House of Commons Debates

SECOND SESSION—ELEVENTH PARLIAMENT

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, March 30, 1910.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 189) to incorporate the Protectorate Life Insurance Company of Canada.—Mr. Turriff.

Bill (No. 190) to incorporate the Quebec and Ungava Railway Company.—Mr. Devlin.

MEAT AND CANNED FOODS ACT AMENDMENT.

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 193) to amend the Meat and Canned Foods Act. He said: In the working of this law we find some slight modifications of the wording and form to be necessary. There is no change in the principle of the Act. When we come to discuss the details I will give full information concerning each.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS.

SUBSIDIES TO RAILWAYS IN BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Mr. BARNARD:

1. What are the particulars of the sum of $18,109,841, shown as having been expended in British Columbia for railway subsidies on page 2, of a return to an Order of the House of Commons, dated the 19th of February, 1908, and being sessional paper No. 219 of the session of 1908?

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM. The following are the amounts expended by the Dominion government on railway subsidies in British Columbia, up to 1905-6:

Esquimalt and Nanaimo railway, 73 miles, $750,000; Nakusp and Slocan railway, 36½ miles, $117,760; Columbia and Kootenay railway, 27½ miles, $88,800; Shuswap and Okanagan railway, 51 miles, $163,200; Kootenay and Arrowhead railway, 46½ miles, $153,866; Canadian Pacific railway, (Revelstoke to Arrowhead) 25 miles, $80.000; Canadian Pacific railway, (Savonas to Port Moodie) 213 miles, $13,326,100; Nicola, Kamloops and Similkameen railway, 35 miles, $110,592; Canadian Pacific railway, (Crowsnest) 182 miles, $2,301,936; Canadian Pacific railway, (Laggan to Savonas) 301 miles, $4,031,233; total $21,105,487.

SALES OF SCHOOL LANDS.

Mr. LAKE:

1. Have any sales of school lands been made by the government to private individuals or to companies in any other way than by public auction?

2. If so, under what circumstances and on what terms have such sales been made; and were the lands so sold advertised for sale before being disposed of?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER:

1. Yes, in accordance with the statutes in that behalf.

2. School lands required for the right of way of railways, for station grounds, ballast pits, and right of way for water pipes, have been sold otherwise than by public auction to railway companies under the provisions of the Railway Act, and school lands have also been sold by private sale to Boards of Trustees, under the provisions of subsection 2, of section 39, of the Dominion Lands Act, for school sites, the area not exceeding in any case four acres. In no other case have school lands been sold to private individuals, or to companies, otherwise than at public auction.

The lands required for right of way, station grounds, &c., of railways, are sold to the railway companies at a valuation determined by inspection of the land, and approved by the Governor in Council.

The lands required for school sites are only sold to Boards of Trustees, upon the recommendation of the Deputy Minister of Education for the province in which the land is situated.

The minimum price fixed by the Act is $10 per acre, and no land has been sold for school sites below that price.

These sales are not advertised.

ISSUE OF SCRIP TO HALF-BREEDS.

Mr. LAKE:

1. Has any commission been employed on the issue of scrip to half-breeds since the 1st January, 1908?

2. If so, in what part of the country have they been employed and to what extent have issues of scrip been made by them?

3. Who composed the commission, and did any other persons accompany them, other than their employees? If so, who?

Mr. OLIVER:

1. Yes.

2. In that portion of the Northwest Territories including Split lake, Oxford House, Nelson House, and other points covered by the adhesion to Indian Treaty No. 5.

No scrip was issued by the commissioner, but scrip aggregating 7,920 acres, in satisfaction of 33 claims, was issued by the Department of the Interior and delivered to the claimants personally by the commissioner.

3. Reverend John Semmens, inspector of Indian agencies, and reserves, who was also appointed commissioner to take the adhesion to Treaty No. 5. It is not known whether or not any persons other than his employees accompanied him.

ST. MAURICE RIVER—DREDGING AND IMPROVEMENTS.

Mr. BLONDIN:

1. Does the government intend to construct this year or soon, an embankment or dam over the Grand Piles chute, on the St. Maurice river, county of Champlain?

2. Does the government possess plans and specifications of such intended embankment? If so, since when?

3. What are the different amounts expended annually during the last ten years on the River St. Maurice for dredging, maintenance and all other works, between the Grand Piles chute and La Tuque?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY:

1. No decision yet arrived at.

2. No plan or specification has ever been agreed upon.

3.

TURTLE MOUNTAIN TIMBER RESERVE.

Mr. SCHAFFNER:

1. Has there been any tree planting in the Turtle Mountain timber reserve during the years 1908 and 1909?

2. If so, how many men were employed in said tree planting during the years 1908 and 1909?

3. What was the amount of money paid to each person so employed during the years 1909-1910, and what are their names?

4. Is there an assistant timber inspector in Turtle Mountain timber reserve? If so, what is his name and salary?

5. What percentage of the trees planted was living at the end of the growing season of 1909?

Mr. OLIVER:

1. No tree planting was done on the Turtle Mountain Forest reserve during the years 1908 and 1909, but a small nursery of coniferous trees was started on this reserve in 1909 to provide trees for planting.

2. None.

3. None.

4. There is no permanent assistant timber inspector. Temporary help is obtained as required.

5. Answered by No. 1.

ASSENT TO WATERWAYS TREATY.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I beg to lay on the table of the House papers and correspondence regarding the purchase of the steamer 'Rainbow'; also papers and correspondence regarding the intended purchase of the steamship 'Niobe'. I have also to inform the House that the government of Canada has assented to the exchange of ratifications in the Waterways Treaty. There is some additional correspondence with regard to the same, which will be put upon the table of the House either to-morrow or early on Monday.

TARIFF NEGOTIATIONS WITH THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. SPROULE. In the absence of the Finance Minister—I notice a statement circulated in the press that an announcement would be made to-day in regard to the negotiations with the President of the United States concerning tariff matters. Is the First Minister prepared to take the House into his confidence, and give us a statement, so far as he can; and if there is any correspondence or data connected with that matter, will he lay them on the table of the House?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I have to inform my hon. friend that the Minister of Finance will himself be in the House within probably an hour, and when he comes, we will take up an item so as to give him an opportunity of making his intended statement.

PRIVILEGE—LONG SAULT DAM.

Mr. J. D. REID. I rise to a question of privilege. I see in the Toronto 'Globe' of March 26 the following item:

> The Montreal 'Star' can easily ascertain that the Long Sault dam scheme is not a party measure. Conservatives like Dr. Reid favour it, and the Conservative Brockville 'Times' is exceedingly severe on everybody who opposes it.

I am not now, never was, and never will be, in favour of any scheme that would place a dam across the St. Lawrence river at Long Sault Rapids, or any place on the St. Lawrence.

MIXING OF GRAIN.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Before the orders of the day are called, I wish to draw the attention of the government, or of some member thereof, to a matter which concerns the people in the west very much. There has been more than a suspicion regarding it, but there has been nothing to confirm it so well as this article which appears in the 'Globe' of the 25th of March, in a statement telegraphed from Ottawa:

> Mixing of the Grain—Serious charges against terminal elevator men—Government has been investigating shippers' complaints, and prosecutions may follow at the head of the lakes.
> Ottawa, March 24.—There is trouble ahead for some of the terminal elevator men at Fort William and Port Arthur. There have been many complaints by shippers that at this point there have been mixing and manipulation of grain in transit, in violation of the statute, but to the advantage of the elevator men, though not so to the shippers of grain. There are severe penalties, both fine and imprisonment being provided by the Act. The Department of Trade and Commerce has been making investigations which are said to have resulted in disclosures which warrant further proceedings being taken. It is understood that some of the elevator men will be given an opportunity to establish their innocence or to submit to the penalties provided by the Act.

This is a serious charge. I believe this thing has been going on for a long time, and if any member of the government can give any information about it, I would be glad to hear it.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The only thing I can say at present is that I understand the Minister of Trade and Commerce is investigating the matter to which my hon. friend has referred.

INDIAN ACT—AMENDMENT.

House in committee on Bill (No. 141) to amend the Indian Act.—Mr. Oliver.

On section 2—contracts affecting Indian moneys and securities to be approved by superintendent general.

Mr. SPROULE. That is practically the old law, is it not?

Mr. OLIVER. It expresses the intent of the old law, which has not been definitely expressed hitherto, and occasion has arisen for expressing in set terms exactly what the position is. I will read the section which this proposes to amend, namely section 87:

> All moneys or securities of any kind applicable to the support or benefit of Indians, or any band of Indians, and all moneys accrued or hereafter to accrue from the sale of any Indian lands or the proceeds of any timber on any Indian lands, or a reserve shall, subject to the provisions of this part, be applicable to the same purposes, and be dealt with in the same manner as they might have been applied to or dealt with but for the passing of this part.

There is not a definite statement as to the position of the money that is considered desirable, and we wish to set down in black and white the exact position.

On section 3,

Mr. OLIVER. We wish to insert the following words in the section as it now stands:

> And no annuities or interest on funds, and no moneys appropriated by parliament held for any band of Indians.

The section as it now stands reads as follows:

> No presents given to Indians or non-treaty Indians, and no property purchased or acquired with or by means of any annuities granted to Indians, or any part thereof, and in the possession of any band of such Indians, or of any Indian or any band, or irregular band, shall be liable to be taken, seized or distrained for any debt, matter or cause whatsoever.

This protects the Indians in property purchased with the annuity money, but it does not protect the annuity money itself. We desire to put the annuity money itself in the same position as the statute now places the property that is purchased by it.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

BOUNTIES ON ZINC.

Bill (No. 182) respecting the payment of bounties on lead contained in lead-bearing ores mined in Canada, and to promote the production in Canada of zinc—Mr. Templeman—read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

On section 1,

Mr. SPROULE. Explain.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. When the resolution was before the House a few days ago there was a very full explanation given of the purport of this Bill. At that time I was asked by the hon. member for South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) to state somewhat more in detail how it was proposed to expend the sum of $50,000, and I promised to give that information. The money which is being set apart for the promotion of the zinc industry will be expended approximately as follows:

1st. Investigation of processes which promise commercial results:

(a) The De Laval Process, in operation at Trollhatten, Sweden.. ..	3,000 00
(b) The Ferguson-De Laval Process, demonstration plant being erected in London, Eng..	2,500 00
(c) The Cote-Pierron Process, recently invented in France..	3,000 00
(d) The Kermode Bisulphate Process, demonstration plant being erected in Wales..	3,000 00
(e) The Hiram Nixon Process, of Philadelphia..	2,500 00
There are two more processes, of which information is being obtained, one in Russia and one in Vienna, Austria, which are stated to be commercial, each $3,000..	6,000 00

It is intended that these processes be examined on a commercial scale, in detail, by competent metallurgists.

The investigation of each one of these processes will require several weeks. In explanation of the cost of these investigations it may be stated that it includes the salary of the chief metallurgist and his assistants and their travelling expenses, and the writing of the report, also the payment of the needed labourers, of sufficient number to enable the staff to be divided into night and day shifts, as the processes are continuous.

It is only after this necessary information has been gathered, that it will be possible to frame a plan for further procedure.

If any of these processes promise commercial results, the remainder ($29,000) of the grant may be employed in setting up and operating an experimental plant on the lines of the approved process. As the sum, $29,000, is very small for so important an inquiry, it will be necessary to avail ourselves of the electric outfit already in existence at Nelson, B.C.

That is the statement prepared by the Director of Mines as to the method of expending this money. The purport of the Bill, what we expect to accomplish, the necessity of the work and all that kind of thing were very fully discussed when the resolution was before the House, and I think the House is fully impressed with the importance of the proposed work.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Is it the intention of the minister to have the present commercial processes also investigated, such as the process now in operation in New Jersey and the Belgian process? These have been commercially employed for a great many years, and I think that before starting in to exploit new processes for the smelting of zinc, it would be well also to investigate the old processes which have been successful. Does the minister not also think it important to investigate those processes that have been in successful operation for some time?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Undoubtedly that investigation will be made. The chief authority on this continent on zinc is Mr. Ingalls, of New York city.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. And Joseph Wharton also.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Yes. We propose enlisting the co-operation of these gentlemen at the very earliest possible date. As I am advised, the process for the reduction of zinc known as the Belgian process is not believed by metallurgists to be economically adaptable to the ores of this country, in which lead and zinc are in close association. The difficulty to be surmounted is to find a process that will recover these two metals. I believe that where zinc ores are smelted in the United States and Europe, lead is not present, or if it is present, it can be separated. The great problem is to save all the metals that are present in the British Columbia ores, and to solve that problem it is necessary to obtain a process that will save at once the lead as well as the zinc. It is believed by experts who have been investigating the processes that are referred to in this memorandum that that result can be accomplished by investigation and further experimentation in regard to the smelting of these ores. But our investigation would not be complete unless we fully studied and applied, if necessary, the well known processes of smelting now in use in many parts of the world.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. The reason I mention this is that several so-called German chemists have exploited processes in this country at great expense to the people. A number of people in Hamilton put something like $300,000 or $400,000 into a process which proved a failure. I understand that one or two similar processes were exploited in the west at the expense of the public there, and from what I have learned from people who are actually in the business of smelting zinc there is no mystery about it, the process is simple, cheap and efficient and there is no necessity of indulging in any wild-cat experiments. Therefore, I hope that the minister will investigate the practical workings of the old processes that are in use to-day instead of taking up some innovation which has not been put to the practical test.

Mr. HUGHES. Why is it necessary to confine it to zinc alone? Have there not been great improvements made in the reduction of other ores in recent years, and are there not a great many ores more refractory than zinc? There are many gold ores that are refractory and are not easily reduced. Ores that a couple of years ago were positively irreducible are to-day being conveniently reduced, and cannot the same progress be made as to the development of the cyanide or some other processes? Why limit it to zinc?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. There is no question as to the importance of the work to be done by private enterprise and possibly also by this government in developing more perfect methods of smelting all kinds of ores. There is a great deal yet to learn. As my hon. friend from North Simcoe (Mr. Currie) says, some important experiments have been carried on by private enterprise at an enormous expenditure and sometimes without any practical results as far as the determination of economical and satisfactory processes is concerned. It will be remembered that some years ago we laid aside $2,500,000 to encourage the mining and smelting of lead ores, and there is still in the treasury unexpended of that money a little over $1,000,000. Zinc and lead are very closely associated in the ore. They are chemically combined in some cases, but always very closely associated. A mine might start out to be a lead mine and turn into a zinc mine when they get to a certain depth. While we have endeavoured to encourage the production of lead, the presence of zinc in lead ores has been found to be a detriment, because in the process of smelting the zinc is lost to the extent of 8, 10 or 12 per cent. The process of smelting zinc is different from that of smelting lead, copper, silver or gold ore, the zinc being volatile and going out in vapour. It cannot be recovered afterwards. There is no zinc smelter in Canada. There are a number in the United States and a number in Europe. Where zinc ores are smelted lead is not usually present in the ore at all, but where lead and zinc are combined, according to the process in existence to-day, the zinc is penalized because of its presence. Lead is present in such enormous quantities in the ores in British Columbia that those interested in the industry are quite willing that the sum of $50,000 which we propose to expend should be taken out of the lead bounty fund and set apart for the encouragement of smelting zinc ores. This is not a new charge on the revenue, but it is the taking of money out of the lead bounty fund and setting it apart for investigations of the processes of smelting zinc.

Mr. HUGHES. Who is going to carry this work on?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The Department of Mines, under the direction of Dr. Haanel.

Mr. HUGHES. Why is there not a school of technology or a metallurgical institution established here at Ottawa where experiments of this character could be carried on? A person who has an idea that he has discovered a feasible process for reducing ores should be allowed to make experiments at such an institution without being called upon personally to bear the cost. Why should we not have an institution at Ottawa for encouraging the development of these processes?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I am hopeful that before long we will have an experimental tation of that kind in Ottawa.

Mr. HUGHES. A big one?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Well, just as large as parliament is willing to justify. I hope in a few weeks we will be able to invite the members of parliament to visit that plant, and show them what can be done in producing a cheap fuel from peat.

Mr. HUGHES. You won't want the St. Lawrence power then?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. We hope in combination with that plant in the same building to have a small plant for the purpose of carrying on metallurgical experiments just as my hon. friend has suggested. I am in full sympathy with his idea, and it is the intention of the department to accomplish results in that way. I hope that before another year we will have a small laboratory, probably on a small commercial scale to carry out these ideas.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman promised that he would give us the result of the bounty payments, and to what extent advantage was taken of the lead bounty Act.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The result of the payment of the bounty for lead has been extremely satisfactory to the mining industry, and has not been a very heavy charge upon the country. The first lead bounty Act giving $2,500,000 for the development of the zinc industry was passed about seven years ago.

Mr. SPROULE. It was passed in 1908.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The Act of 1908 simply continued the payment of the bounty but did not vote any new sum of money. During the first five years of the lead bounty Act, there was only $700,000 or $800,000 paid out of the bounty fund, and when the Act of 1908 was passed there was about $1,750,000 at the disposal of the mining industry for bounties. Since that time we have continued paying bounties, but there still remains over $1,000,000 in the fund unexpended. The total amount expended during the last seven years for this purpose is approximately $1,500,000. I do not remember the exact figures, but I think at the present time the production of lead in Canada is about 22,000 tons.

Mr. SPROULE. I thought the minister would give us some comparative statistics which would enable us to see whether the bounty has stimulated the production of lead.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. There is no production of metallic zinc in Canada. Zinc ores have been exported from Canada to the United States for some years, and this exportation has been profitable to our mining men; but owing to the high tax imposed on zinc ores by the Payne-Aldrich tariff, this exportation has been practically suspended except perhaps in the case of the highest grade ores. There has never been a zinc smelter in operation as a commercial industry in Canada. One was built at Frank in the Crowsnest pass, but I believe was not operated further at all events to demonstrate that it was not a success.

Mr. SPROULE. In order to determine whether or not the bounty has expanded the business, we ought to know what the total product was before the bounty was paid and what it has been since. Subsection 2 of section 2 of the Act provides that if the output amounts to 33,333 tons in any one year, the bounty will be reduced, I presume that it has not yet reached the point which would justify any reduction in the bounty.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. While we voted $2,500,000 for lead bounties, the amount that could be expended in any one year was limited to $500,000, the amount of the bounty being $15 a ton. If the production exceeded 33,333 tons per annum, necessarily the amount paid per ton would have to be reduced; that is the meaning of the clause to which my hon. friend has referred. The bounty is paid on a sliding scale, based on the price of lead in the London market. As the price goes up, the amount of the bounty paid is relatively reduced, so that if lead goes up to £17 10s. or £18 the lead bounty disappears altogether. It is for that reason that the total amount of $500,000 has not been earned in any one year in the last seven years—the price did not always necessitate the payment of the full bounty.

Mr. SPROULE. My aim in asking the question I have has been to ascertain to what extent this bounty was stimulating the production of lead. If we found an increasing amount paid in each succeeding year, we would naturally conclude that the bounty was doing a great deal of good, and we would be in a position to decide whether or not it would be wise to set apart money to stimulate the production of another metallic product.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The fact that a gradually increasing amount was paid each year would be of no evidence that the amount of lead production was increasing, for the reason that we have to take into account the price of lead in the London market. But, speaking generally, I have not the slightest doubt that the lead bounty has been a great incentive to the lead-mining industry, particularly in British Columbia. I believe that any one who knows the conditions in the Kootenay country is well aware that but for this bounty the industry would have gone down. It has been due to the assurance that with the aid of the bounty a profitable price could be obtained for lead, that the lead-refining industry has continued to successfully operate during the last seven years. The granting of the lead bounty by this government has been fully justified.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not say that it has not been justified; but I do not agree with the contention of the minister that the amount of bounty paid out from year to year is no evidence of the quantity of lead produced. To my mind there is an absence of that data which the House requires in order to determine whether we are wise or not in endeavouring to stimulate the production of lead in that way. This information we ought to have before we get through. If we found there were 25,000 tons produced this year, 23,000 tons the year before, and 17,000 the previous year and a proportionate amount of bounty paid out each year, that would be an evidence that the industry was being stimulated, but if it were found that there was no increase of production from year to year, whether we paid much or little, that would be an evidence that the production was not stimulated by the bounty. It is the fullest information which we ought to have in order to understand whether this is doing good or not.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I shall bring down all that information on the third reading.

Mr. SPROULE. From the time we began to pay the bounty.

Bill reported.

SALE OF BABY FARM.

Bill (No. 181) to authorize the sale or other disposal of certain public lands, and the acquisiton of certain other lands, in or in the vicinity of the cities of Toronto and Winnipeg, respectively.—Sir Frederick Borden—read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

On section 1,

Mr. MACDONELL. Will the hon. minister explain the reason for this section, and tell us the story of this land transaction?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. This Bill is founded on a resolution which passed the 21st of March last, and was very fully discussed at the time. I may repeat shortly now the reasons. The Baby farm was found rather small for our requirements. It was also ascertained that the land could be sold at a very large profit, and that the amount realized could be used to purchase more than three times as much land in the vicinity of Toronto at a point even more convenient.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. What is the acreage?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. About 160 acres, and it can be sold for $1,000 or more per acre. A precisely similar course was pursued a couple of years ago in the sale of land in Toronto and Montreal, and I think it is entirely in the public interest, as well as in the interest of the militia, that this farm should be sold and other land acquired.

Mr. MACDONELL. According to the hon. minister then the Baby farm has been abandoned and is to be sold. How will that affect the construction of the barracks?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. That will in no way delay the construction of the barracks.

Mr. MACDONELL. Would the hon. minister have any objection to stating where the government have decided to locate the barracks—what property they have selected?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I think it would be undesirable at present to state even the locality except to say that it will be quite as convenient to the city of Toronto as the Baby farm. It is probable that we may have to resort to expropriation, but that may not be the case, and in any event I think it undesirable that I should state now the exact locality. But I may say that the site has been selected by Colonel Otter and other officers who know exactly where they wish to locate.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Will the hon. minister state what direction it is from the city?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I would rather not say.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. The government has made a speculation apparently out of the Baby farm. The city of Toronto wished to get the use of the Stanley barracks, and so agreed to purchase another property for the government, for which they paid $20,000. The government has been using the Stanley barracks all this time and have made a profit of over $100,000 on the whole transaction. I think that the $20,000 should be paid back to the city of Toronto, and the Stanley barracks be given to that city as a gift.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I think the city got a very good bargain when it accepted the Stanley barracks, because it got them at really below the actual value.

Mr. MACDONELL. I think the party aggrieved, if any one is, is the militia corps. The government bought the Baby farm some five years ago. At that time the barracks could not afford sufficient accommodation and it was expected that a new barracks would be built on the Baby farm. As far back as two years ago, considerable sums were put in the estimates for that purpose, but so far the government have done nothing except hold this land, which has greatly appreciated in value. I understand that they are making $100,000 out of the transaction. The militia are no further advanced than they were five years ago, and the government are about to embark in a new property transaction, which they may hold for speculation another five years. What assurance will the minister give, if any, with regard to acquiring this site and immediately commencing the construction of the barracks which are so badly needed for the accommodation of the militia in the Toronto district?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. As the discussion may last some time, I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Progress reported.

WAYS AND MEANS—TARIFF NEGOTIATIONS WITH THE UNITED STATES.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) moved that the House go into Committee of Ways and Means. He said:

I desire to avail myself of this, the very earliest, opportunity of presenting to the House a statement concerning the negotiations which have recently occurred with respect to the question of commercial relations between the United States and Canada. One need hardly say anything as to the great importance of the subject. Living, as we do, close beside the great republic, and in close connection with it in many ways, it must at all times be of the utmost importance that we should maintain, as far as possible, friendly relations with that great country. Notwithstanding a tariff situation which we in Canada regard as somewhat unfavourable, the volume of our present trade is a very large one. Fifty per cent of the total trade of Canada is with the United States; fifty-nine per cent of our imports come from the United States, and thirty-five per cent of our exports are sent to the United States. And this occurs under tariff conditions which we in Canada, at all events, have regarded as not as favourable as we should wish them to be. The importance of the question was recognized at an early stage of the session by an hon. member opposite, who suggested that, before we should proceed with the final approval or our second or supplementary French treaty, we should ascertain whether the government of the United States would regard that treaty as one discriminating against the trade of the republic. While we realized the great importance of the matter, we did not think it would be wise to take that course. We had had negotiations from time to time with our American friends in relation to better trade conditions, and they had not turned out very successfully. We had, after repeated efforts, taken the ground that we should not again approach the United States with proposals for betterment of our trade relations, and that, if the matter was to be reopened again, it should be reopened, not upon the initiative of Canada, but upon the initiative of the United States. Accordingly, we declined to make any approach to the United States while the question of the French treaty was pending. That treaty was approved in due course, I am glad to say, not only by this side of the House, but little less than unanimously by parliament. We were bound to maintain the right of Canada, through the proper and accredited channels, to enter into trade treaties with any other country with which we might find it convenient to do business, and we felt that, to approach the United States in the manner suggested, would be to recognize their right to restrict our liberty in that respect.

Now, happily, Sir, the condition is changed. We declined to go to the United States on the subject, but the United States has taken the responsibility of taking the initiative. Ottawa no longer takes the initiative, but Washington takes the first step of asking that we open negotiations for better trade relations.

Mr. HUGHES. Did not the editor of the 'Globe' go down there with his hat in his hand?

Mr. FIELDING. If my hon. friend (Mr. Hughes) is a regular and attentive reader of the 'Globe', I am surprised that he does not profit more from it. The United States tariff, I have said, is one which we have not regarded as favourable to Canadian trade. For years we had what was commonly known as the Dingley tariff. the new tariff law is known as the Payne-Aldrich tariff. In some respects, the new tariff is less favourable than the old one to Canadian interests; I think there are one or two cases of that kind. In other respects, the new tariff is more favourable to our trade than the Dingley tariff was. Taking it all in all, it is calculated that the Payne-Aldrich tariff is better for Canada. As respects last year's imports—taking these as an illustration—if we take the new tariff and apply it to the exports from Canada to the United States last year, it is claimed, the changes under the Payne-Aldrich tariff would be equivalent to $1,000,000 in our favour. That is to say, those who pay the duty—and I am not now entering into that aspect of the question—on these Canadian goods will pay about $1,000,000 less under the Payne-Aldrich tariff than would have been paid under the Dingley tariff. It is well to note, therefore, that to that extent there has been somewhat of an improvement. Nevertheless, the American tariff of to-day is quite a high tariff. And if upon that high tariff there should be placed in addition the maximum tariff of the United States, as proposed by a clause of the Payne-Aldrich Bill, undoubtedly the tariff burden would be so great upon Canadian industry as to practically become prohibitive. If that maximum tariff had to be applied, it would, I suppose. almost inevitably follow that Canada would be obliged to adopt retaliatory measures. There will be those who say that that does not necessarily follow; those who say that retaliation is not the most effective method of dealing with foreign nations. I do not subscribe to that doctrine. I think that experience, even the experience of Canada, shows that retaliatory measures sometimes becomes necessary in self-defence. I think that if the maximum tariff of the United States had to be applied to Canada, it is more than probable that public opinion in Canada would have demanded retaliation from this side in the form of the present surtax, or, perhaps, a larger surtax, and perhaps, in other respects as well. This, undoubtedly would have brought about a most deplorable tariff war. Now, in that tariff war, my own judgment is, the United States would have suffered more than Canada, but both parties would have suffered, and suffered in an enormous degree. There is no doubt that large interests in Canada would have been affected immediately. There are some important interests in Canada which are so closely associated with the United States markets that to have those markets suddenly closed against them would be held as a great misfortune. Nevertheless, even the men in these lines of industry, who realize that they, perhaps, would be the first to suffer, were as, a rule, disposed to take the ground that we ought not to make concessions to the United States of the large character they were said to be demanding, and that we should stand firm and insist upon the right of Canada to pursue her own commercial policy. These men were willing to bear the burden if necessary. Every one of these men with whom I had the pleasure of discussing this question personally said: This will be a great disaster; if it be possible by any moderate concession to avert such a disaster, it is the duty of the government and parliament of Canada to adopt that course. That is the spirit in which, then, we have approached the question.

So long as the United States government acted in what may possibly be called an unfriendly spirit—speaking in a commercial sense—so long as they placed their high tariff upon Canadian products and refused all overtures from Canada, the public opinion of Canada was most pronounced that we were bound to resent such a policy, to maintain our honour, our independence. But the moment the United States indicated their willingness to open negotiations, the moment they expressed the desire to come to Canada and discuss the question with us, that moment the government felt—and I am sure parliament will feel—that it was our duty to meet them in the spirt in which they have come to us. Several weeks ago the Secretary of State for the United States, Mr. Knox, informed the British Ambassador at Washington that it was the desire of the United States to open up negotiations with Canada in respect to these important questions, and he desired to know the manner in which these negotiations could be best conducted. The British Ambassador, Mr. Bryce, informed him very properly that the best way to deal with a matter of that kind was to open up direct negotiations with the Canadian government.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Will this correspondence be laid on the table?

Mr. FIELDING. I can say to my hon. friend that there is very little correspondence in this matter beyond what I shall submit before the close of my remarks. There have been some few letters, between the ambassador of the British government, the American government and ourselves, which may have to be regarded as of a confidential character. However, I am giving to my hon. friend the substance of it, and there is nothing in it that is not contained in what I have already communicated to the House. It may be necessary, later on, to bring it down; I offer no opinion as to that. The negotiations have been conducted largely without correspondence, and there is very little to be added in the way of correspondence to what I shall submit to the House. But if it be found that there is something beyond, I shall be happy to bring it down.

Mr. SPROULE. Was there not some memoranda made of the negotiations as they went on, so as to keep a record of them?

Mr. FIELDING. It is important to keep a record of the conclusions, but in negotiations between governments in matters of that sort, it is not always necessary to keep records or memoranda of things that occur from day to day. It is important to make records of any conclusions that are reached, and the statement that I shall make will contain all the information that can be desired. But in saying that, if it be found that there is any correspondence having any proper bearing on this question we shall have no objection to bring it down, unless it is found to be of a confidential character.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. The minister referred to certain correspondence as passing between the British ambassador and the Secretary of State, in which certain matters regarding the tariff are referred to, and I asked the question whether that correspondence will be laid on the table?

Mr. FIELDING. The question is a fair one. The ambassador at Washington and the Secretary of State exchanged brief notes; they were for the moment confidential, but I do not know that any objection could be had to bringing them down. But in all matters of that kind it is necessary that there should be confidential communications, as my hon. friend knows. If these communications are of that confidential character, we could not produce them to the House. I can assure my hon. friend, however, that the statement I shall make will contain the substance of the whole negotiations. As I was saying, the Canadian government were informed that it was the intention of the United States to send to Ottawa two of its prominent officials connected with commercial matters, Professor Henry C. Emery, chairman of the Tariff Commission appointed not long ago in connection with the new tariff law, and Mr. C. M. Pepper, an officer of the State Department, having special charge of commercial affairs. These two gentlemen came to Ottawa and spent some days in communication with us. The government were represented in that negotiation by the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance. The whole question was discussed very freely, and I think the negotiation was helpful in enabling each to understand more clearly the ground taken by the other. But no conclusion was reached at the moment which justified the anticipation of a favourable settlement. These gentlemen returned to Washington to report to the United States government. It was announced in general terms in their press that their mission was unsuccessful. If it be unsuccessful for them to have come to Ottawa and not to have brought the matter to a final conclusion, that perhaps would be a fair statement. But I do not regard their mission as unsuccessful. I consider that the negotiations which took place in Ottawa between these gentlemen and the Canadian ministers, and the opportunity they had of mingling amongst Canadian citizens, and understanding the Canadian side of the question better, were helpful in the arrangements which were subsequently made; so I do not regard the mission of Professor Emery and Mr. Pepper to Ottawa in any sense as unsuccessful, because I am sure they had a useful bearing upon the arrangements that were finally made.

The first sign of a difference between the United States and Canada on this important question was in relation to a point which has not recently attracted much notice. It has ceased to be a prominent feature of this matter, and perhaps there is no need of dwelling on it, but for a certain reason I wish to make a passing reference to it. In the Payne Bill as it passed the House of Representatives—the name of Mr. Aldrich had not then become attached to it—in the Payne Bill there was a clause proposed to penalize the trade of countries which might discriminate against the United States. Then there was a proviso inserted which at first glance seemed to take into account the British preference, and recognizing it as a legitimate preference and not a discrimination. The words of the proviso were as follows:

> Provided however that these provisions for additional duties shall not apply to cases where preferential duties to other countries are those given by a province, dependency or colony to the mother country only.

At first glance it might seem that that clause had been put in to recognize the preferential arrangements which Canada had made within the British empire. But upon more careful examination it will be observed that special mention is made to the granting of a preference by a colony or dependency to the mother country only. The effect of that clause, if it had remained in the Act, would have been that the United States would have recognized our right to grant a preference to Great Britain, but would not have recognized our right to grant a similar preference to any other portion of the British empire. As we had granted preferences to New Zealand, to South Africa, to British India and to the West Indies, if that clause had remained in the Payne Bill, that would have been held to be discriminating against the United States, because we grant preferences to these colonies which are not granted to the United States. Fortunately, however, that clause was not adopted by the Senate; the penalizing clause, as I have described it, was rewritten in the Senate, and no reference was made in it to any such preference. I mention this matter because it seems to have an important bearing upon certain negotiations which are in progress between Canada and the West Indies. My hon. friends will recollect that a Royal Commission has been inquiring into the trade relations between Canada and the West Indies. The Minister of Customs and myself were appointed members of that commission. My hon. friend the Minister of Customs was fortunately able to go to the West Indies and participate in the deliberations. When they visited the Island of Jamaica they found it strongly inclined to trade with Canada, but the representative men of the commercial bodies appearing before the Royal Commission expressed the fear that if they granted any preferential treatment to Canada, if they entered into a preferential arrangement of that kind, it would be regarded in the United States as a discrimination, and would bring about retaliatory measures on the part of the United States. As the trade of Jamaica with the United States was very considerable, our friends in Jamaica were unwilling to run any risk on that score. They expressed a desire that Canada in some way would be able to arrange that no discrimination should be held to exist and no retaliation adopted. Of course, it is not in our power to make any arrangement of that kind on behalf of the United States. But it is worthy of note that in the negotiations which have recently taken place between the United States and Canada touching undue discrimination, the United States have not at all raised the question as to the British preference.

Neither as to our right to give a preference to Great Britain, nor as to our right to give a preference to any portions of the British empire has any question whatever been raised by the government of the United States. They recognize that this is a matter of family arrangement within the British empire and that no fault could be found with it. I mention this for the information of my friends in Jamaica, who I hope will see in it an indication that the United States would not regard the making of a trade arrangement between Jamaica and Canada as being of an unfriendly character or involving undue discrimination.

I said that when in the Senate the penalizing clause was rewritten, no reference was made to preferential arrangements between the mother country and her colonies, but provision was made that in case any country should establish what is called undue discrimination against the United States there should be an additional duty imposed of 25 per cent. It was provided that this so-called maximum tariff would come into operation on the first day of April of the present year. I would like the House to note particularly, for I find there is much confusion on the subject, that this maximum tariff means 25 per cent of the value of the article and not 25 per cent of the duty levied. I have found widespread error in that respect; I have found that many prominent mercantile men, who have not given the question careful attention, have been labouring under the mistake of supposing that the maximum tariff only meant the addition of 25 per cent to the duties already levied. For example, if the duty of $100 worth of goods was $30, or 30 per cent, the idea was that the maximum tariff would add one-quarter of the duty, or $7.50, that that would just make it, instead of 30 per cent, 37½ per cent, and that while that would be rather a high duty it would not necessarily be a prohibitive duty. But if one reads more carefully the maximum clause of the United States tariff law, he will find that it is not 25 per cent of the duty, but 25 per cent of the value of the article. Taking the article I have mentioned by way of illustration—an article of the value of $100 at 30 per cent—the additional duty would not be one-quarter of 30, or 37½, but the duty would be 30 per cent, plus one-quarter of the value of the article, or $25; so that the duty would not be $37.50, but it would be $55, it being $30, the original duty plus one-quarter or 25 per cent of the value of the article. I have been surprised to find how widespread the impression is that the maximum tariff would only add a small amount to the duty of the main tariff.

Then, another point we had to take into consideration was that this maximum tariff would be applied automatically. It was not something that the president would bring upon us by some act of his own. It was not as if the president had to do this thing, and he might be persuaded not to do it. The law provided that on the first of April the maximum tariff was to come into operation unless in the meantime the president had, by proclamation, granted exemption and brought the minimum tariff into operation. It is important to note that, because if the president simply remains silent, if the president shall do nothing and simply lets matters drift, that maximum tariff will come into operation the first of April. It was necessary, therefore, to ascertain whether the president could be induced by reasonable arguments and, if necessary, even by reasonable concessions, to issue a proclamation which would extend to Canada the benefit of the so-called minimum tariff.

As to the general grounds of difference between the two countries, as I have already pointed out there is not much correspondence on the subject and we cannot bring down any documents showing formal demands made by the United States upon us, but although the press was not always accurate in its details, it is probably right that I should say that in a general way the United States press has given to the world a pretty fair idea of the points of difference beween the government of Canada and the government of the United States. There was one question of importance which engaged our attention to a limited extent, but which did not ultimately become a matter of negotiation. It was a matter of friendly discussion, but our American friends thought there was nothing to be done and so they did not formulate any demand upon it. I refer to the pulp wood question. The United States would have been pleased if we could have made some friendly arrangements with the provincial governments whereby the restrictions now made or likely to be made as respects the shipments of pulp wood to the United States might be modified. It is well known that the provincial governments have no power to levy an export duty, or to prohibit the export of anything to a foreign country, for that can only be done by the parliament of Canada. But nevertheless, the provinces can to a large extent accomplish the same result. The provincial governments are the owners of large tracts of timber lands which they lease to those who may wish to operate them, and as owners of the lands it is their right to stipulate the terms and conditions upon which these leases shall be taken. In the province of Ontario, as is well known, a condition of the lease is that the wood shall be manufactured in Canada. In the province of Quebec there is a distinction made between the rate of stumpage levied on the wood manufactured in Canada and that which is not so manufactured. And it has been publicly announced that there is a probability that the Quebec government will proceed further and adopt practically the Ontario policy. The Americans were naturally interested in that. Many of the people of the republic have come into Canada or have sent their money into Canada, and are as large owners of these wood lands, and they would like very well if they could have the utmost freedom with regard to the shipment of this wood product. In the course of discussion this was mentioned to our government. We, of course, had only to point out that this is a matter of provincial concern; that we have no right and would not claim any right of interference with a a province in this matter, and so, after a little discussion, it was recognized that this was not a matter with which we could deal, and no demand was made on the part of the United States government that anybody should grant this relief which they very much desired.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Does that refer to the export duty imposed by the Dominion? Was any request made upon this government with regard to that?

Mr. FIELDING. They would have been exceedingly pleased if the government of Canada could have helped them in any way with regard to greater freedom in the shipment of this wood, but all I can say to my hon. friend is that we have made no arrangement of any kind in that matter. The right of the parliament of Canada to levy such export duty or to prohibit such export remains untouched.

Mr. SPROULE. In the event of the parliament of Canada levying an export duty, or in the event of a regulation by a province compelling the pulp to be manufactured in the country, would that be regarded by the United States as a violation of their tariff law, sufficient to induce them to retaliate?

Mr. FIELDING. We have claimed that that could not in any sense be regarded as a tariff discrimination, and I think I may fairly say that they accepted our contention in that respect. It has ceased to be an issue between us. They are quite aware that all we could do would be in the line of what has been suggested by my hon. friend from South York (Mr. Maclean)—that we have the power to levy an export duty, and we could with the consent of the parliament of Canada bargain with them that we would not do so, but of course that is a large order. All I can say to my hon. friend is that the right of the parliament and the government of Canada to deal with that question as it may best be dealt with in the public interest of Canada remains unchanged.

Mr. SPROULE. The provision in their tariff law dealing with pulp wood says:

> Mechanically ground wood pulp, one-twelfth of one cent per pound dry weight: Provided, however, that mechanically ground wood pulp shall be admitted free of duty from any country, dependency, province, or other subdivision of government (being the product thereof) which does not forbid or restrict in any way the exportation of (whether by law, order, regulation, contractural relation, or otherwise, directly or indirectly) or impose any export duty, export license fee, or other export charge of any kind whatsoever, either directly or indirectly (whether in the form of additional charge or license fee or otherwise), upon printing paper, mechanically ground wood pulp, or wood for use in the manufacture of wood pulp.

If I am correct in my understanding of it, I take it that in the event of the provinces passing a regulation which would compel their pulp wood to be manufactured in the province, or in the event of an export duty being imposed upon that pulp wood, it would not be regarded as a violation of their tariff law.

Mr. FIELDING. I have been dealing entirely with the proposed application of their maximum tariff, and what my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) says has no reference to that. There is a provision in their tariff law, in operation to-day, which levies a different duty upon pulp manufactured from wood produced in certain quarters, as compared with the duty levied on pulp from certain other quarters, but that is not under the maximum tariff. That is under another clause in the Tariff Act. It is in operation to-day, and we have not had that matter before us in any shape or form. It is not touched at all by our negotiations.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Then the minister means that as the matter stands we have to take the maximum of the American tariff upon any pulp wood or pulp sent into the United States.

Mr. FIELDING. No, I think there is a little confusion there. There is a special regulation with regard to pulp, and a special tax upon pulp which comes from the Crown lands of the provinces which impose these restrictions, but that is separate, and apart from the maximum tariff; the maximum tariff is another thing.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. And Canada has to pay that tax?

Mr. FIELDING. The question of who pays a particular tax is a large one.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I do not wish to enter into dialectics about it at all. Does not that tax now apply to the products of Quebec and Ontario?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes it does, but it has no relation whatever to the maximum tariff, and therefore it does not come within the scope of my observations. There is such a clause in operation now, and what I have to say does not in any way effect it. Now, the proposal was that the maximum tariff would be imposed upon all the products of Canada, and it is with that matter I am now dealing. The clause to which my hon. friend refers is in the tariff law; it is in operation to-day, and my observations do not touch it at all.

Mr. SPROULE. That clause is that the amount of the export duty levied shall be added to the duty in the United States.

Mr. FIELDING. That has reference to particular cases which have already arisen in some degree in Ontario, and in a limited degree in Quebec. I believe to-day there is a different tax being levied upon some pulp taken out from the province of Ontario compared with what is levied in other cases. I do not think very much of it is paid, but I am informed there are cases in which that special tax has been paid. At all events, that is not under the maximum tariff clause; it is under a different division of the tariff, and I am not now dealing with it.

Then, I come to the larger question of what is commonly called the Franco-Canadian treaty. In a general way the United States government have taken the ground that the Franco-Canadian treaty is a discrimination; an undue discrimination against them. That is to say, that since we granted certain rates of duty to the products of France, and of certain other countries, which we did not grant to the United States, that amounts to discrimination, and it was assumed generally that in order to avoid the maximum tariff we should grant to the United States what we granted to France under the Franco-Canadian treaty, covering 110 tariff numbers of the Canadian tariff.

We were not disposed to admit that rule. We claimed that our treaty with France was a treaty of reciprocity; that is to say, that we granted to France certain concessions in return for which France granted us similar or equivalent concessions. We said to the United States: If you want these concessions that France received from us, you should be prepared to purchase them as France did by giving what we would regard as equivalent concessions. To that our friends in the United States naturally demurred. They claimed that if they gave us what is called the favoured-nation treatment—the best that was going —that we should do the same with them. That, however, we thought was a view we ought not to take. We refused to take it in the beginning, and we refuse to take it now.

There is a misapprehension with respect to this Franco-Canadian treaty in one respect. I read recently a newspaper article which treated our difference with the United States as one which arose in consequence of our recent French treaty. That is a mistake. If the new French treaty had not been entered into at all, the same question would have arisen, because we had another French treaty, a treaty not so comprehensive as the later one, but which was in principle the same. We have had since the year 1894 a treaty with France, and which incidentally, in consequence of the favoured-nation conditions, we granted to other countries. We granted to France and these other countries concessions which we did not grant to the United States, so that in principle the question that we have with the United States to-day is the same question that would have presented itself even if our recent Franco-Canadian treaty had never been adopted, because we would have still had an outstanding French treaty in which there were rates granted to France which were not granted to the United States, and consequently there would have been the same ground for the contention——

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. May I ask whether it was the treaty of 1894 or the treaty passed with France last year which in the opinion of the American representatives constituted a discrimination?

Mr. FIELDING. The treaty of 1893 has ceased to exist, and consequently it could not be a discrimination, but if we had not brought forward the new treaty the old treaty would have remained in existence. The old treaty was abolished by the terms of the new treaty, and if the new treaty had not been negotiated the old treaty would have remained, and the principle of discrimination as between France and the United States was as clearly set forth in the old treaty as it was in the new. The new treaty is more comprehensive in character, but the principle of discrimination—if it be discrimination—is to be found in the old treaty as well as in the new. Our contention was that our treaty with France was a reciprocal treaty. We said to our American friends that if they were prepared to negotiate with us for better trade relations with Canada, if they were willing to give us what we might regard as adequate concessions, we would be disposed to give them what we might regard as reasonable concessions in return. But, we disputed their right to say that the concessions which we gave to France and to other countries in return for favours, should be given to the United States without any compensation to us at all.

There is another aspect of the question. It was said, and there was a little force in it, that we not only gave these concessions to France in return for favours, but that we gave them, through the favoured-nation treaties of olden time, to a number of other countries without receiving any specific concession. Now, these other countries which enjoy the French treaty by virtue of the old favoured-nation treaties are for the most part unimportant. There are some of them with which we have a considerable trade, but most of them, certainly one-half of them, are countries with which we have little or no trade, and they cannot come into competition with the United States. But they have received these privileges, not by virtue of any treaty we have ourselves made with them, but by virtue of the favoured-nation clause which was found in old treaties made very many years ago by the British authorities at a time when the colonies had not attained to their present status. It is hardly necessary to remind the House that Great Britain no longer makes any commercial treaties concerning Canada without first obtaining the consent and concurrence of Canada; but these old treaties remaining in operation from many years ago do contain that clause, and as they have not been denounced, it became necessary we should grant to a number of these countries the same privileges as we granted to France.

We were able to point out to our friends of the United States that they probably could have stood in the same position as these other countries, and that if they were not in the same position, it was because they had never been willing to accept the British idea of what favoured-nation treaties meant; that they had always preferred to stand outside——

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. What is the British idea?

Mr. FIELDING. The British idea does not insist on favour for favour. The British idea holds—and our American friends just now are disposed to use it up to a certain point—that if you give to France, for example, a certain concession and you get from France a return for it, if you have a favoured-nation treaty with another country you are bound to give these favours to the other country without demanding a return. The essence of it is that you must give these other countries the best terms that are going. The Americans have never accepted that rule. They have never come into the family of favoured nations in that respect, and they could not now complain if, because of their own action and policy in relation to that question, they have not stood in as good a position as some other countries. However, beneath it all there was the point that Canada was bound to insist on her right to make these treaties without stopping to consider whether or not they would be agreeable to another country, and we have endeavoured to insist on that right all through.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Will the minister pardon me if I ask him here if the United States government, as a result of these negotiations, has abandoned its contention that the reciprocal relations between Canada and another country are to be construed as bringing Canada within the clause which puts her under the higher tariff?

Mr. FIELDING. I think that the information which I will give to the House as to the concessions which we propose to make will answer my hon. friend's question. It will show that we are going to receive from the United States the advantages of the minimum tariff, but that we do not propose to grant to the United States all that we have granted to France and other favoured-nation countries.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Then they have abandoned the claim they have made?

Mr. FIELDING. I think that when the President issues his proclamation this afternoon that will constitute an abandonment of the claim. At the same time, I do not wish to interpret the actions of our neighbours to the south. When we receive the advantages of the minimum tariff and they issue their proclamation accordingly, I consider that that will constitute an abandonment of the claim that they are entitled to receive whatever favours we give to other countries. We certainly do not admit that claim, and have taken pains to put that fact on record. At the same time, I do not wish to interpret their attitude; but when they grant us the advantages of the minimum tariff, and receive from us in return, not all the concessions of the French treaty, but a small part of them, I consider that that constitutes an abandonment of any contention that they have a right to interfere with our liberty in treaty-making.

The next stage of this matter arose in connection with the visit of President Taft to Albany to take part in an interesting function to which the Governor General of Canada was also invited. Albany may be considered a half-way house between Washington and Ottawa, and it came to our knowledge that the President had expressed a desire to take up this matter personally, and would be pleased if arrangements could be made that he might himself discuss the matter with representatives of the Canadian government.

Mr. J. D. REID. Who advised the government of his desire?

Mr. FIELDING. What bearing has that upon the matter? So long as the fact is correct, what matters it how we ascertained it?

Mr. J. D. REID. Was it, or was it not from the editor of the Toronto 'Globe'?

Mr. FIELDING. Here is another case of a gentleman who is concerned about the Toronto 'Globe' who has never profited much from its instructions.

Mr. HUGHES. If the hon. gentleman is referring to me, I wish to say that I made reference not to the 'Globe' at all, but to the gentleman who runs the 'Globe', and who also seems to run this government.

Mr. FIELDING. Well, he runs other people as well, it seems. I may say frankly that I believe the editor of the 'Globe' has done a useful public service. I am delighted to give him that credit in the presence of the House.

Mr. HUGHES. Don't disown him.

Mr. FIELDING. I do not disown him. As I have stated, the president was going to Albany and an intimation reached us that he would be pleased to discuss the matter with representatives of this government. If my hon. friend wants to know from whom the intimation came, I can asure him that it came from Mr. Wm. H. Taft, the President of the United States.

Mr. J. D. REID. Through the negotiations of Mr. Macdonald of the 'Globe'.

Mr. FIELDING. If it was so, we do not object. We are perfectly willing to receive good words from whatever source they come.

Mr. J. D. REID. May I ask the Minister of Finance if he or the First Minister sent Mr. Macdonald down to Washington to make the negotiations?

Mr. FIELDING. Of what consequence is it?

Mr. J. D. REID. Why did not the First Minister send a member of his government instead of the editor of the Toronto 'Globe'?

Mr. FIELDING. That is exactly what the First Minister did.

Mr. J. D. REID. After Mr. Macdonald had gone to Washington and negotiated.

Mr. FIELDING. Many people went to Washington. It is a large and beautiful city, and many people besides Mr. Macdonald went there and had discussions with the United States government on this matter long before Mr. Macdonald did.

Mr. J. D. REID. But the hon. gentleman does not deny that the First Minister, or the Finance Minister sent Mr. Macdonald to make negotiations.

Mr. FIELDING. I do not deny it because I do not know why the hon. gentleman should state it.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. The reason is that it is not the first time that the editor of the 'Globe' has gone as a quasi outside ambassador to negotiate a treaty.

Mr. FIELDING. I remember a time when the stately editor of the 'Globe', the Hon. George Brown, went to Washington, not as an outside ambassador, but as the duly authorized commissioner of this government, in 1874 for that purpose; and if the 'Globe' of later years is willing to do good service for the country, let us by all means acknowledge it.

Mr. J. D. REID. Did the Minister of Finance send Mr. Macdonald there to negotiate?

Mr. FIELDING. If the hon. gentleman states it——

Mr. J. D. REID. But you do not deny it.

Mr. FIELDING. I do not think it important to deny half the things the hon. gentleman says.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Why was not the present editor of the 'Globe' clothed with the same dignity as his predecessor?

Mr. FIELDING. Can my hon. friend tell me exactly all the powers that were extended to his predecessor?

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I think I can. I have the book right here, if you want me to read them.

Mr. FIELDING. I hope not.

Mr. HUGHES. The only point is that it was after all this government that first did the bowing, or the crawling, or the opening of the negotiations.

Mr. FIELDING. That statement has not a shadow of foundation. I hope that is sufficiently specific to reach the mind of my hon. friend.

Mr. HUGHES. Not at all.

Mr. FIELDING. Well, it is the best I can do in that process. As I have stated, the President of the United States sent a telegram requesting that the Minister of Finance might meet him at Albany to discuss the matter.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. A telegram to whom?

Mr. FIELDING. To myself. I have not the telegram with me or I would read it And let me say that the President expressed the desire that the Prime Minister might also be present. The President said that he was desirous of avoiding any trouble with Canada; and I am satisfied that Mr. Taft, both from a sense of his responsibility in his high office, and from his friendly relations with the people of Canada, as manifested by many years of visiting our country, was earnestly anxious to avoid this trouble if he could. But it was represented to him that the terms of the maximum tariff clause gave him but a limited discretion. He did not feel that he was absolutely free to settle the matter in accordance with his own personal desire, and he felt that that clause had to be considered. Mr. Taft is a great lawyer, and has been a judge, and it was thought by many people in close touch with him that he would feel obliged as a lawyer and an ex-judge to give the maximum tariff clause an interpretation irrespective of what his own personal desire might be. But he was not desirous of straining the clause to our disadvantage. On the contrary, I am sure he would prefer, if there were to be any straining, that it should rather be in order to come to a friendly settlement than otherwise. When it was claimed that in offering us exemption from the maximum tariff they were offering us great concessions, we felt obliged to dissent. We felt that if they wanted us to make some concessions to them, they ought to make concessions to us on their existing tariff. When they proposed, as a means of bridging over the difficulty, that we should give them the French treaty, we had to say 'no, if you are prepared to give us direct concessions below your existing tariff, we are prepared to discuss with you. The President pointed out that he had no power to do that, that Congress only could do that, and that Congress moved slowly in these matters; but he gave us the most positive assurance of his desire to cultivate the most friendly commercial relations with Canada. He made a public speech at the University of Albany, in my hearing, along this line, and he gave a public interview to the editor of the 'Globe', which I hope hon. gentlemen opposite will read, in which he gave expression to the same view; and in all his conversations with me, he was most cordial in the assurance of his desire to bring about closer commercial relations with Canada.

Mr. SPROULE. Who was responsible for the interpretation of this portion of the American law, that where a country discriminates against the United States 'there should be levied, collected and paid on all articles when imported from any foreign country into the United States or into any of its possessions (except the Philippine Islands, the Island of Guam and Intuila) the rates of duty prescribed by the schedule and paragraphs of section one of this Act, and in addition thereto 25 per cent ad valorem.' Who was it that gave the interpretation as to what the 25 per cent ad valorem meant? If I understood the hon. minister correctly, it is 25 per cent on the value of the article and not on the duty.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend himself will interpret that clause the moment he reads it. I am afraid that a great many who have not read the clause itself, and have only received information in a general way, have laboured under the impression that it meant 25 per cent of the duty. My hon. friend will see himself, on reading the clause carefully, that it means distinctly 25 per cent ad valorem. No one was called on to give that interpretation. It is the interpretation evident to any one who reads the clause. There is no room for two interpretations. The president is clothed with the power to grant exemption to a country which does not discriminate against the United States. He claims that he has not an absolutely free hand, although he has some considerable measure of discretion. But it was believed by many that the president would be advised by his tariff board, his expert advisers, that the situation in Canada, under the French treaty, did amount to a discrimination, and that he might feel bound in consequence to impose the maximum tariff.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Bluff.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend says that President Taft was perhaps bluffing. I will come to that in a moment. We were anxious that, if we were to make some concessions to the United States, they should make us some concessions in return, and the president pointed out very fairly, as I had to admit, that that was not within his power. He could not of himself grant any concessions below the rates of the minimum tariff. That could only be done by Congress, and we all know that Congress moves somewhat slowly, and it would not be possible, within the dates between these negotiations and the 1st of April, to obtain any remedial legislation in Congress.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Did the president give the minister to understand that he would use his best efforts at the present Congress to have the duties reduced with regard to Canada?

Mr. FIELDING. Practically, yes. I was coming to that in a moment. Not by specifying a particular section, but he had given us the assurance—and that was the very point I was about to make—of his desire to bring about better trade relations with Canada, involving mutual concessions on the part of both countries.

Mr. SPROULE. Could he give any below the maximum?

Mr. FIELDING. If he could give the minimum, that is below the maximum.

Mr. SPROULE. What I want to know is this. In the event of our imposing certain restrictions upon the trade between us and the United States, either by means of an export duty or otherwise, which would bring us under the maximum tariff or the special provision made in the case of pulp, could he relieve us of that provision which would bring us under the maximum tariff?

Mr. FIELDING. The only thing the president himself can do, under the existing law, is issue a proclamation, and I believe it has been issued at Washington this afternoon—that is the understanding—and if anything could occur which, in his judgment, would amount to discrimination by Canada against the United States, he undoubtedly would have the power to recall that proclamation and thus leave us in the maximum tariff. I feel sure, however, that the whole trend of the negotiations is such as to assure us of the cordial desire of the president to improve our trade relations whatever may happen.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I did not understand the hon. minister to say that the president would do his utmost at the present session of Congress to have a reduction made in the tariff.

Mr. FIELDING. I am not sure that it will be done at the present session of Congress. That is a fair matter of debate, but the president gave us abundant assurances of his desire to bring about better relations with Canada, involving mutual trade concessions. There was a time when our people used to say: what is the good of these assurances? We have had hopes before about reciprocity which have not been realized. That is true, but there is this important difference. On all previous occasions we were seeking reciprocity, and the United States were either indifferent or hostile. The situation is changed to-day. It is not Canada which is seeking reciprocity to-day, but the President of the United States comes to the government of Canada and publicly declares his anxiety to open up negotiations. That is all the difference in the world. Under present circumstances, with the President of the United States coming to us in that spirit, I attach the utmost importance to the assurances which he gave us. We separated at Albany with the understanding that the matter might have to be taken up at Washington at an early day. The president gave us the assurance of his willingness to accept a very moderate concession to meet the difficulty. They had asked for the French treaty; they knew we would not give them the French treaty. The question was whether we could give them something short of the French treaty with which they would be content. So, we separated at Albany and resumed the negotiations at Washington on Friday last, when I had the honour and advantage of having accompanying me and associated with me my good friend the Minister of Railways (Mr. Graham). The whole matter was discussed in the same friendly spirit. The desire of both sides was to avoid a tariff war. We could not give to the United States, as I have said, the benefits of the French treaty. We were not prepared to take any steps which would waive our rights and contentions in that respect, and we were not willing to grant any special concessions to the United States. The question that arose was: could we, by making some reduction—not to the United States alone, but to the wide world—create a situation which would be accepted by the President of the United States as a sufficient justification for him to issue the proclamation giving to Canada the benefit of the minimum tariff? That was the problem before us, that was the line upon which we endeavoured to reach a settlement. Now, one of my friends opposite said that this was a bluff. That is possible. There are people in the United States who say that they do not think the president would, in the end, have imposed the maximum tariff upon Canada. That is held by some persons, and, for a time, it was held by a good many. I am bound to say that the best information I could obtain, from sources that were entitled to respect and confidence, led me to believe, for the reasons I have given, that the president, with all his friendly regard for Canada, might have his hand forced and might have to impose the maximum tariff upon us by refraining from issuing his proclamation.

Mr. J. D. REID. Did the hon. minister have that information when the French treaty was being put through?

Mr. FIELDING. It would not have made any difference, anyhow. I cannot understand the application of the hon. member's question to the case before me.

Mr. J. D. REID. The hon. minister (Mr. Fielding) made a speech in which he said that it did not make any difference what view the United States took, the treaty had to go through.

Mr. FIELDING Certainly, that is the view I took. And, if I am not mistaken, the hon. member for Grenville (Mr. J. D. Reid) helped to put it through.

Mr. J. D. REID. I did. But the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) is taking a different course now. He was asked if he would take the step which he has since taken, and he said he would not.

Mr. FIELDING. I dealt with that point early in my present remarks. I said that the suggestion had been offered that, before we approved of the French treaty, we should go to the United States, and practically get their consent to make the treaty.

Mr. NORTHRUP. No, that was not the suggestion.

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, the suggestion was: Before you put this treaty through, find out how the United States will regard it. If that was not the suggestion, what was it?

Mr. NORTHRUP. As the minister has asked the question, no doubt he desires an answer. The whole point was, not that the minister should go to the United States to ascertain their feeling in the matter, but that he should take the trouble to quietly read a statute already passed, and then the law of the land in the United States, in order that he might learn whether, under that law as it stood, he was doing something that might compel us, later, to go on our knees, and ask forgiveness for what we were doing. The hon. minister repudiated anything of the kind that he has done since.

Mr. FIELDING. The hon. member (Mr. Northrup) is not so ingenious as he thinks he is. If he consults the record, he will find that the suggestion was offered that we should not proceed to ratify the French treaty until by some method—I do not know by what method—we should find out what the United States would think of it. That is the position; if it did not mean that, it did not mean anything. And, whether I should go to the United States, or somebody else should go, the essence of the proposition was the same—that we should ascertain whether the United States would be offended by our making the treaty. We said that, with all due respect, we had to contend that it was none of their business what treaty we made, and that position we retain to-day.

Mr. J. D. REID. The minister was brave then, but he has capitulated since.

Mr. FIELDING. The hon. member (Mr. J. D. Reid) was brave in supporting the treaty then, and now he wants to have a nag at it.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Perhaps I may be allowed a word. I voted against the French treaty. My recollection is that some member on this side—possibly myself—asked the hon. minister if he did not think the effect of passing the French treaty would be to bring upon us the maximum tariff of the United States. The minister replied that he did not think our passing the treaty would justify the United States in taking that course.

Mr. FIELDING. That is what I said then, and I say the same to-day. More than that, I tell my hon. friend (Mr. Middlebro) now that we have not given the United States the benefit of the French treaty, and we are getting the benefit of the United States minimum tariff.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Would the minister be good enough to say whether the objections that were raised by the United States government were, practically, altogether owing to the fact that the French treaty had been accepted by this government?

Mr. FIELDING. Largely. That was not the only point, but it was the main point. Undoubtedly, it was the fact that we had granted another country rates of duty which we were not willing to grant to the United States that made the essence of their objection.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Would the hon. gentleman give us any other point that was objected to outside of the French treaty?

Mr. FIELDING. I told the House at an early stage of my address that the wood question was the subject of some consideration. But it is only fair to say that, after discussion, the United States did not formally present that, and did not, in the end, complain of it.

I have said that it is possible that the United States might not have imposed upon Canada the maximum tariff. My opinion was to the contrary, and my information was received from the best sources in the United States, and is, at all events, as well founded as that of hon. members who hold the contrary. The effect upon these countries of a tariff war was apparent to all well-thinking men. There are men in the United States, men of influence in that country, who were at one with us in our desire to be exempt from that maximum tariff. Nevertheless, as I have said, our information was that, in all probability the president, friendly though he was would be likely to feel that he was bound to impose the maximum tariff upon us. I am willing to assume that we might have accomplished this without any concession. I am willing to assume, for the moment, that if we had, to use the common phrase, been content to stand pat, we might have obtained the United States minimum tariff. And that, perhaps, would have been a great triumph for Canada. To hurl defiance at the United States when all the nations of Europe were accepting their terms and conditions, might have been a heroic method. But there are victories that are dearly bought. If we had achieved such a triumph over the United States government as I have spoken of, while, for the moment, it might have been a cause for congratulation, yet it would not have made for the future advantage of the relations between these two peoples. If, therefore, we could avoid the maximum tariff, if it was likely to be imposed, if we could avoid a conflict with the United States by the granting of some concessions—not very numerous, and from our point of view, not very important—I claim that, in the interests of this country for the present, and the future, it was far better that we should make these concessions than even that we should have a triumph over the United States on terms which would have left soreness and ill-feeling and might create friction in the negotiations that arise from time to time. So then, in view of the spirit with which we found the president dealing with the question, believing, as I fully believed, in his earnestness of purpose, in the sincerity of his professions of a desire to establish the best relations with Canada, we felt that it was worth our while to consider whether we could not find some common ground of action, something that we could grant to the United States without injury to ourselves, but which they might accept as an honourable basis of compromise. The question then arose as to what concessions we could grant to them. Two principles were laid down for our guidance, first, that the concessions should not be numerous; we could not give them the 110 numbers of the French treaty or anything approaching it, we could give them only a small number of concessions; second, that these concessions should not involve anything which could place at a disadvantage any of our established Canadian industries.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Do these concessions apply only to the United States, or are they general?

Mr. FIELDING. No, we declined to grant any concessions specifically to the United States. We provide that the concessions which are granted are in the general tariff and shall apply to the whole world.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Would the minister say whether, in his judgment, the concessions he has made, aside from the United States minimum tariff, are more of an advantage than a detriment to this country?

Mr. FIELDING. I think on general principles—I am not sure that my hon. friend will agree with me—that a reduction of duties on articles of general consumption is almost always an advantage to the people.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Why were not these concessions or reductions made long ago?

Mr. FIELDING. They have served a very useful purpose in that we have them to give now.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Then do I understand that for some years we have been cutting off our own noses in order to have a whip to use on the United States?

Mr. FIELDING. I am glad to hear my hon. friend suggest that these concessions should have been given long ago. But I want to know what has become of adequate protection.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. The country has known what this schedule of concessions is, and parliament is waiting now to hear them from the minister.

Mr. FIELDING. Considering how many times my hon. friend has come to his feet to interrupt me, I think I have some reason to complain that he should now find fault with delay. Besides, the whole country knows what they are, and nobody can be interested in waiting for them any longer. However, we came to the conclusion that we would grant reductions in the general tariff upon a list of 13 items. There was a time when that was considered an unlucky number, but the superstition is thrust aside now, and 13 is a lucky number. I will now read the resolution containing the concessions:

Resolved that it is expedient to amend the 'Customs Tariff, 1907,' by repealing the rates of duty in the 'General Tariff' on the following articles, and substituting reduced rates of duty as follows:—

Number of Tariff Item.		General Tariff.
		Present rates of Duty to be repealed.	Reduced rates of Duty to be adopted.
94	Dates and figs, dried, per one hundred pounds	62½ cents.	55 cents.
99	Prunes and dried plums, unpitted; raisins and dried currants, per pound	1 cent.	⅔ cent.
109	Almonds, walnuts, Brazil nuts, pecans and shelled peanuts, n.o.p., per pound	3 cents.	2 cents.
112	Nuts of all kinds, n.o.p., per pound	3 cents.	2 cents.
180	Photographs, chromos, chromotypes, artotypes, oleographs, paintings, drawings, pictures, decalcomania transfers of all kinds, engravings or prints or proofs therefrom, and similar works of art, n.o.p.; blue prints, building plans, maps and charts, n.o.p.	25 p. c.	22½ p. c.
228	Soap powders, powdered soap, mineral soap, and soap, n.o.p.	35 p. c.	32½ p. c.
234	Perfumery, including toilet preparations, non-alcoholic, viz.:—Hair oils, tooth and other powders and washes, pomatums, pastes and all other perfumed preparations, n.o.p., used for the hair, mouth or skin	35 p. c.	32½ p. c.
287	Tableware of china, porcelain, white granite or ironstone	30 p. c.	27½ p. c.
318	Common and colourless window glass	15 p. c.	12½ p. c.
366	Watch actions and movements, and parts thereof, finished or unfinished, including winding bars and sleeves	15 p. c.	12½ p. c.
604	Dongola, cordovan, calf, sheep, lamb, kid or goat, kangaroo, alligator, and all leather, dressed, waxed, glazed or further finished than tanned, n.o.p.; harness leather, and chamois skin	17½ p. c.	15 p. c.
634	Feathers and manufactures of feathers, n.o.p.; artificial feathers, fruits, grains, leaves and flowers suitable for ornamenting hats	30 p. c.	27½ p. c.
711	All goods not enumerated in this schedule as subject to any other rate of duty, and not otherwise declared free of duty, and not being goods the importation whereof is by law prohibited	20 p. c.	17½ p. c.
	Provided that duty shall not be deemed to be provided for by this item upon dutiable goods mentioned as 'n.o.p.' in any preceding tariff item.
	Provided further that when the component material of chief value in any non-enumerated article consists of dutiable material enumerated in this schedule as bearing a higher rate of duty than is specified in this tariff item, such non-enumerated article shall be subject to the highest duty which would be chargeable thereon if it were composed wholly of the component material thereof of chief value, such 'component material of chief value' being that component material which shall exceed in value any other single component material in its condition as found in the article.

Our tariff is somewhat elaborate, and almost everything that could have been thought of is specified by name. But there is a clause at the end that anything not so specified should be rated in this way, and that is a reduction from 20 per cent to 17½ per cent.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. I do not see any reduction on agricultural implements.

Mr. FIELDING. No. Again I ask: What has become of the adequate protection that was demanded from the other side?

Mr. SCHAFFNER. The hon. gentleman promised us free trade in agricultural implements.

Mr. FIELDING. Never.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Would the minister give us the amount of imports of those articles into Canada, and the loss of revenue that will accrue?

Mr. FIELDING. Not to-day, if you please. I have not the information at hand. I do not think the loss of duty will be a very heavy one. But even so, I think that in the present flourishing conditions of our revenue we shall be able to stand it. I have already mentioned that these reductions are to be made in the general tariff. The effect of that is that the rates on these items of the general tariff and of the intermediate tariff will be the same. There are a number of cases running through our Tariff Act in which the rates of the general and the intermediate are the same. There are some rates which are the same, not only in the general and intermediate, but also in the preferential. The cases, however, in which the general and intermediate rates are the same will be extended by these 13 items. As I have already said, I think the House will agree with me that while these duties have served a purpose in obtaining the favourable action of the United States they are not items which come into serious conflict with any of our own industries, and so far as they go, they will be deemed reductions of duty to the consumer. Extremists on both sides will have extreme views as to this arrangement. I have no doubt that some will say that the United States have the best of the bargain and that others will say that Canada has the best of the bargain. In both cases, I believe, they will be wrong. The best kind of bargain is one where both sides meet each other in a good spirit and are satisfied that the spirit of compromise has prevailed. I believe it is a good thing for Canada and I believe it is a good thing for the United States. It is a good thing because it will prevent the bringing on of the maximum tariff, if it had to come; and even if it were not to come I say again that I believe that it was better that we should bring about this result by some concession, of no great importance to us but of some value to the United States, than that we should quarrel with them, because, though we might feel that we were right, victory might be dearly bought, if it should prevent the good relations which ought to prevail between the people of these two great countries lying side by side.

I wish to say a word or two before concluding about the British ambassador. It is only right that I should do Mr. Bryce the justice of saying that in all this transaction he gave us his hearty sympathy, co-operation and support. I sometimes read in the public press references to alleged friction between the embassy at Washington and the Canadian government, but I may say that there is not the shadow of a foundation for anything of the kind. No ambassador at Washington has ever taken more trouble than did Mr. Bryce—I think I might say no ambassador has ever taken so much trouble—to put himself in close touch with the Canadian government. He has come to Ottawa repeatedly to meet our ministers, and public men, and in this, and every other negotiation Mr. Bryce and his tariff at Washington have given us their hearty sympathy, co-operation and support. When Mr. Bryce was approached as to the manner in which this negotiation should be conducted, he suggested that the most effective means would be to put the United States government in close and direct touch with the government of Canada. He advised them accordingly, and the result is to be found in the arrangement that has been made.

I have stated that there is not a great deal of correspondence upon this subject, but there is some, and I should like, before concluding, to place the House in possession of it. Down to a very recent date negotiations were conducted almost entirely through interviews and conversations between representatives of the two governments. On the 26th March last, which was Saturday, after the fullest discussion of the whole matter with the President and Secretary of State, Mr. Knox, I addressed the following letter to Mr. Knox:

Washington, March 26, 1910.

My dear Mr. Secretary,—In the conference which, upon his invitation, I had the honour to hold with the President of the United States at Albany a few days ago, it was represented to me that the settlement of our present tariff differences and the opening of the way for negotiations, having in view a broader scheme of reciprocal trade, would be facilitated by Canada making some reductions in its present scale of duties as applied to products of the United States. While unable to waive any of the contentions which Canada has held throughout our discussion of the subject, I have appreciated the exceptional circumstances and reasons advanced by the President in support of his request. A tariff conflict between the two countries would undoubtedly be a matter of the gravest concern for both, involving widespread disturbance of trade, heavy loss to citizens of both countries and the creation of much friction at a time when the cultivation of happier relations is most desirable. Both parties to the difference should, I realize, be willing to go as far as possible to avert such a conflict.

I have observed with satisfaction that your government are not disposed to press some of their earlier contentions respecting our commercial treaties which, from our point of view, we could not admit. This being the case, I feel that our government should go as far as possible to meet the views of the President and to respond to the good spirit in which he has approached the subject. On behalf of the Canadian government I agree that we shall forthwith recommend to the parliament of Canada such amendment of the Canadian customs tariff as will reduce the duties on the list of articles agreed upon between us, such articles and the reduced rates of duty being as follows:—

I shall not read the list as I read it a moment ago. There is a note as to the meaning of the abbrevations, &c., and the concluding paragraph is as follows:

It is understood that these reductions are not to apply exclusively to the products of the United States, but that the Canadian government are free to apply them to the products of any other country.

Yours faithfully,

(Sgd.) W. S. FIELDING.

The Honourable P. C. KNOX,
Secretary of State,
Washington.

I shall now read a letter from Mr. Knox,

Secretary of State for the United States, addressed to me on the same day.

Mr. J. D. REID. Is that written in Washington?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, it is the only place I had the pleasure of meeting Mr. Knox.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I wish to know if that contains all the correspondence with Mr. Knox, or is it only a partial return? Have you his letter asking for the negotiations?

Mr. FIELDING. This is the correspondence which took place in Washington on the conclusion of the negotiations.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. It has nothing to do with the preliminary arrangements?

Mr. FIELDING. If I had waited to bring down all the preliminary correspondence, I might have had to keep my hon. friend until to-morrow, when I know he is burning with anxiety for information; so, I hastened from the train with all due speed in order that I might explode this upon him.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I have to apoligize to the minister. I thought he had been here a couple of days looking over this correspondence.

Mr. FIELDING. I can assure my hon. friend that I was not. This letter is dated March 26, 1910, and is as follows:

Department of State, Washington,
March 26, 1910.

My dear Mr. Minister,—The adjustment of trade relations between Canada and the United States under existing tariff legislation, conducted through you at the instance of the British ambassador, and brought to a successful conclusion so largely through your own patient and earnest efforts, cannot fail to be a cause of mutual felicitation between the thoughtful people of both countries.

I am gratified that the recent tendencies towards a more perfect understanding between our respective countries, manifested so conspicuously in the maturing adjustments of boundary, boundary waters, fisheries and other long-standing differences, will not be affected by the irritations which would have resulted from our failure to agree upon the tariff question.

The agreement encourages the hope that the future trade relations of the two countries will become even more intimate and expanded, and will be regulated in a spirit of cordial reciprocation and interdependence. The common commerce now amounts to a vast sum, and its extraordinary growth is an index of the vast industry and commercial development among both peoples. It seems clear that this trade should be fostered so that the markets of each may be open to the other on the most advantageous terms possible for the interchange of commodities, and that such interchange undoubtedly can be promoted by the two governments without impairing their national economic policies.

Mr. FIELDING.

The President is confident that the policy of broader and closer commercial relations with Canada will receive the hearty support of the large majority of the people of the United States, and he has learned with much satisfaction of the existence of a similar sentiment in the Dominion. It may be added that the conditions of the present day, as contrasted with the traditions of the past, are bringing into clearer light the truth that not only mutual trade interests but ethical and social considerations of the highest moment reinforce this common sentiment.

Let me, then, take this opportunity to express, by his direction, the desire of the President that your government will find it convenient to take up with this government, at such time and in such manner as may be mutually satisfactory, the consideration of a readjustment of our trade relations upon the broader and more liberal lines which should obtain between countries so closely related geographically and racially, as indicated by the President in his recent public utterances.

I am, my dear Mr. Minister,
Very truly yours,
(Sgd.) P. C. KNOX.

The Honourable W. S. FIELDING,
Minister of Finance of the Dominion of Canada.

The other letter which concludes the correspondence is as follows:

Washington, March 26, 1910.

My dear Mr. Secretary,—I have the honour to acknowledge receipt of your letter of this date.

The Canadian government very heartily reciprocate your expressions as to the desirability of improving the commercial relations between the United States and Canada, and will gladly avail themselves of the invitation of the Presiden to take up with your government, at such time and in such manner as may be mutually satisfactory, the consideration of a readjustment of these relations upon broad and liberal lines. The recent public utterances of the President in that direction have afforded much satisfaction to the Canadian people, who will receive with pleasure the formal confirmation of them, which is now conveyed to our government through you. I am confident that your assurances will be received also with much gratification by His Majesty's government in London, who will find in them further evidence of the desire of the government of the United States to maintain the most cordial relations with the British empire.

Allow me to express for myself as well as for my colleague, Mr. Graham, who has been associated with me in the conference at Washington, the most sincere thanks to the President and yourself for the cordiality of your welcome, and the very frank manner in which you have discussed the questions that have engaged our attention.

Yours faithfully,
(Sgd.) W. S. FIELDING.

The Honourable P. C. KNOX,
Secretary of State,
Washington.

I shall, Mr. Speaker, place upon the table for consideration in Committee of the Whole, resolutions destined to give effect to the tariff changes which I have already proposed to the House. I venture to present this statement, Sir, in the fullest confidence that it will commend itself to the judgment of the House—I trust I may say to both sides of the House, for there is and there should be no party question in such a matter. I am inclined to think that if we desired some momentary popularity we might have pursued another course. I think there is a general and perhaps a justifiable feeling in the minds of the people of Canada, that in the years that have passed our American friends have not treated us generously or fairly with regard to these commercial questions, and consequently there is a strong disposition —at all events there has been a strong disposition—rather to resent any further communication with them. But, that is of a time that has gone; that is of a time when Ottawa went to Washington: Now we have reached a time when Washington has come to Ottawa, and that, I think Sir, is a matter which must be a source of gratification to us all. And though for the moment, by what is called the 'stand-pat' policy, by refusing to do anything, by bidding defiance to the United States, there might be a momentary hurrah, I am persuaded that as the difficulties of the maximum tariff would become apparent, as great industries in Canada would be found to suffer, as men would find their capital impaired and as other men would find themselves thrown out of employment, even though it might be temporary, even though in the end we might have been able to overcome it : I am strongly persuaded that the feeling which at a moment might be one of gratification would change to a feeling of anxiety and alarm, and that in the end many a man would turn to the government and say: Was it not possible to have averted this disaster? was it not possible by some moderate concession to have given the President of the United States an opportunity to pursue a more friendly course? And, if it could then be shown that some small and comparatively unimportant concessions could have effected a settlement, that the government could be rightfully charged to make these small concessions, that government would be condemned, and deservedly so. I present this question, Sir, with the fullest conviction that the small concessions we make are reasonable concessions for the purpose of meeting the United States—the President of the United States and his Secretary of State particularly—in response to their good will. I accept the assurance of their good will for the present and of their good intentions for the future, and I am satisfied that in making this friendly arrangement we are doing that which is best for the future of Canada.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. I wish to ask the Minister of Finance a question which I am sure will be asked of us: What concessions have the American government made to us?

Mr. FIELDING. If my hon. friend cannot find an answer to that question in my speech he would not find it in anything further I can say.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). The minister has introduced this subject in an exceptional way on a motion for the House to go into Committee of Ways and Means, which practically makes it a portion of the budget debate. I would like to ask the minister that this matter be left open so that it may be discussed at a later date, because owing to the absence of the leader of the oposition and the ex-Minister of Finance and others who did not expect such a discussion to-day it would be very inconvenient to proceed with the debate. Now, with regard to the correspondence, in my judgment the House is entitled to all the correspondence that has passed between the Finance Minister and the President of the United States or the government of Canada and the government of the United States.

Mr. FIELDING. I can assure my hon. friend that there is no correspondence of that nature. What I referred to was correspondence that might have taken place between the British ambassador and the Secretary of State at Washington, which perhaps might be deemed to be confidential. I can assure my hon. friend that there is no correspondence on the part of this government which is not substantially before the House.

Mr. SPROULE. I have always understood that when two nations are negotiating in this way each makes memoranda of what each proposes whether that is accepted or rejected, and that memoranda is always available for parliament afterwards. In negotiations of this kind the confidential correspondence must be very limited, if indeed there be any such. All we have is the three letters which are all dated on the 26th of March, whereas there were negotiations carried on for quite a time previous to that. My hon. friend (Mr. Schaffner) asked a very pertinent question from the minister as to what concession we had received from the United States in return, and as the minister was unable to answer I presume we have received none. If we accept the statement of the minister, the only duty cast on the president was to interpret a question of law as a judge on the bench would, and we are bound to assume that the president would treat that question judicially without consideration of what concessions we might make. However, the Minister of Finance would lead the House and the country to believe that the judicial interpretation of that law by the president depended on our giving the United States concessions on these 13 items, which, I do not think is very complimentary to the president in his judicial capacity. I am bound to believe that it would not have influenced the president to any extent; but, as the minister has said, he interpreted that law as a judge would interpret it if he were on the bench. Consequently, all the concessions have been on our side, and we have received no concessions in return, and I believe the country will reach the same conclusion that I have, that this is practically a give-away on our part all along the line. I was in hopes that on some important lines in which it would be of advantage for us to have the American market, such as grain, dairy products and animals, they would have given us some concessions, but there is no mention whatever made of them. In regard to pulpwood, the situation is the same as it was before. If we impose an export duty on pulpwood, they are liable to increase their duty correspondingly. I have not much to say on the matter, because we are not in a position to judge as to what we do get, until we know what our importations of the various articles named have been from the United States, and from other countries, and what the reduction in the revenue is likely to be as a result of the reduced duties. There are many other important questions involved which ought to be carefully considered, and which the minister assures there will be an opportunity to consider. I wish to make one more observation. The hon. minister said that there was a time when our pilgrimages were to Washington, but that this had been reversed. It seems to me, from what has come out in the press regarding the good offices of the editor of the Toronto 'Globe' in disabusing the minds of the American government of false impressions, that he must have been sent to Washington by this government.

Mr. FIELDING. Will my hon. friend permit me to say that I did not treat that question seriously when it was presented by the hon. member for Leeds and Grenville (Mr. J. D Reid); but if my hon friend is serious, let me say that there is no shadow of foundation for the suggestion that that gentleman was sent to Washington by the government.

Mr. J. D. REID. Then he must have told an untruth.

Mr. SPROULE.

Mr. FIELDING. No, I am sure that Mr. Macdonald will not say that the government sent him.

Mr. SPROULE. He at least endeavoured to leave the impression on the country that he had accomplished something and had done some substantial good. It is unlikely that he would go down there on his own mere motion, without suggestion or advice from some source, and the most natural source would be either the Prime Minister or the Minister of Finance. The question is suggested to me, was he at Albany as one of the plenipotentiaries?

Mr. FIELDING. There were many newspaper correspondents at Albany, and Mr. Macdonald was one of them. What does my hon. friend mean by asking if he was one of the plenipotentiaries?

Mr. SPROULE. I mean did he take part in the discussions?

Mr. FIELDING. Certainly not, in any shape or form.

Mr. SPROULE. I am bound to accept the hon. minister's statement, but there is a different impression left on the country from what appears in the 'Globe' itself. I have nothing more to say at present, except that I do not think the hon. Minister of Finance was too courteous towards the hon. member for South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) when he asked if, in the event of these negotiations being carried to a successful conclusion, and along the lines the Minister of Finance anticipated, it would be necessary to have them ratified by parliament before they became law.

Mr. FIELDING. I am placing on the table in the usual form a resolution to be moved in Committee of Ways and Means, upon which a Bill will be founded; so that this thing cannot be done without the consent of parliament. But, in accordance with the custom of our tariffs, the moment the resolutions are placed on the table they take effect, subject to the ratification of parliament later on.

Mr. SPROULE. I am speaking of an incident that occurred last week, when the hon. member for South Simcoe asked if any concessions that might be made would require to be sanctioned by parliament, and the minister gave him no advice.

Mr. FIELDING. When the question was asked by the hon. member for South Simcoe some days ago, no arrangement had been made, and it would have been very inpolitic to have made any statement.. I certainly had no intention of being discourteous to the hon. gentleman. As this matter is not to be disposed of at once, if any hon. gentleman desires to move the adjournment of the debate, there will be no objection.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN (South York). I listened with a great deal of interest to the deliverance of the hon. the Finance Minister this afternoon, and propose to discuss it just a few moments. But, in the first place, I think the most important announcement made was that of the right hon. the First Minister that the Canadian government have agreed to exchange ratifications with regard to the International Waterways Commission. That is a very important measure, with far reaching consequences, involving in the highest degree very important interests to this country, and I hope that the treaty will have the effect of settling these international difficulties, and that the result will be beneficial to both countries. Any one who has followed the discussions in the United States recently must have remarked that Senator Root, who was Secretary of State in the late government, said that tariff complications were to be avoided above all things, because they might prevent the exchange of ratifications with regard to the waterways treaty. So that what we have had in this House to-day is the announcement of the settlement of two very important questions. One is the ratification of a treaty which will have the result of settling questions that arise with regard to waterways, and the other is the announcement of the Minister of Finance, that we have succeeded in avoiding a tariff war. That is a satisfactory, but only temporary settlement of the situation. It is something like the feat of the King of France who marched up the hill with ten thousand men, and then marched them down again. However, there has been some kind of a settlement, and a better approach between the two nations has been reached, and to that extent I am glad to give the government credit for what they have done in the matter. The net result to my mind is this, that at last the great United States have been compelled to recognize that Canada is a free and independent nation on this great North American continent, and that we own, as I think, the better half of it. They have had to recognize also this fact that Canada is not only a free and independent nation, but that we are free to make our own tariff to suit ourselves, and to maintain our commercial autonomy in every sense of the term. The United States have been forced to recognize that, and it has taken a long while to bring that about. They have also been forced to recognize the right of Canada, not only to make her own tariff for the benefit of her own people, and industries, but to give a preference to the mother country, and the associated states of the empire, and they also have been compelled to recognize our right to make reciprocal treaties with other nations throughout the world. There is also the recognition of the fact that Canada has the right to impose export duties. Commercial independence, tariff independence, is largely brought about by export duties, and the resources which are contained in a protective tariff. It was a question of dispute in this country that a tariff could not be used to advance a country. We have demonstrated that it can. Sir John Macdonald, and those who were with him in the early days, and who inaugurated the National Policy, have been vindicated, and the position they took has been amply demonstrated, that a tariff, that bounties and export duties and that all the resources which are in the quiver of the protectionist, are available, and are necessary for the working out of the tariff independence of any nation. And that policy which was begun here a good many years ago with some trepidation, and for which failure was predicted, is to-day vindicated, and is to-day the greatest factor in building up this Canadian nation. Germany has had to recognize, the United States have had to recognize, that Canada is a vast country with a nationality, a fertility, and resources that must command the respect of all the nations of the world.

There is also in this situation a great lesson to the mother country. Our mother country, for some reason or other, and the public men of that country, for a great many years, have been led away by the doctrine that free trade was the best trade for England with other nations. The inefficacy of that doctrine has been proved now, and in no case has it been proved so pointedly as in this that Canada, by reason of her tariff position, can command just treatment from the United States which a country that has no tariff or no arrows in her quiver cannot command. If there be one searching thought in the minds of Englishmen to-day, it is that they have made the mistake of their life in thinking that free trade could enable them to get fair treatment from other nations. There is a great party growing up in England to-day which sees that a protective tariff, and even export duties are the only means by which they can compel other nations to treat England in a fairer way. So that the net profit to-day for the Canadian people is that the National Policy, which was started years ago, has vindicated itself, has been accepted by the people of this country, including hon. gentlemen opposite, and is capable of being used to obtain for us rights which we otherwise could not gain. But we must not be led away by that very sweet letter of Secretary Knox which the Finance Minister read this afternoon with such gusto. The only time when the hon. gentleman becomes really effective is when that crescendo comes into his voice, and he becomes pathetic, as he certainly did this afternoon when he read that letter. But there is nothing in that letter. If you wish to gauge the friendliness of the United States you must examine its purpose, and not the letter of its diplomatists.

The tariff of the United States to-day is very unfriendly so far as we are concerned. But it is inspired—and we cannot blame the Americans for it—by the highest kind of national policy. It is designed for the protection of American industry. With that view, they have put their tariff in its most hostile attitude in regard to the products of Canada, that American tariff is a menace to Canada—hardly so designed, I would say—the object being the development of American industry, and it has succeeded most surprisingly in that respect. So, what I warn the House and the country of is this: We have had a friendly settlement of a question which might have involved a tariff war, but nothing has been done, as yet, to take out the sting that is in the American tariff for Canadian products, that seek the American market, and so our duty to-day is to continue in that national policy which is vindicated here to-day; not to begin to abandon it, or to think that the statement of Secretary Knox that he thinks highly of this country and of Canadian statesmen, can make up for any real disadvantages. The Americans still have their tariff in existence, and they intend to keep it there. And now, under our success of to-day—if it is a success, and I am willing to admit that it is—our duty is all the more the maintenance of a Canadian national policy and a Canadian tariff to meet the unfair tariff that the Americans now impose upon us. If the right to impose an export duty upon pulp has helped to bring this about, why should we not have an export duty upon pulp and other things as well?—on lumber, nickel, asbestos and other products of Canada that are not produced in any other country, and that are now sent out of Canada to the United States to make work for American workmen, profit for American capital and national prestige for the American people. The National Policy has succeeded so well that what we want now is to carry it further and use the instruments we have in our hands to bring the American nation to a sense of the fact that we are determined to go on with the building up of our nationality and the development of our resources.

And now I come to a question which is before this House in another form, but which must be settled. We can no longer afford to allow Americans to come into our country and acquire franchises, to dam our rivers, and to export the power thus produced from Canadian waters to help in the development of the industries of the United States. The moment we let them see, not only that they cannot have our pulp, but that they cannot have our power, they will come to Ottawa again and make concessions, if they have not made them to-day, and make them in the way we want them—in the tariff they impose on the products of this country. We can compel our cousins and brothers in the United States to come to us and help us to develop our resources. There are two ways for the Americans to take part in the exploitation of Canada's resources. One is to come here with their capital and build up industries in Canada; the other is to take the products of Canada and ship them across the line for the development of the United States. We can compel the Americans to come here with their brains and capital and develop Canada's resources within our own territory. And that which enables us to do this is the right we have vindicated to-day, the right to impose export duties, the right to make our own tariff, and give preferences. So, while we should always be friendly with Washington, we should be prepared to carry out the policy that would force them to recognize the position of this country, will force them to come here and develop Canada's resources. No more must this idea be held of allowing them to raid our markets or to use our resources for their own benefit. If we carry out this idea, perhaps, some day, the Americans will come to us with some kind of trade reciprocity. They may say: we want your farm products, and we will remove some of the duties that we impose upon you. If they ever do come, it will be because Canada has taken the strong position of National Policy and is prepared to maintain her commercial integrity no matter at what cost. We must be careful not to be so anxious to win sweet words from the Americans that we shall in any way jeopardize the early carrying out of what I believe is in the air—preferential trade within the empire. I believe there is more for Canada, in her present situation and in her future, in closer relations with the mother country, and with the sister states of the empire than in closer trade relations with the United States. Anything we get from the United States will be the result of—I must use the word, for it is the only one that applies—the result of retaliation. It was this that brought them to time to-day—not sweet words, but the fact that we have the instruments of retaliation in our hands. As between Canada and the mother country, and between Canada and the sister states of the empire, there is a friendly feeling; there is the knowledge that we are bound together now by ties of defence. We must be careful now, in any negotiations we carry on, not to prejudice our chances of greater reciprocal trade within the empire. The one thing that brought the Americans to time to-day was not even the fear of retaliation from Canada or the danger to the republican party of the United States if they imposed the maximum tariff against this country, as the fear that has got into the American mind that the British empire is getting together with regard to trade, and they would like to forestall that coming together if they could.

So we need not fear, from this time, that the Americans will take the attitude they once took with regard to us of refusing to deal with us, and, when we asked them, sending us home with an admonition to mind our own business. They see that Canada has vindicated her tariff integrity, and that Canada, and the empire are coming together for the development of some kind of inter-imperial preferential trade. That being the case I say that the position of Canada is a magnificent one. It is no more surrender or give away. We have now simply got to sit tight, not to sit pat, but sit tight on the policy of the development of our own resources in every direction, to keep all Canadian work for Canadian workingmen, to keep the raw products of Canada within the boundaries of Canada for their subsequent manufacture, and if we find unfair treatment meted out to us by any nation, not to be afraid to apply the lex talionis with regard to that nation. An eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth, is still good law in tariff situations. It has been effective in the past, it is effective to-day, and it will be effective in the future. To my mind, as I have said, the net result of the negotiations closed to-day is that Canada has vindicated her position, not only territorially, but she has vindicated her tariff integrity. She has shown her ability to take care of herself, and to join up with the empire in making the empire greater, and in drawing all portions of the empire closer together. She has established the fact that the only instrument towards achieving national greatness, towards achieving imperial greatness, towards compelling respect from all other nations, is the adoption of a tariff policy, and the use of that tariff instrument will compel the recognition of all these things by outside nations. Therefore, what the government has done to-day in bringing about the recognition that tariff war is not a good thing for either country, they are entitled to what credit they can get out of it. The Canadian people will also be ready to say to-day that the National Policy on which this country embarked some years ago with so much fear and trepidation has more than justified itself, because it has to-day become the basis of Canadian nationality, and of any greatness that Canada may attain on this continent.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE (North Simcoe). The hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr. Maclean) has called attention to the fact that to-day marks a notable point in the history of the development of this country. He says that we have to-day exemplified in a very vivid manner that this country has a perfect right to make its own treaties, that it is independent in tariff matters, and that foreign countries have to come to us if they want to make treaties with us. I had always understood that this country was a free democracy—of course under the British Crown. From away back since confederation, the doctrine has never been questioned that we have a perfect right to make our own tariffs. In regard also to making our own treaties, it was not a question of wrenching any right or prerogative whatsoever from the British Crown; it was simply a matter for us to say whether we desired the right to make our own treaties. No limit has ever been placed upon our freedom to do what we pleased in this respect, except the limit that has been placed by the constitution drafted by the people of this country themselves. For that reason I do not see that there is any credit pertaining to the government of the day in effecting this treaty. This is no fresh victory for liberty, because we have just as great liberty as any other portion of the empire. But there seems to be an under current flowing through the speeches of hon. members, particularly on the other side of the House, to the effect that there is a struggle for liberty constantly going on between this country and the mother country, a struggle to acquire some constitutional right. I fail to see it, and no one who is a student of history but must recognize the folly and childishness of anybody who makes that remark.

The Minister of Finance has placed before the House to-day some facts with reference to the treaty, or the alleged treaty, of reciprocity, or whatever you might call it, between this country and the United States. He laboured for two hours to make his meaning clear, although I am free to admit that he was sometimes interrupted. But after hearing what he had to tell the House, I thought that at the tail end of his speech he was very much like the man who for a bet rolls a pea up and down the sidewalk with a toothpick. The whole object of his speech was to show that Canada had made certain concessions to the United States on 13 items, which, after all, did not amount to anything to speak of, and I thought that if he required two hours to speak of these 13 items, how long would he have required to speak if he had talked of every item in the tariff.

Now, let me take up the real question at issue in this matter. It was not a question at all of whether we should give any treaty rights to the Americans, or anything of that kind, as regards any item in the tariff. The issue was simply and plainly this: Have the Americans the right to dominate this country and say to us: Unless you do so and so we will be unfriendly to you. That to my mind is the whole question at issue in this matter. This country was not the country that brought about this condition. We had nothing to do with the framing of this Payne tariff, we made no promises, we were dealing peaceably with the facts as they existed, carrying on our own business, doing our own work, getting our three meals a day, living peaceably with everybody else in the world. Now, what more? The United States of America which has always stood out against this two columned tariff which they have recently adopted, finds that the markets of the world are gradually being closed against it. They found France closed against them, they found Spain closed against them, they found Italy closing its doors against them, they found that Germany had closed its doors against them, and there was no door left open to them but that of Great Britain. So they say: We will construct this two column tariff and with it we will force Germany, France and Canada to open their markets to us. Now, they passed this Payne-Aldrich tariff, as they call it, and what has happened? This country has been the only country in the world that has surrendered to that Payne tariff that has yielded to the threat of that club. Has Germany surrendered one particle, or France either? They can go on doing business at the old stand in whatever way they like. But we cannot. The way this treaty reads we have surrendered our rights to make our own tariff, we make this maximum and minimum tariff, once you have established a tariff by treaty you cannot raise that tariff. The Minister of Finance is not present but I ask the leader of the government, is it not a fact that once you make a treaty with a country and you fix a rate at a certain figure you surrender your right ever afterwards to change that rate unless you reduce it or denounce the treaty. Of course, he knows very well that is so. They have surrendered now on 13 items, and the next year the United States will come up with some more legislation and clubs and we will have to surrender on twice 13 items. The next year after they will introduce some more club legislation and we will have to surrender on 50 items, and they will continue slaughtering us in that way. We have let the opportunity go by. For once in the history of this country we find ourselves in a position to dictate terms to them, and what have we received? Have we received a single concession beyond what we have had before? We have received nothing but the promise of a president. How many times has a president of the United States promised this country reciprocity of concessions? Time and again, five or six times. Not only that, but five or six times they have sent treaties to Congress giving concessions to this country only to find the treaties kicked out.

Now this is not a matter of our making conditions with the United States. We have surrendered. We have entered the thin edge of the wedge on the question of surrendering to the United States of the right to interfere with our constitutional rights to make our own tariff, and the business people of this country and those who know anything about tariff matters will not overlook that very important point. Let us go back over this very important question. The minister knows that that treaty was aimed at two countries particularly—Germany and Canada. I was very much amused to see the discussion in the Liberal papers about this matter leading to reciprocity. Anybody who knows anything about treaties or treaty-making knows very well that the idea of a reciprocity treaty does not exist to-day as it did before 1890. The whole form of making commercial treaties has changed, and there is no countries in the world, except the United States and Great Britain, which clings to the old reciprocity treaty idea. Anybody knows that by making this double column tariff, as they have done recently, the United States have also given up the idea of a reciprocity treaty. What is the difference between a reciprocity treaty so-called and a favoured-nation clause treaty? A reciprocity treaty is a straight treaty between two countries in which one country says: We will admit certain articles free, or under certain conditions, into our country if you will admit certain articles under similar conditions into yours, and it is a bargain between the two of us. That was the kind of treaty we negotiated in 1854, but that kind of treaty-making has gone out of fashion. They talk about obtaining commercial treaties on a reciprocal basis with the United States. Why, there are fourteen of these reciprocal treaties with foreign countries hung up which never have passed Congress. The treaties that are now passed are such as we have made with France, containing a favoured-nation clause. The favoured-nation clause has been very dangerous to us, and is the thing that has brought us into this trouble. When you make a treaty with any country, which treaty contains a favoured-nation clause, every other country having a treaty with the country with which you are dealing is entitled to similar concessions, and it obtains those concessions without giving anything in return for them. You may give great concessions to France in order to make a treaty, but you must give the benefits of that treaty to every country in the union of favoured nations, without perhaps any return. Supposing Canada made a reciprocal treaty with the United States, every privilege given to the United States must automatically go to France. That is the condition and that is the reason why the Minister of Finance has placed these items in such a way that they are open to every country in the world, so that he would not have to acknowledge to this House that he had made such a fool treaty as the French treaty is. Let us glance briefly over this matter of treaty making between Canada and the United States. It was in 1846 that the question first came up. A form of treaty was then negotiated, but it came to naught. Finally, after a great deal of trouble, a treaty was passed in 1854, and it continued from 1854 until 1865. That treaty was of great benefit to this country. Anybody who studies the statistics of that period will know that our trade with the United States was speedily placed upon an even basis. When the treaty was made, the United States sold to Canada $24,000,000 worth of goods, while Canada sold to the United States $8,000,000 worth. In 1865, when the treaty was denounced, Canada bought from the United States $27,000,000 worth of goods and sold them $33,000,000. The reason why that treaty was denounced was that the Americans claimed that this country was making a tariff which would operate against American manufacturers, and they claimed that we were violating the treaty in spirit. They saw a few factories growing up in this country. Canada had adopted a certain amount of protection, and some factories were built. When the Americans saw factories going up, even saw-mills, they got angry and said: We will denounce that treaty, or you will have to stop building factories over in Canada. Everybody knows that these charges were made in Congress and in the public press, and that these are the true reasons for the abrogation of that treaty. Since then we have made various efforts to negotiate a treaty with the United States. As the Minister of Finance said, the Hon. George Brown went to Washington and negotiated a treaty. Anybody who reads the life of George Brown knows that John Sandfield Macdonald, at the time the reciprocity treaty was denounced, asked the editor of the 'Globe' to go to Washington as a quasi representative of the Canadian government to negotiate a treaty on the quiet, exactly as his follower to-day has done. The correspondence is published in the 'Life of George Brown,' by Alexander Mackenzie, and no doubt the able editor of the 'Globe' is a careful student of the life of his predecessor and has followed the same course. In 1874, a new treaty was negotiated. It was adopted by the President of the United States and by this government, and it was a very good treaty. But as soon as it went to Congress it was thrown out because the United States said that if they could squeeze Canada against the wall, she would very soon come into the union. That process, then adopted, has been going on, the United States government has been holding a club over us, and the imposition of a surtax is only another effort to club us into submission. With all due respect to the story that the Finance Minister has put up that this is a great and notable victory for us, the truth is that we have surrendered, that we have shown the white flag. What was done? The United States sell to Canada vast quantities of goods, the principal articles being manufactures of iron and steel. The right hon. First Minister has just withdrawn the surtax against Germany. Germany is a great producer of iron and steel, and as a purchaser of steel, I can assure you that steel can be bought cheaper in Germany than in the United States. There is not a single article on the iron and steel schedule to-day but what can be purchased as cheaply outside of the United States as in the United States, if not more cheaply. The other large export from the United States to Canada is farm products. There is not a single thing in the whole category of these farm products that is not manufactured by the farmers of this country. I say manufactured, because I believe that the farmers are the biggest manufacturers in Canada, they are using more machinery and employing a greater number of men than all other manufacturers. There is not an article in that schedule but what could and should be produced in this country. One article on that schedule is coal. Coal is dutiable, and no country would derive greater benefit from a reciprocal treaty with regard to coal than the United States would. The coal fields of the United States are in the Pennsylvania valley, and they can supply coal to the province of Ontario. A few years ago the province of Ontario would require an immense amount of coal in order to turn the wheels of the factories. But, thanks to Sir James Whitney and his progressive policy which is resulting in the development of the water-powers of that province, in a few years there will not be such a thing as a coal-driven power plant in Ontario. It is said that the United States might prohibit the sending of coal into this country, but the fact is that the New England states must have Canadian coal, and they are obliged to pay for it a higher price than I as a consumer of coal would like to have to pay. The millions of tons of coal produced in the Crowsnest pass go chiefly to the United States, as is also the case with the millions of tons produced at Nanaimo, and, therefore, reciprocity in coal would not affect us to any appreciable extent. In fact, Sir, I believe it would benefit our country. It seems strange to me, and to other users of coal all over Canada, why, when the Minister of Finance had an opportunity of doing a little trick by giving reciprocity in something, he did not give reciprocity in soft coal. We all know that the duty on coal is higher than the duty on any other single article in this country, because the cost of coal at the pit mouth in Pennsylvania never exceeds $1 a ton, and the duty is over 50 cents a ton. I do not think that the Cape Breton coal fields would lose anything by reciprocity in coal, because I am satisfied that the miners in Nova Scotia would give up the Montreal market to-morrow if they were able to enter the New England and New York markets.

Mr. D. D. McKENZIE (Cape Breton). No.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Yes, and the reason is that the market of eastern Canada is restricted for Nova Scotia coal, whereas the market in New England and the eastern states is almost unlimited if there was reciprocity. I am surprised that the Minister of Finance with his free trade ideas, did not give reciprocity on a few of the agricultural implement schedules. There is no doubt in the world that the great trusts in the United States were moving heaven and earth to prevent a tariff war. We buy $20 per capita to the $1 per capita the Americans buy from us. The leather trust, that has a little edge in here to-day they did not want a tariff war; the glass trust, one of the largest trusts in the United States which controls the machinery for making common glass holds the trade of the United States to-day and they did not want any tariff war with Canada. Then, there is the crockery trust which wants privileges in Canada and they did not want any higher duty placed against them in the Canadian market. To my mind one of the principal objections to a reciprocity treaty with the United States is that the people of Canada suffer enough to-day from local and small trusts without being inundated by the huge American trusts, which would be the result if we enter into reciprocity with them. Almost everything to-day in the United States is in the hands of a trust. Only recently in this parliament we had in evidence the United States water-power trust putting up a fight and we could see how long their arm is. There is a trust on everything in the United States except air, and I have no doubt that when airships become popular they will have the heavens chartered and they will be selling us the atmosphere. It is quite possible that in a few years, the member for Rainy River (Mr. Conmee)—I am sorry he is not here to-night—will be seeking a charter for a company to navigate the air for the general advantage of Canada, and when they have got that 'general advantage of Canada' clause in their charter they will make us all pay so much per cubic foot for the air we breathe. Hon. gentlemen may talk about reciprocity in products in any shape or form, but there is nothing to be gained for Canada in that. I need not remind the House that the United States has been hostile to this country in tariff matters from time immemorial. No move has ever been made in this country to get any advantage in trade or navigation that the United States did not do all they could to hamper us and to harm us. Look at what was done in the case of the St. Mary's canal. An effort was made to take the duty off ships going through the Canadian canals in order to increase our lake tonnage, but to counteract this move an Act of Congress was passed by which they shut Canadian vessels out of that canal, and they compelled Canada to go to an expense of $5,000,000 to build a special lock at Sault Ste. Marie. I grant you that the items mentioned by the Minister of Finance amount to nothing, but he has done a great injury to Canada in that he has acknowledged that the United States can get an act of Congress passed and hold a club over the head of the people of this country which they will threaten to use on us unless we bow the knee to them. I think, Sir, the people of Canada have reached the belief that the sooner we fight fire with fire and tariff with tariff the better for us. Then, the Americans will come not to Albany but to Ottawa. True, they sent a few young men up here, but the big men only came as far as Albany and the Minister of Finance went to meet them there. I want to tell you that all the circumstances surrounding this matter appear very strange to me. Who was the editor of the Toronto 'Globe' working for in the matter; who was he saving the money for? It is worth millions to the American steel trust and the other American trusts to be able to market their goods in Canada. The American steel trust sends some $60,000,000 worth of goods to Canada, and here we have a Canadian going to Albany and doing the lobbying for them. And when we all thought that possibly there might be a little fight, and having gone through a small fight with Germany from which no Canadian suffered, and Germany having thrown up the sponge, then, in the moment of victory the Minister of Finance is called in haste to an interview with the President of the United States, and when he emerges from his interview he has bowed the knee to Baal and acknowledged that Canada is subject to the United States. I think the people of Canada will recognize that whether there is a large concession or a small concession given to the United States we have abnegated the great principle that we are competent to make tariffs to suit ourselves, and that no country in the world can hold a club over us whether it be the United States or Germany or any other nation. That is the proper principle for us to maintain, that is the principle we should have maintained, but we have lost prestige in this transaction, and the man I blame for it most of all is the Prime Minister of Canada who doubtless instigated the visit of the Finance Minister to Washington.

I hope he will frankly and truthfully tell the House whether Mr. Macdonald was accredited by him to go down and endeavour to patch up some kind of peace with Secretary Knox and the president. If he was not, why then should any attention have been paid to Mr. Macdonald? Why was there such hot haste, why were there telegrams and sudden visits to Albany by the minister and a treaty patched up? What for? Not to give anything to Canada, because we have always had the same thing and we were certainly entitled to every privilege from the United States, we were their best customers, but in order that something might be done, which, to my mind, was derogatory to the principles of fair play and Canadianism which every Canadian in this country wishes to stand up for. The Prime Minister has told us time and again that we do not want any trade with England. Everybody knows that if Great Britain should give us a preference of say a shilling a quarter on wheat it would mean millions to the farmers of this country. The Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance have said that we do not want anything of the kind, we do not want any concessions of any kind from Great Britain. Yet he will go to Albany and bow the knee to get concessions from the President of the United States.

These thoughts that I have briefly and crudely placed before the House are thoughts that occur to the ordinary individual of this country. The people of Canada have come to the conclusion that as far as any business relations with the United States are concerned, the government of the day are not to be trusted because the interests of this country will suffer in their hands and will be given away.

Mr. J. E. ARMSTRONG (East Lambton) Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Finance Minister (Mr. Fielding) must have been very much encouraged by the remarks of the hon. member for South York (Mr. W. F. Maclean). I would suggest that he should get a nice soft seat for him over on that side and take good care of him as I understand his paper is owned and controlled by the government of the country, or at least by some one very close to the government. Be that as it may, the Finance Minister this afternoon tried to make this House and the people of this country believe that as far as the present trade arrangement was concerned, he had received from the United States some valuable consideration for the people of this country That hon. gentleman knows full well that instead of receiving any consideration from the government of the United States he was only too ready and willing to get down on his knees practically speaking and beg and plead that the government of the United States would accept as small concessions as possible in order that he might get out of the position he was in. He knows that the exercise of treaty making powers by him in years gone by has not resulted greatly to his interest. If he considers the treaty arrangement with Germany he cannot but appreciate that instead of our having access to the German markets for all the products of our country we have access to that country for only a very small proportion of our products while on the other hand the German people have access to our markets for all the products of Germany on the very same footing they had in 1896. We have access to the German markets for only a very small proportion of the products of Canada. Then, let him consider the French treaty. I was one of those who opposed it as strongly as possible, condemned it in every way and voted in direct opposition to it, believing and knowing that it would be of no benefit to Canada while we were granting valuable concessions to France. Not only were we granting these concessions but we were paying some $200,000 per annum in subsidies to steamships that could only be carrying some of the products of the manufacturers of Canada, while the Finance Minister knows that French products have been coming into this country in increased proportions, while we were unable to get our products into France in return. That French treaty, as he had to admit to-day, was the cause of all the trouble with the United States. He knows that when this matter was up for discussion he gave the members on this side to understand that the French treaty would not be interfered with in any way by the people of the United States. Yet we find him in the very position that we pointed out he would be in only a few months ago. When the Finance Minister tries to make us believe that he has obtained concessions from the United States, he knows that instead of obtaining concessions, he was only too ready and willing to give them what they have to-day. Let us see for a moment the position that we are in in regard to our trade with the United States. Take for instance the exports to that country from Canada. They amount to $92,000,000 last year while the United States sent into the Dominion of Canada $192,000,000, one hundred millions of dollars of trade against us. Let us examine the kind of products we are sending into the United States and then consider whether it would not be wise for us to say that as far as raw material is concerned, it should to a great extent be taken care of in our own country. Canada exports to the United States of raw material, the following amounts:—

Coal and charcoal	$ 4,048,000
Furs and skins, not dressed	1,393,000
Copper of all kinds	6,212,000
Gold and silver, gold-bearing quartz, dust, &c.	7,388,000
Silver ore	9,937,000
Chromic iron ore, iron ore and pig iron	154,000
Scrap iron	109,000
Lead and tin ore, asbestos, nickel, &c.	3,875,000
Settlers' effects	1,665,000
Wood, logs, lumber, piles, pulp-wood, &c.	26,377,000
Wood pulp, chemically prepared and mechanically prepared	3,217,000
Wool and manufactures thereof	3,280,000
Coin and bullion (which last year were over $16,000,000)	1,581,000
Total	$69,454,000

Practically in round figures that makes $70,000,000 of raw material out of the $92,000,000 of exports from Canada to the United States, so that the manufacturers of Canada receive small consideration at the hands of this government. while, on the other hand, the manufacturers of the United States are sending into this country the bulk of the $192,000,000 of American exports to Canada.

The minister says that Ottawa went to Washington years ago and now Washington comes to Ottawa. It does not seem to matter much whether Washington comes to Ottawa or not, Washington goes back, generally speaking, with the very best terms that can be obtained and terms very much to the advantage of the United States. We are certainly in this case giving something for nothing. Let us see whether or not the United States used a club in this instance. In the Sunday Herald of Boston, under date of March 27, I find:

Using the maximum schedule as a club, just as the framers of the provision intended it should be used, the president has been able to obtain lower rates of duty for numerous exports to several countries than could otherwise have been obtained.

The Journal of Commerce of New York says:

Every tariff since 1890, except the Wilson Act (and even that in certain particulars), has made it harder for Canada to do any business in the United States. The trade in barley was slaughtered, the wheat business was cut to the lowest level, the tariff on paper was kept at tremendous height. Whenever Canada thought she saw a chance to build up a trade in the United States, the next tariff Act regularly cut off the possibility.

I could go on reading paper after paper of the United States going to show that they are more than delighted with the outcome of the treaty arrangement with Canada. They emphatically state that it would be impossible for the President of the United States to force through such a measure as our Finance Minister seems to think he would. Canada has certainly suffered humiliation at the hands of this government, especially when we consider the fact that the government was backed up in a firm stand against any concessions by practically every newspaper in the Dominion, Liberal and Conservative, outside of perhaps the Toronto 'Globe.' On the 17th of March, the Toronto 'Globe' made this statement:

The Liberals are firm. Prepared to face tariff war if necessary.

But on March 28, it took back practically all it had said. Would the hon. minister consider this fact, that we are buying from the United States $25 worth of goods for every man, woman and child in Canada, whereas the people of the United States buy from us only one dollar of goods for every man, woman, and child, in the United States. Then look at the message which President Taft sent to Congress when he said that the results of the meeting with the Canadian statesmen were satisfactory. The opposition voted against the French treaty. Are we as Canadians going to make a present of our trade advantages to every country which asks for it? You can depend upon it that if we continue the policy that we have laid down with regard to our trade relations, that, as years go by, we will have more and more complications in our tariff arrangements with other countries, and can expect to be placed in just such a humiliating position as we are placed in to-day; and I sincerely hope that whenever the opportunity comes the Finance Minister will arrive at some definite tariff arrangement whereby we shall have one maximum and one minimum rate for all countries. I merely rose to utter my protest against the present arrangement forced upon the Finance Minister, and I trust that in future, if he should take into consideration the tariff, and treaty arrangements of other foreign countries with Canada, he will also get closer to the question of how these arrangements will affect our position from a British standpoint.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The House, I am sure, will agree with me that it is regrettable that in a discussion of this importance, and even in a discussion on any question, such ridiculous statements should be made as we have just heard from my hon. friend. In his opening remarks, my hon. friend quite seriously said that the Toronto 'World,' an important newspaper, was owned and controlled by this government. My hon. friend ought to be more careful when he makes statements of that kind.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. It is generally stated.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Who states it?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I do.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The thing is a slander, so far as the government is concerned, and a slander also so far as the hon. member for South York (Mr. Maclean) is concerned. I think it is also to be regretted too that so much importance should be attached to the fact that Mr. Macdonald, the editor of the 'Globe,' went to the United States. My hon. friend beside me (Mr. Fielding) said in the course of his remarks that, after the matter had been brought to his attention again and again and he had treated it as a joke, he finally made it clear that Mr. Macdonald went to the United States on his own account, and never had a mission from this government. Yet although this was the statement made by my hon. friend (Mr. Fielding), the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. Currie) put the question seriously whether or not Mr. Macdonald had been sent as an emissary or as a deputed agent by this government to the United States. I have only to reply that this government sent no ambassador to Washington. We received ambassadors from Washington. Things have been reversed, as has been said by my hon. colleague (Mr. Fielding). However, I pass by these matters, which have no reference to the question we have to deal with at present.

We had to deal with a question which was a very serious one because we were in this situation that we were threatened with commercial war with our neighbours. And I have heard Sir Charles Tupper say years ago—and perhaps my hon. friends opposite may remember it—that commercial war was not far removed from actual war. It would be a calamity that between Canada and the United States, the United States would impose its maximum tariff upon Canada, and Canada treat the United States in like manner. Every body would regret it, and the action we took was with a view to avert such a calamity. I am free to say that the United States, in the tariff they adopted at their last session of Congress, took a position which Canada would never agree to. The position taken by the United States, in their Act of Congress, was to this effect, that if any two other nations made a treaty of commerce between themselves, by which the one would exchange favours with the other, the United States had the right to ask from both the most favoured nation treatment, and if that were not done, they would impose their maximum tariff on the offending nation. If, for instance, Canada made a treaty with France, or Germany, or Italy, or Belgium, or any other nation, whereby Canada would exchange favours with that nation, the United States had the right to claim similar treatment, and if we refused they would impose on us their maximum tariff. That matter came up in the early part of the session. After parliament met and the negotiations with France came up for discussion, we were asked to ascertain what would be the attitude of the United States if our parliament were to ratify the treaty we had negotiated with France. We refused to consider that question. The position we took was that, having made a treaty with France, we were bound in honour to call on parliament to ratify that treaty, and the United States had no business to interfere in our relations with any other country. We therefore refused to consider what would be the consequences of the ratification by parliament of the treaty we had negotiated with France. At the same time we had reason to believe that, although Congress had adopted the tariff they did and they did it with a great deal of hesitation—there was a large portion of public opinion in the United States which was adverse to the enforcement of the extreme measure put by Congress on its statute-books. We had reason to believe that a large portion of the American people would be sorry that there would be anything but the most friendly commercial relations with Canada, and the event has shown that our surmise was well founded, because when the time was approaching to put the maximum tariff in operation—as the first of April was approaching—there was a strong feeling of uneasiness in the United States lest the president would feel constrained to apply against Canada the maximum tariff. Indeed the feeling in the United States was such that, for the first time in the history of Canada, we had American commissioners sent by the government of Washington to negotiate with the Canadian government, and ascertain what would be our position.

Sir, the answer we had to give to the American commissioners was easy for us. We have been requested to place upon the table the correspondence which embodied our answer to the question. There was no correspondence on this point. The answer we had to give was known by the House even before we uttered it. The answer we gave the American commissioners was the same as we have given to parliament—that the relations between Canada and France as embodied in that treaty had nothing to do with the United States, and the United States had nothing to do with them, and could not be concerned in them. True, the Americans might take a different position; they might say they were concerned in our relations with the other country and wanted to know what those relations were. Our answer would be: These relations, of course, are known; we have given France certain concessions in exchange for the preference she has given us; if you are prepared to give us the same treatment we are prepared to discuss the matter with you; if not, you have no questions to ask us. But it is well known that there was in the United States a different school of thought upon this question. I have stated that we had reason to believe that a very large proportion of American public opinion was averse to any estrangement in the relations between the United States and Canada. But we know very well that there is in the United States an extreme protectionist party which would push the president to apply the maximum tariff against Canada. We know also that there was a certain opinion in Congress and in the entourage of the president that, according to the terms of the law, the president would be bound to hold that the treaty we had made with France was an undue discrimination against the United States, and that, therefore, to put in force the maximum tariff. But, dominating all the situation, there was a strong proportion of public opinion—I believe a preponderating public opinion—which deprecated the possibility of the maximum tariff being put in force against Canada. We did not know exactly what would take place; we did not know whether the president would, or would not, feel himself constrained to put upon us the maximum tariff—there was the possibility. Will anybody refuse to approve my words when I say that if we could avoid the possibility of such a result without the sacrifice of Canadian dignity or interest, it was our duty to take the course which would bring about that result? At any rate, I take the position in the name of the government and in the presence of the Canadian people, with regard to the United States and every other nation we will do everything possible to maintain in the case of one and all the best relations consistent with the maintenance of the dignity and the interest of Canada. It was represented to us that if we would make certain concessions we should avoid the possibility of any difficulty with our neighbours, we should avoid the possibility of having this maximum tariff enforced against us. Very well, our answer was easy. We were asked: Cannot you make it easy for us, cannot you make some concessions? We asked: What are these concessions? We were told a moment ago by the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. J. A. Currie) that we had made a surrender. What have we surrendered? In this discussion with the United States representatives we were told: All difficulties will be overcome, all danger will be averted if you will give some concessions. We said: Very well, we will make concessions if it will make it easy for you to give Canada the benefit of the minimum tariff. We were asked: Can you make a concession on figs and dates? We thought that we could give figs and dates without making too great a sacrifice of Canadian dignity, of Canadian interests. Could we give prunes also? Well, we thought that the dignity of Canada would not be interfered with if we gave prunes. We were asked if we could concede also almonds, walnuts, Brazil nuts, pecans and shelled peanuts. Yes, we thought we could give peanuts also. And nuts of all kinds? Yes, and nuts of all kinds. Then, as to photographs, chromos, chromotypes, artotypes, oleographs, paintings, drawings, pictures, decalcomania transfers of all kinds, engravings or prints or proofs therefrom, and similar works of art not otherwise provided; blue-prints, building plans, maps and charts. We thought we could concede these also. We were asked if we could give soap powders, powdered soap and so on. Yes, we thought it was worth while to give even soap powders for the benefit of peace. Then, perfumery, including toilet preparations, non-alcoholic, namely, hair oils—we thought we could concede hair oils—tooth and other powders and washes, pomatums, and so on. Yes, we thought we could go that far; we surrendered that. Asked if we could give tableware of China, porcelain, white granite and iron stone—things not manufactured in this country—we were prepared to concede that. And window glass? It is not manufactured in Canada; we conceded that. Watch actions and movements and parts thereof? Yes, we conceded that. Then there was leather—dongola, cordovan calf, sheep, lamb, kid or goat, kangaroo, alligator and all leather dressed, waxed, glazed or further finished than tanned. Yes, we gave that, as it is a raw material for our boot and shoe makers. And last, we were asked if we could give feathers and manufacture of feathers, imitations of fruit, grains, leaves and flowers suitable for ornamenting hats. These are to ornament the hats of Canadian ladies. We conceded that also. These are the concessions we have made; these reductions of tariff are made not to the United States alone, but to the whole world.

And now, I am asked: what do you get from these concessions? I answer: We get peace and good relations with our neighbour. And I ask hon. members on the other side: Is not peace and good commercial relations with our neighbours worth all the feathers and artificial flowers in creation? But we are told by my hon. friend from North Simcoe (Mr. J. A. Currie): The Americans were bluffing; they were not sincere. Perhaps they were bluffing, as the hon. member says. Or perhaps they were sincere. We were in this position, if we had been stiff with them, they might have chosen to be stiff with us. Canadians number seven millions, while Americans are ninety millions. We have surrendered nothing, we have made concessions which amount to nothing, so far as I can see; and for these we have the good will of that great nation. It is true, we have not reciprocity. My hon. friend from North Simcoe asked: Why did you not get reciprocity in coal, which is so much wanted in Ontario; why did you not get reciprocity in agricultural implements, which are needed in the Northwest provinces? This is true, and it is true also that we are within measurable distance of obtaining a treaty of reciprocity with our neighbours. There is a possibility of settling all these questions without sacrificing anything. We are to-day in the same position we were three months ago. We have retained our absolute power and freedom of action. We can negotiate treaties with any nations we please, and we intend to do so by commencing with the United States. We can negotiate a treaty with Germany, we can negotiate a treaty with Italy, we can negotiate a treaty with Belgium. We are absolutely free, we have made no surrender of any right, and the first thing we shall do is to endeavour to negotiate with our neighbours, and if possible to get a treaty of commerce with them. We are not insensible to the suggestion of the hon. member for South York (Mr. Maclean), who advises us to go slowly in this matter. We do not intend to go very fast. There are certain things upon which we can make no concessions, there are certain duties upon which we can not recede one iota from our present position. But there are a number of products in regard to which it would be for the mutual advantage of Canada and the United States that there should be the widest possible extension of our markets on both sides of the line. This is the position we have taken up. I am a little astonished that my hon. friend from Simcoe (Mr. Currie) should not have given us the credit to which I think we are entitled. Now, I can not take my seat without taking advantage of this occasion to say that, although I have always been proud of my hon. friend and colleague the Minister of Finance, I was never so proud of him as I am to-day. It is due to his efforts that we have averted very serious trade complications with our neighbours. It is due to his efforts, to his conciliatory and clever methods, that we have obtained at last a better treaty of commerce with our neighbours.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN (South York). I rise to a question of privilege. During my temporary absence from the House, I understand that the hon. member for East Lambton (Mr. Armstrong), said that my speech here to-night could be understood and construed by the fact that the government of the day owned and controlled the Toronto 'World' with which I am associated, I believe he made that statement. It is an absolute untruth, there is not the slightest foundation for it. The paper is controlled absolutely by myself and my family, and one other person associated with us. I would not take any notice of that attack, or a lot of other contemptible inuendoes, if they were only made against myself personally; but when they injure a business enterprise, with a very large investment, I feel compelled to take notice of them. This is not the first time that I have been the object of contemptible attacks by that hon. gentleman in this House, and it may not be the last. Now that he attacks a commercial enterprise with which I am associated, and makes a misstatement in regard to it, I must ask him, through you, Mr. Speaker, to withdraw that statement, and to accept fully my denial.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. It is generally understood, Mr. Speaker, that the Toronto 'World' is wholly controlled by members on the government side of the House. That is the statement I made, and there is nothing strange about it.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. I again say that the statement is absolutely false. Not a member of the government has a single share in the Toronto 'World,' nor has anybody else except W. F. Maclean, his wife, and a Mr. Greenwood who is associated with him in the 'World'; and if the hon. member for Lambton and the other gentleman who sits behind him say anything to the contrary, they are guilty of a misstatement, and I insist that they accept my denial and withdraw their discreditable insinuations.

Mr. SPEAKER. Under the circumstances, the member for Lambton (Mr. Armstrong) should accept the statement of the member for South York (Mr. Maclean).

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I bow to the ruling of the Chair. That is all that it is necessary to say on the subject.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Then I must ask the member sitting behind him who said that the statement of the member for East Lambton was true, I must ask him also to accept my denial.

Mr. SPROULE. The First Minister stated at the beginning of the session that the Waterways agreement was ratified.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. I hope the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) who is a friend of mine will assist me.

Mr. SPROULE. I understood that the hon. member was through.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Then I ask your protection, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SPEAKER. I did not hear any other hon. gentleman except the hon. member for Lambton make the statement complained of.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Then that hon. gentleman has heard what I have said, and if he is manly he will get up and acknowledge that the insinuations he cast upon me, in my hearing, were unfounded, and he will withdraw them. If he does less than that I say he is not fit to sit in this House and associate with gentlemen.

Mr. HERRON. I hope the hon. gentleman does not allude to anything I said.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. No, I mean the hon. member for Souris (Mr. Schaffner).

Mr. HERRON. I wish to say a few words on the resolution now before the House. Might I suggest to the Minister of Finance, now that he has capitulated to the United States government, and while these tariff arrangements are under consideration, that this would be a splendid opportunity for him to do something for the western farmers. For many years we have been promised better commercial relations in regard to farm machinery, to wheat and some other farm products. I think it would be a much greater benefit to this country to put binders on the free list than feathers or perfumery, and things like that of which we have heard to-night. I think this would have been a grand opportunity for the government to fulfil some of the pledges they made years ago to the farmers of the Northwest. We know that prior to 1896 the Prime Minister and his followers made pledges that if they were in power they would put farm implements on the free list. I do not know whether the Prime Minister himself made that statement emphatically, but many of his followers who afterwards became ministers did make it. I think this would have been a fitting opportunity to insist upon reciporcity in agricultural implements between the two countries as well as in wheat and other grains. The hon. member for Moosejaw (Mr. knowles) has had a resolution on the order paper asking for lower duties on farm implements for the benefit of the farmers. His resolution was put on the order paper at the beginninng of the session. It has worked from the bottom to the top of the order paper and from the top down to the bottom again. Now we are starting at the top and I believe it will fall through. It is evident that the hon. member has no intention of bringing this before the House this session. I think it is time we should try to do something for the farmers of the west. This resolution reads as follows:—

That, in the opinion of this House, it is desirable that the government should at an early date take into serious consideration the necessity for the reduction of the tariff duties of Canada——

Mr. SPEAKER. It is against the rule of the House to discuss anything on the order paper.

Mr. HERRON. I beg your pardon. I have said pretty nearly all I wish to say on this subject at the present time, any way and I am sorry that the Finance Minister has not been able to do something in the interests of the farmers in negotiating this treaty.

Mr. SPROULE. The right hon. the Prime Minister referred to the fact that the international waterways convention was either ratified or about to be ratified and I would ask if there is any additional correspondence upon this subject, that he would be good enough to lay it on the table at the earliest opportunity so that it may be seen by the members of the House.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. My hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) evidently did not catch my remarks. I said that the correspondence would be brought down either on Friday or Monday.

Mr. J. D. REID. I just want to say a few words upon this matter. The fact that these negotiations have been going on amused me very much. I remember that prior to 1896 the right hon. the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) and his associates stated that when they got into power they would go to Washington and get a treaty; in fact, we would have free trade between the two countries. Shortly after they came into power in 1896 the Prime Minister did go to Washington and he knows the reception he got there. He could not do anything.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The reception was all right.

Mr. J. D. REID. You could not get anything at all, and you came back and stated that that was the last trip that the Prime Minister or any of his ministers would take to Washington.

Mr. EMMERSON. Chestnuts are on the free list and you are taking advantage of it, I fear.

Mr. J. D. REID. They were put on the free list by the Prime Minister on this trip. After a number of years we find the Prime Minister and the Finance Minister again going to Washington. This time the Finance Minister says that he had the invitation of the president, but if we read between the lines in the Toronto 'Globe' we find that they invite the editor of the Toronto 'Globe' to Ottawa and that he gets instructions to go down to see President Taft and have President Taft send a telegram up inviting the Minister of Finance to a conference. The editor of the 'Globe' came to Ottawa after his interview in Washington. Every one around the House could see him in the lobbies talking with members and ministers and it was the gossip of the lobbies here that an arrangement had been made for the Minister of Finance to be telegraphed for to go down to Washington and interview the president. The interview was arranged in that way and the invitation came from President Taft. When the hon. Finance Minister went to Washington the first thing that he should have done was to try and do something in the interests of the farmers. We all know that the farming industry is the most important industry and the whole asset practically of the Dominion of Canada. But instead of that, when the Finance Minister gets down to Washington, he goes over the tariff to see what can be done to benefit Canada, and the first item that he takes is that of perfumery. He is willing to allow perfumery to come in free. Then we find on the list feathers, nuts, raisins, &c. These are the things that he is looking after instead of doing something for the farmers. We were promised that when this government came into power in 1896 we would have agricultural implements coming into this country free, but there has been no reduction in the tariff with respect to these articles. The same tariff obtains now practically that was in existence in 1896. What surprises me is that the Minister of Finance did not try to negotiate a reciprocity in so far as agricultural implements are concerned. Then, there is wheat, the great output of the northwest. If we could get wheat into the United States it would be a great help to the farmers of the northwest. But the Minister of Finance did not take the farmers into consideration at all, in so far as the northwest was concerned, and did not try to get any of these articles on the free list.

Mr. MILLER. What would the hon. gentleman particularly want the Finance Minister to do for the farmers of the northwest?

Mr. J. D. REID. I would like him to get reciprocity in agricultural implements as was promised some years ago. The farmers want reciprocity in agricultural implements, and the Minister of Finance should have tried to get an agreement with the United States with respect to them. The hon. member also knows that one hon. member on the other side of the House, at least, told us that he was anxious to get free agricultural implements, but he has not had the pluck to force a division for the last session or two. He has only placed a notice on the paper, but he has never gone any further with it. I am a little inclined to believe that the agreement which was made at Albany a few days ago is not final. It has been hinted in the press that there is a quiet, verbal understanding between the Prime Minister, and the Minister of Finance that the United States should get the free use of our canals, and water courses, and that a treaty will be made.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Not a word of truth in it.

Mr. J. D. REID. It has been hinted by the press.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Possibly.

Mr. J. D. REID. I am taking what I read in the press.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No, there is not a word of truth in it.

Mr. J. D. REID. Another statement is that there is some kind of an arrangement with regard to the water-powers

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No.

Mr. J. D. REID. I am glad to have that information, and to have it in 'Hansard' because I have read it in the press, and I think it is only fair to bring it before the House so that we will have it properly understood by the public that such is not the case.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Such is not the case.

Mr. J. D. REID. It is a good thing to know that because it would be very serious if a verbal understanding of that kind were carried out. Another thing I fear may result from this arrangement is this: The very fact of this government having to agree to reduce the tariff, or make certain tariff changes, in order to satisfy the United States government makes me feel that if we were at any future time making treaties with other countries we would practically have to consult the United States, and make the same arrangements with them. We are talking about making treaties with Italy, and other countries. What position are we in if we undertake to make a treaty with one of those countries? If we make a treaty with some other country will not the United States government apply this maximum tariff to Canada? Would it not have been well to have had it settled once and for all? I believe that had we stood in the position we were in prior to making this arrangement we would have been able to come to an understanding and probably we would have been able to make a treaty with the United States from which we would have benefited more than we can under the present arrangement. Our position now is that we are at the mercy of the United States in coming to any further trade relations with them. I believe the concessions we have given them will hamper us in the future in making a more beneficial arrangement. I move the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

SALE OF BABY FARM.

House in committee on Bill (No. 181) to authorize the sale or other disposal of certain public lands and the acquisition of certain other lands in or in the vicinity of the cities of Toronto and Winnipeg, respectively.

On section 2,

Mr. SPROULE. I understood the minister to say that he would realize a good deal more out of the sale of this farm than would purchase the other property. Will it be regular to apply the balance to the construction of buildings?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The amount received will be expended in the purchase of about three times the quantity of the land we at present own. The larger area is necessary for the accommodation of the permanent force. We will get more land for about the same money.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. When will the minister go on with the construction of these buildings

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Immediately.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. You have been promising it for years.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The hon member for South Toronto (Mr. A. C. Macdonell) has made reference to the delay, but the government is not entirely responsible for that. Considerable delay has been due to the fact that legislation was necessary to enable the city of Toronto to acquire the Stanley barracks property, which the government owned. It was only about two years ago that the transfer actually took place, and when we got ready to construct the buildings, it was found that a more desirable site could be secured, and that while we only paid $20,000 for the Baby farm, we can sell it for about $160,000, and procure a much larger quantity of land which I think would be perhaps more favourably situated for the purpose for which we want it. It was in the public interest to wait a little longer and see what could be done. There has been really not more than a year's delay, and in the meantime the soldiers have been as comfortably housed in the old quarters as at any time in the past thirty years.

On section 3,

Mr. SCHAFFNER. What are you doing about the rifle range at Winnipeg?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The modern rifle requires a very extensive range, and because of the danger at Winnipeg it became necessary to increase the quantity of land in rear of the butts. Owing to the growth of the city of Winnipeg the rifle range land had become extremely valuable, and it was found it would cost a great deal to buy the extra land required at that location. We expect to sell the present rifle range for a sufficient amount to enable us to go further away from the city and at just as convenient a place purchase all the land necessary for a rifle range, and sufficient as well for the annual camp.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. I have forwarded a complaint to the minister concerning the alleged danger of the rifle range near Greenway, and I would wish to know from him if the military men can with a high hand set up a rifle range wherever they please? If the Winnipeg range is to be removed because of the danger, the same should apply to the Greenway range.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. There are certain regulations laid down with the object of avoiding danger at rifle ranges, and if we know it we will not allow any one to set up rifle ranges in a dangerous position. I placed an extract from the letter sent me by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Schaffner) in the proper hands for investigation, and when the estimates come up I will give him the result of the inquiry.

On section 4,

Mr. MACDONELL. What is the intention of the government in regard to proceeding with the erection of the military buildings at Toronto?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The plans are now ready, and there will be no delay. The new location—I have explained already why we cannot name it precisely—will be more convenient, and it will in every way better accommodate the militia, the permanent corps, and the city, than would the Baby farm. General Otter has selected it with the assistance of General Cotton, which fact ought to be sufficient guarantee to my hon. friend that the site will be well chosen. I can assure the House there will be no further delay in beginning the construction of these important buildings.

Mr. MACDONELL. Is it the intention to consult the local military men as to the location? It would seem to me to be important that their opinion should be taken.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. It has been done.

Mr. MACDONELL. Is it the intention to proceed this year with the erection of these barracks?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes.

Mr. HUGHES. By 'local military men,' are we to understand the permanent force?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No, I do not so understand. I think any officer who is interested in Toronto has been spoken to with regard to this.

Mr. MACDONELL. The principal military authorities at Toronto?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I think so.

Mr. HUGHES. This is not a Toronto affair, it is general?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes.

Mr. HUGHES. Is it to be a drill ground?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. We hope to have drill ground enough to enable us to use it to some extent for the active militia as well.

Mr. HUGHES. The minister has not let the public know where it is?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. It has been located, as I have already stated.

Mr. HUGHES. Is the land to be expropriated?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

INSPECTION OF GLASSWARE FOR MILK TESTS.

Mr. FISHER moved the second reading of Bill (No. 184) to provide for the Testing of Glassware used in connection with milk tests. He said: I gave some explanation of this measure on its introduction. Briefly it is to provide for the testing of bottles on the machines which are used in testing milk for butter fat in creameries, and cheese factories.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

On section 2, testing and marking of glassware used for milk tests.

Mr. SPROULE. Would this not be done in the same way as in the case of the Weights and Measures Act? I thought they were all tested before they were sold?

Mr. FISHER. They have not been tested hitherto, the object of this Bill is to have them tested.

Mr. SPROULE. This test has been used for years, it has been regarded as reliable, and if it is now found unreliable the people's confidence in the provisions made by the minister from time to time with regard to such matters will be shaken.

Mr. FISHER. There has been a dispute as to whether these were accurate, and it is to secure an authoritative test that this Bill is introduced. I thought the work could be done under the Weights and Measures Act, but the officers of the Department of Inland Revenue say it could not.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. Has the Dairy Association asked for it?

Mr. FISHER. It has been asked for by dairymen.

Mr. SPROULE. You will have to appoint new officers?

Mr. FISHER. No, the same officers will make the test. These bottles are sold by very few firms.

Mr. PORTER. Will there be a charge for that inspection?

Mr. FISHER. No.

On section 4, use of glassware not marked prohibited.

Mr. SPROULE. That seems to go a little too far. It seems to imply that there can be only one reliable instrument in the testing of milk—the Babcock test. There are other ways of testing butter fat in milk, and, if accurate, they ought to be equally available.

Mr. FISHER. The section does not confine users to the Babcock test, but only provides that if any test bottles are used they must be tested and stamped like the others.

On section 6, regulations, fees for verification, penalties.

Mr. SPROULE. What about these fees?

Mr. FISHER. This is to provide a penalty for violation of the Act, and, as the Bill is in blank, I suggest that the blank be filled by the insertion of the words, 'fifty dollars.'

Mr. SPROULE. It provides also for the making of regulations and the establishing of fees for the verification of apparatus referred to in the Bill.

Mr. FISHER. I had not observed that. I would not like to deal with that without consulting my colleague, the Minister of Inland Revenue, who has charge of weights and measures. I think that the fees ought to be merely nominal, if any are imposed. Perhaps this might be allowed to pass with the understanding that it will be considered later on.

On section 7, Act to be brought into force by proclamation.

Mr. FISHER. I thought the bringing into force of this law called for some warning to those concerned. Having consulted somewhat with the officers of my department, I thought of bringing it into force on January 1 next.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT—CONTROL OF CABLE RATES.

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Postmaster General) moved the second reading of Bill (No. 104) to control the rates and facilities of ocean cable companies, and to amend the Railway Act with respect to telegraphs and telephones, and the jurisdiction of the Board of Railway Commissioners. He said: For many years the people of Canada, and especially those connected with the press, have been trying to obtain lower rates from the cable companies. On several occasions the question was taken up, especially by my predecessor, Sir William Mulock, and also by a man who has taken a great interest in this matter, working, I believe, in the best interests of the country, Sir Sandford Fleming, who, as we all know, has been the originator and pioneer of the government-owned Pacific cable. For some years, people have thought that we should have on the Atlantic the system now existing between Australia and Canada, by which the Australian colonies are put in direct communication with America. The question arose whether there should not be an arrangement between the mother country and Canada and a new cable laid across the Atlantic. I, for one, and speaking only for myself, I viewed that project with great pleasure. But when I studied the question more in detail, and on following the discussions which took place at the various conferences in London, in which I was called upon to represent Canada, I found that, so far as the mother country was concerned, the number of shareholders in these cable companies was so great that strong objection would be taken to the government partaking in the work of laying a new cable. So, another scheme was devised to get a schedule of rates from the cable companies which would satisfy the public demand and satisfy the press. It was decided to propose for the acceptance of the cable companies that urgent messages should remain at the same rate as at present, namely, one shilling per word; for semi-urgent messages, 6d. a word, and a special rate for the press at 3d. a word. The actual rate for the press is 10 cents a word between England and Canada. That would be the tentative schedule of rates between the mother country and Canada. I need not dwell on the advantages such a rate would be to both countries from the imperial point of view and from the business point of view. Some years ago a blue-book was published by order of the House dealing fully with the subject, and the House will remember the correspondence which was laid on the table when Sir Wm. Mulock was Postmaster General.

Mr. SPROULE. We entered into an agreement that, upon a certain rate, we would furnish a certain share of the cost, and the question is whether that rate is paying now or not.

Mr. LEMIEUX. My hon. friend is thinking of the Pacific end, I am speaking of the Atlantic side. On the Pacific side, it is true that we are partners with Australia, Great Britain and New Zealand in a Pacific cable, the rates for which were established by the Pacific Cable Board on which Canada is represented by Lord Strathcona. The business of the Pacific Cable Board has not been a very prosperous one, but it is due to the unfair competition of the Eastern telegraph system. However, that question is too broad to be discussed here this evening. My hon. friend is right in stating that the Pacific Cable Board has not registered a surplus every year, but the Pacific Cable Board is paying expenses, and I think is putting aside something every year towards the payment of the whole system. Now to come back to the Atlantic end of this system, I have given the result of my investigations in England, and my discussions with the Postmaster General. I may say, however, that the establishment of a Pacific cable has had for effect to make a sensible reduction in the rates in the far east, it has had the effect to reduce considerably the rates on all messages coming from Australia to Europe.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. What reduction does the minister expect would be brought about by the present measure?

Mr. LEMIEUX. I have discussed the matter with the Postmaster General in England, Mr. Buxton, and I agreed to introduce the present legislation to bring the cable companies under the authority of the Railway Board, as the telegraph, telephone and railway companies are under the jurisdiction of that board to-day. I expect that by concurrent legislation passed in England and Canada, we can bring the cable companies to establish a schedule of rates which, for urgent messages, will be the same as they are to-day, one shilling per word; for semi-urgent messages, or deferred messages, 6d. a word, and for press rates, 3d. a word. That is the object I have in view. Now there are two Bills before the House (No. 104) and (No. 105), and they must be read together. The object of the first Bill is to bring the cable companies operating between Great Britain and Canada, and all other cable companies touching Canadian territory, under the control of the Railway Commission. Another object is to bring cable companies operating in conjunction with telegraph companies under the jurisdiction of the Railway Board as regards rates. Traffic arrangements also would be subject to the jurisdiction of the board, just as in the case of railway, telephone and telegraph companies. They will have to submit their tariffs and tolls for the approval of the board within a period of four months after this Bill becomes law. The amendment proposed in the next Bill is to control the sending of telegrams. Under the proposed system, the telegraph companies will send first the urgent messages, then the deferred messages. There are five companies doing a cable business between Great Britain, Canada and the United States, namely, the Anglo-American, the Direct United States, La Compagnie Francaise, the Western Union and the Commercial Cable. The two first are British companies, the third is French, and the last two belong to the United States. The Anglo-American has laid eight cables across the Atlantic, four of which have passed out of use, The Direct United States has one line, the French company one, the Western Union two, and the Commercial Cable five lines. All of these lines, seventeen in number, touch points in Canada. Of these thirteen are in service. The Anglo-American, the Direct United States, the French, and the Western Union companies have a pooling arrangement between them. They are allied with the Western Union, and the Great Northwestern companies for the transaction of their land business in Canada, and the United States. The Commercial Cable does not belong to the pool. Its land business is carried on by the Canadian Pacific Telegraph lines in Canada, and by the Postal Telegraph in the United States. I anticipate that we can come to a satisfactory arrangement with the cable companies by which a fair schedule of rates will be submitted to the Railway Board. On the whole I believe this legislation is highly desirable. It is the next best step, to my mind, to a government owned cable between Canada and Great Britain. As my hon. friends know the question was discussed at length at the last imperial press conference, and the sentiment was very strongly voiced that we should have cheaper telegraph and cable communications between Great Britain and Canada in order to disseminate news from the heart of the empire, and so bind more closely together the mother country and her colonies.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

On section 1; interpretation,

Mr. SPROULE. By what authority does the minister contend that he has the right to place these companies under the Railway Act, and make them subject to these provisions? I imagine that many of these companies have their corporate powers from other countries. Although they may be working in connection with lines that have received their corporate powers from the federal parliament, still they have received their powers from other sources. Is it contended that we can control their rates as if they had received their corporate powers from us?

Mr. LEMIEUX. The point of my hon. friend would be well taken if we attempted to control their rates outside of our own country. The Bill has for its object the control of rates between Canada and Great Britain by putting them under the jurisdiction of the Railway Board. All the companies that touch Canadian territory come within the jurisdiction of the board.

Mr. SPROULE. Suppose a company got its corporate powers from the imperial parliament, and its line extended from Australia, or England, to Canada; is it contended that we could control its rates?

Mr. LEMIEUX. My hon. friend perhaps did not follow what I said at the beginning of my remarks that this legislation must be implemented by British legislation, and that when it is so implemented we can make an arrangement both ways.

On section 4; traffic to include cable messages,

Mr. SPROULE. I understood the minister to say that there will be concurrent legislation in the imperial parliament. Has he any assurance that concurrent legislation will be enacted?

Mr. LEMIEUX. I stated a moment ago that I had various interviews last year, and in 1908 with the ex-Postmaster General Mr. Buxton. I see that he has been promoted since. Mr. Buxton entered into negotiations with me immediately before the general elections which took place this winter in England. I think I would then have succeeded in obtaining from the British government an authoritative statement that such concurrent legislation would be brought forward, but I was told by Mr. Buxton that in view of the difficulties arising out of the political situation in England he could not give me the promise that this legislation would be brought about during the present session. He did not know how the government would fare after the elections, and he could not make that promise, but I received from him the assurance that the matter would be taken up seriously by the government.

Mr. SPROULE. Is that the reason that it is provided that the Act shall come into force by proclamation?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Yes. I find the letter which I received from Mr. Buxton on November 28, 1909, to which I referred a moment ago as regards the assurance given me by him:

November 26, 1909.

Dear Lemieux,—I am glad to have the further opportunity of discussing with Lord Strathcona and yourself the very important question of cable rates between the Dominion and this country.

Unfortunately, the present moment does not appear to be one in which the question could be very satisfactorily considered.

Since you left Canada a political crisis has arisen over here, and a general election early in the year appears to be inevitable. We were, I think, all agreed that such a moment would not be an opportune one on which to enter into negotiations with the cable companies for the reduction of rates, or to deal with the question in any other way. A government under these circumstances could not speak or act with authority and effectiveness.

I hope that later, when the political atmosphere has cleared, it will be possible to enter on a serious and practical discussion on the subject, such as that which was suggested for last spring but which was postponed.

Yours very truly,

(Sgd.) SYDNEY BUXTON.

The Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX, K.C.

I discussed with Mr. Buxton the plan outlined in this Bill.

Mr. SPROULE. It looks pretty hazy now.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

TELEGRAPHS ACT—AMENDMENT.

Bill (No. 105) to amend the Telegraphs Act—Mr. Lemieux—read second time and House went into committee thereon.

On section 2,

Mr. SPROULE. Does this require concurrent legislation?

Mr. LEMIEUX. No.

Mr. WRIGHT. What is the reason for postponing the coming into force of this Bill?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Its provisions would require concurrent legislation in Great Britain.

Mr. SPROULE. The minister answered me a moment ago that it did not.

Mr. LEMIEUX. We can, of course, bring the Act into force without concurrent regulations with regard to cables which are transmitted to a point in England, but it would probably not bind them as effectively.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

MILITIA PENSION ACT—AMENDMENT.

House went into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

Resolved, that it is expedient to amend the Militia Pension Act, chapter 42 of the Revised Statutes, 1906, as follows:—

By inserting the following section immediately after section 6 thereof:—

6A. Time served in the Royal Northwest Mounted Police may also be included in the term of service of an officer for the purposes of this Act.

2. In such case the yearly deduction of five per cent upon average pay under this Act from any pension shall be reduced by the average yearly deduction from the officer's salary or pay as a police officer made under and for the purposes of Part II. of the Royal Northwest Mounted Police Act, or made under and for the purposes of the Civil Service Superannuation Act, or under Part I. of the Civil Service Superannuation and Retirement Act.

6B. The following times may also be included in the term of service of an officer for the purposes of this Act:

(a) Time served with the military forces in South Africa in any one or more of the years 1899, 1900, 1901 and 1902, and the time during which the officer was invalided but remained on full pay on account of wounds, injuries or disease suffered or contracted on such service;

(b) Time served by an officer of the Canadian militia with the South African Constabulary;

(c) Time served with the third (special service) battalion of the Royal Canadian regiment of infantry at Halifax; and

(d) Time served with the Yukon field force in any one or more of the years 1898, 1899 and 1900.

(e) Half the time served in the active militia other than the force, if he has served at least ten years in the force: Provided, however, that the time to be credited to an officer under this paragraph for active militia service shall in no case exceed ten years; and provided further than if an officer's pension is increased by reason of this paragraph, then, in addition to the deductions mentioned in section 8 of this Act, such pension shall be subject to an annual deduction for a number of years equal to the number of years added to his service under the authority of this paragraph, such deduction to be equivalent to five per cent of the pay which the officer was receiving at the time of his retirement from the force.

By adding at the end of subsection 2 of section 12 of the said Act the words: and in the case of such non-commissioned officers and men as have been or may hereafter be transferred from His Majesty's regular forces to the permanent force under arrangements made between His Majesty's government and His Majesty's Canadian government as to the pensioning of such non-commissioned officers and men.'

By adding to the said section 12 the following subsection:—

3. The following times may also be included in the term of service of a militiaman for the purposes of this Act:—

(a) Time served with the military forces in South Africa in any one or more of the years 1899, 1900, 1901 and 1902;

(b) Time served with the South African Constabulary;

(c) Time served with the third (special service) battalion of the Royal Canadian regiment of infantry at Halifax;

(d) Time served with the Yukon field force in any one or more of the years 1898, 1899 and 1900; and,

(e) Time served in the employment of the government of Canada in connection with the militia stores of Canada prior to the organization of the ordnance stores corps.—Sir Frederick Borden.

Mr. SPROULE. This will require some explanation.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia and Defence). Paragraph 6a refers to time served in the Royal Northwest Mounted Police. That force has a Pension Act similar to that of the permanent force, and this is simply to facilitate an exchange from one corps to the other, so that if an officer who has served in the Mounted Police, should join the permanent force, the time he had served in the Mounted Police, and for which he had contributed would count in the militia. 6 (b) and the following paragraphs are intended to allow officers who served in the military service in South Africa or with the Constabulary in South Africa, or with the regiment which served at Halifax, to relieve the British garrisons there, and allow them to go to South Africa, or in the 200 men who served in the Yukon field force for two years, to count the time they served in that way in estimating their pension. Last, and perhaps more important that all others, it is proposed now to allow any officer of the active militia who becomes an officer of the permanent force, and who serves in the permanent force ten years to count half the time he might have served with the active militia, not however, to exceed ten years. Thus if he had served thirty years in the active militia before becoming a permanent force officer, he could only count ten years, just as if he had served twenty years. If he had served ten years he could count five years. This is thought to be desirable to encourage a better class of officers who have served in the active militia, and received valuable experience there to come into the permanent force. It will be to the public advantage very often to take from the active militia an officer who has had the advantage of serving in that body. At present we cannot get these officers unless they are wealthy men to come into the permanent force late in life because there is no chance for them to get a pension. A man must have served twenty years in the permanent force in order to receive a pension. A man of forty-five who comes from the active militia into the permanent force cannot serve that length of time, so that officers of the active militia are not very desirous of going into the permanent force under existing conditions. We propose to improve the conditions in order to have the advantage of getting a few of the best officers of the active militia into the permanent force, and we think it will have a tendency to bring the two forces into better relations with each other. Such an officer coming into the permanent force from the active militia, we will say with a maximum of ten years credited to him, that is to say twenty years in the active militia, would pay, when the time comes that he would be entitled to a pension, his 5 per cent into the treasury for the whole of the ten years he had served in the active militia on the pay which he receives at the time he is pensioned. That is to say that 5 per cent would be deducted from his pension. That is upon the largest amount of pay of which he is in receipt, and it has been calculated that the loss to the treasury will be little if anything. In regard to this pension law as it applies to the permanent force, after ten years experience, it is just about self-sustaining, and there is not likely to be any very considerable deficiency even after this clause has been introduced into the law.

Mr. HUGHES. In subsection (b) and the following sections, the intention is that while a man must be an officer at the time he is pensioned, the time he served in any capacity in the forces enumerated shall be counted.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. That is the intention. If a good man, say a sergeant in the active militia went into the permanent force, and became a warrant officer or an officer, the time he had served in the active militia would count.

Mr. WALLACE. I would move that another subsection be added to be called subsection (f):

The time served by an officer of the Canadian militia as pay clerk in any military district prior to the 31st of July, 1909.

That is when the pay clerks were taken into the army pay corps.

Mr. HUGHES. Were they not on the list of active militia before that?

Mr. WALLACE. No, they were just civilians.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. They were not in the Civil Service either, so that their position is peculiar. I have no objection to these coming in, but I was told they would come in under the general condition clause.

Mr. WALLACE. No, they do not.

Mr. SPROULE. You would have to get the consent of the Governor General to this.

Progress reported.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. SPROULE. What business to-morrow?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The motion of the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. Lennox).

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 11.10 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

THURSDAY, March 31, 1910.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

NATIONAL TRANSCONTINENTAL RAILWAY—CLASSIFICATION OF MATERIAL.

Order of the day for motions being called.

Mr. H. LENNOX (South Simcoe). In accordance with the motion that was carried the other day providing for the consideration of the fourth Lumsden report, and having regard to the retirement of three members of the Lumsden Committee, I propose to address a few remarks to the House this afternoon. In retiring from that committee I had in mind the extreme gravity of the situation, and I realized that we were taking a somewhat unusual course which we would not be justified in taking unless for grave and important considerations. In fact, any one who examines at all the circumstances surrounding the construction of the National Transcontinental railway must realize, as I did, that it is the duty of every member of this House, and much more of the members of that committee of seven, to do everything in his power to elucidate this question, and to ascertain whether there has been, as we believe there has been, gross mismanagement and perhaps gross dishonesty in connection with the construction of that road. The most casual investigation into the returns and the papers that have been brought down must convince everybody that the enormously increased expenditure in the construction of that railway cannot be harmonized with any theory of honesty in the staff or ability in the management. For instance, taking up the matter of classification, let me give an illustration of how enormously rock grows:

Mr. SPEAKER. I wish to remind the hon. member that there is no motion before the House at present. Does he intend to conclude with a motion in order to regularize the proceedings?

Mr. LENNOX. I did not intend myself to conclude with a motion, I intended to refer to the circumstances in connection with this road, and I am referring to these items for the purpose of showing that there is a necessity for everybody to be vigilant in investigating this matter, and that I, as a member of that committee, would have remained to investigate that question if it had been possible; and I was proceeding to point out the reasons for having the fullest investigation.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman will understand that his proceeding is irregular, as there is no motion to consider the report. If a motion was made for the adoption of the report, or a motion to bring the report before the Chair, his action would be in order. But at present there is nothing at all before the Chair.

Mr. LENNOX. It was not a report, as I understand, that required adoption, it did not ask that anything should be done. Of course, if necessary, I could formally move an amendment to the report. But what I proposed to discuss, and what has been standing for discussion for some time, is the question of the retirement of three members of the committee.

Mr. SPEAKER. There is no objection to discussing that, only I would like to have something before the Chair.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) gave notice that on motions being called for he would move that the report be concurred in.

Mr. SPEAKER. That is the reason I inquired if the hon. member was going to conclude with a motion.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That was my impression the other dav when we asked to have this day set aside to discuss the matters referred to in the committee. I understand a motion was to be moved for the adoption of the report, and I supposed my hon. friend had an amendment to move to that motion. But on looking at the report since, I see it is not one that requires a motion for its adoption.

Mr. LENNOX. We could only move an amendment to the report, we cannot move for the adoption of the report, because it is not a report that requires adoption. On Tuesday, when the report was brought in, I moved that it be considered on this day. The resolution was carried. I do not understand that I have to make any motion in order now to discuss it. I am proceeding to consider the report as brought in.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. In order to place the matter before the House, some one should move that the report be taken into consideration. That would give an opportunity for discussion.

Mr. LENNOX. Well, I move that.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Very good.

Mr. LENNOX. I move, seconded by Mr. Barker:

That the fourth report of the special committee appointed to investigate the Lumsden charges be now taken into consideration.

I was proceeding to refer to some of the items of the classification, and I will turn now to the figures, as given in a return brought down, of what the road as a whole is going to cost us, and the situation is still more startling. I have compiled, from the return 426, what this road is likely to cost us, and I find a most startling set of figures as regards what it must inevitably cost upon the information that is available at the present time. These figures are as follows:

Thirteen Contracts.

No.	To Cost.	Costing.
1..	$ 989,895	$ 1,765,600
2..	289,090	536,663
3..	767,434	951,091
4..	1,898,134	2,475,095
5..	1,646,253	3,170,000
6..	1,385,941	2,105,524
7..	2,377,409	3,256,738
8..	5,011,346	7,320,763
9, 10..	5,297,257	12,963,243
11...	1,691,073	3,637,627
14...	3,815,279	5,154,350
21...	12,000,000	17,456,268
	$37,169,101	$60,792,962

An excess of 60 per cent.

We were told by the department that:

The above amounts stated to be required to complete are approximate and are subject to revision; no special estimates having been made for the purpose.

Complete figures for the other 8 contracts are not available, but when we find that these thirteen contracts are going to cost us this enormously increased amount, it is fair to assume, I think, that those upon which the work has not been done yet will cost us in the same proportion. Therefore, you may add to the eight contracts yet to be completed at least 60 per cent of the estimated cost at the time the contracts were made. Then we will have the following result:

Statement of Cost under Contract.

We have then 13 contracts to cost $37,169,101 costing...	$60,792,962
We will have 8 contracts to cost $26,866,054 costing..	42,985,686
Add under-estimate of 5 per cent.	5,188,932
And the 21 contractors will be paid.	$108,967,580
Add interest during 8 years construction, say 4 years at 3½ per cent simple interest	15,155,461
Total cost when road completed for schedule items only..	$124,123,041
Add 7 years interest at 3 per cent compounded..	28,532,128
Total cost of scheduled items 7 years after completion, this is all extra.	$152,655,169

We must make some allowance, more or less, for errors—honest errors if you like—and we might well make an estimate, according to the experience we have had, of probably 20 or 25 per cent. But, I will not make any estimate of that kind. I will assume that there has been an error of 5 per cent. Add 5 per cent for under estimate, which will give you $5,188,932, and it will bring the amount to be paid to these twenty-one contractors up to $108,967,580, or nearly $109,000,000. You have to add interest during the construction period which, when this matter was launched, was said to be five years. Seven years have gone now, and far more than five years will elapse before the Quebec bridge will be completed, and before a good deal of this work will be done. Count eight years, which will give an average of four years for construction, and if you add four years at 3½ per cent simple interest, you get $15,155,461, making the total cost at the time this work is completed, $124,123,041. These are not speculative figures. These are the figures taken from the returns brought down. Then, we have to bear the expense of the road for seven years at all events, and we will have to pay compound interest; there is no getting out of that because we will have to borrow the money. We will have therefore to pay for seven years 3 per cent compounded which will amount to $28,532,128, making the total cost, not of the road, but of the 103 schedule items alone of $152,655,269, at the end of the seven-year period. The Finance Minister, not relying upon his own information, but after sufficient inquiry, after investigation, after consulting experts, assured us that he had ascertained that the total cost would be $51,300,000. That was for everything. Now, for the schedule items alone we have $152,655,169, or three times the estimated cost as given by the Finance Minister. But that is not all by any means. We have to add to this all the items that are not included in the contracts let to contractors. These do not include right of way, the rails, the fastenings, the terminals, the station houses, the turntables, the sidings, the telegraph system, the workshops, the elevators, the bridges, and the Quebec bridge, built, fallen and to build in all, counting for more than $50,000,000 yet. This is a very startling condition of things, and therefore, it is one which demands, not of the members of this committee alone, but of every member of this House, yes, and of every Canadian, a thorough, a full, and searching investigation. It is something so startling, and so unusual that it demands of the Prime Minister now, that he shall say, as being more responsible than anybody else, that we shall have a thorough, full, and searching investigation. These figures represent instead of the $25,000 or $28,000 a mile that was estimated by the Finance Minister, an actual expenditure for the work let of over $84,000 a mile. That ought to be sufficient to make the Prime Minister think. With all the items added it will make the total cost of this road $200,000,000, and it will not be one dollar less according to the figures we have. It represents an actual total outlay for these 1,084 miles of road of $111,000 a mile. Yet, we have a committee of four, or of seven, whichever you like, pottering over a little matter that is practically of no importance, spending time over some isolated instances instead of meeting the situation boldly, and carefully, and inquiring how it is that this road, which was to cost $51,300,000, according to the estimate which the Finance Minister said he had taken the best means of ascertaining to be correct, is costing at least $200,000,000, from Winnipeg to Moncton alone. There are some other instructive figures I intended to read before coming to this. We have eighteen contracts upon which work has been done. We have three contracts upon which no work has yet been done. I take these eighteen contracts which have been proceeded with, and I take the figures upon which they were let, the total estimated cost, according to the estimates at the time these contracts were let, and I find that the rock alone—I mean loose, and solid rock altogether—will cost a sum equal to the Finance Minister's estimate of the total construction cost of the whole road. I hope I will have the attention of the hon. Minister of Railways (Mr. Graham). He is peculiarly responsible, almost as responsible as the Prime Minister. It is said that he does not hear me. If he does not hear me some other people will, and the country will know how these figures are. They are government figures, taken from a government return, and they cannot be gainsaid. The government give us the amount that the work was to cost, and they give us the percentage of work that has been done. I add to the whole work done the percentage yet to be and the following results appear:

		Rock to cost.	Has cost.	Will cost.

So that we have this result, that the rock excavation in these contracts, which according to the engineer's estimate, based upon what was said to be reliable data at the time the contracts were let, was to cost $20,900,000, is costing, according to the returns brought down by the Minister of Railways, $51,036,000; or, in other words, the rock excavation alone is costing what the Minister of Finance said would be the cost of the whole 1,800 miles of road. Now, in this condition of things, I recognize, as everybody must recognize, that however we were hampered in the committee and outside of the committee, it is the duty of us all to investigate this matter in every possible way with the view of finding out how this enormous squandering of the people's money has been brought about. It is said by the organs of the government that the reason we left the committee was that we were disappointed that things were not coming our way, I suppose that by that they assume—and they must be the judges of their own view of the matter—that we wanted the investigation to turn out badly. I deny that entirely. We did want a thorough and searching investigation. We had not proceeded very far with the committee work until we found good reason for believing that we could not obtain that thorough and searching investigation, and any one who has even casually watched the proceedings of that committee will not be convinced that there is very much investigation about it down to the present time. But, taking the suggestion of the Grit press with the 'Globe' at the head of the list, and the minor organs chipping in and singing the chorus, that we did not think matters were turning out bad enough, let me look at a few pages of Mr. Lumsden's evidence, and see the result. I have taken the trouble to take out of the long array of items furnished by Mr. Lumsden some thirty or more instances of which he complains. He told us in the committee that he had only given us one-quarter of what he had ascertained in the few days he was going over the road. Mr. Lumsden told us that he had got a statement of the returns which had actually been made by the government engineers to the commission, the prices according to those returns, and the amounts that were to be paid, and as he went along he noted what he thought was wrong in the classification. From those notes of the engineer I have been able to ascertain what was the overpay in each case. Now, if the government organs, the 'Globe' included, want to be fair about this matter, they ought to be reasonably well satisfied. I start with the minor cases, which run up from eighteen per cent of excess of payment to nearly 400 per cent. That strikes me as being something that ought to arrest the attention of the government, something that ought to make the government feel that there should be more than this little petty investigation that is going on at the present time; and I want to tell the Prime Minister what it means, if he has not been following the evidence. It means this, that just as in the Hodgins inquiry the whole bent of the inquiry was to find out that Hodgins, the gentleman whom the government employed, was no good, so in the bigger case to-day, the whole bent of the inquiry, the energy of the prosecuting counsel, Mr. Chrysler, the energy of that other independent gentleman, Mr. Smith, the energy of Mr. Moss,—and it is all right as far as he is concerned—the energy of all these parties is to show that the government employed for their chief engineer an absolute fool. If that is the way the government are going to finish their work, if that is the way they are going to reinstate themselves with the public, well and good; but that is the drift of the cross-examination; that is what eight or ten men, an army of engineers, and a large number of lawyers, at an expense of from $800 to $1,000 a day, are engaged in at the present time. I have numbered these statements, and I will summarize them:

No. 1—Engineer's note 'Something wrong here; rock should not be more than one-half in all the cuts, and one-half the remainder common excavation.' It was all charged as rock and loose rock. It should have cost $4,945; it cost $5,845, an over-payment of $900, or an excess at the rate of eighteen per cent.

No. 2—The engineer's note is 'Cut all sand and gravel, very few stones'. The cost was $16,499.30. The engineer said the cost should be $12,882. So there was an overpayment of $3,617.30, or an excess at the rate of twenty-eight per cent.

No. 3—The engineer's note is 'Borrow pits; all common excavation'. It was charged nevertheless as 1,743 cubic yards of loose rock, and the rest common excavation. It should have cost $1,307.10; it cost $1,829, an over-payment of $521,90, or forty per cent excess.

No. 4—The engineer's note is 'Ballast pit, no boulders in sight, all sand, and a little clay'. They found, however, 437 cubic yards of boulders, and 24,033 cubic yards of loose rock. The cost should have been $17,620.50, whereas it was $25,428.20, an over-payment of $7,807,70, or an excess of forty-four per cent.

No. 5—The engineer's note is 'All common excavation'. But there was returned 1,050 cubic yards of loose rock. The cost should have been $630; it was $945, an over-payment of $315, or fifty per cent more than it should have cost.

No. 6—The engineer says that this was 'All common excavation,' which should have cost $3,887.77, or 12,959 yards at 30 cents. It cost, however, $5,746.80, making an over-payment of $1,859.10, or 47 per cent.

No. 7—The engineer's note with regard to this is, 'Ploughed and scraped,' meaning common excavation. This cost us $29,-970, and it should have cost only $19,597.50, making an over payment of $10,372.50, or 53 per cent.

No. 8—The engineer says that this was all muskeg, common excavation. Yet I find that we paid for 7,049 cubic yards of loose rock at 60 cents, and only 4,985 common excavation at 30 cents. We paid in all $5,724.90, whereas we should only have paid $3,610.20, making an over-payment of $2,114.70, or 58 per cent.

No. 9—The engineer's note is, 'Not a boulder.' Yet we paid for loose rock, 4,679 yards at 60 cents, and common excavation, 3,046 yards at 30 cents, making a total paid of $3,721.20, whereas we should only have paid for the whole as common excavation at 30 cents, $2,317.50, making an over-payment of $1,403.70, or 60 per cent.

Did our engineer know what he was talking about? Does the government take the position that he is a ninny? Mr. Lumsden is probably sixty years of age. Well, men who are sixty years old, and who are drawing a salary of $6,000 a year, do not throw up such a good position on a whim or without good cause. Had the engineer not been a man of principle, had he simply been bent on keeping office, he would have effaced himself and passed everything. But he took the opposite course. And remember there is no pension attached to the office. The engineer does not belong to the military branch of the service. Yet we find this man throwing up a salary of $6,000 a year, and we can come to no other conclusion than that he had to do so or act dishonestly by the country. His action was not that of a nonentity. The government and their press are, however, straining every nerve to show that this man was an imbecile, that he was no good. Well, Mr. Speaker, if he were, he would have clung to his position and done what he was told. But contrast the position which the government now takes with the one they took two years ago. At that time I called its attention, in pretty strenuous terms, to the necessity for an investigation in connection with the resignation of Major Hodgins. I then asked the government whether they were satisfied that their chief engineer, Mr. Lumsden, was a competent man. I said to them: Do you think you have the right man, or is there something wrong? It would be better to pay $10,000 a year more and get the best man to be had. The government replied that their chief engineer, Mr. Lumsden, was quite competent, that everything was all right. At that time, however, they were fighting Major Hodgins, and now they are doing their best to crush Mr. Lumsden.

No. 10—This shows an over-payment of $1,574, or 68 per cent. We should have paid only $2,304, whereas we paid $3,877.

No. 11—The engineer's note is 'No stone in sight.' However, we find the following paid for:

Rock, 90 yards at $1.70	$153 00
Loose rock, 500 yards at 60 cents	$300 00
Common excavation, 502 yards at 30 cents	$150 60
Total	$603 60

This should have been common excavation, 1,092 yards at 30 cents, $327.60, making an over-payment of $276, or 84 per cent.

No. 10a—The engineer's note is 'All looks like common excavation; may have been 50 yards loose rock south side.' Yet we paid as follows:

Loose rock, 6,600 yards at 30 cents	$3,300 00
Common excavation, 4,400 yards at 21 cents	924 00
Total	$4,224 00

Whereas we should only have paid for 50 yards of loose rock, and the balance common excavation, or a total of $2,324.50, making an over-payment of $1,899.50, or 81 per cent.

No. 12—Engineer's note is '50 yards loose rock at east end, all the rest common excavation. No solid rock.' Well, we paid $3,878, whereas we only should have paid $2,304, making an over-payment of $1,573.97, being an excess of 84 per cent. This over-payment is due to the fact that 996 yards were charged as solid rock at $1.50, and 1,047 as loose rock, at 50 cents.

No. 13—The engineer's note is 'Except possibly 5 yards loose rock, it is all common excavation.' But instead of paying only for 5 yards of loose rock we paid for 3,324 yards of loose rock at 60 cents and 405 yards of common excavation at 30 cents, or a total payment of $1,515.90, whereas we should only have paid $820.20, making an over-payment of $695.70, or 80 per cent.

Remember that these are only upon a little section of the road. Now take up No. 14.

The chief engineer's note is, 'No signs of a stone.' Yet we paid as follows:

Solid rock, 1,562 yds. at $1.50	$2,343
Loose rock, 2,562 yds. at 50 cts.	1,280
Common excavation, 10,821 yds. at 21 cts.	2,274
Total	$5,896

Whereas we should only have paid for 14,953 yards at 21 cents, $3,140, being an over-payment of $2,757, or 87 per cent.

No. 15—The engineer's note is 'All common excavation, no sign of rock or loose rock here.' Yet we paid $595 instead of $315, or $280 over-payment, or 88 per cent.

No. 16—The engineer's note is 'All common excavation.' Nevertheless, on a total of 870 yards we paid for 580 yards of loose rock at 50 cents. Or we made an over-payment of $160, being at the rate of 92 per cent.

No. 17—The engineer's note is 'All common excavation,' I find, however, that out of 2,740 we paid for 2,000 yards of loose rock and only 740 of common excavation, making an over-payment of $580, or an excess of 100 per cent.

No. 18—The engineer's note is 'Looks like 10 yards of solid rock, 300 of loose rock, and the rest common excavation.' But what did we pay for it? We paid for it:

Rock, 3,446 yds. at $1.50	$5,169 00
Loose rock, 4,329 yds. at 50 cts.	2,164 50
Common excavation, 14,143 yds. at 21 cts.	2,970 00
Total	$10,303 00

Whereas all we should have paid was $4,702, making an over-payment of $5,600, or 119 per cent.

No. 19—The engineer's note is 'All common excavation.' We paid $697 for the little work done there. Whereas, all we should have paid was $311, making an over-payment of $385, or 123 per cent.

No. 19a—The engineer's note is 'No rock; say 1,000 yards loose rock, rest common excavation.' Yet we paid for 5,790 yards of rock and 3,850 yards of loose rock. Or in all we paid $11,735, whereas, on a proper classification, we should only have paid $4,400, making an over-payment of $7,295, or 164 per cent.

The importance of these items is this, that they show the hollowness of the arguments of the Grit press that the opposition members on the committee retired because there was no evidence of wrong-doing. What better evidence could they want? It seems to me that the evidence is very strong. It seems to me strong enough to satisfy the right hon. the Prime Minister that when he narrows the inquiry into a trial of Mr. Lumsden and diverts it from the true issue, as to whether that road is costing more than it should, he is not doing justice to the country.

Take No. 20—The engineer's note is 'Dug in places to test it; good ballast; whole cut common excavation, might be a few yards of rock in boulders.' Well, we paid for 4,730 yards of solid rock at $1.70 and 9,672 yards loose rock at 60 cents, and 2,007 yards only of common excavation at 30 cents. We paid a total of $14,686, whereas, we only should have paid $5,054, making an over-payment of $9,231, or 169 per cent. We over-paid $9,231, or at the rate of 169 per cent.

No. 21—The engineer's note says 'This seems all common excavation, no rocks, but a per cent of loose rock, say 25 per cent for boulders, some of it good ballast.' It cost us $84,771.34 according to the classification. The engineer says it should have cost us $29,993.59. In that case there was an over-payment of $54,777.76, or 182 per cent.

No. 21a—Mr. Lumsden says 'Little or no rock. Considerable loose rock, say one-third; rest common excavation.' We paid for this $16,577.45; we should have paid $5,844.25, an over-payment of $10,733.20, or 183 per cent.

No. 22—The engineer says 'May have been a few yards rock, one-fifth loose rock, remainder common excavation.' We paid for that $43,270.13; we should have paid $15,129.06, an over-payment of $28,141.07, an excess of 186 per cent.

No. 23—The engineer's note reads 'May have been a few yards, say 20, of rock, one-fifth loose rock, remainder common excavation.' The quantity of solid rock returned was 20,267 yards, and of loose rock 18,409 yards. We paid $43,269.65, when, according to the judgment of the engineer, we should have paid $15,068.43, an over-payment of $28,201.22, or 187 per cent.

No. 24—The engineer's note says 'May have been 10 yards rock, and say 1,000 yards of loose rock, the rest common excavation.' We over-paid, in that case, according to the government engineer's estimate, $6,854.32, or 190 per cent.

No. 25—The engineer's note says 'Say 2 boulders, 5 yards rock, one-eighth loose rock, the remainder common excavation.' For these two boulders, we paid for 4,127 yards of solid rock and 4,210 yards of loose rock. The excess payment amounted to $6,079.25, or 194 per cent.

No. 26—'Nothing but common excavation in sight,' says the engineer's note. We paid $10,833.57 more than, according to the figures given by the engineer, we should have paid. That is, we made an excess payment of 245 per cent—three and a half times more than we should have paid.

No. 27—In this case, 'No rock in sight, say one-eighth loose rock, the remainder common excavation,' is the way the engineer's note reads. We paid $23,990.27, when we should have paid $6,826.45, an excess payment of $17,162.82, or 251 per cent.

No. 28—The engineer's note says 'No rock in sight, one-eighth loose rock, remainder common excavation.' We paid $5,853.45, when we should have paid $1,611.95, an excess of $4,241.50, or 263 per cent.

No. 29—The engineer's note 'No rock, only say 100 yards loose rock, the rest common excavation.' Yet, there were returned 2,142 yards of rock, and 1,395 of loose rock. We paid $4,198, where we should have paid $1,059.89. That is, we over-paid $3,138.73, or 296 per cent—about four times what we should have paid.

No. 30—The engineer's note says 'Except 150 feet east end, all common excavation —say 600 yards loose rock at east end.' We paid $7,711.93, when we should have paid $1,735.35, an over-payment of $5,976.58, or 344 per cent.

And yet, this pious editor of the 'Globe,' the gentleman who, when he is not praying or pretending to, is negotiating our treaties at Washington, or is slandering somebody, is very much concerned because he thinks that the members of the minority of the committee were so athirst for gore, that they were not satisfied with these disclosures. I have only touched the fringe of what Mr. Lumsden gave in the first two days of his investigation. What he has done since is easy to ascertain for anybody who will follow the investigation. He has given some answers to Mr. Chrysler which will do neither harm nor good. He has been in the hands of Mr. Smith for many days in an honest endeavour to show that the government had an engineer who was no good. What comfort the government is going to get out of that I do not know. We want a capable, as well as honest, government; this kind of inquiry, I am afraid, will not convince the country on either one point or the other.

Now, I have referred to these items, first as to the railway question generally, and then as to a few of the disclosures during the two days of investigation when we were present in the committee, for the purpose of emphasizing the fact that I realize that our duty was to stand to our guns and fight in the interest of the country if we could fight effectually. But I take the position that, while it is my duty to stand firmly in the interest of the people in this committee of mystery, it is also my duty to select my fighting ground to some extent, and also to select my weapons. And now, I come to the point of why we left that committee—or, the more important point, as not involving the personal question, what was the attitude of that committee which necessitated the retirement of three of its members. And first, let me say that I am not afraid of fighting. Perhaps, sometimes, I am recklessly bold. I do not mean that I fight effectively, or that I am a match for the hon. gentlemen who were on that committee. But I do say that I am not driven away by any feeling of timidity. I left that committee when I came to the conclusion that, by reason of the manner in which the proceedings were being carried on, and by reason of the drift of matters, it was impossible to serve the public in that committee, and that if I remained I would become a party to a farce—a laughing farce if it were not so serious in the interest of the country, a farcial investigation which was an insult to the intelligence of the people of Canada. Now, the position was this:

On the first day of the inquiry, the commission appeared by counsel. Mr. Lumsden announced that he was merely a witness, and he did not propose to have counsel. It is said in a lying pamphlet—I want to choose my language on this occasion—it is said in a lying pamphlet that is circulated by supporters of the government from week to week, that goes out every day during the session, and that has been dealing with this investigation, goes out under frank of that sapient gentleman, that very busy gentleman, the Solicitor General (Mr. Bureau), that goes out under his frank the year round, both during the session and after the session, that the members of the minority insisted that Mr. Lumsden should have counsel. That is not true. No member of the minority committee suggested that Mr. Lumsden should have counsel. We recognized from the first that, not Mr. Lumsden, but the commission, and ultimately the government, were the people on trial. You cannot shirk that issue, the government is on trial, the commission is on trial, and Mr. Lumsden is merely a witness. It is absolutely false to say that the minority of the committee ever urged that Mr. Lumsden should have counsel. But what we did say was, that before this investigation went further, there should be counsel to represent the people. Mr. Lumsden did not appear by counsel, and I think he was a wise man. He had no axe to grind, no fight to put up, although the government is fighting to-day tooth and nail, as they fought Mr. Hodgins. The government is on trial in this matter, and we said that as the government was represented by counsel, there should be somebody to represent the people. The chairman took the ground that it was a fight—just imagine!—a fight between the subordinate engineers and Mr. Lumsden, and therefore there was no need for counsel for the people. Another gentleman, the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Wilson), did not know who the people meant, and so far as I know he does not know yet. What a pity, what a lovely position that is to be in, that we have on this investigation a gentleman who does not know who the people are. Let me read his exact language. I had been talking about the people, and he said:

> Mr. WILSON. I understand that Mr. Lumsden has made some charges or some reflections against some engineers, and I for one will be delighted if Mr. Lumsden is represented by counsel, and that the party or parties against whom he has laid complaints should also be represented. But when you talk about counsel to represent the public, that seems to me a very vague word.

There is a good deal in that. When we have gentlemen who sit in their seats until the Prime Minister rises, and if he should make a mistake and sit down, they would not get up, men who think that Providence, and Canada, and the nation are bound up in the Prime Minister—when you get men of that kind on a committee, it is not surprising that they do not know who the public is. They are fighting for the Prime Minister, they are fighting for the government, fighting for the party. But nothing for the public, nothing for the people. I was thinking of this as I walked up to-day, and I remembered that possibly I could find some lines that fit the case in a poem of Riley, which I find in a little volume called 'The Flying Islands of the Night.' I will only read a line or two:

> We follow ever on and on—
> O'er hill and hollow, brake and lawn;
> Thro gruesome vale and dread ravine—

And there have been many gruesome vales and dread ravines in the political history of our hon. friends opposite:

Thro gruesome vale and dread ravine
Where light of day is never seen.
We waver not in loyalty,— Unfaltering we follow thee—
We follow, follow, follow thee?

Then let me give the concluding stanza:

We follow ever on and on;

It doesn't make any difference where, they are so used to it.

We follow ever on and on;
For wheresoever thou hast gone
We hasten joyous, knowing there
Is sweeter sin than otherwhere—

Does the right hon. gentleman appreciate that? There has been a lot of sweet sin, there are mountains and mountains of sweet sin in this railway, this great National Transcontinental railway that the right hon. gentleman talked about, and which I am afraid will have to be called the great National Transcontinental Graft railway.

We follow ever on and on;
For wheresoever thou hast gone
We hasten joyous, knowing there
Is sweeter sin than otherwhere—
Leave still its latest cup,

'It's latest cup.' What a splendid thing if we could only believe that we had finally got to the latest cup in this iniquitous railway deal.

Leave still its latest cup, that we May drain it as we follow thee.
We follow, follow, follow thee!

Now, that sums up fairly well the attitude of the hon. member for Laval. As to the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald), his methods are so well known, they are so creditable to his ability, that I won't say anything about him. But we did urge that at this initial stage of the proceedings, not that Mr. Lumsden should be represented by counsel, but that the people should be represented by counsel, seeing that the government was already represented by counsel paid by the people. Well, we could not get our way. Finally it was understood that Mr. Lumsden would give us a statement in writing, and there was to be no cross-examination. That agreement was not kept. We went on, with a counsel there for the commission, and the chief commissioner, himself an able counsel, being there; we went on, the minority against the majority; and every question that could be interjected from time to time by the hon. member for Pictou, with his excellent ability, was interjected for the purpose of getting, if possible, to the same stage at which that same hon. gentleman lauded Mr. Hodgins some two years before. Then, at the end of two days, my hon. friend proposed that we should have counsel for the committee. If, on the first or second day when we proposed that counsel should be retained, it had been acceded to, and an adjournment had until counsel was retained to represent the public, I would not have felt so strongly that it was absolutely necessary that the nomination of counsel should be left in the hands of the minority. But matters developed during these two days, and by the end of these two days I was convinced, and I think any one who will read the evidence will be convinced, that it was absolutely necessary, if this investigation was not going to develop into a greater farce than it was at the beginning, that the nomination and engagement of counsel should be left in the hands of the minority. Well, we met, and what we proposed was that inasmuch as the majority of the committee were favourable to the government the engagement of counsel should be left in the hands of the minority. I ventured to say that the political affiliations of the majority of the committee, all things being equal, —upon a balance of evidence—would lead them rather to decide in favour of the government than against the government, and I ventured to say that, all things being equal, having regard to their political affiliations, and convictions, upon a balance of evidence, the minority of the committee would be disposed to decide in favour of the Conservative view of the matter. For that I was called a cynical partisan by that great organ of public opinion, the 'Globe.' I am not ashamed of that view; I could press it farther than that. But, the majority being favourable to the government, the government having in their employ counsel paid by the country, the government having at their disposal a well organized staff, the commissioners having also Mr. Smith, an able lawyer, at their elbow, throughout the whole investigation, and also having at their beck and call when necessary the Justice Department of the government, it being well known too that the contractors, and the commission stood in together, fighting Mr. Lumsden, and it being well known that the contractors were going to have counsel, that array of counsel being on the government side, on the side of the commission, and on the side of those who were accused, I claimed then, and I claim now, and on that I am prepared to be judged by the country, that if this investigation was not to be an absolute, and abominable farce we should have the right to name the counsel on behalf of the people as we were the only members standing independently in the matter. If some one says: 'Give the decision to the minority.' I reply that we do not absolutely ask it for the minority. We said we want to name counsel in whom we have confidence, whom we can go to, talk to and consult, but we will not force anybody upon the committee, we will submit names, and if one shall be found to be objectionable for any cause we shall submit another, and so we shall go through the list. We will not ask you to appoint a partisan of any kind. We parted on the understanding at that time, as is evidenced by the statement of the chairman, that that right would be conceded to us. But the majority on the committee, in the end, would not allow us that right. They said: We will name the counsel. They did not wait to submit a name, but they went to Mr. Wallace Nesbitt, and they engaged him, and secured his services. Every lawyer in the House, almost everybody in the country, knows what the effect upon the mind of counsel is as to who may engage him. He naturally looks for his instructions to the party that engage him, and he naturally expects to advance their interests. Tell me if you like that the majority of the committee want a fair investigation. I will grant it if you like, but I will say that there is yet their political affiliations, their political leanings, their desire is to have it appear that there is nothing wrong except Mr. Lumsden, that everything was done above board, that the classification was honest, that the country was not defrauded, and that, whilst the road will cost four times what we were led to believe it would cost us, yet it is honest, just, and fair. That is the fight of the government, that is the fight of the Minister of Railways in this House, and that will be the fight of the majority of the committee. They said: We will appoint Mr. Wallace Nesbitt, and the ostensible reason for that appointment was that he is a man of commanding notoriety, he is known throughout the whole country as a prominent counsel, and, they said, we cannot consent to appoint any body of less eminence than Mr. Wallace Nesbitt. They said: He is a Conservative. What has that to do with it if we are to have an honest investigation?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. LANCASTER. When they want an honest counsel they have to get a Conservative.

Mr. LENNOX. Well, as to the Conservative branch of it I am not much concerned. I retired before Mr. Wallace Nesbitt's name was mentioned at all. I have enjoyed the friendship and acquaintance of Mr. Nesbitt for many years. He is a very clever counsel. He has a brother here, a supporter of the government. That has nothing to do with it. Mr. Wallace Nesbitt is the one Conservative in all Canada that the government have any confidence in. They appointed Mr. Wallace Nesbitt as a judge of the Supreme Court. They had never transgressed in any other instance or in any other appointment. Clear grit every time except that one time that was the only time that they ever lapsed into virtue. I am not going to say anything against Mr. Wallace Nesbitt. He had the grace, when he found that we were opposed to him, not to ratify the appointment. He had consented, and he was appointed. I am not going to ask whether he is a Conservative or not. He came from that riding that the late James Sutherland used to represent—Oxford—and we have had many peculiar types of Conservative from that riding. I made no objection to Mr. Wallace Nesbitt on personal grounds. But, there was an insuperable barrier to Mr. Wallace Nesbitt being the counsel and my hon. friend from Pictou (Mr. Macdonald), who was a member of the Hodgins Committee, and my hon. friend, the chairman of this committee, who was the chairman of the Hodgins Committee well knew it all the time. I knew it and my hon. friend from Hamilton (Mr. Barker) no doubt knew it. Who is the gentleman they wanted to have? Why, the gentleman who gave them an opinion in writing two years before against the contention of Mr. Lumsden. And the hon. member for Pictou, behind the back of the committee—I do not mean that in the sense that he acted wrongfully—but without consulting the committee, engaged Mr. Wallace Nesbitt and Mr. Wallace Nesbitt would have been the counsel as far as we know but for the fact that the minority would not consent.

Mr. MACDONALD. Will my hon. friend permit me to say that that statement is not correct? I did not engage Mr. Nesbitt at all.

Mr. LENNOX. What statement?

Mr. MACDONALD. The statement that I had engaged Mr. Wallace Nesbitt to be counsel behind the backs of the members of the committee.

Mr. LENNOX. I have the statement of the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker) who will be able to speak of it presently and I have the information that the hon. member for Pictou reported to the hon. member for Hamilton that he had consulted with Mr. Nesbitt, that Mr. Nesbitt was open for engagement and ready to come, and when we retired from the committee——

Mr. MACDONALD. Does the hon. member (Mr. Lennox) mean to assert now, in view of the statements he has made, that I engaged him?

Mr. LENNOX. I am going to tell that.

Mr. MACDONALD. If the hon. member says that I engaged him, I can only say that his statement is not correct.

Mr. LENNOX. I did not say that the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) engaged him before the time of which I am about to speak. When we retired, they passed a resolution in the committee appointing Mr. Wallace Nesbitt. If that does not mean an engagement, I do not know what does. They afterwards received a letter from Mr. Nesbitt declining the position. But that was after we had refused to accept, and by our departure had protested against the position taken by the majority.

Mr. MACDONALD. You had not got out before the motion was put.

Mr. LENNOX. Shall I digress to tell the contrast in the treatment we received during the first two days of the work of that committee with the attitude of these hon. members when we determined to retire? Everything was offensive and aggressive in those two days—so much so that the chairman of the committee had to remind these hon. members that I was a member of the committee, in order to allow me to be heard at all; so much so that I had to curb my temper to avoid doing personal violence to the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald). But, when we decided to leave, when we brought it home to them that the eyes of the country were upon them, and that they would not have us as buffers between them and the people, but must fight it out alone, then these hon. gentlemen became humble, and peaceful, and engaging—

Mr. EMMERSON. Mild and loving.

Mr. LENNOX. Yes, mild and loving, and besought us to stay there with them. And, with my usual courtesy and politeness, in deference to the suggestion of the chairman, I remained for a little while. But I made it perfectly clear, as the evidence will show, that I would not be a party to the proceedings that were then being carried on.

Well, enough said. Now, the majority of the committee were very solicitous that we should have a prominent counsel, a man known to all Canada. And they were very much afraid that no Conservative lawyer would be known to all Canada. There are one or two very clever lawyers upon the Liberal side who are notoriously known to all Canada at the present time. But, with that exception, I think we have as prominent lawyers in the ranks of the Conservative party as there are to be found in the Dominion.

Mr. GRAHAM. If we do say it ourselves.

Mr. LENNOX. Yes, and we are prepared to say it ourselves. We have in the city of Toronto some of the leaders of the bar in this Dominion. Contrast the position of to-day with the position of the government party when they said that nobody but Mr. Wallace Nesbitt would do. Whom did they select? I do not want to say anything against Mr. Chrysler, a good honest man, as lawyers go—and all are honest—but when you talk about a man of Dominion reputation, no doubt those who know Mr. Chrysler's name will know whether he has a Dominion reputation or not. He has done some good service for the government, and has been paid for it. For as long as I have known him, Mr. Chrysler has been doing good service for the corporations against the people. But that is what he is paid for, and I am not prepared to say that he did more than his professional duties demanded of him. I have respect for Mr. Chrysler in his station as a lawyer. But when you talk of Dominion reputation, I stop talking because I do not know anything about him, in that way—nor do the people. Within a small radius roundabout Ottawa, Mr. Chrysler is known as a capable lawyer. I have no doubt that he will be zealous. But the question is: For whom? I think the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) could tell, if he wished to. Here are some items from the Auditor General's Report, showing payments to the firm of Chrysler, Bethune and Company, of Ottawa, in the years mentioned:

1897-1898	2,747 22
1898-1899	151 73
1899-1900	2,287 33
1900-1901	164 12
1901-1902	2,998 90
1902-1903	311 72
1903-1904	7,822 13
1904-1905	1,611 65
1905-1906	3,316 59
1906-1907	577 91
Total	$26,917 23

This is as far as the Auditor General's Report goes. We do not know what the total may be by this time. Of all the counsel in Canada, a country which, I am proud to say, is blessed with many eminent counsel, this was the independent, prominent, impartial counsel in the interests of the people who could be depended upon to stake his legal position, his pecuniary interest, his personal advancement against the government if necessary, and to fight the government and fight the commission. No doubt Mr. Chrysler will be zealous for somebody; and ordinarily a counsel is zealous for the parties who employ him. My hon. friend from West Elgin (Mr. Crothers) has been criticised for outspoken remarks as to what the duty of a counsel is. I am not a prominent counsel—do not pretend to be; but I am a lawyer like some of the others here; and I have always thought that my first, my sworn duty, was to stand by my client and try to advance his interest. I have never learned that it was my duty to pander to the other side or to try to elicit evidence for the other side. We have Mr. Smith. Mr. Smith pledged us, the first day, that he had been instructed by the commission to elicit everything and to do all he could in the interest of the public. Mr. Smith, when he started the cross-examination the other day, said: 'I am not going to cross-examine; I am only going to ask a few questions on behalf of the commission.' And for 400 or 500 pages in four or five volumes of the records of the commission he has been asking questions; and I will challenge anybody, members of the commission or members of the House, to find on any one page of that record anything except a constant and persistent attempt by Mr. Smith, despite his virtuous professions and his uplifted hands, to fight for the commission and to down Mr. Lumsden.

Only one more word to show the attitude of that committee, which I venture to say, in all the somewhat spotted record of the present administration, will stand before Canada, by virtue of its position, I will not say by virtue of its intention, as having conducted the most outrageous, nonsensical, ridiculous and thoroughly dishonest inquiry ever held in this country. One more instance only is perhaps required to show the position of those gentlemen. When Mr. Chrysler was appointed, what do you think were the instructions given to Mr. Lumsden? It was represented again to Mr. Lumsden that he could have counsel, and it was suggested to him for the first time that the government would pay for his counsel if he had any. Mr. Lumsden said again that he did not want counsel.

Mr. MACDONALD. My hon. friend should also tell the House that Mr. Lumsden stated that he perfectly understood that the committee were prepared to pay for counsel at any time.

Mr. LENNOX. My hon. friend is perfectly correct. My hon. friend, as I recollect, stated to Mr. Lumsden: 'You understood all the time that we were prepared to pay for counsel?' And Mr. Lumsden echoed my hon. friend's words. Mr. Lumsden has the same unfortunate faculty as many other people of not seeing through my hon. friend as well as he might, and he echoed his remark, but I can only judge by what was said and done, and I say that throughout the investigation there never was any suggestion by any member of the committee, or by any one, that Mr. Lumsden could have counsel paid for. I am not saying whether it was in the minds of the committee or not. But that is not a matter of importance. My hon. friend from Pictou, the active member of the committee, the guiding hand, said: 'Now, Mr. Lumsden, you will confer with Mr. Chrysler,' and Mr. Lumsden gave a reluctant assent. That was theoretically correct, because theoretically Mr. Chrysler represents the public in this investigation, and it was right that the man who would have the prosecution of the case should confer with the prosecuting counsel. But what do you think my hon. friend from Pictou did in addition to that, and he is no chicken? My hon. friend cannot plead innocence or inadvertence. He is an able and shrewd lawyer. He said to Mr. Lumsden: 'Mr. Lumsden, you will also confer with Mr. Smith,' the counsel for the defence. Mr. Speaker, you too have the honour of belonging to this great profession of the law.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, no. Apologize.

Mr. LENNOX. I do not apologize. An undeserved compliment, Mr. Speaker. You have shown such a judicial mind that I judged you to be a lawyer. But from your experience, it will occur to you as one of the most outrageous things that could possibly be suggested that the counsel for the defence should confer with the witnesses for the prosecution. It is only a little thing, but it shows exactly how this matter is going. We have had, day after day, the harmless Mr. Chrysler going over a lot of stuff and bringing in letters which were intended to damage Mr. Lumsden; though my opinion is that in these matters the opinion of counsel is of no weight whatever. Mr. Chrysler brings in these letters and a lot of evidence and sits down. Mr. Smith then goes on from day to day. When Mr. Smith omits anything, Mr. Chrysler suggests the omission, and cures it; if he does not, my hon. friend from Pictou comes to the rescue; and so it goes on from day to day, and from week to week, at an expense of, I suppose, $1,000 a day to the country. But that is a small matter compared to the enormous expenditure involved. For my part, when I retired, I thought I was serving the public best by doing so in protest against the attitude assumed by the government with their long array of counsel, fortified by the Minister of Justice. In reference to Mr. Wallace Nesbitt, let me say that when his opinion came to Ottawa two years ago, from whom do you think it came? It came from the firm of Aylesworth and Company, the firm headed by the Minister of Justice; and to-day a member of that same firm is fighting for the position taken by the commission, which is fighting for the postion taken by the government; and they are all—Chrysler, Smith, Atkinson in the office, the lawyer at the head of the committee, the government counsel, the able, sapient and potent Solicitor General, overworked as he is, in sending out this false literature to the country—all fighting against the people and the people's interest. So I thought I would select my field of battle outside of that committee, where I could do better service for the public, and not remain there as a buffer between the people and those who deserve the people's condemnation. I retired, and I am willing to abide by the issue. May I, in closing, appeal to the Prime Minister? It is said that we are in contempt. We are not willingly in contempt. We can, of course, be put in the tower for our wrongdoing; I recognize that, and for the interest of the country I am willing to sacrifice myself even to that extent. But I beseech the Prime Minister, as my parting word, to send me to the solidly-built tower of this building and not to the Laurier tower, so liable at any time to fall again.

Mr. A. H. CLARKE (South Essex). Mr. Speaker, if no other good comes from the investigation of the Lumsden charges, I think the House can congratulate itself that it has served the purpose of giving us the most interesting bit of comedy for the last hour and a half that this House has listened to in many a day. There is only one thing lacking, and that is that my hon. friend from Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) should have put it into song, and allowed the House to hear his musical voice in those beautiful lines: 'I will follow, follow, follow all the way'. There is a hymn to those words, I think he ought to practice that hymn and let us have the benefit of it.

It seems to me that the dicsussion to-day is for the purpose of seeking to justify, or excuse the conduct of the three members of the committee who refused to carry out the mandate of this House. This House appointed a committee to investigate certain charges made by Mr. Lumsden not made by any member of the opposition, but by Mr. Lumsden alone, an appointee of the government, in respect of certain other appointees lower in order than he—and the three hon. gentlemen to whom I refer were appointed to act on that committee. It seems to me that the arguments of my hon. friend are such as to condemn him, and the other two who have shirked the duty this House imposed upon them. It seems to me every argument he has used has been the strongest condemnation of the conduct of himself and his friends. What are those arguments? In the first place, he has taken up matters which he knew full well before he agreed to act on the committee. It has been frequently stated in this House that there is a great difference between the estimated cost of the railway and its actual cost. No one disputes that, and that was a matter for discussion on the 27th January. My hon. friend made then practically the same speech as he has just given us. It has been made many times; and if his object in re-hashing to-day all that was said so frequently before, was to justify him in having refused to act on the committee, my answer is that that was an objection which he should have taken at that time. He should have taken that objection before he agreed to act on the committee. However he did not, and with all the knowledge he now has, he entered on his duties as member of that committee. Surely it is idle, therefore for him to say now, that he objected to serve on that committee because matters were not referred to it other than those which this House decided to refer to it by its resolution of January last.

Then my hon. friend went on to discuss matters which one would have thought a member of the committee would have refrained from discussing. He went on to discuss matters which are now before the committee of investigation. Being a lawyer myself, I was amazed that my hon. friend, who is also a lawyer, should come here and base an argument on partial statements made before that committee when the men charged have not had the opportunity of being heard. I was astonished that a member of that committee, himself a lawyer, should have endeavoured to prejudge matters concerning which evidence has not yet been given. That is something which passes my comprehension. If those matters are so serious as he would have us believe, all the more was it his duty to carry out the mandate which the House gave him, and attend the meetings of that committee, and see that the fullest investigation took place.

There is only one reason, I understood my hon. friend to say, which actuated himself, and his friends in departing from that committee, and that is the reason embodied in a resolution which the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker) proposed in the committee on the 4th of March last. On the 23rd of February, by the unanimous voice of the committee it was decided to employ counsel to represent the public interest. Mr. Lumsden had declared that he did not desire that counsel should act for him. He made it plain that he would take that position. It was then suggested, and agreed to without dissent, that the committee should ask leave of the House to appoint a counsel who would represent the public. Strange to say, although my hon. friend and his associates agreed to that, within two hours after, without any notice to the other members of the committee, the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) got up and moved an amendment asking that the minority have leave to nominate the counsel. That took place on the 23rd February. That amendment was moved to the report made on that day. My hon. friend moved to amend the motion by adding thereto the following words:

It is further ordered that the members of the opposition on the said committee shall have the right to select the counsel so to be appointed, which counsel shall be instructed to protect the interests of the people of Canada in the said investigation.

The decision of the House was that that was not a sound position for the minority on the committee to take. By a large majority the House decided that it was not the right of the minority on the committee to chose counsel. If the refusal to allow this choice to the minority was a reason for the three members to retire from the committee, surely that was the time for them to do so. But they did not at the time consider that that was a reason why they should withdraw. On the contrary, they went afterwards to several meetings of the committee. On the 4th of March the matter was brought to a crisis by a resolution moved in the committee by the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker):

That it is the right and duty of the members of the committee who represent the opposition to nominate the counsel who shall prosecute the investigation in the public interests.

The majority of the committee negatived that proposition as the House had previously negatived it. You will notice the words: 'It is the right of the members of the minority to chose the counsel.' Well, the House of Commons had decided that it was not their right. These hon. gentlemen had attended the committee in obedience to that ruling. They attended several meetings of that committee, and then, because the committee would not agree to this motion, they made that a pretext for filing out of the room one after the other. Well, if they think that they were justified by this in shirking the duties imposed on them by the House, I do not think the country will endorse that view. There was no question then as to who would be appointed counsel. My hon. friends did not suggest any names. They did not say: Give us this or that man. There was not a single suggestion, not a single nomination of any individual, but they said that they should have the right to name the counsel. In other words, four members of the committee were to annihilate themselves and allow three members to do what seven were appointed to perform. They made no suggestion, they did not suggest that any particular counsel should be named, but they said: Unless you accede to our proposition we shall have nothing to do with you, no matter whom you may appoint. Objection has been made since to the counsel appointed, but that was not the reason why these gentlemen retired. Mr. Nesbitt was nominated. It was said that he had given an opinion as to the specifications. Possibly that was known to some members of the committee, but not to all. Surely if it was known to the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) it was his duty then, as a member of the committee, to have pointed out that Mr. Nesbitt was not a proper man to be nominated. But now they say because two of the other members of the committee knew this about Mr. Nesbitt that absolved them from their duty of saying anything about it. Much has been said about Mr. Chrysler's appointment.

I may say that, if my hon. friends had done their duty, they would have raised their objections to Mr. Chrysler if they thought there were any. If there has been any error in appointing Mr. Chrysler, it is the fault of these hon. members of the committee that they were not there to point it out. Certain it is that no objection was made to him. I made the nomination myself. I thought Mr. Chrysler was a competent man, and a fair man, a reliable man, and one fully equipped for the position; and there has been nothing in the conduct of the inquiry since then to change my opinion in the slightest degree. I do not think that there is any man whom the committee would have chosen who would be satisfactory to the members who retired. I have not heard them suggest any person who would be satisfactory. It is all a question whether or not three shall usurp the position of seven, and, failing that, object to anything any person whom the majority may choose. It seems to me that the position is one which is absolutely indefensible. And my hon. friend (Mr. Lennox) has gone out of his way to attack Mr. Moss, who represents some of the engineers, or, rather, to indirectly attack the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth), because Mr. Moss is a member of his firm. I think the hon. gentleman knows perfectly well—I think he must have heard the Minister of Justice in this House more than once state, and perhaps in answer to the hon. member himself—that he had no interest whatever in that firm, that his name was allowed to remain there (as, I believe, it was stated the name of the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) was allowed to remain with his former firm) he having no interest in the firm.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It is a matter of no importance, but I may say that is not true of myself.

Mr. A. H. CLARKE. I am glad the hon. member (Mr. R. L. Borden) makes the correction, but I think he will agree that it was stated in the House at least once. I remember quite well that, on one occasion, the Minister of Justice referred to the hon. member as being in a similar position to himself. The hon. gentleman says that it is not correct in his case.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The statement was made, but was corrected.

Mr. A. H. CLARKE. But the statement concerning himself was made by the Minister of Justice, and I think the hon. member (Mr. Lennox) knows it quite well.

Mr. LENNOX. No, I did not, but it does not alter the case much.

Mr. A. H. CLARKE. No, I do not think that anything would alter the case for my hon. friend (Mr. Lennox). I cannot conceive of anything the committee would do that would alter the opinion of my hon. friend. He thinks, I am sure, that this whole government has been a farce since 1896; I have no doubt there is nothing that this government, or any committee appointed with the consent of this government has done, that is not a farce in the opinion of my hon. friend.

Now, what was the proper position of these hon. members? If they wished to retire from this committee, and give way to other men, they could have asked to be relieved of their duties. If they had done so, of course they would have given some reason for it. The only reason they could give would be that, so far as appears by the record, they held that they should be allowed to choose the counsel. The House has already passed upon that. Therefore, we have the spectacle here of three members of a committee appointed by the House, undertaking the duties, not asking to be relieved, still remaining members of the committee, yet absenting themselves from the committee, where, according to their own statements, it is of the utmost importance they should be. If the counsel, and the members of the committee are not doing their duty, surely all the greater is the reason why these three—who are equal to four or more—should be there to see that the investigation is properly carried on. I have no hesitation in going before the people, and commending those who serve against those who quit. Why, service has been praised ever since the battle of Crecy. We have, in the crest of the Prince of Wales, under the three white ostrich feathers, the motto 'Ich Dien'—I serve. And so honoured a place has this motto, and the idea it represents in our minds that we have the nobility of service taught in the schools. The attempt is now made to reverse that. Instead of it being a virtue to serve, it is represented as a virtue to quit. It is so important a revolution in the ethics of this country that it should be commemorated. There should be pictures of the three members filing out of the committee room with the motto, 'I quit.' The white feathers might remain, for I think they would be quite appropriate. And these should be posted in the public schools, to teach the precept hereafter that quitting is a virtue instead of service.

Mr. S. BARKER (East Hamilton). I do not propose to follow my hon. friend from South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) in showing the enormous amounts of money involved in this question. I think there can be no doubt in the mind of any hon. member that the amount involved in the question whether there has been gross negligence, or whether there has been swindling in connection with these operations is enormous, it is away op in the millions. The first estimate we had of the cost of this road from the government was $51,000,000. There cannot be a doubt now that the cost will be at least three times that—probably more. So it is of great importance to the people of this Dominion that the truth should be known as to how this great discrepancy has occurred. Therefore it is that the hon. member for South Simcoe took some pains to lay before the House and the country the real gravity of the situation, that the people might understand that this is not merely a question whether three gentlemen choose, or did not choose, to go on with this inquiry, but a question whether there shall be a fair and full inquiry into a matter of great practical importance to the public.

Now, I observe that the hon. member for South Essex (Mr. A. H. Clarke) has tried to be a little humorous and sarcastic. He says that the charges made by Mr. Lumsden are against other officers lower than himself. That is precisely what a majority of the committee are trying to make out, the case is represented to be from first to last—simply a quarrel, a difference of opinion, between Mr. Lumsden and his subordinates. But no one knows better than the hon. member from South Essex that there is a much graver question than that in it. It has been stated in writing that these subordinate officers are believed to have been acting, not upon their own motion, but under instructions given by those above both themselves and Mr. Lumsden. The question, therefore, arises who are the people who have led these subordinates to do these wrong actions. That is a most important question and it is the question upon which everything turns. We have not been trying to find out exactly what was the motive of the subordinate engineers. I do not believe for a moment that these subordinate engineers have been doing this off their own bat; I am quite sure they have not. They have known that they have the support and backing of people in place, who can maintain them and support them in whatever they do; otherwise those men, I believe, would never have done what they did. Now I do not propose to occupy the time of the House in discussing what it was necessary for my hon. friend from Simcoe to discuss; I propose to deal simply with the question why I felt compelled to withdraw from the committee when I had been appointed to it by this House, and had accepted the position. I admit the gravity of the step that I took, I am not going to treat it lightly, and I hope the House will believe that I realized the gravity of the step. I retired because I felt it was my duty to get out of that committee, and not be a party to what I might call a whitewashing operation. That is the truth, and the whole truth. If I had had any doubt as to the propriety of my conduct, I would have been satisfied to go on. But I have no doubt now, and I had no doubt at the time; I believe now that I was right in the course I took.

Now I want to recall for a moment the beginning of this thing. It is in the recollection of the House that in 1908 Major Hodgins, then in charge of 386 miles of the western end of this section of the road, had made grave charges against the staff, and his charges, his allegations, extended not merely to his own district F. but also to section B. Those allegations led practically to his dismissal by the commission. Subsequently a committee, known as the Hodgins Committee, of which I was a member, and two other gentlemen opposite were members, was appointed to investigate that question. I need not state what that committee did. Nothing resulted. The majority of the committee on that inquiry cleverly induced Mr. Hodgins to admit that the inquiry would be more satisfactorily prosecuted by a board of engineers than by the committee that was investigating it, and thereupon the whole thing was thrown overboard, and that was practically the end of the Hodgins inquiry. But, Mr. Speaker, within a year afterwards the whole country was startled by hearing that the chief engineer, who, acting under the commission, had been a party to the dismissal of Mr. Hodgins, had himself resigned, and in doing so had made grave and serious charges with respect to the very districts that were involved in the Hodgins inquiry. The Hodgins inquiry arose largely on district F, but Mr. Hodgins had been taken down to what is called a kindergarten show on B, and so some evidence was given as to district B. And those two districts, F and B, are the districts with which the whole inquiry under the Lumsden Committee is concerned. We had that investigation in 1908, and no action was taken by the government, no action was taken by the commission, no investigation as to what was the real truth about the Hodgins complaints. Everything was smoothed over, not a word from the government, or from any department of the government on that subject, until Mr. Lumsden throws up his most important position, his salary of $6,000 a year, goes entirely out of the service of the commission, because he could not stand what was going on. Now that was a startling position, and the Prime Minister very properly treated those allegations and those charges as very serious and very grave, and he moved for a committee of inquiry. It is with regard to that committee that I am now speaking, because I wish to explain to the House why I retired from it. As I said, I need not go into the gravity of the subject, because my hon. friend from Simcoe has done that. But even if he had not said a word, the very fact that the Prime Minister had treated the allegations as very grave, and had on his own motion obtained an order of the House for this investigation, would render any remarks from me on that subject unnecessary. No one will question that if the charges be true, if there be even a reasonable foundation for those charges, the reputation of the gentlemen who compose the commission, and of the minister, must be seriously compromised; there cannot be a question about that. How can it be otherwise? If there is any reasonable foundation for these charges, the government which is responsible for the appointment of that commission, and the commissioners who have been in charge of the work, must be compromised in their characters, in their reputations. The commissioners are appointed by the government, they held office during the pleasure of the government. These facts I take from the statutes authorizing the commission: they must render monthly statements and accounts to the government of all outgoings, receipts and liabilities; their books and records are at all times open to the government, and they report to parliament only through the government. So they are the direct officers of the government, and responsible to the government, who have power to dismiss them when they see fit. So far as their functions are concerned, they are to all intents and purposes as much a department of the government as is the Department of Public Works, or any other department. They are even more so, for the ministers report to this House, while the commission only report to the minister. They are in fact servants of the minister, and the government is responsible to the House for their conduct or misconduct.

Now, at the first meeting of the Lumsden Committee an order was made that the commissioners be notified, so that they might be present, and it was ordered that Mr. Lumsden be summoned to attend as a witness. The commissioners were notified to be present for the purpose of the investigation. At the next meeting the commissioners were in attendance, and they came represented by counsel. Mr. Lumsden was informed that he was at liberty to have counsel, but he replied that he did not want counsel. Now, the moment the minority of the commission ascertained that Mr. Lumsden was not to be represented by counsel, the situation was very much altered. Everybody knows that in making out such allegations as Mr. Lumsden made the assistance of counsel was absolutely essential. So when we heard that Mr. Lumsden was not going to have counsel, as we all expected he would have when he said in the presence of the committee that he regarded himself merely as a witness, that he was not a prosecutor, that he was there to answer questions with regard to any statement he had made, but that he was not there as a prosecutor, and was not going to employ counsel; from that moment the whole position was altered. In the absence of counsel for Mr. Lumsden the position was this: The contractors were going to have counsel, and they now have counsel. The commission—practically the government—were going to have counsel, and they came there with counsel. They did not ask the permission of the committee; they brought counsel with them. There was no counsel to prosecute, to prove the charge. Immediately, in the committee, we took the position that there should be somebody there to represent the public and probe this matter to the very bottom. Mr. Smith, the counsel of the commission, was quite frank. He said: On my instructions to investigate everything I can represent the public. He thought that he could save the public from going to the expense of employing counsel to follow this investigation up, because his instructions, he believed, were quite broad enough to cover that. So, there was Mr. Smith looking after the public and for the commissioners, and there was another gentleman looking after the contractors, but nobody at all to represent the public really as we thought the public should be represented. Out of that position grew the whole trouble. We asked that we should be allowed to nominate counsel to investigate everything, to act for the public, in fact, and we contended that it would be absurd for counsel to come there appointed practically by the majority of the committee, because that counsel would know that he was appointed, in fact, by the government and he would represent the government. It was obvious that no counsel appointed by the majority of the committee could feel it to be his interest and his duty to bring the matter home to the government if the government were to blame, or against the commission if the commission were to blame. That was the whole point, and upon it all this discussion arose. There was some dispute as to the necessity of counsel. The hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) said, in reply to the hon. member for South Simcoe, 'When you say the Transcontinental Commission is on trial here, I say they are not.' That was a pretty emphatic statement to come from a member of the committee. That was an absolute acquittal, right off the bat, of the commission. They were not even on trial, and that was the position taken by the hon. member for Pictou. These were his very words. I repeat them: 'When you say the Transcontinental Commission is on trial here, I say they are not.' The minority of the committee heard that statement from the majority.

Mr. MACDONALD. What page was that?

Mr. BARKER. I will give it to my hon. friend. Then the minority saw at once the position going to be taken by the majority. There was no complaint, no charge against the commission, and they were not to be investigated. I dare say they would have objected to any investigation as against themselves, there being no charge against them, and they had the authority of the hon. member for Pictou to that effect. We never concealed our view of the position. We said frankly: We of the minority desire to prove this case if it can be proved, and on the other hand, the hon. members comprising the majority would prefer that we should not prove it. Therefore, we said, if this is to be prosecuted in the sense of a public prosecution and a public inquiry, we, who want to see this investigation succeed, should have the nomination of counsel and not those who want to see it fail. I think that was a perfectly legitimate position to take, and we were driven to it by the fact that Mr. Lumsden had refused to have any counsel, for in the absence of counsel representing the minority or Mr. Lumsden there would have been no prosecution of the inquiry at all. A motion was made by us that we should not proceed until counsel had been appointed. Immediately afterwards the suggestion was made that the hon. member for Pictou and I should meet and endeavour to agree upon counsel. We did meet, and ultimately we failed to agree upon counsel. The hon. member for Pictou said to me—there is nothing private in what I shall state—'Suppose we (the majority) name a Conservative lawyer of high standing'? I replied: 'It does not matter at all whom you name; our position is that you are not to name the man to prosecute this inquiry, but that he should be named by us because we desire the prosecution of the inquiry.' That position was taken fairly and squarely. There is no question about the position that we represented. We said: No matter how eminent the counsel may be, if he be nominated by the majority he will regard himself as acting for them, while if we nominate him, he will know that, and accept our directions and act on our behalf. I see it has been asserted that we did not name any counsel. I rather gathered from the hon. member for South Essex (Mr. Clarke) that he was under the impression that we did not name counsel. I named three counsel to the hon. member for Pictou and not one of them was satisfactory to him. I do not find fault with him for it, but I did name three, and I venture to say that the counsel I named were quite as eminent, quite as well known as the gentlemen they have appointed, and probably more broadly known throughout Canada. But just consider what the objection was. The minority were content to have certain gentlemen as counsel. The hon. member for Pictou did not think them eminent enough. Surely, if we, who were really anxious to succeed in this inquiry, were satisfied with the counsel, he need not have made much objection. We were the parties who wanted the work well done, we were the side that wanted the eminent counsel, and we were not likely to take a man who would not have done his work well. We knew the men perhaps as well as the hon. member for Pictou did. But nothing would satisfy him, and the hon. member will recollect that our endeavours to agree upon a counsel ended by his telling me that they had decided to stand by Mr. Wallace Nesbitt. That ended it, and there was no use in proceeding further on that subject. I do not propose to mention the names of the other gentlemen. They have not been appointed, and privately we agreed that we would not mention the names of any who were not appointed. There is not the same objection to mentioning the name of Mr. Wallace Nesbitt, because his name has been published in the press, and Mr. Chrysler has been appointed, so that the same secrecy is not called for with reference to these gentlemen. But the other gentlemen would have been quite satisfactory to us, and if we were satisfied with them, I don't see why the majority should have objected. As to Mr. Nesbitt, I wish to say, as the member for Simcoe said, that there was no question at all about his standing or his professional reputation or anything of that kind. He is a personal friend of mine. We made no question about his ability, but what we did say was that we would not have Mr. Nesbitt or any other man who was the nominee of the majority of that committee. We made that perfectly plain; there is no doubt at all about it; our objection was that we knew that neither Mr. Nesbitt or any other gentleman named by the majority could do the duty we required of him to probe that matter to the bottom. If the majority of the committee appointed him he would know for whom he was acting, and if we nominated him he would know he was acting for us. That is all we cared for, and we laid that principle down, and the majority refused to assent to it. The position we took was made perfectly clear, because I drew up a short memorandum in the nature of a report and submitted it to my friends in the minority, and it was read and appears on the minutes. It was to this effect:

Mr. Chairman,—Pursuant to what passed at the last meeting, Mr. Macdonald and I endeavoured to agree upon counsel to act in the prosecution of this investigation. We have failed to agree. I insisted that the members of this committee who represent the opposition should nominate that counsel, subject, of course, to the gentleman named being a proper person, acceptable in that regard to the committee.

We did not wish to bring in any man, regardless of his standing and we conceded that he must be a man of character and standing at the bar. Subject to it being approved in that respect, we claimed that the man who was going to pursue that inquiry to the end ought to act for us and be named by us.

Mr. Macdonald would not concede that we of the opposition should have such nomination. We have therefore failed to agree, and I may at once say that that question was the real difficulty. I am not now arguing the question but stating the facts, and to put my position clearly I move:—

That it is the right and duty of the members of this committee who represent the opposition to nominate a counsel who shall prosecute this investigation in the public interest.

The majority voted down that resolution, four to three.

Now, I have endeavoured to make quite clear what it is that we contended for—the commissioners were represented by counsel selected by themselves and paid by the country; Mr. Lumsden took the position that he was simply a witness, that he was ready to answer as a witness, but that he was not prosecuting and would not appoint counsel to make good his charges. It was not disputed that there ought to be counsel to prosecute the inquiry and establish the charges if they were true. The only question was who should nominate that counsel; should he be nominated by the opposition members, whose interests and whose wishes were to probe the matter to the very root, or, by the government majority on the committee, who, as we said, and as we believed, would desire and prefer that the charges should fail. There was the clear issue, and there could not be any question about that. There was no misunderstanding about it at all. We wanted a counsel to act for us who knew that he was acting for us and for nobody else; we wanted him to know that he was not acting for the government, because the government would be blameable if the charges were driven home; we wanted him to know that he was not acting for the commission, because they had their own counsel, and they would be to blame if the charges were driven home. We contended that in the public interest there should be counsel who would follow up every charge to the end and endeavour to make it good, if it were possible to make it good. But the majority of the committee scoffed at our want of faith in them; our want of faith in the absolute purity of their motives. One after the other of them read us homilies upon partisanship; they all professed there was nothing like partisanship on their side, and that they were above that sort of thing. I recollect that one member of the majority of that committee—I need not mention his name—was so horrified by the doubts cast by the member for Simcoe upon their perfect impartiality, that he exclaimed: My God, what do you want? and he added: I am an honest man.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Mr. BARKER. Well, they were all honourable men, of course, but they recognized us three of the minority as partisans, and they themselves: Oh, no, they were not partisans. But we frankly treated them as partisans. We wanted to drive that case home, and we said so, and we said we wanted counsel to help us in doing it. We represented that we did not want the other side to appoint their own counsel to prove them guilty. We knew they would not do it, and we did not propose to go through the humbugging operation of having a counsel to defeat the objects of the men whom he was supposed to be working for.

I want to say a few words more. I have already said that Mr. Nesbitt is a friend of mine, but that does not debar me from saying a few words as to the impropriety of any attempt to get him to act as counsel. I put that squarely. I will read a few letters from the Hodgin's inquiry. At page 420 of that inquiry there is this letter:

Toronto, November 27, 1907.

P. E. Ryan, Esq.,
Secretary of Board of Commissioners of Transcontinental Railway, Ottawa.

Sir,—We have obtained the opinion of Mr. Wallace Nesbitt, K.C., on the interpretation of clauses 34, 35 and 36 of the specifications, and will forward same to you by to-morrow's mail, and have the honour to remain,

Your obedient servants,
AYLESWORTH, WRIGHT,
MOSS & THOMPSON.

I may say that clauses 34 and 35 and 36 of the specifications referred to in this letter are the basis of all the trouble. There is another letter on page 421 which reads:

Toronto, November 28, 1907.

P. E. Ryan, Esq.,
Secretary of the Board of Commisioners of the Transcontinental Railway, Ottawa, Ont.

Sir,—Re contract for the construction of the Transcontinental railway (eastern division) and specifications attached thereto.

We have the honour to inclose you herewith the opinion of Mr. Wallace Nesbitt, K.C., as to the construction to be placed upon the language used in the above specifications in the classification of material. Kindly acknowledge.

We have the honour to remain, Sir,
Your obedient servants,
AYLESWORTH, WRIGHT,
MOSS & THOMPSON.

Then there is this letter from the secretary of the Transcontinental Railway Commission to the Minister of Railways:

Ottawa, December 2, 1907.

Sir,—I have the honour, by direction of the Board, to hand you, which I do herewith, a letter from Mr. Wallace Nesbitt, K.C., addressed to Messrs. Macdonald & O'Brien, and submitted on their behalf to the commissioners, containing Mr. Nesbitt's opinion as to the construction to be placed upon the language used in the specifications with respect to the classification of material; and I am to request that you will have this letter placed on the file which accompanied my letter to you of the 23rd ult. and considered therewith.

I have the honour to be, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
P. E. RYAN,
Secretary.

Then follows a very long letter from Mr. Nesbitt, K.C., to Macdonald & O'Brien, contractors on district B, discussing these questions of classification that the witnesses are to be examined upon; that Mr. Lumsden is being examined upon; that Mr. Smith, the counsel for the commission, is doing his best to break him down upon. All these are discussed by Mr. Nesbitt, and that letter of his was filed as evidence in the Hodgin's inquiry, and Mr. Nesbitt commits himself to opinions on this classification diametrically opposed to Mr. Hodgin's views and to those of Mr. Lumsden. Just picture Mr. Nesbitt acting in this inquiry and putting in Mr. Nesbitt's written letter as evidence to prove what the true construction and meaning of the specifications was. What position would we have occupied if we had agreed to accept Mr. Nesbitt to prosecute this investigation, and he had been asked by the unanimous committee to take the brief? Perhaps Mr. Nesbitt would have accepted the brief under such conditions, but when he heard that we objected to anybody named by the majority, he at once declined. And yet we were asked to accept him as the one man who above all others could do his duty in this matter. I know Mr. Nesbitt well, and we all have the highest respect for him, but I repeat that no man could do his duty in prosecuting this investigation who had given that opinion He was against Mr. Lumsden from the word go, and he could not do his duty from our point of view. He would have done his duty according to the opinion of the majority of the committee, I have no doubt. I do not like to say that they deliberately selected him knowing that, but it is most extraordinary that even in this Lumsden inquiry that very opinion has been put in evidence against Mr. Lumsden, as already published by this very majority.

Mr. MACDONALD. Does my hon. friend say that the question on which Mr. Nesbitt gave the opinion is the issue now before the committee?

Mr. BARKER. I say that the specifications as to rock, loose rock, and common excavation are dealt with in that opinion broadly and largely, and these are the very questions coming up.

Mr. MACDONALD. My hon. friend does not follow the question I was asking. I want to know whether he says that the matter referred to in that opinion is the issue before this committee.

Mr. BARKER. I say that after the Hodgins inquiry Mr. Lumsden consented to certain variations, but the man who gave that opinion could not have an unbiassed mind on the question between Mr. Lumsden, and the contractors.

Mr. MACDONALD. Why not?

Mr. BARKER. Well, I would rather not employ him if I had a case against the contractors.

Mr. MACDONALD. If my hon. friend is not prepared to say that the opinion of Mr. Nesbitt is on the question at issue before this committee, there is no reason why he should not have been employed.

Mr. BARKER. I assume that it is in issue, or they would not have put it in in evidence in this very case.

Mr. MACDONALD. It might have been evidence, and not in issue.

Mr. NORTHRUP. It could not have been evidence unless in issue.

Mr. BARKER. It bears on the case, and the man who gave that opinion would not have been in a position to act as a proper counsel against the government, or against the contractors.

I want to recall to the memory of this House a case that arose when hon. gentlemen were in the minority, and the Conservatives were in power, and I want to contrast the treatment that was accorded to them with the treatment that the government to-day are according to the opposition. The cases are very much alike. I refer to the celebrated McGreevy case of 1891. Allegations of misdoing had been made by a brother of Mr. McGreevy, involving not only him, and certain contractors, but also the Minister and Department of Public Works of that day. Sir John A. Macdonald was the leader of the government, and I think Sir John Thompson was Minister of Justice. The right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) was then in opposition, and Mr. Tarte, a member of the Liberal opposition, presented to the House a resolution demanding an inquiry before a special committee. It was suggested that it might go before the Committee on Privileges and Elections, which was assented to on all sides. I need hardly say that the majority on that committee were Conservatives, and the minority, including the right hon. gentleman, Mr. Tarte, and others, were Liberals in opposition. It appears that at the first meeting of the committee Mr. Tarte appeared with counsel, who was Mr. Geoffrion, K.C., a brother of the chairman of this Lumsden committee, a fact which might have recalled to him the history of the McGreevy case. No objection was made at all. There was no pretense on the part of the partisan Conservative majority that they should name the counsel to prosecute the inquiry—not a word on that subject. Mr. Geoffrion acted as counsel, and was paid by the government of the day. I do not suppose he was paid in advance; he was paid afterwards, I believe, $3,000. But the point I make is that while the right hon. gentleman, then in opposition, was willing to accept from the Conservative majority of that committee what he refuses to us, he claims that he is all right now, and I suppose he was all right then—he wants to take both sides. He was glad to accept from Sir John Macdonald the privilege of appointing counsel to investigate that case, but he refuses to give the minority in this case the privilege which he enjoyed in the McGreevy case. Why is it so? Counsel were appointed in that case for the Public Works Department, an analogous appointment to that of Mr. Smith for the commission. Those prosecuting the charges were allowed counsel named by themselves and the government paid him. Counsel were appointed for the contractors. The contractors paid their own counsel, but all others were paid by the government. It appears that there were a hundred meetings of that committee, and it is stated in the speech with which the report was made that in all those hundred metings there was only one division of the committee. And on that occasion, with a majority of Conservatives in the House, the motion was carried two to one, showing that the conservatives supported the opposition of that day in what they wanted. Not only that but it was said there, and uncontradicted, that the utmost freedom was given in the production of evidence. In one case in which a witness refused to hand a book over to the committee, the Liberal members wanted possession of the book, so as to examine every page of it. The witness said he would let them see everything relating to the case, but not the whole book. The matter was brought before the House, and Sir John Thompson himself, moved a resolution that the witness be compelled to hand the book over to the committee, and he was compelled to do so. Just look on the two pictures. There is what the Conservative government did. Contrast that with the refusal of this government to allow the minority to nominate counsel.

Mr. MACDONALD. Did the hon. gentleman ever make a charge as Mr. Tarte did?

Mr. BARKER. Mr. Tarte simply took up what was published. Mr. McGreevy's brother was charging him with certain wrong doing. Mr. Tarte brought the matter before the House, and a committee was granted at once.

Mr. MACDONALD. Did not Mr. Tarte come before the committee with his own counsel? The committee did not appoint his counsel.

Mr. BARKER. He acted for the minority all through and was paid $3,000 by the government.

Mr. MACDONALD. Did Mr. Tarte not come to the committee with his own counsel and ask the committee to allow his counsel to appear for him?

Mr. BARKER. He simply came there with his counsel. The next day he explained to the committee that his counsel was absent owing to illness in his family.

Mr. GERMAN. Did not Mr. Tarte make the charges on his responsibility as a member of this House? And if he had not succeeded in establishing them, would he not have had to resign his position?

Mr. BARKER. There is no such law as that. What difference did it make here? If the right hon. the leader of the government had not moved the resolution he did would not the leader of the oposition have moved it. Do you suppose that the resignation of Mr. Lumsden would have been allowed to go without inquiry? If the right hon. gentleman had not moved for a committee, a committee would have been moved for from this side of the House. What difference would it make?

Mr. MACDONALD. If my hon. friend will look at the report of the proceedings of the committee referred to, he will see that the chairman, Mr. Girouard, having asked whether any of the parties desired to be heard by counsel, Mr. Tarte handed him the name of Mr. C. A. Geoffrion. It was Mr. Tarte who appointed his own counsel, and not the committee at all.

Mr. BARKER. We can easily get counsel if you will allow him to act, but you will have no counsel. The government of that day paid Mr. Tarte's counsel. Mr. Tarte was only one member of that committee and his request was granted. But three-fourths of the committee in the present case have asked for counsel and their request is refused?

Mr. MACDONALD. Did not Mr. Tarte have his counsel appointed because he made the charge?

Mr. BARKER. Mr. Tarte went there with his counsel, and the chairman of the committee asked him if he wanted to appear by counsel, and Mr. Tarte said he did. Why could not that be done here? On the Lumsden Committee, there were three members of that committee who wanted to appoint counsel, and their request was refused.

Mr. MACDONALD. If my hon. friend had made any charges himself, no doubt, he would have got his counsel, but he did not make any charges, and Mr. Lumsden said he did not want any counsel.

Mr. BARKER. Suppose I had moved that resolution, would it have made any difference whether it was moved by me instead of the Prime Minister?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. In the case alluded to, Mr. Tarte made an accusation which put in peril the seat of two members of the House, Mr. McGreevy and Mr. Langevin.

Mr. SPROULE. How would it imperil Mr. Tarte's seat?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. If the charges were proved, he would be unworthy of a seat in this House.

Mr. NORTHRUP. There is no such law in England or Canada.

Mr. BARKER. The right hon. gentleman will not contend that it is absolute law that a man who fails to prove his charge will lose his seat.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I do not say it is statutory law but it has been the law of parliament.

Mr. BARKER. Never.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Was not Mr. Sadler expelled from parliament on a charge against him?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) said that Mr. Tarte would have lost his seat if he had not been able to make his charges good.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes, and I say it on the authority of Sir John Macdonald. When in the Pacific scandal Mr. Huntingdon made a charge against Sir John Macdonald, Sir John said that Mr. Huntingdon would be driven out of the House if, having made such charges as he did, he failed to prove them. No doubt if the charges were not true, Mr. Huntingdon would have been unworthy of a seat in this House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Sir John Thompson at the time certain charges were made by Mr. Edgar, reviewed the whole question and declared that, having carefully examined the cases, there was absolutely no such rule in parliament.

Mr. NORTHRUP. You will find on inquiry that the law is this. There is no penalty against any member making a charge against a fellow member involving the loss of his seat as the consequence of a failure to prove the charge; but if the charges are of such a character that, not being proved, the House considered that the member who made them is not a fit and proper person to sit among gentlemen, the House will expel him.

Mr. BARKER. In that case the man would be guilty of conduct not becoming a gentleman. But that is not the point here. In the Tarte case, Mr. Tarte took up matters of public rumour and put them into the form of a resolution, and a committee was granted without discussion. He went before the committee and brought counsel with him, without permission of the committee or anybody else.

Mr. GERMAN. He was not a member of the Committee on Privileges and Elections at that time.

Mr. BARKER. I think he was. I do not think that that committee is confined even now to members of the legal profession. At all events, I have seen his name in that committee.

Mr. GERMAN. He was at their meeting.

Mr. BARKER. He was in the list of members of the committee. There are members on that committee now who are not lawyers. It has been the general understanding that on that committee lawyers should be appointed, but there are members on it who are not lawyers. It may be that his name was put down by mistake, but it was there. I know the right hon. gentleman was there—

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No; I was a member of the committee, but I did not attend on that occasion; I took no part at all.

Mr. BARKER. The hon. member's name was down as being present. However, there was the position—it seems perfectly clear that the right hon. gentleman was glad to accept the privilege granted Mr. Tarte of appearing by counsel to prosecute the inquiry, but that he refused to allow the minority in this case, when they asked for it, the same privilege. I do not understand how that can be justified except on the ground of brute majority. There is no other reason for it.

Mr. SPEAKER. I do not like that expression 'brute majority.' Perhaps the hon. member might use some other.

Mr. BARKER. I do not use it in a personal sense. But, in any case, I do not wish to insist upon it. What I insist upon is that in a matter of this importance, involving so much to this country, it is an outrage upon public rights for the government to refuse the appointment of counsel to represent the prosecution in this case, and that the investigation should be going on in the way it is without any counsel there to drive home the charges against the commission or the government.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. VICTOR GEOFFRION (Chambly and Verchères). When my hon. friend from Hamilton (Mr. Barker) was speaking, I was surprised to hear a gentleman of his eminence at the bar quoting a part of the evidence, and discussing it when the whole of that evidence is not yet adduced before the committee, just as if he were taking evidence before a lower court, and reporting it to a higher tribunal before all the evidence was taken. Now the question may be fairly reduced to this, whether my hon. friends opposite were logical, and rational in withdrawing from the committee on the sole ground that they had not the exclusive choice of counsel. That question of choosing a counsel was first submitted, I think they will admit, and pressed by themselves. Although I agreed with them that perhaps it would be better to have counsel, I had my doubts whether the committee, composed as it was of eminent lawyers, at least six members on the committee were eminent lawyers, could not themselves take charge of the investigation. In other committees, for instance in the Public Accounts Committee, the custom is for some one of the members to take charge of a particular case, and conduct it himself. I did not see why the members of this committee could not conduct the investigation themselves. However, it was thought proper for the speedy conduct of the proceedings to appoint a counsel. Then the question arose whether the counsel should be appointed by the whole committee or by the three members composing the minority. We submitted to them that it was only fair that the whole committee, representing as it did the whole people, should appoint the counsel. They would not admit that proposition, they contended that they alone should have the exclusive right to appoint a counsel. We had before us the precedent of the Hodgins investigation. The gentleman who made the charge in that case came before the committee accompanied with his counsel. In this case the circumstances were very much the same. The charges were made, not by members of the opposition, but by Mr. Lumsden himself against some of his subordinate engineers. It was certainly the right, a right always acknowledged by other such committees, that the parties interested might appear before the committee accompanied by their own counsel. We all expected that Mr. Lumsden would come before that committee with counsel, we also expected that the commission would come accompanied by counsel; it was fair also that the engineers against whom charges had been made, should be represented by counsel. Then the question arose whether the committee itself should be represented by counsel, and we thought that the minority members of the committee were not fair in asking that they alone should be entrusted with the choice of counsel. Hon. gentlemen who have read the report will see that the matter was left to two members of the committee, Mr. Macdonald, and Mr. Barker, to decide who should be appointed. In all the discussions that arose between the members of the committee, the majority contended that they had just as much right to submit names as the minority. Of course we did not wish to appoint a gentleman who was in active politics, we admitted that it would not be fair to the minority to take a man who was engaged in party strife; but we thought it would be fair to take a man of high reputation at the bar, a man who had the confidence of the whole country, and who was not known to be a politician. We went further, and we offered to submit to them a gentleman who belonged to their own party; but still they insisted that they alone should have the right to appoint a counsel. That was their contention, and they would not depart from it. We could not agree with them, and I am ready to submit our view of the matter to the judgment of the House, and to the judgment of the people at large.

Now, reference has several times been made in this discussion to the McGreevy affair as a precedent. At that time I happened to be a partner with my brother, Mr. C. A. Geoffrion, who was appointed counsel by Mr. Tarte. Mr. Tarte made the charge himself, he chose his own counsel. He came to the office when I was present, and engaged my brother, and agreed to pay him himself. Mr. Geoffrion accordingly came before the committee, and took charge of the whole matter for Mr. Tarte, for the man who had made the charges. After proceedings had been going on before the committee for a little time, parliament thought proper to pay themselves the counsel that had been named by Mr. Tarte. Now we did exactly the same thing in the Hodgins case. Mr. Hodgins, who had made the charges, came before the committee accompanied by his counsel. The committee admitted that he had the right to be represented by counsel, and we recommended to the House that the House should pay his counsel. We did just what was done by the House in the McGreevy case, when it paid Mr. Tarte's counsel. And if Mr. Lumsden had chosen to come before the committee with his own counsel, doubtless the House would have consented to pay his counsel, as it did in the cases of Mr. Tarte and Major Hodgins.

Now, Sir, I do not think that the minority members of the committee were really acting fairly when they contended that they were not well treated. They admitted themeslves that they were prejudiced in the matter, they cannot deny it, it is in the report. They say that both parties are prejudiced. We would not admit that, we no more desired to see Mr. Lumsden fail in his charges than we desired to see the engineers fail in their defence, the men who were employees of the commission and consequently employees of the government. Why should we? We took the ground that all members of the committee were disposed to probe the matter to the bottom. If the engineers had done anything wrong we wanted to discover it, in order that we might advise the committee, and advise the House. On the other hand, if Mr. Lumsden fails in proving his charges so much the worse for him. No doubt hon. gentlemen opposite are desirous of finding that the charges made by Mr. Lumsden against the engineers are true.

I have been chairman of the committee, and I think that hon. gentlemen will admit that I have treated everybody as fairly as I could. I have done my very best to help everybody. The committee recommended that Mr. Chrysler put himself in communication with Mr. Lumsden. We advised Mr. Lumsden to tell him everything he could and to come and report to the committee if anything was wrong, assuring him that anything that was wrong would be remedied. As far as Mr. Chrysler is concerned, I had dealings with him as a lawyer before I came to this House, and I had dealings as against him in certain cases. I always found him a very eminent lawyer, a man jealous of his reputation, and I cannot conceive of Mr. Chrysler not doing everything to probe this matter to the bottom in face of the instructions given to him that he must do his very best in that direction. Mr. Lumsden is there to give him all the assistance possible. The commission is open to Mr. Chrysler and Mr. Lumsden, they can go to the books and find out anything they desire to know and produce the evidence before the committee. I do not see why my hon. friends opposite are opposed to the appointment of Mr. Chrysler. The hon. member for South Simcoe went so far as to insinuate that Mr. Chrysler's standing in the profession was not of the highest. I think that all parties before the committee are well represented. Mr. Smith stands at the top of his profession in the province of Quebec. Mr. Moss is an eminent lawyer, and I think Mr. Chrysler is in the first rank of his profession. But, if my hon. friends opposite desired at heart to investigate this matter properly, why did they not themselves undertake to do it? They are three eminent lawyers well able to conduct the investigation themselves. Any one of them could have taken charge of the investigation. In fact, we do not need any lawyer. Any one of them could have taken charge of the investigation with the help of the other members of the committee, and it would have gone just as well perhaps as with a lawyer. But, they would not do that, and if they are not satisfied with Mr. Chrysler, why do they not come back to the committee and help to put the questions if they think that the questions are not being properly put? If they can think of anything else, they are welcome to come before the committee and ask questions, as they have a right to do. I do not think we need to extend this discussion. As I said in the beginning, this is not the place or the time to discuss the question of the cost of the Transcontinental railway, and it is not the time to discuss the evidence. I do not think the House has the right to discuss the evidence, because it is not before them. I do not think it is fair or rational that any member of this House should take the evidence and discuss it when it is not all before the committee yet, and when members of the engineering staff have not been examined. My hon. friend from South Simcoe this afternoon took some parts of the evidence, commented upon them, and left other parts, which, in some instances, contradict those parts which he was commenting upon. I submit that the committee is acting fairly, that it is trying to do its best, and that the House and the people may have every confidence that it will do its duty.

Mr. GEOFFRION.

Mr. T. W. CROTHERS (West Elgin). There is scarcely a question dealt with by this House, or by any of its committees, which is not approached and determined from a party standpoint, and the one before us now is assuredly not one of the exceptions. Conduct and transactions are approved of in this House, which, disassociated from party politics, would receive the prompt condemnation of every right-thinking man. The report under consideration, for the first time, raises the question why the minority on the Lumsden committee refused longer to participate in the investigation, and for the first time gives them an opportunity of answering that question, which, like all other questions, has two sides.

Those who approve the action of the majority on the Lumsden Investigation Committee, try to justify it in this way. They say that Mr. Lumsden, in June last, when resigning his position as chief engineer of the National Transcontinental railway, gave as his reason for so doing, that he had lost confidence in some of the engineers for improper classification and measurements of construction work in sections 'B' and 'F'; that, recently, at the instance of the government, the House authorized them to appoint a select committee of seven to investigate the charge thus made, which was accordingly done, four supporters of the government and three members of the opposition being chosen; that the government and its supporters have no desire or interest to serve other than to ascertain whether the charge be well founded; that on behalf of the people they seek the truth merely; that no charge against the government is made, and therefore it is not a party matter at all; that the whole people of Canada being interested counsel chosen to conduct the investigation should have a national reputation for ability and probity, and should be selected by a majority of the committee, namely, by the four government supporters on it; that they having chosen such a man, the minority on the committee should be satisfied, and that it was unreasonable and unprecedented that they should insist on being permitted to name counsel.

That, I think, is a fair statement of the attitude taken by the majority on the committee, and supported by their political friends—plausible, but, as it seems to me fallacious as well.

Let us, for a moment, examine the other view of the situation as taken by the minority. The government undertook to construct the National Transcontinental railway, to construct that part of it between Winnipeg and Moncton directly as a government work. The government, therefore, is responsible to the people of Canada for the manner in which that great work is being done, more especially that part of it. When taking power to build that part of the road, they told the people that they had all the requisite information to enable them to say that it could be built for $51,-300,000. The work of construction has now proceeded sufficiently far to enable them to admit that it will probably cost at least three times the sum so named. That admission naturally suggests either that they had not comprehensive and reliable information when those figures were given, or that they are paying for the work enormously more than it is fairly worth. And the reason given by Mr. Lumsden for his resignation points to the latter.

As already stated, the government is strictly and fully responsible to parliament and to the people, in every particular, for the manner in which the great project is being prosecuted, for the conduct of every one engaged in the prosecution thereof, whether it be that of the chief engineer, of the Transcontinental Railway Commissioners, or of the resident and district engineers.

It therefore follows that the investigation directed by this House, and limited as it is to sections 'B' and 'F' of the road—although the opposition contended it should cover the whole project—places the government on trial respecting the manner in which the construction so limited has thus far proceeded. Full comprehension of the above would go far to illuminate the conduct of the majority of the committee as hereinafter set forth. Further, on the 25th of June last the Transcontinental Railway Commissioners sent a letter to Mr. Lumsden, and to each of the other two arbitrators appointed to determine questions of classification, &c., which was in part as follows:

The commissioners object to and protest against proceedings of the arbitrators as being improper and illegal for the following reasons, viz.:—

(a) That they were based in whole or in part on the said draft agreement of May 14, 1909, which had been rejected and which had no existence in fact;

(b) That the examination of the work was of a hasty, insufficient and superficial character;

(c) That the engineers on the line who classified the work were not afforded a sufficient hearing and an opportunity of presenting evidence;

(d) That the contractors were not afforded an opportunity of showing cause, and further to say that the commissioners insist in the public interest that the proceedings of the arbitration tribunal shall be exhaustive, final and conclusive; shall cover all the objections filed by the Grand Trunk Railway Company, and that the report of the arbitrators when made shall be supported by substantial evidence, including details of quantities, etc.

That letter clearly shows the feelings entertained by the commissioners towards Mr. Lumsden. Of that grossly improper letter, written obviously in sympathy with the subordinate engineers and contractors, and apparently to intimidate the arbitrators in the impartial discharge of their duties, the government expressed no disapproval, although it loudly called for sharp repri mand if not for immediate dismissal. The non-action of the government on that letter, and its prompt acceptance of Mr. Lumsden's resignation, show that the government determined to stand by the commissioners, their appointees, and the contractors as against Mr. Lumsden, and the people. One may pause to ask why, and receive some ugly answers to the query. The government being on trial as aforesaid, and in the light of the circumstances I have mentioned it is clear what it desires the outcome of this investigation to be, and it has taken good care to place on the committee a majority of its own supporters upon whom it can rely to guide the inquiry to a satisfactory conclusion. The railway commissioners appeared before the committee with counsel who had evidently been instructed that the carriage of the proceedings was to be in his hands, for he said:

Allow me to say one word. Of course I do not propose to apoligize for my presence here at all, but I did imagine that I represented the public interest. But if in the course of the investigation I can help the committee in a humble way in getting at the facts my instructions are to make the inquiry within the scope of the reference as full as possible, in order to fix the responsibility, if any exists.

But upon its being pointed out that his clients were clearly in the position of defendents, and that it would be too absurd and transparent to entrust the prosecution to the defendents counsel, the committee upon the urgency of the minority thereof determined that other counsel should be engaged to take the carriage of the investigation. Now, it is perfectly clear Mr. Speaker, that the idea of the other members of the committee was that Mr. Smith who appeared before the committee as representing the commissioners, should have the carriage of the investigation, and that there should be no other counsel, and no counsel at all on behalf of the people. At page 11 of the evidence you will find that the hon. member for Pictou stated distinctly that the commissioners were not on trial.

Mr. MACDONALD. The commissioners are not on trial here and there is no use of your saying so.

And further he said——

Mr. MACDONALD. Would my hon. friend quote what Mr. Lennox said right there?

Mr. CROTHERS. I have given you the page, and the words you used.

Mr. MACDONALD. What did Mr. Lennox say?

Mr. CROTHERS. I am going to give more of what you said. You can give us what Mr. Lennox said. But I have no objection to giving what Mr. Lennox said. He said:

Mr. LENNOX. The commission is responsible for the class of engineers that they employ, to employ competent and honest engineers. The commission may be able to show that they are absolutely blameless in this matter.

That is what Mr. Lennox said, and I may say here that the chief engineer was appointed by the government, and not by the commission, under section 10 of the Transcontinental Railway Act, and under section 11 the subordinate engineers, and all other servants, and workmen are employed by the commissioners. Mr. Macdonald said in reply to Mr. Lennox:

The commissioners are not on trial here and there is no use in your saying so.

Mr. LENNOX. It will be just as well for us to give each member of the committee the liberty to express his ideas in his own way. Mr. Macdonald usually claims that privilege for himself, and I will take the same liberty.

Mr. MACDONALD. That is so, and I hope I am not interferring with the expression of your views in that way, but when you say the Transcontinental Commission is on trial here I say they are not.

Well, the Transcontinental Commissioners were there with their able counsel. They were either there as defendants or as prosecutors. Mr. Macdonald repeated that they were not there as defendants, and it therefore follows that they were there as prosecutors. And, the proposition was by the four government supporters on the committee, and by the Transcontinental Commissioners, that their counsel was to have the carriage of the proceeding, acting as prosecuting counsel as well as counsel for the defence. That is borne out by some statements made by the chairman of the committee. At page 12 there is a little conversation with the chairman which shows the view that he entertained at this stage. I quote from the evidence:

Mr. CROTHERS. Yes, and the other side I think will desire to show that they are well founded. A lawyer will know well enough, Mr. Macdonald and Mr. Wilson will know, that no lawyer can represent two sides of a question and represent it properly. We all know that the truth can best be brought out if there is an examination, an examiner-in-chief, and a cross-examiner. That is the principle of all investigations. I have had something to do with investigations myself, and I always encourage the appointment of counsel by any one who wished to have a representative, in order to bring out the truth. We cannot help it, there are two sides upon any point, those on the one side striving in one direction and those on the other side striving in the other direction. No one lawyer can bring it all out, we understand that, and it is necessary in the interests of the public that we should have counsel on each side.

The CHAIRMAN. I think this is a very peculiar position. There are two sides as Mr. Crothers says; I understand that one side is Mr. Lumsden making a charge against other parties, and the other side is the other parties who are accused by Mr. Lumsden. We ask Mr. Lumsden if he wants any counsel and he says: ' No, I do not want any counsel.' Now, who is the other party? The other side is the parties who are accused by Mr. Lumsden of having disobeyed his orders. Now, if they are here and want to be represented by counsel, I, for one, see no reason why their request should not be complied with. In that case we would undoubtedly have both sides represented. On the one hand is Mr. Lumsden making the charge and on the other hand the parties who are accused if they both want to be represented by counsel I should be delighted for them to have as many counsel as they choose. That is the way I understand it, but of course I am in the hands of the committee about that.

I do not know how we can now go on and assign counsel to anybody who is not in the case. I do not think that the government, the commission or anybody else are parties to the case, except Mr. Lumsden on the one hand and the engineers accused by him on the other. That is the way I understand the case stands.

So that the chairman of this committee and the other three supporters of the govment on the committee regarded the two parties in the case as Mr. Lumsden on the one hand and the subordinate engineers on the other hand, while the people of Canada had no interest whatever. On the same page Mr. Smith is reported to have said:

Allow me to say one word. Of course, I do not propose to apologize for my presence here at all, but I did imagine that I represented the public interest. No charge has been preferred against the commission, but the commission desires as full inquiry as possible in order to fix the responsibility if these charges are well founded, and to fix the responsibility for these unfortunate things that exist; and while I should be delighted that counsel should represent any other interests, or should represent Mr. Lumsden's interests, to which I am not objecting in the least, I must say that I have not conceived it my duty to come here to defend the commission against any charges, because I am not aware that any charges have been preferred against them. But if in the course of the investigation I can help the committee in a humble way in getting at the facts, my instructions are to make the inquiry, within the scope of the reference, as full as possible in order to fix the responsibility if any exists.

Mr. Barker said:

As I understand Mr. Smith, he considers himself appointed by the commission to represent the interests of the public; I, for one, as a member of the committee, think that would be narrowing very much this inquiry.

Then we have Mr. Wilson's view:

I understand that Mr. Lumsden has made some charges, or some reflections against some engineers, and I, for one, will be delighted if Mr. Lumsden is represented by counsel, and that the party or parties against whom he has laid complaints be also represented, but when you talk about counsel to represent 'the public,' that seems to me a very vague word.

So that the idea of the chairman of the committee and the other three supporters of the government on it was that Mr. Smith, who was there representing the commissioners, who were clearly in the position of defendants, having appointed the engineers against whom the charges were made was a proper person to undertake the carriage of the proceedings, which I think will strike any fair-minded man, any lawyer or any layman, as being a most extraordinary position for any one to take, much less for gentlemen who are members of the honourable profession to which I have the honour of belonging. Up until the third meeting of the committee our friends insisted that Mr. Lumsden should be sworn and proceed to give testimony without any other counsel being appointed. We insisted that the proper time to appoint counsel on behalf of the public was at the very beginning of the inquiry, before Mr. Lumsden or any other witness was called to give testimony. When it was announced that Mr. Lumsden was not to have counsel for himself we made a motion to adjourn in order that we might consider the question of naming counsel for the other side; but that resolution of ours was voted down, and the majority of the committee insisted that Mr. Lumsden, the chief witness for the prosecution, should proceed to give his testimony without any lawyer to represent the public, and that was carried. Afterwards the hon. member for Pictou admitted that counsel ought to be appointed to represent the other side, and at page 75 made quite lengthy remarks in reference to that. He said:

Mr. Lumsden says, 'I am not going to be a prosecutor in this matter at all; I am not going to bring counsel; I don't want counsel; I am here only as a witness.' He disclaims any responsibility of any character whatever; consequently the committee would be left in this position, with the assistance of Mr. Smith, representing the commission. But I am not sure, on account of his high standing at the bar, and his position generally, we would all recognize that he would take a very high stand in regard to the matter, and would assist the committee in the fullest possible way. At the same time, personally, I feel that the committee would be relieved of very much labour, and the thing would be very much more satisfactory, if we had somebody here who would assume the role of presenting the facts from the other side.

That was a very proper observation, as I said on the next page:

I am perfectly prepared to agree with everything Mr. Macdonald has said. I think he has covered the ground well.

Then the question arose as to who should name counsel for the other side. The minority of the committee submitted that as there were two sides to the inquiry, as the government was on trial and therefore naturally desired but one ending to it, as the majority on the committee being supporters of the government would naturally desire that it should be exonerated, and, as the characteristic virtue of hon. counsel is to strive to give effect to the desire of his retainers, counsel chosen by the majority of the committee would be satisfactory neither to the minority nor to the public. On the other hand, were counsel named by the minority, it would be his duty to uphold their contention, and that of the opposition, while counsel appointed by the commissioners would uphold their contention, that of the majority and that of the government as well; so that no interest could suffer, and both sides of the controversy would be fully presented. Now I submit to this House that that was a very reasonable and proper proposition. Lawyers know full well that the characteristic virtue of a good lawyer is to strive to carry out the desire of the man who retains him; that is inbred in the very nature of a lawyer; it is involved in the oath he takes before he begins to practice, and he cannot shake himself clear of that influence if he would, and we would not if we could. So that the proper way to get counsel in a case of this kind is for the party who is interested in reaching one conclusion to select one counsel, and the party who is interested in reaching the other conclusion to select the other counsel. The counsel selected by those who desire to reach the one conclusion will strive to give effect to the desire of those who retain him, and the counsel appointed by the other side, as in this case the counsel appointed by the commissioners, will strive to give effect to the desire of those who retain him. It is well known to every lawyer in this House, from the right hon. the Prime Minister down to the humblest member, that that is the best way to get at the truth and to reach satisfactory results.

The majority of the committee having refused to adopt those well recognized principles and to allow the minority to name one of the counsel, I refused and still refuse to serve on a tribunal to hear evidence and argument adduced by counsel chosen by one side only.

The minority named counsel to whom no reasonable objection could be taken, but the majority would not accept one of them, merely because they desired that the counsel chosen should understand that his appointment came from them, and be influenced accordingly.

It is said that the counsel chosen by the majority is able and honourable. We gladly admit that, but we deny that he is divine. Yes, he is both honourable and human, like the rest of us, and being so, he would, unconsciously, perhaps, desire to serve those who appointed him to an honourable and lucrative position. And I make that statement after an experience of many years, during which I have been associated with many of the most eminent counsel this country has ever produced, several of whom now adorn the bench of our highest courts. More than once in this country we have had eminent judges even, in special political inquiries outside of court proceedings, exercise an unconscious desire to please their political retainers.

There are many able and honourable lawyers on both sides of this House, and there is not one of them from the Prime Minister down, but knows that what I have said is absolutely true, but knows that it is absolutely unfair and contrary to public interests that counsel for both sides of this or any other question should be chosen by those on one side only interested in the result, as is being done here. There is not one who does not know that to have this investigation carried on by counsel so appointed is grossly indecent, and that the results thereof will not command the respect or confidence of the people of this country, who are fully seized of the situation.

Similar methods found great favour with the late Liberal government of Ontario shortly before its ignominious dissolution when, desirous of deceiving the people and of extricating itself from compromising positions—my hon. friend from West Peterboro (Mr. Stratton) will recognize the facts—their modus operandi was to appoint a shrewdly selected commission of inquiry, to retain counsel of their own political persuasion to conduct it, and to refuse counsel on the other side. The results were often amusing, as well as absurd. Such an investigation in the West Elgin case produced a finding that admissions made over the signature of a Liberal member of the legislature and that of his counsel, the present Minister of Justice, were ill-founded. Another, conducted in camera, discovered that certain publishers were losing money at the prices being paid them for school books, while the facts, subsequently revealed, demonstrated that one-half those prices would yield a fair profit, and at the latter prices the books are now being supplied.

In the light of experience, I must emphatically refuse to allow myself to be humbugged by any such transparent scheme or to be a party to any such farcical proceedings. I might add that the gentleman chosen by the four government supporters on the committee is an active politician of the Liberal type, has been a candidate for a seat in this House, and who is now conducting this investigation, figures largely in the Auditor General's report every year, and has received an average of over $3,700 per year for seven years under the present administration. In 1903-4, he received $7,800, last year he received $3,940.74, and no doubt is living in joyful anticipation of better things to come. With this gentleman conducting the prosecution against the government, with able counsel acting for the defendants, the Transcontinental Commissioners, with other able counsel representing the subordinate engineers, without any counsel appearing for the chief engineer, Mr. Lumsden, and with four impartial and righteous judges on the bench, chosen from among the political partisans of the government, who dare question the conclusion that will be reached?

Now I understand that not only are the four gentlemen who represent the government on this committee responsible for this condition of things, but that they have consulted the right hon. the Prime Minister from time to time with reference to the appointment of this counsel, and that the course they have pursued has met with his approval. There are two sides to this question. The government is responsible for the construction of this railway. It is responsible for the conduct of the chief engineer. It is also responsible for the administration by the Railway Commissioners and for the actions of every subordinate engineer who has had anything to do with that road. So that the government is vitally interested in making it appear, as the result of this investigation, that the subordinate engineers were both competent and honest. That is one side. I quite admit, as the chairman of that committee (Mr. Geoffrion) said a few moments ago, that the opposition, in this as in every case, desire to show that some blame attaches to the government. That is always the desire of the opposition. Hon. gentlemen opposite were in opposition at one time, and although that was a long time ago, it is not long enough to allow them to forget their eagerness to establish a strong case against the government then in office. It is likewise a legitimate desire on our part to show that the people are being defrauded out of large sums of money in the construction of this railway, and to bring out in the inquiry before this committee, limited though it be in its scope, limited to a very small portion of the whole road, some facts which would show how the country is being defrauded. On the other hand, the desire of hon. gentlemen opposite is naturally to prove if possible that everything is going on honestly and properly, and consequently they would not be likely to appoint counsel who would act vigorously in attempting to bring out the facts and prove the government guilty. Will the people be satisfied with an inquiry conducted by two counsel, both of whom were appointed by those who are particularly interested in showing there was no wrongdoing? The minority asked simply for what was reasonable. They asked simply for what was granted in the case of the McGreevy investigation. We have had some quibbling by hon. gentlemen opposite this afternoon regarding that investigation, but in substance there is no difference between the two cases. The opposition of that day were in that case making charges against the government then in office. The man who made the charges asked for the privilege of naming his own counsel. He was most interested in showing that the government were guilty of wrongdoing, and the government of that day, headed by the late Sir John Thompson, very properly acceded to his request. Mr. Tarte, who made the charges and who really represented the whole opposition, was allowed to name his own counsel, and the gentleman he retained was paid by the government. In the present instance, there is a charge made, and the House cannot get away from that. The people so understand the position. The government is responsible for the conduct of every one engaged in the construction of this great railway. The government is on trial; there is no use saying that the government is not on trial. The government desires to be exonerated and the four supporters of the government on that committee desire that the government should be exonerated. I have no objection at all to that desire; it is a very natural desire and a very legitimate desire. But, when they tell us that it is not a party matter and that they have no party feeling in it—well, they may tell that to the marines. If there is no party feeling about the matter, why did the Prime Minister not name four Conservatives instead of four Liberals on that committee? Why were four supporters of the government appointed, two of whom at least have had a great deal of experience in matters of this kind? If it is not a party matter why did the Prime Minister appoint men whom he thought would guide the inquiry to a satisfactory conclusion for the government? I do not purpose for one, Mr. Speaker, to be a party to any such farce. I have been interested in several similar investigations in the province of Ontario, and there I knew of eminent counsel; counsel just as eminent as those who are engaged in this investigation—and I know what I am speaking of—deliberately concealing documentary evidence that would be strong against the government. So that I submit, Mr. Speaker, to this House, that we were asking nothing but what was fair and reasonable, and the Conservative minority upon that committee, having been refused what was fair and reasonable, I declined to be a party to any proceeding of that kind and I am very glad that I did decline, and I would do so again under similar circumstances.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD (Pictou). Mr. Speaker, I am sure that most hon. members who have followed this discussion have wondered why it was that my hon. friend from Simcoe precipitated a debate on this matter, and why we have lost this afternoon and this evening so far in discussing the subject he has presented to the House. Did I say subject which he has presented to the House? Perhaps I should not have used that expression, because so far as I have heard his charges, and those of his friends who have followed him, I am yet at a loss to know what subject he did present to the House. My hon. friend well knows that the proper time to discuss the facts which relate to this matter is when the committee appointed by this House makes its report after all the facts have been elicited, after all the evidence has been obtained, and when the House would be in a position intelligently, and fairly to consider the whole matter. But, the hon. gentleman did not choose to wait until then; he thought it would be a good thing for him from a political point of view to have a debate on a presentation of one side of the story. My hon. friend, and his associates have talked a good deal about this matter to-day, but they have not ventured to come in the proper parliamentary way and ask the indulgence of the House for their non-attendance on that committee. The reason is that these hon. gentlemen know they have no grounds upon which they can ask the House to excuse them for not performing their duties as members of that committee. Let me consider for a moment what the position of members of a parliamentary committee are. My hon. friend the leader of the opposition has always manifested some regard for the maintenance of parliamentary rules, and I think that in this case he should have seen to it that his followers should pay some respect to these usages which have always obtained in this, and in the English parliament. Hon. gentlemen opposite are always ready to cite precedents from the mother country, but when it comes to their carrying out in a proper spirit the usages prevalent in the mother of parliaments, they are not very careful about their performance. When the right hon. the Prime Minister moved to appoint this committee they knew just as well as they do to-day everything which they have presented to the House now; they knew the committee was to be composed of a majority of members supporting the government; they knew that under the usual rules of parliamentary government a majority of that committee would be in sympathy with the government of the day, and, why did they not take the position then that they would not serve on that committee. I might suggest that there are reasons why these gentlemen have declined to serve on the committee, and these reasons may become apparent before the close of this parliament. In the meantime the reasons which they are attempting to present are not valid reasons, and do not constitute any logical argument why they should be excused from attending the committee. They went to that committee with a mandate from this House to perform a duty which the people elected them to discharge, and when they refused to perform that duty in the committee without the consent of parliament, they just as much failed in their duty to their constituents as if they had absolutely refused to sit and vote in this House. If my hon. friends want to make campaign material on a one-sided story in regard to this matter, they will no doubt be able to do so by the course they have taken. But so far as I am concerned, the House having assigned to me certain duties to perform in that committee, and having delegated to me the maintenance of the rights of the people, and of this parliament, I feel it my duty to accept the responsibility delegated to me and to proceed with the investigation and to report on the facts as I find them.

And to ask me or any other gentleman constituting that committee to come in now and discuss in this parliament the merits of this case is a proposition to which I will not assent; and so far as I am concerned my hon. friends will be able to present to the House and to the country, for the moment, a one-sided story. Then, Sir, if this debate was to have any purpose whatever, it was evident that these gentlemen have not the pluck to risk the judgment of the House upon this matter, and they are attempting by quibbling to discover a way of retreat, and to try to show their friends outside that they are making a brave fight, instead of abandoning their functions and neglecting their duties. Let us examine their reasons. I ventured to say in a previous debate on this matter, that my hon. friends would search in vain the records of this parliament or the records of the imperial parliament to find any precedent for the proposition that the minority of a committee were the body to dictate as to the appointment of counsel or to do anything else. If my hon. friend's position is correct that the minority of the committee should rule in regard to the appointment of counsel why should they not rule upon all other questions? As the committee is but a small parliament in embryo, a delegated portion of this parliament, why should not my hon. friends in this House control and direct every matter of national policy? Why did they not go down to Washington and deal with President Taft? If the minority in the House has the same right as they claim for the minority on the committee, they would have just as much right to send representatives to Washington and to dictate the policy of this country in regard to the United States, as they would have to dictate the proceedings of this committee. Indeed, to hear my hon. friends talk, one would think they are still sleeping the sleep of Rip Van Winkle, and they are still under the impression that their party, which was defeated fourteen years ago, are still in power, and are still running the country. The government of this country and the members who support this government came here in 1908 with a mandate from the people to govern this country in parliament and in committee. We are responsible to the people to-day, and we will be responsible to them so long as this government has the support of the majority of the members of this House, and we could not rid ourselves of responsibility in regard to the appointment of counsel or of anything else by delegating that authority to my hon. friends opposite.

Now, Sir, is there any precedent for my hon. friends position? I say there is not. I have listened to these hon. gentlemen, and they have failed to produce a single precedent for their contention. Don't you think that if they had found in the long history of England anything to support their theory that the minority should control the proceedings of the committee, they would have produced it? Don't you think that if they could have found in the forty years' history of this parliament any precedent of that nature they would have produced it? Not one precedent have they found. Their position is absolutely untenable, and contrary to the history of responsible government in this country. I thought my hon. friend from Elgin (Mr. Crothers) to-night was hardly as enthusiastic in his address as he usually is. He, and my hon. friend from Hamilton (Mr. Barker), would like their friends who are going to read their speeches in the country, to think that when they had control of the government in 1891, they actually went to work and appointed Mr. C. A. Geoffrion, who was subsequently a member of the government of the right hon. gentleman who leads this House, and allowed that prominent Liberal to come in and conduct the prosecution in the McGreevy case, and paid him for it. They know that nothing of the kind occurred. I have under my hand an extract from the reports of the proceedings before the committee in 1891, which shows exactly what did occur, and I will read it verbatim, in order to put it on the records, and show that there is no excuse for their argument. This is what occurred:

The committee met on Friday, May 15, 1891, under the presidency of Mr. Girouard, now Mr. Justice Girouard. The chairman having asked whether any of the parties were desirous of being heard by counsel——

Mr. Tarte, the gentleman who had taken the responsibility, from his seat in this House, of making a written statement and positive charges against another hon. gentleman in this House.

—Mr. Tarte handed in the name of Mr. C. A. Geoffrion.

, Mr. BARKER. Who paid him?

Mr. MACDONALD. Is there any question about who paid him? I do not know whether he was paid or not. I suppose if he was paid, he was paid by the government.

Mr. BARKER. The government paid him.

Mr. MACDONALD. Certainly they did. But did the government appoint Mr. Geoffrion?

Mr. BARKER. A member of the opposition appointed him.

Mr. MACDONALD. The gentleman who made the charges, Mr. Tarte, chose Mr. Geoffrion as his counsel, and came there with him, just as Major Hodgins did in the committee with which my hon. friend and myself were connected two years ago. Major Hodgins took his cousin, Mr. Frank Hodgins, as his counsel, and brought him to the committee, and asked us to recognize him, and we did so, and we paid him. My hon. friend is quibbling about the question of payment, he and his friends are attempting to mislead their supporters outside into the idea——

Mr. CROTHERS. Did not the gentleman and the party who were making the charges then name the counsel who should prosecute the charges?

Mr. MACDONALD. Certainly, Mr. Tarte named his own counsel.

Mr. CROTHERS. Are they doing it now?

Mr. MACDONALD. Is my hon. friend making any charges?

Mr. CROTHERS. Is the man who is making the charges, or on whose behalf they are being made, appointing a counsel?

Mr. MACDONALD. I have myself repeatedly offered Mr. Lumsden the opportunity of appointing a counsel, and told him the committee were prepared to pay his counsel, any one he might name, and he declined to do it. My hon. friend is attempting to rely upon his astuteness in order to create an impression outside.

Mr. CROTHERS. Is Mr. Lumsden the prosecutor in this case?

Mr. MACDONALD. Certainly, he is the man who made the charges. If my hon. friend means as prosecutor the man who made those charges which initiated these proceedings, Mr. Lumsden is the man who made those charges which a committee of this House was appointed to investigate. They have called before them Mr. Lumsden, who made those charges, and have told him: If you wish to appoint a counsel we will pay him. Mr. Lumsden says: I don't care to have counsel, and we have gone on as I have shown. Time and again we have endeavoured to get our hon. friends to agree upon a counsel, and they would not agree to it.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Will the hon. gentleman tell us now who are being prosecuted?

Mr. MACDONALD. My hon. friend will hear what I have to say on that matter as I go along. I am for the moment dealing with the question whether what occurred in regard to the appointment of counsel in the McGreevy case, is a precedent for my hon. friends opposite. They are attempting to find a precedent here. Let us see what took place. When the government of Sir John A. Macdonald came to act, what did they do? I want hon. gentlemen to recall the difference between their attitude and the action of Mr. Tarte, who came with Mr. Geoffrion as his counsel on May 15 at the inception of the investigation. Mr. Tarte, having made his charges in the House, and they having been referred to a committee, he came there to prosecute them, and he had his counsel with him. On May 26 the committee again met, and that is the first time that the government appear in regard to the matter. What transpired then? Sir John Thompson moved:

That the following gentleman be heard before the committee as counsel: H. McD. Henry, Q.C.

To represent the people, forsooth?—and this is the first occasion in this committee upon which the government is heard from. H. McD. Henry, to represent the people?—not at all, but to represent the Public Works Department.

Mr. BARKER. But Mr. Tarte had previously brought his counsel there.

Mr. MACDONALD. Of course, my hon. friend knows that. I have just told him that on May 15, Mr. Tarte, at the inception of the committee, came there to prosecute the charges that he had made and he had his counsel with him to look after his interest. He appeared before this committee, and the committee granted leave for Mr. Geoffrion to appear as counsel. At no stage in the proceedings did the government propose to appoint counsel for the people. But when the government did move, on May 26th, they did not move at all that counsel be appointed to represent the people, but that Mr. H. McD. Henry, Q. C., be appointed to represent the Public Works Department. Was there any suggestion, throughout that whole inquiry, of the government, or any of its representatives on the committee, moving for any counsel to represent the people?

Mr. BARKER. No, because counsel had previously been appointed.

Mr. MACDONALD. Because counsel had been appointed to represent Mr. Tarte, and not to represent the people. My hon. friend is quibbling, and he knows it. But he is not going to deceive anybody in this House. He may deceive some of his party friends outside, who wish to be deceived, but nobody in this House is going to be deceived. Then, later on, Mr. B. B. Osler, Q. C., came into the matter. We have heard some suggestions in the press outside about Mr. Osler and Mr. Henry acting for the people. My hon. friend has got a new version of the story in which he is trying to make out that Mr. Geoffrion was acting for the people when, as a matter of fact, he was acting for Mr. Tarte. Who were Mr. Osler and Mr. Henry acting for? I have shown that Mr. Henry acted for the Public Works Department, and later, on June 24, Sir John Thompson moved that Mr. B. B. Osler, Q. C., be heard before the committee, as counsel, with Mr. Henry, Q. C., for the Public Works Department. That is the position which these gentlemen occupied before that committee. My hon. friend says that it was Mr. Geoffrion who acted for the people. The Tory papers outside say that it was Mr. Osler and Mr. Henry who acted for the people. We find that Mr. Osler and Mr. Henry acted for the Public Works Department.

Mr. LANCASTER. Does the hon. gentleman say that Mr. Tarte's charges were not in the interest of the people?

Mr. MACDONALD. Oh, my hon. friend need not think that I am so very fresh as all that. My hon. friend knows that if the hon. member for South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) had made those charges in this House, and if he had gone before this committee and asked for counsel to represent him, counsel would have been appointed by the committee, as a matter of course. My hon. friend knows that if he had gone to the committee and asked to be assigned counsel, having assumed the responsibility of making charges, the committee would have given him counsel. But when nobody has the responsibility of making charges either here or elsewhere, when hon. gentlemen are unwilling to attach to their names the responsibility of making one charge against this government, and when we find that the gentleman who does make the charge that the government themselves sent to be investigated, says that he does not want counsel, these hon. gentlemen come in and say that they will not sit upon that committee because Mr. Lumsden would not appoint counsel. I have analysed the occurrence of 1891, and I have shown conclusively that what occurred at that time was that Mr. Geoffrion was not appointed by the committee, but was the private solicitor of Mr. Tarte, who took him before the committee as his counsel, that he was accepted by the committee, and that Mr. Osler and Mr. Henry, who were said to represent the people, had been appointed by a motion of Sir John Thompson, to represent the Public Works Department. I do think that, as a professional man, the hon. gentleman's reflections upon Mr. Chrysler were most unfair. I know Mr. Henry, who was subsequently Judge Henry, very well, and my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) knows him too. He was a splendid lawyer when in the enjoyment of his health. He was a Conservative candidate in the city of Halifax a short time before this against my hon. friend the Finance Minister, and he was defeated. He had budding ambitions in the Conservative party. I do not recall that anybody in that province urged that the inquiry was going to be unfair because Mr. Henry occupied that position, and I hardly think it was worthy of hon. gentlemen, members of the bar, to make the statements they did make in regard to Mr. Chrysler, whose reputation in this country is unquestioned, and whose status as a professional man is beyond reproach. It is not more than two weeks ago since the city of Winnipeg had that gentleman appear before an important committee of this House to represent them in regard to their interests, and it can hardly be said that a man who has had the important responsibilities before the Supreme Court of Canada and the Privy Council which Mr. Chrysler has had so repeatedly, and who is known by the bar of this country as a man against whom no imputation can be made, would violate his oath as a barrister and throw away all his great professional reputation in order to play a miserable little political game. But this is a diversion. I have shown that the precedent which my hon. friend has endeavoured to find is no precedent at all, in support of his contention, but entirely the contrary.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would like to ask my hon. friend whether there was not a counsel in 1891 who was selected neither by the government nor by the majority of the committee; that is Mr. Geoffrion?

Mr. MACDONALD. He was selected by Mr. Tarte.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. He was not selected by the government or by a majority of the committee.

Mr. MACDONALD. Or by any portion of the committee; neither the majority nor the minority.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What counsel is there in this investigation who corresponds with that position?

Mr. MACDONALD. I am surprised at the leader of the opposition; he knows very well that Mr. Lumsden occupies the position that Mr. Tarte did; that if Mr. Lumsden had come to the committee and said: 'I want counsel,' counsel would have been appointed, but he said he did not want counsel. I was proceeding to show what course the majority had adopted in regard to this question.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is there any counsel corresponding to that in the investigation now proceeding?

Mr. MACDONALD. My Chrysler is performing the duties of prosecutor in this matter.

Mr. LENNOX. Instructed by the defendants.

Mr. MACDONALD. Instructed not by any defendants. My hon. friend has said what is incorrect, and he has no warrant for making that statement whatever.

Mr. LENNOX. I stand by it.

Mr. MACDONALD. He is instructed solely and only by Mr. Lumsden. Mr. Lumsden told us that he had given his full confidence to Mr. Chrysler, and that he had given him all information necessary to conduct the investigation. What are the facts in regard to this question of counsel? The very day the committee met the question as to what should be done in regard to the appointment of counsel was discussed and my hon. friend from West Elgin (Mr. Crothers), who is a very ingenious gentleman, undertook to make an argument to show that my hon. friends and myself took the position that the commission was not a party to this matter, and that, therefore, we thought that Mr. Smith, who came there as counsel of the commission, was a man who would represent the people. My hon. friend was hardly fair in the quotation which he read in regard to my remarks. When I interrupted him in the course of his speech and asked him to read it all, he omitted to read the remark of the hon. member for South Simcoe.

Mr. CROTHERS. I did not; I read it.

Mr. MACDONALD. I will show you what you did read, and what you did not.

Mr. CROTHERS. I read what you asked me to read.

Mr. MACDONALD. This is what occurred:

Mr. LENNOX. He speaks about a certain number of engineers, the commission is responsible for the class of engineers that they employ, to employ competent and honest engineers. The commission may be able to show that they are absolutely blameless in this matter.

Mr. MACDONALD. The commissioners are not on trial here, and there is no use in your saying so.

This is what my hon. friend omitted.

Mr. LENNOX. I have not said so.

Mr. LENNOX. That is true.

Mr. MACDONALD. So that my hon. friend (Mr. Lennox) took the position that he had not said the commissioners were on trial or were a party to the investigation.

Mr. LENNOX. I said that up to that time I had not specifically stated that the commissioners were on trial. When my hon. friend (Mr. Macdonald) said the commissioners were not on trial and there was no use in my saying so, I said: I have not said so, but I proceeded to point out the position they were in.

Mr. MACDONALD. The material point I wanted to make there was that my hon. friend (Mr. Lennox) had followed up my statement by saying that he never had said the commissioners were on trial, and when I asked my hon. friend from Elgin (Mr. Crothers) to quote what my hon. friend (Mr. Lennox) had said, he omitted to quote that statement of Mr. Lennox.

Mr. CROTHERS. I beg your pardon; I understood you to ask me to read what Mr. Lennox had said which led up to your statement, and that I read. Of course, I may have misunderstood you. Before I sit down I would ask my hon. friend to read the next remark of Mr. Lennox.

Mr. LENNOX. And my next remark after that?

Mr. MACDONALD. Certainly. It is possible my hon. friend Mr. Crothers was mistaken as to my request, although he surely must have seen the significance of reading that part where Mr. Lennox said that he never said the commissioners were on trial.

Mr. CROTHERS. I see no significance in it.

Mr. MACDONALD. You don't?

Mr. CROTHERS. No, I read the significant part of it.

Mr. MACDONALD. Oh, very well. Then I said to Mr. Lennox as appears on page 11:

Mr. MACDONALD. You say they are responsible?

Mr. LENNOX. It will be just as well for us to give each member of the committee the privilege to express his ideas in his own way. Mr. Macdonald usually claims that privilege to himself and I will take the same liberty.

He was not in very good humour that morning. Then I said:

Mr. MACDONALD. That is so, and I hope I am not interfering with the expression of your views in that way, but when you say the Transcontinental Commission is on trial here I say they are not.

Then Mr. Lennox said:

Mr. LENNOX. I have not said that.

He repeated what I had said that he did not state the transcontinental commissioners were on trial, and he continued.

—but I repeated it that when Mr. Lumsden said a number of the engineering staff had disobeyed his instructions, and that a wrong classification exists, it is a reflection upon the manner in which this railway is constructed.

Mr. CROTHERS. Will my hon. friend allow me?

Mr. MACDONALD. Now, I am not on the witness stand. My hon. friend (Mr. Lennox) certainly stated that the commissioners were not on trial and that is the important point I was endeavouring to make, and the hon. gentleman repeated it twice.

Mr. LENNOX. Now, if my hon. friend will oblige me by reading the conclusion of the sentence so as to make it complete.

Mr. MACDONALD. I will gratify my hon. friend. He went on to say that the commissioners were responsible and they being responsible the government was responsible, and that the government side was represented by Mr. Smith and that the public interest was not represented. But the case made by hon. friend from Elgin (Mr. Crothers) was that he inferred because I made the statement—and I will not discuss now whether I was right or not—that I was taking the position that Mr. Smith represented the public. That position I never took because, if my hon. friend will turn to page 14 of the evidence he will find that in answer to Mr. Lennox I said:

Mr. MACDONALD. Mr. Lennox, I am prepared to vote with you for everybody to have counsel so you need not argue that point.

Mr. CROTHERS.

That was our position on the very first day. We were perfectly willing that everybody affected should have counsel, but later on I said:

Mr. MACDONALD. Again, I say that you are arguing about something that nobody is objecting to, everybody is perfectly willing to have counsel.

So, at the very inception of the case the action of the majority of the committee was that anybody affected in any way should have counsel and that there should be independent counsel for the prosecution. We took that position and we followed it up at the next meeting of the committee after Mr. Lumsden had made his statement of what his position was by making a motion which will be found at page 76:

Mr. MACDONALD. Consequently, as I am sure that all that anybody wants in this matter is to find out what Mr. Lumsden is talking about, and find out whether there was anybody that he had any right to lose confidence in, and we ought to have all the facts before us, I propose to move: That this committee apply to the House for permission to arrange for counsel for the committee in investigating the matters referred to us for consideration.

Then, my hon. friend (Mr. Lennox) was perfectly in agreement with that proposition.

Mr. LENNOX. Just read what I said.

Mr. MACDONALD. I am going to. My hon. friend had no notion of leaving the committee then, and he said:

Mr. LENNOX. One step at a time is good, I think.

And referring to my suggestion he said:

That is right, I think, as far as it goes.

So that he agreed with me up to that point, and he said that my resolution was right. Then I said to my hon. friend (Mr. Lennox) in order to emphasize the matter, and so that there might be no doubt about it:

Mr. MACDONALD. Is there anything else you can suggest?

Here was the position of the majority of the committee asking leave of the House to appoint counsel, and having gone so far to satisfy my hon. friend (Mr. Lennox) I asked him was there any thing else he could suggest, and he said:

Mr. LENNOX. I don't think there is anything else we should consider at this stage.

And here it is, that these gentlemen who were so badly used that they left the committee because they were not given the right to appoint counsel; here was my hon. friend (Mr. Lennox) giving me commendation for my action, of which I was proud, and even my hon. friend from Elgin (Mr. Crothers said:

Mr. CROTHERS. I am perfectly prepared to agree with everything Mr. Macdonald has said. I think he has covered the ground well.

So that on the 23rd of February the action of the committe had the full concurrence of these gentlemen, and every thing that had been done up to that moment had been endorsed by my hon. friends opposite. Then, came the strange, and sudden, and peculiar change within two hours, and I can only account for the changed attitude of my hon. friends opposite between one o'clock, when we adjourned up stairs, and two o'clock when we met here, by their having received some inspiration of a very improper kind from some source. To our intense surprise the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) came into this House about two o'clock, and moved that this resolution which he had stated in the committee was all right as far as it went, should be amended, and he asked that the House should accord to him, and his friends, the peculiar, anomalous, and unprecedented privilege of appointing the counsel. They did not suggest this in the committee; no one had heard of it before they launched it in the House. The House declared that they should not have that privilege, and en passant I might say, it is questionable whether all this discussion is not out of order, it having been thrashed out before. But, my hon. friend (Mr. Lennox) and his friends came back to the committee after the House told them they would not agree to let them have the appointment of counsel. They came back next day, and we had a friendly and informal talk about who should be the best man to appoint as counsel. It was intimated by all of us on the majority of the committee, that we were not tied to any name, that we were anxious to appoint a counsel with a reputation, and a position at the bar, so that no matter what his politics might be, there would be ample guarantee to the House, and to the country, that on his professional reputation he would be bound to elicit the fullest information. And, my hon. friends were frank enough to agree with us that that was a fair proposition, and on page 84 we had this discussion about that:

Mr. LENNOX. Here is what you can do. If you cannot think of a suitable Liberal counsel—you say you have not any one in your mind—could you not think of some prominent and distinguished Conservative counsel whom you could suggest, and maybe we would fall into line at once.

Mr. CLARKE. Somebody who is non-partisan; that is what we want. We don't care about any particular party affiliation.

Mr. LENNOX. For instance, if we had a man of the type of Christopher Robinson in his old days, I think we could agree, of course, on a man of that kind, but they are not very plentiful, and I cannot say that I could think of another man.

The result is that on the 24th of February my hon. friend (Mr. Lennox) was not contending for the principle that the minority should have the appointment of counsel.

Mr. LENNOX. I beg my hon. friend's pardon.

Mr. MACDONALD. That is certainly what that language means.

Mr. LENNOX. I beg my hon. friend's pardon. Not only that, but I made it perfectly clear, and the chairman had practically agreed to it, and I can give the reference.

Mr. MACDONALD. My hon. friend was in a very amiable frame of mind that day. He, and his colleagues, had forgotten the fact that they had been asserting the principle that they should have the right to name the counsel, and he said very frankly and very naturally that if Christopher Robinson was alive, of course, they would all agree to him.

Mr. LENNOX. Will my hon. friend allow me to call his attention to the sequence of events? I argued for a length of time that the committee should allow us the privilege of naming the counsel, and in the end the chairman said:

I think the committee is ready to take your suggestion, and if you will appoint a man who has the general confidence of the country as a lawyer, I think we will be ready to accept him. Of course, we do not want to agree before we know the name. We want to be the judge. We are lawyers, and know the standing of lawyers in the country.

Then it was suggested that two gentlemen should confer together, and we had this informal discussion in reference to what these two gentlemen would do when they got together.

Mr. MACDONALD. My hon. friend might have spared us that little speech, because there was nothing in it that was not agreed to. I was pointing out that this informal discussion occurred before the minority had agreed to the appointment of this sub-committee, and my hon. friend said that if Christopher Robinson was alive we would of course agree on him. My hon. friend from Hamilton and I were appointed a sub-committee to name counsel. I am stating these facts to show that our hon. friends had gone back on the principle they asserted before, that they should have the appointment of counsel, and were willing to confer amicably with us to get a man who would have the confidence of the country. My hon. friend from Hamilton and I met. He proposed certain gentlemen and I proposed certain gentlemen. I suggested the name of Mr. Nesbitt, a former judge of the Supreme Court. After we had talked over names, my hon. friend from Hamilton, after the lapse of about a week, finally came back to the position that he would not agree with me on the selection of a man because he and his confrers wanted to control the appointment. He very frankly to-day said the same thing, so that there is no dispute as to that fact. Our hon. friends seemed to settle down to the position that if they could not have the appointment of counsel, they would not play any more. I ventured to say that they were playing the baby act, and they have been playing it ever since. To say that a man occupying the position of Wallace Nesbitt, a former judge of the Supreme Court of this country, a man acknowledged to be one of the leaders, if not the leader of the bar of this country, and a Conservative, was not a man to whom they could trust their interests or the interests of the people in this investigation, is too absurd to listen to for one moment. My hon. friend from Simcoe took the position to-day that because Mr. Nesbitt had given an opinion as to what the specifications meant, that did not mean that he should be in any sense disqualified for acting as counsel.

Mr. BARKER. Why did Mr. Nesbitt refuse the retainer you offered him? Was it not because he had given that opinion?

Mr. MACDONALD. In my opinion the statement made by Mr. Nesbitt in regard to the meaning of the specifications was not the reason for his refusal. In my judgment the reason he refused was because he was not the unanimous choice of the committee. I have no doubt whatever that if he had been the unanimous choice of the committee, he would have acted.

Mr. BARKER. I understand that Mr. Nesbitt refused to act on the ground that, having given that opinion, he was disqualified to receive any brief from a portion of the committee.

Mr. MACDONALD. My hon. friend is speaking from private information of which I know nothing. I am speaking of the letter which Mr. Nesbitt addressed to the committee; and this afternoon, when I asked my hon. friend if he would undertake to say that the mere technical construction of No. 36 of the specifications and the opinion given by Mr. Nesbitt upon that, was a pronouncement on the merits of these charges made by Mr. Lumsden to such an extent that it would be impossible for him to act as counsel to bring out the facts alleged by Mr. Lumsden, my hon. friend would not say that that was the issue. My hon. friend knows that the construction of those specifications was not the issue particularly. If it was, then we have Judge Nesbitt pronouncing against all the assertions of our hon. friends. If their contention is correct and the opinion given by Judge Nesbitt was such as to prevent him acting as counsel, then our friends are out of court. Because one of their leaders in the province of Quebec, Sir Alexander Lacoste, as well as Donald Macmaster, Mr. Shepley, Mr. Beaudin, Mr. Lafleur, and Mr. Charles Ritchie gave an opinion as to the meaning of these specifications along the same lines as Mr. Nesbitt, not as a matter of legal construction, but as a matter of mere grammatical construction, do they say that that would in any sense impair or interfere with the performance of their duty in carrying out an investigation into the allegations made by Mr. Lumsden?

Mr. LENNOX. It certainly would.

Mr. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman did not say that this afternoon.

Mr. LENNOX. I say it utterly debarred these gentlemen from acting as counsel in this matter.

Mr. MACDONALD. Then my hon. friends would have difficulty in convincing their friends of their case if Sir Alexander Lacoste has given the opinion that Mr. Lumsden was wrong. Will my hon. friends undertake to say that was not Sir Alexander Lacoste's opinion?

Mr. BARKER. I take the position that any person who gave an opinion on the question of the classification under these contracts, whatever the opinion was, would not be a proper counsel to conduct this investigation.

Mr. MACDONALD. My hon. friend is evading the question. I asked my hon. friend whether the question of the construction of these specifications was the issue, and he evaded the question. If these hon. gentlemen will not say that it was the issue, then they know that Mr. Nesbitt was not disqualified. Mr. Nesbitt and the other gentleman who gave an opinion as to the meaning of the specifications, did not know at the time that Mr. Lumsden was going to declare two years afterwards that he had lost confidence in his engineers. Both the hon. member for Hamilton and the hon. member for Simcoe declined to say that the question of the meaning of the specifications was the issue in trial in this investigation.

Mr. LENNOX. I do not decline anything of the kind. I say that the specifications have been made a question at issue in this investigation, and the whole trend of the examination by Mr. Smith for several days has been to bring in again the construction to be put upon those three items of the specifications.

Mr. MACDONALD. Then I understand that my hon. friend at last comes down to the point of saying that they are an issue in this matter.

Mr. LENNOX. You have made them the issue.

Mr. MACDONALD. My hon. friend will find that I have not asked one question that led up to this matter at all.

Mr. BARKER. Will the hon. gentleman tell me what was the object of putting Mr. Nesbitt's opinion in as evidence in this Lumsden case?

Mr. MACDONALD. I will accept whatever proposition my hon. friends make. If they say that Mr. Nesbitt's opinion is material, then they are in this position, that Mr. Nesbitt, Sir Alexander Lacoste, and all these other distinguished gentlemen, have given opinions which indicate that Mr. Lumsden was entirely incorrect in his opinion of the specifications; and all these distinguished Conservatives outside of this House have given opinions on this question which materially disagree with the position taken by our hon. friends opposite, who have discussed this question this afternoon. If, on the other hand, they say that these opinions are not material, or that the specifications are not a part of the issue, then it would not do to say that Mr. Nesbitt was disqualified on that account. However, whether Mr. Nesbitt should act or not was a question of professional taste, and he has settled it. On what grounds he settled it I know not. But I want to point out that our hon. friends did not run away from the committee because Mr. Nesbitt had given this opinion. If they had come to the committee and said: You have made a wrong selection in appointing Mr. Nesbitt because he gave an opinion, and we cannot support his appointment, then they would be logical. But they did not want Mr. Nesbitt; they were not going to have him, whether he had given an opinion or not. The position they took was that they were going to appoint the counsel. The gentleman we selected, Mr. Nesbitt, they did not object to because of any lack of qualification on his part. Mr. Nesbitt is a distinguished jurist, a very clever lawyer, and a man of unblemished reputation. That he had these qualities they all admitted, but they said: That makes no difference, we want to appoint a man ourselves. In fact, they had made up their minds to withdraw. They took no objection to Mr. Nesbitt personally, but they evidently did not want him nor did they want a man like the late Mr. Christopher Robinson, though my hon. friend from Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) says they did.

Mr. HARTY. He is dead.

Mr. MACDONALD. And as my hon. friend from Kingston says, he is dead. Mr. Nesbitt is one of the leaders of the bar of Ontario——

An hon. MEMBER. And a good Tory, too.

Mr. MACDONALD. But they were determined not to be pleased, no matter what might be done. This only shows that my hon. friends left this committee, not because they did not have the appointment of the counsel—for they never had any warrant according to parliamentary practice or precedent for expecting any thing of the kind—but because they felt that they were in trouble, and they were looking for an excuse to get out of it. I have no desire to detain the House at greater length, because I have already talked too long, but I wanted to point out that, so far as the majority of the committee is concerned, we acceded to the proposal of the minority that counsel should be employed. We asked them to name counsel, and we discussed with them, in the frankest way, the appointing of counsel, but they took the position that they would not accept anybody whom we might appoint, but they wanted to name the counsel themselves. We replied that that was an impossible position for them to take, and nobody knew it better than they. I shall not trespass further upon the time of the House. The committee is proceeding with its task to the best of its ability, and we have a counsel, Mr. Chrysler, to whom my hon. friend from Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) has referred in a manner which, on reflection, I am sure he will himself regret. Both of us belong to a profession, which is sometimes jocularly spoken of by those who do not belong to it, and we both ought to stand for its highest traditions and should be ready to recognize the merits of the best men who are in it. We who come from the smaller provinces recognize that while in some things the province of Ontario does not take the lead, it occupies, as regards the qualifications of the men who are at the head of its bar, a leading position in this Dominion; and I regretted very much to hear my hon. friend from Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) talk the way he did about a gentleman occupying the position in the Ontario bar which Mr. Chrysler does, and whose integrity, long experience and ability have given him a leading rank among those who are most prominent in the legal profession of that province. I do not believe that the leaders of the bar of Ontario, I do not believe that such men as Mr. Chrysler, would prostitute their abilities to the achievement of some petty advantage in party politics. I believe that Mr. Chrysler will bring out in this investigation whatever facts it is possible to bring to light. I am sorry that my hon. friends opposite have formed so low an estimate of the duties of the gentlemen who compose a committee such as this. If there be any duty of importance in this House, it is that devolving upon the members of a committee of investigation to look into the matters at issue with the greatest possible care, and bring out all the facts to the light of day. True, we all have our party predilections, but I would be sorry to think that any one in this House would be willing to sacrifice his ideas as to what is right and proper in order to gain a miserable poltical advantage. On behalf of the majority of this committee. I submit that we are endeavouring to carry out the task allotted to us to the best of our ability, and with the sincere desire that, if there be any wrongdoing, it may be brought to light. Who cares, from a political point of view, if there have been engineers, who, out in the northern wilds, have made wrong classifications?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Mr. MACDONALD. A good many of them are friends of hon. gentlemen opposite. Do they mean to say that the position of this government will be affected in the slightest degree if it be shown that a certain resident engineer somewhere in northern Ontario has wrongly classified common excavation as rock cutting. The desire of this government, I take it, is that, if there be anything of the kind, it should be shown, and that if any engineers have been guilty of wrongdoing, they should be dismissed at once.

Mr. A. MEIGHEN (Portage la Prairie). The hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr. Macdonald) may congratulate himself on the ingenuity with which he evaded a great number of questions put to him by this side. Some of them he evaded by a method he has cultivated for many years, and others he evaded by answers, the transparency of which are only too apparent to every member of this House. Still others he evaded by promising to reply later on and then forgetting to do so. More than once in his speech I asked him, after he had said that the prosecutor was Mr. Lumsden, to be good enough to tell the House who the prosecuted was.

Mr. MACDONALD. If my hon. friend will permit, what is it he would like to know?

Mr. MEIGHEN. I do not know why the hon. member rose, if he does not understand what I want to know.

Mr. MACDONALD. I understood my hon. friend (Mr. Meighen) was asking me a question in the course of the remarks I was making—and I intimated that I would speak to the point—as to the persons who were charged in this case.

Mr. MEIGHEN. The hon. member stated who the prosecutor was in the investigation. I asked, who was the prosecuted?

Mr. MACDONALD. So far as appears from the reference to the committee, Mr. Lumsden stated that he had lost confidence in certain of the engineers. He has given us the names of these engineers, and certain information in regard to the conduct which caused him to lose confidence in them. I should imagine that among the people against whom the charges are made are these engineers. In his statement, Mr. Lumsden made no reflection at all upon the commissioners.

Mr. MEIGHEN. The hon. member (Mr. Macdonald) having stated that the prosecutor was Mr. Lumsden was, in logic, compelled to say that the prosecuted was the engineers. If it was possible for this House to bring itself to such a conclusion as that, we may, with patience, listen to the arguments of hon. members opposite. If a committee of this House is to be appointed at the suggestion of the Prime Minister to investigate a point in dispute between one employee of a public commission, and those employed under him, then, as I say, we may possibly listen with patience to the argument. But I do not understand that the status of a committee of investigation of this House is merely to inquire into a quarrel between certain employees of the government. If this came down to a mere dispute concerning classifications between Mr. Lumsden, and his sub-engineers, I should say that the proper parties to investigate were the parties regularly appointed by the authority of this House, and not a special committee appointed at the suggestion of the Prime Minister. Surely, we can trust Mr. Lumsden to investigate questions of lack of skill, or care, on the part of the employees under him; we need no committee of this House to look into such matters as that. I would like the hon. member (Mr. Macdonald) to give this House a precedent for the appointment of a committee of this House to investigate a quarrel between civil servants of the government. If the government are not implicated, if members of this House are not implicated, where is the precedent for the appointment of such a committee? There was a commission appointed by this House—not a committee of this House, but a commission from outside—to investigate the Civil Service. This is one commission—let me say in answer to the hon. member for South Essex (Mr. A. H. Clarke)—that members on this side do not consider a farce. The precedent of appointing a commission of that sort has not been repeated by hon. gentlemen opposite, and I venture to say never will be. But to say that a committee of seven members of this House are to sit at a cost of $1,000 a day merely to discuss the merits of a quarrel between an engineer and his sub-engineer, the facts of which do not go beyond these officers, is to talk what I must regard—and what every man in this country will regard—as arrant nonsense. There can be no question, and the people of the country, so conceive it, that the prosecutors in this case are those concerned in the success of the investigation, those represented by the opposition in this House, and that the parties defendant in this case are the commission appointed by the government, and through them the government itself. You may cloud the issue as you like, but that is how it is regarded in the country, and no man who wants to be fair, and to talk common sense will say anything else. We must consider that the parties who are charged—by whom they are charged may be another question—and who are in the position of defendants, are the Transcontinental Railway Commission, and through them the government, because on no other basis can logic or common sense be claimed for the appointment of a committee of this House to investigate.

Another question that the hon. member (Mr. Macdonald) did not answer is this: Why did he and his confederates on that committee decline to accept the counsel nominated by the opposition members there? He knows better than to try to answer that question. Should he give the first answer that might occur to him, he would say that this gentleman was not competent counsel. But, were he to say that, he would be laughed at. The country would say: Cannot we trust those whose political fortunes are bound up with the success of the investigation to appoint the most competent counsel they can find? Were the hon. member to answer that this gentleman was not a Liberal, he would be laughed to scorn; if he were to say that he was a Conservative, the error would be equally apparent. So, the hon. member cannot answer the question, and until he answers it to the people of this country he cannot defend the position of the committee or show that they were anxious to have a thoroughly useful investigation.

Now, if the hon. gentleman even appeared to make a point in the whole course of his speech, it was when he said that he could not find, in the course of British or Canadian history, a precedent for any powers whatever devolving upon the minority of a committee. Now, I had not intended to take part in this discussion, when it opened, consequently I have not had time to look up precedents. Only one precedent has been mentioned on either side of the House in this debate; there is only one parallel case brought to the attention of the House; and, if there is one thing clearer than another emerging from this discussion, it is that that precedent is absolutely on the side of the members of the opposition. Some years ago, a committee of investigation was appointed by this House to consider certain charges against members of the House. On what side were the people in that investigation? It was to the interest of the people that these charges be thoroughly probed. The people were represented by Mr. Tarte, a member of this House. The interests of the people were analogous to the interests of Mr. Tarte; the two were inseparably bound up. When Mr. Tarte appointed his counsel, that counsel was necessarily counsel for the people. Now, Mr. Tarte in that case, occupied a position exactly similar to the minority of the committee in the case now before us. The party concerned with the success of the investigation, the party analogous to the prosecution, were represented by Mr. Tarte. The party analogous to the defence were represented by those in this House charged by Mr. Tarte. Both had counsel in that case; only one had counsel in this case. Who are the parties in the present case identified with the success of the prosecution? Who are the parties in this case whose political fortunes, to an extent at all events, are bound up with the thoroughness of the investigation? Why, the opposition members of the committee. Yet, there is absolutely no counsel to represent them. There cannot possibly be counsel to represent the people. On the other hand, the members of the Transcontinental Commission and the government are arm in arm with counsel, they are surrounded with counsel at every point. Mr. Smith is counsel for the commission, he is counsel for the defence, he is also counsel for the government. Then there are the four counsel on the committee, there is the counsel who represents the contractors, and the contractors are interested in securing the very same verdict that the four members of that committee are interested in securing; consequently the counsel who represents the contractors is also arm in arm with the government. There is also the counsel for the sub-engineers, I understand that there was one there to represent them, and he is arm in arm with the government too, because the only verdict of that committee that can possibly suit the engineers is the very verdict that will suit the government members of the committee. All these counsel are retained to secure one end, and one alone, they are all working for the same goal, they cannot be otherwise true to their clients. And now, as if to heap injury on insult, they appoint Mr. Chrysler, who is the nominee of the four government members, and who, to put it in the fairest possible way, is not concerned solely to secure a successful and useful result to that investigation.

Now, the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat complained bitterly that we on the opposition side of the House have had so much to say of the enormous cost of the Transcontinental railway. I sympathize with that hon. gentleman. I can understand that he, as a member of the government party, as well as every other member of the government party will always be seriously alarmed whenever this question of the cost of the Transcontinental railway comes up. It appears to get worse as time goes on, and I do not think the people can hear too often of what has taken place, and of what is taking place in regard to the construction of that railway, when there is an addition to the cost of one hundred millions, an addition sufficient to take care of the public works of this country for years to come, an addition to the cost of a sum of money that equals $12 or $13 for every man, woman, and child in Canada, an addition to the cost that is accounted for by only one of two things, either by worthless and fraudulent estimates given by the government, or their engineers when the matter was first entered upon, or by the worthless, and fraudulent classification which has taken place in the interest of the contractors, and through them perhaps in the interest of others. Now, the situation is surely serious enough to demand a serious investigation; and whether there were a precedent or not in British or Canadian history, if the members of that committee were really desirous of prosecuting these charges with a view of ascertaining the cause of this enormous increase, it was their duty to pay no attention whatever to precedent, but to take their position on the side of the people, to coincide with the wishes of the opposition. I affirm that there is no man in this country, if he will put aside for the moment party considerations, so foolish as to say that the interests of any prosecution, or of any defence are best conducted when they are not most closely identified with those interested in securing the success and thoroughness of that investigation. It was a matter of minor consideration whether there were precedents or not, the end to be attained was the great consideration, and as I said before, every principle of common sense, every principle of law should have led every member of that committee to place himself in unison with the principle that you could not too closely identify the conduct of an inquiry with those interested in securing its success.

Now, Sir, I want to refer to a matter which, although I must confess is not absolutely in point of the discussion, still it serves the purpose of bringing before this country the direct association of this government with the wrongs of the Transcontinental railway. I want to point out two or three things before I sit down. In 1903 this House, in its wisdom, laid down a plan whereby this matter of over-classification was to be investigated, and decided upon, they laid down the plan of arbitration free and untrammelled, and to a large extent they determined that that plan should be followed in the event of dispute. They placed very few limits on the method of arbitration, or on the manner of it. But we had the spectacle some four years afterwards of the Minister of Railways, and the Transcontinental Commission conspiring together to limit the methods adopted by this House for conducting that arbitration. The Transcontinental Railway Commission, on the 10th of January, 1908, of their own motion, deliberately set to work to confine within limits which this House never contemplated, the powers of that Arbitration Board. The Minister of Railways, when this matter was under discussion last fall, admitted on the floor of parliament that he was a party to that alteration, and that it was done at his instance. By the way, Sir, my experience has led me to this conviction, that whenever a speaker in this House reaches the proud position of attacking the Minister of Railways, that hon. gentleman will be found engaged in a forced sleep, because I have always observed that when a discussion is unusually hot, that is the attitude which the Minister of Railways assumes. Now, not only did he by that memorandum, limit the method, and limit the principle of arbitration as they had been laid down by this House in 1903, but for two long years that commission, which should have represented the people of this country, and guarded their interests, were struggling with the officials of the Grand Trunk Pacific to enforce that unwarrantable limitation of the Arbitration Board; for two long years, during which the evidence was dying out, during which witnesses were disappearing, during which the evidence that could have been adduced earlier was being wiped away by time, for two long years that struggle went on, the Grand Trunk Pacific on the one hand struggling with the Transcontinental railway Commission for the full and free investigation as determined and outlined by this House, and the Transcontinental Commission struggling pertinaciously on the other side. Now, was not that a melancholy spectacle? Is not that something for the people to consider, that those who were appointed to guard their interests, were struggling against their interests, and against the intent and meaning of an Act of parliament?

Not only were they doing so, but they were doing so with the tacit and expressed approval of the Minister of Railways and Canals himself. The struggle went on unceasingly and bitterly, and it did not end until, by the union of the skill of the Minister of Railways and the Minister of Public Works some change suddenly came over the scene. There is only one thing unexplained by the report brought down in connection with that struggle. One thing not explained is that we find that when the angelic presence of one member of the government, the Minister of Public Works, floated over the scene, peace suddenly ensued. He seemed to have the effect of the twin stars, as celebrated by Horace, on the stormy sea. The winds fell, the waves were stilled and the turbulence that surged over the waters existed no longer. Why that was it is impossible to conceive, but we must remember, in trying to reach a solution, that there was one way of appeasing the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company. There was a method of appeasing the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company that must appear to any one who thoroughly studies that report. The Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company appear in a double capacity. They appear in the capacity, in the first place of lessors of the road later on and as such interested in its cost, but they are also in the capacity of contractors on many portions of the line. In one capacity they are interested, to a 3 per cent extent, in keeping down the cost, and in the other capacity they are just as interested in keeping up the cost. In seeking for an explanation of the sudden peace that came over the storm we must remember that. It is only right to remember that. It does not show a suspicious mind; it only shows that a very possible explanation is to be found there. Whether it existed or not we do not know. The fault I find with the government is that they have refused such an investigation as would ascertain what the real cause was. They confined it within limits that were absurd, and that is the charge which they must answer for before the people of this country. Had they assisted in an investigation that might have been useful within its terms we might have been able to trace the connection, if there were any, between the ills that were perpetrated in the construction of this road and the government which was in charge supposedly on behalf of the people. The hon. member for South Essex (Mr. Clarke) closed his speech with a homily on the difference between a quitter and a server. I could not help but think that he was more anxious to bring in a joke about the white feathers that he saw on a crest than to teach any useful lesson to the House. But if one has to decide whether he is going to be a quitter or a server he should first of all come to a decision as to what he is quitting and what he is serving. There is no essential virtue in quitting and there is no essential virtue in serving. I have no doubt that if a man should decide to quit serving mammon he would do well, and the hon. member for South Essex ought to have given consideration to the question as to whether he was serving mammon upon that committee rather than talk about the crests that he saw upon the walls of the committee room. I cannot see what object could possibly have been served by the members of the opposition further remaining there. That committee was a farce and it had no other motive from its very birth. As soon as that was abundantly plain what could these hon. gentlemen do but withdraw from the committee? What purpose could they serve by wasting their energies on the committee any longer? The only thing that might have resulted was that they might have been identified with a report, the farcial character of which is as certain as anything could be certain in any parliament, and there would be no one more surprised than the members of that committee and myself if that report does not absolve the engineers, the commission and the government, just as it was intended to absolve them when the committee was first appointed.

Mr. E. A. LANCASTER (Lincoln and Niagara). I did not intend to take any part in this discussion, but there are some propositions set forth by hon. gentlemen opposite, regarding the duties of members of parliament, that I wish shortly to protest against in so far as I am concerned, so that I will not be understood as in any way assenting to them by my silence. The hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) for instance, in the course of his speech, while referring, as a justification of the position of the majority of this committee, to the historical Larkin-Connolly investigation in regard to money that was stolen, or alleged to have been stolen, prior to 1891, declined to answer what I thought was a very pertinent question in regard to the matter that he was then discussing, as to whether the charges made by Mr. Tarte were in the interest of the people. He evaded that answer, but the answer is manifest that unless Mr. Tarte was a hypocrite and a humbug, the charges were made in the interest of the people. The right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) was in the House at that time, and he got the full benefit of those charges. They helped to get him into power, because they hammered into this country and among the people the idea that the conduct of the Public Works Department was a sample of the administration of the government at that time. He was assisted to take that position because of the uncompromising and absolute honesty of the Minister of Justice of that day, Sir John Thompson, who insisted upon cleaning up what was wrong, whether it was done by Conservative or Liberal. The Minister of Justice of that day was a Minister of Justice in fact as well as in name, and it made no difference to him where the charges came from. He saw to it that when wrong was done, whether by Conservatives or Liberals, it was punished and the whole force of the government was turned in to probe those wrongs and see that justice was done, not for the Conservative party, not for the Liberal party, but for the people of this great country. The Prime Minister to-day owes a great deal of his success in getting into power in 1896 to the fact that the Minister of Justice of that day was that kind of a man, and saw that charges, when made, were prosecuted to their utmost in the interest of the people. Yet, the hon. member for Pictou declined to tell me whether Mr. Tarte made these charges in the interest of the people. I say that he did. I was not in the House at that time, but I know something about that investigation, because some of the people most concerned lived in the city of St. Catharines. A great many of the witnesses concerned in the case lived in St. Catharines, in the constituency which I have the honour to represent, and I know that witnesses were brought here and that witnesses who tried to escape were forced to come here by virtue of the Dominion police, through the action of Sir John Thompson, to prove the charges, if they could prove them, no matter whose ox was gored, and no matter what party suffered. I say again that the Prime Minister, to a great extent, achieved power by virtue of the conduct of Sir John Thompson, and because of his determination that if charges were made they should be probed, and that if wrong existed, it must be stopped. The hon. member for Pictou attempted to justify the action they have taken in declining to appoint counsel, as suggested by the minority, and I am not here concerned in saying whether the minority or the majority should have the appointment of counsel, but I say that the Prime Minister, who controls every committee of this House, and who has the say as to who shall conduct these investigations, ought to do like Sir John Thompson did, and see that counsel is appointed in the interest of the people.

Notwithstanding the very eloquent argument of the member for Pictou, it is idle for the Prime Minister to pretend that any one is to-day representing the people of Canada in that investigation. Applying the precedent in the McGreevy-Connolly investigation, as there is no counsel to-day appointed by the person who is making the charges as was the case in that investigation, then the government should see to it that a public prosecutor is appointed. Supposing somebody lays an information charging some one or other with a serious crime, and the person who lays the information declines to engage a counsel, is the government to say that because he will not do so, they are not concerned about it? Is not the government the guardian of the public morals of this country? Is the Prime Minister unconcerned about how much money has been stolen on the Transcontinental railway, because—Mr. Lumsden contending that he appears only as a witness—will not take the responsibility of naming counsel? Is the Prime Minister absolutely indifferent as to whether Mr. Lumsden's charges are substantially true or not? Is not the Prime Minister the chief trustee of the affairs of the people of this country, and, if his Minister of Justice will not do his duty, and if the members of the committee will not take the right view, is it not his duty to declare that counsel will be appointed to represent the people? In my humble opinion the Prime Minister is to blame if that investigation is not properly conducted in the interests of the people of Canada. Is this House to be turned into a two-penny-halfpenny court of inquiry to determine a row between engineers in the employ of the government; is there not a far greater principle at stake in this matter? If the superintendent of the Welland canal charges a subordinate with not doing his duty, is a committee of this House to be appointed, and an inquiry instituted at an expense of $1,200 a day to determine such a petty question as that? And yet, it is to such a trivial issue that the Prime Minister would limit this Lumsden inquiry. All the Prime Minister has to do is to put his finger on the button and he can secure that the rights of the people in this matter are properly protected. In my humble opinion the Prime Minister is guilty of dereliction of duty if after what he has heard to-day he does not appoint counsel to represent the people of Canada to prosecute these charges. When Sir John Thompson was Minister of Justice a different course was taken by him, and that course was approved by the Liberal party then in opposition. Is it to be said that a course which the Prime Minister approved of before he assumed office is now to be repudiated by him? I rose, Sir, to enter my protest against such conduct on the part of the Prime Minister and his government, and having done so, I can say no more.

Mr. SPEAKER. I presume, the purpose having been served, the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) will consent to withdraw his motion?

Mr. LENNOX. Yes, Mr. Speaker; it was in deference to what you said that I moved the motion.

Motion (Mr. Lennox) withdrawn.

TRENT CANAL—CLAIMS FOR FLOODING.

Mr. LENNOX. The Minister of Railways promised some time ago that he would investigate the Clarry matter. Has he any information to give with reference to that? I have subpœnæd Mr. Clarry to the Public Accounts Committee to-morrow, and I would like to know whether the minister will assist me in the prosecution—I mean the investigation.

Mr. GRAHAM. My hon. friend is more anxious for other people to assist him in the prosecution than he is to assist other people.

Mr. LENNOX. I should have said investigation.

Mr. GRAHAM. I sent a member of my staff with full authority to investigate under oath the charges made by the hon. member for Simcoe, or rather the charges contained in documents which he read to the House. I had hoped to have the report of that official to-day, but at all events, I think I shall have it to-morrow or on Monday.

Mr. LENNOX. The minister stated that Mr. Clarry would be paid on the first of April. I have drawn attention to certain facts in connection with Mr. Clarry which, as I am instructed would render it not proper to pay him at present. Does the minister propose to pay him on the first of April?

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Clarry is an official of the Department of Justice and not of my department. I imagine that the inquiry must have referred at least incidentally to Mr. Clarry, and if the report shows that Mr. Clarry is innocent of wrongdoing, I see no reason why he should not be paid. However, as to the matter of payment, the Minister of Justice, in whose employ he was, will deal with that.

Mr. LENNOX. I was told that the investigation did not include Mr. Clarry.

Mr. GRAHAM. Incidentally it did, I think.

Mr. LENNOX. We are going on with the investigation to-morrow.

Mr. GRAHAM. I cannot control that.

Mr. LENNOX. Better not pay the money.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is there any particular significance in paying him on the first of April?

Mr. GRAHAM. Except that the suggestion came from the hon. member (Mr. Lennox).

Mr. LENNOX. It was the minister who said he would pay him on the first of April, and I thought the suggestion was rather unfortunate.

MILITIA PENSION ACT AMENDMENT.

House again in committee to consider the proposed resolution of Sir Frederick Borden to amend the Militia Pension Act.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Since last evening I have looked into this matter more carefully, and I find that the amendment which was proposed by my hon. friend from Centre York (Mr. Wallace) will not be necessary, for the reason that subsection (e) of 6B will include the only officer who would be affected by that amendment. Under this subsection he will be able to count sufficient time to become eligible for a pension within the age limit to which he will be able to serve on the permanent corps. Therefore, I have asked my hon. friend not to press his amendment, because I think it undesirable to legislate for one individual, particularly when it is not necessary. The case is a meritorious one, and I have told my hon. friend that if it should turn out that I am not correct in this, I shall be glad myself to introduce the amendment which he has suggested next session. My hon. friend has accepted this statement on my part. Otherwise I think the resolution was fully considered.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. This resolution deals somewhat with the South African contingent. I mentioned to the minister that there were a few cases of hardship that have not yet been dealt with by the government. I refer to the relatives of those who started for South Africa, and died on the way. The legal representatives of those who reached South Africa, and died there have participated in the grants of land made by the government, while the relatives of those who died on the way have received nothing. There are only a few of these cases, and I think the minister or the government should provide for them. I know that these people feel that they have been harshly treated, and I think some action should be taken to put the matter right.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I am glad my hon. friend has brought the matter up, but I think he will agree with me that the grievance to which he refers cannot be dealt with in this Bill, which is merely for the purpose of amending the Militia Pension Law. It would have to be dealt with by an amendment to the Act providing land grants for South African veterans. While I cannot give any promise, I have told my hon. friend that I will be glad to consider the matter.

Resolution reported, read the second time and agreed to.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 194) to amend the Militia Pension Act.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

ROYAL MILITARY COLLEGE ACT AMENDMENT.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN moved second reading of Bill (No. 180) to amend the Royal Military College Act. He said: From time to time, owing to the growth of the Royal Military College, the amount of money necessary to pay salaries has been increased. I think there have been amendments on three different occasions. Now it is proposed to amend the Act so that the limit shall be $60,000 a year instead of $30,000 a year. I explained that the commandant is being paid a larger salary than his predecessor because, owing to the adoption of the plan of creating a general staff throughout the empire, it is desirable to have an officer at the Royal Military College holding the highest class in the army; and to get such a man, you must pay more. It has been necessary also to increase the salaries of some of the other professors.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, considered in committee, reported, read the third time, and passed.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What business tomorrow?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The tariff resolutions and the estimates.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would prefer that the tariff resolutions should stand over until next week.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. In that case we shall go into Supply.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 11 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, April 1, 1910.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

MORNING SITTINGS.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I beg to move:

That from Monday next until the end of the session, the House shall meet on that and every subsequent sitting day at 11 o'clock in the morning and that, in addition to the usual intermission at six o'clock p.m., there shall also be an intermission from one to three o'clock in the afternoon.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think there is no objection to the motion, as we all desire to bring the session to a close at a reasonably early date. It would, however, be desirable that the right hon. gentleman should state what further legislation, if any, the government proposes to submit this session.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. We shall have some supplementary estimates, then a resolution to amend the law concerning drydocks, also the renewal of some railway subsidies, but no new subsidies, and some legislation regarding the Ottawa Improvement Commission, also legislation with regard to judicial appointments necessitated by legislation of the local legislatures. If there be anything else I shall inform the House on Monday.

Motion agreed to.

CIVIL SERVICE ACT AMENDMENT.

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Postmaster General) moved that on Monday next the House go into Committee of the Whole to consider the following proposed resolution:

Resolved, that it is expedient to amend the Civil Service Act, chapter 16 of the Revised Statutes, 1906, by providing for the payment of salaries as follows:—

To post office inspectors on appointment, $2,500, with an annual increase of $100 to a maximum of $3,500.

To assistant post office inspectors and superintendents of the railway mail service on appointment, $1,600, with an annual increase of $100 to a maximum of $2,500.

To authorize the increase to the minimum of the salary of any such officers whose salary is at present less than the minimum.

To assistant postmasters, on appointment, a salary of not less than $1,100 and not more than $2,800.

Motion agreed to.

THE WATERWAYS TREATY.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Before the orders of the day are called, I would like to ask the right hon. the Prime Minister whether he has brought down the correspondence relating to the Waterways Treaty, which we have asked for?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It will be laid on the table Monday next.

TRADE NEGOTIATIONS WITH THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would like to ask the hon. the Finance Minister to give me, at as early a date as possible, particulars of the goods that have been imported under item 711 of the present tariff, which is affected by the recent arrangements with the United States. I would like to have particulars of the goods imported from the United States under that item, the classes of goods embraced under that item generally speaking, and the expectations of the government with respect to the same, also particulars regarding changes anticipated in importations this as well as the other items.

Mr. FIELDING. How these will affect the revenue?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I was not thinking so much of the revenue, though of course that would be affected. There will be a smaller customs tax, but possibly a larger revenue. What I want more particularly is the actual volume of the importations.

Mr. FIELDING. I am not sure that we can give the exact information, as that would be a good deal a matter of surmise. However, I shall endeavour, as far as possible, to give the information desired before we proceed further.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Of course, information as to the revenue should in itself convey information as to the importations because the one depends on the other.

Mr. FIELDING. I have already given instructions to prepare a memorandum giving the probable reductions of taxation under the new arrangements. That memorandum should give all the information the hon. gentleman desires. At all events I shall do my best to furnish it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The details necessary to be obtained in order to prepare such a statement will probably cover the information desired.

SUPPLY.

House in Committee of Supply.

Port Arthur and Fort William harbour and river improvements, $800,000.

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works). This is to make provision for improvements in the way of dredging on the Mission river, and also at the harbour of Port Arthur, and for revetment walls on the Mission river, and also for a breakwater at Port Arthur. This amount is required to carry on the work during the present year.

Mr. BLAIN. Under contract?

Mr. PUGSLEY. All under contract.

Mr. SPROULE. Will the minister have an over expenditure the same as last year?

Mr. PUGSLEY. In view of the rapidity with which the work is going ahead, and also in view of the fact that we have given favourable consideration to the proposal to build a breakwater extending from what is known as Bare-point, a little to the east of the dry dock and ship-building and repairing plant, which are being established at Port Arthur, this amount will not be sufficient, and we propose asking for a further amount—if my colleagues approve of it—in the supplementary estimates. It is desirable to carry on this work without unnecessary delay.

Mr. SPROULE. If this improvement is needed I will not be found to grumble at the amount of the expenditure, but we have a right to complain that an over expenditure was made last year as to which the judgment of the House was never invited.

Mr. PUGSLEY. We shall have to ask for a further amount this session.

Quebec harbour—deep-water wharf at Lévis, $55,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. We purpose constructing a deep water wharf on the property acquired from the Bank of Montreal, formerly the Carrier-Laine property. $400,000 was voted last year, and out of it we have paid for the property, and we think the vote of $55,000 will enable us to enter into a contract.

Mr. SPROULE. That will not complete the work?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Oh, no.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the work to cost?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am informed by the chief engineer that the estimated cost is about $400,000. We purpose going to a depth of 35 feet at the end of the wharf.

Mr. SPROULE. You had a vote last year of $400,000; how was that expended?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The expenditure was $355,000 as follows: Balance of purchase price paid to the Bank of Montreal, $330,000; interest at 5 per cent, $4,855.55; further interest at 5 per cent, $8,572.43; outlay for arbitration and surveying expenses and temporary repairs, $4,919.43; additional expenditure previous to the close of the fiscal year, $1,652.59.

Quebec harbour—improvements at mouth of River St. Charles' estuary, $180,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This work has been going on for a number of years with the object of giving accommodation for ocean-going vessels at the port of Quebec. We require this amount to continue the work of the present year, which is under contract.

Mr. SPROULE. What are these piers like? I understand that one of them toppled over after it was built.

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, the hon. gentleman is misinformed. The work is a very excellent work; the wharfs are built of cribwork under water, and for a certain distance under the water the superstructure is of concrete. We are building a very fine system of piers.

Mr. HUGHES. How do these cribworks correspond as to width and height?

Mr. PUGSLEY. They are forty-two feet wide at the base, and sixty-six feet high, and a good many hundreds of feet in length, and they are topped off with concrete.

Red river—improvements at St. Andrew's rapids, $55,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The government has been engaged for some time in building a lock and dam at St. Andrew's rapids for the purpose of affording navigation from Lake Winnipeg to the city of Winnipeg. The work is now practically completed, and we expect that in a few days it will be open for navigation.

Mr. HENDERSON. Does the hon. minister purpose completing the roadway across this superstructure, which I understand is intended to be used as a municipal road? Does he propose making connections with the banks on either side?

Mr. PUGSLEY. What my hon. friend, I suppose, means is, shall we build the approaches so as to enable the people to avail themselves of the bridge, which was built primarily as a service bridge for the lock and dam, as a highway bridge. I may say that we intend to do so.

Mr. HENDERSON. Then there is no question that the intention of the government is that it shall be a bridge for the use of the public?

Mr. PUGSLEY. There is no question, provided my colleagues agree in the view I take of the matter.

Mr. HENDERSON. I did not know the government were entering upon a scheme of building municipal bridges. The hon. minister objected very much to spending a few thousand dollars in my county to prevent erosions along the lake shore, insisting that the municipalities should do that. I am not finding fault with the expenditure, but it is rather surprising how conveniently the hon. minister can accommodate a municipality in one case and refuse a very trifling assistance in another. It is rather remarkable that he should build a municipal bridge in the west and refuse a little consideration in the east.

Mr. PUGSLEY. There is a difference, a very great difference. In this case the character of the river at that point is being changed. The ordinary mode of crossing by boat is necessarily being considerably affected, and I felt that the government, having been obliged to spend a considerable amount of money in building a service bridge for the operation of the lock and lifting curtains, it would not be unreasonable to go a little further and, instead of compelling the municipality to build the approaches, do that work ourselves.

Mr. HENDERSON. I do not wish the minister to think for a moment that I am objecting. I think it is a very good idea to provide this service bridge for the people, because the municipalities contiguous to this portion of the river would certainly be put to a very large expense to erect a bridge. But I am rather amused at the reason the hon. minister has given, that the erection of this dam is going to interfere with the crossing of the river by a ferry. However, I do not wish to make any objection. I think the idea is a very good one.

Mr. BLAIN. What will be the increased cost to make the provision for the municipality?

Mr. PUGSLEY. $63,000 is the estimate.

Mr. MEIGHEN. I understand the minister to say that the present vote of $55,000 will complete the opening of the river for all the purposes of navigation, but will not complete the bridge?

Mr. PUGSLEY. This will complete the payments under the existing contracts, but will not complete the approaches to the bridge or the sodding.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Can the minister give the total cost of the improvements to the rapids, inclusive of the bridge, except the approaches to which he has alluded?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The total expenditure from the beginning will run to about $1,500,000.

Mr. LALOR. What is the tonnage on Lake Winnipeg?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not know the tonnage, but there are a considerable number of vessels plying from Selkirk to the foot of the lake. I know that there are two regular steamers and a considerable number of other vessels. It is anticipated that as a result of building these works so as to enable vessels to go right up to the city of Winnipeg the traffic upon the river and lake will be greatly increased in the near future. I have information of at least two vessels which have been constructed especially in view of the construction of this lock and dam. Lake Winnipeg is a very important lake. It is larger than Lake Ontario, and it is impossible to foresee what will be the traffic in the near future.

Mr. J. HAGGART. Before that lock was built one of the objections to it was the danger of ice jamming. The ice used to jam at the mouth of the Red river and raise the water in the city of Winnipeg. I have seen it on the streets there. Has the building of this dam and lock increased to any extent the danger of flooding the city of Winnipeg and district?

Mr. PUGSLEY. We are quite sure that it has not, and the reason of that is that, owing to the chief engineer of my department having in view the very danger which my hon. friend speaks of, the department engaged upon the construction of a dam and lock which are altogether unique upon the continent. There are some in the old country where the conditions are similar. Here the river takes its rise in the south, the ice melts farther up the river before it does near its mouth, and by a system of lifting or movable curtains we believe we have avoided the possibility of the danger of which my hon. friend speaks.

Mr. J. HAGGART. Is it a movable dam?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Practically a movable dam.

Mr. J. HAGGART. It is taken up on the shore when not in use?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, it is raised by electrical power.

Mr. J. HAGGART. I have seen them; there is one on the Sault Ste. Marie canal.

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, there is nothing like this in America.

Mr. J. HAGGART. Oh, yes there is.

Mr. PUGSLEY. No.

Mr. J. HAGGART. Pardon me, I have seen them.

Mr. PUGSLEY. We sent an expert to Europe for the purpose of examining the lock and dam where the conditions are similar, but there is no place in America where there is a similar contrivance.

Mr. J. HAGGART. The dam may be not exactly like the others, but the old dam used for the purpose of stopping the water above the Sault Ste. Marie canal is similar. It is a frame work and they let it into the river with pulleys.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is altogether different.

Mr. J. HAGGART. And when it is not in use it is lifted up and taken on shore. This is a plan that has been used very often for the purpose of blocking up rivers.

Mr. CONMEE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) has reference to the temporary gates used on the canal in case of accident.

Mr. J. HAGGART. It is for canal purposes.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have no doubt the foundation principle is the same. But we believe that we have vastly improved upon that by means of this system of lifting curtains.

Mr. J. HAGGART. No doubt.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Perhaps we are not warranted in asking the minister to withhold the item, but the members for the two constituencies directly interested are not here. My hon. friend from Winnipeg (Mr. A. Haggart) has not yet returned from his Easter holidays, but I understand that he will be here on Saturday. My hon. friend from Selkirk (Mr. Bradbury) is in the city, but I have been unable to get in touch with him to have him here while this vote is under consideration. I would like if the minister would permit either of these gentlemen at a later stage to speak on the matter.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I would be very glad to. Both of these hon. gentlemen have already spoken on the question, and I am sure that they would regret that there should be any delay in the passing of the item. The hon. member for Selkirk a short time ago spoke in very strong terms of the importance of finishing up these approaches and of the very great importance of the work. But when they come there will be no objection to their speaking in regard to this when any other item is under discussion, of course, with the permission of the chairman.

St. John harbour, New Brunswick—improvements, $450,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is for the purpose of continuing the work of dredging in the harbour of St. John and of completing the new pier which is now under construction. The work is all under contract, and we anticipate that this amount would be required during the current year.

Mr. DANIEL. Will any of this be spent in Courtenay bay?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am unable to tell my hon. friend at the present time whether it will or not.

Mr. DANIEL. Could the minister state whether the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company or the National Transcontinental Railway Commissioners have purchased any land at the head of Courtenay bay?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I may say to my hon. friend that I have been informed that they have agreed to purchase such land, but whether they have actually completed the purchase, I am not aware.

Mr. DANIEL. Supposing that the purchase is made, work would have to go on on Courtenay bay, would it not?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I always believe in deciding a matter when the necessity arises.

Mr. DANIEL. Then the necessity will not arise this summer?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It does not follow.

Mr. DANIEL. The minister has no information to give on the subject?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not at the present moment.

Mr. J. HAGGART. When the minister is getting a vote, and when an expenditure is to be made at a particular point, he should be prepared to say whether that expenditure is to be made there or not. He should give precise information in reference to what he intends to use the money for.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Suppose he is unable to do so, what then?

Mr. J. HAGGART. Well then, he is not justified in asking for the money.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I may say to my hon. friend that the contracts which are now actually in existence upon the western side of the harbour will require all of this money, provided we keep the dredges upon the western side, but if the Grand Trunk Pacific should complete, as I apprehend they will complete, the purchase of the land around Courtenay bay, then, in the ordinary course, they would, I presume, submit plans for the consideration of the government in regard to the improvements which would be requisite in connection with terminal facilities. Then, it would be my duty to take up the question as to whether we would take some of the dredges that are now employed upon the western side and place them on Courtenay bay; but at the present moment I cannot decide that because I must know what the Grand Trunk Pacific intend to do before coming to a conclusion.

Mr. J. HAGGART. Does not the minister think that it is perhaps more proper that this expenditure should have the consideration of the House rather than that it should be determined by himself? He has come here proposing an expenditure of money for a purpose; he should give the particular purpose for which the money is to be expended. In answer to my hon. friend from St. John (Mr. Daniel), he says that he cannot tell whether a certain amount is to be expended in Courtenay bay or not. That is not an answer. He should have precise information.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I really think that upon reflection my hon. friend will see that I gave a frank statement of what is in my mind at the present time, and that is that the money will be expended upon the western side of the harbour. But, of course, the vote will enable us to expend it on either side of the harbour. If we deemed it necessary in the public interst to expend part on the eastern side of the harbour, I do not see any reason why the government, if they saw fit to do so, could not apply a portion of the money to that purpose, but at the present time it is in contemplation to expend all of this vote upon dredging and wharf building upon the western side of the harbour.

Mr. DANIEL. Can the minister state whether it is the intention of the Grand Trunk Pacific to purchase this land at the head of the bay?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have been informed that it is the intention of the Grand Trunk Pacific to purchase the land at Courtenay bay, but whether they have actually completed the purchase or not, I am not aware.

Mr. EMMERSON. The minister has stated that some of this expenditure might be made in Courtenay bay. Have plans and specifications for that part of the work been prepared?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Borings have been made in Courtenay bay, and although incomplete they show that a depth of 32 feet of water at low tide can be got without striking rock. Preliminary plans have been prepared by the engineers of my department, although they are not sufficiently matured to enable me to give to the committee any details that would be of value. Before engaging in the work, of course, careful consideration would be necessary, and detailed plans would have to be worked out.

Mr. EMMERSON. I presume no contract will be asked for until the detail or working plans are prepared?

Mr. PUGSLEY. None would be entered into.

Mr. EMMERSON. Is it proposed to do this work by government tenders or to invite tenders for the work that may be decided on after plans have been completed?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Some time ago tenders were called by public advertisement for dredging in St. John harbour, including Courtenay bay. Tenders were received from three contractors: G. S. Mayes, if I remember, asked 74 cents per cubic yard; the Dominion Dredging Company asked 39½ cents, and the Maritime Dredging & Contracting Company asked 35 cents per cubic yard, if done with an ordinary dipper dredge, or 25 cents per cubic yard if done with a suction or hydraulic dredge. No contract was entered into, but in the contract which was made for the dredging upon the west side of the harbour it was stipulated that if the government called upon the contractors to do the work of dredging in Courtenay bay they would do it at the price named in their tender. The question as to whether it should be done by government dredges or by contract has not been determined. My own view is that there are many advantages in having the work done by a government dredge. I think probably we could get it done more cheaply even than these low figures named by the contractors, which are much lower than anything which have heretofore been obtained at the port of St. John. When the last contracts were let, under public tender, for the western side of the harbour, the lowest tender was that of G. S. Mayes at 90 cents a cubic yard. In considering whether the work should be done by a government dredge we would have to determine the demands on the government fleet of dredges in other places, and also the question of acquiring additional dredges for the purpose. That matter has not been considered by council and will not be considered until we know whether or not the Grand Trunk Pacific propose to have their terminal at Courtenay bay, which I presume they will do if they complete the purchase of the property, and then the question would come up as to how it would be best to have the dredging done, whether by contract or by government dredges.

Mr. DANIEL. In citing the Maritime Dredging and Contracting Company's tender at 25 cents per cubic yard, the minister omitted to state the qualifying clause, 'provided the material was placed behind revetment walls, etc.'

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is so.

Mr. DANIEL. It is not an ordinary tender?

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is the way in which dredging is done by a suction dredge. You have to do it in that way, you have a long pipe and the material is placed in that way.

Mr. EMMERSON. From the information I have been able to gather from statements made in the House, tenders were asked for the work at Courtenay bay in 1908. The tenders relating to Courtenay bay were not accepted although the tenderers were under obligation, if called upon, to perform the work which they offered to do, and, as I understand it, the contract was only entered into on behalf of the government with the lowest tenderers for that work on the western side of the harbour.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is correct.

Mr. EMMERSON. The minister states that no complete detail or working plans have been prepared and the extent of the work has not been determined by the department for the proposed expenditure. I have been led to believe that the dredging alone would cost two or three millions. I may be wrong, but I gathered from an answer in the House some weeks ago that when these tenders were invited only $6,000 of a deposit was required. Evidently the government did not contemplate so great an expenditure on the part of the contractors when they only asked the contractors to furnish a deposit of $6,000. Of course if the government only propose to carry out the contract, and not have any work done in Courtenay bay by these contractors, that would seem to be all right. But if it is proposed to extend that work, then I do not think it is in the public interest to take a step involving so large an expenditure without inviting tenders for the work which has yet to be determined. Now, the minister has stated that this vote is for the western side, and that possibly in consequence of some contingent action on the part of the Grand Trunk Pacific it might be necessary to have the dredges on the western side of the harbour removed to Courtenay bay to do that work. Then it must be in the mind of the minister that the contractors for the western side of the harbour propose to do the work on the Courtenay bay side. I simply want to know whether that is in contemplation and if it is involved in this vote, because if it is, I would take serious exception to it, and would take the trouble to advance reasons why that should not be done. I simply ask the minister that I may know, and that the country may know, his plans in respect to the matter.

Mr. GERMAN. I notice that the minister says he has not yet decided whether the work to be done in St. John harbour shall be done by contract or by government dredges. A year ago I asked for a return of the number of dredges owned by the government, and the work they had been doing during the last three years. The return shows the amount of work these dredges have done, and I have made up a statement of the relative cost of doing the work which has been done by government dredges, and the cost of work done by similar dredges which are owned by contractors; and I intend on another occasion to speak at greater length on this matter. But I wish to call the attention of the minister to the fact that work can be done, and is being done, by contractors at a cheaper price than the work that is being done by government dredges. The government owns at present an enormous fleet of dredges and dredging plant, I think they own a greater amount of dredging plant than they should own. I am absolutely opposed to doing work of that kind by government dredges. If the hon. minister will look at the work which was done by the dredge 'W. S. Fielding' in St. John harbour during 12 months, he will find that the work done by that dredge, apparently working continuously for the 12 months, did not exceed the amount which such a dredge should do in two months. The dredge cost over $600,000, and working for 12 months straightaway, winter and summer, it moved less than 400,000 yards of material. A dredge which cost that much money ought to remove that much material in two months.

Mr. EDWARDS. What kind of material?

Mr. GERMAN. Ordinary clay; this dredge would not work in any other kind of material, it would not work in harder material. It is an endless bucket dredge, and works only in comparatively soft material, it would not work in hard pan.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is just what it is doing in St. John harbour, the very hardest kind of material.

Mr. GERMAN. I won't dispute the hon. gentleman, because he apparently lives there. But my knowledge of such dredges is that they usually work in comparatively soft material, not in what is called hardpan and boulders, because the buckets are not large enough to hold large boulders. I am positive that if the minister looks over the records he will find that the government own at present all the dredges that they should own, and that the policy of the government in buying and building more dredges should be reversed, that work of this kind should be let by public tender, that it should be let to the lowest bidder, that there should be no arrangements made with bidders beforehand, but the man who is the lowest bidder on that particular job should get the work.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am glad to hear what my hon. friend (Mr. German) has just said. I quite agree with him when he says that when contracts are let they should be given to the lowest bidder. But I may say to my hon. friend, and I am sure he will agree with me from his knowledge of what has taken place, that that is the case in all contracts let by the Department of Public Works, and I believe by all other departments of the government. But the question which my hon. friend raises as to whether it is better to do dredging by government dredges or by contract, is one with regard to which there may very properly be differences of opinion. My own view, notwithstanding what my hon. friend has said, is strongly that it is in the public interest to extend the number of government-owned dredges. I would like myself to see all the dredging of the country performed by government dredges. While, perhaps, there may not be just as much work done by government dredges per day as may be done by contract dredges, yet upon the whole, I think they can do the work more cheaply, because contractors, of course, necessarily figure upon the cost of their plant, they naturally look for reasonable profits from their work, and of course each contractor has to insure for himself. So, upon the whole I am inclined to think that it would be to the public advantage to increase the number of government dredges rather than diminish it. But, of course, that is a matter of opinion with regard to which hon. gentlemen may differ. Now a word with regard to the dredge 'Fielding.' My hon. friend makes a comparison of its work with work which may be done by a contract dredge in some other section of the country. You cannot make a reliable comparison in that way. The dredge 'Fielding' is dredging the channel of the harbour of St. John. The material consists of hard material, in addition there are a good many boulders. I have been on board the dredge, and I have seen the operations stopped by very large boulders getting into the buckets, and when one of these boulders does get in the buckets it delays the operation of the dredge for a considerable time. It is dredging out a part of the harbour where it is greatly exposed to the weather, as gales arise there frequently, and when these storms occur the dredge has to stop working. To make a proper comparison one would have to take a contract for dredging at a similar place, and under similar circumstances. It is to be borne in mind that the dredge 'Fielding' is dredging to a depth of 55 feet below the water when the tide is high, and there is a wonderful difference between working under those circumstances and going into a bank of soft mud, and simply shovelling out the soft material by means of a dipper. I took pains to make inquiries as to the work being done by the 'Fielding' last summer, and while I cannot give the exact figures, I believe it was doing most creditable work.

Mr. GERMAN. In July, 1909, it dug out 69,000 cubic yards, and in August 52,400.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Under the circumstances it was doing very good work. With ordinary dredging material, 10,000 cubic yards per day is an unusual quantity.

Mr. J. HAGGART. What kind of a dredge?

Mr. PUGSLEY. An elevator dredge with an endless chain of buckets.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is the capacity of the buckets?

Mr. PUGSLEY. About one cubic yard, taking about one ton to each bucket. In reply to the question of my hon. friend from Westmorland (Mr. Emmerson), I do not think that the dredging in Courtenay bay is involved in this vote, because if we should contemplate dredging at that bay, we would have to get a larger vote. Should we come to the conclusion to do that work, we would have necessarily to ask for an additional amount in the supplementaries, and my hon. friends would then have the opportunity of fully discussing the item.

Mr. J. HAGGART. When introducing this vote, the hon. gentleman said that a portion of it might be used for dredging at Courtenay bay.

Mr. PUGSLEY. But involved in that was the understanding that I would have to obtain a further vote in the supplementaries. But if there be no further vote, I would not use any part of this in that work because the vote would be too small.

Mr. J. HAGGART. The hon. minister went further. He asked for tenders, and awarded a contract, and those tenders covered that particular work of dredging out Courtenay bay, and he did that without a vote from parliament at all.

Mr. PUGSLEY. No.

Mr. J. HAGGART. We knew nothing about Courtenay bay until the hon. member for Westmorland gave the information.

Mr. EMMERSON. The information I gave was contained in a return made before the House.

Mr. J. HAGGART. Then I am only speaking for myself. I did not know the information until I heard it given by the hon. member for Westmorland. To my astonishment I hear that this involves an expenditure of between two and three million dollars for dredging Courtenay bay. The plans and specifications, and an estimate of the cost, and a full statement of the work to be done should be given by the minister before he asks for a dollar. The minister corrects himself now, and says he would not venture upon the work without a subsequent vote. That was not the statement he made on the introduction of the vote. According to that statement, it appeared that we were giving the minister power to make an expenditure in Courtenay bay. I protest against any such manner of introducing so important a vote —a vote that will add to the enormous expenditure which we are at present making on the Transcontinental an expenditure of over $3,000,000. We should have the plans and specifications, and a complete estimate. What authority had the minister to ask for tenders for the purpose of beginning the work?

Mr. PUGSLEY. We had a vote in 1908 of $400,000 for St. John harbour.

Mr. J. HAGGART. That does not include Courtenay bay.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes it does.

Mr. J. HAGGART. The vote for St. John harbour, we are now told, covers the expenditure on another place which is a little distant from that harbour—a new harbour proposed for the use of the Grand Trunk Pacific. That was never explained, and we would not have known anything about Courtenay bay only we saw in the newspapers that the Grand Trunk Pacific intended to purchase it for a terminus. What this House must have is a statement showing what work is contemplated, and the necessity for it, and a complete estimate of the expenditure. If the statement of the hon. member for Westmorland is correct, the expenditure involved is between two and three million dollars.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I want to correct an error into which my hon. friend evidently has fallen, and perhaps not unnaturally, because he says this is the first time he heard of any proposed improvements at Courtenay bay. The reason is he was not aware of the return having been brought down, to which my hon. friend from Westmorland has referred. He says that we entered into a contract for the dredging of Courtenay bay. That is what we did not do.

Mr. J. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman received tenders for the purpose of doing this work?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, but in my judgment Courtenay bay is a part of St. John harbour. Vessels have been for a hundred years going up Courtenay bay. There are one or two small wharfs at the head of the bay, and vessels have always gone there. By the charter of the city, that bay is declared to be a part of the city and harbour of St. John. True, the boundary is at Marsh creek, which runs down through the bay, but it is a part of the harbour. I did call for tenders, but we did not enter into any contract. The matter, therefore, is in this position, that if the government should decide to go on with the work of assisting in the terminals of the Grand Trunk Pacific, should the Grand Trunk Pacific decide to make a terminal there, it will be open to the government to determine whether that work should be done by contract or by one or more government dredges. My hon. friend misunderstood me when he understood me to say that a part of this money would be used for dredging at Courtenay bay. The hon. member for the city of St. John (Mr. Daniel) asked me if a part would be so used, and I said I did not know. The reason I do not know is because I cannot tell whether the government will decide to put in the supplementary estimates any amount for the purpose of dredging out that bay. But I can assure the committee that unless there should be a further amount voted for dredging out Courtenay bay, no part of this vote will be used for that purpose. But if there should be an amount in the supplementaries, the matter can be fully discussed, and plans will be submitted. In making this statement, I want it to be clearly understood that the government has not decided to do any dredging at Courtenay bay. The matter is entirely open. I am only speaking now of what may take place in case an amount should be put in the supplementary estimates. Personally, I am in favour of proceeding at an early date to make improvements at Courtenay bay, always provided that the Grand Trunk decide upon that as their terminal. That is only my own individual view; the government has not considered the matter at all. If it should be decided to go on, it would necessarily come in further estimates, and then the matter would be all open for discussion.

Mr. EMMERSON. The statement made by the minister is as I would have expected. Knowing from the return, the circumstances connected with it, I did not for a moment assume that this vote was intended for the development of that portion of the harbour of St. John known as Courtenay Bay harbour. I recognized that tenders had been asked for dredging in St. John harbour, inclusive of Courtenay bay, but I also recognized that the government had not entered into any such contract, and that in making the contract with the successful tenderers they provided in it that they could call upon the contractors to do work in Courtenay bay if they desired, but that the contractors could not hold the government under any obligation to give them the work or to have the work done. I, therefore, assumed that there would be no such work entered upon by these contractors, and furthermore, I had assumed that if any work was entered upon, we would have the full plans and specifications laid before parliament, and that tenders would be asked for that additional work. In a work that involves millions of dolllars, you would naturally expect that those who would be invited to compete for it should make a greater deposit than a mere pittance of $6,000; a pittance in comparison to the great expenditure. As I understand the minister, the matter stands in this way: that no part of this sum of $450,000 is to be expended in connection with the Courtenay bay work.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Unless there should be a further sum asked for.

Mr. EMMERSON. Then you would have the two amounts aggregated?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. GERMAN. I want to impress as emphatically as I can on the minister my views as to the policy of the government owning and operating government dredges. I may say that the 'Fielding' —and this applies to almost every dredge that is operated by the government—the 'Fielding' cost $612,784; she worked the whole year from the 1st of April, 1908, to the 1st of March, 1909, and she excavated only 350,540 cubic yards, and I am in the judgment of the engineer of the department, that that dredge should have done that amount of work in two months. An ordinary dipper dredge which will not cost more than $30,000 will excavate 5,000 cubic yards of material in a day.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Oh, no.

Mr. GERMAN. I know whereof I speak.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. How much did the 'Fielding' cost?

Mr. GERMAN. She cost $612,784; the cost of operating her for twelve months was $61,221, and the cost of maintaining her for the twelve months $14,113.

Mr. BOYCE. How much did she earn?

Mr. GERMAN. I would not think she would be earning anything.

Mr. BOYCE. What was the value of the work she did?

Mr. GERMAN. Taking operating and maintenance expenses, and without calculating anything for interest or for depreciation, the cost would amount to about twenty-two cents per yard. What applies to the 'Fielding' applies to every dredge owned by the government, as I believe I can emphatically show the minister. The dredging done by the government dredges costs more than the dredging done by contract work.

Mr. DANIEL. A dipper dredge could not operate at all where the 'Fielding' has been operating, because she is exposed to the winds and the roll of the Bay of Fundy.

Mr. GERMAN. I am not saying anything about that, but let her do more work for the money that is being spent on her.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I know myself of dredges owned by contractors which have cost from $100,000 to $150,000 and more, and in fifty feet of water upon the sea-coast they never make on an average more than from 1,000 to 1,500 cubic yards a day. There is not a dipper dredge in Canada that in fifty feet of water could dredge 5,000 cubic yards a day. My hon. friend (Mr. German) would want to pursue the inquiry further, and consider what is done by contract dredges working under similar conditions to the 'Fielding'. We are getting dredging done by contract as low as eleven cents in some places, while in other places we are paying ninety cents per cubic yard. Some dredges do work as low as one and a half cents per cubic yard, and others do it at twenty cents, forty cents, sixty cents; it all depends upon the conditions. The splendid hydraulic dredge 'J. I. Tarte', does work at three or four cents per cubic yard under peculiarly advantageous circumstances.

Mr. BRADBURY. What does dredging cost per cubic yard on the Red river?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have not that information at hand.

Mr. BARNARD. What is the estimated total amount to be spent on St. John harbour, including Courtenay bay?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It depends entirely upon the extent of the work to be done, and of course that depends upon the development of the business. The development of St. John as a winter port began in 1895, and since then the business has been increasing from year to year until now it has reached a volume of from twenty millions to twenty-five million dollars of exports during the winter season. The number of steamers coming to that harbour is constantly increasing, and we hope the number will continue to increase. It will take many, many years before the St. John harbour will be finally completed. What it will eventually cost I am unable to say. At present we are building a wharf upon the western side of the harbour which will accommodate two additional steamers; we are doing dredging for a series of wharfs which will be needed in the future, and we are making provision for the building of an additional wharf in the near future which will give accommodation for two more steamers. When we have done that, I think we might let the work rest for a few years, until the trade develops still further, and there is a more urgent demand for additional wharfs.

Mr. J. HAGGART. Can the minister give the total expenditure by his department and by the Railway Department on the harbour of St. John from 1867 to the present time?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am sorry to say that I have not that information.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Has the minister received any serious complaints from Port Arthur to the effect that some of the contractors who were dredging there and who had orders to carry out the material in the night-time frequently went out with only a few barrow fulls, and that the inspectors were not doing their duty in that district?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No such complaint has reached me.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Will the minister look into the matter?

Mr. PUGSLEY. If my hon. friend will be good enough to furnish me with any details he has in his possession, I shall be very glad to look into it.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I have reason to believe that it is worth the minister's while to look into the matter—to ask his inspectors at least.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is last year that my hon. friend refers to?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Yes.

Mr. PUGSLEY. If my hon. friend has any further information and will give it to me, I shall be glad to have the matter investigated.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Do these improvements relate solely to dredging or do they include other matters?

Mr. PUGSLEY. They include dredging and the building of a wharf now under construction on the western side of the harbour.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Not on Courtenay bay?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. How far is Courtenay bay from that wharf?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The entrance to Courtenay bay is less than half a mile. It begins just at the eastern side of what is ordinarily known as the harbour of St. John.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The minister obviously has some plan of improvement in contemplation when he is asking for this vote. The question was put to him a little while ago, and he did not answer it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, I have a complete plan of contemplated improvements on the west side, which it is hoped the business of the future will require—not the immediate future, but we must look forward a good many years in the case of a port which is rapidly developing. This plan includes dredging from Sand point to the Beacon bar, and a series of ships berths between these two points. When the development is finally completed, it will give additional accommodation for about ten ocean steamers.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is this below the Canadian Pacific terminals?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, to the southward.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. How many berths are there now?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think there is accommodation for six ocean steamers, and we are at present providing for two more. The plan contemplates ten in addition to these two, giving accommodation for about 18 steamers in all.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I also understood from the minister that he desires authority to devote a portion of this vote to development in Courtenay bay?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, we would require the greater part of this amount to complete the wharfs which are now under construction on the west side and in order to finish up the dredging work for the additional wharf we contemplate building to the south of Sand point; and therefore, unless we had a further vote, it would be useless to take any part of this for the development of Courtenay bay. No part of this will be devoted to that purpose. If we should ask for a further amount, then I will bring such plans as we have, and give the committee all necessary information in regard to it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I simply wanted a clear understanding of the matter. If any portion of this money is to be devoted to improvements at Courtenay bay, then the country would, of course, be committed to some plan of development there, in which case we would want the minister's explanation. But I understand that no portion of this money will be devoted to the carrying out of any plan at Courtenay bay until a further sum is asked for and full explanations of such plan are given to the committee.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Quite so.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Has the land at Courtenay bay been acquired by the Grand Trunk Pacific Company?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have been informed by the company that they had made an arrangement to purchase the land at Courtenay bay, this will take in all the land at the head of the bay and also the foreshore right of Messrs. Gilbert, the owners of the property.

Mr. DANIEL. How large an area?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The land at the head of the bay covers an area of about 75 acres, and the tide flats cover several hundred acres, of which they would be the riparian owners. Whether they have actually completed the purchase or not I have not been informed.

Mr. DANIEL. I saw it stated in the press, regarding the option said to be held for this purpose, that the area on the shore was 31 or 32 acres and that there was a similar area of foreshore about 64 or 65 acres altogether.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think my hon. friend has been misinformed as to that. I think it takes in all the head of Courtenay bay, extending from the Marsh creek around to the property owned by the late Mr. Dunn.

Mr. DANIEL. The minister is not in a position to state whether the Grand Trunk Pacific intend to buy that additional area or not?

Mr. PUGSLEY. All I can say to my hon. friend is that the officials of the company have informed me that they have decided to purchase the property, but whether they have completed the purchase or not I am unable to say.

Mr. TODD. Could not facilities be provided for the accommodation of the Grand Trunk Pacific on the west side of the harbour? If so, it would save a very large expenditure which will otherwise have to be undertaken by this country in connection with the Courtenay bay project.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The company have, through their officials, informed me, that they have their engineer at St. John and they are of opinion that the west side would not, owing to the difficulty of the approach, afford to them the adequate facilities that they want for their terminal. As my hon. friend is no doubt aware, in order to get to the west side they would have to use the Canadian Pacific railway, crossing over by their line at the falls and then going around to the terminals of the Canadian Pacific railway. Rival companies have serious objections to using each other's lines, I suppose, because of the difficulty of making arrangements. But the president of the Grand Trunk Pacific, Mr. Hays, has informed me that Courtenay bay presents an ideal site for terminals, and he has also told me that as a result of a visit to St. John of their engineer, he is of opinion that this presents the only opportunity at St. John which would enable them to get the terminals which they would desire for the great business they expect will go over the Transcontinental railway. They could get limited accommodation in connection with the Intercolonial terminals, but their opinion is that Courtenay bay presents the ideal opportunity for railway terminals.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. How many berths are there at the Intercolonial railway terminals?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Only two, and they are filled all the time during the winter with the present business.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Are they capable of extension?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Other property might be bought at the head of the harbour, but the difficulty is to get yard room. Space is very limited at the head of the harbour, as my hon. friend from St. John knows.

Mr. BARNARD. I understand that the wharfs that the minister mentioned in connection with the harbour at St. John are wharfs which are provided for the moving of commerce generally. How much wharfage has the minister there?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Of course, there are wharfs in connection with the Intercolonial railway. The Intercolonial has two berths for ocean steamers at the head of the harbour, and then there is also what is known as the ballast wharf terminal. That makes three. But at the ballast wharf I do not think the water is deep enough for the largest ocean steamers. Upon the western side of the harbour the wharfs have practically all, up to the present time, been constructed by the city of St. John.

Mr. BARNARD. By private individuals?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, by the corporation of St. John at their own expense, and the people have felt that a heavy burden has been imposed on them because they have been called upon to provide terminal facilities for the trade of Canada, not for the local trade, but to enable the exports and imports of Canada in the winter season to pass through a Canadian port. They have expended in the vicinity of $1,250,000 for that purpose. It has been expended for a national purpose, and they have not felt that they could go any further. They came to me when I was elected and became minister and urged that further facilities ought to be provided at the expense of Canada, keeping in mind all they had done for this national purpose. I then, with the approval of my colleagues, entered upon the construction of a wharf in extension of the wharfs which had been built by the city upon the western side of the harbour, and the department is now building an additional wharf which will give accommodation for two more ocean steamers on the western side. Then, we have in contemplation, in the near future, the building of another wharf to the south of Sand point which will give accommodation for two more steamers.

Mr. BARNARD. There are no privately owned docks?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not for ocean steamers.

Tiffin harbour—improvements, $120,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is to continue the work of drilling and dredging at Tiffin. We are providing for a depth of 25 feet at low water. This is to provide a harbour in connection with the Grand Trunk railway. I may say this is a part of the national transportation scheme which was recommended by the Transportation Commission whose recommendations the government is endeavouring to carry out. Tiffin harbour is to be used pimarily as a point for the transhipment of the products of the west. The Grand Trunk railway are building a railway with a grade not exceeding four-tenths of one per cent eastward, over which they will be able to carry large trains of cars with one locomotive, and they hope so to reduce the cost—and in this they are emulating the Canadian Pacific railway in connection with their work at Victoria harbour—of carrying grain eastward that they will be able to divert a large portion of the grain from the Northwest which now goes by way of Buffalo and other American ports through Canadian channels and Canadian seaports. This is a very important national work, and we are asking for this amount in order to carry it to completion. We hope that by next fall we will be able to give deep water accommodation up to the splendid system of elevators which the Grand Trunk are building at Tiffin.

Mr. SPROULE. The Grand Trunk have heretofore been using Midland. Do they intend to establish a new port at Tiffin?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, their through transportation business will be done at Tiffin.

Mr. ARTHURS. I would like to ask the minister if these wharfs being built at Tiffin are on property owned by the government or by the Grand Trunk?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The government is not building any wharfs at Tiffin. All the wharf building is being done by the Grand Trunk itself.

Mr. ARTHURS. Has the government built none of the wharfs in the past there?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No.

Mr. SPROULE. Is this intended to complete this dredging or only a part of it?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It ought to very nearly complete the work we have in hand there.

Mr. BARNARD. What is the railway company spending there?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Several million dollars. They are building a magnificent elevator and wharfs, they are spending a large amount.

Mr. SPROULE. Is this by contract?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, by contract let after public tender to the Canadian Dredging and Construction Company at twenty-nine cents per cubic yard for ordinary material.

Vancouver harbour, British Columbia—improvements, $67,500.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I explained this the other day. We are asked to make very considerable improvements at Vancouver. One is the widening of the First Narrows. The entrance to the harbour is only about 600 feet wide. There is quite a heavy run of tide, and often it is foggy, and by reason of the great increase in the number of vessels entering the harbour there is considerable danger attending the navigation of that part of it. Some time ago a collision occurred, and some lives were lost. We propose widening the harbour to 1,200 feet. There are also some improvements at the entrance of False creek which we have under consideration.

Victoria harbour, British Columbia—improvements, $48,750.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is a very important work. It will consist of rock drilling, and dredging in Victoria harbour to improve the channel, and also broadening out the inner harbour in the vicinity of the Canadian Pacific Railway dock, and the new dock about to be constructed by the Grand Trunk Pacific. My information is that the business of Victoria is rapidly increasing. During the present season there will be a considerable addition to the number of steamers frequenting the port, and the improvement seems necessary to accommodate the increased shipping. We propose acquiring, if our information as to their usefulness is confirmed, two Lobnitz rock breakers to carry on the work of rock-drilling as rapidly as possible, and we will have one or more dredges to remove the rock as it is broken. We propose continuing as rapidly as we can the general work of improving the harbour.

Mr. BARNARD. I understood from the minister that this would not be sufficient for the purchase of these machines.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The question of what additional amount should be voted is now before council.

Victoria harbour, Ontario—improvements, $108,750.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This represents to the Canadian Pacific railway what Tiffin represents to the Grand Trunk railway. It is a part of the transportation system of the Canadian Pacific railway. They are building elevators, and wharfs, and the government is doing the dredging. I think this will nearly if not entirely complete the work we have in hand at Victoria harbour. It is under contract to the Canadian Dredging and Construction Company at 12½ cents for ordinary material, and $2.25 for rock and boulders. That illustrates the difference in cost. There you have the ordinary material tendered for by the lowest tenderer at 12½ cents at Victoria, Ontario, and 29 cents at Tiffin more than twice as much at Tiffin as at Victoria harbour, and yet the contracts in both cases were let after wide public competition, and to the lowest tenderer.

Mr. BLAIN. The same class of dredge?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The same class of dredge. It is the difference in the conditions, and the material to be dredged. In one case the contractors thought it would be worth 29 cents, and they tendered at that. In the other case it was 12½ cents.

Mr. SPROULE. It is to be hoped they will not be able to count up the material as the contractors have been able to do on the Grand Trunk Pacific or they should make a very profitable thing on it. I suppose the government can only depend on their inspector to ascertain the different quantities of the different materials?

Mr. PUGSLEY. We have taken every precaution to protect the public interest. I recognized after I became minister the fact that the country was to a certain extent at the mercy of the inspectors, and I have taken every precaution to guard against any improper conduct on their part. We require them not only to prepare returns as to the quantities, but to make a solemn declaration, which is the same as an oath, that they are on the work, that they personally inspect each scow load that goes out, and make the measurement in the manner prescribed. We also inspect the inspectors, we have persons who are inspecting them, and their work as well.

Mr. BLAIN. Is that a new office, an inspector of inspectors?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, it is not a new office.

Mr. BLAIN. Is it a new policy?

Mr. PUGSLEY. We do that through the resident engineers, and their assistants. We keep careful oversight over the inspectors.

Mr. BRADBURY. Before that item is passed, I would like to call the attention of the minister to the fact that there is no fish-way provided at St. Andrew's rapids, and the river is in a very unsatisfactory condition so far as fishing is concerned. It was a serious oversight not to provide a fish-way. I drew the attention of the Marine Department some time ago to the fact, and I understood they were to take it up with the minister. Has that been done?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The matter has not yet been brought to my attention by the Marine Department, but I will have it looked into.

Mr. BRADBURY. I would like to impress upon the minister the importance of this matter, because under present conditions no fish from Lake Winnipeg can get past the St. Andrew's dam; consequently the upper part of my constituency and the city of Winnipeg are denied the use of those fish.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Would the fish venture past the sewers of the city of Winnipeg, and would that affect them at all?

Mr. BRADBURY. Not at all.

Dredging in Quebec and Ontario, $675,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This amount is to make provision for operating during the present year the dredging plant, and also to make payments for work which will be done under contract in different places. In the province of Quebec work will be done at various points on the lakes and rivers, also in the province of Ontario a good deal of work will be done at various harbours upon Lakes Ontario, Erie, Huron and the Georgian bay.

Mr. BLAIN. How about Port Credit?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think that is a private harbour, is it not?

Mr. BLAIN. Sometimes my hon. friend expends public money on private harbours.

Mr. GERMAN. I would ask the minister what new dredging plant he proposes to acquire in the province of Ontario? I see that he has a vote for new dredging plant in the provinces of Ontario and Quebec, as well as other provinces. If it is a proper question, I would like to know what dredging plant the department intends to acquire in Ontario?

Mr. PUGSLEY. We require to get a hull for the dredge 'Nipissing,' a new boiler and machinery for the dredge 'Nipissing,' a new boiler and machinery for the 'Sir John,' a new hull for the 'Challenge,' a new boiler for the 'Mattawa.' two new 32-cubic yard dump scows for the 'Deschenes,' six yawl boats for different vessels, a new light draft tug for dredge No. 3, dippers for several dredges, costing about $500, a new engine for the 'Storm King,' new steel spuds for the 'Industry,' a steel scow and new spuds for the 'International.' We want to do some work upon the tugs 'Lisgar' and 'Peel,' and to complete some payments, amounting to $4,200. The total is $135,000.

Mr. GERMAN. Does the minister propose to purchase any dredging plant in the province of Ontario the coming season?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not out of this vote.

Mr. GERMAN. I understood the minister proposed to purchase some dredging plant from the Dominion Dredging Company. I must say, as I have already said, that I think the government has got all the dredging plant they require, and why they should purchase dredging plant from a company which is now in the dredging business and building new dredges, I cannot understand.

Mr. PUGSLEY. There were some negotiations, but no decision has been arrived at.

Mr. ARTHURS. Is it the intention of the government to operate the dredge now at Lake Nipissing?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. ARTHURS. This dredge did certain work at the mouth of the South river last year, but on account of the removal of the roller dam at the foot of Lake Nipissing, this work has become of little or no use at the present time. The level of the lake has been so much lowered by the removal of these dams that the dredging is of little use. I think some improvement should be made there.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The improvement of conditions on Lake Nipissing is engaging the earnest attention of the department. We are confronted with the difficulty that if we maintain dams at the outlet of the lake, the country is liable to be flooded, and if we do not maintain the necessary dams then the water becomes too low for vessels in many cases to navigate the lake. We are giving earnest attention to the question, and hope we will be able to improve conditions there.

Mr. ARTHURS. I think the minister will find that the trouble at Lake Nipissing is largely caused by the unusual way the dams were built. They were entirely useless in the way they were built.

Mr. PUGSLEY. If we should decide to build new ones, we will endeavour to avoid any mistakes that may have been made.

Mr. BLAIN. I wish to take the occasion of this item to direct the minister's attention to a promise that was made by the government some years ago, and repeated year after year by the Minister of Public Works, that some dredging would be done at Port Credit, Lake Ontario. It is rather an important point, lying between the city of Toronto and the city of Hamilton, on Lake Ontario, where there is a good deal of traffic in the summer time. It was also looked upon as a harbour of refuge. My hon. friend in past years has stated that it was a private harbour. It is a private harbour, but I think it would be in the public interest, and that the government would be discharging a public duty, if they made an appropriation, or took some portion of this money, to do some dredging in that harbour. Many years ago the government did dredge the harbour out and made some pretty liberal expenditure on that work. At that time it was a private harbour and there has been no change since, except that it may have passed from one private owner to another. My hon. friend always in committee, when I have drawn his attention to this matter, has replied that the government cannot spend money on private harbours. But I would like to point out that his department and his predecessors, have spent public money on private harbours. I am not saying that the policy is a good or a bad one, but there are exceptional cases, and this is a case in which there is a great deal of traffic interested. There is a lighthouse in that harbour which is kept up by the government, and a great deal of shipping is going on there at present. A considerable amount of products of different kinds are taken in and out of it, but they can only be taken by very small boats, because of the condition of the harbour, owing to the fact that there has been no dredging done there for many years. I want, as emphatically as I can, to draw my hon. friend's attention to it, and ask if he will not allow some engineer of his department to inspect and make a report upon it, so that he may see whether it would be a wise and proper expenditure to apply some of this money to the dredging of that harbour.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Is Port Credit in my hon. friend's constituency?

Mr. BLAIN. Yes.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I understood my hon. friend to say that he would not say whether it was a wise or an unwise policy to expend public money on dredging in a private harbour, yet he urges me to do it in this case.

Mr. BLAIN. I think it would be a very wise expenditure, and my hon. friend's supporters think it would be also. My hon. friend has in his department at this moment more than one very largely signed petition, signed by the ratepayers in that section, calling on the government to make this expenditure. I said I did not know whether it was wise or unwise to make it a policy of the government to spend public money on private harbours, but that there were exceptional cases, and I regarded this as an exceptional one. It is a very important point; there is a great deal of traffic between Toronto and Hamilton, and this is looked upon as a natural harbour of refuge. A very small expenditure indeed would protect what has already been expended by a former government in that harbour; but if the harbour be allowed to continue in its present condition, and the condition is getting worse and worse every year, it will become useless. If the government does not very soon make some expenditure of public money there it will be necessary to spend a very large amount. My hon. friend will understand my answer to his question when I say that I have no hesitation in declaring that this would be a very wise expenditure. If, when in Toronto, he would take a run out there and see it himself, or if he would send an engineer to examine it, he would find that I am not putting the case at all too strongly.

Mr. PUGSLEY. As the matter has a good deal of importance, not merely to Port Credit, but also to other harbours which are similarly situated, I desire to say that I am rather surprised that my hon. friend who is declaring generally that he is not able to state whether it is a wise or unwise course for the government to spend money on private harbours, but that, in respect of this particular harbour, which happens to be in his constituency, and for reasons which no doubt are eminently satisfactory to himself, the expenditure would be a wise one.

Mr. BLAIN. I did not say that this was the only case.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Of course, it is always easy to make exceptional cases and ask for expenditure for exceptional reasons. I am rather of the opinion that it would be very much better if the people living at Port Credit and at other places where there are private harbours, which their owners are not able to keep in repair, would induce these proprietors to part with the ownership of these horbours and hand them over to the government. I have never been able to understand the policy which induced past governments to hand over the control of harbours to private companies. If there be anything which ought to be owned by the public it is a harbour. I would suggest to my hon. friend whether it would not be better for the people to try and induce this company, which apparently is not able to keep this harbour in proper condition, to hand it over to the Crown, and then I would be pleased to give the matter my most favourable consideration. But even although it is a private harbour, I will not say that I will not make the improvements. I shall have the matter looked into, and if I feel that the work can be done at a reasonable cost, and I can justify it to my colleagues and to this House, I will give it my favourable consideration.

Mr. GERMAN. I know something about Port Credit harbour, and under existing conditions I think it would be an exceedingly unwise policy for the government to spend any money on its improvements. It is very currently rumoured, whether the rumour be true or untrue, that this harbour was purchased simply with the view of getting the government to spend money on it and make it more valuable, and then handing it over to the government at the enhanced value caused by this government expenditure.

Mr. BLAIN. Can the hon. gentleman give any reasons for that statement?

Mr. GERMAN. I say there is a rumour to that effect, whether true or untrue.

Mr. BLAIN. Who are the owners that are seeking to do this?

Mr. GERMAN. My hon. friend must know who the owners are.

Mr. BLAIN. I thought the hon. gentleman did not know much about it.

Mr. GERMAN. I do not know who the owners are, but I have an idea, however.

There is another point I wish to bring to the attention of the minister with regard to the dredging of harbours. I think that in that connection the government could change their policy to the public advantage. I refer to the manner of letting contracts for dredging work in the various harbours on the lakes on which the province of Ontario borders. The policy of the government is to let contracts each spring for work to be done during the season of navigation, and I would suggest to the minister that a better way would be, in the first place, to ascertain the amount of dredging required to be done in each harbour especially, and then call for tenders for the whole work. Let the whole job to the lowest tenderer, and then he would know that when he got his plant on the work it would remain there until the work was completed. The minister will certainly get a lower price for the work under these conditions than if he only lets it for one season, because the contractor may be obliged the following season to move his plant on to some other piece of work, and to tow it there under very large expenditure and risk. I have heard it said that one reason why the government thinks it necessary to own a dredging plant is to prevent a combine amongst the contractors. But if at Port Hope, or Hamilton, or Cobourg, or Midland, or at Victoria, the dredging work to be done on these lake harbours was let to the contractor, not for one season, but for two seasons or five seasons until it was completed, then you would have actual competition among the dredgemen, because the fact that their plant would remain there until the work was completed would be an incentive to them to get down to the lowest possible price. If the minister considers this matter with the officers of his department, I believe he will find that it will tend to the saving of money and the doing of the work more expeditiously than under the present system.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I entirely agree with the remarks of my hon. friend (Mr. German) and I may tell him that the department has adopted that policy and the advertisements now published do not limit the dredging to one season.

Mr. GERMAN. That was the system in the past.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, in most cases, but now we estimate as nearly as we can what quantity of dredging the government is prepared to do in the public interest at these different places, and we call for tenders for the whole work whether it takes one year or two years. I have a remarkable instance of the truth of what my hon. friend (Mr. German) has said in the case of the dredging at St. John harbour, where, before I became minister the work was let for one season, and 90 cents a yard was the lowest tender, but when I became minister it was given to be understood that the contract would not be limited to the one season and the result was that a tender was received to do the work which would run over a number of years, at 39½ cents per cubic yard, or a little over one-third of what had been previously paid when the contract was let for only one year. I believe the adoption of this policy will result in great saving to the country and I shall adopt it as far as I reasonably can.

Mr. BLAIN. I was surprised to hear the hon. member (Mr. German) suggest to the government that it would be unwise to make any expenditure in the harbour of Port Credit, because, as he said, there was a rumour that some company owned this harbour and was desirous of getting public money expended upon it, with the view, I would take it, of making money. Did I understand the hon. gentleman correctly?

Mr. GERMAN. You did.

Mr. BLAIN. If that be the case it will be all in his own family and it has nothing to do with any members on this side of the House. However, I think it is rather a vague rumour. I never heard of such a thing in the county in which the harbour is situated, and I do not think that any person else who lives there ever heard of such a thing being suggested. There is only one reason for expenditure in the harbour of Port Credit and that reason is the public weal. If my hon. friend from Welland will look over the harbour I think he will revise his statement and that he will come back here and suggest that money should be expended on that harbour, no matter what dredging company gets the contract. At all events, the government has a precedent because in years gone by public money was expended there.

Mr. SPROULE. Is this money to be expended for paying the government dredges or for the letting of contracts?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Both.

Mr. SPROULE. The more business-like plan would be for the government to ascertain how much was to be expended in each harbour and then submit an estimate to parliament for the expenditure at each place. The present system leaves a great deal of discretion with the government and they can use this money in almost any way they like. It is sometimes uncharitably said that they occasionally use this money for the betterment of their own friends rather than for the betterment of the harbour. I am not saying whether that is so or not, but as the hon. gentleman from Welland (Mr. German) says it is one of the rumours. I know that there are instances when, because of urgency, dredging has to be done at a particular place, but in voting these large sums of money for general purposes I do not think we are following a sound principle.

Mr. JAMESON. I would like to be permitted at this juncture to supplement the information which I gave to the minister a few days ago with respect to some dredging which is needed in Western Nova Scotia. I may say, with regard to the port of Weymouth, to which I drew the minister's attention at that time, that I have since been informed by some people who are interested in the shipping business there, that there were originally two channels into that harbour, and that during the time the Hon. Mr. Vail occupied a seat in this House—then I think the Minister of Militia and Defence, and representative of the county of Digby—he had one of those channels dammed up with stone with the view of having the other one opened out by dredging. His idea was that a greater flow of water would pass through the wider channel by reason of the closing of the other one. His anticipation in this was not fulfilled, however, and thereafter no dredging was done there, so that what was a fairly tolerable channel at one time has been blocked up, and no other channel has been substituted for it. The old channel gave twelve feet of water at low tide. The present channel does not give anything like that depth, and a small amount of dredging at the bar, as a beginning would make a very great improvement. I merely submit this for the information of the minister, because he was good enough to say the other evening that the matter would have his careful consideration. Now just a word as to the work that has been done at Weymouth heretofore, and as to the revenues which that port has turned into the public treasury. I am informed by people living in that town, who tell me that they are well assured of the accuracy of their statements, that with the exception of this damming of that one channel, no public money has been expended on improvements there since confederation. They further tell me that between $300,000 and $400,000 has been paid into the public treasury in the way of customs duties collected at that port, and they ask in all fairness that a beginning should now be made in this improvement which the harbour needs, and which I have several times urged on the minister to carry out. I trust that with the additional information which I have given him, he will see his way clear to do a reasonable amount of dredging at that port.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I can only say, as I said before to my hon. friend, that I will give the matter my best consideration. If it were possible to do what is called the necessary work at a reasonable expense, without engaging in the larger scheme, I would be in a different position. Sometimes, when I have done a certain amount of dredging at a particular place, I am told that I should have gone a certain distance, and that unless I carry the work to completion what has been done will be wasted. I want to look carefully into the matter of dredging the mouth of the channel; I cannot say what will be done; but I will give it my very best consideration.

Mr. JAMESON. I am asking that this government redress the injury done by a former Liberal government as a beginning,

Mr. WRIGHT. Is it the minister's intention that this increase in the vote will be spent at the head of the lakes?

Mr. PUGSLEY. This has nothing to do with the expenditure at the head of the lakes. That is a special vote on capital account.

Mr. WRIGHT. This will be scattered, then, over the provinces of Ontario and Quebec?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. BLAIN. The minister was going to read a list of the places where this money was to be expended.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The estimated working expenses of the departmental plants, which go about from place to place where dredging is required, amount to $199,100, made up as follows:

Dredge 'Challenge' and plant	$ 8,500
" 'Deschenes'	6,000
" 'International'	13,900
" 'Industry'	16,900
" 'Mattawa'	8,500
" 'Nipissing'	8,500
" No. 3	6,000
" No. 2	6,000
" 'Ontario'	8,500
" 'Ottawa'	13,900
" 'Progress'	13,900
" 'Queen'	8,500
" 'Quebec'	15,000
" 'Richelieu'	8,500
" 'St. Louis'	6,500
" 'Sir Richard'	8,500
Steamer 'Speedy'	13,000
Stonelifter No. 1	2,500
" No. 2	1,000
Tug 'Storm King'	2,000
" 'Blanche'	2,000
Coal steamer 'Rutherford'	2,000
Coal barge 'Sophie Luff'	2,000
" No. 1	1,500
" No. 2	1,500
Contingencies, towing, piling, &c.	3,000
Total	$199,100

These are the expenses of the operating plant in Ontario and Quebec. Then, for the province of Ontario we have under consideration works at the following places: Goderich harbour, Hamilton harbour——

Mr. BLAIN. How much?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think we have a special vote for Goderich; I should not take that in. At Hamilton we expect to spend $15,000 this year, Kincardine, $24,000; Lion's Head, $24,000; Meaford, $25,000; Port Burwell, Port Elgin, Port Hope, River Thames, Rondeau channel.

Mr. BLAIN. Has the minister the amounts that he expects to spend at each of these points?

Mr. PUGSLEY. These are amounts which have been given as estimates, but I cannot say that we will expend them. Port Burwell $7,800. I do not want to give that figure with confidence, because the engineers have gone into the matter carefully and I think it is going to cost a great deal more than that.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Can you give us the basis upon which this estimate has been made up?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It has been made up by the clerk who makes up these amounts from estimates given by the engineering department as to what work is urgently needed at these places. But when we get into the work we might have to change our estimate very considerably. Then, there are Rondeau, Sarnia, Point Edward, Telegraph island, Nigger island, Wiarton, Waubaushene, Thessalon, Wingfield Basin, Oakville, Owen Sound, Whitby and quite a number of other places along the lakes.

Mr. BLAIN. Are all these harbours owned by the government?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not all owned by the government, but they are public harbours.

Mr. BLAIN. Does my hon. friend expect that any portion of this amount will be expended on harbours that are not owned by the government?

Mr. PUGSLEY. None, unless it might be that we might do something at Port Credit. I have not shut the door against it. Then, in Quebec there are Chateauguay, Chicoutimi, Rimouski, River Batiscan, Rivière du Loup en Haut, Rivière du Loup en Bas, Fraserville, Louisville, River Godfroi, River Jesus, River L'Assomption, River Maskinonge, River Nicolet, River St. Francis, St. François du Lac Landing, River St. Maurice mouth, River Saguenay, River Yamache, River Yamaska, St. Pierre Becquets, St. Placide, Three Rivers, and other places. There is dredging work required at Valleyfield, and also at St. Louis river. I am not prepared to give all the different places at the present time. We will not be able to do nearly all the dredging that has been applied for, and which has been urgently recommended by the resident engineers. We will require the amount we are now asking in order to do a reasonable amount of work with the government dredges, and by contract during the coming season.

Mr. JAMESON. Will the minister state where he intends to spend this money in the maritime provinces?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I went into that the other evening. There is no need of my repeating it now, because the hon. gentleman will find it in 'Hansard.'

Mr. JAMESON. I think he mentioned some places, but he was not prepared to give all the places at which there might be an expenditure.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I named a large number of places where dredging is required, but I said that I was not able to name all the places. I am not yet able to name them all. We cannot hope to overtake all the work during the present year.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. No, but when the minister is asking $675,000 for the maritime provinces that proposed appropriation must be based on some estimate in the department. I do not suppose that the officers of his department go at it blind in striking an estimate of $675,000, just as their fancy may dictate, but it must be based upon a supposed requirement. I would suppose that that requirement must also be based upon the details of the expenditure proposed at different places. I think it would greatly assist the committee if the minister would give that information. I can hardly conceive that it does not exist.

Mr. PUGSLEY. With respect to the different places where dredging is required we have reports made of the estimated quantities, and from these reports we ask for a certain amount for dredging. The amount we are asking for we know will not do the work at all these places.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I know, but would not the officer say something like this: Here are twenty-five places; well, there are twenty of them in which we must do dredging to a certain amount at this place; and so he would arrive at the estimate of $675,000? I cannot understand how that estimate is arrived at unless it be by some such method as that or by mere rule of thumb.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is neither one nor the other.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Well, what is it?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Take the dredging required in the provinces of Ontario, and Quebec to-day, and which might with advantage be undertaken in the public interest, and I am sure it would run up to several millions of dollars. But, we cannot do all that at once. Therefore, I endeavour to get from my colleagues as much as I can. We have asked for $675,000, and we will have to use this in the places where it is most urgently required in the public interest. If my hon. friend will look through the newspapers he will see that we are advertising for dredging in Ontario, and Quebec, specifying the different places where work is to be done this year.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not think the minister has misunderstood although one would almost gather from his remarks that he had. I thoroughly understand that a great many millions of dollars are probably required for dredging purposes in Quebec, and in the maritime provinces and that the work must be performed in the next ten or fifteen years. But I am not talking now about the cost of work to be done in the next fifteen years; I am talking about this year for which an appropriation of $675,000 is asked, and I am asking what seems to me to be an obvious question—at what places do you propose to expend that, and how much do you propose to expend at each place? I suppose that the appropriation must be based on some estimate of that kind? If it is not based on an estimate of that kind I will venture to suggest that it must be upon the rule to which I have already alluded.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I did not mean by the statement I made that this dredging at these different places would not be required for a number of years. What I intended to say was that if we were to undertake to do the work in the different places in Ontario and Quebec, in which at this very moment it would be desirable to do dredging in the public interest it would run up to two or three, or perhaps four times the amount that we are now asking.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I did not say that at all. I said that you might profitably expend perhaps $10,000,000 in dredging this year, but you are doing only $675,000 worth. Where are you going to do it, and how much are you going to expend in each place?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I could give that to my hon. friend to-night because the advertisements for dredging in Ontario and Quebec are actually out.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would like to have it.

Mr. JAMESON. If the minister would furnish the same information in regard to the maritime provinces, I would be very glad.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have not it for the maritime provinces. We are working at it, but we have not it completed. It will be ready some time next week.

Mr. PUGSLEY.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would like the minister to produce that before the estimates are brought up again.

Mr. BLAIN. Would the minister also bring down a list of the newspapers in which these advertisements are inserted in Ontario?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Probably I could. I can assure my hon. friend they are not inserted in many Conservative papers. In fact, I cannot recall any at the moment.

Mr. BLAIN. Perhaps I could make it easier if I asked my hon. friend to supply the committee with a list of the Conservative papers in which it is inserted.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I will give that to-night. I think it will be a plain sheet of white paper with no mark on it.

Mr. DANIEL. The minister has not brought down the information asked with regard to some scows hired from the government by the Maritime Dredging and Construction Company?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I got the dimensions, but I will be glad to get the other information, I had forgotten about it.

Mr. WRIGHT. A good deal of objection has been taken to the method of computing the work done by contractors by measuring in the scows, and some people think that the measurements might be made in the ground originally staked out requiring excavation to a certain depth over a certain measured area. If they are measuring by scow, it has been publicly stated in the House that the scows frequently go out with half loads and half measurements, and sometimes without any one making any measurement whatever.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It would be possible to have the survey made so as to take the measurements in situ, but with the dredging of harbours and rivers, which is done by the Public Works Department, that would involve a great deal of additional labour and expense at the outset. It is done in the Railway Department, in canal work, but there, of course, the dredging is confined to a narrow and well-defined space, and it can be done much more easily than it could be in ordinary harbour and river work. In regard to my hon. friend's statement that it is stated that in many cases scows go out with half a load and that there is no proper measurement, I have heard that statement made, but I have never heard it verified——

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. We have had one very distinct case.

Mr. PUGSLEY. By any one who pretended to know anything about it? I have never heard that any quantities were paid for which were not actually placed in scows. It may be that that has occurred in some cases, but we are taking every precaution to prevent it. While, no doubt, there would be some advantages in measuring in situ, there would be difficulties in connection with it in river and harbour work, where the areas cannot be as well defined as in canal work.

Mr. SPROULE. A great deal of it seems to be mere guess work when measurement is done on the scow. Whose judgment prevails as to the quantity on a scow? Take the case cited from the Midland district where the inspector is an employee of the scow company, paid partly by the scow company and partly by the government.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is not the case.

Mr. SPROULE. That was the case brought out under oath right in the Public Accounts Committee.

Mr. PUGSLEY. There might be one case of that kind, but the man would be dismissed the moment it was discovered.

Mr. SPROULE. It was brought out as well that he was not on the dredge at all for an hour or two in the morning. Who measured the scows then? Somebody. It is these things that create suspicion.

Mr. PUGSLEY. In the case referred to, the inspector was employed by the dredging company in the winter making some repairs on a dredge; he was not employed by them in the summer. Even that might be considered improper, as it might tend to favouritism. Ordinarily we believe the inspectors do their duty thoroughly well, and, as I have said, we require that the returns must be made under solemn declaration, which is just the same as making them under oath. In one or two instances where the inspectors were not careful they were instantly dismissed the moment the matter came to the notice of the department.

Mr. SPROULE. I gave that one case, and my remembrance of it is that the man was employed not only in the winter, but in the summer as well. Then there is another case where an inspector was walking around the city in hotels, etc., while the scow was working. How was the inspection made then?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Where was that?

Mr. SPROULE. It was in Owen Sound, and yet that was said to be correctly and properly done.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That would be said to be most improperly done and the man would be dismissed instantly.

Manitoba, $26,250.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is to provide for dredging work in the province of Manitoba. The dredging there is done by a plant owned by the government, and this is for the purpose of operating that plant.

Mr. BLAIN. In what waters will this money be expended?

Mr. PUGSLEY. At the mouth of Red river, where it empties into Lake Winnipeg; also some work is asked for in Lake Manitoba and Lake Winnipegosis.

Mr. BLAIN. Have advertisements been published in the newspapers in the province of Manitoba?

Mr. PUGSLEY. There will be none, because this is our own plant.

Dredging—British Columbia, $225,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is for the purpose of operating the government plant in British Columbia. The dredging is to be done on the Fraser river, at Victoria, at Vancouver and at Nanaimo, and a number of other places. There are a number of snag boats working on the Thompson and the Skeena rivers, and dredging will be done upon the Arrow lakes, and probably on the Kootenay and Okanagan lakes. We are also asked to do work on the north arm of the Fraser river.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS.

ST. LAWRENCE POWER TRANSMISSION COMPANY.

House again in committee on Bill (No. 115) to incorporate the St. Lawrence Power Transmission Company, Limited—Mr. Pardee.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. May I ask the right hon. the Prime Minister if it is the intention to go on with this Bill to-night?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Unless there is objection.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. I was informed there was an understanding that it would not be gone on with to-night. I know that a number of members wish to speak on it.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. My impression was that it was the Bill respecting the Ottawa, Brockville and St. Lawrence Railway Company that was not to go on to-night. However, if there is any objection it may stand.

Mr. LENNOX. I think it had better stand, because I understand there is to be an amendment proposed, and we have not yet had an opportunity of considering that amendment.

Progress reported.

RESTIGOUCHE BOOM COMPANY.

House in committee on Bill (No. 150) respecting the Restigouche Boom Company —Mr. J. Reid.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I would like to ask my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) if this Bill, as it is now printed, was agreed to by all parties before the committee?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, I think the difficulty with regard to riparian ownership has been completely solved.

Progress reported.

HAMILTON, WATERLOO AND GUELPH RAILWAY COMPANY.

House in Committee on Bill (No. 79) respecting the Hamilton, Waterloo and Guelph Railway Company.—Mr. Harris.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I was informed by the Prime Minister last night that this Bill would not be taken up to-night, and I so notified several members who wished to be present when it was considered.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The Prime Minister evidently thought it was the Bill referring to the Ottawa, Brockville and St. Lawrence Railway Company that was to stand.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. No, this is the Bill I spoke to him about.

Mr. PARDEE. Why should the Bill not go through?

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Because the members for Toronto are not present.

Mr. PARDEE. The members for Toronto agreed absolutely to the amendments. I was a member of the subcommittee, and I know the amendments were drafted by Mr. Bristol.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I informed the hon. member for South Toronto that the Bill would not come up to-night, and I think it is very unfair that it should be called after my understanding with the Prime Minister.

Mr. PARDEE. The hon. member for South Toronto is in town to-night, and I know that the amendments were drafted by the hon. member for Centre Toronto, who first opposed the Bill strenuously in committee. His amendments were accepted and inserted in the Bill.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I would prefer that the members for Toronto should be present, and I certainly understood from the Prime Minister that the Bill would not be called to-night.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Evidently it was the Ottawa, Brockville and St. Lawrence Bill that the Prime Minister had in his mind.

Mr. LENNOX.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Then he made a mistake about it, because I am not interested in the other Bill, and I am interested in Toronto.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Does the hon. gentleman know any reason why the Bill should stand over?

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Because we desire to debate some of the clauses, and only the member for East Toronto is present. Last night I informed the mayor of Toronto that the Bill would not be called to-night and he said in that event he would go home.

Mr. BLAIN. The request of my hon. friend (Mr. Currie) is a reasonable one.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Oh certainly, under the circumstances I would suggest that progress be reported.

Progress reported.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 164) respecting the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada.—Mr. A. H. Clarke.

Bill (No. 169) respecting the Montreal and Southern Counties Railway Company. —Mr. Geoffrion.

Bill (No. 157) an Act for the relief of Cecilia Marie Pringle.—Mr. Price

Bill (No. 153) for the relief of James Albert Green.—Mr. Prowse.

Bill (No. 158) for the relief of Ada Ann Reed.—Mr. Nesbitt.

Bill (No. 162) for the relief of Alexander A. Barthelmes.—Mr. W. M. Martin.

Bill (No. 170) to incorporate the Catholic Episcopal Corporation of Timiskaming. —Mr. George Gordon.

Bill (No. 167) to incorporate the Montreal, Kapitachuan and Rupert's Bay Railway Company.—Mr. Gervais.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (No. 183) to incorporate the Ottawa, Rideau Valley and Brockville Railway Company.—Mr. Devlin.

Bill (No. 189) to incorporate the Protectorate Life Insurance Company of Canada. —Mr. Turriff.

CONSERVATION OF NATURAL RESOURCES.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Mr. Speaker, before you leave the Chair, I would like to ask a question. The Minister of Agriculture has a Bill on the order paper intituled an Act respecting the Commission for the Conservation of Natural Resources. Previous to the New Year I introduced a Bill with the object of amending the Act respecting the Conservation of Natural Resources. That measure is a most important one, in my opinion, and if that Bill could be attached to the Bill of the Minister of Agriculture so that it could be discussed at the same time——

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I am afraid I cannot let the hon. member proceed, as the House goes automatically into Committee of Supply, which was interrupted at six o'clock.

SUPPLY.

Dredging—British Columbia, $225,000.

Mr. BLAIN. The minister promised to bring to the committee a list of newspapers in the province of Ontario in which the advertisements were inserted for the dredging that is to be done next year.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have the list. While we are on the subject of dredging, I wish to correct an error into which I fell while discussing the cost of dredging plant. I was interrogated as to the cost of the dredge 'Industry', and I stated that the original price as agreed upon was $150,000, and that then a defect had been found, as we thought, in the boiler under the Canadian Inspection Law, and we then offered to the owners of the dredge to take the dredge if $10,000 were deducted for the boiler, we concluding that it would be desirable, if not necessary, to have a new boiler placed in the dredge. The new boiler cost $9,300, and I stated to the committee that the old boiler belonged to the government. In that I was in error. I learned afterwards from Captain Howden, the superintendent of dredging, that when the price of the dredge was reduced by $10,000, which was the estimated cost of the new boiler, he agreed that the owners should receive the old boiler, so that when it was taken out of the dredge it was their property, and not the property of the government. I take this, the earliest opportunity, to correct the error into which I fell. My hon. friend wanted a list of the Conservative newspapers in which these advertisements for tenders were inserted. I shall send it to him.

Mr. BLAIN. I would rather my hon. friend made a statement to the committee and it would go down on 'Hansard'. He has handed me what I did not want, and has failed to hand in what I did require. My hon. friend has sent over a blank paper, suggesting that no advertisements have been inserted in Conservative papers in respect to dredgiing. I would rather have a list of the newspapers in which the advertisements have been and are inserted for the dredging during the coming summer.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend will remember that at first he wanted that and afterwards he said the other would do. Finding there were no advertisements inserted in Conservative newspapers, I gave him that.

Mr. BLAIN. Although my hon. friend says that patronage list has been eliminated from his department, it appears no advertisements are inserted in Conservative newspapers in Ontario. The list will include all leading Reform newspapers in Ontario. Take for example the city of London. Why does he insert the advertisement in a newspaper with a much smaller circulation and refuse to insert it in the leading newspaper of that city, the 'Free Press', which has admittedly the largest circulation in London or in the western part of Ontario? The ministers seek to leave the impression that the patronage lists have been eliminated, but it is evident from this that in regard to newspapers he has continued the patronage list.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend will see when the list is produced that the circulation of these papers is so large that all possible dredging tenderers would have ample notice of the call for tenders and that it would be a waste of public money to have given any wider or fuller advertisement.

Mr. BLAIN. The only explanation of the minister's course in the case of London is that he inserts the advertisement in papers supporting the government, unless there is some explanation of which I do not know.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not think that a gentleman with the long political experience of my hon. friend desires any explanation. It is not customary for governments to advertise works in newspapers owned and controlled by their opponents unless it is necessary in order to give publicity.

Mr. SPROULE. Does the minister not think it is trifling with the committee to present a blank sheet of paper purporting to give information that the House desires? Some members of the government have declared in this House that the patronage system had disappeared and that the advertisements for contracts were given to all papers, regardless of their political leanings.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I desire to say that I never made such a statement, and I never heard any such statement made by a member of the government as to advertisements in newspapers. That I regard as a very different thing from a patronage list. Early in this session, and at all times when I have spoken with reference to it, I have said that if, in my opinion, a sufficiently wide circulation can be given by putting advertisements in friendly newspapers, I will do that.

Mr. SPROULE. The minister said he did not say that in this House. If I am right in my memory, he sat in his seat when the Minister of Railways declared in this House that he selected no newspapers, and that he defied contradiction to the statement that he had given these advertisements to papers indiscriminately, and that it was a good thing. If it was a good thing for the Department of Railways and Canals, it must be an equally good thing for the Department of Public Works. My hon. friend from Peel (Mr. Blain) desired to ascertain whether that principle is being carried out, and for that reason he asked questions. Now, had it been carried out, and had a list been brought down showing that those advertisements had appeared in a number of Conservative newspapers, it would have been conclusive evidence that the principle was being carried out. But the minister did not attempt to carry it out, and he is trifling with the House when he brings down a piece of blank paper and says: I have not got the other list here.

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, I was requested to produce a list of the Conservative papers in which this advertisement appeared.

Mr. SPROULE. He was first required to produce a list of all the papers in which these advertisements appeared.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That request was withdrawn, and my hon. friend asked me to bring down a list of the Conservative papers.

Mr. SPROULE. No, the minister is wrong, and is going back on his word.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. My hon. friend has used language which is unbecoming a member of this House in regard to myself; he says I have gone back on my word, and insinuates that I have endeavoured to mislead the committee. My hon. friend surely ought to withdraw that.

Mr. SPROULE. I have nothing to withdraw, because I was listening to what he said. After six o'clock this list was to be produced, but afterwards the order was changed.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. If the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) states that the Minister of Public Works has gone back on his word, I think that expression would be out of order.

Mr. SPROULE. Surely I ought to be allowed to give the version of my understanding of what the minister said. If he denies it, then I accept his denial. I have given my understanding of what he said, but he afterwards suggested the change, and the member for Peel innocently fell into it and accepted it, assuming that the principle was being carried out in its entirety; and if that list had been brought down showing that the advertisement had appeared in a number of Conservative newspapers, the fact would be self-evident.

Mr. PUGSLEY. If, as a matter of fact, these advertisements did not appear in any Conservative newspaper, and if the member for Peel did ask me to bring down a list of Conservative papers in which the advertisements appeared, could I do anything else than give him a blank sheet, if I desired to give correct information to the House?

Mr. SPROULE. I think it was beneath the dignity of any minister of the Crown to mislead any member of this House. Knowing as he did that there were no such papers, he should have been frank enough to tell the House so, and that would have obviated the necessity of bringing down a blank sheet. By refusing to put these advertisements in leading Conservative newspapers, the minister has caused the country to suffer loss. He gave us to understand some time ago that that system was all changed, and several ministers took credit to themselves for introducing a new and better system. Both the Minister of Railways and Canals and the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, or the acting minister, gave the country to understand that they had turned over a new leaf, but now we find that they are still adhering to the old and vicious practice, to the loss and detriment of the public service.

Mr. BLAIN. The minister rather questioned my statement when I said that the dredging advertisement appeared in only one of the leading newspapers in the city of London.

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, I said I did not know myself in what paper it appeared, and I took my hon. friend's statement as being in effect that he had seen it.

Mr. BLAIN. I have before me a copy of the London 'Advertiser' of March 31. in which I find the advertisement: 'Tenders for dredging—Sealed tenders addressed to the undersigned,' &c. Now, that is a newspaper in the city of London having a fair circulation. I have before me the other leading newspaper of London, the 'Free Press,' which has a very much larger circulation, which is found in almost every home in London and western Ontario. In that newspaper I do not find the advertisement, therefore, I had the right to assume that it did not, and does not, appear in the leading newspaper of London, but it does appear in the newspaper that supports the government of my hon. friend.

Mr. PUGSLEY. And which is a leading newspaper.

Mr. BLAIN. Which is a leading newspaper. Then my hon. friend admits that there is still a patronage list in his department, no matter what may be found in the Department of Railways and Canals? Therefore, we are to understand that the policy of my hon. friend in the future will be, as in the past, to seek out papers that support his government in the province of Ontario, and put them on the patronage list. But any newspaper that does not support this government, no matter how important it may be, will not be given an advertisement by his department. Might I suggest to my hon. friend that he should take a lesson out of the book of his colleague, the Minister of Railways and Canals, who rather boastingly announced on the floor of the House that a new departure had taken place in his department? How does my hon. friend explain that it is a good thing to abolish the patronage list in the Railway Department and not in my hon. friend's department?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think that the patronage list, as we all understand it, has been abolished in the Department of Public Works, just as it has been abolished in the Department of Railways and Canals. I was not here when my hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals made the statement which he is alleged to have made, but I must assume that if he did make the statement that advertisements were published in newspapers representing both sides of politics he was referring to special advertisements, such as the time tables on the Intercolonial railway, where it is desirable to give widespread information to the mass of the people. That is a very different thing from publishing advertisements which were intended to reach the eyes of contractors. The contractors follow pretty generally the advertising matter contained in all the leading newspapers, and advertising for tenders in more than two or three of the leading newspapers in the city of Toronto, for instance, in papers like the Toronto 'Globe,' which has a wide circulation all over Ontario, and, indeed, I may say all over Canada, and in a number of other leading newspapers in the province where the contracting work is done, gives ample notice, and it would really be a waste of money to extend the matter further and advertise in papers which are opposed to the government. It is easy for my hon. friend to make these hypocritical speeches, but he knows that if he were in my position to-morrow he would not put a single advertisement in a Liberal newspaper. I know that just as well as my hon. friend does.

Mr. BLAIN. How does the hon. gentleman know it?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I know it from my hon. friend's appearance. I know it by the satirical look that the hon. gentleman has in his face, the look of a man who is trying to take a rise out of his fellow man. I know my hon. friend is just joking when he suggests that we should advertise every ordinary contract, such as dredging work and the erecting of a building, in the opposition newspapers. If it should happen that in any locality we could not give an advertisement sufficiently large circulation through friendly papers we would feel it due to the public to give the advertisement to the newspapers of our opponents.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. It is humiliating to hear such a statement from a minister of the Crown. There is no use of mincing the matter; he states plainly that he has made up his mind that he will not advertise in a Conservative newspaper. The hon. gentleman must know that if he carries out this policy he cannot do justice to the public, that the people who are reading the Conservative newspapers are perhaps half of the people of Canada, and if he wants to get the best tenders for the work which he is going to undertake he should advertise in the papers that would be likely to be read by the bulk of the people instead of by a small class. At five o'clock this afternoon I received from the office upstairs a return showing the amount of money that this government is expending on newspapers all over the country. I have not had time to go over it, and I do not see amongst these papers a statement of the money expended by the Department of Public Works. I shall expect to see it, however, before the return can be considered complete. What I asked for, as far as the Department of Public Works is concerned, was an order of the House showing the total amount paid in each year since 1896 for all printing and advertising done outside of the government printing bureau. Last year the Department of the Interior expended $167,404.84 for advertising in newspapers, not altogether in Canada. This money was distributed amongst nearly 700 firms or newspapers. Perhaps 600 of them would be in Canada. The minister may think that that is a splendid position for the Minister of the Interior to take.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It has helped to produce splendid results in the way of immigration.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Yes, but how much better might these results have been had that money been distributed in a non-partisan way instead of in the way the minister would advise the money to be distributed? The same department, for printing, distributed $95,393 to practically the same firms as my hon. friend might see if he went over the list. For lithographing they paid out $4,509. In that department, $267,307 and $11,620 were expended for foreign printing and advertising. The bulk of that sum was expended in the Dominion of Canada. For what purpose? For the purpose of influencing—may I say—the press of this country, and if you look through the returns which I have here you will find that practically every dollar of that money went to the Liberal press of this country. How can you expect that the Liberal press is going to do justice to what is transpiring on the floor of this House if you are going to give them, for advertising, printing and lithographing, $500,000 per annum, making a rough estimate? There is $500,000 per annum going to buy up, to a certain extent, the Liberal press, and according to the statement of the Minister of Public Works to-night, none of the Conservative newspapers may expect, unless they will truckle and bow the knee to this government, that they will get one dollar of the money that is being expended. Is that a statesmanlike position for a minister of the Crown to take? I cannot conceive that one in his position can feel that he is doing justice to his department or to the people of Canada in taking the position that he has taken to-night, and I am surprised to hear him make such a statement. I sincerely hope that before the session closes I may be able to show to his satisfaction that he is neglecting his duty as a minister when he arrogates to himself the right to say that he will distribute the people's money to the press that will support his government, no matter what kind of trickery and corruption they may carry on. I am satisfied that when the people realize that $500,000 of their money is going into the ink pots of the government to bolster up their position they will resent it as well as the statement that he made to-night, that he will not advertise in one of the opposition papers.

Mr. W. M. MARTIN. Prior to 1896, did the hon. gentleman ever see a government advertisement in a Liberal newspaper? Has he during the past three or four years seen an Ontario government advertisement in a Liberal newspaper?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Yes, sir, the Ontario government advertises in the Toronto Globe.

Mr. W. M. MARTIN. That is the only instance.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Not at all, they are advertising in other Liberal newspapers. But why should gentlemen opposite be continually bringing up what happened before 1896. If the Conservative government erred then, is that any reason why to-day $500,000 of the money of the people should year after year be turned over to Liberal newspapers in Canada, and as every one knows, the minute any one of these newspapers says a word against the government they are shut off from participation in the funds. The minister knows very well that in the city of Halifax government patronage has been withdrawn from Liberal newspapers that said anything against the government.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I know nothing of the kind.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Why, the minister has told us that if a paper does not support the government it need not expect a dollar in the way of printing.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have not said that.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. The minister has not said it in so many words, but that is the inference from his remarks.

Mr. SPROULE. The Minister of Public Works stated that only time-tables, and so on, were advertised by the Department of Railways in the Conservative newspapers, but as a matter of fact, advertisements for supplies for the Intercolonial are published in the Conservative newspapers. The Minister of Railways told us that he believed it good policy to advertise in all the newspapers, and he intended to do it, and I believe the acting Minister of Marine does the same thing.

Mr. TALBOT. Does the hon. gentleman not think it would be looked upon as a huge joke all over the country if they saw a Liberal government advertising in Conservative newspapers.

Mr. SPROULE. I am not here to judge of jokes now.

Mr. HENDERSON. If I were to express an opinion on this matter I would differ from the Minister of Public Works, as well as from the hon. gentleman (Mr. Armstrong). I do not think that any of us on this side are expecting that the Conservative press should receive any large amount of patronage from the present government, but I do believe that the government would find it a better plan if tenders were advertised for through the 'Canada Gazette,' and if the advertisements were not published in any newspapers, either Conservative or Liberal. If my suggestions were carried out the contractors would all look to the 'Canada Gazette' for such advertisements, and if the government adopted that system it would be more satisfactory all round. But what I rose to speak about was another matter. The minister was good enough to mention Oakville, in the county of Halton, as one of the places where dredging would be done this summer. As we have passed into the fiscal year 1911, the money is now available for that work, and I would impress upon the minister the great necessity of having the dredging done at Oakville as early as possible. It is not possible for the steamers passing from Toronto to Hamilton to call at Oakville harbour at present, and it is very desirable that whatever dredging is to be done should be done early in the season. Can the hon. gentleman tell us when we may expect a government dredge at Oakville?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am fully seized of the importance of the work at Oakville, but I regret that I cannot say just when the dredge will be sent there. We have numerous demands from different sections of Ontario, but I may say to my hon. friend that we intend to have the work done at Oakville as soon as possible.

Slides and booms—Saguenay district—new booms, alligator tug, and additional equipment, $10,000.

Mr. SPROULE. How much of this is for booms, and how much for the tug?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is estimated that the tug will cost $3,500, the booms $5,000 and $1,500 for chains and such appliances.

Mr. SMYTH. What is the capacity of an alligator tug that will cost $3,500?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not know, but I am informed that that is about what we paid for one previously.

Mr. SMYTH. I have one of the largest alligator tugs made, and I can tell my hon. friend that I never had to pay for such a tug within $1,000 of what he estimates.

Mr. PUGSLEY. What is your alligator tug worth?

Mr. SMYTH. $2,500.

Mr. PUGSLEY. What is the capacity.

Mr. SMYTH. Fifty horse-power, and I think 62 feet long. I am doubtful if the minister knows what an alligator tug is?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The minister knows more than you think.

Mr. SMYTH. What is it?

Mr. PUGSLEY. An alligator tug is a tug that goes over land and water; is that right?

Mr. SMYTH. Quite right.

Mr. BLAIN. Who manufactures tugs in Canada?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am unable to say. Mr. Howden, the superintendent of dredging, purchased the last one. Of course we will get it at the lowest price possible.

St. Maurice district—improvements to slide and boom works, &c., $40,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Extensive pulp mills and other large manufacturing establishments on the St. Maurice river render these improvements absolutely essential.

Mr. SMYTH. Are these cedar booms?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Some; we use a good deal of British Columbia fir in them. They will be, speaking generally, 3 or 4 ply storage booms.

Chapeau bridge over the Culbute channel of the Ottawa river, $25,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. There was an appropriation of $15,000 made for this work at the last session of parliament, but we did not use it. We have now let the contract, and we require this $25,000 to make payment. The province of Quebec contributes $5,000 towards the bridge.

Mr. BLAIN. Is it a new structure?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, a traffic bridge

Mr. SPROULE. It is in the province of Quebec, I understand?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is to all intentions and purposes an interprovincial bridge. It is to replace an old bridge which was built 40 years ago by the federal government and has been repaired from time to time since by that government. The Ottawa river at that point forms the boundary between the provinces of Ontario and Quebec. It happens that the Culbute channel over which the bridge is built is actually in the province of Quebec; but the other channel is in the province of Ontario, and there is a ferry from the island to the Ontario side, so that it is all one system of interprovincial communication.

Mr. SPROULE. I am not objecting to it, because if it is an interprovincial bridge, I think that fact would justify the expenditure; but I do not think the minister has admitted the principle that we should erect bridges over streams unless they are required for railways or something like that.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The principle has been admitted for many years of constructing with federal money bridges which connect two provinces. In some cases the provincial authorities contribute and in some cases they do not.

Mr. SPROULE. I admit that the federal government have granted subsidies, but I do not think they have taken the responsibility of building these bridges themselves.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, there are two or three on the Ottawa river which have been built by the federal government, including the Chaudiere bridge at Ottawa.

Courtenay bay—Marsh road—to provide for one-third of cost of rebuilding aboiteau on road to protect marsh and Intercolonial railway property at St. John, New Brunswick, the remaining two-thirds of cost to be contributed by provincial government and city of St. John, $8,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This work is to be carried out by the city of St. John, and the cost is to be borne jointly by that city, the provincial government and the federal government, as all three bodies are interested—the city by reason of the bridge being within the city limits, the provincial government by reason of its being interested in the marsh road, which is a public highway, and the Dominion government by reason of the fact that the aboiteau prevents the tide flowing over the marsh and the Intercolonial railway property.

Mr. BLAIN. Are public tenders invited for this work?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, by the city of St. John, which has awarded the contract accordingly, and when it completes the work we will pay our one-third.

Mr. BLAIN. Has my hon. friend's department any inspection over the work?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No. It is being done entirely by the city of St. John.

International bridge across the River St. John, between St. Leonard, New Brunswick, and Van Buren, Maine, the state of Maine contributing an equal amount, $37,500.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is to construct a bridge which is very much needed in the public interest, as there is a great deal of intercourse carried on ferries at this point. The legislature of the state of Maine has passed a law engaging to contribute one-half the cost of this bridge, and we have thought it advisable in the public interest to contribute the other half.

Mr. SPROULE. Is this an ordinary traffic bridge or a railway bridge?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is an ordinary traffic bridge, and is to be free.

Mr. SMYTH. Under which government is it constructed?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is to be constructed under a joint arrangement between the Department of Public Works here, and the Public Works Department of the state of Maine.

Interprovincial bridge across River Ottawa at Hawkesbury; the Ontario and Quebec governments to contribute each $15,000, $50,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This bridge has been pressed upon our attention for a considerable time as being very necessary in the public interest. The total probable cost is $116,300.

Mr. BLAIN. Who has charge of the construction?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The Public Works Department.

Mr. SPROULE. This will be another free traffic bridge?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Interprovincial bridge over Restigouche river at Metapedia; the local governments of Quebec and New Brunswick each to contribute $5,000, $25,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Out of this vote we will use $14,705 to pay the Department of Railways for the iron that goes into the superstructure, and the balance will be used towards making a payment on the contract for the bridge.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the total estimated cost?

Mr. PUGSLEY. $62,705. It is a steel bridge with stone substructure.

Mr. SPROULE. This is going to be a free bridge too, I suppose?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Ottawa city—bridges over the Ottawa river, the slides and the Rideau canal and approaches thereto—ordinary repairs and renewals and maintenance, $12,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is the usual amount required to make the ordinary repairs to the four bridges which we maintain.

Mr. U. WILSON. Does the government maintain all bridges over the canal?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not all. The city of Ottawa has some bridges. I think these four bridges are all the government maintain. Of course the Railway Department may maintain some over the canal.

Mr. U. WILSON. Why do you maintain some bridges and not others?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The Chaudière bridge over the Ottawa is interprovincial. Some of the bridges over the canal were built many years ago by the government, and in 1882 an agreement was entered into by the late government that the government should maintain these bridges; the government has recognized its obligations and has maintained them. As to new bridges which the city might construct a new rule would apply.

Mr. U. WILSON. The Laurier bridge?

Mr. PUGSLEY. That was built by government 35 or 40 years ago, and replaced ten years ago.

Dominion traffic bridges throughout Canada, including approaches generally, $5,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is the usual vote to repair works of this character for which there is no special vote.

Mr. BURRELL. I thought it was the policy of the government not to contribute anything towards bridges except to companies, that is, not to contribute to provincial government bridges. I understood the minister took that stand in reference to bridge matters in British Columbia some time ago, but it is evident that the government have assumed financial responsibility on a lot of provincial bridges which the provincial governments have been partially assisting, the great burden of the expense falling on the Federal government. I would like the minister to explain that in reference to his refusal to grant assistance in the British Columbia case some years ago. I think the matter came up in reference to the New Westminster bridge.

Mr. PUGSLEY. British Columbia in this respect has been treated exactly the same as the other provinces of Canada, there has been no distinction. There have been applications from Ontario and other provinces. I think I remember an application from British Columbia and others from other provinces of Canada, but the government, ever since Confederation, has taken the view that where a bridge is wholly within a province, and cannot in any sense be regarded as interprovincial, it would not recognize that bridge as a Federal work or one that ought to be attended to by the Federal government, but rather that it was a matter for the provincial governments or municipalities to look after. In the case of interprovincial bridges a different view has prevailed. The practice ever since confederation has been for the Federal government to build interprovincial bridges, bridges across rivers connecting two provinces, or in some cases connecting Canada with the United States, the river being a boundary river. All these bridges for which votes have been asked to-night are interprovincial or international bridges. In that respect they differ entirely from the bridge at New Westminster, crosisng the Fraser river, which would be wholly within the province of British Columbia.

Telegraph lines on north shore and islands of Lower St. Lawrence, &c.—improvement of repair service, $3,000.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the nature of this line?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is very necessary for the Signal Service with reference to shipping, the weather reports, etc., but the country is not sufficiently thickly settled to make this a good commercial undertaking. The revenue in the province of Quebec last year was $11,168.80.

Mr. SPROULE. There are other lines besides this?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. BLAIN. What was the expenditure?

Mr. PUGSLEY. $31,965, that is outside altogether of the services of the cable ship.

Mr. BLAIN. Is the revenue increasing, and the expenditure decreasing?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is keeping just about the same on each side.

Telegraph lines—Alberta and Saskatchewan, Edmonton-Athabaska telegraph lines—extension from Athabaska Landing towards Peace River Landing, via south side of Lesser Slave lake, $21,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is to extend the telegraph service from Edmonton to the north. A good many settlers are going into the Peace river country, and need a telegraph service.

Mr. SPROULE. How far did you extend this line last year?

Mr. PUGSLEY. About 140 miles. It is 290 miles long altogether.

Mr. SPROULE. If you did 140 miles last year with $10,000, why do you want $25,000 to do the balance?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I should have said in the two years. In 1908 and 1909 we spent nearly $10,000, and during the year which closed yesterday we spent $10,194. With this amount we ought to be able to finish it this year.

Moosejaw — Wood Mountain line—branch from Limerick to Gravelburg, $5,000.

Mr. BLAIN. Are these lines constructed by public competition?

Mr. PUGSLEY. We supply the wire ourselves, and put up the line, but we call for tenders for the poles. The construction is done by men employed under our own superintendence.

Mr. BLAIN. Would it not be better to ask for tenders for poles and wires, and construct the line?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is well to ask for tenders for poles, but I think the work can be done better and more cheaply by our own men. I think that is the way the telegraph companies construct their lines, they have their own crews.

Mr. BLAIN. Are the rates fixed on the expenditure?

Mr. PUGSLEY. We endeavour to fix them based somewhat upon the expenditure, but usually in comparison with what the companies charge on lines similarly situated.

Mr. BLAIN. What is the total revenue and expenditure on all the government telegraph lines?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The total revenue last year was $113,175; the total expenditure, including the Yukon, was $474,845.

Mr. EDWARDS. Are there any telegraph lines in Ontario?

Mr. PUGSLEY. We have only one, the Pelee Island line, that is a telephone line.

Mr. EDWARDS. Have there never been any applications for such lines in the outlying portions of Ontario?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not since I have been minister.

Mr. U. WILSON. I want to know how these things are done. Is it by application made by certain municipalities or individuals, and what are the conditions on which grants of that kind are made? I know some outlying districts, for instance in my own riding, which are thirty-five or forty miles from a railway, and a good way from telephone lines. Now is there any possibility that the people of these districts would be able to get a grant to assist them in building those lines?

Mr. PUGSLEY. While there is no absolute rule, yet the principle upon which the government began to act a great many years ago was that it was desirable in the public interest to give telegraphic communication to outlying, and remote sections of the country, more especially in the newer provinces, and in unsettled districts where lines would not likely be built by commercial companies. As to whether an application for a telephone or telegraph line in a well settled district, which is blessed by the presence of my hon. friend, should be granted I would have very grave doubts. I would hardly think that my hon. friend would seriously propose the construction of a line in a locality such as that. But out in British Columbia, in the thinly settled districts, in the Yukon, in the mountains, away down on the lower St. Lawrence, and in districts like that where there is no reasonable hope that at any time in the near future commercial companies will enter the field, the government is giving accommodation to the people.

Mr. U. WILSON. I have not made myself clear to the hon. gentleman. He has described the conditions in that part of the country to which I am referring where they have no telegraph or telephone lines, where the country is sparsely settled, and the people are put to great inconvenience. This district is about ninety miles north of the county town. They have a cheese factory, and they cannot keep in touch with the prices unless they have telephonic or telegraphic communication. It is hardship enough that they have to draw their cheese thirty-five or forty miles to the railway station in order to get it to market, and if anything could be done to facilitate them in getting the market reports such as this government is doing for other localities, it seems to me that they have a strong claim.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I suppose my hon. friend would not have any fear that the question of provincial rights would be raised at once if the Dominion sought to invade that territory by building a telegraph or telephone line?

Mr. U. WILSON. I do not think that would trouble the Minister of Public Works very much. If it suited his purpose I think he would go on irrespective of provincial rights.

Telegraph lines, British Columbia—North Thompson Valley line—land line, Kamloops to Fennels—revote of lapsed amount, $4,500.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is to construct a telephone line from Kamloops to Fennels on the north side of the Thompson river, sixty miles in length.

Mr. BURRELL. How much has been constructed?

Mr. PUGSLEY. There cannot be a great deal, because we have only expended $446.41.

Mr. BURRELL. Is it expected to go on with the work?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, we expect to build sixty miles this year.

Kamloops-Okanagan Valley telephone line—additional wiring between Kelowna and Penticton and overhauling and strengthening line, $7,600.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This line is 42½ miles in length, and it will cost $160 a mile.

Mr. BURRELL. That is rewiring.

Mr. PUGSLEY. We want to give a separate circuit independent of the telegraph system. This work has been asked for by the Penticton Board of Trade, and recommended by our superintendent there.

Mr. EDWARDS. Are we to understand that this is a very sparsely settled district?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, it is. My hon. friend from British Columbia (Mr. Burrell) would know better about it than I. The section is beginning to fill up rapidly.

Mr. BURRELL. Communication is partly by road, and partly by water, and the situation is extremely difficult.

Mr. PUGSLEY. You will go many miles there without seeing a house?

Mr. BURRELL. There was a matter that I brought to the attention of the minister last December that I would like to mention again. I would like to know whether it is possible to have an extension of the Okanagan system or rather to construct a branch from Kamloops over to the Okanagan away entirely from the railway system and over a country that is never likely to be reached by the railway.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Is that from Kamloops?

Mr. BURRELL. Yes. From Kamloops, passing through Duck's, Grand Prairie, Glenemma, Faulkland, and Hullcar to the Armstrong district. That is a country in the railway belt that is beginning to be settled and where a large number of people can be served in no other way than by a telephone line. I hope the minister has taken that into his favourable consideration and I trust that there will be a possibility of having that line constructed at the earliest possible date.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am impressed with the desirability of this work. I think my attention was called to it by Senator Bostock some time ago. As I understand this will give a short cut across the country and give accommodation to a large number of people. Recognizing the possibility that there will be some supplementary estimates I have had this line noted and I am not without hope that I may succeed in getting an appropriation for the purpose and that the work will go ahead this season.

Mr. BURRELL. I trust the minister's hope will be of that vigorous character which will produce the result that we desire. There is one other item that I would like to call to the attention of the minister especially having reference to his remark that this accommodation is usually provided by the government in isolated districts where people are at immense inconvenience because of the lack of communication. The particular case in my mind's eye which I brought to the minister's attention last December was 150-mile house on the Cariboo road. As the minister probably knows all that northern country is absolutely isolated. The Yukon telegraph passes 150-mile house, but from 150-mile house through the Chilcoten country we have a district which is rather sparsely settled by people who have been in there a long time and there are places where they are from 75 to 150 miles away from a telegraph station and not less than 200 miles away from a railway and they are likely to be away from the railway for a considerable time. If a line could be extended from 150-mile house on the Cariboo road across the Fraser river to Alexis creek or, at least, to Chilcoten which is a little way beyond the Fraser river, it would be an enormous boon to a great many people who have been there a long time absolutely cut off and who have been hoping for many weary years to get something of that kind. It is almost a matter of life and death. I have known people who had to go 75 miles for a doctor, having no means of communication either by telegraph or railway. In view of the fact that these people have been there for a long time and are doing their part in building up that western country I do hope the minister will be able to give that particular section a little consideration. It would not be a very expensive matter and it is amply justified by the facts.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The condition of the settlers in that district appeals to me, but I understand this work would be quite expensive, as the country is very mountainous.

Mr. BURRELL. It is not so mountainous there.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I can tell my hon. friend (Mr. Burrell) that his remarks about the settlers will have my earnest consideration, and it is only the question of expense that would deter me from taking necessary steps to extend the line in that direction.

Mr. EDWARDS. I do not wish to be understood as objecting to such expenditure as this, but I do impress on the minister that we have in the province of Ontario numerous instances which are just as much entitled to receive assistance of this kind. In many places in eastern Ontario, the country is rough and sparsely settled, and there is no inducement for a private company to undertake a telephone or telegraph service. The people are badly in need of such a service, and I may tell the minister that in all probability he will have applications in this direction pressed upon him in the near future.

Kamloops-Okanagan Valley telephone line, exchange at Merritt, $2,250.

Mr. BURRELL. I suppose that this work will be gone on with this summer?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

National Art Gallery, Ottawa, including the purchase of paintings by the Advisory Council of Art, $10,000.

Mr. BLAIN. How are these pictures purchased?

Mr. PUGSLEY. By the Advisory Art Council, which did consist of the late Sir George Drummond, Mr. Byron Walker and Senator Boyer. On the death of Sir George Drummond, Dr. Shepherd, a very eminent surgeon of Montreal, and who is, I believe, a very good judge of paintings, kindly consented to take the vacancy. These gentlemen give the benefit of their judgment and knowledge to the country free of charge.

Monument to the memory of the late Hon. George Brown, $10,000.

Mr. U. WILSON. Where will this monument be placed?

Mr. PUGSLEY. In Ottawa, but we have not yet determined on the locality.

Mr. BLAIN. You have been neglecting the memory of this gentleman for many years. Why was nothing done when the money was voted last year?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The sculptor is at work, but we did not make any payment last year.

Monument to the memory of the late Hon. Thomas D'Arcy McGee, $10,000.

Mr. HENDERSON. Can the minister say whether this statue will be placed on Parliament hill, or near the Laurier hotel. I see the volunteers' monument is to-day placed at the rear of the hotel, and I hope these statues will not be given any such site as that.

Mr. PUGSLEY. These monuments will be located on the advice of the Advisory Art Council. It is rather believed by myself and the members of the government generally that the monument of the late Thomas D'Arcy McGee will be placed on the proposed plaza which is to be built between the two bridges, opposite the station and hotel.

Mr. HENDERSON. I suppose that D'Arcy McGee being an Irishman, you are following the example of the city of Dublin which placed the statue of Daniel O'Connell in the middle of Sackville street. But, I should think that the services rendered by D'Arcy McGee entitled his statue to a better location than in the middle of a street.

Mr. LEMIEUX. The new statue of Shakespeare, one of the finest in Paris, is right in the middle of a street.

Mr. HENDERSON. Well, I am not sure that it is always safe to take Paris as a model.

Mr. LEMIEUX. The statute of Lincoln in New York is in the middle of a street.

Mr. HENDERSON. I never was in New York, and I only speak of what I know. It is quite possible that the statue may be placed in the middle of a street, but for my part I would rather see the monument of McGee on Parliament hill.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The plaza will be very beautiful, and I think it will be a good location for that statue.

Mr. BLACK. I think we should follow the example of some of these eminent statesmen and not talk so much, and let us get through the business of the House.

Mr. HENDERSON. I did not hear what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Black) said; did he reflect in any way on the statement I made?

Mr. BLACK. Not at all. I think Thomas D'Arcy McGee was entitled to whatever honour we can do him.

Mr. EDWARDS. Notwithstanding what the hon. member (Mr. Black) says, I think this is a matter of sufficient importance to occupy us for a few moments. The name of Thomas D'Arcy McGee is inseparably connected with the history of Canada, and he is worthy of any honour we can confer upon his memory. In view of the political services of Thomas D'Arcy McGee to Canada and his high position as a statesman, it seems to me that his statue should be erected upon Parliament hill.

Mr. FISHER. In suggesting that D'Arcy McGee's statue should be erected on the plaza opposite the post office, there was no idea that it would be in any less distinguished position than if it were erected on Parliament hill. For example, in London, on Parliament square, which is across from the parliament buildings, there are a great number of monuments of the most dintinguished men in the history of the empire. There are at present a good many monuments on Parliament hill, and in my view it is quite possible that the plaza opposite the post office, being in the most frequented part of the capital of the Dominion, is a no less distinguished position. I quite agree with my hon. friend (Mr. Edwards) that Thomas D'Arcy McGee was one of the most distinguished men in the history of our country, and that the tragic manner in which he met his death in consequence of one of the most patriotic stands that ever a statesman took in the history of Canada, entitles his memory to the highest repect we can pay.

Mr. SPROULE. I am afraid that if the hon. minister carries out his intention he may find himself somewhat in the position of the tourist, who, when driving around the Lakes of Killarney, asked the cabman what was the height of a particular monument, and the cabman replied: 'I think it is the height of damn nonsense to put it there, because I run against it every time I drive around it.'

Monument to the memory of the late Sir L. H. Lafontaine and the late Robert Baldwin, $20,000.

Mr. McCALL. Is it the intention of the government to honour other Canadian statesmen, and if so, to what extent?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I should think that from time to time it would be the duty of this government or of any government which might be in power to do honour in the same way to other eminent statesmen.

Mr. McCALL. Is it likely to include the men of to-day?

Mr. HENDERSON. The Minister of Public Works, for instance.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I would rather hope that my hon. friend would become so distinguished in the service of his country that he would be deemed by the government of his country worthy of a high place on parliament hill or on the plaza.

Grant towards the erection of a memorial at or near Brantford to commemorate the invention of the telephone, $5,000.

Mr. SPROULE. How much are these monuments expected to cost?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The amount fixed in the contract for the monument for Hon. Geo. Brown is $10,000. It is expected that this monument at Brantford will cost about $40,000. Our contribution will not exceed $10,000.

Mr. EDWARDS. Of the other monuments, the government is bearing the whole cost?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. If $10,000 will build each of the other monuments, how does this one come to cost $40,000?

Mr. PUGSLEY. We have nothing to do with that. The people of Brantford, taking a pride in their fellow-citizen, Prof. Bell, who invented the telephone, and desirous of erecting a monument in commemoration of his great work, estimate that it will cost about $42,000.

Mr. BLAIN. When will it be completed?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I presume that it is very nearly completed, because the secretary of the committee has called on us for the payment of the last half of our contribution.

Contribution towards the erection of a memorial to Sir Leonard Tilley at St. John, New Brunswick, $4,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is being erected by a committee of citizens, who received subscriptions. The provincial government is contributing $2,500, and we think it not unreasonable that we should make a contribution of $4,000 towards this monument in memory of one whose public services were so great and who occupied such a commanding position as Sir Leonard Tilley.

Mr. HENDERSON. I confess that when I read the words, 'a contribution towards the erection of a monument,' I did not like it. It seemed to me that, considering the great work of Sir Leonard Tilley in this country, he had just as much right to be remembered by this parliament as some of those whose names have been mentioned, and I would have preferred to have seen this government erect a monument to the memory of Sir Leonard Tilley. He has erected a monument for himself, a monument that will last as long as this country lasts.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I ought to explain, for the information of my hon. friend and the committee, that this work of erecting a monument to Sir Leonard Tilley was taken in hand a few years ago, and it is intended to erect it, not here in the capital of the country, but in the city of St. John; and the chairman of the committee communicated with this government and asked us to make a contribution. We are doing exactly what the committee appeared to prefer that we should do. I think it would not be doing justice to the feelings of the friends of Sir Leonard Tilley if we were to attempt to take the matter out of their hands.

Mr. BLAIN. Did they name the amount?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, and we quite fulfilled their expectations as to that; we have even done a little better.

Mr. SPROULE. This monument is in Sir Leonard Tilley's own province, but I think he was a man prominent enough in the history of his country, and he did sufficient in his day to entitle his name to be honoured by the erection of a monument here at the capital, where he did his great work, and where he was one of the prominent figures in the national life of this country.

Mr. HENDERSON. If the city of St. John is erecting a monument to Sir Leonard Tilley, I think the minister might well consider the propriety of erecting one at the capital.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The matter is worthy of consideration, and I have no doubt the government will carefully weigh the suggestion of my hon. friend.

Construction of water-storage dams and regulation works on the Upper Ottawa river and tributaries, $175,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is to continue the very important work of erecting storage dams upon the head waters of the Ottawa with a view to holding back the flood waters in order to increase the flow of the river Ottawa during the dry season. It will greatly increase the flow past the city, add very largely to the water-power, and greatly improve the navigation.

Mr. U. WILSON. Is there not plenty of water-power now?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not at low water.

Mr. McCALL. At what points is it proposed to build?

Mr. PUGSLEY. We are building dams at the foot of Lake Timiskaming, on Lake Keepawa, on Lake Quinze and on two other lakes, and we have under consideration a project of diverting into the Ottawa valley system one of the rivers which now flows northwards. I believe a great increase of flow can be got from that source

Mr. SPROULE. What is the whole undertaking expected to cost?

Mr. PUGSLEY. In the vicinity of $600,000.

Mr. SPROULE. I see that you spent $65,000 in the current year. How has that been spent?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Under contract, after public tender.

Mr. SPROULE. And I presume it is intended to spend the money now being voted in the same way.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, on the contracts now let.

Engineering branch—salaries of engineers, inspectors, superintendents, draftsmen, clerks and messengers of outside service, $170,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This year we require $25,000 more than we took last year, owing to the increased number of employees, as well as some increases in salaries. The work of the department is growing very rapidly.

Mr. BLAIN. What increases in salaries are there?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Will my hon. friend allow me to give him the detail of that at a later date? I haven't it to-night.

Deep Waterways Commission, inclusive of payments authorized to Wm. J. Stewart, chief hydrographic surveyor, Department of Marine and Fisheries, as member of the Board of Commissioners; also for the definition and demarcation of the international boundary between the United States and Canada from Pigeon river to St. Regis, as provided for by article 4 of the treaty of April 11, 1908, $50,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I presume the committee are very familiar with the work of the International Waterways Commission. This amount has been asked for by the commission who state that it will be all required during the current year.

Mr. BLAIN. What salary does the chairman receive?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Fifty dollars a day for the days he is actually engaged upon the work.

Mr. BLAIN. How many days was that last year?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have not the amounts paid to the different commissioners, but the total amount paid as salaries to all the commissioners, and to the secretary was $9,948.47.

Mr. BLAIN. I think the chairman received about $3,000.

International Commission, River St. John, New Brunswick, $20,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is to pay the expenses of a commission sitting jointly with a commission appointed by the government of the United States to consider the question of obstructions to the St. John river, made by a company incorporated by the legislature of the state of Maine. Since the commission was appointed the scope of their inquiry has been enlarged, and they are considering the question of the feasibility of storing waters at the headwaters of the River St. John, and its tributaries with a view to improving navigation, and to see if by means of improving the navigation the injury caused by obstructions, booms and piers, on the American side, might not be obviated or lessened. They are also dealing with the diversion of the waters of the Allegash river from the St. John river into the Penobscot river, which was done some years ago by people in the state of Maine. The work of the commission is very important, and we are asking this amount towards paying their expenses.

Mr. SPROULE. Are they considering how far those obstructions are a violation of the Ashburton treaty?

Mr. PUGSLEY. That comes within the scope of their duty.

Mr. SPROULE. Have they any power to determine matters that will be binding on their government?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, their report would not bind the governments, but no doubt it would have great weight with the two governments, particularly if it should be unanimous. The primary object of the appointment is of course to inquire into all the facts so as to present a full report, which could be relied upon, to the government of the United States, and to the government of Canada.

Lake Nipissing—water level controlling dams—to provide for payment of claims for flooded lands, $10,000.

Mr. SMYTH. Is that at the lower end of Lake Nipissing?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. EDWARDS. Has the minister made up his mind as to whether he is going to do that little bit of dredging work over at Wolfe island?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, I have not.

Mr. EDWARDS. Would the minister say whether he is likely to make it up in the near future?

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is a difficult question to answer. The work asked for is essentially an improvement of private property, dredging immediately in front of a privately owned dock. My hon. friend will see that if I were to do that I would not be free from criticism from his own side of the House, unless he exercised a very controlling influence over some hon. gentlemen who sit near him.

Mr. EDWARDS. I think I can give an assurance that he will not be severely criticised from this side of the House. While I do not profess to control members, I think I can give that assurance with every confidence. As to its being a private wharf, the minister is right to a certain extent; it is private owned, but it is used by the public to a very great extent. The advantage to the public would be about sixty cents or seventy cents a ton on all the coal they use. I understand the municipality would go to the expense of putting up a coal shed so that this little bit of dredging, costing $200 or $300, would enable the coal barges to unload right at the wharf. I do not think the minister would be criticised from this side, he certainly would not receive any severe criticism from the people in that locality if he made that expenditure.

Mr. PUGSLEY. While I have every confidence in the good faith of my hon. friend, it would give me more confidence in the attitude of hon. gentlemen opposite if I were to hear from the hon. member for Grey (Mr. Sproule) because he is leading the opposition.

Mr. SPROULE. I can assure the hon. minister he will not encounter any criticism from the hon. member from Grey regarding it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. We have advanced quite a long distance. I find hon. gentlemen opposite are quite prepared to support the expenditure of government money on what are absolutely private wharfs, and certainly, that being so, I will be called upon to give the matter even more careful consideration than I have done hitherto. I cannot promise my hon. friend, but I will take the matter into consideration.

Mr. HENDERSON. I do not wish to raise any objection to this expenditure, but I think the minister is putting a wrong construction on what is said by the member for Grey, and the member for Frontenac. What they referred to was this specific case, not generally speaking.

Mr. PUGSLEY. A principle is a principle. If it is good for one case, it is good for another.

Mr. HENDERSON. Providing the conditions are always alike.

Mr. PUGSLEY. If a wharf is a privately owned wharf.

Mr. HENDERSON. Used by the public.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, every privately owned wharf is used by the public.

Mr. EDWARDS. Without tolls, largely without tolls.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Largely without tolls. There is a modification there.

Mr. EDWARDS. I want to be fair, and I think there have been many instances where grants have been made for which there was less justification than in this case.

Mr. BLAIN. Are we to understand that it would be a new departure on the part of my hon. friend if an expenditure of this kind were made?

Mr. PUGSLEY. There would be ground for criticism. It would not be unreasonable that I should be criticised for making improvements to what was really a private wharf owned by a private individual, who often collects tolls for the use of that wharf. It is often difficult to draw the line. There would be criticism in this case, because the work is not a large one, and the public might well say that the owner of this wharf might have this dredging done at his own expense, that it was only a matter of two or three hundred dollars, and why should the government spend public money to improve this property? That is the criticism that would be made. But it has been done in cases where the public receive larger accommodation, as, for instance, improving a channel in front of a railway wharf, there, of course, the interests of the railway company come in, and the transportation interests in which the public is concerned. However, in this case the wharf is owned by a private individual, and he would receive the benefit of the government's expenditure. The amount is not large. I say again in perfect good faith that I am considering the matter, and I have not yet decided whether I can do it or not.

Mr. EDWARDS. If we can get an assurance, or a written undertaking, from the owner of this wharf, that no toll will be charged to coal vessels, that is to say, that that part of the wharf will be absolutely free—

Mr. PUGSLEY. What about the rest of the traffic?

Mr. EDWARDS. That is unloaded on a different part of the wharf. I have no doubt the owner of this wharf will sell to the government at a very reasonable figure, yet it is a government owned wharf. It would be rather a unique experience for that part of the country.

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, in Ontario there is a large number of government owned wharfs.

Mr. BLAIN. My question was as to whether the department has not in the past expended money upon private wharfs in the province of Ontario and other parts of Canada.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I thought I answered that fairly.

Mr. BLAIN. My hon. friend made an explanation, but failed to touch the point. I will repeat the question. Has not his department in the past expended money upon private wharfs, both in Ontario and in other provinces?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am not aware of the government expending money on private wharfs in the sense in which this is a private wharf. Would my hon. friend point out a particular instance?

Mr. SPROULE. There is a case at Sault Ste. Marie where the government has done dredging in front of a wharf to allow vessels to get up to the wharf.

Mr. PUGSLEY. In that case the wharf was bought by the government, and improvements were made after the government became the owner of the property. That is what the chief engineer tells me.

Mr. SPROULE. I can tell both the chief engineer and the minister that money was spent there several times before the wharf was owned by the government.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That might have been under the old administration.

Mr. SPROULE. I think there is a case at Orillia, and another in front of Barrie, and I think there is another at Little Current, or some where on the Manitoulin island.

Mr. PUGSLEY. A short time ago I had an application from an owner of a wharf in or near the city of Ottawa to do some dredging, and I said I would do it if the owner would pay so much for the dredging. I think I gave directions to the chief engineer to charge a reasonable price for the work. I happen to have owned, with two or three other gentlemen, a wharf in the city of St. John; we wanted some dredging done by the government, and we had to pay the actual cost of operating the dredge, I think some $40 or $50 a day, while the dredge was doing work in front of this wharf.

Compensation to Sydney J. Dale in full of all demands for injuries sustained by him on the government dredge 'Nakusp,' in June, 1907, whilst employed as deckhand—revote of $500 lapsed, $1,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I asked for a vote of $500 in 1908, but Mr. Dale, acting on the advice of his friends, declined to accept it. After looking carefully into the circumstances of the case I have decided to recommend a vote of $1,000 to this unfortunate man.

Mr. BLAIN.

Mr. EDWARDS. To what extent was he injured?

Mr. PUGSLEY. When he was working on the dredge 'Naskusp', at Revelstoke, he received such injury to his arm that it had to be amputated. On the occasion of the same accident Captain Baker lost his life. It occurred whilst the crew of the dredge were installing a new main guy line. Of course, the question arose as to whether there was liability on the part of the government and on looking into the whole case and after consulting with the deputy minister and the chief engineer I decided that it would be right to compensate this man to the extent of $1,000.

Mr. EDWARDS. Do I understand that on looking into the matter you considered the government was liable and that an action for damages might be made good by this man?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Mr. Dale did commence suit by petition of right and on looking into the matter I thought the case was, at all events, so doubtful as that it would be in the interest of the public that we should make a settlement. I also felt that even if we might defeat the man's claim in a court of law, he had a strong equitable claim. He probably had a legal claim, but he certainly had a strong moral claim.

Mr. EDWARDS. I presume this man is the head of a family and that his family depend upon him for their living. If the government considered they were liable for the damage done to this man I think it is dealing in a pretty small way to give him $1,000 compensation for the loss of his arm. A man's arm ought to be worth more than that to him. If the government are liable at all he should receive more than $1,000.

Some resolutions reported.

Mr. FIELDING moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. SPROULE. What business will be taken up on Monday?

Mr. FIELDING. I think we shall take up a number of Bills which stand on the order paper. Private Bills have priority and after that we shall deal with a number of minor Bills which stand on the order paper. If we reach Supply my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works will continue. There are several Bills on the order paper which, I think, are hardly controversial and we would like to be able to call up any of them.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 11.10 p. m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, April 4, 1910.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS.

ST. LAWRENCE POWER TRANSMISSION COMPANY, LIMITED.

House again in Committee on Bill (No. 115) to incorporate the St. Lawrence Power Transmission Company, Limited.—Mr. Pardee.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Some members who take an interest in this Bill were unable to be present this morning. Would there be any objection to allowing it to stand until eight o'clock?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No objection.

Progress reported.

HAMILTON, WATERLOO & GUELPH RAILWAY.

House in committee on Bill (No. 79) respecting the Hamilton, Waterloo & Guelph Railway Company.—Mr. Harris.

Mr. BLAIN. One or two of the members spoke to me about this Bill, wishing it might be left over until some time to-day at a further sitting of the House.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Let it stand until eight o'clock with the other one.

RESTIGOUCHE LOG DRIVING AND BOOM COMPANY.

House in Committee on Bill (No. 150) respecting the Restigouche Boom Company, and to change its name to the Restigouche Log Driving and Boom Company.—Mr. Reid (Restigouche).

On section 2,

Mr. DANIEL. Has this Bill been reported favourably by the Private Bills Committee?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The copy I have says it is reported as amended by the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am informed that counsel were present representing the Boom Company and the riparian owners, and that the amendments made in the Bill are the result of a conference between them, so that the Bill as reported from the committee has been agreed to by those representing the various interests. The hon. member for Carleton will know whether that is correct.

Mr. CARVELL. Yes. There were representatives at the committee of the Boom Company, the riparian owners, the anglers and the fishermen. There was one change made at the request of some of the members of the committee, but all the others were made at the request of the interested parties, and when the Bill left the committee there was a thorough understanding among all the parties concerned. I may state that after consulting with Mr. Speaker, in whose county these works will be located, I propose to make two very slight amendments. One is to provide that there shall be no question that the man who rafts his logs will have the right to run them down the river without interference, and will not have to pay any charges, and the section 26 dealing with the expropriation of lands and rights. With these two slight amendments the Bill is now perfectly satisfactory to all parties concerned who are represented, and I think that all parties imaginable were represented before the committee either in person or by counsel.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would like to ask on what ground the committee reported that this was a work for the general advantage of Canada?

Mr. CARVELL. I do not think those words were necessary, because the works are on both sides of an interprovincial river. But it was thought best by the committee to insert those words to avoid any question of jurisdiction. I may explain that for a great many years the lumber has been driven down the Restigouche river and has been boomed and rafted on the New Brunswick side. Ten years ago fifteen or twenty million feet of lumber came down the river. This year there will be at least 125,000,000 feet, and the booms are wholly inadequate to take care of that enormous quantity of lumber. Last year a large quantity went out to sea and some of it was lost. It is proposed to have all the lumber rafted down and boomed by the same company both on the Quebec side and on the New Brunswick side, so that I submit that this parliament alone will have jurisdiction without the insertion of those words.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am not finding any fault with the project. I dare say it may be a very useful one, as I understand that a combination is proposed of the various interests concerned in driving logs on this river for the purpose of doing the work more effectively than it has been done in the past. It is a perfectly legitimate proposition provided the rights of the public are preserved; but I do not think that the declaration that this is an undertaking for the general advantage of Canada ought to be lightly made. I have been of the opinion that on a good many occasions it has been too lightly made by this parliament. If it is not essential in this case, I would think it far better to omit it.

Mr. CARVELL. While the incorporators might possibly get all they are without these words in the Bill, yet certain works must be performed wholly within the province of New Brunswick and others wholly in the province of Quebec. I have discussed the question with the solicitor of the company, and it is at his request that the words are left in the Bill.

Mr. LENNOX. I would like to ask the Minister of Public Works, who has paid some attention to this Bill, what he understands to be the meaning of these words in this section, 'nothing herein contained shall affect any action heretofore taken pursuant to the powers in such act contained.' Is that intended to refer to a legal action or an ordinary action?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I would take it that it is intended to preserve the rights of all parties as they exist under the New Brunswick statutes, whether any action has been taken either by lawsuit or in any other manner.

Mr. LENNOX. It seems to me that would be pretty hard to work out, because parties may have acquired a certain status by certain actions or steps that they have taken.

Mr. EMMERSON. Does the Bill reserve to this company the tolls which are provided by the British North America Act?

Mr. CARVELL. The tolls under this Act are to be levied by by-law of the company year by year, and the by-law has to be approved by the Governor in Council.

On section 11, subsection 3,—

Mr. CARVELL. I propose to make a slight amendment to subsection 3, by inserting, after the word 'river,' in line 11, the following words: 'or the floating down the same of rafted logs.' There was a question in the minds of certain gentlemen in the county of Bonaventure as to whether they would have free access to float their logs down the river if they chose to do so themselves. Under the provisions of the different sections, all the logs that are turned into the river and are floating in the river, must be driven by the company paying the company whatever rates or tolls are levied according to the bylaws. But in order to make it sure that the owner of the logs can raft his logs and take care of them himself, we have suggested this amendment.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Has the hon. member given notice of this amendment?

Mr. CARVELL. No. But I may say that I do not think it is of sufficient importance to require notice. It has been drafted by Mr. Speaker and myself. The member for Restigouche (Mr. Reid) who is not here at present, is interested on one side of the river and Mr. Speaker on the other side of the river, and they have agreed that this amendment should be inserted. I do not think that the committee will feel that the matter is of sufficient importance to require the necessary notice. It is only done for the further protection to the small owner along the river who may have a few thousand feet of logs which he wishes to bring down himself, and not be subject to the tolls of the boom company.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The amendment seems to be in the public interest.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I presume I may accept it as not being of serious importance, and in the absence of opposition.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It can be inserted by unanimous consent.

Mr. LENNOX. I would ask the Minister of Public Works if he has given attention to this section to see that it properly protects the interests of the public on this navigable river; I am not prepared to say that it does not. I see there is a provision in it that it should be submitted to the Department of Public Works for approval.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think the clause is in the usual form, which has been adopted in incorporating boom companies. A provision is made for handling logs by the company, and the tolls are to be submitted to the Governor in Council for approval. The amendment which the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Carvell) proposes, reserves the right to individaul owners to take care of their own logs if they wish to do so.

Mr. SPEAKER. I may explain for the benefit of the committee, that this enterprise up to the present has been carried on entirely under a charter of the New Brunswick legislature. The increasing importance of the lumber trade in that district has rendered it necessary to utilize both sides of the river. It is expected that this year 125,000,000 feet of lumber will be floated down the Restigouche river, and application has been made to this parliament by this company for better facilities under a Federal charter. I have received an important petition signed by some 400 residents of the county of Bonaventure asking that the rights of the public and the rights of the riparian owners along the river should be protected. I went to the Private Bills Committee and asked that a sub-committee be appointed to discuss the Bill. This was done and clauses 24, 25, 26, 27 and 28 were inserted at my request for the protection of the riparian owners and the free navigation of the Restigouche river. This amendment which is now under consideration was inserted at my request to remove all doubt that the main channel of the Restigouche river would remain open to the public, that no obstruction of any kind will prevent the free navigation by all interested parties. This company is practically a combination of all the large lumber merchants of that district. The lumberman who commands 100,000 feet of timber becomes de facto a member of the company. The small farmer cannot become a member, but by this Bill his rights are protected under the understanding that his logs are rafted under the same rules as any other logs. Three points were insisted upon by me and were assented to by the member for Carleton: first, the free navigation to the public generally; second, payment by the company of all damages incurred by the riparian owners either to their property or fishing rights, because the Restigouche is probably the most valuable salmon fishing river in eastern Canada, (the payment of damages is well protected, because the company cannot enter into any works of any kind without first giving security in the courts of the district for damages that may occur); third, the initiative in the arbitration proceedings would have to be taken by the company so that the farmers in the district would not have to face a powerful organization. I think that all things considered, although we do not obtain all we ask, we have a fair protection for the people of the district. I have several letters from people on both sides of the river, saying that as far as they can judge at present the rights of the public are fairly protected under this Bill.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Does the Bill leave it perfectly open to any one to drive logs down this river?

Mr. CARVELL. No. If any owner of logs drives logs on the river within the driving limits, that is from the mouth of the Kedgwick river down to the boom limits, they must be driven by the corporation, and the owner must pay tolls.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Are the tolls regulated in any way?

Mr. CARVELL. By by-law which must be ratified by the Governor in Council.

Mr. SPEAKER. I understand that the member for Carleton (Mr. Carvell) explained that the object of the amendment which he inserted this morning was to reserve the right to any person to raft and drive logs provided the logs were rafted and not set loose. No operations are to be carried on in this river without some uniform system. If the farmer will raft his logs he is allowed to drive them, but if he wishes to have them driven that must be done by the company and he must pay the company.

Mr. DANIEL. Are the operations on the Restigouche intended to be carried on in the same way as similar operations have been carried on in the St. John river?

Mr. CARVELL. They are almost identical, in fact this Act is almost a copy of the amended or consolidated St. John river Act, which was passed three years ago.

On section 20,—compensation and damages for not removing logs. Logs stored to be sold after public notice, if default in payment of assessment.

Mr. LENNOX. It has been stated that provision is made in the Bill that tolls should be subject to regulation. Will the tolls under this section 20 also be subject to some regulation?

Mr. CARVELL. This is only to provide in case the owner of the logs fails to take away his logs in proper time. The hon. member (Mr. Lennox) will understand that if twenty-five or fifty million feet of logs are left on the hands of the boom company after being rafted, the company would be practically out of business, for they would have no storage room. To compel owners to take away their logs within seven days, it is provided that the company should have the right to sell them on giving due notice, and to take from the proceeds sufficient to pay rafting, booming, and incidental charges. But I take it that these are all covered by the section providing that the by-laws are to be approved by the Governor in Council.

Mr. LENNOX. I thought that, under this section, they were given the right to charge for delay. The Bill says the company may——sell so much of the said logs as should be sufficient to pay the amounts due upon such assessments together with the extra cost of storing the said logs and the expense of keeping them and of the sale thereof and all other incidental expenses.

I think the provision is a proper one, so far as I know, but I fear there is danger that exorbitant charges might be made. Is it not possible they might keep the logs longer than seven days, and make the charge accordingly? And would this be covered by the provision with regard to the regulation of tolls generally?

Mr. CARVELL. I can only say that the question has never been raised. Section 19 provides for an agreement or arbitration between owners and directors as to assessments. So, practically all the cost after the logs go through the boom are provided for under this section.

Mr. LENNOX. This, I understand, is to provide in case the owner is probably in default. But cases of that kind might arise in which little or no moral blame would attach to the owner. Of course, I speak without knowing the proportions in this matter. I do not know what the storage for seven days on a given quantity of logs would represent. Of course, if it is a very small matter, it is not worth discussing.

Mr. CARVELL. I think that under section 10 it is all provided for. Section 10 provides that the company may make by-laws fixing and regulating tolls and for the government of the company's affairs, but no by-law is to come into force unless and until it has been approved by the Governor in Council. I think this would cover all cases that might arise.

On section 21—Liability of company for logs lost by neglect: Logs lost otherwise to be secured at owner's expense.

Mr. LENNOX. Is there anything in this section that makes the loss of logs prima facie evidence of neglect on the part of the company, or is that left open?

Mr. CARVELL. That is left open. This is a very rapid river in the spring and, no matter what precautions may be taken, there is always the possibility of logs getting under the booms by the force of the current. But, unless the company have been negligent in the ordinary sense, they would not be liable, and the question of fact as to negligence is to be decided in each case.

Mr. LENNOX. But there is nothing stated making the fact of loss a presumption of negligence which the company would have to rebut?

Mr. CARVELL. No, that is not specifically stated.

On section 26, expropriation of lands and rights.

Mr. CARVELL. I beg to move that subsection 2 of section 26 be amended by inserting the word 'fishing' between the words 'the' and 'rights' in the 36th line thereof. I may explain generally that this section 26 recognizes the right of the fishermen along the shore to proprietary rights in the foreshore or even beyond the foreshore. I think there is a doubt in the law as to whether there are these rights or not. However, the lumbermen are willing to allow him these rights and to pay him for them, leaving the amount to be determined by arbitration. But there was a fear on the part of some of the riparian owners that if these provisions were made too broad the company might expropriate fishing rights and then lease them or use them for fishing purposes. The intention of subsection 2 was that the company might expropriate these fishing stands or rights only to be used for the purpose of their undertaking, and that they would not have the right to use them for fishing purposes. The word 'fishing' was omitted from the 36th line, and it would look there as if they could use them for any purpose whatever. As amended it will read that they may expropriate these rights 'only for the purpose of the exercise of the company's own business and without right to the company to continue to exercise any of the fishing rights so acquired.'

They can use the locus for their own business, but they cannot use it for fishing. That is the object of inserting the word 'fishing.'

Mr. SPROULE. Do you not think that this will conflict with the rights of the province, if they have any rights, to control the fisheries along inland streams or lakes, or with federal rights, if there are any such rights?

Mr. CARVELL. I realize that the question might possibly arise, but if we have no jurisdiction to grant rights, of course, no damage will be done. For a great many years, farmers along the shores have been fishing at certain places which they call fishing stands. They have obtained licenses yearly from the federal government and in the last year or two from the province of Quebec. The company are willing anyway to recognize that the owner has some rights, perhaps, by long usage—you might call it a prescriptive right—and they are willing to pay for them whatever they may be. I realize the point raised by the hon. member for East Grey, but I do not think any difficulty will arise therefrom. This parliament certainly would have the right to control the foreshore, and the land to be used as a booming privilege really is the foreshore of the Restigouche river, or below the mouth of the river along the bay and the harbour.

Mr. DANIEL. I would like to ask the promoter of this Bill if he is satisfied that the riparian owners down there made no objection to this subsection 2 of section 26, and whether the company will have the right to expropriate their fishing rights under this Bill? This is a very valuable salmon fishing river.

Mr. CARVELL. They have objected very seriously for a long time, but the fishermen have all been offered a certain amount of money for whatever rights they might possess, in many cases amounting to thousands of dollars. The company altogether have offered the riparian owners something like $30,000 for their rights. In most cases settlements have been made. There are three on the Quebec side and six or seven on the New Brunswick side who have not yet been settled with. Every individual party was represented before the committee by Mr. Trueman, who used to be judge of Probate in Albert county. He is now living in Dalhousie. This clause was drafted by Mr. Trueman himself and inserted in the Bill by the committee exactly as he requested it to be. Therefore, this clause is really a clause drafted by the fishermen or the riparian owners themselves.

On section 31; security for damages.

Mr. SPEAKER. I gave notice the other day that I would move an amendment to be inserted as a new subsection of clause 28. It is as follows:

The costs of any arbitration under this Act shall be borne by the company, whether the same awarded is greater or less than the amount offered by the company.

The hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Carvell) pointed out to me this morning that it was provided in this Bill that expropriation would be carried out under the Railway Act and that there is a clause in the Railway Act which says that if the company is condemned to pay more than it offered, the company must pay the cost of the arbitration. The hon. member (Mr. Carvell) who has legal training, says this amendment would be contrary to the prevailing jurisprudence, therefore I am not insisting, but this is the very cause of the difficulty between the riparian owners and the company. Wherever the parties have been able to agree, the riparian owners have been bought out. The Busteed estate, for instance, have sold out to the company. The riparian owners thought that the company should in any case be compelled to pay the cost of the arbitration, but if this principle is contrary to the jurisdiction it should not be insisted upon, and I will, therefore, withdraw the amendment. Of course, I make a great distinction between a railway and a river in regard to expropriation.

NUMBERING OF BILLS FROM THE SENATE.

Mr. LENNOX. Could not some provision be made by which the Senate Bills, which are designated only by letters, should be numbered consecutively with our own Bills so that when they come to us it would be easier to find them on our files?

Mr. FIELDING. I would suggest that the clerk of the House be asked to confer with the clerk of the Senate and see what could be done to meet the hon. gentleman's suggestion.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 154) respecting the Northern Empire Railway Company.—Mr. White (Alberta).

Bill (No. 168) an Act respecting the Calgary and Fernie Railway Company.—Mr. Goodeve.

Bill (No. 172) respecting the Dominion Atlantic Railway Company.—Mr. Black.

QUESTIONS.

EMPLOYMENT OF ALPHONSE GERVAIS.

Mr. MONK:

1. Is Alphonse Gervais employed by the government in the Inland Revenue, Department of the Interior, or elsewhere?
2. If so, when was he appointed, what is his salary, what are his duties, and is he engaged continuously in the service of the government?
3. Does he work for the government at St. Hyacinthe or elsewhere?
4. How much has he received from the government for salary or otherwise since his appointment?
5. Is it true that for a year past he has owned and operated himself a moving picture hall?
6. Was not the same Alphonse Gervais convicted in 1908 of fraudulent election practices?

Hon. WM. TEMPLEMAN:

1. Alphonse Gervais is employed by the Inland Revenue Department.
2. He was first employed April 1, 1901. His salary is $600 per annum. He is attached to the bonded factory survey.
3. Yes; at St. Hyacinthe.
4. $4,816.42.
5. The department is informed that Mr. Gervais owns and operates, in the evenings only, a moving picture show in St. Hyacinthe.
6. The department has no knowledge.

QUEBEC HARBOUR.

Mr. J. P. TURCOTTE:

1. How many ocean merchant vessels visited the port of Quebec during the season of navigation 1908?
2. What was the gross tonnage of these vessels?
3. Under what flag did each of these vessels sail?
4. How many of these vessels belong to the Canadian merchant marine, and what proportion of the tonnage do they represent?
5. What frontage did the Quebec Harbour Commission allot in 1908, in order to permit merchant vessels to embark and land their passengers and goods on the quay?
6. What warehouses and plant did the Quebec Harbour Commission allot in 1908 to facilitate the embarkation and landing of goods transported by these merchant vessels?
7. What is the exact state of the frontage and facilities for storage and operation which the Quebec Harbour Commission has set aside in favour of the ocean transports for the season of navigation in 1910?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN:

1. For the year 1908-9 the number of vessels entered inwards from sea at the port of Quebec was 334.
2. 1,244,380 tons (registered tonnage).
3. Of these 316 were British vessels, 3 were United States vessels, 9 were Norwegian and Swedish vessels, 5 were Danish vessels, 1 was a Spanish vessel.

4. The customs returns do not make a distinction between British registered and Canadian registered vessels.

5. In the wet dock 1,000 lineal feet frontage for coal cargoes, 600 lineal feet frontage for general cargoes. In the tidal harbour, 1,200 lineal feet frontage for general cargoes. River face breakwater, 1,700 lineal feet frontage for passengers and goods. Point à Carcy, 400 lineal feet frontage for general cargoes. Point à Carcy inside berth 300 lineal feet frontage for coasting vessels. Shed accommodation, general freight, 225,965 superficial feet floor area. Cold storage, 100,000 cubic feet refrigerated space.

6. No allotments of berths were made except to the Canadian Pacific Railway Empress boats, and the Dominion and Nova Scotia Coal Companies. The other lines of steamers were given each trip suitable berths.

7. Available berths for sea-going vessels. In wet dock 3,100 lineal feet frontage; in tidal harbour, 2,310 lineal feet frontage; River front, 3,010 lineal feet frontage; total frontage, 8,420 lineal feet frontage. Shed accommodation 214,700 superficial feet floor area. Cold storage, none.

INDIAN INDUSTRIAL SCHOOLS.

Mr. GEORGE TAYLOR:

1. Is it the intention of the government to close the industrial school for Indian children at Regina?
2. Under what religious denomination is it managed?
3. How many children are in attendance?
4. What assistance is given in support of this school, or does the government pay the entire cost of support and maintenance?
5. What was the cost of the building and equipment?

Hon. Mr. OLIVER:

1. Yes.
2. The Presbyterian.
3. Sixty-six.
4. $145 per capita is paid for 100 pupils.
5. $72,000.

Mr. GEORGE TAYLOR:

1. Is there an industrial school for Indian children at La Butte?
2. If so, when was it erected?
3. Under what religious denomination is it managed?
4. How many children are in attendance?
5. What assistance is given in support of this school, or does the government pay the entire cost of support and maintenance?
6. What was the cost of the building and equipment?

Mr. OLIVER:

1. Yes, at La Butte.
2. In 1906.
3. The Roman Catholic.
4. 230.
5. $120 per capita is paid for 235 pupils.
6. $117,823.23.

DESIGNS FOR PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

Mr. MACDONELL:

1. Did the Public Works or any other department of the government institute a plan competition for the erection of the proposed departmental and justice buildings in Ottawa?
2. Did the government accept any plan or design? If so, who was the successful architect, and how many plans or designs were put in, and by whom?
3. Was any premium or award paid to the successful architect?
4. Has the government set aside such successful design, and is the planning and carrying out of the work now to be done by the architectural staff of the Department of Public Works?
5. If the successful design has been set aside, what is the reason for such change, and does not the government consider this change a breach of good faith with the architects who tendered?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY:

1. Yes.
2. (a) No. The competition called for competitive designs for a justice and a departmental building, and four prizes were to be awarded to the four best designs submitted, 'the four successful designs to become the absolute property of the government'.

(b) Twenty-nine designs submitted: 1. Bella Campbell, Fenelon, Manitoba; 2. A. G. McAdam, Halifax, Nova Scotia; 3. John Gemmill, Toronto, Ontario; 4 and 5. Finley & Spence, Montreal; 6. Sproatt & Rolph, Toronto; 7. M. Perrault, Montreal; 8. J. A. Ewart, Ottawa, Ontario; 9. J. B. McRae, Ottawa; 10. Canon Bouillon, Ottawa; *11. Darling & Pearson, Toronto; 12. Geo. W. Gowinlock, Toronto; 13. P. S. Gregory, Ottawa; 14. J. S. McLaren, Vancouver, British Columbia; 15. Horwood & Taylor, Ottawa; 16. H. R. Barber, Toronto; 17. A. H. Chapman, Toronto; *18. Saxe & Archibald, Montreal, province of Quebec; 19. S. F. and W. A. Peters, Winnipeg; 20. M. McKean, Moncton, New Brunswick; 21. John M. Lyle, Toronto; 22. J. A. Thompson, Ottawa; *23. E. and W. S. Maxwell, Montreal; 24. Hutchison & Wood, Montreal; 25. Routhier & Lefort, Ottawa; 26. Jas. Foulis, Ottawa; 27. Gordon & Helliwell, Toronto; *28. Brown & Vallance, Montreal; 29. No name.

*Design recommended for prizes.

3. Yes, to the first four designs recommended by the assessors.

4. (a) Not one of the four designs for which prizes were awarded was adopted. (b) Yes.

5. (a) Not one of the designs submitted was considered suitable. (b) No.

TREE PLANTING ON TURTLE MOUNTAIN TIMBER RESERVE.

Mr. SCHAFFNER:

1. Has there been any effort made to produce trees in the Turtle mountain timber reserve during the years 1906, 1907, 1908 and 1909, either by tree planting or sowing of seed?

2. How many men, if any, were employed in said tree planting or sowing of seed during the years 1906, 1907, 1908 and 1909?

3. What was the name of each person employed in planting trees or sowing seed on said reserve, and what amount of money was paid each person so employed during the years 1906, 1907, 1908 and 1909?

4. Has there been an assistant timber inspector in the Turtle mountain timber reserve either permanent or temporary during 1906, 1907, 1908 and 1909? If so, who has been employed and how much money has been paid to each such assistant?

5. What has been the result of the tree planting or sowing of seed in said reserve up to the end of the year 1909?

Mr. OLIVER:

1. No effort was made in 1906 and 1907. In the spring of 1908 a small experimental sowing of several species was made. In the spring of 1909 a small nursery bed was made, where seed of white spruce and jackpine gathered in the previous fall by forest rangers in Manitoba was sown.

2. None in 1906 and 1907. One man in 1908, two in 1909.

3. C. A. Walkinshaw, the forest ranger in charge of the reserve. Salary $100 per month. Time in 1908 not given. Seventeen days in 1909. John Lemon, 17 days in 1909 at $2 per day.

4. The persons employed on the reserve for fire ranging, cutting fire guards and timber inspecting are as follows: 1906, George Maddas, $2; Wm. Maddas, $2; Chas. Calder, $3; J. Reul, $2; D. McIntyre, $4; John Toles, $23; John Hamilton, $321. 1907, Wm. Pitt, $140; David Davidson, $96. 1908, Wm. Turner, $198; Wm. Pitt, $52; David Davidson, $252.50; Thos. Scott, $151; L. Racine, $24; John Lemon, $214. 1909, John Lemon, $377.50; Louis Racine, $37.

5. The seed of all the species sown in 1908 germinated, but it did best in places partly sheltered and not so well in more open spots. The last report for the year 1909 from the forest ranger in charge of the reserve states that on inspecting the place sown he found numerous green heads in the grass which were looking in good condition. A count of the trees was not made to determine the actual number.

A small nursery was started in the spring of 1909 with seed of white spruce and jackpine which had been collected by the forest rangers in Manitoba in the fall of 1908. The seed germinated well, but the plants did not survive satisfactorily owing the extreme heat and dry weather, and to the fact that the forest ranger's services being required elsewhere, he could not give them thorough care. The seed sown in the grass did not germinate, probably owing to the heat and dry weather.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY—ELECTRICAL POWER AT RIVIERE DU LOUP.

Mr. GAUVREAU asked:

1. Is it the intention of the Railway Department to use certain water-powers at Rivière du Loup to develop electrical energy, which is needed for its workshops, or to obtain electricity from the town of Fraserville?

2. If so, what quantity of electrical power does the department propose to have for the use of its workshops?

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM. The matter is under consideration.

LAND PURCHASED BY CITY OF BRANDON.

Mr. STAPLES:

1. Does section 6, township 5, range 7, west 1st, belong to the government? If not, to whom was title issued and when?

2. What consideration did the government receive for said land?

3. Does the government know how this land came into possession of the city of Brandon? If so, how and when?

Mr. OLIVER:

1. No; title issued to the city of Brandon on the 17th of May, 1909.

2. The east half of section 28, township 10, range 19, west of 1st meridian, which was revested in the Crown by the city of Brandon.

3. In exchange, under the authority of an Order in Council dated 9th August, 1900, for the east half of section 28, township 10, range 19, west of first meridian, which the municipal authorities of the city of Brandon purchased from the then owner and had conveyed to the Crown, to be used for the purpose of an Indian industrial school, as section 6, township 5, range 7, west 1st meridian, which had been set apart for that purpose, was found to be unsuitable.

EXCHEQUER COURT ACT AMENDMENT.

Bill (No. 159) to amend the Exchequer Court Act.—Mr. Aylesworth—read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

On section 1,

Mr. AYLESWORTH. This is a Bill which has been passed by the Senate in amendment of the Exchequer Court Act.

The general object of the Bill is to make the Intercolonial railway, including the Prince Edward Island railway, liable for the negligence of its officers or servants. The necessity for such an amendment will be seen by reference to the present law. Under the existing statute, the Exchequer Court has exclusive jurisdiction to hear and determine among other matters, every claim against the Crown arising out of any death or injury to the person or to property on any public work resulting from negligence of any officer or servant of the Crown while acting within the scope of his duties or employment.

The committee will observe the limitation upon this liability which the section, as it now stands, prescribes. It is only a death or injury arising 'on any public work' for which the Crown is liable. That phrase has been interpreted by the courts exactly as it reads, as limiting liability, to the case of an injury resulting in loss of property or of limb, or it may be in death, arising literally on the public work. This amendment proposes to enlarge that liability by making it extend to the case of an 'injury or loss to the person or to property caused by the negligence of any officer or servant of the Crown while acting within the scope of his duties or employment upon, in or about the construction, maintenance or operation' of the railway. So, it will not be limited to something which actually occurs upon the public work, but will extend to anything, no matter though it may be off the public work altogether, which has been caused by the negligence of an officer or servant of the Crown acting within the scope of his duties or employment. A familiar case is the case of a fire, which may not occur on the work at all, but which may be at some distance and off the actual line of the railway. There would, under the existing law, be no liability in such case, unless the death or the injury had been occasioned on the public work itself. And this amendment has been passed by the Senate, as I understand it, with a view to making the liability of the Crown—that is of the railway—extend to these wider cases that I have tried to describe.

Mr. SPROULE. Would this extend to any such line, leased line, or line taken over by the Intercolonial? The Bill refers to the Prince Edward Island railway explicitly, thus making a distinction there. But we have passed an Act giving the power to take over other lines. Would the Bill cover these lines also?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I can only say that if these lines fall within the description of the Intercolonial or Prince Edward Island railway, the liability would exist, but not otherwise. This Bill is limited to the construction, maintenance or operation of the Intercolonial railway and the Prince Edward Island railway.

Mr. SPROULE. Suppose, for instance, that, by the leasing of some line, the Intercolonial were extended to Georgian bay. That leased line would become part of the Intercolonial system, but would it be a part of the Intercolonial railway under this Bill? It seems to me there might be a difference.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I am afraid I am not able to say what view the court might take of the position of a leased line. Much might depend on the special terms of the lease under which the road was being operated. One line might be held to fall properly within the description of the Intercolonial railway, and another might not. The special circumstances in each particular case would have to be considered by the court if the question arose.

Mr. SPROULE. Why would it not be proper to apply it to the whole system as well as to a portion of it?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I can only say that I did not frame this Bill. It has come from the Senate, and has been the result, from what I have seen of the proceedings there, of a good deal of discussion. It was introduced in quite a different form, and ultimately took the form in which it is now before us. I have not had the advantage of any discussion with the gentleman who introduced it in the Senate, but simply have taken charge of it when it came to this House, because it was a measure relating to the disposition of legal matters.

Mr. LENNOX. I would like to have an explanation of the position which this Bill occupies as regards the government. It is introduced as a government measure, and is listed here under the head of 'Government Orders.' I understood—and I do not know whether other members of the committee have understood it in the same way—that all the Bills that come to us in this way are government measures, though they may not have been introduced in parliament by the minister whose names they respectively bear. For instance, I imagine that when we had a Bill under the name of the Minister of Justice, that meant that it was a government measure originating with the government and particularly, as a matter of actual detail, originating with the Minister of Justice. I was going to ask about that before any statement had been made by the minister. The minister said this Bill was passed by the Senate with certain objects. He further makes that clear by saying in the end:

I have not framed this Bill; it was introduced by a gentleman in the Senate.

I think he said in effect that it was put in his name. That may be a proper practice, I will not say it is not, because I have not had sufficient experience to pronounce upon it, but I am prepared to give my idea about it. I would not have thought it was a proper practice. I do not understand that it is proper or can be proper that a Bill should be presented to this House to all intents and purposes marked as a government measure, as something that has originated, say with the Minister of Justice, be brought in as a government measure, get its place in this committee as such, have precedence as a government measure, and yet not be a government measure. That is what this is. It originated with some individual in the Senate more or less responsible—probably less—and it is then fathered by the Minister of Justice for better or for worse. It evidently does not fill the condition it ought to fill for the reason that, as the minister admits, it may not cover, it probably does not cover, the whole government system of railways. As my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) has pointed out, there is no good reason why it should not cover the whole system; if it is a good measure it ought to apply to the whole system. So we have the minister putting through a Bill that is not his own, except for the accidental circumstance here adverted to. It is not as bad as the minister forcing through, for instance, the St. Lawrence Power Transmission Bill, but it does not seem to me to be right, and I would like to have an explanation and to know if that is a proper practice. It is not the only Bill placed under similar circumstances among the government orders. Whether the others are in the same condition or not I do not know. There are one or two in the name of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding).

Mr. AYLESWORTH. The remarks I made a moment ago were in answer to the question of the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) as to whether this Bill did not extend to other lines of railways than those mentioned on the face of the Bill. I gave the exact and accurate answer to that inquiry. I did not frame the Bill, the Bill was introduced into the Senate, not as a government measure, but by a member of the Senate who is not a member of the government. It was passed by the Senate in its present shape after much discussion. I have moved the second reading of it and adopted it as a measure which I am quite prepared to father and for which I am quite prepared to take the responsibility. If any hon. gentleman thinks it does not go far enough he is at liberty to move an amendment, and if that amendment is carried by this House it will go back to the Senate as an amendment so made for the consideration of that body. But this Bill as it stands is one that I present on behalf of the government as an extent to which the government is prepared to go in this matter.

Mr. LENNOX. This does not meet the case. The point is that there must be some fair treatment of members of the House and of the Senate. A private member introduces a Bill very much in the public interest, recognized at least by the public as in the public interest, or a senator may do so, but he cannot get it through. Is it right that fish should be made of one and fowl of another, and that the Minister of Justice or another minister of the Crown should take up a private Bill and give it that precedence that it has by reason of being a government Bill, introduce it into this House, put it among government orders and not say a word about it unless such words as may accidentally fall from him in the course of discussion. It seems to me that this kind of thing will lead to a very serious abuse. It is not treating the House fairly to introduce a Bill in that way without an announcement to that effect, and the mere statement that the minister is prepared to assume responsibility for it does not meet the whole question. Supposing that the government have a perfect power to do this kind of thing, I doubt the expediency, the propriety or the fairness of such a course. I do not think it is giving a fair chance to members of the House and of the Senate to stand on equal terms. If the government will say that they will take every Bill introduced by a private member and put it through the House after the time at which public Bills introduced by ordinary members can be put through, well and good, but to leave it in the position that supporters of the government, members who have the sympathy of the government, can get Bills through and others cannot, is not fair.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. My hon. friend is altogether in error, and a moment of consideration will satisfy him of his error. The moment a measure appears on government orders, it is because the government assumes the fatherhood of it. A measure can be introduced by a private member. A good many are introduced by private members, which remain on the order paper, but if the government, for reasons which are satisfactory to themselves, choose to take one of these as their own, they put it on the order paper. It has been done almost every session, not only for favourites of the government, but for members of the opposition as well, it has been done because of the character of the measure introduced. I am ready to admit that there are on the order paper several measures which in the eyes of my hon. friend (Mr. Lennox) have great merit, but my hon. friend will not be surprised if I tell him that measures which might have merit in his eyes might have no merit in mine.

Mr. LENNOX. There is no doubt about it.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. This is a measure which has merits in the eyes, I believe, of my hon. friend and of the government also, and for that reason it has been adopted by the Minister of Justice, who thought he was doing a good thing in adopting it. I think my hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) is the first to agree with him. The only criticism of that hon. gentleman was that the measure did not go far enough. I am prepared to say there is a good deal to be said in favour of the contention of my hon. friend from Grey, but the Minister of Justice did not consider whether or not it went far enough; so far as it goes, it is satisfactory to every one in the House, and I think for that reason it ought to be adopted.

Mr. SPROULE. I think it unfortunate that we should leave the measure with the anomaly that an action may be brought in the Exchequer Court with regard to damages on one portion of the Intercolonial Railway system and not with regard to damages on another portion, so that there is redress for a sufferer on one portion and not on another.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The criticism of my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) is right; for my part, I agree with him. My hon. friend the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) has said nothing to the contrary. He said that he would not be prepared to say that the Bill would not cover the case put forward by the hon. member for East Grey. I am giving my own judgment. I would not put my opinion against that of the Minister of Justice, but, as I understand it, the moment a line of railway is leased by the government and brought under the administration of the Intercolonial railway, it would be covered by this legislation. The Minister of Justice has had more experience in these matters than I have had, and he would not go as far as I in expressing his opinion, but if it were to turn out that I have taken too sanguine a view of the matter and that this Bill does not cover the point of my hon. friend, I see no reason why we should not extend it later on.

Mr. SPROULE. I think we should make it plain now.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

At one o'clock, House took recess.

House resumed at three o'clock.

CURRENCY ACT AMENDMENT.

House went into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

Resolved, that it is expedient to provide for a revision and amendment of the Currency Act, chapter 25, of the Revised Statutes.

Further resolved, that the standard for gold coins of the currency of Canada be such that of one thousand parts by weight, nine hundred shall be of fine gold and one hundred of alloy; and the standard for silver coin shall be such that of one thonsand parts by weight nine hundred and twenty-five shall be of fine silver and seventy-five of alloy; that the standard weight for gold coins of the denomination of ten dollars in the currency of Canada be two hundred and fifty-eight grains, and the standard weight for a silver coin of the denomination of fifty cents be one hundred and eighty grains, and for other gold coins and silver coins proportionate weights respectively; that the Minister of Finance be authorized to issue out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund such sums as may be necessary for the purchase of bullion in order to provide supplies of coin for the public service; and that the cost, charges and expenses incident to carrying out the provisions of any Act founded upon these resolutions be paid out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund.

Mr. FIELDING. This resolution is a necessary step towards the introduction of a Bill to revise and amend the Currency Act. The amendments, while necessary, are not very important, and I have no reason to suppose they will be contentious.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What do the proposed amendments amount to?

Mr. FIELDING. The main change is to enable us to carry out the intention of the government to provide a gold currency for Canada. There is a provision in the existing law for a gold currency, but it is found not to be very workable. The currency of Canada is on a gold basis, and as we all know, the British sovereign has the standard value of four dollars eigthy-six and two-thirds cents. We have in reality a second gold standard, the difference being so slight that it has not hitherto been deemed necessary to call attention to it. As a matter of fact the American gold coins are legal tender in Canada, and for ordinary purposes it is the American gold coin and not the British gold coin that is used in Canada.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. How are the American gold coins legal tender in Canada?

Mr. FIELDING. They are, and have been for many years, legal tender under our Currency Act. There being thus two gold standards it might naturally be assumed that they would be proportionately the same value, but they are not exactly the same. There is a fraction of difference, not large enough to affect commercial transactions, but large enough to demand consideration in a Currency Act. If we should make the Canadian five dollar gold piece on the basis of the British sovereign at the value of four dollars eighty-six and two-thirds cents, we would be producing a coin intrinsically of less value than the American $5 piece, and as we have, like the United States, a decimal coinage, it would be manifestly inconvenient if our $5 gold piece should be intrinsically of less value than theirs. The effect of the change is that we shall make our $5 gold piece of just a trifle more value than it would be if we made it on the basis of the British sovereign. Therefore, the American $5 gold piece and ours will be intrinsically of the same value. It would no doubt be found convenient in time that these coins should be interchangeable across the border, although I do not know that our American neighbours would likely make ours a legal tender as we did theirs. Perhaps the time may come when we shall no longer need to make the American gold coins a legal tender; but it is legal tender now, and the trade and commerce of the country has found it advantageous. We propose to make the gold coin of Canada of a quality, weight, fineness, &c., which will correspond exactly with the American gold coin.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What would be the exact value of the British sovereign upon the same basis?

Mr. FIELDING. The difference is very fractional. We shall still recognize the British sovereign as four dollars and eighty-six and two-thirds cents, and I think the actual value is four dollars eighty-six cents and some small fraction. The difference is so small that it will not affect ordinary transactions, but in a Currency Act we must take notice of it. Another point is that if we were to make a $5 gold piece on the basis of the British sovereign, four dollars and eighty-six and two-thirds cents, we would have a coin which in weight could only be expressed in most inconvenient decimals. It is advantageous that the weight of the coin should be such that it can be conveniently accounted for in all operations. These are the main changes although some few other changes are made for the improvement of the Act.

Resolution reported, read a second time and agreed to.

Mr. FIELDING moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 195) respecting the Currency.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

CUSTOMS AND FISHERIES PROTECTION ACT.

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH (Minister of Justice) moved second reading of Bill (No. 138) to amend the Customs and Fisheries Protection Act.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Will the hon. gentleman explain.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. The object of this Bill is to supply an omission from the present law on the subject. The statute relating to the protection of customs and fisheries, chap. 47, Revised Statutes of Canada, provides that in the case of a seizure of goods, or of a ship, every penalty or forfeiture may be recovered, or enforced in the Exchequer Court, on its admiralty side, or in any Superior Court in the province, within which the cause of prosecution arose. Pursuant to that provision of the statute the Exchequer Court has promulgated its rules of procedure, but some of the provincial courts, and possibly all of them, have not done anything of that nature. The result has been that when proceedings to enforce a penalty or forfeiture of this character have been instituted in provincial courts there has been no practice laid down by any rules which could be followed, and such proceedings have, in consequence, in some instances, proved nugatory, and the advantage of being able to resort to provincial courts has been thus practically taken away. This Bill proposes to remedy that defect by adding as a subsection to the section I have referred to, a provision that in so far as there are no general rules made by the Superior Court of any province, the practice and procedure in cases of this character in the provincial court shall be regulated by the practice and procedure for the time being in force in the Exchequer Court.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time, considered in committee, reported, read the third time, and passed.

MILITARY PENSION ACT AMENDMENT.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN moved the second reading of Bill (No. 194) to amend the Militia Pension Act. He said: This Bill is based upon resolutions which were explained and discussed very fully in Committee of the Whole.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

On section 6B, subsection (e),

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. This is a new provision, and is the most important provision of the Bill. It is proposed to allow an officer who is transferred from the active militia to the permanent force, to count on retirement one half the time he has served in the active militia up to ten years and not more, though he is not to count that service at all until he has served ten years in the permanent force. It is often very desirable to utilize in the permanent force the services of officers who have distinguished themselves in the active militia, but such officers have been very slow about entering the permanent force, because no portion of their time of service in the active militia counted for a pension, and very often they would not think of going into the permanent force until they had reached the age of 45 years or over, so that it was impossible for them to secure a pension, the minimum service for a pension being 20 years. But under this provision, an officer of the age of 50 who has distinguished himself in the active militia, say a lieutenant-colonel could come into the permanent force and serve his ten years there before reaching the age of 60; and if he had served 20 years in the active militia, he would be entitled to count ten years of that service, so that at the age of 60 he would have 20 years' service to his credit, and be able to retire with a pension. It is thought to be in the public interest that this should be encouraged, and we believe it will be greatly to the advantage of both services.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is there any definition of the word 'force'?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes, it means the permanent force.

On section 2,

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Subsection 2 of section 12 of the Militia Pension Act reads as follows:

Time served in His Majesty's regular forces may be counted towards a pension in the case of non-commissioned officers and men transferred to the permanent force in connection with the taking over by the government of Canada of the garrisons at Halifax and Esquimalt.

To that we add,

And in the case of such non-commissioned officers and men as have been or may hereafter be transferred from His Majesty's regular forces to the permanent force under arrangements made between His Majesty's government and His Majesty's Canadian government as to the pensioning of such non-commissioned officers and men.

It is simply extending the application of this provision to the non-commissioned officers, and men of the British army who may come into our force, it allows their time to count. At present the men do not contribute towards the pension, neither here nor in England. As a large number of our permanent force come from the British army, it is convenient to draw our men from that force. The object of this provision is to enable us to give due consideration to such men, and an opportunity of counting the time which they have served in the British army.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What are the arrangements referred to?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. That would be by order in council, or exchange of despatches between the war office and the colonial office, and this government.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Have any arrangements been actually made, or does this refer to arrangements that may be made in the future?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I think the arrangements are now pending.

On section 3,

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. This includes our own men who have served in South Africa, and other places, applying the same rules that apply to the officers.

Mr. CROCKET. Does time count from the date they are first enlisted in Canada, in the case of the South African men?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I think so.

Mr. DANIEL. In subsection (e) of 6B section 1, what do these words mean, 'half the time served in the active militia other than the force?'

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. That means the active militia. The active militia strictly includes the permanent force, the permanent force is a branch of the active militia; so those who have served in the permanent force are already provided for. This is providing now that service in the active militia shall also be counted to the extent of one-half.

Mr. DANIEL. But the word 'permanent' is not there.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Where the word 'force' in the Pension Act occurs it is explained to mean the permanent force:

(e) Time served in the employment of the government of Canada in connection with the militia stores of Canada prior to the organization of the ordnance stores corps.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What does that mean?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Formerly the men who served in what is now known as the ordnance stores served as civilians. They were men really too old to enlist in the ordnance corps when the ordnance corps was established, and it is thought that their time ought to count, and that they should receive a small pension. There are only some half dozen such cases.

Mr. SPROULE. You do not include officers of the Northwest Mounted Police Force. Why do you make that distinction?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. We do not include time served in the active militia, either. The men of the Northwest Mounted Police do not contribute to the pension fund, only the officers contribute, and the same way with the permanent force.

Mr. SPROULE. It is the officers I am speaking of. You say time served in the Royal Northwest Mounted Police shall be included in the time of service of an officer for the purposes of the Act, and when you extend this clause of section 12 of the old Act, you do not include them, although you include all the others.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The reason it was not included in section 3, I think, is that section 3 deals only with men, and not with officers. But the principle my hon. friend from Grey (Mr. Sproule) raises is as to the service of the men in the Northwest Mounted Police. As I understand the point, it amounts to this—that if you give to officers the advantage of including time which they have served in the Northwest Mounted Police, why should you not give to men the advantage of the time that they have served in the Northwest Mounted Police?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I do not think the condition is likely to arise as regards men. The Act has been very carefully drafted to meet all the requirements of the department, and I feel sure that it does so. I can see no reason why the Northwest Mounted Police might not be included, but I feel sure it is unnecessary. However, I will look into that matter. The Bill might be allowed to go through, and it will be very easy, at another session of parliament, to amend it if necessary. But I am sure it is not necessary.

Mr. WALLACE. Why should not it include non-commissioned officers and men who go into the permanent force?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. It will in this way: If a man who has served in the active militia, in the ranks or as a non-commissioned officer, should join the permanent force and be promoted to the rank of a warrant officer, then his time would count. But I think it would be very inconvenient—there would be so many difficulties in proving service—and very undesirable that we should count the time of men as privates in the permanent force who have served as privates or non-commissioned officers in the active force.

Mr. WALLACE. How about the man who has been sergeant-major in an infantry regiment for a number of years, and who goes into the permanent force and becomes a sergeant?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. If he should join the permanent force and be promoted, as he undoubtedly would be, to the rank of a warrant officer, when it came time to pension him, his time served in the active militia, if he could prove it—and undoubtedly a man of that class could do so—would be counted towards the pension.

Mr. WALLACE. There are so few promoted to be warrant officers, it seems hardly fair.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. A great many are appointed warrant officers.

Mr. DANIEL. I would ask if, in the Pension Act, there is provision for pensioning non-commissioned officers and men?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes. And non-commissioned officers and men are not called upon to contribute in any way. The officers contribute five per cent annually—it is deducted from their pay. But non-commissioned officers and men who have served twenty years are pensioned without having contributed anything.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

ROCKY MOUNTAINS PARK OF CANADA.

House went into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

Resolved, that the regulations of the 21st day of June, 1909, intituled: 'Regulations of the National Parks of Canada,' which were passed on the date above mentioned by His Excellency the Governor in Council, under authority of section 4 of the Rocky Mountains Park Act, being chapter 60, R.S.C., 1906, copies of which regulations, as well as the necessary order in council, have been laid before this House, are, in so far as they relate to the Rocky Mountains Park of Canada, approved by this House, in accordance with provisions of subsection 3 of section 5 of the said chapter 60.

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of Interior). This resolution is required in order to give legal effect to the amendment and consolidation of the regulations governing the national park which were passed last year under authority of council. The original regulations under which the national park is controlled were passed many years ago, and, of course, before the park had been in operation. Since that time, it has been found that in certain particulars they fell short of the requirements, and in other particulars they were perhaps, a little in advance. So, after many years of enforcement there was a general amendment and consolidation which we now ask the House to give effect to. The provision of the National Parks Act is that regulations which are passed and given effect to in the first place by the Governor in Council must be endorsed by parliament in order to be maintained in effect. The principal changes that are made include the following:

The reservation of a strip of 100 feet along all bodies of water in the park.

Changes, mostly of a verbal nature, are made in clauses relating to erection of buildings, defacement or removal of natural objects, trees, structures, &c., and also providing for the seizure and disposal of any timber, minerals, &c., taken unlawfully.

New clauses are added regulating the use of fire in the open air which was not covered by the old regulations. They require precautions in using fire, and make provision for proper equipment of locomotives and clearing of railway right of way. These clauses are similar to those adopted for the forest reserves.

A new clause provides that camping parties must clean up camping grounds before leaving.

For the villages in the park, regulations are made requiring connection with the sewer, preventing loafing on the streets or obnoxious or disorderly conduct.

Changes in details are made in regard to pasturage and hay so as to make the regulations work satisfactorily. None are of special importance.

Changes are made in the dues for sand, stone, gravel and lime, reducing them slightly.

Hot Springs: The change is a provision suggested by Mr. John Galt, civil engineer, that no further licenses for the use of water from the Hot Springs should be granted except by special order in council.

A number of additional occupations and businesses, such as restaurants, theatres, circuses, &c., have been brought under the license system so as to secure fuller control. The regulation for licensing guides for camping parties has been enlarged so as to place more responsibility on guides and place them under more control.

Sale of liquor: It is merely provided that liquor shall not be sold without a license. This leaves out additional provisions of the old regulations which are better covered by provincial legislation.

Persons in the park are required to answer inquiries of rangers or game guardians and livery stables, and outfitters must keep records open to rangers of parties sent out by them.

It is provided that dogs shall not run at large; that no firearms shall be kept or carried, except by duly authorized game guardians, unless properly sealed; that there shall be a right of search where game is suspected of being had in possession unlawfully; that not more than fifteen fish shall be taken in one day and none less than six inches in length. The appointment of game guardians is provided for.

The Rocky Mountains Park Act provided an extreme penalty of $50 for violation of regulations. The old regulation reduced this to $20. It is considered that $50 is not too large a penalty for serious offences.

The new regulations have been in force since the beginning of last summer and have been found to meet the requirements. Of course from time to time amendments will have to be made, but our experience is that the amendments contained in these regulations were necessary and desirable, and we are asking the House to confirm them.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I submitted these regulations to some of my friends who are more familiar with these matters than I am. I do not think they are in the House to-day, and perhaps the minister will allow this to stand until to-morrow. What is the general policy of the government in regard to the leasing of portions of these parks for residential purposes? Is it purely a matter of application and arrangement with each individual person who may desire to procure a lot, or are the properties disposed of by public auction, or in some such way as to give equal opportunities to all persons who may desire to avail themselves of such privileges?

Mr. OLIVER. The policy, of course, is that there shall not be any general acquiring of residences throughout the park; it is a reservation for the benefit of the public, and of course in its very nature it is not intended to be dotted here and there with occupation. So, the policy of the government is not to allow residences to be established except in definite locations where they will be most convenient, and where they will be most required. A person would not be allowed to establish a residence in some attractive place in the park simply because he desired to do it. It is felt that the natural beauty of the park should be preserved. To allow occupation the townsite of Banff is laid out, and within that townsite the lots which have been surveyed are leased at a certain fixed rental for a fixed term of years. There is no competition, the rentals are scheduled, and whoever wishes to apply for a lot gets it on the application, and on the conditions as to residence and construction, and observance of the laws, &c. that are contained in the lease. Canmore, a coal mining town, I think was established before the park was set apart, so that there is private ownership of property in some portions of Canmore, but so far as the jurisdiction of the government is concerned, the lots are leased. Some time ago an amendment was made which permitted the government to sell lots in those towns, but so far that provision has not been availed of, and all the lots are under rental in both Banff and Canmore. Bankhead, a coal mining town, is under the control of the Canadian Pacific railway, but the principle there is the same. Wherever it is found necessary or desirable to permit residence, as in the case of these towns, a survey is made, and the lots are leased for a term of years under certain conditions and rental. Outside of this, permanent occupation is not permitted.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. As I understand, the opportunities for application are the same to all persons.

Mr. OLIVER. Oh, yes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The rules are general rules applicable to all persons who may desire to acquire one of these lots. I presume there are restrictions as to the character of buildings, &c.?

Mr. OLIVER. Of course in the beginning when the town was laid out it was not desirable or possible to impose any serious restrictions, and as a consequence some parts of the town of Banff are perhaps not quite what might be desired. But under the administration as it is now, permission is only given for buildings of a certain size, and character, and the lessee must conform to the regulations in the matter of obeying the rules laid down or his lease is forfeited.

Mr. J. HAGGART. Has the minister considered whether he has any jurisdiction in making regulations in reference to the protection of game, other than what the proprietor or a person having the fee simple to that land would have?

Mr. OLIVER. I am under the impression that under the old Rocky Mountains Park Act it was declared that the Dominion with whom rested authority for the protection of game should have charge of that protection within the park. I do not know that that provision has been adequately provided for in the Bill creating the province of Alberta. However, there is no conflict, and no need of conflict in the matter. The province of Alberta passes legislation for the protection of game, and within the park we take measures to see that the game laws of the province are carried out, and we take such further measures of protection of game within the park, so far without any conflict whatever with the provincial authorities, because it must be quite evident to every one that the provincial authorities are just as anxious to have the game within the park thoroughly protected as the Dominion is. When the protection is given at the instance of the Dominion they are very well satisfied with the arrangement. In regard to fishing, the question does not arise in the park any more than any where else. The fishery protection service of the Dominion is carried on throughout the western provinces, whether by proper authority or not I am not here to answer, but the same right that exists throughout three prairie provinces is being exercised in the park; that and no more.

Mr. ROCHE. I would like to ask the minister if the policy he has just enunciated in regard to the disposition of lots for residential purposes in this national park is also applicable to the forest reserves. There are some very desirable locations in some of these forest reserves. For instance, in the Riding Mountain timber reserve, Clear lake is a beautiful lake, it is free of timber, and I am aware that several persons have applied for lots for the purpose of having summer cottages. Is this policy for the disposal of lots for such purposes applicable to forest reserves in the same way as it would be in the national park?

Mr. OLIVER. I might explain that the purpose of the reservation of the Rocky Mountains park is entirely different from the purpose of the forest reserves. The reservation of the Rocky Mountains park was for the purpose of pleasure. It was placed under reservation to be used by the people of Canada, and those of the rest of the world who wished it as a pleasure park, and so, in our regulations, control and administration of the Rocky Mountains park, we contemplate the presence of people, the coming and going of people, in, we hope, very large numbers; whereas, the forest reserves were set apart without having in view the presence of people. Rather the absence of people was in contemplation, the object being to secure the growth, preservation and reproduction of timber. So that, the policy of the one is entirely different from the policy of the other. At the same time the question that my hon. friend has raised does exist, or is raised, in regard to a number of forest reserves, and I may say that we propose to measurably apply the policy regarding pleasure parks to certain parts of the forest reserves such as the case which my hon. friend has mentioned. We propose to do something of the kind with regard to the reserve that was created at the Waterton lakes in the Rocky Mountains near the international boundary line. Wherever, in any forest reserve, some portion is found that can be used for pleasure purposes without endangering the general purposes for which the reserve was set apart, it would be the policy of the government to take such measures as would meet the case. I am not able to say whether special legislation will be required or not. I am not sure whether the provisions of the Forest Reserve Act would permit us to make an arrangement such as that which applies to the Rocky Mountains park, but it is a matter of detail. If we are not permitted to do that by the Forest Reserves Act as it stands at the present time I have no doubt that the House will agree, in due course, to legislation that will enable us to do so.

Mr. J. HAGGART. Does the minister remember the terms on which the park was taken over, and does he remember whether there was a declaration that it was a work or a reservation for the general benefit of the people of Canada?

Mr. OLIVER. I have not the Act in my hand, but I am satisfied that there was such a declaration.

Mr. J. HAGGART. Well, that may alter the argument a little, but if there were not something of the kind the local government could not convey their power of legislating with reference to game on that particular portion of their territory, and regulations in reference to game would be void.

Mr. OLIVER. There is an arguable question. Even although the park was set apart for the general advantage of the people of Canada, and I am satisfied that the Act so declared, I am afraid that the provision was not carried forward into the Autonomy Bill creating the province of Alberta. But, it is recognized to be desirable from all points of view that the game should be protected, and that it is necessary, and desirable that provision for actually taking care of the game should be made, and should be made by this government in pursuance of its policy of preserving the park as a pleasure resort. While friction might arise, I think the probability is very distant; certainly it has not arisen, and I do not think it is likely.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would think that the proprietary rights of the Crown in the right of Canada would be ample enough to give them jurisdiction to make some regulations at least. I would be a little surprised to find that there was any declaration such as that to which the minister alludes, because I do not see how a park could be declared to be a work for the general advantage of Canada. It seems to me that that would be a very unusual declaration, because the word 'work' has no such meaning in the British North America Act. But, inasmuch as the government of Canada would have the right, by virtue of its proprietary interest, to exclude any person from coming within the limits of the park, I suppose it might qualify the right to enter the park by means of regulations; in other words, it having the right to exclude altogether, it could give the right of admission subject to certain regulations, and perhaps that might be sufficient to justify the regulations which the minister has made, although I have not examined the subject with any great care.

Mr. OLIVER. We have been very careful. We have recognized that our position is not established as one of absolute control, and therefore we have gone carefully, and with due regard to the game protection policy of the province. I am satisfied that we have sufficient jurisdiction to create a good deal of friction if we wanted to. We do not want to, and I think the House may rest assured that the provisions we are asking it to assent to, and the administration of those provisions will guarantee that there will be no friction.

Mr. HERRON. I would like to inquire of the minister about the Kootenay lakes timber reserve. The minister is aware no doubt how beautiful those lakes are, and there is a great desire on the part of many people to build there. I would like the minister to inform me if the applicants can get permits to build in or about the Kootenay lakes. It is probably a timber reserve although I am not quite sure to what class it belongs.

Mr. OLIVER. The answer would practically be the same as that I gave to the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Roche). I mentioned the Kootenay lakes reserve as being a forest reserve, not a park reserve, but it is of a class in which it would be very desirable to permit a part of it to be used as a park reserve. It is our policy to make such arrangements as are necessary to that end. We may need special legislation, but if we do not we will make provision without further delay. However, these regulations have no application whatever to any other than the Banff park.

Mr. HERRON. Under the present regulations can a person obtain by lease or in some other way a site around the Kootenay lakes to erect a building?

Mr. OLIVER. I think there is some provision whereby building privileges can be secured. In reply to my hon. friend (Mr. J. Haggart) I may say that section 3 of the Rocky Mountains Park Act reads:

> Said tract of land is hereby reserved and set apart as a public park and pleasure ground for the benefit, advantage and enjoyment of the people of Canada, subject to the provisions of this Act and of the provisions hereinafter mentioned, and shall be known as the Rocky Mountains park, Canada.

Progress reported.

IRRIGATION ACT—AMENDMENT.

Bill (No. 186) to amend the Irrigation Act was read a second time and the House went into committee thereon.

On section 1,

Mr. OLIVER. The matter of drainage is being dealt with by the provincial governments and there are applications which are of a very minor character in respect to which it is unnecessarily burdensome to require plans to be filed in all cases as the existing statute provides. Under this, instead of requiring plans to be filed in all cases they need only be filed when the Minister of the Interior considers the work of sufficient importance to demand them.

On section 2,

Mr. OLIVER. The Act as it now stands contemplates the reservation by the minister, of land which it is desired to use for reservoir sites, or for the right of way of irrigation canals. We propose to add to that the right to expropriate in case some part of the area desired to be taken as a reservoir site may have passed into private hands. Of course, the holding of one small piece of private property would defeat the purpose of the government in making a general reservoir.

Mr. J. HAGGART. If you own the lands you have the right to reserve them, but the minister is taking power here to expropriate, for the purpose of irrigating a section of the country, land which may be vested in the provincial government. Is the minister quite sure he can do that constitutionally?

Mr. OLIVER. The hon. gentleman may be quite correct, but that view is entirely new to me. This parliament has declared that all the rights to all waters in the three prairie provinces shall be vested in the Crown in the right of the Dominion. The right over all waters in the three prairie provinces was vested in the Crown in the right of the Dominion, and the Acts providing for the establishment of the new provinces have preserved that right to the Dominion.

Mr. J. HAGGART. Do the Autonomy Acts reserve to the Dominion all the water rights over both navigable and non-navigable streams?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, as I understand the matter. At any rate, I am not presuming to establish the fact either one way or the other. I merely desire to amend the legislation which is on the statute-book, whether it is constitutional or otherwise, and I am saying that when we take the power to reserve, we should, in order to make that power effective, also take the power to expropriate.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. As I understand, what the minister is endeavouring to accomplish is this. There may be a certain tract in one of the western provinces which it would be eminently desirable to reserve for water storage, for irrigation canals and ditches; but it may have happened that before the importance of that proposal was recognized by the department, some portion of that land may have been alienated and homestead rights upon it may have been granted. This legislation is to permit the government in such cases to acquire that land by expropriation in order that the proposal may be carried out in exactly the same manner as would have been possible except for that alienation.

Mr. OLIVER. That is an absolutely correct statement of our position.

Mr. J. HAGGART. I understand that that is the object of the minister, but I very much doubt the power to carry it out.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

NAVIGABLE WATERS PROTECTION ACT.

Mr. PUGSLEY moved that the House go into committee on Bill (No. 103) to amend the Navigable Waters Protection Act.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Will the minister explain the object?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The two sections of the present Act, which it is proposed to appeal, are sections 4 and 5 of chapter 115 of the Revised Statutes. Section 4 is as follows:

> No bridge, boom, dam or aboiteau shall be constructed so as to interfere with navigation, unless the site thereof has been approved of by the Governor in Council, nor unless such bridge, boom, dam or aboiteau is built and maintained in accordance with plans approved by the Governor in Council.

I propose to enlarge the scope of that by including in it the words: 'wharf, dock, pier or other structure of any kind.' Then I propose to leave out the limitation expressed by the words: 'so as to interfere with navigation,' and to provide that none of these structures 'shall be built or placed in or across any navigable water, unless the site thereof has been approved,' &c. The object of the change is to give to the Governor in Council a larger measure of control over navigable waters and over works which may be constructed in, upon or across such waters.

Mr. J. HAGGART. Will that apply to those already built?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, only to the future. It is a curious fact that as long ago as 1870, parliament passed an Act relating to the Ottawa river which gave the government absolute control over all works on that river in these words:

> The navigation of the River Ottawa, as well by vessels and boats as by rafts and cribs of timber or logs, is hereby declared to be subject to the exclusive legislative authority of the parliament of Canada, and all canals or other cuttings for facilitating such navigation, and all dams, slides, piers, booms, embankments, and other works of what kind or nature soever in the channel or waters of the said river, or in which the waters of the said river are used, and in whatever province situate, and whether constructed or to be constructed, and whether constructed by the government of Canada or by the government of the late province of Canada, or by the government of Upper or Lower Canada, or by any private party by the consent and authority of any of the said governments, which shall, from time to time, be recognized by the Governor in Council, on the report of the Minister of Public Works, as being or as having been, constructed for any purpose of public utility, shall be held to be works for the general advantage of Canada, and, with all works of like character, no matter by whom constructed and whether being recognized as being for the general advantage or not, situate in or on the waters of the said river, shall be subject to the exclusive legislative authority of the parliament of Canada, and shall be under the control and management of the Department of Public Works, and subject to the provisions of the Act, intituled, 'An Act respecting the Public Works of Canada.'

Mr. J. HAGGART. That does not apply to wharfs.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It says piers.

Mr. J. HAGGART. Those piers are for the purpose of facilitating the passage of timber down the river, and are not to be utilized as wharfs.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The word pier is often used to mean wharf. Moreover, this says, 'and other works of what kind or nature soever,' which would surely include wharfs. I quote this only to show how far parliament went with regard to the Ottawa river; but, strange to say, with regard to other navigable waters throughout Canada, the only provision is one applicable to a bridge, a boom, a dam or an aboiteau, there being no reference whatever to wharfs or other structures which might be as objectionable in navigable waters as any one of these four works which the section refers to. Another objection to this section is that it limits the power of the Governor in Council to cases which actually interfere with navigation, and the question would naturally arise as to who shall be the judge as to whether or not a particular work does interfere with navigation. As I mentioned when the Bill was being read a second time, in quite a number of cases the provincial governments have erected bridges across navigable rivers in cases where I think it would be proper that they should come to the department at Ottawa for approval of their plans. But they have contended that these bridges do not interfere with navigation, that is, they take the ground that in some cases, while the river is navigable, it is not navigated, and, therefore, their works cannot be said to interfere with navigation. My attention has been particularly called to the case of a bridge which was built across the South Saskatchewan river by the Alberta government. There is no draw in the bridge. Their action was followed up by telegraph and telephone companies which strung wires across the river. A little later on an enterprising citizen living further up the Saskatchewan river concluded he would build a tug boat. He started down the river with it, and got entangled in the wires and by the bridge, and the result was that his boat was wrecked, and the unfortunate man lost $9,000 or $10,000 worth of property, and apparently has no redress against anybody for the damage he sustained. I think it is in the interest of the country generally that, as the Dominion parliament has control of navigation, it should have control of works of whatever nature or kind that may be placed in navigable waters, and that parties proposing to erect bridges, or wharfs, or booms, or anything which may prove an obstruction to navigation, should come to Ottawa and file their plans with the department and get approval thereof. If, in the opinion of the engineers, the work would not unreasonably interfere with navigation, there is no doubt the approval would be granted. I may mention a case that occurred recently in respect to the harbour of Victoria. The Grand Trunk Pacific were proposing to construct a wharf in connection with their steamship service to the city of Victoria. They fortunately seemed to recognize, what a great many other people and companies recognize, that they ought to come to the Public Works Department, even although the statute is silent on the question of wharfs. They came to the department and their plans were sent out to the resident engineer. He naturally consulted with the public bodies there, like the harbour association, the board of trade, and the officials of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and the general opinion was that if the wharf were built as the Grand Trunk Pacific proposed, it would seriously interfere with the navigation of the harbour, it would seriously interfere with the handling of the steamships of the Canadian Pacific railway. Consequently the engineer reported against allowing the wharf to be built as proposed, the Grand Trunk Pacific consented to alter the plan, and the Canadian Pacific railway and the board of trade consented, and in that way the whole difficulty was overcome. I only mention that case as an instance of the desirability of having the plans of any structure obstructing navigable waters, submitted to the department for approval. Section 5 of the old Act, strange to say, is limited to bridges, it simply says: 'any bridge to which this part applies.' We desire to substitute the following:

Any work to which this part applies, which is built upon a site not approved by the Governor in Council, or which is not built in accordance with plans so approved, or which, having been so built, is not maintained in accordance with such plans, may be removed and destroyed under the authority of the Governor in Council.

Why, in section 4, some four different classes of work should be mentioned, and why, in section 5, only one of these four classes should be mentioned, I am unable to understand.

Mr. J. HAGGART. Does this apply only to works to be built?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Only to works to be built in future.

Mr. BOYCE. How does the minister construe the words 'navigable waters'? Does that mean that no obstruction of the class mentioned in section 4 proposed to be amended, shall be built without the authority of the minister or of the Governor in Council? In the case of a reach, or a bay, which leads out to a navigable water, and which is not in itself navigable, would this Act impose upon any one proposing to construct a pier or a bridge for private use, the necessity of applying to the Governor in Council for permission?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, it is limited expressly to a navigable water, structures which are proposed to be built upon a navigable water.

Mr. HENDERSON. The Bill which the hon. gentleman proposes, I fear, may go a good deal further than he really intends. I have drawn his attention already privately to a matter in my own county. Along the shores of Lake Ontario, the waters are constantly washing away the land, and deep erosions have been made in the shore, so much so that in one instance I was informed by a former owner of the land that an apple tree growing 120 feet from the shore 25 years ago, has now entirely disappeared. That means that 120 feet of land on that farm has been washed away in the course of 25 years. In other places, roadways are interfered with, and there is a danger that land will have to be acquired to provide new roadways to supply the place of the travelled road which possibly has been in use from 75 to 100 years. Even in the village of Burlington, where a government property is only a short distance from a deep erosion across the street, there is danger that before many years the government will have to acquire another drill hall, or they will have to do something in the meantime to stop the destruction of the shore by the waves. Now the plan that is being adopted by the farmers and the municipal council is to throw out groynes or docks, or wharfs, from 75 to 100 feet into the lake, with the idea that the waves will wash the silt and gravel in upon these docks, or wharfs, or groynes, and in that way accumulate or build up more land, instead of constantly washing it away. The hon. gentleman has been in a position to expend government money for the purpose of protecting this shore. So far, he has declined to do anything, and I am afraid that if we wait too long the destruction may reach very great proportions. The municipal council of the county of Halton has already taken the matter up and has built one of these groynes out into the lake, 75 or 100 feet, and I believe it is having very good effect in preventing further washing away, in fact, it is perceptible already that new land is going to form and that the destruction of property will be arrested. Nor is that an uncommon thing. I am informed that farmers along the shore, in order to protect their land, are building little wharfs as they see the need of them. They build a crib and fill it with stones—a very simple matter, but it has the desired effect. Now, it is going to be a very serious problem for these people if they have to run down to Ottawa and get the consent of the Governor in Council before they are permitted to build a little crib filled with stone for the protection of their own land. The government will not do anything for them, and here the hon. minister passes a Bill to make it as troublesome as possible for them to protect themselves. I think the Bill is a mistake, that the law was well enough before. The broadening of the law as proposed by the hon. minister is only going to cause additional trouble to the people who desire to protect themselves, and whom the government does not seem willing to protect. I think it is a pity that the wording should have been broadened, and I hope the minister will revise the Bill and put the law back just about where it was. I am sure the minister does not wish unnecessarily to injure property or to prevent people from protecting their property. He may have in view wider cases and larger circumstances and may not have thought of these apparently small matters, though matters of very much importance to the men to whom I refer.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am sure no difficulty or hardship will arise in the case to which the hon. member (Mr. Henderson) refers. The matter of throwing out groynes to protect the shore is a matter in which no minister would interfere, unless it were found, in some way, to cause an interference with navigation. When this Bill was before the House on a former occasion, the hon. member for East Hamilton (Mr. Barker) and I discussed it across the table. The difficulty is to put in an amendment making exceptions. I am sure the matter can be well left to the good judgment of the engineering department of the government, and to the minister from time to time. There will be no disposition whatever to interfere with works of the character to which the hon. member refers. But it is important that the construction of wharfs should be as much under the control of the Public Works Department as the construction of bridges. The proceeding will be a simple one. In cases in which the work is at all extensive, it ought to be submitted to the department. To such small works as the hon. member refers, there will be no objection on the part of any reasonable minister, or of any officer of common sense

Mr. J. HAGGART. But suppose a party, say, on the St. Lawrence, or on any of the lakes, erect a wharf without coming down to Ottawa for the purpose of having it approved—a wharf for a little island cottage, for which, of course, it would not be worth while to make an application—what control would the party who built it have over it under this Act? He would have no right to erect it, and any person would have the right to tie up to it or even to remove it if necessary. The builder of it might even be liable to indictment at the instance of any person who had a grievance against him. The difficulty is the annoyance to which people might be subject. Of course, the case of building a bridge over the Saskatchewan is a different matter. They had no right to build such a bridge without getting the authority of the Public Works Department. The same would apply to the erection of any work of sufficient importance at the mouth of the St. Lawrence, or at any other of a hundred other places in Canada. But the application of the principle to everything in the shape of a wharf, is objectionable.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Let me illustrate the point I wish to make by citing a case which came under my own personal observation. Some years ago in the province of New Brunswick, the provincial government erected a bridge across the St. John river, and put a draw in it which, they contended, was sufficient for the purposes of navigation. The premier and attorney general at that time, Mr. Blair, said that, as the bridge did not interefere with navigation, he would not go to the authorities at Ottawa but would build the work according to plans satisfactory to himself and his government. But I say that, in the general interests of the country, the local authorities ought not to control such matters. The Governor in Council should be the judge, and the Department of Public Works should be the advisers. As to the small wharfs that have been referred to, I am not quite sure what their position is now. The soil under navigable waters, in most cases, belongs to the federal or the provincial government. Therefore, if a man builds a wharf in navigable waters, even in front of his own property, he is trespassing upon somebody, he is doing an act which is unlawful, either against the Dominion government or against the provincial government. This applies to ninety-nine cases out of a hundred.

Mr. J. HAGGART. Would these wharfs be liable to common usage by the general public, not having the authority of the Crown?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No more than they are now.

Mr. J. HAGGART. They may be now.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, they may be, it is difficult to say. Many wharfs have been built in navigable waters illegally. I really do not think there will be any practical inconvenience or injury from this Bill.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The minister is departing from the terms of the statute in force for many years. The statute originally provided that:

No bridge, boom, dam or aboiteau shall be constructed so as to interfere with navigation, unless the site thereof has been approved by the Governor in Council, nor unless such bridge, boom, dam or aboiteau is built and maintained in accordance with plans approved by the Governor in Council.

The minister proposes to substitute a provision that:

No bridge, boom, dam, aboiteau, wharf, dock, pier, or other structure of any kind, shall be built or placed in or across any navigable water, unless the site thereof has been approved by the Governor in Council, nor unless such bridge, boom, dam, aboiteau, wharf, dock, pier or other structure is built and maintained in accordance with plans approved by the Governor in Council.

I do not know whether the term 'navigable water' has been defined in the statutes or not?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, it is the first time.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. There might be some difficulty in giving that word an exact application. We know what the words 'navigable water' mean in Great Britain, there have been many cases defining the expression there, but on this continent the expression has varied from time to time according to the particular conditions of the locality, and the particular purpose for which it is proposed to use the water. For example a river may be navigable for one purpose, and absolutely unnavigable for another. I do not know whether the expression 'navigable water' would have the same meaning in every province in Canada. It is not defined in the statute. I suppose it must be left to the determination of the courts in each province, and I would think some difficulty might arise. Apart from this statute altogether in the case alluded to by the Minister of Public Works there would be no right to build a wharf or any other structure so as to interfere with navigation, and even if the person building that wharf absolutely owned the soil by virtue of a grant from the Crown that would not entitle him to build a wharf upon it. In the harbour at Halifax that very question arose twenty-five years ago in the case of Essen vs. Wood. There was a grant from the Crown in the right of the province to one of the citizens of Halifax of certain lands below high water mark. That citizen extended his wharf so as to cover that land. An adjoining wharf proprietor went with a force of men, pulled up the piles and destroyed the wharf. An action was brought, and it was contended that such person was justified in destroying the wharf, because although the person building the wharf had a title from the Crown to the land in question, that person was not entitled to use the land in such a way as to interfere with the right of navigation which was common to all subjects of His Majesty. An appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada brought a decision that by reason of the fact that the wharf so constructed was an interference with navigation, the person destroying the wharf was justified. The ground of that decision was that the Crown in the absence of legislative sanction has no right to authorize any man to interfere with navigation. An Act of parliament is necessary for that purpose. Thus the statute with which the minister is dealing is in one sense an enabling Act and not a restricting Act.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Hear, hear.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I suppose we can consider all these matters when we get into committee, but I would invite the minister's special attention to his use of that expression 'navigable water,' because I am inclined to think some confusion might arise in different provinces from the use of that expression unless it is defined.

Motion agreed to, and House went into committee on the Bill.

On section 1,

Mr. PUGSLEY. I would call the attention of the committee, and especially of the leader of the opposition whose remarks on the subject are very valuable, especially when he speaks of this Act being an enabling Act, rather than a restricting Act, to the wording of the Railway Act. The Railway Act speaks particularly of a railway crossing a navigable river, and requires that application shall be made to the Board of Railway Commissioners, as well as to the Minister of Public Works. In that case I do not know that there has been any definition of the words 'navigable water'.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It would be rather difficult to frame a definition.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Very. Of course there is a difference between what would be called a floatable stream, and a navigable stream. A floatable stream, down which logs could be floated, would not be considered a navigable water. The courts of New Brunswick have decided that such a floatable stream is a public highway for the floating of logs, but not a navigable water, as it would be construed under this Act. Section 233 of the Railway Act provides:

When the company is desirous of constructing any wharf, bridge, tunnel, pier or other structure or work——

These words are about as broad as the words of the Bill I am asking the committee to consider.

——in, upon, over, under, through, or across any navigable water or canal, or upon the beach, bed or lands covered with the waters thereof, the company shall, before the commencement of any such work,—

(a) in the case of navigable water, not a canal, submit to the Minister of Public Works, and in the case of a canal to the minister, for approval by the Governor in Council, a plan and description of the proposed site for such work, and a general plan of the work to be constructed, to the satisfaction of such minister.

Now, in effect I am asking in regard to all navigable waters that practically the same law may be enacted as section 233 of the Railway Act enacts so far as similar works constructed by a railway company are concerned. The leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) very truly says that this is an enabling Act, rather than a restricting Act; it is enabling the Minister of Public Works, or the Governor in Council to make legal the erection of wharfs and other works in navigable waters. I have a case in point. A person in British Columbia erected a wharf in navigable water, and some question arose as to the legality of the structure. He applied to my department for approval, but I was obliged to say: No, I cannot approve of it, because you should have come before you undertook the construction of the work; the statute is limited to that; I cannot approve of a work already constructed, the Act says in a later section: Approval of the proposed work. The gentleman was very much astonished, and aggrieved that he could not get this wharf approved of.

Mr. J. HAGGART. There is no remedy under this Act for him.

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, I do not intend to change that. That will be found in section 7, which says:

> The local authority, company or person proposing to construct any work in navigable waters, for which no sufficient sanction otherwise exists, may deposit the plans thereof and a description of the proposed site with the Minister of Public Works, and a duplicate of each in the office of the registrar of deeds for the district, county or province in which such work is proposed to be constructed, and may apply to the Governor in Council for approval thereof.

You will see it is limited to work to be done in future and, therefore, under this section, I felt that I could not approve of a work already constructed. No doubt the effect of the statute would be that when a wharf was once approved of, it would become legal, whereas, otherwise, it would be illegal.

Mr. J. HAGGART. Does the minister think he has no jurisdiction at all on navigable rivers at the present time as to what character of wharf, bridge or anything else may be constructed thereon?

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is a pretty large question. By the British North America Act the parliament of Canada is given control over navigation. I would think that probably the minister could apply to the Minister of Justice and have an injunction issued to prevent interference with navigation but that might lead to litigation. I think it very desirable to have some defined plan of operation laid down by statute, which persons would be obliged to follow, so that every man, when he was proposing to erect a structure in a navigable water, would know what he had to do, and if he got the approval of the Governor General in Council he could proceed and no individual could afterwards complain that his structure hindered navigation and was therefore illegal.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do think that the expression 'in navigable waters' perhaps might work out in the way suggested by my hon. friend from Halton (Mr. Henderson). If you provide that these structures shall not be built or placed in such a way as to interfere with navigation, that is one thing, but if you provide absolutely that they shall not be constructed in navigable waters, that is another thing. They might be constructed in navigable waters in such a way that they could not possibly interfere with navigation. Some of the illustrations given already would serve as examples of that. A man, for instance, might be protecting his own property. He might be obliged to build a structure for the protection of his property in navigable waters.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Who should be the judge of whether it does interfere with navigation or not? Suppose it is not navigable water should not the Governor General in Council be the judge of that?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The remedy is a very plain one. If any man builds a structure so as to interfere with navigation without statutory authority enabling him to do so, any one coming along, whose right to navigate is so interfered with, can tear it down and destroy it. It is a public nuisance. Therefore, it seems to me there is absolute protection in that regard. But, if a man places a structure for the protection of his own land in such a way as not to interfere with navigation he harms no one, and he is not put to the trouble and expense of seeking from the Minister of Public Works an authority which under the premises is not at all necessary in the public interest.

Mr. PUGSLEY. What is an interference with navigation? Suppose, as in the case to which the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson) referred, a man builds out into a navigable water for 100 feet from his own shore another man comes along with a row boat or a tug boat and says: I want to navigate the water where that pier is—is not that an interference with navigation?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Yes, and he would tear it down.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Is that desirable? Should there not be some authority which should settle these things?

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I understand that the federal government has set up a claim that the Horseshoe Falls at Niagara is a navigable water. Does this Act pretend to set up the claim that every water-fall where a dam can be built, or where a water-power can be developed, comes under the jurisdiction of this government?

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is limited to navigable waters. I do not know whether the place to which my hon. friend refers is navigable or not. I rather understand that it is not navigable.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I think the minister should state in the Bill what the term 'navigable water' means. The hon. member for Thunder Bay and Rainy River (Mr. Conmee) claims that the falls on the Nipigon and Pigeon rivers are navigable. They are navigable only for a Peterborough canoe drawing perhaps three inches of water. If that constitutes navigable water it will give this parliament complete jurisdiction over all such streams in every province of the Dominion. To make it move effective this clause covers all the water-powers that are supposed to be under the jurisdiction of the provinces. The Bill says:

No bridge, boom, dam, aboiteau, wharf, dock, pier, or other structure of any kind, shall be built or placed in or across any navigable water, unless the site thereof has been approved by the Governor in Council, nor unless such bridge, boom, dam, aboiteau, wharf, dock, pier or other structure is built and maintained in accordance with plans approved by the Governor in Council.

Not only the actual work but the site of the work must be approved of by this government. That places the site of every power in every province in the hands of the Dominion. I am not prepared to go quite that far, and I would like the minister, before this Bill passes, to make it clear that there is no intention to interfere with the rights of the various provinces in their own water-powers. For instance, the province of Ontario has passed an Act whereby every power of 100 horsepower, but I understand it is 100 horsepower—in the province of Ontario, it does not matter who is the owner of the land, or what the navigation of the stream is, or whether that power is developed by a company or any individual, is subject to the right of the province, in which the franchise is vested and which charges 50 cents per horse-power per annum. I would like to be satisfied that the Bill does not take away or interfere with the rights of any of the provinces in their own water-powers, their rights in their water-powers being as well established as their rights in their lands, forests or minerals.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This Bill is intended only to interfere with the navigable waters.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. What constitutes a navigable water?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think that there is no question but what the term 'navigable water' would mean a water which could be navigated by fair-sized boats—such boats as would carry traffic, freight and passengers. A stream which would float a canoe or a log might be floatable, but it would not be navigable. I would have no objection, if any hon. gentleman thinks he can give a definition of navigable waters which would be better than the definition which the court has made, to our defining what 'navigable water' means. I do not know that it has been defined by statute in Canada, although the courts have defined it as a body of water which can be navigated by sailing vessels or steam boats. I think that a stream through which a rowboat could pass should not be regarded as a navigable river within the meaning of a statute of this character.

Mr. BARNARD. Does subsection (b) of section 13 of chapter 115 throw a little light on this question of what is or what is not a navigable stream in its definition of the word 'vessel'? For the purpose of the Act, the word 'vessel' is defined as being 'any description of ship, boat or craft of any kind whether propelled by steam or otherwise.'

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is contained in the part of the chapter relating to the Marine Department.

Mr. BARNARD. Precisely. But when they define waters which are navigable, as the waters mentioned in that Act, does not the minister think that a court would seize on that subsection for a correct interpretation of the word 'navigable'?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I would hardly think so.

Mr. ARTHURS. There should be some definite description of what navigable waters mean before this clause is passed. There is an Ontario Act providing that in the unorganized districts of the province there shall be 66 feet reserved on each side of any navigable water, and it has been decided that any water that floats a canoe is navigable water under that definition.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Has that been decided by the courts in Ontario?

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. My hon. friend (Mr. Arthurs) refers to the Rivers and Streams Bill. It would be well to put in an interpretation clause stating what under this Act would be construed as navigable water. For instance, as far as the purposes of the Dominion are concerned, I should consider that if a stream entered into provincial rivers or international waters any part of that river from its mouth would be navigable as far up as navigation could be had without obstacle. But the ramifications of this Act are so extensive that it would cover that stream to its source. We have had it held in this House by a gentleman who is very much interested in these power Bills that any stream at all which empties into international or interprovincial waters is a navigable stream to its source for the purposes of this Act, and that the Dominion has complete control over any river or stream tributary to any of the great lakes or the River St. Lawrence. We would save a great deal of trouble in the future if we define in this Act what a navigable river is. I have no doubt the intention is to prevent an obstruction being put in a navigable river, such for example, as the Kaministiquia at Fort William, without the consent of the government. I should think that a river, or that part of it affected, should be taken over by proclamation before it could be considered as under the jurisdiction of the Dominion. We all know there has been a decision of the courts in the question of the ownership of streams in the province of Ontario under the old River and Streams Bill.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Would my hon. friend send me a memo as to where I can find that case?

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. It is a famous case which was fought through to the Privy Council by Sir Oliver Mowat, and I think it had reference to a large branch of the Ottawa river.

Mr. FIELDING. It is the Caldwell and Maclaren case.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I understand the hon. gentleman to say that it had been decided by the courts that a navigable river was a river along which any kind of a vessel, even a row boat or a canoe could be propelled. I do not see how that question could arise in the Caldwell-McLaren case.

Mr. ARTHURS. It was I who made the statement that the Ontario government had raised such a contention, and I said that there was an Ontario Act under which one chain perpendicular width was reserved along all navigable streams. The provincial government has interpreted this to mean any streams which are at all navigable.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I understood the hon gentleman to say that it has been so interpreted by the courts.

Mr. ARTHURS. No, but the Ontario government issues their patents with this reservation regarding all these small streams.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I can assure the committee that my whole desire is to limit this to what are in reality navigable waters, and hon. gentlemen will see how desirable it is that there should be federal control over the structures which are to be built therein. I am not prepared to say whether it would be possible to define navigable waters for the purposes of this Act, but I would be glad to receive any suggestions from any hon. gentleman as to a proper definition.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. The Muskoka lakes empty into the Georgian bay by the Muskoka or Moon river. These lakes are virtually in two sections, and there is a lock built between Rosseau and Muskoka lakes with a fall of 4 or 5 feet, and that lock is maintained by the province. A line of steamers plies up and down the lakes. At the lower end of the lake there is a dam maintained by the Ontario government so as to keep the lakes at a special level, and the total length of navigation on these lakes must be 80 or 90 miles. Under this Bill the control over these waters would apparently be taken over by the Dominion. The same is true of the Maganatawan; there are 15 or 20 miles of navigation from the mouth, then rapids for 25 miles, then another long stretch of navigation on that river. The same conditions are to be found on the Nipigon and on the Columbia and Kootenay rivers in the west. The minister should endeavour to find some definition which would end this continual friction with the provinces, and which would clearly distinguish the rights of the Dominion and of the provinces in these navigable waters. The time of parliament has been wasted a great deal with these continuous disputes, and they are not in the interest of the provinces or to the credit of the Dominion. I should hope that no one in this parliament would want to infringe on the rights of the provinces.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This simply deals with the control of navigation and does not touch the rights of any province.

Mr. ARTHURS. In the riding I represent the tourists have wharfs almost at every island on these lakes, and under this Bill these gentlemen would have to send down a plan or specification of each small wharf to the government. I do not think that is the intention of the minister, and I think some provision should be put in the Bill which would eliminate that difficulty. It seems to me to be manifestly unfair.

Mr. G. V. WHITE (North Renfrew). I have here a petition, which reads as follows:

To the Honourable William Pugsley, Minister of Public Works, Ottawa.

The petition of the undersigned residents of the town of Pembroke, in the county of Renfrew, respectfully showeth as follows:—

1. The Petawawa river flows into the south side of the Ottawa river about ten miles west of the town of Pembroke, and for a distance of about one-third of a mile from its mouth, along its easterly bank, there have been for several years past, and are still, several summer cottages and camping sites, owned by the said residents, who occupy the same during the months of July and August each year for summer recreation, boating, fishing, &c., and very considerable moneys have been expended in buildings and improvements and in beautifying the same.

2. Extensive lumbering operations are carried on upon the Petawawa river, and every year large quantities of logs and lumber are floated down to the mouth, and thence down along the southerly shore of the Ottawa for some further out distance, where they are put into booms to be towed away by the steamers, and these operations continue during the whole of July and August each year, and so completely block up both said rivers at these points that it is quite impossible for your petitioners, during the said months to enjoy or have any proper ingress or egress in small boats to or from either of the said rivers to or from their said cottages.

3. Your petitioners have repeatedly complained to the lumbermen or their representatives of the grievance above mentioned, but without any avail, as the grievance has not only continued, but has grown, during the past two or three years, to be intolerable, and unless the government will come to the redress of said grievance, the property of your petitioners will become so impaired as to be practically valueless.

4. A system of piers and booms has always been maintained at the said places to facilitate the said operations, but it has been so kept up and maintained in the interests solely of the said operations and without the slightest regard to the interests or convenience of your petitioners.

Your petitioners therefore respectfully pray that steps may at once be taken by the government to remedy or remove the said grievance by having proper gaps or openings made and kept up, through which your petitioners and their friends and visitors may be able at all times during the said months to have suitable and convenient ingress and egress to and from both said rivers to and from their said cottages and camps.

And your petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever respectfully pray, &c.

Dated at Pembroke this 7th March, 1910.

This petition is signed by some seventeen property owners in that district. I know the conditions personally, and they are as set out in this petition, and I would like to know from the hon. minister if this Act would apply in this case.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, if this Act had been enforced, it would in the ordinary course of events have prevented the very difficulty to which my hon. friend has referred. The petition which he has read shows the necessity of having some oversight over these navigable waters, so that persons, before erecting any structure, would know that it was their duty under the law to come to the Minister of Public Works and submit plans for the structure, so that they could be inquired into by the engineers, and if they showed no interference with navigation, they would be approved of. The difficulty to which my hon. friend refers would, I think, be obviated if this Act were in force.

Mr. G. V. WHITE. I may inform the hon. minister that most of the present property owners have bought their lands within the last ten or twelve years, and these lumbering operations have been going on for a good many years. I would be glad if this grievance could be remedied in some way. All that these petitioners ask is that a gap be made in the booms whereby they could have ingress and egress to and from their cottages along the shore.

Mr. PUGSLEY. If my hon. friend will be good enough to write me a letter on the subject, I will give directions to have it looked into.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not think that this Bill would remedy the grievance, if 'navigable waters' is to have the definition the minister gave a little while ago.

Mr. G. V. WHITE. These booms are on the Ottawa river, which is navigable. The logs come down the Petawawa river, and the cottages are right at the mouth of that river on the Ottawa river.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The difficulty in the past has been that there has not been enough attention paid to the right of the public to navigation. Men have erected booms, bridges, wharfs and piers, in many cases without the slightest regard to the public interest. In the very case my hon. friend from North Renfrew has referred to, lumbermen built booms and dams in the river knowing that the riparian owners had a right to navigation. We find the same thing all over the country. There is nothing in this country that we ought to guard more sacredly, in the interests of future generations, than the freedom of navigation, and parliament ought not to be afraid to entrust the matter to the engineering staff of the department and the Governor in Council, which of course would only act reasonably upon the reports the engineers would make.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. So far as I am concerned, with my knowledge of the facts, I cannot consent to this Act passing in its present form without a protest. The hon. minister cannot show the House a single complaint or petition to his department from any person in any province of the Dominion asking him to take the absolute control of all navigable waters. The old Act read that as long as the bridge, boom, dam, pier or other structure did not interfere with navigation, it could be built. The minister goes far afield and provides that nothing can be built on any navigable water without the approval of the Governor in Council. I will warrant that there are two thousand small wharfs on the Muskoka lakes, built by private individuals, costing anywhere from $25 to $1,000. The same thing exists all over the country. Are these people to be compelled to come and get the consent of the Public Works Department and to file plans made by an expensive engineer and costing more than they are worth, although very often these structures are miles away from any interference with navigation? The very stream the hon. member for North Renfrew speaks of is under the jurisdiction of the province of Ontario. There are streams where the province has given boom companies the rights to build booms and sluices and carry on their works. There are millions of dollars invested in these boom companies in the province of Ontario, as I have no doubt there are in Quebec and other provinces. The hon. minister proposes to lord it over all these investments and to the men who have built extensive booms in accordance with the regulations laid down by the province. He steps up with a great club and says, we have taken these under our control and protection. The great awakening for the protection of the navigable waters of the country has taken place first in the provinces, and the work cannot be done as successfully at Ottawa as it can nearer home. A man in British Columbia would have to come to Ottawa to get the permission of the Department of Public Works to build a $35 dock.

Therefore I think the minister should modify it, and leave the clause just as it was before. If the minister can show this House any documentary proof of need, or any petition asking him to pass this Act, then I would be willing to stand aside. But there has been no public petition presented for it in the House. The hon. member for North Renfrew (Mr. White) has a petition, but he will find that the Ontario law covers his case. They can compel any company that is booming logs to leave a gap for vessels. All that is required is that somebody should call the attention of the government to any obstruction that may exist, but they have gone to the wrong quarter. I think the minister in that Bill is endeavouring to take away the rights of the provinces. I do not hesitate to say that to my mind it is one of the most vicious attacks on provincial rights that has been made in any Bill that has been brought before this House for a long time. Whilst he may say that he can do this, that, or the other thing, the fact remains that those who are looking for those powers and approvals can already go to the provinces, and now he wants to give them power to come here, and thus keep this House in a turmoil for weeks. I think for the sake of peace it would be in the interest of the public that the old clause should remain as it is, and that before any such drastic change as this is made, the provinces should be notified that it is the intention of the federal government to take charge of all these dams, booms and sluiceways. The provinces have officers of their own appointed to look after these things, and they are paid for it, and they are doing their work satisfactorily. The minister intends to have a double jurisdiction. I think the Act is highly objectionable.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. There is another thing I would like to bring to the attention of the minister. In the province of Nova Scotia, for example, all along the shores of the coves, and small harbours, fishermen living on these shores have in many cases a little wharf or jetty; and the lobster factories along the coast usually have something of the same kind to enable the lobster fishermen to bring in their catch, and land it at the factory. It seems to me that under the provisions of this statute every one of those fishermen would be required to file plans for every little wharf or jetty that he builds in connection with his occupation. No doubt the minister does not intend anything of the kind, but I think that will be the effect of it. As has already been suggested, it seems to me that the mischief he seeks to prevent could be avoided by using the expression which is to be found in the former statute, and for the reason very forcibly pointed out by my hon. friend from North Simcoe (Mr. Currie). If, for example, he would add after the words 'navigable water,' the words which are found in the present statute, 'so as to interfere with navigation,' would not that be quite sufficient to prevent the mischief which is sought to be prevented? I think it would. I think it would be dangerous to depart from the expression which has been found fairly sufficient to safeguard the public interest in the past.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The only object is to make the law in regard to all navigable waters the same as it has been for nearly forty years with regard to the Ottawa river. There has never been any serious difficulty I ever heard of on the Ottawa river as to the law being oppressive upon riparian owners. My hon. friend from Simcoe (Mr. Currie) rather speaks as if this Bill is proposing to invade provincial rights, because we propose to take more control over navigation. Well, it is not this parliament that is now proposing to do that, because the British North America Act has already given to this parliament control over navigation.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I said navigable waters, not navigation.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Navigation usually takes place in navigable waters.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. There may be no navigation in navigable waters.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Wherever a water is capable of navigation, I think it is our duty to preserve the right of navigation upon it for the people of the country, for the benefit of transportation interests.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I suppose the point is that a navigable water should be capable of being used by the owner in such a way as would not interfere with navigation.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Then the question is what authority should judge as to whether it interferes with navigation or not. The hon. member for Simcoe says that the provincial authorities in Ontario have given permission for the erection of booms, and other structures in navigable waters. Well, they talk about encroaching on provincial rights, I say that if they have done that they have encroached in the most flagrant manner upon the rights of the Dominion parliament, because this parliament is the only authority that can give a right to erect structures on navigable waters, that power is absolutely, by the British North America Act, vested in this parliament. Now I desire, as I am sure hon. gentlemen opposite desire, that the Bill should be made as workable as possible. I am disposed to consider the suggestion which the leader of the opposition has made. I do not know whether the Bill will fairly accomplish the desire which I have to preserve navigation, by putting in the clause he suggested, but I will be glad to consider it. I do not think this is a matter which could be determined off-hand; therefore I would move that the committee report progress, and the matter can be reconsidered before we resume consideration of the Bill in committee.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. The hon. minister need not go away with the impression that I was endeavouring unduly to oppose this Bill. I wish to point out the difference between this Act and the old Act. Under the old Act, if any one put an obstruction in a navigable water that interfered with navigation, a complaint could be made to this government, and the parties could be compelled to remove the obstruction. I think that is only fair and just, and that is a right given to this parliament under the British North America Act. But to go wider afield, and to say that nothing can be placed in a navigable water without getting permission from this parliament, is quite another thing. Very often the ownership of the land under that water is vested in individuals, individuals have riparian rights, and the right of the owners of the lots extends out into the water; and to say that they cannot put a small dock in there although it may be twenty miles away from navigation, to say that a small fisherman in New Brunswick must come here, and pay $40 or $50, and deposit plans before he can put a twenty foot dock on piles at which to land his boat, or that the owner of a summer cottage in Muskoka who wants to put a little wharf on the edge of the lake where he can embark in his motor boat, must come down here and file plans, and the same all along the St. Lawrence river and every other inland water,—why the hon. gentleman would have to have a staff of 400 or 500 men to look after all these matters. For that reason I say the clause is absurd. The only right that is given to this parliament under the British North America Act is the right to prevent any interference with navigation, but that does not mean that this parliament has the right to take control of all rivers streams, and lakes in the country, as this Bill proposes to give them.

Mr. G. V. WHITE. I presume that this Bill would cover government docks which, in their present position, are somewhat of a menace to navigation. I have in mind particularly the dock at Petawawa. This case I have brought to the attention of the House on several occasions. The minister will remember that I wrote him last fall with reference to this dock, stating that the passenger steamer on the Ottawa river, plying between Pembroke and a point forty-five miles west, was almost stranded on a sand-bar quite near the dock. It seems that the dock has not been built in the proper place or that, in any case, the river should have been dredged at the dock. I have here a letter in reply to the one which I wrote to the minister:

Department of Public Works,
Ottawa, November 2, 1909.

Gerald V. White, Esq., M.P., Pembroke, Ontario.

Sir,—With reference to your letter of the 3rd September last, re dredging required at Petawawa wharf, I beg to state that an engineer of the department has been sent to Petawawa, and he held the matter in abeyance until he could make a survey which, he reports, cannot be done for some time.

From discussions which our engineer had with Captains Murphy and Tessier, masters of the passenger steamer 'Victoria,' the local slide master and personal inspection, that officer states that the sand-bar below the dock will require scraping next year at low water, the water this year being too high for scraper work. There is no dredge at present on these waters to attend to the dredging required.

I have the honour to be, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
NAPOLEON TESSIER,
Secretary.

Now, I think this is an urgent matter. On several occasions, the steamer 'Victoria' has been stranded on this sand-bar, endangering the life of passengers on board. It seems to me, therefore, a matter of this kind should receive the attention of the department. I do not see what reason there will be to wait until some time next August, when the water is low, to attend to the matter, for this steamer starts running as soon as navigation opens, and runs during the whole season.

Mr. PUGSLEY. How far is the Petawawa wharf from Ottawa?

Mr. G. V. WHITE. It is about ten miles above Pembroke, which would make it about 110 or 115 miles from Ottawa.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I suppose that we are in the same position this year as we were last year in regard to a dredge in that locality. I will make inquiries.

Mr. G. V. WHITE. I would like to have something done, for this is certainly a very dangerous spot.

Mr. THOBURN. I am very much interested in this Bill from the fact that, during the last session of the Ontario parliament, a company of which I am a member, applied to that parliament for authority to build some dams on the Mississippi river for the purpose of conserving the water. In years gone by, the lumbermen had the privilege of erecting dams at the mouth of certain lakes for this purpose. These dams have all disappeared, but the manufacturers in the different towns affected have formed a company for the purpose of building dams where the old wooden dams used to be. It is the intention of the new company to build cement dams. We had a Bill passed through the Ontario legislature at its last session to give us the power to build these dams. The question is, if the Bill now before us passes, how will it affect this company? As to this being a navigable stream, that is the question I would like to have defined. There are, on certain stretches of the river, small steamers, but I do not know that they go as far as where we propose to build dams. And there may be such vessels as gasoline launches or boats of that description plying on these waters. But, if we go to the expense of building these dams, and the question arises whether this is or is not navigable water, it may involve a heavy loss. This we would like to know before we go to the enormous expense involved in these works.

Mr. MACDONELL. What is involved in the power proposed to be given under this Bill to 'remove or destroy all structures' anywhere on navigable waters? Is it the idea or intention, for the future, to prevent the erection of any dam, wharf or pier, on navigable waters of any kind? As the minister probably is well aware, a great number of water lots largely throughout the province of Ontario, have been granted to private parties during the last fifty or one hundred years, so that practically the greater part of the foreshores of our lakes have been thus granted. For instance, in Toronto water lots were granted by the Crown many years ago, extending 600 feet out into the water. These lots are now owned by private persons. In many cases the owners have built wharfs, boat-houses and other structures out toward the 600-foot limit—this limit, in many cases, extending far out into navigable waters. These lots have always been regarded by the owners as their private property, just as much so as a piece of land in the city. The whole water-front of Toronto is built on water-lots originally granted by the Crown. They are filling in water-lots today, extending the harbour out into the bay, and are building piers on what is supposed to be private property, believing that they have as much right to do so as a man would have to build a house on a city lot. The land is covered by water, but the owners have the exclusive right from the Crown and have so treated it at all times. As I read the Bill it would certainly empower the government—if the Bill is intra vires—to remove any or all of these erections on these lots and to prevent in the future the erection of anything upon these water-lots on which there is navigable water. The whole measure is a very important one, a very serious one, and a very far reaching one, and I would ask if it is the intention of the government deliberately to extend the scope of the Act as far as I have indicated.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The only intention of the Act, as is apparent on its face, is to give to the Department of Public Works and the Governor in Council a control over the erection of structures in navigable waters. My hon. friend speaks of there being hundreds of wharfs built out into the navigable waters in localities with which he is familiar, and he asks if it is the intention of this Bill to have these removed. I say, no. This Bill will not be retrospective in its operation, but will only deal with the future, and it is important that persons who propose erecting structures in navigable waters shall come to the department for approval. My hon. friend knows, as a lawyer, that if any man, whether he come in a small boat or a tug boat along the water and strikes one of these wharfs and finds his progress impeded, he can go to a court and compel the removal of that wharf as being an obstruction to navigation, because it is illegal. A man may own the soil under the water, but he has no right to build out a structure into the water which in any way interferes with the right of every one of His Majesty's subjects to go wherever he likes in a row-boat, a motor boat or a steamboat, and any wharf built without legal authority in a navigable water is in that sense a hindrance to navigation and therefore illegal.

This Act, as the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) has said, is an enabling Act, and it enables the Governor in Council to approve of these structures. The only effect it has, and it is a very important effect as far as the public interest is concerned, is to keep a control over the structures, to regulate their building and to determine where they shall be placed. We cannot protect the interest of navigation and provide for the future interests of the people in that regard unless we have some control over the places where these works shall be constructed and over the manner in which they shall be constructed. That is the sole object of the Bill, and it does seem to me there can be no objection to it. We do not desire to encroach on provincial rights or to interfere with water-powers, but only to secure the right to discharge the duty which under the British North America Act is imposed on this government and which this government ought, in the interest of the public, to discharge as well as it can. My object in suggesting that progress should be reported was that I should give careful consideration to the suggestion of the hon. gentleman (Mr. R. L. Borden) as to making some amendment which would prevent the possibility—although I do not think it is a possibility which ought to be seriously considered—of the Act in any instance working with any degree of harshness. I would be glad to consider the suggestion, and if it is possible to make an amendment which would meet my hon. friend's view without impairing the efficiency of the Act and preventing it attaining the object in view, I would be glad to suggest to the committee that the amendment should be made.

Mr. ARTHURS. Section 7 of the existing Act reads:

> Such local authority, company or person shall give one month's notice of the said deposit of plans and application by advertisement in the 'Canada Gazette,' and in two newspapers published in or near the locality where such work is to be constructed.

This would work very harshly as regards summer tourists and the erection of small wharfs.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That section might be amended to provide that no advertisement need be published unless the minister should think it in the public interest. I would be glad to consider any suggested amendment of that kind.

Mr. MACDONELL. The minister is right and wrong in part. I am not quarrelling with his Bill, I think it is highly desirable that people should not be allowed to impede navigation as they are now doing by erecting structures along lake and river fronts. It is quite true, as he points out, that in many cases grants from the Crown of these water lots are subject to the rights of navigation through the waters upon these lands, and in so far as those grants are concerned, legislation of this nature would be applicable. It should properly apply to grants originally made in which the rights of navigation were preserved and protected. In those cases, it would be quite right that the government should wish to regulate navigation, and the grant of land from the Crown being subject to that right, to pass an Act providing some machinery for enforcing that right. But, on the other hand, as the minister will recall, a large amount of our water front, in cities particularly, has been granted without rights of navigation, and in many cases for acres or even miles, the foreshore and navigable water has been filled in to form solid docks and piers, where no right of navigation was reserved. When the Bill comes to be considered in detail, it might be well to consider those cases, so that a proper distinction might be made between the supervision over cases in which the rights of navigation were reserved and cases where the grants were made not subject to that provision.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is worth considering.

Progress reported.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

ST. LAWRENCE POWER TRANSMISSION COMPANY.

House again in committee on Bill (No. 115) to incorporate the St. Lawrence Power Transmission Company, Limited.—Mr. Pardee.

On section 1, incorporation.

Mr. HUGHES. Since this Bill was last before the House a good deal of interest has been manifested in it, and a good deal of research has been indulged in by members, I presume, on both sides of the House. Owing to the very conflicting nature of this Bill in connection with the St. Lawrence Power Company's Bill passed in 1901, I may say that it is the wish of of a great many hon. members on this side of the House that a little further time should be had to look into the legal bearing of one Bill upon the other so that the whole aspect of the case may be placed in view. I had hoped that my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) would have been here, but in the absence of that hon. gentleman I think I voice the wishes of hon. gentlemen on this side of the House in asking that this Bill should stand over until next Monday. I think that possibly there will be time saved.

Mr. PARDEE. I can see no object in the Bill standing. The primary objection to the Bill when it was under consideration before was that there might be some question that it would lead up to the damming of the St. Lawrence. Granted even that the Bill at that time said so, which it never did, the amendment which has been introduced would absolutely prohibit anything of the kind whatever, so that the whole question of any danger along these lines is absolutely removed from the Bill by the amendment. I cannot see where anything would be gained by allowing it to stand. There is nothing more that can be known of the Bill. In its present form it is simply a transmission line company, and it has absolutely no relation to the Bill of 1901 whatever, and even if it had it is absolutely restricted by the amendment proposed.

Mr. HUGHES. Whether the two Bills are not intimately associated is a question that a great many of the best legal minds in the country are in doubt upon; in fact, the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) frankly admitted when the matter was up before that the two Bills were associated together one being the complement of the other. In considering the question of the amendment which is proposed by my hon. friend (Mr. Pardee) further doubts have arisen as to the position that the company would then be in with relation to the damming of the St. Lawrence and with relation to the whole Bill.

Mr. PARDEE. Has the hon. gentleman read the amendment?

Mr. HUGHES. Yes.

Mr. PARDEE. Does he take any such meaning as that out of it? Does not the amendment absolutely preclude any such conclusion being come to?

Mr. HUGHES. I think not.

Mr. PARDEE. The amendment is as follows:

> Nothing herein contained shall be deemed to constitute an approval by parliament of any future development of water-power by erecting a dam in or across the St. Lawrence river under the Act 1 Edward VII., chapter 3, intituled: 'An Act to incorporate the St. Lawrence Power Company,' or otherwise. Nor shall the company hereby incorporated be authorized to transmit power generated by the St. Lawrence Power Company other than the power generated by and in connection with the works already constructed by the said St. Lawrence Power Company.

Nothing could be plainer in limiting the rights granted by this Bill than the language set forth in the amendment.

Mr. BLAIN. May I ask the Prime Minister if the government has had any correspondence with the Ontario government with respect to the further discussion of this Bill?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I understand my hon. friend's question to be whether the government has had any correspondence with the Ontario government. As far as I know, none whatever. I do not understand at this stage of the Bill what can be the object of my hon. friend's asking that it should be postponed. There has been a good deal of misapprehension regarding this Bill. I do not know how it has arisen, but the impression has been created, and largely circulated in the press that the government was in some way responsible for this Bill, and that it was connected in some way with it. There is no foundation for such an impression. The government has had no connection at all with it and it is quite indifferent as to what should be its fate. The government has no view on the matter, except simply this that for my part I quite shared the apprehension which was entertained, though I do not say that it came into this Bill, that in some way or other the object of the promoters was to take a step forward in the legislation which was adopted some years ago in regard to the damming of the St. Lawrence. Some years ago, as everybody knows, a Bill was passed by this House which authorized the damming of the St. Lawrence, of course, under the supervision of the Department of Public Works. No objection was taken at that time, as indeed, at that time, no apprehension was created. But since the matter has come more prominently before the public, there has been a very general apprehension, and not only an apprehension, but a very deep-seated opposition to the damming of the St. Lawrence as was contemplated under that law. Many are the reasons that have been adduced in that respect. The riparian owners, and the riparian towns above the site of the projected dam were afraid that if the St. Lawrence were dammed at a certain stage the consequences might be very serious to them. It was feared, and perhaps there was some very good ground for the fear, that there might be occasional, if not continual floods in the spring. Another feature was that it was not known, and so far as I am aware nobody has yet been able to tell us, what would be the consequences with reference, for instance, to the possibility of ice being jammed beyond. On the other hand, those below the dam were afraid that it might seriously affect the level of the river, and that navigation might be impaired. Another source of objection was that the St. Lawrence river is so bound up with the history of the country, and its geographical features, that many were disposed to look at any attempt to in any way impede its flow, as something like a sacrilege. I do not think that expression is too strong, and for my part I share that view. I would not, so far as I am at present advised, agree for any consideration whatever to the damming of the St. Lawrence where it is proposed to dam it. The matter has been for several years —it is not too much to say it has been for several years—before the Waterways Commission, and they have very properly been taking evidence as to what would be the effect on the St. Lawrence in respect to damage caused by flooding, damage caused by lowering the level of the river, damage to the scenery, and so on. It is proper that we should have information upon these points, and the commission is investigating the subject. It may be that as a result of their investigation parliament would come to the conclusion that the works which are contemplated should be erected. On that subject I pass no opinion at all. I must admit, however, that in this industrial age very often beauty and character are sacrificed to utility. English capital has dammed the Nile, and in so doing has destroyed a good deal of its beauty and historical scenery, but on the other hand it has proved a source of great benefit to the farming population on the banks of that river. It may be that in the course of time the demand for energy will become so great as to impel this parliament after due consideration to do the same thing with the St. Lawrence, but at present I have no hesitation in saying that for my part I would not agree to it. I, therefore, think it my duty to say that the government does not at all, at the present time, favour this project. When the Bill was introduced there were perhaps features in it which might have led the public to come to the conclusion that there was something behind it, and that it was intended somehow or other that this was a Bill to further promote the scheme of damming the St. Lawrence. When the Bill came back from the committee to which it was referred, and which gave it a good deal of attention, I for my part thought it had been shorn of all the possible mischief there was at first in it and that it might pass the House. But a good many members of the House—not on one side alone, but on both sides—were apprehensive as to that, and in order to make the matter doubly sure, not only doubly sure, but absolutely sure, my hon. friend (Mr. Pardee) has moved this amendment, which I beg permission of the House to read once more so as to call attention to it:

> Nothing herein contained shall be deemed to constitute an approval by parliament of any future development of water-power by erecting a dam in or across the St. Lawrence river under the Act 1 Edward VII., chapter 3, intituled: 'An Act to incorporate the St. Lawrence Power Company,' or otherwise. Nor shall the company hereby incorporated be authorized to transmit power generated by the St. Lawrence Power Company other than the power generated by and in connection with the works already constructed by the said St. Lawrence Power Company.

Now, in my humble judgment, if these words are introduced in this Bill they would eliminate any apprehension which might have existed at one time.

Mr. HUGHES. This is the first time we have had a frank admission from any member of the government that the Bill of 1901 was actually a Bill to dam the St. Lawrence river. That throws new light on the matter to-night. That was denied the other evening by those who were supporting the Bill, but this amendment frankly admits that the Bill of 1901 gave authority to dam the St. Lawrence.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Part of it, certainly.

Mr. HUGHES. The Canadian part of it.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Part of it.

Mr. HUGHES. The First Minister frankly admits that to-night and throws new light on the subject.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. As I read that Act the power is given to dam the St. Lawrence for the purpose of generating energy, and whether it was wise or unwise to give that power, no action has been taken upon it. When we were asked to agree to plans for damming the St. Lawrence, the matter was referred to the Waterways Commission which has still the subject in hand. For my part I agree with my hon. friend (Mr. Hughes); I do not want to see the St. Lawrence dammed, and that is why, to meet the objection raised by some members on both sides of the House, the present amendment has been introduced which makes it clear that nothing under the present Bill can be done or shall be done so as to enhance or favour or forward what was done by the Act of 1901. And so, if this Bill is passed no injury can accrue to those who want to have the St. Lawrence remain as it is.

Mr. J. D. REID. Did I understand the Prime Minister to say that this company erected a dam under the Act of 1901?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I understand they did some work.

Mr. J. D. REID. The Minister of Railways will bear witness to the fact that they never built any dam at all. The government built and paid for a dam from the mainland to Sheiks island.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That was long before the Bill of 1901.

Mr. J. D. REID. Mr. M. P. Davis had the contract from the government for building that dam.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Possibly.

Mr. J. D. REID. There is no question about it at all; I know the facts very well. That is really part of the canal system, and it is exactly the same as if a person leased power from the government on the Lachine canal or the Cornwall canal. Of course,

Mr. Davis had the advantage, when he was building the dam, of knowing that the power would be there, and so to-day he is paying a rental to the government, he having built his wheel pits within the government dam. But, the very fact that the Minister of Public Works stated the other night that this Bill is really part of the proposal to dam the St. Lawrence—

Mr. PUGSLEY. The Minister of Public Works did not say that.

Mr. J. D. REID. The Minister of Public Works stated that this Bill was really subsidiary to the other.

Mr. PUGSLEY. No such thing. I must correct my hon. friend. I made no such statement to this committee. I have been greatly misrepresented outside the House, and now my hon. friend is misrepresenting me inside the House. On the contrary, I stated that this Bill in my judgment had nothing to do with the question of damming the St. Lawrence. As to that, my mind was open; I had not formed a judgment one way or the other.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If my recollection is correct, the minister said that he had no doubt that this company proposed to get its power from the St. Lawrence Power Company.

Mr. PUGSLEY. If it should be developed.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not know that there was any qualifying phrase of that kind

Mr. PUGSLEY. I said that if that power were developed I suspected that this company would get its power there, but at the same time I had no knowledge on the subject.

Mr. J. D. REID. At all events, my impression from what the minister said was that this Bill was to be considered in conjunction with the Bill that should come at a later date, so far as the damming of the St. Lawrence was concerned.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I made no such statement.

Mr. J. D. REID We have 'Hansard' here.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I must point out that when an hon. member denies having made any statement, his denial must be accepted irrespective of any other reference.

Mr. J. D. REID. There is another thing I want to say to the Prime Minister. When this Bill was before the Private Bills Committee, we urged that this St. Lawrence Power Company's Bill be amended in clause 10. The claim was that the St. Lawrence Power Company could only go to a place called Hoople's creek, ten or twelve miles above Cornwall, for their power. If they had amended clause 10, there would not have been any objection to extend the scope of the St. Lawrence Power Company westward to Brockville or eastward to the Lachine canal. When the people interested in this Bill went to Prescott and Brockville they did not hesitate to say that this Bill had to go through, because the damming of the St. Lawrence was part and parcel of the whole affair, as they had not the power at Cornwall, all the power they had was sold, and they could not possibly supply the power from the St. Lawrence Power Company. But when they came back here they tell a different story. They say they have plenty of power at the St. Lawrence Power Company, and no doubt they have. The answer I gave to them at Prescott was that there was plenty of power there, and if the people of Brockville and Prescott would subscribe for plenty of power it would pay them to extend their transmission line to those places. If they refuse to give the people the advantage of a cheap power, we could ask the government to cancel the contract which they have for lighting the canal, amounting to $52,000 or something like that for 89 years, and there is no doubt that they would run their transmission line to Prescott and Brockville rather than have that contract cancelled. They would have no trouble in running their transmission line to Brockville or even to Kingston, as they say they are anxious to do. Mr. Beach, who has a water-power at Iroquois, has put in a new plant and is ready to serve the public. It is true, he has only put in machinery for 500 horsepower, but he has 2,000 horse-power that he is anxious to sell at Prescott and Brockville if it would pay to run a transmission line. In coming from Hoople's creek to Prescott, I understand that this St. Lawrence Power Company are going to buy the right of way for a width of 30 or 40 feet along the Grand Trunk railway. If they purchase that they will have no trouble in running their transmission line, and they do not need to have an extension of their charter for that purpose. Of course, if they were running on the public road, they would require to get a by-law from the municipality. Mr. Beach had no trouble in getting a by-law passed for that purpose. Down there the whole story was the damming of the St. Lawrence. Now they turn round and say that they are going to supply power from the St. Lawrence Power Company. That company, in the first place, would not agree at what price they would supply the power. They are supplying it to Cornwall for $12.50, and they are charging the government $63. There is no trouble about their getting to Prescott and Brockville if they want to do that. So far as Montreal is concerned, I think the Prime Minister will admit that it is pretty well supplied with power. From the Beauharnois canal there will be 75,000 horse-power, I have heard some engineers state that at the very least there will be 50,000 horse-power soon going from there to Montreal. Then, there is plenty of power from the Lachine canal, Shawenegan and Cedar rapids. In regard to this scheme for damming the St. Lawrence, let the Prime Minister just look at the situation. The proposed dam is to be right where the government territory commences to run eastward on both sides of the river. This government gave permission a few years ago to this same crowd, who are practically the Standard oil people, to dig a canal from the St. Lawrence to empty into the Grass river on the American side. The same people own the Massena power plant on the other side of the river, but they are only using a small portion of that power.

Mr. HUGHES. They have developed 35,000 horse-power now.

Mr. J. D. REID. That canal empties into the Grass river, which empties again into the St. Lawrence. If this dam goes across the Long Sault, and they simply place a dam at the end of Grass river where there is thirty or forty feet of a rise, it is going to send the water down through the state, and they will have not only a water course, but they will have power all the way down that state. From what people tell me it is worth an immense amount, and I am told that a canal system can be run from that point to Lake Champlain. If that is the case the Prime Minister will see that grain can be brought to that point, and carried down that way to Lake Champlain. Now the only reason they can urge for pushing this Bill through this session would be to get a supply of power for Prescott and Brockville. I am satisfied from what I have heard from good lawyers that they will have no trouble to buy the right of way, and carry that line up to Prescott and Brockville. If they can do that, I do not see any great rush for this Bill. Let it be held over, and let the government go into the matter, and bring it up at a future session.

Mr. GRAHAM. If this Bill had anything to do with damming the St. Lawrence river I would hesitate very much before I would support it. Unlike some hon. gentlemen, I speak of the situation as having lived along it most of my life. It is not only on the map that I know it, but I have walked over the ground time and again. I am not going to discuss the question of damming the St. Lawrence river. That is a pretty big problem, and we will discuss it at the proper time, if the time ever comes. But this Bill has nothing to do directly or indirectly with damming the St. Lawrence river, and cannot be construed as having any such purpose after the amendment proposed by the promoter of this Bill, and a discussion along those lines is calculated to lead us away from the purpose of the Bill.

Mr. BLAIN. May I ask the minister if the Bill had anything to do with damming the St. Lawrence before the amendment was introduced by the mover of the Bill?

Mr. GRAHAM. I never understood that it had. I say frankly that I appeared before the Private Bills Committee, not as a member of the government, but as a member for the constituency affected, and very seriously affected, and all I suggested to the committee was that they give us a Bill for the incorporation of a transmission line, and nothing else. That is all I ever favoured, that is all I favour now, and that is all I believe there is in this Bill. It is all very well for hon. gentlemen who are going to be supplied with cheap power in their own locality, to withhold sympathy from our attempt to get the power which we have not now.

Mr. HUGHES. Did the town of Brockville try to get this power, or was it presented to them?

Mr. GRAHAM. For five years the Brockville people have been discussing with Mr. Beach, and endeavouring to get together on terms to form a company to transmit power from Iroquois. It is with the sole desire to get power into a part of the country that has not any power, that I want this Bill put through, and any hon. gentleman in the House would do the same thing if he were true to his own constituents. Now as to the damage to be done, nobody need tell me anything about damage to be done if the St. Lawrence river is to be dammed. I have lived there, and know all about it, I know where the ice jams occur, and what is the result. But that has nothing to do with this Bill. This Bill has been shorn of everything that can lend suspicion that it is a back door attempt to dam the St. Lawrence river.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Would the minister tell us why these plans were all prepared in connection with a company?

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes, certainly. These plans were prepared because a company has been trying to get permission to dam the St. Lawrence for some years, and these are their propositions. They wanted to get the power, but the government has not given them the power. The Prime Minister stated a year ago that nothing would be done without taking parliament into the full confidence of the government. But I come back to this point. In so far as the town of Brockville is concerned, they have made many attempts to get power, and no serious effort has been made by any person outside Brockville to give us that power. True, some letters have been written intimating that such an attempt has been made, but I say that no serious attempt was ever made, and we are as far from getting power to-day as we ever were. That makes a very difficult situation for a town the size of Brockville. I may say that what is now one of the largest industries in the Dominion of Canada had its nucleus in the town of Brockville, a manufactory of agricultural implements. The stock of that company was purchased from local men, the local men understanding that the company was to be established in Brockville and would enlarge its business. But the question of power immediately came up and as we did not have the power we lost the industry, although we offered, I think, an unreasonable proposition in the way of a site and in the way of bonuses. The hon. member for Grenville (Mr. Reid) has pointed out the ground on which I wanted this Bill put through.

Mr. SPROULE. Did they ever apply to the Hydro-Electric Commission to get the power?

Mr. GRAHAM. They did, they asked for bread and they got a stone, absolutely. What I said a few moments ago, I mean emphatically, that no serious effort was made to give them any power from outside sources, and any person that makes any other statement says what is absolutely untrue, because I know all about it. I think there is some surplus power with a company now at Cornwall, the St. Lawrence Power Company. It must be remembered that this power is leased to them by the Dominion government in the manner outlined by the hon. member for Grenville (Mr. Reid). I am of the opinion that they have surplus power that they can give to somebody. There is a power, or the nucleus of a power, generated opposite Morrisburg, in the village of Waddington, a power I know very well, in what is known as the Little river, nearly opposite Morrisburg, or a mile further west. The situation is something like that at the Sault. There is the main channel of the St. Lawrence river on the north, there is Ogden's Island, and to the south of that is the Little river. Years ago they had a dam across the Little river at Waddington and a paper mill there. That power has passed into the hands of another company. I am not sure but that if they had a transmission line, power could be obtained from that source. Then we come to Iroquois where Mr. Beach has some surplus power, but I am of the opinion it will never be of use until somebody builds a transmission line. Now without any thought of damming the St. Lawrence river to get power, I do not see why this House should not grant a charter to a transmission line, a charter robbed of everything else, and give us an opportunity to get the power that runs along that line for the development of our industries. That is all I have asked for, and all I want. And I do not think it is reasonable that the House, in the face of the present situation, with the Bill amended as I want it amended, so as to give the company no power except to run a transmission line—I say that I think it is not treating that part of the province fairly, it is not treating the constituency I represent fairly to say, when we think we have a chance to get power in this way that we should not have the right to have a transmission line for that power. I know the situation thoroughly, and I say again that all we are asking for and all that is wanted is power to transmit electricity. If it is not granted under such a Bill as this, we cannot get it. I believe there is power enough already developed along the route of that transmission line to supply the towns that are asking for power.

Mr. SPROULE. Does the hon. minister think that this is not in any way connected with the St. Lawrence Power Company or that when this Bill is passed the one company will not be the complement of the other? If not, why is this called The St. Lawrence Power Transmission Company,' while the other is 'The St. Lawrence Power Company'? I take it, the ownership is the same in both cases, and one company is the complement of the other, the one intended to develop power and the other to transmit it.

Mr. GRAHAM. I did not see the Bill when it was first drawn, but as it stands now it precludes this transmission line from taking the power from works not already constructed. So, this transmission company is tied down to powers developed in works now established and constructed. So, that gets over the objection of my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) altogether. And I think it ought to.

Mr. NORTHRUP. I am sure the House was pleased with many of the remarks of the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) who leads it, and agrees with him to a great extent in those remarks. I did, for my part. He was opposed to a scheme to dam the St. Lawrence. He sympathized with those who were suspicious of the Bill before the House. But when these amendments were introduced by the hon. gentleman who moved the Bill, all objection was removed from the right hon. gentleman's mind, because he saw at once that, by the very reason of this amendment, the Bill, which up to that time, amply justified suspicion on both sides of the House, was robbed of any features that might justify suspicion. Possibly the right hon. gentleman may view the Bill from one standpoint and I from another. But I would ask hon. members to consider what this amendment is, and see if it justifies the conclusion that the right hon. gentleman—perhaps I might say a little too confiding in his opinion of the promoters of the Bill—has reached in connection with this matter. Let us read the amendment:

Nothing herein contained shall be deemed to constitute an approval by parliament of any future development of water-power by erecting a dam in or across the St. Lawrence river under the Act 1 Edward VII., chapter 3, intituled: 'An Act to incorporate the St. Lawrence Power Company,' or otherwise.

Suppose that the amendment had not been moved at all, how in the world would the Bill differ from what it is? Can anybody suggest the slightest thing in which the Bill minus this amendment is different from the Bill plus this amendment? There is nothing in this Bill about damming the St. Lawrence. Nobody has ever contended that this Bill said anything that would give the right to anybody to dam the St. Lawrence. And, inasmuch as it does not give that right, how can it affect the existing condition to put in a clause declaring that nothing contained in the Bill shall be deemed to constitute an approval by parliament of that course?

Mr. PARDEE. Read the balance, please.

Mr. NORTHRUP. One thing at a time. There are two clauses. So far as the first clause is concerned, the law would be precisely the same without this amendment as it will be with it. Now, if we find a clause inserted which is obviously meaningless, yet so artfully drawn that it appealed to the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) himself—even though it may be, he has more confidence in the promoters of this Bill than some other members of the House have—and who, reading it cursorily, thought it meant something, is not that reason why we should be all the more suspicious of the real purpose behind this Bill? The amendment goes on:

Nor shall the company hereby incorporated be authorized to transmit power generated by the St. Lawrence Power Company other than the power generated by and in connection with the works already constructed by the said St. Lawrence Power Company.

That is to say, this company is asking the authority to transmit only the power which can be manufactured by the St. Lawrence Power Company with its development up to date Why does not the St. Lawrence Power Company transmit its own electricity? We have been told by the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Graham) that the object of the Bill is simply and solely to give this new corporation the power to transmit electricity. If the original company had not authority to transmit electricity, there must be some ground for that argument. But has the St. Lawrence Power Company the right to transmit electricity or has it not? There cannot be the shadow of a doubt about it. Section 8 says:

8. The company may—
(a) manufacture, use, supply and dispose of electricity, water and gas, and water, hydraulic or other power by means of wires——

There are your wires.

—cables, pipes, conduits, machinery or other appliances.

So, not only has it the power to manufacture electricity,—which would be an idle boon in itself—but it has the right to transmit it by any known means. And, that there may be no doubt that it is intended that they should have the power both to produce and transmit their powers are defined by restriction at one point. Section 9 says:

(b) The company shall not permit any wire to be less than twenty-two feet above such highway or public place.

So, not only have they the express power to transmit electricity, but they are further circumscribed in the limitation of not being allowed to place any wire less than 22 feet above the public street. Thus, it is clear that the original power company had and has to-day, the right to erect its line and transmit all the power manufactured.

Mr. PARDEE. Not over the same territory that this Bill covers.

Mr. NORTHRUP. Practically the same territory.

Mr. PARDEE. No.

Mr. NORTHRUP. What limit does the hon. member (Mr. Pardee) find in the original Act?

Mr. PARDEE. Only as far as Hoople's creek.

Mr. NORTHRUP. I think the hon. member has been confused by a clause which does limit the power of the company, and which, perhaps, incidentally, sheds a light on this Bill. But that clause has nothing to do with the transmission of electricity. The other evening, I referred to the difference between the two Bills and I may take the liberty of doing it again. Section 14, of the St. Lawrence Power Company's Act gives the company power of expropriation, but limits it in this way:

Lands actually required for the construction and maintenance of the power canals, water-courses, raceways and reservoirs necessary for the utilization or operation of water-powers belonging to the company may be taken and acquired by the company.

And the Railway Act is applied thereto. But the lands referred to are simply those that the company may wish to expropriate for the construction of buildings and reservoirs in connection with their works. But we find that the present Bill proposes greater powers in regard to expropriation. And it may be that that is the secret of the present Bill. When we find that the power company has the right to do all that hon. members opposite, and the Minister of Railways, and the gentleman who promotes the Bill, say is asked by this Bill, is it any wonder that we on this side are doubly suspicious? When we consider the powers asked for by the new company, we find that they are powers generally to expropriate under the Railway Act. And one must not forget the case from British Columbia—the province vs. the Canadian Pacific railway, I believe it was—in which it was held that where, under the Railway Act, expropriation is made of lands which are vested in the Crown for the purposes of the province, that expropriation may lawfully be made. It is perfectly clear that under the original St. Lawrence Power Company Act they would have no power to expropriate the lands vested in the Crown for the benefit of the province for the transmission of electricity. They might do so for the construction of works and building of reservoirs, but it is clear that they would not have power beyond that limited purpose. In this Bill the land of the province whether under the bed of the river or wherever it may be, could be expropriated because the Railway Act applies generally giving the power of expropriation to this company just as to a railway company. When we find these suspicious circumstances the right hon. gentleman and those beside him might not be surprised if we said frankly with him that if we believed that this Bill was only to allow a certain amount of electricity generated to be transmitted, we would have no objection——

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. What else is there in the Bill?

Mr. NORTHRUP. I have been trying to point out several objectionable features and one is that the present St. Lawrence Power Company has the right to develop and transmit electricity. At the same time when we find a Bill of this kind coming in and being fought so vigorously for such a trifling purpose, that too is enough to make us suspicious, and if any one will read the history of the unfortunate negotiations which began by the contract between M. P. Davis and the late administration, he will be confirmed in those suspicions. I have no desire to so far forget my duty as to relieve the late government from blame, because I think they are deserving of a great deal of blame for the bargain the Conservative party made with M. P. Davis. I think it was an improvident and improper bargain, and should not have been made, but it was made. If the right hon. gentleman takes up the history of that case from the time it was started with that improper bargain he will find that if his predecessors chastised the people of this country with whips, he and his government have chastised them with scorpions, because in 1900, when for the first time something was intended to be done, a new contract was made by the right hon. gentleman's administration, ten times worse than the original contract. Perhaps the hon. gentleman would have less confidence in the promoters of this Bill and their intentions if he bore in mind that the contract made in 1900 was an illegal contract. I would not venture to tell the minister that they had made an illegal and improvident contract were it not that I had been fortified by a legal opinion which the right hon. gentleman would not dispute. The Auditor General refused to pay accounts, and he obtained the opinion of Mr. A. B. Aylesworth, K. C., of Toronto, before that hon. gentleman became a member of the government, as one of the leaders of the bar in Ontario. He informed his client, the Auditor General, frankly, freely and honestly, as of course he would always give his opinion, that it was an utterly illegal contract. When we find that the origin of this transaction was an illegality, and when we see the continuous difficulty experienced by the Auditor General year after year in trying to protect the treasury from the very gentlemen who are behind this Bill, I think we are justified in this year 1910 in saying that we are suspicious of another Bill, professing to attain so trifling an end, and employing so much material to obtain it. If we are wrong and hon. gentlemen opposite are right, then if the Bill were allowed to stand over for a year, could any grievous wrong be done to any one? The power has not been used. The public has got along without it. It is asserted that this is a part of a larger scheme and I am sure no member would defend the larger scheme if it is as it is represented to be. If that be the case and the worst that could happen by throwing out or postponing this Bill is that the people of the St. Lawrence will be further delayed in obtaining the electricity which they have not yet obtained, that will not be a very serious matter. But if we are right and the hon. gentlemen opposite are wrong, if, as many of us in the province of Ontario believe, the effect of this Bill is to complete a contract intended to be made, and supposed to be made in 1900, but which by an oversight of the draughtsman was not made, surely it is better that this country should be protected, even now, than when it is too late we should discover what we have done. Hon. gentlemen must remember that it is a matter of common notoriety that Canada, owning great powers there, has derived little from them, and many of them are gone. One thousand dollars a year is all the Dominion receives from the dam which the Dominion built. It is a matter of common report that not more than $100,000 to $120,000 were expended by the St. Lawrence Power Company, and they sold out for nearly one million dollars. That means that parliament has already made a present to these fortunate individuals of nearly $1,000,000. Under these circumstances I appeal to the right hon. gentleman not to hurry the House into legislation which it might be impossible for us to retract. I venture to say to him that if the Bill of 1901 were being proposed to-day, it would not take us long to secure what we are asking, that it should at least stand over until the next year. I think we are all to blame for allowing that Bill to pass the House. Probably the right hon. gentleman did not know more about it than I did personally at that time; we all know how these Bills pass through the House.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I must deprecate the appeal made to me by my hon. friend. The government had nothing to do with this Bill. It is altogether private legislation, and whether the House agrees or not the government is quite indifferent. But I understand that this is a Bill that is looked to with some interest by citizens on the banks of the St. Lawrence above and below the proposed site of that dam. I cannot personally see the mischief which my hon. friend says is included in this Bill. There was suspicion and the suspicion arose from the fact no doubt that it was named the St. Lawrence Power Transmission Company, the St. Lawrence Power Company being the name of the company authorized to dam the St. Lawrence. I have examined the Bill carefully as it came from the Committee on Private Bills, and I can see nothing in it to which exception could be taken. In order to make the matter still more certain and free from doubt, the present amendment has been introduced. If the amendment is not sufficient to make the thing absolutely sure, it is open to my hon. friend to strengthen the amendment in any way he pleases. The only thing I can see in the Bill is that there are people in Brockville and other riparian towns who want power and who would get it under this Bill. They would not get it from the St. Lawrence Power Company from the dam intended, because parliament will not allow the construction of this dam at this moment at least, but from other sources, and if this Bill does not pass they cannot get their power. My hon. friend says they can get it now. I do not know as to that. He says all the power given by this Bill is already in the Act. I do not know about that, but I shall accept his ground. I take his view that it may be so. Then, the only effect of this Bill would be to give to this new company what is given to the other company. The other company have the right to transmit electricity. But this is a new corporation which is created, and it will have this additional power to transmit electricity from two sources which it only had originally from the other source.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. The Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) says that there is nothing in this Bill which in any way identifies it with the St. Lawrence Power Company's Bill. Hon. members on this side of the House thoroughly believe that this is nothing more nor less than a Bill to supplement the powers given already to the St. Lawrence Power Company. If further confirmation were needed than that which we have had already it is to be found in the words uttered by the right hon. Prime Minister, which I think are sufficient to justify our suspicions. The Prime Minister couples this Bill with the power Bill of 1901. If it is not, and we still have some doubt as to that question, the amendment which is introduced is nugatory. Then, we have the words of the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) who, on the 14th March, in reply to a question put by the hon. member for Westmorland (Mr. Emmerson) as to what was the urgent necessity for such haste in passing this Bill, said:

> I do not know what is in the minds of the promoters of the Bill, but it does not occur to me that the Bill provides for great haste, because it is only to come into force on a day to be fixed by proclamation of the Governor in Council, and the Governor in Council will not issue that proclamation until the agreements are entered into, plans are fully considered, and it is understood that the works can be constructed in the public interest and without injury to navigation,—and, I would assume,—they would not issue the proclamation until these agreements were submitted and ratified by parliament.

In other words, the Minister of Public Works say that this Bill will not go into operation by proclamation until the agreements and plans are ratified, and we are justified in assuming that it means that this company are going to procure their electrical energy from the St. Lawrence Power Company as soon as the Governor in Council will give his assent by proclamation. That seems to connect the two institutions. It seems to me that there is no doubt that by the Bill of 1901 power was given to the St. Lawrence Power Company to erect a dam upon the St. Lawrence river extending to the international line. In that case we have to consider whether or not we are going to supplement that Act by means of the Bill before the House to-day. I am quite safe in saying, I think, that had we the St. Lawrence Power Bill before us to-day we would not give our consent to it. The St. Lawrence Power Bill of 1901 gave the right to that company to generate and transmit electricity, and the reason for the present Bill, in my humble opinion, is that the Bill of 1901, while it gave power to generate and transmit electricity, did not give a power that this company are getting, namely, the power to enter municipalities and take from private individuals their property without consent. These powers of expropriation are omitted from the Bill of 1901, and they simply want these powers to-day to supplement the powers which they got in 1901. I venture to say that the hon. gentleman who is promoting this Bill will not consent to the expunging of the expropriation powers. Otherwise the Bill is altogether useless to be used in conjunction with the Bill of 1901. That being the case, we must consider these two Bills together, and we must consider whether we are prepared to grant the company the rights contained in this Bill. The Bill gives them all the powers of expropriation contained in the Railway Act as far as they are applicable, and in addition it gives them further powers. It provides that the word 'land' as used in the Railway Act, shall include the words 'easement or privilege'. In other words, the company have the right to purchase by expropriation, not only land as provided for in the Railway Act, but also easements and privileges. So that, in considering all the powers that they have we have to add the words 'easement and privilege', to 'land' as specified in the Railway Act. What would be the effect of this legislation? Take section 151 of the Railway Act, which is the expropriation clause and reading that section into this Act the language would be as follows. This company will have the power to:

> Purchase, take and hold of from any person, any lands, easements or privileges, or other property necessary for the construction, maintenance and operation of its works and also alienate, sell or dispose of, any lands, easement, privilege or property of the company which for any reason have become not necessary for the purposes of this undertaking.

Take section 176, read into that the provision of this Bill, and it will read as follows:

> The company may take possession of, use or occupy any lands, easements or privileges belonging to any other transmission company, use and enjoy the whole or any portion thereof, &c.

Then take section 179. Where it says that lands may be taken without the consent of the owners, it will read 'lands, easements, or privileges' and it will provide that these will be taken without the consent of the owners. Section 180 provides that the company shall file plans showing the route of their proposed transmission line. That section will be quite applicable to the proposed company. Section 192 provides that:

> The deposit of a plan, profile and book of references, and the notice of such deposit, shall be deemed a general notice to all parties of the lands, easements and privileges which will be required for the purposes of the company.

I would like to know if that section is going to apply. It shows into what entanglements one may be led by making the Railway Act apply to a company organized for the transmission of electricity, and I am sure we would never consent to passing it in its present condition. It would give the right to this company to construct their poles over the houses and barns of private owners. Once you grant the right of expropriation they can expropriate that right so long as they compensate for the injury. As this Bill gives them the right to expropriate an easement or privilege they have the right to construct their wires along the sides, or on top of houses, or on the poles of other companies. I am sure it is not the intention of this parliament to allow this company any such prilege. Then, there is the right to expropriate private property which is expressly excepted from the Act of 1901. The Act of 1901 says that:

> Nothing herein contained shall be deemed to authorize the company to enter upon any private property for the purpose of erecting, maintaining or repairing any of its works, without the previous assent of the owner or occupant of the property for the time being.

This gives the company that privilege and it is for that very purpose, for the purpose of getting what they were not given in 1901 with respect to the transmission of electricity, that this company are making application to-day. In addition, they have the right, without the consent of the municipality, to go to the municipality, and erect their transmission line. That right is expressly excepted from the Act of 1901 by section 9 which says:

> The company for the purpose of constructing and maintaining its works may with the consent of the municipal council or other authority having jurisdiction over the same enter on any highway, square or other public place and as often as the company thinks proper, may with like consent open any highway, square or public place, &c.

There is no provision for compulsory expropriation under this Act. Taking all these facts into consideration, and speaking now upon the Bill itself—and there are many other objectionable matters that could be brought to the attention of the government if I were to speak in connection with the St. Lawrence Power Company and its proposed plans to be submitted to the government—but, simply speaking of the Bill itself as it appears before us it should not pass in its present shape. I claim that the amendment suggested by the promoter of the Bill does not in any way safeguard the public; on the contrary I hold that it is injurious to the public. The first part of the amendment says:

Nothing herein contained shall be deemed to constitute an approval by parliament of any future development of water-power by erecting a dam in or across the St. Lawrence river under the Act 1 Edward VII., chapter 3, intituled: 'An Act to incorporate the St. Lawrence Power Company,' or otherwise.

That means nothing because if the company has the power now we are not taking it from it then, and if it has not the power we are not giving it, so that it makes no difference. The amendment goes on to say:

Nor shall the company hereby incorporated be authorized to transmit power generated by the St. Lawrence Power Company other than the power generated by and in connection with the works already constructed by the said St. Lawrence Power Company.

This means that we prohibit the St. Lawrence Power Company from passing over its transmission line any power except such as is at present generated, by works already constructed and what the petition presented to the House states is 2,300 horse-power, and as that petition also states they are capable of developing 6,000 horse-power we are in fact restricting them from transmitting about 4,000 horse-power over these proposed lines. In other words we are actually preventing the development of the resources of the power already there to be used in this country, and we are practically providing a means by which the power shall go somewhere else, probably across into the United States. Now, I would like to know whether this parliament is going to have an opportunity of assenting to or rejecting the proposed plans of the St. Lawrence Power Company. The Minister of Public Works seems in some of his remarks to indicate that parliament is not going to be consulted. On the 13th of March, 'Hansard' page 5507 he said:

Such information has not come to me and I am not aware of it having come to any other member of the government, or any other department. With regard to the compensation to be paid, I, as Minister of Public Works, have been called on to consider the matter with the view of determining what would be fair to Canada in case we should finally approve of these works; and I am prepared to say that, so far as my department is concerned—and it will have a good deal to do with the fixing of rates—it will recommend to council that no agreement be entered into and no approval be given the works of the company unless there goes into the treasury of Canada as much revenue from this power as will go into the treasury of the state of New York.

From this it would seem quite plain that the Minister of Public Works does not think it is necessary to come to parliament to say what compensation shall be paid by this company for the power they propose to get. It seems to me that under the provisions of the Act of 1901 it may not be necessary for the company to come here, because we have already passed legislation saying they may build a dam to the centre of the River St. Lawrence to the international line, and on the other side the state of New York has given the Long Sault Company similar power, so that when they have their works constructed in each respective case they will have a complete dam across the St. Lawrence river, and then all they need have is the approval of the Governor in Council as mentioned in the Act of 1901. I would like to have an assurance from the Prime Minister that the government shall not in this case act by order in council, but that this parliament will have something to say as to what they shall pay for that power just as the legislature of the state of New York had the right to fix the compensation to be paid on the other side. I wish an assurance upon this point?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Upon what point?

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Upon the question whether or not under the Act of 1901 the fixing of remuneration to be paid will be by order in council or by a Bill submitted to this parliament?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I think I remember that I stated last year that in a matter of this kind the government would not take any action except after consulting parliament.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Would the Prime Minister be willing to have a clause to that effect inserted in this Bill?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I would not have any objection at all.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It does not seem to me that the government can be quite as indifferent to a Bill of this kind as the Prime Minister suggests. The modern doctrine in Great Britain at least is that the government by virtue of their control of parliament are held responsible not only for public legislation, but for private legislation as well. It seems to me that much the same rule ought to prevail here. But even assuming that such would not be the case in ordinary instances we must remember that this is not an ordinary case This is a proposal to deal with a great international water-way. It is a proposal also to enter into a scheme which may affect at some time or other international relations, and, therefore, it is of the utmost possible importance that the Bill, although introduced as a Private Bill, should nevertheless be most carefully considered by the administration, and that the government should have absolute responsibility with regard to it. I do not see how the government can avoid that responsibility. I understand it is not a government measure in the ordinary sense, but still in respect to a subject of this kind it seems to me the government must accept responsibility as direct, and as immediate as if this Bill were a government measure. Now, the Act of 1901 was passed without any discussion whatever in this House. There was no discussion on the second reading or on the third reading or in the committee. I was in the House at that time, and in common with my hon. friend from Hastings I have to accept the responsibility for the fact that there was no discussion. But one reason for that I suppose was that a great many of these Bills which do not attract attention are accepted in Committee of the Whole House by reason of the fact that they have been passed by the Select Committee. I do not suppose that any member of this House at that time grasped the full significance of the language which is to be found in section 8 of that Bill. That section conferred upon the St. Lawrence Power Company, which as we all know, and as has been practically admitted, is only another name for the company which is promoting this Bill. I do not think it has been denied that the persons who control the St. Lawrence Power Company are the promoters of this Bill.

Mr. HUGHES. Pardon me a moment—the two companies are owned, and controlled by the Long Sault Construction Company. The St. Lawrence Power Company, and the St. Lawrence Transmission Company are owned, and controlled by the Long Sault Company, and I challenge denial of that statement.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The St. Lawrence Power Company under another name is now coming to parliament for some further rights and privileges. It is not important at the present moment to consider how far-reaching the powers it wants from parliament may be. It wants those powers for the purpose of carrying out a scheme. That scheme involves the damming of the St. Lawrence. They have power at the present time, under one of their charters, to dam the St. Lawrence as far as the international boundary. That has not been and cannot in my opinion be successfully denied. There is a certain qualification upon the power thus conferred upon them. That qualification is contained in the proviso to be found in subsection (a) of clause 8 of the Act of 1901. It is in these words:

> Provided that the works hereby authorized shall not be commenced until the plans thereof have first been submitted to and approved by the Governor in Council.

My right hon. friend said on a previous occasion, I think it was last session, or it may have been this session, that he regarded that project as of such vital importance to the people of this country that nothing would be done to carry it out without the consent of parliament. That, I understand, to be his position; if it is not, he will correct me. I would suggest to him that, if that be his position, it would be proper now to say to this company, which is coming here under another name; 'The importance of the rights which were conferred upon you in 1901 was not recognized at the time; it is more fully recognized now, for many reasons which I need not stop to enumerate. For one thing, we realize, more than we did in 1901, the very great importance to the people of these water-powers.' Why, then, would it not be opportune, when this company is asking for further privileges, to insert in this Bill a distinct provision making it absolutely necessary that the approval of parliament shall be obtained before any such plans are approved? The right they have obtained is a qualified right; it is subject to the approval of the Governor in Council. Would it not be a fair and reasonable proposition, in view of what has since transpired, and in view of the importance of this subject in the eyes of the people of this country, that we should go a step further and say that the Governor in Council shall not approve of any plans until those plans have been first submitted to and approved by parliament. I would suggest that to the right hon. gentleman as a reasonable rider to this Bill, and it seems to me that it would go very far in the direction of satisfying certain criticisms which have been made on the Bill.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I have already stated to my hon. friend that for my part I have no objection at all, and I think the government have no objection to such a proposition, because practically we have stated that, whether we are bound by law or not, it is our intention to do so. Many people in this country are nervous in regard to the possible damming of the St. Lawrence. I have stated to the House the various objections, and for my part I have one also. At the present time, with the information I have, I would not consent on any consideration to have the St. Lawrence dammed. I give my opinion as to that with perfect candour. I may say to my hon. friend that I do not altogether admit the position he has taken, that I am responsible for all private legislation. There is private legislation of different kinds. For instance, there are divorce Bills for which I cannot be held to be personally responsible. But the question of this Bill depends altogether on what powers are intended to be conferred by it. At first blush it is simply a Bill for the transmission of electrical energy. To the ordinary mind there is nothing objectionable at all in that. But the objection arises at the point that this electrical energy must be generated somewhere, and the suspicion is that it would be generated by damming the St. Lawrence. My hon. friends on the other side object to that. I am opposed to it also, and in order to make the matter perfectly plain I have no objection to accepting the amendment suggested by the hon. leader of the opposition, that no works shall be carried on without the consent of parliament having been first obtained.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I may say that I hold my hon. friend politically though not personally responsible for all the divorces which have been granted in parliament. I have drawn up an amendment as I would suggest, although I cannot say that it has been very carefully considered. I will send a copy of it over to the right hon. gentleman, and perhaps he will look over it and in the meantime defer the consideration of the Bill.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Before the amendment is put, I wish to say that on the 14th of March, when this Bill was under discussion, I made the following statement:

Mr. J. D. REID. Has your department power to do that without the consent of parliament?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think not. Parliament will have to consent to the matter in the end, and my recollection is that some time ago, in answer to a question put by the hon. member (Mr. Hughes) the Prime Minister stated that before the plans were approved of, the whole matter would be submitted to parliament for consideration, and before definite action would be taken, parliament must be satisfied that the work will be in the interest of Canada.

All the remarks I made as to what my department would do, as to requiring that at least one-half the power should be reserved for Canada, and as to the rates to be charged for that power, were based upon the contingency as to whether or not the plans would be finally approved of, and I stated positively, not once merely, but twice, that the Prime Minister had given to parliament the assurance that the plans would not be approved of and that no action would be finaly taken until after the whole matter had been submitted to parliament and parliament was satisfied that the work would be in the interest of Canada.

Mr. SPROULE. When the first application was made, I understand that the government's engineers reported against it, but when it was considered a second time, the same engineers recommended it. Did not that look as if the government intended to approve of the project?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not at all. That did not look to the action that the government or parliament might take. The charge has been made in some of the newspapers which have, I regret to say, twisted and distorted and falsified to a most extraordinary degree what took place during the very interesting and pleasant debate which lasted all night some time ago, that I had made the remark in the House that plans had been prepared some time ago; and one paper stated that those plans had been prepared by my department, and that I was not willing to make them public, and refused to produce them or to give any information in regard to them, conveying the impression that they had been kept secret. As early as the 14th of January, in answer to a question which had been put to me, I stated that the company had submitted plans of which they had asked the approval of the Governor in Council. I stated that the government had referred those plans to the engineers of the three departments of Public Works, Railways and Canals and Marine and Fisheries, and that the engineers had reported adversely to the plans; that subsequently, about a year afterwards, I think, new plans were presented, and those also were referred to the engineers, and they had reported rather favourably on them, with certain limitations; and further that those plans had been referred to the International Waterways Commission. At the time when I was asked to produce the plans they were not in my possession, they were not in the possession of my department, but they were in the possession of a member of the International Waterways Commission. It was about midnight when I was asked to produce them. I stated that before the Bill was finally disposed of, I would be happy to produce them, and that if the committee desired to have them I would produce them, even though the Bill had nothing whatever to do with the damming of the St. Lawrence.

Mr. SPROULE. I understood that the hon. gentleman was also asked to produce the report of the Waterways Commission and the Conservation Commission, because we were given to understand that one or both of these bodies had considered the question and reported. But I have not been able to find that report.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The report which was asked for by the hon. member for Westmorland (Mr. Emmerson) was the report of the engineers. I stated that the commissioners had not yet reported. It has also been put forward in the press that the Act of 1901 had been concealed, and that the hon. member for Westmorland produced startling information to the House when he read that Act of 1901. The hon. member for Westmorland will do me the justice to say that it was I who called his attention to that Act, and it was sent for and he then read it to the House. I mention this in order to show that so far as I was concerned, and the same remark will apply to every other member who was supporting this Bill, there was no disposition to keep back anything from the committee, no desire to withhold any information. Now, having made this statement, I desire to say that so far as I am concerned, I see no objection whatever to accepting the amendment proposed by my hon. friend the leader of the opposition. My hon. friend from North Grey (Mr. Middlebro) said that if this was a transmission line pure and simple, and he could be satisfied of that fact, he would support the Bill Now, I would invite that hon. gentleman to suggest any statement, if by racking his brain he can think of any amendment which will make this more simply and more purely a transmission power Bill than it is, I for one would gladly accept it. I do not believe that language can be used to make it more clearly and purely a transmission Bill, I do not think any other language can be used which would more surely prevent it from being a Bill for the generation of electrical energy or for the construction of any works for generating electricity; it is purely and simply a power transmission Bill. But if any amendment would make it so more clearly than the language which is used, I would support such an amendment. But, perhaps, that may not now be necessary in view of the amendment of the leader of the opposition, to which I have no objection.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Let me call the attention of the Minister of Railways to the fact that the chairman of the Hydro-Electric Commission, in the strongest terms has protested against this measure. At the same time he has presented facts to show that the town of Brockville and the district about it has been thoroughly investigated, engineers have gone over that road twice, and are prepared to furnish these municipalities with power in the near future. He distinctly says that the municipalities in eastern Ontario have applied for power to the Hydro-Electric Commission, as appears by the following list:

Municipalities in eastern Ontario who have applied for power to the Hydro-Electric Power Commission.

Amount asked for by the municipality.

Kingston, 2,500 H.P.; Belleville, 3,200 H.P.; Deseronto, 300 H.P.; Brockville, 500 to 1,000 H.P.; Oshawa, 500 H.P.; Cobourg, 900 H.P.; Bowmanville, 600 H.P.; Port Hope, Whitby and Picton, 500 H.P., no price quoted yet; Durham, 2,000 H.P., no price quoted yet. Prescott and Napanee asked to be quoted on power, but no specific amount.

The minister must recognize this fact as well, that the Hydro-Electric Power Commission had the second and fourth reports of water-power prepared, and the territory covered by these reports lies between Toronto and Brockville.

Mr. GRAHAM. My hon. friend asked me a question a moment ago, which I did not answer, because I was called out. I know the complete history of the negotiations with Brockville. I repeat that so far as Brockville is concerned, there never was any serious attempt by the Hydro-Electric Commission to give them one ounce of power. Some letters were written, from which no result came. I think if my hon. friend will investigate, he will find that by the action of the legislature, no provision was made during last session for any power in this part of Ontario, but for the west. However, I repeat the assertion, that no serious attempt was ever made by the chairman of the Hydro-Electric Commission to give Brockville power, though one or two letters were written.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I do not know what the hon. gentleman means by serious attempt. The hon. gentleman knows that the fourth report was published in 1907, and in that report it is definitely stated, under the heading: 'Power conditions in the St. Lawrence river district,' that Brockville with a population of 9,000 used an average horse-power of 900; Cornwall with a population of 7,600, used 4,485 horse-power; Iroquois, with a population of 1,200, used 85 horse-power; Gananoque, with a population of 4,000, used 900 horse-power, and so on. I have a letter from the chairman of the Hydro-Electric Commission stating in the most emphatic language, that it is their purpose, just as early as possible, to establish the power transmission lines asked for, and have the people and municipalities in that district supplied with electric energy. He says in a letter to me:

We expect to continue the Niagara line east probably as far as Brockville or even Prescott and Cornwall, supplying the power from the Niagara in as far as economical, probably to Port Hope or Cobourg, the supply to be augmented at the Trent river, unless all the power of the Trent is absorbed by private companies in the meantime, and from some point farther east. Eventually we would have a continuous high voltage transmission system from Windsor in the west to Cornwall in the east.

We had little difficulty in getting power at a low price at Niagara Falls, viz., $9, as the province controls the developments there, but we will be helpless in the east if the development companies and transmission companies are operating under Dominion charters.

Now that is a most emphatic statement, and the minister knows full well that if these companies get Dominion charters, it will be practically impossible for the Hydro-Electric Commission to obtain that power from the St. Lawrence or from other water-powers.

One member suggested that the company should be compelled to sell power in Canada at the same price as they intend selling over in the United States. There is such a clause in the agreements with the companies at the Falls, and if we had not the drastic power that we have to expropriate, &c., we would not be buying power at $9, as the companies on the American side have an arrangement amongst themselves not to sell power for less than $18.

The minister knows full well that in the Ottawa district, where the Hydro-Electric Commission have control of the powers, they have had a profit of over $23,000 on the right side of the ledger, after deducting the charges of building the transmission lines here. As to the cost of power, I might read a little further from this letter:

There are three things that go to make up the cost of power; power at $9 at the Falls, interest on sinking fund and investment and operation. The price of power is fixed at $9, and all contracts have been let for the building of the line, and the fact that the cost is under the estimates enables me to say definitely that power will be delivered at the estimated cost price.

Yet the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Carvell) rose in his place the other evening, and told us that the power would cost the municipalities of Ontario two or three times this amount.

Mr. CARVELL. It will be safer to multiply it by four.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. We can easily put the hon. member's (Mr. Carvell's) knowledge of water-powers and transmission lines in a district about which he knows nothing in contrast with that of the man who is at the head of the Hydro-Electric Commission and knows all about it. Mr. Beck says:

The line is capable of transmitting 65,000 horse-power, the contracts amount to less than half this amount, and so you will readily see how the price will drop as the consumption increases. The city of Toronto offers power for ten hours, I understand, at $17.85 per horse-power.

One of the most serious matters in connection with the St. Lawrence power development, and the building of a dam in this country is the fact that Canada practically loses control of the St. Lawrence river as a navigable stream. The channel is diverted to the American side where locks are to be built, but not on the Canadian side.

The Minister of Railways and Canals referred to the maps that are before us. It was my privilege to investigate some of the other maps which I do not see here to-night, and which were in charge of the clerk. On one of these maps I noticed it was indicated that there would be on the American side of the boundary line 50 turbines, while on the Canadian side there would be only 11 turbines. And, taking into consideration the fact that the people of Canada can have no control over the laws of the state of New York, it would be absurd for us to expect that we should be able to compel an American company to transmit a portion of that power to Canada for the development of our industries. Let me read further from this letter:

The territory covered by these reports lies between Toronto and Brockville. Eleven municipalities in the territory have asked for estimates and negotiated with the commission for a supply of power, and others are about to apply.

If the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Graham) was not aware of this fact, it is time he should be.

The object of the Hydro-Electric Power Commission is to supply power at cost to as many municipalities as possible, and the commission propose to provide a supply of power for all municipalities that can be advantageously served.

If the Bill is passed, the company would have authority to transmit power into a large section of the territory to be supplied by the commission, and a dual system of transmission lines would be the result. The commission has always considered that where municipalities are prepared to co-operate and so increase the demand for power from one source a dual system is a hindrance to municipalities in the working out of their plans, and such a system should not be encouraged.

After these emphatic statements by the chairman of the Hydro-Electric Commission of Ontario, directly opposed to this measure, after the statement of the chairman of the International Waterways Commission, of the Board of Trade of Montreal, of the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal, of the provincial government of Ontario, and of practically all the navigation companies whose vessels ply on this river St. Lawrence, I cannot but feel that we are taking a step in the wrong direction in allowing this measure to pass at the present time. I sincerely hope it will be left over for another session to make a thorough investigation and see if it is not possible to have the provincial government of Ontario in control of this water-power.

Mr. EMMERSON. Perhaps I shall be pardoned if I participate a little in this post mortem examination with respect to this Bill. I think it will be in the memory of every member of this committee that when this Bill was first committed to this Committee of the Whole the objection raised to it was largely upon the ground of it being an infringement of provincial rights and an interference with the Hydro-Electric Commission of Ontario. Up to that point, I had not offered any suggestions to the committee with respect to the Bill. But, some information being in my possession at the time, I thought it was due to the committee that I should call the attention of hon. members to what I conceived to be a very much stronger objection to the acceptance of this Bill. I believed that this Bill (No. 115) was but a preliminary to another Bill that was to be introduced in parliament at this very session giving certain powers in connection with the damming of the River St. Lawrence. And, conceiving such a proposition to be against the best interests of Canada, I felt that the time had come to raise objection. My hon. friend the Minister of Public Works (Mr Pugsley) is quite correct in stating that he called my attention to the fact that it would not be necessary for any company to come to parliament to seek the power to dam the St. Lawrence, because that power was already granted them by Act of this parliament passed some years ago, a fact with which he was familiar, because there had recently come before him certain plans for approval, plans which could only come before him under authority of some Act, and under that Act the approval of the government was sought for these plans. I then, as I conceived it to be my duty, called the attention of the committee to the fact that this, after all, was a grand scheme to secure, in the interest of foreign capitalists, the water-powers that properly belonged to Canada. I think I mentioned on that occasion that by reason of the dam that would necessarily be constructed, ninety per cent of the flow of water would be thrown on the American side. My hon. friend the Minister of Public Works very properly said that that would be safeguarded, that there would be restrictions as to the use of this power, and that care would be taken that Canada's interests should be safeguarded and that at least half the power would be secured for Canadian industries. Well, it is one thing to make such a proposition, and it is another thing to carry it out; I think I said that, while you might have an arrangement, agreements and contracts, still it would be a matter of practical impossibility to enforce them. I objected to this Bill on the ground that it was part of a scheme to dam the St. Lawrence and secure for a great American corporation the water privileges of the St. Lawrence. I was not in full possession of the facts, but I said it was worthy of the consideration of this committee and of the House and of the people of Canada, and that we should wait in order that we might inquire and learn the facts. I have felt that much good was done by reason of the action which was taken in connection with this particular Bill, and I am the more convinced of it from what has transpired here to-night. The promoter of the Bill has proposed a certain amendment, and there are certain other amendments which have been suggested, all of which I hope will be adopted. If any or all of these amendments are adopted, I think the House and the country can recognize that the sting has been taken out of the mouth and the rattle out of the tail of the rattle snake, and it does not now have even the semblance of a rattle snake. I have not been convinced of the necessity of a transmission-of-power line. I view the matter from this standpoint that with the power that has been developed there, with the power available for distribution, the company which developed that power has authority to transmit and to distribute, and I do not see the necessity of any new company being empowered by this parliament to distribute that power. The very first thing that convinced me that this was a part of a great scheme was the reading of part of section 6 where it says:

> Lay and maintain pipes, cables, wires or other conductors and connect them with similar lines in other provinces and with similar lines in the United States for the purpose of importation only.

If this was a mere little innocent transmission power company to distribute the power being developed on the Canadian side, I cannot conceive of their coming to this parliament and asking for power to connect with lines in the United States, and it is because of the wording of the Bill that I was led to conclude that this Bill was part of a greater scheme and one that would be to the injury of Canada. I am confirmed in the belief that it was such a scheme, but having in every way divested it of its power to do harm I am perfectly satisfied. The objection taken by me on a former occasion has, I think, been sustained and acknowledged and removed as far as it is possible to remedy legislation in that direction if you pass the Bill at all. The Minister of Railways has very fairly made a plea in the interests of his constituency that some company shall be empowered to transmit the power that is already being developed. That is a question of fact as to the conditions prevailing. I am not in a position to judge of that; those representing St. Lawrence constituencies must be the best judges, and as the matter now stands I would feel free to support a harmless power transmission company. But I would not feel free to support any measure that would involve this country in conditions which prevail in some other sections of Canada to-day, by reason of the legislation of this parliament, as for example the conditions that are cropping up at Fort Frances. These things we must guard against and I think we have guarded against them in this particular case. As the matter now stands, I feel at liberty with the amendments which have been suggested to support the Bill.

Mr. J. D. REID. One reason why I submit the Bill should not go through is that it is admitted that the gentlemen who are in this company are to purchase the power from the St. Lawrence Power Company and then they will sell it to the towns of Prescott and Brockville, the Railway Commission having the right to fix the rates at which the transmission company sell to these towns. But the commission cannot regulate the rates at which it shall be sold by the power company to the transmission company and the transmission company have a capital of $200,000. The line will not cost $25,000 and they will make the people pay a dividend on a lot of watered stock and a double profit. If the Minister of Railways and Canals is so anxious, as I believe he is, to get power to Brockville, it has been argued here that the St. Lawrence Power Company now have power to run a transmission line to Brockville. If he will say to this company: Run your transmission line to Brockville at once or otherwise I will cancel your contract, that line would be built. We are paying $52,000 a year to that company for 400 horse-power to open and shut the gates and are not using more than 45 horse-power. We pay $63 a horse-power, and when the government confirmed that contract in October, 1900, just before the elections, the company were selling power at Cornwall at $12.50 a horse-power. That contract for 400 horse-power is for 89 years. The present Minister of Justice, on the application of the Auditor General, gave an opinion saying possibly the making of this contract was a distinct infraction of section 11 of the Act respecting the Department of Railways and Canals, Revised Statutes of Canada, ch. 37, which says:

> The minister shall invite tenders by public advertisement for the execution of all works except in cases of pressing emergency in which delay would be injurious to the public interest or in which the nature of the work it can be more expeditiously and economically executed by the officers and servants of the minister.

The contract they have is illegal, and it was in 1900 that this government amended the old contract. The late minister, Mr. Blair, amended and extended it. If the Minister of Railways thinks that this Bill would do that then where we would have the advantage of getting cheaper power would be that the Railway Commission would deal with the St. Lawrence Power Company. Supposing this transmission company that is being formed, say: We have to pay the St. Lawrence Power Company $20 or $25 per horse-power, and we are only asking $2 to $3 per horse-power more; nobody could object to that. I cannot see where we are going to get any benefit from the clause in this Bill which says that the Railway Commission shall be referred to. Now, it has been admitted that this power is to come from the St. Lawrence Power Company. The men who are the incorporators of this transmission line company went to the Waterways Commission in Toronto and told them that they were getting this Bill passed, that they proposed to dam the St. Lawrence and they claimed that the damming of the St. Lawrence should be carried out in order that they might get this power. I appeal, in the interests of Brockville and Prescott, to the Minister of Railways, to make the St. Lawrence Power Company send that power up there. Then we will not have to deal with any middle company that we have no control over, and we can then insist that they shall give us a reasonable rate. I do not think that under the Railway Act we can get cheap power from the Railway Commission, but if they were not giving us a reasonable rate we could come to parliament and ask that the Bill be amended, so as to provide that the Board of Railway Commissioners could regulate the rate.

Mr. EMMERSON. Under the Act of 1901, relating to the St. Lawrence Power Company, have they to submit their charges for power to the Railway Commission, or to anybody?

Mr. J. D. REID. To no one at all. That is the point I raise. How are we going to get cheaper power under this transmission Bill? The St. Lawrence Power Company will say to those in this new company: We will put the price at $25 or $30 per horse-power, or whatever we like, and the only redress we have, if they are charging too much, is to ask the Railway Commissioners to regulate the price between this company and the other.

Mr. EMMERSON. Under this Act this company would have to submit their rates for transmission to the Railway Commission, would they not?

Mr. J. D. REID. This company will, but it is the first company that is the main one, and that is the lame feature of this Bill. If there was the slightest doubt about the association of this company with the St. Lawrence Power Company, which I do not think there is, there might be some reason for it. I submit that this matter is so important that it should be laid over to give us a chance to get these things right, and not try to push it through in this way.

Mr. TURRIFF. When I opposed this Bill before I did so because I could not understand why the St. Lawrence Power Company should come to parliament now and get a transmission line. There were very good grounds for being suspicious of the Bill because of the way in which it was introduced. The Bill certainly has been shorn of some of the powers that they asked for when they came before this House. But, I am not at all clear in my own mind up to the present whether there is not still, if I may use the expression, a nigger in the fence. The amendment proposed by the gentleman who promotes this Bill (Mr. Pardee), the statement made by the right hon. the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) and the amendment proposed by the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) go a long way towards cutting out anything that may be wrong in the Bill, but at the same time what puzzles me is why, with the powers that they have under the Bill of 1901, if it is only a transmission line they want, they come before the House to-day with this Bill even in its present shape. The only point I can see wherein this Bill gives them some advantage that they do not possess under the old Bill is with respect to the right to acquire electrical energy. It seems to me that their object could be accomplished by amending the Bill of 1901 to enable them not only to generate electricity, but to acquire it from other private power companies existing in different parts of the country. They have the right to transmit under their original Bill. I think, Mr. Chairman, that it has been a good thing that all this opposition has been raised. I think it was a first rate thing that we had an all-night session over this Bill. It has done one thing. It has aroused the people of Canada to the importance of the legislation that was passed by this House in 1901. I did not happen to be a member at that time. If I had been a member I would not have known any more of what that Bill meant than most of those who were in the House at that time.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Was it passed late at night?

Mr. EMMERSON.

Mr. TURRIFF. No, but the Bill was like a great many Bills that go through this House almost every day; the average member of the House knows mighty little about the real meaning of them. Had the members of this House, and the people of Canada realized what was being done by the Act of 1901 there would have been a howl from one end of the Dominion to the other. But, fortunately for us that Act is not all sufficient. Fortunately for the people of Canada, and this House the owners of that franchise have to come back and get their plans approved by the Minister of Public Works before they can go on and dam the River St. Lawrence. That has been our safeguard. I think that the thorough discussion—I will not say thorough discussion, because I do not know yet whether it has been thorough or not—but the long discussion that we have had over the matter has awakened us to what might easily and innocently have been done by any minister of the Crown in approving plans without realizing exactly what they mean. The water-power at the Long Sault dam is a heritage for the people of Canada. It is not our heritage at the present moment, but it may be a heritage for our children, our grandchildren, and our great grandchildren. We do not want that power at the present time in Canada. For every horse-power that can be used within a reasonable distance of the Long Sault rapids there are to-day fifty horse-power that can be developed without going to the St. Lawrence river, which is an international stream.

Another thing we want to be very careful about is accepting engineers' reports. Take the case of the water-power at Fort Frances, the facts regarding which have been made public. In that case the engineer was a man named Fanning, of whom I have heard for the last 15 years as the very first authority on hydraulic engineering in America. When Mackenzie and Mann established their large electrical power 60 or 70 miles east of Winnipeg on the Winnipeg river, they got this man to report to them before they took action. Now, what did Mr. Fanning do in this case? The promoter of the company, Mr. Backus, and the president of the company, went to the Ontario government with a report from this engineer that only 9,000 horse-power could be developed at Fort Frances, and they got the government to agree to the scheme on condition that 4,000 horse-power should be delivered on the Canadian side and the balance on the American side. But within a few months that same engineer gave a report that from 36,000 to 38,000 horse-power could be developed at Fort Frances, and the result was that 4,000 horse-power was to be used at Fort Frances and the balance of 34,000 horse-power on the American side. That shows how careful we ought to be about engineers' reports before giving away franchises which we have no right to give away. I was delighted to hear the words of the Prime Minister to-night, and I agree with him that we should not at the present time give over this St. Lawrence power to a Canadian company, let alone to an American company, at any price they might pay to the state of New York for that privilege of damming the St. Lawrence on the American side. I can tell you, Sir, that their object is not, as they have stated to this House, to build up towns on the American and Canadian side of the rapids in the St. Lawrence. I happen to know that four or five months ago engineers came from New York to Ottawa to see what arrangements could be made for the securing of power in this vicinity, because they were not absolutely certain whether this thing would go through or not, and these engineers made the statement that the power could be transmitted from the Long Sault to the state of New York commercially. When you remember that from 600,000 to 800,000 horse-power can be developed there, look at what it would mean to them if they could export that power to New York city. Does any one believe for a moment that if that dam were built and if from 300,000 to 600,000 horse-power were developed now, and we could not use it (as we could not at the present time) that that power would not be sent to the United States. And does any one believe for a moment that if that power were sent into the United States we would ever get it back. At Niagara, in proportion to the water on each side of the boundary, the Americans get double as much power as they are entitled to. For ten years the town of Fort Frances has been engaged in lawsuits with this American company which owns the franchise. One of the chief promoters of the St. Lawrence power stated in the city of Montreal that they had to have it and they were going to have it, and that when the power was developed they would give the Canadians 90 days in which to take the power, and if they did not take it then it would be sold in the United States. Well, I think he spoke a little too soon; I believe the people of Canada realize or are beginning to realize something of the value of that power and of their rights in the matter, and that they will not think of allowing any company, Canadian or American, more especially a foreign company, to dam the St. Lawrence right at the point where it becomes a Canadian river altogether. The St. Lawrence is one of the greatest rivers on the earth; it is a canal extending 1,000 miles right into the heart of the country, and if we allow that river to be dammed we do not know what we may be doing to impede navigation. One of the best engineers in Canada told me that no man could tell at the present time what the effect of such a dam would be. He told me that some 50 years ago there was a small dam 12 feet high on the Mississippi near Almonte, and an ice jam raised the water 40 feet, with the result that the dam went out and every dam and every mill between that and the Ottawa river was swept away. If the same thing should occur on the river St. Lawrence the result might be appalling. But leaving all that aside it is too big a matter to allow any American company to control. I am no believer in government ownership in most cases, but this is a case where we have an international river where complications are apt to arise, and if the time ever comes—the time has not come yet and it will not come for a good while—when the water-power on that river should be developed in the interests of Canada it ought to be a matter for the Dominion and American governments to engage in themselves and not transfer the doing of it to any company of American speculators. There has been a great deal of time spent in discussing this Bill, but the time has been well spent, and not a minute of it has been wasted. I think now that the government will realize how inadvisable it would be for them in the near future to approve of plans for damming the St. Lawrence. After what I have heard in discussing this matter with prominent men, I believe that no government would last a month that would allow the great St. Lawrence river to be dammed and controlled by an American company of speculators.

Mr. HUGHES. I have to congratulate the government on its splendid attendance to-night. The Minister of Customs is absent, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries is unfortunately absent, but every other Minister of the Crown is in his place to-night, I presume in the interest of this Bill. This shows the result of the opposition which was engendered against this Bill in the Private Bills Committee led by the members from Grenville and Dundas, and the member for North Ontario.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. And the member for Victoria.

Mr. HUGHES. I have not the honour of being a member of the Private Bills Committee, or otherwise I certainly would be in the swim.

Mr. J. D. REID. I was not a member of that committee either, and they tried to shut me off, but they could not do it.

Mr. HUGHES. The Prime Minister is just commencing to realize the importance of this Bill, and I am satisfied that if he postponed it for a week he would get more light on it. Will the First Minister consent to that?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Is the hon. gentleman not disposed to accept the amendment of the leader of the opposition?

Mr. J. D. REID. Oh, there are other amendments.

Mr. HUGHES. It was admitted by the Minister of Public Works on the 14th of March, that the St. Lawrence Power Company and the St. Lawrence Transmission Company, are one and the same. The two of them are owned and controlled by the Long Sault Construction Company. I believe that if we pass this innocent looking Transmission Bill we will be passing a very dangerous measure to the welfare of Canada. This company has not the power to expropriate under the Bill of 1901, and that is what they want now, and that would make them masters of the situation. The danger of damming the St. Lawrence cannot be overestimated. I saw some gentlemen on the government side, who are more accustomed to windmills than to water-power machines, smiling when the hon. member for Assinaboia spoke of the danger that the damming of the St. Lawrence would cause by the jamming of ice. Ice jams on the St. Lawrence have sometimes risen forty or fifty feet, and have cut off trees two feet thick, and when the jam has broken a great deal of damage has been done. We must consider the nature of the country. The Ottawa and New York railway bridge has gone down twice owing to defective foundations. There are veins of quicksand in the river. Only last fall the bridge just above Cornwall tumbled down. The proposed dam would be about four miles above Cornwall. The lowest estimate of its height is from forty-seven to forty-eight feet, and the general opinion is that it is proposed to make it fifty-six feet high. Let it extend from Barnard's island to the Long Sault island, and there is no telling what injury would result. Even if there should be no ice jam, the top of the dam would be nine feet higher than the Cornwall station, over forty feet higher than the city of Cornwall, and fifty feet higher than the banks of the river at Cornwall. Then, in case an ice jam occurred, and the ice piled up thirty or forty feet, the valley of the river would be flooded, causing a great deal of damage. If the dam should break, as other dams have done, it is impossible to tell what extent of damage would be the result. I wish to refer to an article which I find in the Brockville Evening 'Recorder,' of March 24. I do not know what the object of the Minister of Railways and Canals was in publishing this article in his paper unless it was to draw a red herring over the trail. I am satisfied that the members of the opposition who fought this measure when it was last before this House are deserving of the thanks of the country for the work they did at that time. This article is headed, 'Deceiving the Public,' and says:

Whether the object is to deceive the public or not, the result of the objection made to allowing Brockville to be reached by a transmission line apparently has had that effect.

Undoubtedly the object of the editor of this paper is to deceive the people of Brockville as to the real issue. The article goes on:

Why R. L. Borden, leader of the opposition at Ottawa, and practically every man behind him, should join in the clamour to deprive this section of Ontario, and particularly Brockville, of the first opportunity it has had of getting cheap power is something no one can understand. Personally, Mr. Borden knows absolutely nothing of the situation, and has not apparently taken any pains to inform himself as to what the conditions are, for if he really knew, one cannot think he would have taken the position he did in trying even to keep Brockville from getting a transmission line.

Compare that paragraph with the statement made by the First Minister to-night that the opposition were justified and have done the country a good service in pointing out the iniquity of this power company Act of 1901, and the iniquity of this Bill as presented in its early stages. Who was preventing Brockville from getting electrical power? Nearer to Brockville than the Long Sault rapids are magnificent water-powers available for less money than this company will sell power to Brockville for. All the water-powers around Ottawa are nearer to Brockville than the Long Sault rapids, a fact of which the editor of this paper is perhaps not aware; and we have the evidence presented to-night by the hon. member for Grenville (Mr. Reid) that the companies along the St. Lawrence river have again and again offered Brockville and Prescott a thousand horse-power of water-power which they were seeking. This article goes on to say:

No one is surprised at Hon. Adam Beck using his influence in preventing any municipality in Ontario getting power except through the Hydro-Electric, as he has a direct personal interest in keeping all and sundry beneath his thumb and within his jurisdiction.

I am not here to defend the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of the province of Ontario; but I want to say that if that commission were seeking the authority that the St. Lawrence Power Company and the St. Lawrence Power Transmission Company are seeking, I would oppose it as determinedly as I am doing here. We want to preserve the St. Lawrence river free to the navigation of the world. Further on this article says:

The damming of the St. Lawrence is a very large project, and one of not only national but international importance, and the discussion of it should be approached with the utmost seriousness, but the granting of a charter for a transmission line is altogether a different proposition, and the attempt to hold it up for fear it was giving some rights to dam the St. Lawrence is altogether unwarranted.

Yet we have the hon. member for West Lambton, the father or god-father of this Bill, and the First Minister presenting an amendment to the Bill, which practically admits that the two companies are one and are working hand in hand. The First Minister has admitted that the St. Lawrence Power Company had authority to dam the St. Lawrence river provided they got an order in council, and by the amendment of that Bill, the hon. member for West Lambton admits that the two Bills are one and the same.

The big project of harnessing the Soo will no doubt be discussed in due time and in the proper place when parliament, as promised by Sir Wilfrid, will have full opportunity of dealing with it.

That is in the atmosphere, is it, that the St. Lawrence river is to be dammed? That is one of the future considerations that is evidently up the sleeve of certain hon. gentlemen on the other side. The Minister of Railways and Canals frankly tells us that that is the project. I presume a marked copy of this paper was sent to the Long Sault Construction Company, to assure them that if they are thrown down on the present occasion, they will have to make a few concessions, owing to this iniquitous opposition in the House of Commons. Why, all you have to do, gentlemen, is to trust us in the future, this is only the beginning of justice, and we will see that you get your rewards if you just keep quiet and wait a little while longer.

What the people of this vicinity want just now is a transmission line over which they can get power from some source.

Why this sudden interest in the transmission line? When did we ever hear the Minister of Railways and Canals becoming interested in transmission lines until the St. Lawrence Power Transmission Company came along? Why did not the men of Brockville harness the Chats rapids, or some of those Ottawa powers, and have a transmission line run to Brockville? He shows a very unique interest in this St. Lawrence Power Transmission Company's Bill.

There is a power development at Iroquois under Dominion control; there is power to be developed at Waddington, N.Y., which has for many years been on the tapis. There is also power at Massena. But the attitude of the opposition at Ottawa, and of Mr. Beck at Toronto, is that we must not be allowed to have a line over which we could use it in case power can be got from any of these.

I stand here to state that that is not the attitude of the opposition at Ottawa. Our attitude is that any proper transmission scheme that is presented to this House will have the entire support of every member of the opposition. But when a scheme come along that is admitted by the Minister of Public Works, admitted by the First Minister, and admitted by the promoter of the Bill in his amendment, to be hand and glove with the Bill to dam the St. Lawrence, when a scheme like that is brought into this House, then it is the duty of every member of the opposition, and of every honest man on the government side, to oppose it.

In addition there is some surplus power to be developed at the present works at Cornwall that might be obtained.

How cleverly the attempt is made to conceal the real object of the Bill! They are telling the people of Brockville: 'Here we are at Ottawa, sitting up nights, five ministers of the Crown sitting up to daylight, pushing through a private Bill in order to give the poor people of Brockville some electric power, and the terrible opposition, led by this terrible man, Mr. Borden, are trying to prevent the people of Brockville from getting what they want.' They pretend that they can get power from Iroquois, when the whole cunningly devised scheme is to give to this St. Lawrence Power Company the one great privilege they seek, namely, power to expropriate property for their transmission line, and once they get that, they can go wherever they choose. And here let me point out to the hon. member for West Lambton, what his statement says:

Nor shall the company hereby incorporated be authorized to transmit power generated by the St. Lawrence Power Company other than the power generated by and in connection with the works already constructed by the said St. Lawrence Power Company.

But there is no provision to prevent them transmitting power generated by the Long Sault Construction Company, and that is the company which owns all these works. So that even if the amendment of the hon. member for West Lambton were carried, I maintain that this company could still go on, unless it were harnessed up by the amendment of the leader of the opposition, in other words, unless we practically amended the Act of 1901 by forbidding that a dam should ever be constructed without another Bill passing through parliament for that purpose. True, the amendment is innocently worded, but there has been so much clever, technical and legal scheming and quibbling in connection with this matter, that we are justified in looking at it from every point of view, and I maintain that if this amendment goes through, while extra electricity from the St. Lawrence Power Co. might not be passed over this transmission company's line, there is not a word in that Act to prevent power from the Long Sault Construction Company being passed over that line. Therefore, unless the amendment proposed by the leader of the opposition should be put into shape so as practically to cancel the power given in 1901 to dam the St. Lawrence, there is nothing to prevent the whole iniquity still being carried out to the letter. Therefore, I would again urge on the First Minister the advisability of letting this thing stand over for a week, until we can look into it and get to the bottom of the matter, now that both sides of the House and the country are thoroughly aroused to the tremendous steal that is attempted to be perpetrated here in the name of development along the St. Lawrence river. Then this article goes on to say:

But Mr. Borden and Mr. Beck say 'No, we must have no transmission line to get power from any of these, for fear in the future the granting of this charter might have some influence on the proposition to dam the St. Lawrence.' It is all very well for Mr. Beck (who is using the whole financial backing of Ontario, to give the people in Toronto and west power) to be quite contented with himself, but his attitude is grossly unfair to the people of the eastern part of Ontario. He nas never made any serious effort to give them power; he has no power to give them. If he did (and he is too busy anyway attending to western Ontario) he has asked nothing in the estimates this year to provide power in the east, and his talk just now is merely a bluff, as it was before, in order to keep everybody else out of this territory until such times as it pleases him to come down this way. In the meantime Brockville and her sister towns are losing the opportunity of getting industries that might come this way if we could get the power, and they are also having a hard time holding the industries they have.

All that under the administration of the First Minister, and of the Minister of Railways and Canals. Where are these industries going if they are now having a hard time? That is a new aspect in which to regard too rosy a picture of the success of these towns that was painted for us.

Granting a charter to the transmission line as asked for does not give anybody any further power than they now enjoy.

Well, that is contradicted by the First Minister himself, and by the proposed amendment of the hon. member for West Lambton, as well as by arguments put up on this side of the House.

It does not extend the rights of anybody, but it merely gives the people of this part of Ontario a chance of going about hunting for power in a practical way. If this line is constructed we will be able to say to anybody who has power, 'Sell us power, and there is a company who has the right to transmit it.' If the power cannot be obtained that will be the misfortune of Brockville and other towns; but if it can be obtained, why should the people be deprived of that which could be of such benefit to them, merely on account of selfishness or other reasons not obvious to the ordinary individual.

We find, not only in this paper, but in other papers, and on the part of other persons, an attempt made to blind the public to the real issues in the case. We might as well come down to the fact that the St. Lawrence Power Company's Bill was smuggled through this parliament—schemed through. Some person behind it knew all about it. Of course, every member of parliament who was here at that time, is indirectly responsible. But somebody was behind the scheme. I exonerate the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) because he was not then a member of this House But though the scheme was smuggled through, it was inoperative to a certain extent, because the company had not powers of expropriation. Under this Bill, as it was introduced, tremendous powers were to be given to these parties. And, in spite of all the amendments, the Bill is evidently dangerous, and opportunity should be given for the elimination of the danger. We require time to consider this and to get the best legal talent of this country to consider it. The Prime Minister may or may not be aware that some gentlemen eminent at the bar of the province of Quebec, have considered this Bill. It was an eminent lawyer of Montreal, I believe, who first pointed out that under the Act of 1901, the company had power to dam the St. Lawrence. The Minister of Public Works endeavoured to conceal that the other evening, but the Prime Minister came out frankly and declared that the company had this power. Now, we have made progress with this Bill. The First Minister will admit that we have made progress by allowing this Bill to stand over after fighting it a whole day. Let me suggest to the Prime Minister that he will make progress by holding it over for another week. Let us look into the matter.

Mr. BRODER. I think this is a question that ought to be thoroughly looked into before any definite action is taken. I was glad to hear the leader of the House (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) make the statements he did with regard to his opinion and his probable action as to any future attempt to dam the St. Lawrence river. A good deal was said about the great necessity of bringing power to the town of Brockville. I know of my own knowledge, that the people of the town of Brockville, have been approached within the last twelve months with a very reasonable proposition for the supply of power and they were not, apparently, very anxious to afford a market to this power developed at the town of Iroquois. Mr. Beach, of Iroquois, has developed on the canal there, under lease from the federal government, 500 horse-power, and has foundations in for three more units which would make a full development of 2,000 horse-power. That is available to Brockville, and the point at which it is developed is 33 miles nearer to Brockville than the proposed electrical power at Cornwall, and which they are so anxious to get. In other words, it would require a transmission line of only 26 miles to deliver this power in Brockville, and that could be built for about $16,000. I know that Mr. Beach offered power within the last two months,—I do not say to Brockville—at $16 per horse-power for 24 hours. That is pretty cheap power. It will be equal to $8 for 12-hour horse-power.

Mr. PARDEE. What would it cost in Brockville?

Mr. BRODER. The transmission line would cost somewhere about $15,000. So, this great cry about Brockville wanting a transmission line to get power does not seem so important. I understand there is not a horse-power available at Cornwall without further development, but that it is possible, at Mille Roches, to put in more units and develop more power at once. I believe they have that right, subject to federal authority. They are not allowed to increase the current in the canal to affect navigation, but I understand that at the present time they have not another horse-power to spare. Within the last year and a half the president wrote to the people applying for power that he had not a horse-power to spare. I am giving here what I understand to be facts, but I do not know them of my own personal knowledge. I would suggest, as this question has resolved itself into a legal question—for it is a question as to the effect of this Bill coupled with the other Bill—the Prime Minister should allow time for further consideration. I do not have the privilege of suggesting to him many things, but I would suggest to him now that this matter should be referred to a special committee of legal gentlemen who would settle on the effect of this Bill coupled with the other. There are things in this Bill which I would be obliged to object to. For instance, they propose to get the right of way by securing easements. That is, they will go to a farmer and get a few square feet to erect a tower. But this means ingress and egress.

Mr. CONMEE. Is not that what the Ontario Hydro-Electric is doing?

Mr. BRODER. The hon. member objects to that with them, yet he approves it in this case.

Mr. CONMEE. No, I do not.

Mr. BRODER. I am glad to hear that.

Mr. PARDEE. They have to get the fee simple.

Mr. BRODER. That does not necessarily follow. It may be said that, if any damage is done, the owner can collect damages. But is an ordinary farmer to sue a twenty million dollar company? No, it would be better for him to suffer injury. We know that lawsuits have been carried on in the city of Montreal to define the rights of the company in this very question. This is a point that should be properly guarded. I do not think that a company supposed to represent millions of money should get these rights to deal with private interests, to ride over the people rough-shod, and leave the ordinary man to fight for his rights against such odds. Another thing: take these towns along the front, Iroquois, Morrisburg, Cornwall and others, and they all get water out of the rapids of that river. Perhaps the best water in this country is found in these towns. But the moment you dam that river you destroy the right that these people——

Mr. CONMEE. There is no provision in this Bill for a dam.

Mr. BRODER. My hon. friend had a good deal of experience in damming the water or proposing to dam the water. The point is that they have that power under another Bill and the two Bills coupled together give them all they want unless we are very careful as to the provisions in this Bill. It may not be generally known that the water shed between the St. Lawrence and Ottawa rivers which are about 60 miles apart is only three miles from the St. Lawrence in my locality. Within three miles of Morrisburg, you will find the watershed and from that point northward the waters come down to the Ottawa river. It is not a high water shed and if the water should be raised by an ice jam for instance over that water shed it would have to sweep clear through to the Ottawa in order to find an outlet. These are questions that the ordinary man should not be called upon to settle. People competent to know what they mean should look into these things before powers are given to any company that would in the least have the effect of damming the St. Lawrence. I would suggst that this Bill be referred to a committee of that sort to settle on the legal effect of these two Bills taken together. There is an apprehension in the minds of many members and of the people that some risk is involved in permitting this legislation.

Mr. S. SHARPE. I think every objection that has been raised here was raised in the Private Bills Committee. True as the Bill was first framed it asked comprehensive expropriation powers. But the promoters said all they wanted was a transmission line and the Bill came to the House in its present form, having nothing to do with the damming of the St. Lawrence river, but it was contended that it was adding to the powers granted by the Bill of 1901, it was supplementary to that Bill. There were many objections to the Bill of 1901, and it has been truly said, that that Bill would not pass the committee as it 'stands to-day.' Many grave objections to it were raised and consequently the position of members on this side was that no power should be added to the powers granted by the Bill of 1901. Then the position of the government should be to negotiate with the company if they come here asking additional powers and privileges; the government should ask them to forego some of the rights contained in the Bill of 1901 which undoubtedly gives the company the right to dam the St. Lawrence to the centre of the international stream. If that is an improper power to confer on the company, would it not be reasonable for the government to say: If you want a transmission line with comprehensive powers of expropriation forego that right in the Bill of 1901. It is an improper power to confer on any company. It would be reasonable for the government to say to the company if they want additional powers and privileges, under the Transmission Bill that they should submit their rates under the Act of 1901 to the control of the railway board, there being now no control over the rates of the St. Lawrence Power Company under their Act of 1901. No one contends that the Bill as brought to the House conferred any power of damming the St. Lawrence. It was in effect a transmission line, but added to that and gave additional powers to the Act of 1901, and I cannot see how the government can refuse to assume responsibility for this Transmission Bill. The Minister of Railways came to the Private Bills Committee. It is true he tried to divest himself of his official character as a minister and to say he spoke as a private member, he urged the committee to pass the Transmission Bill as it was presented. The Minister of Agriculture at the next sitting lent the support of his influence and presence to the Bill without any serious objection to it in its original form. Any objections to the Bill in the Private Bills Committee emanated from this side. When the Bill came in, in an amended form before the House and was discussed during the all-night session we had the spectacle of four or five ministers sitting all night and giving countenance and support to the Bill. There are ten ministers of the Crown here now, and it is 11 o'clock in the evening. They are sitting here attempting to carry, or I might say force a private Bill through although several members on this side have asked that it stand for a week for further consideration. Very innocent amendments suggested during the all-night session were rejected in a haughty spirit, but we find a different spirit in gentlemen opposite; from the promoter to the premier, and the Finance Minister they all seem in a submissive spirit. I submit that the change of attitude is atogether remarkable when you consider how they refused absolutely any amendment that might be suggested during the all-night session. I think they have had their ears to the ground and have found public sentiment to be altogether opposed to this Bill. As the saying is the coon came down, they have had to surrender to the demands of public opinion and make the Bill as innocent as they can. The Bill cannot possibly be discussed intelligently without a thorough discussion of the amendment offered by the leader of the opposition, the amendment of the sponsor of the Bill and three additional amendments. True the sting has been taken out of the Bill because the plans must be submitted not to the Governor in Council, but to this parliament, giving an assurance of publicity,

That takes a good deal of the sting out of it, because when the plans are submitted to this House the public will know what is going on, and we will understand what the government purposes doing under the Act of 1901, But there are many objectionable features to the Bill besides the objection which has been raised by my hon. friend the leader of the opposition. There are wide powers of expropriation. They are permitted to expropriate the property of the province without the consent of the province, and they are permitted to enter into a municipality without the consent of the municipality. We had a Bill discussed last session known as the Ontario-Michigan Power Bill. One clause that was suggested, and the suggestion was adopted by the hon. member for Rainy River (Mr. Conmee), was that no transmission line should be run through any municipality without the consent of the municipality expressed by by-law. That was a reasonable amendment. Had it not been a reasonable amendment it would not have been put into the Ontario-Michigan Power Bill last session. The opposition desires that such an amendment should be incorporated in this Bill. This Bill is to exploit certain natural resources of the country. Why should that company be allowed, without the consent of the municipality, to enter into that municipality, and why should they have the powers of expropriation granted under the Railway Act? Why should such expropriation powers be given to this private company, operating for private gain and for the purpose of paying dividends? Why should this company have the power to go into the city of Montreal, expropriate private property, and go upon the streets of the city without the consent of the municipality? True, there have been other objections raised. The fact that it is duplicating the system which is proposed to be inaugurated by the Hydro-Electric Commission is a great objection. Everybody knows that this is only duplicating the work of the Hydro-Electric Commission. I do not desire to argue that phase of the question particularly, but every person knows that the users of electricity will have to pay for two lines. If this private company erect a transmission line the people will have to pay dividends upon the cost of construction, and the water that may be injected into the stock. Under this system the Hydro-Electric Commission, as soon as these municipalities are prepared to co-operate, will erect transmission lines, and develop power for the benefit of the municipalities at cost. Why should the government encourage a transmission line that will duplicate the system of the Hydro-Electric Commission, doubling the expense of the work of the commission, and adding to the burden of the people in the municipalities through which these lines will pass? Why should they hamper and interfere with the policy which has been adopted by the unanimous consent of the people of Ontario, and playing into the hands of a private company as they are doing here? What the members on this side of the House object to particularly is the fact that by adopting this Bill we are giving additional powers to the St. Lawrence Power Company that already possess powers that they should not have. Before you grant additional powers to a transmission line company it would be well to negotiate with the St. Lawrence Power Company, and induce them to forego some of the powers which they obtained clandestinely in 1901. It seems to me an extraordinary thing that the Bill of 1901 should have passed this House without discussion. Some extraordinary influence must have been at work. It must have passed this House when most of the members were absent. I submit that when that company got such extraordinary powers, as those which are set out in the Act of 1901, now is the time, when they come here as suppliants for further favours, for the government to negotiate with them, and get them to forego some of their privileges and powers. There are other phases of this proposition that I desire to discuss, but I presume that the government are not going to have another all-night session in connection with this Bill. I would like to ask the Minister of Public Works what interests outside of the St. Lawrence Power Company have requested the granting of these powers, and the ratification of the plans of that company? Have any public bodies sought to have the St. Lawrence dammed, or asked that further powers and privileges be conferred upon the St. Lawrence Power Company? I understand that the Toronto and Montreal boards of trade, the Marine Association, the navigation interests, the riparian owners, the municipalities, and in fact every public interest have publicly declared against this plan of the St. Lawrence Power Company, and that the only persons seeking these powers are those financially interested in the undertaking. I understand that the civil engineers of Montreal were asked by the International Waterways Commission to suggest the name of an independent engineer to report upon this project, that they met, pronounced against the project, and refused to suggest the name of an engineer to report upon it. It was so much against the public interest that they refused to suggest the name of an engineer to give an independent report upon the project. If all of these interests are so strenuously opposed to the whole proposition why are we being obliged to sit through all night sessions trying to force this Bill through? If there is not some ulterior purpose behind it what is the object of delaying other private legislation? Other private Bills are important. We are holding other private legislation back for the benefit of this company. In addition I desire to point out that there are private members who have Bills on the Order Paper. Every day has been taken by the government. These private Bills are given precedence over public legislation that is introduced by indivual members in the public interest. The public interest is being sacrificed in the interest of private legislation, and the government are attempting to exploit the assets of the provinces for the benefit of a few promoters who come over from the United States. In a return brought down to the House two or three years ago there were contained several engineers' reports which united in condemnation of this whole project. I say that the project is one which should not be countenanced, which should not receive the assent of this House, and that we should not add to the powers, and privileges granted this company under the Act of 1901.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I stated earlier in the evening that I could not understand what was the object of the opposition to this Bill. I think that I now understand it. I think that the hon. member for North Ontario (Mr. Sharpe) has let the cat out of the bag. I see now plainly that the opposition to this Bill is because it is supposed that this project is going to duplicate the lines of the Hydro-Electric Commission.

Mr. S. SHARPE. That is one of the objections.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Is that an unworthy object? What has been the object of the Hydro-Electric Commission? Has it not been the duplication of other lines? Was it not to give cheap power to the people of the province? Was that not one of the reasons advanced when this Hydro-Electric Commission was organized? Was it not to provide competing lines, to give the people of Ontario the possibility of having cheaper power, to duplicate lines, and to give the people the choice of not only buying their electrical energy from one company, but from several? If the people of Brockville and of eastern Ontario have that same privilege brought to their doors, if they can procure their power not only from the Hydro-Electric Commission, but also from this new company, where is the harm? This very proposition should receive the commendation and support of my hon. friends opposite. But, I understand their objection. There they are all arrayed against it because they do not want the people of Brockville, or the people along the St. Lawrence to have the privilege of getting their electrical energy from two sources.

Mr. HUGHES. Will the right hon. the First Minister be good enough to tell the House where he got that data?

Sir WILFRID LAUREIR. I got that data from the speech of the hon. member for North Ontario. That is what he said a moment ago. He said that he objected to this company because it was going to duplicate the line of the Hydro-Electric Commission. These were the words of the member for North Ontario. I understand now the reason of the opposition to this Bill. I have asked myself what was the object, now I know it: it is to get a monopoly for the Hydro-Electric Commission. I understand it all now. Well, we shall not have to sit all night to-night, and I am delighted, indeed, that the people of the province of Ontario will now know what was the object of sitting all night the other night, and what is the object of the opposition we have had offered to the Bill to-day. I now move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Progress reported.

Mr. HUGHES. When will the Bill be taken up again?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER One hour to-morrow.

On the motion of Sir Wilfrid Laurier the House adjourned at 11.15 p.m.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, April 5, 1910.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

COMMITTEE ON MINES AND MINERALS.

Mr. RALPH SMITH moved:

That the Committee on Mines and Minerals have leave to sit while the House is in session.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. RALPH SMITH moved:

That in view of certain representations made for the passing of an Act for the consolidation of the laws relating to mines, &c., under federal control, the question of such consolidation be referred to the Select Standing Committee on Mines and Minerals, with power to report by Bill or otherwise.

Mr. SPROULE. It is rather an unsual proceeding for a committee to bring in a Bill. The function of a committee is to report to the House its conclusions and recommendations. For a committee to go further than that is, I think, rather contrary to the practice of parliament.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Let the motion stand as a notice.

Motion was allowed to stand as a notice of motion.

DRY DOCK SUBSIDIES.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER moved that the House go into committee to-morrow to consider the following proposed resolutions:

1. Resolved, That it is expedient to authorize the repeal of chapter 24 of the Acts of 1908, The Dry Dock Subsidies Act, and that in substitution therefor it be provided, as an aid to the construction of any dry dock approved as to location and capacity by the Governor in Council, that a subsidy, as hereinafter set out, may be paid out of consolidated revenue fund to any incorporated company, approved by the Governor in Council, which shall enter into an agreement with His Majesty to construct the same with all necessary equipment, machinery and plant, the cost on which subsidy is to be calculated to be determined by the Governor in Council before the agreement for construction is entered into, the Governor in Council being satisfied that such dry dock is needed in the public interest;

2. That as an aid to the enlargement and extension of any dry dock, subsidized under any Act of the Parliament of Canada passed before the date of these resolutions, a subsidy, as hereinafter provided, may be paid out of Consolidated Revenue Fund to any incorporated company, approved by the Governor in Council, which shall enter into an agreement with His Majesty to enlarge and extend any such existing dry dock and to furnish the same with all necessary equipment, machinery and plant, the cost on which subsidy is to be calculated to be determined by the Governor in Council before the agreement for the enlargement and extension is entered into, the Governor in Council being satisfied that such enlargement and extension is needed in the public interest;

3. That dry docks constructed or dry docks enlarged and extended under the provisions of any Act founded on these resolutions, shall, for the purposes of such Act, be divided into three classes;

1. Dry docks of the first class, for naval and general purposes, costing for the purposes of subsidy calculation not more than four million dollars, being—

(a) Dry docks, other than floating dry docks, of dimensions when completed not less than the principal dimensions next hereinafter mentioned, that is to say—clear length on bottom from caisson groove or hollow-quoin to head 900 feet; clear width of entrance, 100 feet; depth of water over the sill at high water ordinary spring tides, 35 feet;

(b) Floating dry docks in which vessels of a tonnage displacement of at least 25,000 tons can with ease and safety be received and repaired:

Provided, however, that any dry dock shall not for the purposes of such Act be deemed to be a dry dock of the first class unless capable of receiving and repairing therein the largest vessels or ships of the British Navy existing at the time at which the contract is entered into;

2. Dry docks of the second class, costing for the purposes of subsidy calculation not more than two and one-half million dollars, being—

(a) Dry docks, other than floating dry docks, of dimensions when completed not less than the principal dimensions next hereinafter mentioned, that is to say—

Clear length on bottom from caisson groove or hollow-quoin to head, 650 feet; clear width of entrance, 85 feet; depth of water over the sill, 30 feet at high water ordinary spring tides if constructed on tidal waters and 18 feet at ordinary low water if constructed on non-tidal waters;

(b) Floating dry docks, in which vessels of a tonnage displacement of at least 15,000 tons can with ease and safety be received and repaired;

(3) Dry docks of the third class costing for the purpose of subsidy calculation not more than one and one-half million dollars, being—

(a) Dry docks, other than floating dry docks, of dimensions when completed not less than the principal dimensions next hereinafter mentioned, that is to say—clear length on bottom from caisson groove or hollow-quoin to head, 400 feet; clear width of entrance, 85 feet; depth of water over the sill, 22 feet at high water ordinary spring tides if constructed on tidal waters, and 18 feet at ordinary low water if constructed on non-tidal waters;

(b) Floating dry docks in which vessels of a tonnage displacement of at least 3,500 tons can with ease and safety be received and repaired;

4. That the subsidy payable in respect of dry docks, which have been constructed under the provisions of any Act founded on these resolutions, shall be—

(a) If of the first class, a sum not exceeding 3¼ per centum of the cost of the work as fixed and determined by the Governor in Council, each year during a period of thirty-five years from the time the Governor in Council has determined under the provisions of the Act that the work has been completed;

(b) If of the second class, a sum not exceeding three and one-half per centum of the cost of the work, as fixed and determined by the Governor in Council, each year during a period of twenty-five years from the time the Governor in Council has determined under the provisions of the Act that the work has been completed;

(c) If of the third class, a sum not exceeding three per centum of the cost of the work, as fixed and determined by the Governor in Council, each year during a period of twenty years from the time the Governor in Council has determined under the provisions of the Act that the work has been completed;

5. That the subsidy payable in respect of dry docks which have been enlarged or extended under the provisions of any Act founded on these resolutions, shall be—

(a) If of dimensions or capacity when enlarged and extended not less than the principal dimensions of a dry dock of the first class under such Act, a sum not exceeding three and one-half per centum of the cost of such enlargement and extension, as fixed and determined by the Governor in Council, each year during a period of thirty-five years from the time the Governor in Council has determined under the provisions of the Act that the work has been completed;

(b) If of dimensions or capacity when enlarged and extended not less than the principal dimensions of a dry dock of the second class under such Act, a sum not exceeding three and one-half per centum of the cost of such enlargement and extension, as fixed and determined by the Governor in Council, each year during a period of twenty-five years from the time the Governor in Council has determined under the provisions of the Act that the work has been completed;

(c) If of dimensions or capacity when enlarged and extended not less than the principal dimensions of a dry dock of the third class under such Act, a sum not exceeding three per centum of the cost of such enlargement and extension, as fixed and determined by the Governor in Council, each year during a period of twenty years from the time the Governor in Council has determined under the provisions of the Act that the work has been completed;

6. That the work of construction or enlargement and extension be done under the supervision of the Department of Public Works;

7. That the Governor in Council be empowered, after a subsidy becomes payable, if such dry dock is not in a state of efficiency and repair, to take possession thereof, and to expend out of consolidated revenue fund a sufficient sum to repair the same, and thereafter operate such dock until the cost of such repairs, after payment of operating expenses and maintenance, is received by the Crown;

8. That the tariff of tolls and rates for the use of the dock prescribed by the company shall be subject to the approval of the Governor in Council, and that the company shall make an annual statement to the Governor in Council of the operations of the company with a statement of receipts and expenditures in detail;

9. That, on the application of the government of Canada, or any minister thereof, ships in the British naval service, in the naval service of Canada, or other vessels the property of or employed by His Majesty, shall at all times be entitled to the use of such docks in priority to all other vessels.

Motion agreed to.

MEAT AND CANNED FOODS ACT.

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER moved second reading of Bill (No. 193) to amend the Meat and Canned Foods Act.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Will the hon. minister be good enough to explain the purport of the Bill?

Mr FISHER. When I moved the resolution on which this Bill is based, I explained that the amendments are almost entirely of a verbal character. There is no change of principle at all, and the amendments would be better considered as they are detailed when we are in Committee going over the Bill clause by clause. They are due to some little difficulties which have arisen in the administration of the Act.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time, and House went into Committee thereon.

On section 1, interpretation.

Mr. FISHER. The only change in the first subclause is to add the word 'game' to the list of animals. The next subclause in the Act as it stands at present reads:

'Export' means export out of Canada or out of a province in which the establishment is situated to another province.

The Act applies to some goods which have never been in what is technically called an establishment. The word 'establishment' is not necessary in the administration of the Act. We therefore propose to leave out the words defining an establishment. The next subclause is a new one and defines a farmer. The Act permits the slaughter and sale of animals by farmers without inspection, and we have found some difficulty in defining clearly what a farmer is. We therefore insert this definition:

A farmer is a person whose recognized occupation is that of farming, and who slaughters only such animals as are fed by him on his own premises.

Some dealers have been claiming to be farmers, and we wish to define distinctly those who have the privilege allowed to farmers under the Act.

Mr. BLAIN. Will this definition take in the Minister of Agriculture?

Mr. FISHER. I think so.

Mr. HENDERSON. Will the minister explain why he uses the word 'goats' in this Bill? Is it intended to can goats as food, or what is the object? I am afraid this would open the door a long way for adulterated foods. Some people make cheese out of goat's milk, but I am not aware that they have come down to eating goats. I think the minister ought to explain why he is giving the men who are running these canning factories an opportunity of palming off goat's meat instead of other meat which the people usually eat. Perhaps the minister could explain whether he intends this goat meat for export or for local consumption. So far as Ontario is concerned, he need not bother about it, because we have not yet got down to eating goats or horses either. But at the same time I do not think we should send from Canada to the old country canned goats. Surely the minister has made a mistake.

Mr. FISHER. In the first place, this is not an amendment because the word 'goats' appears in the original Act.

Mr. HENDERSON. Why not take it out?

Mr. FISHER. It could be taken out. I do not think there is any quantity of goat meat used in Canada, but there is a good deal of it slaughtered in the United States and it might be shipped in here. This clause simply enables us to deal with that if it should be sent into our market. I know, as does my hon. friend, that goat meat is not used in Ontario or in Canada at all for that matter, but it might be imported, and, as is well known, there are a number of flocks of goats being encouraged in the country for other purposes, and as some of them might be slaughtered and put upon the market we could not deal with such a case unless this word were in the clause.

Mr. HENDERSON. Is there anything in this Bill or in the original Act which prohibits those engaged in the canning industry from canning goat meat?

Mr. FISHER. Not so long as they call it goat meat.

Mr. SPROULE. This Bill defines a farmer as a person whose recognized occupation is that of farming. There are many people in Canada whose recognized occupation may not be farming, but who, nevertheless, are carrying on farming extensively, and who if under this Act they were deprived of any rights which a farmer might enjoy, would be treated unjustly.

Mr. FISHER. I think, subject to correction, that if a man was running a farm in any way this clause would include him. For instance, my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) is a doctor, and if he ran a farm as well I think he would be recognized as engaged in the occupation of farming. I would not wish to restrict the interpretation in that sense, and there is no such intention in the drafting of the clause.

Mr. J. D. REID. This Bill applies to food that is exported, but so far as the Canadian consumers are concerned any kind of diseased animals may be sold to them. I saw a case in Toronto not long ago where diseased meat was sold for 1½ cents per pound for the purpose of canning it, and the vendor was brought before the magistrate and fined $20. Then, calves only a few days old are put on the Canadian market. As I understand it, the Minister of Agriculture is using all his efforts to see that the good meat goes to a foreign country and that the refuse is left in Canada. The minister has promised session after session to provide a remedy, but he is not doing so in this Bill.

Mr. FISHER. My hon. friend is bringing up the old, old question which has been discussed time and again in this House. The question of local slaughtering and of protecting the health of the people is a provincial matter and it is only the export and interprovincial trade that this Bill professes to deal with. The case which my hon. friend mentioned is a local matter and we have nothing to do with it. I have no hesitation in saying that while we might have the power, it would be inadvisable and impracticable for Dominion officials to interfere in such matters. If we attempted to do so we would very soon have a most violent protest from the provincial and municipal authorities.

Mr. J. D. REID. The minister does not think it would be unconstitutional for us to do it?

Mr. FISHER. It may be that we could constitutionally do it, but it is inadvisable.

Mr. J. D. REID. And the minister now says he refuses to do anything to protect the health of the people of this country?

Mr. FISHER. That is not a correct definition of what I said.

Mr. J. D. REID. Then make it plain.

Mr. FISHER. I said that so far as the making of local arrangements are concerned these are in the hands of provincial and municipal authorities and that it was not for us to interfere with them in that work. As to export trade and interprovincial trade, this Act deals with that and we have been trying to enforce it.

Mr. J. D. REID. The minister is not dealing with municipal matters in this Act.

Mr. FISHER. That is just what I said.

Mr. J. D. REID. It is the first time in the history of the minister that he has been anxious not to put on more government officials and to exercise patronage.

Mr. FISHER. Oh, no, quite the contrary.

Mr. J. D. REID. Every time he has a chance he has been creating new officials.

Mr. FISHER. My hon. friend knows better.

Mr. J. D. REID. I don't think there is a member in this House who would dispute that fact.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Yes, there are.

Mr. J. D. REID. The minister in this case is willing to appoint officials to protect the health of the people of foreign countries, but he will not appoint inspectors to safeguard the health of our own people. I think that is an awful condition for a minister to be in who has charge of the Agricultural Department, and is supposed to do something for the farmers. I cannot see yet where we have ever had any benefit from the department. Here is a chance now where he can protect both the farmers and the community if he would put on a horde of officials and see that we get decent meat to eat. The Prime Minister knows that we ought to have pure food in Canada.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. And more patronage.

Mr. J. D. REID. If it is necessary to have more patronage in order that we may have pure meat, I am willing to have more patronage. But the Prime Minister agrees with me that we should have pure meat, and yet his Minister of Agriculture sitting beside him, absolutely refuses to give it. The result is that if the policy of the Minister of Agriculture is carried out, we will have rotten meat to eat. Now, I think the Prime Minister is just as guilty as his Minister of Agriculture, because, while he is trying to get all the patronage he can, he does nothing to compel his minister to give us pure meat. It is a notorious fact that the Minister of Agriculture has always been guilty of putting on officials wherever he can possibly do it; but in this particular case where more officials are necessary to protect the health and lives of people, he refuses to put them on.

Mr. FISHER. My hon. friend in one part of his address exactly contradicts what he says in another part. He abuses me for asking for more patronage, and then he abuses me because I won't take it. Here is an evidence that I do not want patronage. I may say to my hon. friend that none are so blind as those who do not wish to see. He cannot see anything good in the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. J. D. REID. I may mention one thing that the minister did do on behalf of this country. He undertook to show the people how they could make a profit out of hens. Now he has got 323 hens out there, and he pays $4,500 a year for looking after them. He has a general superintendent that he pays $1,500; then he has a foreman that he pays $1,000; then he has a man to cary water to these hens, and he pays $800 to him; then he has another man to feed the hens, and pays him $800; then he has another man to clean up the hen house, and pays him $600. So altogether he pays $4,500 a year for looking after these 323 hens, and all the return he gets out of them is $350. There is something that he is doing for the farmers of this country, and there is also a glaring case of patronage. But now that he has a chance to do something to give the people pure food, the Minister of Agriculture stands up here and absolutely refuses to protect the lives of the public, and probably the lives of their children, by allowing them to continue to eat this diseased meat.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. The logical sequence of the statement made by the Minister of Agriculture is this, that so far as interprovincial trade is concerned, he has jurisdiction now. I would like to ask him if he is exercising that jurisdiction in regard to provincial trade. This question has also arisen in the United States, where one of the great industries is that of slaughtering cattle for meat. It has concentrated itself in the great centres of the United States like Chicago and Kansas City. They have now a federal act for the inspection of meat largely used for domestic purposes, even when it is not exported but is sent into other states. Now that thing must come in Canada. The slaughter of the meat supply of Canada will be done largely in some centre like Winnipeg, and is being largely done in the city of Toronto to-day. There is a great interprovincial trade originating in those centres, so the minister will have to take jurisdiction more or less in this matter, and exercise official supervision of meats for the interprovincial trade. He is seized of that authority now. I wish to know now if he is enforcing the law as regards the product of abattoirs in our present meat killing centres, when that product is sent into other provinces.

Mr. FISHER. Yes. Every establishment which does any interprovincial or export trade has in it an inspector of the Department of Agriculture, whose business it is to supervise and watch the animals when they come in, their slaughter and their preparation for food. We do not touch abattoirs or slaughter houses which are purely local in their character, leaving that to provincial or municipal authorities. Importers are also subject to this Act.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. In about how many meat killing centres now is this jurisdiction asserted?

Mr. FISHER. About 40 establishments are under inspection in various parts of the country, including these large ones in Toronto.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I quite agree with any effort that is made on the part of the Department of Agriculture to ensure that the public shall get pure and healthy meat for consumption. One objection to the inspection made by the department, is that, while in the large cities there are inspectors of abattoirs where the meat is exported or liable to be exported, the bulk of the meat that enters into local consumption in cities and towns is not subject to any inspection at all. As a consequence, animals that are liable to be diseased in any way are overlooked. The owners of these animals sell them to the small butchers and they are consumed all over the country as human food, while the best of the meat is nearly all shipped out of the country. On this occasion I would like also to voice a complaint and bring it to the attention of the minister to see if some method cannot be adopted to secure a more equitable distribution of the loss and expense of inspection. It is manifestly in the interest of the public that meat should be inspected, but the expense and loss incurred in that connection is not borne equitably by the public. There are over 400 drovers in the province of Ontario. Those 400 men purchase their cattle on the farm. The farmer sells a bullock to the butcher, the animal looks quite healthy, it goes to the stock yards, it there passes a visual inspection by an inspector who looks at it and passes it as a healthy animal. The drover purchases that animal on the condition that it passes inspection, and that is the inspection that it has to pass.

After it has passed the visual inspection from the car, it is sold to the packer or exporter, but the purchase is made from the drover on the distinct understanding that the animal must pass inspection as dead meat. But, when the animal is sent to the abattoir and slaughtered, it is discovered that it has had a touch of tuberculosis or some disease of that kind, and so the drover, having sold it subject to the inspection as dead meat, must lose every dollar that he paid for it. It may be said that he can go back to the farmer from whom he purchased it, but that is impossible, because the animal was not tagged to identify it as coming from any particular farmer. The result is that last year, in Ontario alone, the drovers lost over $400,000 from this inspection. For my part I quite believe that it is very proper that the department should conduct this inspection and proper that we should make every effort to have wholesome meats; but I think also that a plan should be devised whereby the party who loses this money should be compensated in some way. It is manifestly unfair that the man who has purchased the animal in good faith from the farmer should lose, because after the animal has passed the visual inspection by the inspector, an official of this government, mind you—a defect which nobody has been able to discover and for which the drover is certainly not responsible, causes the condemnation of that carcass. The drovers of Ontario are seriously considering going out of business because they lost an average of about $1,000 each last year.

Mr. SEALEY. Do not the packing houses lose that?

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Not a dollar; every cheque they give to the drovers is marked 'subject to inspection.'

Mr. SEALEY. In our locality, the packing houses bear that loss.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. The drovers, I understand, held a meeting in Toronto last week, when this grievance was talked over, and it was there shown that last year they had paid over $400,000 on this account. Now, this dead meat inspection is for the protection of the public, and it seems to me that the drovers ought to be compensated by some one for their loss. I thought that, as this matter was under discussion, I would call the attention of the minister to the point, because I do not think that, at heart, he is opposed to the view I take as a matter of justice. Every one knows that it is for the public good that this inspection occurs. Why, then, should these poor men be called on to pay the penalty for providing proper food for the whole community?—especially when you consider that most of this meat is exported, and so our drovers are penalized in order to insure the purity and wholesomeness of the food of foreign people. As I have said, there was over $400,000 worth of this meat condemned last year after having passed the general inspection at the yards where the cattle were unloaded from the car.

Mr. BRADBURY. What became of the meat?

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. It was destroyed—tanked. But the man who pays for it gets nothing for it. This matter should claim the attention of this House, and some means should be devised by the Department of Agriculture to remove this cause of hardship in the case of an important class of our citizens.

Mr. OWEN. I am more anxious about the health of the people than about compensating anybody at the present time. I drew the attention of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) to this question of diseased meat a year ago. I told him that I knew of a number of animals affected with tuberculosis being butchered and sold to the people of this country. And I tell him that now. If he wants to take the matter up—and I wish he would—I will prove my statement by the men who are buying these cattle and who are ready to come here to Ottawa and give their testimony on the subject.

Mr. FISHER. My hon. friend from Northumberland (Mr. Owen) makes a statement which I do not dispute. I know that many animals are slaughtered that are not in perfectly sound health, and, no doubt, the meat is sold in many cases for human consumption. That is not the case in any abattoir or meat packing house under the operation of this Act. If the municipal councils and the provincial authorities do not choose to prevent what the hon. gentleman has mentined in the slaughter houses under their control, I am sorry for them, but I am not responsible. If these slaughter-houses were under the operation of this Act for export or interprovincial trade, what my hon. friend has stated could not occur.

I may say to my hon. friend from North Simcoe (Mr. J. A. Currie) that this question of the difficulties of the drovers, packers and farmers, as to who is responsible for the losses to which he has referred, is a very complex one, but one which I consider to be more a matter of trade arrangement amongst the parties concerned in the business than for governmental interference. I know that statements are made such as my hon. friend has made here today. We had a deputation of the packers and men representing these packing establishments for which these drovers buy, and these gentlemen said that the loss fell on the packing-houses.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. That is not so now.

Mr. FISHER. I am not saying which of these statements is right; I am only stating what these gentlemen said. The hon. member for Wentworth (Mr. Sealey) has just stated that the packing houses in Hamilton suffer this loss. In any case, it seems to me that it is properly a matter of commercial arrangement among the parties interested. I do not see how the government could step in and undertake to bear the loss in regard to these dead animals. For it is to be observed that the loss does not occur until the animal is made into meat. Under the Contagious Diseases of Animals Act, which has to do with living animals, we do certain work and pay certain compensation, for the reason that these living animals are likely to spread contagious disease if allowed to live. Where we order the slaughter of the animals, in the interest of the health of animals and of the people of the country at large—but only in such cases—we pay compensation. But in this case, the discovery of the unfitness of the meat for human consumption is not made until the animal is dead and there is no further danger in the way of spreading disease; it is simply the loss of the value of the carcass or of that part of the carcass which has to be destroyed. My hon. friend (Mr. J. A. Currie) spoke of the drovers of Ontario as having lost a very large sum of money. My own observation would lead me to believe that the figure the hon. member gives is much larger than could possibly have occurred. Those interested may talk that way, but no such figures as he mentions have been given to me, and I think that the figure is exaggerated. Of course, I do not mean that it is exaggerated by my hon. friend; I do not know from whom he got his information.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I have had the information from the chairman of the association.

Mr. FISHER. They have not given me such large figures as that. I know they have made large payments and suffered great loss, but the incidence or the loss is not yet thoroughly established, and I think in some cases it is on the one hand, and in some cases on the other according to the bargains that were made.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I understand the courts have decided that the farmer is not responsible, because the distinction is made between selling a diseased animal and selling diseased meat. Then the question arises, whether the abattoir man or the butcher, or the drover is responsible. But the abattoir man endorses every cheque he issues that the animals are sold subject to inspection, and consequently the whole loss is thrown on the drover. To my mind, it is the consumer who benefits in the end, and, therefore, the beneficiary should pay for the protection. If the department approaches the matter from that logical standpoint, it will reach a solution of the difficulty much quicker than by attempting to trace responsibilty from the time the bullock was born, in its passage through many owners, until it gets to the market.

Mr. FISHER. I do not agree that the consumer is the principle one concerned, because it is the export trade of the country we are trying to protect. In the case of interprovincial trade it is the Canadian consumer, but this Act is chiefly intended to safeguard our large and important export trade which supports large industries in this country, which in their turn are of great value to the original producer, the farmer. Without this law the export trade would be in serious danger.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I quite understand that but the man who is suffering at present is the drover who is being driven out of business. It is not in the interest of this country that the poor drover should be taxed $1,000 a year to protect the public from diseased meat. It is a hardship on them and if the minister considers the matter carefully and brings in legislation to remedy that hardship he will, I believe, meet with general support. The poor drover has a wife and family to support, his whole capital may be only $3,000, and if he has to pay $1,000 a year out of his business he simply will be driven to the wall. The minister should give this matter grave consideration and not take a stand one way or the other until he has thoroughly sifted all the facts. The government assumes the cost of protecting the lives of the people on the ocean, on the railways and in various other ways, and I do not see why they should not assume the cost of protecting the lives of the people in this case.

Mr. SEALEY. In considering this amendment without the original Act before you, it is hard to thoroughly understand the intention of it. If any portion of the amendment is intended to deal with any portion of the subject that has been under discussion recently, I feel that if the hon. member for Simcoe is correctly stating the conditions in Toronto, he is certainly not stating them correctly with regard to Hamilton or many other places I know of. Nor is he stating the correct position of some drovers on the Toronto market. Our packers in the vicinity of Hamilton claim that they lose all the meat rejected by the inspectors, and while I have sympathy with any person who meets with a loss which might be averted, I cannot endorse the reasoning that the loss should be on the farmer. I think the drover who purchases the animal from the producer has the right to make all the examination and inspection he wishes before he buys the animal, but when he has bought the animal and taken possession of it the farmer's responsibility should cease. Then, when the drover sells on the market to the packer, unless he willingly agrees that he should stand the loss, I do not think the law should compel him. The packer on his part has the right to make the most minute inspection of the animal he wishes, and the moment he buys it and assumes possession the responsibility of the drover should cease. I am satisfied from the information I have had that the loss is now borne by the packer, and I think he is best able to stand it. I am quite satisfied that he gauges his buying and selling price by an estimate of that loss, and no doubt the producer and consumer pay in the end. I do not want the House to look upon the matter from the point of view that the drover is standing that loss now. He may be in some cases where he agrees to, but if it be a fact that he is bearing the loss then the law should be amended so that when a man buys and assumes possession of an animal the responsibility of the seller should cease.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I do not wish the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sealey) to run away with the idea that I am wishing to impose this loss upon any single section of the community. The hon. member says that the packer loses and, if that be so, I say it is a great hardship on the packer, and it is unjust. I am creditably informed the drovers have lost $400,000, and that I say is a serious loss and a great injustice to them. We have been told, on the other hand, that the farmers have to pay the loss, and I quite agree that if that be so it is a great hardship on the farmer, because the farmer may have brought that animal as a young animal and it may have passed through two or three different hands, and it would be difficult to trace the first point from where the animal became diseased. It is a hardship then on the farmer. After the animal passes visual inspection the responsibility for the animal should pass to the owner. But when the matter is such a serious one and when it has such an important bearing upon the interests of the community, the community should hold itself responsible for a share of the loss. It is the community that is being protected, the safety and health of the people are being ensured, and I think the community should help in some degree to pay for the loss that is occasioned by reason of their protection. I do not think the cost should be borne by either the farmer, the drover or the packer. It is neither fair, just nor equitable.

Mr. SEALEY. The transfer of the property after inspection should settle the responsibility.

Mr. BLAIN. I suppose there will be a variety of suggestions with respect to the inspection of beef. I have one or two complaints from my own county, one from a very prominent drover who complains that the drover is at a loss. For example, he goes to a farmer, buys a half dozen beef animals, gives his cheque for the animals, the cheque is taken to the bank, and the farmer receives his money. When the drover gathers his carload of cattle together, takes them to Toronto, and disposes of them to the abattoir, the abattoir people give him a cheque upon which is marked the condition that these animals are subject to government inspection, and if they fall below the government standard the abbatoir man goes back to the drover and asks for a recompense. The drovers in my section claim that they should be relieved in some way—I am not prepared to say how. The drovers venture to say that the farmer should bear the loss if they can trace the animal back to the farmer. I do not agree with the drovers in that respect. It is a matter that should be very carefully considered. I have no doubt that it has been carefully considered by the minister, and I hope he will continue to give it careful consideration. I believe that the government should take some considerable responsibility in this matter. I do not want to ask that the farmer should be the loser; I do not think he should be. I think it is a case where the farmer should not be the loser, I do not think the drover should be the loser, but it is a matter that should receive such consideration at the hands of the government as will result in the introduction of some amendment that will cause this loss to be shared by those who are entitled to pay it.

Mr. FISHER. The question of the cheque paid to the drover, as described by the hon. gentleman, must be a matter of arrangement between the packer, and the drover. I do not think that parliament or the government should interfere with an arrangement of that kind. If the drover does not choose to take a cheque of that kind from the packer he need not do so.

Mr. BLAIN. I understand that the abbatoir people do not give any other cheques.

Mr. FISHER. It may be a matter of coercion.

Mr. BLAIN. I speak subject to correction, but I understand that in Toronto, when a drover disposes of his cattle to the abbatoir people, the trade is based on the condition that the animals are subject to government inspection, and this condition is marked on every cheque.

Mr. FISHER. Of course, the abbatoir people may be so strong, and have such a complete control over the trade that they can do that, but the drovers have a perfect right to say that they will not buy for an abbatoir that does that. It is a matter of private agreement. I know that in Toronto there is a system—I think it is managed by the Union Stock Yards Company—of insurance by which a small fee of twenty-five cents per head is paid in, and out of the fund thus secured losses are paid. I know that in England, where this question has been threshed out for years, a system of insurance has been arranged by which there is a small fee paid, and these losses are completely covered in that way. In Germany a similar system of insurance obtains, and all the parties engaged in the trade between the first sale of the animal to its final slaughter, and inspection, are insured in that way. I have not the full details of any of these schemes. I think that my director general of veterinary affairs has the full details of the Toronto scheme, but I do not have them in my mind at the present moment. We have not the details of the English and German schemes. I think that is probably the best solution of the whole thing, but it would be extremely difficult for the government to interfere, and lay down rules or laws on a subject of this kind. My hon. friend must not think for a moment that I take either one side or the other. I am not taking sides against the drover or the packer. I appreciate the losses of all of them, and I would be extremely glad to see these losses equitably met. The way to do it seems to me to be on the insurance principle, or by a mutual arrangement between the parties who are engaged in the trade. I have not found my way to any proper, and effective interference in the matter on the part of the department. If I could find a way that seemed to be effective, and quite proper, and fair to all parties concerned I would be only too glad to consider it. But it is because I have not been able to find such a way that I have not proposed any legislation.

Mr. SEALEY. In connection with the cheques that are issued by the abattoirs, if these cheques are drawn, obliging the the drover to assume any loss that may afterwards occur. Now, while I am not a lawyer, I do not think they carry the obligation of the drover to make good these losses if any occur after delivery. But, if they do, as has been said by the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) the drover should refuse to sell to the establishment which imposes such conditions. Perhaps those conditions are imposed by all of the packers. If they are it is a case of combination among the packers to impose an unfair condition upon the drovers and upon a section of the people that cannot very well help themselves under the circumstances. If that is a general condition, then it is a fit subject for inquiry, and prosecutions under the Combines Act, and it may call for the passage of legislation by this House to prevent such an unfair condition existing.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. I am pleased to be present on this occasion when this interesting discussion is going on. There is no doubt that some one is suffering. I know that the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) is doing his best to find a solution. There is only one proper way out of it, and that is for the government to pay the loss. You slaughter a man's cattle to protect his neighbour. Then, his neighbour should contribute to the loss. I think this is the only way to do it, although I realize the great difficulty there must be in carrying out such a plan. As we say in the cattle trade, it all depends on whose ox is being gored. But, there is no question that some one is losing. If the animal is destroyed entirely, some one loses on it, and I think the country should contribute in some way towards the loss whether the loser be the abattoir, the drover or the farmer. If the meat is destroyed for the benefit of the public, the public should contribute towards the recompense of the one who loses.

Mr. J. D. REID. I agree with what the hon. member for Montreal, St. Lawrence (Mr. Bickerdike) says. In my own county there was a case where a farmer had to destroy three or four of his cattle on account of some contagious disease. An inspector comes from Ottawa and says: You have to kill those animals, but it does not come within the category of those that are paid for.

Mr. FISHER. My hon. friend is in error. No officer of my department orders anybody to kill an animal unless we are prepared to pay the compensation given by law.

Mr. J. D. REID. Supposing one of the officers of the department goes out and pronounces it a contagious disease, does the law not provide that the animal must be destroyed?

Mr. FISHER. Not necessarily.

Mr. J. D. REID. If it is a contagious disease, as I understand the law, the animal must be destroyed. Does not the man say that it must be destroyed? At all events in the interest of the public it must be destroyed.

Mr. FISHER. No.

Mr. J. D. REID. If the animal has a disease which makes it necessary to destroy it, the farmer must lose it. He comes to Ottawa and gets the officials to examine the animal, and the official requires the animal, in the interest of the community, to be destroyed.

Mr. FISHER. Whenever we order an animal to be killed we pay compensation. We do not order the destruction of all animals which are effected with contagious diseases. Mange is a contagious disease, but we do not order a mangy animal to be killed. It is only when we order an animal to be killed that we pay compensation.

Mr. BRADBURY. This question of the health of the public seems to me to be a very big question, and this House ought to consider it very seriously. I am not very much interested in diseased cattle; in my county we do not have any; but I infer from what the minister said in the early part of this discussion, that the matter of regulating the sale of diseased meats rests very largely in the hands of the different provinces. I do not pretend to be a constitutional lawyer, but I would say that if it is possible the federal power ought to control the sale of all foods from one end of this Dominion to the other, as one province may be a little more zealous than another in protecting the public from diseased meats. There has recently been a great deal of discussion in the United States and Canada regarding cold storage systems, and this House, while it is discussing diseased meats, might very well at the same time consider that subject. We have learned from the press that the public have been eating meat, eggs, poultry and fish which have been in cold storage for two years. I myself have known fish which is I suppose the most delicate kind of food produced, and which has come from the Manitoba lakes, that has been stored in Chicago for three years and has then been sold to the public. This is a matter of very serious importance, and I think that Canada might well take the initiative in regulating in some way the cold storage system. I think there ought to be a law that would make it impossible for any one to hold meat or other food products in cold storage longer than a certain period. The date when any food product is put in cold storage should be tagged on it. I believe that the manner in which our cold storage systems have been allowed to store up meat and other food products has had a great deal to do with the increased cost of living. There has been some agitation on this subject in Montreal, and I understand that the provincial government have practically said that they cannot regulate the cold storage system, as it is a Dominion matter. If that is so, it is up to the Minister of Agriculture or the government to formulate a policy and introduce legislation to regulate these cold storage systems all over the Dominion and place them under strict government inspection.

Mr. BLACK. The unsettled and chaotic state of the law in regard to the foods of the public, to which this discussion has led up, is just another voice crying out for the establishment of a bureau of public health. No man who has intelligently considered the question of protecting the life of our people, both adults and children, can fail to realize the deplorable loss of life all over Canada for the want of some guiding hand in protecting the people in the food they eat and the water they drink. As truly as the sun is shining, the day is coming, and it is not very far distant, when a federal bureau of public health will be established. The public cry out for it, the government see the necessity for it, and I think there are only two individuals within a radius of a good many miles of the seat of government who are opposed to it. No man can look at the meat exposed for sale in our meat markets without seeing that much unfit food is sold. No man can see the conditions under which the milk supplied to our homes is produced and handled without concluding that there ought to be a reform there. I am not using extravagant language when I say that the awful slaughter of the innocents which goes on in Canada every summer during the hot weather, is crying aloud to this government to establish a bureau of public health. More Canadians die from the first to the fifth year than from the fifth to the fifty-fifth; and the cause of this awful slaughter of children is in most cases impure food, impure milk, ignorance in feeding, ignorance in preparing food. I think the day ought not to be far distant when the government will undertake to educate mothers how to feed their babies and women generally how to cook our food. There is no question on which we legislate that is of such importance as this question. You cannot make a nation without having healthy people, and you cannot have a healthy people unless you protect them in the food they eat in infancy and childhood. You have only to look at a baker's wagon going about the streets of this city or anywhere else to get an idea of present conditions. I have watched a man carry into a house loaves of bread, with the same hands with which he has probably attended to his horse in the morning, and with a pair of mittens that have probably not been washed for months. I would not like to say how much of the filth of the stable or the streets is in it but it is there. Look at the meat in the shops exposed to every breeze that blows filth upon it; look at the candy that is sold to your children exposed in the same way. We should have an authority on public health that would regulate all these things. Those who know how to protect the public should protect the public who don't know. There are people who cannot be expected to be educated in these things and it is the duty of this government to protect them. To my mind this is a question of paramount importance. If we consider it only from a monetary point of view; if we consider the enormous loss every year from unnecessary sickness and death; if we had no higher motive than mere dollars and cents it is a profitable thing to preserve the lives of our people. Then from the humanitarian point of view consider its vast importance; consider the alleviation of distress, the prevention of sickness; consider the enormous number of babies that are dying in this country every year who should grow up to be men and women and good Canadians.

Mr. J. D. REID. I do not think it is fair for the hon. gentleman (Mr. Black) to suggest that the Minister of Agriculture should be placed in the humiliating position of being forced to go round Canada to teach the women how to feed their babies.

Mr. BLACK. I did not say that.

Mr. J. D. REID. That is what I understood the hon. gentleman to say. I do not know whether the Minister of Agriculture has much experience in that line, but I judge from what I know of him—at least from what I have seen and heard of him that he has not yet sufficient experience to enable him to teach the women of Canada how to feed their babies on milk.

Mr. FISHER. You show great appreciation.

Mr. J. D. REID. Well, I do not like the minister to be placed in a false position. I agree with the hon. member (Mr. Black) that a public health department should be established by the government because there is no doubt that a number of our people are developing tuberculosis and other diseases from eating diseased meats. In every constituency of the Dominion the old and diseased cattle are being sold for practically the value of the hide, and the meat is canned and sold. I feel very strongly that the Minister of Agriculture must change his attitude, and that he must devise some scheme whereby the people of Canada will be protected in their food. He should not devote all his energy to the protection of the people in foreign countries who eat our exported meat. For some years the custom is that calves about a day old have been sold to these canners, and the meat turned out as chicken. Does the minister know that that is going on at the present time?

Mr. FISHER. Not in any place where our inspection goes on.

Mr. J. D. REID. I tell the minister that they are being shipped every week right into Montreal, and his inspectors are inspecting them.

Mr. FISHER. No.

Mr. J. D. REID. I know men who have been shipping them there.

Mr. FISHER. Does the hon. member state that calves of the character he describes are sent to Montreal, and are allowed to pass my inspectors. If he does I say it is not so.

Mr. J. D. REID. Yes it is.

Mr. FISHER. I deny that.

Mr. J. D. REID. And they pass your inspection.

Mr. FISHER. No.

Mr. J. D. REID. I say they do.

Mr. FISHER. Give me an instance.

Mr. J. D. REID. I am not looking after your inspectors, and if you had proper inspectors it would not happen, but the trouble is that you appoint shoemakers.

Mr. FISHER. I do nothing of the kind. There is no one acting as an inspector who is not a veterinary surgeon, except a few laymen——

Mr. J. D. REID. Ah.

Mr. FISHER. Wait a minute—these men have been butchers, or something of that kind, and they are entirely under the control and management of the veterinary inspectors. I deny that any calves such as the hon. member has described have been allowed to pass into Montreal by my inspectors.

Mr. J. D. REID. The trouble is that you appoint a tailor, or a shoemaker, or somebody like that.

Mr. FISHER. My hon. friend is again making a reckless statement.

Mr. J. D. REID. I am not.

Mr. FISHER. Yes, you are.

Mr. J. D. REID. You allow such men as Mr. Bickerdike, the member for Montreal, St. Lawrence, to appoint that kind of men, instead of the proper men.

Mr. FISHER. No, Mr. Bickerdike would not send me a man who is not of the right kind.

Mr. J. D. REID. The member for St. Lawrence knows as well as I do if he would like to state it, that such calves as I have mentioned are going right into Montreal every week.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. I must protest against that statement so far as Montreal is concerned. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Reid) is entirely mistaken. That is not the class of food that is used in the city of Montreal. My good friend (Mr. Reid) made the statement that I have recommended men to the Minister of Agriculture who were not competent for their positions. Let me tell him that if I recommended a man to the Minister of Agriculture my recommendation would be sufficient for him not to get the job.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. When many applicants for positions come to me for a recommendation I tell them they had better not have it because the minister would be sure to keep them out of the position. They get their recommendation from some Tory member on the other side of the House. Let me tell my hon. friend (Mr. Reid) that the inspection in Montreal is first class in every way. The only objection I have to the thing is that when the government destroys a man's property in the interest of public health they do not pay him for it. As to Montrealers eating the class of food described by the hon. member (Mr. Reid) he is entirely wrong; most of it is consumed in Ontario. It does not come to Montreal at at all.

Mr. DOHERTY. I am greatly encouraged by the certificate given me by my hon. friend from St. Lawrence, Montreal, (Mr. Bickerdike) that the Minister of Agriculture accepts recommendations to office from Tory members of parliament. While I cannot claim to have a very profound knowledge of this subject, I quite agree with my hon. friend that, in cases of this kind, where, as the result of an inspection made for the protection of the general public, a man who has bought in good faith—of course, I say nothing of those who have not acted in good faith—finds his merchandise confiscated, or condemned, and consequently confiscated, and thrown valueless on his hands, it would be perfectly fair and proper that, to some extent, at all events, he should receive compensation from the public so protected. If I understood the Minister of Agriculture, he stated a few moments ago, in answer to the hon. member for Grenville (Mr. J. D. Reid) that where it was found necessary to destroy a living animal for the protection of the public, compensation was invariably paid. Now, I would like to ask the Minister of Agriculture what is the difference in principle between these two cases. In one case the living animal is destroyed for the protection of the public and compensation is paid; in the other case, the carcass of the dead animal is destroyed for the general protection—or rendered absolutely valueless—and no compensation is paid. It seems to me that, while this inspection is most desirable, the people who, for the protection of the public find their property destroyed, have a claim to reasonable compensation.

Mr. FISHER. There is a very great difference between paying compensation when we order the living animal to be destroyed, and paying compensation when the dead meat is found to be unfit for food. In the case of the living animal, the owner may say that the animal can be cured, and the value not lost, but the veterinary authorities consider the risk to the public too great, and the slaughter of the animal is ordered. This not only prevents the spread of the disease, but is a step towards stamping out the disease altogether. In the case of hog cholera we have conquered the disease. In the case of glanders, we have reduced it so much that the compensation paid now is only one-fifth of what it was when we began, and we hope within a year or two to get the disease completely within bounds. On the other hand, the dead animal cannot spread disease. The meat is a merchantable article which can be sold or not sold. It is in the interest of the public that it should not be sold, because, in many cases, the consumer could not know that it was diseased and unfit for food. Therefore, in the interest of the public, we order it to be condemned. And in regard to this Act this applies only to the export and interprovincial trade. The reason why we deal with interprovincial trade is because the provincial authorities in the province where the animal is slaughtered could not control it in the province where it originated. The opinion that is given me by the Department of Justice, while no definite statement is made, is that it is probable that the question of public health and the control of food products in a particular locality, is rather under the control of the provincial authorities than of the Dominion. Therefore, we have avoided undertaking anything in connection with what I may call purely local affairs. We hold to the general principle that it is better the local authorities should deal with local matters; and for this parliament to undertake the making of a general law, such as has been suggested by my hon. friend from Selkirk (Mr. Bradbury) would be a new departure which, I must confess, I am not prepared to present to parliament, and would not like to see carried out. The question, of course, is fraught with difficulty. When this law relating to meat packing was passed a few years ago, the question was thoroughly threshed out, and the House decided, without serious objection, on the line which this law has taken. The amendments here proposed do not deal with the general principle, but are simply amendments of detail intended to facilitate the operation of the law.

Mr. DOHERTY. I was not suggesting that the minister should extend the law so as to interfere with provincial affairs. And I am quite prepared to recognize that there are more reasons why it should be necessary to order the slaughter of the living animals than can be cited for the condemnation of the dead carcass. But I fail to see that the minister has answered the question as regards the difference in principle. In both cases you are destroying a man's property for the protection of the public. While the consumer might be deceived in the meat he purchases if this inspection were not made, is it not equally true that the packer, when he buys diseased animals, is equally deceived? For, of course, we are speaking of cases in which the bad quality of the meat is ascertainable and ascertained only by professional inspection after the animal is slaughtered. I am not saying a word for the man who, with his eyes open, buys animals that are diseased. But, when it comes to the government making an inspection of meat for the protection of the general public, and condemning—properly condemning—some meat as unfit for food, it seems to me that it would be quite proper that the public, for whose protection this is done, should compensate the individual who, acting in perfect good faith, is made to suffer that the public may be protected.

Mr. HENDERSON. Possibly we have drifted away from the subject which was brought to our attention earlier in the day by the Minister of Agriculture. At the same time, I feel sure that the time has not been wasted, for information has been given to members of this committee, and I hope it will find its way to the country. The minister was good enough to explain the system of compensation under the Contagious Diseases Act where animals become infected, and have to be destroyed. I have just one complaint to make with regard to the law as it is now framed, namely, that not only should the animal that is ordered to be destroyed by the government official be paid for, but that other animals in the same herd that may have died before the government inspector has reached the farm, should also be paid for. Now I am going to cite a case with which the minister's chief veterinary is quite familiar. Remember I am not taking exception to the administration of the law, but to the law itself. On the 11th day of the month a farmer noticed that his hogs were sick, and he called in the nearest veterinary who, by the way, is the quasi official of the government, because subsection 2 of section 3 of the Act respecting infectious or contagious diseases of animals, says:

> Any veterinary surgeon practising in Canada should immediately, on ascertaining that an animal is labouring under an infectious or contagious disease give similar notice——

To the notice he gives to the minister.

> —to the nearest veterinary inspector.

So I say the veterinary is a quasi official of the government, and the government should in some way be responsible for any neglect of duty on his part. In the case I refer to, the farmer called in the veterinary on the 11th day of the month. He examined a carcass, and I understand a portion of it was sent to Ottawa for inspection. Before the officer of the government reached the farmer to examine his hogs, some ten days had elapsed, I think the veterinary from Ottawa did not reach there until the 21st day of the month. In the meantime, out of a herd of twenty-one hogs fifteen or sixteen had died, and only five or six hogs remained which were ordered to be slaughtered. I understand the government paid, or promised to pay, and will, I presume, pay for those animals that were slaughtered. But what about the other two-thirds of that man's hogs which died before the veterinaary reached the place, and for which the farmer gets no compensation, though he had done his duty in the matter. My contention is that so long as compensation is to be granted, and so long as people carefully observe the law, and give notice to the proper officials, a man whose animals die before the inspector reaches there, and before the slaughter is ordered by the government inspector, should receive compensation for those that died previous to the inspector's arrival. I think the minister would not go far astray if he amended the law so as to permit of compensation being granted under conditions of this kind. The minister may tell me that he would be flooded with applications. Suppose he is. The object of the law is to stamp out disease, and I think the country can better afford to pay compensation for all these animals rather than that a poor tenant farmer should be compelled to sustain the loss himself. Not only does he sustain the loss, but he is actually prohibited for the next three months from keeping an animal of the same kind upon his farm, and probably loses the use of that class of product for the whole twelve months.

Mr. FISHER. This subject of course is entirely aside of the question before the committee, but I am not complaining of that. I may remind the hon. gentleman that when the law was amended so as to permit payment for animals killed by order of the department, perhaps not the hon. gentleman himself, but others around him, pointed out that unless that provision was carefully safeguarded it might lead to great abuse, and I promised that no compensation would be paid for animals slaughtered except they were slaughtered by order of one of my permanent officers. In the case my hon. friend refers to, the veterinary was not an official of the department in any sense of the word. My hon. friend says he is a paid official. We have given him authority to issue certain certificates, but that is all, he is not an official authorized to order the slaughter of animals. The law says that every veterinary who hears of a contagious disease must report it to us, but that does not constitute him a government official in any way. I can understand my hon. friend's dissatisfaction, when one of his constituents perhaps has suffered in the way he has described, and there may be occasions where it would be only fair and just to pay some compensation. But I fear that any relaxation in the law in that respect would lead to such demands, and such difficulty in the verification of the reasons for slaughtering an animal, that enormous expense would be incurred which would be unjust to the community at large who would have to pay the expense.

Mr. GUTHRIE. Although the question of compensation may not arise under this Bill, I may perhaps be allowed to say that I agree with the sentiments which have been expressed by my hon. friend from Halton (Mr. Henderson), to the effect that the present law is quite inadequate. Many cases have arisen, and do arise, where, through the action of the government or its officials, serious direct loss is suffered by farmers and no compensation is paid, and where, I am sorry to say, I do not think any effort is being made in the direction of paying compensation. I have rather a pointed case in my own county which I drew to the attention of the House last session, and have brought it to the attention of the department before, a case in which compensation has been refused. I think if there ever was a fair, just and reasonable case, to use the minister's language, in which compensation should be paid, the case I have submitted, and will again mention, is that case. In November, 1908, either one or two carloads of cattle were ordered for export from Fergus to Liverpool, fine cattle, all ready for export. At Niagara Falls, on the frontier, a veterinary inspector of this government stopped them, examined the car and reported, not that an animal was diseased, but that he suspected that one of the animals had the mange. The shipment was delayed at the Falls. It was ordered from there back to Toronto, for some reason that I have not yet been able to ascertain, from Toronto ordered back to Fergus, there it was kept for a considerable length of time, three or four weeks, the farmer had to procure special stables and to comply with the special quarantine regulations, and in the end it turned out that the animal was not diseased and did not have mange. The whole loss arose from the mistake of the inspector of the government at Niagara Falls. The farmer lost his opportunity of making a sale, he lost his freight from Fergus to Niagara Falls and back via Toronto, he was put to large expense for providing special stables and complying with the quarantine regulations; in fact, his loss has run from $1,000 to $1,200. That is directly attributable to the action of the inspector who made the mistake. Why should not the government compensate in a case of that kind? A man might make a mistake and act bona fide and I have no doubt that it was a bona fide mistake. Why should the farmer bear the loss? The minister informs me that it was for the security of the public. Well, then, why should the public not pay? If the animals had been slaughtered two thirds of the value would have been paid, but as the matter stands to-day the man has lost from $1,000 to $1,200 on one shipment through no fault of his own, he has a fair, just and reasonable case and I think that either by special vote or otherwise that claim should be paid.

Mr. FISHER. All I have to say in regard to that particular case is that it was not a case of slaughter at all under Animals Compensation Act, and we have not the right to pay compensation for that loss.

Mr. GUTHRIE. You should have the right.

Mr. LEWIS. As a strong advocate of shortening the session and of shortening the debate, I may say that the hon. member for Montreal, St. Lawrence (Mr. Bickerdike), and the hon. member for Montreal, St. Ann's (Mr. Doherty), have said exactly what I believe upon this matter. I beg to call the minister's attention to a fact in reference to compensation. While he compensates a man whose cattle have been ordered to be killed and are killed, he does not compensate the man who owns the cattle which have been killed and which are afterwards found to have a disease which is contagious. He prevents, in the first place, the contagion of the cattle being communicated to other animals, and in the second case, he prevents the contagion being communicated to human beings. I can see no distinction between compensation for disease which is patent to the eye of the experienced veterinary and for disease which is not. There have been some remarks made in reference to feeding bottles by the hon. member for Hants (Mr. Black), and that reminds me of a little story which shows that cold storage is not always a good thing, especially with reference to matrimony. In the olden days the young ladies on the farm, who were sending out eggs, were in the habit sometimes of writing their names and addresses on the eggs, and when some young gentleman, perhaps far away across the sea, would see the name of a young lady he would write to her and matrimony would ensue. A young lady did that some time ago in the west and she was married and had three children before that egg got out of cold storage.

Mr. SCHELL. The discussion has taken a very wide range and has introduced a good many questions that are of a very complex nature. I just wish to make a few remarks in regard to compensation. The government, I am sure, deserve credit for appointing inspectors to inspect meats and animals which are slaughtered in our slaughter-houses, and I presume that when they appointed these inspectors they had little idea of the number of animals that would be found to be diseased and the loss that would fall upon our packing-houses. As to whether the packing-houses or the farmers should be remunerated is certainly a very difficult question to determine. Primarily, I suppose, the farmer is liable but after the stock leaves the farm it is not always easy to trace the particular farm to which the loss is attributable and the fact at once is presented to our mind that the farmer cannot be made responsible. The drover certainly should not be, and those who conduct the packing-houses, I think, are unfairly dealt with when they are compelled to stand all the loss.

Mr. BLAIN. Do the packing houses stand the loss?

Mr. SCHELL. Yes, they do in most cases. I have in my mind especially the packing houses that kill hogs. I know as a matter of fact that they have sustained the losses up to the present time in almost every instance, if not altogether. If the government were to undertake to meet these losses it would be rather difficult to determine what should be the proper amount of compensation. The packing house men might make a demand for compensation that would perhaps be more than would be fair. Some portions only of hog carcases are condemned, and the loss is sometimes comparatively small on individual animals. But when the staff of inspectors is ample in the various packing houses they could arrive probably at a fair basis of valuation, and I think that the government might fairly undertake to compensate the packing houses, say, to the extent of 50 or 75 per cent of the loss without incurring the danger of paying them more than should be paid. I think that the consensus of this House and the opinion of the country generally would be such as to justify the government in taking the matter up, and, in a measure, compensating those who are compelled to lose on account of the diseases which are to be found to exist amongst animals. Of course, I know there is a great work to be done in the education of farmers in regard to the better ventilation of stables and the better caring for their stock in order to prevent the loss which is occurring from diseased animals, and unless the farmers are made to bear some of the loss perhaps the incentive will not be as strong as it should be to compel them to adopt the best possible methods of caring for their stock. If the packing houses feel that they are only being remunerated to the extent of, say, 50 or 75 per cent, they must pay that much less for the stock which they purchase from the farmers, and the farmers must expect to obtain less for their stock than if it is known that the stock is free, or comparatively free, of disease. The packing houses, after a year or two years' investigation and inspection, can determine fairly correctly what the percentage of loss is. But I think the best solution of this question would be to pay the abattoirs a fair percentage, and the drovers who purchase from the farmers should enlighten the farmers, and the farmers should be led to understand that if their animals are absolutely free from diseases they would obtain even a better price than they are obtaining under the present regulations. I know the government has done and is doing valuable and important work in educating the farmers in the care of milk, and the result is that the conditions under which the milk of this country is now handled are infinitely better than they were some years ago. It is the rule rather than the exception, that in every dairying district in Ontario the stables are thoroughly up to date in every respect, the ventilation perfect, and the dairy properly equipped with every modern appliance. Now, Mr. Chairman, I believe this to be a very important discussion because it deals with the protection of every class of the community. It is a question of very great financial concern also, and anything that can be done by the government to properly distribute the loss as well as to better educate the people must prove most valuable in connection with this branch of our agricultural industry.

Mr. STAPLES. I direct the attention of the Minister of Agriculture to the particular case cited by the hon. member for Wellington as being worthy of further consideration. In that case the farmer lost $1,200 through the neglect or inability of officials appointed by the minister and in such a case it appears to me only fair that the government should compensate the farmer for that loss. An item of $1,200 is a very important consideration to a farmer. I can speak with a good deal of sympathy as to that case because I know a farmer who through the neglect of the government officials lost to the extent of about $1,500. The officials were advised of the case, but it took them four days to get there, and when they arrived they ordered the animals destroyed, but about 20 per cent of the animals had died during the four days' delay. I believe that if that farmer took an action in the courts he would recover damages because of the neglect of the officials of the department.

Mr. SPROULE. On the question of amending the Act in the direction of stamping all food that goes into cold storage, any one who has paid attention to what has appeared in the press during the last few months must conclude that great injury is being done to the trade of the country by the abuse of this cold storage system which amounts practically to a conspiracy to enhance prices. Then, there is the health aspect of the case, because in my judgment as a medical man, food may be so deteriorated that it becomes unhealthy if it is kept in cold storage for an undue length of time. We had a statement as to the length of time food products are kept in cold storage in Chicago and Kansas, but I saw a statement recently that the carcases of animals were kept for two years in cold storage in Montreal. It is very easy to verify that statement and it should be inquired into. It seems to me that it is the imperative duty of the Department of Agriculture to amend the law so as to compel the stamping of the date upon all food that is put into cold storage, and, providing that it shall not be kept there longer than a certain period. This is an opportune time now to legislate in that direction.

At one o'clock committee took recess.

Committee resumed at Three o'clock.

Mr. SEXSMITH. A matter was brought to my attention some time ago which I wish to bring to the attention of the minister. A farmer sold a very valuable beef animal to a drover. Some ten days or two weeks afterwards the drover, who had taken his cargo to Montreal, sent a notice to the farmer that one of the animals he had bought from him had tuberculosis, and asked the farmer to refund the purchase money. The farmer had no evidence other than the word of the drover that it was his animal that was diseased, but rather than go into a lawsuit he decided to refund the money, amounting to some $80. He asked me if I would bring the matter up here at an opportune time, and find out if some remedy could not be provided for cases of this kind. He had raised a great many beef cattle, and so far as he could see all the animals he sold to the drover were in perfect health. The animal in question may have been his or it may have been somebody else's. I want to bring the matter to the minister's attention, and ask him if he thinks the farmer should suffer the loss of his animal under these circumstances?

Mr. FISHER. Not knowing all the circumstances, I could not say anything about it. I suppose it is a matter for the courts to decide.

Mr. SEXSMITH. It seems to me that a farmer in selling his animals to drovers runs a great deal of risk. When the drover tells him that any of his animals are diseased, he has to lose the money or else perhaps go into court, and if he handles thoroughbred cattle he probably prefers to pay the money than go into court. I should imagine that a drover should be compelled to give some evidence that an animal is diseased, or else notify the farmer immediately after the purchase.

Mr. FISHER. I should think that if the farmer defended himself, the drover would have to produce some evidence before he could collect; but I would not care to give a legal opinion on the matter.

Mr. T. CHISHOLM. What is right and honourable, and just should be law. Now, the government appoint inspectors to inspect meat. They do that for the benefit of the general public. The government, representing the general public, pay these inspectors, and it is through them that the general public receive the benefit. Those who receive the benefit should pay the cost. The government, in appointing inspectors, have gone a certain distance. Any one who employs another person to do work for him, whether the government or an individual, is responsible for what that servant may do under their instructions. When an animal is condemned, there may be considerable difficulty in knowing to whom it belonged in the first place. It is utterly impossible that one hog among 400 or 500 can be traced to the farmer from whom it was purchased. Even if that could be done, a farmer who had any suspicion that the animal was diseased, would not offer it for sale to a drover who would be likely to take it to a point where it would be inspected. The result is that diseased animals are retained on the farm. In that way the present practice really results in propagating disease, because the animal thus retained by the farmer is sold to the local butcher, and by the local butcher to the people of the neighbourhood. Thus meat for export is being inspected while the meat being sold to our Canadian citizens is not being inspected.

Mr. FISHER. Whose fault is that?

Mr. T. CHISHOLM. I am just pointing out what the natural result of the present condition of affairs is. I am not saying that it is anybody's fault in particular. The meat supplied to our Canadian citizens is not inspected. They get the discarded beef, while the inspected meat is exported. The consequence is that if the farmer is made responsible, the result which I have pointed out will naturally occur, while if the government would pay a percentage of the value of the meat that is condemned, when it gets into the hands of the final purchaser, the farmer would not have such a fear to sell his animals, and more effective inspection would take place. I think that the government, as representing the general public, which is being benefited, should pay a percentage, say 50 or 75 per cent, of the value of the animal destroyed. The farmer would not be subject to the loss. the drover, who now receives cheques which are only payable on certain conditions, would also be relieved, and the man who packs or cans the meat would not be such a heavy loser as he is. I quite approve of the government appointing these inspectors; I am one of those who think that the government cannot do too much along that line. I believe that a bureau of health should be established, and should be put under the charge of a man who would take a position in this country at some future time equal to that of Koch or Pasteur in Eurpoe. I believe we have in Canada young men of enthusiasm who are competent for such a position. Then we would not have so many halting attempts, and failures as we have at the present time. Such a man would make his work his life study, and the result would be that a great deal of good would be done, and a great many valuable lives saved.

Mr. FISHER. My hon. friend says that the local market has all the diseased meat thrown upon it. If it has, that is due to the laxity of provincial or municipal inspection. The municipal authorities have just as much power to inspect as the Dominion Agricultural Department, and if they do not do it, it is their own fault, and I must protest against responsibility being thrown on the Dominion parliament or the Dominion government for a duty which is the duty of the provincial authorities. If that is to be thrown upon us we ought to assume the whole range of provincial legislation and administration. I must protest against the idea that because the provincial government do not do their duty therefore this government should do that duty. If it is their duty, and they neglect it then it becomes the duty of the provincial electors, and supporters of whatever government it may be, Liberal or Conservative, to force that provincial government to do its duty, and not to appeal to the administration of this government to perform a duty which is essentially provincial or municipal. It is our duty to deal with the export trade, and we are trying to do it, and do it effectually, and I believe to-day that the complaints which are being made are largely due to the fact that the local inspection is not as severe as our inspection. Severity of inspection is quite in line with what my hon. friend has said, and I take it he is supporting me in making a severe, and properly efficient inspection. If the local authorities are not doing the same thing, that is no reason why I should be asked to do their duty, and their work.

Mr. THOS. CHISHOLM. I certainly am supporting the minister in having a very rigid inspection, but I am not supporting him in the idea of destroying property for the general benefit of the people of Canada and not making compensation, because the result is that the effect of the loss goes back through the different purchasers until finally it reaches the farmers, and there as a consequence the diseased meat is allowed to stagnate, as it were. I have no doubt the provincial authorities may possibly be responsible, but the result is that the effort that is being made by the minister in these lines is increasing the trouble that we have from the inefficiency of the local authorities if there is such inefficiency. The present system is undoubtedly increasing that trouble. There is no doubt that by throwing the responsibility on the producer, on the farmer finally, the local market is congested with the diseased meat, and a medical man who understands what he is talking about, must understand that it is a very serious thing to the people of Canada. We can better afford to pay a percentage of the cost of this diseased meat when it is found at its final resting place where the animals are slaughtered much better than to have our people living on it and being injured. Those who are benefited should pay. The general public are benefited, and, therefore, the general public should pay the cost. I will not say that they should pay the whole cost, because that might lead to irregularities, but we should certainly pay a percentage of the cost, and it should be paid to those who slaughter the animals. We know it is almost impossible when a steer or fat beast is leaving the farm to know what diseases it may have. When the animal comes to be slaughtered, the defects will be disclosed, and I quite approve of what the minister is doing. His course, however, is having results that he evidently did not intend. I think the chief source of difficulty lies in not paying a percentage on the discarded meat.

Mr. BRODER. I think we are dealing with matters under Dominion Acts that have a local effect. For instance, we have our inspection of canned fruits and canned goods of all kinds. That is an article that enters into local consumption, and yet it is inspected under this government.

Mr. FISHER. When it is for export.

Mr. BRODER. You go into a man's grocery and test his goods as to purity, &c., you deal with them as inspectors.

Mr. FISHER. Not under this Act.

Mr. BRODER. No, not under your department. It seems to me you will never rid the country of diseased cattle until there is some more definite understanding as to what remuneration will be given by the government for animals destroyed. I can quite understand the necessity of guarding against the possibility of extravagant values, &c., that would be imposed on the government if they opened the gate to any considerable extent. The value of animals would increase very rapidly if they were being paid for by the government. A case came to my notice a few days ago on which I would like to have some information. A farmer having a large herd of cattle called a sale and sold to bidders in different parts of the country. It turned out that the cattle were badly diseased with tuberculosis, they went into different neighbourhoods miles apart, into different herds. I know one man who found that the animals were diseased shortly after he purchased them. He called in an inspector, the animals were condemned and killed for tuberculosis. What recourse has that man against the man who sold the animals?

Mr. FISHER. I would not give a legal opinion.

Mr. BRODER. I will have to pay for my law. There is more of this disease in some localities than we are aware of, and I do not think we will get rid of it until we give the people more of an incentive to make it known that their animals have the disease. A farmer battling hard to make a living realizes that if it is known that he has tuberculosis among his cattle, his herd will be destroyed and he will be put out of business. As long as that condition exists, he will not be inclined to make known the fact that his animals are diseased, but if it was possible to arrange it so that the country would not be imposed on, it would be a good thing to grant compensation. If it cost the country two or three millions to get rid of the disease, it would be a wise expenditure.

Mr. FISHER. I do not think that compensation for dead animals would help to get rid of the disease.

Mr. BRODER. It would have some effect. I am aware that ventilation of stables, &c., all enter into this matter, but it seems to me that the other would be a more effective way.

Mr. BRADBURY. Make the farmer raise good cattle.

Mr. BRODER. You cannot make him do that any more than you can make him have good children. It is all very well for men to talk about things as they ought to be, but public men have to deal with things as they are.

Mr. BLAIN. How many inspectors has the minister in Toronto?

Mr. FISHER. Inspectors and assistants in Toronto, about 22 or 23.

Mr. BLAIN. Has the Minister in his department any information as to how the abattoir people pay the cattle dealer for his cattle?

Mr. FISHER. We have no records in the department.

Mr. BLAIN. Does not my hon. friend think that it would be a fair subject for investigation? There might be a tendency toward a monopoly. I have a letter from a constituent in which he states that the abattoir people in the city of Toronto always give a cheque in payment of cattle to the cattle dealer, with the reservation that these cattle must pass inspection, but that the cattle dealer does not give any such cheque to the farmer.

Mr. FISHER. I do not think a case of that kind is a matter for interference on the part of the department. I do not see how we could dictate to people making a bargain or trade arrangement as to what they should do. If there is a combine, then that would be a subject for investigation under the Combines Act. But I do not think it is the function of the Department of Agriculture to investigate a bargain which exists between a cattle drover and the abattoir company.

Mr. BLAIN. I agree with the minister that it would not be the duty of the government, if they found such a state of things, to take any steps to correct it. But I do say that the government could afford valuable information in discussing a question of this kind. If there is such an understanding with the abattoir people, then it removes the loss and responsibility from the abattoir people and places it either upon the farmer or upon the cattle dealer.

Mr. SEXSMITH. I realize that it is a difficult matter to adjust the loss and responsibility between the farmer and the drover. I do not mean to say that a farmer who sells a diseased animal should not lose that animal, he certainly should. But many farmers, such as the one I referred to a moment ago, put animals on the market perfectly satisfied that they are in a healthy condition. I am satisfied that this man I referred to, if he had the least suspicion that an animal was diseased, would never have offered it for sale, because he is a very large breeder, and has some of the best cattle in the province, and it would never pay him to put a diseased animal on the market. Yet the drover goes out into the country and buys 50 or 100 head of cattle and ships them to Montreal, and if he finds when he gets there that some of his animals are diseased, it is unfair to require him to suffer the entire loss. He cannot bring them back to the farmers, because he does not know which farmer sold the cattle. If the government orders those animals to be destroyed, I think they should make compensation in some way.

Mr. CROSBY. This Inspection Act has been on the statute-book for two or three years, and I heard the Minister of Agriculture say, in answer to my hon. friend from Peel (Mr. Blain) that he had twenty-one inspectors in the city of Toronto. I would like to know how many inspectors he has in the city of Halifax.

Mr. FISHER. I do not think we have any there. There are no establishments in Halifax which have asked for an inspection.

Mr. CROSBY. It is rather an odd thing that, in the city of Halifax, which is quite an exporting town, sending goods abroad from the province of Nova Scotia and also from Prince Edward Island which are sent to Halifax, that this Act has been on the statute-book for two or three years, and we have never had it enforced. We never had any intimation of an enforcement until about two months ago, when the collector of customs at Halifax got instructions not to permit any goods to be exported to any foreign country unless they had the government inspector's stamp on them. This is rather an odd thing to do, after the Act has been on the statute-book for two or three years. It seems to me it would have been up to the government to make some provision for carrying out that Act and to give the people reasonable notice of their intention, so that they might have their goods and canned meats ready for inspection and ready for export. Now we get an intimation from the collector of customs that no goods can be exported from the city of Halifax unless they have the government inspector's stamp, and the consequence is that our export trade is closed up. There is nothing to prevent them selling their goods to the people of Nova Scotia or of any other province; the government apparently does not care whether our native Canadians are killed off or not. But the very instant you start to sell to the West Indies or any other foreign country, that instant the government becomes anxious for the welfare of the foreigners, and proceeds to provide inspected food for them. Some application was made to the department, and a letter was written to the Minister of Agriculture to which he replied, and in his reply he was good enough to say that the junior member for Halifax did not know what he was talking about, and did not know what he was writing about, or he would have known that there was an Act on the statute-book for two or three years that demanded this inspection. Well, all I have to say is that if the government have put that Act on the statute-book and allowed it to be broken for two or three years, I would not like to tell what I think of their action, because the chairman might say I was out of order. But I think it is only fair to ask that those who have been sending goods to foreign markets for two years, should now be allowed at least two or three months in which to dispose of their present season's goods of cured meats and canned goods on hand, and be allowed to ship them to the markets they have hitherto been supplying without any complaint; and then let these provisions be made applicable to Nova Scotia. The collector of customs at Halifax is an excellent officer who has had much experience in the export trade, and I think the government might well have allowed him to exercise some discretion in this matter. I hope that the Minister of Agriculture will see his way, by some method that is reasonable and fair, to permit the export of these goods to go on for a month or two longer. I ask that especially in view of the fact that no complaint has ever been received from the foreign market of the goods supplied.

Another thing is that, as I understand, we have no inspector there. A gentleman in Halifax told me—I will not mention his name, as it is not necessary, and no doubt the Minister of Agriculture or some of his officers will know to whom I refer—that he wrote to the department to have an inspector appointed to inspect the abattoir in which he was killing animals, particularly lambs, and sheep, commencing with the month of May. He was told that he could have an inspector if he made an application; but, on making an application, he was told that he would have to give some guarantee of the quantity he would be prepared to export. I have not the correspondence here, but it could be got within a day or two. While this gentleman kills many cattle and sheep and is to some extent an exporter, a great deal of his product is sold to people in Halifax who are exporters. He frequently sends to other provinces also. I understand that meat of this class cannot be sold in the province of Ontario unless it has been inspected. I am not complaining of the inspection; the only complaint I make is that the people had not sufficient notice of the intention to enforce the Act. I think that, in all fairness, some opportunity should be afforded to our people to get rid of the goods they prepared at a time when it was not generally known that the law would be carried into effect. The collector of customs of Halifax is a man who has the confidence of the people, and I am sure he has the confidence of the government, and I would suggest that the matter be left in his hands in the meantime. It will be a great advantage to the city of Halifax, and to the province of Nova Scotia, and also, I believe, to the provinces of Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick as well.

Mr. FISHER. I do not wonder that the hon. member (Mr. Crosby) should be anxious about the matter to which he has referred. This Act is new to him, but no complaint can be made of him on that score. The facts he has mentioned, while in the main correct, are astray in some important points. In the first place, the Customs Department was notified of the coming into force of this Act, and the Customs Department, I believe, notified all its collectors. But the customs collector at Halifax does not appear to have taken any account of it, at any rate, no report of export was made to us until recently. We were obliged to draw the attention of the customs collector to the provisions of this Act, and intimate that the law must be enforced. This Act deals with exports, and interprovincial trade only. The people of Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island, and New Brunswick do as they like about selling animals, or meats within these provinces; that is a matter of provincial legislation and administration;—the subject has been discussed here to-day, though, I believe, my hon. friend (Mr. Crosby) was not present. To facilitate the work under the Act in the maritime provinces, and acting under power given by the law the maritime provinces were regarded as one province for the purposes of this meat inspection law. Consequently, sending from one of the maritime provinces to another would not be considered interprovincial trade under this Act. This was done at the request of the people there. A little while ago—I have forgotten the exact date—a certain firm in Halifax received some goods from Prince Edward Island which they wished to export to the West Indies. The customs collector said they could not export these goods without a certificate of inspection. These goods had not been inspected for the purpose of sending them from Prince Edward Island to Halifax. We are quite ready to inspect goods and to appoint an inspector in Halifax, or anywhere else where there are goods for export business. But the goods referred to in this case were not in condition for our officers to inspect them. We cannot inspect goods which are turned into bacon or packed in cans; inspection must take place not merely of the whole carcass together, but of the carcass with what are called the attachments, the heart, liver, lungs, &c. These goods were in Halifax ready for export and it was impossible for us to inspect them as required under the law. Whenever animals are being slaughtered for export, it is our duty to provide an inspector, and we have never failed to do so. The hon. member (Mr. Crosby) mentions the case of one gentleman in Halifax who asked for an inspector. We asked him whether his goods were for export or not. We have had a number of requests from local butchers to send inspectors, but it is not our duty to inspect for the local market. We asked that gentleman whether he was going to be exporting regularly, so that we would be justified in appointing an inspector for the purpose of inspecting his goods for export. We have not yet received that information. We did not ask for a guarantee. We did not ask for any statement of just how much he was exporting, although we had to ask to find out what his trade was expected to be. That was necessary before we could appoint an inspector because for all we knew the trade might be a local trade and we could not appoint an inspector to deal with that. That is the reason we delayed sending an inspector. When we get that information from that gentleman, and if he shows us that he is engaged legitimately in the export trade, we will provide an inspector at once. That explanation perhaps has given my hon. friend the information regarding the details of this matter, which, of course, speaking from memory, he could not be expected to have, but I can assure him that we are just as anxious to provide all facilities for inspecting in Halifax or anywhere else in the maritime provinces as we are in Ontario. If, to-day, there is no inspection in Halifax it is simply because we were not aware of the existence of packing houses or establishments packing for the export trade. We are ready to give an inspector and to inspect immediately they are doing that trade. But, it is impossible, after the animals have been slaughtered and the meat cut up and packed for us then to inspect it efficiently and be able to judge whether it is diseased or not. That is the reason why we could not give a certificate, for these goods for the purpose of export. That the collector of customs, estimable and competent for his work though he may be, would be able to examine these goods and give a certificate for export is quite out of the question. This can only be done by a properly qualified veterinary surgeon and the Act requires that the certificate shall only be signed by a properly qualified veterinary surgeon. Even though I thought it advisable the statute would forbid me to do it.

Mr. CROSBY. I may not know very much about this Act and I am very glad to have the information which the Minister of Agriculture has given me in regard to it, but I do know something about business. I must say that an Act which has been on the statute-book for upwards of two years and never put in force until within perhaps the last six or eight weeks would seem to me not to be an Act based on very good business principles. I would not consider it good business were I dealing with the affairs of the country, and I would say to the Minister of Agriculture, although he is always busy when he is being addressed by some one from the eastern part of Canada——

Mr. FISHER. I must protest; that is not a fair insinuation. I pay just as much attention to the people from the eastern part of Canada as I do to people from any other part, and if for the moment I was asking a question of my officer it was not because I was not listening to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. CROSBY. When I was addressing the committee a few minutes ago I noticed that the Minister of Agriculture and a gentleman near him were talking all the time.

Mr. FISHER. Because I was asking questions in regard to what the hon. gentleman was saying to inform myself so that I might answer him.

Mr. CROSBY. After the reference that the minister made to me, to the effect that what I said was of very little account, I would think that it would not be worth while to ask any questions of anybody in order to answer me. I confess I do not know much about the matter but I do know something about business. This Act does not strike me as being a very good one any way. An Act, which, while providing particularly for the inspection of all kinds of goods going out of Canada, makes no provision for the inspection of the goods at the time they should be exported, seems a very extraordinary Act. An Act that is on the statute-book for upwards of two years and is never put in force until the last three or four weeks does not seem to me to be an Act to which the government attach very much importance; otherwise, they would have put it in force long before this. That Act having been on the statute-book some three years and not having been put in force, surely the foreign customers of the Dominion would not have suffered very much by that same condition prevailing until the people interested had shipped the goods which they had prepared for export. There are two large concerns in Halifax putting up goods particularly for certain markets abroad. Their brand is asked for and their goods are accepted on the strength of this brand, sold in the markets in competition with goods from every part of the world, and I may add that they compare favourably with goods produced elsewhere. The people of the West India markets to which these goods are principally sent know the goods and they are willing to come to Halifax and buy them. But we cannot sell these goods because they have not government inspection and there is no way of getting government inspection. I quite understand that if you are to have an inspection of swine or cattle the animals must be inspected before they are killed. But there should be some way whereby the people putting up these preserved meats, hams, bacon, &c., should be permitted to ship these goods. When I referred to the collector of customs I did not suggest that he should be allowed to inspect the goods; it was a question of the collector of customs being able to distinguish between a creditable packer, a man who had a reputation of putting up high-class goods, and a stranger who might come in there and about whose goods he did not know anything. The collector of customs might be able to say of the goods of a well known packer: I know these goods, they have always met with commendation, they have been always well received in the foreign market and sold there on equal terms with goods from any other part of the world and therefore they might be allowed to be exported out of Canada without fear of any difficulty or trouble arising. That was my reason for referring to the collector of customs. The Minister of Agriculture states that the Act has been on the statute-book and that the collector at Halifax did not put it in force. All I have to say in regard to that is that the customs house at Halifax is a very important custom house and the collector is a very important man, perhaps second to none in the Dominion. I am quite sure that if he had been notified by the Department of Customs or the Department of Agriculture he would have carried out the instructions of the department, but not having been notified he did not know anything about this Act until about three or four weeks ago and therefore the Act has only recently been put into force. The Act, having been on the statute-book for two or three years and it not having been put in operation, surely this condition can be continued for a month or six weeks to give the mercantile community of Halifax, Nova Scotia and perhaps New Brunswick an opportunity of getting rid of the goods which they have put up for certain markets. These markets want them, their customers want them and are ready to take delivery in the city of Halifax and it is unfair that the government should prevent trade and commerce in this way.

Mr. MACDONELL. I would bring to the attention of the minister what is at least one inequality in the working out of this Act. It seems to me that the person who is really hurt by the operation of the Act has not yet been heard, because the man who loses the money as a result of the inspection of meat, is the packer, and I think I can safely say he is the only one who loses. Inspection takes place only with regard to meat for export, and it takes place in the abattoir, where the packing is done. The number of packers in Canada is comparatively few, but they have reasonably large establishments, and it is quite impossible for them to tell from whom they buy any particular lot of hogs or cattle. They certainly cannot identify from whom they purchase the hogs and generally speaking it is not reasonably possible to identify from whom the cattle are purchased. As these animals go through the various stages of slaughtering and packing the inspector stands there and condemns a whole carcass as tubercular, or he may only condemn parts of that carcass, and the meat so condemned is rejected, and its value lost to the packer. The packer has no guarantee or warrant, and he cannot look to the drover from whom he bought, so that he alone is the loser. I quite approve of a proper inspection of meat for export, so that our exports may be all of first-class quality, and in so much as that commodity is an advertisement for the trade of this country generally, it is not just that the packer should be the man who has to lose everything. It seems to me that the system of government compensation for slaughtered animals should in some way be extended so as to compensate the packer. His establishment is a clearing house for diseased animals, and as it is in his possession the meat is found when it is condemned, he is the loser. I am not altogether of the minister's opinion that this is not a matter for Dominion interference. Under section 95 of the British North America Act, the Dominion has concurrent jurisdiction with the provinces in all matters regarding agriculture, and, if the minister takes control to regulate the export trade under the authority of the trade and commerce provision of that Act, I do not see how he gets away from the responsibility of protecting the public against diseased animals, under the clause which gives the Dominion control over agriculture. Then again, if it be a misdemeanour to have diseased animals for sale in one's possession, it would come under the Criminal Code, which would give the Dominion jurisdiction. I hardly think the Dominion government can clear its skirts by saying that it has no authority to inspect meat for domestic consumption. Look at the conditions: a man is engaged in the business of slaughtering hogs, which he sends to all places within a certain province, and he is not subject to inspection, but his next door neighbour, who packs for export or interprovincial trade, must submit to a rigid inspection. The inequality is so glaring that I do think the government should take the matter into consideration, and, if possible, equalize the present conditions. The farmer is not hurt, because any diseased animals he disposes of he gets paid for.

Mr. A. W. SMITH. What about those he cannot dispose of?

Mr. MACDONELL. He would have to bear the loss, I suppose, in such a case. But, even where the government orders his animals to be destroyed, the farmer gets some substantial compensation.

Mr. A. W. SMITH. They do not get compensation in some cases.

Mr. MACDONELL. But that is the law.

Mr. FISHER. They get compensation if the slaughter of the animal is ordered by one of our inspectors.

Mr. McCOIG. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Macdonell) is mistaken as to compensation being paid for hogs. If the hogs are alive and they are condemned to be destroyed, the farmer gets compensation, but he does not get any compensation if the dead hog is rejected by the government inspector. In that case he has to stand the loss just the same as the packer.

Mr. MACDONELL. It is only in cases of packing for export that inspection takes place, and therefore it can only be in such case that rejection takes place.

Mr. McCOIG. The farmer gets some compensation when live hogs are condemned, but he gets no compensation when dressed hogs are condemned.

Mr. FISHER. The farmer may kill his hogs and send them dressed to the market, and if it is found that these dressed hogs were diseased the farmer would not get compensation any more than the packer.

Mr. MACDONELL. It is quite impossible to make an efficient inspection unless the inpsection takes place right when the animal is slaughtered. At all events, it seems to me the present condition is unfair to the packers, and the whole subject is one which should be properly considered. There is no question but that it is a matter which the Dominion might work out, possibly in co-operation with the provinces. But inspection for home consumption is not necessary, and it is a very invidious distinction that the people who consume our products in the foreign markets should be protected, and that Canadians should be left without protection. I may have eaten meat to-day which was not fit for food, but I am not in a position to know whether it was or not. Of course I escape that risk one day in the week, and as the Minister of Agriculture probably indulges in meat seven days in the week he probably may be taking a greater risk than I do. However, I think there should be inspection of meat for home consumption. That shows that the man who buys for export buys the best meat he can get. He buys, if possible, superior meat to that bought by the man who slaughters and sells locally. It is not desirable that this should be. If inspection is good for foreigners, to whom we sell our meat, surely it is good for our own people. The whole matter is one which I think should fully engage the attention of the government, with a view to devising some equitable law which might be worked out if necessary in co-operation with the provincial authorities.

Mr. STRATTON. I have listened to the discussion that has been going on for the last three hours upon this subject, and with many other hon. members I have come to the conclusion that the government should do something to meet a condition that is unfavourable, not only to the packer, but to the farmer as well. There is no doubt in my mind that if a proper inspection were made of all the meats in the packing houses, and if the government assumed a reasonable responsibility for the loss sustained by either the packer or the farmer they would be doing what the public expected them to do. I have no doubt that the minister is endeavouring to do the best he can under very difficult conditions, and I have been hoping that something would be arrived at to meet the conditions complained of by some hon. members to-day. I have felt, whether my judgment in the matter is right or not, that if there were a system of inspection and compensation, the packer would be able to pay to the farmer a better price for hogs or cattle than he is paying at the present time, although there is not much reason to complain of present prices. I have been in packing houses where I have been surprised at the large number of diseased animals that have had to be destroyed, and the meat of which has not been disposed of to the public for consumption, either for export or domestic use; and I have endeavoured to see whether it would not be possible to have these animals ear-marked, so to speak, so that it might be known from what drover or from what locality they came. While that might be possible, it would be very difficult. I hope that the Minister of Agriculture, who usually works out these problems in a satisfactory manner, will be able to devise some method by which the packers shall be properly compensated for diseased animals ear-marked, so to speak, and destroyed in the public interest. In this event the buyer would be in a position to offer better prices since he would be assuming no risk of having his profits decreased by the possible destruction of diseased meat.

Mr. McCOIG. I agree largely with what the hon. member for South Toronto (Mr. Macdonell) has said in regard to allowing compensation to packing concerns for diseased carcases or hogs or cattle; but the packing houses are not the only parties who should be considered in this matter. We have in the southwestern part of Ontario a large number of farmers who themselves go quite extensively into the dressing of hogs. These dressed hogs are inspected by the government inspectors at the different shipping stations, and when a hog is found by a government officer to be wholly diseased, it is sent back to the farmer who is shipping it or is destroyed on the spot, and the farmer suffers the entire loss, not the packer or the buyer. So that if the government are considering the advisability of compensating the drover or the packer they should not overlook the farmer. The hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Crosby) found fault with the government for allowing interprovincial trade between some of the provinces in meat that has not passed government inspection. I may say that we in Ontario would like to have accorded to us the treatment which the hon. gentleman is objecting to for his particular province, that is, allowing it to trade in uninspected meat with Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick, or some of the other provinces.

Mr. CROSBY. I did not say that we were allowed to do anything of the kind.

Mr. McCOIG. I understood the hon. gentleman to say that an interprovincial trade that was not subject to government inspection was allowed between some of the provinces.

Mr. FISHER. Between the three maritime provinces.

Mr. McCOIG. That is what I understood; and the very conditions which the hon. member for Halifax was finding fault with in this particular section of the country are the conditions which we would be glad to have in the province of Ontario, under which we could trade with the province of Quebec in our heavy carcases of dressed hogs without government inspection; and if the government continues to allow the maritime provinces the privilege in that respect which they are enjoying at the present time, I hope they will extend the same privilege to our province. If they do, I feel sure that their action will meet with general satisfaction. We do not ask for favours which other provinces are not getting; but if Nova Scotia is granted the privilege of sending its meat products without government inspection to other provinces, the producers and packing houses of the province of Ontario will be placed in an awkard position if they are not granted the same privilege. If the government consider the advisability of compensating packing houses for the loss of diseased carcases, I hope they will also take into consideration the advisability of compensating the producer, who at present very often is obliged to lose carcases of dressed hogs which are rejected by the government inspectors.

Mr. FISHER. What my hon. friend from South Toronto (Mr. Macdonell) has said about the packers was most vigorously denied this morning by the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. J. A. Currie) and the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain), who stated that the packers did not suffer the loss, but that the drovers did. That is a matter I know nothing of; it is a matter of private agreement between the packers and the drovers or between the drovers and the farmers. The different information given to this House this afternoon is a clear indication that we have not any decisive or accurate information to go upon. I want to say a word on the general question of compensation. If we once began to pay compensation for meat, not living animals, we would, as the hon. member for West Kent (Mr. McCoig) says, have to pay compensation for any animal that any one might find diseased—the farmer, the butcher or the packer. If we do that we may be perfectly certain that hundreds of animals will be killed, and dressed which the owners who killed and dressed them knew perfectly well were not fit for human food. We will have to pay hundreds and hundreds of thousands of dollars for animals, which before they were killed would be known to be unfit for human food. I would be glad to pay compensation wherever it seemed justified, but I again point out that when we were discussing the payment of compensation for animals killed I was warned by hon. gentlemen opposite, and by some on this side that there was great danger of a large expenditure of money with no particular advantage to the public, and that we must be very careful to safeguard the public against that kind of thing. I would not like to propose an amendment to the Act providing for compensation of this kind without having some shrewd suspicion of what the cost would amount to. When asking for authority to pay compensation for animals slaughtered on account of disease I was able to estimate the probable cost, and I am glad to say that experience has shown that the estimate was fairly accurate. Losses of this kind in the case of dead meat should be arranged by private bargain between the buyer and seller. If we took authority to pay compensation for dead meat we should logically pay for fruit, vegetables, &c., condemned, and the cost would undoubtedly reach half a million dollars which I am sure parliament would not endorse.

Mr. HERRON. I have had some requests along the line of the discussion this afternoon. I think it is strange that men who come under the operation of this Inspection Act should be the entire losers of animals condemned when it is done to protect the trade of Canada for beef, and hogs. I do not see why a man engaged in that line of business should be the entire loser. He is an innocent party just as the man who has live animals killed on account of disease. In that case you compensate to the extent of two-thirds the value of the live animals slaughtered to protect the public against disease, and there has been no complaint against the government compensating people who are unfortunate enough to own such animals. I do not see why you should not be prepared to compensate an innocent man for loss in the case of something that is done to protect the lives of people just as in the case of guarding against the spread of disease among live animals. The arguments in favour of compensation are even stronger. I think the country would be justified in paying the amount. I understand this question was laid before the Prime Minister, and the Minister of Agriculture last summer, and the government gave very favourable replies to those asking that such compensation should be provided for. As far as I am able to see, the minister is not making any provision for it in this Bill. It is also strange that wholesale dealers trading in, and slaughtering stock to be consumed by our own people are not brought under inspection to the same extent as men engaged in a larger business for export. One is as important as the other, and they should be treated alike. I would like to see the minister provide compensation for the man who suffers heavy loss in order that the trade of Canada may be protected, when he meets with this serious loss in an innocent way.

Mr. CROSBY. I did not rise to oppose the Act, but to try if possible to secure the removal of an interruption of trade brought about by certain conditions. My hon. friend from West Kent (Mr. McCoig) evidently misunderstood me. I did not state that we have an interprovincial trade. We may have, and I understand from the minister that we have, but the province of Prince Edward Island sometimes sells products to merchants in Halifax or may send them there for export. On that we have no complaint. The complaint I made if any was that the products of the slaughter house or meat preserving factory or canning factory were permitted to be sold to the local dealers, and those living in the province even if they were not fit for export. The minister says that the province ought to attend to that. The contention of the hon. member for South Toronto (Mr. A. C. Macdonell) is that if the power lies not with the Dominion government, but with the provincial government, and the provincial government does not make provision, it must reasonably fall to the Dominion government if there be an Act for food inspection to put it into operation wherever there does not seem to be a local Act in force or else to ask the local government or authority to bring in such an Act. I am not contending about that, my contention is simply that we had an interruption of trade and commerce. The most beneficial trade is the export trade, and it should be properly guarded. My hon. friend will say that is why he has brought in this Act. Perhaps that is a good reason for having the Act. But here we have a trade and commerce that has been going on for many years, and the suspension of that trade might be delayed for two or three weeks in order to allow men in the export trade to have an opportunity to ship goods they have on hand. The people of the West Indies are ready to take these goods, and to pay for them. I would like it distinctly understood that I am not complaining of the Act. It is all right to have the Act in force, and we do not ask for any treatment different from that given to everybody else. But, when there has been a delay in the enforcement of the law, apparently through somebody's neglect—not that I am trying to cast blame on anybody—I think it is only fair to allow those concerned a short time to adapt themselves to the new conditions under the law.

Mr. HENDERSON. Does not the minister intend to strike out the word 'goats' in this section? He might as well include dogs.

Mr. FISHER. We know that goats are slaughtered, and, if a goat carcass should happen to come before us, with this word in the law, we could deal with it.

Mr. HENDERSON. It is generally rumoured that dogs are slaughtered.

Mr. FISHER. I do not believe that they are slaughtered for food purposes.

Mr. SPROULE. Does the minister intend to make clearer the definition of the word 'farmer'?

Mr. FISHER. If my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) would suggest a change, I will be glad to consider it. The clause was drafted by the law clerk and is supposed to be as good a definition as we can make.

Mr. SPROULE. Take the case of the hon. member for South York (Mr. W. F. Maclean). He is a journalist to all intents and purposes, yet carrying on farming quite extensively, breeding, growing and fattening animals. But farming is not his recognized occupation. Would he come under this definition?

Mr. FISHER. The hon. member (Mr. W. F. Maclean) is recognized as a journalist, but recognized also as a farmer. I am glad to say that farming is an occupation so attractive that many engage in it with their other occupations. But such people, I think, are recognized as farmers. There are many members of this House who are engaged in other occupations, who yet claim the right to be considered farmers.

Mr. SPROULE. It speaks of 'his recognized occupation.' Can a man have two recognized occupations at the same time under the law?

Mr. FISHER. I think so.

Mr. SPROULE. I should feel surer of it if some eminent lawyer in the House endorsed that opinion.

Mr. FISHER. It is quite a common thing in legal documents to have a man described of two occupations. I recall the case of a man being described as a 'farmer and mill-owner.'

Mr. HENDERSON. If this man should slaughter hogs, what would be his occupation?

Mr. FISHER. He is a farmer.

Mr. HENDERSON. I am afraid that is one of these things we will have to let go; I do not think we will get anything that will exactly fill the bill.

On section 3,

Mr. FISHER. This provides for the striking out of certain words in the existing law. The words to be struck out are 'animals slaughtered by retail butchers on their own premises.' This is a section which allows farmers to slaughter without an inspection. At first it was supposed that retail butchers might be included, but we have found that retail butchers have been entering into the wholesale trade while free from the provisions of the Act, and it is necessary that they should no longer have the privilege which was intended originally for farmers only. The striking out of these words will prevent retail butchers from exporting from one province to another without inspection.

Mr. HENDERSON. The minister, I understand, has a law clerk in connection with his department, or some person to draft a Bill?

Mr. FISHER. We have left that to the Justice Department or to the law clerk of the House.

Mr. HENDERSON. It would not have been much trouble to draft a new Bill and repeal the old one. If that were done, the Act would appear in the statute-book in a form intelligible to every farmer, butcher or any one else. I think this is the most miserable way of putting through legislation. I am sure the minister will see the propriety of what I say. After you have found what this Act says, you have to hunt up another statute. Then, you have to put the two together and patch them up, so that it will take almost a day to learn what might be learned in two minutes. It would be very little trouble to repeal the old Act and enact a new one, for the law is not a long one. I am sure it would be much more acceptable to the people.

Mr. FISHER. If that were the general practice of the House, I should be glad to follow it. But the custom is where the amendments are not long or important, to do the work in this way. The amendments in this case are almost wholly minor amendments. I think the one we have under discussion is the only one that affects any class of people directly; the others merely have the effect of making the administration of the law more easy.

Mr. HENDERSON. But does the minister himself think that my plan would be better? The people in the country may not have the statutes. They send down here and ask the King's Printer for a copy of the Act, and instead of getting one they get two. Why do not the Department of Justice, and the law clerk of the House of Commons get together and once for all accomplish the whole thing? If it is not the usual practice, I think the minister could inaugurate a new system.

Mr. FISHER. I will consult with the Justice Department about it.

Mr. BLAIN. Could the minister tell me what proportion of the cattle that are exported from Canada are inspected?

Mr. FISHER. All live cattle that go across the water are inspected.

Mr. BLAIN. Why not those going to the United States?

Mr. FISHER. The trade in live cattle to Great Britain is so much more important, and the British authorities are so particular about the landing of animals there we have to see that no animal affected in the slightest degree with disease is sent across the water. Unless we did that we might be shut out from their market.

Mr. BLAIN. At what points are export cattle inspected?

Mr. FISHER. At different places, but they are finally inspected when they go on board ship. Those that go by United States ports from Canada to Great Britain are inspected in Canada.

Mr. BLAIN. Are we then to understand that it is impossible for an exporter to send cattle from Canada to the old country without a rigid inspection?

Mr. FISHER. Quite so.

On section 12,

Mr. FISHER. This section is practically the same as in the old Act, but it gives the authorities access to the books and bills of lading of the firm, so as to be able to check their exports, and to see that everything they send out of their establishment has been inspected in accordance with the law.

On section 13,

Mr. SPROULE. I would suggest as the interpretation of the word 'farmer', a person whose recognized occupation is farming, because he might be engaged in more than one occupation.

Mr. FISHER. The intention of this clause is to prevent men who are dealers having the advantage of it. A dealer might have a little piece of ground and pretend to be a farmer. But still I would not think there was very much objection to the suggestion of my hon. friend.

Mr. SPROULE. It would be a rare thing for a man to occupy a small piece of ground and palm himself off as a farmer if in reality he was not doing the general work of a farmer in all lines. But, if a man is doing the usual work in all lines of a farmer he is entitled to be considered as a farmer.

Mr. FISHER. I would not like to change it without consulting the law officers.

Mr. SPROULE. Could it not be left an open question while the minister consulted the law officers?

Mr. FISHER. The Bill might go out of committee and on the third reading the amendment could be introduced.

Mr. SPROULE. That would be all right.

On the preamble,

Mr. LEWIS. I see that this Bill refers to canned goods. I have here a number of labels with reference to canned articles which are, to a certain extent, deceiving the public. I do not wish to present these labels to the House because there are a great many others probably of the same character, and it might affect individual firms who may be actually within the law. But I would ask the minister if he could not see his way clear, while this Bill is under consideration, to add something in reference to this matter. I have here a label which says: 'Unfermented native wine'. This is a label placed on goods which are being sold by a firm in Toronto and elsewhere for medicinal purposes. One would judge that the ingredients are the produce of the grape, but this is not so. Here is another: 'Fine domestic port.' You would infer from that that this was manufactured from the juice of the grape for medicinal purposes. I merely suggest to the minister that something should be done to cover this point, and I would ask if he could not do it in connection with this Bill. I would suggest that any article which is canned or bottled must bear a label declaring whether it is a mixture or a pure product, or whether, as in the case of these wines, it is from the grape or otherwise. Large quantities of these mixtures are being bought for use by the sick, I believe, under the impression they are juice of the grape. I would also propose that the label on canned articles should bear the date of their manufacture. The label should specify exactly what is contained in the can, and the date at which the goods were canned, so that the inspector would be able to form some idea as to the age of the goods.

Mr. FISHER. Goods such as my hon. friend describes do not come under this Act at all. They would come under the Adulteration of Foods Act, which is under the administration of the Inland Revenue Department. I think that any such statement as that which my hon. friend has read from those labels would render the parties responsible for them liable to attack under the Adulteration of Foods Act, on the ground of misrepresentation. However, I would not like to give a legal opinion.

Mr. LEWIS. My remarks as to the age of canned articles would apply to this Act, would they not?

Mr. FISHER. The question as to requiring the date to be placed on canned goods was discussed for a long time upon the introduction of this Bill and parliament decided against requiring it to be put on the cans.

Mr. SPROULE. Speaking earlier on this question I suggested to the minister the wisdom of making some amendment to the law or some provision with regard to labelling meats in cold storage and putting upon them the date on which they were placed in the cold storage. Has the minister considered that question? It seems that this is a very proper place to bring it in if he desires to do so. The information which we have justifies action by the government or parliament with reference to this very question. It is an evil that is perhaps much greater in its proportions than we are aware of, but what has been brought to our notice justifies some provision of law to compel the stamping of the date on the goods at which meats were put in cold storage, and also a provision as to the length of time it was held in cold storage before being disposed of.

Mr. FISHER. I do not think that at the present time we have sufficient information to go upon to enable us to introduce any such legislation. I see a great deal of that subject in the press and I know that it is attracting a great deal of attention. But, I am prepared at the present moment to express a very positive opinion upon it. I have always understood that some goods in cold storage might deteriorate while other goods might not. If some goods were kept in cold storage for a few months they might be unfit for human food while in another case they might be there for a year and be perfectly good. I do not know enough about it to express an opinion or to undertake to draft any legislation upon the subject. Whether such legislation ought to come in connection with this Bill or not I am not certain. It is of another character and yet perhaps it might come within the purview of such an Act as this. It is a large subject and I have not come to any conclusion upon it.

Mr. SPROULE. Is the subject not of sufficient importance to justify the minister in making careful inquiry in regard to it, because the allegations are so specific that if they be true there is no doubt that it is one in which this parliament should act. Take, for instance, the statement in regard to the length of time that carcases have been held in cold storage; 2,000 carcases were held in cold storage in Montreal for two years. That is a specific statement which is capable of being verified or disproved.

Mr. FISHER. I do not think that it is accompanied by the allegation that these carcases are unfit for use. They may be, or they may not be; I do not know.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not say that it is, but I say as a medical man, that unless the temperature was kept absolutely below a given point and not allowed to go up and down, as it very frequently does in cold storage places, that article would be unfit for food after a given time.

Mr. FISHER. I think so.

Mr. SPROULE. But even though the quality of the article might not have been deteriorated to any extent, does the minister not think that the very fact that it is kept in cold storage for that length of time, during which foods are very dear and the public is prevented from using it and that it could only be held for one purpose and that is for the purpose of trying to control the market, would justify the passing of some law to prevent that being done? Would the minister not think that that would be of sufficient importance to justify him in making some law to control that and to say that goods shall not be kept in cold storage beyond a reasonable time before being sold?

Mr. FISHER. There are two points which my hon. friend has brought up and which are entirely different. One is as to whether food is fit for human consumption after a certain time. That is a question of public health and perhaps might come under an Act such as this. The other is a question of affecting the market price. That is entirely apart from the question of whether food is fit for human consumption and that certainly would not come under an Act in regard to the inspection of food. It is another question whether such legislation ought to be passed.

Mr. SPROULE. The inspection of food for export is for the benefit of our trade generally. If food is kept in cold storage for a few years and is then exported, has the minister any guarantee that the food is perfectly wholesome? The minister has a perfect right to deal with that class of exports.

Mr. FISHER. On the question of quality, yes.

Mr. SPROULE. And as one object of cold storage is to enhance prices, could the minister not get at that practice under the law which deals with restraint of trade and unduly enhancing prices?

Mr. FISHER. Possibly, but that has nothing to do with this Act.

Mr. SPROULE. To my mind this is the proper place to put in a clause dealing with the abuses which exist in reference to cold storage.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

GOVERNMENT ANNUITIES.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING moved the second reading of Bill (No 155) to amend the Government Annuities Act, 1908.

Mr. SPROULE. Explain.

Mr. FIELDING. This Bill has been carried through the Senate by the Minister of Trade and Commerce, and is designed to provide some improvements in the Government Annuities Act which have been found to be necessary. The amendments are not very important, but they will help to make the system work more simply. One change is the provision that one may buy an annuity, not merely for himself, but for another. The law now provides that the purchaser of an annuity may contract for an annuity to himself, but it is desired that he may have the privilege to buy an annuity for another person. For example, a missionary society may desire to make provision for an annuity to a missionary, and there are many other cases of that character. Another amendment provides that a contract may be made for a fixed period; you not only make an arrangement for an annuity to a man during his lifetime, but you may make an arrangement that that annuity may be paid to some one for a fixed period, and if the annuitant dies in the meantime, the annuity may be continued to some other person designated by him. Another provision is with reference to annuitants far advanced in life. At present, an annuity may be granted to a person above 80 years of age, but if he were 85 years old he would pay the same amount as the man 80 years old, whereas the former, of course, should get the cheaper rate. There is a provision in the existing law that the husband may convert a portion of his annuity for the benefit of his wife, and this amendment proposes that the wife shall have the same privilege of converting part of her annuity for the benefit of her husband.

Mr. BLAIN. What amount is in force?

Mr. FIELDING. The number of annuitants outstanding is 644, of which 374 are males and 270 females. The purchase money received to date is $483,359.44; the amount of the annuities represented by this payment is $160.500, and the average annuity $250.

Mr. BLAIN. Can you give that information by provinces?

Mr. FIELDING. A statement to that effect could be prepared. Applications have come from every province in the Dominion, and from the Yukon.

Mr. BLAIN. How many men are out soliciting annuities?

Mr. FIELDING. There are four men and one lady in Ontario, one in New Brunswick, one in Nova Scotia, two in Quebec, in all, 9 agents.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

On section 1,

Mr. SPROULE. I understand that annuities may be obtained through postmasters, but have you recognized agents who are paid a commission for soliciting annuitants?

Mr. FIELDING. The agents are all paid salaries and travelling expenses, but the postmasters and other officials who send in business are paid a commission at the rate of one-third of one per cent on the amount of money which they collect or receive.

Mr. HENDERSON. What officers are employed by the government at headquarters for managing this branch of the service?

Mr. FIELDING. There is a return already before the House giving information in every detail. In the office at Ottawa there are twelve clerks.

Mr. HENDERSON. What is about the gross expense here?

Mr. FIELDING. From $12,000 to $15,000 is the expense of the salaries at Ottawa.

On section 2—purchaser defined,

Mr. FIELDING. The purpose of this is to enable a purchaser to provide an annuity not merely for himself, but for another person, as a father for a child. This broadens the definition of purchaser so as to cover that point.

Mr. BLAIN. How will this affect those who have already taken out annuities?

Mr. FIELDING. There have been several contracts made that would come within the amendments, and section 9 makes this Act apply to annuities entered into prior to the passing of this Act.

On section 3—sale of annuities authorized,

Mr. FIELDING. This is a re-enactment of the section. It is so worded as to make it clear that an annuity may be granted not merely for the life time of the annuitant, but for a definite period, so that the annuitant, in anticipation of death, might arrange that the annuity should pass to some other person for the term of the annuity.

Mr. BLAIN. Will a person now having an annuity under the original Act have a right to convert it under the proposed amendment?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, if he deems it desirable.

On section 4—payments by purchaser,

Mr. FIELDING. This refers to contracts made by employers for the benefit of those in their service. The clause as it formerly stood rather restricted their freedom of contract. This broadens the arrangement and enables the employer to make any contract respecting an annuity which is satisfactory to himself and the person concerned.

On section 9, application of the Act.

Mr. BLAIN. I understand there is no medical examination required in selling annuities.

Mr. FIELDING. No.

Mr. SPROULE. There is no examination of the physical or mental condition of the individual.

Mr. FIELDING. I am told that there is no medical examination for annuities. It is not thought necessary. Of course, if the annuitant is not in good health and dies at an early period, he and his estate are the sufferers.

Mr. SPROULE. But you have provision that in some cases after his death the annuity may go to some one else?

Mr. HENDERSON.

Mr. FIELDING. For a limited period. In regard to life insurance, medical examination is important, but in annuities, a medical examination is not deemed necessary.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

CONSERVATION OF NATURAL RESOURCES.

Mr. FISHER moved the second reading of Bill (No. 185) respecting the Commission for the Conservation of Natural Resources. He said: Only one or two small changes are proposed. One is to allow the annual meeting to be held in a different place than Ottawa. Another is that the chairman of a committee can summon a meeting of such committee at any time, and that when a committee is summoned members of the committee attending its meetings may have their disbursements paid as in the case of the annual meetings. Another provision is to make mail matter addressed to the commission free of Canada postage.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I would ask the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) whether he has taken into consideration the clauses that I suggested should be added to this measure.

Mr. FISHER. I read carefully the amendments proposed by the hon. member (Mr. Armstrong). I have thought that something of the kind he suggests might be quite proper, but I fear that amendments as proposed by the hon. gentleman would have the practical effect of making such a commission as this impossible. His proposals are so drastic that I am sure nobody would accept a position on the commission to be hampered in his private business in the way these amendments would make inevitable. It is well worthy of consideration whether some such amendments might not be properly adopted, but I confess that I have not had time or opportunity—nor has the chairman of the commission—to draw up amendments that would be proper, and feasible, and practicable. I am not prepared to give a legal opinion concerning the amendments proposed, but I am under the impression that, if they were passed, no member of the commission could hold stock in a mine; I doubt if any could hold stock in a railway company. I fear that the amendments proposed are of such a character as to be entirely unworkable.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I am afraid the Minister of Agriculture has not investigated the matter or he would have found the opposite of what he has stated. Of the amendments I have suggested to this Bill, one is taken from clause 14 of the Geological Survey Act—which seems to be a workable Act—and the other from clause 376 of the Railway Act. These clauses are practically embodied in the amendments I have suggested. When the minister says they would have the effect of prohibiting a member of the commission from undertaking any work of his own, I do not see that anything of that kind is indicated. The position is simply this: At present, the door is wide open so far as these commissioners are concerned. The commissioners can expend any quantity of public money in developing certain resources of this country, investigating mines or timber tracts, and they can then make these their own practically, and without any one to forbid them. But if the amendments I propose were embodied in this measure, there would be no further trouble in that regard. I sincerely hope that the minister will see the wisdom of the position taken in regard to this matter, and will embody these provisions in the Bill.

Mr. SIFTON. The question which my hon. friend (Mr. Armstrong) has brought before the House is undoubtedly an important one. If the commission of conservation is to serve a useful purpose for the people of Canada, the law relating to it must be of such a character as will give both Houses of parliament, and the people generally full confidence that the commission will not be made use of for any improper purpose. The idea which apparently runs through the Act constituting the commission, and which must be taken to express the mind of parliament upon the subject, was that men of affairs should be induced to act upon this commission gratuitously, and give the benefit of their judgment, and experience in the public interest. Every one will admit that the usefulness of the commission would be gone at once if there was the slightest suspicion, or could be the slightest suspicion, that any information which was gained or collected by the commission would be used, or is likely to be used, for any private purposes. But, let me point out to my hon. friend that the provisions of the laws which he has incorporated in his Bill are provisions which relate to branches of the Civil Service, they govern the employment of men who are technical employees of the government, who are paid a salary by the government which compensates them for their whole time, and the condition of their entering the services of the government in these classes of work is that no other business or calling shall be followed, and therefore, it is an easy matter to provide that these employees shall not make use of information to make investments which information has been secured in the course of their official employment. But the members of the commission of conservation are not civil servants or salaried employees of the government; they are business men, a considerable number of whom are engaged in affairs in a large way, and to whom the application of such a rule would be absolutely impossible. Let me give an illustration. Senator W. C. Edwards is chairman of the committee on forestry, and is giving a considerable portion of time to the work of the commission. He is recognized by everybody as an able, and experienced business man, a man very well qualified to do what he is doing, and to render valuable public service, a man, moreover, whose time is extremely valuable, and who if he gives his time to the public service does so at a very considerable financial sacrifice. Senator Edwards is a lumberman. If I read the hon. member's (Mr. Armstrong's) amendment aright, Senator Edwards could not buy another timber limit, and remain a member of the commission.

The hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Osler) is chairman of the Committee on Public Health. He has been giving a good deal of careful consideration to the important branch of the work which he has undertaken to supervise. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Osler) is a director of the Canadian Pacific railway, and I think, a large stockholder. The Canadian Pacific railway deals in natural resources—mines water-powers, and so on—on a very extensive scale. I doubt that Mr. Osler could buy another share of Canadian Pacific railway stock without making himself liable under the provisions of the Act. My hon. friend must remember that provisions of this kind, drawn in general terms, are very far-reaching. There is no difference of opinion between the hon. member (Mr. Armstrong) and the minister in charge of the Bill, or myself, or, I imagine, any member of the commission. What we would desire, and I think what we would insist on, will be that the law must be in a condition that is satisfactory to parliament. I would not, speaking for myself, remain in the position of chairman of the commission for a minute if I thought that the sentiment of parliament on the other side of the House was that the law was not in a perfectly satisfactory condition, or that the House generally was not satisfied with the condition of the law. Certainly, I do not think the members of the commission would hold their offices under a statute which was forced through by a government majority against the wishes of the members of the opposition. That would be entirely contrary to the spirit in which the commission is organized, and in which, so far, it has been, very happily, carried on.

I would make a suggestion to my hon. friend the minister. I am speaking as a lawyer who has had some experience in drawing statutes of various kinds, and I think you will find it very difficult to draw a provision which, when thoroughly considered, will prove to be satisfactory in regard to a matter of this kind. It will take a good deal of time and discussion, and I would suggest to my hon. friend that he, and perhaps the leader of the opposition, and the minister who has charge of the Bill, and myself, with perhaps one or two members of the commission, should get together and discuss the matter, and see if we can work out a provision which will be satisfactory; omit it can be fully and carefully considered, and brought in at the next session of parliament, and made a portion of the law. I do not think that the object can be attained without very careful consideration. I do not think that my hon. friend (Mr. Armstrong) himself, would like to enforce an amendment which would have the effect of making the members of the commission feel that it was not safe for them to continue their ordinary business. In such a case as that they would simply resign from the commission, and a work which has been happily commenced, and with an augury of a considerable amount of good to the public, would be practically destroyed.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I wish to say distinctly I had no other object in view in bringing forward this measure than to promote the public welfare. I would like the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton) be good enough to tell us whether he thinks that the present measure safeguards the people's interest sufficiently, and what suggestions he would make.

Mr. SIFTON. I do not know exactly what my hon. friend means. There is no provision in the Act as it stands at present which in any way relates to what the members of the commission may do or may not do. They are appointed as a non-salaried body for the purpose of doing an important public work. There are two ways of dealing with them. One way is for the House to put them on their honour and not make any legal provision at all; the other way is to make some provision of law which shall act as a deterrent to any person who might be disposed to do that which is contrary to the public interest. It will be for the House to decide which method they desire to follow. I would not say that the public interest is not protected simply because there is nothing in the statute which prevents the members of the commission from making use of their public position for their private ends.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. I asked the Minister of Agriculture the other day if he would tell the House under what circumstances and in what way communications could be interchanged with, or advice obtained from, this commission in regard to Bills that came before any committees of this House involving the great natural resources of the country; and the minister thought he would be in a position to do something when this measure came up. For instance, in the Railway Committee on several occasions the waterways question has come up, and we did not know in what way to proceed in order to get the advice of this commission. I think some system ought to be arranged whereby that can be done.

Mr. FISHER. Of course this commission is a new thing, and the scope of its work, while fairly defined in the Bill, is still subject to practical experience. I understand that on one or two occasions during this session committees have asked for information or advice from the commission. I do not suppose that we would want to restrict the committees of the House from doing anything which they thought in the public interest. I can understand that it would be advisable, before the course of action proceeds much further, if it is going to be proceeded with at all, that some general line of action should be laid down. Just what that line of action should be I am not prepared to say. Perhaps it would be well for the committee of the House who strike all the committees, to consult with the executive committee of the commission, or the chairmen of the different committees of the House to consult with the chairman of the commission, and thus gradually to work out a scheme by means of which communications may pass between either House and the committees of the House, and the commission. I can understand that in the working out of a thing of this kind action may be taken by one body a little different from action taken by another body; one committee of the House may proceed in one way and another committee in another way, and this is an additional proof of the necessity of taking steps to see that a general line of procedure is laid down. I think before the next session of parliament something of the kind ought to be done, or at any rate, in the early days of next session, if the consensus of opinion in the House is that the commission should be consulted, that there should be established some means of communication between the House and the commission.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. What we want is that committees of the House may have access to the advice of the commission, and to the statistics and information which the commission have collected.

Mr. SPROULE. I think one of the defects of the commission Bill is that they must report to the Governor in Council. It is true that they are appointed under statute, but I never could see the reason why they should not make their report to parliament instead of to the Governor in Council, and then every member of parliament would have an opportunity of perusing their report. It may be presented to the Governor in Council, and I think there is some provision that it is to be laid before the House, but I am not sure. I think it ought to be presented to parliament, and then the Governor in Council might be the intermediary between committees of the House and this commission. When we were dealing with a Bill last night, I asked the question whether this committee had considered it, and what report they had made on it, and I was told by the Minister of Public Works that they had it under consideration. But I got no information as to how long it had been under consideration, or what their views on it were. That leaves the commission practically worthless to parliament.

Mr. FISHER. Their report has to be laid on the table of parliament immediately it is made.

Mr. SIFTON. The idea of my hon. friend is perfectly correct, that is to say, the idea that the commission is not a portion of the administrative machinery of the government, or a political body, but it is directly, or indirectly responsible to the House as a non-partisan body. There must be some way of getting their report before the House of Commons, and under our system of government there is no other way except for them to present their report to the Governor in Council, and he to transmit it to parliament unless it should be done through Mr. Speaker. My hon. friend will see that the section in the original Bill is that the commission should make its report to the Governor in Council at the end of the fiscal year, and the Governor in Council should lay it before parliament. There is no other way in which it can be got before parliament. The method of sending it to the Governor General in Council, and having it transmitted to parliament, seems the most convenient one.

Mr. SPROULE. Is there not a department which is the intermediary between the House and the commission?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. Then could the report not be made to the department and laid before parliament, instead of being made to the Governor in Council? The defect in it, to my mind, is that what might be given to the Governor General in Council might not be available for parliament. Section 13 provides that:

The commission shall make its report to the Governor General in Council at the end of each fiscal year, and such report shall be printed and laid before both Houses of parliament.

But we have current work going on, Bills before the Railway and Private Bills Committees, and there questions relating to the work of the commission, regarding which we desire to get the views of the commission who are clothed with authority to look into these questions at any time, and give the Governor in Council, or parliament the benefit of their knowledge, or inquiry. Between one session and another, all that work may be done, but parliament cannot avail itself of the benefits of that work for the current labours that are going on during the session until the end of the year, or until the beginning of the next session when the information is practically out of date as far as its requirements go, and when it is not likely to turn back and make a beneficial use of it.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, and House went into committe on the Bill.

On section 1, short title,

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Before proceeding with the measure, I would like to know whether it is not possible to have these clauses placed in the Bill. I have gone to a great deal of trouble over this matter; I made a thorough investigation from a lawyer's standpoint. I am satisfied that the clauses are reasonable, and I have no thought of objecting to the position taken by the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton) in particular any further than that he cannot give us any good reason why they should not be placed in the Bill. The clauses read as follows:

14. No member of the commission or persons appointed as secretary or as officers or clerks under him, or person employed as an assistant for the purpose of any special work or investigation, shall, while a member of the commission or appointed or employed as aforesaid—

(a) Purchase, lease, acquire or obtain, on royalty or otherwise, any Dominion or provincial franchises, fishery rights, water-powers, water privileges, lands, mines, mineral lands or timber limits, or in any way contract therefor or acquire any interest therein, either for himself or as agent for any other person or corporation.

While this might appear to interfere to some extent with the members of the commission, yet I can readily say to the hon. member for Brandon that as far as interfering with the member for West Toronto (Mr. Osler) is concerned, if he will refer to clause 376 of the Railway Act he will find these words:

Every railway director of a railway company who knowingly permits the funds of any such company to be applied either directly or indirectly in the purchase of its own stock, or in the acquisition of any shares, bonds or other securities issued by any other railway company in Canada, or in the purchase or acquisition of any interest in any such stock, shares, bonds or other securities, contrary to the provisions of this Act, shall incur a penalty of one thousand dollars for each such violation.

The penalty in the Bill that I suggested reads as follows:

Every person guilty of any violation of any provision in section 14 of this Act shall forfeit to His Majesty all property or interest so acquired or obtained, and shall also incur a penalty of $1,000 for each such violation.

Largely the same wording as that which appears in clause 376 of the Railway Act, while the first clause I read compares with clause 14 of the Geological Survey Act, which is as follows:

No person employed in or under the department shall—
(a) Purchase any Dominion or provincial lands except under authority of the Governor in Council.
(b) Locate military or bounty land warrants, or land scrip, or act as agent of any other person in such behalf.

If I read that aright, it includes the minister who has charge of the department, and if it includes the minister, why not include the members of the Conservation Commission? It further reads:

(c) Disclose to any person, except his superior officer, any discovery made by him or by any other officer of the department, or any other information in his possession in relation to matters under the control of the department or in relation to Dominion or provincial lands, until such discovery or information has been reported to the minister, and his permission for such disclosure has been obtained.
(d) Make investigations or reports relating to the value of the property of individuals, or hold any pecuniary interest, direct or indirect, in any mine, mineral lands, mining works or timber limits in Canada.

The hon. member for Brandon said that these are largely officials in the Geological Survey of Canada, but the hon. member for Brandon, as chairman of the commission, will employ a large number of officials, and as this Act only permits them to be employed for a short space of time, they are more likely to dispose of the information that they obtain for an amount of money than are the members of the Geological Survey, who are in the employ of the government. I am satisfied that if the Minister of Agriculture will take this into consideration he will readily see that there should be some clause which will at least control the men who are employed by this commission. At the present time members of the commission can have any amount of money expended in investigating water-powers, mineral lands, or woodlands, and they can make these properties their own after having taken the people's money to thoroughly investigate them. Officers employed by this commission can do likewise. They can make discoveries and dispose of these discoveries, and there is no law to prevent them from acting in that way. A member of this commission has a great advantage over the ordinary citizen. I am not reflecting on any member of this commission; far from it, because a great many members of the commission are personal friends of my own, but I do think that they would be only too glad to have some such clause as the one that I have referred to in the Act, so that there would be a guarantee that as far as the members of the commission and those employed by the commission were concerned, such proceedings as those which I have referred to would be impossible. I, therefore, trust that the minister will see his way to embody in the Bill the clauses which I have brought to his attention.

Mr. SIFTON. The most important clause in my hon. friend's amendment is subsection (a), the effect of which is to prohibit any member of the commission, or any person appointed by the commission, from engaging in the:

(a) Purchase, lease, acquire or obtain, on royalty or otherwise, any Dominion or provincial franchises, fishery rights, water-powers, water privileges, lands, mines, mineral lands or timber limits, or in any way contract therefor or acquire any interest therein, either for himself or as agent for any other person or corporation.

I think that it is very possible, looking at it from a legal point of view, if that were passed that as a member of that commission I would not be safe in buying a share of Canadian Pacific railway stock. The Canadian Pacific railway traffics in public franchises dealing with a number of these things, and my own judgment is that by buying that stock I would be acquiring an interest in it. Another member of the commission is a director of the Canadian Pacific railway and a very large shareholder, and possibly deals in the stock of the company, and he would be debarred. Senator Edwards is a large lumber man and he buys timber limits, and he would be shut out from the commission. If the hon. gentleman is desirous to put the law in such a way that men of affairs who are doing business extensively cannot be members of the commission, it is for parliament to say whether that shall be so or not. For myself, as chairman of the commission, I do not think this is a matter I should be called upon to discuss, and I do not intend to discuss it in the sense of expressing my opinion as to what parliament ought to do. I simply point out to my hon. friend the effect his legislation would have upon the commission at the present time. If parliament thinks that they cannot trust the commission as it stands, upon its honour, or that the law should be such as would prevent men of the standing to whom I have referred, continuing membership on the commission, it is for parliament to say. It is not for us as members of the commission in this House to discuss what should be done. When you decide what you will do, then it will be for us to decide what we will do.

Mr. SPROULE. This commission must necessarily employ a number of officials who will visit remote localities and gather data regarding timber limits, water-powers, mines and other resources. These employees seem to be under no restraint so far as the law is concerned, and they may at any time sell in advance the information they acquire without fear of punishment, unless there be something in the Civil Service Act which would provide for that. The employees of this branch of the service seem to be exempt from the penalties for wrong-doing which other civil servants are subject to. I can quite understand the embarrassment there would be in dealing with the commissioners, and that it is possible they would have to be left entirely to their own honour, but I do not think the same should apply to the employees of the commission. We have heard over and over again that subordinates have given out information which has been taken advantage of by their friends and themselves to make a great deal of money. In the case, however, of employees of this commission there is no provision to punish any one who may give out information when he should not do so.

Mr. FISHER. The contention of my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) seems reasonable, and I think, perhaps, that the employees of this commission should be restricted in the same way as the employees of the geological survey. I will consult with the member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton) to see if we cannot draw up an amendment which would embody the idea of the hon. gentleman with regard to the salaried officers of the commission.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

PRIVATE BILLS.

ST. LAWRENCE POWER TRANSMISSION COMPANY.

House again in committee on Bill (No. 115) an Act to incorporate the St. Lawrence Power Transmission Company, Limited.—Mr. Pardee.

On section 1, incorporation.

Mr. BLAIN. I would like to ask the Minister of Public Works if the government have any correspondence from the Hydro-Electric Commission of the province of Ontario in respect to this Bill?

Mr. PUGSLEY. There has certainly been none with me, and I am not aware of there being any correspondence with any other member of the government, although it is possible that there may have been.

Mr. BLAIN. Is it not rather important that the minister having charge of this Bill should place before the committee any such correspondence that may have taken place? As my hon. friend is aware, the government of Ontario are protecting the rivers and streams in every part of the province for the people, and we accept with pleasure what the government stated last night by the Prime Minister, that the opposition were opposing this Bill because we were trying to impress upon this House and the country that we were in favour of a monopoly, I presume by the Hydro-Electric Commission of the province of Ontario. For myself I am in favour of that kind of a monopoly. It differs entirely from the monopolies which hon. gentlemen opposite sometimes deal with in this House. The monopoly of the Hydro-Electric Commission of Ontario is the people of Ontario protecting their own rights against all who would interfere with those rights, in taking possession of any waterway and manipulating it for private advantage. The government of Ontario are protecting all these streams, keeping in view the future development of electricity and the importance of cheap power for manufacturing; and, therefore, I think it is not unfair that this committee should be put in possession of whatever correspondence there may have been between the Ontario government and this government, or between the Hydro-Electric Commission and this government on this subject. I would have thought that the hon. Minister of Public Works would have been sufficiently interested in this matter to have inquired of the government if there was any such correspondence. I would have thought that my hon. friend would have been very anxious to communicate to this committee all correspondence that has come to the government or to any department of the government relative to this Bill, which has received so much attention in this House, and a greater amount of attention in the country, from the people of Ontario in particular. For myself, I want to go on record as being in opposition to any monopoly in this country.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Except that of the Hydro-Electric Commission.

Mr. BLAIN. Yes, I am fully in accord with that kind of a monopoly. It may be a kind of monopoly which my hon. friend knows nothing about.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am opposed to any monopoly.

Mr. BLAIN. Then there is a great opportunity for my hon. friend now, while this Bill is under discussion, to stand up and say that he is opposed to this monopoly.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not see that there is any monopoly in this.

Mr. BLAIN. My hon. friend is very quick to recognize what he calls a monopoly in the province of Ontario, which is a monopoly of the people for themselves. I think this government should be the first to commend the government of Ontario for rising in their might and saying to any class of people, whether they belong to the province of Ontario or to any other province, or whether they come from the United States or any other country, whether they be Liberal or Conservative, that their policy is a clearly-defined policy, that every water-power and every other public utility shall be protected for all the people of the province. If the Minister of Public Works thinks that I am a monopolist of that kind, I am willing to accept that, and would only hope that I might be able to convert my hon. friend to that view. I would rather believe in the man who would correct his own government, his own department and his own policy, than cast reflections on the policy of the Ontario government with respect to the Hydro-Electric Commission. I shall await now for my hon. friend to place before this committee to-night whatever correspondence the government or any department thereof has had either from the Ontario government of the Hydro-Electric Commission with respect to this Bill.

Mr. HUGHES. Before the Minister of Public Works makes his deliverance in answer to the hon. member for Peel, may I ask him if he has ever considered the advisability of establishing a Hydro-Electric Commission under the auspices of the Public Works Department of the Dominion government, seeing that he is so much opposed to the one in the province of Ontario?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am rather surprised at my hon. friend from Peel being so unreasonable as he is. He seems to take for granted that late on in the evening, after business hours, after the public offices are all closed, that is the appropriate time at which to ask for papers, and he wants them delivered not to-morrow, not next Friday evening, but to-night.

Mr. LENNOX. We will wait until Friday.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I may say to my hon. friend that it is not at all convenient for me to send around to the offices to-night, after they are closed, to find out whether or not there is certain correspondence on file. But I may say to my hon. friend that I have not heard of either the Hydro-Electric Commission or the government of Ontario sending any communication to this government with reference to the Bill that is now before this committee.

Mr. BLAIN. It sent a representative before the committee.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That representative has been heard. Does my hon. friend say that he is on file and that I should get him and produce him to-night? I cannot do that.

Mr. BLAIN. May I be permitted to say that such a statement would be a very good argument if my hon. friend were introducing this Bill for the first time; but when my hon. friend remembers that this Bill has been before the House and the country for many weeks, and that he took part in an all-night discussion upon it, it might occur to him that it would be his duty to see that whatever information was in his department or in the possession of the government of which he is a prominent member should be laid before this committee for use in the discussion of this Bill.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I would rather assume that since the Bill has been so long before the House there is no correspondence or I would have heard of it. And I would assume that my hon. friend, who poses here as the champion of the Hydro-Electric Commission of Ontario, and who has the courage to declare himself absolutely in favour of a monopoly so far as the transmission of electrical energy throughout the province of Ontario is concerned, who is strenuously opposed to the people being permitted to purchase electrical energy from any other person or body than the Hydro-Electric Commission, would have been the very first to be made acquainted of any correspondence by his friends of the commission, and the fact of his not being aware of any correspondence and of no correspondence coming to my notice, may, I think, be taken as very good evidence that there has been no correspondence. I take it for granted that the Hydro-Electric Commission, for reasons of its own, preferred to send counsel to appear before the Private Bills Committee to present their views. The hon. gentleman has also unwittingly fallen into an error of another description. He has stated that the Minister of Public Works is in charge of this Bill. My hon. friend surely cannot have forgotten that it has been stated over and over again that this is not a government measure, that neither I nor any other member of the government is in charge of this Bill.

Mr. BLAIN. Does my hon. friend disown it?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is impossible to disown what one never possessed. I have a duty to discharge just as my hon. friends have, and, when the Bill introduced as it was by a private member, came before the committee for consideration, it was my duty to take the view of the matter which seemed to me to be the proper view to take.

Mr. BLAIN. Does my hon. friend wish to draw a distinction between the gentleman having charge of this Bill and the government, the cabinet? If my hon. friend does, the committee would be very glad to hear him state whether he himself and his government are in favour of or opposed to this Bill.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I can only speak for myself. I have not the slightest idea as to the views of the members of the government, except as they have been expressed on the floor of the House while in committee. Some members of the government have expressed their views as individual members of the House. The government as a whole has not expressed any opinion, and as far as I am aware the government as a whole or as a government has no views on the Bill and has not taken any attitude on it one way or the other. Every member of the government is free to vote as he pleases and, unlike the gentlemen on the other side of the House under the admirable leadersip which seems to be now prevailing and which excites the wonder and the astonishment of this country, every member on this side of the House is just as free to vote for or against the Bill as every member of the government is.

Mr. MEIGHEN. How will they vote?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am not able to say, but I will tell you how I propose to vote. I propose voting for the Bill. While the Bill has been under discussion, I have been lost in amazement at the wonderful ingenuity of hon. gentlemen opposite in persuading themselves that there is something wrong or suspicious about this Bill, and that in some way it is connected with a Bill for the development of power on the St. Lawrence.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Then why did you amend it?

Mr. PUGSLEY. We proposed to amend it for the very reason which the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) proposed an amendment which I have no doubt he had reason to believe would be unanimously accepted by his supporters; we amended it in order to make assurance doubly sure, in order to make it impossible for any member of this House, or any person outside of this House to argue that the Bill was in any way connected with the damming of the St. Lawrence river. We wanted to make assurance doubly sure that no one would ever dream for a moment of arguing that the passing of this Bill was in any way committing this parliament to the approval of any scheme for the damming of the St. Lawrence. Speaking for myself I believe this Bill, amended as it is, with all possible sting taken out as the hon. member for Westmorland (Mr. Emmerson) so graphically stated, was never any more connected with the St. Lawrence Power Company Bill, or any measure for the damming of the St. Lawrence than it is at the present moment.

Mr. BLAIN. My hon. friend was just as willing to support it in its original form as he is now to support it in its amended form.

Mr. PUGSLEY. And for the reason that I stated that if we passed the Bill in its original form it would in no way be committing the House to the damming of the St. Lawrence, that this Bill was simply a power transmission Bill and nothing more. It has been amended so as to make that so clear and plain that not only the intelligent members of this House may understand it, but that every man who runs may read and thoroughly understand it. I would like to know whether hon. gentlemen who are opposing this Bill are prepared to lay it down as a principle which they are prepared to support that whenever in any province in Canada, or in any port of the Dominion either a provincial legislature, or the Dominion parliament creates a public utility then no man and no company shall be permitted to compete against the government of that province, or this Dominion.

Mr. HUGHES. That is not the question.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is the question.

Mr. HUGHES. The question is damming the St. Lawrence.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not at all. I thought my hon. friend had got away from that delusion. Do I understand that he is still under the delusion that this Bill has something to do with damming the St. Lawrence?

Mr. HUGHES. I am absolutely certain of it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I can only express my profound astonishment.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Some weeks ago the minister told us that the members of the St. Lawrence Power Company waited on him in reference to the maps, &c. Would the minister be good enough to give the names of the men who waited on him?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Would that be of interest so far as this Bill is concerned? My hon. friend is seeking to in some way erroneously convey the impression that these two Bills are connected together, in other words that the Bill now before the House is in some way connected with the Act passed some nine years ago. My hon. friend knows better than that.

Mr. LENNOX. The amendment shows they are.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The amendment does not. Some hon. gentlemen for whom the promoters of this Bill are bound to have respect, and who, although they may be misguided and entirely in error, although their views are without foundation, have expressed the fear that if this Bill had been passed in its original form it would in some way be recognized by the public as being an approval of a project for damming the St. Lawrence. And out of deference——

Mr. SPROULE. May I ask a question?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Wait till I get through this sentence. Out of deference to the views of these hon. gentlemen, the promoter of the Bill has moved an amendment which would make it impossible for any one to suppose that by voting for this measure he was in any way committed to the approval by parliament of damming the St. Lawrence either under the Act of 1901 or otherwise.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. minister having finished his sentence, let me ask him this: Does he mean to tell this House that the St. Lawrence Power Company, and the St. Lawrence Power Transmission Company are not practically the same company, one to develop power, and the other to transmit it? Does this company refer to any other company that are going to develop power? Is not this in effect, extending the right of the St. Lawrence Power Company to the transmission of power while the original Bill provides the right to develop power? The same names appear in both companies. And yet the hon. minister says there is no connection.

Mr. PUGSLEY. These companies are incorporated, having distinct and separate entities. I do not know who are interested in these respective companies. The transmission company may be an entirely different entity from the power development company.

Mr. SPROULE. This is 'The St. Lawrence Power Transmission Company.'

Mr. ARMSTRONG.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Well, suppose it had been the Jerusalem Power Transmission Company, what difference does it make? Does my hon. friend seriously argue that the fact that the name of a great river with which the whole country is identified is used in these two companies, makes those two identical?

Mr. GOODEVE. I would call the attention of the hon. minister to the fact that he himself has stated that these Bills were connected. I would also quote what the chairman of the Conservation Commission, to which this Bill was referred by the Private Bills Committee stated. Here are his words:

> An examination of Bill (No. 115) indicates clearly that the introduction of this Bill is a portion of the St. Lawrence Power Company's plans. It is to be noted that the president of the power company and one of its engineers are the first named among the proposed incorporators, and the powers asked for are of an unusual and very sweeping character.

And, as I have said, the Minister of Public Works points out that these companies are undoubtedly one, and the same. In answer to the leader of the opposition, as reported at page 5510 of 'Hansard,' he said:

> If the hon. member will pardon me: I saw it stated somewhere, that the chairman of the Conservation Commission had written a letter to the committee in which he pointed out this very fact, that they were undoubtedly connected together, referring to the fact of the incorporators being the same.

I think I can point to several other quotations here from the Conservation Commission's report. So, I think we can agree that these companies are undoubtedly connected.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend (Mr. Goodeve) forgets that I was replying to a statement which some hon. members made that they had been taken utterly by surprise to learn that a company had been incorporated in 1901. The hon. gentlemen were stating—shall I say they were pretending—perhaps I ought not to say that, for it might be unparliamentary—that the first knowledge they had of it was when my hon. friend from Westmorland (Mr. Emmerson) informed the committee that an Act had been passed in 1901. It was in reply to that observation that I made the statement that that could not be so, because the chairman of the Conservation Commission had stated that fact or alleged fact to the committee. But if the hon. gentleman will do me the honour to read my speech from beginning to end, and, perhaps, if he does, it may induce him to take a different view from what he has taken tonight—he will see that I stated distinctly that I had no knowledge whatever of the personnel of these companies. What I was asked was if I thought that if the St. Lawrence Power Company should develop power this company would take its electrical energy for transmission, I said I did not know, but that I suspected they would. The Minister of Railways (Mr. Graham) has stated to the House very frankly that the object of this transmission company is to obtain electrical energy wherever it can. He has stated that there are a few thousand horse-power which might be obtained from the complete development of the works which the St. Lawrence Power Company already have constructed between Sheek island, and the mainland near Cornwall. He has also referred to the fact of the development by Mr. Beach, and has stated that at Waddington, there is a power which could be developed without interfering with the St. Lawrence river, and capable of yielding, if I remember rightly, 25,000 or 30,000 horse-power. He has stated also that it would be of enormous advantage to the people of eastern Ontario, who are desirous of establishing industries which can be established only by getting cheap electrical energy, and that these people are anxious to get this power from whatever source may be available. I repeat what I said when the Bill was before the committee yesterday, that it is only right and fair to the people of that section, who are clamouring for cheap power, that the Bill should be fairly considered. And I say—and I think I can speak with the authority of the promoter of the Bill—that if any hon. member opposite, or any hon. member on this side, can suggest, as the Bill is passing through the committee, any amendment which will make it more clear than it is now that it is a power transmission company, and that alone, that it shall have no power to develop electricity, but simply to transmit it, and can only transmit power which is lawfully developed by some other company, I believe my hon. friend (Mr. Pardee) will gladly accept that amendment. The leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) in order, I believe, to make the case so clear that, as he supposed, no one of his followers would venture to further oppose the Bill——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. PUGSLEY—proposed an amendment——

Mr. HUGHES. One amendment.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is an amendment which is most important if hon. members have the suspicion which they profess to have in regard to this Bill, and it provided that the St. Lawrence Power Company should have no authority to enlarge or increase any of its dams, wing dams, sluices or other works upon the St. Lawrence without their plans first having been submitted to parliament, and the approval of parliament obtained. Now, I do think that the amendment which the leader of the opposition proposed ought to have been sufficient to satisfy every member on the other side.

Mr. HUGHES. In that regard, yes. But there are other points.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Unless hon. gentlemen opposite are so bound up in the creation, and maintenance of an absolute monopoly in the Hydro-Electric Commission against the people of Ontario, preventing them from being able to obtain power from any other source—unless they are bound hand and foot to the Hydro-Electric Commission, and determined to maintain its monopoly —they ought, in all fairness, to consider this Bill on its merits, and, as it goes through committee, suggest any amendments they may think necessary in order to make it clearer that it is to be a power transmission Bill only. And it does seem to me that in that way, and that way only, will they be performing a real service to the country, especially to the people of eastern Ontario, who are so desirous of obtaining electrical energy.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I asked the Minister of Public Works a question a little while ago. If he does not care to answer it, perhaps the hon. member for Brandon would be good enough to give his views on the subject.

Mr. GOODEVE. In reply to the minister, who asked me to read his own speech in connection with this matter, I have great pleasure in reading a paragraph which makes it still more clear that he himself considers these two Bills together:

> I will answer as best I can. I do not know what is in the minds of the promoters of the Bill, but it does not occur to me that the Bill provides for great haste, because it is only to come into force on a day to be fixed by proclamation of the Governor in Council, and the Governor in Council will not issue that proclamation until the agreements are entered into, plans are fully considered, and it is understood that the works can be constructed in the public interest and without injury to navigation—and, I would assume—they would not issue the proclamation until these agreements were submitted and ratified by parliament.

That is a direct answer, a statement dealing with the Bill before us and referring back to the Bill passed in 1901.

Mr. PUGSLEY. If my hon. friend will turn to page 5504 he will find that I stated distinctly that I had no knowledge on the subject, one way or the other. This is what I said in answer to the hon. member for Peel:

Mr. BLAIN. Where does the minister think they will get their power?

Mr. PUGSLEY. My own idea is that they will get their power from a company which may develop it along the St. Lawrence.

Now there is a company that develops power along the St. Lawrence.

I do not know that to be the case, but I suspect it. This Bill simply incorporates a transmission company which would have to make an arrangement with another company for its power. The development of power upon the St. Lawrence must be provided for by another statute, but this Bill does not give the slightest authority to dam the St. Lawrence or construct any works in the St. Lawrence or anywhere else except such works as are essential for a transmission line.

That is the view which I took. I had no knowledge then on the subject, and I contended then, as I contend now, that by voting for this Bill, which is simply a power transmission Bill, no member of this House would be committed to a project for damming the St. Lawrence.

Mr. HUGHES. The Minister of Public Works was wise in stopping where he did when he read from his remarks. Let him read right on to the end, and he will find a question by the leader of the opposition:

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Under what statute did the company profess to be acting when it submitted these plans?

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is not this company.

Mr. HUGHES. It is this company, and he knows it quite well. In answer to the leader of the opposition the Minister of Public Works says:

They did not state, but I understood it to be under the St. Lawrence Power Company charter granted by this parliament some years ago. I also understood from them that they expected to have to come back to parliament to get authority to dam the St. Lawrence.

And yet he knew last year, and the First Minister last night admitted that they did have the authority to dam the St. Lawrence, and the Minister of Public Works must have known it; else why did he dare to receive a deputation talking of damming the St. Lawrence, without the authority of a statute of this parliament to allow them to approach him in that regard?

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. It seems to me these are some of the things which make us on this side of the House suspicious. This Bill says that 'this Act shall not come into force until a day to be named by the Governor in Council.' Now, the Minister of Public Works stated on the floor of this House that this Act would not come into force until after the plans and specifications in connection with the St. Lawrence Power Company had been approved by this government. If he says that electricity may be transmitted, or is likely to be transmitted, over this line from any other company than the St. Lawrence Power Development Company, than he is then unnecessarily hanging up by this Bill. Here is what the minister says, page 5510:

The Governor in Council will not issue that proclamation until the agreements are entered into, plans are fully considered, and it is understood that the works can be constructed in the public interest and without injury to navigation—and, I would assume—they would not issue the proclamation until these agreements were submitted and ratified by parliament.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend did not read the whole of it. Let him begin at the commencement and read the whole of it.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. If the hon. gentleman will allow me to make my explanation.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I rise to a point of order. What I respectfully submit to you, Sir, is that when an hon. gentleman proposes to read some remarks made by another member of this House, it is his duty to read all the remarks which bear upon the particular subject, he must read the qualifying remarks as well.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The minister has a right to rise to a point of order, but I do not think the point he raises is a point of order.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. What the minister did say in effect was this: that he would not recommend to the Governor in Council that this Bill should go into effect until the plans and specifications had been approved. I have read the petition, the petition is from the Long Sault Development Company from the St. Lawrence Power Company and the Minister has said that this Bill shall not become operative until the plans of these two companies —and they both signed the petition, they are the same company—the minister says this Bill shall not come into force until these plans have been prepared and approved, and at the same time he says this company may get electricity transmitted over its lines from some other source, when the Bill itself would not come into force until he approves the plans of the other two companies. In the face of that, the minister says that he has a suspicion that the electricity which is going to pass over the transmission lines will come from the St. Lawrence Power Company, although that company does not come into operation until the plans are approved by himself.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I stated to the committee that I had not any knowledge whatever of what was in the mind of the promoters of this Bill we were all discussing. Its terms were quite as new to me as they were to many other hon. members of this House. It stops there, and my hon. friend did not read that which, I say, qualifies entirely the remarks which I made. I said that I would answer some question which was put to me by my hon. friend from Westmorland.

I will answer as best I can. I do not know what is in the minds of the promoters of the Bill.

That is what I stated distinctly, and I did not know.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. May I ask the Minister of Public Works now if that information which he gave was incorrect, namely, that the Bill will not go into force until the plans and specifications of the St. Lawrence Power Development Company and the Long Sault Development Company, now before the House, have been approved by the Governor General in Council?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I will say to my hon. friend that my own view is that if this Bill passes the Governor in Council would properly bring it into force entirely irrespective of any other company, or any other power development.

Mr. SPROULE. Then you must have given incorrect information before.

Mr. PUGSLEY. When I made the remarks which I did make in the House, the matter had not come before the council, and I could not speak for council, or profess to speak for council. I was entirely in the dark as to what the views of the promoters were, but I cannot see the slightest reason why this Bill should not be brought into force entirely irrespective of any other Bill. It has nothing to do with any other measure, and it would be brought into force on its own merits and with the view of transmitting power from any source from which the company might be able to obtain it.

Mr. BLAIN. Were not the promoters before my hon. friends' department?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Of this Bill?

Mr. BLAIN. Of the St. Lawrence Power Bill?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, several persons on behalf of the company appeared before a sub-committee of council and asked for the approval of their plans. It was these plans which were submitted to the International Waterways Commission.

Mr. BLAIN. Who were these gentlemen?

Mr. PUGSLEY. That Bill has nothing to do with this Bill.

Mr. BLAIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask your ruling. The minister has stated that certain gentlemen representing a company appeared before council, and I ask the minister to submit the names to the committee as he has made reference to them. It would seem to me that it would be the proper thing to do.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have no objection to submitting such names as I can remember. I remember Mr. Leighton McCarthy, of Toronto, and a very eminent engineer—I forget his name.

Mr. J. D. REID. Mr. Breakey?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not remember the name. Mr. Holgate, of Montreal, was before the committee of council, I think Mr. McGuigan, was there also, and some other gentlemen, but I do not remember their names.

Mr. BLAIN. Were they members of the company?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not know.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Can the minister inform us whether or not the power which is now being developed by the St. Lawrence Power Company is being transmitted anywhere?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am not aware as to that. I am not familiar with local conditions.

Mr. GRAHAM. The power is used largely in the town of Cornwall, and to light the canal.

Mr. J. D. REID. There is only 35 or 40 horse-power used for the canal.

Mr. GRAHAM. My hon. friend is away wrong in his figures, but it is not unusual for him to be a little wrong in his calculations.

Mr. HUGHES. He is not saying what is paid for it; he is only saying what is used.

Mr. GRAHAM. As far as I know the power transmitted is for the use of the town of Cornwall, and for the canal under a contract made with the government some years ago. While I am on my feet I would like to put the situation very plainly before the House and the country. I do not believe there is an hon. gentleman in front of me but understands it thoroughly.

Mr. HUGHES. I think we do, and if we do it is bad for you.

Mr. GRAHAM. I think the hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton (Mr. Hughes) might be excused for not knowing anything about it.

Mr. HUGHES. If we do understand it it speaks very badly for the Minister and his party.

Mr. GRAHAM. The minister and his party will always come out fairly well, if it be put on that basis, because my hon. friend is not quick at understanding things when he does not want to understand them. Those of our friends to the left, who have spoken, have opposed this Bill, because they do not want any interference with the Hydro-Electric Commission.

Mr. HUGHES. No.

Mr. GRAHAM. I am talking about those over here.

Mr. HUGHES Over where?

Mr. GRAHAM. The hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Armstrong), and the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain), have made their objection very plain.

Mr. BLAIN. Might I be permitted to say——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. BLAIN. With the permission of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. GRAHAM. It is pretty near nine o'clock, and I want to say what I have to say before Mr. Chairman calls nine o'clock. The hon. members for Peel and North Ontario (Mr. Sharpe) made it very plain that they were arguing largely because this was an interference with the hydro-electric plan. The hon. member for Peel devoted his remarks to that one point. On the other hand, the hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton (Mr. Hughes) says that he objects to it because they are going to dam the St. Lawrence. I want the country to thoroughly understand my position. What I ask for, as representing the constituency of Brockville, is that we should be given the right to get cheap power if we can get it, no matter from what source. The people want—I care not what my hon. friends say—the cheapest power that they can get. It does not make any difference whether it comes from one company or another, or from the Hydro-Electric Commission, and the man who says that it must come from only one source is not a friend of the people.

Mr. LANCASTER. Does it make any difference whether it interreres with the navigation of the St. Lawrence?

Mr. GRAHAM. It is all very well for hon. gentlemen who are within a stone's throw of Niagara power and who are not in the position of having to seek for cheap power although when it does not come with that rapidity that was expected. They speak strongly in favour of the Hydro-Electric Commission only. The Hydro-Electric Commission has not yet come into that part of Ontario, no matter what is said to the contrary, and it has made no serious attempt to come. No provision has been made in the estimates of the Ontario legislature for their coming. It is a delusion and a snare as far as the people of that part of the country are concerned. I have had some experience of this matter, and I know of what I speak. If the Dominion has a power to lease to anybody, if it has a power to develop, these hon. gentlemen propose to take the ground that we must not give any person any right to transmit that power without going to the Ontario government and asking permission.

Mr. HUGHES. Why not run your own hydro-electric?

Mr. GRAHAM. For my part, I believe that the policy adopted by this House unanimously in appointing a board of railway commissioners to control the rates on railways has been a success. I believe that that board can control the rates for power developed in the Dominion just as well as they can control railway rates, and with just as good results. If they give us as good results with respect to electrical power as they have with respect to the railways, the people of Canada will be the gainers. All we ask is that the right be given to a company to transmit power, get it where they may. There is nothing in this Bill, and hon. gentlemen know it perfectly well, to enable any person to dam the St. Lawrence. That is a big question that would have to be discussed in another spirit altogether. It is not contained in this Bill. If it were, I would not now ask this House to pass it.

Mr. HUGHES. Is there anything in this Bill that will strengthen the hands of the St. Lawrence Power Company and allow them to transmit electricity?

Mr. GRAHAM. There is nothing in the Bill that will enable any company to dam the St. Lawrence, and the Bill further states in the amendment that they cannot add to the works heretofore constructed. They are confined absolutely to the works under construction. My hon. friend is trying to prevent me from saying what I wish to say before nine o'clock. I want to put the case plainly, because I want the country to understand it, and I want my constituents to understand it, and I say that every member of this House does understand it. We ask for a transmission line, and whether or not they ever get power to dam the river St. Lawrence has nothing whatever to do with it. I have taken great pains to tell the promoters that I would not, in this Bill at least, have anything to do with a scheme which would enable them to get any more power than they had already on the St. Lawrence river.

Mr. HUGHES. Did they propose it?

Mr. GRAHAM. My hon. friend (Mr. Hughes) has many a time proposed things that he did not get, and it is a good thing for himself that he did not get them.

Mr. HUGHES. The point I make is this—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. HUGHES. Would the minister permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. A question can only be asked with the permission of the member who has the floor.

Mr. HUGHES. Well, I am asking him.

Mr. GRAHAM. It is three or four minutes to nine o'clock, and I want to make my statement, and my hon. friend (Mr. Hughes) is doing all he can to prevent me, but he can't. The House understands it, but I want to make it clear to the country and to my constituents who may not understand it. What we ask is that this company be given power to transmit power if there be any surplus now at Cornwall. I may be wrong, but I believe there is. There is a power at Iroquois owned by Mr. Beach not leased by the Ontario government, but leased to him by this government; there is a power at Waddington, opposite Morrisburg, that is to be developed, or that can be developed, and from which I am told we can get power to the town of Brockville; then there is another power at Messena, owned by this company or some of the same gentlemen who are in this company. We believe there is a surplus of power now, and if we cannot get any power from any of these works I mentioned, then no harm is done. But I say it is not fair; it is particularly not fair for the men from western Canada who have cheap power at their door to prevent us in the east getting the power which is running to waste and which I believe we can get if this company gets its charter.

An hon. MEMBER. It does.

Mr. GRAHAM. All that is asked for by this Bill is that we be allowed in my constituency and elsewhere to utilize, through the means of this company being allowed to transmit it, the power that is going to waste. It makes no difference who is in the company; their powers are curtailed absolutely in this Bill, and though these men may be in the company to-day, if they do not see fit to go on with the work, the charter is in existence and I believe we can get men of capital to take that charter and give us a transmission line and give us the power we can obtain from these other points. I again appeal to the House. We want power in the vicinity from which I come. I believe it would be absolutely unfair if this House should prevent us from getting the means of having that power brought to our doors. I say again that it is particularly unfair for those members who come from a section of this province where the whole province is assessed them cheap power, that they should prevent us in the east from getting power when we are not asking the province to guarantee a single dollar to pay for it.

Mr. GOODEVE. I call attention to the fact that in the papers brought down by the Minister of Public Works, we have the statement made in the petition which appears amongst these papers, that the St. Lawrence Power Company has 3,000 developed horse-power and 2,500 intermittent horse-power, which means that at certain seasons of the year they can develop 5,500 horse-power, and they have a capacity for developing 6,000 regular horse-power. Now, out of this quantity they state that there is only 1,000 or 1,500 horse-power used out of the 6,000 horse-power capable of development. In that same Bill this same company is given the right to sell and transmit that power, so that if the only question raised here is the getting of competitive power against the Hydro-Electric Commission, as stated by the Minister of Railways, they already have that power developed, they have the right to transmit it, they have the right to sell it, they have the right to supply it in competition with any other company at this very moment. That being the statement in the papers brought down by the Minister of Public Works, I cannot see why, under the circumstances, we could not take time to see the exact standing of this company without doing any injury either to the constituents of the Minister of Railways or to his portion of eastern Ontario of which he has spoken. I admire the position he took in fighting on behalf of the people of eastern Ontario, and I believe that if we can reduce the price of power by bringing in competition we should do so.

Mr. GRAHAM. Hear, hear.

Mr. GOODEVE. But I say his case is not sound because of the fact that he himself has already stated that that company has certain horse-power developed, and that all they require is that they may be able to transmit it to the localities that require it. As has been shown, under the section 8 of the Act of 1901, they have full power to do that, and that being the only reason advanced by the Minister of Railways why he is in favour of this Bill his contention falls to the ground. When we take into consideration that the chairman of the Conservation Commission has reported absolutely against the Bill, and in view of all that has been said here, I venture to say that the Minister of Public Works is the only man in this House who has not yet become acquainted with the fact that the very same men who have asked for this Bill are the men who have control of the St. Lawrence Power Bill of 1901.

CONSERVATION OF NATURAL RESOURCES.

The hour for private Bills having expired the House resumed in committee on Bill (No. 185) respecting the Commission for the Conservation of Natural Resources.

Mr. J. D. REID. With the consent of the House I would ask the Minister of Railways if he would get a statement of the quantity of power used on the Cornwall canal by the department.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. GRAHAM. In lighting?

Mr. J. D. REID. For lighting and for use at the locks. I understand there is only between thirty-five and sixty-five horse-power used on the canal, and I would like to have a statement from the officials as to the exact quantity used.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I did not wish to interfere as I thought the hon. member was simply asking a question, but he appears to be proceeding to make a statement of some length. We are on Bill (No. 185).

On section 1,

Mr. FISHER. Since six o'clock my hon. friend from Brandon has made some slight changes in the amendment proposed by the hon. member (Mr. Armstrong) and with these changes I think we can add it to the end of the Bill.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. What is the change?

Mr. FISHER. The only change is that it leaves out the reference to members of the commission. It applies the clauses of the hon. gentleman's amendment to the officials of the commission, but makes no reference to the members.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think there is a good deal of force in the observations of the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton) because it is apparent that no member of the commission could transact business connected with the affairs of the country generally, to any extent, if the amendment passed as proposed. What has been suggested by the Minister of Agriculture is no doubt eminently proper, but it did occur to me that the provisions of subsection (c) of the proposed amendment might with perfect propriety be made applicable to members of the commission.

Mr. FISHER. There is no objection to that. It might be held that we were casting a little suspicion on the members of the commission, but they would probably not feel it in that way.

Mr. CAMPBELL. On whom does the Minister of Agriculture mean that the suspicion would be cast?

Mr. FISHER. I cannot understand the hon. gentleman.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Then I understand that the minister wishes to add to the Bill the clauses of my Bill entirely, merely referring them to the employees of the commission and not to the members of the commission?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, that is what I suggested.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Then I also understand, as the chairman of the commission suggested previous to six o'clock, that he and some other members of the commission would get together and frame a clause that would mean practically what is contained in this measure, and would apply it to themselves?

Mr. FISHER. That is a matter for further consideration. If such a clause could properly be framed and were thought suitable, I would have no objection to introduce it in a future session of parliament, but I would not want to introduce it in this Bill on the spur of the moment.

Mr. LANCASTER. It seems to me that the hon. minister might adopt the suggestion of the hon. member for East Lambton without restriction. I cannot understand how you can distinguish the officers of the commission from the members of the commission in regard to speculating in these matters. The injury to the country would be all the greater if the superior officers on the commission did it than it would be in the case of the minor officials, who would be controlled by the commission. To invite the members of this commission to deal with matters in which they might be privately interested as against the people is about the same as to say that a judge might properly be interested in a matter which was in litigation before him. I think that is against public policy. It has always been a principle that the members of a commission shall not be interested in or be permitted to obtain any personal advantage from the things in which they are employed in the interest of the people to deal with. A member of parliament cannot do it; a judge cannot do it; an officer of the Geological Survey cannot do it; and I cannot see why any member of this commission should want to do any of these things. If he does, he ought to resign from the commission. If that is what the hon. minister meant when he could not understand his own language, referred to by the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Campbell), I can see where the suspicion would be. If a member of the commission is going to have his feelings stuck out so far all around him, I would say that his feelings are too tender, he is not strong enough to do public work for the good of the people. Even if any of the commissioners wanted to do these things, this parliament should say they shall not do them, any more than a judge should try a case in which he is interested, or a trustee should take a secret advantage from the matters over which he is a trustee. I think it is a serious thing that the Minister of Agriculture does not rise to the occasion and say that the members of the commission, as well as their servants, shall not be permitted to do these things. Again, we are legislating that the poor man must be honest, but that the rich man may be as crooked as he likes. It is absolutely wrong to say that the ordinary officers and servants of this commission are to be absolutely straight and square, while their superiors are to be allowed to do themselves the very things which they would be obliged to dismiss their servants for doing. I understand that before six o'clock it was stated here that the business of a member of the chief chamber would be interfered with if he were prohibited from dealing. I would say that if that is the case, he should resign from this commission, to which is delegated the business of the people. We are told that one of these commissioners, a member of the upper Chamber, may take the benefit of information and do those things which we seek to prohibit any trustee from doing. There is where the suspicion comes in. We are told that the private business of one of these commissioners, a senator, may be interfered with if he is obliged to do what every trustee must do, and not make a secret profit or benefit from being a trustee. Be that man a senator or anything else, he should resign from the commission, and the law should be so amended that he could not do these things. It shows he is not fit to be a member of the commission when he wants to do these things.

Mr. FISHER. The arguments of my hon. friend were advanced and disposed of this afternoon. The question is whether we shall have a commission or not. If we are going to preclude every business man in Canada from being a member we may act as my hon. friend wishes us to do. The commission consists of men chosen for their prominence in various business walks in life and in the public affairs of this country, and it has been recognized that the commission is valuable from the standing of the commissioners as well as from the nature of its work. I have no hesitation in saying that if we adopted the amendment of my hon. friend from Lambton we would cause one-half the members of the commission to resign.

Mr. LANCASTER. So much the better for the people.

Mr. FISHER. I think that would be a great misfortune. The hon. member talks of the commissioners being like judges or trustees. Neither of these descriptions applies. They have certain powers and rights to investigate affairs in the country and to take steps to find out about those things. The work they are doing is in the public interest, they are not paid for it, they do it voluntarily. If we are going to be suspicious of them, we have to concoct an amendment which will be workable and bind them down by force of law and I would not care to be on that commission under those circumstances, nor to ask any of my friends to serve. Men like the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Osler) the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) Senator Edwards, who has been spoken of, have large business interests in the country and they would have to cease to be concerned in these important interests if this amendment should become law.

Mr. LANCASTER. No, they would cease to be commissioners.

Mr. FISHER. I would regret to see that. My hon. friend may want to turn out the commission. It would seriously impair the efficiency of the commission if these men were debarred from membership. Under these circumstances I do not think it would be wise to accept the amendment proposed. I am quite ready to accept it as it applies to the employees of the commission. In that respect it is directly in line with the clause in the Geological Survey Act, which debars civil servants from benefiting from information acquired.

Mr. LANCASTER. The minister says I want to turn out the whole commission. I want to turn out the whole commission if it was a thousand people if they are all interested against the interests of the people of Canada. There are probably 2,000,000 other men in Canada who are not interested, and the minister would not say that he could not select a commission out of those 2,000,000 of men who would not be interested against those for whom the commission are trustees. Members of parliament are prohibited from being interested in legislation; judges must not be interested in the suits to be decided by them, but by this Act, senators and members are permitted to take an interest against the people and to feather their nests through secret information at the cost of the country. I do not say that the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) or the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Osler) or Senator Edwards would do that. But I deplore the fact that the minister invites them to do so. What good is a commission if its members will use information acquired for their private benefit? Why is an Act of parliament passed if it is not in the interest of the public?

On the third reading of the Bill I shall vote against the minister's amendment and in favour of that of the hon. member for East Lambton.

On section 4, payment of disbursements of members attending committee meetings.

Mr. FISHER. Under the original Act it is provided that members shall be paid their disbursements in attending meetings of the commission. This follows out the same idea.

Mr. JAMESON. Why was not this provision put in the original Bill?

Mr. FISHER. When the Bill was passed there were no committees, but, at the annual meeting, the organization of the commission was perfected by forming some committees, each to deal with its own subject. This section is only carrying out the original idea by providing that the members shall have the same privileges when attending committee meetings as in attending meetings of the commission.

Mr. SIFTON. When the Act was drawn, the plan of work had not been fully thought out, and when the meeting was held we had to address ourselves to the question of how we were to conduct the work of the commission. The Act provided for the appointment of a chairman to be the executive officer of the commission. A difficulty that arose in connection with the practical work was that if the members of the commission met at the annual meeting, and passed general directions as to what should be done, thereafter the initiative would be left in the hands of the chairman, and the work and responsibility would devolve upon him. It was felt that that was not a desirable way to carry on the work. We desire to have the services of as many members of the commission as possible, and to have their judgment, and advice from time to time upon the various important questions with which we have to deal. After giving the matter the best consideration we could, we came to the conclusion that the best method of organization was to appoint committees to deal with the different classes of subjects, and to appoint a member of the commission as chairman of each committee. The logical corollary of that is that, from time to time, we shall be able to have meetings of the committees to discuss and deal with the particular subjects which these committees have in their purview. It will be seen that this will obviate the necessity of having more frequent meetings of the commission. Had this not been done, it would have been necessary to call meetings of the commission three or four times a year which would have meant bringing all the members of the commission here, and holding a large meeting when a small meeting might be all that is necessary. Under this scheme of organization, the practical work will be carried on by these committees, and the investigation and collection of information will be under their direction, and especially under the direction of the chairman of the committee. I may explain, as it will probably be of interest to hon. members, that the chairman of the committee on public health is Mr. Osler, the chairman of the committee on forestry is Senator Edwards, the chairman of the committee on waterways is Mr. Monk. Professor Robertson is chairman of the committee on lands and agriculture, and Mr. Haszard, the premier of the province of Prince Edward Island is chairman of the committee on fisheries.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not quite understand the connection which makes it necessary for a conservation commission to have a committee on public health.

Mr. FISHER. The work of that committee is largely connected with the pollution of streams, and the conservation of the public health generally. This was one of the subjects submitted at the Washington conference of last year, and I have no doubt whatever that there will be a very important work to be done in connection with that by the commission through this particular committee. The public health is regarded as one of the most important assets of the nation, and the work of the commission in this matter, it is expected, will be of great value.

Mr. SPROULE. Would that committee have any power to prevent a municipal corporation, for instance, from allowing the sewerage to be run into a stream?

Mr. FISHER. No, the commission has no power to prevent anything or do anything of that kind. All it can do is to obtain information, formulate that information for the public, and, perhaps, tender advice.

Mr. SPROULE. To the Governor in Council?

Mr. FISHER. Or to the municipal authorities.

Mr. SPROULE. They could only report to the Governor in Council according to their own Act of incorporation.

Mr. FISHER. So far as a formal report is concerned, yes.

Mr. SIFTON. To give practical and concrete instances, I may say that, so far, the commission has considered two questions in connection with public health, tuberculosis, and the pollution of rivers, and streams. It is our desire to collect all the information that can be collected in regard to the best method of bringing about the prevention of tuberculosis, and the best method of giving the assistance of the federal government to the bringing about of that end. When subjects have been thoroughly investigated, we make our report to the Governor in Council. There our responsibility ends; it is for the Governor in Council to submit the report to parliament, and for parliament to take any action that it may think proper. Take also, for instance, the pollution of rivers and streams; that has come to a very serious point in Canada. The Senate has been investigating the matter. They have held a preliminary investigation, and brought in their reports, and have referred the report generally to our commission for further investigation, and that we may make a report on a practical method of dealing with it. I think I may say that the commission is well fitted to bring about an understanding between the provincial and the federal authorities, particularly in cases of jurisdiction over public health, the jurisdiction is concurrent by reason of the fact, that it comprises representatives from all the governments. There is a department that has some jurisdiction over public health under the administration of the Minister of Agriculture, and each province has a department of public health. But medical men say, and the fact is clear, that there are gaps between the operation of the jurisdiction of the two bodies, and what they want is some complete plan agreed to by the provinces, and by the Dominion that will accomplish the purpose desired.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Does the word 'chairman' refer to the chairman of the commission or the chairman of the committee?

Mr. FISHER. To the chairman of the commission.

Mr. JAMESON. The member for Brandon referred to the committee on fisheries of the conservation commission; perhaps he would give us a little information with respect to the functions which that committee will perform. There is a committee of this House to look after matters pertaining to fisheries and marine, and it would be interesting for us to know what is the nature of the work which this branch of the conservation commission will take up, and to whom it will report.

Mr. FISHER. The committee on fisheries has not yet taken up their work or laid out their plans. I have no doubt that during the summer this committee will meet. The chairman of the committee is the premier of Prince Edward Island, and, he has been so busily engaged in his administrative work that he has not been able to leave, and consequently there has been no meeting of the committee. My hon. friend asked to whom they would report. All the committees of the commission will report to the commission, and their reports will be embodied in the general report of the commission.

Mr. JAMESON. We have now a very elaborate Department of Fisheries which is divided up into a number of branches that are doing considerable work. We have also a committee of the House. Now, I cannot understand why another commission or committee should undertake to investigate matters which are now being investigated by a committee of this House. I suppose there is at least an apparent need for the committee of this commission?

Mr. SIFTON. I cannot answer my hon. friend with any degree of definiteness. The idea was that by appointing that committee on fisheries we would make a careful examination of all the regulations relating to the preservation of fisheries throughout the Dominion, both by the Dominion and by the provinces; and if they found on careful examination of the regulations, and the principles on which they were enforced in the various provinces, that it would be in the public interest to make any recommendation for their amendment, they would do so. They have not yet made any examination.

Mr. CROSBY. It is strange that we should have this fisheries committee of the Conservation Commission when we have a standing committee of this House to deal with fishery matters, summoning and obtaining evidence from all parts of the country. We are going to have another committee spending money in practically the same direction to get evidence in connection with the fisheries. I cannot see any necessity for a fisheries branch of the Conservation Commission. Are we going to appoint two committees to do practically the same work, or how are you going to separate the work of these committees? I protest against another committee being appointed by this parliament to waste the money of the country when we already have a standing committee of this House, with the Minister of Marine and Fisheries at its head, to look after the same interests. I do not see the need of appointing for the same purpose another committee which is a portion of this so-called Conservation Commission. If this Conservation Commission is going to do the whole business of this parliament we had better appoint it for that purpose. But we have already taken up that matter, we are dealing with it, and I see no good reason for appointing another committee, because there is no doubt that if the fisheries committee of the Conservation Commission is sent out to deal with fishery matters it will be a heavy charge upon this country. We do not desire to have that commission do work that is already provided for by this House.

Mr. W. H. SHARPE. I would like to ask the minister if the commission has been paid for the work it has already done, and how much it amounts to?

Mr. FISHER. I think the annual meeting cost about $1,600. I could not say how much has been paid in actual travelling expenses and how much in other expenses.

Mr. W. H. SHARPE. How many individuals drew that money?

Mr. FISHER. There are thirty-two members of the commission, but, of course, a number of them were here, and they would not draw anything.

Mr. SPROULE. The law says that the commission shall consist of twenty members.

Mr. FISHER. There are twelve ex-officio members besides, making thirty-two altogether, and, some of these being here already, they did not draw any travelling allowance.

Mr. JAMESON. It would be well that the two committees—the committee of this House and the committee of the Conservation Commission—should not proceed along similar lines, and that we should not take up the time of these different committees in doing the same work. I dare say there is work enough for both of them, but I think that the chairman of the commission should see to it that the committee of the commission does not go over the same kind of work that the committee of the House is doing.

Mr. FISHER. I think my hon. friend's suggestion is a very wise one. I am sure that the commission will find plenty of work to do without overlapping the work of the committee of this House. That would be far from their desire. My hon. friend from Brandon said a few minutes ago that one of the works that could be done by the Fishery Committee was to find out exactly what are the various regulations, provincial and Dominion, with regard to fisheries, to see if at any place there was overlapping, or a break without any provision for proper care. A committee of this House cannot investigate provincial matters at all, but the commission being composed of representatives of the provinces, it is almost as much a provincial body as it is a Dominion body. The interests of the Dominion parliament, and of the provincial legislatures are all open to the investigation of this commission. Such work is not open to the investigation of a committee of this House. There is, therefore, an obvious possibility of the commission being able to do work which a committee of this House could hardly undertake.

Mr. CROSBY. Am I to understand that there is some doubt as to whether this parliament has the regulation of the fisheries?

Mr. FISHER. I do not express any opinion.

Mr. CROSBY. If I understood the minister correctly, he stated distinctly that this committee could inquire into the rights of the provinces and of the Dominion in regard to the fisheries. The province has nothing to do with the fisheries of this country.

An hon. MEMBER. You are wrong.

Mr. CROSBY. They have not in the province from which I come.

Mr. CONMEE. They are owned by the provinces.

Mr. LENNOX. No, they are not.

Mr. CONMEE. By the old provinces.

Mr. CROSBY I am speaking of the only provinces that are worth speaking about in reference to this matter—the provinces on the Atlantic and the Pacific. The hon. member for Digby (Mr. Jameson) stated that there was work for these two committees to do. I take issue with him there. There is no necessity for burdening this country with the expense of another committee, when we have a committee of this House to deal with the fisheries. It has cost this country a good deal for taking evidence and obtaining information in regard to the fisheries, and if this commission goes out and starts into the same thing we will be spending money which will not be well spent. I do not see the necessity for a Fisheries Committee working in conjunction with the Conservation Commission.

Mr. GOODEVE. As representing the Minister of Public Lands in British Columbia I probably would be able, to a certain extent, to answer the question asked by hon. members. I feel that the question was amply justified and that they are entitled to the information asked for in regard to this particular committee of the Conservation Commission. Looking upon the fisheries as one of the great natural resources of this country, and realizing that it is the object of this Conservation Commission, as far as possible, to conserve the natural resources, and get all the information available with regard to them, this committee was appointed in common with several other committees that have been referred to by the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton) as chairman of the commission. The work, as I understand it, of this committee, will be of a more general nature than the work which would be undertaken by a parliamentary committee, or a committee under the direction of the Department of Marine and Fisheries. It is to get a general idea of the resources in fish of all parts of Canada, not only the information that they may get in connection with the fisheries of Canada but information in connection with the fisheries all over the world, information of rather broader nature than would be obtained by a committee of this House appointed to deal with the question of fisheries. The information that they would endeavour to collect would be on a broader and larger line. They might possibly act in an advisory capacity both to the Dominion government and the various provincial governments throughout Canada. If we get, for instance, statistical knowledge of my own province, and some other provinces as well, gathered together and reported to the general commission, I believe it would be very valuable to the provinces as well as to the Dominion in formulating policy. There has in the past been friction between the Dominion, and the province of British Columbia, as well as other provinces, and it is possible that an independent commission such as this might possibly get information which would enable these difficulties to be smoothed over and regulations framed which would be of advantage to the Dominion as a whole. As representing on the commission my own province I felt it my duty to state what I understood to be the prerogative of the commission.

Mr. FISHER. In reference to the suggestion made by the hon, member (Mr. Armstrong) I would move as section 7 at the end of the Bill that the said Act be further amended by adding to it the following clauses which will make applicable Bill (No. 84) introduced by the hon. member (Mr. Armstrong) to the officers of the commission, but which, according to the understanding this afternoon, will not include the members of the commission.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I understood that the minister was to take clause (c) in section 18, and add it to this Bill.

Mr. FISHER. I may say that after the discussion the hon. member for Brandon had a short private conversation with the leader of the opposition, and he told me that that hon. gentleman had agreed with him that it would not be workable in that way, and therefore I left it out.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Then, I understand from the Minister of Agriculture that before the third reading of the Bill he and the hon. member for Brandon will get together and try to devise some clause to cover it?

Mr. FISHER. I did not say that. I said that I hoped that before next session something might be worked out. I did not undertake to do it this session.

Mr. S. SHARPE. I do not suppose it is the purpose of the Minister of Agriculture to ask the House to pass the third reading of the Bill to-night. It had better be reprinted and held over for further consideration on account of these important amendments.

Mr. FISHER. Certainly.

Mr. S. SHARPE. The purpose of this commission is a very laudable one, and we are all in sympathy with it; but why the servants of the commission should be penalized and the members of the commission left free from the operation of the Act I cannot see. I think the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Lambton should be accepted in toto, or the Minister of Agriculture and the hon. member for Brandon might get together before the third reading and frame some compromise amendment that would meet the case. Am I right in saying that $50,000 is being appropriated for the purposes of this commission?

Mr. FISHER. There is a vote of $15,000 in the main estimates, but I presume there will be a supplementary vote?

Mr. S. SHARPE. That is for employing engineers and other experts and collecting information.

Mr. FISHER. Largely.

Mr. S. SHARPE. Is that information going to be available to the members of the House in the various committees and in the House itself?

Mr. FISHER. It will be available to the public, I think?

Mr. S. SHARPE. The reason I ask that question is that in the Railway Committee the other day a very important measure, the Bill proposed by the hon. member for Rainy River, was being considered, and one of the members of the committee moved that it be referred to the Conservation Commission for an opinion. The Minister of Public Works, who was present, resented the suggestion, stating that the committee would have to assume the responsibility of the Bill, although a Bill had been sent previously by the Private Bills Committee for a report from this commission. Is the expert knowledge of the commission on questions of this kind going to be available?

Mr. FISHER. That question was fully discussed this afternoon.

Mr. SPROULE. If some means could be devised whereby we could get the benefit of the work and judgment of the commission during the session, I think it would be more valuable than their annual report.

Mr. FISHER. The commission has only been in existence during the last fiscal year, which is just ended, and has not yet made its annual report. I have no hesitation in saying that we ought to be in a position to avail ourselves of any information which the commission gets, and the sooner that is published after it is acquired the better.

Mr. SPROULE. Should there not be a provision in the Bill enabling or requiring the commission to do that?

Mr. FISHER. The hon. member for Brandon states that if the House wants any information from the commission on any subject, the commission would of course at any time obey an order of the House asking for anything of the kind; and, speaking for myself as a member of the commission, I have no doubt that the moment any information is acquired, in a form in which it could be published, the commission would not wait for its annual report to publish it, but would publish it perhaps in the form of a bulletin.

Mr. SPROULE. That is what we have asked for time and again during this session. We wanted a report from the commission on the Conmee Bill, but we were told that we had no right to demand or expect anything from them. I think there ought to be some statutory or parliamentary provision by which we would be able to get the benefit of their knowledge at any time on any of these important questions if the House desired it. What the Minister of Agriculture says is, I think, in the right direction.

Mr. FISHER. I think we shall have to consider a little the machinery by which that can be obtained, but I do not know that I can get it in such shape as to insert it in this Bill. It is a matter that requires some consideraion as to the manner and method to be employed by the House or by the committees to get that information.

Mr. SPROULE. Why not amend clause 13 and say that the commission shall make its report to the Governor in Council at the end of the fiscal year or at any other time when requested to do so by the Governor in Council.

Mr. TURRIFF. It seems to me that it is of considerable importance that we should be able to get information from the commission outside of the annual report. As I understand the members and officers of this commission will be making themselves familiar with questions concerning the conservation of the natural resources of Canada. Time and again this session in the Railway Committee a great many members have desired to get information that this commission might have had in their office, and I trust the minister will devise a means by which any committee of the House wishing information from the commission would get it at any time.

Mr. GOODEVE. I certainly endorse the suggestion advanced by the member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule). It seems to me that as this commission goes on, they will become more expert and will gather around them a number of men expert in certain lines, who might be asked to furnish expert information on short notice, even although the commission might not have it at the time. Then, too, they would have a great deal of information on hand. A committee of the House might wish for information, and we could simply ask the commission and get a report immediately upon request. It would be a great advantage to the House.

Mr. FISHER. The hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton) is drafting an amendment.

Mr. SPROULE. I would suggest that the section read that they shall make their report at the end of the year or an interim report on any subject or subjects when requested by the Governor in Council.

Mr. FISHER. The hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton) has drafted this amendment as an addition:

In addition to the annual report, the commission shall report from time to time to the Senate or to the House of Commons through the Speaker thereof whenever desired to do so by resolution of the Senate or of the House of Commons as may be.

By that method the information would be always available to either House.

Bill reported.

ROCKY MOUNTAINS PARK OF CANADA.

House in committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

Resolved, that the regulations of the 21st day of June, 1909, intituled: 'Regulations of the National Parks of Canada,' which were passed on the date above mentioned by His Excellency the Governor in Council, under authority of section 4 of the Rocky Mountains Park Act, being chapter 60, R.S.C., 1906, copies of which regulations, as well as the necessary order in council, have been laid before this House, are, in so far as they relate to the Rocky Mountains Park of Canada, approved by this House, in accordance with provisions of subsection 3 of section 5 of the said chapter 60.—Mr. Oliver.

Mr. SPROULE. Am I correct in understanding that this resolution merely legalizes the regulation I hold in my hand? No Bill is necessary to give effect to the resolution?

Mr. OLIVER. No.

Resolution read the second time, and agreed to.

WATER-POWERS IN BRITISH COLUMBIA RAILWAY BELT.

Bill (No. 187) to confirm and declare the rights of the Crown with respect to water and water-power, and relating to the diversion, acquisition and use of water in the railway belt in British Columbia—Mr. Oliver—read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

On section 1; this Act may be cited as the Railway Belt Water Act

Mr. SPROULE. That means that it applies to no other locality than the railway belt? It does not apply to any other portion of the province or territory?

Mr. GOODEVE. Will the minister explain the general purpose of the Bill?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, the Bill, as was said a moment ago, and as implied by the title, affects what is called the railway belt of the province of British Columbia. But it affects also an area of three and a half million acres of land in what is called the Peace river block. That is, it affects the whole of certain lands, which, under agreement between the province of British Columbia and the Dominion of Canada were granted by the province to the Dominion in connection with the construction of the Canadian Pacific railway. The administration of these lands thus rests upon the Dominion instead of upon the province in which they were situated. During many years it was taken for granted that, while the land was administered by the Dominion, the water was controlled and administered by the province. Under that supposition, the general legislation of the province regarding water and water rights was applicable to the railway belt, and grants were issued from time to time by the province of rights to water within the railway belt. While the right of the province was always assumed to exist in regard to water there was always a question as to whether it really did or did not exist, and so, in the case of some grants that were made by the provincial government, of rights to water within the railway belt, the grantees, in order to make themselves secure, while they got the grant from the provincial government, got a quit claim from the Dominion government of any rights that the Dominion might possess. The question as to whether the right lay in the province or in the Dominion, however, was brought to an issue by a certain case at law which was begun some years ago, and in regard to which judgment was given by the Exchequer Court in May, 1909. By the judgment of the Exchequer Court, the water in the railway belt was vested in the Crown in the right of the Dominion not in the right of the province. Of course the decision of the Exchequer Court was appealed, but it has since been upheld by the decision of the Supreme Court in Ottawa. It is, of course, to be expected that this decision will be again appealed and carried to the Privy Council. When the decision of the Privy Council is rendered, of course the matter will be considered settled and the right to the water will be considered finally vested either in the Dominion or in the province as the case may be. Inasmuch as rights to water in the railway belt had been issued by the province during a long period of years, and that at the end of that period the courts have declared that the rights did not rest with the province but with the Dominion the grants which had been given by the provincial government are grants without valid authority. Consequently, what may be called a chaotic condition exists in the railway belt in regard to water rights. Rights which were granted by the province have been invalidated by this decision of the courts, and as the Dominion has not undertaken to grant any rights, those who have held legal rights to the use of water for many years now find that their right to that water is subject to question at law. This is a condition which it is undesirable to continue. In everybody's interest, it is desirable that there should be a validating of existing rights.

Mr. SPROULE. Does the hon. minister think it the part of wisdom to pass legislation for that purpose during the time when the question is before the courts?

Mr. OLIVER. Of course, if anything better can be done, it would be better not to pass this legislation. But there are very large and important interests——

Mr. SPROULE. That is the very reason why you should not disturb them.

Mr. OLIVER. We do not want to disturb them, but they are disturbed by the decision of the courts. What we want is to give them a legal standing, to carry their position forward at any rate until the final decision of the Privy Council has been given.

Mr. GOODEVE. Is the Bill simply to validate, grants already issued by the province, or will it interfere with the case that is going before the courts?

Mr. OLIVER. No.

Mr. GOODEVE. It does not go further?

Mr. OLIVER. No, it is not intended to interfere with any matter in litigation, that is, it is not intended to affect one way or the other any matter in litigation; but unless there is such legislation as this there is no basis for litigation.

Mr. GOODEVE. I do not like to ask this, but not being a lawyer myself, and the member for Vancouver (Mr. Cowan) who went home for his Easter holidays and will be back to-night, and also the member for Victoria (Mr. Barnard), both lawyers, will be back to-night, I would suggest that the minister allow this Bill to stand until they arrive, for I am sure they would like to discuss it.

Mr. OLIVER. I have already arranged not to press the Bill through committee, but I was anxious to get it into committee, to explain its provisions in committee, and have it discussed in a preliminary way. Then I propose to leave it until those hon. gentlemen are present who are more deeply interested in the subject. As I was saying, we want to provide for a condition which exists for the time being. These rights which have been brought into a condition of uncertainty by the decision of the court, are of large financial importance, and it is not a sound policy that great interests should remain without legal standing, even for the space of a few months, when the authority of parliament is sufficient to cure that condition. One purpose of the Bill is to validate for the time being rights which were granted, but the foundation of which has been taken away by the decision of the court. The other purpose of the Bill is to enable the granting of new rights under the authority of the Dominion, so long as the authority rests in the Dominion, so that the development of water-power and water-rights in the belt will not be tied up or affected, pending a final decision of the Privy Council. Briefly, the purpose of the Bill is to relieve a deadlock in the situation in regard to water-rights in the railway belt of the province of British Columbia, resulting from the decision of the court, and pending a final decision by the Privy Council.

Progress reported.

VOLUNTEER BOUNTY ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. OLIVER moved the second reading of Bill (No. 163) to amend the Volunteer Bounty Act, 1908. He said: The Bill contains practically only one provision, it is a provision to allow the extension of one year for the location of bounty warrants, the issue of which was authorized under the Volunteer Bounty Act, 1908. Under that Act the location of bounty warrants was authorized up to the end of 1910. The Act was passed in 1908, and the rights under it expire at the end of 1910. As the persons who were entitled to this bounty were scattered all over the world, you might say, it was a considerable time before they all heard of the rights that had been accorded them under the Act. As it took a considerable time in some cases to establish their rights, it has been felt that the time allowed for the exercise of those rights was at least not more than enough to do justice to the case. At the same time it must be admitted that there was sufficient time if reasonable energy had been used on the part of all parties interested. On the other hand, there was this precedent which was present in the minds of many of those who were interested, that in no previous case had the right to bounties which were granted by parliament been terminated at the end of the first term of the grant. In the case of the volunteers of the first, second and third Red river expeditions, and in the case of the volunteers of 1885, the rights which were terminable on a certain date were extended from year to year by further Acts of parliament, and in every case there was a number of extensions, so that when the time given for location was so comparatively short and when the beneficiaries were so widely scattered it was felt that it was perhaps hardly fair, that, there having been such precedent for an extension of time, there should be no extension of time in this case.

Mr. SPROULE. Why do you not make it 1912 instead of 1911? There are only nine months until 1911. It is a very short time.

Mr. OLIVER. The request was made by a number of volunteers for an extension of time until the end of 1912; that is a further extension of two years. Against that the view is taken that it is not sound policy to allow this privilege for any longer time than is absolutely necessary, and we agreed to ask parliament for an extension of one year chiefly for the purpose of removing any claim of hardship that might possibly exist and yet give no longer time than was absolutely necessary to enable the grantees to get the full benefits of their grants.

Mr. HUGHES. What is the meaning of section 4?

Mr. OLIVER. For that reason the Bill asks merely for an extension of time for a period of one year. The amendment that I have spoken of is found in sections 2 and 3. Section 4 is a minor provision, and yet it is perhaps well that it should be explained. When the actual grant was issued, in some cases it was lost, and there is no provision for the re-issuing of any lost scrip. At the same time it is felt that if there had been an actual loss, the person who was entitled should not suffer if the loss could be proven in order to protect all interests. While the person who was entitled to this scrip was allowed to make entry for the amount of land that the scrip called for, before he was allowed to do so he was required to put up a bond with the department to the amount of $3,000 as security in case the scrip should actually turn up and its location be demanded by some person else. A guarantee company would charge a considerable amount of money as a consideration for putting up a bond of $3,000. It was felt that if we were going to extend the time for the location of this scrip, that is if we were going to lengthen the period during which this scrip shall be of value, that lengthening of the period was placing an added burden upon the person who had given the bond, so that instead of carrying the bond until the end of 1910 he would be compelled to carry it until the end of 1911, and we thought it was not fair that he should be required to carry the bond beyond the time for which the scrip was originally valid. So, by section 4 of the Act, we provide that in the specific cases in which the scrip has been lost and a bond has been put up with the department, the particular scrips mentioned in the schedule on the back of the Bill are not valid after the end of 1910. The provision in section 5 is to get over a flaw which occurred in the drafting of the Act passed in 1908 by which there was a contradiction in terms. While the Bill declared that the rights should only be in accordance with the Homestead Act, there was certain wording which seemed to indicate that the right of locating under the Act did not require to be exercised until the end of the year 1910. As there was a contradiction in terms of the Act the department administered it in accordance with what was believed to be sound public policy, and in accordance with the intent of parliament. Therefore, it was administered in accordance with the terms of the Homestead Act. Occupancy of the land was insisted upon within six months after the date of entry. Under an order in council, before the scrip was granted an agreement was signed by the grantee that he would conform to that requirement, and section 5 of this Act is for the purpose of validating that order in council. These are the three provisions of the Bill, one of major importance, extending the time for location of the scrip for one year until the end of 1911, the other two of minor importance, one arising out of the administration, providing for certain accidents which have occurred, and the third curing an error in the wording of the original Act.

Mr. BLAIN. May I ask the minister how many volunteers have taken advantage of the bounty, and how many it is expected will take advantage of it before its expiration? I may say that there is some criticism in the press, and some circulars have been issued, stating that this extension of time is more in the interest of the speculator in this land than in that of the volunteer. No doubt all this information has been communicated to the minister. Perhaps he would be good enough to state to the committee whether, in his opinion, this extension is more in the interest of the volunteer or the speculator?

Mr. OLIVER. The answer depends on how many of these grants still remain to the benefit of the volunteer and how many have passed out of his hands into the hands of the speculator. If more than half are in the hands of the speculator the extension will certainly benefit the speculator more than the volunteers. If some are still in the hands of the volunteers it will certainly benefit the volunteers more than the speculators. However, that was not a feature of the case that was considered. The desire was that the volunteer should receive the full benefit that it was intended he should receive, and if he retains his scrip, whether he was in the majority or in the minority, our desire was that he should get the full benefit. That was the case that was pressed upon us by the representatives of the volunteers that called upon the government. In the original Bill the principle was accepted by the House that the person who acquired the scrip from the volunteer should stand in exactly the same position as to his rights as the volunteer himself. It was the interest of the volunteer that it should be so, it was the will of parliament it should be so, and parliament having so decided in the interest of the volunteer the government in preparing the Bill did not draw any distinction between the scrip, which was still in the hands of the volunteers, and the scrip which had passed out of their hands into the hands of speculators.

Mr. HUGHES. When the Bill was introduced I drew the attention of the minister to that aspect of the case. These young volunteers had almost given up hope of getting scrip, because year after year excuse was given by the government: first they were not sure whether they would retain control of the Dominion lands when the provinces were established, and having retained control the government for years hesitated before they issued the scrip. Had the volunteers known when they returned from South Africa in 1900 to 1902, that the scrip would be issued in 1908, or had it been known in 1908 that they would have had until 1910 to settle on the homesteads, they would have laid up some money to enable them to make a start. But, they were only given to the end of 1910 when the scrip was issued, and many of them being unable to raise the necessary funds to go to their homesteads by that date, they sold their scrip at a sacrifice to these dealers all over the country, who like all other dealers, were some of them honest and some most unscrupulous. A number of these volunteers were practically swindled out of this scrip by these dealers. It would be a scandal to give these speculators the advantage of this extension of time provided for in the Bill. If any advantage is to accrue to any one it should accrue to the volunteer who sold this scrip. The volunteer who is not yet located should get two years extension, but the speculator should not be entitled to any advantage. He beat the volunteers —why in this very city one of these speculators got a young man to sell him the scrip for $10, and the Minister of Militia took the precaution to get the Minister of the Interior to provide in the Act that any agreement for the sale of the scrip before it was issued should be cancelled. That was done to protect the volunteers. It is very easy to provide that the speculator shall not get this advantage by adding a clause to that effect to the Bill. There is another aspect of the case to which I wish to call attention. Unfortunately two or three of these young fellows died on the way to South Africa, and in the case of one who died in the Gulf of the St. Lawrence, his friends received the scrip, but it was refused to the friends of others, the excuse being given that in the first place the scrip was issued without understanding the technicalities of the law. I hold that as the minister granted the scrip in one case he is in duty bound to do it in the others, and if the law does not permit him to, he should have the law changed. I also maintain that the men who enlisted and went to Halifax, and through accident or illness were prevented from going to the seat of war, are entitled to the scrip. Then again, I cannot understand why the civil surgeons did not get scrip. In the first place I do not know why the civil surgeons were not enrolled, because in the columns I had anything to do with they were all enrolled. However, in many localities, the civil surgeons remained civil surgeons to the end of the war. But, they were in the thick of the fight, and they are, in my opinion, absolutely entitled to scrip. Again, I say to the minister, that it would be a scandal to give this extension of time to the speculator, who practically got the scrip for nothing from the volunteers. I know two or three cases where the boys borrowed money and went out to settle, but in other cases they were not so fortunate, and were obliged to sell the scrip at whatever was considered to be the market value. Again I say that the speculators should not be allowed to still further profit at the expense of the volunteers.

Mr. CROSBY. I hold that the men who garrisoned the city of Halifax before any volunteers were sent out to South Africa from Canada, and who took the place of the Imperial troops to allow them to go to South Africa, are entitled to scrip. These men enlisted as soldiers of the King and they could be sent to South Africa at any moment, and are entitled to consideration. I brought this matter to the attention of the minister last year, and I hope that tonight he will be able to tell us that the men who garrisoned Halifax will get their scrip the same as the others.

Mr. BURRELL. Some time ago the minister told me that he was considering whether he would open a portion of the railway belt for location under this scrip. I would be glad to know if he has yet reached a decision on that point.

Mr. OLIVER. Nothing has been done in that direction. Provision is not made in either the Bounty Act, or the Dominion Lands Act for location within the railway belt, and I hardly think that it would be in the interest of settlement in the railway belt that such a provision should be made. There are some 7,000 of these grants which call for 320 acres of land each, and it seems to me that the injury, may I say, that is done on the prairies, where the land exists in millions of acres, is so serious from the establishment of this number of special grants, that if it were transferred to the limited area of the railway belt of British Columbia, I am afraid that it would tend against the development of the railway belt to a degree that would be very injurious to the interests of the province. I shall be quite prepared to discuss the matter at a later date, though I may say that it is not involved in any way in this Bill.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I would like to ask the hon. minister if he did not give out the statement last year, when this House was in session, that there would be no extension of time.

Mr. OLIVER. Not that I have any remembrance of.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I regret that the minister has such a short memory. I would like further to know what reasons there are at the present time for extending the time. I object to that, at any rate with regard to scrip held by speculators. I think it is wrong in every sense of the word. I believe it is entirely justifiable that the men who went to South Africa and took their chances for the sake of the old flag, should be allowed all the opportunity possible to take advantage of the concession granted them by the government; but the speculators, as everybody knows, as the minister himself knows, bought the rights from these volunteers for a nominal sum; and I think it is a shame to enable these men to enrich themselves at the expense of the volunteers, and of this country by changing the law in this way. I know of my own knowledge that no later than January last a certain speculator of Winnipeg, representing the old grafting bunch there, came to Ottawa, interviewed this government, and then telegraphed to a broker in Winnipeg: Buy up all the scrip you can, at whatever price you can get it.' Scrip was bought at $750—320 acres of land for less than $2.50 an acre. I strongly object to that sort of thing, not because I happen to be on one side of the House, and my hon. friend on the other side, but I object to it as a matter of right and wrong. Protect the volunteers, and the people of Canada, but do not play into the hands of speculators. As I do not wish to detain the House, I will leave whatever other remarks I have to make until we go into Committee of the Whole on the Bill.

Mr. STEWART. I would like to say a word on behalf of those volunteers who lost their lives at sea on the way to South Africa. In Hamilton there are two widows whose sons, the only support they had volunteered and started for South Africa. One of them died on the way, and was buried at sea; the other died after he had landed in South Africa, and was buried there. These widows I know to be very much in need of support, and this grant would be of very great assistance to them. When the Act was passed I do not believe it was the intention to leave out those volunteers who died at sea. I have spoken to some of the ministers on the subject, and they have practically admitted that it was a mistake to put through the Act in that form. I appeal to the minister to take into consideration these cases. There is no good argument why the grant should not be made to those who died at sea; they practically did as much as those who went to South Africa, and fought and came back. I do not think anybody will object to this, as it is only fair, and I would like the minister to add a clause to the Bill providing for cases of this kind.

Mr. ROCHE. Few of us, especially from the west, have not received letters, and petitions from public bodies, and individuals opposing this Bill. Grain Growers' Associations all through Manitoba have passed resolutions condemnatory of such an extension of time. The Grain Growers' 'Guide,' the official organ of the grain growers of Manitoba, contains the following strong article condemning the extension of time as a crowd of speculators will be the beneficiaries. The article is as follows:

Hon. Frank Oliver has introduced a Bill into the House of Commons to extend the time for settlement duties to begin on South African scrip until the end of 1911. This action is taken by Mr. Oliver despite the vigorous protests made by western farmers' associations. He knows that the scrip is now held by speculators and that his Bill will simply be a means of robbing western farmers still further. It is hard to understand how Mr. Oliver, with his eyes wide open, can take the part of the land grabbers against the bona fide farmers of the west. It begins to look as though the interests of the people were regarded very lightly at Ottawa. At the rate things are going a farmer will have to contribute more largely than ever to the support of the wealthy and privileged classes. Mr. Oliver is Minister of the Interior and is supposed to be looking after the interests of the settlers in the west. Instead of that he seems to be promoting legislation in the interests of the land grabbers.

This is a pointed and strong expression, no doubt elicited by the fact that these protests must have been sent to the Minister of the Interior, and his department, and apparently no attention has been paid to them. The principal reason advanced by the minister is that a precedent has been established in other land grants. I am not conversant with the conditions of other land grants, but present day conditions cannot be compared with conditions when the other grants were made. Immigrants are coming in by thousands; in a few years we will have little good land left for free homesteading purposes, and the speculators will utilize the scrips for their own aggrandisement, and to the disadvantage of the bona fide settler. It has been argued that if an extension of time is refused, all the grants will be placed on the market at the same time, causing a fall in price. If you discriminate, and allow the extension only to the veterans who hold their land this will be obviated, whereas if there is an extension to include all grants, the prices will be enhanced, and the speculators will be the beneficiaries. I have seen it stated in a Winnipeg paper that since the Bill was introduced there has been a rise in the value of these land grants, and if the Bill passes there will be a further rise. At a meeting of the Grain Growers' Association at Shoal lake the other day a resolution was about to be put against the granting of an extension of time, but a prominent friend of gentlemen opposite asked the meeting not to pass the resolution saying it would not be necessary, because they had the assurance of the Prime Minister that no extension would be granted. By reason of that statement the resolution was not passed. I will not say such a promise was made, but that information, wherever obtained, was the means of heading off that resolution. We object to the speculator being the chief beneficiary as he would be if the Bill passed in its present form.

Mr. NESBITT. In what way would it rob the farmers of the west if this extension were made?

Mr. ROCHE. Some of the farmers are themselves desirous of getting the scrip as bona fide settlers, and if this Bill passes the price will be so enhanced that it will be beyond their reach. The speculator will not settle on the land, but many farmers would like to get the lands, and this will put them beyond their reach.

Mr. NESBITT. Would they not be speculators if they did?

Mr. ROCHE. No, they would settle on the lands or purchase them for their sons.

Mr. NESBITT. If I had scrip I would have to place somebody on the land.

Mr. ROCHE. If the hon. gentleman was trafficking in this it would not be either to locate some one or to settle there himself.

Mr. NESBITT. Suppose I were.

Mr. ROCHE. You can suppose whatever you like, but the ordinary speculator is not putting any one on the land.

Mr. NESBITT. Men whom I know who have bought scrip have put people on the land.

Mr. SEALEY. There are two sides to the question, and the pressure has not all been from the speculator. I know of two cases in Wentworth of people who were unable to accumulate a sufficient fund to settle on the land, and who would be obliged to sell out at a very small price if they could not have an extension until they could accumulate a sufficient fund to go on the land.

Mr. CAMPBELL. We have no objection to that.

Mr. SEALEY. I fancy that a quite large percentage of the urgency for this extension has come from that source, and so far as I know none has come from the speculative side of the question. I think the minister's action is to meet the case largely of the genuine volunteer who has not been able so far to accumulate enough to settle. I think the speculative class is small compared to the bona fide volunteer who wishes to settle.

Mr. NESBITT. I am not interested in scrip, I have never bought any because I have never had the money to buy it, but at the same time I know a number of young men who have scrip who have not sold it to speculators, but would be willing to sell it for a satisfactory price. If the extension would enhance the value the probabilities are that the original holder would also benefit as much as the so-called speculator. A few men from our section went to South Africa, and I do not know of any case where they were in any way defrauded about their scrip. A good many in my opinion got full value for their scrip, and the men who bought the scrip have not been able to get men to go on the land and locate for them. I know that they have been endeavouring, some of them very earnestly, to get men to go out and locate on the land. They personally do not want to go. For my part, I am not so much down on the so-called speculator. There is a speculation in everything we do, if we apply it in that way. I think there is nobody here who would not be ready to buy a lot in the city of Ottawa and sell it for an advance in price. I do not see why the man who bought this land from the young man who refused to locate on it should not have the same opportunity to get even with the money he has expended as anybody else. There is too much agitation against so-called speculation, but I do not know any gentlemen who are not perfectly willing to take an advance in price on anything they happen to buy, from a steer to a farm.

Mr. MACDONALD. There are, as my hon. friend from North Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt) has said, two sides to this question. Hon. members on the other side should remember that when the Act was passed, everybody in the House and country contemplated that a very large number of young men who went to South Africa, would not go to the Northwest to settle. Indeed, many hon. members would not have supported the Bill if they had thought that many of these men would remove from the places in which they resided. It was expected that a large number of these young men in the east would dispose of their rights and receive the money. I was one of those who pressed upon the minister the importance of extending the time, and I spoke particularly on behalf of at least four young men in my own country entitled to receive this scrip, who had not made the location and were not in a position to get a title. I say that these young men had a perfect right to have this extension given.

Mr. CAMPBELL. We all agree with you.

Mr. MACDONALD. But there is no good in agreeing that there shall be an extension, and at the same time preventing the sale of the scrip at a figure that will give the owner as much as he ought to get out of it. The hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Roche) made it clear that his object is to lessen the value of the scrip in the hands of the bona fide veterans. I do not think that the House will agree with that. It may be that some gentlemen in the west would prefer to get this land cheaper than it would be possible to get it with the whole Dominion in competition for it, including the bona fide speculator, as the hon. member for North Oxford has said I think the men to be first considered are the boys who went to South Africa, and I think the solution of this whole thing is to keep in mind the idea that they should get as much out of it as they can. I think there can be no reasonable objection to the extension. Some of these young men waited, thinking that they could go out, thinking that home conditions would permit of their going. I think it would be unreasonable to say that no extension shall be given, and still more unreasonable to give the extension, and at the same time impair the value of the scrip.

Mr. DOHERTY. I agree that we should not do anything to impair the value of the scrip in the hands of the volunteer, who originally got it, and whom parliament intended should be benefited. But, if I understood the hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton (Mr. Hughes), his proposition was to deny the benefits of this Bill to scrip bought by people for speculative purposes before the passing of this Bill. And in that I agree with him. In answer to the hon. member for North Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt), I would point out that, with regard to scrip already sold, the volunteer got the value of that scrip with its standing restrictions and limitations. If that scrip had been good for an additional year, it would have been worth more money to the man who bought it—he would have had larger opportunity. But the volunteer got just what it was worth as scrip giving the limited right to locate before the end of 1910. Now, this measure is going to add value to that scrip by giving this extension of a year. That value ought to go to the volunteer who holds his scrip and wants to sell it. The day after this Bill is passed, he ought to be able to sell it on the basis of the extended time. But I do not see why we should allow legislation to give to the man who bought the scrip for speculative purposes a greater value than he bought, none of that added value inuring in any way to the benefit of the man who sold it. If the volunteer had known that the time was going to be extended for a year, he could have sold his scrip at a higher figure. The country is coming now to the rescue of the man who bought the scrip with the knowledge that the period for location would run out at the end of this year, and paid a price accordingly. We are going to make him a present of an advanced value that will not benefit the volunteer. It would not be a difficult thing to make the amendment suggested. There is a section in the Act restricting its application with regard to particular cases mentioned in the schedule. The amendment could be made by introducing into the fourth section after the word 'Act' in the second line these words:

Or any bounty certificate that has been, prior to the passing of this Act, sold or transferred to any person acquiring the same for purposes of speculation or re-sale.

This would simply except cases where parties have bought this scrip as terminable at the end of the year. The expression 'for purposes of speculation or re-sale' are introduced so as to make the exception inapplicable in case the volunteer has given his scrip to his children, or to a relative gratuitously. The holder of the scrip in such a case ought not to be prevented from getting all that is coming to him. But I do not think we ought to legislate in such a way as to give the speculator more than he bought and paid for.

Mr. W. M. MARTIN. I was interested in the remarks of the hon. member from Hamilton (Mr. Stewart), and the two cases of real hardship that he mentioned. These cases are ones for which, unfortunately, provision was not made in the original Bill. And, as the Bill before us simply provides for an extension of the time under the Act, for locating the scrip, such cases as the hon. member referred to cannot be taken into account at this time. With regard to the application of the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Crosby), he seems to ask on behalf of men who remained in Halifax while others went out to fight the battles of the empire in South Africa. There was a point made by the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Campbell) with respect to the value of the scrip that was being sold, and he seemed to convey the idea that it was being sold for $2 per acre, and that carried the right to get 320 acres. I understand that the South African Volunteer Bounty Act carries the right to locate 320 acres, but the man who locates it must go and perform homestead duty on the land. Now I am in favour of the Bill for the reason that there has been, particularly throughout the country from which I come, a general sentiment during the past year that the time for the location of South African scrip would be extended. To draw a distinction between men who are holding scrip for speculative purposes, and men who will actually locate on the land, and live on it, and perform their residence duties, I think is impossible. I know a number of men who live near the city of Regina, farmers who have already homesteaded there, and who have bought that scrip for the purpose of locating, and going actually on the land. If a man does not locate on it before the end of this year, he would come under the head of what some hon. gentlemen are pleased to call speculators. I submit that those farmers who have bought that scrip honestly in open market are just as much entitled to consideration as the men who were original holders, and are still holding the scrip. Like the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Roche), I have seen the resolution passed by the Western Grain Growers, though I have not had any representations made by them to me in opposition to the Bill as proposed. I have only had one letter protesting against an extension of time proposed in the Bill. It is quite true that the Saskatchewan Grain Growers' convention at Prince Albert did pass a resolution opposing an extension of time on the ground that the scrip had gradually drifted into the hands of speculators. I must say that I know in my vicinity some men who have bought scrip, and are holding it for speculative purposes, but they bought the scrip honourably in open market, and I do not see why they should not be entitled to consideration. I have had representations made to me asking for an extension of time. There is a South African volunteer association of Canada which sent out petitions for an extension of time, not to the end of 1911, but to the end of 1912. They do not ask that they alone be granted an extension of time, they do not ask that speculators be excepted from the Bill, but they ask for an extension of time generally. I have before me a copy of the petition, and one of the arguments used in it appears to be a very reasonable one. It says:

> Unless the time is extended a premium will be put upon speculation, and instead of the volunteer reaping the benefit of the grant he will be forced in every case where he cannot arrange to make entry during the year 1909 to sacrifice his right and assign it for whatever may be offered at a time when the speculator in scrip is able to force a sale at a depreciation.

It seems to me there is considerable force in that argument, which is used by the volunteers themselves. If they do not get an extension they will be forced to sell their scrip at a depreciated value, because many of these men are not in a position to perform their settlement duties.

Mr. BEATTIE. If the case mentioned by the hon. member for Hamilton is correct, a great injury would be done to these two men. He states that two families have lost a son each. Now, those men were passed by the doctor as good, healthy men, they started on the trip to South Africa, but Providene did not permit them to get there, and they died at sea. I think those men are just as much entitled to scrip as any man who arrived there and fought on the battlefield. They went there for the purpose of doing their duty, and had they arrived there no doubt they would have done their duty. I think a great injury will be done to the families of those two men if scrip is not granted to them. I look upon those two men as just as deserving as any men who were shot on the battlefields. If scrip is not granted to those two families more injury will be done to them than by extending the time in favour of any other persons. I hope the minister will take these two cases into his favourable consideration.

Mr. HERRON. I hope when the Bill reaches the committee stage that the minister will favourably consider the extension of these privileges to those men who enlisted and left their homes for the purpose of going to South Africa, but who, through accident or illness, became invalided. I think their legal representatives or nearest of kin should be entitled to the same consideration as those who served in South Africa and returned. In particular, I think that any man who enlisted in a regular way, who started out to perform his duties, who loyally obeyed orders, and was injured while doing his duty, should receive all the benefits of the Act. I think there are only a few cases of that kind, probably not more than a dozen, in the whole of Canada. I have only heard of two or three cases of that kind, and I hope the minister will consider them favourably.

Mr. WALLACE. Is this the last extension there will be of this Volunteer Bounty Act?

Mr. OLIVER. I cannot answer that question. There is no extension yet, nor will there be an extension unless parliament should agree to the Bill which I now present to it. If my hon. friend wants my own view, I would say, certainly not, I would not think favourably of any further extension.

Mr. WALLACE. I think this Bill is rather unfair to a certain number of men who had to sell their scrip, and who had no knowledge that the time was going to be extended, while some others held on to it. I think the minister should say definitely now whether this is the last extension or not. It is only fair that the man who holds scrip now should know whether this is the last extension. The government must have some knowledge of that, and they should say now what their intention is.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

Progress reported.

Mr. FIELDING moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What business will be taken up to-morrow?

Mr. FIELDING. We propose in the morning to take concurrence on the remaining items of the supplementary estimates for the year just closed, including the special Supply Bill, and confined entirely to those items. That, I expect, will only take a short time, and after that the Race Track Bill, I understand, will have precedence.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 11.50 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, April 6, 1910.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS STAFF.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I beg to lay on the table a recommendation by the Speaker with regard to the reorganization of the staff of this House.

POST OFFICE AMENDMENT ACT.

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 197 to amend the Post Office Act. He said: There are only two lines in this Bill. The explanations which are on the order paper are taken into consideration by the House. This Bill is only to supplement them. I am obliged to transfer the superintendents of Railway Mail Clerks for the operation of the Post Office Act to that of the Civil Service Act.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS.

QUEBEC-LEVIS MAIL SERVICE.

1. Has the contract for the mail service between Quebec and Lévis been awarded? If so, to whom was it awarded?
2. How many tenders have been received, and who was the highest and the lowest tenderer?

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX:

1. Yes, the contract was awarded to the Lévis Ferry, Ltd.
2. Two tenders were received, the higher being from the Quebec and Lévis Ferry Company, Ltd., and the lower from the Lévis Ferry, Ltd.

INDIAN INDUSTRIAL SCHOOLS.

Mr. LAKE:

1. What decision has the government come to in regard to the continuance or otherwise of the system of Industrial Schools for Indians? If it is decided to change the system, what policy will be adopted and what measures will be taken to carry the new policy into effect?
2. Does the government propose to close the Indan Industrial School at Regina? If so, is it proposed to open any boarding schools in lieu thereof?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER:

1. The government intends to continue the system of industrial or rather residential, schools for Indians.
2. Yes. By agreement with the authorities of the Presbyterian Church, by whom the Regina Industrial school is conducted, increased residential school and other accommodation is to be given in lieu thereof.

RAILWAY MAIL CLERKS

Mr. MACDONELL:

Is it the intention of the government to favourably consider the application of the railway mail clerks for betterment of their position and increased salary made to the government in the month of January last?

Mr. LEMIEUX. The Post Office Department is in receipt of many petitions from the stampers and sorters of the city post offices throughout the Dominion pointing out that a material increase had been granted to the railway mail clerks a few years ago; that whilst they were doing practically the same work they were receiving very much less remuneration, and asking, in view of the similarity of the work, that the two branches be put on the same footing. It was further pointed out that the mileage granted to the railway mail clerks in addition to their salary placed them in a still more favourable condition, and many other reasons were given as to why the stampers and sorters should be placed on the same basis, exclusive of mileage, as the railway mail clerks. So strongly did the sorters in the city offices put forward their case that the department has decided during the recess of parliament to go into the merits and demerits of the whole matter, and no action, therefore, will be taken this year as regards a change in the status of the railway mail clerks.

DUTY ON LINOTYPE MACHINES.

Mr. BLAIN:

Is it the intention of the government to remove the duty on linotype machines?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING. It is not the intention of the government to propose any tariff changes during the present session beyond what are now before the House.

Mr. L. F. CLARRY.

Mr. LENNOX:

1. In what transactions or cases has the government engaged the services of Mr. L. F. Clarry, lately of Hastings, barrister, as solicitor or agent; and who was the claimant, vendor, or releasor with whom the government was dealing in such cases?

2. What was the nature of Mr. Clarry's employment, and what was the date of his instructions in each instance?

Annexed hereto is a sample of the letter of instructions sent to Mr. Clarry, in these matters, with a printed copy of instructions attached. A circular was sent to him and to the other agents having in charge claims for damages for drowned lands, in which they were informed that $20 and disbursements was considered a reasonable allowance for their services in each case, but that in case there were more than one lot, the title to which required to be examined, they would be allowed $10 for each additional lot. The letter of instructions is in these words:

January 29, 1909.

Trent Canal,
Michael Francis Lynch.
Sir,

I have the honour to inclose herewith copy of an order in council dated 22nd inst., authorizing the settlement of the claim presented by the above claimant for damages to his land by the waters of the Trent Canal; also the agreement from him to settle for $1,050, and I am to request you to investigate the title and obtain a deed of release from him if the title is satisfactory, the release to be for future as well as past damages. A copy of my printed instructions to agents is herewith inclosed for your information and guidance.

NATIONAL TRANSCONTINENTAL RAILWAY AND QUEBEC BRIDGE—VARIOUS EXPENDITURES.

Mr. LENNOX asked:

1. In connection with the Transcontinental Railway, eastern division, what amount has been paid or agreed to be paid to the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company for surveys?

2. What is the total amount outside of the amount paid the Grand Trunk, expended by the government for surveying and locating the line?

3. What is the total expenditure to date for engineers and other employees superintending, overseeing or having charge of the work of construction?

4. What is the total cost to date of and in connection with the office of the Commissioners, including rentals, supplies, salaries, &c., &c.?

5. What is the government's share of the total rent to date for terminal facilities at Winnipeg under arrangement with the Canadian Northern, and why should we incur this liability at all?

6. What was the actual cost to the country of the Quebec Bridge, if anything, before it was taken over from the company?

7. What amount did the government assume or pay when they took over the undertaking?

8. What was the total cost of the investigation into and in connection with the collapse of the Quebec Bridge?

9. What is the total cost of investigation, plans, specifications, advertisements, consultations, advice, expert and other services and preparations for rebuilding the Quebec Bridge?

10. What are the materials, structures, and works necessary for the completion of the railway, in a condition to be handed over to the company which are not included in the two contracts let; and what is the total estimated expenditure, not including anything for the Quebec Bridge, required to cover these items?

11. What amounts will be required to cover each of the classes of expenditure referred to in paragraph 10, and how much has been incurred or expended to date under each heading?

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM. This is very lengthy and very intricate, and it will probably take some weeks to get the information asked for. I would ask that this be allowed to stand as a notice of motion.

Mr. SPEAKER. Stand as notice of motion for a return.

TRADE NEGOTIATIONS WITH THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. A. C. BOYCE. I desire to ask the government whether the report in the New York 'Sun' of March 27 last, a few lines of which I will read, is substantially correct with regard to the negotiations between the President of the United States and the Dominion of Canada on the subject of the arrangement of tariff duties:

Through Dr. James B. Macdonald, editor of the Toronto 'Globe,' the President arranged for the Albany conference with Mr. Fielding, and by his diplomatic tact with the latter he has been able to obtain sufficient concessions to justify him in declaring that Canada is not unduly discriminatory.

I would ask the right hon. leader of the government to state whether that report is substantially correct?

Mr. FIELDING. There are several thoughts in the quotation. What particular point of my hon. friend's question——

Mr. BOYCE. I will read the quotation again.

Mr. FIELDING. I do not want to answer as to words but as to substance. If the hon. gentleman will state——

Mr. BOYCE. I ask whether this statement is true, that through the editor of the Toronto 'Globe' the President arranged for the Albany conference with Mr. Fielding?

Mr. FIELDING. I would not say that it is true, but there is a foundation of truth for it. Mr. Macdonald was in Washington, as any other visitor might be, obtaining impressions as to the situation. On his return to Canada, he mentioned, in the course of conversation with the Prime Minister and myself, that the American government would like to resume negotiations with the Canadian government, and, if there was an assurance that the Canadian government would be willing to meet them, he thought an invitation would be sent. We said that we would be happy to resume negotiations at any time upon the invitation of the proper authority. Thereupon, the President sent me a telegram expressing his desire to meet me at Albany and expressing also regret that the Prime Minister was not able to be present. That is the whole story.

Mr. BOYCE. Was Mr. Macdonald sent to Washington to——

Mr. FIELDING. No. We had no knowledge of his movements at Washington. He was there as a private citizen, or as a journalist.

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS.

Mr. W. H. SHARPE. I would ask the Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux) when I may expect the return asked for on February 2nd last in connection with the Wingate post office, Manitoba?

Mr. LEMIEUX. I will inquire immediately after the adjournment.

Mr. CROCKET. I would remind the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) of an order of the House passed for a return of vouchers in connection with the St. John river survey. I would like to have that return before the close of the session.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am inclined to think that return is ready. I had it under consideration a few days ago. I will make inquiries, and I feel sure I can have it brought down almost immediately.

On the orders of the day being called.

THE BOUT DE L'ILE BRIDGE.

Mr. P. A. SEGUIN (L'Assomption). (Translation). Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day are called, I may be permitted to call the attention of the government, and particularly that of the hon. Minister of Railways (Mr. Graham) upon a question of the utmost importance to the county of L'Assomption which I have the honour of representing, and to the other counties in my district. This matter also interests largely the city of Montreal.

By 63 and 64, Victoria, chapter 8, subsection 33, the government of this country granted in 1900 a subsidy of $150,000 to the Chateauguay and Northern Railway Company in the following terms:

To the Chateauguay and Northern Railway Company, for a single track standard railway bridge, with two roadways 10 feet wide, for free vehicular and foot passenger traffic, the same as upon a public highway, from Bout de L'Isle to Charlemagne, at the junction of the Ottawa and St. Lawrence rivers, $150,000.

I have no doubt that this subsidy has been paid to the company, but I do not know whether the latter have fulfilled the conditions upon which this subsidy has been granted.

Instead of constructing a single bridge connecting Bout de L'Isle to Charlemagne, the said company, making use of an island—the Bourbon island—which was in the middle of the river, has erected two bridges, one from Bout de Isle to the southern shore of Bourbon island and the other from the northern shore of Bourbon island to Charlemagne.

The distance is twenty-five to thirty French acres which one has to travel in order to cross that intervening island has never been provided with a suitable road so as to permit the passage from one point to the other, and the numerous farmers conveying their farm produce to the city of Montreal and the travelling public in general have been obliged to travel that distance before any work had been done to put that road in order. The result was unavoidable; that low and marshy ground was turned into a rut almost uninterrupted and often exasperatingly deep. In spite of repeated representations from all quarters, it has been impossible so far to have this unfortunate grievance redressed. The Montreal newspaper, especially 'La Patrie,' as late as last week, in an editorial, demonstrated the inconveniences to which the traveling public of Montreal and of the rural constituencies were subjected to on account of that altogether impassable road. Here is what 'La Patrie' of the 26th March said:

The Bout de l'Ile Bridge.

La 'Patrie' has already called the attention of the federal authorities upon the impassable and dangerous state of the approaches to the Bout de l'Ile bridge.

Thaw has set in. Loaded or pleasure vehicles, wagons, automobiles, etc., going from Bout de l'Ile to Charlemagne, or in the opposite direction, are in danger of getting stalled or of breaking to pieces in the deep ruts at the two ends of the bridge. It is almost impossible to pass there. And such is the situation since the bridge has been open to the public.

Upon whom rests the responsibility of making the necessary repairs? Is it upon the Railways department or upon the Canadian Northern Company?

However it may be, it is really disgraceful to leave an important road as this in such a state of rack and ruin.

We do not know whether the contractors were bound to complete the embankment so as to facilitate the entrance to the bridge, or whether the government inspectors have reported. But it is incumbent upon the federal authorities to complete or have completed without delay that which has too long remained unfinished.

The member from L'Assumption shall undoubtedly renew his representations to the government at the re-opening of parliament.

The members of the city and the island of Montreal shall join with him to put a stop to that intolerable situation.

Every summer thousands of vehicles and automobiles cross the Bout de l'Ile bridge. If the approaches are not soon repaired, accidents will surely happen, entailing probably loss of life.

We instantly request the government to send an inspector there and to have the necessary repairs made.

Last year, to prevent circulation from being altogether interrupted at that place which had become dangerous, some people clubbed together in making ameliorations, and I had to put up some money myself towards that and the work we have done has been rather temporary, did not give a very passable road but rendered it less perilous.

And now that road is almost impassable. I think it is incumbent upon the government, who have granted leave to use that island instead of building a bridge over it, to relieve the travelling public which is suffering so much from that situation. Therefore. I humbly suggest to the hon. Minister of Railways that it is high time that redress be given to the thousands and thousands of people using that bridge, and that within the shortest delay an inspection and a report be made if need be, in order to fix the responsibilities of the subsidized company and to have it fulfilling its obligations.

Thus justice will be rendered to my constituents.

Mr. C. A. WILSON. (Laval). (Translation). Mr. Speaker, I would like to add a few words to the remarks of the hon. member for L'Assomption.

Mr. SPEAKER. I must observe to the hon. member that I cannot allow the discussion to go on upon this question at this moment. I have allowed the hon. member for L'Assomption to state his grievances as a question of privilege, but a discussion upon these grievances would be out of order.

Mr. WILSON. (Translation. If I am out of order, Mr. Speaker, I will take my seat. I intended only to endorse the remarks of the member for L'Assomption, and I would have done so with great pleasure, because a great many of my constituents are interested in the remedying of this grievance.

Mr. GRAHAM. I regret that I am not able to answer the hon. gentleman in the language he has used, but I may surprise the House some day by undertaking to do that. In the meantime, I think it will be sufficient to assure my hon. friend from L'Assomption (Mr. Seguin) and my hon. friend from Laval (Mr. Wilson) that I am glad they have brought this matter up. As I understand the remarks of the hon. member for L'Assomption, a grant of $150,000 was made for the construction of that bridge. There is an island in the centre of the river, and the bridge really developed into two bridges, using the island as a means of communication between these two bridges. The complaint made is that the roadway on this island connecting these two bridges is in a very bad condition, and the people complained bitterly. I will take the matter up, and if there is anything possible I can do to straighten it out and have this road put in proper shape I will certainly do so.

WAYS AND MEANS—INTERIM SUPPLY BILL.

Mr. FIELDING moved that the House go into Committee of the Whole on Ways and Means. He said: We have on the order paper now a motion for Ways and Means in connection with the American tariff arrangements, but the debate on that motion was adjourned. I wish it to be understood that that motion will be restored, so that the matter will stand in exactly the same position. I now propose that the House should go into Ways and Means, but we do not propose to take up the American question. Then the former motion will stand again for Ways and Means, and when that motion is renewed, the question of tariff arrangements will be considered. The only point is whether I have the right to move an adjournment.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. We can easily regulate the matter, but it had better be done in accordance with the rules of the House. The motion which was called by Mr. Speaker was for resuming the adjourned debate on the motion to go into Ways and Means, under which, of course, the debate would be resumed. The minister desires, as a matter of convenience, that we should not resume the debate at the present moment, but that we should go into Committee of Ways and Means for the purpose of dealing with another matter. That can be done provided it is understood that we shall have a motion to go into Committee of Ways and Means for the purpose of resuming the former debate, and that the former debate should go on exactly in the same way as if it were an adjourned debate.

Mr. FIELDING. Quite so; that is my proposal, that the matter shall stand exactly as it is for the present as respects the tariff debate.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I mean as to the rights of speaking.

Mr. FIELDING. Quite so. Those who have spoken already on the matter have exhausted their rights.

Motion agreed to, and House went into committee.

Mr. FIELDING. We are dealing now with the balance of the supplementary estimates for the year 1909-10, which expired a few days ago. I may remind the House that we dealt with a portion of these estimates several weeks ago, and ultimately, following the usual proceeding, a Supply Bill was passed and assented to. But there was a portion of those estimates which, although voted by the House, was not taken in the form of a Supply Bill. The House had dealt with them in Committee of the Whole, but it is necessary that they should be put into a Supply Bill. But it will be inconvenient to wait until the close of the session for that purpose, as it is desirable that the business of the year be closed up as quickly as possible. The present proceeding is that we now pass a Supply Bill covering the balance of the estimates for the year which has just closed. These various votes have been gathered in the usual way by the clerks, and the amount of them is expressed in the resolution which I now beg to move:

Resolved, that towards making good a supply to be granted to His Majesty on account of certain expenses of the public service for the fiscal year ending March, 31, 1910, the sum of $1,646,350.28 be granted out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada.

Motion agreed to, resolution reported, read the second time and agreed to.

Mr. FIELDING moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 196) for granting to His Majesty a certain sum of money for the public service for the financial year ending March 31, 1910.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first and second time, considered in committee, reported, read the third time and passed.

PROCEDURE.

Mr. FIELDING. In connection with the understanding we had a while ago, I move that at its next sitting, the House again resolve itself into Committee of Ways and Means, and that it be taken that the debate stands adjourned. I would like the clerk to record it as an adjourned debate, so that the matter may stand exactly as it was before.

Motion agreed to.

RACE TRACK GAMBLING.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Mr. Speaker, early in the session a Bill was introduced by the hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Miller) which is Bill (No. 6) on the Order Paper, to amend the Criminal Code so as to prohibit betting on race tracks. That Bill was referred to a special committee which has given it a great deal of attention and has now made a report. The Bill has excited a good deal of public interest and I now move, with the object of disposing of the matter, that item 39 on the order paper be now called.

Mr. SPEAKER called Order 39:

House in committee on Bill (No. 6), an Act to amend the Criminal Code (reported from Special Committee as amended).—Mr. Miller.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Is there any understanding as to what length of time the House will give to this Bill?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I am not aware there is any understanding. Reasonable time must be given for the consideration of this Bill like all other Bills.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is there any proposal that the government should deal in a similar way with a number of important items which appear on the Public Bills and Orders. Has the government taken them into consideration?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No. When this Bill was read a second time, I gave an assurance to the House that an opportunity would be given during the session to have the matter dealt with.

Mr. MILLER. I move that the report of the special committee appointed to consider Bill (No. 6) be now adopted.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think the usual procedure is for the House to go into Committee of the Whole.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I have looked for precedents in this matter and I have not been able to find any, although I am quite sure there must be some. When this Bill was read a second time instead of it being referred to a Committee of the Whole it was referred to a special committee. Had it been referred to a Committee of the Whole, and had that committee reported, the question is put by the Speaker: Shall the report be concurred in; and then it is open to any member of the House to move either that it be concurred in or that it be referred back to the Committee of the Whole for the purpose of amending it. True, we have not a report of the Committee of the Whole, but we have a report of the special committee, and I should think that the motion of my hon. friend (Mr. Miller) would be that this report of the committee be concurred in, just the same as if it were a report of the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. When private Bills are referred to a special committee, and when that committee has reported, they come back again to the Committee of the Whole House. Even government measures have been dealt with in that way. I did not know that the point would come up, and hence I have not looked into it, but I never knew of a case in which the report of the special committee was deemed to be an equivalent, or that it should supersede discussion in Committee of the Whole. I should think that this Bill must in some way get before the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. LANCASTER. I agree with the leader of the opposition as to the procedure. Over and over again amendments to the Railway Act have been referred to special committees, but when that special committee reported, the Bills always came back to the Committee of the Whole House. The reference to the special committee has technically no legal effect on this Bill. True, when a private Bill is referred to a special committee, by the rules of the House the special committee may pass or reject the Bill, but a public Bill must always come back to Committee of the Whole House. In fact, the order paper says: that the House go into committee on the Bill, and I submit that is the proper course. The opinion of the special committee may be used for what it is worth in the House, but this Bill being a public Bill the reference to the special committee is merely a cul de sac; it is a lane that it goes down by which it must come back to the House for consideration in Committee of the Whole. The only regular course is for the hon. gentleman (Mr. Miller) to move that the House go into Committee of the Whole House on the Bill.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I call the attention of the Prime Minister to the fact that Order 39 reads:

House in committee on Bill (No. 6), an Act to amend the Criminal Code (reported from Special Committee as amended).

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That settles it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The Lord's Day Act went to a special committee in the same way as this Bill, and when the report was made the Bill was considered in Committee of the Whole House.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. My hon. friend (Mr. Miller) had better move that the Bill be referred to Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman will have leave to withdraw his motion that the report of the special committee be adopted

Mr. MEDERIC MARTIN. He can withdraw the Bill.

Motion withdrawn.

Mr. MILLER moved that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the House to go into Committee of the Whole on Bill (No. 6) to amend the Criminal Code (reported from special committee as amended). He said: Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased that the Bill was referred to a special committee, because that committee has been able to take a great deal of evidence, which I am sure most members have read, and which tends to prove the great extent of the evil which the Bill is desired to counteract and prohibit. The question under discussion has been very much narrowed in its scope. I refer hon. gentlemen to the report of the committee for the following citation, and I may say that Mr. McCarthy referred to there was one of the solicitors employed by the opponents of the Bill:

Mr. McCOLL. Do I understand that you are willing to co-operate with the promoters of the Bill, with the committee, in abolishing all the evils, if any, that result from hand-book betting, the operations of pool rooms and the sending out of information by telegraph or otherwise.

Mr. McCARTHY. Absolutely. We do not hope to carry on hand-book betting, or giving information to pool rooms.

Mr. McCOLL. All you wish to protect is——

Mr. McCARTHY. Is betting on the race track while the races are in operation.

Then the whole point of the discussion narrows itself down to that particular point—all that the opponents of the Bill desire is betting on the race tracks of a duly licensed association and during the meet. We may well ask ourselves why it is that the opponents of the Bill are willing that the scope of the discussion shall be so limited. In the first place, the professional gambling on the race track during the meet is the only thing that brings any revenue to the association, and, therefore, while the opponents of the Bill say they are willing to give up every thing but that, they are very much in the position of Mark Twain who was willing to sacrifice all his wife's relations. I desire to ask you, Mr. Speaker, whether or not it does not appear to any reasonable, to any sensible, unprejudiced, unbiased man to be rather an absurd thing that while we by our Criminal Code, without any objection from any quarter, make the business of gambling a crime, we shall make an exception of the business of gambling on the race tracks. What good reason can there be why that which is wrong on the street or on a lot adjoining the race track should be perfectly proper and within the law when it takes place on a race track. I do not know what virtue there is in the atmosphere or in the soil or the surroundings of a race track that there makes right that which is pronounced to be wrong in every other place. The opponents of the Bill have laid down three prime, main objections. First, that the thoroughbred horse is necessary to the breeding of good horses; second, that racing is necessary to maintain the thoroughbred; third, that professional betting is necessary in order to maintain racing, and, fourth, (incidentally) that horse racing is the sport of kings and ought not to be interferred with or prohibited. We largely admit the first statement, that the thoroughbred is necessary or of advantage in the breeding of many kinds of horses. But, the second statement, that racing is necessary to maintain the thoroughbred, we will not admit, although it is admitted that the race track is one of the means that is found useful in the development of the thoroughbred horse. The third statement that professional betting is necessary to maintain racing we absolutely deny and refuse to admit. To the fourth allegation, that horse racing is the sport of kings and should not be prevented, we say it has never been the desire or intention of the promoters of the Bill to interfere with horse racing, and we do not think that the Bill, if carried into effect, will do away with horse racing. Again, as to the first statement—and I dwell upon that for a few minutes because it has been made a very strong argument by the opponents of the Bill—let me say that the thoroughbred horse is never used for the improvement of any of the breeds of draft horses. Dr. Rutherford, the Dominion veterinary, who was examined before the committee as a witness in opposition to the Bill, stated in his evidence that the thoroughbred horse was not being used, so far as he knew, by any breeder of standard-bred horses, or by any breeder of hackney horses, either in the United States or Canada. If, then, it is admitted, as it is, even by the opponents of the Bill, that the thoroughbred horse is not used for the improvement of any of the breeds of draft horses, the standard-bred horse or the hackney horse, then surely the class of horses for which it is important to use the thoroughbred is a comparatively small and unimportant class. The evidence, then, of witnesses who came to oppose the Bill, goes to show that the race-track has been the means of lessening the value of the standard-bred horse. Dr. Rutherford, being asked as to that, said:

Men having speed mares have brought them to the fastest stallion they could get without paying any attention whatever to the maintaining of the constitution, the conformation and the general symmetry of the horse.

Another gentleman who gave evidence before the committee in opposition to the Bill was Dr. McEachern, the eminent veterinary surgeon of Montreal. He gave the following evidence:

Q. In breeding the standard bred for extreme speed have they not suffered in other qualities?—A. I think so. There has been a great deal of harm done to the country by breeding from standard bred horses.

Q. Now what I want to ask is whether the same thing has been proved about the thoroughbred, that in breeding the thoroughbred for extreme speed there has been a loss of other good qualities?—A. That is so. It is well known in England that short races have altered the character of the horses and there is a strong feeling in the United States and I know that the feeling exists in Canada that only heavy boned horses should be used for breeding and light boned horses should be eliminated, and it is quite proper. Speaking generally you are quite right.

When he says, 'speaking generally you are quite right', he admits that the race-track has been the cause of deteriorating rather than improving in many instances the thoroughbred horse. He was asked further:

Q. Do you think that the short races in Canada are a real test of proof of endurance on the part of the horses?—A. No.

Q. Then, if horse racing was to be the assistance to horse breeding here that it ought to be one would require to lengthen the races? —A. Yes, would have to breed as large and as heavy as you could get and lengthen the races.

Dr. Rutherford was asked this question:

Q. But talking recently to a man who seems to know a great deal about breeding horses, a lover of horses and a lover of sport, he said to me, and I thought he was very sensible in his remarks, that the present short races run on the running tracks of Canada are really no test or evidence of endurance upon the part of the horses engaged. What do you think about that?—A. That man is quite right.

Thus we have the testimony of the highest authorities in Canada that horse-racing has not improved and is not likely to improve either the standard-bred or the thoroughbred horse. The Hon. Mr. Fisher, Minister of Agriculture, was asked as to the necessity of the race-track, and particularly race-track gambling, to the improvement of the breed of horses. This is what he said—he was asked:

Q. Is it your idea that the race horse of England should be produced and refined as he has come to be, is not a useful horse?—A. He is useful for the purpose for which he is bred.

Q. You think for racing only?—A. Well, not altogether. There is no doubt that there are some of the race-horses, perhaps a considerable number of them, who have the bone and the muscle and the necessary formation to be good breeders for any purpose. But at the same time I have seen, I suppose, a dozen poor things, weeds, on the race courses in England—as I have seen in the few times I have visited the race course in Canada—for one that is any good for breeding purposes.

There is the evidence of the hon. Minister of Agriculture for Canada to the effect that there are on the race courses of both England and Canada a dozen poor horses for every one that would be likely to improve the breed for other purposes! The members of this House will remember very well Mr. Peter Christie, who was a respected member of the last parliament. We all know him as a practical farmer, whose opinions on matters relating to stock raising were of value, because he knew what he was talking about. Mr. Christie was a witness before this committee.

Mr. C. A. WILSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. I do not wish to interrupt my hon. friend in his able argument; but he is claiming some rights on behalf of people who are much interested in the passing of this Bill and is quoting from the evidence that was given before the Special Committee which has considered it. I have a copy of this evidence before me; it covers more than 500 pages. It has not been translated into French, and I know that a number of members of this House have not had the time or the opportunity to read all the evidence, and I am told that the great majority of the members have not read it. To speak for myself alone, I have not had the time to read even one page of that evidence, having been much occupied in the committee dealing with the Lumsden affair, where four of us have to do the work of seven, sitting morning, afternoon and night. Therefore, I am not at all prepared to give my opinion on this Bill or to take part in the discussion, and I would ask my hon. friend from Grey (Mr. Miller), in all fairness and justice—and I know he is moved by a great spirit of fairness and justice—not to proceed any further with his argument now, or until, according to the rule and custom of this parliament, in order to give full effect to the right of the minority in this House to the use of the French language, the evidence given before the Special Committee is translated into French, in accordance with section 133 of the British North America Act, which I have now the honour to invoke.

Mr. MILLER. I believe there is no rule of the House that says that the proceedings of the House must be printed in both languages. I know that there is a rule, No. 71, that says that no Bill shall receive its second reading until it has been printed in both languages. This Bill has received its second reading and has been printed in both French and English.

Mr. SPEAKER. The point of order, as I understand it, is that the consideration of this Bill cannot be proceeded with until the report of the Special Committee to which it was referred is translated into the French language. There is a custom here that reports of special committees may be made in either language, and on the day following their presentation they are printed in the Votes and Proceedings in both languages. Rule 71 says that all Bills shall be printed before the second reading in the English and French language. Previous speakers have held that the point of order that a Bill has not been printed in both languages must be taken before the second reading, and that if it is not taken then it cannot be taken afterwards, and they have allowed then discussions to proceed upon a Bill printed only in one language. In the present case the Bill has been printed in both languages. I have looked in vain since confederation for a precedent to enable me to decide whether or not this Bill could be considered when the report of the Special Committee to which it has been referred has not been translated into both languages. I have found nothing since confederation bearing in that point. I have found a decision given by Mr. Speaker Turcotte, previous to confederation on the 19th of March, 1863, in which he held as follows:

> The adoption of a report of a committee respecting the employees of the House, having been moved by John Simpson, Esq., an objection was raised by H. L. Langevin, Esq., that the report was not printed in French, and distributed to members in that language. After a considerable discussion on the subject, the Speaker was understood to declare: 'that the report could not be considered at present, in consequence of the objection raised.' The subject then dropped.

It is true that section 133 of the British North America Act provides that members may speak in either French or English and that both those languages shall be used in the records and journals of this House. The Votes and Proceedings to-morrow will contain the French version of the report of the committee, but naturally without the evidence. Whether or not, it would be proper to stop all proceedings on this Bill now, is largely a matter for the House to decide. It would practically mean that this Bill could not be proceeded with this session. Under the circumstances, I am not prepared to take that stand, seeing that I have found no precedent since confederation bearing on the point of order. I will therefore, allow the debate to go on.

Mr. C. A. WILSON. It is not only a question of considering the Bill. My hon. friend from Grey had to withdraw his first motion. He then made the motion that the report of the Special Committee should now be brought before the House, and that the House should go into Committee of the Whole to examine the evidence. How can we be in a fair position to examine the evidence if it is not translated into French in accordance with the rules of the House and the British North America Act? I insist on my point of order.

Mr. SPEAKER. The only question before the Chair is: Shall the House go into committee on this Bill? The report of the Special Committee has not yet come up for consideration. It may come up afterwards.

Mr. C. A. WILSON. My hon. friend from Grey is quoting from the evidence.

Mr. SPEAKER. There is no objection to that, because even if the report were in French, he would have a right to use it in support of the motion he now makes. My decision is that the hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Miller) can proceed with his motion.

Mr. C. A. WILSON. I respectfully desire to appeal from your decision to the House. I move that the ruling of the Chair be not sustained.

House divided.

Motion negatived.

Mr. MILLER. Before the interruption which has occurred, I was reminding the House of the evidence of Mr. Peter Christie, who distinctly stated that the Bill, if passed, would not to any extent affect the interest of the Canadian farmer or stock breeder. At page 153 of the evidence will be found the statement of Senator Douglass, an experienced live-stock breeder of the western provinces. At page 430 will be found the evidence of Mr. Gunn, the vice-president of the Dominion Grange to the same effect. At page 443 is the statement of Mr. C. J. Smith, an experienced horse breeders are to the same effect.

Mr. LANCASTER. May I ask the hon. member a question? Would it not be fairer, and would it not be better, as a matter of policy in winning support for his Bill, to read as little as possible of this evidence, and to make his argument as much as possible independent of it. in view of the fact that hon. members here have stated that they cannot understand it, My mind is open on this matter, and I submit this point to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. MILLER. I have no objection to complying, as far as possible, with the request of the hon. member (Mr. Lancaster). I think, however, that wishing to be reasonable, we may all recognize the fact that there is not a member of this House but has been able to read the evidence, and all the evidence, in the form in which it is printed. I was saying that Mr. C. J. Smith, than whom, perhaps, no other man in Canada has had a greater experience of breeding racing horses, has stated emphatically that the thoroughbred horses of to-day are not better than those of thirty or thirty-five years ago, notwithstanding the racing that has taken place in Canada, and the race-track gambling, in the meantime. Major William Hendrie, in giving evidence, recalled the fact that his father raced horses and bred thoroughbred horses years ago, when there was no professional race-track gambling, and when no large purses were being offered. Now, I wish to quote the opinion of Mr. Albert Dyment, a former much respected member of this House. We know that Mr. Dyment is a prominent horse breeder, and that he takes a very laudable and proper interest in horse-racing. In order to show that the passing of this Bill would depreciate the value of race-horses, representing in the aggregate a very large sum of money, he mentioned that horses in the state of New York, for which $3,000, $6,000 and $10,000 apiece had been paid, after the passing of the Hughes law could have been purchased by him for from $100 to $300 each. The fact that the thoroughbred horse which is purchased at one-time for $10,000 is then offered for sale at $100 to $300 because of the passing of a Bill prohibiting race-track gambling, but permitting horse-racing, shows conclusively that there is no value in the thoroughbred horse as a means of improving the breeds of utility horses. It is conclusive proof that there is no value in the thoroughbred horse other than as a racing machine. If the farmers of the progressive state of New York believed otherwise, these horses would not be sold at any such prices. I wish to point out also that it is not the first object of the gentlemen in Canada who own thoroughbred horses and conduct the race-establishments of Ontario, and of Canada generally, to encourage the breeding of good horses in Canada. The question was asked Mr. Dyment: 'Where are your thoroughbred stables?' and his answer was that they were at Barrie. There was then the following question and answer:

Q. Have the farmers around that locality the privilege of using any of your thoroughbred sires at prices at which they can afford to use them on their ordinary animals?—A. No.

Here we have one of the leading breeders of thoroughbreds in Canada, one who maintains a stable of thoroughbreds, and he states that the sires they have in their stables are not kept for the use of the farmers of the neighbourhood in their live stock enterprises, and that the farmers of the neighbourhood are not permitted to use these animals in that way. Therefore, the object is not the improvement of the breed of utility horses.

It is contended by the opponents of the Bill that this country ought to be willing to perpetuate race-track gambling in order that the improvement of the breed of horses should be carried on. Are we so philanthropic, as a Canadian people, that we will tax ourselves, or allow ourselves to be taxed, to encourage the breeding of good horses, not in Canada but in the United States? The evidence of Mr. Orpen, found at page 122, shows that not more than twenty or twenty-five per cent of the race-horses found on Canadian tracks are Canadian-owned horses. Therefore, whatever sacrifice we may make, whatever perpetuation we may permit of race-track gambling, it encourages the development of the thoroughbred, not in Canada so much as in the United States. Mr. Fraser, secretary of the Ontario Jockey Club, says, at page 135, that the Ontario Jockey Club and the Woodbine race-track are perpetuated as 'a highly social and sporting concern.' So, this has not to do with the breeding of horses or keeping up the supply of horses, but simply keeping up a social and sporting concern. In order that we may measure what the race-tracks of Canada have done in thirty-five years for the improvement of the breed of horses, let us take the evidence of Mr. Nelson, the sporting editor of the Toronto 'Globe,' who has, perhaps, as much knowledge of horse-racing and of horses as any other man in the Dominion. His evidence, as it appears at page 563, is as follows:

Q. I am told the net result of the last twenty-five years running races, thoroughbreds have been the reduction of the mile record by two seconds?—A. Oh, much more than that. The mile record is 1.35½ now, and I think twenty-five years ago it would be something like 1.40.

So, by the evidence of Mr. Nelson, this man who knows, the whole result of twenty-five years racing in Canada has been to lower the speed of the thoroughbred horse by 4½ seconds to the mile. But, as was pointed out by Mr. E. King Dodds, late editor of the 'Canadian Sportsman,' the reduction of 4½ seconds is not attributable to the breeding of the horses, but largely to the improvements of the tracks, the tracks of to-day being very much better and faster than were the tracks of twenty-five years ago. The most conclusive evidence that the horse-breeding industry does not depend to any extent upon the perpetuation of professional gambling is that afforded by the agricultural journals. Every farm paper of prominence in Canada has spoken editorially emphatically in favour of the Bill. The 'Farmer's Advocate,' the 'Canadian Farmer,' the 'Farm Journal,' the 'Nor'West Farmer' of Winnipeg—these and other agricultural journals have spoken emphatically in favour of the Bill, and not a single letter, I believe, has appeared in the columns of any agricultural paper from any subscriber or reader connected with the live stock industry in opposition to the Bill or to the editorials that have appeared in its favour in these papers. The superintendents and presidents of agricultural colleges have spoken in favour of the Bill; the farmers' institutes have passed resolutions in support of it; the Dominion Grange, at the head of which is Mr. E. C. Drury, son of the late Charles Drury, at one time Minister of Agriculture of Ontario, has spoken emphatically in favour of the Bill.

Sir, the question has been raised as to what Great Britain is going to do for army remounts if this Bill becomes law? It is said that without the thoroughbred horse and without the race-track and without race-track gambling, Great Britain cannot obtain her army horses. This argument was put as forcibly as possible by Mr. Ryan, of Montreal. I would refer to the evidence of Mr. S. Gammon, of Nova Scotia, at page 105 of the evidence. He stated that in Nova Scotia there is no book-making or professional race-track gambling. He stated also that, at the time of the Boer war, when Great Britain was purchasing horses, many hundreds of horses were sold in Nova Scotia to Great Britain to be sent to South Africa. I would like to call attention to an annual published by the 'Live Stock Journal,' of London, England, which is considered to be the most authoritative live stock journal published in Great Britain. The article I read from is entitled 'Horses for the army':

The army requirements in times of peace are only a little more than 2,000 horses annually, and therefore it is evident that it would never do for breeders to depend on this market alone.

The same article says:

There are many people adds Major Fife, who are under the impression that there are not horses in the country to meet our present peace supply, and in consequence our army is under-horsed. No greater nonsense was ever talked. There are more horses than enough at the present moment for all requirements, but we must look ahead, and therefore we should not be satisfied with this, and allow ourselves to be dependent on importations in time of peace which would be liable to be cut off in time of war.

Again the article proceeds:

Unfortunately the national horse supply is not sufficiently popular with either political party to enable public money to be spent on it to a sufficient extent. The only course open to the pioneers of the movement is to be perpetually calling attention to the matter with the object of getting a government grant, for no good can possibly be done until horse breeding is subsidized by the treasurer.

Now there is a statement from a very reliable journal, that two or three centuries of the breeding of thoroughbreds in Britain, two or three centuries of racing in Britain, and many years of book-making in England, have not afforded England a proper supply of army horses, and that the only hope of the people in Britain, who are interested in this subject, is in government subsidies. They have race-tracks in France, they have professional race-track gambling in France, but they obtain their remounts and their army horses by direct subsidies and direct regulations of the French government, and not from race-courses, and they are not dependent on race-track gambling. I have stated that it is not the object of the promoters of this Bill in any way to interfere with racing, that is not the intention, not the purpose, and not the expectation. Dr. McEchern, of Montreal, made a statement before the committee that it was very possible, in his opinion, that if this Bill went into effect it would add to the quality of the attendance at the race-tracks, and would perhaps in the end increase rather than decrease the attendance. Mr. Hugh Paton, of Montreal, a prominent business man, and a prominent horseman, who has been racing horses for many years, stated to the committee that he had been raising and racing thoroughbred horses since 1875. Reminded that in 1875 no large purses were being paid and no book-makers operated, he said that in 1875 he raced his horses for the honour of the thing. When asked why, if people did that in 1875, they could not do it in 1910, his reply was that he would now let younger men engage in the sport. Mr. Peter Christie was of the opinion that the passing of this Bill would not at any rate do away with racing. Mr. Boyle, a son of Mr. Charles Boyle, late of the town of Woodstock, Ontario, who is a well known turf man, said that since 1865 his father had been racing and raising thoroughbred horses. Reminded that in 1865, and for long years after, there were no large purses paid, and no professional gambling, he admitted the fact, but said that they raced for smaller purses, and engaged in racing as they do to-day. If hon. members will refer to the Toronto 'Star' of the 3rd of February, they will see a programme of the racing associations for the state of New York for the year 1910, and they will find advertised there thirteen different meets that is, a meet on every one, I think, of the important racing tracks of the state of New York, to continue from 12 to 20 days at each meet; so racing in the state of New York does not appear to have been much interfered with by recent legislation in that state. I think that the House will admit that there is perhaps no greater authority in Canada on horse-racing and racing matters generally than Mr. E. King Dodds, who was, until less than two years ago the editor of the Canadian 'Sportsman' of Toronto. Mr. Dodds published a book in the latter part of 1909, entitled 'Canadian Turf Recollections and Other Sketches.' Without wearying the House by reading it at length, I might refer to what Mr. Dodds says on page 18 of his book:

> There are certain owners so closely mixed up with book-makers that grave suspicion attaches to the combination, and it is not going too far to say that their horses are often run in the interests of those which lay the odds. Much of the trouble is directly traceable to the fact that a low class of Jew gamblers have, during the past few years, invaded the ring and may now be said to practically control it. A liberal percentage of them are absolutely devoid of principle and act on the belief that their mission in life is to get money; make it honestly if they can, but make it anyhow.

There is the statement of Mr. Dodds, the editor of the Canadian 'Sportsman,' that betting on the Canadian tracks to-day is largely under the control of a class of Jew gamblers, whose motto is to make money, no matter whether they make it honestly or otherwise. Again on page 54 of the same book, Mr. Dodds says:

> Though much pleasure was taken out of racing in the days of yore there was not much profit. The almighty dollar was not appreciated then quite as much as it is at the present time. The sons of Israel had not swarmed upon the race-course trying to occupy every corner where a nimble dime could be made. Men went to the races not altogether to bet money, but to meet their friends and enjoy a pleasant time. The enjoyment was great, but the profits were small. The balance sheet at this Carleton Park meeting, after all expenses were paid, showed a profit of $79. Yet, strange to say, it was then considered as satisfactory when the income balanced the expenditure. Truly the times have changed. There is now a different class of owners and the present ones are nearly all out for the dollar.

Again Mr. Dodds says on page 115:

> There are some new-fledged turf men who pretend to believe that racing in Canada thirty or forty years ago was of no account. True, the tracks then were not as fast as now, neither were their furnishings as liberal, nor the purses as large in amount as those offered at the present day, but the charge for admission was small and the public then, as now, were liberal in their patronage. Prominent men from distant sections of the country used to foregather and there was more friendly intercourse and social enjoyment at those early meetings than at the present time, in a word, there was more pleasure and less business, more keen enjoyment of the racing through enthusiasm for the sport than for the sake of the money that could be squeezed out of it.

There, then, is in the evidence of the editor of the only horse-racing paper published in Canada, that the racing thirty years ago in Canada was more sportsmanlike, and was carried on more with the object of sport and with less commercialism than it is to-day. It has been said that this Bill, if it becomes law, will take away the capital that men have invested in racing enterprises. Let me point out to you that the Hamilton Jockey Club was incorporated I think, in 1893, with a paid-up capital of $4,050. That company, after being ten years in the business, has now assets of $225,000. The Ontario Jockey Club which controls the Woodbine track in Toronto has a paid up capital of $10,000. They have been receiving an annual dividend of 10 per cent on their capital stock and they have to-day, with a paid up capital of $10,000, surplus assets of $337,846. Mr. Hendrie, of the Ontario Jockey Club, told of the sale of one $100 share at $1,000, and he said he did not know whether any more stock could now be purchased even at $3,000 a share. Therefore, if we take the Hamilton Jockey Club and the Ontario Jockey Club as examples we need not be very much afraid of interfering with or ruining established interests. If the Hamilton Jockey Club were to withdraw from the bank their cash surplus of $50,000, and assuming they could sell their real estate for the $50,000 it cost them without counting anything for the improvements they made on it, they would have $100,000 to divide among the men who put $4,050 into the enterprise, or, $2,500 for every $100 paid in. I want to point out that in the year 1909 the net profits of the Hamilton Jockey Club on a paid up capital of $4,050 were $70,000; and that the net profits in Toronto on a paid up capital of $10,000 were $66,778. I have been told that the passing of this Bill will injure the profits of men who have been investing large sums of money in raising horses. That may or it may not be true, but every day in our legislation for the public interest we are doing a similar thing. Parliament thought it was well to enact a law for the removal of the German surtax and certain merchants have complained that the doing away with the German surtax without notice was a loss to them, they having purchased their stocks in the expectation that the surtax would not be removed. Day after day we are passing legislation for the good of the whole people that inevitably must injuriously affect to some extent the interests of the few.

It may be asked: What after all are the evil results arising from professional race-track gambling; are they exaggerated and are they of the extent which has been alleged? I would like to point out to the House the evidence of Chief Grassett of the Toronto Police Force. Col. Grassett was summoned as a witness in opposition to the Bill, and I quote from his evidence:—

By the Chairman:

Q. And if the book-maker could be abolished and no other form of betting substituted, you think it would be a good thing?—A. I do.

Inspector Duncan in his evidence gave us 9, 10, or 11 cases of men who had been practically ruined from this cause in the years 1908 and 1909; in many cases they had lost their situations, they had lost their reputation, they had lost their property, their wives and children were reduced to want. And, on being asked whether these cases were the only ones to which he could point in the last two years, both he and Inspector Archibald said they could name 50 others if they had carefully examined the records of their office. Inspector Archibald heartily agreed with all that had been said by inspector Duncan and he added that nearly all of the cases mentioned had come within his own knowledge. Detective Sleeman, chief of the Brantford Police spoke of the great evils that came of race track gambling. Mr. Sinclair, a member of the committee asked him:—

Are you in favour of the prohibition of the book-maker altogether?

And the reply was:—

I am.

Mr. Carrington, chief of the Thiel Detective Agency of Montreal was brought before the committee by the opponents of the Bill. Mr. Carrington said he did not know of any instance where a man had been ruined by profesional race-track gambling, but being cross-questioned he said he had heard of hundreds of cases where men had said their ruin had been brought about by race-track gambling, but he did not believe the statements. On cross-examination the following took place:

Q. You say that in these hundreds of cases that you have learned about, one way or the other, you do not believe that betting on the horses was the sole cause of downfall of the men. Are you willing to say it was in many of those cases one of the causes of the downfall of the men, not in every case?—A. Oh, yes, because if a man is a gambler at heart that would be one of the forms in which the opportunity would present itself.

We have here a detective who was brought to give evidence in opposition to the Bill admitting that he had heard of hundreds of cases in which at least one cause of the downfall of the man was betting upon horses on the race-track.

Then; the Hon. Mr. Templeman gave evidence before the committee and read letters which he had received from prominent business men of the city of Victoria.

It has been said that the Bill before the House is a product of the preachers of Canada. I want to read just two short letters out of about twenty received by Mr. Templeman from business men of the city of Victoria. The first letter is from E. B. Marvin & Co., large ship chandlers, of Victoria, and it is addressed to Mr. Templeman, and reads:

Victoria, British Columbia,
December 31, 1909.

Sir,—We would strongly urge the passing of a Bill by the Dominion government which will stop gambling on race-courses.

The effect of the recent meeting in this city, at which a great deal of gambling was carried on, should convince any one that it does great harm to the community. Money is staked and lost, which should have gone to pay just debts, which injures the store-keeper and general business man. Besides this, the habit of gambling is most demoralizing for both men and women, and we feel sure a law against the practice of it will be a benefit to the community generally.

We are, Sir, yours obediently,
E. B. MARVIN & CO.

Another letter is from Moore and Whittington, contractors and builders, of the city of Victoria, and it reads:

Victoria, British Columbia,
December 30, 1909.

Dear Sir,—In response to your request as to our employers of labour for our experience and views in connection with the recent race meet held in the city, we must state emphatically that we believe it to be detrimental to the financial and moral interests of the city.

Some of the workmen left their work and neglected their families for the summer and attended the races regularly, others incurred heavy liabilities, other men were arranging to build homes, but lost their money at the track. When out collecting accounts it was a prominent excuse, 'I have not got the money, I lost it out at the races.'

We express the hope that race-meets, as we experienced them here, will be a thing of the past.

Yours respectfully,
(Sgd.) MOORE & WHITTINGTON.

Then, we had the evidence of Mr. Ralph Lawton, an insurance agent, of Toronto, who had lost his position, lost his money, and had been reduced to poverty by betting on the race-track. Then we had the lamentable case of Mr. Fred. Hart. Mr. Fred. Hart was a young man engaged in a trust company in the city of Vancouver, and during the very time this Bill was before the House it became the duty of the police magistrate of the city of Vancouver to sentence this young man to one year at hard labour in the common jail because of embezzlement which was the direct consequence of betting on the race-track in that city. In passing sentence the police magistrate said: 'This is a case where you have pleaded guilty to a serious charge, that of taking $1,000 when you were in a position of trust. I have considered your previous good character during the long number of years that you have been in similar positions of trust, and this is the first time you have fallen. I must consider the circumstances surrounding the case, this race-track gambling, and the temptation you were put to. It is unfortunate that the young men of our city should be subjected to such environment.' Perhaps it will be some comfort to this young man, Fred. Hart, to know in jail, that he was contributing to the improvement of the breed of thoroughbreds in Canada. Here was Mr. Hart, a young man who for years had been in a position of trust in Vancouver; he had never before taken a single copper that did not belong to him so far as we know, but is it any comfort for that young man to remember as he now serves twelve months in the Vancouver jail, that he was encouraging the breeding of good horses to a very great extent. I want to know if that young man's mother; I want to know if that young man's father; I want to know if the employers of that young man who had heretofore found him to be a man of principle and integrity; I want to know whether they do not think that it was at very very great cost indeed, that he encouraged the breeding of thoroughbred horses.

At one o'clock, House took recess.

House resumed at Three o'clock.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, when the House rose at one o'clock, I was speaking of some of the evil effects of race-track gambling. I mentioned the case of Fred. Hart, a young man of Vancouver. I wish now to refer to the case of Thomas W. Batt, who gave evidence before the special committee. He was a young man who had gone from Newfoundland to Toronto some 13 years ago to engage in business as a butcher. He said that for the first three years that he had been in Toronto he had saved from his business an average of $1,000 a year. At the end of the three years he began betting with the book-makers on the track, with the result that in ten years he had lost all that he had saved in the three years, and had become from $1,500 to $2,000 worse off than nothing, while in the meantime his family had not been properly provided for. I know there has been some disposition on the part of the opponents of the Bill to ridicule the strong evidence given by Mr. Batt. On this point I quote the following from the Canadian 'Collier's' of March 5 last in reference to Mr. Batt and his evidence:

A Toronto butcher, who wishes his name suppressed, gave testimony before the Miller

Committee as to the evils of race-track gambling. Loud laughter greeted this man's homely, earnest protest. The idea of a butcher giving evidence! The idea of a butcher wanting his name kept out of the papers! Really, it was the drollest thing! Pray consider, too, the spectacle of a humble butcher and his little family being ruined by the thoroughbred 'merry-go-round.' Also ponder on the courage of the humble little butcher facing the inquisitorial knives of the lawyers at Ottawa, his only motive being to save others, if it might be, from the misfortunes that overtook him. After all, it is not funny. Our little butcher's testimony was a human document. He is one of the few witnesses who knows what he is talking about and knows that he knows.

This Thomas W. Batt gave evidence before the committee, not only as to his own practical ruin, financial and otherwise, from betting with the gamblers on the race-track, but he mentioned the names and addresses of 50 other persons who had lost their reputations, their position, and in some cases their liberty, through betting with professional gamblers on the track, and two of them had committed suicide. To give you an idea of how the race-track gambling habit fastens itself on some men, let me quote from Mr. Batt's evidence. He was asked:

Q. I thought you were following the races all the time?—A. I would be working all the forenoon, practically the afternoon, and at night I would come home and pluck chickens, and make lard, and work maybe until one or two o'clock in the morning and go to the register at night and take the money that came in and be down at the track the next day.

The habit was so fastened on this man that he toiled all night to make money to bet on the track on the following day. Mr. Monk, a member of the committee, asked certain questions of Mr. Batt, as follows:

Q. Have you talked with many of those men about the book-makers and this business?—A. Yes, I have talked to a lot of them. I was talking to some of them last night.
Q. What did they say?—A. They wished it was in hell.
Q. What?—A. The horse-racing business, the whole thing.
Q. The horse-racing would not hurt them if there was no book-making?—A. No.

Everybody agrees with Mr. Batt that horse-racing itself is all right—that the evil is not in the racing, but in the book-making. Inspector Archibald, in his evidence, stated that the Toronto Woodbine had been referred to as the university of gambling. This provoked some ridicule among those who heard him make the statement. But I would like to prove to you that the race-track is the university of gambling, from the lips of no less a personage than Mr. Colin Campbell, a member of the Montreal Jockey Club. The question was asked of him:

Q. I do not suppose you would say that everybody goes to a race-course goes with the determination to bet, would you?—A. No, a great majority of them do, though.
Q. Of course, those who have acquired the habit do?—A. Well, they may be acquiring it when they get there.

That answer is one full of meaning. Of the people who go to the race-track, perhaps a large number have not acquired the habit of gambling; but, as Mr. Campbell says, they may be acquiring it when they get there. Therefore, the name given to the Woodbine track by Inspector Archibald can scarcely be said to be a misnomer.

It was rather remarkable that so many witnesses spoke of the undesirable class of people who frequent the race-course. It was stated, in evidence, that the people who frequent the city of Toronto at the time of the Woodbine meet are very much more undesirable, as a rule, than those who frequent the city of Toronto at the time of the exhibition, when a much larger number of people are there. The Hon. Mr. Fisher spoke of the very undesirable element he saw in Vancouver at the time of the race meet there, saying that he would not consider it safe to be out at night with a good many of those people. Mr. Cowan, the member for Vancouver, spoke of the disreputable crowd of people he saw at Vancouver during the time of the races; and Mr. Barnard, the member for Victoria, spoke of the undersirable class of people he saw in Toronto during the time of the Woodbine meet, saying that such an undesirable crowd of people frequented the King Edward hotel, the leading hotel at Toronto, that ladies said they would not care to cross the rotunda of that hotel at the time. Mr. McColl, the member for Northumberland, pointed out the reason why this undesirable element followed the race-track. Mr. Blain was examining Mr. Sleeman:

Q. Would the undesirable element attend the races if there were no book-making?—A. No, I do not think they would.
Mr. McCOLL. Because the exposure of money gives them a great opportunity to snatch money and tickets, and pick pockets.

There may be members in this House, I trust their number is not large, who say: 'I do not care about the moral or immoral effect of race meets; that is nothing to me; if a man is strong, he ought to be able to take care of himself, and if he is weak, he might as well fall with the race-track gambler as in any other way.' To men who take that uncharitable position the economic argument in the case may appeal. There are men opposing this Bill who oppose every kind of trust, trade combination and monopoly, on the ground that they take money unjustly out of the pockets of the people. Let me point out to these gentleman that these race-track associations and these professional race-track gamblers are every year taking a very large amount of money out of the pockets of the Canadian people for which they give no value at all. Mr. E. King Dodds has said over and over again, in his book recently published, that these men who take away the money of our people in large sums are not Canadians, but foreigners, mostly Jews. Let us try to estimate what amount is lost to the Canadian people from the fact that in the year 1909 the book-makers paid for the betting privilege on the Hamilton race-track, $74,800, on the Woodbine track in Toronto, $67,700, and on the Blue Bonnet race-track in Montreal, $76,650; a total of $219,150. These figures do not include the money paid by the book-makers for book-making privileges on the Canadian tracks at Windsor, Dufferin, Fort Erie, Vancouver, Victoria and a few others which hold meets throughout the Dominion. We may, therefore, be well within the mark when we say that the book-makers paid in 1909 for betting privileges in Canada over half a million dollars. In addition, each book-maker, according to the evidence of Mr. Orpen, on page 118, employs five assistants, to whom he pays $10 per day.

Referring to the evidence of Mr. Fraser, page 132, secretary of the Ontario Jockey Club, I find that on the Woodbine track the book-makers average 50 in number per day. Each of these has to pay five assistants at $10 per day. In addition there are the expenses of the book-makers and the large profits made by them out of the betting public, so that the whole tax on the Canadian public is probably $2,000,000 in twelve months. By whom is that paid? Mr. Nelson, sporting editor of the Toronto 'Globe,' says, at page 564 of the evidence, that it is paid by the betting public. Mr. Blain asked him if he thought that was not as good a way to raise the money as the present system. Mr. Blain was referring to the English practice. Mr. Nelson replied:

I think the money is still raised from that portion of the public who bet in either case; the book-maker is only a collector, that portion of the public who bet put up their money to-day, whether they call it book-making, the Paris mutual or auction pool-selling. The money comes from the public who want to bet, and those who do not want to bet do not have to contribute.

Therefore, according to the evidence of Mr. Nelson—and it appeals to the common sense of every man—all the expenses of the book-maker and all of their profit come out of the Canadian public.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Out of the betting public.

Mr. MILLER. Out of those who bet. My hon. friend from South York (Mr. Maclean) and many others are laudably engaged in protecting, not all Canadian citizens, but those who do business, from having their money taken away by monoplies, and it seems to me that they should be ready to extend the same protection to those who have their money filched from them by the book-makers. The opponents of this Bill are quite willing to do away with the hand-book men up town and pool-rooms, which bring no revenue to the racing associations, but they want book-makers to be allowed on the tracks. Inspector Duncan, at page 204, gives evidence as follows:

Q. Has the individual betting on the race track amounted to anything?—A. I do not think it has.

Q. Can you give us any better reason for cutting out by legislation the hand-book man up town than the book-maker on the track. Is one worse than the other, or are they in the same class?—A. They are pretty much in the same class, I would say.

Q. You can see no particular difference?—A. No, if it is right to bet down at the Woodbine, I would say, give then the right to bet up town, that is if you are going to allow it at all.

Inspector Duncan took the logical position that if it be a crime to bet up town, it must be equally a crime to bet with a book-maker on the race-track. Inspector Archibald gave evidence, page 217:

From that standpoint I think these places are worse in that respect than the Woodbine. But, if you want my opinion as to whether the Woodbine, as a place for betting on horse races, in contrast with those places, is the more dangerous, I say by all means the Woodbine.

They are worse in as much as the hand-books are in operation all the year and the book-makers on the track only during the meeting. He added:

But if you want my opinion as to whether the Woodbine, as a place for betting on horse races, in contrast with those places, is the more dangerous, I say by all means the Woodbine.

Again Inspector Archibald said:

But there is an expenditure of tens of thousands of dollars at the track in place of that many cents in the city.

Q. The evil is greater in the Woodbine, you mean?—A. Yes.

Inspector Archibald was asked this question:

Not referring alone to those particular cases cited by detective Duncan, but the class of cases that come before your notice, would you say the larger number of them arise from betting on the race-track, or does a larger proportion of them come from betting with the hand-book men up town?—A. By long odds the larger proportion from the Woodbine; no question about that.

Mr. Batt gave his evidence as to the comparative evils resulting from the betting on the tracks and the hand-book men up town:

Q. Now as to making a comparison between the harm that comes or that follows from betting with the book-makers and the harm that comes from the practice of betting with the hand-book men, which do you consider the greatest evil, which brings the worse results?—A. Betting with the hand-book or on the track?

Q. Yes, which ruins the most men?—A. The track.

Q. There is no doubt at all of that in your mind?—A. I know it, yes, because a man will go to the hand-book and will bet $5 or 50 cents or $2 and that is all he will bet that day. A man will go to the track and will take $300 or $200 or $500 with him, and he will loose every cent he has got if he happens to strike a bad day, but when betting with the hand-book he bets that much and then stops there, but it is the race-track that gets the bunch of them.

Q. Take the man who follows the races, who bets on the horses, does he usually begin by betting with the book-maker on the track or betting with the hand-book man up town; where does he usually begin his betting career?—A. Usually at the track he starts.

Q. You have no doubt as to that?—A. No, sir.

Again he said:

Q. The large number of persons you have spoken of as having ruined themselves, as having suffered the loss of their business and so on, would they in your opinion have suffered those losses and ruined their lives to the extent they did, had it not been for the book-maker?—A. No, I don't think they would have. No, they would not. They lost it on the track practically.

Again speaking of the comparatively greater evils resulting from betting on the track, he said:

A man goes to the track, he takes his wad down with him, and if he loses $10 on the first race he tries to make it up on the next race, and if he loses it on the second race he tries to make it up again on the third, and before he goes back he is broke. But on the hand-book they aint got that chance to do it.

There we have the evidence of Detective Duncan and Inspector Archibald and this man Batt, who has had great experience on the race-track, and their evidence is to the effect that the evil resulting from book-making on the track is infinitely greater than what results from the hand-book men up town. I was talking to one of the leading criminal lawyers in Toronto, and he told me that whatever knowledge he had gained of race-track betting was from his defending criminals in Toronto, and he told me that if I could get this legislation on the statute-book, I would accomplish a great deal of good. Can any one doubt that young men do not learn to bet and become addicted to betting on horse-racing with the hand-book men up town, but with the book-makers on the track? I have always known it to be the case that the opponents of a Bill, when they cannot meet the argument squarely; when they cannot defeat the measure on its merits, will say that it does not go far enough, that there are loop holes in it, and that it will not have the results intended. And so, they say, if this Bill becomes law, there will be the private bettor in disguise. Mr. Orpen, giving his evidence, said—page 123—that the interpretation the courts had given to the present law, that the book-keeper must keep moving about, has so injured the business of the book-maker that he himself has gone out of the business and that it is impossible to carry on the business with anything like the profit that was possible before that interpretation was placed on the law. I argue that if the present interpretation of the existing law has driven Mr. Orpen as a book-maker out of the business there would be no possibility at all of the book-maker plying his calling as a disguised private bettor under this measure. Inspector Duncan was asked questions as reported at pages 203-4:

In most of the cases that you have spoken of, and most of the cases that have come to your knowledge, have most of them been the result of betting with book-makers, or have they been the result of private bets?—A. With the book-maker on the race-track or the hand-book man up town.

Q. In almost every instance that has been the case?—A. Yes.

And Detective Sleeman—page 377:

Q. Do not let us quarrel or quibble. If you do away with the book-maker, and there must be betting, with whom is the man going to bet?—A. I do not think we will have very much betting if the book-maker is done away with.

That is the evidence of an experienced detective of the highest standing. I want to give the House now the opinion of Mr. Counsell, one of the solicitors who appeared in opposition to the Bill, a gentleman of high standing at the bar in the city of Hamilton, Ontario. And I desire to say that I agree with what appears to be his opinion. He said in questioning Mr. Batt:

Q. There is just one question I want to ask about betting by individuals; there is very little betting by individuals on the race-track, is there?—A. A man that wants to bet bets with the book-maker, there is practically no individual betting at the race-track.

Q. The betting is done with the book-maker?—A. Yes, it is with the book-maker.

And now he says—and it is in this that I agree with him:

Q. You and I cannot make a bet very well without the book-maker at a horse race?—A. Not very well, no.

I agree with Mr. Counsell and Mr. Batt, from the knowledge I have been able to obtain, that if you take away the book-maker you take away largely the possibility of extensive betting. Mr. C. J. Smith also gave evidence. I may explain that Mr. C. J. Smith is a son of the late joint proprietor in the partnership of Cooper & Smith, wholesale boot and shoe dealers, of Toronto. Mr. Smith stated that he had had large experience as a breeder of race-horses, and as a racing man. His evidence, as it appears at page 451 is as follows:

Q. If a law were passed in Canada to prevent book-making, with that object in view, and if that law were enforced to its full extent as it could reasonably be enforced, could there be any extensive amount of betting going on, on the track with book-makers in disguise who were endeavouring to evade the law?—A. No.

Q. It could not be, it would not be possible?—A. No, no doubt there would be a limited amount, but it would be very small.

Q. Take, for instance, a bank clerk, who was attracted to the race-track through his love of excitement or his love perhaps for horses, would these book-makers in disguise who were endeavouring to evade the law offer to that young man the same temptation to bet on the races as is now offered by book-makers carrying on their business openly?—A. I do not think so, I do not see how it could.

Mr. Penderton was a witness subpœnaed to give evidence in opposition to the Bill. He is, I understand, a detective of large experience, and head of the Thiel Detective Agency of Montreal, an agency well known throughout the United States and Canada. Mr. Meredith asked him:

Q. In your experience at present the average person that bets on the race-course today, does he bet with individuals, or doesn't he bet with the book-makers in preference to betting with the individual?—A. He bets with the book-maker in preference.

Q. If those book-makers are done away with the parties he will bet with will be the individuals?—A. I do not know who he will bet with and he will find that he does not know either, when he wins.

He, in effect, said that if the professional bettor were there in disguise as a private individual still endeavouring to carry on his business as a book-maker, he would not be there to pay a debt when he lost. How long will men continue to bet with those whom they do not know, and whom they cannot find when they come to claim the payment of a bet?

Another proposition has been made and argued for very earnestly, and that is that we should pass legislation allowing betting with the book-maker on the race-course during the meet, but shortening the length of the meet, confining it, perhaps, to ten or twelve days. In the first place, I desire to read to the House the opinion of the Minister of Justice given in a letter to myself as chairman of the committee, as follows:

Ottawa, February 5, 1910.

Dear Mr. Miller,—I have your letter of the 2nd instant, asking whether the Dominion Parliament has any authority to restrict, or limit, the length of a racing meeting on the tracks of an association incorporated by a provincial legislature.

I think the rational way of regulating such a subject would be by action on the part of the provincial authorities. Such a question seems to me properly a matter of police supervision, and in that view within the jurisdiction of the local authorities. There is nothing I can see to prevent any provincial legislature from requiring licenses to be obtained for the holding of race-track meetings. Under such licenses, they could regulate the days and times that racing could be carried on, charging such license fee as they saw fit. The Dominion parliament has no such jurisdiction, and the only way in which the Dominion parliament could deal with the subject is by undertaking to make it a crime to continue a race-track meeting for more than some given number of days.

I do not question the power of the Dominion parliament to legislate in that manner, but it would certainly seem to me entirely illogical to do so. It would be an equivalent to declaring that racing for, say, 30 days was perfectly lawful and innocent, but that to race on the 31st day was a crime! That does not strike me as sensible or reasonable, and although I think the Dominion parliament has, in its general jurisdiction over criminal law, power to pass such an enactment, it would seem to me that the regulating of the times and manner of conducting race-track meetings was properly a matter for purely provincial attention.

I remain, yours faithfully,
A. B. AYLESWORTH.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Will the hon. member (Mr. Miller) say why he does not take this agitation to that field?

Mr. MILLER. Because this is one matter, and only one matter, that might be controlled by the provincial legislature. But endeavour to cope with the whole matter and that which we must admit can only be controlled, and ought to be controlled in the Dominion parliament and under the Criminal Code. I think we all agree with the opinion given by the Minister of Justice that it would be within the power of this parliament to enact that racing for thirty days was perfectly lawful, and innocent, but to race on the 31st day was a crime, but we would also agree when he says: 'that does not strike me as sensible or reasonable'. I wish to put the other line of reasoning on a parallel with that and ask the members of this House whether the position is not very much the same as to say that the Dominion parliament has the power to say that racing is punishable when carried on outside the race-track enclosure, but is innocent, harmless, and no crime if carried on inside the fence that surrounds the race-track. But even if we had not the opinion given by the Minister of Justice, we have that of the Hon. Mr. Fisher, who was asked what, in his opinion, would be the effect of shortening the race-meeting to ten days, and he said:

I should think they would be intensified for the ten days.

Q. In other words, you think they would try to get in the ten days the evil that they had committed in the sixty?—A. I should think so.

Q. And you do not see any difference between a ten days' and a sixty days' meet in that respect?—A. I think, probably, they could not do as much damage in ten days as they could in sixty days, although they would do as much of their works as they could do in ten.

The Hon. Mr. Templeman was asked his opinion as to limiting the race meeting to ten days, or to any number of days and his reply was:

I do not believe that if the race-meeting was limited to ten days, and there is book-making even to the extent that it might take place in the ten days, that it would meet public opinion in the city of Victoria.

Q. You do not think it will?—A. I do not think so. If there is book-making that will permit bank clerks and even young lads to take part in the pools and spend more money than they should, you will never satisfy public opinion.

Now our opponents, with deep concern, tell us that it will be impossible to enforce this legislation, that you cannot enforce the law even though it be the law. I do not know really whether the law could be be enforced or not and again I appeal to Inspector Duncan. In answer to Mr. Moss, page 199, he says:

Q. But you do not expect, as a practical man, to stamp that out by legislation, do you? A. If you want to stamp it out what will you stamp it out with, if you do not get legislation?

Q. Do you agree with him (Mr. Grasset), that you do not think it can be done away with by Act of parliament?—A. I think it can be done away with.

Q. You think it can?—A. I think it can; you will not eliminate it entirely, but you will get it under control and save a great many people from being ruined.

Then Inspector Archibald, page 226, testified:

Q. Then, if you had a law that was in plain Anglo-Saxon and easy to understand, forbidding betting on the race-tracks through the book-maker, would it be possible to reasonably enforce that law?—A. Yes.

Q. And suppress the betting?—A. Yes.

Then Detective Sleeman testified:

Q. I am asking you whether, if parliament passed a law making it illegal to bet in any manner, you think, as an experienced officer, that such a law could be successfully enforced? I would like to have your candid opinion on that.—A. I think we can. If you give us a law I think there is material enough in the police court and detectives of the Dominion to stamp out the evil spoken of.

Then Detective Carrington, who was brought to give evidence in opposition to the Bill, was asked this question:

Q. Is it difficult to enforce it?—A. Well, I do not think it is difficult, speaking from a professional point of view, to enforce any law if you occupy the position with proper officers.

Detective McMahon testifies:

Q. Do you see any difficulty about enforcing the law against book-making on the race-track?—A. You can enforce the law to prohibit it, sure.

Now, we have been told that public opinion is not behind this Bill, and that in the absence of public opinion, the law cannot be enforced. On this subject the Hon. Mr. Templeman was asked by Mr. Blain, M. P.:

Q. Would public opinion in the west endorse this Bill?—A. I think it would.

Now, Sir, I will come to the Vancouver Board of Trade. The Vancouver Board of Trade is not made up of parsons, or of men engaged in moral reform movements, but of hard-headed business men, having in view their own interests and the interests of the city, and this is the resolution they passed on the 5th of last November:

The Right Honourable the Minister of Justice,
Ottawa.

Sir,—I have the honour to advise you that—

Whereas, the question of race-track gambling in connection with the recently established 'Minoru Race Track' on Lulu island near the city, was fully discussed at the monthly meeting of this board on 5th October ultimo;

Whereas, the opinion was unanimous that in relation to the welfare and business interests of the city and of the community at large, legislation should be sought to effect the suppression of all professional gambling on race-tracks;

Whereas, the board is advised by the attorney general of British Columbia 'That the question of the suppression of gambling is one coming entirely within the powers of the Dominion parliament;

It was resolved, at a meeting of the council board held on the 4th inst, That the hon. the Minister of Justice be requested to adopt such legislation as may be necessary to bring the suppression of race-track gambling within the Criminal Code of Canada.

I have the honour to be,
Your obedient servant,
WM. SKENE,
Secretary.

Mr. Cowan, member of parliament for Vancouver, gave his opinion:

Q. Well, will public opinion in your province endorse this Bill as it now stands, do you think?—A. I scarcely know how it stands.
Q. Supposing it does all we say it does?—A. That it does away with the book-maker?
Q. It does away entirely with the book-maker?—A. Yes, it will endorse it.

Then Mr. Cowan went further, and said:

Q. I merely wish to let the committee know the status of these gentlemen?—A. I know that not only the directors but the shareholders of this association are beyond criticism, substantial men, men who would not be identified with anything of a doubtful character if they knew it.
Q. Do they approve of this Bill?—A. I imagine that the majority of them do.

So we have the statement of a member of this House that the men who compose the Vancouver Racing Association are in favour of this Bill, and will support it. Inspector Archibald again testifies:

Q. You are in a very good position to have some knowledge of what is public opinion on this very question; if there should be a law passed now to entirely prohibit race-track gambling through the book-maker, do you think there is a public opinion that would assist you in enforcing that law?—A. I am very strongly of the opinion that there is already that public opinion.

Mr. Moss asked Detective Sleeman this question:

Q. You think you can stamp it out altogether?—A. I will do my part.
Q. Do you think the community will acquiesce in that?—A. I think you would have the community with you if you would stop book-making.

Now, Sir, let us no longer ask whether there is or is not public opinion behind this Bill, because the evidence is very clear that there is. Mr. E. C. Drury, master of the Dominion Grange, says:

I am fully convinced that popular feeling among the farmers stands behind Mr. Miller's Bill.

Let me point out to you also, Mr. Speaker, that all the church papers of Canada are strongly in favour of the Bill. The Toronto 'Globe,' the Toronto 'Telegram,' the Toronto 'Star. the Canadian 'Courier,' the Canadian 'Collier's,' and the local press throughout Canada, and most significant of all, all the farm papers and live stock journals have expressed themselves as being entirely in sympathy with the Bill now before the House. And last, but not least let me say that the Orange Lodge of Canada, in session recently, expressed itself very strongly in favour of the Bill; and no other resolution passed at the meeting of the Grand Lodge was so unanimously and so enthusiastically supported as was a resolution favouring this Bill. Now, Sir, why should there not be public opinion behind this Bill?

We have had similar legislation in the state of New York, in the state of Michigan, in nearly all the leading horse-breeding states of the American union. With a larger and longer experience than we have had, they have passed legislation prohibiting race-track gambling in those states. I do not say that in legislation, along the line of moral reform or otherwise, we should always follow their example, but I say that in legislating along these lines we have usually supposed ourselves to be at least up to as high a standard as the citizens of the United States, and I ask whether it is to be tolerated, whether it is to be supposed that we will continue to make Canada a dumping ground for the professional gamblers of the race-track banished by this legislation from the race-tracks of the American union. It has been said that we ought to follow English precedent, and that in place of that we are in this legislation seeking to follow American precedent. Let us see whether we have any precedent in following American rather than English precedent. At page 563-4 of the evidence, Mr. Nelson, sporting editor of the Toronto 'Globe', in replying to Mr. McCarthy explained the English system. He said that the system at the English race-tracks is that the book-maker is not allowed to be at the grand stand, or in the ground with the ordinary attendants at the races. The book-maker is shut off in a pen or inclosure for admission to which he pays a £1 entrance fee. The ordinary attendants at the races do not come in contact with the book-maker at all; if they want to get in contact with him in his inclosure they also must pay an additional £1. This is in itself a great protection to the young men of Great Britain, and to men who have not become addicted to race-track gambling. Mr. Blain asked Mr. Nelson:

Do you think that would be a desirable change for Canada?

And Mr. Nelson's reply was:

No sir.

The chairman said:

You do not believe, then, that in all things we should follow the English practice?

And Mr. Nelson's reply was:

No.

If the men who carry on the races persist in following not the English, not the British, but the American system, they cannot, I think, find fault with us if we endeavour to meet the conditions they make with legislation more similar to that of America, than to that of Britain.

In conclusion, it has been said that Dr. Shearer has been at the bottom of all this agitation, that the legislation is really his legislation, that this whole matter has come from the agitation of preachers and pastors. I wish to read from the argument of the counsel opposed to this Bill. At page 9 they say:

> The undersigned do not desire to cast any reflection upon the many excellent and eminent ministers of the church who have been induced to lend their names to the agitation fostered by Dr. Shearer, nor to minimize the service they can do the community in uplifting its moral tone by exhortation and example, but it is respectfully urged that the promotion of legislation forms no part of the professional duty of a minister of the gospel.

Note the argument and turn to page 49 of the same argument where you will see:

> The supporters of the Bill have tried to lay stress on the fact that some of the racing clubs derive an income from the sale of telegraphic information in regard to the racing and betting. There is no law prohibiting the sale of this information, and it is quite natural that the clubs should sell it if some one is willing to pay for it, and if they did not do so, the information would be obtained notwithstanding.

We have the statements of the opponents of the Bill that they have been selling information from their race-tracks for the carrying on and maintenance of pool-rooms in the United States, and in distant cities. They admit that it is not a right thing to do, and they say they do not want to be longer permitted to do it, but are willing to abandon it, as a thing that ought not to be continued. But how long would it have taken the appeals and exhortations of ministers to prevent these men from continuing to sell racing information? It was only the prospect of legislation that made them abandon this, as they are now ready to do. How long would it take these men to be influenced in any degree by the example and exhortation of ministers? I am prepared to admit that no minister or pastor ought to endeavour to or be permitted to dictate as to what shall be the legislation of this House; but I do contend that it is the right of a minister of the gospel to suggest legislation. Men supporting this Bill have been accused of being narrow-minded. I have myself been accused of being narrow-minded in supporting this Bill, as have many others. Can there be any greater evidence of a narrow mind than this, that a man when asked to support a Bill will say: In whose brain did that Bill originate, in whose brain was it formed? Then, if it is the suggestion of a minister: I will not support it. If it is the suggestion of some other man: I will. Is that a broad way to look at legislation? Will not the broad-minded man say: If this Bill is reasonable and right I will support it, if it is wrong I will oppose it no matter whence it comes? No minister has ever endeavoured to control my course in any legislation, and no minister of the gospel need try, because no minister can. I would not ask any member to vote on this or on any question as he may have been dictated to by any one. I have not seen any evidence that any minister of the gospel has endeavoured to dictate to any member how he shall vote. It has been said that the public opinion in favour of the Bill is largely the result of petitions and circulars. The repeal of the Corn laws in Great Britain, the reform law of 1832, the emancipation of the Catholics, all these great reforms were the result of long-continued agitation, and arguments, public meetings, the agitation of the public mind in every possible way, and in that way they were carried. In that way all such legislation, and all great reforms have been brought about and carried. It has been said that you cannot make men good by Act of parliament. It was a saying of Mr. Gladstone—that it is the duty of parliament to make it as easy as possible for men to do right, and as difficult as possible for men to do wrong.

I have been glad to see the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton) who is chairman of the Conservation Commission taking notes, and I assume he will speak on this subject. I have no knowledge nor is it any business of mine whether he will speak in favour of, or against the Bill; but as a great Canadian, as a man who has taken a great interest in the conserving of our natural resources, I cannot believe he will fail to realize that the greatest natural resources we have are Canadian men and women. I cannot but believe that the chairman of that Conservation Commission, who endeavours to protect the water-powers of Canada, will realize that the greatest power Canada has is the power of Canadian men and Canadian women. I cannot but believe that the chairman of that commission, who endeavours to preserve the small trees in our forests, will endeavour to preserve to Canada the small boys, the young men of Canada. I cannot but believe that the chairman of that commission, who endeavours to protect for Canada, gold, coal, iron, and all the ores that exist in the country, will endeavour to protect the gold in the pockets of Canada, and not permit it to be taken away by American book-makers who invade our land. I cannot believe that the chairman of the Conservation Commission who says that no American shall interfere with our waterways will permit a herd of American book-makers to control our race-tracks in Canada, and deteriorate the morals, and take away the character, the reputation, and the respectability of the Canadian people. The names of people in high places whom the rules of parliament prevent me from mentioning have been invoked in this debate; their practices have been quoted by the opponents of the Bill. I say, Sir, that is hardly fair to gentlemen who occupy places of high position in the land, because these gentlemen on account of their position cannot reply to the statements made. I may say, Sir, that a certain gentleman in England occupying the highest position; one who is sometimes referred to as the first gentleman of Britain wrote a letter a little while ago on this question of gambling, and that letter is reported in the Toronto 'Star,' of February 24. The item says that the Reverend Montague Fowler, lecturing on the subject of racing, and gambling quoted the following from a letter written by this high personage:

> I have horror of gambling and shall always do my utmost to discourage others who have an inclination for it, as the spirit of gambling like intemperance is one of the greatest evils than can afflict a country.

I am not by the rules of the House permitted to mention the name of the person who wrote that letter, but I do say that when that personage writes that gambling is one of the greatest evils that can afflict a country, we cannot be found fault with by that gentleman or by the gentleman who represents him in Canada or by any others who are loyal British subjects if we support this Bill.

In conclusion I may say that when we get into committee to deal with the Bill section by section, I shall offer amendments that will make it perfectly clear that section 227 does not relate to bets between private individuals and which will make less drastic the provisions of section 235 as to the publication of racing information.

Mr. J. B. McCOLL (Northumberland, Ont. W. R.) My hon. friend (Mr. Miller) has referred to what he calls the opponents of this Bill. Mr. Speaker, there are no oppoments to the general principle of the Bill. There are no opponents to the leading features of this Bill, but there are opponents to the drastic, extreme, unjust, and unfair provisions of this Bill. Now, what is the general principle of this Bill? The general principle of the Bill is to amend the Criminal Code in such a manner as to make the law more effective in restricting and abolishing gambling and the evils resulting therefrom, and particularly that class of gambling known as race-track gambling. And, what are the leading features and provisions of this Bill? The leading features and provisions of the Bill are to broaden and extend the definition of common gaming house, common betting house, and disorderly houses to make the law more effective in abolishing that class of gambling carried on by means of what are known as hand-books or hand-book operators; to abolish what are known as toots and tipsters and the operations carried on by such persons; to abolish the sale of tips, the sale of racing information publishing odds on races, and the advertising of racing information. Now, what are the drastic and extreme and unjust and unfair provisions of the Bill? This proposed legislation invokes the Criminal Code and makes criminal certain acts and courses of conduct which a large portion of the public, perhaps the large majority of the people of Canada, look upon as absolutely a harmless and innocent recreation. Any such legislation I submit is drastic and extreme. This proposed legislation in its present form, according to the overwhelming weight of evidence presented to the committee will seriously affect if not totally abolish the noble and royal sport of horse-racing; a sport that has been fostered, encouraged, promoted, and patronized by the kings of England for the last 200 years, and which is being encouraged and promoted and patronized today not only by the present King of Great Britain but by other crowned heads and governments of Europe. I submit that any legislation that will seriously interfere with or abolish such a sport is drastic and extreme. Then, according to the evidence submitted to the Committee the Bill in its present form would certainly affect the light horse-breeding in Canada and the result in great financial loss to the importers and producers of the thoroughbred, standard breed, and other light horse breeds of Canada by depreciating the value of their stables and business. I submit, Sir, that any legislation having that result is unjust and unfair. Then, according to the evidence the Bill if passed in its present form would cause great financial loss to the jockey clubs and other racing associations by depreciating the value of their properties and plants. Therefore the features of the Bill in that respect are unjust as unfair.

Now Mr. Speaker my hon. friend (Mr. Miller) quoted from the evidence to show that the real issue between what he calls the opponents of the Bill and the promoters of the Bill was narrowed down to a very fine point. In fact he quoted from the evidence to show that the so called opponents of the Bill were ready and willing to co-operate, and I may say they did co-operate with the promoters of the Bill in amending the Bill so as to greatly improve on its original form. Then, the only point of difference between the promoters of the Bill and the so-called opponents of the Bill is this: That the promoters of the Bill desire to abolish absolutely all kinds of public betting on a race-course while the race is in actual progress; and the so-called opponents of the Bill desire to protect the racing, by permitting, as has always been permitted in Canada, the privilege of betting upon the race-course during the actual progress of the race meeting. Now Sir, my hon. friend (Mr. Miller) in the course of his remarks frequently used the expression 'race-track gambling,' and it appeared to me as if he liked to use that expression as often as possible. I am going to argue Sir, that what takes place on a well regulated race-course such as some of the race-courses we have in Canada is not race track gambling, and that the evils admitted on all hands which do result from race-track gambling do not occur upon the race-courses, but outside of the race-track altogether. When I am arguing in favour of race-track associations or jockey clubs, I mean those conducted by the class of men who are in that business for the sport that is in it, and not race-tracks that are conducted purely for business purposes or perhaps for gambling purposes. In this connection I wish to quote a statement made by Mr. Raney, solicitor for the promoters of the Bill, made at the beginning of the proceedings and before any evidence was taken. It will be found at pages 7 and 8 of the proceedings. He said:—

There is a broad line of demarcation separating these tracks into two classes, and I may classify them in this way: on the one side of the line are the Woodbine, the Montreal track and the Hamilton track. On the other side of the line of demarcation are the Fort Erie track, the Windsor track, the British Columbia track. These tracks are divided, as I say, by a line of demarcation, and I will define at once what that line of demarcation is. To illustrate it, I will refer to two tracks—the Woodbine on the one side and the Fort Erie on the other as types of these two classes. Now the Woodbine race meet is essentially a social and a sporting event; attracting many of the best people of Canada, with race-track book-making as an attraction and as a principal financial support. This race-track is managed as you have heard from Mr. McCarthy, by eminently respectable men, strong men financially, all Canadians.

It is the class of race-track which Mr. Raney has there described that the so-called opponents of this Bill desire to protect. What I say is this—and I speak not only from the overwhelming evidence that has been brought before the committee, but also from personal knowledge of what I have seen and observed on the Woodbine race-course at Toronto—that practically all the betting that goes on there is not gambling in the strict sense of the word. What is it? In the first place, I will refer to my own riding, and I will ask every other member of the House also to bring his mind to bear on what exists in his own constituency—the class of people in his constituency who go to the Woodbine or any other race-track of the class I have described, and say whether or not he would consider them to be gamblers in any sense of the word. Probably not more than a dozen, or twenty at the outside, of my constituents ever go to a race-track where book-making or pool-selling takes place. These men are not gamblers in any sense of the word. I can recall two of them who do not even know how to play a game of cards, who do not bet on hockey matches, baseball or prize fighting. These men go to the Woodbine; they look forward to spending a day or two there during the year for the sport and recreation they get. While there they bet. They may bet $2 or $5 on a race. Generally six or seven races take place in a day. They may win or they may lose. As a result, they may be $10 or $20 ahead or they may be that much behind. But, whether they lose or not, they have enjoyed their sport, they have had their outing. That is the form of recreation they take. They are not injured by it in any way, and to call these men gamblers would be absolutely wrong. With regard to the betting that takes place there, whether it is right or wrong, it is something that has grown up among the British people and has been going on for centuries. It is an incident of the great national sport of horse-racing that betting takes place on the results. The betting is an incident to the sport. Probably 90 per cent of the people who go to a race meeting conducted as the Woodbine is, and bet at all, are of that class of people. They bet as an incident of the sport, not with the gambling instinct at all. It has been said that if we abolish book-making and public betting on the race-track, it will not interfere with racing. But one of the proofs that the betting privileges are a great attraction for those who go to race meetings to enjoy the sport is that if these are removed, the attendance falls off, the races are not patronized, the gate receipts go, and the whole thing eventually fails altogether. To take the other side for a moment, I may be asked, do you pretend to argue that there are no evils resulting from race-track gambling? Certainly, very many evils have grown up from race-track gambling. What are they? What takes place in the pool rooms and on the streets? What takes place by the operation of hand-books, in barber shops, in third-rate hotels, in butcher shops, and so on? We had it clearly demonstrated before the committee that in the city of Toronto to-day there are probably from 300 to 500 hand-book operators. How do they operate? What do they bet on? There are no races going on in Toronto to-day. Their betting is done on race-meets which are going on in the United States—at Jacksonville, Tampa, Oakland, California, and so on. How is that done? By means of reading the newspapers. In the early morning they see the entries that have been made for the races at Jacksonville in the afternoon, and there is thus an opportunity for them to go out and make their bets. They go around canvassing people on the streets. They canvass workmen, even going to the Massey-Harris factory, and make bets of from 25 cents to $2, or even more. How do they decide the bet? The next morning the reports come out in the newspapers showing what horses won and the odds against them, and those who risked their money are paid off according to the published results. The unanimous opinion of the committee was that it was highly desirable to abolish all that class of gambling, which is going on from day to day in the way I have described. That is what can be termed strictly race-track gambling. What I have described as taking place at a well conducted race-meet is not race-track gambling, but an act which is an incident and an incentive to horse-racing.

My hon. friend has tried to impress upon the House the idea that book-makers are very undesirable men, whose principal business is to rob the public. Let us be just and consider for a moment what book-making really is and how it is carried on. This Bill aims at prohibiting pool-selling and book-making. What is pool-selling? That is something which is practised principally at trotting meets, but at running meets of the various jockey clubs, book-making takes the place of pool-selling. At the trotting meets both are carried on, but it is chiefly the pool-seller who operates. What are his operations? He acts as an agent for the public who desire to bet. He sells the pools and takes in the cash, and when the race is over, he deducts his five or ten per cent, and the rest of the money is divided among the winners. So that what money the pool-seller takes in goes back to the public, less the commission which he charges. The book-maker, who carries on his legitimate business, is in exactly the same position. His position is as close to that of a stock-broker as you can imagine. That was the general tenor of the evidence before the committee. Pool-selling appears to be a very satisfactory way of betting at a trotting race. There you would probably have two races in the afternoon. The races are run in heats, the best two out of three or three out of five. At running meets, however, the contests are all dash races, there may be six or seven a day, and an entirely different class of horses come out in each race. Pool-selling is, therefore, not a convenient or satisfactory way of betting at such meets, the book-maker consequently takes the place of the pool-seller. I might just mention that a book-maker on a race-track of an association such as the Woodbine is a different man altogether from the book-maker who may operate in a pool-room or upon that other class of tracks to which I shall refer later. The book-maker on tracks such as the Woodbine are under regulations. Every precaution is taken to protect the public, and they almost invariably stick to their legitimate business, which is this: The book-maker takes the horses which are to start in a certain race and puts up their names on a blackboard. He then gives the odds—one at even money, another at two to three, and so on. Under ordinary circumstances the book-maker—it is a mathematical calculation—ought to make ten or five per cent profit out of his operations, just the same as the pool-seller does. His calculations may go wrong. On one race he may lose and not make any percentage; on the next he may win. But if he carries on his legitimate business, he starts on a basis of making five or ten per cent, and on the average he does so. But if he should step outside legitimate business and go into speculating himself, he may win or lose, just the same as any other speculator. It is the public who really make the odds. You will continually see the slate changing. A horse quoted at one price may be quoted at an entirely different price in another minute. It all depends on how the public bet. The book-maker, in order to protect himself, has to change the odds, and his object is to take in something on every horse. There may be ten in the race. He has a better chance to come out even on the ten, because if all the public bet on the one horse, and that horse won, the book-maker would be broke. Every book-maker on a well regulated track is nothing more than an agent of the public, doing business in the way I have described. He is not that terrible individual which many people, who know nothing about the subject, imagine him to be, or my hon. friend would have the House believe he is.

What further do we see at the Woodbine? Every precaution is taken to protect the public. It is well provided with police. The local Toronto force is there, and in addition, special Pinkerton men are engaged at the expense of the club. These men appear on the course in plain clothes. They collect information and report to the local police, so that if the police see any parties who are undesirable, these parties are at once dealt with. What I am stating appears in the evidence taken before the committee, and I do not propose to take up time by quoting page after page of that evidence.

Again, we find that before the race-meet takes place, the authorities are in communication with the Pinkerton or other detective agencies, which they require to be on the lookout for any undesirable class of people about to leave Chicago or New York or Chicago, or elsewhere, for Toronto. The local force is on the lookout for just such people as soon as they arrive. If these suspects turn out not to be too hard looking, they are allowed to go free on condition that they leave town; but if they are considered too dangerous to let go, they are kept in custody until the meet is over. These are things that are done, these are provisions that are made, to protect the public against the undesirable classes that are likely to come to any large gathering. According to the evidence before the committee, there are far more offences in the way of pickpocketing and such like at the Toronto exhibition than at the Woodbine. As I say, there is an undesirable class, pickpockets, thieves and fakirs of different kinds, that are attracted to every large gathering.

Mr. TALBOT. They follow every crowd.

Mr. McCOLL. Yes. So long as horse-racing continues, that class will endeavour to get there, and the most that any racing association can do is to take the greatest precautions to protect the public against them. That is done, and done at great expense, at the Woodbine. Again, they protect the public in the matter of betting in this way: A race-horse owner comes there with his stable. He has a good horse. The horse starts on the opening day, and the public, knowing it from reputation, bet their money on it. But he shows poor form, makes a bad showing and the people lose their money. A day or two afterwards, the same horse appears and there is a great reversal of form, but the public, thinking that the horse is out of form do not bet on him, he is a long price in the books; but that day he goes out and wins. If that occurs at the Woodbine, what is done? The owner and trainer are at once brought before the stewards at the jockey club, and if the owner cannot give a satisfactory explanation—sometimes there may be a satisfactory explanation, for the horse may have been interfered with in the race or may not be in proper form—but, unless the explanation is satisfactory, that man is ruled off the course, he and his stable, ejected from the Woodbine and not permitted to race there any longer. That is another means that the club takes to protect the public. It sometimes happens that the jockeys may be bribed to pull a horse or to do something wrong in that regard. That very rarely happens, if it happens at all, at a well conducted race-track, such as the Woodbine. And why? These jockeys are licensed, they are paid large salaries, their business is like a profession, and if they are found doing anything wrong or crooked, they are at once brought before the stewards, their licenses are cancelled and their business is taken from them. I might mention other ways in which a race-track such as the Woodbine takes every means in its power to protect the public.

There are, however, race-tracks of another class. I do not know whether they exist in Canada or not. It appears from the evidence before the committee that Fort Erie and Windsor at one time were objectionable, but they are not so now. But, if there is anything wrong at any race-track, I submit that that is a matter for regulation and not for invoking the Criminal Code. Why should the men at the head of racing associations and jockey clubs such as I have described be brought before the public as criminals, or as consorting with criminals, when these meets could be regulated by the proper authorities? If we have not the jurisdiction, then go to the authority that has the jurisdiction and ask for regulation, but do not take the drastic means of invoking the Criminal Code. Reference has been made to the Vancouver race-meet that took place last year. That was an exceptional case, and, in dealing with it, I will give the substance of the evidence before the committee. It appears that men interested in the racing business organized a racing association at Vancouver and built a new race-track which they named the Minoru after King Edward's Derby winner of last year. Instead of operating the track last year, they rented it to an American concern, and, unfortunately, rented it for sixty days or ninety days—I have forgotten the number. Last year, a fair was going on at Seattle which brought large crowds of people to that city. It appears that there are boats plying regularly between Seattle and Vancouver. Extra boats were put on to take the crowds to this race meet, and, according to the evidence before the committee, a disgraceful state of affairs existed there, something that should be entirely prohibited, something that no one would justify. The local authorities could have stopped it—so it appeared from the evidence before the committee—had they seen fit to do so; they could have cancelled the contract they had with the Americans. That probably would have meant an action for damages, and the payment of money which, it is to be supposed, they did not wish to be called upon to pay. It will be seen that there were special circumstances there that are not likely to occur again, and the concurrence of which could be prevented by action of the local authorities. I see it stated in the public press that the municipal authorities of Victoria have already taken steps to prevent occurrences similar to those of last year. So, if there be objectionable race-tracks, there is a means of regulating them, otherwise than by invoking the Criminal Code as proposed under this Bill.

Now, my hon. friend (Mr. Miller) quoted a great deal of the evidence and referred to a number of witnesses. But, I think that if you will read the evidence of these several witnesses that he quoted—read the whole of their evidence—you will find that my hon. friend, perhaps, was not entirely fair in the impression that he tried to give to the House of that evidence. Again, it would appear to me to be only a proper thing, if he wished to be fair in laying the matter before the House, to give both sides, if there be two sides to it. He quoted the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) and tried to give great weight to the evidence given by that gentleman. But read the evidence of the Minister of Agriculture and you will find that he admitted that he practically knew nothing about the thing at all. I draw the attention of the House to the fact that the Minister of Agriculture has not yet established a racing branch in connection with his department. As against the evidence given by the Minister of Agriculture, I will refer to that of Dr. Rutherford. Dr. Rutherford also was quoted by my hon. friend; but I ask any hon. member of the House to read the whole of Dr. Rutherford's evidence. In the first place, before he became a veterinary director general, he managed a large racing-stable in the United States. Besides, he was a breeder of thoroughbreds. He spoke from a personal knowledge of the racing business for years. Read his evidence in full. That evidence clearly establishes, in the first place, that the thoroughbred is a very important, probably the most important, breed of horses in the world to-day. It is established that the thoroughbred is the foundation of all the light horses of the country, that the thoroughbred is used in improving the hackney, the standard breed of all the different classes of light horses in Canada. It is also established in Dr. Rutherford's evidence that racing is necessary to develop the thoroughbred, to develop his intelligence, his courage, his stamina and so on. Let me say that witness upon witness came before the committee giving evidence along the same lines, and establishing that the thoroughbred was very necessary for the breeding industry of the country, that racing was necessary to develop that horse, and that in order to promote racing it was necessary to have some kind of public betting on the race-course, and that if that were abolished, not only would racing deteriorate, but would probably die out. Witness after witness testified along these lines, and I appeal to any member of the committee, that when it was proposed to bring further witnesses, the committee were unanimously of the opinion that these facts had been fully established, that there was no dispute, and that it was unnecessary for those who were opposing the drastic provisions of the Bill to bring further witnesses. I may mention a few who testified before the committee: We had Dr. Rutherford, we had Mr. Dyment, ex-M.P., we had the Hon. J. H. Hendrie, one of the greatest breeders of thoroughbreds in the country, Dr. McEachern, Major Wm. Hendrie, Mr. Yager, of Simcoe, a breeder of hackneys that he crosses with thoroughbreds. We had a large number of witnesses who gave evidence along the lines of indicating that I have indicated, and a great many more could have been produced, but the committee thought it was not necessary. So, when my hon. friend to-day undertook to show that the thoroughbred was absolutely of no use for any purpose whatever, and I think he went to that extent, I was very much surprised, because that was entirely contrary to the evidence.

Now, my hon. friend has quoted some other authorities. You will remember he quoted from a book of Mr. E. King Dodds, he was for many years editor of the 'Canadian Sportsman.' Now, I am willing to admit that Mr. Dodds is one of the greatest authorities perhaps on this question that could be quoted, and perhaps my hon. friend would agree that if Mr. Dodds has expressed any opinions on this particular Bill, he would be inclined to agree with them. Now, I happen to have a long article written by Mr. Dodds in the last week's issue of the 'Canadian Sportsman,' in which he discusses this very Bill. I did not intend to make any reference to it, but as my hon. friend has quoted Mr. Dodds as an authority, I think it is proper for me to give his opinion on this particular Bill. I will not read the whole article, because it is somewhat lengthy. Apparently what brought forth the article was the argument of Mr. Raney, solicitor for the promoters of the Bill. Let me read the head notes of the article:

The anti-betting question. Mr. E. King Dodds replies to Lawyer Raney's so-called argument against betting at the races—facts against fiction—the evidence of jailbirds not entitled to consideration. Hand-books flourish when betting on the track is prohibited, a greater evil therefore increased. If betting is declared illegal on the race-course the Ontario Jockey Club will close their gates and the echo of the hoofs of the galloping thoroughbreds will no longer be heard at the Woodbine Park.

Those are the head notes to the article written by Mr. Dodds. From that article I quote:

If betting under any and all systems is prohibited on Canadian race-tracks, the clubs must either close their gates or offer such small purses that it would be impossible for a horse owner to pay running expenses, even should he win a liberal proportion of the prizes offered. The abolishment of horse-racing at Woodbine, it has been officially announced by the old jockey club, would result if an anti-betting law is passed.

Again:

Mr. Raney's contention is that betting at the track, even during the progress of the racing, is not essential, and that its elimination would not injuriously affect the interests of horse-breedineg.

That is Mr. Raney's contention. Now take Mr. Dodds' comment on that, and the proof he adduces:

Devoid as he is of experience, his opinion on this question is valueless. The so-called Hughes law in the state of New York provides ample testimony to the contrary. Stakes like the Brooklyn and Surburban handicaps, the value of each of which, previous to the passage of that law, was $25,000, have been cut down, so that in 1909 the value to the winners was only $3,850 in each event. Other stakes previously worth $10,000 were reduced to $2,000, and over-night events of $1,250 and $1,500 have shrunk to $400 and $500, while the attendance of spectators at the Metropolitan meetings fell off from an average of 12,000 to less than 3,000 per day. Such great racing stables as those of Messrs. Belmont, Vanderbilt, Keene, Whitney and others, have been forced to transfer their horses to Great Britain and France where wiser laws govern the sport.

My hon. friend read a long list of events that are announced to take place on the New York tracks during the coming season, I think he read 15. But he did not compare the purses given during the coming year with the purses given in the past, and, perhaps, it might be well for me here to refer a little to this Hughes law. Two years ago the law was passed in the state of New York and some other states of the union abolishing betting at race-tracks, abolishing the book-maker. What is the result? Has the Act been a success? What do we find this year? There are three Bills before the New York legislature proposing changes in the Hughes law. That law did not abolish gambling as expected, according to the evidence brought before our committee by representatives of the Pinkerton and Thiel detective agencies. Assuming that this Bill would have the same effect as the Hughes Bill, what would be the result in Canada? Whereas, now public betting is allowed to book-makers under regulation by the association, if the book-makers were prohibited from going to the track, any betting that took place would have to be done by private betting, which my hon. friend says is not to be interfered with by this legislation. I have said that the large majority of people who go to the Woodbine or to places of that kind, to a track conducted first for the sport, go there and bet from a sporting instinct and not from a gambling instinct. But when there is a chance to bet, gamblers bet with the book-makers and among themselves. Abolish the book-maker. Then the gambling element would go there just as before, but while they used to bet with the book-makers, they would have to find some one else to bet with. They would be able to say they were only private betters, that they were not making books, and that under the law they were legalized and recognized. In Toronto or New York all that gambling element who would go down and bet with the book-maker under present conditions would go there and bet in their private capacity, taking in as many of the other visitors to the races as they possibly could. We will suppose that a man goes to the race-track to enjoy the sport, and that there is no book-maker present. He would like to bet $5 on a race. The promoters of this Bill say that he should find out his friends and bet with them. He may have no friends there. Then they say: give it up altogether. Yes, the man may give it up, but it will be found that there are any number of men of the class I have spoken of, men who may have been objectionable book-makers under other conditions, ready to accommodate him and take his bet. He will then be betting without any protection, and if he wins the chances are he will not get his money. He is betting with strangers, and the result will be that that class of better, that is the sporting element, will not take their chances of betting with strangers, they will keep away from the track, and racing will deteriorate. That will leave a larger field for the regular gambler. They will go down there and bet among themselves or with others, they will bet orally, they will make no books, and the evidence is that that has been the result of the operation of the Hughes law in New York, and that the real evils of gambling have been largely increased rather than diminished by its operation. That in effect is the general result of that law. Racing has been deteriorated, the sporting element who formerly patronized these tracks and their large stables have gone to Europe, to England and France. The other patrons of the track who would go there to enjoy the sport keep away, and the race-tracks now are in full control of the gambling element. The pool-rooms in New York have increased largely since the Hughes law went into force. That has been the result, and I think it only fair to assume that it may be the result here if this Bill passes in its present form. If there be any doubt as to whether or not it would have that effect, would it not be better to take no chances on it? The Bill goes very far. It is intended to remove all the admitted evils of race-track gambling. Then it appears to me it would be wisdom all round not to go too far, but to concede the small provisions that the so-called opponents of the Bill desire. In that way we would be protecting the sporting interests, we would be protecting horse-breeding in Canada, and we would not be inflicting serious injury on any one.

Another question to which my hon. friend referred was the economic question. He stated that the jockey clubs and racing associations obtained large revenues from the sale of book-making privileges. That is quite true, but if this legislation goes into force, as the majority of the committee desire, if all the provisions about which there is no dispute go into force, then they will not have that large revenue, and they will be losing to that extent. My hon. friend tried to lead the House to believe that something like $2,000,000 was taken annually from the people of Canada by book-makers from the United States. That was entirely erroneous. The evidence before the committee was that almost invariably, particularly at the spring meeting at the Woodbine, the book-makers actually lost money. You would say why would they give large sums for the racing privilege if they were losing money by them? The explanation is that as a part of the privileges they get they have the right to have a telegraph office at the Woodbine, and to send information on the races to the United States. It appears that there is an association known as the Interstate News Company, whose head office is in New York. As each race is run at the Woodbine, information regarding that race is sent to that Interstate News Company. For instance, you will see alongside of this telegraph office a man with a field glass calling off the horses at their positions at the post and at each quarter pole, The odds that the public make on the race-track are also telegraphed to that Interstate Association. Then the company telegraph that same information to all the pool-rooms in the United States, so that while the races are actually taking place at the Woodbine, under conditions that have grown up in recent years by allowing that information to go out, a system of gambling that is purely race-track gambling is going on in all the pool-rooms of the United States. But, you say, how do they make their money? This is how. It appeared in the evidence—and that from witnesses brought by the promoters of the Bill—that it was a practice in the pool-rooms, where the betting took place, to give just double the odds against the bettor that would be given on the race-track, so that the book-makers might be losing a large amount of money at the Woodbine, and yet in the pool-rooms away from the track, where the odds were doubled against the bettor, they might be able to make a large amount of money. It is because of that privilege of having telegraph companies upon the race-track sending out the information that they can afford to give the money they do for the betting privileges. All are agreed that that condition of affairs should be stopped. I would here point out that although this practice is of no special injury to Canada, because the gambling takes place in another country, yet it is no doubt an injury to our neighbours to the south of the line, as it enables them to carry on a large system of what is actually and truly race-track gambling, and it would be our duty, I believe, to prohibit that.

Mr. LANCASTER. As good neighbours.

Mr. McCOLL. Yes, on any sound moral principle. That is the reason why these people are able to give such a large amount of money for the privilege of making books at Woodbine, and although they may be losers there they make their money in another way in actual gambling. I may mention that the book-maker that we see on the race-track, the man operating with the blackboard, is in a large number of cases nothing more than a paid clerk getting $15 a day, and a commission upon the profits if there be any. By this means the association in Chicago, or some other place provides the capital, and the man on the track is simply a clerk who understands the mathematical calculation of making a five per cent book or a ten per cent book, or whatever percentage he is instructed to make.

Now, Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend (Mr. Miller) has referred to the question as to whether the church should interfere in promoting legislation, and I do not propose to enter upon a discussion of that. I suppose that in every country, and in every state there are social and moral questions that deserve the attention of the legislature, or of any societies that may take them up. And, any association that takes up these questions with the desire to promote the public good deserves the highest commendation. We sometimes find, however, that men who make it a special work to promote such reforms are inclined to go a little too far, to become over enthusiastic and over zealous. It was Pope who wrote:

> For virtue's self may too much zeal be had,
> The worst of madness is a saint gone mad.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I do not wish for one moment to suggest that my hon. friend (Mr. Miller) or those who are behind him, or associated with him in promoting this Bill have reached that ideal state that would qualify them for canonization, but what I do say is that in my opinion they are moved by an over-zealousness, by a misguided enthusiasm which has somewhat narrowed their line of vision and affected their judgment to such an extent that they are not able to take that broad and liberal view of this question which should characterize the members of such a representative body as this House. I lay it down as a principle that in a country like Canada where we have such a great diversity of opinion upon questions of a quasi-religious or moral character, that the last thing that should be thought of is the invocation of the Criminal Code to regulate them. We have had in times past men of very extreme views. Oliver Cromwell attempted to absolutely prohibit horse-racing in England; he also issued an order forbidding the eating of mince pie. Well, Oliver Cromwell is gone, but horse-racing still exists in England. I mention that to show the extreme views that some people of the past have entertained. There may be people in Canada to-day, in fact I believe there are some, who are absolutely opposed to horse-racing in any form. To these people I say: you have a perfect right to enjoy your opinions, that is a privilege accorded to every Canadian. And, Sir, while men are at liberty to have views of their own of the very extremest kind, yet I say it is not in the interests of this country that they should try to force these views upon other elements of the community who do not share them, and especially so by that most offensive means possible, the invocation of the Criminal Code. I would say that if any of these social and moral questions which from time to time do arise can be regulated in any other way than by the Criminal Code, we should so regulate them, but if we are to invoke the Criminal Code for every trifling little matter that may arise we will very soon cause the masses of the people to lose respect for the Criminal Code. On this question of public betting on race-tracks, we find that in Great Britain, in France and in all European countries, in the British colonies, in the Argentine Republic and other South American states, there are laws upon horse-racing, but in every case they permit public betting. Petitions which were presented to the House asking for this legislation stated that Japan and certain states of the American union had passed laws prohibiting book-making; but the evidence before the committee was that in Japan the prohibition had lasted only for a year, and that last year the Japanese government appointed a commission to visit the various countries of Europe and investigate the different systems of betting on race-courses that were permitted, with a view to introducing similar legislation in Japan. So we have before us the experience of all these countries for many years permitting what the so-called opponents of this Bill are asking. I may say that when we get into committee I have an amendment which I intend to move on this point. My hon. friend referred to the question of public opinion. I think it was Spalding who said that there was no worse tyranny than the public opinion that condemns innocent pastimes. It appears to me that we have here an exemplification of the principle involved in that aphorism. In the first place, I say that there is no spontaneous public opinion asking for this legislation. Such public opinion as does exist in favour of it is what I might term a manufactured or fictitious public opinion, and not a genuine public opinion at all. Perhaps I might qualify that in this way. I believe there is not only now, but has always existed a genuine public opinion in favour of the general principle of this Bill, which I enunciated at the opening of my remarks; but for the particular provisions of the Bill there is no public opinion at all, because at least 90 per cent of the public in reality know nothing about it. I may be asked what authority I have for that statement. Again, Mr. Speaker, I go to my own constituency, and I speak of what I know independently of any evidence that was brought before the committee. As I have stated, probably not more than a dozen or twenty of my constituents ever go to a race-track meeting where betting takes place. The rest of my constituents know nothing about it; they are not affected by it, are not injured by it, and are not concerned about it. I would ask every member of this House to apply the same rule to his constituency and see if in 90 per cent of the constituencies of Canada the same condition does not exist. Now, if there be evils resulting from what takes place on a race-track during the progress of a race-meet, they naturally come from the particular place where the race-track is situated. If we are to judge from the remarks made when this Bill received its second reading, every member from the city of Toronto, where the Woodbine track is located, will vote against the drastic provisions of this Bill. The same is probably true of Hamilton and Montreal. So that the people who ought to know and who no doubt do know of the evils, if any, that exist, as these places are among the so-called opponents of the Bill. From the standpoint of public opinion, I think that a very important statement. Then we had submitted to the committee from the farmers in the vicinity of Windsor a very largely-signed petition objecting to this legislation. But I may say that I have not very much faith in petitions. Petitions that are genuinely submitted by the people of a locality in regard to some grievance, under which they suffer, are entitled to a great deal of consideration; but petitions that are worked up by people who live probably hundreds of miles away, and are signed by the class of people who know nothing about the question at issue, are entitled to very little weight. Let us consider how this agitation arose. I suppose there is no doubt—in fact, it appears from the resolutions taken from the minute books and recorded in the evidence before the House—that the prime mover in this matter was the Rev. Dr. Shearer, who is at present connected with the social and moral reform movement. I believe that Dr. Shearer is acting in the very best of faith, and is impelled by the very highest motives in bringing about this agitation. But at the very beginning Dr. Shearer made one very great mistake, and it is a mistake that has not yet been rectified. It is a mistake which has largely influenced a great many people who do not know any better. In the first place, in the General Assembly of the Presbyterian church a resolution was passed with a recital to the effect that the intention of parliament was being violated by these racing associations. The meaning of that is this, that what parliament intended, when it passed the Criminal Code seventeen years ago, was being violated and had been continually violated during those seventeen years by the racing associations throughout the country. We have had it clearly demonstrated that the very opposite is the fact. Dr. Shearer and the promoters of this Bill know better now. They learned that when they came before the committee, if they did not know it before; but apparently no steps have been taken to remove that wrong impression from the minds of the people among whom it was circulated. As proof of that, I quote a sermon which was preached on this gambling question in a Presbyterian church in Toronto, only a week ago by the Rev. Dr. Fasken. It was reported in the 'Globe'; probably some hon. gentlemen will remember it. This sermon was preached on this gambling question by the Reverend Dr. Fasken, and in that sermon he reiterated, as late as the 20th March, after this Bill had been reported to the House, that mistake which existed in the beginning. Here is what appears in the 'Globe':

> Mr. Fasken then proceeded to speak of the provisions of the Criminal Code and the bearing upon them of the Miller Bill. That Bill had sought merely to do what the law meant to do in the first place.

There you have the statement that all which the Miller Bill intends to do is to make effective what was the intention of parliament in the first place. The wrong impression, repeated as late as a week ago, got among the people in the beginning and has not yet been removed, and I have every confidence that when the people understand even that one point only, that public opinion, which does exist in favour of this Bill, will change.

While I commend the motives of the promoters of this measure, I do not think I can commend their methods. How was this agitation brought about? In the first place, the promoters got together and passed resolutions and came before the government in order to have it made a government measure. I am speaking from the extracts from the minute-book of the association which appeared in the evidence. The government declined. Then the promoters undertook to operate on members of parliament. A petition was prepared in Toronto and circulated throughout the country. Accompanying each petition was a circular letter in which instructions were given how to get signatures. The petitions were to be signed at the church doors, or to be given to sympathetic merchants, and so on, who would request signatures. Then they were to be sent back to headquarters. In that circular, another instruction was given, and that was to be sure and see your member before parliament meets; it meets on the 15th of November, so see your member and get him to use his active support in favour of the Bill. And remember there was then no copy of the Bill, and no one knew what it was going to be. Later on, the promoters arranged to have a number of letters sent each member from his constituents, urging him to act. I do not know whether any hon. members have received letters of that kind.

Mr. LANCASTER. Lots of them; they all came by the same mail.

Mr. McCOLL. In that the promoters were only following out the original programme. What I say is that a public opinion worked up in that way, and worked up among people who know nothing about the matter, who are not affected or injured in any way by race-meets, is a manufactured public opinion to which we should be careful in giving any weight.

I have taken up much longer time than I intended. There are many things I have probably overlooked, but when we go into committee on the Bill there will be ample opportunity to go into the details. In committee I intend to move an amendment along the lines I have suggested.

Mr. O. J. WILCOX (North Essex). I desire, Mr. Speaker, to make a few observation upon this Bill. Recognizing that I am but a new man in this House, I have refrained from taking an active part in discussion, but as the question we are now considering is one which affects the constituency I have the honour to represent, I could not possibly deem it consistent with my duty to give a silent vote. I may say that I have received communications and petitions containing nearly 600 signatures of the best citizens in the riding of North Essex, nearly 400 of whom are representatives of the agricultural class, asking me, as their representative, to oppose the provisions of this Bill on the ground that they are too drastic.

I have also received a few communications asking me to support the Bill.

At the outset, let me say that I have every sympathy with that class of good and noble citizens who have joined this moral reform association. My hon. friend from South Grey (Mr. Miller), who introduced the Bill in a very able manner, and who addressed us this afternoon with his usual eloquence, complained that the opponents of this measure spoke of him as being narrow, and also stated, that certain references had been made toward Dr. Shearer which were improper. I might, however, remark that I have taken rather an active interest in this question myself, and that the reflection which my hon. friend drew to our attention was new to me. This is the first time I heard it made. While I recognize that the work which the Moral Reform Association is doing is very important, yet I am inclined to the view that it is impossible to make a people moral by legislation. All we can expect parliament to do, is to regulate the evils at the race track. There being no pretense by the Bill to prevent racing itself.

My hon. friend from West Northumberland (Mr. McColl), in the very fair argument which he presented this afternoon, dealt largely with the question from the standpoint of the jockey club and the working out of bookmaking generally. It seems to me that there is one side to which my hon. friend did not refer, and that was the evidence pointing out the fact that the thoroughbred horse is the fountain of light-horse breeding. I concur in the remark of my hon. friend from West Northumberland (Mr. McColl) that my hon. friend from South Grey (Mr. Miller) was not fair in the evidence he submitted this afternoon. When he quoted the evidence of the veterinary director general, Dr. Rutherford, as favourable to the passing of this Bill, I am inclined to the view, from a very careful perusal of that evidence, and from having had the pleasure of listening to Dr. Rutherford when he was before the committee, that Dr. Rutherford's evidence was conclusive that the passage of this Bill would affect, and affect seriously, a very important industry in this country. I desire to quote from Dr. Rutherford's evidence, and I shall not take a clause here and a clause there as it may support the theory I hold or help out the argument I desire to present, but I shall quote from the beginning. Mr. Moss, who was the solicitor representing the horse breeders' associations, conducted the examination of Dr. Rutherford as follows:

Q. What is your position?—A. I am veterinary director general and live stock commissioner.

Q. Of Canada?—A. Yes.

And let me say that Dr. Rutherford does not possess any interest in any jockey club in this country, he has no financial interest in breeding, and, holding the high and important position he does, he would give an unbiassed opinion upon the question which we are considering this afternoon:

Q. How long have you occupied that position?—A. I have been veterinary director general for nearly eight years, not always by that title, and I have been live stock commissioner for three years and a half.

Q. And previous to that did you have experience in horse-breeding?—A. Yes.

Q. I understand, to shorten the matter up, that you have had experience in that business all your life both in the old country and on this side of the Atlantic, and perhaps you will indicate briefly just what that experience is?—A. Well of course I have been connected with horses all my life. I have been a veterinary surgeon for upwards of thirty years. I was for nearly two years manager of a very large racing and breeding establishment in the United States. I have been connected with horse-breeding. I was for five years president of the Horse Breeders' Association of Manitoba and the Northwest Territories. I have bred a number or horses myself and have always taken a great interest in the subject.

Q. At the present time you have no interest—no financial or other interest—in any racing track or anything of that sort?—A. None whatever.

Q. What do you say, Dr. Rutherford, I am going to ask you the question broadly, as to the importance or otherwise of the thoroughbred in connection with the horse-breeding industries of the country?—A. The thoroughbred horse is the foundation of all light horse breeding. Without the thoroughbred horse you can have no really good light horse breeding.

Q. Will you explain a little more fully what you mean by that?—A. Well all our breeds of light horses, with the exception of some of the breeds of ponies in which it cannot be traced, owe their best qualities to the thoroughbred horse. The American bred horse for instance is descended direct from the English thoroughbred Messenger imported during the latter part of the eighteenth century. The Hackney horse owes its best quality to the thoroughbred horse. The great progenitor of the hackneys was a thoroughbred horse also imported about the same time, a horse called Blaze. Take the various breeds of coach horses, both British and continental and they have all been built up by the use of a very strong infusion of thoroughbred blood. The common horses in the country, the half-breed horses that are for hunting and military purposes in all countries in the world, in the present day owe their best qualities—their excellences, their endurance, their strength and their courage to the use of the thoroughbred blood.

Then, at page 13:

Q. In your opinion is Canada a country that ought to develop a large light horse breeding industry?—A. Yes.

Q. Is it suitable for that purpose?—A. Very suitable.

Q. In what regard, Dr. Rutherford, would you explain that more clearly?—A. Well—

Q. I mean that is your opinion, now give us the reasons for that opinion?—A. Well, we breed in Canada at the present time a very large number of light legged horses, but there are many, a majority of those horses, useless nondescripts, because insufficient care and attention is being devoted to the selection of proper sires for use on the common mares of the country. If we were to use more thoroughbred blood in this country we would have an infinitely better class of light horses for general use. Not only that, we would be doing our share in furnishing our quota of the horses required for military purposes in the event of the empire being engaged in war. That we are not doing at the present time. But we found that there were purchased in the United States during the Boer war something like 113,000 odd horses and mules; they bought in Austria-Hungary a very large number, they bought in Italy, they bought in Spain, they bought in Argentine, they bought wherever they could buy because the Boer republic not being a sovereign power there was no objection on the part of neutral powers to allow the purchase by the British war office of horses in those countries, except on the part of the United States, which, towards the close of the war, summarily ejected the agents of the British war office and told them they must get out of the country and must not come back any more. The other countries however, raised no objection. If this republic had been a sovereign power, Great Britain would have been unable to purchase horses except in her own territory or in that of an ally or friendly nation, with the result that the 800,000 odd horses which were used up in the Boer war would not have been available and the empire would have been seriously crippled.

Dr. Rutherford, speaking on the question of the development of thoroughbreds, also states:

Q. Then is the maintenance of racing necessary to maintain the supply of thoroughbreds?—A. I think it is, absolutely.

I might also quote Mr. Duncan McEachern upon the same point, I might also quote Mr. A. E. Dyment, men which have no financial interest, and are qualified to express an opinion on this question, to back up the evidence submitted by Dr. Rutherford, the veterinary surgeon, and live stock commissioner of this Dominion. Their evidence seems to me almost conclusive that the thoroughbred horse is an important horse, and that he cannot be developed to his best without racing. It would take a great deal to convince me that such is not the fact, because I have bred horses myself. I have to-day on my own farm, horses that furnish living evidence of the truth of Dr. Rutherford's testimony, so it will take a great deal to convince me that the breeding of light horses in this country is not largely dependent upon thoroughbred horses. I may say that I have never in my life attended the race-track, I have never registered a bet with a book-maker in my life. But from the evidence I have seen of the evil which is caused by race-track gambling, I think the situation could be met by an amendment which will be submitted to this Bill. We are in favour of this Bill with one exception. We believe in doing away with the hand-book, we believe in doing away with the communication from the track, but we ask that, as the Bill does not prevent individual betting, it shall simply provide the means of regulating betting. There is no other means, to my mind, that can be adopted to regulate betting without permitting the book-maker to operate upon the track for the number of days which the race is allowed to be carried on. Now let me read one or two communications from the most prominent business men we have in the city of Windsor. Windsor has a population of 17,000 people, and we have had one of those meetings successfully carried on there for the last ten years:

Mr. Oliver J. Wilcox, M.P., Ottawa.

Dear Sir,—As a citizen and business man of Windsor and one who has had considerable experience with the Windsor Racing Association in a business and pleasure capacity, I beg to voice my sentiments in favour of the continuance of this favourable sport. I do not believe there is any organization in Canada to-day that is more exacting and strict in enforcing their code of rules than the Windsor Racing Association. As far as I could observe the meetings have been carried out in the most decorous manner. Drunkenness, rowdyism or anything of this nature. I can safely say would not be tolerated for a moment. In conclusion I feel it only just as a florist to commend the association for the beautiful and well kept grounds and flower beds. The business effect of the meetings is certainly beneficial to Windsor merchants. I am well informed that many thousands of dollars are spent daily in our city to maintain the supplies requisite to the life of men and horses, and as a great deal of our money finds its way to Detroit for pleasure it is indeed a good feature to have something in our city that at least results in bringing some business to our merchants.

I could quote many communications of that nature. Now I desire to read an extract from the Windsor 'Record,' a paper published in the city of Windsor, and which is a leading paper in the county of Essex.

This paper has been in existence in Windsor for a great many years, and I have always known it to oppose anything which is injurious to the public interest. Here is what it says in respect to this particular Bill, in its issue of March 18:

Evils, as they exist in all walks of life, can sometimes, by judicious legislation, be regulated, but not entirely suppressed, without great injustice, and this method is what is required in Canada, so far as protracted race meetings are concerned.

Reflecting men who know of what they speak express the view that the most direct and effective way to ultimate reform would be to materially shorten the meetings, as well of course as to cut out some other admittedly objectionable features.

Were this done it is probable that public opinion would be satisfied to live and let live. There is no doubt that all clubs have raced too much and some of them have far exceeded the limits of what should be a recreation and a healthy sport; but no fair-minded person can honestly say that that is just and sufficent grounds for imposing legislation which will seriously cripple a very important industry of Canada, that of horse-breeding.

One thing is clear to the mind disposed to a reasonable view of the question—it is impossible to have race-meetings without some book-making, and if this feature were suppressed it would simply lead to a condition of evasion such as exists in New York, as clearly appears from the evidence given before the select committee by the officers of the law from that state, as well as the testimony of other reputable witnesses who have been present at race-meetings there, and who have seen betting with unlicensed book-makers going on on every hand, with posters stuck up all over the grounds: 'Betting Prohibited.' In short the Hughes law has largely failed to accomplish what was expected of it, another proof that prohibition does not prohibit and that there are more rational methods of reducing evils of this sort. All will admit, however, that the pool-room and the selling of tips should be absolutely prohibited. If this were done much of the evil justly complained of would be eliminated from the race-track.

So far as concerns Windsor, a place which has had a long and intimate experience with the race-track, there are no complaints. The peace does not suffer to a noticeable extent from the periodical presence of the vast racing colony, and the business of the police court derives no stimulus therefrom. On the contrary these events bring an immense material benefit to the city, stimulating every line of commerce, and it is doubtful if there is a business man in the city who would advocate abolition.

That editorial appeared in the leading newspaper of Windsor. I have, as I stated, petitions from nearly 600 representative agriculturists and business men asking that this Bill be not passed in its entirety. We are perfectly willing to amend the law, and will vote to amend it, but we do think that it would be reasonable to place in the Bill an amendment which would not entirely eliminate that favourite sport. I would quote also from the evidence of John Pender at page 309:

Mr. John J. Pender, called, sworn and examined.

By Mr. Meredith:

Q. What is your position, Mr. Pender?—A. I am the assistant superintendent of Pinkerton's International Detective Agency.

Q. The Pinkertons' International Detective Agency has offices in Canada and in the United States?—A. Yes, we have 21 offices all over the country.

Q. You have 21 offices?—A. Yes.

Q. Has your agency made rather a specialty of the work of detecting gambling on the track and crime of different kinds?—A. We police and control every first-class race-track on this continent.

Q. Now you have an office in Montreal?—A. Yes.

Q. The head office in Canada?—A. Yes.

Q. Have you had occasion to personally visit the different tracks in Canada and in the United States, especially in the United States?—A. I have visited the principal tracks in a professional capacity of the United States and I have also been superintendent of the track at Blue Bonnets.

Q. Now, have you had occasion to visit the tracks in New York since the passing of the Hughes' law?—A. I have.

Q. Will you tell the committee in as few words as possible the effect of the Hughes' law on the attendance, and the class of people attending, &c.—A. As figured by the receipts of the different racing associations. I understand that the figures are that in 1907 prior to the passage of the Hughes' Bill the receipts of the race-track——

By Mr. Raney:

Q. The witness says he understands, could he be a little more definite?—A. Well, it is the published figures given by the controller of the state.

Mr. Raney.—I just want to call attention to this kind of evidence that is all, I am not objecting to it, you understand, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman.—The committee will hear it.

A. The figures of the controller show that from the tax they paid into the state the receipts in 1907 were $4,000,000, and the receipts in 1908, the first year——

By Mr. Raney:

Q. The receipts for what?—A. The figures I gave were the gate receipts for all the tracks in the state of New York for 1907. In 1908, the Hughes' Bill had just become operative in that year, the gate receipts were $1,500,000, but the receipts for last year had dwindled down to $600,000.

By Mr. Meredith:

Q. As to the class of people attending before and after the Hughes' Bill passing?—A. The class of people who patronize the track has always been very good, but now we are left with a very poor run.

Q. And what have you to say as to the class of horses?—A. The class of horses has much deterioriated, all the good horses practically have been shipped abroad.

Q. And how about the purses?—A. The purses are much smaller.

Q. And what effect has the Hughes' Bill had on the betting? Would you tell the committee from your personal observation what effect it has had on that?—A. In proportion to the population there is just as much money bet now as ever there was, that is in my judgment.

Q. Does the betting go on on the race-course as formerly, or in other ways?—A. It goes on in a new form, they have what they call the oral betting.

Q. And is the new form of betting worse or better than it was before the Hughes' Bill became operative, in your opinion?—A. In my opinion it is much worse.

Q. What effect has it had on the pool-rooms and the hand-book men and that kind of thing, has it increased their facilities or lessened them in your opinion?—A. It has resulted in a very decided increase among the pool-rooms, particularly in New York city.

Q. Now does your agency act in the different cities in Canada for large corporations, large companies?—A. It does.

Q. And does it act similarly in the United States, I do not want to go into particulars?—A. Yes.

Q. And if there is a Bill before this committee which allows apparently according to the understanding of the chairman at all events, individual amateur betting on the race-course, but will have the effect of prohibiting licensed book-makers on chartered race-courses, would you state your opinion as to what will result if such a law is passed? Will it ameliorate the so-called moral evil, or will it increase it?—A. In my opinion it will increase it.

It seems to me that we can attach some weight to that evidence. It is that of a man who is acting in the capacity of a detective, whose duty it is to see that the law is lived up to, and when he came before our committee, and gave evidence to the effect that the passing of the Hughes law, or the passing of this Bill in its present shape, would make conditions worse than they are to-day, it seems to me that we should consider our course carefully.

I desire to place on 'Hansard' a clause of the petition which I have received from nearly 600 of the residents in and around the city of Windsor where the Windsor races are carried on. This petition says in part:

> There is a race-course in the township of Sandwich West in this county, equipped in first-class condition in every respect, and everything is conducted in a manner to recommend it to the public. To the farmers of the county the races conducted there are of great value by affording a ready cash market, at best prices, for their produce and at a time when it is needed.

And that petition is signed by nearly 400 farmers right in the vicinity where that race-meet is carried on. The petition continues:

> It is intended to use the race-track premises for an annual agricultural exhibition, and if racing is impaired the premises cannot be obtained for that purpose.

Mr. WILCOX.

I desire to refer to some of the statements of the learned gentleman who appeared in support of the Bill, Mr. Raney. I am not a lawyer, I am a layman, but I always understood it was the duty of a lawyer to do his work to the best of his ability for his client. I would be inclined to the view that Mr. Raney would not be doing his duty if he did not do his utmost for his clients in this case, and I believe he did. I understand that when in any case of law a solicitor finds upon the private examination of a witness that the witness is going to give evidence that is not in favour of his case, the solicitor would be likely to say to the witness: Go home, I do not think I will need you. The point I am coming to is this: In the argument issued by Mr. Raney—and with due regard to that gentleman, if I were a solicitor probably I would have done exactly as he did, but I doubt it—in Mr. Raney's argument at page 13 which he published in February, 1910 under the heading Fort Erie and Windsor, he makes this statement:—

> The men who control these tracks have been careful to keep themselves and their account books and their money books away from this committee.

Now, Mr. Hanrahan, the secretary of the Windsor Track Association was present and Mr. Raney examined the books of Mr. Hanrahan, and he received such information from them that he told Mr. Hanrahan to go home, that he would not need him to give evidence, and that notwithstanding the fact that he himself had subpœnaed him to Ottawa. And, after receiving that information Mr. Raney in this argument made statements that are absolutely contradicted by the information given to him by Mr. Hanrahan.

Mr. LANCASTER. Perhaps that is what he calls social reform.

Mr. WILCOX. Possibly it is. Mr. Raney made this statement:—

> The men who control these tracks have been careful to keep themselves and their account books and their money books away from this committee. Being foreigners they are not personally amenable to the jurisdiction of this committee.

Now, the fact is that the original shareholders of the Windsor Fair Grounds and Driving Park Association were a number of residents of Windsor, Walkerville and Sandwich, among whom were such men as W. J. McKee, ex-M.P.——he was very nearly being a real M.P.——

Mr. LANCASTER. A miss is as good as a mile.

Mr. WILCOX. Yes. The original shareholders comprised such men as W. J. McKee, Francis Cleary, ex-mayor of Windsor, F. H. Walker, of Hiram Walker & Sons,

Hon. J. C. Patterson, Solomon White, ex-M.P., John Curry, banker, and 40 other men of this locality. The track is now controlled as given in Mr. Hendrie's statement, by the Windsor Fair Grounds and Driving Park Association, of which the following are members: George M. Hendrie, W. J. McKee, W. J. Pulling, E. S. Wigle, and J. A. McKay, all of Windsor and W. O. Parmer. The statement made by Mr. Raney that this track was owned by foreigners and that they could not be found was therefore made absolutely without foundation. In view of the information at Mr. Raney's disposal, it is unfair to this House that he should make such a statement.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. WILCOX. Mr. Speaker, before recess I was speaking of the men who own, and control the Windsor race-track. They are W. J. McKee, ex-Member Parliament, W. J. Pulling, E. S. Wigle, and J. A. McKay, all of Windsor, Ontario., W. O. Parmer and George M. Hendrie. Mr. Raney, in his argument, states that this track is owned and controlled by refugees from the other side. I desire to say that you cannot find within the confines of this Dominion any better citizens than the men whose names I have just mentioned. At page 33 of Mr. Raney's argument, he says:

> The facts, so far as the trotting association are concerned, being thus reduced to a negligable quantity, there is nothing to argue about under this heading, and we may dismiss the trotting horseman.

During the years 1904, 1905, 1906 and 1909 the trotting meet in Windsor received from the book-makers $19,747, and paid out in purses $31,815. These purses could not have been paid had it not been that book-making, and betting were allowed on the track, and if book-making is prevented, it will certainly do away with these races. In Mr. Raney's argument in pamphlet No. 2, he states, at page 8, under the heading 'No Argument from Fort Erie or Windsor,' as follows:

> The Windsor track has been operated by the Highland Park Club of Detroit since the prosecutions instituted by the district attorney in 1906, which put an end to its gambling operations at the Highland Park track out Woodward avenue.

From the very best information that I can get on the subject, I am inclined to the view that Mr. Raney is entirely mistaken. It is stated that the lease of the Highland Park Club expired on the 1st of May, 1906, and a renewal could not be obtained. On March 23, 1910, Mr. George H. Hendrie received the following communication:

> Dear Sir,—In reply to your inquiry, would say that the lease of lots 6, 7, and 8 of section C. of quarter-section 4, 10,000 acre tract, between the trustees of the estate of the W. H. Stevens and Highland Park club expired on the first day of May, 1906, and that under the conditions of said lease or agreement said club had a right to remove the buildings situated thereon, and I am informed and believe they did remove the same during the fall and winter of 1905 and 1906. The premises above described were commonly known as the Highland Park club. I may add that after the lease expired the property was placed upon the market for sale.

So that it would appear that Mr. Raney's statement to the effect that this track was operated by Americans, and that they were compelled to move to this side because certain laws were passed on the other side, is not based upon facts. Upon page 7 of the printed proceedings of the committee, Mr. Raney states:

> There is a broad line of demarcation separating these tracks into two classes, and I may perhaps classify them in this way; on the one side of the line are the Woodbine, the Montreal track and the Hamilton track. On the other side of the line of demarcation are the Fort Erie track, the Windsor track, the British Columbia track. These tracks are divided, as I say, by a line of demarcation, and I will define at once what that line of demarcation is. To illustrate it, I will refer to two tracks—the Woodbine on the one side and the Fort Erie on the other as types of these two classes. Now the Woodbine race meet is essentially a social and sporting event, attracting many of the best people of Canada, with race-track book-making as an attraction and as a principal financial support.

Further on Mr. Raney states:

> The evidence will show that the attendance at these tracks, especially Windsor and Fort Erie, is from 79 to 75 per cent American, the managament entirely American.

I desire to say, Mr. Speaker, that that statement is not in accordance with the facts. The Windsor track is operated, and controlled by Canadians exactly as the Woodbine track is owned, and controlled by Canadians. Mr. Raney says that 'the Woodbine race-meet is essentially a social and a sporting event,' so is the race-meet at Windsor. With regard to the provisions of this Bill, I am inclined to the view that if it is not amended in some respects, the operation of it will be very much like an amendment that was made a few years ago in the Ontario Agriculture and Arts Act. I had the privilege of acting in the capacity of one of the executive officers of the Association of Fairs and Exhibitions a few years ago, when there was a good deal of argument upon this very question. A clause had been placed in the Ontario Agriculture and Arts Act prohibiting racing at agricultural fairs throughout the province, of which there are 367. The Act provided that any agricultural society which held a race-meet at its agricultural show, contrary to the provisions of the Act, would not receive the government grant. Well, Sir, there is not an agricultural society in the province of Ontario to-day that does not hold exactly the same race-meet at its annual exhibition that it did previous to the passing of that Act. The management of those fairs simply insisted on adding what they called 'trials of speed,' but which were really race-meets. So that the very same racing which was carried on previous to that legislation is carried on to-day; and we may conclude that public opinion in this country is so strongly in favour of horse-racing that the provisions of this Bill, if adopted, will be evaded in some such way.

In conclusion I wish to read a statement from the chief of police of the city of Windsor:

I hereby beg to state that the horse races at the Windsor Racing Association's race track, have been conducted in a proper and orderly manner. I have frequently visited such races with the view chiefly of obtaining a knowledge of the people who attended there, the manner in which they behaved and of the way in which the races were conducted in general. I have also, at various times, visited the fairs held at Toronto, Ottawa and other places, and to my knowledge, from such observations, the people who have attended the races here behaved themselves equally as well as those who attended the fairs, and in all, I have to state that the race meetings were as orderly and fully as well conducted as the fair meetings. Furthermore I have to state that during the race meetings here an average of 3,000 people attended the races daily, yet the records of the police department show that the number of offences committed in Windsor during any such race meetings is not in excess of the number committed in any similar period of time when races were not held here.

E. WILLS,
Chief of police.

While I am entirely in sympathy with the moral reform association, which has made its influence felt upon this question, I am inclined to the view that the legislation proposed goes just a little too far. There have been, in my opinion, excesses under the present law, I believe there is a certain amount of disorder which should be prevented, and I believe it would be possible to amend that law so that these abuses would be avoided, and at the same time certain very important interests in the country would not be injuriously affected, the ends of sport met, and a very great improvement brought out in the direction in which my hon. friend from South Grey seeks to legislate. But I am at the same time strongly of the opinion that if our young men and women will not be guided by Christian teaching and moral ethics, it will be impossible to make them respect such teaching and ethics and control their acts by legislation. While I am in favour of the principle of the Bill in many respects, I would desire to see an amendment adopted which would not entirely eliminate those meetings, and having due regard for all the interests connected with the matter I believe that is the proper course to take.

Mr. W. M. MARTIN (Regina). As one of the members of the committee who supported the measure, I consider it my duty to give reasons for the course I have taken. At the outset I want to make myself perfectly plain with respect to one aspect of the Bill which, I believe, is appealing to a good many who are opposing it. I refer to the question of the rights of the private bettor. I am absolutely in favour of some amendment which will make it certain that these rights will not be interfered with. first because such legislation would be an unwarranted interference with private rights, and secondly because such a law could not be enforced. There is an amendment proposed in the committee by the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. McColl) providing for the protection of the private bettor, but, in my opinion, that would have rendered the whole purpose of this Bill void, and for that reason it was opposed in the committee. But if any amendment can be suggested to protect the private bettor, I shall be in favour of it. I do not think that this Bill will interfere seriously with these rights. I know that the hon. the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) gave an opinion, on the second reading, to the effect that the Bill might interfere with these rights, but I cannot share that view. At the same time I should be in favour of an amendment which would protect the private bettor without destroying the Bill.

In discussing this measure, there is no need to enter into the question whether betting in itself is wrong or right. The only question to my mind is whether we are in favour of permitting book-makers to operate on race tracks. If I understand the principle of the English law which was acted on by this House in 1892, when it passed the Criminal Code, the motive which led to the passing of these measures was the belief that the business of book-making on race-tracks created an appetite for gambling. I have heard it stated by an hon. gentleman that it was in the nature of the Anglo-Saxon to bet. I believe that statement will be found in the evidence. Well, the book-maker caters to that appetite and becomes a public nuisance; and as soon as that stage is reached, it is the duty of parliament to prevent that business being carried on at the various race-tracks.

My hon. friend from Northumberland (Mr. McColl) said that the promoters of the Bill were attempting to interfere with an innocent pastime. For my part, I have always been in favour of innocent pastimes, but I do not favour a pastime when it degenerates into professionalism. Horse racing, as practised in Ontario and other parts of Canada, has simply become professionalism. There is no desire on the part of those who support this measure to interfere with legitimate sports. My hon. friend from Northumberland (Mr. McColl) argued that Japan had abolished betting on the race-course and book-making, and after one year's experience had gone back to the old system. Now, the state of affairs in Japan is not that conveyed by the remarks of that hon. member. I have here the weekly report of the Department of Trade and Commerce for March 14, 1910, and, for the purpose of putting this question right, I read a brief extract from that report:

The government of Japan realizing that their cavalry was not as effective as it should have been during the Russian war, and that the main cause was the unsuitable class of horses used, has been trying to improve breeding by encouragement in several ways. Until 1907, the race clubs in Japan were very successful. They used the 'pari-mutuel' system of betting and large profits were made. In consequence of this, numbers of thoroughbreds, stallions and mares were brought into the country for the meets, and with the exception of the best, were all sold ultimately for very low prices. In this way the Japanese farmers obtained a great number of good horses very cheaply, with the result that through the country the improved results in breeding can already be seen. However, in 1907, the authorities deemed it wise to forbid gambling of any kind at race meets. The race clubs are now in a bad position financially, but at the same time the government recognized the value of these clubs and the service they were doing in improving the breeding. This year several of the largest clubs are receiving a subsidy in order that they may continue importing thoroughbreds and Australian mares.

If this statement means anything, it means that the government of Japan, rather than go back to the old system of the book-maker, and betting on the race-track, is willing to give subsidies to the race-meet in order to develop the horse-breeding industry.

Mr. McCOLL. If the hon. member (Mr. W. M. Martin) will refer to the evidence of Major William Hendrie, of Hamilton, he will see that it appeared from that evidence that what the Japanese government had done was to appoint a commission to visit the different countries of Europe to ascertain the systems of conducting their race-tracks with a view of introducing some system of betting upon the tracks in Japan.

Mr. W. M. MARTIN. Now, the hon. member for North Essex (Mr. Wilcox) devoted a considerable part of his remarks to a defence of the Windsor Racing Association. I may say, as a member of the committee, that efforts were made by persons appearing before the committee in support of the Bill to get some one representing the Windsor Racing Association to appear before the committee, and give us evidence as to their dealings on that race-track, but we were not successful; no one appeared. Consequently, we have no information about that association, we have no statement of its financial operations such as we have concerning the Hamilton Jockey Club, and the Ontario Jockey Club. Our only course then, is to class that track among more doubtful race-tracks of Ontario.

Let me refer to some of the main contentions put forward by men opposing the Bill. The first contention, as any one will see who takes the trouble to read the evidence, is that the thoroughbred strain is important in developing the breed of horses. That was admitted by the committee after the first evidence had been put in. There seemed to be no dispute on the point. The second proposition was that racing is necessary if the breed of horses is to be improved; the race-course furnishes the indispensable test by which the relative merit of different strains of blood can be ascertained. This proposition is probably correct, though, on the evidence brought before us, only partially correct. It is correct if you mean the development of mere race horses, for a certain amount of evidence was given before the committee to show that the present system of racing was not really a proper test, and further evidence was given which would go to show that the racing of horses on the track leads to the development of what has been called an 'attenuated racing machine' and nothing toward the development of the general utility horse of the country. The third proposition put forward is that book-making is necessary to maintain racing; without it purses would not be sufficient to encourage breeding, for the revenue derived from the book-makers would cease, and gate receipts would greatly diminish. With that proposition, I, as a member of the committee, could not agree, because evidence was put before us to prove, and we all know as a matter of fact, that horse-racing was carried on successfully in Ontario, and other parts of Canada before the book-maker came into existence, and the same is true of England. Furthermore, horse-racing is carried on in certain provinces of Canada to-day without the aid of the book-maker. I understand, from the evidence given by a man who came from Nova Scotia that there is no such thing as a book-maker operating in that province, and his evidence would lead me to believe that horse-racing is successfully carried on, and that they have as good horses in Nova Scotia as in any other province of the Dominion.

One peculiar feature of the opposition to the Bill which struck me, was that there was not a solitary farmer, or any representative of a farmers' organization who appeared before the committee to oppose the passing of the Bill. On the contrary, every man appearing before the committee whom you could count as representing the farmer's interest favoured the Bill. And every farm journal in the province of Ontario, so far as I have been able to find out, is in favour of the Bill. In order to show to the House my position on this phase of the argument, I am forced to ask the indulgence of the House while I read two or three extracts from different farming papers, and also from the evidence. The 'Farmer's Advocate' of December 16, 1909, said:

An anti-gambling Bill has been introduced into the Dominion House of Commons by H. H. Miller, M.P. for South Grey, one of the members of the House of Commons who seem to esteem it their duty to represent the agricultural community. The Bill has been sent on to a special committee, where the old, exploded arguments are being brought up that book-making is necessary to maintain racing, and that racing is necessary to encourage horse-breeding. More absurd fallacies have rarely been offered for the public to swallow. In the first place, it is not true that racing is necessary to improve the breed of horses. On the contrary, it has probably done more to injure two breeds than it has done to improve them. It has converted the standard-bred or the stock from which it has sprung, into an attenuated racing rachine, not nearly so valuable for utility purposes as though it had been bred with more regard to conformation and scale. Undoubtedly, racing focussed early attention upon the breeding of the blood horse, and perhaps helped to develop it by the selection of the fittest, but here again, has it not tended to produce a race of weedy, hot-tempered, and dubiously useful stock? What has racing done to improve the breed of clydesdales, shires, hackneys, or, in fact, any of our most useful breeds?

And 'Farm and Dairy' of December 23rd says:

The Bill does not make any attempt to interfere with private betting, but only with the business of book-making and pool-selling. Opposition is being raised to it on the ground that it will tend to discourage the breeding of good horses, the claim being advanced that horse-racing cannot be conducted successfully without book-making.

As far as the farmers of the Dominion are concerned, ten have been injured to one that has been benefited by attempting to raise fast horses. The enormous expense that is involved in the handling of those animals makes it an impossibility for the average farmer to raise such horses with success. Efforts to encourage farmers to raise this class of horse should be discouraged rather than encouraged.

And the 'Weekly Sun', of Toronto, of December 15th last, says:

It may be that the maintenance of race meets is necessary if the breeding of horses of the kind used at these meets is to be kept up. But no really useful purpose is served by breeding horses of that class.

The rest of the article corroborates that which I have quoted from 'Farm and Dairy'. With respect to the men who represented the farming interest, and who gave evidence before the committee, I need only mention three names, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher), Senator Douglas, of Saskatchwan, and Mr. Peter Christie, from South Ontario. These men expressed the opinion that the passing of this measure would not injure horse-breeding in this country. I will refer first to the evidence of the Minister of Agriculture on that subject. He said:

Although I am not what would be called a frequenter of race-tracks, still I see the race-horses of the country pretty frequently and in various ways, and my observations of the race-horse, as trained and raised in Canada, is that the large majority of them do not fulfil this condition which I think is necessary for the improvement of stock in Canada, that the large majority of them are weedy in character and fitted only for speed, and that the use of such animals for the improvement of our breeding stock is not likely to be conducive to its improvement. There are thoroughbred horses in Canada which would improve that stock very much. Some of them may be race-horses, but the class of animal that I would like to see introduced into Canada for the purpose of improving the mares of the country for breeding purposes is the stamp of horse to which the King's prizes are given in England, a horse which very seldom goes on to the race-track and is not considered by the racing men, and the men who breed thoroughbreds for racing purposes, at all a style of stallion which they want and which they use.

Then there is the evidence of Senator Douglas, to which I need not refer. I have said that he was of the opinion that the passing of this Bill would not interfere with horse-breeding. Now the evidence of Mr. Peter Christie is very important along this line, because it goes to show that in his experience no farmer who ever had anything to do with thoroughbred horse-breeding ever made any money out of it, and his experience was that the breeding of the ordinary mares to thoroughbred horses had not developed the ordinary farm utility horses to the advantage of the farmers of the country. I will read an extract from Mr. Christie's evidence:

Will you tell me what your view is as to the relation of the thoroughbred to horse-breeding in general as an economic factor and from the farmer's point of view?—A. From the farmer's point of view, I do not think he ever wants to go into racing thoroughbreds, because a farmer in my county at least does not farm for fun. He wants to make money out of it, and my experience and my knowledge of my surroundings is that the draught horse, the Clyde horse, is the profitable horse for a farmer to raise.

Q. You say that the farmer does not want to go into the raising of thoroughbreds. Do you mean that it is not a profitable business to breed his mares to thoroughbred sires?—A. No, sir, I could not.

Then he goes on to say:

What is the experience of the farmer who has raised animals of this class, thoroughbred animals, so far as the price he gets for them is concerned?—A. If he happens to get a good one he will perhaps get a good price for it, but the difficulty I have noticed is that they only get a seller perhaps one in five or six that will bring a big price, and then the ones that won't bring a good price is not nearly as good a horse for the farm as if he had been a Clyde or a draught horse.

Q. Then if there is a good price paid for that horse is it the farmer or the middleman who gets it?—A. My experience is that the farmer don't get the good price, it is the middle fellow, we call him the sporting fellow, who makes his living out of that sort of thing.

Now, it seems to me that if the passage of this Bill would be such a menace to the horse-breeding interests of the country, surely some farmer, or some farmers' organization interested in the development of horses, would have appeared before the committee to protest against the Bill. We find that the opposite is the case. Every man who spoke for the farmers, spoke in favour of the Bill.

A great deal is made out of the argument that by passing this measure you will interfere with large vested interests. Let us see for a moment what those vested interests are. They divide themselves into two clases. The first vested interest is that of the race-track, and the grand-stand, or what you might call the whole racing plant. Secondly, there is the money that has been invested by horse-breeders in thoroughbred horses and racing horses. There are a number of men in the province of Ontario and in other provinces of Canada who have invested money in the purchase of good stock with which to develop race horses. So we have those two classes of vested interests to deal with. Now, so far as the first class is concerned, I do not believe the passing of this measure will interfere to such an extent with vested interests as was stated by some of the horsemen before the committee. But, granted that it will interfere with the money invested in race-track and racing plants, what do we find to be the fact with respect to these vested interests? As I have said, we have no financial statements from any of the jockey clubs except those of Hamilton and Toronto. If you look on pages 93 and 94 of the evidence, at the evidence of the secretary of the Hamilton Jockey Club, Mr. Loudon, you will find that they had an actual investment of some $4,000. According to his statement, the assets of the club are now worth $175,000, with $50,000 cash in the bank after a very few years of operation. Now, in respect to the Hamilton Jockey Club, there was some hint before the committee that a large amount of money was invested by men in Hamilton prior to the organization of this jockey club, but there is no definite evidence on the subject, and I am forced to accept the evidence of Mr. Loudon on page 93. We find that from a total investment of $4,000 in this club, their assets have grown to an amount of $225,000 in a very short period of time. Then we find that the receipts of the club in the year 1909 were made up as follows: Gate receipts, $59,405; advance information, $78,800; the bar, $3,850, making the total receipts under these three heads of about $140,000. They paid in purses, $79,850, in 1909. In the Ontario Jockey Club we find a somewhat similar condition of affairs. The total paid-up stock is $10,000. Their net surplus, according to a statement produced before the committee by their secretary, is $337,846, and that is taking the property of the club at its actual cost. I have heard the property estimated at various amounts, but I think a fair valuation is about $500,000. Now suppose that, by the passage of this Bill, these racing clubs were put out of business, to what extent would it interfere with vested interests? Their property can be sold for everything it has cost, and the land itself can probably be sold for twenty times what it originally cost. I submit there is no argument at all in the cry that vested interests will be injured, so far as the money put into these race-tracks is concerned. Then there is the other side of the vested interest question, that is, the horse breeders' side. Now so far as I am concerned, and I am sure that is the opinion of every supporter of this Bill, we would be sorry to think that men who have invested money in thoroughbred horses would be put out of business by the passage of this Bill. But I do not think they will, because as I stated a few minutes ago, horse-racing existed long before book-making, and perhaps in a more healthy condition than at present. The majority of horse-breeders in Ontario and the other provinces, particularly in Manitoba, who appeared before the committee, agreed in saying that if the Bill passed, they would all close their stables. I would be very sorry to think that such a result would follow the passing of this measure. I find, however, there was one horseman, the Hon. Adam Beck, of London, who said that he would not close his stables if the Bill passed. I will read his evidence on the question:

One or two horsemen have given evidence that if professional book-making were stopped on the race tracks they would close their stables for breeding, would you go as far as that yourself?—A. No, I would not say I would go as far as that, that is entirely a matter of whether a man is in it for gain or not. You cannot expect people to do anything for fun any more in horse-breeding than you can in anything else. Farmers are not breeding horses for fun but to make money out of it.

There is this fact, however, to be considered. Most of the horsemen who gave evidence before the committee, and others with whom I have conversed, say that there is no money in breeding horses. So, if there is no money in the business, who can be hurt to any great extent by the passing of this Bill?

Now a great deal was made out of the argument of the committee by lawyers representing the racing associations, that in the state of New York the price of race-horses has gone very low, the price of thoroughbred horses is very much depreciated since the passing of the Hughes law. On that point Hon. Adam Beck did not seem to agree with his fellow horsemen: He said:

Q. Do you know whether, since what is known as the Hughes' law was passed, there has been any depreciation in value of the first quality of thoroughbred horses in New York State?—A. The first quality.

Q. Yes.—A. Probably the first quality of horses of any breed at the present time is as high as I have ever known it to be in all countries.

Q. I am told that the first quality of thoroughbred horses in New York state commands to-day a higher price than ever before. —A. That is probably correct.

Q. Then it is said that some stables in New York state have been closed as a result of the Hughes' law.—A. I know nothing about that.

So, whether the Hughes law in New York state has had anything to do with the price of horses there we are unable to say, but it is in evidence that the price of that class of horses in New York is as high at present as ever it was. It is a question in my mind, in fact I am rather inclined to the opinion that a race-horse that is sold for some $10,000 has a fictitious value. No horse in my opinion—although I cannot speak as a horseman—can be said to have an economic value such as $10,000. It may have that value on account of its earning power in winning races. It is always questionable whether a fictitious value of anything is a good thing.

Mr. TALBOT. Has my hon. friend ever heard of a cow being sold for $20,000? Is that a fictitious value?

Mr. W. M. MARTIN. From the actual earning power of a cow that would be a high price.

Mr. TALBOT. Lots of them are sold at that price.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Half a dozen winners of the English Derby have sold for from £10,000 to £50,000 for breeding purposes. The state of France have paid that, the Austrian government have paid that and winners have been taken to Russia, Australia and the Argentine for breeding purposes. They had these values and their being used for breeding purposes proved it, and the greatest regret of Englishmen was that these horses were taken from their country.

Mr. W. M. MARTIN. That bears out one argument I was advancing that a horse has a fictitious value on account of its power of winning victories on the race-track.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. It was to improve the breed of horses in the countries to which they were taken.

Mr. W. M. MARTIN. I am quite satisfied to let my hon. friend purchase any of these horses at that figure. The question of vested interests so far as the money invested in horses is concerned, resolves itself into a very small one, for you must admit that the thoroughbred interest in Ontario and Canada is very small, and the number of men who would be affected by this legislation, if it were to have such an effect as is suggested, would be very small. In Ontario, according to the report of a commission appointed by the Ontario government in 1906 to investigate the question of the licensing of stallions, there were only 78 thoroughbred stallions in the province, or 3 per cent of the entire number of stallions. There were only 2,273 thoroughbred mares in the province, or 1½ per cent of the entire number. Thus racing in Canada since the establishment of the Queen's plate in 1861 has not done much to develop the thoroughbred interests if we judge by the number now in Canada. I am informed that a similar condition of affairs exists in the United Kingdom. A year-book published in 1910 by the 'Live Stock Journal', the leading live stock paper of Great Britain, contains an article entitled 'Horses for the Army', in which it says:

There can be no doubt that horse-breeding has been declining for some years in the United Kingdom.

Both in this country and in England races have been carried on under the good influences of the book-maker during all these years. I have shown you what has been done in Ontario since 1861 towards increasing the number of thoroughbreds, and to show that in England racing has not done very much to develop the breed of horses I have quoted this article which says that the breeding has been declining for some years there.

The question of whether betting in itself is right or wrong is not before the House with respect to this measure, it is merely a question of whether we consider that a public evil exists in connection with the present practices on race-tracks, and whether we are in duty bound to protect as far as possible the public from that evil, if it is to be so considered. I agree to a great extent with what may be said by many members who think that if a man wants to bet he should be allowed to bet, but should do so in a proper way. What I do object to is allowing book-makers to come on the track, pay for their privilege, and take money from the people for nothing. The evidence showed that a tremendous amount is taken annually from the pockets of the people of Canada, and absolutely nothing given in return. In my mind a book-maker is nothing more nor less than a parasite and when he is allowed to practise his calling in the open, and people are allowed to flock there, and invest money with him he becomes a public menace, and it is something to which this House should devote attention with a view to his prohibition, if that is possible. I do not want to get into any discussion of the ethics of gambling, but I do wish to read to the House an expression of Herbert Spencer with respect to gambling. It is a question which must be left largely to the individual conscience of each man. It may be right under certain circumstances for a man to bet, and wrong under certain circumstances. Herbert Spencer says:

> Listen to a conversation about gambling; and, where reprobation is expressed, note the grounds of the reprobation. That it tends towards the ruin of the gambler; that it risks the welfare of family and friends; that it alienates from business, and leads into bad company—these, and such as these, are the reasons given for condemning the practice. Rarely is there any recognition of the fundamental reason. Rarely is gambling condemned because it is a kind of action by which pleasure is obtained at the cost of pain to another. The normal obtainment of gratification, or of the money which purchases gratification, implies, firstly, that there has been put forth equivalent effort of a kind which, in some way, furthers the general good; and implies, secondly, that those from whom the money is received, get, directly or indirectly, equivalent satisfaction. But in gambling the opposite happens. Benefit received does not imply effort put forth; and the happiness of the winner involves the misery of the loser. This kind of action is therefore essentially anti-social—sears the sympathies, cultivates a hard egoism, and so produces a general deterioration of character and conduct.

With that expression of Herbert Spencer I thoroughly agree. I think it sets forth splendidly the injury or deterioration that may come to the character of any individual who practises gambling to excess. It has been said that betting on horse-races is not gambling, I agree that a man may be a bettor, and not a gambler. At the same time the legal definition of gambling as far as I can gather is really the same as a definition of betting. In the work 'Words and Phrases Judicially Defined,' volume 4, gambling is defined as follows:

> Gambling is the risking of money or anything of value between two or more persons on a contest of chance of any kind where one must be the loser and the other the gainer.

Betting is defined:

> Betting on a horse-race is gaming within the meaning of a statute providing for recovering back money lost in gaming.

There is no question that the great majority of people who bet on horse-races do not do so with any skill or exact knowledge of what qualities the horses possess. As far as I have been able to gather from my observation of horse-races the average man who bets on a horse-race, bets and nothing more. He knows nothing about the horse, there is no skill involved, and to my mind there is no question that betting on horse-races, when practised to excess at any rate, is gambling as here defined.

It is stated that the public get a fair chance with the book-maker. We had very little evidence from the book-makers before the committee. We had the evidence of Mr. Orpen, of Toronto, who has been in the book-making business for many years. This is what he said:

> Q. Will you tell me what you mean by book-making? How would you define book-making?—A. Book-making is a business, it is a matter of figures, of handling money at different prices so as to figure out a percentage for the book-maker.

There is no question at all but that the book-maker always makes the odds, and if he cannot win on one basis he changes the odds to another on which he is sure to win. The dice are loaded against the public on every occasion. As to the amount of money bet on the race-tracks in Canada every year reliable evidence is not obtainable. Mr. Orpen produced before the committee certain book-making sheets which he had used on the race-track, and these sheets showed that $850 on the average was bet on each race and, there being six or seven races per day each book-maker handled about $5,000 per day. It has been found that about $450,000 was paid to the racing associations during 1909 by book-makers, and making a rough calculation I find that the total amount bet on the race-tracks in 1909 was $22,500,000. We have no means of estimating what was the profit or loss to those who bet with the book-makers but the evidence is clear that the man who bets continuously always loses. For instance, a Toronto butcher deposed that he lost $1,000 for the last 10 years betting on races and that he knew hundreds of men like himself. I should say, in order to be perfectly fair, that some members of the committee at all events were disposed to take the evidence of men of that type with a grain of salt, but at the same time I am disposed to believe his statement that he lost $1,000 a year.

Mr. McCOLL. Did he pretend to say he lost it on the race-track or did not his evidence show that he was a frequenter of the pool-rooms and that it was there that he lost most of his money?

Mr. W. M. MARTIN. My recollection is that he said he lost $1,000 a year on the track.

Mr. McCOLL. No, and he also stated that he bet on everything that was going, prize fights, and chicken fights, and although he had taken a pledge not to gamble for a year he reserved to himself the right to bet on the prize fight next July.

Mr. W. M. MARTIN. All that goes to show that this Toronto butcher who said there were hundreds like him contracted the spirit of the race-track. He stated before the committee that he was a reformed man and that he was not going to bet again but that the last betting he did was on the ice races at which he lost some $70 or $80, and he further stated that he had lost a similar sum at the meeting of the Hamilton Jockey Club last fall. The most regrettable feature in the betting business is that the people who do the betting come from the class who cannot afford it. If a man could afford to bet without doing an injury to his business or to himself or his family I do not know that very much harm would come of it, but the trouble is that the great toll taken out of the people of Canada every year by the races, comes from the poor people and from a class who have not sufficient control over themselves to stop betting even though they know it is injuring themselves and every one connected with them. I have here further testimony which goes to show that the odds in betting, whether with the book-maker or in the pool-room, are always against the public.

Canon Horsley, ex-chaplain of the Clerkenwell prison gave evidence before the Lords Committee in 1902, as follows:

Earl of Aberdeen:—Did you take the prophecies from one of the well known sporting papers?

Answer:—From all of them. I have here a case in which seven sporting papers gave 79 horses; in 74 cases their prophecies were wrong. Another case I have is a case where the 'Standard' selected 79 horses for 179 races; 155 were wrong and 24 right. Some sporting paper sneered at that and said that this particular prophet did not know very much about his business. Then I took the chief sporting papers. They had seven races that week and gave 45 horses, of which 40 were wrong; another week they gave 47 horses, 46 wrong and one right. Then to take a longer period of a month, there were 156 races for which six sporting papers gave 898 horses, out of which 777 did not win. This is the sort of thing I constantly do because I have found with intelligent young men that is the best argument when I say 'You know nothing about a race,' and they answer, 'No, but so and so does, therefore I follow him.'

A great deal is made out of the argument that we should follow the law of England in respect to betting, and while I am always disposed to look with favour on English precedents, yet I am bound to say that if there be a law in the United States which is better than the law of England, I see no reason why we should not take the example of our neighbours to the south. At all events, this is not a new subject for legislation. The Criminal Code at present covers almost everything intended to be covered by this Bill except the permitting of betting on the race-track, and that of course, is the principal issue here. The English statute of 1853 which was practically adopted in sections 226 and 227 of our Criminal Code was directed not against betting but against those who made a business of betting. A decision of 1897 in the case of Hawke against Dunn declared that book-making on the race-track was illegal and the decision practically drove the book-maker out of business, and it remained the jurisprudence of England for many years. Then, what is called a friendly action was taken by men interested in the business, and the result was what is known as the decision in the Kempton Park case which has given rise to the anomalies existing in our Criminal Code at the present time, and which has had a great deal to do with the agitation for this legislation.

There can be no question in the mind of any one who reads the evidence brought before the committee that many men have been practically ruined on the race-track. It is said that these men would go wrong any way, that if they cannot control themselves on the race-track they cannot elsewhere. To a certain extent that may be true, but there are instances of men having been led astray and practically ruined on the race-track. In corroboration of that statement, I can refer to statements of a number of eminent English judges.

Mr. Justice Hawkins says:

I know nothing more likely to ruin a young and inexperienced man than the system of betting which goes on around us.

Mr. Justice Grantham:

Gambling with book-makers is the cause of more crime and misery than anything else in the land.

Mr. Justice Darling:

No one could attend the civil and criminal courts without knowing that many persons spent a much larger amount of time in betting than they devoted to their own business.

Lord Alverstone:

Sport never ought to be by necessity associated with gambling or betting. Those who had to do with the administration of the law knew that there was nothing in their great towns, and he was afraid in the smaller ones too, that brought more people in the humbler walks of life to misery and ruin than the betting agents.

Mr. Justice Wills:

When I first came upon the bench I used to think drink was the most fruitful cause of crime, but it is now a question whether the unlimited facilities for illegitimate speculation on the part of people who have no means of embarking on it are not a more prevalent source of mischief and crime even than drink.

Mr. Horace Smith, London stipendary magistrate:

Nearly every case of embezzlement I try has resulted from betting, and then to pay their losses they rob their employers.

We also had submitted to the committee the presentment of the grand jury of the county of York for June, 1909, and a presentment of the grand jury of the same county for September, 1906, to the same effect.

The opponents of the Bill with one accord say, do away with the handbook, the pool-room, and the supplying of racing information outside of the race-track, but let us have book-making on the race-track. To my mind there is no distinction in principle between betting on the street or in a pool-room and betting on the race-track. If the one is bad, the other is bad; if we prohibit the one, we should prohibit the other. The evidence goes to show that hand-books and pool-rooms are greater sources of evil than betting on the race-track. The only reason for that is that hand-books and pool-rooms operate for 365 days in the year. On the other hand, certain Toronto police officers stated in evidence that for the time of the race meet, say 20 days, the gambling on the Woodbine is worse than it is for the same time in the pool-room or by the hand-book. Again, it seems to me that if you endeavour to legislate to prohibit the hand-book and the pool-room, and do not cut out the race-track, your legislation with respect to the hand-book and the pool-room will be very ineffective. The evidence bears this out. The hand-book and pool-room men cannot operate without the information they get from the book-maker. The evidence shows that the pool-room and the hand-book are only the branches, while the book-maker is the root of the evil.

Mr. LANCASTER. Does not the amendment proposed by the hon. member for West Northumberland cut out the book-maker, as well as the hand-book man and the pool-room man, except on the track while the race is in progress?

Mr. W. M. MARTIN. That is quite correct, but the argument I am attempting to make is simply this, that if you are going to legislate effectively to cut out the hand-book man and the pool-room man, you must cut out the root of the trouble, which is the book-maker. It is most inconsistent to make a law which permits the book-maker to do as he likes on the race-track, but makes it a crime to do the same thing on the street. That would be making one law for the man who can afford to attend the race meeting and another law for the poor man who has not the dollar to pay for entrance to it. Inspector Duncan and Inspector Archibald who are leading police officers of Toronto, and well qualified to speak on such a subject, agree in their evidence that in order to deal effectively with the outside evil, you must deal with the inside evil, and that is the book-making on the track.

Mr. LANCASTER. If nobody can operate outside at all, how can there be any mischief outside of the track? Does not the amendment cover that?

Mr. W. M. MARTIN. If you allow the book-maker to operate on the track, you render it possible for him to supply information to any one outside.

Mr. LANCASTER. But if any one operates outside, he becomes a criminal under the amendment as well as under the original Bill.

Mr. W. M. MARTIN. I do not think I need go any more fully into that matter. It is said that the law cannot be enforced. Such an argument is always advanced against any legislation of this kind. I believe it can be reasonably well enforced, and I am corroborated in this view by the evidence of many distinguished police officers. For instance, Inspector Duncan, at page 187:

Q. Suppose that a law is passed which will make all book-making, whether on the race-track or off it, illegal, will there be any difficulty of enforcing other criminal laws, having regard to your experience?—A. I think there would be no difficulty at all if that was done.

Inspector Archibald, at page 226:

Q. Then if you had a law that was in plain Anglo-Saxon and easy to understand, forbidding betting on the race-tracks through the book-maker, would it be possible to reasonably enforce that law?—A. Yes.

Bernard McMahon, chief of police of Hamilton, at page 338:

Q. Then, Inspector, you do not see any difficulty, or rather you would not apprehend any difficulty, in enforcing a law against book-making, if such a law were enacted?—A. If it were passed in such a way that it was made workable. For instance——

These police officers all agree that the law could be reasonably well enforced as well as any similar law.

There has been a good deal said in the House and in the corridors and outside the House regarding the extent of public sentiment which exsits in favour of this measure. I believe that public sentiment throughout Canada is largely in its favour. We have had that expressed by the farmers of Canada through the 'Farmers Journal,' we are also aware that the majority of the principals of agricultural colleges are in favour of the Bill; we know that the Dominion grange, trade and labour congresses and the churches support it. It has been said that the agitation has been largely created by clergymen. Well, I see no objection to a clergyman taking part in a movement of this kind and exercising his influence in its favour. I would just as soon be approached by a clergyman in support of the Bill as by a horseman or lawyer against it; and during all the time the Bill was before the committee, I never had any representation made me by a clergyman, verbally or in writing, asking me to use my influence. On the other hand, I did have influence brought to bear on me by horsemen in western Canada and lawyers who were appearing before the committee to oppose the Bill. The business men of British Columbia, as appears by the evidence and letters sent to the committee, the Minister of Inland Revenue, the hon. members for Vancouver (Mr. Cowan) and also Victoria (Mr. Barnard), are in favour of the measure. We have had public opinion further instanced by the various petitions presented to parliament. I did not myself have more than two or three petitions from the riding I represent, so that evidently there is not much agitation there in favour of the Bill. As regards the objection that public opinion has been largely stirred up by clergymen, I am disposed to give the majority of the people credit for having minds of their own and for knowing what they did when they signed these petitions.

I have considered the Bill as well as I could with the evidence before me. We heard a great mass of evidence in the committee. I have read the most of the evidence since the committee ceased its sittings, and can only come to the conclusion, that inasmuch as the opinion of the vast majority of the people appears to be in favour of the Bill and inasmuch as I consider the measure in the interests of the community as a whole, it is my duty to support it.

Mr. S. BARKER (East Hamilton). I have no intention of going exhaustively into the details of this Bill, or its object, but desire to confine my remarks to a few facts of which I have personal knowledge; and in that connection I wish to take this opportunity of beginning by a few general observations. I have listened with some interest to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Martin) who has just taken his seat. As I understand him, and as I understood the hon. gentleman who moved the second reading (Mr. Miller), they take a very broad and general objection to any thing in the nature of betting. Betting in the abstract is a sin, a moral wrong. That I understand to be the broad question which is really before this House. Well, I may say that, as a member of this House for a few years, I have had a little experience of betting in the abstract. In each of the contests which I have run, I have been met invariably by very goody goody gentlemen on the opposite side of politics who were always ready to bet two or three to one that I could not be elected. Of course, they were quite moral in their views. They were not trying to make money by their betting. Nothing of the kind. They were simply offering a bet—but with what object? To create an improper influence upon the electors. That is what they were trying for. I have had bets against me, and I only mention these, because I know a little more about bets against myself than I do about bets against other gentlemen. And I know that these bets were offered, not for a legitimate purpose—speaking as a sportsman would speak of a bet, which is the groundwork of a bet on a horse race—but with the deliberate purpose of defrauding; and I doubt whether there is one hon. gentleman in all this House who is going to vote on this Bill, who would say that he is innocent of any attempt of that kind. I believe that man after man in this House has encouraged betting to influence people in their opinions and get them to vote contrary to their belief and their conscience. Then we have insurance agents. The hon. gentleman who moved the Bill (Mr. Miller) has left the House, and I am sorry, because I would like to ask him about the eight or ten insurance men, canvassers, who go to a young and enterprising business man, each of them telling a different story and all of them lying more or less about the facts they represent. These gentlemen represent to every man they desire to insure that his life is uncertain, that it is a thing to bet upon, and that he ought to insure in such a company. And we have one man representing several companies who will say to his agents: Bring all your bets to me and I will see that you get your commission. I wonder whether the hon. gentleman who is at the back of this Bill has ever done that sort of thing. Of course, that is not immoral, that is business. But the bookmaker who goes into that sort of business openly and avowedly is a scamp. But is the insurance agent a scamp? God forbid, they are all hon. gentlemen, good business men. The other man, however, is a rogue and a rascal. Then we have the broker. I wonder whether, on either side of the House, there is one man who has never dealt with a broker. Who is the rascal? The man who is a broker or the man who deals with him. If I go to a broker to enter into a transaction by which I make money, that I am not squarely entitled to, am I less a sinner than the broker, or is the broker less a sinner than I, provided we both know what we are doing. Here you go into a race-ground and you come in contact with the professional book-maker. He is putting his skill, judgment and knowledge, his calculation of chances against your money and you know it. He offers you a bet and you take it. Is he more of a rascal, is he a greater rogue than the broker who leads you into a transaction or the insurance agent who makes you insure in one company instead of another? Where do you draw the line? Are you going to say that it is unlawful for one man to take one chance and it is morally as well as legally right for another to take another chance? I wonder if these gentlemen on both sides who have been displaying their knowledge and their powers of moral suasion upon this subject have ever thought of this? I have been very much struck with the language of a minister of the gospel, a minister of Christ, on this subject, and I would like to ask hon. gentlemen in this House, as men representing six or seven millions of people to quietly consider what this gentleman tells us. I take some of the evidence, and I must say at this stage that I really do consider it a lamentable thing that in a matter of this kind, involving large amounts of the money of honest and honourable men, we should be asked to deal with evidence covering 500 or 600 pages with such little opportunity for reading as has been afforded us. I voted on the question of this being printed in French, not because I sympathized with the gentleman who wanted it printed in French, but because of his words preceding that there had been no time to read the evidence even in English. I think it is an outrage upon decency that we should be forced to a consideration of this subject—very trifling perhaps, very unimportant, to many men of this House, but very serious indeed to many men not in this House—under these conditions. Now, what does this minister of Christ say? The counsel asks him:

Q. You are down here doing your utmost to pass this Bill on behalf of what churches in Canada, I would like to know it?—A. The church of England, Methodist, Presbyterian and Congregational, the Trades and Labour Congress of Canada, the Dominion Grange, and Farmers' Associations.

Q. And have these churches authorized you to press their Bill which will allow individual betting?—A. No—

Mark this—they have not authorized that.

—for a Bill which will suppress professional betting.

Mark the distinction—not authorized as to a Bill allowing individual betting, but to suppress professional betting. There is casuistry for you. Here is a man representing the churches, a man who is a miniter of Christ, the highest calling to which a man can give himself, and he declares that he is not authorized to advocate a law putting down individual betting, but to advocate a law prohibiting professional betting. One would thnk that a man objecting only to one class of betting did not object to the other. That is what I, as an ordinary person, knowing a little of the English language, would take to be the true meaning.

Q. Well then are you authorized by these different churches which you have mentioned to press for the Bill as drafted, that is what I want to know?—A. I think I am, yes.

If it had been the hon. member for South Grey, or the hon. member for Regina (Mr. W. M. Martin) what answer would have been expected? But what is this gentleman's answer?

I think I am, yes.

There is the stalwart minister of the gospel. These hon. gentlemen opposite are absolutely sure, but the minister of the gospel is not quite so sure. But we in this House are to make the rigid law of the land what this gentleman only 'thinks.'

Q. Are you or are you not?—A. I think I am.

Do you get any expression of that kind from these gentlemen who wish to make this the absolute law of the land?

Q. Have you any authorization?—A. I think I have.

This is the stalwart soldier of Christ. This is no politician.

Q. Well, where is it?—A. In the resolutions that are before you, that are before the committee.

Q. You think these resolutions give power to advocate the Bill as drafted by Mr. Miller?—A. I think so.

The hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Miller) has no doubt about it, but the witness, who is on oath, is only able to say: 'I think so.'

Q. Do you see any harm in life insurance?—A. No.

Q. Do you see any harm in buying stock in the stock exchange?—

And here comes the valiant soldier of Christ again:

A. You would need to be more particular before I would answer that.

Here is a man who is giving his evidence upon oath, and presumably knows what he is talking about. But he would not like to commit himself to what these gentlemen opposite would swear by.

An hon. MEMBER. It would depend on whether there was a profit.

Mr. BARKER. Yes, if there was a profit it would be legitimate, but Lord help the poor fellow who loses on the transaction. He is a rascal. But the broker or insurance agent who induces him to enter the transaction is all right—he has his commission. And he is not on the race-track.

Q. I do not mean on margin, I am not accustomed to doing that myself?—A. As far as I know, there is no ethical distinction between buying on margin and buying not on margin.

Q. You see no difference between buying stocks on margin and buying stocks outright?

And here comes the minister again. Observe the question and then note his answer. That is, he does not see any distinction between the man who bargains without having the money to pay, and the pure speculator, the gambler, the man who puts down his cash and says: 'There is my money.' That is the question, and what is the answer?

With limitations.

This great apostle who is teaching this country about the miseries and the sins of betting, says: 'There are limitations'. So we have the hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Miller) with his limitations. He would allow you and myself, Mr. Speaker, to make a little quiet bet, but we must not do it professionally. I might put up ten to one, if I thought that was safe. You may take $10 out of me by risking your $1, and that is all proper. I am speaking to you, Sir, officially, as Speaker, because I know you would not do it. But that is all right. You may get $10 out of me when you know you are absolutely safe. But the broker who will do that, the man who does it professionally, he is a scoundrel, and a rascal; and the stomach of the hon. member for South Grey turns at that sort of thing. I can hardly express in proper words what he would feel about such a transaction. This question is asked him: 'What limitations?' The answer is—this great apostle is evidently in a corner—the answer is:

It will depend whether the individual is buying on margin. If I understand the term correctly, I have never done any business of that kind—buying on margin is buying on credit, that is where a part payment is made.

Q. Do you see any difference between buying on margin and buying stocks outright?—A. You mean buying on credit, that is, making a part payment.

He is fencing, you see.

Q. Yes.—A. No, provided a man keeps within his buying power.

Now just think of that. Suppose I go to a race with you, and I know that I am worth $50, and I can pay $50, and I bet $10 to win $1. I am betting on a margin because I have $50 in my pocket, and I know that I can pay it, and it is all right provided I am betting within my pocket capacity. If I win I am a superior man to what I was just before. That is the argument. It all comes down to a common sense basis. It is quite clear, the man who gives this evidence, who is the backbone of all this movement, from beginning to end, this man will say it is all right to take your winnings from a man if he is able to pay them.

No, provided a man keeps within his buying power.

If I buy a chance of $10 for $5 I am within my buying power. There cannot be anything wrong, he says. But suppose I go up to a book-maker at the race-track, and he says: There is a chance of winning so much money, a chance of winning $10. I can buy that for $5, and I give the $5, and am ready to pay it. This minister of the gospel tells us that it is not wrong, I am within my buying powers. Well, it is just the same with a broker, the person who makes a bargain with you, or with any gentleman sitting in a booth at the race-stand. It is a fine moral distinction that is drawn in this evidence.

Q. Under what particular branch of this moral and social reform league are you down here specially, for the Methodist, or the Presbyterian church?—A. If you had been listening you might have heard, I am here representing the Moral and Social Reform Club of Canada, consisting of the various units which I have enumerated.

Of course, that is a very long sentence, and I quote it to show who these people are on behalf of whom he speaks. I leave it to the common sense of this House, and the country to try and draw a distinction between the man who bets on one thing, and the man who bets on another, the man who bets in one place, and the man who bets in another place, the man who bets without the money in his pocket, and the man who knows he has got the money to pay it, and is honest enough to pay if he loses. Can any man draw any moral distinction? And yet we are asked here in this House as common sense business men to try and draw such a distinction, because this casuist, who is trying to make a distinction here, tries to satisfy himself in a most lame fashion, and we are supposed to accept his testimony, gentleman after gentleman who reads his words here, as if he were speaking on behalf—I say it reverently—of the Almighty. So we have got to draw a line somewhere. We are perhaps better business men than even the reverend gentleman who uttered these things. We know the shortcomings, and the weaknesses of business transactions, and we are quite ready to admit where the evils are, and we are perhaps—I say it with all deference to the reverend gentleman—more capable of judging how far the restrictions would go than he is, and much more capable of understanding whether they are likely to be effective or not.

Now, I do not intend to go into all this mass of evidence. I have noticed in all the speeches that have been made up to the present moment what is characterized among professional men and lawyers as a very pernicious, and I might almost say, improper method, the habit of picking out little expressions here and there from the testimony of a man who is giving his evidence on oath, and using that as the pith and substance of that man's testimony. Those of us who have been connected with the law understand that sort of thing. There is nothing that a bench of judges would so quickly see through as an attempt of that kind. That sort of humbug would go down with no man accustomed to judicial proceedings. He would understand at once, and he would rake deservedly, counsel who attempted to presume to pick out little pieces of evidence, and would tell him: You are misrepresenting to those who are listening to you the truth of what appears before you.

I have again and again in the course of this debate heard two phrases, and expressions quoted from witnesses whose evidence I have had an opportunity to read, and I have observed that the expressions quoted, picked out, selected for a purpose, have absolutely misrepresented what the men swore to. I say that without hesitation. I do not profess to have read all this testimony, and I very much object to being called upon to reply to the arguments that have been supported in the manner I have referred to. I wish to deal particularly with one small branch of this subject which has been treated in the manner I have protested against, that is the representing what an enormous profit, what a fine thing there has been in it, for a few gentlemen in Hamilton who originated the race-track there, and all connected with it. I have very little interest in the thing, my whole interest consists of $40 in cash paid upon a share of $100 with a liability to pay the other $60 when I am asked for it, and although I am not a rich man, I will be able to pay that $60 whenever I am called on to pay it. I have never received a cent of dividend on that $40. I have been a shareholder for about fifteen years, and instead of receiving any dividends it has cost me I would say in round figures about $200 to pay my ordinary dues to the club without receiving a return. I have paid year after year during all that time from $10 to $15 for the mere privilege of saying I could go to the club of which I am a part owner, and I have paid other expenses. Instead of receiving one dividend of one cent I am out of pocket about $200 in addition. That is my position, and judging from the speech of the hon. member for South Grey, that puts me in the position of an abominable gambler revelling in money made out of unfortunate young men who are betting on the races. I do not profess to have been one of the early members of that club. Some fifteen or twenty years ago a number of wealthy enterprising, and sport loving gentlemen in Hamilton thought there was need for a race-track there in the interests of horsemanship, and they bought a plot of land then lying waste, paying the full price of the land at that day. That land, quite apart from any race-track or any structures upon it, is to-day worth three times what they paid for it. It has increased in value owing to the growth of manufacturing interests all about it. If the city of Hamilton had done what the promoters wished them to do at that time, and taken over part of this land as a park they would to-day have had three times the money it would have cost them. But the gentlemen who speak here says the profit on that land has been made out of horse-racing, they have been taking it out of the pockets of these young men who have been betting, this club has been robbing the people, and pocketing the money, and here is their profit—and they show the balance sheet of the club. That land has increased not by reason of horse-racing, but by natural increase in value, and is worth some $30,000 more than was paid for it. It might have been bought for a Salvation Army pleasure ground or for the Reverend Dr. Shearer, or for the hon. member for Grey (Mr. Miller), and it might have been left there without a stump being extracted, and that property would be worth to-day three times what it was worth then. The hon. gentleman would be horrified if he was charged with gambling in getting that money, he would say it was a fair and legitimate profit on the purchase.

The late Mr. Hendrie, a well known citizen of Hamilton, a wealthy man, a lover of horses, a man who had the interest of Hamilton at his heart, and who never made a bet so far as is known, on a horse or anything else, put a considerable sum of money into the purchase of this property with eight or nine other gentlemen, having in view the offering of part of that property to the city of Hamilton for use as an exhibition ground, intending to use the other part of it as a race-track, to promote the happiness and pleasure of the citizens and improve the horse business. That is what that fund was for, and those gentlemen spent their money. It happened that the city of Hamilton at that time did not think that the property was going to be valuable as it has turned out to be, and they would not buy it. If they had done so, the city would have been very much ahead to-day —but I suppose that would have been gambling. These gentlemen spent a very large sum. I was not interested in that concern, and I do not profess to give the absolute figures, but these gentlemen spent something like $100,000 in making there one of the best tracks in the country, a double track, in putting up stands, and stables, and a club house, and what was the result? They were ahead of their day, and instead of making an enormous sum as one would imagine from the speech of the hon. member for South Grey, they lost about $75,000.

Some of the partners got faint-hearted and they wished to retire, and the concern was taken over, and the gentlemen who had heart enough remained, and they got others to join them, and they formed another company composed of most of the men who were in it at first, and they turned it over to the new company at less than one-half of their money. I was one of the new concern, and being a man of non-gambling proclivities, I was one of a group who paid $40 and agreed to pay $60 more for one share, and the rent of that property was about one per cent on the capital. That is not such a wonderful thing as the result of this marvellous gambling. I doubt very much if the member for South Grey would invest $50 with the possibility of getting such a return; I doubt very much whether these clerical gentlemen who talk about gambling would have taken an interest in it under the circumstances, even though it were not for racing purposes, but for the advancement of the Christian church. The directors of that association worked hard without compensation; they worked in the interests of the city, and in the interest of the farmers in the neighbourhood until between 300 and 400 horses would be brought there for some weeks each year, using up the oats and the hay produced by the farmers in the neighbourhood, and filling up the hotels and bringing American money into Canada. I have heard it said that there has been no great protest from Hamilton, and my own view is that the great majority of the people of Hamilton believe it is a good thing, and they do not question so much the morality of it from the point of view of the Rev. Dr. Shearer. I can tell you that some of those who paid only part of the $40 first instalment for one share did not think it worth the risk to pay the remainder of the $40 and to remain liable for the $60, so they forfeited their shares. Evidently they did not think there was much profit to be made out of this great gambling concern. I have never received one cent of dividend for the little money I invested, but I think the citizens of Hamilton would regard their track as one of the institutions of Hamilton which did a great deal to build up the city and to bring it to the attention of the world by the advertising it got from the thousands of people who came to the races every year. I thnk if there was a straight vote in Hamilton the people of that city would vote it had been a good thing. There are people, who perhaps give as little thought to it as some gentlemen on the other side of the House have given to the question, and who might be opposed to it. But just as the exhibition in Toronto is looked upon as the event of the year, so the Hamilton races are looked upon as one of the attractions of the city; that business is benefited; and the belief is that, conducted with proper restrictions, it is a good thing for the city. As at the Woodbine, so at Hamilton, order and decency are maintained at the races. Special detectives are employed, and if any scamp should appear on the ground, he is taken off at once, and the magistrate very soon sends him out of the city. When the hon. member (Mr. Miller) introduced this Bill, he told us a cock-and-bull story, which he now has apparently dropped, about a boy of 12 years, who on the street cars coming from the Woodbine boasted of the money he had made in betting on the races. I told the hon. gentleman that it was impossible a boy of 12 could get into the grounds at Hamilton or Toronto unless he got over the fence or under the fence, and any way he would never get within half a mile of the betting. Then again, if a jockey, or the owner of a horse, or the trainer of a horse be guilty of improper conduct, the men in charge of the races, who are paid salaries of $75 a day for their services, would report such person, and whether he be owner or jockey or trainer, he would be ruled off the Hamilton track, and as a result he would be ruled off every race-track in the United States. What better guarantee of fair-play could you have? There is no track in England, visited by the King or any other man in England, that is conducted with more care, more honesty, more effort to have everything beyond suspicion, than the Woodbine, the Montreal track and the Hamilton track; and I defy any man, whether it is the gentleman who has introduced this Bill, or any other member of this House, to put his finger upon one transaction from the first day the Hamilton club opened to this hour, that is not to the credit of that club.

Hon. CLIFFORD SIFTON (Brandon). My hon. friend from South Grey (Mr. Miller) has brought my name into this discussion and has intimated that it is my duty to assist him in conserving the morals of the people of Canada. I have to say to my hon. friend that I am perfectly willing to join him in doing anything that will promote the moral well-being of the people of Canada if my judgment accords with his in regard to the measures to be adopted to that end. Since something like 22 years ago I was first elected in Canada as the representative of some of my fellow citizens, I have never consciously failed to vote where I had the opportunity for any measure which seemed to me to be designed to promote the peace, welfare and good government of the Dominion of Canada or that part of it with which I had to do. In speaking of a measure of this kind, there are a great many considerations which are pertinent to the subject. There are a good many other considerations which may be dragged into the debate which are not really pertinent to the subject. There are a great many points of view from which the subject should be looked at, if a careful examination is to be made and an intelligent conclusion is to be reached. And let me say that, in the very few words which I wish to address to the House upon this subject, I speak with a full sense of my responsibility not only as a member of the House, but as a citizen, and as the father of a family of sons, some of whom have reached years of manhood, and whose welfare in the future is much more important to me than anything else that can possibly happen in this world. Therefore I think I have as complete a sense of responsibility in speaking of this question as it is possible to have. The measure which has been brought before us has been brought in a somewhat peculiar way. It is promoted by an association or collection of gentlemen whose avowed object is to promote moral and social reform in the Dominion of Canada. There have been some things said of a somewhat unkind character in regard to these gentlemen and their efforts. I do not desire to be understood as endorsing any gibes or attacks which may have been directed against these gentlemen. It may be that in some respects their methods are not all that they ought to be. It may be that sometimes they are injudicious. Nevertheless it seems to me that the work which they have in hand of endeavouring to promote moral and social reform in the Dominion of Canada is a laudable and praiseworthy work. They have been before this House asking for legislation on a former occasion. They came some sessions ago with a proposition that we should pass legislation respecting the observance of the Lord's Day. On that occasion they were able to convince the government that it was the duty of the government to stand as the sponsor of the legislation; and I think that the spirit in which the government and the members of the House on both sides met those gentlemen in connection with that legislation was highly creditable to the House, and showed that the sympathies of the House were almost unanimously with these gentlemen in their endeavours to promote moral and social reform in Canada. They have not on this occasion apparently been able to convince the members of the government that the government should stand as sponsor for the legislation which they propose. For my part, I regret that they did not succeed, at least to some extent, in impressing their views on the government, because we think that some legislation is necessary, and it would have been more satisfactory to us if the government had been able to see its way clear to introduce a moderate measure which could have commanded the general assent of the members of the House. That, however, did not come about, and they have adopted what is their undoubted right of getting their legislation introduced by a private member, who has devoted himself zealously and with praiseworthy capacity and industry to promoting the object he had in hand. The Bill has been brought before us, and it has gone before a committee for investigation, and the committee has held what appears to have been a very thorough and impartial investigation. We have heard the evidence discussed from various standpoints since the House met to-day. My hon. friend from Grey has given us a very full and thorough review of the evidence. If I were to say anything with regard to that, it would be to suggest to my hon. friend that possibly a more unbiased review of the evidence would have been more convincing to the House. I do not suggest that my hon. friend was consciously unfair; but one could not listen to his discussion of the evidence without feeling that he was laboriously extracting those portions of the evidence which tended to support his conclusion without giving due and proper effect to the evidence of a contrary character. We had a review of the evidence from another standpoint given by my hon. friend from Northumberland (Mr. McColl); and again my hon. friend from Regina (Mr. Martin) has gone pretty extensively into the evidence. I have no intention of following them in such a review. I only desire in a very few words to express what seems to me, as an unprejudiced onlooker, to be the effect of the evidence given before the committee, and I think I approach the question with as little prejudice as it is possible for any one to have on the subject. I can hardly be accused of any undue sympathy with gambling. I have been in the habit of attending horse-races for the last 30 years or thereabouts, and of taking my family when they desired to go; I never could see that it did them any harm. I have never bet a dollar on a horse-race, have never bought a pool, have never been interested in a race to the extent of a copper; I have never played a game in which a dollar was at stake; so that I am as free from any sympathy with gambling as it is possible to be. I cannot plead that my freedom comes from any deep-rooted feeling that gambling is immoral. It has rather seemed to me to be an exhibition of stupidity, and I have not felt it necessary to indulge in that particular form of stupidity.

There are some things which, it seems to me, have been very clearly proven by the evidence before the committee. I am not going to discuss the evidence but simply to point out what appears to me to have been conclusively proven by it. In the first place it appears to me to have been proven conclusively that the English thoroughbred horse is the basis of the improvement of all light horse breeding throughout the whole world. It has been shown that in every portion of the world where a systematic or intelligent attempt is made to improve light horse breeding, that has been done by the importation of English thoroughbreds, the product of racing and racing alone. Then I think it has been shown, not only that racing has developed the English thoroughbred, but that racing alone will keep him in his present condition and quality. It has been shown further that the stoppage of book-making upon Canadian race tracks will have the effect of doing away with the conduct of racing by reputable men who engage in it as a sport and expend their means for that purpose. Racing, as the hon. member for Grey (Mr. Miller) truly says, will not be stopped, but racing conducted by men of means will be stopped. It will get into most disreputable hands and the last stage will be worse than the first. I think it has been shown that if the Bill should pass in its present form, the importation of high-class thoroughbreds from Great Britain to Canada will be practically stopped. Further, that our present position which has lately resulted in a very large number of thoroughbred horses being placed for service throughout the Dominion practically free of charge, and without any assistance from the government, will be totally destroyed if racing be put an end to.

But, leaving the horse breeding question to one side, there are other things which appear to me to have been very clearly shown. In the first place, it has been clearly shown that tipsters' advertisements and the advertising of information and the soliciting of betting and wagering is a source of great evil and ought to be stopped. I think it has been further shown that the pool-rooms conducted away from a race-track are a serious evil. Also that the hand-book betting is a serious evil, which comes within the general definition of gambling not as an adjunct of sport, but in itself pure gambling, and I am of the opinion that the general sentiment of the House would be to put a stop to that. I think it has been shown conclusively that when racing is permitted to be carried on for a considerable length of time, for such a length of time that the races cease to consist in real trials of speed, but are simply devices for the purpose of furnishing gambling facilities that constitutes a generally admitted evil and ought to be stopped.

These are therefore four distinct evils which I think have been exposed clearly before the committee and which I think the general sentiment of the House will agree, ought to be prohibited by legislation. I would have thought that having been shown and there being evidently a clear and definite opinion on the part of almost all members of this House that legislation for the prohibition of those evils would receive a general, an almost unanimous assent, the promoters of the Bill would have seen the desirability of accepting legislation which would do away with these admitted evils and let the matter stand for the present. I am quite satisfied that if I had been in the place of my hon.

friend from Grey (Mr. Miller), if I had been promoting this legislation, if I had been on that committee and had seen the evidence produced, proving that these evils existed, and had seen that the House was ready to accept legislation which would be of the most drastic character and do away with those evils, I would have thought that that was enough for one session and would have advised a trial of that legislation to be carried through with the unanimous consent of parliament. It seems to me beyond doubt that that would be the common sense, reasonable and moderate course to adopt.

Going a step further, has it been shown before the committee that in racing, carried on in what we may call the best possible way, as for instance, during the first week of racing at the Woodbine track—has it been shown that the betting on such occasions is such an evil as to demand drastic legislation by this parliament for putting an end to it. I submit there is not a scintilla of evidence before the committee which shows any such thing. I believe it can be said by any reasonable man that when you undertake to take out from the general body of evidence anything applicable to that class of race-meeting such as I have described and endeavour to make out great evils resulting from the conduct of such races, you have utterly failed to prove any such thing. But admitting for a moment that I am not entirely correct in that, and that there is reasonable ground for difference of opinion upon it, then what is the proper course for this House to adopt? What is the principle upon which criminal legislation, under the British system is based. The principle of all our criminal legislation is this, that it is the crystallized or, if you may so call it, the sanctified common sense of the community. It is the expression of the general assent of the community that such and such an Act ought to be condemned. Therein lies the strength of our criminal law. The strength of our criminal law lies in the fact that, under the British system, what we may call freak legislation is unknown. It never has been admitted that it is the duty of a British legislature to decide moral questions for the British people. It is the right of the British people to settle moral questions for themselves, and for 150 years they have never admitted the right of any secular body to settle moral questions for them, or to regulate their conduct. It is the right of the individual, the liberty of the individual, and the only way he can develop character is by exercising the right to decide moral questions for himself. If you look through our criminal law during the last 150 years, you will not find in a British colony or the British parliament itself, any case in which a certain act or certain class of acts, commonly indulged in by a large and reputable section of the community, has been declared criminal by an Act of parliament forced through by a narrow majority, and in the face of strong opposition. I do not think you will find such a case. Now this same question has been before the British parliament within the last few years. What was the method adopted to ascertain what would be the best way of dealing with it? It was sent to a special committee, and the matter was carefully examined into. We too have done that. But when it came before the House for legislation, was any attempt made to pass a law which would confiscate private property, or declare to be criminal acts not recognized as being criminal by a large section of the community? Not at all; the legislation proceeded upon careful and conservative lines. An Act was drawn by Lord Davey, perhaps the greatest lawyer whom England has produced in the last hundred years. I have a copy of the Act, and in clause 3 we find it expressly provided:

> Nothing contained in this Act shall apply to any ground used for the purpose of a race-course for racing horses or adjacent thereto on days on which races take place.

That is the principle upon which the British parliament, after careful and thorough consideration on the part of a special committee, arrived at as a sound principle for British legislation. They do not think it safe or judicious, by a majority if it could have been got, to declare that that which was being done constantly by respectable, reputable citizens of the country, and in regard to which they recognized no moral culpability whatever, should it be branded as a crime without general consent on the part of the community to such a declaration.

What is the basis upon which the administration of the criminal law must rest? The general consent of the community that an act which is forbidden by the law is an act which ought to be forbidden by the law. And if you depart from that principle what results? The result is that you bring the law into contempt. And I put it to the House, and I put myself in the judgment of every member of the House whether in favour of the Bill or not. If this should be made law, would not one law of the parliament of Canada at least be brought into contempt with a large section of the community? They would not respect the legislation, they would not regard it as legislation, which the circumstances called for or which parliament had passed in the exercise of due wisdom, and due care; and the result would be that that support which all good citizens give to the law would not be given to the law passed under these circumstances. I do not know that it is necessary for me to elaborate that argument, but I desire to follow it just far enough to point out that if you once lay down the principle that because any particular section of the community regard a particular act as being morally objectionable, the section of the community which objects to that act can come to the parliament of Canada, and demand that the act referred to shall be declared to be a criminal act, you will open the doors to a class of legislation which will lead you to ends you cannot foresee. You will have introduced into this House a class of discussions in the carrying on of which there can be no possible fixed principle. My hon. friend from Regina (Mr. W. M. Martin) says that the only question we have to decide is whether the members of this House are in favour of book-making upon race-tracks or not. I respectfully submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that that is not the question. It is not a question of whether I, or any hon. member here, happens, in his own mind, to be in favour of book-making or of race-track gambling as it may be called—not at all; the question is whether there is a necessity in the interest of the peace, order and good government of Canada that these things shall be prohibited. The question is whether it is our duty, in the exercise of our powers as the parliament of Canada, to make that a criminal offence. What I may think, or what any other hon. member may think personally as an individual has nothing to do with the case. We are not sent here to carry into the criminal law the particular views we may have with regard to any particular thing that is being done by our fellow citizens. If we undertake to legislate within these lines we shall find ourselves involved in all kinds of confusion.

There is one other consideration which I desire to present. This legislation is of an altogether peculiar and unusual character. I doubt if my hon. friends who are supporting this Bill can show a single case in the last hundred years in Great Britain, or can show a single case in the history of the criminal legislation of the parliament of Canada, in which an Act of parliament has been brought in without any public agitation, without any public demand, which practically confiscates a large amount of private property and brands as criminal acts which are constantly being performed by some of the best citizens of the Dominion. I do not think a precedent can be found for such legislation. And I desire to call your attention to the fact that there is not even the excuse of a public demand. We are here, two hundred and twenty-one members of the House of Commons; there is not a single one of us, I believe, that ever heard this subject discussed on the political platform in the last general election. I venture to say it was not mentioned. Certainly, I never heard it, nor have I ever found anybody who did. We never heard of a member of the House of Commons being asked to pledge himself upon this subject. I have never heard of a public meeting being held for the purpose of discussing this question and hearing the arguments, pro and con. There has been no opportunity for the people of Canada to come to any reasoned and considered opinion upon this subject. My judgment is that the people of Canada have not come to any reasoned or considered opinion upon this subject at the present time. Then, look at the press. Read the newspapers for the last two weeks while this matter has been before the committee. There has been, here and there, a perfunctory article in favour of my hon. friend's Bill, there has been here and there, an article in opposition to the Bill. But nobody who is at all careful as to the statements he makes could, I think, make himself responsible for the statement that there has been in the press of Canada anything in the nature of a concerted demand that this legislation should pass. Is it my hon. friend's position that we should plunge into this extreme, drastic legislation without evidence that the people of Canada have formed an opinion upon it or that they desire it to be passed, without any indication in the press that there is a public opinion on the subject, without any evidence of public opinion except that most evidently manufactured by those who are agitating in favour of the Bill? So, it seems to me that all these considerations point to the conclusion that it would be the part of prudence, common sense and judgment for this House to hesitate before they pass this into law. I have consented to become the seconder of the amendment which my hon. friend (Mr. McColl) proposes to move in Committee of the Whole, conceiving that the common sense and good judgment of the House would see that when legislation is passed which will amply and fully deal with the evils which have been shown before the committee to exist, that will be a sufficient measure, and that it would be unwise and altogether discreditable to our judgment and common sense to go further at the present stage. I hope, without extending my remarks further, that my hon. friend from South Grey (Mr. Miller) and the supporters of the Bill, before the discussion goes too far, will see that it is the part of wisdom to accept the proposition which is made, and allow this discussion to be sealed by a compromise of that kind.

Mr. J. E. ARMSTRONG (East Lambton). I have listened with much interest to many of the speeches delivered on this important question. I merely rise to give a hearty approval to the Bill now before the House. Some of the statements of the hon. member for Brandon are very wide of the mark. He says this question was not debated on the public platforms in the last campaign, and, therefore, it should not be discussed in parliament now. Let me ask him: Was the Naval Bill discussed on the public hustings in the last campaign, a measure of such vital importance to this Dominion? And yet he is a supporter of the government that is trying to force that Naval Bill through the House. Again, he says there is no public demand for this measure. Evidently the hon. gentleman has not taken the pains to examine the public press for the last year, he does not know that public meetings in its favour have been held in different parts of the country, or he would not have made such a statement. This has been a live question throughout the country for more than a year, and during the last campaign it was uppermost in some of the counties. He says this legislation is of such a radical nature that he could not think of supporting it. Well, from what I understand in hearing the hon. gentleman discuss the Bill, the only objection they have to it is to that clause which prohibits the bookmaker to carry on his operations on the race-track. When you come to examine the amendment which has been proposed by the hon. member for West Northumberland (Mr. McColl) you will find that it will not be in the public interest to pass it. Let us examine clause 228a that has been taken from the Davies Betting Bill in the old land:

> Every one is guilty of an offence who frequents or loiters in streets or public places, on behalf of himself or of any other person, for the purpose of book-making or betting, or wagering, or agreeing to bet or wager, or paying or receiving or settling bets.

This clause is taken back on the following page so far as betting on race-tracks is concerned, and the latter part of clause 235 says this:

> The provisions of sections 226, 227, 228 and 235 of this section shall not extend to any person by reason of his becoming the custodian or despository of any money . . . . provided that no such race-meeting shall continue for more than twelve days.

A number of race meetings last year did not continue that length of time. Twice twelve days a year would be twenty-four days a year for each race meet. If you take the five race meets that are in the Canadian Racing Association, including Montreal, Toronto, Hamilton, Fort Erie and Windsor, and if you reckon twelve days for each of the five race meets in the spring, you have sixty days, and if you reckon five weeks in the fall of the year you would have sixty days more, that is 120 days. As there are only twenty days allowed already, they are precluded from having a race on a certain track within twenty days after the race closes. Supposing the first race had been held at Montreal, the racing association there would be able to go back to Montreal and hold their first race twenty days after their last race was held there; and in that way you would have continuous racing in the province of Ontario and some of the other provinces for 120 days. In addition to that, if you had a racing association in the eastern provinces that would cover say five race meets, and another racing association in our northwest that would cover say twelve race meets, you would have race meets practically throughout the year in some other part of the country. We find that the committee has thoroughly investigated this question; they have gone to a great deal of trouble, and have gathered a remarkable amount of information, and they have reported the Bill favourably as a consequence of their investigations. As I have already remarked, the only objection that seems to be made to the present Bill is that clause which prohibits the bookmaker from carrying on his operations on the race-track. Now, I think that clause is in the general interest of the public. Take for instance, the clause with regard to elections. I know one riding in which men who are interested in the race meets in that part of the country took up their quarters in a hotel, and they formed a betting pool. They then induced certain persons to go out and see men supporting the Conservative candidate giving them ten, fifteen and twenty dollars to bet against the Conservative candidate, and by betting against him they would be permitted to keep to themselves the amount of money they would make. I know one poor man in that riding that was not able to make such a bet. He bet up to $300, and he stated that the money was not his own, but it came through the betting pool that was formed in the hotel. I could explain how these men carried on their nefarious work, and I trust that this Bill will be framed in such a manner as to cover their case. The hon. member for Brandon also says that this is unfair legislation, that the British Criminal Code would not allow it to be enforced in that country. What about the Sabbath observance law in our country? Let him go to the United States and see how a Bill like this, has been adopted in different states of the union. Let him go into the state of New York, or Michigan, and see how the people are devoted to legislation like this. Let him go into the state of Illinois, or into California, and he will find practically the same legislation in operation to-day, and he will find that the enlightened people in those states are alive to the necessity of legislation like this. I have only to say in conclusion, that I shall give the Bill my hearty support.

Mr. J. W. MADDIN (South Cape Breton). There seems to be some misapprehension in the minds of certain hon. gentlemen as to what the functions of parliament are in regard to legislation of this nature. The hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton) says there is no precedent for a Bill of this kind, that the Anglo-Saxon race have always looked after their own morals and have accepted dictation from no one within the last 130 years. Let me say to my hon. friend that parliament does not exist for the sole purpose of building transcontinental lines or of improving the grade of live stock; it has other obligations resting upon it, and these obligations have been acknowledged by parliaments from time immemorial. The morals of the people have been the subject of legislation ever since we have had a law-making body. Parliament in the old country and in this country has legislated with regard to bigamy, polygamy and gambling, and has even made it an offence in England to gamble in private houses. The courts of Great Britain have gone so far in construing the statutes in regard to gambling in public places as to hold that a boat, a tent, a railway carriage, an omnibus, were public places within the meaning of the Acts. Has not this parliament before now legislated with regard to the morals of the people of the country? Was it not in 1878 that the Canada Temperance Act was consolidated? Have we not in the different provinces liquor licenses for the regulation of the sale of intoxicating liquors, with a view to restricting drunkenness? Why is it that the saloons in Ottawa are closed between 7 and 11 o'clock on Saturday nights? They are open during these hours in the old country. Is it not the duty of parliament to legislate along the lines of social and moral reform? When the editor of the Toronto 'Globe' returned from the old country and wrote up his views of English life, what did he state? That the race was becoming degenerate, that the streets were crowded with hollow-chested degenerates, and he depicted slumdom. I shall quote some opinions as to the cause of these slum conditions before I have finished, and it will be for us to say whether in this young country of which we are so proud, having the start it has and the race it has, we will maintain that race as it is, and even improve it, or allow it to degenerate as the English race has degenerated in the last 50 years. The hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton) said he heard nothing about this matter at the last general election. Nothing was said at the last election about the naval policy of Canada, about the building of a Canadian navy at all, yet a Bill was brought up in this House without consulting the people, and has already passed this House.

Among the objections raised to this Bill are that it interferes with the breeding of first-class horses. Horse-racing does not affect the development or improvement of the breed of horses. The hon. member for Brandon says that according to the evidence before the committee of this House, if this Bill passes, horse-racing will go out of the hands of respectable gentlemen and find itself in the hands of a disgraceful element. In the province of Nova Scotia we have a number of race-tracks. Entering the province there is one at Amherst, one at Spring Hill, one in Halifax, four in the county of Cape Breton, one in New Glasgow, and I think one in Kentville, and during the years racing has been carried on there the book-maker has been unknown, he has not yet got in his work in the province of Nova Scotia, and I hope that after this Bill comes into operation it will be difficult for him to maintain a foothold there. The horse-racing of Nova Scotia is as well conducted as that in any part of Canada, and it is carried on there without the assistance of book-makers or anything of that kind. The gentlemen who conduct the races in Nova Scotia are the equals of those who conduct horse-racing in any other part of Canada.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Is it trotting or running in Nova Scotia?

Mr. MADDIN. Trotting and running. I have been told that the evidence of the chief of police of Montreal before the committee was that he did not believe that any persons were injured morally as a result of betting. When the Bill was before the House for its second reading, the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) said that from his experience about race-tracks in Quebec, he did not think there were any evil consequences flowing from race-track gambling. During last summer, I spent the greater part of a week at Blue Bonnets, going out every day by Canadian Pacific railway from Montreal to the race-track, and I subsequently attended the race-meeting held at Delorimier park in the fall. I am willing to admit that any one who travels out in a private equipage or in a private Pullman car would not see the evils, but in travelling in the special trains you can see the tipster at his work, selling tips and guaranteeing winners and offering every inducement to the inexperienced, the unsophisticated and credulous, and one sees at once that even on the way to the race-course a great deal of evil is practised that it is the intention of this Bill to prevent. As quoted by the hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Miller), Mr. Gladstone said that it is the business of legislators to make it easy for people to do right and difficult for them to do wrong. If that be one of the functions of a government, I submit that it is our duty to support this Bill in its present form.

As to the claim that this will seriously interfere with the breeding of horses, in 1844 a committee was appointed by the House of Lords to inquire into race-track gambling, and in their report they said:

The committee would consider the advantages of horse-racing more than problematical if they were to be inevitably purchased by excessive gambling and the vice and misery which it entails.

That was in 1844. The British race was not then degenerate, it was not made up of hollow-chested men, but evidently the parliament of Britain did not heed the report of that committee, and did not take the steps necessary to curb the gambling operation of the book-makers. The day of the horse is passing. In military matters we are looking forward to aerial navigation, and the balloon, and airship are taking the place of the horse. So are the automobile, and the bicycle, and it is not so important that we should preserve the four legged animal that we must do it as was pointed out in 1844, at the expense of the two-footed individual. It is not important for us to preserve the four legged animal if we must do it at the expense of the manhood of the country. We are not going to improve the breed of horses at the expense of the breed of men, a nation cannot be better than the people who compose it, and if the government would by wise measures devote more time to the breeding of good citizens in this country it would be a great blessing for the nation. If horse-racing is necessary to develop the breed of horses in Canada then let it be done without the assistance of the book-maker; let the government of Canada subscribe for purses to be contested for in the various provinces, and the same result will be achieved by honest means. At the annual exhibition in Halifax there are horse-races every day, and the government provides the purses, and the good clean sport is the result, and the unsophisticated are not exposed to being fleeced by unscrupulous book-makers. The hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker) stated that bets had been made against him at the last election, and I have no doubt the same can be said of every member of this House, but it is not proposed by this Bill to prevent that form of betting which can go merrily on if any one wishes to indulge in it. But when the hon. gentleman says that the book-maker matches his skill, and judgment against the bettor then the hon. gentleman is entirely mistaken. Betting is encouraged and organized by social parasites in the shape of book-makers, it is their instrumentality which largely gives rise to the evil, and it is at them, and their practices that this Bill strikes. I shall with permission of the House cite the opinions of some eminent English authorities who have studied the conditions, and spoken with no uncertain sound as to the evil results of gambling.

Mr. Justice Wills said:

When I first came upon the bench I used to think drink was the most fruitful cause of crime, but it is now a question whether the unlimited facilities for legitimate speculation on the part of people who have no means of embarking on it are not a more prevalent scurce of mischief and crime even than drink.

Mr. Justice Hawkins said:

I know nothing more likely to ruin a young and inexperienced man than the system of betting which goes on around us.

Mr. Justice Grantham said:

Gambling with book-makers is the cause of more crime and misery than anything else in the land.

Mr. Justice Darling said:

No one could attend the civil and criminal courts without knowing that many persons spent a much larger amount of time in betting than they devoted to their own business.

Mr. Horace Smith (London, stipendiary magistrate):

Nearly every case of embezzlement I try has resulted from betting, and then to pay their losses they rob thier employers.

Alderman Sutton (Newcastle, magistrate) said:

The working men of the north of England put money on horses, and when they lose they take their employer's property.

Mr. Bros (London, stipendiary magistrate) said:

Betting is generally the downfall of clerks and servants who are charged with embezzlement.

Chief constable of Southampton said:

Street betting is a disgrace to the town. One man is making £1,000 a year by it.

The Birmingham official receiver said:

Half of the bankruptcies which come before me are due to gambling.

Mr. Curtiss Bennett (Marylebone police court) said:

I am convinced from my experience as a magistrate that nothing is so productive of crime among people as street betting. It is an evil far worse than drunkenness, and I agree with Mr. Justice Wills that it is the greatest curse of this country.

The chairman of Croyden bench said:

It seems a very good paying game. I think the government, as soon as they have time, will have to take into consideration whether the law should not be altered. These remarks were called forth by a book-maker who had been summoned, producing a handful of sovereigns, and suggesting that it would save time for him to pay the fine at once without the evidence being heard.

Lord Chief Justice (Lord Alverstone) said:

Sport never ought to be of necessity associated with gambling or betting. Those who had to do with the administration of the law knew that there was nothing in their great towns, and he was afraid in the smaller ones, too, that brought more people in the humbler walks of life to misery and ruin than the betting agents.

Mr. Justice Bucknill said:

This betting curse, which is being carried on in a shocking manner, has got to be put down with a severe hand, and, as far as I am concerned I will do so to the utmost of my power.

John Hawke (Hon. secretary National Anti-Gambling League) said:

Gambling is becoming a worse evil and a more serious cause of poverty than drink.

Right Hon. Henry Campbell-Bannerman said:

I long ago formed the opinion that betting and gambling come next to drink (and doubt even if they are below it) in the measure of the curse they bring upon society.

In view of these opinions from the most distinguished jurists and social reformers in Great Britain, experience has brought them in personal contact with the sad conditions that exist, and which have been so well depicted by the Reverend editor of the Toronto 'Globe,' no hon. member of this House can shirk his responsibility by saying that the chief of police of Montreal says there is no evil consequence, or very little evil consequence from betting. Why, Sir, I was in Montreal last August, and September, and I was in the police court there when pickpockets in groups of four and five were arraigned before Judge Leet, as they were taken, not from the race-track, but from all the public places in the city, and it was Judge Leet's duty to send them back to their haunts of crime in the United States. The hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton) has spoken about sanctified common sense, but in view of the opinions I have cited from these distinguished English jurists can any one say it is sanctified common sense to demoralize the young generation of this country in order that the breed of horses may be improved. Is it sanctified common sense to improve horses in Canada at the price of demoralizing the youth of our country? I submit it is not I support this Bill for the reasons I gave on the second reading, and the reasons I give to-night, and I hope and trust that it will become part of the criminal law of the country.

Motion agreed to, and House went into committee on the Bill.

Mr. TALBOT. Do I understand that we are going into committee now?

Mr. FIELDING. We are in committee.

Mr. TALBOT. It was very quickly and abruptly done. There is nothing gained by it. I move that the committee rise and report progress.

Mr. FIELDING. It is rather early. I think we might rise for the evening at about half-past eleven.

Mr. TALBOT. The discussion has been cut off very abruptly. I do not blame anybody. I supposed that the debate would have been adjourned between 11 and 12 o'clock.

Mr. FIELDING. I think the hon. gentleman can speak in committee.

Mr. TALBOT. Yes, but not with the same force or effect.

Mr. FIELDING. If we report progress now, the effect will be to leave the matter in the same position to-morrow. If any hon. gentlemen wishes to speak he can speak in committee.

Mr. STRATTON. I think the main object of the Bill has been accomplished by our going into committee, and if any hon. gentleman wishes to speak, I know of no reason why he should not.

On section 1,

Mr. McCOLL. As I intimated to the House this afternoon that I proposed to move an amendment when the Bill got into committee, I desire now to do so. Similar legislation to this was passed by the British House of Commons as recently as 1905 or 1906. Hon. members who have observed the Votes and Proceedings are aware that when this matter was before the special committee, an amendment was moved to the effect that the English wording of the proposed amendments to the Criminal Code should be adopted instead of the wording by the promoters of the Bill, which follows the American legislation known as the Hughes law. But I think it will be conceded by every one who gives the matter consideration that the English Act as drafted by Lord Davie is in much better form. What I propose to move carries out all the amendments proposed by the promoters of the Bill, except only the saving clause at the end, which provides that these amendments shall not apply to what takes place on a race-course during the actual progress of a race meet. I move that the following clause be substituted for the provisions of the Bill:

The provisions of sections 226, 227 and 228a and of this section shall not extend to any person by reason of his becoming the custodian or depository of any money, property or valuable thing staked, to be paid to the winner of any lawful sport, game or exercise, or to the owner of any horse engaged in any lawful race, or to bets between individuals, or to records of bets made on the race course of an incorporated association during the actual progress of a race-meeting, if the following proviso be observed in regard to such meeting, namely, that no such race-meeting shall continue for more than eight days of continuous racing on days on which such racing may be lawfully carried on, and that not more than two race-meetings shall be held on the same ground in one year, which meetings shall be separated by an interval of at least twenty days between each race-meeting.

Without further discussion at the present time, I beg leave, seconded by Mr. Sifton, to move this amendment. I am moving to substitute the provisions of the English Act for the whole Bill.

Mr. GEORGE TAYLOR. May I suggest to the Minister of Finance, now that this amendment has been read, and it will be printed to-morrow in the Votes and Proceedings, where every member can read it, that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. I think the amendments ought to be printed before the House to carry out what my hon. friend from Gananoque (Mr. Taylor) suggests.

Mr. GEORGE TAYLOR. The amendment of my hon. friend has been read by the chairman. It is a new Bill altogether, taking the place of the Bill proposed. The House will then be in the possession of both the Bill and the amended Bill, and I think the committee should rise in the meantime.

Mr. FIELDING. I intimated some time ago that I would ask the House to adjourn at 11.30, and it is now close to that hour. I move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Is it understood that the whole of the amendment as proposed by the hon. member for Northumberland will appear in the Votes and Proceedings?

Mr. FIELDING. Put them in 'Hansard' and let the hon. member read them.

Mr. McCOLL. I beg to move, seconded by Mr. Sifton, that the following be substituted for the Bill before the committee:

Sections 226 and 227 will remain the same. Section 228 will read as follows:

228. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to one year's imprisonment who keeps any disorderly house, that is to say, any common bawdy-house, common gaming-house, or common betting-house, or opium joint, as hereinbefore defined.

2. Any one who appears, acts or behaves as master or mistress, or as the person having the care, government, or management of any disorderly house, shall be deemed to be the keeper thereof, and shall be liable to be prosecuted and punished as such, although in fact he or she is not the real owner or keeper thereof.

228A. 1. Every one is guilty of an offence who frequents or loiters in streets or public places, on behalf either of himself or of any other person, for the purpose of book-making or betting, or wagering, or agreeing to bet or wager, or paying or receiving or settling bets, and shall

(a) In the case of a first offence be liable on conviction to a fine not exceeding $——;

(b) In the case of a second offence be liable on conviction to a fine not exceeding $——; and

(c) In the case of a third or subsequent offence, or in any case where it is proved that the person whilst committing the offence had any betting transaction with a person under the age of sixteen years, be liable on conviction to a fine not exceeding $——, or to imprisonment, with or without hard labour, for a term not exceeding six months, without the option of a fine;

and shall in any case be liable to forfeit all books, cards, papers and other articles relating to betting which may be found in his possession.

2. Any constable may take into custody, without warrant, any person found committing an offence under this section, and may seize and detain any article liable to be forfeited under this Act.

3. Any person who appears to the court to be under the age of sixteen years, shall, for the purpose of his section, be deemed to be under that age, unless the contrary be proved, or unless the person charged shall satisfy the court that he had reasonable ground for believing otherwise.

4. For the purpose of this section the word 'street' shall include any highway and any public bridge, road, lane, footway, square, court, alley or passage, whether a thoroughfare or not; and the words 'public place' shall include public park, garden, or seabeach, and any uninclosed ground to which the public for the time being have restricted access, and shall also include every inclosed place (not being a public park or garden) to which the public have a restricted right of access, whether on payment or otherwise, if at or near every public entrance there is conspicuously exhibited by the owners or persons having control of the place a notice prohibiting betting therein.

Sections 229, 230, 231, 232, 233 and 234 will remain as above set out, and section 235 will read as follows:

235. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to one year's imprisonment, and to a fine not exceeding one thousand dollars, who

(a) Uses or knowingly allows any part of any premises under his control to be used for the purposes of recording or registering any bet or wager, or selling any pool; or

(b) Keeps, exhibits or employs or knowingly allows to be kept, exhibited or employed, in any part of any premises under his control, any device or apparatus for the purpose of recording any bet or wager or selling any pool; or

(c) Records or registers any bet or wager or sells any pool, upon the result

(i) Of any political or municipal election;

(ii) Of any race;

(iii) Of any contest or trial of skill or endurance of man or beast.

(d) Engages in pool-selling or book-making, except as hereinafter provided.

(e) Advertises, publishes, exhibits, posts up, sells, or supplies, or offers to sell or supply, any information relating to pool-selling, book-making, betting or wagering; or

Section 225e. Offers to sell any information relating to or intended for use in connection with betting or wagering, or who advertises or publishes any such offer.

(f) Aids or assists in any manner in any of the said acts which are by this section forbidden.

2. The provisions of sections 226, 227, 228a, and of this section shall not extend to any person by reason of his becoming custodian or depository of any money, property or valuable things staked, to be paid to the winner of any lawful race, sport, game or exercise, or to the owner of any horse engaged in any lawful race, or to bets between individuals, bets or to records of bets made on the race-course of an incorporated association during the actual progress of a race-meeting, if the former proviso be observed in regard to such meeting, namely: That no such race-meeting shall continue for more than eight days of continuous racing on days on which such racing may lawfully be carried on, and that no more than two race-meetings shall be held in the same grounds in the one year, which meetings shall be separated by an interval of at least 20 days between each meeting.

Mr. LANCASTER. We have here the proposal that sections 229 to 234 shall remain 'as above set out'. Does that mean as they are in the Bill of the hon. member for South Grey, or as they are in the Criminal Code?

Mr. McCOLL. As in the Criminal Code. I notice there is an omission—the penalties are blank.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. That can be done in committee.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Before we rise, I would make a suggestion that the points at issue in this matter have been narrowed down to one, namely, whether betting can be allowed on incorporated race-tracks for seven or eight days at two meetings a year. In other words, the proposal now is that while last year we had over two hundred days racing, under the proposed amendment we are to have less than one hundred. If hon. members who are promoting the Bill will try to compromise the matter as has been suggested, we can get a settlement to-morrow morning without much discussion, that will be satisfactory to them, and to the country. If we do not reach a settlement of that kind, we shall have a prolonged and unsatisfactory discussion, and probably shall pass nothing.

Mr. STRATTON. No chance of a compromise on those terms.

Progress reported.

Mr. FIELDING moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. SPROULE. What business will be taken up to-morrow?

Mr. FIELDING. We will resume consideration of this measure.

Mr. SPROULE. And what then?

Mr. FIELDING. Several of the government Bills, and, if Supply be reached, the estimates of the Minister of Public Works will be taken up.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. I would suggest that the Bill we have been discussing to-night should not be taken up the first thing in the morning, but should be left until three o'clock, so that we may read 'Hansard' and understand the matter better.

Mr. FIELDING. I think hon. members know all about it.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. A great many are not present. The afternoon would be a better time.

Mr. FIELDING. I think it would be better to take it up in the morning.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 11.30 p. m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, April 7, 1910.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

OTTAWA AND MONTREAL POWER TRANSMISSION COMPANY, LTD.

Mr. McCRANEY moved that the third report of the Select Standing Committee on Standing Orders be concurred in.

Mr. SPROULE. What does this report contain?

Mr. McCRANEY. If my hon. friend will refer to Votes and Proceedings of March 14th, he will see the report of the examiner for private bills with regard to this Bill. That report is as follows:

Your examiner has duly examined the petition of C. M. Edwards and others for an Act of incorporation under the name of the Ottawa and Montreal Transmission Company (Limited), with power to generate electric and other energy and to construct a transmission line from Mattawa to Montreal by the north shore of the Ottawa river, with power to expropriate lands necessary for the purpose of their undertaking, and finds that amongst the powers asked for is the right to carry their transmission lines across the Ottawa river into the province of Ontario wherever it may be found desirable in the interests of the company to do so; as this power would carry with it the right to expropriate any lands required for that purpose the notice would, under the terms of rule 90 (c) have to be published in each locality in Ontario which might be affected by the exercise of their rights by the company, but no evidence that the notice has been so published has been submitted to your examiner; in all other respects the requirements of the rule have been complied with.

This came before the Standing Orders Committee yesterday. No evidence was submitted to the committee that publication of the notice had been made in the province of Ontario and the recommendation of the committee is that the company be given power only in the province of Quebec and not in the province of Ontario.

Mr. SPROULE I think it would be really advisable to let this stand over for a day that we may have an opportunity to look into it, because there is much about it not present to one's mind in looking over it hurriedly and for the first time. We do not know to what extent it may operate in an injurious way. A short delay will not prevent the measure going on.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Stand until to-morrow.

Mr. SPEAKER. Stand.

QUESTIONS.

Mr. A. J. GRAVEL, THREE RIVERS, QUE.

Mr. WALLACE:

1. Is the government aware that Mr. A. J. Gravel, federal inspector of weights and measures at Three Rivers, is, at the same time, said to be acting as a regular insurance agent, being one of the firm of Gravel & Spenard?
2. Does the government consider that a man can attend to insurance business and fulfil the office of inspector at the same time?

Hon. WM. TEMPLEMAN:

The government is not aware that Mr. Gravel is acting as a regular insurance agent, or that he is a member of the firm of Gravel and Spenard.

2. It will depend on the circumstances in each case.

Mr. JOHN E. SINCLAIR, SUMMERFIELD, P.E.I.

Mr. FRASER:

1. Is John E. Sinclair, of Summerfield, P. E.I., now or has he at any time been in the employ of the government? If so, what was the nature of his employment and what are his duties?
2. How long was he in the employment of the government and what was the date of his first engagement?
3. At what rate has he been paid?
4. How much has he been paid altogether since he has been so employed?

Hon. C. MURPHY:

1. John E. Sinclair, of Summerfield, Prince Edward Island, was appointed as a member of the commission sent to the United Kingdom and Denmark by the Department of Agriculture to study swine husbandry.
2. The term of Mr. Sinclair's engagement was from the 14th June to September 2nd, 1909.
3. Mr. Sinclair has received no remuneration, other than his living and travelling expenses.
4. The sum of $793.27.

SCHOOL SLATES AND LEAD PENCILS.

Mr. MACDONELL:

1. How many cases of school slates were imported into Canada last year?
2. What precautions does the government adopt to prevent the dumping into Canada of second and third class lead pencils, which it is alleged goes on at the present time?
3. Does the government adopt the same methods of appraisement and valuation of these goods as the United States customs officials adopt? If not, what is the difference?

Hon. Wm. PATERSON:

1. The imports of school writing slates into Canada for the year ended March 31, 1909, were valued at $29,340. The quantity is not stated in the statistical returns.
2. The usual precautions as to the production of certified invoices showing the fair market value as sold for home consumption are taken in the case of lead pencils entered at customs. The goods are examined and the invoices and entries reviewed by the appraisers to determine the proper duties payable. In the case of complaints, as to undervaluation of goods, investigations are made abroad by special officers to ascertain their fair market value.
3. While the methods of appraisement and valuation of goods in Canada and the United States bear a similarity in some respects, the rates of duty on the lead pencils in question are not based on the same lines in both countries. The Canadian rates being ad valorem only, while United States rates are combined specific and ad valorem.

DREDGING INSPECTORS AT PORT ARTHUR.

Mr. ARMSTRONG:

1. How many inspectors had the government at Port Arthur and Fort William for the purpose of inspecting the amount taken away from each dredge last season, what are the names of each, and the salaries paid?
2. How many of said inspectors were on duty at night and what are their names?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY:

1.

CUSTOMS COLLECTOR AT MAHONE.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN.

1. Has the collector of customs at Mahone been recently dismissed or removed? If so, when and for what reason?
2. Who has been appointed in his stead?

Mr. PATERSON. The answer is no.

DREDGING IN NEW BRUNSWICK.

Mr. CROCKET:

1. Were tenders called for the dredging done at Bathurst, New Brunswick, by the firm of A. & R. Loggie in the season of 1909?
2. If so, how many tenders were received, from whom, at what prices and when were the tenders opened?
3. When was the work commenced?

Mr. PUGSLEY:

1 and 2. In 1908 Messrs. A. & R. Loggie offered to do the dredging required at Bathurst at the same prices as those of their tender for Caraquet, viz.: rock, $3; other materials, 41 cents; which were considered fair and reasonable. A contract was entered into with them and renewed in 1909.
3. May 10, 1909.

Mr. PATERSON.

Mr. CROCKET:

1. What amount is claimed by the firm of A. & R. Loggie for dredging done at Campbellton, New Brunswick, since the close of the last fiscal year?
2. What was the contract price per yard for said dredging?

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend will observe that the question is what amount is claimed for dredging since the close of the last fiscal year. As the last fiscal year closed on the 31st March the answer would be nothing. I presume my hon. friend means during the last fiscal year?

Mr. CROCKET. Yes.

Mr. PUGSLEY:

1 and 2. During the last fiscal year dredging was done at Campbellton, New Brunswick, by Messrs. A. and R. Loggie to the amount of $4,947.60, at the rate of 50 cents per cubic yard.

ESCHEATS TO THE CROWN.

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH moved that to-morrow the House go into Committee of the Whole to consider the following proposed resolution:

Resolved, that it is expedient to provide, in case of escheats to the Crown, that out of any property so devolving the Governor in Council shall have power to make such grants as seem right;

(a) To any person having a legal or moral claim upon the previous owner or a just or natural right or claim to succeed to his property.

(b) To carry into effect any disposition of such property which the previous owners may appear to have intended.

(c) To reward any person making discovery of such property to the Crown.

Mr. GERVAIS. Before this resolution is passed I would like to say that I think it involves an encroachment on the vested rights of the provinces. I think it is one of their minor prerogatives to benefit by escheats.

Mr. SPEAKER. No debate can be allowed now. This is merely a government notice of motion.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. This is to escheat a property in our own territory, not in any province.

Mr. GERVAIS. But there is no such limitation in this resolution showing the tendency of the Bill to follow, which will prove to be ultra vires. With regard to that I may join issue with my right hon. friend. It is not for this parliament to decide whether these properties which are left in 'déshérence' should be attributed to the federal jurisdiction or to the provincial jurisdiction. I think it is one of the minor prerogatives of the Crown which must not be confounded with the higher prerogatives of the Crown. So it was held in the case of the Attorney General of Quebec and Monk, and in that of the Attorney General of Ontario and Mercer, and it was so decided by the Privy Council. The minor prerogatives of the Crown are always governed by the civil laws of each province.

Mr. SPEAKER. No debate can be allowed at this stage.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. These properties are in the Yukon.

Mr. GERVAIS. Even if they are in the Yukon, there might still be great cause of doubt. The English exchequer might claim them.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman will remember what I said, that no debate can take place at this stage.

Mr. GERVAIS. But I have a right to join issue with the minister.

Mr. SPEAKER. You can do that tomorrow.

Mr. GERVAIS. I have a right to give an answer to a question put to me, for the right to question implies the right to answer.

THE NAVAL SERVICE OF CANADA.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER moved that tomorrow the House go into Committee of the Whole to consider the following proposed resolution:

Resolved, that it is expedient in connection with Bill (No. 95) An Act respecting the Naval Service of Canada, now before this House, to provide that there shall be a department of the government of Canada which shall be called the Department of the Naval Service, over which the Minister of Marine and Fisheries for the time being shall preside; and that the Governor in Council may appoint an officer to be the deputy head of such department at a salary of $5,000 per annum, and such other officers and clerks as may be requisite for the due administration of such department, at such salaries as, under the Civil Service Amendment Act, 1908, are appropriate to the divisions and subdivisions of the services to which such officers and clerks may be assigned.

Motion agreed to.

RACE-TRACK GAMBLING.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER moved that Item 38 of the Public Bills and Orders be now called.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. I would ask the leader of the House how long we are likely to be engaged on this Bill, or has any agreement been reached as to how long it should occupy the attention of the House to the delay of other business which is perhaps more important and more pressing.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. There is no objection from anybody. This Bill, like all other Bills which are submitted to the House, will receive a reasonable consideration.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee on Bill (No. 6) to amend the Criminal Code.

On section 1,

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. I only intend to take up but a short time in discussing this Bill, as I am anxious, like every one else, to reach a settlement. I believe a compromise may be reached which will be satisfactory to the country, and which ought to be satisfactory to both parties in the House. If the compromise proposed last night by the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. McColl) is accepted, we will have in this country less than 100 days of racing where now we have over 250 days. We will have the hand-book eliminated and made criminal, we will have tipsters' advertising and tipsters' offers of information prohibited, we will have the advance information in the pool-room prohibited, and the time for racing will be reduced from 250 days to less than 100. Then we will have an opportunity in the next few years of seeing whether that does not substantially reduce the abuses that now exist. I wish to draw attention to the issue as it exists in this country. While you may by this legislation be stopping betting, you may stop racing by stopping betting, and if you stop racing you are not going to stop betting. That is clear to my mind. It has been attempted before, it has been attempted in other states to stop betting by prohibiting racing, and the attempt has failed. Where such Bills have been passed in the states, betting still continues, only it moves in another circle where you cannot control it as well as you can now. To my mind, this measure will be absolutely futile in the object of stopping betting. Betting is more or less inherent in humanity, people will find a way of betting and, of all forms of betting, that which should be stopped because it is the most scandalous is the betting on the stock exchange. There is far more money lost, there is far more injury done to the public and they have a poorer chance for their money in betting on the stock exchange than in betting with the book-makers on the race-track.

Mr. CONMEE. Will this Bill not reach the stock exchange?

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. I do not know whether this will reach the stock exchange or not.

Mr. GERMAN. No, no.

Mr. CONMEE. Who says 'no?'

Mr. GERMAN. I do.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. I am quite sure that this Bill will not stop betting, but it is possible in every British community to regulate any evil. There is a betting evil in this country—we all admit that—there is a betting evil in connection with race-tracks, and the way to meet that evil, and to minimize it, is to regulate it and not attempt to abolish it. We do know that the most satisfactory treatment of the drink evil is the regulation of the drink traffic, and in Ontario and the different provinces we have, not prohibition, which has been found a failure, but we have the regulation of the drink evil which is a success, and under that regulation the drink evil is being gradually minimized. It is on those lines that we should approach this evil of race-track betting and we should minimize it by putting under regulation the conduct of race-meetings controlled by men who take an interest in racing, on its merits, and an interest in stock breeding, and that regulation would best be effected by the amendment of the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. McColl). While you stop racing, as you do by this sweeping law which is now before the House, you do it at the expense of horse-breeding. I thoroughly agree with the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton) in his contention last night that an injury is done to the breeding of horses by the stopping of racing. I have represented in past years the constituency in which the Woodbine race-track is located. I have known a good deal about racing and horse-breeding in the country, and I absolutely agree with the evidence and the statement of the hon. member for Brandon, that horse-racing in some way, is necessary for the maintenance of the thoroughbred horse, and that the thoroughbred horse is the greatest asset in connection with racing horses and the horse industry in this country. I am not going to enlarge upon it. I have had a wide enough experience of it to know—although I do not know what the reason is and nobody can account for the anomaly—that the perpetuation of the thoroughbred horse does tend to carry on the qualities of endurance and stamina which are the ground work of all the lighter breeds of horses. All the good military horses, whether chargers, or cavalry horses, absolutely derive their stamina, endurance and courage from the thoroughbred horse and the more thoroughbred horses we have in this country the better able we are to provide good horses for the army of the empire and our own militia forces.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. And thoroughbred men.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. And thoroughbred men. The country that has done that most effectively is Great Britain. Their horses are the best in the world, and they are taken all over the world for military and breeding purposes. Horse-racing is a very old British institution. It has been identified with British life hundreds of years, and it has never been a crime in England—and a great many of our people come from the old land—to bet with the book-makers at race-meetings. In some way horse-racing and the breeding of the thoroughbred are at the bottom of British character. All through British literature you will find these things mingling the world over, and they are represented as the real things at the foundation of British character. There is a love of the country, there is a love of thoroughbred animals, a love of live stock, a feeling of chivalry and military prowess in the British character that in some way is identified with horses and in some way is maintained by horse-breeding and the traditions that go with it. The things that have carried the Britisher wherever he has gone have been his military prowess, his chivalry, and his devotion of horse-racing and sport. These have been at the foundation of British character. It is no new thing—this desire of the British people to give race meetings, or to find sport in race meetings and betting on horses. It is almost as old as British character itself, and it runs through all our literature. Through the general literature of the entire world, in some way, there is a regard for horses and a desire to be associated with horses and identified with chivalry, military prowess and things of that sort. The desire of the ordinary British citizen to go to race meetings, to see contests between horses and to bet on horse-races is a part of the British character, and I do not see why we should interfere with that desire in the way that is proposed in this legislation. The Britisher values above all things his liberty of personal conduct and he resents the attempt of somebody else to interfere with it. Wherever he has gone, in Australia, in Canada, in South Africa, in India, the Englishman has taken his racing instincts with him, he has taken racing there and he has done nothing of which he ought to be ashamed, but, on the contrary, he has maintained those underlying features of British character which are the strength of British character and British government throughout the world. So, this proposition to do away with horse-racing, to prevent people from going to the races and betting occasionally upon a race involves the placing of a stigma on British character and on things that are at the foundation of it. I happened to know the men who were identified with the starting of the Ontario Jockey Club. They were men of high character. They recognized the fact that the British public must have sport, that the British public is essentially a sport-loving public and men like the late Mr. Hendrie, the late William Christie, the late Sir Casimir Gzowski, and the late Charles Brown, and the late T. C. Patteson, who established the Ontario Jockey Club had no desire other than to see British institutions and traditions maintained in this country through racing with which they had been identified. They recognize that the public had to have racing and they were willing to take charge of racing in Toronto and to give the public good clean sport of that kind. They succeeded in giving it. The finest social gathering and the most characteristic gathering to-day in all Canada is that which you will see at the Woodbine race track during the spring and fall meetings. This is essentially a representative Canadian meeting. It is a meeting of the best collection of men and women that I have ever seen at any place in Canada and to bring within the Criminal Code by this legislation now before the House those gentlemen who established racing in Canada and those people who go to the Woodbine race track, Toronto, is to stigmatize the very best citizens of this country who are simply living up to the traditions of their race, to their rights as British subjects and are doing nothing criminal whatsoever that I can see. It is a pretty hard thing and a thing to be considered with some care, this going out of one man to make a rule of life for his fellow, to stigmatize anything that he thinks he does not agree with and to put that fellow within the Criminal Code.

The greatest manifestation of the strength of British political character to my mind in so far as our government is concerned, was in what we call the puritan or the presbyterian, or, if you like, the Protestant idea which developed in England many years ago. This idea was the absolute freedom of the individual, his freedom of conscience, his right not to be dictated to by any one, and the right to make the rule of life for himself. As long as the puritan idea was political, and maintained that liberty things were all right. And the puritan did another thing, he applied his self-denying ordinances to himself, and as long as he did that he was the greatest force in politics, and in morals. But the moment the puritan proposes to make the rule of life for some one else, for you, for me, he transgresses, he abnegates the great position he has, and he becomes somewhat of a tyrant. The strength of British character is shown when the puritan idea is political, and maintains its great principles, when the puritan idea manifests itself by self-control, and self-denial, but the moment it abandons that, and undertakes to regulate the personal conduct of others, it has failed. That is at the bottom of what is happening in this country. A number of people outside of the cities where racing is carried on are asking for this legislation. The cities have not petitioned for this, one-seventh of the population of Canada is in the cities where racing takes place and not a call comes from any of these cities. In other words, outside places are undertaking to dictate the rule of life to the rest of the people in regard to their personal conduct on race-tracks. That is not liberal, that is not British, and, as the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton) said yesterday, there is no moral sanction for any such law when an attempt is made to put it in force in a British country, and you must have a moral sanction behind a law if you wish to vindicate that law.

Mr. MILLER. Is my hon. friend aware that within the last two weeks a meeting of 400 young men of the city of Toronto at which Sir William Mulock was chairman, passed a standing resolution in favour of this Bill?

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. That may have been so, but that is not from the citizens of Toronto.

Mr. MILLER. From 400 of them.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. If they had wished for this we would have heard it here, and I challenge the hon. gentleman, if he wishes to advance this Bill, to bring the people here.

Mr. STRATTON. Toronto's opinion is no criterion.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Toronto is a criterion for its own conduct.

Mr. PROULX. Is the hon. gentleman aware that the grand jury——

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Yes, I am aware of what the grand jury did. What the hon. gentleman wants to do, and is at liberty to do is to regulate his own conduct, and make the law of life for himself, but I wish to be free as a British citizen to make my own rule of conduct, and not to be interfered with in it.

In order to show where the American character begins to differentiate from the British I may say that in the United States they are attempting to abolish betting on race-tracks. It became such a scandal that the legislature had to intervene, and that interference took the drastic form of abolishing it. That course has not succeeded. But there is this difference between the American character, and the British character. In the British character there is a love of liberty, and British institutions are a success. There is a failure in personal liberty in the United States, and the result is that American institutions are called into question. I read a book last year by Captain Lee on 'The Ignorance of Valour,' and the whole lesson of that book is that the Americans no longer have the fighting quality, that if they were to go to war with Japan to-morrow the Americans would be defeated, because they have lost their love of liberty, and largely their military prowess. I have here an extract from another American who has been in England, and studied British institutions. This book is by Mr. Price Collier, and is entitled 'England and the English, from an American point of view.' It is one of the ablest books on the English character, and the condition of things in England that has been written in many years. Mr. Collier is forced to admire the conditions of affairs in England. He says:

> Sitting on the bench at Bow street with the magistrate, I listened all one morning to his disposal of the cases that came before him. It seemed to me when I left that I had known beforehand what would happen. Quarrelsome women and men, mostly through drink; men and children accused of begging; a few cases of assault or resistance to the constable; all of them, hour after hour, dealt with in a good-tempered, paternal sort of way, with appeals to their own sense of what was right. Only the cases where there had been resistance to the constable who represents British law and order, then hard labour and wholesome punishment.

Here is the point:

> Always the same from the King to Bow street. How can we live together amicably, with the utmost freedom for each one? that is the problem. The practical result is—you see it if you have eyes, everywhere you go—a success.

Englishmen are at all times trying to live together and to give each other the greatest freedom and they do give one another the greatest freedom from the King down. Any one in England can go on a race-track and be doing nothing immoral; he need expect no interference from any one else. But we are setting up the doctrine in Canada that in some way it is our duty to interfere with the personal liberty of one another, and exercise some kind of surveillance one over the other. As the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton) said last night, if that is started in this country, if we commence passing such legislation in this House, putting the conduct of one another within the Criminal Code, where is the end? Let us respect the liberties of one another, and maintain those liberties; let us maintain most of all those personal liberties which we have. That ought to be the end and aim of our life in this country, to afford liberty and not to afford restriction. There is nothing to-day that forces any man to go to a race-track and bet. People must learn self-control, and if anybody is unfortunate in going to racetracks he ought to blame himself rather than the law. We ought to educate our people, our young men especially, to avoid betting and control themselves so that they will not fall into such a trap. If a master finds a clerk addicted to race-track betting, he ought to discharge him or speak to him instead of seeking legislation. Betting is good for no one, but if an individual wishes to make a bet on a race-track in connection with a meeting he is attending, I say he is doing nothing immoral, nothing un-British, and there is no reason why his conduct should be stigmatized as being illegal or criminal. In the United States they are confessing a lack of military prowess and confessing that in some way Japan may defeat them if they should go to war, and they are trying to improve character by putting restrictions on it, while at the same time the great public rights and liberties that should be maintained are disappearing, and a government by monopoly worse than any government by aristocracy is growing up in that country. Private rights are going, public rights are going, but the tyranny of the great trusts and corporations is growing, yet at the same time they are trying to stop horse-racing, which is one of the simple amusements of the people.

I shall not take up much more time but may speak a little later on the various propositions as they come up, but I wish to impress if possible both those friendly to the Bill and those opposed to it that a compromise is the way out of the situation. We can reduce races to less than a hundred days in Canada, we can abolish the attendant evils, and then see the result of the experiment. If in the next three or four years the evil of betting, under the proposed amendments, should become flagrant, we may then bring it under the Criminal Code, but I do not think that will be found necessary. I believe in regulation and not in prohibition, and under the proposed amendment, two great interests will not be destroyed as they would be by the Bill of the hon. member for Grey. If that Bill should be adopted, the horse industry would be injured and those who invest money in racing would stand to lose, and a great public sport would be legislated out of existence. There will besides be a disposition on the part of a great many in this country to regulate the conduct of others. I would not like to see anything of that kind. What we require is to preserve personal liberty in every possible way. If there be any grievance, regulate it, but preserve personal liberty, because personal liberty is the foundation of the British character and the secret of the strength of British institutions. When a drastic measure is proposed, when it is proposed to stigmatize a large and respectable section of the community as criminals, there ought to be some kind of moral sanction established to justify that interference, there ought to be some strong public opinion that the thing aimed at is immoral and criminal. I do not know that public opinion is ready to stigmatize the attendance at a race-track as a criminal practice. That is not the case in England. The first gentleman in the empire has been quoted as in some way condemning race meets. I would like to see the hon. member for South Grey quote anything from the eminent personage to show that he was against horse-racing or to betting as an incidental in connection with it. Let me refer to the opinions of another eminent Englishman Lord Rosebery, but before doing so I shall read another short extract from 'Collier's' work on England and the English.

The English common sense comes to the fore again in an attempt to solve this problem. She is old enough to know from experience that the world is still ruled by men, and in all probability will be for a long time to come. She breeds men therefore as strong and simple as she can. In these islands sport is not a dissipation for idlers, it is a philosophy of life. They believe in it as a bulwark against effeminancy and decay.

There is the very statement I was making a short time ago. The Englishman believes in sport as a bulwark against decay and effeminancy. The Duke of Wellington said that Waterloo was won on the Eton cricket ground. The English military reputation has been attained by men which were fond of the horse and addicted to sport. Let me give an incident in connection with Lord Rosebery:

A Congregational minister makes a speech in which he confesses to 'a feeling of bitter humiliation' when he reads that the Prime Minister is the owner of a Derby winner, and stands to win or lose thousands of pounds on the race. Lord Rosebery's attention having been called to this speech by a political opponent, he replies as follows: 'Sir, I am desired by Lord Rosebery to thank you for your letter and its inclosure. He will offer no opinion on the latter, for these matters should be dealt with according to good taste, Christian charity, and knowledge of facts possessed by each person who touches on them.' The letter is signed by the Prime Minister's secretary.

According to Lord Rosebery, Christian charity should be exercised, and we ought not to attempt to stigmatize a man because he happens to own a race-horse and attend a race-meet.

Lord Rosebery is one of the most accomplished Englishmen of the day; he considers it lacking in Christian charity to abuse him for owning and breeding a great race-horse. So do probably more than nine out of ten of his countrymen. From top to bottom of English society, from the Prime Minister to the Yorkshire footballer, sport is almost as much a part of the national existence as eating and drinking.

If there be an evil in connection with sport, let us get rid of it by regulation. And if you regulate horse-racing, as proposed in the amendment, you will introduce nothing improper and do no wrong, and you will not stigmatize decent people as coming within the Criminal Code. I resent the insinuation that my fellow citizens of Ontario, and especially Toronto and the surrounding district, are to be stigmatized and put within the Criminal Code.

Mr. SINCLAIR. Does my hon. friend understand that book-making is in the Criminal Code? He says that every one connected with horse-racing in Ontario is stigmatized by the provisions of this Bill. To whom does he refer?

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. First of all there are my fellow citizens of Toronto who belong to the jockey club. The hon. member from West Toronto (Mr. Osler) is on the executive of that club, so is a senator in the other House. There are other gentlemen on its executive, and who actually bet on the race-track, and if the hon. gentleman's Bill should carry these will be stigmatized as doing something illegal and immoral. Every one who goes on a race-track is stigmatized as guilty of an immoral act. Every one who goes to a race-meet will be so stigmatized.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Yes, especially any man who wishes to bet

Mr. SINCLAIR. I do not so understand the Bill. The only prohibition in the Bill is against the book-maker, not against the bettor. There is no pretense to stigmatize the private individual who chooses to bet. The sportsman who goes to a race and finds another sportsman to bet with him is at liberty to do so. What is made criminal is the book-maker and no ont else.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. On the contrary, eminent personages in this country have been held up to the people as guilty of moral wrong because they attended the Woodbine. I say there was nothing wrong in that. I have no sympathy with people who undertake to make a rule and law of conduct for others. There is a way of reaching this thing as an evil, and I hope to hear an explanation from the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) regarding that letter of his which was read here yesterday. There is a way by which each province can regulate these things. Certainly making acts innocent in themselves criminal is not the way to accomplish anything, and I hope this House will not begin the work of undertaking to regulate the personal conduct of individuals. I appeal to the common sense of the House not to begin this work, but to maintain and preserve personal liberty. Let every man make a rule of life for himself. There is no compulsion on people to go to race-tracks and bet, and there is no reason why their personal liberty should be interfered with, either as regards attending or refusing to attend race-meets. I have had some experience in Ontario of this attempting to make the law of conduct for other people. Take the instance of the Sunday street cars, which excited so much hostility, but which resulted in the people at last winning the right to travel on Sunday. We were then told that we were doing something immoral, that public opinion was against us, that the cars should not be allowed to run on Sundays under any circumstances, but the public will finally gain its end. What we ought to have is not tyranny, but regulation. So I appeal to the common sense of the House to regulate race-meets and not abolish them. I appeal to the House not to interfere with property and private interests, and with such a great industry as horse-breeding.

Mr. J. R. STRATTON (West Peterborough) I had intended last evening making a few observations, but on account of the abrupt way in which the debate closed, I did not feel it was desirable to detain the House at that time. This question has been before the country for a considerable time. I have listened to the speeches of those opposed to this measure; and giving these gentlemen all the credit for the ability they have displayed, which was very great, in my opinion they have been inconsistent in the arguments they put forward. When an hon. gentleman says that public opinion is not in favour of this Bill, I desire to take issue with him. When the hon members for Brandon (Mr. Sifton) and West Northumberland (Mr. McColl) pointed out that public opinion is not in favour of this Bill, I desire to dispute that statement; and I venture to say that my hon. friend who has just sat down (Mr. Maclean) cannot name five newspapers in Ontario which are opposed to the principle of the Bill. On the other hand, I can name dozens which have urged the adoption of this measure, because it is in the right direction, and because great evils have grown up under the present law. My hon. friend from West Northumberland (Mr. McColl) referred to the thieves and other doubtful characters who attend the Toronto and similar exhibitions. Let me point out that the Attorney General of Ontario sends to such large gatherings detectives and others to protect the public. But if the amendment be adopted the very reverse will be the case. The hon. gentleman desires, as far as race-tracks are concerned, to legalize the very causes which attract thugs and thieves to the race-tracks and public exhibitions held from time to time. He referred to the fact that the bookmaker, would be in the same class as the dangerous characters referred to as frequenting large gatherings, so far as access to large assemblages of the public would facilitate the opportunities of his plying his admittedly nefarious occupation. The opponents of the Bill, in the proposed amendment, seek to aid and, if it prevails, will legalize book-making on the race-course. It will license him, it will protect him, while the Bill proposes to do away with the bookmaker, and thus protect those, unable from lack of knowledge or experience of the snares set for them, to protect themselves. Horse-racing, as conducted in Ontario today, can be altered and improved, and a new method adopted by which horse-racing will not be interfered with, but the root of all the evil, the book-maker and book-making, will be abolished. I do not desire to interfere with racing, or the development of the thoroughbred, but I do not believe that it is at all necessary for that purpose to have book-makers on the race-track to rob the public, to contribute to the racing associations, and furnish the purses to be given on the pretext of developing the thoroughbred horse. I do not believe that is at all necessary and consequently I am opposed to any compromise that will have the effect of perpetuating book-making. New York state was referred to by my hon. friend from West Northumberland (Mr. McColl). He pointed to the conditions now existing there and the loss of prestige of the thoroughbred horse owing to the abolition of legalized gambling. Well, there may be a loss of prestige temporarily, there may be a diminution in the value of the thoroughbred as a racer, but there is no reduction in the actual value of the thoroughbred, that I know of, in the state of New York at present. It is not often we look across the line for precedents, but, if we should do so in this case, we would find that the state of New York is not thinking of abolishing their law, but of amending and improving it, so as to make it even more effective than it originally was.

During the Easter vacation I was in New York and took occasion to ask—not the goody goody people, as they are sometimes termed—but men of business whom I met in the financial world—I took occasion to ask them as to the result of the operation of the Hughes law. I asked them was it the goody goody people that were particularly responsible for the passage of that Act. I was informed to the contrary, that of course their moral support was with the Bill, but that the business houses and financial institutions that gave their support most earnestly to the adoption of the Hughes law were those whose influence was behind its adoption; and it was further stated that those who were previously giving their attention to the race-track and losing their money, were now paying their debts, butchers' bills and rents more promptly than they ever did before. If that be the case across the border I think these conditions could be imitated on this side of the line to advantage.

My hon. friend from Hamilton (Mr. Barker) went on to make a comparison between gambling at the race-track and betting on an election. I do not think there is any comparison between the two. If a man desires to make an innocent bet, on the result of an election to show his faith in the candidate of his party, he has all the previous conditions surrounding the candidate to guide him. He is not held up by the book-maker, but banks on his own judgment, founded on his knowledge of the popularity of the candidates, and the local conditions.

If he desires to bet upon that question he is backing up his political faith. Also, he has an opportunity of judging of the merits of the candidates and of the questions and issues before the people. Making an ordinary bet, he makes it under conditions entirely different from those which face the average citizen who goes to the race-track and makes his bet with the book-maker, for that average citizen has but little chance of winning. The hon. member compared the making of a bet with a book-maker and the purchase of stock with a stock-broker. I think there is no comparison whatever. If a man goes into a broker's office and buys stock, he gets what he pays for. He may be mistaken in his judgment as to the value of the stock, or he may buy more than he is able to take care of. But it is only when he fails to pay his debts that the wrong comes in or an injury is done to any other person. The hon. member also referred to life insurance. Again, I say, there is no comparison whatever. The man who takes out life insurance gets what he pays for. The amount is paid to his heirs at his death or to himself at the maturing of the policy, as the case may be. In either case, he has paid for what he gets, and he gets no more than he has paid for. It is true, as one hon. member said early in the debate, that there is more or less of a chance in any business occupation upon which a man may enter. If a man takes up the dry-goods business he may make a mistake in the quantity, quality or selection of the goods he buys. But in every business a man has an opportunity to exercise his own judgment and in making a purchase, he gets what he pays for. Not so when he deals with a book-maker on the race-track.

My hon. friend from Brandon (Mr. Sifton) spoke of what he called the peculiar method adopted for the promotion of social reform as evidenced in this Bill. The hon. member quite approved of the action of parliament in passing the Lord's Day Bill of a few years ago. But I would ask him to point out any single difference of principle between that measure and this. One is in the interest of the public, and so is the other, and if the Lord's Day Bill is right, there is no doubt, in my opinion, that the present Bill is right also. The hon. member (Mr. Sifton) spoke of the thoroughbred horse and its importance to the farmer, and he also mentioned, if I remember right, the Ottawa association as one that had afforded the farmers in the neighbourhood special opportunities for the improvement of their stock by the use of the thoroughbred horse. We know that the farmer does not use the thoroughbred horse to any great extent, and, if what the hon. member says concerning the Ottawa association be correct—and, of course, I fully accept what he says on that subject—it only shows a desire to create in the farmer's mind an impression that the thoroughbred horse can be useful to him. The hon. member for Brandon also said that confiscation of property was involved in the passing of this measure. If there be a confiscation of property in the difference between 10 per cent and 10,000 per cent on the stock of these racing associations, then there may be an appearance of confiscation. But I contend that there is no real confiscation of property by the adoption of this measure. While there may be a depreciation to some extent in the value of a few of the thoroughbred horses throughout the country, there is no other confiscation that can be so recognized. This parliament, or any legislature, does not hesitate for a moment to amend the law affecting any business, but bases its legislation simply upon considerations of the public interest. And nothing is said against their so doing. If the parliament of Canada can reduce to a minimum the evil of book-making from one end of this country to the other by the adoption of this measure, I believe they will be doing something that will be in the right direction, something for which they will have every reason to expect the approval of the overwhelming majority of the people.

My hon. friend from West Northumberland (Mr. McColl) has proposed an amendment, the effect of which would be to legalize race-track gambling in its entirety. He would give to race-track associations a monopoly of the betting on horse-racing in this country. And, while my hon. friend from South York (Mr. W. F. Maclean) is willing to extend the privileges to those who are able to attend the race-meets of the Ontario Jockey Club in Toronto, yet his regard for liberty of action and of speech is not sufficient to cause him to extend this privilege to others who may not be able to attend the race-track. He would confine the privilege to the favoured few who occupy the position and can wear the good clothes necessary to attend the meets of the jockey club, but his attitude is entirely inconsistent in that he desires to take away from the great public the advantages—if they be advantages—of making bets with professional book-makers off the race-track. But in this amendment there would be enormous and manifest advantages to the proprietors of these race-tracks. If this amendment is to be adopted, and there is to be no compromise whatever upon that line, I say the five associations of the province of Ontario should pay to some authority, for the privileges they would enjoy for the monopoly they would enjoy—at least $100,000 per annum. That would be a small license fee indeed for the monopoly of book-making. That $100,000 could be devoted to the development of the Clyde, the Percheron, the Hackney, the French horse, or any of the other breeds of horses that, as the evidence before the committee went to show, would serve a far more useful purpose to this country than the thoroughbred horse. I do not desire to take up time in considering the value of the thoroughbred horse to this country. But while I do not underestimate the value of the thoroughbred, I do say that the evidence before the committee showed that a great majority of those who gave evidence on this subject believed that the thoroughbred horse was not the horse that the farmer desired to have developed, but that they were favourable to the other classes of horses that I have just mentioned.

The hon. member for West Northumberland (Mr. McColl) is willing to prohibit all the evils which the Bill is designed to prohibit, because he accepts and adopts the principle of the Bill by admitting the evils that are known to exist; he is willing to see them abolished, but he is at the same time willing that the root of all the evils on the race-track itself shall be retained by giving racing associations the privileges allowed by the proposed amendment. While the Bill of my hon. friend from South Grey (Mr. Miller) aims to make race-track betting a criminal offence; there must be some way of giving effect to the object aimed at in this Bill, and if there is any other means by which the same results can be effected without making it a criminal offence, then I am perfectly satisfied that such a course should be adopted. But I do not think it is possible for this parliament to allow the conditions to continue that have existed for years throughout this country without giving some relief to the public. There is a strong feeling in favour of this Bill. The hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton) may desire to minimize that feeling. I think I have as good opportunities for gathering the state of public opinion as any one, and I think that seventy-five per cent of the people of Canada are in favour of this Bill. If a vote were polled to-day in the province of Ontario, eighty per cent of the people would vote for the principle of this Bill, that is, the prohibition of book-making and race-track gambling; and I think that the other clauses of the Bill are also necessary. My hon. friend, in his amendment, desires to make it a crime upon the street or in any other place where book-makinig may be carried on; but where the lambs are all gathered together, where the public are assembled, there he is willing to see them fleeced. He is willing to allow the book-maker to have his privilege, and the racing association have their advantages and to be taken care of, as we know they have been taken care of, sneaking sarcastically, in the past. We do know that if the privileges are given to the racing association that the amendment proposes to give them, instead of book-makers contributing to the racing association $150 a day, they will be asked to contribute over $200, because the advantages to the association would be so great that they with the monopoly provided in the amendment would not, from a business point of view, forego the opportunity. If I am not incorrectly informed, the associations had intended before this legislation was proposed in the very near future, perhaps this season, to increase the price of privileges to the book-makers. The amendment recognizes all the evils that the promoters of the Bill have pointed out, and they are willing that these evils shall be wiped away. So far so good. But if I understand the Bill, and the shape the amendment has taken in the last clause, it is an amendment to wipe out all the advantages that the Bill would otherwise confer. For example, clause 2 says that the prohibition shall not extend to bets between individuals. Is not a book-maker an individual? Of course he is, and betting would go on to the same extent as it would under the present law.

Mr. McCOLL. The promoters of the Bill emphatically state that it is not meant to prohibit private betting, which I understand to be bets between individuals. In other words, a man who had a reputation as a book-maker in the United States could come here and start operations as a private individual. How are you going to make a distinction?

Mr. STRATTON. Under the Bill of my hon. frienl from South Grey, he would not be able to carry on private betting to any considerable extent, but if this amendment is adopted it is sufficiently wide to enable book-makers to do all the business they desire to do. I think that would be found to be the case, and that they would be able to drive a coach and four through this Bill, as they have done in the case of other legislation. Again the amendment says:

Any constable may take into custody, without warrant, any person found committing an offence under this section, and may seize and detain any article liable to be forfeited under this Act.

You might as well say that any constable on the Kingston road may take into custody, without warrant, any person, because if the person is carrying on betting outside, then he can be taken and carried off unceremoniously to prison. That is what my hon. friend advocated a moment ago. But if the individual is inside the track, if he has the advantage of the law so that he may get inside the racing inclosure, then he is free and is at liberty to carry on betting to the fullest extent. I am absolutely opposed to the amendment. I think it kills the principle of the Bill, and I think the desire of the House is that we should adopt the principle of the Bill. I think it is the duty of this parliament to afford the people the protection to which they are entitled. We are not interfering with the rights of anybody further than is necessary in the public interest, even though the Bill went to the fullest extent desired by its most ardent supporters. I believe it should be adopted, and that by doing so we would be meeting the wishes of the vast majority of the people of Canada. I care not whether the Bill has been advocated by the Lord's Day Alliance, or by certain clergymen, or whether petitions have been sent in. We do know that this House was flooded with petitions at the commencement of the session. We are all able to judge of their value. But for us to say that there is no public sentiment in favour of the Bill is a mistake, and any hon. gentleman will deceive himself if he entertains that opinion. There is a strong public sentiment in favour of it, there is a strong feeling throughout the country that something should be done to protect the innocent, to protect those who are unable to protect themselves. I will not quote to you the remarks of clergymen with regard to gambling upon the race-track; but I think that one of the most powerful sermons ever delivered against race-track gambling was the opinion expressed by the famous Silent Smith who died in Pittsburg a year or two ago, and who had accumulated about $3,000,000 in gambling. This is what he said on his death bed:

Race-track gambling is as insidious as the most powerful drug, gradually developing as if the victim was not strong enough to resist the temptation. Few people have the ability to be successful on the track. The best evidence he could give of that was that he could count on the fingers of one hand those men who, in the past century, had made money out of race-track gambling.

He said further that:

He would welcome the laws that would prevent the youth of the land spending money and energy in following the ponies.

So, we have from one who followed the race-track for years, who knew what the advantages, and disadvantages of it were, and who made large sums of money for himself in connection therewith, this dying statement. This parliament has a duty to perform in the interest of the youth of the land, and that is to adopt legislation which will guard them from the risks that are surrounding them in connection with race-track betting. One of the greatest horse figures in the United States—Keene, who spent more money upon his horse stables than perhaps any other man in the world, over half a million a year, made a statement upon this subject, and what did he say? Betting is not necessary to horse-racing and that he had never placed a bet on a horse. The Agnew Bill in the state of New York is being backed up by the public sentiment of the state, and the opposition to this Bill which has only developed is being worked up by those who are particularly interested in opposing that legislation, just as an effort is being made to create a feeling around this building hostile to this measure, because it is claimed that it will interfere with the development of the thoroughbred horse. I do not believe anything of the kind. I believe that the thoroughbred horse will be fostered just as successfully in the future as he has been in the past because the evidence that came before the committee showed conclusively that that development had not been as rapid as could have been desired especially in view of the alleged benefits of fifty years racing in Canada, and evidence of which was the fact that when the Boer war broke out they could not obtain in Canada the quality and quantity of horses that the British army required. For my part, I am in favour of the measure now before the House, and I hope that the parliament of Canada will see its way to place upon the statute-book a law that will give protection to our citizens, and that protection which is absolutely essential. If other countries can adopt legislation such as this, the parliament of Canada should meet the wishes of the people in so far as this measure goes, and I believe that by adopting this Bill it will be meeting the wishes of the people.

Mr. D. A. LAFORTUNE (Montcalm). (Translation). Mr. Speaker, before dealing at length with what was said in the course of yesterday's debate as to the subject now under discussion, I may be allowed to briefly refer to some statements just made by the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Stratton). The hon. gentleman expressed an opinion as to the usefulness of the thoroughbred. He acknowledged in passing that he did not know very much about the matter. That was apparent, that was evident. I take his word when he says that he has no extensive knowledge as regards the thoroughbred. Farmers, he says, are not fond of the thoroughbred. Of course they are right in preferring another type if they want a horse only to hitch to the plough or to draw heavy loads. In that case, I would agree with the hon. gentleman and admit that for such work the thoroughbred is not suitable. But, there is some other use to which the thoroughbred can be put on farms; and I speak advisedly when I say so. To back up that statement I have my own personal experience covering twenty-five years, during which I have had the pleasure, not to say the advantage—as it comes rather high—of taking an interest in farming matters, and I invite the learned members to visit my stables, wherein he will find thoroughbreds of some value.

The farmer, it is said, has a dislike for the thoroughbred, I have just stated the reason. However, in order to make myself clear. I shall further say that the thoroughbred is useful for the improvement of heavy breeds of horses, such as the Ardennais, the Hackneys, the Normans, and the Percherons. We even have to-day Brabansons which are too slow, too heavy to be profitably put on the road. But the Brabansons, as well as the Percherons and the Normans, are great breeds of horses which should be improved, made lighter by crossing them with the thoroughbred.

The thoroughbreds are small, it is urged. Yes, but they are full of stamina; and when desirous of improving our heavy draught breeds, we are very careful to cross them with thoroughbreds which are the means of bringing about a happy medium, that is of breeding horses which can be used on the roads or in the fields without breaking through, as do the Norman, the Percheron, or the Brabanson. Whenever such heavy horses have to be put to work in the fields before the surface is settled down, they injure the sod in meadows and pastures by sinking knee deep into the ground, and besides they are liable to break down fences and gateways, while the thoroughbred goes clean over them without causing any damage.

In the province of Quebec the 'National Breeders' Association' offers fine stallions which have cost a good deal of money. Henceforth, we have no use for any others. On the other hand the owner of a thoroughbred mare which has been imported at considerable cost, will not breed that mare to a thoroughbred, but to a horse of a heavier type, so as to obtain a progeny which may be of service at all kinds of work, whether on the road or in the field. Besides, they may occasionally be sold at high prices, on account of the qualities developed in them by judicious breeding. Such is my answer to the hon. member for Peterborough who has just stated that we have no use for the thoroughbred.

Formerly we dispensed with automobiles, with electric traction, telephone and telegraph lines and even railways. That recalls to my mind an old-timer in my constituency who was averse to the building of a railway line to Montreal; of course that line was built in spite of his opposition, but he would never travel by it, because it had been built by Liberals. He persisted in using exclusively his old grey nag. Those are errors of judgment, exaggerations unworthy of attention. But when we are met by a man who proposes legislating on the lines inidicated and inserting in the Criminal Code a provision such as we find in the Bill under discussion, it is up to us to call a halt.

I have had the honour of being Crown prosecutor for some years past, in the largest judicial district of the province of Quebec. Well, since I have been acting in the above capacity, taking a hand in the administration of justice, especially in connection with criminal cases in Montreal, for a few years back not a single case, not a single complaint of the character referred to has been brought up in court. The hon. member for Cape Breton (Mr. Maddin) stated last evening in my hearing that, while attending the sittings of the police court in Montreal last autumn, he had been struck by the large number of arraignments. Well, I may say to that gentleman that at any of the sittings he might witness a similar condition of things; but these arraignments are not the outcome of the racing going on at the Jockey Club or at Delorimier park. Presently I shall give the names of the people making up the Montreal Jockey Club and the Delormier Park Association, and the House will be surprised to find that the list comprises men of the highest standing and perfectly well posted as regards proper administrative methods and public morals.

There are crimes in quite sufficient numbers definied by the common and the statutory law and entailing various penalties; and when I hear the hon. member for Grey requesting the House to still add to the list of criminal offences and prohibit race-track betting, it is time that a stop be put to such legislation.

It is quite useless for him to come to Montreal and proclaim such principles, or to call public meetings in the hope of obtaining support. I understand he succeeded in getting together in Toronto four hundred young men, without any experience of life, ignorant of what is in the best interest of the country, and even that has been effected only by means of much publicity. I am surprised that more people should not have responded to the call in that fine city of Toronto, Canada's queen city, as it is sometimes called, though improperly to my mind. That shows that the Bill is not a popular one, for in our province whenever a popular measure is being discussed, instead of four hundred boys, thousands of people will congregate.

The hon. member has made reference to public opinion. Well, I have just stated what is going on in Montreal. I live in close proximity, within the county of Jacques Cartier. I regret that the member for that constituency (Mr. Monk) who has a great concern in that question, is away. I hope he will be back before this debate is over, otherwise, when he appeals to his constituents at the next election, we shall make it a matter of serious reproach for him. He is very well posted and has had a long experience in these matters, and no doubt he would have seconded the amendment which the committee has under discussion. His absence then is the more to be regretted on that account.

Mr. PAQUET. (Translation). Is the hon. gentleman aware that the member for Jacques Cartier is seriously ill, and that his absence has no other cause.

Mr. LAFORTUNE. (Translation). I was not aware of that, and must apologize. I hope he will soon recover, and come back in good health and good disposition.

I was just saying, Mr. Speaker, that the Montreal Jockey Club has its grounds in the county of Jacques Cartier, within the limits of the finest parish in the province, that of St. Laurent, where I have my home. That association has spent up to date a million dollars on its race track. I was proud last autumn, when the opening took place under the patronage of His Excellency the Governor General, to witness the assembling there of more than one hundred thousand people. What a fine sight it was! The best and finest people in the province were in attendance, and in particular beautiful women. And everything went on without any unpleasantness whatever. Notice, Mr. Speaker, that as is always the case, perfect order reigned throughout. There are policemen on the grounds who have an eye on strangers coming and going; as regards the Montreal people, who are all good citizens, such measures are unnecessary; but in order to ensure greater safety, and lest some one might act improperly, the association have policemen on the grounds in sufficient numbers to prevent or counteract any wrong doing.

It is a day of rejoicing for the farming community; it is a festival of agriculture. Before long, I shall request my leaders to set apart a day as the festival of agriculture, 'farmer's day.' No such day has yet been set apart. Professional men, labour men, have their day; the farming community alone is without a day set apart in honour of their calling, which is the finest under the sun. That request I shall not make just now, but at the next session, and mind you it will have to be granted. I let that stand as a notice of motion for next session.

The hon. gentleman's reference to public sentiment recalled to my memory certain utterances of our opponents on another question. They stated that public opinion was entirely against us and would bring about our downfall. As evidence, they pointed to petitions bearing a great many signatures and laid before the House. I cannot say very much about the petitions in favour of this Bill. I do not know what signatures they bear, but what I do know is that very often such petitions are signed injudiciously, by routine without paying any attention at all, and more than anything else, to please the person who takes the petition around. Several of the petitions which were sent with reference to the Naval Bill had been forwarded from my constituency. On looking into them, I found that the signatures were all in the same handwriting. I made inquiries from several of my friends who answered, 'We never signed our names to that petition.' 'But,' I would say, 'I saw your names on the document.' 'Well,' they would answer, 'it was put there by my son, my daughter or my wife.' Of late, when people made inquiries to me about the Miller Bill, they would ask: 'Mr. Lafortune, is that Mr. Miller who is circulating a Bill for the purpose of sending every body and soul to jail, the same man wanted to prevent trains from circulating on Sunday?'—'I do not know, but they read pretty much the same.' 'Is he the same man who wished to prevent us from going out on Sundays—'I do not know, but it looks like it; the principles involved are alike.'

If we were to insert in the criminal code provisions against all those who are guilty of wrong-doing, what great number of lawyers and judges would we not need! Even now it is a difficult matter to secure judges for the settlement of business and other lawsuits of importance. Indeed, many judges would be required to dispose of criminal cases, should we undertake to put a stop to all abuses, wrong-doing and to restrain all those who live beyond their means. That might give me a chance of being appointed a judge before long.

No, public opinion is sounder than that; public opinion has matters of greater importance with which to concern itself. I do not wish to be in any way offensive or disrespectful towards the learned gentlemen who support the Bill. But let me say this to them: You should, it appears to me, in the interest of the country, in the interest of your electors, busy yourselves otherwise than originating new criminal offences. Crimes are not like mushrooms which develop in the course of a few hours. New crimes should not be imagined in connection with everything. Otherwise, what shall prevent you from legislating against betting on lacrosse grounds. Young men who attend lacrosse matches, who bet large sums on baseball or hockey matches, should also in that case be called to account, prohibited from attending such games, or spending their money in such fashion. Then, why should they not be restrained from going to the theatre, where they have to disburse from five to ten dollars when in company with young ladies? All such expenditure is objectionable. Then, would it not be proper to prevent people from providing themselves with automobiles! Formerly, carts were the great means of travel, while nowadays rubber tires are considered a necessity. If I were permitted to speak out, I would take the right hon. Prime Minister to task for having promoted the welfare of the country. After all, he is to blame if people spend so much today; people are in a position to spend on account of the general prosperity and instead of being surprised at the spending of a few dollars on the race tracks, one should express astonishment were the contrary to occur.

I heartily concur in the remarks made by the hon. member for York (Mr. Maclean). Possibly it is the first time that I agree with him, but I hope it will not be the last. Come along and join in with us, Mr. Maclean, join in with the Liberals who are opposed to these proposals which you rightly condemn.

It is urged that the inserting of this clause in the Criminal Code will not in any way affect the race-track. Well, let us see how it would work out in the case of the Montreal Jockey Club, for instance. There are one hundred thousand spectators assembled on the grounds. On a sudden, ten or twelve policemen appear at the meet and proceed to make arrests. You may be sure that racing will not be continued very much longer. Tumult, trouble, a stampede possibly will ensue. The wives and daughters of those attending will feel uneasy; children will take fright. They would be the first to say: Let us no longer go to see the races to be witnesses of such squabbles and excitement. You may be sure that under such circumstances racing would soon be a thing of the past; race meets would be abolished.

Evidently, these hon. gentlemen have never been on the race-track. At any rate, they have never attended race meets; or they would have been highly gratified at the way things are managed and amusement provided for them. Had the hon. member for Grey (Mr. Miller) been at these race meets, he would not have introduced that Bill. It is the best of sports. English-speaking people are those who show the greatest enthusiasm for such amusements in our country; they are always in the lead. the first to get there, the freest spenders, ever ready to contribute ten, twenty or thirty dollars whenever we Canucks contribute one. They are always in the lead whenever sports are concerned. Racing is the best of our sports, and that is why we propose voting down this Bill. I am satisfied that if I voted in favour of this Bill, my constituents would never send me back to parliament; the people would no longer have any use for me as their representative, and that is a risk I do not like to take, as I am beginning to appreciate my present occupation.

Talk of wrong-doing! Inquire from public men, politicians on either side of the House, those who occupy seats here and those who are intent of recapturing their old constituencies, and all will say: I have been ruined by politics; I have lost all I had; I am a poor man, I was rich when I entered parliament, but I have spent all I had in political campaigning. Now, should we prevent these people from going into politics? They are impoverishing their families, ruining their health; oftentimes at the close of their political career, they are obliged to apply for a position, not always positions on the bench, but others less exalted. I have, say they, sacrificed myself for the good of the country in the public interest: I have neglected my dearest interests; give me a position which will enable me to support myself and my family for the remainder of my life. The next proposal which I think the hon. member for Grey should take up, after getting this Bill through the House, should be one towards prohibiting men from engaging in politics and thereby impoverishing themselves and their families. The principle is the same in both cases.

Mr. PROULX. (Translation). You would not send them to jail?

Mr. LAFORTUNE. (Translation). Certainly; every law should have a sanction. In case of a criminal offence. imprisonment is in order. Do you know of any criminal law that is not enacted under pain of imprisonment?

Mr. PROULX. (Translation). But there are people who have been sent to jail as a result of having lost money on the race track.

Mr. LAFORTUNE. (Translation). And there are many who should be in jail, though they are still free.

At one o'clock, committee took recess.

Committee resumed at three o'clock.

Mr. LAFORTUNE. (Translation). Mr. Speaker, at recess, I was contending that public opinion which our learned opponents are representing as being on favour of this Bill, is rather in my humble opinion, opposed to it. Public feeling cannot lend itself to giving effect to such personal views in regard to restricting individual freedom, whose defenders those learned gentlemen profess themselves to be.

Let us not interfere with individual liberty. It is an entirely different matter when we are called upon to legislate concerning trade, for instance, or any other matter relating to society in general. Thus when the government submitted an Act in regard to Sunday observance, it was a general law, applicable to all provinces and to all classes of society. However, many persons took exception to that measure as being an encroachment on individual liberty. The majority of the House declared that law necessary; but people went so far as to try to put a stop to amusements within the family circle and to prevent young people from indulging in moderate, honest and intelligent relaxation. However, that Act for the better observance of the Lord's Day had its good points, and I was favourable to the principle of the law, although I did not approve of its rigour.

But in the present case, as I listened to the learned gentleman who preceded me (Mr. Stratton) pointing out as he did to the impoverishment of families through losses sustained by many on the race-track, I was tempted to turn around and ask: What about those who gamble on stocks? What about those who buy stock which is never delivered to them? What about those business places where numbers of our young men speculate on stocks, and ruin themselves and oftentimes their families? You do not propose introducing legislation with a view to restricting such transactions. And I heard the hon. gentleman stating: There is no comparison possible between gambling on stocks and gambling on the race-track. Well, I think he is right in stating that there is no comparison possible between the two, inasmuch as stock gambling is much the worse evil of the two. Those who go in for betting on the race-track are not guilty of one-hundredth part of the wrong-doing for which gamblers in stock are responsible. Nevertheless, should there be introduced to-morrow a Bill to prohibit stock gambling, that hon. gentleman would be the first to protest and say: You are encroaching on individual freedom, you are interfering with trade and every day transactions. I might victoriously reply to that hon. gentleman that there is no comparison possible. The farming comumnity, those who take an interest in farming and particularly those who go in for breeding, have a right to the protection of the law. It is contended that this Bill will not interfere with the breeders' business, with the farmers' opportunities. Whereupon I answer to my learned friends that they are astray in their contention that by prohibiting what is now being carried on in an honest, regular and rational way, the breeder's business, which is of interest to us, will not be interfered with.

Wherever racing is being carried on, betting should be allowed, and if betting between individuals only is allowed, and no middlemen permitted to take in the bets, what will become of the money put up in bets? I have some experience in this connection, and I say that if you do away with book-making, you render betting impossible. The money put up in betting will go into the hands of strangers, of irresponsible people, and when the meet is over, it will be found that they are flown. In order to recover the money, recourse to the law courts will be necessary, and a great deal of trouble will be in sight. Betting under such conditions would not be possible, all must agree as to that. Whoever has any experience at all in sporting matters will not say otherwise. As is well known, owners of race-tracks farm out the privilege of book-making to specialists and that is a fair and legitimate way of providing the funds to be given out in prizes.

What was it that induced thousands and thousands of people to gather for last autumn's race meet at Montreal? What was it that drew there 1,500 horses, a good number of which were from across the boundary? What was it, if not the prizes that were offered? Do you think a man in Philadelphia, or New York—there were even one in Los Angeles—would spend large sums to send horses to these race meets, if the stakes were only small sums? Even then, these race horse owners should not be looked at in the light of mere speculators; they send their horses at a loss. They do so for the benefit of the farming community, and in most cases they get only a very small proportion of their outlay. Is it fair that such men be subjected to the treatment meted out by this Bill? They spend large sums to promote the breeding of horses on right lines, and the farming community is benefited thereby. I trust, therefore, that the House will sound the death knell of that Bill and will turn down the proposal of these gentlemen, whose only concern is to originate new criminal offences, and that we will hear nothing more of such theories.

Sir, no good reason can possibly be put forward in support of these contentions. Some latitude should be granted to human nature in selecting amusements, and these cannot be had free of cost. In the same way, the acquirement of learning does not go without fees. Those who attend race meets an engage in betting, acquire experience and that has to be paid for. From what these hon. gentlemen say, one might infer that all are losers at that game. Surely, there must be winners, and who are are they? Book-makers get rich, it is claimed. Of course there are winners in that class, but there are also losers. The money I lose in bets goes into the pockets of the fellow who bet against me, barring the amount of a commission of ten per cent generally, which goes to the middleman. That is all the profit the latter gets out of the bettors. On the other hand, the book-maker, who is a dealer in bets, a buyer and seller of bets on the horses listed to run, is himself a loser occasionally. He sells horses for first, second or third place, and that horse may come out last, in which case we immensely enjoy taking in his dollars, which you may rest assured, we have no thought of returning to him the day following.

I hear the hon. member for Prescott state that the book-maker is not often disappointed. I infer from it that the hon. gentleman has never been on a race-track. Let him come to our meet and he will find out that everything is done honestly, that there is no fraud.

Hon. gentlemen seems to think that there are no means devised towards protecting the individual and putting down abuses. But legal gentlemen who are well up in the knowledge of civil rights and procedure, should not lose sight of those enactments specially designed to protect the individual, whether he be a young man or a father of family, against his own excesses in the matter of gambling or drinking. Have we not such a thing as the privation of civil rights and the family council? If it is shown to the courts that so and so is a spendthrift, a gambler at cards, a drunkard, a too easy-going fellow, a family council may at once be summoned and consulted as to the desirability of interdicting the gentleman and providing him with a curator or judiciary council, whose duty it will be to prevent him from extravagant spending. Now it is proposed to have this parliament take the matter in hand and deprive of his civil rights the spendthrift, the gambler, the prodigal. Well, I protest against parliament assuming jurisdiction in matters of this kind. I say parliament has not the right to brand any one as a prodigal before his relatives have had their say in the matter. I say that such a course would be an encroachment on individual liberty. I say you have not the right to deal with Canadian citizens as if they were spendthrifts, and restrain their freedom of action without conforming to the rules of procedure enacted by the various provinces of the Dominion. Whenever we are called upon to deal with a prodigal, but not of the most pronounced type, we deprive him in part only of his civil rights, by appointing a judiciary council to prevent him from living in an extravagant manner or spending too freely. Such are the means provided by law to restrain improvident and reckless people.

Sir, the learned gent who preceded me stated—and I was sorry to hear him say so—: in this connection we prefer following the provisions of the United States law, to following those of the British law. We take after the people of the United States; as to the British enactment, as to the legislation in force in the mother country, they say, we have no use for it. Is that sound reasoning? To my mind it is a criminal offence, a crime which should be made punishable under our laws, a crime of high treason to thus follow the lead of our neighbours, without paying any attention to what is being done in Great Britain. A Mr. Hughes has been mentioned. I am not acquainted with him, though he may be a very honest man. But I prefer following the legislation in force in the British empire. In support of a bad case, people are apt to make use of every means, good or bad. After centuries of British rule, one should know a thing or two.

I listened with pleasure and a great deal of attention to the statements made last evening by the ex-minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton). I have never heard anything more precise and indicative of so great ability and experience. He gave us the whole thing in a nutshell. His arguments are uncontrovertible, and no attempt was made to answer them. The hon. gentleman who hails from those vast territories which are the hope of the Dominion, has Canadian interests at heart. It cannot be said of him that he is a race track gambler or that he has any kind of interest in racing associations. He gave us his word that he never gambled or engaged in betting, and nobody will doubt his word. His opinion should be given still greater weight, seeing that it is wholly disinterested.

Reference has been made to insurance policies, and the hon. gentleman who made such reference contended that the policy-holder gets back only what he paid. Such is not always the case. The policy-holder is not always in that position, as I shall endeavour to show. Take for instance the case of a life insurance policy. The policyholder dies after having paid his first premium and his heirs get a considerable amount of money which the company is bound to pay. Then take the case of a fire insurance policy. The owner of the building insures it for a large amount. The next day, the building is destroyed by fire, and he gets a lot of money, after paying in a small premium only. Will it be contended that in such cases the insured gets back merely what he had disbursed? However such agreements are considered legal, although they imply a contingency, although their outcome is uncertain, hazardous, in the same as with race-track betting. You bet on a horse expecting he will come out first, and very often he comes out last. You are the loser, but some one else is a winner.

My learned friends spoke of the usefulness of the thoroughbred. It is a well known fact among farmers and breeders generally, that thoroughbreds are high-priced horses. They are not plentiful, require much training, and cost a great deal to their owners. On the other hand the latter expect to obtain a handsome price for them.

Within the last twenty years governments have spent large sums towards promoting breeding. The Minister of Agriculture, agricultural lecturers, co-operative associations, farmers' clubs, agricultural societies have all in turn advocated better breeding methods, and the improvement of live stock, especially of horses. For several years past, a large number of thoroughbreds have been imported to cross with Canadian horses. Thereby, we have succeeded in bringing about a considerable improvement in our breeds of horses. And when these hon. gentlemen contend that it is possible to continue that work of improvement independently of racing, let me answer that, in my humble opinion, that is not possible. Neither is it possible to provide for the upkeep of a race-track solely by means of entrance fees an contributions forthcoming occasionally from individuals or agricultural associations in connection with the meets. That has been attempted in every county throughout Canada. The idea is not a new one. An effort was made at large agricultural fairs to run the show by means of entrance fees alone, and to be content with a few races comprising only a small number of entries, but that always resulted in a failure. On the other hand, how have matters been improved? Success has been attained by acting in co-operation with the management of large associations. In conjunction with agricultural fairs and ploughing matches, we have arranged to have racing, and the owners of these race-tracks have contributed hundreds of dollars. How did these gentlemen come to be in a position to do so? Simply through the association realizing profits, and being on that account prosperous enough to help us. Farmers benefit thereby. The passing of this Bill would inflict heavy losses on those who interest themselves in the improvement of horse-breeding. What would be gained by ruining these men? What would become of these associations who contribute towards the improvement of agricultural methods, the desirability of which is acknowledged by all? Representatives of the people who are desirous of promoting the welfare and the development of the country should not hesitate a single moment to vote against this Bill.

The question has been asked whether or not such a measure would be easy of enforcement. I am now speaking as if the Bill was to pass, although I do not think it will be voted by the House; but, admitting that it will pass, will it be an easy matter to enforce its provision? I have had some experience in the matter, having practised law for the last thirty years. I have always been concerned with my professional duties, and was deemed worthy of being appointed Crown prosecutor in my district. For the last four years, I have been acting in that capacity. Numbers of cases of all kinds have been brought up in the meantime, and having that experience, which should count for something, I say without hesitation that it would be absurd to pass such a law, to make betting a criminal act, to deal with bettors as if they were scoundrels and criminals, and that you will fail in getting a jury to condemn people charged with such an offence. Jurymen as a rule are respectful of authority, but they are free and independent men, and called upon as they are to decide as to the fact independently of the law, they will be averse to returning a verdict against that man, large amounts will have been expended in vain, public morals, public interests, nobody in fact being benefited thereby. I say: no, that cannot be. You will not submit that citizen to such vexatious and useless annoyance. Besides, in doing so, you would not attain your object. Your charges would be met by denials and counter charges against the accuser. The putting in our statute-books of such an enactment far from giving security to citizens, would result merely in an expenditure of public funds to the injury of the accused.

Abuses have been alleged; instances have been cited of people who have spent extravagant amounts in betting, or of others who have in consequence committed thefts. That puts me in mind of scenes often witnessed at sittings of the criminal courts; and I may be allowed to recall them to the hon. member who made use of that argument, at the same time that I appeal to the experience of those who know what is the general run of things at such sessions. Let us take the case of a bankrupt. His liabilities aggregate a large amount; he is called upon to explain how it is that, having a few months previously submitted a balance-sheet showing a rather large surplus, he is now confronted with such a deficit. That man is chary of telling the truth. He does not like the idea of admitting that he has obtained advances from his creditors under false pretenses. He deos not like to say that he was stock gambling, that his expenditure exceeded his revenue, that through speculations he lost money, that his wife has been spending the season at summer resorts in the midst of great luxury, spending freely, or that he has made a trip to Europe when he had not the means of doing so. He will say: I lost money betting on horses. Why does he give such an excuse? Because he is well aware that nobody is in a position to verify his statement, or to find out with whom he engaged in betting. It is the same with those who conceal stolen goods: invariably, they say they have bought the goods from a fellow passing on the street, and whom they do not know. That is the answer always in stock. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, whenever a man has something to hide, some wrongdoing to conceal, some crime to cover up, his last resource is always to say: I have been gambling on the race-track. That is what makes me suspicious of the evidence taken before the committee. Of course, such an excuse may be accepted for once; but when a man says: I have been a regular gambler, I have lost my money betting on the race-track, I say such a man should not ask the government to protect him. His relatives should see to it that he leads a less extravagant life, should see to it that he be, if necessary, interdicted, or provided with a judiciary council.

The instances brought forward by my hon. friends are of an exceptional nature and have not been made the subject of any subject to any special inquiry. They are of such an extraordinary nature that we are warranted in doubting, I do not say the word of those hon. gentlemen, but the truth of the statements of those who represent themselves as victims of such misfortunes, incorrectly so, to my mind. That is the excuse of all those who have not the courage to acknowledge in what way they lost their fortune, in what way they courted ruin and failure.

That suggests another thought to me. How is it that the French laws which were kept in force at the time of the conquest, how is it that the civil code of the province of Quebec contain provisions permitting gambling and betting on the race-track? Supposing that Bill amending the Criminal Code should come into force, I wonder which of the two would supersede the other? Would precedence be given in this connection to the Dominion law which prohibits such a deed under penalty and imprisonment? But that would not change the provision of the provincial law or of the civil code which allow racing and even grant the right of recovering before the law courts the amount of any deposit made in that connection. Here then we have a subject of His Majesty governed by a double set of laws, under two jurisdictions. Under the one, he may have to appear before the criminal court; under the other he has the right to institute a civil action. Under sections 227 and following of the Criminal Code, that man may be arraigned before the courts of criminal jurisdiction, and penalized in consequence, while under the law of our province, he may enter a lawsuit before the civil courts against the party failing to make good a bet. I do not think that is a very enviable position to be in. It is downright encroachment. That shows how dangerous it is to introduce measures of that kind, to declare applicable to the whole of Canada such provisions, because abuses have cropped up at Toronto or Vancouver. I am in a position to state that not a single case of that sort has been brought to the knowledge of the authorities in my province.

I have not time just now to give the names of the men who compose that fine association of the Montreal Jockey Club and the Delormier Park Association. I shall have an opportunity later on to refer once more to that, and to acquaint the House with the men who are at the head of those great associations we are so proud of. But when I see an enactment of that kind on the point of being inserted in our statutes, I say it is time we should cry out to the promoters of such a Bill: Stop, you are on the wrong track, you are proposing a law which should not be passed. I hope the time is not far when the movers of such proposals, and their partisans, will find out that the majority is not disposed to subserve the ambitions and aims of a few men madly desirous of reforming others, though it would be in order for them to start by reforming themselves.

The evidence taken before the committee has been referred to. Mention has been made of a most distinguished gentleman, possessed of wide experience. Extracts have been quoted from the evidence of Dr. McEachern, who formely lived in Montreal and who now resides in Chateauguay county. It was a matter of surprise to me to hear the hon. member for Grey (Mr. Miller) state that Dr. McEachern approved of his Bill. The evidence show the contrary to be the truth. I state to the House, under my responsibility as one of its members, that the evidence given by Dr. McEachern is in direct condemnation of this Bill. I have gone over all his statements with great care. Dr. McEachern is well known in Montreal. He is a typically honest, conscientious and able man, possessed with wide experience, sensible, distinguished and considered by all. Well, I take Dr. McEachern's own evidence, as being in direct condemnation of the proposal brought forward by my learned opponent. I say that there is enough in such evidence to bury out of sight the Bill now under discussion.

I regret, though not for the sake of the House who may think I have spoken at too great a length, but for the sake of my hon. friends, that I should have to cut short my remarks. However, let them not lose courage, as I have much more yet in store for them. I ask to be permitted to resume my seat until I am given another opportunity to speak again.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. We are now well into the sixth month since the session opened, and I am sure that every one is anxious to see it come to a close. The government have yet many important measures to deal with. The House has been occupied with this Bill for two days, and we are still considering the first clause. In these circumstances I shall try to be as brief as possible and, if I can, to go straight to what seems to me to be the point of the matter for consideration. We have had upon the statute-book now for eighteen years and more our present law, the salient feature of which in regard to this particular matter at any rate is that it excepts from the operation of the section with regard to book-making, bets made on the race-course of an incorporated association during the actual progress of a race-meeting. I suppose we must take it that that law has been found by experience not to work satisfactorily because this House, I assume, has by passing the second reading of this Bill, and by carrying the motion to resolve ourselves into Committee of the Whole, adopted the principle that our present law is unsatisfactory, and that some change ought to be made in it. The question then for consideration now is what change we ought to make, and by the motion which was made at the rising of the committee last night we have presented an alternative proposition to that which the special committee in this case has recommended. The feature of the work of the special committee, I take it, has been that they have struck out altogether in the proposed legislation the clause which in the existing law protects bets made during a race-meeting upon the race-track of an incorporated association. Having done that advisedly, having done that because they thought that change ought to be made, they propose to further that effort by altering the definition of a common betting place which appears in the earlier clauses of the Bill. As against the Bill drawn in that way the alternative which is proposed by the amendment is that we adopt, with a modification, the present English law, and I must say at once, so far as I am concerned, looking at it I suppose from the standpoint of a lawyer, that to my mind there is no comparison between the language of the draughtsmen, and the method which is used in these two efforts to get at the same result. The English Bill might almost be called a model of skilful legislation. It was prepared, it is said, by the late Lord Davey, and mentioning his name is sufficient to every lawyer to remind him of one of the greatest lawyers who ever practised, or who ever adorned the English bench. The object of that Bill is accomplished in the fewest possible words, and in clear and distinct language by which exactly what is aimed at is struck, and a result reached about which I venture to think there is no room for doubt. As between the work of preparation, and as between the practical working of the two Bills, if it were a question of either being in operation, I feel satisfied there is every element of superiority in the English Bill over the one which has been reported by the committee, and which I think I may without disparagement refer to as the Yankee Bill, because it assumes to have adopted the same means to reach the desired ends which have been adopted in some of the states of the American union. For that reason I certainly would prefer the amendment which has been proposed to the report of the subcommittee itself.

There is just one other thing I ought to say in that regard. My hon. friend from South Grey (Mr. Miller) read yesterday a letter I had written to him some two months ago on this subject. I certainly have no objection to his putting the letter on the pages of 'Hansard' although I ought to say I never expected to see it there, and thought I was merely writing to him as one member of the House might wright to another what my ideas were with reference to this question. The language of the letter expresses in perhaps as concise form as I could use, my views about this matter. I do think it is an extraordinary way of getting at the desired object to resort to the criminal law and to make something a crime which the ordinary sense of the average man does not consider a crime. We are piling up day by day crimes, and under our constitution we are leaving it to somebody else, as we have to do, to enforce these laws which make new crimes, and make people liable to criminal prosecutions for doing things in connection with which many of us think there is no harm in the world. I do not know where it is going to end. We have had during the short time I have been in this House a very stringent law which makes it a crime to fish or indulge in what many people regard as comparatively innocent amusement on Sunday. We have passed a law making it a crime for a boy, all but grown up, to smoke a cigarette. We are now proposing to pass a law which will make it a crime for a man to make a bet, it may be with a young friend of either sex. Very possibly before the end of this parliament, we shall have a proposition to make it a crime to play cards, or to dance, or to indulge in any of the other amusements which there are some in the community think constitute very nearly, if not quite a sin. I deprecate that manner of legislation, I am sorry it should be necessary, and with regard to the particular thing in hand, the regulating of a race-meeting, I pointed out in the letter I have been referring to that the right way as it seemed to me to do that was by the conditions upon which a license might be issued. The liquor traffic is regulated under license of our various provincial legislatures, and is well regulated in practice, nobody complains, we know that the working out practically of the regulating system which is under the control of the provincial legislatures by virtue of their power to issue licenses is satisfactory in regard to the carrying on of even so delicate a kind of business as the traffic in intoxicating liquor. Is it not manifest that it would be equally easy, perhaps more easy, to regulate the way in which racing associations should carry on their meetings—what kind of betting they should allow or what kind they should prevent, how many days they should hold their meetings, and what intervals should require to elapse between each of two meetings, and every other condition connected with the racing which is sought to be struck at by this legislation—by resorting to the various provincial legislatures and obtaining the necessary legislation from those bodies? I am very sorry that course has not been thought to be the wise one by those right-minded people who want to do what they consider to be for the welfare of the community, and who, instead of taking that course, have been advised to seek to make a new crime, or to add to the list of crimes already on the statute-book, by the legislation now before this House. But the Bills are here, and the question is, what disposition ought to be made of them? For my part, notwithstanding the presence in the draft of the proposed amendment of the clause referred to, providing that if a race-meeting continues for not more than twelve days and after an interval of at least twenty days between each of two meetings, the saving clause of the last section of the Bill shall apply to it—notwithstanding the presence of that provision, which I think is to be regretted, I for my part so much prefer that way of reaching the evil which is sought to be prevented, that I intend to support the amendment proposed by my hon. friend from West Northumberland (Mr. McColl). The difference in principle between the two schemes of getting at the trouble is that the English Bill strikes at the person who does the thing which it is sought to prohibit. It provides that every person who does these particular things—frequents or loiters in streets or other public places for the purpose of book-making or betting—is liable to punishment. The Canadian Bill, or the Yankee Bill, the Bill reported by the committee, proceeds on the contrary idea of striking at the place where the thing is done. It prohibits the keeping of a 'common betting place,' and defines the words 'common betting place' by language wide enough to include everything, even the perambulating of a book-maker about the grounds of a race-track; and the result of so widening that definition is that it exposes to the danger of a prosecution any person on the grand stand at a race-meeting who makes a bet with his neighbour of either sex. That is, I think, an objection to this Bill. Let me point out how that result is reached. In the first place, the protection of the existing law is struck out, so that you have the prohibition, not it may be of individual betting, but at all events of the recording, noting down even in a pocket diary or upon one's shirt cuff, of the fact that a bet has been made, the amount of it, or the odds. Any one who does that, if this Bill as reported by the committee is passed, is liable to a year's imprisonment. That is the distinct provision of section 235 as reported without the saving clause, which is struck out:

> Every one is guilty of an indictable offence, and liable to one year's imprisonment, and to a fine not exceeding $1,000 who records any bet or wager upon the result of any race.

Then, the language of this clause, with the saving protection which the existing law contains struck out, is quite wide enough to cover, and I fancy will some day or other be sought to be made to cover, things that are not meant to be covered at all. 'Any bet upon any contest or trial of skill of man or beast.' I wonder if the draftsman thought of the ordinary game of bridge among four men. I think that is a contest or trial of skill, largely so; and it is not unusual, I am told by those who play, that there should be money staked upon the result. Then, with regard to the individual bet—using that phrase as intending to describe a bet made between two people who are sitting side by side in the grand stand looking at an ordinary horse-race—the definition of a common betting place is completely metamorphosed. Under the existing law, 'common betting house' was the expression used, and it was defined to be a 'house, office, room or other place.' The word 'place' is used, but is used in such a collocation of words that it derives significance from the preceding phraseology—it means other place of the same character—a house, office, room or other place opened, kept or used. That is the present law. The use of the three verbs, 'opened, kept or used,' indicates at once a continuous and permanent using—opening it, starting it, keeping it, continuing it, using it in that sense—not for half an hour once in a year, but from day to day, continuously, is the idea conveyed. All that has been carefully swept away, deliberately swept away by this Bill, because the proposed amendment as reported by this committee is a common betting 'place,' not 'house' as at present—'a place,' not 'opened, kept and used,' but simply 'used' for the purpose of betting between persons resorting thereto,' and second, 'any person using the same.' Then we have at the end of that section this sweeping definition of the word 'place,' which was intended, as I said on the second reading, to get rid of any idea of fixity in the word 'place,' and to make that word include the up-and-down course which any one might take in walking or strolling about a race-track:

> The word 'place' as used in this section and in the preceding section, includes any place, whether inclosed or not, and whether it is used permanently or temporarily, and whether there is or is not exclusive right of user.

Now what have we to say about all this? I take the case of two young people sitting side by side in adjoining seats in the grand stand. Clearly they are occupying a place within that definition. 'Place' is meant to include any place, whether inclosed or not, whether it is used permanently or temporarily. Although persons may be sitting there only half an hour, they are occupying a place within the meaning of this law. Whether they have or not the exclusive right of user, the very fact that they are there on that occasion makes this description clearly applicable to them. Is a person sitting there looking at the races, a person who is using that seat for the purpose of betting with his neighbour? I do not think it would be a far cry for a magistrate so to hold, and I apprehend in all seriousness that, if this measure should pass in the form in which it is reported by the special committee, any one who chooses to institute a prosecution against a visitor at the races for having made a bet of a pair of gloves with his fair companion, will have a perfectly plausible case to present. It may be said that such a thing will not happen. I only point out the distance to which this legislation is going when what many of us at least think harmless is being constituted a crime.

Mr. CARVELL. I have listened, Mr. Speaker, with great interest to the very learned discourse we have just heard from the hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) and I only regret that my duties in committee have kept me away to-day and prevented my listening to all the discussion on the amendment proposed by my hon. friend from Northumberland (Mr. McColl). The hon. the Minister of Justice has brought his great mind to bear on this, and I think has very successfully pointed out all the weak spots of the Bill, but very steadily avoided the main point at issue. I do not want to charge the hon. minister with not treating the committee fairly. It is only due to him to say that, in all probability, he did not know that the hon. member for Grey (Mr. Miller) said yesterday, and has said time and time again, that when this Bill reached the committee stage he intended to move an amendment which would enable two friends sitting at the grand stand in a race meet to bet on the result, if they wanted to do so. But the hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) and those supporting the amendment would bowl this Bill out because they say it contains that stipulation. I admit that it does and that such a provision is not proper legislation, but I want to see the Bill get before the committee and be discussed clause by clause; and when we come to any clause not in the interests of the public, I reserve my right to vote against it.

We might as well state the issue and that is that the great difference between the Bill as reported by the Special Committee and the amendment of the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. McColl) is that in the one case we are trying to keep the book-maker off the race-track and in the other we are leaving the door wide open. I propose to vote for the original Bill subject to the right to amend it when necessary, and I vote for it simply because I am opposed to book-making on the track. The Minister of Justice will not attempt to deny that, notwithstanding the beautiful language in which this proposed amendment is clothed, notwithstanding it may have been drafted by one of the greatest legal minds in England, notwithstanding its beautiful phraseology, it allows book-making to be carried on with impunity at any race meet practically in the Dominion. I am not going into a long dissertation to show why I am opposed to book-making on the race-track. I have never had the privilege of attending the meets at Toronto, Hamilton or Montreal, but I have attended races in my own province since I was a boy, and I am as much a lover of a good horse as even the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton) or the hon. the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth), and I make the statement that there has been hardly an honest race in the maritime provinces, the last five or ten years. I am not talking now simply for the purpose of hearing my own voice, but I know what I am talking about, I know there are proprietors of race-tracks who have honestly tried to prevent these dishonest transactions, but so long as the book-maker is allowed to go on the track and carry on his business, so long will you have dishonest horse-racing. In the maritime provinces, as a rule, the races are sold before they are competed, and the innocent man who bets is simply betting with the dice loaded against him every time.

I am not going to discuss whether we can have horse-breeding without racing. I can only say that twenty years ago when we did not have any of these nefarious practices in the maritime provinces, we bred just as good horses as we are doing to-day. If you go down to the maritime provinces and ask any one who is in the habit of going to the races whether he is going now, he will say, no, that the races are sold out in advance. If you can eliminate book-making, you will have honest racing. The opponents of this Bill have done all they possibly could to defeat it. I thought that the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. McColl) had made a very fair argument yesterday afternoon, but the substance of it was that if you do not allow betting you cannot have horse-racing. I take issue with my hon. friend. The next argument was that these running horses or thoroughbreds are necessary in the interests of horse-breeding. I take issue with that statement. If you had all the running horses and thoroughbreds in the country, they would hardly run one good farm or lumber camp. If rich people want to purchase such horses, that is their own affair, but such horses are not the class which form the back-bone and wealth of this country. I do not think that 99 out of 100 of our horses would suffer very much if this class were not encouraged. But I do not admit that you cannot encourage it without betting. The only question is whether or not book-making shall be allowed on the race-track, and being convinced that it should not, and that public sentiment is opposed to it, I shall vote in favour of the Bill.

Mr. CARVELL.

Mr. LANCASTER. I quite agree with a good deal that has been said by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth), but there is one thing he said with which I do not agree, and that is that, in voting for the second reading, we committed ourselves to an attack on the race-tracks. What I understand is that all we committed ourselves to is the necessity of amending the law in some way so as to prohibit the vice of gambling in toto, so far as we can assume that it is a vice. Now, the question before the committee has narrowed down to this: Which is the best means to restrain the vice of gambling, if it be a vice? I do not say it is a vice; I never gambled myself, but I think a man has a right to gamble if his conscience tells him there is no harm in it. But, while that is my personal attitude, my opinion on the public question is that you cannot build up the manhood of this country by shackling the individual citizen so that it is impossible for him to do anything but what some particular person may think is in full accord with the beau ideal of righteousness. If you wish to build up the manhood of Canada, particularly among the young, you must teach them to resist temptation. You must so conduct public affairs as to appeal to their manhood, and you must teach them that only as they resist temptation will they grow in moral strength. Now, I am interested in voting for what my constituency thinks is best for the moral interest of the country. I have had a lot of petitions sent to me, not exactly praying, but almost commanding me, to vote for the Bill of the hon. gentleman for South Grey (Mr. Miller) in its entirety. I have had sensible letters and petitions sent from other people asking me to do the opposite in the interest of the horse-breeding industry. Now, what am I to do? I say that my duty is to do what is best to prohibit as much as possible the vice of gambling, if it be a vice. What would this Bill do? It would make illegal every form of gambling in which one has to deal with a professional. But, if you adopt the amendment of the hon. member for West Northumberland (Mr. McColl) you permit this kind of betting to be carried on in certain places where it is natural for it to be carried on, but you prohibit it in other places. You have, as it were, a vent—you allow the man who wants to make a bet to make it legally under conditions that are natural. For my part, if I had time, I would go to all the races, and I think I should never want to make a bet at all. But if a man does want to make a bet, is it not better that there should be a place where he can do it without being branded as a criminal? If you tell the people that they must not make a bet anywhere, betting will be carried on in a hypocritical way, these professionals will pretend to be private bettors, the aggregate amount of betting will be more, and it will be done in defiance of the law, which is far worse for public morals than the condition which it is sought here to remedy. I believe sincerely that under the amendment of the hon. member for West Northumberland there will be less gambling in the aggregate and also less hypocrisy in regard to it. And the development of this hypocrisy is much worse than to leave a man uninterfered with who, as the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) said, may wish to make a private bet, for instance, at the St. Catharines regatta, or at a football match. My hon. friend from South Grey (Mr. Miller), in my opinion—perhaps he does not care about that—is making a tactical mistake in the course he pursues in regard to this Bill. I made a suggestion to him yesterday with regard to the reading of the evidence which had only been printed in English. But, though he may not care for my opinion on the matter, I give him that nevertheless. If he is sincere, as I admit he is, I think he would have done better to have accepted the amendment of the hon. member for West Northumberland. I believe that under that amendment the country will make more progress in restraining the evil of gambling, if it be an evil, than would be made under the law which the hon. member (Mr. Miller) proposes. One great advantage would be that the House would then be unanimous, and the House being unanimous, the country, public opinion, would be behind it. The disadvantage is that, if we are not united in a matter of this kind, the people tend to take sides. Where public opinion is not strongly behind such a law as this, it cannot be well enforced, and the evasion of the law creates a class of hypocrites. I am bound to say that in the interest of morality, according to my judgment, the amendment of the hon. member for West Northumberland is the best legislation for us to pass.

Now, let me say a word about the horse-breeding industry. The gentlemen who tell me that this Bill will interfere with the horse-breeding industry are not the rich men pictured by the hon. member for Carleton, New Brunswick (Mr. Carvell) but they include in their numbers the stalwart fruit-growers of the county of Lincoln, who must have horses with a certain speed in their composition. I do not agree with the view expressed by some hon. members that the automobile is going to put the horse out of business. I think that the horse is still the noble animal and man's true friend that we were taught in school to believe him to be, and that he has great usefulness still. The fruit-growers of Niagara district need fast-going horses. They need horses with some strength, but they need speed also. Their product, fruit, is a perishable commodity, and it must be sent out fresh, and to be sure of catching the train which is to carry that fruit to market, horses with some speed are absolutely necessary. That is one reason why I think it is not quite fair to say that this legislation would interfere only with rich people who own running horses or fast trotting horses. For the reasons I have given, I feel bound to vote for the amendment of the hon. member for West Northumberland.

Mr. W. M. GERMAN (Welland). Mr. Speaker, I feel that I should have a few words to say in regard to this Bill before the vote is taken, more particularly by reason of the fact that one of the racing-tracks spoken of, and spoken of in a somewhat derogatory manner is owned—or rather, not owned, but operated—in the constituency which I, for the time, have the honour to represent. The learned counsel who looked after the interests of the promoters of this Bill saw fit to place the Fort Erie track and the Windsor track in a class by themselves, and, in his estimation, rather below the standard of such tracks as the Woodbine at Toronto, the track at Hamilton, and the track at Montreal. I presume that he made these statements because he was not aware of the facts as they exist. But I can tell him, as I tell this House, that there is no racing-track in Canada that is up to the standard, as a racing-track, of the track at Fort Erie. It is the best track by far that there is in this Dominion. And it is conducted now, and has been conducted from its inception, in as high and straightforward and honest a way as any race-track in Canada. It is true that the tracks at Fort Erie and Windsor have had racing days extending over a longer period than other tracks. But why? One reason is that they do not get the same numbers of people as does the track meet in Toronto. Toronto is a large city, and the racing meet is a great social event; all society turn out to attend that meeting, wearing their best clothes and looking very gay and happy and comfortable. The association has large gate receipts and can afford to pay large purses with a shorter number of days' racing than Fort Erie. In order to get the same class of horses at the Fort Erie and Windsor tracks as they have in Toronto it is necessary, from a financial point of view, to have a longer racing-meet than would be necessary in Toronto or Montreal. But I say, and any one who has visited these tracks, particularly any one who has visited the Fort Erie track during the racing-meet, will unite with me in saying, that the racing-meetings at Fort Erie are conducted on as high a plane as those of any of the other tracks in Canada. So, I wish, on behalf of the people of the county of Welland, to repudiate the suggestion that has gone forth that there is any violation of the moral law taking place on the Fort Erie track other than on any other track.

Now I was rather pleased to hear the speech of the hon. member for West Peterborough (Mr. Stratton) on this question. He made such a speech as he usually makes in discussing public questions, and with a large portion of his speech I agree. For instance, he said it made no difference to him by whom this Bill was promoted, whether by the Lord's Day Alliance or by any other combination of people, and with that I agree. I know that the Lord's Day Alliance so-called, in the province of Ontario at any rate, has done a very large amount of good in maintaining the moral standard of the people of that province. I am quite willing to concede that, and I trust and believe that they will continue to do good. But when they, or when any other person says to me, or to other people in the province of Ontario, that what we have been in the habit of doing, what we have been brought up to believe is not a crime, is a crime, and that we are criminals in doing those things, then I object to that proposition. I do not think that they have a right to curtail freedom of action in those particulars. There is in this country a very wide divergence of opinion as to what can be done within the bounds of moral rectitude, and honour. A large number of people claim that running street cars on Sunday is a crime, that running electric cars through the country on that day is a crime. We know that some years ago when the Toronto Street Car Company desired to get a Bill passed to allow them to operate street cars on Sunday, they met with an enormously strong opposition. Many times that Bill went before the electors, and many times it was defeated, until eventually it was carried. Well, Sir, the street cars have been running in Toronto since then against the wishes of a large class of people. But I would like to ask any hon. gentleman in this House to-day what they think would be the result if a by-law was submitted to the people of Toronto now to stop the running of street cars on Sunday? Does not any person feel that such a by-law would be overwhelmingly defeated? The street cars are running to the benefit of the people of the city of Toronto. So it is with regard to many other things, with regard to these finer moral questions. I can also agree with the statement of the Minister of Justice that we are putting on the statute-book of Canada legislation declaring matters to be crimes which the general consensus of opinion throughout the country feel are not crimes at all.

Now there is a considerable degree of misunderstanding in regard to matters pertaining to the race-track. I have heard the book-makers condemned here very severely. I have no love for the book-makers, I am not a defender of the book-makers, I do not care anything about book-makers, whether they are on the track or not. But what I say is that we should not by legislation declare to be a crime what is a simple bet between individuals on the track, and that is what this law does, and if this legislation is adopted, that will be the result of it. The law in Canada in regard to this matter stood in one particular way for a great many years. But in 1892 it was thought that the law did not go far enough in exempting betting on race-tracks, and Sir John Thompson, who was then Minister of Justice, in consolidating the Criminal Code of Canada, introduced into the Bill a further exception. In section 235 of the Act, after the words 'to bets between individuals,' these words were added:

> Or made on the race-course of an incorporated association during the actual progress of a race-meeting.

At that time the matter was discussed very fully. Sir Louis Davies, who is now one of the judges of the Supreme Court of Canada, in speaking upon that matter said that parliament should thoroughly understand what they were doing, that they were legalizing bets that were made on the race-track. That was thoroughly discussed, and understood, and parliament at that time unanimously decided that that should be done, and the law has stood that way ever since. For myself I cannot see that any harm has been done by reason of that enactment, and that is the way that I for one would like to see it stand in the future. I think that this parliament, in eliminating that exception to the clause 235, is going further than it should go in this direction. There is another section of the Bill which it seems to me is not at all in the interest of the public, and that is in prohibiting the publishing of racing news. What would be the result? You would prevent Canadian newspapers from publishing the news, whereas the United States papers, which publish the same news, are delivered in Toronto in the morning almost as early as the Toronto papers, and you would cut off a considerable source of revenue to the Canadian newspapers. People who desired to procure this news would get United States papers instead. It seems to me that this Bill is one that should not pass, at any rate in its present form. The Bill which is introduced as an amendment is one which it seems to me will answer every purpose that is required, and to that I shall give my approval.

Mr. MEIGHEN. I feel great pleasure at being in accord with many of my hon. friends opposite in regard to this measure, and particularly I am so pleased to be in accord with the hon. member for Carleton, New Brunswick, (Mr. Carvell), that I must indulge myself in making a few remarks. The hon. member for Carleton has come closer to my way of thinking, and his process of reasoning is more in accord with my own, than that of any other speaker who has addressed the House. In all matters of this character, matters that involve moral questions requiring legislation, we are led to conclusions through instinct, and an impulse of the heart, rather than by a distinct movement of the mind. Having taken up our position, which the great body of the public have taken with us, the circulation of information, and the advance of thought bringing each ultimately to the same conclusion, we look back, and try to find some process of reasoning, some pathway of thought by which we have arrived at that conclusion. There are two elements connected with the question, the hon. member for Regina (Mr. W. M. Martin), yesterday stated one of them, and he conceived it to be all. He stated that all each member of this House had to decide in his own mind was whether or not the institution of betting was a right or a wrong institution. The hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton) took him to task for that statement, and I think rightly, but the hon. member for Brandon substituted in its place the proposition that all this House had to decide was whether it was for the good, the peace, and welfare of society to pass this Bill, or whether it was not, and that in coming to that conclusion the individual opinion of any hon. member of this House, as to the rightness or wrongness of betting, had nothing whatever to do with the case. With the latter statement made by the hon. member for Brandon I disagree just as firmly as I disagree with the statement of the hon. member for Regina. I believe with him that each member of this House, before he can intelligently defend his vote on this question, must decide whether the practice and institution of betting are right or wrong, and whether they are for the public good, the public weal or the public ill, as now conducted. I cannot conceive of any hon. member of this House voting to place in the category of crimes a practice which he in his heart believes to be good, and right, and in the interests of society. I believe that before he can vote for the Miller Bill he must, as one of the incidents of such decision, decide affirmatively that the practice of betting per se, is wrong as at present conducted. But I feel that he has more than that to decide. I do not think he has proceeded sufficiently far when he determines that in his view it would be better if this institution could be suppressed. He must also persuade himself that the general sentiment of the country, the sentiment of the people for whom he is legislating, is not only numerically in its favour, but is numerically sufficiently strong, and sufficiently impelling to enable the law to be enforced reasonably once it is placed upon the statute-book. Whether I agree with any other hon. member or not, my line of thought brings me to the conclusion that once an hon. member is convinced that the practice of betting does no good, but does harm, once he is convinced that the putting down of the practice, or a branch of the practice, a branch of the tree or the institution, if you cannot do it all, will be sufficiently supported by the public to ensure its reasonable enforcement, he must support the Bill and I cannot see how he can defend on the platform a vote against it. Those who agitate for the amendment do not contend, and I do not believe they can contend, that the amendment aims at or pretends to effect any further advance in the suppression of betting than does the Bill itself. The only difference between the amendment, and the Bill, that is in so far as the principle is concerned, leaving aside the details, and the expressions which may be adjusted in committee, is that the amendment leaves out unscathed, and untouched the practice of betting on race-tracks. That is to say that just as soon as the institution of betting stands out exposed, clear, in the light of the public eye, just as soon as we get on the fashionable race-track, we leave it untouched, we license it, and we declare it to be right. The question of where the amendment will lead is reduced down to one naked principle, and one alone. Whether or not a practice, which, if it is wrong per se, must be suppressed, can be right when it reaches its highest state of evolution, is exposed to the public view, and caters to the young and weak. To my mind the effort of those who will not support the Bill, and who dare not oppose it, is to effect their purpose not by denying the passage of the Bill, but by frittering it away by amendments.

I stated when I started out that there were two elements to the question under discussion—first of all the rightness or wrongness of the institution of betting, and, secondly, the question of public opinion. For my part I take the ground that the institution of betting in itself has done nobody any good in this world. I do not believe that under its best conditions it ever does any good, and I believe it does infinite harm. The institution of betting, when you wipe away the verbiage, when you look down at the principle of its being, its heart, and life, what is it? It is the attempt to get in this world by chance what should be got only by industry and toil. It is really based upon the desire to get the wages of this life without working for them. It is an effort to get the rewards of doing well by doing ill, an effort to get the prizes of life by doing injury to one's fellows instead of doing them good. I am quite aware that for generations, and generations unknown during the past men have indulged in that practice, but I believe that what in one age may be a pleasureable habit may, in the next age, be a crime. This word 'crime' has been taken in this debate to mean something much more vicious than it logically should mean in a discussion of this sort? What is a crime? A crime may not be anything so very hideous. A crime is something which, for the purpose and good of society, is condemned as not in the interest of society, whereas, once, perhaps, it was not against the interests of society. It is something that the consensus of public opinion has affirmed that it is better to do without than to do with, though it might perhaps in certain cases do good concomitant with it. What was not a crime in the last century may be a crime in this. What is not a crime in Russia may be a crime in Canada. What was certainly not a crime in the days of Pitt may be a crime to-day. While I may never have made a bet in my life, may never even have been tempted in the matter, because, aside altogether from the moral considerations, during a large part of my life I had a very good reason for not betting, I am aware that the brightest mind that ever adorned the mother of parliaments was the most profligate bettor in the whole of the motherland. I am aware that the best men or some of the best of men of all ages, have indulged in betting, and I believe they did so conscientiously; and possibly under the conditions of society then existing they were doing no wrong, and it would not have been in the interests of that society to endeavour to suppress betting. But I believe that day has gone by. I believe that betting as they have it to-day has done harm, and great harm. I appeal to the judges quoted by the hon. member for Cape Breton (Mr. Maddin), and to the other authorities quoted by the hon. member for Regina (Mr. W. M. Martin), I appeal to the unanimous verdict of bench and pulpit, and to other institutions just as venerable throughout Great Britain, and throughout Greater Britain, and I appeal to my own experience and to my own observations throughout the years I have been able to observe, and I for one am convinced that if this parliament had it in its power to suppress utterly the whole institution of betting they would be doing a good service to society.

I do not follow the argument of hon. gentlemen who affirm that so long as we leave out betting in this form or in that form, we acknowledge the principle of betting to be good. I leave out betting in certain forms, I leave out betting in private houses and in some other places, not because it is not wrong in itself and should not be suppressed, but because it is beyond the power of parliament and beyond the power of the law to suppress it, and because public opinion is not sufficiently far advanced to warrant such legislation and to ensure its enforcement. When I find the element of gambling removed from the business element and clearly disclosed in its naked deformity, I say it is the duty of parliament to strike at it as soon as we find we effectively can. My hon. friend from Hamilton (Mr. Barker) pointed out that the element of betting entered into the practice of life insurance. He is quite right. Another gentleman said that the element of chance entered into transactions in groceries and in stocks. They are right too. But where chance enters into these transactions, it is not the only element, in some it is a very minor element, and it is impossible to eliminate that element of chance in betting and leave the rest. It is monstrous to think we can do so at present. Just as soon as we can I am prepared to legislate against the element of chance in these respects as well as in the form in which we are now attacking it, that is the form of race-track gambling. In that form there is absolutely no other element except the element of gambling, it is gambling pure and simple. With the construction of mind with which I am afflicted I cannot follow the reasoning by which the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. McColl) arrives at the proposition that a man might gamble and still not be a gambler. It would be as reasonable to say that a man might murder and still not be a murderer. He might not be a professional gambler, but he could not gamble without gambling any more than he could murder without murdering. I do not wish to place the two in the same category. I believe that betting in many ways is but a slight offence and that in many cases it may do no harm, but it never does any good, and as an institution it brings about infinite misery and pain.

Is the public opinion of this country sufficiently strong to warrant this parliament in passing legislation in its present form? There may be a difference of opinion in that regard, there may be hon. members who are in a better position to judge of that than I. The hon. member for Brandon affirms that it is not, and he bases his affirmation on the statement that there was no discussion of this subject at the last election, and on the further statement that no public meetings have been called to demand this legislation, and that there has been no unanimity of opinion among the press of this country. If those three considerations exist and he is right in regard to them he would repeal almost half the whole Criminal Code. In the first place as regards discussion at the last election, every one knows that we were so busy discussing the hon. member for Brandon and much of his history that we had not much time to discuss gambling and other subjects. But how much of the Criminal Code, what single act or habit which has been denied to humanity by our whole code has been asked for at a general election? What single provision has received the unanimous endorsation of the press? What single provision was passed by parliament by reason of public meetings throughout Canada demanding its passage? To every one of these questions the hon. member for Brandon would have to say, none. He says we have no indication that public opinion is behind this Bill. I ask him what significance attaches to the fact that for months our desks each morning have been covered with petitions like a snowstorm? Has any legislation ever been proposed to us for consideration that has been so thoroughly, so emphatically demanded by the people of Canada as this Bill? I do not know of any, I have not heard of any, I have not heard that since confederation a single principle of legislation or a single Bill was ever demanded in the form of petitions as unanimously as this Bill. I look to that, but I look further. I must admit in candour that doubtless a great many signed these petitions without any real appreciation of the legislation for which they were asking. I believe that applies to all petitions. I look to my own constituency, which adjoins Brandon; I believe that in my constituency as in that of the hon. member for Brandon there are a great many good people, better than I am and perhaps better than he is, who are opposed and conscientiously opposed to that legislation. But I believe the great mass of the people in both constituencies demand it, and judging other constituencies by these I conclude that there is a general demand for this legislation. These constituencies are no better and no worse than the average constituency in this country. They are constituencies that may well be taken as examples. There are cities in both, there are race-tracks in both, there are jockey clubs or similar institutions in both; those institutions are at one in demanding the negativing of this Bill, and the remainder of the people demand its passing. Consequently I think that if they may be taken as examples, and I think they should, they will illustrate that the great mass of public sentiment to an extent quite up to that pointed out by the hon. member for West Peterborough (Mr. Stratton) is in favour of this legislation. I do not think the hon member for Peterborough at all overstated the case. I believe that if a vote were taken in Manitoba, just as he said if it were taken in Ontario, 80 per cent of the voters would vote in favour of the suppression of race-track gambling. I do not think these figures overstate the fact. It is quite true that there may be constituencies more directly interested which are not of the same complexion; but, taking it all in all, I am of opinion that the public sentiment of this country demands this legislation, and that to deny it would be not to bring the law into contempt, as the hon. member for Brandon suggested, but rather to bring down in the estimation of the people of this country the standard of the parliament of Canada. For these reasons, and for no other—because I arrive at my conclusion by a very simple process—I shall support the Bill, and I hope it will not be whittled away by the passage of this amendment or by any other that may be suggested.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I feel it necessary to call the attention of the committee to a point which probably should have been brought to their notice before. Had I been in the Chair last night when the amendment was offered, I would probably have called attention to it. The argument has turned so much on the proposed amendment that perhaps it has been delayed too long. The rule in discussing Bills in committee is that they shall be taken up clause by clause. This Bill has been announced, and clause No. 1 has been taken up. On this point Bourinot says of a Bill that has reached the committee:

> It is then considered clause by clause. Each clause is a distinct question, and must be separately discussed.

Rule 53 of the rules of the House says:

> In proceedings in Committee of the Whole House upon Bills, the preamble is first postponed, and then every clause considered by the committee in its proper order.

The amendment offered to clause 1 is not strictly an amendment to clause 1; it proposes to introduce a new Bill entirely instead of the Bill before the House. It cannot be accepted as a proper amendment. There is nothing, however, to prevent the hon. gentleman presenting his views, clause by clause, or in any way that he desires; but, unless the committee should otherwise decide, I cannot consider this an amendment to clause 1.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I understand, then, from your ruling that the proper procedure would be this, that a vote should be taken on each clause of the Bill, and if the various clauses were defeated, then it would be proper for the hon. gentleman presenting this amendment to move each clause of it, so that it would become part of the Bill.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I think the hon. leader of the opposition has expressed my view of the matter.

Mr. SPROULE. May I be allowed, as one who was present at the time, to explain what happened. Owing to the sudden termination of the debate when the Speaker was in the Chair, some complaint having been made of that, I believe the general consensus of opinion expressed in the House was that those who desired to speak should be allowed to speak generally on the Bill, though in Committee of the Whole. On that understanding the debate has continued since, and, therefore, I would not regard it as being out of order. It was practically with the unanimous consent of the House, because as far as I heard, no one objected.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I am not objecting to the debate. I am quite prepared to allow all the latitude which hon. members desire in discussing the Bill; but I feel that I cannot accept the amendment as an amendment to clause 1.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Notwithstanding that it is the understanding of the House that the question can be speedily settled in that way?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I would not desire to place myself in antagonism to the unanimous view of the committee; yet the committee is bound by the rules of the House. The House itself can change its rules; the committee cannot.

Mr. J. HAGGART. Do I understand, then, that this amendment may be moved when the preamble is moved?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I would think not, unless the committee chose to reconsider what it had already decided; because when the preamble is being considered, this amendment would very likely be a motion to change what the committee had already decided upon.

Mr. J. HAGGART. Then, according to your statement, you have no amendment before you at the present moment which can be moved to any of the clauses of the Bill?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Section 1 is before the committee. It is open to amendment; but the proposed amendment covers all the sections in the Bill, sections which are not now before the committee. It proposes an entirely new Bill to replace the whole of the Bill before the committee.

Mr. J. HAGGART. Do I undersand that a portion of this amendment may be moved as an amendment to the first clause?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Any amendment may be made to section 1 that is relevant to the subject it bears upon.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think the situation is very clear under the ruling of the chairman. We are now dealing with the proposal to amend section 226 of the Criminal Code, and it is quite open to any hon. member of this House to propose an amendment to section 226 of the Criminal Code in any other terms that he may see fit, or to move that section 1 be struck out altogether. But the chairman has ruled that we must take each section of the Bill in its turn, and if all the clauses of the Bill should be disposed of without all the amendments having been dealt with, then it would be proper to add to the Bill any clauses of the proposed amendment upon proper motion to that effect.

Mr. CROSBY. I understand that the Bill may be discussed, but not the amendment?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Clause 1 is before the committee, and it is the only clause that is before the committee; but, as the discussion has been very broad, I would not at all wish to confine it to that clause if it is the desire of the committee to discuss the principle generally.

Mr. CROSBY. Then I wish to say a few words with regard to the question. I would not possibly have said a word on the Bill now before the House had it not been for the fact that brought my hon. friend from Portage la Prairie (Mr. Meighen) to his feet. He wished to endorse the sentiments expressed by the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Carvell). It is because of a broad statement made by the hon. member for Carleton that I feel compelled to take part in this discussion. That hon. gentleman stated that not a race was started in the maritime provinces that was not sold before it started.

Mr. CARVELL. My hon. friend is not quoting me quite correctly. I stated that a very large proportion of those races were sold out before they started, and I repeat it.

Mr. CROSBY. I accept that, but I took the words down as I stated them. I understand my hon. friend to say now that the greater proportion of the races which take place in the maritime provinces are sold out before they start.

Mr. CARVELL. I stand by that statement.

Mr. CROSBY. Then my hon. friend will have very little to stand on by the time I have made my statement. In the principal province of the maritime provinces we have in the city of Halifax a track second to none, and perhaps the best track east of Montreal. We hold speed contests on that track once a year and for eight or ten days. That track is governed and controlled by an exhibition commission, which is appointed by the provincial government, the city council of Halifax, and the Farmers' Association of Nova Scotia. The best men go there and no better men can be got anywhere. They control the race-track, they have had that race-track in operation some ten or twelve years, and I never heard any charge that any race at any of these meets was sold. We have no book-makers there and no gambling. I have been at these races frequently, and have known many very prominent men from New Brunswick to bring their horses there.

Mr. CARVELL. And get fleeced too.

Mr. CROSBY. My hon. friend cannot produce any proof of that statement, but from what he has said they get fleeced in their own province. We have no such practices going on in our province as he refers to at the race meets in his. Let me say that the track at Halifax is one of the best, if not the best east of Montreal, and that what we give there is speed contests for which purses are offered. These contests are run under a board of management which would not permit any wrongdoing. If my hon. friend has any evidence in support of the statement he made about the race-track at Halifax, he ought to produce it or else retract what he said.

Being a layman I am not competent to give an opinion on the practical effect of this measure, but judging by the argument of the hon. the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth), I am of the opinion that there is something in this measure I should not vote for, and that the amendment is one which I can fairly and honestly support. I only rose for the purpose of drawing attention to the statement of the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Carvell) who has made a most unwarranted charge against prominent men of Halifax, and whose charge is contradicted by the very fact that leading horse-owners in New Brunswick patronize the race track in that city.

Mr. CARVELL. I did not intend to enter into a discussion with the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Crosby) regarding what takes place in that noble city. I take full responsibility for every word I have said, and, notwithstanding the statement made by my hon. friend, I do not propose to withdraw a syllable. I did not say anything about Halifax, but the trouble with this hon. gentleman is that he has a craze over Halifax, and thinks that Halifax is the only place on earth. It is quite a nice little place, but you cannot bring a subject up from the Lord's Day Bill down to the gambling transaction, but the city of Halifax must be brought into it. The best evidence that there is truth in what I have said will be found in the fact that it is not the people of Halifax or New Brunswick who are to blame, but the Americans who come over there in numbers with their horses and book-makers. It is they who make all the trouble. So great is the evil that the Maritime Association has passed within the last three weeks a resolution entirely excluding American horses except those coming from the northern part of Maine.

Mr. THOBURN. It is not my intention to detain the House very long. I do not wish that the few remarks I am about to make shall be construed as implying that I am opposed to any one owning a good race-horse, or attending a race-meet. The only thing I cannot understand is what connection there is between a race-track and gambling and betting. I have heard a good many arguments on both sides upon this Bill, but I have not heard any good reason why I should not vote for it. There has not been a single argument brought forward which could induce me to vote for gambling on the race-track. As I understand this Bill, it is good legislation in the best interests of the people at large. The only great point which I think has been missed in the argument so far, is the influence which has been brought to bear upon the members of this House to vote for the Bill. When the Navy Bill was before us, many hon. members thought it would be a good idea to take the opinion of the people upon it before enacting any legislation. I would like to ask if there was ever a Bill introduced into this House in favour of which more petitions were presented than the one under discussion. Those petitions were scattered throughout this Dominion. They were not circulated secretly; and if a large number of people are opposed to the measure, as some hon. members would lead us to believe, why have they not sent in petitions against it? I am not aware that a single petition has been presented in opposition to it. I would like to know if those who are opposed to this Bill would make that a plank in their platform at the next general election. Judging from the number of petitions presented, one would be led to believe that any one who would dare to vote in opposition to this Bill would be elected to stay at home.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. I am not afraid to go back, and would like to fight the issue out with you.

Mr. THOBURN. We would see what the result would be. Hon. gentlemen opposite would lead you to believe that the Bill was opposed to the race-track. I do not understand it so. As I understand the Bill, it is opposed to the pernicious gambling that takes place on the race-track. It was argued by some hon. members that race-meetings could not be maintained without betting or gambling. I am informed by one of the hon. members for Prince Edward Island that they have good race-meetings there without betting. And the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Crosby) has just told us that they have the best race-meetings, attended by the best class of people in this Dominion—most successful meetings----and no betting. And what was the testimony of the hon. member for South Cape Breton (Mr. Maddin)? That hon. gentleman told us yesterday of ten places in Nova Scotia where they hold successful race-meetings without betting. Let me quote a few words from the hon. member from South Cape Breton as to how race-meetings are conducted there without gambling:

The horse-racing of Nova Scotia is as well conducted as that in any part of Canada, and it is carried on there without the assistance of book-makers or anything of that kind. The gentlemen who conduct the races in Nova Scotia are the equals of those who conduct horse-racing in any other part of Canada.

Now, I would ask the House: If you can have race-meetings in these different places successfully carried on without betting, why cannot we have them in Ontario and Quebec?

Again, we are told that we have no right to legislate for what is considered in the best interest of this country. I would like to know what the Department of the Minister of Justice exists for if it is not to legislate in the best interest of the people? The good book tells us: Thou shalt not steal. And we do not hesitate to legislate against stealing. Has not the parliament always legislated against evil? And, if that is the case, why should we not legislate against gambling at race-track meetings? I have here a document which was received, I think, by every member of this House, and perhaps by every member of the Senate. It reads as follows:

THE MILLER BILL.

Methods used to influence members in its behalf.

The following is a copy of a letter sent broadcast throughout Canada to the clergy by S. D. Chown, general secretary of the Methodist Temperance and Moral Reform Department, and was published in the Toronto 'World' of March 28, showing the means used to influence the members of the Senate and House of Commons in securing their vote for the Miller Bill. The appeal is addressed to the dear brother, and reads as follows:

It would be of the highest importance if you would preach upon the subject of gambling on Sunday, April 3, or as soon thereafter as possible. If we have not already done so, we will supply you with material, immediately upon request, which will be of assistance to you in the preparation of a suitable sermon. We have reached the crucial stage and must strain every nerve to succeed. If you could induce any of your influential men wisely to approach your representative in the House of Commons and any senators they may know, in the interests of the Miller Bill, it would be well done just now.

This has been the system employed by this organization to secure the abolition of racing. What do you think of it?

Now, I happen to know the gentleman referred to in this paper, Rev. Dr. Chown, and I want to say right here that there is not a clergyman in the Dominion of Canada who is held in higher esteem by the denomination to which he belongs than is Rev. Dr. Chown. It is for that reason that he was elected by the church to which he belongs to travel over this whole Dominion in the interest of temperance and moral reform. I am personally well acquainted with him, and I have never known him to issue a statement, in the press or otherwise, that he was ashamed to put his name to. But whoever issued the document I have just quoted was ashamed to put his name to it, and he winds up by asking: 'What do you think of it?' I would ask any hon. member to point out a sentence in the address issued by Dr. Chown to his clergymen to which objection could be taken, coming from one in his position. And when this document winds up by asking: 'What do you think of it?' I can only say that, so far as I am concerned, if race-tracks can only be maintained by betting and gambling, then, in the best interest of the people of Canada, let the race-track go.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Just a very few words in connection with this Bill. So far as the promoters of the Bill are concerned, I am not inclined to agree in the animadversions passed upon these gentlemen, for I have no doubt that they have the best interest of the country at heart. Whatever may be said as to the advisability of some of the arguments put forward, I entirely agree that these gentlemen are engaged in endeavouring to deal with what is an admitted evil, and one which requires some legislative remedy. The debate, so far, has been upon the Bill as a whole. I do not want to deal at this moment with the Bill as a whole, nor with the amendment as a whole. I will speak of that a little later. There are some provisions in the Bill which I think are extreme. There are some considerations with respect to the amendment which lead me to believe, that, as it stands, it is not wholly satisfactory.

But first I wish to point out the remarkable situation with which parliament is confronted at the present time. The government of any country enjoying British institutions is supposed to deal with all legislation of an important character coming before parliament. The control of that legislation is with the government, and modern constitutional authorities, as well as those of not so recent date, impose upon the government the responsibility of dealing with matters of this character. I do not know of any subject in respect of which a greater responsibility is imposed upon the government of this or any other country than the control of criminal legislation. Surely, if there is one subject more than another as to which a government should be disposed to accept responsibilty, it is the framing and moulding and amendment of the criminal law. This Bill is legislation which the government of Canada considers of such great importance that it interrupts the government business for two days, and calls upon parliament to deal with it. And we have the extraordinary spectacle of the Minister of Justice standing up in his place and saying that this Bill, for which the regular business of the country has been delayed, is not only of an extraordinary, but absolutely of an outrageous character. I do not think any parallel to this situation can be found in the history of parliamentary proceedings in recent years. What is the modern rule with regard to responsibility of the government? Let me quote from Mr. Low's well known work on the 'Governance of England,' published in 1904:

That the ministry should initiate legislation is a characteristic part of our system. The cabinet drafts its measures and submits them to the legislature, which considers and discusses them, as a body of persons arranged in parties, not as a collection of individuals, each entitled to have his own opinion on public policy and allowed some opportunity of carrying his views into effect. Every transaction, every project of law, comes before the House as an act of the ministry and an act of the party. If it fails, or should be condemned, the result is a blow to the executive, and indirectly to that portion of the electorate by whom they are appointed. The system checks irresponsible sciolism, and hasty experimentalizing. It may render legislation slow, but it prevents it from becoming fantastic.

Further on he quotes the language of John Stuart Mill, which it may be worth while for me to quote also:

When, said John Stuart Mill, in a speech in the House of Commons in 1863, a popular body knows what it is fit for and what it is unfit for, it will more and more understand that it is not its business to administer, but that it is its business to see that the administration is done by proper persons, and to keep them to their duties. I hope it will be more and more felt that the duty of this House is to put the right persons on the treasury benches, and when there to keep them to their work. People will more value the importance of this principle the longer they have experience of it.

Then the author continues as follows:

The operation of the principle has been carried much further since Mill spoke. It is not merely a question of cabinet initiative and direction, but of cabinet authority over legislation, almost unrestrained.

That is the modern doctrine in Great Britain, it is the modern doctrine in Canada. Yet, we see the government of this country, in respect to a matter of vital importance to the public welfare, abdicating its functions, interrupting the business of parliament, while allowing this debate to go on entirely irrespective of government responsibility. I could quote further from this book in support of that principle. I will also quote from Mr. Todd's book in support of the same principle. In Mr. Todd's well known work on Parliamentary Government in England, he says, on page 500, volume 2:

It has been shown that whereas, by modern constitutional practice ministers are required to initiate Bills upon all questions affecting the public welfare—it being in the power of private members likewise to introduce similar measures—it is customary and expedient that considerable latitude should be granted to the legislative chambers in amending or rejecting the ministerial measures, without it being assumed by any such proceeding that they have withdrawn their confidence in the advisers of the Crown.

Then, further on:

But we find no example of any Bill being permitted to pass through both Houses to which ministers were persistently opposed. Where the opinion of parliament has been unequivocally expressed in favour of a particular Bill, regardless of objections thereto expressed by ministers, it has been the invariable practice for ministers either to relinquish their opposition in deference to that opinion, and to lend their aid to carry the measure, with such amendments as might be necessary to conform it to their own ideas of public policy, or else to resign.

That is the doctrine which Todd has laid down with regard to ministerial responsibility. But to-day we have the peculiar spectacle of this Bill presented to parliament, not upon the responsibility of the government, but upon the responsibility of a private member on the government side, and the business of the government, at this late stage of the session, being interrupted for two days. We also find the Minister of Justice rising in his place and saying that in his opinion, he being the law officer of the Crown, this Bill so presented is absolutely extreme, and one which ought not to receive the sanction of this parliament. I say again that I know of no parallel to this situation in recent years in the parliament of any English-speaking country, now, with regard to the first section of the Bill with which we are engaged at present, I do not find that it differs very much from the section in the Criminal Code of Canada as it exists to-day. There are two or three words omitted in different parts of the section, and I am not aware of what is supposed to be the effect of the omission of those words. We are at this moment not doing the ordinary work done in committee of this House upon the Bill—I am not finding fault with that, I find no fault with the character of the discussion, and have no desire to interrupt it. But I do say that we must get down to business upon this section, and get through with it. I would like to find out, for my own information, what is the effect of the proposed change. At present I see no great objection to it. When we get to the other clauses of the Bill, I shall have something to say as to the effect, which, in my opinion, they would have. But I repeat that I see no great objection to this section. Nevertheless, I do say that in respect to this the whole Bill from beginning to end, it is the duty of the government to accept responsibility for this legislation, to say either that it is good legislation or that it is not good legislation, to accept full responsibility, and not run away from it as they have been doing.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. My hon. friend has laid down a doctrine which he would find some difficulty in maintaining in practice in this parliament. The question which he has brought up to-day is not at all new to old members of the House. Again and again private members have used the privilege they have of introducing legislation, and again and again the government have refused to take up a position either for or against it. If the Bill at present before us is of such a character that it is the duty of the government to take a position upon it, it is equally the duty of the opposition to take one side or the other in regard to it; and if the government is failing in its duty, the opposition is equally failing in its duty. I remember many occasions in former years when legislation for a prohibitory law was introduced into this House, session after session, and the government then led by Sir John A. Macdonald always refused to take the measure up as a government measure. Old members of this House remember that very well. I see before me now men who, at that time, were members of the government, and others who were supporters of the government, and they well remember the cases to which I allude. Here is a question which interests certain members of the community. here is a question as to which men have strong views, and would like this legislation to be assumed by the government. The government, I may say—I am revealing no secret, it is a matter of public notoriety—the government was approached and asked to make this Bill a government measure, they urged that it was of such an important character as that the government should take a position upon it. The House is aware, and the country is aware, that the government refused to assume responsibility for the measure, the government refused to take it up. But while the government were of that opinion, men who were promoting this legislation thought that they would use the privilege which is given to every member of this House to present Bills for the consideration of the House. Those men have strong views upon moral questions, and regarded this question as of great importance, and it was the duty of the government to give them an opportunity of presenting their views to the House in regard to it. This opportunity has been given them by the government and having given them that opportunity the government have discharged their duty and are not called upon to do anything more. If my hon. friend thinks that we are bound to have an attitude upon this question I will say to him that I have known instances in which my hon. friend has introduced resolutions stating that it was our duty to introduce legislation of such and such a character. I remember that not more than three or four years ago, my hon. friend, in his official capacity in this House as leader of the opposition, introduced a resolution to the effect that it was the duty of the government to take up such and such a question with reference to the electoral law. Then, my hon. friend thought it was a question of such importance that, in the language of the authority which he has just quoted, the government were bound to take a position and to say whether they were or were not in favour of his Bill to amend the electoral law. His position is to-day that it is the duty of the government to announce a policy upon this particular question. But, it must be remembered that the country at large has not yet formed an opinion upon this question. We know how in British countries reforms are generally carried out. It does not follow that that which is taken to be public opinion will turn out to be a reform. Very often questions are brought up and finally the change is accepted as a reform. We know how many years it took to bring about the great reforms of the last century not only in this country but in Great Britain, and we know how long a time elapsed before they were taken up by the government. Let me take a famous instance, an instance with which we are all familiar—the abolition of the Corn laws. How many years did it take? How many times was that Bill introduced before it was taken up by the government? Was it the first, the second or the third year? No, it was not until five, or six, or if I mistake not ten years had elapsed that public opinion had been brought to that pitch of excitement, to that degree of conviction, that the government thought there was need of reform, that there was a question to be determined and then they put their hands to the plough and carried out that great reform. My hon. friend from South Grey (Mr. Miller) has brought the attention of the House to this question. It is the first time, in so far as my memory goes, that it has ever come before the Canadian people. There have been petitions presented in favour of it. I have not heard of any counter opinion but the opinion of men is not formed upon it. Some are for it and some are against it. On this side of the House some are for it and some are against it; on the other side of the House, some are for it and some are against it. I say to my hon. friend (Mr. Borden) that whatever may the case in the future, at the present time public opinion has not reached such a point that the government feel called upon to take an attitude upon this question. It is a free question and so it ought to remain notwithstanding that my hon. friend thinks that it is the duty of the government to take it up.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would like to ask my right hon. friend if he thinks there is an evil which requires to be reformed?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. As far as I am concerned?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. As far as the government is concerned.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. This one?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is there an evil in respect to the matter brought before the House which requires to be reformed?

Mr. FIELDING. What does my hon. friend think about it?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think there is.

Mr. FIELDING. In that respect my hon. friend and I are alike: I think there is an evil which we should make an effort to reform.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. May I be permitted to say to my hon. friend that if there is an evil that the government thinks requires a remedy why does not the government take the responsibility of remedying it?

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend has misquoted what I said; I did not say there was an evil which the government thought should be reformed. He has turned my sentence to serve his own purpose. I said there was an evil which I thought should be reformed, but the hon. gentleman has turned the sentence in order that he could serve his own purpose. I am sorry that the only contribution which the hon. gentleman could make to this debate is a miserable effort to make party capital out of it. I dissent entirely from the extreme to which the hon. gentleman presses the doctrine that the government are responsible for every measure that comes before the House. If it were so we might have to lay down a new doctrine, and say that the hon. gentleman has as much responsibility as we have in this matter. The hon. gentleman presses the doctrine that the government must take up every question that comes before the House, and he asks for precedents. My right hon. friend the leader of the government (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) has given him precedents in the history of this country, and these are certainly more to our purpose than precedents drawn even from the British parliament. I am sure that every member of this House, the older members, and even those who are not old members, can recall cases where questions arose in this House on which the members of the government differed. If they differ, which is the better course—that they should pretend to agree or that they should frankly say: This is not a party question, this is not a government question, it is a question upon which members of the government disagree, and therefore, we propose to leave it an open question before the House. There is this curious thing that when it comes to a public Bill, or a private Bill, or anything which is in the nature of a Bill, if it so happens that the members of the government unite upon the matter, we are instantly told from the other side of the House that the party whip is being used. That is the attitude of hon. gentlemen opposite. When it happens accidentally that a number of the members of the government think alike, and speak in support of a private Bill, the cry is raised that it is not a government measure, and that we are being brought into line by the party whip. If the facts had been as represented the criticism would be just. Our system of party government calls for unity of action in a great many things, but in all things it is not possible to have unity, and if, in this matter, there be differences of opinion among members of the government surely the most sensible thing is that we should say to my hon. friend from South Grey (Mr. Miller): You have brought an important question before the House, we do not all agree on it, let it be an open question, and let each man vote as he thinks best. My right hon. friend cited one of the precedents in Great Britain for the position which he takes. If you look for them I am sure you could see other precedents of the same kind. I have a precedent in my mind that occurred not long ago, the question of Women's suffrage. The question of the right to vote is at least as important a question as that which is dealt with in this Bill before the House. But do we not all know that the British government have declined to take ground upon that suffrage question? A member of the British government stated at a great public meeting that there was a division of opinion in the House, and in both parties on that great question, and that the government were not prepared to take the responsibility of a woman's suffrage Bill. He said that if a woman suffrage Bill was brought before the House, and a majority of the House would vote for it, then the government would recognize it to be its duty to take it up, and give effect to the will of the House, but that up to that time the government was not prepared to act. Is that violating all the traditions of the British parliament? I say that the extreme to which my hon. friend has pressed the matter is not warranted. It is not in accordance with the best practice of the British parliament, and I take the ground that it is not consistent with common sense. If upon any question, not a matter of vital importance, in the view of all the members of the government, there is a difference of opinion which prevents the government uniting, and coming to this House with a measure, the simple common sense method is to say: This is a fair, open matter for debate, and each one of us shall vote in accordance with his judgment, so that the will of the House shall be allowed to prevail.

Mr. J. HAGGART. The doctrine laid down by the Minister of Finance is a new one.

Mr. FIELDING. Not at all, it is very old; my hon. friend has practised it.

Mr. J. HAGGART. The doctrine as practised in this House, and as I have heard the Prime Minister state on former occasions is that the government is responsible for all legislation, private or otherwise. There is no doubt as to the responsibility, and there is no doubt that the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) is right in saying that the government are responsible for all measures which pass this House.

Mr. FIELDING. That is where they recommend the Royal Assent to them.

Mr. J. HAGGART. Not when they represent the Royal Assent, the government is responsible for the legislation that passes this House. That is the doctrine that has always been held in the House. There is no objection to an hon. gentleman introducing a Bill, and discussing it, but when a public Bill refers to crime, and a minister of the cabinet ridicules the idea of it being a crime, and says that such an absurdity was never heard of, I have only to say that if there is one thing for which the cabinet ought to be responsible it is the definition of what is a crime. These gentlemen are capable of holding different opinions upon such subjects. They say it is a duty and privilege of the government for a member of the government, the Minister of Justice, to declare that what the Bill proposes to make a crime is ridiculous, and for these gentlemen to hold different opinions. In England it is impossible for a private individual to pass a Bill, that can only be done by the consent of the government. He may introduce a Bill, and discuss it perhaps for several sessions, he may impose his opinions on the House, those opinions may be forced on the government, and the government may introduce the Bill. A Bill of this kind could not become law in England without the government consenting to it, and taking it up. I contend that the principle laid down by the leader of the opposition is the correct one, that the government is responsible for all legislation, be it a railway Bill, or any other Bill. They have no right to have differences of opinion on a question coming before the House. Ministers may have different opinions, but when it comes to legislation they ought to have but one opinion, each measure should have the unanimous support of the government. I should judge from the speech of the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) that he has heard the opinions of the gentleman who has introduced this Bill, and the arguments on the subject, but does not intend to let it become law until they have had further opportunity of discussing it, that the government have not formed an opinion on the subject. That is perfectly proper, they have a right to say that. The question has been discussed in this House, they have not come to a conclusion on the subject, but they ought to be prepared to say whether legislation of that kind shall be permitted, and receive the government sanction.

Mr. MILLER. The leader of the opposition has spoken of the differences between section 226 in the Bill, and in the Criminal Code as it is to-day. That hon. gentleman has said that he had no objection to section 226 as it is in the proposed Bill, but that he would like to know the meaning of the changes that have been made. He will notice that in every place where the words 'a place' are used in the present section in the Code, the words 'house, room, or other place' are used. The words 'a house or room' have been left out.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is the object?

Mr. MILLER. It was held by the courts that the use of the words 'a house or room' rather weakened than strengthened the language, and therefore the words were left out, leaving simply the word 'place' and in the next section a definition of the word 'place' has been inserted. That is supposed to strengthen the language.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I understand then that the courts have held that the word 'place' in the law as it is to-day must be construed with reference to the words 'house or room' and therefore that the meaning of the word 'place' is not so wide in connection with these two words as it would be if it was there alone.

Mr. MILLER. Yes. The great opposition of the Minister of Justice was because the Bill interfered with private betting. I propose when we come to section 2 to add:

The provision of this section shall not extend to the case of a bet between individuals neither of whom is engaged in book-making or betting as a business.

And if the Minister of Justice will say when we come to consider section 235 that it is necessary to add these words to that section I will be willing to do it so that it will be clear that the Bill does not interfere with private betting.

At six o'clock, committee took recess.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. MADDIN. Before the House rose for dinner, some discussion had taken place with regard to the functions of an opposition on matters of public importance coming before a government. The hon. Finance Minister asked the opinion of the leader of the opposition, and the right hon. the Prime Minister stated that if it were important that the government should adopt a policy with regard to a public Bill of this kind, it was also important that the opposition should do likewise. I would like to refer the right hon. gentleman to a statement made by Edmund Burke in his speech on Conciliation with America, in which he laid down what he conceived to be the duties of an opposition. He said:

It generally argues some degree of natural impotence of mind or some want of knowledge of the world to hazard plans of government except from the seat of authority.

And I have no doubt that when hon. gentlemen on this side of the House cross to the other side, they will not shirk their responsibility with regard to public Bills, as is being done with regard to this particular Bill. Before hon. members come to a conclusion with regard to this measure, I would like that there should be no misapprehension in their minds with regard to the Bill and the amendment. The hon. Minister of Justice, who should be greatly concerned with this Bill, which if it passes will become part of the criminal law of the country, takes up section 227 of the Bill, and reads it as follows:

A common betting place is a place—

(a) used for the purpose of betting between persons resorting thereto and

(ii) any person using the same.

And he says that if a gentleman went to a horse race accompanied by a fair companion and laid a wager with her of a pair of gloves, it would not be a long cry for a magistrate to find him guilty under this Act. Now, I would like to point out to hon. members that it is essential that there be two parties to a bet, and this Act fixes as one of the parties 'persons resorting thereto,' that is, to the race-track, and the other party, as 'the owner, occupier or keeper thereof,' or 'any person using the same.' The Minister of Justice wishes to draw the inference that the 'persons resorting thereto' are 'users' of the place. They are not within the meaning of this Act, because the user of a place undoubtedly means the lessee or tenant or some one occupying the race-track. I submit that it is straining a criminal enactment beyond the limits that any court would strain it, in order to put the interpretation on this section that the Minister of Justice does. He was straining at a gnat when he sought to convey the idea that a person would be convicted who would bet a pair of gloves at a horse race. There is absolutely nothing in this Bill which would make a person liable for private betting at a race-track or outside of a race-track. But, says the Minister of Justice, I am opposed to the Bill, and I am in favour of the amendment. We find how he strained at a gnat; let us see how he can swallow a camel. Subsection 4 of section 228A of the amendment reads as follows:

4. For the purpose of this section the word 'street' shall include any highway and any public bridge, road, lane, footway, square, court, alley or passage, whether a thoroughfare or not; and the words 'public place' shall include public park, garden, or seabeach, and any uninclosed ground to which the public for the time being have restricted access, and shall also include every inclosed place (not being a public park or garden) to which the public have a restricted right of access, whether on payment or otherwise, if at or near every public entrance there is conspicuously exhibited by the owners or persons having control of the place a notice prohibiting betting therein.

Now, I would like hon. members to keep that paragraph of the amendment in mind. In effect, it operates in this way. A is the owner of a race-track. B is a book-maker. B goes to A and says: 'I would like to make a book at your race-track next week.' A says: 'What will you give me?' B says: 'I will give you 25 per cent.' A says: 'That is not sufficient.' 'Well,' says B, 'I will make my book outside of your race-track.' A says: 'No, indeed, you will not, because I will put up notices prohibiting betting.' 'Then,' says B, 'well, what do you want?' A says: 'I want 50 per cent.' 'Well,' says B, 'if you must have 50 per cent, I will give it. A says: 'All right, walk right in, make yourself comfortable, go on with your betting, there will be no signs put up'; and the betting goes merrily on. I venture to say that if the members of the jockey club from whom this amendment emanates had prepared it last summer and presented it to this House this winter, they would not have got ten members of this House on either side to support it. It simply means placing in the hands of the owners of race-track and gambling resorts the authority to make it legal or illegal to gamble, according to their own fancy. When this Bill was up for its second reading, the Minister of Justice, poking some fun at the definition of a betting place in the Act, cracked what he considered to be a very good conundrum. He asked: 'When is a dog's tail not a dog's tail? The answer was: 'When it is a-waggin'; and he thought it a very good joke. Well, I would like to say that in this subsection 4 there also arises a conundrum. It is: 'When is an offence not an offence'? The answer is: 'When there is no notice on the fence.' Now, this amendment, vesting the right to say that gambling may or may not be carried on, in the owner's and lessees of race-tracks is one of the most flagrant and barefaced pieces of legislation ever offered to a legislative body. It is an insult to this parliament to ask it to legislate in that way. I wish the hon. members of this House, before voting on this Bill, to bear in mind that the Bill as it now stands before the committee does not interfere with private betting, and that the amendment as proposed clothes the owners and lessees of race-tracks with authority to say whether gambling shall be carried on legally or not, which would be a lamentable state of affairs.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Question, question.

Mr. MILLER. I want to say a word or two as to the opinion given by the Minister of Justice before dinner in regard to the section of the Bill we are now discussing, and in regard to the amendment. The hon. the Minister of Justice says he prefers the amendment offered by the hon. member for West Northumberland (Mr. McColl) to the Bill as it is before the House. Let me call the attention of the committee to the last paragraph of the amendment:

Provided no such race-meeting shall continue for more than 12 days of continuous racing.

The hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster) said he thought that would be a great improvement. I would like to ask where the improvement is in narrowing racing to twelve days per meeting and allowing two meetings in a year.

Mr. MADDIN.

Mr. McCOLL. It is eight days in the amendment, not twelve.

Mr. MILLER. That would make it 16 days in the year. It would cut four days off the Woodbine meet as held to-day. It would be an improvement, not to those who are supporting the Bill, but to the proprietors of race-track associations in this way. The law, as interpreted by Canadian courts, compels a book-maker to move about from place to place and prohibits him from locating himself anywhere; but if we pass this amendment, the book-maker will be able to do business as before and be made as comfortable as possible on the race-track. What I want to get at is the legal aspect of the case, and I would like to compare the amendment offered by the hon. member for West Northumberland (Mr. McColl), and advocated by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth), with the written opinion of the Minister of Justice as given on the 5th of February.

Mr. LANCASTER. As the hon. gentleman has mentioned my name, I think the committee should understand my position. I did not say, and I am not concerned in saying, whether we are injuring race-track men or not, I am not anxious to injure anybody by this legislation, and I do not think it was wise for the hon. gentleman to support the Bill by saying that it is handicapping race-track associations. What I did say was that if we confined betting to the race-tracks and absolutely prohibited it outside, we would make a great advance and limit the character and the amount of betting.

Mr. MILLER. I have no feeling against anybody, and no desire to injure any one. As I have said, I do not want to do anybody an injury, but I do not want to extend the privileges of race-track associations under the colour of advancement in the way of moral reform. The hon. the Minister of Justice advocates the amendment offered by the hon. member for West Northumberland (Mr. McColl), which would allow a meeting to last 8 days, but in the opinion which the hon. minister gave me on the 5th of February last he said, speaking on this point:

The Dominion parliament has no such jurisdiction, and the only way in which the Dominion parliament could deal with the subject is by undertaking to make it a crime to continue a race-track meeting for more than some given number of days.

That is what the amendment seeks to do. It seeks to make a crime on the ninth day what is perfectly legal on the other eight.

I do not question the power of the Dominion parliament to legislate in that manner, but it certainly would seem to me entirely illogical to do so.

Mr. LANCASTER. The hon. minister explained all that to-day.

Mr. MILLER. What I contend is that if it was entirely illogical to do that on the 5th of February, 1910, it is just as illogical to do it on the 7th of April. I submitted the language of this Bill to the Minister of Justice. I did so in perfect frankness, and no doubt his reply was equally frank. I said I wanted his opinion in order that I might use it, and it was with that understanding the opinion was obtained. When I submitted the Bill to my hon. friend, he said he did not think it was his duty, as Minister of Justice, to give his opinion on a public Bill submitted by a private member, but he said that the Bill had been drafted by three most able lawyers, that they had given a great deal of thought and time to its drafting, and that it was admirably drawn. I said to the hon. minister: Do you think any other language could be used which could better carry out the purpose of its promoters. He said he did not. Referring to section 227, he thought it possible that two men sitting on adjoining seat on the grand stand and making a bet, the one with the other, might be held under this Bill to have been keeping a betting place. I said: Do you not think the language would have to be very much strained indeed to come to that conclusion? He replied: Candidly I do think it would, but no one could tell to what extent a magistrate might strain the language of the statute. Speaking of section 235 he said there was absolutely nothing in it to interfere with private betting, although there was something in it which would prevent the recording or registering of a private bet. I have here an amendment which I propose to offer to section 227:

> The provisions of this section shall not extend to the case of a bet between individuals neither of whom is engaged in any way in book-making or in betting as a business.

If the hon. the Minister of Justice, or the majority of the committee, think that in order to protect the private bettor—whom I do not want to injure—some amendment should be attached to section 235, I am perfectly willing that the one I have just read should be. I want again to call the attention of the committee to this fact that if they carry the amendment offered by the hon. member for West Northumberland (Mr. McColl), they will be throwing the law wider open and give greater opportunity for the carrying on of professional gambling. If the condition is bad to-day, it would be a great deal worse under the amendment.

Mr. LANCASTER. On the race-track?

Mr. MILLER. Yes, it would increase the amount of betting on the race-track.

Mr. LANCASTER. Nowhere else?

Mr. MILLER. Again I appeal to my hon. friend from Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster), with whom I am sometimes able to agree, and who sometimes has a logical mind——

Mr. LANCASTER. I have lucid intervals.

Mr. MILLER. I am glad of that, because I think I will have his support.

Mr. LANCASTER. I think the hon. gentleman had better get a lucid interval too.

Mr. MILLER. The hon. member for Lincoln will not be able to give any satisfactory reply, just as every other opponent of the Bill, to this question. If it be right and proper to punish and prohibit professional gambling, by what logic can you determine it is quite right to do on a race-track what, by the Criminal Code of Canada, is a crime every place off the race-track? If a thing is a crime on this side of the fence, how can you make it innocent on the other side? I would like the hon. member for Lincoln to answer that.

Mr. LANCASTER. Candidly, we have been too long talking on this subject. I would ask my hon. friend which position is the most logical, what I said two or three times to-day about limiting gambling, or his own suggestion that every individual can bet all he has, and all his family has, and do it under the name of private betting? The race-track association controls it, and limits it, and makes it less objectionable than would be an unrestricted amount of private betting. He is throwing everything wide open.

Mr. McCOLL. One word in answer to my hon. friend. He asks why we should prohibit what he calls gambling off the track, and permit it on the race-track. Now, if my hon. friend had heard the proceedings before the special committee and the arguments made before the House, he would have known that the conditions on the race-track and the conditions off the race-track are entirely different. When men are betting off the race-track they see no racing, there is no sport connected with it, it is gambling pure and simple. But what takes place on the race-track is altogether different. In the first place, the parties who go there and who patronize it are a different class of people, they are not gamblers in any sense; they go there to enjoy the races, to enjoy the sport, and the betting that they do is only an incident of the sport. Whether that incident is right or wrong, it is something that has grown up in Great Britain for hundreds of years. As I said before, the men who patronize races in my own constituency never bet on hockey matches or anything else, never play cards for money, but they go there to enjoy the sport, and as an incident they may bet two or three dollars on a race. That is no gambling at all, and that is all that is done by nine-tenths of the people who patronize a well conducted race-track such as the Woodbine or the other tracks referred to. Moreover, the betting that takes place on the race-track with the book-maker is done under regulations. The association regulates the book-maker, sees that everything is done fairly, and takes every means to protect the public, and that cannot in any sense of the word be called gambling.

One point further. You, Mr. Chairman, intimated this afternoon that the amendment before the chair, and which I offered last evening before the House adjourned, was not strictly in order. If that should turn out to be the case, then, before the motion is put, I would desire to move another amendment and put it in another form, clause by clause, which I suppose would be without doubt in order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The amendment moved by the hon. member was ruled out of order, there is, therefore, no amendment before the committee.

Mr. McCOLL. I understood, also, that you suggested this afternoon that, although it was, strictly speaking, out of order, the House had full jurisdiction over its own rules, and that if the House would like to vote upon my amendment, or the provisions of the substituted Bill, it would be at liberty to do so. If that is not out of order, I would like the feeling of the House upon it. I may say, further, that it would simplify matters and shorten proceedings a great deal if a vote could be taken in the way I have suggested. In the first place, this amendment was moved last evening before the House adjourned, and if it was out of order the question should have been raised then. It was not raised then, and we have proceeded to-day, speaking presumably upon the amendment that I had moved. If there is any technical objection to that, it might be waived and we might take a vote.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The amendment moved by the hon. member was discussed at some length. I intimated to him some time before I did to the committee that I did not think it in order. Eventually, I stated that I did not think I could submit it to the committee. Having been ruled out of order, it was open to any hon. gentleman to question the ruling of the Chairman, but that was not done. The rule of the House I think is quite clear. The House itself can change its rules. I do not think that the Committee of the Whole House change those rules, although I would hesitate to place myself in opposition to the unanimous desire of the committee in its method of carrying on business. However, the proposed amendment was ruled out of order, and I do not see my way clear to take the vote the hon. member speaks of. Any amendment he desires to offer to section 1 will now be in order.

Mr. CYRIAS ROY (Montmagny). (Translation). Mr. Chairman, I move that you now leave the chair. I will indicate with a few words the reason of my motion. I will not be long and I hope that some of my hon. colleagues in this House, who have the privilege of speaking both languages, will be able to express better than I can do, the motives which we can appeal to, in favour of my question.

The Bill which we are discussing now provides some modifications to the criminal law. For my part, I think that in such a circumstance, when an hon. member moves for a change in the criminal law, he should prove that his resolution is not intended to create an offence or to be in contradiction with a law already in force. Now, without mentioning any of the provinces of confederation, I can declare positively that in some provinces, what this Bill really asks for punishment is not supposed to be an offence. There are some provinces where the facts which they want to punish as criminal ones are not even an offence. For this reason, I think it would be wise for the House to send back this Bill to the provincial legislature which would discuss, reject or pass it. I consider that the question now discussed is pertinent to the civil code of Canada. Now, there are provinces that have an exclusive jurisdiction that can alone decide on matters concerning civil code. Furthermore, some provinces have an exclusive jurisdiction to decide upon the rights which are pertinent to citizens to dispose of their estates, their money, and of all they own. I will insist no more. I hope we have in this House some representatives more competent than myself to make it understood by the majority that these reasons are sufficient to ask for the postponement of this Bill. I will content myself with these few remarks which I think are sufficient to justify you, Mr. Chairman, for leaving the Chair.

Mr. BELAND. (Translation). What is your proposition?

Mr. ROY. (Translation). That Mr. Chairman do now leave the Chair.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. As I understand, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Roy) moves that the Chairman do now leave the Chair.

Mr. McCOLL. In view of the ruling which you have made I will move that section 1 of the Bill be struck out. In taking the sense of the House on that question, we shall probably have an expression upon the whole of my amendment. We have had that fully discussed, and I think the House understands now why I am put in the position of having to take this course. Section 1 of the Bill now before us reads as follows:

1. Section 226 of the Criminal Code, chapter 146 of the Revised Statutes, 1906, is repealed and the following is substituted therefor:—

Thus, section 1 repeals section 226 of the Criminal Code, and substitutes another section. The effect of my motion to strike out this section No. 1 is to leave section 226 of the Criminal Code as it now stands. When we compare this section of the Criminal Code with the section as proposed in this Bill, we find that there is very little difference. That was fully explained this afternoon by the Minister of Justice. Section 226 as it now stands provides:

A common gambling house is—
(a) a house, room or place kept by any person for gain, to which persons resort for the purpose of playing at any game of chance or at any mixed game of chance and skill; or
(b) a house, room or place kept or used for playing therein at any game of chance or any mixed game of chance and skill, in which a bank is kept by one or more of the players—— and so on. About the only difference between the present section of the Criminal Code, and the section proposed by this Bill is the elimination of the expressions 'house,' and 'room,' leaving only the expression 'place.' The reason the promoters of the Bill have desired to have only 'place' in the section is to give it an extended definition making unnecessary the use of other expressions. The Bill I propose, defines 'street,' and the same thing is effected. So the two Bills are, in that respect, practically the same. Without further explanation I move to strike out section 1.

Mr. SINCLAIR. Section 1 I consider a very essential section of this Bill, in fact it is necessary to correct the present confused state of the law. It will be known to hon. members who have studied this question that the law on this point is at present in a very unsatisfactory state. The decisions of the court have been to the effect that one is liable to fine, and imprisonment if the book-maker does his betting at any particular place—if, for instance, he stands on a box or under an umbrella at the race-course; but, if he walks about the race-course, or even marks time, his betting is not an offence. This arises from the peculiar construction given by the courts to the word 'place.' It was pointed out to the committee in the investigation that in the butcher shops, barber shops, and other places in Toronto, it is a common practice to carry on this race-course betting as a side show to the regular business. It was also shown that when a man carrying on this practice wished to escape liability, under the law he stepped out on the sidewalk, and there made the bet with his customer. The butcher, so long as he remains in his shop and makes a bet, becomes liable to a fine, but if he stands on the sidewalk in carrying on this transaction he is not liable under the law. And, the book-maker on the race-course, while he moves about, or even while he marks time may make a bet that is not an offence, but, standing in one place, he is liable to prosecution. I am sure every hon. member of this House wishes to have that state of the law corrected. The section that my hon. friend from West Northumberland (Mr. McColl) wishes to strike out is an attempt, and, I think, a fairly good attempt, to define what a 'place' is and to correct that anomalous condition of the law. This does not deal with the main portion of the Bill which we reach later on, and which deals with the question whether betting by the book-maker should be allowed. I therefore trust that hon. members will look carefully into this question before voting. I can well see how hon. gentlemen who are opposed to doing away with the book-maker might vote against the motion of my hon. friend from West Northumberland to strike out this section.

Mr. LANCASTER. I think the hon. Minister of Justice fully answered all that has been said by the member for Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair), I understand him to say—and I quite agree with him—that the evil consists in what is done not in where it is done. As he pointed out, the first section as it stands means that persons sitting side by side are in a 'place,' and if they make a private bet they are liable to be sent to jail.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, the difficulty I feel with regard to the situation, arises, perhaps, from the ruling which, I understand, you have made, that the amendment which was moved by the hon. member for West Northumberland (Mr. McColl is not in order. The difficulty in dealing with this section arises from the fact that the various sections of the English Bill which the hon. member for West Northumberland moved en bloc by way of amendment last night are so interwoven, so interdependent one upon the other that, unless you are to consider them all together, you are scarcely in a position to deal intelligently with the matter. The difficulty which my hon. friend from Guysborough has pointed out with regard to what he considers the anomalous condition of the law is, I venture to think, nothing of the sort The law was perfectly clear, and distinct as it left this House in 1892. The House then, in terms, decided to except from the book-making prohibition if you please, to except from the betting clause of the Criminal Code, a number of things, among which were bets made on the race-course of an incorporated association during the actual progress of a race-meeting. But the wording of the exception limited the exception to that particular clause. The wording of the exception was and is:

The provisions of this section shall not extend to bets made on a race-track during a race-meeting.

Accordingly the law did not prevent a book-maker from making a book on a race-track during the progress of a race-meeting, but that condition of the law did not please the people who want to stop book-making, and accordingly they resorted to a prosecution of the book-maker under this other section for keeping a betting house, to which other section the exception did not, in terms, apply. They procured in that way a fine or conviction to be imposed upon some book-maker, notwithstanding that he had made his bets upon a race-track during a race-meeting, upon the theory that because he stood upon a box or under an umbrella, he was thereby keeping a common betting house. The section dealing with a gaming house is another section of similar character to the section that deals with a betting house, and the proposal now before the committee simply resolves itself into this form. Whereas the existing law, section 226, defines a common gaming house to be a house, room or place,' &c., the amending section which the committee has reported and recommended, proposes to change the phraseology from the words 'gaming house' to the words 'gaming place,' and instead of calling it a 'house, room or place kept by a person,' &c., it is now to be called a 'place used by a person,' so that it will not necessarily be an inclosure at all, but in the language of the definition, which, by the next section, it is proposed to apply to this section under consideration, the word 'place' is to include 'any place whether inclosed or not and whether it is used permanently or temporarily and whether there is or is not the exclusive right of user.' In voting upon this proposition, hon. gentlemen should understand that what they are doing is really taking that integral portion of the proposal submitted or reported by the committee with the idea of changing the existing law in order to make 'common gaming house' or 'common gaming place' something that is not inclosed, or stationary, or permanently or exclusively used, but something which is, as it were, just a step toward what I spoke of this afternoon, that is getting after the individual bettor if he makes a bet when he is sitting on his seat.

Mr. BURRELL. I am not anxious to detain the House, but I do not feel like giving a silent vote. I had not intended taking part in this discussion, but some incidents that occurred just before six o'clock impel me to give the reasons for the faith that is in me, a faith that has been seriously deepened by the remarks of the hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth). As far as the amendemnt proposed by the hon. member for West Northumberlan (Mr. McColl) is concerned, its adoption would practically mean the voting down of the Bill. His amendment must be regarded as a crucial matter, as the Minister of Justice explains that while the provisions of the old criminal law are for getting after the gambler or the criminal who breaks the law in every place except at a race-track meeting, the object of the amendment to the Criminal Code proposed to the Bill introduced by the hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Miller) means to go after the professional gambler wherever he is and, if possible, stamp him out of existence. That, as far as I understand it, is the general principle involved. I think we all thoroughly understand that we are loath to be beaten into virtue by legislative enactment. We do not believe that a legislative enactment can improve our moral standpoint or make men law-abiding citizens. It must also be understood that to a great many men, and myself amongst them, race-track gambling and betting have no particular temptation, and we must be all the more careful as we may have other forms of temptation not to

Compound for sins we are inclined to
By damning those we have no mind to.

We ought, at all events, to give fair play to the gentlemen who are in sympathy with the amendment proposed by the hon. member for West Northumberland. The strongest speeches I heard, in following this debate, against this proposed amendment to the law were made by the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton) and the hon. Minister of Justice. The hon. member for Brandon stated that his principal reasons—and we ought to give them all due weight, were these: First of all, that the matter had not been threshed out before the country. I might deal with that very briefly. I do not think that he can put that argument forward very seriously. As was pointed out, there never has been an amendment to the Criminal Code that has ever been threshed out before the country. I might retort to my hon. friend the member for Brandon that a great many matters that this government have incorporated into law have not been threshed out before the country, namely, the Autonomy Bill, the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Bill, the Naval Bill. The country never had an opportunity of saying a word in regard to these measures. He also introduced an argument with which I had more sympathy, and that was that the passage of laws with which a preponderating part of the public were not in active sympathy only tended to increase the general contempt for law. That argument has a great deal of weight. But the hon. member for Brandon pushed his argument to the farthest point, and he did admit that there were a great many evils—he numbered them as four, all of which meant betting and gambling in various forms, and he assented to the fact that these were evils that ought to be stamped out. But, I was rather astonished that he could not carry his argument to its logical conclusion and assent also to the necessity of stamping out the fifth, namely, that which is a legalization of gambling on the race-track. Let me deal with another phase of the amendment with regard to the first part of the Bill and with the important principle involved in the Bill. I feel that whether we gamble on races or do not we have to deal with these questions as citizens of a great country, and as men interested in progress along the best lines in every community, and we must admit that gambling and betting, carried on as they are in that form, are provocative of a great many evils leading directly to cheating, unfair play of various kinds, and even to worse and more nefarious practices.

I do not say they always lead to these evils, but I do say, and I think the House will agree, that wholesale and legalized gambling on race-tracks does not foster the best spirit of sport. That while those who love sport for sport's sake would do nothing unfair, men to whom the love of sport is entirely subordinate to the love of gain would take a more active part in connection with these races, and I say there is thus an influence at work leading to cheating, unfair play, pulling races, etc. Indirectly it leads to graver evils, such as embezzlement, forgery, debt, etc. I believe at all events, and this is my reason for voting, that gambling and betting in any way to a certain extent, but certainly in a large and professional way, is anti-social in its influence, that is, it does not tend to a healthy constructive progress in a community, but rather tends to its disintegration. The hon. the leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden) stated before six o'clock that he thought the government ought to accept some responsibility for a measure of this kind, and on this point he was replied to by the hon. the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) and the right hon. gentleman who leads the House (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I thoroughly agree that the government ought to assume such responsibility, and for the reason that it is not an ordinary measure, it is not an ordinary private Bill, but a Bill that involves an amendment to the Criminal Code of Canada, for which surely the government must have some responsibility. The right hon. gentleman who leads this House very airily washed his hands of any responsibility in regard to this measure. He has not told us, as I think he should have done, where he stood on this particular measure, how he viewed so important a thing as an amendment to the Criminal Code, which certainly directly concerns him. But what is the peculiar position in which the government stand? The right hon. gentleman and the Minister of Finance have said that this is a question of great gravity upon which the members of the government do not agree, and the Minister of Finance, therefore, said it would be more sensible to leave it to the judgment of the House. Certainly it would be more sensible as party tactics for the government to leave it to the House. I have always been told that the doctrine of cabinet solidarity is a very important one, one that should be taken seriously. They are throwing that to one side. What is the position if the Minister of Finance or the Prime Minister or other ministers of the Crown choose to vote for the proposed Bill? We are in this position that there is an amendment to the Criminal Code which has been denounced in the strongest and, I was going to say, in the most violent, but certainly in very strong language by the chief minister of the Crown dealing with the law, the Minister of Justice. He has poured ridicule on the Bill brought in by the member for South Grey (Mr. Miller) and he has added—and that is why I say it is the Bill, the whole Bill and nothing but the Bill—he has added that he was going to vote for an amendment which practically kills the Bill. The Minister of Justice laid stress on the fact that the gravest injury that could be done to the body politic in this whole matter was to bring in a contempt of law in general, because we were passing statutes that could not be lived up to. Let me ask the Minister of Justice what position will the country and parliament be in if members of the government like the First Minister and other ministers vote for this Bill and allow it to be carried, and it is carried in face of the fact that the Minister of Justice has condemned it as a piece of preposterous legislation which is a farce and absolutely wrong. Is that not bringing the whole law into contempt, if the chief minister of the law and the government allow a piece of legislation to go on the statute-book which they regard as farcial. I say it is bringing the law into contempt to a greater extent than anything the government have done, and I believe that government ought to arrange a fair compromise if they can, or at all events take some steps to shoulder the responsibility of so important a measure as this.

Committee divided on amendment of Mr. McColl.

Amendment agreed to, yeas 78, nays 77.

On section 2—common betting place defined—

Mr. McCOLL. From the vote which has just been taken I would infer that the sense of the House is in favour of the amendment to the whole Bill, as I suggested last night. If that be the case, we might vote on the balance of the Bill, as I suggested. If not, I would have to take the same step as I did on the previous section, moving to strike it out, for the same reasons.

Mr. MILLER. If I cannot make the provisions of the Bill any better, I do not want to make them any worse, and I object to the amendment of the hon. member for West Northumberland. If that is not in order, I would like to move an amendment to section 2, by changing the definition of the word 'place' in subsection 2, by striking out the words: 'whether it is or is not a fixed place,' and substituting the words 'whether it is used permanently or temporarily.'

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Must we not take up first the amendment of the hon. member for West Northumberland?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I did not understand that the hon. member for West Northumberland made a motion.

Mr. McCOLL. I made the suggestion, and would like to hear the expression of the House upon it, that we vote on the whole Bill, as I first suggested. If that is not in order, I will have to move to strike out this section.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I do not feel any more at liberty to allow the original amendment of the hon. member for West Northumberland than I did on the previous section.

Mr. McCOLL. Then I move to strike out this section for the same reasons and on the same grounds as I did section 1.

Mr. CONGDON. I desire to state why I am opposed to this section, as I am to several sections of this Bill. The law in this country relating to common gaming houses, common betting houses, and the other matters mentioned in these sections, has stood long, is in thorough accord with the traditions of English law, and has been well settled by innumerable judicial decisions. I doubt if there are any sections of the Criminal Code as to which there have been more litigation and more illuminating decisions than the sections relating to gambling; and the reason for the present attempt to wipe out those sections is that they do not cover cases which they were never intended to cover. That would be giving them a fantastic meaning. It is proposed to amend sections which are generally settled, wisely settled, usefully settled, as they stand, in order to make them cover what they were never intended to cover. If you amend them in this way, you will throw into confusion that portion of the law which is already well settled. If an amendment were introduced dealing expressly with the race-track, and dealing with it in a reasonable way, I for one would support it; but to amend the whole law on this subject merely to cover that one case, and to convert 'a common gaming house' or 'a common betting house' into 'a common betting place,' terms which are not known to the law, and which we do not understand, and to give this phrase a strained and extensive meaning, is not in my opinion called for by the state of the law on the subject, and is not in the interest of the proper restriction of gambling. It is the universal opinion of those who have studied the subject that there is great danger in gambling, and that there is wisdom is the restriction imposed by the British law which deals with gaming houses and betting houses when they become public nuisances. The British law on this as on other subjects does not deal so much with their moral aspects as with the duties and rights of men towards their fellowmen; it does not deal with this matter as a moral question, but as a question affecting the public and individual. For the reasons I have given, I intend to vote against all these amendments which propose in an uncertain and unsafe way to amend provisions of the law which are now well established and most useful in their operation.

Mr. OWEN. I beg to move that the rules of this committee be amended, so that instead of taking a standing vote, we call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. That motion cannot be received. The question is on Mr. McColl's amendment and Mr. Miller's amendment to the amendment.

Mr. SPROULE. I did not understand that the amendments came in that order. I understand that the hon. member for South Grey proposed to amend the section of his own Bill, and that the hon. member for West Northumberland moved an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I was not certain in my own mind whether the hon. member for West Northumberland moved an amendment when he first rose. I asked the question, and I understand that he claims that he did.

Mr. SPROULE. That was not my understanding. He first desired to know whether the vote could be taken on the balance of the Bill. On your intimating that it could not, he moved his amendment. But before that the hon. member for South Grey had moved an amendment to his Bill.

Mr. LANCASTER. I want to point out to this committee what this section means. 'The word place as used in this section, and the preceding section includes any place, whether inclosed or not'. That is very fine legislation for us to pass; it means anywhere in this world. A man is going to be fined for betting anywhere. As one gentleman has said, it is fantastic legislation.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The words 'permanently or temporarily' are in the Bill now, and the words which the hon. member for South Grey proposes to strike out are not in it at all.

Mr. MILLER. The Bill which the hon. leader of the opposition has before him is the reprinted Bill as suggested by the committee, but that is not the Bill before the House, and I want by my amendment to make the Bill conform to the reprinted Bill, as suggested in the report. I want to make my amendment to conform to the new reprint of the Bill, which the committee suggested in their report.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Are we considering the Bill as reported by the committee?

Mr. MILLER. As it was introduced into the House.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Not at all.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. It is the Bill reported as amended by the special committee. If the hon. gentleman intends his amendment to be to that Bill, it will be necessary to write it out.

Mr. MILLER. Then if we are considering the Bill as reported——

An hon. MEMBER. Do you not know what we are considering?

Mr. MILLER. As a matter of procedure, I did not understand whether we were considering the Bill as originally before the House, or the one recommended by the committee. Then I would propose this amendment:

To add the following subsection 3 to section 2: The provisions of this section shall not extend to the case of a bet between individuals, neither of whom is engaged in any way in book-making or in betting as a business.

Mr. GERMAN. It is quite useless to put the amendment to the amendment. If the amendment of the hon. member for West Northumberland (Mr. McColl) carries, that does away with the section altogether. Let us vote on the amendment as moved by that hon. gentleman. If that carries, the amendment to the amendment is of no avail.

Committee divided on the amendment of the hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Miller) to the amendment of the hon. member for West Northumberland (Mr. McColl).

Amendment to the amendment negatived. Yeas, 74; nays, 87.

Committee divided on the amendment of the hon. member for West Northumberland (Mr. McColl) that section 2 be struck out.

Amendment agreed to. Yeas, 85; nays, 73.

On section 3,

3. Section 228 of the said code is repealed and the following is substituted therefor:—

228. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to one year's imprisonment who keeps any disorderly house, or other disorderly place, that is to say, any common bawdy-house, common gaming-place, or common betting-place, or opium joint, as hereinbefore defined.

2. Any one who appears, acts or behaves as master or mistress, or as the person having the care, government or management of any disorderly house, or other disorderly place, shall be deemed to be the keeper thereof, and shall be liable to be prosecuted and punished as such, although in fact he or she is not the real owner or keeper thereof.

Mr. McCOLL. Mr. Chairman, the amendments I find necessary to move are before you as moved last night. I think, in view of what has taken place, and of the votes that we have taken, it is clear that the sense of the House is in favour of my amendment which, as has been explained, differs from the Bill in that it follows the English legislation drafted by Lord Davey, one of the best lawyers in England, while the Bill is what is termed American or Yankee legislation. I move that this section 3 be struck out, and the remainder of the Bill proposed by me be voted upon in one motion.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I cannot even at this stage accede to the manner in which the hon. member desires to proceed. It may be open, at a later stage for the House to take some steps to refer to a special committee——

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. It is in order for the hon. member to substitute his amendment for this clause. Let him move it.

Mr. McCOLL. I move that section 3 of the Bill he struck out, and that section 228 of the Code be made to read as follows:

228. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to one year's imprisonment who keeps any disorderly house, that is to say, any common bawdy-house, common gaming-house, or common betting-house, or opium joint, as hereintofore defined.

2. Any one who appears, acts or behaves as master or mistress, or as the person having the care, government, or management of any disorderly house, shall be deemed to be the keeper thereof, and shall be liable to be prosecuted and punished as such, although in fact he or she is not the real owner or keeper thereof.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Should not the amendment 228a go also?

Mr. McCOLL. Then, I will add also the following:

228a 1. Every one is guilty of an offence who frequents or loiters in streets or public places, on behalf either of himself or of any other person, for the purpose of book-making or betting, or wagering, or agreeing to bet or wager, or paying or receiving or settling bets, and shall——

In the amendment as I gave notice of it these penalties 'are blank,' but I have asked leave to fill in the blanks so as to make the remainder of the amendment read:

(a) In the case of a first offence be liable on conviction to a fine not exceeding $50;

(b) In the case of a second offence be liable on conviction to a fine not exceeding $100; and

(c) In the case of a third or subsequent offence, or in any case where it is proved that the person whilst committing the offence had any betting transaction with a person under the age of sixteen years, be liable on conviction to a fine not exceeding $250, or to imprisonment, with or without hard labour, for a term not exceeding six months, without the option of a fine;

and shall in any case be liable to forfeit all books, cards, papers and other articles relating to betting which may be found in his possession.

2. Any constable may take into custody, without warrant, any person found committing an offence under this section, and may seize and detain any article liable to be forfeited under this Act.

3. Any person who appears to the court to be under the age of sixteen years, shall, for the purpose of this section, be deemed to be under that age, unless the contrary be proved, or unless the person charged shall satisfy the court that he had reasonable ground for believing otherwise.

4. For the purpose of this section the word 'street' shall include any highway and any public bridge, road, lane, footway, square, court, alley or passage, whether a thoroughfare or not: and the words 'public place' shall include public park, garden, or seabeach, and any uninclosed ground to which the public for the time being have restricted access, and shall also include every inclosed place (not being a public park or garden) to which the public have a restricted right of access, whether on payment or otherwise, if at or near every public entrance there is conspicuously exhibited by the owners or persons having control of the place a notice prohibiting betting therein.

Mr. McCOLL.

I may say that section 228a follows expressly Lord Davey's Act which has already been explained.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Do I understand the motion to be that section 3 of the Bill be struck out, and that 228a be added to the existing——

Mr. McCOLL. No, but that section 3 is struck out, and that what I have read as 228 and 228a be substituted therefor.

Mr. SINCLAIR. I desire to have an explanation of the meaning of the clause, 4, of 228a. It defines the words 'public place' and includes certain inclosed places, 'if at or near every public entrance there is conspicuously exhibited by the owners or persons having control of the place a notice prohibiting betting therein.' I would like to have the hon. member's (Mr. McColl) views as to what that last section means. It appears to me to leave it within the control of the owner of the park, by declining to put up the notice referred to, to permit betting to be legally carried on in the place.

Mr. McCOLL. As I understand it, that is to protect a park of this kind, for instance, we have in my own town an association known as the Horse Show Association. That association has purchased a park in which to hold its annual shows. But that park may be used at times for other purposes. This is, if I may use the expression, a semi-private property which is sometimes used for public purposes. I understand that under the law, that would not be anything, but a public place in the strict sense, and we can keep it in a private character by putting up a notice that betting is not to be permitted. That would protect the owners of the park against any intrusion, and reduce betting to that extent.

Mr. MILLER. I see that my hon. friend from West Northumberland and the hon. member for Lincoln are very anxious to pass this amendment in the interests of the racing associations and the professional gamblers.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. MILLER. That is the way it appears to me, and I do not think that is what the committee desires. I do not think that this committee having adopted the Bill that was introduced, desires to add insult to injury and to make matters much worse than they are to-day, therefore, I move that the committee rise.

Mr. LANCASTER. I do not think the hon. gentleman is sincere in this matter. He brings in a Bill nominally for the benefit of the morals of the country, and because he cannot get exactly what he desires, he wants to throw the whole thing up. He objects to making a sensible law in this country for the protection of morals, of which he claims to be the guardian. I am not as insincere as the hon. gentleman, I am not here fooling with this matter. As I have said, I am prepared to assist in every way to make a good law. But because this hon. gentleman cannot have his way in every particular, because he cannot go to the extreme point, even against the opinion of the Minister of Justice, he wants the committee to rise without making any restriction of this very gambling that he pretends to wish to abolish.

Mr. HENDERSON. I understand that the hon. member for South Grey has moved that the committee rise. I presume that his intention is to kill the Bill. Now, I want to tell the hon. gentleman that I am not going to help him to kill the Bill. I do not think at this stage that the Bill should be abandoned to its fate, and I protest against the motion.

Mr. TURRIFF. I think the remarks made by the hon. member for Lincoln are somewhat unfair to my hon. friend for South Grey. My hon. friend from South Grey thinks honestly that the Bill as proposed to be amended, or the Bill of the hon. member for West Northumberland, is more in the interest of the book-maker and the professional gambler than the law we have now on the statute-book. That being the case, it seems to me it is perfectly proper for the hon. member for South Grey, and he is not subject to unfair criticism, when he suggests that the committee rise, which will have the effect of doing away with the proposed legislation altogether, and leaving on the statute-book the legislation that has now been in force for some years.

Mr. MILLER. I am not particular about the language used, I am not accusing anybody. I said that I think the amendment proposed would make things worse than they are to-day, and I will give you one more reason why I think so. The amendment proposed by the hon. member for West Northumberland expressly exempts betting between individuals, that is exactly the language used, betting between individuals is permitted. I submitted that language to the Minister of Justice for his opinion, and he said that the book-maker is an individual, and that if that language were used in the Bill, and if a book-maker proceeded against under the Bill were to go to a lawyer to defend him, the first thing the lawyer would rest his case upon would be to point out to the book-maker that he is an individual and, therefore, exempt under the law, using the same words that are used by the member for West Northumberalnd. That, then, would appear to offer a wide open door, and to protect the book-maker in everything he desires to do.

Mr. FIELDING. I would suggest to my hon. friend for South Grey that if his motion passes, it will kill the Bill for the present session; whereas if he simply moves that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again, he will leave an opportunity of reaching an agreement. My suggestion is that if there be any possibility of an agreement, by leaving the matter open an agreement may be reached; whereas if we simply rise, that puts an end to the Bill. I am assuming that the hon. gentleman who may not agree with the member for South Grey are still desirous of introducing, as they suggest, some amendments. I do not think we could hope to-night, in the confusion of the various sections and the various amendments, to reach an intelligent judgment in the way of improving the law. But if the matter be left open, hon. gentlemen will have an opportunity of framing their amendments, and there may still be a chance. Therefore, I do not intend to vote with the hon. member for South Grey that the committee rise; but if he would move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again, I would vote with him.

Mr. MILLER. I will adopt the suggestion of the Finance Minister, and I move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Mr. LANCASTER. We have been held so strictly to the rules of order about amendments, that I think I will have to be technical also. The hon. gentleman has not my consent to withdraw his motion, if that amounts to anything. I do not think the hon. gentleman should play that sort of game to this House.

Mr. STRATTON. Then I will move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Stratton) cannot duplicate a motion that has already been moved. I am inclined to think that the hon. member for South Grey can withdraw his motion without the consent of the committee, although I would be willing to hear the opinions of experienced members on that point. The motion before the Chair is that the committee rise; the amendment to the hon. member for South Grey is that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Some hon. MEMBERS. That is the motion.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. If it is out of order we will put it in order. I would move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again. We have been two days on this Bill, and it has been amended in a way that was not anticipated by my hon. friend from South

Grey, who thinks that the sense of the House is not with him. There is a good deal of excitement on both sides of the House. My hon. friend does not abandon his measure, but simply asks the committee to rise. I am quite sure that it is more in accordance with the traditions of the House that we should adopt the suggestion of my hon. friend that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again. The matter can be discussed. I do not know that very much progress can be made during the present session, but let us not, upon a matter of this importance, give way to excitement. Let us proceed in a regular way and accept the suggestion that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Mr. NORTHRUP. May makes it perfectly clear as to the rights of an hon. gentleman to withdraw his motion. The last edition of May, page 280, says that:

> The member who has proposed a motion, can only withdraw it by leave of the House, granted without any negative voice.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. In view of what May says upon the subject the hon. member for Grey may not withdraw his motion that the committee rise.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I move in amendment to add the words, 'report progress, and ask leave to sit again.'

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Under the circumstances, I am informed that that amendment cannot be moved. There may be no amendment moved to the motion that the committee rise.

Motion negatived.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Then I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Mr. LANCASTER. I think we ought to do something with this Bill. We have spent two days upon this serious question of gambling. Let me appeal to the committee as well as to the Prime Minister that we do not waste these two days, and, while the matter is fresh in our minds, put a proper Bill on the statute-books of this country. Let us pass a Bill as suggested by the Minister of Justice which seems to be in accordance with the opinion of the majority of the House. Why should we have wasted these two days when we are here in the interest of the country to suppress this gambling evil? Why does not the hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Miller) join with the majority of the House in making the best Bill he can under the circumstances? What respect can the people of this country have for us who have spent two days upon this question, now wasted, in the opinion of the Prime Minister, and have done nothing to put this Bill in proper shape? We can do it in twenty minutes or fifteen minutes if we concentrate our minds upon it. The contention is all over, the main points of the Bill have been settled. They have been settled against the hon. member from Grey, but they have been settled, in the opinion of this House, in the interest of the country. Let us put them into shape and let up pass this Act. Do not let the country say that we are a lot of children, and farcical children at that, spending two whole days and doing nothing.

Mr. GERMAN. This motion will no doubt carry, and the carrying of it will very likely result in no further action being taken on this Bill during this session. It will leave the race-tracks, the race-track owners and the race-meetings exactly in the position they have stood in hitherto. But the great question to my mind in reference to the whole proceedings is to limit the number of days on which race-meetings should be held. The amendments which have been made to the Act are really infinitesimal in their effect. The so-called Miller Bill is no more effective than the law as it stands now. What I was anxious for, and what I believe the majority of the members of this committee and this parliament are anxious for, is to have it definitely and finally settled as to how many days each year races should be held on the various race-tracks. I believe the consensus of opinion of the whole people, at any rate of Ontario, is that two meetings of twelve days each during the year are quite enough, that races should not be conducted longer than that, and I think it will be well, as this question will not come up again very likely this session, that we should tell the race-track owners and operators to take notice that unless they shorten the terms of their meetings very likely this matter will come up again next session, and be dealt with in a way that will not be to their satisfaction. I think that if section 235, as it is in the Miller Bill, had been reached it should have restricted the number of days racing and fixed definitely and finally that question for all time to come. That is the principal object of the Bill, and I think that if those people who are engaged in this legitimate sport—and it is a sport that I would like to see continued, but kept under reasonable restrictions—should take notice that long race-meetings will not be tolerated in Canada.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Did I understand the Prime Minister to say that this would be the last of this Bill this session?

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. I thought I understood him to say so. I am asking for information.

An hon. MEMBER. It may, or it may not be.

Mr. McCOLL. I think that in view of all that has taken place it would be best possibly to accept this motion. Of course, the motion that the committee rise would absolutely kill the Bill for the present session. The motion before the Chair might result in still giving proper legislation before the end of the session. I think that the promoters of the Bill, in view of what has taken place to-night, must be convinced that the sense of the House is not in their favour.

Mr. TALBOT. What about the men outside?

Mr. McCOLL. They will be willing to concede that, and after having had time to consider the amendments that I have suggested to the Bill, if all parties consented, the Bill still could come up during this session without wasting any considerable time.

Mr. LANCASTER. We would not be doing our duty to the people if we did not pass this amendment to-night. We are all of the opinion that it should pass. Why should we postpone this discussion any longer? We have spent two days in this House working strenuously in the effort to get this gambling evil restricted in this country. I pay the hon. gentleman the compliment of saying that he has perfectly drawn the section. It goes a great deal farther than the section he is striking out of the Miller Bill towards restricting gambling. The Miller section does not restrict it, or does not go within six times as far as the other section. My hon. friend's amendment has all the restrictions that the Miller Bill has and more besides, and I do not understand why the hon. member for South Grey, who professes a desire to suppress gambling, does not stand up and say that he will accept the substituted section for the restriction of gambling which is ten times more effective than the one which is struck out. I would say to the hon. member for West Northumberland (Mr. McColl) that I think he ought not to waste his time as he has done for the last two days, and I do not think he should have wasted the time of the hon. members of this House, because we have important business on the order paper. This is an important item, and we have wasted two days upon it unless we put this Bill into concrete form. The Minister of Justice is here, every other member of the government who has taken any interest in the matter is here, we have the brighest minds in the House here to-night, or most of them, and I think we ought to give the benefit of the two days' work that we have done, and put through this new legislation to restrict the gambling evil in this country. I say again that the section that the hon. member for West Northumberland read—and this will reach the hon. member for East Northumberland too, because he is in favour of restricting the gambling evil as much as the hon. member for West Northumberland restricts gambling to the extent of the whole of section 228a which is not in the Miller Bill as reported to the House, and we have made for the benefit, willingly it is true, but for the benefit of the member for South Grey, the very law he has been urging all session and I think we ought to do it before we rise to-night, and get rid of this matter.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Will any further time of the House be devoted to this Bill?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I think we want to come to prorogation, and we have done very well by this Bill. If the two sides were to come to an agreement, I think every one ought to be anxious to facilitate business, but unless this is done I do not think the promoter of the Bill would ask us to devote more time to it.

Motion agreed to, and progress reported.

NATIONAL BATTLEFIELDS OF QUEBEC.

Bill (No. 188) to amend the Act respecting the National Battlefields of Quebec, Mr. Aylesworth, read the second time and House went into committee thereon.

On section 1—expropriation.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What changes are effected by this amendment?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. The whole scope of the amendment is to substitute proceedings under the Expropriation Act for proceedings under the Railway Act. This is a change which the chairman of the commission, as I understand with the concurrence of his fellow members of the commission, thinks is of very considerable importance. He came to Ottawa accompanied by the solicitor for the commission to discuss this proposal, along with some other changes which, after discussion, did not seem to be of so much importance and which have therefore not been proposed. Under the existing Act if the commission are not able to agree with any owner as to the price to be paid, the proceedings by which they expropriate have to follow the detailed procedure of the Railway Act, the filing of a plan, I suppose with the Minister of Railways, and the statement of the surveyor, and all the steps which would require to be taken in the case of expropriating land if it were required for a railway. The amendment, as hon. gentlemen will see, relieves the commission of these preliminary steps and requires the proceedings to fix the price for the land which has been taken against the owners will to be had in the Exchequer Court instead of before a Board of Arbitrators to be selected in accordance with the provisions of the Railway Act. The steps that are to be taken are marked out in detail in the original statute and are not interfered with. There must be first an estimate of the probable amount which the property will cost provided by the commission and submitted to this House. The approval of this House must first be had to the proposed transaction. Once that approval is secured, the proceedings will continue, either by agreement or by expropriation.

Mr. SPROULE. When this Bill was being considered before, I put a question which I repeat now, because the answer I got then, if I understood it correctly, was not satisfactory; that is, in the event of the commission requiring what is known as the Ross rifle property, which is under lease, but which belongs to the Crown, would it be expropriated, or by what means would it be taken over?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I can only say that I gave to the hon. gentleman the only answer I can possibly make to the question. The commission has no power to touch that or any other piece of property without the authority of parliament. If the commission propose to take it, and parliament assents and authorizes taking it, it could either be purchased by agreement or expropriated like any other piece of property.

Mr. SPROULE. Does it seem reasonable that you could expropriate to the benefit of the Crown, property already vested in the Crown, and only under lease?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. In such a case expropriation proceedings would not be necessary. If the commission desired not to acquire this property and obtained the authority of parliament to take it, and if it is already Crown property, nothing more would be requisite than the necessary transfer.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It would be necessary to expropriate the lease hold interest.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. Of course, the interest of the tenant or lessee would have to be expropriated if the parties interested could not agree upon the value.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What property has been acquired by the commission, and what property is it proposed to acquire?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. As far as I am able to answer that question, none has yet been acquired.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No property, so far as I know, has been acquired, but I think I am correct in saying that the intention of the commissioners is to acquire property along what is known as the Belvidere road, which connects the Plains of Abraham with the St. Foy road, and some property along the St. Foy road.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. As I understand the Minister of Justice, any property other than that described in the Act of 1908, which it is proposed to acquire, must be acquired by application to parliament, and by an amendment to the Act already passed.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What funds are available to the commisison for purposes of expropriation?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The commission have now in their hands $300,000, if I am correctly informed.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

CLAIMS AGAINST GOVERNMENT RAILWAYS.

Bill (No. 151) to provide for the adjudication of small claims arising in respect of the operation of the government railways. read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

On section 1,

Mr. MEIGHEN. While this section is under discussion, possibly the committee, and the Minister of Railways will permit me to refer to Bill (No. 55) relative to claims against railways, and which I had the honour to introduce in the House, and which was referred at the suggestion of the Minister of Railways to the Railway Committee, and by it to a subcommittee. I had an apprehension at the time of the reference that the effect would be to put the Bill at such a place on the order paper as would render it impossible to have it considered this session, and I would like to ask the Minister of Railways whether or not he will facilitate the enactment of a law as proposed in my Bill, and as recommended by the subcommittee, by including it in his general amendment to the Railway Act.

Mr. GRAHAM. There are several Bills in the same position as that of my hon. friend. When I suggested referring them to the Railway Committee, it was for the sole purpose that all parties interested might be heard. I might say to my hon. friend that in a case of that kind, unless I have some particular reason for not doing so, I certainly intend, with the consent of the House, to make it a part of my Bill. I think the Railway Committee approved of the subcommittee's report, and I am going to ask the consent of the House that that Bill, also one of the hon. member for Lincoln, and perhaps one or two others, be included as amendments to my Bill when it comes up.

On section 7,

Mr. LANCASTER. I do not understand how a counter-claim could be very well raised by the Crown in an action of this kind which would be admissible to set off against the claim. If the Crown had a claim against any one, it would not wait until he took out suit against it and then make a counter-claim.

Mr. GRAHAM. Sometimes there are claims against individuals which we cannot collect. But if it should happen that any one of them has a claim against the government, we can have ours set off as a counter-claim.

Mr. LANCASTER. You transfer it to the Exchequer Court?

Mr. GRAHAM. If our claim is larger, we cannot very well go on with the case in the smaller court.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

HARBOUR COMMISSIONERS OF MONTREAL.

House in committee on Bill (No. 191) to provide for further advances to the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal.—Mr. Fielding.

Mr. FIELDING. When this matter was last before the committee, we went through the Bill and practically disposed of it, but the hon. member for South Lanark (Mr. J. Haggart) requested that, before finally disposing of it, I should place on the table the scheme which the Montreal Harbour Commission were known to have in connection with their improvements. In consequence of that request I have brought a plan which I will lay on the table. The hon. member (Mr. J. Haggart) is not present, but he will have an opportunity to consult this plan later on. I may explain that this plan has not been approved by the Governor in Council. It is more comprehensive and includes more than we propose, but it indicates the scheme the commission have in mind. Though the hon. member for South Lanark is not present, I will lay the plan on the table. So far as I know this is the only information that is desired.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

POST OFFICE ACT AMENDMENT.

House went into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

Resolved, that it is expedient to amend the Civil Service Act, chapter 16 of the Revised Statutes, 1906, by providing for the payment of salaries as follows:—

To post office inspectors on appointment, $2,500, with an annual increase of $100 to a maximum of $3,500.

To assistant post office inspectors and superintendents of the railway mail service on appointment, $1,600, with an annual increase of $100 to a maximum of $2,500.

To authorize the increase to the minimum of the salary of any such officers whose salary is at present less than the minimum.

To assistant postmasters, on appointment, a salary of not less than $1,100 and not more than $2,800.—Mr. Lemieux.

Mr. LEMIEUX. It is proposed to raise the salaries of the post office inspectors, the assistant post office inspectors, the superintendents of railway mail clerks and certain assistant postmasters. The salaries of these officers are fixed by the Civil Service Act relating to the outside service. It has been found that this class of employees are those upon whose efficiency and industry we must chiefly rely for good administration of the department. The post office inspectors are the very marrow of the whole service. Under the Post Office Act it is their duty to:

(a) Superintend the performance of the mail service, take good care that, as far as the state of the roads and other circumstances permit, the stipulations of all contracts for the conveyance of the mail are strictly complied with by the contractor.

(b) Instruct new postmasters in their duty.

(c) Keep the postmasters to their duty in rendering their accounts and paying over their balances.

And so on and so on. They are, as I say, the officers on whose efficiency the whole postal service and the administration of the department depends. Their salaries have not been revised, practically, since confederation. They are at the head of the service, and I think we should give them, this year, now that times are more prosperous, some little lift. Last year, with the concurrence of the House, I gave increases to the lower grades of the service, the stampers, sorters and labourers, and this year I thought the time had come when the post office inspectors, who render such efficient service, the assistant post office inspectors, the superintendents of the railway mail service and the assistant postmasters in the large cities, should be receive an increase. The amount involved is not very large. There are 16 inspectors, who will receive under this Bill increases amounting to $3,300. There are 18 assistant inspectors whose increases or salary will affect our revenue to the extent of $7,850. There are 8 superintendents of the railway mail service who will receive an aggregate increase of $750. And there are 7 assistant postmasters who will receive increases amounting to $3,000. In all, the amount involved under the present resolution is $10,800. If the House desires further explanation I shall be ready to give it.

For the sake of clearness this resolution will be included with one to be moved by my hon. friend the Minister of Inland Revenue (Mr. Templeman) and made part of a Bill affecting the Civil Service, which is to be presented in a day or two by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher). So I would ask that this resolution pass and that it should stand over for further consideration until it be incorporated in the Bill to which I have referred.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The post office inspectors have not had a readjustment of their salaries for a long time?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Since 1874.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. They have very important duties to perform, and, so far as I am concerned, I quite approve of these proposals.

Resolution reported, read the second time, and agreed to.

INDUSTRIAL DISPUTES INVESTIGATION ACT AMENDMENT.

House went into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

Resolved, that it is expedient to amend the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act, 1907, by providing for the payment to the chairman and members of a Board of Conciliation and Investigation, of an allowance at the rate of twenty dollars for each day's sitting of the board and for each day necessarily engaged in travelling from or to their places of residence to attend or after attending a meeting of the board.—Mr. King.

Mr. KING. This resolution is necessary in consequence of one amendment it is proposed to make to the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act. At the present time, the chairman of a board of conciliation receives $20 a day and the other members of the board $15 a day. It has appeared that this rate of remuneration is hardly adequate for the services rendered, having regard to the payments made in arbitrations of much less important subjects than those under the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act, and it is suggested to change the rates of remuneration to allow all the members of the board the same rate, viz., $20 a day. It is true that the chairman has some special duties to perform, but it has also been shown in practice that the other members of the board representing the two parties have also special services in the way of endeavouring to effect a conciliation, which services are performed at times other than those during which the board is sitting, and for which they receive no remuneration whatever. It is thought that by allowing all the members of the board $20 per day the services of the members in this particular will be compensated.

Mr. LANCASTER. Is there any difference in the qualification required from the chairman and from the other members of the board?

Mr. KING. The members of the board are chosen in the first instance by the parties themselves, each side is given an opportunity of naming a representative.

Mr. LANCASTER. They have not to have any special qualification—

Mr. KING. It is left to the parties themselves to say who shall represent them. As a matter of fact, the representatives that have been chosen in the past have been almost without exception men of exceptional ability.

Mr. LANCASTER. What was the reason in the first place for making a difference in the stipend between the one as compared with the other two?

Mr. KING. It was thought before we had any experience under the Act that probably the duties of the chairman would be more onerous than those of the other members of the board. But it has turned out that while the chairman has some duties that are not performed by the other members, the individual members have a great deal of work after hours conferring with the parties whom they represent with a view to bringing the two sides together, and their time is taken up in a manner in which the chairman's time is not.

Mr. BLAIN. What has been the expenditure for the enforcement of this Act during the past year?

Mr. KING. The first year $16,000 was required, the second year $20,000, and this year the expenditure will amount to $20,000, possibly a little more.

Mr. BLAIN. Has the hon. gentleman before him the number of disputes that have been settled in each of the years mentioned?

Mr. KING. The Act has now been on the statute-book for over three years. During that time there have been applications for 82 boards. In 76 cases out of the 82 settlements have been effected and strikes or lockouts averted, and in only 6 cases have the boards failed to bring about a settlement between the parties, or their findings not been accepted by one side or the other.

Mr. BLAIN. Is the number of applications on the increase?

Mr. KING. During the fiscal year ended March 31 of the present year, there were 30 applications for boards.

Mr. BLAIN. How many in 1906?

Mr. KING. From March 22, 1907, to March 31, 1908, there were 35 applications; in the next year there were 20, and last year 30. There have been 5 less during the last fiscal year than during the first year of the Act, and 10 more than during the second year.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. I would suggest that there should be a little difference in the compensation of the ordinary member on the board and the chairman. I think that when you take a judge off the bench to act as third man, you can hardly expect him to work for less than $25 a day.

Mr. KING. With regard to the judges, they already receive pay for their services under the regular allowance granted by parliament, and I think in their case at least there is no special reason for giving them any extra allowance. As to other persons who act in the position of chairman, I would say that the department has found no difficulty during the past in obtaining suitable persons at that remuneration.

Resolutions reported, read the second time, and agreed to.

Mr. KING moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 198) to amend the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act, 1907.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What business will be taken up to-morrow?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Some minor Bills. Then we will go into Committee of Supply on the Postmaster General's estimates, and then on the estimates of the Minister of Public Works.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 10.50 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, April 8, 1910.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

STANDING ORDERS COMMITTEE.

Mr. McCRANEY moved that the third report of the Select Standing Committee on Standing Orders be concurred in.

Mr. SPROULE. The Bill here referred to is the one I drew attention to yesterday, and the recommendation of the committee, is, as I understand, that in consequence of the fact that their notice in the 'Gazette' or the advertisement which has been published did not signify the intention of the incorporators to extend their transmission line into the province of Ontario, it was recommended that they be not given the authority to extend the line into Ontario, but to confine it to the Quebec side entirely. I take it that if concurred in, it would be an instruction to the committee to amend the Bill in that direction, and to the House of course to accept the Bill as so amended. It brings up another question which might be worthy of consideration, but I do not know if it is the proper time to consider it here. If it is confined solely to the one province, then there is a question as to whether it should not be right of that province to incorporate the company instead of the federal parliament. But with this recommendation to look into it carefully, I see no serious objection to the report being concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON MARINE AND FISHERIES.

Mr. SINCLAIR moved that the sixth report of the Select Standing Committee on Marine and Fisheries be concurred in.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is it?

Mr. SINCLAIR. They recommend that the proceedings of the committee on Marine and Fisheries be printed. On account of its importance to the commerce of the country, they recommend that the evidence taken before them and the arguments of counsel should be printed for the use of the House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Has the committee made any report on that Bill?

Mr. SINCLAIR. The Bill is still before the committee, the committee has not reported.

Motion agreed to.

ROYAL ASSENT.

Mr. SPEAKER. I have the honour to inform the House that I have received the following message:

Ottawa, April 7, 1910.

Sir,—I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Mr. Justice Girouard, acting as Deputy to His Excellency the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber to-morrow afternoon at 3.30 o'clock, for the purpose of giving assent to certain Bills which have passed the Senate and House of Commons during the present session.

I have the honour to be, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
C. J. JONES,
Assistant Governor General's Secretary.

The Honourable,
The Speaker of the House of Commons.

LICENSES TO FISHING VESSELS.

Mr. JAMESON moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 199) respecting licenses to fishing vessels. He said; This Act relates only to vessels of Canadian register engaged, or intending to engage, in the Atlantic fisheries of Canada. It will be purely optional with the owners of such craft to apply for license and so bring their vessels within the scope of the Act. But during the time any vessel is under license, her employment is limited to the fishing trade. The object of the Bill is to facilitate the movement of vessels employed in fishing, more especially those engaged in the fresh fish branch of the industry.

A Bill to be introduced concurrently with this one is intended to amend the Customs Act, and exempt vessels licensed under this Act from the necessity of reporting at the custom house, the two Acts being essential to that end. As the law stands, the skipper of a fishing vessel is liable to a penalty of $400 if he lands his fish or even drops anchor in harbour without reporting. This is a serious drawback to the fresh fish business, which cannot afford any unnecessary delays, which it is hoped this Bill will remove.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

CUSTOMS ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. JAMESON moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 200) to amend the Customs Act. He said: This is a companion Bill to the one which I have just introduced.

Motion agreed to. and Bill read the first time.

JUDGES OF SUPERIOR COURT, QUEBEC, AND KING'S BENCH, MANITOBA.

Mr. AYLESWORTH moved that the House go into committee on Monday next to consider the following proposed resolution:

That, in the opinion of this House, it is expedient to provide for the payment to four additional judges of the Superior Court in the province of Quebec, each $7,000 per annum, and to one additional judge of the Court of King's Bench in the province of Manitoba, $6,000 per annum.

Mr. SPEAKER.

He said: I have to state that His Excellency, the Governor General having been apprised of the subject matter of the resolution, recommends it to the House.

Motion agreed to.

BOUNTY ON CRUDE PETROLEUM.

Mr. GRAHAM moved that the House go into committee on Monday next to consider the following proposed resolution:

That it is expedient to provide that the bounty of one and one-half per cent per imperial gallon payable on crude petroleum from Canadian wells, or from shales or other substances mined in Canada, authorized by chapter 52 of the statutes of 1908, may be paid to the owner or occupier of the soil through which it is mined or won, or to such other person interested or injuriously affected by the mining operations or works, as the Governor in Council may approve.

He said: I have to say that His Excellency having been apprised of the subject matter of this resolution, recommends it to the consideration of the House.

Motion agreed to.

CIVIL SERVICE ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. FISHER moved that the House go into committee on Monday next to consider the following proposed resolution:

That it is expedient to amend the Civil Service Act by providing for the appointment of temporary clerks for the compilation of any decennial census, who may be employed for a period not exceeding three years, and who shall be eligible for the annual statutory increases provided by the Civil Service Amendment Act, 1908; by providing that the salary of a temporary clerk employed under section 23 of the said Act shall not be greater than the minimum salary authorized for subdivisions B of the second division, subject to be increased as authorized by section 33 of the said Act; and for the payment to collectors of customs of a salary not greater than $4,500 per annum; and for the payment of officers of inland revenue salaries not greater than the following maximum, viz.: inspectors, $3,200; collectors, $2,800; deputy collectors, $2,200; accountants, $1,800; special class excisemen, $2,500; first, second and third class excisemen, $1,500; probationary excisemen, $600; stenographers and typewriters, $700; messengers, $800; and for the payment of officers of the Post Office Department, as follows, viz.: Post office inspectors on appointment, $2,500, with an annual increase to a maximum of $3,500; assistant post office inspectors and superintendents of the Railway Mail Service on appointment, $1,600, with an annual increase to a maximum of $2,500, and to authorize the increase to the minimum of the salary of any such officers whose salary is at present less than the minimum; and assistant postmaster, on appointment, a salary of not less than $1,100 and not more than $2,800, and that the said salaries and increases shall be payable as from the first day of April, 1910.

He said: His Excellency the Governor General has been made acquainted with the substance of this resolution, and recommends it to the House.

Motion agreed to.

TREATMENT OF IMMIGRANTS.

On the orders of the day being called:

Mr. THOMAS BEATTIE (London). Mr. Speaker, there is a very important matter that I would like to bring to the attention of the minister in charge of immigration. This unfortunate affair happened at Quebec towards the close of navigation last year. A most respectable family who had been engaged in farming in the old country, composed of a father, wife, son and daughter, were induced to come out to this country by a very prominent citizen of London. This old country farmer determined to sell out his holding in England, come out to this country and take up a farm. Feeling that these people were strangers in the country and that they might have trouble in landing at Quebec upon their arrival, this gentleman in London took the pains to go to Quebec to meet them. He met them on the ship, escorted them to the immigration shed, and left them there to be examined and to pass their baggage. After waiting for some time he looked for his friends, but he could not find them at all. He hunted for an hour around the landing stage at Quebec, but he could not get any track of these four people. Finally, one of the truck wheelers informed him that there were four parties confined in a room upstairs. He went upstairs and inquired, but the officials refused to open the door. But, as he happened to be a very large man, six feet four inches in height, he threatened that if they did not open the door he would put his foot through it. Thereupon the door was opened and inside he found the mother and daughter sobbing and saying that they had been locked up as prisoners without any reason having been given. He could not get any reason from them why they were locked up. The father of this family had no less than £200 of British money on his person, which he had unfortunately showed to the person in charge. I do not want to insinuate that the man was actuated by improper motives, but we know that such things do occur, that they have occurred in the United States, and that they may occur in Canada. No immigration officer is fit to be in such a position who would lock four respectable people in a room and give them no reason therefor. The only impression that the man got was that they were locked up with the idea of being taken somewhere else afterwards and there given an opportunity of getting rid of their money. This is one of those cases in which respectable people should receive different kind of treatment. This man was pretty well to do in England, being a small farmer there, and he sold out his holding and brought all his money with him. He had £200 in British money on his person, and the balance he had in the form of a draft. Being an Englishman and being accustomed to regard public officials in uniform with confidence, he no doubt placed the same confidence in the uniformed officer at Quebec. This is a very serious matter, this gentleman has been speaking to me several times with regard to it, and I think it should be brought to the attention of the minister, because, if there are officers of that description in the employ of the government and if inquiry substantiates the case which I have presented to the minister, they should be dismissed immediately. There was no possible justification for locking up this respectable man, his wife, son and daughter without giving them some reason why they were detained. It is so extraordinary that I cannot account for it. I have crossed the Atlantic sixty or seventy times myself and I have never known a case of that kind. I have my suspicion that the officer, seeing the money, thought there was a chance to get these people some place outside where they might be relieved of it more readily. However, I do not make that charge. The minister should find out who that officer was, although, I suppose, it would be rather difficult. I just bring the case to the attention of the minister, and I would be very glad if the minister would make an inquiry or inform the head inspector and have him report on the case.

Mr. OLIVER. I am very sorry to hear of an occurrence such as my hon. friend (Mr. Beattie) has brought to the attention of the House. I only regret that it was not brought sooner after the alleged occurrence took place, so that we would be more certain of a satisfactory investigation. I can assure my hon. friend that his statements, as they have been made, will receive every attention at the hands of the department, because I can assure him and the House that the last thing that the administration wish is to in any way hamper or impede immigration of the character that my hon. friend has mentioned.

Mr. BEATTIE. I did not hear of the matter until ten days ago. I happened to meet this gentleman and he mentioned it to me. Otherwise I should have brought it to the attention of the House before. I am quite sure that the Minister of the Interior will do all that is possible to inquire into the matter and see that this condition is remedied.

Mr. M. CLARK. Before the House leaves the matter which has been brought to the attention of the minister by the hon. member for London (Mr. Beattie)—and I think he has placed the House of the country under an obligation by bringing the matter before the House—I wish to state that during the Easter holidays I was called upon by a farmer delegate returning from the duties to which he had been assigned in the old country by the Minister of the Interior. He told me that he noticed that a large number of immigrants who happened to come over on the same boat with himself were being treated with very scant courtesy by the officers of customs at the port of landing. He went and remonstrated with some of these officers, with the result that there was an immediate amelioration in the way that they handled some of the immigrants. This is, of course, one of the minor evils of a custom tariff, but in consideration for those who are coming out to be citizens of this country and in many cases with capital, although I do not think that should make much difference, I hope that the minister will look into this matter and not pass it off with the assurance that he is very sorry. It seems an inconsistent thing to be bringing immigrants to this country and then make them the victims of a circumstance like this, which only happened to reach us in the case of those who chanced to be travelling on the same boat as a farmer delegate returning from his duties in the old country.

Mr. OLIVER. I wish to again assure the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clark) that it is the intention and desire of the Immigration Department that their officers should treat immigrants with every possible consideration. Of course the duties of the immigration officers are imperative, and must be discharged without delay. There is no time for lengthy discussion, and promptitude may have been understood as incivility. While I would ask for the immigration officials every consideration in the discharge of their sometimes unpleasant, and always very hurried duties, I want to assure every one that the intention of the department is that every immigrant, whatever class he may belong to and whoever he may be shall be treated with due courtesy by the officers of this government. I will be glad to have any instances of the infraction of that rule brought to our attention at the earliest possible date. I would mention to my hon. friend from London (Mr. Beattie) that we would like to have the name—not necessarily for 'Hansard'—but we would like to have the name, and about the date of the occurrence, and also in the case mentioned by my hon. friend from Red Deer (Mr. Clark) we would like to have what information we can.

Mr. BEATTIE. I shall be very pleased to give the minister the name of the person. I may say that my reference was to a most respectable person who is in very good circumstances.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE—MR. BARKER.

Mr SAMUEL BARKER (East Hamilton). Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day are called I wish to direct attention to an item appearing in the Toronto 'World' of Monday last which I had not seen until my attention was called to it. It is one of a series of items commenting upon certain political matters at Ottawa, and it reads:

> One outstanding mistake of those who controlled the affairs of the party some few years ago was the acceptance of a salary by the leader of the opposition. Mr. Barker, of Hamilton, negotiated this matter with the Minister of Justice at the time, and Mr. Borden was cognizant of what was going on. The 'Globe' has been taunting Mr. Borden ever since and saying that in some way he was bound to be subservient towards the administration.

Now, Mr. Speaker. I would not personally have taken any notice of that; I pay very little heed to anything that appears in that paper because it is my opinion based on pretty general knowledge of the people where those connected with that paper are best known, that very little reliance can be placed upon what appears in it. But, it imputes inpropriety to the then Minister of Justice as well as to myself. That may not appear so clearly on the face of this particular item as if you read it in connection with the speeches of the manager of that paper, who is a member of this House, and his public utterances throughout the country. To those who perhaps may place some little trust in such speeches my silence on this occasion might be taken to be some confirmation of the charge of impropriety as against the then Minister of Justice, who is now absent filling a most important mission in Europe on behalf of the British empire. So I do not think it would be right for me to allow that item to go without a remark. The manager of that paper has again and again alluded to the Act of 1905, (which deals with the indemnity of all members of this House, and of the Senate, and some other matters, including the indemnity to the leader of the opposition) and he has spoken of it as a reward for the betrayal of the people. And, taking the whole of his speeches from time to time he alleges that the betrayal has been of the very broadest character by members of this House. That gentleman has spoken of public men who had wrought iniquity, and who by that Act of 1905 had voted themselves public money in salaries, in pensions, and in indemnity, as a reward for their treachery to the people. And in connection with it he in effect charges in that item that I, and the then Minister of Justice, negotiated that little—what I suppose he would call financial transaction—intended to reward public men for a betrayal of the interests of the people of this country. It is one of these skilful items which this gentleman indulges in. I do not mean to refer here so much to the gentleman who wrote the item, as to the man who inspired it, and I have no doubt who that was, and I am sorry he is not here to-day.

Mr. HUGHES. He will swear he was here to-day, though.

Mr. BARKER. Now, that he has made that charge, and that I have called attention to it I desire to give it the most unqualified contradiction. There is not a word of truth in it, and if I may be permitted to say so, I believe the man who inspired it, whoever he may be, knew he was telling a wilful lie. I have reason to say that; I have good reason to say that he knew better than one would imagine from that false statement. He charges me with having negotiated one feature of what he calls the reward for treachery that was provided by the Act of 1905, and he does that squarely. Now, I have no doubt that most members of this House recall very well what took place in 1905. Up to that time the indemnity to members was $1,500 —it had been placed at that amount in 1901. There was a great deal of agitation in the House owing to the very long sessions we had had for two or three years, and that was so especially in the case of gentlemen who had come from the Atlantic and Pacific shores, and practically had to stay here throughout the sessions without ever returning to their homes or their business during a session. It was considered a very great grievance indeed that these men should come here, and give up their time to the public service, and receive only $1,500. Rightly or wrongly, they had that grievance, and the first I heard of any action being taken was when I was told that a round robin was being circulated. Although I had never seen it, I was asked would I sign it. I said, no, I had never signed a round robin and I would not now. But I do not mean it to be supposed that I was opposed to the increase. I said I was in favour of a proper increase. The round robin was, I believe, presented to the leader of the opposition, and I presume to the leader of the government. At all events the result was, so far as my knowledge goes, that the leader of the opposition called into conference members of his party from every province which was then represented in the Conservative party. The question was discussed frankly, and freely and openly in all the relations of that Act to the members of this House. It was what I may call a conference of the party. There was no secrecy, no concealment, it was all open and plain. The first question before us we on our side all agreed upon, and that was that the indemnity then allowed to the leader of the government was wholly inadequate to the obligations of his office and position. There was not a worl of doubt on that; no person hesitated for a moment. It was equally the opinion of those of our friends on the Conservative side, who were thus consulted, that it was unfair that the party in opposition should be asked to collect subscriptions or themselves pay the subscriptions towards the official expenses of the party leader; and that it was equally unfair that he should travel from the Atlantic to the Pacific on the many duties of leadership at his own expense. I do not think there was one present who doubted that. The only one I have any recollection of who hesitated was the leader of the opposition himself. My own opinion was clear and undoubted that it was a proper thing, and I could never see, and do not yet see how the acceptance of a grant from parliament, by the leader of the opposition, makes him a servant or in any way obedient to the government of the day. I never could understand it, and I cannot understand it now.

Mr. HUGHES. It is the peoples' money.

Mr. BARKER. It is not the government that pays that money. The government could not pay it, it could not draw the money out of the public treasury without the authority of this House. The whole House votes it. The highest official in this land gets his salary just the same way. I presume our constitution is not shaken by the fact that the man who stands above the government is paid in the same manner. However, that was one of the questions before us. There was also the question of the indemnity to the members, and the proposition that it should be increased met I think with general approval. The result of it was that a conference took place between some members on the government side, and some members on this side. I presume that conference was arranged as such meetings on matters of public moment are usually arranged for. I know I was one of those who attended. That meeting also was as public as anything could be that is not published in the press. There were some eight, ten or twelve members present from both sides, and they sat in the room and discussed this whole question, and talked over what was reasonable, and what was right and proper. The result was that I think every gentleman present was of the opinion that the indemnity which had been paid to the leader of the government up to that date was insufficient. There was no difference of opinion as to that. The same view was taken in regard to the indemnity to the leader of the opposition. I do not think there was any dispute or difference of opinion as to that. Well, now, all I can say further with regard to that matter is this: That I was there simply as a member of this House, as I have been on other occasions when conferences took place in regard to important subjects that can best be thrashed out in that way. There was no secrecy about it; no negotiations, nothing of the kind. It was discussed just as it would have been discussed if every member of both parties was there. All I had especially to do in connection with that committee, or whatever you might call it, was that I was requested to act with Hon. Mr. Brodeur, Minister of Marine and Fisheries in revising some of the clauses of the old Act. It will be in the recollection of this House that there had been something like a scandal throughout the country, and in the House with regard to the payment of indemnity to members. It was alleged on apparently most excellent grounds that one or more members; certainly one was notorious for getting from the public treasury payments rather for his absence than for his presence. I assert that. And the chief object of the mission which the minister and I undertook was, in the public interest, and for the protection of the public chest, to try and improve the checks upon such payments. Prior to that time the member who claimed his indemnity made an affidavit at the end of the session—whether it lasted four or five or six months—in which he stated by a solemn declaration—the statute declaring it to be in law a declaration upon oath—that he had been present or absent so many days. Well, we thought, at all events I thought, that it was perhaps taxing the memory of the member of parliament too severely to ask him to make out that declaration after six months, and to say how many days during the previous six months he had been present in the House or absent from it. It occurred to us that it would be fair to the individual who had to commit himself to this statement upon oath that he should do it once a month when his memory was fresh, and when there would be no danger of his misrepresenting his presence or his absence. So, we made that important distinction as to the new affidavit as against the former one, and I think on the whole the change has had pretty good results. We changed the Act so that the affidavit is made at the end of each month, so that a man who had been present say five days, and absent fifteen days out of twenty days sittings of the House would not be likely to make a mistake, and declare that he was present every day. I think we acted wisely in that. That was the whole work I had to do in connection with the business. I had no negotiations with anybody about indemnities or anything else; I was simply asked to join the Minister of Marine in improving that clause of the old Act. I do not know whether the fact that I took part in that has had anything to do with this item in the Toronto 'World'; certainly I have from beginning to end had no connection with the matter that should arouse the ire of the hon. member of whom I have been speaking except that one thing. There were two changes made: One I have mentioned, by the other we cut out the old practice, a very pernicious one, of a gentleman showing his face at a committee room door, and then going away, and being able to make his affidavit that he had attended, because under the old Act you were allowed to count attendance upon a committee as attendance upon the House. We struck that out, and so attendance at a committee does not count under the present Act. We brought it down to as nearly as possible what the people of the country expected to pay when they are paying a man for his services in this House. I do not know that I can recall one circumstance that would give the slightest excuse to that paper or to the man who inspired that item for dragging in the name of the Hon. Sir Charles Fitzpatrick. I think that is an outrage. The only time I addressed a word to Sir Charles Fitzpatrick during the whole of that matter was when the Bill was in committee. Sir Charles Fitzpatrick was watching the Bill through committee of the Whole House as Minister of Justice, and once or twice, as I had had a hand in drafting the clause, he called to me, and I went over to see that some proper verbal corrections were made. That is the one and only instance in which Sir Charles Fitzpatrick, and I addressed each other on the subject matter of thet Bill. Therefore I have asked the privilege of making this statement quite as much, indeed far more on his behalf in his absence, than I do on my own. I repeat that the statement in this newspaper is an absolute falsehood.

INQUIRY FOR A RETURN.

Mr. G. V. WHITE. I desire to ask the Minister of Public Works when I can expect the return ordered with reference to the Georgian Bay canal?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Probably next week.

REGULATION OF HORSE-RACING.

Mr. T. G. WALLACE (Centre York). Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day are called, I desire to bring to the attention of the House and especially of the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) a matter of great public importance. For the last two days, we have been discussing what is popularly known as the 'Miller Bill,' the measure proposed by the hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Miller) for the suppression of the evils of race-track gambling. From the fact that this measure was given two days of the time of the House at this stage of the session and has been adjourned, and from the wide public interest it has aroused, it is evident that there is a strong desire on the part of parliament and of the public to at least lessen the evils associated with horse-racing in this Dominion. I have a measure on the Order Paper, known as Bill (No. 81) an Act to regulate horse-racing. The effect of this measure would be to strictly limit the number of days to be devoted to any race-meet in the Dominion. In view of the importance of the question and of the desire of the public to have this evil dealt with in some way, I would ask the Prime Minister to afford time for the discussion of the Bill standing in my name, and, for that purpose, to fix a day when it may be brought up. I believe that the Bill would not occupy much time, as it is one upon which hon. members will be likely to agree without much discussion. I ask the Prime Minister to extend to me this privilege.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. We have given a good deal of time to horse-racing this session, and I do not feel inclined to give any more just now.

BOUNTIES ON ZINC ORES.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN moved the third reading of Bill (No. 182) respecting the payment of bounties on lead contained in lead-bearing ores mined in Canada, and to promote the production in Canada of zinc. He said: In the discussion on the second reading of this Bill, I promised my hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) that I would give more information with regard to the production of lead as a result of these bounties. I have obtained statistics from the Trade and Commerce Department. The bounty system came into effect in the year 1904. As will be seen from the table which I shall read, the average production for the two years preceding 1904 was about 20,000,000 pounds, or 10,000 tons. Immediately after the coming into effect of the bounty there was a marked increase in the production of lead, and the figures show that the result of the bounty has been to encourage lead production to the extent of two or three times the former quantity, the beneficial results of which will be obvious. The following are the figures showing the production:

ANNUAL PRODUCTION OF LEAD IN CANADA, 1902-1909.

Calendar Year.	Pounds of Lead.
1902	22,956,381
1903	18,139,283
1904	37,531,244
1905	56,864,915
1906	54,608,217
1907	47,738,703
1908	43,195,733
1909	45,857,424

Mr. SPROULE. These figures seem to show that while the average production before the bounty was 20,000,000 pounds, the average production since the bounty has been about 44,000,000 pounds. Within the last two or three years the production has gone down again. This would seem to indicate that the increase of the previous years may have been due in part to incidental causes outside of the bounty. My object was to learn to what extent the lead industry had been stimulated, and I am glad to have the figures the minister (Mr. Templeman) has quoted.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the third time, and passed.

MEAT AND CANNED FOODS ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. FISHER moved the third reading of Bill (No. 193) to amend the Meat and Canned Foods Act. He said: My hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) asked as to the definition of 'farmer' under this Bill. I consulted my officers, and they assured me that the definition in the Bill was as drafted by the law clerk, and that they believed that it was as clear as it could be made.

Mr. SPROULE. If the law clerk holds that opinion, of course his opinion ought to be of more value than that of a layman like myself. There was another question which was brought to the attention of the minister when the Bill was under discussion, and one that seems to me to be worthy of consideration, and that is whether it would be advisable to introduce a clause to limit the time during which food may be kept in cold storage. I still think, especially in view of the information we have been receiving from the United States within the last few months, that this is a desirable subject of legislation, and one that should receive early attention from the minister and the government. I would ask the minister if the government have made up their mind to introduce legislation for this purpose at any time in the near future?

Mr. FISHER. I have not sufficient information yet to justify me in coming to a decision on that matter. During the recess, I shall try to learn facts with a view to deciding what legislative action, if any, should be proposed.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the third time, and passed.

COMMISSION FOR THE CONSERVATION OF NATURAL RESOURCES.

Mr. FISHER moved the third reading of Bill (No. 185) respecting the Commission for the Conservation of Natural Resources.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What was done with respect to the amendments that were suggested?

Mr. FISHER. If the hon. member will read the reprinted Bill, he will see that we incorporated the amendments proposed by my hon. friend from East Lambton (Mr. Armstrong), making them apply to the officials, but not to the members of the commission.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. My recollection is that there was one portion of these amendments which, it was thought, might be made to apply to the members of the commission.

Mr. FISHER. I understood that the hon. member for Brandon and the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden) had a discussion on that matter privately, and they thought there would be some difficulty in making that apply. The hon. member for Brandon so reported to me, so I did not carry out that suggestion.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think it was suggested that provisions of that kind might be considered by some hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House, and presented as a further amendment next session.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Is it understood that a committee should be appointed for the purpose of arranging some kind of an amendment to the present Conservation Act whereby the commissioners would be in a different position from the one they now occupy?

Mr. FISHER. It is understood that an attempt will be made to frame an amendment of that kind.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not think the suggestion was that a formal committee should be appointed, but that a number of gentlemen on this side of the House who are interested in seeing this legislation in the best possible condition, would meet some members of the government, or other gentlemen opposite, and endeavour to frame a suitable amendment for the purpose.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. SPROULE.

THE FRENCH TREATY.

Mr. FIELDING moved the second reading of Bill (No. 126) to correct a clerical error in the French Convention Act of 1908. He said: Repeating the explanation I gave at an earlier stage, this Bill is to correct a clerical error as respects a single figure in the French Convention Act. In one of the schedules of the treaty, reference is made to certain wines of a strength up to 26 per cent. In the French version of our statutes it is correctly printed; in the English version it reads absurdly, it reads from 23 to 23 per cent instead of from 23 to 26 per cent. But being correctly printed in the French version, it is already law. However, to remove all doubt it is better to correct this error in the English version.

Mr. HENDERSON. I would ask the Minister of Finance, as we may have occasion to use some of these schedules that were prepared at the time the French treaty was discussed, whether any of these printed schedules, giving the rates of duty, both of goods going into France and their rates converted into dollars and cents, are still available?

Mr. FIELDING. If I find any available I will be glad to send them to my hon. friend. But I may remind him that the French Chambers recently made a revision of the French tariff, and I think some of the items concerned have been somewhat changed. There are certain rates on both sides which are not specially mentioned, that is to say that, we get the French minimum rate and they get the Canadian intermediate rate. Both countries have the right to change these, and the French legislature has exercised that right in some respects in the revision of the tariff which is just about being completed. But I will send to my hon. friend, if I can get them, these printed documents, though it is possible that in some respects they may have been varied by recent changes.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, considered in committee, reported, read the third time and passed.

CURRENCY ACT AMENDMENTS.

Bill (No. 195) respecting Currency, read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

Mr. FIELDING. I sympathize with the view expressed the other day by the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson), that when we are making any numerous amendments to a Bill it is much to our advantage to re-enact, if not the whole Bill, the clauses which are to be materially changed. I think there is a convenience in that from the layman's point of view, and even from the lawyer's point of view. In this case we are proposing to amend the Currency Act, and we do it in the form of a revision. While the Act is somewhat lengthy, it is for the most part merely a re-enactment of the existing law. The important changes are those which I explained to the House the other day with respect to the gold standard; that is practically the only important change in the Act. The House, while it may wish to follow the various sections, may feel sure that the important changes are those to which I have already called attention. The clauses that are amended are all printed in italics, so that attention may be drawn to them. Though we may pass the Bill through committee today, if it is desired that it shall stand for the third reading, I have no objection.

On section 3,

Mr. DANIEL. Is that the gold standard of the English sovereign?

Mr. FIELDING. No. My hon. friend, I suppose, was not present the other day when I explained this. Our currency is on a gold basis with the British sovereign of the fixed value of $4.86\frac{2}{3}$. We have also another standard with a fractional difference, because the American gold coins are legal tender in Canada. It might be assumed that as we have these two standards the value is relatively the same, but in reality there is a fractional difference. If we should now, in making our gold coins, produce a $5 gold piece on the basis of the British sovereign, the result would be that we would have a coin intrinsically worth less than the American five-dollar gold piece. What we propose to do is to make our five-dollar gold piece exactly equivalent in intrinsic value to the American five-dollar gold piece. There is a fractional difference as between that and the British sovereign, but it is not important enough to affect any commercial transaction. It amounts to the one hundredth part of a cent on a five-dollar gold piece. It will never be of serious importance to any commercial transaction, but I am sure hon. gentlemen will see that it is rather desirable that our coins, being of the decimal currency, should be in every respect equal in value to the American gold which may be placed in competition with it.

On section 4: value and currency of standard goods, silver and bronze coins, &c.

Mr. FIELDING. I am going to make an amendment to that section to which I wish to call the attention of the committee. It will be observed that our silver coins comprise a fifty cent piece, twenty-five cents, ten cents, five cents, and there is a bronze coin of one cent. I propose to insert the provision to authorize us to make a silver dollar. Hitherto, I have not viewed it with much favour and have not thought it necessary, but representations have been made to me, chiefly by hon. gentlemen from British Columbia on both sides of the House, that a silver dollar is desirable. In eastern Canada where we have the dollar note—and I am glad to say that we have it in a more cleanly condition than it was in former times—the dollar note is very satisfactory. It is a curious fact that on the Pacific coast—I suppose it is because metal is so much in evidence out there—they do like to handle the coin. I know that I have attempted to get small notes on the Pacific coast and could not get them. If our British Columbia friends want the silver dollar we think that they had better have a Canadian silver dolfar than an American. There is some difference of opinion as to the need of it, but, at all events, I propose to take authority to coin the silver dollar.

Mr. DANIEL. That would be a very large coin would it not?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, it corresponds with the American dollar. I think it is rather an inconvenient coin, but people in the east and the west have different ideas, and I am doing this at the instance of two or three hon. gentlemen from British Columbia on both sides of the House.

Mr. HENDERSON. What would be the weight of a Canadian dollar as compared with the American dollar? I think that our dollar perhaps would contain more silver and less alloy, and consequently would not be so cumbersome as the American dollar, which, has not as much pure silver in it. What would be the difference in weight?

Mr. FIELDING. I think my hon. friend (Mr. Henderson) is mistaken, and in any case the difference would be so trifling that it would have no effect in business usage. As a matter of fact the American silver dollar is worth a little more intrinsically than our silver dollar will be as our silver coinage is not based upon its silver value. It is only token money anyway and the weight or fineness of the coin is not a matter of any importance. When we come to gold coin, of course, the object is to make the coin equal to the bullion, but, in the case of silver, it is only a token and one grain more or less is of no consequence.

Mr. HENDERSON. As a matter of sentiment it is of a good deal of consequence. I think we have an opinion in Canada that our silver coin contains more actual silver than the American. I am rather surprised to hear that the reverse is the case. With regard to coining a Canadian dollar, I am going to raise no objection to it whatever, although I do think that paper money is more convenient. It is a matter of choice whether a man pays or receives a silver dollar or a dollar in paper money. This will simply give permission to the different provinces to use the kind of money they want. I have no particular objection to it but I would rather have paper money myself.

Mr. BURRELL. I would like to ask the minister if he has any information as to what amount they are now issuing silver dollars in the United States or whether they are coining very many of them. We got a great many of them a few years ago.

Mr. FIELDING. I am told that while they are still coining them they are not so generally used as formerly. I find that the silver dollar is the dollar most largely in use on the Pacific coast. I found it so myself when I was there. I remember on one occasion on the United States Pacific coast trying to get paper money; I found that I could not get small notes but they had plenty of silver dollars. That is the tendency of the Pacific coast in the United States and it extends to the British Columbia section.

Mr. HENDERSON. A sort of Chinese money.

Mr. FIELDING. No, it is not Chinese money.

Mr. GOODEVE. As representing the associated boards of trade of British Columbia I may say that I waited on the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) and urged upon him the coinage of this silver dollar. I did so at the instance of the associated board of trade, comprising thirteen boards of trade in southern British Columbia. The reason they have asked for it is because of the use of a very large number of American dollars all through the west, particularly in British Columbia, and along the border, and they have thought that if we had a Canadian silver dollar it would probably, to a very large extent, do away with the American dollar. The minister gave me the same explanation as that which he has made to the House, that personally he felt it was not a desirable coin owing to its weight, but if there was a real demand on the part of the western provinces he would be pleased to meet that demand. We felt that it would be an advantage in that way. The Americans there are accustomed to it, and some prefer it to the bill, although I agree myself personally with the attitude taken by the minister. We are accustomed to the Canadian dollar bill, and find it perhaps the more convenient, but there is no question that there is a very large circulation of American coinage through a very large part of the Kootenay country; how much it is difficult, without accurate statistics to say, but a very large part of the change below five dollars is made in these silver dollars. A merchant will have in his till a greater proportion of American silver dollars than any other coin. Therefore, we felt that the introduction of this coin would be an advantage. Further, as the minister truly stated, there will be a certain profit in coining this money that will accrue to the government, the intrinsic value not being equal to a dollar in value. It would be desirable to have a limited quantity of that coin.

Mr. BLAIN. I would like to ask the Finance Minister what amount has been paid to the banks for collecting American silver and exporting it to the United States.

Mr. FIELDING. I gave that the other day. I have not the figures at hand.

Mr. BLAIN. I will find it in 'Hansard'. May I ask the minister if any effort has been made by the government to collect defaced silver, there being a considerable amount in circulation in Canada at the present time? It is very troublesome. The government are making an effort to collect American silver, and have it sent back to the United States, and I think a similar effort should be made to collect defaced silver which gives every person who has anything to do with it a great deal of trouble. As I understand, when a government bill becomes torn, or defaced it may be taken to the Receiver General's, or the deputy Receiver General's office, and a new dollar bill will be given in exchange. Why could not some arrangement of that kind be made so that the people of Canada would not be troubled by the continued circulation of coins that become more defaced every time they are changed. One other point. United States bills circulate freely in Canada, and are accepted by all classes of people at par, especially corporations and banks. But when our Canadian people go to the United States, they find considerable trouble in getting Canadian $1 bills exchanged, even in the frontier towns. If they go into the interior, it is next to impossible to get the Americans to accept our $1 bills at all. Why could not this government enter into correspondence with the Finance Department at Washington and endeavour to have some better understanding, and obtain some slight endorsation of the Washington government, so that when Canadians go into the inner parts of the United States with Canadian money they would be able to have that money accepted by the American people at its face value, and teach them that if we are free to accept their money they should accept ours.

Mr. FIELDING. I quite understand the ground which my hon. friend has taken, but I am afraid the matter is something we cannot deal with by legislation. If we do not want American bills in Canada, we need not take them. If we take them, it is because it suits our convenience to do so. I noticed quite recently that one of the large American cities, the city of Portland, Oregon, by arrangement with the banks and clearing houses, has decided to accept Canadian currency generally at its face value. I would hope that its example may be followed by other cities. It is hardly correct to state that our notes will not be taken anywhere in the States. At any of the large business establishments, where they are accustomed to deal with Canadians, they will take our Canadian currency at its face value.

Mr. BLAIN. I think that is confined to cities along the border.

Mr. FIELDING. No, I know that in some instances in Boston and New York, the larger establishments will take our Canadian money at par. In one instance I remember—and this illustrates what is done in a large way—tendering a Canadian bank note at an American railway office and being informed that they could not take it, although it was a note of one of our largest banks. When I entered into conversation with the ticket agent, he told me that they had instructions to accept Canadian government currency, but as regards the banks, he said: We know nothing about them. That occurred not far from our boundary.

Mr. BLAIN. Were these instructions from the government?

Mr. FIELDING. No, from the railway company. In many places in the United States they do accept our currency; but I should hope that when we have our gold currency, when there is no question possible as to its intrinsic value, some such arrangement as my hon. friend suggests might be carried out. As respects silver, I do not think it possible to bring about what my hon. friend desires except by the voluntary action of the banks, the boards of trade and other commercial associations. With respect to worn or defaced silver, I am not quite sure to which my hon. friend referred, but perhaps he referred to both.

Mr. BLAIN. Yes, I had in mind more particularly Canadian silver because in the main American silver is in good condition.

Mr. FIELDING. Canadian silver, as a rule, is in good condition, and there is no British silver circulated in Canada—in the ordinary sense of the word. It is a very inconvenient coin and practically not circulated.

Mr. BLAIN. What I meant was the circulation of silver bearing our label rather than silver of the United States.

Mr. FIELDING. Sometimes an Englishman coming out here finds that the British shilling is not welcome, and he may imagine that there is something disloyal in that. But the explanation is that the British silver is an odd coin which does not correspond to our Canadian coin and is inconvenient with regard to its value. As regards Canadian silver, we have made provisions for the redemption of worn silver. That is silver simply worn by abrasion in time. A great deal was in circulation, and we are endeavouring to have it recoined into fresh, clean silver.

Mr. BLAIN. What about the ordinary holder having $5 or $10 worth?

Mr. FIELDING. Let him take it to the banks. The government cannot deal with every individual. Through the banks we accept that worn silver and have it recoined, and we are very anxious that the banks should assist us.

Mr. BLAIN. Do they accept it at par value?

Mr. FIELDING. They accept worn silver. I want to distinguish between worn silver and defaced silver. The worn is simply silver which has served its day and generation and suffered something from usage. It is only right that we should redeem that at face value. But defaced silver is a different problem. The defacing and mutilating of coin of the realm is a misdemeanour. It would be hardly consistent for us to declare that a crime and then to proceed to redeem the mutilated coin. Recently, however, with a desire to collect worn and defaced silver and recoin it, we have strained a point and agreed to take a lot of the defaced silver at a small reduction, until such time as we shall have the defaced silver now in use recoined and be able to start with a clean issue. We are, of course, open to the charge of having first declared the mutilating of a coin to be a crime and then proceeding to encourage that crime by redeeming it. But we must do that until we get a clean start and then will discontinue the practice.

Mr. HENDERSON. You do not take defaced silver at full value?

Mr. FIELDING. No. I would like to ask the hon. member for Kootenay (Mr. Goodeve) who spoke of American silver coming across to this country, whether the merchants and other business men accept that at par, or do they take in at a discount from those who bring it over and then deal it out at full value to their customers?

Mr. BURRELL. The American silver or gold which comes to our side of the line is always taken at par, but when we take our money over there, they charge a discount. That is one reason why our own money should be in circulation in our own country, and American money deported as soon as possible.

Mr. BLAIN. On the question of worn and defaced silver, I rather commend the government for its action; but while it is important that no man should have the right to deface our silver, an effort should be made by the government, even at some sacrifice, to gather in this silver and not allow it to continue in circulation. I do not think that the public generally know that they can take this silver to a bank and that the banks will accept it. If some regulation to that effect could be put in force and made generally known, the public would willingly take it to the banks. In my own section of the province of Ontario, that is not understood, and this worn and defaced silver keeps continually in circulation, very much to the annoyance and disadvantage of the public generally.

Mr. FIELDING. As regards worn silver, that will adjust itself very quickly. For defaced silver, we give 75 cents on the dollar, but the man who has a dollar's worth, wants to pass it at par, and, therefore, the public do not readily respond and send in their defaced silver. There is a curious fact I might mention, as we have been considering moral questions the last day or two, and that is that most of the defaced silver is found in the church Sunday contributions, and requests for its redemption have chiefly come from church treasurers.

Mr. HENDERSON. To what church does the hon. gentleman refer?

Mr. FIELDING. I could not say that without making undue discrimination.

Mr. RHODES. What has been said by the hon. member for Kootenay is true in a large measure of Nova Scotia, as the hon. minister is aware. But we have in addition to the American silver, trouble with Newfoundland silver even to a much greater degree. As a matter of fact, in any collection of 50-cent pieces in any retail shop, say 20 of them, you will find 15 to 17 Newfoundland coins. And in this connection we have this further trouble that many of the Newfoundland coins are twenty-cent pieces, which become confused with our quarters, and many are short of change in consequence. It would be a good thing if some means were taken by which these coins would be eliminated from circulation I regret that there is no provision in this Bill for a change in our five and one-cent pieces. As a matter of convenience, our five-cent pieces should be made larger out of nickel, and the size of our cent piece might be reduced. In addition to removing an inconvenience, we would be striking a distinctively Canadian note if we could coin Cobalt silver and nickel into five-cent and one-cent pieces. In the Mines Committee, the Deputy Minister of Mines of Ontario was examined about two hours. At the close of his evidence, he suggested that we should change the size of our five-cent pieces and one-cent pieces and make them out of nickel and cobalt, and pointed out that in doing so we would be striking a distinctive Canadian note.

Mr. FIELDING. I admit that the Newfoundland currency is undoubtedly an inconvenience, but we have such close and intimate relations with that colony that it is inevitable there will be a considerable amount of its currency circulated in our country. The 50-cent pieces of Newfoundland are not so much trouble as the 20-cent pieces, but of course there would be more profit in our making these pieces out of our own silver instead of having them made in Newfoundland. As regards the 20-cent pieces, they are frequently mistaken for our Canadian quarters, and thus cause loss and annoyance to many people. There is an impression that these 20-cent pieces are Canadian coin, but I have always found that they have the Newfoundland face. In order to avoid this confusion, I wrote the Prime Minister of Newfoundland several years ago suggesting that they might probably find it satisfactory to coin 25-cent pieces instead of 20-cent pieces, but they were wedded to the 20 cents, which suit them for some reasons I cannot remember, and we could not bring about a change. With regard to the issue of nickel and silver coins, we are now coining Cobalt silver to the extent of our demands on the mint. No doubt many of the coins made to-day are made of Cobalt silver, but the nickel problem is not so easy. Nickel is a Canadian product, but it is doubtful whether it is a satisfactory metal to be used for coin. The difficulty is that nickel is a white metal and easily confused with silver. A Frenchman would not make the mistake, which is very common on the part of tourists in France, of taking a 25-centime piece for a franc, because the Frenchmen are accustomed to the difference, but there is a constant disposition on the part of tourists to confound the two.

Mr. RHODES. There is absolutely no necessity for mistaking the two in France, as the silver coin has a milled edge and the centime has a smooth edge. But they go even further than that in Belgium. There they make a hole in the centre so there is absolutely no difficulty in distinction between the two. In other countries they make the nickel coin square in shape instead of round.

Mr. FIELDING. Going back to the oriental design.

Mr. RHODES. But since nickel is a distinctly Canadian product, I would like to see a coin produced from it.

Mr. FIELDING. Our coins are distinctively Canadian as we use Canadian silver and copper, and we hope to use Canadian gold.

Mr. SPROULE. I think there is a distinct advantage in having as few varieties as possible. We are quite familiar with what we have, and copper is Canadian just as much as nickel is. With regard to the dimensions of five-cent pieces, the change would make them more like the American and be objectionable in that respect. But I rose more particularly to draw attention to the question of redeeming defaced and mutilated currency. The hon. minister has said that one of the objections is that we made it a punishable offence to deface silver, and it did not seem consistent to provide for the redemption of such silver. But it seems to me there is a strong reason for its redemption and that is this. If a man gets a mutilated half dollar and he cannot get it redeemed, is not that a strong temptation for him to pass it off on some one else, especially when he gets it by accident. The hon. minister says that there is a large supply of mutilated money collected in the churches and they desire to have it redeemed. Is he going to put a temptation before the churches to get rid of it in some other way if the government will not provide for its redemption? I think that, in the interests of morality and honesty, the government should redeem it; there should be some means for its redemption. I would not make the discount very great.

Mr. FIELDING. That is exactly what we are doing. We are receiving it at a discount, and in so doing we are paying more than its intrinsic value. I do not want to lay that down as a permanent policy, but rather as a policy to be carried out until such time as we have collected that mutilated silver and put an issue of clean currency in its place.

Mr. SPROULE. Where can you get it redeemed? If you go to the banks they refuse it, and it would not be practical to send it to the Finance Minister.

Mr. FIELDING. The banks generally are aware of our willingness to take it and no doubt they will co-operate. We cannot of course reach the individual. The banks are the great channels of circulation, and when we arrange with them to take the worn silver at its face value and the defaced at 75 cents on the dollar, we are going as far as we ought to.

Mr. SPROULE. Is that being done?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, we are getting it in and are re-coining it. Whether there is still a great quantity in circulation, I could not say. My reference to the churches is due to the fact that applications for this have come from the churches. The churches, for some reason or other, seem to get more of it than other people. We are doing what my hon. friend has suggested.

Mr. SPROULE. To my knowledge some of the banks refuse this kind of silver. If there is an understanding between the Minister of Finance and the banks to that effect surely they should redeem that silver at the price fixed.

Mr. FIELDING. My recollection is that we issued a circular to all the banks informing them that we were to redeem that silver at the value I have stated, and if the banks are not receiving that silver and sending it to us we expect that they would do it. No doubt the discussion to-day will have a good effect in giving the information to the public that we are redeeming the silver. The Finance Department does not advertise itself and probably the fact was not as generally known as it should be.

Mr. BLAIN. I have in my mind a bank that refuses to take defaced or mutilated silver. I would have very grave doubt that there is any bank in any centre of population in Canada that would voluntarily accept this defaced silver and send it back to the Finance Department.

Mr. DANIEL. Except in quantities.

Mr. BLAIN. They may take it in quantities, but I think the man who wants to exchange a small quantity of these silver coins should have the privilege just the same as those who do it on a larger scale. The government should make specific regulations so that the banks would bring this matter to the attention of their customers. If the banks refused defaced or mutilated coins on the conditions specified by the government, then if there was a regulation, the customers could draw the attention of the bank to it. Now, as to the churches, I think the statement of the Minister of Finance is rather a reflection on the church-going public. May I ask the hon. gentleman if he thinks the church-going public of Canada have been influenced by the general conduct of the government towards the moral questions of the day. If so, the hon. gentleman should pay attention to it and try to bring about a little improvement. Judging by yesterday's proceedings in the House the government is not likely to take any strong position in support of a moral question, but, however, that may be, on behalf of the church going public of Canada, I resent the insinuation thrown out by the Minister of Finance. There may be some people in Canada who will put a defective coin on the collection place, but I do not think the church-going public as a rule would do such a thing. If any such thing does occur it is well to look for the source of the evil and perhaps it would be a hint to the government to change their attitude with regards to questions of moral reform.

Mr. FIELDING. I resisted the application at first, but I can tell my hon. friend that it was made again and again by the treasurer of a church. However, I shall not tell my hon. friend what church it was nor in what part of Canada it was located. As to the broader question, the fact that we have redeemed a very large amount of this silver coinage shows that some of the banks are carrying out our policy. If my hon. friend (Mr. Blain) will give me privately the name of the bank he refers to, I will communicate with them and see if we cannot persuade them to co-operate with us.

Mr. BLAIN. I shall be glad to do so. Does this arrangement cover all the chartered banks of Canada?

Mr. FIELDING. The government has expressed its desire to do this through the Bankers' Association and we have asked for their co-operation. I think we might reasonably expect them to co-operate.

Mr. SPROULE. You could make it an obligation on them.

Mr. FIELDING. I do not think that would be necessary.

Mr. SPROULE. We give the banks of this country very large and valuable privileges, and it is not too much in return to put an obligation of that nature upon them. I can see no objection in the world to this being made compulsory on the banks, if it becomes necessary to do so.

Mr. GEORGE TAYLOR. I would suggest to the Minister of Finance that he should issue a circular to all the banks stating what the government proposes to do. The government might issue a uniform notice which should be posted in all the banking houses of the country and then the customers would know about it. I believe that if notices were sent to the head office of each bank for distribution to all the branches the banks would readily comply with the wishes of the government and in a very short time our defaced silver coins would be got rid of.

Mr. FIELDING. The suggestion of my hon. friend (Mr. George Taylor) is a good one. My impression is that the banks have already been informed in general of our desire, but I will look into the matter more carefully.

Mr. LENNOX. You need not expect the banks or any one else to voluntarily do work for nothing, and if the Minister of Finance wants to have decent silver coins in circulation in Canada he would have to compensate the banks for receiving that silver and transmitting it to the government. Or in consideration of the many privileges the banks enjoy—not all of them by any means for the general advantage of Canada—I do not think it would be too much to enact that the banks should receive this silver and transmit it to the government under regulations specified by the Minister of Finance. However, it seems inconsistent that the government should make it a crime to mutilate coins and at the same time redeem those coins. I do not understand that if a young lady is presented with a bangle made of coins upon which there is inscribed an initial letter, the object of her devotion should be considered as guilty of a crime. I think the consistent way of looking at it is that it is the circulation of that which is not legitimately a coin that should be considered a crime.

Mr. FIELDING. After the bangle was presented it would cease to go into circulation.

Mr. LENNOX. I think all coins that are not properly and legitimately a medium of circulation should be recalled by the government in the most effectual way, and if instead of redeeming these coins at 75 cents on the dollar they were redeemed at 90 cents it would help a great deal to enable us to get rid of these defaced and mutilated coins. Anyway, I do not think that a 50 cent piece is of the intrinsic value of 50 cents when it is issued brand new.

Mr. FIELDING. The silver coin is a token coin and does not represent the face value.

Mr. LENNOX. Unless the mutilation consists of abstraction of portions of the material in a coin the intrinsic value of the coin itself does not come into question at all.

Mr. FIELDING. It would be reduced in value by punching a hole in it.

Mr. LENNOX. Making a mark or indentation on a coin would not decrease its intrinsic value. If the government redeemed these coins at 90 per cent of their face value it would help very much towards their withdrawal from circulation.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is there any systematic defacement of our coinage in Canada, or is it most purely accidental?

Mr. FIELDING. I do not think it is systematic with intent to defraud, but, of course, if you punch holes in a large number of silver coins you could make money on the business. However, these defaced and mutilated coins have never been redeemed, and so there has been quite a large number of them in circulation. I am not aware that the thing has been done systematically for fraudulent purposes in Canada.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. There was a practice of that kind in other countries years ago, against which were directed important provisions of the Criminal Code, but I have never heard of anything of the kind taking place in this country. Has any decision been come to by the government as to the design on the new gold coins?

Mr. FIELDING. The designs are in course of preparation and they are being finally prepared at the Royal Mint in England.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Will they be submitted to parliament?

Mr. FIELDING. If they are ready before the end of the session there would be no objection to showing them. Of course, on one side there must be the sovereign's head, as is the case with all British coins, and the present idea is to use the arms of Canada, with the value of the coin, and the date, as the main design on the other side.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The minister referred the other day to some difference in fineness between the gold coinage of the United Kingdom and the gold coinage of the United States. How does it happen that there is this difference between the gold coins of the two countries?

Mr. FIELDING. The British standard differs from the standard of almost every country in the world. The Americans have adopted the standard of continental European countries, and which was first adopted by France. In pont of fineness the British gold coin is somewhat better than the American in the percentage of fine gold in it, but when it comes to weight the relative value is in favour of the American coin.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The value is determined by the actual weight of pure gold in the coin?

Mr. FIELDING. Quite so.

Mr. GEORGE TAYLOR. I understood the Minister of Finance to say that if holes were punched in coins a certain amount of the material would be removed. I can assure the hon. gentleman that such is not the case, and if he gets some officer in his department to examine these coins which are punched he will find that 99 per cent of the punching does not take out a one-sixtieth part of a hair in weight. The whole material is left there, and it is simply expanded by driving the punch through.

Mr. FIELDING. That is quite correct, but there formerly was a practice in other countries of punching holes in coins so as to get the material and make a profit. I am not aware that there is any complaint of that kind in Canada at present.

Mr. BLAIN. Are the banks supposed to redeem mutilated copper as well as mutilated silver?

Mr. FIELDING. No complaint has been received respecting the copper. If the evil prevailed in connection with our copper coinage it would be dealt with in the same way.

Mr. BLAIN. There is a very great deal of defaced and worn copper coinage in circulation. That is not so often rejected. Still, I think it is a matter that should receive some attention, and, when the order goes forth that the banks are to receive defaced and worn silver, I do not think it would be out of place that a similar order should go forth with regard to worn and defaced copper also.

Mr. FIELDING. That point has not been brought to my attention hitherto. I will make inquiry about it.

On section 4, subsection 3, standard fineness and weight of coins of other denominations—remedy allowance—least current weight of gold coin.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Some technical expressions are used here. Would the Minister of Finance please explain?

Mr. FIELDING. The 'remedy' is the variation that may be allowed from the mathematically accurate weight of the coin. The mint authorities say that it is impossible, no matter how perfect the machinery you may have, to turn out a coin that will be absolutely the same weight as the standard. The variation may be an extremely small fraction, but it exists. Besides that, when a coin is in current use for a time it becomes worn, and the weight is changed. Of course, if it falls below a certain point, it ceases to be a valid coin.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If it falls below that variation it would not be issued?

Mr. FIELDING. No, but, after being issued, if it falls below a certain standard it ceases to be valid coin.

Mr. SPROULE. What becomes of it then? Suppose that it were refused?

Mr. FIELDING. We should have to deal with that, I suppose, by special legislation. Up to a certain point, we have the right to redeem, and we are redeeming, silver even at depreciated value. The English practice is, when a coin falls below what is called the 'least current weight' it may be sent in, and recoined, and the treasury bears the expense.

At one o'clock, committee took recess.

Committee resumed at three o'clock.

Mr. FIELDING. With the consent of the House, I would like to refer again to section 4. A question was asked before the recess, and I am not sure that I gave the answer as clearly as I could wish. It was in regard to the remedy. The remedy, as the term is used there, refers to the condition of the coin at the time of its issue. There is a limitation within which it may be lawfully issued. Outside of that limitation it will not be issued, for the remedy has application to the coin at the time of issue. Then after the coin has passed into circulation, and becomes worn, we have what is called the least current weight. If the coin falls below that least current weight, which is set forth in the schedules of the Act, it ceases to be legal tender, but in that case it can be presented to the government and recoined, the government bearing the consequence of the ordinary wear and tear of the coin. That is the practice of the English mint, and we would naturally follow the English practice.

On section 6,

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The bullion out of which these coins are produced will be Canadian gold?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes. Circumstances might arise when we would require to use other gold, but all things being equal, we will give the preference to the Canadian metal.

On section 9, British sovereign and gold coins to be legal tender.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. This is a new section?

Mr. FIELDING. We have always regarded the British sovereign as a legal tender, and that was the intention of the Act. The present clause makes it more clear that the sovereign shall be legal tender at the rate of $4.86\frac{2}{3}$.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That does not precisely correspond to our own standard in gold coin.

Mr. FIELDING. The sovereign remains precisely of the same value, and we think it is not wise to make any change, although there is, as I have already explained, a fractional difference between that and our own gold coin.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Why not fix the value of the sovereign so as to make it correspond exactly with our own standard?

Mr. FIELDING. The difference is so slight that we think it is well to adhere to the old established value. This has been the value attached to the British sovereign for generations, and we think it is well not to disturb it. The difference is so fractional that it could not be conveniently expressed in figures. To be exact, the figures would be $4·8665 with various other figures to be added to give the correct expression. The recognized value is so near the real value that we do not think it worth while to make a change.

Mr. DANIEL. The Bill allows gold coin of Canadian mintage to be a legal tender for debts up to any amount, but that is not the case here with regard to the sovereign. A man cannot offer more than a certain amount of sovereigns in payment of a debt, whereas he can offer the full amount of gold coin of Canadian mintage.

Mr. FIELDING. The sovereign would be legal tender at the value fixed to any amount; there is no limitation.

Mr. HENDERSON. But if the British sovereign be at all times a legal tender at $4.866 does not something depend on the rate of exchange? I understand there is a certain rate of exchange where the value would be $4.86\frac{2}{3}$. But if it falls below that or goes above it, there is a variation.

Mr. FIELDING. The question of exchange does not enter into the value as respects transactions within Canada. We have a fixed rate, and all transactions within Canada would be based upon that rate, irrespective of the question of exchange which might arise in relation to other countries.

Mr. HENDERSON. I suppose gold always remains at one value?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes.

Mr. J. HAGGART. Gold does not remain at one value. It may have one value in this country to-day and have another value in another country. It all depends on where you want to send the greatest quantity of it to. Suppose that you owe gold in London, you have to pay the difference in the carriage of that gold over to that country. It may be 4·86, 4·87, or perhaps less, according to where the balance of exchange is, or what is virtually required to carry the gold to where the payment has to be made.

Mr. FIELDING. That is entirely correct as respects gold in any transaction abroad, but it would not affect a transaction within Canada.

Mr. J. HAGGART. But my hon. friend was talking about payments in Great Britain.

Mr. FIELDING. This Bill does not pretend to regulate exchange.

Mr. GOODEVE. Is it the intention of the government to issue a Canadian sovereign, or will the five-dollar piece be the only gold coin issued?

Mr. FIELDING. There is no such thing as a Canadian sovereign. We have made some sovereigns at the Royal Mint. The regulations establishing the Royal Mint contemplate the use of our gold to be turned into sovereigns if the owner of the gold should so desire. I know that in several instances gentlemen having gold produced in Canada desired it to be converted into sovereigns, and as the operation was not a very expensive one, and the refining apparatus was equal to it, we have turned it into British sovereigns. We shall continue to do so upon the application of any owner of gold who desires it, but we do not intend as a general thing, to make British sovereigns.

Mr. GOODEVE. Not for general circulation?

Mr. FIELDING. They are British sovereigns minted under royal regulations, and they have in every respect throughout the world the same value as British sovereigns minted in London.

On section 10, foreign gold coins, proviso as to gold coins of the United States.

Mr. DANIEL. What is the meaning of the words 'tolerance or remedy' in that section?

Mr. FIELDING. Tolerance is the American name for the remedy or variation which will be allowed. The only material change in this clause is that formerly American coin was declared to be legal tender at a specific weight. The American laws allow a variation within a certain limitation in the case of these coins, but our Act did not take notice of it. Hence it was possible that we would refuse to receive the coin as legal tender even though it might be in full conformity with the standard of the United States. We make this slight change allowing for tolerance, or variation, or remedy, so long as the coin conforms to the established law of the United States.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. When we are fixing a legal standard of gold, I think it would be just as well to maintain our own legal standard, which is a fiat standard, and not establish a fiat standard for foreign coins Gold coins would then be purchased exactly by weight. Everybody knows that gold is a commodity. This fixes an American coin as having a certain standard of value with our own. That means that unless there is a certain diminution of value by abrasion, &c., that money is a current coin in Canada. It makes an American five-dollar gold piece a current coin in Canada, irrespective of whether it is worn or fresh I do not think that any of the great countries of the world standardize other country's coin by giving it a fiat value. Gold is bought and sold like any other commodity. It is not a coin of each country having a standard of fineness like fiat money. I do not wish to oppose the Bill in any way, but I think the minister will agree with me that it would be well to have it as I suggest.

Mr. FIELDING. I think it is arguable, that if we had had gold coins in Canada in quantity in the past, American coins might never have been made legal tender, but they were legal tender in the old province of Canada, they continued as legal tender under the laws of confederation, and they so remain. I think that at the present time, at all events, it would not be wise for us to disturb that condition. Currency matters require to be very delicately handled. I would imagine that it is quite probable that within a few years, if we had our own gold in Canada in general and abundant circulation, it might be well to remove this clause from our law, but for the present I think we would do well to keep the American coin as a standard, just as it has been ever since the beginning of confederation.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Do they propose to accept your coin as standard?

Mr. FIELDING. No, we do not put it in to please them; we put it in to please ourselves.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. They will not take a British sovereign as standard.

Mr. FIELDING. I think it is quite possible. No country can be condemned if it establishes its own laws in that respect. We are not doing this to please the American authorities. They would not object if we struck it out. I am not sure but that if we struck it out they would not approve, because every country likes to keep its own gold within its own borders. Inasmuch as American coins have been legal tender in Canada since the beginning of our country as a Dominion, it would not be wise to make a change now, but when we have gold coin of our own in abundance, perhaps the need of this American gold being taken as legal tender will cease.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would think it would be a rather advantageous thing if the coins of one country could be received in the other. Of course, we have no control over that. Any one who has travelled in Europe knows that in many cases the gold coinage of one country is received at its face value in other countries. French gold coins and notes are received at their face value in Switzerland.

Mr. FIELDING. That is one of the reasons why, as I have already explained, I thought it desirable that our gold coins should correspond in intrinsic value with the American gold coins so that they would be interchangeable and there could be no objection on account of their value. The two coins will be alike in value, and if there be any objection to ours, it will not be on account of its value.

Mr. HENDERSON. We have heard what the minister has said about our gold being refused in the United States. He seems indifferent as to whether the Americans should take it or not. It is a matter of very considerable importance. We know there is a great deal of trouble in connection with this matter. Persons travelling in the United States cannot make use of Canadian money. The Americans refuse to accept it. Even the great railways that ought to know that our $5 and $10 are guaranteed by the government, and are just as good as our Dominion currency, do not seem to be familiar with that fact. It would be a great convenience to people from Canada travelling in the United States if it were understood that our gold as minted here in Ottawa was legal tender in the United States. While the minister is negotiating in other matters with the people of the United States, he might bring this about.

Mr. FIELDING. Such an interchange would certainly be desirable, and it is quite within the bounds of possibility that it may be brought about. But the first thing is to get our gold coin established and let other people realize that it is just as good value as their own. Then we might ask them to accept these coins at their par value.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. The method of weighing adopted by all other nations except the United States, Great Britain and ourselves is the metric method, and I think that ought to be adopted here. I understand that the metric system is legal in this country. Why not add the metric equivalents to that of Troy weight in the schedule? All assay calculations, in the matter of gold and silver are made on the metric system.

Mr. FIELDING. We are following the example of the royal mint, and in matters of this sort, we will do well to follow as closely as possible the practice of the British mint.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. That is quite right, but the metric system is legal in this country and not in England. It would facilitate the work of the mint if our standards were fixed by metric equivalents as well as by Troy weight. I think the assay officers would tell the hon. gentleman that.

Mr. FIELDING. In the preparation of this Bill we consulted the officers of the mint and endeavoured in all respects to adapt ourselves to the modern practice, and our officers take that view of the case.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. If the hon. gentleman would ask his officers, I think that what I suggest would be a great convenience. I know that all those scales for weighing assays are based on the metric system. An assayer can calculate much more rapidly by metric system than by Troy weight.

Mr. FIELDING. That may be possible. We have had a message from the Deputy of the Governor General informing us that he will be in the Senate at half past three for the purpose of assenting to certain Bills. I would therefore move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again this day.

Progress reported.

THE ROYAL ASSENT.

A message was received from His Honour the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General by the gentleman Usher of the Black Rod as follows:

Mr. Speaker, His Honour the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, desires the immediate attendance of your honourable House, in the Chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker, with the House, went up to the Senate Chamber.

And having returned,

Mr. SPEAKER informed the House that his honour the deputy of His Excellency the Governor General had been pleased to give in His Majesty's name, the Royal Assent to the following Bills:

An Act respecting the Algoma Central and Hudson Bay Railway Company.

An Act respecting the Erie, London and Tilsonburg Railway Company.

An Act to incorporate the Weyburn Security Bank.

An Act respecting the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada.

An Act respecting the Montreal and Southern Counties Railway Company.

An Act respecting the Northern Empire Railway Company.

An Act respecting the Dominion Atlantic Railway Company.

An Act respecting the Calgary and Fernie Railway Company.

An Act to amend the Exchequer Court Act.

An Act respecting the Ottawa, Brockville and St. Lawrence Railway Company.

An Act to amend the Government Annuities Act, 1908.

An Act for the relief of Archibald Laurie.

An Act for the relief of Bernard Shea.
An Act for the relief of Clara Louise Holden.
An Act for the relief of James Albert Green.
An Act for the relief of Alexander Augustus Barthelmes.
An Act for the relief of Cecilia Marie Pringle.
An Act for the relief of Ada Ann Reed.
An Act to incorporate the Independent Order of Rechabites.
An Act respecting the Richelieu and Ontario Navigation Company.
An Act respecting the British North American Mining Company.
An Act to incorporate the Saskatchewan Central Company.
An Act granting to His Majesty certain sums of money for the public service of the financial year ending the 31st March, 1910.
An Act to incorporate the Pine Pass Railway Company.
An Act to incorporate the Ottawa, Montreal and Eastern Railway Company.
An Act respecting the Bay of Quinté Railway Company.
An Act to incorporate the Catholic Episcopal Corporation of Timiskaming.

CURRENCY ACT AMENDMENT.

House in committee on Bill (No. 195), respecting the currency.—Mr. Fielding.

On section 12, no other coins to be legal tender.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I would again urge the minister to change the five-cent coins, because it is a universal complaint that the five-cent piece we have is so small that it is easily lost, and whilst it is a very nice coin it would be a far greater convenience if we employed base metal and adopted some system such as they have in other countries for that class of coin. I also think the one-cent piece contains far too much metal. There is no intention on the part of the government to say that the copper contained in it bears any relation to the value of the coin, and it is exactly the same size as a 25 cent piece, so that it is difficult to distinguish them. Each denomination should be of a different size, so that the coins can be distinguished by touch. Every one has been looking forward to a change when the minister was revising the Currency Act, and I think public opinion is strongly in favour of such a change.

Mr. FIELDING. I have not heard much evidence of a general desire to make these changes, and I must confess that I have in some respects what I may describe as a wholesome conservatism and adherence to old established things. My hon. friend's touch is not as keen as it used to be; I have put the 25 cent piece and the cent together and they are not the same size.

Mr. SPROULE I have been spoken to in respect to this once or twice in view of the expected changes, and my experience is the reverse of the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. J. A. Currie). I would doubt the wisdom of making any change from the coins we are familiar with.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I do not know of any country with such a small silver coin as ours. The Americans abolished it.

Mr. FIELDING: They have in England a three-penny piece about the same size.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. It is a very rare coin.

On section 21, appointment of assay commissioners, examination, and test, &c.

Mr. FIELDING. In England they have what is called the trial of the Pyx which takes place at Goldsmith's Hall, and they utilize for this purpose the services of the Goldsmith's Company. This is a trial to test the correctness of the coin. We have not in Canada a corresponding organization, and we propose once a year to appoint three gentlemen who shall test the coin, and guarantee to the public that it is of correct weight and quality. It follows in substance the English practice, but the method is different, because we have not the same organization here.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. To whom do they report?

Mr. FIELDING. To the Governor in Council, and I suppose like any other public document it would be brought before parliament.

Mr. J. HAGGART. What is to be their remuneration?

Mr. FIELDING. The compensation for this service in England takes the shape of a public dinner at Goldsmith's Hall, but we have not yet determined the compensation to be paid to the gentlemen in Canada.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Give them a dinner at the parliamentary restaurant.

Mr. FIELDING. That might do.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Is not the test made in the presence of the officials of the House of Commons, and the House of Lords, is it not rather a state function in England?

Mr. FIELDING. I think it is the dinner that is the state function.

On section 22, Dominion standard Troy ounce to be standard of weight, weights to be verified and approved.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Where is this standard Troy ounce to be checked or verified? In Great Britain? I understand that the American standard Troy weight has recently been tested and found a little off. Will our test be in Goldsmith's Hall in England, or what is to be the standard?

Mr. FIELDING. The Minister of Inland Revenue (Mr. Templeman) is not present, and so I cannot offer any explanation further than that we refer to the standard weights of the Inland Revenue Department as established by the Weights and Measures Act.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. But would the standard weights of the Inland Revenue Department, such as are used ordinarily throughout the country, be sufficient for the purposes of the Finance Department? I should think that the standards in this matter should be under control of the Finance Department.

Mr. FIELDING. The Minister of Inland Revenue has these standards for all purposes, and we simply declare the standards thus established shall be accepted for the purposes of our department.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. And where is this Troy weight fixed?

Mr. FIELDING. I can only say that it is fixed by the Weights and Measures Act. Further than that, I cannot answer.

On the schedule,

Mr. FIELDING. I want to make an addition to the schedule to correspond with the decision already reached by the committee respecting the creation of the silver dollar. In the schedule as it is at present, there is no reference to that point, and, as the silver dollar is to be made, it must be provided for in the schedule, like the rest. The amendment I propose is to insert in the schedule the following:

Under denomination of coin—silver ; one dollar, standard weight 360 grains; remedy allowance—weight per piece; 1·50 grains; millesimal fineness, 4.

Mr. PERLEY. May I ask the Minister of Finance why it is he wants to coin a silver dollar?

Mr. FIELDING. We have already had quite a discussion on that point. In brief, representations were made to me by hon members from British Columbia both in this House and in the Senate, that the creation of a silver dollar was very desirable from a British Columbia point of view, and I have found by experience that there is a taste for the American silver dollar on the Pacific side. I see no reason why, there being a demand, we should not supply it, rather than use the American dollar. If our dollar note is not sufficient, and there are people who want a silver dollar, I think it is good business to furnish it.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I would suggest to the minister the coining of the Mexican dollar, as it is called, with a view to enable Canada to export silver to China, Japan and other eastern countries. Hong Kong or Mexican dollar is the standard in silver countries. And, as we hope to take a prominent place in the trade of the Orient, if we are to have a silver dollar, I think we should have a coin that will be of use in that trade. We are large producers of silver, and these eastern countries will furnish a great market. I think it would be much better to make a coin of the exchange value of the Hong Kong or Mexican dollar than one that would be useful in exchange only in Canada.

Mr. FIELDING. I am not much enamoured of the silver dollar. At present we want to confine ourselves to the use of it in Canada. The other question that the hon. member has raised is a much larger one and one upon which I would not care to enter at present.

Mr. PERLEY. I do not wish to take up time if this matter is already decided. But I may remind the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) that in the United States silver dollars are piled up unused—they cannot circulate them.

Mr. FIELDING: I can assure my hon. friend (Mr. Perley) that the law of supply and demand will govern that. We have no desire to coin them unless there is a demand for them, and I realize that that demand may arise only on the Pacific coast.

Mr. J. HAGGART. Perhaps the information I am about to ask has already been given. I would like to know what profits the government made last year from the mint, and how these profits compare with what we should have made if we had not had a mint. It is mainly on the silver coins, I believe, that we make a profit in the minting operations. Formerly, we had an arrangement with the imperial authorities that they were to coin for us. Had we not changed that and established a mint here, what would have been the difference in our profits?

Mr. FIELDING. The information asked for has not been given to-day. But a return was brought down some time ago, and will be found in the records, which, I think, covers the whole matter. In general terms, the position is this: while there is a large profit in the operation of the mint, it is undoubtedly a fact that if we were content to have our coins made as in former years, in England, we should make a larger profit. That I state unhesitatingly. But, on the same principle, no doubt, we could get our Dominion notes printed more cheaply in England than here, yet it was thought that there were good reasons why we should have an establishment for that purpose in Ottawa. The same reasons extended to coinage lead us to think it is better to have Canadian coins made in Canada. The making of them is profitable, not as regards gold—there is no profit in coining gold—but in the silver coins and bronze coins. But, as a mere matter of profits, we should do better by having our coins made in England.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. The current impression is that the coins of this country were formerly minted at the royal mint in England Is it not a fact, however, that many of these were coined by British contractors in Birmingham and other places who make coins for other countries, and not in the royal mint?

Mr. FIELDING. Our orders were invariably sent to the royal mint. But in several instances, because the royal mint was too busy or for some other reason, they turned our orders over to contractors in Birmingham. So, in that sense, the hon. member's statement is practically correct.

Mr. PERLEY. Has the hon. minister considered any design for the gold coins?

Mr. FIELDING. The design is not finally adopted. It is being prepared in the royal mint in England. The elements will be, first, the King's head, as a matter of course, and the arms of Canada, will be used as the chief features in the design. These, with the designation of the coin, the word 'Canada', and the date are the elements of which the design is being made up.

Mr. PERLEY. It is necessary that we should have some name for the $5 gold piece, and the design has a good deal to do with the name. Every country has a special name for its ordinary gold piece, and we should have some short name.

Mr. FIELDING. What do you call the sovereign?

Mr. PERLEY. I call it a sovereign. It is called a napoleon in France, an eagle in the United States, a crown in some parts of Europe, and there must be a short name for the $5 gold piece in Canada, for instance, the beaver.

Mr. FIELDING. The design at present proposed is the King's head and the arms of Canada. While the beaver has elements of value as an industrious animal, I am not quite sure that it is a thing of beauty.

Mr. PERLEY. The minister may be sure that the general public will give a name of its own to the new gold piece, and he might keep that in mind when forming the design, if he does not like the beaver.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Is it the intention to follow the new American practice in the die? The old American coinage is always in relief. They have reversed that in the new coin.

Mr. FIELDING. I believe it was found that the American gold piece, while beautiful in its design, would not stack, and for certain purposes that was a defect in the American currency.

Mr. JAMESON. When the minister speaks of the arms of Canada, does he mean the arms of Canada before confederation, or does he mean the arms of the Dominion as they now exist?

Mr. FIELDING. On a matter of so much importance as a coin, we would have to use the authorized arms, and for the present we would not include a representation of all the provinces. But no doubt before long we will have to have a new issue in which the new arms will be used. For the present we only take the authorized arms.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I would suggest to the minister that a wheat sheaf on the gold coin would be a good advertisement for the country.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

SUPPLY—THE FRUIT TARIFF.

Mr. FIELDING moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. BRADBURY. Before you leave the Chair, I desire to call the attention of the Minister of Finance to a matter of considerable importance affecting the gardeners of Manitoba, and I presume of all Canada. I am in receipt of a letter from the reeve of the municipality of Kildonan, in my county, who is also the secretary of the Agricultural Society of that municipality. He writes as follows:

> You will notice by the papers that the wholesalers of the west have petitioned the government to remove the duty from fruit and green vegetables coming into Canada between December 1 and July 31. Our gardeners protest against the time being extended past June 15, as our stock grown here is in by that time. If this goes into force it will put a lot of our gardeners out of business. We are sending a small petition against it to the government to-day. As the time is short we cannot wait to go to everybody. We want you, when it comes up, to do what you can for us, and we think the 15th of June should be the latest. Will inclose article out of paper.

I have the inclosed petition here, which I presume the minister has received from the wholesalers of the west, and I will read a part of it. It is addressed to His Excellency, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, making, as you will see, a little mistake at the beginning:

Sir,—Your petitioners represent the principal fruit and vegetable importing concerns in western Canada.

Little fruit is raised in western Canada, and the western cities are dependent upon the United States for all the early fruit and vegetables. These come from as far south as Miami, Florida. During the several months of the year before it is possible to grow vegetables or fruits, a large quantity of both are imported; but the freight charges coupled with the duty, place the consumption beyond the purse of the average householder, and these products become a luxury when they are really a necessity.

Our desire is—and we believe it to be a reflex of that of the western country at large—that the duty be removed from these products at such times when they cannot possibly come into competition with home grown articles. We believe that the adoption of the following schedule would be of distinct advantage, supplying the people of western Canada with some of the necessities of life which the country, by reason of its geographical position, is not able to provide at those times.

Schedule.

Peaches, pears, plums and apricots on free list from January 1 to October 1.

Cherries, on free list from January 1 to June 30.

Grapes, on free list from December 1 to August 31.

Tomatoes, and green vegetables, cabbage, cucumbers, celery, asparagus, rhubarb, green beans, cauliflower, on free list from December 1 to July 31.

It is this last paragraph, Mr. Speaker, in which I am most interested, because it affects the great garden industry in our part of the country. I may say that two-thirds of the gardens in the west are situated in my own county. The gardeners have a large amount of money invested in this industry, and while the wholesalers are petitioning apparently in the interest of the consumer, I have grave doubts, if their petition was acceded to, that the general consumer would benefit very much. You simply place in the hands of the wholesaler a power to force the gardeners of our own country to sell to the wholesalers at a reduced price when their stuff comes into the market. I want to protest strongly against the government acceding to the request of the wholesaler as regards the admission of tomatoes, green vegetables, cabbage, cucumbers, asparagus, rhubarb, green beans and cauliflower being placed on the free list from December 1, to July 31. The gardeners seem to be quite willing that they should be placed on the free list, but not later than the 15th of June, and plied with these articles by our own gardeners. All the way from Winnipeg down to Selkirk the gardeners have established a very large business. The gardener really makes his profit on the early vegetables, and the wholesalers apparently want the duty removed so that American stuff may be brought into competition with our garden stuff just at the time when there is any money in it for the gardner. I appeal to the minister on behalf of the gardeners of Manitoba and, I presume, the whole of Canada that they shall receive fair protection against any foreign importation of vegetables. Last year the question was broached by some of the gardeners about asking the government to put an increased protection on some of these vegetables that come from the other side—cabbage and such like—and I hope the government will take this into their serious consideration and see that the American producer is not allowed to interfere with the gardeners of this country.

Mr. BURRELL. I am quite persuaded that the minister or the government would not accede to or deal with a proposition of that kind lightly. We are aware of that and certainly I would utter a very strong protest if a matter of that kind were dealt with without the fullest consideration of the other side of the question. As a matter of fact a disturbance of the duties referred to by my hon. friend would interfere decidedly with the enormous acreage of fruit in our own province of British Columbia where we are building up a tremendous industry and considering that the whole schedule of the American tariff is against us so strongly that we cannot send any of these commodities into the United States it is quite palpable that we could not, without the strongest protest, have such a recommendation as that listened to without the fullest consideration.

Mr. STAPLES. My hon. friend from Selkirk (Mr. Bradbury) says that he represents two-thirds of the market gardeners of Manitoba. He may have something that will support that statement but I represent a constituency that comes up close to the city of Winnipeg, and I think that possibly there are as many market gardeners in the constituency of Macdonald as there are in Selkirk. Therefore, I want to endorse what my hon. friend from Selkirk has said on behalf of the market gardeners of my constituency.

Mr. FIELDING. I have received, within a few days, a copy of a petition dealing with the condition explained to the House by the hon. member for Selkirk. The petition was from the importers. It was followed somewhat rapidly by a communication from the fruit growers of the Niagara district protesting in the strongest terms against what was proposed by the importers of Winnipeg, and now we have the additional protest of the hon. gentleman. What has been said to-day indicates clearly that it is a much disputed matter, to which there are certainly two sides, and I can assure my hon. friends that at this stage of the session we would not undertake to make any disturbance of the tariff on that matter. What has been said will be a fair matter for inquiry and for any future action, but nothing will be done at the present session.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. If the Minister of Finance is going to listen only to the views of the importers of this country the rest of the people might as well close up shop and go out of business. The importers are interested in importations and not in the local or native industries, and the minister on these matters apparently is prepared to give the importers a more attentive ear than the poor man who is trying to make a living. The chief grievance of these fruit growers of the Niagara district applies to all the growers of small fruits and the market gardeners of this country. These men of Canada are just as much entitled to justice as are the importers of Winnipeg or any other city who are endeavouring to make a big lot of money out of importing foreign fruit in cold storage. This is a matter of placing the handling of all our vegetables and fruits in the hands of the cold storage trusts, and I think we should stand by our own people on a question of this kind and not in favour of the importers as the minister does.

Mr. BLAIN. I would like to add a word or two on behalf of the market gardeners of my county and to urge that no action may be taken without an opportunity of being given the gardeners of that section to lay their case before the government. I am quite sure that no action will be taken. I desire to say just one thing further and that is that the people of Canada must bear in mind that the market gardeners are producing many things now that we never thought would be produced in Canada many years ago. They are producing large quantities of products now that heretofore were imported from the United States. Within this very year, in my own time, some men have given up their ordinary avocations, have taken up pieces of land and are going especially into the market gardening business for the purpose of raising early products which are used in our houses and have a large sale in the early part of the year. Therefore, I would ask that the government, in the consideration of the tariff question as it affects the farmers and market gardeners of this country, would keep in mind the fact that both farmers and market gardeners are able to produce a great many things to-day that in years back they could not produce at all, and I am quite sure that so long as matters are left steadfast they will produce everything at almost any time of the year that the people of this country will require.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would like to ask the Minister of Finance when we may expect the information which was asked for with respect to the proposed changes in the tariff?

Mr. FIELDING. It is being printed and I would hope to have it on the table on Monday.

Motion agreed to and House went into Committee of Supply.

Civil government—Post Office Department—salaries, $546,260.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Does the Postmaster General intend to increase the salaries of the railway mail clerks, and if not, why not?

Mr. LEMIEUX. That question was put by the hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Macdonell) yesterday, and my answer appears in 'Hansard.' Last year I gave a general increase to the lower classes of the outside service, sorters, stampers and labourers, and this year I thought we should give an increase to the higher classes, who had not received any increase since confederation. Some years ago the railway mail clerks received a substantial increase, and as there is a general demand for higher salaries on the part of the city office sorters and clerks, the question arises whether we should increase the one and not the others. I have decided, after the session, to examine the various merits or demerits of the claims put forth, and at the beginning of next session, I hope to be able to introduce legislation on the matter. My intention is to bring the outside service in the larger city post offices under the Civil Service Act. We can do so under an order in council, but preliminary to that we have to adjust the salaries so that the different classes of employees may fall into a proper salary classification.

Mr. DANIEL. Is the minister in a position to state now that he will bring the outside post office service under the Civil Service Act and rearrange the salaries?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Speaking for myself personally, it is my intention to do so. The department is studying the problem, which is a very difficult one.

Mr. STAPLES. What action has the minister taken in regard to the application for a post office at Kilmant and Shacleton, which are situated outside of Winnipeg? In 1906, this post office was recommended by Mr. Riddel, who being the defeated candidate, apparently had the patronage, and every year since the minister has had it brought to his notice. Last year the minister assured me that he was going to give the people of that district a post office, and that it would not be necessary for me to bring the matter up in the House. A post office is certainly required in that locality. There are no post offices, from Winnipeg west about 15 miles, on the south side of the river, and while there are post offices on the other side of the river at certain seasons of the year, the people cannot cross and cannot get their mail unless they go through the city of Winnipeg, a distance of 8 miles. A return which has been brought down, gives the correspondence addressed to the minister as to the necessity for this post office. The whole trouble has been over some little political disappointment, and the person who had the patronage of that constituency advised that there should not be a post office there. There is no doubt in my mind; there cannot be any doubt in the mind of the minister if he has read the correspondence, that there is great necessity for a post office at that point. Is the minister going to give the people of this locality a post office, which they have so long been asking for? Might I also ask, now that Dr. Thompson, the defeated candidate, is dead, who has the patronage of that locality? As the defeated candidate has passed to his reward, might I, as the representative of that constituency, have a little to say in the distribution of the patronage and towards securing what the people really require?

Mr. LEMIEUX. I should have informed my hon. friend about a fortnight ago, that a report had been sent to me by Post Office Inspector McLeod, of Winnipeg, which I have approved. At the request of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Staples) I asked for a special report as to the necessity of the office referred to, and the inspector recommended the opening of an office, which, I think, is at Kilmant Park, but I do not know that the office has been opened under that name, but from Mr. McLeod's report, the new office, which has been opened, will serve the hon. gentleman's purpose, and especially serve the needs of the patrons in that neighbourhood. We have closed one office on the other side of the river, and by equalizing the distances between the neighbouring offices, according to Mr. McLeod, we are giving satisfaction to the patrons concerned. If the office has not been opened, it will be in a day or so.

Mr. STAPLES. I have had no advice that the office is opened, but I am pleased to know that the minister has given instructions that it should be opened.

Mr. LEMIEUX. As regards the patronage, I know that Mr. Thompson, who was the Liberal candidate, is dead, as we generally do in all these matters, we referred the question to the inspector. Of course, when a postmaster is to be appointed we generally ask our political friends, we are human enough for that, but as to the location of a post office or its necessity we take the advice of the post office inspector.

Mr. BLAIN. Has my hon. friend also a patronage list?

Mr. STAPLES.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I do not know of any in the department. My hon. friend himself asked me last year to open an office which he thought was necessary in his constituency. I looked into the case, got a report, and opened the office at his request.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Perhaps he is on the list.

Mr. BLAIN. I appreciate very much the kindness of the department and the minister in opening an office in my county, and I may say that his friends as well as my own appreciate that very much. It would not be open to criticism from any class of people, it is meeting the wants of the people, and I am sure the opening of that office will stand to the credit of the government. I suppose my hon. friend does not put any advertisements in newspapers?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Yes, I think we do.

Mr. BLAIN. How is that list?

Mr. LEMIEUX. I could not give it offhand. We could not have a patronage list, properly speaking, for the very reason that according to law I am obliged to advertise in each case when there is a new mail contract to be awarded, if it is for more than $200, unless when a contract has been going on for some years to the satisfaction of the department and a renewal is to the interest of the department. I could not give a list of the papers in which the advertisements appear because that is done through the Department of the Secretary of State.

Mr. BLAIN. Does my hon. friend lay down a principle that where a paper has the largest circulation in a district, advertisements should be inserted in it regardless of its politics

Mr. SPROULE. He advertises by posters.

Mr. BLAIN. Oh, no; he inserts these advertisements in the newspapers as well.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Very little, we advertise very little; as the hon. gentleman from Grey pointed out our advertisements are placarded in every post office and country store and in Quebec at the church doors. I may say that if perchance there is an advertisement to be inserted I am human enough to give the preference to a good Grit paper.

Mr. BLAIN. Why?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Because I am a man and not an angel. I must say, however, that the absence of a Grit paper would necessitate the advertisement being put in a good Tory paper, and that has happened on more than one occasion.

Mr. BLAIN. I am referring to advertisements calling for tenders for the renewal of contracts or for new contracts. I can produce Reform newspapers from my own county containing advertisements calling for tenders to be sent in to the department. When my hon. friend states that the custom is to print a circular and post it up in the post offices, and that is the sum total of the advertisements, I hardly think he will venture to say that it is the government policy.

Mr. LEMIEUX. That is generally what we do.

Mr. BLAIN. It would be interesting to have a list of the Conservative newspapers in which he has inserted advertisements in the past year.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I have two in my mind just now. In the northern section of the Ottawa district, some new contracts were awarded to change the service from bi-weekly to tri-weekly, and from tri-weekly to daily. There are only two papers in that district, one English, and one French, and both Conservative—the Pontiac 'Advance' and 'Le Pionier de Nominingue'. I did not know that these papers were in existence, I have not time to read them, but my hon. friend from Labelle (Mr. Major) stated very frankly that there were no other papers in that district, and advised me to send the advertisements to these two. Here are two Conservative papers to which I sent advertisements. The list is not very long, and I mention these from memory.

Mr. BLAIN. That is a very frank admission, and I may congratulate the hon. minister on his list. It is larger than that of the Department of Public Works, which was handed across the House the other evening, and which was blank. My hon. friend required to advertise, and finding there were no Reform newspapers in that locality, he gave the advertisements to the only two papers published there. That is a little better than the record of the Minister of Public Works, and therefore, I offer the hon. gentleman my congratulations.

Mr. LEMIEUX. The district is a large one, sparsely and wildly settled.

Mr. STAPLES. I would like to know who the postmaster is to be.

Mr. LEMIEUX. There are two St. Charles, and I am afraid to confuse the two. One was abolished to make way for the other. If my hon. friend will put a question on the order paper, I will give him the information.

Mr. STAPLES. Did you call for tenders?

Mr. LEMIEUX. If the service is opened, we must have. If my hon. friend will put a question on the order paper, I will give him an answer.

Mr. STAPLES. The minister cannot give information as to whether he called for tenders or not, but simply states that he is going to establish a post office there.

Mr. LEMIEUX. We may not have called for tenders if it is the extension of an existing contract. In that case the contractor takes the new contract at a pro rata rate.

Mr. STAPLES. The people of that district have been suffering for the want of a post office. They had the promise of the minister a year ago, and now he tells us he is going to give that post office. I presume, therefore, that beyond doubt there will be a post office established immediately in that district.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I have not the papers under my hand just now, but I can assure my hon. friend that not later than two or three weeks ago I approved a report signed by Mr. McLeod, of Winnipeg, our inspector, in favour of the establishment of a post office such as was requested by my hon. friend at the end of last session, and I know that we decided to dispense with one of the St. Charles post offices. There were two post offices, and there was a quarrel on that side of the river as to the location. Following the suggestion made by the inspector, I dispensed with one of these and equalized the distance between the two, so as to give the people the office they wanted.

Mr. STAPLES. Then we may take it for granted that beyond doubt that post office will be established immediately. I would like to ask the minister what action he has taken in response to the petition I sent him a short time ago from the citizens of Rosedale asking that a daily mail be established in that district. The present service is largely temporary, and has only been tri-weekly, or possibly twice a week for Levingham. The minister has that petition in his hands at present. The people are anxious to have a daily mail service put on that branch line.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I will see that my hon. friend is satisfied.

Mr. EDWARDS. I do not know that I want to oppose the necessary increases to salaries, but inasmuch as the hon. the Postmaster General has said that he accepts the reports of his inspectors of districts, as to whether or not a post office should be granted, or a more frequent service, I must assume that with regard to the petition which I presented to him asking for a better mail service in the county of Frontenac, he was influenced in his decision by the report of the inspector of that district. If I am right in that conclusion, the sooner he gets a new inspector for the district the better for the people. I want to point out to him that in my judgment his department is giving more attention to the mail service in the cities and large centres, than to rural districts, and that he is giving more attention to the mail service in other provinces than the province of Ontario, especially the eastern part, in which the county I represent is situated. In the county of Frontenac you have some fourteen post offices which give the department a revenue of $5,901, according to the report for the year 1908. The salaries and commissions paid the postmasters amount to $3,914, showing a surplus revenue of nearly $2,000. To form an idea of the importance of these offices, the postal notes and money orders paid amounted to over $27,000, and those issued amounted to $84,000. There are some sixty-eight to seventy non-accounting offices from which the government receives a revenue of $5,600, and pays in salaries and allowances some $3,609. The total revenue received by the government from the county of Frontenac post office is $11,512, and the total amount paid in salaries and allowances is $7,523. This leaves a surplus of revenue over salaries and allowances from the county of Frontenac alone of nearly $4,000. Now, I wish to call the attention of the Postmaster General to the fact that, notwithstanding the surplus of his department of which he boasts, a considerable portion of the surplus comes from the county of Frontenac. And I do not think he is using the people of Frontenac fairly. On the non-accounting post offices, I can name five with an average revenue of over $250, and the average salary of which is only $144, or a total revenue of $1,251, and an outlay for salaries of $723. And yet, for some unaccountable reason, the larger powers of issuing postal notes, and money orders are withheld from these offices, very much to the inconvenience of the people. I could give the hon. gentleman a number of post offices in my county from which the government is receiving quite a handsome surplus over salaries and allowances. If you take into consideration the revenue received by the Post Office Department from the offices in the county of Frontenac, and consider, on the other side the amount paid in salaries and allowances to the several postmasters, and add to that the cost of the mail service in the county of Frontenac of course that cannot be done with perfect accuracy, because the mail routes overlap county boundaries—I doubt if there is any county in the Dominion of Canada that has so little reason to thank the Post Office Department for what is done for it as the county of Frontenac. In considering the mail service, it seems to me that little account is taken of the public needs in deciding whether there should be increased frequency of service or not. In many cases, post offices that have a tri-weekly service show very conclusively, by the revenues produced, that they are more entitled to a daily service than many places that now have a daily service. Let me give an instance. The hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux) will recall the fact that I asked him some time ago to give the post office at Latimer a daily instead of a tri-weekly service. I know that the Postmaster General is a very busy man, and I must say that whenever I have brought a matter to his attention, he has given me, apparently, a very attentive hearing. I can only suppose that the facts in this case have slipped from his mind. The post office at Latimer is along what is known as the Kingston and Perth Road mail route. The mail is carried by Perth road stage from Kingston and leaves the mail at Glenburnie, at Latimer, at Inverary and so on to Perth road. Every office along that line has a daily service except Latimer. When the stage reaches Glenburnie, about five miles out of Kingston, the mail is given to the carrier who takes it to Glenburnie post office, which, according to the report of the Postmaster General is a distance of seven-eighths of a mile. I think that is correct, or was before the post office was changed. Glenburnie gets a daily service. The stage goes on four miles further, and hands the mail to the carrier who takes it from this route to Latimer post office, a distance of one mile. Now, Glenburnie is a thickly-populated settlement, and so is Latimer—just as thickly-populated. In fact, the figures prove very conclusively that Latimer is more entitled to a daily service than is Glenburnie. I am not saying that Glenburnie is not entitled to a daily service; I contend that it is. But take the figures as given in the last report of the Postmaster General. Glenburnie post office with a daily service gives the department a revenue of $48.50 a year. The Postmaster General pays $90 a year for the carrier to take the mail from the stage to the post office, six days in the week. Latimer post office, one mile from the line of the stage route, and with a service three times a week, gives the government a revenue of $74.25 a year. Now, I know that the Postmaster General could get the mail carried from the stage to Latimer post office six days a week for $90 a year. And, yet, for a difference of $16—to be precise, of $15.75— he refuses the people of one of the oldest settlements in the province of Ontario a daily instead of a tri-weekly service. In this calculation no account is taken of the increased revenue which would certainly be derived if the people had a daily instead of a tri-weekly service. Nor is that all. There is another point I wish to impress on the mind of the Postmaster General. There is absolute evidence that, if he wanted to improve the service the giving of a daily mail to Latimer would not cost his department one five-cent piece. I went to the Postmaster General and pointed out to him that, whereas in the past, this road running from Kingston to Perth road, used to be a toll road with three toll-gates on it, so that persons tendering for the mail contract had to take their tolls into consideration, the people of the county have made this a free road, and have abolished these three toll-gates. If the Postmaster General will look at his figures, he will find that he is getting the mail carried from Kingston to Perth road this year at a rate of $50 less than before. There is another reason why, it seems to me, the Postmaster General ought to give the people this improved service. It would round out his service so far as that particular route from Kingston to Perth road is concerned, for every post office along that route would have a daily service.

Mr. LEMIEUX. What do you estimate as the additional cost?

Mr. EDWARDS. The cost of a daily instead of a tri-weekly service to Latimer will be less than the department has been paying if you take into consideration the fact that you are going to get the mail carried for less this year than last, because of the fact that the mail contractor in tendering for the contract lowered his price $50 because of the abolition of tolls on the road. But I want to direct attention strongly to the point that the Latimer post office, with a tri-weekly service, is giving a revenue of $74.25 a year, and I think it reasonable to conclude that if they had a daily service the revenue would be increased, a little at all events. I know whereof I speak when I say that you can get the mail carried from the stage to the Latimer post office for $90, the same as you are paying for carrying the mail from the stage to Glenburnie post office. You have only a difference of $15.75, if we assume that you would have no increased revenue from a daily service over a tri-weekly service.

Now, I want to call attention to another post office. The Postmaster General, in answering a letter of mine in regard to the Latimer post office, said that he was of the opinion that, even with the limited amount of post office business transacted, the tri-weekly service was reasonable. Now, I say again that if he bases that opinion—I know he cannot keep in touch with every office—if he bases that opinion on any report sent by the inspector of the Kingston district, then the sooner he gets a new inspector the better for the department and for the people in general.

I want to call his attention to another case in my county, the case of the Williamsville post office. A great many years ago, before letter-carriers were appointed in the city of Kingston, Williamsville was within the city limits and was made a post office. It was supposed that Williamsville would supply the people of the upper end of the city as well as the people in the county adjoining. Since then, letter-carriers have been appointed to carry the mails to the people in the city of Kingston, and they even carry the mail to the postmaster who keeps the Williamsville post office. I have asked that the Williamsville post office be moved up the street about three-quarters of a mile to the border of the city with the county. Now, that seems to me to be reasonable. It would be about 150 yards away from the school house, and the change would not cost one cent, because the same stage which drops the mail off at the Williamsville post office, the Kingston and Newburgh stage, would pass up the street and drop it off at a store in the upper part of the city. Look at the advantage it would be to the people. Children going to school in the morning could post their letters, and after school at night they could call at the post office and get their mail before going home. It would be a great convenience to the people of the surrounding country in that vicinity, and petition after petition has been sent here by the people of that section asking for this to be done. Would it be any detriment to the people of the city of Kingston? Not one particle of detriment, because the letter-carriers in the city take the letters right past the Williamsville post office and all around through that part of the city, and three-quarters of a mile up the street to the boundary between the city and the county. Why should that not be done? I did not ask, and do not ask now, to move the post office out into the county. I am willing that the member for the city of Kingston should have the privilege of saying where the post office should be established, and of naming a person living in the city to keep the post office. But I repeat that it does seem to me extremely unfair to the people in that section of the country that they should be deprived of a better mail service when they could get it without doing any harm or causing any inconvenience whatever to the people of the upper part of the city.

I want to call attention to another request which I made for a post office. I asked the deputy minister to establish a post office midway between Maberley and Sharbot Lake, at a place called Fall River. A largely signed petition was sent down here asking for that convenience. The nearest any person in that locality is to a post office is four and a half miles, they have to go from four to seven miles in order to get their mail. They asked for a mail twice a week only. There is a cheese factory and quite a settlement, and they only ask for a mail twice a week. What is the answer? That it would cost $70 a year to take the mail in there, and that the postmaster's salary would be $35 a year, that is $105, and that the revenue would possibly be no more than $10.

Mr. LEMIEUX. To carry the mail between what two points?

Mr. EDWARDS. The minister's letter stated that the location would be about four miles and a half from Maberley, but it does not lie in a direct line between Sharbot Lake and Maberley. If you take the point where they want a post office established as one point, and Sharbot Lake as another, and Maberley as another, they would form a triangle, so you cannot exactly say that the point where they want the post office is midway between Sharbot Lake and Maberley. Now, I am sorry the minister takes the view that, because this office would only accommodate, as he says in his letter, some twenty families, he cannot afford to expend that amount of money per year in the county of Frontenac and give those people a mail service twice a week. I want to express my view very strongly that the Postmaster General has no right to one dollar of surplus in his department. The money that he gets in his department comes from the postage stamps and post cards purchased by the people, and that money should go back to the people in the way of mail service. I think it speaks very poorly indeed for the Post Office Department if they cannot afford to expend in that county a small amount like that.

Now, I want to add to what I have said, that I do not think the Postmaster General is treating the province of Ontario as fairly as he is treating other provinces. I am not going to say that he is doing that intentionally, but nevertheless, I think he is treating the province of Ontario unfairly, and I can prove that from his own report. From 1895 to 1909, the number of post offices in the province of Ontario increased by some 17 per cent.

Mr. LEMIEUX. On what page?

Mr. EDWARDS. I have only the report for 1909 where the number of post offices in each province is given. The report for 1895 shows that there were 3,138 post offices in Ontario while the report for 1909 shows that there were 3,694 post offices in Ontario. The number of post offices was increased in the different provinces from 1895 to 1909 as follows:

	Increase in number.	Percentage of increase.
Ontario..	556	17
Quebec..	669	41
Nova Scotia..	349	22
New Brunswick..	235	20
Prince Edward Island..	77	20
British Columbia..	301	122
Manitoba and the Territories, including Yukon	1,440	198

Mr. EDWARDS.

I can readily understand that in British Columbia and Manitoba there is a great need for an increase in the number of offices. The population has been increasing very rapidly, much more rapidly in those provinces than in any other, but I can understand also that apart from the consideration of the increase in population, there would be reasons why post offices would have to be established in that country. The population is scattered. There are little sections here and there, and there is no doubt a necessity for even more post offices than you would naturally expect looking at the lump figures of population. But, there has not been such a great difference in the increase of population in the older provinces as would be indicated by the difference in the figures regarding the increase in the number of post offices. The figures of the census of 1901 do not show any such great difference in the increase of population in these provinces as would be indicated by the increase in the number of post offices. There is nothing to lead one to the supposition, for instance, that the population of Prince Edward Island has increased to such an extent that the number of post offices had to be increased by 20 per cent while the population of Ontario increased to such an extent that the number of post offices only had to be increased by 17 per cent. The census of 1901 compared with the census of 1891 shows a decrease in the population of Prince Edward Island. If the postmaster would consider the need for post offices as indicated from the amount of business done and from the standpoint of letters, post cards, registered letters, third and fourth class matter handled he would find no reason for any discrimination against Ontario; in fact, so far as third class matter is concerned Ontario furnishes 58 per cent of the total of the Dominion and of fourth class matter 61 per cent and compares favourably with the older provinces with regard to letters, post cards and other mail matter carried. I give these figures to the hon. gentleman because I want to show him that he would be justified in increasing the postal facilities of Ontario. Those figures show conclusively that in all fairness, if you consider population and business done, Ontario is entitled to a far greater number of post offices than it has at the present time, and I believe I have made good the point that Ontario is entitled to more post offices in order to put it on an equal basis with the other provinces. Then, I want to impress upon the minister that there is a particular part of Ontario that is peculiarly entitled to his consideration and that part is the county of Frontenac. That has been the object of my argument here. I did not get up simply to find fault for I am willing to say, as I believe, that a great deal has been done to improve the post office service of Canada. I am willing to give the Liberal party credit for the reduction of from 3 to 2 cents in the postal rate, but I do not believe the Postmaster General and his department are giving the rural part of the country the attention which it deserves. If the Postmaster General is depending solely upon the reports of inspectors of the various districts and if the inspector of the Kingston district has reported unfavourably on a daily service at Latimer post offices for instance, where they have a tri-weekly service, I think he has not given due consideration to all circumstances. I am willing to depend upon the minister's judgment of the matter and if he will consider it fairly and squarely I do not see how he can refuse to give these people a daily instead of a tri-weekly service. If the inspector of that district has reported to him against an increase in the service of that post office I say that he has proved thereby that he is not fit for the job he occupies. In the matter of carrying the mails I could give a great many instances from my own county where the people are performing a service for the public for practically nothing. For instance, take the Harrowsmith-Sydenham line. It is four miles there, four miles back, eight miles, six trips a week, forty-eight miles altogether and that service is performed for $48 a year. It is not costing you very much, Mr. Postmaster General. You are not going down in your pocket very deeply to pay for that service and I ask you to take that into consideration. But, I am pressing my claim on behalf of other parts of my county to have more frequent service than they are getting now. I could give many instances similar to that.

Let us take the Kingston-Sydenham line, 18 miles, 6 trips a week, 36 miles each day, making 216 miles. That man travels over 10,000 miles in a year, and he receives $257 for it. I think I am perfectly justified in asking that the cheapness of the service in the county of Frontenac should be considered in connection with my request for an extension of the service in the different parts of the county. I would also inform the minister that he can greatly improve the mail service in the county by increasing the number of accounting post offices and give them the right to issue and pay money orders. These accounting post offices are of very great convenience to the people of the country districts. I have collated the following statistics in reference to the accounting offices in Frontenac—the revenue received from them for the year 1905 was $5,900, salaries paid $3,904, postal notes and money orders paid $27,220, and postal notes and money orders issued $84,028. I give these figures to show that a considerable postal business is being done in the county, and I wish to tell the minister that if he increased the number of post offices in the county, it would correspondingly increase the amount of postal revenue. Many of these offices in Frontenac county are in centres where there are cheese factories and cheese business, and it would be a great convenience to the people if they were made accounting offices. I trust that the minister will give special attention to Latimer and Williamsville. I am satisfied that so far as the Latimer office is concerned, that a daily service will not add one cent of extra expenditure, because the increased revenue will pay the extra cost.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I agree with the hon. gentleman that accounting offices are very convenient for the public, and where there is business enough to justify their establishment, the department as a rule does not object to them. I look upon the establishment of such post offices as a facility for the trade and industry of the country. As to the small amount paid to the mail-carrier, the hon. gentleman is aware, I suppose, that there are many would-be mail-carriers who are dissatisfied because they did not secure the contract. As a rule we advertise these contracts, and we invariably accept the lowest tenderer, and I suppose the contractors know best what price they can do the work for. Now, I think my hon. friend (Mr. Edwards) should have confined his remarks to the county of Frontenac, and should not have alleged that preferential treatment was given by the Post Office Department as between different provinces. I can tell my hon. friend that I would be ashamed to preside over a department that would make any discrimination between one province and another. Every one knows that the banner province of the Dominion is Ontario, it is the richest, it is one of the oldest, it is the most populous, and it is entitled to all consideration from the Post Office Department, and from all other departments of the government. It has never entered into my mind that I should differentiate between one province and another. But we must admit one thing, the province of Ontario is an old and well settled province, offices have been in existence there for more than a century and there are fewer demands from that province for new offices than there are from the newer provinces. My hon. friend will be surprised to hear that in one constituency in Alberta, Medicine Hat represented by my hon. friend (Mr. Magrath) in the last year or two I have opened more than 80 post offices. Every one understands that, it is a new province, the distances are immense and there are groups of settlers established here and there and we must provide them with postal facilities, whereas Ontario is an old-established province and therefore, fewer new offices are opened there. My hon. friend may say that fewer offices proportionately are opened in Ontario than in some of the newer provinces. True, I open fewer new offices in Ontario because fewer are needed there as it has been so long settled, but when I am asked to increase the mail services in the rural sections of Ontario I always take into consideration in favour of that province its population, its wealth and its standing in the confederation. If my hon. friend will add together the various amounts represented by the mail contracts in Ontario he will see the difference there is between Ontario and Quebec for instance. At all events this question of differentiating between the several provinces does not enter my mind, and I should be ashamed as a public man to be guided by such considerations when the question of expenditure comes up. I take each case and judge it according to its own value, and to the best of my judgment in all conscience and honesty. My hon. friend mentioned a moment ago the Latimer post office. I think the statements he made about the inspector are unwarranted.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

ST. LAWRENCE POWER TRANSMISSION COMPANY.

House in committee on Bill (No. 115) to incorporate the St. Lawrence Power Transmission Company, Limited.—Mr. Pardee.

Mr. SPROULE. I would suggest that this Bill be not taken up, as there are several hon. members absent who desire to be here when it is being considered. It is therefore not likely to get through to-night, and it would be better to have the committee rise and report progress and dispose of the other Bill

Mr. PARDEE. I think that all members of the House knew quite well that the Bill was going through to-night and I can see no object in postponing it. It has been discussed frequently and various amendments have been proposed. It is quite well known what those amendments are and what the object of the Bill is. As I understand it, the amendment proposed by the hon. member for North Ontario (Mr. Sharpe) is quite satisfactory, and the Bill may go through on that understanding.

Mr. HUGHES. If there is any intention, and I believe there is, on the part of the government, to deal fairly with this measure, and as the right hon. the leader of the government has already consented to a very important amendment which will prevent any possibility of damming the St. Lawrence without the House being consulted, I would suggest that the amendment agreed upon be taken up before we proceed any further.

Mr. PARDEE. I have no objection to that whatever. The amendments proposed by the hon. member for North Ontario (Mr. Sharpe) and the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden) are perfectly acceptable to the promoter of the Bill, who is quite content to allow it to go through with those amendments added.

Mr. SPROULE. I have always understood that there are a number of members who think that this Bill should not pass in any shape; and voicing their sentiments, I think it would be the part of wisdom to allow it to stand and dispose of the bills on the paper.

Mr. HUGHES. The sentiment expressed by my hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) was undoubtedly that of, not only the opposition, but a large number of government supporters in the earlier part of the debate. Knowing that this Bill, coupled as it was with the St. Lawrence Power Act, would make a very dangerous position, and that to kill this measure and let the St. Lawrence Power Act stand unamended we still leave the rattle snake, as it was called, alive and vigorous, an amendment was proposed which would destroy that danger. The danger is in the St. Lawrence Power Act of 1901 rather than in this Bill, and the right hon. the Prime Minister has consented to amend the Act of 1901 by a clause in this Bill, which would rather effectively kill the rattlesnake

Mr. PARDEE. If the hon. member from Victoria and Haliburton (Mr. Hughes) thinks there can be absolutely no objection to allowing the Bill to go through, if every thing is killed that was objectionable, there ought to be no objection to our putting it through to-night.

Mr. S. SHARPE. There has been a great deal of discussion in connection with this Bill both in the Private Bills Committee and in the House. Having taken quite an active interest in opposing it in the Private Bills Committee, I was very anxious to have the objectionable features removed. The fact that the right hon. the Prime Minister has accepted the position taken by the hon. the leader of the opposition, removes, I think, the main objection—not that this Bill had anything to do with the damming of the St. Lawrence per se, but it added to the rights and privileges of the latter company, and consequently we decided on Monday last that, in according these additional rights and privileges, there should be some concessions made by the company which was incorporated in 1901. There has been a good deal of play of words as to whether these two companies are identical. True each has a different corporate existence, but both are practically controlled by the same individuals. That was practically admitted by the hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Pardee) when he introduced this Bill and agreed to amendments modifying the other. It was also admitted by the fact that the amendments proposed by the opposition were acceded to because they modified the Act of 1901. Unless the same promoters were behind both measures, the promoters of the present Bill would have no right to accept any amendments modifying the Act of 1901. There can be no doubt that the same individuals are behind both measures. The opposition was well timed and its efforts have been rewarded with a great deal of success. The integrity of the St. Lawrence river has been maintained by the opposition to this Bill. The hon. the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) had made up his mind to accede to the demands of the St. Lawrence Power Company, and so had the International Waterways Commission.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Nothing of the kind.

Mr. S. SHARPE. There cannot be the slightest doubt that the three engineers of the Public Works Department condemned the scheme in 1908, in the strongest terms. If that was the case why did they modify their verdict in 1910, unless they were open to representations from the Minister of Public Works.

Mr. PUGSLEY. A very sad reflection upon the engineers.

Mr. LENNOX. Worse on the minister.

Mr. PUGSLEY. If he had made such representations, it would be worse.

Mr. S. SHARPE. These engineers have been often reflected upon. They were three engineers of the department who brought in a report on this Bill. One of them was Mr. Lafleur, chief engineer of the Public Works Department, on whom many reflections have been cast on account of dredging contacts which he justified as fair and reasonable, and which the Public Accounts Committee showed was clearly an imposition. Another is Mr. W. P. Anderson, engineer of the Department of Marine and Fisheries. Everybody knows that that department has not stood for efficiency in the past. Anything connected with it is rather suspiciously regarded by the public.

Mr. HUGHES. Not Mr. Anderson's branch.

Mr. S. SHARPE. There was Mr. Butler, a very eminent man, but when we consider that it was in his department the Aylesworth canal was inaugurated, and put through, these men cannot be relied on as independent engineers.

Mr. GRAHAM. Nonsense.

Mr. S. SHARPE. Mr. Butler was the head of the Department of Railways and Canals.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. It was not under him that canal was started.

Mr. S. SHARPE It was under him it was perpetuated, and he still defends the whole enterprise. The whole discussion shows the necessity of an independent board of engineers, occupying the same position as the Auditor General, so that they would not be subject to the suggestions or dictates of any minister, and could bring in an independent report the same as does the Auditor General.

Mr. GRAHAM. You do not know the engineers.

Mr. S. SHARPE. The mere fact that the Minister of Public Works, when we had an all night session, said that he would see that the public were protected, showed his inclination to support the enterprise.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I said in case there was any need for it.

Mr. S. SHARPE. It showed his leaning towards defending the whole proposition, and his anxiety to put it through. And I am inclined to think that, when the board of engineers brought in a modified report favouring the whole proposition—practically favouring it—that shows that there was some influence brought to bear upon them to amend their previous judgment. In 1908, they had condemned it in the strongest possible terms, but their second report reads as if they were trying to excuse and suggest a way around the difficulties presented in their previous report. However that may be, the acceptance of the amendment of the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) removes the greatest objection to the Bill. It is true, there are still other objections. But I think the country will owe it to the opposition in this House that the integrity of the St. Lawrence river is maintained.

Mr. PARDEE. Will the hon. member (Mr. S. Sharpe) move his amendment?

Mr. S. SHARPE. In a moment. Last Monday, I suggested that, inasmuch as this same company was asking for privileges and powers from the government they should consent to a modification or revision of their rates by the Railway Board. I have given notice of an amendment that the rates of the St. Lawrence Power Company, incorporated in 1901, shall be subject to revision and supervision by the Railway Board. I think that removes the other main objection. There is already a provision in this Bill giving the Board of Railway Commissioners control over the rates of this transmission company. But, if they had to pay high rates to the power company for their power, they could not give the public low rates. I understand that the promoters now are willing to accede to the request and make the rates of the power company subject to the control of the Board of Railway Commissioners. With these two amendments, I think the main features of the Bill are not so objectionable. I think the hon. member for West Lambton (Mr. Pardee) will agree with me that when the Bill was discussed in the Private Bills Committee it was agreed by Mr. McCarthy that they would buy their right of way and would not ask for easements from the farmers, as it was argued by the hon. member for Grenville (Mr. J. D. Reid) that the farmers would be interfered with and their crops might be injured if only easements were secured. This point should be made clear in the Bill.

Mr. PARDEE. That is quite clear now.

Mr. S. SHARPE. In that case, there need be no objection to it. But some hon. members think it is not clear. There were two other amendments suggested. One was that the consent of the municipalities should be obtained before the company should have the right to construct their lines, and the other was that the assets of the province should not be expropriated without the consent of the province. I understand that the promoter of the Bill refuses to accede to these amendments. Of course, in that event, the government will have to assume the responsibility, so far as this House is concerned, of passing the Bill without these amendments.

Mr. LENNOX. If it passes.

Mr. S. SHARPE. Yes, if it passes. But, in my opinion, the main objectionable features have been removed by acceding to the amendment of the leader of the opposition, and by the regulation of the rates of the power company. These two amendments, so far as I am personally concerned—and speaking for myself alone and no other hon. member—I have no objection to the Bill going through.

Mr. GERMAN. It has been suggested, as I understand, with references to this Bill, that the expectation of the company is to take power from the St. Lawrence Power Company which company it is claimed, has the right under the Act of 1901 to put dams in the St. Lawrence river at the head of the Long Sault rapids.

Mr. HUGHES. At the foot of the Long Sault?

Mr. GERMAN. Yes, at the foot of the Long Sault. I have the Act of 1901 incorporating the St. Lawrence Power Company. Now, I may read this statute quite wrongly, but as I read it, I cannot see that the St. Lawrence Power Company has any right whatever under the Act to construct any dams in the St. Lawrence river at the foot of the Long Sault rapids, or that it has any powers whatever, for it seems to me that the company is functus officio, not having carried out the provisions of its Act of incorporation. The Act provides:

> The company may—
> (a) manufacture, use, supply and dispose of electricity, water and gas, and water, hydraulic or other power by means of wires, cables, pipes, conduits, machinery or other appliances; and construct, maintain and operate works for the production, sale and distribution thereof, and for the purposes aforesaid may construct, acquire, use, maintain and operate canals, water-courses, raceways and water-powers in or adjacent to the St. Lawrence river on the north side thereof at any points eastward from Hoople's creek, in the county of Stormont, in the province of Ontario, to the eastern end of the Soulanges canal.

That certainly does not give the company power to put dams in the St. Lawrence river at the foot of the Long Sault rapids.

Mr. HUGHES. Then these amendments will do no harm.

Mr. GERMAN. Certainly not. Further, I cannot see—and I would like the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) either now or at some other time, to explain the matter—how this St. Lawrence Power Company can construct dams at the point referred to. Section 13 of the Act provides:

> The powers granted by this Act shall cease and be null and void unless works of the company capable of producing at least one thousand horse-power are completed within three years from the passing of this Act, and notwithstanding anything contained in any Act of parliament.

This company has not only not completed any works, but it has not begun any works. Surely, so far as the powers granted under this Act are concerned, this company is dead—it is finished. They would have to revive the Act, and for that purpose, to come to parliament.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. Have they not constructed a portion of their works?

Mr. GERMAN. This company has constructed nothing. They did buy, I believe, some plant and property from Mr. M. P. Davis. But, surely, that is not a compliance with the provisions of this Act. The power plant which they bought from Mr Davis at the Long Sault rapids, and the power granted to this company is to construct works at the Soulanges canal, which is a long way——

Mr. HUGHES. Where is Hoople's creek?

Mr. GERMAN—I presume that it is somewhere near the Soulanges canal. But I do not know.

Mr. S. SHARPE. It is fifty miles away; it is west of the Long Sault rapids.

Mr. HUGHES. Above Dickinson's Landing.

Mr. S. SHARPE. So, this Act gives them power, so far as the parliament of Canada can give them power, to construct a dam at the Long Sault rapids, because the territory covered by their Act extends about 54 miles along the river.

Mr. GERMAN. Then, if they have complied with section 13, which I do not think they have done——

Mr. S. SHARPE. They say they have.

Mr. GERMAN. I do not know what works they have completed for the development of 1,000 electrical horse-power. If they comply with that, then they are a live concern and can go on and develop power, and if they can, my opinion is that this parliament should prevent them from putting dams in the St. Lawrence river, and tying up that river to this American corporation, allowing them to build their power houses on the American side of the river where this government cannot touch them. If any one suggests that this government can in any way control the output of power of that company, whose power-houses are on the United States side of the line, I fail myself to see where any restriction can be imposed by this parliament. You can put any clause in the Act you like, they can violate that clause and use all the power on the United States side of the boundary line, and the only possible way of dealing with the situation would be for this government to blow up the dams with dynamite. I for one am absolutely opposed to this company putting dams in the St. Lawrence river for that purpose, as long as we have ample powers in Canada which are now being developed, and can be developed, to supply the necessities of this country.

Mr. SPROULE. I understood the hon. gentleman to say that in that Act they have not power to construct any dam on the St. Lawrence. What construction does he put on clause 8, which reads as follows:

> To construct, maintain and operate works for the production, sale and distribution (of electricity) . . . . and for purposes aforesaid may construct, acquire, use, maintain and operate canals, water-courses, raceways and water-power.

Now, how could they construct and make a water-power without a dam? If they have that right, surely it carries with it the right to dam the stream out of which the power is made.

Mr. GERMAN. All I can say is that if they have got that power, they should not have it, and that no plans submitted by them to the department should be approved of Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. I was not present to hear the Minister of Railways, but I read in the 'Hansard' that he was strongly in favour of this Bill for the purpose of granting power that might be carried to the town of Brockville, where there is a large number of industries. I may say that I am largely interested in industries in the town of Brockville, employing some three or four hundred men the year round, and so far as our company is concerned, though we would be glad to get cheap power, we would be strongly opposed to getting it at the cost of great injury to the country and to other priavte interests. One of those interests is the Richelieu and Ontario Navigation Company, a tremendous concern, having stock spread all over the country. If a dam was constructed that would injure the scenic beauty of the River St. Lawrence and the Long Sault, their stock would depreciate fully 50 per cent from the day the Bill was passed. The first report of the engineers said that it would damage the country away down to the city of Montreal. For this and other reasons, although I am largely interested in getting cheap power, I feel it my duty as a public man to oppose this Bill.

Mr. GRAHAM. My hon. friend has perhaps not read all I said. This Bill has nothing to do directly or indirectly with damming the St. Lawrence.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. As I read these Acts that are now in force, and this one in conjunction with them, it gives them that full power.

Mr. GRAHAM. Not at all. My hon. friend is altogether mistaken.

Mr. GERMAN. I would like to know how this company is to get power to transmit electricity over its line unless they take it from the St. Lawrence Power Company? They have got no power plant in Canada excepting the power plant which they purchased from M. P. Davis, and which they would not assume to send, I apprehend, to Montreal. So what object can there be in giving this company the right to construct a transmission line when they have got no power to send over the transmission line?

Mr. PARDEE. Did the hon. gentleman read the speech of the Minister of Railways?

Mr. SPROULE. I want to say that I am opposed in toto to the passage of this or any similar Bill. One reason is because we have no right to lock up the water-powers of the country, and give them to any private individual or corporation. I think that is radically wrong and improper. Another reason is because the province of Ontario is developing this new policy with regard to water-powers, and if this or any other Bill passes, no matter with what restrictions, we give them corporate powers that will enable them to do something to hamper or interfere with that law against the interest of the province. Another reason is because it is an improper interference with provincial rights, and we have had too much of that lately. We have another Bill submitted to this House to-day for the incorporation of another power company between here and Montreal, and which I regard as equally objectionable with this one. We have had a great many of these Bills during the last two sessions, all aiming at getting control of the water-powers of this Dominion. And strange to say, all those men who are endeavouring to acquire that power or that control, when we analyse their companies, and get to the bottom of them, are Americans. If the information we have received be correct, they are part and parcel of a great combine that is trying to get control of every water-power in the United States and Canada, that they can lay their hands on. I think that is wrong. I never could understand why parliament should make or allow such a contact to be made as this government did with Mr. M. P. Davis, selling to him all the power of the Cornwall canal for a thousand dollars a year, a canal which is capable of generating several thousand horse-power, and then buying it back at $63 per horse-power, first binding this country for twenty-one years, and then extending that contract to eighty-four years. Consider how we are binding the interest of posterity. What right has parliament to tie up the property, the assets, of the province for that length of time, practically giving it in fee simply because there is a provision in that contract which enables them to renew it after that time has expired. After that contract was made, and extended in that way this Bill of 1901 was passed as a complement to it. The men who were interested in it control the two Bills to-day, and this Bill now before us is a complement of those two, and they desire to get it through for the purpose of using the same powers. If the information be correct that Mr. Davis has capitalized that contract, and sold it to Americans for a very large amount of money, according to reports all the way from $700,000 to $1,000,000, and they desire this Bill to help them to realize more out of it, and divide up what belongs to the country among themselves, then I say we are doing radically wrong when we give them the right to do that. Therefore, in my judgment, we ought to object in toto not only to this Bill but to any other Bill that has for its purpose to take over or control or utilize the water-powers of any province in the Dominion or to lease them for a great length of time. The province should do that, and should get whatever beneficial interest there is in these water-powers. These water-powers are the natural, inalienable assets of the provinces, and they should have the benefit of them. This federal parliament should not deprive them of this right, and we should not give to any corporate body a right to interfere with or control them in any way, and for that reason, although in my judgment the amendments that are proposed would materially nullify some of the baneful features of this Bill, still I think we ought to allow no Bill of this character to pass, and I am just as much opposed to this as to any other Bill of a similar kind. I think we should oppose them all, and that we should not allow a single one to pass this House.

Mr. LENNOX. Before section 1 passes I want to say a word or two about this matter. The other night the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) replied very vigorously to some remarks that were made on this side of the House with reference to the position of the Hydro-Electric Commission. The First Minister seemed to think that it afforded a fruitful subject for vigorous retort because some hon. gentlemen on this side of the House thought well to point out that among other reasons why this Bill should not pass there was the fact that the province of Ontario has formed a scheme for supplying cheap power to the people, had worked upon that, had developed power to a very large extent in the west and that they were intending to develop it in the east as well. The Prime Minister argued very forcibly against creating such a monopoly as this would be. If a monopoly is advantageous to the people as this one is, it is not the kind of a monopoly that we should oppose. The Prime Minister is quite right in saying that means should be afforded to the people to get power; if it does not interfere with navigation, at a cheap rate and if there is in any province no scheme inaugurated by the government to develop power it might be wise and right to allow a private company to develop that which manifestly would not otherwise be developed within a reasonable time. But in any province where they have inaugurated a scheme and actually put it in operation to supply power to the people every hon. gentleman in this House knows that no company can or will develop that power, and bring it to the people as cheaply as will a properly conducted enterprise such as the Hydro-Electric Commission of the province of Ontario. It is the province of Ontario to-day, it will be the province of Quebec, or some other province to-morrow, or next year, and what I would urge upon the Prime Minister and the government is, that all things being equal, it is the duty of the federal power, instead of opposing the provinces and setting themselves in opposition to them, as representing all the provinces, to afford every reasonable facility to them to develop power in the interest of the people. The province of Ontario has bona fide gone to work, and I think that the other provinces will follow its example, to develop power and carry it to the people at cost price.

Mr. PARDEE. They have not developed it in the east.

Mr. LENNOX. They are going to develop it in the east and I will guarantee they will develop it just as rapidly in the east as will this company once they secure this monopoly. The St. Lawrence Power Company have had a good deal of time for developing but they have developed very little except schemes, one of which is the scheme that we now have before the House. Instead of coming to parliament under their own name openly and honestly and asking for an amendment to their Act they come under a subterfuge, under a disguised name and ask for powers which can be coalesced with the powers they got in 1901, and so, by the union of the two, get that which they otherwise could not get. The proposition we are up against now is this : Shall we enact anything that will enable these people more fully to accomplish a purpose which, if we had been alert in 1901, we would not have granted them the right to carry out. We never should have given them any powers whatever and what I urge now is that we should not do anything that will entrench these people in a more formidable position than they occupy to-day. They dare not come to this House and ask for an amendment such as would represent, in effect, the Bill now before the House. They know perfectly well that if they came to this House and asked for any extension of their privileges, for the power of expropriation such as they intend to get under this Bill, the parliament of Canada dare not accede to their request. But they come under false pretenses, under an assumed name and they try by that means to deceive the public. I, for one, do not, any more than is unavoidable, intend to be a party to allowing these people to get by indirect and dishonest means that which they could not get and which we would not give them if they came honestly and openly and asked for it. If this company came and asked us for such an extension of their rights as we will give them by reason of this Bill, came and asked us for amendments which will give them in effect the rights that they will secure under this Bill, no gentleman, I venture to say, in this House, having regard for the interests of the people, would increase the evil that we created in 1901 by extending these additional privileges to this company. If we would not do that I venture to say that it is not wise for us, it is not doing our duty, by these means to indirectly give this company rights which they could not get by way of an amendment if they came here asking for it. I was referring a moment ago to the question that even if the province of Ontario were coming here we should not give them the right to dam the St. Lawrence river.

Even for the honest object of supplying the people with cheap power, we should not consent to the damming of the St. Lawrence. But when the province has entered on a scheme for supplying power to the people of Ontario at cost, and when we must recognize that the greater area and the greater the number of customers the cheaper can they supply that power, it is the duty of this parliament to see to it that we shall not set up in competition a private company whose action in dividing the market must necessarily be to increase the cost to the people, by preventing the Hydro-Electric Commission from developing power as cheaply as they otherwise would. To test the honesty of this transaction, I say that if the promoter of this Bill will consent to put its expropriation provision on the same footing as in the former Act, we would then have an additional guarantee that this company would not by a side wind attempt to get an additional advantage. I tell the Prime Minister that the time will come and soon, when we will have to buy back from the company the rights which we injudiciously gave them in 1901. Just as we will have to expropriate the Laurier hotel sooner or later, and pay an enormous price for our blunder in giving that park to a private company, so, sooner or later the people of Canada will demand that the company we authorized in 1901 to encroach upon the rights of the people, shall be expropriated and the people restored to their rights. If the government will persist in enforcing this Bill, and so entrench the St. Lawrence Power Company more firmly than they are entrenched under the Bill of 1901, then I shall have to demand the opinion of the House as to whether we shall have a provision controlling the rights of expropriation and the rights upon highways and the rights of entering upon private properties, which were limited in the Bill of 1901. That these two companies are identical there is no doubt; the argument has been abandoned that they are not. They are the same people, but unfortunately they come to us under an assumed name. They have withheld as far as they could the knowledge of their identity, but step by step, sometimes accidentally, we have developed our knowledge of them. Day after day and hour after hour as we have been discussing it, more light has been shed upon this transaction, until we now know the fact that these two companies are identical, and, worse still, that the backbone of the whole concern is an American institution which is exploiting this company, mainly in the interests of the United States. I can prophesy with almost certainty that in a year or two we will find we are making to-day a greater blunder than we made in 1901, and that these people will have a huge monopoly in the United States over the water-powers of the river St. Lawrence, interfering with our navigation and probably involving us in international disputes. And, Sir, we do not have to go far back to know how liable this government is, when it becomes an international issue, to bend the knee to the United States. It is only a month ago, since, figuratively speaking the Minister of Finance sat upon me because I tried to suggest that if the government went on with the French treaty they would likely be involved in complication with the United States. Our warning was set aside, and but a few Sundays ago we had these same gentlemen opposite, who so lately defied the United States, wending their way to Albany on that fateful Sunday morning.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Time.

Mr. LENNOX. And, forgetful of their duty to Canada they surrendering to the United States.

The hour for private Bills having expired, the House resumed in Committee of Supply.

SUPPLY.

House again in Committee of Supply.

Post Office Department—salaries, $543,232.

Mr. BARKER. I desire to call the attention of the minister to a petition which has recently been presented to him by, or on behalf of the outside service of the City Post Offices. This petition is different from that discussed this afternoon, but it is quite as serious. I do not know how far the minister has yet been able to consider the matter, but I do hope that in justice to the large body of deserving civil servants who thus ask for justice, he will give favourable consideration to their petition. I am not in the habit of accepting petitions to present to this House without making some inquiry as to the merits of the cases involved, and with regard to the one of which I am now speaking, I have taken some trouble to ascertain whether there was anything in reason in support of that petition in relation to the city, a portion of which I have the honour to represent. I do not for a moment say that because demands are made upon one of the departments, a member of this House should support those demands, but I really think there is a grievance here which is well deserving of the minister's favourable consideration. We have had in the past a great deal of discussion with reference to what has appeared to be a rather discriminating view taken of the rights of men of the inside service, as compared with those of men in the outside service. We know that in Ottawa, there may be a man in the inside service receiving for seven or eight hours' work a day a much larger salary than is received perhaps by his own brother in the outside serviec in this same city. It may even happen that the man in the outside service is the better man, but we constantly find that men in the inside service receive more for shorter hours than men in the outside service for longer hours. That has been demonstrated here over and over again. There may be reasons for this which the ordinary mind cannot grasp, but the fact exists. This discrimination exists in Ottawa, in Montreal, Hamilton, or any other city. That is at the bottom of the complaint that I wish to lay before the minister. I have looked into the cases of some 10 or 12 clerks in Hamilton, and I wish to present these to the consideration of the minister as an example of what is considered an injustice. If the minister can satisfy himself that there is no injustice, we must submit to that; I am simply laying these facts before him for his consideration, and I am sure that when he has considered them, he will endeavour to do justice. I have found that as regards certain employees, and I take long service men of good character in the post office at Hamilton—they are to-day in a class the maximum of which, under the statute, is $1,500 a year. I am prepared to admit that that may look a very nice salary to many people; thousands and hundreds of thousands in this Dominion would be glad to attain to that position. But I find that of all the men who have attained to two-thirds of that salary, $1,000, the majority have served in the Post Office Department for 30 years. After 30 years' service, they receive a salary of $1,000, and they are buoyed up by the wild hope that they may live long enough to get up to $1,500. That $1,500 is supposed to be a solace to these gentlemen, because there is a possibility of attaining it, there are great expectations before these valuable civil servants. I have here one man who for three years has been receiving $1,000 a year. Before he got to the $1,000 a year stage, he had served for 27 years. How would hon. gentlemen in this House, if they were starting life, care to look forward to 30 years of steady, good and faithful service with the hope that they might then get to $1,000 a year, and perhaps ultimately to $1,500 a year? I have here the names of men who have served for 28 years, 25 years, 30 years, 28 years, 28 years, 26 years, 25 years and 34 years. Of all these men, the highest stands to-day at $1,000. That man has served for that length of time after arriving at manhood. What expectation has he of ever reaching the maximum? Surely there must be something wrong in holding out an inducement to such a civil servant in the department that he may arrive at a salary of $1,500 a year. If, after 30 or 40 years, he receives only $1,000 a year, he must be a hopeful man if he thinks he will ever arrive at the maximum. These are the men of that class in the Hamilton post office, and I am taking the highest salaries in the class.

There are other men who have served 26 years, and have got to $900, others have served 24 years and 23 years and have reached $800. I just present these facts. I have no desire to take up the time of the House by commenting on them, but I ask the hon. minister to look at these men, not with bowels of compassion, because they are not beggars, they are just as good men as those who sit in this House, just as honourable and well educated men, who have served their country faithfully, and who deserve better consideration—I ask the hon. minister to consider these men fairly as they would be considered by any wealthy employer, just as they would be considered by a big railway company, or any large institution of that kind. I think it might be well for the departments of this government to conduct their business as is conducted the business of our great corporations. The Postmaster General has on his staff a very good body of officers, the local inspectors, and I have no doubt that these do a great deal of work, and when men are to be promoted, their future, and the future of their families, so far as these depend on their salaries, is largely in the hands of these inspectors. I know that these inspectors are good respectable men, and capable officers, but there is precisely that same class in any large company. Every large company has that class of men who are the intermediaries between the employees, and the head of the department, just as those inspecting officers are the go-betweens between the staff and the minister, yet we all know that the president of a railway company, or the general manager systematically goes from year to year over the whole work from end to end, and gets in touch himself with the men who are reported upon by these local inspectors. I do not ask that the mighty minister of a great Dominion should do this, but if it were possible for the minister, or his capable deputy, such as the Postmaster General has, to, season by season, go through the country, and get into touch with these people, see how they live, know what it costs them to live, that might do a great deal in harmonizing these differences and having justice done. I do not suppose that anybody understands better than the minister that since these scales of wages were arranged, there have been tremendous changes in the cost of living. Rent and food, and everything they have to pay for have gone up tremendously, far more than their wages, and I think that ought to be considered by the minister fairly and equitably. This country cannot stand extravagant salaries, but can stand justice to the men who serve it, and I hope that by some means it may be found possible for the deputy, or the minister himself, to get more in touch with the people who serve him, than has been the case in the past.

Mr. RUSSELL. During last session the hon. the Postmaster General brought down a Bill increasing the salaries of the letter-carriers, and the reason he gave was the increased cost of living. At that time I spoke in favour of increasing the pay of the railway mail clerks, and was assured by the hon. gentleman that during this session he would bring in a Bill regarding them. I have here a clipping from the Toronto 'Globe' of February 10 last on that subject Claims of Railway Mail Clerks.

The claims of the railway mail clerks is being pressed upon the government of Canada. Those claims are reasonable and urgent. For public service rendered in discomfort and danger the scale of remuneration is indefensibly low. The service is of such importance as to demand at all times physical vigour, intellectual alertness and training, moral integrity, and the strictest devotion to public duty.

The ceaseless strain of the work, due in part to the utterly improper type of mail cars in use on the railways, as the Civil Service Commission declared, 'tends to the shattering of the nerves and leads to other physical diseases, and to early disability.' Unless the remuneration is greatly increased it will be growingly impossible, under present conditions of service, to secure the type of intelligence and capacity made necessary by the examinations and required for the duties imposed. With the cost of living steadily rising, the present low salaries will increase the temptation to dishonesty, a thing unjustified in any public service. Devotion to duty joined with capacity for service can find such abundant rewards in other positions that the mail service will be left for the culls and the derelicts unless reasonable increases are made.

The 'Globe' does not hold to the view that civil service positions should in all things compete with the service of private corporations. But that does not mean that the salaries of those who carry on the public services should be held as near as possible to the starvation point. Those salaries should be reasonably adequate in all cases. In cases of special discomfort and of exceptional risk and danger, as with the railway mail clerks, the salaries should be even liberal. At the present time $400 as a minimum and $1,200 as a maximum is penurious for men doing responsible public service under conditions unattractive, uncertain, and full of peril. Substantial increases are due.

I think that when we expect to get any kind of good service from men in the position these occupy, a minimum salary of $400 is not in keeping with their work. A man commencing in the position of letter carrier to-day would earn in the neighbourhood of $600 per year, and I think that an increase to them, of say, $200 a year all through, and raising their pay from year to year, so as to allow them to go to the same limit as first-class clerks in the Post Office Department, namely $1,500, would be only a fair thing to do. Would the Postmaster General be good enough to let us know whether he can take that up this session or not.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Let me outline briefly what has been the policy of the department with regard to the proposed increase. First, I must say to my hon friend from Hamilton (Mr. Barker) that he does not appeal in vain when he prefers a request in favour of that class of the post office employees to which he has referred. As a matter of fact when these hon. members press me with regard to the status of the post office employees, or any other employees of the government for that matter, they are speaking to a convert. I have already stated in this House that I am myself the son of an old civil servant, who has been in the active service for now over forty-seven years and who has raised a family of ten children. I happen to know something about the increased cost of living during the last 25 years and what changes have taken place in every-day life. I may say that, since I took office in 1906, I have done my little share toward improving the condition of the employee. The House will remember that when I was made Postmaster General, the minimum salary of our postmasters was only $25 I made an increase and brought the minimum up to $35. Last year, at the request of several hon. members, and of the civil servants themselves, I went very carefully into the condition of the humbler class of post office employees, the sorters, stampers and labourers employed in the city post offices. I gave them an increase of salary, and I believe, from the accounts I have received from the post office inspectors that there exists amongst that class of employees general satisfaction. As regards the letter-carriers, they have expressed publicly on several occasions their deep sense of gratitude to the government and to the department in particular to the very substantial increase which this parliament voted last year in their favour. This year, as I have stated, I endeavoured to look after another class of employees, the post office inspectors, the assistant inspectors, the superintendents of railway mail clerks and the assistant postmasters in large city post offices. They are, as I stated yesterday the marrow of the whole service. They are the leading men in the service. They give to every post office and to every postal district the right direction; they teach every postmaster his business; they are men upon whose efficiency, conscience, and honesty the whole service depends. Their salaries have not been revised, many of them, since 1874, and I thought the time had come when we should give that very efficient class of civil servants an increase of salary. The House was kind enough, yesterday, to accept my views on the new scale of salaries for that class of employees.

But now I am confronted with another request, from the hon. member for East Hamilton (Mr. Barker), my hon. friend from East Toronto (Mr. Russell), and, I may say, from nearly all the members who represent the larger postal districts in Canada. Petitions have poured in upon the department, during the last two months, asking that the railway mail clerks should receive a substantial increase. Since these petitions began to come into the department, an agitation has gone on amongst another class of employees, the clerks in the city post offices. These clerks do exactly the same work in their respective offices as the railway mail clerks, with this difference, that the railway mail clerks receive what we call a 'mileage allowance' and have certain days of the week when they are exempted from duty. The employees in the city post offices claim that, on the whole, the railway mail clerks receive better treatment than they do. I am not saying whether the railway mail clerks' case is preferable to the other, I am only stating the facts in order to show that it is somewhat difficult to pronounce immediately upon the respective merits of each case. I have stated, and I repeat, that, in my judgement the members of the outside service in the larger post offices, such as those of Winnipeg, Toronto, Montreal, Halifax, Quebec, Vancouver and Victoria, should be placed on the same basis as the members of the inside service at Ottawa. That is my personal view, and I know that it is shared by a large number of members of this House. But, for the present, all I can say is, that, in my opinion, the day is not far distant when all those who serve in the outside service in these large city post offices will have to come under the Civil Service Act as introduced in this House two years ago and is now working so well for the Civil Service at Ottawa. I intend, during the recess, with my deputy and my officials, to prepare a classification in order to bring in the members of the outside service in these large offices. I believe, with my hon. friend from East Hamilton (Mr. Barker) that there is no difference in the work done by the members of the inside service and the members of the outside service. If there is a difference, it is in favour, probably, of the outside service, because they sometimes have to serve longer hours than the members of the inside service. So, as I have said, I intend, during the recess, to work up a proper classification, which will give adequate increases to the outside service and bring them, if possible, into the inside service. That is my judgment, that is the policy of the department, and I will do my best to carry it out.

Mr. RUSSELL. Would it be possible to incorporate in the Bill that the Postmaster General is bringing in a provision to increase the salaries of the railway mail clerks? Four hundred dollars a year to commence with is very low. Monied men such as they are have to wait for another twelve months, and before they get what is really due to them they will suffer a hardship. No doubt the Postmaster General is aware of the increased cost of living, and I think it should not take long for him to look into the matter and find out that these men are really deserving, and he should provide for them in the Bill!

Mr. BURRELL. The minister said he was in favour of classifying the outside service, and carry into effect the principle of promotion. I wish he would be able to say that he would go a step further and appoint to positions of postmaster men who have proved to be deserving officials, who have steadily worked up in their business, and have become highly qualified. If he would do this instead of appointing political hacks, he would be following in the line of a true reform of the Civil Service.

Mr. LEMIEUX. My hon. friend would find it difficult in my place to take men from the service, and appoint them as postmasters in rural sections, it would be impossible.

Mr. BURRELL. I am not speaking of rural sections, I am referring to large cities where they have gradually qualified themselves for the work.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I do not think, as a rule, there are any complaints against our postmasters in the larger cities. Take, for instance, the city of Victoria, from which my hon. friend hails. We have there a very old and efficient postmaster in the person of Mr. Shakespeare, quite a literary name, an old member of this House, who is a credit to the service. He had been in the House for many years, and was appointed by the Conservative government. We have now at Vancouver a gentleman who represented the city of Vancouver in the last parliament, Mr. Macpherson. I must say this to the credit of Mr. Macpherson, that he went into that office a new hand, and he has proved himself already to be one of the best postmasters in the Dominion. My hon. friend knows that Vancouver is a growing city, and that the business is complicated in view of the many races that are represented in the population of Vancouver. It is true that Mr. Macpherson has been in politics, but I must say this on behalf of the politicians on both sides of the House, that when they leave politics and accept positions of that kind, they generally prove to be the best servants that the public can have.

Mr. BURRELL. The minister's point was neatly taken, he knows how to put up a pleasant argument. But I think he missed the point here. I am not concerned as to whether the postmaster of Victoria is efficient or not, or as to whether he was appointed by a Conservative government. Nor am I here to dispute that Mr. Macpherson is making a good postmaster; I do not know whether he is or not. But I think the minister will agree that if we are on the path of reform, surely a man who has qualified himself by a long term of service, and has become thoroughly familiar with the work of the office, should be promoted when higher positions are open. I think the minister will assent to that, and I would like that he himself would have the courage to attempt a reform of that kind.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I must say that I am not a greater man than Sir John Macdonald, and he used to say that the office of postmaster of Toronto, or Montreal, or Winnipeg should belong to one of his faithful followers in the House, that the man who had served his party faithfully for years was just as competent, just as honest, as any one else. Of course a postmaster in a large city is sometimes only a figure head, he is a real worker. At the same time, if we take the postmasters of those three largest cities to-day we find that they are doing very effective work; but the bulk of the work falls generally on the shoulders of the assistant postmaster. The hon. member for Hamilton was speaking a moment ago of the post office in that city. The postmaster of Hamilton to-day is Mr. Adam Brown, who was for a great many years the member for Hamilton in this House. He had been in politics for forty years, he was the father of this House. Now, Sir, I consider it a credit to my department that we have in its service Mr. Adam Brown.

Mr. BLAIN. My hon. friend has not made many selections of that kind.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I have appointed Mr. Macpherson, who was a very able member of this House; I have appointed to Montreal Mr. Harwood, who was for fifteen years the member for Vaudreuil in this House, and who is one of the most creditable members of the outside service. We must not discredit our profession.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. The hon. Postmaster General said a little while ago that the advertisements were carefully looked after. I have before me a little country paper with eleven advertisements on one page, from the Post Office Department, all mail contracts. One of them is in Lincoln county, one in Simcoe, one in Durham, one in Muskoka, one in Halton, one in Ontario, one in Grey, one in Wentworth, two in York, another in Muskoka. These advertisements call for tenders to carry the mail from one point to another, and they are all in one paper, the Canadian 'Farmer.' It looks to me to be a waste of money. Now I have a few questions to ask the Postmaster General. On page 1 of his report we find he has a surplus of $809,000 at the end of the year. I am sure that he could not help thinking that the railway mail clerks, who have been so ably championed by the hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Russell) and also by the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker), are at least justified in asking that the minister investigate thoroughly their complaint, and see that at least they receive reasonable and fair remuneration for their services. We also find that there was a reduction in the drop letter rate in cities.

A greatly desired reduction was made in August, 1908, in the rate of postage on letters posted for delivery in cities and other places having free letter carrier delivery service. The former rate was two cents per ounce; the present rate is one cent per ounce.

On the next page we find that there was a reduced rate on papers and periodicals of one half cent a pound. I want to ask the Postmaster General whether he has taken into consideration the fact that in the United States, within this year, they have thoroughly investigated the second class mail matter that is being carried in that country through the post office and they find that that class of mail matter is being carried at a loss of $64,000,000 to the people of the United States. I want to ask the Postmaster General if he will be good enough to tell us whether he has made an investigation to see whether he is losing at such an enormous rate and whether the reduction that he is making in the rate on these papers is justified, or whether he investigated the question before making the reduction. If he will look at page 22 he will find that the increase in postal stores amounted to $93,000. Would he be good enough to explain why that extra amount was needed? I do not expect to go very fully into a criticism of the smaller items in the Auditor General's Report, but I desire to call his attention to one or two points in connection with the increase in the expenditure. For instance, we find that the total receipts from the Yukon amounted last year to $18,000 while the expenditure was $135,000, leaving a deficit of $116,000. In the city of Dawson the revenue of the post office is only $13,000 and the minister spends for salaries and rent over $29,000. Should he not take into consideration the amount of money that he is spending and receiving in these different places? Taking the number of employees in that office I find that I. J. Hartman, postmaster, gets a salary of $5,000 and an allowance of $900; clerks at $210 per month: N. J. Caron, $2,520; B. F. Craig, $2,520; G. D. Edwards, $2,520; W. R. Hamilton, $2,520; F. H. Hartman, $2,520; J. W. Wilson, $2,520. The attention of the minister has been called to the fact that Ontario requires further consideration. I have no doubt that several of the older provinces require similar consideration, but let us look at Ontario. We have listened this afternoon to members who have been anxious to tell the minister of the districts that are in need of post office facilities, and I have no doubt that others will tell him of other places before the evening is through. The revenue of the province of Ontario last year was $4,231,775 while the expenditure in that province was $957,000, leaving $3,273,000 to go to the general post office fund and to assist to a large extent the development of postal facilities in other parts of the country. While I do not say that the province should have any thing like the amount of money expended in it that is collected, yet, when you find districts such as the member for Frontenac and other members have brought to the attention of the minister and which are urgently calling for increased postal facilities, you can readily understand that the minister requires to give a good deal more attention to the province of Ontario. When the minister is extending the rural free mail delivery system he should take into consideration the fact that the thickly settled rural population and the cities are paying into the post office treasury over $4,000,000 and that he is expending $900,000 in that province leaving a surplus from that province alone of $3,273,000. While the minister has in the past few years increased the advantages of the people living in cities, towns and villages in Ontario those living in the rural districts have not received the consideration that they should receive at the hands of the Postmaster General. I would like the minister to tell the committee why it is that the total expenditure in 1902 only amounted to $3,888,000 while in 1909 it was increased to $7,401,000, or an increase of nearly half within the past seven years. The expenses of the Post Office Department have practically doubled. There ought to be some good reason for that. The minister last year increased the number of post office by 650. He also increased the annual expenditure by $586,000 or nearly $1,000 for every new post office opened. He does not need to tell us that these 650 post offices that he has established cost anything like the amount of money that the total increase in the expenditure represents. Let him give us some good reason why the post office expenditure has increased until to-day it is $3,523,417 more than it was seven years ago. There are some suggestions that I wish to make to the Post Office Department, and which I feel justified in making because they are in the public interest. There should be a system of rating post office employees as to efficiency and faithfulness.

Then the salaries should be rated on the basis of the quantity of the work the employees perform, their accuracy in doing it, and their compliance with the postal regulations, office rules, and conduct, their punctuality and regularity in attendance, and their familiarity with the regulations and instructions regarding their duties. How important it is that in our towns and smaller cities these officials should be put under some form of discipline. Then, it has been brought to the attention of parliament that post offices are built in this country without the knowledge of the Postmaster General, and without consideration of the postal needs of the district. The system now is that the Minister of Public Works receives petitions from his followers, and if he deems it wise in the interest of the Liberal party in the district, he erects a post office without any regard to the proportion between the income received from the place and the cost of the building. I believe that in the erection of post office buildings, the Post Office Department should have a voice. The Post Office Department has trained agents who should be familiar by experience and observation with the requirements of the postal service in all directions, and it is the post office officials who should select the site and arrange for the interior equipment of the building. Sites for public buildings to be used exclusively for the Post Office should be selected by the Postmaster General, and in case a building is erected for the joint use of the Post Office and other departments, the approval of the plans and the specifications and estimates as to space, interior arrangement and equipment should be furnished by the Postmaster General. That is the common sense business way of looking at the question, but instead of that the Minister of Public Works, who knows little or nothing about the needs of the postal service, proceeds to erect post office buildings which are beyond the requirements of the post office district, and the Postmaster General knows nothing about it. A further suggestion which I have to make is that the mails should not be delivered by city carriers except at residences and city offices where approved mail receptacles are provided at the door or entrance. This would effect a great saving, because the delay in city delivery is one of the obstacles which the Post Office has had to contend with. It has been estimated that there is a loss of 15 seconds at each place of delivery, and if there are 336 stops, which is the average number, there is a loss of one and a half hours a day for each carrier. Hence a quicker delivery by the means suggested would save to the country many thousands of dollars. Then, another suggestion is that when the writer of a letter on which the postage is prepaid shall endorse on the outside his name and address, such letter shall not be advertised but shall remain uncalled for at the office to which it is directed the time the writer may request or the Postmaster General would prescribe, and it shall be returned to the writer without additional postage, and if not delivered treated as a dead letter. Then, another important suggestion is that no employees of the Post Office shall canvass or solicit votes, accept the position of poll clerk or scrutineer, and that they shall not in any way encourage or take part in a political campaign under the penalty of losing their business. I have a letter here from an eastern town in which the postmaster appears to have been dismissed because he did not solicit votes for the Liberal candidate. In the recent by-election in the city of Ottawa, I am told on reliable authority, that A. Vallee, letter-carrier, Ottawa South, was outside scrutineer at polls 22 and 22a, and I understand that he wore his official clothing. If the Postmaster General allows his officials to act in that way right at his own door, what can he expect from officials away out in the western provinces, and, I have been informed by hon. members from the west that no post office official need expect favours unless he has faithfully served the Liberal party. If the Postmaster General would prohibit such conduct on the part of officials, he would raise himself in the estimation of the people of Canada; he would have a more efficient postal service, and his department would not be subject to the criticism it now deservedly receives. I urge upon the Postmaster General that he should devote his best energies during the coming year to carry out the suggestions I have ventured to make. Then again, another suggestion is that there should be an investigation as to the cost of the service in its different branches. During the last year the United States government have been looking into that question, and they have discovered all kinds of waste.

Does the minister know whether or not the railway charges are reasonable? He may say they are reasonable, but investigation shows that he is paying over $500,000 more to railways than he was a few years ago. What is the rent of the average railway car per annum? Would it be cheaper for the government to put a 200 pound mail bag in the seat of a Pullman car and tack on it a regular first-class ticket to pay its fare than to pay what is now paid. I doubt if the minister could tell whether it was or not. Is it true that the government pay more to the railways for carrying the mails than is charged the express companies for carrying similar packages in the next car? The government pay $1,600,000 for steamship subsidies and subventions; if the minister would investigate and see whether he is receiving any reasonable or valuable return for that amount, he would be doing a public service. The principal sources of revenue are the postal charges on all classes of domestic and foreign mail, the fees on a registered letter, money orders and special delivery. Has the Post Office Department any reliable data on which to base calculations? Has it data as to the cost of different classes of mail, the special delivery and money order service? The United States postal authorities thoroughly investigated the subject recently, with the result that they found it possible to make enormous savings by improvements. On second class mail alone there was a deficit in the United States of $64,000,000, and on third class mail, $3,000,000. When the minister says it is impossible to give the people of Canada rural free mail delivery he ought to consider whether the many divisions of his department are not capable of saving a large amount by being thoroughly reorganized. Second class mail on the other side provided a revenue of only one cent a pound, while the cost of handling and transportation averaged 9 23 cents a pound. Magazines and other periodical publications, exclusive of daily newspapers, comprised about 60 per cent of the second class mails. The average haul of the magazine proper was 1,000 miles, while that of other periodicals not including daily newspapers, ranged from 550 to 1,000 miles. The daily newspapers averaged less than 300 miles

The weekly newspapers have still complaints to make as to their unfair treatment in this country. The minister made a serious blunder when he placed the weekly and daily newspapers under the ban he did some years ago, and was compelled shortly afterwards to take out of the treasury tens of thousands of dollars so that the daily papers might be placed in the position they were in previous to that blunder. Up to this time he has not placed the weekly papers in the position they ought to occupy. He will find that these weekly papers are constantly protesting against the unfair position in which they are placed in regard to circulation. I have here an editorial from the Hants Journal, of Windsor N. S., which voices the sentiment practically of every weekly paper in Canada. That paper says:

That Postal Burden.

A subscriber, in paying for the 'Journal,' says, I inclose post office order for $2, but owing to the matter of postage on papers to the United States imposed by your Liberal government (so called), a good deal of it will be taken up by arrears of postage. I hope, however, it will be sufficient. I still follow with a great deal of interest all the happenings in my old home town. I hope that in spite of the postage embargo your United States subscribers have not fallen off.'

We regret to say that a good many names have been struck from the list since the boycotting resolution came into force.

The Postmaster General seems to care little if anything as to how he injures the business of Canadian weekly newspapers by his burdensome postal imposition; the members of parliament, Tory and Grit alike, make no effort to get relief for the papers which stand by them and the parties they represent; and the daily newspapers, happy and contented so long as they do not suffer, say not a word on behalf of their confreres who are not fortunate enough to run big establishments and issue daily newspapers. Were the members of parliament less selfish they would rise as a body and demand that this injurious postage resolution be expunged; and if the gentlemen of the daily press would lend their aid and urge the government to do a simple act of justice to the country press, we should not have to complain much longer about this postal burden. But they are all so taken up with the Naval Bill and Dreadnoughts, that such a matter as that of injuring the business of the country press never occurs to them as one needing their attention, and so it is allowed to slide. There's lots of protection in evidence all over the Dominion, but none for the men who run country weekly newspapers, and who, perhaps, deserve greater consideration than many who rake in goodly profits under the fostering care of the government.

If our rulers refuse to grant us simple justice, perhaps relief may yet come from another source, for only a short time ago we read that President Taft, the great head of the country to the south of us, has been looking into this matter, and the views he entertains lead us to think that perhaps help may come to us from the neighbouring republic.

The Postmaster General knows that year after year we have called his attention to the fact that the weekly press throughout this country had been most unfairly dealt with, and while he may say he has stopped to a certain extent some of the papers coming in from the other side, at the same time he has let down the bars and allowed in some of the most corrupt literature from the old land, and cheap publications of different kinds. At the same time he has shut out valuable magazines and periodicals of an educative character that would be of great help to our people. The Postmaster General has absolutely forgotten the use of the mails. The franking privilege, as used by the departments, is open to serious criticism. The Postmaster General remembers that the franking system in force under this government has received very serious criticism from members on this side. Tons of political mail matter leave the departments to assist and promote one interest, the continuance of this government in office. The Post Office Department should make every other department give a definite statement of the amount of mail matter sent out by it. I might go on making suggestions, but I merely wish to devote the rest of my time to a matter which I believe is of greater interest to the people, especially those living in the rural districts. In the Saturday Evening Post, of February 19, 1910, that paper said:

> Rural free mail delivery has proved to be the most popular and beneficent branch of the whole postal service.

I know that if the Postmaster General had investigated the benefits derived from rural free mail delivery in the United States, Germany, France and England, he cannot come to any other conclusion than that the day is not far distant when he will be compelled to take a different position on this question. Instead of saying we will have to wait until we have a population of 20,000,000, he will find that in a very few years demands will come from the people in the thickly settled portions of the different provinces for this great convenience. To-day the minister cannot fail to see that the people are anxious that this service should be granted them. I know that all kinds of letters are pouring into his department and all kinds of criticisms are showered on him because of the paltry system he has now under way. That system simply means that the mails will only be delivered on existing mail or stage routes, and then only to certain portions of the country. But have not the people on the other concessions just as good a right to the advantages of rural free mail delivery as those who reside on existing mail or stage routes? Why should the men on these routes have their farms increased in value, as they undoubtedly are, by their enjoyment of the advantages that come from the delivery of the mails at their very door, and the people who live a mile or so away, perhaps in a more thickly settled portion of the country be deprived of these advantages? Let us look at what is being done in this regard. The Minister, on November 30, stated that he had 302 routes in operation, as I understand from the return on page 5883 of 'Hansard.' Last year I received a return on January 27, in which the minister distinctly stated that the 44 rural mail routes then in operation only cost this government $663.50, or an average of about $15 per route. Multiply the 302 routes not existing by 15 and you have an expenditure of only $4,530. Let us see where these 302 routes are located. In little Prince Edward Island there are 33; in New Brunswick, 15; in Kingston district, 23; in Toronto district, 38; in London district, 104; in Winnipeg district, 28; and I find away up in Edmonton, 13. How then can the minister hope to make the people believe that the system he has inaugurated has taken out of the Post Office Department any large amount of money—$4,530 according to that estimate. He does give an estimate here showing that the total increase in the cost of the mail service, including the service of rural delivery boxes for four years—I cannot understand why he puts in the four years—amounts to $55,000, when, according to his estimate of last year, the cost was only $4,500. I am well aware that if he will give rural free mail delivery as it ought to be given to the thickly settled portions in the older districts of Ontario and the other provinces, he will find that the expense will increase. But he will also find that in these provinces there is no great extent of territory that can be possibly covered by it. In the United States this system is governed strictly by regulation. It is impossible to have a route established there unless there are 100 families in the 24 miles, which is the standard route, and the shorter routes are compelled to have a proportionate number of families. 85 out of that 100 are compelled to distinctly contract to take the mail delivery at their doors and erect the boxes there. But I need not go further in the discussion of this subject as that has been gone over so many times before, but I want to call the attention to the fact that the time has come in some of the older provinces when the population is decreasing yearly instead of increasing in the rural districts. Take the province of Ontario, the deputy minister of that province made the statement that while in 1889 the population was 1,108,874 in 1899 it was only 1,047,016, showing a reduction of 61,858. The cities have increased in numbers but not the rural districts, and many people from the rural districts have gone to the Northwest where they can get the advantages which they do not enjoy in the older provinces, and which advantages are a great inducement to people to remain on their farms. I appeal to the right hon. the Prime Minister to investigate this subject in so far as the thickly settled districts are concerned. We are not asking for rural free mail delivery in the partially settled districts nor are they asking for it in those districts in the United States, but the day is at hand when we must give to the people in the rural districts every advantage to induce them to remain on the land—not only telephones and electric cars, but free mail delivery at their doors. The expense of running a farm is far in excess of what it was years ago, and takes a lot of money to get the mails, especially when wages are so high as they are at present. Rural free mail delivery will bring the farms and rural communities in closer connection with commercial centres. It encourages the improvement of country roads, and by making rural life more attractive it stimulates agriculture. It has been the means of increasing the value of farm lands and has materially reduced the number of post-offices throughout the United States. While in the United States the number of post offices in the year 1900 was 76,688, this number has gradually been reduced, until in 1909 the United States has only 60,155 post offices. Therefore when the hon. gentleman talks of the deficit in the United States postal revenue and says that is due to rural free mail delivery, he should also take into consideration the great reduction in the number of post offices. While in the Dominion the number of post offices has increased, we find that in the United States, with its increasing population, the number has been cut down this last year by some 1,100 post offices. They saved, thereby, as distinctly stated in their report, $92,000. But the minister, with his present system of rural mail delivery cannot cut off any post offices, apparently. Taking the average increase in post offices previous to the establishment of rural free delivery there would be at present upwards of 100,000 post offices in the United States. The annual saving made through the reduction in cost of buildings, maintaining the 40,000 post offices with postmasters would still further reduce the deficit attributed to rural free delivery to something like $5,000,000. The installation of rural free delivery is followed by an increase in the amount of mail delivered, and collections. Such increase is not credited to rural free delivery. Additional evidence of the increase of the amount of mail passing through rural delivery is furnished in the fact that only 992 routes handled 25,000 or more pieces of mail during the three months ended June 30, 1907, and 3,232 routes 25,000 or more during the three months ended May 31, 1909. In 1907, 27 routes handled more than 50,000 pieces of mail, during the quarter ending June 30. In 1909, 95 routes more than 50,000 during the quarter ending May 31. On 35 of these routes the value of the stamps on mail collected for the period indicated exceeded $200. On 24 routes this item exceeded the carriers' salary. Page 4 of the fourth assistant Postmaster General's report gives a list of these routes showing the number of pieces handled, and the value of postage on mail matter collected during the three months ended May 31, 1909. On June 30, 1909, the service was in operation on 40,628 routes, and 40,499 carriers were employed. During the year 4,115 new routes were established. In 840 counties in the United States the service had been adjusted on June 30, 1909, so as to furnish rural delivery to the greater portion of the rural population. During the year 1909, 1,149 post offices were discontinued, the patrons of which are now served by rural free delivery, thereby effecting a reduction in the expenditure on the postal service of $92,000. There has been unprecedented improvement in the condition of roads traversed by rural carriers due to the intelligent and well directed interest of postmasters and carriers. The average increase of mail handled on rural mail routes of the United States in the last four years was 55 per cent in the average number of pieces of mail handled by a carrier. It is estimated that the daily travel of the carriers on routes now in operation aggregates 980,000 miles. Rural free delivery serves 20,000,000 people. The annual expenditure in 1905 for services in the post offices, salaries of postmasters, salaries of clerks, &c., city delivery not including railway mail service, or rural delivery service, or transportation, amounted, in 1906, to $51,000,000, while in 1909 it was over $102,000,000, an increase of $51,000,000—just double. The rural free delivery was not responsible for the increases in any of the branches I have suggested.

Last year, the minister said that 44 routes had been established in Canada, and the cost to the department had been only $663 per annum. The minister must remember that our largest immigration is coming from the United States, a country almost completely covered with rural free delivery routes. And if he will not undertake this work of free rural delivery these people will naturally hesitate before leaving the many advantages they now enjoy to be compelled to live in a country where such advantages are not even recognized. Let the minister appreciate this fact, that the United States has 40,000 rural free delivery routes in operation serving 20,000,000 of people. The system covers one million miles of road; the carriers cover 200,000,000 miles of road each year, and handle over 200,000,000,000 pieces of mail.

I do not wish to take up further time, though the subject is such an important one. The present system of rural free delivery established by the Postmaster General merely leads to the creation of contention and strife in the rural districts. If he will go into the rural districts where these routes are in operation to-day, he will find that the people using them would not think of parting with the service, on the contrary he would find dissatisfaction and discontent in the districts that are not receiving these valuable services.

I trust the Postmaster General will take into serious consideration the suggestions I have made, and also that he will go throughout our land and investigate this question—not only the complaints he has heard here to-day, but will go into the rural districts and learn, as he surely will learn there, that the thickly-settled portions of the older provinces are most emphatically and earnestly ready to receive rural free delivery.

Mr. STEWART. I desire to say a word on behalf of the clerks employed in the city post offices, whose case has been already referred to by the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker), the hon. member for East Toronto (Mr. Russell), and others. I think there are no clerks in the Civil Service so poorly paid as the clerks I have referred to. I agree with the Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux) that the Bill brought down last year dealt pretty fairly with the letter-carriers. But when the Postmaster General passes over the clerks employed in the city post offices and gives increases to the inspectors, assistant inspectors and men of that class—I am not finding fault with these increases; I am glad these gentlemen have got them—but when the hon. gentleman failed to remodel the salaries of these clerks he passed over a class of civil servants who much more needed an increase. I was much pleased to hear the Postmaster General himself admit that these clerks were not sufficiently paid, and state also that he intended at some future time to consider an increase for them. But they are not a very numerous class, and I do not think it would mean a very big task for his department to take into consideration the increase of salaries for that class of clerks. Some of these men have been in the service for from 25 to 35 years and are receiving now only $1,000. In the Hamilton post office there are among the clerks there men qualified to hold any position which might come their way, some of as clever clerks, I think, as can be found anywhere, and yet kept at a salary of $1.000, after, perhaps, 35 years work. The railway mail clerks are asking for an increase, and I should be glad to see them receive it. But I think that the clerks to whom I have referred are entitled to as high a salary as the railway mail clerks, who are off for one, two or three days in the week. I think that if the Postmaster General would take into his serious consideration the advisability of giving an increase to this class of civil servants he would be easily able to see his way to doing it at this time. I hope the minister will consider it and not put off the granting of this increase to another session.

Mr. HUGHES. Some time ago I wrote to the Postmaster General, inclosing copies of the 'Air Brake' magazine, a publication purely educational in the interests of railway men. The air brake, as the minister knows, is the apparatus which controls the speed of trains. Those in charge of this magazine believe that every railway man should have all possible information and instruction concerning this device. If these magazines were admitted free of postage into Canada, or under reduced postage rates, they would reach a large number of railway men who would be in a position to take advantage of the instruction the magazine contains. Has the minister finally decided what he will do in the premises?

Mr. LEMIEUX. If this publication, the 'Air Brake Magazine,' which I am sure is very useful to railway men, comes under the ordinary regulations, it should be admitted at one cent a pound. I am glad my hon. friend has brought this matter to my notice. I take a great deal of interest in these technical magazines, because of their educational character, and I desire to encourage their reading. I will have further inquiry made into the matter, and give my hon. friend an answer on Monday. I see nothing in the character of the paper which would prevent it from coming under our classification, which would admit it at the special rate existing between the two countries. Now I will say to my hon. friend the junior member for Hamilton (Mr. Stewart) that the question of raising the salaries of post office employees has been occupying the attention of the department for several weeks. We have dealt this session with the class of employees I referred to last night. The resolution giving another scale of salaries to superintendants, railway mail clerks, post office inspectors, assistant inspectors, and assistant postmasters has been accepted by the House. This is as much as we can do this session. But I have pledged myself that between now, and the next session of parliament I will see that a proper classification is made of the outside service in the larger cities, and will try to bring them under the very efficient legislation known as the Civil Service Act which was introduced two years ago by the Minister of Agriculture.

Now, Sir, I will not attempt to answer all the questions raised by the hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Armstrong) this evening, because he has evidently prepared a very able brief on the whole range of postal questions. I must congratulate him on his address, and on his industry. Evidently he has found inspiration in the literature published in the United States. It is part of my duty to read that literature carefully. My hon. friend makes a mistake in comparing the two countries, especially on that vexed question of second class matter. I know as a matter of fact that a long investigation has taken place in the United States as regards the transportation of certain second-class matter by railway companies. My hon. friend asked whether I knew that in the United States something like $69,000,000 have been charged to the United States exchequer, to the dismay and surprise of the Washington authorities, because it had been practically a robbery from the people. Well, my hon. friend has unwittingly made a mistake in comparing Canada with the United States as regards second class matter. The system we have in this country is entirely different from that in the United States as regards the transportation of second-class matter by railway companies. That matter in the United States is transported according to weight, at one cent a pound, whilst in this country we have a mileage basis. For instance, a baggage car service costs the country four cents a mile, a postal car service costs eight cents a mile. That is the basis of the expenditure for the transportation of second-class matter from one end of the country to the other. Is our system much better than the United States system? Certainly it is, from a post office point of view. I have here an extract from the evening 'Journal,' of New York, of February 5, 1910, in regard to the investigation which was recently held in that country. The title reads, 'Another polite question to Mr. Taft.'

Mr. Taft, our president, said that the people were subsidizing magazines because the mail carried magazines for a cent a pound, and he said they actually cost the government nine cents a pound to carry the magazines.

That is where the robbery takes place, it is done by weight, whilst in this country we have a uniform basis of a mileage system with the railway companies.

We would like to ask Mr. Taft one question. You say that the United States government loses $64,000,000 a year because it carries second-class mail matter, magazines, and so on, for one cent a pound. Do you know that in Canada the post offices carry second-class mail matter for a quarter cent a pound and makes a profit of a million dollars a year?

Mr. LEMIEUX.

That is the opinion of an American newspaper on the two systems.

Mr. U. WILSON. Is it true?

Mr. LEMIEUX. It is perfectly true, so much so that at present the railway companies of Canada, the Canadian Northern, the Canadian Pacific railway, and the Grand Trunk railway are knocking at the door of the Post Office Department in order to obtain a new basis of mileage. They say they are losing money, that to-day their mail cars are filled with such matter, and that they receive only the same amount of money as if they were empty.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Are those roads running to the west on long hauls through the western districts, filled with second-class matter?

Mr. LEMIEUX. If my hon. friend could see them at this season of the year, when immigrants are coming into the country, or during the Christmas season, and the Easter season, if he could see the mail cars of the Canadian Pacific railway, and the Canadian Northern he would be surprised. The system is completely different in the United States, and the tendency in that country to-day is to adopt the Canadian system. Once more they have to come to Ottawa to learn something in business management.

Mr. U. WILSON. How are the railway companies paid for carrying mail matter—by the car or by the pound?

Mr. LEMIEUX. They are paid on a mileage basis.

Mr. U. WILSON. You pay no more for a full car than for one half full?

Mr. LEMIEUX. No.

Mr. U. WILSON. You have the use of the whole car if you want it?

Mr. LEMIEUX. We have the use of the whole car.

Mr. U. WILSON. And you pay so much per mile whether the car is empty or full?

Mr. LEMIEUX. I said a moment ago that we paid four cents a mile for a baggage car and eight cents a mile for a postal car. Some of the companies carry mail at the rate of two or three cents a mile. This rate is given under old contracts which were made before confederation and which have been continued since, but the regulation to-day is four cents a mile for a baggage car and eight cents for a postal car.

Mr. SPROULE. I wish to ask the minister a question with reference to mail-cars. He says that we are charged eight cents a mile for a postal car. It should be a postal car, in my judgment, up to a certain standard where the occupants would be comfortable and would have suitable conveniences to enable them to do their work. How many new mail cars have been built and placed on railway postal routes in Canada during the past five years? Where are they in use? What reports or complaints have been made to the department or superintendent of the railway mail service by railway mail clerks in regard to the unfitness of the mail cars during the last year, or the last six months? Have there been any, and, if so, how many complaints that the health of the railway mail clerk suffers from the unsuitableness of the cars they occupy while discharging their duties? Have complaints been made as to the imperfect heating of these cars, and are the railway companies building, with any degree of rapidity, new and suitable cars for the mail routes that are used to-day?

Mr. LEMIEUX. A similar question, perhaps not so complete, was asked the other day, and I gave the answers. It is on 'Hansard.'

Mr. SPROULE. I put that question, but it was very much narrower.

Mr. LEMIEUX. If the hon. gentleman will put his question on the order paper, I will be very pleased to give a proper answer. I know that the railway companies have improved the standard of the mail car. We have made representations to them during the last three or four years. When I was Minister of Labour I did remonstrate with some of the companies which really were not giving our railway mail clerks the accommodations that they were entitled to as human beings. There are a number of difficulties which cannot be easily overcome. For instance, the railway mail clerks were asking that the mail car should be placed at the end or the centre of the train instead of next to the locomotive. Well, that is a difficult question. The mails have to be delivered at a certain point on the platform, and it would create delay and cause trouble in the service. But, as regards the hygienic conditions, the railways have manifested a very sincere desire to improve the condition of the cars. I cannot state the number of cars built on the new system within a year or two, but I will get the statistics at a later stage.

Mr. SPROULE. I merely read these questions so that they will be on 'Hansard,' and so the minister will be enabled to answer them later.

Mr. LEMIEUX. The hon. member for Lambton opened his remarks by stating that advertisements were appearing in a paper called the 'The Canadian Farm.' I am glad that my hon. friend brought that paper to the notice of the House. The 'Canadian Farm' is owned by a well known Conservative in Toronto, and it has a large circulation amongst the farmers of Ontario. It is a proper medium in which to insert advertisements of the post office for rural services in the districts adjoining Toronto. I do not think that fault should be found with our department for choosing that medium for advertising purposes. The hon. gentleman says: You have a surplus; cannot you give some increase to your railway mail clerks? I think I have answered that question to the satisfaction of the hon. gentleman. My hon. friend spoke of the expenditure in the Yukon district, and compared it with the expenditure of other sections.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. In Dawson city.

Mr. LEMIEUX. In Dawson city. Well, we must take a broad view of this subject. It is all very well to say that we draw hardly any revenue as compared with the expenditure in the Yukon territory, but I claim it as a matter of pride for Canada that one can send a letter from Halifax to Dawson at two cents whilst a letter sent from Dover in England across the channel to Calais would cost five cents. It is true that we do not derive a large revenue from the Yukon district, but the Canadian mails are just as safe in that district to-day as they are in the city of Toronto or the city of Ottawa. In the Yukon district we have a large settlement composed of miners. We have a service equal to that in any other section of the country. With the fair surplus we have I think it is only right that we should give our hardy Canadians who have been settling and opening that district to civilization a proper mail service. It costs some money—$140,000 a year. For the railway mail service alone across the White Pass we have to pay something like $60,000 a year. That is the only accessible route through which our mails can pass, and I must say to my hon. friend that not only is the Yukon service a service for Canada but partly for the United States. We are spending some money in Dawson. We pay the postmaster $5,000 a year but Mr. Hartman, the postmaster, with $5,000 receives less than some postmasters who are paid $2,000 or $1,500 in this section of the country. My hon. friend knows that rental, provisions and clothing in the Yukon cost twice and thrice as much as in other sections of this country. My hon. friend says that there has been an increase in the expenditure. That I do not deny. It must be remembered that the inland letter rate has been reduced from 3 cents to 2 cents; the letter rate from Canada to the United States reduced from 3 cents to 2 cents; the letter rate from Canada to Great Britain and all other portions of the British empire reduced from 5 cents to 2 cents, and the rate on drop letters for city delivery reduced from 2 cents to 1 cent, which is the lowest rate for this service in any country in Europe or America. Then again, the rate on Canadian newspapers and periodicals sent from publishers in Canada to subscribers in Great Britain and every part of the British empire has been reduced from 3 cents per pound to ½ cent per pound, and the rate on Canadian newspapers and periodicals sent from publishers in Canada to subscribers in Great Britain and every part of the British empire, has been reduced from 2 cents per pound to ½ cent per pound, and the rate on Canadian newspapers and periodicals sent by the general public in Canada to correspondents in Great Britain and all parts of the British empire has been reduced from 8 cents a pound to 4 cents. The reduction in the rates on newspapers sent by publishers in Canada to subscribers in Great Britain tends to a wider dissemination of Canadian newspapers and other publications and has made better known to the world the wealth and industries of Canada. Then, the parcel post rate between Canada and Great Britain formerly provided that a parcel not exceeding 3 pounds in weight would cost 1 shilling and the scale ran up to 11 pounds for 3 shillings. Now, on Canadian parcels to the United Kingdom the rate is brought down to 12 cents a pound. The Canadian 'Gazette' commenting on these reduced rates says:

> Those reductions are a welcome sequel to the penny post, and must cut yet deeper the channels of closer connection.

My hon. friend (Mr. Armstrong) spoke about the rating of our post office employees and I may tell the hon. gentleman that every man is traced in the Post Office Department from the day he enters it to the day he leaves. As to the city post offices we have monthly reports from our inspectors and I think it may be said that we follow very closely our employee. I may also tell my hon. friend that I have given notice as publicly as possible that the employees must not take part in politics; that they must do their duty towards the country that pays them and that they jeopardize their positions if they take an active part in politics. My hon. friend knows my views on rural mail delivery, and I think it may be said that our system has made fair progress since its establishment. We have made a modest beginning and we are proud of it because it is working smoothly and well. We have quite a large number of routes in the province of Ontario. I do not believe that we should have supplied the farmers with free boxes because I think it would be imprudent on our part and it would be beneath the dignity of the farmers to accept them on such conditions. Under the present condition the farmer pays the cost price of the box and he gets a good service. Let me point out to the hon. gentleman that in the United States last year the postal receipts amounted to $203,000,000 and the expenditure to $221,000,000. My hon. friend says that the rural mail delivery has done away with many post offices in the United States, and while that may be true the fact remains that in the United States, with their very extensive system of rural mail delivery, they rolled up last year the handsome deficit of $17,441,000. I do not think we can afford to follow the example of the United States in maintaining such an expensive luxury. We are going on quietly and gradually in Canada and I think we are on the safe side. The time will come when we will have a large population in this country, and if the Post Office Department is administered as well then as it is now it may be taken for granted that we will have King Edward boxes at the door of every farmer in Ontario and the western provinces. Our post office revenue last year was $7,401,000 and our expenditure $6,592,000. For my part I would rather keep within these conservative lines than go the pace they have gone in the United States which would no doubt result in a comparatively equally large deficit.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Does the minister seriously think that with our population of 7,000,000 and their population of 90,000,000 we would lose in proportion the same amount of money as they did?

Mr. LEMIEUX. We have a small population and a small revenue compared with the United States but we have at the same time a larger territory than they have. The expense is not in the box itself, that is a very small matter, but it is in the laying of the route, in getting new routes and new couriers, and giving out new contracts to cover that immense territory. That is where the cost comes in. From the figures I gave the House the other day, my hon. friend will find that the increase in the expenditure under the head of rural mail delivery in my department comes from the fact that we have been obliged to do away with the existing mail service as between one office and another office and replace it by another service to cover each box on the route. That costs three times as much. As our territory is as large as or larger than the United States, if we were to go on with the system as lavishly as the United States has gone it would cost the country too much money and I wish to remain on safe lines.

In conclusion I wish to say that this department has been well administered by my predecessor, Sir William Mulock.

and it shall be my ambition in the future to administer it as well as he did; my only ambition is to follow in his footsteps.

Mr. SINCLAIR. The method of rural delivery is not applicable to all parts of the country. I have in mind routes in my constituency where the route is from 40 to 50 miles in length, and a good deal of the travelling by the courier is done at night. It would be impossible for him to open the boxes along his scattered route and deliver the mail to the people and reach the end of his route in any reasonable time. Where the country is laid off like a checkerboard and thickly settled and the routes short the system may be applicable, but I do not think it can apply to certain districts I have in mind. Of course this is our misfortune, but I think some consideration should be given to the distances between post offices. I have been told by officers of the department that the rule is to place post offices not closer together than four miles. Two miles is a long distance for a farmer to travel every day for his mail. If it is impossible to accommodate these people by rural mail delivery, I would suggest that the minister should increase in those places the number of post offices. It does not cost much to furnish a post office and it is a great accommodation to the people, because it lessens the distance to be travelled. I find that it is difficult to obtain the rural mail delivery because one applicant does not count, you must secure a large number, I believe a majority along the route, to apply for the accommodation before you can get it. Take for example a route 50 miles long with 100 or 200 families living along it. Who is to organize the application, who is to find out how many people will take the boxes and join in the system? It is an impossible task for the individual farmer or resident who desires to secure the accommodation. I have had applications of that kind and have had to tell the people that they must get a majority along the route to join before they could get the accommodation of rural delivery boxes. It would take weeks and months to canvass and ascertain if it would be possible to secure that number. I trust the minister will take into consideration the necessity of revising his rules with regard to the distance between post offices. So as to give the people in the country districts more accommodation.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. What is the department doing in the matter of a largely signed petition from Central Park asking for an inquiry into the circumstances connected with the closing of that post office? This petition was addressed to the department in February last, and bore 175 signatures of persons who had been deprived of their mail facilities by the action of the department.

Mr. LEMIEUX. The facts are not fresh in my mind.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. I think this matter should receive the minister's personal attention. Last summer I wrote a personal letter to the minister and Mr. Cowan also wrote. To these letters we received no reply, except an acknowledgment from an official of the department, saying that the letters would be submitted to the minister on his return. That post office had been established for 14 years, but now it has been closed, depriving about 300 families of their postal facilities. I know that the facts have been misrepresented to the department, and it was because of that knowledge that I addressed a personal letter to the minister. I regret to find from the minister's lack of knowledge to-night that the matter has never come to his attention at all and that he knows nothing about the subject. The matter originated through a complaint from residents of Central Park against the management of the post office there. For several years the inspector has been reporting to the department that the post office was mismanaged. For at least four years these complaints went on without action, the then postmaster was allowed to continue in office and the dissatisfaction continued; but finally last summer the matter seems to have been brought to a crisis by the receipt of a largely signed petition asking the Postmaster General to investigate the matter. Then the Postmaster General wrote, not to the inspector or to any person in authority there, not to the member for New Westminster or the member for Vancouver, whose districts this post office serves, but to a gentleman whose existence I heard denied in this House this afternoon. This letter was addressed by the deputy minister to this gentleman, who, we were assured this afternoon, had ceased to exist—the administrator of the patronage of the department for the district of New Westminster.

Post Office Department, Ottawa,
June 28, 1909.

Robert Jardine, Esq.,
New Westminster.

An hon. MEMBER. Who was he?

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. He is the gentleman who aspired to the position I occupy just now, but whose aspirations were disappointed:

Dear Sir,—I beg to draw your attention to the communication addressed to you on the 25th ult., on the subject of the postmastership of Central Park, and asking you to nominate some suitable person who could be appointed to the position. Kindly advise me in the matter at your earliest convenience.

Yours very truly,
R. M. COULTER,
Deputy Postmaster General.

This was written following an advice from the post office inspector recommending, not that the post office should be changed from Central Park, but that the Post Office Department should act on his advice frequently tendered, and appoint a new postmaster. The answer to that was as follows:

New Westminster, June 24, 1910.

Hon. R. Lemieux,
Postmaster General.

Dear Sir,—Referring to your 29755, I beg to recommend Mr. A. K. Farquharson as postmaster of Central Park. The district served by this office is rapidly filling up, and it has been urged that the office be moved to a more central location. I will take up this matter with the inspector, who will, no doubt, make recommendation regarding to same.

Yours faithfully,
ROBERT JARDINE.

As regards the importance of Central Park district, I might say that the department had received information from its own inspector that the district was growing rapidly, and he urged, therefore, that attention might be paid to his complaint. Here we have for the first time from this Mr. Robert Jardine, the administrator of patronage for the Westminster district, the suggestion to the Postmaster General that he should close the office at Central Park, and remove it to another place. That was the origin of the closing of that post office which had been established for fourteen years. That suggestion was interpreted by the department, in the answer made by the hon. minister as:

Representations made to the department that by changing the location of the post office and establishing a post office at Collingwood east, the interests of the majority of the residents would be best served.

Following this, and without the people interested having been given any information on the subject at all, when they went to their post office at Central Park, one Saturday evening, they found a written notice along side the delivery wicket as follows:

This post office will be closed to-night. After to-night you will get your mail at Keefer's.

Yet the Postmaster General told us that the Central Park post office was not closed, but that the post office had been merely removed to Keefer's. I would like to tell the hon. gentleman where Keefer's is, as he should know what is being done in his name in that district. Nearly all the people at Central Park have to make their living in Vancouver, which is six miles away, and in going to Vancouver they pass the Central Park post office every day. Keefer's is one mile further away from Vancouver than is Central Park, and none of the residents of Central Park have occasion to go to Keefer's in the ordinary course, and they would never go there unless compelled by the department. From Vancouver the settlement extends out six miles to Central Park, and there is a post office at every mile on the way out. The Central Park office is the pioneer of them all, and is one mile from Collingwood East.

Mr. LEMIEUX. You say that post offices are established between Central Park and the city of Vancouver.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. Yes, at Grand View, Cedar Cottage, Britcola, and Collingwood East. Then comes Central Park, the oldest and most thickly settled place, and the pioneer of them all, and the post office there was arbitrarily closed. Some 312 persons who used to get their mails there regularly were deprived of that advantage, and they petitioned the department, asking the Postmaster General to give his attention to the matter. As evidence that the public were not being served by the change, the people of Central Park got up a large public meeting, the largest ever held there. They first telegraphed the minister as follows:

Vancouver, British Columbia,
August 2, 1909.

Postmaster General, Ottawa.

Large public meeting at Central Park to-night protest against removal of post office to Keefer's. Resolution and petition following.

MAXWELL SMITH.
JAMES MACMASTER,
EUGENE CLEVELAND, Committee.

I may say that I attended that meeting by invitation, and that meeting was the largest ever held in that district. A resolution was there carried unanimously as follows:

That this public meeting of the residents and ratepayers of the Central Park district duly called and assembled this 2nd day of August, 1909, do hereby endorse the petition to the Postmaster General just read, protesting against the removal of the Central Park post office to Keefer's or any other point more than 500 yards from the present Central Park station. And be it further resolved that a copy of this resolution be forwarded along with the petition to the Postmaster General; and be it further resolved that a telegram be sent to-night to the Postmaster General advising him of this action; and be it further resolved that copies of this resolution and the heading of the petition be forwarded to the local post office inspector and local members of parliament.

I would like to read the letter which I addressed the Postmaster General at that time:

New Westminster, British Columbia.
August 9, 1909.

The Honourable the Postmaster General,
Ottawa.

Dear Sir,—As member for this district I have been requested to address you in connection with the closing of the post office at Central Park and the opening in its stead of an office at Keefer's, more than a mile distant from the late office, which was central to the population to be served. I have expressed to these people at their public meeting my confidence that the facts of the case could not have been before the department when the order for the closing of the post office at Central Park was issued, and I trust your action on the petition now before you will bear out this view.

Offices are needed at Keefer's and at East Collingwood as well as at Central Park; but so long as there is only one office authorized Central Park is the natural place for it.

Faithfully yours,
J. D. TAYLOR.

Mr. Cowan also communicated with the Postmaster General as follows:

Vancouver, August 4, 1909.

The Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux,
Postmaster General, Ottawa.

Sir,--A committee appointed by the residents and ratepayers of Central Park to protest against the removal of the post office from that point, have asked me to communicate you my views on the subject.

This settlement is centrally located between the cities of Vancouver and New Westminster, on the interurban tram line. It was one of the first, if not the very first, settlements between the two cities, and is growing very rapidly. Many of its residents have located in business and established their homes there, just because of such public conveniences as the post office. Owing to the contour of the country and the present direction and state of the public roads, the removal of the office from Central Park to Keefer's must result in rendering it practically useless to the Central Park residents, and for the present, at least, of service to a much smaller number of the public. At any rate, whatever the public needs at Keefer's, they would seem to me to be such at Central Park, as without a doubt require retention of the post office at that point.

I am taking the liberty of writing you because I am confident that you will look into the circumstances and do what is in the public interest in the premises.

I have the honour to be, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
GEO. H. COWAN.

I am sorry I weary the minister. But I assure him that the people affected by his action have been made a great deal more tired than he can possibly be made by this recital. Backing up these protests by the public meeting and the two parliamentary representatives of the district, there was forwarded a petition to the minister, bearing the names of 312 persons affected. The attention paid by the department to that appears to have been nil. To each of the communications so sent the stereotyped answer was given that, in the absence of the Postmaster General the letter is acknowledged, and as soon as the minister returns the matter will be brought to his attention. It seems to me that it has never been brought to his attention.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Yes, it has.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. When I asked the minister about it just now he evidently knew nothing about it.

Mr. LEMIEUX. There are 15,000 post offices in the country and I do not pretend to remember every particular case.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. I would like to say that the only reasons the minister got for that removal were got from Mr. Jardine, administrator of the patronage of the New Westminster district. This patronage that was said to be defunct is not defunct, so far as my riding is concerned, nor so far as his department is concerned. The patronage in New Westminster district alone I would like to make plain to members of the House, is worth to the person administering it, more than the salary of a cabinet minister, and it is to gratify the desire of the administrator of the patronage to establish at Keefer, and in the house of a supporter of his party a post office which would take the name, and therefore, I suppose, the salary attached to the Central Park post office, this cruel injustice has been done to all these people. I say it is a most callous misuse of the authority of the department. I say that, if the minister could visit Central Park and see for himself, and be put in possession of the circumstances of the case, I feel satisfied that he would not allow the present state of affairs to continue for a moment. I may say to the minister that there is in his department much more information than I have given because the people went to the trouble to get a landscape photographer to make photographs of the district of Central Park, to show that this was really a town, and photographs also, I believe, of the new post office at Keefer to show that Keefer was only an ordinary rural settlement, with the residences widely scattered and that there was no comparison at all between the two locations. But all this effort seems to have gone for nothing against the recommendation of the administrator of the patronage, and the endorsement, the sole endorsement received, of two gentlemen calling themselves the Liberal Association of Central Park. These two gentlemen do not represent even the Liberals of Central Park.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Who are they?

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. I do not wish to read their names. It is a shameful thing that they have signed their names to the resolution of the association as given in the return.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Read the names.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. I do not wish to read them, because it is a cruel thing they have done to their neighbours and have caused the Postmaster General to do. The answer that has been made is that there is a report from the inspector favouring this change. I wish to say that this report appears to have been dragooned out of the inspector. Before he saw the administrator of the patronage he had a very different idea of the local situation from that which he had afterward. Before he saw this patronage monger, on the 10th May he wrote recommending the appointment of a new postmaster and saying:

Central Park is becoming rather an important place——

Yet that is the place the Postmaster General has wronged by closing the post office.

——and I therefore consider that it would be both in the interests of the general public and the department if, as recommended in my report, No. 164, of the 5th August, 1905, 'The office be declared vacant and a new appointment made.

I have the honour to be, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
JOHN R. GREENFIELD,
Post Office Inspector.

Now, Mr. Greenfield appears to have been touched some time later. On the 2nd July, some seven weeks later, he writes:

Sir, I have the honour to report that on the 28th ult., I received a telephone message from Mr. Robert Jardine, advising me that in connection with a proposed change in the Central Park post office he had informed the department that a suggestion had been made to change the site of the post office to Keefer's Station, and that he would ask me to furnish a report in the matter.

When I inquired about the matter in the House, I was told by the Postmaster General that this change was made at the suggestion and on the recommendation of the post office inspector. Although that is true in a sense, it is not accurate, it is misleading, because, while the post office inspector was dragooned into committing himself to the suggested change, he makes it perfectly clear that Robert Jardine had informed the department that the suggestion had been made:

I therefore visited the place on the 29th ult., and fully discussed the matter with Mr. Alex. Kerr Farquharson, whom Mr. Jardine requested me to see——

The trail of the serpent is over it all.

—with the result that I found that there was a very strong feeling.

A strong feeling on the part of Mr. Alex. Kerr Farquharson, who as it turned out, got the job and presumably the salary, because the salaries are based on last year's business. The minister says this is the same post office, though the two places are a mile apart, the one called Keefer and the other called Central Park, and there are two or three other places with different names between the two. The minister says it is the same post office, although it is not even on the same road. One is on the main road, and the other is on a cross-road. I say this, not to reflect on the minister's integrity, or to intimate that he deceived the House because of desire, but I do say that those statements which were put into the mouth of the Postmaster General to deliver to this House to do so, are not in accordance with the facts. This report is the product of the direction he received from the administrator of the patronage in that district, and is not at all in accordance with his previous reports. One would think that these people were themselves the best judges of whether the Postmaster General had conferred a favour on them. I have a letter addressed to me on the 16th of February, 1910, which reads as follows:

Dear Sir,—Herewith I have the honour to send you a petition from the residents of this neighbourhood, which I feel sure will have your earnest attention. It is by no means as complete or as large as it could have been, as many men are away from home when called upon. Nevertheless, I am inclined to think it is of such importance as to call for a full inquiry, which I trust will have the result of the re-establishment of the post office at Central Park. From a perusal of the doings in parliament at Ottawa, I notice it has been stated that the above post office has not been abolished but only removed to a more convenient position in the same district. This is a misleading statement, as you will be able to point out, knowing the district as you do. In fact, I may say that some of us contemplate having our mail addressed Vancouver City, as that, although six miles away, would be more convenient than the present arrangement. I further venture to suggest that three offices are more needed now than was one which was established fourteen years ago.

I am, Sir, very sincerely yours,
HERBERT LISTER.

That accompanies a petition addressed to the Postmaster General as follows:

Sir,—We, the undersigned, have the honour to respectfully approach you with regard to the abolition of the post office at Central Park. We have heard through Mr. Lister that you are unable to re-establish the said post office, and that you were induced to act as you did upon information given you.

We have the honour to request that an official investigation be held as to the facts of the case, and we are respectfully confident that you will then see fit to reconsider our request.

This is signed by 175 residents injuriously affected by the change. Now it would have cost the Postmaster General about $200 a year, at the outside, to have established a new post office at Keefer's, which the growth of that district calls for, and to have left the post office at Central Park as it was under new management, in charge of the competent person recommended in one of these petitions by the residents of Central Park. I ask why he should do so cruel an act as to destroy the convenience, and the happiness of those people of Central Park with the result of saving to his department only $200 a year? I am glad now to see that the Minister of Inland Revenue has come into the House, as he is the minister in this government representing British Columbia. No more cruel wrong has ever been done to any one than has been done by his colleagues in this government. The Minister of Inland Revenue is the minister who will be blamed for this when he appears again in that district. I am quite sure that when he does visit that locality he will be just as earnest as I am in saying that this office never should have been closed, and he will admit, once he becomes conversant with the facts, that if he had known them, and had been able to post the Postmaster General, nothing of the kind would have occurred. In conclusion I wish to urge upon the Postmaster Geenral to act upon this petition addressed to his department in February, and cause an inquiry to be made into the whole case, and if he will do that I feel sure the immediate result will be the reopening of the post office at Central Park.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I wish not to speak long, because the hour is so late. But I cannot let pass the statement made by the hon. gentleman that I was kept in ignorance of the facts concerning the Central Park post office. My hon. friend will be in office some day, and he will probably know that it is difficult for a minister to keep fresh in his mind every report which comes before him. This question is not new to me, and I know it better now that my hon. friend has laid the facts before the House. When I gave the answer to my hon. friend in this House some time ago, I imparted all the facts which were in the department. I wish to state to my hon. friend that it is hardly fair to Mr. Greenfield, our very able post office inspector in British Columbia, to state that he might have been influenced by Mr. Jardine or any one else in making his report to the Post Office Department. My hon. friend knows that Mr. Greenfield is not an appointee of this government, he was appointed by the late government. I am well acquainted with him, and have travelled with him on the Canadian Pacific Railway, and I know he is one of the most conscientious men there is in the post office service of this country, and he would yield to no pressure. Therefore, when my hon. friend insinuates that he had been influenced by Mr. Jardine——

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. He says so.

Mr. LEMIEUX. No, my hon. friend has read only two lines of the report. I think it is only justice to Mr. Greenfield that the whole report should be read, so that the facts may be fairly put before the House. As they say in French it is a 'querelle de clocher', it is a village quarrel.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. No, it is not a village quarrel.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Well, it is a town quarrel.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. At Central Park there is a large settlement, it is to all intents and purposes a town, but at Keefer's there is no settlement. The people of Central Park do not travel towards Keefer's at all. It is just as if you told the people of Ottawa to go to Brittania for their mail.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Here is the report made by Mr. Greenfield:

Post Office Inspector's Office,
Vancouver, July 2, 1909.

Sir,—I have the honour to report that on the 28th ult. I received a telephone message from Mr. Robt. Jardine, advising me that in connection with a proposed change in the Central Park post office, he had informed the department that a suggestion had been made to change the site of the post office to Keefer's Station, and that he would ask me to furnish a report in the matter. I therefore visited the place on the 29th ult., and fully discussed the matter with Mr. Alexander Kerr Farquharson, whom Mr. Jardine requested me to see, with a result that I find that there was a very strong feeling in favour of the change, and by changing the site of the post office to the McKay road, the name of the railway station being 'Keefer's,' it would be more central and convenient for the whole neighbourhood. It would also more evenly distribute the offices between New Westminster and Vancouver along the line of the British Columbia electric railway, which are as follows: Grand View, Cedar Cottage, Britcola, Collingwood East (proposed, see report to Postmaster General, No. 135, 9th June, 1909), Central Park, and 'Edmonds,' a report on which I hope to forward in the course of a few days.
