New Romeo and Juliet.

CHAPTER XXIV.
IN THE HOUR OF NEED.

It need scarcely be remarked that it is not usual for young ladies unattended to pay gentlemen visits at their chambers. Scandal is only too ready to seize upon the slightest excuse for the exercise of its malignity, and the fact, if it were known, that Lady Grace Peyton had been seen in Cecil Neville's rooms would be quite sufficient to set evil tongues wagging. All this flashed across Cecil Neville's mind as she stood in the doorway, picture of queenly beauty which seemed to light up the room, and made the sheriff's officer stare with all his eyes.

Lord Cecil went forward, a slight flush on his face denoting his embarrassment. "Lady Grace!" he said. Then he stopped suddenly, remembering that it would be well not to mention her name before the man. She bit her lip and looked from one to the other as she gave him her hand.

"I thought you were alone," she said, in a low voice full of confusion and anxiety. The officer rose and made a light bow. "I'll step outside, my lord," he said, respectfully, and he did so. "I—I did not know," faltered Lady Grace, looking after him. "Have I done anything very wrong in coming? I did not stop to think. I was so anxious that I thought I would come up to town—"

"Will you not sit down?" he said, gravely, and he placed a chair for her. She sank into it, and looked up at him. "What news is there? Have you heard of her? I can't tell you how anxious I am! Ah! I see by your face that something has happened! What is it?"

"Yes; I have had news," he said, in a low voice. "My uncle was right, and you and I were wrong, Lady Grace. Miss Marlowe—his voice grew grim—'has sailed for Australia.'"

"Oh, no, no! But alone?" she breathed.

"No, not alone. She went with this Mr. Garland," he said, sternly.

THAT CHANGE IN WOMAN'S LIFE

Mrs. Godden Tells How It May be Passed in Safety and Comfort.

Fremont, O.—"I was passing through the critical period of life, being forty-six years of age and had all the symptoms incident to that change—heat flashes, nervousness, and was in a general run down condition, so it was hard for me to do my work. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound was recommended to me as the best remedy for my troubles, which it surely proved to be. I feel better and stronger in every way since taking it, and the annoying symptoms have disappeared."—Mrs. M. GODDEN, 825 Napoleon St., Fremont, Ohio.

Such annoying symptoms as heat flashes, nervousness, backache, headache, irritability and "the blues," may be speedily overcome and the system restored to normal conditions by this famous root and herb remedy Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

If any complications present themselves write the Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass., for suggestions how to overcome them. The result of forty years experience is at your service and your letter held in strict confidence.

She held out her hand to him. "Oh, I am so sorry! What can I say, dear Lord Neville, to comfort you?" He smiled wearily. "Nothing, I am afraid. There is nothing to be said—or done; I have got to bear it, that is all! I am not the only man who has been—killed." The cruel word left his lips like a note of steel. "Probably my lot is all too common. Yes, I have got to bear it!"

"There—there is no doubt about it," she asked. "None whatever," he replied. "I have been down to the office and seen the list of passengers, and her name is amongst them, together with this man's."

"How bad, how heartless she must be!" she murmured indignantly. He winced and looked aside. Even in this, the first hour of his trouble, he could scarcely endure to hear Doris thus spoken of.

"I don't know," he said. "I can scarcely believe that she has done what she has. It seems more like a dream than sober reality. But I suppose every man in my case feels like that."

"If I could only do something for you!" she murmured, leaning forward and looking up into his face with the sympathy which, coming from a woman, is so precious to a man, especially when the woman is young and beautiful.

"Thanks, awfully," he said, trying to speak in a conventional tone to hide the acuteness of his suffering; "but, as I said, no one can do anything except it is our old friend Time. I shall 'get over it,' and he smiled, as the Spartan may have smiled while the fox was gnawing at his bosom.

"You look very tired," she said, after a moment's pause. "What will you do with yourself to-day? Will you—don't think me obtrusive—but will you come and drive with me—come and do something? I am so afraid that you will sit here and mope." She glanced round, then started and looked up at him as if with a sudden remembrance of the situation. "But I am forgetting!—I ought not to be here—ought I? Lord Neville, you don't think ill of me for coming?" and the colour rose to her face, and she dropped her eloquent eyes as if with a sudden shame.

"Think ill of you, Lady Grace!" he echoed, impetuously. "What, for coming to try and help a poor fellow with your sympathy? I can't tell you how grateful I am! It was a kind action, which not one woman out of a thousand would have done!"

"Ah!" she said, in a low voice; "that is it! One woman in a thousand! Tell me Lord Cecil, and tell me the truth. I have been foolish and—forward in coming here to you like this?"

If he had told to her the truth, Lord Cecil would certainly have been obliged to admit that she had been foolish; but what man in his position ever does make such an admission?"

"I think you have done a very kind action, Lady Grace," he said, gravely. "And—shame to him who thinks ill of it! Besides—"

He hesitated. She looked at him with an intelligent flash of her eyes. "You were going to say that no one need know. You forget the cabman and the man outside?"

Lord Cecil bit his lip. "At any rate, no one else need know," he said. "The cabman does not know who you are—"

"I engaged him from just outside our own house," she said, in a voice of concern.

"Cabman are discreet," he said, to reassure her. "But the man—who is he, Lord Neville?"

He wiped his moustache, and made a great business of it. "Oh! a man I do business with," he said; "nobody of any consequence. He does not know you, I'll answer for it." She drew a long breath.

"Not until this moment have I realised what I have done," she said, and he saw her lips tremble. "Don't be uneasy, Lady Grace," he said, soothingly. "Let me discharge this cabman and call another—"

"Very well," she said; then she added, tremulously, "but will you not come back with me?"

"Of course I will!" he assented, promptly, and he seized his hat. "I will come and see Lord Peyton—"

"Oh, what is it now?" she exclaimed, almost clasping her hands.

"Nothing, nothing," he hastened to reassure her, though his voice was anything but reassuring; "only that I have just remembered that I cannot leave the house just at present. The fact is, I have important business with this man, and—oh, Lady Grace, I am so sorry! Don't misunderstand! I'd give all I'm worth!"

he laughed bitterly, and corrected himself—"ten years of my life, to come with you, but—"

He turned away, and sat down his hat almost savagely. "I don't understand," she murmured, anxiously, and there seemed to him a touch of reproach in her voice which maddened him. "But I will not ask you to explain. Good-bye," and she turned away without offering her hand.

He sprang forward, then pulled up, and with something between a groan and an oath, sank into a chair. She passed out, closing the door after her. On the bottom of the stairs she found the man sitting with his hands in his pockets, his hat on the back of his head; but he sprang up and removed his hat as she appeared. She made a slight gesture with her hand, and he followed her to the door; there, she turned and, looking at him, calmly said:

"You are a sheriff's officer?" He looked rather surprised.

"Yes, I am, my lady," he admitted. "I suppose his lordship told you?"

"No matter," she said. "Do you know who I am?"

His eyes dropped before her steady gaze, and he looked rather uncertain how to answer.

"I see you do!" she said. "Well, yes, my lady. You see, I get about a good deal," he added, apologetically, "and anybody who is accustomed to seeing much of the upper ten, knows Lady Grace Peyton."

She looked round as he spoke her name, and bit her lip. "Yes, I am Lady Grace Peyton," she said; "and I have come to see Lord Cecil Neville because he is in trouble. I am a very great friend of his."

The man nodded appreciatively. He took her words as meaning that she was engaged to Lord Cecil.

"He is in great trouble, is he not?" "Well, yes, he is," he replied. "That is, he is in just a bit of a hole at present. It's not much of a hole, but he seems as if he couldn't get out of it."

"You have arrested him for debt, have you not?" "Well, yes, I have," he admitted, almost reluctantly. "I suppose he has told you, and it's no use my denying it, my lady, especially if—begging your pardon for the liberty—you are going to help him; and I suppose you are?"

"Yes," she said, quietly. "What is the amount?"

He handed her the paper. "Is that all?"

"All I'm concerned with," he replied, significantly. "I will pay it," she said, after a moment's reflection. "Will you come with me to the bank?"

He hesitated a moment, then put on his hat with a certain amount of emphasis. "Yes, I will! It's not usual, but I'd trust your ladyship to the utmost."

"Walk down the street and beckon the cab to follow, please," she said. "I do not wish Lord Neville to see us together. I do not wish him to know anything of what I have done. Can I trust you?"

"You can, my lady," he said. They drove in silence to the West end until they were just a mile off, and Lady Grace drew a cheque for the amount and handed it to the officer, who took it with unfeigned pleasure.

"I can't tell you now how glad I am you came, Lady Grace," he said. "If ever I've had a disagreeable job, this one of Lord Neville's was one. Most of 'em treat one like dirt, and give a lot of trouble into the bargain. I've met with rough usage sometimes, my lady; but Lord Neville, though he's young and full of go, so to speak, has behaved like a gentleman, and treated me as if I had the feelings of a man. Yes, he's a nobleman, every inch of him, and—I hope you won't laugh, my lady!—but I declare, if I'd had the money, I'd have lent it him myself rather than taken him off. There's the receipt."

She thought a moment, holding the paper in her hand; then she said: "Take it to Lord Neville, and put an end to his anxiety; but, remember your promise, and do not tell him from whom you got the money."

Then she lowered her veil and left him.

He walked back to Clarges Street—almost ran, indeed—and, opening the door in response to Lord Cecil's gloomy "Come in," entered, and pantingly surveyed him with a smile.

"Well!" said Lord Cecil, grimly. "You are agreeably surprised at finding me here still. Most jailbirds would have taken advantage of your absence and flown, would they not?"

"Yes, they would," assented the man, emphatically. "But I spoke the truth when I said you were a real nobleman. And I didn't hurry back because I was afraid. No—I knew you'd wait. You are the right sort, you are, my lord!"

"Thanks," said Lord Cecil, curtly; "and where have you been?"

"Begging your pardon, my lord, that's a secret; but I've been on business, and there it is!" and he laid the discharge on the table.

Lord Cecil took it up indifferently; then, when he had realised its purpose, he started and flushed.

"Why, what does this mean?" he demanded. "It means that the claim is settled, and that you are a free man, my lord," said the officer, warmly; "and if you'll allow me to offer my respectful congratulations and a word of warning—"

"A word of warning?" said Lord Cecil, confusedly. "Yes, my lord. This business—though it's all right in a legal way—has had a curious feature or two about it. I mean that there's been some underhand work going on—Jews, I expect. You see, though the amounts were owing to several persons originally, they've been bought up by someone—someone who's got a grudge against you. Can you guess who it is?"

Lord Cecil shook his head. "I know no one who has any grudge against me," he said, still bewildered. "Very well, my lord, all the more reason that you should keep your eyes open. At any rate, you're clear of 'em now, and I wish you good-day. You won't be sorry to see the back of me, I dare say."

"Stop!" exclaimed Lord Cecil; and the man turned, with his hand on the door. "Someone has paid this money. Who was it?"

The man shook his head. "A friend who wishes to remain unknown, my lord," he said.

Lord Cecil stared at him. "A friend who—Nonsense man! I must know! Who was it—the marquis?"

The man shook his head again. "I'm pledged, my lord," he said. "But it wasn't the marquis—confound him!" he added, under his breath.

"Not the marquis? I know of no one else—Stop!" His face went crimson. "The lady who was here"—he sprang forward and seized the man's arm in a grip like that of a vise—"was it she?"

"I'm pledged, my lord. I've given my word. I have, indeed."

MINISTERS OF GOSPEL PUT TANLAC TO TEST

Well-Known Ministers of the Country Come Out Openly and Fearlessly and Tell What They Know to Be the Truth About the Medicine That Has Helped Them.

RARELY will a minister of the Gospel indorse a proprietary medicine. The preacher's high calling, the influence he commands puts a grave responsibility on his every word. He will not jeopardize his reputation by commending a thing without first assuring himself it is all right. His word carries as much weight in the home, on the street, or in the public prints as in the pulpit.

When ministers of some of the greatest communions in the land endorse Tanlac their words carry conviction. They know what they know to be the truth. They have put Tanlac to the test of personal service and have not found it wanting. The proprietors of Tanlac have received countless testimonials from people in every walk of life, earnestly commending it. Among them are a number from prominent ministers of various churches. A few of these are printed below.

Rev. W. C. Norton is pastor of the Wesley Memorial church of Jacksonville, Fla. He says:—"I suffered from chronic indigestion for years. I seldom slept well and had severe headaches. Since taking Tanlac I feel as well as ever. I did sleep splendidly and eat anything I want. Tanlac has restored my health and I feel it my duty to recommend it."

Rev. A. H. Sykes, pastor of Watkins Park Presbyterian church, Nashville, Tenn., says:—"Mrs. Sykes suffered from stomach and kidney troubles and a nervous breakdown. Tanlac restored her health—she is gaining strength and flesh rapidly—her full restoration is but a question of time."

Rev. E. G. Butler, pastor of Central Baptist church, Muskogee, Okla., says:—"I had attacks of acute indigestion. Results from taking Tanlac have been most satisfactory—I am glad to recommend it as the best medicine I have ever tried."

Rev. F. M. Winburn, Methodist, San Antonio, Tex., says:—"I had no appetite—suffered from weakness and general debility—could not work without quickly tiring. Found Tanlac just what my system needed. I consider Tanlac a good medicine to build up run-down systems."

Rev. R. J. Taylor, pastor Mt. Pleasant Baptist church, Franklin, Tex., says:—"Grippe left me in very bad shape—had indigestion, nervous

In Lofty Ararat. BEAUTIFUL MOUNTAIN IS A LONG-EXTINCT VOLCANO.

It Has Been Sealed, and, Contrary to Tradition, No Proof That Noah's Ark Even Landed There Could Be Discovered.

The recent appeal made by the newly established republic of Ararat for recognition by the United States will be better understood, at least geographically, when it is explained that the region in question is a province of America.

It takes its name from the mountain on which the ark made a landing after the flood—Ararat meaning Noah's mountain.

The whole world, according to the Bible story, was submerged during the period of the Deluge and Ararat's top-most peak was the first dry land to appear above the water, for the simple reason that it was the loftiest—in Armenia, at all events.

As viewed to-day it gives a notion of the depth of the flood, inasmuch as the peak is more than three miles above sea level. It is dome-shaped, and its slopes for 9,000 feet from the top are covered with everlasting snow and great fields of glittering ice.

The climb down must have been rather difficult for Noah, his family and all the animals disembarked from the ark. As for an ascent to the top, it was formerly believed to be impossible. The Armenian monks declared that remains of the Noachian bark still existed on the summit, and that by reason of their sanctity a supernatural influence forbade approach.

Nevertheless, in September, 1829, a bold climber, Dr. Johann Parrot, succeeded in reaching the top of Ararat, and on coming down stated that he had found not even the keel of the ark up there. Since then the feat has been repeated by several other adventurous persons.

Ararat came pretty near to being the most beautiful mountain in the world. It is a long-extinct volcano, standing almost isolated save for a lesser peak, called Little Ararat, which (really part of it) is a cone of exquisite symmetry—an ideal volcano of a type plainly recognizable as an ash-plate formed about an eruptive chimney.

Below, in the valley of Araxes, was the Garden of Eden, according to Armenian tradition. At Marsand, in that neighborhood, was (so say the monks) the burial place of Noah's wife. At Ararut, a village near a great chasm that runs into the heart of the mountain, Noah planted the first vineyard.

A National Flag for Canada.

To those who have not concerned themselves in any special enquiry, it comes as a distinct surprise to know that Canada possesses no authorized distinctive flag; the desire for such has no doubt been to some extent responsible for the improper use on land, of the red ensign which is authorized only for the Mercantile Marine, and of other banners which do not conform to the laws of heraldry.

The Union Jack is the national flag of Canada as of all other parts of His Majesty's Dominions, and every British subject has the right to fly it on British soil.

There is, however, evidence of a growing sentiment in favor of a distinctive flag for Canada, especially in view of the gallant part played by Canadians in the war; this movement is not entirely new, since Lord Strathcona and many others labored to create public sentiment which would lead to the substitution of the Maple Leaf for the "Chinese puzzle" now appearing on the Red Ensign.

"What flag," it has been asked, "will float over Vimy Ridge, which France has given to Canada, if the Union Jack how will one know it means Canada?"

We reproduce in this issue a short poem by Lady Roddick, regarding a proposed flag bearing a single maple leaf on the fly—from another source has come the suggestion that there should be a cluster or circle of leaves to represent the eight provinces.

In suggesting this distinctive flag the last thought of those interested would be to displace the Union Jack emblem of Empire and link between all the great Dominions; their aim is merely to devise and obtain authority for some emblem more fitting than the one vernacularly called the Canadian Ensign.

"Under the broad folds of the Union Jack" said Sir John Macdonald, "we enjoy the most ample liberty to govern ourselves as we please, and at the same time, we participate in the advantage which flow from association with the mightiest Empire the world has ever seen."

"There is nothing," says another eminent Canadian, "that so imbues one with the greatness of the Empire, and which makes us so realize the extent of our kinship throughout the world as the Union Jack; under its folds the humblest British subject who finds himself in need of help in a strange land in no matter from what portion of the Empire he come, or from what race he originates, will find protection."

The Union Jack is endeared to us by the noblest traditions for which our fathers freely shed blood on Canadian soil, it stands for order, justice, peace and progress, security and freedom in every part of the globe, and under its folds our gallant men in France and Flanders were ready to die "to the last man" on behalf of the world's freedom.

Any banner which Canada may adopt would in no way lessen the use of the Union Jack. Since these would appropriately be flown together, and the Canadian Emblem would necessarily bear the Union Jack in its usual place as in the Red Ensign at present in use.—Woman's Century.

War Preparedness.

(Elbert Hubbard.)

War preparedness leads to war. The coast-line between Canada and the United States, from the Saint Lawrence River to Lake Superior, is about two thousand miles.

In the year Eighteen Hundred Twelve, there were forty-six forts, big and little, on the United States side, and about the same number crowned at us from Canada.

At Fort Niagara alone there were at one time six thousand troops. Altogether we had on the Great Lakes over a hundred craft devoted to the art of fighting—this in the interest of peace.

In one little battle we had with our British cousins, on Lake Erie, Commodore Perry, a real youth of twenty-seven, captured six British ships and killed three hundred men. A little before this the British destroyed ten ships for us and killed two hundred Americans.

After the War of Eighteen Hundred Twelve was ended and peace was declared, both sides got busy, very busy, strengthening the forts and building warships. At Watertown, Conneaut, Erie, Port Huron, Cleveland and Detroit were shipyards where hundreds of men were working night and day building warships. Not that war was imminent, but the statesmen of the time said there was nothing like "preparedness." In Canada things were much the same, and there were threats that Perry's famous message, "We have met the enemy and they are ours," would soon be reversed.

Suddenly, but very quietly, two men in Washington got together and made an agreement. One man was acting Secretary of State, Richard Rush of Philadelphia; the other was Charles Bagot, Minister to the United States from England. Rush was of Quaker parentage, and naturally was opposed to the business of war.

Bagot had seen enough of fighting to know it was neither glorious nor amusing. Rush wrote out a memorandum of agreement which he headed "An Arrangement." The document is written on one side of a single sheet of paper and is dated April Twenty-eight, Eighteen Hundred Seventeen. Here is a copy:

- "1. The Naval Forces henceforth to be maintained upon the Great Lakes shall be confined to the following vessels on each side:
- "2. On Lake Ontario one vessel, not to exceed one hundred tons burden, carrying not more than twenty men and one eighteen-pound cannon.
- "3. On the Upper Lakes two vessels, of same burden, and armed in a like way.
- "4. On Lake Champlain one vessel of like size and armament.
- "5. All other armed vessels to be at once dismantled, and no other vessel of war shall be built or armed along the Saint Lawrence River or on the Great Lakes."

This agreement has been religiously kept. Its effect was to stop work at once on the fortifications, and cause disarmament along the Great Lakes. So far as we know, the agreement will continue for all time. Both parties are satisfied, and in fact so naturally has it been accepted, very few people know of its existence.

Here is an example that our friends in Europe might well ponder over. If those forts on the frontier had been maintained, and had the ships of war continued to sail up and down, it would have been a positive miracle if there had not been fighting.

Probably they would have forced us into a war with England before this. We have had several disputes with Canada when it would have been very easy to open hostilities, if the tools had been handy. Men who tote pistols find reasons for using them, and the nations that have big armies will find excuse for testing their efficiency.

If two countries can make an "arrangement" limiting the extent of armament, and this arrangement holds for a hundred years, can not nine countries do the same? Then all that is needed is a few soldiers to do police duty.

Nations can do as well as be savages, any more than individuals.

Frozen Lake in Africa.

It is a wonderful lake far off in the heart of Africa, where the sun blazes sublimely and causes the water to evaporate so quickly that an outlet is considered by nature to be a superfluity—a lake like our Great Salt Lake, where the inflowing waters have unloaded common salt for so long a period that the saturation point has been passed.

But there is a difference in the material deposited. The soil through which the African steamers flow is different from ours, and hence, instead of finding common salt or sodium chloride in the Magadi Lake, a chemical test shows us the presence of sodium carbonate (kitchen soda). Moreover, the sodium carbonate is crystallized into a solid mass—or in other words, is frozen.

Different substances solidify or freeze at different temperatures. Think of a lake sixteen miles long and four miles wide, frozen under the torrid glare of the African sun. Wonderful, isn't it—and yet, absolutely true.

It is a wild, uncivilized country in which this lake is located. Here and there may be seen the three-toed footprints of a stray rhinoceros that has labored through the alkaline soil. The country is being improved, however. The lake is in British East Africa, 252 miles west of Mombassa.—Popular Science.

Uses of Sea Weeds.

A good many of us think of sea weeds as perfectly useless ocean growths, somewhat like our garden weeds. As a matter of fact, sea weeds have many, many uses. They furnish food for the fish, the same as grass and herbage do for our cattle and sheep. And many of the smaller fish build their homes—almost like our birds—in the floating island of seaweed. They also keep the water pure.

Sea weed of a certain kind used to be much in demand, as it contained an alkali used in the manufacture of soap, but this is now obtained from other sources.

Sea weeds are used by farmers along the coast for fertilizer, and in the fall it is interesting to see them gathering it, often driving their teams far out into the water, the horses plunging back with a load of the glistening stuff. If you have been in New England you have probably noticed this yourself.

Prohibition's Service to Music.

"The passing of liquor is going to prove an immense impetus to music in this country, not only artistically, but commercially." This confident and somewhat surprising assertion is made editorially by the Washington Herald, which goes on to say:

"This impetus will reflect itself in a greater patronage of the concert stage, more pupils for the music-teacher, in the larger sale of musical instruments and more employment to professional musicians at an increased wage."

It is not just for the reason that people will have more money to spend for music and music-making devices, but it is, in fact, that those of us who used to use alcoholic beverages in one form or another to get away from the material of our every-day life, are going to use music to a degree for the same purpose.

"One of the musical publications prophesies that next year will find twenty-five-piece orchestras in many of the big hotels where but eight or ten men are now employed."

"Many of the big cities now have symphony orchestras of their own that have not had them before."

"Music is one means by which we can forget the material, for a time at least, but without intoxication as in the case of booze."

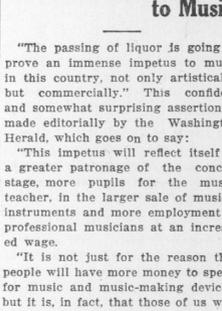

Bandman Entertained.

Charles Horwood, bandmaster of No. 2 S. A. LAST NIGHT'S DANCE.

The dance held last night at the C.C.C. Hall proved a great success. The band, under Capt. Bulley, rendered a splendid programme of music. During the night refreshments were served by the Committee, and the large gathering present thoroughly enjoyed itself.

The Menace of Speeding.

The alarmingly large number of automobile accidents that have occurred lately points insistently to one fact: the necessity of the Police Force giving closer attention to the elimination of speeding and disregard for the laws of the road and protection of the pedestrian. Many motorists—not all, certainly—seem to think that the roads are primarily for their own convenience, and act up to that assumption. That their assumption is wrong and contrary to law, moral and all other, is of course obvious to anyone with any common sense. The pedestrian has, and always has had, the first right to the public highway, and the action of many motorists in appropriating it to themselves for their own pleasure, must receive the stern condemnation of every right-thinking citizen. There is a law that prohibits automobiles to run at a greater speed than ten miles an hour, while within the city limits, but that law is worthless unless the police force be provided with the necessary equipment with which to know, and to be able to prove, that the motorist was exceeding the limit. For that reason, if for no other, every member of the city force should be provided with a stop-watch, and the beneficial result of that would be the speedy elimination of speeding and all that must necessarily result therefrom.

St. Patrick's Collection Amounts to $10,500.

TO BUILD A NEW PARISH HALL FOR MEETINGS, ETC.

The men of St. Patrick's Parish met last evening to consider the raising of an amount of money with which to erect a new parish hall in which meetings may be held, and other purposes served. His Grace the Archbishop, attended by Rev. Dr. Greene, was the speaker of the evening, and pointed out the object of the meeting. New Convent schools, said he, were required if crowding was to be obviated. Three pressing needs must be satisfied: an academy in connection with the Mercy Convent, which is primarily a matter for the Cathedral Parish; a school in the centre of the town, a site for which is now being negotiated and a school for the girls of St. Patrick's. The Nuns and Brothers are giving the teaching and the lady must give the institutions. In conclusion the Archbishop announced that a non-Catholic citizen had presented him with $10,000 to use as he felt best, and he would therefore have great pleasure in donating $2,000 toward the fund. The subscription cards were then taken up and found to contain the encouraging amount of $10,500.

Shipping Notes.

The schooner Annie M. K. is loading general cargo at Job Brothers and Company's wharf for Bay de Verde. S. S. Adolph sailed for New York direct at 4 o'clock this morning. The banking schooner Eugene Bresser has arrived at Job Brothers and Company from the Grand Banks for salt. S. S. Rosalind left Halifax at 8 o'clock yesterday and is due here to-morrow morning. S. S. Graciana sails this afternoon for Liverpool.

ENJOYABLE BAND CONCERT.—A most enjoyable band concert was held in Bannerman Park last night by the C. L. B. Band, under the direction of Lieut. A. Morris. The programme was an excellent one and was splendidly rendered. Many people were present.

Church Lads' Brigade.

Last week Lieut. Col. R. F. Goodridge, C.L.B., was out of town with his two boys, Geoffrey and Anthony—here from school for a few weeks—and Capt. J. A. Winter, Adjutant, in consequence of the Colonel's absence, was a very busy man, with the Prince's reception, etc. However Capt. Alec. did good work, and got through his job O.K. with the help of Capt. Avalon Goodridge, who was Acting Adj. and was a tower of strength under the circumstances. The battalion has been very busy preparing for the Orphanage Garden Party Sports to-day at the Shannon Munn Orphans' Farm, formerly Steer's farm, Long Pond, near Smithville. The Colonel will head a battalion in person marching out at 2 p.m., when every C.L.B. man must parade in kit—no leave given—brass and bugle band included, also ambulance, quartermasters and paymasters. The Brigade will march past at 3 p.m. sharp and then give an exhibition of drill, followed by a sports programme consisting of football fives, kit races, road race, race for ponies with jockeys under 18 years old, quarter mile, half mile and one mile races, boat race, relay race, etc., altogether a three hours' sports show. Prize medals and a silver cup have been specially imported for the events. A feature will be the side shows, kindly loaned by the Rev. John Stead, Wabana, Bell Island. These will be "Hitting the Kaiser," "Knocking the Dolls" and "Bombing the Dutchman." The lads of the Church Institute will have charge of these side shows. The Brigade has some 15 tents erected on the grounds and two dancing platforms lit up with electric lights, so that with Lieut. Morris and his C.L.B. musical combine, the youth and beauty can enjoy "the dance" by the side of Burton's Pond in the moonlight till their wants are satisfied. Mr. Farndale of the Royal Stores, has an ocean of lemonade, ice cream and cigars to sell—and his booth will be near the dancers. Tea will be served as usual, also special tables for 5 o'clock tea, for those who may prefer the same. The entertainment will be on Allandale Road, and all motor cars and carriages will only be allowed to go in via Rennie's Mill and Carpassan Roads, returning via Allandale Road, and the Inspector General is sending police to control the traffic in order to prevent accidents. We congratulate the General Committee of ladies and gentlemen of the 1919 Garden Party in organizing for the event this year in using the Church Lads' Brigade, Church Institute, St. Mary's Club, Llewellyn Club, C.M.B.C. and other parish associations, uniting them all for one great and laudable object in helping to further the interests of the Garden Party for the care of the fatherless, and we hope the day will be a banner one and the public will attend in large numbers.—Q.

A Name for the War.

Editor, Evening Telegram. Dear Sir,—Now that the late war is over (at least we hope it is) and the history (or histories) of it will be written, what will be the name of the greatest war that has ever been fought on the earth? I am aware that several names have already been given it, and in fact that is the whole trouble. There are so many names that one does not know just which one to use. This is not good enough, for there should be some name by which the late war will be ever known, and to refer to which will leave no doubt as to which war is meant. If one history refers to it as "The Great War," another as "The World War," and another as "The Five Year War," and another something else, there is bound to be confusion. We must remember that there have been a great many other wars and this one, above all others, should bear some distinctive and original name.

Yours truly, CURIOUS. Aug. 20, 1919.

That Road Again.

We are informed that the Municipal Council has not desisted from depositing that yellow soil on the portion of Waterford Bridge Road from the Tannery into Sme's Bridge, and that now the dust there is appalling. Already the stones, most of them as big as eggs, are uppermost, and make walking a horror and a nightmare. The dust there is something horrible to see—and breathe—and as the automobiles sweep past, the sentiments of the unfortunate pedestrian, as he is forced to continue in blindingly thick clouds of yellow dust are too forceful for expression in print. The action of the Council is a mystery to everyone, and the motive behind it—for there must be a motive for such an insane piece of diabolical, fiendish action—is hidden. One question is being asked by the many who are so unlucky as to have to pass over the place in point: Could not the Council secure gravel or anything instead of yellow soil to place on the road? That is a question that is being insistently asked, and an answer must be forthcoming.

An Appreciation.

In the annals of Belvidere Orphanage August 18th will ever be a Red Letter day, as affording the greatest treat its little ones have yet received. The day's proceedings were planned and most successfully carried through by Sir Michael and Lady Cashin, with whom originated the idea of giving the children a Surprise Picnic. The little ones were all in readiness before the appointed time, 2 o'clock, and when the toot of the first motor was heard, and one after another of seventeen cars rolled down the avenue, the children became joyously excited. Soon a happy band, numbering 130, was wending its way to Bowring Park. In the picturesque and delightful surroundings there, over an hour of indescribable enjoyment was spent, exploring its nooks and admiring its manifold beauties; and the climax was reached when the boats were ready to give one and all a row on the pond. Smithville was then the objective, and the route thither took in Water Street and Quiddi Vidi Lake, the cars following in procession order at a trotting much attention. On arriving at Smithville a sumptuous repast was prepared. When summoned to the dining-room one can better imagine than describe the delighted surprise of the children. Everything that could tempt the appetite was bountifully provided and received its full meed of justice. Their kind hostess, Lady Cashin, was unremitting in her attention to her little guests, ably assisted by Mrs. Balfour, Misses Helen Reid, Mary Ryan and Margaret Berns. After tea, Sir Michael Cashin and Mr. P. Moore took charge of the games; the latter also contributing to the amusement of the children by singing some comic songs. Before leaving the grounds, each child enjoyed an ice-cream, and was presented with a well-filled bag of fruit and candy. The children desire to express their warmest thanks to Sir Michael and Lady Cashin, and to the many kind friends who contributed in any way to their enjoyment. Appended is the list of those who kindly provided motors: Sir Michael Cashin (2), Hon. Sir Edgar Bowring, Sir John Crosbie, Hon. T. Cook, Hon. P. Templeman, Hon. A. E. Hickman, Messrs. H. D. Reid, R. G. Reid, P. F. Moore, C. Fox, T. Smythe, R. Coleman, M. A. Duffy, G. Kearney, Misses Mary Ryan and Margaret Berns.

S. A. Congress.

Commissioner W. J. Richards, Territorial Leader of the Salvation Army Forces in Canada East and Newfoundland, who is conducting the Annual Congress in St. John's, is a passenger by to-day's express. Accompanying him are Lieut. Colonel Chamberlain, Men's Social Secretary, and Major Crichton, Divisional Commander of Halifax Division. Prior to the great welcome meeting that takes place at No. 1 Citadel, New Gower Street, on Saturday evening, at 8 p.m., the Commissioner and Staff will be visiting Bell Island, to conduct the official opening of a new Superior School and Junior Hall. The Annual city gathering that takes place in the Methodist College Hall on Sunday next, will be of a very interesting character, as the Commissioner who has just returned from a visit to France, Belgium, and Germany, will give a Lecture on "The World Wide Salvation Army." His Excellency the Governor, supported by a number of leading gentlemen in the city, will be present on this occasion. Salvationists and friends are full of expectancy for a divine outpouring of God's spirit at these special gatherings.

At the Majestic.

Adolph Zukor presents Pauline Frederick in the great screen production, "La Tosca," at the Majestic Theatre this evening, when Pauline will have an opportunity of seeing the wonderful grand opera that has been admired all the world over. One of the most popular of all operas is "La Tosca." It tells the story of the young singer who avenges her lover's torture and the insults to herself, by stabbing old Baron Scarpia, the chief of police. Then, finding that her lover has actually been shot in spite of a promise to the contrary, jumps to her death from a parapet of the Castle of St. Angelo, Rome. Here is an opportunity of seeing a picture that has caused such comment and stir in the dramatic world, and been featured by such actresses as Sarah Bernhardt, Alice Howells, in a comedy, will also be seen.

Express Passengers.

The following passengers landed at Port aux Basques yesterday from the Gloucester and are on the incoming express—J. Collier, J. Miets, J. C. O'Brien, Mrs. W. Patridge, A. W. Grant, Mrs. J. Collier, Mrs. G. King, J. Seymour, C. B. Turner, F. Remo, Rev. W. H. McCane, Mrs. W. Hann, Mrs. W. Palmer, C. C. Pratt, R. Hayes, G. McDonald, Miss S. Strickland, E. O'Brien, Mrs. (Rev.) Admas, J. Murdoch, Miss A. Shoute, Miss D. Pilkington, R. Shonson, R. Rose, G. M. and Mrs. Forey, A. and Mrs. Holman.

C. C. C. for Camp.

The pioneer squad of the C.C.C. under Capt. Clare and Sergt. Major G. Galway left for Mannuels by the morning's train to make arrangements for the Corps' Camp. They will be followed by the main detachment tomorrow morning. Camp orders issued last night announce that Capt. J. J. O'Grady has been appointed Camp Commandant and Capt. Leo Murphy as Adjutant. The Bell Island detachment will be in command of Lieut. J. Murphy and will report to the camp on Friday morning. The officers will be at home on Sunday afternoon, tea will be served at the marquee, and all visitors from the city will be welcome. A detachment of the Boy Scouts, under Asst. Scoutmaster R. Furlong, will also go out with the Cadets, and will encamp in the same area.

Railway Engine Leaves Track.

Shunting Engine No. 115 left the track on the eastern side of the Trestle Bridge last evening, and consequently the passengers of the incoming train from Carbonear were obliged to disembark near Browning's Bridge and continue east by the Street Car. A wrecking train crew was immediately put on the engine and early this morning the work was finished and the train moved in. None were injured in the accident.

Domestic a Week Missing.

Allie Brown, the 20 year old domestic of Mrs. Sinnott, of Killbride Road, has been missing now since Regatta Day. Just one week ago to-day. Leaving her home then, she has not been seen or heard of since. A few days before Regatta Day she wandered off, also, and was absent for two days and nights, being found, eventually, in a grove of woods nearby. The girl is evidently demented. She came from Fogo. We understand that the authorities have not been informed of the non-arrival of the girl, and no search party has been sent out. Human life is too valuable to be permitted to be lost thus carelessly, and enquiry should be instantly made.

St. Andrew's Outing.

The St. Andrew's Society outing party will leave town at 2 p.m. to-day for Bay Bulls. The C.C.C. and Highlander Bands have been engaged, and a highly successful day is anticipated. Return will be made at 11 o'clock by special train.

Paper Town Items.

The great war veterans are now getting down to business and they intend to raise at least 350 members soon. There is quite a lot of shipping now going on between Grand Falls and Botwood. A large number of men are engaged in this work. Improvements have been made in the athletic grounds and a large space has been provided for the games. The big product department is booming and the production of several lines of commodities due to the enterprise of our skilled men and women have been pronounced better than the best. The returned soldiers wish to thank the A.N.D. Company for their signal kindness and open hearted generosity in replacing them in their old positions. Mr. Jones, the previous manager and friend whose popularity being well known to all, is missed by the boys who have returned. A new manœuvre parlour will be opened at Grand Falls in the near future. It is expected. The parlour will also carry a full equipment for the treatment of rheumatism by electricity.—Com.

DISEASED GUMS AND TEETH. Of all the poison taken into the blood, the germs and pus contributed by the diseased gums and teeth are the most destructive to the human system. If every red blood cell is forced to fight against numbers of germs to the cell, the blood cannot attend to the building up of the body, and it allowed to continue the system is bound to break down and eventually you are an invalid. Kidney, stomach, heart trouble, rheumatism and many other diseases are brought on by diseased gums and teeth. EXAMINATION FREE.

THE PRINCE AT HALIFAX.

HALIFAX, Aug. 18. Halifax gave the Prince of Wales a great popular welcome to-day on the occasion of his first official visit to all parts of the province and welcomed by the public holiday which had been proclaimed, through the gaily bedecked streets and the Prince received a continuous ovation from the time he stepped ashore at ten o'clock this morning until nine o'clock this evening when he boarded the launch which took him to the Renown which day in the stream waiting to start him on the third leg of his Canadian tour. In the interval His Royal Highness had received and replied to six addresses, had visited two military hospitals and the devastated area of Halifax, had inspected and chatted with hundreds of veterans of the great war, had inspected various guards of honor, had laid two corner stones, had been luncheoned and dined and had taken a leading part in a great popular reception for which no invitations had been issued. In the streets to-night the crowds are still cheering for the Prince as indicating the place he now holds in their hearts as a result of his brief, though arduous day among them. An international aspect was lent the celebration in Halifax by the presence in port for the festivities of the Italian battleship Conte Di Cavour and the French sloop Dis and Somme. Officers from these warships joined the Royal Party and participated in their programme. Premier Borden was unable to take part owing to a sprained ankle. The weather was threatening at time but no rain fell. The Prince sailed at ten for Charlottetown.

ADVANCING AGAINST SOVIETS.

HELSINGFORS, Aug. 18. The non-Bolshevik army of the Northwest, while the British are bombarding Kronstadt, has begun an advance against the positions of the Soviet forces south-west of the city. The advance was preceded by a bombardment.

BOLSHEVIK WARSHIPS SUNK.

HELSINGFORS, Aug. 18. The Bolshevik battleship Andrea Pervosvan, the battle cruiser Petropavlovsk, a transport and guardship are reported to-day to have been sunk during an engagement with the British fleet in the Gulf of Finland on Sunday. The British were said to have lost three motor boats and to have had eight officers and three men killed.

REPORT CONFIRMED.

LONDON, Aug. 19. The British Admiralty officially confirmed to-day the sinking on Monday morning of the Bolshevik battle cruiser Petropavlovsk, and a Bolshevik destroyer by British naval forces during an engagement in the Gulf of Finland. A Russian cruiser probably was seriously damaged also. It was announced at Stockholm Tuesday that the reinforced British fleet which has been engaged with Bolshevik war vessels is concentrated against Kronstadt, the naval port of Petrograd, a despatch from Helsingfors says. The city of Kronstadt it is said is burning.

WILL STAND BY OLD ARMISTICE.

PARIS, Aug. 18. Budapest newspapers state the Roumanians have presented new armistice conditions to the Hungarian Government forwarded to them through the Allies, according to a despatch from the Hungarian capital. The Hungarian Government has declined to accept any modification of the terms of the armistice of November last, the despatch adds.

ARCHDUKE JOSEPH WILLING TO RESIGN.

BUDAPEST, Aug. 16. Archduke Joseph agreed to-day to resign his place as temporary dictator of the Hungarian Government because of the social objection to him, but consented to remain at the head of the state for the time being, when peasant leaders and members of the reactionary party protested. These were said to have declared they would cause the food blockade against Budapest to be reestablished unless the Archduke continued to act as regent.

PLAGIARISED AND OTHERWISE.

LAST NIGHT'S GAME.

What promised to be a very interesting game last night became a washout after the third inning, when the Cubs piled on the agony and vanquished the "Irish youngsters" by a score of 16 to 6. Joe Murphy was slabsman for the Cubs with Claude on first base. Murr is getting ready for the Grand Falls' invasion, but he does not seem to have the hop on the ball this season that he did last when he did such good work against the "paper-men" at Grand Falls in the second and third games there. However he has a fortnight ahead of him and will probably improve with consistent practice. The only heavy hitting was O'Leary's three banger.

TO-MORROW NIGHT'S GAME.

To-morrow night will witness the last game of the League series when the Wanderers will clash with the Red Lions. The Hartnett crew will have on their very strongest lineup, while Hiltz is taking no chances whatever, for a win to-morrow night gives them the championship—their first since the inception of the League seven years ago. Should they be defeated, however, it will necessitate a play-off with the Cubs. The contest to-morrow night should therefore attract the largest gathering of fans for the season.

TALE OF THE ANCIENT MANAGER.

It is an ancient manager. His team is in the rear; He holds me with his skinny hand, I cannot choose but hear. Then he began, that manager To spin a tale of woe; He holds me with his glittering eye And will not let me go. The catcher has the charley-horse. Our pitcher's got the gripe; The second baseman pulled up lame, The shortstop has the pip. The boys have lost their batting eyes. The team is in a slump; His stars are always being canned For bawling out the ump. He doesn't care to allibi Or cover up mistakes; But he's the one and only guy That never gets the breaks. "Lay off! Thou ancient manager." I cried, "and let me be; Go tell thy tales to the marines And do not pick on me." "I've heard those yarns a hundred times About your pesky crew; So, take a tumble to yourself And dig up something new."

Origin of the Cameronians.

This regiment derives its title from the persecuted sect known as the Cameronians, who amid the religious turmoil and bitterness of the later Stuart period, refused to be coerced into any surrender of their civil and religious liberties. A body of them were the self-appointed guards of the "Lords of the Convention," and it was from such a source that, acting on an order of the Scottish Parliament, James, Earl of Angus, on April 19, 1689, enrolled 1,200 men into a regiment, to be named the Cameronian Regiment of Foot, and it was embodied at Douglas on May 12, 1689. The first Lieutenant-Colonel was the famous Cleland, who had driven Dundee, hated by the Cameronians, out of the Convention. They were not present at Killcrankie, but had been sent to garrison Dundee. Brigadier-General Cannon, who succeeded Dundee, was urged to push on boldly and destroy the Cameronians, who, it was emphasized, were protected by no ramparts, they had little ammunition, and the whole of the troops would be caught like mice in a trap. The following day, August 21, the Highlanders made their attack. Cleland had turned the church and the Marquis of Athol's house into fortresses. The enemy, their numbers greatly superior, had gained the greater part of the town, but around the fortress the fiercest of the fighting raged. Cannon had 5,000 men, Cleland 1,200. In the surrounding houses the Highlanders kept up an incessant fire, but the Cameronians rushed from cover, locked the doors, and fired the houses. Cleland and his second in command being shot dead while encouraging their men. Half the town was blazing. The incessant roar of the guns was mingled with the piercing cries of the men who perished in the flames. The struggle raged for hours, by which time the Cameronians were reduced almost to their last flask of powder. Then they observed that the fury of the assault had begun to fall, disorder visibly spread, and whole bodies began to fall back and march off to the hills, while in vain their General ordered them to return to the attack. Then the drums struck up; the victorious Covenanters raised with one voice a psalm of triumph and thanksgiving and waved their colours—that day unfurled for the first time in the face of an enemy, but which have since been proudly borne in every quarter of the world. The Cameronians, being now a rifle corps, have no colours, and the badges and honours formerly borne on the colours are now displayed collectively on the shako-plate and waist-plate. The old colours of the regiment hang in Glasgow Cathedral.

Emigrants From Germany.

Argentina is not the only country on this side of the Atlantic where inquiry has been made about the religious of Germans who desire to avoid heavy taxes by emigration. Newspapers in Buenos Aires say that the German Commission sent to that city is "studying the possibility of accommodating 5,000,000 immigrants." This was the number mentioned in an inquiry addressed to the Mexican Government. Mexico's Secretary of the Interior replied—as he said in a message to Commercial Agent Alariste, at Chicago—that "such immigration would be vigorously curtailed," and that Mexico's Congress would at once be asked to pass a bill "enabling us to check this influx."

"Vamps" of Filmland.

American slang has sent an old word to us across the waters in a new disguise—the expression "vamp." "Vamp" is a contraction for "vampire"—and the vampire, as everyone knows who has been fascinated by Bram Stoker's uncanny novel "Dracula," is an unpleasant creature which drinks the blood of human beings. "Vampire," however, in the United States is now used to indicate a siren who attracts men from their lawful wives or lures them to their doom. It is strange how quickly a new word gains momentum, for a picture containing a story of this type is called a "vamp" film and a Kinema actress who plays such parts is known as a "vamp"—one of them has even been described as "America's Premier Vamp Actress." "Vamp" is also a verb, for a wife

Her Miserable Marriage Day.

A Chinese girl's marriage day is about the most miserable day in her whole life. For days beforehand she has been in the hands of "dressers," who soak her face in hot water, apply rouge and powder, and dress her hair elaborately. Early on the wedding morning she is arrayed in heavy satin robes, richly embroidered, and a heavy crown and tinsel veil is placed on her head. She cannot partake of food, but must fast all day long. Everybody is at liberty to tease her, examine her clothes, and generally test her temper. There are clashing of cymbals, playing, singing, and much talking, so that the poor child is quite worn out at the end of the day. To all this tiresome clamour is added the fact that the bride has never seen her husband! Of late years a number of progressive young women in China have formed a club the members of which are pledged to commit suicide rather than marry a man of whom they know nothing. About one hundred young women have actually fulfilled this pledge. This is carrying out the kari-kari business with a vengeance. Mrs. Pankhurst and her energetic daughters will have missed their vocation if they do not start a Suffragette Union in the "Flowery Kingdom."

Protecting the Pedestrian.

The question of protecting pedestrians and traffic generally from the reckless motorist is still awaiting a formula. Speed limits solve the problem in theory, but the reckless driver is liable to ignore the prescribed limit, or else to observe it without otherwise abating his recklessness. This being so, it is interesting to note that Connecticut, following the example of England, has abolished all statutory speed limits for motorists, and guardians of the law in that State will confine their attention to the reckless fraternity and incompetent drivers, without the necessity of tackling a problem of higher mathematics to establish the rate of speed of the guilty

MIND READERS I HAVE MET.
Are you a mind reader? Can you tell exactly what people are thinking? Can you go deeper and tell exactly what they feel? You may call that a foolish question, but I'm not so sure. For I know a great many people who do have those powers. At least, I suppose they do—from the things they say. Otherwise they would have absolutely no reason for saying them. And of course that could not be.

She Diagnoses Mrs. A.'s Case.
The variety of thing which I am especially thinking of is this: "We invited Mrs. A. to go with us on that auto trip but she said she didn't dare undertake it. You know it would really have done her good, but she's always afraid of overtaxing herself. I haven't a doubt that's half the trouble with her—that she thinks so much about what she can and can't do."

(Of course, the speaker must have been not only a mind reader but a very clever diagnostician of nervous troubles to have no doubts on such a delicate matter as that.)

She Sets Mrs. B. Down As Lazy.
Again: "If Mrs. B. didn't spend so much for help she could have an automobile and I know that would do her a great deal more good. Of course, she says she simply isn't strong enough to do the heavy work in that house but I think she's inclined to be lazy."

(Of course the speaker must have been miraculously endowed to be able to estimate exactly how weary the sweeping and washing and ironing and stair-trudging—which she, with her powerful physique, finds as nothing—leaves this woman.)

"I've been an invalid ten years," writes a letter friend, "and I cannot go away from home without being in bed and so miserable for days afterward that my whole family have to wait on me. So I stay at home, preferred to be a help to my family and avoid the suffering. I've had so many critical things said of me and sly looks one could easily interpret as meaning, 'You could go if you would.' I've even heard them say, 'Oh, I never give up. I just keep on going if I am sick.' But I know they haven't a bit more grit than many a person that has to give up."

The Most Expert Physician I Ever Met.
—Another case of the person who apparently has some miraculous method of judging other's mental and nervous and physical conditions—a power which the most expert physician well might envy.

If grit and strength of will could be measured and weighed, I wonder if we would not sometimes find that the person who seems to do very little does far more than the one who seems to do much.

THE CHANGE.
When Egbert Oswald Tomkinson was just a little lad he used to do a lot of things the neighbors thought was bad; He broke full many a window pane and ran away from school. And once he stole a neighbor's pie that she'd put out to cool.

His parents said they couldn't do a single thing with him. They'd threaten him with punishment and tortures dire and grim. But Egbert was a wilful boy in search of boyish fun. Who never thought of damage till the damage had been done.

The neighbor's sadly shook their heads whenever he ran wild. And vowed they'd never see before so terrible a child. His brain was always thinking up new mischief he could do. And mothers called their darlings in when Egbert came in view.

But that was many years ago and Egbert now is grown. He has earned a lot of money and his fame is widely known. The papers often print his name with adjectives of praise. And the neighbors now recall with glee his clever childish ways.

DUMB ANIMALS.

I contemplate the poor dumb creatures, whose lives are shy of pleasant features. They are not learned, they are not clever; they eat and drink and sleep forever, and have no sane and high ambition to reach a loftier condition. Their hopeless state I can't help seeing; I'm glad I am a human being. I'm glad I am a human critter, though life is often hard and bitter, though gladness wanes and sorrow waxes. Though troubles come and hopes are phoney, I'd hate to be a Shetland pony. Though I am deaf and growing deaf, I'd hate to be a Hereford heifer. And though a gloomy weird I'm dreering, I'm glad I am a human being. We long for happiness unbroken; that sort of wish is often spoken; but if life handed us no biters, we'd be just like the poor dumb critters, which have no dreams of high endeavor, but eat and sleep and drink forever. I have my cares, I'm doubting, fearing, I'm stung by merchants profiteering; and though from griefs I'm always fleeing, I'm glad I am a human being.

New Relief For Constipation,
 "LES FRUITS"

Physicians agree that with the modern habits of living, constipation is likely to be always with us. They also agree that the constant use of any drug for the relief of constipation is exceedingly unwise—unwise for two reasons. First, a drug constantly used loses its effect and requires a constantly increased dose. Second, because the constant use of any drug is bad anyway.

So the cry is constantly going up from the constipated, "What can we do?" It will be interesting to a great many to know that an answer has been found in the re-discovery of a method which was used with great success by our Forefathers, and in Arabia far back in the twelfth century. The food is called "Les Fruits" because it is composed entirely of figs, dates, prunes, raisins and the leaves of each with the substitution of the Alexandra leaf for the raisin leaf. The taste is pleasant, if not to say delicious, and the effect is exceedingly satisfactory. Try it and be convinced.

A School System Needed.

Since the article subjoined was published, the St. John's papers give hint of a movement for union schools, amongst the leaders of the Church of England and Methodist and we presume other Protestant bodies that has taken the name of Inter-Denominational Schools. We have not yet seen any clear outline of the features of the proposed change, but we hail it as a sure indication that the establishment of union schools as respects these bodies is only a matter of a brief time, and that we can all hope to see such soon in vigorous operation on a broad practical basis. The things have taken a sudden leap ahead, and our article may be worthy of perusal as a text for reflection.

Just before the Great War broke out this paper purposed writing an article or series of them on Denominational Education. These remarks were deferred as we thought the time opportune for the discussion of the subject till peace should once more be restored. Now that after a longer lapse of time than most of us contemplated, we have been blessed with the gift of an honorable and we hope permanent return to the paths of peace, the question of providing the young with an education that will fit them to discharge their duties as citizens, and to place themselves as individuals and as citizens abreast of the times—always a live one has become more insistent for a proper solution than ever, and more impossible to be downed, and an inquiry into the nature of the system that will furnish the best results more hopeful of a calm dispassionate consideration and the adoption of the best more certain of accomplishment.

We have not the time, nor should there be much need to enlarge on the fact that the union school is a necessity amongst the Protestant population, especially in the outports, if their children are to get the education that will fit them to take their place abreast of the youth of other lands. The war has brought us to face that fact. Nor have we time to do more than express our sense of appreciation of the very great part that the clergy of all the churches have taken in the educational field in Newfoundland, when the lay element as a whole, was unable and perhaps not over-anxious. The lay element is yearly becoming more fitted to undertake the work; but there is great room in our denominational system for the counsel and other assistance of the clerical element that can fill so worthy a role as fellow-citizens.—Hr. Grace Standa.

From Caproni Bombers

To Passenger-Carrying Capronis. Of the various large machines employed during the war for long-distance bombing, the Caproni biplane and triplane types appear the most adaptable to civilian flying. Indeed, the Caproni biplanes and triplanes are already beginning to appear in their peace dress, which means with a suitable closed-in body and seating accommodations for the passengers and pilots.

A converted Caproni triplane is reported to be fitted with seating accommodations for 18 passengers, inside the cabin, and four above in a special compartment which forms the roof of said cabin. The machine is equipped with three engines, two of which drive tractor screws and one a propeller, making something like 1,200 horse-power in all. The seats in the cabin are arranged along the sides, so that the passengers sit facing each other. The windows are of non-breakable glass. Electric lights and other conveniences are included.

A Caproni biplane recently flew from Villacoublay, France, to the Henley Air-drome, near London, with a number of passengers. This biplane has been remodeled for passenger service and its closed-in body accommodates eight passengers, while three seats are provided outside for the pilots. The machine carries three engines, which generate some 800 horse-power.

The largest Caproni, however, is a triplane with a passenger-carrying capacity of 30. It has a total wing spread of 96 feet 10 inches, and an overall length of 49 feet 2 inches. It measures 25 feet 8 inches in height. The weight, fully loaded, is about 25,000 pounds; empty, the weight is about 14,000.

The motive power consists of five Isotta, Fraschini six-cylinder engines of 260 horse-power each. Two engines drive tractor propellers. The speed of the triplane is about 105 miles an hour. Most interesting of all, however, is the fact that this triplane has a double-decked cabin for accommodating the passengers. The passengers are seated side-by-side on the upper deck, while the lower deck contains, besides accommodations for 22 passengers, a toilet room and a small space where drinks, sandwiches, and other refreshments and food are served. The upper compartment has seating accommodations for eight persons, and is used as a smoking room.—Scientific American.

The Eugenic Marriage.

The new Norwegian marriage law came into force on January 1st, 1919. It may not represent the unadulterated eugenic ideal, but it is so great a step towards it as to be almost revolutionary. It contains eighty-one sections, but the following are some of the salient points: A man under 29 and a woman under 18 may not marry without the consent of the authorities. Birth and baptism certificates must be produced before the bans are published. Under certain conditions one or both of the contracting parties may be required to show that they have not been insane. Both must declare in writing that they are not suffering from epilepsy, leprosy, syphilis, or other venereal disease in an infectious form. In the other alternative the subject of any of these diseases must prove that the other party to the marriage contract is cognizant of the fact, and that both parties have been instructed by a doctor as to the dangers of the disease in question. The doctor concerned is not to be tied by professional secrecy and is bound to interfere if he knows that any one of these diseases is being concealed by either side. A written declaration must also be made by the candidates for marriage as to previous marriages and to children born to them out of wedlock. The marriage may be nullified if it is subsequently proved that insanity or any of the above diseases have been concealed, or if an incurable morbid condition, incompatible with married life, exists. Dissolution of the marriage may also be claimed if false declarations have been made or obstacles concealed. Again, if the woman has become pregnant by another man, or if the man has rendered another woman pregnant and this has not been revealed, dissolution of the marriage may be claimed, whether the child of this irregular union be born before or after the marriage; such a claim must be made within six months of the facts becoming known to the claimant. No woman may marry again till ten months after the termination of her previous marriage if she is pregnant at this period. Many other causes are defined as valid for the dissolution of marriage, and it is evident that henceforth in Norway it will often be difficult to marry in haste, and that the facilities for escaping from a hasty, ill-judged marriage will prove to be numerous and varied.—British Medical Journal.

Some Strange Duels.

In the latter part of the eighteenth century that prince of charlatans, Count Cagliostro, proposed a duel with poisoned pills. The trouble arose because he had called a physician a quack. Cagliostro, on the ground that "a medical controversy should be settled in a medical manner," proposed that two pills, one deadly, the other harmless, should be put in a box and shaken up. Each was to draw a pill and swallow it.

In due course the duel came off, Cagliostro lived. The other man died.

Some years before the war an American student, in Paris, challenged by a Frenchman, chose baseball as his weapon. There was immense feeling, and the American was accused of everything from insanity to cowardice, the latter on the assumption that no one could possibly be hurt by a baseball. But the American, taking his stand at pitcher's distance, threw with such force and accuracy that the flying sphere struck his opponent between the eyes and laid him out flat, though he recovered later on.

A duel with deadly germs was seriously proposed by a Chicago physician in 1916. The preliminaries were arranged, but at the last moment the challenged party shrank from the ordeal.

Democracy in the U.S.

Suffragists in Washington are burning the speeches of the President as a symbol of their indignation over his failure to do anything to win another vote for the passage of the federal suffrage amendment. For four days the fire had burned unceasingly and no one had been arrested, and suddenly the District of Columbia Police produced out of the dim and dusty recesses of the archives chambers an excuse for arresting women who are calling the attention of the world to the fact that President Wilson is appearing as a prophet of democracy abroad while millions of his own people are still disfranchised.

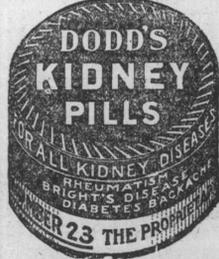

Eleven women were put in jail, all of them hunger striking as a protest against their illegal imprisonment.

The President continues making speeches about democracies for other countries. The women of America will continue demanding democracy at home.

A prison special is scheduled to leave Washington on a three weeks' swing through the country, touching the Atlantic and Pacific coasts, the Gulf and the Lakes.

The recent announcement of Senator Jones, of New Mexico, chairman of the suffrage committee, that women suffrage had been indefinitely postponed, determined the suffragists to send the prison special at once out through the country to inform the people of the persistent refusal of the administration to take effective action to secure the passage of the amendment. The suffrage prisoners will serve to illustrate the fact that jail is the answer which American women get from the administration when they demand freedom.

"From prison to public" will be the slogan under which the 26 prisoners will carry through the country the story of their jail experiences.—Woman's Century.

The Creed of the Loyal Canadian.

The following letter, which shows in a humorous way the need for patronizing home industries, appeared recently in the Toronto Daily Star:

Sir:—I remember that upon one occasion a certain Farmers' Union lecturer was telling the farmers of Texas of the mistakes they were making. He said: "The great mistake with the Texas farmer is that he doesn't live at home, he depends on selling cotton too much. You are continually buying something, and you don't ever sell anything. To illustrate what I mean, I need but call your attention to the fact that when you awake in the morning it is the alarm of a Connecticut clock. You get up and button on Chicago suspenders to your Detroit overalls. You go out and wash your face with Cincinnati soap in an Indiana toilet wash basin. You sit down to your breakfast and eat from a table made in Grand Rapids, Mich., and you eat Chicago meat. And your bread is made of Tennessee flour, cooked on a St. Louis stove. You go out and put on a New York bridle on a Kentucky mule, fed on Iowa corn, and plow your farm all day, which is covered with a Massachusetts mortgage. And at night when you get home you read a Bible printed in Boston and you say a prayer that was written in Jerusalem. And you crawl under a blanket manufactured in New Jersey, to be kept awake all night by a dog—the only home product you have on the farm."

Here, too, is the creed of the loyal Canadian:

I believe that Canadian people should wear Canadian clothes, eat Canadian foods, and use Canadian manufactured products.

I believe in making my money help my neighbour as well as myself.

I believe there is very little that I need to eat, drink or wear that is not made or handled by Canadian concerns.

I believe that after I've found that the article I want isn't made in Canada it is time to begin looking elsewhere—not before.

I believe that if the article I want isn't produced in Canada I should at least try to buy it from a Canadian dealer.

I believe that Canadian grains, Canadian fruits, and Canadian vegetables have produced the energy that has always been characteristic of Canada's sons and daughters.

I believe that the united co-operation of Canada's citizens will insure Canada's prosperity.

I will never forget that when I buy anything that is not produced in Canada I make Canada poorer.

I will let no outside flattery distract me from these precepts but remain firmly convinced, whatever others

The Largest Mirror in the World.

The great feat of constructing a giant reflector of 100 in. aperture, with all that such an enterprise involves, has surrounded the Mt. Wilson Observatory with a world-wide interest. More than ten years have passed since the scheme was set on foot, and that fact alone should convey some idea of the magnitude of the task undertaken, the labor expended, and the difficulties that have been surmounted. Though progress has been slow it has been continuous, and the recently issued report of the director leads us to believe that the giant reflector has reached such an advanced stage that its final tests are being conducted or may be already completed. The more important portions, such as the mercury tanks and floats, the sections of the polar axis, and the main bearings, are all now assembled in place, and the rotation of the instrument on its bearings has been critically examined. The right ascension and declination, slow and fast motions have been completed and attached, the large driving worm-wheel has been cut and partially ground, the mirror cell has been fitted, and the support system installed. The Cassegrain cage has been riveted together and ground true, and the mirror elevator has been assembled and tested. Concurrently with this preparatory work on the mountain, the figuring of two convex mirrors has been completed in the workshop at Pasadena. It was found convenient to utilize the large mirror in hyperbolishing these mirrors, but this work being finished, there was no reason to delay the transportation of the huge mirror to the observatory—a work of some anxiety and difficulty. The mirror was crated in a strong box lined with building paper and supported on its edge by a heavy framework bolted to the lid of the motor truck, the vibration in carriage being reduced by the insertion of numerous springs between the box and the framework. The top of the mirror when placed on the truck was about 14 ft. from the ground, and the weight of the whole with the support was 7.5 tons. Nevertheless the trip up the mountain track was made without incident, the specially-gear truck performing its work without difficulty. On the successful achievement of this stage in the history of the great telescope, a stage that records the assemblage of

A Brilliant Conversationalist.

(AN EXERCISE IN INFLECTION.)
By "H." in Ayrshire Post.

Could not Paganini wring music out of a simple string on his violin? And the world wondered. Joey Tosh can do the trick with one word. Yet fame has missed.

He is a trifling figure to the eye; but he is a master of language, and knows its potentialities. He can give any visitor, any orator, any linguist tips in the art of inflection. Here he is a genius, he was a tree stump. His eyes slide solemnly in their dug-outs; his face has an anchored expression; and his hands have become so fossilised in his pockets that has never been known to take them out, even to wipe his nose.

II.
You meet him. "Is a' weel?" you ask.
"Ay," answers Joey in a cheerful, off-hand response.
"An' is the wife a' richt?"
Joey shoves up his eyebrows and says "Ay" in a manner which tells you he is pleased to announce the fact.
"An' the weans?"
It is a lower, more satisfying note now—"Ay"—with something final in it.
You express your gratification, and intimate that you only wish you could say the same of your own household.
"Ay" queries Joey, with a slur upwards on the scale.
"My wife isna quite in the best o' health," you inform him.
This is news to Joey, and he expresses his astonishment by a rising "Ay!"
"She's no' seriously ill, however; but jist weel."
"Ay," in a firm voice, which announces that he understands.
She had a visit frae the doctor, and he gie'd her a bottle—
"Ay, ay," nods Joey.
"But it hasna helped her anything yet."
Joey sighs a sympathetic "Ay."
You are to send her into the country, however, to get a change of air; and you venture the opinion that this is a good move.
Joey knows, and "Oh, ay!" expresses his agreement with you.
Your wife is, maybe, self-forgetful in her illness, and takes unusual notions and fancies.
Joey's eyes blink open a trifle, and his "Ay!" means "Dae ye tell me that?"
"I wish I jist kent what would cure her."
"Ay!" exclaims Joey, with a nod.
"Well, I'm, off, Joey. It's a grand day."
And Joey agrees with an "Ay!" that has a full stop after it.
All the time he has listened, hands in pockets; now he daunders off in a lump, only his feet indicating that the figure has life in it.

The Most Deadly Beast.

We don't know how it is about you, gentle reader, but as for us we loathe a mosquito above all the carnivora. Lions and leopards and wolves and neighborhood cornet players we can brave.

The family cook does not terrify us. We can face with fortitude beasts of jungle and suburb, but when sister mosquito comes around we sink and shudder and shiver.

Aye on the hottest July night, when sheets scorch our pinfeathers, and pillows are self heated hot water bags, still we shiver at the approach of a mosquito.

The lowly bug who infests public sleeping places has a bite that's bitter, but he does his business silently, and, at the break of day, waddles his plump self to decorous hiding.

But the mosquito comes whizzing and buzzing and screaming about, "Zum, Zum, ZEE; I'm going to bite an ear off you, mister man," he yells. And we slap at large in the night. "Zee, Zee; never touched me; just for that I'm goin' to puncture your blessed hide in seven new places," she screams.

We toss and we slap and we gesticulate in the darkness.
We get mad and hot and excited.
But the mosquito comes whizzing and buzzing.
It doesn't light anywhere, it just soars, and dives, and volplanes, and side twists; mostly right over our ear.

A devilish beast surely; a booster, a bragart, an unfair fighter; and getter of goats without peer.

We find screens and netting of no avail, for the tribe of mouthily bluffers whine like dum-dum bullets just outside, and keep us awake with their threats. And you never know whether the wailing devils are just inside or just outside.

Like a nervous bee man with an old veil, handling a nervous swarm; he will wear that every screeching bee is inside the veil and just going to bite a hole right into his mortal inwards.—Vancouver Sun.

Always Hungry at Night

A Kansas City man who is trying to be very patriotic is beginning to wonder if he is not cursed with a progerman stomach. During the daytime, when he is upon his feet, he has no trouble observing the food regulations, but just as soon as he lies down at night to go to sleep, his stomach takes advantage of the fact that he is flat on his back and refuses to give way to Morpheus until he eats again.

"Sometimes I manage to get to sleep without taking on an extra cargo of food," he says. "But when I do I usually wake up in the middle of the night with a mad craving for food, and the only way I can get back to sleep is to get up, go out to the kitchen and cook myself some hot food."

The man says he has tried his best to overcome this hunger habit, but is unable to do so. Several times a week he will go to the kitchen in the middle of the night, put on a skillet and fry a piece of ham, or bacon and eggs, and, after eating an ordinary size meal, will go back to bed and sleep. He says he has tried eating fruit and light food, but his stomach will have none of these and insists upon meats. Often when he is standing over a skillet dressed only in his pajamas in the dead of night he says he feels like a thief stealing food, while others who patriotically observe all of Mr. Hoover's regulations are asleep.

"Maybe you have a tapeworm with Teutonic leanings," a friend suggested.

"Maybe I have," the man replied, sadly, "but I think it is an inherited habit that is just getting a grip on me. I remember when my folks lived on a farm near Pomeroy, when I was just a kid my father used to have to get up in the night and eat as I do. But it is only recently that I have become addicted to the habit, and it is only since the food regulations became so strict that I have worried about it."

"Maybe your wife's cooking is not as good as it used to be," was the next logical suggestion.

"Don't you ever think it isn't young man?" the glutton of the darkness replied indignantly. "My wife, sir, is the best cook in Kansas City! You may accuse me of having German tapeworm or of having an unpatriotic stomach, but you must not reflect upon my wife's culinary art. Good-evening, sir!"—Kansas City Star.

The House was none too sympathetic with the proposal to bring the Kaiser to London to be put on his trial. Lord Robert Cecil threw cold water on it when he declared that the Kaiser had already fallen under the ban of condemnation by public opinion, and expressed his doubt as to whether his trial would add anything whatever to the weight of the condemnation. The country, as Sir Donald Maclean said, wants no Roman trial. The Prime Minister's defence of the proposal was not very wholehearted; it was, at all events, weak and far from convincing. The Kaiser, he told the House, would never have been sent to trial at all if he had been sent to a neutral country. No neutral country wants him sent to it for condemnation and sentence. But here, he declared, "he will have very fair play." Fair play, when the prosecutors, and the Judges, and the jurors will all be one and the same! the old contention upside down that what we could do six thousand miles away we could surely afford to do at home. "Ireland is at our doors," is what he said on Monday, "and it is not on a par with a place thousands of miles away." All of which argues a radical change of view. So what it comes to is this, that the Kaiser is to be tried in London, because the neutral countries have wisdom enough to refuse to have anything to do with him, and Ireland is to be denied Home Rule because she is close at hand and cannot be treated as she would be if she were six thousand miles off. The next step, so far as Ireland is concerned, will be to get rid of the Home Rule Act. As for the Kaiser, it may be hoped that he will never set foot on these shores again. And the English of it all is that Home Rule looks as if it were as far as ever, that the Kaiser is to be dealt with on the Jeddah principles which were incorporated at a later date in the dictum of the old Scotch Judge—"My man, you're a verra clever chiel, but you'd be nane the waur o' a good hanging."—Ayrshire Post.

The Cohort of the Damned.

"Wild" French Airmen to Patrol Algeria.

By DOUGLAS REID IN POPULAR MAGAZINE.

Now that the war is done, secrets will out. Behind the censorship have lain great stories; terrors; weird, bizarre truths that may now do no harm by the telling. One of these has to do with a strange and romantic group of men, "The Cohort of the Damned," who lived in glory and tragedy, destined to fight and die as shunned heroes.

They are the victims of "The Machine," just as human flesh is often fated to be overpowered by its own creations of iron and fire. They are the French airmen whose temperaments led them to a fevered, passionate love of flying, so strong that they forgot duty, discipline, routine, and became mentally unbound on their hobby—airplaning. Under the strain of war in the clouds they lost poise, "went wild," and strove to fly and fight continually.

Sky war, although allowing the individual fighter more freedom, more of the duelist's choice of "where and when," was successful for large bodies of men only when standardized, ordered, and systematized. In the early days when Garros and Pegoud soared up to fight the first German fliers, armed only with rifles, the airmen's duties were simple. All he had to do was scout through the air, see what he could see, and return when he pleased. But as aerial observation became more and more useful; as the opposing armies learned how valuable was a system of "eyes in the clouds," the air services of the antagonists became disciplined. Men went up with definite orders as to what to look for and when to return.

Bombing was developed, and specific rules were needed for the guiding of groups of airplanes to an objective. But until the summer of 1916 no attempt was made to make rules for the "sole men," the fliers who in scout planes, attacked whom they chose when they chose, fighting lone battles.

Then the German air forces began what the British and French sky men called "foul tactics." Boelke and Von Richthofen, the leading Hun ace, began to appear over the lines leading flocks of airplanes, ten to fifty fully painted planes all flying in formation—a definite unit. Against these groups, called "circuses" because of their motley coloring and their habit of circling about one of their number who did "stunts" in the centre of the ring, the solitary allied fliers went up singly to do battle. The result was obviously fatal. The Germans "mobbed" them to death. Only after months of steady losses, did the allies force their airmen to drop this gallant but suicidal point of honor, and to form similar squadrons of equal force to do battle with the organized Hun.

As soon as the French began to send up these circuses they discovered trouble. A certain number of the airmen refused to fly in formation. Either from impatience or a mistaken sense of the dramatic, they would break away from the squadron, disregard the orders of the flight commander, and dart away erratically to do battle on their own account. Others, seized with a strange eccentricity, would persist in doing stunts in formation, causing accidents from collisions, breaking up the carefully planned battle line and ruining the attack of the squadron. Punishment for these irresponsible fliers did not cure them. So the French air service set psychologists and trained nerve specialists to study the offenders.

These scientists discovered that the insubordinates were slightly unbalanced mentally, that their daily labors under extreme nerve tension and constant excitement had carried them beyond complete sanity. Slavish and monotonous employment in desperate air fights, the daily absorption in this strange new occupation, had combined, with the peculiar effect of swiftly changing air pressure on their nerves, to make them abnormally reckless.

"The Machine" was too much for their strength of mind. At approximately the same time the British Royal Flying Corps began to study its own men of this type. It followed the practice of discharging such "unmanageables" from the service, sending them into the infantry or upon destroyers, as in the Grand Fleet. Its technical name for them was "wild men."

The French, however, always a race of more understanding of genius and temperament than the Anglo-Saxon peoples, forbore to cashier these fliers. It realized that they were, man for man, better than their German opponents; that individually they were the best aces of all in an air duel, for their very disregard of rules and regulations, their very carelessness of death, made them terrible foes. So it organized a special corps, called "The Cohort of the Damned," filling it entirely with these untrustworthy pilots; placed it apart from all organized squadrons; forbade its members to approach the regular branches of the service; isolated it entirely at a point near the front-line trenches; furnished it with the best equipment, and turned it free to fight at its own sweet will.

Lonely and tragic, this band fought for the rest of the war. Its members dying rapidly out of the air, but a constant flood of new fliers coming to take their place, as the nerves of pilots here and there among the disciplined squadrons gave way and made their owners fit only for this reckless company.

The execution these half-mad men of the "Damned" wrought in German ranks was astounding, but no records could be kept of the number they shot down, on account of their lack of organization and the irresponsibility of their testimony. Captured Germans, however, are known to have reported that their own fliers swore ferociously and wrote their wills when ordered to occupy that part of the line opposite the "Cohort."

The statement is made that France at one time had three of these strange groups, but there is definite information only upon the one and original band. This, on one occasion, had over 100 members, but the figure is not of great value, since the lifetime of the fliers was particularly short.

In the last year of the war, too, the number which the government was forced to consign to this isolation grew less and less, due to the greater knowledge of fliers' air temperament obtained by the special corps of scientific men attached to the hangars. Psychologists learned how to treat the dementia when it was its first appearance, and it was found that frequent vacations spent far in the south of France, in complete rest, would, in the majority of cases, allay the nerve strain and keep the men tractable and efficient.

"The Cohort of the Damned" at present, it is understood, is to be kept in service after the mustering out of the other French forces. It is deemed impossible to return the men to civil life, as their hunger for excitement and craving for thrill would immediately cause them to be disturbers of the peace. Still "wild men," peaceful pursuits would have no avenue for their satisfaction, and they would become criminals from sheer force of nerve-strain, or at the least they would be speed-crazy chauffeurs.

Consequently the French army will send them across into Algeria to be used in policing the desert wastes, holding the native tribes in check. One of them, using an airplane to traverse the parched and dangerous deserts, will be worth more than a regiment of cavalry, the branch that garrisoned the province before the war.

France has the tenderest affection for these unfortunate heroes, and has decorated them with all the honors given more sane fliers. It will maintain luxurious quarters for them in their African exile, it is said, and will grant them large increases in pay over the regular branches of military service.

In succeeding years, the French people, with their love of the picturesque and tragic in literature, will write much of this terrible and beautiful "Cohort."

Queer Restaurants.

By WARD MUIR, in Daily Mail.
Some years ago a friend took me to the Japanese restaurant in Carnaby-street. We drank inebriably delicate tea. Then our meal was brought. Its first course consisted of lobster fried in batter, accompanied by some tiny bowls containing salads of such artistic hue and arranged so like exotic posies of blossoms that it seemed a shame to thrust a fork into them.

As a fact my friend used chopsticks. I have never mastered these implements. Whenever I revisit the Japanese restaurant, or go to the Chinese ones which are beginning to be so familiar a feature of London, it astonishes me that any human being is sufficiently adroit to fish up a grain of rice between two pencils held in the fingers of one hand.

I remember that, emerging from the Japanese restaurant, we noticed a Serbian restaurant. And I thereupon made a vow to visit all the queerer foreign restaurants of the metropolis.

But I have never fulfilled that vow; because the choice of foreign restaurants is too large. It is, in effect, endless. London, viewed in the light of its restaurants, reveals itself as by far the most cosmopolitan city in Europe—possibly in the world.

Of course we all know the Italian, French, Belgian, and Swiss restaurants in Soho and in the Tottenham Court-road quarter—and perhaps some explorers may have shuddered on noticing in Charlotte-street, a Dutch shop which announces that it sells "Horse Meat for Human Consumption." But how many Londoners have tried the Greek restaurants? I know of two, one in Windmill-street and one in Beak-street. There are also two Indian restaurants—in Rupert-street and Lisle-street—where you can scorch your palate excruciatingly but exquisitely on chutneys, curries, kababs, bormas, and pulao. (But unless you are a retired Anglo-Indian you will have to ask the waitress's advice when you are presented with the bill of fare.)

At a Spanish restaurant in Dean-street I have had excellent repasts. The menu offers Extremeses (hors d'oeuvres), Sopas, Pastas, Huevas, Pescado (fish), Platos del dia (dishes of the day), Legumbres, and Quesos (cheese). These viands sound more romantic in Spanish than in French, but, to be candid, taste much the same.

Somewhere in the city there's an Albanian restaurant which I confess I have not yet visited; and farther east a Limehouse-caseway, there is a cluster of Chinese eating-houses. They are worth a visit, though the ones in the West End are, as far as I can judge, just as "genuine"—if you yearn to know, say, what squid tastes like with a garnishing of pine-apple.

Near Regent-street there is a Salonica restaurant, and in Great Windmill-street there is a Russian bar. Just behind the Lyric Theatre there is an Oriental cafe which is the chief London rendezvous of Armenians. You can get a cup of real Egyptian-style coffee here, and—for the sum of one shilling—hire and smoke a narghile.

And when you have sampled all these places you will only have begun to touch the fringe of a curious and interesting subject. But it is possible that you will have arrived at a quite ferocious longing for an English grilled chop and a pint of English beer.

American Millionaires.

Now a British Subject as Result of Great War.

It will be remembered that during the early days of the Great War, several prominent citizens of the United States became British subjects to show their disapproval of the attitude of their native country in remaining neutral and prosperous while other nations were fighting the battle of democracy. Probably the best known of the men who declared in this practical manner their admiration for the stand taken by Great Britain against the Germans was Henry James, the famous novelist who has since died, but there were many others as well. One influential American who took a similar step was Charles Garland, a young millionaire. He did not come out with a written declaration of his views, as did Henry James, but he showed how he felt regarding the war in a very practical manner. Early in the struggle, Charles Garland, who was a good horseman, having always had plenty of leisure for riding, entered the British cavalry. He served with distinction throughout the struggle, and was honorably discharged at the end when he decided to go back into civilian life. It is evident that Mr. Garland found the British officers very congenial company, as he has decided to remain in England and has secured a beautiful home in Warwick. He became a naturalized Britisher, and at the request of the discharged soldiers he has taken charge of the affairs of these men in his own neighborhood. He looks forward also to entering public life, and will probably be a candidate for the House of Commons in the next British election, with a soldiers' backing. In short, the former American millionaire is now every inch a British subject.

Good-Bye to Mary Pickford.

After nine more pictures Mary Pickford, the Canadian moving picture actress, says she is going to take her sunshine and curls into retirement. If the report of her newest price per picture—$250,000—may be assumed to be authentic, Miss Pickford, or "Little Mary," as she is known by millions, will take $2,250,000 into more or less retirement with her, not counting those dollars which already have been salted.

Yet the Pickfordian sunshine and the Pickfordian curls have contributed so much to contemporary life that Canadians in general and young Canadians in particular would gladly bequeath to "Little Mary" all the dollars in the land, something that under present conditions would take her still several more years to get.

The latest move of Miss Pickford is a pictorial amalgamation with Douglas Fairbanks, Charles Chaplin and D. W. Griffith. This "Big Four" is to produce and distribute under their own auspices, having become tired of splitting their profits with erstwhile glove salesmen and corset makers.

Speaking of the plans of her daughter the other day, Mrs. Charlotte Pickford said:

"It will take months to complete the pictures contracted for on the part of Mary, and then she is going to settle down to enjoy life, as I have entertained her for a long time to do."

Once upon a time there was another lady who said she was going to retire. Her name was Mme. Patti.
