—AND—
Lady Hutton's Ward.

CHAPTER IV.

Seeing that the very mention of the matter agitated and annoyed Lady Hutton, Hilda never alluded to it again; and as years passed on and she grew older the fact that she was only the adopted daughter of her stately benefactress grew more vague and indistinct.

It was a pleasant life when Hilda reached her sixteenth year, for then Lady Hutton dismissed her governess and maids.

"You must give yourself up to reading now," she said, "for a few months, and then I will take you into what you will think another world."

The large library was thrown open and Lady Hutton selected the books, and Hilda read for the first time masterpieces of poetry and prose that enchanted her. Such reading was the one thing wanted to complete and perfect her.

The beautiful young face which bent over the volumes was a poem in itself. It changed with every thought, sometimes glowing bright and radiant, again sorrowful, and half sad. From the fairy world of poetry and romance she learned something of the mysteries of life, the mystery of human love and human suffering—never dreaming it would one day reach her.

One beautiful morning in May Hilda rose earlier than usual. Elsie had told her on the previous evening that any lady who for nine mornings together bathed her face in May dew would be beautiful forever. Hilda resolved to try it, and on this particular day rose almost with the sun while the dew still lay upon the flowers, little dreaming that on that day the tragedy of her life would begin.

A golden glow seemed to have fallen over the earth when Hilda stood on the hill near Brynmar woods; the air was full of an indescribable melody and fragrance; the hawthorn shrubs white upon the hedges; all was fresh, fair and beautiful. Heaven seemed smiling upon the bright face of the earth.

There was plenty of dew upon the heather; it glistened on the long blades of grass and shone upon the green leaves, and before long the fair face was bathed in it.

An artist meeting Hilda then would have sketched her and called his picture "The May Morning." She looked just as fair and bright; the violet eyes were clear and lustrous, the beautiful hair tinged with the softest golden tints, and the golden hair waving over her graceful neck and shoulders.

"I will walk home through the woods," thought Hilda.

The way was long and pleasant, and she lingered in the deep shadows, watching with loving eyes the wild flowers that grew round the tall trees; watching whether cowslips, blue-bells, or primroses were the most delicious and sweet; forgetting as the warm, sunny hours rolled on that Lady Hutton would be waiting for her and that the time for breakfast had long passed. While looking at the flowers some pretty fantastic lines she had read came into her mind:

"My own blue-bell, my pretty blue-bell, I have come from the bower where roses dwell; My wings you view of your own bright hue, And, oh! never doubt that my heart's true blue."

"What words!" said the young girl laughing as she bent over the blue-bells, "what words to put on a butterfly's lips!" Then in her rich, musical voice she began to sing them. The sweet voice rose high in the clear morning air until one could have fancied the trees and flowers and wind listened in hushed silence.

Hilda thought she was quite alone, singing as she gathered the pretty blue-bells; but down the broad wood-path there came a young and handsome man. He stood for a few minutes silently watching the beautiful, golden-haired girl, doubting whether the figure before him was real. Turning suddenly Hilda saw him, and a flush of color dyed her fair face crimson. He advanced toward her, holding his hat in his hand and bowing reverentially as though she were a princess.

"I beg you to forgive if I have alarmed you," he said. "I have lost my way in the woods and cannot find the path to the high-road. Will you have the kindness to point it out to me?"

"The one to the right," replied Hilda, raising her eyes to the handsome and noblest face she had ever seen.

"Then he should have bowed and left her and she should have walked away, never once looking behind; but the sun shone and the birds sang. They were both young, she beautiful and fair as the morning; and instead of leaving her he spoke again.

"These are bonny woods," he said; "I have not seen fairer in all Scotland. They belong to the Brynmar estate I suppose?"

Hilda bowed. She had not recovered her power of speech. Who was this stranger? Where had he come from?

"You are losing your blue-bells," he said gallantly. He stooped, and gathering them together again offered them to her. "Those were pretty words I heard you singing," he continued; "they are quite new to me. May I ask whose they are?"

Hilda forgot her shyness then, and told him that she had read them the day before and could not forget them. His eyes were riveted upon her beautiful face, his ears were charmed by the sound of her voice; he could have stood there, he thought, forever. Was ever picture so fair? In the soft light that fell through the green foliage her fair face and golden hair shone brightly. He never forgot her as she stood then, with shy, drooping eyes, and the blue-bells in her pretty white hands. He lingered until he knew he ought to go.

"Will you give me one of those flowers?" he said, touching the blue-bells; "just as a little memento of the most pleasant morning I ever spent and the most beautiful picture I ever saw—only one; I beg you will not refuse."

Half smiling, half coyly, she drew out a single flower and offered it to him. His face flushed as he took it from her. Other words trembled upon his lips. He longed to tell her how beautiful, how fair and modest she was, and that he could never forget her; he longed to ask her name, where she dwelt, and why she was alone in the shades of Brynmar woods. But he did none of these things—he bowed as he would have done to a queen and left her.

Hilda Hutton went home, but life had all changed for her. Something new and beautiful came in her thoughts by day and in her dreams by night. She did not know why the face she had seen in Brynmar woods haunted her; why the sound of that voice never left her ears, or why each word he had spoken lingered in her heart. In all her life she had seen

Chinese Slayer Gets 14-18 Years.

Pleading guilty to manslaughter, Tong Joo was sentenced Nov. 19th, by Judge Dubuque to from 14 to 18 years in the state prison for the murder of Ung Shi Gm on April 19th at 145 Harrison Avenue, Boston.

The court said that it was doubtful if the case should be prosecuted to an extent likely to justify a first degree verdict. Although Tong, to the knowledge of the police, arrived at the South station at 12 minutes of 7, on the morning of the murder, the minutest investigation led to trace his movements for the following 37 minutes until he appeared again at the station and asked a guard for the next train to Providence.

Ang Lock Discharged.
Ang Lock, on trial with Fong for the murder, was found not guilty by order of the court and was discharged. He had been found cowering in the murder room, but his slight physique was no evidence that he could not have delivered the powerful blow that sent a Chinese boning knife deep into Ung's skull.

Sergt. Thomas Harvey, tracing the murderer's trail to Providence, found that Fong and one Chin Too Onn, a fellow-employee in the restaurant where Fong was a cook, had gambled in a Chinese playhouse at Providence at 12 Monday night with the proceeds of two checks signed by the dead man. Harvey found that Fong had disappeared from 2 a.m. until 9 a.m., when he burst into Chin Too Onn's room and said that he must get back the checks, as Ung had been found in Boston with a knife in his hand.

Asst. Dist. Atty. Robert Robinson announced that a manslaughter plea would be acceptable to the prosecution at a conference of counsel with Judge Dubuque when trial resumed yesterday. Atty. Ralph E. Willard talked with his client, but for an hour the Chinese, maintaining his innocence, refused to change his plea of not guilty. Finally, however, he capitulated.

In imposing sentence the court dwelt upon the necessity for protection of human life, remarking that it had come to be a subject of great comment that people of to-day do not seem to hold life as dearly as did those of previous generations.

nothing like this stranger. Few gentlemen ever came to the Hall. Lady Hutton's lawyer was one, a little old man who wore a black wig; Dr. Greyling was another, and the good minister was a third. They were all, old and said but little to her. This handsome stranger had looked at her with a strange light in his dark eyes. He had stood before her, the wind lifting the masses of dark hair from his brow, and he had bowed lowly and reverentially as though she were a queen and he her knight. Dr. Greyling and the minister never did that. Why was the morning so pleasant to him? What was the picture he thought so beautiful? In her dreams and fancies he took the principal part, and she could better understand now what had puzzled her before. If ever in years to come some one was to care for her, she hoped he would have the same face and the same voice as the stranger.

Hilda did not know that on this May Morning, while she sung over the blue-bells and laughed at the butterfly, the first link was forged in a chain that was to bind her for life; for the bonny woods of Brynmar were fatal to her, as they had been to her beautiful young mother, who years ago, had learned there her first and only lesson in love.

Halifax, N.S.
Gentlemen—I have used Minard's Liniment and have found it a good remedy. After the explosion I was pretty well shaken up having quite a number of bruises and cuts, but thanks to Minard's Liniment I am my old self again. It healed my sore and bruise and gave me much relief. It is true to its name as the King of Pain, for it stopped the pain almost at once. I first noticed the ad in the Montreal Standard and decided to invest in a bottle, for which I am not sorry, but can say with truth that I am thankful for it having done all it claimed to do, and in my case much more, and a satisfied customer is the best ad one can possibly find. That is my view of it and I think you will agree with me too.

Yours very truly,

The Race That Is.
Angus Walters talks sense when he proposes to the Mayflowers skipper a race from Newfoundland to the West Indies with equal cargoes of fish, then to Turk's Island to load an equal cargo of salt and return to Newfoundland. The Boston Post says it's a good sporty proposition and suggests that the Mayflower owners think it over. The incident merely emphasizes the fact that the Bluenoses and the Mayflower were not built for the same purpose.—Canadian Fisherman.

A delightful accessory to the evening costume is a fan of uncurled ostrich shading from dark to pale tones.
There is at present a great demand for chiton dance frocks. In spite of this demand, velvets continue to be good.
A one-piece dress of black tricotine chooses chain stitching as its trimming. It is applied vertically round the neck and from hip to hem.

A small, close-fitting hat of maroon velvet for its brim which narrows at and around the neck with long tones of the durvety.
A simple frock of blue velvet uses squares of self material applied at the fur border of its cape and floor in an unusual trapezoidal shape. Also used as a scarf.
An afternoon frock of black satin has its mousseline blouse embroidered.

Evening gatherings bring out beaded velvet gowns, mostly featuring crystal and steel beads. (These gowns of black velvet are usually ornamented with rhinestones and crystals.)
A dance frock of changeable apple-green taffeta has a panel of black and gold lace inset in the front of the bouffant skirt. Black and gold ribbon girdles it, and a large black poppy is the "finishing touch."

WHAT MADE ME HAPPY
"I was congratulating myself that I had passed the winter without catching a cold, when I got one at the beginning of last May. It was because I was run down. Being run down I had some trouble in getting rid of a terrible cold. I was a nervous wreck. I would wake up regularly mornings feeling that some terrible calamity would take place. Although we were comfortably off, I felt sure my husband was going to lose everything. The children worried me. If they made the least noise, I would get into a terrible temper. I would scold them so that I am sure they hated me. I would be mad with myself after it was over and make up my mind never to let it happen again. I would go to bed at night and begin to think and picture dreadful things which might happen to me and my family. I would lay awake for hours, sometimes until daylight, and I was so weak that I could scarcely raise my head. I would waken next day just as tired as when I laid down. After a while I got so that I didn't care what happened. The children annoyed me and I wouldn't have cared if they had left me for good. I felt that it was only a matter of time before I would lose my mind. I knew that my symptoms were due to a run down condition and that if I could only get something to build me up, I might be all right. I knew that there must be some good tonic but most of them made such foolish claims that I was afraid of them. Happening one day to run across a leaflet about Carbol, I was impressed with the moderate way this preparation was described, so I made up my mind I would try it. I did and today I am the happiest and healthiest woman living. I haven't a care in the world. Instead of running away from me, my children are now with me all the time. My husband tells me that my disposition is as near an angel's as any human being's can be, but of course he is prejudiced. I don't believe I have a nerve in my body now."
Carbol is sold by your druggist, and if you can't conveniently get any, after you have tried it, that it hasn't done you any good, return the empty bottle to him and he will refund your money. 6-222

Hilda Hutton went home, but life had all changed for her. Something new and beautiful came in her thoughts by day and in her dreams by night. She did not know why the face she had seen in Brynmar woods haunted her; why the sound of that voice never left her ears, or why each word he had spoken lingered in her heart. In all her life she had seen nothing like this stranger. Few gentlemen ever came to the Hall. Lady Hutton's lawyer was one, a little old man who wore a black wig; Dr. Greyling was another, and the good minister was a third. They were all, old and said but little to her. This handsome stranger had looked at her with a strange light in his dark eyes. He had stood before her, the wind lifting the masses of dark hair from his brow, and he had bowed lowly and reverentially as though she were a queen and he her knight. Dr. Greyling and the minister never did that. Why was the morning so pleasant to him? What was the picture he thought so beautiful? In her dreams and fancies he took the principal part, and she could better understand now what had puzzled her before. If ever in years to come some one was to care for her, she hoped he would have the same face and the same voice as the stranger.

Hilda did not know that on this May Morning, while she sung over the blue-bells and laughed at the butterfly, the first link was forged in a chain that was to bind her for life; for the bonny woods of Brynmar were fatal to her, as they had been to her beautiful young mother, who years ago, had learned there her first and only lesson in love.

The Surety of Purity

There are no miracles in cooking. What goes into the food must inevitably come out. Even the baking perfection that results from the use of Royal Baking Powder is no miracle. It is simply the result of a soluble purity entering the food—and emerging again. Royal is made from Cream of Tartar derived from grapes. It Contains No Alum Leaves No Bitter Taste

Turks Revolt in Western Thrace -- Dramatic and Chaotic Situation -- English Liberal Factions May Unite

ENGLISH REVOLT IN WESTERN THRACE.
LONDON, Nov. 29. It is reported here that a Turkish revolt accompanied by heavy fighting in some places, has broken out in Western Thrace. The Correspondent of the Times at Constantinople telegraphs that he hears that the Insurrectionary forces are estimated at an armed band of five thousand, and are marching towards the city of a plebiscite. A despatch to the Daily Express from Constantinople describes the situation as dramatic and chaotic and that bands of Bulgarians and Macedonians have crossed the border.

SEEKING UNITY.
LONDON, Nov. 29. The possibility of renouncing the two wings of the Liberal Party is developing in a practical direction more than expected. The only real difficulty seems to be the question of leadership, and this may turn out a major block. Both Lloyd George and Asquith, through indirect channels, set out statements intimating willingness to sink personal questions. On each statement credits Mr. George with a willingness to consider Asquith, but with the "sticking provision" if the united party is to be Lloyd George's own. It is said to be that it would be desirable to leave the question of leadership in abeyance for a time. He has a large group of Liberal peers to discuss the subject in all houses. As an outcome, a meeting of all the Liberal peers will be held in the House of Lords tomorrow to consider the subject further. Should unity be accomplished, it will have an important result, probably causing Lord Birkenhead, Aust Chamberlain and Sir Robert Buxton to return to the Conservative ranks to the great advantage of Bonar Law's administration, which is notwithstanding in debating power.

UTILIZING GREEN ISLANDS.
LAUSANNE, Nov. 29. The British Government has a demilitarized zone marked along her frontiers partially realized to-day as far as it concerns the Greek Islands stretching along the coast of Asia Minor in the Aegean Sea. The Territorial Commission of the Near East Conference, adopted the report of its sub-committee which recommended that important measures be carried out in these Islands. Inset Pasha, not quite satisfied with the report, claimed all military works on the islands should be removed. The Greek Islands, which the Commission decided should be partly demilitarized, include Samo, Mitylene, Chios and Nikaria.

TURKEY UNSAFE COUNTRY.
NEW YORK, Nov. 29. Henry Morgenthau, former American Ambassador to Turkey, addressing a dinner of the Association of Foreign Press Correspondents last night said, "I am amused that concessions are wanted in Turkey. It is an unsafe country to put money into, you might as well throw it in the river. All the money that is put in Turkey in the next twenty-five or thirty years is going to be lost, and we don't want an open door in Turkey."

BRITAIN ONLY NATION TO SCRAP WAR VESSELS.
LONDON, Nov. 29. Britain will scrap no more warships under the Washington Disarmament Treaty until the other nations according to an insurance given the Commons to-day by Eyres Monsell, Financial Secretary to the Admiralty. Asked who had ratified the Treaty, Commander Monsell replied, the United States, Japan and this country, but not yet France or Italy. Eight British capital ships have been rendered useless for war purposes, he added, and already have been sold and removed to ship breaking firms for breaking up, six more have been rendered incapable for war risk service and two more will have been similarly dealt with by the end of next month. So far as known, the United States and Japan have not disposed of any ships except possibly obsolete ships disposed of in ordinary course. "I would point out, however, that until the Treaty has been ratified by all the Powers, none of them are bound to dispose of such vessels." Asked whether this did not disclose a serious situation in that Britain had scrapped every ship agreed to except the Lion, Commander Monsell replied: "No, I think it right this country should give a lead in good faith."

REPORTS DENIED.
WASHINGTON, Nov. 29. A sweeping denial of the published reports from Paris that the French are contemplating taking over the Ruhr Valley, has come directly from Premier Poincare to the French Embassy.

IRISH BILLS PASSED.
LONDON, Nov. 29. The Irish Bills, ratifying the New State Constitution, and embodying other necessary legislation under the Anglo-Irish Treaty were passed by the Commons tonight. They virtually complete the legislation necessary to set up the Irish Free State permanently under the Anglo-Irish Treaty. Under the terms of the Treaty, signed on December 6, 1921, it was necessary to complete the legislation within a year or by Wednesday next.

STEED GIVES PLACE TO DAWSON.
LONDON, Nov. 29. The Evening Standard says it understands that Wickham Steed has definitely arranged to retire from the editorship of the Times, being succeeded by Geoffrey Dawson, who will return immediately to the post he formerly occupied. It is recalled that Mr. Dawson, upon his resignation, stated that he was not conducting the editorial policy of the Times in accordance with Northcliffe's political program.

New Maternity Hospital
SATISFACTORY PROGRESS BEING MADE TOWARDS COMPLETION
—COMMANDANT HURD DOES GOOD WORK.

We are pleased to learn that Commandant H. A. Hurd, S.A., who is here on financial business in connection with the above-mentioned building, has met with a ready and sympathetic response from those whom he has waited upon in this connection since coming here. It will be remembered that the Commandant spent some weeks here earlier in the season in the interests of this building and succeeded in raising sufficient money in cash and pledges to practically complete the same. After his return to Canada he received orders from Commissioner Sowton to return to Newfoundland and make an effort to raise the necessary money for furnishing the building.

The Commandant is hoping to get each room and dormitory furnished by some individual or society, whose names will be engraved on a brass plate on the door. He thinks this would be a splendid opportunity for those wishing to perpetuate the memory of some relative who made the Supreme Sacrifice for the sake of humanity in the Great War and who cannot afford an expensive monument. Two hundred dollars will furnish a private room, $200 a semi-private room, $500 a dormitory and so on. As stated above a brass plate will be placed on the door describing the person in whose memory the gift was made, with the name of the donor included. This would not only be a very suitable monument to any departed relative or friend but would be of untold blessing to humanity. Commandant Hurd has waited upon many of our leading citizens, a number of whom are considering the matter and will no doubt decide favourably. The following contributions have been received:—
Sir Edgar Bowring one private room $200.00
Mrs. Eric R. Bowring one private room 200.00
Mrs. Hon. M. G. Winter one private room 200.00
Mrs. Hugh Baird one Dormitory 500.00
Commandant Hurd will be glad to call on any person desiring further information concerning this matter or anyone wishing to communicate with him may do so by calling up Telephone No. 619, to arrange interview or for any information required. As will be seen elsewhere in this issue a public meeting has been arranged for Tuesday, December 5th, when full details will be furnished regarding the progress made thus far as well as future plans.

BE SURE TO READ THE LAST REASON.
I asked a business man who has had a good deal of material prosperity what he was most thankful for, thinking that he would of course mention his business success. But he did not. Instead he thought a minute and then he said: "I'm darn glad the business is going so well, but there's something else that I've got hold of this year that's meant even more and that's a new state of mind. I don't know whether you know it or not but I had gotten into bad mental habits, worrying about my food and my sleep and that sort of thing, and being afraid I was overworking, and then I got hold of a new philosophy on the whole business and I've pulled myself up already until I feel like another man. Where did I get it? Well, that's another quite a long story. I'll tell you sometime."
I hope he will. In the meantime isn't that an interesting thought for Thanksgiving Day.
For what are you thankful to-day?

For many things, I hope For better health, for material prosperity, for some new friend or some new affection that has entered into your life in the past year. For a home made pleasanter by little improvements of one sort or another, for any of the innumerable things that bring enjoyment into our lives.
Inside Reasons.
But listen, even if this year hasn't been a good one in these ways, even if it has taken away instead of adding to your external reasons for happiness, have you not perhaps added reasons for happiness inside of you?
And if you haven't, can't you be thankful because you are going to start right now to add to them?
Begin by placing your feet firmly on the unshakable truth that which is the only sure peace of mind is that which is founded not on circumstances but on the individual's control of his reactions to circumstances.
Then look into your heart and see in what way you need to improve your reactions.
Are You Thankful for Some of These Things?
Maybe it will suggest some lines of thought if I tell you some of the things that I mean to be thankful for next Thanksgiving (I'm thankful for a little improvement in some of these lines to-day).
That I don't hold quite so many mental arguments with people.
That I don't fuss so much over my neighbor's faults.
That I don't brood quite so much over past mistakes.
That I don't exaggerate small annoyances into grievances so often.
That I've made headway against that almost universal habit of selfish pity.

That I have strengthened somewhat the habit of courage for daily living and conquered somewhat the habit of fear.
I hope this does not sound too much like a sermon.
But if it does, that at least should give you another reason for thankfulness,—that you only have to read a three minute sermon this Thanksgiving morning instead of listening to a three-hour one as your ancestors doubtless did.

Thanksgiving Day in United States.

To-day (Thursday), the last of November, is set apart by proclamation in the United States of America as a general day of Thanksgiving. In referring to the features of this particular occasion, the World Almanac publishes the following article from an early edition of the London Times, which will be read with great interest, coming from such an authoritative source.

"The first Thanksgiving Day in America was celebrated by the little band of Plymouth Colonists in 1621, though they had little to be thankful for except that they were alive. One of the reasons why they were alive was that among the food resources of the new land, besides water fowls there was a great store of wild Turkeys; and it shows how well known the bird must already have been in Europe that Bradford should thus have identified it off-hand and assumed that the name needed no explanation. And we know that the festivities of the very earliest Thanksgivings centred largely in the consumption of 'fowls':—

'Our harvest being gotten in, our Governor sent four men on fowling, that we might after a more special manner rejoice together, after we had gathered the fruits of our labours. They four in one day killed as much fowls, as, with a little help beside, served the company almost a week.'

This earliest festival of the Colonists was a mere holiday after the toll of the harvest, a 'frolic' such as may still be seen in many parts of England, with little or no religious associations or observances. It was a time of dancing or feasting, sports and trials of strength or skill, of rest and relaxation after the labours of the year. Merry-makings at harvest-home were prevalent in England, we know, in, at least, the 16th century; and the Pilgrims did but reproduce, in this as in most other things, the institutions with which they had been familiar at home. As the plantations in North America prospered, the custom persisted and spread and, under Puritan influence, it came to assume throughout New England a more religious character. Still a season of rejoicing, it had for its central episode the gathering at the place of worship to listen to the Thanksgiving Sermon, more secular than other sermons of the year, in which the political and material topics of the day could be discussed from the pulpit more freely than on ordinary Sundays. In this form it spread from New England over the country, first through the Middle States, and so to the further West, finally and more slowly through the South, until Thanksgiving came to be the most popular and universally observed of all the national holidays hardly excepting the more ebullient and demonstrative Fourth of July. Its associations with the carrying of the harvest came, with the growth of industrial prosperity and the emergence of large cities, to be partially obscured. Above all, it grew to be recognized as a family festival, a day of reunions in the old homestead and for the renewing of old affections, a season of charity and mutual helpfulness.

First Thanksgiving Proclamation. In 1789, in response to requests from both Houses of Congress, George Washington issued the first Thanksgiving Proclamation, appointing Thursday, November 26, as a day to be set aside for 'acknowledging with grateful hearts the many and signal favours of Almighty God, especially by affording them (the people) an opportunity peaceably to establish a form of government for their safety and happiness,' and, in particular, for 'the favourable interpositions of His providence in the course and conclusion of the late war.' Six years later, February 19, 1795, was similarly appointed a day of Thanksgiving for the 'divine beneficence' as shown especially in the suppression of the recent insurrection (the Whisky Rebellion) and for the continued stability of those 'constitutions of government which unite and by their union establish liberty and order.'

In 1798 the relations of the new Republic with Great Britain were again strained almost to the breaking point, and President Adams proclaimed Wednesday, May 8, as a day of humiliation and fasting inasmuch as the United States was placed 'in a hazardous and afflictive situation by the unfriendly disposition, conduct, and demands of a foreign Power,' but with the prayers and supplications were to be mingled thanks for many blessings, including 'a wonderful increase in population.' In the following year, the situation being still acute, Thursday, April 25, was similarly dedicated to 'humiliation, fasting, and prayer,' in that 'the most precious interests of the people of the United States are still held in jeopardy by the hostile designs and insidious acts of a foreign nation.' Once more thanks were also to be rendered for many blessings, especial reference being made to 'the labor of the husbandmen so that there may be food in abundance for man and beast.'

AT THE NICKEL THEATRE TONIGHT.

The Nickel Theatre offers for the remaining three days of this week the greatest all-feature show seen in St. John's in many years--this is straight goods even if we do say so ourselves. First there is Charlie Chaplin in his mammoth three-act scream, entitled "Shoulder Arms." For laughs this comedy stands in a class to itself. It's one long continuous laugh from start to finish. The other big attraction is Sidney A. Franklin's wonderful picture "Not Guilty." The plot is an unusual one and involves twin brothers who love the same woman and who, strange to relate, are both loved by her. One brother commits a crime, turns out to be a murderer and his twin changes identity with the guilty brother. Then events follow in rapid sequence. The innocent brother self-exiled goes to India, the land of "brilliant days and purple nights." Then by coincidence the girl visits India. But the path of true love, which never did run true, winds through a veritable jungle of tense situations to an amazing climax.

Hailed by critics everywhere as one of the really big pictures of the day, the Cosmopolitan Production, "Humoresque" will be shown at the Nickel commencing Monday next. The story is by Fannie Hurst. Keep your eyes on "Humoresque."

Gallagher and Shean.

THE MAE EDWARDS PLAYERS OFFER A PRIZE FOR THE BEST VERSE.

CAN ANYONE BEAT THIS ONE? Oh! Mr. Gallagher! Oh! Mr. Gallagher! They tell me that you raised the price of fish. That Morins and Coaker said that they wished that you were dead. But you can have the honors if you wish. Now Mr. Shean! Now Mr. Shean! Do not know precisely what you mean. I am not the one who blows. But ask Cowan, the man who knows. Did you do it? Mr. Gallagher? Yes, didn't Mr. Shean. Submitted by The Cowan Brokerage Co., Ltd.—nov29,21

"Whom Shall I Marry?"

BIG SUCCESS AS PLAYED BY MAE EDWARDS COMPANY.

Another crowded house hung with breathless interest on the answer to the question contained in the title of the play, as above, presented by the Mae Edwards Company at the Casino Theatre last night. While the preceding plays put on by this favorite troupe have been more or less of a light comedy nature, "Whom Shall I Marry," is of the heavier style, and in its rendition called for all the talent and histrionic skill of the performers, and the response was by no means unworthy of the theme. Miss Edwards as Agnes Moran had a role which demanded much attention, and called for the best acting possible, but the star rose to the occasion and demonstrated her versatility, particularly in the second act, when her portrayal of the wife of the rich man excelled all her previous efforts. Mr. Charles T. Smith took a leading part, as John Bland, and both surprised and delighted the audience with his personation. Mr. Smith can act. Mr. J. Warner Corbin was as usual at home in his part, and needless to say was as to the character born. As Kitty Moran, Miss Marie Fischer, playing almost through the whole scenes as vis a vis to Malcolm Murray (Harold Bland) again revived the charm which she undoubtedly possesses, and delighted the whole audience. Miss Fischer and Mr. Murray make a splendid duo, and take their parts naturally and easily. Mr. C. J. Pichney, who acted in the role of Good Advice, was his clever self, while Mr. William Walker, showed to good advantage in the minor role of James. The soubrette of the play, Miss Gertrude Riggs, who took the part of Lillian Moran, scored another triumph. This lady has a whole series of these to her credit now. The one and only Bert Crawford on Michael Moran was in great humor and is never better employed than when giving his audience something to take away the "blues." A part of the side show was a trombone solo by Mr. Hugh Lambert, which was highly appreciated. Between the acts, entirely new features were introduced. "Whom Shall I Marry" will be repeated tonight, when those who were unable to secure tickets last night, will have an opportunity of enjoying a play which should not be missed.

Hockeyists Meet.

The Pelidians hockey team held their annual meeting on Monday night last when arrangements for the coming season's games were finalized. The Pelidians, who have had a very strong aggregation for some years back, having lifted the championship for the past three seasons are again determined to hold their laurels, judging by the enthusiasm at the meeting. All the old players have decided to don hockey armour again, while several recruits are also ready to throw in their lot. Mr. T. V. Parn was re-elected Captain for a fourth successive season. Mr. M. G. Winter, Jr., sub-captain and Mr. H. H. Hayward, secretary while Mr. J. J. Strang was appointed team manager and league delegate. A meeting of the Nfld. Hockey Association will be held next week, when the coming season's schedule of games will be taken up.

The Humber Deal and Refurning Laborers.

Yesterday's Advocate referring to an article in the Telegram says "the story of men returning from Deer Lake is false, as the only ones returning are four or five men who were unused to the work." The Telegram had its information from a source that can be relied upon, and has no hesitation in again stating that out of a gang of 24 men sent from here over 20 have returned, others are begging to be sent home. The item was not intended, as the Advocate would like people to believe—to kill the Humber Proposition. The Telegram welcomes the opening of every avenue of employment, but objects to a distressed body of men being sent to work in the wilds, without any preparation or arrangement for their comfort, in order that a big splurge could be made to boost the fortunes of a tottering government.

Telling The Story.

The report of the mass meeting called by the members of the Opposition party in the House of Assembly, and held in the Star Theatre last night, published elsewhere in this issue, should be read and considered with more than ordinary attention. The main purpose of the meeting was to get the Northern fishermen now in the city disposing of their season's catch, assembled together in order that the true condition of the country's affairs at the present time may be laid before them in all their baldness and nakedness. Many of these men had never before seen the members of his Majesty's Loyal Opposition in Newfoundland, and there must have been rather a disillusionment when our good friends from the Northern districts discovered by ocular demonstration that the gentlemen on the platform did not in anyway resemble the pictures painted of them in the Advocate. It was rather significant of the contemptibility of Government partisans, no less than their fear of exposure that there was originated an attempt to break up the meeting by the priming of a number of henchmen with that object in view. Said henchmen, true to their party obligations, attended, but he would be a brave man indeed who endeavored to interrupt the proceedings last night. One or two with more bravado than discretion did essay to carry out their intention, but the stern warnings handed out to them, caused a realization that discretion was the better part of (alcoholic) valor. Afterwards the conduct of these would be hecklers was such that would not disgrace a drawing room reception. And it was well for them that they desisted. The story as told by the members of the Opposition party, all of whom were on the platform, was a revelation to the men from the North, and amazement was depicted on their countenances as chapter after chapter of the Government's misdoings and extravagance was read by the different speakers. That there will be a story to take home and cogitate over during the long winter ahead, means that at length the people are alive to the situation. The prophets of the Government have for days been preaching that the Opposition is divided; that there is no cohesion among the members; that they are not loyal to each other and to their leader. Last night's meeting proved these prophecies to be without any basis of foundation whatever, for the Opposition phalanx was present with not a break in the ranks or an idea of secession in the minds of any member thereof. Mr. Higgins, the popular senior member for St. John's East, struck the true note when he declared that there would be no amalgamation with Coaker. Both were equally detestable politically. Thus the Opposition have declared themselves.

A Special Meeting of the T.A. & B.S. Ladies' Auxiliary will be held to-night, Thursday, at 8.30 o'clock in the T.A. Hall. All members are requested to be present. L. O'DEA, Secretary, nov30, 11.

We have been asked by those in authority to request that all business, men, citizens and vessel owners and masters, fly flags on their premises, houses and shipping in honor of the arrival of our new Governor, Sir William Allardice, who is coming by S. S. Sachem. Should the ship arrive during the night, the official landing will not take place until the following morning, when it is expected that a fine display of bunting will give a tone of color in welcome to the representative of his Majesty.

Official Programme

OF HIS EXCELLENCY'S ARRIVAL AND LANDING. A wireless message from the S.S. "Sachem" has been received by His Excellency the Administrator from which he learns that the ship will arrive in port to-morrow, Friday morning. The Administrator, Sir William Horwood, and the Acting Prime Minister, Hon. George Shea, will proceed on board to welcome His Excellency. The official landing will be made at 10 o'clock at the King's Wharf, where his Excellency will meet the members of the Executive Government. A Guard of Honour under the command of Inspector General Hutchings will be present. His Excellency will then proceed to Government House where he will be sworn into office by the Chief Justice, after which the Governor will swear in the members of the Executive Council.

Schooner Winnifred Abandoned.

CREW TAKEN OFF—VESSEL SET ON FIRE. The Deputy Minister of Customs received the following message yesterday evening from the Sub Collector at Marystown:—Capt. Lambert of the schooner "Winnifred" from Sydney to St. John's, coal laden, sheltered here last night and reported that in company with the Schr. Catherine Moulton, about 4 o'clock Saturday evening, when about 90 miles north of west of St. Pierre they came upon the Schr. Winnifred in a sinking condition. The crew were taken off by the Catherine Moulton and the abandoned vessel set on fire.

During all these years he has assisted by correspondence, and otherwise taken an interest in Newfoundland poultry culture.

Opposition Meeting A Splendid Success.

Star Theatre Crowded to the Doors.

Uncompromising Hostility to Present Government--No Amalgamation With Either Squires or Coaker.

That the United Fishermen's Movement inaugurated about two months ago has stirred the citizens of St. John's to a realization of the disaster which threatens to overwhelm this country if the present government does not change its system of management, was fully demonstrated by the mass meeting held last night in the Star Theatre. After the announcement in the daily papers that the opposition party in the House of Assembly were going to hold a public meeting, government heeled were hired to attend in order to break up the meeting if possible, and thus thwart any expression of public opinion on the wrong doings of the present administration. Despite the efforts of a few previously primed juries, the meeting was a grand success. Those who were sent to interrupt after being warned once or twice realized that the gathering would brook no nonsense and desisted. The meeting was called for 8 o'clock but long before that hour the hall was filled. The seating capacity is 1050 but it is estimated that 1500 were present as many had to stand in the alley ways, aisles, doorways and vestibules. Whilst waiting for the meeting to open the people of the theatre gave a showing of several comic reels. The audience was made up of all sections of the community and a goodly number of fishermen from the outports. All the members of the opposition party were on the platform. Shortly after 8 o'clock Chairman John Caldwell called the meeting to order. His opening remarks were a brief outline of the purpose of the meeting. His announcement that Sir Michael Cashin would be the first speaker was greeted with rounds of applause. Sir Michael Cashin on coming forward was given three cheers and a tiger. After thanking the audience for their reception and especially their attendance on such a stormy night, he said, when one looked on the sea of faces it struck a note that portrayed the amount of thought running in the minds of the people of the colony. He then explained the object of the meeting, which up to 45 hours before he was not aware was to be held. He said that during that time it had been intimated to him both by men from the outports and city that it was desirable to hold a meeting and put before the people something of the political situation. Taking his auditors back to the adjournment of the House of Assembly last spring, Sir Michael said all were aware that the Legislature was adjourned until Oct. 31, and all were of opinion that it would open according to that order. But 45 hours before that date without any notice of the intention it was gazetted that the House was to be prorogued. A deputation from the Opposition waited on the Administrator and asked if such was the case. The Administrator said that at the request of the Government, owing to the Prime Minister and Minister of Justice being out of the country, and the Humber arrangements not being finalized, the House was being prorogued till December 20th. The Opposition protested against this procedure, and asked that the House meet as was arranged. It was of no avail, however, and the Prime Minister is still out of the country and apparently nothing is being done to meet the situation. Members of the United Fishermen's movement who came to town within the past few weeks in reference to the price of fish when they asked to see representatives of the Government who were in the city could get no satisfaction. They were told that the Government could do nothing, and concessions had to be forced from them. Nothing was being done by the present administration to meet the situation. Turning back to the last general election Sir Michael said that on Nov. 15th, 1919, when the Cashin administration passed over the reins to the administration of Richard Squires, there was a surplus of four million dollars, ($4,000,000). Up to then the people's party had held office for 10 years. The country was prosperous and contented. It had been run as a business proposition but representation were made by the present holders to the people was to the contrary. You can never get back to that period of contentment and prosperity, why? Because the four million dollars of surplus is gone! 12 million dollars have been borrowed and are also gone, and the Budget speech calls for a revenue of nine million dollars to run the country. How can this revenue be collected under present conditions when the total exports will not amount to $16,000,000? In 1919 the exports were valued at $25,000,000. Then the people were contented, but how many to-day had to curtail expenses in their homes, how many were without the necessities of life? The fishermen can not purchase because of the low value of their product. Fish was worth $12.00 a quintal, while to-day it is $4.00 and $4.50 with $5.00 for Shore. How can the fishermen exist at those prices, with the taxation he is carrying. It is the fisheries we have to depend upon for our livelihood. They represent 80% of the earning power of the colony. No matter what happened if Newfoundland was to exist the fisheries must be prosecuted for years to come. How many Humber Propositions we may have. If this is correct it is not time to ask the Government what they are going to do to remedy the present situation? Since their election the present Government have not stopped one minute to consider retrenchment. They were elected on a retrenchment policy and if the people were ground down in 1919 what is their condition now. Since their election to power the present administration have spent $39,000,000, they have increased the public debt by $15,000,000 and they have spent each month they have been in charge of the affairs of this country the enormous sum of $1,250,000. Yet what have they got to show for it? Nothing, absolutely nothing. We are faced with $3,000,000 yearly as interest on the public debt, which is now over $55,000,000 for a country with a population of 250,000 people. It is now time for the people to cry halt. You may be promised work on the Humber. The proposition may be all right, and I may vote for it yet, but the Humber Proposition will not get us out of the position we are in. Although the position at present is gloomy and you may say we can never retrieve our prosperity. I believe that if the right people are given charge of affairs of the country can be saved. What was to impress on the people is the consideration of the colony to-day and the need of retrenchment. No attempt is made to curtail expenditure in the least and our young men are leaving the country in their thousands. Why only this past season, 8,000 of the flower of the country's manhood has emigrated. Such a condition has not prevailed for the past 40 years. Yet we are sitting idly by, and allowing this sort of thing to continue. It is now time for the people to rise up in their might and place those who are responsible for this state of affairs in their proper places. It is our duty to you to acquaint you of these conditions, and if we have a proposition to make which will help stop this condition of affairs it is your duty to assist. The members of this Government have ridden rough shod over you. How long have they been actually at home attending to their duties? The House is no sooner closed than they are off to England and enjoying themselves for months at the country's expense, while the people are suffering from starvation and destitution. The Government were no sooner elected than they looked to themselves, and increased their own indemnities from $200 to $1,000 while Ministers were increased from $2,000 to $4,000. Men who could never earn $1,000 a year in a lifetime, were given $4,000, so that they could not be independent if they tried.

Take again the pulp wood scandal. The sum of $500,000 was spent on pulpwood throughout the country, and the returns elicited in the House of Assembly last spring showed that $500,000 only were returned. The whole state of affairs was disgraceful, and has never been equalled in the history of responsible government in Newfoundland. There was nothing but scandal after scandal and these were the people who were going to revolute the public life of the country? They even brought detectives here to enquire into the doings of Cashin and his followers, but the real criminals are still at large in this country to-day, and a day of reckoning is now drawing near. Referring to the $400,000 supply scandal, Sir Michael mentioned the case of where Mr. Coaker had taken $75,000 of the country's funds to purchase supplies for his supporters and did not make one cent return until the matter was brought up in the House by the Opposition. Three days after Mr. Coaker paid back $35,000 but no one knows if the balance is yet returned. Then again, there was the case of Mr. Gosse and the other members of the Government who received $5,000 for supplies and returned not one cent. Justice to the people cannot be expected from men of this calibre, said Sir Michael. Members who would act like this with public monies are guilty just as sure as men who would go to the Bank and steal. Telling of his visit around the Island this year, Sir Michael referred to another little scandal, that of making large expenditure on Executive responsibility. In this case a $30,000 proposition was going ahead that never came before the House of Assembly. Speaking of the small differences in prices being paid at present for Shore and Labrador fish, Sir Michael said all this was governed by the law of supply and demand in Canada, a great fish producer than this country, they were disposing of their catch by the ordinary methods of business. Yet here Mr. Coaker must have regulations. His latest policy is one of pooling. What is needed is not tinkering with the fish business, but a reduction of taxation to the 1914 basis. Before closing he spoke of the much talked of Humber proposition. He had little information on the subject as none was available, but from what he could learn, it is a case that the British Government are guaranteeing £2,000,000, which must be spent in England for machinery, etc. for the plant, while the Newfoundland Government has to guarantee £2,000,000 to develop the property. He hoped it would be a paying proposition, but from what he could see no one was going to work up there for $2.00 a day in mud and slush. It was only a sham to send those men out there at this season of the year to sleep in tents with boughs for beds. He was not enthusiastic over the proposition as it looked. The fishery was the bigger of the two, however, and even if the Humber is a success, it will take years before it is going to pay the fishery. He had great hope for the country, but we must look around ourselves and consider where we are driving at present. We are in a hopeless condition and it is up to the people to drive the present incapables from office. He wished the people to bring the facts that he had laid before them, home, and digest them. Should the present administration continue and other loans be made, we will be driven into the status of a Crown Colony. It was up to the people now to realize what was happening and the gathering present was an indication that they were awakening to the peril. In concluding he thanked the audience for their hearing and hoped that within the next three or four months, something would transpire to put a brighter outlook before the country. Mr. J. B. Bennett was the next speaker. He feared that the able and exhaustive speech of Sir Michael Cashin had left very little for him to say, but would keep such a large audience interested for a length of time so that his remarks would be brief. He was glad to see present such a gathering of citizens, business men, laborers and professional men. This meeting would be a red letter in the annals of St. John's and it was seldom that the Opposition party had the opportunity of addressing such a gathering representing people from all over the Island. It was apparent that the question uppermost in the minds of the people at present time is the reduction of taxation, for it is apparent on all sides that the great majority of people are unable to live under the present extremely high tax. The first question that naturally suggests itself is—what is the cause of the necessity, and why does the Government require to raise the enormous revenue of nine million dollars annually, whereas, in 1914, the entire revenue of four and a half million dollars was more than sufficient to meet all requirements? The question is partially answered by the fact that during the war the value of our exports jumped to an unprecedented height, thereby increasing our purchasing power, and our imports in a like manner increased in due proportion. These conditions brought about an increased expenditure in the cost of Civil Government, but unfortunately after the war the value of our exports fell enormously which naturally affected our imports and thereby reduced the revenue, and it is here that our present trouble begins.

When our revenues started to decline, instead of reducing the expenditure in due proportion, the Government in their folly put on additional taxation by adding the Sur-tax, Super-tax, Sales-tax and every other tax imaginable to keep the Treasury filled to meet the superfluous expenditure created since their advent of office. It is quite true that the war had done was increased fifteen million dollars—the cost to us of the national provisions made for pensions of soldiers and sailors and their dependents, but it must be borne in mind that no attempt whatever was made to bring back the cost of administration in keeping with the value of our exports and imports, so that one might come within a reasonable distance of balancing the other.

When the last administration went out of office, between three and four million dollars were left in the Treasury to provide for after-war contingencies. This money, as well as 12 millions of dollars, which have since been borrowed, and possibly two million more raised (or to be raised) as temporary loans, make a total of millions of dollars that have been added to the liabilities of this country since the present Government took office, or in other words $72,000 per head, or $360.00 per family have been taken from the people of this country during this period, and nothing whatever of a tangible nature exists to-day to represent this sum.

Think of it! The entire exports from this country in 1916, including Bell Island ore, Grand Falls paper and pulp, all our fishing products and other commodities, did not surpass this sum. You will naturally ask a great question, how has this money been spent and even if some few people benefitted through the getting of fish supplies and work through a period of unemployment, look what a legacy is left behind for all time 5% or 6% on eighteen million dollars is over a million dollars a year, or $25.00 per annum for every household in the entire country, not alone for the present but for our children after us, $20.00 or $25.00 would purchase two or three bushels of flour to-day. You have not got to pay it—no you paid it during the past season either through your merchant or shopkeeper to the Custom House for what is known as "Import Duties." Every time you go into a store to make a purchase for either Provisions, Groceries, Clothing or any other necessities, a certain part of the price of the article is paying the interest on the money that has been extravagantly squandered and spent. Even this would be tolerated if those who are responsible for it did not promise us something better, but instead of acting as conscientious stewards of the people's interests and remaining in their offices and looking after the trust committed to them, they one and all, almost without exception, considered their own convenience and pleasure, and just as soon as the House of Assembly closed each year they disappeared to foreign parts. The Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice are particularly guilty in this respect. The former left here the first of July with the promise that he would return in six weeks, five months have now transpired and he is not back yet. The Minister of Justice returned yesterday after being absent for a like period. And as you all know, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries has absolutely abandoned his office for the last two years, and not alone is this criminal neglect of public duties demoralizing the whole public service, but the over-burdened taxpayer will be called upon to pay larger sums to meet the expenses of these wandering ministers and those officials who accompany them.

The absence of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries from his office has become a scandal of high magnitude, particularly under conditions as exist to-day when so many of our people are vitally concerned as to the present and future conduct of the fisheries of this country. It is an admitted fact and was clearly proven and shown to the Government last spring that the proposition of catching fish and marketing it at present prices, and having to pay the enormous high tariff the country is struggling under, makes the prosecution of the fishery an impracticable business proposition to-day.

Something must be done and done quickly. The objectionable Sur-tax, Super-tax, and other taxes that are strangling the life out of the people of the country will have to be removed because no possible improvement can be obtained until this is done. No renewal of confidence will be placed until those responsible for the present conditions of the country are set aside and sound practical business men, representative of all classes, given the charge to put the country on a solid business basis.

You may ask—how can things be improved? Hundreds of thousands of dollars can be saved, not only with the application of an unerring hand, but with the use of a few branches and dead wood. Go into the Agricultural Station, see the cost of a lot of unnecessary animals whose only use is to contribute to the unnecessary expenditure on the construction of a school which we have done for the past century. Look at the extravagant addition to the school which could have been done. Take a look on Water Street, the expenditure of the sea-side ponds to no-where. What is St. John's and the surrounding for economy with regard to money, and so the criminal without let or hindrance. Before I conclude, let me say what I think can be done now. 10th Annual Poultry Show.

OPENED BY HIS EXCELLENCY THE ADMINISTRATOR-LARGE CROWDS VIEW EXHIBITION.

The opening of the 10th Annual Poultry Exhibition took place in the C.A.B. Armoury yesterday afternoon. Professor J. P. Landry of the Agricultural College, Toronto, N.S., who arrived in the city by Monday's express to make the awards, was present all yesterday afternoon and was particularly struck with the fine breeds of birds on display. The White and Buff Orpingtons, White and Banded Plymouth Rocks have been already judged. The Professor found that the different classes had shown up exceptionally well over previous years, very little being left to choose between the beauty and quality of the birds. His Excellency the Administrator, Sir William Horwood, declared the show officially opened at 8 p.m. His Excellency in his remarks referred briefly to poultry raising in this country, and in concluding he wished the Association every success. The President, Mr. Geo. R. Williams thanked his Excellency for his attendance and the happy remarks tendered the Association. The formal opening was witnessed by a large gathering of people and each and all as they wended their way by sections to the various coops felt very much pleased with the excellent showing made. It certainly reflects great credit on the part of all those who have gone into poultry raising on such a large scale, and for the great care and attention that had been exercised in arranging to have the poultry placed on exhibition. The collection of birds, numbering 700 in all, is the finest exhibit arranged since the inception of the exhibition. They are classed by sections, and placed in their various pens. The S.C. White Leghorn consist of a very large exhibit, while a large collection of Rhode Island Reds, Wyandottes and Banded Plymouth Rocks are to be seen. The White Plymouths are a beautiful string of birds in particular, while a fine assortment of White Chinese Geese owned by the Department Agriculture are also on exhibition, but are not entering into the competition. Also on exhibition is a model commercial poultry run, made from paper, which is the work of Mr. W. K. Chaney of Grand Falls. The farm is built on a large area of ground judging by the scale of measurement, and contains up-to-date poultry houses, barns and outhouses. It is indeed a fine piece of workmanship and was viewed with much admiration by those who had the pleasure of seeing it last night. There is also on display a fine collection of eggs, eight in all, taking part in the competition. Many of the eggs are very large and compare very favourably with those previously shown. The Association also has a large model poultry house on exhibition near the entrance of the building. It is well built and shows exactly what a hen's house should really look like. The measurements are 12x12 and it is divided into three sections. This will be lotteried many of the tickets having been already disposed of last night. During the evening Professor Landry gave a lecture on poultry culture in the gymnasium of the Armoury, which was illustrated with moving pictures. Four reels were shown, and much information was given in egg laying, care of the fowls, and the methods to be exercised in the raising of an incubator, while a study was also made on vegetable raising on the farm. The lecture was most instructive and proved very interesting to all. Professor Landry will continue his series of lectures this evening, commencing at 8 o'clock. The poultry display also includes a large and well selected class of birds belonging to the outports. These are on the whole generally good, particularly the splendid string of Banded Plymouth Rocks by Mr. W. K. Chaney of Grand Falls, who has already won several first prizes. The judging will be continued to-day and a complete list of the prize winners will appear when all the awards have been completed. The show will remain open until Friday night, when Lady Horwood has kindly consented to present the champion silver cups and ribbons to the various winners.

Those well known and justly famous teas served by the Ladies' College Aid Society in the Methodist College Hall on Wednesday and Thursday, Nov 27 & 28.

SPECIAL SALE LARGELY PATRON-
ED. MRS. (HON.) S. K. BELL OPENS EVENT.

The annual sale of work under the auspices of the Newfoundland Network College Ladies' Aid Society was held in the Methodist College Hall yesterday afternoon at 3 o'clock. Mrs.
S. K. Bell declaring the sale officially opened. Taking into consideration the wretched weather an attendance of all yesterday afternoon was present, and there was a large attendance present, and the ladies occupied the various stalls were busily attending to the wants of purchasers. After the opening the sale one continuous rush was maintained, which indicated that a large sum was being realized. The display of the hall presented a very pleasant scene, the numerous decorations adding greatly to the all-round attractive appearance of the stalls. Articles of all descriptions, including plain, vegetable, ice cream,
and other items were on sale,
and the Beauty Parlor, which showed to advantage was largely patronized. During the afternoon teas were served. Mrs. Charles Bowden acted as a specially arranged children's table and the ladies and her capable assistants were kept very busy all the afternoon. The kiddies spent a pleasing afternoon, having greatly enjoyed the various amusements, grab bags,
and the spread of the evening,
which consisted of a turkey supper and all the delicious side dishes im-portable was served from 6 to 8 o'clock.
The tables, five in number,
were overlaid with a beautiful stu-per of good things, and looked very attractive, being suitably decorated for the occasion. The high teas were very patronized, while the ladies in attendance were constantly looking for the wants of all, being both helpful and obliging. During the evening the sale was continued with the same vim and bustle, and before the closing hour, practically all the stock of many of the stalls had been bought up. All however, will be replenished for the continuance of the sale tomorrow. The sale was in creased largely by the happy knack the ladies have of displaying their goods, everyone feeling quite satisfied with the returns of the afternoon and evening, and will be sure to return to the stalls to which the following articles have kindly offered to contribute—Organ solo, Mr.
William Christian, L.R.A.M.; duet,
Mrs. Garland and Miss Mauder; singing by Mrs. Outerbridge and Miss Parker, and solos by Mesdames Gertrude Christian, and H. Small. Miss Taylor and Messrs. Karl Trapp,
W. Tucker, A. Lawrence and H.
Bernard.

Lubrication of Monongahela.
PLAN OF PITTSBURGHERS.

The Monongahela problem may be solved this winter by local scientists.
Lubrication of the Monongahela river is the keynote of an idea which is being developed at the Mellon Institute. Dr. H. B. Mellor, dean of the Faculty, and officials of the war Department and weather bureau are cooperating.

The Monongahela, according to scientists, is the chief villain in Pitsburgh's war troubles. The river, which is warmer than the air sweeping through the valley, gives up a portion of its water which rises as fog and quickly cools.

A film of oil prevents this union,
and the problem for the investigators at Mellon Institute was to concoct a mixture that could be used at a reasonable expense.

The recent twelve minute tornado near York, which capsized 250 boats and caused the death of fifty people, brought to one's realization the great power of the wind when it works at its full pressure. Happily, when it is in its most furious mood, we are usually even warning.

The following table gives the different speeds of wind, according to the usual meteorological descriptions:

1. Barely perceptible 1 mile per hour;
2. Perceptible 2 miles; gentle breeze
3. Brisk wind, 10 miles; very
4. Wind 20 to 25 miles; high wind,
5. Wind 30 to 40 miles; very high wind, 45 miles;
6. Hurricane, 50 miles; great storm, 60 miles;
7. Hurricane, 80 miles. And great hurricane, capable of carrying trees beneath it, 100 miles an hour.

When a tempest blackens the sky, the wind may rush over the water at 60 miles an hour; but the waves, assisted by other forces, will travel 20 miles per hour faster.

The greatest speed of wind recorded was that at Wallingford,
Conn., during a cyclone on March 29, 1856. The pace was 100 miles under 1250
feet an hour.

Russet and Gold.

The leaves are russet and gold Donald. Summer has said good-bye. The year is fast growing old. Donald. The same, dear, as you and I. Side by side through the springtime. With garlands upon our brow. Through summer's glad day. We have passed on our way. But it's russet and gold for us now.

Russet and gold, russet and gold. That is the time when the leaves are growing old. Smile 'neath the sun Of life's work bravely done. And rest comes, and peace, with the russet and gold.

Condor is King of Air.

ROOSTS ON LOFTY LEDGES—HAS WING EXPENSE OF 12 FEET.

Scientists have determined that the California condor exceeds in size its cousin, the condor of the Andes of South America, and is larger than the giant or wandering albatross, which travels the ocean lanes of the Pacific, south of the equator. The extreme wing expanse of the California condor is close to 12 feet. Through careful measurements, the scientists learned that the condor of the southern countries is smaller in all respects.

One of these largest birds that fly is on exhibition in the Natural History Museum at San Diego, Cal. Beside the condor, the turkey buzzard, a smaller relative, appears to be a dwarf. Both birds are carrion eaters, a fact which has contributed substantially to the near-extinction of the condor.

The condor's favorite haunts for roosting and breeding are at elevations of 10,000 to 15,000 feet. There, during the months of February and March, on inaccessible ledges of rock, it deposits two white eggs, from three to four inches in length, its nest consisting merely of a few sticks placed around the eggs.

Another Story About About Ben Adhem.

About Ben Adhem the 12th sat bolt upright in bed. A shaft of moonlight streaming in through the window disclosed to the startled Adhem an angelic sort of figure writing in a gold-plated book.

"What's the idea?" demanded Adhem of the angelic person in some asperity, as he rubbed his eyes and shivered in the chill room.

The visitor responded shortly and to the point. "I want to get a line on you chaps," he said. "You're a candidate for senator, aren't you?"

"I'll say I am," responded About Ben Adhem. "A candidate 100 per cent for the people."

"Old stuff," commented the angel. "But, lemme see. You have a platform?"

"Yes," replied Adhem.

"Harbor and land improvements guaranteed locally, I suppose?"

"Not at all. If I can get 'em all right. But I'm not promising anything that I'm not sure I can get."

"How 'bout free gasoline for your constituents; have you promised them that?"

"Nope."

"Going to abolish the income tax, or anything like that?"

"I haven't promised."

"Have you told 'em you'd get 'em all the coal they needed at a low price?"

"No such promise."

"Haven't you promised them anything? What'll I put you down for, then?"

"No," responded Adhem. "I haven't promised the voters anything. I believe they will recognize sincerity, and sincerity is not made up of rash promises. You can put me down as a lover of my fellow-man."

The angelic figure departed from the room with his gold-plated book. A few days later the election returns were tabulated and, lo, Ben Adhem's name trailed all the rest.

Indian Ideal. The old fable that the Indian is a dead Indian is a dead Indian. The present public opinion is for instance, the Seminoles are Indians. Frequently in the times on the frontier, Indians warned settlers of trouble or sheltered them in emergency passed.

Many stories of the show that numerous individuals served to be classed as "good" following incident in the case of a government survivor who that "goodness" is not the possession of the white man. The surveying party was in the one of the chainmen became necessary to send to a boring Indian agency for one who could speak English in place of the sick man. After a few days, the young Indian chosen for this purpose, was employer and asked for release, survivor, reluctant to give up pet and much needed help, mentioned him as to the reason going. His answer might be for thought to many who regard themselves as his superior. "I must, I must go back to my people," he said. "Your young use bad oaths and if I stay in the Ojibway language, the survivor called his men together and told them that the appeal was not lost upon them. They had erred, as do so many rather through thoughtlessness purpose. The result was that family was almost completely up in that camp, and the latter continued at his work.

England Does Not Need Gulf Stream.

LONDON.—Science has come forward recently to destroy another of man's long cherished illusions, but at the same time it has removed a source of constant anxiety to those who would attempt to understand the causes of climatic conditions. M. Danois, the well-known hydrologist, who has made a special study of the waters of the Atlantic, has declared that the temperate climate of the British Isles and the northern coast of France does not depend on the Gulf Stream, and that its diversion would not therefore leave this section of the world in the grip of an Arctic winter. M. Danois claims to have proved that the Gulf Stream, rising to the north of the Antilles, does not pass the Sargasso Sea, and the notion must be discarded that it traverses the Atlantic to bathe the shores of England and France. He expresses the view that the Gulf Stream is merely the backbone of the equatorial currents. Summer heat provokes dilations of the heavily salted equatorial waters, which translate themselves into permeations of the more lightly salted Arctic and Continental waters. It is these permeations in the eastern Atlantic which have been mistaken for branches of the Gulf Stream. They are, however, purely local currents and vary according to the season.

Only a Match-Stick.

THAT LITTLE BIT OF WOOD WHICH WE THROW AWAY CAUSED SCIENTISTS MUCH TROUBLE.

Probably no object in everyday use receives less attention than a match-stick; such a simple thing doesn't seem worth bothering about.

Simple it may be, but the perfect match-stick has to satisfy quite a number of conditions, and thousands of chemical and engineering experiments had to be tried before all the requirements were satisfied.

The perfect match-stick must be strong enough not to break when the match is struck. It must hold the chemical "head" securely. The shape and texture should be such that the flame quickly gets a good hold. When the match is blown out the charred stick must not glow, nor must the head drop off.

It must be long enough to burn for a reasonable time without burning the fingers. There must be no danger of splinters entering the fingers. Lastly, the appearance must be attractive—a requirement that is best met by a white wood.

Two woods stand out as specially suitable for match-sticks—white pine and aspen. White pine is a valuable wood, applicable to many uses, whereas aspen is suitable for little else than matches. Aspen, therefore, has been adopted in England and on the Continent.

Why It Is Square.

After careful consideration it was decided that the best shape for a match is square. A square match is stronger than a round one because there is more wood in it. Moreover a square stalk is the best for holding the head, since there is a larger surface for the chemical paste to grip. Another condition met by the square stick is that of easy ignition, due to the corners catching more rapidly than would a round stick.

It is impossible to form a round splint without compressing the fibres of the wood to some degree, whereas a square stick can be made by splitting, which leaves the material more open in texture—a condition which not only aids combustion, but also allows the stick to absorb the fireproofing solution more readily. The fireproofing prevents the afterglow of the match when the flame has been blown out, and also keeps on the "spent" head.

Cub Cigarettes are appreciated, not only by the smoker but by those in his company.

Japanese Not White, Says U. S. Law.

Japanese are not white within the meaning of American law and are not entitled to citizenship in the United States, the Supreme Court held on November 14. The High Court affirmed a decision of the California Court of Appeals in a test case brought by Takao Ozawa of Honolulu, who claimed he was "white" and was eligible for naturalization as an American citizen. At the same time the court upheld the State of Washington Supreme Court in denying citizenship to Takuiji Yamasbata and Charles Hio Kono of Seattle. The decision held that the two Japanese were not entitled to naturalization under the United States laws and therefore could not enter a business partnership. The Supreme Court's decision in these cases has long been awaited, particularly on the Pacific Coast, where anti-Japanese feeling exists.

My Heart Would Palpitate, I Had Weak Spells

Dr. L. Whiting, 202 King St. West, Brockville, Ont.

"I took very sick with my nerves and stomach, and seemed to be all run down. At times my heart would flutter and palpitate and I would take such weak spells in the pit of my stomach that I sometimes thought I would never get better. I had almost given up hope when a friend advised the use of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food. I did not stop until I had taken twenty-five boxes. It has done wonders for me and I want to recommend it to everyone."

Secret History of Sinn Fein

(By SHAW DESMOND in London Magazine.)

"THE UNKNOWN GUEST."
The story of the hiding-places of the "run" would fill a volume. It is a fascinating page of the service side of Sinn Fein. In the "Black North" slept in garrets and in the hillsides, and declared it a sovereign remedy for the "Unknown Guest." But at one time the names of the dreadful Dublin tenements were accustomed to have their names written in small hours, and walk out again the morning without a word being said. The "Unknown Guest," at one time part of the daily life of the Irish capital.

My interest my readers to in some of the difficulties in getting to touch with the "inner circle" of Irish thought to a country every man is "suspect." The writer had met with repeated checks in his endeavour to speak with the men behind the scenes who mattered, and had almost given up hope when a chance meeting led him to a certain street one morning at a certain hour he saw before him at a certain spot a man in a dark coat buttoned up to his chin, that this man would be a better individual exposed as represented, and followed a couple of steps behind, turning the corner, he saw him turning the great double door of a building in ruins. The man turned his head, but walked the water following.

How you were behind all the facts about the attempt to land arms by the German A.D. By the most extraordinary combination of circumstances, this tramp got through the thority. There was no German plot." The document on "Army organization," then attributed to him and said to be in his handwriting, and of which so much was made at the time, as a matter of fact was not in his handwriting, which is characteristic. Nor was it composed by the ex-President. The document upon "Communications," of which he was accused at that time, had nothing whatever to do with Germany, and was only for the purpose of preventing the threatening coming of conscription. Of such cowboys are "plots" sometimes made.

Of the real German plot surely the maddest of all madneses, when Sir Roger Casement landed from a German submarine on the coast of Tralee, not ten men in Ireland knew there being two intermediaries between Germany and Ireland, one of them, Joseph Mary Plunkett; the other, Roger Casement, both of them now dead. The veil may be lifted to this extent, Germany did agree to guarantee Ireland's independence, but there were two men in Ireland who believed, and rightly, that Germany would pay a little regard to this assurance as suited them. The actual fact is that from the beginning it was Berlin's intention to hold Ireland in pawn, even if victorious, and this was discovered by Sir Roger Casement himself ere he set sail from Germany, as I have seen in his own

The most astounding fact of all is that Casement himself never trusted the Kaiser or Ludendorff, played a deep game against them, and meant to "double-cross" them in the interests of Ireland.

I am in a position to give the secret facts about the attempt to land arms by the German A.D. By the most extraordinary combination of circumstances, this tramp got through the swarm of about forty destroyers and auxiliary cruisers sent out by the British Admiralty, which knew right from the beginning of every move, being excellently served by their intelligence. The A.D. reached Tralee on April 20th, but was not expected until the following day, when the Sinn Fein emissaries, Sheehan and Keating, were sent to take delivery.

Throughout the night of the 20th and the A.D. made the agreed signals, but getting no response, sailed away, and being intercepted by the British screen, blew herself up. Had she waited only another few hours, the masses of arms she carried would have been delivered, and with 50,000 men instead of 1,000 rifles, Ireland would have been aflame from end to end, with, at that critical period of the European War, grave results to the British Empire.

To come now to the future—to the dawn of a new Ireland. Has the Free State come to stay? The reply is: "Yes—at any rate in our day and generation—but the present Irish Free State will be modified ultimately in many essential particulars."

On my visits to Ireland in 1919 and 1920, when I had repeated conversations with Arthur Griffith, Desmond Fitzgerald, Ireland's arch propagandist, and other Sinn Fein leaders, I privately reached the conclusion that few of them, however intensely they desired it, really expected to get a Republic, but that the most of them would be satisfied with a full measure of Dominion Home Rule—which, by the way, the Treaty does not give Ireland, simply because England still retains strategic control of Irish ports, etc., no right of secession—which is implied, if not declared, in the case of the other British Dominions—is given.

What Griffith and the rest have been fighting for was just this "right of secession." Had any English statesman at any time had the imagination to have offered a full measure of Dominion Home Rule, plus the right of secession, Ireland would have jumped at it, and the Seven Hundred Years' War would have been finished for ever, for a free Ireland means a friendly Ireland. It is the nature of the Irishman ruthlessly logical though he be, to fight to the death for something which he may not always mean to use when he gets it.

These, and none other, are the facts, even if there should come a period of British interregnum. The Free State has come to stay. But perhaps for another six or twelve months there will be sporadic trouble with the irregular forces, the present head of his identity must still be concealed) of which recently said to me at his headquarters: "I would rather see Ireland once more occupied by British troops and her economic life destroyed than have the Treaty." And after the fighting has ceased, we shall see in the future Parliament of a United Ireland, in which Ulster will be fully represented, a minority of irreconcilables who will continue, but constitutionally, to demand the Republic or nothing.

De Valera's Cathal Brugha, and their other former Free State comrades, because, rightly or wrongly, they believed they were traitors to the Republic.

But we shall scarcely see De Valera in that Parliament, for he will probably, if spared, retire to his nefarious and his books. For De Valera, combination of modern Don Quixote and Chevalier Bayard, is student, not soldier.

Arthur Griffith had possibly, at his death, also played his major part in the story of Ireland, and left the principal role to his coadjutor, Michael Collins, who would have been the first President of a United Ireland. Collins was vitally necessary to a United Ireland, for he was the only Southerner for whom the Ulstermen had a sneaking regard, and we should once more have seen Craig and Collins with their heads together.

To speak quite frankly, the passing of Michael Collins has left a blank which it is quite impossible to fill with any of the men at present available. They are good men, but not great. Michael Collins, alone of them all, had the quality of "greatness." For a time the result will be almost, but not quite, disastrous to the new Free State, but the writer believes that, as always in Ireland, out of the unknown will come the Man to fit the Hour. Neither Alderman Cosgrave nor his colleagues, Mulcahy and Duggan, are strong enough ultimately to lead Ireland. She needs a new Parnell—and he will yet make his appearance. He will be some man now unknown. Like Collins, he will be a statesman-warrior.

ULSTER AND A UNITED IRELAND.

Ulster will come into a United Ireland before ten years are past, first, because she will find that it pays and that her taxation in a united island will be half what it is at present, and secondly, because of the most vital of all facts—the fact psychological; for the Ulsterman is an Irishman, although he does not always suspect it. My conversations with two of the present Ulster Ministers at the Ulster Reform Club and elsewhere some time ago, led me to this conclusion, however unintentional on their part, for they would strenuously deny it. Griffith himself told me that at all costs Ulster was essential to the future Ireland.

The Irish Labour Party is going to play the major role in Irish politics within the next decade, but upon lines quite other than those of its British brothers, for whom and their "stodginess" and lack of imagination, they lose no opportunity of expressing their contempt. The Irish worker is neither Socialist nor Bolshevik, he is rank individualist, and if Mr. Lenin conquered the rest of Europe he would still find Ireland the Isle Inviolable.

Jim Larkin, once "Ireland's Uncrowned King," is, I happen to know, coming back to trouble the Isle of Troubles.

Ireland's relation to the British Empire in the future will be governed by certain unchangeable considerations, for Ireland never changes. Let us take them seriatim.

First, that Ireland is Ireland, and cares literally not two straws for the great world outside. This isolation and detachment of the average Irishman from the rest of the world will never be illustrated than in the story of the old man in Cork who was told that his son had just won the V.C. on the Western front. "More power to him!" said the proud father. "I know we'll beat the damned English yet!"

Secondly, taking the above into account, if Germany, or any other country unfriendly to England, counts upon Ireland's co-operation, she will make a very grave mistake, for although Ireland may not passionately fight for England she will fight to the death for Ireland and to keep Irish soil free of any invader.

Typewriter That Writes Words.

A typewriter that writes, at the touch of a finger, words as well as letters, has been put on the market by a British inventor.

First, he selected the twenty-one words that he found to be in most common use. These are: "As, at, all, are, be, by, but, for, he, it, in, is, is not, of, on, to, the, we, was, you," which, according to the inventor, constituted approximately 31.8 per cent. of the words in everyday use, the sentence he selects as an example being: "Now is the time for all good men to come to the aid of the party," in which nine of the sixteen words may be written on his typewriter, each by a single touch. Mr. Bennington uses a standard keyboard with extra keys for these words arranged on three sides of it. The machine itself has several other features, which, it is claimed, are improvements, including an escapement-lock which makes it possible to write in any direction.

Mammoth Cave.

Mammoth cave breathes once a year, that is to say, in summer when the temperature of the external air is above that of the cave the current sets from the latter to the former. In fact, the cave is the entire summer making an expiration.

On the other hand, when the order is reversed or the outer atmosphere is below 54 degrees the cave makes an inspiration, or draws in its breath. This is accomplished during the winter. Hence it is frequently observed

Fashions and Fads.

In the spring and autumn that there is no motion of air in either direction at the mouth of the cave.

In summer when the temperature is near 100 degrees the air rushes out at the entrance to the cave with such force as frequently to extinguish lanterns carried by visitors. This condition prevails, however, for only a few yards.

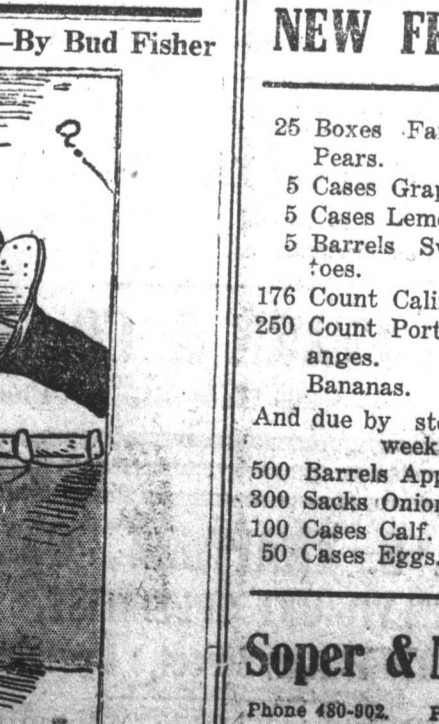

If a current of air blows from without inward and is below 54 degrees it does not pass more than a quarter of a mile before it is brought up to that point. Air above the average temperature of the cave never blows into it.—Detroit Free Press.

Give Us a Genuine Fishing Vessel Race.
 (New York Fishing Gazette.)
 The International Fishing Schooner Races, inaugurated with the best of intentions by William H. Dennis of Halifax, have been completely divorced from the genuine fishermen atmosphere through the introduction of rules and regulations which have no place in a fisherman's sailing contest. The spirit which animated Mr. Dennis in giving a Trophy for competition between the fishing schooners of the United States and Canada has been distorted by the yachtsmen and others who have "horned in" on the committees, dictated the sailing rules and taken charge generally.

The Fishing Gazette is a strong advocate of International Fishing Schooner Racing. We believe it to be an annual event of great value to the fishing industries of both countries through the publicity given and by reason of the stimulus to design fishing vessels on speedier lines than those of the present day. We are not apprehensive of "freak models" and "skimmer dishes" coming into them. The exacting requirements of the industry effectually bar such types and regulations can be drafted to exclude the entry of any vessel which is not a bona-fide fisherman.

But the races up to the present are suffering from too many regulations. We are treated to the annual spectacle of two fishing schooners, converted into yachts for the purpose of racing. Neither the Bluenose nor the Henry Ford were fishing schooners when they met off Gloucester this year. Neither of them were in condition to go fishing. Their anchors, cables, dories, gurry kids, hoisting engines and other fishing gear and vessel equipment were left ashore; their working ballast was changed and they were over hauled, re-rigged and generally slobbered-up at great expense. In their ordinary business, fishing schooners do not work in that condition and competition between such vessels tells no story that could be of any practical use to fishermen. The rules as to water-line and sail area impose restriction which can serve no good purpose and simply favors the designing of a certain type of vessel. We are anxious to see these races continue but we believe that if they are to be successful and of any value to the fishing industry, there will have to be some radical changes made in the Deal of Gift and the rules governing the competition. We venture to suggest some of these changes herewith:

(1) The complete exclusion of yachtsmen and others not directly engaged in the fisheries from all committees. The committees to be formed of fish merchants owning vessels and master mariners who have commanded fishing vessels.
 (2) Vessels to race with their ordinary fishing gear on board; with their usual ballast, with the sails they have used in fishing, and with their ordinary fishing crews.
 (3) Abolish existing rules as to sail areas and water-line and permit any bona-fide fishing vessel to enter the races without handicap or restriction provided that she sails in precisely the same condition as when engaged in fishing.

Annual test of speed and seaworthiness under normal conditions—the conditions these schooners are called upon to endure when engaged in their work. We have so far merely seen what the Bluenose, Henry Ford, Elizabeth Howard, Elsie and others can do in the sailing line when spruced up and skinned to the ballast; it would be much more satisfactory to have proof of their performances when fully equipped for fishing. Let the further contests tell us this story.

Mica Mines in New Mexico to be Opened.

Mica, the material that was once commonly known as singlass, is becoming very important because of its value in radio and other electrical work. The American Mica Company has purchased a number of inactive mica properties in Rio Arriba county, New Mexico, the principal one being that formerly owned by the Petaca Mining Company. Mining engineers have reported that they expect the Petaca mica field to be one of the largest in the United States and also that the mica produced will be of high grade, says the Engineering and Mining Journal-Press of New York. The American Mining Company expects to erect a grinding plant in Santa Fe. Low cost should be possible, because of low wages. This company will endeavor to supply ground mica to western users and to some in the east-central states. It is the intention of this company to install at once a number of punch machines for the manufacture of mica washers and disks for use in electrical insulation. The mica produced by these mines is muscovite of a light green color, flexible and free of iron.
 These mines were originally worked

Men Race for Diamonds in Africa.

Choice locations in newly opened diamond fields in South Africa are awarded to the winners of a long distance foot race from a place of registration to the diggings. The "rush" on Sept. 15 last, according to the Engineering and Mining Journal-Press of New York, was the biggest known in history. On that date 3300 acres of the farm Kaalplaats were opened to entry. These digging about on the Vaal river, near Lindogee's Drift, a few hundred yards above the Rand water board's huge barrage, which is built across the river. C. M. Jack, mining commissioner for the Western Transvaal, read the proclamation, after having flagged off a line 700 yards long; but the line of "peppers" (as the contestants are called because they "peg" claims), extended to three times that length. The signal was given by dropping a flag at 11 a.m.; the peppers rushed off as one man. The reading of the proclamation had started at 10.40 a.m. About 1800 licenses had been issued and 17 policemen were present to keep order. Among the runners were several well known athletes, including K. K. MacArthur, of marathon sports fame. The value of the finds in the field up to date of proclamation are said to total $13,000, the weight in carats being 1450. This gives an average value of over $9 per carat. In the owner's reserve, Theodore Schmidt had found a 45 1/2 carat Cape yellow stone, for which he refused a price of $215 per carat.
