THE LATEST FROM IRELAND.

A Budget of News—Political and Otherwise from the Old Sod.

(Special to the Star.)
(By Timothy J. O'Connor.)
DUBLIN, Oct. 7.—It is becoming a fashion of Irish movement to have each its own organ in the way of a newspaper. The first number of Mr. William O'Brien's new "Irish People" is just out. Another newspaper organ has also just made its appearance in the form of a new weekly review with the strange title of "The Nationalist." It is being published in this city and promises to give an independent support to the political movement, the language movement, the industrial movement and the movement for university education. According to reports from Belfast the Russellite party in Northern Ireland is also to have a weekly newspaper from the beginning of next year. Its policy will be liberal and its name will be "The Ulster Guardian."

The Roman Catholic Clerical School Managers' Association has adopted the following resolution: "That inasmuch as the bishops of Ireland declared in a recent resolution 'we are distinctly of the opinion that the amalgamation of boys' and girls' schools beyond that which has hitherto been provided by the rules of the national board should be resisted' and inasmuch as the Board of National Education, by a majority almost exclusively non-Catholic, persists in setting at naught the representations made to them from our bishops from the great majority of school managers and teachers, and from the Irish members of parliament, and the protests of six out of 10 of their own body, we advise all the managers of national schools in Ireland to unite in refusing to put in force the new amalgamating rules, by refusing to exclude girls from boys' schools and by refusing to admit boys to girls' schools except in accordance with the practice hitherto followed."

Another resolution denounces the new rules as detrimental to education and morality. The Unionist press welcomes the chief secretary's announcement that funds have been found for the partial relief of the financial deadlock in the administration of the Land Act and speaks warmly of Mr. Long's personal efforts to promote a solution of the problem. But the relief is only partial and it is felt strongly that larger and more radical measures must be adopted. If serious developments are to be averted, by the end of next year the sum in each which the land commission will have had to distribute will amount to $10,000,000. But the sum involved in the provisional agreements already entered into amounted according to the last official estimate to upwards of $140,000,000. Even if no further transaction were to take place in the course of the next twelve months there would still be a deficit of over $30,000,000. The Irish Times is opposed to any scheme which would violate the principle of payment in cash, and advises Mr. Long to try the suggestion made by the Land Owners Convention of issuing a treasury certificate to the vendor on his estate being sanctioned. "The vendor might or might not be able to raise money on it at a reasonable rate to pay off his charges, but at any rate no harm could be done by such a device." The Freeman's Journal, which has no particular love for Mr. Long, tells its readers that the chief secretary is consulting with the landlords "to hurry the extravagant purchase money the tenants have agreed to pay into unremunerative securities, and so not merely secure, but increase, the precarious incomes they have hitherto derived from the land."

It is stated that the Congested Districts Board have purchased a farm of about 700 acres, the property of the late Mr. A. C. Tynan, near Clondalkin county, Dublin, and are making arrangements for the migration of the land so acquired of a number of farmers from the county Mayo. The migration which is from large holdings in the west will place over 1,500 acres of land in the hands of the Congested Districts Board for the enlargement of small holdings in South Mayo.

A report having been widely circulated to the effect that there would be no recognition of the Royal Zoological Society of Ireland the announcement is just made that the king has asked the council to accept on deposit two fine lion cubs which have just arrived from Nigeria. His majesty adds that he wishes the animals to have the benefit of the successful system of rearing for which the Dublin guardians are well known.

Of late much has been spoken and written in Gaelic League circles about traditional choral singing. It is now argued that choral singing of the traditional style must be in unison, as it appears that "any quartettes in modern four part arrangements of Irish airs are foreign to the genius of Irish music." One authority has gone so far as to declare that harmonized versions of Irish airs are a monstrosity.

Speaking upon this subject Robert O'Dwyer, a recognized authority in Ireland, said:

"Unison choral singing is an absolute impossibility for a choir of adult voices. Neither Irish airs nor any other airs can be sung in unison except by children. The proof: Two men together to sing an air. One is a tenor and the other a bass. How can these two men sing in unison when nature herself has made the voices higher or lower than each other by the interval of a fourth or a fifth. 'If you sing Irish music or play it as it should be in a harmony properly placed you will find that each part is capable of the most varied expression of the emotions which may be suggested by the poetry or the theme, and which seems to be the sentiment most sought after in the so-called traditional style; but here you would have a tradition giving still more freedom to the emotions; a tradition the origin found and meaning of which may be clearly defined; a tradition moreover founded upon a scientific truth. If not many a gen of Irish melody will be lost. The airs will die for very shame at the unnatural treatment to which they are now being submitted."

Nine years ago the pig population of Ireland was 1,401,536, and in 1895 it had declined to 1,164,322. As England is the great market for the product of the Irish piggeries this decline has naturally tended to raise the price of pigs' meat in that country. James O'Mara, the member of parliament from South Kilkenny, is authority for the statement that the decline is due to competition. Twenty years ago, he said, the pigs killed by the firms of Limerick, Cork and Waterford ranged from 15,000 to 20,000 per week. Now the killings of these firms have fallen to from 5,000 to 10,000 a week.

In 1885 the Danes did not kill more than 5,000 a week; now they kill from 25,000 to 40,000 per week. Sixty per cent. of the Danish and 80 per cent. of the Canadian curings go to the English market. The Canadian can grow his hog for 32s. per cwt., and the Dane for 35s. per cwt., dead weight, while Irish breeders says he cannot profitably grow his pig under 40s. per cwt. The question of freight also comes in. Mr. O'Mara says that from their packing house in Palmerston, Canada, his firm can bring bacon to London for 34s. per ton. Without cold storage in the winter months the freight from Canada is 20c. per ton. The freight from Limerick to London by any route is 24s. 2d. per ton. The average freight from Denmark to London is 25s. per ton.

A SERIOUS DILEMMA

(Chicago Record-Herald.)

John was the sober-minded house servant of a Fort Wayne lady, who was desirous of furthering the interests of two faithful attendants by uniting them in marriage and ending a courtship that was becoming tiresome. John was willing, but the maid Christine, a jolly little woman of half her lover's years, after trying in vain to change the serious disposition of her lover, brought matters to a head in her own way. It took the form of a dialogue which her mistress overheard. They had discussed the situation in their usual fashion, one teasing, the other laying down the law, when this brief summary up occurred:

Christine—John, you never laugh?
John—No, I never laugh.
Christine—Your father, he never laugh?
John—No, my father, he never laugh.
Christine—Your mother, she never laugh?
John—No, my mother, she never laugh.
Christine—Then, John, you get married by some other girl that not laugh either. I stay by myself and not spoil one family with my laugh.

THEATRICAL CHIT-CHAT.

Dramatically the present week has been a quiet one in St. John. At York Theatre the lights only burned one night, the occasion of Dr. Drummond's lecture. At the Opera House the Wilbur Stock Co. have been playing to fairly large houses, and for those who attend the theatre so that business cases may be forgotten, the engagement has been a pleasant one. The company is not blessed with any particularly bright stars, nor cursed with particularly bad actors. The members are capable and have received much encouragement.

Maurice E. Bandmann sends us from Hong Kong a programme of their fine performance there before sailing for Ceylon. The programme bears the date of Aug. 5th. The piece was My Lady Molly, with press clippings accompanying it, which were eulogistic. Admirers of this capable company will be glad to learn that Marie Elba is again with it as prima donna, and that Harry Cole is as funny and versatile as ever.

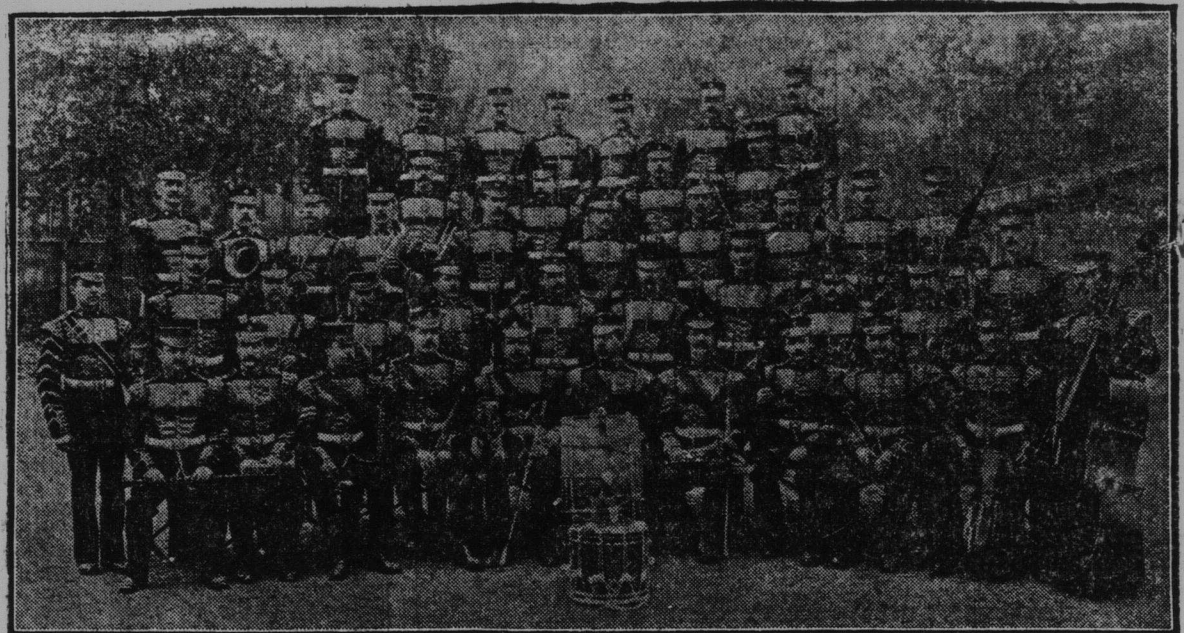

Grace George and her supporting company, under the stage as well as the business direction of William A. Brady, began on Monday the rehearsals of "The Marriage of William Ash," a dramatization of possibly the most popular novel of the time, in which Miss George is shortly to begin her annual starring tour in Philadelphia. H. Reeves-Smith, an exceedingly capable actor of English origin, has been engaged as Miss George's leading man, and the entire company has been selected with the utmost care by Mr. Brady, whose gift for organizing strong and evenly balanced casts was long ago demonstrated.

The heated newspaper discussion that has arisen over James K. Hackett's production of "The Walls of Jericho" at the Savoy Theatre has had the quite unusual effect of drawing greater crowds than could squeeze themselves into the playhouse named. Usually when the critics are as widely divided as in the present instance (a part of them say the drama is the best ever, when the others declare it the merest trash) the public stays away. But this time it seems a certainty that Mr. Hackett's stay at the Savoy without change of bill will be continued far beyond the term of his most sanguine expectations.

De Wolf Hopper has rarely if ever been seen to such advantage in New York as in the current week's offering, "Happyland," at the Lyric Theatre. The lofty comedian with the resonant voice was received with a tumult of acclaim on the opening night, and his work was constantly applauded, and otherwise vociferously indorsed by an audience that filled every inch of space in one of the largest of the metropolitan theatres. There can be no doubt about the hit registered by the star, company and play, all three blending their separate values into a whole that amounted to a triumph. "Happyland" is the work of Reginald De Koven and Frederic Ranken. Prior to its New York presentation it had enjoyed a run of unusual length and distinction in Boston, where it had been rounded into perfection of detail and complete smoothness of outline. I have no doubt that it will continue to attract and highly amuse large gatherings at the Lyric for a considerable time to come. Indeed, it would by no means surprise me if "Happyland" were to run until the holidays, or perhaps longer. The story of the piece is that of a pretty monarch who promises the hand of his unborn son in marriage to the unborn daughter of a neighboring sovereign. But the child of the first king proves to be a daughter and that of the nearby potentate turns out to be a son, whereupon complications absurdly droll, as they are innumerable, arise, and the fun progresses at a high rate, both as to speed and temperature. Mr. Ranken's work upon the libretto is the best that I remember in association with his pen, and Mr. De Koven's score is beyond all measure the strongest, most finished and most graceful he has given us since "Robin Hood." The overture and opening chorus are especially impressive and musical. They are interpreted by a carefully chosen orchestra, almost classical in quality, and on the opening night the instrumentalists evoked ardent plaudits by their brilliant illustration of the composer's theme. Mr. Hopper's interpretation of the chief role in "Happyland" was characteristic and fairly saturated with the comedian's individual humor. It will easily rank with the same player's Wang and the best of other stage pictures he has given us during his long and faithful career. Chief among his supporting forces in "Happyland" are the petite and attractive Marguerite Clark, the grotesquely funny Ada Deaves, the fine-voiced John Dunsinuir and a number of other notably talented principals, backed by a chorus which vocally and in point of comeliness is worthy of commendation.

Why Manuscripts are Rejected

For One Thing, More Are Sent to the Editors Than They Can Print.

For Another, Most of Them Are Hopelessly Dull and Uninteresting.

Talk With an Editor Who Tells of the Indignant Letters He Gets From Unsuccessful Contributors and Tells How They Seem to Feel Towards Him.

One day about sixty years ago a young printer called upon and introduced himself to an editor, a man somewhat older than himself. The editor was busy and not disposed to listen to whatever business had brought the printer to the office.

After a while, however, the editor was made to understand that the young man wished to go to Europe, where he hoped to make a fortune as a possible travelling agent, and the editor, studying the countries he visited and making the close acquaintance of the people.

"Want to write articles of travel, etc.," finally queried the editor in a queer high voice, forced to make some kind of answer. "So do all the other fools!"

Then he tried to make it clear that he was too busy to give the matter any further attention. But this time it was the young printer who was slow to comprehend. He didn't allow it to be beaten into his head at all that his project wasn't acceptable and he hung round, till, out of sheer weariness perhaps, the editor listened to his plans.

The result was that the young printer had the satisfaction of leaving the office assured that he was to be allowed to travel on foot in Europe and write for that particular editor, instead of for some other editor, as had seemed likely when they began to talk.

The editor who figured in this incident was Horace Greeley, then comparatively a young man, in the early flush of his success with the New York Tribune. The young printer was Bayard Taylor. He was not yet 31. The letter which he sent to the Tribune as the result of his European travels was published under the general caption, "Views Afoot." Later they were put between covers.

Few more interesting books of travel have ever been published. It sold extensively, it is still selling, though first issued in the forties, and, while the name of Bayard Taylor may not stand the test of immortality, it is more widely known today, though he has been dead nearly thirty years, than the name of many a writer who receives more money for his work in a year than Taylor did when beginning to make his way in six months.

WHY BAYARD TAYLOR SUCCEEDED.

There is no editor of any success today who is not bothered every day of his life by the score of untrained, would-be writers Mr. Greeley characterized as "fools." On the day Bayard Taylor called to see him, he feared Taylor was one of them, and, naturally, tried to discourage him. Greeley's abruptness was to be regretted, perhaps, as possibly likely to chill the ardor of a genius, but his procedure in the matter was perfectly sound.

He knew instinctively, or had learned by experience, that if the young man was really capable of doing what he proposed in the way it should be done, he would not and could not be discouraged. Greeley didn't stop to think all that out with regard to the young printer before him at that time, probably, he was too busy; too engrossed in other things. All he wanted just then was to get rid of a chap who was bothering him. But when Taylor finally managed to make himself heard his plans showed sense of the sort the editor doesn't always hear from the would-be contributor, the sort that the editor's judgment always listens to with respect and often enthusiasm.

Taylor had found out what the people like to read about, he knew how to tell it to them and he wanted to do it. He could have told them things about their own country which they would have read as eagerly as letters of foreign travel, and he knew it, but he wanted to learn about other countries and their inhabitants and so preferred, to go across the ocean for his material.

He had found out what, for lack of a better term, is denominated "of human interest," though the term has been so overworked, so often applied to real newspaper men call "news," as to be somewhat in disrepute as a descriptive term. Unless you are a specialist, capable of writing technically on your chosen specialty so infrequently that other specialists in the same line will say for your writing, you must find out what is of real "human interest" and learn to put it on paper well, or abandon all thoughts of successful writing.

TRAVEL LETTERS BY THE TON.

There are many editors who have read and re-read "Views Afoot" who are sometimes almost sorry Taylor ever wrote the letters. That is because of the vast array of imitators their success called into being.

These imitators began to make their appearance in editorial offices, and their letters began to show up in the editorial mail very soon after "Views Afoot" had made a hit. Year after year, ever since, they have increased in number. I know an editor who swears it to be his belief that there are eight millions of people in his country today, or one in every ten, who either have proposed to tramp somewhere and write articles for his paper about what they see while walking, or are getting ready to do so.

When ever any one calls upon him with a proposition to do this his naturally sweet temper begins at once to turn sour, and, no matter how balmy the temperature, the air suddenly becomes chilled in his immediate vicinity. He says most of them begin something like this:

"I have called, Mr. Editor, to propose something really new and novel for your paper. I want to go to Ireland (or Japan, or some other country that has been written to death) and tramp over the roads (or wheel over them, as the case may be) to see and study the people—to get out of the beaten track, as it were, and write letters four your paper."

Sometimes, when the aspiring correspondent desires to be facetious, he says he wishes to travel "on Shanks' horses." Then this particular editor, though not often gruff in the way he turns people down, is prone to cut the story short.

For he knows, as Greeley knew, by bitter experience, that to give a veiled aspiring traveler permission to do as he wishes is to insure the reception later, of a lot of the dullest, dreariest copy imaginable, utterly worthless for publication purposes, and fit only for the waste basket or for a foolish would-be contributor to pay return postage on. He said, and he knows, that you would be surprised by the wide variety of people who seek, with the most earnest of intentions, to imitate Taylor. Some of them have no idea that they are trying to imitate him; there are those among them, as my editor has learned by questioning them, who have never heard of Taylor, incredible as this may seem. Invariably, however, when he has questioned him further, he has found that the aspirant knew all about the work of some later literary tramp, and was planning to work along the same lines.

Not all the variations of the letters of travel type need the money that might be got from the sale of their writing. Many of them declare they wish to write solely to fill up the time while on their travels, and keep themselves from being homesick, from crying ennu.

A large percentage of them, however, want to pay the expenses of the trip by their writing. Some plan to make their travel letters, like Taylor's stepping stones to a literary career. Many of them are women, some rich, some poor, and, of course, the number of those, both men and women, who want to just write plain travel articles, without doing any tramping, and are content to travel by steam, like the rest of us, is very large.

Once in a great while they are so well fixed as regards this world's goods that they offer to pay to get the letters printed. These my editor divides into two classes, plain idiots and gratters, the latter being writers who have an advertising string to their writing, who mean to give gratuitous mention to this or that person, product or commercial product, and depend for pay upon the person or thing advertised. They get the shortest shrift of all, so far as this editor is concerned. He sends them invariably to the business manager of his paper, knowing full well that he will charge full advertising rates for anything offered under such conditions, and that the matter, when printed, will be so marked that the reader will know it for advertising, as you may have noticed, though there are papers whose editors and managers sometimes forget the marking.

All told, this editor gets travel letters of every sort except those that are fit to print, "by the ton," he says, and of such he does not speak with much hyperbole when he says it. The trouble with the travel letter writers is that they write much more commonplace stuff about foreign lands than they would think of writing about their own. Thus, one of them, in a letter I saw the other day about the Coliseum at Rome, devoted a lot of space to its dimensions. Now, these figures may be found in the schoolbooks, just as may the figures showing the size of the Capitol at Washington.

A good letter might be written about either of these buildings—a letter that any general editor would be glad to buy and print, but it would have to have something in it to be of value.

WOULD-BE NEWSPAPER HUMORISTS.

There is nothing which the average editor welcomes more heartily than copy that is really humorous. He may not need much of it, especially when other things that must be printed are crowding his pages, but he must have some of it—even if he has to steal it. Many editors as you may have noticed, do this occasionally.

The editor I have mentioned says that the whole world must know how useful true humor is and, what is worse, to be prepared to furnish the article. At all events this editor gets alleged humor by the load. It comes in from utterly untrained pens, and, like the greater part of the contents of the humorous columns in the newspapers, the bulk of it is stolen and generally with extremely poor judgment. On the whole, he says, it is about the most sorrowful sort of reading matter ever put before the eyes of the suffering manuscript buyer.

If the alleged humorous matter that is rejected is more worse than some that is printed, this editor's view of its merits is probably correct and in this my readers are pretty sure to agree with me. The humor of travel letters and the would-be humorous writers come those desirous of writing fiction and general articles. They all run along parallel lines my editor says; not one of them has a new idea in a humorous line, and not one in a hundred is able to dress a new idea up in nervous, interesting English if he were fortunate enough to contrive one. Most of those who essay fiction choose the oldest, most hackneyed plots and tell them in the dullest, most hackneyed manner.

"JUST AS GOOD" AS THE REAL THING.

Ninety-nine in a hundred of them proclaim, when personally visiting the editor, that the work offered is modeled on Kipling's or Mr. Humphrey Ward's, or Anthony Hope's, or whoever happens to be upmost in the my dismay. I found that he was being proceeded against for embezzlement of money due to his clients in Derbyshire.

"Naturally, I called out at once. I was, however, too late for the man, who had already borrowed £200 from the principal British residents of Lima and Valparaiso, 'to those friendly offices' she wrote in the inscribed volume with which she subsequently presented me, second only to your own, I must ascribe at least the lesser part of my success."

"As regards the financial aspects of my clients have more than done me harm, he inadvisably to say more than that my fees vary according to the social and financial standing of my clients. I may, however, add that a professional annual income has for several years exceeded £2,000."

Judging by the first successful practitioner of the art, a pleasant manner, the tact of an ambassador, and a penetrating knowledge of human nature are the three principal qualifications necessary to any one who would succeed as a professional introducer.

"The trouble with most of the people whose manuscripts are returned to them is that they have never learned to write and so don't know how to do it. But inasmuch as there are more educated people now than ever before, a larger percentage of fairly well written articles and stories are returned than ever before. The truth is that more fairly good 'stuff' is offered than could possibly be printed; besides, the writers forget that to be acceptable to any editor matter sent to him must be written in the spirit of the paper or periodical which he is engaged in editing."

"The most serious part of all this," says the editor, "is that in sending back unavailable articles I know I'm making enemies among a lot of really good people every day of my life, besides many more who are not of my book sales just then, and also that the imitation is at least just as good, if not better, than the work of the model. It rarely seems to enter their heads that the only way to write acceptable fiction is to study human nature, human passion, human actions, first hand before writing a story.

The untrained writer who would write "special articles" are like all the others. They model their work on what has gone before. They try to write about something just as somebody else has written about it before them. They rarely dream of trying to find something new, or even of trying to treat an old subject in a new way.

If they only knew it! I warrant now that life isn't all radiance of rainbows steved in the syrup of success for you, even in the city of —, that hazy hole of hustle for the dollar."

"In submitting 'The Power of Wealth' to your trained commercial instinct I merely remark that I hope the shares of finance will leave you enough for funeral rites."

"Sympathetically yours,

"P. S.—Rejected 'Blackburn' MSS. at hand."

"Well, I did grin!"

"Say, I'd like to see some of the things you do print, and I'd like to buy a copy of your paper some time. I can find one, just to find out."

"I have a burning curiosity to see what you do accept and who has been made by taking up the old subjects and telling the new things about them. Most of the people who write 'special articles' and fail to sell them not only take the old topics, but tell the old things about them and tell them in the old way."

For this reason every editor who receives a good many miscellaneous manuscripts can tell just about when a manuscript on a given topic is due. "The Opium Joint" of a few years ago was bound to turn up on an average once in three weeks, in the office of nearly every editor looking for alleged "human interest stuff," and for years "The Growth of Electric Railroading" was due every five weeks.

Now when Dr. S. Weir Mitchell described his experiences with a new narcotic the result was a picture of full of power and readability, but the ordinary individual's attempt to do something like it is sure to be flat. "The Growth of Electric Railroading" is a good topic, when done by the pen of a specialist or a trained general writer, but when it is simply a rehash by an untrained writer, as most articles thereon are, it is hopeless.

ALL SURE AT THE EDITORS.

"The most serious part of all this," says the editor, "is that in sending back unavailable articles I know I'm making enemies among a lot of really good people every day of my life, besides many more who are not of my my clients have more than done me harm, he inadvisably to say more than that my fees vary according to the social and financial standing of my clients. I may, however, add that a professional annual income has for several years exceeded £2,000."

INTRODUCTIONS WORTH £2,000 A YEAR.

PROFESSIONAL INTRODUCER TALKS OF HIS NOVEL AND PAYING BUSINESS.

The Englishman who is going abroad to a strange country who is not well known, before leaving, to look in at a cosy set of chambers situated within easy walking distance of St. James' street. In the heart of Clubland he will find a business-like gentleman who, for a reasonable fee, will furnish him with the best introductions, so that, no matter what part of the world he may be bound for, he will, on arrival, find friends and hospitality in abundance. show, captured by H. M. S. Blonde, while on patrol duty in the Red Sea.

Returning to England with little means beyond a small pension, the ex-naval lieutenant tried his hand at various ways of making money, with slight success.

At last, however, a friend who was going to Labrador to shoot caribou, knowing that his companion had spent several years in Lower Quebec and Newfoundland, asked whether he could not give him a few letters of introduction to people in those parts. The other willingly agreed.

Turning the matter over in his mind and finding that, in the course of his naval duties, he had come in contact with "the best people" in all parts of the world, he decided there and then to invest his small savings in the business of "professional introducer."

A trip around the world, ostensibly for pleasure, but really undertaken with a view to enlarging the number and variety of his correspondents, was a preliminary to engaging the bachelor suite now occupied by the ex-lieutenant in a fashionable quarter of the West End.

Lieutenant Jones, as one may call him, was not averse to discussing his received in an attack on an Arab slave original occupation with T. B. B. "My clients recommend one another," he explained. "I neither circularize nor tout, and I find that most people in the colonies, India, the Western States of America, or in our African settlements, are only too glad to welcome a new face, provided it is accompanied by a well-bred manner and appearance."

"I often get letters from my thrifway friends actually begging me to send them another young Englishman, and I may say that I never furnish a client with introductions unless I am sure that his appearance in Melbourne or Montreal, let us say, will be as welcome to my friends in those cities as their hospitality will be agreeable to my client. It does not do to mix people of opposing temperament and tastes."

"No," he continued, "I do not confine myself to any one class. My colonial and foreign friends are as various as they are numerous. If a business man comes to me I provide him with introductions to business people; if a man is going abroad to shoot big game I introduce him to the best sportsmen in the district. Several extremely happy marriages, by the way, have been made as a result of my introductions."

"Occasionally I am at a loss, as when only once have I made a mistake that led to real difficulty and unpleasantness. A highly respected country solicitor came to my office telling me that he was suffering from overwork and had decided to take a sea trip to New Zealand. He asked for suitable introductions to his friends in New Zealand and Dunedin. I did my best for him, and some months later, much to my dismay, I found that he was being proceeded against for embezzlement of money due to his clients in Derbyshire.

"Naturally, I called out at once. I was, however, too late for the man, who had already borrowed £200 from the principal British residents of Lima and Valparaiso, 'to those friendly offices' she wrote in the inscribed volume with which she subsequently presented me, second only to your own, I must ascribe at least the lesser part of my success."

"As regards the financial aspects of my clients have more than done me harm, he inadvisably to say more than that my fees vary according to the social and financial standing of my clients. I may, however, add that a professional annual income has for several years exceeded £2,000."

Judging by the first successful practitioner of the art, a pleasant manner, the tact of an ambassador, and a penetrating knowledge of human nature are the three principal qualifications necessary to any one who would succeed as a professional introducer.

"The trouble with most of the people whose manuscripts are returned to them is that they have never learned to write and so don't know how to do it. But inasmuch as there are more educated people now than ever before, a larger percentage of fairly well written articles and stories are returned than ever before. The truth is that more fairly good 'stuff' is offered than could possibly be printed; besides, the writers forget that to be acceptable to any editor matter sent to him must be written in the spirit of the paper or periodical which he is engaged in editing."

"The most serious part of all this," says the editor, "is that in sending back unavailable articles I know I'm making enemies among a lot of really good people every day of my life, besides many more who are not of my book sales just then, and also that the imitation is at least just as good, if not better, than the work of the model. It rarely seems to enter their heads that the only way to write acceptable fiction is to study human nature, human passion, human actions, first hand before writing a story.

The untrained writer who would write "special articles" are like all the others. They model their work on what has gone before. They try to write about something just as somebody else has written about it before them. They rarely dream of trying to find something new, or even of trying to treat an old subject in a new way.

If they only knew it! I warrant now that life isn't all radiance of rainbows steved in the syrup of success for you, even in the city of —, that hazy hole of hustle for the dollar."

"Sympathetically yours,

"P. S.—Rejected 'Blackburn' MSS. at hand."

"Well, I did grin!"

ST. JOHN STAR, SATURDAY, OCTOBER 7, 1905.

MUTUAL CONDUCTED AS SORT OF FAMILY AFFAIR.

NEW YORK, Oct. 6.—Closing a week, every day of which has produced a sensation that has stirred the country, the special legislative committee investigating the methods of insurance companies, adjourned today until Tuesday of next week. While other weeks of the hearing have had a sensation, no previous week has had a sensation every day, as the one that was concluded with today's session.

On Wednesday, when President McCall of the New York Life Insurance Co. was on the stand, he heartily declared that three-quarters of the bills introduced into the legislatures of the states of the union were blacklisting measures, and on that ground he explained the necessity for maintaining a corps of special attorneys.

On Thursday, counsel for the committee, Mr. Hughes, took another tack and called Robert H. McCurdy, general manager of the Mutual Life Insurance Co., and son of Richard A. McCurdy, president of that company, to testify as to the agency system of the company, the feature of the business being under his control.

When the investigation opened today it was expected the president of the Mutual Life would be called to the stand before the day was over. By a misunderstanding, however, President McCurdy had left the office of the Mutual Life before he was called for, and it is expected that he will be the first witness on Tuesday. In today's testimony the sensational development was when Mr. Hughes demanded the pay-roll of the executive officers of the company. This was produced, and shows salaries of these officers since 1871. For the year 1904 President McCurdy received $120,000; two vice-presidents were paid $20,000 each, a second vice-president $15,000, third vice-president $10,000, and general manager $25,000, who this year will receive $30,000, and the treasurer $20,000.

Robert McCurdy said he never knew the salary of his father until today, when he heard it read in the committee. He thought, however, that there should be no limit to the salary of such positions, because they should be in accordance with the accumulations of the company.

When asked if it was any benefit to the policy holder to increase the president's salary, Mr. McCurdy said he thought the trustees had considered that when they increased the president's salary. No increase, however, had ever been considered when he was present at the trustee meetings. Earlier in the day, when Mr. McCurdy was on the stand, Mr. Hughes tried to bring out why C. H. Raymond & Co., and the partners in that firm received larger emoluments from the business than any other agency of the company.

Mr. McCurdy said he did not know what Mr. Thebaud received from the business, and had never talked with him about his personal affairs. He said it was "large reward for large achievement," and that all business of large magnitude was built up on that principle.

During Mr. McCurdy's testimony it was brought out that George Raymond, a brother of Chas. H. Raymond, was the general agent for New Jersey; that Howard Lewis, the general agent for Northern New York, with an office in Albany, was a cousin of either the vice president, Mr. Granville, or Mrs. Granville; that Dr. E. J. Moss, the medical director of the Mutual Life, married a sister of the president of the company, and that Guyvann P. Eliot, an inspector of risks, is a cousin of Louis Thebaud, son-in-law of President McCurdy, and partner of the Raymond firm.

G. W. White, a secretary of the company, whom Mr. McCurdy was asked about, said he was no relative of any officer of the company, but "that Mrs. White was a niece of Mrs. Granville, wife of Vice-President Granville."

At one point in the day's testimony much interest was manifested when the expenditures of the company were taken up. An auditor of the Mutual Life, Mr. Pringle, was on the stand, and he was asked as to the method of recording the expenditures. It was gathered that these were passed upon by an expenditure committee, of which Robert Oliphant was chairman.

Three entries on the books of payments to Mr. Oliphant of $25,000 each were looked into, but no information could be gleaned. Mr. Pringle remarked about the campaign contribution to the republican congressional committee which was disclosed yesterday, but he said it had not come under his observation.

The $25,000 contribution to the congressional committee was looked for when the ledgers were produced, but up to adjournment this afternoon this had not been found.

BIG FIRE AT BASS RIVER.

Plant of Fossil Flour Company Burned—Loss Over $30,000.

TRURO, N. S., Oct. 6.—There was a disastrous fire today at Bass River Lake, Castleridge, near Bass River, sweeping out the entire plant, warehouses and works of the Fossil Flour Company, and causing a loss of over $30,000. The fire caught in a drying machine and spread rapidly, leveling all the buildings in a short time.

There are no particulars as to the insurance. David S. Collins, sole owner, was at the mill at the time of the fire. This is the enterprise that created much interest at the time it was started some eight years or more ago, by building a pole railway from the mill to the shipping point at Bass River. SYNOD ADJOURNED TO MEET IN MONGTON

Campbell Will Case Again Taken Up—Synod Agreed to Receive the Petition.

SYDNEY, N. S., Oct. 6.—The synod convened this morning at nine o'clock and the first matter taken up was the petition regarding the Campbell will case. A resolution was passed, after some discussion, by which the synod agreed to receive the petition and expressed its appreciation of the motive of the petitioners and its sympathy with Mrs. Campbell. While not in any way contravening the decision of the general assembly, the synod appointed a committee consisting of Rev. J. W. Falconer, Horace Fleming and Rev. E. McCurdy, agent of the church, as convenor and treasurer, to receive any contributions for Mrs. Campbell's benevolence which may be sent them and forward the same to her.

Upon motion of Rev. J. A. Greenlee, a resolution of sympathy for Rev. Dr. Henderson of Chatham, N. B., who was suffering from a severe illness, was passed.

Rev. T. C. Jack reported on behalf of the committee on obituary notices. Tributes were paid to the memory of the late Rev. J. F. Forbes, D. Drummond, A. Macrae and M. Buchanan. Principal Falconer brought up the subject of bursaries and referred to the commendable interest taken by the businessmen in St. John and Fredericton, who had recently made valuable contributions.

After a brief devotional service the synod adjourned in due form to meet in St. John's church, Moncton, on the first Tuesday of October, 1905.

MONCTON, Oct. 6.—It transpired that Hartnett, under arrest at Kingston, Ont., for forging the name of the Summer Co. of Moncton to a check for $190 belongs to Parrsboro, N. S. He is a carriage builder by trade and married an English girl who formerly worked at the Ambert Hotel. Last February Hartnett with his wife and three children arrived at the Lorne Hotel, Springhill Junction, and Hartnett said he was about to buy a carriage factory at Springhill, but as no money for board was forthcoming the proprietor notified Hartnett to leave. He went to Springhill, but did not take his family. The hotel man followed and notified him that unless the woman and children were taken away they would be turned out. Hartnett took them to the King Hotel, where they remained for some weeks. He skipped from there without paying board and went to Piquash, where he worked at the Central Hotel for a time until the proprietor got wind of him. Evidently he is a fakir of the first water.

HARTNETT HAS A BAD RECORD.

FOOTBALL PLAYERS

OTTAWA, Oct. 6.—Thomas Boucher and Hal Walters, two of Ottawa's leading players in this city, pleaded guilty to assaulting Montreal players in a match last Saturday. They were allowed to go on suspended sentence. The magistrate expressed the hope that such a manly sport would not be permitted to degenerate into a pug-milling match.

The public works department will get new tenders for the improvement of St. Andrews rapids on the Red River. The work will cost three hundred thousand dollars.

Oliver and Hyman are back in the city.

The brotherhood of St. Andrew commenced its annual convention here today.

BRIGHT MAGGIE BELL GOES ASHORE.

LUNenburg, N. S., Oct. 6.—The bright, Maggie Bell, Captain Smeltzer, while running up-dichone Bay, grounded on the shoal near the lower part of the harbor and is lying in about two feet of water. The vessel was returning from Turk's Island with a cargo of salt and molasses.

She is about one year and a half old, and is owned by E. Ernest & Sons. On board were three passengers, who came from Turk's Island, being members of the crew of the wrecked bark Sullivan. The Maggie Bell will probably be lightered and floated in a few days.

MAY DISCONTINUE DIRECT S. S. LINE

Between Canada and Australia on Pacific.

OTTAWA, Oct. 6.—The action of the Australian government in determining to add inland transportation charges to the value of goods for custom duties purposes may, it is feared, result in the discontinuance of a direct steamship line between Canada and Australia on the Pacific. The new regulations will compel manufacturers in Eastern Canada as well as in the Eastern States to ship via New York and the Canadian-Australian steamship line will therefore lose almost the whole of this business. To the service, Canada now contributes $37,091, Australia $28,561, and the Fiji Islands $2,846, making a total of $68,498 given for a monthly service now performed.

When the contract was renewed, the company compelled Canada and Australia to each put an extra $3,000 for a renewal. It can be terminated, however, in August 1, 1906, by giving three months' notice. It is possible that the Dominion government may, instead of endeavor to arrange for a monthly freight service on the Pacific between Canada and New Zealand. Premier Seddon has expressed his willingness to join with Canada in such an enterprise, and the Dominion parliament at its last session voted $50,000 for this purpose. Probably overtures will immediately be made in New Zealand. The government has this object in view.

MONCTON, Oct. 6.—Solicitor General Sweeney, on returning to Moncton today, found a check for twenty pounds from Prince Louis of Battenburg to pay for game licenses for himself and Captain Kerr of His Majesty's service. SENATOR MACKAY
RE-ELECTED CHAIRMAN.

MONTEAL, Oct. 6.—Senator Mackay was today re-elected chairman of the harbor board. Rev. T. J. Allen of Beavert Falls, Pa., delivered his second lecture on the Hebrew Tabernacle and Temple in the school room of St. David's Presbyterian church last evening. The services of the high priest on Atonement day were described, and the consummation and fulfillment of all the ceremonies were explained with much interesting detail.

Next week on Thursday and Friday evenings Rev. Mr. Allen will repeat his entertaining and instructive lectures in the Portland Methodist Church, when doubtless many who have not heard them will avail themselves of the opportunity.

Bride of Two Months Drowned at Black Beach.

A drowning accident occurred yesterday at Black Beach, the Narrows, Musquash, under peculiarly sad circumstances, involving the death of a bride whose marital day was scarcely two months past, and nearly taking the young husband to a like fate.

The accident by which Mrs. Robert McGuire was taken away from her distracted husband occurred yesterday a little after the noon hour.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert McGuire were stopping at the home of Mrs. McGuire's father, Wm. P. Cunningham, during their vacation, and about a quarter to one started out from Black Beach for a sail. In the boat with them was Miss Kate McGuire, sister of Robert McGuire. The three sailed out to the leeward of the ledges on this point, when suddenly a squall struck them with such force as to capsize the craft, and fling Mr. and Mrs. McGuire clear of the boat.

Kate McGuire managed to cling to the bow of the boat, which floated easily on the water. She watched the agonized struggles of her brother and his wife, as only a few feet from safety they vainly endeavored to reach and clutch the boat. Mrs. McGuire clung desperately to her husband, and both had gone down twice when a boat propelled by Wm. Downey and his son, who had witnessed the accident, drew near.

They dashed up to the boat and rescued Mr. McGuire and his sister. As the former was in an unconscious state they took him to the beach and revived him. He immediately asked for his wife, and when told that she was lost he was almost frantic. He was under the impression that they had clung together, and the last thing he remembered was his wife clutching his arm in a deathlike grasp. Between their second rising and the actual rescue by the boatmen Mrs. McGuire must have relaxed her grip and sunk. Her husband was, however, too far gone to notice this, and she had disappeared beneath the waves before help arrived.

The men of the neighborhood gathered and began to grapple for the body of Mrs. McGuire, but at a late hour last evening it was reported that the recovery had not been made.

Mr. McGuire is quarter-master on the Calvin Austin, and this trip to Musquash was the first vacation he and his wife had taken since their marriage two months ago. They were to reside on their return at 204 Sydney street, and in fact a considerable amount of furnishing had been already effected.

Mrs. McGuire, who is a daughter of Wm. P. Cunningham, was one of a family of eight children. Besides herself there were four girls and three boys, all residing at the homestead. One of the sisters is at present visiting Mrs. Robert McAfee, Union street.

BIG EAGLE CAPTURED OUT AT SEA.

It Attacked Sailor on Schooner Hunter Sailing Up the Bay and Was Subdued After Struggle.

Olive Pedersen, an able-bodied seaman and a shipmate had an experience at sea that few, if any, other sailors of the deep can truthfully duplicate.

The men are occupants of the fore-castle on the two topmasted schooner Hunter, of which Captain Hamilton is commander. With 144 barrels of Portland cement the Hunter arrived in port Thursday night from Elizabeth, N. J.

On Wednesday night last, just after dark, Pedersen and his shipmate were out on the shipboard working at one of the sails, the vessel was about fifteen miles off the land and Cape Elizabeth Light could just be seen. Their surprise came only when a large American eagle swooped down on them, alighted on the head of one of the sailors and grasping the seaman's hat in its claws attempted to fly away.

The sailor grabbed hold of his hat and Pedersen caught hold of the bird by the legs. The big eagle put up a grand fight but was after some difficulty landed on the deck but not before its claws beak and wings had left their marks on the sailors and they were satisfied that their captive was a violent creature to handle.

The eagle was pretty well tired out, being so far from land and Pedersen made his captive secure by tying a strong cord to one of its legs, allowing the bird to command a portion of the main deck.

The sailors are trying to sell the eagle which is a very large one, its wings measuring over five feet from tip to tip.

The schooner is now discharging at the McArthur wharf.

LATEST MACHINERY FOR MAKING BREAD.

"Purity and cleanliness" is the motto under which Ernest J. Heatt, proprietor of the Hygeia bakery christened his business and one has only to glance into his store, or look in his bakery to realize that the motto is religiously lived up to. Mr. Heatt attributes his wonderful success in a great part to the latest and most up-to-date machinery, sparing no expense and energy. His business has now reached such proportions that it requires six large wagons to do the distributing work. Mr. Heatt has of late had frequent notices and with an idea of being better able to handle this and his other business he has installed a bread moulding machine. This wonderful contrivance does the work of six men, and makes bread of a much firmer texture than could be accomplished by hand. The machine produces loaves of a perfectly uniform size at the rate of sixty-five per minute. It is the only machine of its kind in New Brunswick. The bread is shaped, entirely without the aid of human hands, insuring absolute cleanliness and a loaf of superior quality.

LUCKY ST. JOHN HUNTERS; MOOSE ARE PLENTIFUL.

Robert Campbell, of Campbell Bros., and Fred Sutherland left the city on Thursday to spend a few days in the country near Bon. Lomax hunting.

Yesterday morning they met a large bull moose and a well directed bullet from Mr. Campbell's rifle brought the animal down. When shot the moose jumped in the air and in falling broke one of its legs on a stump. The animal weighs in the vicinity of 300 pounds.

Several fine moose heads captured in New Brunswick forests were shipped to the United States this morning by the Canadian Express Company.

On Tuesday last a young farmer, while about four miles out the Marsh Road saw a large bull moose, which walked out into the middle of the road and blocked his way. He stood for an instant and then took to the woods.

The meat merchants are daily receiving carcasses of moose and bear and the sales are plentiful.

AN IMPORTANT EVENT.

An important event in the business history of St. John took place today when J. N. Harvey's new clothing store on Union street was opened. The event is made particularly interesting to those who appreciate bargains by the remarkable offers which Mr. Harvey is making in honor of the day. A careful perusal of his big advertisement on page 2 will enable the reader to understand one reason why Mr. Harvey has been compelled to triple the size of his store within three years.

WHERE WILL I GO?

If you spend five nights per week during the fall and winter months under the supervision of instructors who are capable of earning from two to three thousand dollars per year, you should certainly be a good distance along the same road as these instructors by next spring.

The Currie Business University, Ltd., offers you the trial free.
