, Billy paraded the streets with all the importance of a conqueror, and to prove that he was lord and master he stopped in front of his own house, or rather his wife's, and gave a rousing hurra, and a brilliant flourish of his stick, as he shouted out his war cry.

Scarcely had he given vent to his defiant whoop, when a woman was seen to rush from the cabin, and make for him. The poor tailor seemed paralyzed, the stick dropped from his hand, and he was unable to offer the least resistance as the Amazon seized him by the collar and flung him over her shoulder, as if he were a child, and as she pummelled his head with her right hand, she held him tight with the other, and thus bore him off in triumph, amidst the shouts of the assembled villagers.

Billy, though vanquished, was not conquered, for in a few hours afterwards a neighbor called to borrow a pot, to boil the goose that was killed in honor of St. Martin. "I have no pot," graffly replied the tailor's wife. "You have!" shouted a voice from under the bed, where the poor tailor had to fly for refuge. The wife ran over and, kicking at him, angrily said: "Hould your tongue there, you spris-

"How can I?" exclaimed the poor, crestfallen tailor, "for I have too much of the man in me."

The neighbor shook his head, and walked out as he muttered: "However I'll manage to cook my goose, your goose is cooked for you, poor fellow."

It is true that such characters are fast disappearing, but yet enough of them remain to remind one of the good old times, of which we have heard so much much. There are few townlands in Ireland that do not still possess the traditional blind piper and his inseparable companion, the dancing-master. Though we must confess that the race is pretty well thinned out, we have a vivid recollection of a wandering minstrel, who traveled from place to place as musician and kind of servitor to as odd, as humorous, and as eccentric a professor of the light fantastic art as has ever, been painted by writer or artist.

We have often wondered to ourselves how it was that nearly all of these traveling musicians were blind, and in our youthful ignorance thought that they were either born so, or, as a part of the Orphean Mysteries, they had to be deprived of their sight.

The poor, meek-looking, old, blind piper, with a little boy as guide and prop, is familiar to most of our Irish readers, and they cannot forget with what thrilling joy and gladness they hailed his arrival, here, you spris-

oor, crestfallen man in me." walked out as ge to cook my , poor fellow."

fast disappearn to remind one e have heard so pland that do not piper and his inmaster. Though etty well thinned n of a wandering to place as musidd, as humorous, light fantastic art r or artist.

raelyes how it was
g musicians were moe thought that us a part of the e deprived of their

ind piper, with a miliar to most of a forget with what hailed his arrival, and how the neighbors collected to hear him play "The wind that shakes the barley," "Garryowen," "Patrick's Day," and other favorite tunes.

Ah! those were merry days and happy time; for the gay, light-hearted peasants passed good-na ured jokes, told amusing stories, and danced to the music of the blind piper with an abandon and relish that was really as fascinating as it was natural.

The honest farmer's house was a palace the nightthe blind piper visited it, for a cead mills failths sparkled in his good-natured face, and his laugh was the heartiest, and his shout the loudest to greet some funny story, or some ambitious pair of dancers who strove to tire each other down. When the dancingmaster, Billy O'Carroll, was present "teaching the ignorant the art of dancing by grammar," much of this abandon and innocent hilarity had to be kept in oheck, for Billy had marshalled his pupils around the room with the regularity of a drill-sergeant; and if a luckless wight indulged even in a titter he was at once upb aided by the indignant dancing-master
as "an ignoramuch, who knew no betther; for, poor orathur, shure he never thravelled or mixed wid the quality."

It is said that Charles Dickens took a special light in giving atrange and sententious names to characters, but, to his great surprise, he soon found out that not a single one of them but had living representatives; and, to crown the climar, he was one day passing a tailor's establishment in the environs of London, and, to his utter surprise, found the name of the firm was "Dombey & Son." So it is with writers of Irish stories, and of fiction in general; no matter how improbable the gharacters they create, they learn to realize the fact that the truth is stranger than fiction.

As the classic village which is the scene of our story has been famous for producing a strange compound of oddities, full of laughable eccentricities, whose extravagant actions and farcical behavior would make a hermit laugh, we will just notice a few of them before we proceed with the adventures of our leading characters.

A bridge crossed the little stream near the site of the old mild from which the village derived its name. This was, time out of mind, the headquarters of a boccagh or simpleton, and no sconer had one gone the way of all flesh, than another mysteriously appeared, to take possession of the boasted privilege.

As the Salie law was not in force in this Arcadian realm, the ruling sovereign was just as likely to be a woman as a man-size only unto much such that

Biddy Mortimer, a strange, half-witted creature, was the last of a long line of ragged, besotted rulers. A more strange character than Biddy could not be conceived. She was always dressed in torn, filthy rags, while she carried under her arm a bundle of straw, wrapped up in a dirty counterpane. This was her bed and covering at night. In one hand she carried a tin-can, which received the indiscrimiprise, found the Son." So it is stion in general; ters they create, at the truth is e scene of our a strange comcocentricities, reical behavior li just notice a the adventures near the site of lerived its name. adquarters, of a r had one gone mysteriously aparted privilege. in this Arcadian at as likely to be witted creature, besotted rulers. ly could not be in torn, flithy rm a bundle of interpane. This is In one hand the indisorimi-nate contributions of potatoes, soup and meat the shopkeepers and others contributed to her support, while in the other she usually carried a lot of saucepans, kettles, and teapots, strung together. Biddy's head dress was the crowning foature in her strange attire. Like all her sex, she had a passionate liking for bonnets, and every one she could find was transferred to her wardrobe, which was no other than her head; so that it was no unusual thing to see her with a pile of bonnets rising from her head like a thatched steeple, while beneath them hung her straggling locks and bunches of gray and faded ribbons. When Biddy became too feeble to levy contributions upon her subjects, she was carted to the poor-house. But, bless your soul, she was not there a day when she raised a perfect revolution, and she had to be sent back to her filth and independence. It was equal to a repeal meeting when Biddy was driven into the village. There she sat on the jaunting car, with her bonnets bobbing up and down upon her head, her kettles and pans jingling, and she flourishing the straw bed in triumph, while a crowd of her youthful subjects followed, laughing and shouting in mad discord. Biddy was not disturbed during the remainder of her reign, and a few years since she was laid to rest with the long line of rulers who had preceded her.

Another strange character was Shaun Hicks, the peddler. Shaun was a withered-faced, puckered-eyed looking creature, and might pass for a brother to any decent monkey. Shaun flourished though, and waxed wealthy, for his wife kept a little huckster store, which added considerably to their income. She was a sharp-eyed, shrewd viper, and though she blinked fearfully, she slways kept an eye open for business.

In one of poor Shaun's tramps through the country to sell his goods, death seized the old man, and he scarcely had time to reach home to prepare for the dread summons.

He took to the bed, and called for the priest, but his matter-of-fact wife first brought in the village school-master to make his will.

The poor man who never had a will while living, was now compelled to leave one when dying, so he meekly submitted and then began. "A

"Put down, Mr. ____ owes me five pounds, which I leave to my dear wife."

"Ah," sobbed the heart-broken woman-"poor, dear Shaun is sensible to the last! " b valid a

"And Mrs. - owes me three pounds two, which I will to my wife."

"Dear me, what a good memory and clear head

he has," sobbed the bereaved woman.

After enumerating all that was due to him, which he left to his afflicted wife, amidst her frequent comments upon his virtuos, he resumed.

"And now, put down six pounds, which I owe Mr. "Stop, stop!" exclaimed the sobbing woman, though, and ittle huckster their income. nd though she eye open for ngh the coun-old man, and o prepare for the pricet, but in the village

ll while living, n dying, so he

five pounds,

roman-" poor,

nds two, which

oril goog No re and clear head

के कि कि कि कि कि कि

e to him, which frequent com-hich I owe Mr. 21 to 1 642 198 66

bing woman,

"stop, the poor man is raving. Oh, Shaun, I know I'm a widow at last-God help me! What will become of me, a poor lone widow? Let him sign his name to the will at once, for I know he is going, and it's a sin and shame to be distressing him, now that he is going fast, besides, I want to call in the priest-sign it, Shaun, achorra, at once!"

Poor Shaun was brow-beaten into affixing his signature to the will, and the afflicted woman had the consolation of finding that a nice sum was left her, while she had not a single shilling of dehts to pay.

She went into mourning for Shaun, but in three weeks she had a much healthier and stronger man in partnership with her.

But of all the odd characters which the village produced, perhaps Billy O'Carroll, the hop merchant, was the most amusing and interesting. It was not because Billy dealt in hops, or malt, or anything of the kind, that he was called the hop merchant. Not at all, poor Billy was a dancing master, but thinking the name too vulgar, he dignified himself by the title of hop merchant, and his pupils, and the peasantry in general, humored the poor man's eccentricity to his unspeakable gratification.

Billy generally patronized the farmers for miles around the village, and instructed the younger members of their families in all the mysteries of heal and too, cover the buckle, and Sir Roger de Coverly.

It was really amusing to see with what importance he strutted around as he ranged his pupils in order before him, and gave them their instructions, not forgetting occasional advice to the blind piper, such as, "go easy, the colleens can't keep up widyou," or "strike up, man slive, faster, don't you see we're all fallin' ashleep wid your music."

Billy himself was the most remarkable figure of the whole group. His very dress indicated his importance. His white linen pants always looked as if they had only just come from the iron; his well-worn but clean dress coat, was adorned with shining brass buttons as large as a small plate, his vest and the too, were immaculate in their way, and the shine of his slippers was only equaled by the polish of his hat. The clothes, like himself, seemed endowed with the power of always keeping from growing old; for though we knew him for years, we believe he never bought a new suit of clothes, nor grew a day older, at least in appearance.

It is no wonder that our hero should look upon himself as a person of no small importance, and on the poor, meek, blind piper, who squeezed all kinds of outlandish music out of his dirty bag-pipes, as a necessary appendage, merely to be tolerated.

Billy always marshalled out his pupils with the regularity of a general, and then with a smirk and a bow, would address them thus, "Miss Nelly Quin, what are we going to dance this evening?"

She most likely would reply, "A double jig." A double jig, anagh; would nothing else do ed his pupils in eir instructions, the blind piper, 't keep up wid er, don't you see

ttage.

kable figure of dicated his imvays looked as if iron; his wellned with shining te, his vest and way, and the d by the polish self, seemed enping from growor years, we beof clothes, nor ance, and a said at ould look upon ortance, and on o squeezed all dirty bag-pipes, be tolerated. pupils with the h a smirk and a fiss Nelly Quin, ming?" me aringh louble jig." Adda othing else do you? throth, you want to get into grammar before you're out of your al-phabat!" Billy would most likely reply, for a double jig was his master-piece, and was reserved for advanced or favorite pupils. If she persisted, Billy yielded with a very bad grace, and called on the old piper to strike up the Fox hunter's jig. If she did not dance it to his satisfaction he retaliated by sneeringly remarking, "So you wanted a double jig, anagh; well to be shure, how high you want to jump; faith in troth, the next thing you will be asking for is a husband!" with the

This sally, of course, set the audience in a roar of laughter, and the young girl blushed, and most likely, sat down to hide her confusion. When a favorite pupil was dancing Billy ducked and bobbed around like a jack in the box, flinging out his arms and feet as if they were attached to his body by some mechanical contrivances, in his eagerness to teach her his steps; and if her dancing was to his satisfaction, he cried out in ectacies, "That's it, stick to that, ms collect! four times that raise off and double there! that's it stick to that; that's none of your common dance I have grammar home in the box for that throth, you'll soon be as good as merelf; maybe you wont astonish them at the crass of Cappanagreun a Sunday; faith, Mrs. O'Flyn, your darther is a prodigy, and you'll soon have to be lookin' out for the colleen, for somebody will be stalin' outlived histime, and when quadrilles and other fanoy dances began to supersede the good old Irish dances, he could not patiently submit to his fate, so he moved around from farm-house to farm-house, railing against the degeneracy of the times, and as he repeatedly shook his head, he emphatically exclaimed, "Well, well, this new fangled dance is like everything else that comes over from England, there is not much good in it, and it makes the colleens as proud as peacocks, and as stuck up as a trussed turkey, to think that they can dance like the quality!"

Poor Billy, like the "good old Irish jintl

Thus the poor hop merchant lingered on, reviling at the changed times, and shaking his head until he, at length, gave it the final shake and dropped off the stage.

sttage.

and other fancy ld Irish dances, his fate, so he m-house, railing s, and as he re-cally exclaimed, se is like everyland, there is not olleens as proud ussed turkey, to red on, reviling sking his head final shake and to the second section of the second s and the Handpit was from the Bellin the

CHAPTER IX

Branch to the B MRS. BUTLER'S RETABLISHMENT—WILLY SHRA—PRANK THE R. LANG AT HOME WILLY'S HISTORY, IN CALL SEE

FRANK was amused by Shemus' conversational powers, as they proceeded in their journey. The mind of the latter seemed a regular fund of stories, songs, and legends; and as Frank's fowling operations were a sineoure, he had the more time to listen

It was evening when they came in eight of Mr. O'Donnell's house, which was appropriately called,

"Begor, there's the house beyond, and here is Mrs. Butler's sheebeen; will we go in? Maybe any of the boys wud be there."

"And maybe you'd like a glass after your walk, Shemus; so we will to a.

Mrs. Butler's house was racket comfortable of its kind; it was well that ober, and the walls plastered; it had also two glass windows in front. In one of the windows a few loaves of bread, some candles and pipes, displayed themselves most conspicuously; behind these stood a broken glass and a jug, as much as to say you can get something else here besides bread and candles.

In such a sense did the initiated read it, for they knew well that there was some secret chamber or corner in Mrs. Butler's establishment as hard to be made out as the labyrinth of Crete, which was accessible to Mrs. Butler alone; for she presided as priestess over it, and discovered in its hidden womb nothing less than an Irishman's glory—the real potteen. Mrs. Butler's house had an exterior air of comfort; the interior of it also was clean and orderly. The little kitchen, with an attempt at a counter in one corner, and its rows of pints and tins in another, and its clean mortar floor and white-washed walls, bore strong evidence to Mrs. Butler's taste and cleanliness. The little room inside was equally neat; it had a bed hung with cotton curtains in one corner, and a kind of little closet behind among the mysteries of which she concealed her "muntain dew." Indeed, I must say, that the excise officers connived at it a good deal, for she was a poor struggling widow, trying to support herself and her only daughter. Mr. O'Donnell, too, for he was her landlord, left her the house and haggard free. So she was, as she said herself, "able to live party well, glory be to

"Arrah, welcome, Mr. Frank; where have you been this week of Sundays? sit down." She ran over and dusted a chair for him, and the placed it near the fire. This was Mrs. Butler's substitution to our travelers as they entered her domicils. Mrs. Butler, though a large, corpulent woman, was still a read it, for they chamber or corhard to be made h was accessible ded as priestess womb nothing e real potteen. rair of comfort; d orderly. The a counter in one ns in another, and ashed walis, bore te and cleanliness.

neat; it had a me corner, and a the mysteries of n dew." Indeed, connived at it a struggling widow, er only daughter. c landlord, left her o she was, as she well, glory be to where have you t down. She ran and their placed it there ministion to bustling body; her daughter Nelly was also a bustling tidy little girl. I have the soi,

"I am well, thank you, Mrs. Butler," said Frank, in reply to her inquiries. "I was over at my uncle's; myself and Shemus here walked across to-day, so, as we are pretty well tired now, if you get us a drop, I think it will not do us any injury."

"Shure I will, and welcome, Mr. Frank, and if it were a hundred times better, who has so good right to it, I want to know ?" frient "Thank you, ma'am; any news since I left home ?" e Sorra a news, Mr. Frank, worth relating."

"Now, Shemus," said Frank, as they left Mrs. Butler's, "I think we will cross the fields home, and go by Glenbower; we might meet a weedcook there; it is the first place in this part of the country they come to."

"Begorra, it's as good a way as any," said Shemus. Glenbower—the bothered gien—was a thick grove of bushes and trees in a deep valley. A small stream ran through it, and in the middle and thick-est part, the water rolled over a projecting rock, forming a very pretty cascade of about ten feet high.

It took its name from the noise caused by this.

Near the water fall, under a projecting cliff, was a very pretty arbox. There was a rustic seat in the centre, and the branches and ahrabs, entwined with woodbine and honeysuckles, were interwoven around.

As Frank neared this retreat, for he met no birds in the grove, he thought that he heard the sound of music proceeding from it.

"Whist," said Shemus; "may I never sin but that is music."

"I think so, too, Shemus; let us go nearer.

As they neared the arbor they distinctly heard the sounds of a flute mingling with the soft drippling of the falling stream.

"Isn't it pleasant," said Shemus, evidently delighted; "listen to the murmuring of the water and the sound of the music sighing together."

Frank leant on his gun until the music ceased; he then went up to the arbor and was about to enter, when he heard a clear plaintive voice chanting the following song:—

Oh I hir is the brow
Of Onthleen, dear,
And mild is the glance
Of Onthleen, dear,
And rayen is her hair,
And her skin is so fair
That none can compare

Oh! light is the step
Of Oathleen, dear,
And graceful the usen.
Of Oathleen, dear,
I am wild with delight,
My heart is so light
If I uset but the eight
Of Oathleen, dear.

ver sin but that nearer. distinctly heard e soft drippling

evidently def the water and her." ausio ceased; he about to enter, e chanting the There is love in the eye

Of Cathleen, dear,
There is balm in the sigh
Of Cathleen, dear,
Soft and fair is her hand,
And her voice is as blend,
As breath of Araby's land,
My Cathleen, dear.

Brighter than the day
Is Outhloon, dear,
Purer than the spray
Is Oathloon, dear,
Oh! I never will reve,
But true as the dove
I'll cling to the love
Of Oathloon, dear,

My heart it is thine,

My Cathleen, dear,

Then, will you to mine?

My Cathleen, dear,

And our lives, will I know,

Will se lovingly flow

We'll have heaven below,

My Cathleon, dear. . 等 1 智 产品

After the song there was a silence of some time.

"I declare," thought Frank, "tis no other but my friend, Willy Shea; could that song be addressed to my sister Kate? I never heard it before, and he writes poetry. Well, I shouldn't wonder if he were in love with her, for she is a noble girl. I declare, if they made a comfident of me I would do my best for them, for I would not set a nobler husband for my fair sister than Willy Shea."

The rustling of the trees near them disturbed the party in the arbor, and Frank neared them, and grasping his friend by the hand, exclaimed,

"Willy, my dear fellow, I am glad to see you; when did you come? this is a pleasure I did not expect; and Kate, my sister dear, how are you since? why, you look pale,—and my little Bessy," and he kissed his young sister.

"Now, Frank," said Kate, recovering her composure, "sit down, you have asked so many questions in a minute that I am sure you did not give us time to answer half of them."

"Oh, I believe I must answer the first," said.
Willy; "in the first place, I am here three days; I was getting weary of the city, and, in truth, my health wasn't too good, so I took a run to see my kind friends."

"Welcome, my dear friend; and you strolled up to my nest, as I call it; up here; here is where I sit and think and dream over life's vicissitudes; isn't it a wild retreat, Willy? just suited for a poet like

"It is, indeed, a retired nook, separated from the world; here you would hear no voice but that little stream babbling its own discordant music; here the soul could commune with itself."

"True, but I interrupted your music; you were at some song I never heard before; I suppose one of your own composition."

A slight blush tinged the student's pale check, and a sympathetic one mounted on Kate's. Frank ed them, and

ttage.

d to see you; e I did not exare you since? Bessy," and he ing her compomany questions ot give us time the first," said three days; I in truth, my run to see my you strolled up re is where I sit situdes; isn't it for a poet like parated from the oe but that little music; here the music; you were I suppose one of ent's pale check, a Kate's. Frank did not pretend to notice it, though he was too well schooled in the ways of love not to set down these indications for their worth.

"Come, Willy, play something, and I will take Bessy on my knee, and as our house is too small, Shemus, you must remain at the door."

Shemus, you must remain at the door.

Shemus was fatigued, and stretched outside the door; Beesy climbed to her brother's knee, and nestled in his bosom, and Willy resumed his flute.

Though it was the month of November, still the

Though it was the month of November, still the evening was calm and still; the weather was very dry for the season, so there was but little water in the stream. The birds were chirping their farewell songs to autumn, the little rivulet fell with a gurgling noise over the fall, and the soft sounds of the flute floated on the evening breeze.

"Music has wonderful charms for me," said Frank.
"I think there is a great deal of truth in the fabled lyre of Orpheus; it is a mere allegory, showing the power music possesses of fascinating the most rugged natures."

"True," said Willy: "the make-charmers use it in their incantations; why, it has a soothing influence on most animals, not to speak of man; the poet has well said,—

"In there a heart that made senset malt, Airel how is that regret heart foriors."
And yet, some of the finest minds had no taste for music; let us take Dr. Johnson and Sir Walter Scott, for instances."

"Few have that nice discriminating taste to observe a slight error in musical notes. If a single wrong syllable introduced itself into a verse, either of these great scholars would at once see the limping of the verse, their very ear would detect it, and yet they were not sensible of the pure harmony of music; this makes me agree with the Latin quotation,—'Poeta nascitur non fit.' I think though, art can do a great deal to perfect it, still nature is the great architect of our tastes and talents."

"Do you know," said Frank, after a pause, "let

"Do you know," said Frank, after a pause, "let modern writers say what they will to the contrary, I think that our old bardic order and traveling minstrels did a great deal of good in their way; they kept alive the spirit of romance and chivalry that tended to refine and ennoble the people."

song, firing his hearers with martial pride; there was something so soul-stirring in the bard. His was glorious music; now haughty and inspiring, and then sad and pensive, as if weeping. I went a few years ago to hear an old wandering minstrel in Cork. I might say of him:—

The lest of all the bards was he, That sung of snelent chivalry.

He was a fine type of the old Irish bards; his grey hair floated in wavey ringlets like the old Irish coulin. There was a touching sweetness in his wild effusions that made me long to see the bardic order ating taste to the If a single

a verse, either
e see the limpi detect it, and are harmony of the Latin quotaink though, are il nature is the

onta."
or a pause, "let
o the contrary,
d traveling mintheir way; they d chivalry that ople."

of these sons of ial pride; there the bard. His ad inspiring, and I went a few minstrel in Cork.

bards; his grey the old Irish tness in his wild the bardic order restored. I often listen in imagination to our great national bard, Carolan—him over whom the genius of his country breathed the spirit of inspiration. Is there not a tender pathos, an impressive grandeur, a metrical simplicity in his compositions, and a sublime witchery in the wild effusions of his harp."

"What a pity," said Kate O'Donnell, "that our old Irish harp should give way to other and newer instruments."

"And yet Kate, our neighbors, the English, will not allow us the poor privilege of claiming the harp a national instrument."

"I always thought," said Frank, "that they left us this much of our nationality, at least; I should not wonder if the Scotch, as they have seized Omian, took the harp also."

"Dr. Percy says," said Willy, "that 'the harp was the common musical instrument of the Anglo-Saxons;' but Dr. Beauford says, 'I cannot but think the clareach, or Irish harp, one of the most ancient Irish instruments we have among us, and had, perhaps, its origin in remote periods of antiquity."

"The Irish tradition is, that we are indebted for this instrument to the first Milesian colony that settled in this country. The music of the harp was grand indeed, though inferior to the bagpipes, as soul-stirring, martial music in the field; it far surpassed it in sweetness and pensive grandeur. How gay and animating is the Irish jig, and what surpasses the renecafadha, or war dance, which corresponds to the feetal dance of the Greeks. Previous to the innovation of foreign dances, all our balls or dancing parties concluded with the renecafadha, as they often do now with a country dance. The last time it had been danced in honor of a great national event, was to welcome James the Second on his arrival in Kinsale."

"You said something, Frank," said Kate, "about Ossian being a Scotchman; do the modern Sectch claim him as such?"

"Certainly, sister mine; what is it the English and Scotch don't claim? I shouldn't wonder if Carolan should become a Scotchman or an Englishman by and bye, and most likely, after a time, Tom Moore too; but happily their claims to Ossian are now exploded. To Macpherson is undoubtedly due the nerit of collecting the scattered Ossianic poems; but then he so changed names, or rather Scotchafied them, as to give them something of a Scotch smack."

Night was fast setting in, so they prepared to leave for home.

"I tell you what," said Frank, as they left the grove, "winter is now setting in; as soon as the weather breaks he must leave our bower for the season. Now, I propose that we take a cold dinner here to-morrow; and to make it a banquet worthy of the gods, I will bring my clarionet, and you your fitte, Willy. Now, who seconds the resolution?"

eks. Previous all our balls or renecafadha, as nce. The last great national Second on his

Kate, "about modern Sectoh

it the English da't wonder if or an Englishter a time, Tom a to Ossian are udoubtedly due tered Ossianio ames, or rather something of a

ey prepared to

s they left the as soon as the bower for the ke a cold dinner banquet worthy rionet, and you onds the resolu-Buch of the 19

"I do," said Willy, " provided Kate will be our fair hostess, and Bessy our guest." A. A.

"Agreed, agreed!" "Do you know, Frank, whom we had at dinner, and is to stay to night with us?"

" No, whom, pray ?.".

"Your friend, Mr. Baker."

"Now, capital by Jovel Tell me, has he many on his list of killed and wounded? any new vic-

"Oh! I suppose he has; but then we did not wait to hear of all his bloody deeds, so we left himself and papa to settle about the killed and wounded . over their punch, and strolled out here."

"Willy, my dear fellow," said Frank, "we must draw out old Baker; he is the oddest fish in the world, a regular Jack Falstaff; if you credit himself the county is trembling with the very dread of his name, while I must tell you there never breathed a more arrant coward."

Our party found the worthy couple enjoying their punea together, and Mrs. O'Donnell, seated on a settee near the fire, enjoying Mr. Baker's " hair-breadth accepts by flood and field."

"Hal Frank—well, are ye come, ladice—is this you where were you these seven weeks?—devilish well you rode the Fawn, my boy-give me the

This was Mr. Baker's salute to Frank, the moment be made his appearance of the service its a fire

"Well, are you come lad; I thought you weren't going to come home any more," said his father.

His mother kindly looked up, with his hand in hers, and gave it a kiss, and whispered:-

"Welcome, my dear boy." "That will do, now," said Mr. Baker; "leave your gun there; a nice day for shooting this, though I think your bag isn't very heavy; when I was like you, a young strippling, I often had two men loaded coming home. Ay, upon my soul, often three, often

"You must have shot a sheep, or a dog, or, perhaps, a lot of turkeys then, to load so many?" said Frank.

This was a sly hit at Mr. Baker, for it was said that he wasn't very particular whether it were wild or tame fowl he met; in fact perferred the latter, as being in the best condition, and the more easily

"Devil a bit, devil a bit, all wild-fowl, game every mother's soul of them. Often Lord Clearall said to me:- Baker, how the deuce do you bag so many.' His lordship and I you know, are particular friends; he was never a good shot though. You heard that I shot—hem, that his lordship though shot—this is between ourselves though, honor bright—this is how it happened. We were fowling, and a covey of partridge got up near the dogs; bang went his lordship and I; bednd, one of the birds fell, and there was Spanker tossing head over heels, I thought it was over-joyed his father. ith his hand in red:—

Baker; "leave ding this, though when I was like two men loaded often three, often

r a dog, or, perso many?" said

, for it was said her it were wild erred the latter, the more easily

fowl, game every il Clearall said to ou beg so many.'
tioular friends; he u beand that I shot
t—this is between his is how it hapovey of partridge
his lordship and I;
here was Speaker
it was over-joyed

he was; bedad, when I went up to him he was beautifully peppered. His lordship stormed and swore, and said it was I that shot him; devil a bit; I knew better, but I didn't like to contradict him, for his lordship is my particular friend. Come, Frank, boy, get your glass."

"I think I will get something to eat first," said

"That's it, Frank; a man can never drink unless he eats; 'eat, drink, and be merry,' as his lordship says, for we are particular friends. I think I will have another leg of that turkey, Miss Kate; I can drink the better for it. Just take what you want off the bird for Frank, and leave the rest here on the table; we can be picking a snack by times; that will do, Miss Kate; a loaf of bread now. A man should always be eating and drinking together; 'eat, drink and be merry,' as his lordship says; his lordship and I, you know, are particular friends. That roast mutton was so nice I think I will have a cut along with the turkey; that will do now. This is your own mutton, Mr. O'Donnell? devilish fine it is; never got such mutton as yours, except his lendship's." A The party . ..

We will have Mr. Baker, for the present, to enjoy his snack, which consisted, of the most part, of a turkey, and about two pounds of souther, we will also leave Frank to take his dinner, for which he had a good relish, after a walk of about fourteen niles through the country; and Shemus, too, to do ample justice to a dish of broken meat and orisped potatoes, in the kitchen, and while they are all enjoying themselves, we will introduce our new acquaintances to our readers.

Mr. O'Donnell was a man about fifty years of age -perhaps something more. He was very handsome in his youth, and was still a fine portly man. His figure was erect, his large eye bright, and the ruddy glow of health was still upon his cheek. There was none of the sternness of age upon his brow; nor was the smile of love and friendship banished from his lips. He was warni-hearted and affectionate, and with merry laugh and song he joined the plays and pastimes of his children. His parental anthority did not chide their innocent amusements, so he was to them the kind, loving father and playful friend. He was a man of wealth and respectability, too. He farmed large tracts of land, and had lately set up a discount bank in the village. His wife was a pale, tall woman. There was something subdued and melancholy in her appearance. This was owing to the death of most of her children, by that most insidious of all diseases, consumption. She was a woman of warm affections and deep love; and it is no wonder, when she saw her darling children droop and pine away one by one, that the rose fled her cheeks and the smile her lips. Even now she sighs as little Bessy sits beside her on the acttee and nestles her head in her lap, for there is something in the fire that sparkles in the eye, and in the b

l orisped potare all enjoying r acquaintances

fty years of age very handsome rtly man. His t, and the ruddy ek. There was brow; nor was nished from his fectionate, and d the plays and rental anthority nents, so he was playful friend. tability, too. He d lately set up a wife was a pale, ng subdued and his was owing to y that most inion. She was a p love; and it is ng children droop he rose fled her an now she sighs a the settee and re is something in and in the hectio finsh that mantles on the cheek, and then leaves it deadly pale as before, that wrings the mother's heart with anguish for her pretty darling. So frail, so gentle and retiring was Bessy O'Donnell, that she seemed some ethereal being embodied in a frame of mortal mould. She was the only one of the family that possessed the golden hair and light blue eye of the mother. She was a frail, gentle, loving child, Bessy O'Donnell was. Though twelve winters had not passed over her head, yet she was tall—tall for her years—for the fire was burning within, and building its structure to consume it again. And Kate O'Donnell; she was in herself a wealth of love and beauty. Though she had imbined from her mother a tinge of her chaste sadness, still she was betimes cheerful as a child, with all the devotional nature of true piety.

Her's was that beautifully moulded character of intellectual taste, rare enjoyments, and good sense, seldom met with; but which is no ideal after all, dear reader. How many a Kata O'Donnell have we met with in life? But I must describe her more minutely to you. Her beauty was of the highest order; she was tall and stately, without a particle of pride or affectation. Her beautiful oval, but rather pale, face was enlivened by a slight blush, and encircled with long braids of raven hair. A broad lorehead, white as alabaster, a nose of extreme delicacy, but rather retrouses, dark blue eyes, bordered with dark lashes—such was Kata O'Donneil.

There was an elegance of symmetry, a correctness of form about her, that I have seldom seen surpassed in statuary. How often, dear reader, do we see a living Venus, with life and animation, with the rich blood ciroling through her veins, with animated and sparkling features? What is all your soulless statuary, your dry Venus-de-Medici, to her? Nothing; it is merely a beautifully chiselled ideal when compared to the real. Such was Kate O'Donnell, as she moved around that tastofully furnished parlor, that black velvet riband around her neck, contrasting so finely with the purity of her skin, and that rose-bud braided in her dark hair, looking out so wantonly from beneath the folds.

We know little, as yet, of Willy Shea, but that he was an orphan; Frank had met him at College. There was something so retiring and gloomy about that poor student, that he won on Frank's good nature to seek his society and followship.

Willy Shea seemed to avoid associating with any of the students. He was dressed in black, with crape on his hat; all the others knew about him was that he had lately buried his father, and was now left alone to battle against a rough world.

Frank, after a time, gained his friendship and his confidence, and when the fatal disease of his family,—consumption,—threatened, and when recommended to go to the country, alas! he had no home, and Frank wrote to his father, and there rame in reply a relcome invitation for the studen, to make his

y, a correctness
n seen surpassed
r, do we see a n, with the rich
th animated and par soulless stather? Nothing;
deal when compromnell, as she hed parlor, that a, contrasting so nd that rose-bud
out so wantonly

Shea, but that him at College. d gloomy about on Frank's good wship.

ciating with any I in black with w about him was r, and was now
world.

riendship and his acc of his family, when recommendad no home, and re rame in reply leng to make his home of Mr. O'Donnell's house until his recovery; he hesitated, yet Frank pressed him, and said so much about the kindness of his dear mother and his fair sister, that at length he consented. For something said to him, "though death has left you without kith or kin, though you have no fond mother, or gentle sympathising sister—no one to love you, no one to feel for you, there is no use in feeling dismal and weary; go, there are loving hearts in the world that will love you," and something within him whispered, "go, there are loving hearts in the world that will love you,"—and he did go.

Willy Shea was then about twenty. He was rather tail and gracefully formed. His studious, pale-looking face, shaded with dark curls, possessed almost a womanly delicacy. There was a mine of thought in his dark dreamy eye. As I said, he had neither kith nor kin, and he tried to forget the past in deep reflective study. His thoughts and life were pure and unsullied; his aspirations noble and lofty.

At length the poor suffering student accompanied his new friend to his home in the country. Here every comfort surrounded him; the nicest attention was paid him, until his improved health testified that the change was indeed beneficial.

Mrs. O'Donnell thought of her own dear children and sighed, and was a mother to the suffering orphan. He was so exhausted from his delicate state and the fatigue of traveling; that he was confined to bed for several days. Kate was his principal nurse, and her low soft voice, her gentle step, and the cheerfulness of her presence, were a balm to his weary spirit. How he did wait and listen and long for her coming; what sweet emotions danced in his dreamy dark eyes, as she quietly glided into his room.

One day in a feverish sleep, as dreams of the past flitted across his mind, he exclaimed, "Oh, mother dear! oh, sister sweet! will you not come to me? but alas! I have neither mother nor sister-no one 1991 Mr. March P "Valencia to love me."

He thought he felt a tear trickle on his brow; he looked up, and Kate was standing over him, her large eyes dim with pity and compassion. "So you have neither mother nor sister, poor youth; I will be to you a sister."

"God bless you, God bless you, Miss O'Donnell, for these kind words, and he pressed his lips to her hand. She blushed and timidly withdrew her hand .

" Forgive me, Miss O'Donnell-"

"Kate, if you please, as we are to be brother and

"Well, Kate—how dear a name—I am grateful for that sympathy which called forth your devotion to a stranger; I had a sister like you; her name was Kate, also."

"And she is dead?" said Kate.
"Yes, Kate, yes! that fatal disease of our family did its work; she was older than I by a few years;

were a balm and listen and potions danced tly glided into ams of the past

"Oh, mother
of come to me?
sister—no one

over him, her saion. "So you r youth; I will Miss O'Donnell, sened his lips to y withdrew her be brother and

I am grateful h your devotion u; her name was

by a few years;

she was the playmate of my young days, and the guide of my boyhood. We loved one another dearly. At length, her laugh, became less merryher step less buoyant. She was declining; yes, she was, for that short dry cough, that heetic flush, and the tiny blue veins and wasting frame told us so. Doctors were called in; they watched her heavy breathing, felt ber pulse, wisely shook their heads, took their fees, and left. They ordered her whatever she desired; ah we knew what this meant. At length she became too weak to remain up. I constantly watched and attended her sick, bed, and often watered it with my tears. I can never forget the day our poor infirm father came to take his parting leave. He had to be helped up stairs; he tottered to the bed; though weak, she raised herself up, clasped her tiny hands around his neck; his team bedewed her face. His long grey hair floated around, mingling with her soft ringlets. There he lay in her embrace, breathing blessings on that good dutiful daughter, that never vexed him; that cheered and consoled him in his declining health. It was a mute some of heart-felt grief. Memory recalled the love and kindness of past years. All the tenderces of the fond father and dutiful daughter as aroused in that awful moment, when they were about to separate for ever. With swellen e as and throbing heart I witnessed this some. By poor, sobbing mother turied her face in the baloevering. The domestics week, and at leagth bore him away from the day our poor infirm father came to take his section wept, and at length bore him away from that child he dearly loved, but was never more to to see on earth."

"And your father, too?" said Kate, as she rested her head on her hand, and the tears trickled between her fingers.

"Is dead! Oh! I can never forget my feelings, as I knelt beside his death-bed. With a heart bursting with grief I knelt to receive his final bless-

"Ah! in that moment what feelings agitate a sensitive mind. Our past lives rise up in judgment against us; our faults and transgressions appear so heinous that we feel almost ashamed to crave a blessing. Alas! if we could recall that good father to life, how changed we would become. What a lesson is there in that separation. As I paid nature her tribute beside that death-bed, some one whispered—'You have one comfort, you were a dutiful son.' I might reply—'Alas, I thought so while he was alive; but now that he is dead, I think otherwise.' These tears, Kate, were not weakness; no, for they sprung from that fount, the holiest in my nature, that stirred up this mutiny of sobe and tears for that dear father whose wise counsels and protecting hand steered methrough life."

"And so you are alone in the world?" sobbed

"Alone, Kate, without a domestic tie, one to love me, to fill up the yearnings of my loving heart, for my kind, gentle, loving mother soon followed them. ate, as she rested trickled between get my feelings, With a heart we his final bless-nge agitate a senup in judgment gressions appear amed to crave a

that good father secome. What a
As I paid nature
me one whispered
a dutiful son.' I thils he was alive;
therwise.' These
o, for they sprung
nature, that stirred or that dear father
g hand steered me

world?" sobbed

tic tie, one to love loving heart, for on followed them. Father, mother, and sister sleep in one grave. Oh, God! how soon shall I join them?"

"Hush, hush," sobbed Kate; "don't say that, brother, it is sorrowful. God is good; sure we will love you and comfort you."

"You love me Kate! Oh, did you say that?" and he leant up in the bed. "Oh, Kate, if one so good and pure as you would love me, I could almost forget the misery of the past in the happiness of the present."

Kate blushed and smiled, and said—"You forget that we are brother and sister already. Now try and sleep, for you are fatigued."

And did he sleep? No; he doeed away, and visions of the past rose up before him. He was a child again, and played with his sister at his mother's knee; and now tired and wearied with play, they knelt beside her and nestled in her lap, and she kissed them and husbed them to sleep; and his dear paps had come home, and walked in on tip-toes lest he would disturb his little darlings' rest. When they awoke, he had brought with him a horse for Willy and a doll for Kate; and how he laughed and raced with his horse, and Kate fondled her doll, and then when they retired to rest, how his mother pressed her good-night kins upon their little lips. And then came up his schoolboy days, with crowds of happy children at play; their laughing faces full of smiles, and they lastily shouting in the exuberance of their mirth; and then came up the mournful faces of strange men crowding around their house; and some, he thought, were eating and drinking and langhing, whilst others were bearing away his dear sister in a coffin, and then came his father and next his mother. He wept and cried, but the heartless men put him saide, and bore away the coffins; and as he wept, an angel came to console him, and she wept with him, and then dried his tears with her wings; and he looked up, and the angel smiled and left her wings aside, and said-"I am Kate O'Donnell." The poor invalid swoke, his heart was full of a sweet sensation, and the brightness returned to his eyes, and the glow to his cheek, for the unerring penetration of the heart told him that Kate O'Donnell loved him. What wonder that these young hearts folded in their bosoms, like a morning flower dripping with dew, that sweetest and holiest of sentiments—first love—that sentiment that so gladdens and beautifies human life as to make a paradise of earth. Willy Shea grew strong day by day; Kate was his constant companion; they feared not the world's censure, for they had pledged their young love to one another, and their hearts were full of joy. The 'Spectator' says that "solitude with the person be-loved, even to a woman's mind, has a pleasure beloved, even to a woman's mind, has a pleasure be-yond all the pomp and splender in the world." How the hearts of Willy and Kate responded to this sen-timent as they built their fairy costles of hope in some retired place, with no other eye but those of God and the angels upon them.

their house; and

d drinking and

ng away his dear ather and next his the heartless men coffins; and as he im, and she wept

with her wings;

miled and left her

Late O'Donnell."

was full of a sweet

rned to his eyes,

nnerring penetra-

o O'Donnell loved oung hearts folded wer dripping with sentiments—first dons and beautifies of earth, Willy

t the world's cen-

full of joy. The rith the person be-has a pleasure bethe world." How ponded to this sencastles of hope in eye but those of

When he took his leave, to follow his studies, for he was a medical student, he promised to return each vacation, and faithfully did he keep that promise, for there were fond smiles from all, and one loving heart to hail his wolcome to Glen Cottage.

a grant of the form

all the second of the second

- Land of the transfer of the second

The second secon

and the state of t

The state of the s

the first of the property of the party of th

CHAPTER X.

MR. BAKER'S NOBLE EXPLOITS.—MR. O'DONNELL'S PAMILY.

It is fit that we should return to our friend, Mr. Baker, who by this time had finished his little mack. Mr. Baker was an attorney of very limited practice indeed. He preferred getting his living by pandering to the tastes of Lord Clearall, and other gentlemen, than by perseverance in a lucrative profession. He was a man of very poor abilities, and although he was looked upon as Lord Clearall's law-agent, still, any cases of importance or difficulty were handed over to men better versed in their business. In fact, he was merely tolarated as a kind of family dependent or lumber, that could not be well thrown away. His humorous eccentricities gained him a ready introduction to the tables of the neighboring gentry. Besides, it being known that he was the guest and law-agent to Lord Clearall, was another strong letter of recommendation. We are all fond of basking in the shade of nobility. There are few disciples of Diogenes now in existence, and so our friend found. Mr. Baker was naturally indolent and a sensualist, and therefore he thought it much easier and pleasanter to eat a good dinner with his

our friend, Mr. d his little mack. limited practice lving by panderand other gentierative profession. rall's law-agent, difficulty were in their business. a kind of family t be well thrown es gained him a the neighboring that he was the rall, was another We are all fond . There are few tence, and so our aturally indolent thought it much d dinner with his neighbor, than to go to the trouble of providing one himself. Mr. Baker seldom condescended to dine with farmers; so, after dining with Lord Clearall and Sir ___ and Mr. ___ he could not infringe so far on his dignity; however, he relaxed a little on behalf of Mr. O'Donnell, for, as he said, Mr. O'Donnell had the right blood in him, and was a respectable man; the truth is, Mr. O'Donnell kept a good table, and gave him some legal employment connected with his bank, that added to his slender

As I have remarked, Mr. Baker had peculiarities and eccentricities; though a noted coward, still, he would keep his hearers in roars with all his encounters with robbers and murderers. He had a powerful constitution, or rather appetite, for he was able to est and drink as much as four moderate men, He possessed a good deal of the narrow-minded bigotry of the old school, and it was laughable to witness his endeavors at trying not to damn the papiets or send the Pope to hell, when in company with Catholics. Not if he had the power would he do one or other, for I really think, if Saint Peter gave him the keys of heaven, and that the Pope sought admittance, Mr. Baker would, after regaling him with a few good curses, let him in unknown to his friends; for, on the whole, this Mr. Baker was not a bad kind of man; he was, in fact, more a fool than a

Mr. Baker had finished his little lunch, and then carefully drew his seat near the fire, and mixed his punch, taking care to put two glasses of whiskey into each tumbler, for he vowed that weak punch never agreed with him.

Frank and Willy Shea joined the party at the table. Kate O'Donnell sat in an easy chair reading a book, and her mother and Bessy were seated on the sofa near her.

"This is comfortable, ay, comfortable, by Jove," and Mr. Baker looked from the bright fire, over which he held his hands a few seconds, into his glass of sparkling punch; so it was hard to say which he pronounced comfortable; perhaps the two; or perhaps he was taking in the whole in his mind's eye, and thinking what a happy man Mr. O'Donnell was, with his kind wife and fair children, as bey sat around that cheerful fire; and that table sparkling with glasses and decenters and streaming lights.

Mr. Baker was an old bachelor—and strange things do run in old bachelor's heads; for, when they enter a little Eden of domestic bliss, they worder why they were born to mope alone through life, without one tendril to keep alive the affections, or one green vine to cling to them for support.

one green vine to ching to that and looked around again.

"Yes," said Mr. O'Donnell; "a bright fire of a chilly evening, a pleasant glass of punch, with your family around you, telling some innocent stories, or e, and mixed his asses of whiskey that weak punch

the party at the easy chair reading y were seated ou ortable, by Jove," bright fire, over onds, into his glass

d to say which he
the two; or perin his mind's eye,
Mr. O'Donnell was, ildren, as hey sat
table sparkling treaming lights.

selor—and strange heads; for, when stic bliss, they wold alone through life, the affections, or for support.

and looked around

"a bright fire of a of punch, with your innocent stories, or singing some pretty little songs, are comfortable things, no doubt, Mr. Baker."

"Devilish comfortable, though!" and Mr. Baker sighed.

"I wonder you never married, Mr. Baker," said Mrs. O'Donnell."

"Never, ma'am; never. Begad, I once thought of it when young; something or another knocked it up—I should tell you, the match was made, sy, made. I was so fond of that pretty little girl. I was deviliah fond—I—oh, I sea, I am making a fool of myself; and "—here he wiped his eyes and blew his nose very strongly—" that snuff makes a person sneeze so. Well, as I said before, she took the fever—devil take the fever!—God forgive me for cursing—bad luck to it!—What's that I said? Yes, she died, and I never minded marrying since."

After all, there were fine feelings lurking in that blustering rough man's heart.

"Nover married, Mrs. O'Donnell; though Lord Clearall, for we are particular friends, says to me, 'Baker, travel where you will, there is no place so pleasant as home."

"Well, Mr. Baker," said Frank, "I didn't see you since the races of Cashel; how did you get home?"

"Capitally, boy, capitally. You rode devillah well, though; d—n me, but you did. A pleasant night we had at the hotel; pooh, hab, pooh!" and Mr. Baker leaned back in his chair, and then indulged in a pinch of snuff and a pooh. "That Mr. B— said something to me; didn't he? They know the lion is getting old, Frank, so they do. Poohl—God be with the good old times, when, if a man said a vthing to you, you need but send a friend to him and appoint a nice cosy corner of a field, and there quietly settle the affair. Now the law won't allow that satisfaction. Did you see that itt le affair, between Cooke and myself how it was prevented? The police gos the scent and dogged us. I always think that Cooke sold the pass, and sent word of the whole affair; for you know he was a stag, Frank—a stag; and knew well that I'd shoot him?"

"The worst of it is, Mr. Baker, Mr. Cooke's conds gave out that it was you who forewarned the police.

"Oh! of course, Frank, of course, trying to shift the blame of themselves; he was a stag, sir, it stag —pooh;" and Mr. Baker propeded with another glasse of punch. "Good spirits this, Mr. O'Donnell; I generally put shree glasses to my punch, but only two of yours; for, as Lord Clearall says—you know we are particular friends—well, as he says, 'Baker, never drink weak punch; it will sicken you, man; is is as bad as pope and—'hem, ha, I mean—oh, to hell!——; yet, it's devilish

"Mr. Baker," said Mr. O'Donnell, who could scarce conceal a smile at the blundering of his

That Mr. n't he? They k, so they do. mes, when, if a ed but send a sy corner of a Did you see that elf how it was ent and dogged d the pass, and on know he was ell that I'd shoot er, Mr. Cooke's o forewarned the

, trying to shift atag, sir, u stag ed with another Mr. O'Donnell; punch, but only says you know he mays, Baker, ink weak punch; as pope andyet, it's devilish oil, who could

guest; "Mr. Baker, I am told our worthy agent is about resigning, as he does not wish to carry out his lordship's orders about clearing the Lisduff property; do you know is it true ?"

"Yes, I think he will; devilish good man he was; he and the old lord pulled well together; tender old man that old lord was; never tossed anyone out, but supported widows and orphans; or, as the present lord calls them, idlers and stragglers—sy, faith, that's it. I don't see why he should resign. All poor people on that Lisduff. What loss are their wretched cabins? Besides, his lordship wants to make one sheep walk of the whole, or to let it to large tenants. Fine farm-houses are more comfortable and tasty than poor cabine; and, as his lordship says, "Why the devil shouldn't be do as he likes with his own? And why not, Mr. O'Donnell? Miss Kate, this water is getting cold, I feel Cold water never makes good punch; hot speckling, and plonty of whiskey, and there it is for you."

"Is it possible, Mr. Bake," said Frank, "that his lordship means to turn all the small farmers off the Liaduff property? Sure their little farms and cabins are as dear to their as is his palace to his lordship."

"Well, well; that may be, Frank—that may be; but then you know they belong to his leadship, and why not do as he pleases with them?"

"And what will become of the poor people, Mr.

Kate sighed, and Frank held down his head, for he did not wish to argue the matter further with Mr. Baker, knowing his prattling propensities, and fearing that his lordship would feel offended at any strictures on the management of his property from a tenant.

O'Donnell. A. 1) - was p beauted beat more mid-blad

"You see how it is. Mr. O'Donnell; of course I will get a reference, as his lordship and I are particular friends; but then I won't take it, d—n me if I do; I am now getting too old; besides, I don't like hunting out poor devils,—I am d—d if I do; so I appose Mr. Ellis, our worthy Scotch friend, will come in."

"Now, he has feathered his nest pretty well under his fordship." Just any reliable of the safe and the safe and his lordship.

Devlish well; sy, that is it; I will tell—but this is between ourselves, honor bright—as I was saying; he tame there a poor steward, let me see, about twenty years ago. He didn't make much hand of the old lord, but he pleked up some nice farms for himself and his friends; according as the young lord wanted money, he supplied him with hundreds and thomands; so; when the old man died, he became a right-hand man with the son. He supplies him with

I suppose they sy can. They P—, hem, h his head, for ter further with ropensities, and offended at any property from a him?" said Mr.

ell; of course I ship and I are take it; d—n old; besides, I I am d—d if worthy Scotch

retty well under

rill tell—but this

as I was saying,
by me' see, about
be much hand of onice farms for us the young lost
the handreds and led, he became a money at his calls. His lordship finds him very easy in his terms. He sometimes takes a mortgage upon this farm or that, merely for forms sake, Mr. O'Donnnell but he is sure that it is on some property nearly out of lease; so in order to improve the land, and carry out a system of high farming, he ejects the tenants, builds houses, and improves the land, and then brings over his friends from Scotland, who get the land at about half what the poor popish devils I beg pardon, Mr. O'Donnell, I mean no offence; as I was saying, they take the land for about half the rent the damned pa - O yest the old tenants I mean, paid for it, Mr. Ellis taking care to be well paid by the new comers; but all this sub roea, you see, sub rosa; so Mr. Ellis is getting rich every day, while his lordship is getting poor; and the poor devils of partition tenants, I mean, are sent about their business to beg, or starve, or die, as they please."

"Good God!" cried Willy Shea, "can this be true; Where is that Constitution that boasts of being the protection of the weak against the strong? The slave is fed and cared by his master, he is property; but the Irish slave cannot be bought or sold, therefore he has no value as property; it is true, he is the slave of circumstances, and his master is generally a tyrant that graches him. Why does not the law protect the weak?"

"Peoh! all nomens, young man; pooh! I fancy.
I know something about the law; don't I, Mr. O'Don-

"Certainly, Mr. Baker." A ALE ST.

"Yes, sir, I do Frank, hand over the decanter while water is hot. So I do know something about it; now, will you tell me who makes the laws? Don't the landlords? a pity they wouldn't make laws against themselves, ay, young man?"

they about? Mer representatives, sir; what are "Granted, granted my young friend; who are your representatives but your landlords or their nomineus; all a set of place-hunting schemers, who bambooxie the people and then laugh at them; no wonder, faith."

"God help the poer tenants," said Mr. O'Donnell; they are the worst off."
"To be sure, man to be sure; between the priests, and landlerds, and members, the poor are tessed about like a shuttle-cock."

Shea, "where men cannot live on the fruits of a soil so fertile—a soil literally teeming with milk and honey—a soil blessed by God but oursed by man. What have we gained by our modern civilization?—what by our connexion with England? Why, in the feudal times there was a kind of tie of clanship, and a rough, but social intercourse between the country gentlemen and their tenants, or retainers, that made them feel that they were bound by a kind of family bend; but now the tenants are not needed as a display or protection to the laudled;

ver the decanter something about akes the laws? wouldn't make man??

friend; who are ndlords or their g schemers, who ngh at them; no

d Mr. O'Donnell;

tween the priests,

eed," said Willy
she fruits of a soil
with milk and
oursed by man,
dorn civilination?
England? Why,
ad of the of clanarcourse between chants or retainwere bound by a a tenants are not

they are, therefore, retained or dismissed at his whim or option. Is it a wender, then, with so many and such wholesale evictions staring us in the face, that there should be agrarian discontent too often breaking forth in wild justice of self-defence or banded violence?

"That is, that they would murder us is it?" said Mr. Baker; for Mr. Baker always took care to identify himself with the higher class; though on account of his harmless blustering disposition he often, unconsciously, told bitter truths against them."

That they would murder us, is it? ay, the damned pa—hem, hal yes, they would if they could; but you see I don't care that about them," and Mr. Baker held up a small tenepoonful of punch for inspection, and then drank it off. "Not that, faith! Hand the decenter down, Frank, my boy; that will do. Why, you are taking nothing. I would recommend it to you; nothing like a good glass of punch to keep up the spirite; I could never have done all I did but for it."

"There is no danger, Mr. Baker, that any one will attack you, you have given them too many wholesome lessess to mind you now," said Kate raising her eyes from the book; and looking smilingly at Mr. Baker.

As I said before, or, as I should have said, if I did not say it, Mr. Baker was a great admirer of the fair ser and thought a heavy looking man, mover missed acknowledging a compliment from a lady, so he got up to make a bow, but in attempting to do so he upset his glass of punch, and walked on Fide. It happened that Fid and the cat were enjoying themselves most comfortably on the hearth-rug, so when Mr. Baker disturbed their tete-a-tete, Fid protested against it in sundry angry yelps. The Choke that dog! " said Mr. O'Donnell.

"Poor little Fid; come here, poor thing. Where are you hurt? There now, don't cry, and I'll oure you. Sure, he couldn't help it," said Bessy, and Bessy took Fid to neetle in her mamma's lap with he. Fid telt that he fell into kind hands, for he only whiled a little, and then laid his little cilky head to rest beside Bessy's the rest best best best with the Pm d. d. if I could, for I could not; see, I spile all the punch. I beg your pardon, Miss Kate."

"Don't mind, Mr. Baker, no harm done," and she wiped away the streaming liquid, and placed a clean glass for Mr. Baker.

"I think, Mr. Baker, you were going to tell as shout some fellows that attacked you, or something of that kind."

"Oh, yes; did I ever tell you, Mr. -?" and he nodded at Willy.

"Mr. Shea," suggested Willy.
"Well, Mr. Shea—devilish good name, too—where one adventure you were going to relate," said empting to do so lked on Fid... It enjoying themrth-rug, so when te, Fid protested

r thing. Where ary, and I'll cure said Beesy, and amma's lap with ind hands, for he him—Pm d—d pilt all the punch.

his little silky

m done," and she going to tell us

Mr. ___?" and

name, too where

ing to relate," said

"Oh, yes; you see, I was coming from Cashel one night, and I had a large sum of money about me. Just as I was coming by the grove I saw two men, and they slunk into the ditch as soon as they saw me. Begad, something struck me, so I out with my pistols. When I came up one of them jumped out and seized the reins Out with your arms and money, or you a are dead man,' he shouted; the other fellow was standing beside me with a gun presented. 'Here,' said I, putting my hand in, as if, for them, but before he had time to look about him I out with the pistol and blazed at him. He turned about like a top and fell deed. My horse jumped with the fright and that saved me, for the other fellow missed me with his shot; I turned at him, but he jumpe over the ditch. Just as he was going out I picked him behind." · 55.225

"That was well done," said Willy; "did you bury

"No, the d—d pa—, rassals, I mean, took him away; at least he was never got."

You had more adventures than that, though," by jove; but the villains are now so much afraid, they are shunning me. I suppose I shot about a dozen in all!

"A dosen! really the government ought to pendon

"So they ought, boy; so they ought; that's what I do be teiling Lord Clearall, for we are particular friends. Shove over the decenter; I hadn't a glass of punch this two hours."

Mr. Baker's measure of time must have been guided by no chronometer but his own, for the hand of Mr. O'Donnell's clock had not revolved over ten minutes since he had filled his last glass.

"I suppose you will not go home to night, Mr.

Baker," said Frank.

"Certainly, hoy, Certainly; why not ?"

"It is rather late and the roads are said not to be

"Ha, ha, ha I no fear of that; they know old Jack Baker too well for that; many a one of their skins I tickled."

"Won't you to afraid, Mr. Baker ?" said Kate.

" Afraid! ha, ha, ha, afraid-Jack Baker-afraid! by jove that is a good one ! I assure you, Miss Kate, it would not be well for a man that would tax Jack Baker, old as he is, with cowardice; ha, ha, ha, ha! Jack Baker afraid ! look at these bull dogs, Frank; need a man be afraid having them Pain they a state of

Frank took the pistols to the side table, and under pretence of examining them, he extracted the balls, no doubt with the charitable intention of preventing Mr. Baker from committing murder; he then went into the kitchen. While Frank was in the kitchen, Mr. O'Donnell was taking a dose, and Willy being engaged in a cosy chat with Kate and Mrs. O'Donnell, and Beery, and pues, and Fid, held a conve

e are particular I hadn't a glass

have been guided the hand of Mr. over ten minutes

ne to night, Mr.

not ?"

re said not to be

y know old Jack ne of their skins

r?" said Kate. k Baker—afraid l e you, Miss Kate, t would tax Jack e; ha, ha, ha, ha ! bull dogs, Frank;

table, and under tracted the balls, ion of preventing er; he then went in the kitchen. and Willy being

and Mrs. O'Doni, held a com

on the Sofa, so Mr. Baker thought the best thing he could do was to take a nap; and in order to make his doze comfortable, he first emptied his glass. Certain sonorous sounds emitted from Mr. Baker's nasal organs betokened plainly as words could that he was enjoying rather a heavy doze.

"Come, Bessy, child," said Mrs. O'Donnell, "let us leave Fid and puss now to sleep for themselves, and say your prayers.".

The pretty little thing knelt at her mother's knee and rested her closed hands upon her lap. As she finished her little prayers she naively asked-" Our Father, who art in heaven I' what does that mean, mamma? is it that God is our father ?

"Certainly, my dear child. He is the father of the fatherless, and he has called little children to him, for of such, he says, is the kingdom of heaven." Bessy was silent for some time, then she said;-

Mamma, is heaven a beautiful place ?" ... piere

Yes, my love; no words could paint its beauty, for ears have not heard, nor eyes seen, nor has it entered into the heart of man to conceive the glory of heaven." A do this will set so pany of the a time

" " Mamma, I would like to go to heaven; would you like me to go ?"

"Mrs. O'Donnell looked at that quiet, ethereallooking child, with her pale checks and bright eyes, and a pang of anguish struck her heart at these-words, and she thought what would she do if she lost her darling child, and a tear trickled and fell on Beesy's little hand.

"What alls you, mamma? sure you would not grudge me to go to heaven; if so, mamma, and if you'd be very sorry, I will pray to the good God not to take me, and I know as He is so good He will not refuse me."

"No, child, no ! do not; God will take you in His own wise time; but not now, Bessy; what darling would I do after you," and she pressed her to her bosom, & . It is a ser the grant of the Mar

Beesy remained silent for some time, and then looked up and said: - 1 . W Can , Mo Ch 2 1 . 1

"Mamma, are Richard and Ellen in heaven; but I know they are." A of the at 200 post of the ter 11 11

"They are, child."

"Why, then, do you be crying for them if they are so happy in such a beautiful place?"

"I don't know, pet; I feel lonesome after them, and yet I know they are with God."

"'Our Father who art in Heaven.' Oh, how good God is mamma, and how grand heaven is, when it is the kingdom of God's glory and of His angels and sainta ora arms are at a conce god a de to to

While this conversation was going on between Beesy and her mamma, and while Kate and Willy held an equally interesting conversation at the other side—a conversation which seemed to please them both very much, for they often smiled, and looked at each other and then at the book, for I am sure there was something very interesting in that book, to the recept of the and the religious of the state of th e you would not , mamma, and if to the good God is so good He will

Il take you in His sy; what darling ressed her to her time, and then

n in heaven; but

t, in

for them if they

some after them,

en.' Oh, how good heaven is, when it lof His angels and going on between e Kate and Willy sation at the other ed to please them smiled, and looked ook, for I am sure sting in that book, we will take a look into the kitchen to see what Frank was about.

A farmer of the wealthier class must have a large establish nent of servants in order to cultivate his farms and to collect in his crops. Besides the regular staff he generally hires additional hands, while cutting and saving his corn and hay, and digging his potatoes. Mr. O'Donnell had not all his potatoes dug as yet, and therefore was not able to dispense with his additional hands. When Frank went into the kitchen, most of the servants were collected around a large table playing cards. A few were sitting at the fire enjoying a comfortable shauachus with the house-maids.

"Arrah, sthop, James Cormsok, and don't be going on with your pellavering," said a roguish, funny-eyed damsel to a good-looking young fellow, that seemed to be making love to her by the process of tearing her as much as possible.

of teasing her as much as possible. "Sarra a haporth I'm doin' to you, Mary; you are only dramin', achorra."

"Well, athop now, and let us doze away; you know how early I was up to day, or faix if you don't, maybe it's the mishtress I will be calling down."

"You'd like it, indeed, Mary," said the other, with a most provoking look. Mary threw her arm carelessly over the back of the chair and leant her head upon it, and closed her two roguish eyes as if to sleep. James had a feather, with which he tickled her face and nose, which, of course, set her sneezing. James turned towards the table and asked, "how is the play going, boys ?"

"Och! only midding," said a fellow, who had just turned his hat inside out to bring him luck.
"Disi a haporth we are getting; Bill is winning all before him; some of the colleens must have sthuck a comb or needle in his clothes."

"I have the five," said another fellow, hitting a thump upon the table; "that's our game."

"Yo needn't laugh so," said Mary to the company at the fire, who were enjoying her bewilderment.

"Faith it is pleasant," said Shemus a Clough.
"Begor, Mary, if you were to see the purty faces
you were makin' you'd laugh yourseld, turning up your nose this way, just like the housen what hey'd get the scent."

Shemus cooked up his big nose, and made some ludicrous faces for Mary's special enlightenment. Mary didn't seem to know well whether she were better laugh or cry at Shemus' rude comparison; however, she compromised the thing by moving up from the fire and placing her apron to her face.

Ye think I didn't know who did it. That I may never sin, but if I were shure it was you that did it, James Cormack, I never would speak another word to you."

"blary, alanna, said James, "don't blame me, now; that's a good girl; shure I was looking at the card players." 5 Ph fellow, who had bring him luck. Bill is winning all just have sthuck fellow, hitting a game."

bewilderment.
hemus a Clough.
the purty faces
track turning up

e, and made some al enlightenment, whether she were rude comparison; ng by moving up on to her face.

as you that I may peak another word

"don't blame me,

"Git out; maybe I didn't see you," said Mary; giving him a slight kick with her little foot.

"Och, murther, Mary," said he subbing his leg, though the kick would have a sara a one way ou blackened my leg. do be as crass as that when you are married, Golden the man that gets you. Och, I am sure when you have a couple of childers, there will be no sthat day you."

"There is more of it," said Mary, the the little laugh she gave, and the elight results gleamed on her cheek, it was evident she was well pleased.

"Whisper, Mary," said James, after a page,
Mary held down her little head towards her little was the face game so near his, that he not resist the temptation of trying a kise. The lit was the kise or the whisper, I can't say, but hary blushed up and struck him a slap on the cheek that might frighten a fly, and then bounced here, yowing that "nobody could live near the schemer, at all at all."

James rubbed his face, exclaiming, "See now a body's thanks for telling a purty little girl the truth; and as for the kiss, upon my souckens, if we were in the dark, it is dozens of them she'd give me."

Sorra a one at all, though; and I hope you will never have the impudence to transcriber; shure it was only my hand you kissed."

"O never mind, I'll do better the next time."
"Arrah, maybe you'd thry; I'd advise you to look to your ears, then, James, and not be trying your combhether upon me. Shure maybe I didn't see you wid somebody at Mrs. Butler's last Sunday; talk that, now, James."

"Phew!" Upon my varacity, Mary, I am afered you are getting in a little fit of jellessy; ahure, sorra one was wid me but my own first cousin."

"He, I James; maybe I didn't know who was in think it shutable to be in consate wid Miss O'Brien, that's nothing to me," and Mary looked as if it were everything in life to her.

"Oh, wurrah, de hear that; there's no coming up to yet for girls; what differs there he betune the hearts an' tongues of some people, and the way they speaks behind other's backs; shure you know that Miss O'Brien is going to be married, and I was only wishing her joy. Faix I know a nice, plump little girl, wid two regulah eyes like two shinin' stars, that's not a hundred miles from me this minute, I'd rather than Miss O'Brien, or any other miss any day ov my life."

He looked at Mary with a soft, smiling kind of look that told as plainly as words—it's your own darling self I mean. Mary blushed again, and found something astray with her spron-string.

"Faith it's pleasant," said Shemus-a-Clough; "ye are like two that wud be courting, going on wid ye'r next time." d advise you to nd not be trying maybe I didn't ler's last Sunday;

Cottage.

fary, I am afered easy; shure, sorra cousin." of facer know who was in e in consate wid me," and Mary life to her. diaces

re's no coming up ere be betune the and the way they re you know that ed, and I was only nice, plump little two shinin' stars, ne this minute, I'd other miss any day ft, smiling kind of ds-it's your own d again, and found string.

ous-d-Clough; "ye going on wid ye'r droll ways; ay, my purty little Colleen, it's thrue in the safe will offer a sail for me." 35 4

This address of Shemus' created a roar of laugh-NEW THEORY SET OF SEE TO SEE MAN AND AND ASSESSED AS

"What will they do, Shemus?" said one of the · · Septel Arrail An party. "Faix, they knows themself; my purty Colleen here, with her roguish eyes; aye, alanna, may be ye won't do it." " of hole news, yes and an in wager the

While these amatory scenes were going on these the fire, the players were not idle either, for they enlivened their games with snatches, songs, sad stories; their leading spirit was Shaun the Rover.

"Mird your play there, and hould your whist, Shaun, will ye, bad's grant from you, why didn't you stick your king in there," said one of his partners, towards the end of the game. Masther Frank withing the jest know a many the joy and within title will river granish by a like two sim a street that's not a triviled table from my the innuter, I fither than Hiss. I lived, or any otherwise any oles Le my lift." L. 12

The first of the first of the first of the season of the s indications and states

The state of the s and I a sh is a prostant, " a on Sherque are and a shope The history and be conducted by the sale and

CHAPTER XI.

THE POSTER BROTHERS—MR. BAKER'S EXPLOITS.

FRANK found the party in the kitchen in the height of their enjoyment; the laugh, and jest, and voice of the players rose from the table, while high above the rest rose Shemus-a-Clough's voice chanting one of his hunting songs. Frank beheld all this from the hall, where he stood a moment to listen to the marry voices of the party.

"Poor souls!" thought he; "one would think that they never knew care nor sorrow, so gay and light-hearted are they. There are some of these poor fellows, now, under notice to quit their happy homes, and yet they can laugh and sing, as if they were secure from landlord power. How would I feel I were to be turned out of my fine house and place; and, who knows in this land of uncertainties! Good God! I fear I could not bear it so quietly. Yet it is hard to know them; there is within them a deep current of underfeeling; they could be gay and light-hearted as now, and in an hour again they could band together in the wild spirit of solf-revenge. High hol I pity the poor fellows if they should be turned out; and the Cormacks, my foster-brothem, the kitchen in the augh, and jest, and e table, while high ough's voice chantrank beheld all this moment to listen to

"one would think sorrow, so gay and are some of these to quit their happy and sing, as if they ver. How would I my fine house and and of uncertainties! bear it so quietly. here is within them they could be gay an hour again they spirit of solf-revenge, if they should be my foster-brothers, what would become of them, and of their poor mother, my old nurse, and their fair sister; well, they shan't want while I am :alive, anyway." So saying, Frank opened the door, and passed into the kitchen:

"Arrah! welcome, Misther Frank, welcome," was the exclamation that greeted him on his entrance.

"Thank you, boys, thank you, how are you?" said he, shaking hands with the brothers, James and John Cormsek.

It is necessary that we should give some account of the relationship, if I may so call it, that existed between Frank and the Cormacks. This might be inferred from Frank's solilogry at the door.

The tie of fostership is, or at least was, held as sacred as that of natural brothers. We have several instances of foster-brothers exposing, in fact losing their lives, in order to protect their wealthler rele-

In some work on '96 I have read a very feeling account of how s young insurgent gentleman was taken prisoner, and brought before the next magis-trage; of course his committal was at once made out, but, it being too late—it was, on account of the dis-turbed state of the country, and the small force at the magistrate's disposal—thought better to detain him closely guarded, until morning.

The prisoner recognized in the batter his foster-brother. The latter did not pretend to notice him.

"Alast thought he, as he stretched in his little prison, "I am forsaken by the world; come death I am ready for you!"

He heard singing and revelry going on through the house all night.

"These can laugh and be merry, while they hold revel over a poor wretch that is to die on the gallows," said he to himself. with the said said

At length the butler came in with something for him to eat. He looked at him water and a state

And have you too, brother, forsaken me?" said sitted let been

The other placed his fingers on his lips, in token of silence. Action - gold will part? as be-

Sthrip off smart," whispered he; "I have drugged their drink; the guards are all drunk or sleeping; put on my clothes, and act as butler; the halldoor is open, and pass out."

No," said the other; "it would endanger you; they might make a victim of you."

"Not at all, man; here, I have them off; what would they do with me; they will treat it as a good joke when you are gone. Come, off smart; on wid them; there is not a moment to be local."

They exchanged clothes, and as he passed out with the dishes, he wrung the brave fellows hand, exclaiming:

"God bless you! I'll reward you well."

"Pooh," said the other, "that will do, pass on now, and don't appear concerned."

He was challenged by the sentinel, and even by orld; come death I going on through

ry, while they hold to die on the gal-

with something for forsaken me?" said

n his lips, in token

he; "I have drugall drunk or sleepas butler; the hall-

ould endanger you;

weathern off; what ill treat it as a good of smart; on wid bedout! At your and the passed out with the fellows hand, ex-

you well."

entinel, and even by the party in the parlor; yet, he stood the test. As soon as the butler heard the half-door close after him, he breathed freely.

"Thank God! he is eafe! I might as well say my prayers now; for I know the men I have to deal with too well to expect mercy; no matter, he's saved!"

When the magistrate discovered the trick that had been played upon him, there was no end to his anger; he at once ordered the poor fellow to execution. When going to the gallows, the magistrate asked him—and Why did you do it?" of his magic mile will

"Sir," said he, "I am his foster-brother!"

His death did not pass unavenged; for, after some years, the young gentleman returned from the continant; he challenged the magistrate to a duel. They had selected a retired part, near a plantation. They took their positions on two mounds. The magistrate was shot through the breast. After falling, the young man walked over to him, and whispered into his ears—

"You resolves John Mahon, he was my lower-brother; his grave is now drinking your blood; you murdered him, you did; but he is ayenged. I have nursed my rengeance for years; I have practised until I could put a ball where I like; now, I have sweet revenge upon his murderer. And, if there be any one here," looking fercely around him, "that says he was not murdered, let him take your place, you dog."

Such was the affection existing between fosterbrother a Whether it is so fervid now or nos, I cannot say; perhaps, like a good many of our old Irish oustoms and habits, our very impulsive affections have given way to the cold, soulless philosophy, of English innovators.

This was the kind of relationship that existed between Frank and the Cormacks. The Cormacks held a small farm of about ten acres; they never worked for hire, as their little farm gave them sufficient employment; they helped Mr. O'Donnell during his busy season, for which they received more than an equivalent in various ways—such as a plough to till their garden, a present of a sow, a few lambs or pigs, as they wanted them With all O'Donnell's kindness, it is no wonder that the . Cormacks were what is called well to do in the world; besides, they were sober, industrious young Mr. 340. 8 mm. 17.

After some commonplace conversation with those in the kitchen, Frank remarked

"We have old Mr. Baker above half-drunk. He is as usual killing every one. I was thinking it would be a good joke if two of you would meet him when going home, and take his pistols and money from him; we would have such a good laugh at

"I and Neddy Burkem will go," said James Cor-

"Well, I don't care," said Burkem.

between fosternow or not, I canty of our old Iriah pulsive affections cas philosophy, of n that existed beThe Cormacks acres; they never rm gave them sufd Mr. O'Donnell ich they received is ways—such as a esent of a low, a sted them. With i wonder that the industrious young.

e half-drunk. He I was thinking it on would meet him pistols and money h a good laugh at restion with those

" said James Cor-

Jurkem. "But he does be so often at Mr. Ellis's that he might know me; esides he might fire."

"No danger of that," said Frank; "I have drawn the balls from his pistols; besides, he will be so much frightened I am sure he won't know any one."

"Let another of the boys go with you, James,"

"Burkem is afeerd. I'll go, Misther Frank," said

"Oh, divil afeerd," said Burkem; "but you know, if he should chance to know me, I was undone."

"A four year old child needn't be afcord of Slow Baker," said the Rover. "Did you ever hear when they did to him at Mr. Lanes!"

"Shure young Mr. Lane vexed him one night in til they got him up to fight a duel. Well becomes Mr. Lane, he loaded his pistol with blood, and put nothing but powder in Mr. Baker's. They fired acrass the table. When Baker saw himself all covered with blood, he kicked, and tumbled, and swore he was shot. Oh, Lane, asys he, 'you have me murthered. God have marey on me a poor sin ner.' They all laughed at him. 'Oh! laugh and be damn'd said he. 'You can easily laugh at a dead man,' 'Ha i ha! ha! You're not dead at all man,' said Mr. Lane; 'get up, man alive.' 'Dead as dead as a door sail, man; if I weren't, I'd have you shot for laughing at a poor devil you are after musthering.' 'Ha! ha! ha! Where do you feel the pain? 'Where do I feel the pain? Shure a man never feels pain after being shot until he's dead. Shure I am all covered wid blood-isn't that enuff? You kilt me; for you hadn't any ball in my pistol; for if you had you were shot.' 'No, nor in mine either; there was only blood in it.' Do you say so? Gog! maybe I'm not dead afther all.' 'Divil a dead. Get up to a glass of punch.' 'Well, well; did any one ever hear the likes! When I saw the blood I thought I was done for. Down wid the decanthur!' They then set him drunk, and rubbed his face with lamp-black; so they took him up to the drawing-room to dance wid the ladies. Shure if if they didn't laugh at him, naboeklish."

.0

The parlor bell was rung.

Run, Mary Cahill; and none of your sly ways there with James; and bring them up more water. I know that is what they want. And, Cormack, let you and another of the boys get two peeled cabbage stumps, and meet him at the gate. I'll go up to hurry him off." When Frank returned to the parior he found his father and Mr. Baker taking a parting glass.

"Come, Frank, boy, take a dock a durria."

"You don't mean to go home, Mr. Baker? it is rather late and not too safe to travel."

"Safe! boy, safe! That's what makes me go, to show you and the damned pa—, robbers, I mean, that I'm not afraid; order my horse, Frank, order

? Shure a man until he's dead. -isn't that enuff? ball in my pistol; 'No, nor in mine Do you say so? her all.' Divil a ch.' 'Well, well; When I saw the Down wid the dedrunk, and rubbed took him up to the ladies. Shure if of your sly ways em up more water. And, Cormack, let two peeled cabbage ate. I'll go up to oklish."

parlor he found his oarting glass.
och a durris."
oc, Mr. Baker? it is ravel."

hat makes me go, to , robbers, I mean, horse, Frank, order

"Mary," said Frank to Mary Cahill, who had brought in the hot water, "Mary, tell one of the boys to bring out Mr. Baker's horse.

"Yes, air."

As Mr. Baker rode from the house he held the following bit of conversation with himself.

I think I was a deupe of a fool, an ass, to say the least of it, to leave to-night; but then they'd say I was afraid; ay, afraid, and that wouldn't do, Mr. Baker. Afraid ! who said I was afraid; who dare say it, I want to know? God protect me! what the devil is that though?. Oh! only an ass-ha! out of my way. Well, if I meet any fellows will I shoot them? Sure they'd shoot me, but then I'd be a deuce of a fool to lose my life on account of two pistols and a few pounds. No, I am at the gate new, I me than ?" said Man BE-I

"Deliver your arms and money or you're a dead man !" was shouted from behind the piers, and two wicked looking things, guns no doubt, looked out at him as if they would take great pleasure in oracleing at him.

"Ye-ye-yes I gentlemen, fo-fo-for the love of God, don't shoot me! here they are," and he handed out his pistols and money than it decizow .

"Ride back again now." I seed not like to a see "Ye-ye-yes! gentlemen; Lord spare your lives for sparing me."

Mr. Baker thundered up to the hall door, and knocked flexuely; Frank made his appearance

"O, Frank, Frank, for the love of God, hurry! Call out the men! I was robbed; about twenty men attacked me. I shot two, anyway; I think three; two for certain; then they overpowered me, but I made my escape from the damned pa-, robbers, I mean, robbers, Frank, robbers. There are four shot, anyway; four of the bloody pa-robbers, I mean. The government will hear all this in the morning. I will have them taken like the bloody pa-, robbers, I mean, I shot coming from Cashel."

Right, Mr. Baker," said Frank, "I am sure you will get a pension; come in, anyway; you won't go home to-night, now?"

"No, Frank; no, boy."

"Come in, sir."

"What the devil are these?" said Mr. Baker, as he saw his purse and pistols on the parlor table.

"I think you ought to know them," said Frank. "Ha, ha, ha, two of the boys got cabbage stumps, it appears, and robbed you, ha! ha! ha!"

Gog! I have my purse and pistols anyway; you think I didn't know them Frank, right well; a good joke, by Jove; ha! ha! ha! I'd like to shoot your servants, wouldn't I; catch me at that, boy; ha! ha! ha! well for them it wasn't any one else was in it; hal hal hal here, get up the decenter, and some hot water; ring the bell Frank

Mary Cahill made her appearance. "More hot water, Mary," said Frank. of God, hurry ! i; about twenty myway; I think overpowered me, damned parobbers. There e bloody paent will hear all them taken like n, I shot coming

"I'am sure you ay; you won't go said Mr. Baker, as e parlor table. them," said Frank. in I ha !" in - west stols anyway; you right well; a good like to shoot your at that, boy; ha! any one else was in decanter, and some

"See, Mary, try is there any cold meat for a snack," said Mr. Baker. "Ha! ha! ha! faith, it was a good joke. Give me the hand, Frank, they may thank being your servants for having whole skins, that's a good girl, Mary; is that hot? it is; now; Mary, what about the meat?"

"I fear there is none done, sir."

"No matter, get a chop-devilish fine muttons Nothing makes a man drink but to eat enough, 'eat, drink, and be merry,' as his lordship says; you know, Frank, we are particular friends."

Perhaps we have devoted too much of our space to Mr. Baker; moreover, as he belonged to a class, now nearly, if not altogether, extinct. Many of my readers, will, no doubt, feel surprised that the craft of his profession did not, like magio tricks, change his very nature, and make something of him; all I can say to this is, that he was not fit for his profession, nor his profession for him.

Like most, I might say nearly all, of my characters, Mr. Baker is no ideal being, created to heighten the plot; no, I give him in proprie persona.

I think, Kate," said Frank, at the breakfast table next morning, "as we had some rain last night, we must give up our little ple-nic to Glenbower!"
"I feer so," said Kate, looking disappointed.

"I will tell you what we will do; Willy and I will go shooting until dinner-time, and then we will append the recall of in the auratics being "Very well," said Kate."

430

So Frank and Willy set out, with their dogs and guns. Attack and and take the medical and large "a medical and lar

"I must pass by Ballybruff, to see my poor nurse, Willy," said Frank, and sunners many good door it

Mrs. Cormack's house was a nice clean one. It was surrounded with larch and poplar trees. The walls were rough east, and three real glass windows gave light and air to the interior. The yard was gravelled, and free from sink holes, or any nuisance of the kind. Nelly Cormack was very busy in the yard; feeding a whole regiment of poultry, that clattered and cacled about her.

"Good morning, Mary," said Frank; "old nurse doesn't see me yet, she is so busy at her stocking. How are you?" said he, coming up, and blocking up the door near her. Mrs. Cormack raised her head, and pulled her specks over her nose:

"Arrah! is this Misther Frank?"

"It is, ma'am; and this is my young friend, Mr. Sheat" you to the viscous you higher a better older.

Mary, get thim chairs, and the state of the state of Mary dusted two suggaven-bottomed chairs, and placed them near the fire. Willy cast his eyes about the clean, tidy kitchen, with its rows of time, and plates, and noggins, all as bright and clean as sand could make them.

Cormack," said Willy, are add of makes would have

"It is, indeed, sir," said she; "but what good is their dogs and the frists " Everny my poor nurse, by pindle for i clean one. It lar trees. The l glass windows The yard was or any nuisance ery busy in the ultry, that clatlow market

nk; "old nurse t her stocking. p, and blocking ack raised her nose:

ung friend, Mr.

ducto only I wn, gintlemen;

med chairs, and st his eyes about ws of tine, and d clean as sand e Hotellind the

you have, Mrs. lands of the seems it what good is that; shure we are sarved wid an ejectment," and Mrs. Cormack sighed, and wiped her eyes.

"Do you owe much rent?" said he.

"Only a year's and I have it all barrin three pounds; but what good is that; I fear they won't take it; it is said that they mean to throwns all out, for to make large farms, as they did to the Croghlawn tenants."

"I hope not," said Frank; "they cannot be so oruel as that, to toss out a poor widow, that pays her rent,"

"I hope not, sir, I hope not; but they have done as bad. If they were to throw me out I would not live long; mavrone, it would be the heart-break, where my father and mother, and my poor man all died, if I don't be allowed to close my eyes there."

Mrs. Cormack wiped her eyes, for a mournful tear rose from the heart to them, and from them along her withered cheeks.

"Oh! offer them the rent nurse," said Frank; "I will see if I can do anything for you; they cannot refuse it.

"I will, alanns, as soon as we sell the slip of a pig, to make up the three pounds, and may God soften their hearts to take it."

"Don't sell your pig, Mrs. Cormsok," said Frank;
"I will be your oreditor, until you get ricker," and he placed three pours in her lap.

"I won't take it, Misther Frank; it is too good you are."

"No, now, you must keep it; it is my Christmas present to my old nurse; and God knows, Mrs. Cormack, I would not have a happy Christmas if you were disturbed."

"God bless you! Misther Frank; it's you have the good heart; God will reward you, Frank, for happy are they who feel for the widow and the orphau."

"Well, Mary," said Frank, in order to change the conversation, "I hope you don't be courting the boys yet."

"A little, sir," said Mary, looking most coquettishly at Frank, and then tossing back her hair with a shake of her head.

Mary was evidently a coquette; it was in the sparkle of her eye, it was in the toss of her head, it was in her pretty dimpled face, it was in every braid of her auburn hair.

"I fear, Mary, you are a coquette; take care that you don't burn your wings like the moth," said

Frank.

"Ol sorra fear of that, Misther Frank; I only poy back the boys wid their own coin; they think, wid their palavering, they have nothing to do but coax poor innocent colleens; faith, they'll have two dishes to wash wid me, I am thinkin'."

"Take care, Mary, take care; we are often caught when we least expect it; it is time for us to go now, Willy; good-bye, Mary, and take care of the boys," said Frank, extending his hand with a smile to her, "and you, nurse, good-bye."

t is my Christmas i knows, Mrs. Cor-Christmas if you

t; it's you have the t, Frank, for happy and the orphau." order to change n't be courting the king most coquetng back her hair

tte; it was in the toss of her head, it t was in every braid

oquette; take care like the moth," said

r Frank; I only proy in; they think, wid ing to do but coax by'll have two dishes

we are often caught ne for us to go now, se care of the boys," with a smile to her, "Take care, yourself," said Mary, with a sly wink at him. "I don't know is it devotion takes you to see your uncle so often; ha! ha! take that."

Frank blushed up.

"Ha! Mary, you are too many for me, I see."

"Don't mind that helther-skelther, Misther Frank," said Mrs. Cormack.

"I believe you are right, ma'am," said Frank, "so

"Good-day, and God bless yel" replied Mrs. Cor-

"Go to Clerihan on Sunday; there does be some one in a front pew there, looking out for Misther Frank," said Mary.

"She is a pretty girl, Frank, and can banter well," said Willy.

"She is," said Frank, with a sigh.

"I think there were some grains of truth in her bantering though," said Willy with a smile; "at least, Frank, you got very red in a minute."

"Hem! maybe so," said Frank; "I didn't turn poet yet though, Willy, and begin to make songs, and call her 'Cathleen dear.'"

It was. Willy's turn now to blush.

"Oh! don't change colors that way, man," said Frank; "you see we both have our secrets; and, Willy, my dear fellow," said Frank taking him by the hand, "if I have judged your secret rightly, I will respect it, and be your friend, too."

God bless you! Frank, God bless you! it is just like your noble, generous nature. I see there is no use or need to conceal it from you. I love her dearly, Frank; the has been an angel to me; she has rescued me from the grave; she " , qr lesigned duril

"That will do now, Willy; we all think the woman we love an angel, at least until we get married; but married men say that there are no such things as human angels at all, and they ought to know best; but she is a noble girl no doubt, Willy. Get on as well as you can, my dear fellow, and you will find a firm friend in me," and he squeezed the student's hand in his transport to an algorithm to

When must you return, Willy ?" said Frank. Ment Line Francis

"To-morrow!"

"To-morrow! Will you promise to spend the Christmas with us? I will then introduce you to my lady-love." on the distribution of the state of the state

"I shall test most happy, Frank," and meeting with but little game Frank stopped:

"I will you all he I must pay a visit of charity to a poor widow here below. Hate teld me that she is very ill, and as her poor children must be badly off, I will just call and see them."

"Why, Frank, will you not allow me to act the good Samaritan too?"
"As you please; here is the cabin below.".

There was nothing possilar about Nelly Sallivan's cabin; it was like Irish cabins in general, low, smoky, and badly ventilated. Small bundles of

I see there is no I love her dearly, she has resoued il think the woil we get married; re no such things ought to know bubt, Willy. Get low, and you will aqueezed the stu-

1" mid Franks

introduce you to

k nair stalls for a

y a visit of charity at visit of charity and told me that she wan must be badly

lew me to act the about Nelly Sullitins in general, low, Small bundles of straw, stuffed into holes in the wall, answered the double purpose of keeping out the air, and keeping in the smoke; or rather, as Nelly herself said, "of keeping the cabin warm."

"There is some one inside, Frank; I hear them speaking," said Willy, as they reached the door.
"We'll shortly see, Willy."

They had to stoop to anter the low doorway. In one corner, upon a bed of straw, lay the invalid, Nelly Sullivan; beside her, with her fe wish hand in hers, sat Kate O'Donnell. Three or four wretched children were collected around some bread and broken meat, near the fire; beside Kate was a basket, in which she had brought some nourishment for the sick woman and her wretched orphans.

"Ha! Kate, is this you? So you have forestalled me," said Frank.

Kate looked up and blushed; for true charity, like true picty, seeks no other applause than the consciousness of having done right.

"It is she, Misther Frank Lord bless her! only for her I was dead long ago."

"Geod bye, Nelly, I must go; I will call tomorrow," and she rose to depart.

"Can I do mything for you?" said Frank.

"Could you bring her the doctor, Frank?" said

"Certainly, I will have him come at once; poor woman, you should not be so long without him; take this now," and he slipped a piece of silver into

Willy remained after them, and gave his mite to the widow.

"Don't tell any one," said he, as he went out.

"I think, Willy," said Frank, as the latter came up, "I will go over by the glen; there ought to be some game in it; you can see Kate home."

"With pleasure," said Willy, "and I wish you success."

"Oh, as successful as yourself, boy, I expect," said he with a careless air, and whistling to his dogs, stepped over the ditch.

Kate and Willy walked on in silence for some

"Kate," said he, "isn't there a great deal of misery in the world."

"Yes, Willy; the poor are afflicted sorely here; their reward, indeed, must be great hereafter."

"To feed the hungry is one of the works of mercy, and our Saviour says, what we give to these poor forlorn outcasts, we give to Himself."

"It's true, Willy, 'Charity covers a multitude of

"And shows the true Christian, Kate; why, love, if you were adorned with precious stones and jewels, you would not appear so charming to me as you did beside that wretched bed."

Kate blushed

"I have only done my duty, Willy. God does

Cottage."

gave his mite to

s he went out.

the latter came there ought to be home."

boy, I expect,"

silence for some

e a great deal of licted sorely here; eat hereafter."

at we give to these Himself."

ers a multitude of n, Kate; why, love, recious stones and charming to me as d."

Willy. God does not give us riches to close our hearts upon them; no, Willy, but to relieve His little ones."

"There would be less misery here, Kate, if we had fewer proud Pharisees, who wallow in the luxuries of wealth, and forget that the poor are their brothers."

"God help them! I fear they will have a black account to settle,"

"I fear so too, Kate."

"Kate," said Willy, and he took her hand in his.

"What, Willy?"

"Frank knows our love."

Kate blushed and held down her head.

"You needn't feel so, Kate, love; he promises to be our friend."

Kate brightened up.

"Does he? Frank, noble, generous brother! but how did he know it?"

"I think he heard me singing the song in the bower yesterday evening; besides, Kate, he has, I know, some love secrets of his own, and the heart that once loves sees its workings in another as if by intuition."

When they reached home Frank was before them, and dinner ready. After dinner they retired to the garden. The drizzling rain had ceased, and the heavy clouds had passed away, leaving the evening fine and calm. The garden was behind the house; a French window opened from a small parlour into it. The little garden was tastefully arranged, and nicely interspersed with gravel walks bordered with box, sweet-william, forget-me-not, bachelors buttons, and the like. In a corner was a small summer-house, made of young larch trees, out into various shapes; beside it was a little rivulet, over which was built a rockery of curious and grotesque stones, honey-suckles, aweet-brier, rose trees, and other parasitical plants and shrubs. There was a rustic seat around the interior; here they agreed to have tea. With light hearts and smiling faces; our party sat down to their delicious beverage, sweetened by the perfume of the aromatic shrubs, plants, and flowers that yet remained as if loth to fade away, and above all, by contentment-that inward balm, that sweetens the humble fare of the peasant, and often makes it more delicious than the sumptnous dishes of the peer.

Beasy strayed about the garden to pick the few flowers that were, like the last rose of summer, "left blooming alone." She then after presenting a hournest to Kate, gave another to Frank and Willy.

bonquet to Kate, gave another to Frank and Willy.

"Thank you, Beasy," said Willy; "these flowers are like yourself, the emblem of innocence and purity."

"You're fond of flowers then, Willy," said Kate.

"Oh, yes, Kate; there is a dassling joy about flowers that thrill through us like loving words; they speak to the heart of man. Look at a nest parterrs when in bloom; how beautiful, how gorgeous they look. I re they not a type of all that is alks bordered with t, bachelors' butvas a small sumn trees, cut into ittle rivulet, over ious and grotesque

r, rose trees, and
ba. There was a ere they agreed to nd smiling faces;
lelicious beverage,
aromatic shrubs,
ined as if loth to contentment—that numble fare of the delicious than the n to pick the few t rose of summer, a after presenting a o Frank and Willy. lly; "sheet flowers of innocence and

Willy," said Kate. lassling joy about ike loving words; a. Look at a neat autiful, how gorgetype of all that is grand and fair? God has made them the purest language of nature—they speak to the soul. The Persian revels in their perfume, and woos his mistress in their language. He tells his tale of love in a rose-bud or pansy. Thus he speaks to her of his hopes and fears. They deck the marriage couch and the bridal feast; they crown the youthful bride, and twine her brow; they strew the warrior's path—a nation's mute but grateful tribute; they garland the lonely tomb, as a symbol of the decay of life; they festoon the altar, mingling their odor with the soft incease that ascends in grateful worship to the Most High—such are flowers."

"Yes, indeed," said Kate, "flowers are beautiful; they are nature's own painting; a skilful artist may paint them to some perfection, and heighten their gaudy colors, still, they want the fragrance, the perfume, the reality of nature. Can the pencil of a Rubens or an Angelo paint the rainbow, or take off the varying colors of the sky? As well might they attempt to give its true and natural life to a rose."

"Are you as fond of music as of flowers, Willy!" said Kate, after a moment's silence.

"I cannot say I am; will I love music very much; though I must say, I have not a very fine car for it; still, I love its sweet sounds and soft influence over the senses; I always like the soft and melaucholy; I believe it is more in accordance with my own temperament."

"As for me," said Kate, "I think I could not live without music; when I feel heavy or lonely, or when anything displeases me, I play a few lively tunes, sing a few songs, and in a moment I forget that the world has either care or sorrow. I am, as Richard says, 'myself again.' But come, I think the genins of melancholy is stealing over us; get your flute, Willy, and Frank, your clarionet, and let us set up a perfect oratorio. Come now, I will sing with you."

The soft notes of the lute, the sweet, low, impassioned voice, the still silence around, gave it something of the air of those fabled bowers into which Sylvian nymphs decoy mortals. The evening was beginning to get chilly, and a low, fitful breeze was moaning among the trees.

"I think," said Frank, as he looked at little Bessy nestling under his coat, "the evening is chill; we have better go in."

"I think so, too," said Kate.

n Cottage. .

chink I could not neavy or lonely, or play a few lively a moment I forget sorrow. I am, as out come, I think ling over us; get our clarionet, and Come now, I will sweet, low, impasand, gave it fomebowers into which The evening was w, fitful breeze was ooked at little Bessy evening is chill; we

The state of the state of

CHAPTER XII.

SOME ACCOUNT OF MR. RLLIS—AN IRISH AGENT.

Ir must be recollected that we are writing of a state of things that existed before the famine years. We are, so far, painting the peasantry in their gay, light-hearted, holiday enjoyment. Even then there were oruel, heartless task-masters, like Mr. Ellis, who hardened the hearts of the landlords, and pointed with the finger of scorn at the poor straggling farmhouses and cabins of the tenantry, and then with an air of triumph pointed out his own comfortable house and offices, his well-tilled, wellsheltered fields, his trim hedges, his model farm, as much as to say, see what industry, skill, and perseverance can do. Who would be looking at such wretched hovels, such abject misery as we see around us, when he could delight his eyes with indications of taste and luxury? Who would tolerate such a lazy, indolent people to incumber the soil?-people on whom precept and example are lost-people who will not be taught, but persist in their own barbarous, ignorant ways. He did not tell the landlord that he had a long lesse of his holdings at a moderate rent, and therefore felt secure in his outlay; he did not tell the landlord that these poor tenants

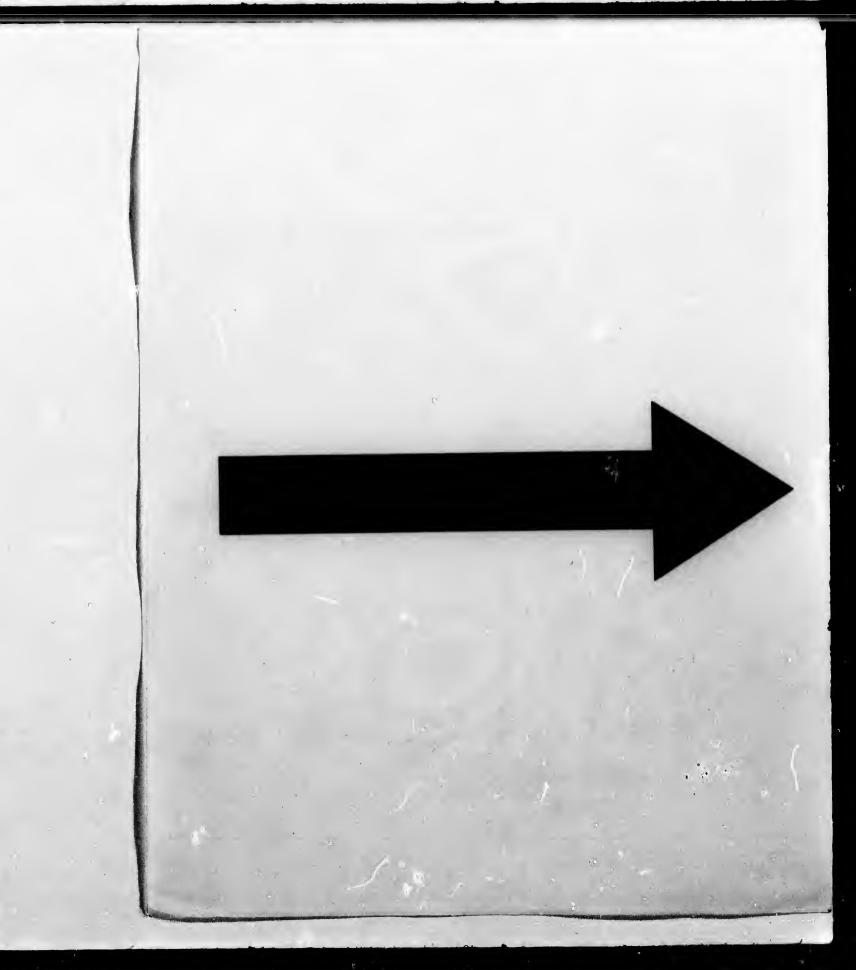

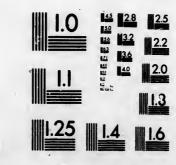

IMAGE EVALUATION TEST TARGET (MT-3)

Photographic Sciences Corporation

23 WEST MAIN STREET WEBSTER, N.Y. 14580 (716) 872-4503

CIHM/ICMH Microfiche Series. CIHM/ICMH Collection de microfiches.

Canadian Institute for Historical Microreproductions / Institut canadian de microreproductions historiques

01981

had neither lease nor protection; that they were living merely in a state of sufferance; that if they built houses or improved the land, they should pay an increased rent; that by his attful contrivances, notices to quit, and the daily fear of eviction and the like, he has damped their energies, and made toil without a prospect of gain hopeless; and that he has made them bend their necks to their servile state with apathy and indifference. The tenants must then naturally regard the landlord as a cold, unfeeling tyrant, incapable of pity or remorse, whose sole object is to crush and grind them down, until chance gives him an opportunity of exterminating

As I said before, I have, up to this, been describing a state of things existing previous to the famine years. The population had increased in rapid proportion. This was owing to the great facility there existed of procuring the necessaries of life. Parents felt no uneasiness about the support of their off-spring when food was so easily procured. The potato was the manna of heaven to the Irish peasant; it supported him in ease and plenty at least.

the desired and the control of the c

The potato grew almost spontaneously; it great luxuriantly, placing abundance within the reach of the poorest; their moderate wants were amply astisfied. A peasant and his family, collected around a dish of mealy potatoes—if they had the addition of a sup of milk—felt that they were happy in their frugal enjoyment.

ge.

een describothe famine a rapid proacility there fe. Parents of their offcured. The a Irish peasy at least.

the reach of amply estimated around a a addition of oppy in their They then clung too closely to the land of their fathers, the land of their hope and love, to seek wealth or distinctions elsewhere.

The Indian does not leave his hunting ground or the bones of his fathers with more reluctance than does the Irish peacant his humble cabin, and the grave-yard, where rest the bones of those he holds dear. He will suffer persecutions in order to cling to the green fields of his youth, to the home of his affections. There was a charm for him besides in the light rollicaome humos, the merry dance and play, the kind and social intercourse that characterize our peacantry.

The famine came and changed all this. The heartless indifference, the experimental philosophy of the English Government, the cruel, unchristian conduct of Irish landlords, in laying waste the country, in levelling the poor man's cabin, and sending him and his family to a pauper's grave, have wonderfully changed this state of things.

It is true, that in the autumn of 45, the time of which I am now writing, there was a partial blight of the potato crop; and as all other crops were luxuriant, the people did not bring home to their minds the dreadful chances of famine arising from a more general failure.

general failure.

It is time that we say something about Mr. Ellis.

Beyond the few hints thrown out already concerning him, there is little to rell our readers.

He was a Scotchman, and had some over some twenty years before as a steward and agriculturist to the late Lord Clearall. With the canny foresight of his race, he improved his position, until he was able to lend large sums to the young lord, whose traveling and expensive habits forced him to make frequent calls on Mr. Ellis's purse. After the death of his father, young Lord Clearall settled on his fine property, and was guided in its management by the sagacious Mr. Ellis. On account of the large sums he had advanced, Mr. Ellis came in for farm after farm, agency after agency, until the exclusive management of the property remained in his hands. Mr. Ellis had his own ends in view; he was a deep thinker, and for near twenty years his heart was set on becoming proprietor of at least a part of the estate. All his plots, all his schemes, had this grand object in view. He impressed the landlord with the benefit of improvement, for improvement with him meant eviction first, and then to enrich himself and his friends upon the spoil. He drew the attention of the landlord to his house and farms; nothing , could be better managed, nothing could be neater; then he pointed out the rudely-tilled fields of the tenants, whose weedy corn was evidence of their laziness and improvidence. Thus did he school up the landlord with the spirit of improvement, until farm after farm, estate after estate, were cleared off their hard-working, but oppressed tenantry, and then handed over to Mr. Ellie's reforming care. When this was done, Mr. Ellis was sure to recommend some agriculturist

anny foresight
to until he was g lord, whose d him to make
After the death settled on his sanagement by at of the large
me in for farm
if the exclusive
ad in his hands.
he was a deep
is heart was set a part of the
had this grand

he was a deep is heart was set a part of the had this grand undlord with the ement with him ich himself and w the attention farms; nothing sould be neater; and fields of the vidence of their line school up the ment, until farm cleared off their

antry, and then

ng care. When

of his Scotch friends as tenants. The landlord took this very kindly of him, thinking that he was, in his zeal for his service, providing for him industrious, enterprising tenants.

It is true that large sums had been expended on the improvement of the land and in building houses, and after all, the so-called lazy Irish were paying as high, if not a higher rent, but then, there was such an appearance of neatness and improvement about the estate. Had Lord Clearall but given leases, or afforded protection to the old tenants, he need not expend these large sums that were sinking him in debt; his property would be well managed, and he would have raised about him a grateful and happy tenantry. Lord Clearall did not know that Mr. Ellis had got large sums from his Scotch friends for his kind offices in their behalf. Thus is the spirit of the people broken down, and their hearts demoralized by a system of cruelty and oppression peculiar to unfortunate Ireland, -- a system which has poisoned the deeply reflective and imaginative minds of our peasantry, and has perverted their gay, light hearts, sparkling with wit and humor, into morose sullen spirits, thirsting for vengeance upon their oppressors

It is better that we should let the reader see the subtle machinery used for regenerating the unfortunate tenantry.

Whether tenant right has altered this cause of things in Ireland we are not aware, but to judge from the management of the and agrarian orimes still perpetrated there, we have had

The Lodge, as Mr. Ellis's residence was called, was situated about two miles from Mr. O'Donnell's. It was formerly the residence of some unfortunate farmer; it was repaired and ornamented, and some new wings built to it by its present occupier. It was converted into a very tastylooking residence outside, and a very comfortable one within doors. It commanded an extensive view of a broad, fertile valley, thickly dotted with trees, with their green foliage waving in the breeze. Al out a mile further down the glen, seated on a rising ground, stood the proud revidence of Lord Clearall, or, as it was styled, the Castle. This, with its surrounding groves of shady trees, added to the picturesqueness of the view from the lodge. Behind the cottage was an extensive range of farm-houses, and a large haggard of hay and corn, well thatched and secured. (Care and wealth marked everything, from the tasty dwelling, down to the humblest shed. If, without all were gay and well cared, within the appearance was not less pleasing. The large flagged kitchen, was well lit with a huge peat fire, and well stored with tine, pans, pots, and all the accessories of kitchen use, not forgetting several flitches of bacon, that hung from the ceiling. A hall, with stone steps reaching it from the outside, ran through the centre of the house. Off this hall branched a drawing room and parlor. At the end of the ttage. e was called, . O'Donnell's. ome unfortuornamented, y its present very tastyvery comfor anded an exalley thickly foliage wavfurther down nd, stood the or, as it was surrounding he picturesque

f farm-houses, nd corn, well 6 down to the vere gay and was not less hon, was well ell stored with ories of kitchen of becon, that with stone steps all branched a e end of the hall, with a passage leading to it from the kitchen, was an office, where Mr. Ellis transacted his business with the tenants and servants. As we have no business there for the present, we will just walk into the parlor, it was a waite

This was a comfortable room, covered with a Brussels carpet. H Its furniture consisted of an elegant oval table in the centre of the floor, two lounges, some easy chairs, a side-board, and a piano. A large gilt mirror was suspended over the chimney-piece; whilst on the latter were placed a few pretty vases filled with flowers and some rare china ornaments. In an armchair, to the right of the blasing coal fire, sat Mr. Ellis He was a man of about fifty years of age. His dark hair was streaked with grey, and deep lines of eare, that betokened his plotting nature, ran across his forehead. He was of middle size, and spars in flesh. His eyes were grey and penetrating. His lips were compressed about the angles of the mouth. On the whole, there was an expression of deep cunning and acuteness in every feature of his rather sinister-looking face. His dress was of the costume of the present day, to wit, a frock cost, tweed promers and west. At the other side of the fire, deeply engaged with some papers, sat a young man of about twenty-five. He bore evident likeness to the other. This was Hugh Pembert, nephew to Mr. Ellis,

There was a cunningness about the small grey eye, about his narrow wrinkled brow, and coarse, sensual-looking face, that made you feel not at ease in his company. He pored over his papers with a certain air of half assurance and uneasy diffidence, that ill became one so nearly related to Mr. Ellis. At the and of the table, with her head resting on her left hand, sat a young girl reading a book that lay open before her. She was about eighteen; her figure, of middle size, was gracefully moulded. Her face was rather long and fair. So delicate did she appear, that you might easily see the net-work of blue veins that traversed her forehead and hands. There was in her countenance, though, something of a dreamy listleseness, that gave her an air of childish dependence. Such was Lissy Ellis, the daughter and only ohild of Mr. Ellis. There was nothing of the orafty ounningness of the father about her; she must have inherited her pale face and gentle, unassuming manner from her mother. Lizzy was alone, her mother had died a few years before, and as she had no society, for her father was seldom at home, she spent her time reading novels and religious tracts without due regard to their merits. Perhaps to this excessive, and I must say, unnatural study for one so young and susceptible, was owing her inactive listlessness of character.

small grey and coarse, feel not at r his papers and uneasy arly related ble, with her young girl re her. She middle size, was rather appear, that lue veins that There was ething of a an air of say Ellis, the Ellis. There gness of the nherited her manner from mother had he had no soat home, she eligious tracts

Perhaps to anatural study was owing "Well, Hugh, my boy," said Mr. Ellis "have you made it out yet?"

"Na, sir," sald Hugh; for Hugh being but a few years from Scotland had not yet got rid of its dislect.

"Well, then, let them alone until to-morrow; we will have a glass of punch, for I have good news-ring the bell, Hugh."

Hugh did so, and a servant shortly made her appearance.

"Get some hot water and spirits," said Mr. Ellis. "I must tell you, Hugh," said he when the servant disappeared, "that his lordship has ap-pointed me agent over the Ballybrack property."

"Na, indeed," said Hugh: that is muckle kind of his lardship."

The servant had now laid the glasses and de-canters. "That will do; you may go," said Mr. Ellis. "Come Hugh, lad, fill a glass and let us drink a health to his lordship."

"With muckle pleasure," said Hugh; and they emptled their glasses to the toast.

"How long do you think am I living with his lordship?"

"Five years, I ken," said Hugh; "counting from the death of the precent lard's father."

"No, no, that's not what I mean. How long am I in this county altogether?"

"I dinna ken, I'm sure," said Hugh.
"Let me see — " and Mr. Ellis leant back in his chair in a state of deep reflection; "yes, that's it ! exactly twenty-five years next March, Hugh. 'I had three pounds in my pocket when I commenced as steward under his lordship. I am now worth, in cash alone, Hugh, about ten thousand, which is in his lordship's hands, so you see I got on well, and Lizzy here," said he, looking at his daughter, " will have a nice fortune." and dord int s. will ad

. "Ay, indeed, sir," said Hugh; "land and stock and all will make a pretty penny for a braw little lacey as Micey is north serve west west booking was I

"You are right, Hugh, you are right; of course she'll have all-and I think that his lordship will make over the fee-simple of this house and land on me shortly for a handsome consideration."

Lissy looked up from her book and smiled at her papa. Hugh knit his dark brows, and a frown clouded his face, and he muttered to himself, "she will na have all if I can prevent her. 34d ork

"You must give notice to the Ballybruff tenants to come over in a few days, say Wednesday next," said Mr. Ellis, felle , once

"I dinna ken the use, sir," said Hugh, submissively; "ain't they noticed?"

"They are, they are," said Mr. Ellis; "but when they come over, they will think it is to get a settlement, so they will bring what money they can; and as there is a year's running gale, which answers a year's rent, we can put them out after"yes, that's h, Hugh. 'I' commenced now worth, and, which is got on well, its daughter,

d and stock a braw little ht; of course lordship will se and land evation." d smiled at , and a frown himself, "she bruff tenants nesday next,"

lagh, submis

to; "but when to get a setoney they can; e, which anum out afterHugh smiled the smile of a demon.

"Let us soak them as dry as a sponge before we throw them away."

"What of the Ballybrack tenants?" said Hugh.

"They are safe just now, safe just now; they have leases, but they will be up in a few years, and then let them look to themselves; you may be living in that cosy nest of the O'Donnell's yet, Hugh."

Hugh gave a grim smile of satisfaction, and

Hugh gave a grim smile of satusfaction, and Lizzy raised her heavy eyes from the book and said:

"Papa, isn't it wrong to turn people out of their houses; now the O'Donnella are good kind people; isn't it's pity to turn them out?"

"No, child; the people are lasy and indolent, and it is better for them to be earning their day's hire, or to go to some foreign country, where they can live better than here, than be spoiling the land. Look at the difference of my farm here, that was all waste when I got it, full of furse, gardens, and useless fences, that the wretched tenants had made. It was then as had as any of the places you see around; lack at it now, pet."

"I see, papa; it is a beautiful place, indeed; but sure the O'Donnells have a nice place, and you

"I see, papa; it is a security place, indeed; but sure the O'Donnells have a nice place, and you need not turn turn out; besides, papa, it must be a terrible thing to be turned out of one's house."

"It must, child, for persons having a comfortable house like ours," and he looked about the warm, tasteful room; "but for those poor cabins, I'm sure it's a blessing to knock them down."

It is hard to say from what motive Lissy's advocacy of the O'Donnells proceeded, as she seldom interfered in her father's business. She had been lately reading some romantic novels; and as she was walking through one of the fields, a few weeks previous, she became very much slarmed at the appearance of a young bull that bellowed at a good distance from her, She screamed, and might have fainted, had not Frank O'Donnell jumped over the fence, with his gun on his shoulder, and escorted her home.

He was courteous and gentlemanly, and as it generally is in some way of this sort romantio ladies meet with their lovers, there is no telling what notions crossed her precious little head.

what notions grossed now and the state of th and the minimum demonstration of the control of the े भी भी होति व

It I to del times conditionalist to a le mer du trace CHAPTER XIII. are a line or restriction or see to see 4 41 March 19th Aus

AN IRISH AGENT AND BIS VICTIMS.

THE rent day is a very important day to Irish tenants in general. Those who have the rent must wear a look of grateful complacency, and those who have not, of abject dependence. They know that their fate lies in the hands of the great man, whose bad report to the landlord is as sure destruction to them as the ukase of the Emperor of Russia to his serfs; therefore the Irish sorfs must study the humor of their lord and master, and adapt their line of policy accordingly. It is a nice point of dispute who will go in first, but the decree generally falls upon some one able to meet his rent in full. As soon as he comes out, he has to answer a regular # a of ques-comes out, he has to answer a regular f s of questions in Irish, such as:

"What humor is his honor in, Bill?" says a poor fellow who, perhaps, is the f few pounds.

"Will he allow half the poor rates, Bill?" says another, who has scraped his up to that point.

"I don't know will he take my tow at a valuation; it is better to be widout the sup of milk itself than the cabin. God help we will accompany to the cabin. than the cabin, God help us ?" eays another poor

nd Year This works

oor cabins, down,"

Liszy's ad-

as she sel-She had

rels; and as

ields, a few ch alarmed

st bellowed reamed, and

O'Donnell on his shoul-

and as it ort romantio no telling the attack Attend to Me Har if the said

day the lines

Even their appearances must be adapted to their circumstances, or rather to the circumstances in which they would wish to appear,

The poor man that wants time, until he sells his cow, or his slip of a pig, generally borrows a good coat from a neighbour to let the agent see that he is well dressed; and that a little time with him is only a matter of convenience; while the comparatively rich man, with his rent in his pocket, appears in his every-day garb, lest his wealth would draw down upon him the cupidity of the agent.

It must be recollected that I am painting the dark side of the picture. It is true that there are many such men as Mr. Ellis in Ireland; but it is equally true, on the other hand, that there are landlords who would be ashamed to acknowledge such a man as their agent—men of honorable and Christian feelings, who treat their tenants with kindness and consideration—who take a pride in their welfare.

It is said, in defence of slavery, that slave masters were generally kind to their slaves; but there are some masters who use the power of life and death, with which they are vested, with a vengeance—who gloat over the sufferings of their victims, as they writhe with the torture of the lash and the stake—who laugh at their frantic cries, as the flame fattens on their flesh. Yes, there are such demons on earth; for when man's heart becomes hardened, there is no demon in hell more cruel.

Is it a sufficient plea for slavery that there are lapted to their roumstances in

ttage.

til he sells his orrows a good nt see that he is with him is only comparatively appears in his ald draw down the state soul ainting the dark here are many it it is equally re landlords who euch a man as Christian feelindness and con-at slave masters but there are. life and death, vengeance-who victims, as they and the stakes the flame fatlicing shardened, that there are ench demons on some good, kind masters, such as St. Clair? Certainly not! Well, then, is it a sufficient ploa for leaving the white slaves of Ireland at the mercy of men as cruel and hardened as the brutal planter, Legree? Certainly not. But then you'll tell me the law protects the Irish peasant; he cannot be whipped or scourged he is a freeman. Ha! it is true they manage these things better in Ireland than they did in Kentucky. They have a keen, systematic way of doing things, less savage in its executions, but not less sure in its results. They manage to kill the body by a slow process of petty persecution, by energies crushed, by the fluctuations of fear and hope deferred, to end in ruin; after which they too often try to kill the soul, by holding out the bribes of Judas to their victims. Believe me, we are drawing no ideal plcture, dear reader. The enlightened statesmen of Europe wonder why the boasted, humane laws of England would not step in between the Irish Legrees and their victims. The attention of Europe is turning more and more every day to this anomaly. They know it is impossible for a country to progress and gian material wealth where power is used to crush, in the hearts of millions, all those feelings, impulses, and incentives to industry that beget a nation's wealth; for a nation cannot be advanced by destroying in the hearts of the many the motives of industry. Lord Brougham, one of England's greatest statesmen, talking of the vested nterests of slave-owners, says:-" . I deny the right, I acknowledge not the property. The principles—the feelings of our common nature rise in rebellion against it. In vain you tell me of the laws which sanction such a claim. There is a law above all the enactments of human codes—the same throughout the world, the same in all times.

200

It is the law written by the finger of God upon the heart of man; and by that law, unchangeable and eternal, while men despise fraud, and loathe rapine, and abhor blood, they will reject with indignation the wild and guilty phantasy, that man can hold property in man."

How applicable to the white slaves of Ireland and their masters!

Mr. Ellis sat at his deak with a ledger before him; Hugh Pembert was writing near him.

"Are the Ballybruff tenants collected yet, Hugh?"
"I dinna ken; I shall see, sir," said Hugh.

"No, no; go on with your accounts, I will call Burkem," and he rang the hand-bell.

te Tell Burkem," said he, to the servant maid, " to come up, I want him,"

"Yes, sir."

Burkem made his appearance with an air of the greatest deference. He held his hat in his hand, and bowed to the great man.

It is necessary that we should say a few words about Burkem, whom we have seen before at Mr. O'Donnell's. He was for some time in the police force, but discharged for some good reasons. He erty. The nature rise you tell me There is a codes-the age.

all times. e finger of at law, unspise frand,

y will reject antasy, that

Ireland and before him;

yet, Hugh?" Hugh.

I will call

nt maid, "to an sir of the in his hand,

a few words

pefore at Mr. in the police then got into Mr. Ellis' employment, where he acted as bailiff, doing all the dirty work for him. The scoundrel was so keen, and had such a consummate address, that he passed off among the people as a good kind of person, forced to act contrary to his wishes, in order to keep his place. He took care to impress this very slyly upon them. So that he was more pitied than hated programs may be the total of the Mr. Ellis raised his head from the ledger.

Well, Ned, are the Ballybruff tenants outside?"

"They are, your honor."
"Have they much money, do you think?"

"Sorra much; I'm sure I don't know where the lazy set would get it; one or two of them druv cows to see would your honor take them at a valuation."

"I suppose, Hugh, we had better; there is no use in letting anything back." A ward live and the same are "Ye'as sit," said Hugh, looking up from his accounts of L. Suggettin Your his wine my which is

"Burkem, show them in."

The tenants were collected in groups about the yard, discussing their position with the gusto of American politicians. There was in one corner three or four cows, with as many men sitting near them, keeping guard, with the most abject mise depicted on their countenances; near these was a woman with ten genes, to make up her little rent. "God help us," said one of the men; "I danna what the childers will do, the cratures, widout the sup of milk, and sure the pratica are no great things

"I fear we are near hard times," said another, "though what harm if we could keep the cabin over

"Sorra harm, Jem; there is no fear of a man wid a house over his head; it's bad enuff to want the bit or sup, but when a man wants the roof to cover him, och, mayrone, he's done entirely."

"I dunns what is his honor going to do wid us; shure if he were going to put us out he wouldn't send us word to make up a year's rint." A wouldn't send

"That's thrue, he wouldn't," said another; "Mr. Burkem tould me that he only served the notices to hurry us in."

"I hope so," said the woman, with a sigh; "God help us, we are bad enuff as it is, widout being worse; see, I have brought these ten goese to make up the last pound; I'm sure he won't refuse them from the poor widow." a familia with the same transfer.

"And it's you had the nlos job to drive them too, Mrs. Dunne; begor, you'd think the cratures knew where they were goin' to, they cackled and flew at such a rate."

A large group was all this time collected near the kitchen door, some thumbing old receipts, some looking over their little money, some in deep abstraction.

As soon as Mr. Burkem made his appearance there was a general rush around him.

"What news, Mr. Berkem?"

made them 1 1 1 00 M

f a man wid want the bit to cover him, show all has do wid us; rouldn't send end and Y as other; "Mr. he notices to Wall TENT

migh; "God being worse; nake up the em from the Lingle, Fifth ive them too, ratures knew and flew at in Hall of cted near the ts, some lookp abstraction. earance there

francis Tu

but Bir ests.

53

aid another, e cabin over hi setine

These and similar questions were put to Mr. Burkem, a sodi sol blaga of trad sol, "Begad, I think he is," said Burkem, "for he said

"Will he take the rint from us?"

to me, 'Burkem, go tell these poor people to come in. I hope they have the rent; for, God knows, I rather they had than be turning them out; I think they all have it, sir, says I, and it would be a pity to turn them out when they can pay their way;" that's true for you, Burkem, says he.?. pat it are a

"You know, boys, there is no harm in having the good word." a lien ", fubli on ad quittly & the Pla

"Sorra harm, Mr. Burkem, and may God bless you for it."

Thanks be to God!" were the general exclamations of the expecting crowd as lead or . or a area

"Now," said Mr. Burkem, "let ye that have the money plentiest, go in first; come with me, Mr. Doyle, I know you have the shiners; nothing softens a man like them, Mr. Doyle," had have she but, "

How do you do, Mr. Doyle P said Mr. Ellis, in a very bland manner, alt of the size weds oron

"Well, thank your honor," said Mr. Doyle, with a most obsequious bow, dr Ra unit queres which A

"I suppose you have your rent, Mr. Doyle, £21 148." right hope in many, commentation while the

Yes, your henor, by allowing me half the rates." "I cannot allow it this time, Mr. Doyle; so I will give you a docket for the pres

"Yes, your honor; but I'd sooner get the resate; Mr. Burkem told us that you'd allow it,"

"Mr. Burkem, that's good! how did Burkem know; ay, Mr. Burkem?"

"Shure I only thought so, your honor."

"Well, you needn't be telling what you think, Mr. Burkem; however, it makes no difference; I could not give a receipt until I see his lordship about these notices. You know I am only a servant, Mr. Doyle; must carry out his lordship's wishes, write a docket for Mr. Doyle, Hugh, £21 on account."

"Well, Mrs. Cormack, have you the rent, ma'am?"
"Yes, your honor."

"Fifteen pounds, ten shillings, ma'am."

"Here is fifteen pounds, your honor; and may God bless them that gave it to me."

"Pray, who gave it to you, ma'am," said Mr. Ellis;

drawing the money towards him.
"Young Mr. O'Donnell; God spare him, he is the tender-hearted young man; he comes in to me and asked me had I the rent. I told him — "See, that will do, ma'am; I'm sure he is a good young man; but," said he, in a mutter too low for Mrs. Cormack's hearing—"A fool and his money soon parts."

"Ten shillings more, ma'am, if you plaise," said

Hugh. "Ten shillings! arrah, hav'nt you it all there except the poor rates."
"We cannot allow any poor rates now," said Mr.

the rerate;

age.

id Burkem

1 14 11 I. you think,

lifference; I rdship about ervant, Mr. shes,—write nt, ma'am ?"

Malig H " r; and may

id Mr. Ellis;

im, he is the to me and

e is a good

too low for l his money

plaise," said

all there ex-

Ellis: "the next time though, the next time; it makes no difference; give her a docket, Hugh."

"What about the notice, your honor?"

"I'll see his lordship about it; I'm sure when he hears you all paid he will withdraw it; you know I am only a servant to his lordship, and must consult him."

"Well, good woman, have you the rent?"

This was addressed to a miserable-looking poor creature, whose patched garments were scarcely suffi-clent to cover her shivering form.

"All but a thrifle, your honor."

"Well, I cannot take it without the full."

"God help us! shure your honor knows that a great deal of the praties war black, and four pounds is too much entirely for a cabiu and haggard."

"Come, good woman, don't be taking up my time; I'm sure it wasn't I made the potatoes black; as for the rent, why did you engage to pay it? it's only what you are paying always."

"Call some other one, Burkem; this woman goes out. Mark her down to be ejected, Hugh."

Burken whispered something to Mr. Ellis, "Have compassion on the poor woman, your honor; she has some geese—maybe she'd sell them to you."

"God bless you, Mr. Burkem-I have, your henor; but I thought to sell them to buy a stitch of clothes for myself and the orphans; have compassion on us, your honor, and God will have marcy on you

"To be turned out, Hugh; we can't lose any more time," to told mi mi to a to the top will "Take them, your honor," said the poor woman, with a sigh; and she wiped the tears from her eyes with her tattered apron.

"There are ten in it, but leave me the old ones, and here is three pounds; God knows it's by piaching and starving myself and children I made it

That will do, ma'am; Burkem, get the docket, and when this woman gives you the ten geese-ten is little enough for a pound—give it to her." want of

"Yes, your honor," god off , even not emel To . "God help myself and my poor orphans!" groaned the Lord be preised! the wretched woman.

It is unnecessary that we should follow the worthy Mr. Ellis seriatim through all the tenants; it is enough to say that the georg the cows, and some alips of pigs, were all disposed of in like manner.

There was one poor fellow, and it was most affecting to see him take his leave of his cow. Magpie was enjoying the luxury of a sop of hay when he returned to her, after her fate being sealed inside.

"Poor Magpie, poor baste, what will we do afther

you; come here, poor Magpie." and placed her head between his hands, as if to sympathize with him. Poor baste," said he, kissing her; and then he wiped the big tears from his eyes poor Magpie, your corner will be lonely to-night, and the children

ose any more a white ments poor woman, om her eyes

s st 1 7 tellow

he old ones, t's by pinchn I made it their day. t the docket, n geese-ten her." was it "Thras fo ans!" groaned and brust and ow the worthy ténants; it is ows, and some ke manner. 3 g as most affectcow. Magpie hay when he ealed inside.

ill we do afther 在海湖南北 head between

m. Fried or ; and then he poor Magpie, nd the childers will miss you, and cry for you; och, mavrone, it's the bitter news I have for them; but God's will be done," and he wiped his eyes again; and as he left the yard, he looked back, and Magpie looked after him, and followed him. the state of the state of

"No, I can't stand it," said he, and he blubbered out as he went away. A pleaseng the say on the

On the whole, the tenants were well pleased with their day.

"He was hard enuff on the poor," said Mr. Doyle; "but anything is better than to be turned out of the house." Title onon it is in pound de over it is to her "naud

"Thrue for you, Mr. Doyle; what feer is there of us? hav'nt we the cabins over us, and our health, the Lord be praised!" " attention his form no dis

Well, it is not a bad day's haul," said Mr. Ellis, as he closed the books the Poor fools, life they but knew the mercy they sty to get all Is it on account you have given all the receipts, Hugh ?"

"Ya'as sin" to four world having one account.

"Give that woman's docket to Burkem, and let him go for the geese; and mind, let him say it was to buy them I did M ozet and rotar and re I he away a com Yo'as, wir. W do by greated notar any art to const.

"Take it down to him yourself, and leave me alone. Theorie will happy has the thinky the more after . .

"Ya'as, sir." sirie wires whigh you is as ablight and

Mr. Ellie lay back in his chair, and thus soliloquised to himself; ye all many sees and said because 480 far so good; things are going on smoothly;

208

we must keep these Ballybruff tenants on hands until after the elections, for his lordship has assured me that an election will take place in spring, and Sir W. Crasly will represent the conservative interest. We must get all these to vote for him; I know these d—d priests will oppose us; no matter—let them refuse, if they dare. Well, if we gain our point, I know I will be made a J. P.; ay, faith, a J. P. Hugh Ellis, Esq., J. P., sounds nicely; doesn't it, though! ha, ha, great change since the day I came here with a few pounds in my pocket. In any case, after the election, we will evict the Ballybruff tenants. Here are two letters"-and he pulled them from his pooket, and read them over, and then put them into a private drawer. "One is from John M. Nale, offering me five hundred pounds if I'd get him about two hundred scree at a fair rent and a long lease; another from his uncle, offering me the same for about three hundred acres; three and two are five, just what's in the Ballybruff property. I know his lordship will want a few thousands shortly about that building of his, and that will leave me able to give it. Capital, that building of his—how I got him on with that, for fear he wasn't running down hill fast enough. Well, who knows for whom he is building it. Heigh ho! what would the world say if I were living there yet-heigh ho! eight and two are ten thousand; no joke of a mortgage, heigh ho!" and he leant back in his chair, evidently well pleased with the state and prospect of his affairs.

lage. on hands unhas assured spring, and vative interhim; I know matter-let we gain our y, faith, a J. cely; doesn't e the day I e Ballybruff nd he pulled ver, and then is from John nds if I'd get r rent and a ering me the bree and two property. I ows for whom uld the world hol eight and

When Hugh Pembert went into the kitchen in search of Mr. Burkem, he found that worthy regaling himself on some cold meat and crisped 1. 1 1 1 1 1 1 10 potatoes.

"Taking care of yourself, maun, I see," said

Hugh.

"Ay, faith, Mr. Pembert; a man wants something after such a dry day's work."

"Will you please slip into my room when done?" "Certainly, sir, with pleasure," and what is gott to ..

When Burkem went into Mr. Pembert's room he found him with a case of pistols on the table before

"Weel, Mr. Burkem, take a seat." (reu West a ve

"These are purty pistola, Mr. Hugh." Ill 19 14 Ak

"Weel, weel, there's nac fear of them, maun."

"Ye gang for them goese, Mr. Burken, ye war spacking about; here is the docket."

Mr. Burkem took the paper." " The state of t

"Hang them for goese; its a shabby thing for a man to be going after goese, at least," said Burkem.

"Weel, weel, mann, Mr. Ellis sends a chiel on many a poor mission."

"True for you, sir; it's well if he don't get skylights made through some of us some of these fine days, if he goes on as he is."

"He dinus no such thing, Mr. Burkem; we maun do our duty; I'm sure ye weet be well paid."

"Sorra a bit too well at all for the risk I run, Mr. Hugh; if ten shillings a week and my cha good pay for a man risking his life every day, I don't know what to say."

"It's sma'; it's no the thing, no doubt; but then I dinns mind adding a mickle to it. Here maus, drink my health," and he handed him a pound-note.

"Ye maun like one of these braw things," and he handed him a double-barrelled pistol.

"Thank you, Mr. Hugh," said the other, "I will not forget your kindness." Asserts found strait that our

"Ye maun see that, when I'll be master here byand-bye Mr. Burkem, I will na forget those that serve me."

"You may rely upon me, Mr. Hugh; you may be sure I will serve you faithfully." a married indust.

"Weel, I dinns doubt it, so good bye now."

"I dinns ken, can I depend on that fellow? Weel, I think, I maun; he'll do anything for the haubee," said Mri Pembert to himself, when alone.

"What the devil is he up to now; he must have something in view, when he gave ma a pound, for he's so close as the old shaver. No matter, I'll play my card between them; and I am thinking I won't lose either. I will go over to Mr. O'Donnell's to see that little baggage, Mary Cahill; upon my soakens I am afeard that young Cormack is cutting my cabbage fast; if he be, let him look to himself. That I may never die in sin—but no matter, it would be as well for him not to crass me," and he whistled a

every day, I

Hage.

oubt; but then Here maun, him a pound-things," and he

Mi cather. other, "I will alrab ten org naster here byget those that h; you may be to a Carre bye now." ram fellow? Weel,

r the baubee," lone, y mit his

he must have pound, for matter, I'll play inking I won't Donnell's to see on my soukens outting my cab-

it would be

song, as if to keep off the bad thoughts that were working within him.

When Mrs. Cormack returned to her home, her two sons and daughter were sitting around the fire, eagerly expecting her.

James, the eldest, was a fine specimen of the peasant class. He was above the middle height, with fair features and sandy hair. There was an impulsive, honcet expression in his open countenance; his eye was dark and sparkling." He was evidently one that could love deeply; but could impulsively revenge a wrong. His dress was that of the peasant class-a cordurey trousers, heavy shoes, or brogues, with an overcoat or jacket of tlannel: Past sto !

John Cormack was a few years younger than his brother. The resor had not yet touched the down of manhood that covered his chin. Mrs. Cormack was proud of her two fine boys-and well she might; for a mother never reared more loving her, more dutiful sons in She was also proud of her gay, sprightly daughter; and it must be confessed, there was not a lighter foot in the village dance; nor a gayer smile, nor a sprightlier laugh than Nelly Cormack's, her mark in before, in its is and or in an er

" Nelly, alannal will you go out and see is mother oming. My heart is heavy, somehow, until I hear the news. If I knew which road she'd take, I'd go most her said James and saiged ad it seed as a

Nelly went out; but returned immediately. want Blere she is, up the road," said Nelly; " and al in shanachus with some old cosherer. I hope, James, it's not going to bring in a step-father over us she is. If so, some pretty girl I know would have a poor chance." Here she looked most reguishly at James, as much as to say, "you see I know all about ye."

1

"Bad soran to you, Nelly, can you ever athop, or hould your tougue," said James, blushing.

"Och, indeed, what color is red now, James. Shure it's no blame to you, avick machree. Faith, if I were a lump of a boy myself, I'd be in love wid her—and a nice boy I'd make;" and she looked complacently at herself. "It's I'd have the girls orany."

"Whist! you scatter-brain, you; and throw out the praties, and put down an egg for mother; she must be hungry. Here she's in, and the Rovertoo."

"Welcome, mother—and blur-an-ages is this you.

It's a week of Sundays since we aw you—coad mille failthe! Nelly, help mother to take of her cloak."

"Thank you, James," said the Rover.
"That'll do, Nelly," said Mrs. Cormack.

They looked at their mother, to read the news of the day in her face. It is strange that when there is some event of importance at stake we do not like asking about it—we wish to keep from our minds the bitterness of disappointment as long as possible. "Sit down, mother—you must be tired; and, Nelly, roll out the praties."

er. I hope, James, father over us she now would have a most roguishly at see I know all about you ever athop, or blushing.

The start of the red now, James, machree. Faith, I'd be in love wid ;" and she looked I'd have the girls on; and throw out g for mother; she and the Rovertoo." an ages is this you. we aw you could her to take of her

Rover. Haustan

Cormack.
to read the news of that when there
take we do not like eep from our minds
as long as possible.
be tired; and, Nel-

Mrs. Cormack sat down; and then looked about the house, and then at her children.

"Thank God, we have the house over us, another sthart, anyway," said Mrs. Cormack.

"That's good news. anyway, mother," said James.

"It is, achorra, the Lord be praised, he was in the good humor; oh! it's pleasant to go near a man when he has the smile and kind word for you."

"That's thrue, mother; the Lord bless him for that same to you, bad as he is."

They had now collected around the table of potatoes and noggins of milk, to enjoy their frugal meal.

"Nelly," said Mrs. Cormack, "bring down that miscawn of butther in the room; shure it's not overy day the Rover comes to us."

"Nor every day we do have the good news, mother," said John Cormack."

"Thrue enuif, avick mastere."

"Och, and fair I will, wid a heart and s-half," said Nelly.

"There's a good dale of these black, Mrs. Cormack," said the Rover, as he shoved the potatoes acide.

"There is, the Lord be praised; but then it's nothin' I hope; what would the poor do, if they ran black on them?"

"Sorra a one of me knows, ma'am, they wealdn't live at all; shure it's hard caust for them to manage now."

"God is good!" said James, sententiously.

"He is, achorra; praise be to His holy name!" said Mrs. Cormsok, piously raising her hands in prayer, and a tear of gratitude glistened in the widow's eye.

"Did he say anything about the notices, mo-

"Yes, John, achorra; he gave us dockets, and said that the notices were to frighten the tenants and nothing more; he should see his lordship about them."

"I never like to trust the old bodagh," said the Rover; "there is no time he's so dangerous as when he has the palaver; he has a bad set about him too; as for the nephew, he's as hard and as dark as himself; and as for Burkem—""

"He put in the good word, to-day, anyway, for us; I heard them sayin' he spoke up to his honor, and told him it would be a shame without taking the money from us."

"Well, schorra, praise the fool as you find him."

"I will go down to Mr. O'Donnell's; I am sure Master Frank will be glad to hear the good news."

"Do, James, asthore; God bless him, but for him shure I could not make up the rent."

"Take care, James, that you do not see some other one," said Nelly, with a smile.

"Bad scran to the other one I want to see," said.
James, stooping down to tie his shoes.

ttage.

tiously. is holy name!" her hands in listened in the

the notices, mo-

us dockets, and ten the tenants s lordship about dagh," said the ingerous as when t about him too; as dark as him-

lay, anyway, for up to his honor, without taking se you find him." mell's; I am sure hear the good him, but for him 6740 a ste 18

do not see some

want to see," said

James pulled very hard at that tie, for he broke it, and when he raised his head, his cheeks were very red; no doubt from the hard pulling.

When James went into Mr. O'Donnell's kitchen. Mary Cahill was alone at the fire, baking bread.

"God save you, Mary," said James, with something like a stammer in his voice.

"God save you kindly, and you're welcome: sit down." ale and the or wire sortion but oper to +

"That I will, alanna," said he, placing his seat near her.

"You might keep out from a body, though, James, and not be going with your cumhethers," and she pushed her seat over from him and ship

"Och, mushal how contrary the people is getting," said James, pushing after her, and taking a stocking she was buitting in his hand. it may sill

"How the deuce do ye knit, Mary; I could never lamit." inodice ameng a od bluen diangella be

"Shure you ought," said she with a laugh; "and make a sheelah of yourself." about another Mills

"Ye do have as many twiste and turns and ins and onts in it as there do be in a woman's heart."

mens', take that, James."

"I dunna, fair, what turns does be in mene' hearts, at all; for when a purty colleen, like you, Mary, puts the soft sawder on one of them, sarra bit they know what they do." and the state of the state of

och, botherashun to ye and yer blarney," and Mary looked at him with a most provoking, roguish look.

"Deuce the blamey then, Mary. Shure, darlin', your funny eyes and pouting lips would burn a hole in any man's heart."

James moved his chair nearer to her, and placed his hand around her waist. "Arrah, will you sthop, James; look at the bread the way its burning," and she hurried away from him.

"Faix, I know somebody's heart that's burning worse, Mary."

James placed his hand most pathetically over his to show where the volcano lay. "Bad cess to 'em, can't they throw water enuff upon it," said Mary, taking her seat again. " Now, James, if you don't sthop I won't sit her another

"Mary, will you -

"Arrah, whist, James."

"Will you?" and he took her little hand in his; " will you tell me ---

"Now, can't you have patience, James."

"I want to know iv you ___"

"Oh, James, don't be in such a hurry," and Mary blushed and held down her head.

"Shure, Mary, it's time," and he squeezed her hand closer; "shure it's time that -

"Oh, don't James; give me time to think; don't be in such a hurry."

" About what, Mary !

ottage.

ey," and Mary g, roguish look. Shure, darlin', uld burn a hole

ner, and placed

ok at the bread away from him. that's burning tically over his

ow water enuff again. "Now, sit her another

ittle hand in his;

mrry," and Mary

e to think; don't

"About asking me."
"Ha, ha, Mary, alanna, I was only asking you to tell Masther Frank to come down to me."

Mary withdrew her hand.

"Bad scran from you, James; shure I thought it was going to ask me to marry you you were."

"Faith an' may be I'll be axin' you to do that same, some of those fine mornins, achree, as soon as I have things settled." Man in the lange has

"Choke your impudence; I knew you hadn't the courage, sorra a bit."

"Maybe I havn't, Mary, my darlin' !" and he pressed her to him, and imprinted a kiss upon her pouting lips. " Mary my love, will you be ___".

Here his declaration, whatever it was and there are few of my bachelor readers but could give a good guess as to what it was to be, at least, -was interrupted by the opening of the kitchen door, and our friend, Ned Burkem, walked in with a most innocent look, and a "God save all here."

Mary and James' confused manner was enough to betray them, if Mr. Burkem had not witnessed any of the interesting love drama-but he did; for, hearing the voices inside he looked through the key-hole. A scort of aware, dark as that worn by Satan, when he aware and Eve in the garden of Paradise, crossed his Burkem's features. The demon of revenge had entered his heart, but the smile of Judas was on his face, as he opened the door.

"God save you, kindly, Ned!" said James Cormack, as soon as he recovered his composure. "Sit down, Ned. This is a fine evenin'!"

"It is, the Lord be praised; and it was a fine day altogether. The tenants got on well to-day, James."

"So my mother told me; and you wor no bad friend to them either, Ned, I can hear. Give me the hand for that."

"Shure it's only nathural I would do anything I could for my neighbors. God help me, I often do things I'd rather not; but thin if I didn't another would, and maybe he wouldn't keep the light hand, as I does."

"Thrue for you, Ned; shure the tenants all feel that. Tara-an-ages, but it would be the bad day if you should take it into your head to give up."

"Sorra a bit of me likes the business at all. It's only for their sakes I'm sticking to it."

The servants were now home from their work, so the conversation turned on general topics.

CHAPTER XIV.

CERISTRAS AT HOME.

"Hark! where it rolls!--it thrills their souls! arise and bend the knee; the wedding feast in Cana of Galilice."

WHEN the poor wandering minstrel that wrote "Home, sweet home" rambled about the streets of London, without a roof to cover him, and heard the sad voices of wretched ballad-singers chanting "Home, sweet home!" how his desolation must have crushed his mind. The world was before him, but no home for him that sang of a happy home. Verily, the tender sensibilities of fine minds are often tried with a vengeance. He who felt most keenly the charms of home and domestic bliss could never call

"Home, sweet home!" How little do we think of home when intoxicated with the gaisties of fashionable life; yet home is the haven of rest, where the weary spirit seeks repose, where the affections bloom and blossom. If assailed with bodily or mental trouble, where can we turn for pure sympathy but to home. You may have wealth, and wealth without sympathy, but not without admiration and envy. Admiration will not make us happy without love and sympathy; and where will these be found them his own.

stage.

aid James Cormposure. "Sit

it was a fine day to-day, James." you wor no bad hear. Give me d do anything I me, I often do I didn't another p the light hand, tenants all feel be the bad day if to give up." siness at all. It's it."

m their work, so l topics.

in all their depth and purity, but at home. Home is the union of all these social ties that bind brothers and sisters, parents and children, in one holy bond —a holy bond of mutual love and brotherhood.

A man of a loving heart, with good moral resolution, and the gamins of moral discipline, can make home a paradise indeed. Home is woman's province; the sphere of her love and duty; it is her kingdom; and how grandly does a wise woman rule her little ampire. Her words are words of peace and love. She rules her household with a moral influence that delights the heart of her husband.

delights the heart of her husband.

Young men are too apt to be taken with the allurements of society; still these charms possess nothing so endearing as the sweets of domestic affection. These expand the heart with the truest sensations. What artificial enjoyments can compare to the greeting smile of a fond wife or the prattling of pratty babes. There is no charm of society so dear as that arising from the confidence and mutual thoughts and plans fostered and designed by man and wife.

that arising from the confidence and mutual thoughts and plans fostered and designed by man and vife.

He who is worthy of love, and can appreciate all its fervor and purity, will find them in the endearments of his wife and children. Man seldom appreciates the gushing warmth of woman's affections. There is a purity in her devotion that our rougher natures cannot well appreciate; we seldom comprehend the depth of her love, the purity of her intense affections.

Such a home as I have attempted to describe was

t bind brothers one holy bond otherhood.

d moral resolupline, can make man's province; is her kingdom; rule her little peace and love. al influence that taken with the charms possess ets of domestic with the truest uts can compare the prattling of ociety so dear as mutual thoughts man and wife.

man and wife n appreciate all m in the endearin seldom appromen's affections, that our rougher seldom comprety of her intense

to describe was

Mr. O'Donnell's. It never witnessed these little domestic scenes, these family broils, that generally alienate the affections and deprive home of its truest blessings. Mr. O'Donnell was a kind, affectionate father, but not a too indulgent one. As for Mrs. O'Donnell, home, indeed, was her little kingdom, which she ruled with all the moral government of a well-ordered state.

Her family sat around their little table, quiet, cheerful, and friendly i without an unkind word; without a frown to mar their happiness.

In such a home as this how happy must our friend, Willy Shea, find himself, even if there were not the secred tie of love to bind him to it.

Alice Maher, too, had come over to spend the Christmas at Glen Cottage.

Kate was visiting at his uncle's, and when returning home got leave for Alice to accompany her.

It was Christmas day—that day of high featival—and there were merry bearts in cabin and hall. The village bells were pealing forth in merry tones, and seemed to say! Christmas comes but once a year, and when it comes it brings good cheer." The bells were pealing, and happy faces crowded along the village way. Men and women and children throng the way, for the merry bells seemed to grow joyous, and clang out. "It's Christmas day, Christmas day." And they chimed and they chimed until merry hearts took up the burden of their song, and wished each other a happy Christmas.

"A merry Christmas," groated our friends as they proceeded to the village Mass.

"Ay, a merry Christmas, and a great many, too,"
—for Mr. O'Donnell and his family were beloved by the poor.

How often did he get some friend, for form sake, to secure a poor man in his bank, for his rent, to keep the house over him. For form sake, I say, for well did that friend know, that if the poor man failed, he would not be called on to pay. How often did his son, Frank, give from his scanty means to make up the widow's rent, and his wife and daughter pay visits of charity and mercy to the sick and needy. It is no wonder, therefore, that they were greeted from every side with, "a merry Christmas, and a great many, too."

Why was the sublime feeling of adoration purer, warmer, and more ardent to-day than any other? To-day, for it was Christmas-day; it took its inspiration from that pious and mystic costsey created by the solemn and awe-inspiring belief, that we are commemorating the birth of a God that died to save sinful man from eternal perdition.

The sleet was pattering on the windows, and the wind was mouning dismally around the houses, but few heeded it, for it was Christmas night, and there were bright fires and brighter hearts within.

A bright fire, and smiling faces and merry voices, are a cheering picture of domestic bliss.

There were light hearts and merry voices around

tage.

for form sake, for his rent, to sake, I say, for the poor man ay. How often canty means to fe and daughter o the sick and that they were erry Christmas, doration purer.

han any other?
took its inspirastacy created by ef, that we are that died to save

vindows, and the the houses, but night, and there ts within.

blics.

Mr. O'Donnell's hearth that Christmas night. He sat, as usual, in his easy chair, and around him were scated his wife and family, and their two welcome guests.

Bright lights streamed from the table, and bright sparks glowed from the yule-log that burned in the grate, for they loved and cherished the good old customs yet. A Christmas tree, with its glittering fruit, and card, and ribbon, and gold and silver ornaments, stood in all its effugent grandeur, upon the centre table. Holly and ivy and berries were entwined around the frames and cornices; even the very kitchen was a perfect wilderness of them. The mistletoe hung from the centre, and many a laugh, and joke, and kiss, were interchanged beneath it that Christmas night. The kitchen rang with the song, and tall, and jest; for they were merry with good drink and cheer, and kept Christmas night a jubilee.

"Here is a health to the good old year, that's fast dying out; and may we live to enjoy its offsoring," said one.

"Amen! Amen!" shouted the others, and emptied their glasses.

"Here is that the holly, the ivy, and the shamrock, may grow green for ever," said the Rover.

"Hip, hip, hurra!" and the kitchen rang with merry shouts.

"Here is that we may have good hunting next year; tallyho; tallyho; in the mornin," shouted Shoungs of Clough.

"Here is a health to the brave; and may the laurel wreathe their brows, and beauty's smile cheer their hearts," said Uncle Corny.

"That's it, Sergeant; that's a purty toast," said the Rover.

"Here is the thrush in the bush, and the bush in full bloom; my love in my arms, and that very soon," said James Cormack; who had some over to spend Christmas night at Mr. O'Donnell's.

James, to carry out his toest, jumped up and caught Mary Ochill. Mary, of course, struggled and cried out, "won't you sthop you schemer; bad coran to me if I don't call them out to you." Despite all this, however, she got over, somehow, very easy under the mistletoe, where James caught her two hands to prevent her from clasping them on her mouth; and then impressed a warm kies on her pouting lips.

"Bed soran to you; did anyone ever see the likes of you; look at the way my hair is all tossed wid you," and Mary gave him a harmless alap on the sheek.

"Take that now, you schemer; maybe you won't do it agen." A feet of one policy of the feet and a see

"Arrah! the deuce take your impudence." Well, here, if you don't, take back your kiss," and James returned it with interest amid the shouts and may the

tage.

y toust," said

and that very , i come over to tell's.

mped up and struggled and schemer; bad you." Despite how, very easy aught her two them on her m kies on her er see the likes all tossed wid as slap on the sybe you won't

); "you must

udence." ""
sok your kiss,"

and laughter of the company, and the slight struggles of Mary.

There were light and loving hearts in that old kitchen, on that Christmas night. We need not wish them a merry Christmas, for their own hearts joyously rang out—"A' merry Christmas."

The French have a saying, that peace is first-consin to enset; but it was not so with our happy party in Mr. O'Donnell's parlor; for the yule-log blazed and sparkled; the candles shone forth, and the Christmas tree glittered and glistened as if some fairy had touched it with her wand. The tea table lay spread near; the shining tray looked temptingly; its rich butter, its yellow cream, and its hot cakes out in fantastic shapes—all Mies Kate's making. Our party near the fire were on easy terms with one another; for they laughed, and sang, and joked, and gave and solved riddles and conundrums.

They now took their tea, and then a glass of wine; and Mr. O'Donnell took an additional glass of punch, and rubbed his hands, and looked at the young folks so happy, and rubbed his hands again, and laughed, and fall superbly glad and contented.

and laughed, and felt superbly glad and contented.

After playing at 'Acrostic Charades,' 'I love my love with an A—,' and such like, they had a game of forfeits. Nor did Mr. O'Donnell chide, but laughed heartily at the fond kieses beneath the mistletoe. Then,

"The game of forfults done, the girls all kines

Our party assembled around the fire, and sang and chatted away.

They then drew their prizes from the Christmas

The hail and snow pattered on the windows

"Let it dash away," said Mr. O'Donnell, looking at the blazing fire, the cheerful room, and more cheerful faces. "Let it dash away. It won't reach

"But, papa," said Bessy, and she left her hands upon his knees, and looked into his face; "papa, how many a poor person without a home to-night, without a fire to warm them, or good cheer and fond hearts to make them happy!"

"That's true, darling," said Mr. O'Donnell; and he kissed that frail-looking child. "That's true, darling. There is misery in the world, no doubt; but then, if we allow these feelings to overcome us, we will only make ourselves miserable, without making others happy."

"But, papa, shouldn't every one try to make as many as they could happy?"

"Yes, darling. If they did this, there would be no real misery in the world. This is the true spirit of charity."

"And why don't they do it, papa?"

"Really, I cannot say, my pet. You see our Saviour was neglected in a manger, and forgotten by those He came to save."

ire, and sang and

rom the Christmas

on the windows

O'Donnell, looking room, and more y. It won't reach she left her hands his face; "papa, a home to-night, or good cheer and Ir. O'Donnell; and ld. "That's true, world, no doubt; slings to overcome miserable, without ne try to make as his, there would be his is the true spirit

pa?"

You see our Saer, and forgotten by "Oh! wern't they cruel, papa?"

"Yes, indeed, child, but I fear we are not a bit better. Our Divine Master says, as often as we relieve the poor we relieve himself; and now tell me puss, what have you done for the poor this blessed Christmas?"

"I will tell you, papa; in the first place, mamma made up a basket of meat and bread, and tea and sugar for us, and then Kate and I went up to poor Mrs. Sullivan's, and——"

"Ha," said Kate, "little tell-tale; you know the Scripture says, let not your left hand see what your right hand giveth."

"True," said Mr. O'Donnell. "And now, Bessy darling, go sit near your mamma."

Bessy did sit near her mamma, and nestled her head upon her bosom, and prattled with her in low

While this conversation was going on, Willy Shea was in a deep reverie. His elbows rested on his knees, and his face upon his open palms. Of what was he thinking?

Ah! he thought of the good old home where he spent many a Christman night such as this; where father, mother, brothers, and sisters all joined to make it a merry Christman. Where the yule log burned, and the Christman tree glistened, and where light hearts, and merry faces, and joound laughter made a merry Christman indeed. Where were all these now?

On such a Christmas night as this did his kindgentle mother—the last of her race—sleep for the first time in her cold grave. As he returned to his bleak home, the sleet and rain pattered without, but there was no yule log, nor Christmas tree, nor fond hearts to greet him within.

"Ah! my good tender mother, where are you?"
he exclaimed, half audibly, as the tears trickled between his fingers.

"Willy, what ails you?" said Kata, leaning her

"Nothing, nothing dear!" and he brushed away the tears, and tried to look cheerful.

"Come," said Alice Maher, "Willy, get your flute and come to the kitchen, we will set up a dance there."

ve" Agreed, agreed I to a mail of a danger of

And the kitchen became merrier, and resounded with the song and dance of light and loving hearts, until the old clock in the hall chimed twelve, and then that merry Christmas had passed away.

When Willy rose in the morning, he went to the window to look out. The ground was covered with a slight sprinkling of snow. He looked towards the farm-yard. A long range of ricks of hay and stacks of corn crowded behind the house. The noise of the flail resounded from the barn.

In the yard was Kate O'Donnell and Mary Cahill, with a whele aroop of gabbling turkeys and goese, cackling hers, and ducks around them. Over and

age.

re are you?" tears trickled

e, leaning her brushed away

get your flute et up a dance

he went to the as covered with ed towards the

The noise of

d Mary Cahill, keys and goose, em. Over and about these fluttered a lot of busy pigeons. Kate, in a plain dress, with her sleeves tucked up, was feeding them with oats from a sieve, which Mary held.

A pigeon was cooing from her shoulder jealously at another that was busily pecking on the sieve.

"This is happiness, indeed," said Willy; "and with such a noble, loving girl I would gladly live and die amidst auch scenes."

When he came down to the parlor, Alice Maher and Frank were enjoying a pleasant title-d-title on the settee near the fire.

They seemed very happy, and evidently on very good terms with one another.

Mr. and Mrs. O'Donnell abortly joined them. Kate and Beesy soon came in with two plates of hot butter cakes, which they were after baking in the kitchen.

After breakfast, as the day was too unpleasant to go ont, our party amused themselves playing drafts, backgammon, and other games. Then they sang and played on the flute and concertins, and read amusing books alternately.

About noon, their recreation was enlivened with the most discordant attempts at music imaginable, proceeding from the little lawn in front.

"Come here," said Alice, looking out of the window; "come here," and she laughed heartly.
"Such a motley group, I have never witnessed; what the deuce are they?"

"They all ran to the window."

It was no wonder that Alice laughed, for a more picturesque group of rags and patches you could not see.

"The wren boys, the wren boys," exclaimed the party.

The wren boys, or, as they called themselves, the wran boys, now came up to the window, and commenced to puff and blow their spasmodie instruments.

One follow had an old flute which would elicit for him, despite all his puffing and blowing, only a few shrill whistles." Another was scratching at a fiddle, whilst another was trying to force the wind out of an old asthmatic bagpipes; but all these were com-pletely thrown in the shade by an old drum.

Their appearance was not less ludicrous than their music.

Some had petticoats and gowns, mounted with ribbons, drawn over them; others had shawls for. sashes and hatbands.

The foel or harlequin was the most laughable of all. He had a mask made of an old hat, with holes for his eyes, nose, and mouth out in it.

The front was painted red, with plenty of hair stuck to it with pitch.

Some stumps of quills protruded from the mouth for teeth, and his dress—this was the crowning point of all. He had an old red gown buttoned over his body. It was split in the middle and the exclaimed the nemselves, the low, and commodic instruvould elicit for ing, only a few ing at a fiddle, he wind out of ness were comt drum.

mounted with hat, with holes

plenty of hair

from the mouth the crowning gown buttoned middle and the lower part sewed over his legs to answer a trowsers—something in the Turkish fashion.

His bare feet were painted red.

This fellow cut many antics and capers, and showed his teeth in a manner to please the servants, who had now collected from all parts to see them; and I must say also that he amused our friends in the window.

Mary Cahill went near him, when he ran to take a kies of her; this, of course, set Mary screaming, and all the others laughing.

Another held the wren dressed out most gaudily in a bush, and sang under the window:—

"The wran, the wran, the king of all birds,
St. Stephens' day he was caught in the furse;
Altho' he is little, his honor 's grate,
So git up, madam, and give us a thrait."

"Why is he called the king of all birds?" said.

"Shure I'll tell your honor," said the other.
"You know, your honor, there was a great competishen intirely betune all the birds to know who'd be king; well, they couldn't agree at all, so they settled that whatever bird could fly the highest he was to be king. Begor, sur, the eagle was mighty proud intirely, for he was shure of winnin. 'Let ye's all meet on such a day, and we'll set off together,' says he. Well becomes them, they all assembled. 'Where are you goin'?' says he to the wran. 'Begor, to see the fun, your honor,' says the wran.

So they all laughed at the poor little wran. While they were gettin' ready, well becomes the wran he stuck himself in the fethers under the eagle's wing. 'Away now,' says the eagle. Shure after a time they all felt tired but the eagle, and he flew on until he got tired. 'I'm king now,' says he; 'I may go home; I am not able to go another peg.' 'Not yet,' said the wran, flying from under his wing as fresh as a daisy. Begor, the eagle was fit to be tied, he was so mad; but divil a use in it. That's the way he became king, you see. Throw something to the boys, your honor."

"Thank ye; long life to ye, and that ye may be all married this day twelvemonth. Begor, if we met every house as good as this, naboclish."

Mary and all the servants gave their mite to the wren-boys, who went off well pleased.

and the collect stage of the collection of the c

The waster of the content

age.

ran. While the wran he earle's wing. after a time flew on until ; 'I may go ving as fresh to be tied, he hat's the way athing to the

at ye may be Begor, if we

r mite to the

The state of the state of 李清"静。 和電

CHAPTER XV.

HOW ST. PATRION'S DAY IS KEPT IN IRELAND.

ALL the world knows that St. Patrick's day falls on the 17th of March, and that Irishmen revere the saint's memory with all due honors.

Mrs. Butler took care to have an additional supply of potteen, and a few barrels of beer in for the

A big red-nozed horseman swung over her door, with a pint of creamy ale in his hand, and announcing, "Entertainment for man and horse;" and a fiddler scraped away inside, to let people know that Mrs. Butler's establishment was alive and stirring.

Mrs. Butler came frequently to the door, and looked very anxiously about, and wondered people were not coming to pay their respects to the saint,

"The Lord be praised, what's become of the people, at all, at all; maybe it's haythens they will shortly become;" and Mrs. Butler looked askance at the two barrels of beer, and sighed at the growing depravity of the times. She then commenced practising a little sum in arithmetic on her fingers' ends."
"Firsteen and factors of the commenced o

"Fiveteen and fiveteen is thirty—thirty shillings:

I want to know where it's to come from, though, if they don't come to drink it; that's the thing; but whist, here is somebody; och, shure it's only the Rover." And Mrs. Butler sighed in a manner that implied that the Rover was not likely to add much to the required sum.

It so happened, too, that the Rover was after making a resolution, that he would pass Mrs. Butler's house without going in to drink.

"Now," thought he to himself, "if she sees me; she'll be out with me, and she's not a bad sort of woman; and, faix, there she's at the door. "O, murther, what will she think of me, at all, and there's the music, too; bad cess to me, what a time I made you."

"Good evenin', Mr. Delany," said Mrs. Butler, in her blandest of tones.

"Good evenin', kindly, ma'am ; how are you?"

"Well, thank you. Won't you come in?"
"I'm in a hurry, ma'am, I thank you."

"Well, I dunna what's the world coming to; look at that fellow, that I often thrated to a shaugh and a glass, too, and he wouldn't come in; well, well," and Mrs. Butler looked horribly shocked.

"What will I do?" said the Rover. "I have it; shure I only promised to pass the house, I didn't say anything about turning back, well done, resolution, I will have a glass on the head of you," and he slapped his thigh, and returned to Mrs. Butler's warm corner.

ttage.

over was after pass Mrs. But-if she sees me; a bad sort of door. O, murall, and there's t a time I made

Mrs. Butler, in ow are you?"

oming to; look to a shaugh and in; well, well," house, I didn't well done, resod of you;" and to Mrs. Butler's "Arrah, mith, I thought you warn't goin' to come in, Shawn," said Mrs. Butler.

"Fair, I thought so, too, myself, ma'am; shure I made a resolution not to come in, but I tricked it,

"Mr. Delany!" said Mrs. Butler, looking very dignified and highly offended—"Mr. Delany, would you have the condesenshun to tell me what I did to you, or what's to be laid at my decent door, that you should make a resolution not to enter it; ay, Mr. Delany, would you tell me that? O, holy Mother! maybe it's resolutions them all made, oh, oh!"

It is strange how very polite people become when they wish to be otherwise; now, Mrs. Butler seldom addressed Mr. Delany otherwise than as Shawn; however, she emphatically addressed him now, Mr. Delany, and raded her head at him with each word, and they aised a soiled red calico handkerchief to her eye.

"See, now, Mrs. Sutler, sorra a one of me—"
"Oh, oh," sobbed Mrs. Butler, "any shlur to be thrown upon me descent house and karakter. O, you ought to be ashamed of yourself, Mr. Delany."

"Arrah, hould your tongue, woman, and listen to reson; divil a shlur envene could cast upon your house nor kurakter either. Shure it is only the last seahine his lordship said to me, 'She keeps the decentest house from this to Cashel.'"

"Did he say so, Shawo."

"Ay, faix I never sees anyone drunk nor shout ing there; and shure if she sells a dbrop itself, she's a poor, lone widow, that must be let live," says he.

other spalpeen magisthrates, that would be tryin' to hunt a poor, lone widow out of the house," replied Mrs. Butler.

"True for you, ma'am. This fish makes a body very dry," and Shawn spat out a couple of times.

"Faix, it does, though; maybe you'd have a drink of beer, Shawn?" Sand and stone of the standard of the standa

"Wid pleasure, ma'am, if pleasing. Here is your health, ma'am, and that you may shortly have some one to mind the house for you."

"Git ont Shawn; shure it's not a woman of my age, after rearin' her family, you'd have thinkin' of the like."

"Why not, Mrs. Butler? there is Nell Creak, that got married the other day; I'd take the Bible, she is not a day under fifty; now, I'd swear you are not forty."

married at eighteen, and my poor man is dead six years, God be good to him; he was the good man, Shawn; here Mrs. Butler indulged in some lashry-mose reflections. "Ah, he was the kind husband, Shawn; shure, isn't it surprising, the impudence of some people, to think of Nelly Groak gettin married; oh, oh, she's every day of fifty years, Shawn. Shure I recollect when she was a child I was a slip dbrop itself, t be let live,"

Hage.

11 1 . 2 m 11 " uld be tryin' to house," replied

Add 1, 42, 4,000 C makes a body ple of times. 'd have a drink

15's so .7466 . 1 Here is your rtly have some

i was stalle const woman of my ave thinkin' of Tiefune, anchu a Nell Croak, that the Bible, she ear you are not on the water end Shawn I was ean is dead six the good man, in some lashrykind husband, e impudence of ak gettin' mary years, Shawn.

aild I was a slip of thackeen myself; oh, oh, at her time of life; what's the world coming to?"

Shawn was all this time taking on inventory of the stock of the concern, and just considering to himself, "wouldn't it be a great deal pleasenter to sit in his own corner, drinking Mrs. Butler's-Mrs. Delany's, though-porter, than be trudging from place to place;" he appeared to have come to a very satisfactory conclusion, for he rubbed his hands and smiled.

"Bhe's over sixty, though, as sure as she's a day; what harm? sure it's not I'll be picking her bones; she has a snug house and place," said he to himself.

"Who could blame the poor woman after all," mid Shawn, taking Mrs. Butler's hand affectionately in his; "sure its pleasant to have one's own house. "True for you, Shawn"—and Mrs. Butler looked about with an oir of great estimaction.

"Fe" To have some one to talk to—to keep us comfortable—to console us when sick, to-

Ah, Shawn, Shawn, you spake the truth," and the widow sighed at her own desolate condition.

To have some one to cheer and console us in time of afflictions". Shawn squeezed the widow's hand, and she looked gratefully to him..." to have," he continued, "to have some one to love, to"
here his pathetic discourse was interrupted by shouts and laughter from the outside.
"They are coming, the Lord to praised," said life. Butler, jumping up.

"Dhoul take them," muttered Shawn.

"Musha! ye'r welcome, boys; how is every mother's soul of ye," said Mrs. Butler to her new arrivals; "and the colleens, too, God bless them."

"What the dickens use wid we be widout the crathurs; throth they are the life and sowl of us, Mrs. Butler," said James Cormack, leading in Mary Cahill, smiling and blushing.

"Where's the passishiner? Oh, here he is stretched ashles;; get up, man alive, and give us a bhlast to warm our toes," and he shook the fiddler to waken him.

"Aye, what will ye have? Pathrick's day in the mornin', I suppose."

"That will do; up wid it; anything at all man, to knock the cobwebs from our hearts." Then four couples took the floor, and danced until they began to get wearied, when they were replaced by others.

"That's it, Mary, lie into it; deuce a bit but you'll tire him out."

Success, Jem; don't be too hard upon the colleen."

"Musha then, that for his best!" says Mary, snapping her fingers playfully in his face.

"By my sowl, Mary, but I'll sober you before we lave the flure for all that."

"Faiks, avouragen, you may do your best; you never seen the day that you could beat a Cahill on the flure," and Mary strengthened her beast by a fresh display of agility.

how is every tler to her new od bless them."

ottage.

be widout the and sowl of us, leading in Mary

)h, here he is re, and give us a shook the fiddler

rick's day in the hing at all man, arts." Then four until they began claced by others. se a bit but you'll rd upon the col-

st l" says Mary,

er you before we

your best; you best a Cahill on dher best by a

W 1918 1913

"Arrah! Mary, alanna, is that it; sure you know the Cormack blood never gave in," and James, too, would improve his speed in heel and toe, and snap his fingers, as if in defiance.

"Success, Mary! he's flagging a ben choir / Lay to it James; brave! whist!"

"I'll hould a gallon on Mary."

"Done! said another; a gallon out of James." . .

"No, boys, no," said James Cormack; "I think the colleen has enough of it; as for myself, evourneen machres! I have too much, so let us stop," and he took Mary by the hand.

"Ha, ha!" said Mary, with an arch smile, "I knew that my feet were too light for you, James."

"Sthrike up the fox-hunter's jig," said Shemus-a-

Shemus commerced dancing it by himself, keeping time to the music with his feet and club.

"Success, Shemus. Dhoul a better. Arrah! that's the music; you'd think it is the bow, bow, wow of the hounds you'd hear," said Shemus, all the time keeping his huge feet moving.

"Musha! isn't it pleasant; faith it would nearly make me jump through the windy: there it is again, bow, bow, wow, tallyho harkaway; here Dido, he Juno, tallyho, tallyho, in the mornin'!" and Shemus finished his capers amid roars of laughter.

Reader, have you ever seen an Irish dance? It is none of your stately drawing-room affairs, where you lead your partner with allow and measured step through the maxes of a full set; no such thing. There they are, four, or perhaps eight couples, twisting, turning, capering, anapping their fingers, hitting their hams with their heels, in the full buoyancy of spirits.

"Musha! I think ye have enuff of it now for a sthart; arn't ye betther ait down and have a dhrink," said Mrs. Butler.

"I think so 'coo, ma'am," said the Rover.

So they all sat down around a large table with their girls by their sides, and Mrs. Butler's flowing cans of ale and porter bifore them, to each and all of which they did ample justice.

After a time a volumble flow of soft nonsense, snatches of songs, and sundry hip, hip, hurras! gave forcible proofs of the strength of Mrs. Butler's drink, and also to the very decent manner in which the saint was treated. Shemus a Clough's voice rose like a little tempest above the rest, as he mingled snatches of his favorite hunting songs with others in honor of the saint—

"He-haway, harkaway, tallyho, my boys !
I hear the cry of the fox and hounds."

"The seventeenth of March is Pathrick's day,
And he was the great saint of our isle,
Shure never a word to us does he say,
While we are drinkin' and sportin' the while."

"Say your prayers, the huntuman said,
Before the hounds will tear you;
I have no prayers, poor Reynard said,
For I was hred a Quaker.
Harkaway, tallyho, harkaway!

t; no such thing.

Aps eight couples,

ping their fingers,

s, in the full buoy-

off of it now for a

he Rover.

a large table with rs. Butler's flowing em, to each and all of soft nonsense, hip, hip, hurras! gth of Mrs. Butler's at manner in which a-a-Clough's voice the rest, as he minaunting songs with o, my boys i hounds." Pathrick's day, our isle, as he say, ortin' the while."

nas said,

"O, you, wor the saint, acushla machree;
To handle an alpeen, shure you wor able;
You hunted our varnish, and allewed us a sparce.
Here's your health, while there's a dhrop on the table
Cead mille faithe, a cushla machree

Whooroo, tallyho, harkaway, Sweet Tipperary and the akhy over it!"

"That's a purty song, Shemus," said one.

"It is, the Lord be praised; but it is so hard to sing the two together; you see the hounds, bad scran to thim, do be running in on the saint."

"Never mind, Shemus, he'll keep out of their way."

"Faith he ought for Dido would not respect him one bit. Shure one day she caught myself in the kennel, and she ought to know me betther than the saint."

"Will you go to the election, Shemus." said another.

"Faiks an' that I will; didn't Father Phil say today that every one ought to go and not allow themselves to be walked over, and driven like so manypigs by shooneen landlords and agents."

"It's hard for the people to know what to do, boys," said James Cormack; "there is Mr. Ellis after sending word to all the tenants to vote for Sir W. Crasly, and there is the priest after advising the people to vote against him. Now, if the people vote against the landlord, they are shure of being turned out, and if they vote for him, or his man, rather, they are shure to be ballaraged by the priest."

"It is unpleasant business, no doubt," said Ned Burkem; "I'm thinking of giving up my situation; I never felt anything so much as to have to go and tell the tenants to vote against themselves and their priest."

"It is hard enuff on you, Ned," said another; "but shure you can't help it; and if you left, they would get some one else; so you might as well keep your place."

"Sorra a one of me would keep it twenty-four hours, only that I can do some little good for the tenants, now and then."

"Good luck to you, Ned, there is nothing like the kind word."

"Are all the tenants to meet at Mr. Ellis's, Ned?" said another.

"They are to be there on Tuesday morning, at eight o'clock; the is the word he sent, and to have them not disappoint at their peril; if they do, they know what will happen shem."

"It is a drole country," said the Rover; "the landlord ought to tell the tenant that he must get his vote as well as his rent. If he made these conditions when lettin' the land the thing would not be so bad afterwards. I know if I had a vote, I'd see him to the dhoul before I'd give it to him. Ay, indeed, vote for a man to tyrannize over yourself and your religion!"

"Thrue for you, Shawn; thrue for you!" was the exclamation of the whole party.

age.

said another; you left, they ht as well keep it twenty-four good for the othing like the

at Mr. Ellis's,

ay morning, at nt, and to have if they do, they Rover; "the the must genade these cong would not be a vote, I'd see o him. Ay, iner yourself and you!" was the

"We are low-lived fellows to put up wid it," said a little fellow with a lame leg.

"What san we do?" said another.

"Not to let the voters go wid thim," said the Rover.

"All balderdash," said another; "how soft you sphake."

"Taith, maybe it's no balderdash at all!" said a young fellow, who, with his hands leaning on the table, was silently listening all through; but who now raised his head, and there was a hashing kind of anger in his eye, "maybe it's no balderdash at all!" and he slapped the table with his clenched hand.

"Pooh! what could you do, Lawlor?" said another.

"We could rescue them; shure, I know that the poor pretches of tenants must go against their grain."

"Bravo, Bill," said Burkem; "give me the hand! I wished I could join ye; but ye see I must be on the other side; but, faith, if it comes to a flight, I know who I will help," and he gave a nod, as much as to say, depend upon me boys.

"Come, boys, we have couff about it, let us have a song or a story. Did I ever tell ye how I made a testotler of the greatest drunkard in the whole country."

"No, no, Shawn; out wid it."

"Hem! ha! I'll drink yer health, boys, first, and then the story—mighty good drink it is, the Lord be praised." Shawn hem'd and ha'd, and wiped his mouth with his sleeve, and then commenced:—

"Tis, let me see, about twenty years gone, since I was working at the Mardyke colliery. One day a man was passin' by, in a car, and he blind dhrunk. The mule stood grazin' about the banks of the pit. I went over, but not a stir was in him. So as I was always fond of a joke, I got some of the boys to take him down into the pit with me. When we reached the bottom, we took him about two hundred yards farther, and then tied chains to his hands and feet, He slept very soundly for about two hours; when he came to himself he thought he was in the mule's car. Prooh! prooh! said he. He then felt the chains. So he rubbed his eyes, tried to look about, rattled his chains, but could make nothing of it; he was perfectly bewildered. Where am I? said he to himself; then he felt himself, to make sure of his identity, and felt the place about him to see could he make out where he was, but he was still in the dark. He reflected. Could it be that he had died in his drink and that he was in hell. Oh, wurra, wurra, said he, 'what will become of my poor wife and childers; oh, wurra; warra; Lord, have mercy upon me, a poor miner; O, the darlins, what will they do after me, and to die in my drink; heaven have mercy upon me! O, Kitty, alanna, will you forgive me all I ever drank upon you and the poor childer. O the darlins, what will they do after me?

t is, the Lord and wiped his enced:rs gone, since y. One day a blind dhrunk. ke of the pit. So as I was e boys to take n we reached hundred yards ands and feet, hours; when s in the mule's then felt the to look about, thing of it; he am I?' said he ake sure of his m to see could was still in the at he had died L. Oh, wurra, f my poor wife rd, have mercy rling what will drink; heaven alanna, will you

ou and the poor

ey do after me?

O, holy Mother, intercede for me: oh, oh,' and he commenced a regular course of tears, prayers, and lamentations. After having prayed and cried himself just sick, he began to think of It's a curious place, anyway; I wonder is there anyone here but myself; well, I might as well see. In attempting to stand up, he knocked his head against the roof, with such force, that he fell back again. 'Oh, wurra, wurra, I um kilt now or never. Oh, murther, murther; my head is smached. O, holy Saint Joseph, protect me; where am I, at all; it's as dark as pitch, and if I sthir, maybe it is into some hole I'd rowl O, Lord, O, Lord, have mercy upon mel oh, what will I do, at all, at all; O, Kitty, alanna; if I had you here to console me, esthere!' and he sat down sobbing and lamenting. I stuck some candles in my old hat, and tied chains to my body, and cropt on all fours towards him. My face and body all covered with culm, the candles glimmering light, and the rattling chains, made him take me for the devil. As I approached, he threw himself upon his knees before me exclaiming, My lord, spare me, and tell me where I am, or what brought me here? Don't you see you are in hall?' said I, making my voice as strong as possible. 'O, Lord, have mercy upon me l am I to remain here always?' 'You are to remain here until your body is buried; you are then to be removed to a place filled with never-quenching fire. 'Oh, Mr. Devil,' says he, 'och, darlin'! what will become of my poor wife and childers?' 'How do I know?' says I; 'I am only the porter here; however, I can tell you that your wife will shortly be married again, and that your children will have to look sharp.' . 'O, God help them.' 'Now, don't be mentionin' the name of God, if you plaze, says I, very angrily. 'No, your honor, if you wish it; but you said that my body was to be buried, but here I am, body and all You are not well dead yet, man; but when your body is buried upon earth, you will depart from it here and go to hell, for ever and ever. He burst into tears, and bewailed all his past crimes and sins; he beat his breast and tore his hair; he appeared in the greatest anguish and terror. O, my wife and childers, I have been a bad husband and father to you; I have spent your means in drink and folly. O, Lo-, ah yes, what can I do? oh, oh; if I could see ye again, oh, how changed I'd be.' So great was his paroxysm of grief, that I took compassion upon him.

'Have you any money?' said I to him. 'I had five shillings when I died; I can't say I have it now.' 'Search your pockets.' 'Begad, here it is, your honor.' 'Well, give me that; perhaps I could do something to get you out of this, for the devils scarcely know you are here at all; so if you promise to mend your life, I might get you off.' He threw himself upon his knees, exclaiming, 'May God Almighty bless you; 'tis I will make the good, kind husband and father; and divil,—oh, I beg pardon—

I am only the that your wife that your chil-God help them.' e of God, if you nr honor, if you was to be buried, on are not well is buried upon and go to hell, o tears, and beas; he beat his red in the greatife and childers, ather to you; I and folly. O, , oh; if I could d be.' So great

ottage.

to him. 'I had to say I have it legad, here it is, perhaps I could his, for the devils so if you promest you off.' He iming, May God to the good, kind h, I beg pardon—

took compassion

sorra a dhrop of whiskey I will ever touch agin'.' 'Well, take care,' says I, 'and keep this in token of your promise,' and I gave him a purse with an old coin in it. I then went and brought the worth of the five shillings of whiskey for the boys; I brought down some that I mixed with tincture of opium, and gave it to him to drink. After drinking some, he remarked, 'Isn't this very like the whiskey we had on earth. Och, but I'd nearly swear they are the same; no matter, shure I had better dhrink, anyway; your health, your honor, and he finished his pint. He shortly began to sing and shake hands with me; calling me a good kind of a poor divil; then, when it began to work, he fell asleep. We then quietly hauled him up, and placed him in the car, and turned the mule homewards, for some of the men knew him.

"When he went home, they took him out of the car, and put him to bed; he shortly awoke, and casting his eyes fearfully around, he asked where he was. 'Shure, you are at home, in your own warm bed, achorra,' says his wife. He rubbed his eyes. 'I can scarcely believe it; am I alive at all, or who are you, woman?' 'Oh, avourneen, I am your poor wife; don't you know me?' Well, well, I don't know what to say,' and he felt for the purse; 'there you are, shure snough; all I can say, if I am alive, I am afther comin' out of hell, thanks be to God.' The wife, hearing this, and seeing his wild looks, called in the neighbors. They all collected, and hearing him rave, as they thought, about the horrors of hell, and the like, nodded at one another and tapped their foreheads, as much as to say, 'he's not right here, poor fellow.' At length he gave such good accounts of the place, and exhibited the purse, as corroborative evidence, some began to think that perhaps he was taken there for a start in punishment for his sins; anyway, from that forward, he became a changed man, and led a pious, sober, good life. He is firmly resolved that the devil shan't eatch him again. He often tells the story about his journey to hell; and if any one doubts him, he shows . the purse he got from the devil, in confirmation of it. Who can doubt such evidence, particularly, as it was all black; but some malicious people said it was with culm. No matter, his wife and childers bless the day that I took him to hell."

"Falks, you were better than Father Matthew to him, Shawn," said one.

"Strange things happen," said Mr. Freeny; a little withered specimen of a fairy doctor, that had come to the neighborhood to practice his healing art upon some cows.

"Ah, it's you knows that, Mr. Freany," said Mrs. Butler, with great deference; "shure they say you see the good people walkin' about."

"Indeed I do, ma'am," said Mr. Freany; "they are about the room here this blemed minute; there is one little dawny fellow drinking out of your tumbler, Mrs. Butler,"

e and childers

onfirmation of particularly, as people said it

dr. Freany; a cotor, that had ice his herling any," said Mrs.

Freany; "they minute; there at of your tum"Lord protect us," exclaimed Mrs. Butler, drawing back, and making the sign of the cross upon her forehead.

"Don't be afear'd, ma'am, he'll do you no harm; he is an innocent fellow; but there is a schemer trying to take a kiss from Miss Cahill." Mary bounced saide, and somehow into James Cormack's arms, who, I must say, took the start of the amorous fairy.

Mr. Freeny was distinguished in his way: he could cure the fairy-stricken; he could bring back butter, milk, or any other property unlawfully abstracted by these thieving little gentlemen. He certainly managed his business in a manner to impose upon the poor credulous peasantry. He lived near Killough Hill, a hill, he asserted, that grew all the "harbs" that were required in fairy medicine. His cabin contained two rooms; the inner one was separated, by a thin boarding, from the outer. When any person came for Mr. Freany he was sure to be from home. His mother, in the meantime, draw a full history of the disease from the visitor. Mr. Freany was all the time listening with his car quite near the speaker; he then passed into an out-house. by a private door from the room, and went into the fields. The mother went out and ran in again. "Thank God, you're in luck; he's coming. You might as well go out and meet him." Our dupe goes out and finds Mr. Freeny on the side of the hill picking heris, and laughing to himself. "Stay back, honest man, I know what you want." And then he would relate all the particulars of the disease, whether of person or beast, with an accuracy to astonish the other, and make him look up to him as infallible. When he went home he told how he knew the disease, the times the fits seized the patient, and the like unto his friends; so Mr. Freany became famous, and lived well upon the credulity of his dupes.

Mr. Freany's class is now fast disappearing. However harmless they were in themselves, they were mischievous to society at large.

"Faiks, Mr. Freany, it is not pleasant to have them so near a body," said Mrs. Butler.

"Sorra a haporth they'll do to you, ma'am; they are the quiet, tricksy creatures unless they are vexed, then, nabocklish!"

"Faiks, I beliave they are dangerous, then, Mr. Freany," said a wag who had little faith in their boasted powers.

"Dangerous, you may well say that. I recollect I was sent for to cure a man, not far from this, either. He was one night walkin' out, when he heard the tramp of people comin' towards him; he waited until they came up, and there they were, a dacent funeral. 'God save ye, neighbors,' says he, goin' over and puttin' his shoulder under the bearer. With that they all gave a shout, and left him, coffin and all. When he opened the coffin there was a stump of a stick in it. He took to the bed. I

lage.

ves, they were

he credulity of

ant to have

, ma'am ; they they are vexed,

faith in their

at. I recollect far from this, when he heard im; he waited were, a decent says ho, goin' ler the bearer. left him, coffin in there was a to the bed. I couldn't do anything for him; he was too far gone when they sent for me. Another man came to me. His cows used be always milked by a white hare. I told him to go home, and when the cows would be milking to put the coulter in the fire, and then have some fast dogs and hunt the hare. They did so, and the dogs come up to her and tore a piece out of her leg; however, she escaped and ran into a house; they followed her, and instead of the hare there was an old woman stretched on the bed all covered with blood. The cows were not milked any more."

"Here, Mrs. Butler, this talking is dry work; bring us more drink," said James Cormack.

Mrs. Butler went to the kegs and found them empty. Mrs. Butler was not sorry for this, for she found that their money was all spent, and the only payment she got for the last two gallons were some strokes of chalk upon the back of a board. Mrs. Butler returned empty.

"Sorra another dhrop in it, James," said she.
"No matter; bring us a drop of the hard stuff."

O, holy mother! do you hear this. Going to drink sthrong spirits after two half barrels of beer."

"Come, come, ma'am; let us have it."

"Sorra a drop, James, sorra a drop; I wouldn't have it for a sin on my sowl. So go home now, like dacent boys. Shure ye wouldn't be keepin' the colleens out any longer."

All remonstrances were useless with Mrs. Butler; for she knew that she had emptied their pockets.

But her chief defence was "the colleens. Shure it was time for decent girls of karakter to go home."

The decent girls supported Mrs. Butler; so the lords of creation were forced to yield to such influence.

"Oh, milla murther!" said the Rover, as he ploppeed into a lough, on his way home. "Och, holy Saint Pathrick! look at all I am suffering on your account."

He then singgered across the road into another.

"O.h, blessed saint! look at that agin. Shure I am earnin' you well!"

And as the Rover took a dive into almost every hole on the way home, he certainly brought the saint under a very heavy obligation; which I am sure he will honorably acknowledge when he meets our friend above.

ttage.

ens. Shure it to go home." Butler; so the ld to such in-Rover, as he home. "Och, m suffering on into another.

o almost every ly brought the a; which I am when he meets

CHAPTER XVI.

NOW WE MANAGE ELECTIONS IN IRRELAND—LOND CLEAR-ALL'S OPINION OF PRIMETS AND PROPLE—NOW TEX-ANTS' COMMITTEEDS SHOULD BE MANAGED.

CLEAR CASTLE, as Lord Clearall's princely residence was called, was beautifully and romantically situated. It was built upon a rising ground; and commanded a wide view of a fertile and picturesque extent of country. The extensive lawn was intersected with roads and avenues, and adorned with stately oaks and sycamores.

A pleasant little river babbled on its way by the castle and pleasure grounds, now sheded by the overhanging trees on its banks, and then prattling through some rocky glen. I might apply to it the words of the poet:—

"Eweet are thy paths, oh passing sweet!

By ______ fifr streams that ren
O'er airy steep, through copsewoods deep, Impervious to the sun."

As we have nothing to say to the river, and little to say to Lord Clearall, but what we can learn of him through his worthy agent, we will not take up the time of our readers with one or the other. However, we must introduce our readers into his lordship's study; where himself, his agent, and Sir W. Crasly are making arrangements for the coming campaign. The library was a fine, spacious room, well furnished with richly-bound books, easy chairs, lounges, and the like, as if the muses were to be wooed and won in ease and luxury.

His lordship was seated in an easy chair, at the head of the table. Near him sat Mr. Ellis, looking over some accounts; whilst Sir W. Crasly reclined on a lounge near the window, apparently watching some orange and lemon trees, that were peeping out of the conservatory into the library window. There were several busts, on marble pedestals, of his loriship's noble ancestors around the room; these, too, seemed to occupy much of the honorable gentleman's attention. Perhaps, he was thinking how distinguished he would look in effigy, one of those fine days-for he had little doubt that, as soon as he got into parliament (of which he had no doubt at all) he would so astonish the conglomerated wisdom of England, that he would be honored with a niche araong the penates of his lordly friends. It is no wonder that he hould think so well of himself, for he had spent four years in Oxford, and got a medal in oratory, after reading a speech that a poor plebeian, with more brains than cash, composed for a consideration. He should have graduated, also, if he got his merit; and, to do him justice, there was not a better player at tennis, or fives, or a more expert intriguer in the college.

is agent, and Sir ts for the coming o, spacious room, ooks, easy chairs, nuses were to be easy chair, at the Mr. Ellis, looking V. Crasly reclined parently watching at were peeping library window. rble pedestals, of ound the room; of the honorable he was thinking in effigy, one of le doubt that, as which he had no ish the conglomne would be honstes of his lordly hould think so four years in Ox-, after reading a more brains than ion. He should merit; and, to do player at tennis, r in the college.

He had now come to start his oratorical wares among the "hignorant Hirish." Sir W. Crasly was something of a Cockney in his way. He was a young man of some note in London; a great favorite with the ladies, as he had considerable property in possession and more in expectation. He was, ir. deed,'a very eligible match, and as his heart was rather soft and sentimental, many a penniless beauty had laid her snares to entrap him. He had never been in Ireland before, though he had considerable possessions in it; but he left the uncontrolled management of his estates to his agent, who liberally fleeced the poor tenants to feather his own nest. It is true, he had a great dread of the Irish; for, from all he had read about their cold-blooded murderous crimes and assassinations, all of which were endorsed by his agent, who did not wish him to come over, perhaps to frustrate his own comfortable system of managing his property, he concluded that they were a very "hignorant, barbarous set." He thought that he conferred a great favor on them by coming to misrapresent them, and wondered with what apathy they were receiving him.

"Well, are they ready, Mr. Ellis?" said his lordship, looking up impatiently from a book he was reading.

"Yes, my lord. Shall I trouble you to look over it?"

"Certainly; though, no—let me see what's the gross amount? I hate poring over accounts—twenty thousand three hundred and twenty-one! Why, Mr. Ellis, at my father's death the rental was nearly two thousand more. Now, after ejecting the old tenants, we have spent about ten thousand on building houses and improving the land, and what have we got in return from your cannie Scotch friends?"

"You must consider, my lord, the improved state of the land, with its elegant farm-houses and fences, when compared with the barren, impoverished state it was in when we got it up."

"Certainly, there is an improvement that way; but then a reduction of nearly two thousand, beside the outlay and interest of nearly ten more, is a great drawback. Shure, these fellows, the old tenants, I mean, said they would build houses and drain the land if we but gave them leases."

"You couldn't believe a word they say, my lord. They promise you everything, but perform very little.

They are a thriftless, idle race."

"I think, Clearall," said Sir W. Crassly, with a yawn, "you are better not interfere with them. That is just what my agent says to me; and he knows them better than we do. Your Scotch tenants will have a beneficial effect upon the Hirish. I declare, I never saw prettier farmer's places than you have about here."

"Yes, your honor; his lordship knows what kind of a wild place this was twenty years since. Now, look at it; is it not an honor to his lordship?" said ty-one l Why, ental was nearly jecting the old usand on buildand what have cotch friends?" improved state uses and fences, overished state

nent that way; housand, beside more, is a great e old tenants, I s and drain the

ey say, my lord. rform very little.

Crassly, with a vith them. That; and he knows tch tenants will rish. I declare, than you have nows what kind are since. Now, lordship?" said "Yes, indeed; and you have a devilish pretty little place, too, Mr.—Mr.—what I call you?"

"Ellis," suggested his lordship.

"Ay, Mr. Ellia."

Mr. Ellis winced a little at this, but composedly answered: "Yes, your honor; thanks to his lord-ship's kind patronage and encouragement, and to my own indust. j."

"What are we to do with these Ballybruff tenants, Mr. Ellis?" said his lordship. "I think you were telling me something about serving them with no-

"Yes, my lord; there is a year's rent due on the whole property. You know it is sub-divided into small farms—even adjoining the demesne."

"But have they not paid you some rent lately. I see their names here on the rent roll," and he pointed to the sheet before him.

"Yes, my lord, near a year's rent; but there is another due, and they havn't the means of meeting it. Why, it was cows and geese they offered me to make up the last year's; besides, my lord, it interferes with the appearance of the property very much. I was, the other day, travelling with a gentleman from Scotland, 'Who owns this estate?' said he, pointing to some cabins; 'ian't it a sin to see such fine land going waste?' I declare, my lord, I was ashamed to own it was yours."

Lord Clearall took great pride in the embellishment of his house and grounds; and as Mr. Ellis knew this to be his weak point, he took advantage of it.

"Why not knock them down, and build good slate houses?" said our would-be legislator.

"Well, well; do as you please, Mr. Ellis," said his lordship.

"I think, Clearall, we shouldn't interfere in those things at all," said Sir W. Orasly.

"Well, perhaps you are right, Crealy," said his lordship, in a dubious tone, as if there was zomething wrong somewhere.

"Have you noticed all the tenants about the election, Mr. Ellis?"

"Yes, my lord."

" Well ?"

"A good many promised; others said that it would be hard for them to go against the priest and their conscience."

"Priests and conscience the devil!" exclaimed his lordship, with great warmth. "I don't see why these popish priests should be poking their noses into everything; as for conscience, what conscience have they but the priest's? I tell you, Ellis—and tell them so—we will level the houses over every mother soul of them if they don't vote for us; and then let their priests give them a living."

"I think, Clearall," said Sir W. Crasy, "that there should be a law passed to make priests stick to their paslms. I know I will introduce one, and also one to abolish Maynooth, that hotbed of priestcraft."

and build good gislator.

r. Ellis," said his nterfere in those

frasly," said his here was some-

about the elec-

ers said that it it the priest and

l" exclaimed his don't see why ing their noses what conscience you, Ellis—and sees over every ote for us; and ing."

sely, "that there at stick to their e, and also one priestcraft." "They are a meddling set, Crasly," said his lordship. "Just think you, one of them has written a whole lot of letters about me for turning out some lazy tenants; as if a man couldn't do what he likes with his own. Why, they would fain manage our properties for us."

"Ay, and pocket the proceeds to say masses to send us to heaven," said the honorable gentleman, with a laugh at his wittioism, in which laugh his lordship and Mr. Ellis joined.

"I tell you what, Ellis," said his lordship, "send them word again that you will have cars ready for them at your place on Tuesday morning, and mark the men that refuse. Curse them, to refuse voting as I bid them, and I giving them a living; well, let them try it though!"

"I would make examples of them for others. I had some fellows on my property that refused voting as I bade them; my agent cleared them off at once, except a few that had leases. I think, Clearall, a man shouldn't give leases at all, it makes these fellows so independent; I like to keep the lash hand over them, you see," said the honorable gentleman. His lordship was all this time walking up and down the library in a great fume, to think that his slaves dared gainsay his will—that they dare vote but as he willed and wished; so his lordship said nothing for a considerable time but "Hang them! hang tham, priests and all! the ungrateful lot! but let them try it though. I tell you what,

Ellis, go to them, and say that I sent them word to vote for my friend, and if not, let them be ready to march; do your business, Mr. Ellis, and my friend here and I will recommend you to his Excellency to be appointed a J. P."

"Certainly, Mr. — Oh, yes, Ellis, his Excellency is a particular friend of mine; will feel devilish happy to do that for me," drawled Sir W. Crasly.

Mr. Ellis took his leave; he was in a fix; he was ambitious of the honor of gaining the bench, yet he wished that the tenants should not support Lord Clearall's friends, as this would show his lordship what an ungrateful set they were, and set aside any qualms he might entertain as to the propriety of getting rid of them; however, ambition triumphed.

It is needless to recapitulate the fine promises made by the rival candidates and their friends—the very handsome and polite compliments they paid one another. Sir W. Crasly came forward on true conservative principles. He was for reform, for free trade, for running canals through the country to drain the land, and make every inland town a maritime one. He liked religious equality; it was a good thing; everyone should be allowed to use their own religion; but then, he appead, in his heart, he wouldn't meet any troublesome papists in heaven. He was for supporting the viceroyalty, for he expected to honor Ireland by becoming Lord Lieutenant some fine day. On the other hand, his hon-

ent them word to them be ready to lis, and my friend his Excellency to Ellis, his Excelmine; will feel "drawled Sir W.

s in a fix; he was the bench, yet he not support Lord how his lordship and set aside any the propriety of bition triumphed. the fine promises their friends—the iments they paid forward on true or reform, for free he the country to land town a mariquality; it was a allowed to use oped, in his heart, papiets in heaven. oyalty, for he exming Lord Lieuer hand, his honorable opponent cajoled his dupes with far more liberal promises. To the speculating and selfish, he held out, in a private way, the bait of colonial and custom-house appointments; to the patriotic and no-compromise class, ay, he was the man for them. "He would not sleep quietly on his bed; he would not look upon himself as a freeman possessing a nationality until he wrung from an alien parliament, Repeal of the Union;" loud cheers, and cries of brave, you're the man for us. "Dublin must become in every sense the capital of Ireland, ay, of Europe. Our absentees must return to enrich it by spending their money there-money they have dragged out of the hard industry of the toiling easant; trade and commerce must be restored; the people must be secured from tyranizing landlords, of which, unfortunately, we have too many. Our towns will flourish again; industry and capital will combine to enrich; in fact we must enjoy the millennium of Trish prosperity; and how is all this to be achieved? only the one way my friends, by repeal of the Union; then let your motto be, repeal and no surrender! hurrs for repeal!"

If cheers and shouts be any criterion of the good effects of a speech, Sir William Placeman must be highly gratified at the stunning effects of his oration.

"Repeal, my friends," he continued, "is the grand panaces of all our evile; it will make of us a free people, inhabiting a free nation—

'Great, glorious and free, First flower of the earth And first gem of the sea.'

And this is to be gained by returning men true to the quase a d country; men who will spurn place and pension to serve their country. Let ye have no placement; hunt them from the hustings; cry them down. Make every man, who would have the honor of representing you, pledge himself to independent opposition, as I do now, so help me God! Independent opposition means opposition to every government that will not grant tenant right and repeal of the Union. There is an old adage, 'tell me your company, and I'll tell you what you are.' Now, who are Sir W. Crasly's companions, why, my Lord Clearall, that has made eviction a plaything; that has cleared his estates of most of the Catholic tenantry to make soom for Scotch settlers; but the honorable gentleman has a happy knack of clearing his estates himself, and need not get any lesson from his lordship, on the rights of property, which means the clearance system. In sober seriousness, I do not for a moment think that there is a man among ye that would vote for one who is the sworn enemy of your race, your religion, and your country. You tell me you will be forced to do so-forced! nonsense; stand together as men should do, and if violence should be used, have you not strong arms to resist force by force." If he didn't get an ovation of cheers, it is a queer thing; and then the people

Cottage.

m rning men tru

rning man true to will spurn place Let ye have no ustings; cry them ld have the honor olf to independent e God! Indepento every governright and repeal of ge, 'tell me your u are.' Now, who why, my Lord a plaything; that the Catholic tensettlers; but the knack of clearing et any lesson from erty, which means rioneness, I do not s a man among ye sworn enemy of ur country. You so-forced! nonshould do, and if u not strong arms in't get an ovation id then the people went home to prepare their sticks and rusty pieces, to repel, according to his precepts force by force. If I were to give you all the cajoling speeches made by both parties and their friends, and all the rival puffs by rival editors, for which they were well paid, no doubt, both in cash and with the handsome perspective of a sing berth, somewhere; if I were to give you all these, I should give a chapter to themselves, or rather one to each candidate and his friends.

An Irish election, and I believe an English one, too, produces much rowing, drinking, and ill-will in the country. Irish elections, though, are losing a great deal of their boisterous spirit now, for the people are becoming quite indifferent as to who is returned. They find one class of candidates radically opposed to their interest, and the other but waits for a good market to sell them to the best advantage.

On the election morning, Mr. Ellis had a large number of jaunting cars, and vehicles of every description, ready to convey the voters to be polled.

There was a breakfast of cold meat, and plenty of bread and beer, ready for all. There was a motley group of Scotchmen, Protestant dependents, and a fair sprinkling of Catholics; the former laughed and ate with great gusto, the latter held down their heads, and slunk into corners. At length the procession formed into marching order. A huge four-horse car led the van; Mr. Baker, Mr. Ellis, Hugh Pembert, and several others, all well armed, occupied this. They had neither banners nor music, as they wished to get off as noiselessly as possible; for, notwithstanding all their preparations, they did not feel too safe. They knew that they had boasted for weeks before that they would go in spite of the people—ay, and drive the tenants with them, too. When our party came near the village of Straggletown, their way was blocked up by a large pile or barricade of stones, placed across the road. A number of people, armed with pitchforks, picks, and old guns, were crowded behind these, who raised a shout of defiance, and whirled their rude weapons about.

"What do ye want?" said Mr. Ellis, standing up

"What do we want, indeed! We want to have ye go home, with the few honest men ye forced wid

"We're not forcing any one," said Mr. Ellis;

"any one that likes may go home."

"Ay, but dare they," shouted the crowd. "Shure if they did, they wouldn't have a roof to cover them shortly."

"Come, come! Remove these obstructions; if not, we will force our way. We are well armed."

"So are we, honey. Take your ease, Mr. Ellis; it's not a house you are going to level now, avick "Get down, boys," said Mr. Ellis to some of his well armed, occuners nor music, as easly as possible; parations, they did they had boasted go in spite of the s with them, too. llage of Straggleby a large pile or the road. A numrks, picks, and old se, who raised a eir rude weapons

Ellis, standing up

We want to have men ye forced wid

said Mr. Ellis;

se crowd. "Shure roof to cover them obstructions; if re well armed." ir case, Mr. Ellis; level now, avick lis to some of his men, "and remove these; we are well armed; this is the queen's highway; so we will pass in spite of them. So get your arms ready."

A wild, derisive shout from the crowd followed

this announcement

"Oh! stop, stop, for God's sake!" said Mr. Baker; "let us turn back, or let me stick myself somewhere. Oh! oh! I knew it would come to this. Oh! the d—d papists will murder every mother soul of us.
Oh! boys, honey, don't do anything rash!"
"Ha! ha! ha! poor Jack Baker," shouted the crowd. "Where are all you ever killed now of the d-d pariete? We will pay you back now."

"Oh! sorra s one I ever killed; I wouldn't hurt

a hair of your heads," shouted Mr. Baker.

"Mr. Baker, you may return, if you choose," said Mr. Ellis, "or hide in the well of the car there; it is specious enough. As for me, I am resolved to go on, in spite of these dogs, too; so, boys, get ready, and the first man that prevents the obstructions being removed, I'll pop him."

"Hurrah! hip, hurrah! for Mr. Ellis," derisively . shouted the growd. "Arrah, he is the man to knock the house over the poor, God bless him. Shure it is the great change since he came here with the bag on his back, now to be at the head of a lot of blues, driving poor Catholic tenants to vote for their enemies. Arrah! we'll teach you a lesson now,

"Clear away these stones, boys," shouted Mr.

Ellis to his men, who had all collected about him, "and let us see who will prevent ye."

"Faith, Mr. Ellis, avourneen, maybe it's the daylight will be shining through your ugly careass, if you attacent firin'." shouted the mob.

you attempt firin'," shouted the mob.

"We'll give up the Catholics; sure we don't want to take the decent men against their will," said Mr.
Baker.

"Hold your tongue, if you please, Mr. Baker. We will give up nothing, but force our way through them," said Mr. Ellis, very resolutely.

A large crowd had now collected at both sides of the barricade; women and children joined in a regular chorus of screams; with the shouts of the men at one side, whilst the party at the other was making the best possible display of their guns to intimidate the others. Some now began to tear away the stones and blocks, and a regular hand to hand meles ensued. Clods, dirt, and stones, were flung at the voters. Mr. Ellis took mark at a man that appeared a leader, and fired; the man fell. A shout of execration and fury ran through the crowd.

"Lawlor is shot; let us have revenge; hurrah! down with the Orangemen," was the wild cry of the people, and they made a dash with stones and other missiles at their enemies. Those near the barricade dashed over it and grappled the guns of the others. Shots were fired by both parties, and a desperate conflict ensued. Mr. Ellis got a blow of a stone, and was knocked off the car. His servants dragged

ob. are we don't want eir will," said Mr.

lease, Mr. Baker.

our way through ely.

d at both sides of en joined in a regshouts of the men other was making r guns to intimin to tear away the and to hand meice were flung at the can that appeared A shout of exe-

crowd. evenge; hurrah! he wild ory of the stones and other ear the barricade uns of the others.

and a desperate blow of a stone. servants dragged

How we Manage Elections in Ireland. 267

him to the rear. Mr. Baker availed himself of Mr. Ellis's advice, and stuffed himself into the well of the car, taking care to draw the lid after him. It now became a scene of fearful strife and confusion. The struggling and curses of the men were enlivened by shots and raps of stones, joined with the screams of women and children. Horses, too, in their fright, dragged their cars against each other; some were rolled into the dykes, whilst others turned back and fied. The people began to collect in multitudes from the neighboring country, and Mr. Ellis's party, seeing that they were getting the worst of it, and that reinforcements were arriving, began to retreat. Some ran into lubises, some unharnessed horses, and jumped on their backs; others trusted to their feet. Mr. Ellie's servants secured a car for himself and his friends, and, having collected a body-guard of cavaliers, mounted on horses with their harness dashing around them, they effected a beautiful retreat.

A party of policemen came up in time to cause a diversion in favor of the flying enemy; otherwise, they would not have been so successful.

The people now hurraned and cheered in the wild frenzy of victory. They dashed the cars about -they dragged them into the village and piled them together, and then threw a few loads of turf among them, and set fire to all. It to be the

"Sthop!" said Shemus-a-Clough; "I must break up this ould divil of a car," and Shemus mounted it, and began to strike at it vigorously. we had a "

Shemus struck one blow upon the well, which shattered it in pieces. A deep groan resounded from the inside. Shemus staggered back with affright.

"Lord have mercy on me! Sure I didn't do anything, at all, at all!" said the voice from the well.

"Who is it?" "Drsg him out!" "Set fire to him!"

"It's I," said the voice. "For the love of God, spare me. I didn't do anything. Sure I am here all the time.

"Who are you, man alive? Come out, and let us

"O! don't ye know me? I am your friend, Mr. Baker; that never harmed anybody."

"Ha, ha, ha! You that killed so many of us, to call yourself our friend. Faith, that's a good joke, anyway."

"Throw in the fire on top of the ould sinner."
"Roast him alive." "Let us put it under him, though, and give him time to repent. That's more than he did to the poor men he shot."

"O! good people, spare me, for the love of God. Let me out! I never shot a man in all my life. No; I wouldn't. Sure it is only a way of talking I had. O! holy Joseph, will ye roast me alive!"

Now, in justice to the mob, they had not the least notion of injuring Mr. Baker, for they knew his cowardly, harmless disposition too well; however, they were resolved to enjoy his misery for a time.

Mr. Baker, all this time, lay on his back in the on the well, which can resounded from seck with afright, ure I didn't do anyce from the well.

""Set fire to him!"

or the love of God, Sure I am here all lume out, and let us

un your friend, Mr.

d so many of us, to that's a good joke,

of the ould sinner."
put it under him, pent. That's more for the love of God.

u in all my life. No;
vay of talking I had.

to be they knew his too well; however, misery for a time.

on his back in the well; his face was turned up, so that he could see the brands of fire moving to and fro, and believing every minute that they would be hurled in on him. He prayed, and cursed, and thick perspiration ran down his body.

"Can't you come out until we see you?"

"Gog, gog! I can't; for the love of heaven pull

"Put plenty of fire under him, and smoke him out," said a man with an old musket in his hand, and he winked at the others.

"He is fine and fat; it's no harm to take a little of the sap out of him," said a little thin man, leaning on a crutch.

"Och, murther, murther! the savages. O gog, isn't there any one to save mele Gog, gog! but I'll hang every mother soul of the d—d pa—; no, I won't, though. Oh! will ye roast me alive?"

"Since you'd hang us, we are better, Mr. Beker."
"Oh! devil take me tongne; sure, I didn't know what I was saying. I swear by the holy Bible, that what I was saying. I swear by the holy Bible, that I won't hang one of you. Give me the Bible, and I'll take my cath on it."

"Here are the police, here are the police!" shouted the women.

Deuce take them, they should come to spoil our fun; but if they don't go back quicker than shey come, nabocklish."

The police, having heard of Mr. Baker's situation, resolved to make an attempt to resouse him.

"We only want to get Mr. Baker," said the ser-

"Oh, we will thrate him dacently, if ye let us alone," said the mob.

"Let him come with rs, then," said the sergeant.

"Divil a step, unless we like it ourselves; we have the upper hand new, and will keep it; hurrah, hurrah! down with the bloody police."

"Halloo, gog, don't leave me here, the bloody papists. Oh, they will burn me,—I mean, if ye leave me here; I am burning, as it is," shouted Mr. Baker, with all his might.

"Do ye hear what he calls us? d—d papists," said an old woman with a goggle eye, and a few teeth in the front of her mouth

"Arrah, honey, as you're burning, I'll cool you," said another, dashing the contents of a chamber vessel in his face.

"Och, murther, murther; I am smothered;" and Mr. Baker began to cough and curse, alternately. "Ugh, ugh, ugh; oh, I'm smothered. Gog, but they'll burn me, the savages. Oh, the damned pa—, ugh, ugh; for the love of God, will ye let me out of this, ye rape?"

"Oh, holy Mother! do ye hear what he calls us? 'raps,' enagh; I want to know who was the rap, but his own thief of a mother? Oh, but burnin' is too good for him."

"Oh, no, I didn't mean it; ye are the decent

Cottage.

ntly, if ye let us

aid the sergeant urselves; we have oit; hurrah, hur-here, the bloody I mean, if ye leave houted Mr. Baker, d d papists," le eye, and a few

ng, I'll cool you," smothered;" and surse, alternately. nered. Gog, but Oh, the damned God, will ye let what he calls us? who was the rap, Oh, but burnin' is e are the decent women, every mother's soul of ye; let me out and I'll give re all I have."

While Mr. Baker was keeping up this parley with the women, a regular fight was going on between the police and the men. The mob rushed on them with stones, shafts of ears, burning brands, and the like; and before they had time to fire a shot, the guns were dashed out of their hands, and themselves hunted into the barrack, which was soon demolished about their ears.

During the conflict, Mr. Baker was in a terrible suspense. If he encouraged the police, and if that they were beaten, he feared the people would revenge it upon him; again, if he encouraged the people, it would look like treason, so he compromised the matter, by calling out—

"Och, murther, do you hear that rapping? oh, these women will burn me. Gog, they will kill one another. That's it, stick the bloody pa—, ahem. Oh, boys, honey, don't ye kill one another. Shure, they will let me out of this. Why don't ye fire, ye cowards—that's, I mean—don't, don't will the bloody pa—, ahem—that's, gog, what on earth am I saying?"

Now, a bright thought at mok him, so he appealed to the women.

"Och, honeys, darling! will ye let me out; all this fighting is on my account; shure, I'll make peace."

Some of the women, whose friends were engaged, tore open the well, and dragged him, half dead, from it.

"Run, now, Mr. Baker, for the love of God, and make peace."

Mr. Baker did run, as well as he was able, but it was into a house, where he enseonced himself under a bed, from which he did not stir until the appearance of a troop of dregoons in the village. This fight was a great epoch in Mr. Baker's life, and often did he relate the marvellous feats he performed.

With wild cheers and yells the mob returned to the burning carriages. The dragoons even had to return without the voters; they only succeeded in rescuing the police and Mr. Baker.*

The people gained a great victory; some were killed, no doubt, but what of that, more were killed of the other party; and Sir William Placeman was returned victoriously,—Sir William—the advocate of free trade, reform, Repeal of the Union, and I don't know what not. Sir William present the people, their devetion to the sacred cause of nation-

I have not drawn on my imagination for this election shindy. Such occurrences are rather frequent in Ireland, witness Six-mile Bridge, Limerick, &c. The people are seldom so fortunate as in my little row; but any one that has witnessed the fight between the electors and the mob near the village of Newhirmingham, in 1842, will confess, that I have not done justice to that precious skirmish, in which there was more blood shed than the rival candidates were worth. Ar, to Six William Placeman, no one will be at a loss in mistaking him for his prototype, Billy Keogh.

e was able, but it and himself under until the appearthe village. This Baker's life, and us feats he per-mob returned to cons even had to only succeeded in tory; some were more were killed am Placeman was m—the advocate the Union, and I a praised the peo-

r this election shindy, dand, witness Siz-mile is sofortunate as in my the fight between the weblraningham, in 1842, hat precious skirmish, rival candidates were to will be at a loss in How we Manage Elections in Ireland. 273

ality; what a secrifice they made in returning him, the humble advocate of a holy cause, a cause dearer to him than life.

Sir William shortly sold them, himself, and the cause for a snug berth; who could blame him, shouldn't he turn his useful talents to account? besides, he was a penniless barrister.

sides, he was a penniless barrister.

There were some of his clamorous supporters ridiculous enough to grumole at Sir William's change; but then, he silenced their absurd objections, by getting places for themselves or their friends.

State store hand steep to seague with a with an expension of

The state of the s

this said (want has grow it was specified.

of a commendation tool of connections of the state of

The put the front here is not perfect that the second section is the second section of the second section of the second section is the second section of the second section of the second section is the second section of the second section is the second section of the second section in the second section is the second section of the second section in the second section is the second section of the second section in the second section is the second section in the second section in the second section is the second section in the second section in the second section is the second section in the second section in the second section is the second section in the second section in the second section is the second section in the second section in the second section is the second section in the second section in the second section is the second section in the second section in the second section is the second section in the second section in the second section is the second section in the second section in the second section is the second section in the second section in the second section is the second section in the second section in the second section is the second section in the second section in the second section is the second section in the second section in the second section is the second section in the second section in the second section is the second section in the second section in the second section is the second section in the second section in the second section is the second section in the second section in the second section is the second section in the second section in the second section is the second section in the second section in the second section is the second section in the second section in the second section is the second section in the second section in the second section is the second section in the section is the second section in the section is the second section in the section is section in the section in the section is section in the section in the section is section in the section in th

CHAPTER XVIL

A NEW LESSON ON THE TREATMENT OF FAMILY.

We must now draw the curtain over two years. It is not that these two years were barren in stirring or exciting events. Never were two years laden with more misery to an unhappy people. The partial failure of the potato crop, which threatened the peasantry in the early stages of our tale, had now become general and fatal. The potato was the staple food of the peasant; it fed his pig to meet the landlord's claims; it supported himself and family in health and robustness; it left him his little garden of oats or wheat, to supply himself with clothes, and other little luxuries. So, in these days the Irish peasant had no fear of hunger or want; for the potato seemed to spring up abundantly every place. The peasant had enough, and some to spare, with a cead mille failte, for the wandering boccagh and the houseless poor. These times had passed, and misery and starvation, such as never afflicted a wretched people before, now reigned in the country.

We have passed over two years, two years of starvation; but we come to the time when the country was lying prostrate with fever and famine, and when the energies of good men were aroused to stay or over two years. barren in stirring two years laden cople. The par- . ch threatened the our tale, had now tato was the staple to meet the landself and family in m his little garden f with clothes, and se days the Irish or want; for the lantly every place. e to spare, with a g boccagh and the passed, and misery flicted a wretched country.

OF TAMENT.

, two years of starwhen the country I famine, and when aroused to stay or alleviate their dreadful ravages, and of bad men, to stimulate them, in order to exterminate a helpless and now cumbersome tenantry.

The famine was doing its work, and had already sent thousands to premature graves, and thousands to die in foreign lands, and thousands more to feed the fishes of the Atlantic.

You may sak me what was the Government doing all this time? Was it not passing remedial measures to give employment to the poor? England derives an immense revenue from Ireland; surely she could not let her starve. My friends, how was the Union carried, but by coercion and bribery; and now, what better levers could be found to upset an incipient rebellion—the yearnings of a people for nationality—than famine and starvation. Ah! they were a God-send more effective than thirty thousand British bayoneta!"

This potato blight and consequent famine were powerful engines of state to uproot millions of the peasantry, to preserve law and order, and to clear off surplus population, and to maintain the integrity of the British empire.

But, then, there were measures passed. England wished to show her humanity to the world. There were about ten millions voted for the relief of Ireland. How this was administered we mean to show. What could be expected from a government whose leading organ—when a wailing cry of starvation arose from Ireland, when such as could, fied, frightened at the dreadful ruin at home; when the grave closed over a million of starved peasants—called out in a jubilee of delight: "The Celts are gone—gone with a vengeance. The Lord be praised!" Hear ye that: "The Lord be praised!" For what? Because about a million and a-half of fellow-creatures had died of starvation; because about as many more had fied beyond the Atlantic, to neatle beneath the sheltering wing of the glorious stripes and stars, or to sleep in its welcome bosom.

Ah! this was a grand and Christian consummation to sing a "Te Deum" over! But, then, they were mere Irish. Whilst the Irish were struggling to outlive a famine, such as never devastated a wretched country before, about six millions of the vental of Ireland were spent annually by absentee landlords in England. Irish produce, to the amount of about seventeen millions sterling, was annually exported to England, and yet the Irish were starving at home. It is strange that they should export beef and butter and corn to such a vast amount while struggling against a fearful famine. In no other country in the world but Ireland would this strange anomaly be allowed; for it was calculated that during the worst years the produce of the country was capable of supporting double its population. But the farmer had to sell his crops to pay the landlord, who was as exacting as in the best of times, and even more so, for the spirit of eviction had gone forth, and now was the landlord's oppratunity.

ipes and stars, or

Cottage.

an consummation then, they were struggling to outtated a wretched s of the rental of bsentee landlords amount of about nnually exported were starving at ould export beef ast amount while ne. In no other rould this strange culated that durthe country was population. But pay the landlord, est of times, and viction had gone opportunity.

After parting with the produce of his farm to meet the landlord, the poor farmer was left as destitute as the laborer. He had not the potato; he had to try and till his farm to support his family and servants, and to meet poor rates and county taxes, and various other calls.* Indeed, the only thriving and various other calls.* Indeed, the only thriving

* It is impossible to give in the pages of a nevel, without detracting from its marits as a novel, a correct account of how the money, voted and given to relieve the famine, was equandered and wasted.

It is calculated that England draws from Ireland, yearly, the vast tribute of man six millions through absented landlords, and about eighteen millions of imports, beddes a vast revenue. When we consider this, and that one of the terms of the Union was, that each country was to pay the annual charge upon her even debt. Ireland than owed but twenty-one millions, a part of which was for bribing members to cell their country to England! England owed the new sum of 446 millions. What did she do? Like a dear sieter, that she is, she joined her national debt to ours, or, to use a proper phrase, "Consolidated them." Well, this was affectionate—wasn't it. Considering that we owed but 21, and she 466 millions! But this was but a small item of the benefits arising from the Union. Considering all this, one would not be surprised if England came forward liberally and opened the exchequer to save us from the horrors of on dreadful a calumity.

In 1846 the landlords, not to be taken short, selved on the cettle and crops to secure their rents. The pase rate man, the county oces collector, and all other claimants followed in his track, leaving the poor farmer reduced to begarry, soon to become a purper himself.

In January there was a grant of 484,000 for public works, as much more for drainage of selates. These grants were placed at the disposal and the opinit to claim money, not as alms, but as that right; but the does was laughed at, to think, badeed, that Iraland should have any dealin on the exchequer. It is no wonder that Faglish Journals beatered us. To leap as from on the factors are one of fastruction was "the deals was laughed at, to think, badeed, that Iraland should have any dealin on the exchequer. It is no wonder that Faglish Journals bea-classes now in Ireland were deputy sheriffs, bailiffs, and rate collectors. These had plenty of employment in levelling houses, distraining for rent and taxes, and the like pastime. These were very profitable transactions then, for the sheriff had constant employment and was well paid. The others, too, were not idle; and as the poor farmers were not able to buy up the stock, the considerate drivers bought them for about half their value themselves; add to this, large deductions by way of fees, and you may form some notion of the amount placed to the wretched owner's account.

It is true, we got in return for all our export, Coercion Bills, Arms Acts, and the like. We also got an additional force of about twenty thousand men to keep us from grumbling. So, you see, the beneating the poor, for it was wasted on unproductive works. It discouraged private enterprise, and dragged landlords, farmers, and laborer to one common rais. Next cause the out-door relief system, with the quarter-nere clause; so that any poor wretch holding a quarter of an are was disqualified from relief unless he gave up his little farm.

Had these various sums of money been spent in some useful, reproduestive employment, they might have efficient a vast sincent of good. Had they been employed in tilling and seeding the poor man's farm, they would indeed do a great deal towards benefiting the country; but, no, they were spent in testing political cornown and practical philits; and in extending government petronage by employing commissioners, imprectors, olertz, overseers, and the lite, of whom there wore no less than 10,000 enlarted out of money given as loans and grants for the poor. This is the way the money work, and the poor were left to starve! I Eundiorda, too, through a seifish and narrow spirit of self interest, oppressed the farmers, and thus harried their properties into the Insumbered Estates Courts. They acted like the members of the body when they rose in war against the stomach—they did not see that their well-doing was mutual?—Avenon.

ty sheriffs, bailiffs, plenty of employing for rent and ese were very prosheriff had consaid. The others, poor farmers were onsiderate drivers value themselves; ay of fees, and you ount placed to the or all our export, ho like. We also twenty thousand So, you see, the Irish had no reason to complain, unless they were too hard to be pleased. We also got a loan of about ten millions, half of which had to be repaid by instalments; add to this some private grants, and we ought to be grateful indeed. When we consider that the same England gave about twenty millions to turn negroes wild from whom she never received the least benefit, we are not to be surprised at the noble generosity that urged her to give us, who send her about twenty-three millions of our produce and money annually, a loan of ten millions to keep us from starving, or rather to protract our wretched fate. 1 1 1 1 1

All this time the British Parliament was voting millions to enlarge English dockyards, to strengthen English fortifications, to beautify English parks and museums, and to make faster her iron gripe upon her "dear sister island." When we complained of the apathy of the English government about an Irish famine, we got an Arms Bill. When we complained of the ruined state of our trade, war ships were sent into our ports with arms and ammunition. When we said we were starving, give us employment, powder mile and fortifications were set to work.

In 1827, after the defeat of the Catholic question, five millions of bullets were ordered to Ireland to quieten her; some one then wrote-

"I have found out a gift for my Brin

11.0 11.0 11.0 11.0 11.0 12.0

IMAGE EVALUATION TEST TARGET (MT-3)

Photographic Sciences Corporation

23 WEST MAIN STREET WEBSTER, N.Y. 14580 (716) 872-4503 CIHM/ICMH Microfiche Series. CIHM/ICMH Collection de microfiches.

Canadian Institute for Historical Microreproductions / Institut canadian de microreproductions historiques

England seems to have great confidence in this

Rogland seems to have great confidence in this, her favorite panases, for all our ills even yet; so she is very fond of repating the does.

Local committees were appointed throughout the country for the management and distribution of public money grants, rates and the like. Unclease public works were fast setting in. Of course Lord Cleanell was the manager of one of these committees. Mr. Ellis had a grist mill near the village. There was a small private house adjeining; in this the committee held their deliberations. Lord Cleanell was in the chair. Several of the meighboring gentry and respectable ratepayers were also present. all was in the chair fleveral of the maighboring gentry and respectable ratephyers were also present. "I have," said his loweship, "got about a thousand pounds, which set use to spend on some public work, such this loweship, a hill, or filling up a hellow, or the iffus, wow, this will give a great deal of employment, and Illiops it's taly the forestmer of more. We have now to gelect what work we will commence at our wheetens of course, to be approved of by the Board of Worker, but this is a more matter of form, at one of the minimal owns in my particular from a love of the manual manual transfer in the large Kaushastrij hilly it is stamped in it is no steep, and it is a regular themosphire to the village."

"I chink no too, Mr. Ellin and his lordshi but, then, we much halts the equations of the dence in this, on yet; so she

tage.

the graph of hroughout the listribution of like. Uncle t course Lice these some

Now, as all the gentlemen present were more or less dependent on his lordship for favors, patronless dependent on his lordship for favors, patronage, and the like, it was not reasonable to expect that they would oppose him, though they well knew that the levelling of Ennskeering was of no earthly benefit to any one care to his lordship and Mr. Ellis, for it was on the road to his lordship's residence and to Mr. Ellis's mile, so they all bowed their assent.

"Will ye agree to that, gentlemen?"
"Yee, my lord."

"Yee, my lord."
"Now, we have to dominate a payenator, ever-ses, and clerk; so there must be a great dust of money intrusted to the pay-mater, he must be a person well secured; if think his would be a very it person; I will be his security."

person well secured; I think Mr. Hills would be a very At person; I will be his security."

They all, of course, modded enters.

"What's the salary, my lood?" saked a bother-down gentlemen, that expected it for blacell.

"Why, I can't exactly on; perhaps tin pounds a week."

"I think we should also nominate Mr. Punks and Mr. Burkers on courses and clock it had were and law ; one has list thirty shillings a week, the

Description of the state of the worthy person you should recommend gentle-THE RESTRICTION OF THE REAL PROPERTY.

There was a general vote of theaks to his lord-whip.

"Now we have to see about a loose for our meetings, and for giving out-door relief; I think this a very satisfied one, indeed," and his leedship looked about the quafortable room, with its bleship fire."

The others thought so too.

"Now, Mr. Bills, what might be the rept of

"Oh! whatever your lordibly choose."
"No! no! I haven't he selection; asses your reat, for these gentlemen to consider!"
"Would ten chillings a week he too much, my lord?" acid Mr. Ellin, with the sir of one making a great sacrifice for the cause of humanity.
"Braily I think not considering its appearance and neighbors," said his lordship.
"Would not a cheaper home do!" timidly aggested one of the committeer. "I meetly ask it for information's make, my lord," said his sourcesting himself.

himself.

"Well; perhaps not said his landship; it but these, where is the great saving in a dam chillings a week; besides, look at the comfert of this house, and the safety of histing it so many the mills within a call of the politicaryon know much because hours have the

aks to his lord-

on for our meet.

7. I think this a leadship looked a blazing fire."

be the rent of

ion to much my of one making a anity.

to fritimidly seg-merely ask it for id his someting were collected outside the door, waiting the issue of the meeting. Some were living skeletons, tottering with disease and weakness. Some looked like scare-crows, dressed up in rags, and moved by some inward machinery.

"Arrah i shure it would be decenter for ye to kill us intirely," said a westered looking weenen, croached buildes wall, with a child at her breast.

crouched beside a wall, with a child at her breast.

"Three foregon, Reg." and another; "corre a mornel I ate them has days int turnip-tops and cabbage, and there is limit dying with me at home."

"Lord help un," said snother; "they are the terrible times intirely."

"I haven't a bit me, a sup, her a spack to warm myself, and my tour thildren," acid another poor watch.

"Will we hear to be starred this way t", said the men; "share it's better for me to be kill at wear), hoys and one green wires, and the shilder."

" East us throw down the house over them; there's real souther "should another,"

" Arish! don't ye," and another, with a scorabil laugh; "ye'll just a green deal from Lord Clearal, that bearied and another, with a scorabil laugh; "ye'll just a green deal from Lord Clearal, that bearied and another, with a scorabil laugh; "ye'll just a green deal from Lord Clearal, that bearied and all its ye are

"Let us brake in the foor!"

Some heavy stones were thing against the door, and wild yells rang from the men, and a will of hunger and despair from the women and shildren.

"We are going to commence work on Knock-coving on Monday next," mid his hadship from the orrig on Monday next," said his bedship from the window.

"What will feed us until them?"

"Pull in your head, you tyrant you, that throw my poor othe father out at the house, and he dying, and wouldn't have blue the house, and he dying, and wouldn't have blue the house over him to grap in."

"Ooh! share that's his through; itis he knows how to quinch the poor man's fire; but he'll got into a warm sorner for it some fine day himself.

"Then hok to the tyrant; but me drag him out, himself and his d—d heaterd of an agent!"

"Break in the house Give my male! To have it inside there, ye old only no.

"It is better to divide what meal is in the house, "It is better to divide what meal is in the house, "you'll be paid for it."

"To think my too," said life, little, who forced, that it would be saless without he have a little to the paid for it."

"I think my too," said life, little, who forced, that it would be saless without he have a little to the heater and you will all gave well as the hill on bloodley work."

Told.

the ho-knows how at holl got into a draudt," ne drag him ent, an agent !" y gnalo t. To have palite in the house, which;

Mr. Ellis returned home entiated that he had made good has of the day. He had not his house to advantage; he had use got a handsome malery for himself for deing nothing. He had been lately appointed a justice of the years, so that he could now all out the himself and he maylettrial power with his lordship. His lordship was the sheeff for the maning year, and he was to be his injusty. He had theired off the making the historial power with his lordship was the sheeff for the maning year, and he was to be his injusty. He had theired off the making beautiful to the historial power of the histor

The O Dennells of Gies Cottage.

that the Commaks were resolved to shoot him, we them a nice lodge on his property, and some comployment, at remaintenive wages; he also were disappointed into his compley as housemaid. Pembutt and Durbon house, superted this, so were disappointed in their place; but they loid

doty to ramble about the splendid rooms of her state's house. Her flowers, her pictures, her little pets were now become too familiar to her mind; so her heart craved for some one to respond to that mysterious seasthing that threshold within it. She loved her father dearly; yet he was a cold business man, that little understand or appropriately her grantle, alinging disposition. Not that he was about within all the learning that wealth many and the learning that the learning

bles of the workings and promptings of her own beart, should feel dethered by the attentions of so plone, so been, and so workly a man as the Rev. Mr. Rly. It is corpoining though that so, showed and colorabling a man as Mr. Rills did not so the denger of decision deviates a young and or see the continue of decision of the Rev. Mr. Rills leaked special mather plant, then Mr. Rills leaked special mather plant, then Mr. Rills leaked special power, and given one, shows the mathematic ferminal plant, then Mr. Rills leaked special power and given one, shows the instance of the power and given one, show the instance of the plant work in alway's clothing certains that the Eget Mr. Rily was for a main service of the content that the Eget Mr. Rily was for a main service of the dether as with the despets. This content the fall the dether as with the despets of the despets. It is only eight to patch from a white that instance a crimbinary of the Rills and the decision. There is a healy called the Eigens Rills Revision for the Charles and residence of the decision. Rev. people and the Charles and residence of the Rills and Revision of the Charles and residence of the Rills and the content of the Rills and the college of the content of the Charles and provide a college to the Charles and provide a college of the Charles and provide and the college of the college.

schools," and their ministers "soupers." Whether it were the Bibles and tracts, or the meal and soup that influenced them, several turned over; but I must say that as soon as they were able to get a living again, they abandoned the new doctrines for their old religion. Some of these this location were sealous, sincere men of education who noted from conscientious motives; but others, particularly the Scripture-readers, were illiterate men, who made a traffic of the word of God. Though the Rev. Mr. Bly took the title of Rev., still it to be doubted very much if any college or bishop conferred this dignity upon him; however, as he has it, by courtesy we will style him such.

He was a Scotchman, and had some sequentiation with Mr. Billie's biends, from one of whom he got a letter of introduction; this secured him a traffic of introduction; this secured him a traffic house, and his lower placestic, histmusting mainners, a continuence of it there. The Rev. Mr. Bly was attended by a servant. He have a very brothesty resemblance to him; his name was Adam Steen. Adam Green was as scales and plous as his master, and could were in matter was a backing them. I have a look too.

Adam Steen. Adam Green was as scales and plous as his master, and could were in ministro. They, he again? I may, make he woulder master. They, he again? I may, make he woulder and place of his master. They, he again? I may, make he woulder and place of his master. They, he again? I may, make he woulder and place of his master. They, he again? I may, make he woulder and place of his master. schools," and their ministers " soupers." Whether it were the Bibles and tracts, or the meal and soup

the cheerful fre, in Mr. Ellie's parlor; beside him at Listic Ellis, and she looked into his face with a confiding, childish scratiny, as if to eatch the words, that fell from his lips, or to, reed the thoughts that flitted through his testile brain. The table was laid, and glasses and decenters sparkled in array, for dimense was verting Mr. Ellie's arrival was for dimense was verting Mr. Ellie's arrival was for dimense has delayed him?" and Mr. Sly looked at the dimer-hable and sighed; said Listic; he is generally in at dimer-hable and sighed; said Listic; he is generally in at dimer-hable and sighed; said Listic; he is generally in the hard dimer-hable and sighed; said Listic; he is said; with dem later than dimershours; was discounted the said of the listic and said the listic and listic than discounted him to make people for the his said; he had a said with a said to make month that my father has dend nothing to make month delike him? It was a popular that had a painful fluid, and done in the discounters and effect it may a gaple will not reason, between terms and effect it may a gaple will not reason, between terms and effect it may a done had to reject.

or; beside him his face with a such the words thoughts that table was laid, a array, for ding

he is generally bing of impor-ly looked at the t my father has.

thin !" word and will not reason

The Rev. Mr. My passed his hand around Limic's wait to console her.

"Oh, Mr. My, I never thought of the like before; whit would become of me?"

"Why, disting; friends would care one with such distoring property; sy, they would fawn spon you."

"Oh, but I have no friends, no one to two me; no one to two me; but him and have me in a sure for me, but him and have me in a sure for me, but him and have me in a sure for me, but him and have me in a sure for me, but him and have me in a sure for me in the form and blushed amidst here there.

"Say the words Limin has secret and make me."

"Say the words, Limie, love, say it, and make a hunt; that har been but as discoute and mount for as your own happy. Oh, Limie, there are others, there is one, at Yeart, builds your paps, who could ears you, who could love your who could discout to make you who could love you who could discout to make you happy; allow him but the privilege of stating how him infloctions are wound up in you, and he shall be happy, though you should deep him than."

zienesd no such feeling, for he did not love that frail, confiding creature; he loved her large fortune, her brilliant worldly prospects. He felt that tune, her brilliant worldly prospects. He felt that he was betraying the confidence of his host, in thus stealing, or rather tempering with, the affections of an innocent, loving, girl; but then, the bait was large, indeed, and worthy of any secrifice. Since he came into the house, under pretence of instructing her innocent mind, he was impleming a baneful passion, which he found too ready to take root.

"Large, say you love me, darling." He held down his head, and pressed her to his bosom.

"Robert !"

"Well, love !"

"I love you," she whispered, in a tone secreely andible.

"Darling! heavens bless you; and he proceed a lingering kiss upon he lips.

It is true, he would not be mortal if some fireling of love did not dar! through he kinet then; but if there did, if was but for a in ment for he looked about the room, and thought upon this face home, the stock and lands that all was to interis, and he sighed with accessive happiness, when he reflected that all these might be his.

There was a loud mock of the foot.

"Here is my part," and lands at up and erranged her hour.

The Roy, Mr. Ely set over on an way their, and began to read his Bible.

ottage.

not love that her large for-He felt that his host, in thus, the affections of m, the bait was rifee. Since he of instructing a baneful o take root. He held down

tone mearcely

and he prossed a

at, if some feeling face their; but if int, for he looked on that his home, to interfer and he when he reflected pier and Life.

in act up and ar-

OHAPPER XVIII.

edy Jarodr. PANIS TRATERED, OPERIOR THE PARIS OF STATES OF

Tue Rev. Mr. Sly was quite composed, But Limbe looked somewhat confused as her father some into the room.

SALLE HALT HE

arida M. Ja ff

the room.

"I fear I have kept digner waiting?" said hir.

Eilis, as he looked at the table, and thiss noticing

Lizzic's agitated appearance, he saked?

"That alls you. Lizzic, lows?"

"She was getting rather slarmed at your dalay.

I was talling her that it was all on becount of basis ness; cure, a man having up much on his hands as you, she, cannot agant his time his own. Whatever made her think paracrics, he was slarmed, last gorn assident beful joil.

Oh! Is that it? Why, called it you let strong trife that way assisty you. I feer you'll have as inpleasant life of it. Not you than in no one phose to hark your pace winer, it is not been hard these to hark your pace winer, it is like it assort these with his hand, as she sat near him, "you must have some presentiment of things. Really, a lot of hungry scoundrals attacked his lossiship and myself—we had to get out backwards."

"Why don't you give them something to est, papa? I see poor creatures about the kouns; some of them frightened me in the hitchen the other day; they had not a stitch upon them, and one would think that it was out of the grave they same, they looked so poor, their clothes in regs, and their backed so poor, their clothes in regs, and their backed at grown their clothes in regs, and their backed at grown their clothes in regs, and their backed at grown their clothes in regs, and their hand some do but little among them all! It looks like a fall in the same of the people. What do you think, Mr. Sly?

Tragree with you sire the people have become no wicked and ideletebus; and no much additional to priestoraft and all social diago, that I should not wonder it this blight, the the plagate of Egypt, has

ottage.

mething to est, the house; some m the other day; and one would they same, they rigg, and their fire said their cor, child, that a het do you think,

ple have become made addited to last T should not mak of Mgypt, has had out to been nees. His lordship and I have agreed to get up one in the out-office near the school. We can keep a supply of meal and the like in the mill—ye will want vegetables, which I will send down at a fair price, vegetables, which I will sand down at a fair price, you know."

Outsinly, min. Adam, can preside over it; he can give them lessons in Scripture whilst taking their neup. I have addred Burken to notee all the tenants to and their children shore at hour peril; they will be both instructed and fair you see what a hieming that is fer them."

This is all very hind and themphalul of you, Mr. mile; like the good Samaritan you are sowing the seed of rightecusness unknown to us all."

Not at all man, are at all a you would fair have all the good to governit us if at howehers may sonist to may as well as you. Mr. My Table but the rimeyard of the Lord for Mr. My Table make the the rimeyard of the Lord for Mr. will never help and to see a selling you, Mr. My Table being ond works."

Table blints, child, will park talk and force.

tion in some things has been much neglected; I shall endeavor to enlighten her as much as possible."
"Yes, yes! that is what I expect, my reverend friend. I know that her sducation, in many respects, has been much neglected; you see I was so busy with the world, making a fortune for her, I hadn't time to look after her; then I couldn't spare her to go to school, I'd miss her too much, for I am fond of her; why shouldn't I too. Her poor mother educated her; but, then, when we lost her, I couldn't spare my Lissue, her presence if samshine about the house; so, Mr. Sly, instruct her in her religion, and all that sort of thing; I intrust her so your honor. I never minded religion much myself. No, I hadn't time; but, then, I did my duty, I hope, and I have faith in the saving blood of our Seviour."

"My good sir, it couldn't be expected that one so much engaged with the cares of the world as you could spend too much time about religious matters; so you say, you have done your duty, and this is all God requires of as; lat us have faith and charity and do our duty, and god will place as with the good and faithful sevents. As to Miss Ellis here," and he turned with a smile to Linia, "her soul is fertile with the good seed; it shall be my care to bring it forth and the superity with the sunshine of greec."

"That will be stake care of her. She's a good shild! I will now leave her to your instructions as I want to get to my effect."

This the Appen is the Link like the h neglected; I nch as possible." t, my reverend n in many reyou see I was so rinne for her, I rtime for her, I

I couldn't apare
o much, for I am Har poor mother set her, I couldn't makine about the
her religion and
se to your honor.
alf. No, I hadn't hope, and I have riour."

ottage.

hope, and I have riour."
sected that one so the world as you religious matters; ity, and this is all faith and charity place as with the kine Ellis here."
her soul is form my care to bring makine of greece.

Our old friend, Nelly Cormack, who, as I have

Our old friend, Nelly Cormack, who, as I have said, was now in Mr. Ellis's employment, or rather in Miss Ellis's, answered.

"Nelly," said Mr. Ellis, "bring a light up to my office; I want to go there.

"Yes, sir," said Nelly.

Mr. Ellis left for his office. The Rev. Mr. Sly sat beside Lissue, and placed his beind around her waist to commence his inexpections.

Mr. Ellis ley back in his chair as he entered his office, and sighed.

Nelly Cormack placed the candle upon the table.

"Do you want saythan also the first as he can be entered his office."

"Do you want anything else, sir! said Nelly, with a smile on her pouting fips.

"Not exactly Nelly, like me see on yes, and is looked at Nelly, who sil the time stood waiting his commands. She, no doubt looked to savantage; the rose of health was on her case in made a pay good humor twinkled in her oye.

Mr. Elife looked at Nelly again and signed.

"Well as "Nelly and his additional like to be chatting for!"

Why not Nelly, arm you as good as "the wid these fine houses and lands; share there is no end to your riches."

True, Nelly, true enough, but then riches never make us happy; some one to love us, to suffice on us, to glidden our hearts, can make us a hundred times happier than riches; what use are they after ally sure rice and end drink but accept with rether next and drink but accept will rether next and are and drink but accept will rether next and and held down her head. Yet, has the love me did not seem displaced for the mean accurate, and it was consisting to be motioned by the west by the reality of the panels and it was consisting to be motioned by the west by making the love may be the seem of the panels of the mean of the seem of the land of the mean of the seem of the

ttage.

what Nelly I'd you to love me

the resident of the control of the c immensely rich; what a fine thing it would be to be dashing about in her coach as the admired Mrs. Bills; Ah, Nally, Nelly, however! Ambition was the ruin of angula, and you we that mercal to the lifts become most mealous in adding the Roy. Mr. Sly in his mailtoney labeles; they visited the neighboring cottages of the poor together. They distributed meal and idea, and trackle to the night-court and advised the coachest to the night-court and advised the coachest to thousand their most and to embrace the praise of Frontian and ideas. The present to the mean were until to realist the lampation of the three some were until to realist the lampation but they were first or realist to days without cating a mount wife and children for days without eating a montroid, ordered ordered and design of the land and the to be official food and trained, but in the land and the to be official food and trained, but in the land and th

The O Donnells of Glen Cottage.

In think on the parable of the rich gluston and passe man, and consider that you maked, trampy wrotch in perhaps, deerer to the Lord, than who are cled in "purple and fine linen." Think the great Languver has said: "As often as you to these little sens, you give unto me." His returners both Jour and Gentiles, for He came we all that obey his laws in resilie on Encelosuring had commenced, and all veges more given. The old and young men, on all trapes more given. The old and young men, and children, neight work there. Children contains the middle of a severe winter; the distributed by more with smart; alect and mow rain drenched the wretched organizes. The aid young were put to breaking stones. The aid young were put to breaking stones. The aid young were put to breaking stones. The aid the rain and mountain alect pouring that the rain and mountain least pouring them. It is no wonder, then that from moring all were crowned to the one of the passes they were green and the stone the property and the passes.

ich glusion and n naked, tram-the Lord, than linen." Think As often as you nate me." His les, for He came and young men, here. Children they had to be old passens had

Not only were they threatened to be evisted, but they were also reduced employment on the public works. This was easily managed, as Lord Clears!!'s deputies had the sole management of them. He, it was easy to find some pretence for reducing the obsting to find some pretence for reducing the obsting to. By lost the react, of rise gig amounted with Bibles and district his also had a quantity of breach and breach and broken mast. Limit His mathenial himself and broken mast. Limit His mathenial himself and like the district well know a principle department of a said Mr. By an above well know a White months and how may there easily the months are the worldn't send the principle him considering the considering the constant of the condition of the worldn't send the other california.

Licht wie in de renden diese Broth

di etali'ida pipai padono élimb

The Obennells of Glen Cottage.

""But, mammy, you were walking all the mernin'; share you're hungry, and you didn't ate saything these two days."

"The mother looked at the course food, unfit for pigs, and her siyes glistened; about her them looked at their wretched children; and she turned away an the term trickled flows her without cheeks, a little "Noy" midd they to becaute; "had, as it is, they haven't could also to becaute; "had, as it is, they haven't could also to becaute; "had, as it is, they haven't could and suppose an old stack an air of the first old and the manney when a side, and the head, when the said we had a litt of break we had a little break in a little boy about two plants; "here," and he pided the boy about two plants; "here, mother; to the pidets bitedor the penning at the grant find in the hand; "we did in her hand;" widther, and he plants, the grant find we had a little break beat the plants. "Here, mother, use this," widther, and he plants, the grant find a week first and the residual stack.

"Here, mother, which all a grant, all the medition of the plants." Here, mother, who the little mark here with a cold want of the residual stack.

"Here, mother has the there all the middle contact." Here, mother, who had a little week here.

"Here, mother had a little with a cliff cancil. The residual stack which a cold the mark had a little would she with a cold the mark when a little mark here.

se food, unfit for them looked at and away as the ad no. it is they My God, Pan dy-my upon ther eides, name: https://cr

Both things and

or a milk,

boy alignt twolve matters bits for the mil took it to his what alls you mammy?" said a little thing, neetling at her knees, and placing her tiny hands in here.

The Nothing, poor nothing. It am well now," and the poor woman stroked the little flaxen head.

The poor woman stroked the little flaxen head.

The Ohymanismy, heavier a lady and jintheman he mid another, as he can had along the little flaxen heads and another, as he can had along the heads and his high heads of the heads and his high heads and the heads and his high head with his head had head he heads and miserable place, mid-am it said here flays. If this is a miserable place, mid-am it said he looked about the investigation of the heads with the head flaw flat heads and the investigation is a post place for a heady and jinthe thin to consiste the head place for a heady and jinthe thin to consiste the head had head flaw flat the head of the little place in the head of the middle of the middle of the late of the head of the late of th

bearth, and the considered, half-old looking children provided around it. '7 11/2

bearth, and the emointed, half-olad looking children crowded around it.

"Miss Illia knew little of the poor; anged in her father's uplouded house, surrounded by every laxury; she wondered why the people should be poor at all, or have eited why the people should be poor at all, or have eited why the people should be poor at all, or have eited why the people should be poor at all, or have eited why the beat was to that the tales and statistic of inthers sho had beind and withouted. Her the tales and statistic of inthers sho had beind and withouted little pity in her breast, by talling her that all their wall should reach guide the beind the applications of parties with the beind the analysis them of pity in her breast, by talling her that all their wall should what their the little their for their reach, and to have the Lord to adhibit them for their reach, and to have the heart or highterians. Many and Limite is being the being the weather had a high their two days but some dabbage and timing heaves. I didn't at a bit myself to days the Revision Reaches. I have the Revision Reaches. The Revision of the Revision Reaches and bring them come break the Revision we have some wing to the reverse from the line who we have some come trees."

"How do you have some dabbage and timing heaven. I didn't at a bit make the line who we have some come trees."

"Ram, Robert, " and Lambe to the Revision we have some come with the line who days and the line who days the reverse of the revision of the reverse the line of the line who days and many the line who days the reverse the line of the line who days the reverse of the reverse the line of the line who all the time who days and many the line who all the line who days and many the line who all the line who days and the line who all the line who days and the line who all the line who days and the line who all th or; unged in her t by every lixury, ald be poor at all, we in: It is only hiven's had a hit and thirdly leaves. Bod known I'm room hand were allely a the Boy Mr. Sly,

Tow late leve have inserted trace della to finithment of the least midd Limite, terms of the clima whold the time aloo poor women seen the error of her ways, and is she moved to grace? I am sure......"

moved to grace? I am sure—"

Here his speech was interrupted by a regular scramble at the door, and cries of "Give me a bit!"
"Toes has it all!" "Bring it into mammy."
"Blees me!" said Mr. Sly, "but these brain have taken all the bread f" and he ran to the door.

Johnny got into the gig, and assing a loaf of bread, and hearing the ledy telling Mr. Sly to bring it in, he ested it, and was bringing it when the others assailed him at the door.

"The brain!" enalstand Mr. Sly, as he seized the bread.

breed, with a local tripperd Tommy, as he alipped a part of the local tripped, ander her apros, a see this. The local tripped to the local tripped tripped to the local tripped tripped to the local tripped tripped tripped to the local tripped tr thin."

She was hungry: Perhaps that creek of bread might tive her life. Who could blante her if the phrace. She then draw forth the bread.

"No, shild, no. Bre not ours; it would be smrul; givilit to the listlemen."

"Here, ite," said Tommy, handing him the bread.

"If sly tour and like it in the ear.

"Leave it to him," will Limits.

"No! it would the suppressingly robbery, Leads.

Well, my good grants," mid Mr. Sly, Vyens non was turned of the works?

deserved it; you see he's a dishenced boy; how soon he stole the bread."

"I never knew him to not dishonestly, your ho riverence I mane. I'm shure he wouldn't take the bread but he heard the lady telling you, to

"Indeed I wouldn't, mammy," said Johnny; "and shure I was bringing it in to the jintleman when they stuck in me."

"Likely story, that; no meeter, I will see about getting him reinstated."

"God Alnighty bless your riverance!" said the poor woman many religion states of the poor states

But, me'am, you must send these other children to my school, where they will be well treated. They will be educated and fed file you for nothing, so you ought to be grateful, ma'am." I had a send ought to be grateful, ma'am."

Mrs. Sullivan did not look grateful, but held down

"Well, miram?" said the Bar, Mr. Sly.

"I can't do it, sir; I'll starve first, and God knows.

I am mear entit to it thready. Oh! give in some bread, sir, and set work fee my boy, and may dod reward you. Oh! Miss fills, will you aid the poor widow, and her blessing fall man your lead.

"Do, Hobert, do," said a serve.

Cottage.

shonest boy; how dishonestly, your shure he wouldn't lady telling, you to said Johnny ; "and the jintleman when West Bolle

ter, I will see about suce adfamal P dverence !" said ,the well treated. They ifor nothing, so you

steful, but held down

Mr. Sychanic an first, and God knows

Oh! give us some boy, and may God

The private, me'am, are a great humbug; teaching you to adore idole, and worship saints, and living people like ourselves.

No, sir your riverence I mean—the priests are our only comfort; athey wisit us when sick, and afflicted; and if they had the means we wouldn't want to note birs sounding them to bear the word of God!"

Then the consequence be mon yourself. Kon the refusing warm clothing, plenty to cat, and a mag house. Recollect, sinful woman, I called and you refused. Field deart shall be out off. I will not leave you to yourself sail be out off. I will not leave you to yourself sail be retained temployment, but this very house shall be retained temployment, but this very house shall be retained temployment, but this contribution of the sail to be retained to be said to said to be said

"Come, Linnie," said Mr. Sly; "let us leave this house of iniquity. Here, however, is food for your soul," and he handed her some tracts.

Linnie was following him when Mrs. Sullivan threw herself on her kness, and sained her dress, exclaiming:

"Oh, Miss Ellis! for the love of God, don't let them ruin the poor widow and her orphant. I am dyin' with hunger; oh! get us work or something to ste-do, and may God reward and bless you, and mark you to grass. As the that had man, may.

"Don't curve, ma'son," said Linnie, slipping a shilling into her hand, "and I'll do my hast for you."

God bless you, my sweet young lady!"

"Oome, come, Miss Ellis, it's time to go," said Mr. Sly.

Linnie get into the gig, and was quite researche.

Mr. Hy noticed this, and said! "Cover yourself well, love, the day is very cold; allow he is put this ray about you. I designed to was to my heart to return that poor family; but, their was to my heart to return that poor family; but, their was to my heart to return that poor family; but, their was to my heart to return that poor family; but, their was to my heart to return that poor family; but, their was to my heart to return that poor family; but, their was to my heart to return that poor family; but, their was to my heart to return that poor family; but her their was to my heart to return the poor family; but the method to my heart to return the poor family; but the method to my heart to return that prove family; but the man that the poor family; but the method this my heart to return the poor family; but the method to my heart to return the poor family; but the method this my heart to return the poor family; but the method to my heart to return the poor family; but the method to my heart to return the my heart to re there some boldsman dies

"let us leave this r, is food for your

Cottage.

racts. hen Mrs. Sullivan Lexind her dress, of God, don't let be orphani. I am work or something and and bless you, her that had man,

"They are poor, no doubt; so is almost every one you meet."

you meet."

"Somehow, Robert, I feel as interest in that poor woman, no matter how obstinate are is: The Most High is a patient rewarder, and shall judge us no cording to our good deeds."

"My jittle love, you'll shoully be able to presch Scripture as well as my if you'll make a brave little missions."

"I hope so," and Little, recovering her good humor.

humor.

Mr. Sty had not gono far, when another visites entered firm Sulkyan's cakin. She had a blacked under not area.

"Good-evening kindly, and you're welcome. Miss O'Donnell, wild Mrs. O'Sulkyan.

Ente O'Donnell word the ballet from the ballet and brought had a glady of beautiful man.

soon recovered and partock of the food. She then told her all about the Rev. Mr. Sly's visit.

"God help us!" naid Kate, "it is a wretched country, where men, calling themselves ministers of God, can trade on the misery of the poor."

Shure it's too had, Miss Kate, to try to reake used one scale, to keys our bodies alive."

"It is, Nelly—it is so monstrous that even honest."

Protestants and true ministers blush with shame."

"It is, Nelly—it is so monstrous that even honest."

"It is, Nelly—it is no monstrous that even honest."

"It is, Nelly—it is no monstrous that even honest."

"It is, Nelly—it is no monstrous that even honest."

"It is, Nelly—it is no monstrous that even honest."

"It is, Nelly—it is no monstrous that even honest."

"It is, Nelly—it is no monstrous that even honest."

"It is, Nelly—it is no monstrous that even honest."

"It is, Nelly—it is no monstrous that even honest."

"It is, Nelly—it is no monstrous that even honest."

"It is, Nelly—it is no monstrous that even honest."

"It is, Nelly—it is no monstrous that even honest."

"It is, Nelly—it is no monstrous that even honest."

"It is, Nelly—it is no monstrous that even honest."

"It is, Nelly—it is no monstrous that even honest."

"It is, Nelly—it is no monstrous that even honest."

Well, Nelly, what do you asserte delly and the poor house. Likew they won't give me and the poor house. Likew they won't give me and the poor house. Likew they won't give me and the poor house. Likew they won't give me and the poor house. Likew they won't give me and the poor house. Likew they won't give me and the poor house. Likew they won't give me and the poor house. Likew they won't give me and the poor house. Likew they won't give me and the poor house. Likew they won't give me and the poor house. Likew they won't give me and the poor house. Likew they won't give me and the poor house. Likew they won't give me and the poor house.

Cottage.

o food. She then 's visit. mielves ministers e, to try to reake os slive." in the set is that oren honges; that oren honges; the shame." l of him, I should speck him to he a ly atmostors floripes feet I mest go listo ron't give me esset day, Frank went into a cabin in the bog, where he was fowling; there he found a poor woman dead, and two children sucking her breast."

"Thanks be to God t that's frightful," and Nelly

"Thanks be to God! that's frightful," and Nelly cast a look at her own poor children.

"Nelly, as my father is a guardian if you wish to go into the house-stad I fear you must. I'll get him to put you is."

"Thank you, Miss Kate, I'll think of it."

The Rev. Mr. Bly passed by Knockcorrig, on his way to the school; seeing so many ragged, wratched creatures trigither; he school not lose the opportunity of giving them. I have on the will of them ways. He drew up his gig in the midst of them.

"Here if this assumer can through the crowd. He alighted, and Adam Steen held his bridle state."

"Here if this assumer mad share he will some fine days days days the heart ways and share he will some fine days."

"I thought these men were here to do govern-ment work, and not to be presched to," said a Cath-

"What's his name, Mr. Pembert?" said Mr.

"William Fogariy; he's a staward."

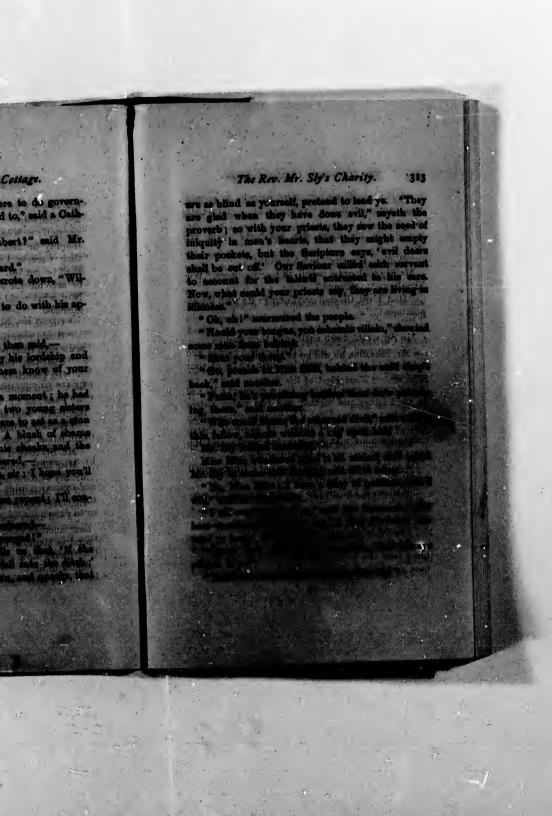

Mr. Sly took out a pencil, and scrote down, "William Fegariy, staward."

"Had Lord Clears! anything to do with his sppointment?"

"Yes cit"

"Young man, I'm sent here by his breakin and his arceliant agent: Lahall let them know of your conduct."

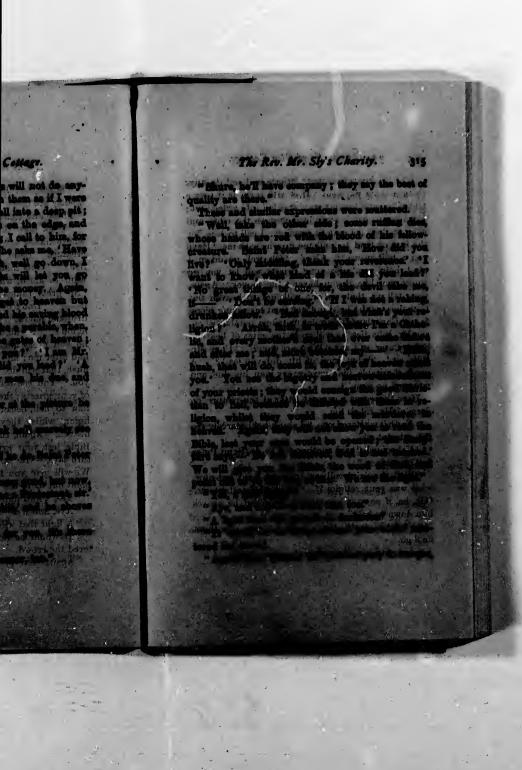

The young man thought for a moment; he had an aged father and mother and to young sinters described when his him to be an action what would become of them. A blank of shame what would become of them. A blank of shame what would become of them. A blank of shame what would become of them. A blank and the team rose to his every to describe and the season of the shade and the shade thing without payment. It is with them as if I were travelling, and lost my way, and fall into a deep pit; I change to eateh some branches on the edge, and cling to them; a men is precise;; I call to him, for the loss of Gpd to pull me up; he sake me. Have you a half-enough? 'No.' Oh, wall go down, I can't help you.' Ho you priests will let you go where you like, if you haven't the money, agree they tell my that me case will get in heart but the grant but they tell my that me case will get in heart but the money. Agree that the life, will display the payment but the case of the country when you like, the loss of the country when you like the heart will eate the grant but the grant of heaven in the grant will call the pitch of heaven in the case of heaven in th age of the history of the man to specify the arriver of the man to specify the filling of the fi

the first of the f

Cottage.

mid-to viership the saints. You pray to the mother of God, as if she were a God, while abe is merely a creature (like yourselves, God, is all grace, with Min is salvetten, what read, then, is there of praying to extrame I she has no infraence; the big-to-withing to extrame I she has no infraence; the big-to-withing and property as a second what within the had administed bless in memory, and who within him had been in memory as a second within him had administed bless in memory, and who within him had administed bless in memory, and who within him had administed bless in memory, and who without a him had administed bless in the memory, and who without a him had administed bless in the memory as a second without him had administed bless in the memory as a second without the him had administed bless in the memory and memory and make the memory and memory and make the memory and mem

"Bel he's done up; that sthopped his fine speed "fibure ye have its religion," continued Pad "You are divided into so many facts that ye changing very day. Socialism and other accordely believe anything at all, and yet they long to you. He, the Spirit of God cannot be contradictory things, and their the best one I contradictory things, and their thin has been strong to the paddy at this is that the paddy at this is the best of the paddy at the pa word of God? Oh! your religion is a rotten humbug, sir; got up to favor repine and plander, and every kind of injustice, and the worst of passions. It is divided into contradictory seets, without mion, without mion, without mion, without mion, and if you have it was the union of mote, we have the union of faith, and faith.

Cottage.

for her day for a

"It is blasphomy, my man; rank blasphomy! to attribute to a creature the power of the Creator. Many is a woman—ahe's nothing but—""

""Oh, holy Joseph! do ye hear that?! Maybe it's something as bed as himself he's going to call the Blassed Vingin," said an 'eld woman from a heap of stones.

stones. —— All I have alless in the stone of the likes? Dhould take to may did, over any one hear the likes? Dhould take to may did, over any one hear the likes? Dhould take of very mither's new to say, to be the likes? Dhould take of very mither's new to say, to be the likes? Stone in make the likes? The said takes of the likes of the likes pond, when Lissie Ellis ran and threw he self on her nees before them.

liness before them.

"She deserves the same directment, for halping the villains I's shouled some of the women. But others thought better of it, and contented themselves by rulling their victims in the mud.

"Mr. Bly and his colleague were very glad to make their escape. Mr. Pershert ordered, the works to be stopped, and went to lodge ir ormation. The works were thrown idle, and me, and children provided, living sheletops shout the country same stole potatoes and sheep to been seel and body together; but their owners were well repaid for these by county taxation.

The Petty Sessions same on in a tew days. Ford Clearall was the presiding magistrate. Mr. Ellis and another magistrate were drowded; for these several indicted for assault siyon the Rev. Mr. Sly and Mr. Adem Sees.

There was the greenest were drowded; for these several indicted for assault siyon the Rev. Mr. Sly and me attended to assault sixon the Rev. If a Sly and me assault and the several indicted for assault sixon the Rev. If a Sly and me assault sixon the Rev. If a six of the residence is assaulting a minister while preaching the road a ford; place in greating an fair while sea hundreds, who were depending an fair while sea hundreds, who were depending an fair while the for ministers.

rew berself on her

Cottage.

the women. But depring the women, the must be made to make to information. The mand children the country some soul and body, so and children
the county; some active sad body, to rell repeld for these

a few days. Lord inste. Afr. Ellis and aly Stell in attend-al; for there were in the Rev. Mr. Sly de la singuista God; slee in event-who were depend-for it o title; but, the band, the rece, He then comsted Mr. fly on his forcearance and Christian

The poor wretches was then huddled off to jail, and their families left to starve and dis.

Lord Clearell left a meeting of magistrates in the jury-room, and it was agreed to petition the Lord Lieutement for additional police force, to be paid by the county, also to have the county brought under the new County, also to have the county brought under the new County with the last t invite the properties of the properties of the contract of the Mathon 4 personal regarding and the control of the control o

The polyment of the state of th

haman foresight could foretall the failure of the potate erog. It cans like the withering simpom of the desert, spreading death and desclation in its track.

track.

The shareholders applied to him the their money he paid them as fast as he could get it from the host toward.

Several of these, though, the same to get relief.

The Printing ages and the parties of the parties of own. Pasida her y; the thin, blue and face; black and a short, day conthition 1

mantied her chicks, and then came that short, dry cough.

"If Mr. Ellis doesn't stand to us, we're ruined; and it is malatiched; to see constitute and our children reduced, pulliage to want.

"It is, impland; but God's will be done."

"Richard to His last think, and Mr. O'Donnell.

"You absolute half the John, and Mr. O'Donnell.

"No last I have a think, and Mr. O'Donnell.

"No last I have a think that was coming."

The door opened, and Frank entered! he are down waster that a stand of the part of the par

The state of the production of the state of

Without he wouldn't lead to steep the meanth of the a few weeks, but couldn't keep it any longer; I had to give him two pounds as a saidention."

When't our only resource now is Mr. Ellis; God known I have no great faith in him; atili we must brigh him. He will be should in a few modes; I will not him to seize an the mostly in a few modes; I will and him to seize an the mostly and and lead the few in the strends to make the modes; I will and him to seize an the mostly them any and may be a few modes; I will an a few modes; I will be a few modes; I will be a few modes; I will be modes the modes and the modes; I will be modes the modes and the modes are modes and the mod encoulies for a few ager; I had to give to Mr. Ellin; God. him; still we must a few marks; I will adonat them; you had pant them; you

ing down at such a rate that I at once conjectured the horses were rouning away. I heard a voice calling out to stop them for God's when I had a stick, or I seem to the middle of the word; as they came dishing towards and I struck the fremost horse, and then granted the weins. They plunged

Mrs. O'Dennell.

"I have a better fit Willie; we had better call him. Destor now, I suppose since be has got his diplomin. Phave another from Pathier William subling he over to spend to morrow, with him.

"I hope you'll go, Frankly with the mother; "this beam is publing the glorest more for light, young spirite; go and forgate integration personnel. Approve a day at least this record plantly subling to a light open a day at least this record plantly sublines.

East my time of the side of the s water Kete Stilehold the song Prink outered the

"Have is a letter for you, Willie," and Trank, "and I have enother their water, and if it found to four trank their water, and I have enother their water, asking as to spend to four trank their water, and it made that the latter of their water, and trank their water water trank their water water trank their states and trank their trank their states and trank their trank their states and trank their tranks their states and their course their tranks to their tranks to their states to their states to the latter, which is an all their states and their states and their states and their states and their states are tranks to their states and their states are the states and their states and their states are the states and their states

Prink intered the Free Principality and Ville, and Frank, anking as to spend and him deter, and in the determination of the control of the control trified with my cister's affections, now to form her? I fell the state of the state

"Well," said Willie, "I think we had better ask your parents' entered? I hope they will agree to have of that at all," said Frank; " for when they had weight to give him, you were the man they wished to wed their daughter; now, when they have intitled but their flampher; now, when they have intitled but their hands of give had from they were the man of the weight weight of their flampher; now, when they have well they but their which is a second of the mean of the weight with the weight which we well the weight when you had weight under the mean of the weight with the weight the weight weight with the weight we or thought trilling and the state of a good that in Mi wall, here but the state of the state of

"A treasure witch I who show affethe we Lord Cleviall personnel the below, you new in me happy."

we had better tack by will agree !" Frank, "for when were the man they este patricia I delerciale coulou places engles. Nather Though profit;

ive my parenth now sy, I fear; dying; 'we inm I will consent. P red them with open

the pure a good

hije alkithe wielly hije, yet don Tiele 1827 light I'm

"God bless ye both, my children."
They knell down, and as their father and mother cathed their blessing over them, they agreed their yows.

"I wished to get married neg," said Willie, " het Kate has refused; she age the couldn't leave you.

the Police O'Dennell, letter every set ver plastering that fellon off the ceiling over the sanctuary, and the dove had lost a pother wing, and hung its head despondingly. His motley and ill-clad congregation knelt before him in favrid piety, and though famine had reduced many a nece stalworth frame to a living skelator, there was not a nurmer of discontent in that house of God. A falling of prior resignation, of drep devetton, provaded all. There is a selection depth of sanctity, of something beyond many consequences in the carcomony of the Cathellon function. The senere are first captivated, then the heart is bowed, down with a my recommendation of the consequences.

The O'Ponnelle of Glen Cottage.

the property of the property of the second control of the second c poor people if you should even die of hunger, God will seward you with heaven, but if you listen to their sectionies, half is your jestion for all eterativ. Do not ill-rase them or about them, either, for the law is on their side; but allowing most their, and they offer your healt, go un jour hader, and make the argument, as you would if you take the evil out."

Path a O'Dound's past into the estandard in the rase them, and they are their continues.

Hope made a low courtery to these on the second of these on the pointed at the second groups of the pointed at the second groups of the pointed at the second groups of the point you as first one, for the matter of their second groups of the second groups of the second of the second groups of the second

Bruk, huch. Mrn. Hopen, like a good, attendable being auchine posterer Mr. Maher seat us and divide hom amongs them.

Sire Hopen which has ayes and has do heaven and speculated: "What will become of us at all in all. Make prochases, redithers to seat to heaven.

Me. House looks for diring oil southing to Give themse the processor of the Holders of green and the Holders of the Holders

Glen Cottage.

Alice and Frank walked wine in arm along in aboltoced walk in the little garden. Willie Shee and Kata hall be made, to said to each other, so may little affairs to settle, so many precision to make over although the that had time tagether in the old enterior which yet the last time tagether in the old enterior little was have but another weak to passe they live have have but another weak to passe they live we have but another weak to passe they live was have but another weak to passe they have been made another weak to passe they have been made with the best in the dark indeed until we want against the weak to be the said with the best was a walk to be facely to be the said was a hall be dark, indeed until we want again. It is not not said the said was a said this Willie's a look of my hair is in the state of with the control of the contro to come time.

If we will be the property of t en Cottage.

Property Lidon's know, his strange how infinited handlords and offsting year tenants in humbrailis and first in the strange how infinited handlords and offsting year tenants in humbrailis and in their humbrailis in the promoters and to making the making tenants and to any time between their landloss that handloss and to any time between him because of the promoters and the any time between their books to any time their books to be any time their books to be any time their books to be any time to be

The control of the co de la contraction de la contra len Cottage.

alimital power over eye of Hagland, in power over hi It is true, he with this. We have tried that game too often, and what are we the better of it? No, shild, there is too intooh disunion among conseives; there is too much power in the hands of our immedes; we are creaked and transpled on, and then tenned. No, Frank, no, we are too weak; they are too drong. We gain nothing by such strangles but widows and orphans, and daminto between just they are too drong. We gain nothing by such strangles but widows and orphans, and daminto between just the mean like mean. How what the Americans did with their these william. Hoshly half a million of our people have did already of want—better have them did like mean, that both Frank and his uncle strangesting them the picts of the manner of the mean, and the conversation is convenient. Each at heaping all the convenient the indicates a gift, and such the other strangesting and the convenient the indicates and in the picts. This is the mean to the mean, and the convenient is convenient to the mean to the mean, and the convenient is convenient to the mean to the mean, and the convenient power is not the convenient to the mean of the mean gether. Mrs. Hogan was highly pleased with Jack, and he with the insubancible stores of hed-clothes, shoets, and a thousand other things she was said to have stored away somewhere in the priest's house; heides, ahe had fifty preads; sp, every half-easy of it hard each, in bank.

Hoddy gave a yawn, and stretched out his hands.

I think, ma'am, I'll go over to Jack's, and Moddy.

"Do, avielt. Share I didn't see him to-day, I was in sich a hurry to get the dismen." I come build "He was axin' me where you were, matera." I, a "This lim" I'll see him on Sanday, Reddy, and day. Shure the times are gone. One can't get a few boys to take highest of pench, over on Christmander.

The results of pench, over on Christmander.

The right, and step. I'll slip out a glass of grant for pench.

The day of the day of the day of the day of es Cottage.

ly pleased with Jack, stores of bed-elathes, singu she was eaid to a the priest's house; y, every halfpenty of ptaked out his hands. "

pas him to-day, I was an in the many ball " grown, makim." I," Storthy, Moddy, I said

Il have no aphete to-goe. Che ean't get a made over on Christ-ly, they can't help it, lay, in a six-pensa der si a glass of pensah for

don't have the inn a

Christmas-Day at Father O'Donnell's. 347

"forra a one could blame him, ma'am. Faix, I'd be as bad myself, iv some one thought as much of me," and he looked most coaningly at Mrs. Hogan.

Mrs. Hogan set up the ghost of a smile.

"Mrs. Hogan, I know something. Shure, I heard it in the garden."

"Which!" and a character but a live of a support of the What was it, Meddy," and Mrs. Hogan, coast. ingly, wall i mill off probib tome de balaces with .

"Bed sorns if I liberto; tell," suggest sussential full in "Don Neiddy, extell to consider a suggest sussential in the St. St. Color, fair I death like to tell, malan; maybe it's not right from a count of the put two glames, of whickey in your punch." And the read the read of the state o

"I think they are all distincted as the phriest says when he marries the people."
"That's not it, Neddy; it's some other stracted.
Shure, we ought to tell on them."
"Och, hoor bright, would you like a body to tell on yourself?"

"That's thrue, Neddy; shure it's natural."

"Whist, that's the bell, Neddy; more wather; I'll engage, they won't leave a dhrep of sphirits in the house, and it's scarce enuit."

"Whist, ma'am, here are the ladies."

"Whist, ma'am, here are the ladies."

"Well, Mrs. Hogan, aren't you married yet?" mid Alice.

"No, Miss Alice; shure a poor woman like are wouldn't get any one; it's such first the likes of you, Miss, to be thinking of that."

"Now, indeed, why, has Hages, I'm told there's a boy near here, that has a spury house and threenows, breaking his heart arount you."

"Sorra a word of He in that, Miss," said Meddy, with a crim.

with a grin.

Mrs. Hogan blushed, if the gheat of a blush could ind room in her ruddy cheeks.

"You're visions to your fam Miss."

"It's has truth, Mrs. Migan; he's dying about you;" and Alies winked at Mass.

is some one not a mile away dying

Sien Cottage.

ple." you like a body to tall are it's natural." Neddy; more wather; dhrop of sphirits in he ladies." you married yet?" said

poor woman like me

may house and three

that Minn, and Meddy,

o ghost of a blash could uen, Miss." ngan ; he's dying about not a mile away dying Limow two things, and

Christmas Day at Father O'Donnell's. 349

"The deuce take it, there is the bell again," said Mrs. Hogan; "Far coming! Will ye's ever sthop with your ringing! how can my poor feet hould?" and Mrs. Hogan made her exit.

from the situation these and significant and the control of the co Thoughts, they not i help a duting of lightness in Theorems and it seem could be builted in the bouse and it seem could be ladge.

"White has in her see the ladge."

Well life flowing trent you married yet? and allow.

Allow.

wered blot for soudt buckeyest.

bloom land a la sanda edit the salignment and the land sales for the sales of the land sales for the land sa

The first of the control of the cont

getisbesander indult him bliennung bermalt sich bermalt sich bermalt sich eine der germalt sich bei germalt

The Parson Acting the Good Samaritan. 351 him, your riverence; so off I deshes as hard as I

"How will I travel?" said Father O'Donnell, turning to Frenk.

"I'll drive my our over with you, sir."

"Yes, that will do, rem and get the horse ready.

And now, good man, ride back and fell Mr. Smith that I'll he with him directly."

how could I part with her now. No I am so used to her, I turned her away once, and beged I was sale until she came back. I'll tall you, Frank, it is not easy to part those with whom we have lived for years; besides, she's not a had woman after all; her tongue is the worst of her; drive on Frank. I hope we went be late; very kind of Mr. Smith, so it

Jack Tobin's othin, was some list and so they had to her? their or sell shall sell shall be her? their or sell shall severed closing an old horsen abin was a miscrable hovel, built of a site had shall sell shall be served with has the fruit was built of earth and stone matthey. The wain had published the life that the sell shall shall be sell shall shall be sell shall shall

No. I am so used co, and begrd I was tall you, Frank, it is om we have lived for ad woman after all; drive on, Frank. I ad of Mr. Smith, so it come in time to afford this poor men the consoletions of his religion. I have done all I could for him his worldly way; so now we had better leave him to you.

The minister and the other immates retired while Father O'Donnell was administering the rites of his Church to the dying man. His wise and two wretched children eroughed outside the door. Frank and the Rev. Mr. Smith stood etc. whig sain their and the children eroughed outside the door. Frank and the Rev. Mr. Smith stood etc. whig sain their why didn't for the minister, we sing see the manufacted writing to the minister, we sing see the manufacted writing to the minister, why didn't for the minister, which we will be minister, which is a single see that the minister was the minister with the minister when the distribution of the distribut to wan you would not blosse wan filmen it's a terrible thing to die of hunger, and them he buried like the limits of the field in unhallowed grbund. The "I the mot blame your thin makersh, their you should feel the lime of your shill despite the to we "Object in it's in special despite." Products to have deput "Westerngilled to the pure them funds the field of amount in the thill be buried them funds.

"Objects single in appointing Good known how me lived it was been extended the decider could wantle these fact days. "Merchanglad to help could wantle these fact days." "Merchanglad to help and the thing appoint the fact that the help my pass boy he was dead three days in the bed, and the appoint he was dead three days in the bed, and the appoint he was to important helps the fact that the help and the appoint he to important helps the state of the appoint helps the state of the stat

"Don't say, possingening Hil hory, him memored the challeng of the challeng of the challeng his his reach shouts by and. I'll, and hay him, with a collected to bring him, decoupling the fill of the density patienting a food. Absolute the challeng of the density patients of the light of the density patients. Oh, say, being him to the property of density density. Oh, say, being him to the property of density of the comply patients and the you, this innit, the magnet of heater hay provide the same than the you, the same the magnet of heater hay to be got unstanded that id. The thickness are consistent of the collection of the collection ilen Gottage.

who wood and kind many filters it's a terred than be buried like allowed ground. The sale was a filter to be buried like a terred to be buried like a filter to be buried by the buried like and was a filter to be buried by the buried by the tion in this part. He is no minister; but if he be what Pm told, I will expose him to shame, if he what Pm told, I will expose him to shame, if he have shy?

"If he is not worthy the confidence of Lord Clearly and Mr. Ellis, it is noty not to have him exposed, for he is creating a great deal of had feeling between these giant man and their tenantry.

"E am away of their Mr. O'Deanell I am told that he is a more low Skriptere reader; and that himself and that Mr. Street, who is attaily him brothic, where heartest test of England of account of Michigan and the brothic who is a consisting and it believe, truly no ported, that he has gained from Mr. I think, suppose him who is a good-hearted, sensitive young land if not perverted by Mit machinations."

"Oh, Jack, arount what will we do now at all, to all?" sobbed his wife.

The emaciated different work and cried. The dying man to good at his wife and children, and then imploringly, and confidingly at Pathen O'Dosmall and the Rev. Mr. Smith.

"Make your mind seary about them, my poor man," sold the minister; "Lwill are that they shall not want."

"Ond blam you?" he mattered, and he took his want."

"I will see them provided the," said the Rev. Mr. Smith again.

"I will see them provided the," said the Rev. Mr. Smith again.

"I will see them provided the minister in the priest's.

"I will see them provided the minister in the priest's.

"I will see them provided the minister in the priest's.

"I will see them provided the minister in the priest's.

"I will see them provided the minister in the priest's.

"I will see them provided the minister of the dying man's bed; and priest and minister, and all, joined in one fervers application of marcy for the departing stell. The side and minister, other and minister, of the priest and minister, when an authorised it was also the Christian distributed the priest and minister, when an authorise the they man and manister the they are not minister, and wanted the priest and minister, when they are not man and the priest and the priest and an authorise the they are not many than they are not many and an authorise the parties.

The priest and minister, after an altered it was an and the priest and an authorise the parties.

The priest and minister, after an altered it was an authorise the parties.

Glen Collage.

rill we do now at all ...

pt and oried. Who dyand children, and then at Pather O'Bosmell dentification of the least the least them. The least them that they whall though and he took his placed it in the priest's here, said the Rev. Mr.

sigh and by back ; his

The Rev. Mr. Six Character.

The Rev. Mr. Shrift fathfully kept his promise; he got the bodies decently intered, and the widow of the two children removed to a sang cottage, where they were coinfortably provided for.

As Frank and his made returned home, he could not help contrasting the Christian seal and spirit of the Rev. Mr. Shrift with that of his Ely.

In You don't know the Ranks Frank you don't know him, haid Franks O'Donnell; "he is the pood minister he gots wort to the poor people'd house, giving them soot wort to the poor people'd house, giving them soot wort to the poor people'd house, giving them soot white the poor mac, he said for all the day of them dangerously III, like this poor mac, he said for the like with this poor mac, he said for the like with the poor that fine in the said with the said with the spoor the said with the said with the said with the said with the said word with the said with on the Rev. Mr. Siy is producing; 75, we would have a union of Christian brotherhood."

Frank and his party returned home that evening. They could not remain longer, as Willie Shee had to make arrangements for his departure.

We will not attempt to paint the feelings of Kate O'Ddanell, as ther teels her final leave of her betrethed. Could' speak at the gay of grief. Never do we final this so trul, as when we take leave, of some idear friend; or loved one, who is going to fight the recipit bettle of life in orders to gain a mame and election for rt. Amidst ser hears, of secretary heart is a joy; that take us that that manly young heart will exceed in Mr's stugh struggles, and will win may happy home. Hack wave, the feelings of Kate O'Donnall, as her Willie strained her so this, become and imparted the last farrwell, his speak at a life, and they would fire o'Donnall, wept after him to their something has no this, become and little to the branch share something that the his transit speak him to the gentle face and golden help, for well did by trious that he would, meaning that the his passes station. Frunk leaded upon him he a beather, and that the manufact, him to did the flow that he mand him to life, the transit mountaint, meaning paint him to the life, and that the manufact, him he with him to do life. There with mountain, him mand painting at the him to life, the heart with mountaint, him mand a more income them.

Glen Cottage.

lecing: 22, we would Aberhood.": sed home that evening, ev, as Willie Shoe had departure. A Kate int the feelings of Kate Small leave of her be-that makes them aling for love to some worthy object; they must love some one, or die; and if this pure love is disappointed or sullied, a corroding desolation takes its place.

Mr. and Mrs. O'Deanell occupied their accustomed sente near the purior fire in the evening. Beery was sented upon the actice, with her head, as usual, recting upon her mother's lap. Her mother was playfully twining her golden heir around her fingers. The. little dog and puss were also amusing themselves by leaping and playing about the rug and settee, which gumbole Beery enjoyed.

"He, its, puss, how fanny you are; come here!" and the two jumped upon her lap. Mr. O'Donnell's head gloomily rected upon his land upon the table. Mrs. O'Donnell looked at him, then at Beery, and as she heard her merry little laugh, and saw her bright eyer sparkle, a ray of hope lit her factures, for a mother's anxious heart can never admit the unwelcome truth, that death is alleutly stealing, herdaring child. So Beery took the cet in her arrow, and the little dog went to rest upon the health-rug, "Punhaen cat mowed actily in sophy, as Beery gently attained as she heart her health Beery, if she yent to heaven?"

Punhaen cat mowed actily in sophy, as Beery gently attained her health. I know you would be surry for mis."

e to some worthy ob-ne, or die; and if this allied, a corroding deapled their accustomed to the evening. Beesy ith her head, as usual, ap. Her mother was ask around her Angere.

you are; come here!", and anjoyed.
you are; come here!", and the property is hand upon the table, in, then at Beery, and the laugh, and saw her! hope lit her features, at one never admit the is attently stealing here is the cest in her armount upon the health-rug, would you he sorry of the went to heavy gently.

ow you would, pessy."

and pusheen set up a han alosed her open.

would be serry for me."

Pusheen gave another assenting new, which was interrupted by the little dog eatching pusheen by the tail.

"Le down there, you little brat, and let pusheen alone," said Beery, drawing the eat nearer; and pusheen ritied her paw to recent the insult herself.

"There now, you are not easy until you have another soughtie," said Beery, as pusheen jumped down and least a blow of her pew upon the offinder.

He O'Disself observable, while him. O'Desnell, "don't fatigue yourself."

No mornald has the or many to me them playI am delicated.
They are theel now, heavy as well as yourself;
them were gold the mornal has the mornal the mornal than the mornal

blassed Slaviour, who calls little children to Him and says, 'of such is the kingdom of heaven.'"

"It is, indeed, child, a land brilliant beyond our ecnospticus, glorious beyond all that eye hath sean, or the heart of man conseived."

"I was reading yesterday, mamma, about a good monk that last his convent, tured by the singing of a little bird. Its voice was so melodious, that he spent, as he thought, the most of the day listening to it. When he returned, what was his surprise to find the convent changed, and all the monks strangers to him. After making inquiries, it was found that he had been sore, hundreds of years listening to the little hird, which was so other than an sogal. Oh, how delighedul to hear the whole choir of heavenly angels chanting hymest of love and praise!"

"It must, indeed, Bessy."

There was a silman, for some minutes.

"Mamma!"

"Well, pet."

"Yould you wish me to be in heaven!"

"I would, love."

"Then, mamma, ones you won't feet when I die!"

"What makes you think of deals." maked Mrs. O'Donnell, thing her eyes.

"I don't know, histories; jet, something talls mather God will take me to Himself. I'm sure it must be my guardien angel that talls me an."

"O Bessy, Basty, don't levels my heart by speaking of death."

the children to Him and of heaven."

Id brilliant beyond our
all that eye hath seen,

mamms, about a good ured by the singing of a so melodious, that he out of the day listening that was his supprise to ad all the monks stranginguistic, it was found idreds of years listening an other than an angel is whole shoir of beaven-love and praise !"

me miantes.

be in heaver F

"I thought, marines, on wouldn't gradge me to be happy in heaven; sure I would get to be your guardian angel to watch over you and papa, and Kate and Frank."

Kate and Frank.

Mrs. O'Donnell gave a few smothered sobs, and the tears rolled down her cheeks:

"Don't cry, massins, and I won't say it any more, and, pape, kins me," and she went over to her pape and twined her they arms around his neak:

"God bless you, child!" mid Mr. O'Donnell, as he raised his head want prosped has fendly to his aching breest. "God blass you, darling! and spare you to us to cheer our misery.

Mr. O'Donnell and Mrs. O'Donnell shatted and laughed and played with their trad child. They forgot that misery and raise were too full of love and hope, and they forgot the dark frowns of the world. Thus they possed their time until Frank and Kate reissned. Miss.

O'Donnell had the teaching had to achtale opress.

The O Donnells of Glen Cottagn.

"I suppose you selled mon the sticency to day,
"I sthere say charge of a settlement?"
"Kone; Frank, none in life; I offered any comromine, but none would be accepted; nothing but my down in fall. This is very conel, Frank—say ruel, considering all we have lost by that unformthe beak, and that these geople had as much right

Glas Cottage.

the thomay to day,

I affered any comcomplete, nothing but y cond. Frank—very lies by that unfortuple had as much right
the beat was grin
at of the lower. But they are greening to som Prock—that it to pail sell the stock and there and on a second

ingrementary, guid

The a discrete Mr. O'Domail."

The a discrete, re," said Frank, respectfully

White St. O'Donnell, what can I do for you're

The a said Late Committee of the late of the late

A AND TO SHAPE THE PARTY OF THE PARTY AND TH

in iggerer meinting, better trembliche Frank i proceeded to 100 Hills freshbilden Einsternische Sie beit. Melle Gematik rechte trechte beitellichten in der eine stellt

Arrah, Mather Frank, is this you'll mid a second of the live of th

very kind to you have a supervised to the second result of the plant of the party of the second results and the plant of the party of the second results and the party of the second results and the second results and the second results are second results and the second results and the second results are second results and the second results are second results and the second results are secon har two promited that the open or note that the end of the same state of the same

64 The O Donnells of Glen Cottage.

bot. As soon as Frank interest, for Mile raised his

"Good-morning, Mr. O'Donnell

"Good-morning, sir," said Frank, respectfully.

Frank stated his case histy and clearly, and told him how his fither rent him to him for protection.

"I miderwand, Mr. O'Domeil, that you want me to make a seasore upon all your stock and attents, and to sell them for reat."

Many story is present destroys the spectral presenting spectral present destroys the spectral public spectral

"Benefity on the Oldsmooth: Well, Fill make the minutestate days and could cover Burgian and a few others and hospoon. "Tou binds are presented to these things appendy to dates college from presenting."

Constitute of the last state o

"They have a shall have the state of the the same of t real."

Frank, respectfully.

It can I do for you?"

It end clearly, and told to him for protection.

Sell, that you want me

your stock and offices,

ik Wal, Fil make the condition and a few actions must do these

An Agent Promises to be a Friend.

tion of knitting, and were moted near the door, with her spectacles jountingly fixed upon her note. "Good day, me'am," said Frink, as he entered the

cottage.

"Oh, Minther Frank, is this you, and how are you and all at home? Shows it's a mouth of Sundays since I seek you. How is that little darling, Beary? I'm tould she's not well. Shows I've threatened, I dunna how long, to go see you."

"Why, Min. Samuels day never to forget us alto-golden. We are all well of homes see. Beary; she, the bear well as however, but to be

She brings on marry a parent sNr my could be not? 4 I may be to hay said I as locked as the " (She to the married to the de-letter years New others as deal plant Print hither should reading it the originated do. Misther Frank; there is ghodens my ould heart to hear it; it is like as if the poor boy were speaking to me application with the poor boy were speaking to me application with the poor boy were speaking to me application of the poor boy were speaking to me application of the poor boy were speaking to me application of the poor boy were speaking to me application of the poor boy were speaking the poor boy and application of the poor boy were speaking to make the poor boy were speaking to make the poor boy were speaking the poor boy were speaking to make the poor boy were speaking the poor boy were speaking to make the poor boy were speaking the poor boy were speaking to make the poor boy were speaking to make the poor boy were speaking to the poor boy were speaking to be poor boy by the boy boy be poor boy by the boy boy by the boy boy by the b produced in the con-paratories in class and said the as if the poor boy threads midwills at 2 wolf, altered in Man wolf, alter the Touris applies Del 20/2017. I have altered wolf willing

It's well for the your lies he where he're, Manther Frenk Main with a standar of the Mark Mark the Mark the Mark the head one too; they say it hills surpents. I also have the resign they say it hills surpents. I also have the resign that the half behind the house and every time I looks at 11 thinks of the pass will be like a like the like the melows, and to all my subsol-fellows. What pleasant times we used to have, when going to Mr. Quirk, playin', and ramblin', and steelin' crebs, though he often payed us for it. Tell Paddy Nolan that I methic brother. He is ideing well. Give my love

"There is a whole let of sames here, makes ; it is

"That'll do, don't mind them. He is the good son, God biess hirs," and Mrs. Corneck wiped the team of affection from her syst.

"Not at present, Histor Frank. We are doing pary well, and I'm to sould now to creas the cay; though I'd go 's I that got I'd live to use him."

"I has gled that you lines much have anyway; that's more than I om may. Times have changed your much with mi Mrs. Cormolit."

of Long and systematics and the state of the second super-

Min. Co need: led the best and a little

Control of the contro

The family follows. What pleasant on going to Mr. Quirk, tealing crabs, though he Paddy Noles that I met

amés bere, ma'am ; it is them. He is the good fre Cormack wiped the Frenk. We are doing I now to area the say; Pd. live to no bint.

"No, alanna. Here, Misther Frank," and she pulled an old purse from her poaket, and after untying about twenty knots, she drew forth the check. "Here, take this, I don't want it, and it might serve ye. I would give my heart's blood, not to say this rag, to serve your derling mother, and the dear young ladies."

"Ro, see me'am, thenk you; your money would be no use to us. It is a great sum for you, so keep it."

"No, Mather Frenh, you must take it, just to heap it for me."

"I do not want it now, Mrs. Cormeck; if I do, I will call for it."

Frank left the outlage, and Mrs. Cormeck fatt highly displaced is since he would not jake the money. As his second he would not jake the money. As his second he would not jake the money. As his second he would not jake the money. As his second he would not jake the money. As his second he would not jake the money of the stock and effects to they have made their second the stock and effects to they have made their second and left Runtage. He observe Mod Parkers, with his money of the place of the second second pardomble vanity in her composition, though she did not encourage his addresses, still she did not wholly reject them. It is trut, Burken loved her, if one of his low, omning nature scale entertain such a hallowed feeling as love. There are natures that cannot understand or appreciate dove in its holiest and pureet sense, and yet are governed by a blind passion that drives them to disparation.

As Mary was returning from town one-would, about nightfall, Burken met her a few fields from the house. He crossed her path as if his were on his very to Mr. O'Duanell's, whilst in scality he was watching for her carning fully two house. Many. I wonder you're not known.

"And is it now you're coming house, Many. I wonder you're not knowne."

"That's thrue, Mary, always; thure we one would imposition, though she store, still she did not rus. Burkent loved her, nature could entertain very There are natures appreciate fove in its dispersation for town; one sweaten, there are the west on whilst in wallty he was coming hours. Many I re no conswould hart a "the milighiore parent's

and the state of t

gil Junks Correct we Fake Pin Skinking th east pulling to said

Mary changed colors, for Hanna vac a noted rutio belle, and a rival of hera. Though it was dust, yet he know from her eager, durried manner that his words had taken effect, so he continued...

"Mrs. Batler tould me that they have the match all as settled. John Cormack is thinking of going to America to join his trother, so they'll have the house to themselves."

Mary wilked on the thinbarred care force of the Many without on it ethino.

"Don't you think it is well for them?"

"Fair The sure I can't say! I suppose it is; but then it don't consern any," and Many, with a sigh, rather too deep for an antonomized person.

"No, but their people my that you had a liking for him, and that the got inside you and people don't file to by passed in their way."

It's hand to other peoplets mouthin; but sure we must bear it," she replied.

"The way it, alleged them would be be take the plines of them, think would show people that you had no hambaring the lather than toward be to him. I meet to him, think would show people that you had no hambaring the lather than a would be to him. I would not be supply to him, and in the people of him, him will push change down and be trying to coax any girl, and he going to be married to another.

"The way in had be going to be married to another."

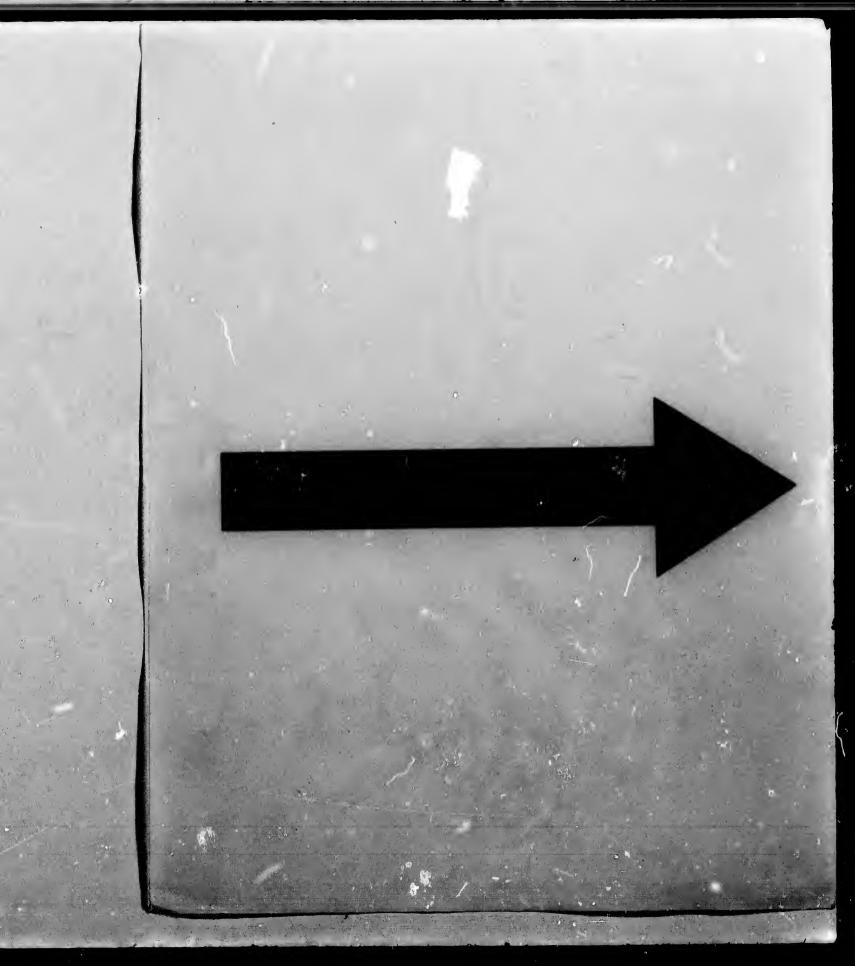

"The way in the point to be married to another."

"The way in the point to be married to another."

"The way in the point to be married to another."

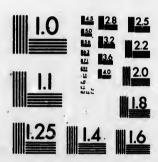

"The way in the point to be married to another."

11.25 M.A. 14.80 12.30 12.50 1

IMAGE EVALUATION TEST TARGET (MT-3)

Photographic Sciences Corporation

23 WEST MAIN STREET WEBSTER, FJ.Y. 14580 (716) 872-4503 the Res

CIHM/ICMH Microfiche Series. CIHM/ICMH Collection de microfiches.

Canadian Institute for Historical Microreproductions / Institut canadian de microreproductions historiques

C 1981

"I know one, Mary, that loves you dearer than his own life, that dreames about you day and night, that would give his heart's blood for you, and that is donble as good a match as James Cormack, and that would one day make you a lady if you'd marry him."

"And pray, who is going to make this lady of me?"

He pushed near her, and placed his arm around

"It's I Mary, I love you Mary; you know I have twenty pounds a year; I'm promised a farm by the master; I will make you happy. Oh, Mary, say you'll be my wife! do love, and sure we'll be happy as the day's long."

She paused; the supposed faithlesmess of her old lover rose up in judgment against him, yet she loved him, and a woman cannot tear the sweet pleasure of him, and a woman cannot tear the sweet pleasure of love so easily from her bosom, to make room for a new one. It is true, she often heard Burkem spoken of as a cunning, deceitful man; yet, she always found him kind and soft-spoken; besides he told her how he oftentimes interfered for the poor tenants; all this made some impression upon her.

"Well, Mary, what do you say?" said he.

"I don't know, Ned; we'll speak about it another time."

time."

"Why not now? Will you have James Cormack laugh at you, when he marries Hanna Russell; besides, Mary, it is pleasant to have your own house

rer than nd night, and that nack, and a'd marry

y of me?"

n around

w I have m by the Mary, say be happy

of her old leasure of com for a m spoken sys found d her how ante; all

AL STATE it another

Cormack wn house and cows, and to have servants, instead of being one yourself." A state of the state

"It is, indeed."

"Would you like riches, Mary?"

"Faith I'm sure I would," said she, with a smile; "who is it that don't?"

"True, Mary, they are everything; look at Mr. Ellis; he came here a poor steward; no one knew him—look at him now, what a great man he is, stuck up with my lord in every hand's turn."

"It is a fine thing to be rich, no doubt," said Mary. "It is, Mary, for I'll tell you, but don't tell any-body." "Nover fear."

"Well, Mr. Ellis intends turning out the tenants, and I'm promised a farm, my choice of them you see; so if you like the ould place where you are, I'm sure we'd got it."

I'm sure we'd get it."

"What," said she, with surprise, "Mr. O'Donnell's place you mean?"

"Yes, wouldn't the people stare at us then; we could keep our car and drive about; sure after a time, we'd be routing in school, like Mr. Hills.

Mary Cabill was client; she was trying to take in the depth of his villent; believing James Cormack faithless, and knowing Burbon to be, in a worldly sense, a much better match, and seeing how deeply he was devoted to her, we cannot blame her if she hesitated at to what nanower she would give to his appeal.

The only objection she had to him was, that he was the servent of a tyrant; she heard always that he used his influence for the good of the tenant; still, after all, with that keen instinctive perception, natural to women, she sould never bring herself to love him; perhaps, this was because she loved another; but now he had foresken her, would she be wise in rejecting the offer of so good a match.

Such were the thoughts that ran through her Such were the thoughts that ran through her mind, until Burken laid open his schame for becoming rich. He, with the narrow minded sordidness of low cunning natures, thought, as she expressed such a desire for wealth, to daude her with projects beyond her widest conception. He did not see any harm in occupying the O'Donnell's place, provided they were once ejected; but when Mary understood him, she turned upon him a look of withering scorn.

"Ned," said she, "do you think I'd live in the house from which my benefactors were hurled forth to work or marve? Do you think that I'd live in the house from which any poor family was driven to to work or starve? Do you think that I'd live in the house from which any poor family was driven to have their ourses ringing in my ear, no no I'd starve first I thought you were a friend to the family, but now I see what you was a friend to the family, but now I see what you want the power to be as hig a villain; so take your hands ov me. "Here me, Mary, share I didn't mean." Hould your tengue, and take ov me."

"Hould your tengue, and take ov me."

"But Mary, if they were ejected some one would have it; shure we might se well have it as a stranger, but if you wish we oculd get some other place."

ays that ception. erself to d she be rdidness xpressed projects t see any provided derstood ng scorn. ded forth d live in driven to o, no, I'd ad to the re as bad

Take ov me, I say.

"Mary, Mary, forgive me; oh, if you knew what it is to love, to feel this burning passion, to feel one's heart, as if it were in a furnace, to feel this torture; no, I cannot have you; you must be mine."

"Must!" said she, with emphasis, as she strove to extricate herself from his grasp. "No, man take ov me, I say. I'll never love you, I'll hate you, if you don't let me go."

don't let me go.

"Mary, don't say that, say you'll love me.,
"Never, man, never; I see your baseness now."

Then, Mary," he inclaimed, "listen to me. Here is a prayer book, swear that you will be my wife."

"No, no, not now, perhaps some other time."
"Now or never," said he. "Here is prayer book," and he placed it in her hand. "Swear, or you'll rue it; we're alone."

"No, no, I can't perjure myself, God help me!"
"You won't do it, then!"

"No, never, I call upon a just God to assist me."

You must swear !" arealised he, saking her by the arm.

"I cannot, and will not!" answered she, much

"I cannot, and will not answered and much alarmed." For the love of God, let me go?"

"You must swear to be mine," returned he; but at the same moment a blow of a stick resounded upon his bead and laid him senseless on the ground.

"Take that, dayli that" you me, said the wall-known voice of James Cornact.

"Oh, James, neve me for the love of God."

"I will, Mary, my darling, I will-thank God, I was in time." He raised her up and pressed her to

"Sthop, James, ethop-that's not fair; you know you are to be married to Hanna Russell, so let me go, but see me home."

"Mary, who tould you that?"

"That fellow," she whispered, and pointed to Burkem, who was wiping the blood from his brow-

"The lying sooundrel, I didn't spake to her these three menths. No. Mary, if you refuse having my wife, I'll never marry; you know I love you. When I went to Mr. O'Donnell's this evening, I heard you were in town, and missing Burkem, I thought it would be no harm to come to meet you, so, thank God, I was in time."

"The devil is in it," muttered Burkem, as he looked on with eavy, like the surport in the garden; "if I don't have sweet revenge for this, my name ina't Burkem."

"What are you saying, you double-distilled vil-lin you; do you want more of this?" said Cormack, going over to him and whirling his stick.

going over to him and whirling his stick.

"Don't, James, let us pass him; he could harm us," whispered Mary.

"Deuce take him and all the harm he can do. He's not worth minding, the dirty spalpean."

"Forgive me, James," said Burkem, reaching his hand. "Shure my loss for Mary there blinded me. I desarved what I got. I thought to blacken your name with her to make her marry me, but shure it was no use. You know what it is to be in love, James, so you will forgive me what I did; and you, Mary, won't you forgive me?"

"Indeed, I will," said she, after a pause.

"I'm sure I'm not the man to keep in a grudge for a man that aree my pardon," said James Cor-mack.

"God bless you and make you happy! but don't mention a word of what happened to enybody, if you forgive me."

"No fear, Ned."

As he left them, he felt the hot blood trickling down his face; he wiped it off, and gave a kind of chuckle, and muttered

"Devil take me if that don't be the dearest blow you ever struck. My name isn't Ned Burkem, if I don't bring you to the gallows for that, and make don't bring you to the gallows for that, and make that proud thing kneel to me for marcy. I must be his hest friend, though; I must get him into my power, until I crush him like the surpent. Ha, ha! whose turn will it be then, I wonder. No matter—ha, ha, ha! you'll rue it, James Cormack. May God —, but no, I won't curse; I'll leave him until my time comes. Curse this blood—but I'll have blood for it," and he muttered and cursed as he

ak God, I sed her to you know ' to let me

his brow-

e garden; my name

stilled vil-Cormack,

ould harm

se can do. linded me.

aken your

THE WAS THE THE CHAPTER, KAIL THE WELL of the legician Lines.

or a star a will water has aller a rate.

THE LOVERS INTERVIEW—THE POLITICAL MI Short was a series of the state of the state

The O'Donnells' affilirs were every day becoming more discouraging. Though throwing themselves for protection upon the agent, still, so little faith had they in him, that they did not seel secure, and heartily wished that the day of sale was over.

Mr. O'Donnell moved listlessly about the house and place, his grey hair streaming about his head, and his once portly form stooped. Strong minds yield to adversity sponer than weak once. When unable to resist it they are too proud to bear the world's frown, and that very moral strength that gained them wealth and respect in their prosperity now helps to drag them to ruin.

Little Bessy was becoming weaker every day, and it was evident to the most uppractised that consumption was fast doing its work. The dry cough, and the hectic flush that mantied on her velvet cheek, seemed to number her days.

cheek, seemed to number her days.

Mrs. O'Donnell and Kots pers continually engaged with their domestic suits and their attendance upon Beesy. Frank was the only one upon es pelle mili a sil

The Own

themselves Httle faith secure, and over.

this head, rong minds see. When to bear the rength that

d that condry cough, her velvet tinually enheir attendly one upon whom devolved the painful duty of trying to make the most of their shattered fortunes. Even Uncle Corny became spathetic, for if he went abroad, nothing but want, and wailing, and death, met his gase; so he preferred to remain at home. It is true that Shemus-a-Clough kept him company, for with that instinct of poor, half-witted creatures, he found that he could not live roving about as usual, and as there was always plenty to est and drink, and a welcome at Mr. O'Donnell's, he now stopped there the most of his time; besides, he said that something was to happen them, and no one would be there to protect them if he went

James Cornack spent most of his time at Mr.
O'Donnell's, for since Burken became a resident in the house, and since his attack upon Mary Cakill, he thought it pradent to been marken upon him.
Burken took were to ween himself into his favor again. He expressed the greatest storow for his past conduct, and thereby discussed Commack's mappicions.

I should have gold that I nels Cornacted and picions.

I should have said that Uncle Corny tended and cared Beary; he care and read for har, and assured her with takes of his compagnet. It was showing to see the fine old coldier with that delice to find which the hare suggests listening to his adventure, and there she would look numbers that her has said the him in would look numbers, into his face and dik him.

do?"

"It's not that I mean, Uncle Corny; but sure you couldn't be prepared to die and you fighting? You know we should work out our salvation with fear and trembling."

"Oh, as to the fear and trembling, my dear little puss, I had enough of it on the bettle-field; but anything about my salvation, I fear, never gave me any trouble."

"Why, wouldn't you like to go to heaven, Uncle

Corny?"

"To be sure I would; but you knew, we hadn't time to think of such things then. Soldiers seem born for fightin' and nothing else. When you'd hear the guins and cannous roaring around you, and see dead men upon every side of you, you'd be thinking how you could light best, or perhaps how you could escape."

"Oh, it is dreadful," said she, shuddering.

"It is, but it's glorious, after all, to kill your enemies."

Besides, perhaps, that poor man you'd be after killing might have left a wife and children to lament his less, or perhaps to starve. Whink how I would feel if anything happened dear pape, and sure some one is left to feel after every one that's killed. Oh, it's dreadful for people to be killing one another that way."

ey'd bury

t sure you ng? You with fear

dear little field; but g gave me

ven, Uncle

we hadn't diers seem /hen you'd id you; and 'd be thinkpe how you kill your ir enemies?

d be after
n to lament
new I would
d sure some killed. Oh, me snother

"Well, I believe it's wrong, after all," said Uncle Corny.

It is strange what influence a child's simple arguments will often have upon the strongest man; I have known them to succeed where the most philosophical arguments failed. This is because there is a homely innocence and purity in their remarks that touches the heart.

Frank often visited his uncle, apparently for advice, but in reality to meet Alice. Father O'Donnell felt flattered at being thus treated as the family oracle.

The lovers had to meet furtively of late; for, though Mr. Maher had not forbidden Frank his house, still there was a coldness in his manner that impressed him with the belief that a change of circumstances had produced a coldness on his part. Besides, he told his daughter that she should not encourage the young man to be neglecting his business.

mess.

Mrs. Hogen was Alice's advisor. She sympathised with the young lovers, and warmly entered into all their little plans. Alice loved Frank with all the true devotion of an homest, generous heart. They went to school together, they played together, they plucked flowers, and resemed the flelds together in search of birds' nests, and now, when their hearts were united, was fortune to separate them?

After one of these persionste love meetings with Alice he was returning home. His uncle's car hed way through the country. father had ordered her not to meet him again, Their interview week and one that about must recome interview was and one. Ind state relating all to him, "what am I to do? I cannot disobey my father, and yet, Frank, I will miss you'se much that I would rather be dend then not see you." I saw that I would rather be dend then not see you." I saw that I would rather be dend then not see you." I saw that I would rather be dend then not see you. I be loss of wealth well, the Pon young and strong, and there is a wide field of enterprise in other lands; but to lose you, to lose you is losing all that hinds me to life; and my poor father, and mother and my derling states. O Alice! Alice! but for you I could small sat the world; frown at the loss of fertunes. I could scorn all!"

all p and the are a popular of the sale soft described and less what will some

Frank! Frank! I don't frot so; let what will some we will not by sejapated. Not God never made too heats! leving hearts to make them subappy. Don't frit Frank? and she gently insled his hands from his face.

"O'Alice?" said he, fithers are times when I picture the future rediscit with machine; you my own sweet wife; our home hallowed by love, and all the domestic virtues than more times a fair, height driess; to be but a dream. Indeed, shi it's amough to drive me mad! mad! I have read of men who. unable to bear the loss of so much happiness, penstrated the dark mysteries of the future, sooner than live a worthless, bated life."

Alice looked up and shuddered.

with his

all to him, ny father. at I would

1 付款 中海 かんか paned. complete mail of wealth ois a wide lose you, life; and ing sintern allo at the

A will some lever, made anhappy-d his hands

"Only that I have hope in the future, only that I have your love to custain me, only that I have domestic ties that bind me to life, I fear I should become one of these."

"O Frank! Frank! don't say so, or my heart will break. Let us part now, Frank, and not meet too soon, unless you have very particular business with me, as. I do not wish to disobey my father. When you want to see me, you can send Shemul to Mrs. Moran; or to me."

"Be it so, love; I suppose if your father ordered you to many seems one also you could not disobay!"

obey t

obey?"
"Frank!" said she, "I did not expect this from you, after all my promises of devotion. You know my father has hitherto encouraged our love. Now, when my young heart is yours, if he ordered me to wed another, I would be justified in refusing him. No, Frank, if I'm not yours, I'll never be the wife of another."

"Alice, forgive my unjust doubte; you know the infortunate are always suspicious."

It was after this interview the we met Frank returning home. His heart was full of a deep love.

He did not for a moment doubt Alice's love, yet he know that if he lost his property he would not get her father's consent. He had little faith in Mr. Ellis; for, in order to put him upon his guard, Mary Cahill told him what Burkem had said. Though he looked upon this as an idle boast, still he knew so much of Mr. Ellis's unprincipled character that he did not altogether disregard it.

As Frank was passing by Mrs. Butler's he heard the sounds of mirth inside.

Mrs. Butler's establishment had undergone a great hars. Butler's establishment had undergone a great change for the worse. The ruddy horseman had fallen from his perch; the windows were all broken and stuffed with rags; even Mrs. Butler lierself had lost her bloom, and row looked thin and faded. The times were talling upon her, and, to use her own words, "she wasn't herself at all." She managed to keep a few gallons and a drop of beer somewhere for the boys whenever they called, which was calden indeed.

Frank stood at the door listening to the Rover, who had just commenced a song.

The Rover was something of a post, and a great politician. He wrote most of the rough political ballade for the boys. He had a strong, sonorous voice, so that he did full justice to his doggerel

"Well done!" said Frank, opening the door and walking in as the Rover finished his song. "Where have you been this time back ?"

ld not get th in Mr. ard. Mary Though he e knew so or that be one a great all broken derself had to use her She manbeer some-which was the Bover,

and a great gh political

Not far, Mr. Frank. How is every inch of you,

"Very well, though I can't say times are going on well with un wishen est sind en quit est and mine & faire o

"I'm sorry to hear so, for it was you kept the good, plentiful house, full of lashins and lavins; but we'll have some soon, Mr. Frank Our day is coming, believe me. That was a great meeting the clubs had in Dublin. It won't go like 38 with them this time, I'm thinking. Shure the ould prophecy is nearly out; abure the bills are levelled and the hollows are filled up, and cars are walking on the noncome are mised up, and care are waring on the roads without horses, and the people are dyin of hunger in the midst of plinty."

"Begor, that's all three enuit," said one.

"It is," said the Bover; "and abure it is said that it is an O'Brien that's to kunt the Saxons; as well as it was one that routed the Dence at Clear

"Who knows but it's Smith O'Brien? The Lord

Who knows but it's Smith O'Brien? The Lord be praised? said another, rubbing his hands with glad.

"I hope so, I hope so; but, Mr. Frank, sure you ought to be one of us," said the Bover; "it's not for an O'Donatell to remain the shen there is work to be done for his country."

That's true, "said Burken, who was of the party."

It's not in their bood. Share they were always foremost."

"Ay, and will be now, please God," said the Bover. "We are going to get up a club, and we'll make a president of you, Mr. Frank. Will you join the president of you done and data referred my heart is with you and, if need be, my arm too; but, then, no metter—we'll speak over it another time. Haven't you any story to tall us? said he to the Bover, to change the conversation; for, from what he heard about Burken, he had so confidence in him.

Some a one, Mr. Frank, only the country is in

"Do tell us how you tricked the ganger," said

well, I will," said to Bover; and after a faw preparatory hemis and have, he commenced with Mrs. Butler, when a strange man came in. God save all here! mays he God, save you kindly, says L. It's a could evenin, says he. Begor it is, tays It would you have a dhrop? Wid pleasure, says he. After drinkin he mant off, and faith he was no other than the rogue of a gauger in disguise. Myself was summened. Ook, mayrone, says Mrs. Butler, you'll mis me. Shaus, if you swall upon me. What seen I do ma'm? acys I. Oh, I don't know; but you'll begoe me from house and home. Well, I won't swear, on you. Won't you, Shaus, slaune? No, ma'm. Thinks be to God! Fm safe if you don't, Shaun.

and we'll you join

o, though arm too; t another for, from thry is in ger," mid

ter a few

he went gogue of a ed. "Och,

'Is it my outh you want? Show me the prayer-book, and I took and kined the book. Now, Mrs. book; and I took and kissed the book. Now, Mrs. Butler, I take my oath upon this that I won't swear upon you. This his be to God I said Mrs. Butler. So, when I was called up, the fellow swere that I'd threated him. Well, what have you to say? I say the magnitude to me, when I was swore. I fooked at the fellow as if I'd never seen him, and then says, Upon my selemm oath, if I swore that I dhrank with this fellow at Mrs. Butler's I'd perjane myself. You must have mistaken your man, said the magistrate to him; 'dismiss the case.' So, you see, I kept my oath, and saved hur.

the magistrate to him; dismiss the case. So, you see, I kept my outh, and saved her."

"Begad you did; but won't you come up, Shaun?"

"Begor, I believe I might me well, sir Transactor!

As they went along, the Rover gave Frank a full secount of the argumention through the country.

"I did not think it was so extensive," said Trank; but you ought to be more bentions before that Birriem; I keye reason to know that he's nothing good."

good."

To always thought so much about him myself;
but these it is all a public business, we needn't
feer him," said the Rover.

We do not make to take up our reader's time with that shillings that ended in the partiel outbreak of

28. It was an undeploted result to the great things promised by that majority of the people. We do not mean to analyze the past; but this we say, that never was a country riper for revolution, and never

not mean to analyze the past; but this we say, that never was a country riper for revolution, and never were the feelings of an aggrieved people more warm in its behalf, and yet it failed miserably.

The two great parties that gave unanimous expression to a nation's will differed among themesives; they quargeled as to the means of liberating a willing people. Division, that bene of Ireland, entered their ranks; they quarreled and fell, and lost their strength in their own dismaion. The people lost hope and confidence, and many who might be neefal full listlessly heak into retirement. While the peacent near the laws grotest the landlord at he despoils him of the fruits of his industry, of his once happy homesteed, as he drives him a panniless punper upon the world, he sannot neverties of respect the laws; nor can he look upon the nation that affords such protection to his oppressors but with abherence.

And mation's exteen and love are to be gained by equitable and just laws, and not by oppressive ones, that protect the rich and despoil the poor. A rich man's wealth gives him power, so the laws should protect the poor mean from every abuse of that power.

proves the provide the provide the provide the law affection in Intland, and, the opposition will exist and piots and mercis position and acroistions will be the provide Trank was young, generous, and anthusiastic; he and never ore warm

on The many who not meverr npon the oppressors gained by saive ones, r. A sich se of that possessed a good deal of family pride, and loved to dwell upon the days when the O'Donnells were princes in the land. It is no wonder, therefore, that he warmly entered into the Rover's views.

"What's Shemus doin'?" said the Rover, pointing over the ditch. I would have a storage to a conserver.

What are you coing there, Shamus I'. It for the What are you coing there, Shamus I'. It for a way the What are you coing there, Shamus I'. It for a way the What are you coing there, Shamus I'. It for a way the way

; tilesend tai fan enames, griffin her Edelfa

WHEN THE CHAPTER XXIV. HOUSE ILEN WARE

many police, too, and batim in attendance. These were too indispensable to an Irish agent in the discharge of his duties to be left behind; though, in bruth, to a keen observer, they boded no good to the poor O'Donnell, attopped and feeble, and leaning upon the arm of his con, come out to meet the Agents of the Company and the letter blandly,

"to see you reduced to this to see your stock and affects going to be sold for sent."
"Welcome be the will of God, sir. We can't help these things."
"I think Mr. O'Donnell, I and my men had better buy the stock; we can sell them beet to your son.
With executions hanging over you, it would not be safe for him to buy them som
"Ears they couldn't touch them if his; there's nothing against him."

Mind will BUDE OF

11 1 Bell

dent areb

be auctioncere a good in the disthough, in an good to

nd leaning

onn't help

had better

"Certainly not; but people would look upon it as a sham, and, perhaps, distrain again; where, if I buy them and remove them to my land for a few days, they are my property; no one will dare inter-fere with them; your son can buy them back again, you understand."

"What will I do, Frank ?" said the old man, in

"Really I don't know, father," said Frank.
"Do at ye please," said it; mile "If you doubt "
me, I will withdraw the amention altogether, if you choose, where most are allied fure, not ability thank choose. "One make an allow the Commell of "Well what shall I do?" said Mr. Blin.

"As you please, six I know that you or his lord-ship, whose father I once saved from death, would not injure me or my poor manny.

"As you please, six I know that you or his lord-ship, whose father I once saved from death, would not injure me or my poor manny."

"As you please, six I know that you come have at your own wish. If you choose, I'll go house have at your own wish. If you choose, I'll go house had not have the said that a said his said to do.

"Do Mr. Ellis product me and my family, and God blins with a said his me hought of uncurrenced that it was to please her. O'Donnell they the wishle his is Mr. But and his man bought by the wishle

"Your fither himself must come; we cannot treat with you about them," said Mr. Allie, recurring his occupation.

"He's very faction; goaldn't I manage the business?" Beides, my father wishes to give up the management of the business alogether." Onn't help it he management which the widow Shen's last payment?" this was addressed to Hugh Pembert approved to some them the modelick form.

"Twenty pounds; six features to a pearly man do bestdet." apply company dispression in daily

"Haven't you got your engue, of said Mr.
Ellis, with all the engues of office raising his head from the second to Truck, who shood still all the widow

testants in the country. The Rover was in it too, and he went off with Manther Frank—you may be saire for no good."

"It is important to know all this," and M. Ellis.

"As a magistrate, I cannot praire at it."

"Quitainly not," and Mis, Rembert; "but then, you have no witness except, Burkens, whom it would not de to bring forward yublely. It is better let things go on a little of Burkens will not be enspecifed, things go on a little of Burkens will not be enspecifed, and we can watch our own hims to describe the work of the best of the work of the work of the work of the little with the said Burkens, too that oughts it to lyin them.

"Only it's not worth namin' them. I don't like the injuries and Mal little, saiding back within a long dignified air.

"It don't die in like, in and they overlained him. Burkens and them bear and the said and the work of the said with which in a long the said like, saiding back within a long dignified air.

"It don't die annual difficiency of the said of the said with which it is and dignified air.

he should extend any mercy to them; and you, Hugh, have that notice to quit made out, for I know they'll come in the evening; and you, Burkem, serve old O'Donnell with it when they leave the office."

"I'd rather not, sir; it's betther for me keep on terms with them, the way I can know every thing that's passin'. Couldn't Splane do it, your honor?"

"Well, well, let him," and Mr. Ellie was gone, Hingh Pambert threw his pen from him, and fixing his, hands under his contraint, turned his been to the first of it.

"I tell you what, Burkem," said he, "we are on the life wed to firstene, if we take advantage the high read to fortune, if we take advantage of it." The real of the distance of the second of the

"And why the devil shouldn't we," said Burker

"And why the devil shouldn't we," said Burkem.
"Look, Burkem," said he, and heplaced his hand upon his shoulder, "my uncle will soom turn Mary Gormack out of the house, for reasons of his own."

"Are you sure of that, sir!" said Burkem.

"As sume as that you and I are stending here," asswered Pembert. "I overhand a conversation between them the other morning. If you please, she wanted him to marry her, and oried sorely on the head of it; so she's sum to manch. Weak when she's agone, her hat-headed brothers will be looking for revenge, I han. Perhaps they'd kill this foolish old uncle of mine. No matter; whoeven does it, it will be left at their door. The government will offer a large reward; you could get that; besides, I wad and you, or I know Burkem, leave the ne keep on every thing ar honor?" I the office. h Pembert wiell of we are on advantage

id Burkem. ed his hand turn Mary his own."

can please, of squely on Wast, when I be looking this foolish us does it, it be your friend, for I will fall in for this place; for be your friend, for I will fall in for this place; for this swaddling old chiet will pick Limie off our hands some day or other. Do you understand me?"

"Ferfectly, sir."

"I think I can trust you, Burkem. I have always found you a loyal chiel, and you know it wouldn't be safe for you to peaks. Here is five pounds as an earnest of favor."

"Before God, I swear to be thrust" mid Burkem, as he buttoned up the note. "The mid Burkem, as he buttoned up the note."

"It will be your interest to be." You must keep on the best terms with the Cormacks and this young O'Donnell."

"To rather have nothing to do with O'Donnell."

O'Donnell." I have nothin to do with O'Donnell, sir. They reared a brother of mine, and sent him to 'America; but I hate the Oceanshin all have sworn to not Junes die on the gallows." Jone I have sworn to not Junes die on the gallows." Jone I have sworn to not Junes die on the gallows." Jone I have must get the Oceanshin out of the work; hunt Miny home; supply them with some or that we can swear to their attacked, and if this ould east about he had, whate thicked in other one to do it." I have remained in the same of the property, I wouldn't mind adding one hundred pounds to the rewird; to any one that would get me into pomerator with a same of midding one hundred pounds to the rewird; to any one that would get me into pomerator with a mind adding one hundred pounds to the rewird; to any one that would get me into pomerator with a mind adding one hundred pounds to the rewird; to any one that would get me into pomerator with a mind adding one hundred. Burken, with a while unidentant your dest half Barkans with a

"Hot much, sir, not much; just iv a certain jin-tleman forgot drawing his breath some night, you would give one hundred pounds to whoever brought you the news first; besides, the government would you the news first; besides, the government would give a few hundred more, and shurs there is no one to do that but certain jintlemen I have sworn to see hanging on the gallows. Isn't that it, sir, isn't it?" said he, with a desconice look.

"Wanl, with a desconice look.

"Wanl, wall, something that way, but hide your time. Feels why half do their business."

"Ha ha, ha i I half do it, indeed. No, I'll lay my enerse well. James Cormack, I swore I'd have blood for blood, and I will; I will, by heaves. I will, even if I should be dained for it.

"Wasil, wanl, that'll do now. Let us look to business, bide a weel; we can speak meir another time."

They did apeak more about it, and the actful web was woven that was to bring one man and that man as unice to the arch pletter—to a sudden and unprovided death; that was to send a wronged girl adrift upon the wide world, and to bring two innocent men to the gallows. We loathe to follow their hellich plotting, but we will show forth its found.

It was evening before Mr. Ellis returned. He had projectionate O'Donnells. He hold him that the old man was a reckless swindler, that had collected the Pembert.

rtain jinnight, yeu
z brought ent would is no one orn to see ism's it ?"

bide your

To, I'll lay o I'd have yen, I will,

look to actful web w forth its

d. He had against the hat the old people's money into his bank and now had closed. In order to acreen himself from the law, he got his stock and things seized upon. As to the son, he was the leader of secret societies and Ribbonmen; the songer he sould be get rid of the better. Mr. Ellie found the O'Donnelle waiting for him in the office. This encourar haggard appearance of Mr. O'Donnell weeld have made an impression upon the heart of a man made of less storn stuff than Mr. Ellis; but Mr. Ellis; heart was long since closed against the entire feelings of humanity.

"I'm sorry Mr. O'Donnell, to put you to the trouble of coming, for you don't appear well," said Mr. Ellis, in his usual bland manner.

"Indeed, I'm not, de; for besides the trouble entired by the ruinous state of my efficient. I have domestic difficultum. There a derling child dying fast," and the old man wiped his eyes.

Tour blass to out; there is a year and a half a rent due, while the male of your stock searcely covers the half year, there is a year and a half a rent due, while the male of your stock searcely covers the half year, there is a year and a half a rent due, while the male of your stock searcely covers the half year, they be it is a year and a half a rent due, while the male of your stock searcely covers the half was in year, the half was now to allow it to must any longer, if had better give your a receipt to the half year, which the price of your stock covers.

The price of my stock! Why aren't you going to give them to my son, as you promised?" "Yes, if he pays for them."

"Good heaven, do I hear him right!" exclaimed Mr. O'Donnell, as he raised his eyes.

Mr. O'Donnell, I am sorry to say that my orders are to keep the stock to meet your rent. You know.

they were sold by fair auction." and Thou and Thousand "Didn't you tell me that you'd befriend me, and that you'd give them back to my son again?".

"I think I have befriended you in putting to meet your rent what might go for nothing; and as to the stock, I'll return them if your con pays the salling price of them.

"You know well that we couldn't do it, and that the stock were sold for one-third of their value,"

"I can't help it; it was a fair open auction; I must obey orders; and more than that, I must tell you that his lordship has ordered me to clear the estate, now that it's out of lease."

"Good God, we are ruined, beggared beggared forever!" groaned Mr. O'Donnell, clasping his well of helical his

"Bir," said Frank, "on you reconcile it with your conscience or duty to entrap us this way, to sell our stock for half nothing, under pretence of protecting us, and then keep them yourself. I tell you it is a robbery, sir, it is _____ Frank stopped, shoked with passion and indignation.

rou going

a significant my orders You know

info flame

n?".

ag to meet
i as to the
the selling

t, and that oir value,"

auction ; I I must tell olear the h with your to sell our protecting you it is a "Well," said Mr. Ellis, calmly, "go on, my young man."

"Don't, don't, Frank," said the father. "Ok, Mr. Ellis; have pity or us; deal fair with us, and God will bless you. I'll go to his lordship and tell him all. Fonce saved his father's life. Sure he can't forget it. He won't ruin myself and my darling family ; he won't bring these grey hairs to a panper's grave. Oh! no, he won't do it, Mr. Ellis; he won't; Til go to him. In of Zond mode aving is not toll

" I'm soting by his orders," said Mr. Ellis, un-

No, no, it can't be; he don't know all, all I'm suffering! Poverty staring me in the face—my rived, dealing ohild dying, "O God! O God!" and the old man beat his head, and the tears streamed down his farrowed cheeks.

"Let us be done with this fooling," said Mr. Ellis, sternly. "Splane."

"Give that paper to Mr. O'Donnell,"

"What" this!" said Mr. Q'Donnell, as he took the paper.

"A notice to quit," replied Mr. Ellis.

"A notice to quit," replied Mr. Ellis.

"Have pity on my grey hairs and dying child. See, I throw myself upon my grey hairs and dying child. See, I throw myself upon my my know before you." suffering! Poverty staring me in the face-my

"You're right, boy, you're right. But sure he won't do it; sure you won't. Mr. Ellis. But what's this? I feel dissy," rad he raised his hand to his head, and then fall upon the foor.

Is he dead?" said Mr. Ellis, pushing over to feel his pulse.

his pulse.

"Robbert manderer! keep of ; his blood be upon you," said Brank, as he struck Mr. Ellis a heroe blow, that sent him realing against the table, until he fell at the other side.

"Father, father dear, speak to me," said he, tenderly, leaning over him. "He breathes; he's not dead, thank God, thank God!"

Frank, where are we?" said the old man, recovering himself, the first war and the drawn that he was a said the old man, recovering himself, the said has been dealed beautiful.

"Tell me is it a dream, Frank? Was I dream-

"You're better, father, aren't you!" said Frank, avoiding the question. I do not be the pression of the property in his heart, said he looking about and recalling his interview with Mr. Ellis, "No, he has no mercy God forgive him; but God will judge him!" Mr. Pembert thought it prudent to get away from the fary weath of Frank's arm; so he heatily here Mr. Ellis into the drawing-room.

Finale stellard his father to the our which some of the secrets, through companion, got ready for him. Though week and faint, Mr. O'Donnall would not it sure he But what's and to his ver to feel

od be upon lis a fleros table, until his lordship would see justice done him. Again he was doomed to disappointment, for his lordship refused seeing him; and when he sent up his message, his answer was that he did not meddle in the management of his property; he left it all to Mr. Ellis. He got a sheet of paper and stated his case, and reminded his lordship of how he saved his father's life. The note was returned with the remark that "he had nothing to do for him; Mr. Ellis wouldn't wrong him."

wrong him."

With heavy hearts they returned to their once happy home, but now interable indeed. Not only was poverty staring them in the face, but death too, seemed to trimph in their wrethedness.

Mrs. O'Donnell and Kate were anxiously availing their strivial; they read the tale of their dienster in their faces. Mr. O'Donnell seemed years older since he left that redmin how hours before. By ghastly and feeble did he look that Mrs. O'Donnell ran to empore him.

"You've sint, my love. What's the matter? Has the journey injured you?"

"Ro, love, no; I san't hear it?"

No, love, no; I san't hear it?"

Near what' wall in all said Mrs. O'Donnell.

"You've has old now, whiting into the grave; we were lately rich and happy, dispensing blessings around us; we hoped to leave a nice inheritance to our children; but now we are ruined, we are beggars, beggars! His has robbed us; yes, it is rebbery; who says it's not? Our stock and effects were valued at nearly five hundred pounds, and because he promised to return them, no one bid against him. Now he has given me a receipt for one hundred and fifty pounds—half a year's rent for aye hundred pounds worth—is not this robbery? But the law will transport a poor man for stanling a sheep to heap himself and his family from stanving, as it did to Net Oursen, who lived for days upon grass and turnip-tops; but, then, when one of his family died of hunger, he stole a sheep from Mr. Ellis, and he got him transported though he new robe us of ever three hundred pounds. O God! O God! is Thy justice desping? We would kill the highwayman, and here is this robber living and glorying in his robbery. There was a time—but, no, God forgive him to God!"

40

Mrs. O'Donnell sank into a chair beside her kusbend, and Kete bent her besuiffal head apon her hands. Frank stood looking out of the window, his arms crossed upon his breast, his teeth elenahed. "Falker" said he, turning to the old man se he concluded, "you're right, death in the good for such a demon. He has brought rain and misery upon age around are beggars, is rebbery; effects were and -became against him-no hundred or five huny? But the and the law g a shasp to ing as it did on grass and family died Ellis, and he be us of over lodd in Thy highwayman, nying in his God forgive Let us have side her huead upon her window, his us. He's a robber, and he shall die death, death to him; the robber shall die!" he muttered between his teethers. For besting the last received a market of

"Who speaks of death!" said the old man, awakening from his reverie—"who speaks of death, Frank? Ro, no, boy, you would not kill any one, you would not sally the name of O'Dounell. No, no bleave him to God! He's a robber, thought, then God will punish him! No. God forgive him have marry upon him!" and the old min mark into his reverse once more ladded that

Mrs. O'Donnell looked at her son; there was a stern determination in that ferce look and that glaring my an Elication in that flores tooks and that glaring my an Elication force to him, and, embraced him, which the property of the party of the property of the property of the party of the party

His has above menty to us, hately by mother?

One hast King micry backet give hall get !!

Come haut Kake come been for for our backet general to be a general for the our backet gener

Lie position the property and have been block her pook asked a request of you before. I have borne and maked you; I love you as my first-born; I'd rather mackled you; I love you as my first-born; I'd rather see you in your grave—sits Beery and Kate and that poor man there—all in one grave than have you called a murderer. If have not long to live, I dear; but were your hand atkined with blood, I would not live one week; so now promise me that you will not touch him. O God Almighty, somen his heart!"

The tears began to flow from Frank's dry eyes at this pathetic appeal; he stooped down, and, raising his mother, wild.

I promise you, mother, that while you live I will not bring dishoner upon you. I will not touch him.—I leave him to God.

O God! I thank Thee Thou heart heard my prayer!" Coalstoned his mother.

prayer!" (relatived his mother.

Dey after day little Benny win cinking alouly and notily to the grave.

It was May, and the sell rays of the morning's sun came floating through the windows of Beery's room. The little binds were maging and chinking in the garden without, filling the apartment with their sweet music.

Benry by Mill upon her little bend, her coyed in tently fixed upon a large exaction, that have sell as the feet. The sun shone upon the crucies, and seemed to surround it with a halo of hervests glory.

It relation by seemed to illumina Beery's calm features.

an have you hive, I fear; god, I, would that you will a his heart !", a dry eyes, at and, reisting

agt board my

The priest heard her last confession, and then administered to her the Holy Secrament. He then knist and penyed a considerable time beside her-Beery all this time less till wrapt in prayer.

"Now, my child," said the priest, "resign your self into the hands of God, and trust His mercy, for He is good and merciful, indeed."

I do Father: "Into Thy hands, Q Lord I I to the hands of the land of the land."

countil my spirit; Lord Jesus receive my soul."

the murained to their read the prayers for a departing soul, which were responded to by the family.

Oh, there is hope in his impiring prayer. When the soul is trainabiling more the respect of charnity, how sweet to hear the emailing words.

No emails better the emailing words.

"The Light is my light and my selvation; when

"Xes, Beery, dear!" and Kate brought the book and read the following beachtful passage :"All this goes to the salvation of a soul. To be saved it has to be God's child, God's brother, and to participate in God's nature. Now, see what is involved in being saved. Look at that soul youther, that has just been judged; Justs has this instant spoken; the cound of his sweet words has landly died away; they that means have seasely yet alosed the eyes of the deserted body. Not the judgment has some and generally over. It was wift, but merciful move that it over. It was wift, but merciful move the interesting the passage of the deserted body. Yet the judgment has some and generally over. It was wift, but merciful move that it was the interesting mover to make the passage of the deserted by the financial God must support it, or it will hall been into nothingness. Life is over. How short if has been."

It has indeed; it has been."

The soul must support it, or it will hall been into nothingness. Life is over. How short if has been."

The soul must support it, or it will hall been into nothingness. Life is over. How short if has been."

The soul with by death, and the paths I shall be supported in the soul must be paths. The soul must be paths I shall be supported in the paths. The soul is the same which Thou didn't indired in Thy passage.

Beginn which Thou didn't indired in Thy passage.

"That will do, Kate; that will do."

"That will do, Kate; that will do."

Thus did this bright May day pass away in the chamber of death. The sun had now sank in the west, and the light was fast fading in the room.

"Papa," said Beery, as the old man entered the room, supported by a servant; with bursting heart he clung to his darling child, her on whom he deated and felt so proud of—"papa don't fret for me; I'm going to heaven, and I'll witch over you, and pray for you."

"God, help me! my heart is breaking," he excitatined, as he was borne from the room.

The moonbeams now played through the open window, and a flood of golden light densed around the papared walls. Beny's head was heavy, her cheeks were ashy pale, and the light was fast fading from her eyes. She, sweet child! was dying.

Her little hand was clasped in Kate's, and her head rested upon her mother's lap; her golden ringlets, damp with the dewn of death, fall heavily down. Her hims area should, and her lips moved in it in prayer; she clasped har hands and asseed to sleep; but no, she was but communing with the angels, for a sweet malls played around her mouth, and she said. "O maxmus. I have seen so lovely a sweet; and Frank, dear; poor dear pape, where is he?. God comfort him. Do not weep; sure you don't grudge me to God?"

"No, darling, no."

"We shall meet egain: Farewell, mamma; kies me again. That will do—lay me down. How sweet that music."

that music."

They laid her backs, she stretched out her little hands and closed her eyes, and angels scaled them and bore her pure spirit away.

There she lay, pale, pale as alabaster, and a sweet angelic smile accused to play upon her lipe, as if her gentle spirit yet hovered around its sarthly prison. She looked beautiful in death—so beautiful, indeed, that one might exclaim—

How sweet, her cam ate atems.

The moonbeams floated again with a dim and chadowy light, casting gloomy shadows around, for there were wit eyes and sorrowing hearts in the chamber of death. but a pure spirit had foreshen its earthly tenement and fied to the becom of its close.

pape, where emma ; kies

How sweet

out her little and a sweet lipe, as if her other prison. stirul, indeed, to telling Y ... 16. 000

gued flight. attioungation.

tionica. e Marino Tilba hatta Trill mot Billes the la

OHAPPER XXV.

NOW ME. BLY TURNS THERE TO MIS ADVANTAGE—ATTACK

now MR. SLY TURNS TRINES TO ME ASVANTAGE—ATTACK UPON THE MILLS—MR. SLLIS AND LOSD CHARALL'S MADERY FOR RESPONDED A SPOR.

Live is one system of cold, stern realities. Though it has lost all interest and hope for us, still we must now on with the current; we must out, drink, buy and call, when shadowed by its derivest frowns, to well as when heaking in its brightest smahlne. We still pursue the gilded ahadows that dansle our inaginations, as if their enjoyment could bring peace to the weary spirit. There is something in our natures that solemnly and eignificantly make us feel that there is another life, where the meaning of friends shall be a happy union. This support, many a weary heart when oppressed with the heavy letheral the meanical observances, may arge us on with the rapid current, still there is hope in the religious sentiments and aspirations that years after a happy future.

If we could but understand the wist dispensations.

If we could but understand the rich dispersations of Providence deal, had all its gloomy attributes, often come for one good. The death of those we love stirs up our moral perseptions to a true sense of our religious obligations.

As the furnace purifies gold, so sorrow chastens and purifies us, giving a softened, gentle tone to our lives. In fight arrange algorithms to ento the lives.

The cares and sorrows of life presed heavily upon the O'Donnells. That strength of mind and resolution that gained an honorable position in life for Mr. O'Donnell now forecok him. Unable to sustain his ruined affairs, he hopelessly sank with them, and from an active man of business, became, an impecile paralytic. Mrs. O'Donnell, too, sank under the double affliction; maturally of a delicate frame and constitution; all he hope and joy seemed centered in her darling ch'at; and now, unable to bear her loss, and the wide vicionitudes, she gave way to a sad melancholy, and pined away.

It now devived upon Frank and Kate to tend and console their parents, and to key and hake the best of their shattered fortunes. They could expect but little assistance from their neighbors or friends, for in general they were not much better off than themselves would produce and one our grown that the

Hew knew how soon the pestilence would call at their own doors; so even those who were somparatively rich try bled for the future. The country had become one rast lamrette. Living skelstons stalked about, with barely the comblance of life. These poor, mandated looking beings, covered with wretched, patched rags, that breathed forth a living missma, everywhere met one's gime. Women and children, and men too, often died of want and fever in their cabine, and there lay unseen, uncared-for, until the putrid corpess sent forth such a stench, that some charitable people collected to level in the cabin, or burn it over them. It am has a my

Let us turn from these siskening details and see how our friend, the Rev. Bob Sly, was progressing in his evangelical career. Armed with the authority of Lord Clearall and Mr. Blis, the reverend gentle man spared neither trouble nor expense in enlightening the benighted tenantry, a His school, or soup house, as it was called, was pretty well attended by the children of dependents, who were forced to put on the semblance of apostacy in order to keep from starvation; "I must confess that these were few, for the majority, with a heroism that would enable marryrdom, spuraed their bribes and threats alike, and perished sooner than barter their father alike, and perished sooner than barter their father and sharking themselves with the state of the cross brightened away thank the preachers, for they were unable to hear, from almost every one their metrothic mairited, entreasion of public determined this mairited, entreasion of public determined the given beaven to mapplicate marry upon the bring ones. I like Ellis, who generally addompanied," here discrepint Bes," took this as an est of henings to his enterendinely stal and devotion. It house, as it was called, was pretty well attended by panied." her often place "but," took take in the of heringe to his extinocilinary stal and devotion. If a shockering the world say, "look at their poor creature how she flings berealf to the paddle to think tone to our yenin |

eavily upon and resoluin life for to sustain h them, and an imbedie e the double and constitered in her

iste to tend d make the or friends, iter of then

ray..to a sad

van you'd agil would call at re sompara-The country: ng akeletons anes of life overed with Women and me for some little favors I have done her, and for me for some little favors I have done her, and for leading her from the darkness of Popary. These poor people are grateful indeed."

"Yes, dear Bob. What a source of consolation it must be to you to see the heavenly seed you have shaken upon the highway bring forth such fruit."

"It is, indeed, dear Lisry; but then I am but an humble instrument in the heads of God, who make all things, great and small, according to His will, and often uses the meanest to work, out great designs."

designs.

He whe bears in mind the immense revenue arising out of church preparty in Iraland, and pocketed by idle, wealthy collectants, will certainly wonder why such men as the Rev. Mr. Sly should be countenanced even by Protestants themselves. It is true, there are some liberal Protestants who look upon such men with as much detectation as the most rigid Catholics. When again we consider that of this large revenue that goes to the meintenance of the Protestant Church in Iraland, the greater part is paid by Catholics, one should expect that they the Projections Church in Ireland, the greater part is poid by Catholics one should expect that they would leave us in peace, and peaks their livings in quiet gratitude. Many of them do so, it is true and many of them are models of true obserty, and Chris-tian forbearance. There are others who do not wish to deprive us of all value for our money; so they join the Exeter Hall saints in their vile slanders

This was written before the disorder went of the Church Break-upon Catholicity and its priests. It is useless by any band of men, particularly illiterate men, as the Exeter Hall missioners generally are, to try a upset the popular religion, as Catholicity undoubtedly is, in the eyes and hearts of the people of Ireland. In vain they go about with the Bible in one hand and bribes in the other, to upset a faith which with the dark fery ordeals of parsecution and discharge word. They are but breeding discussion and discharge and might be much better employed at home in instructing the ignorant, basetted masses that swarm in England's large towns. In a country like Ireland, where the spiritual warms of the people are attended to by a neatons, numerous ordershood where there are ministers without congregations, one would saturally think there would be no used of a capply of preachers who only engender religious animostics. They oftentimes revited the rittle and secrements of the religion of the people, called opprobrious misses to things held maked. To it to be wondered it, then, if some of them met with about and ill treatment from persons so jealous of the proper respect due to their religious forms and corresponded by the darkly ask our English readers how would they receive a drashid of fresh priests, who would go to their homesteads reviling their religious and pumphlets reflecting upon their religious helding, and Iodding up to ridicate the very things that they (the Rogles) held most sacred? We mad not require an analyse, er, and for ry. These Anti vista consolation ad you have ch fruit d God, who ling to His k, out great relend, and will certainly c. Sly should themselves.* greater part of that they pair livings in it is true and ty and Chris mey; so they Charles Month Subset for there is spirit and manliness enough in England to prevent any violation of the rites of their Church, and of that Christian charity and forbearance; that one seet should observe towards another.

Livrie Ellis had now become so attached to Mr. Sly that she did not feel herself happy unless when in his company. She had seen little of the world; har affections were fresh and warm. It is not surprising, therefore, that one so artful as Mr. Sly—one who affected such sandtity—one who, in her estimation, was parfection examplified—should with his opportunities, win the love of her young heart. He did his named to cultivate this growing feeling. He did not alarm her at first by too hasty advances. By his pisty, his seel and his goodness, he fast gained her esteem; then, by his cunning, insinnating ways he won her affections.

She loyed him with all the gushing warmth of a first love. He—though he knew nothing of love in its huliest and purest sense looked upon her, with her immense fortune as a most desirable match designs shows any natures has remained in strange that Mr. Illie should be hind to this growing affection of his child. But, then, he was so hardened by the cares of the world and his own assurable enjoyments for he was in every way, a sermalist—that he never loved with that deep, yearning love of a parent. He had provided for all her wants; she had planty of money, and marvants to attend her; she mould, or ought, therefore, be

Mr. Sly Turns. Things to his Advantage. 417

happy. He did not consider that the heart requires something besides external enjoyments to make it happy he did not consider that the young affections, like the ivy, must cling to something for support, and that when its tendrils are not clasped in the embrace of domestic love, they are apt to stray

in England

eir Church,

arance that trust file;

unless when the world; is not surfr. Sly-one her estimald, with his

y advances. e feet gained nating ways Fredorital) Are hing of love d upon her, at desirable blind to this

diswhere the state of the state

ous teacher, and delighted in instructing her young estechniness. The works on Knockcorrig were stopped, the

The works on Knockeourig were stopped, the public money was squandered, and the people were dying in thousands. In many places they had risen in open revolt, and had broken into stores and shops, and plandered them, to appears the gravings of hunger. Additional hodies of police were shartered in the country—the sepance of their support to be home by the people.

There was a large committee meeting at the Mill on this consistent for the people; that something should be done for the people; that solid should be given money extensively, or that more police should be quartered in the locality.

There they were collected outside in anxious groups. Their lives, the lives of their families, were staked upon the locality, and the result missry of chiraces and logs of timber, living smartered sheet tons, frightful to headed hunger, squatted upon attention and logs of timber, living smartered sheet tons, frightful to headed.

With edge, anxious look, the hunger growd avaited the result of the deade within.

There were some hunger men there, who were for relieving the poor at all costs and risks.

Local Glearall and his party permiled; they carrier a resolution that the quarter as a class should be attracty aftered to; that no was than half a

her young

opped, the cople were y had risen

at the Mill

pound of Indian meal, daily, should be given to each pauper, and this only to a limited number in each family. It might be necessary to explain the quarter ore dame. It provided that any one holding a quarter or more land with his Louse should not get relial. Now, this was a powerful lever of extermination in the hands of the landlord. Many, through dire necessary, wore forced to resign that little farms. Oftentians the landlord refused taking the hand without getting possession of the house with fit he then shortly hurled the poor wretch shrift upon the world. Las worm at the backton of the demantite was made known to the maximus crowd which awaited it with the same breathing matrix, that a culprit in the dock might that verdice that was to emerge him to death or liberty and no wonder he to them, indeed, it was a matter of his admitted was no part in the dock might have written the wonder he to them, indeed, it was a matter of his admitted with his money. In the dock may be the dock which we have a finite the money will be the money with the money will be the money of human votes.

It was a matter of human votes.

them, are we to straye like dogs? his lordships' dogs are well fed, and an Christians are left to die of hunger in our own country."

"Lat us tear down the house and kill the bloody crew, betther to be shot or hung than to die in this count to he this in three die

way."

My good people, said Mr. Illis, from a window,

"keep yourselves quiet, and we will do all we can for you; if not, as a magistrate, I will order the police to fire moon your and the base of the Bahl Mills, you dogs dare you do it in We will tear you limb from limb, you masking sobber,
Where is the poor O Domall's property, you dirty libiplate you house levelles? For order them to fire upon us. Oh, they it, though you wish to reach would hear things that he would not wish to reach Lord Clearall's earn.

Diethren! drawled the Rey. Mr. fly, "hepthren, you are going the road to pardition; jour "helicota "Ky ourse upon your impudence, you said awaddling ranther; the you look sheek and well in comparisment when you come cadging to Ellie's."

Arragh, do yo hear the ally chit of chime. Faith it was no nickname to call him fly whit of chime. Faith it was no nickname to call him fly has praying the parline together yet? Faith it would be hatther for that ould fool. Ellie, to be clocking afther yet that tumbling bourses."

Which hat the dasest man alone without blame

left to die anischt, a foelu

the bloody die in this ought to la a window. all we out

AND PULL li.We will ng sobber.

you dirty
or them to

ish to reach

d s'ime' Var

onld avadcell in com-lics." As her him: Faith

him? Shure he's only taking patthern by Mr. Ellis himself," said an old withered crone that squatted upon a log of timber. spritted an isd at an ing

Thrus for you, Peg aroom? said another.

Oh, the cold sinner, the ould reprobate that ought to be thinkin' of his sowl."

ought to be thinkin' of his sowl."

The Blis sould be well for him, if he had no sowl, for their this sould be well for him, if he had no sowl, for their this sould be well for him, if he had no sowl, for their this sould had regard the origin. The Ellis and Mr. Sly, under the impression, that they would have a good many things upt to their advantage, withdraw, and form upt to their advantage, withdraw, and form appropriate their advantage, withdraw, and form a force, gainst sooking dellow albowing, his way, through the crowds willhut yet months, and let us white intellectuate of the door. There is made and force will bridge the sources. There is made and force will bridge the sources. There is made and force the divil will push to draw at you, if you do, should Mr. Ellis will push to draw at you, if you do, should Mr. Ellis will push to draw at you, if you do, and forced the divil will push to draw at your and have you day? This will you many intil you was what you'll got?

The original of with the absorbed to your a large log and forced it against the door.

Fire on them !" said he to the police, as soon so ho read it irravillatore. His Laurengelies from isse.

"Stop !" said their officer. "Mr. Illia, it would be throwing away the lives of my handful of men.

All I can do until the military come to be protect you. you." You're a coward, mir!" and Mr. Mile, web

ly the M you are at their, theredays will manifes their lives. "I will east politicar the distributer asset only man lives.

"Oward, skyll and the affect, indigentity.

"Oward, skyll and the affect, indigentity.

"I repeat it, its. If the men wave miles my command Pd have a way day of that either day or semifering way in a minute was a neckeral natural with a door in giving way," said Lord Clears, as he heard the craim of its timbers. "Could you get the men in by the back way?" said he to the officer. The officer went round to the back door and got in his men, whom he placed to protect the room where they were assembled. The door had given way, and the craw being with load yells. In a moment, each, him and respitates that contained dour, meal, or corn, were broken open. Some of the sloters forced their way into the school-room, and tore the tracts and broke the botters.

It was amusing to see wemen with their petricousts converted into make, and men with their petricousts converted into make, and men with their old coats performing the mome office, while they marched off, of frain land. in it would direction the Clearall, as sald you got loor and got et the room r had given yells. In a me contained almost maked, with their booty. The flour and meal way either removed or seatered about when the military arrived. Mr. Ellis and his party read the military arrived. Mr. Ellis and his party read the Blot Aist, and wanted the commanding officer to fire on them. He, with a sease of, contempt, replied that it was "not the duty of soldiers to about poor, starving wrethers like their," and he pointed to some images looking rouses and children who were revenessly devouring the raw most.

The Head it is the their duty to fire upon cohors and kithan breaking, replied Land Cleartil, which imment Englishment to fact, and the country. The military like his there was in the country. The military is his threating may, if where the rich military is his threating and which are and the country. The military is his threating and sold and the part of the country. The military is his threating and sold and the part of the country. The country is the country of the country. The country is the country of the country. The country is the country. The country is the country. The country is the country of the country. The country is the country. The country is the country of the country. The country of the co

I moved a on OHAPTER XXVIVIA him to

क न्यून्तिकार १९७३ °

THE EVICTION OF THE OBOSTALL THE DEATH OF ROM O'DONNELL-ALICE MARRO, P

Wraven had now come area degree; Christman had passed, marked by no factive greatings or colobrations. Just and James II was a day in February; he mow was heavy upon the ground, and a thick sheet drifted floroply with the wind, as Mn Ellis and a large military and police force came to evict the Tomnells. Man is a selfish animal, and when he becomes hardened with power he seldom makes allowance for the facilings and wants of his fallow-men. Mr. Ellis was now all-powerful. He was a magistrate and sub-cheriff. So operous were kin duties as shoriff in ejecting the unfortunate yearantery, that he had invented and constructed a machine for pulling down their houses. The grippid-chain was fired to come of the richers, and then a feet turns brought down the root over the unfortunate inmates, if they were foolish enough to remain inside, which was often; the case, for they w was beavy ished seroply military and is. Man is a ardened with ardened with r the feelings

I was now allthe heriff. So seting the untied, and coutheir houses
d the rafters,
roof over the lah enough to case, for, they

nat to be buck

His men rushed into the house and fung out the furniture.

A large crowd of people had collected, and looked

"The old lady ien't able to get up, your honor. I think she's dying. What will we do?" said one of the bailiffs.

the bailiffe.

"All a sham, Horan—all a sham—pull her out.

Shall come to in the sin! And appreciated the bed—

"Get up, melan, or we must pull you out," and he should be:

"The O'Dennell mannel, or its a constant of the bed—

"The O'Dennell mannel, to rise to be a constant of the bed of the fellow, taking her in his arms."

in his arms.

"Riffical tobust her not? shouted a voice; hearse with emotion, behind him paint with a flares blow; that sont the blood welling from his month and nice; Frank leveled him on the door, of Dog!? said his his his works and his his his his flares had, "Mother, door, Ell corry you." I work gain to blood you, my darling hay, and his gaint Our Divine Lord anterest more, Frank, and her how Esphere it. As for me, it matters little and her how Esphere it. As for me, it matters little a later of the corresponding to the corresponding to the corresponding to the later of the corresponding to the correspondin

Frank took Les tenderly, and wrapped the cover-ing around her; he back her in his arms, and as her hand rauted upon his bacon, his heart awaited with emotion, and the fears realed from his ages. He

"Frank," said she, "my heart is breaking. Bring me your father."

"Yes, mother, yes;" and as he looked upon her pleasures he saw that the hand of death was already overshadowing them." Frank went, and shortly returned, hading the old man. His body was bent; and his grey heir was now almost white from the effects of sorrow. Uncle Corny followed, with his regimentals thrown upon his only sem; "The crowd fall back in reverence. A many history sem; "The crowd fall back in reverence. A many had through the fall of the limit of the first like with the fall of the limit of the first like with the fall of the limit of

He pressed his hands to his head, and seemed to collect himself; he looked around with surprise; he looked at the soldiers and at Mr. Hills; he then he looked at the soldiers and at Mr. Illie; he then knott down, exclaiming.

My love, my love, is it come to that O God, help us. God, help us!" and he that down and passed about the kind her. There was not stary eye there except Mr. Illie's, and those used to such stocked.

MI but had the priest now, M be content in O. God, hear my prayer!"

First their Father O Desirell rods into the yard.

Frank ran to him and told him all. He herried over to Mr. O Desirell.

ng. Bring to the state of the limpos her abortly rewas bent; to from the d, with his. The growd by burn-Man

William In Die tallowing. while to my films ne to your.

18 3 da 78 4W

MoD O God

un and phone ny aya thank h souloit the content of Op-multiplies, have

Father O'Donnell heard her confession, and administered the holy secraments. He then knelt and prayed beside her.

Oh, what a scene in a civilized country l. To see that poor old priest, his hair floating in the breeze, and covered with steet and snow, and that gentle western dying besides a wall, her walling friends around her I seem to a state of the country to the countr

Father O'Donnell stopped reading; he took has hand, and looked into her face.

"My God," he emittined, " she's dead!"

Mr. O'Donnell took her hand, enclaiming, " How cold you are. Wen't you come in, love; do, and we'll warm you. Sure it's very cold here." And when she ctirred not, he sank down heride har and rested his head upon Kais's housen, who was all this time supporting her mother, herself more dead then align transporting her mother, herself more dead then time supporting her mother, herself more deed them alive transmit and the supporting her mother, herself more deed them.

O'Donnell, turning hersy a size stock of Father.

O'Donnell, turning hersy a size stock of Father.

O'Donnell, turning hersy as a size stock of Father.

Trank was phreasted. He run over and seized her like to this group. More have murdered her. Tou robbid as first, it was not have murdered her. Tou robbid as first, it was not have mardered her. Tou orying to Heaven her vengennes, and vengennes will it have. Murderer, and robber, you shall die like the heave of the head. God I will upon you for vengenness!

O'Beise him," mid Mr. Elle, transling with factors.

"They dere not they dere not!" shouted Frank; and the people took up stones and sticks; and rushed around him way Small of brish all divor wind boot

"Can we make no defence?" said Uncle Corny, leaning his hand gently upon Frank's shoulder; if not, let me march." . He then turned around, talking to some neighbors, who were asking him to their houses. This was set down at a large discount as

Look at the ould Croppy thrying to stir them up, wid one of the bailiffs to Mr. Filis 1 to stell Frank let go the bridle of Mr. Ellie's korse, and fell back to the browd lined to more row array warms

"I see him, I see him! I'm d-d but I'm

And Mr. Ellis kept his word, and tid an indicate of the people were intensity writed. Some stones were flung at Mr. Ellis; the soldiers and police had were nung at Mr. Eilis; the soldiers and police had collected around him, with their guns loaded and bayonets screwed.

Shemus a Glough wept and shemed for a time beside Mrs. O'Donnell. He then jumped up and realised cough the crowd, and his Mr. Ellis with a she that sent him realing from his horse. A wild not can through the crowd, and they realed at the military.

"Ready, present "showed their officers as "Stop, stop, ir God's sale stop!" said Father. O'Donnell, throwing himself between them. "Are you Christians at all? Here, in the face of death, ated Frank; or wind both

Incle Corny, noulder : "if und, talking him to their discount as "Heirouldstadf.

to stir them 1. To small de l'orse, and anueworrect d but I'm his pension!"

ed jodyki adi Some stones ad police had londed and d for a time aped up acid Mile with a press. A wild ey rushed at LAIS VAL PAY officer. on 111 and Pather, them. you're going to shed each other's blood!" and he pointed to the corpes. "Out you sayages! But God help you! it's hard to blame you. But loave them to Godd to God, who will judge them according to their doings. I'd rather be the poorest man here then that guilty man," and he pointed to Mr. Ellis, who, to ming with rage, and covered with blood, had remounted his horse. "So, thank God, that though you are poor, your souls are not black

Most of the people went away, except the imsomewhere, for none of Lord Clearall's tenants dare

The Rev. Mr. Smith chanced to be driving by at the time; he left his extrapon the road, and went in a After Father O'Donnell told him how things stood-stop has a send all separate visits.

"My God I my God I" mid he, " how men who his power."

"Father O'Dennell told him that they could not get a house to source the body to, so great was their dreaff of the incident.

"This feetings to that I have come this way," middle bettle "S have a mag farm-house a few miles of; let Mr. O'Dennell's family remove there, and I'll see this this distinct woman shall get proper burial. They can comery the house as long in it with their convenience. Note shall they wast, atther, But they had before this furniture. Will me of you," said he to some men near, "run over to my farm and tell the men to bring over the ears to remove this furniture Per of the tage of the .

"Yes, your riverence, and God bless you!"
"Stop!" said Mr. Ellis, who overheard the order.
"That furniture is mine; I canted it with the other effects, so don't took it at your public your and the Father O'D and and Mr. Enith looked at each other.

your rent these boulds this little furniture, said the minister.

the minister.

No. Mr. Smith; it's no business of yours; all this was fairly auctioned, so it is my property.

"I beg your pardon, Mr. Ellis; it is business of mine; it is the duty every Christian man to try and protect a poor honest man from accountralism and tyranny," and Mr. Smith walked away.

The body was carefully runnied, followed by the many relatives and a crowd of people; "Pather O'Deaned and Mr. Smith also accompanying them."

Erich wakes and tonerale are very much stills in general, so we need not describe them! The, indeed, were a postilicity and one, on abcount of life.

O'Donnell's tragic death, and the former high senialing of the family.

Father C'Donnell seni the family of the family and the family of the family.

ar, "run over over the cars

age.

you le seed and the order. with the other e viscon and, solved at each rolesian sou of more than umiture," said of yours; all incide, moreover, as the church was on Lord Clearall's property.

Mr. Sly offered to reed the service, but would

Mr. Sly offered to read the service, but would have been torn in pieces but for Father O'Donnell.

The people more left for their homes. The little church was allows; but one returned to weep over that newly of field grave. Frank knell and prayed by times. Kate would be there too, but also was not tible to rise from her bed, poor girl.

"O fire they! mether! said Frank in the depth of his meguinh. "mether! you have bift lenaly, breaking hearts after you; but, then, I should not your for you, for you are lappy with your God; but for me, want said afficient are our portion. Better, mother, to there beside you in that cold gave, than, but it, a morthless life! Oh! what is life to me! Ones, I hoped that it would be allife of joy and happing it; but no, no, it is to the fire of dark bittle count. These up abject you. I have it is indeed, would be a blessing now. Hen boast that the layer of majoring property. How little do they know of those layer and stake field facil, they me his mittens and find within A times landlord and the support of men? Have not we, therefore, an inherent right to the soil, and are we to be thus crushed and trampled and husted from it? O mother! I'll have revenge upon your murderers, and then I'll fly the country. Yes, Ellis, the murderer of my mother, shall die by my hend; but, Alice! Alice! girl of my heart! how can I leave you?

Alice I Alice I girl of my heart I how con I leave you?

In his excitement his eyes glared, he clanched his hands and ground his tasth, and spoke in a hurried, audible manner.

The rains of an old abbey stood near the grave.

After Alice Mahar had left the clinrehyard, she missed Frank, and while har father and Father O'Donnell were in earnest conversation, she returned, knowing that she would find him at the grave.

grave.

Seeing Frank speeking to himself in an excited manner, the stood to listen, and overheard his wild soliloguy. She went over and gently lake her hand upon his shoulder.

"Who's this?" said he, rudely finging the hand from him and turning round. "O Alice!" said he gently taking her hand, forgive my judences; I was in a strange mood.

"I forgive and pity you, Frank; hut I sauet tall you that I overheard you. Frank; hut I sauet tall you that I overheard you. Frank, seeld you think of being a Ausderer without horror to the grave.

therefere, and to be thus from it? Or murderers,

laid her hand

ging the hou lice!" mid h y rudencer;

Even so, Frank. Vengeance belongs to God, and He will deal with every one according to his works. Leave him to God; He is just."

Alice, love! if you were a man you'd feel as I do. The very reptile will recoil upon the feet that crushes it; and can I, a man, see my means plundered from me, my mother murdered, and yet caimly look on? Look at my poor father, Alice. See what a wreck he is! He was beloved and admired, and now he's a poor paralytic. Look at my mired, and now he's a poor paralytic. Look at my fine, noble sister, once the pride of the parish—the toast of many a feative scene—and now! and now! she's a pauper, dependent upon the charity of others. Think of my darling mother, Alice. Was she not murded, dragged from her warm but to die upon the lid ground, with the home of her early to and abstions knocked in ruins beside her? And myself, Alice. Oh! I had hopes and yearnings of enjoying peace, and loye, and happiness: in that old home. I thought, Alice, love! that there, with you, my own sweet wife, nestling upon my become, after the toils and sarriety of the day, or chearing me through the world's striff. I could indeed, be happy house the world's striff. I could indeed, be happy.

I pictured to myself a happy home, hallowed by all the gusting warmant of loving hearts, all the holy influences of somewhat blue.

commanded with joy and happiness. But, oh! all this, this was but a dream! I, who long so much for domestic represe—I, who have a heart so susceptible of love and all the finer feelings of man's nature—must wander an outcast upon the world. And can it be a sin to murder him who has caused all this ruin.

wandar an outside him who has caused all this ruin and mire. Trank plead his head between his hands and wept. Alice gently took his hand from his frees and wept. Alice gently took his hand from his frees and wept. Alice gently took his hand from his frees and wept. Alice gently took his hand from his frees and You must be promise me, Frank, to give, up this horrid thought. You know I love you! I would feel if you whom I love so dearly, were hranded with a mandares a shame. O my God! I would not survive it. You who with are so noble and generous to polinte your hands and soul! If it were so, I would soon sheep is my grays. Promise me how have upon your mother's grave I sak it, and her pure spirit is looking down from heaven upon as here, and she knelt upon the grave—"here I ask of you that you'll not be guilty of the blood of Mr. Ellis on hord Clears!!; that you'll not injury them, but leave them to God, she will bring them to an appoint in His new promise me, and she looked up into his face with such pure sweetness that one might have her an angel pleading for exing man, and all the same her.

Alice Maker, Frank's Guardian-Angel. 435

oh! all this,

much for do-usceptible of acture must and can it be all this ruin

T. MERTHAN

lif you, whom a murderwie
vive it. / Xera
pollate your ald soon sleep
re apon your spirit is loakers, and, she you that you'll

Though Frank knelt beside her, he kept his hands pressed over his fade.

"Speak, Frank; may you do."

"O Alice! don't ask may plean't do it."

"Oan't do it! Go from me! Kon're not the noble, generous youth you were at all. Oh! have I given my heart to a marderer?—to one who could bear to les me think and sink into an early grave? O'God! histo me into tears! Frank looked on for a time; his heart was inil 4 at length bear to me a time; his heart was inil 4 at length bear tame from his eyes, and he webt.

"Frank! Frank! toy you'll do it. I know you will for now you weep. Oh! those blened tears!"

"Yes Alice, here. Here on my mother's grave, beard Henry mercy upon them.

"Yes Alice, here mercy upon them.

"This beard the all God Frank her little head merces upon his beard."

"Corne, bye ;" this they left the chard yeard.

"Corne, bye ;" this they left the chard yeard.

"Alice," and Frank, in they walled along, "I mill the life of the chard yeard.

"This wall Frank."

With Book by I can do nothing heart Franchist to the price of the party of the part had by what had British !! Hill and I designed !!

your father's consent, even if he were willing to give it, which he's not. I sould not think of marrygive it, which he's trot. I could not think of marrying you, my own sweet love to bring you hato a druggle with the world. Now, we are young; let us remain diagle for five your; betwee to me and will be to you, and, believe me; I will return with boundless wealth to claim my dasting; wife." And But, Frank, if you should fall, see

"Stop, Alice, I cannot fail. Cheered by the hope of your rove, I will attrict said toll, and grow siehts If riches are to be gained at all, I must win them her make vicine to get you. I love you deeply, wildly, and this love will strengthen my arm in the strike."

"Oh, cursed rithted connot we be happy without them, Frank?"

"Oh, oursed rithted connot we be happy without them, Frank?"

"Oh, oursed rithted connot we be happy without them, Frank?"

winds of horized fondly der him that whiteperson with a way of his took and the sound of the person will be an a wind of the person will be a wind of the person and Alice, and I, poor, old man that I am, now to lose my fine boy? No, Frank, don't go," and the old man put his handkershief to his eyes dan t old man put his handlerenter to his system.

MIE is hard secongly no doubt, said Mr. Maher, evidently well-pleased at the matter; "but, after all, what can the boy do here?" Many a man made a fortune there in a little time. If you want money,

Frank, Fillbeip you." The min's or allies we retire to a "No, sir," said Frank, proudly, "I have enough." I have enough." But what will I do? Won't you tay and keep him.

gr. with ald not nak syon hito a young; let roburn with

112 M. 1. 54 win the hope deeply, wildly, in the strife."

Lippy without retained water father and my

Loughball order att. Minery Lec

this income the Maning upon ers grave, air." that I line to lorence! Pathin O'R sa-poor ather do, 408 The O Donnells of Glen Cottage.

"I do promise; and if you return with wealth, there is not a young man in the county I'd cooner give her to; but then, in your present circumstances, it would be your ruin to marry. I have a good many com, Frank; so I could not give her a farm, and, you know, the acrossy sees goes.

"God bless you! God blest you!" said Frank, grasping him by the head; "you are right; but I'll win wealth for her sake, for I could die to gain have well at any open of me a orbit of discentiff I blest at a level root, at he brookstate han and. and also son thousant ashrybol if Afther, constanting nd have been been sing's to fine with and thereof the market is month to include a thirty writing as facilities tarrond sinchiculta T and operations, i must confine taylord to a "tow doctared, hereby "I o to see the fi faround and . Hereit Brent. charagebus be evendello eran provergedt, thus Crested & Asserta a, you a property s. Linewillie dieter promites, paroportant has increased, and pol ong promeomically no done durate property of the 明朝。明明 明明 plant with the property to the of the town and and well out? starmadi. I the pranountation was very juin civile anistration of the intermediate and in the to the Art productive results of the control of the co

vin et sa sa v AND HER EXTENSION OF STREET

A SHORT ACCOUNT OF THE WOOMING OF THE POOR LAWS NOW THE POOR ARE THEATED AS BUILDING TO BY THE POOR ARE THE THE POOR AND T

sold Frank, right; but d die to gain

L incresion the and mai ted the per म अधा दीम abor, is throne keiner han end o 'n wi Lip Prat the out of state

र मध्ये हैं है है । वर्ता एक created 1 i is Proposition has increased doudnosp . ener went edill. He Anti-prents d dynk granu ur kin k Propins I hymnes to devote some chapters to the working and management of the poor laws in Ireland, and also to the sophistry of political economists, who assert that Ireland is rapidly increasing in material wealth; but as my work is extending beyond the limits I had prescribed, I must confine myself to a law remarks.

In the first plant, I learliesly assert that the poof, laws have described the lappiness and independence of the very poor for whose benefit they were created.

created.

Since the introduction of poor rates, pasperiem has increased, and poverty has become more predominant.

The law has provided the indigent against absolute starvation. This protection destroys every principle of energy in the ninking man's heart; it also checks the uniform sympathies of our nature, which, at all times, have been found a surer protection against uniform them any legal energings. nicery then any legal en

The best legal enactments for providing for the maintenance of the poor seem somehow to clash against the wise dispensations of Providence; for even a casual observer must see that the best safeguards against extreme poverty lie in that charitable feeling planted by the hand of Nature in our bosoms. The poor laws close up the many fountains of charity, and fling over the poor to the mercilese protection of paid officials, whose hearts become steeled to misery, and whose only study is to please their emperiors, and to make the most they possibly can of their own situations. They possess not one feeling of sympathy for the poor wretches thrown on their care. They stand to each other in grim hostility—the one party thanklese and dissatisfied, and elaiming as their due what the others niggardly administer. In fact, the system has transformed the whole nature of charity. It has closed up those sacred fountains which are the poor man's best protection—namely, the kindness of friends and relative, the sympathy and charity of the wealthy, and these acts of mutual help and kindness which the poor render each other, and which are of more importance than a casual observer could conceive. Again, the poor laws are an encouragement to vice; they support the unfortunate and her offspring; they take in the forsaken mother and her offspring; they take in the forsaken mother and her offspring; they take in the forsaken mother and her offspring; they take in the forsaken mother and her offspring; they take in the forsaken mother and her offspring; they take in the forsaken mother and her offspring; they take in the forsaken mother and her offspring; they take in the forsaken mother and her offspring; they take in the forsaken mother and her offspring; they take in the forsaken mother and her offspring; they take in the forsaken mother and her offspring; they take in the forsaken mother and her offspring.

ding for the ow to clash widence; for the best agre-nat charitable n our bosoms. tains of chari-rolless protec-scome steeled please their possibly can not one feelin grim hosceatisfied, and ers niggardly transformed nan's best proe wealthy, and sees which the e of more imould conceive. rement to vice ; her offipring; d never desert, affording them

ives a respec

able maintenance to paupered officials, who consume over a third of the rates levied for the octensible purpose of maintaining the poor, but in reality to maintain blundering officials in princely lasar-houses. We see what good is effected in towns by pious communities. We see foundling hospitals, penitentiaries, reformatories, and houses of orphanage all admirably conducted by the pious seel of some humble religious, and supported by voluntary charity. Had these at their command the princely revesues that are exterted from the people for the maintenance of poorhouses, what would they not effect. It would be for the good of society at large that poorhouses were abolished altogether; that these abodes of wretchedness were converted to some useful purpose, and leave the poor to that fountain of human sympathy which God has planted in our nature, and from which flows those areams of charity that amaginate the various classes of society and that afford a more abundant, or, at least, a more effective and generous tide of charity to relieve the wants of the suffering poor.

some useful purpose, and leave the poor to that fountain of human sympathy which Gold has planted in our nature, and from which flows those streams of charity that amalgamate the various classes of cociety, and that afford a more abundant, or, at least, a more effective and generous tide of charity to relieve the wints of the unifer as poor.

There is another matter, too, of equal importance, which is taking desper root every day among the landscrapy of Tribund. I rear to the principle of amalgamating small figure. This appears now to be the favorite parameter to the material wealth of the country. This, to a certain extent, might be true of a great commercial country like England, but, if persisted in, will prove the ruin of Ireland. The applicant demand

The landlords unthinkingly follow the advice and example of political economists, without reflect ing how for this will benefit the country at large, The poet was wiser than these writers when he asserted hand held heard heard hear and annest the Where wester sommerates med decay,"or your ha

Large farms are unfavorable to the increase of population; but increase of population is favorable to the growth of liberty, intelligence, and prosperity. In England it has been found that the poor have increased in misery as farms have increased in size.

If this be true of a commercial country it a Ragland, how much more so must it be of an agricultural one like Ireland of durant born affector determined the farms, the more food must be

The smaller the farms, the more food must be raised, and consequently the more employment gives. The hundle agriculturist of a few acres if he be but protected by law might be as happy in increase of farms tend to convert trable land into parture, and thereby diminish the means of employment and the increase of wholesome food, for be it knows that the complement of land required grow corn for me or eight men would not grow enimal food for more than one men.

The quantity and quality of food has great infinance on the increase of the peasantry, and their provided development. This accounts for the ap-

persisted in. advice and out reflect try at large. when the tions and error

ey."of Was La e increase of n is favorable ed prosperity. the poor have rene lin sine atry like Hngof an agriculinvision lainer com food must be amployment of fow acres ht be as happy and an abord ert erable land the means of holesome food, fland required

weald not grow editional lebens an great infinntey and the pearance and comparative independence of the Irish peasant previous to the famine years.

Until the failure of the potatoe crop, a wholesome and nutricious food was easily procured; populs ion naturally increased, and a certain prosperity reigned among the peasantry, do pite the many cruel evic-tions and extertions practised by the landlords.

I say to you, landlords of Ireland, if you favor the increase of farms, you are ruining your country, you are ruining the possantry debaring him from any right or enjoyment in the soil which gave him birth. Are there no philanthropists among you to come forth in defence of the poor man's rights? It is not in huraan rature to seek misery. We all strive for his piness; yet the Irish peasant, the most laborious and patient under God's sun, pines in misery in his own native soil—a coil teaming with abundance, fruitful as God's Eden. His existence indeed is miserable. He meets no level no sympathy from those bound to protect him. Suckled pathy from those bound to protect him. Muchled and nursed smidst fifth and poverty, ambrowned with the constant emoke that reaks around his chimneyless cable, corered over with rage, and adsparingly, and often with unwholesome food, he still grows to manhood, strong, stalworth, and impulsive. What would he be if he were nursered and reared as he should be? But no, he is looked upon as an incumbran a in the land which he love of dearly. Better for him, poor fallow! that he had no at all then to live on to bitter strife of unrequited toil, with hope and energy crushed in his breast—his wife, with love and joy torn from her heart, droop and pine, and his babes, born to their father's inheritance of strife and misery, mere objects of sufferance; for the will of the landlord or agent may hurl them from their wretched home to a more wretched fate still, namely, to die beside some ditch, or to prolong this miserable life amidst the moral leprosy and contagion of a poorhouse.

Landlords of Ireland, will you do nothing for the poor? Aristocracy of Ireland, will you do nothing for them? Think of their patience, their virtues, their wants, and their fruitless toils—think of all these—think how the love and tenderness of their lives are chilled and overborne by a system of neglect and exclusiveness—I was going to say oppression—that is fast exterminating the hapless peasantry. Landlords! encourage small farms; give the poor man his little garden to till; give him an interest in the soil that will give him wholesome reminerative employment for his wife and children; make him feel that he is a man, that you and the laws are his protectors, that he can eafely enjoy all these domestic hopes, enjoyments, and gushing affections that ennoble our nature. Do all this, and you not only render a moral benefit to society at large, but you make your fellow-creature happy and independent, thereby discharging your daity both to fold and man. Leave saids all sectarian feelings, look lines for her othing for the on do nothing their virtues, think of all orness of their system of negto say oppresbapless pessfarms ; give the give him an inwholesome renet you and the netaly enjoy all d gushing affec-all this, and you society at large, happy and inde-aty both to God an feelings, look upon the peasant as an unfortunate brother, reach to him the hand of friendship and fellowship, and, believe me, he will repay you with gratitude and determine to emission of a mediate it in

How the Poor are Treated.

We beg our readers to accompany us to a se little party given by the amiable Mrs. Thrifty, mistrees of the poorhouse are and seind f free of the poorhouse.

Mrs. Thrifty was a plump, tidy, good-looking little weman. She always had a smile on her pouting lips for her superiors in office, though the poor flevils under her charge asserted that, to them she was the essence of vinegar. She was particularly gracious to the master of the house, who was a good-looking young man of about thirty, who had replaced her dear husband, who was master before him, but who had taken it into his head to take too much spiritual comfort, and to make his exit from the seems of his merful labors. Some say that Mrs. Thrifty did not bestow all her gracious smiles upon him, that she treated him to more of the acid than the honey of matriscopy, and that is order to kill care he killed himself. Mrs. Thrifty freeted and furned a good deal after his death. She was continually crying and bemaaning the good man for a tinually crying and bemaaning the good man for a first the appointment of the new master.

A bright fire blaved in Mrs. Thrifty's comfortable little room; the round table glistened with glasses and because wonderfuls burned brightly. 198 Mrs. Thrifty was a plump, tidy, good-looking little

Mrs. Thrifty sat at the fire in an cosychair ; she continually smoothed down her nice lace collar and continually smoothed down her nice lace collar and her new bembasine; she then cast a visitul look at the door, as if anxionally expecting some one. A pretty little child of about two years old twaddled about. The child fell upon the carpet and began to cry. "Hold your tongue, or I'll threw you into the fire," and che, rudely snatching up the child. "Hush, pet, during, love; don't cry; that's it; there's a lump of sugar," said she in secthing tones, but loud enough to reach the sears of Mr. Tomkins, the master, whom she heard opening the door. The late of the poor dear?"

the poor dear?"

"She just got a fall Mr. Tomkina, Pray, sit down. It's nothing for it was only apon the expet; but then I'm so alarmed lest saything should happen to this only pledge of affection left by my dear, dear husband." Here Mrs. What's loving, effectionate body she in," thought

Mr. Tomkina dauguola mar amena katikan bergan

"Poor pet—that's it; be quiet non. There's a darling. Min a glass of punch, Mr. Tomkina."
Mr. Tomkina did to, and mixed one for Mrs.
Thrifty, too. "Issued to Tomkina; it sickens me."

Do, places, ma'em for me. It is the fact I have ever asked you and Mr. Tembries pushed his chair over near the widow, I suppose to argo her.

air ; she chair; she me one A ld twaddled nd began to you into the ild. "Hush, if there's a less but loud uss, the mass.

hor Leouble a," what ails

L Pray, sit the carpet; should hap-by my dear, it her hand-

in," thought

There's a me for Mrs.

the first I

Mrs. Thrifty at length consented. 48 . April 2016

"Do you know, Mr. Tomkins," said the widow, "I don't know, have I seted prudently in asking a few friends here to-night? for my dear man is dead no more than six months; but then you and I were so long under the same root, discharging similar duties, that I thought it too bad without inviting you to a cop of test. Fill another glass, Mr. Tom-kins. Besides, it is so lonely the alone without any one to speak to only this dear little pet, and she fell to kinsing the alumbering child. Only dor her I couldn't live at all.

off his punch, and edging his chair neares to the widow. "I have altern tempted to spend an evening with you in this lite quant room. Im't it comfort, able?" and Mr. Tomhine booked, evidently wall pleased, about the should be agreeable to spend an evening here, and we such near neighbors, only the voice of alender, Mrs. Thrilly."

Mr. Tomhine was waxing elequent, for he held emptied his third glass.

"The people are very talkative, Mr. Tomhina; but which mind their talk?

Musta's people live and enjoy themselves, Mr. Tomhina;

Mustn't people live and enjoy themselves, Mr. Tout

That's true ma'am," mid Mr. Tombies, said he gave something that resounded like a kies to Mac. Thrifty, which made her dilash and toos her head.

"Oh, fie, Mr. Tomkins, don't do that again; see you have wakened the child. Hush, my darling; aleep now, pet."

"Isn't it levely," said Mr. Tomkins, running his hand through the silken hair of the child

"Ah! no, Mr. Tomkine, it's not fashionable, you know ittorade toka bestives and distribution dans I

"What, ourly hair not fashionable t Why, I never saw anything so beautiful for a sticklingers edl"

"Ah! but I meant-no matter. It is indeed lovely a Are you fond of children ?" meant 3677"

"Passionately, passionately, ma'am. I'd give the resid to be the father of that levely child, to have her nestle confidingly in my breast, to have her her nestle confidingly in my breast, to have her little silken head resting against my bosom, to have her call me father, to have her prattling about me like a little cherub. Ah! Mrs. Thrifty, that, indeed, would be living in love and happiness."

"Stop, stop," said she, "there is some one coming." In feet Mrs. Thrifty's guests were assembling.

Mrs. Christy's guests were highly pleased with everything. They were delighted; so much so, indeed, that they did not quit until about twelve o'clock. They were all gone except Mrs. Tamkins, who seemed as if heart on saying something, for he had one arm around Mrs. Thrifty's waist, and the other resting upon the table.

other resting upon the table. "Who's there?" mid Mrs. Thrifty, as a rap come to the door, make to see you. How have to "

t again ; see, my darling;

age.

running his ild. Y. CK. W. W

hionable, you

Why, I never

child, to have to have her posom, to have g about me like indeed, would

This assert .. tome one comere seembling.

pleased with much so in about twelve

Mr. Temkins,
mathing, for he

Fich deed of being as a rap come Handald and a sign to

NAME OF STREET

is dying, and she's making such an uproor to get to him, and he says 'he'd die say if he saw her."

"Well, did any one over hear the like," and like.
Thirly, raising her eyes in surprise, "to think that I could go admit her tow, and into the men's word, too? It is provoking, spinish loss and plant had the

"It's scandalous!" said Mr. Tomking sympa-

"Well, ma'am, what will I do !! said the name, hontestingly and an eletangues of winting county her be looked op: Why, there are so many dying now, if we were to mind them we couldn't get a scott ment's also at a midden and areal of mind the mid law will be well as a mind of mind law the mid law why don't you go rend and a late.

"Please, sir, there is another man dying, and he's calling for the pricet."

"Priest now, indeed. What a nice hour it would be to rattle up a pricet."

Let him hold till morning if he likes. "A handpilen erow (at I a handpilen)."

go myself, and the priest would come if sent for; Pd go myself, and the priest would come if sent for; Pd go myself, and the priest would come if sent for; Pd go myself, and you're bid, woman ; and, mind you, to morrow will be board day. Let the stirabout be made thick and strong?

made thick and strong."

"Yes, sir! Can't we do enything for them, sir."

"You have got your enswer, woman; go about your business."

How will we stand them? Aren't they a post?" said Mrs. Tariffy; to she emptied a glass of wide to compose her nerves.

They are provoking; they are more to take it into their heads to die at might, as if to ver people," said Mr. Tombite, as if the poor wretches had a choice of dying when they liked; and Mr. Tomkins drank off a glass of punch to keep Mrs. Thrifty com-drank off a glass of punch to keep airs. Inputsy com-pany.

As I am about taking leave of Mr. Tomkins and Mr. Thriffy, I might as well state that Mr. Tomkins, in his warmth of feeling and deep admiration of the driff, popped the question, which Mrs. Thriffy, after some bashful objections, accepted, to be great joy of Mr. Tomkins, who swore he was to happy at man in Christendom, but had sufficient time to use gret his rashness afterwards.

The following day was beard day. Lord Clearall was in the chair, and Mr. Ellis sat beside him. There was a good sprinkling of guardians, most of whom seemed there for no other early purpose but to nod an assent to everything Lord Clearall said and did. The clerk read the minutes; the deaths for the week were sixty-three.

"I declare," whispered Lord Clearall to Mr. Ellis,
"that's a grand thing. At that rate the house will be soon empty, and the rates down to a trifle."
"True, my lord, true," replied 'Mr. Ellis.
"How do you provide coffins, Mr. Toukins?" said
his lordship.

they a post?" take of wise to been, all trues

tage.

are to take it to vez people,? d Mr. Tomkine

L Thrifty compaying toered

. Tomking and Mr. Tomkins, h Mrs. Thrifty, ed; to the great on the happy of ient time to re-bridge with 1811 184 Lord Clearall ide him. There most of whom purpose but to learall said and the deaths for rall to Mr. Ellis, e the house will to a trifle." Ellie.

Tomkins ?" mili The same of the same

"Can't get than, my lord. We had to get a hiread buttom put to a strong comin, and drop them into the grave."

"Well, there's a saving in that Now for the clerk's estimate of the rates." Mr. A medical wheth shall

"Here it is, my lord," said the slerk. " Ah! by this I see that the rate on my property is twelve shillings in the pound, and we are after paying four. How is this?

"Why, my lord, the influx of poor from your division; is very large; within the lest formight if has been over a hundred; mad you know the rate in "It is enormous," said Mr. Ellis, and the series property," said Lord Cherall, fluxure the series property," said Lord Cherall, fluxure down the sheet.

"At the sheet and your existions," thought many presents the druit of your existions, thought many presents the same had not been course to an additional statements of the presents. secured there to no cincille during the to sound an eaself to somey there there is depressed and and date "The cold reach the minutes; the deaths don the world work the deaths done Threshop of the statement of the formace of the statement of the statement

will ric traders of the far are The on an action and a married property of the special property

Frank hild riade his little propertions. H. es-

Cork in order HIVXX BETTAHO as he could be

PRANK BEDS PARKWALL TO THE OLD HOUSE AND HER MOTHER'S GANT A SCHOOL HELLY SULLIVAN GIVE THE REPRESENTATION OF THE PROPERTY OF

Arran the eviction of their family, Frank made his sister acquainted with his resolution of going to America. Though she keenly felt the separation, will, she saw that there was no other course open for him, and, like a noble girl that she was, she secrificed her own feelings to his interest. She could not bear to see him, the educated, high-minded youth, become a laborer in a land where there was no reward for toil; it was better that he should go the many or the second wastern that

Mary Cahill accompanied the O'Donnells to their poor home; she wowed that she'd never leave them, and to their remonstrances that they couldn't give her hire, she indignantly replied that she did not want it. She even refused to marry James Cormack until the O'Donnells would be somehow settled in the world, the world, the state of the state

ile"Do you think, James," said she to him, "that I would leave the old gentlemen that was always so a Prank led :

TOTAL TOTAL

ly, Frank made intion of going the separation, her course lopen it she was, she interest. A She educated, high-ma land where was better that conneils to their ever leave them, hey couldn't give hat she did not say James Consomehow settled to him, "that I kind to me, and the deer young lady, in trouble. No, James, if I'm worth havin' you must wait for

Frank had made his little preparations. He engaged a steerage passage in a ship bound from Cork, in order to leave all the means he could to his father and sister. A few days before his departure he went to visit the old house. It looked desolate indeed; the gates and doors were all form away, and that home, that so often resounded with mirth and festive greeting—that home of his child-hood, where hisself and his sisters often played, where he often nestled in love upon his father and mother's knees, where he hoped to spend his manhood and his declining years in peace—was new one heep of ruins.

He wept like a child on the spot where his mother died. He went from house to house taking leave of each as he would with an eld familiar friend. He then went to see his mother's grave, and around

"O mother! mother!" he passionately enclaimed as he stood over her grave, "I am going to leave you forever, forever; and who will mind your grave? Perhaps it may be descented like these around me. O mother! I wish I were with you, for my heart is full of griel, and my life of bitterness. Good, kind mother, look down upon me with pity, and watch over your unfortunate child! O mother! mother! and in his wild paroxymi of grief he throw himself upon the grave, and wept bitter tears! He remained thus half unconscious for some time, until roused by a voice behind.

" Please sthand up, Miether Frank," said the voice "Shure there is people have leave to weep as well as you." I the last a well as you "Who are you?" (all a many a start of the last of the

"Mushs, then you ought to know me; but people are so changed they don't know one another at all, at all."

"Oh! is this Mrs. Sullivan? Poor women! what has brought you here?"

"Oh! not much. Shure it is no difference about the poor. The Lord be praised, we are kieked and buffeted about like dogs. Do you know, Misther Frank, but I often think in there a God at all to allow the poor to be trampled on ?"

"Don's say that, don't say that, See all the Lord Himself suffered, and did not murmur."

There true, sir; but then misery and God.

Incer we have enough of it—makes persons beside. themselven; but come and Pil show you what brought me here."

brought me here.

Frank followed her to the end of the old abbey, and there he saw an old tattered clock thrown over some stoped down and relied up the covering, revealing the ghattly features of a corpse.

Frank stopped back and shuddered.

No wonder that you should start, Misther Frank; no wonder at all, for my colleen bewn in tage. intil roused by said the voice o weep as well

ae; but people another at all,

To PART 14 woman! what lifference about are kicked and know, Miether God at all to ice all the Lord

sery and God persons beside show you what the old abbey, oak thrown over her while she vering, revealing

much changed, Ochl och! merrone! they kilt, they kilt him. They would not let his mother that suckled him near him to close his eyes or hear his dying prayer! and they feasting and sating all the time. So, alanna, you were the darling boy; but they murthered you, and they'd throw you in a hole like a dog. "Ohlo they would, they would the savages; but I stell him away to lay, him in holy ground," and she knelt at the head of the corpes and swayed har body to and fro. "God, help mal" said Frank, covering his eyes with his hands he day it cannot be described.

I. O God help us! Asthore machree, shure you're in heaven, but they kilt you. They hunted us out of the cabin, and then refused us work since we wouldn't sell our souls. But you are in heaven, him," said Frank, leaning his hand upon her shoulder sall mil

"Do, and God bless you! But shop, I'll sand

the gaffars for one."

Two especiated, wretched looking children soon returned tottering under the weight of a spade and shovel. Frank stripped off and day a grave, and then helped the mother to lay the body in it. Frank commenced to shovel in the earth.

"Leave these big stones saids, Misther Frank; they might hart him; and let me settle the clock about him; for fear of his eyes. Shure, after bringing him seven miles upon my back, the laste I'd bury him tinderly."

Frank closed up and nicely sodded the grave, and while the widow was shedding bitter tears over her only son, he went over to take leave of his mother's grave.

"Ferewell, mother!" said he; "farewell, and watch over me and protect me."

"Well," said he to Mrs. Sullivan, on his return,
"where do you mean to go now?"

"I am shure I durns where any place at all. God's will be done."

"Come with me then."

Frank took them to his old home. There was a small out-house, with the door on, and the roof partly up. He lit a fire in a corner, and drew some of the dry thatch and made a bed; he then brought in a bundle of sticks.

"That's all I can do now, ma'am," said Frank, "and here is a shilling; I have no more about me; so go and get something to eat."

"God bless you! I hadn't a bit since morning."
The children crouched around the fire, and the mother went to the next village, a distance of two miles or more, for bread.

The day was sharp and cold, and the evening set in with sleet and wow, as Nelly Sullivan proceeded apon her errand. On her return, her way lay partly by Mr. Ellis's. As she was passing through a grove, near the house, which was a kind of pleasure-

the grave, and tears over her of his mother's

"farewell, and on his return,

y place at all.

There was a and the roof mer, and drew bed; he then

m," said Frank, more about me;

ince morning."

he fire, and the distance of two

the evening set llivan proceeded er way lay pertssing through a kind of pleasureground, and specially reserved for the family, Mr. Ellis crossed her path.

"How dare you come this way?" said he, shaking her by the shoulder. and finds and with the state of the

"Hal-hal hal" she exclaimed ; "how dare I indeed. How dare I trespass upon Mr. Ellis's land, that came here a pauper himself; that evicted half the country, and sent them to die in the poorhous or the ditch-side; that murthered Mrs. O'Donnell. Ha! ha! ha! that's not had a const per ob or den

"Woman, begone!" shouted Mr. Ellis, fosming with rage, "or I'll let this dog tear you to pieces," and he pointed to a large mastiff that was near him. do. Shure you tossed me out of my cabin, because I wouldn't send my children to Mr. Sly's school. Och! what a minister he is. Path, it's he that's tachin' Miss Limie nicely. The davil take the whole let of ye; ye have brought rain and misery and starvation upon un. Shure it is only to day! buried my darling boy, that ye murthered."

"Wretch;" said Mr. Ellis, "be off," and he showed her clotally take fall; and in his passion be raised his foot to hick her.

herealf upon any known "May the came of the widow and cryten follow you! may the blood of the murthered cry to Heaven (on yongsence) may you murthered cry to Harren for rengeance any you death be sudden, without one to pity you are dea your eyes! may you die with curses upon your lips! and may the dogs lick up your blood! may—"

"Stop, you old beldame, your d—d croaking," said Mr. Ellis, furious with passion.

"You have shown little mercy to man; may God show you as little May the ourse

"Well, this might stop you," and he struck her with his clouched fist.

The blood flowed from her nose and mouth, and she fell insensible. When she recovered she was alone, and the darkness of the night was setting in.

"I'm cowld and dry," said she; "if I could get some water," and the poor creature crept to a stream

After drinking some, she tried to eat a morsel of the bread she was carrying to her orphans. The mow and sleet were falling fast, and she crept under this shelter of artres. when the distance he

"It's very cowld cowld, so it is, and I'm gettin' no weak and my eyes are gettin' dim," and she wrapped her tattered garments around her av. I fell into a kind of stuper. It commenced moving and freezing by times, and so intense was the sold, and so weak was she from fatigue and hunger, that she never awoke from that stuper. Some days afterwards her body was discovered in a susnehing posiwards her body was discovered in a contion by Mr. Ellis hisself. If he had a co all, how must be have felt then?

The children remained at the fire wondering what was keeping "mammy."

pon your lips!
may—"
—d crocking,"

an; may God

he struck her

and mouth, and overed she was was setting in. "if I could get cept to a stream eat a morsel of corphans. The she crept under and I'm gettin' dim," and she und she avid fell and mowing and the sold, and hanger, that she come days after-wondering what

"Mary," said the youngest, "I'm so weak I can't see; I don't know what's keeping mammy," and she began to cry.

"Don't cry," said the other, "but come near me," and they crouched together and diasped their arms around their necks, and abortly fell salesp. The dry thatch around them shortly took fire, their clothes lit up, and they awoke screaming with pain and terror. Their cries and shricks were drowned by the hissing flames, for the bed and roof were now all on fire. The cabin shortly fell in, burying them in its ruins; even their charred remains could scarcely be

Frank having finished his little arrangements, went to pay a parting visit to his uncle and to Alice. The old man seemed bewildered; at one time imploring him not to leave him; again, advising him to go. Frank feared his parting with Alice more than any other. Though he resolved to appear who, still it was not easy for him to school himself into a statement kind of indifference, when the heart was overflowing, when he was to part from one he loved so wall, perhaps forwer. It was a soft, calm evening for the season—one of those evening that seem to heald in the spring. As Frank, thoughtful and gloomy enough; approached life Mahesia, he persed by the little sammer house where they were many a happy hour together. There, in that ald trysting spot, sat Alice; she looked pale and here eyes were red from weeping. They were alone, and

Frank was seated beside her, clasping her little soft hand in his own. Though their hearts were full, they were silent. She rested her heed upon his bosom; her breath and her silky hair fanned his cheek; their hearts best and throbbed in unison.

"Alice, love!" said he, "how widly your little heart throbe."

"Does it, Frank, does it? Oh! I'm sure it

"Dose it, Frank, dose it? Oh! I'm sure it does."

"Es, low. Will it best this way for me when I'm far away!"

She looked softly into his face, as much as to say, "Do you doubt it?"

"Oh! it will, it will, love. Alice, do you know that, next to my God, I love you. Sweet girl, I could almost sclose you. Oh! life, indeed, would be so burdensoons to me now, that I fear I would be rackless of it, indeed, were I not cheered with the lope of one day desping you to say become my own darting wife. For you I'm sol he and win wealth and face all, all far you I had a he your love will be a powerful takeness, to cheep me through life's bettle.

Yes, while supported by it, I must win—I must succeed.

d looked into his fron and her ad against his loo!" said by again, "hore can I onk, I don't kenw. Couldn't you say! in't we be happy together anyway!? AND STATE OF THE PARTY OF her little soft rts were full, ed upon his ir fanned his in unison. y your little

I'm sure it for me when

anch as to say,

do you know eet girl, I could d, would be so would be reckm, my own dar-ria wealth and a love will be a ugh life's battle-rin I must suc-

is face, and her oin, "how can I

do's you stay?

"It can't be, it can't be, Alice. Oh, let me be a man again. Oh, love, I would almost as soon lose the chance of heaven as lose the hope of one day calling you mine; and yet I must go, for I could not bring you mine; and yet I must go, for I could not bring you into poverty or a straggle with the world. No, I'll go and win wealth; and if I live, in five years I will return. Be faithful, Alice. Let not any false rumors shake your confidence in me; for if I were to return and find you the bride of another, oh! what would wealth or frame be to me then? No, I would seek a grave in some foreign

"Frank," said she, mildly, "do you doubt my love? If not your bride, I will be the bride of heaven."

"God bless you. You know love is suspicious.

"God bless you. You know love is unspicious.
We fear to part a costly gen when case we possess it."
"Well, vall," said the trying to maile. I promise you will find the gen in pure as when you perted with it. Not he as go in. You must see my father, and I and my tracker will go over as far as your uncle's with you."
"Yet, love. But will a moment. Here is a little song I composed agreement of our fashings. When you sing it, it will read your absent have."
"No need of stah! Frank to make me resumber you. This throbbing heart our paver fregat you."
"I know that, love; and here I it sing it before we part."

The O'Donnells of Glen Cottage.

He sung in a low, plaintive voice :-

ALION A R'UIR

My heart's full of love and light,
Alice a r'uin;
Your bosom full as bloscon white,
Alice a r'uin.
Your sheeks are of the roses has,
Your sparkling eye of his year's blue,
And your heart is real and true,
Alice a r'uin.

Day, oh! the world's cold and dark,
Alice a r'uin;
Oursed wealth is all the mark,
Alice a r'uin.
Men's hearts are growin; cold;
Where, where's the love of old?
Fled away to genn and gold,
Alice a r'uin.

Then, I ne'er again shall roam,
Alice a r'uin;
For happy in our cottage home,
Alice a r'uin,
With you, my fond love, my pride !
Life shall be one gushing tide
Of happiness, my own awest bride!
Alice a r'uin.

"God grant that fortune may be as propitious as you describe it, Frank."

"Well, well, let us hope in God, Alice. He never filled our hearts with such deep love to make us miserable."

miserable."

"I hope not; and now, Frank, let us go in, and be sure this will be my favorite song."

There is no need of describing to our Irish readers Frank's separation from his family, for the tracker but have met with such bereavements. The dear sister he promised to write regularly, so I to sand her money if he could. Nothing affected him so much as the childigh imbedlity of his father. As he kissed him and wept in his arms, the old men said—"Where are you going, Frank? Won't you come back soon, and bring your mother. Bure Mr. Ellis won't turn us out of the house."

"I'm going away, father, for good."

"Are you? God bless you, boy! but come back soon, and mind bring your mother; it's time for her to come home."

Frank and his fellow passangers were carried down on a steamer from Oork to where the ship lay di Lander Lindrand the sound i at anchor in the bay. The scene on board the emigrant ship was new to him. Every one was busily engaged hauling on board his luggage or stowing it away in some safe corner. The cabin passengers sauntered about with their hands stuffed in their sauntered about with their hands stuffed in their pockets and with an air of no small consequence. The young were fast making acquaintances with the fair belies that accompanied them, and were or what amounts to the name, thing, affected to be smitten with their langhing eyes and ruby lips. Some of the deek passengers were keeping watch over their bundles, that locked, with their winding sheets around them, as if waiting for interment; whilst others that had no earthly goods to trouble them, were cannearing about listlessly watching the scene. Here sat a poor old man, with his wife and three or four shildren clinging around him—the latest victims of Irieh landlordism. In another place a grassed mother is giving her blessing and parting advice to her only son or daughter. Here is a poor man with an oak stick in his hand and a small box of earth with a few shaunrocks in it, taken from behind the old here at home. He closely presses them under his arm as a home. He closely presses them under his arm as a home. He closely presses them men, with their heaves too seared to ony, and weeping women and wondering skildren. They all look fouldy towards that land they loved so wall—that hand that fixe them birth, but denied them breach.

oard the emine was busily or stowing it n passengers

uffed in their consequence. ances with the to be smitten lipe. Some of rinding sheets grment; whilst a trouble them, hing the see wife and three nim-the latest aim—the latest mother piace a ng and parting Here is a poor and a small box taken from be-closely pressed would hav afwere poor in-ared to cry, and lidren. They all loved so well-

I tell you what, you can read the history of Ireland's wrongs in the stern mecassity that urges on her children, and the deep love that binds them to the soil in the groups that throng the deck of an emigrant ship. Indeed, it is Ireland in miniature,

The steamer that brought down the passengers and their friends now leaves. What a parting! There is weeping, and sobe, and wild cries of agony.

Promises are made never to be fulfilled, hopes entertained never to be realised. Fond parents are torn from their children. Friends shed mutual tears in each other's embrace; they know they past to meet an area of the second the sec part to meet no more, except beyond the grave.
Lovers are separated. The steamer now move off, hate and handkershies wave, friends leaning over the side of the departing vessel converse for the last time. At last their views are lost in the distance, and parents, children, and friends part to meet ab more on earth.

more on earth in the control of the LI LA NO PORTO ALLA TOPOTO PARENTE LA SELECTION TO THE PROPERTY OF THE PARENTE AND THE PARENTE

I say state was in a co CHAPTER XXIX.

THE PLOT TRICKING THE MAPPETER THE CORMACKS ENTRAPPED—MURDER OF MR. MAIN—ARREST OF THE COMMISSION THE THIAL PROPERTY AND ADDRESS OF

Mr. ELLE and Hugh Pembert were alone in the

"So this young hot-headed O'Donnell has left the country? That's an ease, anyway," said Mr. Ellis.
"I diuma ken that makes things the safer. You see, people cann't stop speaking; but I'm na going to tell all they say."

"Why, Hugh, what are they saying?"

"Weel, it's na concern of mine. I often told you that you dinna look to your ain family. Why, maun, it's on every one's tongue that Mr. Sly is fond of Linnia. I'm talling you so this good spell, but you dinna believe the Now, it's as weel get them married at once.

"Can it be that he thus presumes upon my friendship to steal the affections of my shild? No, it cannot be, and if even so, Hugh, she might meet a worse match. I don't want riches; I have enough."

"Weel, as you like, sir. But you dinna kan that rere alone in the ppell has left the said Mr. Ellis. the maler. You but I'm na going

I often told you a family. Why, that Mr. Sly is o this good spell, it's as weel get sumes upon my of my shild? No, h, she might meet ; I have enough." ou dinna ken that he is no minister at all, but a Bible-reader, and Mister Steen is his own brother."

"Impossible, Hugh, impossible! If I thought so, I'd hunt him out of the house. No doubt, himself and Lizzie have been thrown at me this time back. Any letters?" This was addressed to a servant with the post-beg.
"Yes, sir."

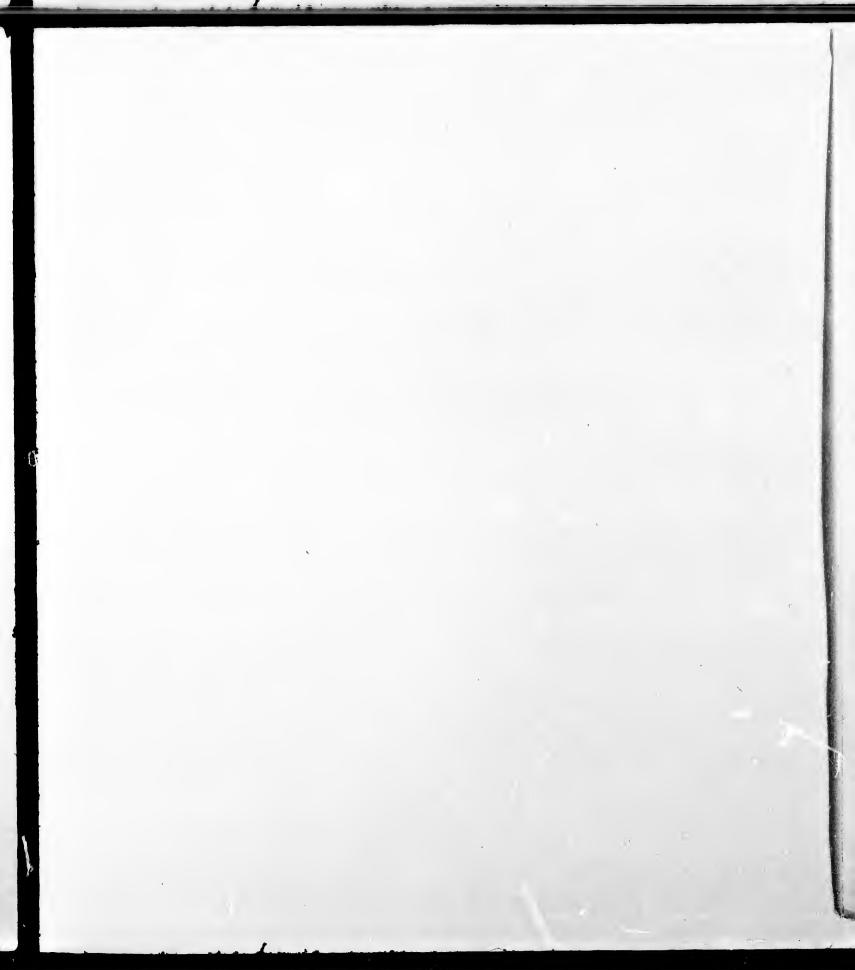

After reading one letter, his brown knit together . and a dark soowl crossed his face.

"Read that," said he, flinging the letter to Hugh. Hugh reed :-- "Priory, March 1st.

"Dear Sir,
"I have reason to believe that Mr. Siy, who is, I fear, bringing your name into disrepute by his uncharitable interference with the rights of his poor fellow-Christians, is not a minister; he's merely a Bible-reader, and was expelled from C—on account of some acts not consistent with the calling of an expounder of the word of God. It is currently reported that he's about forming an affiance with your family. As a Christian minister, I mention this that you may make all due inquiries about him. Begging that you'll keep this communication private.

"Weel," said Hagb, handing book the letter, "ju I mid. Leave Such stay, pour legentier me I bit fet.

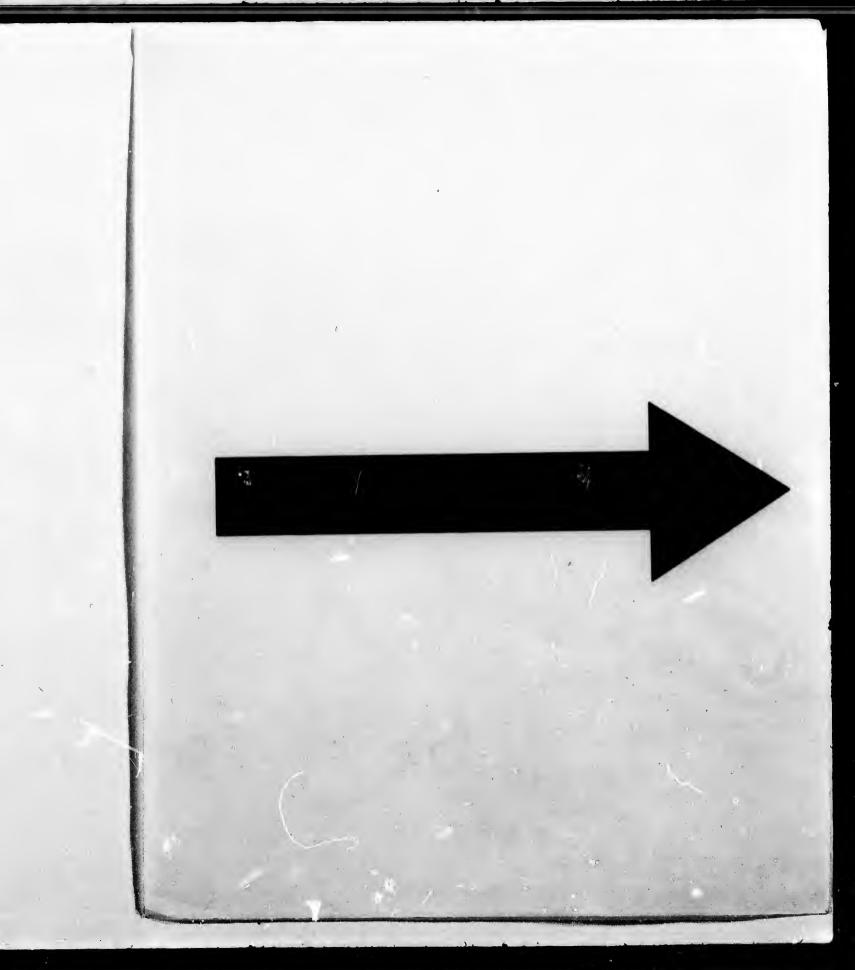

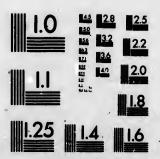

IMAGE EVALUATION TEST TARGET (MT-3)

STATE OF THE STATE

Photographic Sciences Corporation

23 WEST MAIN STREET WEBSTER, N.Y. 14580 (716) 872-4503

STATE STATE OF THE STATE OF THE

CIHM/ICMH Microfiche Series. CIHM/ICMH Collection de microfiches.

Canadian Institute for Historical Microreproductions / Institut canadian de microreproductions historiques

01981

Mr. Ellis arose in a boiling passion and passed to the drawing-room, where Mr. Sly and Lizzie were seated together enjoying a pleasant chat.

seated together enjoying a pleasant chat.

"Viper! wretch!" shouted Mr. Ellis, shaking his hand at Mr. Sly, "have you come into my house to so, me of my child; but no—be off at once!"

rob me of my child; but no—be off at once!"

I will not detail the stormy scene that ensued.

Despite of Lissie's tears and entreaties, Mr. Sly got but that day to make arrangements for his departure.

Linxie was beside herself. How could she part from her dear, gentle Mr. Sly? She went to Hugh, who was her confident of late. She told him that Mr. Sly wanted her to elope. Hugh encouraged her, telling her that her father would relent after a few days; and as she was an only child, he could not part with her. In fact, he took such an interest in her, that he made all the arrangements for their elopement.

Next morning, when Mr. Ellis was apprised of Lissie's elopement, he stormed and raved; for notwithstanding all his wickedness, he was deeply attached to her.

He upbraided himself with his precipitancy, and ordered his ear to follow them to Dublin, for he learned that they had taken the train from the next town for Dublin.

Hugh Pembert now saw all his plans crowned my house this and passed to d Lizzie were lis, shaking his to my house to

at once !"

e that ensued. eaties, Mr. Sly

ments for his

could she part went to Hugh, e told him that encouraged her, lent after a few

d, he could not h an interest in ments for their was apprised of raved; for notwas deeply at-

Dublin, for he in from the next

plans crowned with success. He knew that Lizzie and Mr. Sly were gone direct to Scotland, for so it was concocted. If Mr. Ellis were out of the way, he was in possession of his large property, and who could dispute his right? He would take good care that Lizzie would not. Nelly Cormack had been expelled from Mr. Ellis's, and was living with some charitable neighbors. The Cormacks were often heard to vow revenge upon Mr. Ellis for the eviction of the O'Donnells and the seduction of their sister.; everything combined to throw the murder

Blinded as he was by his avarice, he shuddered at the crime of shedding his uncle's blood; it was a frightful deed; but then, property was at stake; now was his time or never; no, he couldn't recede. Since his uncle's departure he drank deeply; as if to smother his conscience with deep potations.

On the fourth day, he got a letter from his uncle, saying that he would return the next day; to have the car meet him, for he would go home by the evening train; that he got no account of the fugitives. Each time he read this letter he drank off a glass of spirits, until his eyes glared and his brain He rang the bell

"Tell Burkem to some up to me," said he to the

"Weel, Burkem," said he, as the latter a

" I see," said Burkem, coolly returning the letter.

"Weel, maun, what do you say?"

"Whatever you like, Mr. Hugh."

"I dinna, maun, to say anything; but here's twenty pounds," and he flung him the note.

"I understand," said Burkem, putting the money into his pocket. "These fools the Cormacks got a loan of my long gun to shoot rabbits; they might want it for some other business; however, I'll watch

"Do, do. Ye canns say I told you to do anything. Na, na! Here, drink," and he shoved the glass towards him.

Burkem drank off the liquor.

"That's a mann," said the other, filling out a tumbler full of the raw liquid and drinking it off.

"That'll do, Burkem, that'll do. Go. I wish the devil had him. If the job were done, I'll manage him," muttered Hugh, as Burkem closed the door after him.

"Ha, ha, hal I'll have my revenge upon the Cormacks, and I'll keep a screw upon Hughy, and make him fork out for the job. Not a bad beginning this," said he, looking at the twenty-pound note. In the evening, Hugh Pembert went over to Mrs. Cormack's, for he had managed to keep upon friendly terms with them; not only that, but to be looked upon as a benefactor; for when Nelly Cormack was driven from Mr. Ellis's, he got her comfortable lodgtage.

nou to do any-he shoved the r, filling out a inking it off. Go. I wish the one, I'll manage closed the door on Hughy, and Not a bad begine twenty-pound

ent over to Mrs. eep upon friendly out, to be looked ally Cormack was comfortable lodgings, and supplied her with money, for she indignantly refused taking any from Mr. Ellis.

Had the Cormacks known that Burkem was the agent of Mr. Ellis; in giving money to Nelly, and that he paid himself well for his trouble, they would not have esteemed him so highly. Mr. Ellis had some love for her, and now that she was discarded by her friends, he did not wish that she should want.

"God save all here," said Burkem, as he entered

"God save you kindly, Mr. Burkem; take a seat; and what news have you?" said Mrs. Cormack, placing a seat before him.

"Musha! not much, ma'am. Sorra a tidings the master got of Miss Limie or that other sly chap. I know he was never any great things; he was always putting the master up to bodness. Mr. Hugh didn't like him at all either."

"Borra a less he is but for the colleen, God help her. I fear she has made a thorny bed for herself; and they say she wann't the worst, iv let alone."

"True for you, ma'am. The worst of them would be better but for bed adviser."

"That's true for you, Mr. Burkem. But tell me," and she whispered into his ear, though there was no one present but a little girk for the two Cormacks were out—"tell me, where did yet see Nally!" and the poor mother rubbed her eyes.

"Only a few days, ego, ma'am. He, a brave and strong; and de you knop; now as blins Limie is gone, for she was the worst against her, I think the master will marry her."

"Whist; God send it."

"Not a lie in it. Says he to me the other morning before he went, Burkem, I know sorrow and trouble now, and I will try and recompense any one I have caused them to. Faix, ma'am, I shouldn't be surprised if you all got back your places again."

"God send it! God send it!" said Mrs. Cormack, piously raising her eyes towards heaven.

"Where are the boys, ma'am?" said he, after a

"I think they went over in the evening to see poor Mr. O'Donnell. He's very ill since Frank

Burkem knit his brows, and a dark cloud passed

"Will you tell them, ma'am, that I have good news for them. Mr. Pembert sent them word that he would increase their wages to one and sixpence, or give them the herding of Grosghbes, with a good living, if they choose. I think, as I always tall them, there is no use in keeping in enmity. I'm sure they'll find Mr. Ellis changed, if they return to his employment. He's resolved to make them comfortable for he held received to make them comfortable for held received to make the make them comfortable for held received to make the make the make the make the make the mak able, for he told me so."

"I think so, Mr. Burkem. God bless you for the good news, for indeed our means are out; and sure it could do no good to the O'Donnells now to have us starve. The poor people, they were good and other mornsorrow and onse any one I shouldn't oes again." fra. Cormack, id he, after a vening to see since Frank

cloud passed

I have good and sixpence, with a good ways tall them, hty. I'm sure return to his them comfort-ess you for the out; and sure ils now to have were good and kind. Heaven knows, I couldn't cry more for my own child than I did for Masther Frank when he came to take his lave of me."

"No wonder, me'am. But tell the boys not to fail meeting me at Ned Short's to-morrow night, as I want to go there; and tell James to bring the old gun I gave him to shoot rabbits; Mr. Hugh was looking for it. I'll give it back again when I show

"I will, Mr. Burkem."

"Good-night, ma'am, and don't forget."

"Never fear, Mr. Burkem."

"Ha, ha, ha!" thought Burkem, "I have thrown out the bait for them now. I know the poor devils are in want, and will take it. I'm too many for them. Blood for blood! Ha, ba!"

The following evening the two Cormacks went over to Short's. They found Burken waiting for them.

"Welcome, boys," said Burken; "I are you've brought the gene?"

"Faith I have," said James Cormack, "and dence a much I shot with it either."

"I hope you'll bring in the losses to-night; it's a fine night for fowling."

"Ay, iv you had oats' eyes," said Ned Short.

"Let us go," whitspered Burken into James Cormack's car. "I don't want to till you snything before Short; he's looking for the harding him-

"Very well," said the Cormacks. "Is the gun loaded before we go?" said Burkem.

"Oh! I'll load it," and he pulled a paper of slugs out of his pocket and loaded it, tearing some of the out of his pocket and loaded it, tearing some of the paper off the alage for wadding. "Here are these," and he handed the rest to one of the Cormacks.

Burkem promised a living to the Cormacks. He, by the most plausible arguments, reconciled them to

Mr. Ellie's employment. He went into the house with them to smoke on his return, and he then saked them to accompany him home, as the night was dark. They, unsuspectingly, went with him, until they left him near Mr. Ellis's place, and then returned home.

The night was pitchy dark. As Mr. Kilis neared a narrow part of the road leading to his own place, the horse stopped anddenly and shied. The driver came down, and found a tree drawn across the road.

"Begor, there's a tree eaross the road, sir," said Splane.
"Pull it away quick. Hold, who

But ere the sentence was finished, the report of a gun was heard, and Mr. Ellis fell deed from the car. The horse turned back and ran, and Splane , had to go nearly half a mile to the next house for assistance. He then went to Mr. Ellis's house, and when he returned with assistance. Mr. Ellis was found deed. Blood was flowing from a wound, and a dog was actually lapping it up. His death a

ttage.

paper of slugs ing some of the Lere are these," Cormacks.

Cormacks. He. onciled them to into the house nd he then asked the night was with him, until e, and then re-

Mr. Ellis neared o his own place, ied. The driver across the road. e road, sir," said

南南南南 "安阳"。2013年 shed, the report all dead from the ran, and Splane e next house for Ellis's house, and se, Mr. Ellis was rom a wound, and His death must have been instantaneous, as several slugs pa through his heart. The body was removed; an inquest was held, and the two Cormacks were empanneded upon the jury. Splane swore that he didn't know who fired the shot, for the night was dark, and he was engaged removing the tree. The jury returned a verdict of wilful murder against some person or persons unknown. A few days passed over, the slavish journals some out with Alexander of Alexander of the state of t nals rang out with the report of this cold-blooded murder, this diabolical crime, that diagraced civilization. A good, a great man, a kind, bereaved father, returning from the search of his deluded child, is foully murdered. He was called an amiable victim, foully murdered. He was called an amiable victim, a kind landlord, and a good agent, and all those pet terms in requisition on such occasions—no matter how worthless a tyrant the victim may have been. A large government reward was offered for the perpetrators of the dead.

It was remarked that Burken and Splane were seen very much together after the reward was offered. The result was that the two Coemacks were arrested, charged with the murder. A peckage of aluga was found in a drawer, and the paper around them corresponded with the wadding found near the purdered man.

It is not our intention to follow them through the fearful orders of their trial. A special commission was called. Murder was rife in Tipperary, and vic-was called. Murder was rife in Tipp

Sir William Placeman* was one of the judges ment down; and the people hoped that justice would be done, for he had lately ascended the bench upon the shoulders of the people.

Public sympathy was strong in favor of the Cormacks. They were known to be quiet, industrious young men, who were never known to mix them-selves up with any of the factions or parties that disturbed the country. Add to this the execution in which Mr. Ellis was held, and it is no wonder that the court-house was crowded to excess upon the morning of that day which was to restore the

the morning of that day which was to restore the Cormacks to a loving mother or consign them to an ignominious death and an untimely grave in their early manhood.

At length the trial came on, and the prisoners were placed at the bar. There, in that fatal dock, side by side, stood the two brothers. They were two noble-looking specimens of the peasant class.
They stood erect, equally free from indifference or braggadodio. Though they were a somewhat dejected appearance, their fair symmetrical forms still retained their erect positions: their eyes had lost nothing of their lustre, nor their cheeks the bloom

The attorney-general opened the proceedings by a long and able statement, and by a recepitulation of the evidence to be brought forth. He dwell upon each point minutely—upon their sister's diagrace,

" Help me God Keonh.

stage.

or of the Coriet, industrious to mix themor parties that is no wonder to excess upon to restore the onsign them to timely grave in d the prisoners that fatal dock, ors. They were n indifference or a somewhat deetrical forms still eir eyes had lost heeks the bloom proceedings by y a recapitulation

. He dwell upon mieter's diagrace, and they being in Mr. Ellis's employment. The first witness called was Bill Burkem. He gave a minute account of how the Cormacks inveigled him to join in shooting his master, after the eviction of the O'Donnelle; how he gave them his master's gun and the slugs; how he mot them the night of the murder at Ned Short's house.

Though ably cross-cramined, his testimony could not be shaken. Then he took the rod to identify the prisoners. He looked for a moment at his victhe prisoners. He looked for a moment at his victims; his usual dark soowl passed over his brow, and a smeet of deadly vengeance distorted his guilty face. His victims stood erect, their eyes met his, and, even hardened as he was, his soul of crime and villainy could not withstand that innocent, fearless game. The next witness was Splane. He swore positively that he knew the Cormacks, and that it was James that fired the shot. When asked why he did not ewese this upon the inquest, he said "he was afraid, and was so also meeting the Cormacks at his house, about loading the gam, and the remarks about the fowling." about the fowling. the strain of the state of

A constable ewere to comparing the wadding and the paper around the sings, and found them, to agree with those found on the Cornecter, also to the blugs found in the body and those in the paper, which also agreed.

The doctor swore as to the cause of his death.

There was only one other witness, and a deep "Mrs. Cormack!"

She had to be helped to the witness-box; and a seat given her; as she sat down, she wiped the tears from her eyes. .. 1 14 !!

"Oh! my boys! my darlin' beys! is it there ye are?" said she, looking carnestly towards the dook. The prisoners lips quivered, and they rubbed their eyes, or, one is spiciost in . is to the

The question was put to her—"Do you recollect the night Mr. Ellie was murdered?" "Oh! sure I do; and that's the sorrowful night to make dans of some to a drawer of the basis a

"Did you see your sons, the prisoners at the bar, with Bill Burkem that night at your house?"

"Oh! the murtherer, the murtherer! Shure, my lord, he pretended to be our friend; and he came that night to get best the work for the boys. Oh! the murtherer! it was to enthrap them."

"Had they a gun; ma'ain?"

"Och, I'll say no more; maybe it's to injure them.

I'd do."

"You must answer the question." "Oh, my lord, don't ask me; don't ask the mother that suckled these beys, that bore them in thrial and throuble, to swear against them—the mother they never wend nor crossed. Oh! if you know them, my lord—they were like two shildren. No, my lord, I can't say anything aginst them; no, Ψ.

itagt. a and a deep alled - a where he sees-box; and a she wiped the

is it there yo rards the dock. d they rubbed

Do you recollect Die gan Jan

sorrowful night 49- 15 " " 1811 - 1 " 1 " 1 prisoners at the your house Mari erer ! Shure, my id; and be came the boys. Oh! hom." Att in the to the said or distant

it's to injure them white or in I also

Para roll of rocks hat bore them in gainst them the like two shildren aginst them; no, acushla oge machree," and she stretched her hands towards the prisoners. "No, avournesn, yer poor ould mother won't swear aginst you !"

There was scarcely a dry eye in court at this pathetic appeal, and the two young mon in the dock wept like children. The judge appeared perplexed at her refusal, and threatened to commit her for contempt of court.

"Mother," said James, "it can't de ue any harm. Speak the truth. We are innecent, and God will

"I will, alanna, if you ask ma."

"I will, alanna, if you ask me."

"Do, nother."

The question being put, if absence gen with them.
"I did, my lord. Shure that foul-hearted villain gave it to them to shoot rabbita."

"Did they go out with Burken when leaving?"

"Yes, my lord. He asked them part of the way wid him, as the night was dark."

"And how long were they out, ma'am?"

"I dunne how long, my limit."

"No matter. That will do. Go down, me'am."

"Stop. Had they the gan when they returned?"

said the commellor.

"No, sir. My lord, my lord!" she exclaimed, stretching her kands towards the judge, "have pity upon my boys. They are innocess, I know they are; God knows they are. I couldn't live without them! Have pity upon them, and God will have gity upon you."

The counsellor for the defence dwelt upon the characters of the witnesses, one of whom was a perjurer, as he swore at the inquest that he did not see who fired the shot. The other, a man that, according to his own evidence, joined in a conspiracy to murder his own master, was not to be believed upon his oath. As to the evidence of Short. Was it likely that they would meet at his house to go and commit a murder? that is, to get up 2 witness against tham; besides the house was out of their way. It is not possible that, with such intentions in their heart, they would go into their mother's house, knowing that she would be brought forth in evidence against them. Is it likely that they would retain the slugs in the house? Again, the mother swore that they had not the gun when they returned, and the gun was Burkem's. Now, my lord, is it not evident that it was all a conspiracy of Burkem's, to weave a network of evidence against these men; perhaps to do the deed himself, and then reap the fruit by earning the blood-money? What was his motive in bringing them to Short's house, was his motive in bringing than to Short's house, in giving them the sings there, and loading the gun with some of the paper that covered the alugs, but to fix them in his meshes? I call upon you, gentlemen of the jury, to recollect all these, to weigh them minutely, and to give the prisoners at the bar the benefit of any doubts that may occur to your minds. This is but a mere outline of the long and able defence of their counsel. Indeed, so telling was it nce dwelt upon the of whom was a pert that he did not see a man that, accord-d in a conspiracy to t to be believed upon be of Short. Was it t his house to go and to get up a witness with such intentions into their mother's be brought forth in likely that they would ? Again, the mother gun when they rekem's. Now, my lord, a conspiracy of Burevidence against these blood-money? What hem to Short's house, , and loading the gun covered the slugs, but call upon you, gentle-Il these, to weigh them isoners at the bar the y occur to your minds. of the long and able ideed, so telling was it that many a heart began to throb with hope—a hope which the judge's charge shortly dissipated. He recapitulated the evidence, dwelling with fearful minuteness upon any point that could tall against the prisoners. As to their overlight in having the slugs and going into Short's, he said that murder will always come out somehow. Then he spoke of the agitated state of the country—the many agrarian murders that disgraced it—that, in fact, unless such murders were put down by the strong arm of the law, there would be no safety for life or property. His charge was so strong and pointed, that the jury, after leaving the box, shortly returned, and amidst the most breathless excitement of the vest crowd that througed the court, handed in the fearful verdict of "Guilty."

Then the judge assumed the black cap, and, after exhorting the prisoners to repentance for their ains—to look to God for that mercy which they refused their fellow-creature—he pronounced the sentence, "That you be taken, on the 10th of next month, at the hour of ten o'clock, from the prison from whence you came to the front of the jail, and there be hanged by the next until you be used. May God have mercy and your sould?"

A wail and dry of grief ran through the court as: the searful suntence was pronounced. The deadly word had gone forth and stricken many a heart with the learful announcement. A wild and piercing shrick rose high above the sobs of the women ing shrick rose high above the sobs of the women and the strong grief of the men. The prisoners turned around and recognised their mother's insensible form borne by a crowd of women. Mary Cahill, pale and weeping, stood beside her. Her glance met her lover's, and he bent his head and sobbed, and she wildly wept and wrung her hands.

The first jury that tried the Cormania Steagued, and Judge Koogh immediately empanished a jury that he fall sure would bring a vertice to order.

My lord," said James Corment, as they were leaving the dock, "before God, I solemnly declare that we are a imposent as the child unborn. Our lives we were supposent as the child unborn.

mentalish guilarist of the first the court of the first o and haville in the leading a new world lide juritory they was anneather a position remaining the the water with the stant of harms threaten the feet was published on the second Agencia and the es their france but orthing but there is allitals of the world were the which will thus passed and the second of the second o THE RESERVE OF THE PROPERTY OF THE PARTY OF green of mis and not see expense makes and define addressed in the street and the second that condenses between set क्षाता में अंगिरिक कामन कर्ती अंगलके केंग्रह निर्मा केंग्र के कि pays the about great of the most list will ever appear third and binds besidificant bins instantionally shake issue borns by a chiese of same. Mary thinkly

THE STRAFFTON THE SENDOTOR

Our tale is first denving to a close. It is melan-choly, indeed to dwell appea the first of two strong young mon consigned to an ignominious death for a crime of which they had not the slightest knowl

The Cormache chang to life with a hope; but there was no hope for them. Notwithstanding their conviction, still there was a general feeling absord that they were innocent. A petition, aumerously and respectively signed by the leading genery and clergy of the county—even by the archbishop—was got up in their favor; but effended law should take its course, and two innecent men should die to str

tage.

vild and pieroof the women The prisoners mother's insen-. Mary Cabill, Her glance met ad sobbed, and i, as they were olemnly declara d unborn. Con dod forgive our · 44.被复数

Court Carlo And my of the last viction, this their they ward taken arrain whereither en-Agreement service to their bring i Court Bus Bushing it of citizentaly

THE PARTY NAMED IN THE will have the profit in refree of tours

could not be revoked. In fact, a special commission seems called to strike terror into the people, and this can never be effective without victims. But to return to the poor doomed Cormacks.

After the reply to the petition, all hope of life was abut out from them. They gave all their thoughts to God, and joined their spiritual guide in devotion and prayer. There was a melancholy hind of reagnation about them, more addening than the most callous indifference. Poor addening than the most callous indifference. Poor addening than the most callous indifference. Poor addening than the most callous indifference. The bright world was about double on them they were calaking into a dishonored grave for the orine of others. But the dreading day new roar, and the parting time had come. The day previous to that on which they were to give up their young lives upon the manfold, the mother and distarted states untered their sells. The old woman was supported by one of the turnlarys. So thin, so emakined and worn was about as her woman and the last time, and approached to embrace her dor the last time, and approached to embrace her dor the last time, and approached to embrace her dor the last time, and approached to embrace her dor the last time, and daring my darling boyst share they can't his exchained.

"Hy distin, my darkin boys abure they cen't murther you. Oh, no shure ye never hurt or injured any one, ye that were so thender hearted and kind to your poor old mother. O God! O God! Silvally the sat down between them upon the sate, and took think the sate and botted them with and took think the sate and botted them with and took think the sate and botted them.

otime But to

Toxi sasignid hope of life was their thoughts ide in devotion ly kind of ronigthen the most . was no wonder world was about g into a dishontime had come. they were to give fold, the mother

ir colk a The old

ry mile by middle share they con't O God! O God!" i bothed then meils, Elloy flat.

Nelly Cormack stood aside weeping at this scene. . At length she exclaimed.

" My God, won't they forgive me? My own poor

"They will forgive you, Nelly. Come here. Won't ye forgive her, my darlin' boys? You know she is the only one I have now."

the only one I have now.

The Yis, mother, yis, And, when we are gone we trust she'll be kind and faithful to you, and the brothers kined and embraced their arring sider.

Thank God thank God!, she suclaimed. I will devote my life to our poor mother, boys, and the old women set between them, she was caroling to them a little soft song to full them to rust, and sagel voices and dramy masic them to rust, and sagel voices and dramy masic seemed to float around their little cottage. She was caroling to them a little soft song to full them to rust, and sagel voices and dramy masic seemed to float around their little, cottage. She was back to the happy days when a long young covered him with kinese, whilst the drame in the labeled provide on But this was but a drapp, and the fearful reality recurred to be mind, and she thing to their, unsimming.

poor out mother than and blue and being the control of the control of the land of the land here; my heart is breaking," and she pressed her hand against her bosom.

The brothers preced their hands against their faces, and the boiling tears gushed forth, and then they fixed their despairing game upon that stricken woman, and in a touching tone exclaimed.

"Ah! mother, mother, God pity you!" At length the jailer came to separate them; she wildly clung to them, screaming "Spare them!" stretched out her thin hands to them in an agony of despair, and then fell senseless mean the floor. She was borne into a house near the jail but the erimon tide gualed from her pale lipe; ere the fol-lowing meening broke, that poor bruised, bleeding heart was at rest. The condemned men had scarcely recovered their composure after that sad interview when Kate O'Donnell and Mary Cahill were admitted into the cell.

we will not attempt to paint that last and awful meeting, when two fond young hearts, that were united by the secred ties of love, were stricken forever. All their bright dreams and hopes of happiness had vanished with that wild phremised embrace. All were gone, and they were left to con-mune with the God before whose awail tribunal they were to appear on the morrow.

An execution in Ireland does not attract those large crowds of curious spectators that witness the like scenes in England. No; here while the sulprite

ottage.

forth, and then on that stricken laimed publication you? Suit 3 h erate them; she "Spare them!" ir embrace, she them in an agony apen the foor. lipe; ere the folbruised, bleeding men had secreely hat and interview shill were admit

nat last and awful vere stricken for-hopes of happi-d phrensied emwere left to com awful tribunal soul is peesing into eternity, the chapels are open the people join in offering up the Holy Secrifice, supplicating the Almighty God to grant them mercy. Thus were they employed upon the morning of the execution. With the exception of the police and

At the appointed hour the prisoners were led to the fatal drop... They appeared calm and reconciled. They joined the priest in prayer and supplication. They joined the priest in prayer and supp James Cormack looked down at the growd for a moment, and then, in a firm voice, said to be dead to the firm of Good people, before God, who is shortly to judge us, we declare that we are as innocent of the murder of Mr. Ellis as the child unborn. We had murder of Mr. Ellis as the child unborn. We had neither hand, act, nor part in it. May God forgive our prosecutors.

An exclamation of sympathy arose from the people, and at a sign from the priest they fell upon their knees in ferrent prayer.

The excentioner had new adjusted the rope, and as he settled the knot about James Cornect's neck, he hissed into his ear to be a property of the property

he hissed into his ear—

"Blood for blood! I have sworn it. You crossed my love for Mary Cahill, you spilt my blood, and new I have your."

"James Cormack turned upon him a withering look, but then his awful position recurred him.
and he bene his head in prayer, and huntered, "God forgive you". A few moments and they had record into eternity.

The O Donnelle of Glen Cottage.

They were laid to rest in the same grave with their poor mother. May they rest in peace! Their sister Nelly soon followed; for unable to bear up against her heavy grief, the heart-broken, soon went to the happy land where, the weary are at rest and sin no more.

at 12 and defent the account rough say

Fring furty with to see a noble ship, arounded with kinnen broom driving belpleesly upon an angry see. The good lope Mary Free sailed properly with her traight of a more era.

over the contract ordered were upon the overextention of the contract of the respect to the second state of the second stat

Indigerial to soit the ement of the strict off and sport of the soil of the so

ottage.

ame grave with n peace! Their able to bear up roken, soon went y are at rest and un-kinum and fried heard with heard blue auggreen, The with her fright

O'es ten's his section for the section for the section for the section of the sec

actify and prince in the afficient of the concept o

righted design for the control of th

AT A SECTION OF THE PROPERTY O bas har sa car of the same of

THE WEST, MENTING OLD PRINTED TRUE LOVE NEWARDED.

It is a fearful sight to see a noble ship, crowded with human beings, drifting helplessly upon an angry eca. The good skip Mary Jane sailed proudly with her freight of passengers.

with her freight of peasengers.

Over three hundred emigrants were upon her—some going to meet old friends—some going to try their fortunes in foreign hands; but pli full of hope and mirit.

and spirit.

For a few days the mible vessel sped movelly along, like a thing of life. A sterm set in, and the angry sees hissed, and bettled and feemed; toming her about like a plaything is if to mask the powers of men. Her sails and rigging were torn, and her masts were gone, leaving her absolutely halpless. The sea syept over her deak, and on the west before the relentiess storm, until she ferredly deabed against some projecting rooks. She buneped and topsed about and inseems and ones for men that

The shifted and suspens and color for my that goes faith that third ship were fractal; but there was to come to hear them but God and his seguing for the topping waves and sparing elements had rowned them to the care of men. In the stern of that ill-fated vessel two men clung to a rope; they man for life—but in vain.

"O God! O God! we'll be lost; lost here and hereafter; damned, damned forever!" shrisked the perjured Splane. "The blood of the Cormecks is rising up in judgment against us now—to be damned, to be damned forever—ever in hell's fire! Inn't it fearful? What use is our blood-money to us now, Bucken? Kes, it will help to drag us down deeper into the pite of hell. May my ourse light upon you; but for you I'd never have their blood.

to miswer for it. No, you we have in the repe they charge to mapped another; and ere the recording angel had registered the oath, they were swept into chealty. The new work dated government in the second of the second second thriving fown in the Western States of Asterior.

Inois at that postly sleep beyond; the windows well filled with green and blue and yellow bettlet full; of become and the libit talk we plainly as words that it is a doctor's establishment of What mitmode!

The same little parlor that bespoke constant sea willy Sheep Westernet that bespoke constant sea willy Sheep Westernet the seal this doctor's there is sensithing formal in Manda we like to live on the most intimate terms with additional.

all species the single properties with

ottage.

; lost here and r l" shricked the the Cormacks is or in hell's fire! blood-mency to to drag ne down my curse light micial of ni vill

l; the rope they so the recording were swept into property of of Managery Line a; moment to a inter of America. the windows well . ellow bottles; full: plainly as words co, MrD." pristo ili

poke conduct set ourselves to reall r formal dat M. and to terms with old firm Lie Instell

"Willy sat near the fire reading a paper. looked much fachier and manlier then when we last saw him. The china supe and seasons, and the fresh rolls and the golden butter, all stood ready upon the tea-table, waiting for the bettle, which seemed to boil very leisurely. It will had on his slippers, and he looked so happy and contented in his easy-chair that one might envy him. Looked on his slippers, and he looked so happy and contented in his easy-chair that one might envy him.

Near him set his wife, is fine blooming-looking; young woman. She hailed prattling little baby of about a year old in her lap. How will hailly to the great delight of the deting mother and fould delice, for the latter occasionally select his eyes from the paper he was reading to reward the little prattler with a smile.

"I declare, Willy, but she knows you. The little with a smile.

"I declare, willy, but she knows you. The little baby streethed has hands to fee littler, we like his while you're getting the feet hite.

"I do do not be defined to be father, we like his while you're getting the first Mate."

"Do, love y' and the mother, after kinning has, handed her to her father. The little part of the fitting at the older side of the fre was a young man of about thirty. His free was a young man of about thirty. His free was a feet with beard, and he looked uniburnt, as if he was a young with a little boy of about two young that he besteld.

Ton being ready, they sat around the table, and gan to converse upon various subjects.
"I declare, Frank," said Mrs. Shee, "you ought to remain with us. You could buy a nice property here, and have us all settle together."

"You know, Kate, there is a talisman in old Ireland for me yet; besides, despite all her wrongs and miseries, the love of native land has become strong with me while tolling for wealth in the golden fields with me while toiling for wealth in the golden fields of California. No, Kate, I long to meet old friends; to remble through the old haunts, where you and I, and othern that are now in heaven, chased the butterfy and pulled the wild flowers, or listlessly set upon some mossy bank, listening to the rippling of the stream or the merry notes of the birds. No, Kate, comehow I could not live from that old land where my fathers' and mothers' bones are laid to rest."

"But, Frank, so few of us have cessped the fatal rain of our family, we ought to try and live near one another."

rain of our family, we ought to my and him hear one another."

"I should like it very much. I'll tell you what you might do. I have more wealth then I can well want; now, come to Iraland with me; I'll set you up, and buy, a small property for you. What do, you say to that sister mine?"

"Really, Break," said he, "I have meen so much misery and westshedness and oppression in Iraland that my heart grows sick at the thought of seasons.

d the table, and

bjects. "you ought y a nice property liemen in old Irell her wrongs and es become strong the golden fields meet old friends; where you and I, m, chased the butto the rippling of of the birds. No, from that old land bones are laid to e caseped the fatel-

I'll foll you what the than I can well h me ; I'll not you or you. What do, t her huch nave seen so s tering it again. Since I set up here I have a good . lucrative practice, and would not like to change, if it's the same to my dear Kate. There is a field here, Frank, for an active man that cannot be found in m sin' proposition proi

"Willy, do as you think best," said Kate, like a dutiful wife: 20 miss to not to the dutiful wite.

"Did my father ever get his reason rightly?" said

Frink, changing the conversation. "I would said add."

"Yee; he had a fauld interval before his death; and when he biarned our and history, said how we were scattered, he wept like a child; and then mark again into his childish ways, until he died."

"And poor Unels Corny ?"

And poor Uncle Corny Page 1 to the history and sleeps, and other things of the hisd, until he died, exactly six months after you left. And our good, kind uncle, Father O'Donnell, how did he bear up??

"And our good, kind uncle, Father O'Donnell, how did he bear up??

"Poorly, Frank. After our taken death his sank rapidly; he was always speaking of you." You know I want to live with him shee father's death. That mobile girl, Altor With him shee father's death. That mobile girl, Altor With him shee father's death. That mobile girl, Altor With apont many an owning with its work of the work

Frank held down his head and wept frames all

"He then sank rapidly," continued Kate; "and about a menth before his death Willy, here, returned; the old man was just able to perform the marriage ceremeny, but it was his last, for he was soon after laid to rest in his own little chapely. We sold his effects; they were barely able to cover his debts; then, with what money Willy had, and the last check I got from you, we came and established ourselves here. I said and I and detablished ourselves here. I said and I ald the last death and the the thoughts of home and old friends rose to his memory and redailed has been left considerable.

"Come, come, don't be childish," said Willy.
"Kon must come with me to-morrow, Frank, to see an old friend." Will darid non continuous and and "Who is it, Willy?" said Frank inord a plone

"You recollect Mary Cahill; she's now Sister Mary Joseph. She never raised her head, poor girl, after the execution murder, I ought to call it of the two young Cormacks; to she's now a sister of charity."

The Cormacks, poor, follows, and faithful Mary.

I will go, Willy; and her convent will not regret my visit. Do you know what became of Parson Sly and Hugh Pembert!

"Really I couldn't say, Frank. After squasdering the property between them, they want nobody know not owned where it is thought to a dreign land."

Cottage.

wepking sign inned Kate; "and th Willy, here, reble to perform the his last, for he was little chapel. We ly able to sover his Willy had, and the ame and established at the breakfast-tu in his and wept, as friends rose to his IA. str lisT . tressiler.

ildish," said Willy. morrow, Frank, to this long time from de or la a menista ; she's now Sister her head, poor girl, ought to call it of and faithful Mary. vent will not regret seems of Parson Sly

The delice william same k. After squaderthey went nobody

We must now return to the old country. Though times went hard with many a wealthy man in Ireland, still Mr. Maher, owing to his good, kind landlord, throve and increased in wealth. He is much changed since we saw him last; the gray hair is fast thinning over his brow. Alice, too, looks thin and pale. Instead of that old gay, sprightly appearavos, she looks rather and and more spiritual

"Alice," said her father, as she poured out the tea at the breakfast-table, "I see that Mr. Ellis's place, including the C'Donnell's old farm, has been bought upon trust. I should like to know who is the purchaser. Tell me, Alice," and Mr. Maher put down his chaser. Tell me, Alice," and Mr. Maher put down his cup, after imbibing about half its contents. I tell me, Alice, isn't it strange that we have had no letter this long time from Frank. Why, the five years will be up in a month. If he doesn't keep his word, I think you oughtn't refuse Mr. Any lenger. You know he's a rich man," a level to her eyes. Alice sighed, and the tears started to her eyes beings you girls are!" and Mr. Maher drank off his tears at it it was the accurate and the mank of his beings you girls are!" and Mr. Maher draph of his tee, as if it were the aggressor, and then walked over to the window.

"Alies?" said he looking out, "come here. The the dence is this strange-looking fellow?

"The stranger drove up and jumped of the less.

Mr. Makes, in answer to his knock, went to appear the kell dear.

"You don't know me, sir," said the visitor, as Mr. Maher looked at him in perfect bewilderment:

Alice was standing at the parlor door, her little heart beating violently, she couldn't tell why; but as soon as the heard the stranger's voice she ram out.

Alice! Alice! mid the stranger, extending his hands towards her.

Trank | Frank | the replied, and sank swoon-

Bring here something to recover her a cup; of water; run, Mrs. Moran."

Alice quickly recovered; for joy seldom kills.

Alice any own fond, faithful Alice and Frank, pressing her to his become. I have returned with means beyond your father's conception; I streve and boiled for wealth for you love. In that rich land everything I bounded seemed to turn into gold, for I become a regular Fortunatus, and seemed to have possessed the gift of Mides; but it was all the fruits of love. The said Mr. Maner, wiping his eyes with a big red handkerphief, and giving his eyes with a big red handkerphief, and giving his eyes with a big red handkerphief, and giving his eyes with a big red handkerphief, and giving his eyes with a big red handkerphief, and giving his eyes with a big red handkerphief, and giving his eyes with a big red handkerphief, and giving his eyes with a big red handkerphief, and giving his eyes with a big red handkerphief, and giving his eyes with a big red handkerphief, and giving his eyes with a big red handkerphief.

to a horn.

Dish't I always tell you," eath Mrs. Moran, with the control to him eyes," that God never made sets. "I would wish," said Frank, next meeting, to Mr.

aid the visitor, as lor door, her little dn't tell why i but get'd voice she rain for side datasany nger, extending his

A . LOSSER James d, and sank swoon-

"Frank, my boy ver her—accupiof whothy come in 1.v.

y seldom kills. Alice Peak Frank, have returned with caseption; I strove
love. In that rich imedito turn into
and Pertunate, and the Midne; but it was in a second

Aug Wildfünd mie !

Maher, to take a drive to see where the old house stood, and to shed a tear over the grave of my perents." . at you is not the

Mr. Maher consented, and Alice and he and Frank set out together. Frank, after visiting the graves of the household, expressed a wish to see

"As to that," said Mr. Maher, "it has been bought in the Incumbered Fetates' Court; it has gone to the hammer like all Lord Clearall's property. So, I'm sure who ever hought so awest a place will shortly come to live in it."

shortly come to live in it."

Having reached the cottage, they walked from room to room. It was richly furnished with Turkey carpets, rich papers, contly furnished and paintings.

"How very sivil the section was, and Mr. Mahar.

"It's a little personner of a place," said Alice, looking out of a stindars that commanded a magnifesant view, and they recting the same appears upon the costly furniture and works of art.

"Would you like to live have, Alice to said Frank, with a smile.

with a smile.

Oh Lyen Frank dear, low happy one could be here with those they loved."

"Affect said Frank, pressing her to him, "you have been true and hithful to me in all my trick and troubles. Sweet love, this is your hereal form the pumbers of it!"

